First Day, Saturday, 8th August 1908.

THE August meeting opened this afternoon in excellent weather and there was a record attendance. Their Excellencies Sir Henry and Lady McCallum were present, and the assembly also included Rear-Admiral Sir George Warrender and many other notabilities. Seven races and a match made up the programme, but all interest was of course centred on the Governor's Cup, the big event of the day. The race was won by Mr. E. L. F. de Soysa's Footprint. This is his third successive win, a splendid performance only equalled by Mr. A. W. Jackson's Giddy Girl, who won the Cup in 1889, 1890 and 1891. Footprint was a hot favourite, and though challenged at the finish by his last year's rival Pendred, he had not much difficulty in scoring by a length and a half. In record time too—2mins 14½secs. His previous best in the race was 2-14½. Firth, his jockey, had a day out, scoring three wins besides his victory in the Cup. The afternoon's enjoyment was marred by a couple of accidents; Nightingale, Sir S. D. Bandaranaike's representative in the Cup, slipped at the start, broke his back, and had to be destroyed, E. O'Neill, his rider, being badly hurt. Beaumont was injured while riding Cape Rose in the Desert Stakes. A nail protruding from the inside of the railing ran into his heel, but he continued to fulfil his engagements during the afternoon and steered Dolores to victory in the Novice Stakes. Results :—

A Remarkable Book ON THE Preservation of Health.

The French have a particularly happy phrase which, literally translated, means "The Joy of Living." It conjures up in the mind's eye a picture of buoyant health and happiness which appeals with particular force to the jaded Anglo-Indian. Yet there is no earthly reason why the residents in the Tropics should not share that exhilaration of well-being with our sprightly Gallic friends.

That is exactly what a physician long resident in India now comes forward to show in a timely and fascinating publication with the very tempting title "How to keep well in India," a title that will find a sympathetic echo in every heart from Calcutta to Bombay and from Peshawar to Madras.

How to keep well in India is so easy, too, if you only know how. And this the doctor proceeds to tell us in such a breezy style that after reading it we feel that we possess the master key to health.

The author plunges right into his subject by first telling us frankly that many make the fatal mistake of attempting to regulate life on the European plan. There is hope and cheer in the declaration that "it is absurd to suppose that the European cannot live and enjoy if in the Tropics."

After the quaintdaaradox that "your stomach s only half a stom ch in India," he dwells upon ithe necessity for upplying the stomach with something rich in that element which goes to build up the nerve health and without which there can be no bodily health, viz., phosphorus. And it is equally essential, the writer says, "that we should supply this substance in an easily digestible form, for the stomach is, as we have heard, a low-power one."

"It is here," declares this medical authority, "the tonic food called Sanatogen comes in as an aid to diet. It is so easily digestible that patients in the acute stage of enteric fever are constantly being fed on it, and it administers the vitalising substance upon which the vital forces actually depend, and in such a manner that the hungry tissues can seize upon them and adapt them to their various needs."

There is the solution of the whole problem. And then a grave note of warning is sounded by this expert. Digestive disorders are the frequent forerunners of enteric fever and dysentery. "In this connection," says the doctor, "it must never be forgotten that we live not on what we eat but on what we absorb."

After pointing out the special milk dangers in India, he says:—"In Sanatogen we have a substance which is milk and yet is better than milk. Milk," he observes, "consists roughly of Casein and water. The Casein or nitrogenous part is made the basis of this new nerve food Sanatogen, which is almost universally recognised by medical men as the scientific food."

"In Sanatogen," he goes on to say, "we have 95 per cent. of Casein combined with 5 per cent. of phosphorus, the combination supplying the most powerful known substance for both stimulating and feeding the nerves."

He proves conclusively that with its high nutritive value Sanatogen forms at once an almost perfect and complete diet for the low-power system of the average Anglo-Indian.

He quotes, amongst others, the testimony of the famous Dr. Ewald, of the University of Berlin, who declared after an extensive series of experiments with enteric patients treated with Sanatogen that: "The inference to be drawn from our experiments is that Sanatogen, on account of its ready absorption and its perfectly non-irritant character, may be used with great advantage for increasing the nutritive value of a given diet in all cases of physical weakness, as well as in the acute stages of all those maladies accompanied by rise of temperature, and particularly in enteric fever."

His graphic pen brings home to us most forcefully how Sanatogen is a better tonic than alcohol; how it is indispensable in low fever, Dysentery, Malarial Fevers, and he concludes with some most profitable advice which every Anglo-Indian should read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest.

His points are pregnant with significance. To take only one of the many rich nuggets contained in this gold mine of information: "Don't be conquered by the debility which supervenes on most tropical ailments and allow yourself to drift into the 'interesting invalid' condition; you may be interesting to yourself ut you will be but a bore to others."

And then he goes right on to tell us how to shake off the deadly debility.

"How to keep well in India" is absorbingly interesting throughout; plain, straightforward, and to the point. It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well.

A limited number of specimen copies of this interesting booklet wil be distributed free of charge and can be obtained from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO., CALCUTTA, who also stock Sanatogen.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From Mr. W.—Dear Sirs,—"I suffered from Liver complaint in its most aggravated form, pain in the side, shoulder-blade and stomach; vomiting after every meal, excessive acidity in the stomach, constipated bowels and extreme debility FOR TEN YEARS, I tried all the known remedies without success and had given up hope, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Chiretta.' I have taken it for some time and am now nearly quite well. Pain in the side nearly gone, in the shoulder-blade entirely so. No vomiting, little or no acidity in the stomach, bowels relaxed, no debility, being now a stronger and better man than I have been for years."

H. James Rainey, Esq., of Koolnah, Jessore, writes:—"Having derived a deal of benefit from the use of your 'Essence of Chiretta' (combined with VERY SMALL doses of Quinine) both as prophylactic and anti-periodic for intermittent fevers of malarious type, which would not yield to the usual remedies employed, and which disease is very prevalent in the Districts of Lower Bengal, in particular those parts bordering on the Soonderban, I think it incumbent on me to acquaint you thereof pro bono publico. You are welcome to give this letter all the publicity you may deem necessary in order that this excellent remedy of yours may become generally known."

From J. A. Farrell, Mooltan.—"Your Chiretta has already done me a WORLD amount of good. I had an enlargement of the spleen and fever for 9 months which reduced me to a mere skeleton. The fever I got rid of with your Antiperiodic Pills in 3 days; and the spleen I let be—thinking it could do me no harm. In this I was greatly mistaken, my complexion became as yellow as gold. Seeing your Chiretta I determined to use some of it, and see what good it did me. I have used it for about a week and already the colour is coming to my cheek and the TAN (through continued fever) has left my face. For the climate of India there is no medicine so good, for a Tonic, &c., as your 'Essence of Chiretta." This is only an addition to the valuable testimonials you have so well earned through the Chiretta."

How to keep well in India is so easy, too, if you only know how. And this the doctor proceeds to tell us in such a breezy style that after reading it we feel that we possess the master key to health.

The author plunges right into his subject by first telling us frankly that many make the fatal mistake of attempting to regulate life on the European plan. There is hope and cheer in the declaration that "it is absurd to suppose that the European cannot live and enjoy if in the Tropics."

After the quaintdaaradox that "your stomach s only half a stom ech in India," he dwells upon ithe necessity for upplying the stomach with something rich in that element which goes to build up the nerve health and without which there can be no bodily health, viz., phosphorus. And it is equally essential, the writer says, "that we should supply this substance in an easily digestible form, for the stomach is, as we have heard, a low-power one."

"It is here," declares this medical authority, "the tonic food called Sanatogen comes in as an aid to diet. It is so easily digestible that patients in the acute stage of enteric fever are constantly being fed on it, and it administers the vitalising substance upon which the vital forces actually depend, and in such a manner that the hungry tissues can seize upon them and adapt them to their various needs."

There is the solution of the whole problem. And then a grave note of warning is sounded by this expert. Digestive disorders are the frequent forerunners of enteric fever and dysentery. "In this connection," says the doctor, "it must never be forgotten that we live not on what we eat but on what we absorb."

After pointing out the special milk dangers in India, he says:—"In Sanatogen we have a substance which is milk and yet is better than milk. Milk," he observes, "consists roughly of Casein and water. The Casein or nitrogenous part is made the basis of this new nerve food Sanatogen, which is almost universally recognised by medical men as the scientific food."

"In Sanatogen," he goes on to say, "we have 25 per cent. of Casein combined with 5 per cent. of phosphorus, the combination supplying the most powerful known substance for both stimulating and feeding the nerves."

He proves conclusively that with its high nutritive value Sanatogen forms at once an almost perfect and complete diet for the low-power system of the average Anglo-Indian.

He quotes, amongst others, the testimony of the famous Dr. Ewald, of the University of Berlin, who declared after an extensive series of experiments with enteric patients treated with Sanatogen that: "The inference to be drawn from our experiments is that Sanatogen, on account of its ready absorption and its perfectly non-irritant character, may be used with great advantage for increasing the nutritive value of a given diet in all cases of physical weakness, as well as in the acute stages of all those maladies accompanied by rise of temperature, and particularly in enteric fever."

His graphic pen brings home to us most forcefully how Sanatogen is a better tonic than alcohol; how it is indispensable in low fever, Dysentery, Malarial Fevers, and he concludes with some most profitable advice which every Anglo-Indian should read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest.

His points are pregnant with significance. To take only one of the many rich nuggets contained in this gold mine of information: "Don't be conquered by the debility which supervenes on most tropical ailments and allow yourself to drift into the 'interesting invalid' condition; you may be interesting to yourself ut you will be but a bore to others."

And then he goes right on to tell us how to shake off the deadly debility.

"How to keep well in India" is absorbingly interesting throughout; plain, straightforward, and to the point. It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well.

A limited number of specimen copies of this interesting booklet wil be distributed free of charge and can be obtained from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO., CALCUTTA, who also stock Sanatogen.

Dr. E. J. Lazarus's ESSENCE OF CHIRETTA,

In Bottles Re. 1-8, 2-8 and 4.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From Mr. W.—Dear Sirs,—"I suffered from Liver complaint in its most aggravated form, pain in the side, shoulder-blade and stomach; vomiting after every meal, excessive acidity in the stomach, constipated bowels and extreme debility FOR TEN YEARS, I tried all the known remedies without success and had given up hope, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Chiretta.' I have taken it for some time and am now nearly quite well. Pain in the side nearly gone, in the shoulder-blade entirely so. No vomiting, little or no acidity in the stomach, bowels relaxed, no debility, being now a stronger and better man than I have been for years."

H. James Rainey, Esq., of Koolnah, Jessore, writes:—"Having derived a deal of benefit from the use of your 'Essence of Chiretta' (combined with VERY SMALL doses of Quinine) both as prophylactic and anti-periodic for intermittent fevers of malarious type, which would not yield to the usual remedies employed, and which disease is very prevalent in the Districts of Lower Bengal, in particular those parts bordering on the Soonderban, I think it incumbent on me to acquaint you thereof pro bono publico. You are welcome to give this letter all the publicity you may deem necessary in order that this excellent remedy of yours may become generally known."

From J. A. Farrell, Mooltan.—"Your Chiretta has already done me a WORLD amount of good. I had an enlargement of the spleen and fever for 9 months which reduced me to a mere skeleton. The fever I got rid of with your Antiperiodic Pills in 3 days; and the spleen I let be—thinking it could do me no harm. In this I was greatly mistaken, my complexion became as yellow as gold. Seeing your Chiretta I determined to use some of it, and see what good it did me. I have used it for about a week and already the colour is coming to my cheek and the TAN (through continued fever) has left my face. For the climate of India there is no medicine so good, for a Tonic, &c., as your 'Essence of Chiretta.' This is only an addition to the valuable testimonials you have so well earned through the Chiretta."

The Reason Why

It isn't the name on a Cigar that makes the Cigar good. It's the Cigar that makes the name good. That is why

Flor de Spencer

Cigars are so well and favourably known all over the world, and why they are preferred by discriminating smokers to all others.

ATHLETICS.

THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

COMPLETE RESULTS.

ON Friday all events on the card were dwarfed into insignificance by the Marathon Race. For the purpose of the record I here append results and will then tell your readers about the big event:—

MARATHON RACE.

J. J. Hayes (America)	1
C. Hefferon (South Africa)	2
J. Forshaw (America)	3

WRESTLING.

Won by a yard. Time—10mins. 55⅕secs.

1,600 METRES RELAY RACE (1,749yds. 29in.).

Heat 1.—Hungary beat Sweden. E. Boler was the first man home. Greece scratched.
Heat 2.—Germany beat Holland easily. France and Italy scratched.
Heat 3.—America beat Great Britain. Canada was third. Won by six yards.

FENCING.

Epee Team Competition.

In the fight for second place Italy, with 4 hits against, beat Germany, 11 against.

Sabre Team Competition.

In the fight for second place Great Britain, with 5 hits against, beat Denmark, 7 against.

A. C. Gilbert and E. T. Cooke (America) were first, with 12ft. 2in., each, which beats the Olympic record by 8in., Archibald (Canada), Soderstorm (Sweden), and Jacobs (America) tie for the bronze medal.

THE MARATHON RACE—The start.—Official time, 2-33 P.M.

The Princess of Wales fired the starting gun by an electric button, and the Crown Prince of Sweden sent away the field of 55 runners.

Eton-bridge (¼ mile).—Clarke (Britain) leading, followed closely by Burn (Canada) and Longboat (Canada).

Eton (1 mile)—Jack, Price, Duncan, and Lord leading.

Slough (3 miles).—Time—15mins. 42secs.—Jack (Britain) leading by 30 yards, followed by Price (Britain), Lord (Britain), Duncan (Britain), Hefferon (South Africa) and Dorando (Italy) in a bunch. Five yards behind came Clarke (Britain), Lawson (Canada), and Longboat (Canada).

Uxbridge-road. (3¼ miles).—Following the leaders above, the runners were in the following order:—Burn, Appleby, Simpson, Caffery, Barnes, Landquist, Goldsboro, Barrett, Wyatt, Wood, Blake, Goulding, Tornros, Welton, Tait, Morrissey, Coutoulakis, Coulcumberdos, Thompson, Lindquist, Hayes, Cotter, Nojedky, Lind, Vostbergen, Baker, Tewanima, Forshaw, Buff, Walker, Braamp, Hatch, Lister, Bath.

Uxbridge-road. The George (4 miles).—Four Britons in the van: Jack leading Price by 40 yards. Then came Duncan and Barrett.

Uxbridge, the Canal (8 miles).—Britons still leading, Price well ahead, and nearly a minute in front of Lord. Then came Hefferon (South Africa), Dorando (Italy), Aitken (Australasia), Svanberg (Sweden), Burn (Canada), and Caffery (Canada).

At Uxbridge Jack retired.

Reiser (Germany) and Jorgensen (Denmark) had already fallen out.

The last three to pass through Uxbridge were Bath (Austria), Hansen (Denmark), and Burn (Canada).

Beaconsfield and West Drayton Road (9 miles; time up to here 52 minutes). Lord (Britain) leading. Price (Britain), 2nd; Hefferon (South Africa), 3rd; Dorando (Italy), 4th. There was a big gap between the fourth man and Beale (Britain), the fifth man. Longboat (Canada) was sixth.

Uxbridge-park-road. (10 miles).—Lord 100 yards in front of Price, who was some distance ahead of Hefferon with Dorando and Longboat and Beale next.

Back home (11 miles).—Lord leading; Hefferon second.

Ruislip and Ickenham Station (12 miles), official time, 63min. 10sec.

Here Price led Hefferon by 100 yards; Lord third, Dorando fourth, Longboat fifth, half a mile behind the leader.

Duncan (Britain) gave up.

Celis (Belgium) retired, and was picked up by a motor-car.

Eastcote-rd., Ruislip.—Price (Britain) was first; Hefferon second, 100 yards behind.

The two leaders were followed past the half-way house by other competitors in the following order: Third, Lord; fourth, Dorando; fifth, Longboat; sixth, Appleby; seventh, Aitken; eighth, Caffery; ninth and tenth, Simpson and Hayes together; eleventh Beale; twelfth, Welton (who here slacked to a walk); thirteenth, Savanberg. The rest were a quarter of a mile behind.

All the men were suffering from the heat on the back of their necks.

Some were wearing knotted handkerchiefs on their heads.

Longboat had discarded his cap, and was going strong.

There was a rush of all the attendants to the village house to get buckets of water for their men.

All the men seemed more or less pumped.

Cheney-st. (15 miles), Lord collapsed.

Harrow (18 miles)—Hefferon (South Africa) leading.

At the two-thirds distance Hefferon was leading Dorando (Italy) by a mile. Appleby was third, and the next three were Longboat Aitken (Australasia), and Hayes (U.S.A.)

Through Tyburn-lane and Sheepcote-rd (the 19th and 20th mile posts) Hefferon (South Africa) kept his lead; Dorando second.

Sudbury (20 miles)—Hayes came up to third place.

Longboat gave up.

Harroward, L. and N.W. Railway bridge (21 miles).—Hefferon ahead, followed by Dorando.

Clock Tower (23 miles).—Hefferon leading; Dorando second; Hayes (U.S.A.), third; Forshaw (U.S.A.), fourth.

Old Oak, Common-lane (24 miles).—Time 2 hours 25 minute 20 second. Hefferon still ahead of Dorando.

Up to the twenty-third mile Hefferon seemed an easy winner but then the pace and heat of the day began to tell, and Dorando (Italy) began to overhaul the leader.

Through Old Oak-lane and Wormwood-scrubbs the race was terrible in its intensity.

From the Stadium could be seen the leading man, and it was at first thought this was Hefferon; but when he staggered up to the Stadium entrance it was seen that he bore the number 19—it was Dorando. Apparently almost at the last gasp.

He had crept up to and past the South African as it were on the last lap.

And so had Hayes (U.S.A.).

Then followed a scene of an amazing description.

PYRKE'S PROVISION STORES,

Apollo Bunder, BOMBAY.

All three men were in a most distressed condition.

Dorando staggered up the course inside the Stadium, crept on to almost the middle of the track and fell!

There was a mighty cry from the huge concourse as it was seen that Hefferon and Hayes were drawing up to him once more.

Painfully Dorando pulled himself to his feet and lurched a few yards further, but fell again almost immediately.

The excitement at this stage was intense. It was obviously a case of touch-and-go between Dorando, Hayes, and Hefferon.

Dorando got up a second time and managed to cover a yard or two, but his arms waved helplessly.

The effort was too much, and he fell on his knees; while those immediately behind him were slowly getting up to him.

He got up again and staggered on to within 20 yards of his goal, but for a fourth time collapsed.

By this time the situation was intensely dramatic, and it looked as if Dorando, though within such a short distance of home, must remain on the ground and allow others to pass him.

Again he got up with the assistance of two officials and this time managed to get to the winning post.

He then collapsed to the ground a fifth time, utterly spent.

Hayes came in a terrible state of exhaustion, and he too fell, while when Hefferon passed the mark he fell like a log and had to be carried off the track on a stretcher.

In due course an objection was lodged against Dorando for having been assisted, this of course, by the American, and Hefferon also, so it was reported, objected to Hayes on the ground that he, too, had assistance from his friends. The South African eventually withdrew his objection, however, and in the result the officials who decided the matter in camera, agreed that the protest must be sustained, as unless Dorando had been given assistance he would have failed to complete the course. Hayes was thus awarded the race. A gratifying feature was the forward running of the Canadians, most of whom finished comparatively fresh and strong, but the first Englishman to finish was a long way behind.

The following retired at the points indicated:—J. M. Lynch, (Australasia) 5 miles; G. B. Blake (Australasia) a little later; W. T. Braams (Holland), 4½ miles; U. Blasi, (Italy) 8 miles; F. Reiser, (Germany) and H. F. Barrett, (Great Britain), 12 miles J. Price, 17¼ miles; W. V. Aitken, (Australasia), 21½ miles, but started again; F. B. Thompson, (Great Britain) 15 miles.

The Stadium events in connection with the Games were concluded on Saturday. The programme of competitive events was longer than had originally been intended owing mainly to the postponing of part of the wrestling and the rerunning of the 400 metres flat race final heat.

Although the latter event was fixed for as early as mid-day, and would, it was rumoured, provide a walk-over for Lieutenant Halswell, there was a good-sized crowd of spectators present. Rumour proved to be correct, for the two Americans, Robbins and Taylor, did not start, and Halswell ran over by himself in the good time of 50 seconds. Several spectators ran on to the track to greet the Scot, who was loudly cheered.

The meeting will be long remembered for its wholesale smashing of records, which continued right up to yesterday, when F.C. Smithson won the 110 metres hurdles in the world's record time of 15secs. T. S. Battersby, United Kingdom, after finishing second to H. Taylor, United Kingdom, in the 1,500 metres swim, went on for the mile, and completed the distance in the British record time of 24mins. 33secs. The hop, step, and jump went to T. J. Abearne, the Irishman, at 48ft. 11½in., only 4¾in. less than world's record. The afternoon portion of the programme was witnessed by about 50,000 spectators.

One Mile Swimming.—T. S Battersby (United Kingdom), 24mins. 33sec.

110 Metres Hurdles.—F. S. Smithson (U.S.A.), 15 secs.

SWIMMING.

The 500 Yards A. S. A. Championship.—Decided at Manchester on Tuesday, the 29th instant:—For three parts of the distance the pace was a cracker, Battersby and Beaurepaire putting in good work. In the last six lengths, however, Taylor gradually drew away, and was returned an easy winner from Battersby, who was second, after a desperate finish with Beaurepaire. In covering the distance in 6mins. 14secs. Taylor beat his last year's time by 8secs. For the sake of comparison, it may be stated that the record is 6mins 7⅕secs., established by B. B. Kieran, at Leeds, in 1905. Details:—

Heat 1.—F. E. de Beaurepaire, Albert Park S.C., Melbourne, 1; P. Radmilovic, Weston-Super-Mare S. C., 2; T. Morris, Blackburn S. C. (fastest loser), 3. Won by 3 yards. Time—6min. 32⅕secs.

Heat 2.—H. Taylor, Chadderton S. C. (holder), 1; T. S. Battersby, Southport S. C., 2; F. W. Springfield, Valley S. C., Brisbane, 3; W. Foster, Bacup S. C., 0. Won by 6 yards. Time—6mins. 21⅕secs.

Final.

		Time. M. s.
1	H. Taylor (holder), Chadderton S. C. ...	6 14
2	T. S. Battersby, Southport S. C.	6 20⅘
3	F. E. de Beaurepaire, Albert Park S. C., Melbourne	6 20⅗

Won easily by 8 yards; touch.

The 100 yards handicap was won by G. S. Dockrell, the Irish champion; P. C. W. Edward (Chester) was second, and Percy Shaw (Salford) third. Time—61⅕secs.

ROWING.

Olympic Henley.

The rowing section of the Olympic Games opened very quietly yesterday. Owing to the number of withdrawals, made after the decision of the committee to extend racing over four days, the preliminary heats were reduced to fifteen, and only three were rowed off on Tuesday. There was ideal weather and a big attendance. It must be borne in mind that in all the races the starting point is about 200 yards behind the ordinary beginning, so that an eight would take about three-quarters of a minute longer to row the course and the times would be slower in all races. In the pair oar it was the nice thing for Leander that was anticipated; they defeated Canada easily. All the same, there was splendid stuff in the Canadians, but the quick short stroke which they favour was never really dangerous. Their steering, too, was at fault; before the top of the islands they hit the booms twice. Results:—

Sculling.—Bucks: Germany (B. von Gaza, Wiking Club, Berlin), 1. Berks: Hungary (E. Killer, National Rowing club 2. Killer went all to pieces half way. Time—9mins. 35secs.

Four Oars.—Bucks: United Kingdom (Magdalen College, Oxford), 1. Berks: Canada (Argonant Rowing Club), 2. Won by two lengths and a quarter. Time—8mins. 35secs.

Pairs.—Berks: United Kingdom (Leander Club), 1. Bucks: Canada (Argonaut Rowing Club) 2. Won easily. Time—9mins. 46secs.

Henley was absolutely at its best on Wednesday and a big crowd saw some good racing in which the Britishers triumphed. Foreign scullers were out-classed. Leander scored a brilliant victory over the Hungarians in the eights, rowing in perfect style and with magnificent finish.

There was quite a chapter of accidents in the heat between H. T. Blackstaffe and Walter Bowler, the Canadian. Blackstaffe is just now in such wonderfully fine form that he was freely spoken of as the ultimate winner, and with the rank and file of boating men he would be indeed a popular victor. The Vesta man showed a splendid sporting spirit when he waited for Bowler after the Canadian had fouled the piles and lost a scull. Bowler had another accident just after, and smashed into the piles again, upsetting and breaking his boat. He was helped out of the water by a punt and into his craft again, and even then finished. Results:—

Olympic Sculls.

L. Scholes (Canada) 2
Won by a length and a half. Time—9mins. 47secs.
K. Levitzky (Hungary) 1

Despite a slight breeze on the river, the heat at Henley on Thursday was intense. There was again a good attendance, both ashore and afloat, the grounds of Phyllis Court, the grand stand enclosure, and the course inside the booms presenting a brilliant spectacle. Although the breeze being down-stream told against fast times, more than was the case on the two previous days, it was very welcome to the rowers. Considerable misfortune attended the foreign competitors, Von Gaza breaking his stretcher in the Sculls, stroke of the German pair being attacked by a stitch, and the Dutch four colliding with the piles. A large attendance witnessed the opening of the races, to-day but it was scarcely of the hoped-for dimensions. It might have been a purely English regatta for all the effect internationalism made upon the finals. Thousands of people doubtless had waited for to-day, but all that it brought forth in the shape of international rivalry was a struggle between England and Belgium, and the Belgians are old friends—or enemies—and have been seen at Henley before.

What confidence existed as to this event seemed to repose mainly among the Belgians, who were in high fettle, and prepared for anything but defeat. Henley hoped greatly for Leander, but thought it wise to leave it at hope.

The original expectations of a thrilling day in which England should lower the other nations' colours one by one were narrowed down to the desire to see this one race: that certainly brought the bulk of the spectators.

England had achieved her victories too soon—the possibility was foreseen so soon as the first day's programme was issued—but it was not realised a month ago, when people weighed up the conflicting claims of the two regattas and decided in favour of the Olympic week.

The race between Blackstaffe and McCulloch produced one of the most magnificent struggles that has ever been seen over the Henley course. McCulloch led at the start; Blackstaffe, however, cut him down, and obtained a lead of half a length at the end of three minutes. It was a desperate struggle all the way home. Blackstaffe, who was sculling the race of his life, won a punishing race by rather over a length.

To-day's races resulted as follows:—

PAIR-OAR RACE.
Final.

Fenning and Thompson (United Kingdom) 1
Fairbairn and Verdon (United Kingdom) 2

There was a brisk breeze off the Bucks shore, which made the shelter of that station desirable. Thompson struck 38 to Verdon's 37, and at once showed in front, having three-quarters of a length in hand at the top of Temple Island, Fairbairn and Verdon were giving away considerable weight, and lost ground steadily until at the half-way. Time—4mins. 36secs. They were shree lengths to the bad. Verdon spurted up to a length and a half at the old mile post, but Thompson went away again, and won by 2½ lengths. The other pair were not well balanced, and Fairbairn was pulling Verdon round at the finish. Time—9mins. 41secs.

SCULLING RACE.
Final.

Blackstaffe (United Kingdom) 1
McCulloch (United Kingdom) 2

Won by a length and a quarter, after the hardest and most exciting finish of the regatta. Time—9mins. 26secs.

EIGHT-OARED RACE.
Final.

United Kingdom (Leander) 1
Belgium (Royal Club Nautique de Gand) 2

Leander led all the way, and at the half-distance were a length and a half ahead. Despite a magnificent spurt towards the finish the Belgians failed to lessen the gap between them and their rivals, and Leander won by two and a half lengths, amid scenes of indescribable enthusiasm. THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 6th August.—The hounds met this morning at Briar at 8 A.M. It was a dull morning with a thick Scotch mist which delayed proceedings for some time. Having drawn Briar, Wapshare's Hare and Hero without finding, hounds touched a line in the bog below Brooksby; they hunted it slowly down to Fuddler's Shola and up the hill side to Bracken the pace increased as they topped the hill and ran along it to Hamlet. The jack was viewed not far ahead of them as they reached the covert, through which they drove him, and led for Hearty; the jack doubled back on the line he had come to Fuddler's and swung up the swamp towards Wapshare's Hare: short of it he turned to the right into Wenlock, leaving hounds at fault. Just as the Master came to their assistance and cast them forward towards Khed, the jack was viewed going away from the bottom. On taking up the line again, hounds carried it into Bracken and threw up. They were cast round over the top of Hamlet and took up the line in the bog below and hunted it through Hearty into Beadnell's, where they dusted him round the covert, but he managed to beat them. The next jack was found in the Yemmakal Valley. He popped into an earth almost at once; on being dislodged by "Kitty" the terrier, he went to ground again a few yards further down, out of which he refused to bolt, in spite of the united efforts of "Kitty" and hounds, the Master and "Cyclops" also taking a turn inside these roomy quarters, without avail. We then drew it down the Yemmakal Valley and back by Chemmund and so home.

Saturday, 8th August.—Beadnell's at 12 noon. After waiting in vain for the dense mist to clear the Master was obliged to take hounds back to kennels.

Monday, 10th August.—The hounds met this morning at Sheffield corner at 8 A. M. It was a bright clear morning, with a blue sky and a soft breeze. Scent was better, but not so good as it should be. The crossings are in a very bad state owing to the rain, and there were quite a number of accidents in consequence, more than one horse getting badly cut about. The Master drew Gaylad Shola, then down the Andy Bog and through Dante's Spinny. Hounds touched a line near Pischal Mund, and carried it slowly up to the Krurmund Path. The jack was viewed on the hill near Ace of Spades by one of the native boys, the pack was at once clapped on, and went away down to the stream and on into Dante's Spinny. The pace increased as they crossed the Parsons' Valley, and rose the hill to the left of Middle Bit Shola; sweeping round left handed they ran over the bog near Egerton's Crossing, on past Limerick and Gaylad Shola, over the Krurmund Road into Governor's Shola. Coming away at the top by the Ace of Spades and down to the Parsons' Valley, and ran almost the same line of country as before, but turned down into Pug Pits where they lost their jack. They then drew back by Hecuta to Monkey, and on to Jackal. A jack had been viewed entering the latter, and though hounds owned to the line in the covert, and the jack was again viewed going away from the top, scent was not so good, and they could barely own to it. They hunted it slowly through the top corner of Baikie into Dendron Belt and Cicilia, the jack was viewed in front of them going into Porcupine, where he doubled back into Baikie and went away over the top of Dudley into Jackal. Scent was getting worse, but they got on better terms with the jack; he was viewed going away from the bottom of Jackal, the pace improved as they rose the hill to the right of Bagman. Leaving Long Swamp on the right, and crossing it lower down they led over the hill between Druid and Dreadnought, down to Denmark and along the ravine to Ursula, they swung round to the left over the Fairlawns Stream up into Cairn hill, where the jack made good his escape.

Tuesday, 11th August.—Avalanche Finger Post at 12 noon. A jack anxious to make the acquaintance of the Master and members of the Ooty hunt, was enjoying himself on the hill side, grubbing up beetles, etc, within a hundred yards of the second horsemen. It was not long, however, before he found he had urgent business to attend to in another quarter, and made off at a great pace with the pack in full cry, unpleasantly close on his brush. Keeping to the left at the wooded slopes below the Melkunda Road, he led hounds up to the top of a very steep hill, when he turned sharp to the right and dashed down again taking a line for Gartree Hill, from then he swung to the left and got to ground under some rocks on the bank of the Yerramuli Stream. The terrier was unable to dislodge him, though she abused him loud and long for his unsporting conduct. On going back to the Avalanche Finger Post, a jack was roused in the scrub, which made straight for an earth a few hundred yards off, under some enormous rocks below the Nanjanad Village. He was bolted, however, after a short time, and taking a line along the ridge back to the Finger Post he went to ground again in a small shola below the road, when hounds killed him. We then drew along the slopes by Sambur Shola, just beyond which a jack was viewed in a field by the first whip. He was a sporting jack, leading hounds a merry chase up through Sambur Shola, then to the left above the Nanjanad Village to below Vane's Copse and on down to Hoolham Snivey keeping to the left he went on up the valley, through Finger Post Shola then to the right across the Melkundah Road, over the ridge and sank the hill into the valley beyond Ittalur Village. Here he turned sharp back, and ran the same line the first jack had done earlier in the day down the same steep hill and to the earth by the Yerramuli Stream, but instead of trying the earth he went on past it, crossing the river and turning up to the Avalanche Bridle Path, where he was run into and killed in the open close to the Swinging Bridge.

Thursday, 13th August.—Sandy Nullah Toll Bar 8 A.M. A bright hot morning, with a nice fresh breeze. Again a jack was viewed on the hill side close to the Toll bar, but he was a shy jack, and moved off some time before the Master and others arrived, so when hounds were taken over to the spot they could make nothing of it. We then drew up the hill side above the Sholur Road, where a jack was viewed; he made off at a good pace down to Tucker's Crossing, over it and swung round to the left along the hill side and crossed the Sholur Road into Beadnell's with the hounds close behind him. They dusted him round the covert: he came out once on the ghaut side of the covert, but hopped on again and finally went away up the far side below the Toda Mund and over the ridge into a small shola above the Bungalow, then right handed up the fire path alongside of the wire fence and sharp round to the right again and down the hill to the left of Warwick Shola, crossed the bog and rose the hill into Kengod Mund Shola in which hounds hunted him round about till they finally killed him near the stream.

The gorse above Kengod Mund provided another jack, which led hounds across the large bog into Kengodu Hill Shola; after running circles round the covert, he went away along the ridge to Toda Coffee Shop Shola, in which some sambur were put up, and there was trouble with the puppies. Road Shola, Khed Shola and Wenlock were drawn, when a whistle from the Terrier Boys was heard near Fuddler Shola. Hounds picked up the line of the jack they had seen, and crossing the Bridle Path, they headed for Bracken, but turning short of this they ran the bog till below Paragon Shola, where they swung right handed across the bog below Warwick Shola. Carrying a good head and with a great cry they rose the hill above Badankod Mund, diving down into Kengod Mund Shola as if for Dunsandle Tea Estate, but turning short back they ran the ridge above Kengod Mund Shola and on through Glyn's Covert, past the Boar's Copse and away over the long shoulder which runs down from Ampthill Wood and put out into the Sholur Valley. At the edge of the ghaut above the Tea Estate, they were at fault, and though the Master made good his ground they could not hit off the line again. A good little hunt and fairly fast. It was then pretty late so hounds were taken home.

OLYMPIC ATHLETES.

PAST AND PRESENT.

IN a leading London daily contemporary recently, the erudite author of "Religio Athletae" contended in an interesting article for the superiority of the modern athlete over those of the ancient Greeks.

Before one can admit the truth of his conclusion, there is much that gives one "most furiously to think." We instinctively call to mind the celebrated leap of Phayllos, which is set down as 55 feet—before which all the self-kept records of even golfers and fishermen are as nought! Chionis of Sparta, moreover, is credited with a leap of 52 feet! We can almost picture Louis de Rougemont, Baron Munchausen, or some other truth-jumping champion having an apoplectic seizure in the chimney corner through jaundiced jealousy. Nor can one believe, from a study of Greek vases (which has become fashionable in the existing epidemic of "classic dancing," that Phayllos leaped from a spring board, or that he jumped from a height. It is true he used dumb-bells, but this cannot in itself account for this stupendous feat. Howard, of Bradford, in 1851, using 5lb. dumb-bells, and "taking off" from a wedge-shaped block of wood four inches from the ground, did a "record" jump of 29 feet 6 inches. Even the longest running hop, step, and jump of modern times falls far short of 55 feet. The discrepancy is so great that one is forced to the disrespectful belief that Phayllos' judges were guilty of—well, a "terminological inexactitude!" Comparing the whole style, proportions, and flight in air of that superb Irish athlete, P.O'Connor, with the best Greek vases, one cannot think that Hellas had ever produced his superior. Yet O'Connor's record long jump from a board is given as 24 feet 11¼ inches.

The Greeks had no high jumps, hurdles, or vaulting with the pole, while the regrettable lack of "stop watches" in those days did not enable them to pretend they could "split evens" in a 100 yards race.

Apart from the independent "records" of professional time-keepers, the ancient Olympians managed to achieve some creditable long distance performances. Phridippides covered 135 miles over rough cross-country in a couple of days, to bring to Sparta the news of the approach of the Persina host. He was henceforth honoured as a super-man or demi-god, comparable almost to our modern policeman! It was a fine performance, but there are many men now living who could do as well. The famous Foster Powell, when well on in years, walked from London to Canterbury and back (about 112 miles) in 24 hours. In 1882 Lieutenant Salvatore, of Marsala, travelled over rough tracts from Lecce to Taranto, 104 miles, in the same time.

Pt Longboat, the present Indian Marathon runner, has run 43 miles in 5hrs. 50mins. Among his other recent achievements are the Boston Marathon Race (1907) of 25 miles in 2hrs. 24mins, which he won by a mile from 114 starters; 18½ miles in 1hr. 41mins.; and 8 miles against George Bonhay in the wonderful time of 14mins. 43secs!

Such performances contrast favourably with Enchidas, the Boeotian, who went from Plataea to Delphi and back (about 95 miles) in one day, and dropped dead at the finish. Argeus won the "dolichos," or 2½ miles race and immediately ran to his home 60 miles away with the glad tidings. Whether he also took more than his own prize is not recorded, though this might account for what appears such very superfluous activity! Lasthenes, too, is said to have beaten a war charger from Coronaea to Thebes—a distance of over 20 miles. Although the Greek records which we possess are so incomplete and uncertain, yet by considering every feature of their games, their statues, their style of training, and their feats of military endurance, we are inclined to agree that our modern athletes represent a development superior to theirs.

Many of the ancient writers, particularly the men of science, were inclined to condemn the games altogether as impairing the physical efficiency of the nation. Even Plato, who had a natural feeling in favour of the athletes, speaks of the "lack of the bloom of youth on their cheek and of liveliness in their eyes." This, though they were noted for temperance and healthy living. Our athletes would, therefore, seem to last longer at a high level of excellence. Whether among athletes, oarsmen, boxers, or runners, there are many in our present day who have all won laurels at an age when the ancient Olympians would have been content to talk of their past glories.

In this international congress there are portents of a future in which a healthy rivalry in the arts and in sport, begot of mutual knowledge and understanding, will replace the wars and rumours of wars, only possible between two nations who have not learnt to understand and respect each other.

The Greek athletes were probably not so great as those of our own time. Yet there was something particularly nob'e in their games—that superior animating spirit, that fine inter-penetrated sense of the magnificent spectacle, the solemnity and physical majesty of the whole celebration, which was a tribute to the civic ideal and a joyous commemoration of the beauty of individual self-development and of the solidarity of national life.

AUGUST REGATTA.

Saturday, 15th August, 1908.

WHEN proceedings opened the weather conditions were most unpromising. It had rained heavily early in the afternoon, but with the exception of a short shower just before the second race, Jupiter Pluvius stayed his hand and the programme was put through without further discomfort. The arrangements were all that could be desired, the racing was interesting, and considering the unfavourable weather, there was quite a big attendance. The Honorary Secretary and his committee are to be congratulated on the success of the first regatta held on the Alipore water. To turn to the racing. The Hoare Cup for junior oarsman proved a very easy win for Page's crew; they kept well together all the way and were never troubled by their opponents who were early in difficulties. Claughton won the junior sculls in good style. The tub pairs, were the most popular item and five crews entered, the ultimate victors winning both their heat and the final with lots to spare There were but two competitors in the ladies' sculling race which was won by Mrs. Morris. Three couples turned out for the canoe event Williams and Pearsall, after steering a most erratic course all the way down, made a desperate effort at the finish and were only just beaten. The prizes were distributed by Miss E. Dumayne and an enjoyable afternoon was brought to a conclusion with the usual cheers which found an echo in "Young Bengal" on the further bank. Results:—

FOOTBALL IN POONA.

THE Richardson Football Tournament, now known as the Division Tournament, commenced on Monday, the 8th instant, with seven teams as entrants, viz.:—Royal Scots "B," Leicester Regiment, Worcesters "A" and "B," R. F. A., Kirkee, Somerset Regiment, and the Northampton Regiment.

The opening day's game was between the Royal Scots "B" and the Leicester Regiment. The Scots were early in the day deprived of the services of Parkes, their outside left and had to play ten men the rest of the time. This is the second time that Parkes has sustained an injury to his knee and it is with a tinge of regret we have to say, that this accident may cause this brilliant player's absence from future matches. Despite this disadvantage, a keenly contested game was witnessed and the Scots had the better of the exchanges. Ten minutes before final time, Leicester notched the first and only point of the game and try as the Scots would to equalize, they failed. Score: Leicesters, 1 goal; Royal Scots, "B" nil.

On Tuesday the Worcesters "A" met the Somersets. The play opened very cautiously on both sides and was so maintained for a short time. Then it grew faster and both sides tried in vain to score, but a strong defence was successful in repelling the attacks. With the score sheet blank, the teams changed sides; then the Worcesters opened a determined fusilade and were rewarded with a goal. Somersets tried to equalize but failed. A second point was scored by the "A" a few minutes before the close. Score: Worcesters "A" team, 2 goals; Somersets, nil.

The Royal Field Artillery, Kirkee, faced the Worcesters "B" on Wednesday. This game was played with great spirit but with very little science. At half time the board showed two goals in favour of the R. F. A. On resumption the change brought no luck to the "B" for the gunners had everything once more in their own way and added three more points. Score: R. F. A., Kirkee, 5 goals; Worcesters "B" nil.

In the semi-finals, Worcesters "A" faced the Leicesters on Thursday. It proved by far the best and the most exciting game of the tournament. There was a large gathering, and General and Mrs. Alderson were present. The Leicesters have a tall reputation at football, while the Worcesters have only recently come to be regarded as a formidable team. Accordingly the issue between the two was beyond prophecy. Both played all they were worth, and if the visitors from Belgaum lost by one goal to their neighbours from Ahmednagar, it was downright rough luck, as the former were wholly on the aggressive in the second half and time after time made a bid for goal, only to fail in the attempt. Score: Worcesters "A," 1 goal; Leicesters, nil.

The Northamptons, who had drawn a bye in the first round tried conclusions with the R. F A on Friday. It was a splendid game throughout and all martial Kirkee came up to the Ghorepuri ground to witness the struggle, and as it turned out, the success of their favourites. The Northamptons who have not played soccer since the last Bombay Tournament, had a great tussle with the Kirkee gunners on this occasion, but were finally beaten by 1 goal to love.

The finals in the tournament thus lie between the Worcesters "A" team and the R. F. A., Kirkee, and they will meet on Tuesday.

DALHOUSIE vs. GLOSTERS.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday last a scrambling game on a slushy field ending in a win for the Glosters by a try to nil. The Glosters had the best of the game but could not get through and the interval arrived without score. The Glosters pressed repeatedly in the second half and several good things were done by their backs. The Dals got away occasionally but the leather soon found its way back to their "25." At length the military team scored a disputed try—a view held by several being that the ball had been first touched down by the Dalhousie back. The place failed and the Glosters won as stated.

H.L.I. vs. RANGERS.—These teams met on the Customs ground on Saturday the H.L.I. winning easily by a goal and 4 tries (17 points) to nil Henderson 2, Clarke 2, and Scherrin got over with the tries only one of which was improved on.

DALHOUSIE vs. RANGERS.—This game on Monday evening on the Dalhousie ground ended as was expected in a win for the home team. Brewer scored the first try not long after the start, Storrie got over a second but neither try was converted. A good run by the Dals' threes next let in Holley who crossed the line with the third try, McGhee making no mistake with the place. In the second half the Dals attacked immediately and Boothry scored, Walker adding the extra points. Then the Rangers pressed and Nicolls got over with a try. The place failed and just before the close Walker scored for Dalhousie, the try not being improved upon. Dalhousie thus won by 2 goals and 3 trys (19 points) to a try (3 points.)

GLOSTERS vs. UNITED SERVICES.—Played on Tuesday. The Glosters pressed at the start and Murray scored a try which was unconverted. Thereafter the Services kept the Glosters in their own "25," but were unable to score and the Lahore team led by a try to nil at half time. Their better training stood the military in good stead in the second half. They got over with two tries neither of which were improved upon and from a free kick for offside against the Services Rogers dropped a goal. The Glosters thus won by a drop goal and 3 tries (13 points) to nil.

THE INDIAN PHEASANTS AND THEIR ALLIES.

CHAPTER III.

TRAGOPANS, MONAULS, ETC.

WE now come to the large and often long-tailed game birds, commonly known as pheasants, to which may be referred eleven genera, containing more than a score of species between them. To distinguish the cocks is quite easy, but the hens, being dull coloured, are less readily recognized, though any one who will observe carefully enough will be able to refer any hen pheasant to her proper group also, as there are always some points she shares with her mate.

In three genera the tail is short in both sexes, not being longer than the wing even in the cocks, and being shorter in the hens. In this respect they approach the partridges, but they are never less than about eighteen inches long, which is much bigger than any partridge except the great Ramchukors or snow-cocks. And in these there is a difference of three inches between the length of the wing and tail; whereas in these short-tailed pheasants the wing never exceeds the tail by so much as this.

These genera are the Tragopans, Monauls, and the Blood-Pheasants, which are easily distinguished from any others of the family.

The Blood-Pheasant is only about eighteen inches long, with very long, soft plumage and bright, red legs.

The Monauls (two species) are large birds, two feet long or more, with unusally large bills for game-birds, and short legs; the bill from gape to tip is about two-thirds the length of the shank.

The Tragopans (three species) are also large, about two feet long; but their bills are remarkably small, and their legs rather long, the bill being less than half the length of the shank.

In five genera the tail is distinctly longer than the wing, even in the hen, and very long indeed in the cock, this being the typical pheasant shape of tail, the centre feathers much the longest. These groups are easily made out.

The Argus has a bare head and the primary quills distinctly shorter than the secondaries, which more than cover them.

The Peacock Pheasant has a long broad tail with rounded tips to the feathers.

The Typical Pheasants (two species), have long tails with pointed tips to the feathers; the males have a bare red skin round the eye.

The Cheer Pheasant has a very long pointed tail and a crest, with a red skin round the eye in both sexes.

The Amherst Pheasant has a long pointed tail and a pale blue or green skin round the eye in both sexes, with a ruff in the male.

There remain three genera with tails of medium length, taking males and females together; the tail being about as long as the wing or shorter in the latter, and rather longer in the former, though never as extravagantly long as in the last group.

The tail is even in the short-tailed hens, much graduated, with the outside pair of feathers only half as long as the middle ones, which is not the case in the short-tailed pheasants alluded to above whose tails are merely rounded. Of this section:—

The Koklass Pheasants (two species) are distinguished by having the face feathered all over, and most of their plumage pointed tipped.

The Fire-back has in both sexes, a short folded tail, much like a common hen's, and a bare bright blue face.

The Kaleeges (about half-a-dozen species) have crests in both sexes, and also a bare red face, with tails long or short, folded like a fowl's. The exact number of species in this group is uncertain, and the length of the tail varies in the cocks, but as a whole they are very recognizable.

To discuss the short-tailed genera first; the Tragopans, in addition to their large size smalla bills, and rounded shortish tails, are notable for their long, slender toes and intricately mottled plumage. The tail is carried low, and is inclined to fold.

In the cocks the plumage is always more or less mixed with red and speckled with light spots; they also have a full crest, and fleshy horns and a dewlap, most developed in the breeding-season and expansible. The dewlap, at most times is a mere fold of skin along the throat and the horns lie concealed in the crest. But when the bird faces the female to show off, the horns elongate themselves and the dewlap comes down and spreads out into a bib or apron, showing the most brilliant colours. The cock also shows off by slanting himself over, like a common fowl.

In most male birds of this genus the face is bare, and they are provided with spurs. The colouration of this sex is very complicated and beautiful, but it is not necessary to describe it fully, as the different species are readily recognizable. The hens have no fleshy appendages or crest, and are feathered up to the eyes; they have shorter tails than the cocks, and no spurs. Their plumage is a very intricate pepper-and-salt mixture, a great deal easier to recognize than to describe.

Tragopans inhabit hill forest at a high elevation, and are great skulkers, avoiding observation as much as possible. They spend a great deal of their time in trees, feeding on leaves and berries to a very large extent. From the observations of Mr. St. Quintin, who has studied the breeding habits of the Chinese Buff Tragopan in confinement, it appears possible that these birds may occasionally even nest in trees; ordinarily they breed on the ground like other pheasants. The young according to the gentleman above quoted, take to perching very early, and are highly insectivorous. Thus they would tend to offset any harm the adults might do to young growth.

The note of the cock Tragopans is most remarkable, being compared to a bleat or a bellow rather than a crow, but they are silent birds, as a rule, except in the breeding season. They are not easy to shoot, and sometimes rather poor eating, but for their peculiar beauty of plumage they are unrivalled. Only five species are known, all Indian or Chinese. Our birds are often called Argus Pheasants, but the real Argus is a very different bird, as will be shown later.

THE CRIMSON TRAGOPAN.

Tragopan satyra, Blanford, Faun. Brit. Ind. Birds, Vol. IV, p. 99. Native names:—Lungi, Hind. in Garhwal and Kumaun; Monal in Nepal; Omo, Bap, Bhutia; Tar-rhyah Lepcha.

In this species the male's face and throat are thinly feathered; the general plumage is rich red on the neck and below, and mottled black and brown above, sprinkled nearly all over with round white spots edged with black; the head and tail are black, with a red band round the back of the former; the bend of the wing is also red, and there are red patches on the mottled brown plumage of the rest of the wing and the rump.

The bill is blackish brown, the horns sky-blue, and the skin of the face and the throat rich deep blue, the bib being patched with scarlet when expanded; the eyes are dark and the legs flesh-coloured.

The hen is of a rich brown, paler below, grizzled and mixed with black and buff. Her beak is dark horn-colour, and her legs fleshy grey.

Young birds are like the hen, but distinctly streaked with buff; young cocks assume male plumage very gradually.

The male is well over two feet long, with wing and tail each about ten inches, and shank over three, and twice as long as the bill. The hen is under two feet, with the tail shorter than the wing.

This species, one of the most richly-coloured birds in existence, inhabits the Himalayas from Garhwal to Bhootan, ranging according to season from six to twelve thousand feet in elevation. It breeds in May, laying eggs much like large hen's eggs, white with pale dull lilac markings, and about two and-a half inches long.

Very close to our East Assam frontier occurs a species which may possibly ere long have to be reckoned as an Indian bird. This is the grey-spotted Tragopan of China (Tragopan temminckii) which much resembles our species just described. The cock, however, differs strikingly in having the light spots of the plumage larger, not edged with black, and pale grey instead of white, while the red ground is not so bright.

THE BLACK OR WESTERN TRAGOPAN.

Tragopan Melanocephalus, Blanford, Faun. Brit. Ind. Birds, Vol. IV, p. 101. Native names:—Jewar, Jowar, in Garhwal; Jaghi, Jajhi, Bashahr; Sing-monal, Hindi in N.-W. Himalayas; Jigurana (the cock), Badal (the hen), Kulu, Mandi and Suket; Falgur, Chamba.

This bird has a longer crest than the Crimson Tragopan, and is a little larger, with a slightly shorter tail; the face of the cock is also bare. His prevailing colour is black, grizzled with buff above, and spotted with white both there and below. The neck is red, brightest in front; and the top of the crest and bend of the wing are also red; there is also a certain admixture of red below the breast. The bill is blackish, eyes brown, legs flesh-coloured, and horns blue as usual; but the bare face is bright red, and the dewlap purple in the middle, and showing spots of blue and flesh-colour at the sides.

The hen is of a grizzled brown, much greyer in tone than that of the Crimson Tragopan hen, and with the pale spots below—which are white, not buff—better defined and dark-bordered. Her feet are grey.

This bird inhabits the North-Western Himalayas from Garhwal to Hazara. It nowhere meets the crimson species, their respective limits being separated by a distance of about four days' march. It keeps near the snow in summer, descending lower in winter. The eggs, six in number, of a pale buff minutely freckled, where taken in Hazara in May by Captain Lautour. They seem to be slightly smaller than those of the red species.

THE GREY-BREASTED OR ASSAM TRAGOPAN.

Tragopan blythii, Blandford, Faun. Brit. Ind. Birds, Vol. IV p. 102. Native names:—Hur-kuria, Sansaria, Assam; Gun Angami Naga; Chingtho, Kuki.

This is smaller than the other Indian species, and has a shorter crest and tail. The male has a black head, with red eye-brows meeting behind, the neck and bend of the wing red as usual, and the underparts below the breast smoky grey; the upper plumage is black mottled with buff and spotted with white and red; the tail is black. The bare face and throat are yellow, running into green below; the bill and eyes dark, the horns blue, and the feet flesh-coloured as in other male Tragopans.

The hen is of the usual hen Tragopan grizzle, less grey in tone than the black Tragopan hen; from the hen of the crimson species she may be distinguished by having a greater proportion of black above, and being mottled with dirty cream colour instead of buff below, the upper and under surface being thus more strongly contrasted than in the other. These hen Tragopans are easy enough to distinguish on comparison, but as no two inhabit the same tract, this will rarely be necessary.

The present species inhabits Manipur and the Naga Hills south of Assam, ranging from five to ten thousand feet according to season, like the other species. It has also been known to occur in the Dafla Hills north of Assam. It feeds chiefly on berries and affects high oak forest. Its breading in the wild state is not known, but an egg laid in confinement was buff finely speckled with reddish brown. I have seen in the London Zoo a hybrid cock, bred between this species and the T. temminckii mentioned above. It hardly showed the cross at all almost precisely resembling a pure T. blythii, and having the same yellow green throat; but the grey underparts were varigated with red.

The only species of Tragopan known is the Buff Tragopan (Ceriornis caboti) of China, which I mentioned above. In this the cock is all buff below and heavily spotted with buff above, and has the bare face red. The hen is much like that of the Crimson Tragopan, but considerably smaller. This species might very well be introduced to fill the gap between the black and crimson forms.

The Story Teller.

CABMEN AND WOMEN.

"WHEN I sees things like this 'ere in the paper," said Potty, "I feel abs'lutely ill."

He thumped his fist on the pink newspaper lying on the table and upset a salt-cellar.

Hastily he plunged a huge thumb and forefinger into the remaining contents, and flung a pinch behind his shoulder. Most of it went into old Pinch's tea, but he never discovered the fact, his palate being thoroughly tanned.

"'Ere—easy—easy?" protested Tom, the pallid keeper of the cabmen's shelter. "Quite enough wasted already, without chuckin' my day's profit be'ind yer."

"I allus do that," announced Potty firmly. "Wery unlucky to spill salt unless yer does that. I knew a man wot once spilt some salt at brekfuss an' forgot to throw any over 'is shoulder. See! An' in the afternoon 'e remembered it, an' it worried 'im, an' bein' a 'ot summer's day 'e went to a pub and called for a pot o' beer—an' 'e was that worried about it that e' picked up a water-jug by mistake an' clean wasted a thirst wot 'e wouldn't 'ave taken five bob for, cash down."

This illustration of cause and effect appeared to be conclusive, and passed without comment.

Old Pinch was inquisitive as to Potty's grievance with the newspaper.

"Wot wuz makin' yer feel ill, Potty?" he enquired.

"Why, the fearful rot wot all this 'ere papers talk about us cabmen. Did y'ever know anythink right about any of us ever printed in any bloomin' paper under the bloomin' sun?"

"This 'ere paper," he continued impressively, "ses that because of the disgustin' rude way drivers talks an' be'aves to lady fares, as there's going to be women-drivers licensed."

"Lummel" said an astonished voice from the doorway. Ginger Bates had just entered.

"I put it to you, Ginger," said Potty, with the air of a man struggling with himself. "Does we, or does we not, as a class, as a class, mind yer—ever be'ave rude to a woman fare'an' 'aggle with 'er arter she's paid 'er bloomin' 'legal'?"

"We does not, Potty," said Ginger, rising grandly to the occasion. "Luv a duck, I'm allers too glad to see the back of 'm to stop argifyin' with 'm. The bloke wot ses wot you ses 'e ses is evidently not aware o' the fac' that most of us is married men, an' consequently knows a darn sight too much to start jawin' with a woman."

Old Pinch removed his pipe from the corner of his mouth.

"All I've got to say is this," he remarked: "If women cab-drivers ever drives women fares, 'Even 'elp both of'em. All of yer know as well as I do, all of us bein' married, that if one woman can cheat another woman out o' sixpence she'd ruther do it than find 'alf a sovrin' in the street. Why, when they got to the end the fare 'ud pay a tanner short, an the driveress 'ud want a shillin more' an', both bein' women, neither of 'em 'ud give way, an' they'e'd both fetch p'licemen, an' they'd call each other names, an' they'd summons each other an' lose days an' days at the p'lice court, an'——"

The language at his disposal failed utterly to limn the horrible pictures his excited imagination conjured up. He stuck his pipe in his mouth again, an' granted.

"'Ere's wot I say," he observed, "an' it's true. The only people wot ever grumbles about us cabmen is the people wot only takes a cab about once a year."

"That's a fac'," agreed Potty, his eyes glowing with the light that comes to one to whom a great truth has been revealed.

Tom, the pale-faced attendant, whose favourite topic of conversation was the female sex, threw the conversation back upon woman.

"The idea's ridic'lous" he said. "Ow could a woman argify with a toff wot's squiffy an won't pay? Ow would she get it? Not but wot women as a wery curious an' useful 'abit o' getting wot they want. You tell 'em as they can't 'ave somethink, 'an sure as fate, the next thing is as yer find out all of a sudden that they've got it."

He laughed.

"Women are extraordinary—so surprisin'—so unexpected. Yer can know 'em—be married to 'em for years—an' then find out things yer never knew before. Points about 'em wot yer've never noticed get up sudden like an' 'it yer clean in the eyeball." His voice grew reminiscent and slightly sad.

