THE BUOYANCY OF BIRDS.

It is probably known to most persons that the body of a bird includes a number of bladders, or "sacs," containing air, which are packed away among the other organs wherever space can be found, and are in free communication with the windpipe and the lungs. In addition to this complicated system of air-sacs, the great majority of birds (although, curiously enough, not some of the strongest fliers, such as terns) have all their bones completely hollow, with their cavities likewise in communication with the lungs and windpipe, and thus full of air. As the bones of the extinct flying reptiles, or pterodactyles, are likewise hollow, with perforations for tubes connecting with the lungs, it is only reasonable to suppose that these creatures were likewise furnished with air-sacs. As to insects we know that their bodies are permeated through and through with air-tubes which are to a great extent respiratory in function. Bats are, however, an exception in this respect, having neither pneumatic bones nor air-sacs.

Seeing, then, that three out of the four main groups of flying animals have their bodies completely aërated, it is only reasonable to surmise that this system of aëration, even if in one instance mainly respiratory, must be largely for the purpose of conferring buoyancy on the whole bodily structure.

In the case of birds it has, however, of late years, been very generally considered that the air-sacs and pneumatic bones are connected solely with the respiratory function. This view has just been stoutly combated by a German anatomist, writing in the publications of the Smithsonian Institution of Washington.

This gentleman, Mr. B. Müller, although by no means denying that an exchange of air may and does occur during respiration between the air-sacs and the outer atmosphere, maintains that this is not the chief object of the aëration of the whole bodily structure in birds, or indeed that it can appreciably assist the action of the lungs. The expansion and contraction of the lungs coincide with those of the air-sacs; and during inspiration all parts of their organs draw air out of the bronchial tubes. During expiration, on the other hand, the air-sacs do indeed drive some-air into the many branches of the bronchial tubes, but this cannot reach the lateral branches of the latter, because these likewise contract and drive out their contained air during respiration. If the air thus driven out from the air-sacs does not pass through the lateral bronchial tubes, it certainly cannot reach their ultimate ramifications, in which the oxidisation of the blood takes place.

But even if such air does reach the lungs, it is difficult to see, argues Mr. Müller, how it could effectively aid respiration.

"Let us suppose, for instance, that during inspiration the lungs at the end of the bronchial tubes receive fresh air. The air which [illegible] would then give off a portion of its oxygen; that in the air-sacs would not. During expiration the air from the lungs would be driven out of the bronchial tubes into the wind-pipe, and the air from the sacs would pass into the lungs. There the latter air would be deprived of a portion of its oxygen. During the next inspiration this air (poor in oxygen) would again pass from the lungs into the air-sacs. During the next expiration the same air would then again fill the lungs, and these would thus always contain air poor in oxygen, and therefore ill-adapted for respiratory purposes."

BOOK NO. 548
Acc. No— 611
Date — 16/12/06

This argument seems practically conclusive against the respiratory theory; but the author adds another.

"In birds," he continues, "we find the wind-pipe relatively much larger and the lungs relatively much smaller, richer in capillaries [the minute terminal blood-vessels], and heavier than in mammals. Consequently the volume of air contained in the lungs of birds is relatively much smaller than the volume of air contained in the lungs of mammals. Even during the most powerful respiration only part of this small allowance of air is renewed by respiration, a considerable proportion remains of air that is really 'residual' air. This would hardly suffice to fill the very space expelled from the wind-pipe, on which account a large portion of the air during respiration would only travel backwards and forwards between the lungs and the windpipe. Without such special arrangements oxygen would be supplied to the respired air only by the slight mixing of air from the windpipe with external air at the nostrils, and proper oxidisation of the blood would be impossible."

In consequence, however, of the change in the volume of the air-sacs during the act of breathing the amount of air moved is much greater, so that the above-mentioned disadvantage to breathing that would otherwise result from the large calibre of the windpipe is obviated. The air leaving the air-sacs during expiration passes the outer bronchial tubes, and together with that coming from the lungs, enters the windpipe, and is in great part driven out through the nostrils. An equally large volume is taken in at the next inspiration, which together with what remains in the windpipe, is distributed among the air-sacs and the lungs.

"In this way," urges Mr. Müller, "indirectly and in no other way the air-sacs assist in respiration."

Summing up the whole case, the author expresses the opinion that the air-sacs and also the cavities in the bones are not to be regarded as organs with a special function of their own, but rather as a kind of packing to fill up empty interspaces. Their value lies in their very emptiness, that is to say, in their containing nothing offering resistance or having any appreciable weight.

Flying is the highest form of locomotion, and as such is only possible in a body of high mechanical efficiency. Our most effective machines are by no means compact and solid, but composed of parts as strong as possible in themselves and arranged in the most suitable manner. The interspaces between the parts are left empty and filled with air.

At the time ancestral birds acquired the power of flight they became adapted to the mechanical necessities of the new kind of locomotion, and thereby similar to efficient flying machines. They divested themselves of all superfluous material, filling the body-spaces that produced with air-sacs; and while the walls of the body, adapting themselves to the mechanical requirements, formed a compact, hollow cylinder serving as a basis of support for the organs of movement, the mobility of the parts was arroused by surrounding them with air-sacs.

The lengthening of the neck—due to an adaptation of quite a different kind—made it necessary to increase the quantity of air moved during respiration. This demand was met by means of air-currents generated through a rhythmical change in the volume of the air-sacs. The connection of the air-sacs with the lungs is merely a consequence of their phylogenetic development, and has no physiological significance other than that the air-sacs assist in renewing the air in the windpipe.

We do not for a moment presume that Mr. Müller's view will long be supposed to go unchallenged; and we shall look forward with interest to see what the "next man" has to say on a very difficult subject.

It was in Tasmania that a traveller came across an old "sundowner" sitting in front of his cabin, over the door of which was very legibly painted: "Ici on parle francais."

A tattered, dejected-looking Frenchman, who happened to be passing up the road, spied the inscription, and, rushing up to the Colonial, enthusiastically kissed him on both cheeks. "'Ere, what'r yer up to?" demanded the sundowner, gruffly; "don't do that ag'in." "But you vas a countreeman of mine," exclaimed the delighted Frenchman, with a smile of pleasure.

"Certainly not!" retorted the Colonial. "But you put 'Ici on parle francais' over ze door," said the Frenchman, pointing to the inscription, "Well, what do you call it?" asked the sundowner, in mild surprise. "Why, it means French is spoken here.'"

"Well, I'm blowed!" exclaimed the Tasmanian, in deep disgust. "A painter chap came along here the other day, and put that up for me. He said it was Latin for "God bless my happy home.'"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

WITH this issue The Indian Field enters upon the seventh year of its existence.

THE Beighton Cup Hockey tournament was concluded on Saturday last, when the Customs easily defeated Calcutta in the final by 5 goals to 1. Details elsewhere.

The following are first entries for the Army Cup:—Mr. Williams' Pasha and Khalifa; Captain McNiell's Colonel and Bridegroom; Major Tudor's Prince; Captain Toogood's Veto; Major Prideaux's Nagashi; Major England's Rustic Gem; Lieut.-Colonel O'Donnell's Velos and Mashook; Major Pitman's Express; Major Popham Young's Alishan; Mr. Rees' Diamond; Captain Barrett's Matlock and Ariel; Major Pott's Vivandier; Captain Corbett's Peacock; Captain Holden's Marengo and Obara; Mr. Heatherbe's Veldt Cornet; Mr. Wilkinson's King II.

WE would draw the attention of dog owners to the fact that that excellent canine tonic, Benbow's Dog mixture, is now put up in capsules in boxes containing 40 quarter teaspoonfuls, 24 half teaspoonfuls or 15 teaspoons.

OUR London sporting letter this week tells how Mr. Jay Gould beat Mr. Eustace Miles at New York in the final for the English amateur tennis championship. The games were 6–2, 6–4, 1–6, 6–3. Eustace Miles, athletic and food crank, author, lecturer, restauranteur and many things besides being one of the finest tennis players of the age, by this defeat has experienced a second reverse at the hands of Jay Gould in the amateur tennis championship. Last year, it will be remembered, Gould went over to England to meet the then champion, and at the Queen's Club the American representative won by 3 sets to 2, 22 games to 22, and 158 strokes to 153. Mr. Miles has won the championship on seven occasions; he held it continuously from 1899 to 1903, and after losing it in 1904, he regained it the following year, and held it until last year. Mr. Gould promises to go to England in May and give Mr. Miles his revenge.

AN unfortunate English racehorse named Banker III., had an uncommonly uncomfortable experience the other day at the Southwell meeting. Having disposed of his jockey early in a race he went on riderless and finished like a lion, and was evidently so pleased with himself he left the course, plunged into the River Trent and swam down the mill race and under the archway of the mill. Then he got jammed in the floats of the mill-wheel and there he stuck. Next a gang of rescuers, by way of "larnin' 'im better" no doubt, got a rope round his head, pulled him out on the other side, actually dragging him under the wheel, and got him to the bank in safety!

THE Amateur Boxing Championships, which drew splendid entries this year, produced first class sport and five new champions as will be seen from the details given in our London letter to-day.

THE enquiring mind would find subject for reflection if it were directed to the contemplation of the large and varied menu placed before the inmates of the Calcutta Zoo. We have often taken a mental note of the fare provided by the official caterers and the visiting public and found it to range from monkey nuts to an occasional horse from the local livery stables, from boiled rice to plantain trees. Judging by some details which appear in the recently issued report of the London Zoological Society the bill of fare at Regent's Park is still more varied and, of course, it costs more—£4,250 is quoted as last year's cost of "board" for the collection.

Beef, 5 539lbs.
Meat extract, 83 2oz. jars
Fowls' heads, 34,804.
Fresh herrings, 9.178lbs.
Whiting, 35,330lbs.
Plaice, 12,206lbs
Shrimps, 2,555 pints.
Sprats, 266lbs.
Biscuits, 296cwt.
Bread, 648qrn.
Eggs, 26,025.
Sugar, 528lbs.
Cucumbers, 20.
Lettuce, 15,624.
Potatoes 14,934lbs
Rice, 2 tons.
Condensed Milk, 4,236 tins.
New milk, 12,695 pints.
Monkey nuts, 40 cwt.
Brazil nuts, 106lbs.
Spanish nuts 18 pecks.
Bananas, 5,768½ dozen.
Apples, 1,024 pecks, 55 cases and 728lb. in hampers.
Grapes, 2,981lbs.
Oranges, 8,622.
Lemons, 420.
Green figs, 192.
Dates, 1,914lbs.
Currants, 168lbs.
Figs, 240lbs.
Raisins, 106lbs.
Sultanas, 106lbs.

The elephants, of course, eat the most, but they are perhaps the least expensive of the inmates, inasmuch as their work in giving children rides during the summer months is probably sufficient to keep them in food for the whole year. Then, of course, visitors shower buns and nuts and oranges into their capacious mouths, and this, too, lessens their food bill.

The lions are expensive to feed, as they eat horse-flesh and earn nothing. Bears never eat meat, but only vegetables.

Fowls' heads at the rate of 200 a day are eaten by hyenas and wolves, the delicacies being provided by a wholesale catering firm.

But the most expensive are the apes. They are very fastidious in the matter of food, and will eat only the best of fruit, such as nuts, grapes, and bananas.

The report gives the following items of expenditure incurred in the Zoo's commissariat department:—

Hay ...	...	£656	Corn and seeds £282
Clover ...		£554	Oats £232
Fruit ...	...	£398	Horses £221
Fish ...	...	£357

Reptiles and amphibia ..	535	478

One is glad to see the London Zoo grows in popularity, no fewer than 863,953 visitors passed through the entrance gates in 1907, which ranks as the third best year since the foundation of the Society.

Writing on this subject reminds us to say that our old friend Mr. Frank Finn, whose contributions to our Naturalist columns hundreds of our readers, appreciate, is constantly to be seen in Regent's Park collecting pabulum for his books, imparting instruction to enquirers, or giving officials the benefit of his experience. Our London correspondent met him thus engaged early this month and is authorised to say that in the near future we may expect the first of a series of ornithological articles which Mr. Finn has had on the stocks for us for some time.

With the Derby thus uppermost in our thoughts, writes "Augur" in Sporting Life, we may as well, perhaps, take a hurried glance at the position of affairs relating to this year's contest. It may be said at once that we are not much wiser than we were in mid-winter. The only candidate of any moment who has shown his paces under racing conditions this season is the French horse, Sea Sick II. I will refrain from commenting on the horrible name the colt has the misfortune to bear. The fee exacted in Old Burlington Street for the registration of a substituted name is, I believe, £5. If M. Gaston-Dreyfus is not disposed to incur that expenditure, I would venture to suggest that those who have had the temerity to back the horse should forthwith subscribe the amount among themselves, and hand it to the owner with a plea for prompt action. What Sea Sick II.'s Derby prospects are our French friends are better able to judge than we are. The Sporting Life's Paris correspondent has more than once adjured his readers to proceed with caution. Of course, we know that the horse has so far acquitted himself with credit in the races in which he has taken part, but we have yet to learn what the strength of the opposition was. Stress has been laid on the fact that he easily defeated Monitor at level weights. But according to French official opinion, Monitor is nearly a stone behind the top class. That opinion may be wrong; on the other hand, it may be right. My present impression is that Sea Sick II.'s chance is not so good as that which was possessed by other French horses who have run at Epsom, and failed. The view now taken of him will probably undergo a change when some of our own candidate have shown what they can do.

The manner in which Ednam has been backed during the past few weeks indicates a shrewd appreciation of the possibilities that rest in this son of Isinglass and St. Ia. Of all the candidates for Derby honours we know as two-year-olds this colt is, in my opinion, the one in whom there was the greatest scope for improvement. I have not the slightest doubt in my own mind that he ought to have won the Dewhurst Plate, and for the moment I estimate his chance on the supposition that he actually was the best of the animals who competed for that prize. All through the winter he has fared prosperously, and he is an infinitely better horse now than he was last autumn. At present he is undergoing a steady preparation for the Two Thousand Guineas, as a preliminary to which he may go to the post for the Craven Stakes the week after next. By the way, I do not think it is generally realised that the Two Thousand Guineas will reach its centenary this year, for it was established in 1809.

Mr. Horace G. Hutchinson, the English international player and ex-amateur champion, has been nominated captain elect of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club, and has accepted. This is the first occasion upon which an English golfer has been appointed to the distinguished position, the only other persons other than Scottish golfers who have been captains in the past having been members of the Royal Family. Mr. Hutchinson will be elected to the captaincy at the R. and A. meeting next month.

The new captain is forty-nine years of age, and is a member of the Royal North Devon, Royal Ashdown Forest, and Biarritz clubs, as well as the Royal and Ancient. He is also a member of the Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society, and won the amateur championship in 1886 and 1887, the first two years of its institution. He was runner-up in 1903, and was bronze medalist in 1901 and 1904. He has represented England against Scotland each year since 1902, with the exception of 1905, when he called off. Mr. Hutchinson has won several medals at St. Andrews, Westward Ho! and elsewhere, and is captain of the Royal St. George's Club, Sandwich, and is the author of several publications on golf.

The first gymkhana at Simla was held at Annandale last Saturday, when an excellent programme of five events was put through. Results were as follows:—First Event:—Gentlemen to take ring off post with hogspear and then a peg. First, Captain Deane. Second, Mr. Fell. Second Event:—Ladies to ride round course in given order and stated time. First, Mrs. Saunders. Second, Mrs. Buck. Third Event:—Affinity Race including matching a piece of ribbon. First, Mr. Fell and Miss Mahon. Second, Captain and Miss Deane. Fourth Event:—Ladies to break two chatties and take a ring with wooden sword. First, Miss Deane. Fifth Event:—Calling League Stakes. Gentlemen to ride up with envelope containing names of six prominent inhabitants of Simla, ladies to fill in addresses and gentlemen to race home. First, Captain Wyllie and Mrs. Birdwood. Second, Mr. and Mrs. Fell.

At a general meeting of the members of the Annandale Gymkhana Club, at Simla on the 4th instant, with Colonel Triscott in the chair it was decided to hold the Simla Horse Show on Tuesday the 9th June. The following sub-committees for the season were also elected.—Polo—Lieutenant-Colonel V. Brooke, Captain Fitzgerald, Captain Learmouth; Cricket—Major Smallwood, Captain Lord Francis Scott, Captain, K. O. Goldie; Gymkhana—Captain Shore, Captain Mackenzie, Captain Gibbs; Tennis—R. A. Gamble, Esq., R. P. Farr, Esq.; Horse Show—Colonel Broome, Captain Shore, Captain Learmouth; Executive Committee—Colonel Triscott (President). Members: Major Douglas, Lieutenant-Colonel Brooke, Captain Learmouth, Captain H. N. Holden, Mr. Symes Scutt; Captain Shore and Captain Jelf.

The Mussoorie Polo tournament which was to have begun on the 9th instant, has had to be postponed owing to the Military leave being cancelled and will now be held in September. The following teams had entered:—2nd Goorkhas, two teams; XVIIth Lancers, two teams; Imperial Cadet Corps, Royal Irish Rifles, XVth Hussars, Durham Light Infantry, XXXIst Lancers, Landour Depot Team.

An interesting statement is given below of the height of the fences to be jumped in the Great Eastern Steeplechase, which may be compared with the obstacles at Flemington, where the Victorian Grand National Steeplechase is decided; with the fences at Randwick, the principal jumping centre of New South Wales, with Aintree, where the world-famed Liverpool Grand National Steeplechase is won and lost every year: with the Indian Grand National course; and with the New Zealand Grand National track at Riccarton. It will be seen that Oakbank easily holds the palm for stiffness so far as the Australian courses are concerned, and it certainly comes as a surprise to find that there is a fence at Randwick actually higher than any at Flemington. The obstacles at Aintree, however, tower over those on any of the three courses in the States: but it must be recollected that most of them are of brush, and may be jumped through and not over

"EVERY once in a while I see a comment somewhere or overhear it spoken about the horse being the most intelligent of animals," says a gentleman connected with the Smithsonian Institution who has been making some observations on the intelligence of animals. "The horse, from a scientific standpoint, possesses a certain amount of well-developed instinct and memory, but not intelligence as the word is understood as applied to the animal kingdom. The most intelligent of animals is the dog, which not only possesses intelligence as contradistinguished from mere instinct, but the reasoning faculties are better developed than any of the other dumb animals. The dog has been longer associated with man than any other animal, and this attachment will be greater as the centuries roll on. A fine-looking horse appears intelligent, and thus the word has stuck to him, but as a matter of scientific fact the horse takes on the characteristics of all hoof animals, and, aside from his faculty of memory—and even that is not especially developed—he may be said to be dull. He is taught a few things in life by man and remembers them. To the average person the bark of a dog is simply its bark and nothing more. The dog's first instinct is the preservation of his master and the latter's household, and in this he is willing to surrender his life. Injuries and wounds, even, do not diminish this splendid characteristic. To other people a dog's growl is simply his growl, but there is a difference, as in his bark. Dogs have an interrogatory growl, a warning growl, a menacing growl, and a fighting growl, which vary as the tones of a human being in their various pitches, indicating the state of the temper. The same applies to his bark."

"THE emotions of a dog may be appealed to in precisely the same manner as those of the human being. In fact, your own dog is more sensitive to the change in your own emotions than the members of your own family, and will often sympathise with you by a peculiar sympathetic light in his eyes, by coming very close to you, placing his head against your hand or licking it, long before any other member of the human kind in the family has caught on that there is something wrong with you. He shows joy, sorrow, and other feelings in an unmistakable manner. As an instance of their faculty of reasoning I will take the setter, whose intelligence has been shown to be very marked. His master will send him into the field to flush the game. The dog every few minutes looks back at him. If his master waves his hand to the right the dog never goes to the left, and vice versa. If he throws the palm of his hand forward, outwardly, the dog again changes his position, and never makes a mistake by responding to the backward call. Sometimes the master is mistaken as to the whereabouts of the birds, but the dog knows, and he has been known to run back to his master and by dog talk in barking tell his master this. The master at once understands this talk, and allows the dog to proceed without further direction. Some specimens of this fine breed are too intelligent to hunt with a man who cannot shoot, so they show him their disgust by making scornfully for home by the nearest route The hunter's intelligent horse would remain until he starved if he were not driven home."

IN consequence of the imperfect knowledge existing as to the period of gestation of many mammals, Dr. O. Heinroth, of the Berlin Zoological Gardens, has been carefully studying the subject, and he has just published the result of his observations in the Zoologischer. It appears that the hoofed mammals go the longest term of gestation in the whole class. In the Indian elephant the period ranges from 20 months 21 days to 22 months, the giraffe 14 months, the American tapir 13 or 13½, the Indian tapir 13, the Somali wild ass and its domesticated relative, the mountain zebra, and the Asiatic wild ass about 12 months, Burchell's zebra 11¼ to 13, and the horse 11 months. Camels and llamas also occupy a high place. The term is 13 months in the case of the two species of camel, from 11½ to 13 in the llama, 11¼ in the guanaco, and 11 in the alpaca. In the Bovidae the longest periods occur in the anoa of Celebes (9½ to 10 months), and the beisa oryx (10 to 8½ months). The roedeer goes from 9 to 9½ months, Pere David's deer 9½, the cow, zebu, gayal, bison, yak, and sambur 9, eland and gnu from 8½ to 9, wapiti 8½, hippopotamus, nilgai, elk, hartebeest, sable antelope, and waterbuck, 8, bushbuck, blesbok, and four-horned antelope 7½, blackbuck and chamois 6, springbuck 5⅞, chevrotain 5½, Nubian ibex, goats, and sheep 5, and swine from 4 to 4¼. As to the primates, the anubis baboon is reported to go 7 months. In two species of lemur the period is stated as 3¾ months. In the carnivora the gestation is short, being about 3½ months in the lion and tiger, 3⅓ in the jaguar, 3 in the puma, leopard, and striped hyaena, 56 days in the cat, and 9 weeks in the wolf, jackal, and dog. On the other hand, the brown bear goes about 7 months, and the polar bear, it is said, approximately 8 months with young, while in the common seal and the Californian sea-lion the period is believed to be 11 and 11½ months respectively. The rat and the house-mouse are thought to have the shortest time with 21 days each, while the hamster comes next with 22 days, followed by the domesticated rabbit with from 28 to 30 days. The great ant-eater goes 6 months, and the hairy armadillo 2 months, while the only record among marsupials is that of the great grey kangaroo with about 35 days.

OF all the parti-coloured reptiles the chameleon is by far the best known, and, on the whole, the most remarkable for his inconstancy of coloration. Like a lacertine Vicar of Bray, he varies incontinently from buff to blue, and from blue-black to orange again, under stress of circumstances. The mechanism of this curious change is extremely complex. Tiny corpuscles of different pigments are sometimes hidden in the depths of the chameleon's skin, and sometimes spread out on its surface in an interlacing network of brown or purple. In addition to this prime colouring matter, however, the animal also possesses a normal yellow pigment and a bluish layer in the skin which acts like the iridium glass so largely employed by Dr. Salviati, being seen as straw-coloured by transmitted light, but assuming a faint lilac tint against an opaque absorbent surface. While sleeping, the chameleon becomes almost white in the shade, but if light falls upon him he slowly darkens by an automatic process. The movements of the corpuscles are governed by opposite nerves and muscles, which either cause them to bury themselves under the true skin or to form an opaque ground behind the blue layer, or to spread out in a ramifying mass on the outer surface and so produce as desired almost any necessary shade of grey, green, black, or yellow. It is an interesting fact that many chrysalids undergo precisely similar changes of colour in adaptation to the background against which they suspend themselves, being grey on a grey surface, green on a green one, and even half black and half red when hung up against pieces of parti-coloured paper.

CERTAIN beetles have also been modified so as to exactly imitate, wasps, and in these cases the beetle waist, naturally so solid, thick, and clumsy, grows as slender and graceful as if the insects had been supplied with corsets by a fashionable West-end house. But the greatest refinement of all is, perhaps, that noticed in certain allied species which mimic bees, and which have acquired useless little tufts of hair on their hind shanks to represent the dilated and tufted pollen-gathering apparatus of the true bees. The most marvellous cases of mimicry of all are those noticed among South American butterflies by Mr. Bates, who found that certain edible kinds exactly resembled a handsome and conspicuous, but bitter-tasted, species in every shade and stripe of colour. Several of these South American imitative insects long deceived the very greatest entomologists, and it was only by a close inspection of their structural differences that the utter distinctness of the mimickers and the mimicked was satisfactorily settled. Even among plants a few instances of true mimicry have been observed. In the stony African Karoo, where every plant is eagerly sought out for food by the scanty local fauna, there are tubers which exactly resemble the pebbles around them, and there is little doubt that our perfectly harmless English dead nettle secures itself from the attacks of browsing animals by its close likeness to the wholly unrelated but well-protected stinging nettle. We must not forget the device of those animals which do not merely assimilate themselves in colour to the ordinary environment in a general way, but have also the power of adapting themselves at will to whatever object they may happen to lie against.

OUR Ooty correspondent writes:—During the Easter vacation, Sir Arthur Lawley, accompanied by a small party from Government House, were out shooting on the Kundahs, Nilgiris, a famous resort for sportsmen. Notwithstanding the very elaborate arrangements made for Sir Arthur's shoot, he was able to bag only one sambur, after four days' outing.

AT a recent meeting of the Nilgiri Game and Fish Preservation Association it was decided to approach the Madras Government again, with a view to the Game License fee being raised from Rs. 30 to Rs. 50, with a separate fishing license of Rs. 10. This is not the first effort made to enhance the license shooting fee, and which the Government heretofore refused to sanction. However, our present Government has fallen in with the suggestion of the Game Association and have sanctioned their recommendation, so that from the 16th September next, the fee for a shooting license will be Rs. 50 for the whole of the shooting season, and a license for one month during the shooting season will be Rs. 25 and for two months Rs. 35, while a separate license for fishing will cost Rs. 10.

ON the 25th instant Hounds met at 3 P.M., at the Toda Coffee Shop, and the field, a small one, consisted of Sir Arthur, Miss C. Lawley and Mr. G. Lawley, Miss Morgan, Colonel Desaraj Urs, the Minor Shevagari, Captains Duff and Annesly and one or two others, while Lady White and Miss Lawley were in a motor. The Master took hounds down the valley opposite the present Plague Camp, and after several turnings led the field down to the Pykarrah Falls path. On the south side of Lord Roberts Shola, through which the field was taken, hounds opened and hunted over a hillside towards the Pykarrah river, where a jack came in sight and hunted in the direction of the Falls, when he was overtaken by a few of the field, and run to ground after five, so the Master decided to take hounds back to kennels.

London Week by Week.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

GOOD FRIDAY, 1908.

ALMOST a Sabbath calm has descended on us, particularly marked by yesterday's rush. To-day all within is the perilous but pleasant hot-cross bun, and without all is cemetery quietness. Something approaching a million Londoners have scattered themselves over the country and the continent and it looks, at the time of writing, as if the weather forecast was likely to be verified, for it is dry and the sunshine is constant. A late Easter fills the coffers of the railway companies and this year the season is late. The crush at the big stations last evening was terrible, for though the exodus began in the morning it was not till the shades of evening began to lengthen that the big crush came. Trains from Euston, St. Pancras, and Paddington were running out in duplicate and triplicate and the scene with its masses of hurrying porters, distracted passengers, luggage, athletic gear and golf clubs was amusing and instructive. Easter is par excellence the golfers' holiday; it seemed to me as if a third of the male travellers carried golf kit. Very elaborate are the programmes put forth by the railway companies, and as a result the rush to the seaside, the sylvan spots, the links and other pleasure resorts has been a record. The motorist is also agog; private and hired cars are now raising the dust and perfuming the atmosphere everywhere. Three guineas a day is the charge for motors and they are eagerly snapped up at that, while every description of wheeled conveyance from a pony-chaise to a char-a-banc is naturally at a premium. Till Tuesday morning we "make poojah," that is to say those of us who (unlike your luckless scribe) have not to remain behind and note the doings of their more fortunate fellow creatures.

It is not within my province to tell you of the strenuous "Cabinet-making" which has been going on, nor of the ultimate formation of the new Ministry by the new leader—all these matters are they not dealt with by Reuter? But I do make bold to enter my poor protest right here against the new Premier pictorial persecution, which we are enduring. It has been incessant ever since the appointment was made. Morning, noon and night we have Mr. Asquith smiling, frowning, entering a cab, leaving a house, walking, talking, standing, and sitting, busy or merely "hangin' aroun'." And now we have Mr. Winston Churchill in almost every conceivably happy pose fighting for his seat in North-West Manchester, where the election fever is now raging and in which I observe the suffragettes and the Liberal ladies are playing a strong hand. This class of illustration is greatly overdone: it may interest a microscopic minority to gaze at an indifferent snapshot of Mr. Winston Churchill declaiming at midnight from the roof of a motor cab to a sea of ill-fitting cloth caps; but there must be more cheerful and more generally acceptable subjects for the camera if we only search diligently for them.

I see it announced that the lady courier is again to be tried. She is this season to show Americans "Old London," but, as a scribe says this morning, "she will have to hurry up or she will have difficulty in finding any." Quite so. Never have so many structural developments been planned or carried into effect as lately. This eager construction of great buildings, both public and private; this adaptation of existing institutions to new and enlarged requirements; this opening out of new lines of traffic; this planning of new thoroughfares; this designing of new dwellings and open spaces; this profound, costly, and permanent modification of London streets and buildings is proceeding now with a speed as great as that which accompanied the growth of any American city and with a design infinitely more serious and more far-reaching in its effects. A man coming home from India, say every five years, will find such startling changes as will result in frequent loss of bearings. It is really prodigious; it is almost awful.

It is evident, too, that those interested in the care and culture of parks and gardens have awakened to the necessity of keeping pace with this universal development of building. The love for gardening has increased enormously in London of late years, gardening classes are held, among other places, at the Norwood Technical Institute and at Battersea Park, and a London branch of the British Gardeners' Association has just been formed. The idea of the garden city or suburb is clearly gaining upon the public, and the organisers of that at Hampstead are certainly justified in anticipating by 1910 some 100 acres covered with artisans' cottages, associated dwellings, and houses at a rental of £30 to £35 per annum with a total population of some 5,000 persons.

And while on the subject of London improvements I must not forget to mention another revolution—the just completed linking up of North and South by the opening of the tramcar subway from the Embankment to Aldwych. I happened to be under the Waterloo Bridge, waiting for a tram, when the first car came through the tunnel which opens on the Embankment at this spot, so in a fine pioneer spirit I put off my journey to the South-West and took the next car over the new line and went out to distant Highbury. The services North and South of the river are to be experimented with in order to find out on which routes the through cars will be most in demand. The present arrangement is recognised as temporary only. The furthermost limits of the through cars for the present will be Highbury and Kennington and Highbury and Tower Bridge, a run of over five miles on both routes, for which a three-penny fare is to be charged. Later, it is hoped to run through cars from Hackney, Finsbury Park, and Highgate, to Streatham, Camberwell, and Greenwich.

There has been a veritable slump in theatre land this week, but most of those who have lately been "eatin' snow" will next week be going along with a full head of steam on. In the vanguard of the Easter productions will be Mr. Sydney Grundy's new play "A Fearful Joy," which Mrs. Langtry brings out at the Haymarket to-morrow night. A departure is made by Mr. Grundy from the traditions of dramatists, inasmuch as the two principal characters, played respectively by Mrs. Langtry and Mr. Arthur Bourchier, speak the opening words in the play. This fact should convey a hint to those who offend in the way of late coming, as the absolute story commences in the very first line. On Easter Monday evening the American "comedy satire in four acts," "The College Widow," by George Ade, will be produced at the Adelphi Theatre, with an almost purely American cast. For Tuesday two "first nights" are announced—"The Mimosa Maid," at the Prince of Wales, and "The Marriage of William Ashe," at Terry's. This clashing is unfortunate, but at such a busy time of the year it is almost unavoidable. Mr. Frank Curzon's production is described as "a French musical incident in two acts; chatter by Paul A. Rubens and Austin Hurgon, jingles and tunes by Paul A. Rubens." The majority of those who helped to make "Miss Hook of Holland" so popular will appear in the cast. Mr. G. P. Huntley is to appear as a sweep—a novel part for him; Miss Isabel Jay will be the head girl on the Mimosa Plantation, and other characters will be played by Mr. George Barrett, Master Archie McCay, Mr. Maurice Farkoa and Miss Gracie Leigh. As for "The Marriage of William Ashe," that, of course, is a dramatisation of Mrs. Humphry Ward's well-known novel. In this Miss Fanny Ward will make a welcome reappearance in London.

Next Thursday Mr. Charles Frohman will "present" at the Aldwych William A. Brady's production of "Way Down East," written by Lottie Blair Parker, and elaborated by Joseph R. Gusmer; and on Saturday the eagerly anticipated new musical play at the Gaiety, "Havana," will make its appearance. The book is by Messrs. George Grossmith, junior, and Graham Hill, and the music is by Mr. Leslie Stuart. Mr. George Edwardes promises many novelties and a setting of the most gorgeous description.

So much for the productions of Easter Week. On the Bank Holiday Mr. Fred Terry will revive once again "The Scarlet Pimpernel" at the New Theatre for a limited number of performances, and on the same day Mr. Tree will begin his Shakespeare Festival Week at His Majesty's, appearing in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" on Monday evening, in "Twelfth Night" on Wednesday evening, and in "Hamlet" on Friday evening and at the Saturday matinee. On the other evenings of the week, and at the Wednesday matinee "The Merchant of Venice" will be performed.

Apart from the theatres mentioned, all the West End houses at present open are happy in the possession of established successes, which promise excellent business throughout the holidays, while the variety shows have made praiseworthy efforts to present strong and attractive programmes.

Rumour says that Mr. Beerbohm Tree has gone to the East End of London, to choose suitable Yiddish types for his supers in "The Merchant of Venice," the production of which I noticed in my last letter. It is enterprising, but is it altogether wise? We may err in striving to be too literal in some things. As someone remarked in this connection:—"Supposing, for instance, the next time we have 'Othello' on the stage we are called upon to import real Moors, and supposing a revival of 'Cymbeline' necessitated the engagement of real Ancient Britons—gentlemen at the moment particularly hard to find?" Or if in the recent Indian Mutiny sketch at one of the Halls—they had brought on a real bazaar rabble of unwashed Aryans!

Mr. Willie Edouin, the famous comedian, died in London, on the 14th instant, aged sixty-three. Fifty-nine years ago at the old Adelaide Gallery he made his debut as a juvenile and after many viscissitudes in Australia, India and America he returned to London and scored many triumphs. Everyone will remember him in such roles as that of Hilarius in "La Poupee," Tweedlepunch in "Florodora," Hogenheimer in "The Girl from Kay's," and as Nathaniel Glover in "Our Flat." I wonder how many people now in India will remember the time he was with the late Mr. John Lewis' Company and made such a hit in the Anglo-German sketch "Struck Oil," which, I believe, still holds the record for a long run in your fair city. His real name was Bryer and he had a most beautiful and talented sister Julia, who also took the stage name of Edouin and if I am not mistaken, married a tea-planter named Graham. In none of the obituary notices of the late comedian have I seen any reference to his visit to India in the early seventies.

The Puritan Peril in England is assuming serious proportions. As was half anticipated, the Government's Re-Publican Bill aims at the exclusion of the barmaid from those six-mile-stones which they propose to leave standing for us to measure our thirst by. A deputation, representing 100,000 barmaids, waited on the Home Secretary recently, when he had to admit that there was "danger of hardship" that would follow if the local authorities issued an edict prohibiting barmaids' employment. Of course, Mr. Herbert Gladstone could give no pledge that their means of livelihood would be safeguarded! The main principle of the Licensing Bill is to hand the beer over to Bumble.

THE VAGRANT.

"What's up, Tommy?" said a good natured London coster, who was passing, to a small boy who was sobbing bitterly.

"Oh, me farden! Hi've lost me brite farden!" wailed the little lad, continuing his search.

"Ere, mates," said the man to some others standing near, "let's help the pore kid find 'is farden."

And the company set to work.

In a few moments one of them picked up the missing coin.

"'Ere y'are, Tommy," he said; "'ere's yar farden." Then, looking at it in the light of a street lamp, "Why, it aint a farden at all; it's a 'arf quid."

"Garn!" said the boy as he snatched away the coin. "D'ye think Hi was goin' to let yew blokes know hit was a 'arf thick 'un? W'y, wun of yer would 'a' 'ad 'is foot on it afore Hi'd 'ad time ter turn rahnd."

And he vanished round the corner like a streak of lightning.

Lots of men are suspicious of others because they know themselves so well. Don't place too much confidence in a man who boasts of being as honest as the day is long; wait until you meet him at night.

FOUR DAYS ON THE TRACK OF A ROGUE ELEPHANT.

This year while shooting in Assam, H. and I got khubber that a rogue elephant had attacked a gang of coolies working on the railway, killing one, and injuring two others. Some two weeks after this, finding ourselves in the neighbourhood, we obtained leave from the authorities to kill the rogue, and sent two men down to the spot to find out if he was still there. These two men were both elephant catchers by profession, and at the time the rogue killed the man, were engaged in driving wild elephants into a kheddah, about a mile from the spot. They finished their drive the night after the occurrence, and when they had got their elephants into the kheddah, they found that the rogue had gone in too. He did not, however, stay in long, but soon broke through the wall and escaped, taking all the others with him. These men, therefore, knew him well, and so when three days later we received a wire to say that the rogue had again come out on to the line, we lost no time in getting to the place.

The place where the man had been killed was on the Assam-Bengal Railway, half way between Naojan and Bokajan stations. Here the line runs through the Nambur forest. This immense forest stretches some forty miles up and down the line from here, on one side away up to the Nagur hills and Burma, on the other ending in the immense stretches of low lying land, covered with elephant grass, which form the bottom of the Assam basin. The jungle here is so dense and so tangled with thorny cane and creepers that it is practically impossible to force one's way through, except along the paths, which the wild elephants have made. These are here in plenty, and all along the line one sees their fresh tracks. Other game is scarce, as every native in the country carries a gun, and shoots indescriminately at old and young. The elephant only is protected because of its commercial value when caught.

We alighted from the train at Naojan, where a new station is being built in the middle of a small swamp. Here in the evening there were more mosquitos per square foot of air than I have ever seen before. Our men were not here, so we sent down the line after them; and amused ourselves building machans for a tiger, said to inhabit the neighbourhood. In the early morning Mohun Singh, one of the elephant catchers, came in; so I walked down the line to the place where the rogue had come out. Here I found a well used track crossing the line between two salt-licks, one on each side. It was evidently a favourite path for wild elephants to cross the line by. I found that the rogue—whose track was easy to recognise from the size of its feet, and from the fact that on the left side the hind foot, when walking, was carried further forward than on the right—had passed through both salt-licks two days previously. These salt-licks consist of a number of holes in the ground, varying from a few feet to twenty yards in diameter, filled with a yellow wet clay, in which one sees the marks of animals of all sorts, that have come to satisfy their natural craving for salt, by eating this brackish mud. Close by the railway were the burnt ruins of the huts where the coolies had lived whom the rogue had attacked. They had burned their huts and fled, after erecting numberless curious offerings to appease the wrath of the elephant. These consisted of rudely carved images of birds, etc., on the top of bamboos twenty feet high, stuck in the ground; and of erections like big wedding cakes, made of mud and bits of bamboo, decorated with little paper flags. It was where this path crossed the line that the rogue had killed the man previously, and he had now returned by exactly the same road, so I suppose the charm had not worked!

I found a rude hut up in the branches of a tree, 25 feet from the ground, which had been used by the elephant catchers to watch the path; and decided to sleep in this as being out of the way of leeches and mosquitos. I went back and fetched H and our female shikar elephant, and arrived just before dark. There was a small stream just before the path; and our elephant objecting to cross this, the mahout had to use his goad. The elephant gave a scream when the goad hit her, which was answered by a call from a wild elephant in the jungle near by. Rifles were out and loaded in an instant, and in excited whispers we decided on our plan of action. We all took up our position by a pile of sleepers, close to where the path crossed the line, and hobbling our elephant turned her loose to feed on the grass close to the line, in the hope that the rogue would come out to pay his respects. For three or four hours we sat there in the moonlight, while the mosquitos and sandflies held high revel on us. It was the hot weather and our thin khaki clothes were no protection against them, so we had a bad time. Then as we had heard nothing more from the jungle opposite, we decided to tie up our elephant under the hut in the tree and go to sleep.

Nothing happened for several hours, and the occasional bark of a kakur was all we heard, so one by one we went to sleep. The next morning we went to investigate, and found that it had been a female elephant with a tiny calf that had answered ours last night. We ate a tin of Army rations, made some tea out of the filthy stream near, and slept till evening, when we again sat on the line and slept in the hut. In the middle of the night we were awakened by a crash and a jolt, and sprang up thinking the rogue had come. The main beam in the floor of the hut had given, and the whole concern had fallen some six inches on to another bough. It was lucky for us that there was one there, otherwise we should have had a nasty fall. We felt the bough on which we now rested, hoped it was strong enough, and were asleep again in half a minute.

Next day we moved on to Bokajan, some 7 miles further down the line, hoping to get some news from the mahouts of four elephants, that were working here dragging timber from the jungle. For two days, however, we heard nothing, and on the third, set out to look at a salt-lick some two miles away, which the rogue was said to visit sometimes. When we got there, H and I had a dispute about the road. I wanted to follow an old local shikari we had found that day, and strike off by a short cut, while H wanted to go round by the main road which Mohun Singh knew. We parted, and the old man and I went off along our tiny path, while H went on. We soon got to the salt-lick, and found two day old tracks of the rogue passing through it. I decided to follow these for a short way, and we wandered on for two or three miles through a succession of salt-licks with here and there a bheel. A bheel is an open space with a pool in the centre surrounded by short green grass, and outside this a belt of elephant grass some 12 feet high, fringing the edge of the jungle.

We saw no fresh tracks, so as it was evident that the rogue had only passed through, I told the old man to take me back to the road by which H was coming. He mistook my meaning, however, and started off straight for Bokajan. He had gone a mile before I spotted it, and then I made him turn back by another path. We had only gone some twenty yards or so along the new path when we came on the track and dung of an elephant only a few minutes old. There was no mistaking it. It was the rogue. I looked at the cartridges in my ·450 Rigby, and we discussed what to do. It was now 9 o'clock, so as it was certain that he would not move far in the heat of the day, we decided to go back and fetch H. and Mohun Singh before attacking him. We moved off along the path, when there was a crash in the jungle some thirty yards to the right. That was too much for me, and pushing forward the safety bolt, I made straight for the spot where I had heard the tree break. The jungle was fairly open and I soon got there. I could see the bushes moving twenty yards ahead, and then I saw a tail flap. The bushes closed and he was gone. I followed; but he had apparently gone into a thick patch of grass. The old man's teeth were chattering in his head with fright, and he said that the rogue had gone into a big bheel of dense elephant grass, where he would probably stay for the heat of the day. It was quite useless to follow him into grass, as one cannot see three feet in it; so I decided to leave him there and go and fetch H, and then both of us take up his track when he left the bheel later on.

I told the old man to take me back to H, and he started off at a great speed. I soon saw that he had lost his head, as he began to take me through the most awful jungle, instead of along the game paths. I accused him of cowardice and he owned frankly that he was afraid, but said that the elephant was a rogue. I reflected that perhaps he had some excuse, as a rogue instead of flying from man will invariably attack him when he sees or smells him. The old fool took me an awful round avoiding every place where there was the remotest chance of an encountering elephant, and when I found H I had my hands and face all torn with thorns, and was in such a state of rage and heat that I could hardly speak.

We started off at once, though the heat was awful, and struck straight in towards the spot where I had seen the rogue. The jungle at first was that horrible prickly creeping cane, which nothing but an elephant can penetrate, so we took our beast to make a path. As soon, however, as we got through this we went on, on foot, and sent the elephant back. It then came on to rain in torrents and we were soon wet through; it was a relief though after the sun. I was feeling somewhat shaky from the heat, so we sat down for half an hour and ate our tiffin before we got to business. We soon reached the place where I had seen the rogue and started on the track. We then found that there was no bheel at all, but that it was all nice open jungle; so the old man had lied because he was afraid to follow the beast. We went on for about two miles, crossing a couple of small streams on the way, where the enormous size of the rogue's feet could be clearly seen in the mud. Mohun Singh was leading, I came next, and close behind me H, while the old man followed fifty yards behind.

Suddenly an elephant trumpeted about forty yards ahead and we could just make out through the thick jungle that he was coming towards us. He had winded us and was coming to attack us. In the excitement of the moment we hardly realised this, and both of us ran forwards towards him as fast as the jungle would let us. I do not suppose he had ever seen men running towards him before, and it must have upset his nerve, for he turned to our left and crossed a small open space about twenty yards in front of me. Before I could pull up and fire, his head was behind a tree, but my first bullet struck him behind the shoulder and my next in the pelvis. He reeled and trumpeted, and then turned and bolted straight away like a mad railway engine. I could hear him crashing on far a long distance with an occasional scream of rage. H, who had gone to the right, did not get a shot, and it never occurred to him to fire after him as he bolted on the chance of laming him.

We rushed forward to examine the track and found that he had been lying down in a pool of water when he winded us.

In the mud of this pool we found great broad marks, which told us that he was a fine tusker; we had neither of us noticed any tusks in the wild excitement of the few seconds we saw him. We hurried on after him; but not a drop of blood did we find on the track, nor was there any sign of weakness; just a big broad trail straight through everything, trees knocked over, and creepers as thick as one's wrist torn through like cotton. The shot was fired at 12, and we followed him till 3 almost at a run; the track going dead straight the whole way. Then, however, he turned and we saw to our joy that he was heading for Bokajan. At 4-30 he crossed the Boka jan (jan—stream), on which, lower down, the village of Bokajan stands. Here Mohun Singh turned with doubt in his face. Was I sure I had hit him. He had seen no signs of it. I knew my rifle and assured him that he had one behind the shoulder and one further back. I do not think he believed me.

We now decided to leave the tracks here and pick them up again the next day, as it would be dark at 6, and to be benighted in these leech infested jungles is no joke. I was for following the stream, but the old man said he knew a shorter way, so we followed him. We were all dead beat and walked in silence till dark, when on asking him how far it was, he said he had lost his way. There was a little moon, so H. and I went in front and struck off in the direction in which we believed Bokajan to lie. We struggled on till 8-30, and just as we were giving up hope came out upon the railway. We had thought we were heading for the road four miles away, so we were pretty badly lost. That evening we collected seven coolies, four of them old Gurkha sepoys of the 42nd, under a havildar of the same regiment. We also engaged a keen little man with a name that sounded like Gorilla, who turned out to be an excellent tracker. Two other odd men and the old man also attached themselves to us. During the night it rained in torrents.

The next morning we started out with three days rations all round and two blankets, a mosquito net and a waterproof sheet for ourselves. We marched up the jan in the bed of the stream till we struck the trail at 9 A.M. We and the shikaris then went ahead on the tracks, while the coolies under the havildar followed some way behind. For the first three hours the track was difficult to follow, as the footprints were nearly washed out by the rain and we had to go mostly by broken sticks. After this he began to go a little lame in the off hind leg; which gave us great joy, as not only did it prove that he was hit, but also made the track much easier to follow, as he was kicking up the dirt with his toe. We went at full speed till 4, with one halt only, when we lost the trail in some thick cane, where two other elephants had crossed his track. We now found it quite easy to recognise his marks, as his feet were much larger than any ordinary elephant, and also he was lame.

At 4 a heavy thunderstorm came on, which though it cooled the air, wet us through, a matter of some importance now as we had no change of clothes and would have to sleep out in the jungle. After the rain stopped we went on for about a mile, when we came on a place where the elephant had been standing still, throwing earth over himself. He had only just left and had gone off down the hill. We then found that this place was only five yards from the track we had come along some fifteen minutes before; so if the wind had been wrong we should have had him amongst us with no warning at all! We hurried on down the hill. The track now was easy to follow as his halt had made the beast very lame, and his foot was dragging along the ground all the way.

At the bottom of the hill, a sound in front made us pause. It was the flap of an elephant's ear. We were close to him at last, and with rapidly beating pulses we opened our rifles to see that all was right, (H was also shooting with a ·450 Rigby) and giving the double 8-bore to Mohun Singh to keep ready for an emergency, the three of us went on as quietly as possible. We topped a small rise, when Mohun Singh stopped and pointed, and there was our elephant standing broadside on, in a little open space about 15 yards off, quite unconscious of our presence. Neither of us could at first make out which was his head and which his tail, as there were a few scanty brushes between us and his head, while his stern was in the jungle. I remember thinking that he looked like a huge square portmanteau. I was the first to locate his head. I saw his tail flap; and then looking the other end, I made out his ear into which I immediately fired both barrels as quickly as I could pull them. H let go at his shoulder, and then Mohun Singh could restrain himself no longer, and off went the 8-bore. Instantly elephant, jungle and all were blotted out with the thick smoke. One could not see a yard, while out of the mist came trumpeting and crashing of trees. I saw H. fire his second barrel into the smoke; and then not knowing whether the beast was coming our way or what had happened, I stepped behind a big tree close at hand and reloaded. I had seen the elephant reel when my bullets struck him, so thought he had fallen. When I had reloaded, as the crashing seemed to be more to our right, H. and I tried to go in that direction. The jungle, however, was very thick, and by the time we got through to where he had been, there was nothing to be seen. Presently Mohun Singh appeared. I asked him whether it had fallen, and in answer he took us a little further on and showed us a broad track of broken trees and creepers leading straight away.

The beast had got away, but we were confident that he could not go far now. On examination of the track we found a little blood here and there and some of the contents of the bowels. The coolies now came up, and we went as hard as we knew how along the track, with our sturdy little Gurkhas, who were now just as keen on the chase as ourselves, only a hundred yards behind. The vitality of the elephant must be great, for he was going now at full speed with no sign of lameness or weakness at all. In fact, as Mohun Singh remarked, the track looked like that of an unwounded beast. He climbed steep banks, and waded through mud three feet deep, with no apparent difficulty. We followed till dark, and then camped for the night beside a filthy puddle, the colour of which did not seem to be appreciably altered by making tea of it. We built a sort of bedstead with sticks some three feet above the ground, to try and keep out of reach of the leeches which swarmed here. They climbed up to us, however, and what with their biting me and H's kicking, I got no sleep at all. Of course, taking our clothes off was impossible, and water was much too precious to waste any by washing in it.

We were up before light, and H. created great amusement by his wrath at finding a big leech full of blood behind his right ear. We followed the track at full speed, expecting to come up to our quarry every minute; but as mile after mile was passed we became more and more astonished and angry, as it became evident that he had gone right away. Gone was his lameness of yesterday, and as Mohun remarked, the five bullets he had got seemed merely to have bucked him up. We went hard till 1, passing on the way through many an elephant grass bheel, and many a cane brake, where we could not see a yard in front. It was very hot, we were tired, and very angry, and never stopped to think what would have happened if we had found him in this thick jungle. They say the Lord looks after drunkards and fools; I think there must be a special clause for sportsmen, if they are not included among the fools, for if we had found our rogue in some of those bheels, where we were up to our middles in water, in grass one could not see a yard through, nothing could have saved us. The leeches here swarmed in millions up our legs, and when in one place we stopped for a minute or two and took off our boots, we must have killed forty of the brutes each, all full of blood. We were now leaving the plain behind and getting up into the hills, and when we stopped at 1, on the road from Dimapur to Mohendijjua, we were in an entirely different country from where we started. This was all a series of low hills with running streams in the valleys. There were no more leeches or grass or creeping cane, but nice open jungle with here and there clumps of bamboo.

We called a halt on the road, and ate our tiffin. We were considering how far behind us the coolies would be, the estimates varying from two to two and a half hours; when to our astonishment they arrived. The Gurkhas had got so keen on the chase that loads and all they had come nearly as fast as we had. We had wasted half an hour, so were off again in a hurry, after telling the coolies to eat their food first and then follow. Up to this point our elephant had shown no sign of failing, but had gone straight on without stopping to eat or drink. Now, however, he began to flag. His feet dragged along the ground and he went wandering round in endless curves. About 3 o'clock, he got into the dry bed of a stream and followed this for about a mile, all his feet kicking up the sand, and reeling about as he went. We thought we had him, and broke into a trot; but to our amazement he suddenly turned sharp left handed, and went up the side of a hill that made us blow and puff, without any sign of that made us blow and puff, without any sign of weakness at all. We began to think that this wonderful beast would never give in. About 5 we came to a nullah with water running over the sand and a good camping place. H. was for staying here, but I voted for a last dash, so on we went. We did not find him and returned to the nullah at dark.

That night the coolies did not catch us up, we had no food except some crumbs of bread mixed with bits of paper in my pocket, our matches were damp and we could light no fire, we were wet through in thin clothes and had no more. To add to our discomfort the place we had chosen to sleep in turned out to be an ant's nest, and we had to leave and climb up to a bear's cave I had noticed, in the side of the hill close by. We threw stones in to make sure that the bear was not at home, and then after drinking our fill of water, turned in and tried to sleep. Mohun Singh and I soon succeeded; but H could not, and he wandered about trying to get touch with the coolies by shouting. At 5 the next morning the coolies came in, and we ate a hurried breakfast and started on the track once more. We were both of us so done up with the long marches, sun, and want of sleep, that we began to be afraid that the elephant would outlast us. Before starting we had sent two coolies back to save food, as there was only one day's rations left now; and we were more than a day's march out already, and did not know how much further we would have to go.

We had not gone far before we began to see from the tracks that the final scene was near. The game old beast was on his last legs. His track now looked like that of a drunken man in a cornfield; his feet ploughed up the ground like two ploughs driven parallel, while he bumped into every tree by the path. About 11 we came to a pool of water in which he had been standing during the night, the holes in the bank made by his tusks showing how he had been supporting his head in his weariness. He had never lain down since the first shot was fired, nor had he done more than snatch a leaf or two in passing, for food. On the other bank of the pool was a mark where he had forced himself up by his trunk in great haste, and his track for a few yards looked like that of an unwounded beast. Then the old flounderings began again; and the reason for his haste was clear. There was the track of another elephant joining his. He must have heard it coming, and thinking it was his enemies again, had gathered all his strength for a last attack. Every twenty yards he stopped now, and leaned against a tree, or threw earth over his wounds. These signs of weakness gave us an unholy joy, but still it was sad to see a grand beast like that at last forced to give in.

At length we reached a pool which he had just left; the bubbles were still bursting on the water. Beyond this was a very thick cane brake. This was the first place Mohun Singh hesitated to enter. We closed up, cocked our rifles, not a word was spoken, and on we went. On the other side of the cane was some open jungle. I saw H, who was second, put his rifle to his shoulder and fire. I rushed forward and saw the rogue going off slowly to the left. I gave him one bullet in the head, and the other behind the shoulder, then throwing the empty rifle aside snatched the other ·450 (H had the 8-bore) and H and I went after him as hard as we could. We were soon brought up sharp by creepers. Only a native can run in these jungles. We could hear the elephant going slowly off, so giving Mohun Singh and Gorilla our rifles, and telling them to keep in touch with him, we cleaned the mud out of the gun I had thrown away, and followed as fast as the jungle would let us. Four shots in rapid succession, a short distance ahead, made us redouble our efforts. The great beast had shot his bolt, he could go no further, so had turned round and stood facing danger in an open space swaying as he stood. The shikaris were firing at his forehead from the shelter of an enormous outheap, and at the fourth shot a bullet found his brain and down he came. We fired a few more shots into his head to make certain, and then went up to examine our prize and see where our previous bullets had struck. We found that they had hit him just about where we had thought, so he was fairly riddled with holes.

Now that it was all over I felt quite faint, and had to sit down and take a nip of whisky. Mohun Singh also had run himself out, and could hardly stand. We must have covered over eighty miles, through bad jungle, in the heat of a May sun, during the last four days; so we had some excuse for being done up. The wonderful little Gurkhas turned up about a quarter of an hour later, also done to a turn. We all sat round the elephant, and it was a long time before any of us could collect sufficient energy to start cutting it up. It rained in torrents all night, Mohun Singh said it always rains like that when an elephant dies. It took us till 12 next day to cut out the tusks and skin the feet. The coolies had only a handful of rice left apiece, and we had one tin of sardines. We tried to eat elephant's trunk and tongue, but found it impossible. The pulp of the tusks was very nasty, but soft. This and a little rice soaked in elephant gravy was all we had all day. We started at 12, and marched on our previous tracks till dark, when we had to leave them for fear of losing them, and followed the bed of a stream in hopes it would lead us somewhere. At about 10 we came out on to the Dimapur road, but it was only by great luck that we succeeded in preventing any of our precious trophies being thrown away by the utterly exhausted coolies. The Gurkhas were splendid. One I saw fall under his load six times, but he never complained, and was soon up and going again. The leeches were awful, and when at last we arrived at the Dimapur bungalow the floor soon looked like a slaughter house from the blood which dripped from our legs and arms.

The measurements of the rogue were: Height at shoulder 9 feet 7 inches; tusks 53 and 50 inches; circumference of forefeet 54½ inches.

WANDRINGGUN.

An aged hero of the Crimean War and Indian Mutiny, who resided in a remote village in Scotland, was one day interviewed by a party of gentlemen on an outing. They listened with interest to the story of the old man's share in the above-mentioned campaigns, and after thanking him profusely were about to depart, when the aged warrior suddenly remarked:—

"There's anither thing, gentlemen, that I can recall to mind."

"Ah, indeed! What is that?" eagerly asked the tourists, expecting to hear a most interesting reminiscence.

"Gentlemen," said the veteran in impressive tones. "I weel remember that I was just as thirsty during the whole of the Battle of Inkerman as I am now."

The party took the hint.

Dutiful Nephew: Oh, uncle, I thought you wouldn't mind my bringing my friend Grigg from our office. He ain't much to look at, and he can't dance, and he don't talk, and he won't play cards—but he's such a mimic! To-morrow he'll imitate you and Aunt Betsy in a way that'll make all the fellows roar!

Fishing.

TROUT FISHING.

THE typical trout stream of the woodlands or wilderness is a thing of much variety. Swift-running, shallow riffles deepen and increase in swiftness, forming strong, turbulent rapids. These are succeeded by falls, and at the foot of the falls are dark, quiet pools. Now one comes upon some long, still reach where there is little or no current; and again one finds the stream combining riffle and quiet water in a manner difficult to describe. The bottom of the stream also is subject to constant variation. Although in most trout streams gravel bottom predominates, yet there will be many places where it is merely sand, possibly large rocks lying closely together, or perhaps the bottom will be weedy. You know there are trout in the stream, but where? Are they in the riffles, rapids or pools? What is the nature of the stream-bottom for which they may have some passing preference? Obviously the solution is a matter of natural history—the habits of the brook trout.

Scientists are very serious, precise gentlemen who are fond of giving queer Latin names to things. Once in a long, long time one of these names, when translated, will really mean something to the ordinary, unscientific person. The speckled brook trout of Eastern waters had the great good luck to win in this baptismal lottery a name appropriate and descriptive in the highest degree—Salmo fontinalis. Freely translated this means "the little salmon of the springs," and it is difficult indeed to imagine anything more fitting. Since, however, the speckled brook trout is a char and not a salmon trout, its name has within a few years been changed to Salvelinus fontinalis; salvelinus meaning a char. It is the favourite fish both of anglers who are supposedly humble and of those who are afflicted, in the opinion of the aforesaid humble fishermen, with pretences and affectations. Whether fly-fishing is a thing of pretence or the contrary will not here be discussed. The present writer holds no brief for the fly-caster as against the bait fisherman, for the very good reason that he is disqualified by indiscriminate participation in both forms of the sport. However, in view of the fact that the history of fly-casting dates back to, approximately, the third century A.D., it would seem, at least, that those who decry it are lacking in the respect and veneration which should be accorded a very ripe old age. Also it is not our purpose to dwell upon other habits and characteristics of the brook trout than those which most intimately affect the fisherman when he stands hip-deep in the rapids ready for the First Cast.

Essentially is the brook trout a creature of varied moods and tenses. He is here to-day; gone to-morrow. To-day he wants a certain bug, to-morrow another and quite different insect. At one time he is lively and playful; at another sluggish and sulky. To an uncertain degree only can his actions be forecasted. But, although he is eccentric, and although many of his actions are exceptions to all rules, several facts are generally true of him. Given the proper outfit and competent skill in its use, there remains for the fly-fisherman only the necessity of compassing, as far as may be, these general truths about trout.

In October or November trout ascend to the headwaters of the streams for the purpose of spawning. They then gradually drift back to lower waters, and early spring finds them in the pools and deeper parts of the stream. At this time the water is usually bank-high and full of snow-broth. Even after the snow has disappeared from the immediate vicinity of the river snow-water is still running, for in the deep, mountain ravines from which the little "feeders" flow down ice and snow remain until the season is well advanced. Thus early in the season trout are torpid and when hooked show little or no spirit. As soon as the river is fairly clear they will take bait, and this is the most successful way of fishing for them at this time. If you insist on fly-fishing you can hope for extremely moderate returns. The fish are ground feeding and rise to the surface reluctantly. One method of fly-fishing under these conditions is to use a silver doctor fly and fish it beneath the surface. The silver body of this fly has a minnow-like flutter when drawn through the water that will sometimes induce a fish to strike. But it is far better to depend upon your bait-box or, if you are a fly-fishing purist, to stay at home. Most of us consider it a sacred duty to "wet a line" on the opening day or as soon thereafter as possible. This done we are very content to wait the more favourable conditions which prevail in May and June.

When the stream has resumed its normal level and clarity, and the water has been warmed by the spring sunshine, the fly-fishing is at its best. Insect life is now abundant upon the banks and over the surface of the water. The fish are upon the riffles and in the rapids, having deserted the deeper pools and reaches. Also, they are constantly foraging and their taste in the matter of insects, both natural and artificial, much less discerning than later in the season. Other things being equal, the fly-fisherman should now have no difficulty in making a satisfactory score.

Then comes the late spring and summer fishing. Now, indeed, must one cast finely and far off. Low, clear water prevails. The hot sun for weeks has beaten upon the stream, and the trout, seeking the cool water which their nature demands, are now to be found about the springholes, and farther upstream than heretofore. You may find the lower portions of the stream practically trout-deserted. A good place is where some little mountain brook empties into the river. Fishing in the early morning and late afternoon will now bring the best results. In the cool of the evening the trout work out from their day-time lairs and may be found feeding in the riffles.

With the above generalities as a basis we can now consider with more detail certain special aspects of the trout problem. In trout fishing, as in many other things, it is a good plan to make haste slowly. One can never tell with certainty just where the fish may be lying. Until, with reason, you have arrived at some conclusion as to where the trout are using, fish all the water. Try the little shallow ripples near the banks. Wet the flies in every part of the riffles and rapids. When you come to a pool fish all of it from the head, then go around and fish all of it from below. Do not neglect the little eddies around projecting rocks and the like. Many times the best fish are taken in the most unlikely places. Where the stream has fretted away the soil so as to form a hiding place beneath the overhanging bank, or in the lee of submerged logs and rocks, watch out for the "big one." Proceeding in this manner you will soon discover the nature of the places where the majority of the fish are located, and if your time is limited you can pass by those which seem most unproductive. But if your leisure is absolute and you have "all day" ahead of you, it is far better to continue to cover all the water possible.

In the experimental stage of the day's fishing it is well also to determine as quickly as possible which method of presenting the flies seems to be most popular with the fish. If the customary method of casting, that is, keeping the flies well up on the surface and in constant motion, does not produce sufficiently satisfactory results, try slightly sinking the cast and withdrawing it evenly or in three or four jerks. A variation in the method of casting frequently means the difference between success and failure. Trout habits are in great measure a matter of locality. If you are to fish a stream that is new to you by all means get into communication, if possible, with some local angler and believe all that he tells you. If he is the right kind of a man he will save you many hours which would otherwise be spent in probably unsuccessful experimenting.

The general rule as to choice of flies is to use dark flies for light days and light ones for dark days. Also when the water is very low and clear you must use very small flies. There are only some three thousand different varieties of artificial insects. A dozen or so of these, of different kinds and in good quantity as to sizes, are amply sufficient. For home waters the darker coloured flies are the best. Flies that come within this classification are: Cahill, cowdung, beaverkill, and queen of the waters. For brighter flies, which should be used toward evening and on dark days, the coachman, grizzly king, Seth Green and silver doctor are the best. If you add to these the brown and gray hackles, parmacheene belle and professor, your list is for all ordinary occasions complete. As the coachman is the best all-'round fly it is well to make it a permanent part of your cast. Using it for your end fly you will find that the white wing is a great aid in determining just where your cast is. With forty or more feet of line out, and in broken waters, small, soberly coloured flies are very difficult to see; and it is necessary to take immedate advantage of a rise. The rise and strike must be practically simultaneous. The coachman will catch fish at any time of day, at any time during the season, and often when no other fly will produce a rise. As a "meat" fly it is unequalled.

Much more depends upon the handling of the cast than upon minute graduations in colour, size or shape. As I have said, if surface fishing does not succeed, a sunken fly may change the day. Also it is a fact that at times a trout will only rise to a fly when it comes to him in a certain position relative to where he may be lying. If the course of the fly varies only slightly, a matter of two or three inches, from the point at which he has risen or will rise he will stay down. If you have raised a trout and subsequent casts have failed to bring him up again, try floating the flies down to and over him from above. This will often induce him to come again. Cause your flies to appear as near like living things as possible. Do not simply drag them over the surface of the water like so many bunches of hair and feathers. For streams of average size, not little mountain brooks, and in normal condition, flies tied upon number eight Sproat hooks are the best. But when, late in the season, the streams are low and clear, use the very smallest flies. That the fish may see no connection between the separate flies, or between the entire cast and the line, see to it that your leader is not too coarse in view of the conditions prevailing.

Many times you will hear fishermen tell of the number of trout which they persuaded to rise but which they did not succeed in hooking. Nothing is of more importance than the strike. Frequently poor luck or lack of skill in this particular is the cause of an unsuccessful outing. You cannot strike too quickly. If you take the flies away from the fish without pricking him the chances are he will come again. But if you strike too slowly the fish has a chance to mouth the fly, perceive the cheat, and eject it. He does this so quickly that, as time, it is hardly measurable.

The brook trout must be still-hunted. You cannot regard too highly his ability to see and hear. As you wade down the riffles be careful to do so as quietly as possible. Noises in the air are not apt to alarm the fish; but concussions on the surface of the water or beneath it are certain to do so. That the brook-trout's sense of vision is, within certain limits, highly developed, is well known. The thing to do is to remember these things. If, after a long siege of unsuccessful casting, you have become careless and absent-minded, or if you have had cause to become excited, you will often find yourself progressing down the river with all the stealth, finesse and inconspicuousness of a circus-parade. Then you wonder just how long a stretch of good fishing water you have wasted. The loss of temper incident merely to back-casts that "hung up" has saved the lives of very many lusty trout. Keep your temper until you positively see red. Then climb the bank and observe nature. For be it known that when the philosopher made the famous remark about fishing, of a verity he uttered the sad, unalterable truth. It is not.—S.G.C. in Recreation.

SHOOTING QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—With reference to the Shooting Query in your last issue regarding rifles for hill-shooting, there can be no doubt that the Westley Richards' ·318 and the Rigby ·350 are the best for that purpose and also for general shooting anywhere. With one exception, I mean following up dangerous animals after they are wounded. From my experience of both the above patterns of rifles, I would prefer the W.R. ·318 bore. The recoil of the Rigby ·350 single barrel is very severe and likely to make one nervous.

Axite has no "disadvantages." It is a great improvement over cordite.

UNIDENTIFIED MONGOOSE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I have several times seen in the Agra District, round Jagner for instance, large mongooses similar in general colouring to the common variety, Herpestes mungo, but having a very marked white tip to the tail. I did not at the time think that there was anything extraordinary about an Indian mongoose having a white tag to its tail, so never even took the precaution of securing a specimen. Since then, however, I have searched Natural History works in vain for an Indian variety with a white tail; no such animal seems to exist. Two of the African mongooses have white tips to their tails, viz., Cynictis penicillata and Herpestes albicauda. Possibly the animals which I saw may have been a local variety, which have somehow escaped notice. That they are a race with distinctive colouring seems pretty certain, as I saw about half a dozen of them at different times. As regards size too, they looked decidedly bigger than H. mungo. I have never seen the large ruddy moongoose (H. smithi) of the Nilgherry Hills and Wynaad in a state of domestication. It has however often struck me that this powerful animal, if it can be as readily tamed as the common mongoose, would make an excellent pet, for it could hold its own against any but large dogs, the more so as it has an extraordinarily thick tough skin which is almost proof against any ordinary bite. One which I had slightly wounded was set on by three dogs and worried, yet when I skinned it afterwards, not one of the numerous bites had perforated the tough skin. Of course these big mongooses are shot on sight throughout the Southern Indian Hills, as they are so terribly destructive to game.

"FLEUR-DE-LYS."

FORTY-FIVE POUNDS ON A TROUT ROD.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—In The Indian Field of 28th April I see an account of a 27lb. Mahseer caught on a 11ft. trout fly rod. I may mention that this season a Mahseer was caught at Tangrote on a light 10ft. 6in. trout rod, the fish weighing 45lbs. The fish was hooked at the top of the rapid in Jungoo Pool and took out 200 yards of line straight off the reel when the line came to an end and the fish had to be followed down the pool in a boat. It was landed in 35 minutes—a clean well shaped fish in splendid condition. This was a rough experiment for so light a rod. I may mention that a 28lb. and two 25lb. fish were caught on the same trip in the same pool. The rod was a greenheart (Luscombe's) with a Hardy's Silex reel and Hardy's new "Indian" line.

RIFLE.

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled wiht the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High-Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

VELOCITY 2,150 F. S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

THE TURF.

NOTTINGHAM.

THOUGH Monday is the day for holiday folk in this district, the local element was strongly represented on the 13th instant, and with a fair muster in the members' enclosure the attendance was one of the best seen here at this time of the year. The temperature was low, snow having fallen during part of the early morning, but it did not lie, and the paddock and course looked fresh and green after the showers, the going being a bit on the holding side. With seven events the card was a heavy one. Details :—

For the second day a more unpromising morning would have been hard to find, dark and wet, with a searchingly cold wind. However, an agreeable surprise was in store, the almost impossible happening, and our November-like conditions were tempered by a lull in the bitter wind and an extra dose of sunshine, which made the paddock a pleasant lounge, though in the front, particularly towards the finish, the wind whistled keenly. The going was a bit soft but improving each hour, and big fields were the order of the day. Details:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE LAST INTERNATIONAL, IRELAND vs. WALES.—Played at Aberdare on Saturday, the 11th instant. The result could not, of course, affect the championship more than by deciding the possessors of the wooden spoon, and as fate would have it, last season's champions were the unwilling recipients. Enforced changes had very seriously diminished the strength of the Welsh team, while Ireland were without Shanks. There were about 15,000 spectators, who saw Wales lose the toss. Watkins kicked off on a heavy ground, rain having fallen heavily for several hours previous to the match. After the Irish forwards had been sent back by Price, Wales made several rushes, and once came near scoring, while on another occasion the Irish crossbar was broken by a shot. Still, the Irish defence held out, and Ireland, by smart forward play pressed, and gained an unproductive corner. Later Hodgkinson for Wales lost an opportunity through delay in centring. Ireland would not be kept out, and showing capital combination the forwards bore down on the Welsh goal, Sloan scoring what proved the only goal of the match. After another turn by Ireland, Wales were aggressive, but could not score, and eventually Ireland gained a fruitless corner. Half-time:—Ireland, 1 goal; Wales, nil.

On the resumption, both sides attacked in their turn, without tangible result. Ireland gained a free kick, which Evans safely negotiated. Meredith put in some capital work, and once furnished Scott with a handful, which was smartly dealt with. Ireland made several attacks, but Evans was in good form. Afterwards Meredith was unlucky not to score, and the Welsh forwards continuing to attack, Meredith nearly found the net. The Welsh defence was strong, and Ireland could not penetrate it again, but the home attack was equally unable to defeat Scott and his comrades. The Everton goalkeeper brought off some good saves, and the game ended with Wales striving strenuously for the equalising point, which never came: Result:—Ireland, 1 goal; Wales, nil.

F. A. AMATEUR CUP.—FINAL.—The appearance of an army team in the final of the Amateur Cup for the first time since 1895, when the Royal Artillery were beaten by Bishop Auckland, invested the struggle on Saturday between Stockton and the Depot Battalion R.E. (Chatham), at Bishop Auckland, with unusual interest, and notwithstanding great local counter-attractions, there was an attendance of some 8,000, and the gate money was £208. The civilians had a big following, but the soldiers were the popular team, and their well-deserved victory of two goals to one gave general satisfaction, the losers being among the first to admit that they had been eaten by a better team.

The Engineers went off in fine style, and soon had the Stockton defence in difficulties, Gray having a busy time. In the first twenty minutes the soldiers seemed likely to take the lead at any moment, but luck was against them, the ball twice or three times cannoning off opponents close in from shots that deserved to score. Stockton gradually improved, and had more of the game, Aston having to save from Henderson and Lowther, while at the other end Lowe and Hawthorn tested Gray with smashing shots. The run of the game was in favour of the Engineers, whose forwards were smart and clever, but they did not penetrate the opposing defence, and at half-time no goals had been scored.

The Engineers had the worst of matters for the first few minutes in the concluding half, but they then rallied, and Stockton had to work with desperate energy to beat off their attacks. At the end of fifteen minutes Keir swung across a nice centre, and after Gray had saved, Lowe netted with a well-judged shot. A minute later Keir got away, centred right across the goal mouth, and Pearson rushing up headed past Gray. The game became more lively after this, the civilians making great efforts to get on terms, and profiting by a mistake in the defence, Freeland scored. Result:—Depot Battalion R.E., 2; Stockton, 1.

SOME LEAGUE SURPRISES.—Notts County succeeded on Saturday in accomplishing one of the best performances of the season—the defeat of the League leaders at Manchester. The lowly position of the visitors, and their danger of relegation, led up to a great deal of sympathy from the crowd, who heartily cheered the winners. The only goal came two minutes from the finish, when Cantrell, the ex-Villa forward, scored and won the match.

The victory of Woolwich Arsenal at Birmingham was nearly as meritorious, although the Southern team will perhaps regret beating brothers in distress. The two points obtained from this match practically means safety for the Arsenal, but it has helped Birmingham on another step of their progress towards Division II. Bristol City were in a desperate position when they went to Blackburn, and a severe defeat of 4 goals to 1 actually places them in the last two—a position they may find it difficult to get out of.

The return of Shepherd to the Bolton Wanderers team has meant much to them, and a victory over Sheffield Wednesday enables them to still keep their heads above water. Nottingham's triumph over Cottonopolis was complete, for the Forest beat the City in fine style. A poor game was seen at Chelsea, where Preston effected a draw.

Another quite astonishing result was a further defeat for Everton on their own ground—the fourth within a few weeks. Sunderland were the successful visitors this time, and their improvement since Roose joined them a few weeks ago is wonderful. On the other hand, Everton have been rapidly descending the table, and they have not held such a lowly position for years.

BOXING.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THE amateur boxing championships were once more successfully brought off at the Alexandra Palace on the 15th instant, and over 5,000 people watched some stirring bouts. As the result of the competitions there are five new champions, as the two holders who defended their titles were both defeated.

E. Adams, who was last year successful in the Bantams, went out in the first round on this occasion, but C. Morris, the feather-weight champion, did not lose his title until the final.

Commencing shortly after half-past eleven, boxing went on until half-past five, when there was an interval of an hour. Up to that point the best displays had been given by Johnson in the light-weights, who knocked out Elliott and Wynn in turn.

Though interesting up to a certain point, the evening's boxing was on the whole of a rather poor quality, three of the finals being of such a one-sided character that there was never the slightest doubt about the result. The best class was seen in the bantams and light-weights, Holmes, who won the feathers in 1905, carrying off the light-weights in face of the odds.

Thomas, of Birmingham, who won the bantams, showed himself to be a really clever little boxer. In all his rounds he had to meet good men, and he did not get the final verdict over Shipp—who had put out last year's winner, Adams—without a struggle.

Child had an easy task in the middles, and Ringer beat last year's winner of the feathers in a most disappointing bout. The heavy-weights produced a powerful, hard-hitting man in Evans, of Reading.

BANTAM-WEIGHTS.

First Round.—Shipp beat Adams; Bowdery beat Ringham; Thomas beat Kerry; Dabbs beat Morgan; Webb beat London; W. Hatchman, a bye.

Second Round.—Hatchman beat Dabbs; Thomas beat Webb; Shipp beat Bowdery.

Semi-final.—Thomas beat Hatchman; Shipp, a bye.

Final.—H. Thomas (Birmingham B.C.) beat A. Shipp (Columbia B. and A.C.).

FEATHER-WEIGHTS.

BURNS AND SQUIRES.—The meeting between "Tommy" Burns, of America, and Squires, of Australia, at the Stamford Bridge grounds, Chelsea, on 11th May, should prove one of the greatest "draws" of late years. Popular prices are to be the order of the day, Burns tells me, and seats will range from three guineas down to the modest shilling. The contest is to be one of twenty rounds of three minutes each, for a purse and a side stake. At present all that is wanting is Squire's signature to the articles, and there is very little doubt that he will sign them, for he considered himself unlucky when he was defeated by Burns in San Francisco last year, and is anxious to have another go at the champion. Although Burns won in 2mins. 8secs., he has a very high opinion of Squires, and admitted that he received some pretty severe punishment at the Australian's hands.

Those who were lucky enough to be present at the City Athenæum Club on Tuesday night saw the champion spar a three-round exhibition with J. W. H. T. Douglas, the ex-amateur champion. The bout was the best in which Burns has been engaged since he came to this country. The Essex cricketer "went in and mixed it up," hitting as hard as Burns, and countering magnificently. Burns himself was delighted with the amateur's form. During the evening there were some other excellent bouts arranged by Mr. Ernest Wells, notably a heavy-weight contest in which Corporal Farnan (Irish Guards) defeated Bombardier Mills. Altogether, it was a splendid evening's sport, and it is only by such contests that the standard of boxing in this country can be raised.

ATHLETICS

ENGLISH "SPORTS" TOUR IN BELGIUM.—Belgian sportsmen will be busily occupied during the next fortnight with international football and swimming, and the meeting of the home teams with the English representatives in both sports will give a pretty correct idea of the wonderful progress sport has made in this prosperous little country.

The Easter tournament will commence with the international match against England, on the fine ground of the Leopold Club, and it should be a red letter day in the annals of Belgian football. In spite of the strong team the Football Association are sending over, the Belgians are confident of making a better show against their doughty opponents than either the Dutchmen or the French did, and do not expect to have more than half a dozen goals scored against them, while at least scoring once or twice themselves.

The international match will be followed by the competition for the Dupuich Cup, commencing on Easter Sunday, for which the following clubs are entered:—Old Xaverians, Liverpool, a German, a French, a Dutch, and two Belgian clubs. Thus the event will be thoroughly international. At Antwerp there is also an international tournament in which two or three English clubs are engaged, while two or three other English clubs are touring in Belgian this Easter, and will play against local teams.

The Belgian Swimming Federation are organising a gala at the Royal Baths in Brussels, when several international champion swimmers will be opposed to the Belgian champions. Amongst the Englishmen must be mentioned R. A. Crawshaw, A. Tyddesley, E. Forsyth, Geo. Taylor, and R. Derbyshire. These noted swimmers will form a very smart team, and will be opposed by Belgium's best swimmers—F. Feyaerts, Deprez, Meyboom, Boin, and Nelson da Silva. All these men hold championship honours over various distances, and the English team will have to be a hot lot to lower the Belgians' colours. In the water polo match the Belgians are certain winners as it is the same team that will represent Belgium in the Olympic Games. The team has been training together for some time, and are in splendid form. In a match against a picked team of Antwerp players, the national team won by 10 goals to 2 with ridiculous ease.

Besides the English and Belgians, Schiele, the German champion, winner of King Edward's Cup last year, will compete, and probably Zoltan de Halmay. Such a gathering of champions has never before been seen in Belgium, and the gala is assured of a colossal success.

TENNIS

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.—On the grounds of the New York Racquet and Tennis Club, last Saturday afternoon, Mr. Jay Gould, the 19-year-old son of Mr. George Gould, the great railway magnate, successfully defended his title to the amateur tennis championship by defeating Mr. Eustace H. Miles (England) by 3 sets to 1, the scores being 6—2, 6—4, 1—6, 6—3.

A very large crowd of tennis enthusiasts gathered to witness this veritable battle of giants, Mr. Jay Gould and Mr. Miles being generally regarded as the two finest tennis players of the present day. Mr. Miles had displayed such wonderful form in the various rounds of the championship, and scored such an easy victory over Mr. Harry Payne Whitney in the final round, that his defeat of the champion would not have occasioned any surprise.

Almost from the very commencement of yesterday's encounter, however, it was patent that Mr. Gould was the better of the two. He displayed extraordinary litheness and vigour, but he had the advantage not only of youth but of superior science. Miles being repeatedly puzzled by the champion's wonderful cut stroke. In the second set Miles had the misfortune to miss a stroke into the dedans by the fraction of an inch when he was leading by 4 games to 1, and he afterwards attributed his loss of the set to that piece of bad luck.

Miles was seen at the tip-top of his form in the third set, when, by a brilliant exposition of what Latham described as the true English stroke, he gave young Gould a terrible time, and won the set by 6 games to 1.

But the champion had something even better than Miles's English stroke up his sleeve, and in the fourth, and what proved the final set of the match, he played his overhand wrist-stroke with such magnificent precision and with such deadly effect that Miles found his game ruined, losing the set, and with it the match, by 6 games to 3.

Of the thirty-four games played Gould won nineteen and Miles fifteen.

RACKETS.

RACKETS AT QUEEN'S CLUB. (First Day).—Cambridge did not have a look in against Oxford in the doubles at rackets, on Wednesday, at Queen's, and were beaten with great—almost absurd—ease by four games to love (15—1, 15—2, 15—7, 15—3). Both C. N. Bruce and H. Brougham were great in the rallies, and both served magnificently.

The public schools' semi-finals showed fine rackets. In the first game Rugby beat Eton. Eton were favourites with some of the critics. For Eton beat Winchester, who were largely fancied to win the whole show. Eton were at their best on Tuesday, indeed, a bit above form; Winton were points below it. Yesterday Eton were a little off, and they lost 4 love to a more brainy pair.

Watson played a great game for Rugby, though an ugly one. He plays with his head as well as with his racket, and is quick. Simpson found his service and his game, too, and if he isn't a wonder one day it will be because he's dead, or has chucked up the game. The score was 15—11, 15—9, 15—11, 15—10.

The two Fosters—M. K. and N. J. A.—played a priceless game against Charterhouse, and absolutely smothered them. The Charterhouse pair, who are both very young, were hopelessly at sea with the pace the Fosters set.

Maurice Foster made some of the most beautiful shots, and is the only Foster seen yet who hits the ball harder fore-hand than back-hand on a kill shot. N. J. A.—"known as Johnny"—played a perfect second string, and served well—a rare thing in a Foster at school. The scores of the game were 15—2, 15—4, 15—5, 15—8.

Second Day.—The final of the public school rackets on Thursday, furnished one of the finest finishes seen for years. True, on paper, Malvern looked to have won rather comfortably; but, in reality, they had to go—and go hard. Without a doubt, the best pair won, as the Rugby fellows said themselves.

Rugby put up a fine fight, all the same and are to be congratulated on a very plucky effort against a very hot pair. The two Fosters played into each other's hands as only Fosters can play to Fosters. Maurice did the brilliant part, and Johnny did the donkey-work, was quite unselfish, and got everything up.

The match was remarkable for the absence of terrible service—which rather spoils the game—and the presence of ripping rallies. The third and fourth games were the only ones in which service held the house; and it was in these that Maurice Foster, whose service is not usually much out of the ordinary, pulled out miles the best stuff he has shown at Queen's.

Malvern won the first game at 15—6. They got into their game quicker than Rugby, but there were some fine rallies. Rugby played like men in the second, and won at 15—8. Then came the two service games (15—4, 15—3) to Malvern.

In the last Malvern were 14—4, and Simpson served his hand out. Watson, however—Watson has been in the Rugger eleven four years, a record—beat the wall hard, and then served splendidly. At 12—14 he missed a sitter, curiously enough, and Malvern went out. It was a delightful game to watch, and also, as both sides said to play in.

Simpson, also, made some ripping shots, and will make some of the good ones think in a few years. Rugby have another good young one for next year, and as Simpson can play twice more, some people will need ice for the head in 1909.

The Oxford and Cambridge match was a walk for Oxford. Clarence Bruce is playing a great game this year, and is one of the best six in England. He won yesterday, in his head, by 3 games to love (15—5, 15—0, 15—4).

ROWING.

Olympic Regatta Practice.—Many English oarsmen who hope to have, at least, a trial for the honour of representing their country at the Olympic Games Regatta are now taking preliminary practice.

The first four to show on the Thames at Putney consisted of Guy Nickalls, C. B. Burnell (Oxford), R. B. Etherington-Smith, and F. J. Escombe (Cambridge), whom a waterside wag dubbed the "elephant four," as one or two of them have a lot of superfluous flesh to remove to get fit. But they are all oarsmen of note, and have done yeoman service for Leander Club crews, as well as for their respective 'varsities.

Since then H. M. Goldsmith, a past president of Cambridge, and J. S. Burn (Harrow and First Trinity), who rowed in this year's winning Light Blue crew in the inter-'varsity race, have been at practice. An eight has not yet been got together, although an eight-oared boat has been prepared for use at the Leander Club.

Term will soon be in full swing again at Oxford and Cambridge, and there the oarsmen in residence will have their trials. In the meantime the Selection Committee, has given orders for the building of the new boats required—viz., three eight and three fours. These have been divided equally between three firms—Sims, of Putney; Phelps and Bowers, of Putney; and J. Rough, of Oxford.

The Leander Club will naturally give way to the International Selection Committee, and will not make up crews. Neither will they form an eight for the Grand Challenge Cup at the annual Henley Regatta.

MERCHANTS CUP COMPETITION.—This annual fixture has this year drawn twenty-seven entries and the competition was started at Barrackpore last Saturday. The course was in excellent condition and though the wind was unpleasantly strong at times it did not interfere with consistently steady play on the part of several of the competitors.

The teams competing were Messrs. Jardine Skinnier and Co., the holders of the Cup, and Messrs. Finlay Muir and Co. last year's runners up, and Messrs. Kilburn and Co. and the Eastern Bengal State Railway.

The aggregate scores were as follows :—

Messrs. Finlay Muir and Co.	562
Messrs. Jardine Skinner and Co.	588
Messrs. Kilburn and Co.	616
Eastern Bengal State Railway	617

And the best individual score was Mr. W. E. G. C. Dickson's (Messrs. Jardine Skinner and Co.) who went round in 88.

The drawings for the rest of the first round are as follows :—

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT BOMBAY.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. PARSEE PIONEER'S "B" TEAM.—The tournament opened on the 27th ultimo and this game was played on the Marine Lines maidan. The Gymkhana were expected to win easily and so they did. Their display in the first half was not very brilliant; they lost many chances and only scored one goal, but on changing ends they struck form and completely outplaying their opponents won by 7 goals to nil. Burnett (4), Christie (2) and Hearson were responsible for the scoring. Teams:—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Goal, Hardie; backs, Busch (captain), and Ward; half-backs, Dean, Christie, and Marris; forwards, Saboobridge, Burnett, Hearson, Williams and Greyburn.

PARSEE PIONEER'S "B" TEAM.—Goal, Pogdiwalla; backs, Spencer and Dubash; half-backs, Chitwalla, Motafram, and Nagpurwalla; forwards, Bhappoo, Belgaumwalla, Parekh, Kotwal, and Mehta.

Referees:—Messrs. Weyman and Taylor.

R. I. M. DOCKYARD vs. MAHOMEDANS.—These teams met on the 27th instant, an interesting game ending in a draw of 3 all. The first half was pointless but after the interval the R. I. M. scored and the Mahomedans equalised. The R. I. M. netting once more took the lead but it was not long before the Mahomedans again drew level, and adding a third goal the Mahomedans went ahead: but the Dockyard put through once more before time was called and the game ended as stated. The match was replayed on the 29th ultimo, a close game ending in favour of the Dockyard by 4 goals to 3. Teams:—

R. I. M. DOCKYARD.—Goal, Dyas; backs, Carey and Stevens; half-backs, Baker, Corbett, and Jefferies; forwards, Gilder, Brewin, Harrington, Savage and Wilkins.

MAHOMEDANS.—Goal, Baloo, backs, Munoor Khan, Goolam Hossein, and Sheik Mahomed; half-backs, Kumruddin, Hussein, and Nulwalla; forwards, Guffer, Abba Mahomed, Essuf, and Papa.

Referees:—Messrs. Stileman and Mainprice.

14TH HUSSARS vs. INTERNATIONAL HOCKEY CLUB.—Played on the 28th instant. The International Club put up an excellent fight and when time was called the score was two goals all. Five minutes extra each way was than played and the International Club went absolutely to pieces. The Hussars were all over them and scoring four more goals were victorious by 6 goals to 2. Gobind Ramji netted both the clubs goals, Baker, (3) Hallard, (2) and Clare being credited with the winners points. Teams.—

XIVTH HUSSARS.—Goal, Williams; backs, Maguire and Bartlett; half-backs, Bassall, Smith and Sherman, forwards, Powell, Clare, Hallare (captain) Baker and Richards.

INTERNATIONAL HOCKEY CLUB.—Goal, Oomer Khan; backs, Edginton and Ramji; half-backs, Clubwalla, (captain), Ghashwalla and Doctor; forwards, Baloo, Walson, Khan, Moses and Govind Ramji.

ST. XAVIER'S COLLEGE vs. ELPHINSTONE HIGH SCHOOL.—This game was also played on the 28th instant. The first half was well contested and ended without score but on changing over St. Xavier's had the best of the play and scored four times, the High School being unable to pierce their defence. Teams.—

ST. XAVIER'S COLEEGE.—Goal, Dhairywan; backs, K. Karmat and D. Winter; half-backs, Carlos, Hildreath and Viegas; forwards, Reginald, Pinto, Nelson, W. Kamat and Cyriaco.

ELPHINSTONE HIGH SCHOOL.—Goal, D. M. Pai; backs, S. W. Kamat and D. K. Tellang; half-backs, D. K. Pantharki, B. J. Pantharki, and M. S. Sauzgati; forwards, P. J. Wagle, B. S. Sauzgari, D. K. Kapadia, B. A. Dhalvi and V. M. Khotari, Referees:—Messrs. Innes—Ker and Stoubridge.

POONA GYMKHANA vs. ELPHINSTONE CLUB.—This game on the 29th ultimo was rather one sided. The Poona Gymkhana showed excellent combination and quite outplayed the Parsee team who nevertheless worked hard and played up pluckily to the end. The Elphinstone Club were first to score but the Poona team quickly equalised and before the interval had secured the lead. The second half saw the Gymkhana doing all the attacking and three more goals were registered. The Parsees scored once again and the final score was: Poona Gymkhana, 5 goals; Elphinstone Club, 2 goals. For Poona, Heath scored 2 goals, Davis, Bremner and Paris 1 each. Antia Senior and Munshi scored for the Parsees. Teams:—

POONA GYMKHANA.—Goal, Captain Rutter; backs, Airey (captain) and Macpherson; half-backs, Wilson, Ainsworth, and Brind; forwards, Graham; Bremner; Heath, Davis, and Paris.

ELPHINSTONE CLUB.—Goals, Modi; backs, Sethna; and Antia junior; half-backs Subboo valla; (captain); Idawalla and Cursetji; forwards, Billimoria, Munshi, Kothari, Antia, senior and Chothia.

Umpires:—Messrs. Weyman and Ward.

NORTHAMPTON REGIMENT vs. FRIENDS' UNION.—Played on the 29th ultimo, the Northamptons winning by 5 goals to nil. The Regiment were first away and in the opening exchanges, scored two goals. The subsequent play in the first half was fast, the Regiment having rather the best of it. On changing ends the Union were kept on the defensive most of the time and the Northamptons scoring three more goals won by five goals to nil. Teams:—

FRIENDS' UNION.—Goals, M. R. Land; backs, R. K. Telang and N. B. Navalkar; half-backs, G. R. Govakshaker, S. N. Nerulker, and G. N Lele; forwards, K. S. Ajinkya, A. N. Powar, V. G. Kothare, S. S. Patel, and K. S. Kantak.

NORTHAMPTON REGIMENT.—Goal, Lieutenant Clive; backs, Lieutenant's Savage and Roberts; half-backs, Ptes. Hitchcock, Maynard, and Both; forwards, Ptes. Hemmings and Albion, Sergeant, Hall, Ptes. Towers and Ingram.

Referees:—Messrs. Grayburn and Heason.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE vs. SOMERSET L. I.—Played on the 30th ultimo, a splendid game being witnessed. The result was a win for the Medical College by 2 goals to 1. Play was fast throughout; the Somersets forced a corner but this was not improved upon and the Medicals pressed the Somersets' custodian clearing brilliantly. Then the soldiers got away and Hellin scored but Hanson equalised and the teams crossed over with a goal each. The military obtained an abortive corner and then the Medicals rushed down and Hanson put them ahead with a shot at close quarters. Fast up and down play followed the military making great efforts to get on terms but without success and, they were still attacking when time was called. Teams.—

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Goal: Emile; backs: Mungavin and Gimi; half-backs: Cooper, Cuzen and Osborne forwards: Cahill, Honey (Capt.), Hanson George and Bell.

SOMERSET LIGHT INFANTRY.—Goal: Pigwood; backs: Capt. Parison (Capt.) and Haywood; half-backs: Lieut. Williams, Attenbury and Middleton; forwards: Col.-Sergt. Short, Neal, Rowsell, Morgan, and Sergt. Hellin.

Referee: Messrs. Weyman and Ward.

WORCESTERSHIRE REGIMENT vs. BYCULLA EDUCATION SOCIETY.—This game on the 30th ultimo ended in a win for the Worcesters by 2 goals to nil. The local team showed up during the opening exchanges of each moiety and then fell away. The Worcesters scored a goal on each half, Burroughs netting the first and Smith the other. Teams.—

WORCESTER REGIMENT.—Goal: Pte. Foster; backs: Ptes. Snide and Parton; half-backs: Ptes. G. Smith, Stone and Sergt. Buffery; forwards: Sergt. Welsh, Ptes. Clarke, W. Smith Rowbotham and Lieut. Burroughs.

BYCULLA EDUCATION SOCIETY OLD BOYS.—Goal: Swingler; backs: Milllard and Dudley; half-backs: Brown, Woods and Jewell; forwards: Easden, Murray, Millard, Hearn and Harrison.

Referees: Messrs. Hearson and Blandforde.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. R. F. A. (Kirby).—A poor game was witnessed when these teams met last Friday. The first half was very tame and the second very little better. The Royal Scots had the best of the contest, winning by 5 goals to nil. Lucas (2), Collins (2). and Parkes registered the goals. Teams.—

ROYAL SCOTS.—Goal: Wilson; backs: Mackenzie, and Watson; half-backs: Pinor, Powell and Evans; forwards: Parkes, Henderson, Collins, Lucas and Shawcross.

R. F. A. (KIRBY).—Goal: Brown; backs: Connaughton and Hogarth; half-backs: Coldwell, Bull and Palmer; forwards: Candler, Boack, Byrne, Tarbolton and Captain Furse.

Referees.—Messrs. Ward and Weyman.

SECOND ROUND.

PARSEE PIONEERS "A" TEAM vs. PIONEER HOCKEY CLUB.—These teams met on Friday last a fast and interesting game resulting. Both goals were repeatedly visited in the first half, but only one goal was scored by the Parsee Pioneers. On changing ends, play continued fast. The Pioneer H. C. pressed hard and eventually equalised. The Parsee Pioneers were then kept on the defensive and the Pioneer H. C. putting on two more goals were victorious by 3 goals to 1. Teams.—

PARSEE PIONEERS "A" TEAM.—Goal: Mulla (Capt); backs: Surveyor and Havaldhar; half-backs: Patel, Chinoy and Surti; forwards: Bilimoria, Kalapasia, Chotia, Pochkhanavalla, and Keravalla.

PIONEER HOCKEY CLUB.—Goal: Canteenwalla (Capt); backs. Karanjia and V. Palvanker; half-backs: D. Driver, Moleshaw and A. Devecha; forwards: Chocksey, Gunpat, J. Driver, Shivram and Baloo.

Referees: Captain Marris and Mr. Grayburn.

THE BEIGHTON CUP TOURNAMENT.

THE FINAL.

CALCUTTA vs. CUSTOMS.—A large crowd assembled on the Rangers ground last Saturday and witnessed a decisive victory for the Customs team by 5 goals to 1. They had accounted for the best teams in the competition and a good fight was expected when they met Calcutta in the final, but whereas on Saturday the Customs played at the top of their form, their opponents gave a poor display and were quite outclassed. Five minutes from the start McReady drew first blood. Calcutta played up but again their defence was beaten and McReady was responsible for a second goal. The Customs did all the attacking during the remainder of the first half and Smith receiving from McReady netted the ball just before the interval when the teams crossed over with the Customs leading 3 to nil.

The second half opened with an onslaught on the Calcutta goal. Smith scored a fourth goal and shortly after added a fifth. A heavy duststorm at this stage of the proceedings dispersed many of the spectators but those who remained saw Calcutta play up pluckily and obtain a goal, Manders scoring. They could not add to this single point and the game ended as stated. Teams:—

CUSTOMS A. C.—Goal, Fredericks; backs, J. Anderson and Quiterio; half-backs, Caddell (Captain), L. H. Smith and Barlow; forwards, Berkley, Goldsmith, McReady, L. A. Smith and H. Vears.

CALCUTTA F. C.—Goal, Whiteley; backs, McCaw and Graham; half-backs, Heilgers, Studd and Oliver; forwards, Binning, Manders, Sherman, Simpson, and Sewell.

Referees:—Messrs. A. B. Rosser (Hornets A. C.) and F. Lees (Dalhousie A. C.).

CHAMPION DIVA.

MR. LIONEL JACOB'S wire-haired fox-terrior bitch, Diva, who qualified as a full-blown champion by her last win at the recent Calcutta Show, holds a remarkable record of successes as a show terrior in this country. She was bred by Mr. Francis Redmond, of Totteridge, who had for many years possessed a high reputation as a breeder of the smooth variety, and who at that time had commenced to turn his attention to wires. He purchased the wire bitch Welcome by old Meersbrook Bristles and mating her to his smooth champion Donington, to lay the foundation of the legs and feet of the strain, produced the bitch Don't Go. Don't Go was not a show terrior but put to good show wires she never failed to breed winners. She commenced by breeding champion Dusky Reine to champion Royston Remus, and thus mated to champion Cackler of Notts she produced in one litter champions Dusky Cackler and Diva. Of the two, Diva was probably the better terrior but exported to India as a youngster she had not the same chances as her illustrious brother. She, however, never failed to win whenever exhibited. Shown for the first time in India at the Murree Show of September 1902, she won first open under Major Rich and the Best in Show Cup under Captain Goodwin. At Lahore, in the following February, she was first open under Mr. Bush and with Roddy Owen, Garry Owen, and Don't Go Bang in the Best Team of four, any breed. At Murree, in August 1903, she won first open under Colonel Rattray and was then taken by her owner to Burma, where at Maymyo under Colonel Conran she was first in open both dogs and bitches and the Best in Show. In 1905 Mr. Jacob returned to India, and exhibiting her at the eleventh Tollygunge Show of December in that year, she was awarded Reserve in a mixed class of dogs and bitches, her son Corney Grain being first, and the Cup for the Best Bitch in the Show by Dr. J. H. S. Martin. At Simla, in September 1907, Major Williamson gave her first in the open class and the Special Cup for the Best Wire Bitch. In the same month Major Impey put her first in the open at Mussoorie; and at Calcutta in December last, under Dr. Martin, she was again first open, winning also the cup for the Best Bitch in the Show or with her son Jim the Penman the Grace prize. These are the only occasions when she has appeared at Shows in India, and it will be seen that she holds an unbeaten record as a bitch under many different judges, and that she has frequently beaten dogs. When not shown, it has been because she was breeding and therefore unfit for exhibition; and although not bred from very often she never failed to produce conspicuous winners in every litter. Garry Owen, Zabdi, Pagan, Benjamin, Corney Grain, and Jim the Penman are some of the best known of her progeny. Both as a show and a brood bitch, Diva has proved to be one of the most successful terriors ever seen in India, and though she may never be seen at her best again she maintains her form in a very remarkable way, and it cannot be said that her career is in any way over. She richly deserves the title of champion which she has now acquired.

THE INDIAN RAPTORES.

FALCONS.

III.—MERLINS, KESTRELS AND FALCONETS.

THERE now remain but five genera of birds of prey, comprising nine species, and of these four species can hardly be called hawks or falcons, for though resembling them to some extent in appearance they differ entirely in habits and nidification. These are the little pigmy falcons or falconets, but to take them in order we must return to the Falcons.

Besides those mentioned in the last paper there is one other falcon left, viz., the Eastern Red-legged Falcon (E. amurensis), the only representative of the genus "Erythropus" in India. This little Falcon resembles the Hobbies in colouring, but the tiercel is almost dark grey throughout. The wing, too, is like that of the Peregrine group, viz., second quill longest and first longer than third.

The variety of colouring on the naked parts is sufficient for the identification of the Eastern Red-legged Falcon. "the bill being fleshy red with a dusty tip, cere deep orange-red, orbital skin orange-yellow, legs deep orange-red, claws flesh coloured and irides hazel." This is a migatory bird recorded in India from Kumaun, Sikkim, Bengal and Cachar and occasional occurrences from Pegu, Western Himalayas, Deccan, Nilgiris and Ceylon. It is said "to migrate in flocks which roost together at night and to breed in China in magpies' nests" (Blanford).

The genus Æsalon, represented in India by two species, comprises the Merlins, which are among the most beautiful as well as the smartest looking of all birds of prey. Being easily tamed and exceptionally fast on the wing, they are frequently used in falconry and though in reality nothing more than toys, the sport they show—a couple of Merlins after a lark for instance—is second to none and a prettier sight than to see these birds ringing up after their quarry and then the succession of quick stoops when they have caught up would be hard to beat. The Merlin (Æsalon regulus) is only a winter visitor to India and even then more or less restricted to the Punjab and Sind. The Merlins may be recognized from the other Falcons by their wing, in which the second and third quills are longest and sub-equal and the first is considerably shorter and about equal to fourth quill. The first and second quills are always notched on inner web.

The size is that of a Hobby and the colouring on the wings and back is shades of dark and light brown with a distinct rufescent tinge and washed in parts with light grey. The head is greatly streaked with white and the breast is white with dark brown or black spots, which vary according to age.

The Red-headed Indian Merlin (Æsalon chiequera) is a light blue grey above finely marked with dark bars and a slight tinge of rufous on the bend of the wing in young birds. Tail like the back and wings but with a broad black band right across it at the end and the extreme edge of each feather tipped white. Chin, throat, breast and under parts white with brown spots plentiful in the young plumage and very sparse in old birds.

No Falcon can approach the Merlin in point of speed and it is incredible what a tremendous pace this little bird can put on. It is usually found in open country perched on the ground or small bushes and is off like an arrow at the approach of any larks, wagtails, sparrows or other small bird. It usually flies very low at first and then rises like the true Hawks in this respect, when almost directly beneath its quarry and few birds can rise faster than the Merlin. They visit the plains of Northern India about September or October and remain till the end of March or April.

The Red-headed Merlin or Turumti is resident in India and widely distributed throughout the country, but does not occur in the Himalays or dense forest. They almost invariably hunt in pairs and unlike "Æ. regulus" seldom perch on the ground, but almost always on the tops of trees, whence they watch the surrounding country and if they see a flock of sparrows or other birds feeding in the distance, they will be seen to drop from the tree to within a couple of feet almost of the ground and to keep that level and so reach the unsuspecting birds before the latter know of their approach unless a friendly king-crow or bulbul sees them and gives the warning.

Both Merlins are easily tamed and trained and can be taught to take hoopoes, rollers and even a partridge, but larks and hoopoes show the best sport and the prettiest chase.

The Kestrels are too well known to need any description and every one must be familiar with the little "wind hover" which is met with throughout India and at any elevation between and 13,000 ft. sea-level. It is not however so generally understood that two distinct species occur in this country, one being resident and the other a winter visitor to North India. They can however easily be identified from one another in "Tinnunculus alaudarius," the Kestrel, having black claws, and "T. cenchris," the Lesser Kestrel, white or pale horny.

The Kestrels differ from Falcons in having a much smaller and weaker foot and a shorter bill. They prey chiefly on insects but will occasionally kill small birds, but are no good for purposes of Falconry.

The genus "Microhierax" comprises three species of curious little birds called Falconets, which differ from all other "Accipitrine" birds by their habit of building their nests in holes of trees like wood-peckers or parrots and laying pure white unspotted eggs. They resemble the Bee-eaters in the way they pursue insects, returning to the same branch whence they started. The three species are: "M. cutolmus," the Red-legged Falconet "M. Melanoleucus." The White-legged Falconet and "M. Fringillarius" The Black-legged Falconet. They resemble the Falcons somewhat in their bills which are strongly toothed and the Hawks in having short, rounded wings, but their size is sufficient to place them apart at once, as the biggest of them is only about 7½ inches long from tip of bill to end of tail. According to Blanford, they can be distinguished from each other by "M. entolmus" having a broad white nuchal collar; thigh coverts feruginous." "M. melanoleucus" having "No white collar; thigh coverts and lower surface throughout white." "M. Fringillarius" having "Thigh coverts black;" no white collar.

The last of the Indian Raptores is "Fielden's Hawk" ("Poliohierax insignis"), a resident of Burma and Western Siam. This is a small Hawk a little bigger than the Falconets, but smaller than the Shikra, measuring about 11 inches in length. Like the True Hawks it has short rounded wings, but may at once be separated from them by its possessing a well formed tooth on either side of the upper mandible, whereas the True Hawks have no tooth, though a prominent "festoon" is always present.

This species then concludes the "Falconidæ" of India which comprises twenty-nine genera, represented in this country by seventy-two species and excludes from the Diurnal Birds of Prey, the Vultures, Scavenger Vultures and the Bearded Vulture. To the latter I have, however, casually referred, in my chapter on Eagles, as it resembles them in the feathering of the Tarsus.

"EXILE."

Mark Twain was on one occasion on board ship when a collection was made on behalf of the widows and orphans of sailors. The famous humourist prefaced the collection with a talk on meanness. "The meanest man I ever knew," he said, "lived in Hannibal. He sold his son-in-law the half of a very fine cow, and then refused to share the milk with the young fellow on the ground that he had only sold him the front half. The son-in-law was also compelled to provide all the cow's fodder and to carry water to her twice a day. Finally the cow butted the old man through a barbed-wire fence and he sued his son-in-law for 50dols. damages."

The Story Teller.

A ROBBERY AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

"THEN it's not to be a deal, Mr. Powys?"

"No, Mr. Juber."

"Umph!"

Mr. Hickory G. Juber drew a bulky note-book from the inner pocket of his loose overcoat, and from its recesses pulled out a thick bundle of English notes.

"What's the fair price in the open market for the thing?" he said, flicking the crisp notes idly with his long, yellow fingers.

"From £35 to £40."

"Count those." The American tossed the notes across the table to the young man, who sat opposite to him, and then fell to turning over the pages of a thin square book, bound in blue paper, which was the subject of discussion. It was the Pisa edition of Shelley's "Adonais," and to an admirer of the great poet an indispensable item in a collection of his works.

There are £200 here," after a moment, said Cyril Powys, rolling up the notes once more, and holding them towards the American.

"Well!" exclaimed that worthy, "and isn't that enough? Why, man, you yourself said just now that £40 was the fair value——"

Very quietly Cyril Powys drew the thin paper-bound volume to his own side of the table, and very calmly he answered the American's angry words.

"Mr. Juber, this book has, in my eyes, no price. I am a poor man, as the world goes; but the money is not coined that will buy this from me. Shelley himself gave this to my grandfather; it is signed with his name, and has attained to the dignity of being an heirloom in our family. Ah! I see you laugh at the notion of any family owning heirlooms that your dollars cannot buy. I know that you, and others who are millionaires like yourself, come over to 'this side' and think that you can buy up this old country, lock, stock, and barrel——"

"And so we do," drawled Mr. Hickory G. Juber, stretching out his legs, and lighting a cigar.

"And so you do—very often—but not quite always. Your houses are furnished with hangings from royal palaces, your wives flaunt in the crown jewels of fallen dynasties, your daughters dance in the laces that have grown yellow in the chests and cupboards of our old families; pictures, books, statues all go to your country in exchange for your money. But, Mr. Juber, let me tell you that there are some things your dollars cannot buy—and my book is one."

Mr. Hickory G. Juber sprang to his feet, with a flush on his yellow face and a quiver of excitement in his drawling nasal voice.

"Name the others!" he shouted. "Tell me what there is in this Europe of yours that I can't buy!"

Cyril Powys shrugged his shoulders at the other's vehemence.

"My good sir, there are a round dozen of things—tangible, portable articles—that neither your millions, nor the combined millions of twenty such as you, could ever hope to purchase."

"Name 'em! Name 'em!" yelled the American, now fairly roused, and thumping the table with his fist.

"Three will serve the purpose. One is the great Blue Diamond, that is called the Luck of the Karenoffs, the oldest and wealthiest of Russian families; another is a robe, said to have been worn by the Virgin, which is in the possession of a poor sisterhood of nuns, buried in the heart of the Appennine Mountains; and the third——"

"Yes, the third, the third!" cried Mr. Juber, almost dancing with excitement.

"The third is a picture, quite small, some twelve or fourteen inches long, and, if I remember rightly, but nine in height, and very simple in subject—a farmyard with a peasant woman feeding pigs and poultry."

"That don't sound much," grunted Mr. Juber; "why, I could buy things like that by the dozen in any town in Holland."

"I daresay. But you couldn't buy this particular one. I daresay that you've heard of Van Grahn, the great Dutch master, many of whose works were unsigned, and have thus been either lost or attributed to other artists. A hundred years ago there were four of Van Grahn's signed pictures extant. Since then, two have been destroyed by fire, one has been unaccountably lost sight of, and is untraceable, the fourth is the picture I mean."

Oh! yes. I've heard of this unique work," assented Mr. Juber, in rather crestfallen tones. "Where is it now?"

"At Windsor Castle, in the Teniers Room."

"At Windsor. Well, I daresay His Majesty wouldn't object to a fair offer——"

Cyril Powys laughed.

"The picture is not His Majesty's to sell; it belongs to the nation, and the nation will never let it go. No, my dear Mr. Juber, neither Blue Diamond, Virgin's Robe, nor Van Grahn can ever be yours."

"What do you bet?—what do you bet?" Mr. Juber was now in a frenzy. An insult to his person he could have borne, but to defy the Almighty Dollar was to put a brand upon the entire American body of millionaires, among whom he, Hickory G. Juber, was the greatest.

"I never bet," said Powys, rising and looking away the original bone of contention, the blue-covered book.

But you must! Now, look here. I'll lay you £1,000 to a fiver that when I return to the States in a month, one of those three things goes with me. Colville, you're a witness to this bargain," and he turned sharply round on a tall, fair, good-looking boy, who had been a silent though amused spectator of the whole scene.

"Yes, I'm a witness," he said, and then struggled out of the deep armchair he had occupied for the last hour. "But, I say, Juber, if you want me to take you into the Park you must come now. It's past five——"

Mr. Juber, after a stiff bow towards Cyril Powys, left the room.

"What a purse-proud old Yankee he is," grinned Charley Colville, putting on his hat before the glass.

"Disgusting," answered Cyril, fervently. "But he shan't have my 'Adonais,' all the same."

"Not if he wins that bet?"

"Ha, ha! If he waits till then, he'll wait for ever. Good-bye, old fellow. I don't envy you your office of bear-leader to the old man."

"Oh, I don't mind much. And, besides, it doesn't cost me anything. The old boy pays. Good-bye!"

Once out in the street and walking Parkwards, Mr. Hickory G. Juber grew very grave.

"I say, Charley, how's this job to be managed?" he said, presently, taking Colville's arm, confidentially.

"What job"

"Why, the getting hold of that picture."

"That picture! The Van Grahn!" Charley Colville pulled up short in the street with astonishment. "You don't mean to say that you are going to try"

"Well, you see, the Diamond is in Russia, the Robe in the middle of Italy. Both places are far off and difficult to get at. There's only the picture left."

"But it's the most impossible of the three."

Mr. Hickory G. Juber was, however, not to be put off by such trivialities as impossibilities. In the country where he had been born, had toiled, and had made his vast wealth, money was omnipotent. Why not here—in played-out old England?

In vain Charley Colville put before him how futile every effort to purchase such a priceless treasure would be, and how foolish it would be to make any offer, which must inevitable meet with a curt refusal.

The American was pertinacity itself on the point, but, after a long course of argument and persuasion, could only extract from his young companion a promise to call early the next morning on a well-known art dealer in Bond Street, and ask his advice.

Saul Simmons was just leaving his shop for the little dingy back parlour, whither he was summoned by a call to dinner, when the glass street-door was pushed open, and Charley Colville lounged in.

"Morning, Simmons."

"Good-morning, Mr. Colville, delighted to see you, I'm sure."

The old Jew rubbed his hands and smiled a toothless smile at the young man, who was—inferentially—one of his best customers. Not that he ever spent sixpence himself on old Simmons' bric-a-brac and articles de vertu, for he was a pauper; perfectly dressed, of good birth, moving in the smartest society, but still a pauper—and Saul Simmons knew it. But wealthy dames of social aspirations and doubtful aspirates, American or Peruvian millionairesses, upstart leaders of the demi-monde, wives of stockbrokers who had suddenly attained to fortune and Grosvenor Square, all found their way to Simmons, and nine times out of ten they had Charley Colville as their guide.

"I hope, Mr. Colville, that Lady Bung likes the Rose Du Barri tea service. Or perhaps you've come in about Miss Topsy Poingdextre's Louis XIV. suite of furniture. It's nearly ready, and looks really quite lovely. What a bargain that young wo—— lady can drive, to be sure. By the by, Mr. Colville, there's a little thing here that I fancy might suit the Marchesa della Toriaz. Will you bring her to——"

"Oh, bother the Marchesa, Simmons, I've something of great importance to say to you. Would you like to have the fingering of £50,000, minus, of course, my usual commission?"

The Jew's eyes glistened, and he laid his anxious, clawlike fingers on Colville's coat-sleeves.

"Would I like—would I? Here, Mr. Colville, just come into my office. We shan't be disturbed there. Rachel—Rachel, I say—I shan't be having dinner for half-an-hour."

The afternoon was yet young when Charley Colville lounged into the library of his friend, Cyril Powys.

"What, out without your wild American?" queried Cyril.

"Yes and no, muttered Charley, flinging himself into a low chair.

"Riddle me that, I pray you?"

"He's not with me in the flesh, but his spirit won't leave me alone. It dances for ever before my eyes. It's a yellow spirit—bright, golden yellow—and it's name is fifty thousand pounds."

"What on earth are you talking about?"

"About the £50,000 that old Juber is ready and willing to pay to anyone who will get him that blessed Van Grahn from Windsor Castle."

"He really means to have a try for it, then."

"He does; but he's checked at the start, if he only knew it."

"How checked?"

"Why, I've just been to see Saul Simmons this morning. Have just come from there, in fact. His eyes nearly bolted out of his head at the bare mention of the money—but you should have seen his face when he had to acknowledge that the thing was impossible."

"Of course it is," said Cyril, with an air of conviction. "These purse-proud Americans think that their money——"

"Fifty thousand pounds," interpolated Charley, shaking his head.

"Yes, old fellow, I know it's a tidy little sum; but they ought to be told that——"

"Fifty thousand pounds!"

"Or ten times that amount can't do everything."

"But what a lot it would do, eh, Cyril? Fancy, fifty thousand golden sovereigns. Just imagine the——"

"I say, Charley, old boy, just pull yourself together. You look quite possessed by those sovereigns."

"And I feel possessed," cried Charley, passing his hand across his forehead. Then he started to his feet, hurried over to Powys, and, laying his hand on his shoulder, began to speak very fast, but very earnestly.

"Now, look here, Cyril, here's this money, this £50,000, dangling before our eyes—ready to our hands. We're both poor men, and Juber is a rich one. We want the money, he doesn't. Why shouldn't we have it?"

"Charley, are you mad?"

Powys stared hard at his friend.

"I think not, though on the face of it the idea I'm going to tell you about may seem a little wild. You know that Ella Orme, my fiancée, is as clever an artist as she is a pretty girl."

"Well, I didn't know that, Charley, but if she's as clever as she's lovely, then she's a genius."

"You may take my word for it, and what's more she has not been content with merely learning to put colours on canvas. She's an odd young woman, and has an insatiable thirst for curious information. About a year ago she took a great interest in the manufacture of old masters. Old Simmons has a weakness for female beauty, and let her into a lot of tricks of the trade, with the result that Ella can turn you out a Rembrandt, a Botticelli, or a—a——"

"A Van Grahn, Charley!"

"A Van Grahn, at extraordinarily short notice."

"But how is she going to get the thing to copy it?"

"Ha! ha! That's where the luck comes in; luck so marvellous, so providential, that it would be positively sinful to ignore it. It is now Ella's wait at Court as Maid-of-Honour. The Queen is at Windsor. What is easier than for Ella to copy the Van Grahn? Meanwhile, I'll write to old Juber, who goes to Edinburgh to-night on a week's business, and tell him that Simmons has hopes of getting the picture."

"Then you mean to give the American nothing but a copy for his £50,000?"

"Yes, and you, as the person with whom the bet was made, will merely have to tacitly appear satisfied with the genuineness of the picture. Oh! don't look so grave about it; just think how nicely those sovereigns will cut up between us. Why, we should both be quite rich. I don't know what you would do with your money, but I know what I mean to do with mine."

"What?"

"Get married, of course. Ella's father, old Lord Pentarth, has only given us another six months for our engagement; says if we can't be married then, he'll break it off, as he's sick of it."

"Yes, Charley, that's all very pretty and nice, dear boy; but suppose old Juber finds us out?"

"Then we'll simply say that he's a better judge of Art than we thought he was, that we offered him a copy half as a joke and half as a warning to him that American dollars can't always buy up everything here. Now I'm off, my dear fellow. I shall run down to Windsor, have a chat with Ella, and just see about that Van Grahn. I shan't write old Juber till he's in Edinburgh. Good-bye, Cyril. You'd better muddle your head up over the authenticity of copies."

The Hon. Ella Orme was easily persuaded to make a copy of the Van Grahn for Charley, but looked a little grave and seemed inclined to cry off when her lover told her the real destination of the picture.

"Darling, the risk is awfully slight. You are so clever, and old Juber is such a conceited old ignoramus. Besides, my dearest, think of the money, think—of our marriage!"

And Ella did think of her marriage, and consented to make the copy.

During the ensuing week much correspondence passed between Charley Colville, in London, and Mr. Hickory G. Juber, in Edinburgh. At first the American had expressed frantic delight at the prospective fulfilment of his desires, then a strain of doubt crept into his letters; and, finally, Colville received the following:—

"Balmoral Hotel.

"Dear Colville,—I cannot get it out of my head that that old Jew means to best me in the matter of the Van Grahn. These dealers are such arascally crew. But he will have to get up pretty early in the morning to find Hickory G. Juber asleep. I leave here on Thursday, and shall travel straight through to Windsor. I shall then pay a little call on Mr. Dacre, the keeper of the Royal Archives. I have met him and he always promised to show me round. Once in the Teniers room, where the Van Grahn hangs, it will be odd if I cannot find an opportunity to make a private mark on the picture. No Bond Street forgeries for me, if I can help it.—Yours in haste,

"H. G. J."

This letter drove Charley Colville to the depths of despair, and, for the moment, he could only write to Ella at Windsor of the American's intended visit, and of the object of it. Then gradually his vague terrors, his uncertainties and doubts took form, and he realised three terrible things:—

First, that Ella Orme's copy, however artistic, however perfect, would be useless; for, if Juber marked the original canvas, he would detect the fraud at once. That entailed the loss of the £50,000, and, with the melting gold, vanished also all prospect of his marriage.

"There's only one way; it's risky—it's worse—it's bad form; but it seems the only way out of the mess, short of giving up the money and Ella, and that I won't do. I must manage to steal the picture and to substitute for it Ella's copy. Then it's only a question of luck how long it will be before the Castle authorities will find out the robbery——"

"From the Hon. Ella Orme, Maid of Honour to the Queen, to the Countess of Pentarth.

"Windsor Castle,

"June 20th.

"Dearest Mother,—You will be delighted to hear that the little festivities here, in the shape of dinners and numerous 'dine and sleeps,' which have been going on for the last ten days, were most successfully brought to a conclusion with a performance given by the Parthenon Company last Wednesday night. The play, 'King Alfred,' was most beautifully acted, and it was quite wonderful to see how much was made of the small stage here. It is a great secret: but do you know that half the soldiers and knights and peasants in the play—supers, I think they are called—were acted by men of our own set, who had paid any amount of money and gone through ever so many dreadful rehearsals just for the fun of saying they had acted before the King! Of course, they had nothing to say, only to run about and shout, but I believe they enjoyed themselves immensely. They all dressed in the Teniers Room, and Charley—by-the-bye, I forgot to tell you that Charley was one of the knights, and looked lovely—said they had great jokes, as all their clothes got mixed, and they had a regular bear-fight to separate them.

"I think that, by the time you get this, papa will have a letter from Charley. He has just had a stroke of luck which he says 'runs to £50,000,' and he wants us to be married at once. I am sure that neither you nor papa can now offer any further opposition to our wedding, which I should like to take place as soon as my present 'wait' is over.

"Love to papa and yourself.—Your affectionate daughter,

"Ella."

Mr. Cyril Powys had a little tea-party; but the three friends who formed his guests seemed to be more interested in a small dark canvas, which Mr. Hickory G. Juber held lovingly in his lean hands, than in Cyril's tea and cakes.

"It's a beauty, a gem, worth all the money. See, Colville, here's my mark. Look, Miss Orme, those two pin pricks over that white hen. Ha! ha! I should have bowled out old Simmons if he'd tried to gammon me. By-the-bye, Colville, you got the money all right?"

Charley bowed without speaking.

"And now, good people, I must be off. I leave for Liverpool to-night and sail for New York to-morrow. Good-bye, Miss Orme, so delighted to have met you. Powys, sorry you wouldn't part with that book; but, you see, we Americans can——"

"You remind me of something. I've lost my bet."

Juber took the five-pound note handed him by Powys; then turned to Charley.

"Colville, old chap, I can never thank you enough for managing this little affair with Simmons. My blessings on you! Farewell."

A dead silence followed Juber's departure. Powys stood with downcast eyes by the door, Charley fidgeted uncomfortably at the window, and Ella idly clattered her teaspoon in her sauces.

Charley spoke first, though with a poor effort at ease.

"Well, Ella, if you've finished your tea, we'll relieve Powys of our society. Ready, are you? Good-bye, then, old fellow."

But Powys refused the proffered hand of his friend.

"I can't touch it! I can't touch it!" he cried, drawing back, while a look of horror crept into his eyes.

Charley flushed crimson. Miss Orme turned deadly white.

"You take me—for a thief?"

"What else are you? That picture, its tone, its colouring—the marks upon it made by the man himself. What are you but a thief?"

"You're right, Cyril, I'm not fit to shake the hand of any honest man, I'm not fit to touch the lips of any honest woman. Ella, you know I stole the picture and slipped in its place the copy you had made. You do not quite understand the horror of it yet, but, in time, you, too, would come to call me a thief."

With a sob, Charley Colville flung himself into a chair, and bowed his head upon the table.

But, in a flash, Ella was on her knees at his side, and had slipped her arms about his neck.

"Dearest, dearest, do not grieve so bitterly. I should have told you before this. You ought to have known——"

"Known what? What should you have told me?" cried Charley.

"That you never stole the Van Grahn: that it's safe in the Teniers Room at Windsor Castle at this moment."

"Never stole—but—I did take—and the marks! The marks that Juber made with his own hand!"

"Were made on my copy. When I received your wild letter telling me of Juber's proposed visit to Windsor, I guessed that something was wrong. Charley, I half think that I suspected you a little in the matter. On the morning of his visit I put my copy in the frame, and hid the genuine Van Grahn until that night when you came down with the Parthenon Company. It was the sham picture that Mr. Juber marked, the sham one that you—abstracted; and it was the real picture which I handed you and which you slipped into its place. Now, kiss me, shake hands with Mr. Powys, and let us go to the Park and see if we can find mamma. You see, it is not only rich Americans who do not know good Art when they see it. Eh, Mr. Powys?"—M.S.P. in London Sketches.

Wheeling.

MOTOR MEMS FROM HOME.

London, Good Friday, 1908.

On Wednesday, the 15th instant, Mr. F. Newton, driving Mr. F. S. Edge's 90 h.-p Napier, succeeded in lowering the 90 h.-p. standard "short" record for the Brooklands track, lately created by Mr. D. Resta. Starting at four o'clock in the afternoon, Mr Newton had intended to endeavour to create new speeds for the flying half-mile and the ten laps—the short and long standard distances. His first three laps were made at speeds of slightly over 71, 78, and 83 miles per hour. This was not fast enough, and it was noticed that one cylinder was missing badly, due to a valve sticking. However, after the first three laps had been completed the Napier greatly quickened its speed, and lap after lap was completed at speeds varying from 92 to 97 miles an hour. After completing the ten laps Mr. E. de Rodakowski, the clerk of the course, announced that Mr. Newton had failed to lower the "long" ten-lap record of over 89 miles per hour made by Mr. Resta in his Mercedes last Friday, but that Mr. Newton had created a new one for the "short" half-mile sprint, with a flying start. The official rate of speed for the half-mile was at the rate of 102·85 miles per hour, the time being 17½secs. The Napier accomplished an average speed of over 88 miles per hour for the ten laps. The Dunlop tyres stood up well and showed no signs of wear, and it was a noteworthy feature of this speedy run that they were pumped up only to 70lb. pressure per square inch for the front tyres and 75lb. pressure for the back driving wheels. Brooklands track had quite a number of cars practising for the races on Saturday and Monday next, Iris, Mercedes, Humber, Star, and Sizaire cars, and several Motor cyclists all taking advantage of the fine weather to tune up their engines for what is expected to be one of the best sporting meetings yet held on this course.

When the historian is writing of the motoring features of the year 1908, he cannot help noticing the demand for the small car. In fact, that is one of the chief features of this year. Another is the increase of the lady driver. Probably each is a corollary of the other. Take, for instance, the small 8-11 h.-p. Peugeot. This is very easy to drive, and Messrs. Friswell who factor it in London, have a lady attendant for demonstrating to any of her own sex its capabilities. Then there is the little 8 h.-p. Adams, with its pedals to push, which have been quite an attraction for the gentler sex. Rover cars have always been popular with ladies, as the change-speed arrangements have never required any muscular effort, which is a point motor-manufacturers have to consider in cars driven by women. After all the condemnation by some of the motor-car, its popularity increases daily as it is more generally understood and its usefulness appreciated, and women who were its chief decriers are now becoming its foremost champions.

Another feature that deserves comment is the trend of the trade to manufacture fewer types of cars. This was particularly demonstrated to the visitors at the new Lorraine-Dietrich Works at Birmingham. There the whole energy of this concern is being applied to turning out one type of car only—a 24-30 h.-p. live-axle design. As may be remembered Dietrich cars are usually chain-driven, and the distinctive features of the British-made model are in the cardan drive, differential with splayed driving axles outside torque rods of slightly different pattern and a modified gear-box. By these points this car can be easily distinguished from its French sisters, otherwise it is identical with them. Ariel cars only make two models—a 20 h.-p. and a 35 h.-p. Deasy cars really do the same, though the 24 h.-p. is the size most motorists are familiar with. These are but a few examples, and there are many more that are equally convincing. It is only a few of the great firms as Panhard and Mercedes, who can offer their clients eight or more different powers to choose from, and it is almost safe to prophesy that even these firms will cease to amplify their models in the near future, and will probably cut them down to three or at most four, standard sizes.

Both the Dunlop and the Continental Tyre Companies announce a considerable reduction in the price of tyres for 1908. Many people are under the impression that the Continental Company are only manufacturing motor tyres, but this is not the case, as they have for many years past been manufacturers of cycle tyres and, indeed, it was their great experience in this branch of the rubber manufacturing trade which more or less placed them in their present strong position. Several years ago the English company made an attempt to secure a portion of the home trade, and when motoring became popular the Continental tyre at once also became popular. Motor-cycle tyres are manufactured on the same principle as the well-known motor-car tyres, and their speciality, the "butted tube," for motor-cycles has proved extremely popular.

A novel form of motoring sport has been participated in by many well known sporting motorists in the United States. The prevailing custom of America at the moment is the possessing of a small car or voiturette, and the cult of motoring among men of moderate means finds greater favour in America than is the case at home or on the Continent. Owing to the severe winter many of the large lakes have been a solid mass of ice, and it was possible to drive all over Lake St. Clair which was solidly frozen, although on account of snow covered cracks it was dangerous without the help of local guides to run from shore to shore. All manner of short and long-distance free-for-all and match races were pulled off, and the crowd showed keen delight and enthusiasm over races of several trips up and down a straight course which the guides prepared. It must have been a fine sight to witness the cars, rushing across the lake at sixty miles an hour, gradually growing smaller until at last they appeared but mere specks, and then to see them swing sharply round in a whirl of snow and dart back to the starting point.

I am glad to see our friends Messrs. Nagant Hobson have entered one of their 20/30 H.-P. cars in the International Touring Car Trial, 1908, under class 5 and they have entered one of their Nagant Hobson cars in the race between St. Petersburg and Moscow and in addition to this, one of their cars is being driven across the Australian Continent during July and August. This is a feat that they understand has not yet been accomplished by any motor car. One of their cars is also being entered again at Belgium Nine Days Reliability Trial, where they were so completely successful last year. These trials take place over some of the worst roads in Europe.

Why is it, the average driver entirely forgets that when he just started motoring he was as nervous as a cat? It is a curious thing, but nevertheless true, that one is very apt to forget that there is such a thing as nerves, and consequently the nervous personage on board suffers agonies the whole time when you fondly imagine that he (or she) is thoroughly enjoying himself. It must be borne in mind that the driver knows the machines he's driving, he knows exactly the amount of braking force at his command, he can judge things to a nicety, but that probably the passenger is an absolute novice and understands none of these things. It is much better, when taking people of this description out for a run, to pander to their foibles, however absurd and childish they may seem to you, and thus to educate them up to the fact that a motor can be infinitely more easily handled and controlled than any other form of vehicle. It is a great pity to frighten people, and thus spoil potential motorists.

money was omnipotent. Why not here—in played-out old England?

In vain Charley Colville put before him how futile every effort to purchase such a priceless treasure would be, and how foolish it would be to make any offer, which must inevitable meet with a curt refusal.

The American was pertinacity itself on the point, but, after a long course of argument and persuasion, could only extract from his young companion a promise to call early the next morning on a well-known art dealer in Bond Street, and ask his advice.

Saul Simmons was just leaving his shop for the little dingy back parlour, whither he was summoned by a call to dinner, when the glass street-door was pushed open, and Charley Colville lounged in.

"Morning, Simmons."

"Good-morning, Mr. Colville, delighted to see you, I'm sure."

The old Jew rubbed his hands and smiled a toothless smile at the young man, who was—inferentially—one of his best customers. Not that he ever spent sixpence himself on our Simmons' bric-a-brac and articles de vertu, for he was a pauper; perfectly dressed, of good birth, moving in the smartest society, but still a pauper—and Saul Simmons knew it. But wealthy dames of social aspirations and doubtful aspirates, American or Peruvian millionairesses, upstart leaders of the demi-monde, wives of stockbrokers who had suddenly attained to fortune and Grosvenor Square, all found their way to Simmons, and nine times out of ten they had Charley Colville as their guide.

"I hope, Mr. Colville, that Lady Bung likes the Rose Du Barri tea service. Or perhaps you've come in about Miss Topsy Poingdextre's Louis XIV. suite of furniture. It's nearly ready, and looks really quite lovely. What a bargain that young wo—— lady can drive, to be sure. By the by, Mr. Colville, there's a little thing here that I fancy might suit the Marchesa della Toriaz. Will you bring her to——"

"Oh, bother the Marchesa, Simmons, I've something of great importance to say to you. Would you like to have the fingering of £50,000, minus, of course, my usual commission?"

The Jew's eyes glistened, and he laid his anxious, clawlike fingers on Colville's coat-sleeves.

"Would I like—would I? Here, Mr. Colville, just come into my office. We shan't be disturbed there. Rachel—Rachel, I say—I shan't be having dinner for half-an-hour."

The afternoon was yet young when Charley Colville lounged into the library of his friend, Cyril Powys.

"What, out without your wild American?" queried Cyril.

"Yes and no, muttered Charley, flinging himself into a low chair.

"Riddle me that, I pray you?"

"He's not with me in the flesh, but his spirit won't leave me alone. It dances for ever before my eyes. It's a yellow spirit—bright, golden yellow—and it's name is fifty thousand pounds."

"What on earth are you talking about?"

"About the £50,000 that old Juber is ready and willing to pay to anyone who will get him that blessed Van Grahn from Windsor Castle."

"He really means to have a try for it, then."

"He does; but he's checked at the start, if he only knew it."

"How checked?"

"Why, I've just been to see Saul Simmons this morning. Have just come from there, in fact. His eyes nearly bolted out of his head at the bare mention of the money—but you should have seen his face when he had to acknowledge that the thing was impossible."

"Of course it is," said Cyril, with an air of conviction. "These purse-proud Americans think that their money——"

"Fifty thousand pounds," interpolated Charley, shaking his head.

"Yes, old fellow, I know it's a tidy little sum; but they ought to be told that——"

"Fifty thousand pounds!"

"Or ten times that amount can't do everything."

"But what a lot it would do, eh, Cyril? Fancy, fifty thousand golden sovereigns. Just imagine the——"

"I say, Charley, old boy, just pull yourself together. You look quite possessed by those sovereigns."

"And I feel possessed," cried Charley, passing his hand across his forehead. Then he started to his feet, hurried over to Powys, and, laying his hand on his shoulder, began to speak very fast, but very earnestly.

"Now, look here, Cyril, here's this money, this £50,000, dangling before our eyes—ready to our hands. We're both poor men, and Juber is a rich one. We want the money, he doesn't. Why shouldn't we have it?"

"Charley, are you mad?"

Powys stared hard at his friend.

"I think not, though on the face of it the idea I'm going to tell you about may seem a little wild. You know that Ella Orme, my fiancée, is as clever an artist as she is a pretty girl."

"Well, I didn't know that, Charley, but if she's as clever as she's lovely, then she's a genius."

"You may take my word for it, and what's more she has not been content with merely learning to put colours on canvas. She's an old young woman, and has an insatiable thirst for curious information. About a year ago she took a great interest in the manufacture of old masters. Old Simmons has a weakness for female beauty, and let her into a lot of tricks of the trade, with the result that Ella can turn you out a Rembrandt, a Botticelli, or a—a——"

"A Van Grahn, Charley?"

"A Van Grahn, at extraordinarily short notice."

"But how is she going to get the thing to copy it?"

"Ha! ha! That's where the luck comes in; luck so marvellous, so providential, that it would be positively sinful to ignore it. It is now Ella's wait at Court as Maid-of-Honour. The Queen is at Windsor. What is easier than for Ella to copy the Van Grahn? Meanwhile, I'll write to old Juber, who goes to Edinburgh to-night on a week's business, and tell him that Simmons has hopes of getting the picture."

"Then you mean to give the American nothing but a copy for his £50,000?"

"Yes, and you, as the person with whom the bet was made, will merely have to tacitly appear satisfied with the genuineness of the picture. Oh! don't look so grave about it; just think how nicely those sovereigns will cut up between us. Why, we should both be quite rich. I don't know what you would do with your money, but I know what I mean to do with mine."

"What?"

"Get married, of course. Ella's father, old Lord Pentarth, has only given us another six months for our engagement; says if we can't be married then, he'll break it off, as he's sick of it."

"Yes, Charley, that's all very pretty and nice, dear boy; but suppose old Juber finds us out?"

"Then we'll simply say that he's a better judge of Art than we thought he was, that we offered him a copy half as a joke and half as a warning to him that American dollars can't always buy up everything here. Now I'm off, my dear fellow. I shall run down to Windsor, have a chat with Ella, and just see about that Van Grahn. I shan't write old Juber till he's in Edinburgh. Good-bye, Cyril. You'd better muddle your head up over the authenticity of copies."

The Hon. Ella Orme was easily persuaded to make a copy of the Van Grahn for Charley, but looked a little grave and seemed inclined to cry off when her lover told her the real destination of the picture.

"Darling, the risk is awfully slight. You are so clever, and old Juber is such a conceited old ignoramus. Besides, my dearest, think of the money, think—of our marriage!"

And Ella did think of her marriage, and consented to make the copy.

During the ensuing week much correspondence passed between Charley Colville, in London, and Mr. Hickory G. Juber, in Edinburgh. At first the American had expressed frantic delight at the prospective fulfilment of his desires, then a strain of doubt crept into his letters; and, finally, Colville received the following:—

"Balmoral Hotel.

"Dear Colville,—I cannot get it out of my head that that old Jew means to best me in the matter of the Van Grahn. These dealers are such arascally crew. But he will have to get up pretty early in the morning to find Hickory G. Juber asleep. I leave here on Thursday, and shall travel straight through to Windsor. I shall then pay a little call on Mr. Dacre, the keeper of the Royal Archives. I have met him and he always promised to show me round. Once in the Teniers room, where the Van Grahn hangs, it will be odd if I cannot find an opportunity to make a private mark on the picture. No Bond Street forgeries for me, if I can help it.—Yours in haste,

"H. G. J."

This letter drove Charley Colville to the depths of despair, and, for the moment, he could only write to Ella at Windsor of the American's intended visit, and of the object of it. Then gradually his vague terrors, his uncertainties and doubts took form, and he realised three terrible things:—

First, that Ella Orme's copy, however artistic, however perfect, would be useless; for, if Juber marked the original canvas, he would detect the fraud at once. That entailed the loss of the £50,000, and, with the melting gold, vanished also all prospect of his marriage.

"There's only one way; it's risky—it's worse—it's bad form; but it seems the only way out of the mess, short of giving up the money and Ella, and that I won't do. I must manage to steal the picture and to substitute for it Ella's copy. Then it's only a question of luck how long it will be before the Castle authorities will find out the robbery——"

"From the Hon. Ella Orme, Maid of Honour to the Queen, to the Countess of Pentarth.

"Windsor Castle,

"June 20th.

"Dearest Mother,—You will be delighted to hear that the little festivities here, in the shape of dinners and numerous 'dine and sleeps,' which have been going on for the last ten days, were most successfully brought to a conclusion with a performance given by the Parthenon Company last Wednesday night. The play, 'King Alfred,' was most beautifully acted, and it was quite wonderful to see how much was made of the small stage here. It is a great secret; but do you know that half the soldiers and knights and peasants in the play—supers, I think they are called—were acted by men of our own set, who had paid any amount of money and gone through ever so many dreadful rehearsals just for the fun of saying they had acted before the King! Of course, they had nothing to say, only to run about and shout, but I believe they enjoyed themselves immensely. They all dressed in the Teniers Room, and Charley—by-the-bye, I forgot to tell you that Charley was one of the knights, and looked lovely—said they had great jokes, as all their clothes got mixed, and they had a regular bear-fight to separate them.

"I think that, by the time you get this, papa will have a letter from Charley. He has just had a stroke of luck which he says 'runs to £50,000,' and he wants us to be married at once. I am sure that neither you nor papa can now offer any further opposition to our wedding, which I should like to take place as soon as my present 'wait' is over.

"Love to papa and yourself.—Your affectionate daughter,

"Ella."

Mr. Cyril Powys had a little tea-party; but the three friends who formed his guests seemed to be more interested in a small dark canvas, which Mr. Hickory G. Juber held lovingly in his lean hands, than in Cyril's tea and cakes.

"It's a beauty, a gem, worth all the money. See, Colville, here's my mark. Look, Miss Orme, those two pin pricks over that white hen. Ha! ha! I should have bowled out old Simmons if he'd tried to gammon me. By-the-bye, Colville, you got the money all right?"

Charley bowed without speaking.

"And now, good people, I must be off. I leave for Liverpool to-night and sail for New York to-morrow. Good-bye, Miss Orme, so delighted to have met you. Powys, sorry you wouldn't part with that book; but, you see, we Americans can——"

You remind me of something. I've lost my bet."

Juber took the five-pound note handed him by Powys; then turned to Charley.

"Colville, old chap, I can never thank you enough for managing this little affair with Simmons. My blessings on you! Farewell."

A dead silence followed Juber's departure. Powys stood with downcast eyes by the door, Charley fidgeted uncomfortably at the window, and Ella idly clattered her teaspoon in her saucer.

Charley spoke first, though with a poor effort at ease.

"Well, Ella, if you've finished your tea, we'll relieve Powys of our society. Ready, are you? Good-bye, then, old fellow."

But Powys refused the proffered hand of his friend.

"I can't touch it! I can't touch it!" he cried, drawing back, while a look of horror crept into his eyes.

Charley flushed crimson. Miss Orme turned deadly white.

"You take me—for a thief?"

"What else are you? That picture, its tone, its colouring—the marks upon it made by the man himself. What are you but a thief?"

"You're right, Cyril, I'm not fit to shake the hand of any honest man, I'm not fit to touch the lips of any honest woman. Ella, you know I stole the picture and slipped in its place the copy you had made. You do not quite understand the horror of it yet, but, in time, you, too, would come to call me a thief."

With a sob, Charley Colville flung himself into a chair, and bowed his head upon the table.

But, in a flash, Ella was on her knees at his side, and had slipped her arms about his neck.

"Dearest, dearest, do not grieve so bitterly. I should have told you before this. You ought to have known——"

"Known what? What should you have told me?" cried Charley.

"That you never stole the Van Grahn; that it's safe in the Teniers Room at Windsor Castle at this moment."

"Never stole—but—I did take—and the marks! The marks that Juber made with his own hand?"

"Were made on my copy. When I received your wild letter telling me of Juber's proposed visit to Windsor, I guessed that something was wrong. Charley, I half think that I suspected you a little in the matter. On the morning of his visit I put my copy in the frame, and hid the genuine Van Grahn until that night when you came down with the Parthenon Company. It was the sham picture that Mr. Juber marked, the sham one that you—abstracted; and it was the real picture which I handed you and which you slipped into its place. Now, kiss me, shake hands with Mr. Powys, and let us go to the Park and see if we can find mamma. You see, it is not only rich Americans who do not know good Art when they see it. Eh, Mr. Powys!"—M.S.P. in London Sketches.

MOTOR MEMS FROM HOME.

London, Good Friday, 1908.

On Wednesday, the 15th instant, Mr. F. Newton, driving Mr. F. S. Edge's 90 h.-p Napier, succeeded in lowering the 90 h.-p. standard "short" record for the Brooklands track, lately created by Mr. D. Resta. Starting at four o'clock in the afternoon, Mr Newton had intended to endeavour to create new speeds for the flying half-mile and the ten laps—the short and long standard distances. His first three laps were made at speeds of slightly over 71, 78, and 83 miles per hour. This was not fast enough, and it was noticed that one cylinder was missing badly, due to a valve sticking. However, after the first three laps had been completed the Napier greatly quickened its speed, and lap after lap was completed at speeds varying from 92 to 97 miles an hour. After completing the ten laps Mr. E. de Rodakowski, the clerk of the course, announced that Mr. Newton had failed to lower the "long" ten-lap record of over 89 miles per hour made by Mr. Resta in his Mercedes last Friday, but that Mr. Newton had created a new one for the "short" half-mile sprint, with a flying start. The official rate of speed for the half-mile was at the rate of 102·85 miles per hour, the time being 17⅗secs. The Napier accomplished an average speed of over 88 miles per hour for the ten laps. The Dunlop tyres stood up well and showed no signs of wear, and it was a noteworthy feature of this speedy run that they were pumped up only to 70lb. pressure per square inch for the front tyres and 75lb. pressure for the back driving wheels. THE YEAR'S WORK AT THE "ZOO."

THE reports of the Councils of the Zoological Societies, of London and Dublin, for the past year are of a distinctly gratifying nature, and proclaim in unmistakable terms that the recent improvements in the management and arrangement of the gardens are bearing fruit in the shape of increased appreciation on the part of the public. In the case of the Dublin establishment the increase in the attendance has been nothing short of phenomenal; and although this is no doubt in part due to the influx of visitors to the late Dublin exhibition, there can be little hesitation in attributing a portion of the increased receipts to a larger interest on the part of the resident population of the Irish metropolis. That such increased interest is fully merited, is sufficiently manifested by the vast improvements which have been effected during the last few years in the gardens; the magnificent new seal-pond being of itself sufficient to draw hundreds of new visitors.

Lion-breeding, as usual, has been carried on with great success at Dublin; the Society now having a large collection of both foreign and home-bred lions. In addition ot specimens from various parts of Africa, the series includes a Persian lion; and the only matter for regret is that the scientific staff of the gardens has not taken advantage of such a favourable opportunity for increasing our knowledge of the local races of the species.

The London "Zoo," on the other hand had no such increase in its gate-money as fell to the lot of the sister establishment in Dublin. On the contrary, there was a decrease of over 43,000 in the number of paying visitors, who passed the turnstiles. Considering, however, the miserable apology for a summer with which the British Isles were favoured last year, this is no matter for wonder, and does not in any way presage ill-fortune in the future. Moreover, the Society has other important sources of income; and it is gratifying to notice that the revenue derived from the subscriptions of fellows exhibits an increase, although the rate of this increase was smaller than in 1906. The result of this increase and other causes was to make the surplus of income over expenditure amount to several thousand pounds, which enabled the overdraft at the bank (caused by the heavy expenditure on buildings and garden-alterations) to be very materially reduced, while a considerable sum was invested. Here it may be noted that, according to the new fiscal regulations, all the admission and composition fees of new fellows—which ought clearly to be treated as capital and not as income—are now regularly invested. The Council is accordingly able to congratulate the fellows, without any sort of reservation, on the exceedingly prosperous condition of the affairs of the Society.

For some time, owing to the larger amount of space allowed to individual species of animals than formerly, the acreage of the gardens has been found insufficient; and the Government was consequently approached with a view to the acquisition of an additional strip of land. Nowadays such matters require exceedingly delicate handling; and the able and energetic secretary is therefore to be heartily congratulated on the manner in which he has brought these negotiations to a successful conclusion. It was of course, bound to be a matter of give and take on both sides; and the concession made by the Society is that the animals on the new piece of land are to be visible to the general public in the park. Probably, while satisfying the just claims of the public, this arrangement will eventually prove financially beneficial to the Society, itself, as the view of the animals from the outside will almost certainly induce some members of the public, who would not otherwise have done so to pay their money and see what is to be seen inside the gates.

One of the biggest items of expenditure incurred in the maintenance of the gardens (altogether apart from that relating to the scientific work of the Society) is that of commissariat. This item—like the commissariat-bill of every household in the country—exhibits a considerable increase over that of 1906; the figures being, in round numbers, £4,250 against £3,856. The increase unlike that in domestic budgets does not seem, however, to be due so much to a rise in the price of the commodities themselves, as to increased consumption, owing to the larger number of animals now on exhibition. The increase on dry fodder is due, for example, to the addition of some thirty large animals on the new strip of ground, coupled with new inmates in many of the old houses; while an army of new squirrels and birds accounts for a large increase in the items of fruit and lettuce. It was noticed in the previous year's report that a difficulty had been experienced in obtaining good sound horseflesh for the larger carnivora; and from the one now before us we learn that during the past year these animals have been fed very largely on beef. This is due, of course, to the diminution in the number of horses kept in England owing to the popularity of motors. Although this scarcity of horseflesh (in the living condition) is a very serious one for the country, it is not one which can properly be discussed on this occasion.

Of the notable events of the year, the most important event was the birth of a young giraffe—an event which had not been paralleled in the gardens for many years. The calf at the present moment is doing well; and now that the stock of these animals is increasing, it may be hoped that interesting events of this nature will became less rare. The breeding of the graceful avocet, as well as of its straight-beaked relative the redshank, in and out of the open air aviaries is an event which bears eloquent testimony to the success attending the changes which have been made of late years in the method of keeping birds. The fine condition of the birds-of-paradise likewise demonstrates the suitability of the small bird house, with its special heating and ventilating arrangements, for the accommodation of the feathered denizens of the tropics. During the year, Mr. Albert Pam made another attempt to bring over live humming-birds, but, although eighteen arrived alive, only one or two lived more than a few days. The weather happened to be very unfavourable; but the repeated failure of the efforts does not justify a further repetition of the experiment.

In the Report for 1906 the Council expressed the hope that the great success of the Prince of Wales's Indian Collection might lead to the formation of similar collections from other parts of the Empire. It was accordingly decided to arrange for a special exhibition of animals from Australia and New Zealand on the Prince of Wales's ground in the North Garden during the summer of 1908. The negotiations for this object were so sucessful that the Council sent Mr. Seth-Smith, one of their members, to Australia in December 1907, to complete the arrangements and to return in charge of the collection; while early in the present year, two keepers in charge of a number of animals for purposes of exchange proceeded to Sydney, to return with the collection. The Governments of New South Wales and of New Zealand are forming collections for presentation to the Society, and the Zoological Gardens of Perth, West Australia, and Melbourne, as well as many private and public persons in Australia are taking an active interest in the enterprise. The Council have every reason to believe that the exhibition will be of unusual zoological interest. The animals are expected to arrive in England towards the end of June; and it is much to be hoped that the public will not be backward in supporting the exhibition.

In view of the crusade now being organised against rats in most civilised countries, the Council of the "Zoo," gave orders that endeavours should be made to reduce the numbers of the pestilent rodents in the menagerie. Trapping was accordingly carried on during the year with more than usual energy, while two extensive applications of a rat-virus were made. Like similar applications made in 1906 with similar viruses prepared by other manufacturers, there was, however, no visible success. And it seems probable that unless a simultaneous attack could be made in Regent's Park and along the canal, such methods would have little chance of success, as the abundant supply of food in the gardens is a constant attraction to rats from outside the boundaries.

It was a mixed party, and when the lights were lowered for the old-fashioned "snapdragon," young Blenkinson managed to edge closer to the golden-haired maiden, upon whom he had been casting glances of admiration during the evening.

There was a three-minute scramble, and when the lights went up there arose a howl of disappointment from one of the boys, who happened to be near our friend Blenkinson.

"What's the matter, Willie?" inquired the hostess.

"Didn't you get any!"

"Did—didn't get the ch-chance," bellowed the boy. "Soon as it started that man with the eyeglasses c-collared hold of my hand, and d-did't leave off kiss-kissing it till the g-gas went up again!"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Military leave having been opened it has been decided to hold the Mussoorie polo tournament during the race meeting, so the tournament will begin on the 15th instant. The races are fixed for to-day and Saturday and there is every prospect of good sport. Several well known jockeys and G.R's. have arrived and all the stables engaged have put in an appearance.

With deep regret we record the death of Mr. W. A. W. Last, Collector of Muttra, as the result of an accident while playing polo at that station on the 4th instant. An energetic sportsman, a fine horseman, and a keen volunteer, he will be regretted by a large number of friends while the Service loses a capable officer.

Another polo accident is reported from Quetta, Brigadier-General Capper receiving serious injury to his left eye from an accidental blow from a polo stick during a game on the 7th instant.

The final game in the hockey competition for the Holmwood Challenge Shield, was played in Calcutta last Saturday, the Rovers beating La Martiniere by three goals to nil.

A MEETING of the Naini Tal Gymkhana, was held at the Club on Monday, 4th instant, when the following were appointed as Secretaries for the various sports:—Hockey and Football, Captain Dundas, Tennis, Mr. Dillon; Polo, Captain Rowcroft; Sailing and Cricket, Captain Barlow; Gymkhana, Major Robertson; Rowing, Mr. Rouse; Honorary Secretary, Captain Villiers.

ON the subject of the height of polo ponies "Rockfelier" writes to the Pioneer as follows:—

According to the published proceedings of the annual meeting of the Indian Polo Association held at Meerut, on the 4th March, it was "proposed that the height of ponies be raised to 14-2, and that an official measurer be appointed." This was not passed. As far as I can ascertain no corrections to these proceedings were published, therefore they may be taken as correct. In a circular, dated Simla, 25th April, and headed "Rules for Height and Measurement of Polo Ponies," we find:—(1) An official measurer appointed. (2) Racing certificates are no longer to be accepted. (3) The tour of the official measurer laid down. (4) That Station Committees have to pay the official measurer first class fare should they require his services at any stations other than Simla, Calcutta, Lahore, Pindi, Umballa, Meerut, Lucknow or Poona. Rules I.P.A.C. Rule 10 lays down that no alteration in the rules of the I.P.A. can be made except at the annual meeting. The rules for measuring are laid down at length, and are too well known among polo players to bear repetition, even should space permit, and it suffices my purpose to draw attention to the difference between the new "rules" and the old in one item viz., the travelling expenses of the person measuring. To make my contention clear, if the Committee have brought these changes to pass without the authority of the Association, as represented at the last general meeting, then they have acted ultra vires, and it only remains for the 150 odd polo clubs who form the Association to manifest their approval by inaction or otherwise.

India is not the country of the rich man, and those whose lots are cast there must be unwilling to have their games and pastimes hampered by extra, some might venture, unnecessary taxation, yet reflection for a moment will show where the shoe pinches should the present order hold good.

In 1906-1907 (the 1907-1908 calendar is not to hand yet) 1,029 ponies were measured under I.P.A. rules, of these 104 were country-breds; it is fair therefore to assume that the remainder passed through the ports of Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, and a few Karachi. Of these markets Bombay is probably of most importance to the Indian polo world, not only is it the centre of the Arab, as well as a large Australian market, but it is the port of arrival of most Englishmen serving in India. The result: Never a week passes without someone arriving from England, a rush to the stables, two or three ponies bought to follow on up-country provided they measure. Thus was the onus on the dealer and, say who will, a very fair result was arrived at. Now where is the measurer? At Simla, Umballa, Lucknow, etc., and at Poona in the rains! So it is hard to find what use he will be to the backbone of Indian polo; those who buy raw and make the pony, it is they who will have to take the risk now of the pony "just missing it," and in the generality of cases they are not those who can afford risks either.

That there are many more points debatable at length on this question is obvious, but I think it is clear that the result will be inconvenience and expense to a number of polo regiments and polo players, and can hardly result in a financial success as far as the I.P.A. are concerned. I hold no brief for the polo players of India, but only hope that through the columns of your paper other views and ideas from remoter polo grounds than those of the Punjab and Oudh may be brought to bear on the question.

THE second gymkhana at Annandal provided another enjoyable afternoon. A programme of five events was discussed with the following results:—First event, for gentleman, to pick up six balls on a tennis but without dismounting; Mr. Fell 1, Captain Gibbs 2. Second event, ladies to ride round a ring and to pick a polo ball off a post whenever the band ceased the playing, Miss Glazebrooke 1, Miss Deane 2. Third event, ladies to break chatti with polo ball, and ride to winning post with partner, Mr. and Miss Black 1. Fourth event, ladies to hit a polo ball round a post, and through a goal; Miss Schuster 1, Miss Black 2. Fifth event, affinity stakes. Band will play a few bars from certain well-known pieces, ladies will write down names, and gentleman race to winning post with paper; Miss Mahon and Mr. Fell, junior, 1. Miss Massy and Captain Jelf 2. A Silver Cup has this year been put up for competition, the winner to be the gentleman scoring the greatest number of points at the gymkhanas during the season, under the same conditions as Colonel Baring's prize for ladies: the donor of the prize is the Hon'ble Mr. Thackersey, C.I.E., who has also presented the Annandale gymkhana club with two silver cups as tennis prizes.

WE draw the attention of our military readers to the advertisement of Dr. Fitzgerald Lee appearing on our front cover. Dr. Lee has met with great success in preparing candidates for military exampirations, as will be seen. Classes are now open in Murree and Dr. Fitzgerald Lee will be glad to supply any other information to intending pupils.

THE following are the results of cricket matches played in England during the week:—

Surrey drew with Northamptonshire.

Yorkshire beat Northamptonshire by an innings and 314 runs.

Surrey beat Hampshire by 342 runs

The match between M.C.C. and Notts at Lords was abandoned.

THE following cutting from the English Field will be of interest to those of our readers, who live in the hope that, at some period in the future, the Indian Government and the sporting public may follow in the footsteps of the New Zealand Government and the various game protecting societies that flourish and do good in every country except in this vast Indian empire. "The New Zealand Chamois.—In the Field, 11th May, 1907, the safe arrival at the Hermitage at the foot of Mount Cook of the chamois presented to the New Zealand Government by the Emperor of Austria was recorded. On Tuesday evening at the meeting of the Zoological Society Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell referred to the introduction of these animals to the Dominion as a successful instance of acclimatisation. He mentioned that the society had been able to render important assistance to the New Zealand Government, and said he had been informed by the High Commissioner that the chamois were thriving and had bred. In this connection it may be worth while to recall the fact that in 1862 the society expended the sum of £17 11s. 7d. in the purchase of some young red deer for shipment to New Zealand for Sir George Grey. At the scientific meeting of 18th November, 1902, Dr. Henry Woodward (who presided on Tuesday evening) reported that the herd in the Otago district numbered from 4,000 to 5,000, and that there were several similar herds in other parts of New Zealand. It is to be hoped that the chamois will increase as the deer have done.

HERE is a fish story, for the truth of which we cannot vouch, says The Globe. We take it from an American paper, and the reason which induced our Transatlantic contemporary to copy it from an English source induces us to reproduce it. Last spring, while a party of tourists were fishing somewhere in Northamptonshire, a well-known lawyer lost his gold watch from the boat in which he was sitting. Recently he made another visit to the lakes, and during the first day's sport caught an eight-pound trout. His astonishment can be imagined when he found his watch lodged in the throat of the trout. The watch was running, and the time correct. It being a "stem-winder," the supposition is that in masticating his food the fish wound up the watch daily.

IN bygone days there was no more enthusiastic breeder of horses than the Prophet Mahomet. In the course of time he became the owner of a vast number of mares, and the point was how to arrive at a selection of the very best. At last he hit upon the following scheme:—For three days and nights the mares were kept without water, then they were loosed, and, as might have been expected, tore madly off to their usual watering-place. Just as they were on the very brink of the water the trumpeter blew the war signal of assembly. Maddened with thirst, the mares forgot their training, all save five, who, forgetting their own urgent need, galloped back at once to seek their masters. These five mares were set apart by Mahomet as representing the pick of his stud, and from them, we are told, descended the best and noblest breed of horses.

CRITICISM of the "monkey" seat introduced by American jockeys is not yet dead—indeed, one has only to talk to an old retired jockey to understand what an amazing amount of pungent things can still be said about it. Of course, the retort that it has been shown over and over again that the man who rides like a deformed monkey "gets there," while the man who rides like a horseman is left, is unanswerable. It is all very well to say "you can't possibly steer a horse if you kneel on the back of his neck instead of riding him," but the reply—"whether I can steer him or not, I can win races that way"—leaves very little to be said. There is one thing, however, to be said, and the Stewards at some race meetings at home are beginning to say it by calling to account those jockeys whose riding jeopardise the chances of horses opposed to them. The erratic course which horses take when ridden with the Sloan seat is undeniable, and though there is no need to impute conscious interference, many are of the opinion that if a jockey cannot control his horse when perched on his neck, then he must be made, for the sake of his opponents, to sit elsewhere.

Herne Hill Harriers in 53mins. 2⅗secs. Larner came in third, but was disqualified for jostling at the start, which was a very scrambling affair. The ten miles run was won by A. Duncan, junior, of the Salford Harriers, in 53mins. 40⅗secs. Full details will be found in our London Sporting letter to-day.

Our London correspondent writes :—"On Easter Sunday I cycled over most of the route marked out for the Marathon race—the great event of the Olympic Games. It starts at Windsor and the finish is at Shepherd's Bush—twenty-six miles. As the winner will be entitled to call himself 'Champion long distance runner of the world' it is reasonable to expect that the entrants will include some of the best athletes in the world. With a view to finding out the best English representatives for the great race, trial contests have been arranged to take place in all parts of the country. One of the most important of these will be held to-morrow (Saturday, 25th April) under the auspices of the Polytechnic Harriers. The course will be the same as that chosen for the real race, except that, owing to the difficulties of traffic, the finish will be at Wembley instead of Shepherd's Bush. This will lessen the distance by about five miles, but the race will be a sufficient test of endurance, and the winner will be a good favourite for the big event. The entry, without being representative of the full strength of the country, is nevertheless a first-class one. Nearly all the most famous Southern runners have sent in their names, while such famous Northerners as W. T. Clarke of the Sefton Harriers, the winner of the Northern Cross-country Championship, and T. Jack, the Scottish champion, are among the competitors. The Marathon Race is perhaps the oldest sporting event in the world. Legend has it that when Miltiades, the Greek general, gained his famous victory over the Persian forces at Marathon, a herald ran the whole twenty-five miles to Athens to give the tidings of victory to his fellow-countrymen. The event has been commemorated in song and story, and hundreds of mimic races have been held in honour of the nameless hero."

Perrier's smooth performance and easy win in the Biennial Stakes at Newmarket (as per details in our London letter) made him a still firmer favourite for the Derby; after the race 5 to 1 was accepted about him. We append the quotations as they stood on Friday, the 24th ultimo, when the mail left :—

A New York paper says that "after a man has played golf for three months he can beat a carpet all the morning if allowed to count the strokes." He might even consent to sweep the carpets every morning if allowed to do so in the old-fashioned way by driving off the tea.

During Easter there died in Leicester, of his third paralytic seizure, H. Custance, the famous old jockey who rode three Derby winners. Custance was riding for twenty-three years, and he won his first Derby in 1860 on Thormanby, belonging to the great Scotch ironmaster, Mr. James Merry. Those were heavy betting days, and Custance says in his reminiscences that "Mat Dawson (the trainer of the winner) told me he never saw such a sight in his life as the table at Mr. Merry's place in Eaton-place when Thormanby's owner and his wife were counting the notes and putting the cheques together. Mr. Merry had collected more than £75,000 on the Monday, and he was reported to have won £85,000 on the race." Lord Lyon in 1866 was Custance's second Derby winner and George Frederick in 1874 his third. Custance, some time after giving up riding, was given a license as starter, but there was trouble eventually and allegations of a too perfunctory discharge of the onerous duties of his office, and he ceased to act.

Diggle playing against Harverson on the 22nd ultimo, made 629, the highest break of the year. Diggle was conceding Harverson 2,000 start in a 16,000-up match at Messrs. Thurston's and prior to this effort he had failed to hold his own on level play. Though not consistently at the top of the table he scored with marked precision and without actual loss of position till the break reached 569. Then he left himself a double baulk, but with a capital stroke brought off the cannon and continued until in trying a five shot at the top he missed both the winner and the cannon.

Lord Lonsdale has made an early prophecy that the second International Horse Show, at Olympia, will prove the greatest success of its kind ever known. Certainly everything points that way, and at the dinner the other evening at the Savoy Hotel, in connection with the forthcoming show, his lordship announced that nearly all the tickets have already been sold. Disappointment, therefore, must await the procrastinating members of the public who fail to make early arrangements for securing seats, and they will have themselves alone to blame. Still, it will interest intending visitors, especially those coming up for the occasion from the country, to know that it has been decided to have a promenade this year somewhat on the lines of that at the New York Horse Show. This will be a great boon to those unable to procure seating accommodation. There seems to be no limit to the enterprise of the directors of the Horse Show, and its immediate and extraordinary success furnishes further proof of the fact that the British public will quickly respond to a venture on a sufficiently large scale, and in which originality is shown, combined with considerable "push" and sound common sense.

Rowing prospects in Calcutta are looking up once more. The new boat house on the Boat canal is nearly complete and it is hoped that rowing will commence early next week. The committee and honorary secretary have worked hard to make rowing once more possible and it is up to the members of the C.R.C. to support the club by a liberal patronage of the boats.

The Bengal Challenge Shield Hockey Tournament was concluded in Calcutta on the 12th instant. St. Josephs and the Y.M.C.A. (Amateurs) met in the finals and the match was twice undecided. The third encounter, however, ended in a win for St. Josephs by 2 goals to nil.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 24th April 1908.

What an Easter! Last Friday I closed my letter, telling you of the exodus of holiday makers and the prospects of seasonable, if not perfect, weather. Good Friday and Saturday were gloriously fine, it was a treat to be alive and out in God's own sunshine. We hugged ourselves in the conviction that we were going to have an ideal Easter. Then came disaster and all the rest of it was "Nor' Easter," and snow, sleet, rain, wind and we murmured more deeply and continuously than ever did the Israelites in the desert. London has been the coldest place in England since Sunday morning. The temperature has been at freezing point; the first cricket match of the season at the Oval was played in snow, Dr. "W. G." leading out his merry men all "sweatered" and "mufflered" to take first knock. Snow six inches deep, lay about the country pleasure resorts; cyclists, motorists and golfers swore like the army in Flanders. At the sea side there were heavy squalls and cutting winds and those hardy ones who were not to be done out of their holiday on any account left their tennis rackets and clubs and indulged in the winter delights of tobogganning and snowballing. Early on Sunday, a blizzard struck London compelling all good people to keep in doors and employ their time with the things appropriate to a belated Christmas. Easter Monday was a stupendous failure. A few guests who honoured me with their company at dinner announced their arrival with a lugubrious carol, and later on in the evening we actually had roast chestnuts. And to complete this doleful tale the number of fatal and serious accidents has been more than usually large.

Sunday was Primrose Day. It was some comfort to observe that the inclemency of the weather could not deter thousands from honouring the memory of Lord Beaconsfield whose statue in Parliament Square was literally smothered in primroses and Neapolitan violets in almost every conceivable form of device. The great statesman's grave in Hughenden churchyard was similarly decorated, many hundreds making a pilgrimage to the picturesque little village to lay their floral tributes on the modest slab which marks his last resting-place.

On Easter Monday, London was introduced to the first batch of "Rubber necks" or Yankee tourists of the class who view the sights of a city in a few hours and do everything according to "skedoole." Under the auspices of a firm styled "Seeing London" they perform lightning trips round the metropolis in huge Char-a-banc motors and as the attendant lecturer bellows descriptions at them through a megaphone they gape around and crane their necks as they progress through the streets—hence their name. The seats of the cars are terraced so that the people at the back can both hear the lecturer and clearly view the buildings.

There are three tours of London the Tower of London tour, the Westminister Abbey tour, and the Hyde Park tour.

The lecturer, is, of course, an American, who has only been three weeks in this country. Ever since his arrival here, however, he has been "cramming up" London, and is said to display more knowledge of London's buildings than the average Cockney. Heaven preserve me from ever listening to him.

As a natural result of the suspension of out door activity this Easter, the theatres have been simply crammed. We seem to be going particularly strong on widows and wicked women in respect of our plays just now. Here are some of the titles of recent popular pieces—The Merry Widow, the Dutch Widow, the College Widow, the worst Woman in London, the Woman from Gaol, the Girl who wrecked His Home," the "Scandal of Paris." "The College Widow," Mr. George Ade's "comedy satire on American college life" produced at the Adelphi on Easter Monday is a hustling, noisy, slangy, knock-about thing alleged to be humorous. About the humour one may be permitted to have one's doubts but this may arise from the inability of the average British play-goer to follow the American College slang with which it abounds. Here are some of the "unfamiliar terms and phrases," collated by a Tuesday morning paper :—

"Put up a holler"	...	Indignantly protested.
"Pinkest collection of farm hands"		Dullest lot of creatures.
"A couple of husky ones"	...	Couple of enormous men.
"Prexy"	...	Nickname for college president.
"Burning a student's lamp"	...	Smoking a cigarette.
"Trying to get new"	...	Trying to be impudent.
"The way she strings them"	...	The way she leads them on.
"The rush line"	...	The forwards in football.
"A jerk-water railroad"	...	A little branch line.
"The Rockefeller stunt"	...	Endowing colleges.
"Cutting up didoes"	...	Playing pranks.
"Old side partner"	...	Old croney or "pal."
"Foundered"	...	Overfed.
"Bucking the line"	...	Football slang, meaning breaking through the line.
"Quitters"	...	Men who give up in a fight. Cowards.
"Rattled"	...	Confused.
"A dead-head telegram"	...	One that is sent free. Franked.
"To rub dope on"	...	To rub liniment on.
"A web-footed rube"	...	An uncouth countryman.
"A jim-crow school"	...	An inferior school.
"The tall grass"	...	The country. The far West.
"Pin-head"	...	A man of inferior capacity.
"Easy money"	...	Money found or obtained easily.
"A gasolene runabout"	...	A Motor car.
"A tintype"	...	A photograph taken on tin.

In "A Fearful Joy" put on at the Haymarket at the beginning of the week, Mr. Sydney Grundy introduces us to another wicked woman. It is a three act farcical comedy of French extraction, mostly unpleasant and often nasty. Mrs. Langtry, who admittedly wears some very wonderful gowns and looks well, plays the part of a woman who aspires to be loved by her husband and his friend at the same time, and we have enough and to spare of the moss grown incidents common to stage intrigue—the hidings and escapings, the narrow squeaks and wild plights—which sorely try the patience of an audience in these days. Personally I found it dreary and disagreeable, and though Mr. Arthur Bouchier (the husband) Mr. Allen Ayresworth (the friend) and Mesdames Marcella Chevalise and Lily Grundy played cleverly the treatment of the piece jarred badly at times and the lusty booing towards its

The attempt to adapt that successful novel "The Marriage of William Ashe" to the stage has been beset with difficulties which have been but partially overcome. The result is a very uneven and disjointed production, a meagre display of stage craft and a burlesque of some of the characters. There are a few good scenes but the story is laboured and it is a pity Mary M. Ward and Margaret Mayo, the adapters, have found it expedient to stretch it out to five acts. The play also suffers from the fact that many of the parts are badly cast. That the performance was received with a goodly measure of approval was chiefly due to the excellence of Miss Fanny Ward's acting as Lady Kitty. In some of the more dramatic passages she was not convincing, but as Lady Kitty playful, or penitent, or scornful, or in a rage, she was natural and winning, while in the many scenes of light comedy she acted delightfully. Mr. Cyril Keightley gave a very sound performance as Willliam Ashe—a little too restrained, perhaps, at times. I do not predict a long run for the piece.

"My Mimosa Maid" at the Prince of Wales' Theatre has been warmly received. The story is extremely slight, but the music is taking, the lyrics fairly good, and the mounting irreproachable, which things go far to supply what is wanted for average musical comedy. And the piece is certainly average. The setting is exceedingly picturesque, many pretty, gaily-gowned ladies add to the attractiveness of the scene, and there are a number of clever people in the cast. First of all there is Miss Isabel Jay as Paulette. Her acting abilities are scarcely called upon at all. She has only to voice some commonplace lines with a smile; but, fortunately, she has been provided with some songs which give full scope to her vocal powers, and won a big success with "The Land of Flowers" and "The Waterfall." Then there is Mr. G. P. Huntley as Victor the sweep. This is a Cockney character—although the scene of the play is the Riviera—but the authors have not given the actor much material to work upon, and he is all too often absent from the stage. It was due to the talents of the comedian alone that a great deal of laughter was won by the saying and doings of Victor, but for Mr Huntley the part was comparatively a poor one. Mr. George Barrett acted very quaintly as Max, who takes over the sweep's business when Victor comes into his fortune; Miss Gracie Leigh again proved herself an accomplished comedienne, and Mr. Maurice Farkoa acted and sang in his own light and agreeable fashion.

War has been proclaimed against the deadheads. A new organisation called the Society of West End Theatre Managers has been formed, with offices at 52, Shaftesbury-avenue. Every theatre in London except the Lyceum and the Kingsway is represented in the society, and doubtless these two will come into the fold ere long. The new society is not to be an idle one; on the contrary, one learns that it will be very active in seeking to protect its members against "deadheads" and others who are of no advantage at any time.

One of the most gorgeous spectacles to be presented to us at the forthcoming Franco-British Exhibition is to be the Indian Pageant run by Mr. Gustave Hagenbeck, a member of the world famed wild animal dealers. Two hundred natives, fifty camels and elephants, Indian cattle, etc., are to help to make the show. We are to have a Durbar scene and various aspects of Indian life are to be presented added to which we are promised that dullest of entertainments a nautch flanked by dickpo men, and assorted tamasha wallahs. Here I quote from an evening paper:—

"The culminating feature of the show in the theatre is the tiger hunt, and this promises to be one of the most exciting turns. The arena is transformed into a realistic Indian jungle, full of trees, thick tropical vegetation, and the dense thickets wherein the hunted tiger loves to lurk and ambush the pursuing elephant.

Near the middle of the arena is a lake, and in the background the jungle rises by prickly paths to a considerable height.

The hunt starts with all the circumstance which attends this king of sports. There is a yellow streak as the tiger breaks into the thicket.

After it, plunge the elephants, with the huntsmen on their backs taking pot shots from the howdahs. The native beaters raise a terrific din, and there is a deal of firing.

It is necessary to explain that the tiger is really a harmless creature. In ordinary life he is an enormous mastiff, who, when dressed in a tiger's skin, looks a most formidable animal as he crashes through the jungle. [Does he!—Ed.]

Being carefully trained the wily tiger leads the hunt past the lake and up to the wooded hills. The elephants and the huntsmen follow.

From the hills a steep descent leads straight into the lake. Down this the tiger dashes and plunges into the water. The elephants follow precipitately, and the hunt ends with a rare splashing and struggling in the lake."

I trust I shall be spared to see this fearsome finale, perchance I may be able to give your readers some useful tips on tiger shooting. I don't think.

General Baden-Powell has just founded a paper which is issued by Pearsons and is called, The Scout. Its object seems to be to stir up a martial spirit among the juveniles and its tone is peculiarly half penny marvel. The Boy Scout is glorified, there is a phantom battleship, robbery of the escort and some other blood and thunder matter. The founder contributes a characteristically Rowellian article on "How I started Scouting." The Scout does not look like a stayer, though one never knows. But it has not been cordially welcomed: one critic has the hardihood to remark that "there is too much of this sort of literature: the founder had better stick to skirt-dancing. He is good at that."

A new weekly journal is responsible for the following:—

"There is trouble in one of the ultra-Smart Sets! It all came about through carelessness, and now people are wondering how the story of the cheque for £100,000, presented by a very illustrious personage to a well-known and beautiful society woman, leaked out. The lady in question is notoriously careless of her possessions. Her 'dearest friend' is—strange among women—notoriously inquisitive. The evening the 'handy little thing' was received, this 'dearest friend' entered her room to have a chat before dinner. The owner of the apartment had already gone down, but the little document, folded in three, lay under the looking glass. Exercising the doubtful privilege of a close friend, she opened the cheque, and read its signature and contents. Other 'dear friends' knew about it that night—hence these tears!"

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman died of heart failure on Wednesday morning after a long illness. Your cable service has already given you details of the occurrence and the subsequent ceremonies. I see announced to-day the death of Mr. Richard Herbert Greaves formerly of the I. C. S.: he died at Bayswater on the 20th instant, aged 61.

I am not sure whether the majority of the readers of the Indian Field "take much stock" of Bishops; but it is incumbent on one to note that the Rev. E. J. Palmer, fellow and tutor of Balliol College, has been appointed Bishop of Bombay.

SPORT IN PORTUGUESE EAST AFRICA.*

MR. MAUGHAM'S sphere of operation is Portuguese territory, in which of recent years, at all events, European sportsmen have done comparatively little. The Portuguese colonial officer is not greatly addicted to sport, nor indeed to any occupation which entails physical exertion and the difficulties of passing arms, etc., through the customs, and out again, deters many who would gladly avail themselves otherwise of the splendid shooting grounds described in this book. The author enjoys the advantages that accrue to the office of H.B.M.'s Consul at Mozambique and his acquaintance with the country is that of the resident who has found solace in exile by studying man and beast. Perhaps it would be better to say "beast and man," for game comes first and occupies much more of his attention than do the character, customs and habits of the negro. Portuguese Africa presents some curious problems in Zoological distribution; Mr. Maugham remarks on the total absence of various notable animals; among them the giraffe, spring buck, gemsbuck; myala, pookoo, tsusely and situtunga (tragelaphus spekii); to compensate for the lack of these, which curiously enough occur in one or other of the adjacent territories (the Zambesi being the line of demarcation) Portuguese Africa is peculiarly rich in other forms. Lions, particularly in the districts of Cheringoma and Gorongosa, are very numerous and a standing terror to the natives. In a single month during 1905 three mail runners were carried off by lions from the main road between the head-quarters of Gorongosa and a station 20 miles away. Elephants, despite the wanton slaughter by natives and others in past years, still occur in large herds all over the interior between the Zambesi and Sabi rivers. How long the elephant will enjoy the protection now extended to him is a question suggested, though not raised by Mr. Maugham's informing book. If the resources of the country are to be developed, it does not seem possible to encourage the elephant: when we read on one page of the valuable woods, now practically unknown in European trade, but only awaiting the pushing pioneer to be in wide demand by the cabinet maker, etc., and on another page of the tremendous havoc wrought by the elephant herds in the forest country where these valuable timber trees are found, we think inevitably of the warring that took place a few years back between sugar planters and hippos on the banks of the Umgeni near Durban. In that case the hippos, a last relic of the thousands of a past generation had been carefully preserved; until it became manifest that preservation was entirely at the cost of the unfortunate planters. Either the hippos or the planters had to go: and the hippos went. The rhinoceros formerly common, is now seldom seen, rarely killed, by what agency their numbers have been reduced the author hazards no opinion; the native pot hunter cannot be held responsible, for he is terribly afraid of the sullen and reckless brute displaying more nervousness in tracking the rhinoceros than he exhibits in spooring any other game. We can hardly blame him; the mad, unreasoning rush of the rhino has scattered many a sportsman's train of followers, and the creature's own massive stupidity is the fons et origo of the terror it inspires. The hippopotamus, though he has withdrawn, to a great extent from the Zambesi before the increase of steam river traffic, is very plentiful on the quieter rivers of Portuguese territory. Mr. Maugham thinks, and he has good reason to give for the faith that is in him, that the hippo will survive all other large pachyderms in Africa, though it is impossible to tolerate him in regions where any form of agriculture or planting is undertaken, there are boundless marshes and quagmires which man is not likely to intrude upon for many generations, if he ever touches them at all, and here the pacific beast of the vast appetite may find sanctuary. He has no enemies but man, and man has no special object in extinguishing the species if it is wise enough to keep out of the way: hippo shooting as a sport is not deserving of the name; science has discovered a better substitute for our lost teeth than the dense hard hippo tooth ivory upon which the dentist once depended; all African tribes will not eat hippo beef, and the demand for the hide is limited. For this nature's most clumsy effort of construction then a long survival may be safely predicted.

The buffalo, somewhat inaccurately called the Cape Buffalo, is increasing in some parts of the territory: the species is recovering from the decimation caused by the terrible invasion of rinderpest which occurred about eleven years ago, and, enjoying a measure of protection, the buffalo more than holds its own. Mr. Maugham holds the cow in more respect as an adversary than the bull: either, he thinks will charge more readily in long grass than in the open, but when he has been charged in open plain his attacker has always been a cow: on one occasion by a cow he "had in nowise molested." The author confirms the experience of other writers having knowledge: where the buffalo is there also will be found the lion; the buffalo herd assuredly has always a few lions lurking upon its flanks on the look out for straying and helpless calves. The aged solitary bulls also fall a prey to the lions.

The author has neither respect nor effection for the leopard, "a sly underhand skulker wholly devoid of the great and impressive personality which carries the lion so far." Withal the natives and Mr. Maugham holds them justified, regard the leopard as more dangerous than the lion. For one thing the leopard is everywhere common, everywhere bold and ever hungry; for another, while the lion disdains to conceal his presence, advertising on the other hand, his arrival with "soul-shaking" roars, the leopards approach is invariably stealthy: absolutely noiseless is his advance till actually on the verandah whither your dog has tempted him or in the poultry run, for no game is too small nor too insignificant to be beneath the notice of the leopard. Mr. Maugham says he never heard of anyone attempting to lay himself out for leopard hunting only and is convinced that it would prove poor fun if he did, there he is mistaken; Mr. Vaughan Kirby in his work In Haunts of Wild Game devotes four or five chapters to sport with the "Hill Leopard" and excellent reading they are, though we may not feel tempted by results to sacrifice time to the species when other game is to be had. The conditions under which Mr. Kirby studied and killed leopards, however differ somewhat from those under which Mr. Maugham lives; and the latter says that during a period of years he has only seen one wild leopard: and that he shot under circumstances not more exciting than if the quarry had been a hare.

The author whose varied experience gives his views no little weight, is not one of the thick and thin advocates of the small bore rifle. He will none of it for rhinoceros and similar large game, being satisfied that a ·577 express 12-bore Paradox, or other weapon with great striking energy gives more satisfactory results. He does not, of course, deny that the small bore cordite rifles will kill a rhino or anything else: he cites a case within his knowledge of a rhino dropping to one shot from a Lee-Metford or Mannlicher; but he thinks the chances of losing wounded game are so much greater with the small bore than the smashing rifle that he declares unhesitatingly for the latter. His "perfect essential battery for the big game of Africa would consist of a double ·450 cordite rifle and a double ·8 bore;" and he gives from the wealth of his own experience ample evidence to support his views.

The book is a distinctly useful and interesting addition to the library of works on African sport; the author writes lucidly and straightforwardly; there is no straining after effect, no attempt at sensation; facts are allowed to speak for themselves. The advice concerning camp equipment, outfit, etc., commends itself to us as exceedingly sound and practical. The illustrations from photographs are numerous, well chosen to show the character of game country, and for the most part admirably reproduced. We have read the book with pleasure and profit.

HOW McPHUNKY SECURED HIS FIRST (AND ONLY) TIGER.

PHINEHAS MC PHUNKY (of that ilk) was a subaltern of horse, but I am not going to lay myself open to an action for libel by naming the unfortunate corps to which he was attached. Suffice it to say that (as I have already stated) he was a subaltern of horse, quartered at Meean Meer in the days before Kitchener. He was, withal, of a sporting temperament, and inclined to be a bit fool-hardy at times especially when "the liquor was in him," although, as a general rule, he was the most arrant coward a British regiment ever contained. (It is comforting to think that British regiments, as a rule, seldom contain cowards.)

Well, to come to the point at once, on a grilling hot day in the month of June, khubber was brought post haste to the Mess of McPhunky's corps, that a Royal Tiger of a peculiarly Brobdignagian build had been seen (and heard too, at night) prowling round the cattle-pens of the nearest village to the north of Meean Meer. With one consent the jubilant and excited officers (not excepting McPhunky) hastily got out their shooting-gear and, mounting their hardly-less-excited chargers, trooped out in a body to the scene of operations, following the lead of three shikaris, on their naked feet, gesticulating wildly as they hurried on. And thus the cavalcade proceeded on its way.

The village to which they were bound was of a kind fitted to attract wild beasts to its vicinity, for cattle in troops and squadrons (so to speak) were continually manœuvering over the fields and bare plains surrounding it; while innumerable clumps of thick bushes and coarse, long grass provided ideal cover for the ferae naturae to hide in. (It is hardly necessary to add that the ferae in question did not scruple to avail themselves of the unusually agreeable environment thus provided for them.)

When the sporting cavalcade arrived at the village, at about 6 in the evening, they beheld the said troops and squadrons being collected together by their C. O.'s (the rustic, half-clad cowboys of the northern plains of India) preparatory to the homeward drive, "the march back to barracks" of the bovine cavalry. Shrill cattle-calls skirled over the dull brown landscape, interspersed with the musical notes of the black-birds singing their vesper hymn. There was something poetical about the twilight scene and the cattle trooping home (though Gray's Elegy and Kingsley's immortal poem would hardly fit the particular picture presented to our sportsmen's eyes), but the fast-falling shades of night warned those disposed to linger over the romance of the scene that sterner matter was at hand. King Tiger would soon be abroad on his nightly trail and a fitting reception had to be provided for His Majesty. A "kill" was reported by the village scouts, not 500 yards away from where the cavalcade had halted and machans (duly rigged up during the day) had to be hastily occupied by the eager tiger-hunters. This was soon done and night drew her dark curtains over the sombre stage on which a tragi-comedy (tragical to the tiger and comical to all, but three of his hunters) was soon to be enacted. Here endeth the First Act.

Act II.—Midnight, moonless and still as the grave. A huge dark form is seen making its way cautiously through the rank grass near the "kill." The sportsmen's hearts are beating fast (especially one heart), their nerves are at the utmost tension, and their eyes are straining anxiously and excitedly through the dense gloom to decipher the dark form's movements. The climax has come, and come dramatically at the fitting hour of midnight. The sweat is streaming off McPhunky's brow, his hands can scarcely hold the barrels straight, a chill is creeping up his back-bone and his lower limbs are quivering like the rushes in a river. The dark form suddenly stops and raises its head suspiciously, something has snapped in McPhunky's vicinity. What is it? The silence that follows is painful. For a full five minutes nothing is heard, but the laboured breathing of the excited men in the machans. Then—with an awful suddenness, the particular structure in which our nervous friend is seated crashes down from the branch of a low tree on which it had been rigged up and flings its contents (viz., McPhunky himself and two brother-officers) straight towards the dark form with the raised head standing ominously there in the gloom! The wild cry of a frightened man and the simultaneous report of a rifle ring out sharply on the night air and the dark form has vanished! Then follow "wigs on the green" with a vengeance, the cracking and straining of breaking timbers and the fierce scrambling of desperate men "mounting in hot haste" to a perch of refuge. But where, oh, where is the tiger? Lying dead with a bullet through his heart, right in front of the mixed machan. It was McPhunky's bullet that settled his fate and McPhunky's machan, (added to its inmate's nervousness), that precipitated the dramatic denoument. So McPhunky became the involuntary hero of the hour, a veritable deus ex machina in foot. (But the machina was wrecked.)

Here endeth the second and final Act.

THE BIG GAME OF HAWAII.

IT is not of big game and the strenuous chase one usually thinks in connection with Hawaii, Hawaii nei, fondly termed by those who live there the "Paradise of the Pacific."

> "Hawaii nei—of many one thou art,
> Each scattered fragment an essential part;
> No jewelled setting is more fair than thee,
> O, emerald cluster in a beryl sea,
> Thy life is music—Fate the note prolong!
> Each isle a stanza and the whole a song."

So said Geo. W. Stoddard long ago. And of one particular place, another singer, Rollin Daggett, sang as though he loved it:

> "O, Waikiki! O scene of peace!
> O home of beauty and of dreams,
> No haven in the isles of Greece
> Can chord the harp to sweeter themes;
> For houris haunt the broad lanais
> While scented zephyrs cool the lea,
> And, looking down from sunset skies
> The angels smile on Waikiki."

Nothing, certainly, in these songs, would call the dogs from their kennels or lure the hunter from the lanai shade. These, with so much more we think of about Hawaii, are foreign enough to the huntsman's spirit. Of mild-eyed lotus eaters, sans souci, as the essential genius and spirit of Hawaii we too often dream As a matter of fact this idea of idleness and ease is but the poet's link in the long chain of mainland misconceptions of insular life.

For work in Hawaii there are commercial and industrial enterprises that invite the energetic and able; and for recreation toward which the live sportsman would turn, the mountains and forests abound in big game to challenge the hardiest and most brave.

The topography of the islands is such as to make natural game preserves of large areas that reach from the inland boundary of the sugar lands to the mountain summits. Here are the mountains and forests that afford hiding and feeding places for game of all kinds known in the islands.

First above the plantations come vast cattle ranges; above these in wild and broken regions, abounding in lava crags and fissures, deep glens and lofty cliffs, is the home of other game in the pursuit of which the hunter may find for himself and his dogs all he desires of danger in the chase, and enough to test his nerve when he drives to bay the angry quarry.

The hunting grounds are not hard to reach in point of time and distance, but unless the hunter is able and willing to attempt some vigorous climbing it is well for him to be content with the gentler sport of shooting birds which frequent the foothills. Of these he will find in abundance, turkeys, pheasants, quail, plover, and snipe.

In the pursuit of big game the hunter should first be prepared to meet wild cattle. These, of course, are not native to the islands. None were there a hundred and thirty years ago, or before Vancouver arrived with the first the natives had ever seen. These were liberated on the big islands of Hawaii with a ten years' protection placed over them. During this tabu the animals were unmolested. They roamed at will and free from harm in rich and abundant pasturage and in the ten years' period multiplied wonderfully. Many of them, however, roamed away and remained hidden and free in the fastnesses of the high mountains, Mauna Loa and Mauna Kea. From these anarchists of the herd came the hardy descendants who have remained until now rebellious and untamed. As a challenge to the courage and skill of the hunter they are not outclassed by the moose, elk, buffalo, or any other big game in the world.

In a few places about Honolulu may be seen tusks of the fierce wild boar, trophies of valiant fights. Now and then one hears stories of wild adventure, of accidents to men and horses and hounds, stories of stirring scenes in which for a time some great boar held the field.

These animals, like the cattle, are not natives "to the manor born" but are descendants of ancestors who, landed by some whaler and early answering the call of the wild, refused to live longer with man either on ship or ashore civilized or savage. Perhaps they sensed the universal treachery and tragedy in the ways of a man with a hogl and in self-defence abandoned humanity for good and all. Whatever the reason, they are to this day the Philistines of the wilderness, savage and untamed, though sometimes conquered.

Little sought for as game, and yet to be classed with it, are the wild dogs of the mountains. Among them nature's sure law of reversion to type is seen in operation. Here are shepherds, hounds, mastiffs, on their way back to the primitive pack, all destined to become wolves at last. These wolf-dogs are not ordinarily dangerous, though when they do assume the offensive the hunter had better keep to his nerve and be sure of his aim.

More wildly distributed about the islands than any other big game are the wild goats. They are found among the green clad sierras of Oahu, as well as out in the secret dreary recesses of the lava flow. In the desolation of ancient craters they also make their home. Hunting wild goats is sport for the hardy mountaineer with true vision and practised marksmanship.

A great deer preserve is found on the Island of Molokai. A long time ago a number of deer were sent from the Orient as a present to the King of Hawaii. These were set free on Molokai, where they were protected until their number had greatly increased. Now deer hunting may be enjoyed there by the sportsman as much as he likes. Of course if many specimens of the "genus game hog" should be admitted, conditions would be changed in a very short time. Happily not many such pests are known in Hawaii, and if they were, the island sportsmen would not be likely to tolerate them long.

It is proper to mention with the big game of Hawaii one variety that is not an importation, one that preceeded man himself, namely, the shark. Shark hunting was a red letter sport with the ancient Hawaiians as it is to-day one of the most popular and exciting for the kamaaina and the haole alike. These monsters of the sea, twelve feet, some specimens even twenty feet long, with sufficient capacity of jaw to easily hold a human body, put up a game the hunter or fisherman will not soon forget. They are first caught with baited hooks and when drawn near the boat are shot. A blow with a sharp hatchet just above the dorsal fin helps them to be quiet. But they do not "lie down easy;" it is a real fight to the finish. The first one to be captured usually becomes a lure for the others who follow him, a vicious, hungry procession to the same fate, until the hunter has taken enough.—Western Field.

Hawaiian Words—Lanai, a porch or veranda; kamaaina, old-timer or pioneer of native; haole, white man or foreigner or newcomer. Waikiki, local name for the beach and district between Diamond Head and Honolulu.

Smart Youth (to rustic old party on opposite side of railway carriage): You seem to be looking at me pretty closely. Do I remind you of somebody you used to know?

Rustic Old party: Yes. You remind me of an aunt of mine in Whitechapel, only she's got a little more moustache than you have.

Bishop Thornton, now of Blackburn, when bishop of Ballarat in Australia, rode into a little township one night and knocked at the door of the only building which happened to be lighted. It was a newspaper office. "Who's there?" asked a voice. "I am the Bishop of Ballarat," was the mild, reply, "would you kindly direct me to the nearest hotel?"

A burst of ribald laughter came from inside the building, and putting his head out of a window one of the compositors gave this advice to the prelate: "Look here, old man, you've had quite enough hotel for one night. Go home and go to bed, or you'll be run in as sure as eggs is eggs!"

Fishing.

A FISHERMAN'S REVERIE.

Ere the evening lamps are lighted,
And, like phantoms grim and tall,
Shadows from the fitful firelight
Dance upon the parlour wall,
Then the forms of the departed
Enter at the open door—
The beloved, the true-hearted,
Come to visit me once more.—Longfellow.

I SIT alone in my study, save for the presence of my books, while without the wind dashes the rain against the reeking window-pane. Now and then the house trembles beneath the fierce onslaught of the wind, and I find myself thinking compassionately of the poor unfortunates who are compelled to be abroad upon such a night. The glow of "the fitful firelight" lights but a corner of the room, while all the rest is shrouded in semi-darkness. Rods, guns, and trophies of the chase adorn the walls above the book cases. The very rug beneath my feet graced the back of a magnificent buck a year ago, and his head, properly mounted, adorns the dining-room downstairs. I felt a feeling akin to pity when he went crashing to his knees at the second crack of my ·30-30 Winchester.

Faces of friends, too, help to adorn the walls, and they flash out, silhouetted against the blackness when the fire burns brightly. There, in that flash, I caught a glimpse of Hugh's face. Better friend man never had than honest John. I well remember when he and I were camping. It was years ago (we were students at the University then, and young and tender). Our tent was pitched on Wolf River flats, and before morning a million, more or less, mosquitoes had gathered in that tent, and sleeping was out of the question. I remember with what fiendish delight I listened to John, when along in the wee sma' hours he groaned out, "Hell! is this what you call fun?" Perhaps one reason why I enjoyed his remark was because I was studying for the ministry, and such lurid language was denied me. We were up before the lark that morning, bathing our swollen faces in the river. John caught two large black bass, and I nothing but rock bass. Oh, the irony of Fate! Back at the tent before 5 o'clock, we tried to wax enthusiastic over Nature's symphony, but it was a dreary fizzle, and I think we were both glad to Homeward wend our weary way.

But, John, if you will come back from the blizzardy West, I will give you an outing in a mosquito-proof tent; and—yes, I will not kick if you catch large black bass and I only measly little "rockies."

A terrific burst of wind seems almost to lift the house from its foundations, while all the windows rattle like the bones of an articulated skeleton. Somewhere downstairs a door bangs gloomily waking all the echoes. I rise and poke the fire viciously until it burns up brightly in protest and by its light I walk over to the desk and take from a familiar drawer a bunch of well-thumbed photographs. A hundred times have I looked at them, and they grow more precious with the speeding of the years, for they bring freshly to mind pleasurable incidents. Ere I return to my seat by the fire I step to the window and try to peer into the blackness outside, but can only see the pearly raindrops chasing one another down the pane. I hasten back to my Morris chair by the fire, and with a sigh of great content sink into its luxurious depths.

The first picture shows a man upon his knees on the brink of a little creek, trying to disengage a snagged hook without alarming the trout in the pool below him. At a glance one knows that the time is early spring, for the baby leaves have not yet concealed the harsh life of limb and branch. Well do I know the stream, for in all of God's out-of-doors there is not a wilder, more tangled, or harder stream to fish than that little Northern Wisconsin creek. Ah! how vividly the events of that day come back to me, even to the minutest detail. That was the day Guy and Hattie visited the stream with us. Guy (or was it Hattie?) had never seen a trout; anyway, Guy had never angled for the sly beauties.

I remember that I watched Guy with a great deal of interest that day. The stream, not more than three feet wide and shallow in most places, was full of snags, while overhead the low-hanging vines and creepers reached out hooked fingers to catch our short lines. Guy led off, while I stood meanly in the background, waiting for the inevitable to happen. It happened soon. Drawing some six feet of line from his reel—too much by four feet for that water—he approached the little stream with all the stealth of an Indian and dropped his baited hook into the bit of liquid silver. Zip! A trout had the worm almost before it touched the water, and was away with the speed of a falling star. Guy frenziedly jerked his line, but, of course, was several seconds too late—setting his hook hard and fast in a cedar log. Disliking to disturb the pool, he deliberately severed his line and fastened on a new hook; then, having shortened his line somewhat, he cast again. If my camera could have recorded the comical look of commingled expectancy, desire, fear and anger, I am sure that my fortune would have been made right there. His second attempt resulted like the first, save that he did not lose his hook. He drew the back of his hand across his perspiring forehead and shot a sheepish look in my direction, but I pretended to be engaged with a refractory reel. Then a Leonidas-like look of grim determination o'erspread his mobile countenance, and, shortening his line to about two feet, he dropped the hook into the water with an I'll-get-you-this-time air—and he did. He had learned his lesson. While he stood, his soul in his eyes, admiring the beautiful fish, I stepped up and offered congratulations.

That Shawano County brooklet was a hard stream to fish all right. Perhaps some sportsman will think two feet of line barbarous, but let him fish that stream or one like it, and I think that he will say it requires more skill to land a trout under such conditions than it does to land a three-pounder in the deep waters of the West Branch. Some men never could fish the stream—"baby fishing" they contemptuously dubbed it; but for four years I fished the baby brook, when the Red Gods would permit, and I learned to love its tangled banks and violet-environed pools. It is more than five years now since I followed its whimsical meanderings, yet this photograph brings it all back to me as I sit here by the fire to-night. The same heavy fragrance of the dogwood seems to assail my nostrils that filled the air five long years ago.

When I lay the photograph tenderly down I again become conscious of the roistering wind and beating rain. All the mad spirits of the air seem loose to night, rioting about the house with devilish glee. I start to my feet when a brick loosened from the chimney by the wind strikes the roof and goes bounding down the shingles. "You must be getting nervous, old man," I mutter to myself, and poke the fire till it flames up again, driving the hovering shadows back to the far corners of the room. For a few moments I sit with elbows on knees, chin in hands, gazing into the dancing fire; then I sink contentedly into the chair once more and pick up two photographs pinned together.

It is a far cry from the Shawano County stream to Pine River in Waushara County, but distance and time are as nothing to the mind. Immediately nine years and a hundred miles have vanished, and I am back living those scenes over once more. The Pine River—sweetest, best and most loved of all Wisconsin's trout streams! God must have laughed for very joy when he created that stream. Geologists need not talk to me about the Ice Age, Erosion, etc. I know better. God made the Pine River—all along its banks you can discover his finger-prints. We never really forget anything. Sometimes we forget where we have laid a certain memory; then something happens to remind us where we placed it and we go and pick it up again—that's all. So these pictures bring the incidents portrayed vividly to mind again.

Why, it was but yesterday—not nine long years ago—that Wife and I were camping under the Old Pine Tree. The month was August and the Dane's Meadow was covered with a wealth of blossoms, golden-rods, asters, black-eyed Susans, wild sunflowers, and jewel-weeds rioted in glorious confusion. There was a subtle something in the air that indicated that the summer was on the wane, and, as always, it was dying in a blaze of colour.

But to the picture. Whenever I wade the Pine below the Old Mill, a certain pool beneath the low-hanging tag alders is the cynosure of the hour. This pool I always fish from below, contrary to all rule and precedent. On the morning in question I had cast my flies well under the overhanging bank, and, floating down, they had attracted the attention of a large trout; slowly he moved along beneath the flies, without attempting to molest them; apparently he was not satisfied in his own mind as to their true character. I did not move a muscle; indeed, I scarcely dared to breathe. So absorbed was I that I did not hear the "Snap, snap!" of the camera and the low laugh that I am sure must have accompanied it. Then all at once His Troutship made up his mind that my flies, though perhaps some unknown dipterous insects, were good to eat, and he took them with a rush. So sudden and unexpected was the attack that I jumped back in surprise, unconsciously setting the hook. It was a fierce little battle we fought there under the alders and willows the trout and I. The fish took the initiative from the very first and rushed the battle. I was relegated to a very subordinate position indeed; all I had to do was to hold the rod and "follow on," as we used to sing in Sunday School. At last luck and good tackle conquered, and I brought the trout to net, with mouth wide open, some ten rods down stream. Then I became conscious of the presence and the camera. You can well understand why those pictures are of especial value to me.

Something else happened during the same trip. One day the Boy and I were fishing together, and I had reeled out over 100 feet of line in the rapids below the Pine; then as usual my hook had snagged. I was afraid to pull, for fear that my line would break near the reel, and a hundred feet of good line was too much to sacrifice all at once. I was in a quandary; what to do I did not know. Then that rascally boy suggested that I disrobe and "go in after it." I tried to hire him to get the hook unfastened for me, but—'Nope; dad might not like it." I was between the Devil and the deep sea, and I chose the deep. After a hasty glance from the top of the bluff, to see if any spectators were near, I guilelessly disrobed and plunged in. Then that confounded boy ran to the tent and got the camera, and while my back was turned took my picture en deshabille. Of course, like all such pictures, it was good. I could have wrung his neck when I developed the roll of film. What's that? You want to see the picture? Well I rather guess not; that picture is not for publication.

Strange how even infinitesimal incidents connected with that trip come to mind as I gaze upon the picture. In some respects that was the pleasantest outing we ever enjoyed.

The fire was burned down to a few glimmering coals. The storm still rages fiercely outside, but I mind not. In one of the lower rooms a clock begins to toll the hour, and I count. Twelve? Impossible! I start guiltily to my feet and take my watch from my pocket, bending low over the coals to read it. Yes, it is midnight. Behind me in the darkness the silent typewriter sleeps.—REV. O. WARREN SMITH, in Sports Afield.

Shooting.

THE AMERICAN RIFLE

ONE fine day, some five or six hundred years ago, a number of English gentlemen with their retainers, for want of something better to do, were indulging in the harmless pastime of trying to jab ten-foot lances through an equal number of French gentlemen, who were troubled by the same complaint of time hanging heavily on their hands. The underlings were merrily hacking away at each other varying the sport by shooting deadly arrows when the chopping business grew monotonous, and everything was going as happily as a June morning wedding.

Suddenly one of the English retainers appeared on the outskirts of the fray with a strange-looking machine. It was a long iron tube about an inch or more in diameter, with a rough wooden stock affixed. Where the tube joined the stock there were various protuberances, and the whole was mounted on a sort of tripod. The low villain with the machine set it up, pointed it in the direction of the French knights, and then, looking along this tube, touched a glowing piece of tinder to the rear end of the tube.

There was a loud bang, a cloud of sulphurous and ill-smelling smoke, and the villain turned divers and sundry somersaults. A round piece of iron whizzed through the air and smote Sir Louis de Castellac fair upon his scarred and well-tried breastplate, which had turned away, harmless, arrows without number, blows enough to chop down a forest, and even the heavy quarrels from the Flemish crossbows. Sir Louis fell from his horse deader than the famed herring, and the age of chivalry was over. The greatest agent of civilisation ever known had entered the field.

If a modern Springfield, Model 1903, should meet this ancient peacemaker from the field of Crecy, and be told that this crude and barbarous specimen was its ancestor by direct descent, the mortified Springfield would undoubtedly refuse to recognise the old gentleman, and point to the fact that there was absolutely no family resemblance to substantiate the claims of the old firearm to kinship.

It would not be necessary to go back many generations to find an arm which looks enough like the old gentleman from Crecy to establish the relationship. From the time of the first introduction of firearms to the time of our great Civil War, progress in military firearms was practically nil. They were refined a little, very little, so that they could be carried about from place to place. The method of discharging the arms was changed as the centuries rolled by from match-lock to wheel-lock, from wheel-lock to flint-lock, and then to the percussion-cap musket with which the heroes of the American Civil War slaughtered each other.

It took about as long to load one of the Civil War muskets as it did one of the old wheel-locks or matchlocks of two hundred years before. They were a little more accurate and a little less liable to miss fire, but, aside from these minor differences and a little change in general outline, the muskets of the Civil War were first cousins to the clumsy machine which bellowed forth its greeting and defiance to the assembled chivalry of two nations at the battle of Crecy, five hundred years before.

It is strange that, fond of fighting as our ancestors were, some one did not devise an arm which would be an improvement on the clumsy, crude weapon with which they fought their battles. The only changes made were those which necessity, not genius, suggested. In other lines progress was steady. The magnificent "Constitution" bore no resemblance to the caravels of Columbus save for the fact that the wind moved both the "Constitution" and the Spanish cockboats, and that sails were therefore a necessity on both sorts of ships. Advances were made in mechanics, in printing, in transportation, and all the other accompaniments of civilisation, but the arms with which the world's battles were fought remained the same.

It is possible that this was a most excellent thing. If the ever-quarrelsome French and English people had been armed with modern magazine Springfields, with their terrible continuous fire, backed up by the automatic machine guns of the Maxim pattern, it is a question whether the veracious tale of the Kilkenny cats would not have been carried out on a larger scale by the two nations; and the Irish at the present day, living in what used to be England, would not be glowering across the Channel at the Germans, occupying what used to be France. A wise Providence seems to keep the destructive proclivities of nations in inverse ratio to their inventive genius—something like the small boy who, when not able to do so, is possessed of a most burning desire to thrash his teacher, but who, when he grows up and gets the power necessary, finds the desire missing.

The devices for warfare and killing have been brought to a stage of perfection almost unbelievable, but peace has never seemed more precious and desirable than at the present time. The power is here, but the desire is mostly missing. Two hundred years ago the desire for war and fighting was always present, but the power and appliances to accomplish much were missing.

The slaughter of our Civil War was horrifying and not equalled in the world's history, mainly because it was between the two finest armies made up of the finest fighters that ever faced each other across a battlefield, and not on account of the destructive power if the weapons used. The question arises whether, if the armies of the North and South had been armed with arms of the present day, the losses would have been greater or less. The facts are in favour of the former hypothesis. The Northerners and Southerners—as is always the case when brothers quarrel—fought far more viciously than would have been the case had the foe been a foreign one, and the rival fighters seemed to be ever possessed of the idea that the best way to fight was at arm's length—with the bayonet and clubbed gun. Now, when one army is holding a strong position, is equipped with modern magazine rifles, and supported by automatic machine guns, another army to come to close quarters will have to leave fully half of its men on the field, probably more, before it can arrive within a hundred yards of the enemy's position—and yet here the slaughter is only fairly commenced.

It is a mighty lucky thing that our fathers and grandfathers some forty years ago did not have these up-to-date weapons; otherwise the census of the United States could be taken in about half the time that is now required. It might be argued that, with the increased range and effectiveness of the modern rifle, the tactics would have been changed, and that the percentage of losses would have been about the same; but the old Berserker rage that sent Pickett's men charging up the slopes of Gettysburg in face of a superior force, well placed, would not have been satisfied to lie a thousand yards away from the enemy, tinkering with wind gauges and killing the other fellows with scientific accuracy when they were too far away to be seen.

After the Civil War some genius evolved the scheme of cutting off the breech ends of the old muzzle-loading Springfields and Enfields and attaching a clumsy breech bolt thereto, turning the rifle into a sort of half-baked breechloader, and for twenty years after the war, through long and severe Indian campaigns, our troops were armed with these hybrid breechloading rifles.

Civilian arms steadily improved after the war, the first practicable repeater, the Henry, appearing not long after the surrender at Appomattax, and was rapidly improved into the Winchester, while other arms companies were vieing with each other in turning out fine rifles: but the Army steadily plodded along with the good old single-shot, unreliable Springfields. The Ordnance Boards had nothing to do with the making of these improved civilian rifles, ergo they were no good, and the troops must needs be content with the Springfield. The heathen Sioux—uncivilised—had no ordnance boards, and in their ignorance proceeded to buy the best rifles they could lay their hands on with which to stand off our long-suffering soldiers. Hence the lovely spectacle presented itself of the troops of a highly civilised nation, famed for its mechanical ability and ingenuity, armed with archaic single-shot rifles, and pitted against half-naked Indians who were equipped with repeating rifles of the latest pattern.

One lovely summer morning, some thirty years ago, one of our bravest generals, with a handful of the Seventh Cavalry, bravely but foolishly—considering the rifles with which they were to fight—ran into a hornet's nest of Sioux on the Little Big Horn River. An hour or two later the green slopes of the river bottom were dotted with blue-clad, motionless figures, our brave general among them, sacrificed to the old-fogeyism and red tape of the musty boards whose duty it was to pass on the arms issued to the soldiers.

If Custer's men had been armed with the modern Springfield—the same rifle in name, but unlike the old Springfield in all other respects—there is no question that they could have fought their way out of the red waves of yelling demons which surrounded them, and more Indians would have been turned to ways of righteousness through the evangelising agency of a bullet than ever were converted before. If Custer's men had been armed with even the old repeaters of that date, they could have fought their way out. The soldiers could outshoot the Indians—about this there can be no dispute, as no Western Indian ever yet proved himself to be a good shot—and, given the rapidity of fire of the repeaters the charging Sioux would have abandoned their amusement mais pronto.

To use the old Springfield, the following operations were necessary:—The shot fired, the hammer had to be cocked and the breech-bolt snapped open (which sometimes ejected the shell and at other times did not, necessitating the fumbling around with a knife or other instrument to get out the exploded case). Then the new shell was inserted into the chamber, the breech-bolt closed, and the gun ready to fire again. In this time a man with a repeater could fire four or five aimed shots. Custer's men, according to the report of the few survivors, had much trouble with the shells refusing to eject. Imagine being out in the open, with three or four thousand yelling Sioux riding around and pouring in their volleys, and having to stop and fiddle with defective shells which would not eject! This object-lesson was entirely lost on the officials in Washington, wandering around in their forest of red tape, and the troops continued to fight with the old slow-fire, clumsy Springfield, Sioux and Apaches who were armed with nine-shot repeaters.

About 1890 the Government finally woke up, mainly because the Springfields were wearing out, and it was just about as easy to make a different pattern of rifle as to make a lot of new Springfields. The military rifle experts of the world had been searching for an arm which would give increased penetration and flatter trajectory with ammunition of lighter weight, thus enabling troops to carry a bigger supply of ammunition than was possible with the old-style equipment. The improvement in smokeless powder offered the necessary increased initial velocity, the small-bore rifle, .30 calibre or under, offered the desired lighter weight ammunition, and a gun was evolved with a long, slim bullet which would give great penetration and flat trajectory. Then, to keep the long bullet point on, it was necessary to have a very quick twist. When it came to firing the lead bullets through a barrel with a ten-inch twist, with a charge of smokeless powder sufficient to give the desired velocity, it was found that the bullet would not stand the pressure, but would merrily disregard the rifling, go straight through the gun, and pursue its erratic course with much wobbling and inaccuracy.

To meet this problem the bullet was covered with a tough jacket which would take the rifling and hang on. The first bullets were made with a steel jacket, but it was found that the life of the rifle with this steel jacket was less than a thousand rounds, so that the later bullets were turned out with a copper-nickel jacket, giving the necessary toughness with less wear on the rifle. These bullets also gave wonderful penetration, another desirable feature from a military standpoint. To use this new ammunition, the U.S. Government finally adopted the Krag-Jorgenson .30 calibre repeater—a most excellent gun—and the old Springfields were relegated to the scrap-heap which had been yawning for them for many a year, or to the Militia—which amounted to the same thing.

The change from the old large-calibre, black-powder, single-shot Springfield to the Krag-Jorgenson was a great step in advance that had ever been taken, with the exception of the change from flint-lock to the use of percussion powders. The new ammunition weighed about half as much as the old .45 calibre load for the Springfield, and a soldier could carry double the amount that he had formerly been able to tote around. With its terrific initial velocity errors in sighting were less costly, and a soldier in the excitement of battle could blaze away at an enemy five hundred yards away with his sights set at point blank with a fair chance of hitting; and the reverse was true, that if the sights were set for a distance two or three hundred yards beyond the true distance of the enemy, the bullets would still be effective. There was no smoke to give away the position of hidden skirmishers, and much less noise and recoil than was experienced with the old black-powder gun.

But what a wail went up from the expert target shots when the Krags were placed in their hands! The old Springfield, with its heavy bullet and comparatively slow flight, was a most excellent gun for shooting at targets over measured distances. The short, heavy bullet disregarded the stray puffs of wind, and pursued its course with no deviation from its true line of flight, being, of course, acted upon by steady winds of eight miles or more per hour. But the Krag bullet only weighed 220 grains—about half the weight of the old bullet; its long, slim form offered as much surface to a cross wind as the old bullet, without the weight to keep it steady. The wind played hob with the light bullet, and it was necessary for the military sharps to learn their wind lessons all over again. This was not the worst feature of the game. With the old Springfield and its soft bullet, any departure from the normal size of either bullet or barrel was compensated by the "upsettage" of the soft bullet at the moment of discharge. That is, the blow of the black powder gases would thicken the bullet at the expense of its length, and the bullet would thereupon fill up the rifling snugly and fly out of the barrel true, with the full force of the gases kept behind it as they should be. A bullet might be .002 or .004 of an inch too small, but its upsettage would fill up the barrel, and everything would be well again.

Under the impression that this would be the case with the new bullets, the Government made the new guns and ammunition with the same old disregard for accuracy; as long as a rifle was somewhere near the required size it passed. But the new bullets would not upset, the metal jacket preventing much change, even had the blow of the smokeless powder gases been as violent as the old black powder. The smokeless powder acted differently; the blow, while slower, was, of course, eventually much stronger, but the quick, sharp tap of the black powder was missing.

The bullets were very poor and the powder worse. Shooting at a thousand yards with the new ammunition, accuracy was a point which seemed to be a thing of the past, and the experts were in despair. About this time we sent a rifle team to compete with our English cousins and their Colonies for the Palma Trophy, and were gloriously beaten, mainly on account of the poor ammunition. The English were years ahead of us in the understanding of the idosyncrasies of the new guns and ammunition.

As usual, the civilian riflemen had to pull the Government out of the hole. Dr. Hudson, one of the foremost riflemen of the country, got his brains to work in conjunction with a man named Thomas in one of the great ammunition factories, and they turned out a bullet which would put the old Springfield to shame when fired through a rifle which was somewhere near standard calibre. The powder which had been formerly used was abandoned, and the Laflin and Rand "W. A." powder adopted in its place, which has been standard ever since.

At the time of the Spanish War the great difference between the Krag and the Springfield was most emphatically pointed out, and a militiaman, who fired one of the old smoke-wagons near the regulars found himself to be most unpopular. The enemy asked nothing better to shoot at than the great cloud of blue smoke which spouted forth from the muzzle of a Springfield, and the poor Militia, who were armed with what our President afterwards termed "the archaic weapons," found that it was preferable to remain mere spectators of the fighting to drawing the fire of the enemy and the blasphemy of the regulars on to their devoted selves by firing their Springfields.

But, good as our Krags were, the Spanish had a still better rifle. The Krag had to be reloaded one cartridge at a time until the magazine was full. The Spanish Mauser was reloaded with five cartridges contained in a clip in the same time that it took to place one cartridge in the Krag, thus giving a much greater rapidity of fire. The Mauser was shorter and neater of outline, lacking the clumsy projecting magazine that encumbered the Krag. After a couple of years of facing the Mausers in the hands of the unruly people of the Philippines, the Government began to wonder if may be a gun on the pattern of the Mauser would not be a good thing. Carrying out the thought, the New Springfield was brought out—which, as has been said before, is like the old Springfield in name only. This rifle, as first brought out some six years ago, was equipped with a rod bayonet, attached to the rifle, which had the strength and stopping power of a medium-sized darning needle, and the first issue was hurriedly called in and the experimental jabbers yanked off post haste. The second issue leaves nothing to be desired, and the American people can congratulate themselves that our soldiers are armed with the finest rifle possible to produce, and one that is not inferior to any arm, civilian or military, on the face of the globe.

The new rifle is the same calibre as the old Krag, the exact diameter of the bullet being .308, or a shade over a .30. The old, outlandish-looking magazine has been done away with, and the rifle is loaded on the plan of the Mauser, with five cartridges contained in a clip.

With this rifle five shots can be discharged as fast as the bolt can be manipulated, and the gun reloaded with five more cartridges in the same time as one shell can be inserted in the chamber of an ordinary single-shot rifle. The powder charge has been increased a little, and with the regulation bullet the velocity is about 2,160 foot seconds. With the new Spitzer-pattern bullets the rifle gives a velocity of 2,700 foot seconds. In other words, if the new Springfield and the old .45 Model Springfield were fired at a man a thousand yards away, the new bullet would reach the man while the Springfield .45 bullet was a little more than a third of the way on its journey. The practical value of this terrific velocity is in the resulting flatness of trajectory. With the rifle sighted at point blank, by merely holding the rifle a little higher, or taking a little coarser front bead, the bullet would strike an object six hundred yards away. The value of this in battle, when the men are too excited to think of their sights, is obvious.

The new rifle is made with a 24in. barel—a distinct departure in military firearms, which have heretofore been made with barrels thirty inches or over—experience having proved that the shorter barrels utilise all the energy of the powder. In both shotguns and rifles this fact is beginning to be recognised, and a few years will see a 20 to 24 inch barrel the standard length for a sporting rifle, while a 26 or 28 inch barrel will be the popular dimension for the scatter-gun lover.

The man who talks about liking a rifle that kicks, because it feels as though he were shooting something, would be entirely satisfied with the New Springfield. The recoil is the only objectionable feature about it. As one Eastern shooter puts it, a man lying prone and shooting the New Springfield will, according to his experience, be kicked back about three feet every time he shoots the rifle, and he says it would be an interesting problem in mathematics to figure out how many shots would be necessary to kick the shooter off the field of battle and into a place of safety. So in our next war, when a man is found far to the rear of the point of danger, he can merely state the number of shots he has fired, which, multiplied by three feet, should equal the distance of the man in question from the firing line.

The new smokeless powder and the metal-cased bullets have brought up new problems for the attention of the rifle crank. The gases produced by the high-pressure smokeless powder are white hot, and if allowed to leak by the base of a bullet when fired will promptly cut little grooves in the steel of the rifle barrel itself, ruining it in a short time. On account of this terrific heat it is impossible to fire an ordinary lead bullet through a barrel with these gases pushing at its unprotected base, even though the bullet could be made tough enough to stick to the rifling and not strip. For medium-range work a bullet had been turned out made of an alloy of tin, antimony, and lead, with a little copper. This gave a bullet that would stick to the rifling, yet not hard enough to wear out the rifle barrel as the metal-patched bullets did, but the problem arose how to keep the hot gases from melting the base of the bullet. Some genius evolved the plan of attaching a copper base or cup to the base of the bullet, thus preventing the hot gases from getting in their work on the easily-melted alloy. With a bullet so prepared, and a medium charge of high-pressure smokeless powder, the Krag and the New Springfield can be shot at all ranges up to six hundred yards, with the same results as obtained with the full service charge, at much less cost, and last, but not least, at great saving to the rifle. The life of the Krag or Springfield, shooting the full service charge, is about two or three thousand rounds. After this the rifle will not give the accuracy at the long ranges which it would when new, and has to be thrown away. Hence the new invention of the alloyed bullet with copper gas check is a great boon, not only to the military rifleman, but as well to the sportsman who uses a modern high-pressure rifle, and who likes to practise at the range with the weapon between deer seasons.

Once aroused from its lethargy, our Ordnance Board has not been satisfied, and the rifle as issued to the troops is as near perfection as any firearm made. A few months ago our rifle team, made up of the finest shots in the United States—which means in the world—met the teams of England, Canada, and Australia in the shoot for the much-desired blue ribbon of the rifle world—the Palma Trophy. When the last shot cracked, the American team, armed with the new product of American rifle-making, was on top—very much on top—as the scores of the team and their nearest competitors will show. Incidentally, the Americans did the finest shooting of any rifle team in history, bar none, and this, mind you, not with selected, made-to-order match rifles, but with the service rifle issued to the U. S. Army. Mr. Townsend Whelan, one of the greatest authorities on rifle-shooting and sport in general, estimates that if the New Springfield were put on the market by a private manufacturer, made out of the materials used by the Government and made with the care which the Government exercises in its manufacture, it could not be sold for less than forty dollars, which is about twice as much as the most expensive American sporting rifle costs at present. Our military rifle leads the procession, with the different makes of civilian sporting rifles trailing in the rear of the contest.

This is as it should be. The military rifle is made for business—grim, ugly business. It is designed primarily for killing men who have the same ideas in their heads regarding their would be executioners. When it comes to this stage of the game we don't want it said that Tom, Dick, and Harry, with rifles for killing game turned out by some factory, are better armed than our soldiers who are sent out to fight for the nation and the millions of homes behind them. The time is not long past when this was the case: let us hope it will not come again.—SMALLARMS, in Western Field.

KYNOCH'S "SWIFT" AIR RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Messrs. Kynoch have brought out a new air rifle, which they name the "Swift." As this weapon embodies several special features, and is the latest development of the modern air rifle, a short description may be of interest. The weight is about 7lbs. The calibre is 4½ mm, or .180 inch, while the rifling has a uniform twist of one turn in fifteen inches, there being ten grooves.

Air cylinder and barrel are in line with one another, when the action is closed, so that the air puff is delivered straight along the axis of the bore. Consequently we find the power considerable, the muzzles velocity being about 600 f. s. which is somewhat in excess of that of the Lincoln-Jeffries rifle, to the hard hitting powers of which latter gun I sometime ago called attention in the pages of the Indian Field.

The muzzle speed of the new rifle is therefore sufficient to drive the pellet through a half inch board at short range.

The barrel is hinged at the face of the joint, between breech and air cylinder. The bringing of the hinge to a point between barrel and cylinder, allows the two faces of the joint to meet exactly on closing, so that with the help of a coned projection from the air chamber which fits into a coned recess in the breech, a perfectly air-tight joint is made. The barrel itself acts as a lever for compressing the powerful spiral spring, and when returned to the firing position, is held in place by two small levers, the ends of which engage in recesses in the shoe, to which the barrel is screwed.

All parts of the "Swift" air rifle are made to gauge and are interchangeable. An important point in the case of any repair becoming necessary.

The retail price is £2-10, the same as that of the Lincoln-Jeffries.

The rifle has a pistol grip, and is well balanced, and efficiently sighted, with U back and bead foresight. The backsight is provided with an elevating screw, and the foresight can be adjusted laterally.

There are two pellets suitable for use in this air rifle. The "Witton" excellent for ordinary use, and the "Match," a slightly heavier pellet, manufactured with great care, especially for target shooting. The prices are 1s. 2d. and 1s. 6d. per thousand respectively. Messrs. Kynoch propose later to make "Swift" air rifles adapted for the No. 3 "Lion" pellets. These latter bullets are of the same shape as those for 4½mm. air rifles, but considerably larger in diameter and heavier. The new large bore will it is hoped be just as accurate as the 4½ mm. while the heavier projectile will make it considerably more effective on game. The cost of the "Lion" pellets is 3s. per 1000.

Anyone ordering a "Swift" air rifle should remember that two lengths of stock are manufactured 14 and 14½ inches. The contour of the gun is very suitable for attaching Lyman sights: peep-sights would undoubtedly greatly add to the efficiency of the No. 3 "Swift" for use in the field.

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS TO THE SHAREHOLDERS.

The Directors submit to the Shareholders of the Bank the General Balance Sheet and Statement of Profit and Loss Account for the year ending 31st December 1907.

The Net Profits for the year, after providing for bad and doubtful debts, and including £20,051, 4s. 4d. brought forwards from last Account, amount to £100,351, 0s., 4d. From this sum has to be deducted £16,875, being amount of Interim Dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, free of Income Tax on the "A" and "B" Shares paid for the half-year ending 30th June 1907.

The Directors have added £10,000 to Reserve Fund (raising it to £210,000) and £2,000 to the Officers' Pension Fund. They now recommend a further Dividend on the "A" and "B" Shares at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, free of Income Tax, for the second half of the year, leaving a balance of £24,601, 0s, 4d. to be carried forward.

It is with very great regret that the Directors have to record the death in September last of their esteemed colleague, Sir Alexander Wilson, who was for so long their Chairman.

Mr. H. Melvill Simons, of Messrs. Paterson, Simons & Co., Ld., has been elected to a seat on the Board.

The following Directors retire by rotation, but, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election :—

R. J. BLACK, Esq.
WILLIAM JACKSON, Esq.

It will be necessary, to appoint Auditors. Messrs. Cooper Brothers & Co., and Messrs. W. A. Browne & Co., the retiring Auditors, offer themselves for re-election.

By order of the Board,

Second Day, Thursday, 7th May 1908.

THE races this afternoon were run in excellent weather, though at one time it looked as if rain would come down, and a run for shelter in the Pavilion and waterproofs was made; the clouds, however, rolled by without interfering with our evening sport in any way. Being "Cup Day" the attendance was very large. Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley arrived in good time so also did His Highness the Maharajah of Mysore and his suite. The bookies did a good business and a two rupee totalisator was in full swing. The results are given below :—

NEW ·470 BORE.

VELOCITY 2,250 ft. sec.

The BEST Diagram made before the Editor of the Field with a Rifle of this bore.

"FIELD," March 23, 1907: ". . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridge complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

VELOCITY 2,150 ft. sec.

Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from Lang double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cuts circle 2·1 in diameter.

Made By the Editor of the "Field."

"FIELD" "A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon."

THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK.

The South-Western Railway managed to deal with their abnormally congested traffic on Easter Monday and by devious routes landed their patrons at Kempton, the ruck arriving in time for the race all had come out to see. With the enclosures packed, and an enormous crowd on the far side, the scene was an animated one, while the paddock has hardly been so thronged even on a Jubilee day. We sampled all sorts of weather from snow to sunshine, and through all came a keen wind, but towards the finish the sky cleared and bright sunshine was in the ascendant. The card of seven events was a full one, and provided a rare afternoon's sport. Details :—

NEWMARKET.

One always resumes acquaintance with racing at headquarters with feelings of pleasure. What is known as the Craven meeting is the least important of the series of fixtures here, and the meagre attendance on the 22nd instant was only in accordance with past experiences.

The most notable incident of the afternoon was, of course, the appearance of Perrier in the Biennial Stakes. Needless to say, his Majesty's fine colt was closely scrutinised in the paddock. If he did not quite realise expectations in his clothes, his big powerful frame made a great impression when his sheet was removed. He is very like Persimmon. Standing over 16 hands high, he has a tremendous back and loins on him, and possesses the good, straight hocks which are such a distinguishing characteristic of all the best descendants of St. Simon.

In point of appearance, he fairly dwarfed his opponents, of whom, however, Olympus seems to have thickened out a lot since last year. Judging by the tone of the market, he was considered to be the chief source of danger to Perrier. As it happened, there was no danger at all, for the King's colt simply outclassed the opposition, and no horse could possibly have won in easier or smoother fashion. His action was unfavourably commented upon as he cantered to the post, but he is altogether a different animal when extended. It should also be remembered that he can be made much fitter than he was to-day, so the merit of his performance was enhanced. Details :—

On the second day an extraordinary event occurred. When racing commenced rain was falling heavily, and when the Column Produce Stakes was decided it was falling in torrents. So heavy was the downpour that many bookmakers sought the helter of the stands, and did no business on the race.

Subsequently a remarkable change occurred, and half an hour later snow was falling heavily. The Babraham Plate was run through, and the Stewards then decided to abandon racing for the afternoon.

The snow which started to fall after the decision of the first race at Newmarket yesterday only ceased at seven o'clock this morning, when it was at least twelve inches deep on the Heath.

After an inspection of the course, the Stewards decided that acing was impossible to-day, and the programme as arranged as been postponed until to-morrow.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

ASTOUNDING results mark the close of the season. At the close of Saturday's games there were still only seven First Division clubs absolutely relieved of all fear of relegation. With but one Saturday of the season remaining, this surely must be an unprecedented state of affairs. Even Birmingham, whose prospects are regarded as being the most dismal, entertain faint hopes that Notts County and Bristol City will finish so ingloriously that they will be enabled to step over their heads.

Some of the clubs right at the bottom of the table were successful on Saturday. Birmingham trounced Sheffield Wednesday at Sheffield, and Bristol City defeated Bolton Wanderers. But Notts County experienced a serious reverse at the hands of Blackburn Rovers, a reverse that will affect their chances of escaping relegation.

By defeating Derby County at Derby, Bradford City followed their sensational victory over Fulham by an equally startling performance. It seems now practically certain—if anything is certain in this season of astounding results—that Bradford City and Oldham Athletic will be the two promoted clubs.

THE ARMY CUP FINAL.—In direct contrast to last Easter Monday, the weather at the beginning of this week at Aldershot was very severe. Just before eleven o'clock, after small hail and sleet storms, a heavy blizzard came on that lasted quite an hour, but, in spite of this, every train brought in hundreds of naval and military men from Chatham, Colchester, and Portsmouth, in order to witness the final for the Army Cup, the "blue riband" of Army football. For once in a way, the Sappers were out of it—this being quite a novelty. The contest lay between the 4th King's Royal Rifle Corps and the 2nd Lancashire Fusiliers.

A crowd of about 10,000 witnessed the game, which was played on the Army Athletic Ground, Queen's avenue. In spite of the wretched weather in the morning, with the arrival of Royalty the sun shone brightly, except for a few minutes, throughout the match. There was a heavy snowstorm shortly before three o'clock, but just as the royal standard went up on the flag-staff on the royal enclosure it ceased, the clouds disappeared, and a blue sky revealed itself.

Both teams were fully represented, and at the start the Lancashire Fusiliers had the wind in their favour, but almost immediately the Rifles threatened danger, and Finch had to use his hands. A minute later Young and Wroe very nearly scored between them, but the latter just shot outside the left post. Then the Fusiliers had a turn, their passing being excellent. Kay passed to Taylor, after a good run, but the latter missed a capital chance. The Rifles returned to the attack, but the forwards overran themselves, or they should have scored, as Finch fell in trying to save. In the scrimmage that followed the ball went over the line. Hetherington, who throughout proved a host in himself, very nearly netted, Finch just fisting out in time.

After this the play was very even, each goal being attacked in turn. Timmins had two excellent chances of shooting at a practically open goal, but once he struck the post and the next time he sent badly wide. Just before half-time the Rifles got an offside point, and McKeeves shot over the bar for the Fusiliers. Interval:—No score.

Resuming, the Fusiliers pressed for a few minutes, and two chances of scoring were missed. Erratic shooting was very noticeable on both sides, although the play was fast and clever. Timmins should have netted twice about halfway through the second half. The first time he cleverly dodged the goalkeeper, and although only five yards off the net he pushed the ball just outside the upright, the wind evidently acting against him. The Fusiliers afterwards improved and at times looked very dangerous, but seven minutes before time Beardsmore, who had done well all through, got possession, and after a smart little run passed to Young, the latter scoring. A minute before time the Rifles very nearly scored, but Finch saved cleverly, and a hard and evenly contested game ended—4th King's Royal Rifle Corps 1, 2nd Lancashire Fusiliers 0.

NOTES ON SCOTTISH GAMES.—Celtic are again Scottish champions, and their task against St. Mirren at Hampden Park, Glasgow, on Saturday, in the final of the Scottish Cup was about the easiest they ever had. This is the sixth time the Parkhead club has won the cup, and there is no doubt that for the last two years they have been the best representatives of Scottish football. St. Mirren worked hard and well for their place in the final, but their game is as different from Celtic's as night is from day, the bustling tactics of the Paisley club being no use against the more polished play of the Celts. The game will go down to history as one of the poorest finals ever seen, and even the score—5—1 for Celtic—gives but a faint idea of the run of the play. In the first place, St. Mirren seemed unnerved by the importance of the occasion, and, second, they found Celtic at the top of their form, the front rank, led splendidly by Quinn, doing almost anything they liked. Although beaten five times, Grant, the St. Mirren goalkeeper, was the best man on his side, and on several occasions saved brilliantly. He got little support from his backs. McAvoy was the best of the halves, while Wylie, at centre, was the only one of the forwards who showed any idea of what was wanted. The play of the Celtic front rank was a treat to watch, Quinn, McMenemy, Bennett, and Somers being brilliant in their passing movements: the halves steady, with May the best of the three; the backs confident; while Adams in goal was never really tested. Whatever faults could be found with the game, nothing could be said against the attendance, the gate-money amounting to £1,255, while £210 was taken at the stands, giving a total of £1,465, which represents an attendance of about 60,000.

The League programme did not reveal anything of much interest, and all over the attendances were very poor, less than £100 being taken at four of the five matches played. Even with R. S. McColl scoring two fine goals, Queen's Park were unable to beat Morton, Hearts were lucky to get two points off Clyde at Edinburgh, while the Ranger's centre, Campbell, scored no fewer than three of their five goals against Port Glasgow Athletic.

ATHLETICS.

TWO A. A. A. CHAMPIONSHIPS.—The athletic championship season was opened at Stamford Bridge on Saturday, when the two long-distance events were decided. In neither race did the holder defend his title. F. B. Thompson, who won the seven miles walk last year being in training for the Polytechnic Harriers' Marathon race next Saturday, while A. Underwood, the ten miles running champion, is not yet fit, and prefers to reserve his strength for the Olympic Games later on in the season. Large and representative fields, however, contested both events, and although the times were nothing extraordinary the average of excellence was decidedly high.

TEN MILES RUN.

There was a remarkably close finish to the ten miles, only 13secs. separating the sixth man from the winner. When the bell rang for the last lap it appeared to be anybody's race, A. Duncan, A. J. Robertson, T. Jack, J. E. Deakin, W. Coales, and M. Conway being all of a bunch. The national cross-country champion, Robertson, was, however, outpaced when it came to sprinting, and could only finish fifth, Duncan, who is the four miles champion, just beating Deakin, who made up a lot of ground at the finish.

The first twelve men were as follows:—

		min.	secs.
1.	A. Duncan jun. (Salford H.) ...	53	40⅘
2.	J. E. Deakin (Herne Hill H.) ...	53	41⅗
3.	T. Jack (Edinburgh and Southern H.) ...	53	42

11.	E. C. Innes (Elstree H.) ...	56	24
12.	F. Sloper (Reading A.C.) ...	56	25

SEVEN MILES WALK.

The scramble for the lead in the early stages of the seven miles walk led to the disqualification of G. E. Larner and Yates, of Salford, and left the way clear for E. J. Webb, of the Herne Hill Harriers, who without being headed again won by 160 yards from F. T. Carter, of the Queen's Park Harriers. Larner who won the championship in 1905, had been absent from the track for a long while, and his style has certainly not improved by his rest.

The leading positions were filled as follows:

		min.	secs.
1.	E. J. Webb (Herne Hill H.) ...	53	2⅘
2.	F. T. Carter (Queen's Park H.) ...	53	43
3.	W. J. Palmer (Herne Hill H.) ...	54	25
4.	E. E. Larner (Highgate H.) ...	54	30⅕

ENGLISH BAR vs. IRISH BAR.—On the links of the Royal Dublin Club, at Dollymount, on Saturday, the 18th instant the annual match between teams representing the English and the Irish Bars resulted in a narrow victory for the home side by 6 points to 5. The Irishmen won the singles by 4 points to 3, and the foursomes ended in a tie, each side scoring 2 points. Scores:—

HOCKEY.

ENGLAND vs. FRANCE.—The international hockey match, France vs. England, played at St. Cloud on the 18th instant ended in a draw, both teams scoring two goals.

Some magnificent play was witnessed on both sides, the French goalkeeper giving a brilliant display. England were the first to score, Stafford (Erdington) getting a goal after some hard play, but just before half-time Poupon (Stade Francais) placed a goal for the Frenchmen. The game thus stood even when the whistle blew. On the recommencement France showed distinctly better form, particularly in the backs and goalkeeper. Stafford, however, succeeded in placing a second goal to the credit of the English team, and the game was fought from then to the end with brilliant play on both sides, Pridmore (Coventry), Jordan (Staines), and Hardly (Brooklands) being particularly strong. A few minutes before the close of play the Frenchmen rushed through a second goal, and the game thus ended in a draw.

BOXING.

BURNS vs. "JEWEY" SMITH.—The eagerly awaited contest between Tommy Burns and Jewey Smith, champion of South Africa, took place on the evening of the 18th instant at the Bowling Palace, Paris, before a crowded gathering of amateurs. They were rewarded by witnessing a fight which quite came up to their expectations, although Burns showed himself throughout the better man, displaying extraordinary quickness. He knocked Smith out in the fifth round.

The first two rounds were only of slight interest. Smith hit heavily, displaying great strength and precision, but Burns profited by his antagonist's slowness and heavy build, and soon exhausted him by his superior quickness.

At the end of the third round there was an accident, which might have had serious results. Smith had been knocked down by a blow on the jaw. He did not rise for three seconds, and the photographers hastened to secure a snapshot, when the flashlight set fire to a garland of imitation flowers. A flag next caught fire, and a slight panic ensued, but the flames were speedily extinguished.

In the third round Burns dealt his adversary a number of heavy blows, which the South African countered until a blow, which caught him in the ribs, floored him. Six seconds elapsed before he rose again.

In the fourth round Burns, moving rapidly round his opponent, attacked with great energy, three times driving the South African against the ropes.

In the fifth round Smith pressed, but Burns dodged every blow. Then Burns attacked, and again brought Smith to the ground and finally knocked him out with a terrific blow on the jaw.

Polo.

OOTACAMUND TOURNAMENT.

THE first round in the annual tournament was played on the Hobart Park polo ground, on the 4th instant between the 14th Hussars and the Mysore Gymkhana "B" Team. The sides being :—

14TH HUSSARS.		MYSORE GYMKHANA "B" TEAM.
Mr. G. K. M. Masson	... 1	Jemadar Fyaz Mahomed	... 1
Major R. C. Stephen	... 2	S. Gopal Rao ...	... 2
Capt. J. B. Walker	... 3	Col. Desaraj Urs	... 3
Mr. A. Astley	... (back.)	Duffadar Savnuth	... (back.)

Soon after commencement of play rain fell and it was almost impossible to follow the play from the tent, Astley secured the first goal for his side in the first chukker. In the second neither team scored. In the third Stephens drove a goal for the Hussars, and in the next chukker, the fourth, the play of the Hussars was remarkably good for Stephen, Walker and Mason added a goal each. Before time was called, Fyaz Mahomed registered the first goal for the Mysore team. In the last chukker play was altogether in the Mysore territory, and Stephen and Astley added a goal each to their score.

Result : 14th Hussars, 7 ; Mysore Gymkhana "B" Team, 1.

The attendance was far from good excluding the hoi polloi. The Governor's band, though in attendance, were prevented going through its programme being exposed to the heavy rain which fell throughout the play.

The Mysore Gymkkana "A" Team played the Mysore Imperial Lancers at noon to-day, Thursday 7th. It was a one-sided game, the Lancers winning by 11 goals to nil. Rasaldar Murad Beg played a very grand game, scoring 7 goals, while Subraj Urs added 3 and Captain Henderson 1.

The teams were composed as under :—

MYSORE GYMKHANA "A" TEAM.		IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS.
Abdul Gaffor	... 1	Capt. Henderson	... 1
Mr. B. Krishna Urs	... 2	Rasaldar Murad Beg	... 2
Jemadar Mahaboob Khan	3	Jemadar Subraj Urs	... 3
Mr. M. S. Kantaraj Urs (back)		Duffadar Abdul Rahman (back)

The Mysore Imperial Service Lancers played the Mysore Gymkhana "A" team in the second round. It was quite a one sided game, the former winning by eleven goals to nil. Resaldar Murad Beg played a dashing game scoring seven goals for his side, Subraj Urs scored three and Captain Henderson one. Teams :—

THE MYSORE IMPERIAL LANCERS.		MYSORE GYMKHANA "A" TEAM.
Capt. Henderson	... 1	Abdool Gaffur	... 1
Resaldar Murad Beg	... 2	B. P. Krishna Urs	... 2

Duffadar Abdool Rahman (back)		Mr. S. Kamaraj Urs (back.)

SEMI-FINALS.

The Magpies played the 14th Hussars in the presence of a large concourse of spectators, Sir Arthur, Lady, and the Misses. Lawley were present.

In the first chucker Captain Leveson Gower carried the ball down the full length and with his third hit scored a goal. Soon after the ball was put again in motion, a "foul" was given against the Hussars and after the hit off Dangar scored a goal.

In the second chucker Astley went down the field with the ball and scored a goal, and scored another in the third chucker thereby equalising. Major Stephens hit a goal in the fourth chucker. Though in the fifth and sixth chuckers play was hard and fast, no more scoring was done, the Hussars winning by three goals to two.

14TH HUSSARS.		MAGPIES.
Mr. G. K. Mason	... 1	Capt. P. Leveson Gower	... 1

Mr. A. Astley	(back)	Capt. G. Heseltine	(back)

THE FINALS.

On the 9th instant the Hussars played the Imperial Lancers, the former won by nine goals to one.

Sir Arthur Lawley in presenting the Cup asked all present to join him in the pleasant task of congratulating the winning team. Last year he said there was reason to lament, the Cup being carried far away from its happy home. Now the Cup was going still further, but there was no reason to lament as it had been well and nobly won. He expressed the hope that the Hussars would not keep it too long and that eventually Ooty would be able to win it.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

GORDON HIGHLANDERS vs. HIGHLAND L. I.—The meeting of the Scotch teams in the Fort last Saturday attracted a big crowd of spectators. The game was a fairly level one, the Gordons showing better form. The first half was devoid of score though Lees was called upon to defend his charge on more than one occasion. On resuming after the interval the Gordons obtained two corners but neither was turned to account. Lees was next tested with a shot from McDougal, he got it away all right but Drinkwater was on it immediately and banged it into the net thus scoring the Gordon's winning point and the only goal of the match.

DALHOUSIE vs. CUSTOMS.—Playing on the Dalhousie ground, the visitors winning by a goal to nil. The display was poor; neither side showed to advantage while the conduct of certain players justified their removal from the field. Macready scored the only goal in the match shortly before half time.

CALCUTTA vs. Y. M. C. A.—Playing on the Y. M. C. A. ground last Saturday, Calcutta defeated the home team by 5 goals to nil. The visitors attacked all through the first half, Kingcome, (2), Sherman, and Forster scoring goals. On changing they continued to attack but the Y. M. C. A. defence showed some improvement and only one further goal was scored, Forster putting through.

CALEDONIANS vs. RANGERS.—This match on the Rangers ground last Saturday was not a particularly brilliant game. The first half was without score but in the second, L. Rosser found the net and gave the Caledonians a goal to nil the victory.

CALEDONIANS vs. CUSTOMS.—Played on the Caledonia ground on Tuesday the game ending in a pointless draw after a poor exhibition of football.

DIVISION II.

GORDONS "B" vs. Y. M. C. A. (am).—Four matches in the II Division were down for decision on Saturday afternoon but the meeting of the above teams on the Caledonian's ground was the only one played. The military had matters much their own way and won by 4 goals to nil.

SIBPUR vs. LA MARTINIERE.—These teams met on the Customs ground on Monday, Sibpur winning by 3 goals to 1. La Martiniere drew first blood, Roseboom scoring. Durrell equalised and Battersby gave Sibpur the lead. In the second half Battersby scored again.

MEASURERS vs. Y.M.C.A. (amateurs)—Played on Monday, the Y.M.C.A. winning by a goal to nil.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE curtain was rung up on the Calcutta Soccer season last Saturday with the commencement of the League which will occupy the attention of enthusiasts from now on up to the 1st of July. There are several alterations in the constituency of the Senior Division of the League this year. The Northumberlands are away sniping Mohmands on the frontier and their place in Fort William has been taken by the Gordon Highlanders who come with the reputation of being a crack soccer regiment. Certainly their play in the Minto Fete Football Tournament entitles them to the utmost respect of local teams and their long passing game is likely to puzzle even our most redoubtable half backs.

Vae Victis!—The conclusion of last year's League competition set the curfew tolling the knell of Howrah United and one can hardly censure them for refusing to accept the ignominy of expulsion. Their complete withdrawal from football sets a number of really good men free and it will be surprising if these are not quickly snapped up by cis-Hooghly clubs. The Customs, who have ousted Howrah United from the Senior Division, have a great reputation to sustain and there are not wanting those who predict for them permanent residence in this elevated position. Their performance in the Junior Division last season unquestionably entitles them to the honour which has been thrust upon them, for out of fourteen matches played, they won thirteen and drew one, thus scoring 27 points out of a possible 28.

THE other military team, the H. L. I., remains steadfast to Calcutta or rather to Dum Dum and will soon be showing its old form again when it gets settled down to the maidan grounds. Of the remaining competitors in this year's League competition, Rangers, Caledonia and Y. M. C. A. appear to have pretty much the same sort of teams as they had last year. Dalhousie has made some big changes consequent on the departure of F. Prike, their speedy left wing forward on long leave home. They were trying Barham, an English League player the other evening, but it was fairly evident that A. D. is beginning to tell on him. If they can find a really good centre half and put Fred Lees full back with Storrie, their defence should be one of the most stubborn in Calcutta, especially with Hendry in goal.

THE C. F. C. once more flaunts the red and white banner over the capacious bar "down by the riverside." The absence of the hitherto ubiquitous "Jimmy"—a very Falstaff of humour and comfortable philosophy—has caused much lamentation in this quarter of the maidan. A very capable understudy has happily been found in the person of Mr. W. Macdonald Smith who, if he cannot emulate the anatomical developments of his departed principal, certainly yields nothing to him in point of courtesy and keenness. In the Calcutta team there will be a good many changes. With Crawford still at the head of the eleven, however, there need be no apprehension that his men will fail to give a good account of themselves. V. Cooper, who is now on the "Guide" is available practically for the entire season. Gahan may possibly be posted to Calcutta also. Stuart, O'Shea and Crawford combine to form a tentative half back line which may be altered to include Ansell when he is not busy piloting. The lack of a speedy centre forward is again troubling Calcutta, and so far it does not look as if a "find" would be made this season. Sherman and Forster take the right wing, whilst Kingcome and Oliver take the left. Taylor is a likely candidate for the centre position, but has not yet turned out. Baker will possibly be found to be a suitable goal-keeper.

OF the League Matches on Saturday it can only be said that they afforded occasions for a lot of unscientific play of the kick and rush order. Few players were in proper training with the possible exception of those who had gone through the hockey season. The maidan grounds were in a fairly good state, some much-needed rain having softened the brick-like surface, though without sinking very deep. Consequently the going was treacherous in nearly all cases, especially so on the Y. M. C. A. ground, where Calcutta and the Young Men indulged in the most amusing corybantic display, the result being a win for Calcutta by five goals to nothing. Reynolds and Baldwin made gargantuan effort's to keep the C. F. C. forwards out, but as they had to play half back as well as full back they were too heavily handicapped to avert the disaster which overtook them. Kingcome played a sterling game for Calcutta and Forster and Sherman were also in form. Ansell was put in as centre forward at the last moment and made a creditable display. These five goals will come in very handy to Calcutta's average for they thus start the season with a good bit in hand.

THE best match of the day, viz., Gordons vs. H. L. I. was played in the Fort by special indulgence. It is by no means a convenient rendezvous for a League match and it is to be hoped that it will not be found necessary to accord this indulgence again. The Gordons managed to scrape through by a goal to nil after a tough fight which boasted little of science. The H. L. I were scarcely up to form and are much handicapped in the loss of that magnificent full back Renton.

ON the Dalhousie ground, the parvenus Customs inflicted defeat on the home team by a goal to nil. The game was frequently marred by disorderly conduct on the part of players on both sides and it seems a great pity that the referee did not catch the delinquents at their tricks and report them to the I. F. A. The Customs Captain has formally complained of the conduct of one of the Dalhousie men, but as the referee is not in a position to make any report on the match the I. F. A. have no justification for taking action. The linesmen should have been smart enough to draw the referee's attention to what was going on behind his back, since he admits that he was engaged in following the ball at the time and was unaware of any untoward incident until after the match. But surely this sort of thing does not redound to the credit of any club, especially at the very outset of the season. It is to be hoped that as this is the first, so it will be the last occurence of this objectionable nature.

CALEDONIA beat the Rangers on the latter club's ground after a rather drab colourless game. Little is known yet of either of these teams and they must be allowed time to find themselves. Caledonia has quite a numbers of youngsters who will develop with practice. And if Davy Walker can't make them practice who will?

THE light ball question has again cropped up and it really seems necessary that some definite pronouncement should be made on the subject. With the high winds which blow across the maidan of an evening at this time of year the Association game is almost ruined by the average light ball one meets with. It only requires a lead from Calcutta for all clubs to soak the leather cases of new footballs for several hours before use. The soaking does not injure a reliable make of football and it makes all the difference between an elusive feathery balloon and a good solid easily controlled missile which really does sting when you get it red hot from the centre forward's boot.

SECOND ROUND.

14TH HUSSARS vs. JHANSI RAILWAY INSTITUTE.—The holders of the cup met the 14th Hussars on the 2nd instant and a good game was witnessed. The Cavalry men offered stubborn resistance all through but were beaten by three goals to nil. Jhansi scored a goal in the first half, the Hussars making great efforts to draw level, but could get no nearer than a corner but which proved abortive. On crossing over both teams pressed in turn. Jhansi registered a second goal; succeeding play was in favour of the Hussars who were playing in most determined fashion; luck was against them, however, and they were unable to score. Then the ball was taken to the Hussars territory where Jhansi obtained their third goal. There was no further scoring the holders winning as stated. Teams:—

14TH HUSSARS.—Goal, Williams; backs, Bartlett, Maguir and Powell; half-backs Sherman, Smith and Clare; forwards Russel, Baker, Hallard, and Rickards.

JHANSI.—Goal, McCombie; backs, Fitzpatrick and Essai; half-backs, G. MacMullen, B. MacMullen and MacLeod; forwards, Steele, Jones, Troupe, L. Fitzpatrick and Clough.

Referee:—Messrs. Ward and Weyman.

79TH CO., R. G. A. vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 2nd instant. The opening exchanges were even but then the Gunners asserted themselves and scored twice before the interval. On changing ends an accident to O'Connor deprived the Gunners of his services and play for the rest of the game was very close. There was no more scoring, however, the R.G.A. winning by two goals to nil. Teams :—

79TH CO., R. G. A.—Goal, Mercer; backs, Beaumont and Watts; half-backs, O'Connor, Henry and Southcott; forwards, McDonald; Sudlip, Macgarry, Ford and Moberley.

PAREL GYMKHANA.—Goal, Leggett; backs, Haltham and Pennock; half-backs, Scott, Furbisher and Petty; forwards, Marshall, McMullen, Major, Holborn and Baker.

Referee:—Messrs. Grayburn and Burnett.

POONA GYMKHANA vs. NORTHAMPTONSHIRE REGIMENT.—A close game had been looked forward to and when these teams met on the 4th instant the spectators were not disappointed. The opening exchanges were very level, then the Military pressed and Robinson put through. Poona next attacked and nearly scored on more than one occasion but the soldiers relieved and

HUNDRED BEST PICTURES.

"The Hundred Best Pictures," as its name implies, contains 100 of the most famous examples of the Painter's Brush in the History of the World's Art. It was first issued in the early part of 1901, and proved an unqualified success, upwards of 100,000 volumes being sold in Great Britain. The first edition is now out of print, or practically so; a few parts remain on hand, but can only be obtained at double the published price and bound volumes are practically unobtainable at any price. But for the fact that the Publishers are at present engaged in publishing this beautiful volume in America, copies of this work would be wholly unobtainable. Taking advantage, however, of the fact that an Edition on a basis of 50,000 copies has just been printed for sale in the United States of America, a limited number of volumes has been reserved for sale in India, and it is not intended to make any further reprint.

In an advertisement of limited space it is impossible to convey an adequate idea of the beauty and wonderful value of this unique work. Copies have been accepted by the King, the Czar of Russia, the President, U.S.A., His Excellency the Governor-General of Australia, Lord Northcote His Excellency Sir R. Talbot, His Excellency Sir John Madden, and hundreds of complementary letters have been received by the Publishers. Remember each of the pictures is a rushing down forced a corner. The Gymkhana got possession from the hit in and taking the ball down Heath equalised. Crossing over on level terms play improved all round. The soldiers attacked but the Gymkhana backs were too good for them and the Poona men invading the Northamptons' territory forced a corner. Light put through from the hit in and in spite of strenuous efforts the Military were unable to get on terms, Poona thus winning by two goals to one. Terms —

POONA GYMKHANA.—Goal, Capt. Butler; backs, MacPherson and Airey; half-backs, Wilson, Ainsworth and Brind; forwards, Graham, Light Heath, Davis and Paris

NORTHAMPTON REGIMENT.—Goal, Millard; backs, Lieut. Clive and Albons; half-backs, Corpl. Pefperill, Sergt. Hall and Ingram; forwards, Hemmings, Corpl. Coats, Hitchcock, Lieut. Robinson and Powers.