"Only the day before yesterday," he continued, "I went to the sink to 'ave a wash, an' I sees a bran' noo nailbrush on the soapdish.

"'Ullo!' ses I to the missis, jokin' like, 'Been spendin' money on lux'ries again?

"That ain't a lux'ry, ses she, That's a toothbrush.

A wot? ses I, feelin' dazed-like.

A toothbrush, ses she.

But yer can't get that in yer mouth, ses I.

"'I don't' ave to,' ses she. 'When I cleans my teeth I take em out.'

"Fust time I'd know'd it. Four pun'-ten, she ses they cost 'er."

Bill Jones popped his head in at the door.

"Same ol' trouble, Tom," he grinned, "women again?"

"Ah!" sighed Tom. "The more yer knows about 'em the more there is to find out."

Bill entered and issued explicit orders for two eggs, which were to differ in every possible respect from the last two he had had.

Old Pinch had played listner too long, and deemed it time to issue one of his famous aphorisms.

"Women," he said dogmatically, "is two sorts—bad and good."

He looked round. They were not greatly impressed by his observations.

"In other words," he continued slowly, "gals an' wives. When yer looks at the bloomin' o'rty, flighty, stuck-up, too-good-fer-anybody young women wot we sees round us nowadays, it seems abs'lutely marvellous to think that inside ten years nearly all of 'em'll be turned into good, steady, honest affectionate wives an' mothers—somethink totally different to wot they 'ave the least appearance o' turnin' into now; different as soap is to Cheddar.

"Some'ow, gettin' married an' becomin' wives an' mothers sort o' makes 'em over afresh again. Different critters altogether. An' they 'as ten times as much respec' for us men. Why, the way most of 'em treats men when they're single is simply disgustin'."

"There's a young gal next door to us wot wuz talkin' to my missis yesterday over the wall, an' she ses as she wuz sick an' tired of er young man.

"'Well!' ses the missis, 'Why don't yer tell 'im so, an' give 'im up.'

"'Oh! I can't,' ses she, 'Cause 'e's give me a bicycle wot 'e's payin' for on the instalment plan, an' it ain't 'alf paid for yet.'"

Bill Jones here gazed at Tom and spoke dictatorially.

"'Ow Long's my eggs goin' to be?" he demanded.

Tom, somewhat offended, raised his eyebrows surprisedly.

"You're eggs!" he said, doubtfully. "You're eggs! I didn't know you'd taken to lain' eggs."

"You blitherin', blightin'——" began Bill.

Pinch intervened hastily.

"Nother remarkable thing about women," he announced. "You're never sure wot they're getting at. They ain't—wot-is-it? —obvious. T'other night, for instance. There wuz I, comin' ome from the lodge in a tram-car, an' the car was more'n full. See? There wuz a young woman standin' right in front o' me.

She'd just got in. Not 'alf bad, she wasn't, an' 'I'd a good look at 'er once or twice. When I got up, she ses, 'Oh! please don't get up. Now, don't. I shall be an annoyed if yer do.'

"'Lumme!' thinks I, 'This is a rum go.'

"'No, don't get up, there's a good man,' she ses again. 'Do sit down.'

"There wuz I, standin' like a fool, an' all the passengers wuz laughin' and agrinnin.' I didn't know wot to make of it at all. So I sat down again. 'Bout five minutes later I 'as another go. An' she ses, 'No, really! I insist on not takin' yo're seat.'

"'Yer can do wot yer like about that,' ses I, 'but I've 'ad enough of it. I've come more'n 'alf-a-mile past my stoppin' place already out o' politeness to yer, but blow me if I' m goin' any further.'"

Potty had paid his score and was passing out. He paused at the door.

"Lates' thing I 'ear is as women 'as started messin' theirselves up with politics," he said. "Wot dyer think o' that Pinch?"

An expression of extreme sadness gradually filtered into the old man's face; the wisdom of all the ages flew out of the immemorial past and softly came to roost on his eyelids.

He sighed.

"Ah!" he said. "When I 'ears as ow anybody 'as taken up politics—anybody, mark yer—I ain't singling women out in pertic'lar—when I'ears anybody as taken up politics, I allus thinks' o somethink wot my father once said to me when e wuz givin me a' iding for puttin' the cat in a pail o' paste. 'Esos to me, 'The devil allus finds mischief for idle ands to do. That is wot comes into my'ead whenever I ears as anybody's taken up politics."

"Ah!" said Potty thoughtfully. "An' well it might!"

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 31st July 1908.

SOME time ago, as our readers may remember, we published a letter written to the Adams Manufacturing Company by Captain Jamieson, of the 51th Camel Corps, engaged with General Willcocks in the recent troubles on the Afghan frontier. He has written the firm since and sent them photographs of which we give herewith a sample.

His letter seems to prove conclusively that for a standard 10 H.P. car, such as his, to emerge successfully through the terribly rough usage incidental to a frontier campaign is really an exceptionally remarkable feat. For the conditions if different in certain respects, were usually as strenuous as those attending the Scottish or Irish trials, and very often much more so. The performance stamps this type of Adams car as one of the most reliable in the world.

The car was incessantly used in the mobilisation and general transport service, and encased in an outer cover of Khaki it was almost invisible to the enemy, while it overcame difficulties seemingly impossible and encountered hardships that might well have relegated it to the scrap heap.

In seven days from the date on which the order to mobilise was given this car assisted in scouring a district of about 8,000 square miles, as a result of which many hundreds of camels and ponies were secured and shipped, together with the complete staff in special trains from Lahore. This exceedingly smart service was only rendered possible by the night and day work of this car.

The car proved its hill climbing capabilities and the strength of its construction, particularly in the rock-strewn hills around Nahakki, which are deemed almost impassable for vehicular traffic. Captain Jamieson reports that the only apparent effect of the extreme "racketting" to which his car was continually subjected for a period extending over several months was a slight wearing of the steering segment. Small wonder when one reflects that it ran mostly over rocks and stones, through ravines and ruts, over rough pontoon bridges in and out of entrenchments with despatches and so forth.

WITH the laudable idea of persuading the builders of motor cars to make their vehicles raise as little dust from the road as possible, the Royal Automobile Club held at Brooklands, on the 20th instant, an anti-dust raising competition.

Although a number of standard cars were sent over the 200 yards of prepared dusty track at a speed of twenty miles an hour, and then at thirty miles an hour, little can be said that they showed either dustlessness or offered any solution to this vexed problem. For the palliation, if not cure, from dust raised by all fast-travelling vehicles, either self-propelled or not, is the problem that is most urgently requiring solution.

The present efforts in this direction gave but little advance in information than what was already known to most motorists, —viz., that the car that has a good clearance from the ground and carries no tank or other obstruction near to the road surface is comparatively less dust lifting in its progression than the low-lying car, whose tank, under-shield, and other parts of its construction are close to the ground.

Even then the high car is bound to raise a certain amount of dust, and that more than is either good or agreeble for other users of the road—to say nothing from the point of view of the permanent dwellers by thoroughfares.

Although the club is doing its best to encourage designs of cars that shall raise as little of the road surface in the air as possible, the real solution lies in the construction of the roads themselves. Until these are considerably improved the dust nuisance will exist.

As in last year's dust trials, the finishing straight at Brooklands track was prepared for 200 yards with two inches of fine limestone powder. To ensure the competing cars travelling at a uniform speed in the trials, along the whole length of the dust-prepared track an endless cord, with paper streamers at intervals attached to it, was kept running at a fixed speed. As the cars came to this cord they then had only to keep up with the nearest streamer attached to the cord.

AT the annual general meeting of the Automobile Association, held this week at the Hotel Cecil (Colonel W. J. Bosworth in the chair) there was much mutual congratulation on the wonderful progress of the association and its satisfactory financial position. In the course of his speech Colonel Bosworth mentioned the fact that 7,032 members had joined the association, and that the total number of resignations and secessions by death or from other causes numbered only 296 since the association was formed. Members were joining at an average rate of one hundred per week. Colonel Bosworth also referred to the appreciation shown by members of the association to the touring facilities, and spoke of the work of the committee of public safety which had been recently formed to deal with complaints of reckless and dangerous driving.

The reckless driver, indeed, is the worst enemy of other motor users, and is heartily reprobated by the great bulk of the ever-increasing body of car-owners. The road hog and the dust nuisance are the two great bugbears of motoring; but while it seems manifestly unfair that the many should suffer through the faults of the few, it is inevitable that so long as inconsiderate and reckless drivers exist, so long will the present unfavourable feeling in the public mind continue. It is undesirable that legislation should further interfere with automobilists, and this being being so, it should be their earnest endeavour to turn the current of hostile feeling into a more placid and friendly sentiment which shall have its influence in the legislative chamber when the matter comes up there for consideration, as it inevitably will do sooner or later.

THE dust problem is another matter, and its solution is not yet. This was made patent at the Brooklands trials last Monday and Tuesday, when, although different cars and different underbodies and fitments were put through the tests at varying speeds, the results were merely negative and comparative. At anything over ten miles an hour the dust began to fly, and as the speed of the car increased so did the amount of undesirable road matter. Even with improved construction of the roads, upon which so many people pin their faith, it is extremely doubtful if the dust nuisance will be abolished. Minimised it may be, but so long as agricultural land runs with the roads so long will dust from it blow on to the highways, and the passing wheels and the natural attrition which they set up will still further contribute to the deposit.

IT seems assured that there is really to be a Grand Prix next year, and the Sporting Club has been called together to consider what steps shall be taken for the next event. So far as the new rules are concerned, it is highly improbable that anything can possibly be done until after the next meeting of the International Committee in the autumn. It is believed that the French will make a prominent feature of a race for small powered cars, and it is futher surmised that Dieppe will have another bid for the race being run on her course, though the chances of this are remote.

A GREAT many critics have said that the R.A.C. 2,000-mile trial was really too short to test the power of a modern car and that what a prospective buyer wants to know is what the car he fancies will look and behave like after it's done 10,000 miles, not 2,000. But they make a very great mistake if they think that this 2,000-mile tour was not an extremely searching test of a car's powers. To begin with, it was not so much the distance as the character of the country which had to be traversed. The Scotch part of the tour, with its fearful weather and terrific hill climbs, furnished a test which no sane man would ever give his car unless he were absolutely forced to do so.

"SOCIETY has set itself to embarrass the police in enforcing the law. There is not much use in passing a law if society is determined not to obey it."

This was the pungent criticism of Lord Willoughby de Broke in the House of Lords on the 29th instant on the reckless speed at which motor cars are frequently driven through public thoroughfares and the nuisance they create by raising the dust.

"I believe that if the use of the motor horn were abolished and motor car drivers were made to take the same chance of accidents as the drivers of horsed vehicles it would be an advantage," said his lordship.

His lordship was severe on Sunday dust—"people's only holiday being spoiled by motor dust." He called it a "terrible scourge."

He asked the Government to "ginger the local authorities" to enforce the regulations.

"There is nothing that so sets the poor against the rich as driving past their homes and sending up mud in winter and dust in summer," he concluded.

"There is only about one dusty day in seven," pleaded Lord Montagu of Beaulieu, the great motor car advocate.

"For the number of miles run I do not think the motor car can really be called a dangerous vehicle. The number of considerate drivers is on the increase."

"When a man is nearly run over by a motor-car," said Lord Allendale, who replied for the Government, he generally says, 'Why on earth—or sometimes stronger language than that—didn't you blow your horn?'"

He intimated that the Government did not intend to bring in any more motor car laws, but to enforce the existing ones.

"I am a Londoner and I see a good deal of what goes on," said the aged Lord Halsbury, "and I think the danger in the streets of London demands serious attention."

"The horn blowers have established a reign of terror," declared the ex-Lord Chancellor.

"It is all very well to talk about the considerate driver," said Lord Balfour of Burleigh. "A man crossing the road does not know whether the driver of an on-coming motor-car is going to be considerate or not until he is run over."

THE country farmer and his wife' happening to be in Cambridge on business, spent an afternoon at Prince's watching the seniors play their annual match. "Betsy" he whispered, "just you look at that big feller twirling his bat." "What about him, Briggs? asked his wife. "He be full six feet bain't he?" "Ay, an'a bit over, I should say." "Weighs about sixteen stone?" Ye,re not fur out. "Well," muttered Briggs meditatively, "cricket do develop 'em, that's sartain!" "Yes," said Mrs. Briggs, approvingly, "he's a rare well-set-up young chap." "Chap!" echoed Farmer Briggs. "Betsy, I jest heerd a feller say as that chap's in his third year. Talk about oatmeal porridge! Why it ain't in it wi' cricket!"

WHEN arranging their list of club runs at the beginning of the season it is usual for cycling clubs to leave several dates open and these somtimes appear on the fixture cards as "impromptu. "At a meeting held by a newly formed North Country club one of the members was asked to nominate a place. "Well, As think," he said, "that we might hev a run to impromptu: there's a lot of clubs hev runs to it!"

A TEACHER was one day instructing her pupils in the mysteries of etymology, when she had occassion to question a boy pupil with reference to the word "recuperate."

"As an example," said the teacher, "we will take the case of your father. He is a hard-working man."

"Yes' m," assented Charley.

"And when night comes he returns home tried and worn out doesn't he?"

"Yes' m," in further assent from Charley.

"Then," continued the teacher, "it being night, his work being over, and he being tired and worn out, what does he do?"

"That's is what 'ma wants to know," said Charley.

DECLINE OF HORSE-BREEDING IN GREAT BRITAIN.

The decline in British horse-breeding industry is becoming quite alarming, and few thinking people will be found to dissent from the notion that the matter is one calling for the attention of the Government. Country Life points out that it is a curious but nevertheless incontrovertible fact that England, the horse-breeding country par excellence of the whole world, should be the very country in which the supply of horses is totally inadequate to the demand.

It has been calculated that were it necessary to place the armed forces of Great Britain upon a war footing, nearly 17,400 horses would have to be found in excess of the number actually available. Of these some 54,000 would be required to bring our cavalry regiments up to their proper strength. A still further supply of horses would be necessary to fill up the losses caused by wear and tear, wounds and disease: and it may be assumed that to maintain an army in the field a reserve of from 10 per cent. would be required.

It is evident to the most casual observer that alarming as is the existing shortage in supply of British horses it must become even more so, unless some broad and practical scheme for the encouragement of the horse-breeding industry can be devised. Official statistics show that the year 1906 showed a falling off to the extent of 12,000 in the number of foals born, and it may be added that in Ireland alone it was found that there were 1,500 fewer brood mares of the class suitable for breeding what may be called general-utility animals. Nor is the decrease confined to horses of this particular type, for the returns of thorough-bred stock furnished by the Stud Book tell us that the total number of thorough-bred mares in the possession of English breeders is now 5,018, as against 6,004 in 1902: and in the face of the persistent buying on the part of foreign breeders, there is but too much reason to fear that the decrease in the number of English bloodstock will become a matter for serious consideration. It is however with the general-utility horse that we are the more immediately concerned, and it may be said that many causes have contributed to the shortage of animals of this class.

Not the least of these is to be found in the fact that whereas in former years foreign purchases were not only limited in extent, but were chiefly confined to entire horses, in more recent times enormous numbers of useful mares have been, and continue to be, exported for the purpose of breeding general-utility horses or animals suitable for military purposes in foreign countries. Agricultural depression, too, has depleted the ranks of the tenant farmer breeders in England and Ireland, who were, and are, the very prop and mainstay of the horse-breeding industry, especially with regard to the class of horse best adapted to general purposes.

Last but not least the motor-driven car is driving the 'bus horse out of the market. It was these very 'bus horses that Great Britain had to turn to in its hour of need in the South African war. The excellent services they rendered are best known to the military authorities, who are also well aware that, should similar circumstances arise, they will search, and search in vain, for such a supply of animals full of wear and condition and ready for instant use. To remedy this state of affairs many schemes have been suggested. Sir Walter Gilbey, himself a practical breeder, puts forward an admirably thought out plan for the formation of Government depôts, where not only horses for militaty purposes might be bred, but where young horses purchased from their breeders by the State might be stored and whence, having been properly broken, they might be drafted to wherever their services were required. There is nothing, so far as we are aware, to urge against such a proposition, save and except that the necessary money is not forthcoming.

Many landed proprietors do good service by placing sound and suitable stallions at the disposal of their tenants at merely nominal fees, others go even further, and supply the mares as well, retaining the option of purchasing the produce at a reasonable price. Working on somewhat similar lines the Brood Mare Society is doing excellent service: and, failing the adoption of some such scheme as that proposed by Sir Walter Gilbey, it seems more than probable that herein lies the best means for checking the shortage in our supply of horses and for the encouragement of breeders. But the work of the Society must be largely supplemented by Government funds. Not only must suitable mares be bought in large numbers, but sound stallions, with bone and quality, must be placed within the reach of small breeders at purely nominal fees.

As matters stand at present, the sum of £4,200 is the amount of the subsidy given to the horse-breeding industry of England. This is divided up into twenty-eight portions of £150 apiece, which form King's premiums awarded to twenty-eight stallions, a number totally insufficient for the placing of a suitable horse within reach of the tenant farmers of the country. Desirable as it undoubtedly is to give every possible encouragement to breeders, it is equally so to provide them with a market for their produce. The British Government wants horses: but buy them it will not until driven into a corner, when huge sums of money are squandered in the purchase of worthless animals: this money properly expended, would have kept horse-breeding industry in a prosperous condition.

In the English Club at Hong-Kong a white haired old gentleman, who had come down from some Northern port was seated at dinner when he suddenly became very excited. He had been brought a letter by a solemn-faced Chinese butler, and he saw something on the outside of this letter which sent him downstairs two steps at a time to interview the hall porter. When he came back he told us what was the matter. The hall porter had inscribed on the envelope, in Chinese, for the information of the butler, "This is for the old baboon with white fur." Unfortunately for the hall porter, the little gentleman was a first-class scholar in the Chinese language.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THERE was another very good day's racing in Calcutta on Saturday, but eight events on the card, one enquiry and an objection kept those who had to stay to the bitter end to a very late hour.

THERE was no lack of what has come to be termed "incident" during the afternoon. First Foy's running and then an objection to Lady George for interfering with her field at the last fence occupied the attention of the Stewards.

In the latter case, the enquiry was plain sailing, as the rider of Lady George at once admitted that he crossed his field as they landed over the last jump, he having mistaken the finishing flags. Such a mistake is easily understood, as these flags are by no means conspicuous and walking over the course in the morning of the race is of no assistance as regards locating the winning post, as the flags which mark the post are not usually put up until just before the race itself. With regard to Foy's running the Stewards, we understand, were unable to reconcile his performance on Saturday when he won the Belvedere Plate No. I with his running the previous week in the Kidderpore Plate in which he ran nowhere. The line taken was, we believe, through Mercedes, who won the Kidderpore Plate and ran second to Foy in the Belvedere Plate No. 1 and the Stewards found that Foy had, in their opinion, been injudiciously ridden in the Kidderpore Plate.

We must admit that we see little cause for the enquiry, and when it is remembered that Foy won over 6 furlongs (his best distance) as against 7 furlongs (which is about Mercedes' shortest distance); that when Foy won he was meeting Mercedes on 11lb. better terms; that he had when he won, one of the best jockeys in India on his back as against an amateur on the first occasion; that the better going last Saturday as compared with the exceptionally heavy going of the previous week was all in Foy's favour, while the time of the race Foy won was distinctly slow, being $3\frac{1}{5}$ seconds slower than the second portion of the same race was run in subsequently the same day; that Foy, although he won, was being rapidly overtaken by Mercedes, who would probably have won had the distance been a furlong farther, and that neither Foy's stable nor any of his connections had backed him on either occasion. We think most Calcutta race-goers will admit that they have seen many instances which called more urgently for enquiry than this one.

THE Entally Plate was the first item on the programme and Wake Up, who has improved enormously in Mr. Cowper's keeping, was a very hot favourite at even money, though Ynyslas' stable were also very keen on her chances. The favourite got off third, but was going easily all the way and taking the lead from the home turn won very comfortably by two lengths. There was a fine fight for the places, Comprimil beating Mr. Cowper's second string, Dangar, by a neck for second, and that horse finishing again a neck only in front of Ynyslas.

MR. MCCALL'S pony Mademoiselle was able to start her career in Calcutta with a very easy win from a moderate field. The winner was well backed down to 2 to 1, and Flair and Happy-go-Lucky were the only others at all fancied. These two led till the home turn and then Mademoiselle came through the field and won very easily by three lengths. Flo and Gipsy ran into the places, and Flair and Happy-go-Lucky were right out of the running.

A GOOD field of nine went out for the Pony Hurdles. It was curious that Meprise should have been made a hot favourite as she showed no form at all in the hurdle race a fortnight before; however her backers apparently knew what they were about, as she ran very well and many think that if she had not been badly bumped by Dynamite as the result of Lady George's cross she would have won or been very near it. Lily II. and The Pink 'Un were also well backed, and there was a little money on Dynamite and Lady George. They got off to a good start, Lady George led over the first hurdle and then Kipper and Wallaby took up the running, followed by The Pink 'Un, Dynamite, Lily II and Lady George. At the drum after the third hurdle the leaders all went wide and gave away several lengths to Lady George, letting her up in front with The Pink 'Un, Lily II, Meprise, Emerald and Dynamite close at hand. From the home turn Lady George went ahead but was tiring before she came to the last hurdle, which she jumped with the Pink' Un, Lily II half a length behind on the inside, Emerald, Dynamite and Meprise next. After the hurdle Lily II went on very strong and won easily by two lengths from Emerald. The Pink 'Un, Meprise and Dynamite all got into one another's way through Lady George crossing them and consequently the latter ran third a head behind Emerald, Meprise and The Pink 'Un dead heat half a length behind. Meprise was stopped just as she was making her run and would no doubt have been dangerous to Emerald if not to Lily II.

THE Belvedere Plate looked a very open race, Colina was very well in on her previous running, but had a recent railway journey against her. Flotsam had been showing signs of form in the previous meetings and was considered a hot thing by his stable, Cyril, Mulison and Mercedes were all in the running. All the money went on Flotsam, Mulison, Cyril and Mercedes. In the race Cyril, Colina, Flotsam and Foy were all prominent for three furlongs, Mercedes a bad last. Then she went after them with a very fast run but could not catch Foy who had gone through the others and won by three-quarters of a length. Fotsam fell back from the distance and Colina and Cyril were third and fourth.

WAKE UP was pulled out again for the Amateur Jumpers' Flat Race, her last chance of a run in the Amateur Class. The terms of the race were "for horses that have run in either of the previous Amateur Hurdle Races" so that Mr. Crawford's mare's win in the Entally Plate earlier in the afternoon did not render her ineligible, though it will do so in future, the hurdle races all being for horses that have not won Rs. 500.

With Wake Up in nothing else had much chance and she was again a hot favourite at 2 to 1, Ruby and Blue Bell next backed. Mr. Cowper took her on the outside rails where the going is better and jumping off with a lead crossed at the turn well in front of the others and won very easily by a length from Yulgibar. The latter was lucky to get second as if Idle had got going sooner he would have troubled them a lot and Ruby and Lady Cold both seemed much off colour, the former in particular running very disappointingly and far below her form.

THE Oriental Plate was an easy win for another favourite, as Golden, an even money chance, led from the start by as much as she pleased and beat Merry Elsie easily by a length and a half.

THE Amateur Jumper's II was thought a good thing for Roland, last week's winner, Dougal, next best backed, and then Queen of Hearts and Moachin. Mr. Deakin took the favourite right out twenty lengths in front of anything and had the big chestnut beaten when they came into the straight. Dougal began to go after him, and collaring him at the home turn the black easily staved off a rush by Queen of Hearts and won pretty comfortably by a length and a half.

THE Belvedere Plate II which finished the card was all Lombard Street to a China orange on Sir Roland, who starting at 6 to 4 gave his numerous supporters no anxiety at any stage of the journey. Gallant old Springlock made a great effort to catch him, but the favourite won easily by half a length. This gave Murdison his third win in the day and his sixth in the four meetings. professional who has scored more than once, with two winning brackets to his credit. Among the G. R's. Mr. Evers has seven, Mr Barrow four, and Mr. Bletsoe two notched up, no one else more than one.

We now have a much-needed break till 5th September, when the second series of Monsoon meetings will begin. The principal innovation in the programme is an open pony and hurdle race on the 12th, G. R's. or professionals. Stakes Rs. 500 only so as to not to keep out the paperchase class. The idea is to get a bumper entry and divide the handicap into two lots with reasonable weights, say 11-7, down to 8-0. Solace, Envious, Killarney, Littlle Dolly, Pineal, Moira, Emerald, Meprise, Lady Mana, and Reha would probably form one division, Lily II, Bandyleg, Lady George, Lionel, Ungava, Dynamite, The Pink 'Un, Wallaby, Kipper, Nimrod etc, in the second lot, which would make two very good races.

It is with deep regret we have to announce the death at Mussoorie on the 18th instant of Mr. S. J. Stone, late of the Punjab Police. A well-known sportsman, he was the author of a book on Himalayan shooting and has been a regular and valued contributor to the shikar columns of this paper.

Entries for the Army Cup now number thirty-three. The third entries closed on the 15th instant are as follows:—Captain W. D. Grant's Little Exile, Captain H. R. Hopwood's Gendarme, Mr. E. Sopper's Saglawe and Mitre, and Mr. G. Alexander's Magna Charta.

We would draw the attention of our readers to the notice of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, appearing elsewhere, with regard to the concession fares during the Doorga Pooja holidays.

Once again, writes our London correspondent, Great Britain showed the superiority of her oarsmen over all comers by absolutely sweeping the board at the Olympic Henley, winning all the events handsomely and scoring, through Leander, an exceptionally brilliant victory over the redoubtable Belgians in the final of the International eights. Some authorities seemed to think that in the meeting of these two crews, and having in mind the successes of the Belgians at recent Henley meetings, the English style of rowing was on its trial. These good people now consider that our long sweep, strong beginning, leg drive and smart finish have been thoroughly vindicated; I prefer to think the result proved nothing, save that the plucky and strenuous Belgians knocked up against one of the finest crews ever seen on the Thames, though I think none of your readers will suggest that I think there is anything in the Belgian style. As an old time oarsman I regard it as atrocious, and though, when opposed to indifferent rivals as last year at Henley, it may win races it will ever be open to condemnation on rational and aesthetic grounds alone.

What a magnificent crew the winners were! Their style was absolutely perfect (veterans most of them and winners of many a hard fight in days gone by, be it noted) and they kept their form right up to the welcome "easy all" as they shot past the judge two lengths ahead of the visitors and in time that would easily equal record for the Royal course, for it must be remembered that the Olympic course was about 200 yards longer than usual.

The victory of the Vesta veteran, H. T. Blackstaffe, in the Sculls was another triumph: small wonder that he, with Guy Nickalls, was overwhelmed with congratulations. These two oarsmen prove the doctrine that of all athletic sports rowing is the one at which a good man can keep on longest. But few men have met with so many successes all round, and few men have shown such consistent form as Blackstaffe, who began his career in the classic events of the English amateur rowing world in 1895, when he sculled for both the Wingfields and the Diamonds. Two years later he won the former race, and the same season the Vesta representative was runner-up to Ed. H. Ten Eyck, of the United States, for the Diamonds. On four other occasions Blackstaffe has won the Wingfields, but in the Henley sculling event had the ill-luck to meet such men as B. H. Howell, of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, E. G. Hemmerede, University College, Oxford, and F. S. Kelly, Balliol College, Oxford, and the empty honour of runner-up fell to his lot on four other occasions before he was successful in 1906.

Blackstaffe was forty years of age last month, and stands third in the list of active veterans. Guy Nickalls, one year and eight months older, standing first, and J. Beresford, Thames R.C., ten days older, second. Blackstaffe will now go in for four-oared racing.

A full report of the last day of the Olympic Henley appears further on.

"Why I Revived the Olympic Games" is the title of a thoughtful article in the July Fortnightly. If (writes Baron Pierre de Coubertin) in reviving the Olympic Games I had merely sought to restore one of the noblest and most interesting of ancient institutions, I do not think I should have needed excuse, for such an ambition would certainly have been both comprehensible and legitimate. It might, however, have been reasonably characterised as a fanciful and superfluous undertaking. There is so much necessary work to be done to supply the myriad needs of our day that we ought not to waste ourselves in unnecessary efforts. I have in mind a saying of the great Dr. Arnold about the cultivation of some rare plants. "How interesting, he said, "to give oneself up to this if only one's life could be twice as long as it really is!" But the Olympic Games are in no way comparable to the cultivation of rare plants. It is my profound conviction that they are one of the corner-stones of progress and health for the youth of our day.

There are two ways of regarding athletic sport: first, the individual point of view, which is, let me hasten to say, the best and the most desirable. On the day when a nation exists in which each young man possesses sufficient taste for physical exercises to make him practise them regularly, either alone or with his comrades, seeking in wholesome sports an admirable means to perfect his health and increase his strength, then on that day humanity—or a section of it, at least—will have realised perfection. But we are not there yet, and hence we are constrained to regard athletic sport from a second and quite different point of view—that of organised competition.....But we can give it a counterpoise, a regulator, as did those ancient Greeks who, we find, had to grapple with most of the problems that perplex us; and their regulator was Olympia. At Olympia vulgar competition was transformed, and in a sense sanctified, by contact with national sentiment superbly excited.

Over-excited, I might even say; for it was excess that in the end ruined and corrupted ancient athleticism. But the end came very slowly. For centuries athleticism, its home in Olympia, remained pure and magnificent. There States and cities met in the persons of their young men, who, imbued with a sense of the moral grandeur of the Games, went to them in a spirit of almost religious reverence. Around them were assembled men of letters and of the arts, ready to celebrate the victories of their energy and muscle; and these incomparable spectacles were also the delight of the populace.

The record for the world's 100 yards' sprint was broken on the 4th instant by R. E. Walker, of South Africa, the hero of the 100 metres race at the recent Olympic Games. It was at the Abergavenny meeting and the clocking was 9 2/5secs. The track was officially measured by Messrs. F. L. Johns, the well-known A.A.A. handicapper, Z. Wheatley, and R. J. Brind, and found to be two inches over 100 yards. The timekeepers were Messrs. Z. Wheatley and Lowe. The previous best world's time for the distance was 9 3/5secs., which stood to the credit of A. F. Duffey, at Berkeley Oval, New York, on 31st May 1902, and Dan Kelly, Spokane, Washington, on 23rd June 1906. The British record was A. F. Duffey's 9 4/5secs. on grass at Leicester Infirmary sports, 20th July 1901. Details:—

100 Yards Handicap (limit 7 yards).

R. E. Walker, South Africa, scratch ...	1
Percy Jones, Newport, 6½ yards ...	2
J. Salmon, Wolverhampton, 5¾ yards ...	3

After making a false start, Walker on a second effort got off finely, and won easily. Time—9 2 5secs.

J. Flanagan, the hammer-thrower continues his successful career. On the 3rd instant, at the Dublin Police sports, he put up new figures with a throw of 173ft. 11in.—a world's record. The previous best was 173ft. 7in. by M. J. McGrath at Montreal, on 1st September 1907.

Miss Lily Smith, the eighteen-year-old captain of the Tottenham Ladies' Swimming Club, who started from Dover on Saturday, the 1st August, on an attempt to beat Captain Webb's record of eight hours for the twenty-mile swim to Ramsgate, had to turn back when within two miles of the latter place.

Last week we made the interesting announcement that the Land's End to John o'Groats cycling record had again been lowered, this time by Mr H. Green, who knocked no less than 2 hours 52mins. off the record made, but a week before his attempt. In our "Wheeling" notes to-day we give some interesting details of this marvellous feat of endurance.

The Select Committee which examined Lord Avebury's Bill to prohibit the importation of plumage reported on Saturday in its favour and advocated that it should be made the basis of Government representations to other countries to pass similar laws.

The Bill prohibits the importation for sale or exchange of plumes of foreign birds except ostrich, eider duck, and wild birds used for food, under penalty of a £5 fine for the first offence and £25 for subsequent convictions. But a woman may arrive in England wearing prohibited plumage without committing an offence.

The Committee is convinced that birds are slaughtered recklessly, and that egrets are the prey

Further, the Committee holds that the Bill will render more effective the legislation of India, Australia, and the United States devised to save rare birds. The provisions of the Bill can be carried out easily.

Fly-fishers use some rare feathers for their flies, but as the quantity is very small the Committee has amended the Bill to protect their interests.

For more than half a century—since 1843—the headquarters of the Zoological Society have been in Hanover Square. Till 1883 they were at No. 11, and in April, 1884, the anniversary meeting was held in the new offices at No. 3, which had been purchased and put into thorough repair for the purposes of the society. Great satisfaction was expressed by the Fellows present at this meeting, and it was then considered that the accommodation afforded by the new premises would be sufficient for all time. Part was subsequently let off, and the house now serves also as offices for the Anthropological Institute and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds. The scientific and business sides of the Zoological Society have so increased that even were these tenancies terminated at once, there would not be adequate room for all requirements.

In these circumstances it has been determined, at a special meeting of the council, to dispose of the society's freehold house in Hanover Square, provided a satisfactory offer can be obtained, and transfer the offices to the gardens, so that all the business of the society may be transacted at one spot, thus doing away with the inconvenience of the chief officer having to travel a couple of miles or so every time he has business in Regent's Park. It will also be a great advantage to have the accountants, the clerical staff, and the ticket office at the gardens. The new offices will contain rooms for scientific meetings, and for the use of the council and the various committees, probably a lecture room, storage for the society's publications, and possibly a museum. Some objections will, perhaps, be raised by some naturalists, who use the library, on the ground that Regent's Park is not so easily accessible as Hanover Square, and for the same reason by some of the regular attendants at the scientific and business meetings.

Lieutenant Paul Graetz, of the German Army, who started from Dar-es-Salaam, German East Africa, to cross the Dark Continent in a motor-car to Swakopmund, on the west coast, has been struggling through the wilderness for nearly a year, and has accomplished little more than half his task. The journey began on 10th August 1907. Broken Hill, Rhodesia, was reached on 6th July, this year, and after a long stop for repairs the car resumed its journey on Friday. Writing from Broken Hill last month Lieutenant Graetz says:—

"We arrived here on 6th July. The journey was terrible. The conditions were worse than anything we have met with since we left the wilderness of the Tanganyika region. But we reached Broken Hill at last.

We tried to pass over the M'kushi and the Lunsefwa rivers on bridges, which broke under the weight of our car. Our petrol-tank exploded, and it is only by a succession of miracles that we have been saved from the perils of the mountains, the rivers, the swamps, and the bush.

"The car had to be entirely repaired and overhauled here. To-day (31st July) we start again on our journey. We are now leaving for Bulawayo."

In the year 1833 Captain Russell, of H.M.S. Brunswick—a fine old sailor of the ultra-belligerent type—vowed that Ann Glanville, a Saltash woman, working at the cockle and mussel industry, should "take the shine off the Frenchmen." He suggested to her that she should go with her crew across the Channel to Havre, and enter for the annual regatta there. Ann shrank not an instant from the challenge. She consulted her crew, and in less than an hour they had determined to go over to France and beat the Frenchmen, "for the honour of old England." They were under the escort of Captain Russell, and it was a capital trip for them. In every way they were treated with respect and consideration. When the Frenchmen and their authorities heard of the challenge from "les Anglaise Saltashe," as they called it, they shrugged their shoulders and winked their eyes merrily. The Englishmen were good sailors, no doubt, they said, but to bring over women to beat the picked men of a great French port was a little too absurd.

The challenge of the English captain created a stir, not only in Havre, but for miles around the French coast, and for many leagues inland, too. In England great interest was felt in the forthcoming match, and in a short time it assumed a kind of international character. Thus, when the regatta day came, there was a vast concourse of people to witness the contest. Every quay, hill-top, and house roof, whence a view of the course could be obtained, was crowded. All were on the tip-toe of expectation, the Frenchmen a little indignant, in their own peculiarly irritable way, that women should be matched against them. But the Frenchwoman knows how to seize every advantage of her sex, and with a keen sense of humour forgot not to twit her "lord and master." At last the hour came. Oh, horrible was the violation of French taste when the Saltash women appeared in their well-known uniform of white! It was only with an effort that the fashionable French lady could take a second look at the remarkably-dressed crew; for the cut and character of the garments they wore were of universal fashion and usefulness.

Amidst intense excitement the start was made. Upwards of ten boats took part in the race, which was one for four-oared gigs. Before the start, however, the Saltash crew had a pull round "to show themselves," and when their steady stroke was seen, how they "bent their backs" to the work, and yet with what perfect ease and grace they pulled, our French friends dropped their winking, and opened their eyes wider than usual in half-doubt that they had deceived themselves. Ann and her crew had not the fairest start possible, nor had they the advantage at first. Six boats were ahead of them five minutes after the start. But they soon tested their opponents. After a little opening "play" to get into trim, Ann, who had the stroke oar, gave the word, "Bend your backs to it, maidens, and hoorah for old England!" One by one the French boats were passed, with a "cheer" from poor old Ann. At length the Saltash boat, with the British colours flying gaily at the fore, took leading position. It was a long course, and a hard pull; but the Frenchmen were soundly thrashed. Ann and her "maidens" beat them by one hundred yards at least! Amid the frantic cheering of a large number of British spectators, who had assembled on the occasion, and not a few cheers from sympathetic Frenchwomen, the Englishwomen's boat was the first to pass the final mark. "Didn't us feel proud at that moment, and often afterwards," said Ann; "for it was for the glory of old England!"

Ann Glanville died at Saltash at the age of eighty-four, and was buried with what were practically military honours. How they would have gushed over her to-day! How the snapshottists and special reporters would have "spread" over this simple Cornish woman whose name has never been heard of by the English public! Shakespeare wants no statue and no memorial. But it does seem remarkable that the county of Cornwall, despite its generally poor condition, has done nothing to raise a humble but permanent memorial to Ann Glanville, the most famous citizen Saltash ever produced.

The collapse of the triangular scheme has had a satisfactory issue and the difficulties, which arose, have been settled, we are glad to see. The invitation of the M.C.C. to the Australians for next year has been accepted. No club in the world, probably, but the M.C.C. are strong enough to absolutely give in to the opposition after taking a firm and definite line, without losing a lot of their prestige. Fortunately the M.C.C. hold the position of Caesar's wife in the cricket world, and so can do what they like. At one time the Australians were told pretty straight that unless they went over and joined the triangular scheme they could stay where they were; and they replied smartly that they would. The financial question was the chief objection advanced by them; but the financial question is a very serious one to many of our counties, too, and the presence or absence of the Australians means—given good weather—the difference between making or losing money on the season, or, at any rate, something very like it. So the M.C.C. approved the suggestion of the advisory committee, and—the Australians are going.

The following are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the last week:—

Hampshire beat Gloucestershire by nine wickets.

Middlesex beat Nottinghamshire by an innings and 93 runs.

The match between Yorkshire and Worcestershire was abandoned.

Essex beat Northamptonshire by an innings and seventy runs.

Lancashire beat Leicestershire by ten wickets.

The match between Sussex and Warwickshire was drawn.

Surrey beat Kent by an innings and 318 runs.

Yorkshire beat Gloucestershire by 182 runs.

Notts beat Philadelphia by 130 runs.

Kent beat Leicester by an innings and 156 runs.

The following matches were abandoned:—

Essex vs. Surrey, Sussex vs. Middlesex, Hampshire vs. Warwickshire, and Lancashire vs. Worcestershire.

We read in an English paper that "there is no disease among partridges, and a most satisfactory season is assured." It depends, of course, largely upon the point of view.

The final in the Trades Cup Football tournament, at Calcutta, ended in a win for Mohan Bagan, who beat the Calcutta Free School by a goal to nil. This is Mohan Bagan's third successive win in this competition.

A telegram from Sydney announces that the fight for the championship between Tommy Burns and Bill Squires ended in another win for Burns. The men have now met three times. On the first occasion at Colma, California, Burns knocked Squires out in one round: the second meeting in Paris in June last resulted in a victory for Burns after eight rounds: this last encounter lasted thirteen rounds and was a good fight.

The Cooch Behar Cup Association Football Tournament at Calcutta, ended on Saturday last in a win for the Aryans, who beat Mohan Bagan by a goal to nil.

The Hyderabad Polo Tournament is fixed to begin on the 21st proximo.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The annual cricket fixture between the Bombay and Poona Gymkhanas, came off on the former's ground on Wednesday and Thursday, large numbers witnessing a close finish on the latter day when it seemed impossible that anything but a draw could be the result. An excellent pitch was provided, but it being soft it wore badly, and the bowlers had matters their own way in the second innings.

Winning the toss the Poona skipper took first knock, and a very bad start was made, but Watts, 26, and Alexander, 15, improved matters and Captain Rutter coming in put quite a different complexion on the game. His innings was not only invaluable to his side, but he gave a splendid exhibition of the game, and when well set hit out. He made 82 before Milne caught him in the slips. Curtis kept him company for some time and his 14 not out was more than useful. With a man short, their innings closed for 162. Clarke bowled well, taking 6 for 50.

Even worse was the opening of the Bombay innings, three wickets falling for just double figures. Then, however, their hard hitting skipper, Commander Vines, came to their assistance and, partnered by West, the score went up rapidly; the former making 26 and the latter 53. Hearson followed with 21 and Coombes was hitting well when at 15 he was unfortunately run out. The score now stood at 153 for 8 when Wheeler joined Phillips and the Poona total was passed. Soon after Wheeler left for 11 and Clarke failing to score, Phillips was left not out 19. None of them were ever comfortable with Rush, who took 6 for 54.

With the very first ball of the Poona second innings Milne bowled Brind, but Stone, 10, and Airey, 18, improved matters. Major Arnold next in was in great form, but could get nobody to stay with him except Watts, 12, and was left with a lively and attractive 30 not out. This time they were two men short and the innings closed for 79. Milne took 4 for 14 and Turner 2 for 4.

Bombay required 72 to win with an hour and twenty-five minutes to do it in, and Turner and Hearson were both out without scoring. Townend leaving with 12 and the total at 17 for 3. Commander Vines again came in useful with 12, West 13, and Coombs looked like staying. Four were out for 41, 5 for 41, 6 for 42 and 7 for the same. Clarke then came in and played carefully whilst Coombs hit out, and before another wicket fell the former made the winning hit. Stumps were drawn with 7 wickets down for 75, the Bombay team having won by 3 wickets and 3 runs. Rush again was very difficult to play and captured 5 out of 7 at the cost of 26 runs.

For three years now there has been no Athletic Meeting run by the Bombay Gymkhana, or any other institution, but one hears that at last it is to be revived and will take place on the 10th and 17th October, with a Marathon race on the 14th. The course of this race is so far not known, but I hear that a start of so many yards will be given for each year the competitor has been in the country. One wonders if the Railways will lose much through the Bandara residents running into town every day by way of training!

It speaks well for the Mounted Sports that despite an interesting cricket match and the football there was a good attendance on Thursday, the Meeting being on this day owing to Wednesday having been a holiday on which many of the usual competitors are away in Poona.

Owing to the dangerous nature of the ground, the jumping gave way to Tent-pegging and the proposed hurdle race was substituted by the usual scurries. The first of these opened the programme and there was no separate class for horses and ponies. Griffin won from Symons and Phillips.

In the next event one horse had to be ridden and another led to a given point where a change of horses had to be made without dismounting. It was no easy matter as the majority found; Scott winning easily from Boothby and Captain Mackie.

The Crawford Market Stakes is an old friend, the men having to ride with an order to their partners who had to execute it. An extra pea or a bean was enough to disqualify one, and there were many cases of very bad luck. Mrs. Binning and Captain Mackie eventually won from Mrs. Hatch and Savile and Mrs. Phillips and Phillips.

It will be remembered that last time the Balaclava Melee had to be left unfinished, and the remaining bouts were fought off now. The semi-final between the R.G.A. and 116th Mahrattas came first, a good bout ending in favour of the latter. These then met the Light Horse in the final, and it was quite a time before either could gain any advantage. It was such a good match that at the finish only one of each side remained; the 116th winning.

An amusing event was the Menagerie Stakes, in which the men rode to a spot some twenty feet from their nominees and imitated the animal ascribed to them. Most of them guessed at once and some fast times were done. The winners turned up in Mrs. Cudlip and Boothby, Major and Mrs. Kilkelly next and Mrs. Greenfield and Scott third.

The Scurries only remained now and that for horses was won by Carter on his own horse followed by Rommel on his and Symons on Major Kilkelly's. Quite a good race in the pony event was won by Captain Mackie from Griffin and Symons.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—It being a holiday, a large number came to Poona from Bombay to make up a large attendance on Wednesday when, mirabile dictu, it was fine and the course in tip-top condition. The books claim to have had a bad time, they generally do, but with large fields and open betting as a whole punters cannot be said to have scored heavily.

Two jump races figured on the card and the first of these was the Sticks Handicap for ponies, a mile and a quarter. On his flat racing form Matalgia had about two stone in hand and as he was said to be able to jump he was made a hot favourite from Recovery, who was a bit shorter than Bull's Eye in the betting. Bull's Eye made the running from Matalgia and Recovery till the last half mile, but after the first two jumps the favourite gave a very poor exhibition and at the last one, nearly came down. Despite this it was thought his superiority on the flat would carry him through in the run in as Recovery only just headed him at the last jump, but those who saw Captain Meynell sawing the latter's mouth half a mile from home were prepared for it when Recovery stayed the other out easily. Bull's Eye felt the old trouble with his leg on reaching the half mile and pulled up going lame, but anyhow he could not have won, whereas Belle Olaf came strong at the finish.

The other was the Trial Chase for horses over the Steeplechase course in which Lamrock was a hot favourite from Daroji. At the jump opposite the Stand, Nell Gwynne rapped badly and after that was never really in the race. She was then following Golden Morn and Lamrock, who was then joined by Cairnsmore with Daroji some way back. They lolloped along like this till leaving the course for the open where Daroji began to come up and ran into second place at the jump opposite the Church. Crossing the road he flashed past Golden Morn, who went back fourth, and established a long lead from Lamrock. Entering the course again Lamrock made a game bid but though Bond had to shake Daroji up he had enough in hand to win by a length. Golden Morn fell at the last jump.

Since H. H. of Patiala bought Commander he has only been out on rare occasions owing to the trouble with his leg, but signs of his fitness were seen when he was confidently backed for the Hadapsur Plate, being equal favourite with Gold Mint. Ashroff, Mint and Amood were also supported, but in the race there was nothing in it but Commander, who was out first and had no difficulty in keeping there all the way from Company and Amood. Mr. Ali bin Talib it seems was so confident of Gold Mint that when he did not even get a place he expressed his dissatisfaction with Taylor's riding and I believe reported him to the Stewards. Taylor has always been considered an honest lad and should get plenty of mounts elsewhere nevertheless.

Punters were not far out when they make Chungiz and Colaba favourites for the mile Arab Novice Plate as the race lay between these two, though Meerdhan threatened danger. It was a good race which Colaba won narrowly.

Also a good race was the Service Plate for which Court Martial was a better favourite than M.V.O. The latter went away from the start leading White Oats and The Munshi, but nearing home Mr. Charrington riding a nice race came along on the favourite and won by a head.

A run-away affair was the Selling Plate for horses, the public finding that the stable had already got their money on and consequently had to be content with odds on St. Patrick. He showed great improvement when he went to the front and literally cantered in from Alruna and Dormant. It cost Mr. Kelso something to buy the winner in at Rs. 4,000.

On form the Lilliput Novice Plate looked a good thing for Special, who was made a warm favourite from Murzook, but neither of these could even place. After Little John had made the running, Silver Stream put in his run and won an exciting race from Hishan and Tamin. No less than twenty-one ran.

After some fairly hard rain in the morning there were occasional showers during the afternoon of Saturday in Poona making the Sixth Extra a not altogether ideal affair apart from the actual racing. There were eight events equally divided amongst Arabs and the bigger ones and the majority of winners were short priced, though once more the big fields and open betting enable the Books to pretty well get round on the favourites.

Entries for the Beginners' Plate were so large that it was split up into three, the first opening the day with Jehangir favourite after his easy win. All went well with him when Malik Jaman died away to nothing and Grey Rose made ineffectual attempts to catch the favourite up the straight. A furlong from home, however, Mutlag was seen on the outside passing everything and drawn up to the leader he had him well beaten. The stable have twice before backed him with confidence, but he has never shown this form.

Next came the Sydney Plate of seven furlongs for ponies and with all but Encourage of Byramji's lot scratched this one was made a warm first fancy from Wild Boy. The former has never shown much sign of staying, but the stable knew their business, and after running Koko off his legs he held Wild Boy in the run in.

The All Horse Plate of a mile found fifteen with such as Ebullition, Volume, Hunting Horn and Pelargonium out. On his last run Lachlan was heavily backed with Mother Goose next in demand, and a great race was seen. The latter, then Malinyook took up the running with Lachlan and Admiral Crichton close. At the bend Mother Goose again led with Lachlan at her withers, Apology running up to them. Mother Goose had been nicely saved and just stayed Lachlan out by a neck, Mallinyook and Apology dead heating a head behind.

A great turn up for the Books occurred in the Khandalla Plate of ten furlongs, Nooman being favourite from Dhamas and Wild Poppy, but none of these even placed. After Spearmint and Wild Poppy had cut out the pace, Gladiator passed them and easily stayed out Merrily and Remembrance, a trio of outsiders. Gladiator is a great track performer, but though often confidently backed last year only gallops when he thinks fit.

With Dulcimer out of the Welter Plate of a mile a second-rate lot were left in of which Lord Boyne, Golden Morn, Coriolan and Vocalist were the pick. It was no sort of a race as Vocalist went clear away and easily stayed out Wolferton and Lord Boyne.

The second division of the Beginners' Plate, had a dozen starters with Maimoom, despite his 8-10, at evens, Sirur next at fours, Maimoom passed the latter before the bend and from there all was plain sailing though Hullo and Narsin made game efforts. Hasty Jack, fourth, will win a long race soon.

Quite a good lot were amongst the dozen for the six-furlong Losers' Handicap for which Dulcimer was an odds on chance from Lady Lamond and Lady Metal, and thoroughly justified the confidence. He made his own running and did not want much riding to beat Lady Metal and Conscience with Lady Lomond close fourth.

Third of the Beginners' Plates, and last race of the day, was a great betting race; Viceroy shorter than Saree, Fairfield and Gwalior. Saree killed himself out in front from Viceroy who, taking the lead at the bend, easily beat Fantom and Fairfield; the latter getting a bad run, as also Special, who finished fourth.

A WELL KNOWN FACT

London Week by Week.

Friday, 7th August 1908.

Monday was Bank holiday and a right Golden Festival it was, with its record brilliant sunshine, its millions basking out of doors, its seaside and country revels and the invasion of empty London by at least a million provincial visitors. 'Ampstead 'Eath, Epping Forest and all the surrounding pleasure haunts were given over to mirth, music, feasting and drinking throughout the day, while at night there was the usual endless inpouring of over-driven beasts of burden, towzled women, wearied infants and alcoholic men, heralding their return with mingled discords instrumental and vocal: the blaring cornet, the wailing concertina, the maudlin chorus were all on hand. What mattered it? Bank holidays are not as oft recurring as poojahs and 'Arry must needs make merry while the sun shines—and the oof lasts.

* * * * * *

But not all London's populace was on the river, on the commons, joking and applauding cricketers at the Oval. Breathing ozone at Brighton and Southend, yachting at Cowes, bathing at Margate and Ramsgate, sailing to Boulogne, perspiring at a theatrical matinee, watching the life-saving competitions and the sports at the Stadium or the races at Sandown, touring the Crystal Palace, nor drilling with the Territorials on Salisbury's burning Plain.

Some Londoners were joining the world's prominent Free Trade enthusiasts ,who assembled for a week's conference.

Among those who toiled were the jurymen and officers in the interminable and deadly dull case of the Mile End Guardians. They spent a Bank Holiday at the Old Bailey.

At the Royal College of Science, in South Kensington, there was an Art Congress, and surely discussing art on a blazing day may be called hard work.

Allusion to art reminds me that the Academy closed its doors to the public last Monday night. One hears that from the point of view of sales the exhibition has not been a remarkable one. Among the pictures that have not yet found purchasers are several that have been generally acclaimed as the pictures of the year.

Among the more important pictures that have been sold are:—

"The Kiss," by Edward Stott.

"The Gleaners Returning," by George Clausen, R.A.

"Gather ye Rosebuds while ye May," by J. W. Waterhouse, R.A.

"Sunrise," by the late David Farquharson.

"A Summer's Morn, North Wales," by B. W. Leader, R.A.

"The Fountain," by Charles Sims.

The last-named picture was purchased by the trustees of the Chantrey Fund.

Society is earnestly holiday making now and will continue so to do practically throughout the month. The Cowes week, which opened on Monday, has so far been a huge success. Inquiring glances are even now being turned to the moors, where the grouse have less than a week's security. Everything points to a successful season, the latest reports being for the most part favourable. Success has attended the rearing of second broods, the first in many districts having been partly or entirely destroyed by unfavourable weather. The Caithness moors promise particularly well, birds being both numerous and healthy. Sutherlandshire reports are not quite so good, late birds being frequently referred to. The Duke of Portland will shoot over his own property at Langwell, in Caithness, and the Duke of Sutherland will be at Dunrobin Castle. I am told that Perthshire and Aberdeenshire again show good results. There was a good stock of birds left on most of the moors, and these came through the winter well. Early losses through frost occurred in Inverness and Elgin, but later broods have done well and restored the balance. Skibost will be shot over by Mr. Sydney Buxton's party, who should have average bags.

Of course, it would have been too much to hope that Bank holiday might pass without fatality. One expected a few accidents—when one reflects that not a day passes in London without a few deaths as the result of present traffic conditions, a somewhat inflated death roll naturally attends the extra rush of millions eager to do as much and get as far as may be in forty-eight hours—but Tuesday's list of casualties was simply appalling. Pleasure parties smashed up, boaters and bathers drowned, cyclists killed and injured, pedestrians pulped and terribly maimed, children mangled, animal slaughtered, property damaged. And the motorist and the motor car responsible for all, save the accidents afloat! Everywhere the general public are clamouring for such legislation as may tend to ameliorate the existing motor terror. I see the District Council of Keynsham, near Bristol, this week decided to send a memorial to the Prime Minister on the subject of motor traffic, on the lines of a form received from the Road Union. This classifies the evils of motor traffic under five heads: (1) Danger to life and limb; (2) nuisance from dust and noise; (3) enormously enhanced cost of road maintenance borne by local ratepayers; (4) damage to crops; and (5) depreciation of property. It complains that whilst suffering serious loss and increased burdens, the inhabitants in rural districts are driven off their own roads by the large number of motorists, who ignore representations and exercise an intolerable system of oppression. I have seen scores of motorists whose tactics on the road proclaim them as nothing but homicidal maniacs.

British sportsmen all over the world will be pleased to note the success of the Hon'ble Rupert Guinness, in the bye-election at Haggerston caused by the death of Sir Randal Cremer. The famous oarsman beat his Radical and Socialist opponents badly and his victory is another bad blow to the Government. The polling figures were:—Hon'ble Rupert Guinness (Unionist) 2,867; Mr. W. R Warren (Radical) 1,724, H. Burrows (Socialist) 986; so that the successful candidate had a majority of 157 over the combined polls of his opponents—almost a row over in fact.

"Lady Frederick" is a much-travelled personage. When, after winning public favour at the Court, she shakes the dust of that theatre off her dainty skirts, it is only to find the doors of the Garrick thrown open to her. Thence she trips along to the Criterion, which in due course she abandons for the New, and now behold her comfortably settled at the Haymarket. Rarely in the history of dramatic migrations has such a record been equalled; nor could more conclusive testimony to the vitality of Mr. W. Somerset Maugham's popular comedy be desired. Last Saturday afternoon witnessed its latest removal to the Haymarket, an audience of excellent proportions, considering the weather and the holiday exodus from town, assembling to give the piece a hearty reception. Of its many witty and diverting qualities there is no need to speak at this time of the day; it is long since "Lady Frederick" established itself firmly in the affections of the public, and, apparently, Mr. Frederick Harrison will be under no obligation to hurry forward preparations for the production of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's new play, which is to be the immediate successor of Mr. Maugham's. To Miss Ethel Irving's finished performance in the title-part of the latter unstinted praise has been given from the first; repetition has in no way dulled the edge of its humour, its womanly tenderness, its grace. Her portrait of the clever and kind-hearted Irish lady is as fascinating to-day as ever it was. Equally good in quite another way is the Paradine Fouldes of Mr. C. M. Lowne, a talented actor who, having waited all too long for his chance, has now stepped into the very forefront of his profession. Upon these two lies the burden of the piece, but a word should also be said for the capital support afforded them by, among others, Miss Agnes Hewitt, Mr. J. L. Mackay, Mr. Gilbert Porteous, and Miss Florence Wood.

The Jew is nothing if not persistent, doubtless the trait is as noticeable in the East as it is here, and in nothing is it more displayed than in the yearning for a national home once more; they have long since tired of wandering and they continue to "murmur" as they did in the wilderness. The national home idea has steadily gained ground and so manifest has it been of recent years that it comes as no surprise to find "that professional Jew" Mr. Israel Zangwill, the historian of the joys and sorrows of the ghetto, telling us of efforts to obtain a Jewish colony in North Africa, and if that fails in an American State, and alongside of these efforts we have the endeavours of the powerful Zionist movement to found a Jewish colony in Palestine.

If the desired powers could be obtained from the Sultan there can be no question that Palestine would make the most suitable site for a Jewish settlement. The enterprise, money, and trading genius of the Jews would in a few years bring again to the ports of the Holy Land the traffic they enjoyed in the hey-day of Palestine, and the bazaars and marts of this land of mighty traditions would know prosperity once more. But since the Sultan evinces no haste to hand over Palestine, the schemes of Mr. Zangwill to obtain concessions elsewhere must be said to be the more practical. Perhaps, failing other locations, he may turn his eye towards India, where there is a good deal of waste land I believe; how about the Runn of Cutch, the Sunderbunds or some of the cheerful little pitches in Scinde or Cherrapoonjee way?