Referee:—Messrs. Ward and Weyman.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE vs. ST XAVIER'S CLUB.—This match which had been postponed was played on the 5th inst. resulting in a win for the Medical College. St. Xavier's gave a good display in the first half but the Medicals soon shewed their superiority and crossed over with a lead of two goals at the interval. St. Xavier's were kept on the defensive during the second half and the Medicals scoring two more goals won by four goals to nil. Teams:—

ST. XAVIER'S CLUB.—Goal, Dhairywan; backs K. Kamat and D. Winter; half-backs, Carlos Hildreath and Viegas; forwards, Reginald, Pinto Nelson, W. Kamat and Cyriaco.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Goal, Emile backs, Mungapan and Gimi; half-backs: Cooper Cizen and Osborne; forwards, Cahill, Honey (Captain), Henson George and Bell.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. WORCESTERSHIRE REGT.—These teams met on the 5th inst. the Regiment winning a poor game by a goal to nil. The soldiers pressed at the start, then play ruled up and down till a good run down the field by the Worcesters ended in Rowbotham putting through. The remainder of the play in the first half was of the scrambling order. After the interval play was even but not brilliant; there was no further scoring the Worcesters winning as stated. Teams.—

WORCESTER REGIMENT.—Goal: Foster; backs: Solano and Parton; half-backs: Stone, Smith and Sergt. Buffery; forwards: Clarke Smith Rowbotham and Lieut. Burroughs.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Goal Hardie; backs. Ward and Busch; half-backs, Christie, Dent, and Morris; forwards, Shoobridge, Pearson, Burnett, Williams and Raymond.

Referees:—Messrs. Weyman and Stileman.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. BOMBAY DOCKYARD.—These teams met on the 6th instant, an exciting game ending in a pointless draw. The match was replayed the next day when another well contested game was witnessed. The Dockyard pressed at the start but lost opportunities of scoring. Then the Scots got away and registered their first point, play ruling up and down to the interval. On changing ends both goals were visited in turn without success Scrambling play followed and then the Scots ran down and scored Nothing daunted the Dockyard played for all they were worth, but all their efforts were unsuccessful and the Scots netting thir third goal won a strenuous game by three goals to nil. Teams:—

ROYAL SCOTS.—Goal, Wilson; backs Mackenzie and Watson; half-backs, Evans, Powell and Prior; forwards Shawcross (Capt) Lucas Collins, Henderson, and J. Wilson.

R. I. M. DOCKYARD—Goal, Dias; backs Hildreth and Stevans; half-backs, Fido, Corbett and Baker; forwards, Savage, Harrington, Brewin, Gilder and Templeton.

The Naturalist.

THE CUNNING OF ANIMALS.

THE animals of the chase are all endowed with supernatural cunning according to old fable and modern fact observes "Rusticus" in a Home contemporary. At the same time, when the Humanitarian Society is about, folk are asked to believe that animals have no pain of anticipation, and that mental anguish is foreign to them. Would it not be strange if animals that can foresee the moves of their enemies, and take means to prevent them, cannot observe their own danger when the enemy is storming their insecure castles? The fox that, for want of better refuge, has gone to earth in a rabbit burrow, is said to feel no fear as the spades and picks shake the foundations of his mock security. Without in the smallest degree harbouring humanitarian sentiments, I think it is clear that both these sporting views are mutually destructive and cannot be true. I am prepared to say that le renard subtil is very much of a myth; that the deer's wisdom in the chase is mostly, if not merely, the unthinking effort of declining vigour; and the hare's vagaries in flight are brought about by ever-changing intentions when one by another has to be abandoned in the face of immediate danger. Xenophon speaks of unravelling the network of cross-wanderings of the hare, and the difficulty of the task. But he is speaking of her night wanderings, when, before his hounds were unkennelled, she knew no danger. The network is a fact, but it is made without purpose of evasion, any more than the wanderings of man and maid upon the sea-shore. These footprints in the sand would take much to unravel and would reflect detective glory, just as the hare's trail did on Xenophon's oldest hounds. But the intricacy of the labyrinth tells nothing of the mental character of man, maid, nor hare either. In these times trail-hunting is only practised on the midnight lines of otters, to disclose their daylight restings. The fox is no longer found in that way in this country, although it is still the regular necessary fashion in America. Hares must have been particularly scarce to have required such methods by Xenophon, which must have died out long ago, if in England they ever were. The finding of a stag depends upon the eyes of the harbourer. It is true the midnight line might be taken up by hounds trained to the job, but they would not distinguish between the few warrantable beasts and the many others, which the harbourer can do by the slots, as he calls the beasts' footmarks and their placings.

STAG, FOX AND HARE.

If the animals were endowed with the old or new fabled cunning, the most probable time for its display would be when they were first found, and fresh in mind and body. However, that is when all beasts prefer to rely upon fleetness of foot to mental slimness, which of itself goes far to prove their supposed slimness to be the result of accidents. It is true that the fox often saves himself by refusing to run or break covert, and so exchanges ignoble life for an honourable death in the open. But as that is the manner of all vulpine cubs before they have cut their wisdom teeth, I have a right to regard it as the result of prematurely-suspended development, or, in other words, stupidity. In the same way sometimes the tufters have more than they can do to force a stag to break covert when first found. That does not prove cunning either. It is merely the result of education. Hounds are constantly about after fox, hind, or stag, and when one, then not the other. Thus deer have come to think it not their day, and to cling to that idea until the contrary is forced upon them. Then, when they do break away they rely first upon speed, and not on cunning. That their natural habits are very much pre-arranged by the survival of the fittest to save their lives depends upon no exercise of their own wits. For instance, when the deer takes to a shallow stream and travels up with his feet under water, it is not because his feet on dry land give him away, but only because he is looking for deep water, where his ancestry have saved their own lives from the wolf-pack.

That instinct is a death-trap to the poor stag, which never takes into account the huntsman, but only the pack, which he can as easily defeat in deep water as his ancestors could the wolves. However, hunted experience with whip-lashes to envelop his antlers, even if it does date from before Queen Elizabeth, has not begun to teach the deer that water is a trap, and no longer a refuge, as it was from the wolves since they and red deer were. Then the instinct of deer, which prompts them to find others in their distress, may be merely caused by the fact that they are gregarious animals, and when they have done as much running as they can well survive, there is no reason for attributing reasoning powers if they find a secure bed and lie low. Sometimes this bed has been until then occupied by another deer which is turned out to make way for the stronger new-comer, and sometimes it has not. In either case, the fact of lying still usually leads to the line being over-run by the pack, and when another deer has been turned out to make way for the hunted one, hounds usually go on with the new line as if no change had occurred. It is not to be supposed that the hunted deer premeditates this, as is said of him, any more than he does when he takes a couch not before occupied, and by lying low and motionless deceives hounds in precisely the same way as when he first turns out another deer, which takes on his duties incidentally, and not because it is any part of the hunted beast's intention, which is only that of hiding when strength begins to fail.

A FRIEND IN NEED.

The ways of the hunted fox are often perplexing to hounds and huntsman, too, and I think generally because in their weakness they do things that no fox would do while sane of mind and sound of body. I was much struck by a recently-told tale of the cleverness of a fox which might just as well have been explained by a sudden giving out of physical strength, and a consequent change of mind. The fox's line was past an old ruin, and hounds having passed by the walls in full cry, increased their pace for some distance, showing scent had improved, but then lost scent, cast forward doubtfully, and were thus carried clean away from the ruin. This fox had been watched. He ran some distance past the ruin, then retraced his steps, which accounted for the improved scent, seeing that it was doubled, and then he ascended the old building, and there hid. Now to call this cleverness is to assume that the double scent was made on purpose to induce hounds to run fast in the wrong direction, and carry far over the vantage place of the hunted fox. So must have thought the Irish shepherd who declared that rather than "bawl," to give away his old friend, he would be deprived of the cleanest one-pound note that ever was printed. The assumption of cunning is much more than doubtful. Probably what happened was that the fox, like every other, started with a point to make, a vantage earth to gain, where he had often been to ground before. This point was probably still in this fox's will when he passed the ruin walls. But having got past them he suddenly felt strength leaving him, and a new and immediate point of vantage and security became necessary to him. What more likely to be remembered than the one he had only just passed?

When both fail, the stag and the fox in common fight for life, and die fighting, probably never dreading defeat, especially the soiled stag, in falsest security, because his ancestral instincts hold out no knowledge of the fatal rope, and his ancestors have lived, in spite of the wolves' wild chase, precisely as good staghounds hunt to-day.

Why staghounds have less cry than foxhounds when both are of the same race is a difficult question. But I suppose the cry of pack-hunting dogs and wolves was given to them for more than one purpose. It assists them to keep together, but then, like some wild dogs, they could do that without the cry. Leaving men out of count, the only apparent advantage it is to hounds is to make the quarry afraid and keep it moving. So long as it keeps going it is in most danger, for the hide of a hunted animal is very hard for unassisted hounds to find. Fox, stag, and hare in the exhausted state and still, seem well nigh scentless, and that again can be the result of no effort of will, except the negative one of lying down and must arise from the fierce selection of the ages, wherein all the hunted that could be scented when still and cold were never hunted again, nor lived to perpetuate their species. The others, those few of them that the cry of wolves or hounds did not scare into last efforts to run, lived to beget offspring that practise safety in stillness, and know that where there is most noise there is not always greatest danger. Therefore, perhaps, hunted humanity may assume as much, in spite of humanitarian "tongue," leagues, and other folk, who wish to gain their final goal by proving the brute creation more fit for it than their own. They may be right or wrong in suburban drawing-rooms, but still in the country folk read and believe that Nimrod was a "mighty hunter before the Lord," and so he is to-day in suburban nurseries, where future Nimrods are in the making, in spite of the intellectuals below stairs.

THE GREY QUAIL.

GREY QUAIL (coturnix coturnix) are such well-known birds that a description is unnecessary.

The great flights begin to enter India about the first week in September, and they are on their way north again at the beginning of April.

After entering the country they spread themselves in all directions, but no doubt the great mass of the invading host make for the corn and grass lands of Upper and Central India.

I have very seldom seen grey quail in the neighbourhood of Madras and can only find a record of having shot one there (at Gudavancheri.)

In the Punjab, on the contrary, during April and the first half of May and again in September and the first half of October quails are extremely plentiful.

In that province call birds are largely employed for bringing down the passing flights.

Each call quail is in a little conical cage of its own, and about ten of these are attached at intervals to a long bamboo, so that when the latter is thrust into the ground on a slant, each cage hangs separately.

The bamboos with their cages are set out in suitable places in the evening and as the flights of migrating quails pass overhead during the night they are attracted by the twit-twitting of the call birds and settle down all round. Fairly thick crops, two to two and a half feet high, are selected to collect the quail into. The cover should be dense enough for the birds to remain in, without being so high as to make it difficult to beat. A well-known place for quail shooting is Khanna Jheel, six miles from Rawal Pindi. Here there is a good deal of lowlying corn land on both sides of the little river Karang.

Unfortunately in a sheltered valley of this kind, quail shooting is apt to become monotonous owing to nearly all the birds flying in the same way, viz., straight away and shoulder high.

I remember there was one field surrounded by high trees, close to the Karang. There I used sometimes to have a stick of call birds set. The quail when put up had to rise well to clear the trees, and thus the shooting was varied. At the other side of Indi near Murgha, there are exposed bluffs which look down on the river Sohan. Here is a good deal of rather poor corn land.

Quail could never be collected at Murgha in the same numbers as at Khanna, but on these breezy heights they were always much livelier and consequently more interesting to shoot.

At the end of May quail become scarce in the Punjab, and owing to the increasing heat, fly badly. To give an example. On the 26th May 1900, I had three sticks of call birds set out at Khanna, and next day, in spite of strict beating, only succeeded in finding twenty-eight quail. It was most difficult to get them up, but eventually I shot twenty-three, while two others allowed themselves to be caught rather than fly.

I was told by Kashmiri shikaris that quail visit the valley regularly during their migrations. I did not see any while there, but quite believe what I was told, as there is plenty of suitable ground and cover, such as would be likely to tempt quail to alight.

Moreover I have seen and shot grey quail in Kumaon, nearly 7,000 feet above the sea, in October.

Farther south in the United Provinces, call birds are unobtainable, and so though one may at times get fair shooting, the birds are never in the numbers seen in the Punjab.

In certain favoured places quail stay all the year round and breed regularly.

For instance opposite Kailash Ghât on the Jumna, six and a half miles from Agra, there is some rough grass near the river where grey quail are always to be found. In this part of India they are most plentiful in November, December and January. Referring to my notes I find that wherever suitable ground was shot over, during these months, there would be always several brace of quail in the bag. Presumably of course the quail are in India from September to April, but it is in the three months mentioned that they are most seen.

Grey quail are often found in damp lowlying ground, near marshes. Thus I have found them in considerable numbers during November round the edges of Nurpur and Bahadurganj Jheels in the Budaon District.

I am not sure whether they deliberately choose wet ground like this or only resort there temporarily when disturbed and driven out of crops by natives working.

At Delhi, just opposite the Fort, but on the other side of the Jumna, are fields of mustard and beans, these grow into a dense tangled mass, far too thick to beat. In these crops a fair number of quails lie during the day, but in the evening they quit their impregnable refuges and wander about among the scanty tamarisk, where they can be readily flushed. I used to take advantage of this habit; and walking through the tamarisk at the edge of the bean fields, accompanied by a spaniel, would generally pick up a brace or two just at sunset.

Quails are great wanderers and can fly immense distances without resting. In December 1899, when I was going out to Ceylon in the P. and O. Rome, a grey quail came on board in the Indian Ocean. We were then over 600 miles from the nearest land. The bird ran about for a short time on the deck, and then flew off again, it did not appear at all exhausted.

It is sad to see the immense numbers of quails which are netted in Egypt for the London market.

Last April, I came home by a Prince Line steamer, which was carrying 78,000 live quails. Such wholesale destruction in the breeding season is certain eventually to greatly reduce the world's stock of these excellent little game birds. Considerable numbers of quails used at one time to visit the British Isles, the fact that nowadays they are rarely met with leads one to suppose that the persistent harrying C. coturnix have met with on the shores of the Mediterranean, has already resulted in making them far less plentiful than they were forty or fifty years ago. It is certainly high time that the Egyptian Government should take steps to protect grey quail before it becomes too late.

FLEUR DE LYS.

THE RAIN QUAIL.

THE Black Breasted or Rain Quail (Coturnix coromandelica) is always associated in the minds of Indian sportsmen with the monsoon. These quail for the greater part of the year affect low damp districts where the vegetation is rank. Here they are safe amid the luxuriant grasses.

When however, the rains set in, their low-lying homes become too wet to stay in, and so they migrate for a time to higher and drier regions.

Thus when the dried up plains of Upper India have become clothed with a carpet of fresh grass, the low twit-twit of the Rain Quail is heard in all directions.

The cock bird of this species is very distinctive in colouring. The breast is black, while the throat is white with a V-shaped black collar.

The hen has none of the black markings, and looks very like a small grey quail. It is, however, lighter coloured at the sides, especially on the shoulders, where the grey quail shows darker markings. The primaries in Coromandelica are unspotted brown, while those of Coturnix are barred. Rain are decidedly smaller than grey quail, I should say they would average half an ounce less—grey quail in the WILD STATE often weigh only 4 ounces: 4 ounces is a good bird.

As illustrative of the kind of ground C. coromandelica are found in, I will relate my experiences at Agra during the monsoon of 1902.

One evening at the end of July a friend informed me that when coming back from polo he had put up two or three quail close to the cemetery.

The Agra polo ground is on that side of the parade ground furthest from the station, and the little tree-filled cemetery, enclosed by a brick-wall, stands hard by, like an island in the open plain.

Until the rains came the parade ground had been extremely dry, but at the time I speak of was quite green, while just behind the polo ground and cemetery large patches of thick weed had sprung up to a height of nearly two feet. The day after I heard about the quail, I went to the polo ground, and walked backwards and forwards through the patches of weed getting thirteen brace.

For a week I paid a daily visit to these weed clumps, bagging altogether sixty-five brace.

The extent of ground was very small, so that at each visit I used to shoot or drive away all the quail; nevertheless the following day there would always be more.

CALCUTTA.

The Rifle Range at Agra was covered with grass in the monsoon, and I used to get Rain Quail there too. There was a similar grassy range outside Delhi; that too was a sure find for quail in the rains.

Although as I have pointed out one does not OFTEN see Rain Quail except in wet weather, yet I find several instances in my notes of having seen and shot these birds in the dry season, and that too in Upper India. For instance I saw several Rain Quail, and shot two in a gram field between Agra and Jagner on the 16th February 1902. Again on the 13th March 1901 I shot two Rain Quail at Jataoli in the Delhi district. Black Breasted Quail are nearly always found in pairs; they fly very like Grey Quail, and are decidedly easy shooting.

There is a very pretty Painted Quail (Excalfactoria, chinensis) which is found in India in suitable localities. I have, however, only met with them in Ceylon, and that near Lake Kanthalai where they were moderately plentiful. They go in pairs, but otherwise are very similar to Button Quail in their habits, rising the first time without any very great persuasion, but after that being almost impossible to flush again.

The cock has a black patch on the throat in the centre of a white frontlet. The breast and shoulders in front of the wings are smoke-blue: there is a chestnut patch on the front of the belly. The top of the head is brown; the wings and back show the ordinary quail like mottling of brown and black. The hen is something like a grey quail in colouring but has some light chestnut at the side of the head.

These Painted Quail are extremely tiny.

Round Lake Kanthalai there are damp grassy glades, where one occasionally puts up these little quail. Sometimes too they may be seen scuttling along the footpaths.

The Big and Little Button Quails (Turnix dussumieri and T. Sykesii) are familiar Indian forms. Both kinds are found singly. After having been put up once, they sit so close as to be almost impossible to flush a second time. The larger Button Quail is rust coloured underneath, while T. Sykesii is white. These latter birds wander during the monsoon, and I have shot them several times when beating for Rain Quail.

The Story Teller.

FENELLA

It was that wretched brute, Fenella, who made all the mischief. Not that, with or without the mare, there was likely to be any love lost between the two women. We all knew as much when, on her first day with the Slippington, Mrs. Algy Travers, in that fast spin from Hawley to Shadhall, proved conclusively to the whole field, with the exception, perhaps, of Lady Ferdy Fullerton herself, that henceforth in the hunting field her ladyship must take a back seat. Now Lady Ferdy, who had bossed the Slippington for more years than she cared to remember, was not likely to play second fiddle to an insignificant little stranger. For a time, thanks to Mrs. Algy's unobtrusive ways, and Lady Ferdy's obstinate blindness to what was as plain as the nose on her face, no collision occurred. And then, as ill-luck would have it, my lady bought Fenella, a handsome thoroughbred black mare, with a wonderful turn of speed, and splendid jumping powers, yet cursed with a temper, which her mistress for one was quite unable to subdue. After a series of tussles, in which it was certainly not Fenella who suffered, Lady Ferdy decided she was unmanagable, and sent her up to Tattersall's, where Mrs. Algy picked her up for an old song, and brought her back to the country, rode her the very next day in a snaffle bridle, and cut down the whole field on her in the best run of the season. The fat was in the fire now and no mistake.

"Whatever made you buy the mare?" I took the liberty, as an old friend, of asking Mrs. Algy, as that afternoon we rode soberly home together. "It was a fatal mistake."

"A mistake?" She looked up at me in her demure way. I never could make out whether that simplicity of Mrs. Algy's was put on or not. "Why? I wanted a good hunter cheap, and I've got it."

"You'll pay dearly enough before you've finished," I retorted, "in more than in money, too. Lady Ferdy will never forgive you, and shes not an enemy to be despised."

"Why, what can she do?"

"My dear lady! what can't a vindictive, unscruplous woman do?" said I. "What form her revenge may take neither you, nor I, nor any one else can tell. All I do know is that somehow she'll do you a bad turn. And so, if you have a weak spot anywhere, look out, that's all.'

Little did I realise how soon my warning would be verified. I guessed, when the very next day Lady Ferdy dropped behind with Algy on her way home, how it would be. And so it was. Poor Algy! He was a good creature, kindly, well-intentioned, easy-going, a keen sportsman, not a scrap of harm in him, but as weak as water in the hands of the clever, fascinating she-devil who took possession of him and coolly played upon his vanity and weakness as a skilled musician plays upon an instrument. Mrs. Algy was a nice little woman, a quiet little slip of a creature, pretty, too, in a colourless childish, big-eyed way, but for looks, fascination, that knowledge of a man's weak points which makes a bad woman's power so unlimited, she wasn't to be named in the same day with her rival. Within a month Algy's infatuation for Lady Ferdy was the talk of the place. He hung about her in the hunting field, until no other man ever came near her; the pair would lose hounds, field, fox, everything, but never one another. They would appear at the meet together, and ride home together. On non-hunting days it was in Lady Ferdy's boudoir that the great gaby would sit drinking tea and making speeches which should have been addressed to his wife. Every one agreed that it was shameful, and a disgrace to the place. Something ought to be done? Yet what? The usual course in such a case presented insuperable difficulties. How could one cut the great lady of the place, the arbiter of fashion, the judge on all social questions, from whose decision there was no appeal? Lady Ferdy must do as she pleased, as indeed she always had done.

But Mrs. Travers! Mrs. Travers, it was generally felt, was in some way responsible for the scandal. Why did she tamely submit to such treatment? She ought to look after her husband, assert herself. Whatever the reason of her acquiescence in the present state of things—whether she were too blind and dull to see, or too proud to claim what was hers by right, or too indifferent to it to take any pains to keep it—no one knew; yet all were certain that whatever her point of view it was a false and most mischievous one. For my part all my sympathies were with the poor little woman. I had come upon her once unawares, and I knew, if no one else did, how deeply she felt her husband's behaviour. Oh! I had no patience with the envious spiteful fools who said that she had thrown her husband into Lady Ferdy's arms by her neglect and indifference, simply because she had the pluck and sense to keep her domestic difficulties to herself, and was too sensible and right-minded to spoil Algy by pandering to his weaknesses. As for that goose, Algy, I had no patience either with him and his folly in chucking away realities to pursue a sham. What was so exasperating, too, was the aggrieved tone he began to adopt in speaking of his wife. "Ella is too clever for the likes of me," he said one day: "Give her her books, her music, her horse, and her husband may go hang for all she cares." A wicked and unjustifiable falsehood, for if ever a woman slaved herself to death to run her house on twopence ha'penny a year, and denied herself for the benefit of a lazy, luxury-loving husband, it was Mrs. Travers. Much as I should have liked to give him a piece of my mind, I forebore. After all one wanted to befriend the poor little woman, and to quarrel with her husband was hardly the way to set about it.

And so things went on until that day when the Slippington met on Windlesham Hill. Mrs. Algy was riding Fenella, as I was sorry to see, for although vastly improved in manners, the mare was not, and never would be, a safe mount for a lady. Were I a married man—which, thank Heaven, I'm not—no power on earth should induce me to mount any wife of mine on so uncertain a brute. When she chose, no better hunter than Fenella in the United Kingdom could be found, but then even with Mrs. Algy she didn't always choose. Consummate horse-woman as that little lady was, she couldn't insure the mare against delays, noises, and other trifles calculated to upset an irritable equine temper. For instance, it was by no fault of Mrs. Algy that Lady Ferdy, who of all people should have known better, elected to send the long thong of her hunting crop whirling through the air just as she cantered past Fenella. It was by no fault of Mrs. Algy either that they drew Windlesham Gorse and Padbury blank, and when they found in Brayscombe Thicket ran up and down and round that wearisome covert until, when at last a fox did go away, everybody was taken by surprise, and a fine pushing and hustling to make up lost ground ensued. It was a case of every one for himself, and the devil take the hindmost with a vengeance. All the same, allowing for some pardonable hurry and confusion, I maintain that it was by no accident, but of deliberate malice that, just as Mrs. Algy was steadying Fenella at the first fence, an ordinary wattle affair with a ditch on the far side, up came Lady Ferdy with a rush and jumped sideways right across and almost into her. My lady declared that she couldn't help herself, that old Squaretoes took the bit in his mouth and then tried to refuse—an infamous libel on as gallant and faithful a hunter as ever looked through a bridle. Nonsense! she did it on purpose. I thought so, so did Algy later, and so did his wife. I knew it, although they never said so in so many words. At all events, intentional or not, the results of Lady Ferdy's act were equally disastrous. Fenella swerved, took off wildly, landed with a flounder on her knees just saved a fall, thanks to her rider's masterly inactivity, then chucked up her head and was off, bolting across a big grass meadow towards a hedge with a fifteen feet drop into a narrow lane. Up came Algy like a maniac.

"Stop her, stop her," he cried, hoarsely, his face as white as a sheet. "Get on, man. Cut her off at the corner," which was absurd, because, in the first place, we were too far away to do anything, and in the second, if we wanted to deprive Fenella of any chance of regaining her self-control, the way to do it was to gallop after her. However, at such a distance, we could neither make nor mar, and so, when Algy started off, I followed more soberly, with half a dozen others. What became of the hounds we neither knew nor cared. I found afterwards that we had missed a first-rate thirty minutes, ending with a kill in the open. No matter. All we saw was that fatal hedge towards which the runaway seemed to be literally flying. "She'll be killed," some one said. "She may be able to guide the mare even if she can't stop her," muttered another. False hope! She never even attempted, so far as one could see, to turn the brute, but just sat back. Indeed, if she did anything, she sent the mare along rather faster than ever. What was she thinking of? Had she forgotten? . . We held our breath as nearer and nearer came the pair. . . A flash. . . They were gone.

Oh! that interminable meadow! The age it seemed before helter skelter we dashed through a gate and down the lane.

But where were they? Fenella and her rider had vanished. No sign of a catastrophe, not even a hoof-mark.

A shout from above. Algy's head appeared between the boughs of a hawthorn. "This way," he called. "Mare flew the whole blessed thing, hedge, lane, and all."

So she had, landing her rider in the plough beyond on her head and pitching forward on her shoulder. A few minutes later we found Mrs. Algy sitting on the ground and telling us in a shaky voice that she was perfectly safe, and that she hoped no one would lose the run on her account. All the same, she was not quite unhurt, for to say nothing of being a mass of bruises and so stiff that she could hardly get up, she had sprained one of the muscles of her shoulder. Little as she made of it, she must have been in agony all through the ride home. Algy, for once, had the wit not to take her at her word, and insist on seeing her safely home, for which act of common humanity he got into fine hot water. "You are not going home now," I heard Lady Ferdy say, "now, when the day has hardly begun."

"I must," he answered, "I can't leave Ella."

"Why not? Mrs. Travers is perfectly well. She told me so herself, not five minutes ago. Besides," with a laugh, "she has always Major Pattenden. Believe me, she doesn't want you, and I do. Don't desert me."

It was no use. For once Lady Ferdy asked too much Algy stood firm. In this way was begun a breach, which widened from day to day, and culminated not long after in total estrangement. How it quite came about I never knew. His eyes may have been opened by some display of temper, or his better feelings after the shock of his wife's accident may have gained the day, or Lady Ferdy may have tired of her plaything and dropped it. At all events the breach was made and was final. Algy avoided her like the plague in the hunting field and devoted himself to his wife, who was kept on the sofa for a month by the injury to her shoulder, with an assiduity as novel as it was praiseworthy. His anxiety about her—and he was not anxious without cause—revived all the old affection.

"Ella doesn't improve," he confided to me one day, with a face as long as his arm. "I'm at my wits' end to know what to do with her. That old fool Barnes preaches patience, says it's a question of time, rest, quiet, all the rest of it. Hang it all! There must be a limit to that sort of thing. She's been on the sofa for a month! If one could only see the smallest sign of improvement?"

Who would have guessed, to hear the man fuss over his wife, that only a month ago his neglect of her and attention to another woman had been a byword? But, then, Algy was made that way! If it were not one petticoat, it was another.

"I think there is an improvement——" I began encouragingly.

"Not a bit," he interrupted. Then, "I've been an awful fool, Pattenden," he burst out abruptly, "I'd give ten years of my life to have this last winter over again. I must have been bewitched, because, you know, I really did care for Ella all the time. I always have cared. Yet somehow I got playing the ass, went further than I intended, and have done for myself hopelessly for ever 'with my wife.'"

"Isn't that putting it rather strong!" I said, for although penitence and self-abasement were all very well, it would never do for him in a fit of despair to look for consolation away from his wife. "Mrs. Travers hasn't been so hard upon you so far that you should despair of her forgiveness."

"I know, I know," He shook his head. "Ella is a woman in a thousand. No other would have stood what she has done, but there's a limit to her endurance, and she'll draw the line at those letters of mine."

"What letters?"

"Why, I was ass enough to commit myself on paper with Lady Ferdy, and that she-cat out of sheer spite has sent the correspondence to my wife. She swore she would, and so she has. I saw the packet when it came this morning. That settles it. Oh! Lord! I'm the most wretched devil in creation! I wish I were dead! What am I to do?"

In this strain he raved for an hour at least. What then was my surprise after this exhibition of despair when early the next morning he burst in upon me radiant.

"It's all right," he cried exultantly. "Imagine what happened. By Jove! I don't pretend to understand my wife. All I know is, she's a wonder. When I sneaked home last night there she was on the sofa with the packet on a table beside her.

"'These belong to you, I fancy,' she said quite coolly, taking the letters up. 'They have been sent to me by mistake.'

"'You haven't read them?' I gasped.

"She smiled. 'M dear boy,' she said. 'Am I in the habit of reading other people's correspondence.'

"'Don't you want to read them?' I went on.

"She shook her head. 'Not in the least. My own letters are quite enough for me.'

"You might have knocked me down with a feather. All the same, I felt she ought to know, and I tried. I wanted to tell her, but she wouldn't have it. And so those blessed letters have gone into the fire and we start afresh."

I was marvelling at the luck some men have, when, "Rum things, women," Algy observed thoughtfully. "Ella's a brick. I shan't forget the splendid way she's treated me: yet candidly, Pattenden do you think any woman who really cared would have behaved so?"

It was the very question I was asking myself at that moment—a question which, from that day to this, I have never succeeded in answering.

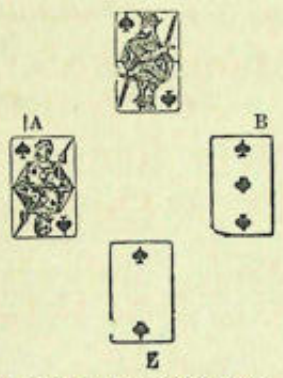
Solution to Problem No. 60.

Z cannot afford to put himself in with the ace of spades, and finesse the knave of diamonds, because if the finesse failed, and dummy had to keep the queen of spades guarded, his hand would be hopelessly cut up in discarding to clubs. Y must lead the ace and king of diamonds, therefore, on the chance of dropping the queen. If the queen falls on the second round the suit is established, and Y Z have a chance of going game. If the queen does not fall, a third round must be played if it clears the suit, and they will make the odd trick unless A led from seven clubs. Should either opponent hold queen, 10 only in diamonds, Z can put himself in with the 9 and finesse hearts without parting with the ace of spades.

Problem No. 61.



Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 0. Z deals, and declares diamonds. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's hand (dummy): Hearts, A 6 3; diamonds, K 3 2; clubs, 10 5; spades, A K 8 5 4.

Z's hand (dealer); Hearts, none; diamonds, A Q J 10 5 4; clubs, K 8 7 4; spades, 7 6 2.

MOTOR MEMS FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

LONDON, Friday, 24th April 1908.

MOTORING is in full swing. April showers have been so infrequent that motorists who had their cars ready at the end of March have been swarming into the country-side during the last two weeks, and in spite of the Arctic Easter we have gone through, cars on the roads have been ambling in all directions. Each year we advance a stage towards the revival of the romance which surrounded the roads in the days of the old stage coach. The old-fashioned inns are again assuming an air of geniality and marked prosperity, and the innkeepers are studying the wants and requirements of the customers who come from distant cities unannounced, but, nevertheless, exceedingly welcome.

While the cult of motoring grows apace there is still, unfortunately, a tendency on the part of some reckless chauffeurs to pay no heed to the rights and privileges of and do not extend the common courtesies of the roads to, other users. Some, indeed, appear to delight in swooping down upon pedestrians or cyclists for the mere satisfaction of causing alarm, and find amusement in the peculiar antics of the person or cyclist who has thus unnecessarily and unwarrantably been startled when pursuing his course in a proper and sportsmanlike manner. The "road hog" in his car and his fellow pest the "road louse" on his motorbike will probably never become extinct; the proper way to deal with them would be buck shot and bludgeons. You are more fortunate in India I see, judging from the incident in Fort William where a sentry shot a nasty arrogant young motorist not long ago. There are many things you manage better in India than we do here.

On Saturday the Brooklands Automobile Racing Club opened its second season on the track at Weybridge, and was favoured with the "Brooklands weather," which is becoming a proverb among motorists. Some three thousand spectators were present, and the sport was good. Moreover, the executive has now laid itself out to consult the comfort of all visitors.

The programme was very compact, and there was no delay. A good deal of interest was also added by the presence of an official bookmaker. He told me that he did plenty of business, but was considerably "down" on the day, as the public are beginning to "spot" the winners. I append the ante-post betting for to-day's meeting.

The first race of the standard classes was the third event on the card—the 26-h.p.—and was won by Newton from Browning on another Napier by a bare length, after a good race between them, the time being 64½ miles per hour. The next race, the Brooklands Cup, was the event of the afternoon, as it was a sealed handicap for amateur drivers. The handicap was not so bad that it might not have been worse, but it was only a qualified success in trying to put cars together, and I thought that the scratch car was decidedly overweighted. Eight runners turned out, and Mr. Naider's 35-h.p. Berliot (1,051 yards) won by about fifty yards from Mr. Russell-Miller's 22-h.p. De la Buive (1,844 yards), which led most of the way.

The best race of the day was the third 40-h.p. standard class, in which Cundy, who was going much faster at the finish, was only just beaten on his Napier by half a length by Newton on the Marquis de Mouzilly St. Mars' car of the same make. The Humber and the Iris, which had the bad luck to get some water spilt on its magneto, were well up: but the new model Daimler, with its live-axle, was, unfortunately, not able to start owing to magneto trouble. A little excitement was caused just before the race by Draper being suddenly taken off the marquis's car and "unfrocked," and Newton being put up, owing to a mistake in the instructions given to the clerk of the course. Draper, however, was eligible to drive in the last race, and again scored a bare victory over Mr. Edge for the marquis, with the Iris once more well up.

It is quite a fallacy to assume that motoring is only a rich man's pastime; there are hundreds of men with incomes under £500 a year who manage to run a small car quite comfortably. A small car, if driven by the owner, and carefully looked after, can easily be driven at a cost not exceeding 2½d. per mile, provided always that the car be of good manufacture and is in sound condition. But there is one item which makes motoring very expensive indeed, and presses very hardly upon the man who can only just afford a car, and that is his friends. As soon as one gets a car one's friends seem at once to imagine that it is one's duty to take them on week ends, and really they take it quite as an insult if one does not ask them out occasionally. Naturally one is only too pleased to give one's friends amusement and pleasure, but unfortunately runs of this description generally finish by the owner having to stump up for lunch and possibly tea and dinner. Now this is a most unfair burden for a man who can only just afford a car; it should always be a point of honour for the visitors to insist on paying any expenses incurred on the road. In fact I know several motorists who frankly say to their friends, "I shall be delighted to take you for a run if you don't mind paying for lunch, etc." There is nothing a man hates more than to appear mean, but one must cut one's coat according to one's cloth, and it is better to speak out frankly than to have to sell one's car because one's friends make motoring impossible.

Messrs. Nagant-Hobson, Limited, have just initiated a scheme which, will appeal to every class of motorist. They are placing a new carburettor on the market, and to show their confidence in it they are prepared to fit it to any responsible person's car (guaranteeing a certain fuel consumption) and to forego payment until the purchaser is really satisfied that his petrol consumption is lessened. Messrs. Hobson tell me that in most cases they can reduce petrol consumption by at least 15 per cent., or, on the other hand, if petrol consumption is immaterial, by certain adjustments of the carburettor they will maintain the same consumption as the old carburettor, but effect an increase in horse-power. The carburettor has several novel features in its construction, and is eminently "getatable"; for instance, the jet can be changed in five minutes, thus in town, where maximum power is not desired, the consumption can be kept to a minimum whilst for country touring the other jet can be used, thus giving an increase in horse-power.

Perhaps it's all right to "sow wild oats," Adam did it; it's natural. The sowing of them is mighty easy—easier than any other kind of farming. Any country boy will tell you that. But remember after you have sowed these wild oats you've got to take care of that field in which you planted them all your life. Now, the proper thing to do, and, in fact, what most men do do, is to hoe out, weed out all the wild oats before they sprout and grow. "As you sow, so shall you reap"—and what is a harvest of wild oats worth You can find the value of such a crop by scanning the faces in "the bald head row" at the burlesque theatres.

"Well, my man, and why are you begging?"

"I 'ates to ask yer fer charity, but I'm one of them unfortnit persons wot 'as been ruined by motorin'."

Old Gentleman (who hates motors): Oh, indeed: poor fellow Were you run over?

"No, sir: but yer see before motors became popular I use to 'old 'orses 'eads outside the 'otels."

It was in Honiton that the sailor Earl of Dundonald executed one of his clever strategic feats. He contested Honiton in 1804, and those being the days of open bribery, the electors made no secret of the fact that their votes would go to the highest bidder.

"You need not ask me, my lord, whom I vote for," said one elector; "I always votes for Mister Most!" Cochrane—as he then was—refused to bribe, however, and he was defeated. Resolving to turn his beating to good account, the sailor peer gave £10 to each elector who had voted for him. The disgust of the others, who had sold their votes for only £5, was extreme.

Two years later there was another election at Honiton, and Cochrane put up again. It need hardly be said that he was returned to Parliament by a large majority, the people readily voting for him without making any terms whatever.

After the declaration of the result, however, the voters were mortified to learn that the new member did not intend to give a penny. Threats and pleadings were of no avail; That event cost him twelve hundred pounds, the Honiton but, unfortunately, Cochrane was persuaded to give a dinner. people taking ample revenge. Cochrane never stood for the borough again.

That is a touching story which the Lord Mayor of Manchester has been telling of his predecessor, according to the London Globe. His Lordship was attending a dinner, and the guests had got through the third course. Suddenly the memory of a thing forgotten came into his lordship's mind. "Damn it, gentlemen," he said, "we have not said grace!"

"Why don't you go for a soldier" said a magistrate lately to a prisoner brought before him for begging. "Well, sir," was the answer, "so I would, but I'm afraid he might go or me first."

A story of the school life of Prince Edward of Wales at Osborne College relates that Prince Edward goes through the ordinary routine, and, among other things, has to take his part in fagging. Not very long ago an older cadet gave the young Prince a shilling, and directed him to go to the tuck shop and get some jam puffs. The Prince went on his errand, and brought back the delectable puffs and threepence change. "Keep the threepence boy," said the cadet, in a lordly fashion, and the future ruler of 400,000,000 of people pocketed his tip with an unalloyed joy. In fact, it was so great that he sat down promptly and wrote the details of his great success to his father, the Prince of Wales, who is said to have fully shared his joy.

THE ENGLISH CUP FINAL.

THREE times within the last four years have Newcastle been in the final round of the English Football Cup Competition and on each occasion they have had the coveted trophy wrested from them. In 1905 the Novocastrians were beaten by Aston Villa by two goals to nil. The following year Everton got the better of them by one goal to nothing and now Wolverhampton Wanderers have brought off a three to one win against them. After this latest reverse it is not surprising that people should begin to think that a fatality pursues the team from the Tyne. They ought to have won this time, as they ought to have won before, but victory has gone to the Wolves. Nor is it to be denied that with the majority of the thousands who witnessed the struggle the win was a "popular" one.

Though a little one-sided the crowd of 75,000 which watched the fate of "T'Coop" on the present occasion was nevertheless a very good-natured crowd. Its provincial character was very conspicuous. London has been much more interested in other cup finals, and the Cockney element was not nearly so numerous as on some former occasions. For one thing, the contest itself did not cause excessive excitement; for another, the weather was bad. Sleet and rain may not have great terrors for the football enthusiasts of the provinces. After all the man who will travel all night in a packed excursion train to see a brief encounter whose every detail he can find reported in his evening paper at home, is not easily discomposed when he gets to his journey's end. If the match can be played at all it is enough for him. The Cockney, however, is more wary in his movements. If a London team is engaged he may risk a wetting and a chill, but otherwise he will take cover and trust to the newspapers to tell him all about the big event. So it was in this instance.

The Crystal Palace crowd was essentially a provincial crowd. What you heard were the virile dialects of the Midlands and the Northern Counties. The "burr" of Northumberland gave deep voice to the disappointment caused by the defeat of the Newcastle men, and the roar of enthusiasm with which the victory of the "Wolves" was hailed, had a quality and character all its own. It was not of London manufacture; it was more robust, more intense, more "local" if the expression may be allowed. But, taking a wider survey, one may still describe the success of Wolverhampton as popular. This is not because London is particularly interested in Wolverhampton, but because the "Wolves" has been paraded as an All-English team whereas the Newcastle men are in no small degree taken to represent the blood and brawn of Scotland. It is not everybody who cares for this analytical method of adjusting sporting enthusiasm, but popular sentiment must be taken as one finds it.

On the whole the match was a good one; at some points it was very good. As often happens in the Cup final there were displays of weakness where they were not expected and sudden exhibitions of dash and resource that aroused general enthusiasm. But from first to last there was no "bad blood." The Midland people were overjoyed at a victory which, on all available standards of anticipation, they had no particular reason to expect, and the men from the North were very sore that once more the great prize should have slipped from their grasp at the moment when it ought to have become theirs. Yet the most depressed Novocastrian was enough of a sportsman to acknowledge that the "Wolves" had played a plucky game and that the ecstatic delight of their friends was justified by the result. As for the "fatality" which pursues the Newcastle men at the Crystal Palace, that is another matter—one to be thought over in sombre wonder, and no doubt to be discussed with grave head-shakings in the North.

The third defeat of Newcastle United in the final stage of the premier competition under the "soccer" code is not without parallel for Derby County has met with the same fate. In 1903 the Peakites were successfully opposed by Notts Forest. The following season they were defeated by Sheffield United and in 1905 they were severely thrashed by Bury, who scored a runaway win against them by six goals to nil. Sheffield United have also reached the concluding round thrice in ten years, but "the Blades" have two wins to their credit against one reverse. One of their victories was obtained on the occasion referred to above against Derby County and the other was gained at the expense of Southampton United in 1902 after being beaten in the previous final by Tottenham Hotspur, another Southern combination.

The results of all the matches in the final round of the English Cup since 1898 are as follows :—

1898 : Notts Forest beat Derby County (3 to 1).
1899 : Sheffield United beat Derby County (4 to 1).
1900 : Bury beat Southampton United (4 to 0).
1901 : Tottenham Hotspur beat Sheffield United (3 to 1).
1902 : Sheffield United beat Southampton (2 to 1).
1903 : Bury beat Derby County (6 to 0).
1904 : Manchester City beat Bolton Wanderers (1 to 0).
1905 : Aston Villa beat Newcastle United (2 to 0).
1906 : Everton beat Newcastle United (1 to 0).
1907 : Sheffield Wednesday beat Everton (2 to 1).
1908 : Wolverhampton Wanderers beat Newcastle United (3 to 1).

THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

With the Olympic Games which are this year to be decided in England for the first time in addition to the usual calendar of sporting events, the coming season should prove by far the busiest ever known in British sporting history.

The Olympic Games themselves will naturally dwarf everything else. They are the fourth of a series inaugurated at Athens in 1896 under the auspices of the International Olympic Committee. The President of this Committee, Baron Pierre de Coubertin, started the modern Olympic movement by proposing to an athletic Congress held in Paris in 1894 to revive the Olympic Games of Ancient Greece under conditions suited for the modern world. The games were to be held every four years in some great centre of the civilised world and were to include all forms of sport current in the modern world which have an international character. The games of Athens were followed by the games at Paris in 1900, and those of St. Louis in 1904. The British Olympic Association, which has the control of this year's games, was founded in the summer of 1905 under the Presidency of Lord Desborough to ensure British co-operation with the International Olympic Committee. In the summer of the following year the Association was invited by the I. O. C. to undertake the celebration of the fourth Olympic Games it having been proved impossible as originally proposed to hold them in Rome. The Council of the Association, which is almost entirely composed of representatives appointed by the governing association of Sports in Great Britain, have contracted with the Franco-British Exhibition to erect at Shepherd's Bush on the Exhibition Ground, a magnificent Stadium which, when completed, will be one of the finest sporting arenas in the world.

Some idea of what this great playground will be like when finished may be gathered from the following brief description. In the centre of the arena is a huge grass plot some 235 yards in length and just under 100 yards in width which will be available for every kind of athletic exercise is a cinder running path of three laps to the mile, and outside this again is a cycling track two-and-three-quarter laps of which go to the mile. On the grass plot itself and immediately in front of where the royal boxes will be placed when the structure is finished, is an enormous swimming tank, 327 feet long by 50 feet broad. Over most of the surface of this the water had a depth of only 4 feet 6 inches but a square section in the middle is carried down 14 feet 6 inches deep. This part is intended for high diving competitions and a moveable tower platform is to be provided for the purpose The whole is surrounded by tiers of seats capable of seating nearly twice the whole population of a town like Dover.

On each side of the royal pavilion will be boxes sheltered from the weather, some of which have already been engaged for the whole meeting by parties of enthusiastic foreigners. In the triangular space which runs round the enormous structure beneath the towering tiers of seats dressing-room for every nationality have been fitted out with every convenience an athlete can desire. The games to be celebrated in the Stadium will be divided into two parts ; the main Olympic Games, commencing on 13th July, and the winter games opening on 19th October. It is, of course, the swimming, the gymnastics, and the athletics which will be the main features of the Stadium from 13th July onwards. The Marathon race, however, must neces-arily take place outside for the greater portion of its course, only the finish of the twenty-five miles being visible to the spectators in the great arena This important race will start from Windsor and finish within the bounds of London. Crossing over the Thames at Windsor the athlete will pass Eton College to Slough, then turn towards Langley Park, and so through Uxbridge to Ickenham and Ruislip. Onwards they will run, leaving Pinner to the left and swing round to the right on Harrow keeping Harrow School on the right, so as to make for Budbury, and through Wembly to Willesden. From here the course passes the College Park Hotel and goes by way of Wormwood Scrubbs into Wood Lane, Shepherd's Bush, and thence direct into the Stadium.

Other competitions that will necessarily have to be decided outside the Stadium are the Olympic Regatta at Henley, Rifle and Pistol Shooting at Bisley, Yachting at Cowes, Automobile Racing at Brooklands, Polo at Hurlingham, Golf at Sandwich, Lawn Tennis, Racquets, and Tennis at Queen's Club, and Figure Skating at Princes Club. The full programme that has been arranged includes :—

Running, Walking, Hurdle Racing, Jumping, Throwing the Hammer, Putting the Shot, Tug-of-War, Throwing the Discus, Hurling of the Javelin, Cycling, Archery, Fencing, Gymnastics, Football (both Rugby and Association), Hockey, Lacrosse, Lawn Tennis, Tennis, Racquets, Swimming, Water Polo, Polo, Rowing. Shooting, Boxing, Wrestling, Yacht Racing, Motor Boat Racing, Golf and Skating on artificial ice. The entries from each country in each of the foregoing competitions will be limited in numbers—twelve will be allowed for most of the athletic events and they will be made by the Association governing sports in each country. All will be strictly limited to amateurs, defined as follows :—

"An amateur is one who has never competed for a money prize, declared wager, or staked bet : who has never taught, pursued, or assisted in any athletic exercise, as a means of pecuniary gain and who has not, knowingly, or without protest, taken part in any competition or exhibition with anyone who is not an amateur." While the coveted prizes of the ancient games were crowns of olives and branches of palms, in the modern equivalent medals of gold, silver and bronze will be awarded together with certificates, besides a special Challenge Cup which will be held by the winners until the next game in 1912.

"Yes," said the old man, addressing his visitor, "I am proud of my girls, and should like to see them all comfortably married ; and as I've made a little money, they won't go to their husbands penniless. There's Margaret, twenty-five years old, and a real good girl. I shall give her £1,000 when she marries. Then comes Bet, who won't see thirty-five again, and she'll have £2,000 ; and the man who takes Dora, who is forty, will have £3,000 with her."

The young man reflected a moment or so, and then nervously inquired, "You haven't one about fifty, have you?"

Husband (arriving with his wife at the station just as the train steamed out) : "There! If you hadn't taken such a fearful time dressing we shouldn't have lost that train."

Wife : "And if you hadn't hurried me so all the way here we shouldn't have such a long time to wait for the next one."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The announcement of the advance programme for the Tollygunge Gymkhana on 13th June seems to bring racing very near again and except for the month of October, we shall have meetings now of one sort or another pretty continuously till the middle of next March. There will probably be four Gymkhanas, 13th June, 27th June, 11th July and 25th July, respectively, and with Messrs. Turner and Macpherson back again to take an interest as well as Mr. Stokes, who made such a success of them last season, they are likely to go off better than ever.

Only four events are announced so far, but the executive would like to frame a pony race to suit owners if the latter will let them know what they want. At that time of year a 3-furlong W. I. Scurry for ponies that have never started for a race value more than Rs. 50 would probably be most successful.

By the way the terms of the four races already down were not correctly printed in the papers as regards the weights which should be as follows:—Open Maiden Race 10st., Closed Maiden Race 10st. 7lb., Hack Stakes (Horses that have not won Rs. 45) 11st., Jiu Jitsu Stakes—Any weights. It is to be hoped that there will be a very large entry for this last so that it can be run off in heats the day before.

In reading the conditions of the race the accent should be placed on the word bona fide. It is to be a thoroughly sporting affair for any old hack that is available and coming racehorses that happen to comply with the condition that they have never been raced before will be very much out of place. The open event is likely to bring out a good field of very fair quality as we hear that Smallman, Piper and Galstaun have each got two or three eligible animals that are likely to be entered and on the whole the prospects for the meeting are first rate.

Our friends up the hill are also going to have a very good time this May week. They say that there are an unusual number of animals in training and the competition for the big race, the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup, is going to be very keen. Messrs. Price, Oakley, and Shillingford have all got their stables full of likely starters and Mr. Galstaun has hopes of getting there or thereabouts with Miss Beryl. This mare was sent up for the meet last Poojahs, but broke down and was unable to start and if all right she should do very well.

We are pleased to note that the Turf Club have raised the amounts of place money in the coming Monsoon season, especially in the amateur races as that extra hundred dibs will come in uncommonly useful, to the G.R., who likes his fun, but cannot afford to pay too much for it and Rs. 300 for being second will pay six months keep, which is quite a consideration. Third money is now Rs. 200 instead of Rs. 100 as formerly. A win is still Rs. 500, but of Rs. 100 as formerly. A win is still Rs. 500.

The Darjeeling Races fixed for the 19th instant had to be postponed owing to the inclemency of the weather. Should it be fine the meeting will be held this afternoon when the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup will be run for.

The Bengal-Nagpur Railway will shortly put into traffic some new and greatly improved horse boxes which will undoubtedly be greatly appreciated by many owners of horses in India. These horse boxes have been designed by Mr. A. S. Bailey, Chief Mechanical Engineer of the B.-N. R., and built in the Khargpur Workshops. The bodies are 24ft. 8in. long and provide accommodation for six horses, syces, fodder and harness. Particular attention has been paid to ventilation and in addition to the usual side and end ventilation the centre partitions have been made with louvres at the top and open space at the bottom so that a through current of air is continually obtained and no vitiated air is possible to remain in the vehicle. The sides have also special ventilation by means of hoods. The roofs which are of the double type have been lined with asbestos material which materially reduces the temperature of these vehicles, a point which has been considered in view of the long journeys which have to be undertaken between the East and West of India. The next point of vital importance is that of the mangers and in this respect special attention has been given by lining the troughs with zinc as well as all the parts accessible to the horse's nostrils which makes this important part of a horse box highly hygeinic. These vehicles have been fitted with stamping slats on the floor so as to prevent horses slipping when the vehicles are being shunted. A part of the roof over the manger has been padded as well as the dividing partitions, breast bars and ends so that each horse gets a well padded receptacle to itself. The syce's compartment has been fitted up in a similar manner to a 3rd class compartment and receptacles for carrying fodder and harness are also provided in this compartment.

The sporting portion of Shillong are now anxiously awaiting the May Meet. The race-course is very wet and it is to be hoped that there will be a spell of dry weather for a few days before the 26th. The following "likely starters" are at present in Shillong:—Mr. C. H. Holder's Glenlea, Topsy III and Repute, Mrs. Ward's Circus Boy and Nautch Girl, Mr. Allen's Ivy, Mr. Forbes' Venetia, Mr. Rankin's Ladybird, Mr. P. L. Faulkner's Shepherdess and Eileen Alannah, Mr. Bonham Carter's Rags and Stockdale, and Mr. Lynch's One and Only. Messrs. Kellner & Co. are giving a handsome cup, value Rs. 250, for the Polo Race, and this is sure to be a popular event. With Mr. "Charley" Holder as Honorary Secretary and Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker as handicapper, the races can but be a huge success. During the week there will be two dances, a polo tournament and a lawn-tennis tournament, so all sections of the fraternity racing and non-racing, will be well catered for.

This tale comes from New York. A great prelate—which of them it was does not matter—went down to Wall Street, and addressed the Bulls and Bears there, giving them a little straight talk. "Gentlemen," he said, "Hell is full of the things you like—of cocktails, and motor-cars, and of chorus-girls." A quiet voice came from the crowd: "Oh, Death, where is thy sting?"

The first gymkhana of the Naini Tal season was held on the 9th instant, and was an unqualified success. Major Robertson's arrangements were perfect, there was a big attendance, the Band of the Royals played during the intervals and a most enjoyable programme was discussed. Tent Pegging with Swords was the first event and was won by Major the Hon'ble Hamilton Russell. The Aunt Sally Stakes brought out nine couples, Captain and Mrs. Barlow winning in good style. A race for Gurkhas was followed by the Potato and Bucket race and here again Major Hamilton Russell was successful, ten competing. Mrs. Ley won the Reconnaisance Stakes for ladies and in the next event with Colonel Skinner she was first in with the correct answers in the School Board Stakes. The drawing for prizes by the lucky winners brought an enjoyable afternoon to a close.

The following are results of important cricket matches played at home during the past week:—

Lancashire beat Somerset at Bath by an innings and one run.

Yorkshire beat M.C.C. at Lords by an innings and ten runs.

Leicester beat Warwickshire, at Leicester, by 173 runs.

Surrey beat Derbyshire, at the Oval, by ten wickets.

Yorkshire beat Cambridge University by an innings and 133 runs.

Lancashire beat Northamptonshire by an innings and 92 runs.

Sussex beat Derbyshire by 4 wickets.

Yorkshire beat Kent by 9 wickets.

The M.C.C. beat Hampshire by 9 wickets.

The following matches were drawn:—Warwickshire vs. Sussex; Essex vs. Leicestershire; Surrey vs. Gloucestershire, Northamptonshire vs. Notts; M.C.C. vs. Kent; and Lancashire vs. Oxford University.

Lieutenant W. F. O. Faviell, of the Worcester Regiment, who established a reputation as a fine all-round cricketer while stationed in Ceylon and played in Madras on more than one occasion, has been included in the Essex County eleven.

The new Boat House of the Calcutta Rowing Club, on the Alipore Beat Canal, is at length complete, the boats are installed, the place is easy of access and it is to be hoped that the club will once more enjoy that popularity to which it attained a few years ago. The committee have advertised next Saturday as the opening day of their season, members are requested to roll up in force and bring their friends along—refreshments provided free!

We would draw the attention of sportsmen and naturalists in South India to the advertisement appearing further on setting forth a number of Southern India animals wanted by the Calcutta Zoological Garden.

It is with regret we hear that Dr. Nield Cook, late Health Officer of Calcutta and now Civil Surgeon at Cooch Behar, has had a paralytic stroke. The whole of the right side of his body is affected and his condition is regarded as grave. We wish him a speedy recovery.

We see by our English exchanges that there was at the beginning of this month a decided improvement in the condition of Abel, the cricketer, whose critical condition we noted a short while ago.

Our London sporting letter gives details of the fight for the Championship of Ireland between Squires and Roche. The latter, who it will be remembered made such a poor display against Burns on St. Patrick's night, was knocked out in the fourth round after looking a winner all over. The old story—overweening confidence.

Father Blind is a good example of the "horses for courses" theory: he won the great Metropolitan Stakes (as already advised by wire) for the second year, writes our London Correspondent. His chances were not fancied—he started at tens, but he won easily as set forth in our London sporting letter.

Dean Swift, by winning the City and Suburban for the second time, has a remarkable Epsom record. My special cable of the 29th ultimo amounced his victory, and further details are given in the English turf notes to-day. Doubtless the horse has an extraordinary liking for the Epsom track; there he is quite "a horse and a half" and on it he has always exhibited his best form.

Dean Swift was a shelly, light-fleshed gelding that would have broken the hearts, not to mention the pockets, of any owner less wealthy and stoical than Mr. J. B. Joel, but that millionaire owner hung on tightly, and after a long struggle Morton managed to coax muscle on to the weak frame until he achieved the first of his victories in "big" races in the City of 1906. Over that victory, Mr. Joel was credited with having won £35,000, a sum that was probably equalled to-day.

A London Sporting Correspondent writes:—"Humour is so scarce on the Turf that Mr. 'Bobbie' Verrall's delicious story of the inexperienced jockey at the recent Household Brigade Steeplechases cannot be left to the obscurity of the dinner-table. With Newmarket snowed out on the eve of May, something much less capable than this of raising a laugh would be welcome. Mr. Verrall, as Clerk of the Scales, was weighing out the riders for a particular race, and among them was a gallant young officer who dropped nonchalantly into the 'chair' with nothing but his personal equipment of breeches, boots, and jacket. Mr. Verrall waited a few moments in the expectation that a servant was coming with the saddle, but nobody appeared. 'Where is your saddle, sir?' he asked the officer. 'On the horse, of course,' was the astonishing reply; 'never mind the saddle—just weigh me out quickly.' Mr. Verall could not repress an inward chuckle at this airy indifference to rule, but with due official gravity he pointed out the irregularity of such a proceeding and said the saddle must go into the scale with the rider. Again the young officer protested, remarking on the trouble of unsaddling the horse; 'and, my dear fellow,' he concluded, 'I give you my word I'm over-weight without the beastly saddle.' So he was, to such an extent that when this part of his equipment was ultimately brought in he had to declare a big 'extra.' Somebody else won the race."

One English exchanges received by last Sunday's mail tell of a continuance of the terrible weather we noticed in our issue of last week. Many sporting fixtures had to be postponed, abandoned or curtailed, and where they were carried out, the participants battled against snow, hail and mud. It has to be bad weather indeed for racing to be interfered with at headquarters, so we may take it that the curtailment of the second day's programme of the Newmarket Craven Meeting and the abandonment of the card for the third and fourth day testified to something really phenomenal. Racing was rendered absolutely impossible.

The final tie for the English Cup at the Crystal Palace between the Wolverhampton Wanderers and Newcastle United was played in shocking weather and on a veritable jheel. The Marathon Trial race was quite spoiled.

This stirring athletic contest was decided over twenty-three miles of the Windsor to London course (the final course will be twenty-six miles) and once again British pluck and endurance triumphed over conditions which might well make the stoutest heart quail. With roads ankle deep in cold slush, heavy rain, hail, and snow showers alternating with the coldest of cold winds, our athletes had indeed a hard task set them. Yet they came out with flying colours, and Britishers the world over will be delighted to find that our claim as the pioneers of distance running to be regarded as top dogs in that division of sport is in a good way to being upheld.

This trial performance was remarkable: in spite of all obstacles the leaders pursued their way at a rate which took them inside the world's record for the track before the journey was completed, and in this case there is no question whatever as to the distance traversed, as it was accurately measured by two different authorities and they agreed almost to a yard. What time would have been recorded on a dry and pleasant day we cannot tell, but judging from the effect of heavy weather on cross-country running there must be many minutes lost on a twenty mile journey. Then there can be no doubt as to the prejudical effect of the going upon the more fragile build of athlete, who might under other circumstances have made the leaders move all the way. Nevertheless, enough has been shown to suggest that when July arrives we shall probably beat the world at distance running. Details of the race are given in our resume of English sport further on.

The first provisional eight got together with a view to obtaining a crew to represent England in the Olympic Regatta next July entered upon regular practice on the Thames at Putney at the end of last month. The eight, which is under the direction of Mr. R. S. Bradshaw of the London Rowing Club, was made up as follows:—

Bow. H. A. Steward.
2. H. M. Goldsmith (Cambridge).
3. J. B. K. Fenning (London).
4. Guy Nickalls (Oxford).
5. C. D. Burnell (Oxford).
6. J. S. Burn (Cambridge).
7. F. J. Escombe (Cambridge).
Stroke, R. B. Etherington-Smith (Cambridge).

As far as past performances go, the combination is a formidable one for the most part, although some people might object to one or two of the candidates as being past their rowing prime.

R. B. Etherington-Smith is stroke, a position which he fulfilled in admirable manner for Leander when Pennsylvania University, U.S.A., sent a fine crew to Henley Regatta a few years ago to try to win the Grand Challenge Cup, although with his weight, he is generally looked upon as a better man in the middle of an eight.

F. J. Escombe got his blue in 1902 and has rowed in sundry Leander Grand Challenge Cup crews even up to last year.

J. S. Burn rowed No. 5 in this year's Cambridge boat, and should be almost booked a certainty as he is such a hard worker, but C. D. Burnell, although he rowed in four winning Oxford crews (1895-6-7-8) was supposed to have retired after a very successful career. Should he, however, get into form again he cannot be lightly passed over.

Guy Nickalls appears to suffer no ill effects from a broken arm sustained last summer, and as he is always in form seems a certainty in a season which cannot be claimed to be more than an average one.

J. R. K. Fenning is vice-captain of the London Rowing Club and is a useful oarsman, although he might not succeed in being selected, but H. M. Goldsmith has proved himself a reliable man and will doubtless obtain an extended trial. Bow is rather a surprise, although he may only be rowing temporarily. H. A. Steward is an old Radley boy and rowed bow in the Leander eight that won the Grand Challenge Cup in 1898.

Some light has been thrown upon the extraordinary age to which dogs will attain when well cared for by the recent experience of a Ross-shire gardener. Mr. Sinclair, gardener at Ardullie Lodge, was the possessor of a Scotch terrier bitch, which died recently at the attested age of 25 years and two months. For several years the old lady was practically useless, and stuck close to the house; but in pathetic terms Mr. Sinclair discloses the fact that, as if to prevent a funeral, she left the house as hurriedly as her old bones would permit and passed away without as much as a struggle.

Those who have had the misfortune to have had a tussle with a lion and to have been bitten by one agree that they have to a great extent been paralysed by the bite, and, in fact, have felt little or no pain. Mr. Selous states that it is not nearly so painful to be bitten by a lion as it is to suffer the same thing at the teeth of lesser beasts. The well-known hunter says: "All the first-class evidence I have been able to gather goes to prove that the bite of a lion or tiger is practically painless. I imagine that the reason of this is that the tremendous energy exerted by a lion in biting is equivalent to a heavy blow—which produces such a shock to the nervous system that all sensation is for the time being deadened, as it would be by a heavy blow from a sledge-hammer." The results of the bite are, however, quite a different matter, as the teeth of a lion or tiger are poisonous and inflammation is set up which is often fatal and in the best conditions slow to heal.

Mr. Winston Churchill gives an admirable description of a lion hunt, from his own point of view, in the April number of the Strand Magazine, where he has been relating his adventures in Central Africa. He writes: This is the way in which they hunt lions. First find the lion, lured to a kill, driven from a reed-bed, or kicked up incontinently by the way. Once viewed he must never be lost sight of for a moment. Mounted on ponies of more or less approved fidelity, three or four daring Englishmen or Somalis gallop after him, as in India they ride the pig—that is to say, neck or nothing—across rocks, holes, tussocks, nullahs, through high grass, thorn scrub, undergrowth, turning him, shepherding him,, heading him this way and that until he is brought to bay. For his part the lion is no seeker of quarrels; he is often described in accents of contempt. His object throughout is to save his skin. If, being unarmed, you meet six or seven lions unexpectedly, all you need do—according to my information—is to speak to them sternly and they will slink away, while you throw a few stones at them to hurry them up. All the highest authorities recommended this. But when pursued from place to place, chased hither and thither by the wheeling horsemen, the naturally mild disposition of the lion becomes embittered. First he begins to growl and roar at his enemies, in order to terrify them, and make them leave him in peace. Then he darts little short charges at them. Finally, when every attempt at peaceful persuasion has failed, he pulls up abruptly and offers battle. Once he has done this he will run no more. He means to fight and to fight to the death. He means to charge home ; and when a lion maddened with the agony of a bullet wound, distressed by long and hard pursuit, or, most of all, a lioness in defence of her cubs, is definitely committed to the charge, death is the only possible conclusion. Broken limbs, broken jaws, a body raked from end to end, lungs pierced through and through, entrails torn and protruding—none of these count. It must be death—instant and utter—for the lion, or down goes the man, mauled by sceptic claws and fetid teeth, crushed, and crunched, and poisoned afterwards to make doubly sure. Such are the habits of this cowardly and wicked animal. It is at this stage when the lion has been determinedly "bayed" that the sportsman from London is usually introduced upon the scene. He has, we may imagine, followed the riders as fast as the inequalities of the ground, his own want of training, and the burden of a heavy rifle will allow him. He arrives at the spot where the lion is cornered in much the same manner as the matador enters the arena, the others standing aside deferentially, ready to aid him or divert the lion. If his bullet kills, he is, no doubt, justly proud. If he only wounds, the lion charges the nearest horseman. For forty yards the charge of a lion is swifter than the gallop of a racehorse. The riders, therefore, usually avoid waiting within that distance. But sometimes they do not ; or sometimes the lion sees the man who has shot him ; or sometimes all sorts of things happen which make good stories—afterwards.

After this general description no particular example is required, and the reader need not be disappointed to learn that the lion escaped what, no doubt, would have been his certain destruction by the breaking of a single link in the regular chain of circumstances. He was not found upon the kill. His place was taken by a filthy hyæna, and it was not until we had beaten thoroughly for two hours more than three miles of reed-bed that we saw him—a splendid great yellow cat—bounding away up the opposite hill. Off started our riders like falcons ; but, alas !—if "alas !" is the proper word—a deep and impassable nullah intervened, necessitating large circuits and long delays ; so that the lion got clean away.

The Ranikhet Week begins on the 25th May.

The Mahableshwar Sky Races were abandoned.

A most successful boxing tournament, lasting four nights, has just been concluded at Ranikhet, Captain J. W. Ley, Superintendent of Gymnasia, acted as referee with Lieutenant C. H. Bayley, South Lancashires, and Lieutenant the Hon'ble J. D. Boyle, 2nd Rifle Brigade, as Judges. The following were the results :—Open Middle Weights—Drummer Bailey and Private Cruise, West Riding Regiment. Open Light Weights—Private Molloy, 1st South Lancashires. Open Feather Weights—Private Banks, West Ridings. Boys Competition—Tierney, West Ridings. Middle Weights (closed)—Private Lloyd. Feather-Weights (closed)—Private Boyatt.

The Simla Boxing tournament has been indefinitely postponed.

The Aga Khan Hockey tournament at Bombay ended on Saturday last, in a win for the Pioneer Hockey Club, who beat the Grant Medical College by two goals to one. Details further on.

Was it not the most respected editor of the old Delhi Gazette who wrote the shortest leader on record when he dismissed the Gorman Case in just four words ? If tradition speaks truth he rather startled, but delighted, his readers by summing it up, after weeks of weary reports, in these words—"D—the Gorman Case." I cannot do better than follow his example in respect of our English weather : I am tired of wailing over it, I will dismiss it in three words to-day. D—the weather.

It has been a profoundly dismal week, but one deliciously humorous little incident has been vouchsafed us. Those of us who have lived in India have been much amused this week reading about the descent on London of the "first Buddhist monk." This enterprising beggar who calls himself Bhikku Ananda Metteyya, came over in the Ava from Rangoon : he has a shaven head and expression of gloomy ferocity (if the papers do not libel him) he wears the yellow robe and carries the begging bowl and fan familiar to all who have been in Burma or Ceylon. He has established his kyoung in a villa in the Elm Grove Road, near Barnes Common, and ever since his arrival, six days ago, he has been interviewed, photographed and written up with a wealth of misleading, inaccurate trimmings which, while disclosing abysmal ignorance on the part of the scribes, must have made hundreds of us who know the Buddhist and his ways very merry indeed. The "monk" has explained his system of morals and disclosed his programme which naturally aims at the conversion of the meat-eating, alcohol imbibing Briton into a teetotal vegetarian and the diversion of his religious methods from music and other demonstration to silent comtemplation and a steadfast pursuance of the "eightfold truth." Very praiseworthy to be sure.

Two doors from the Buddhist monk's temple in Elm Grove Road, Barnes, live the ladies who have accompanied him from Burma. One of them is paying the expenses of the monk's visit to England. The lady, Mrs. Hla Oung, the widow of an official of the Indian Financial Service, takes a deep and active interest in Buddhist propaganda. I think I remember the late lamented Mr. Moung Hla Oung in Calcutta, when years ago his rotund little figure, clad in grey tweed knickers his head and trunk resplendant in the prismatic coloured silks beloved of Jack Burman, and his fat cheeroot helping to thicken the atmosphere, was a common object of the Strand at drive time. He used to waddle along in front of his family and bring a momentary smile to the faces of the worn and weary Ditcher eating the air (and dust) before dinner. Wealthy, as the Burmese go, his widow is treasurer of the International Buddhist Society, of which the visiting monk, Bikkhu Ananda Metteyya, is director. She has founded two Buddhist schools in Rangoon. Hearing that the branch society in London promised well, she determined to visit England, with her family, and she asked the monk to accompany the party. This monk's real name, I must not forget to mention, is Allan Bennett Macgregor. Here's where the laugh comes in, does it not Mr. Editor. But there is practically no limit to Scottish enterprise, religious or commercial.

In America "Way Down East" is one of the most popular melodramas in what is known as the stock play list. It is now fifteen years since it was first produced, nevertheless it continues to be one of those entertainments that the public will pay to see there. We have had melodrama after melodrama played here, with the wronged woman for its heroine, just as we found it at the Aldwych Theatre last Thursday evening, but there is just this difference that in the American acting version of much the same story we witnessed a sincere and successful attempt to play as if it was intended to keep closely to real life, and to make the people in it appear like real people. There was no appealing to the gallery about the wrongs of the poor and lowly. Simplicity was the keynote of the whole performance. The farmhouse seemed like a farmhouse, and the people seemed to belong naturally to it. What a difference all this made ! The opening scene outside Squire Bartlett's farm on a summer's evening in New England was charmingly set. The coming there of the unknown girl to seek employment was naturally brought about. It is true we got too much of a glee choir, that would insist on fancying that the audience wanted encores, but the first act fairly took them off for good. Of course, the squire's son fell in love with the unknown girl. Then a gossip with her tale that the girl had been a mother brought about a conflict and the sending of poor Anna out into the snow at night. All, however, ended well. The villain was unmasked, and the old squire himself gave Anna to his son It was all melodrama, but it was simple and sincere I liked it, but I am wondering is there an audience for this in the West End. Miss Phœbe Davis, Mr. Robert A. Fischer, Miss Minnette Barrett, and Mr. Frank Currier did themselves credit. Mr. Charles Burke, as the town constable, proved himself an exceptionally humorous comedian.

Saturday night saw a change in Mr. George Edwardes's policy at the Gaiety—a change sufficiently marked to cause any frequenter of that theatre to wonder at odd moments whether he had come to the right address. For one thing, Mr. Edmund Payne, Miss Connie Ediss, Miss Gertie Millar, and Mr. George Grossmith, jun., have become so much a part and parcel of Mr. Edwardes's productions that one scarcely recognises the Gaiety without them. For another thing, "Havana" introduces in Mr. Leslie Stuart a composer new to the Gaiety. And, after all, there are times when a change is invigorating ; and, with all respect to the talented singers and comedians and composers who were "among the missing" on Saturday night, it must be confessed that "Havana" owes not a little of its charm to the fact that it breaks new ground.

Mr. George Grossmith, jun., and Mr. Graham Hill, who are the authors of the book, have not troubled themselves to be original. They have contented themselves with working on conventional lines, and have provided an excellent foundation for those many delightful ingredients which are so familiar at the Gaiety.

It almost goes without saying that "Havana" is beautifully mounted; but even Mr. George Edwards has beaten his own fine record, for each of the three scenes is a perfect feast for the eyes. While as to the ladies the stage is at times a perfect riot of beauty.

But if one were asked to sum up in a word the most pleasing feature of the production one would unhesitatingly answer "music," Mr. Leslie Stuart has indeed made a triumphant entry at the Gaiety. Grave or gay, sentimental or comic, his work is full of grace and refinement, and he has the rare faculty of introducing real humour into his airs.

Miss Evie Greene in the principal part of Consuelo—a lady of mixed Irish and Cuban birth, whose love affair with Jackson Villiars, a handsome yachtsman, comprises the foundation of a rather involved plot has a fine part well sprinkled with good songs, and her voice, has seldom been heard to better advantage. Mr. Leonard Mackay is a handsome rich-voiced hero, Mr. Lawrence Grossmith gets a good deal of fun out of a conventional part, Miss Jean Alwyn sings and acts with a true sense of comedy, and Miss Kitty Mason, Miss Olive May, and Miss Jessie Broughton are all entirely pleasing. But much of the success of the performance was due to Mr. Alfred Lester and Mr. W. H. Berry. Together they were responsible for most of the fun. Mr. Adrian Ross has given them some very amusing lyrics, and for the rest they make for mirth with their odd tricks of voice and gesture and their power of comic facial expression.

The enthusiastic reception accorded to "The Mikado," revived at the Savoy this week, shows conclusively that Gilbert and Sullivan's operas have not outlived their day. The revival is beautifully staged, and the chorus has been excellently drilled. It would not be quite fair to compare some of the members of the cast with their predecessors; but at least we have back again while Mr. C. H. Workman as Ko-Ko compares favourably with anyone who has previously played the part.

Another revival, which marks the commencement of Sir John Hare's farewell season, was that of "The Gay Lord Quex" at the Garrick last night. It was a trimph for Sir John in the title rôle and Miss Nancy price as Sophy Fulgarney.

The grand opera season opened brilliantly at Covent Garden last night, when Mme. Tetrazzini and Signor Sammarco appeared in Verdi's "La Traviata," and had a tremendous reception. Well-known people packed the great theatre, and when the curtain rose, after the playing of "God Save the King," the tiers of boxes were ablaze with glittering diamonds and bright toilettes. Every one of the 2,500 seats was booked long in advance for last night's performance. Musical enthusiasts, however, commenced to line up outside the theatre for the unreserved seats at nine o'clock in the morning. They were rewarded by the splendid singing of Mme. Tetrazzini, who, fresh from her triumphs in America, had to respond to the calls of enthusiasm again and again.

Shades of Charles Dickens! That public which loves statues and feels, as the Snark did about bathing-machines, that the more freely they are scattered, the more beautiful the scene, may be glad to know that a statue of Charles Dickens is to have a place in the Embankment Gardens. Dickens himself would not have shared their pleasure. In his last will he wrote, "I conjure my friends on no account to make me the subject of any monument or memorial whatsoever." But this Embankment statue has an adornment which would have touched the novelist on the raw, a bronze panel shewing the boy Dickens at work in the blacking warehouse. Of that part of his life Dickens would hardly bring himself to speak even with his nearest friends. It was "an unforgettable misery," the nightmare of his prosperous days. Probably nothing would have given him more exquisite pain than the thought of its commemoration in bronze. I presume Dickens lovers will take steps to avert the perpetration of the projected vandalism.

I remarked when I began these notes that we had had one little bit of humour wherewith to temper the malignity of this weary week. As I proceeded lo! another. Mr. Bernard Shaw has been outraged and in his best Shavian style has advised the public through the usual medium. "B.S." having contributed a story, "Aerial Football," to "Collier's Weekly," has heard with the deepest indignation that his production has been adjudged the best in a competition and has been awarded a £200 prize by that magazine. In returning the cheque, Mr. Shaw writes to the editor:—

"Dear Sir,—What do you mean by this unspeakable outrage? You send me a cheque for a thousand dollars, and inform me that it is a bonus offered by Messrs. P. F. Collier and Son for the best story received during the quarter in which my contribution appeared.

"May I ask what Messrs. P. F. Collier and Son expected my story to be? If it were not the best they could get for the price they were prepared to pay, they had no right to insert it at all. If it was the best, what right have they to stamp their other contributors publicly as inferior when they have taken steps to secure the result beforehand by paying a special price to a special writer? And what right have they to assume that I want to be paid twice over for my work, or that I am in the habit of accepting bonuses and competing for prizes?

"I return the cheque. If you should see fit to use it for the purpose of erecting a tombstone to Messrs. P. F. Collier and Son, I shall be happy to contribute the epitaph, in which I shall do my best to do justice to their monstrous presumption.

"Yours faithfully.

(Signed) "G. Bernard Shaw."

Disasters crowd thickly upon our Navy. Only the other day I noted the sinking of the Tiger and the Gladiator. This week I record the cutting in twain of the destroyer Gala by the scout Attentive. This occurred on Monday morning. The same evening news reached town of a boiler explosion on board the battleship Brittannia and injury to five of her crew! These four casualties bring up the total of lives lost by naval disaster during last month to sixty-nine.

All who knew him in India will be grieved to hear of the death of Mr. George Broadfoot Havelock, young son of Sir Henry Havelock, of Lucknow. He died last Friday at Bournemouth, aged sixty. He was originally in the Army—the 101st Bengal Fusiliers, but left it to join the Bengal Police and was, if I recollect a right District Superintendent of Howrah when he retired.

The name of Gordon Cumming is well known to Indian Shikaris. I see in to-day's paper that Colonel Gordon Cumming, who, joining the Madras Engineers in 1860, became the chief engineer of the Public Works Department of India, and retired in in 1895, is dead.

"Rita," the well-known novelist, known in private life as Mrs. E. M. Humphreys, has just been awarded £105 damages for libel against Messrs. D. C. Thomson and Company, newspaper proprietors and publishers, of Dundee. The latter had purchased some time ago one of "Rita's" novels and lately produced it much altered, mutilated and under a new title. The lady was hurt and considered her literary reputation damaged: the publishers thought that having bought a copy they could serve it up as they pleased. They find themselves mistaken.

CARIBOU HUNTING AND WHALING.*

In this handsome and magnificently illustrated volume the author has produced a work vying in freshness and verve with his well-known "A Breath from the Veldt"; and the sportsman or lover of travel and adventure who does not find it full of interest and novelty, will be hard indeed to please. The great feature of the work is to be found in the coloured plates of scenery and animals, which are reproductions from sketches by the talented pencil of the author. To praise these too highly would be well nigh impossible, but we will content ourselves with commending those depicting the Newfoundland reindeer, or caribou, and grouse, which are of special value alike to the naturalist and the sportsman.

The Newfoundland caribou (Rangifer tarandus novae-terrae) is remarkable for the large proportion of white in its coat, and thereby presents a remarkable coutrast to the large Yukon race, which is almost wholly brown. It is a member of the woodland (as distinct from the Barren Ground) group, and carries exceedingly heavy and much branched antlers. Mr. Millais was fortunate in obtaining some exceptionally fine heads, of which some of the best are depicted in the volume before us. Among the most notable are a 44 and a 49 pointer, both of which are depicted as they fell, while a larger scale portrait is given of the mounted head of the latter,—a trophy of which any sportsman may well be proud.

Following the lead of his friend and fellow explorer, Mr. Selous, the author, as the title of his work indicates, succeeded in penetrating into districts in the heart of the country where the foot of a white man had never trod before; and he waxes eloquent over the charm of these new fields of sport.

"You can plunge," he writes, "into this beautiful wilderness and feel all the delights of wandering at will through the recesses of an untrodden waste, where deer-stalking—and such deer to do!—may be pursued. It is perfect because you do it all by yourself and have not to trust to the guides for this part of the hunt, as the Newfoundlanders, although excellent fellows, are not well versed in the finer parts of the art of venery."

"Here," he adds, "in these forests and barrens, with their natural sanctuaries, the caribou are holding their own—one of the few instances where the purely wild game of Europe and North America are not decreasing."

This is indeed good news; while better still is the author's confident opinion that, despite a heavy annual batteau during the autumn migration, the increase is likely to continue for generations to come.

Very curious are some of the attitudes assumed by caribou, as depicted in the author's sketches and photographas, the strangest of all being the position with down-bent head, in which old bulls will stand for hours during the rutting season. Stranger still, perhaps, is the fact, if the sketches be trustworthy, that these deer are in the habit of going to sleep on their legs.

The author does not, however, by any means confine himself to reindeer, but supplies a number of interesting remarks on the furred and feathered inhabitants of the island generally. Notes on the garefowl, or great auk—the penguin of the natives which abounded on Funk island a century ago, will be read with interest by all, more especially the reference to an old fisherman whose father possessed a stuffed specimen, upon the back of which his son used to ride, little guessing that, if saved, it would be worth hundreds of pounds within his own lifetime.

Of the Micmac Indians, Mr. Millais made great friends, and his account of their manners and customs probably contains much to interest ethnologists.

One chapter in the middle of the book is devoted to the author's whaling experiences in the Shetlands and the Hebrides, and to an account of the present condition of the whaling industry in Newfoundland and North America generally. These experiences are probably almost unique for a landsman; but space prevents their being further referred to on this occasion.

In recommending this work to the attention of every sportsman and traveller, we feel confident that we are treading on safe ground; and we trust that it will enjoy the extensive circulation it so clearly merits.

A DAY IN CHAMBA.

There are few more charming or easily accessible districts in the Himalayas than the small state of Chamba.

A few hours tonga drive from the rail head and a night's travel in dhooly, dhandy or rickshaw take the visitor to the hill station of Dalhousie, where a day a two may be profitably spent in getting together stores &c.

It is a pretty place, with its scattered houses almost buried from sight by the dense pine woods which clothe the steep hillsides, and is garrisoned by a wing and the the head-quarters of three British Infantry Regiments during the hot weather months. It has two hotels and an excellent club and a reputation for quiet which deters the casual migrant from the plains.

From here a march of 16 miles, through pine woods leads to a crest overlooking the valley of the Ravi river and the town of Chamba, the latter five miles distant and far below.

The descent into the valley is trying in the summer and at that season the town is not one to linger in though there is a comfortable and fully appointed dak bungalow facing on to the fine disused polo ground.

H. H. The Rajah has latterly taken the Game Laws of the state well in hand with results that will be very beneficial to what was a rapidly diminishing head of game.

The licenses which are limited in number and should be applied for early in the year, allow a sufficiently liberal bag and the shikaris are all registered and well supervised.

The country is in most parts so densely wooded that the total prohibition of driving makes it a matter of great difficulty to bring any bear, which are very plentiful, to bag except in the spring.

There is little difficulty, as a general rule in getting transport and supplies and every assistance is given to travellers and sportsmen by H. H. The Rajah who is deservedly known for his courtesy and hospitality both at Dalhousie and in his own capital.

At the close of a long trip in the higher mountains, having two or three weeks on hand, I decided to escape temporarily from the monsoon, which was beginning to break over Dalhousie, and spend my remaining leave in prospecting in Chamba, with a view to revisiting it in the spring of some other year.

I also hoped to pick up a bear or two and engaged for that purpose a local shikari sent to me by His Highness' Secretary at my request. He recommended a nullah, three marches from the town of Chamba, which had a good name and to which we travelled by a route which was certainly shorter than that generally followed but compensated for that fact by providing the hardest marching that I have ever had to do.

The heat in the narrow shut-in valleys was intense and most aggressive sand flies were in swarms and an intolerable nuisance. The third march brought us to a small village at the junction of two brawling little streams, from which it took twelve hours for the coolies to get our kit to our main camping ground, on a wood circled meadow halfway up a spur of our mountain.

Close to the tents were some cliffs which held small thar but we failed to come across any recent traces of bear or serao in the surrounding woods.

After spending a couple of days at this camp we took a week's supplies and two small tents and moved higher up the mountain to as beautiful ground as can well be imagined.

The tents were pitched a few yards down the northern slope of a grassy "col," connecting the spur that we had ascended with the main mountain. Around them were carpets of flowers, purple, yellow and deepest pink, contrasting strongly with wide stretches of rhododendron thickets and their pale mauve blossom. A mile to the east the snow-capped mountain peak rose abruptly from the gentle slopes of a deep wide bay curving round to a narrow spur on the north, above which and seemingly close at hand one saw the snow-covered summits, serrated ridges and dark, forbidding cliffs that form the divide between Chamba and Lahoul.

Here and there ravines, filled with hardened snow, scored the grass covered mountain side before becoming hidden from sight by the clustering rhododendron bushes and plunging into the shady depths of the dense pine forests below. It was pleasantly cool and I was quite content to spend the afternoon of our arrival lying on the edges of the cliffs on the south side of the "col" and watching the country with a telescope.

Towards sunset we made out a black bear crossing a snow bridge a couple of miles to the north and, immediately afterwards, two cubs came in sight as they chased each other across and down to a grassy hollow in which they started to feed.

It was too late to go after them and we watched them until, at dusk, they moved up into a thicket. On the following morning, though we searched the ground carefully with the glasses, we saw no signs of the bear, and early the afternoon, were some distance above camp on our way to a thar cliff when they suddenly appeared at the place in which we had last seen them overnight.

We were afraid of missing a chance of bagging the female and so skirted round the hillside in her direction as fast as we could get along.

Rhododendron bushes are troublesome things to get through and we were hot and a little tired when we eventually reached the edge of the ravine on to which, out of sight and some distance below us, the meadow, on which we had last seen the animals abutted.

The climb down was steep but easy, as there was plenty of hand-hold, and we were soon on a narrow strip of grass close above the snow bridge which we had to cross.

On the opposite side, some 60 yards away and rather below us was a small clump of bushes, out of which, considerably to our surprise, a buck thar suddenly walked.

To drop behind a bush, pull out the glasses and see that he carried a good head, was the work of a moment and it was scarcely longer before he dropped with a bullet between the shoulders, slid off the grass, on to and down the snow and disappeared from sight.

We scrambled down to the snow bridge, on which our chaplis gave a very indifferent hold, and followed the track of his body until it brought us to a crevice, in which it lay wedged between rock and ice and within a foot of the tumbling waters which had worn away their covering at this point.

He was a heavy buck, with 12¾ inch horns, and it was with great difficulty that we managed to pull him on to the grass which lay at the foot of a small cliff which rose above us.

On top of this cliff was the place in which the bears had been, and, though I thought that they were certain to have bolted on hearing the rifle, I decided to have a good look around before returning to camp.

The meadow was surrounded by undergrowth on all sides and, as it was very small and I had only a single barrelled small bore rifle, we were rather careful in our proceedings.

I went down a small spur leading out of the meadow to the west but could see no signs of the animals having gone that way and, as the shikari was equally unsuccessful, we turned back and slowly worked our way up again.

I was looking in some bushes on the hill side when the shikari, who was near the edge of the ravine, called to me to go quickly to him.

I did so and at once saw the bear sitting up among the rhododendrons about 60 yards away and staring at us.

On either side of her were the two cubs, also sitting up, and the party made a comical sight.

However they might go off at any moment and there was no time to waste in looking at them, so I took a quick aim at the white mark on the female's chest and fired.

She acknowledged the shot with a roar, plunged downhill some 10 yards and rolled over dead. As we were going down to her, the two cubs bolted past us and the shikari gave chase, which was not much good as they could give him about two yards in three!

As the crow flies camp was not far away from us and by shouting in chorus we eventually succeeded in attracting our coolies' attention and saw some of them starting down to help us. We skinned our animal as quickly as we could but it was getting late when we started to return to the tents and before we got near them it was pitch dark.

The cook's fires guided us over the last half mile and we were soon retailing in camp the incidents of a day on which for once, every thing had gone unexpectedly well.

AN ANXIOUS TIME.

It was towards the end of the pre[illegible]ed hot weather of 187—that I had to visit the survey pillars on the Sugar Loaf Range in the Sungu Sub-division of the Chittagong Hill Tracts. These pillars were supposed to be visited once a year, and the custom of my predecessors had been to send a constable to report on them, and if they had suffered any considerable damage from the weather or wild animals, which, as elephants were numerous in those parts, was most likely, he was to take a coolie or two and pile up the earth in a rough-and-ready way round and over the keystone to prevent its being displaced. I had my doubts as to the constables so deputed ever going into such wild and lonely parts two or three days' march from even the nearest village, though they never failed to put in a tremendous bill for work done, so though, like most of the hill tract officers, a mere wreck from the ravages of malarial fever I determined to go myself that year.

Leaving Lama thana in a fleet of half-a-dozen dugouts—their size can be judged from the fact that the Matamori was but three or four inches deep in many of its shallows and rapids, we proceeded up the higher reaches of the river. For three nights we encamped on its little pebbly beaches, removed but a few feet from the water. We were allowed no rest though. The first night was a sample of the other two. Halting about an hour before dark we camped just below stream of where the river flowed between two precipitous cliffs. The gorge had broadened out a bit and there was an acre or so of flat land on its left bank, which was covered with wild plantains. Between this jungle and the water, a matter of but a few feet, we erected a lean—to shed of bamboos and plantain leaves, just broad enough to protect us from the dew as we lay feet outwards to the fire, which had been made along the open front of the shed. It seemed to me that I had hardly closed my eyes when my Mugh boy Motu woke me, saying, "Saheb! Saheb! the elephants are on us." Seizing my 8 bore I jumped out of the lean—to. The fires were out of course. All my men had bolted. It was a beautiful brilliant moonlight night and I could see the men across the stream, clustering on one or two small trees growing out of the cliff a little from its foot; they were shouting and gesticulating.

Moung-Khui, my head boatman, and Gour Sing, my orderly, were half way across, swearing, but all to no purpose; they would shoot the others if they did not return quickly with firewood. Shouts mingled with shrill trumpetings, interspersed with sundry splashings, came from up stream, where a huge black indistinct moving mass, for it was in the shadow of the gorge, seemed to block up the river closer up, indeed, too near to be pleasant; three or four elephants could be seen moving nervously about with waving trunks now and then making a short rush of a few paces forward as quickly followed by a hasty retreat. Ah Rhiu, my second boatman, and Motu were trying to relight the fires from their embers. Ripping the bullets from my cartriges, I loaded and fired blank at the foremost hathi. Gour Singh and Moung Khui splashing back through the river and shouting their loudest soon joined me and we kept up a fusilade for a few moments with the snider carbine and D.B. 12 bore. This and our voices and clashing of brass pots caused the animals to retreat up the gorge and after a time we turned in again. We were not left undisturbed very long, within the hour we were roused again. More blank cartridge and waving firebrands drove them again back up stream, and so the night passed with frequent alarms and excursions. At length, thoroughly worn out, we dropped asleep not to wake till broad daylight. While I was waiting for my morning tea, Gour Singh, who had been prowling round my end of the shed, called my attention to the fresh elephant tracks not ten feet from where we had been sleeping. After the moon had gone down at least one animal had passed the narrow opening between the cliff and our hut. Whether it was ignorance of our proximity or cautiousness that kept him from trampling us as we slept I cannot say, but the fact did not improve my nerves undermined as they were by illness.

Well, as I said before, the next two nights were pretty nearly a repetition of the first. The fourth morning found us leaving the dugouts with some of the men in charge. We left the river, and following the course of a tributary streamlet for half a day, we called a halt.

We halted the fifth day where we had to leave the stream, for the following day's march would take us up to the ridge of the range of hills, along which we would have to trudge for close on a double march before we would get to water again. Starting most of the men off, loaded with bamboo choongas full of water with orders to place them as far as they could on our way and to be back by nightfall, I did a prowl round. The evening before I had been lucky enough to bag two polyplectron pheasants, and going back along the streamlet I was again in luck for I put up at close quarters and shot a fine sambur. We also came across traces of rhino which I resolved to pay more attention to on my return. It was however, a case of L'homme propose mais Dieu dispose. For as circumstances turned out it was not to be.

Next morning, the sixth, we were very early on foot, each man taking what water he could in a chonga (i.e. a length of bamboo with all but the bottom joint pierced through).

The old survey party had evidently made themselves comfortable in their time for we proceeded along a track with an easy gradient and broad and smooth enough to have driven a coach and four over it. As the daylight increased I was much struck by the absence of any undergrowth. Trunks of huge trees stretched away in endless vistas like the columns of some mighty temple, builded by nature for her own worship. Save for the dead and fallen leaves of every hue, from the brightest yellows and scarlets down to the more sober browns, which spread out like some gorgeous mosaic, the ground was bare as the palm of ones hands. One had the feeling of being in some vast cathedral, half expectant of seeing some Titanic procession of worshippers marching down the broad nave like track which still continued along the centre of the ridge, for by now we had ascended to the top of the range. The men said that elephants had made this road. I think that the original survey party years upon years ago had made it. However this may be, it was quite certain that elephants had used it for ages judging by their tracks and the men knew for a fact that it was one of their main migratory routes. Contrary to the usual state of things in the Chittagong Hill Tracts, there appeared a fair quantity of bird life; we however had no time for frivolities. The men who knew the way pursued the even tenor of their way, refusing to stop, for there was no certainty that the spring at the end of the march would not be dried up. It is always the way opportunities always occur when little or no advantage can be taken of them. I had several chances that morning at both fur and feather, but where was the use. Time or rather water pressed and we were overloaded as it was; a short halt where we we had placed the relay of water the day before, a hasty meal and on we trudged, luckily, as it proved, leaving a fair amount unconsumed. It was late ere we reached our halting place for the night a few hundred feet above the water pool and some men were at once told off to bring water up. I superintended the camp arrangements; clouds had been rolling up and low mutterings of thunder threatened rain. We were on a narrow ridge between two peaks, and thinking a fire at each end would close it to any animal, we set to and piled up enough wood to keep both fires going all night; then for fear of fever in case of rain a maichan was rigged up out from the hillside, large enough for us all to sleep on. This bamboo platform, all along its front rested on the hillside, but its back was some five or six feet from the ground as the hill side sloped very abruptly away. Part of it was roofed in with plantain leaves, but not all as the men neglected this as soon as I slept. I was quite dead beat, and a bout of ague claiming me for its own I turned in as soon as I could get a cup of tea without waiting for dinner. The men who had brought the water reported the whole vicinity crowded with elephants, and they had only obtained it at considerable risk. They were certain the elephants would soon move on to get to the Matamori river and we might be disturbed at any time. Having seen the lanterns and fires lighted I tied my dogs up at my feet, and turning in, despite my ague fell into an uneasy sleep. How long it lasted I cannot say. I was roused by a perfect pandemonium of sounds and cries. All was dark, lanterns and fires were out. The dogs at my feet were howling with fright. Men on either side of me were shouting, yelling and clashing their daos (a cross between a billhook and a knife) against trees. I appeared alone on the maichan, which was swaying about like a raft in a gale. The shouts grew louder, rapid footsteps were heard all round. The maichan rocked yet more violently. The shouts being in the Mroong dialect which I did not understand, I could not at the moment make out what was the matter. "Elephants by Jove" thought I; "they are marching right on top of us, and one is doing for the maichan." Then, on the sky line as I sat up on my bedding, loomed a swiftly moving black object which looked like the back of an elephant. Now I had with me some cartridges loaded with half charges of powder and dust shot for small bird collecting, and I placed one of these in my right barrel to use as blank if occasion needed. My left I loaded with ball, and I let drive by accident the left barrel as I sat up. Mind, the whole thing happened in a moment. At the shot there was a sort of half roar, half groan, and in an instant for a second or so there was anppressive silence. I shouted for a light and then there was a cry that Moung-Khui, my head boatman, had been shot. Sure enough when a light was brought, poor old Moung Khui was found lying but a few paces from my feet with a bullet wound right through both thighs, and so high up on one that I could hardly get a cloth above it to use as a tourniquet. What had really happened was, that being dead fagged out they had not kept the fires up, and, as was their wont, the men had preferred to sleep in twos and threes scattered all about the ridge, instead of on the maichan. Two had only slept on it at the further end to myself. It seems that the dogs must have roused them by barking, and then they heard the grating calls of a tiger in the valley below. Nearer and nearer the call came, when probably attracted by the barking of the dog the calls ceased. The men had, however, grown nervous and one went to try and get the fire near him to blaze up, but soon rushed back saying the animal was close at hand. Both men then began dancing and clattering their daos on the maichan (thus shaking the frail construction) at the same time shouting in Mroong dialect "Tiger! tiger!" This, however, did not deter the brute for a minute or so after the animal sprang on to their end of the maichan and they incontinently bolted, passing me and the dogs. Now whether stripes was after them or the dogs I do not know to this day, but it was his form which I saw against the sky line, thinking it just the top of an elephant's back partly hidden by the ridge and at which I loosed off, as I thought, practically a blank cartridge. Moung Khui had been sleeping on the other side of me some little distance off under a tree. At the first alarm he, like myself, thought it was elephants. Leaving Gour Sing to relight the fire near where they had slept, he ran to the one at the farther side shouting, "Light the fires, light torches." It was just as he and stripes had met face to face or were passing each other in front of where I lay that I fired. Supposing myself in a position that at any time would have put me into a blue funk, worn out with malarial fever and nerves shattered from want of sufficient rest, what wonder I woke up suddenly as I was that I fired wide? It was a mercy I pulled the wrong trigger, for at the short range even dust shot would have made a wound that would have caused death before medical aid could be obtained. Well, I did what I could, I always had carbolic lotion, carbolic oil, and lint with me, and I knew how to make a tourniquet from a cloth and a bit of stick. This I applied at once. Making probes of thin prices of bamboo, I first cleaned away the blood by covering a probe with lint saturating it with water and drawing it right through the wounds, then I repeated the process with carbolic solution, then with the oil and finally leaving strips of handkerchief saturated in oil at each end of each wound for as I said the bullet had passed right through each thigh, wounding the tiger afterwards it was thought as some of the men found blood tracks down the hill. I, however, was too heart stricken to either know or care. The poor fellow despite the agony the tourniquet gave him tried all he could to comfort me. "Do not worry saheb," said he, "it was my fate and surely it is better to die by your honour's gun than be eaten by a tiger, for had you not fired he would have grabbed me." There was nothing for it but to return at once. Gour Sing had had a rough dooley (i.e. litter) made, over the top of which my green canvas tarpaulin was thrown; so after eating a hurried meal and taking cold rice with us we started to return, having to abandon eight coolie loads of provisions. A man was sent ahead, hot foot to warn the men at the boats to have a meal ready, while two were left behind to try and get some water. Poor Moung Khui's cries, though he tried to suppress them, were dreadful. "Saheb, undo the bandages, better bleed to death than suffer so." I tried to relieve him once or twice, but the bleeding began again and I had to steel my heart and tighten them up again. Ah Rhui, my second boatmen, went ahead with my second rifle, with him a man with a torch, then the coolies, then the dooley with myself and Motoo and lanterns, then as a rearguard Gour Sing with my 8·8 bore rifle and a torch or two, soon grey dawn crept over the forest, making it appear ghost like and unreal. Hundreds and hundreds of the little hill partridges, the whole ground as far as we could see appeared covered with them; they scratched and rustled till the whole place seemed alive with them; every now and then as we approached a little covey like a whisp of flying dust would rise. Ah! what a dull-leaden tramp it was, each hour seemed like ten. How true the old lines.

"A merry heart goes all the way a
Your sad tires in a mile a

We appeared to crawl, frequent stops were necessary to moisten the patient's lips with whisky and water, or to see to the bandages. When about half way back the two men left behind for water caught us up. They had got none and were in a panic. "Saheb! Saheb!" they shouted, "the elephants are coming; they are coming in hundreds." What was to be done? There was no place for concealment, the ground was bare. bare, the hillsides too steep to take the dhooley down; but for the wounded man I would not have given the matter a thought; as it was I felt in a fix. Presently, away to the right of the track we saw a huge semul or cotton tree and between its flat buttresses we placed the dhooley. The trunk screened us from the track and a buttress on either side from what had been our rear and front. Hastily cutting notches in the edge of the buttress for peep holes we fixed the end of the tarpaulin over it and threw a lot of dead leaves all over the top, the men then scattered or got up trees. Having settled my rifles I told Gour Sing he could go. "Not so my lord," replied he; "we will watch together." So there we crouched gazing along the track we had come, waiting. I have had many weary waits with physical discomfort tenfold worse and death at one's elbow, but nothing approached this. To begin with every hour's delay lessened Moung Khiu's chance of life, for proper medical aid he must have. Nor could I satisfy myself whether it was better to watch with him as we were doing, or some little distance off Moung Kuhi, for if there should be a scrimmage, helpless as he was he was nearly sure to be knocked out. We had not waited long before we saw the end of the avenue like track filled in with two immense forms coming along abreast, as they advanced two or three others appeared, and then a crowd. When within about fifty yards of us, one of the leaders (they were some distance in advance of the others), began to rumble, and presently stopped. He seemed uneasy, turning now to the right, now to the left. His companion, a female nearly as large as himself, turned half round and gave a tweet or two sliding her trunk from side to side. Soon, somewhat reassured, her companion advanced slowly grumbling and rumbling to himself, and every now and then lifting his trunk high as though to sniff any tainted air; and so they passed. Others followed in little bands and groups, in twos and threes or fives and tens. Then came a mass. Not all keeping the track for soon the hillsides were thronged with them. We could hear them on the further side of the ridge, some we could only see the backs of. They reminded one curiously of a large school of porpoises playing in a gale, as they swayed about, now disappearing behind a tree, now bobbing up on this side of it. Soon the throng thickened. There were Morgas and Koomerias, large ones and small ones, tuskers and females and baby ones in, I had almost said, hundreds. On they streamed till the whole range seemed to throb again. I do not believe even Sanderson himself ever saw so vast a gathering. Yet withal they were comparatively silent, and this gave impressiveness to the scene. There was but an occasional tweet from an anxious mother to her babe, or a rumble and swish as some heated one blew a trunk full of saliva or dust over its back or along its stomach. Sometimes they were in a dense undulating mass, at others the crowd thinned out till but three or four could be seen. Luckily for us the hillside behind our tree sloped rather abruptly downwards and such animals as passed behind the tree had to do so considerably below us. How many in all there were I am unable to say. It had been an unusually dry season, long protracted. Even my Mroong carriers said they had never seen such a gathering before. Well hour after hour dragged by as troop after troop swayed past. At one time I thought we were in for a scrimmage. A young female with a tusker apparently attendant on her, passed us in one of those breaks in the general stream of animals. There were only a few in sight at the time. She evidently to avoid his attentions came almost up to our tree. Suddenly up went her trunk, wavering here and there, in our direction, and a shrill trumpet was given by her, as she backed some paces and then turned and bolted down the hillside. Her companion, though stood his ground for some time, grumbling and hitting the ground with his trunk, but just as I was thinking I ought to fire he turned and followed his mate.

At last it was all over and we were able to resume our journey, but I needed a lot of neat whisky to steady me. Moung-Khui, had suppressed his groans like a hero. Despite all my anxiety I could not help noticing the difference between the wild herds and a crowd of tamed elephants. The tame ones reminded one of a crowd of well-dressed men. Black coats, shiny hats, and so on. The wild ones looked brown and rough and unkempt, covered with earth and dust they reminded me of a crowd of navvies or dock labourers.

Our messenger had prepared the men at the boats for our arrival and a couple had started out to meet us. Seeing such a crush of elephants coming down the hillside they ran back, took the boats up stream and sank them in shallow water at the foot of a cliff, hiding their cargos under rocks. They were used to these annual migrations, having lived in that vicinity before it was declared a forest reserve. Having reached the river, the vast herd broke up some, going up stream and others after a bath crossing it, evidently making for the Nah-Khiong and head waters of the Songu river where they have, to the hillmen round, a well-known so-called dancing ground. On our arrival we found the boats refloated and a meal prepared, so gulping it down without delay we started. Selecting the best dugout Moung Khui was made comfy. His bandages had shaken loose, they needed seeing to, and his wounds dressed. Leaving the others to follow, on we went, with a double crew, all through the night searching for the channel by torchlight; and rushing the boat over the shallows by main force.

Towards grey dawn we heard a tiger calling, it affected Moung Khui painfully. It appears that these hillmen have somewhat the same sort of superstition that a sailor has when a shark follows his ship for days. For a sick man to hear a tiger call is a sign of coming death. I cheered him up as best I could. Tots of whisky judiciously administered kept the men at the paddles, when about noon next day we were fortunate enough to fall in with a party of bamboo cutters coming up with a permit. I impressed a fresh crew from them and snatching a hasty meal, down stream we swung again.

Rain must have fallen in the upper reaches of the river for it rose somewhat and our progress was thus accelerated.

Past Ali Kawdong, past Lama thana, where we got another relay of men, past Maniekpur we swept, and so on and on until Chuckeria police station came in sight. Then, oh welcome news, there was a fishing boat just up from the mouth of the river, with a double bank of oars. I soon got my patient into this and a payment of double line did the rest. We were lucky in catching the ebb tide without a wait, this took us to the sea. Choosing the outer passage and having a fair wind as well as the flood, under sail and oar, we fairly flew up the coast. To cut short a long story we soon had our wounded man in Chittagong hospital, where the kindly Civil Surgeon, S. D. S., in course of time made a new man of Moung Khui. I cannot be too grateful for the kindly and unremitting attention Moung Khui received. I was told though, in confidence, it was one in a thousand chance that my tight bandaging had not caused mortification to supervene. It was as well then that they did shake loose from time to time, and what at one time I had considered a misfortune, may have proved our saving it, is often so in life.

Moung Khui lived for years after finally coming to grief I believe in the last Lushai Expedition while serving under dear old Charlie M., whose tragic death some years ago in a Darjeeling ballroom you may remember. May peace be upon both of them.

I have shot month in, month out for thirty odd years in India and this was the only time I ever touched a man, though I have hardly ever been at a big shoot without some one peppering an unfortunate native; doubtless in most instances it is their own fault for being where they should not be, but sportsmen should be careful. I remember a story I heard when I first came out. It savours of the "Ben trovato" type.

With a party out on elephants after big game was a most reckless man; his reputation was the same at every shoot we had been at. Well, on this occasion a hog deer bolted right down the line, and caring little for consequences this man fired down the line, endangering the lives of some of the mahouts. The captain of the party dropped the animal in front of his elephant with his right barrel and called out "who did that." Thinking to claim the deer our reckless one held up his hand when quick as a wink the captain drilled it with a ball from his left barrel.

Fishing.

A DAY ON A CLUB WATER.

NOWADAYS there are trout breeding establishments scattered all over the kingdom, so that anyone possessing suitable waters can have them stocked, and enjoy trout fishing, where no trout before existed. When a reservoir has no gravel shallows fit for spawning grounds, and already contains coarse fish, it pays best to re-stock every year with two year old, trout 10 or 11 inches long, and therefore big enough to take care of themselves.

A Fishing Society, of which I am a member, rents a fine lake some four hundred yards long, at Horsted Keynes, a village near Hayward's Heath in Sussex. The sheet of water is artificial, having been formed by building a dam across a valley, along with which flows a fair sized brook. The lake is surrounded on all sides by bushes and trees, so that there must be ample surface feeding. The trout, however, this year have been very late getting into proper condition; this is no doubt due to the late cold spring having prevented any considerable hatch of fly. Fishing on a fine but somewhat cold day at the end of April I saw very few trout rising, and only an occasional March Brown on the water. A fortnight of warm weather would no doubt make all the difference, bringing out crowds of winged creatures, fattening the trout in no time.

My experiences on that April day were typical of the sort of fishing one gets on an artificially stocked reservoir. On Horsted Keynes one cannot, of course, reach the water without a boat, and so there are three flat bottomed square sterned affairs, provided for the use of Club members. These boats are broad and steady, so that one may stand up in them comfortably while casting. To control the rate of drift, each boat has a sea-anchor; this consists of a canvas bag with an iron hoop round the mouth, and a bridle with cord to it attached to the hoop. When thrown into the water the bag fills, and effectually checks the boat's rate of drifting.

This spring the stock of trout in the lake was replenished by turning in 540 two year olds: these averaged 11 inches in length, and were a particularly fine lot. As re-stocking is expensive, members are only allowed to take away two brace of trout each time they fish. Consequently many of the trout get caught again and again, so that by the time summer arrives the fish must know pretty well all there is to know about artificial flies.

Some anglers in Horsted Keynes always use a single large fly on their cast, allowing it to sink a little and drawing it slowly. This sort of fly fishing does not much appeal to me, so I go on quite the other tack using a fine cast of drawn gut, and three small flies. I find this plan catches fish all right, and it is certainly more amusing than throwing a big heavy fly, as though fishing for sea-trout.

No doubt, however, the big fly would always pay best when there is a lot of wind.

On the day in question a nice little breeze rippled the surface of the lake, the sun gleamed out at intervals, and the hard tracery of twig and branch was softened by budding green. Everywhere, too, there were the sounds, as well as the sights of coming spring. The cheerful cluck of coots, the bleating of lap-wings, the short sharp crow of the cock pheasant, and the continuous cooing of wood-pigeons, a constant sweet accompaniment to the other sounds.

At the top end of the water were the familiar forms of two swans. Such birds sound terribly out of place on a trout lake, but really they are almost indispensible, for this pair keep down the weeds which would otherwise soon choke up a large part of the water, and spoil much of it for fly fishing. A pair of swans will keep a good sized sheet of water quite clear by their indefatigable weed eating. I was soon afloat, and rowed up to one end of the lake whence I let the boat drift along before the gentle westerly air. The canvas bag was not called into requisition, as in that faint breeze it would have brought the boat to a complete standstill. When fly fishing on a lake it is essential that one should be moving all the time and so covering fresh water at every cast.

For some ten minutes I did not stir a fish, then at last just ahead I saw a trout rise to a natural fly. Soon the boat drifted within reach, and on covering the place I got a rise to my stretcher, the trout however missed, but on casting again I hooked him on one of the droppers. On netting this fish I found that though long enough to go well over half a pound if well fed, he was hopelessly out of condition and probably would not have gone six ounces if weighed, so I put him back to get fatter.

Further on ahead I saw several trout rising, and when the boat drifted within range, I soon got out three more. All proved similarly out of condition, and all three went back into the lake.

Then came a lull of quite half an hour, during which I did not even get a rise. At last when I was beginning to weary of the fruitless casting, a trout was seen to rise about fifteen yards straight out from the bow of the boat I let out a little more line and put my tail fly over him, he took it at once, and the vigorous resistance showed that this fish was at all events in better condition than the four which had preceded him. After two or three jumps this fifth trout came to net, and proved a handsome half pound rainbow.

After this I rowed back again to the end of the lake, and had no sooner got there than the small breeze died away all together. While waiting idly for a fresh puff, I saw a rise on the glassy surface: it was within long range, so seemed worth trying. Letting out line I waved the cast to and fro to dry the tail fly; for presenting it dry seemed the best chance with no ripple on the water to help matters. Just when I had nicely dried my fly, up again very obligingly came the same fish, so that I was able to put my stretcher into the widening rings. This trout also proved in good condition so was put into the bag. Now having one out of the two brace allowed, I went ashore to the boat shed, to eat sandwiches and make myself some tea: tea in the open air between the intervals of fishing is so enjoyable, that it is well worth while going to the trouble of bringing along an etna and little kettle.

After tea there seemed to be no fish rising anywhere and I cast away for about an hour without results. Afterwards a gleam of warm sunshine came for a short space, and during these genial minutes a few trout took heart of grace, and rose at the scarce and occasional March Browns on the water. Making the most of this little time I got three more trout, and keeping two had reached the club limit.

The mile and three quarter's walk to the railway station was by no means the least interesting part of the day. The path goes through a wooded glen starred with wood anemonies and primroses. The little brook which runs out of the lake, tinkles along at one's side: on all the trees except the backward oaks, is the delicate green tinge of the coming leaf. Spring with its infinite promise, is an emblem of that evergreen hope in our hearts, which carries us undismayed through the dark places, to the sunlight beyond.

IDENTITY OF UNKNOWN DEER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Weston Elwes' letter in your issue of 9th April, the small deer which he describes was undoubtedly one of the Tragulina family, that is to say a Chevrotain. The colouring does not correspond with the common variety found in Ceylon; and it, therefore, must be one of the other five species of the group. The Chevrotains range from India to Borneo; they are alike as regards size, i.e., about equal in bulk to a small sized hare. A Ceylon specimen, which I weighed, scaled 5lb. The feet are somewhat like those of a tiny pig in shape. Mr. Elwes' specimen seems to have lacked the longitudinal stripes on the back, which are typical of the common Ceylon variety. The sportsman's name for the Chevrotain family is "Mouse Deer."

RIFLE.

Expressly designed to replace the prohibited ·450 Bore.

J. L. & S. were the first to submit a Rifle of this bore to the Editor of "The Field" who reported March 23, 1907: ". . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridge complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

The mistress of the house was a cultivated Bostonian of much musical taste, and the whistling of the footman, who believed himself alone in the house, fretted her artistic soul. "Joseph," she called at last, from the head of the back stairs, "please don't whistle those vulgar rag-time things!" "Yes, mem, returned Joseph meekly." "I know, mem," he continued with unexpected spirit, "but you can't expect a rhapsody of Liszt with cleaning the knives. That will come later, when I'm polishing the silver."

Dinner was a little late. A guest asked the hostess to play something. Seating herself at the piano, the good woman executed a Chopin nocturne with precision. She finished, and there was still an interval of waiting to be bridged. In grim silence she turned to an old gentleman on her right and said, "Would you like a sonata before dinner?" He gave a start of surprise and pleasure. "Why, yes, thanks!" he said. "I had a couple on my way here, but I think I could stand another."

"Bring me an order of fly-specks," said the man at the restaurant table. "Fly-specks?" repeated the astonished waiter. "Why we don't serve such a thing here, sir." "Well, then," retorted the sarcastic patron, "Why don't you take them off the bill-of-fare?"

THE TURF.

EPSOM.

WE opened most dismally at Epsom on Tuesday. It was a very damp and draggle-tailed minority of habitual racegoers that literally scuttled after each event to take advantage of all the shelter that is available near the course and round about the stands. To expose oneself to the torrent for longer than a minute at a time was to court a drencing. The rain was pitiless, and even the best of macintoshes and the stoutest of umbrellas were not proof against it. In spite of all these discomforts, however, there was quite a respectable attendance of the public. One did not pity the people at all, but rather the young horses that had to face the ice-cold wind and sleet in the Tattenham and Westminster Plates. Several of the two-year-olds "jibbed" more than once on the way to the post, and by their behaviour did not give their jockeys much time in which to get cold. As was natural, there was a good deal of mud about. Everyone who has been to a meeting on the Downs knows what Epsom mud is like. Its powers of adhesion, especially when applied to boots and clothes, are not to be equalled by the best stickphast ever invented. The course, which was covered with a foot of snow early on Sunday morning, was now a bright and eye-consoling ribbon of green. In condition it was as near perfection as possible. Trainers and jockeys who had a turn on it in the morning declared it ideal, as the grass has grown surprisingly well in spite of the severe weather and the backwards state of vegetation generally. Won easily by a length and a half ; three lengths.

On Wednesday the weather improved considerably and sporting London was on its toes eager to make up for lost time, and on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread vehicles that had been left in the coach-house on Tuesday with an apparently long rest before them were haled forth with cheerful alacrity to help swell the road pageant inseparable from Epsom races. With the roads in grand order the drive down, free from dust, was doubly enjoyable. The course had dried up a bit, as might have been expected on this chalky subsoil, but was as good as ever we have seen it at the Spring Meeting; fields panned out well, and the ball was kept merrily rolling from start to finish. Details :—

HYDE PARK PLATE.—Of 200sovs. added, for two-year-olds' 5 furlongs.

Place betting in proportion.

Simonson speedily drew out and showed the way to Desmond's Pride, Duke of Sparta, Silver Heeled, Hayden, The Bedouin, Snow Leopard, Velvet, and Mask, with Dean Swift, one of the outside division, Dinneford and Roseate Dawn heading the others, of whom Nightfall was last. Little change in these positions occurred till entering the straight, when Duke of Sparta and Silver Heeled were in difficulties and Hayden went on third in front of Snow Leopard, Dean Swift, The Bedouin, and Velvet, these being clear of Land League, Offer, Roseate Dawn, and Oakleigh II. A quarter of a mile from home Desmond's Pride was well beaten, whereupon Dean Swift rapidly improved his position, and dashing up on the inside, wrested the lead from Simonson in the next few strides, and making the remainder of the running, won easily by a length and a half; a length separted second and third. Time—2min. 11-3/5secs.

SANDOWN.

A wet morning on Thursday, 30th ultimo came as a surprise, but the rain did not last, and though the sun was boycotted by a dark sky the afternoon was pleasantly mild and spring-like. The going, just soft enough to be cut into without any suspicion of being holding, was as near perfection as possible, and fields ruled exceptionally strong, the six races on the card affording sufficient sport to please everybody. The fully-loaded specials from Waterloo presaged a capital attendance, which included several of the principal supporters of the national sports. Details :—

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE F. A. CUP, FINAL.—Football is gloriously uncertain. That is not an original remark, but it was never used with greater appositeness than with regard to Saturday's struggle at the Crystal Palace for the possession of the most coveted trophy in the football world—the F.A. Cup between the Wolverhampton Wanderers and Newcastle United. The first named won by 3 goals to 1. The crowd went to the Palace to see a scientific team play a fast, dashing side. An eleven of machines, as it were, against an eleven of athletes; and the athletes won. Youth and vigour would not be denied, and so a Second League side triumphed over the cleverest team in England. And, moreover, won well.

In a way, people were prepared for just such a game as we had, and also for the result. Grit and determination won the day, and so good luck to the Wolves, whose last Cup triumph was in 1893.

The weather was against a big crowd. Snow and bitter winds had done their worst, and so only 74,969 people went to the Palace. It is worthy of note that 22,000 Londoners preferred to see Chelsea play Aston Villa in comparative comfort at Stamford Bridge.

There was little of the glamour attaching to some previous finals. Newcastle were unpopular with a big section of Londoners, and the Wolves were deemed unlikely to be able to put up a good enough show against their formidable opponents, whose side included eight internationals.

But the Wolves rose to the occasion superbly, and when Mr. Campbell blew his final solo on the whistle the excited and delighted spectators broke over the ground and carried their heroes to the pavilion.

At the end of the first period the Wolverhampton Wanderers led by 2 goals to nil. Each side added a goal in the second half.

ATHLETICS.

Marathon Trial Race.—The race, promoted by the Polytechnic Harriers, was won on Saturday, the 25th instant, by A. Duncan, of the Salford Harriers.

As a test of endurance the event was a distinct success, for rain and snow fell continually, and the stamina shown by the men over the long and tiring course from Windsor to Wembley Park was unquestionable, for forty-nine of the competitors finished, and many within a reasonable time of the winner. The first three men home were:—

	h.	m.	s.
A. Duncan (Salford Harriers)	2	15	45
J. G. Beale (Polytechnic Harriers) ...	2	17	0
F. Lord (Wibsey Park A.C.)	2	18	4

Other prominent competitors were G. Pearce, the cross-country ex-champion, who finished tenth, and F. Appleby, the holder of the fifteen miles' record. Appleby has been in retirement for two seasons, but he ran beautifully for about seventeen miles, when he tired terribly, and did not trouble to finish.

Duncan, Beale, and Lord were left to fight out the finish after Appleby had fallen out, and they ran together until a mile from home, when the Salford man increased the pace, and eventually won by 250 yards.

Duncan will have to be seriously reckoned with in the actual Marathon race, which will be over twenty-six miles, three miles longer than Saturday's distance, for his time in the terrible weather and on heavy roads was excellent.

It will be remembered that Duncan won the A.A.A. ten miles championship only a week ago. Most of the competitors were supplied with Oxo during the race.

BOXING.

Griffin vs. Bowker.—Given an opportunity of witnessing a contest in which leading members of the boxing profession are to display their skill, and one can depend upon finding the holding capacity of the National Sporting Club, in King Street, Covent Garden, severely tested by members and their friends. Such was the state of affairs last night. For a leading item Mr. A. F. Bettinson, the manager, had arranged a twenty rounds contest, in which Joe Bowker (late of Manchester), the bantam-weight ex-champion of the world, was matched to box Charlie Griffin, the Australian feather-weight champion. They met at 9st. 6lb. for the substantial stake of £100 a side and the club purse of £175. At the weighing-in earlier in the day Bowker scaled first, and went 9st. 2lb. in under-shirt, drawers, and socks; and Griffin weighed 9st. 4½lb. in under-shirt only. The closing bouts of the Naval and Military Competitions which have been proceeding so successfully at the club during the past few days also found a place in the programme.

Griffin entered the ring first, and had for his seconds Green, Tucker, and Watson, while Bowker, who quickly followed, was attended by Johnny Hughes, Alf. Wicks, and Arthur Gutteridge.

First Round.—Griffin adopted a crouching style, and allowed Bowker to do most of the work at the commencement. Towards the close, however, Griffin set about his man in capital style, and had none the worst of the meeting.

Second Round.—The Colonial proved wonderfully fast, and it was evident that Bowker could never keep pace with him. Coming within range Griffin nicely clipped his man with the right, and down went the Englishman for eight seconds. Bowker rose, only to be driven to the ropes, where another nicely measured blow by Griffin again dropped him for eight seconds. He was able to resume, but it was decidedly Griffin's round.

Third Round.—Again the visitor showed clever tactics, during which Bowker did better, but a series of kidney punches troubled him. Griffin was anxious, and when the round finished he had materially added to his advantage.

Fourth Round.—Coming together for the fourth time, Joe appeared going well, and he smartly countered on receiving a dangerous right, and both began to bear evidence of the punishment dealt out.

Fifth Round.—This was another briskly contested affair, for while Griffin, with a succession of body blows, caused trouble, Bowker landed several rights and lefts on the head. Eventually a jolt that kept very low sent the Englishman to the boards for eight seconds, but he came up again, and in a rally Bowker toppled over his man, but the latter was quickly on his feet.

Sixth Round.—Griffin took a breather in this round, and Joe took the opportunity of wiping off some of the score against him. Both went in for short-arm work, which favoured the home boxer.

Seventh Round.—Just after the round started Bowker became the recepient of a number of well-dealt right hooks. Griffin floored him no fewer than four times, and once he was sent through the ropes. He was evidently very weak from the continuous body punches, and when the gong sounded both contestants were on the floor.

Eighth and last Round.—It was obvious that the end was approaching when they started again. Bowker tried to lead, but Griffin met him well. Eventually a heavy jolt downed Bowker, and he took the count.

Squires vs. Roche.—Yesterday this long looked for meeting took place at the Empire Theatre, Dublin. It was to decide the Irish Championship, and it was soon done, Roche being finished off in the fourth round. His defect was largely due to over confidence, according to all accounts. I append details:—

First Round.—Squires worked round his man, and tried to draw him, but the Irishman was wary. Roche reached Squires's chin with a right, and the pair clinched. Squires tried a right for the ribs but missed, and then Roche forced the Australian to a neutral corner and tried a left. Roche had slightly the best of matters.

Second Round.—Roche put a right to Squires's head and then a left, and in a clinch put a right to the body. After some desultory work Squires reached the heart, the round being easily Roche's.

Third Round.—They feinted, and when they came to close quarters Roche put a right to the mouth, and in a clinch Roche's heart was tested. Squires put a straight left to the head, but Roche countered with a stinger to the body, and finished up with a left on the head.

Fourth Round.—Roche at once went to business, and caught Squires a short right on the jaw. Squires replied with a wide swing on the body, then rushed in, and with a well-judged right to the jaws sent Roche to the boards for seven seconds. The Irishman on rising rushed to clinch, but Squires pushed him away, and measuring his distance with great deliberation caught Roche on the left side of the stomach. Down went Joe for 8secs., rolling over on his face. On rising, Squires landed on Roche's jaw, but the plucky Irishman, fighting against nature, was on his feet just as the timekeeper called 9secs. His plight was hopeless, however, and the referee calling them together, the men shook hands. So ended what promised to be, in the Irish boxing annals at least, a memorable encounter. The duration of the final round was 1min. 45secs.

GOLF.

The Championship Course.—When the leading amateur golfers meet on the Royal St. George's Club's links at Sandwich next month, to play for the amateur championship, they will find the homeward half of the course considerably different from that of former days. It is now possible to give a list of the alterations that will take effect in regard to the forthcoming tournament.

The first eight holes will not be changed in any way. The ninth will be lengthened by playing on to the old sixteenth green. This will add about seventy or eighty yards to the hole. With the old sixteenth no longer in use, it will be possible to put back the tees at the tenth hole so as to render necessary two wooden club shots, whatever the direction of the wind. Over fifty yards can be added, and new teeing grounds have been made.

Those who, like many golfers in India, have not visited Sandwich for some time will also find changes at the eleventh and twelfth holes. For the former the old twelfth tee has been made into a green, which gives the player a sight of the hole when playing his second shot, and adds about thirty-five yards. For the twelfth a tee has been made to sea-ward, which adds a few yards to the hole.

The sixteenth is entirely new. It will be a one-shot hole in all winds. At the seventeenth the positions of the tees have been changed, but the green and the length of the hole remain unaltered. For the eighteenth a new green has been made, and it is so placed as to add about eighty yards to the hole. A number of bunkers have been added to the course generally. The new sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth holes were played last week for the first time at a big meeting, and met with considerable, if not unanimous, approval.

THE MUSSOORIE TOURNAMENT.

17th Lancers Subalterns vs. 2nd Gurkhas.—This match on Monday morning opened the tournament, a fast and well contested game ending in favour of the Gurkhas. The first and second period were devoid of score, the Lancers doing most of the attacking. In the third chukker the Gurkhas got away and scored. Parbury equalised in the next period. Mullaly, however, put the Gurkhas ahead again and before the end of the chukker each team had scored another goal. In the fifth chukker the Gurkhas had the best of the play and added another goal to their score. Fast and level play in the last period gave neither side any advantage, the final score reading: Gurkhas, 4 goals; Lancers, 2 goals. Teams:—

17th Lancers.		2nd Gurkhas.

STEEPLECHASING

The Daily Telegraph writes:—It would be quite out of place to speak of the decadence of steeplechasing, as every proof was given last month at Aintree that the sport was never more popular than it is at present. It is, therefore, all the more important to maintain the conditions associated with it for the seventy years. The fine spectacle of exceptionally good men and horses surmounting difficulties over a country cannot be well excelled and there is also the spice of danger which is at times acceptable to the general run of Englishmen. The question may well be asked, though, whether the contest for the Grand National on the 27th March, was conclusive that everything has been proceeding of late in the right direction. Many old hunting men who had been accustomed to witness the event in the past were not at all satisfied with the competitors paraded in the paddock before the race, there being a want of the usual class amongst the horses; and when it was all over certain facts almost shocked them, the first being that only eight out of twenty-four completed the course, and that in several cases the riders showed as much distress as their horses. It must, however, be admitted that the majority of the horsemen were of the old order. No one could beat Mr. P. Whitaker, for instance, as ex-Master and huntsman of the Oakley for six seasons; he had in that capacity the reputation of being one of the best men to hounds in England. Mr. Bletsoe, too, has been brought up in the hunting field all his life; so has Captain Pallin, Mr. W. Bulteel, and Mr. Bissill, to say nothing of the professional experts, Mason, Driscoll, and Anthony. But a Grand National field of riders is judged on severe grounds by those who remember the Beasley brothers, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Garrett Moore, Mr. J. M. Richardson, John Page, and George Stevens, and with all that has been said, too, of the Lottery field, when the whole troop of riders were marked men, such as Jem Mason, Tom Oliver, the two M'Donoghs, Mr. Newcombe—a wonderful rider, as often afterwards seen with the Dartmoor during the forty years he was lessee of the Plymouth Theatre—Tom Ferguson, the best man in Ireland; Powell, a well-known cross-country jockey; Captain Becher, Martin Barker, Hardy Byrne, and Curlin. all good winners in four-mile steeplechases. The Grand National then was five miles over the stiffest line of fences ever put up at Aintree. Next year they were reduced to a certain extent, the 5ft. stone wall being lowered to 4ft. 6in., and in the course of a few seasons everything was made lighter. But, despite the big course and longer distance, nine out of the seventeen of Lottery's companions completed the course, and now, over a shorter course and smaller fences, only eight out of twenty-four have done so. And it is not this year's contest that can be taken alone as last year, out of twenty-three competitors, eight only completed the course, and of that little lot one had fallen and got up again. It will be argued that the pace is better now than in those days, and if the times taken have always been correct there may be some truth in this, but it is very doubtful, as the stop-watches of seventy years ago were not always accurate, and at any rate Lottery had the character of being faster on the flat than many racehorses.

There was much evidence during the early days of steeplechasing that the horses mostly chosen for it were by the stoutest sires known that had been proved over King's Plates and Cup courses. The great Leicestershire steeplechasers, Clinker and Glasher, were both by Clinker, second in the St. Leger of his year, and winner of gold cups over four miles at Lancaster, Nottingham, and Derby. He was, moreover, the sire of Clinkerina, the dam of Humphrey Clinker, the sire of Melbourne. At that time there were running in steeplechases Flacrow by Blacklock; the Poet, by Catton, the greatest long-distance runner of his day; Magic, by Amaurs, son of Don Quixote, son of Eclipse, and a right down good horse over four miles, as shown by the way he beat Trionhonius in a single-handed encounter over that distance. Grimaldi, by Grimaldi, a great cup horse, and Vivian, by Fencer, a notable stayer of his time. Whether by accident or because sportsmen of that day would depend upon nothing but the sons of exceptionally stout Turf performers may be an open question, but most certainly the best of the early steeplechasers were of this particular sort of breeding, and it was so for the next thirty years, as to turn again to the Lottery field, the whole seventeen were by the best four-mile winner. So it was later, when Gay Lad, by Brutandorf, won the Grand National as the field was full of the sons of great horses, two being by Sir Hercules, one by Monteith, one by Irish Napoleon, one by Strephon, and another by Sir Gilbert. It never seemed to strike people that horses got by non-stayers, or those that were speedy themselves on the flat only, would do for steeplechasing until far into the sixties, when Emblem and Emblematic won when Jealousy was made such a certainty of.

For many years the steeplechasers were apparently hunting colts reared on farms and not broken at all until they were three years old. It was mostly the custom just to handle them at that age to get them quiet to mount, lead, and to be somewhat waywise and then they were turned out again for six months; thus they were very nearly four years old before being thoroughly broken, and from that time they would be just shown hounds, ridden over a few fences, but not be in regular work till well rising five. Even at that age a man is thought a fool to do anything like a long run with a hunter and it is common enough to hear old hands say: "They were running him well for thirty minutes or more, but as I was on a young horse I stopped there." That means a five-year-old. The modern steeplechaser, however, is generally a draft or recruit from the racing stable. He has been taken out of the paddocks before he is fifteen months old, and prepared for the yearling sale—that is, kept in a box, fed highly to make him fat and heavy, and led some hours daily to make him hard. Allowing even that he is an early foal, he is sold at eighteen months, broken at once and galloped generally, and sometimes raced, before he is actually two years old. Then he may race a dozen times that year in strict training all the time, and again at three, when he may, perhaps, change hands, as just the sort for jumping, and he will be quite a qualified steeplechaser at five. The inbred goodness of the thoroughbred will enable them to endure this life of slavery up to ten years or more; but is it common sense to suppose that they will be of the sort that hunting men like to see, or likely at all to complete the Grand National course.

The result of the last two years' races show that there is much in the old system that is superior to the new. Mr. Clearly, the breeder of Eremon, is a believer in not beginning too early, and Eremon was three years old before he was asked to carry anyone on his back and six before going into training. Then he progressed by degrees, won several steeplechases, and at last the Grand National when rising eight. The career of Rubio, last week's champion, is still more to the point. An American breeder, Mr. Haggins, brought over a large batch of yearlings to the Newmarket July sales. In all his imports numbered forty-two, and that they were a mixed lot is suggested by the prices they made, as one sold for 1,850gs., another for 650gs. a third for 600gs. and a fourth for 410gs.; but six sold for 10gs. each, three for 15gs. each, five for 20gs. and eight for 25gs., the average of all being 200gs. The expensive one was a winner named Convanmore, but as he only won one race as a three-year-old worth 165 sovs. it was but a poor return for 1,850gs. However, there were good winners among the lot—Watershed, who was bought for 200gs. and who subsequently won the Cambridgeshire, and Rubio, bought for 15gs. There were several small winners besides; so many lots of yearlings have done worse than those of Mr. Haggins. Rubio, it should be said, was converted into a hunting colt on a farm, by all accounts, and broken to follow hounds in due course then broke down in these duties, and laid by to recover again and like Chandler. driven in a gig, worked sound in that capacity under the tender mercies of commercial travellers and the winner at last of the Grand National. It all speaks volumes for what can be done with the thoroughbred horse. Give such horses time, and they are valuable for every kind of work, and in the hands of Irish or English men, holding what may be thought antiquated notions, they may prove very important and useful factors to the country.

It may not be generally known, but it is perfectly true, that just at the close of the Boer War, and after Mr. Bletsoe, a tenant farmer in Northamptonshire had won the Grand National with Grudon, a horse of his own breeding, and reared in the old system, he made a proposal to the Government that if he were given a grant of land in South Africa and a free passage for himself and his family he would take out his six sons, all practical farmers, horsemen good enough to ride steeplechases, and two of them qualified veterinary surgeons, together with Grudon and twelve picked mares. One of the sons mentioned rode Rubio, and Mr. Bletsoe at one time trained both the winner and the second. A system might be built up by a few English farmers like him to supply the new Territorial Army and to establish the right sort of settlers in South Africa, but this has been so far the work only of the Duke of Westminster, who some six years ago purchased several thousands acres in the Orange River state and divided it into farms for some of his Cheshire tenantry or their sons. His Grace has, in addition, sent out thoroughbred stallions and other highbred stock; and last, but not least, a pack of foxhounds to keep up the traditions of the hunting county of Cheshire.

There is much in steeplechasing to be considered from a national point of view. Any decadence in the steeplechaser should not be allowed, and the present falling away in the class to which Cloister, Manifesto, Ambush II., Why Not, and Congress all belonged should open the eyes of those in authority to certain facts—that the drafts from the racing stables are not the sort of horses to encourage: that short-distance steeplechases of two miles are a curse to the sport in favouring non-staying horses and moderate riding: and that the furore for handicaps should be modified by a partial return to the old custom of 12st. each, with penalties and allowances.

CALCUTTA FOOTBALL LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

CALCUTTA vs. GORDONS.—These teams met on the 13th instant and an easy win for the Gordons was expected. Such, however, was not the case for the C. F. C. gave them a hard fight. The Gordons were away at a start and Drinkwater scoredalmost immediately. Calcutta pressed and a good bout of passing culminated in Kingcome equalising. Both goalkeepers were tested before the interval, but there was no further score. On changing ends the Gordons attacked but were unable to get past Cooper and Gahan. At length McDougal put through but was judged offside. Shortly after Galletly put in a good shot, but Dods got to it after it had crossed the line. The referee consulted the linesman and awarded the point. Calcutta's efforts to equalise were unsuccessful, the Gordons winning by two to one. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Goal; Insch, backs, Montgomery and Aitken; halves, Hooper, Graham, Spence; forwards McNaughton, McDougal, Galletly, Drinkwater and Gilchrist.

CALCUTTA.—Goal; Dods; backs, Gahan and Cooper: halves, Stuart, O'Shea, Crawford, forwards, H. Sherman, V. Sherman, Taylor, Kingcome and Foster.

Referee:—G. W. Batho.

RANGERS vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on the Rangers' ground on the 13th instant an even game resulting in a draw of one all. Wright scored for the Dals and Postence for the Rangers.

HIGHLAND L. I. vs. CALEDONIANS.—Playing on their own ground last Saturday the Caledonians, who were without Rosser and Wilson, were beaten by the Dum-Dum team by three goals to two. Tobin scored twice for the home team in the first half, but on changing ends the H. L. I. put on three goals. Devlin (2) and Hogg being credited with the points.

H. L. INFANTRY.—Goal, Lees; backs, Tait and Todd; halves, Collins, O' Rourke and Scevity; forwards, Collin, Hogg, Duncan, and Ennis

CALEDONIA.—Goal, Anscombe; backs, Chandler and Stoddart; forwards, A. Brown, D. Brown, Tobin, Apcar and Corduvall.

Referee:—Mr. M. Remfry. (C. R A.)

GORDON vs. CUSTOMS.—This match was played in the Fort last Saturday, the Customs who were without McReady losing by three goals to one. The game was fast throughout: Drinkwater scored in the first half and the Gordons crossed over with the lead. They put on another goal before Smith scored for the Customs and Galletly added a third point for the Gordons before the call of time. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Goal, Inch; backs, Montgomery and Aitken; halves, Harper, Graham and Spence; forwards, McDougall, McNoughton, Galletly, Drinkwater and Gilchrist.

CUSTOMS.—Goal, Furtado; backs Vears and Goldsmith; halves, Marsden, L. A. Smith and Maitland; forwards, Alexander, Bower, L. H. Smith and Lovegrove.

Referee:—Mr. A. B. Rosser (C. R. A.)

Y. M. C. A. vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Y. M. C. A. ground last Saturday, the home team winning by two goals to one. The Young Men had the best of the first half and crossed over leading by a goal scored by Browne. McKay equalised on resuming, but Wright adding to the Young Men's score they won as stated. Lawton was injured early in the game and the Rangers played a man short. Teams:—

Y. M. C. A.—Goal, Bell; backs, Reynolds and Berkly; halves, Collingwood, Gay and H. Vanspall; forwards, Gillon, Ramsay, Wright, Browne and Rossetti.

RANGERS—Goal, Rhobottom; backs, Minet and Bennett; halves, Cody, Lawton and Cornish; forwards, McKay, Minet, Taylor, Little and Oliver.

Referee:—Mr. P. C. Margrett.

CALCUTTA vs. DALHOUSIE.—This game on the Calcutta ground last Saturday was fast but the play was not of a very high order. The shooting of both teams was poor. The first half was devoid of score, but on changing ends Sherman scored the only goal of the match. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Goal, Dodds; backs, Gahan, and Cooper; halves, Stuart, O'Shea, Crawford forwards, H. Sherman, Kingcome, Taylor, V. Sherman and Foster.

DALHOUSIE.—Goal, Hendry; backs, Storrie and Dunn; halves, Montgomery, Lees, Beadle; forwards, Holley, Barnett, Wright, Banham and Murdoch.

Referee.—Sergt. Curley.

CALEDONIANS vs. Y.M.C.A.—These teams met on the Caledonia ground on Tuesday last. An uninteresting game ending in a pointless draw.

DIVISION II.

ST. XAVIER'S O. B. vs. WANDERERS.—Played on the Customs ground last week St. Xavier's winning by two goals to nil. The Wanderers played a good game, but their shooting was miserable.

GORDONS "B" vs. LA MARTINIERE.—This game last Thursday ended in an easy win for the Gordons. La Martiniére were outplayed at all points and beaten by seven goals to nil.

ST. XAVIER'S O. B. vs. 75TH R. G. A.—Played on the 14th instant the game ending in a draw of one all. The first half was devoid of score; Savage put the gunners ahead after the interval and Galbreth equalised just before time.

MEASURERS vs. 75TH CO. R. G. A.—These teams met on the Measurers' ground last Saturday, the Artillery winning by two goals to nil.

WANDERERS vs. GORDONS "B".—On the National Association ground on Saturday the Gordons beat the Wanderers by two goals to nil.

ST. XAVIER'S O. B. vs. Y.M.C.A.—(Am) Played on the Armenian College ground on Saturday a well contested game ending in favour of the Old Xaverians by a goal to nil. McGuire netted just before time.

The following is the state of the Second League corrected up to Saturday:—

Gordons "B"	2	2	0	0	12	0	4
Sibpur	2	2	0	0	9	0	4

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SINCE the period covered by the remarks which appeared under the above heading in last week's issue, seven matches in the First Division of the League have been played off, of which those between Calcutta and the Gordon Highlanders and Calcutta and Dalhousie naturally attracted the greatest amount of public interest. Up to the present the standard of football displayed by the civilian clubs has been distinctly disappointing and unless they start in at once to improve and settle down they will scarcely be able to prevent the two military teams from waltzing away as they please. The Gordons have won all the three matches they have played so far whilst on the two occasions that they have appeared the Dum Dum men have lost only to their rivals in the Fort. It may be protested that it is still early in the season to talk about form but teams must make a start some time or other and, certainly, no civilian team can be pointed to at present with any confidence as a winning combination.

Caledonia and the Customs played a good hard match of it in their first meeting and the pointless draw which resulted sufficiently indicates the nature of the game. Caledonia is just one of those teams that ought to be coming along now with a sprint as it poesesses a good leavening of old hands and plenty of new ones to pick from.

Wednesday's game between Calcutta and the Gordons on the Calcutta ground brought the usual gigantic crowd to the ropes and an exciting, if not highly scientific, game resulted in a well deserved win for the Gordons by 2 goals to 1. Well deserved because they beat Calcutta at all points and made the civilian half-back line look schoolboys. The C. F. C. Selection Committee cannot yet congratulate themselves on the acquisition of a centre forward who looks anything like the genuine article such as Fyfe and Bertie Cooper taught us to expect. Taylor means well, but that is not sufficient recommendation for a centre forward. Everyone was glad to see Victor Sherman out again but it is plain that he dare not play his old, dashing game. Still he is to be congratulated on turning out at all with a knee which is liable to give at any moment. He and his brother and Kingcome are the bright features of a far from interesting forward line.

The Gordons have a splendid half-back line—quite one of the soundest defences seen in Calcutta for many seasons. Their assiduous nursing of their forward line must come as a revelation to many and their tackling methods are as vigorous as they ought to be. Of their forward line it is not possible, at all events at present, to speak in terms of unreserved praise. Their long, swinging passes from wing to wing are certainly puzzling the defences of local teams but there does not seem to be very much speed about them.

Who is responsible for the granting of permission to the Gordons to play their League fixtures on the Fort ground? This indulgence has never been permitted before and it will be a very great pity if this dangerous precedent is set up. Peter Jackson, the League Secretary, is away at Allahabad and it seems fairly evident that he can know nothing of it. Dave Walker has gallantly done all the rough work of getting the League into going order and as he has worked entirely without the aid of a Committee he probably does not care to take so important a question up on his own. Still, it seems imperative that a League Committee meeting should discuss the matter. Hitherto the Fort William team has always managed to play off its League fixtures on the Caledonia ground—indeed the League card has always been arranged to permit of this and is so arranged this season. Apart from the fact that matches played in the Fort have up to the present season never been allowed to count in local competitions the ground itself is entirely unsuited to football—that is to say, to League football. I believe that it is in daily use as a parade ground for which it was originally intended until some genius stuck up posts and called it a football ground. The Gordons are doing themselves incalculable harm in persisting in playing on this ground, for the I. F. A. certainly will not allow them to do so in the Shield Competition. The League Committee should not permit any delay in forbidding the Fort ground to League fixtures.

After a dull and spiritless game, Dalhousie managed to draw with their old rivals, the Rangers, the score being a goal apiece. After this valiant effort it is sad to note the downfall of the Rangers before the Christian onslaught. Unless they can recover with a desperate victory there seems every likelihood that the Rangers will have to make way for another team next season. Caledonia played up in most determined fashion against the H. L. I. last Saturday and were only beaten by 3 goals to 2 after a really refreshing match in which both sides played a fast and vigorous game. On the cast iron ground in the Fort the Customs went down before the Gordons by 3 to 1.

The game which caught the public eye last Saturday was, of course, the meeting between Calcutta and Dalhousie on the Calcutta ground. But the play was about the most insipid and disappointing exhibition of footer ever put up on this ground. Fred Lees and Holley did the lion's share of the work for Dalhousie whilst V. Cooper and Crawford were in good form for Calcutta. Neither team really had a goal amongst them and the goal which Calcutta managed to put on just before time was the result of a very suspicious pass to the younger Sherman who certainly looked as if he was—well—very lucky to have satisfied the referee. Sergeant Curley is such a sound man on the off-side rule that it is unwise to take him to task and he probably had some very good reason for letting Sherman go on. But the crowd never thinks of these things and that is how referees lose their reputations and their confidence. Beyond this incident, the game was the dullest thing to watch one could possibly imagine. A lot of tall kicking and furious running about was the general order of play and neither set of forwards ever got going. In this respect Calcutta was especially feeble and will continue to be until they find a centre forward. It is to be hoped that we may take it as a favourable omen that Bertie Cooper has been seen playing in "B" Team matches for Calcutta recently. If only he could get back half his old form he would still be the best centre in Calcutta.

The Calcutta "B" Team are making their annual excursion to Chinsurah next Saturday, a very hot combination having been gathered in by the energetic McDonald Smith for the occasion. In the Second Division of the League the Gordons second string are breaking down all opposition. This is a wonderfully strong football regiment, sporting eight Company teams, each of which can put a good hard game.

The following is the League Table up to and including last Saturday's matches:—

REFEREE.

High buildings, sir?" remarked an American contemptuously. "Why, in England you don't know what height is! Last time I was in New York it was a blazing-hot day, and I saw a man coming out of a lift wrapped from top to toe in bearskins, and I said to him, 'Why are you muffled up on a broiling day like this?' 'Waal,' he said, 'you see, I live at the top of the buildin', and it's so high that it's covered with snow all the year round!"

"Yes," said the Yankee, who stood on the upper deck of a Cunarder leaving Liverpool, "that England is the cussedest corner for tips I ever struck. I've been rooked at every turn for the last month, but," he added; savagely, "the last try-on was a bit more than I could stand."

"What was that?" inquired the man to whom the remark was addressed.

"Well," said the Yank, "I had tipped every one down to the man that gummed the wrong labels on my luggage, and I went into the waiting-room on the landing-stage to wash my hands of everything English, and what do you think stared me in the face when I was finished but 'Please tip the basin' I'm dashed if I did."

Two things you can find in the dark—a carpet tack and Limburger cheese.

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT, BOMBAY.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE vs. WORCESTER REGIMENT.—This game, on the 9th instant, was very evenly contested throughout, the Medicals winning after a great struggle by a goal to nil. The first half was devoid of score; both goals were visited in turn but the custodians kept their charges intact. On changing ends play became faster; the Worcesters pressed hard and obtained several corners in succession but their luck was out and the Medicos getting possession besieged the military goal. A corner was unproductive and then George got the ball and banged it into the net. The soldiers in spite of a determined attack could not score and the game ended as stated. Teams:—

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Goal, Emile; backs, Mungavin and Gimi; half-backs, Cowper, Cuzen, and Osborne; forwards, Cahill, Honey (captain), Hanson, George, and Bell.

WORCESTER REGIMENT.—Goal, Foster; backs, Lieutenant Burrough and Paton; half-backs, Stone, Buffery, and Smith; forwards, Welsh, Lieutenant Henry (captain), Smith, Rowbothom, and Clarke.

Referees:—Messrs. Ward and Weyman.

JHANSI RAILWAY INSTITUTE vs. 79TH CO., R.G.A.—On the 11th instant the Gunners met the Railway team. The latter were expected to win easily but the 79th Co. played a splendid game and though Jhansi won they were made to gallop and only scored one point—registered by Troupe in the second half. Teams:—

JHANSI RAILWAY INSTITUTE.—Goal, McCombie; backs, R. Fitzpatrick and Essai; half-backs, L. Fitzpatrick, B. MacMullen, and MacLeod; forwards Clough, Jones, Troupe, Steele, and G. MacMullen (Captain), 79TH R.G.A.—Goal, Mercer; backs, Sergt. Watts and Southcott; half-backs, Terry, Henry, and Beaumont; forwards, Capt. Moberley, McDonald (Captain), McGharry, Lieutenant Cudlip, and Forde.

Referees:—Messrs. Ward and Weyman.

POONA GYMKHANA vs. ROYAL SCOTS.—A splendid game was witnessed when these teams met on the 12th instant. On form the Gymkhana were expected to win, but expectations were not realised for the Royal Scots were victorious by 3 goals to 1. The first half was very evenly contested, play being up and down for most of the period. Each team scored a goal, Bremner putting through for Poona and Henderson for the Scots. The second moiety was most exciting; the Poona men made great efforts to secure the lead but without success and the Scots relieving the pressure attacked for a spell. There was no score, however, and time was called with the score one all. Extra time was agreed upon and the first half of this was also unproductive. On crossing over Poona pressed but the Scots transferred play and Lucas scored: from the bully off Collins got away and rushed the ball through again just before the whistle. Teams:—

POONA GYMKHANA.—Goal, Capt. Rutter; backs, MacPherson and Lieut. Airey; half-backs, Wilson, Ainsworth, and Brind; forwards, Paris, Davis, Heath, Bremner, and Graham.

Referees:—Messrs. Ward and Weyman.

Semi-Finals.

JHANSI RAILWAY INSTITUTE vs. PIONEER H. C.—Contrary to expectation this game, on the 13th instant, ended in win for the Pioneer H. C. The holders were looked upon as certain winners, but the Pioneers played an excellent game and proved themselves the better team. The opening exchanges were even and then Jhansi pressed, Clough drawing first blood. Even play followed till the local team getting possession attacked vigorously; they were kept out for a time but eventually obtained a corner from which Gunpat equalised. The Pioneers continued to attack and Gunpat put through once more. From the bully off Jhansi got away and after two unsuccessful shots the ball was put through by Troupe. Changing ends with the score 2 all Jhansi attacked but the Pioneers' custodian cleared and play was taken to the railway team's territory where Choksey hit through. Jhansi made great efforts to equalise but without success and the Pioneers thus qualified for the final, winning by 3 goals to 2. Teams:—

PIONEER HOCKEY CLUB.—Goal, Canteenwalla, (captain); backs, Karanja and Palwankar; half-backs, Divecha, Motisha, and D. Driver; forwards, Choksey, Gunpat, Baloo, Shivram, and J. Driver.

JHANSI RAILWAY INSTITUTE.—Goal, McCombie; backs, R. Fitzpatrick and Essai; half-backs, MacMullen, F. MacLeod and W. Macleod; forwards, Still, Jones, Troupe (captain), L. Fitzpatrick, and Clough.

Referees:—Messrs. Weyman and Ward.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE vs. ROYAL SCOTS.—Played on the 14th instant, the Scots were outplayed and though they played with great determination throughout they were unable to score and the Medicals ran out victorious by 2 goals to nil. Both goals were scored in the first half, George and Honey being credited with the points. The Medicals pressed during the second half but Wilson in goal saved in great style and prevented further score. The Scots got away occasionally and had their shooting been accurate would have scored. Teams:—

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Goal, Emile; backs, Mungavin and Gimi; half-backs, Cowper, Cuzen, and Osborne; forwards, Sinclair, Honey (captain), Hanson, George, and Bell.

ROYAL SCOTS.—Goal, Wilson; backs, Mackenzie and Watson; half-backs, Evans, Powell, and Prior; forwards, Shawcross (captain), Lucas, Ross, Henderson, and J. Wilson.

Referees:—Messrs. Ward and Weyman.

THE FINAL.

PIONEER H. C. vs. GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—A huge crowd of spectators assembled on the Marine Lines ground last Saturday to witness the final game in the tournament. Play was fast and well contested from start to finish. The Medicals pressed at the start and missed a couple of opportunities of scoring. Then the Pioneers attacked but without success; up and down play was followed by attacks on the Pioneers' goal. They were all repulsed and the Medicals' territory was next invaded, Shivram putting through for the Pioneers. On changing ends the Medicals pressed and several shots went wide, but George at length got possession and equalised. The game from this point was highly exciting; both goals were visited in turn and then the Pioneers besieged the Medicals' goal and from a mêlee D. Driver scored a second point. The Grant College played for all they were worth to get on terms again but without success, the Pioneers thus winning by 2 goals to 1. Teams:—

PIONEER HOCKEY CLUB.—Goal, Canteenwalla (captain); backs, Karanja and Palwankar; half-backs, Divecha, Motisha, and Mehta; forwards, Choksey, Gunpat, D. Driver, Shivram, and J. Driver.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Goal, Emile; backs, Gimi, Mungavin; half-backs, Osborne, Cuzen, and Cowper; forwards, Bell, George, Hanson, Honey (captain), and Sinclair.

Referees.—Messrs. Ward and Weyman.

The cup and medals were presented by Mrs. Greenfield, wife of Brigadier General Greenfield who made a short speech congratulating winners, runners up and tournament committee.

THE OOTY HORSE SHOW.

COMMITTEE AND JUDGES :

COL. S. G. M. LAWLESS.
COL. C. E. NUTHALL.
MAJOR C. B. TOTTENHAM.
COL. DESARAJ URS.
CAPT. THE HON. DOUGLAS PENNANT.
COLIN MACKENZIE, ESQ.
CAPT. G. HESELTINE.

Honorary Secretary :—H. A. IRWIN, ESQ.

First Day, Friday, 15th May 1908.

THIS annual show was started to-day, a very large number of horses competed in each of the several classes. Although clouds gathered from time to time throughout the day they did not break and in the afternoon the excellent band of H. E. the Governor provided the music. There were large contingents from the sister stations, and Lady and the Misses Lawley were seen in the Pavilion at an early hour while Sir Arthur Lawley put in an appearance in the afternoon after Council Chamber business. Results appended :—

CLASS IX.—Arab Ponies.
H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Ruby 1
Captain Dennistoun's Saturn 2
Major Tottenham's Ek commended.
Also exhibited.—Capt. R. P. Stares' Cracker II, Colonel Afzur's Fateh, Capt. the Hon'ble Joicey's Hailfellow, Mrs. Henderson's Cyril, Capt. Guyon's Grey Fool, Colonel Lawless' Little Darling William, Colonel Lawless' Mr. Frankenstein, Mr. Emslie Brown's Redskin and Capt. Lamb.on's Flame.
Judges.—Colonel Nuthall, Captain Heseltine and Colonel Desaraj Urs.
Remarks.—A very good class indeed.

CLASS XII.—Cobs, for horses between 14 and 15 hands.
Miss C. Lawley's Corona 1
Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's Firefly 2
Hon'ble Mrs. S. M. Fraser's Rufus commended.
Also exhibited.—Capt. Heseltine's Jumping Moses, Capt. Heseltine's Diabolo by Yardarm, Col. Desaraj Urs' Hebe H.H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Khusru, Minor Wuyyur's Chaplain, Lt.-Col. Gunn's Jerry Mr. A. B. Jackson's Peggy, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's Sirdar and Mr. J. H. Robertson's Beansome.
Judges.—Colonel Lawless, Captain Douglas Pennant and Mr. Colin Mackenzie.
The winner was easily picked out. Some of the horses shown although they came under the size could scarcely be said to come under the definition of cobs.

CLASS XI (a).—Polo Ponies, Australian and English.
H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Mystery 1
Mr. Astley's The Girl 2
H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Locksley 3
Also exhibited.—Captain C. C. Dangar's Phillipine, Captain C. C. Dangar's Opal, Captain Duff's Rudolph, Captain Heseltine's Eau-de-vie by Rosewater, Captain Heseltine's Playboy, Captain Torrie's Tommy, Captain Torrie's Sub, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Dainty, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Koree, Mrs. R. C. Stephen's Beryl, Major R. C. Stephen's Beresford, Mr. Mason's Wanderer, Mr. Mason's Grey Witch, Mr. Walker's Tarcoola, Mr. Walker's Emerald, Major Tottenham's Lady, Col. Lawless' Linton, (Idolater—Lady Linton) Colonel Lawless' Little Corporal, Major Lovell's Horace, Colonel Leader's Tartan, Colonel Leader's Columbine, Colonel Leader's O'Brien and Major Johnstone's Torpedo.
Judges.—Colonel Desaraj Urs, Colonel Nuthall and Mr. H. A. Irwin.
Remarks.—A very good class on the whole. Mystery and The Girl were a class above the others and Locksley did his flag turning best.

CLASS XI (b).—Polo ponies, Arabs and country-breds, 14-1 and under.
H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Dauntless ... 1
H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Ruby 2
Col. Lawless' Little Darling William commended.
Also exhibited.—Mr. N. C. Russell's Flying Fish, Captain R. P. Stares' Cracker II, Capt. Dennistoun's Saturn, Mr. Mason's Jiu Jitsu, and Col. Lawless' Mr. Frankenstein.
Judges.—Major Tottenham, Captain Heseltine and Colonel Desaraj Urs.

CLASS I.—Heavy weight hunters up to 14 stone.
Lieutenant-Colonel Lucas' Great Northern ... 1
Lieutenant-Colonel Lucas' Hasheen 2
H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Abbot commended.
Also exhibited.—Mr. S. R. Wybrant's horse, Capt. Willis' Belinda, Capt. Heseltine's Lorry, Mr. H. D. Taylor's Mona. Major Annesley's Souvenir, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Geoffrey, Rajah of Pittapur's Busaco, Capt. the Hon'ble Douglas Pennant's Jim and Major Graham's John Peel.
Judges.—Colonel Lawless, Colonel Nuthall and Mr. Colin Mackenzie.
Remarks.—The Judges had great difficulty in separating the first and second, but beyond Abbot the others were hardly up to the class.

CLASS VI.—Hacks, ponies.
Major Tottenham's Acid Drop 1
Captain Heseltine's Eau-de-vie 2
Mrs. R. Stephen's Beryl commended.
Also exhibited.—Captain Duff's Rudolph, Captain Heseltine's Sunflower, Mr. Astley's The Girl, Colonel Afzur's Aniza, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Gallant, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Jean, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Elaine. Capt. Torrie's Tommy, Mr. Mason's Wanderer, Minor Kumaramungalam's Akbar, Lieut.-Col. Gunn's Jerry, Col. Lawless' Little Darling William, Mr. Emslie Brown's Lady Lovelace, Major Graham's Guinevere, Capt. Lambton's Duikes and Capt. Lambton's Mimy.
Judges.—Colonel Nuthall, Colonel Desaraj Urs and Captain Douglas Pennant.
Remarks.—A fairly good class; the first and second were difficult to separate.

CLASS XVI (a).—Jumping Competition (horses) over one hurdle, two gorse fences, in and out, and a 12 feet water jump.
Major Graham's John Peel 1
Mrs. Ismay's Day and Night 2
Mr. Kenworthy's Light of Asia 3
Also exhibited.—Mr. N. C. Russell's Pillot, Mr. Clinch's Euclid, Captain C. C. Dangar's Boomerang Mr. G. W. McArthur's Shuckboro, Captain Willis' Belinda, Mrs. Romilly's Dolly Gray, Capt. Duff's Zeila, Capt. Duff's Menelik, Capt. Heseltine's Jumping Moses, Capt. Heseltine's Lorry, Capt. Heseltine's Fairy Queen, Capt. Heseltine's Christopher, Hon'ble Mr. S. M. Fraser's Narbonne, Major J. H. Annesley's Souvenir, Capt. C. V. Edwards' Cossack, Mr. Kenworthy's Dandy, Rajah of Pittapur's Busaco, Capt. the Hon'ble Douglas Pennant's Right Angle, Mrs. Gillman's Peggy, Mr. Mitchell's Hereward, Mr. Pringle's Moachim, Mr. Pringle's Advance, and Captain Lambton's Duikes.
Judges.—The Committee.
Remarks.—The winner was a brilliant jumper and Day and Night was also a clever jumper. The jumping on the whole was much above the average.

CLASS XV.—Single Harness Ponies.
Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's Pumpernichel 1
Colonel Desaraj Urs' Hebe 2
Captain C. C. Dangar's Cream Cheese 3
Also exhibited.—Mrs. Pearce's Lady, Captain Heseltine's Sunflower, Captain C. V. Edward's Jane, Mrs. Henderson's Judy, Miss Reuben's Kim, for sale Rs. 700, the Jaghirdar of Arni's Traveller, Mrs. Younghusband's Lady, Mr. A. Y. G. Crum's Gaylad, and Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's Sirdar.
Judges.—Major Tottenham, Mr. Colin Mackenzie and Mr. H. A. Irwin.
Remarks.—A fair class; the second and third were good steppers.

CLASS XVIII.—Chargers and Hired Chargers.
Mr. Keran's Spearmint 1
Captain Heseltine's Lorry 2
Mr. E. H. Stocker's Comet 3
Also exhibited.—Mr. N. C. Russell's Flying Jib, Mr. Clinch's John, Capt. C. C. Dangar's Autonomy, Mr. Vanneck's Starlight, Mr. G. W. McArthur's Monarch, Capt. Miss Grisette, Capt. Heseltine's Humpty Dumpty, Major J. H. Annesley's Souvenir, Mr. Kenworthy's Dandy, Major R. C. Stephen's Morn, Mr. Mason's Conundra, Captain the Hon'ble Douglas Pennant's Sandy, Colonel H. P. Leder's Curlieu, Mr. N. M. Kennard's Carbine, Mr. Mitchell's Hereward, Mr. Hope Johnstone's Mountain King, Major Smyth's Starlight, Captain Webster's Persimmon, Mr. Pringle's Moachim, and Major Graham's John Peel.
Judges.—Colonel Lawless, Major Tottenham and Colonel Nuthall.

CLASS XVII. (a)—Driving Competition (open.)
Captain Duff's Buggy 1
Also exhibited.—Capt. C. C. Dangar's Cream Cheese, Miss C. Morgan's Turnout, Capt. Heseltine's Sunflower, Capt. C. V. Edwards' Jane, Jaghirdar of Arni's Turnout, and Mrs. Younghusband's Lady.
Judges.—The Committee.

Second Day, Saturday, 16th May 1908.

PROCEEDINGS commenced punctually, in capital weather, and in the afternoon His Excellency the Governor's band again provided the music. The attendance was not quite so large as on the previous day. After the grand Parade Lady Lawley kindly distributed the Prizes which, I believe, as in the previous year were manufactured by Messrs. Burton and Sons, of local fame. Appended are results :—

CLASS II.—Medium weight hunters between 12 and 14 stones.
H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Nur Jehan ... 1
Mr. Pringle's Moachim 2
Capt. Heseltine's Jumping Moses 3
Also exhibited.—Mr. E. H. Stoker's Comet, Mr. A. A. Dangar's Banjo, Captain C. C. Dangar's Comet, Autonomy, Captain Willis' Grisette and Belinda, Miss Forsyth's Karolye, Captain Heseltine's Wait-a-bit, Major Napier's Artaxerxes, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Kaisar, Captain the Hon'ble Douglas Pennant's Sunny Jim and Yellow Sea, Colonel Leader's Elastic, and Captain D'Oyly's May.
Judges.—Colonel Nuthall, Major Totthenham and Mr. Colin Mackenzie.
Remarks.—A very fair class.

CLASS III.—Light weight hunters under 12 stones.
Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's Firefly 1
Capt. Heseltine's Fairy Queen 2
Mrs. Marjoribank's Weybridge commended.
Also exhibited.—Mr. Vanneck's Starlight, Miss G. G. Dangar's Richmond, Miss P. P. Dangar's Miss Nobbs, Captain Dennistoun's Ardamine, Captain Duff's Zeila, Captain Heseltine's Boldie, the Hon'ble Mr. S. M. Fraser's Narbonne, Colonel Afzur's Kaisar, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Mr. Brown and Miracle, the Minor Zemindar of Kavalapara's Ambrose, the Minor Zemindar of Wuyyur's Chaplain, Mrs. R. C. Stephen's Bags, Captain the Hon'ble Douglas Pennant's Bombay Duck, Mrs. Henderson's Queen of Diamonds, Mrs. Horne's Clipper, Mrs. Horne's Petronel, Mr. A. B. Jackson's Peggy, Mrs. Gillman's Peggy, Major Lovell's Lady and H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley's Lockmore.
Judges.—Major Tottenham, Colonel Lawless and Mr. H. A. Irwin.
Remarks.—A very good class and it took a long time to separate the winners.

CLASS IV.—Pony hunters.
Mrs. R. C. Stephen's Beryl 1
Mr. Astley's The Girl 2
Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's Pumpernichal commended.
Also exhibited.—Mr. E. H. Stoker's Monsoon Captain Duff's Rudolph, Captain Heseltine's Playboy, Captain Torrie's Tommy, Major Napier's Celia, Captain Edwards' Jane, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Locksley and Jean, the Minor Zemindar of Kumaramungalam's Akbar, Mr. C. J. Weir's Monarch, Colonel Lawless' Little Darling William and Linton, Major Lovell's Lady, Mr. Mitchell's Hereward, Colonel Leader's Tartan, Major Graham's Guinevere, Mr. W. W. Phillips' Dandenong, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's Sirdar, Major Johnstone's Torpedo, and Miss Reuben's Ruby.
Judges.—Colonel Nuthall, Captain Douglas Pennant and Colonel Desaraj Urs.
Remarks.—The first and second stood a good way ahead of the commended pony. The class on the whole was a poor one.

CLASS V.—Hacks horses.
Miss C. Lawley's Grayling 1
Miss P. P. Dangar's Miss Nobbs 2
Mr. Majoribank's Weybridge commended.
Also exhibited.—Captain C. C. Dangar's Autonomy. Mr. Vanneck's Starlight, Miss G. G. Dangar's Richmond, Captain Duff's Zeila, Captain Heseltine's Lorry and Wait-a-bit, Hon'ble Mr. S. M. Fraser's Narbonne, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Geoffrey, Khusru, Mr. Brown and Miracle, Rajah of Pittapur's Busaco, the Minor Zemindar of Kavalapara's Ambrose, the Minor Zemindar of Wuyyur's Chaplain, H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley's Lockmore, Mr. Mitchell's Hereward and Captain D'Oyly's Mary.
Judges.—Major Tottenham, Captain Douglas Pennant and Mr. Colin Mackenzie.
Remarks.—A big lot, of fair quality.

CLASS XIV.—Single harness horses.
Mr. E. H. Stocker's Garrison Belle.
Also exhibited.—Hon'ble Mr. S. M. Fraser's Rufus, and Major Tottenham's Mary Anne.
Judges.—Colonel Lawless, Captain Heseltine, and Mr. H. A. Irwin.
Remarks.—The winner has a very smart turnout. Mr Fraser's turnout was also very fair.

CLASS XVI (b).—Jumping competition (ponies).
Mr. Emslie Brown's Lady Lovelace 1
Mr. W. W. Phillips' Dandenong 2
Also exhibited.—Captain Heseltine's Beau Brummel and Playboy, Mr. C. J. Weir's Monarch, Colonel Lawless' Mr. Frankenstein, Major Lovell's Lady, Colonel Leader's Columbine, Major Johnstone's Torpedo, Major Graham's Guinevere, and Captain Lambton's Duikes.
Judges.—The Committee.
Remarks.—The style was very good. The Judges had difficulty in deciding between the two winners and they did the jumps a second time.

CLASS VII.—Ladies' saddle horses.
Mrs. Horne's Clipper 1
Miss C. Lawley's Grayling 2
Mrs. Marjoribank's Weybridge commended.
Also exhibited.—Mrs. N. C. Russele's Flying Jib, Captain C. C. Dangar's Autonomy, Mr. Vanneck's Starlight, Miss G. G. Dangar's Richmond, Miss P. P. Dangar's Miss Nobbs, Captain Dennistoun's Ardamine, Mrs. Forsyth's Greymare, Miss Hammick's Rex, Mrs. R. C. Stephen's Bags, Mrs. of Diamonds, H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley's Lockmore and Mrs. Ismay's Day and Night.
Judges.—Colonel Lawless, Major Tottenham, and Captain Heseltine.
Remarks.—A poor class. Many of the animals shown should have been shown as cobs.

CLASS VIII.—Ladies' Saddle Cobs and ponies.
Major Tottenham's Acid Drop. 1
Mrs. R. C. Stephen's Beryl 3
Also exhibited.—Mrs. N. C. Russell's Grummet, Captain Dennistoun's Tioba, Mr. Astley's The Girl, Mrs. Napier's Sky Pilot, Mrs. Carmichael's The Star, Mrs. C. V. Edward's Jane, Mr. Walker's Tom Tucker, Mr. Walker's Tarcoola, Mrs. Henderson's Judy and Cyril, Miss Reuben's Ruby, Mr. C. J. Weir's Monarch, Miss Gunn's Cricket, Major Tottenham's Ek. Mrs. Gillman's Peggy, Mrs. Younghusband's Lady, and Miss C. Lawley's Corona.
Judges.—Colonel Nuthall, Mr. Colin Mackenzie and Colonel Desaraj Urs.
Remarks.—A fair class.

CLASS XVII. (b).—Driving competition for Ladies.
Captain Duff's Buggy 1
Also exhibited.—Captain C. C. Dangar's Cream Cheese, Miss C. Morgan's Turnout, and Miss Reuben's Turnout.
Judges.—The Committee.
After the first drive through the chattics Captain Duff's Buggy, driven by Miss C. Lawley, Captain Dangar's Cream Cheese, driven by Miss Dangar and Miss Morgan's turnout, driven by the owner, tied. In the second drive round, Captain Duff's Buggy won easily.

The Naturalist.

NEW HIMALAYAN SEROWS.

MATERIAL in the Natural History branch of the British Museum, supplemental by living specimens in the establishment under his charge, has enabled Mr. R. I. Pocock, the energetic Superintendent of the Zoological Society's gardens in the Regent's Park to determine the existence of four distinct races of serow in the Himalayan area, in place of the one hitherto recognised. The latter, it will be remembered, was regarded by the late Dr. Blanford as a distinct species, under the name of Nemorhaedus bubalinus, although it was subsequently relegated by Mr. Lydekker to the rank of a race of the typical Sumatran species with the designation N. sumatrensis bubalinus. This view is accepted by Mr. Pocock, who proposes, however, to transfer the generic name Nemorhaedus to the gorals and to replace it in the case of the serows by Capricornis. Whatever may be the real rights of the matter it seems to us that no possible advantage can accrue from the proposed change, while an abundant crop of confusion may well arise, we shall continue therefore to follow in this respect the usage of Blanford and Lydekker.

The ordinary Himalayan serow, or as it may now be called the Nepalese serow (N. sumatrensis bubalinus) is characterised by the legs being dirty white below the knees and hocks, whereas in the typical Sumatran race, which is generally believed to extend into Burma, these parts are of the same rufous tint as the upper portion of the fore-legs and the thighs. Years ago, however, General Kinloch shot near Darjeeling a serow intermediate in this respect between the Sumatran and the Nepalese races; and of this intermediate type the British Museum possesses the mounted skin of a specimen from the same locality which lived for some time in the Duke of Bedford's park at Woburn. Its intermediate character is shown by the fact that the lower segments of the legs are mingled rufous and white; the black coat of the upper parts being short, and the under-parts blackish brown.

In the case of such an intermediate type two courses present themselves,—either to unite all three forms under a single name, or to give separate designations to each of them. Mr. Pocock has chosen the latter alternative, and if this view be accepted, the Darjeeling race will be known as N. S. jamrachi.

Next comes the Chamba race (N. S. rodoni), characterised by the long thick hair, supplemented by a coat of under fur, of jamrachi, and the white under-parts, lower segments of the legs, throat patch, and the space between the two branches of the lower jaw.

Still more distinct appears to be the Kashmiri race (N. S. humei), typified by a head presented in 1891 by Mr. A. O. Hume to the British Museum and characterised by its rufous brown colour, exclusive, of course, of the usual white muzzle. The writer of this article has more than once thought of naming this head, but hesitated from a fear that its colour might be due to fading or to immaturity. Complete skins of this Kashmiri race would be most acceptable at the British Museum; and sportsmen should accordingly be on the look-out for the animal during this shooting season.

In addition to these three new Himalayan races of serow, Mr. Pocock has described a fourth from the Selangor state, of the Malay Peninsula, which, according to the old nomenclature, will be known as N. S. robinsoni. It is a black race, differing from the other black Malay race, N. S. Sumatrensis, by the practical absence of any red in the mane.

The discrimination of these various colour phases of the serow is well enough in its way, but unless it leads to something further we are not very much the forwarder. In this instance, however, it happens that there is a matter of wider interest; for in the serow we actually have a case of the evolution of a specialised black animal from the more generalised red type within the limitations of a single species; the only other analogous instance among ruminants that occur to us being that of the African buffalo, where the small Congo race represents the primitive red and the large Cape race the specialised black phase. Usually the development of blackness makes itself apparent at first only in the adult males, as in the well-known cases of the Indian black buck and the African white-eared kob; but in the serow, so far as we know at present, both sexes are either wholly red or wholly black, according to their respective races, or intermediate between the two.

The red type is represented by the Arakan race (N. Sumatrensis rubidus), which is believed to be a wholly rufous animal, although personally we have only seen the head. The Kashmiri race (N. S. Neemei) if wholly rufous brown, will be another representative of this red type. Intermediate types are represented by the Sumatran (N. S. typicus). Darjeeling (N. S. Jamrachi), Nepalese (N. S. bubalinus) and Chamba (N. S. rodoni) races; while as examples of the black type may be cited the Malay N. S. Sumatrensis and N. S. robinsoni, together with the Anamese and Tonkinese N. S. marcolinus. The latter, which was described by the late Pere Heude, seems, however, to be in a somewhat unstable condition as regards colouring: unless indeed the variations are to be explained by differences of age or sex. In all cases, however, the black seems to extend down the legs as far as the knees and hocks; but in some specimens of this race there is a certain amount of rufous mingled with the black of the upper parts; while in others the coat is almost completely black; although there may be a few white hairs in the mane. The white maned serow (N. arcuaticaudes) of North-west China, which may be merely another race of the ordinary species, affords yet one more example of the intermediate type of coloring, the dark area of the body extending down to the knees in the four limbs, whereas the hind legs and thighs are wholly rufous.

As already mentioned, Mr. Pocock proposes to transfer the name Nemorhaedus to the gorals; but he also suggests an alteration in the names of the two Himalayan representatives (whether species or races is immaterial) of that group. By Blanford and Jordon the Himalayan goral (Urotragus, or Cemar, goral) was taken to be a brown animal, and consequently when Mr. Lydekker met with a grey representative of the group in that area he naturally regarded it as new, giving it the name of U. bedfordi. Mr. Pocock is, however, of opinion that this grey goral was really the type of the original species, and accordingly proposes a new specific name —Hodgsoni—for the brown animal. Nevertheless it appears to us that such a change is quite unnecessary, as it only throws matters into confusion without any resulting advantage. The brown goral has indeed been so long accepted as the representative of Urotragus gorl that it may be said to have acquired an all sufficient title by length of occupation: our own opinion in such matters that a "time-limit" ought always to be recognised after which no change is permissible. In conclusion it may be mentioned that Mr. A. E. Leatham, on his return from a shooting trip in the mountains of the Ichang district of Central China, sent to the Natural History branch of the British Museum for identification the mounted head of a goral from that district, which turned out to belong to a species never before seen in England. The general colour of the hair of the upper surface of the head and neck is rich chocolate-brown, but the throat has a large patch of bright yellow. In most gorals this patch is white and extends to the chin. From this yellow throat-patch Mr. Leatham's animal is evidently identical with the Kemas arnouxianus of Pere Heude, described in 1888 in the well-known work on the mammals of China issued in parts at Shanghai. According to our nomenclature, the yellow-throated goral, as the species may be called, should stand as Urotragus arnouxianus. The colour of the throat-patch in this goral affords another instance of that marked tendency to the development of bright yellow and orange in the mammals of Tibet and the highlands of West and Central China.

BOMBAY NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

A MEETING of the members of the Bombay Natural History Society took place at the Society's Rooms last Thursday, Mr. K. B. Kama presiding.

The election of the following 12 new members since the last meeting was duly announced:—Mr. Leonard J. W. Robinson, R. H. A. (Meerut); Mr. A. H. Napier, I. M. S. (Rawalpindi); Mr. N. M. Jenkins, R. G. A. (Karachi); Mr. D Quinlan, C. V. D (Calcutta); Mr. H. P. Ball (Ajmere); Mr. A. F. Brooke, B. F. A. (Meerut); Mr. C. de M. Welborne (Poona); Mr. W. P. Pechey (Bombay); Captain E. S. Gillett, A. V. C. (Ahmednagar); The Conservator of Forests, Berar Circle (Amraoti); The Mess Secretary, 87th Punjabis (Jhansi); and Mr. J. Donald, I. F. S. (Chanda, C. P.)

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE MUSEUM.

The Honorary Secretary, Mr. W. S. Millard, acknowledged the following contributions since the last meeting:—

ALTERATION TO RULES.

Sundry small alterations to the Rules which were proposed by the Committee were accepted and agreed to.

INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES.

The Secretary mentioned that this book was expected to be published in England about the end of this month or early in June; so that subscribers would get their copies, he hoped, soon after that date.

PAPERS READ.

The following papers were then read:—

1. On the ferns of the Bombay Presidency, by Rev. E. Blatter, S.J.
2. A branching Date Palm (Phœnix sylvestris), by F. Field.
3. Occurrence of the Crested Teal (Eunetta falcata), by L. C. Glascock.
4. Note on the Common Indian Crocodile (Crocodilus palustris), by P. E. Burn.
5. Abnormal tail in a lizard (Hamidactilus gleadovi), by G. A. D. Stuart, I.C.S.
6. Severe effects from the sting of Vespa orientalis, by Captain MacWatters, M.B., I.M.S.

All of which will appear in the Society's journal.

A vote of thanks to the authors of the papers terminated the meeting.

Cards.

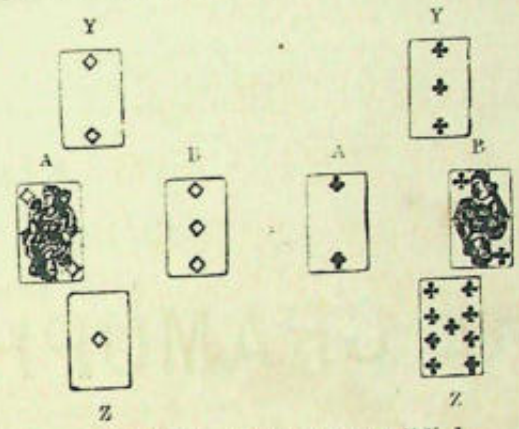
BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 61.

B is marked with the queen of spades, A's length in the suit being uncertain. Z should play two rounds of trumps, keeping the King in dummy as a card of entry, and at trick 4 he should lead a spade. If A follows suit, and neither opponent held four trumps originally, the game is on the table; for Z discards his last spade on the ace of hearts, ruffs the third round of spades with an honor, clearing the suit, and puts dummy in again with the king of trumps. If on the other hand, A ruffs, he may lead up to Z in clubs, which will make his king good, or open hearts in which case Z ruffs the third round of spades as before, and wins the fourth and fifth with dummy's ace and small one, thus getting rid of two clubs, after which he must lead to his king and trust to finding the ace with B. If all the adverse trumps are in one hand Z has less chance of going game, but the above line of play is the best to meet all cases.

Problem No. 62.

Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 0. Z deals and declares no-trumps. Y's (dummy's) and B's (third player's) hands are:



Y's HAND (DUMMY).

Hearts, J, 8, 7. Diamonds, K, 10, 2. Clubs, K, J, 10, 6, 3 Spades, Q, 4.

B's HAND (THIRD PLAYER).

Hearts, A, Q, 10, 2. Diamonds, 7, 5, 3. Clubs, Q, 5, 4. Spades, 9, 8, 6.

The first two tricks are as follows:—

Tricks: A B, 0: Y Z, 1. Tricks: A B, 1: Y X, 1.

What ought B to lead, and why?

"Tis better to have run and lost, than to have scratched and paid the entrance fee.

Lecturing on the Drama of Ancient Greece, a journalist declared recently that one of the actors of that period built a house with the stones that had been thrown at him for bad acting. If some of our modern aspiring actor-managers would follow this example, there would be no dearth of theatres.

AN AMERICAN COCK-TAIL.

The Frenchman loves his native wine,
The German loves his beer,
The Englishman loves his 'alf-and-'alf

The Irishman loves his "whisky straight,"
Because it gives him dizziness;
The American has no choice at all,—
So he drinks the whole darned business!

"Anything new this morning?" said the chief engineer, as he leaned his back against the cylinder and steam chest for the purpose of warming his vertebral column.

"Nothing," said the foreman, listlessly, "except that fresh paint you're leaning up against."

"You made a mistake in your paper," said an indignant man, entering the editorial sanctum of a daily journal. "I was one of the competitors at an athletic entertainment last night and you referred to me as 'the well-known lightweight champion.'" "Well, are you not" inquired the sporting editor. "No, I'm nothing of the kind! was the angry response: "and it's confoundedly awkward, because I'm a coal dealer."

LITTLE THINGS WHICH ANNOY.

To awaken from a nap in a railway coach and discover by the smiles of the women that they heard you snore.

To receive slight thanks for a wedding present which cost more than you could afford to spend.

To be compelled to put in a conspicuous place an ugly object because it was a present from a friend.

To let a highly respectable footman help you on with a seedy coat.

To have your beautiful dinner partner stare at you while you try to decide which is the fruit and which is the cheese knife.

A DERBY PUZZLE.

A FEW weeks ago the Derby, the blue riband of the English turf, which will be run on famous Epsom Downs on Wednesday next, 3rd June, had the appearance of being a one-horse race. Now, however, it looks so open that it is safe to predict that it will be contested by one of the largest fields since Hermit with J. Daley in the saddle, carried off the spoils for Mr. H. Chaplin in 1867 from twenty-nine opponents. The reason of it all is the disappointing display given by His Majesty's Perrier in the Two Thousand Guineas Stakes at Newmarket recently. Prior to that event the Royal colt had been lauded up to the skies by everybody at the head-quarters of the English turf as an equine giant. "A worthy son of Persimmon" and a racehorse which was "sure to emulate the deeds of his illustrious sire." Perrier may yet demonstrate that his friends were justified in saying all the nice things they have said about him. But it is very doubtful.

Without any better reason than the eloquent testimony of money, the public had come to the conclusion that Perrier was almost certain to win The Guineas, and to supplement this performance by making a bold bid for the Derby, and great was the disappointment when he collapsed like a selling plater. An American-bred and American-owned colt in Norman III., scored and by his sudden jerk from second-rate handicap form to an easy classical winner, he pleased no one except the bookmakers.

The winner is owned by Mr. August Belmont, President of the Jockey Club of America, who now joins the small band of American owners whose horses have won classic races on the English turf.

Prominent American turfites have often tried to win English classics during the last thirty years, but prior to this season's "Two Thousand" only Messrs. P. Lorilard, W. C. Whitney, Richard Croker and Mr. Foxhall Keene have succeeded. Messrs. Lorilard, Whitney and Croker have won the Derby. Mr. Lorilard in 1881 with Iroquois; Mr. Whitney twenty years later, with Volodyovoski, and Mr. Croker twelve months ago with Orby, Mr. Keen's success was scored in the Oaks of 1901 with Cap and Bells II.

So easily did Norman III win at Newmarket that it is possible he may score again at Epsom, and should he do so he will enable his popular owner to claim the record of being the first American to win two English classics in the same year. Difficulties, however, present themselves in the shape of Colonel's Hall Walker's pair White Eagle and Royal Realm and Mr. J. Buchanan's Mountain Apple. And, maybe, there are others. Of Colonel Walker's pair only one—"White Eagle"—ran for the "Guineas" and he finished third, but he bore the impression of being so very backward that he is certain to be heavily supported for next week's race, always providing that there is no corroboration of the street corner report that Royal Realm is better than his stable companion.

Concerning Mountain Apple very little of what he is capable of doing has been allowed to leak out, but it was taken as a very significant tip when at the sale of the late Duke of Devonshire's racing stud, Mr. Buchanan paid the big sum of 3,600 guineas for Acclaim which finished third in last year's St. Leger and 1,050 guineas for Hillsprite; it being construed that these expensive purchases were made solely with the view of having "something good" to try Mountain Apple with. The latter like Royal Realm was one of the Derby cracks that did not contest "The Guineas." He has not been out this season and as a matter of fact has only been seen on a racecourse twice. These public appearances were made in his two-year-old days and he was successful on each occasion. Making his debut a Goodwood last year in the Findon Stakes he easily defeated his nine opponents, and he again scored in the Clearwell Stakes at Newmarket in the autumn when those behind him included several youngsters which had gained winning brackets.

If Norman III is beaten at Epsom we think it will be by the best of Colonel Walker's pair or Mr. Buchanan's representative.

Bitter pill as was the utter rout of the King's colt at Newmarket, it does not follow that he will not win the Derby, an eventuality, as we have said before, we doubt that he will, but several instances could be quoted of horses who have acquitted themselves as disappointingly as he in The Guineas who have yet won the Derby. His own sire, indeed the mighty Persimmon, cut up so badly in his trial for the Two Thousand that it was at one recognised that it would be useless to send him to the post, so he was struck out. In that trial, Persimmon was pitted against moderate animals, and he could scarcely raise a gallop. Had he been started for the Two Thousand, he would certainly have cut an infinitely more inglorious figure than his son Perrier did at Newmarket recently, yet as we all know he won a sensational Derby, and what a magnificent horse he gradually developed into.

A very curious story is being told about Norman III. It is said that but for a mischance he would never have run in England at all. When a year last autumn, Mr. August Belmont selected a batch of yearlings to send to Newmarket to be trained by John Watson, the son of Octagon and Nineveh was not included. At the last moment, however, a filly named Precillo, who was one of the chosen, was seized with a serious illness, and so Norman III was substituted. In a letter explaining the circumstances, Mr. Belmont said he was forwarding the colt because he thought he might grow into a nice horse. Backers of Sir Archibald for the Guineas when they learned these facts, appreciated the force of the proverb that "great events from little causes spring."

INDIAN AND EUROPEAN BOWS.

It is a matter of common knowledge that archery reached its zenith in England during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Many of the decisive victories won by the English during this period, were mainly due to the powerful and rapid shooting of their archers. The bow having attained such extraordinary prominence as the national weapon of that time. It is but natural that the accounts which have been handed down to posterity of its powers and accuracy, should have been largely exaggerated.

It is possible that a few of the most powerful and highly skilled English archers, may have been able to reach a range of 400 yards, but the great majority of our stout yeomen were certainly unable to shoot even 300. This latter is the longest distance that has been attained by any archers of modern times.

In 1856, Mr. Ford, author of "Archery: its Theory and Practice" succeeded in shooting an arrow 307 yards, during a dead calm. In a book called "The English Bowman, or Tracts on Archery" we find it recorded that in 1798, a Mr. Troward shot 340 yards, in presence of several members of the Toxophilite Society. In 1795, Mahmoud Effendi, Secretary to the Turkish Ambassador, shot an arrow 482 yards, with a Turkish bow. This feat was accomplished in presence of three members of the Toxophilite Society, and the substantial accuracy of the record seems to be beyond question.

The English long bow of the middle ages, was made of yew imported from abroad. There is, and always has been, enormous difficulty in obtaining yew of perfectly straight grain and free from knots, in lengths sufficient for the making of bow staves. Thus most of the long bows of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, made up for unavoidable defects in the wood, by having plenty of substance. Old contemporary prints are clear evidence as to the massiveness of the English long bow.

The modern self-yew bow is built on more scientific lines. Great pains are taken to obtain yew which is perfect in grain, and the bow is seasoned for several years while in the rough. The best yew bows of to-day are very slight in the stave, as compared with the weapons of our forefathers, yet nevertheless possess considerable range and power. I have a 50lb. self-yew by Aldred, and with this while testing some home-made reed arrows have succeeded in shooting 200 yards. With good English flight arrows of well seasoned deal, the same bow would no doubt carry 50 or 60 yards further. 50lb. is, of course, quite a light pull for a bow, and the long shots recorded above were attained with bows of 65lb. or more.

The Bhil bow is usually made of male bamboo, and is about five feet in length.

The arrows have reed shafts, and iron heads of varying form. There are usually four long low feathers, roughly attached to the arrow shaft with thread. The nock is made by lashing two projecting bamboo splinters one on each side of the flat ended reed. The delicate shaft itself being too weak to cut a notch in. Moreover the string is made of a slither of skin from the female bamboo, and so has to be very broad to give the required strength. By lashing splinters of bamboo on to the end of the arrow, the nock is made the full width of the arrow shaft's diameter.

The Veddahs of Ceylon use a six foot bow of springy wood, not bamboo as one might have expected. Their arrows also are unusually long, and winged with three strips of peacock feather, instead of the four seen in Bhil and Afghan arrows. The Veddah is, however, a miserable shot with the bow, and his long arrows are made clumsy and top-heavy by their knife blade iron heads.

The Andamanese make their bows paddle shaped at each end. They use barbed arrows with a string attached, for harpooning large fish. But when shooting the peculiar striped pigs which are the largest game found in the islands, heavier arrows made of hard wood instead of the usual bamboo are employed. The arrows are not feathered, which always indicates a very primitive condition in archery. As might be expected under the circumstances, the Andamanese are very poor shots even at short range. I collected some bows together with a number of arrows of different sorts, while visiting the Islands, and tried shooting with them; they are very inferior in effectiveness, to both the the Bhil and Veddah bows.

In Rajputana bows of steel are occasionally made. These weapons also I have thoroughly tested. Steel is a very bad material for bow making, as its recovery is so much slower than that of suitable wood. A steel bow with a pull of between 50 and 60lb. will only throw an arrow about two-thirds of the distance that a 50lb. yew, or good composite wood bow of similar strength will. One has only to pull a steel bow, and a yew, once or twice alternately to realize what a want of life there is in the metal as compared with the wood. Short steel bows of immense stiffness proved, however, perfectly satisfactory for the military cross-bows of the middle ages. This latter weapon was indeed more powerful than the long bow, but was greatly handicapped by the length of time necessary for winding the string into the notch by means of the cranequin. At least six arrows could be shot from the long bow for every quarrel from the cross-bow. Speaking generally, the bows and arrows of all savage tribes compare most unfavourably, both as regards range and power, with the perfect equipment of the modern English archer.

Though the Englishmen practises archery merely as a pastime, he may rest assured that even with a most moderate degree of practice, he could go into the jungles, with his self-yew, or composite wood bow, and English deal arrows, and back himself to beat any savage of them all at archery: this too despite the fact that the savage's daily dinner depends on his prowess with these primitive weapons.

"Rumblings, costermonger-cries, hissing oil lamps, tomatoes, rhubarb, meat, fowls, and china." It reads like an election offering, but is in reality a Belgian writer's impression of London on Saturday nights.

The Building News remarks that women do not succeed as architects. But look at the fine houses several of our actresses draw.

"Now, Tommy," said Mrs. Bull, "I want you to be good while I'm out."

"I'll be good for a shilling," replied Tommy.

"Tommy," she said, "I want you to remember that you can not be a son of mine unless you are good for nothing."

The professor had just finished a lengthy lecture on poisons and antidotes. "Supposing you were called to attend a patient who had swallowed ten grains of oxalic acid, what would you administer." "The sacrament," shouted an Irish student from the rear of the hall.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The final programme for the first Tollygunge Gymkhana, is now printed and there are a few alterations to note from the advance draft. The Jiu Jitsu Stakes has been made catch weight 12st. or over instead of "as you please" as last year. The Maiden Race (closed) is now so only in name as the terms are now for horses that have never won a race value Rs. 500 and the two pony races have been fixed. They are both closed races, one four furlongs for maiden ponies, 14-2 and under. Weight for inches; 14-2 to carry 11st. 7lb. and the other a three furlongs scurry for bona fide polo ponies 14-1 to carry 11st. 7lb. The chief innovation, however, is in the new condition that G.R.'s who have ridden two or more winners under C.T.C. or other recognized rules will be penalized 5lb. in the closed events. This is a very good idea as it gives more chance to the coming generation to get mounts. The regular riders at Tollygunge, however, who will be affected are Messrs. T. Evers, Wheeler, Glen, K. Hamilton, Barrow, and R. A. C. Pugh.

We hear that there is a new addition to the ranks of Calcutta G.R.'s arrived to swell the list and make some of the present lot look to their laurels. Mr. Campbell we believe is the name—not Mr. Kenneth Campbell, who has been riding here off and on for some seasons, but another gentleman of that name who comes with a great reputation from the Straits, where they say he held his own with the best of their pros. He can ride somewhere about 8st. 5lb. and will be very useful in the light weight division, where riders are badly wanted.

The Mussoorie Polo Tournament was concluded on the 22nd instant, when the holders, the 17th Lancers beat the 31st Lancers in the final by 6 goals to 1. Details further on.

It is with deep regret we have to record the death of that good sportsman, Mr. H. Balfour Bryant, of the Highland L.I., who came out to Bombay last November, as extra A.D.C. to Sir George Clarke. Mr. Bryant fell a victim to enteric fever last month and after a long struggle succumbed on the 16th instant. A first class racket player, Mr. Bryant won the Military Singles Championship in 1904, 1905 and 1907, while in the doubles with Mr. H. P. Bramwell Davis he scored an uninterrupted series of victories from 1901 to 1907 inclusive.

The sporting correspondent of an Australian exchange writes:—It is pleasing to note that, notwithstanding the good impression made by English sprinters in India, buyers from the latter country have not quite deserted us. On Monday The Owl and Lord Merv, both short-distance horses, were bought by T. Scott, and Longchamps by F. Reynolds. I understand that horses who require only a light preparation are those most suitable for India, and the three named have always run their best races when fresh. At the same time, 500 guineas is a good price for Longchamps, who up to the present has shown himself a rather washy customer. Another purchase of T. Scott's was the 13-3 pony Thelma, who is about the best of her height at present racing in Sydney.

The recently formed Rangoon Football Club gives promise of long life and activity. The membership roll is increasing daily and an enthusiastic meeting of members on the 18th discussed the rules and elected office-bearers for the present season. Mr. George Blackstock was elected president, Messrs. R. A. Horne and J. E. DuBern, vice-presidents, Mr. J. P. Nowell, Honorary Secretary, and Treasurer, while the results of the ballot for members of the committee were as follows. Messrs. Trevillion, S. C. Coombes, R. R. Deacon, F. A. White, and A. Roberts.

As our readers are aware the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals from time to time offer prizes for essays on kindness to animals, and amongst the contributions by children are some that are distinctly funny. At the annual meeting of the Dover Branch of the Society recently, some of the "howlers" were quoted, and amongst the most amusing were the following:—"Feed your horse with horse-radish and horse-chestnuts if you want your horse to grow." "If you are very kind indeed to your dog it may even follow you to your grave." A little girl wrote: "The Esquimaux are very fond indeed of their reindeer; in fact, they love their reindeer sometimes more than their wives. But then they are very useful to them." animals should not be cut, one of the competitors quoted the following verse of Scripture: "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."

THERE was a good attendance of members and their friends at the Boat House of the Calcutta Rowing Club on the Alipore canal last Saturday—the opening day of the rowing season. The boats were well patronised and a pleasant afternoon was spent. The Club's prospects are decidedly brighter. Several new members have been enlisted and the Club bids fair to enjoy its old time popularity.

THE following are the results of important cricket matches played in England during the week:—

Surrey beat Worcester by 14 runs.
Notts beat Leicester by 217 runs.
M.C.C. beat Worcester by 88 runs.
The matches between Yorkshire and Essex, Lancashire and Derbyshire, and Surrey and Warwickshire were drawn.

ANOTHER excellent programme was put through at the Simla Gymkhana last Saturday. The first event was for gentlemen, each competitor having to ride leading a spare horse and to change horses without dismounting. Colonel V. Bookes was 1st, Mr. Fell 2nd. In the Ladies' Angling Stakes, Mrs. McLeod was 1st, Mrs. Ross 2nd. In the Affinity Wand Race (a special event for the Thackersay prize) Miss Mahon and Colonel Brookes were 1st, Mr. and Miss Black 2nd. The Ladies' Egg and Spoon Race was won by Mrs. Fell, Mrs. Cogswell being 2nd. In the Menagerie Stakes, Captain and Miss Deane were 1st, Mr. and Mrs. Fell 2nd.

SOME of our readers will be interested to learn that the Eastern Landing, Clearing and Forwarding Co., Ld., have now been officially appointed as Agents for Calcutta and district for Messrs. Cox's Shipping Agency, Ld., of Charing Cross, London. This Agency was started by Messrs. Cox and Co., the well known Army Bankers, to deal with their shipping and passage department generally and they are gradually extending their Agencies and Branches to all districts for the benefit of their numerous Government and Army clients and are now prepared to attend to all their clients' wants and enquiries.

BACHELOR'S LODGE has been scratched for the Derby.

THE Regatta held at Naini Tal on the 16th instant, provided those present with a most enjoyable afternoon's entertainment. The programme, which was short and select, opened with Scratch Fours. Three boats competed, the winners being Mr. Peake, Major Benynon, Mr. Hudson and Mr. Rouse. The next event was the "Beauty in Distress" Race. In this the man had to rescue a lady, left forlorn on the lake in a canoe without a paddle. Miss Ottley was rescued by Captain Rasbotham in the first heat and Mrs. Ley rescued by Mr. Williams in the second. The P. and O. Race brought out three boats: the winning crew was Miss Mackenzie, Miss Slaughter, Mr. Joup, Mr. Rouse and Captain Dundas. The Dog Race was won by Captain Law's Tim Sahib. Miss Winby and Major Grove won the Mixed Double Sculls and a Duck Hunt brought the proceedings to a close. The ducks were cast adrift and were to be caught by men standing in canoes—kneeling or sitting down to disqualify. All the competitors parted with their boats and the event resolved itself into a swim. The ducks all evaded capture.

MR. JEROME D. TRAVERS, the United States amateur golf champion, has not exactly denied the rumour that he is competing in the British Championship, but he says it is "not authentic"—whatever that may mean.

THE veteran cyclist, E A. Pearson, of Sydney, lately broke the Sydney to Melbourne record on a Rover bicycle fitted with Dunlop tyres and Armstrong Triplex three-speed gear. The old record stood at 90h. 6m. He made remarkable time, arriving at Sydney in 57h. 24m., breaking the record by no less than 32h. 42m. The country traversed is excessively mountainous, and the "roads" for nearly all the way are merely wagon-trails and the ride in consequence created a great sensation in Australia. During the course of this most trying ride neither the machine nor the tyres gave the slightest trouble.

THE Billiards Association has received a challenge from Mr. Inman to play for the championship, accompanied by a cheque for £25. This is the first challenge for the championship since 1904.

IT seems tolerably certain that aspirants to English Channel honours will be numerous this summer. Among them will be Miss Lilian Smith, captain of the Ladies' Perseverance Swimming Club. Possessed of wonderful physique and stamina, this young lady, although only eighteen years of age, has accomplished some remarkable performances, including a swim of four and a half hours in a rough sea when she accompanied Jabez Wolffe while the latter was making one of his notable attempts. As the only lady competitor in the fifteen miles' swim through London last September, she finished fourteenth, thus beating twenty male competitors, including several Continental champions. Previous to making her attempt in August, Miss Smith will endeavour to swim from Blackwall to Gravesend (twenty-six miles), Brighton to Worthing and back (twenty-two miles), and Dover to Ramsgate (twenty miles).

IT would seem as if the fight for the heavy-weight championship will drift to America after all. Judging by what is set forth in our London Sporting Letter this week there was little chance of a meeting between Johnson and Burns in England. Burns declined the offer from the National Sporting Club of a purse of £2,500. He stood out for a guaranteed sum whether he won or lost, and this proposition the National Sporting Club would not think of entertaining.

WHEN the last received mail left London there was a movement afoot to erect some sort of national memorial to the late Captain Webb. An enthusiastic admirer named Alfred Jones, Treasurer of the Channel Swimming Club, has addressed the following letter to some of the home papers. "I was present a short time ago at a dinner which included among the guests some of our most representative sportsmen; many subjects were touched upon in the conversation which followed, but one which excited the most general interest was, what Englishmen or British subject of modern times stood out as the most conspicuous in the possession of courage, and the particular qualities for which, as a sporting nation, we are distinguished? It was finally conceded that no man in recent years had bequeathed a more imperishable heritage of courage and determination than poor Captain Webb. The more knowledge we gain of his marvellous aquatic feat, the greater must be our admiration. The record of Captain Webb remains untouched. His ill-fated attempt at Niagara—though hazardous, and perhaps foolhardy, was, at all events, a conclusive proof of the daring and intrepidity of the man; and if there is anything in the words of President Roosevelt 'that a nation's reputation for courage is built up on the individual efforts of its members,' then Captain Webb must have contributed more than his share in demonstrating to the world the bravery of a British subject. His inspiring example should stimulate the efforts of all who are nobly endeavouring to circulate in the minds of present-day youths the great value of efficiency in the art of swimming, and I feel confident that if your influential journal opened a subscription for the purpose of creating some suitable—if simple—memorial which would rescue one of the most splendid athletic achievements from fading out of the memory of this and future generations, your efforts would meet with a hearty and liberal response."

IT is satisfactory to hear that the racing stud of the late Duke of Devonshire is not to be entirely broken up though some of it was brought to the hammer early this month at Newmarket. Twenty-two lots were disposed of and realised 20,230 guineas. The highest price of the day was obtained for Acclaim, a four-year-old son of Amphion—Claque, who was bought by Mr. J. Buchanan for 3,700 guineas. Last season Acclaim won the Newmarket Stakes, of the value of £2,050, and ran third in the St. Leger to Woolwinder and Baltinglass. Acclaim's half-brother, Fugleman, who is by Persimmon, was sold to Mr. S. Darling, his trainer, for 3,400 guineas. Fugleman won two races last year, and dead-heated for the Newbury Summer Cup, of the value of £1,027, and was strongly fancied for the Cesarewitch when he became a victim to a stable epidemic. Some nice two-year-olds were sold, Sir R. Jardine going up to 1,200 guineas for a son of Florizel II. and Carim, and the late Duke's trainer, Mr. S. Darling, giving 1,100 guineas for a son of Gallinule and Grand Prix.

"ON the 6th instant, I wired you full details of the race for the Two Thousand Guineas Stakes" writes our London Correspondent; "the result was a startler and the show made by the King's colt, Perrier, a bitter and general disappointment. The favourite proved himself a god of clay. It is true the course had been drenched with rain just before racing began, but it is nonsense to attribute his defeat to this: he was fairly and squarely beaten by better horses and there seems little more to be said. Favourites for this race have gone down over and over again, but probably no greater disappointment was ever experienced by the public than that which attended Perrier's beating. The King and the Prince of Wales watched the race from the Jockey Club enclosure, and His Majesty, shutting his glasses before the leaders had passed the winning-post, smiled as the outsider in the American colours scored. It was a most decisive victory, and if this form may be taken as true we should see Norman III. follow in the footsteps of Iroquois, and the Derby fall for the second time in its long history to an American horse. But in spite of this reverse the Derby betting has not undergone the big change one might expect, which seems to show that in certain quarters the chances of the King's colt are not considered quite hopeless: he has retired to tens, a price accepted occasionally to a "pony." On the 8th instant, Norman III., stood at the head of affairs, for, after 800 to 100 had been laid, 100 to 14 was called on the field. Mountain Apple, although constantly asked for, was only once backed; then 500 to 60 was entered, and he looked like being actual favourite at any moment. Lesbia was once supported at 500 to 70, but subsequently 100 to 12 could be got in many places. Royal Realm was perhaps in more request than anything, for, after 1,000 to 80 had been booked, the price was again wanted, and furthermore, we heard offers to take 1,000 to 90, but nothing over 1,000 to 100 was forthcoming. A fresh introduction to the list is Elm Twig, out of Persse's powerful stable, at 500 to 15. This is a bay filly by Orme out of Lucky Hit, and as a two-year-old she only competed once, when she was unplaced to Sir Archibald in the New Stakes at Ascot. Prices:—

Mr. De Wend Fenton, has been reinstated by the Stewards of the Jockey Club. Our readers who follow English racing will recollect that three years ago he was warned off as the result of an enquiry into his riding of Pitch Battle in a match against Lord Gerard's Piari, at Sandown Park.

At the Annual General Meeting of the M.C.C. at Lord's on the 6th instant, Frederick Archibald Vaughan Campbell, 3rd Earl Cawdor, was nominated President of the Club for the coming year. His Lordship was educated at Eton and Oxford, but was not in either Eleven. He was M.P. for Carmarthenshire from 1874 to 1885 and in 1905 became First Lord of the Admiralty in the late Unionist Government. He was born on 13th February 1847, and became a member of the M.C.C. in 1875.

Mr. C. W. H. Taylor, the famous Old Blue, and recently Captain of the Calcutta Rowing Club, has been taking part in Cambridge rowing lately. As will be seen in our review of English Sport further on, he steered Messrs. Powell and Williams to victory in the final of the Cambridge, or Magdalene Light Pairs, a race he won three times himself.

Our Wellington Correspondent writes:—The first Skittle Gymkhana of the season came off at the Race-course, Wellington, on the 18th instant, and a programme of six events was gone through. It was indeed a great pity that Jupiter Pluvius was unexceptionally unkind and throughout the afternoon there was a heavy downpour of rain, which not only made the field unfit for sports, but one or two events had to be postponed in consequence. Of all the events, the Menagerie race proved considerable merriment, for in this event the ladies came to the field with all their pets: a turkey, a calf, a hen and dogs, and at a given signal had to start and reach the post. The calf refused to budge out an inch from the field, while the turkey and hen were dragged to a certain distance, then they too refused to go further, and the two ladies (Miss Ryan who came with her dog Toddle and Mrs. Brown, with her poodle Tim) had an easy victory. The "Telegram Race" cudgelled the brains of the fair sex, for they had to make out a message from the word "skittle," while the "simple arithmetic race" was also looked upon with horror by the ladies. For the gentlemen, there were two good events, tent-pegging with lances and pig-sticking on ponies, the latter event was cancelled on account of the rain. The members of the Gymkhana Club were "at home" and dispensed hospitality in a liberal fashion. The whole of the local society was present and the proceedings were enlivened by the band of the 2nd Dorset Regiment, which played a choice selection of music under the baton of Mr. A. Hazell, L.R.A.M. The following are the names of the successful competitors:—

Tent-Pegging won by Lieutenant E. W. McArthur, (13th Hussars, Secunderabad); Driving Competition 1. Mrs. Buchan. 2. Miss Wyley. Menagerie Race—Miss Ryan, (with her dog Toddle), Mrs. Brown (with her dog Tim). Telegram Race.—Mrs. Young with Major Arnold, (2nd Dorset Regiment); Miss Avis McArthur with Lieutenant F. A. A. Steele, (Royal Fusiliers, Secunderabad). Simple Arithmetic.—Mrs. Buchan.

At a preliminary committee meeting of the Durand Football Tournament, held at Simla on the 25th instant, it was decided that the tournament should commence on the 14th September.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 8th May 1908.

We are on the threshold of the season. London is fillin rapidly, less deserted look the West End mansions; more swagger equippages are about in the parks, the big shops are beseiged, our better halves have discarded the sombre habiliments of winter and now appear radiant in bright hued "creations" or is it "confections"—one gets so mied over these matters. The great hostesses are beginning to make their arrangements, daily there appear fresh announcements of shows and entertainments, and the usual preparations are being made to celebrate what we call "Empire Day"—that festival of tea-fights, flags and junketting enjoyed by our school children. For the rest we have the lilac and the may, the fruit tree blossoms, the tulips, hyacinths, crocuses and "nodding daffodils," the emerald grass and the trees in their new garb of soft light green to emphasise the fact that the uncouth person named Boreas, has finally taken his long deferred departure and sweet, garland decked summer looms big and bright before us.

The Academy opened its portals to us on Monday. I was among those who flocked to Burlington House early to discover the picture of the year and inspect the crowd. The ladies provided a feast of colour which compensated for the dullness of the day and the collection, taken all round, was up to the average. At the moment the popular verdict has hardly taken definite shape, and opinions are divided as to what is the "best picture." A strong attraction is Mr. Charles Sim's "The Fountain" and another is the Hon'ble John Collier's "Sentenced to Death." It is much discussed and, like much of this artist's work, it tells a story. The scene is a medical specialist's consulting room, the doctor has just told a young man that he has but three months to live. The physician's strong face and sympathetic expression, the horror and despair on the face of the patient are depicted with wonderful power. The largest canvas in the exhibition is Sir Hubert Herkomer's portrait group, which I must confess I did not like, his rather blatant style of portraiture does not appear to me. His other portraits—the Bishop of London and Father Vaughan—are better. There appear to me to be more portraits than ever of vulgar nobodies and uninteresting somebodies, but there are at least a dozen of merit, though among these, one is sorry to remark, there is no work by any new artist. The portrait of Miss Ivy Lilian Close, by Mr. Arthur Hacker, is beseiged all day. She was the winner of the recent Daily Mirror beauty competition, and she certainly is a nice looking damsel; the Mirror proclaims her as the "loveliest woman in England" and she has not lacked for advertisement as you may imagine, but I do not subscribe to this verdict. I dare say her portrait is by now familiar enough to Indian readers. There is a regrettable dearth of really good sporting pictures this year: but of these more anon.

Much interest is being taken in the libel suit brought against The Times by Mr. John Murray and his brother. The well-known publishers allege that the paper published certain libels contained in articles contributed by "Artifex" last October, the subject being "The Letters of Queen Victoria," a book published by Murray. In the letters of "Artifex" the price—three guineas—charged for the book was said to be extortionate, and it was also said that "the great personality of Queen Victoria had been exploited." The defence pleaded that the letters in question were "fair comment on matters of public interest." The case is proceeding.

A further stage in the campaign against the odious Licensing Bill was reached this week when the petition against it, signed by 600,000 people in London, was presented in the Commons. It arrived in a two horse van and when the closely packed documents were arranged in front of the mace the pile resembled a small haystack!

"Will the honourable member bring it to the Table, or as much of it as he can?" said the Speaker in formal tones. Lord Robert Cecil left his seat, and amid the smiles of the House conveyed a foolscap sheet to the clerks at the Table, waving his hand towards the great pile as he walked forward. Members laughed their congratulations.

As soon as the petition had formally been received, six attendants were called in. They bowed to the Speaker, then set themselves to the task of conveying the petition out of the House. They had, of course, to do it piecemeal. While they were thus employed Liberals cheered ironically.

Then the Radicals presented their petition in favour of the bill, the 169,510 signatures being written on a continuous sheet a mile and a third in length and which, when carried in, resembled a huge roll of carpet. More cheers and laughter. The next public move is the mass meeting in Hyde Park towards the end of the month.

Mme. Suzanne Despres met with a hearty reception at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Tuesday night. The piece chosen for the opening of the French season there was Henry Bernstein's "La Rafale." Mme. Despres is a true artist, who produces her effects naturally, and who plays well within herself.

In "La Rafale," the plot of which is simplicity itself, turning on the enleavour of a lady to obtain means to pay the gambling debts of her lover, she ran through the whole gamut of emotion without once losing grip of herself, and perhaps the greatest praise we can give is when we say that playgoers, whose French is rudimentary, will follow and enjoy the play even without understanding much of the dialogue. Perhaps, however, she was even better in "Poil de Carotte," the sensitive, misunderstood lad—the "ugly duckling" of modern French drama—played as an afterpiece. She was given excellent support by the rest of the company, of whom M. Lebourg, as the father, and M. Chevalet as the gambling lover, played admirably.

The revival of "The Dairymaids" at the Queen's Theatre was enjoyed by a crowded and responsive house. The piece has been put on well and there is enough of fresh feature to please the most fastidious. With new dresses and new scenery, the performance was quite fresh and delightful, and with heaps of new business and the addition of several entertaining numbers merrier and brighter than before. To Mr. Dan Rolyat the humorous honours of the evening easily fell, and he was in capital form last night, his energy and comic resource being prodigious. Miss Phyllis Dare got a most hearty reception as Peggy, and her singing was most expressive, especially in "The Sandow Girl" and "Put Me Into Trousers." Miss Florence Smithson, as Peggy's sister, also has a new song, "Boy Blue," which should prove very popular.

"The Admirable Crichton," at the Duke of York's, reached its four hundredth performance on Saturday and shows no diminution in popularity—indeed on this occasion its reception was more cordial than usual.

The return to farce made by Mr. Cyril Maude in "Pro Tem" has been attended by a fair measure of success. It is not to be compared in fun to the "Earl of Pawtucket," but it is not without its humorous moments and occasionally it achieves sustained hilarity. It is adapted from the French farce "Boute-en-Train" and in parts there is no denying it is rather moss grown. The story tells how Dodo Brezard, who is accompanying his friend, Victor Radinot, and his friend's wife, Madame Radinot, on a holiday, is mistaken by the owner of a small casino at a little French watering-place for a prince. Owing to the fact that Dodo has gambled away the funds of the party, they arrive penniless, but, trading on his supposed exalted rank he works them into a very comfortable position. All sorts of complications arise, terminating with the arrival of the real Prince. Sometimes the piece bustles into life, and Mr. Cyril Maude, as Dodo, acting on broad farcical lines, gets a good deal of fun out of his part. Mr. O. B. Clarence is amusing in a character rather out of his line, and Miss Rosalie Toller and Miss Hilda Antony look and act prettily; but some of the party have been badly cast, and the piece suffers in consequence.

The scheming widow of a wealthy brewer has supplied Mr. Somerset Maugham with the material for clever comedy, which in its extremely funny situations borders closely on farce. "Mrs. Dot" is playing to big business at the comedy and in it Miss Marie Tempest in the name part is fitted with a role that suits her admirably and she does full justice to it. Fine parts also fall to Messrs. Fred Kerr, Graham Browne, Kenneth Douglas and Miss Marie Illington; they all act up to their reputations and contribute largely to the general success.

The jaded appetites of the women of what is known as the "Smart Set" are always ready to welcome a novel sensation. Their drug-destroyed senses have been recently titivated by a new attraction at a certain West End place of entertainment, where a band of wrestlers, many of them of noble proportions, are engaged nightly in a series of Homeric struggles on the "mat." These contests have been eagerly watched by a large clique of Society women, who are enthusiastic in the ignorant applause they lavish and the sums they wager upon the muscular objects of their admiration. Some of these attentions have been so marked as to cause embarrassment to the performers. To what lengths such unhealthy interest can go was shown when, on the eve of one athlete's departure to fulfil a professional engagement on the Continent, his admirer arrived on the scene prepared to make the same journey! What manner of creatures must the husbands of these Society "ladies" be?

I referred in a recent letter to the Marble Arch improvement scheme which is now completed and the roadway thrown open to traffic. The originator and designer comes forward with an ingenious explanation. He says that without the constant delays to traffic which had been so frequent of recent years, the people of London would save £20,000 a year, or the exact cost of the improvement. According to a Blue-book, 29,320 vehicles passed the Arch on an ordinary day. This represented 95,000 passengers, whose time, if only worth 6d. an hour, would save the sum named. Let new thoroughfares be opened out at short intervals say we all.

Indian visitors to London this summer will have opportunity of noting a very important addition to its handsome buildings. I allude to the latest palatial hostelry—the Piccadilly Hotel and Restaurant—which faces both Piccadilly and Regent Street. It is noble in its outer proportions, ultra luxurious in its internal economy. The scheme of decoration of the foyer and hall combines simplicity and dignity, and the central lounge and restaurant, in the French renaissance style, have an effect similar to that of the "Golden Gallery" in Paris. In the basement are the spacious and tastefully-decorated grill-room, the billiard-rooms, the Turkish, swimming, and other baths, which are reached by lift from the other floors. In every room in the hotel there is an electric clock and telephone, and green curtains are provided to be drawn over the ordinary cream-coloured ones should a darkened room be necessary for sleeping. Another attraction is the lovely roof garden.

Have you, Mr. Editor, or any of the readers of The Indian Field, ever had the enterprise and hardihood to partake of paddy bird's eggs? Has any enquiring Anglo-Indian gourmet ever experimented with the eggs of the river gull, the black diver, night heron or other member of the numerous tribe of kooch nahins? If not, now would seem to be a suitable time for the possessors of jaded palates to embark on a voyage of discovery. For the penguin's egg has just been introduced to Londoners by the Trades' Commissioner of the Cape Government and at sixpence each it finds a ready market. That alert vegetarian crank and first rate athlete, Mr. Eustace Miles, has siezed on the novelty and served it up at his restaurant in Chandos Street boiled, scrambled, curried, au fromage, poached, omletted and in salad and his efforts have apparently been appreciated. I did not patronise his establishment, but reflecting that I might happen on a suggestion for the next edition of "Every Day Menus for India" I invested sixpence in Leadenhall and tried my purchase a la coeq. It took twenty minutes to boil the thing and investigation revealed light green where one expects to find the "white;" this enveloped a distinctly fishy yolk of unpleasant taste. Now while I was in India I made it a practice to try many weird food stuffs, and have eaten scores of feathered creatures not generally regarded as edible (many I found excellent by the way) and years ago I experimented on wild birds' eggs. This penguin's egg recalled vividly the flavour of the gull's eggs found on the Brahmaputra chars; so if you never have the chance of penguin's eggs a la Miles you can at least approach the delight with omelette a la Gang Chiel or Carri des Oeufs a la Bogla.

Mr. Vanderbilt's London to Brighton coaching season has begun: the trips so far have been completely successful and so great is the rush for accommodation that every seat has already been booked up to the middle of June.

The "rubber neck" Yankee has been displaced by the touring Japanese, who fifty-six strong (male and female) is at the moment being personally conducted round London. The males are clad in top hats and frock coats, the females retain their becoming native garb and the party naturally arouses interest and comment wherever it goes.

THE VAGRANT.

A man of tall and angular build was walking quickly down a steep hill. He stumbled over a stump, fell, slid down the hill, and could not stop. At a crossing half-way down he encountered a heavy and mountainous woman. A collision was inevitable, and soon both were sliding down the hill, the thin man underneath, and the globular lady on top. When the bottom was reached, as she tried to regain her feet and her breath, the attenuated male said faintly: 'Pardon me, madam, but you will have to get off here. This is as far as I go!"

When the late Lord Kelvin was a simple professor at Glasgow he kept a pretty tight hand over his flock. When he went up to London to be knighted he left an assistant named Day in charge. On his return he found the following on his class blackboard: "Let us work while it is yet Day, for the Knight cometh when no man can work."

Review.

SOME NEW LION STORIES.

"No other single observer has left a record of the lion of such to the naturalist as Mr. Selous," says President Roosevelt in the interesting "fore-word" which he has written for that mighty hunters' latest contribution to lion literature, and no one will be disposed to quarrel with the President's verdict on this very attractive book. It throws new light upon the lion, the great tawny-maned cat which is entering upon the last fight of its life now that civilisation is opening up the last dark quarters of the earth so rapidly.

To be killed by a lion is to suffer what is practically a painless death.

"In the case of Europeans, at any rate, who probably possess highly strung nervous systems, all the first-hand evidence I have been able to gather goes to prove that the bite of a lion or a tiger is practically painless. I imagine that the reason of this is that the tremendous energy exerted by a lion in biting is equivalent to a heavy blow which produces such a shock to the nervous system that all sensation is for the time being deadened, as it would be by a heavy blow from a sledge-hammer.

"There is no doubt, I think, that lions know that the head, throat, and back of the neck are the most vital spots in all animals on which they prey. Human beings are nearly always seized by the head or neck. horses, donkeys, and zebras are almost invariably killed by bites in the back of the neck just behind the ears or by bites in the throat; whilst they either dislocate the necks of heavy animals like buffaloes or hold them in such a way that they can hardly help falling and breaking their own necks.

"I have known of two instances of men having been seized at night by the shoulder. This, I think, is likely to happen to a sleeping man lying on his side with one shoulder raised."

One case was that of a trooper in South Africa seized and dragged away into the darkness when asleep at midnight. The lion was seated off by another trooper, and the wounded man escaped with a severe bite on the shoulder.

"He had to be sent to the hospital, as, although the hurts were not very serious, any wound inflicted by the teeth of a lion is as a rule, very difficult to heal unless carefully attended to at once and cauterised with a strong lotion of carbolic acid.

"Dr. Livingstone has described how he suffered for years from the bite of a lion, and I have myself seen wounds from the teeth of one of these animals in a horse's neck, which had never been properly attended to still suppurating thirteen months after.

"I have never seen any evidence of a lion killing its prey by striking it a heavy blow with one of its paws, and I believe that it always endeavours to kill by biting, and only uses its claws for holding or pulling an animal to its mouth. I have known several instances of a lion overtaking a horse that had only had a short start. In such a case a lion will not land with a flying leap right on to a horse's back. "It gallops close along the ground until it is almost opposite the horse's tail, and then, rearing itself upon its hind legs, seizes it on either flank, endeavouring to hold it with the protruded claws of its great fore-paws. But almost invariably in such a case it fails to stop a galloping horse, its claws simply cutting great gashes through skin and flesh."

Mr. Selous gives a graphic account of the terrible tragedy which befell when Mr. Ryall was killed on the Uganda Railway.

"The railway carriage in question, which contained a small saloon and an adjoining servants' compartment, had been pulled on to a siding, in order to give its occupants (Mr. Huebner, Mr. Parenti, and Mr. Ryall) a chance of getting a shot at a man-eating lion.

"There was a small window on each side of the little saloon, and a sliding-door at the end of the carriage. Both the windows and the door were wide open Mr. Ryall took the first watch, and seems to have taken up a position on one of the seats of the carriage, with his back to the open window. His head and shoulders would therefore probably have been visible to the eyes of a nocturnal animal from outside.

"Mr. Huebner turned in and went to sleep in one of the top berths in the carriage, and Mr. Parenti made his bed on the floor. It is probable, I think, that Mr. Ryall also went to sleep after a time. What happened afterwards I will now relate as it was told to me by Mr. Parenti.

"I was awakened from a sound sleep by the sensation of a weight holding me down on the floor, and for a moment was unable to move. Then the weight was taken off me, and I raised my head with a jerk. My face immediately came in contact with a soft, hairy body, and I became conscious of a disagreeable smell. In an instant I realised that there was a lion in the railway carriage, and that at that moment it was killing poor Mr. Ryall, as I heard a sort of gurgling noise, the only sound he ever made."

"Mr. Huebner seems to have awakened at the same time, and to have at once jumped down on to the floor of the carriage, where he and Mr. Parenti and the lion were all mixed up together. "At this time the weight of the lion and the struggling men combined slightly tipped the carriage to one side, causing the sliding door to close automatically.

"Mr. Parenti, as soon as he could collect his thoughts, made his escape from the carriage through the open window opposite to the one against which poor Mr. Ryall had been sitting when the lion seized him, and Mr. Huebner burst open the door communicating with the smaller compartment occupied by Mr. Ryall's two Indian servants, who, having become aware that there was a lion in the other room with the 'Sahibs,' were holding the door against the crowd with all their strength."

The windows of the carriages on the Uganda Railway are small, but after having killed Mr. Ryall, this lion—a big male—succeeded in carrying off his body through the comparatively small opening. It probably never relaxed its hold on his throat until it had got his dead body safely out of the carriage and pulled it away to some distance.

"A man-eating lion usually proves to be an old and almost worn-out beast, which having grown too weak to catch and kill its usual prey has been driven by hunger to approach the haunts of men."

Lions roar very freely even after sunrise in countries undisturbed by white men, but after the coming of men with guns they grow more and more silent, till it becomes rare to hear one roar at all.

"On a still night the roaring of lions can be heard at a very great distance, and should a party of these animals roar loudly quite a mile away most people would imagine that they were within one hundred yards. I have heard them roar amid the crashing of thunder peals and blinding flashes of lightning on a stormy night during the rainy season. On such a night, when sitting wet and cold among one's Kaffir boys, huddled up beneath the scanty shelter of a few boughs, the roaring of lions is not altogether a reassuring sound. The volume of sound that they emit when roaring in unison is nerve-shaking."

AN IMPROVED 16-BORE GAME GUN.

HOLLAND AND HOLLAND'S NEW SYSTEM OF BORING.

INTO the construction of the new 16-bore game gun they have just produced, Messrs. Holland and Holland have introduced a method of boring which has enabled them to secure patterning properties of a remarkable character.

The effect of constriction in holding together a charge of shot was understood generations before the system known as choke-boring became generally known. The friction and distortion of pellets caused by the old constricted bores had the effect of reducing velocity to an undesirable extent, so that it came to be believed that close patterns at long range could not possibly be combined with good penetration. Choke-boring proved this to be a mistake. With the full choke excellent patterns at long range were combined with adequate penetration, but experience soon showed that at shorter ranges the shot was held so closely together that for ordinary game shooting the advantage the full choke possessed might be too dearly bought. Consequently chokes fell into unmerited disfavour, and it was only by calling slight chokes "improved cylinders" that gunmakers were able to use at all what is undoubtedly one of the most important improvements in boring that has ever been made. With any and every form of choke hitherto used something at some range has had to be sacrificed. If the pattern be well held together at 40 yards or over it will be closer than is desirable at 20 yards, or if a good circle is obtained at 20 yards, then the patterns will be too open at long ranges. With the older boring, characterised by gradual relief and gradual constriction, a type of dispersion of a different kind was obtained. Unfortunately the patterning properties of the guns of the pre-choke era were very uncertain. What one now calls wild shots were rather the rule than the exception, although barrels shooting with a good degree of regularity were undoubtedly produced years before the secret of regulating by choke was discovered.

Messrs. Holland and Holland now seem to have found out how to bore a barrel to produce the results of a half-choke at 40 yards, with the results of an improved cylinder at 20 yards. This really indicates that they secure the regularity of shooting which is the first characteristic of the choke, and with it combine the hitherto antagonistic patterning properties of the improved cylinder and the half-choke, each at its appropriate range. The early chokes proved that opinions on pattern and penetration, that had been unquestioned for generations, were wrong. So, in like manner may we now be called upon to revise the view that close patterns at long range can only be obtained by spoiling the distribution of pellets at shorter ranges. This certainly has been avoided with the new Holland gun.

Dating back almost to the first introduction of the 33grain nitro-compounds a marked tendency in favour of the use of light loads has been observable. The full 1¼oz. game charge, while still not infrequently used, has given place to the 1⅛ oz. charge, and that in turn has been diminished to 1oz., ⅞ oz. or ¾oz. With these light charges the 33-grain powders, producing a high velocity with a recoil apparently low, give excellent results. The disappearance of a proportion of the pellets in the shot charge renders them unsuitable for some purposes, but the absence of the punishing effects of heavy recoil, and the consideration that a lighter and handier gun can be used, generally outweights the disadvantages. So great indeed has the popularity of light loads become that in some cases it seems to have reached undesirable extremes. For this amongst other reasons, the conclusion is being reached that where weight of gun and weight of charge is diminished to an extreme limit, a mistake is made in refraining from reducing also the calibre of the barrel. In other words, the greatest ingenuity has been devoted to the task of producing ordinary 12-bores too light and slight for comfortable use with full charges. The same purpose might better be served by building guns of a smaller calibre that to start with would be exactly suited for the work they would be required to do.

It is to these considerations that we owe the growing popularity in England of 16-bore guns. The movement, not unnaturally, is hailed by advocates of small bores as a triumph for the cause they have supported in season and out for more years than one can remember. In a measure that may be true, but it has to be remembered that the special circumstances which now justify a reduction in calibre had no existence in the past. The new 16-bores are being introduced to do the work for which light 12-bores, for reduced charges, have latterly been designed. Messrs. Holland and Holland have for a considerable time been engaged in perfecting a weapon to serve this purpose. The new gun which has resulted is so admirably proportioned, fashioned, balanced and finished that handling it one can well comprehend the advantages such a weapon must possess if its shooting qualities match with its appearance. For a 16-bore the gun is not really very light, its actual weight being 6lbs., but in the hand it feels very light indeed, while it has sufficient substance to insure the comfort of the user.

The real crux of the question arises, of course, on the point of shooting. The intention of the makers was to produce a 16-bore that would shoot a ¾oz. charge to the 12-bore standard of velocity and pattern. They have done that, and with it have accomplished also the improvement in patterning properties to which reference has already been made. The standard 30-inch circle pattern at 40 yards with a half-choke 12-bore and ¾oz. of No. 6 shot is 139 pellets. The Holland 16-bore gun averages nearly 150. Now, according to the ordinary standard of dispersion this number of pellets should at 20 yards be found in a 12-inch circle, a pattern most undesirably close. That, of course, illustrates the ordinary difficulty, most apparent in full choke guns, that to get close patterns at long range the killing circle at shorter distances must be sacrificed. Having obtained a good half-choke 12-bore pattern at 40 yards out of a 16-bore, we should naturally look for a mass of closely bunched up pellets at half the distance. This expectation is entirely belied. The pattern at 20 yards is well distributed over the 30-inch circle, and is in fact the characteristic pattern of an improved cylinder. The right barrel of this gun does, unmistakably, as its normal behaviour, combine with patterns at 40 yards held together in the manner of a half-choke, patterns at shorter distances distributed as an improved cylinder might distribute them. The method of boring adopted has been instrumental in modifying the dispersion so as to attain, in a manner of speaking, the mean between the improved cylinder, which at a certain point scatters its pellets too widely, and the half-choke which to about the same point holds them too closely together

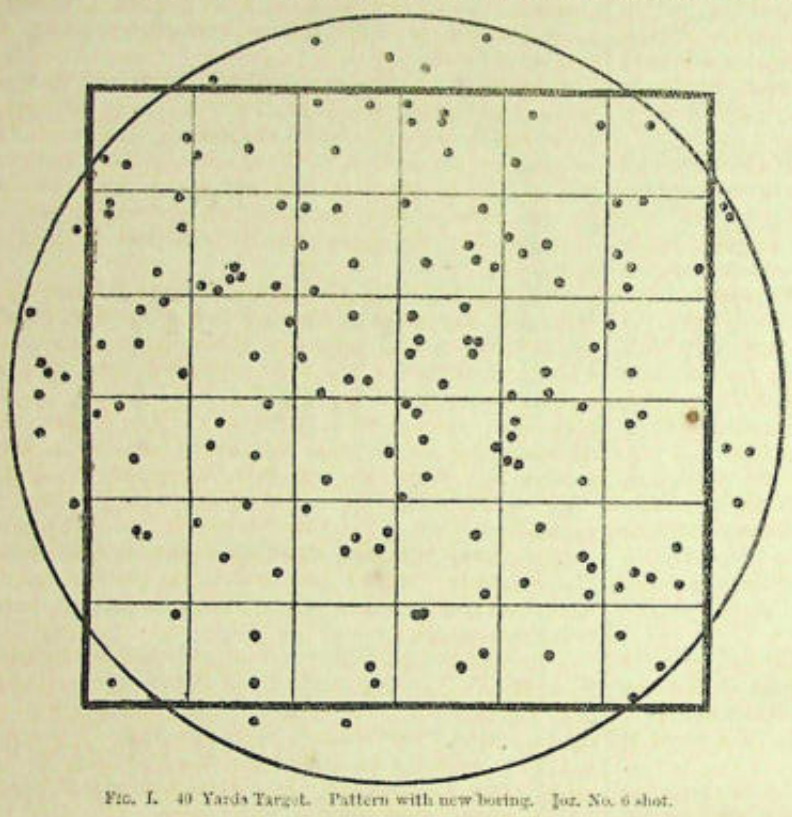

FIG. I. 40 Yards Target. Pattern with new boring. ¾oz. No. 6 shot.

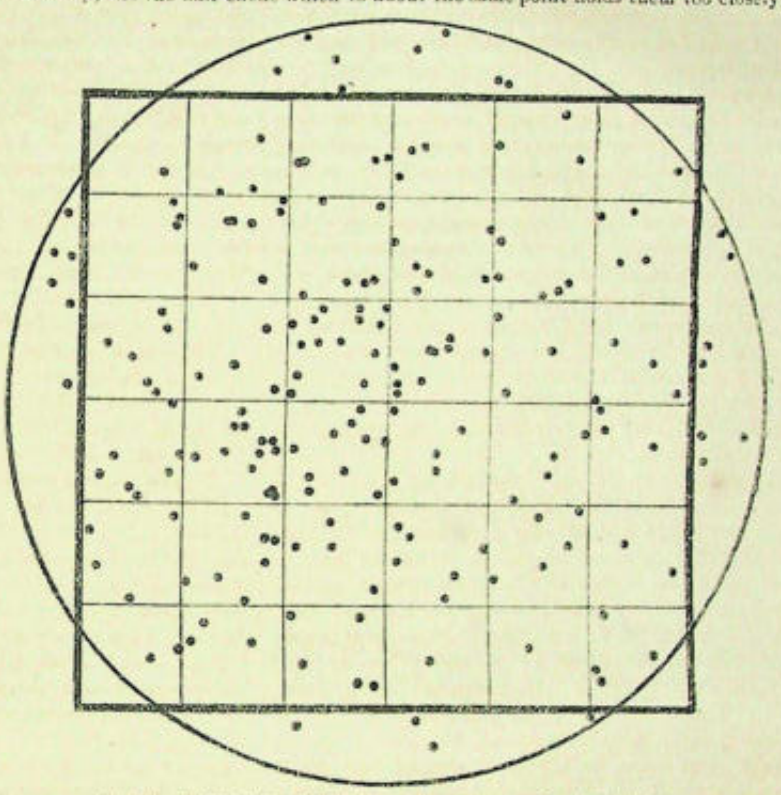

FIG. II. 30 Yards Target. Pattern with new boring. ¾oz. No. 6 shot.

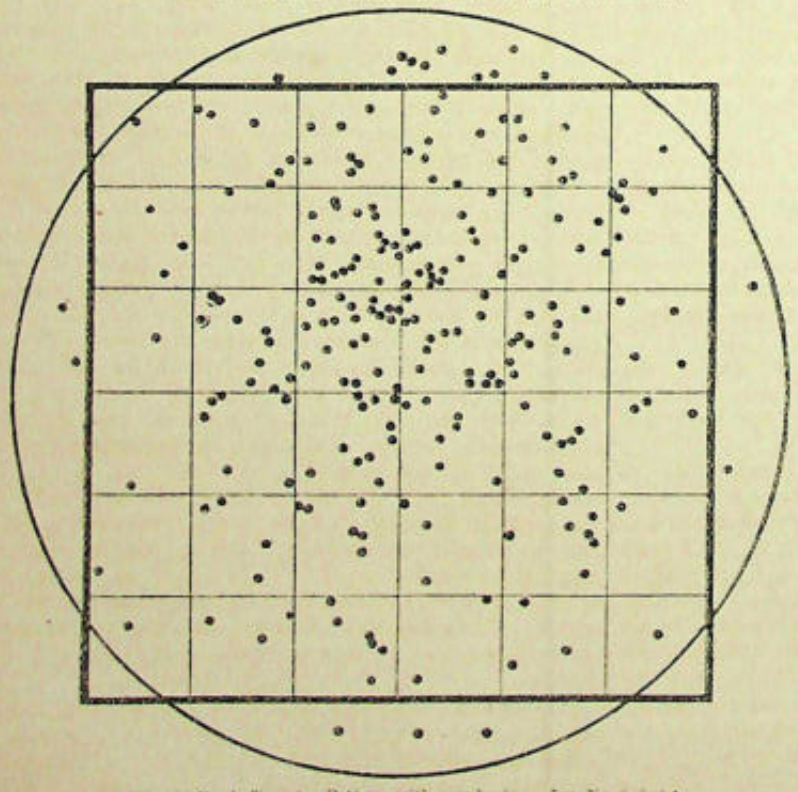

FIG. III. 20 Yards Target. Pattern with new boring. ¾oz. No. 6 shot.

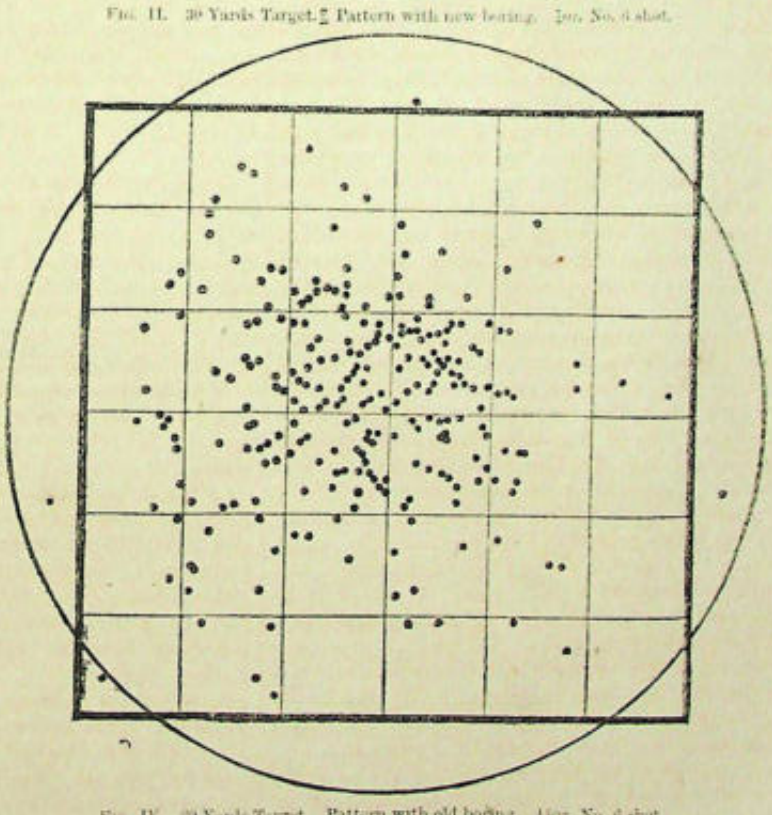

FIG. IV. 20 Yards Target. Pattern with old boring. ¾oz. No. 6 shot.

The illustrations show patterns with the right barrel, bored in the new manner, at 40, 30 and 20 yards. The charge of shot used was ¾oz. (236 pellets) of No. 6. The diagrams were taken from targets of cardboard, and are shown with the ordinary 30-inch circle, and squares of 24 inches. In Fig. I we have the pattern at 40 yards. In the circle there are 156 pellets, and in the square 135. Fig. II shows the pattern at 30 yards. Here there are 196 pellets in the circle and 171 in the square. Then in Fig. III we have 226 pellets in the circle and 202 in the square, so that at 20 yards there are only 10 pellets of the charge unaccounted for. For purposes of comparison Fig. IV, which represents the 20 yards pattern of an ordinary 16-bore with ¾oz. of No. 6 shot, is introduced. This should produce a pattern of about 150 pellets in the 30-inch circle at 40 yards, so that the 156 pattern, shown at this distance with the other gun, might represent its shooting. The charge of shot contains 253 pellets, and there are 251 in the 30-inch circle and 247 in the 24-inch square. Comparing the two patterns, one with the new barrel and 236 pellets, the other with the old barrel and 253 pellets, there is not any possibility of doubt about the improvement that has been effected. Let us now tabulate the patterns of the three shots with the new boring to show the proportion of pellets striking on the 24-inch square at the three ranges:—

This indicates that in the first 20 yards the charge had opened out sufficiently to allow of 12 per cent. of the pellets getting over the square, the remainder being centred over the space. In the next 10 yards the process was continued at a slightly higher rate, the distribution growing more even. In the remaining 10 yards the same characteristic of a gradual opening out was preserved, the pattern at 40 yards being well distributed all over the space.

Although on a limited series of patterns conclusive inferences on such a matter as the dispersion of shot charges cannot be drawn, it is sufficiently evident from these results that, whatever may be the modification on ordinary methods of boring Messrs. Holland and Holland have made, it has produced an extremely important result. The shot charge is shown to have opened out at all the three important ranges without showing any evidence of that trumpet-like expansion associated with the choke, while on the other hand equally avoiding that excess of spread which at the longer ranges is apt to spoil the patterns of an improved cylinder, particularly when small charges are used. The new method of boring is not limited in its application to light loads, and Messrs. Holland and Holland are constructing 12 and other bores on the same principle, with results which hold out every indication of proving equally satisfactory. At the outset of these remarks it was mentioned that by the creation of excessive friction patterns even in the days of muzzle-loaders could always be improved at the expense of velocity, and it is therefore most important to note that the new method of boring now introduced does not lessen the normal velocity. On the contrary a number of tests made indicate that the velocity is increased rather than diminished, and that with this system of boring better penetration and force is obtained than is the case with the ordinary cylinder or choke-bore.

The new gun, which furnishes the first example of the improved boring, is not intended to perform the work of a 12-bore with 1¼oz. of shot, but in the incidence of its patterns with the charge appropriate to its own calibre its performances may without exaggeration be characterised as remarkable.

INDIAN SNAKE LORE.

Fables and superstitions have gathered round the serpent in all ages, and in every clime wherein the dreaded creeping thing is represented in the fauna. India has an almost exhaustless mine of serpent lore, and this is not to be wondered at, seeing firstly that snakes of numerous species, poisonous and non-poisonous, from the dreaded serpentivore and the giant boa to the beautiful but deadly chain viper and the handsomely marked, whip-like, green tree-snake, abound in some one or other portion of the country, and seeing in the next place that the people of this continent have for centuries possessed a vivid sense of imagination and a highly specialised faculty for the evolving of myths and superstitions, most of them picturesque, but a good many of them uncanny and sinister.

It would be a mistake, though, to imagine that Indian snake lore consists exclusively of superstitious beliefs and indigestible fables. The people know a good deal about snakes, their habits, the action of the venom of different species and, in spite of Western scepticism, much about the remedies suitable in cases of snake poisoning. At the same time, a great part of all this knowledge is empirical, while the snake doctor professes to cure his patient not so much by means of medicines as by the uttering of mystic mantrams. As for popular, everyday superstitions and fallacies, one of the most common is that the rat snake is the feminine of the cobra and the progeny of this strangely assorted pair consists of scorpions, lizards, centipedes, and other noxious vermin. There is also a very common belief that a cobra's tail gets shorter every time the reptile bites, till in the end there is no tail left whatever.

A blending of natural history and fiction is the belief that cobras are divided into several species, with very distinct habits and characteristics, one species sustaining life on a diet of flowers, another eating nothing except crabs, one kind abiding only in aloe and other such thickets, while another affects the palaces of kings and the mansions of the noble. There are species or castes of cobras that correspond to the four chief Hindu castes, and the natives implicitly believe that caste distinctions are recognised in Snakeland, the Brahmin cobra disdaining to associate with ophidians of low degree, the Kshatriya cobra being distinguishable from its martial bearing, while the lowly Sudra cobra proclaims, by its bowed head and meek manner, its humble origin and its recognition of its low social status.

European naturalists are still puzzled to account for the proven immunity from snake venom enjoyed by the mongoose, but according to Hindu traditions and Hindu medical works, the explanation would seem to be that the ichneumon possesses some occult power which enables it to hypnotise the cobra and to render the latter's venom innocuous. Ancient Hindu writings furnish bewildering accounts of this wonderful magic power. One account seriously states that when a grey mongoose having given battle to a cobra discovers the latter to be a more than ordinarily formidable antagonist, he resorts to an extraordinary stratagem. He runs round the cobra in a circle marking the track with a discharge of urine. He then makes off in quest of a mongoose of the ruddy-furred species, explains the situation and brings back his cousin with him to the spot where the cobra was confined within the circle, literally spellbound there. The red mongoose takes up a position in front of the terrified and hypnotised snake and with one bound falls upon the reptile, biting it clean in two.

But that is not nearly the most marvellous thing the mongoose is capable of achieving against its hereditary foe with whom its vendetta appears to have been started at the very beginning of creation. It is said that snake wizards, who cure, by compelling the snake through the power of mantrams to come up and suck back its poison from the body of the bitten person, are able by the occult influence they wield to enlist the mongoose in their service. The mongoose having received the telepathic command, immediately puts all his other business aside and goes off in search of the offending cobra and compels it to go and surrender. Arrived at the feet of the wizard, the cobra, in obedience to a further peremptory command, crawls up to the bitten person and sucks back the poison it had injected. The victim, though apparently dead, now recovers. These things, though they beat the most staggering American rattle-snake yarns, are piously and unreservedly believed by the people, not perhaps those who have been coated with a veneer of Western education, but the real people of India, who live the same life, think the same thoughts and bow to the same priest and panchayat rule that their ancestors knew thousands of years ago.

There are numerous startling misconceptions as to the anatomy of snakes, one of the most widely diffused of these popular errors being that all snakes have a forked sting which they dart at their victim. Another is that poisonous snakes have reserve fangs to immediately replace those which have broken off. Yet another is that the poison is contained in a bag at the back of the fang through which it is sent by the pressure of the object bitten. In some parts of Southern India one comes across a quaint belief that the rat snake, which is very slow to bite, will, if compelled to do so, turn on its back immediately after it has done the mischief.

In the hill region, where the King Cobra or cannibal snake or serpentivore, the only aggressive snake of India, is to be met with, there are startling beliefs as to what this great reptile can do. It is credited with the power to imitate perfectly the cry or call of mostly any animal. It can crow like a cock, roar like a tiger, bark like a deer, bleet like a wild goat. It can fight standing erect on the tip of its tail. There is a tradition in North Malabar that a hamadryad once made its lair near a village and proved such a terror that the villagers fled from their homes and did not return until the great hero Thacholi Oden, the Robin Hood of North Malabar, went forth with his sword and vanquished the lord of the wilderness in a standup combat. It is said that, by pressing a chicken between his arm and body and making it cry, he lured the great snake from its lair on the hillside. The hamadryad is a very fierce reptile. It is an adept tree climber and can swim like a fish. It will angrily chase man at sight and brooks no stranger near its haunts. These undesirable characteristics have doubtless given rise to the startling powers which the people attribute to the creature. For all that instances of the hamadryad being domesticated are not rare in Southern India.

TURKEYS.

From the reports I have had from almost every section of Florida, it would appear that the past hunting season has been a failure, and consequent disappointment to most non-resident hunters. That the game is here need not be questioned, for an observant eye can see the traces of its presence on every hand. The long continued drought was the most serious bugbear to all hunters—both native and visitor, and in quail hunting it was practically impossible for the best of pointers or setters to do good work.

Many of the best coveys early betook themselves to the swamps and scrubs, where they were safe from the guns and in the open pine woods the only chance of finding birds was for the dog to run in among them. Several times did I see my old pointer pass through a scattered covey without scenting them and come back to me in surprise, when, following a short distance behind in his tracks, I flushed the birds.

At the commencement of the season (November) I drove over 200 miles into Osceola county on one hunt-out on to the Kissimee prairie near Aligator bluff into the pine timber around the heads of Ten Mile creek, Wolf creek, Blue Cyprus, Ox creek and other noted hunting grounds; yet in the two weeks spent on the road and in camp I saw but very few coveys of quail.

Personally, I was fortunate and on but very few occasions failed to find one or more coveys on the days I spent afield. But then, I seldom went far from home, contenting myself with hunting the coveys whose location I had marked and watched during the summer.

Turkey hunting was much the same as usual, and, although I did not have the pleasure of dining off a lusty gobbler, the reader of these notes will doubtless conclude that the fault lay not in the birds, but in he who hunted them. Perhaps they may be right, yet there are some who have hunted with me who claim that I can on occasion hold the old gun straight.

The week before Christmas I got through with the hurry and bustle attendant on moving the orange crop and was free to take to the woods and locate the game in readiness for the next week, when the boy would be home for his short winter hunt.

The old pointer dog was glad, you may be sure, to see me don the blood-stained hunting jacket and take up the gun. Day after day he had lain at my feet in the packing house, never allowing me to pass out of his sight for a moment, afraid that I would slip off without him. When old Rover dies I will lose one good and trusty friend.

First I hunted up the quail and located all the near-by coveys, then turned my attention to the wild turkeys. It is about four miles to the swamp and their feeding grounds, but from previous experience I knew pretty well where to look for them, so betook myself early one morning to the swamp. What I saw there both satisfied and surprised me, and by noon I was back home seeking out the turkey call and large shot shells.

The following day was Saturday, and on Sunday the boy was to arrive home and I intended him to find roast turkey for his reception. However, "the best laid schemes o' mice and men are apt to gang agley."

When I reached the swamp before the break of day on Saturday morning it was with full confidence in my skill as a hunter that I took my stand. During the night it had turned cold, the thermometer going down to 34 degrees Fahrenheit. There was a heavy dew and as I had walked through grass waist high for half a mile, my nether garments were thoroughly soaked. Very soon I began to feel the cold—let me say right here that one can get colder in Florida than in New York—and by daybreak I was suffering intensely. As the day gained I yelped and soon received an answering call from the near-by cypress swamp. For half an hour the turkeys with a loud flapping of wings flew down on the oak ridge about 200 yards from my hiding place in the edge of the scrub. The ground was thickly covered with a growth of black-jack shoots, so I could see nothing, but could hear a plenty, for the turkeys were raising a racket which could be heard half a mile away.

I called as seductively as I knew how, and a hen and gobbler left the flock and came toward me. These two birds crept up to within fifteen feet of me, as I afterwards found by their tracks, saw me and that was the end of it for the hen broke off in the middle of a call and I heard no more.

Christmas week passed quickly, too cold in the early morning to venture to the swamp in quest of turkeys; but we had good sport, finding quail daily and taking full toll of the doves and snipe.

The first day of the new year was to be the last day of the boy's visit, and we planned to try for the turkeys in spite of the cold weather. Accordingly at half-past four in the morning the writer, the boy, and Hina embarked in Hina's wagon and jolted in the dark, over three miles of pine roots, palmetto roots and lighter knots, with an occasional twelve-inch log thrown in for variety, to the swamp. The aspect of our hunting ground had changed since I was there a week before, for the forest fire had swept over that section and left the pine and oak lands almost clean of under-brush.

The place where I had located the turkeys was a black-jack oak ridge, extending wedge like between two heads of cypress swamp, about one-quarter of a mile wide at the base and tapering gradually until the swamp closes in at the apex.

Hitching the horse some distance back from what was to be the scene of operations, I had just time to place my friends on what I expected were the most likely stands before the break of day. The position I had chosen for myself was midway between the other guns, in a thick scrub which hid everything from my vision.

As the daylight strengthened I yelped and immediately was answered from the cypress swamp. Then for ten minutes the quiet of the Florida woods echoed and re-echoed with the clamor of calling turkeys—"put-put-put" of many hens and harsher "chok-chok-chok" and gobble of lusty gobblers. Never before had I heard such a thrilling noise, sounding as if all the turkeys in creation had foregathered in the near-by narrow fringe of swamp. For fully ten minutes the noise continued, before we heard a prodigious beating of wings, which proclaimed that the whole flock had left their roost and flown down somewhere on our ridge. I yelped several times, but soon after alighting the turkeys refused to answer. We held our stands for about half an hour, while I called the best I knew how, but evidently not well enough to induce the turkeys to come our way.

Judging from my own feelings, I inferred that my fellow conspirators would be, by this time, thoroughly benumbed by the cold, damp atmosphere, and be willing to sacrifice the chance of a sure shot—which one of us was certain to get if we held our stands long enough, for the turkeys must perforce feed our way if left undisturbed—for the more uncertain method of walking up the birds.

Creeping from my place of concealment I soon found Hina and was informed that he had seen five turkeys fly down by a dead pine tree about eighty yards away. I then went to the boy and instructed him to move forward across the ridge when he heard my signal—the hoot of the horned owl. Repassing Hina I gave him the same instructions, and hastened to take my position in line and ready for our march over the black jack ridge, on the other side of which the turkeys were undoubtedly feeding. There was no possibility of the birds getting away without affording a shot to one of us. Unfortunately, before I had reached my position in our line, a real owl hooted in the swamp, and my men began to move forward.

Two minutes later there was an ear-splitting discharge from Hina's 10 bore, and I saw the turkey rise and fly over the position I should have been occupying if the belated owl had kept silent. Seventeen birds I counted, but they were only the outlying ones of the flock, for they were followed immediately by a dense crowed which must have numbered twenty-five or thirty more.

One big gobbler I marked down, for he alighted in a tall slash pine in the edge of the swamp. It was a hard fight to get through the tangle of vines and briars which fringe the wet ground, but I stumbled through somehow and arrived at the foot of the pine. A careful aim at the turkey's head and my load of BB's struck a cloud of neck feathers into the air. A few convulsive beats of the wings carried my bird out of sight over the swamp; but listening intently, I heard it strike heavily among the palmettos and knew that I had pulled it down.

Hina soon joined me, and together we pushed through the belt of swamp, which at this point is only about 100 yards wide, in the direction the turkey had flown. Peering through the dense tangle of underbush we had an unobstructed view of what was happening in the open and burnt off woods. Well out of gunshot, were gathered close on fifty turkeys in a highly excited condition. In their midst was my crippled gobbler fighting for its life, leaping high into the air in its efforts to avoid the onslaught of the other turkeys, which were rushing at it and pecking it unmercifully. For a few minutes we watched the surging crowd of birds intent on killing the crippled member, and then tried to creep close enough for a shot. Cover was scant, however, and they saw us before we could get near enough to risk a shot, rose and flew far away.