Many readers of The Indian Field, know the Hon'ble Captain Fred. E. Guest and will sympathise with him in the terrible loss he has just suffered. He had but recently taken over Burley-on-the-Hill, the finest mansion in Rutlandshire, on a long lease and spent much on improvement: a big house-warming party had assembled when, on the 6th instant, the edifice caught fire and one of the stateliest homes of England, containing masterpieces of ancient art and priceless pictures now lies a heap of charred ruins. The party consisted of Captain and Mrs. Frederick Guest, Captain Henry Guest, Mr. Winston Churchill, Mr. F. E. Smith, K.C., M.P., and Mrs. Smith, Lady Dorothy Howard, Mr. and Lady Lilian Grenfell, Mr. John Grenfell, Mr. Tobin, Captain Barrett, Mrs. Hugh Dubal, and Mr. Marsh.

The outbreak occurred shortly after midnight, and all the guests had to be hurriedly aroused, and they escaped in the scantiest of attire, several having to dress on the lawn.

Some of them, including Mr. Winston-Churchill, rendered great aid in attacking and subduing the flames. The damage is estimated at something near £35,000. What terribly hard luck!

Toy manufactures will soon have to exercise their ingenuity and produce playthings calculated not to suggest improper ideas to the up-to-date child. Soldier games have been solemnly condemned by the Peace Congress, the box of soldiers and the toy cannon will ere long be classed with the wizard and wicked engines shows at the Tower of London. At their recet meeting in Caxton Hall a resolution that such games should be discouraged and that parents should refrain from purchasing military presents for their children, was proposed by a Turin delegate, who pointed out that in Italy a society of mothers had been formed for the purpose of teaching their young the idea of peace!

If this movement gains ground in England the wooden sword and the pop gun will have to go as tending to promote assassination, the rocking horse will be banished as likely to lead to turf default, the squib as paving the way for the dynamitard's work, and when the doll, has disappeared a check will have been put on the footsteps of those who wander down the dark avenues, which end in breaches of the seventh commandment. We get nearer the millenium by leaps and bounds.

The papers have been busy trying to guess the identity of two mysterious masked musicians who, clad in evening dress and accompanied by a liveried servant are alleged to be making from £50 to £60 a week in the West End. They are obviously gentlemen and their talent is undeniable, one has a fine tenor voice, the other plays, the footman drags the piano along. That they do not count on a copper audience is evidenced by the assertion that at Earl's Court last Saturday they took £7 in thirty minutes. It is stated that the singer is the son of an Earl. M'yes, possibly of Earl's Court, What?

The will of Frederick Arthur, sixteenth Earl of Derby, of Knowsley, Lancashire, and of Derby House, St. James's Square, London, Lord Lieutenant of Lancashire, who died on 14th June last, aged 67 years, has not yet passed probate, but it is stated that the estate will exceed £3,750,000. The disposition of Lord Derby's estate is not yet known.

The demolition was begun yesterday of the Imperial Theatre, the handsome playhouse in Westminster, which was built for Mrs. Langtry and opened by her on 2nd April 1901, with "A Royal Necklace."

Miss Ellen Terry and Mr. Oscar Asche, Mr. Lewis Waller, Miss Evelyn Millard, and Mr. Martin Harvey have all played at the Imperial, but the theatre was not well situated, and it was never the home of a long run.

COON HUNTING.

I was returning from a three weeks' duck hunt at Reelsfoot Lake on a damp, misty day, when my nerves were completely shocked by being compelled to assist in rescuing an unfortunate hunter who had the ill-luck of having himself knocked overboard by the recoil of his gun, and the consequence was that his boat was overturned and he was hanging across the bottom hallooing for dear life when our small bateau and a fishing skiff came to his rescue. He clambered into the skiff half frozen and scared almost to his wits' end. He was rowed off to the club house, leaving his gun at the bottom of the lake and boat afloat bottom side up.

After seeing him well on his way we started again, and after paddling for some three hours from the time we left the Canvas Back (the cabin boat in which we had bunked), we arrived in safety on shore, with a number of apparent hair-breadth escapes.

I left my baggage in charge of the storekeeper on the bank, and we meandered up one of the ravines or hollows about one and a half miles to a saw mill. There at the office of my friend Murry I intended to spend the night. It was then about five in the evening.

While at the supper table I was informed that a coon hunt was the programme for the evening, and was given an invitation to join the party, to which I gave immediate assent, wishing to add another chapter to my volume of experience in Western Tennessee before I decamped for my more northern abode.

About 7-30 o'clock we left the office. The first jump, from the back yard fence, I landed on the top of a fallen tree. It seemed to me that it was just a little the darkest night I had ever seen. I crawled out as best I could, and the next thing was to ascend an incline of about forty-five degrees or less for nearly fifty rods. When once on top of the rise we groped our way along the summit of a ridge that was scarcely wide enough for a two-horse vehicle to be driven along, and entirely wooded with forest trees. After going, it seemed to me, two miles or more—which, however, had diminished to less than a quarter by daylight next morning—we saw a light glimmering through the trees, which in itself brought relief. I was informed that it indicated the party waiting for us before they started on the evening's hunt.

There were five or six men with axes, torches, dogs and lanterns. My friend Murry had shouldered his gun when we left the office. We started, with the master of the dogs, about a hundred yards in advance. After wandering about the ridges for an hour the dogs struck a trail. They barked and howled for some time in different directions from where we were standing. Every one of the party was still as death, excepting one thin-faced, pale, somewhat sallow-skinned native, who had been lately married, and he put one in mind of a dried herring without the smoke. But his lungs were in good repair and air was free and plentiful. Some one suggested in an undertone that he yell for the dogs. Then a peal broke through the woods that an ordinary apple peddler on the street would have been proud of. I could hardly tell at first what he said, but in a moment it was repeated: "O, he! Bring 'em, in, Jack. Ho, he! Fetchem, home, boys!" and such like. It was astonishing to compare the volume of his voice with the avoirdupois of the man. The dogs would echo and re-echo the sound as they pushed themselves through the brush, over ridges and into valleys.

Soon the thin-faced man said, "Treed!" How he knew they had treed was a mystery to me, for I could hear no difference in the barking of the dogs. But the word was sufficient; it was no sooner uttered than everybody broke into a run down hill and through the brush, like a flock of sheep escaping from a pack of wolves. With some difficulty I managed to stay close enough to the light to keep my centre of gravity, but I can hardly say as much for some of the party. One man swore his "coon hunts" would be few and far between in the future. We soon got to the bottom of the hollow and found the dogs at the root of a small hickory tree. Our torch, which consisted of a bunch of waste tied on the end of a pole and saturated with kerosene, was then lighted, and every one began to examine the top of the forest generally, but with an "eye single" to the hickory, but no coon could be found. Some one said, "Shine his eyes." So the torch and one lantern were put out, and the other was used by the skilful hand of one of the natives, while my friend Murry followed him around with his gun. Still no coon. The next step was to cut the tree, which Joe soon did. When the tree fell the dogs rushed to the top, tore through the limbs and brush like a hurricane in a canebrake, but the result was just the same as before. There was one redeeming feature, however, connected with the falling of the tree that allowed us in some degree to pacify our blasted hopes with regard to the object of the hunt. The boughs on the top of the tree were interwoven, as many of them are in that section, with grapevines, and these hung full with grapes. It is true the grapes were somewhat skinny and filled principally with seed at this late season of the year, but they were stowed away at a wonderful rate by the entire crowd.

A short time after we left the tree I felt as if I had emptied a few loads of duck shot into my stomach. Grape seeds are marvellous for their ability to remind one of their presence when confined to the domains of an ordinary stomach. Still all I could do was to make faces in the dark and grunt on the sly, for I should likely have had mental torment added to what was only physical suffering had I revealed to the party my feeling and the cause of it.

But soon my attention was drawn in another direction. The dogs set up such a terrific barking that it startled even the sturdy hunter, who owned the wiry canines. Some one said, "Treed on the spot!" No one seemed to know what it might be. It certainly was something out of the usual line of accomplishments on an ordinary tour for cover. Some of the partly seemed to hesitate, but, of course, they were not afraid. It was only some peculiar feeling that happened to possess them at that peculair time. Low and unwonted remarks were made concerning a panther that had been seen in the neighbourhood, and of bears that had been driven across the river from Arkansas by forest fires, and numerous other things of like sentiment were muttered as we went cautiously to where the dogs were holding something at bay. We came upon them in a moment, when one of the men, with a lantern which he held above his head so as to see at the furthest distance possible what might be attracting the unwavering attention of the dogs, yelled out, "It's an old sow and pigs!"

The boisterous laugh of the crowd rang through the woods, and the old hog made a savage dart at the dogs, who fell over logs and other trash in their hasty retreat, glad, however, to have escaped with their lives. In fact, every one seemed as well pleased as the dogs that it was nothing more dangerous than a parental swine with her family, who certainly felt it an intrusion to be disturbed by a couple of dogs and a gang of wild-eyed hunters in the hour that nature intended for rest.

It was a long while before we heard from the dogs again. But our time was occupied by haps and mishaps until our leader called to us from an adjoining hollow to come in his direction. This seemed the worst gully we had yet found. It was so filled with undergrowth and debris of fallen trees that it appeared almost impossible at first for one to get through, but there was one thing very much in our favour and that was the steep incline we had to descend; when once started it was a case of run or tumble, just as you liked. It fact, the undergrowth became at times the only source of security. This lasted only part of the time, however; there was necessarily an ascent after the descent which took sometime, with labour correspondingly great. These were all accomplished with the dexterity of a hound pup on his first chase, with an occasional pell mell feature to give variety to what was already not monotonous in the highest degree.

It was getting along toward midnight and we had already turned our faces toward home, when the loud and long bellows of the dogs reached our ears. Quick as a flash the thin, pale-faced man, who by this time looked as if he ought to be beneath his parental roof instead of wandering about through the woods on a rainy night, yelled out, "Oh! bring 'em home, boys!" Then the bellowing of the dogs began in earnest. Up and down the ravine they went, held close to their work by the stimulating yells from the little man. This lasted until our patience was worn to a feather's edge and we were on the point of going home and leaving the dogs on the trail. But while this was being discussed, we were again startled by the word "treed." Like a boot-black at the alarm of fire we all started. We had gone only a little way when the foremost man stopped, held his lantern a little in front of him for a moment, then disappeared like a stage in a mine shaft. The next man went down and another followed until it became my turn. It was a jump of about 8 feet or 10 feet into the bottom of the gully. But there was no going around. It was always a straight run, no matter what intervened. When once at the bottom of the ravine, there stood in front of us an embankment four times as high as the one we had just come over, almost perpendicular, with no trees and but few sprouts growing upon it, and wet by the previous rains; but the thought of how we should get up seemed never to have entered any one's mind. Up we went as best we could, slipping and falling on our knees and crawling from one twig to another until eventually we reached the summit, covered with mud and panting for breath

A few rods further on we found the dogs at the foot of a small tree, which bent itself over another ravine. It was soon determined that the tree should be cut; with a few strokes from our noble axman the tree went crashing across the hollow, but the result was nothing. However, the owner of the dogs, while taking me to the railroad station next day, said the dogs "stayed by that thar limb all night and I'd swar that the coon is in that limb yit."

We returned to our bunks about 1 o'clock, well worn physically, and our moral condition very much impaired. I have ever since had my individual opinion concerning those dogs as coon hunters, but it would not likely be pleasant to mention it to their present possessor.

MAN-EATING GARIALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—A letter I wrote lately to your contemporary the London Field on Garial shooting, has elicited an interesting account, from "F.S.W." of how one of these naturally fish-eating reptiles, took to regularly catching and eating men. Instances of the garial becoming dangerous to human beings, seem to be extremely rare; and it is probable that fortuitous and sudden temptation, such for instance as a child falling into the water just in front of the reptile at a time when it was extremely hungry, was responsible for this change from normal habits. The garial which "F.S.W." tells us about, lived at Gorakhpur in 1852. In the monsoon some low lying land used to become a lake: in this inundation a very large garial took up its quarters, and became a confirmed man-eater; preying regularly on the unfortunate Native fishermen, who resorted to the inundation to fish. Eventually a price was put upon the monster's head; and a native shikarry, having enticed the garial to close range, by tying up a kid on the bank, succeeded in killing the man-eater with his match-lock. Instances of garials preying upon dead bodies, are I believe less uncommon; but the slender and comparatively weak jaws being unsuited for masticating such tough flesh as that of a fresh corpse, it is probable that garials would push food of this sort into a hole, below the water, and leave it there some time before attempting to eat it. I have seen a garial with its head out of water, chumping up a freshly caught boalli before swallowing it, but biting up the flesh of a large mammal would be a very different affair, and I do not think the garial with its slender beak, and small conical teeth, could possibly manage this, unless the flesh had been much softened by many days' immersion in water at a fairly high temperature. Near the Burning Ghat, at Agra, there was a steep bank going straight down into a deep pool in the Jumna: here I several times noticed a garial of 10 or 11 feet long, which most likely stayed about that particular spot for the sake of the children's bodies, which were constantly thrown in. One day when I was standing at the top of this bank with several other people, the garial suddenly came to the top making a great commotion, and at the time the creature seemed to me to be expectant: I also had an idea that our voices, we were speaking rather loudly, had brought the garial to the top to prospect.

BRIDGE QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Would you kindly give me a decision on the two following points in Bridge. A (the dealer) goes no tramps. B doubles holding ace, queen, knave, ten and three other diamonds and king and two small clubs. B leads ace. D holding king and nine of diamonds plays the nine, thus in the next round blocking his partner's suit with the king.

Questions:

(1) Was B right in leading his ace?

(2) Was D right in playing his nine of diamonds first round?

Simple Simon.

Secunderabad, 21st August 1908.

KARACHI PORT TRUST.

Final Issue of 14 Lakhs

OF THE

4 per cent. DEBENTURE LOAN, 1906,

Rs. 45 LAKHS.

With the sanction of the Government of India, the Trustees of the Port of Karachi invite tenders for Karachi Port Trust Debentures to the extent of Rs. 14 Lakhs only, being the final issue of a loan of 45 Lakhs.

Debentures will be issued for Rs. 500 or multiples of Rs. 500 as may be required, and will bear interest at the rate of four (4) per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly.

The loan will be repayable in 30 years.

Intalments will be payable as follows :—

First 5 per cent. on application.
Second Balance on allotment.

Interest will be calculated on the first instalment due on application from date of allotment, and on the balance from date of payment.

The deposit of 5 per cent. will be returned if no allotment is made, and it will be forfeited if an allotment is not paid up on due date.

Tenders will be received up to 12 o'clock noon (Standard Time) on Friday, the 4th September 1908, by the Chairman, Karachi Port Trust, at the office of the Karachi Port Trust, Karachi.

Tenders should be submitted in a sealed cover addressed to the Chairman, Karachi Port Trust, Karachi, and superscribed "Tender for Port Trust Loan."

Forms of tender can be obtained on application to the Manager and Secretary, Karachi Port Trust, and to the Bank of Bombay, Bombay or Karachi.

Tenderers may pay their instalments into the Bank of Bombay, Bombay or Karachi, to credit of the Karachi Port Trust, and forward the Bank's receipt for the amount so paid.

N. B.—Trust Funds.—In accordance with the power contained in Section 20, Clause (f), of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, the Sadar Court of the Province of Sind has passed a rule declaring that Trust property consisting of money may be invested in Debentures issued by the Trustees of the Port of Karachi under the Local Authorities Loan Act, XI of 1879, or other law for the time being in force, until further order. Orders to the same effect have been passed by the Chief Courts and Authorities of Bombay, Madras, Punjab and Lower Burmah.

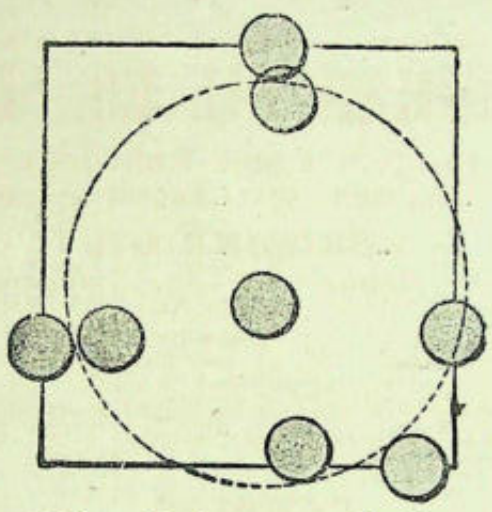
New No. 2 ·360 Bore



RIFLE.

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

VELOCITY 2,150 F. S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of The Field and not by a professional expert.

NOTICE.

Doorga Pooja Holidays.

Concession in Fares.

1. During the period from the 15th September to the 11th October 1908 inclusive, return tickets for 1st, 2nd and Intermediate class passengers, will be issued for any distance over 100 miles over this Railway, including the East Coast section, Mourbhanj State and Parlakimedi Light Railways at singles fares for 1st and 2nd classes and at two third class fares for Intermediate class. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distant 100 miles or less on payment of fare as for 101 miles.

These tickets will be available for forty-five days from the date of issue to completion of return journey, but all Doorga Pooja concession return tickets will cease to have effect after midnight of 20th November 1908, whether the interval between the date of issue and 20th November 1908 is forty-five days or less.

2. Tickets purchased at the Dalhousie Square, Harrison Road and Cook's Booking Offices will be available by trains from Howrah on the day of issue or the day after. Tickets taken at these offices for Monday's mail trains are procurable on Saturdays.

3. The return concession tickets for 1st, 2nd and Intermediate class pasengers will be accepted to secure reserved accomodation, provided the accommodation is available on the following scale :—

Class	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	Four
Second	Five
Intermediate	Eight

Reserved accommodation will, however, not be provided on the Satpura, Dhamtari and Purulia-Ranchi Branches and on the Parlakimedi and Mourbhanj State Light Railways.

4. The return concession tickets do not entitle the holder to any additional concession such for instance as that under which women servants are, on payment of hte next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in 1st or 2nd class compartments. Children's tickets will be issued at half the concession fares.

MONTHLY SUBURBAN TICKETS.

5. Monthly Suburban tickets between any two stations, Howrah to Haur, will be issued from 15th September to 11th October 1908, inclusive, at three-fourths only of usual rates, subject to the usual minimum charge, to persons who purchased monthly Suburban tickets during the corresponding period in the months of August and September 1908.

6. For further particulars see notice exhibited at stations.

RETURN TICKETS AT REDUCED FARES.

First and second class passengers.

1. During the period from the 15th September to the 11th October 1908, inclusive, return tickets for 1st and 2nd class passengers, will be issued for any distance over 100 miles at single fares. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distant 100 miles or less on payment of fare as for 101 miles. The return tickets will ordinarily be available for forty-five days from the date of issue to completion of return journey, but all Doorga Poojah concession return tickets will cease to have effect after midnight of the 20th November 1908, whether the interval, between the date of issue and the 20th November 1908, is forty five days or less.

Examples:—

A ticket issued on the 15th September 1908 will, under this rule, be available for completion of return journey up to the midnight of the 29th October 1908, i.e., it will be available for the full period of forty-five days.

But all tickets issued between the 7th and the 11th October 1908, inclusive, will only be available up to midnight of the 20th November 1908, the period of availability being curtailed in proportion to the lateness of issue.

The outward journey must be completed in all cases, within the same limit of time, as allowed for single journey tickets, vide paras. 15 and 21, pages 89 and 92 of the monthly Time Table and Guide. One day is allowed for break of journey for every 100 miles or part of 100 miles, but no break of journey will be allowed at a station short of 101 miles from the point the journey was commenced.

Intermediate class passengers.

2. Return tickets will be issued during the same period and under the same conditions as to distances and break of journey to Intermediate class passengers at a charge of two third class fares.

General.

3. Tickets purchased at the Calcutta Offices (Fairlie Place and Chowringhee) will be available by trains from Howrah on the day of issue or the day after. Tickets taken at these Offices on Saturdays will remain available for Monday's Mail trains. Tickets purchased at the Burra Bazar Office, will hold good for the day of issue only.

4. The return concession tickets for 1st, 2nd and Intermediate class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation, provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale :—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	Four
Intermediate (lateral compartment)	Eight

5. The return concession tickets do not entitle the holder to any additional concession, such for instance as that under which women servants are, on payment of the next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in first or second class compartments. Children's tickets will be issued at half the concession rates.

Monthly Suburban tickets.

6. Monthly Suburban tickets for October 1908, between any two stations, Howrah to Burdwan including the Tarkessur Branch, will be issued to purchasers of tickets for September 1908, at three-fourths only of usual rates, subject to the minimum charge.

7. The above arrangements apply to the East Indian Railway system including the Tarkessur Branch and the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 7th August 1908.

THE TURF.

ALEXANDRA PARK.

IT was evident that everybody was not passing the interval between Goodwood and Brighton by the sad sea waves, as in the olden happy times, as last Saturday a particularly strong and representative company turned up to enjoy some spirited sport, in which heads turned up five times out of six. The weather was glorious, and several of the leading lights of the world of sport were among the company in the members' enclosure, while both in Tattersall's and the public enclosures the attendance was extellence and the holiday-makers turned out in force. The going was not at all bad, and though fields were of moderate strength, the closeness of the finishing was almost phenomenal. Details:—

SANDOWN PARK.

With thousands at the seaside, 20,000 people at the Oval and palaces, parks, and all the heaths and commons claiming their share, it was a wonder where the vast crowd came from that turned up at Sandown Park on Monday's Bank holiday. There they were in shoals, every enclosure save the members which was conspicuous by a scanty, select symposium of club members, being crammed. Details:—

HEALTHY LIFE IN INDIA.

Punch's old and trite, but nevertheless, true saying—"Is Life worth living? That depends upon the liver" applies more to Anglo-Indians than to anyone else—only those who suffer know how very much more. And yet there is no reason why this should be so, why a man should not be just as fit in India as in the home country. The majority of those who come out do not regulate life in accordance with the climate and changed conditions of tropical countries. To be well and to keep well requiries the greatest care and discipline. In a country like India, where the extreme heat makes so enormous a difference to the functions of the human body, it is essential to life, that the requirements of the body should be regulated with more than ordinary care. But if we keep the digestive organs healthy and the nerve machine in good working order, one can be as well and healthy on the Bund as in Piccadilly. And we can do so, for medical science has evolved a substance that, whilst easily digested, contains in happy combination the two vital properties for nourishing the body and for stimulating and feeding the nerves.

Sanatogen, the nerve food is almost universally recognised by medical men as a true scientific food. Readily digestible—so much so that its use in the acute stage of typhoid fever is practised by many physicians—with a high nutritive value, almost every atom of it being absorbed and assimilated, rich in that necessary element of all the tissues of our body—phosphorus—Sanatogen forms at once an almost perfect and complete diet for the low-power system which most Anglo-Indians possess. Used in time it will prevent that devitalisation of nerves and indolence of digestion, respiration, circulation, etc., which all dwellers in tropical climates know and dread so much.

Mr. Hall Caine extols its virtues:

Whitehall Court,

London, S. W.

"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a tonic nerve food it has on more than one occasion done me good."

Hall Caine

Even when one of the numerous insiduous tropical diseases has gained a foothold, Sanatogen, according to medical testimony, is a power with which to dislodge the foe, if scientific theory and actual practice in the case of enteric and other fevers have any weight at all. The author of a paper in the "Indian Medical Gazette," December, 1906, entitled "The Maintenance of Health in Tropical Climates," states this opinion: "For residents in tropical climates, suffering from general debility, the best and most readily assimilable food is a combination of casein with glycero-phosphates. This cannot be prescribed as an ordinary mixture, pill or powder, but for some years past I have used the preparation known as Sanatogen, which is composed of 95 per cent. of pure casein and 5 per cent. glycero-phosphate of sodium. I have used Sanatogen on a large scale and have every reason to be satisfied with the results obtained."

This is only one of over 7,500 written endorsements from physicians in Great Britain and India. If any further proof were required it is to be found in the vast numbers of letters from distinguished men and women, who have themselves derived benefit from the use of Sanatogen.

Madame Sarah Grand, the distinguished authoress, writes:—

10, Grove Hill,

Tunbridge Wells.

"I am glad to be able to tell you that Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years' enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks. I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Sarah Grand

Sanatogen which is a fine white powder, is put up in bottles and can be obtained from all chemists.

An engrossing booklet containing matters of vital importance to well-being in the Tropics has recently been issued. It is from the pen of a physician long resident in India and is entitled "How to keep well in India." It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well. A copy can be obtained free of charge from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, from whom also Sanatogen can be purchased.

THE GREAT EASTERN REMEDY.

The PLAGUE of INDIA is SKIN AFFECTIONS, such as Herpes, Scabies, Eczema, Scurvy, Rupia, Pustular Eruptions, Acne, Ringworm, Lichen, Scaldhead, Scaly Eruptions, Lepra, Elephantiasis, Freckles, Syphilitic Eruptions, &c., Boils, Blanes, Pimples, Blotches, Foul Ulcers, Indolent Tumours, Cancerous Tumours, &c., &c.; for these Dr. E. J. LAZARUS'S ESSENCE OF NEEM is the remedy.

The Baids and Hakeems of Hindustan have employed the MELIA AZADIRACHTA for very many centuries in the above diseases, and astonished the world by the wonderful cures they effected, but it was left for Dr. E. J. LAZARUS to make a preparation containing all the valuable therapeutic properties of the tree, in a PLEASANT, POTABLE and EFFICACIOUS FORM. [We have a host of unscrupulous imitators [as indubitable proof of the value and efficacy of the above preparations] against whom we beg to caution our friends.

In bottles Rs. 2 each.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From PANDIT KOILAS NATH SUKUL, Physician to H. H. Maharaja of Bulrampore:—"Anything that can be said in praise of your newly-invented 'Essence of Neem' is insufficient to describe its merit as a Purifier of Human Blood. I have much pleasure to let you know, that within the short space of the past six months I have given it ten different trials in some of the most obstinate skin diseases, three of which were advanced cases of Indian Leprosy, and your Essence has in all of them effected most admirable cures, the like of which I have never noticed during my practice of last twelve months."

From MRS. A. R. B., Allahabad:—"Please send me by return post six bottles more of your invaluable 'Essence of Neem'; it is doing me more good than all the Doctors have done for me."

From MR. R. L. D. A.:—"I am happy to said that the 'Neem' is doing a great deal of gooy to the patient and I think he will ask me to write in a day or two for some more."

ROWING.

THE OLYMPIC HENLEY.

AN ENGLISH ROWING TRIUMPH.—The Olympic Regatta wound up at Henley on the 31st July, in a regular blaze of glory and a magnificent triumph for English rowing. The weather was perfect, both for the spectators and the competitors, the heat being less oppressive than during the two previous days

The card for the day included the four finals, and in only one event was a foreign crew interested. The racing for the pairs and fours attracted little attention, everything being eclipsed by the Leander and Belgium race in the eights. This was rowed in the middle of the afternoon, and it produced a struggle worthy of the occasion.

There was very little wind when the race was started, so that the Bucks station gave Leander very little advantage. Both crews went off at a high rate of striking, the Belgians doing twenty-three in the half-minute and forty-three in the full minute to Leander's twenty-two and forty-two. Leander rowed with tremendous power, and gaining steadily, led by a quater of a length along the island and half a length at the first singal.

Both crews were at top pressure, but the wearers of the cerise continued to hold their own, and led by three-quarters of a length at the second signal, and a trifle more at the half-distance in the exceptionally fast time of 3min. 45secs. The Belgians spurted but could make no impression. Bucknall keeping the English crew going with fine judgment.

The Belgians went up slightly opposite the Grosvenor Club but at Henley milepost Leander led by a length and a quarter, the hoisting of the distance semaphore being greeted with tremendous cheers. The Belgians never looked like getting up, and Leander went all out to the finish, winning by two lengths amidst such a scene of enthusiasm as Henley has never witnessed in its long history.

The time, 7min. 52secs., was remarkably fast, and the old regatta course was covered in faster time than ever before. Both crews were completely rowed out at the finish.

It was a glorious race to watch.

The Belgians were meeting the very cream of English rowing talent and men of more powerful physique, who had been training together much longer than the Continental eight. They were beaten, but not disgraced, and English rowing men will hope to see Belgium at Henley again next year rowing for the Grand.

Their record is a good one for they have been to Henley six times, including the Olympic Regatta, and have been victorious twice. They have never lost a race here except to Leander, who have always had to do a fast time to win.

The next most interesting event was the win of the veteran H. T. Blackstaffe in the sculls. Most people fancied Alexander McCulloch, the young Australian, who took up sculling at Oxford and won the Diamonds this year, but he was outstayed and outpaced by the veteran. McCulloch led for nearly half a mile but afterwards it was Blackstaffe's race. The Vesta man sculling as well as ever he did during his career and stalling off McCulloch's spurts, won a great race by rather more than a length in 9min. 26secs.

It was a most popular win, and will form a fitting close to the long and honourable career of a good sportsman. Blackstaffe was forty years of age last Tuesday, and fourteen years have elapsed since he rowed his first race for the Wingfield Sculls, which he has won five times in all. This year he lost to A. A. Stuart in the Diamonds on a foul, but has since won the London Cup and the Wingfields, and has now gained the greatest honour of all.

In the pairs two Leander crews were engaged, and Fenning and Thompson won as expected. The Jesus College pair steered badly. Fairbairn pulling too strongly for Verdon, and they were finally beaten by two and a half lengths in 9min. 41secs.

In the fours, Leander gave the polished Magdalen four a good race for half the distance, but the superior watermanship of the Oxonians triumphed in the end. They steered a beautiful course, and won by a length and a half in 8min. 34secs. The winners had the same crew that won the Stewards' and Visitors' Cups at Henley and set up a fresh record in each event. Details:—

THE WINNING CREW.

H. C. Bucknall (stroke) rowed stroke in the winning Oxford crew of 1905, and in the losing crew of the following year, whilst he was at No. 2 in the losing boat in 1907.

R. B. Etherington-Smith (No. 7) rowed No. 6 in the losing Cambridge crew of 1898, and No. 5 in the winning crews of 1899 and 1900.

R. H. Sanderson (No. 6) rowed at No. 6 in the winning Cambridge crews of 1899 and 1900.

C. D. Burnell (No. 5) rowed 6 in the victorious Oxford crew 1895, 4 in the winning boats of 1896 and 1897, and No. 5 in the successful eight of 1898.

Guy Nickalls (No. 4) is one of the few men who rowed five times for Oxford. He was at 2 in the losing crew of 1887, and at No. 7 in the unsuccessful eights of 1888 and 1889, whilst his thwart in the winning boats of the two following years was No. 6 and 4 respectively.

R. C. Johnstone (No. 3) rowed 3 in the winning Cambridge crew of 1901, and in the losing boat of the following year. He was at 5 and 6 respectively in the victorious crews of 1906 and 1907.

F. S. Kelly (No. 2), who has won renown as a sculler and holds the record for the "Diamonds," was at No. 4 in the losing Oxford crew of 1903.

A. C. Gladstone (bow), who has just finished his 'varsity career, rowed No. 7 in the losing Oxford crew of 1905, and was at the stroke thwart in the crews of 1907 and this year, both beaten decisively by Cambridge.

The coxswain, G. S. Maclagan, considered one of the best men who have ever held the rudder lines, steered the losing Oxford crews of 1899 and 1900, the winning boat in 1901, and again the losing crew of 1902.

The average weight of the crew was 12st 1¼lb.

7 Oscar de Somville	12	3
Rodolphe Poma (stroke)	11	0
Alfred Vanlandeghem (cox)	8	0

Leander went off with 11, 22, and 42—only one stroke behind the Belgians at each period of the first minute. The boats were level at the start but Leander secured a slight lead as they emerged from the Island, and at the first signal the English eight were half a length ahead. Both crews were going well, and a splendid race ensued. Leander, however, were rowing a winning race, and had their boat three-parts of a length in front at the second signal. The half-way was reached in 3 min 45 secs. The Belgians here spurted, but Leander were capable of an effectual response, and went even further ahead, leading at the mile by 1¼ lengths. They were rowing in fine form, but the Belgians were never done, and rowing a faster stroke than ever they went up slightly, Leander drew well away opposite Paylis Court however, and won a splendid race by two lengths in 7 min 52 secs.

FOURS—Final.

2 H. R. Barker	11	12
G. L. Thomson (stroke and steers)	11	12

Magdalen started at 19 and 38 in the first minute. Leander striking 20 and 39. Magdalen were steered with remarkable judgment by Somer-Smith, but Thomson did not select quite so good a course. The race, however, was very good up the Island, and both crews were working hard. As they emerged into the open water above Temple Island, Magdalen showed signs of going to the front, and at the first signal were leading by a quarter of a length. Half-way reached in 4 min. 10 secs. Magdalen were a length ahead Somers Smith not losing an inch of water. They gradually increased their lead, and although Leander tried hard and pluckily to go up, they lost by two lengths in 8 min. 34 secs.

G. E. Fairbairn (bow and steers)	11	8
P. Verdon (stroke)	11	7

Thomson pulled 38 strokes in the first minute, the Jesus pair completing their 37th stroke. There was a crisp breeze blowing off the Bucks shore, and later was blowing up the course. Fenning and Thomson led at the beginning, and were three-quarters of a length in front at the Island. Both pairs were steering a good course, and at the first signal the Berks boat was a length ahead, an advantage which was exactly doubled over the next quarter of a mile. Verdon spurted finely and reduced the lead slightly temporarily, but at the mile-post the other pair were well ahead and won easily by 2¼ lengths in 9 min. 41 secs. The half time was 4 min 36 secs.

SCULLS—Final.

Bucks Station—A. McCulloch (United Kingdom), 12st 4lb. 2

A great race. McCulloch took the lead at the start, although he pulled fewer strokes than Blackstaffe, the record being:—Blackstaffe, 10, 18, 35; McCulloch, 10, 18, 34. Both got well away, but McCulloch quickly left his opponent behind, and at the top of the Island was leading by about 1½ lengths. Blackstaffe was sculling with judicious strength, but at the first signal he was 1¼ lengths behind. He continued to maintain a long, powerful stroke, and, pulling rather more quickly than McCulloch went up fast between the two signals, being only a quarter of a length in arrear at the old half-mile post. Before reaching half-way, Blackstaffe took the lead, but went dangerously near the pile as the flag dropped at 4 mile, 37 sec. At the three-quarter signal on the Royal course, Blackstaffe was leading by barely three-quarters of a length, McCulloch was unable to prevent him from going still further ahead. They were both sculling in good form, but Blackstaffe was showing the greater pace. McCulloch attempted to spurt, but he had had enough and lost by 1¼ lengths in 9 min. 26 secs.

PUTTING CHAMPION.—At Maidenhead on the 6th August, W. Haines (Old Windsor) beat F. Nichols (Egham) by half a length for the professional championship. Time, 9min. 39secs. This is Haines' tenth victory.

ATHLETICS.

INTERNATIONAL ATHLETICS.—After a very interesting match last Saturday, the South London Harriers beat the Racing Club de France at the Stadium by 4 events to 3. There were about 7,000 people present. Last year in Paris the Frenchmen won by 5 events to 2.

The 100 yards was secured by L. J. de F. Reed, who, with P. Faillot, made a splendid race of it, a half-yard separating the pair as they breasted the tape in 10⅕secs. Another win went to the Harriers in the mile match, F. A Knott and A. W. Hugg being first and second respectively after a good race in 4min. 30⅕secs.

In the quarter-mile event it was the turn of the Frenchmen to score, and in this match the surprise of the afternoon came about by the defeat of that fine runner, E. H. Montague by Faillot. The pair settled down to a terrific struggle all along the finishing straight, and, amidst a burst of enthusiasm and applause, Faillot reached the winning post first three yards in front of the speedy harrier, in 50⅕secs.

The three-quarter mile steeplechase found our friends from across the Channel giving a splendid display. In faultless style G. Filiatre and G. Chavez forged ahead, taking hurdle after hurdle and the water-jump as though they were mere shadows. The two harriers, Pullar and Thomas, made a very poor show. They were never "in the picture". Again, in the 120 yards hurdle match, G. André and his confrè, G. Durbec, were always in the forefront, completely outpacing their opponents.

Knott secured a double event by winning the three mile match, Pullar (S. L. H.) being second, and M. Lucas (Racing Club de France) third. Knott went away with a substantial lead at two miles, and went on and won by 80 yards in 15min. 27⅕secs.

The last event, the 880 yards match, was won by J. F. Lintott, who easily got home from C. Poulenard and G. Filiatre in 1min. 59⅕secs.

The 220 yards invitation handicap ended in a victory for J. C. Brooks, of the L. A. C. (15 yards), with R. J. Dunn (13) and G. A. V. Connolly (14), both of the Harriers, second and third respectively. Time, 21min. ⅕secs. Despite the fact that A. E. Wood, of the Essex Beagles (65), fell as he was entering the straight for the three miles invitation handicap, he quickly recovered himself, and finished in brisk style eighty yards ahead of W. Coales (30), the Thrapston runner, in 14min. 38⅕secs.

A mile relay race brought out four teams—namely, the Racing Club de France, the University of London A. C., Polytechnic Harriers, and South London Harriers. To C. C. Davies, of the Polytechnic fell the honour of finishing first over the last quarter-mile stage, the full time for his team's mile being 3min. 23secs.

STAMFORD BRIDGE SPORTS.—The annual Highland gathering at Stamford Bridge attracted 8,000 visitors. The principal contest was that between Alex Munro and James Morrison for the all-round heavy-weight championship of Great Britain. They took part in seven events, tossing the caber, throwing the hammer, putting the 16lb. and 22lb. shot, wrestling in the Cumberland and Westmoreland and catch-as-catch can styles, and a 100 yards race. Morrison won the sprint, but the match was a draw, each securing three events, whilst they tied at putting the 16lb. shot.

BOXING.

JOHNSON vs. BEN TAYLOR.—Never before has a contest aroused so much interest in the West of England as the match between Jack Johnson and Ben Taylor at the Cosmopolitan Club, Plymouth, last Saturday night. Prior to the chief event several minor contests were decided, it being ten o'clock when the principal pair took the ring. The company was a particularly numerous one, the London contingent including Mr. A. F. Bettinson. Although from the outset Johnson had matters pretty well his own way, the game stand made by the Englishman was greatly appreciated. His punishment he took unflinchingly, and by the time that the referee stopped the bout, which was in the eighth round, he had taken sufficient to stop half a dozen men.

Johnson's display was that of an accomplished boxer, and those critics who asserted that he was as clever as the late Peter Jackson were by no means wrong in their assertion.

Johnson was the first to enter the ring having for his seconds Sam Fitzpatrick, Young Lippo, C. J. Jenkins and Sam French. Taylor soon followed, being seconded by Tom Bridgeman, Jim Leonard and George Rowlands. Both principals looked in fine condition, while the black who was the taller, also appeared much the heavier.

First Round.—Johnson at once began to force the work, and cornering his man, smashed right and left home on the face. Taylor attempted to counter, but received a hard body punch with the left, which Johnson followed up by scoring heavily with both hands on the face.

Second Round.—After getting within measurable distance Johnson brought the right across, and brought Taylor to his knees. Quickly rising, Taylor tried to mix matters, but Johnson neatly parried the blow.

Third Round.—Taylor was anxious to resume, and tried his left, but Johnson neatly stepped out of danger, and thrice reached the face without a return.

Fourth Round.—Taylor started in resolute style, but after reaching the face with the left Johnson brought across his right to the jaw and Ben was compelled to take the count. Upon rising Taylor rushed at his adversary, but Johnson cleverly got out of danger.

Fifth Round.—Taylor made a good show, but Johnson's body blows began to tell, and Johnson just before the end of the meeting missed an uppercut.

Sixth and Seventh Rounds.—Taylor was down twice in the sixth round, while in the seventh he was sent to the boards thrice. Johnson on the second occasion, immediately his opponent regained the perpendicular sent him down with a left-hand punch.

Eighth Round.—It was plainly discernible that the end was near, and after Johnson had twice dropped his man, the referee stopped the bout, and declared Johnson the winner.

SWIMMING.

MILE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—This event was decided at the Abbey Park, Leicester on the 4th instant. Of the seven entrants, W. Foster (Bacup) and T. Morris (Blackburn) did not compete. The holder had to rest content with third place, the positions and times of the first four being: F. E. Beaurepaire (Melbourne), 25min. 15⅘secs., 1; T. Battersby (Southport) 25min. 29⅘secs., 2; H. Taylor (Chadderton), (holder), 25min. 48⅘secs., 3; F. W. Springfield (Brisbane), 27min. 26⅘secs., 4. At the end of the first quarter mile, Taylor, Battersby, and Beaurepaire were close together, the first-named leading by a yard. At the half-distance Beaurepaire went on first, the time being 12min. 43 secs. Beaurepaire eventually won a fine race by fifteen yards; twenty yards divided second and third.

GOLF.

£100 PROFESSIONAL TOURNEY.—Intensely hot weather again prevailed at Budleigh Salterton on the 3 rd ultimo when on the links of the East Devon Golf Club, the tournament for £100 presented by Lord Clinton, was brought to a conclusion. Play consisted of a 36 holes four-ball foursome, in which James Braid and Alexander Herd opposed Harry Vardon and J. H. Taylor. Braid, who won the stroke competition on the previous day, showed brilliant form, and it was largely due to his efforts that the Scotsmen gained a decisive victory by 8 up and 6 to play. Scores:—

Braid and Herd.—First Round.

Out: 314445144—36. Home: 354454134—43. Total, 69.

Second Round.

Out: 31345154—35. Home: 253343334—30. Total, 65.

Vardon and Taylor.—First Round.

Out: 43134544—36 Home: 354444344—36. Total, 72.

Second Round.

Out: 454444441—37. Home: 364434533—36. Total, 72.

Braid's individual score was 68, which beat Mr. C. C. Aylmer's record for the course by no fewer than three strokes.

CALCUTTA CUP TOURNAMENT.—On the new course at St. Andrews, the annual match play handicap tournament for the silver cup, which was first presented by the Calcutta Club for competition among the members of the Royal and Ancient Club in 1885, was begun on the 4th instant when the first two rounds were decided. Fine weather prevailed but a stiff breeze occasionally proved somewhat trying.

Appended are the results:—

First Round.

Mr. G. McEwan (scratch) beat Colonel Marshall (2) by 5 and 4.

Mr. John Bulloch (2) and Mr. Mackenzie Low (7) halved.

Mr. Herbert Johnson (1) and Colonel Ford (16) halved.

Mr. John Fairlie (1) beat Mr. D. Maitland (6) by 2 and 1.

Mr. Fleming Crooks (15) beat Mr. T. Mansfield Hunter (owes 2) by 2 and 1.

Mr. W. Hilman (7) scratched; Mr. W. H. Fowler (owes 2) w.o.

Mr. A. Murray (2) beat Mr. A Hutchison (3) by 1 up.

Mr. Spencer Gollan (owes 1) beat Mr. R Fairlie (4) by 2 and 1.

Mr. A. Oldham (3) and Mr. Edward Blackwell (owes 3) halved.

Colonel Howison Crawfurd (9) beat Mr. Alexander Patten (12) by 1 up.

Dr. Vassie (4) beat Colonel St. Clair Oswald (7) by 2 up.

Captain Anstruther (scratch) beat Mr. James Shaw (owes 2) by 3 and 2.

Colonel Wood (10) beat Mr. J. Morrice (11) by 5 and 4.

Mr. Harvey Hadden (8) beat Mr. H. Wedderburn (9) by 4 and 3.

Mr. Harold Wilson (4) beat Colonel M. M'Intyre (9) by 5 and 4.

Mr. Graham Paton (4) beat Mr. E. Burchardt (12) by 3 and 1.

Mr. A. Drysdale (12) beat Mr. Frank Kinloch (3) by 1 and 3

Mr. A. MacAllan (owes 1) beat Mr. W. Linskill (12) by 8 and 7.

Colonel Grant (16) beat Mr. S. Armour (12) by 2 up.

Hon. Richard Bethell (2) beat Mr. G. Simson (3) by 6 and 5.

Mr. W. E. Fairlie (owes 3) beat Mr. J. Grimond (6) by 2 up.

Dr. Hunter Paton (3) beat Colonel Aitken (12 by 4 and 3.

Mr. J. Whitelaw (6) beat Mr. J. R. Hutchison (3) by 6 and 5.

Second Round.

Mr. Tulloch beat Mr. G. L. McEwan by 1 hole.

" R. Herbert Johnston beat Mr. A. G. Mackenzie by 2 and 1.

" John Fairlie, beat Colonel Ford by 5 and 4.

" Fowler beat Lord Kinross by 4 and 2.

" Crooks beat Mr. Murray by 4 and 2.

" Spencer Gollan and Mr. Oldham halved.

" Blackwell beat Lieut.-Colonel Crawfurd by 2 and 1.

Catain Anstruther beat Dr. Vassie by 1 hole.

Mr. Harvey beat Lieut.-Colonel Wood by 3 and 2.

" Bethell beat Mr. Paton by 4 and 3.

" Wilson and Mr. Macallan halved.

" W. E. Fairlie beat Colonel Grant by 1 hole.

Dr. Paton beat Mr. Drysdale by 3 and 1.

Mr. Whitelaw, a bye.

One of the best matches in the third round was that between Mr. Edward Blackwell, owes 3, also an ex-holder of the cup, and Captain Anstruther, scratch. The result was a narrow victory for Mr. Blackwell by 2 holes. The results are appended:

Third Round.

Mr. J. B. Whitelaw, handicap 6, beat Mr. John T. Tulloch (2) by 1 hole.

Mr. John Fairlie (1) beat Mr. R. Herbert Johnston (1) by 3 and 2.

Mr. W. Herbert Fowler (owes 2) beat Mr. R. Fleming Crooks (15) by 5 and 3.

Mr. Spencer Gollan (owes 1) beat Mr. A. C. Oldham (3) by 2 and 1.

Mr. Edward Blackwell (owes 3) beat Captain R. A. Anstruther. (scratch) by 2 holes.

Mr. Harold C. Wilson (4) beat Mr. A. R. MacAllan (owes 1) by 5 and 3.

Dr. J. H. Paton (3) beat Mr. W. E. Fairlie (owes 2) by 3 and 2.

Hon. R. Bethell (2) beat Mr. Harvey Hadden (8) by 3 and 2.

One of the most interesting matches in the fourth round was that between Mr. Blackwell and the Oxford University player, Mr. Bethell. After a very tight game, Mr. Bethell proved successful by one hole. Results:—

Fourth Round.

Mr. J. Fairlie beat Mr Whitelaw by 2 and 1.

" Fowler beat Mr. Spencer Gollan by 4 and 3.

" Bethell beat Mr. Blackwell by 1 hole.

" Wilson beat Dr. Paton by 4 and 3.

In the final Mr. Wilson, opened badly. Too strong with his approach to the first hole, he lost it, and Mr. Fairlie became 2 up at the second, where he was down in, 4 to 5. Mr. Wilson played the third hole well, and, having a stroke, he won it easily. He now found his best form, and, at the sixth hole, he obtained the lead. Getting into difficulties, he gave up the seventh, but at the long eighth he reached that green with two splendid shots, and won the hole in 5 to 6. He also gained the ninth with his stroke allowance, and so turned 2 up. A fine 3 at the eleventh made him 3 up, and he still held that advantage with 4 to play. Going to the fifteenth, he made the better approach, and, winning the hole, he finished the match.

Semi-Final Round.

Mr. John Fairlie (1) beat Mr. W. Herbert Fowler (owes 2) by 4 and 3.

Mr. Harold C. Wilson (4) beat the Hon. Richard Bethell (2) by 3 and 2.

Final Round.

Mr. Wilson beat Mr. Fairlie by 4 and 3.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 15th August.—The hounds met to-day at Windy Gap at 12 noon. A cloudy day with intervals of sun and rain, cold wind and light mist. We drew down the Yemmakal Valley, and found three jacks on the slopes of One Tree Hill, above the Yemmakal stream. A brace led hounds over the hill and pointed for Kabbalkod Mund, the pace was fairly fast. One jack with the main body of the pack went to ground in a small clump of trees to the east of Kabbalkod Mund, out of which he was dislodged and broken up. A few couple of hounds went away with the other jack over the hill, but were soon stopped and brought back. We then had a long draw over Kabbalkod Mund to the Pykara River, along the east bank and up to Chemmund without finding again, though hounds occasionally feathered on a line, but were unable to make anything of it. In Chemmund, however, a jack was roused; he broke at the lower corner and pointed for the Yemmakal stream, short of which he swung right handed up the hill into Dormer Shola. He led hounds round the covert for a time and then broke at the top skirting the hill above Chemmund to the left into Road Shola along Pykara Road, then up to the left over the ridge into Dormer, out at the far side into Chemmund, where he beat hounds by going to ground under a large cluster of rocks on the edge of the Shola.

Monday, 17th August.—Sheffield Corner 8 A.M. After drawing Andy Plantation blank, hounds proceeded down the swamp to Dante's-Spinney and on to Lancer Shola and back by the Krurmund Path to Hungerford Hill, on the top of which a jack was viewed. Hounds hunted him slowly round a shola above the potato field on the Hungerford Estate and over the far side into Yemmakal Shola. Scent was very poor but hounds worked out the line well, though at times they could scarcely own to it. Some sambar were also the cause of riot among the puppies and the jack was lost. Then followed another long draw down the Kabbalkod Valley and up the Yemmakal stream to Briar, along the Devil's Dyke and up Back Staircase towards Staircase Shola. Outside of it hounds touched a line and carried it through the top of Staircase Shola, and out on the far side by the new ride above Round Shola, and on through Martyn's when they swung right handed over the Back Staircase Road and sank the hill to the Devil's Dyke. The pace improved slightly but with a failing scent died away, as they rose the ridge between Yemmakal Hill and Hungerford. They hunted patiently on through Yemmakal Shola and turned left handed to One Tree Hill, then down to Yemmakal stream. Crossing it they climbed up into Chemmund. From out of Chemmund they came away below Bacon Wood, and on to the Devil's Dyke. As they ran up over the Back Staircase Road the jack was viewed not far ahead of them. They went on for some distance and then turned right handed down to the Devil's Dyke again and back into Yemmakal Shola. Although they pushed him right through this they eventually lost him near One Tree Hill, after a very slow hunt lasting the best part of two hours, in a blazing hot sun and a poor scent.

POONA JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

THE Poona Junior Polo Tournament for which no fewer than fourteen teams, viz.,—Poona Divisional Staff, Royal Engineers, Royal Artillery, 26th Light Cavalry, 21th Poona Horse, Central India Horse, Mounted Infantry, the Somerset Light Infantry, Worcesters, Northamptons, the Bombay Gymkhana, the Buccaneers, the Blue Bottles, and the Onlookers—have entered, opened on last Monday in fine weather, though the ground was rather heavy.

Owing to the large number of the entries, three games were disposed of during the afternoon. Colonel Stisted and officers of the Somerset Light Infantry were "at home" in the Pavilion and there was a large gathering including good many ladies. All the three games were more or less one-sided but the losers never lost heart and played on with admirable resolution.

In the first game Poona Horse beat the Northamptons hollow by 10 goals to 1. The latter team were playing against great odds besides their best man, Mr. Haynes, was in hospital, and Captain Cartwright, who took his place had just come out of it. Teams:—Poona Horse—Messrs. Studdy, St. J. Gray, Hilderbrand and Captain Lucas (back); Northamptons—Captain Cartwright, Messrs. Hughes and Clive and Captain Layard (back).

The encounter between the "Blue Bottles" and the Bombay Gymkhana was a far more spirited affair, and afforded a fine exhibition of polo, though the Bombay team, who had two reliables in the Grahams, were outplayed at the end. Score: "Blue Bottles 7 goals, Bombay 1 goal. Teams:—"Blue Bottles" —Captains Talbot, Wright and Meynell, Honble D. Bingham (back); Bombay—Messrs. A. Graham, Scott, D. Graham and Barraclough (back).

The third game was between the 26th Light Cavalry and the Mounted Infantry, Poona. It was also another one-side contest, the Infantry giving way at every point. There was a good deal of excitement, however, at the fierce attempts to ride off which were very frequent, though not wholly successful on the part of Mounted Infantry. 26th Cavalry won by 6 to 0. Teams:—Cavalry—Messrs. Collum, Johnson, Summers, and Captain Popham (back;) Infantry—Mr. Palmer, Captain Crichton, Mr. Bond and Major Rowlandson (back.)

THREE more games were played on Tuesday, and Colonel Weallens and officers of the Northamptons were "at home." The ground was still in a sodden condition but as far as sport went all the three matches were played with dash and skill, somewhat unfamiliar to junior tournaments.

The Central India Horse represented by Captain Gourlie, Colonel Grant, Captain Hogg and Colonel Cosgrave (back) and the "Onlookers" comprised of crack players in Mr. Du Boulay, Captain Heale, Captain Greig and Captain Solly-Flood (back) were the first to try issues. A keenly fought-out game resulted in the Central India Horse's favour by 5 goals to 1.

The second game between the Royal Engineers and the Royal Artillery was more level and the Royal Engineer's win by 4 to 2 was well merited in view of their admirable combination. Teams:—Engineers—Captain Skipwith Captain Bremner, Mr. Loring and Mr. Arbuthnot (back); Artillery—Major Spedilling, Captain Mundy, Mr. Quirrepel and Captain Purse (back)

The Worcesters met the Poona Divisional Staff in the third game and it was a delight to all to see General Alderson in the field championing the Divisional Staff. The game from start to finish was very keenly fought out. In the first chukker, the Staff took the lead by one goal, which the Worcesters equalized in the second. In the third bout both teams notched a goal each, while the next one was unproductive of any further advantage. In the fifth round again both added a goal more, the match thus resulting in a draw of three goals each. The goal posts were then widened and play was resumed. After four minutes of most exciting play, Gibbs for the Worcesters, hit the deciding goal. Teams:—Worcester—Captains Dorman, Torber, Lumbton and Gibbs (back); Divisional Staff—Captain Ramsden, Major-General Alderson, Major Hockson, and Major Martin (back).

"Excellence," Bombay.

WEDNESDAY was a Race day and the tournament was resumed on Thursday. The second round commenced with a game between the "Blue Bottles" and the Poona Horse, which was well played throughout and the Poona Horse, who are regarded as one of the crack teams of the meeting, only won by a single goal. The last chukker was perhaps the fastest in a fast game and the play of the "Blue Bottles" back was warmly commended by the spectators. Score :—Poona Hoarse 4 goals, "Blue Bottles" 3 goals.

The next game between the 26th Light Cavalry and Central India Horse provided an exceptionally clever exhibition at polo and would have done credit to the Senior Tournament which commences next month. The teams were wonderfully well matched and responded to each other's play throughout. It was a very fast game and the teams had tied with two goals all in the fourth chukker, and the time was practically up when the Central India Horse just managed to hit the third and winning goal.

ON Friday, another two games were played. The first between the Royal Engineers and the Worcesters, was full of spirit, and if there was anything which excited admiration it was the sporting spirit of the Worcesters, who are invariably to the front in any branch of sport. It was not surprising that they should come off second best out of the encounter, as the Royal Engineers are veterans in polo, but they played a losing game pluckily to the last. Score :—R. E. 4 goals, Worcesters nil.

The Buccaneers, a crack team comprising Mr. Charrington, Mr. Jackson, Captain Hodgson and Mr. Wood (back), who had drawn a bye in the first round, met the Somerset Light Infantry in the next game. The result was a foregone conclusion, but none the less the play of the Somerset was characterised by great dash, and they never lost heart, despite the overwhelming odds against them. Score :—Buccaneers 5 goals, Somersets 1 goal.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

C. F. C. vs. RANGERS.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on the 19th instant, the home team winning a very one-sided game by four goals and five tries (35 points) to nil. In the first half Siddons (2), Longbottom, Studd, Arthur and Dunsterville got over with tries, three of which were converted by Burnett. After the interval, Morrison, Burnett and Dunsterville crossed the Rangers' line, Dunsterville adding the extra points to Burnett's try.

UNITED SERVICES vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Saturday last, the Services winning by 2 goals and a try to nil. The first half was level and the Services only go through once, the place failing, but on changing ends the U.S. scored two tries and both kicks were successful.

GLOSTERS vs. H. L. I.—Played at Dum-Dum on Saturday, an interesting game ending in a win for the Glosters by a penalty goal (3 points) to nil. The Lahore team had rather the best of the game in the first half, their forwards doing good work. Half way through offside against Reid enabled Rogers to drop a goal from the penalty kick. The H. L. I. played a vigorous game on changing ends, but in spite of repeated efforts they were unable to get through and the game ended as stated. Teams :—

GLOSTERS.—Russell, back; Mattey, Smith, Rogers, and Lieutenant Parnell, three-quarters; Murray and Milwater, half-backs; Travel, Wilson, Lovell, Robbins, Strong, Heal, Hatch and Prosel, forwards.

H. L. I.—Tait, back; Duncane, Lieutenant Alston, Lieutenant Lilburn and Clarke, three-quarters; Reid and Metcalfe, half-backs; Henderson, Schewrin, Peterson, McGlouse, Syme, Shrubshell, Duncan and Kerth, forwards.

Referee: Mr. Cadell (C. F. C.).

CALCUTTA vs. DALHOUSIE.—The return fixture on the Dalhousie ground last Saturday ended in another win for the C. F. C. who scored 18 points (3 goals and one penalty goal) to nil. The game was very open at the start, then the Dals' 25 was invaded, Burnett getting over with a try and adding the major points himself. The home teams attacked but were again driven back. In attempting to collar Kay Boothroyd and Brewer collided with one another, both having to retire owing to their injuries. Meanwhile Longbottom got over with a try and Arthur converted. Kay scored before the interval and Burnett majorised. On changing ends the Dals playing two men short, gave a great display and had bad luck in not scoring. Offside against Evans gave a penalty kick to Calcutta and Arthur dropping a goal they won as stated. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Whiteley, back; Burnett, Kay, Siddons and Longbottom, three-quarters; Arthur and Morrison, half-backs; Kerr, Harvey, Donald, LeCocq, Studd, Earp, Dunsterville and Candler, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Walker, back; Allen, Bates, Holley, and Penny, three-quarters; Greenwood and Evans, half-backs; Brewer, Boothroyd, Sullivan, Smith, Seabright, Storrie, Whyshall and Eckford, forwards.