My gobbler's legs were still alive enough and carried my bird into swamp which we could not penetrate. I asked Hina why he only fired one shot at the turkeys in the first instance. He laughed and replied: "When the owl hooted I moved forward as you told me to and had gone but fifty yards when I saw ten or twelve turkeys standing close together in an open space, watching me. They were within easy range, and looked bigger than ostriches, so I crowded a finger on each trigger, aimed at the bird in the middle, pulled both barrels at once and sat down so pesky quick that I jolted a fresh chew of tobacco way down my throat."

I did not have another chance to visit the swamp until the latter part of February, but then the occasion offered and daylight found me accompanied by Hina, at the old stand. This time there was none of the loud calling which had preceded the flying down of the turkeys on the other occasions. A few yelps on my part and a single answering call in the swamp, the beat of heavy wings and I saw ten or a dozen turkeys drop to the ground within fifty yards of where I crouched. On the ground they were out of my sight, being hidden by slight rise and clumps of stunted oak; but I could hear them scratching among the oak leaves and a gobbler strutting and drumming.

For quite a little while I waited, in full expectation of seeing them walk out into the open; but they did not do so. Changing the load or No. 6's in my left barrel for one of buckshot, in case I had to take a long shot into the bunch, I walked up to the top of the rising ground which hid the birds from view. Events matured in quick order as I appeared in sight. A hen ran across my path ten yards ahead, and at twenty-five I unloaded an ounce of No. 6's at her—she went right on.

Turkeys were rising and flying every way. A big gobbler winged up from somewhere near my feet and flew straight away from me, affording a splendid shot. I focussed the old gun squarely on the middle of the landscape he presented to me and turned loose the load of buckshot—but the turkey went right on. Hunting up Hina I offered my gun for sale at the low figure of fifty cents; but as he did not have the currency and I would not sell on credit, a trade was not effected.

Having seen several of the turkeys fly over the swamp and appear to alight in the cypress trees we walked in that direction. Presently we saw one perched back in the swamp, and, as Hina did not feed capable of fighting through the undergrowth, being still weak from a serious illness, I went after it alone. Once in among the big cypress trees there is little to hinder progress after a dry spell such as we have had. The turkey we had seen was not to be found when I arrived at the tree we had seen it in; but on searching around I found another perched in the top of a giant cypress. Walking around the tree I waited until I could get a clear and unobstructed view of it, then, taking a very careful aim, sent up a load of No. 4's. That fool turkey flew off as if it enjoyed being shot at, and I pulled out of the swamp as quickly as I could and made for the wagon.

A young lady to whom I told this experience asked me very pointedly what I said, but needless to say I did not enlighten her. All hunters know that it is better sometimes not to inquire too closely into the truth.—Arms and the Man.

Fishing.

"A NIGHT OUT."

When last home on leave the writer was fortunate enough to obtain leave to fish a very fine stretch of water on the Aberdeenshire Don. This is one of the best trout streams in Scotland. The fish run large and are plentiful. The month was June; the river too low and clear for day fishing (save with worm). The result was that we—that is, the writer and two friends A—and B—determined to try the river by night. We left Aberdeen about 6-30 and reached the water by 7-30. We put our rods together, slipped on our waders and vied with each other as to who should be ready first. B—was the lucky man and took the stream and pool under the bridge. He elected to fish with only one fly and that a large coachman. A and the writer went further upstream. I left A—at a long rapid stretch of water and elected to try the slower running streams at the tail of the long pools. My cast consisted of two flies, a coachman for tail and a hare lug and play for dropper. I waded gently in at the tail of a beautiful deep pool with large rocks sticking out of the water. I fished up stream. The light was still quite good and I had to be wary to avoid scaring the fish. A long cast up stream and my tail fly lit on one of the rocks, it fell therefrom and kissed the water; yes that was a rise and here he is. My rod bends and my real screams—whirr-whirr out jumps a fine fish well over a pound. I give him no mercy, pull him down steam and in a trice he is in my net—first blood. Almost at once I hear A—yelling for me to go to his assistance, the stupid man had forgotten to bring a landing net, I was loath to leave my pool, but what can do, so I hastened down stream and saw at once that A was on to a "big un." The fish had run down stream and was boring about a large deep salmon hole. A—was very excited, he was somewhat of a novice and seemed afraid of keeping up the strain. I shouted to him to hold on, which he did. The result was up came the fish right out of the water, a regular Don trout of some 2lb. in weight. But alas! A—forgot to slack as the fish jumped and away went fi-h and half A's cast. A—had also been in India and his language was as hot as the sun in Madras in May. I rushed off to my pool to find I could not get a move. I sat down and lit a cigarette. Just after this the headkeeper came down stream rod in hand. After a drink of the real thing he volunteered the information that the fish would rise after 11 P.M. A—and B—joined me shortly afterwards. The latter had taken four fish, but all small, somewhere about ½lb. apiece. My one and only trout scaled 1½lb. We could not sit still for long and again we separated. This time I had perforce to take the stream just above where I had been fishing while A—and B—went higher up. What a delightful feeling comes over one as one begins to fish a perfectly splendid stream at the witching hour of twilight. Distances are so queer and the lights on the water so mellow. Anticipation of a whopper comes first in one's mind on such occasions. Up stream again flew my flies, many times, and each time they caressed the water lovingly but the fish came not. At last I threw a chance line far across in the shallows; splash, by jove, here is something, was my mental note in the instant that follows a successful strike. Up stream he rushed and I, what did I do, why I fell clean off my stone into two feet of water, but I held up my point, was up in a flash and to my delight Mr. Trout was still adsum. I felt pretty sure of him after this and did not bother to call for assistance. How that fish fought, up and down the pool out of the water, but he was in for it this time and after maybe ten minutes, may be an hour "time sense" is lost on these occasions, I coaxed him towards my ever ready net. How one gloats over such a capture and how one dreams of future struggles when seated in an office in India on a hot day in May or June. Got him, I yell, out come my scales and I scan the figures, but 'tis too dark to read so I strike a match, 2lb. 5oz. and in perfect condition. But after this I rise nothing, so saunter up towards my friends. Hullo! a wild yell breaks across the rippling water A.—again, I rush up to help him. I am convinced even now that A—should have let me play that fish (don't tell A)! That fish was like a whale, but he never spouted. I timed the business and for 13 minutes that trout bored slowly round and round a deep hole under overhanging trees. We could not see the line distinctly and several times the fish fouled the line but A—got it clear. How we longed to see something, but alas! we had no lamp and it was all "feeling." A—was almost beside himself. His remarks were something like this. He's off, no he's still on, he must be a ten pounder, look out he's under the bank, heavens he's under my feet, where's the net, why don't you net him, and so on. B—came down to see the fun and the three of us tried our best to locate the line and incidentally the fish. Suddenly A—yelled out that the fish was off and sure enough he was. We all felt very depressed and chilly, the night mist was up and fishing was off. We retired to a cosy nook under some trees and brewed some hot tea and ate some delicious beefsteak and kidney pie, cold but nice. We sat and talked for a time and finally slept as we sat, propped against trees. We awoke shivering to find the dawn time 3 A.M. After some more tea and whisky added to keep out the cold we all rigged up our spinning tackle. Now this tackle and our method of spinning deserves some notice. The tackle we used was known as the "butcher" tackle and consisted of a very large limerick bend hook. A flying triangle was attached to the shank and a movable lip hook just above this hook on the mount. The line used by us was (tell it not in Scotland) Salmon Fry. The large hook is threaded through the mouth and out at the side of the fish, thus giving the bait a curve, the flying triangle is then adjusted, and the lips of the bait closed by the lip hook. We used no sinkers and fished up stream. Almost at once I was on to a fish—it is a sight to see a trout seize his prey, he comes right out of the water at it, by one method the bait is flung far up stream and brought very rapidly down stream almost on the surface. It is best to do this in jerks, coiling the spare line as it is pulled in through the rings. The chief point is not to strike too quickly or else the fish misses his prey. My first victim scaled just over 1½lb.

The best places for this form of spinning are the rapid running streams at the head of pools. The faster the current the better. We had a grand morning of it and to make a long story short we caught the 6-5 train back with a basket consisting 18 trout weighing 24lbs., of which the largest fish scaled just 2lb. 13oz. and was taken by B—on the wonderful Butcher tackle. Such a night lives long in one's memory, even apart from the result, which after all was only moderate for such a river and such anglers as——???

THE THROW IN AND FREE HIT IN HOCKEY

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—There having been some difference of opinion in the above points in hockey here, will you kindly let me know whether there is any new rule allowing a ball that has crossed the side line to be thrown forward? Also, when a free hit is given for sticks or any thing else, suppose the hitter-off misses the ball in his first try, is he or is he not allowed a second try (provided, of course, he does not give "sticks" the first time)?

E. G. B.

Mainpuri, 24th May 1908.

[Roll in. When a ball passes wholly over the side line it shall be rolled in along the ground and not (bounced) into play by hand from the point where it crossed the side line in any direction by one of the team opposite to that of the player who last touched it.

Free Hit. If the striker hit at but miss the ball, the stroke shall be taken again by him provided that he has not given "sticks."—Ed.]

QUETTA SPRING MEETING.

STEWARDS:

LIEUT.-COL. H. A. MEREWEATHER. | CAPT. H. P. THURNALL. CAPT. D. A. L. DAY.
CAPT. B. T. READY.
Honorary Secretary :—CAPT. C. L. R. GRAY.

First Day, Tuesday, 19th May 1908.

FOR the opening day of the Quetta Spring Meeting the weather won handsomely from the attendance, which, however, made up in quality for the absence of quantity.

Most of the leading light, Civil and Military, men and women, were present and included Sir Henry and Lady MacMahon, and General Clements. From a racing point of view we sadly miss the Royal Warwickshire Regiment and the many sportsmen of that Corps who nobly supported local racing, notably Captain Toogood, who has gone home on leave. The 7th Hariana Lancers entertained the company royally. The ball was set rolling with the Novice Plate, for which a red hot favourite was found in Bantam III. He was bumped into at the start, while Vesta and Glendale II, getting nicely away had the finish to themselves, the latter winning by half a length. Major Davis' old slave Gendarme won the open Arab race at his leisure, and the Takatu Chase treated us to a great finish between the three placed, heads practically separating them.

The Arab Novice Stakes produced a capital field of nine, but Grey Wolf, who has run well in good company, was not to be denied and won easily.

MGodiva achieved a popular victory for Colonel Boileau of the State College in the Hunt Race, Bill Squires was much too good for the opposition in the Horse Trials, and Achievement looking trained to the hour, and on her best behaviour took the Baleli Plate after a pretty race with Ariadne. Training honours were shared by Colonel O'Donnell and Mr. O'Hara, whose stables accounted for five out of the seven events.

THE NOVICE PLATE.—Rs. 200 to winner, Rs. 100 to second and Rs. 50 to third. For English, Australasian, and C.-B. ponies 14-1 and under, that have never won a flat race value Rs. 50 or over. 4 furlongs.

WELLINGTON SKY RACES.

First Day, Thursday, 21st May, 1908.

THE Wellington Sky Races organized by the officers of the station came off at the Race course last evening and was attended by a large gathering. Some well-known racers from Secunderabad, Mysore and Madras entered and taken on the whole the racing was excellent. In two races the stewards did not agree by the decision of the running and the races had to be run off a second time hence there was some sensation and at one part of the proceedings the Bookies were so put out by the procedure of the stewards, that they wanted to leave the course. In the Trial Stakes, resulted as follows:—Rupert, Once More 2, and Boxer 3.

But the Stewards decided that the race was started at a false signal and ordered it to run off second time, with Once More, Frankenstein, Rocket were scratched, their owners refusing to run a second time. In the second race, the Conoor Plate, Pretty Polly and K. C. S. I. came in dead-heat and this too had to be run off a second time. In most of the races, the favourites came in easily and the Bookies lost very heavy sums of money.

The weather was very hot as the races were begun and towards the close a little rain fell which made it cooler. The Dorset Regiment Band was present and enlivened the proceedings with their music. Details:—

NEW ·470 BORE.

VELOCITY 2,250 ft. sec.

The BEST Diagram made before the Editor of the Field with a Rifle of this bore.

"FIELD," March 23, 1907: ". . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridge complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

VELOCITY 2,150 ft. sec.

Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from Lang double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cut a circle 2·1 in diameter.

Made By the Editor of the "Field."

"FIELD" "A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon."

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

HOLDING the tables to the end Sandown secured Saturday, the 2nd instant, under National Hunt Rules, and the popularity of the jumping season which is dying hard was evinced by an increased attendance in every department. This was not only due to the extra traffic engendered by the influx of the half-holiday division, but doubtless to the hold the "lepping" has taken on the public, and perhaps some day, as is the case in France, we may see hurdles upon our courses all the year round. The members' enclosure was crowded by a goodly company, in which the fair sex in spring costumes was predominant and the further rings were crammed, while the road division in the shape of motors, drags, and carriages of all descriptions was almost as strong as at the "Eclipse" meeting—a tribute to the lovely spring weather that had tempted visitors abroad. The course, rapidly drying, was yet soft enough for jumping, and fields ruled well, but only one first favourite justified selection. Details:—

NEWMARKET SPRING.

It was not until the specials began to arrive on Monday, the 5th instant, that the town awoke to life and bustle, and with the transfer of the site of the station, the visitor now sees little or nothing of the old town, as he is almost at "the Top" on arriving. From North and South a strong consensus of sportsmen kept the traps that harness in Newmarket, or within ten miles radius, busily employed, and the attendance

Won by a neck ; same distance between second and third.

On "Guineas" day showers, flickers of sunshine, wafts of hot and cold air, and sleet, to finish with, marked a morning differing vastly from the sample of sunny Sandown, but most of the company had arrived before the worst shower of the morning sent everyone to shelter. The King who looked remarkably well, had, everybody fondly hoped, come to see Perrier repeat his biennial victory, and as the South-country stables had been more hampered by snow than headquarters of late, and the Russley and Kingsclere horses were reported as lacking a polishing gallop or two, Newmarket was as confident as when it turned up its nose at Peregrine and Common. His Majesty, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and Prince Christian, was met by a large and influential gathering in the club enclosure, and Tattersall's was well filled. Perrier's exhibition was a huge disappointment to everybody and what is worse, no excuse for it seems to be forthcoming. Norman III won cantering easily. Details :—

(Winner trained by Watson.)

Mercutio, one of the centre division, showed the way to Lauderdale (on the left), Perrier (in the centre), St. Wolf Sir Archibald (on the right), and Norman III., with White Eagle, Your Majesty, St. Orodoux, and Bonspiel II. the most prominent of the others till reaching the Bushes, where Perrier was beaten and Bonspiel II. swerved. Norman III then deprived Mercutio of the lead, the pair being attended by White Eagle and Your Majesty. In the Abingdon Bottom, Sir Archibald wrested second place from Mercutio, but could not make the slightest impression on Norman III., who won easily by three lengths ; three-quarters of a length between second and third. Dalgety whipped round at the start and took no part in the race. Time, 1min. 44⅘sec.

BETTING : 5 to 4 agst. Perrier, 5 to 1 Sir Archibald, 100 to 1 each White Eagle and Dibs, 100 to 6 St. Orodoux, 20 to 1 each Our Majesty, Mercutio, and Primer, 25 to 1 each Norman III. and Bonspiel II., 35 to 1 the others.

PLACE BETTING : Evens Sir Archbald, others at proportionate odds.

Mr. P. J. Alzola's Pillo, by Raiburn—Golden Horn, 3yrs., 7st. 11lb. ...	Torterolo w. o.

(Trained by Torterolo.)

The exodus after the decision of the Two Thousand Guineas left but a bare handful of the right sort to keep up Thursday's charter, and, none the less thankful for plenty of elbow-room, old stagers took their racing easily, rejoicing in a bright breezy day. The going has greatly improved ; in fact, the ground was so rapidly drying that dust was flying in the High-Street.

Lord Ellesmere's title to the Whip was unchallenged, and William Griggs walked over on old Kroonstad. Details :—

THE WHIP. D.I. (2 miles and 118 yards.) Lord Ellesmere's Kroonstad. William Griggs W. O.

RACKETS.

OLYMPIC DOUBLES.—Vane Pennell and J. J. Astor pulled off the doubles in the Olympic rackets on the 1st instant by beating E. W. Bury and C. Browning by four games to one (6—15, 15—7, 15—15, 15—6, 15—7). There was not a lot in it in the rallies, though Pennell was certainly the most brilliant player of the four. But both in serving and in taking service the winners were points ahead of their opponents. Both Browning and Bury served too hard into the back-hand court, which Pennell spotted after the first game, and, standing very wide, he was able to get up nearly every service and kill a lot of them into the bargain.

Astor takes service off the wrong leg, and the wood is a big pal of his; but he got 'em back and got 'em back, and kept on getting 'em back, and Pennell could hardly have asked for a more perfect partner.

Bury and Browning won the first game pretty simply after some fine racquets. They were just that little bit on top, and the luck favoured them. In the second game service told a tale, and somehow one felt that Pennell and Astor must win. Bury and Browning came again splendidly at the beginning of the third, and seemed to have it easy; but bad mistakes let their opponents in.

With one hand out (Burns), Pennell set 3 at 13 all. Browning got to 2—0 in the set, and then put an absolute sitter on to the back wall. Astor won the point with a rather lucky length shot, and then his side took the game. Going in at 5—6, Pennell ran out in the fourth game, and went to 6—0 in the fifth—a run of 16, mark you. Pennell used the "bullet" Harry Foster service with great success in this run.

Bury and Browning nearly held their own in the rallies to the end of a great game, but were burst 15—7 at the finish. The pace was tremendous all through—as good a match as you could hope to see—and the racquets was always good; there was a great absence of "cad-shots," and all four hit the ball extremely hard. Pennell has not played such a safe, yet brilliant, game—reconcile the antithesis, if you can—for years.

Astor was safe, and made the good shots just when they were wanted. Neither Bury nor Browning was quite at the top of his game, especially in the service line.

Henry Leaf found that, after all, his arm was too bad for him to play Noel in the singles, though he would dearly have liked to have had a shot at it, so E. B. Noel is the winner of the Olympic singles.

ATHLETICS.

LONDON ATHLETIC CLUB MEETING.—Despite a big counter-attraction at Nottingham, the first of the London Athletic Club's meetings at Stamford Bridge on Saturday the 2nd instant, was quite a success, and a huge programme was gone through with commendable promptitude.

Apart from the interest taken in the races for the Public Schools Championships, the other events nearly all provided some keen racing. The chief item was, of course, the Club Challenge Cup over a quarter of a mile. This brought out the present Champion, E. H. Montague, E. H. Ryle, the winner of the quarter at the last 'Varsity sports; J. B. Densham, and the holder of the trophy and Swedish Champion, K. Hellstrom.

This quartette were bound to provide a good race, and they all finished within four yards of each other, Montague winning from Ryle by a yard and a half in 51-2/5secs., with the other pair almost together two yards away. It was quite a good performance on the part of Montague at this time of the season, for Ryle was as fit as he will be through his early training for the 'Varsity race.

Another meritorious winner was A. W. Hog, of the South London Harriers, who ran really well in the mile handicap, which he won by a yard and a half in 4mins. 18-2/5secs. He started off the 100 yards mark, but the time, nevertheless, was exceedingly good, and, as one or two fast times have already been put up this season, races over this distance will be watched with more than ordinary interest.

With victories in the half-mile and hurdles, the Public School Challenge Cup was won for Reading School by W. H. Pike, who in each instance showed fine form. He is obviously an athlete of great promise, for in the half he had matters all his own way, and the time was only 2mins. 3-1/5secs. The cup was previously held by the St. Lawrence School, Ramsgate, but on this occasion its scholars failed to capture one race.

King's College School also sent out a couple of winners. W. D. Johnstone won the high jump with 5ft. 2¼in. and W. H. Kitching was the winner of a fine race for the quarter, which he won by less than a yard in 54-2/5secs. R. E. Garrod, of Oundle, was the hero of the mile after an exciting finish, for he was passed in the straight by W. L. Williams, but a plucky rush at the finish got Garrod home by ten yards in 4mins. 43-3/5secs. Last year Garrod was second in the half and second in the steeplechase, so he is evidently a versatile runner.

Honours were very well distributed, for three other schools sent out the winners of the remaining races. The sprint was won by H. W. Evans, of Bedford Modern School, in 10-4/5secs. A. J. Wright beat four opponents in the long jump with a jump of 19ft. 10½in., and the steeplechase went to B. N. Carver, of St. John's, Leatherhead, who won in 4mins. 20-2/5secs. after leading all the way.

The race for lacrosse players did not particularly appeal to the spectators, but, nevertheless, some very good finishes were seen, and players from Woodford, Surbiton, and Croydon were the winners. The middle-weight amateur wrestling Championship, in the Cumberland and Westmoreland style, was won by J. Baddeley, of the London A. W. S., but there was no time to finish the catch-as-catch-can contest.

LAWN TENNIS.

COVERED COURT CHAMPIONSHIPS.—The two finals in the covered court meeting were decided at Queen's Club, on the 4th instant. The singles championship fell to Gore, who defeated Wilding by 3 sets to 1. The latter was obviously still feeling the effects of his recent attack of influenza, and his play lacked much of its customary vigour. Gore, on the other hand, played splendid lawn tennis.

The mixed doubles title remains with Wilding and Miss Eastlake Smith, who beat Ritchie and Miss Greene by 2 sets to 1. The holders exhibited marked superiority at the outset. Miss Eastlake Smith was very safe, and her partner killed well, and as a result they secured the first set with the loss of the fourth game. Subsequently Ritchie and Miss Greene improved in their play, while their opponents began to make mistakes. Later the New Zealander and his partner recovered their form of the opening set, and won the rubber. Results:—

The Singles Championship.—Challenge Round.—A. W. Gore (winner of the all-comers' competition) beat A. F. Wilding (holder) (4—6, 8—6, 6—0, 8—6).

The Ladies' and Gentlemen's Doubles Championship.—Challenge Round.—A. F. Wilding and Miss G. Eastlake Smith (holders) beat M. J. G. Ritchie and Miss A. N. G. Greene (winner of the all-comers' competition) (6—1, 1—6, 6—3).

Mr. G. M. Simond was referee.

BOXING.

RECORD BOXING PURSE.—Tommy Burns and Jack Johnson met at the National Sporting Club yesterday—at a distance. The white man was at one end of the bar in the saloon, and Johnson at the other. They never spoke—anyway, to each other—but being under the same roof, and almost within striking distance, one can safely say they met, but, as the old song has it, "We never speak as we pass by." Perhaps it is just as well they do not speak, for evidently there is no love lost between them.

Meanwhile (says the Sportsman) there was another meeting, for on the floor above the committee of the N.S.C. sat in solemn conclave discussing Burns and Johnson and the advisability of offering a purse for a contest between the two.

Later in the evening Mr. Bettinson announced from the ring at the National that his committee had instructed him to say that the National Sporting Club would hang up a purse of £2,500 for a contest of twenty rounds between Burns and Johnson, and that the last-named would, at the signing of articles, be prepared to agree to a side stake of £1,000 or more. The suggestion is that the winner shall take £2,000 of the purse and the whole of the stakes.

This should make a good night's work for the winner, a more profitable engagement than any pugilist has so far had in this country. The purse of £2,500 is a record for England, being, as it is, a "monkey" more than that fought for by Jackson and Slavin. Mr. Bettinson's announcement from the ring met with loud cheers, and the applause was redoubled when, after the interval, he stated that Sam Fitzpatrick, on behalf of Johnson, accepted all the conditions and would further agree for the winner to take the lot.

But Burns will not agree; and asks how he can be expected to do so when they will put up a £6,000 purse in America. Business is business after all, and neither of the men do this thing for the pure love of it I should imagine.

ROWING.

THE CAMBRIDGE LIGHT PAIRS.—The final of the 'Varsity or Magdalene pairs, which were first raced for fifty-seven years ago, was decided over the usual course yesterday afternoon. Although, perhaps, not an ideal pair, the Blues, E. W. Powell and E. G. Williams, had matters pretty well their own way, and eventually won by 90 yards after having pulled up for the last half-dozen strokes. This is E. W. Powell's third success in this event, having previously won with his brother, R. V., and last year with D. C. R. Stuart. Williams pulled wonderfully hard, and has improved a lot since he came up last October. This is the first Light Blue event he has won. Details:—

FINAL.

(Station 1) M. A. Lloyd (11st. 11lb.) and P. V. G. van der Byl (12st. 3½) (Pembroke) 2

The Etonians' long, sweeping strokes soon began to tell, and at the Ditch (1min. 35secs.) they were about fifteen yards to the good. Pembroke were now holding them, and to those on the towing path the Blues looked like getting into difficulties early in the Gut, as they got over to the Chesterton side too soon; but Powell steered magnificently, and it is calculated that they gained nearly twenty yards round the corner; then they were held in Plough Reach, but were fully thirty-five yards up at the Red Grind. Once in the Long Reach they gained rapidly, the strong head wind considerably handicapping the less experienced oarsmen, but at the Willows only about twenty yards separated the boats. The Pembroke pair kept gamely on, but the Blues never slackened until a few yards from the post, and then they eased up and won by ninety yards in the good time, under the conditions, of 8mins. 31secs.

The winners were steered by Mr. C. W. H. Taylor, the famous Old Blue, and erstwhile captain of the Calcutta Rowing Club: he three times won the event, and holds the record, whilst the losers were assisted by Frank Foyster. D. C. R. Stuart, the 'Varsity President, officiated as umpire.

MUSSOORIE TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINALS.

31ST LANCERS vs. ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.—Played on Wednesday, the 20th instant, the Lancers winning by seven goals to three.

First Chukker.—Level play. Willis scoring for the Lancers.

Second Chukker.—Fast play: the Lancers were on the offensive and scored twice, Dodd and Willis putting through.

Third Chukker.—Well contested, the ball travelling up and down the field. Rifles scored their first goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The Riflemen pressed and scored twice but the scores were not level for long, for Ellwood got away and gave the Lancers the lead once again.

Fifth Chukker.—The Lancers attacked and hit two goals, Willis and Ellwood scoring.

Sixth Chukker.—The Riflemen played hard but were unable to score, and Dodd putting on another goal for the Lancers, they won as stated by seven goals to three. Teams.—

17TH LANCERS vs. GOORKHAS.—Also played on the 20th instant, a splendid game being witnessed, extra time being played to decide the issue; the Lancers won by six goals to five.

First Chukker.—The Lancers pressed and registered two goals—Carden and Melville one each. Level play in midfield to the end of the period.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers returned to the attack, Nutting and Melville each putting through. The Goorkhas with four goals against them were undismayed. Mullaly got away and scored their first point.

Third Chukker.—Play was fast and well contested: each team scored a goal: mid-field play to the close of the chukker.

Fourth Chukker.—The Goorkhas did all the attacking: Mathew scored twice and Mullaly equalised.

Fifth Chukker.—With the scores five all play was fast and exciting. Both goals were visited in turn, but neither team scored.

Sixth Chukker.—Both teams were playing at the top of their form, and the game was most interesting. Some excellent individual efforts were witnessed, but there was no further score.

Extra time.—The goal posts were widened and the game resumed. Melville got possession from the hit in and scored the winning goal from a difficult angle. Teams:—

FINAL.

17TH (D.C.O.) LANCERS vs. 31ST LANCERS.—The final game was played in ideal weather on Friday afternoon last and attracted a large crowd of spectators. It was a fast hard-hitting game, but the 17th early asserted their superiority and eventually won by six goals to one. General Eccles Nixon congratulated the winners at the conclusion of the tournament and Mrs. Eccles Nixon returned the Cup to the safe keeping of the 17th Lancers.

First Chukker.—The 31st were first away and Willis hit a goal. Melville quickly equalised, and after three unsuccessful attempts the 17th registered another point.

Second Chukker.—The 17th pressed and Melville scored. Ellwood was conspicuous for good play and the ball travelled up and down for the rest of the period.

Third Chukker.—Fast and well contested. No score.

Fourth Chukker.—Mid-field play followed by a run to the 31st's flags, where Melville scored. The 17th continued to press but without result.

Fifth Chukker.—Even play: both goals were visited in turn, but there was no score.

Sixth Chukker.—The 17th outrode their opponents and score twice more. A free hit to the 31st for a foul against the 17th was unproductive. Final score: 17th Lancers, 6 goals; 31st Lancers, 1 goal. Teams as before.

Umpire—Captain Ridgeway.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

H. L. I. vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on the 20th instant, the game ending in a draw—one all. The H.L.I. scored within the first few minutes, but they were not in form, their shooting being very poor. On changing ends Holley equalised. The remaining play was well contested, though the H.L.I's. weakness in front of goal, lost them opportunities of scoring. Teams:—

H. L. I.—Goal, Lee; backs, Tait and Scollins; halves, Collins, O'Rourke and White; forwards, Palmer, Marshall, Collins, Devlin, and Innis.

DALHOUSIE.—Goal, Henry; backs, Storrie and Dunn; halves, Montgomery and Lees; Evans; forwards, Burnett, Dalling, Stevenson, Wright, and Holly.

Referee:—Sergt. Carley.

RANGERS vs. CUSTOMS.—The Rangers met with another defeat on their own ground on the 20th instant, when the Customs showed themselves the better team. They won by a goal (scored by Bower) to nil, and might have won by a bigger margin had their shooting been less erratic. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Goal, Furtado; backs, Goldsmith and Vears; halves, Vaillant, L. H. Smith and Marsden; forwards, Ogg, Bower, L. A. Smith, Berkley and Lovegrove.

RANGERS.—Goal, Cooper; backs, Bennett and Templeton, halves, Brown, Lawton and Cody; forwards Davis, Taylor, Postence, Gault and McKay.

Referee:—E. H. Behrend.

H. L. I. vs. Y.M.C.A.—This match on the Calcutta ground last Saturday ended in a pointless draw. The Young Men had rather the best of the first half but could not score, and though the H.L.I. pressed hard in the second moiety, miserable shooting on their part and the solid defence of the Y.M.C.A. backs prevented them from getting through.

RANGERS vs. GORDONS.—Playing on their own ground last Saturday, the Rangers met with yet another defeat, the Gordons beating them by four goals to nil. Drinkwater, McDougal, McNaughton and McKay were responsible for the scoring.

CALEDONIA vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on the 23rd instant on the Caledonian ground. The Dalhousie team had the best of the game, but owing to the indifferent shooting could only win by a goal to nil. The first half was unproductive, but after the interval Montgomery scored for the Dals. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Goal, Henry; backs, Storrie and Dunn; halves, Evans, Lees and Beadle; forwards, Burnett, Dalling, Montgomery, Benham and Holley.

CALEDONIANS.—Goal, Anscome; backs, Snooks and J. Stoddart; halves, Wilson, J. Wilson and Grout; forwards, Apcar, Rosser, Tobin, Chandler and Godwin.

CALCUTTA vs. CUSTOMS.—A large gathering lined the ropes on the Customs ground last Saturday when these teams tried conclusions. It was a good game, Calcutta eventually winning by two goals to nil. The opening exchanges were very level both goals being visited in turn, the Customs obtaining a corner which was not improved upon. Anderson next saved at the expense of a corner and shortly after Foster shot at goal, the ball hit the post and rebounded into play for Taylor, who was handy to bang it into the net. On changing ends, Calcutta did most of the attacking and the Customs' defence were kept busy. The home team got away on occasions, but were soon pulled up. A few minutes before the close, good play by V. Sherman and Kingcome gave the latter an opportunity and he made no mistake. The Customs rushed away on resuming and L. H. Smith put through but was adjudged offside. The C. F. C. thus won as stated. teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Goal, Dods; backs, Gahan, and Cooper; halves, Steuartea, O'Shard, Crawford; forwards, H. Sherman, Kingcome, Taylor, V. Sherman and Foster.

CUSTOMS.—Goal, Furtado; backs, Anderson and Goldsmith; halves, Maitland, Marsden, and Vaillant; forwards, Berkley, L. H. Smith, McCready, L. A. Smith and Vears.

Referee:—M. Remfry.

CALCUTTA F.C. vs. HIGHLAND L.I.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday a poor game resulting in the defeat of Calcutta by a goal to nil. Neither team played up to form and though the wind interfered somewhat with the game the shooting of both forward lines was miserable. The home team had the advantage of the wind in the first half and had most of the play in their favour, but the interval arrived without score. The H. L. I. did all the attacking on changing ends and the only goal of the match was scored by Devlin from a pass by McGarrill. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Goal, Dods; backs, Gahan and Cooper; halves, Crawford and O'Shea, Ansell; forwards, H. Sherman, Foster, Taylor, V. Sherman, and Kingcome.

H. L. I.—Goal, Lees; backs, Tait and Scolley; halves, Collins, O'Rorke and Campbell; forwards, Innis, Duncan, Devlin, McGarill, and Collins.

Referee:—G. O. Wade.

Y.M.C.A. vs. DALHOUSIE.—These teams met on the Association ground on Tuesday the visitors winning by three goals to nil. The home team played hard and might have scored on more than one occasion. Dalling (2) and Holley were the goal getters for Dalhousie. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Goal, Henry; backs, Storrie, and Dunn; halves Montgomery, Lees, and Beadle; forwards Burnett, Dalling, Allen, Robertson and Holley.

Y.M.C.A.—Goal, Bell; backs, Berkley, Reynolds; halves, H. Vanspall, Gay and Hayes; forwards Gillon, Ramsay, Wright, Brown and Rossetti.

Referee:—Sergt. Curley.

DIVISION 2.

SIBPUR COLLEGE vs. WANDERERS.—Played on the 20th instant, the Sibpur College winning by a goal to nil. Payne scored in the first half.

GORDONS "B." vs. MEASURERS.—Played in the Fort last, Saturday, the Gordons winning by four goals to nil.

R. G. A. vs. WANDERERS.—Played in the Fort on Monday and ended in a draw—one all. Pritchard scored for the Wanderers and Foreman equalised.

Y.M.C.A. vs. SIBPUR.—On the Y. M. C. A. ground on Monday the home team were beaten by four goals to one. Battersby (2), Seymore and Payne scored for Sibpur; Durham for the Association.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ANOTHER seven matches have been wiped off the League fixture card, and again it is not possible to single out any of the six civilian clubs as exponents of really first-class football. At present it would seem as if Soccer were in a very bad way indeed with no team actually strong enough to contest the supremacy of the gay Gordons. The Fort team has taken up its position at the head of affairs and is not likely to be ousted from it for some time now. Calcutta has still to make up for the 2—1 defeat which put the Gordons ahead. Meanwhile the Customs have crept up to third place on the list and are only one point behind Calcutta. So far so good. That this is an extremely creditable performance for a young team on its first introduction to the "hupper succle" will not be denied by any who have watched the progress of this truly promising eleven.

The Y.M.C.A. went across to the Caledonia ground on the 19th, when a tame and spiritless contest resulted in a pointless draw. There is something very disappointing about the Caledonia forward line in front of goal. Their shooting is execrable, and it is almost pitiful to see fine dashes and combined sprints absolutely wasted by feeble or badly directed shots. There are, alas! far too many forwards now-a-days who have no idea of how to kick a ball hard along the ground. The average shot either sails high over the cross bar or trickles gently into the goal-keeper's arms. Since the days of J. Watts of the R. G. A. we have had no such goal-getting genius in Calcutta. Watts once won an important match for Dalhousie with a shot which no forward would ever think of attempting to-day. He was standing with his back to the opponents' goal about 15 yards from the goal line. The ball dropped from a good height at his feet and he swung right round on one leg and kicked the ball on the second bound scoring a magnificent goal. It is the unexpected shot which invariably flusters the goal-keeper and a flustered goal-keeper is nine-tenths of a goal.

Dalhousie and the Highland Light Infantry gave an exhilarating display of kick and rush football last Wednesday evening and the draw of one goal all which resulted indicates with sufficient accuracy the nature of the game and the comparative abilities of the two teams. The H.L.I. are not doing half so well this season. They seem to be a much slower lot, content to wait on their opponents too much. They will need to buck up a lot if the Shield is to remain in the Dum Dum mess. To be only capable of negotiating a draw with the Y.M.C.A.—as happened last Saturday—does not savour of Championship form. As, however, several of last year's most prominent members of the team are absent this season it must be admitted that there is some reason for this regrettable falling off.

The Customs—(the term "Riversiders" has been barred by the Editor on penalty of a horrible death)—knocked another nail into the Rangers' coffin on the 20th, when a team weakened by much "absenteeism" had to own defeat by a goal to nil. The Rangers are sadly in need of a galvanic shock to arouse them from the attitude of resignation which they appear to have adopted. Unless they can keep eleven regular players they cannot expect to win matches. They should not allow themselves to be elbowed out of the First Division as they are at present undoubtedly doing from sheer ennui. Since Fred Lees changed his shirt the Rangers have not been conspicuous for that initiative which wins matches. But with players like Gault, Templeton, Lawton and Margrett (when he can be induced to play) they certainly need not despair. They have been unlucky in not picking up a victory to cheer them on to greater success, but there is no need whatever for them to relinquish First Division honours if they will only make up their minds to stay aloft.

Last Saturday's matches brought out the usual football crowds, the crush being greatest round the Customs ground, where Calcutta were paying a visit. This match turned out to be about the most interesting of the four. Calcutta's win of 2—0 was the outcome of equal parts of good play and good luck. They put out the same team as that which opposed Dalhousie on the preceding Saturday, but it cannot honestly be said that they showed any improvement collectively. To see the forward line tying itself up into knots when it ought to have been shooting was excruciating at times. It does not do to particularize too much because susceptibilities are easily wounded in this land of regrets. Still Crawford hasn't nearly found a team yet and if he doesn't realize it, there are many who do. What has become of Ansell? Is he not to find a place in the team this year? The complete disappearance of McConnell is another mystery only partly explained by a weak knee which permits of occasional participation in "B" team games. All this criticism of a team's personnel may seem unnecessarily impertinent, but it reflects, public opinion in football circles with considerable correctness.

Dalhousie beat Caledonia by a goal to nil on the Caledonia ground on Saturday. The play ruled even almost up to the point of time when Dalhousie just managed to make good. The Gordons had a walk over on the Rangers' ground despite some miraculous goal-keeping by Margrett, who is undoubtedly an acquisition between the sticks. He stood up nobly under the bombardment to which he was subjected by the military forwards and it was due to him alone that the Gordons failed to top the record for the present season which Calcutta still holds. The H.L.I. and the Y.M.C.A. battled it out on the C.F.C. ground. One merry scribe in his account of the match announces that at one period of the game "the Young Men's backs were again put upon their mettle." This must of course be a reportorial confusion with Christians girding on their shining armour. After this it is highly satisfactory to note the assurance of yet another genial pen-driver that "nothing came off."

An impenetrable atmosphere of mystery surrounds the doings of the Calcutta Reserves at Chinsurah on Saturday. As far as can be gathered, half the team managed to miss the train. The remainder having safely escaped the attentions of terrorists landed safe and unbombed at the field of play. Here local talent was impounded to make up the requisite number and the game was brought to a satisfactory conclusion with a draw of one goal all. Here history ends and conjecture steps in.

On Monday the Bank of Bengal pitched eleven worthy members against an equal number of representatives selected to do battle for the Exchange Banks. This pleasant and harmless annual event is supposed to have ended in a draw, but as the referee seemed as much in doubt about the score as the players themselves this information cannot be vouched for. The Banks were "At Home" to all and sundry after the game. It turned out quite a wet night.

The Naturalist.

THE PATH OF THE CUCKOO.

Nearly a century and a half ago a Frenchman, named Lottinger, set himself to study the difficulties that beset the path of the cuckoo. He undertook a series of experiments with a view to determining whether the small birds which act as "host" to the parasite readily accept eggs substituted for their own. In other words, he played the part of the cuckoo. He made some fifty attempts to induce wild birds to hatch out eggs other than their own, and every attempt ended in failure. To detail all his experiments would be wearisome in the extreme. The following six, selected at random, will suffice to give an idea of his methods and the results arrived at.

I. He placed the egg of a golden crested wren (Regulus cristatus) in the nest of the greater white throat (Sylvia cinerea), in which there were five nearly-incubated eggs. Within half an hour of being deposited the wren's egg disappeared. He next placed a thrush's egg in the same nest; this he found lying on the ground when he visited the nest the following day. He then substituted a blackbird's egg for the five whitethroat's eggs. Some minutes later he saw the whitethroat sitting on the nest, but the next day the bird had deserted and was busy building another nest.

II. In this experiment four out of five song thrush's eggs were removed. The hen forthwith deserted the nest.

III. Similarly, a greenfinch deserted the nest when her clutch of eggs was replaced by a blackbird's egg.

IV. Lottinger placed a song thrush's egg in a barn-owl's nest which contained three eggs. He found, six days later, that the owl had turned out the strange egg and was incubating her own.

V. He put the egg of a red-backed shrike (Lanius collurio) in a bullfinch's nest containing four eggs. A week later he found that the nest had been deserted and that it then held only the shrike's egg and one belonging to the bullfinch.

VI. In this experiment a woodlark (Alauda arborea) deserted the nest when her five eggs were replaced by an equal number of those of the greenfinch. Lottinger repeated many of his experiments, using a pair of small tongs to place and replace the eggs, with similar results. It was thus evident that the desertion of the nest was not due to the fact that the eggs had come into contact with the experimenter's fingers.

The French naturalist came to the conclusion that every bird which has eggs in its nest deserts when these are exchanged for others by human agency, even though it has been incubating for several days, but that it is a very different matter when the cuckoo is the delinquent. His theory was, it is not so much what the cuckoo does that should be marvelled at as the way in which it does it. Otto, a German naturalist, confirmed many of the Frenchman's experiments. All this seems very conclusive. If we further consider the great variability of cuckoo's eggs, and the remarkable manner in which they frequently resemble those of the bird in whose nest they are deposited, we seem compelled to believe that narrow is the path followed by the cuckoo.

It is, nevertheless, my opinion that this conclusion is erroneous. Birds are very easily imposed upon. It is well known that the common barndoor hen will, when possessed by the brooding fever, sit upon almost anything that even remotely resembles an egg. Turkeys have sometimes made gallant attempts to induce potatoes to yield young turkeys! Once a member of the gobbling community, whose eggs had been taken from under her, brooded a growing onion that projected above the level of the ground. When this was uprooted she sat for a couple of days on the hole left by it!

It must not be thought that these are cases of instinct having been perverted by domestication. The average wild bird will, when seized by the incubating mania, sit upon almost anything that finds its way into the nest.

Leverkuhn cites the case of a kite in the Zoological Gardens at Zittau, that laid 41 eggs between the years 1851 and 1868. For these, 69 hen's eggs were substituted, and no fewer than 53 were hatched out and the chicks reared.

Both the barn and the horned-owl have been made to hatch out fowl's eggs. During the past two years I have endeavoured to relieve the dullness of existence in India by collecting evidence of the easy manner in which birds can be duped.

The common crow of that country (Corvus splendens) has been the subject of most of my experiments. This bird is victimised by a cuckoo, called the Indian koel (Eudinamys honorata). I have successfully played cuckoo on several occasions.

From a crow's nest containing four eggs I removed two and replaced them by a couple of koel's eggs. The crow accepted the exchange, hatched out and reared the koels.

In another crow's nest I substituted a newly-hatched koel for an egg. The crow at once accepted the exchange and successfully reared the koel.

In the same way, another crow continued to sit when I added to her clutch the greenish-blue egg of the paddy bird (Ardeola grayii).

On two occasions have I placed a fowl's egg in a crow's nest along with the eggs already in it. In neither case did the crows appear to notice the addition, although the fowl's egg was more than twice the size of their blue and brown ones. One of the fowl's eggs was thrown out of the nest by a mischievous boy on the twentieth day, when it had a fully formed chick inside. From the other, the chick emerged in due course. The crows were greatly scandalised when they saw it. Their rage knew no bounds; they pecked at it so viciously that life was almost extinct before I could rescue the unfortunate creature. I have more than once induced a crow to sit upon a golf ball; but on the occasion when I substituted four "Silvertowns" for a clutch of crow's eggs the owners deserted the nest.

When I put in a crow's nest an egg belonging to the common Myna (Acridotheres tristis) the crow sat upon it quite contentedly, although it is brilliant blue in colour and considerably smaller than the egg of the crow.

Last year, a pair of little brown doves (Turtur cambayensis) nested in the verandah of my office. I substituted a couple of pigeon's eggs for the legitimate ones. The exchange did not appear to be noticed. The baby pigeon's eventually emerged and were fed by their foster parents, who showed no surprise when their white feathers appeared. Unfortunately the young pigeons were swept away in a cyclone while still unable to fly.

The little Indian sunbird (Arachnechthra zeyronica), that builds such a cosy ball-like nest, shows itself as ready as the crow to incubate strange eggs placed in its nest. It sat without demur on the egg of the Australia Zebra finch a bird nearly as small as itself, also on the comparatively large egg of the common sparrow.

These facts seem to show that the path of the cuckoo is very smooth, that it is no great feat on the part of the parasite to make other birds hatch its eggs.

Did space permit I could cite many other instances which tend to prove that an incubating bird is to a large extent an automaton, a machine that will sit upon almost anything that is placed in its nest. One historic Calcutta kite spent several weeks in a vain attempt to induce a pill-box to yield a young kite!

It will be observed that my experiments have been with Indian birds. There is no reason to suppose that birds in England behave differently. I remember once adding a robin's egg to a clutch of blackbird's eggs. The hen blackbird continued to sit as though nothing unusal had happened. After a day or two I removed the robin's egg as it was a stale one. My observations accord with those of Mr. R. Kearton, who writes: "I have often exchanged blackbird's eggs for those belonging to a song thrush and vice versa, without any notice whatever being taken by either species." He had some sham wooden eggs made and was able to induce blackbirds and warblers to sit upon these.

In face of these results what are we to think of those of M. Lottinger. One is almost inclined to hint that the nests he had under observation were tampered with by some mischievous person. It would be worth while for some English naturalist to repeat the experiments of the French savant and observe whether similar results are arrived at.

"Time has been," said Sir Walter Scott to Captain Basil Hall, "when I did shoot a great deal, but somehow I never very much liked it. I was never quite at ease when I had knocked down my black-cock, and, going to pick him up, he cast back his dying eye with a look of reproach. I don't affect to be more squeamish than my neighbours—but I am not ashamed to say that no practice ever reconciled me to the cruelty of the affair."

The Story Teller.

THE FETISH OF WAR.

A July afternoon of 1899, a burning sun in a breathless sky, and the stifling courtyard of a native house in the walled town of Yerima, once a prosperous city of the Empire of Sokoto.

The arena enclosed by the mud walls, nearly an acre in extent, was partly cultivated and partly a dust-heap, upon which some mangy fowls stalked in their dignified search for food. Three circular mud-huts, with roofs of thatch, stood in a row on the west side of the enclosure facing the narrow gateway in the opposite wall.

Between them lay seven or eight carriers' loads, evidently part of the baggage of Europeans, neatly sacked in orderly arrangement and in military dressing with the front of the huts. The men who brought them were lying about in the shade of a small scrubby tree, while the owners of the house formed an interested group round the escort of the baggage, which consisted of a corporal and two privates of the Niger Company's Forces.

Corporal Adamoo Bakanu was a typical Hausa. Not very tall, he was of considerable physical strength and possessed of intelligent features, more refined, especially about the nose and lips, than the ordinary coast negro. For the corporal's stripes he bore he was young. But promotion ran fast in the Niger Company's service, and these were stirring times to live in. The two privates, as it happened, were scarcely more than recruits, for they had not yet seen their first action, which was an unusual confession to have to make in West Africa in the nineties.

"Thus," the corporal was saying, "when the river rose, were we on this side and the remainder on that. And it was not safe for us to return nor for them to advance. So the white man decided. Therefore did he order us to come here and, sitting down, await his arrival. For the ford at Kamba is easy. So when the sun is setting will you see the white man in person. He is a man."

"How many follow him?" queried a listener.

"Two hundred soldiers and twice two hundred carriers."

There was a short silence. The faces of the audience fell, and one in the background murmured, "Isfu raids with 2,000."

"And the Fulahs defended Bida with 5,000," retorted the corporal, "yet the white men captured it with 600 of us!"

"It is true," remarked an old man, looking reprovingly at the doubter; "numbers are of no account with them. I know not why. Do you, oh officer?"

Adamoo threw out his chest in pride of the title. He cast about in his mind for words for his explanation.

"I do, father. Listen. It is known to you that the pigs of pagans have many fetishes of which they are much afraid; but they do not hurt white men nor us. Yet are they not all nonsense. For I, who speak, could tell you of many strange things which my eyes have seen. Now the white men say that these things are foolishness, yet they themselves have a greater fetish than them all. It is the fetish of war. And though they do not worship it nor say prayers at stated times, yet they have many strange customs which propitiate the mighty spirit. Thus do they often say 'Shun,' upon which every man stands very straight and still, thus. This is very good. And sometimes they say, very loud, 'Shun, ashwere (as you were); shun,' which is better. There are many such observances, all of which I, being a corporal, know. It is for this reason that no man can stand against us and that numbers are of no matter."

The natives regarded their visitors with undisguised awe and pondered over this new aspect of the matter in silence. The unceasing hum of the market-place came over the walls of the compound like the sound of bees on a summer's afternoon. Suddenly a shot rang out; for a moment the hum died away; then it swelled into an uproar of shrieks and cries.

"Ba-Gudu! Ba-Gudu!" The cry rang clear above the tumult. The natives sprang to their feet in consternation.

"May your fetish help us now, oh soldier," cried the old man, "else are we like to be slaves or dead men."

The younger ones ran to the door, a roughly-built affair of strong material. It was too late. Before they were half-way across the compound, the gate burst open and the picturesque figure of one of the slave raiders strode into the court.

Armed to the teeth as he was, and reckless of human life by nature, resistance on their part was but courting death. The natives stood motionless, a stony despair settling on their features. Only the corporal seemed undisturbed. He lounged non-chalantly across to the baggage.

"Ah! What is this?" cried the ruffian. "White men's gear!"

He looked round suspiciously, fearing a trap. No one spoke. His gaze wandered back to the baggage, and the gleam of avarice came into his eye.

"A fat find," he chuckled. "Allah loves me to-day. Out of the way, fellow. Let me take my choice before I raise the call and bring the others."

"Not so," said Adamoo, "this is the white man's. It will not be good for you to touch it."

"By Allah!" cried the other, "a fool who resists! We will soon settle this."

"True, oh thief," replied the corporal, cheerfully, "we will soon settle this."

He threw his carbine up quickly and fired. The man dropped without a sound. the bullet mark fair and square between the eyes. A gasp of horror fluttered round the court.

"Ai! Ai!" wailed the old man. "Is this your fetish? Ba-Gudu never forgives the loss of a man. He will burn us in our houses as he ever does. Ai! Ai!"

"Shut the door," said Adamoo shortly. His order was promptly obeyed. It was not to be expected that the report of a shot would pass unnoticed. Outside, the looting of the town was going on in comparative quiet. The initial rush over, the inhabitants resigned themselves philosophically to their fate and their last desire was to attract the unwelcome attention of the raiders by a useless resistance. Thus a young follower of Ba-Gudu soon found his way down the alley-way in the direction of the courtyard. He paused for a moment outside in surprise.

"From ri' nummer! Ashwere, from ri' nummer!" (from the right number).

The answer, had it fallen on European ears, would have caused wondering astonishment. It floated over the wall clear and strong.

"One!"

The young raider was puzzled. It seemed strangely familiar to him. He moved forward and put his eye to a crack in the door.

Some men who were standing inside blocked his view. Beyond them, however, he could just catch sight of two Hausas in the hated English uniform, standing straight and still, apparently the flank men of a company. His one and only experience of white-led troops had been in a skirmish outside Lokoja, which had also been his first fight. That is a memory which never dies, and though he knew no word of

CALCUTTA.

English the next command, which had burnt itself into his brain on that fatal day, awakened the same train of panic in his mind now, of which it had been the precursor then.

Company! Fix baynits!"

The young warrior turned and, with a terrified glance over his shoulder, raced down the alley way.

"The English! The English!" The cry reverberated down the narrow streets and was caught up by fifty voices. "The English have come!"

The infection of disease is as nothing to the infection of panic. The raiders, though 300 strong, were scattered through the struggling town, plundering and murdering unmercifully. Each man was for himself in the looting, and now each man was for himself in the rush for safety. unashamed, they raced for their horses outside the eastern gate.

Inside the courtyard the natives listened to the cries of alarm and the scurrying feet with the utmost astonishment. Such a thing was unheard of. Was it not Ba-Gudu's boast that the town did not exist which had ever defied him!

"They have gone. They have gone!" they repeated stupidly.

The corporal looked scornfully at them.

"Of course. What did you expect, unbelievers?"

He had just finished inspecting the rear rank and had shouldered arms. For the first time he showed signs of embarrassment. How can a company form fours with only two men? Yet to move off in files went much against the grain. He escaped the dilemma by an advance in line.

"The Company 'll advance! Eyes ri'! Quick march!"

He hovered between a position in front as became the officer in command, or one in rear, as senior N.C.O., from which he could supervise better. He compromised with that of guide on the right of the front rank.

The last of the raiders was disappearing through the gateway only fifty yards away, when the company wheeled into the main street. Adamoo deployed at two yards interval on the ramparts.

Scarcely a hundred yards from the walls was a confused mass of plunging animals and cursing horsemen, who had communicated their panic to their mounts. The corporal was relieved at the size of the target, for he had remembered with a pang that his men had not even fired their recruit course. He decided on volleys under the circumstances, and, though he felt a twinge of conscience that the procedure was irregular, increased the fire effect fifty per cent. by joining himself. The hitting of the carbines at such a range was terrific, and a bullet which was not turned would pierce three men. The company fired a last volley at 500 yards, which, from the elation of victory, was somewhat wild, and then ordered arms, wiped out barrels, and stood at ease. The inhabitants of the town reappeared from the holes and corners in which they had striven to hide, and gathered on the wall, to gaze at the scene of destruction. In the mass of men and horses lying on the plain nothing moved. A cloud of dust still hung over the road along which Ba-Gudu had fled.

When the little British column was approaching the town that evening the commander pulled up in surprise at the sight of the tiny escort standing smartly to attention beside the road. Behind them were thirty-five dead bodies, neatly laid out in groups of five to facilitate counting. A crowd of natives stood around in speechless admiration. The corporal stepped forward and saluted smartly.

"Why, Corporal Adamoo," said the Major, "what does this mean?" The answer was ultra-military in its brevity.

"The town was raided, sir. We repulsed the enemy."

"With great loss," added the Major, laughing. "So I see. This is good. Come to me and make a full report. I am very pleased."

The corporal remained absent-mindedly at the salute, his eyes shining with pleasure at the praise. He saw the eyes of his admiring followers watching his every movement.

This," he explained, cutting his hand away smartly "is the greatest fetish of all."—London Opinion.

Travel and Adventure.

A COUNTRY VILLA IN MALTA.

To the ordinary winter visitor, Malta and Valeltta are but two names for one place. About the city Southern and unsavoury, clustering picturesquely around creek and harbour, there is little new to tell; for is not Valletta nearly as well known to English people as Brighton or Margate?

Being full of soldiers and sailors, it has become a favourite hunting ground for desperate damsels, who have failed in the matrimonial quest at home. Malta provides few outdoor amusements for its numerous men, and so poor things they are rather bored, and all too liable to fall victims to the "Rising Fleet." As we are neither members of the garrison, nor engaged in looking for husbands, we will try to view life in the island from a different standpoint.

To do this successfully we must quit Valletta, with its "smells, bells, and yells," and stay in one of the old fashioned villages in the country. Some of the Maltese nobility and gentry, who find the very mixed society of modern Valletta distasteful, avoid the madding crowd in just the same way, spending most of their time in their country residences.

There is no more charming little country town than Casa Lia, near the centre of the island: so as there is a nice house to be let there, we will go straight off and view it.

The electric tram will take us as far as Birchircara which is only a mile from the old town. We find a car, marked Birchircara, just starting from the terminus outside Porta Reale, and soon we are gliding swiftly down the slope through Floriana. Thence we pass through the Porte des Bombes and skirting Tar Braxia Cemetery, we turn to the right through Hamrun, after a fleeting glimpse of part of the Grand Harbour. Hamrun is a large and sordid looking modern village, and the terminus close to Birchircara Railway station is equally uninteresting, so we are glad to quit the tram, and walk through streets which show less signs of newness. On entering Casa Lia we find that the road has become narrow, and winds about amid the houses in careless curls. Time was of no value to the happy-go-lucky Southerners who built this village, two hundred years ago. Every window has Venetian shutters, and some of the slats in each are always turned flat, so that the occupants may be able to look out in the street, and see the passers by. Now and then a glimpse of dark eyes and scarlet lips lights up the gloom behind the slats: we are being inspected!

The houses are solidly built of grey freestone, and look grim enough from the outside. But nearly every door is wide open, and looking through as we pass, we obtain snapshot views of brilliant little gardens trellised with grape vines, and bright with flowers. All Malta is like that; dusty roads bordered with houses and high stone walls; but behind these barriers are charming little orange orchards, balustrades covered with creepers and vines, and terraces blazing with flowers.

And now we have passed right through the village, and are reaching the outskirts. A quarter of a mile on we arrive at an old windmill, which has been converted into a dwelling, and almost opposite to it is the house we have come to see. After looking over it, we will be better able to understand why the Maltese are so fond of their island, and affectionately call it "Fior del Mondo." From outside there is little to see, simply a large wooden door in a balustraded wall.

This door having been opened, we find ourselves in a stone flagged walk avenued on either hand with orange trees. The path goes straight up to a stone verandah, in which is the door of the house itself. The building was evidently at one time the country villa of one of the Knights of St. John—we can see his life sized bust, set on the parapet of the garden. A date on the wall proclaims the house to be about two hundred years old. Round two sides runs an arched stone verandah, on the top of which is an open terrace. To this glass doors in the upper rooms give access. The walls of the house are of great thickness, so that the lower rooms remain cool in the hottest weather. At the top of the stone staircase is a tiny oratory, while in one of the lower rooms a stone stoup for holy water, projects from the wall. The house is full of quaint deep cupboards, and recesses in unexpected corners. A low single storied wing runs out from one end making the house L shaped in plan. This extension contains coach house and servants' rooms. The ceilings are crossed by massive black beams which support the stone slabs above, for all the roof and floors are, like the walls, of cut grey freestone.

The terrace is brilliant with the pink flowers of climbing geraniums. Pots and boxes of flowers stand everywhere. The protecting balustrade is covered with a wild tangle of morning glory, roses, and jessamine.

At the end of the house the terrace is continued along the top of the massive wall which surrounds the orange garden. Here the tops of the vines which are trained along this wall come over the balustrade above, and trail everywhere in luxuriant profusion. In the summer it is good to have early morning tea on the terrace, and eat grapes with it, straight off the vines. There are two other orange gardens on other sides of the house, which thus stand embowered amid them.

In an alcove in the outer wall of the villa is a capacious well, which goes deep down underneath the hall. Thence water can be run all over the gardens by means of stone channels. This well is cold in the hottest weather, and it is easy to cool one's soda water by putting it in the bucket and lowering it down.

In an old fashioned villa like this the hot weather in Malta loses most of its terrors. There is a soft peacefulness too about the life which is quite refreshing after noisy Valletta. At one time there were numbers of olive groves all over the island; a few yet exist near Casa Lia. Many things used to be manufactured out of olive wood, but now there are comparatively few of these picturesque trees left. Our old house, however, can still boast of an olive or two, and the monotony of the orange trees is still further broken by occasional pomegranites and quinces.

We find one of the country's greatest charms in the perfect summer evenings. As the sun sinks, a soft pearly light succeeds the fierce daylight glare.

The sharp lines of the stony landscape lose their hardness, and become etherialized in the fading light. Cool puffs of wind from the Benjemma Hills fan our faces, and through the stillness we can catch the distant tinkle of mandoline and guitar.

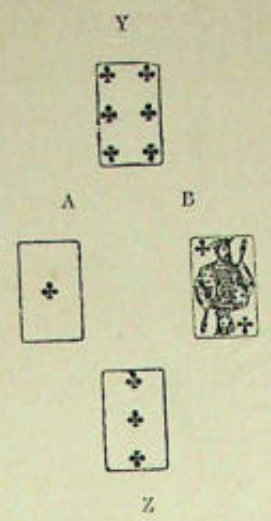
BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 62.

A probably holds the ace of clubs, but it is useless to return diamonds up to the king, 10, as he would require two cards of entry to bring in the suit, and he can hardly be so strong as that. B should accordingly lead the queen of hearts. If Z wins with the king, he (Z) is left with a ten ace over dummy's knave, and if A, when he gets in, returns his lead, he will make two, and perhaps three tricks in the suit. This is his best chance of saving the game, as the dealer is probably strong in spades.



Problem No. 63.

Score: A B 0, Y Z 24. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares diamonds. Y's (dummy's) and A's (original leader's) hands are as follows :—

Y's HAND (Dummy).—Hearts, 3, 2; diamonds, ace, queen, 8, 5, 4; clubs, 6; spades, king, jack, 10, 8, 7.

A's HAND (Leader).—Hearts, ace, 5, 4; diamonds, 9, 6, 3; clubs, ace, 10, 8, 7, 4, 2; spades, ace.

The first trick is as follows :—

How ought A to proceed and why? Forecast the play of the next few tricks.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 8th May 1908.

VERY often one hears the complaint that a certain car seems to eat up tyres, and that no matter what make or size are fitted the result is always the same, viz., excessive wear in a very short time. Consequently either the maker of the car or the tyre manufacturer is most unfairly blamed, whereas, as a matter of fact, a little careful examination would soon show what was the matter. In the majority of cases this excessive wear takes place on the front wheels, and this alone should make one reflect, seeing that the front wheels do not have to carry anything like the weight of the back wheels, nor have they any driving strains to contend with. The cause in nine cases out of ten is due to the fact that the wheels are out of alignment, and this may have been caused by several things. For instance, the steering may have been neglected and allowed too much play, or again, some little collision, which at the time did not seem to have done any harm, actually bent the steering very slightly. Skidding and careless driving when drawing up alongside of the kerb will often do quite a lot of harm.

I suppose there is no motorist extant who has not at some time or another cut corners on the wrong side of the road, probably with a view to minimising strain on his tyres. To go round a corner on the wrong side is practically indefensible, although there are extenuating circumstances, as, for instance, when one can see well round a corner, and assure oneself that nothing is coming the other way. The worst of doing it is that it is likely to unconsciously become a habit, and then it is done without thinking. You have to realise that there is always a possibility of another car, a motor bike, or a lady on a bicycle coming the other way, and that even though you may keep your head the other fellow may lose his. There have been several bad accidents lately owing to this practice, and in cases where it has been proved that a driver was on the wrong side, he has generally had to pay pretty severely for his negligence.

An examination has just been made of a device to prevent side-slip. It is called the Newcomb non-skid, and consists of a pair of forked arms and wheels hinged to a beam, which is bolted to the back-axle of motor-carriages. These wheels are bevelled at an angle of 15deg., so that directly there is any tendency for the vehicle to side-slip they assume a more vertical position, creating a wedge, but in no way interfering with the forward movement of the vehicle. The side-slip preventive wheels are shod with a special fibre, so that they cannot destroy or damage the road surface, and yet is hard enough to stand the amount of wear and tear the wheels may be put to. The metropolitan police authorities are satisfied that this device does not contravene any of their regulations, so it is hoped that a long trial under ordinary traffic conditions will be given to this anti-side-slip device on a motor omnibus. In fact, as a complete set has been given to the writer, he will be pleased to have it fitted free of charge to one of the motor omnibuses, so that a practical demonstration of its worth or the reverse may be proved, purely for the public benefit.

One of the advantages of this device is that when not required in use the driver has only to push a lever and these wheels are kept clear from the ground. It is to be hoped that one of the London omnibus companies will take advantage of this offer, as the compensation that the companies have had to pay through damage to other vehicles from side-slipping has been a great tax on their shareholders. It is only actual trials under ordinary running conditions that really prove the value of any such-like device. The trials in charges and solitary runs usually demonstrate but little, and it is for this reason alone that the suggestion of a protracted trial is submitted. The motor omnibus has come to stay, but from a commercial point of view to the users (owing to the cost of running, including the accidents) has not proved as remunerative as it ought to have been.

The German Emperor has granted the Daimler Company the Royal warrant of appointment. He has also purchased the fleet of five Mercedes cars that was provided for his use in Corfu, so his stud of motor-cars must now be one of the largest in Europe. The King of Spain has appointed Argyll Motors (Limited) warrant-holders to the Royal House, with the use of the shield and Royal arms of Spain. It is pleasing to note that two British firms have been thus honoured by two such eminent and ardent Royal motorists.

THE SPORTING PUBLIC VERSUS GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS.

It is curious to observe what a mass of public opinion may exist, adverse to the Government and its officials, in the minds of their fellow countrymen in India, without in the least disturbing the serenity of the powers that be. Native public opinion, on the other hand, is jealously watched, and from Governor's downwards every opportunity is utilized to inform the Hindu races how thoroughly loyal they are considered, and Mahomedans how well they behave themselves on all occasions.

The European community have not a bogie like "The unrest in India" to scare their rulers with, and being of the same race and creed they are, of course, considered "safe," and their opinions a negligible quantity. They hold no "Congresses" or "Conferences," formulate no "resolutions," and do not disturb the equanimity of high officials by calling on them in "deputations." As the matter is sufficiently notorious, we will instance the attitude of the sporting public towards the Government, their officials, and the rules and regulations at present in force to prevent the undue destruction of game by sportsmen in India. In clubs, in Military messes, in shooting camps, and elsewhere, it is instructive to listen to the long-winded tirades concerning shooting in general, and the restrictions placed by selfish officials on the sporting public in this respect. Much heat and animus are betrayed at these particular moments; and then the matter drops. The absence of cohesion, so evident in native public opinion, is even more conspicuous here, and no whisper ever reaches the authorities concerned. If half the time spent "growsing" about Collector So and So, Commissioner What's His Name, or that unprincipled forest guardian Shorea Robusta, were employed instead in united action to bring these grievances forcibly to the notice of Government, good would certainly result.

As this mass of opinion among an important section of the British Community does really exist; is not urged on the attention of the authorities; and is not in any way noticed by the latter, it is fair to infer that the Administration are entirely ignorant of its existence, or if they have knowledge, are indifferent. In either case, their inaction is attributed to that bureaucratic pride which can see and hear nothing, but what panders to official vanity. The irritation thus caused in the minds of their fellow-countrymen, on a subject, which deeply touches the outdoor life of all fresh air-loving Englishmen, is certainly considerable. It keeps alive an antagonism which, though not so dangerous as that official bogie, "Unrest in India," is surely worthy of some endeavour towards its mitigation.

To put it shortly, there is an abiding feeling in the minds of most British sportsmen outside the official pale, that from the Viceroy and Governor downwards, the entire administration of the country is banded together to keep off, on every pretence, the outside public, from all those shooting grounds under Government control, where only, in these days, good hunting is procurable.

His Excellency expresses a desire for a few days' shooting in a good sporting locality of a certain province. The shooting blocks in that region, for miles and miles, are closed accordingly, sometimes even a couple of months beforehand. His Honour requires relaxation from the cares of office. His friend—the Collector of M—is written to, and an outing is forthwith arranged. All shooting by outsiders is summarily stopped weeks before the magnate is due. The opportunity for such tactics is too tempting not to be taken advantage of by Commissioners, Collectors, and Forest Officers. With the closure of Government forests notices are sent round to Rajahs, Nawabs, and large landholders, to prevent all shooting within their bounds also. Thus the unfortunate outsider, debarred from the big game under Government protection, finds himself excluded from zemindari lands also, say in the month of January, for the Lord Sahib's shoot in March! These are not the only uses made of a natural desire in mortal Governors for a few days' relaxation. Commissioners and those others make it a personal matter to tour through these specially reserved tracts to make sure that all arrangements are satisfactory, such unconsidered trifles as a tiger here or a record sambhar head there being, as a matter of course, bagged in transit. Elephants, the private property of zemindars, are bespoken from neighbouring districts, and the owners are solemnly warned that not one on any account is to be lent to private sportsmen thenceforward. Tehsildars learn instinctively from the Hazoor's smile, that no assistance in the matter of supplies and carriage is to be given to stray sportsmen from a distance, and that any obstructions placed in their way will be appreciated.

In any club, in any Mess, where two or three sportsmen are gathered together, tales illustrating the above are constantly related and reiterated, till one might be excused for entertaining an impression that the rulers of the land—from the dwellers on the Olympian heights, to the toilers and sweaters in the plains below, though immaculate and above suspicion in all other branches of the Administration—are in this particular respect the most unprincipled and selfish body of public servants that the world has ever seen.

It is needless to say that disappointment, spite, and exaggeration are very largely at the bottom of these club-bar vituperations. If carefully sifted, however, it will be found that there is a certain residue of truth on which these accusations rest. Is it not worth the while of the powers that be to spend a little of their valuable time in the endeavour to remove these false impressions from the minds of a not inconsiderable portion of their fellow-countrymen in this land of exile? To support this mass of adverse European public opinion, there are certain portions of the provincial game-protection rules which are constantly referred to as having been specially invented by the interested framers to support their selfish application of these restrictions.

Section 7 is brought forward as a case in point. Holders of permits "shall" encamp only in places set apart by the forest authorities. These camping grounds are ingeniously fixed at points from which in most cases the wished-for game is not accessible without a tramp of hours going to and returning from the ground, at those periods when the sportsman should be on the spot itself, hunting for his quarry; that is to say early in the morning or late in the evening. Permission to move camp elsewhere is rarely granted, on the ground that the sportsman's camp-fire would be dangerous to the forest. But wood-cutters, grass-cutters, and others are allowed by the hundred to camp in the very heart of these hunting grounds, and to live in inflammable grass huts, during at least six months of the year!

Section 9 is another instance. "Fifteen days shall elapse between the grant of two consecutive permits in the same area." The sporting public, rightly or wrongly, hold a firm conviction that this rule was created in the interests of forest officers, who, of course, after thus excluding the public, hunt these grounds at their own leisure! Objection is also taken to the discretion given to Divisional forest officers for extending or contracting the limits of shooting grounds, according to their own convenience. Sometimes a permit will be granted for a block sixteen miles or more in extent, which a sportsman, even with a friend to assist, cannot really shoot over in fifteen days. In effect, only a small portion of this area is hunted, the rest remaining unvisited. Nevertheless, the whole of that extensive tract is closed for half a month—to the advantage, of course, of the Forest Officer, when he next comes round! Or a permit is given for a shooting block only five miles square, in a corner of the same extensive ground, where the former licensee had more country to hunt than he could reasonably manage. While the latter sportsman is thrashing every bush in his limited area, it will generally be found that the forest officer is entertaining friends at a shoot in the remaining portion of that ground! The inevitable inference is drawn by the jealous public.

The rules concerning sanctuaries (section 4) are also viewed with suspicion. It is firmly believed that these reserves are specially set apart as game preserves in the best portions of shooting forests, for the special benefit of the powers that be. It is ruled that "the prohibition extends to all persons, whether exempted or not." But the incredulous public ask the question, Quis custodiet ipsos custodes? They have a firmly rooted belief that no forest official is so superhumanly virtuous as not to shoot the grounds when the temptation offers.

These instances will suffice to show even the provincial shooting regulations are not popular, and lend colour to the opinions held on this subject by the majority of Anglo-Indian sportsmen. The authorities concerned would be doing the public a service by removing these mostly erroneous ideas from the public mind.

A few suggestions here will not be out of place. A revision of the present rules is certainly necessary. If a new draft were made and largely circulated for opinions among sportsmen before being finally adopted, this action on the part of Government would, in the first place, disarm subsequent criticism, and would also certainly elicit opinions from different points of view, which would be of value in the final framing of the regulations. The game-protection branch of the Forest Department should be placed on a more satisfactory footing, and its supervision should be recognised as an important part of the forest official's duties. There should be an increase in subordinate establishment for their efficient performance of game-protection, and the money collected from sportsmen should be spent thereon. The temptation to show the fees thus levied as "revenue" should be resisted. The limits of shooting blocks should be permanently fixed, giving a reasonable area to each, according to circumstances. Measures should be taken, by the publication of maps, information, etc., to keep the public thoroughly acquainted with these arrangements. The capacity of each block for furnishing a reasonable number of good heads during the season, should be gauged, and the number to be shot should be fixed at that limit. The time limit should be one month as the extreme, at the highest charge (say twenty rupees) and for lesser periods at a lower rate, to suit the convenience of all classes of sportsmen. The sporting public should be taken into the confidence of Government. Means might be adopted by the publication of an annual report, to make known the result of the past year's administration of the shooting regulations, and every facility should be given to the public to keep themselves acquainted with the details thus placed at their disposal. Sportsmen generally would then have an accurate knowledge of how local authorities have worked these rules, what difficulties they have experienced, and the degree of success they have attained on the one hand, in preserving a good head of game in their shooting grounds, and on the other, in supplying the sporting public with a reasonable amount of sport.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

There is still very little of interest to record in the racing world and we are not likely to see much doing in the way of preparation for the Monsoons till the beginning of next month. The course is closed and the sand track is chiefly occupied by the devotees of the constitutional liver shaker and such work as is being done, takes place mostly at Ballygunge where Piper's, Smallman's Rowan's and Mr. Evers' lots may be seen most mornings. Piper has the most forward, in fact one might be pardoned for thinking that they are possibly too far forward for the time of year and wondering what they will be like by the end of the Monsoons. However, he no doubt knows his own business best and they certainly all look uncommonly well now. Mr. Evers has got Cragendarrie, who was an absolute wreck a few months' back, looking very well and they say if he starts in the five-furlong race at Tollygunge next week he will be hard to beat.

The Jui Jitsu Stakes advertised for the first Tollygunge Meeting is to be postponed to the second gathering on the 27th and its place in the card is to be filled by a sporting match between Mr. Pettit's Paddy and a horse belonging to Mr. Hynton. Both animals are hacks and are to be ridden by their owners and as, we believe we are right in saying, that they have neither of them ever had a mount in a race before it should be a very interesting contest to watch. The distance is to be once round the Tollygunge Course. Most of the events are expected to fill well except possibly the polo scurry as many owners do not care to gallop their polo ponies three furlongs and two would probably have been a more popular distance and surely there should be no Arab and C.-B. allowances—however, between the Polo Club and the Junior Club who, we are glad to say, are now going very strong again, a fair field should be got together.

There were only four ponies up for measurement on the 19th including the unlucky Metaura, who at last finally missed, going 14-2½. They tried to measure this classy mare originally last November in Calcutta, but she was so fidgetty that it was impossible to get the standard on to her and after many attempts it was abandoned and they sent her up to that master of the art, Beedham, to prepare. He, however, said it was hopeless at the time as she could not be got to stand and the only plan was to keep her quiet for some months, let her forget all about it, and then try again. This advice was followed with the unfortunate result recorded above, the mare is, however, supposed to be something out of the way good so that she may yet annex enough in the horse class to repay her owners for their disappointment. Smallman measured a nice looking little waler called Badcock, 13-3½, for Mr. Rasch, who will probably run him in the closed class this season.

Milton Park was quite busy on Tuesday. Mulison and Peveril were at work in the cage, which looks as if they were destined to try their luck over hurdles in the Monsoons, Mr. "Holmes" gave Maud a run round the jumps, Mr. Tremearne did a school on Dynamite, who is a much improved pony though he hit the hurdle rather hard, and Mrs. Colin, Mr. Damiano and a few others were out having a morning exercise or seeing the fun.

We are glad to hear that Dr. J. Nield Cook, though still confined to his bed, is better. He will leave for England as soon as he is fit to travel.

The annual cricket match between Simla and Outstations has been fixed for the 10th June.

There was a large gathering of spectators at the fifth Simla Gymkhana last Saturday, Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Minto being among those present. Five events were figured on the programme and results were as follows:—

The First Event, hitting a polo ball round a flag and through a goal, was won by Colonel Victor Brooke.

The Victoria Stakes for ladies was carried off by Mrs. Kraggs, Miss Deane being second.

The Third Event in which ladies took polo balls out of baskets and placed each separately in other baskets, their partners subsequently replacing each in the original basket was won by Miss Makon and Colonel Brooke.

The Fourth Event for ladies, carrying a tennis ball on a bat over a wand course, was won by Miss Schuster.

The Fifth Event, in which second and penultimate horses were to win, was carried off by Mr. Fell and Captain Howell.

The Beresford Polo tournament which opened at Simla, last evening, has drawn seven entries, viz.:—King's Dragoon Guards, 12th Lancers, 17th Lancers, Patiala, Viceroy's Staff, Commander-in-Chief's Staff and the Hopefuls. The King's Dragoon Guards beat the Viceroy's Staff yesterday and will meet the Hopefuls on the 6th. The Patiala team meet the 12th Lancers and the 17th Lancers meet the Commander-in-Chief's Staff to-day and the winners of these two ties compete on the 6th. The final will be played on the 8th.

The second Gymkhana at Naini Tal was held on the 23rd ultimo in perfect weather. There was a large attendance and the seven events on the programme were keenly contested. Proceedings opened with the Affinity Stakes—ladies to take three rings, men a tent peg. Ten entered, Mr. and Mrs. Stebbing winning in good style. The Naini Tal Grand National for Bazar tats brought out a field of eleven spirited chargers, Prayag winning with Mr. Harenc up, Boostan ridden by Mr. Milne coming in second. Then came a half mile flat race open to N.-C.-O.'s and Men of the Manora Camp and this was followed by the Wand Race for ladies. Fourteen entered and the following were successful in the preliminary heats:—Miss Mackenzie, Miss Dyer, Miss DuCane Smythe and Mrs. Westcott, the two latter came through in the semi-finals and the event was eventually won by Miss DuCane Smythe. The Zoological Stakes attracted 16 couples, Captain and Mrs. Ley bringing in the only correct list of animals imitated. The Trotting Race for ladies was run off in heats, Miss DuCane Smythe winning the final with Mrs. Moore, and Mrs. Ross next in order. The Polo Ball Race for men brought the programme to a close. This was run in two heats, Mr. Harenc ultimately winning.

The Ranikhet week at Naini Tal was this year as gay and successful as its predecessors. There was the usual round of social functions, the ball at Government House and two small dances, while the amateurs staged My Friend the Prince, which was enthusiastically received. In the sporting fixtures a beginning was made with the cricket match which ended in a victory for Ranikhet, who made 382 to Naini Tal's 345. Ranikhet scored another win when they beat Naini Tal in the hockey match by three goals to two: the scores were two all when time was called, Ranikhet hitting the winning goal in the extra period. Eight teams entered for the polo tournament, which resulted as follows:—First Round.—Subalterns, Native Cavalry beat Subalterns, 68th Durham L.I. by five goals to four; The West Ridings beat Ramnaggar by four goals to two; Naini Tal Gymkhana beat the South Lancashires by seven goals to three. The Civil Service team having scratched the Rifle Brigade Subalterns had a walk over. Semi-Finals.—Native Cavalry Subalterns beat West Ridings by ten goals to one: Rifle Brigade Subalterns beat the Gymkhana by eight goals to two. Final.—Played on the 30th ultimo. Rifle Brigade beat Native Cavalry by nine goals to four. Naini Tal won the golf by twenty-eight holes. Naini also won all the tennis matches as follows:—Ladies' Singles, Mrs. Stebbing (Naini Tal) beat Mrs. Kemble (Ranikhet) 6—8, 6—4, 6—4. Ladies' Doubles, Mrs. Stebbing and Mrs. Westcott (Naini Tal) beat Mrs. Kemble and Mrs. Kitchen (Ranikhet) 6—0, 6—3. Men's Singles, Mr. C. H. Dixon (Naini Tal) beat Mr. Kemble (Ranikhet) 6—1, 6—2. Mixed Doubles, Mr. Dillon and Mrs. Rocroft (Naini Tal) beat Mr. and Mrs. Kemble (Ranikhet) 6—1, 6—2. Naini Tal won most of the events in the regatta at which there was a large attendance and Lady Elliot was "At Home" to visitors at the Boat Club. The Japanese water fete was a great success, the boats being illuminated with Chinese lanterns. In the billiard tournament Colonel F. W. Gee, Naini Tal, beat Mr. H. L. Riley, Ranikhet, by eighty points. Mr. Roland Marsh, Naini Tal, beat Captain Woods, Ranikhet, by 51.

The Mussoorie Football tournament for the John Cup begins on the 8th June.

It is probable that the Poona Hunt will make an early start this year. A pack of twenty-eight foxhounds from Mr. F. Wilton, of Hanwell, came out by the Anchor Line steamer Circassia, last week. This is about a week earlier than the hounds were landed last year, so with fairly cool weather and an early monsoon it is hoped that hunting will commence here by 1st July. Major-General Alderson, C.B., has consented to be the President of the Hunt this year. Lieutenant-Colonel G. H. Bull is again Master and huntsman, with Captain W. A. Light, 114th Mahrattas, as first whip. The Committee are fortunate in again having the services of Mr. R. E. Enthoven, I.C.S., as Honorary Secretary of the Poona and Kirkee foxhounds.

We would draw the attention of our fishermen readers to R. E. N.'s letter in our correspondence columns rearding fishing records. We welcome his suggestion and shall be pleased to receive records of captures of large fish, record bags, etc., which we will be happy to publish.

A man took a nap in the woods, laying his umbrella on a rock beside him. After a while it began to rain, and the man awoke. He was all wet. He took hold of his umbrella and opened it hurriedly. It seemed rather stiff in going up, and there was a ripping tearing sound. Then a live black snake fell to the ground, split in two from its head to its tail. You see, it had swallowed the umbrella, all but the handle, and the man did not notice what had happened till, putting the umbrella up, he halved the snake from stem to stern!

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—The Bangalore May Races were a bright little meeting too and though "class" as a whole was not too good, Messrs. Paris and Marshall's Morette is a very useful mare and there were one or two other racehorses about. The higher stamp of animal was in fact not catered for by the conditions of the events, and this was wise, for the horses now training for Mysore, would probably not be entered, and any that were, would only keep away the more moderate classes. The Cups presented by the sporting gentlemen were very handsome and undoubtedly assisted matters. The racing was quite good on the whole and although on the whole punters should have had the best of it, there were only two "dead certs" during the afternoon. These were Camilla for the opening race and Plassey for the Bedouin Plate. In the latter case Tommy Melsom had the mount, and odds on were freely laid, but the good thing tired a lot in the straight and had not William Rufus been a good deal interfered with, it might not have come off. Camilla cantered in for her engagement and Flash Point beat a rather better favourite in St. Martin for the Polo Scurry. Remains only the Paddock Plate in which an odds on favourite in Haloya could only get third to Morette and Annexe, and the concluding event, the Polo Pony Race. In the latter coming events had cast their shadows before, for Fishook and Guineas had already met, and were the only two really fancied at the start, although Bushranger was at first backed at evens. Fishook, nicely ridden by Mr. Burmeister, won easily by two lengths.

The Y.M.C.A. is a rapidly growing Association in Bangalore, and now includes some really good athletes. The sports, which lately took place, included a five mile Bicycle Race (road) for a handsome cup presented by Messrs. Aldridge Salmon and Co., and this was won by a Hussar Sergeant, whose name has escaped me in fairly good time. The champion athlete was E. Game, who annexed the 100 yards, 200 yards and hurdles, but he was closely run by Victor Eagles, who would have tied with him had he won the high jump outright instead of failing at 5 feet 1 inch as also did his opponent Reeves. There seemed to be some doubt existing as to whether or not non-members were allowed to compete on the payment of an additional fee and this should be made clear in the future. Had non-members been allowed to compete I know one boy certainly who could have beaten the winning high jump by five inches, and his name is one Joe Pereira, well-known at this end as high-jumper, hockey centre forward, good cricketer and—like the rest of his family—a good sportsman. The weather was execrable and the ground so bad that good timings were out of the question.

We would draw the attention of our readers to the prospectus appearing in our shooting columns of the First International Shooting and Field Sports Exhibition to be held at Vienna, from May till October, 1910, with the support and co-operation of the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Municipality of Vienna.

Invitations to take part have been extended to all foreign countries and their colonies, but in view of the fact, that the exhibition is to include all the products of industries connected in any way with hunting and shooting, it is hoped that also a great number of private parties from foreign countries will be among the exhibitors and that especially business firms, will avail themselves of this opportunity to bring their goods before an international purchasing public. Dr. F. Freyesleben, the Acting Consul-General for Austria-Hungary, will gladly assist intending exhibitors in obtaining the rules and regulations of the exhibition and forms of application for space.

In Australia recently, there was rather an amusing football match under Australian Rules, which largely resemble Rugby Union except that points are allowed for "behinds," which are like the subsidiary goals recently in vogue in Indian polo. The contending teams were men who, respectively, weighed under 8, and over 18 stone, and at the start the odds were 6 to 1 on the Tom Thumb team. They, however, threw up the sponge very soon, the reason being that the portly gentlemen proceeded to fall upon them whenever they got a chance. Specially successful in this direction was a giant named Archie Hill, and, when one of his victims who had been carried off the field insensible came to, he feebly asked, "What was it that ran over me?" "Oh," replied the Referee that was "A. Hill." "A hill!" moaned the mangled man, "strewth! I thought it was one of the Blue Mountains."

The County Gentleman has the following on the making of an American Oarsman:—

It is a curious fact that though the Americans have repeatedly, off and on, beaten us Britishers at most of the sports and games which they themselves really practise, they have never yet been able to beat a really representative crew of University oarsmen. They have tried and tried again, and, of course, they are bound in the nature of things to succeed sooner or later. But for the present the riparian laurels still repose on our own noble brows.

The reasons for this are doubtless many. Perhaps one reason may be found in the fact that few American undergraduates have had any experience on the water before they go to college; whereas our men are, so to speak, to the manner born. The South Sea Islanders are said to be able to swim before they are able to walk. It may almost be said of our gilded youth that they can row before they can talk.

Then, too, there is the question of style, but into that vexed question we cannot enter here.

For the rest, it goes without saying that young America takes its rowing seriously, as it takes every other form of athletics. The great regattas are usually held in June, and training in the crack universities commences the first week in January, directly the men come back from the Christmas holidays. That is to say, an American crew of oarsmen begin to train nearly six months before the races.

At most of the universities candidates for rowing honours are first of all examined by the medical officer of the establishment, who summarily rejects all who are not perfectly sound in wind and limb. Those he passes, numbering perhaps, in an average year, about 150 in the large universities, are handed over to the chief coach, who is a paid and retained professional, and to his assistants, of whom he has a number, both paid and amateur.

The initial stages of the training are now entered upon. Of course, no outdoor work is possible so early in the year on account of the intense cold, and the fact that the rivers are ice-bound till about the middle of March. All the early training has to be done indoors. The first stage consists of a few simple gymnastics and perhaps a brisk walk of two miles or so a day, increased later on to perhaps four miles, the whole being finished off by a bath and a rub-down. When this regime has been followed for a week or so, and the men are beginning to get into form, they are put to work on the rowing machines in batches of eight. These rowing machines are ingenious contrivances—but then your average Yankee is nothing if not ingenious. They consist of long frames rivetted to the floor, and fitted with short wooden arms corresponding to the handles of the oars, and sliding seats, precisely like a racing eight, and thus enable the men to practise the exact stroke which they will have to row when actually in the boat.

On these machines the novice, by dint of enormous pains and patience, is initiated into the mysteries of the "Cornell stroke" or the "Harvard stroke," or whatever it may be. He learns how to sit, how to hold his oar, how to combine the push of the leg with the swing of the body, how to "recover" smartly and in such a way as not to retard the motion of the boat, and so forth. During all this time the daily runs and gymnastics are kept up. Some universities possess what are called "rowing tanks"—that is, indoor pools on which a real "eight" is moored, and where, of course, real oars are used in real water. But these tanks are not viewed with general favour.

Towards Easter, the rivers being then free from ice as a rule, the rowing machines are abandoned, and the men are sent out on to the water. As likely as not it is the very first time our would-be oarsman has ever set foot in anything smaller than a Mississippi steamboat. Naturally, he finds his new experience rather trying. He discovers that a lively "shell" in rough water is rather different from his old friend the rowing machine, and that the open river, with a north-easter blowing off-shore, numbing his hands, catching his blade, and sending the spray hissing and stinging across the boat at every stroke, is not quite so comfortable as the gymnasium he has just left.

And, of course, under these novel and trying conditions, a beautiful crop of new and ingenious faults makes its appearance, which the long-suffering coach must patiently set himself to eradicate. Once on the water, however, progress is rapid and sure. In spite of north winds, rough water, icy sleet, and such-like pleasant accompaniments of spring, the crews are sent out every day, unless, of course, there is a danger of the boats being swamped. Commencing with easy pulls of two miles or so, the distance is gradually increased until each crew is covering from eight to ten miles every day.

From this point the practice of an American eight does not greatly differ from that of a typical English crew, and therefore need not be described here.

Less than three weeks ago the Duke of Portland sustained a loss through the death of the brood mare Memoir. Foaled in 1887, she was by St. Simon from Quiver—the dam of La Fleche and other good thoroughbreds—and was bred by her late Majesty Queen Victoria at the Hampton Court Stud, being purchased as a yearling by the Duke of Portland for 1,500 guineas. As a two-year-old she won three races, including the Prendergast Stakes, at Newmarket, but in the following year her five successes included the Newmarket Stakes, the Oaks, and the St. Leger. In the Oaks she defeated, among others, Signorina, and at Doncaster she had behind her the Derby winner, Sainfoin, Surefoot, and other good horses. As a four-year-old, she only won the July Cup, at Newmarket, but she was giving weight away to all her opponents. After that season Memoir was sent to the stud, but proved a shy breeder, and cannot be said to have produced anything nearly so good as herself, among her produce being Golden Moments, Miss Gunning II., Manlicher, Brauneberg, Tom Boyce, and Quair.

No plumes of foreign birds, except ostrich, cider duck, and wild birds used for food, will be seen on women's hats after 31st December, if Lord Avebury's Bill to prohibit importation of plumage and skins become law.

The penalty for importation for sale or exchange is £5 on first conviction and £25 on second and subsequent convictions, with forfeiture and destruction of the feathers. But if a woman is actually wearing prohibited plumage when she arrives in Great Britain, and is not to sell it, then no offence is committed.

Lord Avebury stated: "The idea of my Bill is to check the wholesale destruction of birds going on throughout the British Empire and other parts of the world simply to provide plumage for millinery. All the ornithologists in England are behind me, and I have the whole-hearted support of the Selborne and the Wild Birds' Preservation Societies. The birds to come within the Bill are the white heron, from which osprey plumes are taken, crowned pigeon, albatross, lyre bird, and birds of paradise. The birds are most beautiful at nesting time, when they are mostly caught, so that when one is taken it means the destruction of a whole family. In this way many beautiful species are gradually dying out. I am sure if ladies really knew how cruel the traffic is they would never wear the plumes, for after all they do not look nice in them."

At recent plume auctions in London there were catalogued 19,742 bird of paradise skins, 1,411 packages of the nesting plumes of the white heron (representing the feathers of nearly 115,000 birds), 1,386 crowned pigeons' heads, and 20,000 kingfishers, while large numbers of lyre birds' tails and albatross quills have been offered.

Mr. Rudyard Kipling is among the contributors to The Flag, the book of the Union Jack Club, just published. He gives a curious scene from an imaginary play, "The Marred Drives of Windsor," in which he represents Falstaff as a motorist, and makes the worthy knight speak his mind freely of Prince Hal's French chauffeur, Dumain:

Dumain? Hang him for a pestilent, chicken-chopping, hump-backed, leather-hatted, poke-eyed, muffle-gloved ape! He hath been fined as often as he hath broken down; and that is at every tavern 'twixt here and York. Dumain! He's the most notorious widow-maker on the Windsor road. His mother was a corn-cutter at Ypres, and his father a barber at Rouen, by which beastly conjunction he rightly draws every infirmity that damns him in his trade. Item: He cuts corners niggardly and upon the wrong side. Item: He'll look behind him after a likely wench in the hottest press of Holborn, though he skid into the kennel for it. Item: He depends upon his brakes to save him at need—a death-bed repentance, Hal, as hath been proved ere this, since grace is uncertain. Item: He is too proud to clean the body of her, but leaves the care of that which should be the very cote-armour of his mechanic knighthood to an unheedful ostler. Thus, at last, he comes to overlook even the oiling; and so it falls that she's where she must be, and not where thou wouldst have her. Ay, laugh if thou wilt, Hal, but a round worthy knight need not fire himself through three baronies in eight hours to know the very essence of the petard that hoists him. Dumain will one day clutch thee into Hell upon the first or lesser speed.

The advances made in English billiards during the past eighteen months have been little short of the miraculous. That now world-famous stroke, the cradle cannon, which stirred the billiard community as it had never been before stirred over any innovation to the practical side of the game, mapped out a new development. It showed that the close cannons, always the weaker side of English billiards, could be made a medium of the most prolific scoring. Breaks of many thousands of points culminating in an effort of close on half a million points, which ranks as the handiwork of Reece, were compiled by most of the leading professionals. The very might of the cradle cannon proved its undoing, and by general consent it was barred.

Rumours have recently been put into circulation that another close-cannon stroke, if not of equal productiveness to the "cradle," had been unearthed. For once in a way rumour has proved true, as was evidenced at Messrs. Thurston's Grand Hall, Leicester Square, recently in the week's match of 7,000 points between the professional players, W. Cook, the record holder of the moving close cannons, or "nurseries," and the young Sheffield left-hander, A. Raynor. In this game the last-named receives a start of 750 points, and until the new stroke rather unexpectedly came upon the scene Raynor had improved on his start by 56 points.

It should be explained that the honour of discovering the new stroke, which is already named the "rocking cannon," belongs to Raynor, who actually showed it to Cook a few days ago. In effect, it is a variation of the cradle cannon, only differing from that well-worn shot by reason of one of the object-balls being free from a cushion. As the state of the game implies, Cook badly needed its assistance. He had striven to gain the desired position all the week, but with no success until yesterday afternoon, when, gathering the balls on the top cushion, near the left top pocket, he created first amusement, then deepening interest, by making cannon after cannon without a perceptible movement of the object-balls.

The red ball was frozen against the top cushion, with the object white about two balls' distance away from there, and a little way—not more than a ball's width—further on. The cue-ball lay between the two, almost in a direct line with the red, and close by the white. A succession of gentle kiss-back strokes from the red, most beautifully judged, enabled the cue-ball to roll back to the white for a cannon. In this performance the object-balls were barely disturbed. The position was partially lost on several occasions, but regained by the thinnest of glancing cannons from the white, or outside ball.

In all, Cook scored 232 cannons with the balls so placed before he just missed the white ball in playing one of the return glancing cannons mentioned. The balls were moved very little away from their original standpoint, a testimony to the delicate stroke execution displayed by Cook, who is confident of making a vast improvement upon this effort. At one period of the break, which amounted to 490 points, it looked as though the recognised record break of 802 at open billiards, which this stroke cannot be said to offend, would be eclipsed.

From a playing point of view the "rocking cannon" must be placed on a far higher plane than the "cradle cannon." In the latter case both object-balls were retained by the cushions, but Cook had the assistance of only one cushioned ball, the second one being free, and, therefore, most difficult of control. The further exploiting of this new stroke will be eagerly awaited by billiard enthusiasts. It is known in the American game as Frank Ives' "anchor cannon." Greater cannon possibilities are still in the air, it would seem.

Rooks are not easy to kill cleanly with the rifle at all times, observes a writer in a home paper. True, they are mostly sitting shots, but two things go against the shooter. The slightest wind sways the rook-decked branches with an uneven, but pendulum-like, motion, just enough uneven to prevent alignment being taken at one swing and the shot fired at the next swing of the bird to nearly the same position. Besides, by this method no sort of certain work can be done in hitting the head, and with the ·22 bore that is essential to the avoidance of "clingers." How dead rooks will continue to cling appears marvellous when, before sudden death, they are given time to start it. Once a lady was trying her 'prentice hand at rooks with the shot gun. She killed at the first shot, but the bird scarcely moved, although the recoil knocked off the shooter's hat. Under wicked advice, she went on shooting many times at the apparently live bird, each shot having no other effect than that of repeating the disarrangement of toilette. Then, as the bird was not far off, and as the dead thing had been drilled through and through with no effect, the branch to which it clung was shot through, and, falling, brought the still fast-clinging bird to earth. Nor is this wonderful, when one stops to consider the anatomy of the sinews of roost-going birds. Their pulling effect on the feet is to close the claws as one closes fingers in making a fist. This is done automatically by the action of sitting. Even a dead fowl—one which has been hanging by the extended legs for days—will make a fist of his claws if his legs are forced up under his breast in the sitting position. That is Nature's law for enabling perching birds to go to sleep without falling from their roosts.

The Western Pacific Herald reports that a most peculiar accident occurred at Navua on the Tamunua cricket-field recently during a game. Two fieldsmen were running from opposite directions to catch the ball, and were so intent on the play that neither saw the other. The consequence was that the head of one struck the jaw of the other Mr. Lorking. So severe was the impact that both sides of Mr. Lorking's jaw were broken. They were set by Dr. Ramsay, but it will be some weeks before he quite recovers. The other cricketer escaped with a severe shaking and was somewhat dazed for a day or two.

The latest joke is that two professional wrestlers have gone to law over the question as to what constitutes "unfair and unworthy methods" of securing publicity. Isn't that the limit?

For the tug-of-war championship of the Army at Olympia, the 1st Battalion, Grenadier Guards, will be represented by a team of veritable giants, mostly composed of men of the famous King's Company. Following are the names, heights, and weights of the team:—

Most Indian golfers should by this time be familiar with the celebrated "Colonel" and "Admiral" balls turned out by the St. Mungo Manufacturing Company. Despite all opposition the "Colonel" maintains every bit of its widespread popularity in England, and one can quite believe that in order to cope with the demand the factory is kept extremely busy. Proofs of the affectionate regard in which the "Colonel" is held continue to reach us from various quarters. For example, the winner, runner-up, and many of the other players used it in the recent professional competition for the "Manchester Courier" Cup. Another instance of the ball's popularity lies in the fact that the scratch challenge cup, which was competed for in the military meeting at Aldershot, was surmounted by an exact model of the 1908 "Colonel."

The St. Mungo Company are also doing very good business with their new eighteenpenny ball, the "Admiral," which, we hear, is making hosts of friends, particularly in Scotland.

Armand Massey, the British and French Open Champion, uses the "Colonel" constantly, it is a hot favourite among leading pros and amateurs and was used by the winners of nearly every championship in Britain last year. It is as well to note that the 1908 ball has been much improved.

The important Bill, which was introduced into Parliament recently, and which will, if passed, do away with pigeon shooting and seriously affect game farmers, is strongly supported and we learn that there is great social influence behind it. This Cruelty to Animals Bill, as it is styled, introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. Luttrell, aims at the abolition of what is called "spurious" kinds of sport, and thus to provide protection for those animals which, though nominally wild, are in fact kept in confinement and released for the immediate purpose of being hunted, coursed, or shot. The Bill does not apply to any form of sport which is concerned with wild animals in their natural condition of freedom, and does not in any way interfere with the hunting, coursing, or shooting of such animals. Clause 1 enacts that any person who takes part in the hunting, coursing, or shooting of any beast or bird kept in confinement, or who keeps or uses any place for such purposes, shall be liable to a maximum fine of £20 for each day on which he commits the offence. The Bill does not apply to animals released fourteen days before the hunting takes place. This, it will be seen, is on the same lines as the Bill introduced last year. We have not heard of any action being taken by pigeon-shooters or the trades that will be affected by the measure, and we conclude that this indifference to their own interests will be used as an argument by the promoters that there is no objection to the measure. Does no one care what happens?

The Australian Cricket Board has decided to participate in the triangular contest. Appended are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the week:—

Yorkshire beat Surrey by seven wickets.
Kent beat Northampton by an innings and 54 runs.
Somerset beat Warwickshire by 96 runs.
Lancashire beat Cambridge University by 171 runs.
The matches between Middlesex and Hampshire and Sussex and Leicestershire were drawn.
Northamptonshire beat Lancashire by one wicket.
Notts beat Gloucester by six wickets.
Oxford University beat the Gentlemen of England by an innings and 110 runs.
The M.C.C. beat Cambridge University by 239 runs.
Yorkshire beat Derbyshire by 196 runs.
Surrey beat Leicestershire by 86 runs.
Worcester beat Somersetshire by an innings and 75 runs.
Lancashire beat Notts by 9 wickets.

The following are the first entries for the Civil Service Cup:—Mr. B. N. Burjorjee's Gyrtle, Lorette, The Butler and Bonita II., Mr. J. E. Adams' Choto, Major F. Popham Young's Fabius, Mr. J. C. Faunthorpe's Devon, Mr. J. C. Sherrard's Flitch, Mr. F. W. Brownrigg's Lady Polly, Mr. Bunting's Son of a Gun, Lieutenant-Colonel Daly's Bob Major, Mr. J. C. Galstaun's Circus Girl, Thakur Sripal Singh's Plover and The Point.

Yesterday afternoon, in continuous, pelting rain, the Prince of Wales opened the great Franco-British Exhibition at Shepherd's Bush and there is little doubt of its having been an epoch-making event in the industrial and social history of this country. It is unquestionably Britain's greatest exhibition and it will leave an indelible impression: every nation is flocking to it, every language is heard within its enclosures, while in promoting this colossal enterprise the two nations concerned have reached a pitch of entente cordiale exhilarating to contemplate.

I must confess that from the time I passed the entrance turnstile till I left the place, with but a fractional portion of it seen, amazement at its extent and magnificence took complete possession of me. There are thirty miles of garden paths, there are four hundred buildings. In the construction of this great city the builders used in less than a twelvemonth 75,000 tons of steel, 800 tons a day of ballast, 18,000 tons of plaster, and 60,000 square yards of fireproof slabs. As he tramps from building to building along the three miles of main roads and the thirty miles of garden paths and smaller avenues, or rests upon one of the 10,000 chairs and 1,000 garden seats, the visitor will gain a further impression of the immense labour which has gone to the making of the exhibition. In addition to the scores of palaces in which the industrial and other exhibits are housed, there are three complete villages (including one representing India) and there is the Stadium, the greatest athletic ground in the world. Details of this I sent you some time ago.

The estimated cost on buildings is at least £1,000,000, the Colonies have spent £325,000, and the concessionaires £450,000—these amounts, of course, take no account of the value of exhibits.

But it is quite impossible, with the fact staring one in the face, that the Indian mail closes in a few hours to give any conception of the myriad of attractions and diversions to be found herein; those fortunate exiles, who find themselves holiday-making in the old country this year, will see for themselves, others must be content to read about it in the home papers. Apart from the Exhibition itself, and its varied forms of entertainment, the big Sports Club will prove a rallying ground for the athletes of the United Kingdom. There seems, too, every probability of the Garden Club, in connection with the Exhibition, being one of the great social meeting-places of the year, and its committee is already representative of the most distinguished citizens of both nations.

A State visit to the Exhibition will be paid by King Edward and the French President on 26th May, the day following the arrival of M. Fallieres in London. The French Fine Art Section will be formally opened by our King on the occasion of this visit.

An eminent statistician, after careful examination of the figures relating to the exhibitions held in Chicago, Paris, Glasgow, and St. Louis, estimates a probable attendance of no less than 50,000,000 visitors to this—the greatest exhibition in history.

A very large number of people, who are following the big "book war" now in progress—and quite outside the huge fraternity of English publishers whose interests are vitally affected—received with unbounded satisfaction the verdict against the Times in the case brought by Messrs. Murray: as noted in my last letter. The award of £7,500 damages for libel was the first pronounced victory in the war and was hailed in court with an exuberance of enthusiasm which just stopped short of "vociferous cheers." The winners were warmly congratulated by all sorts and conditions of men, literary and miscellaneous. The summing up afforded the judge an opportunity for wit and epigram which fairly corruscated at times. The defendants will appeal.

A few days ago there arrived in London Major J. Manners Smith, V.C., C.I.E., Resident of Nepal, and Lieutenant Macleod Wylie of the 4th Gurkhas; they brought with them the Dewan of Nepal and the heterogeneous rabble appropriate to the travelling Indian prince, a Thibetan dog, two cows and a couple of hill mynahs. The usual fuss is being made of the visitor. Officially he is being feted and petted, while the papers launch into wildly extravagant descriptions of his person, costume and entourage—even his shoe buckles come in for notice! Those who know what "bear leading" means are, of course, amused at reading the inclusion of the British Resident among the "attendants!" Let me see did not Calcutta entertain the Ameer of Afghanistan a short while ago and endure his trying vagaries and savage eccentricities at the Minto Fete almost to breaking point? The return for such hospitality would seem to be trouble on the Afghan frontier. One may be excused for asking whether the visit of the Dewan of Nepal to England is to be the precursor of an exhibition characteristic of the peculiar little ways of the native independent ruler whose methods so often remind us of the fable of the ploughman and the adder, as set forth by Æsop some time ago.

A mild agitation is being carried on with the object of ousting the servant girl and replacing her by the ex-soldier! One is told that the demand is far in excess of the supply. So I should imagine: it may be all very well to desire Thomas Atkins as a parlour maid, but that martial person may have other views. I fear Mary Jane is destined to be with us some time yet, and the servant problem is as far off solution as ever I should say. I read that the Secretary of the National Association for the Employment of Reserve Soldiers has been receiving a large number of applications from worried housewives for ex-soldier cooks, housemaids, and parlour-maids all this week, and it is stated that there are a large number of men upon the Society's books who have a very good knowledge of housework, and who, with very little training, would turn out first-class servants. M'yes.

Mr. Bernard Shaw's new play "Getting Married" has been produced at the Haymarket and, as he predicted, the critics are not pleased with it—"paradox and prolixity" are its leading characteristics writes one of them. Mr. Shaw told a curious world last week, through an interviewer, that "Getting Married" was to be his "revenge on the critics." The critics, said Mr. Shaw in effect, had for years accused him of writing so-called plays which were all talk and no dramatic action. They had said this of "Arms and the Man" and "John Bull's Other Island," and "Man and Superman," and now he was going to show them what he really could do in the way of characters who did nothing but talk according to the gospel of Bernard Shaw.

This he certainly has done in a "conversation"—it is little else—which opens brilliantly enough but falls away terribly and goes utterly to pieces in the third act. There are not wanting novel ideas, amusing dialogue, funny situations and it must be said the characters, for the most part, are well delineated; but the piece does not play well, one would prefer it in book form.

We are presented with a capital picture of provincial middle-class life in Mr. Pinero's "The Thunderbolt," which was placed before us for the first time on Monday night at St. James's. The piece interests without moving to any great degree: its leading feature is its elaborate characterisation. The story is very slight to spread over four acts. There is only one "big" situation. Anything in the nature of a "curtain" at the end of an act has been studiously avoided. And Mr. Pinero has made his characters talk in simple, homely, natural language.

Master stage-craftsman that he is, the author has built his play splendidly. As a piece of dramatic achitecture it is well-nigh perfect. But the one big scene is led up to with such a wealth of elaborate detail that it is not until the third act is reached that the movement begins.

"The Thunderbolt" has one striking peculiarity—there is no "love interest." It is true that there are some mildly amorous little scenes between a very young curate, who has nothing to do with the plot, and a lady who is intimately connected with the plot; but although this may be love it is certainly not interest. Instead, Mr. Pinero has given us a drama of £. s. d., and every character save one is swayed by sordid motives.

"Butterflies" at the Apollo Theatre has turned out an unequivocal success. It is really a musical comedy version of Mr. W. J. Locke's charming play "The Palace of Puck" and the story has been kept only the wit and literary gymnastics of Mr. Locke's former play are lacking; but Podmore and his wife and daughter are there in the enchanting palace, and Puck is there to conjure up beautiful girls, who dance and sing and make love to Podmore and upset his and his wife's equilibrium. The whole thing is merry; there are hosts of songs, some of them very amusing, nice girls in nice dresses do nice things. Puck, Podmore, and all of us have quite a good time. Miss Ada Reeve is delightful; very bright, clever, attractive, winsome, and makes hit after hit. Then there is Mr. Hayden Coffin and numbers of others who all please and do agreeable things.

Rumour has it that one of the Lodon music halls (it has not transpired which) has engaged the notorious opium den keeper "La Belle Lison" at £100 a week. She is to appear in a sketch called "A Scene of Opium." She tried the thing at Montmartre not long ago and the students of the Quartier Latin gave it such a hot reception the curtain had to be lowered on it. One cannot help the reflection that what isn't good enough for the Quartier Latin is hardly good enough for London, and when one remembers that "La Belle Lison" was the woman, who drove the Young French Naval Lieutenant Ullmo to dishonour for which he was sentenced to imprisonment for life, and that she has for long been connected with one of the biggest of Parisian scandals, the question arises what do we want with her over here? The exhibition of Raisuli's beastly brigands, to which I recently referred, was bad enough, here is something as bad, if not worse. If our amusement caterers really do know their business one can but deplore the public taste which creates the demand for a show such as this.

SOME INDIAN PREHISTORIC BEASTS.

INDIA was rich in rhinoceroses in the pliocene and pleistocene periods. First there was a primitive hornless type, rhinoceros perimensis; this was followed by four other varieties.

Rhinoceros sivalensis, palæindicus, and karnuliensis were one-horned; R. platyrhinus had two horns. All these animals became extinct before historic times, though no doubt some of them existed coeually with primitive man.

Elephants also must have been extremely numerous in bygone times. The Dinotherium with walrus-like tusks in the lower jaw and the Mastodon (Mastodon sivalensis) progenitor of the elephants, no doubt passed away long before the first men appeared in India. Some at least of the six varieties of true elephants, the bones of which have been found in the deposits of the Siwaliks and Narbada Valley, must have existed at the same time as primeval man. These six extinct species have been named by geologists, Elephas ganesa, bombifrons, insignis, namadicus, hysudricus, and planifrons. Of these hysudricus, one of the largest of extinct Indian elephants (the remains of which are found in the lower pliocene deposits of the Siwaliks) most closely resembles the existing e. indicus in its cranial characteristics and very probably it was the direct ancestor of this animal.

Insignis and ganesa are so similar in dentition, that it has been suggested that possibly the former may have been the female and the latter the male of the same species. A skull of e. ganesa in the South Kensington Museum has tusks which measure, including the alveolar portion, eleven and a half feet in length.

Ancient India was also extremely rich in wild oxen and buffaloes.

Bubalus palæindicus, found in the pleistocene deposits of the Narbada Valley, had widespreading flattened horns very like those of the present day buffaloes. In pliocene times there were b. platyceros, occipitalis, acuticornis and antilopinus. The last of these has been named from its antelope like horns, which rose vertically at a narrow angle from the top of the skull. Acuticornis had short sharp horns, admirably adapted for offensive purposes; so if its temper was equally sharp and short, it must have been an extremely formidable beast. There was an ox leptobos falconeri, in pliocene times, followed by another ruminant of similar but more advanced type (Bos namadicus) in the pleistocene, or early stone age, period. Deer existed as far back as miocene times, while the sambhur flourished alongside of the first men in the pleistocene epoch. There were several varieties of antelopes in ancient days, which have all since become extinct; some of these old Indian forms were not unlike certain existing African antelopes.

A wild goat too, capra sivalensis, inhabited India during the pliocene period.

But of all the horn carrying beasts of India's dim and distant past the strangest and weirdest was that extraordinary extinct ruminant, sivatherium giganteum. Th bygone monster was a sort of cross between a giraffe and antelope. Its massive forelegs were six feet in total length, and the sivatherium must have been about ten feet high at the shoulder. There were two pair of horns: the front ones were short and conical like those of the giraffe, while the posterior pair were large and palmate like those of the moose. The beast was heavily and clumsily built, the skeleton being enormously massive. Probably the animal had a rugged Roman nosed face, like a vast caricature of the moose, to which creature it no doubt was somewhat similar in general appearance. Altogether the great uncouth sivatherium, one of the roughest hewn creatures which has issued from nature's workshop, must have been a strange object in the landscape of ancient India. If, as is possible, this animal survived until the arrival of the first men one may be certain that these feebly armed hunters gave the horned and hairy monster a very wide birth.

There were two giraffes in India also as the bones of giraffa sivalensis, found in the Siwalik formation, testify. In pliocene times enormous hogs (sus giganteus) roamed through plain and jungle. Had the breed not unfortunately become extinct, forty inchers might have been pigs of no account! The bones of fossil camels, found in miocene deposits, show that these are very ancient animals; a fact borne out by their appearance.

The hippopotamus was once an Indian animal, and haunted the lakes and rivers of Hindustan down to pleistocene times. The remains of no less than three different varieties have been discovered.

Both the three-toed hipparion, an ancestor of the horse, and two extinct forms of the true horse (equus sivalensis and namadicus) at one time roamed the plains of India.

Then too in Northern India once lived the father of all the tortoises, testudo colossochelys, a creature nine feet long and six broad, which must have weighed something like a ton and a half.

Unfortunately little has been discovered regarding men of the early stone age in India. Probably the first wandering hunters appeared early in the pleistocene period. When intelligent man first arrived on the scene is extremely problematic; but possibly this occurred late in the pliocene epoch, while about the middle of the pleistocene throwing spears and bows and arrows may have been evolved.

It is very clear at any rate that the first hunters must have found large game immensely too numerous, and no doubt they led a very precarious life amid herds of great beasts against which their weak weapons were absolutely useless.

"FLEUR-DE LYS."

HUNTING WITH A HOUSE-BOAT IN CHINA.

HOUSE-BOATING in China is not house-boating in the United States. The shanty-boat of the Mississippi is at its best but a poor substitute for its luxurious counterpart of the Orient. Foreigners in China have house-boating down to what we Americans call "the fine points." This naturally follows, for the country is one of countless canals, and in the absence of railroads inland travel is almost exclusively by water.

The Chinese, that is the wealthier class, are themselves great house-boaters. They were at it long before the dawn of the Christian era, and their example in this regard has been of great value to the foreigner. The house-boat of the Chinese mandarin was quite as elaborate an affair in the Middle Ages as it is to-day, with the exception of a few foreign interventions in its construction which the Chinese, in their intense conservatism, have seen fit to adopt; but on the other hand the house-boat of the foreigner has undergone a wonderful and radical change for the better, even since the days of "Chinese" Gordon, when, it may be said, it first became popular with sportsmen. It was then that the suppression of the Taiping Rebellion made house-boating in the interior of Eastern China a matter of comparative safety, and as excellent sport offered in the country devastated by the long internecine war, foreign sportsmen quickly hit upon this craft as one offering the best means of reaching the best game sections.

The first house-boats built for the foreigners were of crude construction. They were frequently reconstructed from native junks, and were illy fitted, stoves not being considered indispensable in the colder months. Cooking was done over the laudah's charcoal hibachi. Those early settlers of the China coast towns suffered quite as much inconvenience on their shooting trips during the cold weather as did the pioneers of the American Northwest, but like those pioneers they found game in plenty and consequently felt well repaid for their trouble.

The foreign house-boat of to-day is quite a different affair. Frequently its frame work is of iron or steel, the planking of hull and deck of teak, and the house and joiner work of redwood or cedar. The fittings of the better boats approach the luxurious-cushioned chairs and settees, stoves in kitchen and cabin, baths arranged beneath each bunk, hanging lamps and other appointments of modern travel. To-day the Shanghai resident who considers himself anybody at all must have his house-boat as well as his yacht and polo ponies. Even newly married couples make honeymoon journeys on house-boats far into the interior.

In our case the "Patrol" was all that could be desired. Of sufficiently light draught to navigate the shallowest canals and creeks, she drew but fourteen inches when loaded. She had sleeping accommodations for three, two in stateroom and one in the cabin. The weather was warm but a neat little heater in the forward hold was ready for setting up in the cabin. A small and compact range stood in the galley where an abundance of lockers for shelving dishes and cooking utensils made things seem quite homelike. The bunks were mattressed and warmly spread with blankets and comforters. In the cabin stood a gunrack with accommodations for five pieces. Brightly burnished air-draft lamps hung in the cabin and stateroom, and four windows on either side of the house gave ample light in the day time. There were drawers for cartridges, hooks for clothes. In fact, everything seemed in the right place and nothing lacking. She was manned by a crew of six, including the laudah (captain), cook and cabin boy. The rest were coolies intended for work on the yulow (sculling oar) on calm days when the big sail was useless, or as beaters when the shooting country was reached. These with the cook and laudah lived astern in a space scarcely fifteen feet square. Our cabin boy, however, was quite a dandy and slept in the narrow passage-way connecting the galley with the cabin.

Steam power in China is rapidly becoming popular. Among the main inland waterways it is no longer regarded with superstitious dread by the native population. The modernization of the country, which previous to the Russo-Japanese War was advancing at a snail's pace, is now making surprising progress. The Chinese apparently regard the success of the Japanese arms with intense jealousy, and are filled with an overwhelming desire to emulate their island neighbours in all that they undertake —and they will do it, too, given time!

So no surprise need be felt that Eek should have engaged a Japanese launch to tow us to Soochow. There was a time, and that not so very many years ago, when sight of a steam launch fifty miles inland from Shanghai would have aroused the natives to the point of frenzy, but happily in those days game was plentiful nearer at hand and yulow and sail gave eminent satisfaction.

Entrained were four other foreign house-boats, one containing a missionary and his wife returning to their dangerous work after the month's annual vacation in Japan. I did not envy their lot, for they were away for a remote part, not to see another white face until next vacation time. The other boats containing shooting parties like ourselves—happy-go-lucky fellows with plenty of whisky and soda, and off for the boundless paddies of the Yangtsze valley and the rough uplands of the Teho Range. They were clerks and accountants employed by the big English hongs of Shanghai, and like their kind, head over heels in debt but none the less merry.

We dined well the first evening out, as we did throughout the trip for that matter, and after liqueurs and coffee sought the forward deck where pipes and cane reclining chairs enhanced our comfort. The moonlight was bright and its beams danced entrancingly in our wake. The wife of the missionary strummed a banjo. Her husband, a young and serious-faced American, was hard at work over his bible in the cabin. We could see the clean-cut outline of his face through a half-curtained window. On the other boats white-frocked Chinese servants danced attendance on their gay young masters, syphon and whisky bottle ever in hand. Three boats ahead the little tow chugged along, giving forth clouds of blackest smoke sprinkled with sparks that glistened like diamonds in dusky hair.

The picturesqueness of the situation thrust itself at one. To the American it all seemed unreal—not like any other shooting trip he had known. He thought of chilly, sleety shooting trip he had known. He thought of chilly, sleety mornings—upon duck flights in the Dakotas, of long, cold "hikes" after deer and moose in Minnesotan woods, and of cramping drives over Manitoban plains in search of prairie chickens; but there were no long trails of cold camps here. It was all too good to be true. Still he felt strangely effeminate when rolling in between clean sheets that night. Surely this was no shooting trip, at least not one in barbaric China!

Morning found us at anchor beside the crumbling walls of old Soochow. One cannot help regarding them with interest, their antiquity is so great, their story so inseparably linked with crucial periods in Chinese history. Here the Taipings made their last stand in our own day, and here, "Chinese" Gordon with his dandyfied swagger stick broke their power forever, in perhaps the greatest battle this land of blood has even known. Before them Prince Li-Hung-Chang first gained Imperial favor by treacherously decapitating the four rebel kings who under his promise of mercy had surrendered. They are old, these walls, so old no man knows how old they are! They were old even when Solomon built his temple in Jerusalem, and marvellously have they withstood the flight of time. To-day mission school children throw stones at the sparrows that nest by thousands in the crevices in the stone work, and foreign employees of the Chinese Customs shoot snipe in their shadow in the early spring, while the track of the Shanghai-Nanking Railway is but a stone's throw from their base.

It is said that 800,000 of the inhabitants of Soochow fell victims to fire and sword during the Taiping Rebellion, but the old city is rapidly recovering her loss and is to-day one of the greatest marts in all China. Her game market is without equal in the land, for she stands on the outskirts of the best shooting country. Shanghai also boasts of an excellent game market, but in no wise compares with Soochow in this regard. In Shanghai recently the report of the Inspector of Markets showed that 25,000 brace had been dealt in during one season, and of this number 8,000 had been shipped to Japan and Southern ports. A great variety of game offers in the markets of both these cities. Deer, boar, hare, rabbits, pheasants, partridges, quail, woodcock, snipe, plover, ducks, geese, and teal of all varieties may be purchased at ridiculously low prices. A walk through the game market in Soochow in proper season is quite enough to thrill the least enthusiastic sportsman.

Soochow is on the Grand Canal, the oldest and greatest artificial waterway in the world, but to reach it we passed along one of the numerous canals intersecting the city. Because of these interurban waterways some overly imaginative traveller has dubbed Soochow "The Venice of the Orient." He might also have written something about the worst smelling place on God's earth. It is not pleasant to dwell upon the sights that assailed our eyes, and the odours that burdened our nostrils during the brief journey. The water was stagnant, and stark naked children played by the banks in indescribable filth. A green slime covered the surface partially concealing the bloated bodies of dogs, pigs and even a pony. We might as well have been navigating a New York sewer, for what the sewers are to New York these canals are to Soochow. Upon turning a bend in this stream of horrors we came within sight of the American mission, where live fifty sterling men and women who have dedicated their lives to the seemingly hopeless task of promoting Godliness and Cleanliness where Filth and Paganism reign supreme.

You will appreciate our mutual feeling of relief when we reached clear water and fresh air. The windlass creaked, up went the mast, the sail was flung out and we were soon bowling along, the wind dead astern, and the broad plain of the Yangtsze stretching away towards a blue-white horizon banked by the knotty peaks of the Teho Range. Behind came the missionary's boat, for his route also lay along the ancient waterway. We felt little sympathy for our other companions of the night before. They had remained to "see the sights," and seeing the sights meant visiting the brilliant tea houses for which Soochow is noted throughout the length and breadth of China, and playing with the dancing girls—little painted bits of porcelain—who are said to be the cleverest and most attractive of their kind. But to "old China hands" tea houses and "sing song girls" are but ordinary attractions when good shooting is in the wind.

There is now a regular launch service between Soochow and Chinkiang on the "Big River," and, although the old time native junks are still numerous, they also evidence the spread of the Reform Movement, which, given the necessary impetus by the downfall of the white man before the yellow in the late war, is rushing madly over the country like a tremendous tidal wave, threatening to engulf the most isolated sections of the vast Empire. The yellow man believes he is coming to his own, and in the defeat of the Russians sees a happy augury of world-wide dominion for his kind.

The launches were old stories while the junks were comparatively new, and it was with great interest I observed that in most cases they carried canvas instead of the ancient matting sails; a boatman smoked a cigarette made of Virginia tobacco, another wore a knitted cap not unlike those issued to our blue-jackets, while another puffed with true Hibernian contentment at a short pipe of foreign make. Not far inland stretched the Imperial Chinese Telegraph line connecting Shanghai with Nanking. It follows the track of the Shanghai-Nanking Railways now constructed as far as Chinkiang on the Yangtsze. Yesterday native boatmen and the inhabitants along the canal would have regarded us with awe probably mingled with antagonism. To-day they take our presence as a matter of course, just as they do our telegraphs, our railroads, our launches, etc. Their stoical indifference is aggravatingly apparent. The curiosity becomes all on our part. Yesterday they classed us with the immortals—namely, devils; to-day the outcome of the Russo-Japanese war has robbed us of this undeserved glory, and we have taken our right place in their minds—merely fools prone to give away hard earned knowledge for the asking. John Chinaman may be vain and peculiar, but he is a "wise 'un" after all.

But midst these evidences of awakening China we came upon a party fairly steeped in antiquity, but very efficient in his way. He was a Chinese market hunter and he hailed us inquiring if we wished to buy game. He came alongside in his sampan, which was about the size of an ordinary rowboat, the central portion being roofed over with straw matting. In this limited space he dwelt with a wife, two children, a dog and a cat. He held up a "blue-bill," a hare and a hen pheasant, signifying his willingness to exchange the game for powder and shot. We didn't want the game, but Eek induced him to show us his gun, which proved the most disreputable fouling piece I had ever seen. It was home-made, the barrel was of iron, roughly forged and about four feet long. The stock, merely a pistol grip, had been clumsily shaped from a piece of pine. The firing apparatus was similar to that of a firelock in the days of Cromwell if a comparison may be drawn from pictures. The hammer and firepan were evidently the work of a village blacksmith, covered with rust and uncouth in form.

Holding the gun against his right elbow, he inserted the lighted end of a small rope, which he carried coiled about his right arm, into a groove in the hammer, and, taking aim, not from the shoulder, but from the line of the bent elbow in which the grip rested, he pressed the trigger. The report was similar to the sound of ripping cloth, but the range was good and the shot fell well bunched on the water. The contents of his powder flask and shot pouch were even more surprising. The shot had been made by the most primitive method—merely dropping molten iron into cold water from a spoon. It was consequently of no regular size; varying, I would say, between double B and dust shot. His powder was also the product of the home. It was black as soot and almost as fine, but we had seen its strength tested and had to admit its worth. He gave our modern weapons but a passing notice; my Greener, even when taken apart, made apparently little impression upon him, although he did admit to Eek that there were advantages in a "pump" gun of which we had two. But all in all he was quite content with his own ways, which had been the ways of his forefathers for centuries, and desired no change.

I have often wondered about this strange old Manchu. Despite his rags and his filth his quick, keen eye bespoke the man accustomed to quick work with a gun. We got the old fellow aboard, but were careful to keep him out of the house, for we had no desire to make closer acquaintance with the vermin that crawled nonchalantly about his neck and clothing with an air of possession, which he did not in the leastwise resent. I would have put him down for an unusually strict Thibetan Lama had I not known his occupation. Eek essayed to draw upon his knowledge of good shooting country. His reticence was beautiful. He liked us and our powder and shot, but with Indian-like sagacity and Chinese evasiveness, he carefully avoided answering Eek's questions.

"Is there a good place for ducks hereabouts?" inquired Eek.

"There are a great many in the markets at Soochow," he replied placidly. That settled Eek, and became the lasting joke of our trip.