Referee: Mr. E. Martelli.

DALHOUSIE vs. UNITED SERVICES.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Tuesday, an interesting game ending in a draw. The Dals played a man short in the first half and were kept busy defending most of the time, but there was no score. After the interval Dalhousie took up the attack and Holley got over with a try which was not improved upon. A penalty against the Dals enabled the U. S. to kick a goal: the scores at the close were: Dalhousie 1 try (3 points), U. S. 1 penalty goal (3 points).

CALCUTTA vs. H. L. I.—Playing at Dum-Dum on Tuesday Calcutta beat the H. L. I. by 13 points to nil after a good game. Calcutta pressed at the start, then the Military attacked and the subsequent play was very level, hard scrummaging was followed by a free kick to either side for offside. Neither led to any result. At length Arthur got possession and crossed the H. L. I. line, Burnett adding the extra points. The home team made great efforts to score but were unable to do so. On resuming after half time, Calcutta had the best of the play, though the home team put up a stubborn defence. Reid-Kay scored the second try and Burnett again converted and Longbottom got over with the third but the place failed. The visitors thus won by 2 goals and a try (13points) to nil. Teams :—

H.L.I.—Tait, back; Lieutenants Lilburn and Allistone, Duncan and Clarke, three-quarters; Reid, and Metcalfe, half-backs; Henderson Schewrin, Shrubshall, Keith, McGlone, Duncan, Sime and Parson, forwards.

C.F.C.—Whiteley, back; Longbottom, Siddons, Reid-Kay and Burnett, three-quarters: Arthur, and Morrison, half-backs; Kerr, Harvey, LeCocq, Bryce, Cropper, Studd, Earp and Clayden, forwards.

Appended is the League Table to date.

FOOTBALL IN POONA.

THE final of the Divisional Football Tournament at Poona came off on Monday, when the Worcesters from Ahmednagar met the R. A., Kirkee. It was a fast and exciting game all the way, and either might have won at any time, as in the second half the Artillery had their full share of the game and were thought unlucky by some for not equalising.

During the opening part of the game the ball was all over the field, till after ten minutes' play the Worcesters came up and opened their account, to follow soon after with a second. Far from giving up hope, the R. A. now played most determinedly, and it was satisfactory to see their efforts rewarded before half time. As mentioned, the second half saw each attack in turn, the R. A. having the better of exchanges for the earlier part only for the Worcesters to turn the tables towards the end. There was, however, no further scoring and the game consequently ended in favour of the Worcesters by 2 goals to 1.

On the teams lining up, General Alderson complimented the finalists on their fine display of the game and at the same time sympathised with the Leicesters, who won last year. Mrs. Alderson then presented the cup and silver medals to the winners and the bronze medals to the runners up.

THE BOMBAY HARWOOD LEAGUE.

THOUGH Monday is usually a rugby day the Cooperage was given up to the Harwood League in which several games remained to be played before the Tournament and the Rugby Tourney intervening made time short.

It was a poor crowd which turned out to watch the game, which was of an uninteresting description and a foregone conclusion that the Scots "B" would give the Rovers a bad beating. As it was, the Scots were not at full strength. Finnigan partnered Foster at back, Gilbertson and McConnell replaced Wright and Parkes, who was injured in the Poona Tournament but will be fit for the Bombay one, and Papps came in at centre half instead of Finnigan. The Rovers' backs offered a plucky resistance, but despite all this the Scots were on very rare occasions on the defence. Only once did the Rovers come near scoring, when Mungavin got on in front of goal from a miskick, and, though with plenty of time to steady the ball banged it straight to the custodian. Though the Rovers are the weakest team in the league it is a peculiar fact that they are the only ones that have scored against the "B" and that twice. The "B" pressing all the time were on a picnic and had they not played about so much and been so tricky they would have put in even more than the 6 goals to their credit, the biggest total of the season. This ultra trickiness is not a good trait! Ross (3), Hodge, McConnell and Gilbertson kicked the goals.

This is the last game the Scots "B" have to play and they have wound up, as last year, with an unbeaten record: Played 14, won 14, lost 0, drawn 0, for 39, against 2, points 28. This is even better than last year when the Y. M. drew with them, though the "A" have this season given them something to do. That they are better than last year I cannot say, in fact they are not quite as good, seeming slower, and playing about with the ball too much which comes from playing against teams who do not extend them. The Tournament is not far off and—nous verrons.

WE saw a far more interesting game on Tuesday, when the Scots "A" met the Government Telegraph, who, as I have remarked before, have improved more than a little of late. They are still a little weak in goal, and in front of goal, but the defence showed themselves game and energetic, being great warriers though at times the Scots' forwards were too tricky for them. Their halves were still a bit inclined to hang back and wings are badly required amongst their forwards, as had their centres had outsides who did not send the ball out behind so often they might have put in more than the one goal. Holman scored, the first of the match. For a time it seemed the military would be unable to equalise before half time, if at all, but eventually their forwards coming up together were absolutely irresistible and Bolton equalised. In the second half the Scots forwards played admirably and it was a great credit to the Telegraph that they only scored twice, both from Girdwood. This player makes an excellent centre, his feeding being accurate and unselfish, whereas Kennoway passed out to his wing, McConnan, with just the right strength, and the latter's centring was one of the features of the game.

This practically assures the "A." of second place in the table as they are only one point behind the B. G. A. and have played two games less—a win counting 2 points they are likely to be ahead of their rivals after the next game.

A SECOND defeat of the week came for the Rovers on Wednesday, when they met the Y. M. C. A. and went under by 4 goals to 1. It is useless to go on repeating the weaknesses of the Rovers as they are always the same, and they do not improve. Their backs play a plucky game, but whatever chances they give, their attacking division are muffed, and only by a fluke will they ever score. The others are indeed a team of young men and a continuation of their improvement in combination added to their dash will make quite a good team of them, though they will persist in cuddling together when approaching their opponents' goal. G. Brewin (2), Jaeger and H. Templeton scored for the Y. M. and Farrell for the Rovers, after missing a penalty shot.

THOUGH Thursday was fine and the Cooperage in very fair condition this was not the case on the Oval which was so slushy that the authorities decided to look upon the game between the Bombay Gymkhana and the Telegraph as a friendly. That the former won by 3 to 1 is therefore unimportant. Practice games were in progress on the other ground for the Rugby Tournament.

THURSDAY'S postponed game was played on Friday on the Cooperage before a large crowd. The Telegraphs who in the "friendly" on the previous day were beaten by 3 to 1, completely turned the tables on this occasion and won by 3 to 0. It was a very poor game and the play of the Bombay Gymkhana was poorer still—perhaps the poorest exhibition made by any team in the League. Their shooting was rotten, and combination there was nil. The Telegraph forwards played with remarkable skill and their passing was admirable. They had a new man in their left wing and one thought that they had at last succeeded in completing their forward line, but subsequent enquiries elicited that he was a West Ridings rugger man. In the first half Edie and Cowper reached the Gymkhana nets for a goal each and Holman added a third point in the next half. All attempts of the Gymkhana to score failed on account of their disorganization. One act would not be out of place here, and that is while at the begining of the football season the Bombay Gymkhana had fifty players to select their team from, they have now only a bare dozen.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

THE Bombay Gymkhana Rugby Football Tournament opened on Saturday on the Cooperage. Seven teams have entered.

The cup-holders, the West Riding Regiment, tried issues with the Carabineers, from Mhow in the first game. The Carabineers, though good at soccer, were nowhere before the trained Ridings team. It was a well-contested game, but often ragged and not of a scientific character. The Carabineers were generally outmatched in the scrum, but in the loose they held their own. Their three-quarters showed want of practice. Their best man was their full-back, who foiled many a scoring rush of the enemy. The Ridings had a good set of players both in the forward and three-quarter line, but their backs were too selfish.

The Carabineers were the first to open their account with an unconverted try. The Ridings replied with a place-goal. At half-time the latter led by 5 points to 3. During the second moiety, the issues were more in favour of the cup-holders, and a dropped-goal and two tries were scored by them, while the Carabineers failed to do further scoring. The Ridings thus won by 15 points to 3.

"GUARD," shouted a jovial passenger in a train that did not travel fast enough to please him, "may I get out and pick some flowers?" "Afraid you won't find many about here!" responded the guard, good-humoredly. "Oh, there'll be heaps of time!" replied the joker. "I've got a packet of seeds!"

AN American visiting London, goaded to desperation by the incessant necessity for tips, finally entered the wash room of his hotel, only to be faced with a large sign which read: "Please tip the basin after using." No! said Yankee, turning on his heel, "I will go dirty first!"

A STORY is told of a minister who, when learning golf, was heard to remark: "I must give it up! I must give it up!" "Give up what?" he was asked; "golfing?" "No," he replied "the ministry."

THE BANGALORE HORSE SHOW.

First Day, Tuesday, 18th August.

THE Annual Horse Show opened this morning in beautifully pleasant weather; it is being held on the Residency grounds, which are well adapted to it, and which the Hon'ble Mr. Stuart Fraser kindly placed at the disposal of the Committee. Captain Thompson, R. H. A., as Honorary Secretary, has shown that he can run a show of this sort as well as any of his predecessors have done. He has been able, through his personal exertions, to attract a large number of entries and some very fine cattle indeed were paraded before the Judges and the public to-day. We missed very much H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore's fine string of animals this year; no doubt His Highness did not enter as he is away at Ootacamund; another old favourite not in the show this year is the Hosur Remount Depot Four-in-hand. Captain Badcock, the present officer in charge of the Depot is however here, and is doing a lot of the judging.

The grounds have been well laid out for the various competitions, sitting accommodation is provided in the first enclosure; there is a refreshment stall and bar for the general public and another for soldiers. The absence of a military this afternoon was a great disappointment to most people. The attendance, both morning and evening, was quite up to previous years, and included the Resident and Mrs. Stuart Fraser, Major-General Pilcher, C. B., Brigadier-General Atkinson, Mr. P. L. Moore, Assistant Resident, and nearly all the officers of the garrison with their wives. As a rule the civilian element in the station do not "take" to the show and this year is no exception to it.

Mr. A. St. George, B.A., as Ring Master, cannot be too highly praised for his valuable services during the day. The promptness with which he carried out his onerous duties, was admirable. The Judges too deserve a word of praise for the assistance they rendered in making the Show the success it was to-day.

Appended are details :—

CLASS I.—Hunters.

Mr. C. Jarvis' b ch g Cold Feet (Light Weight) ...	1
Major S. C. Stephen's b aus g Bags (Light Weight) ...	2
Major H. Thomas' b aus g Pilot (Heavy Weight) ...	1
Brigadier-Genl. F. G. Atkinson's b aus g Billy-do (Heavy Weight)	2

Judges.—Major F. W. D. Quinton, Captain G. Badcock, Mr. C. E. Murray-Aynsley and Captain W. Nichol.

Seventeen competed.

The horses that paraded before the judges in this class were a very ordinary lot: they were not in full condition and there was very little to choose between first and second.

CLASS IV.—Chargers.

Mr. R. G. M. Johnston's b aus g Tommy	1
Capt. G. S. Tovey's b aus g Toreador	2

Judges.—Major. F. W. D. Quinton and Captain. G. Badcock.

Eight competed.

This was a very good class; after the weeding-out process, Tommy and Toreador were left in and the verdict of the Judges eventually was in favour of Tommy.

CLASS V.—Infantry Chargers.

Mr. H. Day's ch aus m Lucky Dip	1
M. R. C. Alexander's ch a h Nameless	2
Capt. J. White's b aus m Vesuvius	3

Judges.—Major A. H. Hussey and Mr. R. B. Worgan.

Sixteen competed.

Some very good animals entered the ring for this event, but many of them were untrained.

CLASS VI.—Hacks (Horses).

Mr. H. M. Thomas' b aus g Pilot	1
Mr. C. Jarvis' b aus g Smooth Bore	2

Judges.—Mr. C. E. Murray-Aynsley and Captain W. Nichol.

Twelve competed.

With the exception of the winner, who was a class by himself, the rest of the lot made a rather poor show.

CLASS XXVII.—British Corps Jumping.

"O" Battery R. H. A., Corpl. Draycott	1
"B" Squadron, 14th Hussars, Sergt. Goddard ...	2

Judge.—Colonel O. R. Woolley-Dod.

Sixteen competed.

The Judge had no difficulty in placing the winner, who cleared all five jumps in splendid form. Goddard also took the jumps, but his form was not up to the mark. The last man to go, from "D" Squadron of the 14th Hussars, came a cropper while negotiating the water jump.

CLASS X.—English and Colonial ponies.

Major R. C. Stephen's br aus g Beresford	1
Mr. Narainji Dwarkada's ch aus m Florrie	2
Mr. A. G. L. Astley's g aus m The Girl	H. C.
Major R. H. Hayes' ch aus g Fishook	H. C.

Judges.—Major A. H. Hussey and Mr. C. E. Murray-Aynsley.

Eighteen competed.

This was an out and out classy show and the Judges had some difficulty in awarding their verdict.

CLASS VIIIb.—Hacks (Ladies' Hacks).

Major R. H. Hayes' ch aus g Bushranger	1
Mrs. R. C. Stephen's br aus m Beryl	2

Judges.—Maj. Genl. Pilcher and Major Hussey.

Nine competed.

CLASS XII.—Country-bred Horses and Ponies.

Col. A. Jones' b ch h Godfrey	1
Brig-Genl. F. G. Atkinson's b ch c Consolation ...	2

Judges.—Major R. C. Stephen and Mr. P. Hannyngton.

Six competed.

This was a small but good handful. Colonel Jones of the Deccan Horse winning with Godfrey. 2

CLASS XIV.—English and Colonial Polo Ponies (Heavy Weight).

Mrs. R. C. Stephen's br aus m Beryl	1
Capt. The Hon. H. E. Joicey's b aus g Moonshine ...	2
Mr. G. K. M. Mason's ch aus g Wanderer ...	3

Judges.—Captain G. Badcock and Captain W. G. Thompson.

Fifteen competed.

Some very fine ponies entered the ring for this, all of which with one exception, were Australians. Beryl was far and away the best of the bunch, while Moonshine and Wanderer ran pretty close to each other for second honours.

CLASS XVI.—Polo Ponies, Arab and Country-bred.

Capt. H. Tilney's g a h Panch	2
Mr. A. E. H. Ley's ch a g Flashpoint ...	H. C.

Judges.—Colonel A. Jones and Major A. H. Hussey.

Fourteen competed.

This was another good lot from which Dus was selected as winner; Panch scored second honours. With one exception all the other competitors were Arabs.

CLASS XXXI.—Turn-Out (Native Cavalry).

"A" Squadron 20th Deccan Horse	1
"B" Squadron Mysore I. S. Lancers	2
"C" Squadron 20th Deccan Horse	3

Judges.—Colonel C. I. Fry and Major Johnston.

The 20th Deccan Horse turned out in full dress, while the Mysore Imperial Service Lancers were in khaki.

CLASSES XVIII and XIX.—Single Harness Ponies and Horses.

Mrs. R. C. Stephen's ch aus g Morn	1
Col. J. Desaraj Urs' bk aus m Hebe	2

Judges.—Major F. W. D. Quinton and Captain G. N. B. Forster.

Twelve competed.

Colonel Desaraj Urs was unfortunate in not obtaining the Judges' verdict; the public, however fancied Hebe most.

CLASS XXV.—Horse Jumping.

Mr. F. P. Rennie's b aus g Marquis	1
Mr. R. B. Worgan's ch aus g Peter the Great ...	2

Judge.—Major C. Tottenham.

Thirteen competed.

There were some fine horses in this competition, but the riding and jumping was not all that could be desired. Captain Evans, R. F. A., rode the winner.

CLASS XXI.—Four-in-Hands.

"O" Battery R. H. A. Team	1

Judge.—Captain G. Badcock.

Captain Thompson was driving the R. H. A. team, the 14th Hussars four-in-hand had Major Stephen on the box, Mrs. Stephen with him and the 20th Deccan Horse Team was driven by Mr. Leigh.

CLASS XVIII.—Children's Ponies.

Master Ronald Foster's Sumatra m Polly	1

Six competed.

Second Day, Wednesday, 19th August, 1908.

WE had another fine day to-day for the Show, and as a result there was an increased attendance of the public. Unfortunately, however, for all concerned, a heavy shower of rain came down about 4-30 P. M. and the grounds being almost swamped, all further proceedings had to be postponed till 11 A. M. to-morrow. Following are results of to-day's judging :—

CLASS II.—Pony Hunters.

Mr. Anderson's b aus m Snora (Heavy Weight) ...	1
Capt. T. Webb-Bowen's g aus g Nameless (Heavy Weight)	2
Major Tottenham's b aus g Acid Drop (Light Weight) ...	1
Major R. C. Stephen's br aus g Beresford (Light Weight)	2

Judges.—Major A. H. Hussey, Mr. C. E. Murray-Anysley, Colonel A. Jones and Mr. Hannyngton.

Twenty one competed.

This class was very good indeed and the winners particularly so.

CLASS III.—Chargers (Private).

Major A. A. H. Hussey's ch aus g Rhinegelt... ...	1
Mr. F. B. Sykes' bk aus m Starlight	2
Capt. W. G. Thompson's b c g Rapier	3

Judges.—Major F. W. D. Quinton and Captain G. Badcock.

Fifteen competed.

The judges were of opinion that this was a very good class, but very many of the animals were indifferently trained.

CLASS VIIIa.—Hacks (Ladies' Hacks).

Mr. A. P. Symond's g aus m Countess	1
Major A. H. Hussey's b aus g Cornet	2

Judges.—Major F. W. D. Quinton and Captain G. Badcock.

Ten competed.

The winner is a particularly fine horse.

CLASS VII.—Hacks, Ponies.

Mrs. R. C. Stephen's br aus m Beryl	1
Major R. H. Hayes' ch aus g Bushranger	2
Major Tottenham's b aus g Acid Drop	3

Judges.—Mr. C. E. Murray Aynsley and Captain W. Nichol.

Twenty-seven competed.

The competitors made a fine show in the ring, but they were a very mixed lot. The winner Beryl is a very classy pony of great quality.

CLASS XXVIII.—Native Corps, Jumping.

"D" Squadron I. S. Lancers, Lance-Dafadar Byrjee Rao Moraz	1
"B" Squadron I. S. Lancers, Sowar Mahadev Rao Pole	2
"D" Squadron 20th Deccan Horse Dafadar Mahomed Hossain	3

Judge:—Major-General T. D. Pilcher.

The jumping in this event was not up to much. The horses of the Imperial Service Lancers were much admired.

CLASS XI.—Arab Ponies.

Capt A. K. Heyland's g a g Saint Martin	1
Mr. E. C. Ramshaw's g a h Girgistan	2
Mr. A. E. H. Ley's ch a g Flash Point	3

Judges.—Colonel A. Jones and Mr. P. Hannyngton.

Twelve competed.

A fairly good class.

CLASS XIII.—Cobs.

Major A. H. Hussey's b c m Flora	1
Major R. H. Hayes' ch aus m Bushranger	2

Judges.—Mr. C. Murray-Anysley and Captain W. Nichol.

Nine competed.

A very mixed lot, there being really only four cobs among them. Flora, the winner, is a fine stamp of English cob, and up to weight.

CLASS XXIII.—Hackney Carriages.

Mr. Walter Abraham was awarded first prize and Mr. Henry Abraham, of the Premier Stable Company, got second.

Judges.—Captain A. K. Heyland and Mr. R. B. Worgan.

CLASS XV.—Polo Ponies—English and Colonial (Light Weight).

Major R. C. Stephen's br aus g Beresford	1
Major A. Mears' br aus m Rosebud	2
Major R. C. Stephen's b aus m Quickly } Mr. A. G. L. Astley's g aus m Tue Girl }	3

Judges.—Captain W. Nichol and Captain G. Badcock.

Ten competed.

A good show. After the weeding out process, the Judges took considerable time in placing the winners.

CLASS XXII.—Tandems.

Major A. H. Hussey's Snora and Flora	1
Mr. A. G. L. Astley's	2

Six tandems competed

Major Hussey, the winner, drove a very nice tandem.

Third Day, Thursday, 20th August 1908.

THE judging in the unfinished events of yesterday began at 11 A.M. to-day. There was a small gathering of lovers of horseflesh, and of course the competitors. The weather was very threatening, but rain held off and it turned out to be a fine day.

The Pony Jumping was the first event and Mr. Astley on Blaize won it, being run very close by Snora. The Ladies' Driving Prize was secured by Mrs. Stephens, who drove a very fine turn out. The prize for the best horse in the show was awarded to Colonel. A. A Jones' Godfrey, and that for the best pony to Captain A. K Heyland's St. Martin.

The soldiers' competitions, best turn out British cavalry and best turn out horse and field artillery drivers, which were stopped on Wednesday afternoon were abandoned for the present and will be included in the Assault-at-Arms programme in November.

Mrs. Stuart Fraser gave away some of the prizes on Wednesday evening after the rain had ceased, and the remaining prizes were presented at the conclusion of this morning's judging.

Great sympathy has been expressed with the management of the Show for the untimely rain on Wednesday, a factor which marred the proceedings which otherwise were highly successful. Too much praise cannot be bestowed on Captain Thompson, R.H.A., (Honorary Secretary), and Lieutenant St. George, R.A. (Ring Master) for their untiring efforts to make the Show the success it was, and the Judges also deserve well of all and sundry for their valuable services.

CLASS XVI.—Pony Jumping.

Mr. A. G. L. Astley's ch aus g Blaize	1
Mr. S. W. Anderson's b aus m Snora	2

Judges.—Major Thomas.

Twelve competed.

This was an uninteresting competition. Wallaroo, Linnet and French Woman did not put in an appearance, and besides the placed ponies Zorada and Peter were the only others that completed the course, the rest refusing to be put over the jumps.

CLASS XX.—Ladies' Driving Prize.

Mrs. R. C. Stephen's Turn Out	1
Mrs. Hogg's Turn Out	2

Judges.—Major F. W. D. Quinton and Captain G. Badcock.

Seven competed.

A small but very fine class. The winner is a splendid mover. Owner drove the winner and Mr. Gordon drove Mrs. Hoggs' turnout.

CLASS XXXII.—Best Horse in the Show.

Col. A. A. Jones' b a h Godfrey.

Judges.—Mr. C. E. Murray-Aynsley, Captain Badcock and Nichol.

CLASS XXXIII.—Best Pony in the Show.

Capt. A. K. Heyland's g a g St. Martin.

Judges.—Mr. C. E. Murray-Aynsley, Captain Badcock and Nichol.

BANGALORE DOG SHOW.

Thursday, 20th August, 1908.

THE Annual Dog Show came off to-day on a vacant piece of ground on South Parade to the west of the United Service Library, a very central locality for the Show as a function by itself. It was hitherto run in conjunction with the Horse Show, but there was a rumour at the time the latter was being organised that there would be no Dog Show this year. A few dog fanciers, however, determined not to let the matter drop, with the result that to day's Show was one of the best if not the best Dog Show we have had in the station. Mr. V. E. Mocatta of the 14th (King's) Hussars kindly undertook to pilot the Show and that he did it admirably there can be no two opinions. On Mr. Murray-Aynsley (of Coorg) and Conductor Elliot (of the Oossoor Remount Depôt) devolved the onerous duties of judges for the entire Show and their self-imposed task was neither an easy nor enviable one, as the dogs sent in for competition were most of them of such a high class that it was not without some difficulty they were able to separate the winners. The arrangement for kenneling and benching the dogs were excellent, but there might have been a little more elbow room allowed the public for moving about the place. The Band of the 14th (King's) Hussars, by kind permission of Colonel E. D. Brown-Synge Hutchinson and officers of the Regiment, was present, and played an excellent programme during the afternoon. The Civilians of Bangalore were "at home" to their friends at the Show and the weather keeping fine throughout, everything went with a swing from start to finish.

The show opened and judging began at 8-30 A.M. and continued till about 11 o'clock. It was open again about 3 P.M. and went on till 6 o'clock. There were not many visitors in the morning, but the afternoon saw a big crowd, the Hon'ble Mr. Stuart Fraser and Mrs. Fraser also being present.

A few remarks on some of the exhibits in each class, as I was able to gather from the Judges, than whom there were no more competent persons to speak, will be found interesting. Class I for fox-terrier dogs produced an exceedingly good lot, the greatest difficulty being experienced by the Judges in making their awards, the three of the best being really fine specimens of their class, with pedigress of note and previous records. The verdict was eventually in favour of the Raja of Pithapuram's South Cane Splinter, a verdict that was beyond criticism. In the same class for bitches, there was not quite so many competitors as in the dog class, but here even the Judges had their work cut out for them; the winner, D'Arcy Vanity, is a very fine specimen of her class. Mr. Ramshaw's Retort, the winner in the Irish Terriers stood out from the others a class by herself, although I understand she was looking much better when first imported. Class IV for Scotch Terriers attracted only a quartette and of these there was little to chose between Mr. Molloy's Gena and Mrs. Russell's Jock, the former winning on points. Pure bred terriers (not included in the previous classes) was another small but choice class, the winner, Mrs. Stephen's Australian terrier Sandy being a very smart and showy little dog. Nine dogs were benched in Class X, Ladies' Pet Dogs, under 17lbs., and a really fine show they made. Mrs. Stephen scored in this also, her Australian bitch, Mrs. Sideways, taking first honours, while Mrs. Stuart Fraser's Pekinese pug dog Li Ching was second. The next event was for any variety of purebred dogs, not previously classed. A very mixed lot was entered for this and the Judges' capabilities were taxed to their utmost in selecting the winners; finally they found in favour of the same pug (Li Ching) shown by Mrs. Fraser in Class X. The Bull-dog class did not fill at first, but a few post entries brought out a truly typical lot, the winner, Camden Nell being a very fine specimen. There were five entries in Class XIII for "Any other Variety—Hound," the winner outclassing all other competitors, a matter on which Mr. Elliot, is to be congratulated as he well deserved to win with such an animal as White Brilliant. Tommy Atkins as a rule manages to get hold of some very good dogs, at one time or another during his sojourn in "India's sultry clime" and in most cases he is also a good judge of the "right sort." This being so, it was not surprising to find the class set apart for him filled so well. There were close on two dozens of all sorts of breeds and sizes and the Judges had a pretty stiff time in looking over their points. The winner turned up in a pure-bred fox terrier, Chrys, the property of Sergeant. Hampson, 14th Hussars, which was far and away the pick of the bunch. Second honours fell to a rather good specimen, a Mexican sand dog, a good tempered lively little fellow, rejoicing in the name of Jumbo and to whom many of the visitors took a great fancy Class XV was another Variety Show, in which a half-bred greyhound with a very sporting look took first prize, a half-bred bull-dog gaining the second. Class XVI produced a game lot of puppies, D'Arcy Cackle and D'Arcy Vanity from Mr. Elliot's kennels, taking both first and second honours. The Extra Class attracted a fair lot, Bahiri gaining the first prize easily.

It was a little past 5 P.M. when the prizes were distributed by Mrs. Stuart Fraser. Following are details of the card :—

THE CUCKOO IN SONG AND LEGEND.

THE Indian koel or kokila, like its English cousin, the cuckoo, is the harbinger of the beautiful season of spring. It also displays several of the peculiar and striking characteristics of its European relative. Thus, the female of the species popularly known as the Indian or common koel, almost exclusively deposits her eggs in the nest of the common crow and more rarely in that of the carrion crow and, as a rule, she destroys the eggs of the crow at the time of depositing her own. She is also known to occasionally select the nest of a babbler, but in general, only one egg is placed in each nest. The species known as the hawk cuckoo, which is the common cuckoo of the plains and is distinguishable by its loud crescendo note, mostly lays its eggs in the nest of the shikarah, but I have had an authentic instance of an egg having been deposited in the nest of a bulbul and of the latter bird bringing up its foster-child. Indian children derive a considerable amount of amusement by imitating the koel's call. At first, the bird does not take the mimicry amiss, but answers note for note, each succeeding response being more vigorous. Eventually, however, the bird seems to realise that it is being insulted and it thereupon becomes sullen and silent or flies away from its mimics.

The cuckoo is the theme of innumerable pretty and amorous poems in Sanskrit and vernacular literature. There are also several proverbs which have the cuckoo for their central idea. A Hindustani proverb has it that the cuckoo is the black crow's wife, while a Tamil proverb runs: "Like the voice of the cuckoo and the beauty of the peacock." In Malabar the hawk cuckoo, which, as is known, is the brain fever bird of the Europeans, is the subject of a pretty and fanciful superstition. The natives liken one long-drawn note in the bird's call to vernacular words signifying, "start together." The belief is that the bird is the messenger of the deity who presides over a celebrated forest shrine and who sends it forth with a message to intending pilgrims to assemble for the annual festival, which takes place just about the burst of the south-west monsoon, the season corresponding with the passionate period of the bird's mating time. A popular legend has it that a Malayali woman lagged behind while her folk were starting for the festival, because she wanted to feast off a dish of sweets before setting out, and that this so enraged the deity that he transformed the woman into a cuckoo and ordained that the bird should thence forth warn all pilgrims to set out together on the annual pilgrimage, none to linger behind or to loiter by the wayside.

The cuckoo is associated in Indian songs with the season when the mango tree is in blossom. One poem, rendered freely into English, would run thus :—"The crow is black, the cuckoo is black, then what is the difference between the two? When Vasanta (spring) is here the crow is a crow and the cuckoo is a cuckoo." The literal significance is that each may be distinguished by it note. In Sanskrit, the term parabhrit, meaning nourished by a stranger, is applied to a cuckoo, and Kalidas, in Sakuntala, in the act wherein the hero Dushyanta denies the paternity of the child about to be born to the heroine, launches forth into a scathing reproach against womenkind, citing the cuckoo as an example of feminine dexterity and deception. The female kokilas, says the poet, before they fly towards the firmament, leave their eggs to be hatched and their young nurtured by birds who have no relation to them. Kalidas perhaps was not aware of the full extent of the cuckoo's dexterity and cunning as revealed in the latest English theory that the female cuckoo is "parasitical" with regard to numerous birds, and that the cuckoo egg is alike in colour with the egg of the bird in whose nest it is deposited, which would mean, of course, that cuckoo eggs may be found of almost any colour or tint.

"I—ER—WISH to look at some false hair," said the embarrassed young lady.

"Very well, miss," rejoined the diplomatic salesman. "What shade does your friend wish?"

"Is he very ill?" asked the Mormon's wife. "He is," replied the family physician.

"Do you think it proper that I should be at his beside during his last moments?"

"Yes. But I advise you to hurry, madam. The best places are already being taken."

"I 'VE got a first-aid certificate," said the young man, elbowing his way through the crowd; and the manner in which he plastered the head of the man who had jumped off the motor-bus commanded admiration. "Now," he said, when the plaister gave out, "there is nothing serious with the back of your head, but keep your eye on it."

"Thanks," responded the patient; "but I've just done one somersault."

MRS. DASHAWAY: "Yes, while we were in Egypt we visited the pyramids. They were literally covered with hieroglyphics." Mrs. Newrich: "Ugh! Wasn't you afraid some of 'em would git on you?"

Solution to Problem No. 69.

A's 6 of spades is either a singleton or the top card of a short suit. Y should put on the ace and lead a club. Z will make two tricks in clubs if the ace is with B, and must utilise Y's small trump to ruff diamonds. If the king of clubs wins, he will then lead a small diamond to the king, return the 10, and give dummy a ruff on the third round. After this he will lead a second club through B. If A wins trick 2 with the ace of clubs, and leads a trump, Z must put on Y's ace, and ruff a club or a diamond as before. The above method of playing the hand affords a fair chance of going game.

BROOKLANDS AUGUST MEETING.

SOME 4,000 people, including Prince Francis of Teck, witnessed a magnificent struggle of two of the highest power cars at Brooklands on Saturday, the first day of the August meeting. The race was won in the last lap by only sixty yards, at the record average of 101½ miles an hour, eight miles faster than Nazzaro's time. The defeat of the favourites was another feature of the day.

With thirty-five cars of all powers, ranging from Mr. C. J. Bertelli's 7-5-h.p O.T.A.V.—in which the back of an office chair and a punt cushion did duty as a racing body—up to Mr. F. R. Fry's 76-h.p. Mercedes, the opening event, the Fourth All-comers' Handicap Sweepstakes, was run in three heats and a final.

For the first heat Mr. O. Cupper's Metallurgique "Gollywog" was temporarily disqualified, so the scratch car, Mr. Fry's Mercedes, was made favourite at 5 to 2 against, and was so resolutely driven by Resta that it was fast catching the others. But after passing the bridge the second time the steering gear went wrong, and Mr. C. Hobson's 27-9-h.p. Nagant-Hobson (2mins. 6sec. start)—about which odds of 10 to 1 could have been had—won by 150 yards from Mr. C. A. Bird's 54-5-h.p. Mercedes (1mins. 34secs.), which beat Sir G. Abercromby's 58.1-h.p. F.I.A.T. (1mins. 4secs.) by 300 yards and Mr. M. L. Braithwaite's 17-h.p. West by over a mile.

The second heat revealed the blot on the handicap, for the limit car, Mr. Charles Jarrott's 6-2-h.p. Sizaire-Naudin (4mins. 24secs.), driven by Louis Naudin, won at a speed of fifty miles an hour by nearly a mile and a quarter from Mr. H. Taylor's 20-1-h.p. Clement Talbot (2mins. 24secs.); Mr. A. C. Godwin Smith's 22-4-h.p. Certus (2mins. 36secs.) and Mr. G. C. Colmore's 14-7-h.p. Humber (3mins. 6secs.) being respectively 400 yards and 60 yards behind. An objection was laid to the winner, but was not sustained on re-measurement.

The most sporting finish was seen in the third heat, for although Mr. P. C. Kidner's 20-5-h.p. Vauxhall (1min. 56secs.) led all the way to the fork, Mr. J. E. Hutton, on Hutton "Little Dorrit" (42secs.), came with a great rush and won by 200 yards from Mr. B. M. Thornton's 22-h-p. Ford, with 300 yards between Mr. O. S. Thompson's Austin "Pobble" (1min. 28secs.), and Mr. G. A. Phillip's 19-6-h.p. Humber.

Mr. Braithwaite's West was the only absentee in the final, which ended in a runaway win for the Sizaire by about a mile, with a close finish between the Nagant-Hobson, Hutton "Little Dorrit," and Mr. Colmore's Humber.

Betting: 7 to 4 on Sizaire, 3 to 1 agst. Hutton "Little Dorrit," 6 to 1 Nagant-Hobson, 10 to 1 all others.

The great event of the day was the second Montagu Cup race of thirty miles, for a trophy valued at £260, presented by Lord Montagu. Six cars were entered—59-6-h. p. Mercedes, driven by Pyne; Mr. H. G. Burford's 76 h. p. Mercedes, Lane; Mr. Hutton's Mercedes, also of 76-h. p., owner; Mr. D. Pigot's Darracq "Delilah"; Mr S. F. Edge's 90-h. p. Napier "Samson," F. Newton; and Mr. Fry's 59-6-h. p. Mercedes.

Mr. Burford's grand looking car was quickly made favourite at evens, with 6 to 4 taken freely about the Napier, 3 to 1 Resta's Mercedes, and 4 to 1 Mr. Hutton's car. Lane, however, got first away from a good start, and for the first three laps the large white Mercedes led easily. On the second lap the Darracq went all amiss and stopped, and Mr. Hutton's Mercedes, after running well up to this point, was also stopped with carburative troubles. New Newton began to run up, and waged a ding-dong struggle with Lane's Mercedes, and finally drew just ahead on passing the fork on the fifth lap.

By this time the issue was seen to lie between this pair only and although Newton on the green car kept just ahead, there was nothing to choose between either until the last turn into the straight. Then Lane made his last effort, swerved, burst a back tyre, and so just failed, for Newton won the finest race ever seen on the Brooklands track by only 2½secs.

Then came a most interesting event, the Merit Trophy for privately owned cars; but it was won fairly easily by the limit car. Mr. Scantlebury's Sizaire-Naudin (8mins. 21sec. start), with Mr. Nalder's Berliet-Grayling (42secs.) and Mr. Hobson's Nagant-Hobson (1min. 6sec.) separated by the same distance—about 100 yards.

Betting: 10 to 1 Sizaire and Nagant-Hobson, 3 to 1 Berliet-Grayling, and 5 to 2 Mr. Levich's Napier-Perrier.

Mr. R. V. Beveridge (the Queen) on a Sizaire, was favourite for the Journalist' Handicap at 6 to 4 with Mr. Bertelli's O. T. A. V. next at 2 to 1. Both, however, were badly beaten by Mr. Flateau (of The Daily Mail) on a 19-6-h. p. Belsize and Mr. W. Whittall (Motor World) on an 8-h.p. Rover, the O.T.A.V. being third, half a mile behind.

The meeting was concluded on Monday, the 3rd instant, Bank holiday, and was, unfortunately, marred by a terrible tragedy, a mechanic being hurled across the River Wey from a car while travelling at about 100 miles an hour, and killed instantly. The driver escaped with only slight injuries. The accident occurred in the 100 miles race for the first O'Gorman trophy, an event which allows the use of any auxiliary motor fuel, such as compressed oxygen or acetylene. There were six starters in the race, and in the twenty-sixth lap the number was reduced to five through the overturning of Mr. S. F. Edge's 60-h. p. Napier. The chauffeur and his mechanic, however, alighted on soft sand and escaped with bad bruises and cuts. The fatal accident was caused by Mr. H. G. Burford's 76-h.p. Mercedes, driven by C. Lane, who had with him a mechanic named Burke.

Lane easily led at the start, getting away at a terrific pace, but half-way through he stopped to replenish supplies. Making up for lost time, the Mercedes went away again at a speed of 100 miles an hour.

In the twenty-eighth lap, when close to the spot at which the accident had occurred to the Napier car, Lane caught up Mr. J. E. Hutton, who was driving Little Dorrit, his own Hutton car.

Lane shot across in front of Hutton like a lightning streak, but the pace was too great. Before he could right himself the Mercedes leaped from the track towards the River Wey, snapping off clean a telegraph pole in its flight. Then bounding on the ground again, the car shot the two men a distance of about 100ft. through mid-air, right from one bank to the other of the River Wey.

Only by a miracle did Mr. Hutton escape a terrible collision with Little Dorrit. In addition, a party in a punt, passing along the river at the time, narrowly escaped disaster, as the two heavy bucket seats were shot from the car and splashed into the bed of the river close to the punt.

The engine also left the body of the car, falling by itself close to the water, and the horrified people in the punt saw two bodies and the various parts of the car flying over them.

A rush was immediately made to the opposite bank by means of punts, and the two unconscious men were found in the long grass.

Lane, the driver, was partly conscious, and, an ambulance party arriving, he was quickly conveyed to the clubhouse.

A medical examination of William Burke, the mechanic, showed him to be dead, and it is extremely probable that he was killed outright.

The Mercedes caught fire after the crash, and was soon a charred wreck of twisted ironwork.

A gloom was cast over the whole meeting by the accident, and a match between Mr. Edge and Mr. Jarrott, for which both had weighed out was abandoned. Details:—

CYCLING.

LANDS END TO JOHN O'GROATS.

To Mr. Harry Green belongs the honour of having accomplished one of the greatest cycling feats of the day. I had only time last mail to give you the bare result—837½ miles (unpaced) in 2 days, 19 hours, 50 minutes, over all sorts of roads and gradients with the wind certainly not favourable and often dead against him, in the night and under a strong sun. Marvellous! A veritable triumph of man and bike over time and matter. Marathon races notwithstanding, in feats of endurance the Briton still holds sturdy sway.

Think of what this means! We who regard fifty miles as quite a long run, and a whole day's cycling as something to be boasted about, can scarcely realise all that is demanded to keep in the saddle day and night for nearly three days. Three times the sun set and rose over the hardy Englishman who sped swiftly towards the north.

The Land's End to John o'Groats record has always been most coveted amongst the heroes of the wheel. The first effort was made, we believe, in the early eighties, and consisted more of a tour than a record ride, the time taken being something in the vicinity of a fortnight. No thought was there in those days of riding day and night without a stop. Gradually the time was lowered, pacers were introduced, and then came that wonderful ride when the record breaker went to sleep on his machine when within a few miles of his goal.

Last year the record was reduced to three days and a quarter, and twice again this year it has been lowered, the last time being as recently as a week before Green's ride, when it was, for the first time, brought within three days, the actual time being two days, 22hrs. 42mins.

Green rode a "Raleigh" road racer fitted with a Sturmey Archer Tricoaster. The Tricoaster is an innovation of this year, by which in addition to the three speed gear, a coaster brake is also included in the hub. By means of this the rider is given the most perfect control at all times and greater advantage can thereby be taken of the high gear and the greater speed it allows.

The whole mechanism is carried on ball bearings, even to the small pinions within the hub, making the most perfect piece of machinery which has yet been introduced into the bicycle.

It was at 8 A.M. on Monday, the 27th July that the record-breaker set off from the Land's End Hotel, checked away by Mr. F. T. Bidlake, himself an old record-breaker of fame, now the chief timekeeper of the Road Records Association. Mr. Bidlake's task is to take the time at the start and the finish of these rides, while the association has an elaborate scheme of checking arrangements all along the route, show that the ride can be thoroughly verified. Mr. Bidlake had to make the best of is way by train to John o'Groats, travelling viâ London, Edinburgh, and Inverness, and it is interesting to note that he could only arrive at the northern extremity of our island a few hours before the man who was cycling all the way was due. If the cycling record is cut much finer it will be necessary to employ a swift motor car to convey the official timekeeper.

The start was made under promising auspices, and Green soon began to show his calibre over the Cornish hills. The first hundred miles is one of the most trying portions of the course, hills being plentiful, but Green kept well up to his scheduled pace of eighteen miles an hour.

At Exeter came his first halt, a twenty minutes stop for refreshment, and then away again on the long journey towards Ultima Thule. Over the splendid road to Taunton he made good time, and the shades of night were just falling as he entered Bristol for his second refreshments—this time involving only a ten minutes' stay.

Well within record he started from the capital of the west country on the night journey to Bridgnorth. The road was clear and in excellent condition, and the lonely rider swept on northward with a steady swing that augured well for success. In the cooler night air the run was more pleasurable than in the heat and burden of the day. Through Gloucester he ran at midnight and thence northward by the historic battlefield of Tewkesbury whose ghostly memories seemed so strangely incongruous with the spectacle of the modern cyclist out a-record breaking. Worcester and Kidderminster were passed while the inhabitants were gently slumbering, heedless of the man steadfastly making his way to the north till Bridgnorth was reached with its twenty minutes' halt at the Falcon Inn for refreshments—282 miles from the start.

The sun was now up, and Wellington was passed, and thence followed a splendid run through Whitchurch and Tarporley to Warrington.

Crossing Manchester's famous ship canal into Warrington, Green had his next halt for refreshment in the town of the wire-workers, preliminary to the notoriously bad stretch to Wigan. For the 12½ miles he had allowed himself 50 minutes, an indication, in itself, of the character of the road.

But once Wigan and its memories of the coalfields had been left behind there came a fine run northward through Preston, although the heat was now having some effect on Green.

By mid-afternoon he had passed John of Gaunt's town, and Lancaster thus saw the first four hundred miles of the journey completed.

The sun was beginning to sink over the waters of Morecambe as he ran steadily on towards Kendal, beginning to pick up as the keen airs of the fells became appreciable. The little Westmoreland town was reached at twenty past five, practically half the journey being now complete in 1 day 9 hours and 20 minutes—good enough to show record in sight.

With a twenty minutes' halt Green braced himself with some refreshment for the long climb over Shap Fells, one of the most trying portions of the journey. For the first half-dozen miles he had a spell of steady climbing, with an occasional break, and then began the long climb to Shap Summit. Travellers by the North-Western route to the north have had experience of this—how the railway authorities send their coupled engines panting up this tremendous climb, the monsters of the rail working their hardest on an ascent which is famous as one of the steepest gradients in the kingdom.

Ten miles from Kendal he had climbed 1,700 feet, over a road that was none of the best, and here the Sturmey-Archer gear had proved its advantage. Up the long climb of the last two miles, in particular, the low gear proved a great assistance, especially in enabling the rider to conserve his strength for the day and a half still in front of him.

Then came the long sweep down into Penrith, and past the great woods of Lowther the record-breaker swung at racing speed, the high gear now assisting him to take the utmost advantage of the gradient. Night was falling as he entered Cumberland, and along the level, but somewhat bleak road, to Carlisle he sped at a pace not far short of twenty miles an hour.

A twenty minutes' stay at Carlisle, and then he stole away into the night for the Border, and Scotland. Over the Sark bridge he ran into the northern kingdom, flashed past Gretna like the ghost of some lover of the past, through Ecclefechan, where Carlyle sleeps (what would the sage of Chelsea have said of the modern record-breaker?), and over a perfect surface to Moffat, where, shortly after midnight, he rested for a few minutes for the last refreshments ere he should reach the Scottish capital.

And now came seven miles of steady climbing, the road rising a thousand feet, with scarcely a break on the whole rise. Then mile after mile of downward swing, where the high gear gave pace, and the Raleigh bounded forward like a living thing until finally the white buildings of Edinburgh loomed up in the morning sun. Three miles more to Granton, where the ferry was waiting to take him across the Firth of Forth. Landed on coast of Fife—that kingdom of itself of which Fife men so proudly boast—he made away at once for the fair city of Perth, the gate of the Highlands.

For the next thirty miles there were many sharp rises, themselves a severe test, and frequently a strain in their unexpectedness. So far the road had been good but it gradually deteriorated to the steep rise through the Pass of Killiecrankie, to Blair Athol, where Green made his longest halt—twenty-five minutes for a square meal ere entering upon the severest portion of his task, the crossing of the mighty Grampian mountains.

The ascent lasted for nearly twenty miles. Sometimes the road was little better than a grass track, at the best it was rough, and trying, and only the Sturmey-Archer enabled him to accomplish the task of climbing in comparative serenity. A run along the mountain tops and then a glorious downhill rush of fifteen miles through a bracing Highland air to Kingussie, reached soon after midday.

But there was no time for rest, and the man who had now been riding for more than two days went steadily on across the moors, heading for Inverness. The road was in fair condition, and the final descents were accomplished in good form, the cyclist travelling steadily and well up to his schedule.

Twenty minutes at Inverness for a much needed meal and then the last stretch, perhaps the most severe of all, seeing that it comes at the end of nearly 800 miles of record riding.

Night had fallen, and interest was keen as to whether Green would accomplish his task, for although within record, this last seventy miles, to be ridden in the middle of the night, afforded a supreme test. The last run from Golspie to John o'Groats is the Stadium of the end-to-ender. More than once a man has reached Golspie in record time and failed on the last stage.

The first seventeen miles to Helmsdale would discourage many riders, for the road is full of steep pitches, which present many dangers in the darkness of the night. But Green meant to secure that record, and trusted to his Raleigh to bring him through. Swinging round corners, now climbing short ascents, now swooping down into the vales, he went steadily on to Helmsdale for the last and greatest trial of all, the climbing of the Ord of Caithness.

The stoutest heart might well quail before this ordeal. For four miles the mountain lies in front, the last guard of the record route.

Once over the summit, however, Green dropped into Borriedale, the last mile affording a splendid test to the merits of the brake of the Tricoaster, which brought him safely down the gradient of one in nine and round the famous dangerous turn in perfect safety.

Another steep climb for a mile, and then a roughish run to Wick, prior to the last sixteen miles to the destination.

To the John o' Groats hotel Green came up, finishing with a sprint, the timekeeper's watch clicked, and then with extended hand he congratulated Harry Green on having beaten the record from Land's End to John o' Groats by 2hrs. 52mins.

And it was no fainting athlete who finished. Naturally tired, of course, he was, but chiefly hungry. His first request was for breakfast, and there is something essentially British about that. How much of the strength of Britain is due to the fact that her sons have been blessed with good digestions and the ability to thoroughly employ them!

MOTOR-CARS AND THE PUBLIC.

ALL classes of the community in the United Kingdom are seriously concerned about the alarming increase in accidents due to the mad craze for speed on the part of reckless motorists. All over the country indignation is expressed at the wanton disregard of public safety by "road hogs," and thoughtful motorists are among the first to admit the pressing necessity for fresh and well-weighed legislation to check the evil. In the first week of August no fewer than six fatalities occurred in England and Wales alone. Of course the blame did not rest in every case on the motorist, but still this death roll gives one cause to think. One of the fatalities occurred on the Brooklands track during a hundred mile motor race, the victim being a mechanic on one of the competing cars. At the inquest the Coroner for West Surrey, Mr. F. G. Roumieu, who is himself a motorman, criticised strongly these motor speed contests. Doubtless if there is any racing to be done it is advisable it should take place on tracks reserved for the purpose, where the competitors can kill only themselves. The point, however, was made by Mr. Roumieu that this racing has the effect of encouraging irresponsible motorists to go faster than they have any right to go, and he characterised it as a degenerate kind of sport, akin to bull fighting in Spain. Mr. Roumieu's remarks have aroused a considerable amount of attention. Those who agree with him argue that as a motor-car is built for use on the roads no possible good is attained by manufacturing machines which can travel at ninety and a hundred miles an hour and that, moreover, the ability to steer a machine going at this speed is not merely useless but actually harmful, in so much as it furnishes perpetual temptation to surpass the limits consistent with the public interest. Mr. Harvey Du Cros, whose large interests in motor manufacturing entitle his views to consideration, has declared himself emphatically on the humanitarian side of the question. His impression is that spectators at Brooklands do not regard the racing in the spirit of sport, pure and simple, but that they are attracted by the possibility that something exciting might happen in the way of an accident. "I call," he says, "motor racing at a hundred miles an hour a brutal sport." On the question whether the Brooklands racing provide experience which is useful in effecting improvements in motor mechanism Mr. Du Cros is of opinion that the tests are abnormal and are not of the least assistance to motor manufacturers. On the other hand, many men engaged in the trade express the view that the evolution of the motor-car is largely indebted to Brooklands. For instance an important result obtained by Brooklands experience is the production of lower powered cars. Last year a 40 h.-p. car obtained a speed of eighty miles; this year the same speed can be attained by a 25 h.-p., which points to a great improvement in control. Last year the Grand Prix was won by a car of 76 h.-p.; this year it was won by a car limited to 60 h.-p. These results, it is contended, could not have been obtained but for Brooklands. Then, again advertising is the life and soul of the motor trade, and there can be no doubt that the Brooklands meetings do stimulate the interest in motoring. It would appear that the best way is to let Brooklands work out its own remedy. There are fatal accidents in horse racing, polo and hunting, but nobody expects these sports to be stopped, and why, it may be asked, should motor racing, so long as it is confined to special tracks, be selected for interference?

The abuse of the King's highway is, however, altogether a different matter, and the gravity of the subject was fully recognised recently in both Houses of Parliament. Mr. Long who, as the author of the Motor Act, speaks with the authority of official experience, introduced the subject in the House of Commons. He claimed that motor-cars as at present used constitute not only a great discomfort to the public but a great source of danger. Mr. Long condemned the speed limit which was inserted in his Bill by the House very much against his own wishes. There is much to be said in favour of Mr. Long's contention that the speed limit is no real protection to the public, while it is vexatious to motorists by imposing a restriction which in many circumstances is quite unnecessary and fails to discriminate between a considerate and an inconsiderate driver. Mr. Long maintains that the proper duty of the police is to put down inconsiderate and reckless driving without regard to pace. Ten miles an hour may be dangerous in one place, while forty miles an hour may be safe in another, and the man who goes at forty miles when it is safe may be the most careful not to go so fast as ten miles an hour when it is not safe. Mr. Long's solution of this part of the queston is—have no speed limit but hold every motorist responsible for the harm he does, and for the perils he threatens to the public by reckless driving. Mr. John Burns took a strong attitude on the matter. He told motorists that they would be well advised if they realized that public opinion was hardening considerably against the man who owned a motor-car and drove it under conditions, and at a speed, which was not in accordance with the neighbourly and kindly amenities that ought to exist among all travellers on the roads. While Mr. Burns' department is unwilling to interfere directly he intimated plainly enough that motorists must put their own house in order or have it done for them. We are glad to see that in the House of Lords Lord Montagu of Beaulieu pointed out that if the Government intended to bring forward any legislation on this subject they ought to be very careful indeed. At the present moment the motor industry is by no means in a very flourishing condition in the country and any really drastic legislation as Lord Montagu remarked, would affect a large number of workers, and a very large amount of capital and would strike a serious blow at a great and growing trade.

It is a hopeful sign that motoring associations are taking steps to check the "Road Hog." Colonel W. J. Bosworth, the Chairman of the Automobile Association, which numbers nearly 10,000 members, and Mr. Stenson Cooke, Secretary, are in comunication with the chief motoring authorities on a plan of united action. The Scottish Automobile Club, too, have resolved to take strong action. They have arranged to co-operate with the police, and have appointed special agents to take the times of cars in conjunction with the police and to support the police in the prosecution of offenders. This is a an excellent attitude to adopt and it should go a long way towards eliminating reckless drivers, while it will tend to convince the public that the main bulk of motorists are entirely on their side.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

It was on the whole a fortunate thing that there was no racing in Calcutta last week as the rain fell almost continuously on Thursday, Friday and Saturday and the conditions would have been extremely unpleasant. The going is at present worse than it has been at any time during the monsoons but it looks as if we are in for a spell of fine weather now for a few days and in this case it ought to be pretty good by Saturday though the hurdle course is a good deal cut up in places. The entries are very promising. The September Plate (6 furlongs) heads the list with 25, Third Amateur Hurdle Race 20, Mediocre Handicap 19, Amateur Pony Hurdle Race 16 and the Plassey Plate and Second Handicap Hurdle Race 12 each. Of these there are 17 duplicates, making a nett entry of 87 or an average of 14·5 in each race. The September Plate will be divided and probably also the Third Amateur Hurdle Race, making another 8 event card.

There was a fair amount of pace work done on the track on Tuesday morning but no fast gallops. A certain amount of schooling was also got through. Matsumata went round on her own in good style. Comprimil and Clodian galloped over six flights together; the former went badly at first and lost a lot of ground at the jumps but improved later and took the last two hurdles in good style. Merry Elsie and a bay ran the whole course, the mare going very rockily and in her worst style. Yulgibar did a bad school by himself over two flights and refused a third in very determined fashion.

Mr. Corbett has purchased Queen of Hearts, to replace Myolene who has hurt herself, and will ride her in Amateur Hurdle Race on Saturday. Mr. J. D. Scott's Kathleen II. and Yankee Boy have arrived in Calcutta and will probably run regularly in the remainder of the Monsoon Meetings. We hear that Mr. Levi Glance and Mr. J. Harper have taken the bungalow and stables at 36, Old Ballygunge and will shortly fill the stalls with a number of race horses, etc.

Another good Australian horse has been bought for India, writes "Pilot" in the Sydney Referee, Mr. J. Samuel having on Saturday last, disposed of Mooltan to Mr. R. Baldock, who was acting on behalf of an Indian client. The price has not transpired, but as an offer of 2.000gs. for the son of Positano was refused after the last Melbourne Cup it is safe to assume that the figure at which he changed hands was a considerable advance on that. Bought for £500 as a three-year-old Mooltan made his first appearence in a six-furlong welter at Rosehill, running second to Athol Nelson. The following month he won a mile welter at the same track, and was subsequently unplaced in the Doncaster Handicap and Sydney Cup.

The following season he commenced by easily winning the Spring Handicap, 1¼ mile, with 7-10, at Tattersall's meeting at Randwick, and in consequence advanced to a very short price for the Metropolitan, which was supposed to be his special mission. However, at the last moment an offer of 3,000 to 60 tempted his owner to have a cut in for the Epsom Handicap, but though his form at Tattersall's meeting, combined with his subsequent track doings, made that race look a certainty for him, Mooltan was beaten a head by Melodrama. Then he was sent out favourite at 5 to 4 for the Metropolitan, but his run on the first day had taken a lot out of him, and he only struggled home a short head to the good of Apologue, who was carrying 8-7 to his 6-13. I do not suppose on private form a big race ever looked a much greater certainty than the Metropolitan did for Mooltan, and yet he escaped defeat by the narrowest margin.

Taken South for the Melbourne Cup, some of the critics would not have him at any price at the last moment, on the score that he "hadn't done enough." H. Rayner was of a different opinion, and the result proved that the horse's trainer knew more than his critics, as, though Mooltan was beaten, it was only after a great race with Apologue, whom he was meeting 24lb. worse than when a short head separated them in the Metropolitan. Though a five-year-old, Mooltan has only started eight times in all, so that he should be good for at least two or three more seasons on the Turf. He is doing remarkably well, and though always a good stamp of horse, he has improved so much in appearance since last spring that he is now one of the finest-looking horses at Randwick. When he is to leave Australia I cannot say, but for the time being he is to remain in H. Rayner's charge at Randwick, and as it may be rather late to take him to India with a view to the coming Viceroy's Cup, I should say the fulfilment of some of his Australian Spring engagements is a certainty.

We know something of diminutive horseflesh in India, but our bazaar tats are almost gigantic when compared with the pigmy ponies of Iceland. These freak animals are just now a fashionable craze in England and America, and dealers are being put to it to supply the demands of their wealthy customers for the "lap ponies" as they are called. They certainly are interesting, are said to be companionable, and some even aver that they are quiet and tractable enough to be allowed in the house! We read that "they are naturally most careful in their movements and plant their feet with a dainty precision a cat would hardly improve upon." The ponies are of various sizes, from 27in. high, and about the build of a Newfoundland dog, to 31in. For their size they are capable of a great deal of hard work, and they will follow a child about just as a big dog might. There is something wistful and appealing about them; some of the sadness of the wastes of snow and memories of starvation seem to cling to them still, however rich may be the stable in which they have their quarters.

Jamrach, the wild animal dealer, who practically controls the "lap pony" market in England, told a reporter the other day that they are not real pigmies but are examples of stunted growth. The Iceland ponies are an average size, but owing to the sparse pasture and trying climate of the sterile country, in which they pick up a hazardous existence, the breed is gradually growing smaller. But they are very hardy, and the process of degeneration is a slow one. The exceptionally small ones only occur, so to speak, in small numbers. Like the tattoo of Lower Bengal, they are the product of many hundreds of years of degeneration.

"The smallest I ever had," added Mr. Jamrach, "was twenty-seven inches tall. Mr. Alfred de Rothschild bought it.

"The ponies are certain to remain rare, because if bred under improved conditions of climate and pasture they would 'throw back' and increase in size like the diminutive cattle of India, which get as big as the sacred cow in a few generations of comfortable living.

"I could sell as many of the ponies as I could get," said the famous dealer, "but they are difficult to obtain, and up to now I have only secured 400. The competition with America has also become very keen of late."

The price of the ponies runs from £12 to £15, according to size and quality. For the smallest

The Entries for the Autumn Handicaps reached me, writes our London Correspondent, but an hour or so before the Indian Mail closed last week, so I was unable to comment on them. At the moment the issue of the entries for the Cesarewitch (run October 14) and the Cambridgeshire (run October 28) forms a topic rather of conversation than of betting, and no doubt the usual amateur handicappers will be issuing their ludicrous anticipations of the weights, due on 3rd September. The Cesarewitch has done well with eighty-three entries, but the Cambridgeshire much better with ninety-seven, Mr. J. B. Joel is the principal contributor to the Cesarewitch, he naming Menu, Pure Gem, Dean Swift, Your Majesty and Royal Dream, while Mr. Rothschild puts in four—Radium, Mesmer, Tsu Shima, and Santo Strato. The White Knight is here, and a bit of a surprise packet in Hammerkop. The Derby third, Llangwm, finds a place, as does that old impostor, Noctuiform, and last year's winner, Demure. A large proportion of the eighty-three entered would, to get the course, need a rest half-way.

In the Cambridgeshire Mr. J. B. Joel comes out first with Pure Gem, Dean Swift, Your Majesty, Elmstead, Portland Bay, and Garnock, while Mr. Sol Joel subscribes with Eider, Procope, and Poor Boy. As everyone expected would be the case, Stick Up is named, and he, Malua, and Land League can fight last year's battle afresh. Mr. Luscombe, who won the race with Marco, has nominated Marcovil, a son of Marco, and class comes to the race by the naming of White Eagle, Hayden, Acclaim, Succour, Ebor, Llangwm, Rhodora, and Pillo. In view of the fact that they may meet in the St. Leger, some interest will attach to the handicapping of Perrier and Your Majesty, who met at Ascot. They run at evens at Doncaster.

The idiotic anti-betting legislation in the United States has doomed racing in that quarter of the globe. Leading turfites, after months of futile struggle against the law, have now given it best and declare that horse racing on any extensive scale is dead in America for the present. It is not surprising to find Messrs. James R. Keene and A. Belmont are preparing to cut the game in the States and in future race altogether in England.

Mr. Belmont has for years had a number of horses in training at Newmarket, under the care of Mr. Leopold de Rothschild's trainer. His Norman III. won the Two Thousand Guineas this season.

Mr. Keene recently shipped twenty yearlings to England, where they were sold by auction; but it afterwards transpired that some of them were bought in. The Balaton Lodge stable is not a very large establishment.

The Joel-Sievier case had not been quite forgotten when the last received mail left London: a few correspondents still continued to make a little "copy" out of it. Thus the well-known writer "Spearmint":—

I do not think that any member of the general or racing public venomously desired the non-acquittal of Mr. Sievier. He was called upon to rebut a serious charge, and succeeded. But because a man is acquitted he is not necessarily either a hero or a demi-god. Let that fact sink into the public mind. Mr. Sievier was not a hero or a demi-god before he was arrested; and he was neither the one nor the other when the Lord Chief Justice gave official cognisance of the jury's verdict by informing him, "You are discharged."

The irony of the situation arises from the fact that, so far as I can see, Mr. Sievier has never done anything for the turf. He certainly bought Sceptre; and quite as certainly he sold Sceptre after she had won him thousands of pounds. He also bought Duke of Westminster, and likewise sold him at top-hole price to Mr. George Faber. What in these incidents mark him off from other men? They are incidents of astounding luck, may be. But that is all. And as for any benefit, or dignity, accruing to the turf from the weekly publication he edits, I frankly own I have never been able to grasp that idea. But then, having passed the stage of calfish youth, perhaps I am not a fair critic of "near the knuckle" paragraphs.

Mr. G. Cooper, the well-known English Bookmaker who died at Brighton on the 7th August, did not long survive his partner Mr. J. Rowson. It is singular that both "died in harness" for Cooper collapsed at the Brighton meeting and died next day of diabetic coma.

A more amicable partnership than that between these two has never been known on the turf. Both of them hailed from the north, where Rowson was in trade before he courted and won fortune in the ring. Cooper was originally a stonemason, and he commenced as a layer by making a penny book on a waste heap in his dinner hour. He got on gradually, and it was to his credit that he improved himself with his rising fortunes. He dressed well, was uniformly polite, and had a fair knowledge of French, which he taught himself, and found very useful during his winter sojourns at Monte Carlo.

Rowson left a fortune of nearly £80,000. Cooper has always been looked on as the richer man of the two, and it would not be surprising to find that he has left twice £80,000 behind. The late Alec Harris, starting life with nothing but a charity school education, piled up nearly £150,000 during his career as a bookmaker, though his gains in the ring were probably augmented from other sources.

Consequent upon frequently recurring danger to valuable racehorses affrighted by motor-cars and other vehicular traffic driven at excessive speed, regardless of the ten-mile speed limit, as well as to the riders and attendants of the horses, a meeting of trainers was held at Newmarket last month to consider what steps should be taken to compel offenders to respect the bye-law. The Hon. George Lambton presided, and many other trainers were present. Mr. Wm. C. Manning, clerk of the scales and deputy-judge to the Jockey Club and other speakers pointed out that the Jockey Club Stewards, forty-one trainers, and other influential residents petitioned the Local Government Board to impose a ten-mile vehicle speed-limit over the urban district. The Board subsequently, after a public enquiry, granted a ten-mile limit over the principal thoroughfares. The speakers contended that this was almost universally disregarded by motorists, who even when passing strings of frightened horses too frequently took no notice of signals to stop or slow down; consequently horses had been injured, and one lad thrown and killed during the past few months. The police had been prevented from its enforcement by interested parties warning motorists of police traps. The police bitterly complained of this obstruction, which has, it was alleged, become more acute since the dismissal of a case against a motor scout for obstructing them in the execution of their duty by a bench principally composed of motorists. Of the twenty cases obtained in ten months under the limit, the bench dismissed two and imposed moderate penalties in others. The meeting decided to request the members of Parliament for the local constituencies to call the attention of the proper authorities to the necessity of having the speed-limit respected, and if the action of scouts interferes with police action, to take steps necessary to prevent a recurrence of such interference.

Probate was on Saturday the 8th August, granted out of the Principal Probate Registry of the will of Frederick Arthur, sixteenth Earl of Derby, of Derby House, Knowsley, Prescot, Lancashire, and of Holwood, Keston Kent, K.L.G., G.C.B., Lord-Lieutenant of Lancashire, who died on 14th June last, aged 67 years, and the gross value of whose own estate is £917,350, including personal estate of the net value of £752,140, but this valuation does not include the settled estate which passed in consequence of the death of the late earl, and the value of which will probably be assessed in due course at about £2,750,000. The testator bequeathed his thoroughbred horses, mares, and foals, and others kept in connection with his racing establishment upon trust for sale, and the proceeds are to follow the trusts of the settlements on his seven younger children, but his son, the present earl, is to have the option of purchase at prices to be named by the trustees, or may bid therefore at any auction.

Really the Yankee athlete and his egregious supporters, if they can't have the satisfaction of winning every time can, at least, console themselves with the reflection that they add to the gaiety of nations by their antics. We hear that Mr. James Sullivan, the American Commissioner for the Olympic Games, returned on the 7th August in the Cedric. Immediately after his arrival it was announced that a meeting of the American Amateur Athletic Union would be held in a few days to consider a motion to proclaim Mr. J. C. Carpenter, of Cornell University, who was disqualified in the 400 metre race for fouling Lieutenant Halswell, the real winner of the race, and to present him with a medal or cup signifying the American acceptance of the contention that he was the victor. Messrs. Baxter and Coursen, returning members of the New York Athletic Club, were loud in their complaint of the treatment of American contestants at the games.

Soon the only thing we shall be able to tolerate in the American will be his permanent abstention from participation in any gathering in which British sportsmen and gentlemen are represented either as officials or competitors.

On the 7th August, ardent anglers from all parts of London stood in admiration around a table in Lower Clapton. Upon it rested a giant golden scaled King Carp, which had been caught in the River Lea the previous afternoon by Mr. L. J. Childs, a member of the committee of the Anglers' Association.

"It is far and away the largest fish of its species ever hooked in the Lea," declared Mr. A. H. Sinclair, secretary of the Clapton Fly Fishers and the Walton and Cotton Anglers' Association. The carp was officially weighed and measured. The figures were :—

Length	...	30 inches.
Girth	...	20 „
Weight	...	15lb. 10oz.

"Several expert anglers have told me to-day that this fish, judging by its extraordinary size, may be 100 years old," said Mr. Childs.

Describing the catching of the fish, he said : "It fought and struggled up and down the river for forty-three minutes before I could land it. In one fierce rush down stream it drew twenty yards of line off my reel. In a second dash it broke the top joint of my rod, but I still held it, although I was only equipped with a light fly-fishing rod and a thin reach line. Then it sulked at the bottom of the river for a spell. When it suddenly rose to the surface and sprang clear of the water I saw what a monster it was.

"The most exciting moment came when, after over half an hour's vigorous playing, I brought the big fish close to the bank. My companion stood ready with the landing net, but when he got the fish into it the weight was so great that the handle of the rod broke, and we were in imminent peril of losing our catch. Fortunately, we managed to clutch the ring of the net, and so got the fish up the bank."

A GENTLEMAN residing in Stocksfield caught a small trout about three inches long some years ago, and decided to keep it.

At the back of his garden was a natural spring; he put the fish into a tank so arranged that the water was always running, and it is there to this day. It has grown to a good size, and is quite tame.

When he visits it in the morning, he calls, and it rises to the top of the water, and lets him feed it.

Very strange to say, when a stranger comes near, it disappears among the rocks, and will not come out. The only chance his friends have of seeing it is to stand behind the tank out of sight, and watch him feed it. I do not know, adds a correspondent of the Countryside, whether it recognises the gentleman, or the sound of his voice; but, judging from this, fishes as well as animals must have the instinct of knowing those who are kind to them.

ACCOUNTS reach us of wholesale slaughter of elephants such as would have delighted the heart of Baldwin or Sir Samuel Baker whose operations against these animals were conducted on a scale which often laid him open to a charge of wanton destruction. It seems a Boer farmer named Viljoen and eight others of the same kidney recently secured a bag of eighty-one elephants in the Lomagundi district, Rhodesia. The Government has just thrown the district open for the destruction of elephants, and this enormous bag was made within sixty miles of the capital of Rhodesia, and near the railway.

Viljoen and his party pitched their camp at Maquadzio, the centre of the elephant district, and divided up into pairs—a fact which nearly led to a fatality. For going through the bush Viljoen encountered his first elephant, which he shot. As this fell another one crashed through the trees at the back of the hunter, and pursued him, once striking the horse with his trunk, until Viljoen succeeded in reaching clearer ground, where he found himself thirty yards ahead of his pursuer. Slipping off his horse, he fired at the elephant, and killed it.

One of the party named Eloff was added to the bag by a careless comrade. Eloff and three companions paired off, and walked at a distance of about fifty yards apart, when Eloff and his friend suddenly saw two elephants. They fired, but only succeeded in shooting off a tusk of one of the animals, who promptly charged them. Eloff made in the direction of the men in front of him, and they, seeing the beast crashing through the bush behind them, and ignorant of Eloff's whereabouts, fired at the elephant, and while one bullet despatched the elephant, the other found a billet in Eloff's neck, killing him instantly.

The party came back to the Transvaal the richer for 2,000lb. of ivory and seven young elephants. The first one was captured when half grown. It was feeding with four grown elephants, all of which were shot, and then the little one, instead of running away, made for the hunters, two of whom seized its tail, while the two others hung on to each ear, and there was a tussle for half an hour, after which the elephant was rolled on its back and its feet tied with the horses' reins. It was then fastened to a tree, and the next day driven into camp. After a day or two it became so docile that its attentions were rather a nuisance, for it tried to tread on the hunters' toes, helped itself to all the available food, and would put its trunk into the cooking-pots and take out anything it fancied, while it would follow the native, down to the stream for a drink.

On the record day twenty elephants were shot and two little ones captured ; Viljoen's unaided efforts accounted for eighteen of the twenty slain.

MR. VIVIAN NICKALLS, the famous English sculler, had his boat smashed up while practising on the Connecticut River last month. In the middle of a spurt he crashed into the pier of a bridge, broke the shell all up and had a good ducking, being eventually hauled out of the river by two boys who were out rowing.

ON Saturday, the 8th August, the death occurred of Mr. T. Bowring, of the Oxford Eleven. He died of blood poisoning. Learning the game at Rugby Mr. Bowring gained his blue at Oxford last year as a Freshman. He was chiefly known as a bastman, but in the University match in July he proved himself a good slow bowler with a distinct swerve. His heighest score was 228 at Oxford in the spring.

WITHOUT a doubt the "Sealy" season has set in at the London Zoo, where the other day a "real novelty" quick change Irish Seal set the scientists a puzzle—and subsequently provided the solution itself.

It appears that a month ago or thereabouts the "Zoo" received a parcel, bearing the postmark of a remote place on the Atlantic seaboard of the Irish coast.

It contained a highly intelligent seal with vivacious, expressive, and talkative eyes ; and, according to its keeper, it appeared pleased to be "in town." The point about him, however, which pleased the Fellows of the Zoo, was that he had a skin of virgin whiteness, "unspotted from the world."

So much was this in his favour that he was given a special house in which to accustom himself to the hurly burly of the "Zoo's" patrons.

It was considered too precious to be harried about by a Bank Holiday crowd, and its nerves might have been upset by a shower of buns and monkey nuts, so it was shut up last Monday and fed delicately on prime fish. After a day or two's regal seclusion its creamy complexion seemed rather fly-blown—even dirty—so it was given a swim to clean it up.

After its bath no improvement was apparent, though the common seal in the pond regarded its dimmed glories with a puzzled stare.

Next morning came the downfall. "How's the white seal?" inquired a keeper tenderly of his mate. "There's no white seal. It's turned black."

And so it had. It had shed its coat of cream in masses of fluff, and underneath was the mottled, dingy livery of the despised "common seal."

THE following crew will represent Poona at the forthcoming Madras B. C. Regatta :—(Bow) Captain A. L. Paris, R. E. ; (2) Captain J. Cunningham, I.M.S.; (3) Mr. A. D. S. Arbuthnot, R. E. ; (stroke) Mr. A. K. Graham ; (cox) Mr. Mills, Somerset L. I.

THE Calcutta Rowing Club propose to hold another regatta on the Alipore canal on Friday and Saturday, the 25th and 26th instant. The programme is as follows :—

Class Fours. ½ mile on slides. A semi-open race in which each crew must belong to the same profession. At least two members of the Club to row in any one representative boat.

The "Power Challenge Cup." ¾ mile in Carvel Skiffs.

Mixed Double Sculls. Lady stroke, and gentlemen bow. Lady cox optional. ¼ mile in tub slides.

Canoe Race. 220 yards.

Junior Tub Pairs. ¼ mile on slides, for Members who have never won a Tub pair Race or a "Fours" Race on slides. Lady cox optional.

Novice's Sculling Race. ¼ mile in Clinker Boats, for Members who have never won a sculling Race.

THE date of the Simla Championship Dog Show has been changed from the 26th to the 25th September.

THE Bombay Rugby Football Tournament ended last Saturday, the West Ridings beating the Royal Scots by five points to three, in the final.

MR. STRACHAN, a Sylhet planter, recently met with a serious accident while out shooting and now lies in a precarious condition. While following up a wounded tigress in company with Messrs. Anderson and LeMesurier, he was charged and pinned by the animal. His companions killed her but not before Mr. Strachan had been very seriously mauled. His injuries necessitated the amputation of one arm and one leg.

THE following are the results of the important cricket matches held in England during the last week :—

Nottinghamshire beat Sussex by 183 runs.

Warwickshire beat Derbyshire by an innings and 59 runs.

Gloucestershire beat Surrey by ten wickets.

The match between Somersetshire and Yorkshire was abandoned.

Kent beat Middlesex by 117 runs.

The matches between Middlesex and Essex, Somersetshire and Surrey and Sussex and Yorkshire were abandoned.

Gloucester beat Hants by 4 wickets.

Lancashire beat Leicestershire by 235 runs.

Kent beat Philadelphians by four wickets.

Derbyshire beat Northamptonshire by 129 runs.

MESSRS. D. and W. HENDERSON and Co., LD., launched from their Shipbuilding Yard at Meadowside, on Monday 3rd August, a large steel screw steamer for the Indian Service of the Anchor Line, of the following dimensions :—Length, 440 feet ; breadth, 53 feet ; depth, 32·6 feet moulded, with a gross tonnage of 6,200 tons, and a deadweight capacity of 8,600 tons. The vessel, which has been built to the highest class of the British Corporation, will be fitted with triple-expansion engines, the cylinders being 29½, 49, and 81 inches diameter, with 4 feet 6-inch stroke and will have three large double-ended boilers working to a pressure of 180lbs. There will be ten powerful steam winches, one of them, with warping ends, being placed on the poop for facility in handling the vessel in port. Everything possible has been done to enable the vessel to load and discharge large cargoes with despatch. All holds and 'tween decks are fitted with longitudinal girders supported by four vertical tubular pillars in each compartment.

The 'tween decks are unusually lofty, being 10 feet in height. The petty officers, cooks, and stewards will be accommodated in the topgallant forecastle, which is 48 feet long, and the crew in the poop, which is also 48 feet long. The bridge deck extends to 156 feet, under which the engineers are berthed, and the remaining space is available for cargo or coal. The captain and officers will be berthed abaft of the navigating bridge on the boat deck. Superior accommodation has been provided on the bridge and promenade decks for 90 first-class passengers in two and four-berth state-rooms, which are exceptionally large and airy. These are painted enamel white, and are furnished with everything conducive to the comfort of passengers, including electric fans.

At the fore-end of bridge deck the saloon is placed, which is a spacious apartment. The woodwork is entirely of polished oak of light shade, with white plaster ceiling. The furniture is also of oak. From the saloon a handsome double stairway leads to the music-room on the fore part of the promenade deck. This room is panelled in mahogany, enamelled white, the panels being decorated with artistic mouldings, and the ceiling covered with plaster of suitable pattern. This room will also be used as the ship's library, and be furnished with the necessary bookcase, also piano and writing tables. On the after part of the promenade deck is the smoking-room. This apartment is panelled in polished mahogany. The upholstery work is in moquette, and the ceiling is covered with plaster. From this room there is a special stair leading down to the accommodation on bridge deck.

Both music and smoking-rooms, in addition to sidelights, have large skylights for light and ventilation. A nursery has been provided; also special accommodation for Ayahs. The vessel is fitted throughout with electric light, including a searchlight for navigating the Suez Canal by night. An insulated chamber for storing meat, vegetable, and fruit has been provided, the refrigerating machine being placed in the engine room. As the vessel left the ways she was named "Elysia" by Miss Julia Henderson, The Castle, Ludlow. The "Elysia" will be despatched from Glasgow and Liverpool on her first voyage to Bombay in September, and will be commanded by Captain Haig, late of the "Circassia." She is expected to make the passage in 22 days.

FINE weather practically throughout the week in Poona saw at last a fine day's racing, eight events, a big attendance and ideal going. The Books had a bad time of it and matters were made worse in the mile Arab Consolation Plate. In this Remembrance was in prime demand from Dhamas and Changiz till a rush on Brigand made him favourite. Brigand and Ashroff fell away when it came to racing and left Changiz with a substantial lead, but in a great finish Remembrance just beat him a head on the post. Mr. Ali bin Talib put in an objection for short weight but withdrew it. Seeing this Bleach on behalf of Mr. Mathuradass objected, Balmoral having run fourth. It being upheld, the Books found themselves in the position of having to pay out cash on Remembrance and Changiz.

ACTUALLY first on the card was the six-furlong All Pony Consolation Plate which found Minnie a 3 to 1 on chance. She streaked away by a clear four lengths and all seemed over, but on reaching the distance she was literally left standing by Russley Rose, who won pulling up.

THE Maiden Plate was divided, in the former Muddaries was a warm favourite in a field of sixteen, but ran nowhere, the winner turning up in Murzook, who held Narsin and Farick safe. Sixteen again went for the other with Jehangir at evens, Viceroy twos and a grand race was seen. The former passing Hishan led going well into the straight till Viceroy came after him and after a desperate finish won by a short head.

FIRST of the Little Arab Consolation Plate saw Little Joker rather better fancied than Betty. Whereas, the former got a bad start, the latter led out from Fantom. At the distance Little Joker was perhaps a nose in front going the best of the three, but failing to answer was half a length behind Fantom, who was a head behind Betty. The other was a really good thing for Happy Land, who started at odds on and never looked like losing, leading all the way, with Gaucho and Jalmood dead heating behind.

A GOOD lot were seen out in the Horse Consolation Plate of seven furlongs, ten starting. Uro was first favourite, though a great rush on Mr. Jiji's three-year-old English gelding, Bucolic, brought him to twos; the Books taking no liberties with Metal Boy. The race was a runaway affair, Bucolic streaking away and winning in a canter by five lengths, The Master two lengths in front of Metal Boy and Uro. Bucolic is a troublesome animal to train, but his first race promises a future. Mumford's new boy, Whalley, rode and won his first race in the country. He has a good seat and should do well.

IN the Welter Consolation Plate the news of Mannlicher's gallop soon got abroad. Killorn put up the ten-pound penalty and came in the easiest winner of the day from Meerdhan and Transfer dead heating.

THE decision of the Stewards is now pending about an objection against Betty. It is, I understand, not a matter of short weight but probably concerns ownership.

THE Devon Regiment are once more at the head of the Rangoon Football League. The tournament ended last week with the Devons and the combined team of the 77th and 52nd Batteries R.G.A. tying for first place. A deciding match was played on Tuesday last, the Devons winning a fast and well contested game by a goal to nil.

London Week by Week.

FRIDAY, 14th August 1908.

EVER since Wednesday the rush to the North has been incessant. Eager London sportsmen have been flocking to the Scottish moors by special train loads and are tramping the heather at the moment I pen these lines. Excellent prospects were assured some time ago and judging from the reports already to hand there is a certainty of a really fine season. The birds are reported to be healthy, though later than usual in consequence of the cold spring, and the only danger to be feared for the partridges is the prolongation of the drought. Some warm rain is badly wanted to save the birds from gapes, but otherwise reports from all parts show that the birds are strong and plentiful. Pheasants, it is said, have done remarkably well and the prospect is also good for hares. Wherefore let us rejoice; at least those of us who can get shooting. Your envious scribe meantime must possess his soul in patience and extract what solace he may from the pleasures of reminiscence. Alas! for the days of the snipe jheel, the grasses and the churs, when khubber was correct and one's hand and eye were in. Give me an ideal October day among the long-bills in Lower Bengal, or a day's mixed shooting on the Bareila and the adjacent grasses; others may have their grouse and welcome.

It is interesting to note that sportswomen this year will be more than usually numerous and, is it permitted to add, dangerous? Some have won fame on the moors, but the majority, I believe, have only learned to shoot during the last few weeks at shooting schools. I wonder, Mr. Editor, how some of these fair Dianas would shape alongside of your mighty huntresses, Lady Jenkins, Mesdames Reg. Murray, Lawrie Johnson and others whose straight shooting and big game bags have oft been recorded in your columns. But in England this "guns for women" movement (taken in conjunction with other things) is, says a contemporary, "distinctly alarming."

I DO not suppose many of your readers have followed the Mile End Guardians' case very closely. But there are just one or two points about it I think worth noting. Ten rascals, ranging from a J. P. and an ex-Mayor to a pork butcher were charged with corruptly using their official positions to enrich themselves by robbing the ratepayers in collusion with their building contractor, one Calcutt. This man, who was the chief witness against them, is atoning for his own share in the conspiracy by a sentence of six months' imprisonment. He was allowed systematically to charge excessive prices for work, and he shared the plunder with the guardians.

The trial lasted twenty days, cost £17,000, and ended in the conviction and sentence of the whole ten, nine of them to fine and imprisonment (hard labour for two years and £250 in the case of Alderman Rowland Hirst, J. P.) and one—the pork butcher—to a fine of £250 only. The fines amounted to £925. There is a chorus of approval at the heavy, but not too heavy punishment inflicted on the gang. The luckless jurymen have been excused from further jury service for twelve years.

THE Moody-Manners Company, who begin their season at the Lyric next Monday are preparing most attractive bills, and deserve to succeed. When one comes to think of it, the absence of a permanent grand opera in the biggest city in the world is wonderful. We go on producing little armies of singers; the taste of the public is improving year by year; and yet we are indebted to Society for our glimpses of grand opera, and that, too, in any language but our own. Moreover, the gap is filled by Ireland, for Mr. Manners is Irish to his finger-tips, with all the histrionic talent of his race and all their splendid optimism in the face of discouragements that floor other men.

The novelties of the season will include "The Meistersingers," given in English for the first time by Mr. Manners. Opera takes a long time to travel our way. Wagner's humorous masterpiece was first performed at Munich forty years ago. It took fourteen years to come to England, and it was not till 1896 that Carl Rosa introduced it to us in English. Mr. Manners is also to re-introduce Meyerbeer's "Star of the North," which is fifty-four years old. Perhaps the most attractive item in his more recent repertoire is "Madama Butterfly," which has the immense advantage of being already known to us through a prose version.

THERE is no other theatrical gossip this week likely to interest you save, perhaps, the announcement that the Drury Lane drama, by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, those past masters in the art of catering for Drury Lane audiences, has been delivered to Mr. Arthur Collins for full rehearsals. The recent fire at this theatre has resulted in nothing but good, for the catastrophe enabled them to effect many notable improvements and "the Lane" now boasts a stage which for space and equipment is probably unrivalled. The drama deals with the marriage and divorced question now running so strongly in the D.T. and its treatment is rather more social than ethical. Your readers may care to have a brief foreword. A man of good family has married a dancing girl whom, presently, he is anxious to discard, mainly with the idea of joining his fortunes with those of a titled lady. Unable to obtain a divorce in this country, he seeks and obtains relief in a land where divorce is made more easy than among ourselves. Returning to England he weds the woman of his choice. In process of time a son is born who would, under normal conditions, succeed to the title. As it happens, no one up to the moment of his father's death is particularly concerned to test the youth's claim. Eventually, however, opposition comes from an unexpected quarter, that of Lord Adolphus Villiers, Nigel Villiers's uncle, a disreputable, out-at-elbows, and unscrupulous person, who is suddenly awakened to the true facts of the case. A Drury Lane hero dispossessed of his estates and reduced to a state of penury at the fall of the final curtain is, of course, an unthinkable thing. How, then, is Nigel to be established in his title and his property? That, for the time being, is the authors' secret; still, we are given the assurance that they have found an extremely ingenious way out of the difficulty, and of thus providing their piece with a happy ending. The modernity of their plot is further evidenced by the fact that the scene of the first act is laid at Rumpelmeyer's, in St. James's Street, where we are introduced to a crowd of fashionable people, familiar figures in the worlds of society, of sport, and of the higher finance.

BELONGING to that section of the travelling public whose experience of the festive tripper and week ender does not dispose them to regard favourably the extension during recent years of the cheap ticket system, I rejoice to note that the reaction has set in and the railway companies are beginning to recover their sense of proportion. The first to seriously consider the important step of "trying back" is the Brighton Railway Company who, at their last meeting, passed a resolution to the effect that the cheap ticket system had been carried too far and ought to be very considerably reduced. The resolution was moved by Mr. Roxburgh, a shareholder, who quoted figures to show that the working expenses of railways advance about half as fast again as the gross receipts, and asserted that the time must come when the former would outstrip the latter, and then there would be no net receipts and no dividends. He asked the directors to come to an agreement with the London and South-Western Company to increase the price of week-end tickets, to substitute for cheap day tickets other tickets available for three days and charged for at week-end rates.

"ADVANCE AUSTRALIA." One is reminded of the cry after recent visits to the Franco-British Exhibition where the antipodean colonies are more than well represented; by the fine block of buildings—destined for Australian Offices—now going up in Aldwych, and by the enterprise which will soon deprive frequenters of the Strand of the well-known and well-beloved Adelphi Restaurant, known as "The Marble Halls," at which two Italian brothers, Agostino and Stefano Gatti, laid the foundations of a great fortune in the early eighties, is to change hands.

By the end of October it will be transformed into the offices of the Agent-General for Queensland, by whom the premises have been acquired on a thirty-five years' lease. The upper floors of the restaurant will be employed as executive offices, while the spacious ground floor and windows will be used as a permanent exhibition of the products of Queensland.

The brothers Gatti came from Italy to join their uncle, Carlo Gatti, who kept a modest eating-house in Hungerford Market and was probably the pioneer of the a la mode beef speciality. But they were more ambitious. They acquired the Adelphi, and provided their patrons with velvet couches and marble topped tables. In 1879 they were running the Adelphi Theatre. The Adelaide Gallery Restaurant came under their control and in 1892 they acquired the Vaudeville Theatre.

Agostino Gatti died in 1897 a millionaire. His brother Stefano lived until October 1906, and was succeeded in the business by his two nephews.

WHILE the temperance brigade are shrieking for the abolition of strong drink some people have been asking what is to take its place, for people will have something we know. The reply is "Oxygen," if we are to believe some of the daily papers. It seems that many people in London—a great many more than we suspect—have long since substituted oxygen for alcohol and inhale it regularly as a body and mind stimulant. Somehow the idea of an oxygen "peg" doesn't move me to enthusiasm, particularly when I recollect that the inhalation of the gas would make me live too fast and materially diminish whatever chances I may have of reaching three score years and ten. West End chemists declare that scores of men and women are now regularly supplied with cylinders of oxygen just as others have their syphons of wines and spirits. Society people take it before dinner or other entertainments to brighten themselves and enliven their conversation. Soon we may expect our hosts to say, "Will you have a sherry and bitters or vermouth old chap, or do you prefer a whiff of oxygen," while the post-prandial suggestion of "just another cubic foot of gas before we join the ladies" will be heard as often as one relating to our best '54 port.

I AM not quite sure whether I referred in my last letter to the will of the late Earl of Derby. Details were available last Saturday when probate was granted. The gross value of the estate is £917,350, including personal estate of the net value of £752,140. Of course this does not include the settled estate, the value of which will probably be assessed at something like £2,750,000. Big figures aren't they?

Some of your readers will learn with regret of the death, at Lowestoft, on the 4th instant, of Captain Frederick C. J. Loder, late 82nd Regiment and A. P. D. He saw service in India years ago.

REMINISCENCES OF SOME LEOPARD HUNTS.

II.

THE last on the list of Indian leopards is felis pardus. The range of this feline is very extensive. It is to be found as far east as Japan and its habitat stretches westwards to Africa. Not many years ago discussion was rife among sportsmen in general whether the panther and the leopard could be classed as springing from one and the same species. In the Himalayas felis pardus is invariably spoken of as the leopard whereas in the Deccan and in Southern India this cat is usually termed the panther. Pelts from both extremities of the Peninsula disclosed certain differences in colouring and in the arrangement of the rosettes, but it is now admitted among all zoologists that the leopard of the Himalayas and the panther of the Deccan both belong to the species felis pardus. Black and white specimens of this feline have been obtained from time to time, but naturalists concur in the opinion that such abnormalities are merely varieties of the same species, the white examples being of far less frequent occurrence than the black types. There are many ways and means of circumventing the leopard, by this is meant sportsmanlike methods, such practices as the setting of traps, the laying of spring-guns, the poisoning of carcases, etc., etc., have never been recognised by the writer.

About twelve years ago destiny directed my footsteps to the hill station of Ranikhet in Kumaon in which salubrious spot a residence of 2½ years was enjoyed. In this vicinity the opportunities of pitting one's cunning and testing one's patience against the wiles of these felines were not wanting, though the results were hardly in proportion to the energy and money expended. Some rival hunters from the neighbouring cantonment of Chaubuttia proved far more successful in their efforts to get the better of the numerous leopards that infested the environments. In these two cantonments the hunting of felis pardus was taken up as a regular business by some keen sportsman. A native shikari was entertained on a monthly salary of Rs. 10 with the promise of a substantial reward in the event of a leopard being slain. From the ridge on which the station of Ranikhet is situated deep ravines sear the hillsides, many of which are clothed with dense verdure. It was not an uncommon circumstance to find of a morning the pugs of one of these marauders crossing and re-crossing the flower beds in the compound. One evening a small foxterrier was lying on the edge of a stone dyke at the extremity of a garden surrounding a somewhat isolated bungalow. There was a short sharp struggle and the wretched victim came howling back into the house with its life-blood pouring from the fang holes in its throat. Such a piece of feline audacity could not be passed over unnoticed. Two of us therefore combined in a resolution to bring about by hook or by crook the destruction of this depredator. Accordingly a goat was picketted out in an adjacent ravine. For many nights this robber did not again attempt any pilfering, but one fine morning the joyful news of a kill was brought by my companion's henchman. Duty had called my brother sportsman temporarily into Almora, but as his plans had been so arranged as to bring him back to Ranikhet that very afternoon, etiquette demanded that I should wait till the last possible moment in order that we might share the excitement. When the clock pointed to 5 P.M., further delay if success was to be expected, might prove disastrous. On this particular occasion two fatal errors were committed. At one spot the watercourse bifurcated, the angle at the wedge being about 45°. The kill had taken place in the northernmost branch, but sporting scruples forbade me sitting up over another man's legal spoil. A live goat was therefore tethered out in the southern fork. The usual platform was erected. Soon after the vigil had commenced I heard my fellow sportsman arrive. This separation of our forces was a grievous mistake as subsequent events too surely proved. Another fault has yet to be registered. For some reason now forgotten, the shikari was permitted to share my place of ambush. The goat settles comfortably down and seems not to heed in the slightest degree its sequestered situation. As dusk creeps on apace the bait suddenly jumps to its feet, and stands with every muscle rigid, staring spell-bound into a clump of bushes in the bed of the ravine only a few paces distant. I feel positive that the object of my pursuit is crouching in that thicket ready to make the death-dealing spring. A nudge at my ellow causes me to glance back over my shoulder. At that crucial moment a shadowy form flashes out of the scrub, the smooth bore is raised but before aim can be taken the leopard has once more disappeared from sight with an agility scarcely imaginable. It was a moonless night and the darkness became stygian, so much so that goat, rocks and bushes were totally indistinguishable in the murky gloom. About 9 P.M. I decided to abandon the quest, so descended from my perch. My companion resolved to continue the watch with the aid of a powerfully reflecting lantern. Soon after my departure the leopard slew its victim and carried the carcase down the bed of the stream. Previous to creating this murder it had returned to its meal of the evening before. Its chest once came within the radius of the lamp light, but its courage failed. On the following evening we made a good bid to rectify the blunders described above. The remains of my goat were located, and we each took up a stand on opposite sides of the gully behind a screen of boughs, but though the grating cough of our arch enemy was heard rasping out its unmelodious notes, now here now there, showing that it was "ringing" the spot, yet it feared to face the suspected danger, and we were perforce obliged to beat a reluctant retreat, acknowledging defeat.

Revenge, though belated, was achieved at last. A year had come and gone since the occurence of the events just described. Duty had removed my erstwhile brother in arms, but his gap had been filled by another sportsman equally keen but less experienced. One gay morning our worthy henchmen brought in the news that both our goats had been killed in practically the same spot which marked the tragedy of the year before. It was purely a matter of luck which of us would get the shot. A full moon shed a bright refulgence over nature's carpet. The conditions were entirely in our favour, and we had mutually agreed that if the necessity arose nothing shot of dawn would bring us off our perches. About 9 P.M., when thoughts were floating in the misty paths of memory, the discharge of my boon companion's ·12 bore nearly knocked me off my seat with its intensity and suddenness. A gurgling and pain fraught snarling showed that the aim had been true and a second bullet silenced all the pother. The quarry proved to be a fine male measuring if my memory serves me right 7 feet 2 inches as it lay on the ground.

It is a fully established fact that leopards as a general rule do not get scared by the light of a lantern suspended over a kill. On one occasion a leopard had victimized one of my goats about ¼ mile off the main Ranikhet-Almora road and about four miles from the former place. On arrival at the fatal spot I discovered that my follower had erected my retreat about 50 yards from the carcase. As this would preclude practically all hope of securing the beast after dark, there being no moon, and as there was no spare time in which to change my platform, the best plan under the circumstances was to illuminate the environments of the kill.

Some considerable time before darkness had fallen the short alarmed bark of a cervulus muntjac indicates that "spots" is early aprowl.

A path leads direct to the carcase from the right and it is from this direction that the resonant notes of the little rufus skinned beasts are emanating. For another half hour the gaze eagerly scans the forest alley, but no spotted head is seen peering from out the bushes and the hope of a shot before dusk gradually but surely dwindles. Heavens! There he is.

The person who has never sat out alone in quest of dangerous game while the gloom of coming night begins to envelop the surrounding forest glades in its ever thickening pall cannot realise the quiver that shoots through every nerve far quicker than dull thought when phantomlike the quarry appears apparently from nowhere. No sound or sign heralds its approach. There is nothing to indicate that death is lurking within the space of a few yards. From the time that the image first strikes the retina till the impression has flashed to every extremity of the human frame can be compared in rapidity only to an electric current along a wire. Ghost-like the shadowy form of the huge cat has loomed out from a quarter least expected. With what extreme caution the feline advances those last few steps to its mangled victim. The ground is smelt, the bordering branches are nosed, and a keen glance is shot swiftly to right and to left, but the gluttonous gaze returns to the carcase, and with a purring gurgle the beast glides up to the kill offering a perfect shoulder shot. The smooth bore is raised. With luck in a second the echoes of those wooded aisles will be reverberating with the death roar of the savage brute. Click————bang ————A silent spectral form hurls itself into the night. For a few seconds I remain as if spellbound, but realising the while that yet another miss has to be recorded. What a chance thrown to the winds! But the fault lay not with the hand or eye. The aim was true enough, but the cap in the base of the cartridge had hung fire with the consequence that the firearm was discharged as it was being brought down from the shoulder. The shikari after the allotted time has expired comes up eagerly and hurriedly, but my face tells its own tale without the necessity for the use of any words and disappointment is plainly reflected in his own countenance.

There was one leopard in particular in this neighbourhood which had successfully defied all comers. On the Ranikhet-Bhim Tal road and about 15 miles from the former station stands the resthouse of "Khairna." To the back of this traveller's bungalow rises a rocky hill scattered over with large boulders and covered with low scrub. From this coign of vantage "spots" was accustomed to watch critically all movements in the valley beneath. A bolder beast could hardly be imagined. When at dinner many a favourite dog has been snatched up from the outer verandah from under the very eyes of its doting master. Though this feline was imbued with unwonted audacity yet it was furthermore gifted with an abnormal amount of cunning.

A goat picketed out on the hillside was doomed to a violent death within a very few days. But food being plentiful, after the primary gorge, which frequently consisted of the entire carcase, this renowned robber would never pay a second visit at the recognised hour. The writer expended many goats in an endeavour to slay this depredator but success was never achieved. On one occasion the shikari went to visit the kill as late as 11 A.M. in order that his majesty might not be disturbed. But the very thing which he tried to avoid came about. The leopard was actually finishing its meal when my henchman arrived on the scene.

It is somewhat of a rare occurrence to happen on a leopard unexpectedly. These felines will always endeavour to effect an escape unnoticed if the opportunity offers.

One day in November a long ravine was being beaten for woodcock and more incidentally for Kalij pheasants. The right barrel was loaded with No 7 shot and the left with No. 4's. My following also consisted of two small spaniels. At one particular spot the dogs began to nose very cautiously along a trail advancing with considerable reluctance. A large and isolated clump of bushes occupied the centre of an open glade on the side of the ravine. The behaviour of the dogs was certainly peculiar, but thinking that a pheasant had run into this thicket, I encouraged them on the scent. When within about 12 yards of the fringe a round spotted visage suddenly framed itself in an opening in the foliage, and the anger expressed in its eyes shewed that it was on the verge of retaliation. The action may have been foolhardy, but it was pure instinct that sent the charge of No. 7's into the creature's face The result was satisfactory, for the beast shot out of the further side of the coppice giving vent to its rage in muffled snarls. Yet another instance comes back to my memory in which one of these spaniels was the means of my viewing a leopard. An expedition a few miles out of Ranikhet had been made in search of pheasants. In the gloaming we were returning towards the main road through some moderately open pine forest A conversation was being carried on with the shikari, which was unexpectedly interrupted by the vociferous barking of the dog. It did not take us an instant to face round. The unmistakeable whisk of a leopard's tail as he bounded round a bush was espied, but though we followed up for a space the cat had found safety in flight.

There were many of the residents of Ranikhet who considered that the game was not worth the trouble it entailed nor the extra expense. There is one thing, however, to be put forward in its favour. Such incidents as have been related above broke the monotony of life in a small hill station. There was no harm done to anyone and the experiences gained in the pursuit of felis pardus were of such a character that their utility cannot be gainsaid.

MORVEN.

A certain scribe went to Nero and said: "O Nero! I have heard a number of highly amusing and scandalous stories about you, which I am willing to refrain from publishing if you will pay me ten thousand sestertii."

"My friend," replied the tyrant, "I know a good many scandalous stories about myself, even more diverting than those of yours. I like your style, and shall be pleased to do business with you. I will sell them to you for five thousand sestertii."

And the scribe went away abashed, praised Nero in the public ways. For he knew that the Emperor was indeed a hot proposition.

"WHAT brought you here my poor fellow?" the settlement worker asked.

"I married a new woman, sir," the prisoner groaned.

"Aha! and she was so domineering and extravagant that it drove you to desperate courses, eh?"

"No; the old woman turned up."

Fishing.

OLD-FASHIONED BASS AND MODERN BAITS.

You must know something of the habits of the black bass to fish for him successfully, and this is particularly true in the case of the devotee of bait-casting who favours the use of the modern artificial lure. Given a lake or stream with bass therein, something more is necessary than merely getting into a boat or a pair of waders, picking out any old place that looks wet, and then sloshing a bait around for "general results." The small and large mouth bass spawn during the months of May and June, the exact time depending upon the temperature of the water. In water which has a comparatively high temperature the spawning time is prior to that of waters lower in temperature, and in rivers the bass spawn earlier than in lakes and ponds. The nest is guarded by the male fish, and for some time after the eggs have hatched the male guards the young fish. Small-mouths choose a gravelly bottom for building their nests, but the large-mouths sometimes do not discriminate in this regard. The spawning takes place in the shallows, and for some time thereafter, during the first days of the open season, the bass remain in moderately shallow water. At this time the bait-caster should use a surface bait.

When lake-fishing, parallel the shore with your boat or canoe, casting shoreward to the edge of the weeds, in the shade of overhanging rocks, about lily pads and fallen trees which project out into the water, and places of like nature. Find out where the bars are in the lake you are fishing and cast in to the edge of these. If the bar is a large one forming an expansive shallow place, perhaps, as often occurs, in the middle of the lake or well out in it, fish the whole of it. If you are fishing waters new to you by all means get some local angler or guide to locate the various bars for you. Once located you should take their bearings very carefully so that you can find them again. Looking for a lost bar in a big lake is an almost hopeless undertaking for the average angler.

At this time the water will be fairly clear of weeds and a surface bait can be worked close in-shore without fouling. In quiet bays where there are lily pads and flags, and the bottom has a tendency to be muddy, you will find the large-mouths. Off sandy bars and where gravel bottom predominates, or where the bottom is rocky, you may expect to find the small-mouth bass. The two often co-exist in the same pond or lake, and when caught you can easily differentiate them by observing the relative position of the angle of the jaw and the eye. In the large-mouth the angle of the jaw is perceptibly to the rear of the eye; in the small-mouth it is exactly underneath.

As the season advances the bass work out into deeper and cooler water. Now, except early and late in the day, when they may be feeding in the shallows, you should use an under-water bait. Locate the spring holes, for at this time bass congregate about these; and if there are shady places alongshore, where the water is of fair depth, try your luck there. For much success at this season you must go down to the fish. If you find the bait you are using is not successful put on lead and the chances are it will make a difference. An ordinary spoon is a good lure for this. When leaded it sinks rapidly and if not reeled in too quickly, travels at a good depth. It is a mistake to rely wholly, as some do, upon the surface baits. Undoubtedly they give more sport when the bass will rise to them than do the sinking baits. Often, however, it is time wasted to persist in using them. There are times when, as the fly-fisherman has reason to know, game-fish are not in a rising mood. As your boat moves along the shore you should whip the places which appear promising very thoroughly. One or two casts are sufficient for any one spot, but your next cast should not be more than three or four feet away. Sometimes a bass will only strike the bait when it is cast very close to him. This is particularly the case when they are lying in the weeds or lily pads close to the shore.

During September and October the water is gradually cooling and the bass are again to be found in the shallows. Most of the summer weed growths are dying down, the clouding effect of the summer "working" has passed away and the water is now pure and clear. All things considered, this is the best time for bass fishing, and especially so for the bait-caster. New life seems to have been imparted to the fish and they will rise fiercely and strike a floating bait with emphasis. At this time the surface lures are generally very successful and should be given the preference.

For stream fishing the above methods should be modified to suit the occasion. Wade wherever possible or, if the stream is too deep for this, use a canoe—the only craft for river work. Small-mouths "use" about the edges of rifts and in the pools at the foot of rapids; they are fond of lying in the lee of sunken logs, where there is a gentle current, and underneath shelving banks; you will often find them lying close inshore underneath overhanging trees or brush, and among submerged tree roots from which the river has worn the soil away. If there are large-mouths in the stream cast in the quiet coves where there are rushes and lily pads, and in the still, weedy reaches of the river.

During the middle of the day, unless it is cloudy and dark, casting for bass is love's labour lost; and even on cloudy days, often when conditions appear most favourable, fishing at this time is apt to be unsuccessful. However, when the weather is unseasonably cold, the midday fishing is sometimes the best. The early morning hours are most fruitful in nearly all waters, and the late afternoon and evening fishing is, other things being equal, always good. Under normal conditions bass feed principally early and late in the day. In the summer time, however, during the full moon, when the nights are still and almost day-bright, the bass feed during the night, and daytime fishing is usually very poor. For a good fishing day it is by no means essential that the sky be overcast and the conditions in general dismal. A gray day is a good fishing day, undoubtedly, but, in the writer's opinion at least, a bright, snappy day, with a good ripple on the water, is fully as likely to yield results. A bright, still day in the summer time, when the weather is hot, is no fishing day for the bait-caster. Deep-trolling with live bait is the only practicable method under such conditions. After the long continuance of a certain sort of weather, either bright or dark, dry or rainy, the fishing often falls off and then any change is a change for the better.

Minor weather changes are not liable to greatly affect the river bass. Running water, the varying conformation of the banks and stream bottom, the fact that due to the many turns and bends of the river the wind affects in a different way different stretches of the stream; these and other factors combine to keep the fishing fairly good under nearly all conditions. One thing the stream fisherman escapes which the angler in lakes and ponds annually has to contend with is the "working" or "blooming" of the lake, a condition which is the result of the maturing of the various aquatic growths. While this lasts the water is cloudy, filled with minute particles, and the angler is a skilful one who can make a good catch then. The river man, however, has to pay for his immunity from this nuisance in the susceptibility of the stream to sudden rises caused either by local rains or rains nearer the headwaters. When the rise is on and before the water has become roiled is a propitious time; it is, however, in the nature of a psychological moment; for although the fishing may be very good while it lasts, it lasts but a short time. Then it is a case of waiting for the stream to go down.

The black bass, either small or large mouth, is one of the most erratic of game fishes. Bass fishermen of long experience generally come to the conclusion that, no matter how well acquainted one may be with the waters fished and the customary habits and habitats of the bass therein, it is impossible for one to forecast with any certainty where the bass may be found or what sort of food, or bait, they may at any time prefer. Bass habits are in great measure a matter of locality. Not only will a bass taken from a certain lake differ in coloration, and sometimes slightly in formation, from one taken from a lake closely adjacent, but in the contrasted waters the habits of the fish will differ considerably. As has been suggested, you cannot do better when about to fish waters new to you than to rely upon the guidance of a resident angler. You may know more about bass fishing than he does, but he certainly knows more about the bass in "Long Pond" or "Twin Lakes" than do you.

Artificial baits for the black bass may be divided into two classes, surface and sinking. They may be further divided into two subdivisions, those which are useful and those which are useless. The latter sub-division is so large that separate discussion of each contraption is impossible. The really good artificials are not many in number and we will consider only the best of these. Beginning with the sinking baits, by far the best in my opinion, is the "rainbow" minnow of a certain well-advertised make. The coloration of this bait is green back, yellowish sides, and pink-to-white belly. It is fitted with three trebles which, as in the case of other lures, should be transformed to doubles. At first glance this minnow does not appear as taking as the "fancy back" of the same make, with green and white mottled back and white belly. However, considerable experience with both of them has convinced the writer that the rainbow is the better, although the fancy back is a good bait. The action of these particular minnows is very life-like when moving through the water, and they cast easily and accurately. They are extremely well made and coloured, and by this they may be known from inferior baits of similar design. The body material is cedar, and so weighted that they always run true. The spinners revolve in opposite directions, thus doing away with the necessity of using swivels, since the body of the bait does not turn. As a regular thing the rainbow should be preferred, but toward night or on very dark days a change to the fancy back, since its coloration is lighter, may sometimes be of advantage. The smaller size should be used. Phantom minnows are sometimes successful, and of these the blue-and-silver are the best. They are now made weighted for the purpose of bait-casting. If the bass are shy of the comparatively large wooden minnow a change to a small phantom is advisable.

The various spoons and single-hook fly-spoons or spinners are good casting baits and will catch bass when the minnows fail. They are best adapted to moderately short casts where delicacy is desirable.

If, however, you are a straight bass-fisherman and consider time wasted that is spent in hauling in pickerel, you will probably not wish to use spoons. The spoon has an especial attraction for pickerel, and they will often strike one when a minnow would escape. There is little or no reason for lengthy discrimination between "kidney shaped" spoons, "tandems," "hammered" and "fluted" spoons, and other ingeniously tortured, twisted and torpedoed spoons. Use a well-made spoon of the ordinary sort. A "buck-tail" will do for variety. And use small spoons. For stream fishing the fly-spoons adapted to a change of flies of the most favoured bass patterns are desirable items in the fishing kit. One thing is certainly true of the spoon baits. Although, as a general thing, they do not produce as many strikes as a well handled wooden minnow, they hold more strikes. Sooner or later a hooked bass is sure to jump and shake himself, and since the wooden minnow is stiff, rather heavy and with little "give," it affords a leverage which frequently results in its being shaken free. A bass will shake a spoon so that it rings, but the spoon generally stays with him. It is light, with loosely moving joints, and affords little leverage to enable the struggling fish to tear himself off the hook.

Passing over the fact that the coloration, construction, size and water-commotion of these lures are such that it considerably wrenches the conscience of an accustomed fly fisherman to use them—at first—it remains to be said that their capacity for catching bass is such that they assuredly need no apologies. They catch bass. The floating minnows are good in western and southern waters, but are rather large for the rivers and lakes of the East. It is not to be understood, however, that they are extremely unsuccessful in eastern waters. They are not. Still, it is a better plan to use one of the smaller lures. Two very successful surface baits have no spinners and do not create quite as much wake as the floating minnows. One of these is shaped not unlike a transverse half of a plum, and it has a feather tail and wings of felt. Its coloration is red and white, and its imitative purpose is two-fold, to represent an insect while in the air (on the theory that a bass starts for a bait while it is still in the air), and a minnow when in the water. It is a weedless lure and made in two forms for surface and under-water fishing. This bait should be used when the bass are lying close in-shore and among the weeds and rushes. The other, the better of the two, is plug-shaped, is red, white and blue, and depends upon a "collar" placed well forward for its attractive motion. The appearance of this lure is decidedly against it, but, like the proverbial singed cat, it is a great deal better than it looks. Of all lures this one is perhaps the most apt to arouse the pugnacious instincts of a bass, and his fighting blood will often cause him to rise to it when a more modest lure would receive scant attention. Another "plug" surface bait is made in three colours, yellow, white or red. The writer personally knows of an afternoon catch of twenty-four bass on a white bait of this particular make. The yellow bait is, however, generally the best. The use of these lures, and the conditions favourable to their use, have been stated above. Only a few out of the infinite variety found in the tackle stores have been mentioned. Of those which have not been noticed some are in the useless class, and the others are no better than those described. As in fly-fishing experience tends to reduce the number of flies, so, in bait-casting, it tends to lighten the tackle box.

When you have made a cast do not be in a hurry to make another. In other words, reel slowly; it catches more bass. Experiment with your favourite bait with a view to determining just how slowly you can reel it in and still keep the spinners in life-like motion. Some baits require more speed than others When you have learned the proper speed for any particular lure, try to reel it in at just that rate. If you do not believe this, at least try it—if possible when you are fishing with some one who reels quickly. If you are a fly-fisherman and accustomed to the speed, or rather, slowness of the single-action reel, or if you are accustomed to the ordinary double-multiplier, bear in mind that a quadruple-multiplying reel is chain-lightning in comparison with the others.

Have a good pair of pliers in your tackle box. When a bait has been "snagged" and more or less force used to dislodge it, examine the spinners. The chances are you will find them bent considerably out of true. Use the pliers. No matter how washed out and generally disreputable a wooden minnow has become, if the spinners have been kept bright, and run true, it will catch fish. Otherwise its success is problematical. Also, the spinners should be oiled at intervals. The "one drop" oiler is the thing for this. You should carry this also in the tackle box. At times you will need it for the reel, at others for mosquitoes. Some oils are good fly medicines.

Remember that you are fishing, not tournament casting for distance, and use a moderately short line. In this way you can place your bait more accurately, more quietly, and when a bass strikes, the closer he is to you the better are your chances of landing him. Get the bait into motion as soon as it strikes the water. If you allow it to lie motionless for an instant it loses all attraction. This is best done by stopping the outrunning line when the bait is a foot or two above the water. The change of the rod from the casting hand to the other must be practically instantaneous and free from bungling—and it takes practice. Make the transfer as soon as possible, for if you depend upon the casting hand for the first homeward motion of the lure it brings your rod into a perpendicular position, or a position too far back of you on one side or the other, in either of which cases you are not prepared for properly handling a strike.

When fishing from a boat or a canoe, with a friend, be careful about the back-cast. I once saw a wooden minnow, fitted with the entire complement of outriggers, slashed into a man's face. Ensued a compulsory and lengthy surgical operation, decidedly "first aid" in character, and of which we will omit the painful details. For delicate work of this nature a jack-knife is a mighty poor substitute for the scalpel.

Slow reeling, of which we have spoken above, is also productive of even spoiling; and even spooling is just as important in fishing as in practice casting for distance. Nothing is more irritating than repeated back-lashes, and nothing is of more necessity in fishing than keeping cool. It is very difficult when playing a big, husky bass to remember to lay the line evenly on the reel, but you must remember it. Back-lashes, or lovely tangles at least, are by no means confined to the operation of casting. Careless, rattled spooling when playing a fish will often lock the line hard and fast, with the result that when the bass makes his next good run he is snubbed from the reel and quite possibly lost. There are two methods of spooling the line, and one of them is correct. Keep the rod away from your body and guide the line with the thumb only. And when you throw a back-lash keep your temper and do not yank on the line., Take hold of one of the loops on the reel and slowly revolve the reel by pulling on the loop to the limit of motion. Then draw gently on the line and the chances are the tangle will come away. But if, in the first instance, you pull hard on the line, it simply tightens things and eventually you will have to use your knife—and the tackle shop considerably more than "twenty miles away!"

Splendid for Children.

If your youngsters cannot digest milk, try a little LEMCO, not by itself, but stirred into the milk. It often does good, as it gets over the digestion difficulty.

LEMCO and Milk is good for Mothers too.

From ½ to ¼ teaspoonful of LEMCO to half a pint of warm milk.

The only genuine Liebig Company's Extract of Beef.

Extracts from the Press.

"The Globe."

Anything that tends towards the humane side of the veterinary surgery is especially acceptable, and it is therefore a gratifying fact that a special kind of absorbent dressing for curbs, splints, etc., is quite taking the place of the cruel ancient custom of "firing" horses. Particularly among jumpers not 25 per cent. are absolutely sound; in fact "legs" are the main trouble of trainers. No better proof of the advantages and efficacy of the newest system is the case of Engineer, who broke down completely and had two terribly bowed tendons. Still by its use he was patched up sufficiently to now be perfectly callous and to have won two sprint races on the flat, and to be jumping hurdles successfully, a task which strains horses' legs and tendons terribly. Another remarkable case was that of Manifesto who was simply cured by such dressings the year he won his last Grand National. Prince Albert's Grand Sefton Steeplechase victory was exactly similarly brought about, but in this case the horse had a scale on his knees half-an-inch thick.

R. Marsh, the King's trainer, was also solely by its use able to avoid recourse to the firing iron, and to get Cynical through two good races despite his knee troubles. There is hardly a trainer of the present day who is not now being won over to the very natural advancement in veterinary surgery in unison with all medical matters pertaining to the human being. Moreover Ebberzine does not cause a horse to lose his hair on the dressed joints and its use cannot be detected afterwards for it does not blister, blemish or in the least arrest the horse's regular work—it is in fact a powerful absorbent, not a vesicant, so that it penetrates into the parts dressed, which no firing iron can possibly reach It surpasses blisters also inasmuch its use can be continued. It is really remarkable what a very large percentage of knee troubles occur in large horses, much more so than with their tendons pasterns and feet. Mr. E. Cooper-Smith is not unnaturally proud of this product of his practical experience after full 40 years' association with all the chief racing establishments in Great Britain.