The market hunters of China are a remarkable lot. They supply the markets of Soochow and Shanghai with thousands upon thousands of head a year. Their methods of taking duck and other aquatic birds, although involving great hardship and exposure, are fraught with much success. I only know of two of their ruses for bettering the wily fowl, but I am assured these seldom fail. One is to cover the head and shoulders with rushes and enter the water near where a flock is feeding. The rest is easy, providing one doesn't mind a cold bath with the mercury well down. The hunter stealthily approaches the birds, careful not to disturb the surface. The ducks see what they assume is an unusually large clump of drift grass coming towards them, and feed on unmindful of danger until the fattest and plumpest of their number disappears with a despairing quack. This arouses but a temporary curiosity on their part, and they swim about the inoffensive appearing clump of grass, quacking and feeding, until one after another they have all found a place in the hunter's belt.

Another scheme, and one involving quite as much exposure, is to rest your gun on an oblong float covered with grass, and approach the birds, wading or swimming behind as the occasion may require. When within range it is easy enough to make a good pot shot, as one can delay until the birds are bunched to his satisfaction.

We gave our market hunter before he left a tumbler half full of whisky, which he tossed off with the composure and satisfaction of Cossack. The same drink would have sent any one of us reeling to the side of the boat.

That night we left Wusieh and the railroad behind, and felt ourselves on the borders of a mysterious interior. We felt the zest of exploration and adventure, and our interest in the country became almost abnormal. The laudah spoke of pirates, Vah Kah Der's notorious band, and still more satisfied did we feel with ourselves. Vah's specialty was cutting the bodies of his victims into small pieces. One night we were awakened by the puffing of a launch. I wondered if Vah had taken to steam—he was said to be a most progressive pirate. Eek sprang out on deck and in stentorian tones demanded: "Who goes there?"

"I'm Thomas, on construction, S. & N. Railway. Who the —— are you?"

"A bunch of fools," muttered Eek as he climbed back to his bunk in indescribable disgust.

We were not rid of that accursed foreign influence after all, and this fact was all the more firmly impressed upon our minds when at noon the next day we came upon a neat little bungalow overlooking the canal, before which stood a man in clean negligé shirt, flannel trousers and white tennis shoes.

"Come right ashore," he cried, "I hope one of you can play cricket. I've a prime alley—built it myself, don't cher know," and so on, ad libitum, while we debarked. He was Mr. A. Bryant Leane, a constructing engineer on the railway, and he welcomed us with all that enthusiasm peculiar to educated men whose lot is isolation. First, we had to see his cricket alley, even without the conventional whisky and soda of the East. Eek rashly announced that he had once played in a cricket match and was immediately pounced upon by Mr. Leane for a game, and despite our protests and explanation that we did not understand cricket, we were forced to watch while Mr. Leane took keen pleasure in batting Mr. Eek all over the alley. The game ended with the latter throwing down his ball in disgust.

Our host showed us a tennis court in course of construction. I asked him with whom he intended to play? "Oh, I'll teach one of my Chinese," he answered, "and then about once a month some of the fellows come up from Wusieh for a bust." He had already initiated several of the neighbouring Chinese into the mysteries of cricket and assured us that they took to it as ducks to water. He was determined we should stay for dinner. "I dine at seven," he said. "It's cursed seldom I have company, too, but, you chaps would probably enjoy a tub! I've both hot and cold water!"

So we went back to the boat, got out some clean clothes, had our baths, and made ourselves presentable as possible. During dinner a gramophone played several late selections and a crowd of seventy-five or a hundred Chinese thus attracted, gathered outside about the open windows and doors. Their presence did not worry Leane in the least.

"Oh, they're all right now," he explained. "A month ago, however, it was different. They know now that we're up here to put the line through at any cost, and that we have the Imperial Government and its regulars behind us. They also understand that we will build the line straight, makee graves and all that truck. Now they remove their daddies' bodies before the grading begins. Not infrequently, however, we stumble upon the tomb of some forgotten ancestor who has long since gone to dust, and discover specimens of their ancient brassware and pottery that would make a connoisseur turn green with envy. The fact that we are not struck dead by lightning or something of that sort is gradually satisfying them that there isn't much in this ancestor worship after all. Oh, these Chinks are coming along all right! They're started on the right road at last, and it won't be long before they are up with the Japs."

I had seen quite enough to satisfy me of the soundness of Mr. Leane's observations. Farther up the canal we met a Mr. Stratton, also of the railway, who quite corroborated all he had said. Although Leane was given to the smaller games he was by no means unadept at the larger ones. He showed us his guns, of which he had a number. He told us of elephant hunts in India, of big game drives in the Transvaal and of a perilous encounter with a man-eater in India. This young Anglo-Irishman knew his frontier in many lands quite as well as he knew his London and his Paris. I never knew a better revolver shot. With a Colt's Automatic 32, he broke tansan bottles almost as fast as Eek could throw them up. Few men could have done the same with a shot gun.

"When I'm first out of here," he said, "I'll have another go at civilization, but it won't be long before I'm looking for a frontier billet again. It's in my blood. I was intended for the army, but I soon learned to detest barrack life. Active service, however, agrees with me perfectly."

We left the Leane bungalow that night and daylight next morning found us in a narrow waterway between steep banks covered with a dense growth of wire grass and surmounted by interminable thickets of bamboo. We were in the celebrated Pennu Creek which traverses the best pheasant country in Eastern China. The Yangtsze was but twenty miles ahead. It was a chilly morning and the grass was heavy with dew. So we laid around until after sun-up, attending to those numerous preliminaries so well known to sportsmen when preparing for a day afield. The dogs rushed from their kennels yelping their joy; Eek muttered an old Norse proverb as he filled his field flask; our yaloh coolies, whom we had transformed into beaters, lounged about, their long poles in hand, smoking our cigarettes and bantering one another, while the old laudah vainly attempted to give them a bit of advice as to what was expected of them.

From the top of the embankment we saw a great, level expanse of country stretching away towards low-lying hills. We distinguished patches of buckwheat and cotton, but the land in the greater part was given up to the cultivation of rice. The paddies extended for miles. In places they were flooded and flocks of duck and teal circled above them. Houses were widely scattered and there were few workmen in the fields. We plunged through a growth of mulberry and emerged into a cotton patch. Almost immediately "Old Hector's" tail stiffened rigid as a poker. "There they are," cried Eek, and with his words up went a cock and a hen with a tremendous roar, but they were "no sooner up then down," and so our first day on the Pennu began. The house-boat preceded us as we worked up the banks of the creek, and at noon we went aboard with fifteen pheasants, nine quail, and two rabbits.

Pheasant shooting in China is, I believe, not similar to any sport in the United States. Although the birds in the routine of their daily life are quite the same as our prairie chicken, they are seldom found in coveys, usually travelling singly or in pairs. If three are together it is usually a case of two cocks to one hen. The largest covey I have encountered in three seasons' shooting consisted of five birds. The male when fully grown is a marvel in the way of coloring; the hen is quite dowdy compared to her magnificent mate. She is more like the female ruffled grouse than any other bird of which I can think. Her plumage, however, is somewhat darker and heavier as well. Number four or even number two shot is preferable for pheasant shooting, while sixes, even eights, are satisfactory with the chicken or grouse.

Pheasants present some difficulties in shooting that quickly manifest themselves to the novice in the sport. When flushed, the bird rises with a terrific roar of wing that sets the heart of the uninitiated going like a trip hammer; his aim consequently becomes unsteady. The ruffled grouse goes up with considerable hub-bub and so does the prairie chicken; but in the case of the ring-neck pheasant it seems as if the roar of the sea was in your ears. A peculiarity in flight is also a hard obstacle for the beginner to overcome. The bird usually rises straight up before you to the height of fifty feet, and then begins a long gradual slanting downward flight. In order to bring him to bag, it is necessary to aim low, slightly below the bird, or else you will find yourself shooting over.

The pheasant is also remarkably swift of wing. I doubt, in fact, if the green-winged teal can beat him. I have aimed thirty feet ahead in a cross-over shot, only to have the satisfaction of seeing a few tail feathers scatter and fall, and the tail of the pheasant, as the picture books tell you, is of abnormal length. Especially is this the case with the little known Reeves pheasant which is said to be plentiful in the mountains of Szechuen and Thibet. Once in a while a few of this type appear near Ichang at the head of steam navigation on the Yangtsze. The country hereabouts is wild and rugged, especially along the "Unknown River," a name derived from the fact that no white man has ever explored its source. E. A. Aldrich, M.R.L.S., writes that he once killed a Reeves pheasant on this river that measured six feet, ten inches from beak to tip of tail.

In this vicinity is occasionally found the Golden or Tragopan pheasant, which the natives consider possessed of magic power. Like the Reeves pheasant it nests in the wilds of Szechuen, where it is said to be abundant. A pronounced characteristic of the ring-neck or common pheasant is his liking for the company of domestic fowl. In the good pheasant country if one happens to come upon a number of tame chickens it is well to be on the qui vive, for pheasants are almost sure to be near at hand. One winter's day I stopped at a Chinese farm house and while warming my benumbed fingers on the family kang one of my beaters touched me on the shoulder.

"Look, master," he cried, pointing through the open doorway towards some chickens pecking about in the yard. Right in the midst of the hens was a fine cock pheasant feeding in a most unconcerned manner, the hens seemingly taking his presence as a matter of course. There was an old rooster, however, who did not like the looks of the brilliant visitor from the wild; his neck was outstretched and his feathers ruffled in a most pugnacious manner. I was hoping and praying for a fight (the Chinese say that pheasants frequently fight with tame chickens) when the return of the housewife from the paddy caused the stranger to leisurely take himself off to a cotton patch not a hundred yards away, whence I immediately followed and bagged him. In these fights with the domestic cogeners the pheasant usually wins. A Chinese once told me of a fight between a nesting pheasant and a tame chicken in which the latter was killed. It seems that the domestic bird, in her wanderings about the paddy, had come upon a sitting pheasant. The attack of the latter was sudden and from ambush, so to speak. Alternating her rushes between air and ground the wild bird finally succeeded in bringing on the mortal result.

But if the Chinese pheasant has interesting traits, the Chinese quail, of which we killed eight on our first morning's shoot on the Pennu, is also a most surprising little bird. He is about half the size of the American "Bob White" and there is but the slightest difference between the appearance of male and female. His main stock in trade is that he is a fighter, and the natives train him for the pit after the manner of the locust or the game cock. Quail fights are popular in China, native ladies taking keen interest in them, and large sums of money are lost and won annually in this sport. Noted fighting quails are often valued very highly. One was recently sold at Soochow for five hundred taels, more than three hundred dollars American gold. The quail of Eastern China are being rapidly decimated by netting, and it appears they are doomed to extermination. Foreign sportsmen seldom hunt them exclusively, while the Chinese gunners do not consider them worth the necessary expenditure of powder and shot.

For eight days we shot along the Pennu, meeting with excellent luck. We were in the field usually about sun-up and returned to the house-boat for tiffin and a rest at high noon. We went out again at three and remained afield until twilight, the evening shooting usually yielding the best returns. We shot several teal and jack snipe, and once Eek caught sight of a wild boar, but he was not armed for such shooting, and did not attempt to stalk the animal.

Accidental shooting of countrymen by sportsmen in China is so common that Mr. Wade, in his book, "With Rod and Gun in the Yangtsze Valley," tells the reader the best course to pursue in case such an emergency arises. Americans will remember the narrow escape from death and possibly torture of the late Admiral Train and his son, Ensign Train, at the hands of the infuriated mob near Nanking, because one of them had sprinkled an old Chinese woman with bird shot at a range which did not permit of the pellets penetrating the skin. It will be remembered that the two officers were taken prisoners and their guns taken from them, and had it not been for an orderly who was accompanying them and who managed to make his way back to the ship with the news, there is no telling what might have taken place. Marines were promptly landed and advanced at a double to the rescue of their officers, which was fortunately effected without a shot being fired. It is said young Train would have resisted, but the counsel of the older head prevailed. The affair became international and was referred from Washington to Peking and from Peking to the Viceroy at Nanking, who took a very strong stand against foreigners shooting in the interior on the good grounds that there is constantly danger of them shooting farm labourers who are thickly scattered in almost every field, and who usually work bending over in a manner that makes it difficult to discern them at even fair shot gun range—especially is this so when the crops are uncut. It is but recently, however, that the natives have dared to take such extreme measures. The assailants of the Admiral and his son were doubtless impelled by the independence which follows in the wake of the Reform Movement. There was a time when even the serious wounding of a native would result merely in an apology and the payment of a trifling indemnity upon the scene of accident. Old China hands relate how they have known Chinese farmers to purposely place their sons within range of the guns with hope that one might be struck and an indemnity exacted. Not long ago a party of Englishmen, shooting near Quinsan on the Shanghai-Nanking Railway, slightly wounded an old woman. The matter was taken up by the Shanghai Taotai with the Consular Body, and later the former issued an order forbidding foreigners shooting in that section.

A similar accident occurred on our trip. We had gotten out of the Pennu Creek and were shooting on an island in the Yangtsze known to Shanghai sportsmen as "Buckwheat Island." Pheasants abounded; there were many quail, and as our vacation was near its close, we made the best use of our time. One afternoon Jebsen and myself were working a large field where many natives were cutting the ripe buckwheat with handy sickle-shaped knives. A covey of quail suddenly left cover a few feet before us. We fired simultaneously, and one bird dropped. Immediately we were startled by a cry of pain, and saw several of the farmers running towards a boy standing up in the field and crying loudly, both hands clapsed across his eyes.

I was stricken with a fear that a shot had struck the lad in the eyes. I knew otherwise he could not be seriously hurt. We hurried up and discovered that two pellets had struck him in the forehead, penetrated through the skin and were lodged against the skull. The wound was but a trifling one and the assembled natives, even the father of the boy, did not seem to regard the matter seriously. A Chinaman, however, is slow of thought, and I knew that they could make quick work of us with their grain knives if once they made up their minds to do so.

While Jebsen and I were debating what was best to do, one of our beaters, an old hand at the business, who seemed to regard the matter as a huge joke, similingly informed the crowd that there was a great foreign doctor on board the Patrol who could heal the wounds by merely touching them with his little finger. The credulous crowd accepted the beater's statement without demur, and chattering like so many magpies, followed us to the boat where Eek was quickly acquainted with the role in store for him. The laudah needed no instructions, for he scented the danger and quickly began preparations to cast off. The father and son were permitted to come on board, and while Eek bathed the shot holes with Pond's Extract and examined them with a well simulated eye of experience I plied the father with Scotch whisky which he drank in great gulps. Finally Eek, after his third examination of the wounds, smiled cheerfully and told the father they were of no importance and would surely heal before morning. He then began to haggle with the old man as to the amount of the indemnity. He continually referred to the fact that the wound was of so slight a nature that no payment was justly due. He only did this, however, to impress the crowd on the shore, for had he volunteered payment o a certain amount at once they would have considered it an evidence of fear on our part and therefore been inclined to believe the boy's hurts more serious than we cared to state. Finally the amount was fixed at five silver dollars which was paid and the farmer led his boy away evidently quite contented with the outcome of the affair. I could not help wondering at the time what a Dakota farmer would have done under similar circumstances.

We shoved off, and were well out in the river when a native beckoned to us from the bank. He was the father back again, and he had a bad dollar, which he alleged Eek had given him. A good one was given in return and the old man again took himself off.

That evening we picked up a tow, and as we left the river homeward bound, the big American cruiser, West Viginia, with Admiral Brownson on board, passed us en route to Nanking. That night over his pipe Eek muttered:

"I wonder how long that old Chink had lugged that bad dollar about in search of a sucker?"—J. A. H. in Western Field.

Fishing.

THE TIMOROUS TRICKSY TROUT.

After floods and foul weather and water, during which angling was off and fishermen were indoors, the most delightful conditions are prevailing. The country is green and warm; buds, and birds, and blooms are abounding, and the streams, warm, fluent, and just sufficiently high and coloured, are in rarely right order to tempt and please the rodman.

All this spells trouting.

The fascinations of the most fascinating of fish are manifold. The attractions of the trout include its beauty, its gameness, its artful timidity, its alternate rapacity and abstemiousness, and its environment; for it is usually found amidst the most romantic scenery.

As for the feeding or non-feeding (the "sporting" or "non-sporting") of the trout, there is a method in the madness of the members of the Fario tribe. Philosophy and observation come in here. We may know—generally after the fact—why our quarry are, too often, not "on the job."

Trout have to feed, like to feed, must feed; bar a surfeit, they are always hungry, or, at least, peckish; but sometimes they can't feed, at others they are gorged, and at others instinct impels them to seek shelter and safety rather than a dangerous meal, or even snack.

Let us illustrate this position by a sketch from the life.

No later than Thursday in this week two anglers went gaily forth to fish. Their hopes were high, for wind, weather, and water were apparently singularly propitious. They strolled down from a country house, picked their way through a wood, rich with hyacinths, or "blue bells," tripped across a few fields, gorgeously green and gold with grass and flowers, and, in the course of a few hundred yards, reached the banks of a stream, which they well knew to be stiff with lusty trout.

They got to work betimes, bent upon a long day by the river, which was strangely voluminous and gloriously sherry-coloured.

The atmosphere was still and very warm, though the sun was conveniently veiled. They confidently expected a brace of heavy creels, crammed with ponderous trout. Under the circumstances, which were altogether ideal, two happier and more confident sportsmen could not have been found in all Britain.

They tried a dry fly. No response. They tried wet flies. Short rises—few and far between. A troutlet of ¼lb. to each rod.

Excursions, alarums, much flogging, bush-fighting, toil, and trouble. A brace of sprats missed by each man. Hiatus. Drawn blank. "What's the matter?" "How shall we proceed?" "Condemn—that is, confound—the trout!"

The fly being a drag in the piscine market, the artificial minnow was tried. It was spun ineffectually.

Then, hardening their hearts, the anglers wormed a long stretch of water—the one upwards, and the other downwards.

Not a truce.

They flung down their rods and deposited themselves on a cowslip bank, with baskets and bottles handy; decided that the fish were taking the midday siesta, and would come on during the afternoon and in the cool of the evening.

The weather was oppressive. Ere long lightning flashed and fluttered. There was a short, sharp thunderstorm, and the brief bursting of a small raincloud, which did not affect the stream.

The mystery was solved.

The tempest in the air had caused the fish to go off the feed, and to seek retired holts and hovers; for trout are singularly and marvellously prescient of coming storms—of possibly impending rise of water.

After this, summer returned; the birds sang, and, above all, the trout rose fast and furiously. The anglers had yet before them several delicious hours, during which the creeling of fish was suggestive of shelling peas. From three till six they enjoyed really grand sport. "The world went very well then."

The tale—that is, the reckoning, of this joyous termination of a day's fishing, though reading like a dream, is absolutely accurate.

Of course, the anglers observed the ordinary, necessary precautions in approaching a subtle and timorous fish. They discarded their worms, pocketed their minnows, and lightly tossed, upwards, from behind leafy screens, such artificial flies as blue dun, red-spinner, alder, hare's ear, and Y gochen las.

To two rods there fell—in two creels there were deposited—eighteen brace of good, lusty, lustrous, well-fed trout (glutted during the spate of some previous days), aggregating nearly 30lb., with no specimen less than ¾lb., and the biggest and heaviest fish pulling the scale at 2lb.

Here was a great and glorious day, illustrating the uncertainty of angling for that fascinating fish, the trout.—Evening News.

Shooting.

THE FIRST INTERNATIONAL SHOOTING AND FIELD-SPORTS EXHIBITION.

TO BE HELD IN VIENNA IN 1910.

An international shooting and field-sports exhibition is to be held in Vienna in 1910, which is to include exhibits of all Agricultural and trade products having any sort of connection with these matters.

With the exception of a few small, unimportant exhibitions of this kind, chiefly confined to exhibits from the country in which they were held, and consequently only of local interest, the hunting and shooting exhibits have hitherto usually formed a subordinate and on the whole, neglected part of international, national or special agricultural and forestry exhibitions. At such partial exhibitions it has never been possible to do full justice to the real significance and value of hunting and shooting, their historical development, or their relation to sport and political economy.

It is felt that hunting and shooting, with all their appurtenances, would assume quite a different aspect, if the conditions under which they are conducted throughout the world were co-ordinated and presented to the public, and this can be achieved by means of an International Exhibition.

Hunting and shooting have more than kept pace with the general development of sport; they have penetrated into fresh strata of the population, all classes of which now take the liveliest interest in them.

As no such exhibition has ever been held, the First International Shooting and Field-Sports Exhibition to be held in Vienna in 1910, promises to be one of the most interesting "special exhibitions;" it will—apart from its primary object, its particular character and arrangement—give nearly all industrial exhibitors, especially business firms, an opportunity of selling their goods to an international purchasing public.

The object of the First International Shooting and Field-public are involved in the promotion of shooting and sport to countries where hunting and shooting are encouraged, as also the extent to which art, traffic, commerce, industry and trade are interested in the maintenance of those branches of sport and the remarkably large profit which is derived from them, not only by the parties immediately interested, but also by the whole population.

This Exhibition will show how closely the interests of the public are involved in the promotion of shooting and sport generally and what great advantages accrue to the country where they are carried on and encouraged.

This exhibition is intended to show, and will show, how closely the maintenance and practice of hunting and shooting are connected with the interests of active life.

The First International Shooting and Field-Sports Exhibition (which has the fullest support and co-operation of the I. and R. Government and the Municipality of Vienna) will last about five months, from May till October 1910.

The Exhibition grounds include the "Rotunde" (situated in the world-famous "Prater") which it is intended to use for the industrial palace, for the exhibits of those industries and trades connected with hunting and shooting, for which no adequate room is found in the separate pavilions, also the grounds round the "Rotunde" (as far as the "Haupt-Allee"), and these are intended to receive purely hunting and shooting exhibits.

The general plan of the Exhibition is that every State—including Austria—should have a separate space allotted to it, that the exhibits of each country should be displayed in a building or pavilion erected at that country's expense and representing either some Famous Historical Shooting Box or Country Seat typical of that country. Restaurants could also be set up in such buildings.

The Exhibition will include everything connected with the encouragement of hunting and shooting, particularly all objects illustrative of the historical development of this kind of sport and its economic and national importance.

The Exhibition will further compromise the products of arts and crafts, schools of agriculture, forestry and vine culture, also of industries and trades in any way connected with hunting and shooting.

The exhibits of each State, should, therefore, in general include:—

1. The ethnographical and historical portion of sport, its practice and apparatus, i.e., a series of objects showing the development of hunting and shooting from their origin down to the present types, as well as the necessary paraphernalia in use.
2. All kinds of hunting trophies, such as antlers, horns, weapons, skins, rugs, etc.
3. Stuffed animals of the chase and live game.
4. Hunting weapons, powder and cartridges.
5. Pictorial representations of hunting and shooting—Pictures and sculpture, as well as allied art-industrial objects.
6. Shooting boxes, their fittings and furniture.
7. Dress used for hunting and shooting, including the exhibition of complete outfits and accessories of all sorts, especially those needed for big hunting and shooting expeditions.
8. Hunting with hounds and hawking.
9. Hunters and pack-animals used when hunting. To this section belong also saddles, bridles and harness in general.
10. Dog-carts and other hunting vehicles, hunting boats, special motor-vehicles, etc., the associated trades, as also aerial navigation.
11. The temporary exhibition of hounds of all breeds and classes.
12. Natural and artificial foods for game, horses and hounds.
13. Colleges and secondary schools of agriculture and forestry: schools of hunting, their fittings and modes of instruction.
14. Hunting literature, statistics concerning head of game, bags of game, plans of shooting preserves and their arrangements.
15. Societies for protecting game and societies for the suppression of poaching.
16. Articles and aids used in hunting at home and abroad in the breeding, care and capture of game.
17. Illustrations of damage done by game and the means of preventing it.
18. Illustrations of the different kinds of poaching and its prevention.
19. The stocking of preserves with game and the exploitation of it.
20. Tourist traffic and travelling facilities.
21. Hunting hygiene.
22. Insurance against hunting and shooting accidents.

The exhibition is besides to afford an opportunity for holding International Hunting and Shooting Congresses, at which all the questions relating to those sports are to be discussed.

Likewise Special Exhibitions—Temporary Exhibitions of Trophies, etc.—, Matches—Shooting Game, International Shooting at Clay Pigeons (Ball Trap) and Glass Balls, etc.—, Competition of Mechanical vehicles and Motor-Cars—, Temporary Exhibitions of live Animals—Hunters, Pack-animals, Hounds, etc.—, Musical Productions—Competition of the Hunting Music of different Countries.

The management of the Exhibition will be in the hands of a committee comprising representatives of all the parties interested.

The rules and regulations of the Exhibition, as also the classification of the exhibits and forms of application for space, will shortly be obtainable by all persons wishing to take part.

We herewith invite you to draw the attention of all persons interested, the owners of estates and preserves, artists, manufacturers and merchants to this Exhibition. We should be glad to know, as soon as possible, principally if you are inclined to take part, and also whether we may reckon on your co-operation.

Vienna, December 1907.

FISHING RECORDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In Farlow's new fishing tackle price list just issued there is a photo of a 57lb. mahseer caught by a lady in the Ganges on a 14 feet rod. It would interest me very much to learn details of this capture as I have not seen any record of it in any paper. It seems a pity that some sporting paper does not start a regular record of captures of large fish, say, from 30lb.—upwards—the majority of anglers would readily send their records of best fish caught or best bags made if it was generally known that some paper made a feature of such reports.

MAHSEER RECORDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have recently been fishing for mahseer with a friend at Myitkyina, Upper Burma. Together we made the following catch in 12 days' actual fishing. It would interest me very much to know if it is in any way a record as the fish are all very large and were all caught by spinning a four-inch copper and silver spoon. I could hear of no single fish of over 90lbs. being recorded in Burma. The fish were weighed on a spring balance which had been tested.

21st April. lb 34, 10, 17, 11. Taken between 8 and 11 A.M. Had four other runs.
22nd April. lb 90, 70, 42. Fished morning and evening.
23rd April. lb 53, 40, 19, 8, 65. All taken in the morning up to 11 A.M.
24th April. lb 56, 43, 16, 51. In the morning; had other runs besides.
25th April. lb 68, 16. In the morning.
26th April. lb 59, 35, 9, 7. Morning and afternoon.
27th April. lb 65, 48, 63. Morning and afternoon. Lost two big fish besides.
28th April. lb 48, 34, 70. Morning only. Lost a good fish with a lot of line besides. From this date the river became unfishable until the 15th May when we commenced again.
15th May. lb 20, 16, 9, 27, 29. Afternoon only. Was broken once and had three other runs.
16th May. lb 62, 11, 16. Got broken twice in rocks.
17th May. lb 10, 5. Fish not taking so well but got broken twice. Fished morning and afternoon.
18th May. lb 48, 8, 58. Lost a small fish in landing. Fished morning and afternoon.

Twelve days' actual fishing.
Forty-one fish landed averaging 35½lbs.
1,466lb. total weight.
Largest fish 90lb. Length, 60 inches; girth, 34 inches.

THE STANDARD LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY
EIGHTY-SECOND ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF PROPRIETORS

To be held within the Company's Office at Edinburgh on Tuesday, 31st March 1908, at 2-30 P. M. To submit the Annual Accounts and other Statements showing the Company's progress during the year ended 15th November 1907.

THE DIRECTORS beg to announce the results of the business transacted during the year ended 15th November 1907, and to submit the Statements connected therewith in terms of the Company's Acts of Parliament, being as follows:—

BALANCE SHEET of the Company's Ledger, certified by the Auditor and three of the Directors, in accordance with the Acts of Parliament constituting the Company.

THE ANNUAL REPORT on the Books and Accounts by the Auditor of the Company, certifying that he has found the Accounts in complete order, accurately stated and properly vouched.

A GENERAL AND COMPARATIVE STATEMENT, showing the progress of the Company, from its establishment in 1825 to 15th November 1907.

THE RETURNS TO GOVERNMENT, prepared in accordance with the Life Assurance Companies Act, 33 and 34 Vict. cap. 61 being—

1. THE REVENUE ACCOUNT, showing the Receipts and Expenditure of the Company from 15th November 1906 to 15th November 1907.
2. THE BALANCE SHEET, showing the Company's Liabilities and Assets as at 15th November 1907

The following are the principal result of the Company's operations during the year under review:—

AMOUNT OF ASSURANCES PROPOSED during the year,—5,078 Proposals for		£2,686,967
AMOUNT OF ASSURANCES accepted during the year, for which 4,348 Policies were issued for		£2,234,166
Of this amount there was re-assured with other Offices		£233,216
Leaving net amount of New Assurances for the year		£2,000,950
CORRESPONDING PREMIUM REVENUE ON NEW POLICIES during the year—Annual premimum	£92,480
Single Premimum	3,305
	£95,785
Less Premium on amount re-assured	7,850
Leaving net Premiums on New Business		£87,935
AMOUNT OF CLAIMS during the year under Life Policies including Bonus Additions but after deducting Sums Re-assured—
By Death	£703,000
By Survivance	154,533	£857,533
THE SUBSISTING ASSURANCES as at 15th November 1907 amounted to ... ... exclusive of Bonus Additions, the number of Policies being 62,359, giving an average of £473 per Policy.		£29,493,884
Of the above there was re-assured with other Offices		£1,837,726
AS PURCHASE PRICE OF ANNUITIES, there was received the sum of		£48,434
THE SUBSISTING ANNUITIES as at 15th November 1907 amounted to		£133,301
The Company has been relieved during the year of the annual payment of a Sum of £4,279 by the cancelment of 100 Annuities, by death and otherwise.
THE REVENUE for the year was ... ... of which £1,007,451 was derived from Premiums and £506,511 from interest on Investments, the increase during the year having been £2,222 from the former and £17,615 from the latter, in all £19,837.		£1,513,962
THE TOTAL ASSETS, as shown in the Balance Sheet, amount to		£12,252,310
From which deduct current Liabilities ...		231,660
LEAVING TOTAL AVAILABLE FUNDS ...		£12,020,650

It will thus be seen that the total New Business effected was £234,166, as compared with £2,884,434 in 1906, and that the NET AMOUNT AFTER DEDUCTING SUMS RE-ASSURED was £2,000,950.

In the Report for 1906 the Directors indicated that they had every hope that in 1907 a considerable diminution in the ratio of expenses and commission to total premium income would be effected, as a result of economies which they were introducing, and it is with great satisfaction that they are able to report a reduction of fully 1¼ per cent.

The Claims by death amounted to £703,000 and were considerably heavier than 1906, in which year they were exceptionally light, but it is satisfactory that they occurred largely among Policies of old standing where large reserves were held.

The sums paid in respect of Endowments and Endowment Assurances matured amounted to £154,533, and, as has been remarked in former reports, increasing yearly payments under this head are to be looked for, owing to the popularity of this form of assurance having greatly increased during the last twenty-five years.

During the year the sum of £48,483 16s. was received in single payments as the purchase price of Annuities, while on the other hand the Company was relieved of a yearly sum of £4,278 10s. 8d. in respect of annuities fallen in by death.

As is well known, the prices of all classes of Market Securities fell greatly during 1907, and at 15th November, the date of the closing of the books, they had reached almost their lowest point. Since then, however, there has been a substantial recovery, and the Directors have pleasure in being able to report that the value of the Company's Assets at 28th ultimo was fully equal to the aggregate amount at which they are entered in the Balance Sheet.

The addition to the funds for the year was £256,120, and after deducting current liabilities, including claims intimated but not paid at 15th November 1907, the total available Funds at that date amounted to £12,020,650. It is gratifying to the Directors to be able to report that the average rate of interest earned for the year was £4·5s. 2d. per cent.

It is with much regret that the Directors have to record the death of THE MARQUIS OF LINLITHGOW, who for upwards of fifteen years acted as one of the Deputy-Governors of the Company.

The following three Directors fall to retire by rotation, viz. Sir JAMES KING, Bart., Mr. A. R. C. PITMAN, W.S., and Mr. WILLIAM YOUNGER. They are all eligible and are recommended for re-election.

The Board appoint the Dividend to be made among the Proprietors for the year ending 15th November 1908 at the same rate as in the year now closed, viz. £1 4s. per share, free of income-tax, payable by equal half-yearly instalments on 15th May and 15th November 1908.

By order of the Board of Directors,
LEONARD W. DICKSON, Manager.

EDINBURGH, 24*th March* 1908.

AUDITOR'S REPORT.

'EDINBURGH, 20*th March* 1908.—I have examined the Books and Accounts of THE STANDARD LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY for the year ended 15th November 1907 and have found them accurately kept and sufficiently vouched and instructed.

'I have examined the various Branch Accounts, and have satisfied myself that they are correctly stated, and that the transactions contained therein have been accurately recorded in the Books kept at the Head Office.

'I have also examined the Securities for the Company's Loans and Investments as at 15th November 1907 and have found them to be in order. In cases where Securities are held abroad or are in the hands of the Company's Bankers or Law Agents, evidence of their existence has been produced to me. I have also satisfied myself that the whole Income derivable from the Investments has been accounted for.

'I have checked the Balance Sheet and Revenue Account of the Company as at 15th November 1907 and have to report that the former exhibits a true statement of the Company's affairs and the latter a correct summary of the Receipts and Payments applicable to the year.

WM. HOME COOK, C.A., Auditor.'

First Day, Tuesday, 26th May 1908.

The first day was a success, though fields were small. Ivy again showed her superiority, winning two races in fine style. Circus Boy slipped at the corner in the five-furlong race and Mr. Sammy McCall had a narrow escape. Eileen Alannah resolutely objected to face the starter. She is a great failure. Mrs. Melitus gave tea in the Grand Stand.

THE TALLY-HO PURSE.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 50 to the second, Rs. 25 to the third. A hurdle race for ponies 14-1 and under. English and Australasain ponies 14-1 to carry 12st. 7lbs., C.-B. ponies 14-1 to carry 11st., Arab ponies 14-1 to carry 10st. W. I. 1 mile over 6 flights of hurdles.

The Reason Why

It isn't the name on a Cigar that makes the Cigar good. It's the Cigar that makes the name good. That is why

Flor de Spencer

Cigars are so well and favourably known all over the world, and why they are preferred by discriminating smokers to all others.

Third Day, Saturday, 30th May 1908.

THE weather again kept fine and some good sport was witnessed by the few spectators who were present. Ivy II. was again unbeaten and brought her record for the meeting up to six wins. Repute is another pony who has done very well, but Circus Boy was a great disappointment, failing to win even once. Glenlea jumped beautifully making the useful Ladybird look a veritable hack. All Right, Major Ward's new purchase, seemed to be outclassed, but will no doubt improve. Mr. Bonham-Carter's Stockdale scored two popular wins, the second one being a great surprise. Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's handicapping pleased everybody, and close finishes were the rule rather than the exception.

THE FOX HUNTERS' HANDICAP.—Rs. 100 to winner. 1 mile over 6 flights of hurdles.

Mr. Holder's Glenlea, 11st. ...		Mr. Anderson 1
Mr. Rankin's Ladybird, 10st. 9lb.	...	Mr. McCall 2

THE WELLINGTON SKY RACES.

Second Day, Saturday, 23rd May 1908.

THE Wellington Sky Races came to a termination this afternoon, the various events attracted good class. It would take some years to revive the old Wellington Races, and unless tempting prizes are offered, it is feared that the Poona, Secunderabad and Mysore racers will not enter. The racing was good, and all that remains to be said is that Major Arnold, Secretary of the Races, deserves all congratulation and praise in having taken up the Secretaryship and so creditably filled the post. Th weather was unexceptionally hot. Details:—

THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

A GRAND spring morning brought plenty of visitors to Hurst Park on Saturday, the 9th instant, and the run down by road or rail through the Surrey and Middlesex orchards now white with blossom, was in itself a pleasure. The contrast between Newmarket's somewhat bleak and treeless surroundings and the pretty pastoral picture of the "Park" was all the more marked. Glorious going, big fields, exciting sport, and the band of the Scots Guards to cheer the intervals made up an enjoyable afternoon thoroughly appreciated by a large and representative attendance. CHESTER.

ON Tuesday, the 12th instant, both the Royal Navy and mercantile service appeared to have been requisitioned for bunting, so numerous and varied were the banners that, if not hung on the outward walls, decorated the old-time dwellings of the loyal citizens in honour of His Majesty's visit. For on opening day the attendance was an exceptionally good one, the county stand being well filled by the local notabilities. Tasty costumes gave a forecast of Ascot, though doubtless the full glories of beauty adorned will be reserved for the Cup day, when our beloved King will occupy the handy box just opposite the winning post which has been reserved for his use. Tattersall's and the further rings were well patronised, the paying attendance reaching far up to the main road corner, while the wall dominating the straight afforded a view of the racing for thousands. The Roodee was pretty well lined by the customary booths, but its green expanse was not overcrowded by the holiday folk, who were reserving themselves for the morrow ; but, taken all round, the muster was one that gave the executive no occasion to grumble. The going was firm, and fields panned out pretty well after all. Details :—

Soon after ten o'clock on Cup day it was almost impossible to get about, as, wandering at will to kill time, the masses of holiday-makers from all parts permeated every street, lane, and alley, and fresh detachments continued to pour in from the L. and N.-W. Railway Station by special trains, the full resources of that powerful line being severely taxed to meet the extra strain, and the hard-working staff must have been thankful when it was all over. It was hoped that the severe thunderstorm through which the Royal progress to Eaton Hall was made on Tuesday evening had drained the resources of Jupiter Pluvius, but between ten and eleven a heavy summer shower drove all who could obtain it to shelter, and grateful indeed must refugees have felt towards the builders of the quaint old rows, in which they were welzed like sardines. However, the showers were fortunately intermittent, and visitors were able to exploit all the glories of the city before racing began. Details :—

For the wind up it was not quite a pleasant morning to go far afield, as the streets still bore the imprints of recent showers, and a heavy bank of cloud to windward suggested a wet day, a promise that was unhappily fulfilled, as the showers linked into a steady rain, which, lasting on and off to the end, kept umbrellas up, and gave quite a chilperic-like aspect to the scene. Still the sport was good. Details:—

LAWN TENNIS.

THE OLYMPIC CHAMPIONSHIP.—Three new names have been enrolled upon the Olympic list of fame, and now the covered court lawn tennis players join the rackets champions as holders of the gold medals which are given to the successful competitors at the Olympic Games.

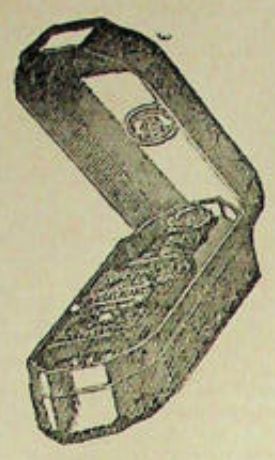
The lawn tennis tournament was finished off at Queen's Club yesterday. The two championship events resulted in accordance with anticipation, Mr. Gore defeating Mr. Caridia in three straight sets, while Miss Eastlake Smith accounted for Miss Greene. There was no fluke about either victory. Results:—

Gentlemen's Singles.—Final Round: A. W. Gore (British Isles) beat G. A. Caridia (British Isles) 6—3, 7—5, 6—4.

Ladies' Singles.—Final Round: Miss G. Eastlake Smith (British Isles) beat Miss A. N. G. Greene (British Isles) 6—2, 5—7, 6—0.

Bronze Medal.—Mrs. Adlerstrahle (Sweden) beat Mrs. Wallenberg (Sweden) 1—6, 6—3, 6—2.

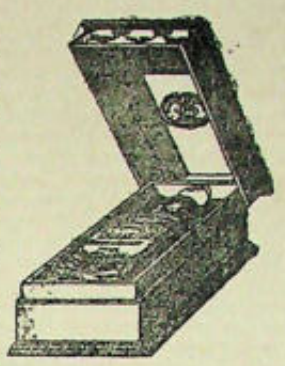
ATHLETICS.



OPENING OF THE STADIUM.—What a day! Words fail to describe it. Skies weeping copiously, throngs of sightseers unable to find shelter, for the commodious stands could not accommodate the scores of thousands who were keen on witnessing the inauguration of the gigantic Stadium where the Olympic Games are to be fought, and where, too, if we mistake not, an athletic boom will be created, the effects of which will not be lost on British sports for many years to come. What an inspiring spectacle Thursday's inauguration by the Prince of Wales would have been with congenial surroundings. A sun shining resplendently was a sine qua non to a brilliant beginning, but this favour was not vouchsafed those whose apprehensions of the leaden sky were always tinged with a faint hope that the clouds would roll away before half-past three, the time fixed for the picturesquely-arranged ceremony.

The Prince of Wales having formally opened the place, there was a triumphant fanfare of trumpets by the State trumpeters, followed by the National Anthem by the chorus and massed bands. A capital march past the Royal box by the athletes was the conclusion of this portion of the proceedings. Hereabouts an exhibition of high diving was given by the lady champion of Sweden, whose graceful performance was highly appreciated and loudly cheered. Especially skilful was her dive from the top stage of the elevated diving board, and she was accorded a well-deserved ovation. Prior to this about 100 swimmers, including one octogenarian, simultaneously plunged into the bath and swam across and returned, and subsequently there was a clever and daring exhibition of high diving by members of the Amateur Diving Association, including R. L. Ede. Plain, fancy, and acrobatic diving were gone through with an ease and grace that commanded the loud plaudits of an interested audience, and Mr. Wm. Henry, the director of the Stadium, is to be congratulated on having provided so enjoyable a spectacular display. Before leaving, the Prince and Princess expressed their appreciation of what they had witnessed, and made special reference to the march-past of the athletes and the diving performances.

ROGER AND GALLET'S EXQUISITE PERFUMES.



Acknowledged by the Leaders of Taste and Fashion in Paris and London to be the most Exquisite and Delicious Perfumes in the World. It is a well-known fact that one bottle is equal to two or three of some makers, as less is required and a soft delicious perfume remains longer and maintains its original freshness. Each Bottle prettily boxed.

The Stadium is the largest and best-appointed the world has yet seen. It is capable, of holding 60,000 people, nearly 20,000 of whom can be seated under cover, and it contains dressing accommodation for over 2,000 competitors. On certain days, however, when portions of the arena are not in use, this accommodation can, if found necessary be nearly doubled. The turf used in the spacious arena has been brought specially from the country, and experts consider that it is the finest that could be obtained. The running track, three laps to the mile, has been constructed under the special supervision of the Amateur Athletic Association, and it is now in such splendid condition that, given favourable weather, and an absence of wind, world's records should be created during the summer. As to the cement cycling track, if expectations are realised, this will be the fastest ever constructed in this country, and a "mile a minute" is the pace which experts have assumed will be reached within the next few months. It is three-eighths of a mile in circumference, or two and two-thirds laps to the mile. The Stadium covers a space of about 1,000ft. by 700ft., and in the centre of one side of the arena, and immediately opposite the Royal box and other special enclosures, there is a swimming bath 330ft. long, with a varying depth of 4ft. to 14ft., in which the swimming, diving, and water-polo competitions will take place.

TENNIS.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—The final round of the all-comers' competition for the amateur championship was decided at Queen's Club on the 13th instant, and although E. H. Miles was not at his best, he defeated Vane Pennell by 3 sets to 1. Pennell made an excellent start. Playing a splendid floor game, he went to 3—love in the initial set, Miles winning only five strokes. Miles equalised at 3-all, his shots for the grill being the feature of his play. His only success afterwards, however, was in the ninth game, Pennell taking the set at 6—4. In the second set Pennell gained the advantage of 5—2, winning chases "worse than three" and "worse than two" in the seventh game. Subsequently he partially forsook the floor and tried more for the openings. These tactics proved disastrous, as Miles, with a sequence of four games, secured the set. In the tenth game Pennell was twice within a stroke of winning, but on one occasion forfeited his advantage by serving two faults. In the end Miles won the game by winning chase "better than two." In the game previous to this Miles found the grille three times.

Pennell won the first game in the third set, but afterwards became erratic, and Miles, who made some admirable shots for the openings, secured six games off the reel, and won at 6—1. In the fourth set Pennell showed an improvement, and the scores were called "1-all" and "2-all," Miles finding the dedans twice and the grille once, in the third game. Subsequently Miles, who in the seventh game won chases "better than four" and "worse than two," stood at 5—2. The eighth game fell to Pennell, but the next gave Miles the set at 6—3, and the rubber. Miles meets Gould, the holder, to-morrow.

ROWING.

OLYMPIC REGATTA CREWS.—R. B. Etherington Smith, the Old Cantab, has resumed his position as stroke of the English eight-oared crew now in practice (with a view to the Olympic Regatta) on the Thames at Putney, while Peter Dewar has gone back to bow, but R. H. Saunderson, of First Trinity, Cambridge, still remains at No. 6. Mr. .. S. Brashaw generally coaches, and there have been several good judges of rowing down at Putney to watch the practice on occasions.

Professional Putney is deeply interested in the foreign and Colonial entries. J. H. Clasper is building an eight, a four, and a sculling boat for the Canadians. The sculling boat is intended for Louis E. Scholes, of the Toronto R.C., who won the Diamond Sculls at Henley in 1904 and is the only man who ever beat F. S. Kelly in a race for that trophy. The Canadians will make a big bid for Olympic honours and medals. Joseph Wright, the old Argonaut stroke, has taken up the position of coach, and will have the advice and assistance of Tom Sullivan when the Dominion oarsmen reach England.

The Scandinavian crew of Christiania are treating their visit to the regatta in very serious fashion. Reliable information from their country states that they are a very powerful crew, used to either stream or still-water rowing; in their order to Sims, of Putney, for a racing boat they send weights averaging 12st. 3lb. per man and have asked for a boat "like that built for Cambridge."

The orders for the English crews and scullers' craft—three eights, three fours, and three sculling boats—have been distributed between Sims, Bowers, and Phelps, of Putney, and Rough, of Oxford.

Eton College will have a heavy eight this year for Henley, with an average of 12st.—pretty good for boys.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 21st May.—We met this morning at Municipal Crossing and a fair field turned out. We have at least had some rain which has made the downs look beautifully green and improved the going. It has been so dreadfully hard and dry, we were all relieved to hear the rain coming down during the night and looked forward to getting in some good days with the hounds. Nor were we disappointed to-day. It was a glorious morning and those who met the Master at 7 A.M. were rewarded with quite a good run. We drew over Bagman to New Covert and Mills, both were blank, across Blacknore Vale to Rawlins' Nullah here hounds hit off a line and carried it across to Staircase, but instead of running through Staircase Shola as usual, hounds turned sharp back down to the Sandy Nullah stream over New Market at a great pace; they ran past Rawlins' Nullah and headed for Rally Wood; on the ridge they turned and dipped into Parlock through which they carried the line into the lower end of Governor's Shola to Sheffield corner where they were at fault, the Master cast them along the path and while doing so a couple of hounds picked up the line on the road and went away towards Blue gums unnoticed except by a few of the field and a good deal of time was lost before the Master was made aware of the fact and when the rest of the pack was put on the line they could not make anything of it. After hunting about in Bluegums a jack jumped up and went away at the lower end across the Sandy Nullah stream up through Staircase and out on Hungerford estate road where they threw up and could make nothing more of it. As it was getting hot and hounds were taken home. Amongst those out were: H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley, the Misses Lawley, Captain's Duff and Jarrie, Mr. A. G. G. Campbell, Mr. R. E. Lawley, Miss Harding-Captain and Mrs. Leveson Gower, Miss Nugent, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Douglas Taylor, Mr. Astley, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Pinhey, Mr. Maconochie, Colonel and Mrs. Gordon Price, Major Stephen, Miss Romilley, Miss Rolfe, Mr. Stokoe, Major and Mrs. Tottenham, Mr. Thornton Mr. Pakenham Walsh, Major and Mrs. Younghusband, Captain Willis, the Minor Zemindar, of Sivagiri, Mr. Delahey, Captain Elwes, Mr. Stuart Fraser, Captain Dangar, the Misses Dangar, Captain and Mrs. Vaughan Edwards, Major Graham, Captain Clinch, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. Henderson, Mr. Irwin, Mr. and ..rs. Harrison Miss Hamick and others.

Saturday 23rd May.—Briar Shola 7 A.M. Another perfect morning after a good downpur during the night: the going is quite excellent now and we can no longer grumble at the hardness and dryness of the downs. Quite a small field turned up, but those who did enjoyed a real good run. Drawing Briar hounds spoke to a line in the bog at the bottom and carried it over the ridge into Wapshare's Hare: from there they ran at a great rate along ..e bog to Fudaler's Shola; turning to the left they went on into Wenlock; hustling the jack through this they came out at the bottom and over the hill side into Khed and on into Road Shola turning up the hill left handed they went over the top and down the other side into Chemmund out at the bottom and swinging to the left they crossed the Pykara Road by ..ndy Gaps and back into Wapshare's Hare along the swamps to below Fudaler's Shola, almost the same line as before into Wenlock again, where they hunted him round for some time before he broke covert and made for Wapshare's Hare again running through this covert he headed for Briar, but on the ridge he doubled back into Wapshare's Hare and ran the same line again. This time he takes a wider circle and tries Road Shola and runs the road to the end of it turns to the left up the hill then to the right again into Rock Shola and sinks the valley to the Pykara River, keeping along the bank for some distance then makes a dash up the hill into Dormer Shola, out through the top into Chemmund past the Toda Mund right handed to the Yemakal stream, over it to the right of one Tree Hill and almost reaches Yemakal Shola then doubles back to the stream leaving hounds at fault for a short time, the Master soon puts them right and they race after him and hunt him up the Valley towards No Man's Land, on and up to the Kahhalkod Mund past it to Kaitharka Mund. The Master stopped them here, as horses and men were dead beat after a run of over an hour and 50 minutes in a hot sun and over stiff country. It was a most excellent hunt and besides the Master and whips there were only two others who saw the end of it. Amongst those out

I noticed H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley, Miss C. Lawley, Miss Harding, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. Henderson, Miss Morgan, Miss Rolfe, Mr. Dangar, Captain Dangar, Mr. Delahey and the Minor Zemindar of Sivagiri, Major Sholto Douglas, Major Johnston, Captain Clinch, Major Graham, Captain Duff, Captain Willis, Mr. Stuart Fraser, Mr. Maconochie, Mr. Stockoe, Mr. H D. Taylor, Captain Jarrie, Mr. Cresswell, and Mr. Hope, Johnstone. The opening meet of the season is to take place at Fern Hill on the 25th by kind invitation of H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore at 8 A. M.

Monday, 25th May.—Fernhill at 8 a.m. To open the season by kind invitation of His Highness The Maharaja of Mysore. A very great number of people attended this week, it being always a popular one. Horses, motor cars, carriages and bicycles crowded both roads leading up to the house, it was with difficulty and caution one threaded one's way in between to shake hands with H. H. The Maharaja and partake of all the good things provided. After the usual photographs had been taken we moved off drawing the coverts below Fernhill and then up towards Dairymaid leaving this on the right the Master threw his hounds into covert at the corner of Denmark and drew up to Rees' Corner without even a whimper owing no doubt to all the jacks being busy breakfasting off the carcass of an unfortunate horse belonging to H. H. the Maharaja which had been lost for nearly two weeks. The horse broke away from his syce when being led home from hunting and had not been seen or heard of again till his dead body was found in a shola, Ursula, I think it is called—the poor brute must have got caught up in a tree by his bridle and perished miserably. The Master was told there were six jacks feeding off this dead horse, but he left them to continue their repast as they were no doubt so gorged they could not have afforded us any sort of sport. New Covert and Mills were next tried, they were also untenanted. Drawing slowly up Blackmore Vale hounds spoke to the line of a jack near Pearl Crossing and carried it to Rallywood; near the Potato Field they turned to the right and went away over the hill above Bluegums, then down to Rawlin's Nullah, where the jack took cover, but was soon on the move again over New Market and almost to Point to Point tree; here he turned right handed and sinking the valley crossed the Blackmare Vale stream and up the side of Bagman, he went at a great pace with the leading hounds close up to him. Keeping to the right he topped the shoulder of the hill above Pearl Crossing and made a dash for Jackal, which he failed to reach, hounds pulling him down within a few hundred yards of it. Cecilia and Ursula were next drawn, two jack going away from the latter place and making good their escape into Cairn Hill, it being late and the sun being lot hounds were taken back to kennels. Amongst those who came to the meet I noticed the following:—T. E. Sir Arthur Lawley, and Lady Lawley, the Misses Lawley, Mr. R. E. Lawley, Captain Duff, Captain Jarrie, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell Mr. Dangar, Miss G. Dangar, Captain Dangar, Mrs. Marjoribanks, Colonel Formby, Mr. Score Smyth, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Astley, Captain and Mrs. Vaughan Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. Maconochie, Mr. and Mrs. Pinhey, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Fraser, Captain and Mrs. Sholto Douglas, Miss Harding, Major and Mrs. Younghusband, Miss Gales, Mrs. Gass, Miss Rolfe, Mr. Stockoe, Mr. Thornton, Major Johnston, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. Henderson, Miss Hammick, Colonel Lawless, Captain Lambton, Mr. Pakenham Walsh, Captain Elwes, Captain Willis, Colonel Afsur-ul-Mulk, Major Napier, Mrs. Russell, Mr. Cresswell, Miss Carmichael, Colonel and Mrs. Gordon Price, Captain Gill, Miss Romilly, Miss Nugent, and many others.

Tuesday 26th May—Monte Rosa Gate at 7 A.M. We have had no rain since last week, but there is always a heavy dew at night and the scent is fairly good and the going soft though we should be grateful for a few more good showers as the ground is drying up. Moving off along the Ampthill Road to the bottom of Aramby hounds promptly picked up a line and brought it away across the road and over the big bog across the Segur Road into Lansdown, where they were at fault and could make no more of it. Brooklands was next drawn and no sooner were hounds thrown in they at once gave tongue—hunting him from one end to the other of this large covert they brought him out at the top and skirting Bingham on the left they ran him over the stream and bog into Ranging Shola, where they dwelt for a short while then went away at the bottom and up to the Connemara Road running parallel with the road till Marlimund was reached, when they turned left handed and went down the gnaut and away from all of us, as is generally the case in this part of the country. I was told that two members of the hunt had a nice run and a kill all to themselves with only two hounds! Amongst those out were. T. E. Sir Arthur Lawley and Lady Lawley, Mr. and Misses Lawley, Captain Duff, Captain Jarrie, Miss Harding, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell, Mr. Hope Johnstone, Captain and Miss Dangar, Major Younghusband, Major Douglas, Mr. Clinch, Captain Gill, Major Graham, Mr. Astley, Mr. A. A. Dangar, Miss Rolfe, Miss Hammick, Mrs. Horne, Miss Romilly, Mr. Pinhey, Captain Lambton, Mr. Kenworthy, Colonel Lucas, Colonel Lawless, Major Lovell, Mr. Stokoe, Mr. Score Smyth, Mr. Thornton, Captain Willis, Mr. Wilson, Major Napier, etc., etc.

Thursday 28th May.—Double Crossing at 7 A.M. A small field, which included the following:—T. E. Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, the Misses Lawley, Mr. R. E. Lawley, Captain Duff, Captain Jarrie, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell, Mr. Hope Johnstone, Captain Clinch, Major Graham, Mr. Cresswell, Mr. Hope, Mr. De la Hey, Captain and Mrs. Vaughan Edwards, Colonel Desaraj, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. Henderson, Mr. Irwin, Major Hinge, Mr. Jackson, Colonel Lucas, Mr. Colin Mackenzie, Major Johnstone, Captain Lambton, Mr. Fraser, Mr. Maconochie, Mr. Phillips, Major Jarrie, Colonel and Mrs. Gordon Price, Sir Wilfrid Perk, Miss Rolfe, Captain Willis, Miss Stickney, Mr. Stokoe and the Minor Zemindars. Drawing over New Market and Lawley's Course Gibbs was next tried while working through this covert, Madurai saw a jack stealing away along the other side of Lawley's course. Blowing his hounds out of covert the Master took them at a gallop and put them on the line. Away they raced with the jack in full view to the bottom of Staircase and coming out on the New Road—(by the way what a godsend this road is)—they went screaming into Round Shola, through the top side and away into Martin's, crossing the stream below the road then along the road which he ran for about a mile with hound close on his brush; he then made for some very thick undergrowth below the road where he was pulled down and killed. Trotting back by Hungerford, Devil's Dyke was next drawn. A jack was on foot and went away over the ridge; picking up his tail hounds hunted him at a rattling pace into Zemakal Shola, where he swung back setting his mask for Hungerford crossing the road and the stream below and into Martin's Shola, Coming out at the top he made for Staircase; running through this he went out at the far end over the hill into Briar, through it to Wapshare's Hare and finally went to ground below Fudalers Shola. He was bolted out of this by the terriers: running only a short distance he again went to ground near Bracken. After a long wait he was unearthed and killed. It was a delightful morning fresh and cool and scent good.

"Never mind, dear," he said reassuringly, as she raised her sweet face from his shoulder, and they both saw the white blur on his coat; "it will all brush off."

"Oh, Charlie," she burst out, sobbing, hiding her face again upon his whitey shoulder; "how do you know?"

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

GORDONS vs. CALEDONIA.—These teams met in the Fort on the 27th ultimo, the Gordons winning by two goals to one. The game was mostly in favour of the Gordons but the Caledonians' defence in the first half was good and the soldiers could not get through. A good run by Apcar enabled Tobin to score for the visitors and they crossed over at the interval leading by a goal. The Caledonians were kept on the defensive all through the second half, but it was not till the last few minutes of the game that McCoy equalised and McDougall put the Gordons ahead. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Goal, Insch; backs, Montgomery and Aitken; halves, Harper, Graham and Spence; forwards, McDougall, Foreman, Drinkwater, Galletly and McCoy.

CALEDONIA.—Goal, Anscombe; backs, Stoddart and Snooke; halves, Grant, Wilson and Brown; forwards, Goodwin, Apcar, Tobin, Chander and Cordwall.

Referee:—Sergt. Curley (C. R. A.)

H. L. I. vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Rangers' ground on Saturday, the Highlanders won by two goals to one, but for poor shooting on the part of their forwards and the excellent goal-keeping of Margrett the margin would have been bigger. The first half was devoid of score, but in the second Duncan scored for the Military. Richardson equalised, but Devlin scored the winning point for the H. L. I. shortly after. Teams:—

H. L. I.—Goal, Lees; backs, Tait and Sculley; halves, Collins; O'Rorke, and Turnbull; forwards, Collins, McGarrill, Devlin, Marshall, and Duncan.

RANGERS—Goal, Margrett; backs, Bennett and Skempton, halves Cornish, Cody, and Caven; forwards, Postence, McKay; Richardson, Lyons and Taylor.

CUSTOMS vs. Y. M. C. A.—Playing on their own ground the Customs beat the Young Men last Saturday by four goals to one. The Customs scored all their points in the first half. L. H. Smith (2), Bower and L. A. Smith being credited with the goals. In the second half the visitors registered a point. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Goal, Furtado; backs, Goldsmith and Anderson; halves, Maitland, Marsden and, L. A. Smith; forwards, Boner, Berkley, L. A. Smith, McCready and H. Vears.

Y. M. C. A.—Goal, Bell; backs, Reynolds and Berkley; halves, H. Vanspall, Wheeloch, and Hayes; forwards, Gillon, Ramsay, Wright, Rozario, and Rossette.

Referee:—P. Claridge.

CALEDONIANS vs. CALCUTTA.—This match on the Caledonian ground last Saturday resulted in a win for the visitors by two goals to one. Calcutta opened scoring, a shot by O'Shea going into the net off J. Stoddard's foot. The home team equalised shortly after Rosser putting through foot into the net. The visitors pressed all through the second half and scored once more. There was an appeal for off side but the referee decided in favour of Calcutta. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Goal, Dods; backs, Gahan and Cooper; halves, Stuart O'Shea, and Crawford; forwards, H. Sherman, V. Sherman, Taylor, Kingcome, and Oliver.

CALEDONIANS.—Goal, Anscombe; backs, Stoddart and Chandler; halves, Gronut, Wilson, and Brown; forwards, Apcar, L. Rosser, Snookes, Tobin and R. Stoddart.

Referee:—Sergt. Curley.

DALHOUSIE vs. GORDONS.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday. The opening exchanges were fairly level, then the Gordons pressed and McKay scored the first goal of the match shortly before the interval. On changing ends both goals had some narrow escapes, the Dals losing more than one opportunity of scoring. Drinkwater put through towards the close, the Gordons thus winning by two goals to nil. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Goal, Insch; backs, Aitken and Montgomery; halves, Spence, Graham and Harper; forwards, Galletly, Drinkwater, McKay, Foreman and McDougall.

DALHOUSIE.—Goal, Henry; backs, Storrie and Dunn; halves, Beadle, Lees, Montgomery and Holly; forwards, Banham, Allen, Dalling and Burnett.

Referee:—A. B. Rosser.

H. L. I. vs. CUSTOMS.—This match was played on the Customs ground on Tuesday and resulted in a win for the Military team after a good game. The first half was evenly contested and both custodians were called upon to defend their charges. This they did successfully and the interval arrived without score. On crossing over the Highlanders attacked and after Devlin had lost two chances of scoring Collins netted the ball. The home team made great efforts to equalise and McCready put the ball through from a free kick. He was, however, offside, and the point was disallowed. There was no further score, the H. L. I. winning by a goal to nil. Teams:—

H. L. I.—Goal, Lees; backs, Tait and Sculley; halves, Campbell, Severity and W. Collins; forwards, R. Collins, McGarrill, Devlin, Duncan and Marshall.

CUSTOMS.—Goal, Fertado; backs, E. Vears and Anders on; halves, Goldsmith, L. A. Smith and Marsden; forwards, Bowers, Berkley, McCready, L. H. Smith and Vears.

Referee:—W. E. Cooper.

GORDONS vs. Y. M. C. A.—Played on Tuesday on the Y.M.C.A. ground, the visitors winning by three goals to nil. The Association played well and kept the Gordons out in the first half during which there was no score. But on changing ends the soldiers had the best of the deal. McKay and McDougall scored a goal each and the third point was put through by Montgomery from a free kick. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Goal, Insch; backs, Montgomery and Aitken; halves, Spence, Graham and Harper; forwards, Galletly, Drinkwater, McKay, Foreman and McDougall.

Y. M. C. A.—Goal, Bell; backs, Reynolds and Berkley; halves, H. Vanspall, Coy and Collingwood; forwards, C. Linton, Wheeloch, Wright, Brown and P. Vanspall.

SECOND DIVISION.

SIBPUR vs. 75TH R. G. A.—Played on the 27th ultimo, Sibpur winning by three goals to one.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. MEASURERS.—On the Armenian College ground on the 27th ultimo, St. Xavier's beat the Measurers by a goal to nil.

GORDONS "B" vs. ST. XAVIER'S.—Played in the Fort on Saturday the Gordons winning by three goals to nil.

WANDERERS vs. MEASURERS.—These teams met on the Caledonian ground on Monday, the Wanderers winning easily by four goals to nil.

GORDONS "B" vs. SIBPUR.—In the Fort on Monday the Gordons beat Sibpur by 4 goals to nil.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. ST. JOSEPH'S.—Played on Monday, St. Xavier's winning by two goals to nil.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE several gales which have descended upon Calcutta during the past week have done a world of good to the parched and fissured football grounds on the maidan. The refreshing rain from heaven has also put new energy into the League teams with the result that Saturday's matches showed considerable improvement on the funeral processions which the present season has so far produced. It is even alleged—but for this the writer declines to be in any way held responsible—that the dust on the Fort ground was actually laid for a short while after Thursday's cyclone. One almost shudders to think what hidden mysteries would be revealed if the energies of the Garrison Quarter-master should be directed to the updigging of this ground. Mackintosh Burn & Co. would doubtless predominate in a collection of fancy articles which might also include dainty little slices of permanent-way, disused artillery, chain shot and other delicate relics of a defunct arsenal. What a field day for the Calcutta Historical Society! But a truce to badinage. To our muttons.

Calcutta threw away what slight chances they had of overhauling the Gordons by losing to the H. L. I. on Tuesday, the 26th. This on their own ground too, for though the match was fixed for a neutral ground, H. L. I. consented, in fact preferred to play on the C. F. C. ground. The solitary winning goal was a ridiculously soft affair which Dods should certainly have got to. The game was otherwise of a bald and uninteresting nature, the H. L. I. being much below their last season's form. The shooting on both sides was vile, though the high wind which prevailed throughout the match probably accounted to a great extent for this. The H. L. I. are badly in need of the agile Renton in his old position at full back. Tait and Sculley are a hard-working pair, neither has the almost uncanny prescience and anticipation which enabled Renton to be always in the right spot at the right moment. V. Cooper is the only back in Calcutta at present who possesses this attainment to any marked degree and even so it is his weight which often pulls him out of scrapes.

Dalhousie disposed of the Y. M. C. A. by 3—0 on the same day, before a small attendance of enthusiasts. It was more or less of a field day for Dalling and Holley, though the Young Men's forward line had bad luck in not scoring on two occasions. Dalling is proving himself a regular chip of the old chunk and Dalhousie may well congratulate itself on possessing so priceless a treasure as a man who can play for the club for the best part of ten years and then quietly produce a young brother to carry on the family reputation. Allen is a promising newcomer whom Dalhousie is trying in the forward line. With such a good tough team it is hard to understand why Dalhousie has not risen higher in the League this season. Perhaps it is reserving its energies for the Shield.

Of last Saturday's matches, the meeting between Caledonia and Calcutta on the Caledonia ground attracted most attention, although there was a fair crowd on the Dalhousie ground, where the home team was playing the Gordons. Calcutta undoubtedly had the better of the former game, but their play in front of goal was so weak that they were extremely lucky to win by the narrow margin of the odd goal in three. Their first goal was presented to them gratis by Stoddart of the Caledonians who accidentally collided with the ball after Anscombe, the goal-keeper, had brought off a good save. The ball rebounded into the net and Calcutta thus drew first blood. A splendid cross shot by Les Rosser which completely beat Dods put matters on an equal footing. Thereafter the game became as dull as ditch water, and it was only in the closing stages that Kingcome from a distinctly suspicious position put Calcutta ahead with a shot that hit the side post and just scraped through on the right side. The Caledonians played a stubborn game, Apcar in particular showing good form.

The match on the Dalhousie ground was quite a strenuous affair, the Gordons winning by 2—0. Dalhousie extended them to the utmost, however, and were unlucky not to score themselves. H. L. I. beat the Rangers by 2—1 after an uninteresting game whilst the Customs fairly smote the Young Men sending them home defeated by 4—1. By the time these notes appear in print, the first half of the League will have been concluded, and of course the Gordons will be on top. The return matches commence next Saturday, and if the Gordons are to be overtaken there will need to be a vast improvement in the other teams. The H. L. I. team is about the only one really capable of taking a couple of points off the Gordons at present and the match at Dum Dum next Saturday should be one of the keenest yet witnessed. The H. L. I. have vowed a vow to put up a really Titanic struggle, and as they will have the advantage of playing on their own ground the chances in favour of their bringing off a sensational win seem very favourable.

A word of comment on the performances of the Calcutta Reserves may not be out of place in this column. The spare talent which the C. F. C. has at its command has seldom been seen or used to better advantage. Up to the present, the "B" Team has won every match save two, and this with three matches a week, sometimes four. They will put up a first-class fight to return the Sarma Cup. The Minerva Cup is another trophy, now in its second year of competition, which will attract a large number of junior entries this season and should be a good thing for one of the Gordon Company teams.

A suggestion has been made by A. C. Mookerjee, the sporting Secretary of the Sova Bazar Footbal Club in favour of a Junior I. F. A. to form secondary competitions of this nature. Whether the I. F. A. should permit its privileges and aims to be encroached upon in any way is a matter for argument, but there can be no doubt that the tremendous expansion of junior football in Calcutta during the last few years seems to call for some counter expansion on the part of the I. F. A. which already has its hands inconveniently full. One way out of the problem of congestion which now confronts the I. F. A. might be to make each competition self-governing with its own Secretary, but eventually responsible to and governed by the I. F. A. in all disputes, etc. This arrangement has been partially and unofficially followed in previous years and has been found to work with success. It might therefore be adopted on a more extensive scale with advantage and considerable relief to the I. F. A. The only stipulation necessary to the success of the scheme would be that each competition should be run by a European. The Babu unfortunately can never be got to trust the Babu in matters of this nature. Records can be produced without difficulty to support this.

The League table up to and including last Saturday's matches stood as follows:—

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 15th May 1908.

SOME capital motor-car racing attracted a large crowd of motorists to Brooklands on Saturday, the 9th instant, fully 5,000 spectators being present.

One of the most interesting items was the open race described as an "all comers'" handicap sweepstake, confined to cars which competed at the opening Easter meeting this year. The distance was 7½ miles, and the cars varied from a 76-h.p. racer to an 8-9 single cylinder car, the former starting from scratch, and the latter having as much as 7,561 yards start.

The race was won by Mr. P. L. D. Perry's 22.5-h.p. Ford car, driven by Mr. E. A. Anthony, with 7,116 yards start.

What looked like a nasty accident at the finish of the race, owing to the wheels of one of the big cars being locked, was averted by the fine driving of Mr. J. W. Stocks, who had to turn his car round very suddenly, and complete the operation of pulling up behind the home banking. Results :—

The All-Comers Handicap Sweepstakes. Distance, 7½ miles.—Won by Mr. P. L. D. Perry's 22.5-h.p. Ford (7,116 yards start), driven by E. A. Anthony.

The Fourth 20-h.p. Race of 40sovs. Distance, about 5 miles.—Won by Mr. J. W. Stocks's 25.6-h.p. De Dion (2,871lb.), driven by owner.

The Touring Race, a Handicap for Private Competitors. Distance, about 8½ miles.—Won by Mr. O. S. Thompson's 8.1-h.p. Wolseley (8,404 yards start), driven by owner.

The Motor-Cycle Handicap Plate of 25sovs. Distance, about 5½ miles.—Won by Mr. H. Shanks, junior, 2¾-h.p. Chater-Lea, S.C., 75×75 (2mins. 45secs. start), driven by owner.

The May Cup, a Handicap for Private Competitors. Distance, about 5 miles.—Won by Mr. P. D. Stirling's 35.7-h.p. Berliet (2,214 yards start), driven by owner.

The Limit Sweepstakes of 5sovs. each. Distance, between 6 and 8 miles.—Won by Mr. D. Pigot's 35.7-h.p. Berliet, driven by owner.

The Fourth 90-h.p. Race of 50sovs. Distance, about 5¾ miles.—Won by Mr. F. R. Fry's 76-h.p. Mercedes, 5,006lb., driven by D. Resta.

A Private Match. About 5 miles.—Mr. H. G. Nalder's 35.7-h.p. Berliet (owner) beat Mr. O. S. Thompson's 76.1-h.p. Austin (owner) by a length.

The Fourth 40-h.p. Race of 60sovs. Distance 18¾ miles.—Mr. S. F. Edge's 39.6-h.p. Napier, 1, 3,200lb., driven by F. Draper.

The process of manufacture of the Zimmermann radiator is interesting. In the first place, it is constructed of brass, solid-drawn tubes that are finer drawn than usual. These unfortunately are made in Germany, as the British tube-maker does not draw his tubes as fine as these. These tubes are four inches in length, and a machine in these works expands in one action each end of the tubes as a bell-mouth at the rate of 107 per minute. The tubes simply lie one on the other, there being no wire frame into which they are built, so that a wooden outline of the desired shape of the radiator is filled with rows of tubes. These are then all soldered together at one time in an ingenious manner. The ends of the built-up tubes in their wooden frame are dipped into a "flux," or solution, and then the radiator is dipped into a basin of hot and liquid spelter at a fixed temperature. This solders all the tubes on the one side, and with absolute evenness. The same process is done for the other side. As the spelter only adheres where the flux is there is no chance of the metal blocking up the tubes.

It is only a short time ago since Mr. E. M. C. Instone ascended the Guadarrama Pass on his 45-h.p. Daimler, establishing a record, which caused great excitement in motoring circles in Spain. Shortly after the Daimler Co. opened depots at Madrid and San Sebastian, and their enterprise is meeting with well-deserved success; amongst recent purchasers are Exmo El Marques de Villamarta, Reyes Catolicos, Sevilla who has ordered a 42-h.p. "Kenilworth" phaeton car with a 9-ft. 6-in. wheelbase.

Indian Field readers who motor and are coming home this summer should not fail to visit the London and Paris Motor Exchange. The Show Rooms are situated in the very heart of the Motor Industry, within two minutes of the Piccadilly Tube, and are the only Show Rooms devoted to the sale of Second-hand Cars in the West End of London. All Cars received for sale are cleaned and polished, and displayed to the best advantage, trial runs only being given to bona fide purchasers, the Car always being driven by an expert. All Cars sent in for sale are advertised every day in the Daily Report, and in all the prominent motor papers, thus ensuring the greatest possible publicity. Any Cars on view in the Show Rooms, whether new or second-hand, can be bought by deferred payments, and old Cars will be taken in part payment for any make of Car, whether new or second-hand. The Motor Agency are always prepared to undertake any repairs or adjustments which may be deemed necessary to put the Car in the best running order, and their charges will be found, in all cases, to be exceedingly moderate. In addition to the Cars on view in the Show Rooms, they have a great numbers of every description, make, and h.p. on their Register. Should prospective purchasers be unable to make a choice at the Show Rooms, they can always find a suitable Car from the Register, and have it round for inspection and trial. Any make or description of accessory can be supplied at the cheapest possible price.

PERSONS of experience do not look for much more than a microscopic minority of purely "sporting" pictures among the annual collection at Burlington House. The sporting man, be his hobby hunting, fishing or shooting and the athlete, whatever forms of out-door pastime he may affect, usually find little enough wherewith to gratify their artistic tastes and satisfy their special proclivities at the same time. This year's show is peculiarly open to this charge, indeed there is not a dearth of such pictures, there is a veritable famine. There are several canvasses on which horses and other animals wild and tame, appear in most cases as accessories, but the pictures which attempt to depict sport pure and simple certainly do not number a dozen.

There are two masterpieces, however, which for colouring, fidelity to nature and genuine artistic treatment would take high rank in any collection in the world. The first is "For Life," a large canvas by Lucy Kemp-Welch, and it is one of the best pictures she has produced. The scene is probably a bit of Exmoor, a mob of ponies is being stampeded, and in front of them a frightened and much exhausted stag is straining every nerve to reach some longed for sanctuary. The cause of this wild rush is seen in the pack of hounds streaming down the adjacent hill side and running to view. The movement of the animals, the terrified expression of the stag, the atmosphere of the moors are faultlessly rendered. The next best picture is "They're There" by Mr. Thomas Blinks. Here we have, among the rank moorland grass, standing well out from a rugged sunlit background, two lovely setters tense, quivering with excitement, living, breathing dogs approaching game. They are marvellously well drawn and posed and the wonderful brush work on the coat of the dog in the foreground is something to kindle enthusiasm in every true sportsman's breast. Miss Maud Earl gives us a fine setter standing on a mound overlooking a sea of heather; but the animal lacks the spirit of active open air life which distinguish Mr. Blinks' pair. Mr. Blinks has another picture of much merit; in this he is successful in showing the Earl of Lonsdale seated on a fine chestnut taking a ditch in approved style: the freedom of action is very well expressed.

Mr. John Charlton's "Deposed" is a fine study of a red deer which has lost the battle for the right to rule the herd and is painfully toiling up hill in the face of a blizzard. A raven caws derisively at him as he passes.

Mr. Frederick T. Daws has drawn a couple of tigers "breaking cover" and has succeeded fairly well, though the forshortening of the off foreleg of the leading tiger is faulty and the colouring of both animals perhaps a trifle too rich. "The Kill," by Florence Jay conveys a very fair idea of a worry, though some of the hounds might be expected to take a keener interest in the proceedings. Mr. Arthur Wardle's "Jaguar and Macaw" is good, though it strongly recalls Mr. Fischer's last year's contribution of a leopard and a toucan.

Mr. Arthur Wardle's "Circe" is a deservedly popular exhibit. The lady—nude of course—sprawls on the poppy spangled grass, watching through the trees the approach of Ulysses' barge: around her gambol three leopards. Mr. Wardle again does himself justice in his handling of these sportive felines; the pose of the young leopard rolling in the foreground is particularly happy, the treatment of the coat exquisite.

This year Mr. Edgar H. Fischer has, on the sky line an attractive, if not altogether convincing, picture of jungle life. Certain rufous animals are baying a huge python of vivid hue and the serpent with wicked eye and poised head is about to resent the intrusion. The artist (who is rather partial to quotations by the way) has one ready at hand: he repeats that "Chill leaves not the dead ox, nor the dhole the blood trail." If the canines here shown are "dholes" all I can say is I never encountered this particular variety of cuon rutilans in India: but whatever they may be they are particularly well drawn and there is no doubt Mr. Fischer's picture arrests a good deal of attention.

Mr. George Swertshkoff's miniature portrait of "Persimmon" is a striking example of the little and good class: it is included in the collection by royal command, but is fully entitled to the distinction on its own merits. "Spearmint" is represented in a statuette by Mr. Herbert Haseltine; the horse is well done, but is carrying a veritable Daniel Lambert of a jockey. The portrait of T. Scarisbrick. Esq., M.P., and his two sons out shooting, reflects credit on Mr. Edmond Brock, who has steered fairly clear of the conventionality almost inseparable from the pourtrayal of the family group. The picture by Mr. H. Harris-Brown of Sir William Curtis, M. F. H., is striking and much above the decorative art as usually evinced in the average equestrian portrait. With horse and rider little fault is to be found; but the hounds lack life and in some cases are not over well drawn.

"At their heels a white horse, with his head in the air,
But the bridle was loose, and the saddle was bare."

quotes Lucy Hargreaves, whose charming little picture shows us a white hunter with empty saddle and leathers flapping, just landing over a gate close to the rear division of the pack.

I liked Walter Hunt's "An Old Offender." Reynard has been surprised in flagrante delicto and his corpse lies alongside of that of the rooster he has just murdered, while over him, breathless and with "hackles" yet erect stands a gamey looking wire-haired terrier. The texture of both coats is admirably rendered, the details of the picture faithfully worked in.

There is one animal picture I might mentian en passant. "Androclus and the Lion" by Briton Riviere, R.A., is a really fine composition: man and beast are well pourtrayed, the gentle solicitude of Androclus and the mingled dignity, and pain of his leonine patient are well depicted in pose and expression; the colouring of the lion is unusually good, but the artist has forgotten to give him any whiskers! This naturally robs the face of a certain amount of character.

WILD HYBRIDS.

The exceedingly interesting account of a nondescript carnivore from West Africa communicated by the Superintendent of the Zoological Gardens to our London namesake for 18th April re-opens the question as to the frequency with which large warm-blooded quadrupeds hybridise with one another in a state of nature. The ordinary public are very prone to believe in hybrids, as witness the widely spread opinion that the okapi is a cross between a zebra and a giraffe. Naturalists, on the other hand are extremely sceptical with regard to the existence of wild hybrids, although there are certain cases where they have been practically compelled to admit the occurrence of such abnormalities. Possibly the truth, as in so many other instances, lies between the two extremes.

It must be admitted, however, in the first place that wild animals will only interbreed when they belong to very nearly related species. Probably the most common cases of cross-breeding occur when two closely related species inhabit adjacent tracts of territority. It is, for instance, firmly believed by sportsmen that certain species of African hartebeests not uncommonly hybridise: and skulls in the British Museum tend to support this theory. In the Caucasus, again, there are two nearly related kinds of wild goat, locally known as ture, whose distributional areas come into contact about the central region of that range. Here are found certain goats with horns more or less completely intermediate in character between those of the two pure bred species; and in this case also there is a strong presumption that we have to do with hybrids.

Another factor conducive to cross-breeding occur in cases where an individual of one species has, from some cause or other, wandered from its own proper habitat into the domain of another; and in such instances crossing may take place between species somewhat less closely related to one another than in the case of species inhabiting contiguous areas. The best example of this type of hybridism occurs in the well-known case of the so-called Ovis brookei; in which a ram of the Tibetan argali (O. hodgsoni) wandered from its proper home in Ladak into Zanskar, where it interbred with the local urial or shapo (O. vignei) thereby producing a hybrid to which the name O. brookei was subsequently given, on the supposition that it was a distinct species.

Besides the above there appears, however, to be very few, if any, instances where there is strong presumptive evidence of interbreeding between wild species of big game. In captivity, of course, the case is very different; and long lists have been compiled of the various species known to have interbred in menageries. Such instances have, however, very little bearing on what happens in the case of wild animals, although they are important in so far as they demonstrate the possibility of interbreeding between species so different from one another as the lion and the tiger.

Among smaller animals hybridism may possibly be less uncommon in the wild state. At all events Dr. Einar Lönnberg, of Upsala University, has described and figured a hybrid between the ordinary red fox and the grey Arctic fox, and he has likewise recorded the interbreeding of the common with the blue hare. In the case of the fox, the colouring of the creature clearly shows its mixed origin; the head, shoulder and limbs retaining the chestnut red of the ordinary species wile the neck, back, loins, thighs, and tail (inclusive even of the normally white tip) display the blue grey of its northern cousin.

As regards the new nondescript forming the subject of Mr. Pocock's letter, it appears that the creature was received by Mr. Hamlyn, the well-known London animal-dealer, and reported to have been brought down from the Gaboon hinterland. Smaller than a lion but larger than a leopard, it presents characters strongly suggestive of its being a hybrid between those two species. It is, for example, fully spotted, but the spots are for the most part brown instead of black, and, except on certain limited areas, do not take the form of the usual leopard-rosettes. The tail, again, is basally of the lion-type, while terminally it is more like that of a leopard, although lacking the usual white tip.

As Mr. Pocock is convinced that the creature is not a leopard (under which term naturalists include panthers), while it is most assuredly not a lion, it must be either an undescribed species or a hybrid. The improbability of its being the former is so great that all other alternatives must be definitely exhausted before that view can be entertained. As regards the hybrid theory, there is, of course, the possibility that the creature may have been bred by the natives of the interior of the Gaboon or even by some up-country white trader, in which event the greater part of its interest is at once lost. This seems, however, in the highest degree improbable; and we are therefore perforce driven to adopt the wild hybrid theory, as being the least improbable of all the suppositons. In this case, however, as Mr. Pocock remarks, there is the difficulty that in a chance encounter between a lion and a leopard "ructions" would be likely to ensue, in place of the establishment of amicable relations.

In this unsatisfactory state the matter must for the present be allowed to remain; with the hope that more definite particulars with regard to the creatures may in a short time be forthcoming from the Gaboon.

We cannot, however, conclude without referring to the remarkable coincidence that this African nondescript should have made its appearance on the scene within such a short time of Mr. Lydekker's announcement of an abnormal leopard skin from Cuddapah, on the borders of the Deccan, of which brief mention has been previously made in our columns. In that case it is almost certain that we have to do with a strange colour-sport on the part of the ordinary Indian leopard; but, nevertheless, the possibility of the specimen indicating a tiger-leopard hybrid has been mentioned, and should not be forgotten.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

WILLIAM EVANS, who used to ride for the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar and who won the Viceroy's Cup for him on Fitzgrafton, and otherwise distinguished himself on Indian courses, is now in England, where the American jockey invader has to some small extent been supplanted by the enterprising Antipodean. He will have an early opportunity of exhibiting his skill in England, for he is at Newmarket and as his record is tolerably well-known to English owners and trainers he should soon get into harness.

THE Oudh Hockey Tournament was concluded at Lucknow on the 3rd instant, when the Lucknow team beat Partabgarh by four goals to one.

THE Rugby football match between New Zealand and the British team played at Dunedin on the 6th instant resulted in a win for the New Zealanders by 32 points to 8.

THE Pachmarhi Polo Tournament began on the 29th ultimo, and was most suceessful despite the fact that the ground was not in good condition. Seven teams entered and results were as follows:—First Round.—27th Light Cavalry beat Pachmarhi Gymkhana by 3 goals to 2; Musketeers beat the Scarlet Pimpernels by 6 goals to 3; 28th Light Cavalry beat 60th Rifles by 8 goals to nil. Semi Finals.—Musketeers beat 27th Light Cavalry by 8 goals to 1; Fetesians beat 28th Light Cavalry by 4 goals to 2. The final was played on the 3rd instant and resulted in a win for the Musketeers who beat the Fetesians by 6 goals to 1.

FROM the details given in "Sport in England" to-day it appears that the young American Millionaire tennis player, Mr. Jay Gould, had an easy victory over Mr. Eustrace Miles in the final for the Amateur Championship. The Englishman was obviously clean off his game and hardly once showed a glimpse of his true form.

MESSRS. WILKINSON, of Pall Mall, have been appointed the London Agents for Messrs. P. Spicer and Sons, the well-known taxidermists of Leamington.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON'S new racing cutter Shamrock has been recently undergoing trials in the Solent. At home even greater interest, if possible, will be taken in her than in those previous Shamrocks, which were built solely to compete for the America Cup on the other side of the Atlantic. She is, indeed, intended to race in British waters, and hitherto Sir Thomas has practically left the sport at home severely alone. The presence of his new yacht will give a decided fillip to racing in the big class this summer, and the critics who have seen her seem to be pretty unanimous in their favourable opinion of her. Her first appearance in a race will be awaited with interest.

OWING to the extreme rigour of last winter and the wilful destruction of songbirds in various parts of the country, France is threatened with the extinction of her larks, finches and thrushes, says the Paris correspondent of a London paper.

Professor Corcelle, of Chambery, has addressed an appeal to the public, warning them that if farmers, gamekeepers, and poachers continue their conduct they will soon have exterminated all the small birds in the country. He has been struck by the silence of the woods this year, and implores his compatriots to take action before it is too late.

As proof of the necessity for legislative measures, he declares that thousands of larks are killed and sold at 3d. a dozen. So great is the slaughter sometimes that large quantities of birds which cannot be sold are thrown away.

IT is with regret we learn of the death of Hector Fraser, the redoubtable boy champion Australian pigeon shot. Mr. Hector Fraser was taken ill at Monte Carlo with acute tuberculosis last March, and died on the 17th ult. at the age of only 19. This is a very sad blow to the whole of Australia, where his name was a household word. He was equally well known to all the Monte Carlo pigeon shots, both Continental and English, and was a great favourite everywhere. He had few, if any, superiors at trapshooting, and his nerve and determination were remarkable in one so young. Last year young Fraser won the Triennial Championship of £720 and a gold medal at Monte Carlo from a big field of 87 subscribers, which included most of the expert trap shots in the world. In addition to this he made many other sensational wins at 33 metres, which is equivalent to 36 English yards. What makes the blow all the more sudden is the fact that when young Fraser left England last January he was the picture of health, and appeared to be a very powerful young man.

POOR little "Tiger" Smith! He makes but indifferent progress; when he isn't a chopping block for his opponents, he gets done out of his chances of making a little bit as thus:—

"The seventh series of boxing competitions organised by 'Les Nouveaux Sports,' which took place yesterday evening at the Casino de Paris, came to an end in an unlooked-for manner. The programme consisted of four encounters between novices, a match between Piet (France) and Young Moore (England), which was won by the Frenchman in two rounds, and finally a twenty-round contest between the two English middle-weights. Tiger Smith and Steve Smith, for a purse of 7,500 francs. When all was ready for the last item the referee announced that the match could not be fought, an official of 'Les Nouveaux Sports' having disappeared with the bulk of the receipts. The Casino management offered the Englishmen 2,000 francs for a six-round contest, but they declined it. The spectators were greatly excited, and demanded their money back, but they left the hall without creating any serious disturbance."

THE "cussedness" of things in general is being brought home to most of us on every possible occasion and the fact that "there is no rose without a thorn" we accept with a weary shrug of the shoulders.

So the ordinary man, when asked his opinion of Fountain Pens vouchsafes that "they are alright if they did not at inconvenient moments deluge one's shirt front with ink, and if one did not, after working with a syringe to fill them (with all the delicacy of a surgical operation) have to spend half an hour cleansing the ink stains from one's fingers.

However, so far as Fountain Pens are concerned Messrs. De la Rue appear to have evolved the rose without a thorn inasmuch as they have produced the "Onoto," a Fountain Pen which does not leak (because you shut the ink off—a simple idea) and which by a marvellously ingenious arrangement fills itself—in five seconds, no troublesome pocket clips to keep them upright—Onotos do not need them, no syringes to break and lose, Onotos fill themselves. They can be seen at all stationers or at any of Messrs. Wheeler's bookstalls on the Indian Railways.—Verb. sap.

ANOTHER quotation from Printers' Pie; this from the pen of the Duke of Argyll who calls it "Kissmarriages":—

Misprinters sent me out to shed
A light on names misread.
'Twas on a road: "He's too well read
To make mistakes," they said.
And this is how I used my head
As on my way I sped,
My pen will tell you all I said
And unto what it led.

I asked the maid for drink: quoth she,
"No Sir, Pray where's your Trunk?"
My name I told! She answered me
"No, Sir, you're drumwhat sunk."

"I drumwhat sunk! you slicked wut,"
I angrily replied.
"Both maid and man make me a butt.

The first gymkhana of the season took place at Darjeeling, on the 2nd instant, and was well attended. A programme of six events was run through, providing much amusement. The Relay race opened the proceedings. Ladies and gentlemen, two teams, one from either side starting together to ride to a given spot round a flag and back again; the next not to start until the first was back. This was won by Mrs. Nicolay's team.

The Polo Ball Race for Ladies to start and pick up three polo balls off wooden posts, one at a time, and drop them into buckets, was run in two heats and was won, respectively, by Mrs. Palmer Roberts and Miss Pike; in the final, Mrs. Palmer Roberts won.

The Chatty Race was won by Captain Whish, after two ties with Mr. Marshall. Then came the living Aunt Sally Stakes; men to run to partners who handed them top hats of sorts, the hats had to be knocked off by the ladies with tennis balls and the man then had to finish over a given course. This was won by Miss Barker and Captain Conran. The 5th event was the Vice Versa Stakes. Gentlemen mounted on side saddle rode round the course to ladies, dismounted and the ladies finished. Four pairs entered and the event was won by Captain Whish and Mrs. Roberts, Captain Corbit being disqualified for riding inside one of the flags.

The last event was the Artists' Stakes, for ladies and gentlemen in pairs, gentlemen to ride up to Grand Stand with a sealed envelope containing the name of an, animal, this to be handed to the lady. The lady draws the animal on black board. As soon as he recognises the animal gentleman to ride back to the post and report its name.

In the first heat Mr. Marshall won and in the second Mr. Price and the final was won by Mr. Price.

M. le Marquis de Chasseloup-Laubat saw M. Clemenceau recently in Paris, and received from him permission to state authoritatively that the French Government had voted a substantial subsidy towards the expenses of sending a representative team of athletes to London for the Olympic games this July. The news will be welcomed on both sides of the Channel, for great uncertainty has been caused by the delay attending this important decision. The Marquis de Chasseloup-Laubat is to be congratulated on so successful a solution of a long standing problem. His name is well known to all fencers as that of one of the finest swordsmen in France, and it is hoped that during his visit to London he will be entertained at the Sword Club, the headquarters of the Amateur Fencing Association, of which his Majesty is the patron. A letter addressed to M. Clemenceau requesting his good offices towards the Government in the matter of French representation at the Olympic games was sent in a few days ago, and signed by another famous fencer, among others, M. George Berger, the secretary of the French Olympic Committee.

The regatta at Naini Tal during the Ranikhet week occupied two days and ended in a win for Naini by seven events to four. Results were as follows:—

First Day. Representative Four-Oared Race.—Naini Tal won. Mr. Broughton, Mr. Whittall, Mr. Robson and Captain Law.

Mixed Four-Oared Race.—Ranikhet won. Miss Macdonald, Miss Winby, Major Beynon, and Major Grove.

Blindfold Race.—Ranikhet won. Mrs. Shekleton, Mrs. Kitchen, Mrs. Kemble, Mr. Kemble, Mr. Bayley, Captain Davidson and Captain Ballard.

Pillow Fight.—Mr. Beattie (Naini Tal).

Second Day. Four-Oared Race.—Naini Tal won by three lengths. Mr. Whittall, Mr. Jump, Mr. Rouse, Mr. Broughton; Cox—Miss Ottley.

Man the Life-Boat Stakes.—Naini Tal won. Mrs. Westcott, Miss Slaughter, Miss Ottley, Colonel Westcott, Mr. Rouse and Mr. Harvey.

Single Sculls.—Mr. Rouse (Naini Tal).

Rumble-tumble Stakes.—Ranikhet won. Miss Fawcett, Mrs. Kemble, Mrs. Shekleton, Captain Davidson, Mr. Kemble, Mr. Bayley and another.

Lost Paddle Race.—Naini Tal won. Mrs. Westcott and Mr. Rouse.

Representative Pairs.—Ranikhet won. Major Beynon, Major Grove; Cox—Mrs. Grove.

Salvage Stakes.—Naini Tal won. Mr. Rouse and Mr. Harvey.

Six crews met on the Tarra in the Australian Inter-State Eight Oar Race, New South Wales winning by a length and a quarter from Victoria. The following details of the race appear in the Sydney Referee:—

New South Wales was first to strike the water, but South Australia was the first to show decidedly in front. The rowing from the start was in the New South Wales and Tasmanian boats almost faultless. When the boats were fairly moving, South Australia was half a length in front of New South Wales, Tasmania, a few feet off, was next; Queensland, Victoria, and Western Australia followed at short intervals. South Australia was rowing as though the race were for a mile. New South Wales and Tasmania moved off in a business-like way, and looked like winning almost from the first. Coming to the east end of the canal, half a mile from the start, the crews had been rowing 3mins. 38secs. New South Wales had displaced South Australia, and Victoria, having passed Queensland, was closing up on Tasmania. Western Australia was last.

Crossing the broad water, the form of the New South Wales crew evoked great cheering from the passengers of the steamers and the crowd on the banks. Their blade-work was thorough in the water, and beautifully even in the feather. A perfect blend of the power in bodies, legs, and arms in a lively swing made their work appear easy. They reached the mile in 5mins. 19secs., just clear of Victoria and Tasmania, who were making a pretty race for second place, while the pace had told on the South Australian crew, who were losing ground. At 1¼ mile, Victoria, rowing the slowest stroke of all, drew gradually ahead of Tasmania, and began to gain on the leaders, while the rearmost crews fell into attenuated order. New South Wales, for a little while, seemed to tire, but Fitzhardinge pulled his men together, and the power went into the blades again, the fine swing never having been lost. Little attention could be spared for the other crews, because the struggle between the old opponents, New South Wales and Victoria, was so absorbing. The coxswain of the leading boat cut the turn rather fine, and there was a slight touch of the opposing oars, but, having to steer out, New South Wales lost most by it. [The winning stroke says there was no touching, though for about four strokes his oar slightly underlapped the Victorian's. This, he explains, was due to having to dodge a log in the course.—] Soon after the boats once more came together, and again the visitors were the losers by it, though it was their own fault. Still, they had sufficient power in reserve to draw away, and they shot across the finishing-line 14mins. 29 1/5secs. after starting. They were a length and a quarter ahead of the Victorians, who were three lengths ahead of Tasmania. Two and a half lengths further back was South Australia, three lengths ahead of Western Australia, and Queensland were last by several lengths.

Five entered for the Sculling Championship, which resulted as follows:—

E. Jack (Tasmania), 10-6 ...	... 1
H. Brasch (Victoria), 11-10 ...	... 2
J. R. Towns (New South Wales), 13-0	... 0
W. M. Callaghan (Queensland), 10-5	... 0
P. C. Ivens (Victoria), 10-12	... scratched

Jack caused a false start, and at a second try both he and Brasch struck the water before the pistol was fired, but for all that it was a fairly even start. Brasch rowed cleanly and strongly from the first, and at the end of two minutes was half a length in front of Jack, a full length ahead of Towns and Callaghan. The east end of the canal was reached by Towns in 4mins. 14secs., he having gone half a length ahead of Brasch, who was a length ahead of Jack. Towns fell back approaching the mouth of the Victoria Dock, and Brasch took the lead, while Jack got on even terms with Towns. The first mile and a half was covered in 10mins. 34secs., Towns being half a length ahead of Brasch and a length ahead of Jack. The Tasmanian was keeping a dead-true course up mid-stream, rowing cleanly and well, and though he was last gave promise of outlasting his heavier opponents. At the same time Towns' right scull was splashing, and he kept boring in to the North Wharf. He was, however, doing powerful work with his body, and made great efforts to keep his boat on her course. At the Gasworks Jack had gone a little ahead of Towns, and Brasch had fallen two lengths behind. Brasch passed the big Sydney man, and made a fine effort to catch his little opponent, and reached the Spencer Street ferry in 16mins. 33secs. There was not time now for Brasch to get up, and Jack was already hailed as the winner, but the Victorian rowed right up to the finish. Jack won by four lengths, and the time was 17mins. 50 1/5secs.

The following are the results of important cricket matches played in England during last week:—

Sussex beat Derbyshire by seventeen runs.
Hampshire beat Leicester by five wickets.
The M.C.C. beat Oxford University by 42 runs.
Surrey beat Essex by an innings and five runs.
Kent beat Derbyshire by an innings and eighteen runs.
Surrey beat Somerset by an innings and 204 runs.
Yorkshire beat Worcestershire by 69 runs.
Middlesex beat Gloucestershire by three wickets.
Sussex beat Cambridge University by nine wickets.
The matches between Kent, and Cambridge University and Yorkshire and Warwickshire was drawn.

The Motor Race for the World's Championship was held on the Brooklands' course over a distance of 27½ miles. On the 9th instant Nazarro driving a Fiat car beat Mr. Edge's Napier. His average speed was 94¾ miles an hour, but he even reached 111½.

The Viceroy on Monday night entertained at dinner the polo teams who have taken part in the Beresford Cup Tournament. The following gentlemen were invited:—1st Dragoon Guards: Captains Rasbotham, Renton, Clifton-Brown, Mr. E. A. Weinbolt and Mr. L. H. Hawkins; 17th Lancers: Lieutenant-Colonel Nickalls, Captain Melville, Mr. Parbury; 12th Lancers: Major Wormald, Captain Fane, Mr. Wood, Mr. Wyndham Quin; Viceroy's Staff: Lieutenant-Colonel Brooke and Captains Lord Francis Scott, Gibbs, and Keighley; Lord Kitchener's Staff: Colonel Birdwood and Captains Livingstone-Learmouth, Wylly and Basset; The Hopefuls: Major Hambro. Captain Jelf and Goldie; Patiala Team: Kunwar Sir Ranbir Singh, Sardars Bakshi Pretum Singh, Sewa Singh, Chanda Singh; Umpires: Colonel H. de Lisle, Majors Lecky and Campbell; Goal Referees: Captain Stanborough, Messrs. Fell and Farr; Household Staff: Lieutenant-Colonel Pinhey, Captains Mackenzie, Lord Windsor and Hopen. Besides these Lieutenant-Colonel Roos-Keppel was also present.

The Secunderabad Gymkhana Club at a recent meeting decided to refuse to accept the new rules made by the Indian Polo Association Committee for the measurement of polo ponies as being illegal under Rule 10. Telegrams were read at the meeting from Madras, Belgaum, Bangalore, Poona and Ootacamund supporting the action of the Secunderabad Gymkhana Club.

In this connection the following wire has been received from Simla by the daily papers:—The Polo Club, whose secession from the Indian Polo Association is announced from Southern India, cannot have realized what their alienation means. None of their polo tournaments will be sanctioned or recognized, nor will any measurements of ponies be made by any person not authorized by the I.P.A. be recognized. It is even doubtful whether members of the seceding club will be allowed to play in tournaments held under the authority of the I.P.A. The reason of the appointment of a Measurer to do all the measuring for the I.P.A. is to prevent the abuses attendant upon measurements by local and interested committees, as has been painfully manifested at the various tournaments.

The lawn tennis tournament at Simla for the prizes presented by the Hon'ble Mr. Thackersey was concluded on the court at Viceregal Lodge last Friday when Major Turner and Miss Macrea (+15) beat Captain Stanborough and Mrs. Norman (+½ 15) (3—6; 7—5; 6—3). This final tie was one of the best in the whole tournament.

The entries for Tollygunge Gymkhana on the 13th are not at all bad for the opening meeting, which is always the worst of the series; the season and the absence of handicaps being all against big fields. The Hack Stakes did not fill at first, but an extension till Monday at 7 o'clock, for closing brought the entries up to 8, including there pretty good ones in Pardon, St. Rule, and Seditious. The last named has a good reputation as a hurdler and is said to be able to gallop more than a bit. St. Rule is much too slow a beginner to have much show in a four-furlong sprint. Pardon is a nice cut of a horse, and if he has improved much since the cold weather, when he was fat and out of condition, may have some say in it. Viking is a horse that Mr. Evers paperchased several times last cold weather, but he was growing and his owner did not think it wise to race him then and he is still a "may be." Paddy has been put in to fill up and as he has also to run in a match round the course may be left out of account. Of course, we know nothing, but expert opinion on the whole is inclined to think that the race is at the mercy of Seditious.

The proceedings will probably begin with the match. The conditions of this have been changed, as Mr. Lynton will be unable to be in Calcutta to ride his horse and has therefore arranged for Mr. Tanner to take the mount for him. Mr. Pettit has, therefore, of course, also had the option of getting someone else, but like a good sportsman prefers to have the fun of the gallop himself and chance losing by his lack of experience. More power to him.

The open race has a very fair lot of animals in it. There has been a lot of talk about the Singapore horse Matsumata, but it is not apparent on what the great expectations have been based. The animal started two or three times down there in maiden class races "Griffin Stakes," etc., etc., and could never even get a place and though it is a nice enough compact looking beast it has not the appearance of a very fast sprinter and no one would be more surprised than the owner if it were to pull off the race. It is the property of Mr. Wallace Jones, the new G.R., to whom we referred in these columns the other day. This gentleman can ride 8st. 10lb. and is said to be quite a bit above the average. Techee, Mr. Galstaun's Teufel colt, has come a lot since he started in the first extra on 30th November, and should be the winner and Comprimil, Lord Chester and Lady Thirza are likely to press him hardest.

The Maiden Plate for horses that have not won Rs. 500 everyone says is a gift for Mr. Evers' Nuts (late Craigendarrie), but Piper has got Boolara looking very well and the steeplechaser should make a good show as he can probably carry the heavy weight better than the other, who is a lightly framed horse. They will both probaby have to put up 5-lb. penalty as Mr. Evers will ride his own and Mr. Barrow will most probably have the other mount.

The Pony Race with its 15 entries is the most open event of the day. With a good man up Loch Lily should have some say in it but if she is fit Picture ought to be able to defy all competition among those we know. However, there may be something ultra smart out of the new lot to upset all calculations and it will be one of those good races for punters without reliable "special information" to let alone.

The Polo Scurry is supposed to lie at the mercy of Mr. Holmes with either Maud or Bumby, and as he will probably ride himself nothing will be lost in the way of jockeyship and it will be a pleasure to see this very pretty exponent of the art in the saddle again.

We are very to hear that Messrs. T. Wood and Badger have lost their fine old horse Thomond whose well-earned time of rest has been all to short. He was sent home to finish his days in a peaceful paddock in Herefordshire at the end of last season, but frightened by a thunderstorm he jumped the paddock rails and galloping to the end of the next paddock fell paralyzed and had to be shot.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 22nd May 1908.

The London season has opened merrily and its inauguration has been attended by glorious weather. So bright and hot was last Sunday, which your scribe devoted to a long cycle prowl in the country, that he solemnly avers his condition was much what it used to be after rowing a course on the Kidderpore water in August! Yet what a day it was! The country looks lovely with the lilac, hawthorn, laburnum and May in masses everywhere: the emerald sward, white and golden spangled, the horse chestnut in bloom, the orchards exhibiting a positive riot of blossom on every branch and twig; the blending of lovely spring hues wherever one's gladdened gaze rests, the trees draped in every shade of foliage—from the delicate yellow pink of the young beech to the dark hued sycamore and the almost blue black pines. The sunny hedgerows are alive with bird and insect life, and the air resounds with the "wild wood notes of duty" from a thousand feathered throats. It's good to be alive, comforting to sit smoking on a five barred gate, and between whiffs to speculate on how old friends in India are spending their Sunday!

But to revert to our doings in town. Next Sunday is "Chestnut Sunday" all ye who know London will appreciate the scene in Bushey Park and Hampton Court on that day. The Exhibition grows daily in popularity; Empire Day manifestations are occupying many good people; announcements of interesting society functions fall thick upon us, amusement caterers are giving us of their best, the parks and fashionable places are crowded with those whose chief business in life is to be amused and admired. The visit of the French President will enliven the season; a Court Ball, a big ceremony at the exhibition, at least two banquets at Buckingham Palace, a gala night at the Opera, figure on his programme.

The Horse Show promises to be again a great social event, and all the private boxes will be occupied by well-known people. The July meetings at Newmarket are likely to be very well attended, especially if the weather is fine and warm, and clubs like Hurlingham, Ranelagh, and Rochampton are all likely to attract thousands of people during the next few weeks for polo, ballooning, and other entertainments that have been already announced.

Ascot, too, promises to be unusually brilliant this year. Alterations have been made in the grand stand, and Lord Churchill has already received thousands of applications for the royal enclosure.

From that excellent coign of vantage, the steps of St. Martin's, I was privileged last Saturday to look upon one of the biggest mass meetings ever held in Trafalgar Square. It was a meeting of "hoppers," who over sixty thousand strong swarmed up from the country and the east end of London and gathered on this spot to protest against the ruin wrought in the hop industry by our system of free imports. Bands and banners there were, of course, every brown-faced hopper had a button hole of hops, every speaker—there were five simultaneously addressing the men from various stages—was cheered to the echo, the police were in tremendous force, but had an exceptionally easy job to control this concourse of determined and offended humanity. The railways—and the pubs—did good business. The hoppers demand a tax on foreign hops and the result of the meeting was a strongly worded resolution which has considerably alarmed the free traders.

We haven't yet decided what form the National Shakespeare Memorial is to take; some want a statue, some want a national theatre as I think I told you a little while ago. This week Lord Lytton presided at a big meeting held in the Lyceum, and Sir John Hare, Mr. Lyttleton, Messrs. Pinero, Comyns Carr, H. G. Wells, Sir Squire Bancroft and—of course—Mr. Bernard Shaw were decidedly in favour of the theatre, considering that the statue idea would neither enhance the fame of the bard nor redound to the credit and taste of the present day. Sir John Hare, in the course of his remarks, said he rejoiced in the support and sympathy which the movement was now receiving from some of the most thoughtful and educated men in the country. The stage, unfortunately, was still chaotic and ineffective; day by day and year by year the trend of the theatre was more towards trade and less towards art—(hear, hear)—and the commercial interests paralysed the aspirations and ambitions of the most artistic and conscientious of their managers. The same might have been the case in France, had it not been for the National Theatre.

The meeting hoped that in the National Theatre would be found a permanent home for British drama, in which the supremacy of Shakespeare in the dramatic literature of this country should receive the fullest possible recognition. In connection with the architecture of the theatre a really artistic statue might be erected either inside or just outside. The Committee are now busy drafting a scheme of the ultimate sucess of which many of us have doubts.

The "acquisitiveness" of Indian domestic servants is as proverbial as their dread of the truth and their abhorrence of cleanliness. As an aid to the detection of pilfering I offer the long-suffering employer of Chor-Khan, Sharabi Bux, Jhoot Ali and Company, the following tip suggested by the report of a recent case in London. Puzzled by a series of mysterious thefts, the authorities at the London Hospital left a purse marked with an invisible dye containing coins similarly marked in one of the nurse's wardrobes. The purse disappeared, and, later on, a towel, pair of gloves, and a handkerchief were found all bearing the blue stains, it is said, of the dye. These belonged to the pilferer who was charged and convicted. The stuff is called "tetramethylthionine hydrochloride." Ask your chemist for it, experiment with it and look for results on the jharrands and clothing of your bearer, khitmutgar or other chartered robbers.

"Pro Tem," Mr. Cyril Maude discovered was not a stayer, and that astute caterer has very wisely withdrawn it. It was replaced by "Lanval," a four act drama by Mr. "T. E. Ellis," which is the pen name of Lord Howard de Walden. The author has flown high and nearly got there. It is a Potiphar's wife and Joseph story he tells, the period is that of Good King Arthur, the setting is historical, and the whole piece is clever, well mounted if perhaps a trifle dull at times. Briefly the plot is this:—Guinevere, Queen of Britain, falls in love with Lanval, dreamer, idealist, sentimentalist, and knight of King Arthur's Court. But Lanval is as ice before her advances. Guinevere considers herself a woman scorned, and she proceeds to make things very hot for Lanval. She gives good King Arthur to understand that the boot has been on the other foot, that Lanval has been making love to her, and the wrathful Arthur has Lanval seized and bound at once. Mr. C. V. France played the part of King Arthur; Mr Harcourt Williams, as "Lanval," was at his best: Others who merit mention were Miss Elaine Inescourt, Miss Hutin Britton and Mr. Chas. Rock.

"Lanval" made way for the old familiar "Toddles" on Wednesday night and his reappearance was very heartily welcomed. "Toddles" abounds in humour, it is rollicking French farce throughout, and as all who have seen it will admit, it emphasises a profound truth which is that a man cannot come to a great decision in his pyjamas. "Toddles" is preceded by a pathetic and well acted curtain raiser called "Soldiers' Daughters," "an episode" by Mr. Cosmo Hamilton: it pourtrays the struggles of a typist and an actress reduced to straits which make it difficult for one of them to keep on the straight and narrow path.

Madame Melba, last Wednesday, began her twentieth consecutive season at Covent Garden, and was most enthusiastically received. In order to commemorate her two decades of excellent work in the cause of opera, the famous singer proposes to organise a matinee at the Opera House in the course of next month, when the programme will consist of acts or scenes from various operas. She intends to ask Madame Tetrazzini, Madame Destinn, and other distinguished artists to assist her on this agreeable occasion. The proceeds of the performance will be placed at the disposal of the Lord Mayor for distribution among various deserving charitable institutions in London. It is not generally known, I fancy, that Madame Melba is Scotch, her father being a Forfar man.

An amusing case all about a phaeton was decided on Wednesday. The squabblers were Miss Ethel Clinton and Miss Maudi Darrell, the well-known actresses. Miss Ethel tried to sell Miss Maudi a second hand victoria phaeton and would have succeeded had not the fair prospective purchaser discovered that the thing was old, the tyres "falling off in lumps" as she alleged and altogether unsuitable and amazingly dear at £150. An expert valued the derelict at £20, or thereabouts, so the defendant cried off the bargain. The plaintiff said the carriage had belonged to the late Prince Soltykoff—who by the way had left her his racing stable as well and was in splendid condition. The litigants were once bosom friends but are now naturally at daggers drawn, but they looked very charming in their new summer toilettes and enlivened the court considerably when under examination. Cross-examined by Mr. Hemmerde, Miss Clinton said that with the victoria phaeton she had always driven a pair of 15-2 horses. She wanted the carriage back because she had heard that Miss Darrell was driving about in her colours, pink and black, when she thought Miss Darrell would have her own colours, yellow and black, put on.

Mr. Justice Grantham: Do you young ladies have racing colours?

Miss Clinton: The colours were the colours of Prince Soltykoff. He wished me to have them, as he had had left me his racing stable. It is sad to relate how a hard hearted jury decided that Miss Maudi had bought the old fashioned machine which Mr. Justice Grantham valued at £130.

It is strange indeed now a days if any incident cannot be turned to advertising account. London and Paris have been much exercised during the last few days by the appearance of the new and startling "sheath" dresses adapted from the costumes worn in the days of the Directoire. My lamentable ignorancer of female attire permits me to indulge no further in descriptive effort than to state that the garb clings very close, is of a texture rivalling Dacca muslin and that things called "pink fleshings" are worn underneath, that there is a deal more of revelation than suggestion and that the pioneers of the fashion have had to seek police protection! Nuff said. This was the opportunity of a foreign female equestrienne now showing in London and she chose Rotten Row last Saturday as the most appropriate place in which to burst on an astonished public a cheval and a la Directoire. Her dress consisted of some cream coloured diaphanous material cut very tightly to the figure, with a pearl lace yoke. The gown was slashed on the left side to the knee, and under it the rider wore tights and long white boots embroidered with brilliants and there was a fine display of shapely leg. On her head she wore three large white ostrich plumes with a crown of brilliants. Amongst those who took a keen interest in the unusual spectacle was Mr. Winston Churchill, who turned to look round, when a foreign-looking gentleman galloped up, and through turning his head in the same direction, collided violently with Mr. Churchill's horse. Fortunately neither gentleman was hurt though the foreign looking gent "came unglued."

In one's walks abroad during the next four months the Indian visitor and the leave spending Anglo-Indian will be common objects of the West End and the bankers and agents quarters. Already I have noted the arrival of several Calcutta celebrities among them their Highnesses the Maharajah and Maharani of Cooch Behar, some High Court Judges, Bengal Pilots, soldiers and merchants, athletic celebrities and that dashing cavalryman and polo enthusiast who, I believe, is known to most people in Calcutta as "The Apostle."

JUNGLE MEMORIES.

THE GAUR.

It was in April 1888 that I slew my first gaur, or bison as, he is generally known by the Eastern sportsman. What magnificent brutes they are, and how my heart thrilled when I saw them for the first time in the bamboo forests of the Weingunga! It was my initial attempt at big game shooting and a disastrous trip it proved to be. I was to have joined a friend in the police, who had eight tigers marked down in different places; unfortunately, however, the day I started to join him, he had to rush off to Saugor, where his brother had just been killed by an accident at polo. I met my friend en route, who told me I should have to knock about by myself for ten days or so, after which he would join me. On getting out at my destination, I had a thirty-mile ride to accomplish, so delayed my start till the next morning, when I set forth on one of my best ponies, getting in to the little station about noon, where I stopped at my friend's house. I shall not forget easily that long ride,—the glaring white of the dusty road, the brassy sky, and the almost intolerable heat have imprinted themselves for all time on my memory, the more so that in the evening my pony was seized with colic, and notwithstanding that every thing possible was done to restore him, died in a few hours. It was a great loss to me, as he was a clinking good polo pony, and it had only been three months before that I had borrowed the money from the regimental shroff, to pay for him. I stayed for a day or two to get my shikar license, and to overhaul my kit, and then set out to explore those wondrous Indian jungles, of which I had read so much, and so eagerly longed to visit. I, of course, did not go to that tract of country, which I and my friend were going to shoot together, but went to the south-east of it on to the plateau of the Sonewani ghat. Luck was with me from the first, as two days after starting I had bagged a cheetul and a blue bull. At my fourth camp I heard to my delight that bison were not far off, so an early start was made the next morning on the chance of falling in with them. The ground was far too dry for tracking, so the little Gond, who was my pilot, made for certain places that were often frequented by the gaur in the hot weather. Two of these spots were drawn blank, and rather disappointed we made our way to the next likely locality. After a mile or two we came to a hill-side which we climbed, and on reaching the top advanced cautiously down towards a small hollow: when about a hundred yards away, the jungle became more scattered, and we were able to look down into the little valley, where to my joy I saw a herd of bison lying about in the short grass. We counted eleven of their big black bodies, the bull easily distinguished by his massive horns, being one of the nearest. The wind was favourable, but, of course, we had to go very much nearer before taking the shot. Silently therefore and steathily we crept from tree to tree until we were within about fifty yards of them. Here an unforeseen incident occurred, for a sambur stag with a crash and a rattle, suddenly got up close at hand, and went off at a gallop. The herd were immediately on their feet, and staring in our direction, I had to shoot quickly if at all. The bull was facing me, so I had to fire at his chest, always a bad target for a bison, though in these days of high velocity rifles, I have no doubt it is as good a spot to shoot at as any other. He dropped on his knees as I fired, when I immediately gave him the left barrel; however, picking himself up he galloped off to the right front, the herd in the meantime having thundered off up the valley to my left. Reloading and putting up the two hundred yard sight, I gave him two more before he disappeared over the brow of the opposite crest, and then ran after him as fast as I could pelt. On reaching the top at the other side, there were no signs of him, but as there was plenty of blood tracking was fairly easy. We went on for about a mile when the little Gond stopped, and whispered that he thought he was not far off, he had hardly spoken when there was a crash on the left, and we had barely time to jump to one side, when a racing black avalanche charging past us, was instantly swallowed up again among the thick bamboo clumps. I immediately conceived a great respect for all bison and for this bull in particular. It had been a close shave, but I was yet to have a closer one still. After a few minutes' rest, we cautiously followed on, blood was still plentiful and I was in hopes that he would soon be too weakened to go much further, the Gond, however, informed me that he was a nasty vicious beast, which I had already discovered for myself, and that he would probably have to eat several more bullets before the sahib could claim the victory. As we proceeded the jungle began to become thicker, until at last we arrived at a small valley which was one mass of dwarf bamboo; here my small guide warned me to be on my guard, as it looked a likely place for the bull to have stopped in. Entering this patch with the utmost caution, we had gone about twenty yards, when again we heard an ominous crash, and the crackling rush made by the huge brute as he charged towards us. Stopping at once where we were, we stood without a sound, the gaur pulling up as it seemed to us, about ten yards away on our right. There was dead silence for about a minute, and then the brute turning round we heard him make off again. Going on as soon as the noise had ceased, we came to where the bison had been lying down not many yards from where he had pulled up, with blood all over the place. In spite of the heavy bleeding, my little tracker seemed to think we should have a long chase after him. It was now eleven o'clock, so on getting through the path we sat down in the shade of a large tree, and whiled away an hour with something for the inner man and a smoke. At noon we resumed our journey through the bamboo and teak, for another half hour, when again without the slightest warning were we ambuscaded. It all happened very quickly there was the same lightning rush, a momentary vision of a large black back, and a pair of wide spreading horns almost touching me as I jumped, at the same time there was a jarring shock to my right wrist, and my rifle caught by the tip of one of his horns, was hurled violently about twenty yards away. I was too dazed for a minute to move and then found I was lying on my back staring into the bamboos above me, though how I got into this position I had not the faintest idea, but suppose I must have tripped and fallen as I sprang to one side, for I certainly had not been bowled over by the bison. I then saw the Gond descend from a small teak tree near by, up which he had climbed after dodging the charge. He ran and got my rifle as I picked myself up, and handed it to me with a broad grin, telling me at the same time what a narrow escape we had had. He was a plucky little beggar and seemed more anxious than ever to get on terms with our formidable assailant, I had rather a sinking at the pit of my stomach as I began to realise how very nearly the brute had got me, and this together with a whack on the side of the head which I had received in my fall, made me feel a bit shaky for a few minutes. However, in a short time I began to feel better, and started again in pursuit of our gallant foe. The rifle luckily was not much damaged, only the stock being cracked, and one of the barrels bocked with earth, which I soon removed. We followed up now in a very gingerly manner, examining the ground on each side, as carefully as we scouted in front, neither of us having any mind to be again caught napping. We proceeded in this way for another three hundred yards, when the gaur who by this time must have been feeling very groggy, from the heat and his wounds, suddenly started to his feet from where he had been lying down about thirty yards away. What a magnificent sight he was, as in all the majesty of defiant wrath, he stood pawing up the ground, and tossing his mighty head at intervals, challenged me to advance any further. Taking a bead at where the neck joins the body, I pulled the trigger, when he lurched round and lumbered off, getting my left barrel behind the shoulder as he turned. Reloading and in my excitement heedless of my former experiences; running along in the direction he had taken, I caught sight of him in another hundred yards walking slowly away; as I followed he half turned and stood still with his nose to the ground, evidently done for. Creeping up I fired again, aiming just behind the elbow, and as the smoke cleared, saw the gallant brute, his back towards me, lying feebly kicking on his side. Habet! The Gond who had previously faded, now joined me full of excitement and glee at the successful termination of our chase. I also, of course, felt pleased and proud at having bagged my first bison, and as I stood gazing at my fallen antagonist, like many another sportsman, I felt a twinge of remorse at having cut short the peaceful harmless life of my grand quarry. However, these kinds of thought fortunately do not long remain in the mind of the ordinary subaltern, and I bagged yet another bison before rejoining my friend. The death of this gaur was tame in the extreme and devoid of incident. Comprising an easy stalk, an easy shot, and an easy death, he having succumbed on the instant to a bullet through the heart. I have little more to relate about this shikar trip, except that after having joined my friend, the writer was bowled over by a severe bout of jungle fever, and was given up by the doctor who had been hurriedly sent for. I was unconscious for the last two of the many days I was ill, but managed to regain my senses and a normal temperature in some miraculous manner and slowly recovered, a trip home soon after putting me completely right again.

Some years afterwards I was quartered at a small station on the Upper Chindwin, and it was there I again had occasion to meet this fine game animal. I had been out for three or four days without having had any luck, when early one morning I and my mokso Po Saw came across the fresh tracks of a bull and cow. We followed these till nine o'clock when I called a halt and had my breakfast. At this hour of the day the wind is no longer steady and breaks into puffs and eddies from all sides, so that gaur are more likely to get the hunter's taint; the more so as by this time he generally lies down for the day, and is therefore hard to see until one is almost on top of him. For these reasons when tracking I nearly always stop about nine o'clock, and continue the pursuit about half past three in the afternoon, at which time the breeze is becoming steadier and bison are again on their legs and beginning to feed. At three o'clock therefore we started again, and half an hour later came to the place where the two gaur had laid down during the heat of the day. The tracks led down hill across a small valley and then up a steep hill side, up which we slowly climbed, when near the top the welcome sound of a cracking bamboo came to our ears not far ahead, so we proceeded with redoubled care. Po Saw was tracking slowly in front of me, when a sudden movement to the right caught my eye, and I immediately saw the head and neck of a fine bull, about 30 yards away which was lazily shaking his head every now and then to drive away the flies. A click of the tongue to the mokso stopped him at once, and crawling back he gave me the 8-bore. The only part of the gaur that I could see to shoot at was about six inches of his neck, thick bamboos hiding the shoulder, ribs and rest of the neck. On bringing the "Ubique" to my shoulder, I found I was far too shaky after my long climb to use it, so exchanged it for my old ·500 express. After waiting for two or three minutes I again took aim at a spot just behind the head and fired. The bull went over at once and I heard him floundering about in the bushes as the cow galloped off. Making a small detour I doubled round and getting above him saw him just getting to his feet again, when a right and left from the 8-bore floored him again, and rolling over and sliding he fell into a small nullah close by, where he lay kicking and snorting, until a shot from the ·500 brained him. He was a very fine old bull, with the points of the horns much worn away. I regret to say I kept no record of the measurements nor am I in possession of the head, but as far as I remember, he had a spread of thirty-eight inches and one of his horns was 20 inches in girth. This was a big head and the biggest I ever obtained, still heads with a spread of over 40 inches are not uncommon, and the writer has himself seen three. One of these was a very large one with a spread of 45 inches, one of the horns being 35 inches in length and 22 inches in girth. This had been shot by a sporting Burman myook, in whose house I came across it and took the above measurements, two or three years after it had been obtained. The writer on the last occasion that he shot a bison was with a shooting party in Canara, and game so far had been scarce. We had been out about a fortnight, and had only bagged one bison and one panther. On the night previous to the episode—which occurred towards the end of April,—we three had finished our dinner and were waiting for our coffee to be brought. All of a sudden a faint moaning was heard in the distance, which rapidly increased in volume, until like a thunder-clap we were smitten by a rushing mighty wind. Our tents heaved and strained, but being protected by a background of jungle suffered no harm. At the same moment our camp tables with their plates, and glasses went over, and simultaneously with a tremendous heaving and rending a large tree not far away came crashing to the ground. At first we thought it was coming on top of us, but it fell about forty yards away, crushing and smashing two of our carts, under one of which my unfortunate servant had dived with the coffee, when he heard the tree beginning to fall. He was, of course, pinned to the ground and badly squeezed but luckily had no bones broken. The tree broke up into three pieces in falling, one huge bit going through the servants' tent and just missing and badly scaring our Madrassi skinner, Samuel. The tornado only lasted five minutes and then we began to get a light rain which fell for an hour or two. We had been intending to move camp the next day, but it struck me that the rain might perhaps render the ground soft enough for tracking the next morning, so orders were immediately sent for three local shikaris to turn up at once so as to be on hand, as we intended starting at daybreak. We had been at K— about a week and had come on gaur two or three times, one herd having come out in a beat the same day. The bulls, however, had been conspicuous by their absence, as they generally are in the hot weather, preferring to roam singly and in couples, away from bad tempered females and troublesome youngsters, I had therefore hopes that one of us might come across the tracks of a solitary if the ground had been at all softened. The others were still asleep when I rose the next morning and were deaf to my blandishments, so after a cup of hot coffee and a biscuit and a final shout to their recumbent forms, I sallied forth about 5 A.M. with a gentleman called Doorgiah who had attached himself to me most of the time at that particular camp. He now told me of a great piece of luck. It appeared that he had come away from his village at once on being sent for that night, and on the way had come across a solitary bull which had chevied him, but which he had successfully eluded, and arrived at our camp two miles away to find we had all turned in. He had rolled himself up in his blanket therefore and kept his news until we had started. The bull apparently had hung about K— for the last two years generally alone, but some times in company and bore rather a bad character as he had several times gone for people who had disturbed him. As it was only a few hours since he had been seen, there was every possibility of coming across him. As we journeyed on, we found to our great disappointment that the night's rain had been purely local, as a little over half a mile after leaving the camp we began to experience the irritating crunch, crunch of the teak leaves beneath our feet. However, as we were now half way to the spot where Doorgiah had encountered the bison we determined to push on and trust to luck. On arriving at the place the shikaris turned off towards the nearest water in a hollow about ½ of a mile away, where he said the bull would have probably drunk, before retiring for the day to one of the low hills near us. On going there we found as we had hoped the perfectly fresh tracks of his huge feet, which showed he had only recently been there. We now took up the trail, which led us slowly along the valley, before it turned up the hill side. Doorgiah worked beautifully, though we had to hault on many occasions, owing to the dryness of the soil, while we made casts ahead and puzzled out the line. The sun was now well up, and we were making more noise than ever over the dried sticks and leaves. After going about half a mile I told Doorgiah that I thought it useless proceeding any further, as we should be heard 200 yards away, and as far as I could see we stood no chance of making an effective stalk. He was unwilling, however, to stop and suggested our going on a bit further. On we plodded therefore dodging and stooping under the overhanging foliage and carefully placing our feet as we advanced. Progress was, of course, slow and after another few hundred yards I again suggested the inutility of continuing. We were now a little over half way up the slope of one of the hills, so Doorgiah said that if we did not come across our quarry on reaching the top, we could then give it up. Slowly and carefully we continued our climb, until on arriving within twenty yards of the crest, I went a few yards to the left, so as to be able to see at once over the edge, when it was reached. Stealing on the remaining few yards, I looked over on to a small open plateau, studded here and there with bamboo clumps and patches of Karvi. Anxiously scanning the surface I was on the point of turning round and telling Doorgiah, who was behind and below me that the bull was not there, when my eye suddenly caught a movement in the bamboos about seventy yards away, and on making a more careful scrutiny I made out the hind quarters of a large gaur, as he stood motionless except for an occasional flick to his tail, the which had been the movement that had first attracted my attention.

A click of the tongue to my tracker and a wave of the hand, brought him up at once alongside of me, the while we debated in low tones how to make the attack. Doorgiah at once proposed that I should take the shot from where we were standing, which, of course, was not to be considered for a moment. As the ground was fairly clear of leaves and the wind blowing on our right cheeks, I at last decided to walk straight towards the bull for thirty or forty yards, and then making a detour to the left advance eventually on his flank. Accordingly I stepped forth and edging off a little to the left got a bamboo clump between me and the bison, when I made a slow noiseless advance until I was within thirty yards of him. Peering through the interstices of the bamboos I could see he was still in his leisurely attitude now and then shaking his head, and stamping with one of his mighty legs, while at times he reached out and pulled off an occasional bamboo leaf. He was standing alongside a patch of Karvi, which might or might not conceal him when I got eventually on to his flank, so I waited for a few minutes for a chance of his turning. As he seemed to be showing no signs of doing so, I at last started on my flank march. There were not many leaves on the grass, but quite sufficient to cause one to tread warily, so dropping my hands and knees I began my toilsome journey, picking up each leaf and twig that came in my path and carefully depositing them to one side. To come round in a semicircle on to the bull's side left me about forty yards to go, but as my rate of progress was about two yards a minute, it was a good twenty minutes before I arrived at my destination, by which time the sweat was streaming into my eyes. Cautiously lifting my head I saw the grand brute which was now about twenty yards away with head and neck up stretched browsing off the bamboo leaves in the same position as when last seen, and still in blissful and unconsciousness of my presence. This state of affairs, however, might not last long, and a change of wind might come at any moment, so it behoved me to take the shot as soon as possible. As I had thought, he was more or less concealed by the Karvi patch, but still the outlines of his mighty form were faintly visible, his head and neck being the only part of him in full view. The Karvi was about two yards thick, still I thought a steel tipped bullet and five drams of powder would get through all right, though the bullet might perhaps be slightly deflected. Aiming therefore at the shoulder I pulled the trigger. Directly I had fired the bull rushed forward a few yards pulling up, head in air, as he looked round to see what had hurt him. I was kneeling on the grass close by him and in full view as there were no trees handy, but as I did not move he probably took me for a tree stump. As he turned his head slowly away, I gave him the left barrel at the spot just behind the elbow, and over he went kicking feebly, but really as dead as mutton. He was a pretty fair sized gaur for Canara in these days, as he had a spread of 33 inches, one of his horns being 30 inches long, with a girth of over 17 inches. I had brought no water with me, and my tongue by this time was like a bit of leather, so that the three miles back to camp was rather a trial, but when at last I sat down to the breakfast table and listened to the good natured abuse of my friends, who had gone out and returned empty handed, a calm content pervaded my mind, as I reminded them of the old adage, that it is the early bird that catches the worm. I was lucky in having brought off the stalk successfully, and the gaur's time had evidently come. The chances were quite fifty to one against my getting a shot, as the row we made going over the thickly strewn teak leaves, should have been heard nearly two hundred yards away. Samuel sallied forthwith a forest guard and three Dhers, but did not bring back the head till after dark. A curious thing happened the next day, my Punjabi bearer was very keen on getting the hide, so prevailed on Samuel to get the Dhers to go with him and bring it back. On their return in the evening. Samuel informed me that they had found four panthers feeding on the carcase, so perhaps it might be worth the sportsman's while to sit up over a dead bison. All deer, of course, are cut up and distributed by the shikari, but as no native will touch a bison some use might be made of the remains in this way. Harking back to my good fortune, the incident will show to the young shikari the importance of never giving in, however, much the chances may seem against him.

There is one thing I should like to mention also, and that in my opinion it is not a sportsmanlike thing to shoot driven bison. The legitimate way is stalking and stalking only. Gaur when in a beat come on in a big torrent of waving tails and horns, the bull is difficult to distinguish and if fired at, as often as not gets clear away with a badly placed bullet in him to die perhaps in torment some days later. But what happens as a rule, is that the sportsman fires at the biggest animal that he sees and trust to luck that it is a bull. Let the true sportsman stick to the stalk, and leave the bison beat to the butcher.

It perhaps may be not out of place to here give an account of bison shooting under difficulties, which happened to a friend of mine Colonel T. He was at the time a subaltern and Political Officer in charge of the Southern Chin Hills. Game was abundant so that whenever he had the time to spare he often used to wander round the hills adjacent to Yawdwin, his headquarters. One morning he and his two Burman moksos fell in with fresh bison marks and proceeded to follow them up. The tracks led them for several miles at a steady pace into the interior and then curved round again towards home. After a mile or two the pugs crossed the original line that they had been following. Here a startled exclamation from one of the moksos attracted his attention, and on asking the cause of his perturbation the man green with fright pointed to the prints of human feet, which were quite fresh and following on the old line. He at once came to the same conclusion as the moksos, that a Chinbok war party had discovered their tracks and were at that moment in hot pursuit of them. Following back the line a little way, their fears were confirmed by finding the small heap of sticks that all Chinboks put down when on the war path, the idea being that if by any chance they are separated, each man comes back to the rendezvous, and picking up his own stick can tell at once what has happened to the majority of his fellows, and whether to remain or return to his village.

To make a bag of the political officer was too great a chance to be lost, so they had at once started following him up. T.—of course was furious at being run down in this way, and began making his plans for turning the tables. About twenty yards from where the old and new tracks met a small open space extended, so getting to the far side of it, and smoothing over his own foot marks, where he had retraced his steps and found the bundle of sticks, he made a neat little ambuscade and sitting down with the moksos,—who did not at all like the idea of stopping—awaited developments. After sitting expectantly for about an hour they heard a faint noise in the distance, and soon three of the Chinboks, with their red cock's feathers fluttering in their hair, and with their bows and arrows ready in their hands came into view at a slow dog trot and with their eyes on the ground. As he expected on arriving back at their old tracks, they stopped and pointed it out to each other, so as he could not have got a better target he bagged two of them with a right and left. The remaining Chin driving at once into the jungle and tearing down the hill. The two Chins having been hit by copper tubed express bullet died practically instantaneously. T. and the moksos therefore having removed their arms and accoutrements., made the best of their way back to Yawdin, thinking rightly that the Chinboks on arriving at the place where the dead bodies of their companions were lying, would not be in too great a hurry to continue the pursuit, or what was more probable would give it up altogether for fear of running into another ambuscade. He heard afterwards that they had quite intended killing him if they had caught him, and had been rather amused at having been so successfully hoist with their own petard.

There are one or two things further that I wish to say. One is that the novice would probably be saved many disappointments if he eschewed the pursuit of the herd and confined himself to tracking solitaries or pairs. It often happens that one can gain the vicinity of a herd unperceived, and can have time to spy round and look for the bull, but more often a succession of loud snorts and crashing bushes will denote the departure of the herd, some sharp eyed or sharp nosed young cow having given the alarm. There is more chance of bagging ones bull, if they are solitary or in pairs, but even so the greatest care and caution are still necessary to ensure a successful culmination to one's efforts. With the exception of elephant, I have been able to bring all big game to bag, with an ordinary ·500 express rifle. True, one will not stop a charging gaur with it, but then one can generally find a tree to dodge behind, and a steel tipped bullet properly placed will kill one's bull at once. I am not myself in favour of the modern H. V. express rifle. In my opinion it is far too powerful, and shikar nowadays seems to be getting a very one-sided affair, and odds on the man behind the gun are increasing, so that soon no animal will have a sporting chance of having a fight for the life that is torn from him, or be able to make any attempt to revenge himself upon his slayer. This state of affairs may suit some people, but not your true sportsman.

Fishing.

FISHING IN THE MISSISSIPPI DELTA.

CATCHING fifty black bass in a single day with rod and reel and artificial minnow may sound like a fairy story, or even worse, like the confession of a glutton, but catches of this size have been made more than once at various of the outing clubs that dot the great flat area of the Delta in Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Western Tennessee. This number is the limit set by the clubs, a limit too large, and yet a limit which each member tries to catch at least once that he may tell of it to incredulous friends of a winter's evening, over the oaken table of some city club. With a congenial friend, I spent a day, during the last season, at a certain hunting and fishing club in Eastern Arkansas, in pursuit of black bass and crappies, both of which abound in its waters. We were out on the lakes, at dawn, each of us in a flat-bottomed, pointed bateau, with a brawny negro as paddler and guide and ice-boxes large enough to hold whatever might fall to our luck during the day's fishing.

This club has preserves of some six thousand acres, in which are seven lakes, most of them connected by bayous, thus making it possible to reach any portion of the preserve by boat, without the necessity of a portage.

Scarcely had we left the dock at the club house, before I had my rod and reel rigged up and a big green wooden minnow attached to my line, but the fishing did not begin until the boat had entered the zone of floating moss across the big lake. Here it was that the paddler advised me I might expect a strike, and his judgment was fully justified. The centre of the big lake was clear of moss and the water was white and silvery in the uncertain light of the dawn. A thin, white mist lay upon the face of the water, a sign which the paddler said was auspicious. A gentle breeze raised tiny waves that lapped softly against the flat sides of the boat, making a soothing sound, pleasant to hear. About the edges of the lake, where there were dead willows, the moss was profuse, here and there open patches of water glistening amid the broad expanse of bright green moss. Stealthily the paddler propelled the boat through the moss until its prow protruded over the open water, a pocket some fifty yards long and thirty yards wide, a pool black and deep and clear of vegetation.

"You ought to git 'em in dar, Boss," the paddler commented, when the boat had come to rest. I cast my minnow clear to the farther end of the open water, allowing it to settle gently. Rapidly I reeled it in, every motion of it being perfectly perceptible in the crystal-clear water. Half the distance it had travelled, when there was a surge of water, a flash of green and white and gold, and the minnow shot upward out of the water, a big bass following it. I knew that I had hooked him regardless of the taut line and electrical thrills that travelled down it to my hands upon the rod. Away he went for the heavy moss which bordered the pool where, had he reached it, he would have disengaged the minnow and escaped. There was no need to jerk to hang him; he had done that on his own account with the vicious blow when he struck the minnow, but there was need of close attention and skill to land him and I stood up from my seat, determined to supply both.

Slowly and gently I checked his headway, until the line ceased to run out and I could feel the pull of him as plainly as if I had held the end of the line in my hand. Thus brought to bay, he leaped clear of the water, shaking himself like a wet dog, while I dipped the end of my rod and gave him a few feet of line. Then we fought it out inch by inch, until his lunges became less powerful and the line began to come in slowly but surely, and I knew that the fight was almost won. But he was a game fellow and did not submit without a final struggle. Within ten feet of the boat, he assumed new and unexpected life and again he leaped clear of the water. Nevertheless, he was swung around to the rear end of the boat, where the negro waited for him, with dip net poised, and shortly thereafter he was cooling his sides in the security of the ice-box.

I have never experienced better fishing than I enjoyed that morning. Out of the pool where the first one struck, I landed six, and before the big bell at the clubhouse rang out its cheery call for breakfast, fourteen fine bass were resting in the big ice-box amidships.

The entire lower Mississippi valley country is excellent fishing country. Every stream and lake abounds in game fishes that might be caught at any season of the year. In fact, there is not a month of the year when bass cannot be taken with some sort of bait, but there are good reasons for leaving the bass alone at spawning time. The better fishing is found in the clear lakes protected by the levees, into which the murky waters of the Mississippi never enter except in the case of a break in the protecting line of embankments which comprise the mighty levee systems. The inland streams, that is, those which are tributaries of the Mississippi River and tributaries of its tributaries, are also excellent fishing places, there being little preference in them, all being good. The land-locked lakes afford excellent fishing at all times as the heaviest rains will not cloud their waters, but in the streams the fishing is destroyed for a time by every overflow or freshet. In these Southern waters the bass spawn as early as April, according to the earliness of the spring season, and it is in the summer months, June, July and August, when they have recovered from the spawning period, that the fishing for them is at its height. During the spawning season many of them are caught by negroes and unethical fishermen, with live minnows, but at this season they will not respond to the fly, artificial minnow or troll, unless it be drawn immediately over a nesting place. Unfortunately, good fish laws do not prevail in the South as yet.

During the summer months, the bass strike readily at the fly, troll, or any of the hundred and one kinds of artificial minnows of wood, rubber and aluminium. They are rather fastidious, however, and the fisherman who seeks them most successfully has a tackle box stocked with many different kinds of lures. One day they will take a certain kind of bait readily, the next day scorning it completely. In the early fishing they will frequently bite best at a floating bait of aluminium, a bait called a minnow, but to which it bears only slight resemblance. This bait is drawn rapidly along the surface, and many large catches are recorded with it. In the summer fishing they take flies readily, showing a preference for browns, grays, blacks, yellows and reds. The hooks should not be too large, Nos. 4 to 6 being ample for the biggest bass. The best rod is a split bamboo, although many fishermen prefer them of ash or lancewood, of about seven ounces weight and about ten and a half feet in length, with most of the bend in the upper two-thirds. A single action small, click reel, and enamelled silk line, preferably tapered twenty to twenty-five yards, and a six-foot leader, well complete the outfit. This outfit is equally as good for the various kinds of perches and the crappies of which, with it, the fisherman will in a day's time catch many more than of bass.

In the bait-casting, which is the most successful way to catch bass in these waters, a stiff steel rod, five to six feet in length, fitted with first guide and top of a gate, the others trumpets or large rings, weight about eight and one-half ounces, will, in the writer's opinion, be found most satisfactory. In the matter of reels for bait-casting there is wide difference of opinion. Personally, I use an automatic reel exclusively, and I take some pride in the fact that it is more or less a matter of personal discovery. When I bought it I was most vehemently assured by the sporting goods man that it could not be used for casting. I thought differently and bought it despite his protest. It has worked to my entire satisfaction. The use of the automatic reel will require a double grip hand hold and this adds a little to the weight of the rod. This is not of the consequence in bait-casting that is in fly fishing. In the former, the entire arm catches the strain, while in the latter the stress is on the wrist, and every fraction of an ounce counts.

Of multiplying reels there is no end. Any good reel will serve, but it is economy to buy a really good one. A cheap one will give more trouble than it is worth. German silver is the most serviceable material, although some prefer hard rubber and metal combined. Of the matter of baits to use, a treatise as great as the latest federal census might be written. Bass will bite at 'most anything, worms, live or dead minnows, strips cut from the side of a perch or even one of their own kind, crawfish, insects and particles of fresh meat. Crawfish and live minnows are the most attractive for still-fishing. For casting, a wooden minnow, with a treble hook at the tail and a set of treble hooks at either side of the body, is a sure killer. The larger minnows, with two sets of treble hooks to the side, are also successfully used. My experience has been that the smaller minnow is better; fewer strikes are lost with it. The caster's tackle box should be supplied with at least six to ten minnows, two solid white, or white bellies and drab or gray backs; two with green mottled backs and white bellies; two with red predominating and two in which yellow or yellowish red is the chief colour. If others are added, the aluminium coloured ones might be included. It is a good idea to have two of each kind of minnow so that if the bass strike best at one certain kind, the loss of it will not necessitate the employment of a different variety which may not prove so attractive.

In the lake fishing it is essential to locate the section where the bass are congregated. This may sound anomalous; nevertheless it is a good rule to follow. In fishing at the clubs the paddlers will take you directly to the portion of the lakes where the bass are striking best. One day it will be at a certain place, the next day, without apparent reason, it is quite a different portion. I have started out fishing in the morning and tried faithfully at one portion of the lake, where large catches had been made the day before, and never a strike would I get. Then I would start on a voyage of discovery and, by trying out every likely looking spot, I finally hit upon the right one and my reward would be great. I have set out at times, when the report was that the fish were not striking, and returned at nightfall with ice-box overflowing. It is useless to fish where the fish are not. This is self-evident enough. During the season, in the lakes and rivers where they abound, they will always strike if only they are located. Half a dozen casts without success in any one spot will tell the tale. Move on to some other place, whipping out the water ahead and on either side of the boat and, finally, there will be a surge of water and a tug at your line, your pulse will begin to thump and, if you play your part well, there will be one more fish in the ice-box. One almost always means more. Try them again, and if after a dozen or more casts there is no response, move on.

I have fished from one end of a thousand-acre lake to the other without getting a strike and without being in the least discouraged. Back the other side I would start, and before it had been traversed I had found them, and there I remained until the daylight faded or my catch was sufficient.

In the fall fishing, late September, October and in November and December, a spoon troll is the proper bait. At this season the bass are deep down in the clear water, generally near the centre of the lake or where some bayou puts into it. The troll should be dragged slowly and allowed to run at least four to six feet below the surface. A wooden minnow, used in this way, also may prove a successful lure.

Bait-casting has made anglers of a great many men who never had the patience to fish in the old way. For even here we are getting to be a nervous people, it seems. Offer us a box of the very finest of angle worms or a minnow bucket full of the liveliest of "shiners," and a bang-up still-fishing outfit, and it is odds even the laziest of us would offer a good excuse for not going. But we will slam away all day with a casting outfit and have good fun, whether the fish are rising or not. I think I may be pardoned for saying it is not all of bait-casting to catch fish.

To return to my own methods, and particularly to my use of the automatic reel, I do not expect bait-casters to fall over each other getting to their tackle shops to buy reels like mine; so I shall not describe it nor tell just how I use it. I happen to be the exception who thought he could work a bait-casting outfit along original lines. I succeeded, not so much because my theory was a good one, as for the reason that I wanted to succeed. When a stranger sees me sawing my line out and in my funny two-handed way he is apt to do a good deal of wondering. One man spent an hour trying to convince me I was a fool, but I refused to admit it and still stick to my automatic. I get a lot of satisfaction out of being able to haw-haw in real earnest when I see some acquaintance get a back-lash, something the automatic reel is never guilty of. I know a man who has a regular method for unravelling a snarled line caused by a back-lash. He explained it to me one day, and when, after he was all through, I told him my reel never back-lashed, he became angry and would not allow me to explain why. Another, a disgruntled visitor from the West, said—"Huh! So that's how you catch fifty bass a day. I thought you used dynamite."

"Now you're getting facetious," I answered.

"Not at all, not at all. They do it some places, you know."

"But they don't get as many fish, said my guide.—W. J. B. in Recreation.

THE NEW STEVENS ·22 REPEATER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—It is quite a new departure for the Stevens' Company to manufacture a repeater, and moreover their new weapon possesses certain features which make it rather different from all the other ·22's on the market. There is a large screw underneath, in front of and in line with the trigger guard, which holds stock and barrel together. This screw has a loop to allow of its being readily manipulated by the finger and thumb, the arrangement being similar to that in the well-known, ·22 Stevens' "Favourite." The breech mechanism is of the bolt type, and is worked by a sliding fore-end, like that of the Winchester ·22 repeater. The tube on which the fore-end slides, is the magazine, and holds twelve cartridges.

There is a new Lyman backsight which has been lately brought out, especially for small bolt action rifles, and this is well suited to the Stevens' repeater. Of course with a Lyman backsight, one would naturally use the excellent combination foresight, made by the same firm: this anyone can put into the foresight groove for himself. The Stevens' Company are also making a repeater on similar lines for their excellent ·25 rim-fire cartridge. This ammunition is not very well-known in India; it is a good deal more expensive than the ·22 Long Rifle R. F., but on the other hand is decidedly more powerful, and possesses phenomenal accuracy. Its stopping qualities make it thoroughly well suited for rabbit shooting, whereas the ·22 R. F. has not been found satisfactory for this work; rabbits not hit in exactly the right place frequently getting away to die miserably in their burrows.

It is scarcely necessary to add that the new Stevens' repeaters display most satisfactory accuracy, and that the repeating mechanism works very smoothly.

THE TURF.

KEMPTON.

IT was only meet and fitting that His Majesty should have had some amends made for the wretched weather that spoilt his long Chester trip for Sovereign and subjects, and at Kempton, on Saturday, the 15th instant, he enjoyed a perfect spring day. The road brigade was a strong one, as testified by the ranks of motors, four-in-hands, and carriages of every description on the far side of the course. In Tattersall's locomotion was a matter of difficulty, and the further enclosures were packed. The big elms in the paddock drew strongly-marked shadows in the brilliant sunshine, the grass was dry underfoot, the going improving, and though the Jubilee this year brought out no horse of transcendent merit, it attracted the usual concourse from Town, if awakening but perfunctory interest in the way of ante-post speculation, and, like the Chester Cup, it has ceased to be matter for business at the clubs and abroad weeks beforehand, as in the good old days, when fortunes were lost and won. Details.—

NEWMARKET.

Under such perfect conditions as prevailed on the 19th instant, it was difficult to believe that this same Newmarket lay under a Siberian mantle of snow four short weeks ago. Summer came with an impetuous rush, none the less welcome from its suddenness, and everyone hopes that it will continue. The seasoned army of Turfites bore down on Newmarket in pretty strong force, the attendance being a good one for the opening day, and many prominent patrons of the national sport were present to greet the King, who, attended by Colonel Legge, arrived before the first race. The going had absolutely become hard on top, but the chalk crumbles easily, and after the recent heavy going at Chester and Kempton Park, it was perhaps a treat to the horses to hear their hoops rattle. 'Twas a glorious day, with just sufficiently strong fields without overcrowding to keep the ball merrily rolling. Details :—

ROWING.

THE LOWE DOUBLE SCULLS.—The final for the Lowe Double Sculls, at Cambridge, was rowed over the Colquhoun course on Saturday, the 16th instant, Jesus College winning after a really hard race by 35 yards and in very creditable time under the circumstances. It was Hawdon's second victory in the event, that sculler having won with B. M. Arnold twelve months ago, when they beat the two Fairbairns. The winners of the Light Pairs, E. W. Powell and E. G. Williams, did not compete owing to the former's exams. Result:—

(Station 2) G. E. Fairbairn (11-13) and N. E. Hawdon (11-10), Jesus ... 1

(Station 1) J. C. Warrington (11-6) and O. A. Carver (12-6), First Trinity ... 2

A great struggle was witnessed for the lead at the start, the First Trinity men holding their opponents longer than was anticipated; in fact, the Jesus men were only just ahead when the Little Ditch was reached. The leaders got into slight difficulties round First Post Corner, and lost perhaps half a length, but gained it again round Grassy, when the Jesus men did not steer overwell. Fairbairn and Hawdon were about a length to the good at the Red Grind, and they added another length negotiating Ditton Corner. For a bit the Trinity representatives held their own, but better combination told, and they were beaten by 35 yards. Time—8 mins. 10 secs.

Mr. L. H. K. Bushe Box officiated as umpire, the winners were steered by F. G. Hudson, and the losers by Frank Jackson.

In order to encourage more crews to enter the Lady Margaret Boat Club, who govern the event, propose allowing members of different clubs to complete.

TENNIS.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—match between Jay Gould, junior, and Eustace Miles at Queen's Club on Saturday, the 16th instant, for the amateur tennis championship, provided one of the biggest disappointments ever known. It is too little to say that Miles had an off-day: what would be too much to say of his game would tax the imagination of an Edgar Allen Poe. Bar in the third set, when Gould easied and had a rest, Miles never showed an atom of his true form. Gould set a pace Miles could never look at, and won as he pleased. But if Miles played worse than he has done for years—no one can help an off-day, after all—Gould played better than he has ever done, in this country, at any rate. His service was appalling, his length was pretty near perfection, and every stroke he made was tremendously heavily cut, and the way he killed the sitters was a caution to rabbits. Also, he was very quick on his feet, and quickness is not always a very noticeable feature of his game. The score (6—2, 6—0, 1—6, 6—1) hits off the match fairly well.

Miles was 40—15 in the first game, but lost it. Gould won the next three anyhow, making it 4—0; Miles made it 2—4, and then Gould won the set 6—2. Gould's service was terrible.

The next set took just ten minutes. Gould kept the service side nearly all the time, and as Miles couldn't find the dedans to save his life, romped home as he liked. Miles kept to the service side in the third set, and, playing quite well, won 6—1. Why Gould did not try in this set it was rather difficult to see. Perhaps C. H. Wild's explanation is right: "He was too bored, I should think." Miles appeared to have a chance at the end of the set, but as soon as Gould started again it was all over. One cannot uphold Gould's tactics in throwing away a set, because dropping your game at tennis, even for a dozen shots, is the cardinal sin. Gould had his man so tame, however, that this time it did not matter. In the third set Miles served almost decently; of the rest of his service it were kinder to say no more.

ATHLETICS.

THE STADIUM SPORTS.—Those whom duty or pleasure attracted to the great Stadium at Shepherd's Bush on Saturday, the 16th instant, noted with the greatest satisfaction the many improvements which had been effected in the general arrangements in and around the arena since the luckless opening day of the Franco-British Exhibition on Thursday last.

To the Queen's Park Harriers fell the honour of holding the first Saturday open meeting, and it must be said that the club provided a very interesting athletic and cycling programme, pleasantly diversified as it was, and including amateur wrestling championships and a very graceful display of Swedish diving by the Finland champion, Miss Ebba Gisco.

The tit-bit of the programme was the mile interteam race, in which seven well-known clubs competed. The victors were the Herne Hill Harriers, led by that fine runner, J. E. Deakin, whose time was 4mins. 34secs. There was a dead-heat for second place, between the Essex Beagles and the Poly. Harriers, who will "run it off" during this week. The Herne Hill men furnished the winners of the two miles walk and the 300 yards handicap in the persons of L. Newson (460 yards) and W. Apps (21 yards) respectively. The sprint went to W. C. Wells, of the Highgate Harriers (9¼ yards) in 10 2/5secs., and the 880 yards handicap to C. R. Faussett, Finchley H. (42 yards), in 1min. 56secs.

A field of forty-two turned out for the mile, which was eventually won by H. Coates, of the Highgate Harriers (120 yards start), by two yards, after a splendid race. L. Moy, of the Polytechnic, secured first in the quarter-mile cycle handicap, and second in the half, the latter being won by F. G. Hamlin, of the Putney.

In the heavyweight wrestling championship of the A.W.A. (catch-as-catch-can style) E. Barrett, of the City of London Police A.C., beat E. Nixson, Hammersmith A.W.C., by two falls to nil; the featherweight championship (Cumberland and Westmorland style) was won by F. L. Newman, London A.W.C., who defeated W. F. Jones, Olympic A.W.C., by three falls to two.

GOLF.

THE IRISH PROFESSIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.—On Friday, the 15th instant, on the Portmarnock club's course near Dublin, the tournament for the professional championship of Ireland was won for the second year in succession by James Edmundson, a native of Portrush, who in the final heat of 36 holes beat B. Snowball, a Bradford man now resident at Portmarnock, by 5 holes up and 3 to play. Edmundson, who is only 22 years of age, came right to the front last year, when in the match-play stages of the £240 tournament he beat S. Whiting and Alexander Hird. He showed steady form yesterday, and finished the match on the fifteenth green, thus securing the gold medal given by the Hon. Mr. Justice Barton and the money prize of £10.

BOXING.

BURNS AND JOHNSON.—These men may meet in Nevada now that a purse has been found of sufficient size to make it worth while for Burns to fight. I write "may," for there is so much gas and such an interminable flow of printers' ink connected with latter-day boxing. One can never be sure of things till the men are almost in the ring. A Mr. J. Curley of America has offered a purse of £7,000 for a contest between the two pugilists to take place in Goldfield, Nevada, on 1st September. It is said that Burns has agreed, but there is at the moment of writing a rumour that Johnson is somehow not quite satisfied. Burns—who seems to have as good an eye for the mainchance as for his opponents' left—has remarked to a Sporting Life man:—"You certainly can't blame me for not accepting the £2,500, £3,000, and £3,500 offers. I knew that I could get a £7,000 purse. I also got an offer from James Coffroth, of San Francisco, for a £6,000 purse, but would not accept that. That would not give Johnson anything. At Nevada they are giving me £6,000 and £1,000 for Johnson. This is twice as much as Johnson has ever got."

A £7,000 purse must be the largest sum ever put up for a boxing contest. In the western States of America, however, money is easily earned and lightly spent, and if, as Mr. Curley fondly imagines, the gate receipts will amount to £20,000, he can well afford to give a third of that sum to the boxers.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 30th May.—Beadnell's at 7 P.M. Moving off, the Beadnell's Shola was first drawn in which hounds spoke to a doubtful line, then on to Hearty and Hamlet, near the latter hounds hit off a line and carried it past Brocken into Warwick Shola, where the jack doubled back, the Master making a wide cast from below and throwing them back into the covert he came away at the top and ran through the wire fence into Beadnell's Tea Estate where he was left. We then drew on by Maikod Mund and Kerada Mund to Kengoda Hill in a small shola, a brace of cubs jumped up and promptly went to ground. Moving along the ridge above Toda Coffee Shop Shola hounds picked up a line and carried it left-handed through Paragon Shola and back to the earth at the bottom of Kengoda Hill Shola and out at the far side and brought it away over the rocks into the Dunsandle Tea Estate. They hunted him through the tea and forced him out by the Badanakod Mund and on into Warwick from which he went away right-handed above Paragon Shola into Toda Coffee Shop Shola, out at the bottom and along by Booster's Shola into Ampthill Wood and down the ghauts where he managed to evade hounds. Amongst those who were out I saw:—H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley, Mr. and the Misses Lawley, Captains Duff, Torrie and Vesey, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell, Major Younghusband, Captain Elwes, Major Douglas, again and Miss Dauger, Major Norie, Mr. Braithwait, Mr. Cresswell, Colonel Desaraj Urs, Mrs. and Miss Forsyth, Captain G[illegible], Mr. Stuart Fraser, Mr. and Miss Harrison and Miss Jesso[illegible], Miss Stickney, Mr. Stocker, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. Henderson, Mr. Irwin, Mr. Mitchell, Captain Lambton, Colonel Lawless, Mr. Hope Johnstone, Major Napier, Sir Wilfred Peek, Mr. F. J. Wilson, Miss Rolfe, Mr. Packenham-Walsh and the Minor Zemindars.

Monday, 1st June.—The Umbrella Tree 7 A.M. It was a most interesting and picturesque meet, never did the plains of Mysore look more beautiful than at this early hour of the morning. This historic tree grows on the edge of the Sigur Ghauts, whose rocky slopes and thick undergrowth, are a terror to Master and Whips, but a perfect refuge for Master Jack, where he can always run hounds out of scent and make good his escape.

Moving off across the Connemara Road to Hanging Shola in which hounds at once found, they rattled him through the covert; finding his usual line of retrest to the ghaut cut off he broke covert at the top of the hill; he swept down the hill side and turned up the bog below Brooklands and headed for Aramby, but turning short to the right he crossed the Sigur Road, he raced up the hill and swung down past Lascelles over the Golf Links to the Municipal Stream, along the bank to Double Crossing; here he turned up to the right on to the New Pykara Road which he ran for a few hundred yards then turned up the hill and setting his mask for the ghaut he led hounds very smartly over the Demon Valley and up the side of Rockey, along the ridge to a point short of Toda Cathedral, he turned left handed and dived down the ghaut where they failed to do anything. It was a most enjoyable gallop of over 40 minutes. Brooklands was next drawn with no result. We moved on across the Municipal Stream and along the downs to Mills and New Covert; in the latter hounds found a brace of cubs and soon finished them off. The sun being very hot and all the dew gone there was practically no scent, hounds were taken home. The following were at the meet:—T. E. Sir Arthur Lawley and Lady Lawley, Mr. R. E. Lawley, the Misses Lawley, Captain Duff, Captain Torrie, Mrs. Harding, Captain Vesey, Mr. Cresswell, Miss Carmichael, Miss Romilly, Miss Forsyth, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. Henderson, Captain Vaughan Edwards, Mr. H. Irwin, Major Johnston, Miss Jesson, Colonel and Mrs. Gordon Price, Mr. Colin Mackenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, Captain Gill, Miss Morgan, Miss Rolfe, Mr. Score Smyth, Mr. Stocker, Mr. Thornton, Captain Willis, Mr. and Mrs. Porteous, Mrs. Ismay, and the Minor Zemindars.

Tuesday, 2nd June.—Andy Plantation at 7 A.M. Some little while before we arrived at the meet, a jack was seen entering Governor's Shola: the Master lost no time in throwing his hounds into the covert at this point, but they failed to own to the line. Rain is badly wanted, the whole country is drying up and were it not for the heavy dew at night there would be no scent at all. Drawing down the Parsons' Valley and turning up to the Krurmund Path and down the Yemmakal Valley hounds feathered on a line. Just then a jack was viewed moving off to the left down to the Stream, short of which he turned left handed and passing just below Irwin's Clump from whence he swooped straight up the Yemmakal Valley up over the Savordedu Ridge and went to ground in a ravine where hounds killed him. He had led hounds a merry chase and a fast one: the pack was close up to him most of the way. The Master then drew up the Yemmakal Valley to Briar: the grass was perfectly dry and scent nil so hounds were taken back to kennels. Quite a small field turned up. Amongst those out were H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore and the Uvaraj, Captain Duff, Major Younghusband, Major Douglas, Mr. Phillips, Mrs. Henderson, Mrs. Horne, Major Norie. Mr. De la Hey and the Minor Zemindars, Miss Forsyth, Mr. Hope Johnston, Captain Lambton, Colonel Lawless, Miss Stickney, Mr. Packenham-Walsh, Miss Sturrock, Captain Willis, etc., etc.

THE BERESFORD TOURNAMENT.

KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS vs. VICEROY'S STAFF.—The tournament opened at Simla on 3rd instant with this game. There was a large attendance, including their Excellencies Lord and Lady Minto. The game was fast and well contested throughout. The Viceroy's Staff drew first blood and then the Dragoon Guards scored two goals in quick succession. Level play followed and a goal was registered by each team. This was the extent of the scoring, the Guards thus winning by 3 goals to 2. Teams:—

Umpires:—Colonel de Lisle and Major Lecky.

12TH LANCERS vs. PATIALA STATE.—A hard fought game played on the 4th instant resulting in a win for Patiala by 7 goals to 4.

First Chukker.—Patiala attacked and scored twice, Wormald getting a goal for the Lancers before the period closed.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers got on and equalised and hit another goal shortly after. In this period Fane and Quin collided, both were thrown and the game had to be stopped; they resumed playing, but the effects of the collision began to tell in the closing stages of the game.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers scored once more and then Patiala took up the attack.

Fourth Chukker.—Continuing to press Patiala hit two goals and the score at the end of the chukker was four all.

Fifth Chukker.—Patiala continued on the aggressive and hit two more goals.

Sixth Chukker.—Play was more even in this period, but Patiala managed to score once more, thus winning by 7 goals to 4. Teams:—

17TH LANCERS vs. COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF'S STAFF.—Played on the 4th instant, a very level game resulting in a win for the Staff by 3 goals to 2. The end of the sixth chukker found the score two all so extra time was played during which the Staff scored the winning goal.

First Chukker.—The Staff pressed and Learmouth, who played a fine game throughout, got away and opened the scoring. Mid field play and a run by each team followed.

Second Chukker.—The Staff scored again, Fitzgerald putting through. A free hit to the Staff a little later gained them no advantage.

Third Chukker.—Melville got away and scored and the Lancers pressed for a spell. The Staff got possession and attacked but Carden relieved.

Fourth Chukker.—A well contested and fast period, Melville equalising towards its close.

Fifth Chukker.—More fast and level play. Both goals were visited but there was no score.

Sixth Chukker.—Hot attacks by both teams: still no further score.

Extra Period.—With the score two each, the goals were widened and play resumed. The Staff pressed and a shot went wide. Then the Lancers got on but were deprived of the ball and Fitzgerald getting away scored the winning goal for the Staff. Final score: Staff 3 goals, Lancers 2 goals. Teams:—

SEMI-FINALS.

KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS vs. THE HOPEFULS.—These teams met on the 6th instant, rather an uninteresting game ending in a win for the Dragoon Guards by 4 goals to 3.

First Chukker.—The Hopefuls started off with a big flourish. Jelf scored a goal and they obtained another through Ramsbotham sending between his own flags while endeavouring to save a goal.

Second Chukker.—Midfield play till the Dragoon Guards got away and Clifton Browne scored. Weinholt registered another goal shortly after and the chukker closed with the score two all.

Third Chukker.—The Dragoon Guards attacked and Renton scored a goal and gave them the lead.

Fourth Chukker.—The Hopefuls were kept busy defending till Hambro relieved, but the Dragoons returned to the attack and Weinholt put on another goal.

Fifth Chukker.—A well contested period, no score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Hopefuls pressed and were twice on the point of scoring. A foul against the Dragoons enabled Goldie to score a goal for the Hopefuls from the free hit. They were unable to get on terms, however, and the Dragoon Guards thus won as stated by 4 goals to 3. Teams:—

C.-IN-C'S STAFF vs. PATIALA.—The best game of the tournament was witnessed when these teams met on Saturday last. It was fast and well contested throughout, both teams playing up to their best form. Patiala won by 4 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—A run by Patiala was stopped and the Staff transferred play, Fitzgerald scoring a goal. Level play till Pretum Singh got away and equalised.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play and then Patiala pressed and scored in a mêlée. Even play till the end of the period.

Third Chukker.—Patiala kept the Staff at their own end and eventually added a third goal to their score. Midfield play to the close of the chukker.

Fourth Chukker.—The Staff got on and hit a goal. Fast play in midfield followed and then the Staff pressed again and Patiala were kept busy defending.

Fifth Chukker.—The Staff continued to attack but their efforts were unsuccessful.

Sixth Chukker.—The Staff attacked but Chanda Sing relieved and Patiala taking the ball down hit a goal. Up and down play till the close of the game when the score read: Patiala 4 goals, C.-in-C's Staff 2 goals. Teams:—

Rowing.

OLYMPIC REGATTA.

ENGLAND'S CHANCES.

PUBLIC interest in amateur rowing, which is revived every year by the University Boat Race—and which has been whetted by several important international contests in recent years, such as the Harvard vs. Cambridge match—will be further stimulated by the Olympic Regatta, which takes place at Henley at the end of July.

English rowing, too, is on its trial; the style that has enabled us to beat the foreigner in years gone by has met with several recent reverses, and some of the principal prizes at Henley have left these shores. The Diamonds were the first to go—albeit to a semi-professional; then the Thames Cup, next the Goblets, and finally—alas—the "Grand." We can put up with an occasional defeat at cricket, tennis, golf and other games into which the element of chance enters very largely; but with rowing it is a different matter. It is a sport in which Englishmen have ever been pre-eminent; it requires strength, pluck, and endurance—qualities which we like to think are more developed in the Anglo-Saxon than any other race—and it was a sad day for English sportsmen when we were obliged to lower our colours to a Belgian crew in 1906.

A SPECIAL EFFORT NEEDED.

Rowing men in this country are now thoroughly on their mettle. They realise that a special effort will have to be made if we are to make a creditable showing at the Olympic Regatta.

Every country competing is allowed to send two crews for each event. A strong committee for the selection of representative British crews was formed last year, and every oarsman whose record justifies a trial is being given the opportunity of being tested. With regard to the Eights—the most important event—it is proposed to send two crews, one composed of the pick of the best oarsmen of recent years, and the other an amalgamation of the best men in the Oxford and Cambridge crews of this year. The latter crew cannot, of course, commence practice until the end of the summer term, which will leave them very little time, but the men will all be "fit," and, provided that the styles assimilate, a fairly strong combination should result.

UNIVERSITY CREWS.

A crew composed of old Oxford and Cambridge Blues and two metropolitan oarsmen has been practising at Putney for the past two months, but several changes have been made within the last week, and the final order of rowing has not yet been decided on. Etherington-Smith, an ex-President of the C.U.B.C., is stroking the crew, and it would be impossible to find a better man for the post. He is rowing very well. Escombe is rowing seven, an arrangement which is being much criticised at Putney. Escombe was not "fit" when he rowed for Leander in the crew which was beaten by the Belgians last year, and he looks far from "fit" now. Still, much may be done in the two remaining months for practice.

It is a pity, however, that Dudley Ward cannot be induced to take this responsible post. Sanderson, another Cambridge "Blue," is rowing "six." He is a great acquisition to the crew, and is rowing better than anyone else in the boad at present. Burnell, who was a member of the winning Oxford crews of 1895-6-7-8, is trying to get a little of his weight off at No. 5. He weighs over 14 stone, but his record is a splendid one, and if he can be got "fit" in time he will be a tower of strength.

Guy Nickalls, the best man that ever sat in a boat, is performing at "No. 4." He does not look comfortable yet, and is shooting his slide, but his blade-work is undeniable. Burn, the Cambridge Blue, is rowing "three," and the two bow men have not yet been chosen.

Peter Dewar, an L.R.C. man, has been rowing bow up to the present, but the selection committee are apparently not satisfied with him. Fenning, another L.R.C. man, has been rowing at "three," and, in the opinion of many of the waterside critics, was one of the best men in the boat, but he also was not considered good enough by the selection committee. R. Carr, who helped Oxford to win the boat race in 1896-7-8, has been tried at No. 2, but he has not rowed for nine years, and does not feel he can get fit in the time.

RESPONSE OF OLD "OARS."

The crew are very rough at present, and inclined to be ponderous, yet one cannot but admire the sportsmanship of men, some of whom have not touched an oar for years, who are responding so finely when called on to do battle for the Old Country.

MADRAS.

There are quite a number of really first-class oars who have rowed within the last ten years, and it is unfortunate that so few of them are available. Any of the following would have been thoroughly qualified to row in a representative British eight: H. G. Gobl, W. E. Crum, H. Willis, C. K. Philips, F. W. Warre, G. O. C. Edwards, B. Carr, J. J. de Knoop, J. H. Gibbon, W. Dudley Ward, J. E. Payne, R. H. Nelson, C. W. H. Taylor, W. H. Chapman, H. B. Grylls, B. V. Powell, Johnstone, P. H. Thomas.

Nothing has been settled as yet about representative crews for the Fours, Pairs, and Sculls. For the Pairs it would be difficult to improve on Powell and Johnstone, last year's winners of the Goblets, although Dudley Ward and Taylor or Thomas and Nelson would be equally capable of doing good service if they were available.

It is hoped that F. S. Kelly will be able to scull; in his absence Blackstaffe and Captain Darrell (who has just returned from abroad) would be the most worthy representatives.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

CALCUTTA vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Rangers' ground on the 3rd instant, the visitors winning by 4 goals to 1 after a very poor game. Calcutta pressed at the start and Kingcome scored as the result of a corner: the C.F.C. continued to press and Kingcome registered another point. Then the Rangers rushed down, and after Dods had disposed of a shot by McKay, Richardson ran up and put the ball through. The remaining play in the first half was level. On changing ends Calcutta did all the attacking and their weakness in front of goal prevented them scoring oftener. They put through twice, Sherman getting one goal and the other being scored from a mêlée. Teams:—

CALCUTTA—Goal, Dods; backs, Gahan and Cooper; halves, Ansell, O'Shea and Crawford; forwards, H. Sherman, Binning, Taylor, Kingcome and Oliver.

RANGERS.—Goal, Margrett; backs, Bennett and Postence; halves, Taylor, Cody and Cornish; forwards, McKay, Lyons, Richardson, Minnett and Templeton.

Referee:—Mr. A. B. Rosser.

CUSTOMS vs. DALHOUSIE.—On the Customs ground last Saturday the home team were beaten by a goal to nil by the Dals. The game was well contested throughout, the only goal of the match being scored by Wright in the first half. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Goal, Furtado; backs, Anderson and Goldsmith: halves, Maitland, L. H. Smith and Vaillant; forwards, Bower, Berkley, McCready, L. A. Smith and Vears.

DALHOUSIE.—Goal, Hendries; backs, Storrie and Dunn; halves, Montgomery, Lees and Beadle; forwards, Gibson, Wright, Evans, Dalling and Burnett.

Referee:—Mr. A. B. Rosser.

CALEDONIA vs. RANGERS.—On the Caledonian ground last Saturday the home team beat the Rangers by 3 goals to 1. The first half was evenly contested and the interval arrived with the score one all. The Rangers were the first to score, though McKay and Rosser equalised shortly after. Apcar and Tobin scored a goal each for the Caledonians in the second half and they won as stated. Teams:—

CALEDONIANS.—Goal, Anscombe; backs, J. Stoddart and Chandler; halves, Grout, Wilson and R. Stoddart; forwards, Goodwin, Apcar, Rosser, Tobin and Clegg.

RANGERS.—Goal, Margrett; backs, Bennett and Minnett; halves, Cornish, Cody and Taylor; forwards, Maclean, McKay, Tripp, Richardson and Templeton.

Referee:—Mr. E. S. Behrend.

GORDONS vs. H. L. I.—This match was played at Dum-Dum last Saturday, the Gordons winning by 2 goals to 1 though the H. L. I. had quite as much of the game which was fast and interesting. The exchanges were fairly even during the first half and the score at the interval was 2 to 1 in favour of the Gordons. Foreman and Graham scored for the Fort team and Devlin for the home team. The H. L. I. made great efforts to get on terms during the second half, but their forwards were weak in front of goal and there was no further score. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Goal, Insch; backs, Montgomery and Aitken; halves, Hasper, Graham and Spence; forwards, McDougall, Foreman, McCoy, McNoughton and Galletly.

H. L. I.—Goal, Lees; backs, Tait and Scollins; halves, Campbell, O'Rourke and Sevity; forwards, Collins, McGharril, Devlin, Duncan and Innes.

Referee:—Sergt. Hounsell.

CALCUTTA vs. Y.M.C.A.—Played on the Calcutta ground the home team winning easily by 6 goals to 1. Sherman (3) Kingcome (2) and Foster scored for Calcutta. Wright for the Y.M.C.A. Teams:—

C. F. C.—Goal, Dods; backs, Gahan and Cooper; halves, Crawford, O'Shea, and Macdonald-Smith; forwards, Binning, Forester, H. M. Sherman, Kingcome and Oliver.

Y. M. C. A.—Goal, Bell; backs, Berkley and Reynolds; halves, Vanspall, Gay and Collingwood; forwards, Gillon, Ramsay, Wright, Brown and Wheelock.

Referee:—Mr. G. V. Wade.

CUSTOMS vs. CALEDONIANS.—The return match between these teams was played on the Customs' ground on Tuesday evening, a poor game ending in a win for the home team by a goal to nil. The visitors pressed at the start and forced two corners without further advantage. Then the Customs attacked, but lost chances owing to weak shooting. "Hands" against Wilson gave the Customs a penalty kick from which A. H. Smith scored the only goal of the match. The second half was mainly in favour of the Customs, but there was no further scoring. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Goal, Fertado; backs, Anderson and H. Vears; half-backs, Maitland, L. H. Smith, and Vaillant; forwards, Echlin, Berkley, Bower, McCready and Ogg.

CALEDONIANS.—Goal, Anscombe; backs, J. Stoddart and Chandler; half-backs, R. Stoddart, Wilson, and Grout; forwards, Godwin, Apcar, Brown, Tobin and Clegg.

Referee:—E. H. Behrend.

DIVISION 2.

GORDONS "B" vs. Y. M. C. A.—Played on the Y.M.C.A. ground on Saturday, the Gordons winning by 2 to 1.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. R. G. A.—Played at the Fort on Saturday and resulted in a pointless draw.

MEASURERS vs. Y. M. C. A.—Played on Monday, the Y.M.C.A. winning by 2 goals to nil.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LAST Saturday night's storm has not had much effect on the thermometer which remains in the nineties with the most diabolical persistance, as if to point the finger of defiance at the monsoon authorities, who daily declare that this elusive element has burst. Consequently the past week's football has been as dull as ever, nor has the Gordons' lead been reduced. Calcutta have got clear of the H.L.I. and the points made up to Saturday night show the Gordons ahead with 16 points, Calcutta second with 12 and H.L.I. third with 10.

The best of last Saturday's matches was played at Dum-Dum wither a large number of spectators made their way. Public opinion was decidedly in favour of the H.L.I. who were playing on their own ground and were moreover credited with the strongest determination to beat the Gordons and avenge their defeat in the final half of the League, when they were forced to play on the Fort ground. The large concourse which thronged the Dum-Dum ground was rewarded with a most interesting and strenuous match which the H.L.I. ought to have won but lost through their old, old failing—faulty shooting. The Gordons showed up far superior in front of goal—in fact this is their strong point, viz., ability to shoot whenever there is an opening instead of dallying and playing about as is the custom with so many other forward lines. By twice beating the H.L.I. the Gordons have indisputably proved themselves to be the best team in Calcutta, but this is not saying very much in a season so barren of anything approaching first-class football as the present has so far turned out to be.

Calcutta had a walk-over on their own ground on Saturday. The Y.M.C.A. play too many passengers to be a formidable team. Reynolds, the backbone of the combination, somehow seemed lamentably off colour. Collingwood played a staunch game, whilst Wright at centre forward ran about in the most astonishing fashion but achieved very little. The match requires no description. Calcutta started with ten men and scored three goals before Macdonald Smith came on to take the place of Stuart at right half. The only goal scored against Calcutta was the result of a mistake by V. Cooper, who let fly and miskicked, the ball beating Dods, who was naturally unprepared. Kingcome gave a brilliant exhibition of how not to shoot on several occasions. Altogether the affair was too one-sided to be of interest, although the C.F.C. enclosure was crowed with the usual Saturday afternoon crowd of gaily-attired enthusiasts. It is good to see that the bald spots on the C.F.C. ground are responding to treatment, but the monsoon is still badly needed.

Dalhousie turned the tables on the Customs on Saturday, winning a hard game by 1—0. This is exactly the same beating as the Customs game Dalhousie in the first half of the League, so that the honour of both teams is avenged. As the Customs were playing on their own ground they were reasonably confident of repeating their success, but their luck was out. Caledonia playing on their own ground beat the Rangers by 3 goals to 1 after a spiritless game. This corner of the maidan presented an extremely hazy appearance on Saturday and anyone standing on a packing case at the nor'-east corner of the C. F. C. ground could have witnessed three League matches without shifting from his position.

A canvass of all Regimental Football Teams in India is now being arranged by the Honorary Secretary, I.F.A., with a view to securing entries for the Challenge Shield Tournament in July. The South Staffordshires are said to be anxious to try their hand once more, and an entry from Jubbulpore is not unlikely. The Chief is supposed to have made Calcutta the sporting centre for the Lucknow Division, but the response is certainly not as eager as it might be.

All footballers in Calcutta will sympathize deeply with Mr. D. L. Walker of the Caledonia Club in the sad loss he sustained last Saturday by the sudden death of his wife. A genial and keen enthusiast in all football matters, as well as an untiring worker in the cause of the game, Mr. Walker has made for himself a host of friends in this city whose sincere condolences will be accorded to him in his grief.

To revert to a much-discussed subject it seems possible that the Rangers may after all avert the sentence of expulsion from the First Division of the League which now hangs over them. The Gordons "B" Team will of course come out on top of the Second Division at the end of the season but are not eligible for promotion. It is scarcely likely that the League Committee will promote any team over the heads of the Fort second string so the Rangers may retain their position after all. It would be nothing short of a national calamity for so old a club to be relegated to the obscurity of the Second Division and its many supporters will anxiously pray that such a procedure may not be found necessary.

The League Committee, it is rumoured, have taken refuge behind their own rules in the matter of the Fort football ground. There is nothing in the League rules to prevent matches being played on that ground, and as the Dum-Dum ground and in past seasons the Howrah ground have been recognized venues for League matches, the Committee find themselves powerless to prevent the Fort ground being used for a similar purpose. In the cause of humanity, however, one would have thought they might have come to some agreement with the Gordons whose persistence in playing on this battlefield has not enhanced their popularity.

The following is the League Table corrected up to Saturday last:—

Gordons ...	8	8	0	0	19	4	16
Calcutta ...	8	6	2	0	21	6	12

SIMLA HORSE SHOW.

Monday, 8th June, 1908.

THE annual Horse Show was held at Annandale this afternoon in excellent weather. There was a large gathering, and among those present were H. E. the Viceroy and Lady Minto ; Sir Louis and Lady Dane ; Honble Mr. and Mrs. Miller; Honble Mr. Erle Richards ; General and Lady Duff. The class was good, the polo ponies being of exceptional merit. Lord Minto won five prizes, Colonel de Lisle and Mr. R. B. Wood four each. The excellent arrangements were due to the untiring exertions of Major W. F. Shore, the Honorary Secretary, who is to be congratulated on the success of the Show. The Judges were : Colonel Browne, Colonel de Lisle, Majors Maxwell, Pecocke, Hambro and Lecky, Captains Learmouth and Shore. The officers of the R. A. Jutogh Garrison were "At Home" and Lady Minto distributed the prizes at the close of the proceedings Results :—

CLASS I.—Country-bred ponies 14-3 and under.

Capt. W. F. Shore's b cb g Kingmount ...	...	1
Miss Miller's ch cb m Golden Mohur ...	...	2
Sirdar Jewan Singh's b cb g Ringfaulka ...	...	3

CLASS II.—Hacks, English and Colonial, 14-2 and under.

The Naturalist.

THE LONGEVITY OF TURTLES.

DURING my time I have kept in captivity quite a number of species of turtles and tortoises—the periods of confinement varying all the way from a few hours to that of several years. When cruising among the Bahamas and the Florida Cays, early in the 60's, I sometimes had alive for a few days or so the young of the large marine forms, as the Leather-back, the Loggerhead, and especially the Green Turtle (Chelonia mydas), but I learned comparatively little from such specimens, as my career as a naturalist had hardly more than begun.

Among other turtles and tortoises, both old and young, that I have kept alive during the past forty years or more, have been the Box Tortoise (Cistudo carolina), the Mud Turtle (Kinosternum pennsylvanicum), the Musk Turtle (Aromochelys odoratus) the Snapping Turtle (Chelydra serpentina), four or five species of the better known "Pond turtles;" the Wood Turtle (Chelopus insculptus), two of the Soft-shelled Turtles (A spinifer and ferox), and some of the terrapins—perhaps a dozen or more species in all. And, while I have devoted considerable time to reading about this very interesting group of reptiles, I have been somewhat surprised to find how little naturalists have said in regard to the duration of life in the Chelonia.

To be sure there is a very good reason for this, for it is a well-known fact that among the vertebrata they stand as the most longlived of all its representatives. Everyone who has, in a general way, written about them admits this is but true, so it is not at all surprising we have so little data upon their longevity, of an accurate character. When in all probability many of these reptiles live to be over a century old, and for much longer periods, as we shall presently see, the chances are extremely remote of any family undertaking to make records of such facts, for the record would have to pass from one generation to the next succeeding one, as the ordinary span of life in the individual would not be of sufficient length to follow that of the Chelonian from the time it emerges from the egg to its death. We can do this easily with dogs, cats and canary-birds and the like, but not with turtles.

Moreover, these latter animals are extremely tenacious of life, and we have every reason to believe that, under ordinary conditions, the fact that they were kept in a state of captivity would in no way curtail the length of time they usually live in nature. Then, as I have proved to my satisfaction over and over again, many of the species can go for months without eating a particle of food, and sometimes without water. With respect to the young of the fresh water species found in north-eastern North America, however, my experience goes to show that they will feed, if food be offered to them, at all seasons of the year, and thrive all the better for it; while upon the other hand, I have known the adults of the land, or the amphibious types, as in the case of the Wood Turtle for example, to reject all food entirely during the winter months, and be satisfied with an occasional drink of water, but they lose fat on it, and show no perceptible growth. There are exceptions to this rule, however, for I knew of one specimen of this species that ate meal worms when given to it all winter, and it likewise drank with avidity. Wood Turtles of this species (Chelopus insculptus) undoubtedly live to a very old age, but it is not possible for me to state this in years, nor have I ever met a herpetologist who could furnish me with such information. Still my knowledge of this reptile permits me to throw a little light on the subject of a kind that admits of a fair approximation in the way of a solution.

For several years past I have lived in New York City, and in not a few instances have been furnished with specimens of living animals of various kinds by those who knew of my work in biology. On the 28th of October, 1905 one of the city mail carriers, who looked out for me in this way, brought me a pair of these turtles which he had captured somewhere in the woods on the outskirts. Immediately after they came into my possession I placed them in a big bath-tub filled with water, where in the course of the following hour they mated—a most remarkable courtship from start to finish, and one that I shall certainly have to describe in some other connection, as in the present article vital statistics are more particularly being dwelt with, though I may add in an episodic way, that she rejected the advances of the male next day, while he was successful again on the fourth of the following month. After that she fought him upon all occasions whenever he essayed an approach. This behaviour so angered him, that he, taking advantage of his greater size and strength, tyrannized over her in the most cruel manner imaginable, plodding round after her, and biting her upon every chance he got. He nearly cut off one of her fore-feet,—the right one—in his many attacks, and from all this abuse she died about a year after I had them.

As we know, at the time of hatching these turtles are very small, perhaps not much over an inch in length, and their rate of growth is extremely slow. Now when the female of the pair, here being considered, came into my possession, her plastron had a length of six and a quarter inches, and the carapace a transverse diameter of four and three-quarter inches, measured at its widest part. The latter had at some time in the life of the specimen been cruelly mutilated at its forepart on the left hand side, and subsequently healed The dermal scutes are prominent and strongly marked with respect to their ridges and lines. What interests us most, however, in the present connection, are the letters and figures that some person has cut into the three middle scutes of the carapace. The name "Henry" appears on the anterior one of the series, followed by the initials "H. M."—evidently the same party, and finally the date "'89," That the last is preceded by an apostrophe, indicates that the recorder was a person of care and intelligence, while the date is undoubtedly the correct one, or else a very much earlier year would have been selected, as for example 1776, or 1860, or such like. As it stands, the cutting on this shell was done fifteen years before the death of the specimen, which latter was due to injury. These letters and figures show no distortion whatever due to the growth of the specimen, and consequently the carapace was probably about the same size as it was before they were cut in or fifteen years before she came to her untimely death. From the mutilation we can learn, but little; it is apparent that it was nearly detached at the time it occurred, and in healing protruded some distance beyond the normal boundary of the shell. By counting the marginal scutes it will be seen that nothing was lost, and the semi-isolated piece is well nourished.

A better insight can be gained, I think, into the probable age attained by this turtle by comparing the female of this pair with the male, that is when taken in connection with what has already been pointed out. When they obtain their full growth, for all that I now know to the contrary, they come to be about the same size, and it is to be observed here that the male is considerably larger than the female, —the extreme length of his plastron being six and three-quarter inches, and the carapace, at its widest part, five and three-eight inches. The ridges and lines on the latter, so well marked in the female, are here much worn down, leading me to believe, that the specimen is not only full size, but that he has lived many years since having attained to it.

Taking all this evidence and ascertained dates into consideration, I am inclined to the opinion that this female specimen was in the neighbourhood of fifty years of age at the time of her death, and that the male, still a captive of mine, must be fully seventy years old at this writing (March 1907), or even perhaps several years more than that age. Indeed, were the truth really known, it would not surprise me to be told that he was nearer eighty years old. Often I have kept the young of the Snapping Turtle (Chelydra serpentina) for two or three years at a time, and have noted that in the case of this species the rate of growth is extremely slow, though it varies somewhat in different individuals. Specimens of this species often attain a length of two feet or over, and they are probably fully thirty years old before they become adult, and they may be considerably more than double that age before death, or even live to be a century old, for aught we know to the contrary.

In describing the common Box Tortoise (Cistudo carolina). M. Raymond L. Ditmars says in his work on "The Reptiles of the Vicinity of New York City," that the "Box Tortoise lives to great age, as is shown by the fact that specimens have been found upon the shells of which were names and dates that had been carved there sixty or seventy years before. Such tortoises were found near the fields in which they lived when marked, hence the probability is that the animal is not a great traveller.

The late Professor Packhard says in his "Zoology" that "The land tortoises are longlived, and often reach a great age," and further that "It is probable that turtles do not lay eggs until eleven to thirteen years of age."

When living in New Orleans early in the 80's I knew a druggist who had kept a medium-sized Soft-shelled Turtle in a small aquarium for over ten years, during which time it had grown but very little in size and had kept perfectly healthy. To the best of my recollection this was a specimen of Aspidonectes ferox, and with its head and tail drawn in measured about four inches in length. I have had both species of this genus alive, and believe they form no exception to other Chelonians in living to a very considerable age. This may be calculated sometimes by a study of their skeletons, which is interesting. Some of the characters of this are seen in the specimen of a young Aspidonectes spinifer one that I had alive for some time, it having been kindly presented to me by Mr. O. Eggling of 125th Street, New York City.

On consulting the "Royal Natural History" (London, Vol. V. p. 49), a work edited by Professor Richard Lydekker of the British Museum, I find nothing in regard to the age of pond turtles, terrapins or the batagurs; while of turtles generally he remarks that "These reptiles will live to an enormous age, which, in some instances at least, may be reckoned by centuries." He also says the Grecian Tortoise, a common form in some parts of Southern Europe, has been known to live for a great number of years in captivity.

Reference is also made to the longevity of Chelonians in the excellent article "Tortoise," by Dr. A. C. Gunther in the 9th Edition of the British Encyclopaedia, (Vol. XXIII. p. 456.), and again in a fine illustrated article in Pearson's Magazine by Marcus Tindal. This latter particularly describes the huge and extraordinary Giant or Elephant Tortoises, a great number of specimens of which were brought to England by the Honorable Sir Walter Rothschild. These are figured in the Pearson's Magazine, and also in The Living Animals of the World. (London, Vol. II. p. 553.), where W. Saville-Kent says of them that "Pre-eminent among this typical terrestrial series come the huge Giant or Elephant Tortoises, formerly abundant, as their fossil remains indicate, in Southern Europe, India, and North and South America, and now represented only in the isolated oceanic islands of Aldabra, off Madagascar, the Leychelles, and the Galapagos groups." And, after giving us a brief, but interesting account of these ponderous creatures, which sometimes numbered as many as 5,000 in a flock, this eminent writer adds. "The age to which these giant tortoises obtain is altogether phenomenal. One example at Port Louis, Mauritius, originally brought from the Leychelles, is definitely known to have lived for over 150 years from the date of its transportation. It is stated to have been of large size when imported; and as these animals are notoriously slow growers, another couple of centuries may be safely added to its life-span."

Had this tortoise lived up to the present day (1908) and been 350 years old, which is perfectly possible, the day of its hatching out would have corresponded with what was happening in different parts of the world in the year 1557, —which in this country would have been only 65 years after the landing of Columbus. Yet notwithstanding this wonderful duration of life in the Giant Tortoise, it probably is quite insignificant when compared with other gigantic representatives of the order that lived during early geologic time, on our planet. One of these monsters, known to us now only through its fossil remains, measured no less than twelve feet in length, and gauging its longevity by that of the existing giant tortoises of the Galapagos Islands, one of them might easily have lived to have been at least 700 years old, or for a period extending from about the time the Magna Charta was wrested from King John of England to the building of the subway in New York City—which would have been quite a long time for an animal to live.—R. W. S. in Western Field.

STRAY NOTES.

IT is a peculiar fact of Nature that climbing, tree-pecking birds have voices of the same character, and loud for their size, from the "yaffel's" ringing notes that echo across the park to the quick, "whiffling" song of the nuthatch, which makes those who do not know the little ventriloquist scan the wrong tree tops for some singer twice its size.

The gorilla Consul, one of the most interesting inhabitants of the arena at Earl's Court, is to be provided with a "flat," like a human being.

His residence will consist of a bedroom, dining room, and bath-room, all of which will be appropriately furnished. There will be carpets on the floor and pictures on the walls, and the bedroom suit is to be of ivory white. Consul will make his own bed and dust and sweep the rooms.

Under the tuition of Mr. Bostock the famous gorilla is learning how to write.

A great deal of fuss has been made about the wonderful heroism of four homoopathic doctors who went to the New York Zoo to obtain a supply of venom from a viper, in order to cure an insane millionaire. When we read of their methods of procedure, we are tempted to tell these physicians to heal themselves, for surely it was an insane thing to take the reptile by the neck and force it to pour out poison into a glass at the risk of a terrible death. Why the doctors could not have padded their hands and bodies so as to make it impossible for them to be bitten does not appear. This would have been perfectly easy and simple, but the element of danger would have been absent, and therefore also the element of advertisement. However, perhaps the incident never happened at all.

A curious bird, said to be the first of its kind to reach Europe, is on its way to the Zoological Gardens.

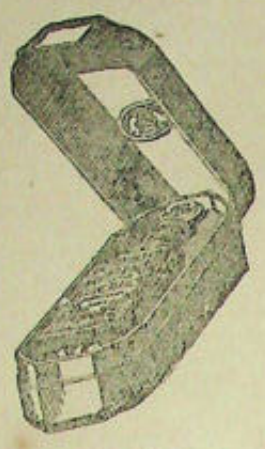
Major Plumpton Green, who has brought it from West Africa, together with other rare birds, arrived at Plymouth recently on the West Africa liner Falaba, from Sekondi.

The bird is of the size of a small vulture, and stated to be of an entirely new species. It was caught in the bush.

The colouring of the feathers is most gorgeous, the bird being the possessor of a showy black and blue top-knot, peacock blue back, brown tail, yellow breast, and brown feathers on the legs.

Major Green has had it six months, and feeds it by hand on bananas and oranges.

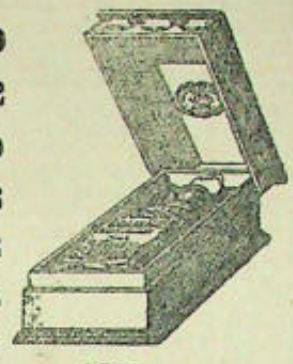
No habit of any wild creature exists without cause, and when we know the governing factors of the situation we generally find that birds and mammals, insects and fish—even plants—do exactly what our human reason would suggest in similar circumstances, writes Mr. E. Kay Robinson. The thrush has to deal with a very slippery creature encased in a shell—messy and rather prolonged operation—without being caught by its natural enemies while thus engaged. Now, the natural enemies of the thrush are hawks, which might pounce upon it in the open, or stoats, &c., which might seize it in the hedge or thicket. If the thrush, through fear of the hawk retired into the hedge with the snail, the persistent noise of hammering would surely attract the stoat. If to avoid the stoat the thrush located its breakfast-table away in the open, every distant hawk would see it while engaged in preparing its meal. So the thrush selects a stone about five feet from shelter—just far enough for it to evade the rush of the hidden stoat, and just near enough for it to dash into cover from the shadow of the swooping hawk.



But—human reason might interpose—why does not the thrush fly into a tree with the snail, which it could hammer upon a branch in equal safety from hawk and stoat? No one who has watched the hammering operation will hesitate for an answer to this question. A snail is a very difficult thing for a thrush to hold with its thin bill. It seizes it by the mouth of the shell and—whack!—the shell breaks, and the snail flies off at a tangent. The thrush recovers it, and holding any firm corner of the shell whacks again; again the snail flies off, and so on. If the operation were performed up in a tree the snail would certainly be lost long before it was reduced to a "gulpable" shape. Therefore, after considering the matter from every point of view, one arrives at the conclusion that, if one were a thrush, one would always try to find a stone about five feet away from a hedge, and that—without thinking about the matter at all—is exactly what the thrush does the very first time he finds a snail.

In an interesting article on Alaska which appears in Forest and Stream, the writer says that wolves are numerous in Vancouver Island and throughout the interior, and in some districts are very large, their skins measuring nearly six feet. A large percentage are black. Red, silver, and black foxes are found in the interior, the skins of the silver and black varieties fetch in as much as £200 each. Poison is used, and more of the animals are lost than

ROGER AND GALLET'S EXQUISITE PERFUMES.



Acknowledged by the Leaders of Taste and Fashion in Paris and London to be the most Exquisite and Delicious Perfumes in the World. It is a well-known fact that one bottle is equal to two or three of some makers, as less is required and a soft delicious perfume remains longer and maintains its original freshness. recovered. White and blue foxes abound along the coasts of the Arctic and Behring Seas and on the Yukon and Kuskokwim Rivers. Bears are very numerous in Alaska, particularly on the Pacific coast, and this is due to the food supply from the great schools of salmon. Before the salmon come the bears feed on spermophiles and grass. The grizzly is also abundant along the mainland. The brown bear group extends along the south coast of Alaska out into the Alaska Peninsula. Polar bears occur quite abundantly north of Behring Straits. Caribou of several species are found more or less numerously throughout Alaska, and occur in herds around the upper Yukon. That caribou were formerly abundant on the Seward Peninsula is proved by the abundance of bleached skulls and cast antlers. The cause of their disappearance is a problem. The possession of firearms by the natives is considered as the cause by some, and epidemics by others. The natives themselves claim that about a generation ago the winter cold continued throughout an entire year, and all the caribou perished. Moose occur everywhere throughout Alaska within the timbered region, but seldom leave the shelter of the woods. Sheep are numerous in the mountain regions throughout Alaska, being especially abundant in the country around the upper Yukon. Goats occur throughout the mainland from the American boundary north, but are never found on any of the islands lying close along the coast in southeastern Alaska. Walruses are found every winter and spring in the Behring Sea, and many are killed at that season by the natives for ivory, which sells at a dollar a pound. The walrus formerly extended down to the Alaska Peninsula and Aleutian Islands, but the rookeries there have been destroyed. Whales and porpoises occur in great abundance along the inside passage between Puget Sound and Lynn Canal, and are interesting and harmless.

In any review of the present game conditions of the vast territory comprised within the district of Alaska and the Canadian territory of the Yukon, a few remarks on the former occurrence of related forms are not without interest. Bones, more or less fossilised, of large extinct mammals occur in abundance throughout the entire valley drained by the Yukon River from Dawson down, and in the valleys of the Colville and Porcupine Rivers, and in still greater abundance on the Seward Peninsula, that projection of Alaska which reaches to within sixty miles of Siberia. Throughout this enormous area remains of the mammoth and bison occur in such numbers as to indicate former herds of great size. The remains of horses, sheep, and musk-oxen, with a deer closely related to the wapiti, are also found. Teeth of mastodon, although rare as compared with those of the mammoth, indicate the former existence of that animal. It is perfectly evident that from 10,000 to 20,000 years ago Alaska had a fauna of large mammals not altogether dissimilar to existing animals of North America and northern Asia. The mastodon and mammoth, of course, no longer exist on this continent, but the latter is little more than a hairy relative of the Indian elephant thoroughly fitted to meet boreal conditions, and the horses in Alaska were probably not unlike the wild Prejevalsky horses of Asia to-day. These animals probably did not spend the winter in Alaska, but on the approach of the cold season migrated southward to warmer climates, or crossed into Siberia on the former land connection over what are now Behring Straits.

The Story Teller.

BURGESS' GREAT INVENTION.

"Marvellous! Incredible!" said I.

"And, nevertheless, a fact," repeated Burgess.

"But how have you done it?" I questioned.

"How have I done it? Ah, Russell, it has been the work of years, the work of my life. I think the idea has always been with me."

"What gave it you?"

"I don't know. It seems as though ever since I can remember I have been living and working for it. You know, since the days of Jubal, there have only been two kinds of musical instrument—the string and the wind. The organ is the perfection of the latter; the violin, or perhaps some might say the piano, of the former. The combination wind instrument, the organ, has long been a completed fact; the combination of strings it has been left to me to discover."

"And you have been successful?"

He smiled modestly.

"Burgess," I cried, "from this day forth, you take your stand with the great ones of earth. I foresee that the last word in music is yet to be said, that there is a future before it hitherto absolutely undreamed of. A whole orchestra under the absolute control of one man—what effects will not genius be able to produce through such a medium?"

He sat down at the keyboard of the huge, organ-like instrument, which, intimate friend as I was, I had that day seen for the first time, and a moment later strains of heavenly sweetness floated through the room. He played Rackmaninoff's "Prelude," and one would have sworn that a whole invisible orchestra were at work. The instrument was made with two manuals, and numberless stops and levers, some of them operated by the feet, but Burgess seemed as much at home upon it as though it were a piano.

"It will take a lot of learning," I suggested.

"About as much as the organ," he responded.

"There is money in it, you know, Burgess," I said, convinced that I should live to see my friend a millionaire. He smiled.

"There needs to be. I have spent all my savings on the thing, and you know I gave up my teaching two years ago, so as to have time to build it. I felt that I must realise this idea of mine, Russell, and I have no fear of missing the reward."

"There is no fear of that," said I.

"What I want," continued Burgess, his fine face flushed with enthusiasm, "is to find someone with the necessary money to finance the thing. Some capitalist with a taste for music. Of course it will cost a good deal to set it on the market, but once it is out, I am convinced there can be no failure."

"You might form a syndicate to float the thing," I suggested. "Invite a few of the principal musical people in London to hear it."

"Not a bad idea," he assented thoughtfully. Then he drew out his watch and left the music-stool.

"If we are not to be late in hearing Paderewski, it is time we were off," he remarked.

As we went downstairs I could see that my friend was all in a glow of nervous excitement. He slipped his arm through mine.

As we stepped out thus together on to the pavement a man crossed from the other side of the road, and accosted us. He was a tall, lean fellow, neat, but frightfully shabby, and with a gaunt, lean countenance that spoke eloquently of hunger. In the semi-darkness he might have stood as an allegorical figure to represent Famine or Despair. The tone in which he spoke was subdued and unsteady

"Excuse me, sir," he said, "but there has been a rehearsal—an orchestral rehearsal—in there, has there not? I have been listening."

"Well?" said Burgess, with a smile.

"I suppose," and there was a pitiful tremor of eagerness in the man's voice, "I suppose you are not in want of another violin? You could not give me a chance? I can play, sir. I have good testimonials, and I am willing to do it for almost any salary."

"I am afraid there is no opening for you," said Burgess gently. He was a sensitive and tender-hearted man. The stranger detected compassion in his tone, and laid a trembling hand on his sleeve.

"For God's sake, give me a chance, sir," he whispered. "I am starving."

"I guessed it," nodded Burgess, whilst I fumbled in my pocket.

I am afraid a donation of half-a-crown would have satisfied my conscience, and left me free to go to the concert with a light heart, but Burgess took it more seriously. He stood still in the road for a moment, thinking. Then he turned to me.

"Go on to the concert, Russell," he said. "I may follow you in half an hour. I want to find out more about this chap."

He took the vagrant by the arm in his friendly way, and led him back to his rooms. I strode off alone, thinking what a dear, good chap he was.

Burgess turned up at the concert three-quarters of an hour late, and I could see from his distrait manner that something was worrying him. The enthusiasm of the early part of the evening was entirely gone, and a thoughtfulness that I did not altogether like had succeeded it.

"An orchestra man out of work and starving," he remarked in the interval. "I understand that there are many such about. How many will there be if my invention comes out?"

The idea had not occurred to me.

"But, Burgess, old man, you could hardly hold yourself responsible," I began deprecatingly.

"It wants thinking out," he said. "No one but myself could be held responsible. How many of the theatres would keep a band when they could get the same results from an instrument operated by one man?"

I was silent, reserving my arguments for a more fitting occasion. The concert went on, and Paderewski excelled himself, but he did not succeed in rousing my friend from his reverie. He hardly spoke to me during the performance, but when we got outside into the cold air of the winter night he briskened up a little.

"In for a tramp?" he said.

CARUSO WRITES:

An interesting letter from the World's Greatest Tenor :—

I wish to state to the people in all parts of the world who are interested in records of my voice, that I have not sung or made a record of any kind for any one, except the Victor Talking Machine Company of Camden, N. J., U. S. A., and the Gramophone Company, Ld., of London, England, since the year 1903.

At that time I made an exclusive agreement with these Companies to make records of my voice and the Caruso records made and sold by them are the only Caruso Records which I endorse and approve and recommend to my friends and the public. In my opinion the records made by the process which these Companies own are far superior in quality of tone, natural reproduction and in every detail than those made by any other process in the world.

I assented. A light snow had fallen, a full moon was shining, and the streets wore a most entrancing aspect.

"It will be cold for those sleeping out on the Embankment to-night," remarked Burgess, evidently thinking on the same theme. "I am glad I met that poor devil to-night. He would have been there, if I hadn't seen him."

"Oh, well, let's discuss something more pleasant,' said I, a trifle impatiently, as I turned up my coat collar. "The orchestrion——"

"The thing's got to be thought out," repeated Burgess. "If I continue to feel as I do now, Russell, I shall let the orchestrion stay where it is."

"But the money you have invested?"

"I can always go back to teaching, you know."

I stared at the man. Altruism always is a surprising thing.

"But seriously——"

"Seriously, I could not take the bread from the mouths of starving men. It's close on heart-breaking for me, Russell, but I'm afraid duty lies that way. How could I sleep at nights if I thought I had so multiplied the number of the outcasts?"

I was silent for a moment, and then I began to argue. I kept at it for half an hour, and then Burgess suggested postponement of the subject, and we did close upon three miles without a word. I could tell that my friend was passing through a great crisis. His face was drawn and set, and once or twice he sighed heavily.

"What's it to be?" I asked, as we turned into the familiar streets near his home. "Are you going to behave like an ordinary, reasonable mortal, or is this life-work of yours to be sacrificed through sheer Quixotism?"

"I think, Russell," rejoined Burgess, and his voice was steady, but a trifle high-pitched. "I think it will have to be sacrificed. If I could see any other way out—but there is none. I only hope I may have will-power enough to carry out my resolution."

We had turned into the street where Burgess lived, and he gave a sudden start. Late as it was, there was a small crowd collected before the house where he boarded, and as he saw it he gripped my arm in sudden alarm.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

A policeman on the outskirts of the crowd recognised him.

"There has been a catastrophe, sir; a fire," he said. "The house has been all but burnt down. It is out now. The engine was here in time to save the framework ,but that was all."

"My rooms?" gasped Burgess, as white as death.

"Cleared out, sir. The inside is quite gutted. I am sorry to have to tell you."

Burgess stood a moment like a man petrified. I believe in that instant he lived over again all the toils and privations and hopes of the past years, and realised the full bitterness of this destruction of their hoped-for fruit. Then he turned to me with a gulp.

"The hand of Fate—or Providence," he said.

* * * * *

A fortnight later he was advertising in the daily papers for music pupils. I don't know how many he got. I know that he still gives lessons at a guinea a term, and that he makes a suit of clothes last twelve-months. I believe, too, that he has become a vegetarian "for the sake of his health." But, for all that, he has not the look of a disappointed or broken-down man; quite the contrary. When I went to see him last week I found him in the highest of spirits.

"One of the most successful men in London," I heard him murmur. Then he smiled.

"But do you know, Russell," he said, "if I hadn't taken that resolution that you laughed at so much, I believe I should have gone all to pieces when the orchestrion was burnt."

And that was the first and last time I ever heard him refer to the destruction of the ill-fated instrument.—London Opinion.

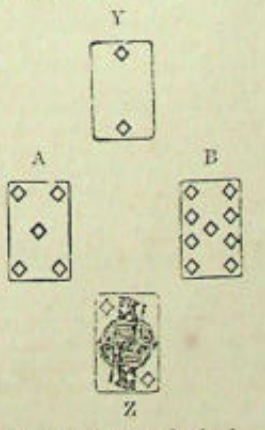
Solution to Problem No. 62.

B evidently holds no more clubs, but if A goes on with the suit Y will discard a heart. His best chance of saving the game is to lead out his ace of spades, and follow with the ace of hearts and then a small one. If B holds the king he will win this trick, and return a spade, no other lead being possible. A B thus establish a double ruff, and if B is able to over trump Y when the club is led, they will win the first seven tricks.



Problem No. 64.

Score: A B, 0: Y Z, 0. Z deals, and declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows :—

Y's Hand (Dummy).—Hearts, J, 5, 3. Diamonds, J, 10, 4, 2. Clubs, J, 10. Spades, A, K, 3. 2.

Z's Hand (Dealer).—A, Q, 4, 2. Diamonds, K, 8. Clubs, A 8, 3, 2. Spades, Q, J, 4.

The first trick is as follows :—

How ought Z to play the hand, and why?

THE FOX AND THE CHEESE.

A crow that had appropriated a piece of cheese from someone's larder flew into a tree to enjoy her capture. A fox observing her, endeavoured to open a conversation, in the hope that she might drop her prize. For all his cajolery, the Crow, however, remained silent till the wily Fox, after drawing flattering comparisons between her and Madame Grisi, entreated her to sing for his especial delectation. The Crow, indignant at the comparison which she ignorantly supposed to be an aspersion against the state of her beak through contact with the cheese, opened her mouth in repudiation, and dropped the cheese. The latter, a thoroughbred Gorgonzola, escaped by leaping the garden wall.

(In this version of the fable, it will be observed that the Fox doesn't figure after the cheese has taken the field, he, presumably with the subtlety of his race, recognising that he had met his master.)

THE AMERICAN TURF.

THE successes achieved on the English Turf this season by the American owners, Messrs. August Belmont, President of the Jockey Club of America, and Mr. Richard Croker, one time Tammany Boss, should prove a strong inducement for other prominent American turfites to cross the Atlantic, especially as there is a strong movement on foot in the United States to suppress betting on racecourses.

Apparently England is not the only nation whose sportsmen are troubled with the likes of Hawke and his "anti-gambling league." From a perusal of American mail advices it appears that the present Governor, Mr. Hughes, and those who are acting with him, are desirous of substituting a law which would absolutely prohibit betting on race tracks, and impose the penalty of imprisonment without the option of a fine on those who had the hardihood to contravene the statute. Bills to this end were introduced by two legislators named Hart and Agnew, and these were the measures the Senate voted upon the other day. The voting resulted in a tie, 25 voting for and 25 against the bills. This was tantamount to a rejection. They had previously passed the Assembly by majorities of 126 to 9 and 126 to 7. We learn that Governor Hughes is not prepared to accept this reverse without making a further effort to convert a majority of the Senate to his way of thinking.

The situation thus created will at least serve the purpose of directing attention to the aim of these would-be reformers and to the results that would accrue from the carrying out of their policy. It remains to be seen whether the Governor actually has the great body of public opinion behind him in his crusade. According to Mr. J. H. Bradford, a steward of the New York Jockey Club, "there is not the slightest doubt that Mr. Hearst would have been elected Governor of this state (New York) if he had not attacked racing in his newspaper. The result was apparent in King's County alone, where Mr. Hearst ran over 35,000 votes behind his ticket."

A similar state of things prevailed in Ohio a few years ago. In 1903 Mr. Herrick was elected Governor of that state by a majority of 113,000. During his term of office a Bill was introduced into the State Legislature identical with the Percy Grey law of New York and it passed both Houses. The Governor, however, took it upon himself to exercise his right of veto. Two years later he was again nominated by the Republican Party for the Governorship, but he was beaten by a majority of 42,000. In citing this case, Mr. Bradford asserted that "it was not the talkers on street corners and in hotel lobbies that defeated Mr. Herrick; it was the deadly silent vote of men who refused to support anybody they thought so narrow-minded and prejudiced or that in any way attempted to curb the pleasure of honest citizens who have only too few sports to give them enjoyment."

As to the effect that would be produced by the Hart-Agnew Bills were they to become law, there can be no doubt they would be very far-reaching and in some directions most disastrous. When he appeared before the joint Senate and Assembly Committee which in the first instance ordered the Bill, Mr. James R. Keene says: "Governor Hughes knows little about this question and, like many reformers, he has looked on one side of the question and has not looked at the other. This Bill would strike at fifty or sixty million dollars worth of property and retard the progress of horse breeding for three decades. It will drive out of the State $25,000,000 annually, and throw out of employment 12,000 people. What do you get as a result? The transfer of betting from the race tracks to the pool rooms, and that is all."

"Then came Mr. August Belmont, whose colt Norman III. recently carried off the Two Thousand Guineas at Newmarket. Mr. Belmont pointed out to the Committee that horse-racing was, under its present management in the State, intended to improve the breed of horses, and that betting was merely an incidental, though an indispensable, feature. Racing was designed to promote the development of early maturity and stamina in horses. After those qualities had been developed in the racing horses they were interbred into other horses, to the great benefit of the farmers and public generally." And then Mr. Belmont added the significant warning: "If this Bill passes, the respectable element at least, will vanish from the tracks." These are the utterances of responsible men, and so far as they have a general application they will be endorsed in their entirety by all who have any knowledge of the subject.

Macaulay tells us that bull-baiting was suppressed not so much because of the cruelty it involved, as because it afforded amusement for the populace. One is at times inclined to feel that the reformers of the present day are imbued by the same spirit of intolerance. Even the most ardent supporters of the Turf are prepared to admit that some people who attach themselves to it are foolish enough to get out of their depth and suffer accordingly; but if that is sufficient to warrant the suppression of racing and betting we shall have to remodel the whole scheme of civilisation, because precisely the same argument can be urged against very many of our institutions. Racing is not only a great sport, it is the foundation of a great industry—that of horsebreeding.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The first Tollygunge Gymkhana provided quite a good afternoon's sport in spite of the heat, though the going was cruelly hard and a little rain was much needed to improve matters in this respect. Messrs. Russell, Pymm, Atkinson, Armfield, etc., stood up and according to all accounts had a good deal the worst of the exchanges, a few of the clever lot getting home with a nice little packet.

The first item on the card was the Maiden Plate for which Mr. Evers' Nuts was made a very hot favourite much to the surprise of the owner, who had given him very little work. The victor turned up in Regina, who was well backed by her connections at 3 and 4 to 1, and who getting off well was never troubled though Mr. Tremearne brought Lily up to a length of her stable companion at the finish. The race was the occasion of the debut in Calcutta of two G.R.'s. Mr. Wallace Jones, of Singapore fame, who rode a nice race on the winner, but wants to be a little smarter coming up to the starting flag, and Mr. Bredee, whose mount gave away any chance he might have had by running off the course altogether at the bend.

The Visitors' Plate furnished a very good race. Though the distance was only half a mile it was run on the circular course as the going was possibly not so hard as on the straight half mile, where it was like iron over the bridge. Teehee was made the favourite out of the five starters, but there was also a good deal of money forthcoming for the much-boomed Matsumata though the stable are said not to have fancied his chances at all. He gave a good deal of trouble at the flag, getting right away at a false start and giving his jockey a lot of work to pull him up. When they got off finally Teehee was quickest on her feet and getting the rails led into the straight followed by Lady Thirza, who looked like catching the favourite at one time, but died away at the half distance and Comprimil coming up very fast beat her by two lengths for second place and made Mr. Galstaun's shake up Teehee at the finish to win by a neck.

The public liked Picture for the pony race and put a lot of money on her, but the "talent" went for Loch Lily in which they proved their rare discrimination as she won in the commonest of canters with Mr. Pauntley looking round in his saddle. After a lot of bumping and knocking about they got off to a shocking bad start Loch Lily ten lengths in front of anything. Mr. Turner on Picture was beaten by Golden Star for second place the rest of the field straggling in behind.

The Hack Stakes degenerated into a match between Seditious and St. Rule, the latter winning very comfortably. A good field went out for the Polo Scurry, which was principally noteworthy that the favourite and winner a very good looking bay pony belonging to Mr. Cartwright, did not appear in any of the lists of entries and the first that was heard of him was in the programme. The Boy as this warrior was called, had them all very easily from start to finish and as his supporters had taken all that the books would give about him at level money the result was evidently not much of a surprise to some of them. The arab Grey Plume, ran a good second.

A sporting match between Mr. Pettitt's Paddy (owner) and Govindpore (Mr. Tanner), was the last item on the programme. The latter was a long way the most backed, but never got a look in as Paddy went off to the front and judiciously steadied, first kept a nice lead and was able to shake off Mr. Tanner's determined effort to get on terms at the finish. We congratulate Mr. Pettitt on the successful result of his first ride in a race.

The programme of the second meeting is very attractive and, given rain, there should be a very good afternoon's sport.

The English mail brings news of the death of Mr. Garrett Moore, an old-time Irish gentleman and ideal sportsman. He won some of the highest honours possible in steeplechasing, this "paragon of gentleman riders," as he was dubbed at the time, reaching the climax of his ambition in winning the Grand National on Liberator in 1879. He was a leading member of a group of owners and hard riders who in those days frequently captured the great Liverpool "Derby of jumping," and occasionally sallied successfully to capture the big French prizes. Mr. Moore, as director of a well-known Hampshire training establishment, also made a mark as trainer.

There was no livelier wit, and his abounding humour made merry many a social circle. To save a situation with pleasantry was no uncommon thing. One day that fine horseman his nephew, Frank Hartigan, met with a very grave accident at Sandown Park. His horse falling at the "ditch" at the railway side rolled over the rider, laying him out flat as a pancake. His mother, on the members' stand, saw this apparently fatal result.

Garrett Moore rushed across the park, and stopping the procession of ambulance and police said: "Here, Frank, whether you're a corpse or not, get out and walk—walk just a step or two, just to show your mother you're not killed entirely."

The tale of the mild behaviour of an escaped lion comes from the Earl's Court Exhibition. For a time it established a sort of reign of teror; but a dignified calm characterised its own conduct on the 26th ultimo; during the performance with the wild beasts in the arena one lion and a bear succeeded by some means in getting through a door which leads into the "Jungle," and found themselves free. The lion, a powerful brute, proceeded calmly through the "Jungle," and, walking up to two waitresses who were talking together, sniffed at them; but does not appear to have sustained any ill effects therefrom. The young women thought for a moment the animal was a big dog, and then one screamed. "It's a lion," and the two rushed away. Their screams attracted the attention of other persons, who saw the lion and hastily decamped. Continuing his walk the lion came to the portion of the "Jungle" where the elephants stand, and leaping over some ponies got into a corner. By this time his escape had been discovered, and some of the attendants connected with Mr. Bostock's show were in hot pursuit. Without much trouble they lassoed the lion, and removed him to a place of safety, and the bear, which had been enjoying his escape in a very quiet manner, was re-captured in even easier fashion.

A Cambridge "Fresher," writing in the Pall Mall Magazine, revives that ever-genial topic—the howlers of English novelists who deal with university life in that country. Several of these are now stock stories at Cambridge. "For instance," writes "Fresher," "one novelist is said to have stated that "a man sat in his rooms in the cloisters of Trinity and watched the 'Varsity eight practising along the backs.' The truth is that no rooms in the cloisters of Trinity look out upon the river, and the 'Varsity eight does not practice within three miles of the backs, which even to the casual eye would hardly appear suitable for the purpose."

Again, a lady novelist is said to have made "bow" perform the extraordinary feat of leaning forward in the middle of a race and whispering something into "stroke's" ear. "Fresher" points out that only a man with the proportions of a giraffe could have attempted this garrulous exploit. "Besides," he adds, "the rhythm of a crew's rowing would be somewhat disturbed by 'bow' stopping to make any remark whatsoever,, and I should like to hear the remarks of the rest of the crew if he did." Finally, not long ago, a well-known magazine came out with an illustration which represented Oxford College crews racing side by side!

Have any of our readers tried "Beesly's Royal Horse Solvent?" It is a new veterinary preparation and its manufacturers claim that it completely does away with the necessity for blistering or firing, and alas! that necessity is ever present in India. The claim that it arrests horses that are "going" and cures horses that have "gone" in less than a month is backed up by the testimony of a host of English owners and trainers: Richard Marsh says: "It is the most successful remedy I have ever used" and praise from such a quarter is praise indeed. It differs from all other preparations in that its effect can be increased or modified and it seems easy of application and speedy of action.

"Just as I close my notes this week, writes our London correspondent, news reaches me of the safe arrival in England of the French colt Azote, who is to run in the Derby. This animal is an oatless wonder and has been the subject of an experiment in scientific feeding which is not without interest. He has been fed on nothing, but milk and hay! An account of the feeding of the horse since he was twenty-six days old exclusively upon dry milk and a small quantity of hay has been published by the National Society for the Encouragement of Agriculture in the report of the Paris Congress on horse-breeding for 1906 and 1907, the reporter being Professor Grandeau, the celebrated French chemist and expert animal-feeder. The experiment, which was made by Mr. James R. Hatmaker, an American gentleman residing in Paris, has awakened great interest amongst Continental horse-dealers and racing men, for it is the first attempt which has ever been made to feed racehorses on food of animal origin instead of oats and maize.

Mr. Hatmaker conceived the idea that milk was a more concentrated and higher form of food, and better suited for racehorses. In 1905, he said, he purchased a thoroughbred, and never gave him a particle of grain of any kind, but fed him exclusively on dry, separated milk. In other words, he has made the cow digest the vegetable food, and not only did he find that his colt grew more rapidly on milk than on ordinary vegetable food, but the horse can stand harder work in training. This is due to the greater nutritive value of milk and to the fact that it is much more easily assimilated and digested than oats and maize. An accurate record has been kept of the horse's feeding and growth, and his treatment has been in strict accordance with a programme arranged for him at the start. He was entered when two years old for races on the Continent, and last July ran at Ostend, Maisons, Lafitte, and Baden-Baden. He is also engaged in the French Grand Prix, and his running next week is one step in the programme.

Amongst the firms who are making sacrifices in order to give Mr. Haldane's new Territorial Scheme a fair chance are Messrs. Mackie and Co., Distillers, Ld., of Glasgow and London. The Directors have had the following notices posted up at their different places of business.

All employees in our "White Horse" Bonded Stores, Lagavulin Distillery, Islay and Glasgow and London Offices, who may wish to serve in the Territorial Army, will be granted their full pay while absent during their annual training, and in addition, have their yearly holidays with pay as well.

This concession is granted to allow every man in our employ to serve his country, and in the hope of keeping the best men in our service.

We see from the home papers that Jack Johnson, the coloured boxer, has grown tired of newspaper sparring and with the laudable desire to try and cut off the apparently inexhaustible supply of "gas" as manufactured by Tommy Burns, the holder, has formally claimed the heavy-weight boxing championship of the world. Burns, as our readers are aware, had refused to meet him for the National Sporting Club purse of £2,500 and a side stake of £3,000.

Burns, when latest advices left, was holding out for a purse of £7,000, of which he must be guaranteed £6,000 whether he wins, loses, or draws the contest. Burns says he has had an offer of this dimension from Goldfields, Nevada, but of this Johnson asserts that he has heard nothing at all directly.

This is probably the first time in the history of the prize ring in England that a champion has refused to defend his title in response to a challenge from a man who is in every way qualified to make one. Johnson's record is almost as good as that of Burns, and he has placed £1,000 of the £3,000 which he is prepared to stake upon himself in the hands of the National Sporting Club.

The purse offered by the National Sporting Club is the biggest ever put forward for a boxing contest in England. The executive of the club wishes it to be distinctly understood that under no circumstances could any match in which the loser stood to gain more than the winner take place at the National Club.

So far as English sportsmen are concerned it is highly probable that Jack Johnson will from henceforth, and until beaten, be regarded as the heavy-weight boxing champion of the world.

Golfers all over the world will hear of the tragic end of old Tom Morris, the veteran professional, with regret. As will be seen from the details given in our Golf columns a melancholy accident terminated an unusually long and honourable career.

Mr. J. G. Lynch writes as follows to the Editor of the Baluchistan Gazette, on the subject of Racing in Quetta:—

Sir,—Through the medium of your paper, may I suggest a possible way of improving this game of sport, and making it as popular as ever, since it is the desire of the Stewards to do so.

The Griffin scheme is the probable one I should recommend to be introduced into Quetta, this having been the means of reviving racing in Burma, which is now so popular. The "Griffin" is an untried pony, imported from Australia, at an average price of about Rs. 500 landed in Rangoon, all being thorough-breds, and the conditions are, that the animals must be raced at least once. There are closed events for these animals only, one race each day; at the following meeting, there are ex-Griffin races, and so on. So that as long as any one of these ponies is in Quetta, or elsewhere, he is entitled to be raced as an ex-Griffin.

These animals can be imported once a year; many indeed turn out to be really good and first-class racers.

My reason for recommending the Australian ponies is, because there is no trouble in obtaining them, as there would be with the Arab.

The undersigned would be very pleased to give any information, as to how these animals could be secured.

The very least number that would be acceptable to any dealer to import would be from, say 25 to 30.

Names could be registered for this purpose, and lots eventually drawn on arrival of the said animals.

The owners would be entitled to do as they pleased, after once racing them.

These races, would at least draw about fifteen entries each day, apart from those where the owners of "Griffins" might elect to compete in open events.

The final game in the Beresford Polo tournament was played at Simla on the 10th instant ending in a win for the Patiala team, who beat the King's Dragoon Guards by 3 goals to 2. Details further on.

Froude, the famous historian, was a keen angler, and all his spare moments were devoted to the sport, principally in Wales where he had a pretty ,little home, "Plas Gwynant," between Capel Curig and Beddgelert. His father, Archdeacon Froude, the Rector of Darlington, was also fond of sport, and made himself famous as an Oxford "undergrad," by laying a wager that he would ride his hunter over the Abingdon turnpike gate with pennies under his seat, between each of his knees and the saddle, and between each foot and the stirrup iron, and he won his bet.

The Society for the Protection of Wild Birds has ample scope for its efforts in Cornwall, judging by the revelation of Mr. W. H. Hudson, who, in his book, "The Land's End," mentions many instances of great cruelty inflicted on wild birds by the Cornishmen. It seems that it is a regular winter pastime to pursue the small birds which flock down on to the peninsula in hard weather. The method is as follows:—"Each person buys a handful of small fish-hooks, manufactured for the purpose, and sold, a dozen for a penny, by a tradesman in the town. Ten to twenty baited hooks are fastened with short threads to a string, two or three feet long, called a "teagle," and placed on a strip of ground from which the snow has been cleared. To these strips of mould or turf the birds fly and seize the hooks, and so blind to danger are they made by hunger that they are not deterred by the frantic struggles of those already hooked. Many birds succeed in freeing themselves by breaking the thread in their struggles, but always with that bit of barbed bent-wire in their mouths or stomachs, which must eventually cause their death." Mr. Hudson makes an appeal to the public in his book to put a stop to this wanton cruelty.

The Elton Hockey Tournament was concluded in Bombay on the 11th instant, when St. Mary's College met the Y.M.C.A. in the final. Rain during the first half rather interfered with the play, but the game was evenly contested throughout, St. Mary's eventually winning by a goal to nil.

Mr. F. N. Warden, the well-known local lawn-tennis player has been winning fame on the courts at home. In the Surrey championship meeting recently he won two of the handicap tournaments, the doubles and mixed doubles. He would have had a good chance of winning the singles handicap also but had to scratch owing to his engagement in the other two finals.

The Gymkhana at Naini Tal on the 6th instant was again most successful, the six events on the programme providing a very pleasant afternoon's entertainment. The Mounted Infantry Race opened the proceedings. Twelve pairs entered, Mrs. MacLachlan and Mr. Milne scoring a win. Only two teams entered for the Rosette tournament, which was won by Captain Plant and Messrs. Harenc and Phillipps. The Potato and Bucket Race for ladies was won by Mrs. Rowcroft: Mr. Milne was first in the Postillion Race: the Musical Posts for Ladies went to Mrs. Henderson, and the final event—the General Knowledge Stakes, for which fourteen couples entered—was won by Mrs. Robertson and Major Beynon.

The Automobile Association of Bengal held their deferred general meeting at their room, No. 57, Park Street, last Friday night. There was a fair attendance. Mr. A. C. Dulcken was elected Chairman and Mr. H. H. Reynolds Vice-Chairman.

The following gentlemen were elected to the Committee:—

Messrs. E. E. Meugens, M. Sivadjian, Osman Jumall, M. McCraith, S. A. Fairweather, B. C. Wilson, E. Martin and Colonel J. Harwood, I.M.S., while Mr. E. J. Sauer was once again elected secretary. The accounts and annual report were passed, and in the subsequent discussion it was resolved to empower the Committee to reduce the annual subscription to Rs. 40 in order to induce a greater number of motorists to avail themselves of the privileges of the Association.

It was also decided that the Committee should obtain designs for a special badge for the use of members on their cars. Members of the Association always receive a special discount from the chief firms dealing in motor-cars, accessories, etc., etc.

Another question which came up for discussion was the advisability of trying to obtain some control over the Indian chauffeur. The Committee were empowered, to draw up a scheme for registration and examination, but such a scheme will not avail much unless all motoring members and non-members insist that any man they engage shall have a certificate from the Association.

The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the Secretary for his good work during the past year.

Reuter wires the defeat in Paris last week, of Squires the Australian boxer, who was knocked out by Tommy Burns in eight rounds. It will be remembered that in their previous meeting at Colma, in California last July, Squires was knocked out in one round.

Appended are the results of important cricket matches played in England during the past week:—

Essex beat Gloucestershire by an innings and 275 runs.

Yorkshire beat Lancashire by 193 runs.

Worcester beat Warwickshire by seven wickets.

Derbyshire beat Hampshire by 36 runs.

Leicestershire beat Northamptonshire by an innings and 54 runs.

Our Mysore correspondent writes:—As usual at the time of His Highness' birthday, Mysore is now en fete, but unfortunately rain, at frequent intervals, has done its best to mar the enjoyment of visitors. Large numbers occupy the Palace tents, whereas the hotels are full and about fifteen bookmakers took a hand at punting, leaving the pencilling to W. Jackson, Ben Smith, Kanga, Salamat, Dorabjee and Master. The birthday procession on Wednesday, with the torch light parade of troops before the Maharaja, was followed by the first of the three days' racing. Entries are much above the average, and with but few withdrawals four of the five events saw large fields of a distinctly good class—which also bodes well for Bangalore. The Maharaja himself put in an appearance just before the first race, as also the Maharani; the purdah ladies having a room in the stand reserved for them. One learns with regret that Mr. Aga S. Shah has to return before the next day's sport, but Bombay owners are very fairly represented and it is to be hoped that the class and number of entries means a revival of interest in these minor meetings which, after all, with their liberal stakes should prove attractive. Rain has not improved the course which was firm in parts, but swampy in others and several white ant's nests have had to be removed.

The card opened with the mile Arab Plate, which dwindled to a field of three in which Bendigo on form looked a half stone certainty and was backed to fours on from Moscow and William Rufus. Southall on the last got an useful break from the post, but Heeroo drove Moscow out to the front only to fall right away before half the journey. There is a very useful run in on this picturesque course of nearly three furlongs and on turning the bend the favourite was expected to go out. This, however, was far from the case as he was shortly under the whip and left the one time Army Cup winner to canter home in a very straggly finish.

Nine started for the six-furlong Macintire Plate for maiden horses of which Cuirass was first fancied, but later was equalled on the lists by Victor. Gunner was mounted at the post and the start was a very troublesome one, Noel getting a break in two false starts. He was first out again when let go and Gunner left with Cuirass pocketed. Victor shortly went to the front from Royal Revenge, Annexe, Noel and Cuirass. The latter two could do nothing. Cuirass coming right outside his field, consequently not running as well as I think he is capable of doing. The order of the first three was unchanged, Victor winning with quite a stone in hand from Royal Revenge, also going easy, with a desperate finish for a shop which Annexe just got from Noel and Gunner.

Third came the half mile C.B. race, and a good looking lot they were, Emerald, Philcourage and Sir Simon, the pick. Pearl also a good cut. Betting favoured Sir Simon, Emerald and Philcourage in order and the first got the advantage at the start. Philcourage was after him all the way, but the favourite just stayed it, whereas had Emerald not swerved badly she might have done it.

Some classy sprinters were out for the Medium Plate for ponies of half a mile with a substantial 10-12 on Florrie and 9-8 Comeback, who started an odds on favourite, Virbala also supported. The pace was cut out for half the journey by Virbala, who then fell away and the ease with which Comeback held Florrie at once put the issue beyond doubt. Koko put in a fast late run but just when one wondered if an upset were possible he spoilt his chance by letting out with his heels and swerving on to the tan. Lastly came the Lilliput Plate of five furlongs with a smart field of ten with Byramjee's stable first coming at Mint and then Young Gazelle, the form being slightly better. But for these sevens was on offer. Nonplus and Plassey took it in turn to lead till Young Gazelle got through on the rails and, though under the whip, just had Plassey set when Mint came through and by consummate judgment on Jimmy Robinson's part secured the verdict. So close a thing was it that many were of the opinion that the grey had passed the post first. This third consecutive success for the favourite settled the day as being a bad one for the books.

In the third race, by the bye, Leadon's saddle slipped and Trahan came off, dislocating his wrist. He was in charge of Dignum's string, the latter having met with a nasty accident in Bangalore, being run down by a horse and rolled on when returning from the course.

The Somerset L. I. held a two days boxing tournament for Novices last week, and the management deserve great credit for the excellent arrangements and the big success of the show. The tournament was exclusively a regimental one and some real good fights were witnessed. Mr. J. C. Hamilton officiated as referee, Sergt.-Major Butler, Worcester Regt., and Qr.-Mr.-Sergt. Chinnery were judges, and Mr. Defreece the timekeeper. The following were the winners of the final bout.—Novices, Bantam Weights, Pte. Leahy; Feather Weights, Pte. Smith; Light Weights, Pte. Stiddert; Middle Weights, Lce.-Corpl. Tree. Open, Bantam Weights, Pte. Street; Feather Weights, Lce.-Corpl. Howard; Light Weights, Pte. Williams; Middle Weights, Lce.-Corpl. Santry.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 29th May 1908.

London's welcome to M. Fallieres, President of the French Republic, has been ultracordial and exceptionally brilliant. Throughout the week the tricolour has been conspicuous aloft, the Marseillaise has been our most popular air—urchins have whistled it, brass bands have played it, all and sundry have sung it. The "Vive"-ing, and "Entente"-ing have been continuous and hearty, the bunting and floral decorations profuse, the ceremonies and festivities incessant. State banquet, State ball, State visit to the Exhibition, State drive through the city, gala night at the Opera, and many other social and official engagements have been crammed into the last four days and the distinguished and benevolent looking old gentleman's movements have been always accompanied by roars of cheering. The French Colony in London is a pretty large one, the fact was strongly impressed on one last Wednesday when M. Fallieres drove through Oxford Street, Holborn, and Cheapside to the Guildhall and returned to the West End via Queen Victoria Street and the Embankment. Every third person one met in some quarters was a Frenchman; in High Holborn, I found myself in the midst of a dense crowd of vivacious Gauls and for a moment found it difficult to realise that I was not in Paris.

And the weather has been almost perfect. Indeed on Wednesday it was about as warm as one finds it at the last Extra of the Calcutta big race meeting! At the "Great White City" at Shepherd's Bush, as the Exhibition is now generally styled, the sunshine was almost oppressive, yet only two days before an overcoat and an umbrella were indispensible. Under the happiest conditions the King and Queen and the President of the French Republic toured the grounds, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and Princess Victoria.

Hundreds of thousands thronged the place, and the routes to it from Buckingham Palace and St. James's Palace, and the President received the warmest greetings from the British public. That the King and Queen were cheered with affectionate enthusiasm whenever they appeared goes without saying.

Most good judges incline to the opinion that this year's Temple Garden Flower Show was the best on record. The season has been specially favourable to certain old favourites such as the carnations, which were here assembled in truly amazing strength, size and variety. The roses, too, surpassed those shown in any previous exhibition. It is remarkable how the art of defying the season has been developed in respect of these flowers. The collection of orchids was marvellous, many extremely rare varieties were there, and certain triumphs of hybridisation that might arouse the envy of even such an eminent horticulturalist as Calcutta's only Chatterjee.

Londoners flocked in their tens of thousands to Bushey Park last Sunday to assist at the annual fete champetre under the fragrant chestnuts. The great trees rise in the majesty of their two centuries of strength, dome upon dome of leaves all vivid with the first surge of summer, clear dainty green set with a myriad stars of white blossom. The gleaming turf beneath is strewn with tiny petals, a mosaic of white and crimson. High over all, towering above the topmost spires of the chestnuts, the great elms of the avenue's second rank wave minarets of a pale golden green. But if you want more lurid colour you must look lower: the ribbon of grey road is spangled with every tint the eye of man ever beheld. Hundreds of buses and brakes lumbered slowly down this enchanting avenue; bizarre coloured motors went hooting and tearing through, swarms of cyclists and thousands of pedestrians in holiday attire supplied life and movement if they did at times rather disturb nature's colour scheme. was, of course, visited and here the gardens were a dazzling blaze of colour. Huge tulips of every hue - lurid flame, dark purple, rose colour, golden, and white—blent with violet aubretia and crimson stocks and pink cyllene and feathery tufts of saxifrage and gorgeous banks of azaleas, lay framed in emerald turf. Here the crowd wandered, broken in twos and threes, silent for the most part, as though they were at a concert. But that silence was everywhere the note of London's fete champetre. The boisterous merry making which seems to most of us the right sign of a popular holiday was nowhere to be found.

At the Scala last Sunday was tried an experiment in which several rising actors and actresses were afforded a chance of exhibiting their talent. The piece selected was "The Man Who Won," an adaptation by Mr. Arthur M. Heathcote of Mrs. Baillie Reynold's novel of that title. It may be of interst to refer to it by reason of the fact that the honours of the evening fell to a young professional, who not so long ago loomed large in the Anglo-Indian eye as India's champion sprinter and hurdler. His stage name is Norman Trevor and since Mr. George Alexander (who he understudies by the way) took him in hand he has made big strides in his profession. This is what one of the leading dramatic critics says of his performance. "To Mr. Norman Trevor must be awarded the acting honours of the evening; his performance as Bert Mestaer, consistently firm, earnest, and conspicuous for its manliness and quiet strength marks him as an actor who, either in the modern or the romantic school, is bound to go far." By which one may infer that he promises to be as smart on the boards as he used to be on the track.

Coming as it did on the day of the French President's arrival in England, the production of "The Two Flags" at the Alhambra was particularly happy. For the new ballet divertissement is all about Franco-British friendship—a stage gay with the Tricolour and the Union Jack, a band frequently wandering into the strains of "Rule Britannia" and the "Marseillaise" and John Bull junior, flirting with La Gaiete de Paris: Vive la France! Vive la Angleterre! and heaps of enthusiasm on both counts.

Apart from its topical interest, "The Two Flags" is as beautiful as any of recent Alhambra ballets, and it is much brighter than many. It is full of colour and movement, a delightful feast for the eyes. There are three scenes—La Place de la Concorde, Paris, Alliance Hotel, London, and the Pavilion of Fraternity. In this latter is seen the most gorgeous of the spectacle, and a very happy touch—and a touch which produced the most enthusiasm of the performance—was John Bull's presentation of "his daughters," England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, to Marianne (la France).

A raid was made on the Stock Exchange last Saturday morning, not by the strong arm of the law, but by a bevy of pretty music hall artistes and, as might be expected, brokers' clerks and all who had business in the sacred vicinity hailed the enterprise with astonishment and good humour. The raiders were members and friends of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild, which aims at assisting artistes and their families who have fallen into distress; and their immediate object was to dispose of tickets for a matinee which has been arranged to take place at the Oxford Music Hall in aid of the funds of the Guild. The invading force conducted their raid with much ability. They were headed by Miss Victoria Monks, who drove up about noon in a motor car, and soon made a good haul in aid of their deserving object. Throgmorton Street is always crowded enough in the morning, and in a very short time after the ladies' arrival it was packed from end to end with a dense throng, whom a police constable vainly urged to "keep moving and mind your pockets!" Selling tickets as they went the ladies advanced slowly towards the Bank of England. The only drawback they had to contend with was that many of the crowd evidently took them for Suffragists.

The twenty-ninth Royal Naval and Military Tournament opened at Olympia on Monday, a magnificent house greeting the entire programme with enthusiastic applause. The inauguration ceremony was performed by General French and there was a big gathering of notabilities in and around the royal box. The artillery items and the naval display were undoubtedly the finest spectacles presented and of high merit were the mounted and dismounted competitions and the tugs-of-war; but what took best was the novelty presented in the item contributed by the little West African soldiers. This is carried out with scenic effects by Clarkson, and shows a column of West African troops, accompanied by carriers, on the march through the bush. They halt for food, and then resume the march through a hostile country, scouts being sent out in pairs to reconnoitre. The troops march into an ambush, and a sharp fight follows, the scene culminating with the bombardment of a native town and its capture at the point of the bayonet. Their culminating war dance was a "huge success" say the papers and its termination was the signal for a perfect storm of cheering. I doubt, however, whether everybody cares for this sort of thing. To my mind this picture of barbaric customs and savage warfare was a degrading and disgusting exhibition and certainly not one in which soldiers of the King—even black men—should take part. Chacun a son gout doubtless: but those who have travelled rather beyond the British Channel and know the nigger and his diabolical forms of doing battle will probably agree with my view of the matter.

Kings are not usually regarded as types of good nature, and many people regard them as beings afar off; but if a report in the halfpenny pres is to be believed, they are more susceptible to compliments than most public personages. It appears that there is a City porter who spends his spare time in sending congratulations to monarchs on the occasion of domestic or other happy events, and he has acquired quite a large collection of regal acknowledgments. He considers this "a more sensible hobby than collecting picture postcards, and more interesting." Whether the recipients of such compliments will consider the hobby equally interesting, if it becomes a universal craze, remains to be seen. We remember being told by a friend of many royal personages that they take an extraordinary pleasure in having their birthdays and other anniversaries widely remembered, but we should have thought that they would eventually weary of a protracted correspondence with City porters.

THE VAGRANT.

Shikar.

URSUS LABIATUS.

As is well known to all, the common black bear of the plains is found plentifully in the Central Provinces. To look at he appears too clumsy to do much harm, and he might be counted as harmless, for his diet of fruits, white ants and honey is simple enough. In reality, however, he is one of the most dangerous of the jungle animals, as he has an unpleasant habit of attacking anyone he meets without ryhme or reason, which, except in very rare cases or in the case of a maneater, tigers and panthers seldom do, unless wounded or cornered.

I was for five years living in the C.P. near the Satpura Hills and scarcely a monsoon went by without some one or frequently several people being either killed or badly injured by bears. Two instances I remember very well, one in which a man and woman were attacked by two bears, the man getting badly mauled and the poor old woman having the whole of her face torn away, which, though we did everything in our power to save her, when she was brought in to us, resulted in her death on the following day.

In the other case, the man escaped by the skin of his teeth. He was a Gond of about 40 years. He was returning one evening in the dusk to his home, with his son, a lad of 12, when suddenly they came upon a bear which immediately charged them. It rushed at the boy first, but he succeeded in dodging it, escaping with only a light scratch. The bear then went for the man, the boy in the meantime ran to safety. The man tried to run away, but the bear caught him by the thigh and bit him severely, causing him to tumble down. Fortunately the bear let go of him and the man kept his presence of mind. He had on heavy country shoes, and as the bear attempted to get in at him, he kept kicking out at its nose and somehow or other managed to keep it off. The boy in the meantime commenced pelting the bear with stones from a safe distance. One of these hit it on the head, causing it to turn, and seeing the boy, it left the man and went in pursuit of him. The boy, however, had a good start and managed to make his escape to his house, which was not far distant and the man, as soon as the bear left him, got up and striking off in a different direction, so as to avoid meeting the bear, reached his home a little later in safety. I was not an eyewitness to his incident, but the man came to my brother with his son the next day to have his wounds dressed, and told him this story, and as his wounds were unmistakably caused by a bear, I think that he was speaking the truth.

As regards my own personal experiences with bears. In 1903 I was out in camp in a favourite shooting ground. My tent was pitched under a big tamarind tree, and in front of our camp was the river Gungal. Our camp was pitched on the boundary between the hills and plains, and being in December, with the wheat and grain crops all green, the animals naturally remained at the edge of the jungle to be near the crops as soon as night fell.

I was just in the middle of breakfast the morning after my arrival, when a Gond came running into camp, with the news that he had seen two bears asleep in the jungle about half a mile away, so taking the village shikari and the bearer of the news I started off. I was armed with a Martini rifle. After travelling about half mile we came to the spot, where the Gond had discovered the bears, and approaching cautiously found them both asleep as he had left them. They were evidently male and female, and were lying under some trees close to a small nullah. I fired at the female from about 60 yards distance, as I could not get a clear shot at the male owing to some bushes being in the way. The bullet hit her, but I fancy only slightly, and she got on to her feet with a roar; I gave her a second bullet, which sent her flying backwards into the nullah to all appearances dead. I had no time to think of her, however, for the male bear, having caught sight of us, put down his head and with an angry growl charged straight at us. The man who had brought the khubber bolted, but the shikari stood firm raising his axe. I felt a bit uneasy myself, I don't mind owning, for I only had a single barrel to stop him with, and that was unloaded when he commenced to charge as I had just expended it on the female. I was soon reloaded, however, and when he was about 30 yards off, I took a shot at his chest. Just as I fired, however, he swerved slightly to one side and the bullet instead of getting him in the chest hit him in the flank, wounding him badly, but not disabling him. He rolled over at the shot, but recovering himself charged at us again, but he couldn't move so fast this time, and my next shot took him fairly in the left breast and dropped him dead in his tracks. We had a look at him and found him to be a very old bear with the canine teeth much worn down. We next went to the nullah where the female had disappeared, fully expecting to find her there, but what was our chagrin on finding the nullah empty and beyond a few bloodstains, no signs of the bear. In fact we never did see her again, though we made a thorough search for her.

On another occasion I, or rather my servants had a very exciting time with a couple of bears. It was at the end of May and I was sitting over a water hole, which was a favourite drinking place for carnivora of all sorts. We were camped in the jungle away from any village. I was in the habit of keeping the men within hailing distance when sitting up, as I did not always wish to sit up the whole night. On this occasion when going to my machan, I had showed them the spot where I wished them to sit, a piece of high ground overlooking a nullah, where they would be quite safe, and I most especially cautioned them to keep awake. There were I think about five of them. They followed my instructions in the usual native fashion, by doing just the opposite to what I had ordered them to do, e.g., instead of waiting on the high ground, they sat on the side of the nullah, and all went to sleep except one man. I commenced sitting up about sundown and watched the usual procession of peacocks come to drink before going to roost. For some time nothing came except a four horned deer, which drank and retired in haste. A little later a large herd of pigs came along almost under my tree, but evidently they had drunk elsewhere as they left the water severely alone. It was I think at about 10 o'clock that I heard the peculiar rustling sound caused by a bear from the opposite side of the nullah, and a second later out ambled a bear and without any hesitation went to the pool and commenced drinking.

I fired and the bear ran back the same way he came, rushing up the steep bank of the nullah. Just as he reached the top, however, his legs seemed to give way underneath him, and he came rolling down into the nullah, where he gave a couple of groans and died. We found afterwards that my bullet (12 bore shot gun solid bullet) had hit him fairly behind the shoulder and gone clean through him. After this I sat quiet for some time, and though I heard footsteps in various directions, I didn't see anything else.

About an hour later, just as some animal or other was approaching my pool, from the long grass on the opposite side, and I was vainly endeavouring to get a glimpse of it, I suddenly heard a terrible hullabaloo commence in the direction of our camp, some animal giving the hoarse growling roar which they usually emit when they charge, the men shouting in a very terrified voice, and the bullocks and pony snorting. It was all over before I had time to act or even to start getting down from my tree. I thought from the sound that a panther had attacked the bullocks in camp, however, I was wrong, as on hailing the men and asking the cause of the commotion I learnt that they had been attacked by two bears and was much relieved to hear that no one was hurt. I remained quiet for a short while after this, as there was something approaching my waterhole, which I thought might be the bears. You can imagine my disgust when instead of a bear out walked a badger. I then called up the men, and returned to camp, taking the dead bear along with me, as I was afraid lest the others might return and attack the camp. The bear I shot was a medium sized male, but had one peculiarity, that he was entirely black with no white band across his chest. I have never seen another of this description.

Arriving at camp, I asked the men how it all happened. It appears that they had posted themselves on the side of the nullah instead of on top and all were asleep except one man. This man saw a couple of animals approaching, which he thought were pigs, and so woke the man next him. They then discovered that instead of pigs, a couple of bears were coming up to them, and gave the alarm to the other men. They all jumped up in a hurry and the bears which had not seen them previously, thus suddenly startled by half a dozen men springing up in front of them charged in on them. One or two of the men bolted, but luckily there was one old shikari among them, who called to them not to run but to stand firm. He and two other men stood their ground, yelling and hammering their axes on a teak tree stump which luckily was in front of them.

The female turned off, but the male charged to within five yards of them, and then luckily for the men, he also turned round and bolted. I saw the marks of his claws in the ground next morning and the place where the men had stood. If they had all run away instead of standing their ground, I am afraid one or more might have been mauled.

On another occasion I went out for a shoot in April, accompanied by a Major C. We were sitting up at separate waterholes about 500 yards apart. We had had news that bears frequently drunk at these pools and also panthers. We sat for three nights in succession and on the second night Major C. bagged a fine panther. The third night, I had a presentiment that the bears would come my way, but as is usual in the mowa season, they would come to drink late. I was dead tired that night having had a long ride in the heat the day before. I kept awake till about 12 and then unconsciously fell asleep. I woke with a sudden start, however, and opening my eyes, the first thing they lit upon was a bear making off past my tree at a quick amble. I fired, but what with sleepiness, and the suddenness with which it all occurred, I only slightly wounded it in the leg; I fired my second barrel, but I fancy missed, as it went off at a run, and though we found it tracks, with one forefoot digging into the ground and the other not touching at all, we never succeeded in bagging it. It appears that the bear must have passed me when I was asleep and been drinking when the Major, getting tired of waiting and nothing else turning up fired at a boar which was drinking at his waterhole at the same time. His shot must have awaken me up and frightened the bear at the same time; hence its hurry.

UP-COUNTRY.

THE NEW ZEALAND KEAS.

HAVING for four years tried to get some photographs of keas, and also some live birds and eggs, I readily accepted an invitation from Mr. K. Murchison to visit Glenthorn, the last station back up the Wilberforce, where from past experience, I knew that I should receive every kindness and assistance. There are, moreover, at Glenthorn several keas, more or less tame, kept as call birds, and these would be invaluable. From behind the homestead, a steep broken range runs away up in Wilberforce, broken every mile or so by deep gullies, partly bush clad, and partly bare rock and shingle. In one of these ravines, appropriately named the Jagged Spur Gully, I had years ago seen several keas, and it was there that I decided to go on my latest trip.

Saturday morning, 11th January, therefore, found me in the train for Glentunnel, whence I was driven to Mr. Phillips's station, The Point. There I met a friend, H., of Wanganui, and, in company with him let The Point on Tuesday for Lake Coleridge, Mr. Phillips kindly lending us a buggy and a nice tame horse for the journey up the Glenthorn and back.

At Lake Coleridge we were hospitably received by Mrs. Murchison, and, staying there over Wednesday, we left on Thursday afternoon for Glenthorn, eighteen miles further on. Reaching the Harper river we found the crossing extremely rough, all the ford having been washed away, so we decided to leave the buggy on this side and pack our swag the remaining three miles. Arriving at Glenthorn we learned that Mr. K. Murchison was away mustering. On Friday we were very busy making traps and cages to carry our call birds. About midday the musterers came in, our host among them, and we learned that they were going up the Wilberforce on Sunday to camp at a gully about two miles past the Jagged Spur, so we made arrangements to have our swag dropped en route. On Saturday afternoon H. and I started off up a spur behind the homestead with a call bird and three traps, which we set in a shingle slip. Our traps were cages of wire netting shaped like a pudding-bowl, and we simply propped them up with a "figure four," which we baited with a piece of meat. The call bird we placed near the traps, so as to attract the wild keas from a distance.

Before breakfast on Sunday we climbed to our traps, but no keas had been there, so we gathered things together and went back to the house. The call bird, which had never been in a small cage before, and was very wild when we first put her in the evening before, had got quite used to her surroundings, and had learned how to hang on with her feet and beak, so that she was not knocked about when being carried. It is marvellous how quickly a kea will adapt itself to circumstances. This particular bird, after I had carried her on my back for five or six hours, got so accustomed to the motion that she would call softly to herself, or eat snow berries out of my hand as we went along. If the climbing was rough, and the cage temporarily upside down, she would brace herself with feet and beak, and quietly wait until she was righted. So quiet indeed did she become, and so docile, that we called her Angela.

On Sunday afternoon, having got all our goods and chattels together—camera, gun, traps, cages, tent, provisions, etc.—we started off up the Wilberforce on our eight-mile walk to the Jagged Spur Gully. We had put a partition in Angela's cage, and another bird in, and I carried them, as the day was scorching hot and the pack-horse would have jolted them too much. On arrival at our destination, Mr. Murchison helped us pitch our tent on a frame that was fortunately already there, and then, while he went on up the river to the musterers' camp, we climbed up the hillside above our camp to set our traps.

The Jagged Spur Gully is a deep-forked ravine, with steep rocky sides. The western side of the main gully is quite inaccessible, being almost sheer rock, with birch and totara growing in the crevices. The eastern side is covered with bush to a height of about 500 feet, and is then broken rock all up to the top. The side gully is bare, inaccessible rock, towering to the ridge, 7,000 feet up. We chose a rocky promontory with a stunted birch on the end of it for our traps, as it commanded a fine view of the gully, and could be seen from camp. Here we set our traps, and, it being already dusk, returned camp for the night. One of the call birds we kept in a wire-netting run near the tent, and also in sight of the bird up by the traps. The advantage of this was that, if our distant bird saw any others early in the morning, and began calling, the bird at camp would answer, and wake us up.

At about half-past four next morning our ornithological alarm went off, and I got up, and hurried up the mountain side. When half-way up to the traps I heard a wild kea screaming behind me, and, looking round, saw him sailing over to me from across the gully. Almost immediately two others further up answered, and all three presently arrived at the traps. They were a pair and an old male bird, and I sat quietly among the tussock a few yards away, waiting for them to rush joyfully into the traps after the meat. But not a bit of it! After thoroughly inspecting Angela and her cage, and bestowing a casual glance at the traps they came over and subjected me to a searching scrutiny. Finding that I was an object of interest to them, I moved nearer to the traps, and tried in vain to call their attention to the dainty viands displayed therein. It was no use. If I sat quite still they went over and had a chat with Angela, sitting on the roof of her cage the while; if I moved they hopped blithely around me, learning everything they could about me and my ways. The place they didn't hop on was the space covered by the traps. As they came, quite fearlessly, to within a few feet of me, I decided to try to snare them, so I went into a little clump of bush near by to get a rod and a piece of fine creeper for a noose. The keas accompanied me, hopping round in the trees above my head while I cut the stick and prepared my snare. Having got everything ready, I returned to the promontory and squatted quietly down under a big boulder. Almost instantly a head appeared over the edge above me, and the owner of it gave a quiet little call. Another head appeared, and another, and then, within three feet of me, the birds sat and watched me, a whole world of curiosity in their bright little eyes. Gently I raised the snare and brought it towards the middle one. He took no notice until it was almost over his head, and then he quietly took it in his beak and began chewing it. Realizing that I could not snare them, I went halfway down the hill and called to H. to bring up a coil of wire netting that we had. This we used to make a little run, at the entrance of which we placed Angela in her cage, hoping that we could drive the wild birds into it, but half an hour's vain endeavour convinced us of the futility of this scheme. Then I decided that I would return to camp for a camera, so that I could photograph the birds, even though unable to trap them. I descended via a shingle slide, and the noise of the stones rattling down with me attracted the birds, which accompanied me down to camp, and when I got back with the camera, only one had returned. The sun by this time risen over the mountain behind us, and the day was bright and hot. Everything was propitious for good pictures, but before I had the camera ready the bird flew, screaming, up the gully. Very disappointed and hot we returned to camp.