"The County Gentleman."

It is always a pleasure to hear of any remedy calculated to alleviate the sufferings of that best friend of man the horse. And in this connection we are pleased to draw attention to Cooper-Smith's "Ebberzine," an excellent absorbent dressing which is now used by all the principal trainers and a large number of hunting men, who find it invaluable for many ailments in horses. Pass-Cora Powders, too, are an excellent Tonic Astringent for horses' legs, and strengthens strained tendons and ligaments, besides bracing up weak legs.

"Sporting Times."

In respect of Sore Shins I hear that Mr. Cooper-Smith's absorbent dressing "Ebberzine" has been used with most beneficial results, and it has the great advantage that its application does not interfere with the work of the horse, and, moreover, leaves no blemish.

"Oldham Standard."

"OF INTEREST TO HORSE OWNERS."

Ebberzine, a special kind of absorbent dressing, is quite taking the place of "firing horses," and has been the means of several remarkable cures.

"Chilian Times."

Ebberzine and Pass-Cora have recently attracted a good deal of attention in this country and are already used in the chief racing stables and by many members of the Valparaiso Polo Club this season, one of whom by use of the Pass-Cora Powders was able to play a pony all through the season that he had hitherto despaired of keeping sound. The few trainers in Chili that have already tried Ebberzine are delighted with it, and have been anxiously awaiting fresh consignments ordered out from England. Everyone who keeps horses in Chili should give these two really famous remedies a trial and we are certain they will not regret it.

"The Badminton Magazine," April 1908.

"When a veterinary Surgeon produces Testimonials from Mr. Gwyn Saunders Davies, Col. Hall Walker, Mr. Arthur Yates, Capt. L. H. Jones, Mr. George Thursby, Richard Marsh, Sam Darling, W. Nightingale, Joseph Cannon and others who are universally recognised as masters of their profession, the articles referred to need no further recommendation. This is the case with Mr. E. Cooper-Smith's dressings 'Ebberzine' Pass-Cora.'"

Don't Blister! Don't Fire!

For LAME HORSES and WEAK-LEGGED HORSES use

COOPER-SMITH'S

Celebrated Dressings

Pass-Cora and Ebberzine.

They neither blister, blemish nor stop work. These remedies have now a world wide reputation, being absolutely unequalled, used by His Majesty King Edward VII., Trainers and horse owners of all classes

PASS-CORA.

The Famous Tonic Astringent Lotion.

Pass-Cora Powders make a Tonic Astringent (bracing) and Antiseptic Lotion and should always be used in the FIRST stage of Sprains to Ligaments and Tendons. Excellent for Filled Legs, Weak Legs, Windgalls, and Fleshy Legs, and cures Chafes, Collar Wounds, Sore Backs, Sore Shoulders and Wounds and Cuts of all descriptions It is invaluable for after playing on hard ground, keeps the legs from swelling, makes them hard and cures bruises.

FOR DOGS.

It speedily allays Skin Irritation, cures Sores, Mange, Ecxema, etc, and strengthens Weak Legs.

Price 1/- (in England) per Powder or in boxes of 1-dozen. 11/6, with full directions.

EBBERZINE.

The Celebrated Powerful Absorbent Dressing.

Does not stop work or leave any blemish.

Ebberzine produces a good scurf and does not blister. Its action, unlike that of blisters, can be kept up since as soon as the scurf is off it can be applied again and again till the part has been absorbed. It is a speedy cure for Sore Shins, and should be used immediately they are detected; also it is the very best absorbent that has ever been known for Splints, Spavins, Ringbones, all Bony Enlargements (especially in the knees), Curbs, Thoro'pins and Capped Hocks, and for chronic Thickening of Tendons and Ligaments (in the FIRST stages of Thickening of Tendons and Ligaments use Pass-Cora Lotion). Ebberzine is also an excellent dressing for Sore Throats, Injured Muscles, Fluids under the Skin, and for arresting the growth of Side Bones, and for all ill-conditioned wounds is far superior to ordinary caustic Ebberzine should always be used after Broken Knees to take away the thickening.

Price in bottles, with full directions 4/9, 8/9, 12/9 (England).

THE STRENUOUS LIFE IN INDIA.

Is It Possible?

A want of energy and whim are characteristic traits of the white population in tropical and semi-tropical countries. It is a well established fact that this unfortunate condition is in a very large measure due to insufficient nourishment; to want of a diet that shall sustain the system under the increased demands upon the powers. Not only is the appetite feeble, but the food supplies also leave much to be desired in both quality and nutritive power as compared with the products of the temperate zone. Hence one often feels at a loss to know how to combat the depression and languor consequent on what may fairly be termed an improper diet supply. It follows therefore that the ideal remedy for physical exhaustion must be one which feeds the hungry tissues with a nutrient that is easy of assimilation, and at the same time enriches the blood and tones up the nervous system. This much-to-be-desired remedy is found in Sanatogen, the wonder-working food tonic.

Sanatogen is a scientific combination of two distinct elements, the one nutritive, the other tonic. The nutritive element is presented by pure milk albumen—the body building food, demanded constantly by the body for the repair of its tissues. Without a due supply of such food-principle, life would not continue.

The tonic element is represented by Phosphorus. The latter is an all-important constituent of the brain and the nervous system. But hitherto it has been impossible to administer this vital principal so that the nervous system could take hold of it. Dr. Andrew Wilson, the well-known medical author, writes:—"Sanatogen has solved the problem of administering Phosphorus in precisely the form in which the tissues can readily seize upon it and appropriate it to their various needs." The medical profession in Great Britain and India entertain the highest opinion of Sanatogen, which is amply evidenced by the fact that over 7,500 physicians have written in praise of it. This and the written attestations of very many distinguished men and women, whose names are well-known in the community, conclusively establish Sanatogen to be the pre-eminent recuperative and restorative.

The Rt. Rev. William Sinclair, D.D., Archdeacon of London, writes:—

THE CHAPTER HOUSE,
ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL,
London, E. C.

"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William London

Unlike other tonics the use of Sanatogen does not derange digestion but actually assists enfeebled appetite and strengthens the digestive organs. Its tonic effect is marvellous, and if taken regularly for a short period the feeling of being run down will be replaced by brightness, mental alertness, and healthy vigour. It differs also from other tonics in that its effects are permanent.

Mr. C. B. Fry, the celebrated cricketer, writes:—

GLENBOURNE MANOR,
WEST END, HANTS.

"Sanatogen is an excellent tonic food in training, specially valuable as a tonic during the periods of nervous exhaustion commonly called staleness, to which men who undergo severe training are liable. I have recommended it to many of my friends"

C. B. Fry.

There is no doubt that Sanatogen is the ideal food for invalids and convalescents. It can be borne by the weakest stomach when all other food is rejected. It is powerfully effective in all those cases where through illness, or overwork, or climatic conditions, the system has become debilitated. For the nervous and the dyspeptic, Sanatogen restores, naturally, sound digestion, healthy vigour, and the elasticity of well-being.

Sanatogen, which is a fine white powder, is packed in bottles, and can be obtained from all chemists.

An engrossing booklet containing matter of vital importance to well-being in the Tropics has recently been issued. It is from the pen of a physician long resident in India and is entitled "How to keep well in India." It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well. A copy can be obtained free of charge from Messrs. Smith Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, from whom also Sanatogen can be purchased.

From G. A. R., Bettiah Champaran:—"I was suffering with diarrhœa, with which I was attacked nearly nine months ago, and all known remedies were greedily taken down by me, but to no avail, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Papiya.' My digestive organs which were considerably deranged are now as right as possible; the distressing symptoms attendant on indigestion have now almost entirely left me and I heartily thank you for the preparation, which through the intervention of a Kind Providence you have successfully brought before the public."

From Mrs E. L. M., Asansol, E. I. R.—"I had very bad Dyspepsia. My food used to turn rotten and sour in my stomach, and I used one bottle of Essence of Papiya and now I am sure I could digest a brick, it has thoroughly cured me of my Dyspepsia, hence I have so much confidence in your medicines. You certainly deserve credit for introducing such a medicine to poor suffering Dyspepties"

You may certainly publish what I have said about your Papiya Essence.

From Mrs. Elizabeth Wagentreiber, Delhi:—"With much pleasure and many thanks I beg to acknowledge the benefit I derived from your far famed 'Essence of Papiya.' I suffered from Dyspepsia in a most painful form, and found great relief after taking the first two bottles, and continued to take four more. After the sixth I felt so much better that I left off taking it regularly, but if at any time, I feel the old pain and symptoms returning I immediately take another bottle of the Essence. I am now able to eat more and can change my diet without fear of what were to me most dreaded attacks of indigestion."

CYCLING.

THE FIFTY MILES RECORD.—That the promise of good cycle-racing will still attract the public was shown by the large attendance at Herne Hill, on Saturday the 8th instant, when the Southern Counties' Union held its annual meeting.

W. J. Pett, Polytechnic C.C., rode splendidly in the race for the fifty miles championship of the Union, which he won by nearly three miles from C. H. Bartlett, another Polytechnic man who, it will be remembered, gained the 100 kilometres race at the Olympic Games. J. E. Patmore, Havelock C.C., was third, two miles behind Bartlett.

Pett beat practically all records from twenty miles to the finish. He covered his first ten miles in 20mins. 32⅗secs., twenty miles in 39mins. 20⅕secs., forty miles in 1hr. 21mins. 5⅕sec., and the full distance in 1hr. 42mins. 46secs.

W. J. Bailey, Polytechnic, secured the mile championship by half a length from the holder, H. D. Buck, Anerley, in 3mins. 2⅕secs. In the contest for the London Club championship the Polytechnic C.C. won the Turner Cup with a score of 16 points to the Putney A.C.'s 24.

A Polytechnic pair in P. G. Curnew and L. Moy, 150 yards start, secured the two miles tandem handicap, so that it was a great day for the Regent Street institution, which wrested from the Anerley B.C. the Roberts Shield.

SWIMMING.

ANOTHER CHANNEL FAILURE.—The summer is getting on and it looks as if this year we are not destined to see the late Captain Webb's swim equalled. Here is the record of another plucky, but unsuccessful attempt made by James Mearns, a member of the Aberdeen A.S.C. who started from Dover last Saturday morning about 8 o'clock. It was his first experience of this difficult task, and he made an exceedingly bold bid for success, but found, like so many others, that the task is a great one. Swimming with a strong right overhand stroke, he made capital progress until about mid-day when a freshening breeze sprang up and made the surface of the water very loppy. Mearns battled determinedly, however, and got to within three miles of the French coast, after about fourteen hours in the water, when nature gave out, and he was taken from the water in such a state of collapse that for a time his life was considered in danger.

A fine constitution and perfect fitness pulled the swimmer through, however, and soon after recovering his spirits, Mearns expressed his determination to make a further attempt; and he believes that with fine weather, he will succeed. Mearns, who, is the amateur long-distance champion of Scotland, and a well-known International water polo player, is of splendid physique, weighing over 13st and possessing a chest measurement of 46½ inches. He has set his heart on gaining distinction in the Channel, and to that end has been training and taking long swims for the past two years. Like Jabez Wolffe, he possesses remarkable resistance to cold, and one of his swims, from Aberdeen to Port Lathom, a distance of twelve miles, was accomplished with a sea temperature of only 46 degrees.

My private conviction is that the swimmers of the present day all attempt to do the swim too quickly. Webb took about 21 hours. Most of the men nowadays take about fifteen, get within a mile or two of land meet the outgoing tide and have to give up. Perhaps if they took matters easier, and kept afloat longer, they might miss this adverse condition and make sure of it. What if their time was a bit slow? it seems to me better to be slow and sure than fast and injudicious in this matter.

ATHLETICS.

WALKER EQUALS WORLD'S RECORD.—R. E. Walker, the South African sprinter, and winner of the 100 metres race at the Olympic Games, has again been credited with a wonderful performance, for at Halifax on Monday he won a 100 yards handicap in 9⅖secs.

From scratch Walker beat J. W. Morton (West of Scotland Harriers), the British champion of 1904-5-6, by a foot. Morton had two yards start. L. A. Burton (Broughton Harriers), who was third, a foot behind Morton, was on the 3½ yards mark; and A. R. Blankley (Leeds A.C.), who was fourth, had 3½ yards start.

The course was downhill, and the runners had the assistance of a strong wind. The timekeepers were Mr. W. H. Halliwell, of Coventry, and Mr. J. E. Fowler Dixon, London.

The conditions were, of course, so much in favour of the runners that it is doubtful whether this wonderful sprint of Walker's will be officially recognised. At the same time, this performance, and that of Walker's at Abergavenny, where his time was given as 9⅖secs. a week ago, show that the South African is running in wonderful form, which if sustained for another few weeks ought to enable him to eventually break record under normal conditions.

A distance of 100 yards has never before been covered in this country in 9⅖secs. A. F. Duffey did 9⅖secs. at Leicester in 1901, and W. A. Schick the same time at Queen's Club three years later. In America, however, both Duffey and D. J. Kelly have done 9⅖sec., which is world's record unless Walker's time at Abergavenny is accepted by the A.A.A.

THE ARMY ATHLETIC MEETING.

The annual meeting opened at Aldershot, on Monday and was an exceptional success. There were over 400 more entries than last year, and the increase in championships was an outstanding feature and one on which the Executive deserve the warmest commendation: now there is a Cup for almost all the standard events instead of only for the halfmile as formerly. The sport was good too. Lieutenant Halswelle (Highland Light Infantry), the world's champion at 400 yards, was absent, but the spectators were delighted to see another Olympic competitor in Lieutenant A. Patterson, R.F.A., who won the Officers' quarter and half-miles and the open half-mile championship. Results.

BISHOP MAGEE was once asked to marry a gentleman who was a great Whisky manufacturer in Dublin. The Bishop felt disinclined to do this, being very much opposed to the trade: but as the gentleman in question had a great reputation, and was known to be very charitable, the Bishop did not like to refuse. After the ceremony the bridegroom said, "I do not know how to thank your Lordship. I wish I could do something that might be pleasing to you. All I can say is, "The Lord be with you." The Bishop replied, "And with thy spirit."

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Tuesday, 18th August.—Avalanche Finger Post 12 noon. It was a piping hot day, no rain has fallen in this part of the country for a week or more, and owing to the nature of the soil, it was too hard and dry to hunt: so the Master decided to try the heights above. It was a long and wearisome climb up to the top, but the "Dangar Ride" made it easier for the horses; no longer do we scramble and stumble over the deep ruts worn by the herds of innumerable buffaloes and cattle—but, alas! they also seem grateful to Mr. Dangar for providing such an excellent road, and have been making good use of it already. We had a long draw from Dante's Spinney up the Parsons' Valley, Governor's Shola, Parlock and Bulegums, before an outlying jack was viewed by Captain Dennistoun, near Rawlins' Nullah. No time was lost in clapping hounds on; they went off at a tremendous pace and lots of music along the west side of Newmarket to some way above Gold Mine Crossing, where they sank the hill to the Sandy Nullah stream, over it, and up by Schmidt's Clump into Staircase Shola, keeping right-handed by Herbert Plantation till they reached the ridge, where they swung back to the left over Back Staircase and down to the Devil's Dyke, then up again almost over the top of Staircase and came tumbling down above Martin's Shola to the stream and on into Governor's Shola, where there was a slight pause. But they were soon on the line again, and running up to the top of the covert, they swept left-handed along the hillside for some distance, before they descended into the covert again, through which they drove the jack out on to the ridge between Porlock and Governor's. At first it looked as though he meant the former for his point, but instead he kept on along the ridge down to the Sandy Nullah Stream; crossing it he headed for Round Shola, where he dwelt for a few minutes, and coming out at the top to the left, he ran through Martin's down to the stream and back into Governor's. The pack dusted him round about in the thick scrub under the road, but finally had to acknowledge defeat. It was a most enjoyable hunt, lasting well over an hour. Though the sun was hot and the ground somewhat dry, there was a good scent and hounds hunted well throughout.

Thursday, 20th August.—Municipal Crossing at 7 A.M. The early morning was wet and cold, but cleared up later on. Mill's was first drawn but did not hold. We drew on over the Blackmore Vale to Newmarket. Near Rawlins' Nullah a jack was viewed making for Bluegums, and hounds ran him into the covert. It was some time before he broke over the top and led hounds above Porlock to Sheffield, through it and out to the left through the corner of Leeds into Monkey, and on to Haikie. He ran round this covert several times before leaving it. He managed to get a good lead before he was viewed away above Dudley Shola by His Excellency, and scent was very faint by the time hounds were got out of the covert and clapped on. They worked it out fairly well, though slowly over Druid to Dreadnought and Denmark, along the ravine below Cecilia up into Ursula, down again left-handed past the Fairlawn's Bridge, over the Grant Duff Road into Cairn Hill. They hunted him about for some time but lost him. Scent was never good, and though a lot more country was drawn from Rallywood to Demon Valley and Brookland, what little there was had died out altogether.

Saturday, 22nd August.—Toda Coffee Shop 12 noon. It was a lovely bright morning when we set out for the meet, but there were strong indications of rain and mist to the west, and some rain fell. The Hon'ble Mr. Stokes met with a serious motor accident, and had a most miraculous escape. In trying to turn his car, in a very limited space on the road, the brakes refused to act and the car, with Mr. Stokes, was shot down the khud. He fortunately managed to jump out and only sustained a few bruises and a bump on his head. It was a shocking sight to see his splended steam car lying a wreck at the bottom of the ravine. The drop was almost a perpendicular one, of about 40 feet. Mrs. Gass, who had driven out with him, had got out of the car before Mr. Stokes attemped to turn. The Master took hounds below Coffee Shop Shola, before proceeding to draw up Gonikari Shola. A brace of jack was viewed on the slope of the ridge a little to the right of Boaster's Shola. Hounds went off at once on the line of one to the left, through Kengodu Shola; coming out at the top of the covert, he turned back sharp to the left over Kengodu Hill into Boaster's and on through Gonikari to Coffee Shop Shola, going to ground just on the outskirts of it under some rocks. Failing to dislodge him, the Master moved off to Road Shola and drew below the road, and then up over Pykara Hill. Above the river hounds ran a stale line for a short distance, but were unable to make any thing of it. As they were about to draw Dormer, there was a tally ho! from the saddle above, between Dormer and Road Shola, there was a little delay before hounds could be got out of the covert. Just then a whistle from the terrier boys on the left denoted another jack had been viewed. The Master clapped his pack on the line of this one. They went off at a tremendous pace to the left of Road Shola; crossing the large swamp by Jackson's Crossing, they rose the steep hill above Toda Coffee Shop Shola and raced along the ridge to Kengodu Shola. Without passing they drove him straight on between Ampthill Wood and Glyn's Covert, and down the ghaut overlooking Sholur village. Here there was a division, five couple turning up the ravine to the left. They were at fault here for a time, the Master came to their assistance with a few more couples, and they went on again up a very steep hill. The jack was viewed to the left, crossing a bog at the bottom with a couple of hounds close at him. The Master and remainder of the pack tumbled down the hill again, and raced up the next rise, and round to the right leaving Lord Roberts' Shola and the Glenmorgan Estate Road on the left. The mist swept up in a dense mass, and hounds lost their jack in a small shola on the hill side. It was a most enjoyable hunt, the pace was a cracker from Road Shola to the edge of the ghauts, and the going fair. Though a good deal of country was drawn on the way home nothing more was done.

Monday, 24th August.—Umbrella Tree at 8 A.M. On arriving at the meet we were told that six jack had been viewed close by and had moved off down the bog below the road. So we started by drawing down this bog. Hounds spoke almost at once and three jack came racing out of the covert at the bottom, two heading straight for the ghauts, the third keeping left-handed below the Connemara Road which was the one selected. He led for about a mile to above the Black Bridge and then turned left-handed up towards Hanging Shola, short of which, however, he went to ground in a convenient earth in the banks of the stream where hounds killed him; he was taken out and broken up. Hanging Shola was next drawn without result, but a jack was roused in the small shola beyond and was viewed away from the bottom. He headed for Brooklands, crossing the stream below the Sigur Road, some way below Farriers' Crossing, up through some fields, where members of the hunt found they had to negotiate fences if they were to follow hounds. Our jack crossed the road and kept to the left of Brooklands, and took a line over Toll Bar Hill, crossed the Demon Valley Stream and rose the slope of Rocky, but instead of making for the covert, and being hard pressed he continued his flight down to Karimuli Mund, as if for Waterfall, but turned sharp right-handed round the hill to Cathedral Shola, from thence down the Segur Ghaut, running hounds out of scent on the hard dry soil and thick scrub. A long draw viâ Rocky, Barber's Shop and Hearty, brought us to Hamlet before we found again. Hounds were close on this jack as he made off to the right of Bracken down to the Pykara Bridle Path, which he ran for some way before he turned left-handed up a ravine into Khed Shola. There was a slight check on the road, but hounds hit off his line again, and drove him through the upper end of Khed into Road Shola. Leaving Dormer on the left they sped on down the hill and swung into Rocky Shola, through it they pushed him out towards Road Shola, just outside of which a large herd of cattle crossed the line, and hounds were unable to hit it off again. The sun was now blazing hot so hounds were taken home.

Tuesday 25th August.—Melkaval Village 12 noon. The dry weather we have been enjoying for the past two weeks or more, made hunting in the Nunjanad impossible, so the Master proceeded to Rees' Corner. Earlier in the day a brace of jack had been viewed near Dairymaid; hounds picked up a line at the top of Denmark and ran it heel to the bottom of Dreadnought but as this would have led them back to Nunjanad Valley they were stopped and taken on to Jackal. They found at once, and ran slowly through Rallywood and Porlock to Governor's Shola, and on past Andy Plantation to Gaylad Shola, but scent was almost nil and they could barely own to the line. A long draw by Limerick, Dantes Spinney, to Sultan Shola; near the Mekod Stream hounds touched a line, they hunted slowly and painstakingly with a very poor scent for a couple of miles, before they got on better terms with their jack, and the pace improved on the ridge above the Mekod Stream; warming to it after they crossed the Stream they ran past Savorkadu Mund in a right handed circle recrossing the stream and running the jack to ground near Mr. Hodgson's bungalow on the banks of the Krurmund Stream, in which they killed him. Mining operations were then necessary to exhume the jack and some hounds, it was almost dark before we made a start for home, reaching Kennels after 8 P.M.

Thursday 27th August.—Golf house at 7 a.m. It was a brilliant morning not a cloud in the sky, a fresh cold wind, with quite a nip in it. Drew down by Elmhurst Corner; on the far side of the Municipal Stream, hounds went off with a great cry and led for Mills short of it they swung right handed and recrossing the Municipal Stream a few hundred yards lower down ran their jack to ground at Elmhurst Corner. Another jack had been viewed near Mill's covert a short while before, so the Master moved off at once. The jack had not dwelt in the covert but had made off in the direction of Jackal—hounds picked up the line on Bagman, and swept down to above Pearl Crossing, then up to the left along the top of Long Swamp. Crossing the Krurmund Road at the bend, they raced over the hill above Dudley down to the Swamp, over it, to Drendon Belt—where they divided, five couple taking a line through Denmark to Cairn Hill and the main body, of the pack ran through Dendron Belt to Porcupine and round to Bakie, when they threw up. The Master took hounds back to Elmhurst Corner, in the hopes of bolting the jack that had been left there. The two terriers were put in and though they were right up to him and worried him for a long time he refused to budge. We then drew over by Farrier's Crossing through middle covert to Hanging Shola. Hounds went away on a jack near the Toda Mund to the north of Hanging Shola and ran him up to the covert opposite the Umbrella Tree but scent was poor, and the sun very hot and the ghauts dangerously near, so hounds were taken back to Kennels.

Polo.

POONA JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

FINE weather and perfect ground favoured the two games in the semi-finals in the Junior Polo Tournament on Monday afternoon, which attracted a very large crowd, who were rewarded with two splendid games. The progress of the games was followed with keen interest, as the fate of the two teams had to be decided to fight the final battle. Colonel Westlake and officers of the 20th P. W. O. L. Cavalry were "at home," while the Sappers provided the music.

The first game was between the 34th Poona Horse, who have for three years past won the cup in succession and the Central India Horse. It was a very spirited game from start to finish and though the Mhow team were beaten by five goals to one, they elicited the sympathy of all by their game stand.

The next game between the Royal Engineers and the Buccaneers was equally interesting. It originally looked as if the Engineers had the better of the Buccaneers, particularly when they scored their first goal but eventually they met with decidedly bad luck and the tide turning in favour of the Buccaneers, the latter hit goal after goal, till they knocked out the Engineers by three to one.

The final was posted for Wednesday, but owing to the sodden state of the ground, it was postponed to Friday. There was an extra large gathering at the Polo ground to see the match between the Poona Horse and the Buccaneers and those who came had the opportunity of witnessing one of the finest games imaginable, full of incident and excitement throughout, by two splendidly mounted teams who played the game unyieldingly. The game progessed with most determined play throughout.

Goal by goal, the teams equalized; when the Poona Horse made a goal the Buccaneers returned the compliment, and when the fifth chukker and final had whistled, they stood two goals all. The goal posts were thereupon widened and the game resumed and went through two more chhukkers without any results till at last in the third Hildebrand put in the winning goal, and the pent up feelings gave went to prolonged cheering. This is now the fourth year, the Poona Horse win the cup in succession.

Athletics.

A DENUNCIATION OF MODERN ATHLETICS.

DR. WARRE, the late headmaster of Eton, whose retirement was the occasion for a testimonial which was subscribed to by very many of the foremost public men of England who had previously been his pupils, recently delivered a striking denunciation of modern athletics at Dulwich College to the students assembled for "Prize Giving Day."

It would be, said the famous teacher, a sorry and a sad thing if those who won prizes should fancy that all their reward was centred in the prize itself, and in the applause, well merited though it be, which accompanied their receiving it. No! the outward and visible signs of success were pleasant and honourable, and no one would be so ungracious as to seem to detract from their value or from the value of the applause that accompanied them. But they were as nothing compared with the realities that lay behind them—the rewards not of competition, but of honest endeavour and of loyal effort to do one's duty. It was, he ventured to think, all the more advisable to remember this in these our days, which were days of such strenuous competition, so multifarious in its character and so readily ministering to vainglory and false ideals in individual and in social life.

OLYMPIC AGONY.

The spirit of the age, which fostered the Olympic agony, swept into its net all sorts of amusement, every kind of business, and every branch of education. It hungered after display, it loved advertisement, it lived on exhibition. Even exhibitions were becoming intrinsically competitive within themselves, and the epoch was quite feverish with record-making and record-breaking. It was curious to reflect how, in the last half-century, this same spirit of competition had succeeded in turning most of our play into hard work and making a toil of our pleasures. The sports and pastimes of "Merrie England," as old Stow loved to think of them, were, for the most part, no longer, except in name, joyous recreations. They were mostly for those who took part in them a serious business. The professional element was largely permeating them, with the result that the games and matches played in public were becoming more and more spectacular, and it was to be feared that, in many cases, among the multitudes that flocked to hear them the chief interest in them centred not so much on the skill of the players and the goodness of the game as on the cash concerned in the issue.

Continuing, Dr. Warre wondered if he should be thought singular if he expressed his belief that the influence thus engenderd were not wholesome or elevating, either socially or individually. The popular excitement as to any sporting event had usually a somewhat sordid tinge owing to the betting that enhanced it. On the other hand, in the case of the individual players, the temptation to self-advertisement was strong and the desire for personal distinction tended to supplant esprit de corps. Add to this the craving for publicity, and the extent to which it was fostered by the Press, not only by papers devoted to the chronicle and criticism of sporting matters, but also by those of the highest repute, and it must be confessed that, viewed as an aspect of national life, the tendencies of competition in games and amusements justified much anxiety as to their effect in the future upon the national character. He ventured to think that if we were to hope for any amelioration in these conditions we must look for it to the example set and the lead given by the public schools and the Universities of the country. (Loud cheers).

HONOUR IN GAMES.

The popularisation of games and sports which sixty or seventy years ago were, with but few exceptions, the pastimes of youth, and had their "foci" in places of education, was chiefly owing to the joy and the good found by the young in those pastimes, which radiating from these centres, had gradually assumed an importance which used not to be theirs, and had become part and parcel of English life. The public schools and the Universities had, therefore, in a peculiar manner incumbent upon them the duty of keeping up the best traditions, the most wholesome practice and the highest code of honour in their games. All unconsciously the popular mind did incline to observe and to consider, as the right standard and the best example, that which was maintained by the schools, and in this light, it was of the highest importance that not only a generous esprit de corps should supersede and efface all personal self-seeking and self-advertising tendencies in our games, but that a chivalrous sense of honour should instinctively repudiate any unfair advantage, any unfair method, and so intensify the moral force and upright character of those who "play the game." Such example could not be lost. Whether in victory or in defeat it was recognised and appreciated. It endured hardships it maintained courtesy, it kindled generous sympathy, it silently challenged imitation. It was, as it were, a moral antiseptic tending to sweeten and keep clean by its influence all the contests in which it might be engaged. Such to his mind was the ideal to which, in these days of competition, a great public school should strive to attain in its games and so help, in due measure, to build up a national character "sans peur et sans reproche." (Cheers).

Educational methods, Dr. Warre concluded, were not immune from the spirit of the age. Perhaps the gravest aspect of this influence was the extent to which it had handed over education to examination. In the earlier half of the last century examination began to be popular, and to gain credit in this country as a safe method of supplanting patronage and its evils. From small beginnings it had grown and expanded into a giant system, and instead of being the servant, bade fair to become, if it had not already become, the master—the tyrant—of education. For place, for scholarships and exhibitions, for class and pass, examination was the arbiter of failure and success.

HIGHER IDEALS.

This was the form in which the struggle in which the scholars of the nation were engaged was presented to them, and no doubt to do their best in it, and to work loyally for it, was their duty, and that would, as he had said, find its reward. The conditions were not of their choosing, nor imposed by themselves. And yet though this were so, he could not help thinking that every effort should be made to set before the minds of those upon whom this stress of examination so repeatedly fell some higher ideals as regarded the aims and object of the work to be done than could be inspired by considerations as to what would "pay" in the examination, or by a mark-hunger, however acute. Let us feel sure that, though we could not eliminate the personal element from such competition, yet the soul that—to use the Horatian phrase—"kept itself tempered from insolent exultation," and could, in the moment of success, put away from itself all vainglorious thoughts, was also most able to preserve its equanimity when things were adverse. It was the soul of the most useful citizen. It was the spirit of the man who could be most useful to the community, and to the society of which he was a member. To such a one as life went on, and as the work of life enlarged its horizon, true loyalty, true patriotism became habitual guides; and in proportion as unselfishness was the rule of his conduct, so most certainly gathered round him the respect, the esteem, and the affection of his fellow-men. (Cheers).

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

GLOSTERS vs. RANGERS.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on the 26th ultimo. The Rangers had only twelve men out but made a creditable display. The Glosters, of course, had the upper hand all through and eventually won by one goal, one penalty goal and 7 tries (29 pts.) to a try (3pts). At half time the military led by four tries to nil, and on changing ends scored two tries (one of which was converted) before Wheelock got away and registered the Rangers' single try. A penalty goal and two more tries were subsequently scored by the Glosters.

UNITED SERVICES vs. HIGHLAND L. I.—Played at Dum Dum last Saturday, the H. L. I. winning by a goal to a penalty goal. The first half was devoid of score but on crossing over Jackson scored a goal from a penalty against the home team. The H. L. I. did all the attacking for the rest of the game and Schewrin got over with a try which Tait converted, the H. L. I. thus winning by 5 pts. to 3.

CALCUTTA vs. GLOSTERS.—The return match between these teams was played on the Calcutta ground last Saturday. The turf was in a wretched condition owing to the rain and the game resolved itself into a mud scramble. Shortly after the start Burnett got the ball and raced over with a try. This remained unconverted and was the only score during the game, of which scrums and line outs were the chief features. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Schaumberg, backs; Burnett, Siddons, Reid-Kay, Long-bottom, three-quarters; Arthur, Morrison, half-backs; Kerr, McLeod, Bryce, Donald, LeCocq, Studd, Harvey, Karp, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS.—Russell, back; Hatch, Lt. Parnell, Rogers, Matty, three-quarters; Murray, Millwater, half-back; Travell, Prosser, Heal, Robins, Strong, Wilson, Lovell, Pritchard, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. E. Martelli.

DALHOUSIE vs. RANGERS.—This match last Saturday ended in a pointless draw. Dalhousie had the best of a poor game, the state of the ground preventing any brilliant play.

CALCUTA vs. UNITED SERVICES.—A hard game between these teams on Tuesday last ended in favour of Calcutta. The U. S. pressed at the start and had the best of the exchanges till Arthur got through and set the Calcutta threes going. A good passing run ended in Longbottom getting across with a try which Burnett converted. In the second half Calcutta attacked and Longbottom once again crossed the U. S. line with a try. The place failed and the Services next were prominent with some good runs, Jackson eventually getting over in the corner. The attempt at goal was unsuccessful and Calcutta took the game to their opponents' "25." Here a few minutes before the close Longbottom dropped a fine goal, and the C. F. C. were thus victorious by 1 goal 1 drop goal and a try (12 points) to a try (3 points). Teams:—

C. F. C.—Schaumberg, back; Burnett, Reid-Kay, Siddons, and Longbottom, three-quarters; Arthur and Morrison, half-backs; Kerr, McLeod, Bryce, Donald, Studd, LeCocq, Harvey and Dunsterville, forwards.

UNITED SERVICES.—Lieutenant Carr, back; Lieutenant Zorab, Baker, Lieutenant Boquet, and Private Jackson, three quarters; Lieutenant Beddie and Lieutenant Slater, half-backs; Lieutenant Layard, Lieutenant Cunningham, Lieutenant Chase, Bull, Lieutenant Fraser, Lieutenant Wilford, Captain Hand and Private Walker, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. P. R. Cadell.

GLOSTERS vs. DALHOUSIE.—On the Dalhousie ground last Tuesday the home team, who played one short throughout, put up a great game against the Lahore team and were only beaten by a try to nil. Smith scored the try in the first half. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Walker, back; Holley, Allen, Berry, and Smith, three-quarters; Hughes, and Bates, half-back; Storrie, Boothroyd, Whyshall, Graham, McLeod, Brewer and A. N. Otter, forwards.

GLOSTERS.—Russell, back; Smith, Lieutenant Parnell, Rogers, and Matty, three-quarters; Murray and Millwater, half-backs; Travell, Wilson, Lovell, Heal, Robbins, Pitchard, Strong and Prasel, forwards.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE League of 1908 is now all over but the shouting, and as there is very little of the latter in Indian Rugby Football, the only thing left is the presentation of the Cup. There is no doubt that the C. F. C. have won this on their merits, and up to time of writing have had no try scored against them. The matches with the Glosters were hard fights, but on both occasions Calcutta were good enough to win and so have got back the Cup which the Glosters took from them in 1907.

THE League from every point of view has been a great success, and A. Weatherhead deserves the thanks of all concerned for the way in which he has run it through. To single out a few of the noticeable points in this year's League will be profitable. Perhaps the brightest of these has been the form shown by the H. L. I. of Dum Dum. Starting the carrying code only last year they have made most excellent progress, and as a team are indeed a hard nut to crack. The fact that such a good side is drawn from a detachment and not from a battalion is in itself a credit, and Lieutenants Allston and Lilburn have good reason to be more than satisfied with the results of their efforts. Henderson is perhaps the best of a very good pack, who know how to shove and will soon learn how to wheel.

THE League matches have in most cases resulted in very close games. The Rangers, have done their best with a limited playing membership, and have hard luck in losing players through one cause and another. There is nothing however so discouraging as losing matches by large scores and we think the Rangers should be content next year to win matches in the Junior League. This is said in all kindness, and with a realisation of their sporting efforts to get sides together for their matches. They doubtless got some encouragement from their draw with the much depleted "Dals," who have indeed had bad luck in losing men through injuries. We hope, however, that Dalhousie will get together a good side for the Tournament, and have better luck with their players than they had in the League. Fever has played havoc with Lieutenants Tweedie's forces, and some people have been so unsympathetic as to blame the temporary moat which separates the C. F. C. ground from the Fort as a reason for the ailment. The story of the bathing parades before and after matches is a good one, but absolutely untrue, and the fittest of the team are those who so cleansed themselves in the early stages of the League. The U.S. have put up some good fights, and have not had the best of luck. Their "threes" are capable of excellent combination, and showed some good passing in their first matches with C. F. C. and Glosters. We hope they will do as well in the Cup Tournament as they did in 1906, and have no doubt they will do their best to go one better. Beddy at half, plays a very sound game and gives his three quarters every possible opportunity. Layard leads the forwards in dashing style and is well backed up by a keen pack.

As Saturday turned out such a "puddler" there was very little of what could be called good football. The Calcutta vs. Gloster match brought out a large crowd of spectators, and it is a matter for great regret that the elements were not more favourable. The match started at 5-15 with Calcutta a forward short. Kay was about the first to get accustomed to circumstances being well directed to a specially soft spot by a couple of lusty Glosters' forwards. "Scrum here, and scrum again" about describes the match which was mostly confined to forwards. The only score was the result of a very faulty piece of play by a Gloster "three" who on his own line booted the ball across the field to Burnett, who was all there and ready for the slightest of chances. It was a bad mistake and cost the Glosters the match. Burnett went in beautifully, and deserves credit for a really well taken opportunity. On more than one occasion the Gloster forwards were within an ace of drawing level, but on the days' play the result was a pretty fair one and had the elements been different the Calcutta backs, who are undoubtedly the stronger part of the team, would not have failed to take the chances they would have got. However that is conjecture, and therefore of no use to fact. There was one excellent passing run right across the "threes," and had Longbottom looked to his centre instead of punting when he came to Russell something more tangible than a drop out from 25 would have resulted. Murray the Glosters half was allowed very little rope so those who know him can imagine the Glosters backs had little of the ball. Lieutenant Parnel kept his men well together, and played a sound game. Kerr's tackle of Russell was to our thinking the best incident of the game. Following up a kick he nailed the Gloster back before he had got rid of the ball, and with any luck would have got away with the ball as Russell had no right to stick to it the way he did.

THE H. L. I. deserve congratulation upon their victory over the U. S. by 1 goal (5 pts.) to a penalty (3 pts.) and we have already commented on the Dals and Rangers' draw.

NEXT week we shall deal with Cup prospects, and having welcomed the West Ridings who arrived on Tuesday, we look forward with interest to the advent of teams from The Dragoon Guards, The Connaught Rangers, The King's Own, Madras Gymkhana and The Behar Barbarians.

WE have it on the best authority that E. D. Simson, the Scotch half is unable to get leave from his medical duties and will therefore not take part in the Tournament much to the regret of the U.S.

SCRUM.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

FOLLOWING Saturday's game, the Rugby Football Tournament was continued on Monday when the local Casuals team met the Somerset Light Infantry and a very exciting game it was. The Casuals are supposed to be a team composed of men not wanted in the Gymkhana team added to a few R.A. men, but amongst them were more than one who could with advantage displace men who will represent the Club.

The Somersets opened their account early and looked like walking off with the game, but after that they could not score again and the Casuals on occasion came within an ace of turning the tables on them. Neither of the full backs was strong, though luck carried them through where better men might have failed, the threes did not get many chances as the game was mostly amongst the forwards, as is usually is when their knowledge of the game is superficial. Having a hard time of it stopping rushes, the play of the halves was perhaps not fully appreciated and altogether the game was too much of a kick and rush sort to be attractive. When the ball did come out to the three-quarters the Casuals were found very poor in passing and the Somersets too slow, so that we saw very little of what is the best part of this game, i.e. pretty runs and bouts of passing. The final result was a try to nil in the Somerset's favour, Sutton, their skipper, scoring the one and only.

Tuesday's game was the last of the first round being between the Bombay and Poona Gymkhanas. As will be remembered, these two met in a charity match a few days ago and the former won by a substantial margin, but Poona now seemed to have a stronger team, as though Captain Noke twisting his knee was off the field for all but the first twenty minutes, they made a very good fight and only a goal and a try was the difference at the finish. The Bombay team being complete naturally held the scrums, though the others put in some very good dribbles and frequently got their side out of trouble, being smart in the loose. Both pair of halves gave a capital account of themselves, getting the ball away nice and clean from the scrums and stopping rushes in the most plucky of manners. As to the threes both divisions proved very hard to pass and though they indulged in some pretty bouts of passing the wing was never left unmarked. The Bombay line were the faster as proved when Bremner got clean away but was caught in an exciting chase by Baker before he could get in. Hearson for them and Gunn for the others were particularly good at finding touch and Ward and Baker always dangerous. It was in the rushes of their forwards and the cleverness of their halves that the Poona team found their strength and had Captain Noke been in the field all the time it would indeed have been a tight fight, though I think Bombay would have won just the same as they were frequently within an ace of scoring, most referees would have given Hearson a try when Saiano held him for a time before he could touch down. Ward did all the scoring for the Bombay team, a penalty goal, a goal and a try = 11 points to a penalty goal = 3 points, Gunn kicking the Poona goal. One is not surprised to hear that he was asked to turn out for Scotland as a reserve.

After the exhibition the Somersets gave against the Casuals and considering that the Scots had practically the same men out as last year, people were not disappointed when a none too scientific game was played between the two. To be fair however, it must be said that the state of the ground was against them and a heavy shower of rain soon after the start made the ball very difficult to hold. It was nevertheless a most strenous fight from first to last and the fact that only in the last few minutes did the Scots take the lead made the match a most interesting one.

CALCUTTA RUGBY FOOTBALL TOURNAMENT.

The above Tournament for the Calcutta Cup will commence on Saturday, 12th September 1908.

Entries (with Entrance Fee Rs. 10) to reach the undersigned on or before Saturday, 5th September.

MADRAS GYMKHANA RUGBY FOOTBALL TOURNAMENT.

The above Tournament will take place in Madras from 28th September to 3rd October.

Entries close with the Honorary Secretary on Monday, 21st September, after which date no entry will be received.

For the first ten minutes the Scots had the better of exchanges, but for the rest of the first half it was the Somersets who did the pressing. It was within the last five minutes or so that they opened their account with a cleverly dropped goal by Keats, right half. It was their inability to get the ball out to their threes and the way in which the Scots' forwards worried them that prevented them adding to this and they led at half time by four points to nil.

In the second half the worrying tactics of the Scotch forwards made themselves felt and, except for spasmodic rushes by the opposing pack, they did nearly all the attacking. Danger first came from a mark by Clarke, right half, who, electing to try a drop at goal, missed. It was well into the last quarter that they eventually got through after a rush down, Koe kicking over the goal line and Simpson cutting across to touch down. Saward failing to improve upon it they were still behind. Very soon after, however, pressing hard on the very line Cooper got over between the posts but McCallum failing with the slippery ball they were only pwo points ahead. Though the closing stages were full of excitement there was no further score and the Scots ran out very narrow winners by six points to four.

The Bombay Gymkhana-West Ridings match turned out perhaps an even better and more exciting affair than was anticipated, the holders just squeezing home by two points. Not only was it scientific and open enough to be interesting to all, but a great exhibition of pluck and energy. Before the game it was an admitted fact that the Ridings were superior forward but weaker behind the scrum, and their efforts to keep the ball tight were evident. In the majority of the scrums they got possession, and their halves took care to help them to do so when they had the ball to put in, so that though the opposing eight played hard all the way they could not give their sprinting division the ball as often as one would have liked.

Quite the hero of the match was Ward, two of his bits of work being the outstanding features of the game, though all through he was brilliant. First there was his place goal from half way and then the try he scored after dribbling half the length of the field. Baker and Hearson ably assisted him, but the right wing was very weak and in the second half was practically a passenger after hurting his knee. At half Ash was a long way the best of a smart quartette, the military pair resorting to tricks which, to say the least of them, are scarcely fair. At back both were fairly well represented, but there is not a really good back in the Tournament. Of the Ridings' threes Chapman, as last year, was the best; he is quick to take advantage of opening and scored two clever tries. When the Ridings came up strong and opened within a few minutes with a penalty things looked bad for the Gymkhana, but, with a marvellously fine kick, Ward equalised and then converted a try he scored. The others followed with an unconverted try by Chapman, but were two points behind at half time. Another try by Chapman put them ahead and a dropped goal by Ryan gave one the impression that they were in for a substantial win. The Gymkhana, however, rallied and Ward touched down after a fine bit of work, as had he picked up he would certainly have been collared. The kick, which would have brought them level, just missed and though they pressed hard the whistle came without their being able to knock off those two points.

It was more individual play that got the home side so near. The absence of Marris made their right wing weak, but even then they would have had good men to pick from had the Casuals team not been formed: this would have made all the difference.

The finals came off on Saturday and provided quite a surprise. The attendance on the grounds was only a moderate on: the game they witnessed was only a poor display of Rugger, owing to individual selfishness on the part of the Ridings' three-quarters. The Scots put up a much better fight than was expected of them, the firm state of the ground favouring it, and with luck, might have come off first best, being beaten by the narrow margin of two points only. Such was their dash and energy, that at the interval they were leading by three points to nil and it was late in the second half before the Ridings could score. In the first half, the exchanges were of a level order, but during the second the Ridings had throughout the better of the game but lost a number of chances of easy scoring through selfishness—perpetually attempting at drop goals, the inside right three-quarters, Chapman being the greatest sinner in this respect. About ten minutes to time. Wilson succeeded in placing a try which Ryan converted. When the whistle piped onside, no further scoring was done The scorer for the Scots was Wilson. The West Ridings thus won the cup a second time.

GOLF AT KARACHI.

MERCHANTS vs. BANKERS AND BROKERS.—This annual match was played on the 25th ultimo and won by the Bankers and Brokers. A new method of scoring was observed, viz., 1 point to the winner of the match, and ½ point to the winner of the bye, which gave the Bankers and Brokers 7½ to their opponents' 1½. By counting matches only the result worked out at 6 to 1 in favour of the Bankers and Brokers, three games being all square.

(a) He ought to have taken off the Kt with K B. The move made gives White an opportunity for an irresistible attack.

(b) White here missed an opportunity of forcing the mate in a few moves, by 18 Q Kt 5 ch. If Black replies with 18 K to B sq; then 19 Q to R 5, followed by 20 Kt to Kt 5, and White, barring the useless sacrifice of the Kt, must mate in two moves. If on the other hand Black plays 18 K to R 2, then 19 Q to R 5 ch 19 Kt interposes 20 Kt to Kt 5 ch, &c.

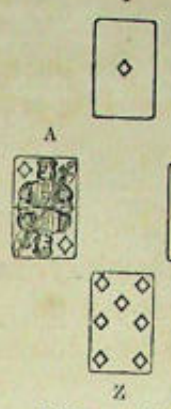
BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 70.

It is no use going on with clubs, as the dealer can not afford to finesse the 9, and if he does not will only establish one trick. Spades, too, is a useless lead, for Z has not enough cards of entry to suit himself, though by holding up the ace he may bring it in, if led by the adversaries. On the whole, therefore, his best plan is to lead the ace, and then the knave of hearts, passing the knave up to B, unless A plays the queen or 10. Y has a certain card of entry in the queen of diamonds, and when he gets in will make three tricks in hearts if the suit should be evenly divided. This is Y Z's best chance of making a good score on the hand.

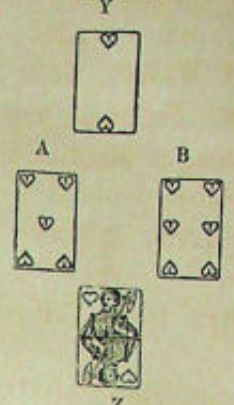
Problem No. 71.



Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 12. Z deals and declares no-trumps. A's (the leader's) and Y's (dummy's) hands are as follows :—

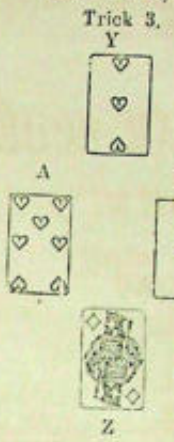
A's Hand (leader): Hearts, 7, 6; diamonds king, queen, 10, 6, 12; clubs, 6, 4; spades jack, 6, 3, 2.

Y's Hand (dummy): Hearts, 10, 9, 4, 3, 2; diamonds, ace, jack; clubs, ace, 7, 5; spades, 9, 8, 6.



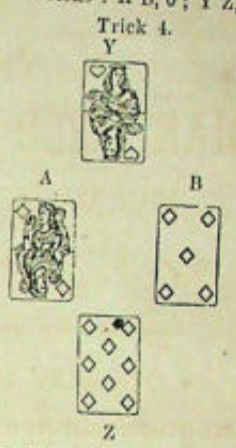
The play of the first four tricks is as follows :—

Trick 1.



Tricks: A B, 0; Y Z, 1.

Trick 2.



Tricks: A B, 0; Y Z, 2.

Trick 3.

Tricks: A B, 1; Y Z, 2.

Trick 4.

Tricks: A B, 2; Y Z, 2.

How ought A to go on with the hand, and why?

MOTOR NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 14th August 1908.

RECENTLY it was suggested in the House of Commons that motorists should be forbidden to use horns, whistles, or bells to signal their approach, so as to make them more careful in their driving. Undoubtedly it would have some effect in slowing the pace of cars, at any rate at first. But it would lead to many drivers who would otherwise be careful running risks, in sheer annoyance at obstructing vehicles, that otherwise they would not incur, and it would also lead to the use of noisy engines, so that the last state of the public would be worse than the first. It is useless to tinker with the automobile question by putting difficulties in the way of the reasonable driver who suffers quite enough as it is for the sins of the "road hog."

Mention of this pestilential animal calls to mind the correspondence recently invited by the Daily Mail and now running strongly in the columns of that painful organ. The Editor asked the public "What is to be done with the Motor Car" and called for suggestions for reform. I select two of the replies.

Sir,—No motor-car should be licensed which can travel at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, and no motor-car should be allowed to use any public roads less than twenty feet wide.

The tarring of public roads to prevent dust would not be necessary if motor-cars were not driven at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, as the very small quantity of dust raised would not injure or be a nuisance to any person.

A motor-driver's license should not be granted to mere boys, as is the case at the present time. A driver once convicted of exceeding the speed limit should not be allowed to drive again for at least one year. Whenever a motor driver kills a human being through carelessness, he should be imprisoned for at least seven years.

There should be special road police to prosecute reckless drivers whether of motor-cars or other vehicles.

I am convinced that if a plebiscite were taken of the whole of the adult population of Great Britain as to the advisability of reducing the speed of motor-cars in towns and rural districts 95 per cent. would vote against the existing rate of speed.

Should it be proved that motor-cars of any weight cause more wear and tear of the public roads than horse vehicles, then motorists should pay toll to the authorities of the roads on which they travel.

I have studied the motor-car question for some years, and it appears to me that with the exception of noxious smells the cure of all motor evils can be accomplished by the reduction of speed.

Sir,—There should be no legal speed limit, but the driver should be prevented by very severe penalties from driving to the public danger. Fines are useless. Imprisonment with or without hard labour is the only deterrent of the "road-hog." His license should be cancelled.

No car, for ordinary road use, should be made capable of a greater speed on the level than thirty miles per hour; all existing road cars should be mechanically altered so that they could not exceed that speed. Moreover, all cars should be required by law to be fitted with such efficient brakes that the car could be brought to a stop within a short distance. Every car should be tested annually by the local authorities, such test to be paid for by the owner.

The upkeep of the roads, tarring and the like, should be paid for by the local authorities, the cost to be defrayed by taxes on all vehicles, the greater use of the roads by the motor being considered in apportioning the taxes.

Driving licenses should be given only to those who pass an examination at a Government motor school.

With regard to the surveillance of roads by the police, the most dangerous spots ought to be under the eye of a competent person. If all motorists were gentlemen in the highest sense of the word, legislation in this matter would be very simple. Unfortunately, they are not and those who are gentleman must suffer for those who are not. The "road hog" must be suppressed.

THE BATTLE OF THE RIFLES.

THE honours of the great International Rifle Match at Bisley in connection with the Olympic Games, in the words of General Drain, the United States commandant, "belong to the family." Yes, but we should have been better pleased if the senior branch of the family had come out on top. The United States team won with 2,531 points, the United Kingdom being second with 2,496 and Canada third with 2,439. The shooting was phenomenal, especially when regard is paid to the conditions of wind and weather. Each man fired in all 90 rounds at distances from 200 up to 1,000 yards. The teams were six aside, and thus if every competitor made bull's-eyes with each shot the result would have been an individual aggregate per team of 450 and a grand total of 2,700. Of course nothing approaching a "possible" of this kind was to be expected, but the United States team's score for a two days match, with a recognised military rifle, is probably the best performance of the kind which has ever been accomplished. Two of the men, Leushner of New York and Martin of New Jersey, dropped only 20 points in the possible 450, the value of four bull's-eyes, while Ommundsen of Edinburgh, the ex-King's gold medallist, who was the best of the Britishers, dropped only 26 points.

The success of the United States marksmen has revived discussion among experts as to the relative values of rifles and ammunition. There are those who lean to the opinion that the United Kingdom and Canadian teams were beaten in materiel rather than men. The American new Springfield rifle, adopted by the War Office at Washington in 1903, but not issued till 1906, has a 24 inch barrel, and is thus one inch shorter than the shortened Lee-Enfield with which the regular troops of Great Britain are equipped and six inches shorter than the Lee-Enfield served out to the old Volunteer force and with which the United Kingdom team shot in this match. The American gun has the advantage of having had retained in its shortened form almost as great an axis between the fore and the backsights as rifles fitted with barrels that are 30 inches long. The short Springfield, too, fires a sharp-nosed hard cased bullet that weighs only 180 grains, which obtains an enormous muzzle velocity.

It is well known that many of our own Army men disbelieve in the shortened Lee-Enfield for target shooting, as witness the fact that in the United Service and other matches in England they use the long barrel, but there is now clear evidence of the fact that the new Springfield—shorter than our own rifle—is capable of the very best work alike at long and short ranges. The aperture sight on the Springfield is admittedly an advantage as compared with our own open sights. The adoption of the aperture for our Service rifle has frequently been urged, but this far without avail.

The Americans left nothing to chance. Their cartridges were specially made for the match, and every grain of powder was carefully weighed and even subjected to microscopic tests. The War Office Department at Washington took the whole matter in hand. In choosing General Drain as commandant it procured perhaps the best man for this duty in the States, and it further paid tribute to the importance of the occasion by equipping its champions with a special uniform of a fine serviceable type. The ways of Washington are not the ways of Whitehall. The British Government did nothing for the United Kingdom team. Everything was left to the National Rifle Association, which is a purely voluntary organisation, with no national coffers into which it may dip its fingers.

General Drain has no doubt as to the relative merits of the short and long rifle. He attributed the victory of his team largely to the new Springfield weapon and is convinced that America has nothing to learn from anybody in the matter of small arms for the use of soldiers.

Since General Drain spoke, however, another Richmond has entered the feld. At the National Rifle Association's meeting at Bisley the worth of the Ross rifle, adopted by the Canadian Government has been splendidly demonstrated. Mr. F. W. Jones, who is a chemist in explosives and a member of the North London Rifle Club, carried off the Halford and Edge long range matches with the Dominion's new ·280 arm, finishing ahead of Springfields, Enfields, Mannlichers and all the field of the world's rifles. Mr. Jones used a special ammunition in the new 180 grain Ross-Eley cartridge. The new rifle has been a long time in coming forward to perfection, but it has now arrived at its final stage, and Sir Frederick Borden has decided that the Canadian forces shall receive the rifle within a year, so that at the next Bisley an opportunity may be afforded of seeing what a Canadian team can do with it.

We have now a Canadian and a United States rifle which show us some points in progress towards the ideal, and it is for the British Government to move in the matter and place the representatives of Great Britain on a level with the equipment of other nations. The Government experts say they could improve the shooting qualities of our rifle if they were allowed, but that reasons of economy, which are unknown across the Atlantic, keep them back. Having such a stock of metal and rifle parts on hand, they cannot obtain permission to "scrap" it all and get forward from the dead level. Thus, to-day, we are fitting obsolete parts into new rifles; that is to say, they are obsolete when judged by the strength of other rifles. Surely, this is a very short-sighted policy.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

There was another excellent day's racing in Calcutta on Saturday at the Fifth Monsoon Meeting. The weather was most extraordinarily considerate and a threatening shower held off till the very last race when it could contain itself no longer and celebrated Moira's victory with a first-class downpour. A few dry days beforehand made the going the best that we have had in the monsoons for some years and the times were in consequence exceptionally good. A long and attractive card of eight events saw victory for roaring hot favourites in five of them and to the rankest outsiders in the other three but the books confessed to having done better than of late. Mr. Evers for the first time these monsoons went through a day without a winning ride, rather hard luck, as he ran four seconds. Murdison scored his usual couple of wins, and Mr. Barrow also added two to his total.

The Open Hurdle Race was first on the card and a field of seven started for it. The famous old cross-country rider Alford showed that he had lost none of his skill and piloted the favourite Dangar successfully to a narrow victory over Ynyslas. The winner is by no means an easy ride.

Mataura was fencing very badly and cannoned right into Camira at the fourth hurdle, knocking him over and giving Smallman a fall. Leading Lady ran third, Merry Elsie a bad fourth, five lengths behind.

The Third Amateur Hurdle Race, 1st Division, had only six starters of whom Idle was an odds on favourite, Seditious and Lady Gold next most backed. Seditious at once went out to the front. Yulgibar was next till he refused badly at the third jump. The leader was well in hand by the fourth jump when Idle moved up to him. From this point Idle had the race in hand although Lady Gold put in a determined challenge over the last hurdle. Idle has now scored three firsts and a third out of five starts during the monsoons! Queen of Hearts ran disappointingly and finished a bad fourth. Mr. Wallace Jones pluckily gave Yulgibar a school on his own after he had refused the third hurdle.