That evening at four o'clock we again climbed to the traps. Shortly after our arrival we saw a bird, and I called it down, when it proved to be the unattached male of the morning, readily distinguished by the state of his moult. We set a trap out on a ledge of rock, evening up the surface with small stones. The bird came down, and, taking the stones one by one, dropped them over the edge. Next, standing well outside the trap, he began chewing one of the sticks, with the result that the cage fell down. It was very laughable, but it scared the kea, and he flew away, nor did we see him again.

Next morning, at five, I was again at the traps, and the pair of birds returned. They hopped round as before, and presently, taking no notice of me, they began billing and cooing on a rock, very much after the style of tame pigeons. Then the female flew on to the top of a dead totara stump, and the male settled just below her, and held up his head while she scratched it with her bill. If she stopped, he bit her foot, whereupon she would go on again. At last the male bird, quite unable to resist the temptation of a large piece of bread with some raspberry stains on it, went into the trap. While I was taking him out, his mate sat on top of a neighbouring birch tree, and screamed with extraordinary vehemence. Within ten minutes she also went into the trap. I rushed up and grabbed her, though in the light of after events, it appeared to be quite a needless proceeding, as she did all the grabbing that was necessary—she worked overtime on the job, too, it seemed to me.

Later on H. came up, and we decided to shift our traps to a point further up the gully, so we returned to camp, had a breakfast and lunch in one, and started off up the creek. We found that the point we wished to reach was quite inaccessible so we went on climbing, until, at 8 P.M., we got on to a ridge several thousand feet above our camp, having caught a young male kea on the way up. We reached camp at about a quarter to ten, and, too tired to cook any food, ate bread and sugar, and turned in, only to turn out again in order to prop and stay our tent up in a howling nor'-west gale until four next morning. That day, the musterers came in, and we returned with them to Glenthorn. Two days later we came back to Lake Coleridge, and there turned our birds out into a cage with four birds they have there. The row those birds made all night attracted two wild ones down, and I shot them in the morning. That evening I decided to go on to a mountain, about three miles from the house, and try for some birds there. Mr. D. Murchison went with me, and almost immediately on our arrival caught two birds, an old and particularly vicious male, and a young female. As it was coming up a misty sou'-wester—good for birds—we decided to stay out all night, and set about cutting some manuka and tussock for a bed, which we placed alongside a big rock.

Before dawn I was awakened by more calling, and went up to our traps. A bird came over and began calling, but would not come near the traps, staying down by the male bird we had caught before. I went back and saw her, with tail spread and wings drooping, run to the edge of a bluff and fly off into the ravine without a sound. I guessed immediately that she had a nest, and as soon as there was enough light we started looking for it. When we were just giving up hope of finding it, and were going to turn the male bird loose and follow him, we heard the female call away down in the bottom of a big rock slip, and I caught a glimpse of her as she moved. Hurrying to the spot, we found a lot of loose feathers and droppings, which indicated the presence of a nest. We soon located it, in a long hole, the entrance of which was formed by two enormous boulders, which leaned against one another, forming a triangular space, partly blocked by a third stone. This latter we removed by using a thick vine as a rope, and after much scratching and scraping I reached in, and striking a match, saw the bird on her nest. More scraping and digging among the small stones and earth, and then I reached in, but quickly withdrew my hand, minus a small piece of the middle finger. I then wrapped a handkerchief round my hand, and very soon had the bird out. I handed her to Mr. Murchison to hold, and she immediately took a piece out of his coat and clawed him pretty thoroughly, but my attention was on the nest, and, to my joy, I found four pure white eggs. They were laid on the ground among a few chips of rotten wood and bark, about five feet from the entrance of the hole.

More than satisfied with our night's work, we returned to the Lake, and that afternoon H. and myself, with many thanks for the hospitality and assistance we had received, left for The Point, en route for home.—EDGAR F. STEAD in the New Zealand Weekly Press.

THE MEASUREMENT OF POLO PONIES.

SIR,—The question of the measurement of polo ponies has for the last few weeks been occupying the attention of all owners who have unmeasured ponies which they hope to play during next cold weather.

"Rockfeller" whose article you copied into your columns a week or two ago has succeeded in drawing the I.P.A. which can be seen from the tone of the letters (obviously inspired) which have occupied the front page of the Pioneer.

The whole trouble I think is this, that the I.P.A. does not represent the interests of the majority, but rather of the wealthy few, who can afford to pay fancy prices for their ponies, and to whom money is no object.

The reason for introducing an official measurer can only be ascribed to jealousy of the native cavalry; the present opinion seems to be that there are so many small horses in the native cavalry which can be played at polo that it gives them an unfair advantage.

If desired to really reduce the size of ponies playing the only possible way of doing it is to measure just before a tournament and make the height a strict 14-3. As otherwise the largest ponies will always be those purchased raw in Bombay or Calcutta, for they are measured immediately on landing after a long voyage and will always have an inch or so the advantage of other ponies from the fact of having undergone what amounts to a severe preparation for measurement on boardship. The "wealthy few" to whom I have before referred have neither time, inclination, or in a great many cases the ability to train for themselves and they are practically without an exception driven to buy their ponies from native cavalry and for this privilege they have to pay heavily, and it is only human nature after all if they think that by putting in an official measurer and making certain rules they will be causing annoyance and getting a bit of their own back.

The only advantage I have had of being a member of the I. P. A. C. is to have had my ponies measured at a cost of Rs. 10 per pony and to be told that this measuring fee is practically the chief source of income and goes to defray the cost of keeping up the grounds where the championships are played. Personally I have never seen these grounds and if I did happen to go and see (say the Inter-regimental) should have to pay heavily for the privilege.

I personally think that polo in India would be improved if the I. P. A. was kept for the wealthy few who could pay an enhanced subscription, while the rest of the polo-playing public cut adrift and framed rules and regulations of their own.

Or else if the I. P. A. be abolished, after having left its calendars as a memento of the good work it has done in years gone by.

One of the great cries of the powers that be is the reduction of expenditure and at present it is not safe to have a unrepresentative committee who have it in their power to frame rules which are so liable to seriously affect the purses of owners.

If this discussion had occurred in any other country except India the matter would have been settled long ago by the civil element; as it is red tape has stepped in and everyone is afraid of protesting or taking his own line for fear of treading on the toes of someone who may have different opinions and who might be his senior in the service.

I should very much like to hear from any one of the same way of thinking as myself.

VANDERBILT.

NORTHERN ASSURANCE COMPANY.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS.

To the Seventy-second Annual General Meeting of the Northern Assurance Company, to be held within their house at Aberdeen, on Wednesday, the 6th day of May 1908.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Premiums received last year amounted to £1,268,468, showing, in comparison with the premiums of the previous year, an increase of £40,510.

The Losses incurred amounted to £622,876, or 49·1 per cent. of the premiums. The general average of the experience of the Company from the beginning is now 58·7 per cent., or including its provision for losses on current risks, 61·1 per cent.

The Expenses of Management (including Commission to Agents and Charges of every kind) came to £444,053, or 35·0 per cent. of the premiums, a ratio 1·1 more than that of the previous year.

The result is that, after charging the Account with £634,234, being 50 per cent. of the premiums of the year, and crediting it with £613,979, the amount similarly charged in 1906, there remains a credit balance of £181,284 which, as usual, has been transferred to the Profit and Loss Account.

LIFE DEPARTMETN.

Assurance Branches.—During the year 1,248 Policies were issued for New Assurances, amounting in the aggregate, after deduction of Re-assurances, to £482,356. Of this sum £209,174 was for Endowment Assurances payable at death or on the attainment of a specified age, and £19,339 for Ordinary Endowments payable at a fixed date. These new Assurances yielded Annual Premiums amounting to £15,887, and Single Premiums amounting to £8,965.

The Income of the year from Premiums was £289,327, and from Interest (less Income Tax) £138,148.

The Claims amounted to £283,807, of which the sum of £84,022 was for Endowments and Endowment Assurance payable during Life.

The Expenses of Management (including Commission) were limited, in the two Life Accounts to 10 per cent., and in the Endowment Account to 5 per cent., of the premiums received.

Annuity Branch.—The sum of £76,834 was received for Annuities granted during the year.

The Funds of the Life Department now amount to £4,816,467, showing an increase for the year of £132,696.

ACCIDENT DEPARTMENT.

The Premiums received during the year were :—
£24,159 in the Employers' Liability Section.
£11,307 in the General Section.

The Losses incurred were :—
£5,542 in the Employers' Liability Section.
£3,477 in the General Section.

The Expenses of Management (including Commission) were :—
£6,530 in the Employers' Liability Section.
£2,242 in the General Section.

After setting aside 50 per cent. of the Premiums of the year to provide for liability under current risks the results were a Profit of £8 in the Employers' Liability Section and a Loss of £66 in the General Section. These sums have been carried to the credit and debit respectively of the Profit and Loss Account.

Although very full provision has been made in the Accounts, not only for Claims which have actually arisen but also for liability under unexpired risks, the Directors are of the opinion that there should be a small fund to meet special contingencies, and they accordingly recommend that the sum of £5,000 should be transferred to each Section of the Department.

PROFIT AND LOSS.

The Balance of the Profit and Loss Account is ...		£309,494 16 8

DIRECTORS.

The Directors have to report with great regret the death of Mr. Alexander Charles Pirie, who had been a member of the Aberdeen Board since June 1881. The vacancy thus caused has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Francis James Cochran, of the firm of Cochran and Macpherson, Advocates, Aberdeen. This gentleman now retires, in accordance with the Company's Act of Parliament, but offers himself for re-election by the Shareholders.

The Directors who retire by rotation on this occasion are :—From the Aberdeen Board, Sir David Stewart and Mr. Ledingham, and from the London Board, Messrs. Chalmers, Jackson, and Bonsor. All these gentlemen offer themselves for re-election.

LOCAL BOARDS AND COMMITTEES.

The Directors regret having to report the following deaths of members of Local Boards and Committees :—
Hon. James Bell, of the Melbourne Board.
Mr. Wilfrid Williams, of the Birmingham Committee.
Sir John Milburn, Bart., of the Newcastle Committee.

They have also to report the resignation of Mr. George Fairbairn, of the Melbourne Board.

To fill some of the vacancies thus created, and vacancies already existing, the Directors have elected the following :—
Messrs. John Proctor Kyd, of Messrs. Shield and Kyd, Solicitors, and Charles Clark Duncan, of Messrs. David Duncan and Son, Solicitors, to the Dundee Board.
Messrs. George Bell, of Messrs. James Bell and Company, and Harry Howard Smith, Shipowner, to the Melbourne Board.
Mr. George Macpherson, J.P., of Messrs. Philip Williams and Sons, Tipton, to the Birmingham Committee.
Sir Charles Stamp Milburn, Bart., and Hon. Cyril Arthur Diddell, to the Newcastle Committee.

AUDITORS.

Mr. Andrew Davidson and Mr. T. A. Welton, the Auditors, retire, but offer themselves for re-election.

NEW ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

The Bill approved by the Shareholders at the Special Meeting held on 12th February, 1908, is still under the consideration of Parliament, and the Directors hope that it will be finally adopted with but few modifications.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 29th May 1908.

GATWICK.

THERE was no mistake about the weather on Saturday the 23rd instant, a bright afternoon appealing equally to visitors from London and London-super-Mare. The holiday folk went out in rare force, and a good attendance testified to the popularity of this charming fixture which in years to come will be one of the most lovely spots in the racing repertoire. The arrival list had been materially supplemented, and big fields kept the ball rolling merrily, while a capital service of trains met with liberal patronage; and the executive can shake hands with themselves on the success which this up-to-date firm always deserves, and generally commands. The weather was perfect, the going, thanks to Mr. Hook's careful supervision, was in capital trim while fields ruled well, and sport was of an exciting order. Details:—

YORK.

ALTHOUGH the weather was dull at York, on Tuesday the rain fortunately held off, much to the satisfaction of sportsmen, who, on reaching the course, found that the executive were taking good care of their comfort, as the whole of the stands and enclosures look like being improved by the August fixture, and Doncaster will then have to look to its laurels. The attendance was a good one in every particular, the rank, fashion, and beauty of the county assembled in the new enclosure and the sport-loving public packed them up, the two rings in the paddock in the same style as Chester being much appreciated. Details:—

TENNIS.

OLYMPIC TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP.—Mr. Jay Gould, of America, and Mr. Eustace Miles, of the British Isles, fought their amateur tennis championship battle over again at Queen's Club on Saturday, the 23rd instant, when they met in the final of the Olympic tournament. The result was the same, for once more the American won, this being the fourth successive occasion on which he has beaten Mr. Miles.

Mr. Miles made a great fight of it, and though beaten by 3 sets to love he led at 5 to 2 in the first set, by 3 to 2 in the second, and was level in each of the last two sets at 4 all. It was, however, another instance of youth being served, for though Mr. Miles played equally good tennis, and got up almost everything, he lacked power in his returns at times, and gave his opponent several easy chances of killing the ball going for the winning openings, of which Mr. Gould frequently availed himself.

Mr. Miles undoubtedly did himself better justice than in his previous matches this season, but he is not quite so good as he was. On the other hand, another year has given the American increased strength and experience, and he is now a most brilliant player.

The result was: Mr. Jay Gould beat Mr. E. H. Miles by 3 sets to love—6—5, 6—4, and 6—4.

GOLF.

THE AMATEUR INTERNATIONAL.—At Sandwich on Saturday the 23rd instant, the Amateur International Golf match once again resulted in a victory for Scotland, England being beaten by 5 points to 4. Only two of last year's competitors were included in the English team. On the other hand, Scotland were represented by six of the side that inflicted so severe a defeat on the English players a twelvemonth before, and had Maxwell and Blackwell been at Sandwich they, too, would have been included.

The scores were:—

ST. GEORGE'S CHALLENGE CUP.—At Sandwich, on the 22nd instant, the 36 holes open amateur stroke competition for the St. George's grand challenge cup was concluded, in boisterous weather. A strong south-westerly wind, which prevailed at the start, increased in force as the day wore on, and severely troubled the competitors on the homeward journey. Many who did well as far as the turn broke down coming in. Seven was a common figure at the fourteenth hole, and at the new short sixteenth where, in the teeth of the wind, a full drive was necessary, many players took a cleek and fell far short of the green.

The result was a win for Mr. A. C. Lincoln, the young South Herts player, with a score of 80 plus 77—157. Mr. Lincoln, an old Cholmeleian, represented England against Scotland at St. Andrews last year, and at South Herts has a handicap of plus 4. He played very steady golf, going out in 39 and coming home in the excellent score of 38. Going to the last hole he wanted a 4 to win the cup, and, after leaving a very long approach put dead, attained his object. His figures were:—

Out: 5, 4, 4, 5, 4, 4, 5, 3, 5—39.
Home: 4, 4, 4, 4, 5, 5, 4, 4, 4—38.

THE LADIES' CHAMPIONSHIP.—The semi-final and final rounds in the ladies' championship were decided at St. Andrews. In the first of the semi-finals Miss Titterton (Musselburgh) beat Miss Leitch (Carlisle and Silloth) after a good game by 1 up. Miss Dorothy Campbell (Musselburgh) and Miss Mather (Tyneside), the other semi-finalists, also had a close match, which was carried to the twentieth green before Miss Campbell could claim the victory.

The final between Miss Titterton and Miss Campbell created great interest. Miss Titterton was behind in the outward half, but had the advantage coming home, and at one time led by three. Miss Campbell, however, managed to get square, and the round ended even. Playing off Miss Titterton won at the nineteenth hole, and became lady champion.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—This event will not be concluded in time to enable me to give you the result in this letter, but I can let you know something about the play in the preliminary rounds at Sandwich. The opening day's golf was made interesting by the last match of the day, in which A. C. Lincoln, the St. George's Vase winner, and a pupil of Harry Vardon, met H. D. Gillies, the Cambridge rowing Blue. These men started actually last, and nearly all the people on the course were eventually absorbed in the following.

Gillies had the angels on his side on the green for the first ten holes, and was then three up. But the intrinsic merit of Lincoln's real golf told in the end, though Gillies before losing took his man to the nineteenth green. Lincoln made a few mistakes, but though he had little luck he never lost his nerve.

Save for this last match of the day, there were few outstanding features in the first round, for the cracks had not run against each other, and those with byes had not to play the second ties until to-morrow. Harold Hilton, "Johnny" Ball and Charles Hutchings—all ex-champions—won their matches, but Horace Hutchinson failed to get through, and was beaten by Stanley Froy. In this first round to-day there were 138 players.

There were some sensational results on the second day. The form shown by both John Ball, the holder, and Vivian Pollock in the first round gave expectations of a great match, but few would have dared to predict a beating of 6 up and 5 to play for Mr. Ball. The largest crowd on the course up to then followed the game. Pollock did the first four holes in 4 each, so that he had an average of one under fours for the thirteen holes. Ball's defeat was attributable in a large measure to weakness on the greens. Pollock, however, played faultless golf, his cleek and iron work being particularly fine.

Another match in the second round which drew great attention was that between H. L. Gaw, of Philadelphia, and J. Gordon Simpson, the Scottish international. On the previous day Gaw had aroused no little comment by his remarkable putting, and time and again yesterday the ball sent from a distance, obediently trickled into the hole. Simpson went out in 36 strokes, yet he turned 2 down. Gaw was playing brilliantly, and some of his iron shots were wonderful, while altogether he gave an extraordinary display of golf.

An extraordinary match was that between Leslie Balfour Melville (the champion of 1895) and Cuthbert Smith. The former lost the first seven holes, yet was beaten only on the home green. Other ex-champions to go under were C. Hutchings (1902), who lost to W. E. Fairlie by 6 and 4, and J. E. Laidlay (1889 and 1891), who was beaten by C. Bell by 2 up. Mr. Gaw had to meet Angus Hambro, one of the longest drivers in Great Britain. As an instance of Mr. Hambro's terrific hitting, it may be mentioned that at the fourteenth he was on the green—a distance of over 500 yards—in 2. Gaw started to press soon after the start, with the result that he topped and sliced several shots. His putting was still sound, but not so brilliant as in the morning, and he was beaten by 2 and 1. The feature of the round was the match between C. A. Palmer and Lionel Munn. With four holes to play, Palmer was 2 down, but at the last green he was square. No fewer than nine holes were then halved in succession, the scores being 643434534. Munn pulled his tee shot at the next, and landed in a bunker, and Palmer secured the hole in 4, and thus won the match at the twenty-eighth hole—a record tie for first-class competitions, although, in a professional tournament in Scotland four years ago, Fernie beat Braid at the 27th, and in the Irish Open Championship last year, Mr. Lurcott took Mr. Fry to the 25th.

On the third day there were only twenty-four matches to be played, and here again we were furnished with surprises, as when that polished golfer, Jack Graham, jun., disposed first of Gallagher (who was formerly in the service of the Royal and Ancient Club, and is now in the service of Lord Dudley), and then the ex-lawn tennis champion, H. L. Doherty felt the power of Graham's genius.

Many were disappointed to find Captain Cecil K. Hutchinson off his game, but he was in good company among the failures. Indeed, bar Graham and Murray, no one putted well during the morning.

It was Murray's super-excellence on the green that gave him the victory over Vardon's pupil, A. C. Lincoln. But a man brought up on Vardon ought to be able to putt.

The defeat of Gallagher and Andrew disposed of two golfers strongly fancied by the Scottish brigade. Bernard Darwin played the two most brilliant rounds of the day, and he followed up his win over Scott—a man who gave Travis a shaking up four years ago—by easily disposing of Lincoln's conqueror.

G. L. Mellin, the Cambridge "Soccer" footballer, played nice, steady golf, and it was an immense triumph for him to beat Angus Hambro, whose terrfic long game for once failed him.

Pollock, after beating Andrew in the morning, had a great game in the afternoon with the veteran, C. E. Dick. Pollock never found his game going out, but after turning three down he squared the match at the sixteenth. The game was taken to the twentieth green, where Dick won.

The sixth and semi-final rounds were decided yesterday with the result that two young English players, H. E. Taylor and E. A. Lassen, will contest the final round of 36 holes today. The last of the Scottish representatives were defeated when Taylor put out the favourite, Jack Graham, and Mr. Lassen, the Yorkshire ex-champion, beat C. E. Dick. Details of yesterday's play:—

SIXTH ROUND.

J. Graham, jun. (R. Liverpool) beat P. Bishop (Wiedernesse), 1 hole up.

H. E. Taylor (Richmond) beat H. S. Colt (Sunningdale) at the 19th hole

E. A. Lassen (Lytham and St. A.) bt G. L. Mellin (Beckenham), 3 and 2.

C. E. Dick (R. Liverpool) beat B. R. M. Darwin (Woking), 3 and 2.

SEMI-FINALS.

H. E. Taylor beat J. Graham, jun., 4 and 3.

E. A. Lassen beat C. E. Dick, 2 and 1.

The final tie over 36 holes will be begun at 10·15 this morning.

I must reluctantly leave the most interesting stages of the tournament and complete results for next week.

ATHLETICS.

SHRUBB'S ATTEMPT AT RECORD.—At Ibrox Park, Glasgow, on Saturday last Alfred Shrubb made an attempt on the twelve miles record. The meeting was under the auspices of the Rangers Football Club, and in addition to Shrubb's effort there were also two short handicaps on the programme. Shrubb arrived in Glasgow on Friday, and just before beginning on Saturday he stated that he was in the best of condition. On making his appearance he was loudly cheered, and for pacemakers he had Sid Jones (London), A. Haddon (Midcalder), and R. A. Davidson (Motherwell). G. B. Tincler was also to have acted as pacemaker, but was prevented by indisposition. Shrubb ran splendidly throughout, but it was early seen that previous records would remain, the undernoted times showing what the champion did:—

Miles	Shrubb's previous best	Saturday's	Times.
1	No time given	M. 4	S. 47¼.
2	M. S. *9 9⅘	 9	55.

10	*50 40⅘	 53	18.
11	*56 24⅗	 58	51½.
12	No time given	 64	18⅗.

Shrubb's previous best times were done in events associated with the distances only, and not in a twelve miles race. One of his chief objects on Saturday was to beat the professional one hour record made by Harry Watkins at Rochdale in 1899, when he covered 11 miles 1,286 yards. On that occasion Watkins was paced by a cyclist, and with better pacing arrangements than he had on Saturday Shrubb might yet beat Watkins's record. On Saturday Shrubb appeared wonderfully fresh at the finish, and the crowd heartily cheered him for his plucky effort. It may be mentioned that Shrubb considers the Ibrox track one of the fastest he has gone over.

S. L. H. MARATHON TRIAL.—The road race which the South London H. held on Saturday, the 23rd instant, from Eton to Wembley was designed to afford those who considered that they were unable to do themselves justice under the adverse conditions which attended the Polytechnic H. trial on 25th April, an opportunity of demonstrating what they were really capable of doing on a day when the weather was expected to be more like that of July, when the Marathon race is to be decided, and very properly members of the Selection Committee for the Olympic Games gave the event their countenance and assistance. The winner turned up in J. B. Powell, S.L.H., who ran a game race all the way, and finished comparatively strong. In the Polytechnic trial he was placed sixteenth in 2 hours 31mins. 26secs. for 23 miles, so that his Saturday's performance was rather the better one of the two. Either R. S. Bugg, of Salford H., or A. E. Wooller, Brighton and County H., ought, however, to have won. Both were fancied, but their judgment was at fault. The Brighton runner ran below the form he showed in the Polytechnic trial, when he was twelfth in faster time, and so did F. Long, of Reading. Powell's time bears no comparison with that of A. Duncan on 25th April. Result:—

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 4th June.—Municipal Crossing 7 A.M. A jack was found almost at once, sitting on the hill side above New Covert; he was enjoying the sunshine, and not worrying himself about hounds until they were close up to him. He made off over the hill and down the other side to Blackmore Vale. With hounds so close to his brush it seemed impossible for him to save it. But increasing his pace as he crossed Pearl Crossing he just managed to slip into Rally Wood; coming out at the top he ran into Sheffield, then Parlock and Bluegums, where he dwelt for a short while, and then slipped away at the bottom in the direction of Staircase with Paradox, far ahead of the rest of the pack, not far behind him. He ran through Staircase Shola over the ridge and down on to the New Road, along it and into Lower Briar. Hounds hunting well, pushed him through and on into Bacon Wood, Bungalow Shola over the hill into Chemmund, at the top of which he turned sharply back and ran straight down to the bottom and away to the Yemmakal Stream which he crossed and made up One Tree Hill, his point being Yemmakal Shola; quitting this he made off over the ridge into Devil's Dyke, where he beat hounds. A jack was seen running the New Road; thinking it might be the hunted one, the Master took the pack over; picking up the line they carried it past the Tin Hut into Lower Staircase, where they could make nothing more of it. The first part of the chase was a merry one lasting over an hour and forty minutes; the going was good on the grass, more rain is badly wanted. There was quite a large gathering at the meet which included their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, Miss Lawley, Mr. R. E Lawley, Captain Duff, Captain Elwes, Miss Harding, Major and Mrs. Younghusband, Major Hinge, Colonel Afsur-ul-Mulk, and his young son, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Taylor, Mr. Score Smyth, Mr. Thornton, Miss Stickney, Miss Rolfe, Miss Romilly, Mr. Packenham Walsh, Mr. Cresswell, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell, Mr. de la Hey and Minor Zemindars, Mr. Irwin, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. S. Browne, Mrs. Henderson, Colonel and Miss Gordon Price, Mrs. and Miss Forsyth, Major Johnston, Mr. A. A. Dangar, Captain Dangar, Captain and Mrs. Vaughan Edwards, Mr. Handcock, Miss Gales, Miss Hammick, Mr. Hope Johnstone, Major Napier, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Colin Mackenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips, Mr. Porteous, Mr. O'Dwyer, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, Mr. Phillips, Colonel Lawless, Mrs. Cowie (on foot), Captain Lambton, Miss Carmichael, etc., etc.

Saturday, 6th June.—Windy Gap at 7 A.M. Hero and Wapshare's Hare were blank; in the bog below Wenlock hounds picked up a line and carried it into the Shola; coming out at the far side below the Pykara Road, they ran on into Khed; through it and over the Pykara Falls Road, they held on along the ridge and up Kengodu Hill just above the shola of that name. Swinging to the right they skirted Glin's Covert and pointed for Dunsandle. A sharp turn to the right brought them away through Kengod Mund and Badankod Mund over the Badankod Stream and up the steep hill on the other side where the jack was viewed near Warwick Shola. They held on by the wire fence and the ridge between Hamlet and Bracken, then sinking the hill crossed the Pykara bridle Path into Fuddler. The jack was again viewed running up the bog in the direction of Windy Gap; crossing the Pykara Road and leaving Bungalow Shola on the left he plunged down the hill side into Yemmakal Valley and got to ground in a ravine below Chemmund, where he was left. Chemmund was next drawn where a jack was at once on the move; hounds pushed him up to the top; doubling back he came out at the bottom and set his mask for Yemmakal Stream; crossing this stream below One Tree Hill, he made off towards Yemmakal Shola; leaving this, however, on his right he recrossed the Yemmakal Stream at a point below Lower Briar, thence he led off to the left, through Bacon Wood and Bungalow Shola back into Chemmund, through it and over the hill into Dormer. Wheeling to the right he entered Road Shola, where unfortunately a fresh jack was afoot and the pack divided, one lot going away right handed and throwing up, and the others swinging back left handed to the Yemmakal Stream, where they lost their jack.

The field included the following:—Their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, Miss Lawley, Mr. R. E. Lawley, Captain Duff, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell, Mr. A. A. Dangar, Captain Dangar, Miss Dangar, Major Douglas, Mr. Phillips, Miss Rolfe, Mr. F. J. Wilson, Miss Stickney, Miss Romilly, Mr. Mitchell, Colonel Lawless, Mr. Colin Mackenzie, Colonel Hawkins, Captain Lambton, Mrs. Henderson, Mrs. Browne, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. and Miss Forsyth, Mr. Crosswell, two of the minor zemindars and others.

Monday, 8th June.—Ootacamund Club at 10 A.M. The Hunt breakfast at the Club is always one of the most popular fixtures of the season, to-day's attendance being even larger than usual. After breakfast His Excellency Sir Arthur Lawley presented Mr. W. E. Schmidt with a testimonial subscribed for by past and present Members of the Hunt. His Excellency referred to Mr. W. E. Schmidt's length of service as Secretary to the Hunt for the last 44 years and of the admirable work done by this grand old sportsman. Fifty years ago Mr. Schmidt started the Ootacamund Hunt with a bobbery pack, since then he has acted as Master, huntsman, Whip and even kennelman. Last year Mr. Schmidt was obliged to resign owing to ill-health.

"I've lived my life, I'm nearly done,
I've played the game all round,
But I freely admit that the best of my fun,
I owe to the horse and hound."

We then adjourned to the steps of the verandah to be photographed, it was close on 10-30 before a move was made for Brooklands. A stale line was picked up and carried on to the hill above the Toll Bar—quickly warming to it here, hounds dashed down the hill side into Demon Valley, crossed the stream and ran along the side of Rockey, swinging to the right and down to the stream again, they went away over Dove Wilson's crossing to Hanging Shola. After some dodging about the covert the jack came out on the Aramby side and sweeping down the hill he went to ground in a ravine below Brooklands.

The terriers were put in; after a short scrimmage he bolted, taking a line over the hill for Black Bridge short of which he swung to the left and on into Brooklands, right through this and Bingham on to the Sigur Road, and went to ground under the bank, where we were obliged to leave him, although hounds well deserved blood.

The next move was over the Golf Links to Double Crossing, Fifes' and Point to Point Coverts proved blank, then up the Blackmore Vale into Rallywood without success; but Jackal held a jack and hounds went off over the Krurmund Road to Bakie, through it to the botton of Monkey and Leeds then up the slope to Hecuba, where they lost him.

The large field included their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, the Misses Lawley, Mr. R. E. Lawley, Captains Duff, Torrie and Vesey, Captain and Mrs. Elwes, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell, Colonel Lawless, Colonel Afsurul Mulk, Mrs. Russell, Major and Mrs. Younghusband, Major the Hon. and Mrs. Napier, Major Douglas, Mr. L. Phillips, Major Lorie, Mr. N. E. Majoribanks, Mr. Cresswell, Miss Carmichael, Colonel Formby, Miss Morgan, Mrs. S. Browne, Mrs. Henderson, Mr. Harrison, Miss Jesson, Mrs. and Miss Forsyth, Miss Harding, Mrs. Phillips, Miss Gales, Mr. Hope Johnstone, Colonel Hawkins, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Irwin, Major Johnstone, Mr. Kenworthy, Captain Lambton, Mr. Colin Mackenzie, Miss Rolfe, Miss Hammick, Mrs. Porteous, Captain Dangar, Mr. A. A. and Miss Dangar, Mr. De Cattey and Minor Zemindars, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Taylor, Miss Romilly, Mr. Thornton and many others.

Thursday, 11th June.—The Golf House 7 A. M. The monsoon has at last broken! It was a cold wet morning, with the rain coming down steadily as we started for the meet; however it cleared up when we arrived, and the weather promised well. On moving off we crossed the Municipal Stream at Elmherst Corner, and though hounds apparently winded a jack before they got to Mills, the covert was untenanted. We then turned down the Blackmore Vale where a jack was viewed climbing the slopes of New Market, and although not far ahead of them it was with difficulty they owned to his line, but hunting steadily past the top of Rawlins Nullah, the pace improved somewhat, as they sank the hill into Bluegums. Painstakingly they hunted him through this covert and along the nullah below Porlock, past the Todamund and into Governer Shola at Thunbi Turner's crossing, here the jack was viewed not twenty yards ahead of hounds, but the scent was so inferior, that he might have been gone a long time. Reaching the Governor Shola Road he turned along it, and ran it for over a mile, then swung right handed down the valley below Martyn's, doubling back into Bluegums, where they lost him. We then drew Lower Staircare, and on below the Tin Hut into Briar, without success. Crossing the Back Staircase Road and down along the Yemmakal stream hounds spoke to a line; swinging right handed below Bacon Wood, the pace gradually improved as they ran through the corner of Bungalow Shola, pointing for Hero; short of this, however, they turned over the top of Bacon Wood, down into Lower Briar, where they hesitated for a moment but spoke to it again by the side of the Yemmakal Stream, crossed the stream and headed for Hungerford Hill short of which they doubled back down the Devil's Dyke. Getting a view at him hounds raced across the Yemmakal passing Bacon Wood with a leftward turn the straight down the valley of the Yemmakal Stream, till just below Irwins clump, they wheeled sharp to the right up the hill as if for Chemmund, but leaving Dormer on their right, they hunted him into Road Shola and back into Dormer, where he beat them, and so home.

The field included their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, the Misses Lawley, Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell, Capt. and Mrs. Vaughan Edwards, Capt. Lambton, Mr. De la Hey and the Minor Zemindars, Mrs. Gordon Price, Capt. Duff, Miss Rolfe, Miss Giles, Mr. L. E. Thornton, Mr. Hope Johnstone, Mr. W. Phillips, Mr. L. Phillips, Mr. Mitchell, Miss Hammick, Major the Hon. Napier, Major Hinge, Col. Hawkins, Mr. Cresswell, Capt. Elwes, Capt. Torrie, Mr. Yorks, etc., etc.

THE BERESFORD TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS vs. PATIALA.—The tournament was concluded on the 10th instant under most favourable circumstances. There was a large attendance, including their Excellencies Lord and Lady Minto, and Lord Kitchener. The Commander-in-Chief's Staff dispensed hospitality and the 10th Hussars' band provided the music. The weather was perfect and the game hotly contested from start to finish, Patiala eventually winning by 3 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—Even play till Patiala got away and a long shot by Sewa Singh was successful.

Second Chukker.—The Dragoons attacked and after one shot had been stopped they got through and equalised. Shortly after they missed another opportunity of scoring.

Third Chukker.—Patiala pressed but could not get through the Dragoons' defence, a foul against Patiala gave the Dragoons a free hit but it was not improved upon and the chukker ended without score.

Fourth Chukker.—Another pointless period. Patiala lost two chances of scoring.

Fifth Chukker.—Even play was followed by a good run down by Weinholt which culminated in a goal. Patiala then attacked and Chanda Singh equalised with a somewhat lucky shot.

Sixth Chukker.—Level play, an unsuccessful run by the Dragoons and then Patiala attacked and put in two abortive shots. They continued the attack and at length scored a third goal. There was no more scoring, Patiala thus winning by 3 goals to 2. Teams:—

CRICKET IN DARJEELING.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE vs. ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—Played on the Shubbery ground on the 9th and 10th instant, the North Point boys winning easily. St. Paul's won the toss, but elected to field, and Cameron and G. Boscolo opened the North Point innings The College batted steadily and some good performances were witnessed, Onraet's 73 was compiled in fine style, while Holloway, Cameron and Bray all put together good scores, the innings closing for 237. The school then went in, but were dismissed for 63, to which Shaw contributed 31, and Duncan the only other to reach double figures, 14. Willmott trundled with great effect, taking seven wickets with an average of 5 runs each. Following on St. Paul's lost four wickets before they had scored 10 runs when play closed for the day. On Wednesday their ill-luck continued and they were all out for 83, Gregory's 33 being top score. Cameron took six wickets for 48 runs. St. Joseph's College thus won by an innings and 91, runs. BOMBAY HARWOOD LEAGUE.

ROYAL SCOTS "B." vs. GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Played on the 9th instant the Scots having the best of the game. They won by 2 goals to nil and might have scored oftener, but their shooting was poor. D. Ross scored in the first half and netted a second goal on changing ends. Teams:—

ROYAL SCOTS.—Underdown, goal; Finnigan, and Foster, backs; Papps, Hill, and Legan, half-backs; Wright, D. Ross, G. Ross, Mackintosh and Parker, forwards.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Cook, goal; Edwards, and Nicholas, backs; Woolen, Critchley, and Taylor, half-backs; Holman, Vase, Cooper, Lambert and Cottrill, forwards.

Referee—Lieutenant Cudlip.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. Y. M. C. A.—These teams met on the 10th instant, the game ending in a draw. The Y. M. C. A. had the best of the opening exchanges and G. Brewin scored a goal. Then the Gymkhana attacked, the culminating shot striking the post. A corner against the Gymkhana was the next item of importance but it was not improved upon and even play closed the first half. The Young Men attacked once more after the interval and almost scored on more than one occasion. But the Gymkhana improved and an invasion of the Y. M. C. A. territory resulted in Christie putting the teams level The Gymkhana continued to press and Rose was called upon to save several hot shots. He was equal to them all and play was shortly transferred: the Y. M. C. A. were attacking when time was called with the score one all. Teams:—

Y. M. C. A.—Rose, goal; C. Templeton, and Kelly, backs; Quinn, Gradwell and Rowbotham, half-backs; Jagar, Darwin. G. Brewin, H. Templeton, and T. Brewin, forwards.

GYYMKHANA:—Thompson, goal; Elliot and Morries, backs; Busy Hall and Sim, half-backs; F. Evans, Christie, Ward, Cole and Mole, forwards.

ROVERS vs. R. G. A.—Played on the 11th instant, a poor game resulting in a win for the Gunners by three goals to nil. The Rovers had a scratch team out, several of their players failing to put in an appearance. The game was further spoiled by rain.

ROYAL SCOTS "B." vs. COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—This game was played on the 12th instant and the Scots having the upper hand all through won by three goals to nil. A. Ross, Mackintosh and D. Ross were responsible for the scoring. The Commercial Gymkhana were playing their first game, and though their display was poor, they give promise of better things. Teams:—

ROYAL SCOTS "B."—Underdown, goal; Foster and Finnigan (Capt.), backs; Lakin, Hill and Papps, half-backs; Parkes, Mackintosh, A. Ross, D. Ross and Wright, forwards.

Referee:—B. Christie

ROYAL SCOTS "A." vs. Y. M. C. A.—Played on Saturday. In spite of the rain and the heavy, slippery ground the first half was evenly contested. The Scots scored through Bolton. On resuming after the interval play continued level for a spell. Then the Scots asserted themselves and attacking for the remainder of the game scored three more goals, Bolton, Kennaway and Girdwood registering the points. They thus won by 4 goals to nil. Teams:—

Y. M. C. A.—Rose, goal; Kelly and Rowbottom, backs; Quinn, Jaeger, and MacVarden, half-backs; Pierce, Dowling, G. Brewin, H. Templeton, and T Brewin, forwards.

ROYAL SCOTS "A."—Robertson, goal; Williams and Henderson, backs; Kellier, Driscoll, and Lamont, half-backs; Pringle, Kennaway, Girdwood, Bolton, and Martin, forwards.

Referee:—G. Walton.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION 1.

DALHOUSIE vs. RANGERS.—These teams gave a poor display when they met in their return league engagement on the 10th instant. The Rangers had rather the best of the first half, but missed opportunities of scoring. The Dals did most of the attacking after the interval, but they were quite off colour, and the game ended in a pointless draw. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Murdoch, goal; Storrie, and Dunn, backs; Beadle, and Lees, Evans, halves; Halley, Dalling (jr.), Dalling (sr.), Wright and Burnett, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal; Minnet, and Postence, backs; Skempton, Cody, and Anscombe, halves; Hazlebrooke, Tripp, Bennett, Little and McNeil, forwards.

Referee—W. J. Hounsel.

GORDON'S vs. CALCUTTA.—The Soldiers were expected to win when they met Calcutta in the return league match on the 10th instant. The game was played in the Fort and was all in favour of the Gordons who kept the Calcutta defence busy most of the time. Cooper, Gahan, O'Shea and Dods acquitted themselves well but the Highlanders got through and scored three times—Foreman and McCoy putting through in the first half, McClaymont after the interval. Team :—

GORDONS.—Insch, goal; Montgomery, and Aitken, backs; Spence, Graham, and Harper, halves; Galletly, McClayton, McKay, Foreman, and McDougal, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Dods, goal; V. Cooper, and Grahan, backs; Stuart, O'Shea, and Crawford, halves; Binning, McDonald Smith, H. Sherman, Kingcome, and Oliver, orfwards.

Referee—Sergeant Curley.

HIGHLAND L. I. vs. CALEDONIANS.—Playing on their own ground on Saturday last, the Caledonians lost to the Dum-Dum team by 3 goals to nil. The Soldiers did most of the attacking, but the first half was devoid of score. On changing ends Devlin netted the first goal and Collins added two more from penalty kicks—the first against J. Stoddart for tripping, the other against R. Stoddart for handling the ball. The Caledonians were unable to score. Teams:—

H. L. I.—Lees, goal; Tait, Cameron, backs; Scollins, Scevity and Collins, halves; Collins, Marshall, Devlin, Duncan and Innes, forwards.

CALEDONIAN.—Anscombe, goal; J. Stoddart, and Wilson, backs; Grout, and R. Stoddart, halves; James, A. N. other Apcar, Tob inand Clegg, forwards.

Referee—Mr. M. Remfry.

RANGERS vs. Y.M.C.A.—The Rangers scored their first victory of the season when they beat the Young Men last Saturday by 2 goals to nil. They each scored a goal in the first half, and the winning point was scored by Postence from a mêlee in front of the Y. M. C. A. goal shortly before time.

GORDONS vs. CUSTOMS.—A fast and well contested game between these teams last Saturday ended in a win for the Gordons by two goals to nil. The Customs lost a chance of scoring at the start and it was not long before the Soldiers opened their account. Montgomery netting from a free kick, McCoy added a second point a little later, and the Gordons crossed over leading by two goals to nil. The Fort team had the larger share of the game during the second half, but the Customs defence was sound and there was no further score. Teams :—

GORDONS.—Insch, goal; Aitken, and Montgomery, backs; Harper, Graham and Spence, halves; Galletly, McClaymant, McCoy, Foreman, and McDougall, forwards.

Referee—Mr. G. V. Wade.

DALHOUSIE vs. CALCUTTA.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday, Calcutta just scraping home by a goal to nil after a good game. The home team pressed during the opening exchanges and then Calcutta took up the attack, and the Dals. were kept busy defending during the rest of the first half. H. M. Sherman scored a fine goal from a centre by his brother; Dalling had a good chance of equalising, but sent over the bar. On crossing over the home team made great efforts to get on terms, both goals were visited, but the custodians kept their charges intact, and the game ended as stated. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Dods, goal; Gahan, and Cooper, backs; Campbell, O'Shea and Crawford, halves; Binning, H. M. Sherman, Kingcome, V. Sherman and Oliver, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Hendry, goal; Storrie. and Dunn, backs; Beadle, Lees and Morrison, halves; Burnett, Dalling, Holley, Wright and Gibson, forwards.

Referee—Mr. A. B. Rosser.

Y. M. C. A. vs. CALEDONIA.—A very poor exhibition of football was witnessed on the Y. M. C. A. ground on Tuesday, the visitors eventually winning by a goal to nil, the point being scored during the last few minutes of the game in semi-darkness. Neither side was at full strength.

DIVISION 2.

GORDONS "B" vs. WANDERERS.—Played on the 11th instant, ending in a draw one all, The first half was pointless, but after the interval, Peters scored from a free kick and Mackenzie equalised for the Gordons shortly after.

GORDONS "B." vs. R. G. A.—Played on Monday, a hard game resulting in a win for the Gordons by a goal to nil.

ST. XAVIERS vs. SIBPUR.—Played on the St. Xavier's ground on Monday, the home team winning by 2 goals to 1. D'Silva and Green scored for the winners, Payne for Sibpur.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THERE can be no mistake about the monsoon this time. The overcast skies and damp oppressive atmosphere of the past week culminating in the downpour on Tuesday and Wednesday leave no room for doubt that the real article is with us at last, and that from now on football will undergo a great change of style. The well-trained, tuned-up team scores in this kind of weather where the merely flashy lot fails ignominiously and it is safe to predict some sensational reversals of form. Up to the present scarcely a single League Match has been played on a wet ground this season with a heavy sodden ball, and much curiosity naturally exists as to the form which the present Calcutta champions, the Gordon Highlanders, will display under these conditions. From the player's point of view, the advent of the rains cannot be too heartily welcomed, but not so the spectator who, in his keenness, must now have resort to the torturesome discomfort of the waterproof and the searching drip of the umbrella with which the man behind always manages to titillate his victim's vertebrae.

Of the seven matches played since the last appearance of these notes, the Gordons-Calcutta match on Wednesday, the 10th, and the Dalhousie-Calcutta match last Saturday, appealed chiefly to the public who, as usual, turned out in their thousands. A good number of innocents were quite unwarrantably snubbed when they tried to get into Fort William to see Calcutta play the Gordons. But it is only natural that the Regiment should be bashful about having such a travesty of a ground and should desire to let as few people as possible see what a dreadful desert it is. The Gordons made short work of Calcutta who, for some reason or other, put out an exceptionally weak team with one or two obvious eleventh hour substitutes. The game was witnessed with extreme discomfort by a large crowd of civilian spectators, who were scarcely impressed with the seating arrangements made for so important a match. If the Gordons insist on playing inside the Fort they might certainly have courtesy to provide some sort of convenience for visitors who come in to see the games. To return to Wednesday's match: from what could be seen of the play when the dust clouds settled down temporarily it was evident that the civilian team was outplayed at all points, especially in the half-back line. The Calcutta forwards never got past their first line of defence, whilst the back division seemed completely off its game. The result of this match seals the fate of Calcutta in so far as the League is concerned, and the Gordons are now as safe as houses for the Walter Lock Cup.

It is interesting at this point in the League to compare results of return matches with those of the first meetings earlier in the season. Caledonia, who could only draw with Customs (0-0) at the first time of asking, went under by a goal to nil in the return match after a hard if unscientific game. Dalhousie and Rangers made another draw of their return match, the score in the first case being 1-1 and in the second 0-0. H. L. I. disposed off Caledonia for the second time last Saturday, the score 3-0 indicating with accuracy the nature of the play. On the Customs ground the Gordons beat the home team by 2-0 after a fine game in which the Customs, although weakened by the absence of several of the best men, yet played the Gordons to their utmost.

At last the Rangers have put up a win, having vanquished their Christian opponents across the road by 2 goals to 1 after a strenuous game conspicuous more for its vigour than its brilliance. This puts the Rangers and the Y. M. C. A. equal on points and there is every probability of a titanic struggle to avoid the attention of the humorous paragraphist and his bearded jest about wooden spoons.

The return match between Calcutta and Dalhousie came off on the Dalhousie ground last Saturday and despite the threatening aspect of the nor'-west corner of the firmament, a record crowd turned out for this event which is second only in social importance to the Viceroy's Cup, that is to say as far as concerns feminine toilette, of which more than the usual number of ravishing creations were in evidence on this occasion. The Dalhousie ground Secretary is to be very highly commended on the vast improvements which have been made in the enclosure and seating arrangements of this club. In point of comfort it is now second to none and when a few groggy chairs are weeded out there will be no longer any cause for cavil. The match itself produced one of the best and fastest games yet played this season and at times both teams showed signs of decided brilliance, Dalhousie especially playing a strong and determined game which was only spoilt by weak and faulty shooting. On the Calcutta side O'Shea at centre half stood out head and shoulders above the rest of the teams and fully justified the prophecy which was made about him in this column at the commencement of the season. His tackling is immense and although his methods are not always above suspicion he never resorts to the intentional fouling which is the curse of so many centre halves. Although Calcutta won by a goal to love on Saturday Dalhousie certainly deserved to tie if not to win, for the honours of the game certainly rested with them. Mr. A. B. Rosser's refereeing was illustrative of the excellent effect which the Calcutta Referees' Association has had and is having on this indispensable adjunct to the game.

Someone has written to a contemporary asking about the League Committee, of whom it is composed and when its last meeting was held and who gave the hookum to Howrah United to clear the way for the Customs. As the secretaries of competing clubs themselves form the Committee and have been content to let the energetic Mr. D. L. Walker arrange everything this season, nor has Howrah United entered any protest against the treatment accorded to it under a rule previously passed and in force now as it was then, there can surely be no complaint to make. In any case Mr. Jackson, the Secretary of the League who is back in Calcutta, will be pleased to answer any questions which may be put to him.

The 13th Somerset Light Infantry at Poona have expressed regret that they cannot enter a team for the I. F. A. Shield this season as they are under orders for England.

TRAGIC DEATH OF OLD TOM MORRIS.

OLD Tom Morris, the veteran professional golfer, fell downstairs in the New Club at St. Andrews on the 24th ultimo and died shortly afterwards from concussion of the brain.

By the death of Tom Morris, of St. Andrews, there has been removed from our midst the greatest personality of the royal and ancient game—the greatest golfer that has ever lived. Old Tom, as he was familiarly called, was everybody's friend, and very few golfers visited St. Andrews without claiming his friendship. On medal days at St. Andrews up to three or four years ago he was always present on the first tee, handing out and receiving the cards from the Royal and Ancient members who were engaged in competition. He has lived through many changes in the game, and his death removes one of the strongest links with the past.

Born at St. Andrews on 16th July 1821, Tom Morris was nearly 87 years of age. He was practically reared on St. Andrews links, and naturally his attention was soon directed to the game of which he subsequently proved a past master. At the very early age of six or seven Tom first became associated with the game, and he soon adapted himself to the use of the clubs. He played a good deal with the other boys at almost every available opportunity, and obtained a very strong liking for the game. Tom left school at a very early age, and became apprenticed to Allan Robertson, who taught the champion in embryo to make clubs and feather balls. He worked assiduously at the trade, and soon became a skilled hand, besides taking every available opportunity to make himself a more proficient player.

About the year 1835 Mayor Playfair, afterwards Sir Hugh, became Provost of St. Andrews, and he set to work improving the links, which were then in a very unsatisfactory state. The game developed wonderfully, and every season marked a considerably increased number of golfing visitors. At the age of thirty Tom Morris was prevailed upon by Colonel J. O. Fairlie to start "gutty" ball making, and accept an appointment at Prestwick. Prior to that time Tom had made a great name for himself as a player in company with Allan Robertson, but his fame spread widely after his association with the Ayrshire green. He stayed five years at Prestwick, and then returned to St. Andrews for good.

After Allan Robertson had beaten Willie Dunn, of Musselburgh, in a match over 360 holes in the year 1843, the St. Andrews man was regarded as champion of the game. Six years later, Tom Morris partnered Allen Robertson in a match over Musselburgh, St. Andrews, and North Berwick, against the brothers Dunn, of Musselburgh, for a stake of £400. The Dunns won at Musselburgh by 13 and 12. The match, therefore, reverted to North Berwick. The Dunns were 4 up and 8 to play, and odds of 20 to 1 were laid on them. The game took a remarkable turn, for Robertson and his partner won in the end by a single hole. In 1852 Tom and Allan Robertson staked £100 to £50 in a match against Sir Robert Hay and Willie Dunn, the latter couple suffering defeat by 6 up and 5 to play, over two rounds of St. Andrews. The following year Willie Park, sen., Musselburgh, twice defeated Tom Morris in £100 matches; while in 1854 Tom and Bob Ferguson beat Allan Robertson and Willie Dunn by one hole in an 18 hole match. In the years 1854 and 1855 Park and Morris engaged in six £100 matches, and honours were about evenly divided. In the fifth match at Musselburgh, the spectators interfered with Morris's ball repeatedly, and the referee stopped play and divided the stakes. Two years later, the couple opposed Allan Robertson and Andrew Strath in a match of £100, but suffered defeat by six holes over two rounds of the course. While Tom was champion in 1868 and 1869, he played six matches with Bob Ferguson, of Musselburgh, over Luffness and Musselburgh, but Ferguson won them all.

Tom's record in the open championships was truly a remarkable one. In all he played in thirty-six open championships, and the writer remembers well the last occasion upon which he appeared in the classic event at Muirfield—the year when Harry Vardon first came to light by reason of his memorable match with J. H. Taylor, whom he defeated for the title after a tie. Old Tom won the championship belt at Prestwick in 1861, 1862, 1864, and 1867, while his son, by scoring three successive victories in the following years, became possessor of the belt for good. This was the proudest possession Old Tom had, and was absolutely priceless. It is composed of a big, broad belt of dark red Morocco leather, ornamented with rich golfing designs in silver. Old Tom did not succeed in inscribing his name on the new trophy, which is still in existence, but young Tom won it the first year—1872. Old Tom was a great favourite with the ladies, and, if we remember rightly, Miss Rhona Adair was the last to play the veteran over a full round of St. Andrews links some five or six years ago.

A well-known writer on golf, in commenting some time ago upon the announcement that old Tom was about to write his reminiscences, said :—"What a wealth of anecdote, what a charm of recollections the old man will be able to introduce to this, a great tribute to the game he loves so well. He has played with every golfer of note, every golfing statesman and man of eminence in the last fifty years. What memories he must have of all his great matches! He has met everybody, played everywhere, and what a pity it would be if his recollections, representing as they do the history of golf from an obscure to a world-wide game, were not committed to print."

Old Tom was a generous opponent and a charming partner. He was fond of the game to the last, and his birthday round, which he played annually until the last year or two, was almost an institution of St. Andrews, of which he was honorary greenkeeper. He was on the green during the last ladies' amateur golf championship, and on the afternoon of the 24th ultimo visited the new golf club, of which he was an honorary member. Mistaking a door in the lobby, he fell down a flight of stairs and was rendered unconscious. Medical aid was summoned, and Tom was conveyed in an ambulance to the Memorial Cottage Hospital, where he died soon afterwards.

A party of travelling men in a Chicago hotel were one day boasting of the business done by their respective firms, when one of the drummers said:

"No house in the country, I am proud to say, has more men and women pushing its line of goods than mine."

"What do you sell?" he was asked.

"Baby carriages!" shouted the drummer, as he fled from the room.

THE BRITISH BULLDOG CLUB SHOW.

The Bulldog Club (Incorporated) held its annual championship show on the 26th ultimo in the Northampton Institute, Clerkenwell; but the entry was a disappointing one. A total exhibit of only 176, representing eighty-nine dogs, is unaccountably small for so popular and important a breed, though this year's omission of any classes for miniature bulldogs explains in some measure the loss of support.

The judge, Mr. Sam Woodiwiss, completed his task early in the afternoon, as the classes, with the exception of those for puppies, were small. In the open class for dogs over 55lb., Mr. W. B. Cannon's Chineham Young Jack was first, with Mr. Nigel Colman's Lord Brancher second, Mr. J. C. McCowan's Glencairn third, and Mrs. Haverty's Grenadier fourth; this order being repeated in the limit class. In open, over 45lb. Mr. W. J. Pegg's Woodcote Bouncer led, with Mr. E. A. Vicary's Parkholme Crib second, Mr. Atkinson Jowett's Fair Monarch third, and Mr. H. Schlaferman's Kilburn Magnet fourth. There were only two dogs in the not exceeding 45lb. class, won by Mr. E. A. Mills's Champion Uxbridge Matchless. Woodcote Bouncer was the winner in limit, not exceeding 55lb. with Mr. A. Fergusson's Scarlet Pimpernel second, and Fair Monarch third. And the winner in the limit class for not exceeding 45lb. was Mr. J. Young's Bob Upanwyn, with Mr. G. H. Lamb's Acacia King second, and Mr. F. R. Stephens's St. Pancras Buzfuz third. The winners in the two minor limit classes were Scarlet Pimpernel and Blinkbonny, both owned by Mr. Fergusson. Novice dogs over 55lb. weight had but one representative, Mr. A. M. Helmsley's Cleveland Jumbo. Kilburn Magnet headed the novice class for over 45lb. with Mr. Frank Cox's Cobnut second, and in that for dogs not exceeding 45lb. Mr. W. J. Pegg's Woodcote Merry Boy won, and also headed the junior any-weight class, in which the only other representative was Cleveland Jumbo. There were eleven entries—a large class—in puppy, won by Cobnut, with Cleveland Jumbo second, Mr. G. Webber's Ethel's Boy third, and Mr. A. Smout's Dick Swiveller fourth. And in the puppy class for under nine months first prize went to Mr. T. J. Wigmore's Hillsborough Peacemaker, Mr. Pete Murray's Tadger second Captain Hinds Howell's Cymric Albert third, and Mrs. C. W. Moss's Browston Parsifal fourth. In the lightweight section Lady Kathleen Pilkington won first and second, with Orestes and Woodhouse Cottager.

In bitches the open class for over 45lb. was won by Mrs. Arthur Mayor's Champion Silent Duchess, Mr. C. J. Bridgland's Champion Totora being the only other in the class. For that for over 36lb. Mr. W. J. Pegg's Champion Woodcote Sally Lunn carried off chief honours, with Mr. W. P. Dando's Luna de Gex second, and Mr. W. A. Murray's Anster Peggy third. Mrs. Palmer's Cloverley Bitts was the only representative of the classes for not exceeding 35lb. and the two limit classes were won by Mr. Pegg's Balham Duchess and Mr. A. Fergusson's New Countess, Balham Duchess being beaten for first place in minor limit by Mrs. A. Mayor's Wrexham Venesta. Mr. H. M. Helmsley's Cleveland Dinah won both the special novice and junior classes, and was also first in the good puppy class, in which Anster Peggy was second, and Mrs. W. W. Beveridge's Salambo third; and in the class for puppies under nine months old Mrs. C. W. Moss's Browston Beedere won.

The championships were awarded to Mr. Mills's Champion Uxbridge Matchless and Mrs. A. Mayor's Champion Silent Duchess. Matchless won the Bulldog Club's 50-guinea challenge cup for the best dog in the show, the 25-guinea bowl, the "Dewar" 25-guinea trophy, and the 10-guinea trophy of the Bulldog Club, and the 30-guinea cup of the London Bulldog Society; and Silent Duchess won the club's 50-guinea challenge cup, the "Buchanan" 25-guinea trophy, and the 20-guinea trophy for the best dog or bitch in the show, also the 50-guinea vase of the British Bulldog Club, and the 30-guinea ladies' cup of the London Bulldog Society. The best bitch, not a full champion in the show, was Mr. Fergusson's New Countess, to whom was awarded the 20-guinea "Berrie" cup, the 25-guinea cup of the British Bulldog Club, and the 10-guinea bowl of the London Bulldog Society. Mr. Cannon's Chineham Young Jack was the winner of the British Bulldog Club's 50-guinea and 25-guinea cups, and the London Bulldog Society's 10-guinea cup, besides the Bulldog Club's 20-guinea "Berrie" cup. Mr. Wigmore's Hillsborough Peacemaker won a 25-guinea and a 15-guinea cup and a 10-guinea bowl, a good start for a puppy under nine months of age.

An interesting and novel section of the show was an exhibition of relics and works of art connected with bulldogs, including some good colour prints, an original water-colour drawing by Thomas Rowlandson, early paintings of bull-baiting, and modern portraits of champions, &c., and amongst other instructive objects the skeletons of the famous champions, British Monarch, Grabber, Duckleaf, and Blackberry.

The Story Teller.

TRAPPED.

The man with the dark moustache groaned painfully; the other merely shook his head in silent agreement.

They were decently clothed, but obviously depressed in spirits. There was that in their dejected attitude which told of disaster, and the way in which the bigger man's hands rested in his pockets plainly indicated their emptiness.

Between sunlit but silent fields the level white road on which they stood stretched away two miles ahead, where its perspective vanished in a point.

"What luck!" muttered the dark man for the twentieth time.

"Oh, quit that talk," snapped his companion. "You make me tired!"

"The chance of a lifetime!" went on the other in the monotonous tone of one reflecting on lost opportunities. To think that we are the only two people in the world—besides the stable—who know that Velveteen can win tomorrow. Simply—stroll—in! And here we are without so much as the rail fare to take us to the meeting."

"You've got a watch an' chain."

"Shucks! Silver! Couldn't get a dollar on it, and the——"

"Well, whose fault is it?" interrupted the little man viciously. "Who would play poker with a stranger last night and lose all a pard's money as well as his own? Oh——" He changed his tone to one of ridicule. "Nice sort o' partnership, upon my word!"

The dark man took no notice whatever of this outburst.

"A trial at six in the mornin—stripped! Us in a straw-sack watching the finish. Velveteen, by ten lengths! . . . Was there ever such luck?" he pondered.

The other turned away with a short exclamation of annoyance, went to the side of the road, and sat down moodily. The dark man's lips moved. He was making calculations. Presently he looked up; his expression changed; he listened.

A soft hum rose on the air—very faint, very distant—rose and fell again. For a few moments the dark man's eyes searched the horizon where the road seemed to end. Then he gave a start as a black speck showed where earth and sky touched. The hum became a rhythmic throb.

"By jingo, yes, I'll do it!" he said under his breath. He turned to the other man. "Quick, quick!" he cried. "Behind the hedge!"

The little man jumped up suddenly. "Watchermean?" he asked anxiously.

Before he was aware of it, the dark man had him by the arm and was pulling him through a gap in the hedge. "Down!" he admonished, dropping to a crouching attitude.

* * * * *

The motorist in the bucket of the 24-h.p. car looked along a mile and a half of deserted road.

"That's all right," he said, as his foot pressed the accelerator, and the car jumped into its top speed.

"She can go!" exclaimed the pretty girl by his side.

"Wait a moment, and you'll see," returned the driver proudly.

The wind whistled past them. Behind, a cloud of dust hid the road. To the two in the car there came only a soft purr of smooth-running machinery; but they were eating up distance.

"Forty-five, or I'm a Dutchman!" shouted the man as they raced smoothly along.

The words were hardly out of his mouth when a big man with a dark moustache jumped into the road a hundred yards ahead. One of his hands was raised in warning, the other held a watch. A smaller man came through the hedge and joined him.

"Trapped, by Jove!" cried the motorist. For a moment he hesitated whether he should stop or not, then he shut off power and applied the brakes. The car came to a standstill before the two men.

"This won't do," said the man with the dark moustache in a tone of severity. "Do you know what pace you've been going?" He consulted what, to the motorist, was the inevitable stop-watch.

"I say, look here," returned the man on the car, trying to bluff. "What's your authority for stopping me?"

"Very sorry, sir, county police, you know." He extracted a printed paper from his pocket, and held it for a moment before the other's eyes. "Must do my duty," he added in an apologetic tone.

"But we couldn't possibly have been exceeding the speed limit," said the girl, beaming sweetly on the dark man. "I'm sure, policeman, you wouldn't——"

"Times you over the straight mile, miss. One minute forty-three seconds. That makes it thirty-five miles an hour." He pointed down the road. "My man's posted under the trees yonder, and signalled when you passed him. Got the car's number, Williams?" he asked the little man.

The little man pulled out a dirty notebook and wrote in it hurriedly.

"I'll trouble you for your driver's licence, please, sir," went on the dark man in a tone of authority.

The motorist was weighing matters in his mind. For answer he beckoned the dark man to his side. "Just a word," he said.

"Williams," said the dark man, "step o' one side a moment. Now, sir, what is it?"

"Look here," began the motorist in an undertone, "can't we settle this between ourselves, constable."

"Can't be done, sir," was the reply, made with a vigorous shake of the head. Then, after a pause, "Got witnesses, you see." The motorist's hand went to his pocket. "If so——"

The dark man shook his head again.

"Two?" said the motorist.

The dark man did not seem to hear.

"George——" The girl whispered something.

"Oh, well," was the reply. "All right."

The dark man's hand rested on the mud-guard conveniently near. The little man caught the "chink"—the unmistakable chink—of gold. An open throttle began talking. The dark man stepped aside.

"My mistake, of course. You'll not hear anything more about this little matter, sir," he called whimsically after the car as it gathered speed.

For a moment or two they stood in the dusty road silent. Then asked the little man, "How'd you kid him about the county police?"

"Dog licence," said the dark man. "I'm backin' Velveteen. Come on!"—London Opinion.

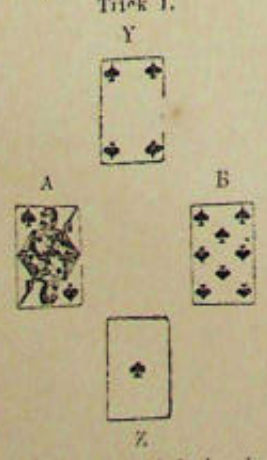
Solution to Problem No 64.

Z must touch spades, as this suit will be useful for placing the lead at a later stage. He should lead the 8 of diamonds and, if A does not cover, Y should pass the trick. A can have five diamonds at most, and if he proceeds to clear his suit, Y on getting in, will lead a small heart to the queen. Then whether the finesse is successful or not, the game must be won, as A B can only make three tricks in diamonds and one in hearts. If, on the other hand, the adversaries go into clubs, Z will probably be able to stop the suit twice with his ace, and 8. He should win the second round with the ace, and establish hearts; but of course he cannot make a certainty of game. If A wins trick 2 with the queen of diamonds, however, and does not go on with his suit, it appears more likely that he will lead hearts than clubs.

Problem No. 65.



Score.—A B, 24; Y Z, 24. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares diamonds. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy)—Hearts, king, jack, 3; diamonds, king, queen, jack, 2; clubs, 10, 7, 6; spades, 10, 5, 4.

Z's Hand (Dealer)—Hearts, 9, 7, 6; diamonds, ace, 9; clubs, 8, 5; spades, ace, 9, 7, 6, 3, 2.

The first trick is as follows:—

Trick 1.

How ought Z to play the rest of the hand, and why?

MOTOR MEMS. FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 29th May 1908.

THE sport of motor racing is gaining in popularity, and the spirt which governs the Brooklands executive is likely to make the huge autodrome a paying concern. It is to be hoped, however, that the executive will not overstep the mark. Too much sauce spoils the pudding, and it is far better to educate the public palate slowly but surely than surfeit interest by arranging too many meetings. The improvements already made in the organisation are sure to have a marked effect in due course, and it is possibly only a matter of time before the touring motorist takes a kinder interest. The sport of motoring has two issues—speed and ideal touring—and the motorist who is at present enamoured of his ideal touring car is just likely to take up racing when he discovers that other private owners find plenty of sport in it.

Your Indian readers may perhaps remember Mr. Charles ". Glidden, the American motorist who some time ago crossed India in his car and thought everybody must be interested in his daily itinerary. He has just reached London in the course of his 50,000 miles tour and has taken Jerusalem on the way. In a characteristic para, he says:—

"My arrival on a motor-car in Jerusalem," he said to a Central News correspondent, "was considered of such importance that the chief judge there told me that the event would be duly chronicled, and the record placed amongst the archives, which date back to the time of Christ."

When next the New Testament is revised the good people entrusted with the work might make a special annotation on this matter.

The following is a typical letter, received by the Daimler Co., of the satisfaction which Daimler cars are giving in the Colonies. It is written by Mr. E. E. Wagstaff of Bourke Street, Melbourne, Australia.

"Since I had the pleasure of addressing you last, I have completed a 900 miles trip through the West and North Western districts of Victoria, across the border into South Australia as far as Mount Gambier. During this trip I had to negotiate 15 or 16 miles of drift sand. One or two little cars had previously successfully negotiated it, but no one thought it would be possible for me to get my car through. You may be very pleased to hear that I succeeded, and covered the distance from Casterton to Mount Gambier (42 miles including 16 miles of drift sand) in a little over three hours. During that period I got bogged in the sand three times, but, having carried a spade, I got out without damage. I am writing this to you, not that it is any great feat but to give you some idea of conditions that have to be negotiated occasionally in Australian back blocks. Some number of men made bets against the Daimler succeeding, and am very pleased to chronicle those who bet against it, lost."

There is little doubt that if Englishmen, knowing the capabilities of the Daimler, were present, the odds laid against it succeeding, were very slight.

For the last two years the craze has been all for high-powered fast cars, and the consequence is that the small car trade has been severely neglected. I think this craze originally started in America, where it is quite an ordinary thing to have 60 h.-p. and 80 h.-p. "runabouts," from whence it gradually crept over here. Round London one cannot help noticing the large number of cars which consist of only two bucket seats and have the appearance of racing-cars. The truth is that motorists have to go through a species of speed mania, they start with a single cylinder; this suffices for a little time, but they are continually being passed on the road, and this annoys them. So they go a step higher and get a 20 h.-p. four cylinder; but on occasions they still have to eat other people's dust, so then they go a step further and get a 40 h.-p. two-seater. For a while they revel in the delirious joy of passing everything else on the road, but a few fines and the upkeep bill soon show them the folly of their ways.

The consequence is that this speed mania dies a natural death and our owner begins to look round for a cheap, reliable little car which costs little to keep up and costs less in fines. The boom in high-powered cars, as France has found to her cost, has been sadly overdone, and now manufacturers have focussed their attention upon supplying a reliable cheap little voiturette at a price within the means of all who aspire to motor. There are at present on the market numerous small cars ranging from 8 h.-p. to 12 h.-p., and priced from £140 to £200, embracing models of one, two, and four cylinders; this is the type of car which appeals to the man of moderate means. I even hear rumours of a light car which is shortly going to be put on the market at £100 or under; and, mind you, it's going to be good and up-to-date in every particular. After all, the desire for speed is but a passing fancy, and not worth the candle when one considers the enormous extra price which one has to pay for it.

Every car is or should be fitted with an under shield, extending preferably from underneath the starting-handle to well behind the gear-box. This serves as an efficient protector against mud and dust, and keeps the engine, etc., clean. This should be furnished with a trap-door at the bottom to allow the refuse oil, etc., to be emptied, and also to give one a chance of reclaiming spanners, nuts, and other oddments which may drop down. Mr. Critchley, a noted authority on motors, has just been calling attention to the danger which exists when the exhaust pipe is allowed to be enclosed in this tray. Carburettors, as everyone knows, are prone to flood and leak, and the petrol is caught in the tray or shield; this being so, it is an easy matter for the petrol vapour to be ignited by the hot exhaust pipe, and for a nasty conflagration to ensue. It would be a good idea if all trays were pierced with a series of small holes which would allow any petrol or waste oil to escape without causing any damage.

CHUKKER.

A gamekeeper found a boy fishing in his master's private waters.

"You mustn't fish here," he exclaimed. "These waters belong to the Earl of A——"

"Do they? I didn't know that," replied the culprit; and, laying aside his rod, he took up a book, and commenced reading.

The keeper departed but, on returing about an hour afterwards, he found the same youth had started fishing again.

"Do you understand that this water belongs to the Earl of A——?" he roared.

"Why, you told me that an hour ago," exclaimed the angler, in surprise. "Surely the whole river don't belong to him? His share went by long ago."

"Marquis, is it possible to confide a secret to you?"

"Certainly! I will be as silent as the grave."

"Well, then, I have absolute need of two thousand francs."

"Do not fear, it is as if I had heard nothing."

POLO PROSPECTS.

As was the case last year the opening of the Polo season in England has again been much delayed by the inclement weather. Fortunately, however, the conditions appear to be more settled now and it is to be hoped that no more such serious interruptions will occur, for the calendar this year promises to provide some brilliant sport.

It is doubtful whether any game is more dependent on fine weather than Polo. To play in rain is out of the question ; to play on a drenched ground soon after rain is altogether undesirable because of serious risk of injury to players and ponies and irreparable injury to the turf's surface. The seriousness of long and frequent interruptions caused by bad weather is, therefore, apparent.

The game itself grows in importance season after season. There are signs on every hand of this being the case. Hunting men who now find themselves unable to afford both pastimes are throwing in their allegiance with the summer game. In many fox-hunting countries we hear of foxes becoming fewer and of the placing of more restrictions than ever in the way of sport. The two circumstances are causing some men to spend the winter out of England and the summer on the Polo grounds. Thus the finest of all mounted games is growing in London and throughout the country. There is evidence of this in the increased facilities offered each succeeding season at the clubs, especially Ranelagh, which has been rightly described as the largest polo club in the world.

At Hurlingham, the General Polo Committee of which legislates for the game practically the world over, there will be the usual strong attractions of Champion Cup, Inter-Regimental County Cup, and Inter-'Varsity Polo. There will also be held there the competition for the Olympic Cup in connection with the Olympic Games. Doubtless the entry will be largely on the lines of that for the Champion Cup, with the exception that Hurlingham will enter a representative team.

No teams from abroad are likely to trouble the best English combinations. It is Ireland's turn to challenge for the International Cup, which is annually played for by teams representing England and Ireland. Irish polo, however, is not sufficiently powerful just now to beat London's best, and thus it is very improbable that the Irish triumph over the English team in Dublin three years ago will be repeated. A Spanish team, captained by the Marquis de Villavieja, are due to play a series of matches, but their players are not yet first-class. King Alfonso has lately taken very enthusiastically to the game and his example may result in more Spanish noblemen following the lead of the Marquis Villavieja and the Duke D'Alba. Several American players will be visiting London during the season, and will doubtless play, though it is a long time since the American Polo Association sent a team to challenge British polo supremacy.

Mr. Buckmaster's team of Old Cantabs will, as in recent years, be prominent in first-class polo, but as Mr. Isaac Bell, a young American who recently retired from the Mastership of well-known Irish foxhounds, the Galway Blazers, is not [redacted] much polo in the near future, it will be [redacted]ary for the "Light Blues" to find a new number 1 man. A very great factor in the coming season will be the old Roehampton team, which is being reformed as follows :—Captain Herbert Wilson, No. 1 ; Mr. Morres Nickalls, No. 2 ; Mr. P. W. Nickalls, No. 3 ; and Captain Hardless Lloyd at back. For two or three years they carried all before them, and will doubtless do so again now, for they are unquestionably a most powerful combination while being individually fine players. Rugby will be much in evidence, and it would be rather surprising should they fail to carry off one or more of the leading trophies.

At present it looks like Roehampton winning the Champion Cup, Hurlingham the Olympic Cup, Cambridge the 'Varsity match, and the 20th Hussars the Inter-Regimental Tournament. This is as regards the leading events at Hurlingham. The 20th Hussars will have their old rivals, the 11th Hussars to meet again, but in favour of the former it can be urged that they have one or two young players of great promise, so that the strength of the team demonstrated during the past three years will be maintained. Major Maclaren, late of the 13th Hussars, now occupies the post of polo manager at Hurlingham made vacant by the death of Mr. S. L. St. Quintin, and his appointment is a very popular one, for he has been a great soldier-player, and knows the game thoroughly.

The features of the Ranelagh programme remain the same as last year. There will, of course, be the Open Cup Tournament, the two Hunt Cup Tournaments, the Novices Cup Tournament, Army Cup Tournament, Subalterns' Cup Tournament, the immensely popular Aldershot Cup Day, when about a score of military teams start and finish a tournament in the course of a single day, and special match fixtures. Roehampton also presents a fine programme so that the season ahead is full of promise.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

They were very lucky at Tollygunge on Saturday, as the rain held off in most considerate fashion, the going was excellent, the finishes good, and the favourite won each time, so what can the gay punter ask more! The "Gay Gordons" band was in great form and the tunes selected were mostly in keeping with the soubriquet of the regiment, but it was surely playing it rather low down on timorous riders to give "Home, Sweet Home" just as they went out for the Steeplechase! However they are all bold hearts, our Calcuttua G. R's. and they faced the terrors of the easiest steeplechase course in India nothing daunted. This, however, was the second item, and to deal with matters in their proper order we must first start with the Novice Stakes for which Seditious was a strong favourite. Pardon next most fancied. There was a bad start. Paddy, Seditious and Pardon getting away well in front of the other three. Paddy was striding three to the other's two and was soon done with and Seditious romped away home from the bend. School-boy, who is a good sort of horse, will need watching, as after getting all the worst of the start, he ran right across the course coming down the straight, interfering badly with Moachim, and even then very nearly overtook Pardon for second place. With a little more experience of racing we shall see this animal do well.

The Pony Steeplechase was full of interest and excitement to the last moment. Five of them started for it, but it was soon obvious that it was to be a race between Emerald, Dynamite and Sea-gull. The latter hit the bushed wall near the Club House, but soon made up the lost ground and at the last jump the three were all together. Sea-gull then crocked up, but the first two ran on well and a hard fight all the way down the straight resulted in Mr. Tanner on Emerald just securing the verdict from Mr. Tremearne. Our felicitations to both on a real good race.

The Open Pony Race was a gift for Mr. Galstaun's Flower Girl, who won by a neck only but with a stone in hand. There was good race for second place, Mr. Tremearne with a well timed rush just bringing Pineal in a short head in front of The Owl. It was a very slow affair (1min. 12secs.) and the winner was never made to gallop in earnest the whole time. For the June Plate, Regina, last week's winner, was again favourite, and though the official verdict was only a neck, she had the lightly weighted Dougall beaten whenever she liked, and another 7 to 10lb. would probably not have stopped her. Dalgai, the top weight, was looking tucked up and anything but fit. She finished third, but if well we think she would have beaten the lot of them at the weights, and with proper training may be a useful animal in the amateur class in the coming Monsoons.

Scratchings for the Midget Stakes were numerous as Loch Lily frightened most of them away, and only seven of the eighteen on the card went up to the start. Mr. Bletsoe took the favourite, carrying top weight and lots of money right out to the front from the word "go" or rather from the flag fall and managed to hold that position to the end, though Kipper made a determined attack about a furlong to home and was only just beaten by a neck at the finish, Lady George, a tired third, three-quarters of a length behind and the game little Baddock four lengths behind her.

The All-Comers' Cup brought out six would-be starters, but Sparkle and Matsumata were a bit too previous and went off on their own. Sparkle unshipped her jockey by the new house and led the Singapore horse home to the stable. The other four then got off to a straggly start, but there was a great race between them from the home turn. Leading Lady at one time just headed Tehee but the English mare got in front again and raced it out gamely to the finish. Lady Thirza came in the last half furlong and with a fine effort just beat Leading Lady for the place. The three mares passing the post at intervals of a neck.

The evening's entertainment concluded with the capture of a worthy gentleman who had been making a book without the permission of the authorities and of a pick pocket. They were haled off to justice at the hands of the Stewards and your scribe left without waiting to learn their 'orrid fate, probably something lingering with boiling oil in it.

The legitimate bookmakers must have had a nasty time of it with each favourite getting home in turn, but no doubt "a day will come."

The programme for the next gymkhana will be found elsewhere and presents an attractive card, with two jump races, and four on the flat, of which two are open, for maiden horses and ponies respectively. The others are all for animals that have not won Rs. 500 and the "Novice" class is left severely alone. The very successful 14-1 pony race is naturally repeated. The jump events consist of a steeplechase for horses and a 14-2 hurdle race: the flat races are all 5 furlongs.

In these days of gates the gentle art of starting with a flag is rapidly being lost both by starters and startees, but now while the Gymkhana season is with us and the almost defunct system rears its head proudly again for a while a few hints culled from the stores of wisdom of old time masters of the art might come not amiss. The first axiom that a would-be flag starter has to get into his head is that perfection is impossible of attainment and unless he quickly learn to appreciate this stern fact, has the patience of Job and the temper of an angel, he will nathless wear both to death before he has dispatched three ordinary fields. When the attempt to achieve the impossible has finally been abandoned, the starter is next confronted with the problem of deciding in what respect he can best afford to deviate from the highest standard and what will be "good enough." Now a perfect start would embody these main elements of perfection (1) the horses would all be in a line, (2) the horses would all be moving at the same pace, (3) the start would be effected from exactly opposite the proper post. It is, however, manifestly absurd to hope to combine in any one start these three features and men experienced with the flag are almost unanimous in abandoning the last as being a long way the least important, and instead of standing still just at the starting post with flag raised to be dropped when or if the horses pass him in line, the clever starter will come along with his horses from some little way behind the correct starting point. Holding the flag well aloft he shouts "Come on, come on, come on" till, seizing a moment when the animals are all in a fair line and pretty well on their toes, he lets out a loud "go" and drops his flag. This may be done a little before or a little after the literally correct starting place, it is not of great importance, but the point is that if the starter is standing still waiting for the horses to come up to him many an opportunity of letting them go to a really good start will be lost and, as so often happens, he will after many attempts lose patience and let them off eventually to a much worse one than some of those that he stopped.

Another thing that is impossible, is for all horses to get away equally well. It is the duty of each jockey to the owner to get away as well as possible and as some are more clever at this than others and as some animals also are quicker on their feet than others, the better jockey or the better horse will naturally get the best of the break away and the starter should not attempt to level things up by trying to seize a moment when such are at a manifest disadvantage to let them go.

On the other hand jockeys must remember that the starter's job is one of the hardest and most thankless tasks that has to be performed at a meeting. A series of spoiled starts will wear to rags the temper of the best of them and it is up to the riders to give him every assistance by obeying his orders as promptly and well as they can, and to suffer meekly and forget and forgive as quickly as possible anything that the man with the flag might say in the heat of the moment that had better have been left unsaid. Though it may hurt keenly to be abused when you are honestly trying to do your best on an obstinate horse, it must be remembered that it is extremely difficult for the starter unless a man of great experience to distinguish between those who "can't" and those who "won't" and so it must be taken as all in the day's work.

The patrons of the betting Ring in India will read with deep regret of the death at home last week of Mr. Fred Armfield, the well-known bookmaker. Mr. Armfield had been before the racing public for the last twenty-four years and was universally popular. Genial, kind-hearted, and a straight man of business, he will be much missed. The late Mr. E. J. Chard, who died last December, was his partner for many years. We offer our respectful condolences to his widow.

We regret to learn of the death at Bangalore last week of Mrs. Watson, wife of Mr. J. Watson, trainer to the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar. Mrs. Watson sustained concussion of the brain in a trap accident on the 22nd ultimo.

Signorinetta, the Derby winner, ran in the Royal Stakes at Newbury last Thursday but could finish no better than fourth. A mile and a quarter is evidently not far enough for her. The race was won by Mr. W. Hall Walker's White Eagle, with Quercus second and Linacre third.

The results of the weekly Gymkhana held at Simla last Saturday were as follows:—First event for gentlemen to ride three furlongs, break a bottle with a revolver and ride back. 1st, Colonel Victor Brooke, 2nd, Mr. Carter. The Ladies Wand race was won by Miss Ducane Smith; the Affinity race went to Miss Mahon and Colonel Victor Brooke; Miss Zorab won the Ladies' Thread and Needle race and the Rickshaw race was won by Captain Gibbs and Lord Windsor nominated by Miss Ducane Smith.

We are glad to learn that Captain Davie, who met with the serious Polo accident at Poona last week, is progressing favourably.

Writing a couple of days before the last received mail left, a London correspondent says:—

"The full programme of the great international horse show, to be opened at Olympia on 18th June, is now quite complete, and makes a most absorbing document. In a day or two the first of the visitors will be arriving, and many of the horses are in training at English stables. All details of the decorations are complete, large pictures of the scheme have been painted, and a 'chef des decorations' has been appointed even for the stables.

"The show will be much the largest and most original ever held or likely to be held in England, or, indeed, in any country. Next year the show will be held not in London but in Paris. The first performance is on the evening of 18th June after the Ascot Gold Cup. In the boxes on the first night almost all the foreign Embassies will be represented—their boxes have been long taken—and the first sight will be given of the splendid riding of the Italian officers, whose presence will be among the greatest attractions of a brilliant exhibition.

"But all styles of riding and driving will be seen. The Italians and Belgians—led by Lieutenant Daufresne, whose riding made the sensation of last year—will excel at the complicated banks and triple bars copied from the Continent. English and American ladies—for whom several classes are reserved—will be conspicuous in some jumping events and in the competition in the haute ecole, of which the gist is a sort of pas seule on horseback. The most valuable group of park horses ever collected together are entered for an event in which each competitor must provide eight horses and change his four-in-hand team in the ring.

"The jumping contests over the course have proved so popular that in one event there are 120 competitors, who will have to follow each other with dazzling speed if the competition is to be finished. Apart from the ordinary high jumps, a special prize is to be given for any horse that clears 7 feet 5 inches.

"The show, for which fresh decorations and fresh events will be provided daily, is to be a nine days' wonder; and as the whole of the upper part of Olympia is to be an ample promenade, there will be room for everyone to see the show, and last year's disappointments will be avoided. The performances will, from 19th June to 27th June, be held every afternoon and evening, with perhaps a few qualifying performances in the morning. The prizes amount to about £11,000, and even so are but a small item in the general expenditure.

"But cost has not been considered in a show in which a fair percentage of the directors are millionaires, in which the donors represent the finest horsemen of the Continent, of Canada, of the United States, and of Britain, and in which three Kings and many Governments have taken a close personal interest."

Australasia is now, perhaps, better represented at the London Zoo than Asia; at any rate the big collection of birds and mammals recently sent over includes most of the strange and interesting creatures of Australia, Tasmania and New Zealand, and, with the specimens already in the Garden, makes the collection of Antipodean fauna practically complete. This is more than can be said of the Indian collection for example. The new arrivals comprise kangaroos and wallabies, dingoes, native cats, porcupine anteaters, emus, black swans, bustards, wedge-tail eagles, lizards, snakes, pelicans, cranes, rare ducks, cockatoos, parakeets, and Tasmanian devils.

The birds also include some beautiful specimens of parrots, finches, diamond sparrows, Australian waxbills, and Bicheno finches, whose plumage is of the richest and most varied colours.

We are indebted to the Secretary for a copy of Volume XX of the Calcutta Turf Club Racing Calendar. This publication, indispensible to Indian turfites, is as complete as ever and turned out in Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co.'s best style.

The Automobile Association hopes to effect the ultimate extinction of the reckless motorist. By the time that has been brought about there will be no one left to run over.

One hundred and twenty miles per hour is about as fast as one wants to travel in a motor car. This tremendous speed was recorded on the Brooklands track on the 6th ultimo when a "F. I. A. T.," driven by Nazarro, beat a "Napier" driven by F. Newton. Full details are given among Motor Mems. further on. Last year, it will be remembered, F. I. A. T. racers were everywhere to the fore, and this year, especially in American contests, the results obtained by Cedrino, although not of the brilliant nature which characterised the performances of Nazarro at the beginning of last season, are nevertheless of sufficient merit to emphasise the statement that there is not a better self-propelled racing machine on the market.

Mr. T. A. Fisher's marvellous cycling record—1,000 miles in 3 days, 19 hours, 1 min.—has been a good deal discussed in England, for it lopped as much as 12h. 40min. off the previous best and proves him to be a rider of unsurpassed stamina and pluck. But the time reduction is so substantial that one is driven to believe the university crack must have ridden under extraordinarily favourable circumstances—in fact, must have had better luck than ever before attended an attack on R.R.A. figures. There is no doubt that good fortune attended him. Fisher is the last man to deny that, and the goddess found a comfortable seat on the handlebar of that standard pattern Rudge-Whitworth "Speediron." But while we must admit the luck was with him, it is equally certain the wind was not, at least for a good portion of the journey it was not. That, of course, is an important factor, for given a machine that will stand up to the work and the wind is the chief thing the record-beater has to reckon with.

THE reluctance of "Tommy" Burns to meet Johnson has secured for that "picey" pugilist a severe roasting in the English sporting press. But the impression is that so long as he can find "easy" matches Burns will not worry much about adverse criticism. He is frankness personified, anyway, for only a few days ago he remarked dryly, "Why will people forget that I'm in the boxing game purely for business—guess I've told 'em about it some?" After all, there is something in the contention of those who hold that every man has a right to look after his own interests—if he doesn't, no one else will, that's a sure thing.

HERE is another illustration of the official mind: Some Dutch betting men living at Goerz are in the habit of extracting large sums from our gullible countrymen in England by means of betting coupons. They distribute these coupons over the country every week. A little while ago they sent out 28,000 of them. The envelopes in which they are sent are bought and addressed in Holland, and the coupons printed there, but if they were posted in Holland they would cost 2½d. each, so they send them over to London. At first they put the coupon in the envelope in Holland, and packed the envelopes in boxes already for stamping and posting, in England. These boxes went from Flushing to Queenboro', where they were opened by Custom House officers. They were stopped by these officials on the ground that the senders were trying to defraud the Revenue. The Dutchmen then packed the envelopes and the coupons separately and sent them over together in boxes as before. These the Queenboro' wiseacres passed without protest! Thus is our great Civil Service worked.

A MODERN CLASSIC.

"TWINKLE, TWINKLE, LITTLE STAR!"

Scintillate, scintillate, Globule vivific,
Fain would I fathom thy Nature specific,
Loftily poised in ether capacious,
Strongly resembling a gem carbonaceous.
When torrid Phœbus refuses her presence,
And ceases to lamp us with fierce incandescence,
Then you illumine the regions supernal,
Scintillate, scintillate, semper-nocturnal.
Then the victim of hospiceless peregrination,
Hails with delight thy minute coruscation,
He could not determine his journey's direction
But for thy bright scintillating protection.

EVERY now and then we have to record a fatal accident at cricket, the latest occurred at Kettering last month when a young surveyor was hit on the head by a fast travelling ball, and died three days afterwards.

OUR English sporting letter gives details of the final round in the Amateur Golf Championship. Mr. E. A. Lassen (Lytham and St. Anne's) is a remarkably fine specimen of a Yorkshire golfer and beat H. E. Taylor (Richmond) in decisive fashion. He is a Bradford wool merchant, is thirty-two years of age and is withal a clever man all round. He can speak in various tongues, and is a great expert at other games. His form at bridge is wonderful, he strings up immense breaks at billiards, and amuses himself by playing several other people at the same time at chess, himself being blind-fold. At Rugby he was in his school eleven. He is a fine big man, the athlete all over, and he is popular with everybody who knows him.

J. H. TAYLOR (Mid Surrey Richmond) has won the Open Golf Championship of France with a score of 300 for the 72 holes. Arnaud Massy (who won in 1906 and last year) and C. H. Mayo, Burhill (who finished 10th last year) tied for second place with 304, and James Braid, (Walton Heath,) was next. Tom Vardon (Royal St. George's) and Harry Vardon, (South Herts) finishing 8th and 10th respectively. The winner has won the English open championship three times, in 1894, 1895 and 1900. He won the professional Golfers' Association News of the World Prize in 1904 and was beaten in the final last year by James Braid.

ACCORDING to the Manchester Courier "there is a certain appropriateness about the language of the turf, of the cricket and the hunting field which compels respect, and perhaps football slang, too, gives the spirit of the game."

MORE "howlers" from school:—"The Cabinet consists of the Private Secretaries, the Foreign Secretaries, Colonial Secretaries, and the Poet Laureate." "Oliver Cromwell called 14th September his lucky day; he died on it, but still called it his lucky day." "Christianity was introduced into England by Julius Cæsar in 55 B.C." "Magna Charta was good to the poor. Her photograph is on stained glass windows in Scotland." "A cyclone is for telling the distance of travelling." "The dingo is a bird with a dog's face." "The Forth Bridge is in Venice; suspects are led by the Council of Three, and never heard of afterwards." "Rangoon is a Prussian seaport on the Baltic, because it is on a Rangoon saltwater lake." "The scavenger dog is an ungamely dog which puts his refuse out at night and clears it away before morning."

THE decadence of the British boy is the subject of much controversy at the present time. In a recent article in the Press Mr. Guy Nickalls, the well-known rowing man, has indicted the modern boy as "molly-coddled" and spoilt from the cradle upwards, and pampered to such a degree as to turn him out a characterless nonentity. Mr. Nickalls thinks that the boy is losing his manliness and becoming a flabby, pain and trouble shirking being. Mr. Eugene Corri, on the other hand, finds the modern boy as tough as he ever was. Mr. Corri is a great authority on boxing, and one of the leading referees in the country, having acted in that capacity at the recent Burns vs. Moir fight. He said that he found the boys of the present generation as plucky as they ever were. "I attend and often act as judge in all sorts of boxing contests," he said, "from public schools and university competitions to fixtures in village athletic clubs, and I find the youngsters of the present day can stand their punishment as well as ever I remember them. I thought a few years ago that perhaps the younger boxers were not quite so tough as they were years ago, but recently I cannot say I have noticed any deterioration either in pluck, spirit or power of endurance."

THE following description of the Calcutta cricket field in 1840 will interest C.C.C. men and others who nowadays "together join in cricket's manly toil" on the splendid Eden Garden ground:—

"A more magnificent ground than the space, a mile square, and perfectly flat, on which the Calcutta Club pursues the game cannot well be conceived. Facing you stand a series of palatial buildings, including the Supreme Court, the Town Hall, and Government House; to the left, the broad water of the Ganges with its gay array of ships home-bound to dear old England; to the right, another row of palaces bordering the Chowringhee Road; and behind you the collegiate-looking church and official houses of Fort William, rising amid trees within its turf-coated batteries. On the cricket arena stand two spacious tents, not, however, like the paltry affairs bearing that name in England, but lined with fancy chintz, furnished with looking-glasses, sofas, and chairs, and each player's wants, whether it be a light for his cigar, iced soda-water, or champagne, supplied by his turbaned attendant. The Club can turn out 'a very good eleven' and whilst in full operation the 'field' exhibits no peculiar feature to the eye of the English freshmen, except the universality of very broad-brimmed white hats made of a vegetable pith called sola, which is far lighter than cork, and an admirable non-conductor of heat. The natives do not at all enter into the spirit of this manly game; neither do the servants of the players, if desired to stop a stray ball, think it at all meritorious to risk stinging their hands by staying it while in motion; they amble by its side until it has ceased rolling, and then pick it up. There is only one native that I know in Calcutta who dares attempt to catch a ball in full career. His name, Modun, which is Anglicised into 'Mutton,' deserves to be recorded, for no ball can escape him; arms, legs, or body being all or separately thrown across its course as occasion may require."

We have made some strides since then: we have now some really good native players and some native clubs that often render a creditable account of themselves, while at fielding and bowling some of our ground chokras are particularly smart.

THE following are the results of important cricket matches played in England last week:—

Gloucestershire beat Somerset by six wickets.

Essex beat Lancashire by an innings and eight runs.

Kent beat Northamptonshire by an innings and 286 runs.

Sussex beat Cambridge University by 168 runs.

Middlesex beat Nottinghamshire by 269 runs.

Surrey beat Worcestershire by 238 runs.

Yorkshire beat Warwickshire by three wickets.

Surrey beat Oxford University by six wickets.

Cambridge University beat the M. C. C. by two wickets.

Warwickshire beat Derbyshire by ten wickets.

The matches between Sussex and Gloucester, Middlesex and Essex, Notts and Yorks, and Kent and Worcester were drawn.

WE don't hear anything now of "tennis elbow," "bicycle face," "pingpong arm," or "diabolo neck:" these ailments have been displaced in London by torticollis or "taxi neck" caused by riding in open motor cars, the wind giving the neck a painful and slightly crooked time and the doctors constant employment.

WE all know the ferocity of the show-lion remarks a writer in John Bull—how he gnashes his teeth with rage, and shakes his Paderweskian mane, and roars for somebody or something to devour. But this is a world of fakes and frauds, and that lion—well, consider the diverting case of a lion tamer of Truro, charged the other day by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Lions and other tame beasts with cruelty to a lioness by teasing and infuriating it. Before the tamer entered the cage a man informed the ladies and gentlemen they beheld a wild and ferocious Queen of Beasts which had killed utterly several people. As a matter of fact the animal was as gentle as a sucking dove, had been reared by its owner from cubbage, and up to date hadn't even killed a fly or a beetle. "If," said the trainer in court, "the animal were really infuriated, no man in his sane senses would dream of entering the cage;" which seems as obvious as old Stilton. Two veterinary surgeons added that "the lioness's performance was evidence of perfect training, and the case was dismissed." We believe the only Bernhardt used to play with lion cubs in her drawing-room, and they reciprocated her caresses with lavish affection. This Truro lioness was apparently of a similarly affectionate disposition. To put it shortly, the R.S.P.C.A. has been spoofed. Appearances were ever deceitful. You can no more judge a lion by its roar than you can judge a man by the crease down his trousers.

IN an interview which a Standard representative had with him recently, Lord Desborough, President of the British Olympic Council, discussed the prospects of the coming games to be held for the first time in England at the Stadium of the Franco-British Exhibition in July. Although the whole organisation has been left to private enterprise, Lord Desborough believes that we are assured of a great meeting.

"There are," he says, "twenty-four countries or colonies competing, and the number of competitors is expected to reach two thousand five hundred. Then, again, our arrangement with the executive of the Franco-British Exhibition has secured for us an arena for the Games, which, so far, has been unapproached in size and convenience. Besides the usual running track, a cycling track has been made, as well as a swimming pond 100 metres long, with a high diving tower, which is an innovation at these Games. The running track was laid out and completed before Christmas, and has settled down well, so we are in possession of a very fast path, which is likely to produce some records."

Asked as to the prospect of British athletes and sportsmen in the coming contests, Lord Desborough replied: "That is not an easy question to answer, but personally I believe we shall do much better than in previous Olympic Games. The country where the Games are held naturally has an advantage; the entries, however, are limited in all the events, which will help to make matters fairer for the visiting countries. In field and track athletics I expect the United States representatives will be very strong, and we shall have to do our very best to hold our own. Then there are many events in which our foreign visitors start under better auspices than ourselves, perhaps: in throwing the discus, for example, and the javelin, both new sports to most Englishmen. The distances, also, are measured by metres and not yards. But as I say on the whole, we ought to do well, especially in long distance running, swimming, high diving and rowing. In any case, however, though I should naturally wish to see our men as successful as possible, I do not think strong competition by our foreign visitors, and even defeat of our own representatives, would be anything but good for the cause of international sport.

"These Games, as you know, have an aspect much wider than the success of any particular nation. They are the expression of the undoubted spread of athleticism among the civilised countries of the world and of the international character which all sport has been assuming during the last quarter of a century. To me this widening in the interest taken in manly exercises is of very good augury, and we of the British Olymphic Council wish it every success, even at the cost of the temporary success of our own athletes. The periodical meeting of the flower of the youth and early manhood of the competing nations, the representatives, in fact, of the generation in whose hands the immediate destinies of each of those countries lie, is to me a matter of very great importance, which may have great results hereafter."

"Personally," he adds, "I regard the Olympic Games as a factor making for peace in European politics certainly as valuable as those other periodical meetings at The Hague."

THE (C. B. Patent) Sporting Night-sight is an invention recently patented by Mr. Clifford Batten and is now being placed on the market. The intention is the production of a subdued light over the bait (for a beast of prey) fixed up in a suitable locality, and the illumination of the rifle's foresight to direct the aim.

From the specifications before us, it appears that this result is obtained by an apparatus consisting of —(1) A small low-voltage incandescent lamp in an opaque oblong cover, pierced with a minute hole in the left side, through which a fine ray of light reaches the brightened foresight. The cover is attached to the muzzle by a leather band firmly laced on. The lamp is excited by a small dry-cells battery contained within the switchboard which is clamped under the trigger-guard. The illumination of the sight is controlled by a switch attached to the switchboard so conveniently that only a slight touch from a finger of the trigger hand, moves the tiny ray off and on, without displacing the forefinger from the trigger. (2) A small electric lamp in a belt shaped receptacle, suspended at such an elevation as to throw a subdued moonlight glow on the bait, and a circular space of a few feet round it. The light is controlled by another switch on the board. By this arrangement the illumination of the foresight and the one over the bait can be worked at the same moment, by the trigger hand, without any disturbing movement or noise, a most important point. (3) Wires connect the batteries with the lamps. The one for the foresight runs along the right side of the barrel and is entirely out of the way. The other, on the bait, requires a little arrangement. A convenient branch is necessary for suspending the lamp-holder at the proper elevation over the bait. A cord (an old fishing line by preference) is carried from the machan to the opposite branch, the battery wire is taken along it, and fixed securely at the point over the bait whence the lamp is suspended. This operation requires some judgment and must be supervised by the sportsman himself. The possibilities of disturbance must be considered—such as the prevailing breeze and the chances of collision. Where wild elephants are present, the elevation of the lamp must be so calculated as to avoid contact with them. Actual experience has shown that a sudden flash in the face from the hanging lamp is certain to stampede the huge beast into the surrounding darkness of the forest at an astonishing pace. In fact the lamp can be used as an effective protection against even a vicious tusker, bent on doing mischief to the midnight tiger-slayer and his arrangements.

The above details are simple enough to explain the working of this effective invention to the general public. Further information can be obtained from the inventor himself or his agents.

We have seen the (C. B. Patent) night-sight used on four different occasions, when three tigers and a panther were most satisfactorily accounted for. These animals were not in the least scared by the subdued moonlight glow thrown over them. The invention has been gradually worked out by a keen tiger-slayer who has a turn for mechanics, and who has thought out details and improvements mostly while actually in the machan and it has been thoroughly tested before introduction to the sporting public.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 12th June 1908.

THOSE who made holiday this Whitsuntide had no complaints against the clerk of the weather: the festival was blessed with sunshine and cool zephyrs throughout. The papers say 600,000 Londoners left town. But the exodus seemed to make no impression on the street traffic, or the multitudes in the parks and show places in and around the metropolis; for if the city dweller went out of town the country cousin came into it in his hundreds of thousands, thronged the thoroughfares and assisted at the fêtes and galas appropriate to the occasion. And everything seems to have passed off well. Beyond the usual "drunks and disorderlies," "lost children" and minor accidents Whitsun has come and gone without leaving us much to deplore, and now we settle down to the summer—if so be as we are going to have one—with our August holiday to look forward to. You are better off in this respect than us stay-at-homes; but we have our compensations, for though our "Poojahs" and "purrubs" do not jostle one another as they do in your part of the world, I fancy we can make better use of them when they do come round.

I counted the two hours I spent on Whit Monday at the London Cart Horse Parade as time well spent. Never before has Regent's Park attracted such a big crowd to this annual gathering and all agree that the show, in point of number and quality, was the best yet held. Not one of the nine hundred odd animals that did not bear eloquent testimony to care and good grooming, not a single set of the gaily-decked harness that could not be classed as well fitting and properly turned out. To the man home from India this magnificent spectacle, representative of London's very best in draught cattle, must be particularly pleasing, consequently I was not surprised to meet in the Inner Circle some old Calcutta and up-country friends. One of the chief attractions was the celebrated "Prince," the twenty-three-year servant of the Gas Light and Coke Company, and the man who has driven him seventeen years without a break. It was "Prince's" eighteenth entry—he has not missed a show since its inception in 1890—and he was indeed a picture. With a coat a race-horse might be proud of, and hardly a sign of wear, he came up for his eighteenth first prize amidst tumultuous cheering. There can be no doubt the Shire Horse Society and the S.P.C.A. do good and much appreciated work here.

The latest addition to the palaces of Whitehall are the new Government offices in Parliament Street now practically ready for occupation and which will naturally be of interest to the hundreds of Anglo-Indians whose business carries them in the direction of the Home Office. The huge pile, which is in the English Renaissance style, covers three acres, has cost £700,000, contains 500 rooms in which 1,500 officials of sorts will be accommodated and has taken seven years to complete.

Miss Maud Allan's extraordinary and really clever "Salome" dance, of which I told you something a few weeks ago, has again provided the papers with diverting "copy." Her projected trip to Manchester has been scotched by the Watch Committee of that ultraproper city. They "will not permit any representation in which nudity is an element," and in order to satisfy themselves on the point ere they declared their policy they despatched their Chief Constable—no one less—to look at the dance as performed in London. He did so from the auditorium, and like Didymus of old, asked for a closer view of the fair danseuse and her costume, but this having very properly been denied him those who sent him have tabooed the dance. Apparently what is good enough for the King and Queen, members of the Royal Family, Bishops and leading Churchmen, the Prime Minister and others is not good enough for the rag city. As you may imagine this ridiculous incident has been the opportunity of the comic artist and the multitude whom nothing can restrain from rushing into print on little matters of this sort.

The suffragettes make their supreme effort up to date when they march to-morrow from the Embankment to the Albert Hall there to "demonstrate" to the accompaniment of cheers from sympathisers and jeers from the unregenerate. In the van will be borne their purple banner and at the head will march Lady Francis Balfour and Mrs. Fawcett L.L.D., in her scarlet doctor's robes (bad taste surely!) and among the well-known women who are to be prominent in this business are Mrs. Garrett Anderson,

The demonstrators will include musicians, cooks, doctors and professionals, literary and educational women, nurses, artists, housekeepers, caretakers and aristocrats. The following Saturday they give us another show in Hyde Park. They are certainly earnest, if misguided, for I see on the Hyde Park affair over £9,600 has been laid out already. It is sad to reflect that, should they succeed in getting whatever it is they want—and there are those bold enough to doubt whether they know what they really do want—and when they have purified the streets, abolished public houses and actresses, driven the mere male thing to domestic drudgery and levied a terrific tax on bachelors many of them will be as far off getting married as ever—eh what?

"The Merry Widow" celebrated her first anniversary at Daly's last Monday, when her many admirers awoke to extraordinary efforts; par example scores of enthusiasts actually began to line up at the gallery door shortly after 10 o'clock on Sunday night!! Really the mental condition of such people ought to be made the subject of enquiry. Naturally the piece was received with unbounded delight. The cheering as each favourite artiste made his or her appearance was the signal for a fresh ovation, and at moments the enthusiasm quite upset the players. It was a function of endless and rather irritating encories.

That a large section of the British public still appreciate genuine, old, crusted melodrama is proved by the crowded houses drawn to see "The Prince and the Beggar Maid" at the Lyceum throughout the week, and from what one can gather the piece is likely to enjoy a long run. Taken in the right way this pretty romance, teeming with sentiment, movement, absurdity and pathos, is capable of giving a deal of satisfaction to a certain section of the public.

There is no real need to tell the story in detail. Suffice it to say that the refusal of Princess Monica of Illyria to marry Prince Hildred of Sylvania led to a war between the two states. The Princess's people came to grief rather badly over the business, but by disguising herself as a begger-maid she managed to gain access to the Prince's castle, and, after going through many wild adventures, was rescued and loved by Prince Hildred's brother, Prince Olaf. All the members of the cast put their hearts into the business. They were not afraid to let themselves go. And this being good old-fashioned melodrama it was the best thing they could do. The acting honours were carried off by Miss Nora Kerin, Mr. Eric Mayne, Mr. Lauderdale Maitland, Mr. Halliwell Hobbes, and Mr. Frederick Ross.

The author of "The Two Pins", the latest production at the Aldwych Theatre, calls it a comedy, though there is more of thirteenth century romance in it than anything else and perhaps a thought too much farce at times. But it must be admitted that Mr. Oscar Asche has again given proof of his talent and correct taste in mounting, and though it is not convincing in parts the play provides good enough entertainment.

One great merit the piece possesses. It furnishes Miss Lily Brayton with a beautiful part as Elsa, a part such as she loves and carries out with characteristic grace and beauty. Mr. Oscar Asche was excellent as Philip, drily humorous and tenderly bluff; while Mr. Vernon Steel portrayed Rudolph with much spirit and resolute vigour. Mr. Courtice Pounds, as Touchstone—we beg pardon, we mean Francis—a tuneful jester, "obliged" with many pretty songs; and other characters were well sustained by Mr. G. Kay Souper, Miss Muriel Ashwynne, and Mr. Henry Kitts.

The Richmond Dog Show last week had a record entry, and attracted a big and brilliant gathering, but it was in some respects disappointing. There were 1,640 entries, out of which there were 126 Pomeranians and 114 Pekinese, these two classes seemed to swamp the show. I am of those who do not admire these breeds—a dozen of each would have satisfied me—I should have been glad to see the terriers more numerous and of better class. The fox-terriers were quite a poor lot, the Scotties not much better, the Irishmen fairly good, the bull-terriers moderate. But the St. Bernards, Newfoundlands, Deer, Wolf and Bloodhounds formed a particularly nice collection. I met the Honorary Secretary of the Calcutta Kennel Club just where I expected to find him, among the bull-terriers; he was keeping his eye peeled for wrinkles for the next C. K. C. Show and was as teeming with canine enthusiasm as ever.

The day of universal penny postage draws nearer: the latest stride is in the direction of America which country has accepted the proposal and by October we shall possibly see the present postal rate between Great Britain and America reduced to a penny. The Post Office certainly progresses; it is not so many years since my schoolboy letters to India were few and far between by reason of the necessary nine-penny stamp which was seldom procured without a struggle and always licked on with a sigh.

An official return recently published conveys the unwelcome intelligence that England continues to encourage the influx of the undesirable alien. During last year no fewer than 34,954 of him were added to our already surplus stock of hirsute and unwashed "furrin gents." The total number who landed in the United Kingdom was 609,926, of which 480,743 came from European and Mediterranean ports, and 129,183 from other parts. The provisions of the Expulsion Act are no doubt good enough in their way and it is satisfactory to hear that it has had a useful deterrent effect on the alien criminal, for crime shows an appreciable diminution; but the ousting of British labour, the under-cutting of prices, and the consequent terrible struggle for existence among our own poor grows and grows.

I must not forget to mention our new motor-'buses de luxe. From the plutocratic regions of Queen's Gate to the top of aristocratic Portland Place, viâ Knightsbridge, Piccadilly, and Regent's Street, now runs the "Pullman" motor-'bus. The Company are now running the most luxurious omnibus (at sixpence any distance) ever possessed by any city in the world. The new motor-'bus has no outside accommodation, but inside are nine large and luxurious arm-chairs. There is electric light and a heating apparatus, and all the conveniences of a private motor-car. The chassis is a beautifully quiet 20-h.p. Charron, and the drivers—chosen for their aristocratic appearance—wear smart uniforms. At present only three of these 'aughty engines ply for "tizzies" to-day, but in less than two months 200 will be on the streets of the metropolis. Then bang will go the "saxpences" and the exhaust pipe. Only the substitution of "eau-de-cologne" for petrol is needed now to make travelling in motor-'buses comparatively comfortable!

I must confess to finding something of incongruity in the proclamation of the Welsh Eisteddfod in the Inner Temple. The national gathering is to be held in London next June, so in accordance with the ancient statute it became necessary last Wednesday to "Call the bards from the hills"; let us hope the blasts of the big-lunged Welshman who performed on the fearsome brass instrument called the "horn of the Gorsedd" were heard in distant Cumbria. Here was the Logan stone set up, here were snowy bearded Druids in their picturesque ceremonial robes, sky blue Poet Bards, strangely habited harpists and bearers of curious insignia solemnly "proclaiming" amidst white wigged barristers, and frock-coated attorneys, and a city crowd that included Costers, Yankees, milliners, merchants, carmen and porters while the chanting of the Druids was occasionally drowned by the newsboys' yell of "two-thirty edition, winners"! It struck one as funny, but I make no doubt it was all very necessary.

A CARIBOU HUNT.

I WAS provided with a tent, stove and cooking apparatus, likewise a traine or toboggan and a strong dog rejoicing in the dissipated name of Brandy. I then looked for a guide and companion, for to go out hunting alone is most imprudent, as an accident, which would not entail serious consequences where one is near the settlements, might result in death when one is alone and helpless in the bush.

I was fortunate enough to secure the services of a half-breed hunter named Paul, who owned a dog which, unlike mine, bore the temperance name of Coffee, and a muzzle-loading gun, No. 10 calibre, of wonderful length and weight, concerning which he told the most astonishing yarns.

The night before our departure there had been a heavy fall of snow and our progress was slow, as we had to beat a road for our dogs and frequently help them in hauling the sleighs which bore our tent, provisions and camp equipage.

We walked in Indian file, the better to harden the snow and make the work easier for our four-footed companions. Late in the afternoon we reached a hunter's log camp on the bank of the river, where we found two whites and three Indians who had been fishing in the lakes in the vicinity. We hung our moccasins on a spruce branch, stuck our guns and snow shoes in the nearest snowdrift and entered the hut, which was so full of tobacco smoke and so crowded that we had hard work to find room for our dogs and ourselves.

We smoked in self-defence and while inquiring as to our chances for hunting we boiled our tea and fried some slices of pork, which we ate with a good appetite. We then picked out a soft plank, and with our dogs for pillows soon dropped asleep.

The following morning we set out an hour before daylight, at about 6 o'clock, and the weather being cold and bright, we walked briskly on the frozen surface of the river. The sun made its appearance over the tops of the trees as we got on the di-charge of a lake, and at noon, a few miles from the first falls we had seen, we struck the fresh tracks of three caribou; they were going in a westerly direction and could not be very far off. We thought of following them, but were compelled to give up the idea. We had the wind in our backs and it would have been impossible to get close enough to them, so we resumed our journey, grumbling at our luck.

A little further on we came across more tracks, not so fresh as the others, but much more numerous. Caribou seemed to be plentiful about there, so we decided to camp on the spot, as the animals seemed to be migrating toward some large barrens, called deserts or jardins by the French-Canadians and half-breeds, and which we knew to be some distance away.

After having cleared out the snow down to the ground with our snow shoes as shovels, holding the lower end in the right hand and the thong in the left, we set up our tent in a clump of spruce and sapins or balsam fir, which sheltered us from the cold winds, and in which we were safe from falling trees, a danger ever to be avoided in the woods.

We spread a thick layer of sapin boughs on the frozen ground, and while Paul was putting up the stove and arranging our things in the tent, I went down to the river, cut some holes in the ice and soon returned with a pail of delicious water and seventeen splendid trout. I also set up about a dozen snares for hares.

Paul was delighted to see the trout, which he soon had in the pan with some slices of pork, and we made an excellent meal.

The sun set as we finished our dinner and it was time to turn in. We filled our stove with pieces of half dried birch, lit our pipes and stretched ourselves on our bed of fir boughs with our feet to the fire, enjoying a feeling of blissful rest.

The reader is of course aware that on an expedition such as that which I am describing one does not burden himself with many candles, so that, as a rule, his active life begins with the day and ends at dark. If one returns late he must be satisfied with the light from the stove or with a torch of birch bark, and a candle is lighted only when a valuable skin has to be put on a stretcher.

When we awoke next day the sky was overcast and the weather much milder. This meant snow, perhaps rain. This was a bad prospect for us and prevented our moving away. We therefore resolved to take advantage of this to catch more trout, set new snares, kill some partridges if possible and lay in a sufficient stock of fuel to last us while there.

I undertook the first part of the programme, leaving Paul to cut the wood and pile it near the tent, and went to the snares I had set the previous evening, where I found three hares. The Labrador hare is the same as that found elsewhere in Canada, the Lepus americanus or hunsonicus, brown in summer, white in winter. In some years it is found in great numbers, at other times it disappears entirely without any apparent reason. Finally, the hunters here say that it can change its sex. This of course is absurd, but it is nevertheless a fact that at certain seasons you catch only males and at other seasons only females.

Leaving my lines and snares, I went into the woods to look for partridges. After walking about three-quarters of an hour I flushed a covey of spruce partridges on the shore of a small lake and treed them not very far off. I had left my gun behind me for fear of frightening the caribou, so I determined to noose them. I cut a long pole of white birch, fastened a piece of wire with a slip-knot at the end of it, and carefully approaching the partridges, which were looking at me with curiosity, I slipped the noose over the neck of the lowest one. I then took the nearest, and so on until I got seven out of the eleven on the tree, the others being too high for me to reach them without alarming them. These stupid birds are shot in the same manner; the report of the gun does not alarm them, but they are frightened by anything falling from above.

I got some more trout on my way back, so that, adding the trout, hares and partridges to the pork and butter we had brought with us, we had a supply of excellent provisions for several days, and were at liberty to look after the caribou.

Just as we finished cleaning our guns the snow began to fall in heavy flakes, and we knew we were in for a three days' storm. We were not mistaken, and for two days and three nights we did nothing but turn out to remove the weight of snow from the tent and to get water. After the storm there was a light thaw, and then it froze hard, which was just what we wanted. We began to get ready at 3 in the morning, and two hours before day we were on our way, followed by our dogs, which ran easily on the crust, over which we skimmed with our snow shoes.

We went in a westerly direction, and, as we expected, we soon came upon a ravage of caribou; that is, a place of several acres in extent where these animals had pawed the snow, crossed and recrossed each other, browsing on the lower twigs of the birch trees and on the spruce and older sapins.

The gang or herd must have consisted of at least thirty individuals, among which were several fawns. They evidently had quitted the spot quite recently, and by circling around it we found fresh tracks where they had left it.

We followed, keeping our dogs behind us and taking advantage of the wind. An hour's march brought us to the edge of a small and narrow lake, in the middle of which were our caribou, about twenty-seven in all, some lying in the snow, while the young fawns played about. They were 200yds. away, just the range for my Marlin, but a great deal too far for my companion's heavy, slugloaded gun. This was too bad. I had brought my rifle, relying upon my man for shots at close range. With my rifle I could not expect to hit more than one, while with his he could hit three or four. It was impossible to get closer without being discovered. I therefore fired and hit one, which, although mortally wounded, ran away with the others, while we started in pursuit. Near the wood we came upon the one I had shot, we gralloched it, stuck a small fir tree near it to mark the spot, and continued on, the hard crust giving us an advantage over the caribou. About 3 in the afternoon we saw seven in a glade and got two, a large buck and a doe. It was then getting late and we had to give up the pursuit, as we had to gralloch the dead animals to reduce their weight, which we could not have done had they become frozen, and to make arrangements for camping before it got quite dark. We shovelled out the snow with our snow shoes piling it up to windward, made a lean-to with poles covered with fir and spruce boughs, strewed a thick layer of the same for a floor, and crawled under shelter.

Although we kept up the fire, we could not sleep for the cold. We smoked, dozed, chatted, drank lots of tea and took an occasional sip of whisky; then at daybreak we ate a bite, harnessed the dogs and ourselves to the caribou and hauled them with great difficulty to the tent, which we reached two hours after sunset.

As the weather continued fine and we were in good trim, we decided to remain. I am never so happy as when in the solitude of the forest, and then I had no home attractions. We accordingly buried our caribou under the snow and set out in different directions to look for tracks of other herds, as the one we had fired at must have fled to a great distance. I walked all morning without being able to find anything besides hare and partridge tracks, when I came to the edge of a small track, which I took to be that of a lynx; so I went on the stream which fed the lake; looking for open water to wash down my homely meal of bread and frozen pork. In a few minutes I reached the foot of a small cascade, where I got some water and began my lunch. While I was so engaged I heard a noise, caused by the fall of a large lump of snow, which started from the top of the falls and rolled down near my feet. One of the edges of the lump showed the marks of a caribou's foot, while the excitement displayed by my dog Brandy indicated the presence of something. I checked him, got my rifle ready and carefully crawled up the slope. When I reached the top I saw a large buck with magnificent antlers browsing and unconscious of danger. Brandy gave a growl, the caribou turned suddenly, giving me a splendid opportunity, and I got in a shot behind the shoulder which laid him low. Of course my taking the body to the tent alone was out of the question, so I gralloched him, to the great delight of Brandy, who feasted to his heart's content. Then I covered up the carcase with snow and made my way back to the camp as this caribou seemed to be a bachelor and without any following.

It was almost dark when I reached the camp and Paul had not returned, so I lit the stove and set my kettle to boil, while in a tin plate I put some slices of caribou tongue on a layer of onions and butter, making a delicious dish, and lay down awaiting the arrival of my companion. I waited patiently for several hours and had fallen into a deep sleep when I awoke on hearing him coming with his dog. I jumped up and asked him what made him so late. "Don't ask me," he replied, "I think I have walked a hundred miles. I have seen plenty of caribou tracks, but they are far away and not very fresh; the animals seem to expect a heavy storm and are moving away. There are plenty of hares and partridges. I have a dozen at the door. For goodness sake, give me a cup of tea and something to eat."

While he was eating I told him of my luck, and we decided to return to the same spot on the morrow to get the buck I had killed and try our luck again. We did so following my snow-shoe tracks which showed clearly; I had also taken the precaution to blaze my path through the woods.

We looked around carefully, but could find no fresh tracks, so we set to work to bring our quarry home. We harnessed the dogs in tandem fashion to the antlers and then fastened our own pack straps to them, and in this way we made good time over the crust.

Two days afterwards we struck our tent and moved a day's march from the spot. When we had settled down we started off, found a ravage, and in a short time came upon two caribou standing on a slight eminence which sloped down to the river. I climbed up the slope to stalk them in that direction while Paul went toward the river which was covered with an accumulation of snow and ice 10ft. deep. When we got within range the caribou were facing in my direction while exposing their flanks to Paul. I made a sign to him to fire and saw him raise his gun to his shoulder and press the trigger. The report was so loud that it made me jump on my snow shoes. I ran in, found one animal dead and the other badly wounded. I put an end to its sufferings and then looked toward the river. Paul had disappeared; I could only see his dog Coffee stretching his head over a considerable excavation and howling piteously. I ran to the river, and lying down near the dog I saw at the bottom of a deep hole, in which the water of the torrent rushed past, my man hanging on to his long gun, which, luckily for him, had fallen across the excavation and was retained in position by two pieces of ice jutting out from the sides. His head and shoulders alone were above water, while his legs and body were carried under the ice by the current. There was not a moment to lose. Calling out to him to hold on, I tied our pack straps together, and descending very carefully into the hole I tied the straps under his arms. Then I climbed up and hauled with all my might, but in vain.

"Help yourself?" I yelled. "You are heavier than two caribou."

"I can't, sir; my clothes are frozen and stuck underneath the ice. You will have hard work to get me out of here."

"Don't be afraid," I replied, "I have a good hold of you. Here is my axe. Cut away the ice and free yourself."

While doing so I harnessed the dogs to the rope, and when he was free we hauled away and pulled him out of the hole.

He did not look like a man, but like an icicle. His clothes were frozen solid and we had to drag him to the bank to thaw him out by means of a huge fire, which I started at once.

After he had taken a good drink of whisky and had thawed a little he began swearing at the ice, but I told him it was due to his own stupidity.

"You heard the reports of the trees cracking last night with the frost, and you might have known that ice does the same and cracks from one bank to the other. You might also have known that the heavy detonation of your gun would break the ice under you, and you should have waited till you were ashore. If I had not been with you it would have been all up with you. You would have turned into an icicle, and in spring you would have gone over the falls."

"Ah, sir, one gets so excited at the sight of game that one does not always stop to reflect."

This was the last of our adventures worth relating on this trip. We hunted for some time longer with varying success, and I returned to the settlements well pleased with my outing.

He was an untried sportsman, but he entered a tailor's shop and approached a clerk with the air of a champion.

"I am a rower," said he, "and I want to be measured for two pairs of rowing trousers—the kind with the sliding seats."

Proud Father—My child is only a month old, and he cries for the moon. Proud Mother—Mine isn't a week old, and he cries for the milky way.

"In writing up the burglary," said the excited caller, "you can say that the thieves in their hurry overlooked seven hundred and fifty dollars' worth of jewellery and solid silver plate in one of the cupboards." "Might that not bring the burglars to your house a second time?" suggested the editor. "I don't care if it does," exclaimed the other. "I don't want the public to get the impression that a gang of robbers can go through my house and only find twenty-five dollars worth of stuff worth stealing."

Fishing.

A NEW GAME FISH.

To those who go down to the sea in ships on the Atlantic coast, and especially make their way in winter down among the Bahama and Leeward islands, along the mysterious Spanish main, a vision of loveliness is often vouchsafed in the guise of long, big-headed fishes, which give a continual and extraordinary exhibition of agility, directly in front of the cut-water of the fastest steamer, yacht, or sailing vessel, seemingly playing with it. From a distance of several feet, they look blue-backed, not unlike albacore; and they go by the name of dolphins, but are fishes; not the whale-like creature known as the bottle-nosed dolphin, which has the habits of the porpoise and others of the whale family.

It has been my good fortune to take several of these fishes which live out at sea in the Atlantic; one from the dolphin-striker of a ship, with a spear; and again in a vast floating patch of weed—a disconnected section of the Sargasso Sea, where I had an excellent opportunity to see them, and played my dolphin in a glorious garden of the sea, until it ran aground in the weed; which, I fancy, explains why I caught it. It was a case not of skill, but of good luck; not on the side of the fish, but good luck for me.

For nearly twenty years I fished the Pacific off the southern Californian islands, where is found the greatest variety of big game fishes, of size and quality to stir the soul of the most phlegmatic ingrate. In all this time, though I saw some of the rarest fishes of the sea taken, including the opah, the ribbon-fish, fishes that have lights, and many more, never did I see a dolphin or even hear of one until in 1906 or 1907, when one was brought in by a professional fisherman; then another later, and then, everyone went dolphin fishing with light rod and reel tackle.

There is but one criticism to be made about the sea-angling in southern California, if, indeed, one should have the temerity to take exception to the fulsome bounties of nature, and that is when you go fishing you often catch fish too easily, and if disposed to see how many you could take, which, unfortunately, is the aim and desire of certain lamentables, you could almost fill a boat at times with fifteen or twenty-pound yellowtails.

But there was no danger of this with the dolphin. One fisherman said (and he was not under oath) that he had seen a school of dolphins so immense that it tinted the turquoise seas, and changed them to gold, as though some Midas-hand had passed over the waters. But the reality, so far as I was concerned, was very different. I fished singly, and in pairs, and in groups. We trolled the sea, up and down; now inshore, along the high and precipitous cliffs of the island, following along in undulating kelp beds that form the rialto of the fishes in these seas; then finding them not, went offshore over the seas of glass, which constitutes one of the wonders and charms of the region.

Down to the south-east of Santa Catalina, about five miles off-shore, is a region called the "doldrums," as here there is almost always a lack of wind, and boats and yachts under sail often drift about for hours until they escape when the vagrant wind reaches them. In the doldrums, as in a vortex, patches of kelp were often found drifting with the tide; some twenty or more feet across, others but three or four; and all afforded excellent shelter for swarms of little fishes called by the men sea-minnows. Singularly enough, they all had taken on the tint and colour of the weed—a rich brownish green, and when lying near it, were almost indistinguishable from it.

The weed was mostly kelp, a long olive-green or amber-hued vine, with broad fluted leaves six or eight feet long, which floated on the surface and hung down, forming beautiful arches and loops—natural lurking places for the fishes—of a graceful and beautiful character, as aside from their natural beauty, every leaf was spotted or decorated with the white tracery of delicate coral-like animals, which had the appearance of white lace seen over amber. Each leaf was covered with these and other forms, lending to the beauty of the whole.