The Mediocre Handicap was rightly thought a very good thing for Clynder, who lying in a nice position till 3 furlongs from the finish came through and won easily. Craigendarrie finishing second.

The Third Amateur Hurdle Race II. was one of the surprises of the day. Cain and Roland went out to the front a long way from Diablo. Matsumata and Blue Bell II., the favourites, hung back thinking that the leaders would come back to them but they miscalculated the pace and the going and were never in the race at all, and though Matsumata came up with a strong rush at the end, she could get no where near them. Cain ran on well and though Diablo coming very strong beat Roland for the second place he could not get near the leader who won comfortably by two lengths. The year's abstinence from racing has done the old hunter a lot of good and he ran a better horse than ever he did in the old days.

The September Plate I. was surprise No. 2. Colina looked so well in on past form and present condition that she was backed for about as much as the books cared to take, but not for the first time she ran an arrant jade, and as soon as she was collared put her ears back and refused to gallop a yard. Silphoe then came out and running past Foy and The Cingalee beat the former by three lengths. She paid the handsome dividend of Rs. 215 on the totalisator.

THERE were several of them backed for the Second Amateur Hurdle Race. Meprise and then Lady George most in demand. Furlong went out at a furious pace and led the field over five flights when he tired away to nothing. The Pink 'Un Lily II., Meprise, Emerald, Lady George and Dynamite took the fifth almost together and in a fine race home between the first four Lily II. came out and won easily from Meprise, Emerald and Pink 'Un next.

GOLDEN was nicely in the handicap for the September Plate II., and though Howie made a great effort with Lord D, the mare had him easily and won by half a length. She was looking very fit and well and does her trainer much credit. The last race of the day saw another "good thing" come off when Moira, the even money chance, won all the way, though Primrose made her gallop a bit at the finish to keep ahead.

THE entries for the sixth meeting on the 12th promise well again, though there is a little falling off from the last. The Open Pony Hurdle Race with 24 has been divided. Entries for the Amateur Hurdles have shrunk to 15 and with three of these entered elsewhere there are not likely to be more than 10 starters. The open hurdle entry continues to improve.

WE are informed that the statement in our last issue that Messrs. Glance and Harper were occupying 36, Old Ballygunge jointly is quite incorrect.

THERE has been a little schooling in preparation for next Saturday. On Sunday Miss Preston (Alford) Zig Zag (Mr. Glen) and Lionel (Mr. Cowper) went three flights half pace. Monday Pineal (Mr. Tremearne) and Moira (Howie) went three flights Lord Chester (Thomas) negotiated four fences in fair style. Lady Mana (Mr. Barrow) and Golden Star (Thomas) jumped in company in good form, the last named only doing three hurdles. On Wednesday Nimrod (Mr. Evers) fenced very well by himself and Schoolboy (Mr. Rutland) and Dougall (Mr. Bletsoe) went very fast over 5 flights. Both jumped well.

J. S. HARPER, the trainer, has brought up with him from Colombo the two English mares Marcella by Marco Cellaret, 4yrs., and Morino by Eager—la Zarabanda, 3yrs. They are the property of Mr. E. de Soysa, the Ceylon sportsman, who, we hear, is giving up racing. The mares will race here and are for sale.

THE Hyderabad Polo Tournament originally fixed to commence on the 21st instant has been postponed to the first week in November.

THAT good sportsman Captain R. C. Goodfellow, of the 38th Central India Horse has been laid up in hospital in Colombo with enteric. We are glad to learn that he is now on the road to a complete recovery.

"I THINK I omitted to mention the eleventh International Fly and Bait Casting Tournament in my notes on the Olympic Games, writes our London Correspondent. It was a most interesting competition and some exceptional talent was on hand, the winner turning up in Mr. J. T. Emery who beat all comers handsomely. His record of 87 yards 2 feet was made in 1898 with a 'Silex' reel and steel centre 'Murdoch' rod. This rod was built by Messrs. Hardy Bros., of Alnwick, and its best certificate is perhaps to be found in the fact that Mr. Emery has used it for ten years and has won five first and two second prizes with it in seven attempts. He writes that 'the rod is as straight and perfect now as when it left the factory.'

"But the Messrs. Hardy not only make very fine tackle, they can use it most skilfully too, as Mr. J. J. Hardy and his two sons conclusively proved at the Olympic Games tournament when they took between them six first prizes for casting, four second and five third—a most meritorious performance.

"A remarkable feature of this tournament was the success of the trio in the 10ft. 6in. single-handed event. Mr. J. J. Hardy was first, Laurence R. Hardy second, and Harold John Hardy third. There were twelve competitors.

"This is the first tournament, we are informed, in which the present make of "Palakona" built-cane rods have been used, and it is claimed that they took seventeen out of a possible twenty-one gold medals."

THIS is the latest dog story to hand. A motor-car was passing through Tiverton streets at a modest and lawful pace when the fox-terrier ran in front of it, disappearing from the driver's view with a despairing yelp. The driver pulled up suddenly, and dismounted to search his tyres for traces of fox-terrier. But neither on the tyres, nor behind, nor under the car was any sign of death. Giving up the puzzle of the lost dog, the chauffeur stepped to the front of his car to turn the starting handle. There was the fox-terrier hanging by his collar to the handle, a silent dog, terrified by his narrow escape, who scurried away unhurt as soon as released.

THERE was prospect of another Marathon race when latest advices left London. Having regard to the disappointment and failure connected with the race at the Olympic Games The Evening News has come forward with the offer of a £100 first prize and valuable second and third for a race to be run over the same course on the second Saturday of October. Our English Sporting Letter gives other details.

THE luxury yacht grows more wonderful every year. Commodore Plant, of the New York Yacht Club, and a millionaire, has just taken possession of a vessel built for him at Leith. Seen at Cowes the other day as she was about to sail for America, she was pronounced to represent the acme of comfort afloat.

Just as she was about to start, one detail was found to be lacking in the equipment of this luxuriously appointed vessel. There was, the doctor said, no installation of "X" ray apparatus in the yacht's two hospitals—one of which is provided for guests, the other for the crew. This omission was speedily rectified by Mr. A. R. Dean, of Hatton Garden, who spent three days in the floating palace—while it lay off Southampton—installing a costly system of "X" ray batteries and coils.

"The stokers in this splendid yacht step from the stokehold doors into a compartment where special shower baths are provided for them," said a visitor describing what he saw while on board. "Below decks I was shown a perfectly equipped swimming bath, such as one would never dream of seeing on board a ship. The cabins for the millionaire owner's guests are particularly luxurious.

"There is a magnificently furnished library stocked with handsomely bound volumes. The dining and drawing rooms are luxurious to a degree—softly carpeted, elegantly furnished: and illuminated with great clusters of electric lights. Mirrors, costly ornamentations, and gleaming fittings face one on every hand in this wonderful ship. She is far more luxurious than any hotel I have entered."

THOSE ambidexterous cricketers, tennis players, gunners and others who have, up till now, thought themselves perhaps a shade more classy than their right or left handed friends, will not be best pleased to learn on the authority of Sir J. Crichton-Browne, that ambidexterity is a sign of idiotcy! Lecturing last month at Cambridge the eminent medico remarked that in the present movement in favour of ambidexterity he fancied he detected the old taint of faddism. Ambidexterity on the large scale was impossible and undesirable. It was by the superior need of his right hand that man had gained the victory, and to try to undo his dextral pre-eminence was simply to fly in the face of evolution.

They had no instance, said Sir James, of any tribe, community, or people that had grown out of it or broken away from it and found salvation in ambidexterity. A recently published book had alleged that the Japanese were by law and practice ambidextrous, but he had the authority of the Japanese Ambassador emphatically to deny this. As a result of personal investigation he was inclined to believe that the left-handed and ambidextrous together did not exceed 4 per cent. of the population of this country.

At Eton ambidexterity was being inculcated by an ordinance that all the boys who for their transgressions were called upon to write lines should henceforth do so with the left hand. He had had an opportunity of asking one of these boys how he got on in the performance of this task. "Oh," he replied, "it's quite simple. We take the pen in the fingers of the left hand and we work them with the right."

As the result of physiological inquiry Sir James said that it could not now be doubted that right and left handedness were dependent on cerebral organisations and nothing else.

Ambidexterity was common only among idiots, and to endeavour to ensure its general cultivation, as its ardent apostles desired, would mean the enlargement of our already overgrown lunatic asylums.

JUDGE MULLIGAN, of King's Lynn, is not partial to the bookmaker, against whom he recently brought a strong indictment. "There is not a vestige of true sport about the chambers of betting men" said he. "They are, the Kala jagahs, dark holes of the racecourse, from which the bookmaker tempts workers to stake their living on a horse or on a mount.

"Then, when they are luckless and broke he tries to force them to pay, no matter how the money was obtained by threatening to have them cast into prison.

"In some cases," his honour went on, "the bookmakers have the assistance of bet collectors and other hired instruments of greed and deception."

The remarks were made in giving judgment in a case in which Alfred Rowell, a local bookmaker, sought to recover £6 12s. from Arthur Garnett, a commission agent, of Town Hall Chambers, Stratford, balance of moneys won by backing horses at Hurst Park races.

IT is hard indeed to suppress betting. In England the recent Act prohibiting Street Betting has given rise, to many ingenious schemes for evading police vigilance. To avoid the risk of being found in possession of betting-slips when under arrest, the street "bookies" now employ a man to whom they immediately pass all "numbers" after checking the correctness of the accompanying cash. The accomplice is supplied with a bundle of stamped addressed envelopes, and the incriminating document is at once placed in one of the nearest pillar boxes to the bookmaker's private address. This is one of many devices. "Why attempt to bribe the police, when one can so easily evade them?" they say. Why, indeed? But when will a Government come into power with sufficient knowledge of humanity to know that prohibitive legislation merely aggravates the evil it is meant to cure?

As will be seen from the account given in our English sporting letter, T. W. Burgess, the Yorkshire swimmer, failed on the 8th ultimo to get across the English Channel. It was his eleventh attempt and his most brilliant effort, for he had to give up when within a mile of the French coast. It was only after a prolonged struggle lasting over twenty hours that the plucky Yorkshireman was convinced of the hopelessness of the effort unless he was prepared to stay in the water for at least another six hours. Such a strain upon his vitality he did not think he was capable of withstanding. He felt good for, say, a couple of hours more, but that would not avail him to get to land, and so, at half-past five yesterday morning, he climbed aboard the accompanying tug—unaided, comparatively fresh, and still warm of body. It is calculated that Burgess in his long stay swam and drifted at least 50 miles, and, according to careful reckoning, he was but half a mile from the French shore.

DETAILS of a marvellous cycling feat are given in Sport in England to-day. A. E. Willis, the old Putney amateur, on the 18th ultimo, rode 61 miles 970½ yards (100 kilometres) in hr. 34secs., a feat that put him in the front rank of present day speed men.

IN English boxing circles a meeting during the coming winter between Burns and Moir is looked forward to the gunner will challenge the champion if he returns to England after his visit to Australia.

MELBOURNE INMAN, the billiard player, who was through India last cold weather, has challenged for the billiard championship of England. Entries were to close on the 24th ultimo, but up to the 21st his was the only name sent in.

THE Northern India Golf Championship was concluded at Gulmarg on the 31st ultimo when Mr. Colbeck, R.E., beat Captain Buist in the final by 3 and 2. The Ladies' Championship was won by Mrs. Douglas by 2 and 1.

THE following are the results of English cricket during the last week :—

The match between Yorkshire and the M. C. C. resulted in a draw.

The following matches were abandoned owing to rain: Surrey vs. Leicestershire, Hants vs. Middlesex and Sussex vs. Gloucestershire.

The matches between the Gentlemen and Players at Scarborough, and between the Australian eleven and an England eleven at Hastings, have been drawn.

WE have received from Messrs. Barton, Son and Company of Bangalore a photograph of the silver casket which has been presented to Sir Lawrence Jenkins, the late Chief Justice of Bombay, by a committee of gentlemen headed by Mr. D. E. Watcha. The casket is yet another example of the splendid work turned out by Messrs. Barton Son and Company for which they are well known throughout India. This handsome memorial takes the shape of a silver fluted column with a chased capital surmounted by a solid silver winged figure of "Justice." It stands on a square silver base with allegorical figures at each corner representing the four wings. On one panel of the base is given an embossed view of the High Court Buildings of Bombay, on another the City Arms, on another Sir Lawrence Jenkins' crest and on the fourth panel the following inscription :—

To
The Hon'ble Sir Lawrence Jenkins, K.C.I.E., &c., &c.,
Slight token of the esteem appreciation and admiration
In which he was universally held
In the City and Presidency of Bombay.

The extreme height of the casket is 17¼ inches, and the width at base 9 inches.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—There is no doubt that the Colombo race course is, if not the finest east of Suez, at any rate on a par with the best in India. It reminds me more of Phœnix Park or some of the best courses at home; and after the dust tracks and litter covered courses I have been accustomed to with here and there a patch of green grass, it is refreshing to find not only the greenest of turf all round the course, but an equally good training track on the inside.

There are however one or two serious drawbacks which make it a very expensive job sending horses over from India and the first and foremost of these is the absence of bookmakers. The Pari Mutuel is all very well in its way and doubtless when an outsider rolls up, the odds paid are far more generous than could be obtained from our friend the bookie. But at the same time it is very unsatisfactory not to know what odds you are likely to get, and to have the certainty of knowing if you are the owner of the favourite that you will get little or nothing better than even money if you are lucky and even then only to a small amount.

The only other betting medium is an insignificant totalizator, and it is anything but pleasant to have to fight your way through a mass of natives in order to put on a few two rupee tickets. I am told that the reason of the abolition of the bookmaker is that some few seasons ago the Colombo Turf Club gave the monopoly to one firm, and that the odds obtainable were the very shortest, and that the lucky layer returned to India having made so large a packet that he had to hire a ship to take it back. The obvious retort is why did the C.T.C. give a monopoly instead of encouraging several firms to compete.

I feel sure that if bookmakers were invited to come, that they would respond as the racing is of the very best, and the chief meetings of the year, viz., the monsoon meeting in May, and the Colombo week (four days racing) in August, take place at a time when there is little or nothing doing in India.

There is plenty of room for half a dozen brothers of the pencil and a rich harvest for all.

Everything done by the Colombo Turf Club is of the best; the course, as I said before, compares favourably with many English courses, the stands and stabling arrangements are perfect, and there are signs of great prosperity, everything being done in the "money no object" style.

This being so and the Turf Club being presumbly well in funds it would, I think, be a popular inovation to reduce the entry fees as they are now very much out of proportion to the stakes to be won, bearing in mind the fact that there being no bookmakers it is very difficult for the owner to help himself. During the recent meeting I should say the biggest winner undoubtedly was the Turf Club as the majority of the most valuable prizes were given and the funds cannot have been called on to any great extent.

Another hint to owners bringing ponies from India. Be sure and bring the pony's certificate of measurement with you as otherwise nothing but the Colombo measurement will be accepted. It seems a pity that so sporting a meeting should not be under Calcutta Turf Club Rules as at present the outsider owner "don't know where he are." If the bookies are allowed to come here once more it would do more to popularize the meeting than anything else and would make it worth the while of every racing man to come over and bring his best. At present the races are run in funereal silence and the Roar of the Ring is never heard. The fare of a pony from Bombay 3½ days by P. & O. is under Rs. 50. Training fees are expensive, being about Rs. 115 per month. And jockeys fees are just double of what they are in India. So bring your own.

OUR Bombay Correspondent writes:—The annual cricket match between the Bombay Gymkhana and Byculla Club came off on Monday on the former's ground and resulted in a very substantial win for the home side. They won the toss and went in first and after Sanderson's early dismissal began to make little of the bowling. West, 18, kept Phillips' company for some time and then Captain Turner had a long partnership with the former, the pair making 94 and 71. Vines played an unfinished innings of 26 and Coombs 20, and Baker 12 helped to raise the score to 271. Jardine bowled most successfully taking 7 for 68.

The Club made a very poor start and four were out for 27, but then in Gillum Jardine found someone to stay with him and they carried the score to 70, Gillum making 17 and Jardine 39. Wickets again fell rapidly and nine were out for 81 but Campbell 19 and Wimbush, not out 31, made a good stand for the last and brought the score to 123. Milne took 7 for 57.

Time enough remained for the Club to follow on and before they were interrupted by rain they ran up 97 for 4, Wimbush being not out 68—107 without being once out.

THE weekly Mounted Sports were continued on Wednesday after an interval owing to the Rugby Tournament and had large numbers of spectators as well as competitors. The ladies were again catered for and, in fact, had an event all to themselves, a trotting race. Nine started and it looked a good thing for Mrs. Hatch till just near home she was unfortunate in her horse breaking and the verdict consequently went to Mrs. Turner Green from Mrs. Blunt and Mrs. Kirby.

They again took a part in the pre-Raphaelite Stakes in which they had to draw the animal assigned to them individually for their partners to guess. Mrs. Binning proved quite an artist and Captain Mackie guessing immediately they got home first followed by Mrs. McClausland and Barraclough and Captain and Mrs. Nash.

Actually first on the programme were the jumping events for horses and ponies, in the former of which Griffin was returned winner on Stileman's Lux with Christie and Dunckley next. In the pony event Griffin again won from O. Symons.

An exciting and tantalising event is the Lloyd Lindsay when it is not always the man who get there first that first knock off their cocoanuts. It was run in half sections and Clare and Andrews won from Saxby and Retallack.

Not an easy matter was the picking up of tennis balls with racquets whilst mounted, six of them having to be deposited in a bucket. Entries ran into double figures and Barraclough won with Major Kilkelly second.

Lastly came an unusual event, a hurdle race which was quite exciting, there being insufficient entries the ponies were put into the same race with the horses and given 50 yards. After a good race the winner turned up in Rommel on Good Luck, just returned from a disappointing exhibition in the Closed Meeting at Poona. He was followed by Symons and Dunckley.

Our Poona Correspondent writes :—There was a time when very few books would entertain the idea of a Closed Meeting, but on Monday last there were very few who did not stand, and such was the betting that they were able to work at a profit without taking any risks in most of the races. With a very fair attendance, it was quite a pleasant affair, though there were somewhat glaring cases when the professionals could not be blamed for smiling up their sleeves.

Procredings opened with the Hurdle Plate in which five started, but Donald putting in a pretty buck before the first jump unshipped Bond. Nell Gwynne, Cairnsmore, Umutbee and Daroji raced in a bunch all the way with Good Luck a bad last, and when it came to racing Nell Gwynne easily stayed out the favourites, Cairnsmore and Umutbee.

The Novice Plate found six, Mirdas a warm favourite from Sher and White Oats. Sher made the early running to be passed as though done with by Mashook who in turn gave up the leadership to Mirdas and he looked like coming in on his own. Near the post, however, Sher came on again and though hopelessly late came within half a length.

In the Open Pony Plate the supposed good thing, Pretty Polly was scratched as being not eligible and Belle Cole was made favourite though it was rumoured that should he win he would be objected to. Piccadilly and Robin got the better of the favourite at the start, but at the bend she drew up to the leader. These two were having a great race, when Captain Bingham on Redshot found room inside and coming through won cleverly with the other two dead-heating.

In the other three furlongs for Arabs, Arabistan, whom we have not seen on the course for a couple of years, was in demand from Ramah and Forester. A very level start slightly favoured Ramah, and after a great race with Arabistan he just got home by a neck.

A good open race was expected in the Horse Welter Plate with eight left in and the books refused to take any liberties with Lady Lomond till they found but little public money coming for her and a rush for Ashanti Gold made him a hot odds on favourite, Pincher and Lady Lomond at fives and Spirea and Yuba next. A surprise was in store as after the favourite had passed the bend in the lead from the start, Pincher came along well in hand to win easily, Spirea third. The time, 1min. 20secs., should have seen both Spirea and Lady Lomond closer, though at was alleged that the winner interfered with the latter and an objection was lodged only to be almost immediately withdrawn.

Four started for the Pony Plate, Tete-a-Tete a firm favourite from Redshot. Belle Olaf made the running and the run Redshot put in on the outside and up the hill neither favoured his chances or shewed any marked superiority of the professional's judgment over the amateur. In the straight Tete-a Tete had him well set, when Belle Olaf going strong came up to her and a furlong from home was just in front. Though Mr. Beaumont has acquired the Killorn seat, he has not acquired his finesse, as he certainly should not have been caught as he was by a head on the post.

Lastly came the Arab Welter Plate with a pile again for Arabistan who started equal favourite with Modesty from M. V. O. and Betty, who was expected by the public to be nearer than nearly last on form. Modesty made the pace from Express who gave up his position to M. V. O., who also passed the leader at the bend. Nearing home Martini made a great effort, but fell short by a head.

The Opening Day of the Poona Big Meeting on Saturday may be said to have been a great success and the racing interesting despite the fact that in the majority of cases the winners were not troubled at the finish. Quite a fitting attendance was present and the Books, with most of the "big bugs" standing up, had a bad time. H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala and the Hon. Mr. A. A. Apcar were present, but Mr. Galstaun and "Jack" Scott have given us the go-bye. Ideal weather favoured the meet and consequently times were good, especially Metal Maid's mile and Creditor's half mile.

We opened with the Yerrowda Plate in which Seclusion looked good, though Killeevan and Clear Artist were said to lep well. Both of the latter ran well and Killeevan gave his supporters hope at the last bend, but Seclusion was still well in hand after leading all the way and won fairly comfortably.

Next came the Lilliputs, which Bay Middleton won last year and which we have been accustomed to look upon as a good thing for him, but we have some rare little sprinters now and Creditor was almost as short a price as the champion. Having developed into a rare disturber of the peace, the favourite again delayed the field and he and Sher Ali got away badly. Mountain King jumped away with a three-length lead from Creditor and Plassey, and the opinion was expressed that he would not be caught. Darby, Sahoon and Bay Middleton passed Plassey and the bay came into third place some way behind Creditor, who caught the leader at the distance. From here Creditor had the race won and passed the post fairly comfortably.

Sixteen started for the Aga Khan's Commemoration Plate with Precious, despite his 9-12 and the good stayers we now have, a slight favourite from Peculiar and Sialkote. Gladiator made all the running till Sialkote and then Peculiar came into the lead. In the straight that great horse Precious began to come outside and, passing everything, won in the grand style of his palmy days to meet with a great reception.

It was with a feeling that it was the bonne bouche that the field of the Trial Plate was inspected, and that this was the race on which to bet. Thirteen classy animals paraded and after a great duel with Wandin, Metal Maid wound up favourite. Bucolic flew out as on the previous occasion, but Metal Maid soon had him struggling and led Cinder Bill and Wandin from the bend. First Wandin made his run to be staved off, as was Cinder Bill when he put in his late run along the rails. After her performances over five and six furlongs it was a great win for Metal Maid, who got her full due on coming in.

Nothing but Russley Rose was seriously wanted by the public for the New Plate after her last run, though all the place money procurable on Lady Nannie was taken and Florrie's stable showed some confidence. Florrie beat them all at the gate and her four-length lead provided great excitement. Passing Lady Leslie, however, Russley Rose gradually drew up and catching the leader, who stopped to nothing a furlong from home, the favourite waltzed home to the delight of onlookers, Lady Leslie coming late got her place in front of Cracker, who finished quite strong.

For the Maiden Plate seventeen went out. Mudlool a firm favourite from Amood. When they settled down Gerjistan led Mudlool, but at the bend the latter coming into the lead comfortably staved off Viceroy, Amood and Lookman. Mr. Beg with this win and Happy Land's, has been most fortunate in his recent speculation, as lucky as the late owner is unlucky.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 21st August 1908.

Beyond the trifles out of which I have tried to manufacture a letter there is absolutely no news this week. The silly season is now at its acutest stage as you may judge by the following subjects now going strong in some of the dailies. "Are our teeth decaying," "Marriage and Morals," "The Motor Pest and how to eradicate it," "Should Bank Clerks Marry," "Ideals of Marriage" with, of course, something from the Rev. Father Bernard Vaughan, this time a few moralisings on the blessings of physical pain suggested by a recent cycling accident which befel him and rather jarred portions of his well nourished anatomy.

Then there has been the Great Vulture Hunt, carried on in leaders, descriptive articles, special reports, bulletins and "latest news" items in the columns of the ha'penny evening sheets. Five miserable vultures—value 30*s.* each—escaped from the premises of a wild animal man and for days we have had columns devoted to their movements. At the time of writing, two have been done to death, one with a stick, the other as the result of the combined efforts of two Nimrods who, after thirty-nine shots with miniature rifles, brought their quarry down from a chimney stack. The local inhabitants, we are told, have been scared by the obscene fowl, and, incredible as it may seem, the police have had to be reinforced in order to cope with the congestion of traffic wherever the birds have perched. Some delightful bosh of the anecdotal zoology order has also been served up to us ; among other things the vultures have been accused of slaying deer in Richmond, carrying off ducks from Regent's Park, killing city pigeons, falcon fashion, and attacking dogs in Brixton ! And the British public purchase this sort of stuff for "news" ! !

MANY people have predicted disaster more or less serious at the Franco-British Exhibition, their apprehensions usually pointing to the scenic railway, the aërial railway or the flip-flap as probable providers of tragedy. Neither of these sensational side shows has, so far, earned an unenviable reputation; it has been left to an airship to supply the first accident and one, unhappily, attended by a fatality, while adding to the long list of airship mishaps without an account of which one's daily paper just now seems incomplete! Captain Lovelace's airship was being inflated with hydrogen, and the preparations for the flight were almost complete when, as he was leaving the tent in which the huge sausaged-shaped bag was housed, he noticed a small rent in the silk. He asked his Secretary, Miss Blanche Hill, to repair it and went outside: a moment afterwards a terrific explosion occurred, the tent was immediately ablaze, the poor girl was killed on the spot, some workmen were frightfully injured and burned, scores of people in the vicinity were knocked down, the tent, airship, and other property were reduced to ashes. The cause will probably remain a mystery. The immediate result was a huge "gate" next day, for the morbid curiosity of the British public of course suggested to tens of thousands a visit to view the ruins and indulge in idle speculation. The average Londoner seems to find peculiar satisfaction in the contemplation of mishap or damage. Really interesting matters that might be calculated to arrest his attention, one would think, pass absolutely unnoticed; but a broken plate glass window in a shop, a horse down, even that commonest sight of the streets—a broken down motor 'bus—will, in a few minutes, draw a gaping crowd and cause a congestion of traffic needing police dispersion. One must often marvel at the thousands of "the employed" in the London streets who have any amount of time to waste.

MR. Winston Spencer Churchill's career so far has been marked by a disposition to exploit many things; like three other recently wedded Cabinet Ministers he has now turned his attention to matrimony and his engagement to Miss Clementine Hozier, daughter of the late Sir Henry Hosier, K.C.B., was officially announced in last Sunday's papers. The bride elect is ten years younger than the President of the Board of Trade and is as charming an example of English beauty as one would discover in a day's walk. Her father died in February last year at Panama. He had a distinguished military career, serving in China and in Abyssinia, and on retiring from the Army was appointed Secretary of Lloyd's, which post he held for thirty-two years with marked success.

MR. WILLET, the Daylight Bill crank, who some time ago paid a round hundred thousand for that historical old place Cliffords' Inn,— close to Temple Bar and opposite the old "Cock Tavern," as doubtless your readers know—is evidently about to join the ranks of the destroying vandals, for passing down Fleet Street yesterday I saw a board bearing the legend "to be sold freehold or building lease." Pity. Cliffords' Inn escaped the Great Fire and soon I suppose its old red houses, battered hall, paved walks and green plots will disappear and then we shall have left to us only Staple Inn the last of the Inns of Chancery for Clements, Furnival's, Lyon's, New Inn and Barnards have all gone. Dickens described the latter, if you recollect, as a collection of "shabby buildings squeezed into a rank corner as a club for Tom cats."

ONE Mul Lutchman, a Bombay man, last Saturday appeared before the magistrate at Reigate in the familiar rôle of the discharged nowker intent on badnami. If I remember rightly the usual method in India is to loiter round the gates of the compound and blacken master's name to all entering or leaving: but Lutchman, who has imbibed Western ideas, favoured the obscene and libellous postcard system. He once ate the salt of Captain Harold Fielden, D.S.O., but on this officer's retirement from the Army on account of ill-health, his brother, Mr. J. Fielden, took charge of the establishment and Lutchman was discharged with a good chit and an offer of a return passage to India. Evidently a type specimen of the badmash element from which the modern Indian servant is recruited, he has for some time demanded large sums of money under threats of "making hot time" for Captain Fielden, and when at a hunt meet he rolled up his sleeves and made a show of committing an assault it was considered the time was ripe to deal with him. Committed to the sessions is Lutchman.

A PICTURESQUE party of five thousand Frenchmen —chiefly uniformed bandsmen, blouse—clad workmen and baggy-breeched artisans, all displaying bits of the tricolor and assorted badges—invaded London last Saturday and put in about as strenuous a time as I have heard of recently. Two full nights were spent in travelling from Paris and back again and into fourteen hours of London they crowded an amazing amount of sight seeing, brake driving, Marseillaise singing and talking: they talked incessantly and all at once. Many were asked to prolong their stay over Sunday, but visions of the horrors of the London Sabbath led to a respectful refusal. They were delighted with the trip and the two things which seemed to impress them most were the regulation of the traffic and the beauty of the English girls. Bien!

THE Moody-Manners Opera Company began a season at the Lyric Theatre last Monday night with a performance of Wagner's "Lohengrin." To the many who prefer to be able to follow the words of the singers, grand opera in English is always popular, and the manner of last night's revival, both with regard to mounting and cast, and to the strength of the orchestra, left little to be desired. As interpreted by many operatic singers, grand opera in English is apt to sound as unintelligible to the lay ear as when sung in Italian; but the Moody-Manners Company are a welcome exception in this direction. Not only is full justice done to the depth and meaning of the music, but the words are pronounced with a beautiful clearness.

Mr. Philip Brozel appeared as Lohengrin, and scored a notable success, acting with vigour and feeling, and singing with richness and power. Madame De Vere-Sapio sang beautifully as Elsa, and Miss Marie Louise Roger as Ortrud made the most of the part. Mr. Charles Manners as the King, Mr. Lewys James as Frederick and Mr. Charles Moorhouse as Herald, were all seen to advantage; the chorus was admirably drilled; and Herr Richard Eckhold conducted perfectly.

DISAPPOINTMENT is the lot of those who have been following with interest the experiment of the Liverpool police, who have been indulging in a bloodhound hunt for the criminal who murdered a child and concealed its body in an uninhabited house. Fairly nonplussed in their investigations some bright person suggested enlisting the aid of the dog detective, but the way the police went about it was ludicrous in the extreme. Had the bloodhound been brought on the scene earlier in the day, as we all know, he might have helped much, but what did the police do? They allowed days to elapse ere they put the hound on to the trail; they omitted to keep the trail clean by covering up the spot from which the scent was to be taken up; they admitted numberless people to the vicinity, they actually gave the hound the poor child's clothes to smell—quite the wrong scent to put him on to! Result of three days' aimless pottering—nil. Still it is something to find the English police at last seriously considering a powerful auxiliary regularly requisitioned in other countries. Major F. W. Richardson, the well-known authority on war dogs and their training, has written interestingly on the subject and given the Liverpudlian bobbies a deal of good advice and instruction. They may do better next time.

THE latest street danger appeared last Wednesday when the new electric taxicabs were seen plying for hire and making pedestrians skip. The cars are neat and presented quite a private vehicle appearance; they have been dubbed "taxilectros" and some will doubtless ere long be taxilectrocutors. This further development of the horseless carriage strengthens the belief that within two years the horse 'bus will completely disappear from the London streets. I for one refrain from rejoicing at its doom: I prefer, especially in the city, the old 'bus to the greasy smelling, shattering, motor with its brigand driver and insolent conductor, besides when one is in a hurry—as one usually is in the city—one has to take a horse 'bus or risk being dumped down en route by the peverse and unreliable motor.

I see the good Bishop of Bombay has been emulating Mr. Spencer Churchill's fire extinguishing feats in that when the picturesque church of Holy Trinity, Wonston, near Winchester, was partially burned down early this week he "lent valuable assistance in extinguishing the flames." He was a guest at Lady Laura Ridding's residence close by.

The memory of General Sir Redvers Buller is to be honoured with a memorial at Crediton, where he was born and lived whenever he was not on active service. Sir John Shelley has taken the initiative in the matter, and before the recent meeting of the general's friends, at Crediton, he communicated with Miss Buller, so as to ascertain the views of the family. On behalf of Lady Audrey Buller and herself, Miss Buller stated that they would like any memorial to take the form of a design in mosaic work on the bare space above the chancel arch in the parish church. This proposal was at once endorsed by those who have taken the lead in the matter.

"Cummanavanoxygen" is the latest invitation in quite up-to-date circles.

THE FIGHT OF THE RAMS.

THE dining-room door was pushed ajar and a head appeared. "Come out on the verandah when you have finished your breakfast," it said, "and I will show you the mountain sheep that I spoke of the other day." Then the head was withdrawn and the door closed behind it

I was a travelling photographer in those days and my business had taken me to Dillon, a small village in the Rocky Mountains of Colorado, early in the spring. The mountain-tops were still covered with snow, but in the valleys and on some of the southern slopes the earth had cast off its white mantle and was robing itself in delicate green. The tender new grass, I well knew, would tempt the sheep and deer of mountain and forest to graze in places where they could not be found later in the season and during hours that would be very unusual at other times.

No Nimrod am I. Indeed I dislike to take the life of any creature and seldom do unless driven to it by necessity. But I had long coveted a pair of horns or antlers with which to decorate a certain corner of my private den, and in order to have a right to display them thus I felt that I must kill and rob their original owner rather than buy them honestly at second hand. The time and place seemed quite opportune for the carrying out of my project and as soon as I was settled I had asked my landlord about the prospect of finding game in the vicinity. In answer he had pointed out an open space on the side of a mountain some four or five miles distant and told me that a flock of mountain sheep were frequently to be seen grazing there. "I got the leader of the flock last year," he added. "But there's two fine rams left and no one has been after them since. They can't be very wild, and if you want a pair of horns you will never have a better opportunity to get them." He had promised to let me know when next the sheep appeared, and the mission of the head had been the fulfilment of his promise.

I hastily finished my breakfast and hurried out to the verandah. The landlord handed me a pair of field-glasses and by their aid I was able to count thirteen creatures that were evidently grazing. But the distance was so great that the rams could not be distinguished from the rest of the flock. They might, indeed, have been domestic sheep for all I could see. But what I could not see my imagination and the landlord's description readily supplied and I needed no urging to accept the proffered loan of a gun.

I went upstairs to change my clothes and when I returned, though I had been absent but a few minutes, all my fellow-boarders were assembled in the hotel office to see me off. The season's work in the mines had not yet begun; and the miners, after a long winter of idleness, were only too glad of any diversion from the regular routine of eating, sleeping, and card-playing. I expected to be the butt of many a good natured jest, but as my wits had seldom failed me in framing a retort I felt no concern. But the jests took a different form from what I had expected. The miners were all sure that I would get one or both of the rams and were only anxious to advise me as to the best way to remove the head and the best taxidermist to send it to. Their banters annoyed me much more than I cared to have them know. It was quite plain that they considered mountain sheep a game that would tax the patience and skill of an experienced hunter—and me a raw tenderfoot who might better be hunting rabbits! I realized that they were about right, and that my chances of securing the coveted pair of horns depended on good fortune rather than my skill. Otherwise their jests would not have been so exasperating. The miners followed me out to the verandah and called their advice after me as I walked away. I determined to turn the laugh back on them, but there seemed to be only one away in which that could be done. That way was to bring back a ram.

I followed the valley road for some distance and then turned aside to make my way along a cañon that led up the mountain and passed near the feeding-ground of the sheep. I found the bottom of the cañon filled with hard snow and made quite rapid progress, as the ascent was gradual and never very great. I soon reached the talus that the landlord had told me was at about the same altitude as the spot where the sheep were grazing. But there I found the bottom of the cañon covered with the débris of a recent slide and the walking very difficult. Several times I attempted to ascend the talus despite caution that I had received against it, but always found the footing so unstable that I soon turned back. At last I reached a point where the talus was broken by an almost perpendicular cliff and between talus and cliff, or rather partly on one and partly on the other. I slowly made my way up the side of the gorge.

Once out of the cañon I had but a short climb to a rocky promontory from which I could plainly see my game. They were still a good half mile away, but the glass which I had brought with me made them appear within pistol shot. There were two full grown rams in the flock and each wore as fine a pair of horns as I have ever seen. All were grazing as unconcerned as domestic cattle and to me it seemed an easy task to creep near enough to make sure of my victim without giving them a hint of my presence.

I was at about the same altitude as the grazing flock. Remembering the landlord's caution to approach the game only from above I turned back and made my way along the brink of the cañon till I reached a belt of pine forest that girdled the mountain. There the snow was deep and the walking good, and without any special caution I hurried along till I saw fresh sheep tracks. I followed the trail slowly and cautiously till I reached the edge of the forest and saw the flock still grazing in the open meadow below.

Then I got down on hands and knees, and utilizing every available cover, sometimes a shrub or fallen tree, sometimes a hillock or boulder, I slowly crept closer to the unsuspecting game. At last I reached a pile of rocks and found myself still some three hundred yards from the nearest ram with nothing beyond to afford concealment. There was another heap of rocks about thirty yards to one side, but it was no nearer than the one where I lay concealed.

Those rock-heaps had at one time been great boulders, but the successive frosts and thaws of ages had broken them into irregular fragments weighing from a grain to several tons, and left them in mounds where the original boulders had stood. A better place of concealment I could not have asked.

Had I been a good shot I would not have hesitated about firing at the nearest ram. But it seemed highly probable that in grazing they would sooner or later come near enough so that I could be reasonably sure of success, and I concluded to wait. I knew that success or failure would depend on my first shot, but if I had known how long my vigil was to last I might have been less ready to begin it.

It was not yet noon when I took my position among the rocks, and the sun was just warm enough to make the place comfortable. For a time I watched the sheep and practiced aiming at the nearest ram. When that got monotonous I fell to admiring the panorama spread out before me. The black cliffs and dazzling white slopes of the mountain peaks, the dark forests that covered the lower hills, and the delicate green of the valley. With my glass I followed the winding course of the rail and wagon road and traced the zig-zag path of the burro trails that led from the valley to the mines in the surrounding mountains. Then I turned the glass on the village lying far below me and tried to while away the time by speculating on the identity of the men whom I occasionally saw walking about on the streets.

But before the afternoon was half over I had lost all interest in everything but the sheep. The excitement of the stalk had entirely given place to impatience, for they seemed to have no intention of quitting their feeding-ground. The grass was short, but most of them had satisfied their appetites and were either lying down or standing about idly chewing the cud. They appeared to have no fear of being disturbed and to exercise no special caution to guard against surprise. Sometimes one of them would raise its head, sniff the air, scan the valley below for a few seconds, and then assume its former attitude of indifference. Neither of the rams seemed to have a special care for the flock, but mixed with the ewes and yearlings apparently on an equal footing. Instead of coming closer, as I had expected, they had gradually worked down the mountain till the nearest one was hopelessly out of range.

My position among the rocks was far from being an enviable one. Apart from the natural irksomeness of doing nothing but wait, I was beginning to suffer from the cold, for the sun had gone so low that I was left entirely in the shade. The careless indifference of the sheep, too, was quite exasperating. Had they been more cautious they would have been likely to retreat to the very heap of rocks where I lay concealed before they settled down to enjoy an afternoon rest. But they chose, instead, to remain in that open meadow, in plain view of the village and the surrounding country.

Slowly the sun sank in the west. Gradually the cold that had first attacked my feet crept up my limbs and through my body till it set my teeth to chattering. Lower and lower went my hopes of securing a pair of horns, for their owners seemed perfectly content and likely to remain where they were all night.

But suddenly, as if they had received some signal of danger, every sheep in the flock started and with heads turned toward the valley assumed an attitude of attention. For fully a minute they stood motionless. Then they turned this way and that, sniffing the air for some scent of danger and scanning every rock and tree that might conceal an enemy. But one by one they seemed to conclude that the alarm was false and no danger near. I could soon see, however, that they were rather restless and wary. Presently one of the rams started up toward the forest and the remainder of the flock followed at some distance behind.

They were headed straight toward my place of concealment and I hastily put aside my glass and thrust the muzzle of my rifle through a narrow opening between two rocks. Through that crack I could plainly see them without danger of being seen by them. I kept my eyes fixed on the leader and mentally calculated the decreasing distance that separated us. Three hundred yards, two hundred and fifty, two hundred. On he came; stepping proudly, carrying his head majestically, looking neither to the right nor left. But though he seemed indifferent to his surroundings he evidently saw more than I, for suddenly he wheeled like a flash and with three quick bounds landed in the middle of the flock. I heard a clash, and as the startled ewes and yearlings quickly got out of the way I saw the two rams facing each other.

The aggressor stood on higher ground than the foe that disputed his supremacy, but he showed no disposition to retain his unfair advantage. The other ram backed slowly away, at the same time working his way to higher ground with a sidelong motion. When both occupied equal ground, each of the combatants shook his head, gave a snort of defiance and charged with race-horse speed. They met with a terrific clash and then backed away as slowly and deliberately as if the fight was a rehearsal. Again and again these tactics were repeated. Again and again those magnificent horns met, with a force that would have battered down a stone wall but seemed to have no effect upon the rams. They were equally matched in strength and it seemed evident that the fight would be simply a test of endurance unless I ended it with a bullet. This I was loth to do. But a fear that through some unforseen accident the rams would ultimately escape prompted me to take that course and I had decided to shoot the nearest ram when he was preparing for the next charge. But just then one of the ewes gave a "Baa-ah" and the flock rushed pell mell up the slope with a long tawny streak of something following in great leaps.

The rams forgot their domestic quarel, and as the terrified flock rushed past them both turned to face the common enemy. Leaping upon a fighting ram is a different matter from pulling down a fleeing ewe. So the mountain lion seemed to think as he stood glaring at the two warriors and angrily whipping the air with his long tail. The rams had the advantage of higher ground, and to me it seemed like madness for the lion to attack them. I fully expected him to turn tail and slink away, but he was evidently driven to desperation by hunger and loth to give up all prospect of a mutton supper. He stood for a time irresolute, but when one of the rams began to back away he ran quickly to the side and headed for the heap of rocks above. The rams seemed to realize the advantage that such a position would give him and both turned and bounded toward the other rock-pile where I lay concealed. But the lion changed his course immediately and came after them in mighty leaps. Another bound would have landed him on the back of one of the rams and they were still hopelessly out of reach of the rocks. But again they turned to face him.

The lion stopped and for a moment all three of the creatures stood on guard. Then one of the rams backed a few steps and like a thunderbolt charged straight at the crouching cat. Had a blow from those terrible horns fallen where it was aimed the lion's head would have been crushed to a pulp, but the agile creature leaped out of harm's way and as the ram passed him like a whirlwind he turned to follow it. If it had been alone in the fight that charge would have been its last. Before it could have recovered from the momentum gathered in its fierce onslaught the lion's claws would have been on its back and the lion's teeth in its throat. But even as the lion turned the other ram charged him, though less fiercely, and he was again compelled to seek safety in flight. This time he darted away to the rocks and passed out of my sight.

I quickly changed my position, and though the new one was not as well concealed there seemed to be no danger of my being seen during the excitement of the combat. The rams stood on guard but evidently they could not see the lion for they seemed at a loss to know from what point to expect an attack. Presently, however, a big savage head appeared on the top of a boulder and the lion's long sinuous body followed, clinging close to the rock as if the crafty cat was trying to conceal itself. Yet it must have known that it was seen, for the rams were slowly advancing side by side; stamping the ground and snorting defiance.

The lion kept his position on the rock; his head down and motionless, his tail slowly beating the air, and the muscles of his great legs working as if to gather strength for a mighty leap. His head was a good mark and with my rifle rested on the rock I took a steady aim and fired. The big cat shot through the air and fell half way between the rams and the boulder where it had lain. As I raised up and worked the magazine lever I saw those proud heads lowered as if to meet the lion's next bound with a charge. But I knew that the lion had made his last leap and taking a hasty aim at one of the rams I pulled the trigger. The mark was a fair one and the distance not more than fifty yards, but even before I heard the report I knew that the bullet had gone wild. I might have taken more time for that shot but I failed to realize it till it was too late. In an instant the sheep saw their new danger and bounded away, taking a course across the sloping meadow toward the forest. It would have taken a good marksman to bring down one of those rams, but I fired again at a venture. It was some satisfaction to me when I saw the dust fly from a point that showed my miss to be a narrow one.

My first bullet had gone through the lion's head, and when I walked out to where he lay he was limp and motionless. I worked as fast as my cold-stiffened fingers would permit, but before I got the lion skinned the sun was down. I hurried across the meadow and down the mountain the nearest way, and before it was too dark to see my way got out of the forest and reached the valley road two miles from the village.

A crowd of men was collected in the office when I reached the hotel. Some of them carried lighted lanterns and were bundled up in caps and overcoats and there seemed to be a general bustle of preparation.

"Why, here he is," one of the men cried as I entered. Then he added to me "We were just going to look for you."

"To look for me," I said as contemptuously as I could. "Why, you must think I'm a tenderfoot to get lost in these foothills."

"We didn't think you were lost," the landlord explained apologetically. "But we saw the sheep in the meadow till late in the afternoon and thought that you had fallen in the cañon and gotten hurt."

"Pshaw, you couldn't fall in that cañon unless you went to sleep. And then you would simply slide to the bottom and have to climb up again."

"If a fifty-ton boulder happened to slide down on top of you it isn't likely that you would care to climb up again," some one suggested.

That sally made my flesh creep and I made no reply.

"Did you get your ram?" asked one of my fellow-boarders, eying the big, bulging gamebag that the landlord had loaned me.

I opened the bag and drew out the skin.

"Oh," he exclaimed, "you shot a ewe! You ought to be mobbed!"

"Oh I don't know," someone said soothingly. "A ewe is better than no meat.

I unrolled the skin, which I had carefully folded fur side in and wrapped around the unskinned head, and with a quick toss unfolded it and threw it on the floor.

"Gee! It's a mountain lion! And a whopper too! How did you get him?"

I told them in as few words as possible—just as if killing mountain lions was an everyday occurrence with me! Then I went in to supper.—J. E. R., Western Field.

Fishing.

AN ANGLER IN THE ANTIPODES.

The fishing on the Greate Lake is the most celebrated in Tasmania.

The record fish taken in this water is about 28lbs. Fish of 15lbs. are common. The average weight may be put at 10lbs. It is very uncommon to catch a fish in this lake which is less than 5lbs. in weight.

Big takes have often been made. Photographs of such takes may be inspected at any of the offices of the Tourist Agency and in most of the fishing tackle shops.

The Great Lake trout are exceedingly handsome fish. They have lost the charactertistic red spot and are now as silvery as a fresh new salmon.

In shape they are short and deep with small heads.

They are excellent eating, the flesh being pink and in taste something between the salmon and the salmon trout. These and other alluring facts were drummed into me before I went to the lake myself and naturally led me to expect phenomenally good fishing.

I was disappointed as the reader is about to learn.

The Great Lake is situated on the plateau formed by a mountain range called the Piers.

It is a huge sheet of shallow water measuring nearly 100 miles round its bank.

Its irregular shape, however, prevents one from seeing more than a relatively small portion of the lake from any one place. The cup in which it lies is surrounded by low hills—at least they appear to be low from the bank of the lake—viewed from the foot of the Piers they are seen to be the top of respectably high mountains. The lake is a fine one and would present a finer view but for the sadness of the general colouring. The water is of a muddy yellow. I am told that it is never clean. The gums and heather of sorts which fringe the surrounding hills show no trace of bright green. The tint is a grey olive for the gums mingled with a rusty brown for the heather.

The want of bright foliage imparts a curious sadness to all Tasmanian scenery—on the Great Lake this feature is most marked. There are several approaches to the Lake. The one which I selected was perhaps the most toilsome of all.

It involved a 14 mile drive from Cressy, followed by a four-mile pull to the top of the Tiers. To the Anglo-Indian who has done most of his walking in the plains of India a walk of 4 miles up a slope as steep as the roof of a house is no joke. On the way we saw a dead devil. In Tasmania when one speaks of a devil the reference is generally to a black four-footed pouch bearing beast with jaws and teeth which a hyæna might envy and which is addicted to killing sheep.

At the top of the Tiers we got our first glimpse of the Lake and boiled the billy for tea at a shepherd's hut hard by. We then walked another 7 or 8 miles to the hut in which we intended to stay for the fishing. Then followed two days of hard work without any compensation in the shape of fish. We waded all day in bitterly cold water, throwing a spinner till our arms ached, without so much as seeing a trout.

At the end of this time my two companions had to leave.

I decided to stay on till I caught something and to this end moved to an accommodation house kept by the local policeman at the south end of the Lake.

Here I spent three days, during which I fished strenuously. In the end I caught two fish weighing 7 and 10½lbs. respectively.

The policeman caught a fish on the only day he was out and an old fisherman who makes a practice of going to the lake every year caught perhaps half a dozen. I was astonished at the utter want of spirit which fish evinced. I landed my first trout in three minutes on ordinary stout single gut. I broke my gaff over him and this necessitated my landing the second fish with my hand.

It took me some little time to manœuvre him to a shelving bank where I could put my finger in his gills and run him up high and dry. But for this he would not have given me any more trouble than his predecessor.

Neither fish took out ten yards of line. The bait chiefly used in the Lake is a large dark coloured spinner known as an "oilskin." A black devon is sometimes used and is, I understand, quite as attractive. The fish will not look at the fly. On the whole I have no desire to renew my acquaintance with them. Apart from this sluggishness of the fish the fishing is of the most uninteresting kind. It requires no skill to keep throwing a spinner into dirty water all day, and Great Lake fishing consists in this and nothing more.

A curious fact about the Lake is that prior to the introduction of the trout and for some time afterwards the water was perfectly clear. It was then found impossible to catch fish on any line.

The water then began to colour, and, as it did so the fish began to take the spinner.

Some say that the trout was responsible for colouring the water by rooting at the bottom for food.

This explanation appears, however, to be far fetched. The most probable cause of the discolouration is, I think, volcanic action.

The Lake is fed and maintained by springs far more than by drainage and it is both possible and probable that subterranean energies of some kind have altered their character.

This explanation is the more likely when it is remembered that the basalt hills on which the Lake is situated are themselves of volcanic origin.

For the last three or four years some disease has been killing off the trout in large numbers. They are not now nearly as plentiful as they used to be.

The best take I have heard of this season was one of 25 fish in a week to two rods.

There are several ways of going to the Lake.

At the south end where I fished, the Tasmanian Government is building an accommodation house which will be both cheaper and more comfortable than the quarters now provided by the local policeman. The latter are neither cheap nor comfortable. A coach runs from Tonbridge, a station on the main line from Launceston to Hobart, twice a week to the Lake at this end. The north end is approached from Delwaine without difficulty. There is an accommodation house at this end also, but I believe that visitors have to bring their food with them. This arrangement will probably be altered before long. The local people believe that the fish go down to the sea. The belief seems to arise from the fact that they crowd into a river which issues from the Lake at the south end about spawning time.

It has, however, been definitely ascertained that they go no further than some shallow lagoons through which the river takes its course. These lagoons form the spawning beds of the trout.

Living under these conditions they have grown with a marked and very conspicuous variety. They are at once the handsomest and the least satisfactory fish I have angled for.

A LITTLE girl was being put to bed one summer night, and after she had said her prayers her mother kissed her good night, and said :—"Now go to sleep dear. Don't be afraid, for angels are watching over you." In a short time, while the mother and father were at tea, a small voice from upstairs was heard :—"Mamma!" "Yes, little one; what is it?" "The angels are buzzing around, and one's bitten me."

SIR HENRY BULWER, lamenting his age, used to say it reminded him of the Duc De Richelieu, who on being told by a lady that he was not really old, replied, "I know that I am old, for there is one certain sign of it. When I was young, if I paid a complement to a lady, she took it for a declaration. Now, if I make a declaration, she takes it for a compliment."

A Remarkable Book ON THE Preservation of Health.

The French have a particularly happy phrase which, literally translated, means "The Joy of Living." It conjures up in the mind's eye a picture of buoyant health and happiness which appeals with particular force to the jaded Anglo-Indian. Yet there is no earthly reason why the residents in the Tropics should not share that exhilaration of well-being with our sprightly Gallic friends.

That is exactly what a physician long resident in India now comes forward to show in a timely and fascinating publication with the very tempting title "How to keep well in India," a title that will find a sympathetic echo in every heart from Calcutta to Bombay and from Peshawar to Madras.

How to keep well in India is so easy, too, if you only know how. And this the doctor proceeds to tell us in such a breezy style that after reading it we feel that we possess the master key to health.

The author plunges right into his subject by first telling us frankly that many make the fatal mistake of attempting to regulate life on the European plan. There is hope and cheer in the declaration that "it is absurd to suppose that the European cannot live and enjoy life in the Tropics."

After the quaint daaradox that "your st mach is only half a stom ech in India," he dwel, upon the necessity for upplying the stomach is with something rich in that element which goes to build up the nerve health and without which there can be no bodily health, viz., phosphorus. And it is equally essential, the writer says, "that we should supply this substance in an easily digestible form, for the stomach is, as we have heard, a low-power one."

"It is here," declares this medical authority, "the tonic food called Sanatogen comes in as an aid to diet. It is so easily digestible that patients in the acute stage of enteric fever are constantly being fed on it, and it administers the vitalising substance upon which the vital forces actually depend, and in such a manner that the hungry tissues can seize upon them and adapt them to their various needs."

There is the solution of the whole problem And then a grave note of warning is sounded by this expert. Digestive disorders are the frequent forerunners of enteric fever and dysentery. "In this connection," says the doctor, "it must never be forgotten that we live not on what we eat but on what we absorb."

After pointing out the special milk dangers in India, he says:—"In Sanatogen we have a substance which is milk and yet is better than milk. Milk," he observes, "consists roughly of Casein and water. The Casein or nitrogenous part is made the basis of this new nerve food Sanatogen, which is almost universally recognised by medical men as the scientific food."

"In Sanatogen," he goes on to say, "we have 95 per cent. of Casein combined with 5 per cent. of phosphorus, the combination supplying the most powerful known substance for both stimulating and feeding the nerves."

He proves conclusively that with its high nutritive value Sanatogen forms at once an almost perfect and complete diet for the low-power system of the average Anglo-Indian.

He quotes, amongst others, the testimony of the famous Dr. Ewald, of the University of Berlin, who declared after an extensive series of experiments with enteric patients treated with Sanatogen that: "The inference to be drawn from our experiments is that Sanatogen, on account of its ready absorption and its perfectly non-irritant character, may be used with great advantage for increasing the nutritive value of a given diet in all cases of physical weakness, as well as in the acute stages of all those maladies accompanied by rise of temperature, and particularly in enteric fever."

His graphic pen brings home to us most forcefully how Sanatogen is a better tonic than alcohol; how it is indispensable in low fever, Dysentery, Malarial Fevers, and he concludes with some most profitable advice which every Anglo-Indian should read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest.

His points are pregnant with significance. To take only one of the many rich nuggets contained in this gold mine of information: "Don't be conquered by the debility which supervenes on most tropical ailments and allow yourself to drift into the 'interesting invalid' condition; you may be interesting to yourself but you will be but a bore to others."

And then he goes right on to tell us how to shake off the deadly debility.

"How to keep well in India" is absorbingly interesting throughout; plain, straightforward, and to the point. It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well.

A limited number of specimen copies of this interesting booklet will be distributed free of charge and can be obtained from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO., CALCUTTA, who also stock Sanatogen.

Dr. E. J. Lazarus's ESSENCE OF CHIRETTA,

In Bottles Re. 1-8, 2-8 and 4.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From Mr. W.—Dear Sirs,—"I suffered from Liver complaint in its most aggravated form pain in the side, shoulder-blade and stomach; vomiting after every meal, excessive acidity in the stomach, constipated bowels and extreme debility FOR TEN YEARS, I tried all the known remedies without success and had given up hope, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Chiretta.' I have taken it for some time and am now nearly quite well. Pain in the side nearly gone, in the shoulder-blade entirely so. No vomiting, little or no acidity in the stomach, bowels relaxed, no debility, being now a stronger and better man than I have been for years."

H. James Rainey, Esq., of Koolnah, Jessore, writes:—"Having derived a deal of benefit from the use of your 'Essence of Chiretta' (combined with VERY SMALL doses of Quinine) both as prophylactic and anti-periodic for intermittent fevers of malarious type, which would not yield to the usual remedies employed, and which disease is very prevalent in the Districts of Lower Bengal, in particular those parts bordering on the Soonderban, I think it incumbent on me to acquaint you thereof pro bono publico. You are welcome to give this letter all the publicity you may deem necessary in order that this excellent remedy of yours may become generally known."

From J. A. Farrell, Mooltan.—"Your Chiretta has already done me a WORLD amount of good. I had an enlargement of the spleen and fever for 9 months which reduced me to a mere skeleton. The fever I got rid of with your Antiperiodic Pills in 3 days; and the spleen I let be—thinking it could do me no harm. In this I was greatly mistaken, my complexion became as yellow as gold. Seeing your Chiretta I determined to use some of it, and see what good it did me. I have used it for about a week and already the colour is coming to my cheek and the TAN (through continued fever) has left my face. For the climate of India there is no medicine so good, for a Tonic, &c, as your "Essence of Chiretta." This is only an addition to the valuable testimonials you have so well earned through the Chiretta."

A most important work on Indian Ornithology, which will be ready shortly.

300 pages of Letterpress and 30 Coloured Plates. Bound in half-morocco, gilt top. Price, Rs. 36-12 net.

THE INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES.

By E. C. STUART BAKER, F.Z.S., M.B.O.U.

Since Messrs. Hume and Marshall published their work on the "Game Birds of India" (1879-80), now, and long since, out of print, and which, when a copy is offered for sale realizes a considerable advance on the published price, no work has appeared on the Indian Ducks with coloured plates.

The Bombay Natural History Society are now preparing and reprinting Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's articles on this attractive group of Birds, which have appeared from time to time during the past ten years in their "Journal."

The book will form a handsome volume of over 800 pages of text, the same having been revised throughout by the Author, and will contain all the available information up to the time of going to press.

The Thirty Coloured Plates will be reproduced by chromolithography, under the supervision of the well-known bird-artist Mr. Henrick Grönvold.

The binding of the book will be in half-morocco, gilt top, with the plates guarded, and will form a very desirable addition to the library of the naturalist or sportsman.

The edition will be limited to 1,100 copies.

ORIGINAL PRICE, Rs. 13-6. NOW REDUCED TO Rs. 12-4.
Fourth Edition. One Hundred and Eighty Illustrations.

Super-Royal 8vo., cloth gilt. 338 pages.

GAME, SHORE, AND WATER BIRDS OF INDIA.

With Additional references to their allied species in other parts of the World.

By COLONEL A. LE MESSURIER, C.I.E., F.Z.S., F.G.S., LATE ROYAL ENGINEERS. Author of "Kandahar in 1879," "From London to Bokhara," and "A Ride through Persia."

Nature.—"Colonel Le Messurier writes as a field naturalist for field naturalists and sportsmen without any great pretensions to scientific knowledge, but there is no doubt that all naturalists will gain useful hints from this volume which is profusely illustrated with wood-cuts giving the characteristic features of most of the species."

Knowledge.—"Compact in form, excellent in method and arrangement, and as far as we have been able to test it, rigidly accurate in details. Colonel Le Messurier's book should become the vade mecum of every sportsman and naturalist whom duty or pleasure may compel to visit India."

Demy 8vo., cloth. Rs. 6-6.

"MODERN SPORTING GUNNERY."

BY HENRY SHARP.

The author is a sportsman of large practical experience who has written many books on game shooting. Thinking, however, that most shooting men would welcome a book which gave them in an intelligible form more technical information about their weapons and ammunition, two years ago he secured the entree to the gun-works of a well-known firm, and this fine volume of 526 pages is the result. In it he enters with great detail into the construction of all kinds of shot-guns and rifles and into the question of their loads and ammunition, noting all the latest inventions. There are chapters on game and wildfowl shooting in the British Isles, and on shooting abroad, in which the author gives lists of the game obtainable in different places with notes on the best weapons and ammunition to use, and on the duties to be paid. The Duchess of Bedford contributes a chapter on "Ladies in the Field." Copiously illustrated.

SWIMMING.

FIFTY MILES CHANNEL SWIM.—One of the most remarkable and plucky efforts to swim the Channel was brought to an end on Tuesday morning, when T. W. Burgess was compelled to confess himself beaten, after having been in the water for twenty hours and eleven minutes. He left the water at 5-24 A.M.

When he gave up the attempt, Burgess was within a mile of Cape Grisnez—indeed, Burgess himself stated that examination of the bearings showed that at one point he was only half a mile off the French coast—and had covered a total distance of nearly fifty miles since the start from Dover at 9.30 A.M. on Monday.

Burgess's experiences during the last six hours of his swim were the most disappointing that any Channel swimmer has yet met with, and, as showing that he was by no means exhausted at the end of his great effort, it may be stated that in the twentieth hour he was striking twenty-five and twenty-six strokes a minute, just as at the start.

Before midnight on Monday the bearings showed that he was only two miles off Cape Grisnez.

But there was a very strong ebb tide, and, although Burgess was still swimming powerfully, and endeavoured to race for the coast, he was steadily drifted along, and could make very little headway towards the shore.

A feature of the swim throughout the day and night had been the magnificent efforts put forth by Burgess in racing to make certain points by a certain time of the tide. With his expert knowledge of the tides and conditions of the Channel, he insisted on having the chart displayed to him several times over the side of the boat, and calculated for himself the chances of success.

After his series of races it now seemed that the ebb tide could hardly fail to place Burgess in such a position in the Long Bight, west of Cape Grisnez, that the following eastern-running tide would carry him to the shore between Wimereux and the cape Burgess himself was confident.

The west-going tide carried him only two and a half miles from Cape Grisnez, as he was drifted down towards Boulogne. Then one by one the villages on the coast, indicated by little bunches of lights, were left to the east, until the swimmer was off Boulogne, only about two miles out at sea. At this time the wind freshened again.

The tide slackened soon after two o'clock and for about an hour Burgess did his best to pull for shore.

But, when the flood-tide came—the fourth on which Burgess had swum since the start a strong current was encountered, evidently the offset from the Boulogne breakwater, and the swimmer had the heart-breaking experience of finding himself being gradually driven back along the long line of coast from Boulogne, past Wimereux and Ambleteuse, only about a mile from shore, and yet unable to make any headway across the strong tide.

Morning dawned between four and half-past four, revealing the dark headland one and a quarter miles away.

The swim to shore seemed like half an hour's sprint, but, in reality, it would have entailed hanging out the up-Channel tide and waiting for the ebb to assist the swimmer to the coast east of Grisnez.

Burgess made one bold sprint to avoid missing the headland, Weidman, the Dover Channel swimmer, who was on the accompanying tug, going into the water to pace him. The tide, however, was too strong; Grisnez slowly dropped westward, and within a mile of shore Burgess had to admit defeat.

At twenty-four minutes past five he pulled himself unaided over the side of the tug.

CYCLING.

THE EMPIRE CHAMPIONSHIPS.—Many of our leading riders journeyed to Belfast, and participated in the British Empire Cycling Championships, which were decided at the Oval there on Saturday before 10,000 spectators. Those competing included Leon Meredith (100 metres world's amateur champion), Ben Jones (holder of the mile and ten miles British Empire Championships), Dan Flynn, G. F. Summers, V. L. Johnson (660 yards Olympic champion), C. B. Kingsbury, G. C. Anderson, E. Payne, J. Matthews, etc. Quite the feature of the gathering was the excellent form shown by Flynn, and he carried off the quarter-mile and the ten miles. Kingsbury won the mile after a close finish with Payne.

After the meeting the officials and competitors were entertained to dinner by the Lord Mayor of Belfast. Details:—

QUARTER-MILE CHAMPIONSHIP.

(Holder, G. C. Anderson, England.)

Heat 1: V. L. Johnson, England 1. Also started:—A. T. Denny, England; J. D. Nathaniel, Scotland; P. J. O'Reilly, Ireland; and J. Coyle, Ireland. Time, 32⅕secs.

Heat 2: C. B. Kingsbury, England, 1. Also started:—W. H. Kerr, Ireland; and J. Sanson, Ireland. Time, 33⅕secs.

Heat 3; Ben Jones, England, 1. Also started:—G. C. Anderson, England; H. Murphy, Ireland; and Lieut. C. Pease Ireland. Time, 32⅖secs.

Heat 4: D. Flynn, Scotland, 1. Also started:—E. Payne, England; J. Lavery, Ireland; and V. P. McDonough, Ireland. Time, 32⅕secs.

Heat 5: W. F. Magee, Ireland, 1. Also started:—D. Gould, Scotland; and T. Goss, Ireland. Time, 32⅖secs.

Heat 6: G. F. Summers, England 1. Also started:—A Lindsay, Scotland; J. Robertson, Ireland; and P. Coyle, Ireland. Time, 34⅕secs.

Second Round.

Heat 1: Kingsbury 1, Johnson 2. The former gave a capital exhibition, and won by half a wheel. Time, 33⅖secs.

Heat 2: Flynn 1, Magee 2, Summers 3. Won by half a wheel Time, 34⅖secs.

Final.

D. Flynn, Scotland	1
C. B. Kingsbury, England	2

Flynn took the lead from the start, and he won by half a wheel. Time, 36⅖secs.

ONE MILE CHAMPIONSHIP.

(Holder, Ben Jones, England).

Heat 1: J. Matthews, England, 1. Also started:—V.L. Johnson, England; W. H. Kerr, Ireland. Time, 2mins. 38⅕secs.

Heat 2: C. B. Kingsbury, England, 1. Also started:—G. C. Anderson, England; Murray, Ireland; Coyle, Ireland. Time, 2min. 26secs.

Heat 3: Ben Jones, England, 1. Also started:—A.J. Denny, England; O'Reilly, Ireland. Time, 2min. 35⅕secs.

Heat 4: E. Payne, England, 1. Also started:—D. Gould, Scotland; F. Magee, Ireland; C. Pease, Ireland; Goss, Ireland. Time, 2min. 32⅖secs.

Heat 5: L. Meredith, England, 1. Also started:—Lindsay, Scotland; J. Robertson, Ireland; and Hanson, Ireland. Time, 2min. 45⅖secs.

Heat 6: G. F. Summers, England, 1. Also started:—Nathaniel, Scotland; and Lavery, Ireland.

Second Round.

Heat 1: Kingsbury, England, 1; Matthews, England, 2. Time, 2min. 42⅖secs.

Heat 2: Payne, England, 1. Time, 2min. 40⅕secs. Meredith unfortunately sustained a fall, owing to the back tyre of his machine puncturing. The famous cyclist was luckily not seriously hurt.

Final.

C. B. Kingsbury, England	1
E. Payne, England	2

After a very close race, Kingsbury won by a few inches. Time 2 min. 45 secs.

TEN MILES CHAMPIONSHIP.

(Holder, Ben Jones. England.)

D. Flynn, Scotland	1
B. Jones, England	2
C. B. Kingsbury, England	3

Flynn won a great race by a wheel. Time, 25 min. 19⅕secs. Matthews and Nathaniel won the lap prizes.

Team Race.—England, 9 points, 1; Ireland, 13, 2.

HALF-MILE IRISH CHAMPIONSHIP.

B. Jones, Wigan	1
E. C. Anderson, England	2

Won by a length. Time, 1 min. 16⅖secs.

ONE MILE CYCLE HANDICAP.—W. F. Murray, Bloomfield, 180 yards 1; J. D. Nathaniel, Glasgow, 110, 2; A Lindsay, West Benton, 80, 3. Time, 2min. 32secs.

TWENTY-FIVE MILES CYCLE HANDICAP (INVITATION, MOTOR PACED).—H. Mussen, 3min., 1; Leon Meredith, scratch, 2. Cochrane fell out of the race after a few laps. Mussen's start was rather too much for the British champion, the Irish champion winning by three laps. The winner completed the distance in 40min. 50⅖secs. Meredith's time was 40min. 9⅖secs., and in this he established a new record, the previous best being 41min. 40⅖secs.

HALF-MILE HANDICAP.—Heat 1: J. Coates, Ulsterville H. scratch, 1; C. F. Rothwell, R. and S.P.U., 20 yards, 2. Time, 2min. 16⅖secs. Heat 2: W Loftus, Belfast Trinity, scratch, 1; F. McGibben Glentoran, 10, 2. Time, 2min. 10secs. Heat 3: W. Rankin, Belfast, 20, 1; J M'Closky, Celtic, scratch, 2. Time, 2min. 11⅖secs. Heat 4: J. Thompson, Celtic, scratch, 1; H. Howard, C.B. Harriers, 20, 2. Time, 2min. 8⅖secs. Final: Rankin 1, McGibben 2, Loftus 3.

SIXTY-ONE MILES AN HOUR.—At Munich on Monday Albert E. Wills, the old Putney amateur and ex-holder of the twenty-five miles British amateur championship, secured the honour for which Continental cracks have striven for three years, that of being the first cyclist to cover sixty miles in the hour.

At the same track, on 28th July 1906, Paul Guignard got near the coveted honour by riding 59 miles 86 yards in the time, and that record remained undisturbed, despite repeated attacks, until the occasion under notice, when Wills, paced by Bertin, beat the French rider's distance by 2 miles 834½ yards.

Covering the first ten kilometres in 6min. 25secs. Wills was then already 11-1-5s. in front of record, and he continued to beat records to the finish, his distance for the hour being 61 miles 970½ yards, and his time for 100 kilometres 1h. 0m. 34s, as against Guignard's previous best of 1h. 3min. 6⅖sec. From ten to fifty kilometres inclusive the previous records, made at Munich last year, were held by Gombault.

Although comparatively new at motor-paced riding, Wills has by this feat stamped himself as the finest exponent of this branch of the sport.

ATHLETICS.

ANOTHER MARATHON RACE.—In announcing its generous offer of a £100 and other valuable prizes for a proposed Marathon contest open to the world The Evening News writes:—"The great success of the Marathon race at the Olympic Games was marred somewhat by two disappointments—the bad times made and the complete failure of the English runners.

No one believes that we have not in this country long-distance runners able to beat the performances of 24th July and in order to put the matter to the test The Evening News has determined to offer substantial prizes in order to bring out the latent talent which it is certain the country possesses.

It will be remembered how The Evening News go-as-you-please race to Brighton a few years ago brought to public notice a number of new runners, and although the event was won by an old and tried performer in Len Hurst, there were among the new-comers several who ran very finely and showed great promise. We hope that the coming race will be even more successful in bringing to light unsuspected talent.

FRESH ENGLISH FISH, GAME, MEAT, &c.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE ON APPLICATION.

The date of the race has been fixed for the second Saturday in October, and the arrangements will follow as closely as possible on those of the Marathon race. It will be impossible, of course to follow exactly the precedents as to starting place, etc., but an equivalent distance will be fixed, and the route of the race, from Windsor to the Stadium, will be adhered to. Arrangements have been made with Mr. Imre Kiralfy for the use of the Stadium at the finish, and full details as to the regulations governing the competition will be made shortly. The first prize will be one hundred pounds and other prizes will be awarded to the second, third, etc. These details will be announced later."

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 29th August.—Briar Shola at 8 A.M. More rain is badly needed, the ground has dried up, making the going hard for horses and hounds. It was a dull grey morning with a light drizzle, but no rain to speak of. Had a long and fruitless draw from Wapshare's Hare to Paragon before hounds started off on a line below Kengodu Shola, which led them to the north, as if for the ghauts. However short of Ampthill Wood, they swung back into Kengodu Shola, and after hunting the jack round the covert they drove him out past Glyn's Covert and ran through the upper end of Malkod Mund to the bog below Paragon Shola, where the jack was viewed close in front of them, and again over the Pykara Bridle Path into Road Shola. Scent was poor, but hounds worked out the line well and carried it through Road Shola into Dormer; they came away at the bottom and rose the hill into Rock Shola. The jack was viewed several times only just ahead of the pack, but in the latter covert he managed to get a better lead, though in the end it was not of much use to him as they ran into and killed him in a small shola near Road Shola. We then had another long draw by Jackson's Crossing to Plague Shola, Lord Roberts' Shola and on to Khed and Wapshare's Hare without finding again.

Monday, 31st August.—Lake End at 6-30 A.M. The fog was thick and damp and interfered a good deal with sport but cleared up about 8. A.M. Hounds picked up a line on the hill above Rees' Corner and carried it below the Krurmund Road along the ravine at the bottom of Denmark, turning up to the right into Dendron Belt where they threw up. The Master moved on through the corner of Baikie and drew Druid and on to Jackal; a jack was viewed away from the bottom of the latter. He led hounds up through Lower Rallywood, to the right past the Potato Field, along the top of Bluegums to Sheffield Corner, running the Governor's Shola Road to just below the corner of Andy Plantation when he turned left handed up the hill; crossing the Krurmund Road into Andy Plantation, he swung to the right over the top of the hill. A thick dense fog hung all over the country and it was difficult to see or hear what hounds were doing, but they were eventually found near Baikie. We next drew back by Rallywood to New Covert without result. On the ridge above Elmhurst Corner hounds feathered on a line which they carried across the Municipal Stream and Pykara Road on to the Golf Links. Up to this point the line was somewhat cold, but just beyond the 5th hole they struck it fresher and went off at a great pace to Mackenzie's Crossing, up the rise to the left of Brooklands and over Toll Bar Hill by the Wattle Patch; crossing the Demon Valley they ran to the left of Rocky Covert and headed for Waterfall River; just above this they unfortunately divided on two fresh jack, but at this point the hunt as far as we were concerned was over as they plunged down into Waterfall Shola, where it is quite impossible to follow even on foot.

Tuesday, 1st September.—Sultan Shola 12 noon. As the Master was about to draw a small shola below the Krurmund Path, the first Whip viewed three jack near Mekod Mund, the pack was taken to the spot and went off with a good cry, on the line of one of them; crossing the bog, they ran through the shola and streamed down to the Mekod Stream, which they crossed near the Mund, with the jack close in front of them; they rose the side of a very steep hill on the far side and keeping along the top of Walhampton Shola, they went over the top of Vokal Hill to the right and raced down the side to the bottom of Sambur Shola, when they bent to the right over Dangars Ride, and on past Nunjanad Village. The Master was obliged to stop them, owing to the hardness of the ground, which cuts their feet to pieces, one hound being badly lamed. It was a splendid run, without a check from start to finish, and the pace was fast throughout. At one part of the chase a large pig was put up and ran the same line as the jack, but the hounds would not take any notice of him, sticking close to their jack all the time. It was afterwards discovered that they had changed their jack near Walhampton, the second horsemen had seen a hound called Gimcrack run into a very tired jack which succeeded in getting to ground near Dante's Spinney, but had bolted a short while before, and though hounds feathered on his line several times, the scent was almost cold. We then drew along by Pichal Mund, Ace of Spades and the lower part of Governor's Shola. Below the path hounds touched a line, carrying it to the bog below where they warmed to it and started running at a good pace as if for Staircase, short of which they swept back under Round Shola into Martyn's Shola, and then to the left back into Governor's, when they hustled him round and forced him out by Cromwell's Shola into Martyn's in which they killed him. It was a most enjoyable hunt, and those who attended were well rewarded for their long ride to the meet.

Thursday, 3rd September.—Sandy Nullah Toll Bar at 7 A.M. There was a thick mist when we arrived at the meet, which happily cleard up, before we moved off. Hounds drew up the Sandy Nullah Valley, by Lawley's Course to Schmidt's Clump, without result, though hounds now and again touched a stale line, and a good many jack had been on the move earlier. Near Gibb's Shola they struck a fresher trail and worked it up to the corner near the 7th milestone on the Pykara Road, the Master came to their assistance and took them up over the ridge; just near the Toda Mund above Portal's Crossing a couple of jack were disturbed at their breakfast. One of them breaking back to Preston's Crossing with six couple of hounds, but he had not gone far before they ran into and killed him. The other jack led hounds over Piggott's Crossing, through the lower end of Briar, and along the Back Staircase Road for a considerable distance before turning left handed up the hill, and over the shoulder into Staircase Shola, where there was a slight check. But they recovered his line again and came streaming out of the bottom, over the Lupin patch. Leaving Schmidt's Clump on their left, they tumbled down to Sandy Nullah Stream and up the other side, pointing for Bluegums, but about half way up, the jack turned left handed through the middle of Rawlins' Nullah and ran down to the Sandy Nullah Stream; crossing it he took a line over Lawley's Course, to the bog below Gibb's, up the other side over the Pykara Road and on to Aylmers' Crossing with a point for Beadnell's, but leaving this on the right, he tumbled down the side of Hearty to the bog and rose the hill. Our horses were showing signs of distress long before this point was reached, but the chase continued past Fuddler's Shola into Wenlock. Hounds pushed him through; coming out below the Pykara Road they swept past Brooks and Wapshare's Hare over the ridge into Briar. The pace slackened as they drove him through the covert out above the Tin Hut on Herbert Plantation, into Staircase Shola with a failing scent, and finally lost him at the bottom of Staircase Shola. The jack which had been killed by the six couple of hounds, near Preston's Crossing, was brought along by the terrier boys and broken up by the whole pack. This ended a very excellent morning's sport. The run lasting an hour and a quarter and not a hound left behind at the finish.

RACE RIDING.

RACE riding is a subject on which nearly every man who visits a racecourse considers himself competent to sit in judgment, yet there is no more difficult subject in connection with the Turf, and certainly there is not one on which more ex-parte opinions are given, says a writer in the County Gentleman. It has had a curious history. In the early days of racing many matches were made on "cross and jostle" conditions—that is, a jockey might do anything to prevent the other winning; and if we look through old Racing Calendars we find that there was a great deal of what we would call foul riding—or what we would have called foul riding a few years ago—indulged in and winked at. As a matter of fact, when racing ceased to be a private amusement and became a public sport, an event which happened some two hundred years ago, there were no rules to go by. The horses were ridden by grooms who had no status, and very rough and ready measures prevailed. But with the formation of a code of rules to regulate racing, and amongst other things to regulate the riding in races, there came into being the professional jockey, who, under certain conditions, would ride for any man who paid him, who had his own professional etiquette and professional standards, which were sanctioned and encouraged by the authorities. And with the professional status came a social status which has gradually improved till the present day, when we see men of good education and upbringing doing the work which was done by men much lower in the social scale when racing first began to take hold on the public imagination. Indeed, it is men of this class that are now wanted as jockeys, and there can be no doubt that the Turf has benefited all round by the change.

A jockey's life is an arduous one; his career is frequently, through no fault of his own, a short one. Increasing weight keeps him out of the saddle; it may well be that before his final retirement this fatal hindrance has only admitted of his riding a very few times during the last years of his professional life, and all retired jockeys cannot become trainers. So the well-conducted jockey may be allowed to take his well-earned emoluments without grudging, for if the pay is good a big income is only earnable for a very few years.

The jockey has always, so to speak, been the centre of the racing system. Without him, of course racing could not exist for a month. The old school of riding would never stand the strain of public criticism. And in riding gallops and trials the jockey is seen to quite as much advantage as on the racecourse, provided he has a good head, and knows what the horses of others are doing as well as his own. It would not be difficult to mention men who were never very fashionable or popular jockeys, who studied this part of the profession till it became a fine art, and who profited accordingly. Jockeys have, perhaps, less professional jealousy than any body of men who appear conspicuously to the public gaze, and they are remarkably loyal to each other. We cannot remember any prominent jockey endeavouring to belittle his comrades, or damning with faint praise.

"Who is the best jockey you ever rode against?" was a question once asked of a retired jockey, himself quite at the head of his profession. "I have ridden against many good jockeys, there are plenty of good jockeys" was the reply, and it was only by means of diligent cross-examination that at last we drew from him that it was always very difficult to know exactly what Fordham was doing.

The question of a dearth of jockeys has been before the racing community more than once, but there should not be any danger on this score, and there never would be were it not for foolish policy of racing men in themselves. The hero worship which began with James Grimshaw and which culminated in the days of Archer and later of Tod Sloan was to blame for much of the inconvenience that was felt. In other words, the inconvenience was not there really; it was made by the fashion. The racing Marquis of Exeter, than whom was no finer judge, used to say: "Give me 3lbs. the best of the handicap and you may put up the best jockey in England. Mine will be ridden by a stable lad." Lord Exeter's practice was consistent with his theory, and a "leading" jockey was seldom seen on his horses; but it is needless to say that his stable boys could ride.

One of the most serious annoyances jockeys have to contend with is the unfair criticism meted out to them when they happen to ride a second, especially if that second is well backed. A case occurs to the memory out of many, where a horse that was thought almost a certainty was beaten by half a length. He was a horse that was well backed, the small backers having their half-crowns on. And when the race was run half the men you met said that the jockey came too soon, and the other half said that he did not come soon enough. But they were unanimous that it was the riding that did it.

Jockeys however, have a duty towards each other which they scarcely seem to keep in view as their predecessors of a few years ago used to do. We have heard more about foul riding during the last two or thee years than in four times that period in the eighties and early nineties. Twice during in last three years have prominent members of the Jockey Club spoken in no half-hearted fashion about the modern school of riding, and we have been told that jockeys are always to finish on the side of the course on which they are drawn if they would avoid certain pains and penalties, amogst which is to be counted suspension for a longer or shorter period. But what is the fact? In more than one important race last season we heard statements of what would have happened had such and such a horse finished second. And this year the Stewards at one meeting have called a jockey to account, and there is not the least doubt that there are many who have been let off. Indeed, of this the careful and unprejudiced looker-on can speedily satisfy himself. Never since the old days of "cross and jostle" has there been so much crossing as there is at present, and none but the most flagrant cases are ever noticed. In point of fact, crossing is an everyday occurrence. Let any one who doubts this stand in the straight facing the horses as they come in, and he will speedily be convinced. That this crossing is done of set purpose, that it is intentional foul riding, no one asserts for a moment; but the effect is the same. It is incumbent on a Jockey that he should steer his own course in a race without interfering with his fellows, and it is a lame excuse to say that he cannot guide his horse. If he cannot guide his horse he had no business to be in the saddle. Some of our readers may remember that the Stewards of an important meeting impressed this very strongly on a jockey, who said in excuse for his erratic riding that he could not guide his horse, and if we mistake not they suspended him. We quite recognise that with the present "fashionable" seat, carried to excess as it is by many jockeys, steering a straight course is well-nigh impossible. But it is necessary above all things that a straight course should be steered, and if the Stewards were to be as firm in insisting on this as were those gentlemen referred to above, we should soon see an improvement in race riding.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

THE Harwood League was at last continued on Tuesday after the interruption caused by the intervention of the Rugby Tournament. This game was between the Bombay Gymkhana and the Rovers and was too one-sided to be interesting. Neither was fully represented and both took the field a man short, but the Gym. man turned up before half time.

From start to finish the Gym. did the pressing and should have scored more even than the five goals they put through. Two were scored in the first half by Abbott and Moir and the three in the second by Burnett (2) and Abbott. On occasions the Rovers made determined efforts, but though they find Connell an useful man at centre instead of back they could not get through. One of the Gym. backs too went forward, Ward, but was scarcely the success one might have expected.

Before they can hope to make a decent shown in the forthcoming tournament they must get together a better set of forwards.

THE HARRIS TOURNAMENT.

With rather a poor number of six entrants, the Harris Football Tournament opened on Monday in Poona. The first game was between the Leicesters and Northamptons. It proved a fairly easy win for the Leicesters by three goals to nil. Two of these were due to penalties in the second half.

The other on the same day was between the Worcesters and Somersets and was a most exciting affair from start to finish. Evenly matched, they both boasted a strong defence and up to the final call of time no goal had been scored. A huge crowd turned out to see the replay and it was a surprise to see one of them so superior after such a close game the previous day. From the kick-off the Worcesters began to attack and throughout were mainly on the offensive. They scored twice in the first and once in the second half and came out winners by five goals to one.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

RANGERS vs. HIGHLAND L.I.—Played on the Customs ground on the 2nd instant, the H. L. I. winning by two goals and 3 tries to nil. The Dum-Dum team did all the attacking, save for about ten minutes on resuming after the interval. Henderson got over with the first try and Clarke got two more, one of which was converted. Crossing over with a lead of 11 points, the H. L. I. scored two more tries, Duncan getting one and McGlone the other which Tail converted. They thus won by 19 points to nil.

GLOSTERS vs. UNITED SERVICES.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground last Saturday, the rain spoiling an interesting game. Exchanges were fairly level all through, but the Lahore team were better suited to the mud and got over with two tries, neither of which was improved upon. Travel scored the first and Heal the second. The Services failed to score and were beaten by two tries (6 points) to nil.

DALHOUSIE vs. HIGHLAND L. I.—Played on the Dalhousie ground, the game ending in a win for the visitors by a try (3 points) to nil. The wretched weather conditions made good football out of the question.

CALCUTTA vs. RANGERS.—This game last Saturday, on the Customs ground, was abandoned at half time owing to the heavy rain and consequent impossible state of the ground. The Rangers only put out eleven men and Calcutta got over with 5 tries, of which three were converted, Siddons (2), Arthur, Reid Kay, and Burnett getting over.

GLOSTERS vs. HIGHLAND L. I.—Played on the Customs ground on Tuesday ending in a draw after a hard game. Lieutenant Lilburn got over with a try for the H. L. I. and Heal scored for the Glosters. Neither try was converted.

RANGERS vs. UNITED SERVICES.—On the Dalhousie ground on Tuesday the Services beat the Rangers by 7 points to nil. Beddie scored a drop goal and Baker got over with a try.

APPENDED is the final position of the League.

(X) Winners of A vs. Winners of B. (on Thursday, 17th September).
(Y) Winners of C vs. Winners of D. (Wednesday, 16th Sept.)

Final.

(On Saturday, 19th September).
Winners of X vs. Winners of Y.

The above is the order of playing in the Tournament which commences to-day, Friday, when the United Services will have to make a very big effort to overcome the confident West Ridings. The "Dukes" are a strong crowd, and the side that overcomes them will probably find themselves in the final. "When ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise," and we do not want to prophesy. We are sure of one thing, however, that is if Calcutta dispose of Dalhousie on Saturday, and the West Ridings beat the United Services we shall see a rousing game of footer on Monday between the C. F. C. and the Ridings. A dry day will be a great boon, and if that is provided there should be a fine old tussle. Not having seen the Ridings we cannot judge of their chances, but we expect the C. F. C. to give a good account of themselves after their consistent form, and the Ridings will have to go all the way to win.

The King's Own should be good enough to give the King's Dragoon Guards all they want. This indeed will be a battle royal between His Majesty's namesakes. May the better side win. The winners play Madras, who, we hear, are a good lot. Last year it will be remembered the Gymkhana played two drawn games with the West Ridings in the final of the Madras Cup, and eventually lost at the third venture by the narrowest of margins.

The Connaughts, who include ten officers, will get a warm reception from the H. L. I., and this match has an Inter national flavour about it.

We may take it that the Glosters play Behar in the second round, and a good game will be the outcome.

We welcome the sporting sides who have come long distances to take part in this annual tournament started in 1889, and continued right through up to date. We hope that their stay in Calcutta will be a good one, that the clerk of the weather will be considerate, and that the Cup tournament of 1908 may have nothing to mar its success.

May the best side win, and may every game be played "in the true spirit of the game," as laid down by its very worthy founder.

MADRAS GYMKHANA RUGBY FOOTBALL TOURNAMENT.

The above Tournament will take place in Madras from 28th September to 3rd October.

Entries close with the Honorary Secretary on Monday, 21st September, after which date no entry will be received.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE United Services succeeded in crossing the C. F. C.'s line on Tuesday last, and so registered the only try scored against the Cup winners this season. It was a good match considering the "ponky" state of the ground, and there was some quite fair passing shown by both sides. The ground was terribly heavy, and any attempts to diverge from a straight course by jinking ended in side slips and the downfall of the jinker. Calcutta's first score came from a long throw out from touch—Longbottom getting over, and Burnett kicked a goal. In the second half Siddons made a good opening for Longbottom to get his second try, but this time Burnett failed with the place. The United Services rallied well and were rewarded by a try scored by Jackson at the corner. The same player had a beautiful kick at goal—the heavy ball just dropping below the bar.

Calcutta bucked up after this and had the best of the game, the only addition to the score being a real good drop by Longbottom. This player did all the scoring for the C. F. C., and might have had at least one more try had Kay given him the opportunity. The latter player had an off day, and his passing was not what it should have been. Longbottom has come on splendidly but should guard against running back—an inexcusable error in any player—and also watch that he keeps well behind his centre.

For the United Services Slater put in some excellent work, but stuck a bit too close to the ball for the satisfaction of his three-quarters. Beddy as usual was all there, and had some good kicks to touch. Layard, Cunningham, and Fraser were the most prominent of the hard working Service forwards, while for Calcutta none of the forwards shone specially, except three glaring offsiders whose names we shall leave in the pack.

The Glosters have won most of their matches by the narrowest of margins, and only put on a single score when playing Dalhousie. This point was scored by Smith, who has proved himself a useful player to the Lahore side. The "Dals" have done well in spite of their troubles and have had the hardest of luck on more than one occasion.

Saturdays matches were ruined by rain which fell during the progress of the games, and successfully spoilt them. Two miles south no rain fell so that it was specially bad luck. The United Services put up an excellent fight against the Glosters but failed to hold them forward with the result that they were beaten by a couple of scores. The ground was in first class condition for ten minutes before the rain, and the play was kept bright, but after the storm broke respectable football became impossible.

Calcutta scored 3 goals and 2 tries in about 15 minutes against a Rangers team of twelve. Further play appeared to both sides to be quite unnecessary, so that the Customs ground was spared, and Mr. Reid whistled "no-side."

The Highlanders from Barrackpore beat Dalhousie by a try scored by McGlone. The game was fought out in mud, so needs no description.

Mrs. Martelli gracefully presented the "Indian Field Cup" to the Calcutta team on Tuesday after their highly interesting game with the "old gentlemen." The latter considered this game as the final for the League Cup, but this was disallowed much to their disappointment.

The record of the Calcutta team is a real good one :—Matches played 10. Won 10. Points for 146 made up of 17 goals, 1 dropped goal, 1 penalty goal and 18 tries. Points against 10 made up of 1 dropped goal, 1 penalty goal and 1 try.

Tries have been scored as follows :—Arthur 7, Burnett 6, Siddons 5, Longbottom 5. Kay 3, Sherman 2, Dunsterville 2, Carp, Studd, Whiteley, Morrison, Macleod one each. Burnett kicked 13 goals from 21 attempts.

BANGALORE GOLF MEETING.

29th and 31st August 1908.

THE annual Bangalore-Madras fixture this year resolved itself into a two days meeting, thanks to the energy and push of the new Honorary Secretary, Lieutenant Colonel Pakenham. Instead of our visitors from Madras arriving here in the morning and returning the same evening, they have, by the meeting opening on Saturday, a sort of bye-day on Sunday and they leave for Madras on Monday night, giving themselves a three days holiday.

For Saturday two matches were arranged, viz., an Optional Sweepstakes, medal play under handicap, 18 holes. Entrance—Re. 1. Two-thirds to winner and one-third to runner up, winning ties to divide. Twenty-one competed and the result was a tie between Mr. D. M. C. Downing of Madras and Captain D. C. H. MacLean, D.S.O., the Royal Scots, Adjutant, Bangalore Rifle Volunteers. The following was the scoring :—

Major Standage, Captain W. Evans, Major Quinton, Lieutenant Down and Messrs. J. H. Peebles, F. H. Grieg, J. McIver and J. M. Brown did not return their cards.

In the afternoon there was another match—Medal play 18 holes, under handicap, for (a) Players whose handicap is 12 or under. (b) Players whose handicap is over 12.

There were eight competitors in the former class, Mr. J. H. Peebles of Madras winning, and nine in the latter, which was won by Captain Tilney, 14th Hussars, Bangalore. Following was the scoring.

* Wins cup presented by Bangalore Golf Club.

Mr. J. H. Peebles of Madras also won the cup offered by the Club for the best scratch score for 18 holes, in the above competitions, with a score of 73.

THE BANGALORE-MADRAS MATCH.

This was played off on Monday, 11 couples competing. The match was inaugurated in 1878, both the clubs subscribing for the Cup, which is a very handsome trophy, and one of the conditions are that home and home matches should be engaged in yearly. Madras has won it on the last three occasions that it was played for, their last win being in February of this year. Altogether, the Cup has been played for on 41 times of which Madras has 26 wins to its credit and Bangalore 15, and with to-day's result Madras has won it 27 times.

In the first round of to-day's play Bangalore were badly beaten, being 22 behind Madras, and finally Madras won by 7 games to 4, in 36 holes of 18 each.

Following are results of the play :—

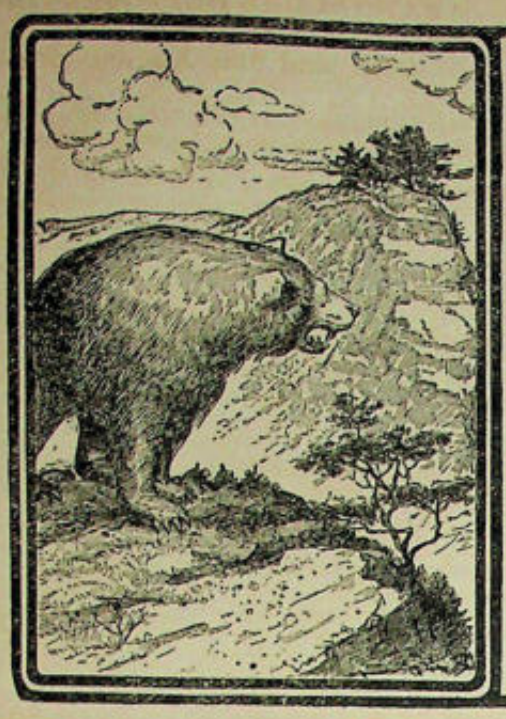
There was an Optional Bogey Competition open during the whole meeting, i.e., from 29th to 31st, unlimited entries at one rupee each time. Winner to get two-thirds and runner up one-third. There were 109 entries and the result was a tie between Mr. Gordon Fraser of Madras and Mr. Cochran, 81st Pioneers, of Bangalore, the stakes being divided between them.

The Challenge Cup was presented to Mr. Annan the Madras Captain, by the Hon'ble Mr. Stuart Fraser, who in a few words complimented the winners on their good play. Mr. Annan replied briefly, and the "flowing bowl" was passed round, the health of the winning team being drunk with the greatest enthusiasm.

The home Club entertained the members of the Madras Golf Club at dinner on Saturday night at the United Service Club and they lunched together on the ground to-day. Altogether the meeting has been an unqualified success, due in no small measure to the exertions of the Honorary Secretary, Colonel Pakenham.

THE solicitor was drawing up Enpeck's will. I "hereby bequeath all my property to my wife," dictated Enpeck. "Got that down?"

"Yes," answered the attorney.



"On condition," continued Enpeck, "that she marries within a year."

"But why that condition?" asked the man of law.

"Because," answered the meek and lowly testator, "I want somebody to be sorry that I died."

"OH, doctor," exclaimed the nervous young wife, as the eminent surgeon entered the sick-room, "if an operation is necessary we want you to operate immediately. Expense is no object at all."

"We will operate at once," replied the eminent surgeon, without looking at the patient.

WINCHESTER

HIGH POWER BIG GAME RIFLES.

When you want to drive a ten-penny nail you don't use a tack hammer. For the same reason when you set off to hunt big game generally shot at fairly long range don't take a medium or low power rifle just because you happen to have one, but carry a long, strong shooting rifle—one that hits a smashing, knock-down blow. Such rifles as the Winchester Model 1886 .33 caliber; the Model 1895 .30 Army, .303 British, .35 and .405 calibers; and the Model 1907 .351 caliber, using High Power Smokeless Powder Cartridges with metal patched soft pointed bullets. The bullets used in these cartridges have a good-sized cross section which gives them great killing power at the distances most big game is shot. The accuracy of these rifles and cartridges has been thoroughly established and if you sight right the game is yours.

The Horse.

THE ARAB HORSE.

THE following expert opinion on the Arab horse appeared in an American exchange:—

The Arab horse is the maker of desert poetry, as he is the companion of the tents and comrade in war of the Arab himself.

Without the Arab horse, Arabia would never have been; with him it dosen't amount to much, notwithstanding the fact that the Arab horse is—for what he is—a jewel, and particularly is this the case when he is made to be the central figure of a love song and a desert sunset.

I am a great admirer of the Arab for what he is, for I spent ten years of my life living with him and mostly on his back, and during those ten years I learned much about him.

I learned to admire his boldness, his grand temper, his sagacity, his wonderful—for his size and speed—endurance and bottom, his extraordinary constitutional and physical soundness, the exquisite beauty of his form, the quality and textural fineness of his hair, skin, nervous, bony and muscular structure, his wonderful eyesight and magnificent courage. I admired and loved him for all this.

But I found that he could not gallop faster than an ordinary man could kick his hat. I found that he was not fast enough to take to England to play polo; indeed, that he was not even fast enough to compete with the ordinary country-breds of India in that great game. I found that in long marches, and particularly forced ones, he had to keep at top speed, so to speak, to maintain his place in the ranks where the walers (Australians) and English horses were taking things easily. I found that when it came to downright want, work and hardship, the flame in his large, soft, brown, but lustrous eyes, went out, and that he droped and died by the way.

I found in short, that where he was pitted against thoroughbreds or half-breds, he was a useless incumbrance, and that his real value and usefulness belonged to the country where he came from and the civilization that existed there.

As a hack he is the very worst. He has but one pace, and that is the gallop; he knows no other, can go no other. He cannot walk a dozen yards on a level road without sticking his toe in the ground, and his trot is the worst imaginable.

Over rough ground or in the jungle amongst dry nullahs, holes and hidden dangers, he is the safest transport in the world, and I love him for this.

As a cross for breeding purposes history records what he has done. He has stamped himself as the generous giver of all that is good, useful and valuable in the fashionable horse-world of to-day, but the potency of his blood only manifested itself many generations after the original cross.

First Arab crosses amount to absolutely nothing, and it takes years and years of the most careful selection and breeding to develop the splendid characteristics of which he was the early possessor.

In the early crosses he only succeeds in losing his splendid individuality and giving nothing in return.

Bred to the biggest, soundest, most perfect specimens of the best families and greatest stayers of the English thorough-bred mares, he would, perhaps, produce in one hundred and fifty years from now a constitutionally and physically sounder thorough-bred than exists to-day, but this is all he possibly could do, and this only because of the superior class and quality of the thoroughbred mare of to-day and those of the days of Roxana and Selim.

Some years ago I advocated a cross between the pure Arab pony mare and the small sons of small families of the English thorough-bred, for the purpose of producing a fast, active polo pony with bottom and endurance, and keeping within the height limit (a most difficult necessity in polo pony breeding) by a further Arab cross through the sire, and finally by careful selection developing a thorough-bred type of polo pony that I thought would be possible as time went on. English sportsmen, however, working upon a plan of their own, are now producing the most extraordinary thorough-bred ponies the world has ever seen, and which any Arab cross of any kind would only serve to deteriorate.

We have tried the Arab in every possible, every conceiveable, way. We have given him every chance with every kind of a mare, and all we have succeeded in doing is to lose entirely his superb and valuable characteristics and breed a lot of useless wastrels.

The pure Arab blood, the excellent quality of his texture, his wonderful bone and nerve, his magnificent courage and temper, and his extraordinary constitutional and physical soundness, were the priceless assets he instilled into the race horse of to-day. We thank him for them from the bottom of our hearts, we take our hats off to him and respect him as we always will do.

In the fullness of his heart, the Arab horse has given us the very best he has, and we will keep it for ever in unfading remembrance and grateful appreciation.

One word for the Arab dealer. Oil and honey, Oriental politeness, courtly Eastern dignity, and to whose voice the music of the nightingale lilting o'er the restful glade and mingling with the bubbling streamlet of the dell amidst the silver moon gleams of the softest night in May, is loud and tempestous; eyes into whose depths you might gaze for ever as they open wide and languidly to receive your fruitless search; the soft touch of the hand, as with gentle pressure he unlocks your very soul and learns all that you fain would hide, he invites you to his tent offers you his coffee and a seat on his carpet, observes that Allah is Good, and to make a long story short, "sells you an' oss." Begone! vulgar phrase. Spoil not this Eastern softness (slick-ness, really), but memory recalls. Oh! that we could forget. How often I've tried to, but memory haunts me still:

"'Twere folly to remember,
'Twere wisdom to forget."

But I shall never forget that delightfully fascinating Arab who sold me a wonderfully good looking "Gulfer," and called him a child from the heart of the Nejd.

I have yet to see the man who has visited Arabia in search of an 'oss who has not been "stuck," and stuck good to the tune of: "Are there any more at home like you?"

THE INDIAN PHEASANTS AND THEIR ALLIES.

By F. FINN, B.A., F.Z.S.

(Reprinted, by permission, from the "Indian Forester.")

CHAPTER III.

MONAULS AND BLOOD-PHEASANTS.

THE Monauls are very easily recognizable birds, being of large size and stout and heavy make, with comparatively large heads and bills, short shanks—shorter than the middle toe and tails of only medium length, flat and nearly square like a pigeon's. There is a bare blue space round the eye in both sexes, but in plumage they differ absolutely, and the cocks only possess spurs, which are not very long. Four species are known, of which two are Indian.

THE COMMON MONAUL OR IMPEYAN PHEASANT.

Lophophorus refulgens, Blanford, Faun., Brit. Ind., Birds, Vol IV., p. 96.

Native names:—Lont (male), Hany (female), Nil mor, Junglimor, Kashmir; Nilgur, Chamba; Munál, Nil (male), Karari (female), Kulu, Munál, Ghar-Munál, Ratina Kawán, Rabnal, Ratkap, N.-W. Himalayas; Datiya, Kumaun and Garhwal; Dafia, Nepalese; Fo-dong, Lepcha; Chamdong, Bhutias of Sikkim.

The male Monaul has a fine crest of feathers with shafts bare nearly to the tip, where there is a lance-head-shaped webbed portion; it is more or less erect. This crest and the head generally and a streak along each side of the breast are of an intensely brilliant burnished-green; the back of the neck is burnished copper-red, changing to golden-green in some lights, the upper part of the back is bronze green, the lower silver-white. This latter colour is usually concealed by the wings, which are metallic purple with metallic blue tips to the feathers. The under surface of the body is velvety black and the tail cinnamon.

The hen has a short crest of ordinary feathers; she is of a mottled-brown, the light marking to run in streaks. Her throat is pure white, and her general appearance is much like that of a huge partridge.

The young birds resemble her, and the male does not attain its full plumage till the second year, and even then, curiously enough, the seventh-pinion-quill remains brown a year more.

THE INDIAN PHEASANTS AND THEIR ALLIES.

The beak of the Monaul is horn-colour and the legs olive-green—what is called "willow" by poultry fanciers. The bright blue face noted above is most characteristic of these birds. The cock is about twenty-eight inches long with the wing nearly a foot and the tail nine-and-a-half, the shank three inches in length and the bill two. The hen is a little over two feet long.

The common Monaul is found throughout the Himalayas, and even extends west to Afghanistan and Chitral. It varies its vertical range according to the time of year and the part of the hills inhabited, going higher in the Eastern Himalayas than the Western, and, of course, much higher in summer than in winter. It is not likely to be found, however, above 15,000 or below 4,500 feet at any time.

It is usually a forest bird, although in summer it may be found out on the grassy slopes above the level of trees. Only a few are seen in Company, males being more solitary than females. The food is especially composed of grubs and roots, the Monaul being much addicted to digging, an operation it performs with its beak, for it does not scratch like most birds of this family. The comparatively large bill, however, forms a most effectual hoe, and the bird is probably of great use in the forest in turning over the surface and destroying insect pests.

It is likewise most excellent eating and carries a great deal of meat, so that it is in every way a bird to be encouraged.

The Monaul breeds in May and June, the hen laying some times as many as six eggs, but generally fewer, in a nest under a bush or tuft of grass. The eggs are buff, speckled with brown. The display of the cock is of the frontal type, the attitude being much like that of the turkey. His call is a loud plaintive whistle, unlike the harsh notes of most birds of this family.

It is worth knowing, considering how many people now reside in the hills for long periods, that the Monaul is capable of complete domestication; the birds may be brought up so tame that they can be allowed to go about at large like poultry. The species is also a very suitable one for acclimatization as a game bird wherever congenial localities exist, as it affords good sport, being wary and readily taking wing. The cock varies a good deal in colour, nearly black and white and pied varieties, and others with the copper on the neck replaced by steel blue having been recorded. The last-named has been described as a distinct species under the name of Lophophorus mantoui.

THE BRONZE-BACKED MONAUL.

Lophophorus impeyanus, Blanford, Faun. Brit. Ind., Birds, Vol. IV., p. 97.

The male of this species resembles the last in size and form, but differs in having the lower back bronze and purple instead of white, and the underparts glossed with green instead of being jet black. The hen is not known, and only a very few of the other sex have been obtained, all in Chamba, south-east of Kashmir.

It seems, from an account by Major G. S. Rodon, in the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society, that the native shikaries of the locality say that this form is merely a "sport" from the common Monaul, which likewise occurs there. Considering the proneness of the common species to variation, and the unlikelihood of two species of pheasants, differing only in colour, remaining distinct in the same district, I am strongly inclined to think that their account is correct, and that the Bronze-backed Monaul, like the Black-winged Peacock, is not a true species, though excellently exemplifying a variation from which a species may arise. The subject is one which would well repay investigation, and I hope that any one who may be living in Chamba will look out for a cock Monaul showing no white upon the back, and thenceforward investigate his family and relationships, if possible. It is a pity to kill the bird, as the form is now known, and it would be more interesting scientifically to find out about its propagation, although, of course, breeding in confinement would be an easier and simpler means to this end.

There exists a very distinct species of Monaul in the Mishmi Hills, very near our Assam Frontier, and hence probably a future Indian bird. This is the crestless Monaul (Lophophorus sclateri), a species which differs markedly from the common Monaul in having no crest, but the crown of the cock covered with short curly or frizzled feathers. The wings are also shorter.

In general colour the two species are very similar, but the male of the crestless bird has the upper tail coverts and tip of the tail pure white as well as the rump. In the hen the rump is very light and the tail has a broad white tip to correspond.

As there is only one other species of Monaul known, and this lives in Western Szechuen and Eastern Koko-nor, and may ultimately find itself a British subject, it is as well to mention it. This is L'huys's Monaul (Lophophorus L'huysii), an even more splendid bird than the common species. It exceeds this in size, and has more of the fiery copper in the plumage, besides showing the lower back and tail nearly all shot-green and purple with a little white. The crest is well developed, but of ordinary shaped feathers.

The hen of this species is readily distinguishable from the common Monaul hen by having a large white patch on the back. Père David stated many years ago in the Birds of China that this species was in danger of extinction, and I sincerely hope that it will be protected or domesticated before it is too late. It is except, perhaps, the ocellated Turkey of Honduras (Meleagris ocellata), the most richly coloured of all birds whose beauty depends on a metallic gloss, and it would be a great pity were it lost to the world.

THE BLOOD-PHEASANT.

Ithagenes cruentus, Blanford, Faun., Brit. Ind., Birds, Vol. IV., P. 103.

Native names:—Chilime, Nepalese; Semo, Bhutan, See-mong, Lepcha.

Only one specie of this very well marked genus is found with us. It is a small bird for a pheasant, being about a foot and a half long, with a broad rounded tail not so long as the closed wing, the whole bird being thus rather partridge-like in style. The plumage is very characteristic, being long, full, and soft; the crown has a short bushy crest, and there is bare skin round the eye. Cock and hen are much alike in shape, but differ absolutely in colour and the former has several spurs on each leg.

In colour he is grey streaked with white above and on the flanks and lower belly; the breast is apple green splashed with crimson, and the throat and feathers under the tail are crimson.

The hen is brown finely pencilled with black, and with a grey cap and chestnut throat.

The legs are coral red, as also are the base of the bill and the bare eye-patch, which is brighter in the male, however. The bill is black.

The cock will measure about eighteen inches, with a wing of eight-and-a-half, tail nearly seven, shank nearly three, and bill under one inch. The hen is a little smaller. This is a thoroughly alpine bird, ranging between ten and fourteen thousand feet in the Himalayas, where alone it is found. It occurs in Nepal, Sikkim, and Bhutan, but its exact eastern and western limits are unknown, except that it does not extend to Kumaon. In Sikkim, at all events, it inhabits pine forests, feeding on the shoots of the conifers and on various other leaves, seeds, and fruits. The flavour consequently varies, and sometimes it is so strong and unpleasant that the bird is hardly fit to eat at all.

In such cases the objectionable taste could probably be in great measure removed by "drawing" the birds as soon as killed, as no doubt the food they contain taints the meat.

The young have been seen in May, but beyond this nothing is known of the breeding of the species. Birds of the year have no spurs, and in older specimens they vary in number, being different on each leg; four on one and five on the other seems to be the maximum. With such saw-like shanks the Blood-Pheasant cock ought to be able to give a good account of himself in a fight; but in the autumn, at all events, males and females are found associating together in flocks of more than a dozen. The Blood-Pheasant is not a shy bird, and much prefers running to flying; its call note is a squeal like a kite's, while it has a shorter cry of alarm. It is suspected of burrowing under the snow in winter like some grouse; indeed, the short-tailed, hill pheasants of the East recall a grouse in more ways than one, and evidently take the place of those birds in the economy of nature, there being no true grouse in any part of India.

Only two other species of the present genus are known, and one of these, as it occurs near Indian limits, in Eastern Tibet and Western Szechuen, deserves mention here. This is Geoffroy's Blood-Pheasant, Ithagenes geoffroyi in which the male much resembles the Indian bird, but has the throat and breast grey, thus being duller in colour, while the hen is greyer above and has the tail indistinctly edged with crimson.

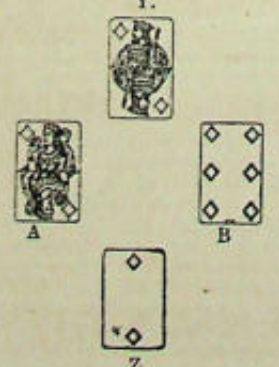
Solution to Problem No. 71.

B is marked with the 4 of diamonds and Z with the 2. A cannot save the game, however, without the assistance of another trick from B, and if he goes on with diamonds at once he will give Z a chance of discarding the knave of hearts, which very likely blocks dummy's suit. Now Z probably holds the ace of spades, or he would not have declared no-trumps. If he holds the king of clubs as well, and the knave of hearts, the game is gone; so A should try his partner for the former card, and lead a club through the ace at trick 5. If B gets in he will at once lead his third diamond, and the game will be saved.

Problem No. 72.



Score: A B 0, Y Z 0. Z deals, and declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).—Hearts, 3, 2; diamonds, king; clubs, queen, jack, 8, 7, 6, 4; spades, ace, jack, 10, 5.

Z's Hand (Dealer).—Hearts ace 5, 4; diamonds, ace, 5, 4, 3, 2; clubs, ace, king, 5; spades, 3, 2.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 21st August 1908.

PEOPLE who hail a taxi in town and drive for a mile or two seldom realise the capabilities of the machine, but those who make use of the main roads leading out of London often come across the cabs in all sorts of out-of-the-way places. As a matter of fact, though built for town use, they can stand long and hard journeys over give-and-take roads as well as most touring cars. Only last week a driver in Cardiff was hired to go to London and back. The machine was a standard pattern 10-12 h.p., Coventry Humber, and the whole 340 miles was covered at an average speed of sixteen miles an hour without any mechanical trouble. The journey is believed to constitute the longest distance for which a taxicab has been hired.

We wonder, writes a weekly paper, when the powers that be will take action to stop the licensed insanity of motor racing. The recent "accidents" at Brooklands, in one of which a car running at an alleged speed of 110 miles an hour "jumped" the track into the river, killing one occupant and dangerously injuring the other, calls for prompt and rigorous action. The enterprising individuals who periodically look for sudden death at Brooklands do not deserve the conventional verdict of 'Accidental death.' A more applicable and just judgment would be "Suicide, with attempt to murder, during a fit of temporary insanity."

"Apes copy their masters," as small boys at school are wont to observe.

The only monkey motorist in the world—"Billy," the baboon chauffeur—whose home is in the United States, made his first motor run in London last Saturday on his little half-horse power Red car. The drive was over the stage at the Palace Theatre, where "Billy" is to appear next week.

The car is a miniature one, with four seats, complete in every detail and "Billy" displayed wonderful knowledge in driving it. Petrol is forbidden on the stage, so the car is driven by clockwork.

At a word from his master, Mr. Macart, yesterday, the baboon, clad in chauffeur's uniform, mounted the car in the wings and, guiding it neatly round a block of scenery, drove unaided on to the stage. His steering was perfect. Round and round and in and out he went, his tiny hands tightly clasping the steering wheel. Then, at a second signal, he drove off the stage.

A brother baboon, "Jim," is an expert cyclist, and two other monkeys in Mr. Macart's troupe play 'Home, Sweet Home" on the sleigh bells.

One of the mysteries of the magisterial attitude towards motorists is the frequent leniency of the penalties imposed on drunken drivers of automobiles. The motor-car, handled with discretion, is unquestionably the safest vehicle on the roads, both for its occupants and for the public. But in the hands of a drunken man it is obviously a terrible engine of destruction, and the law has rightly permitted the infliction of heavy punishment upon such an offender. Yet while excess of the speed limit by two or three miles on an open road without traffic—which in these days when everybody has some knowledge of motoring even the most bigoted anti-motoring J. P. must recognise to be without danger to the public and purely a technical offence— is usually visited with a fine of £5 or more, it is quite common to find drunkenness while in charge of a car only penalised to the extent of 10s or 20s. In such a case there are only two alternatives—either the accused was innocent, in which case he should be discharged; or he was guilty, and in that event so small a penalty was ridiculously inadequate.

Here is the latest effort of the ante-motorists, distributed as a circular in many of the big towns.—

MEN OF ENGLAND

YOUR BIRTHRIGHT IS BEING TAKEN FROM YOU BY RECKLESS MOTOR DRIVERS.

You have the same right to use the public roads as you have to use the houses you lived in; without having your lives endangered.

Reckless Motorists drive over and kill your children.
Reckless Motorists drive over and kill both men and women.
Reckless Motorists kill your dogs.
Reckless Motorists kill your chickens.
Motorists fill your houses with dust.
Motorists spoil your clothes with dust.
Motorists, with dust and stink, poison the air you breathe, thus injuring your health.

Reckless Motorists have compelled one hundred thousand people to withdraw their horses and carriages from the public roads. It is estimated that one hundred thousand men have been thrown out of employment in consequence. It is estimated that five hundred thousand cyclists have been compelled to give up cycling through the reckless driving of motorists. You cannot ride, drive, or walk on the public roads without the danger of being killed by Reckless Motorists.

Men of England will you stand this tyranny any longer? Rise up, join together, and bring pressure upon your representatives in Parliament, and otherwise make it unpleasant and costly to the tyrants who endanger yours lives and the lives of your dear ones. The Goverment refuse to protect you! Do not remain like tame sheep any longer, but act at once; then, and then only will your rights be restored to you.

But the time really has arrived when some sort of action must follow the many plans put forward for reform. When the President of the Local Government Board, in discussing the Estimates just before the rising of the House of Commons, suggested fresh legislation dealing with motor-cars, the threat was not an idle one.

In a few days a circular will be issued to local authorities throughout the country asking for information on the effect of motor-car traffic on the roads in their several districts—the damage done by dust, the injury to life and limb, and the interference with the ordinary use of the roads. The replies will receive very careful consideration, and may lead to legislation where it is clear that fresh regulations are necessary.

There is, however, no desire in official circles to do harm to a great and growing industry, and it is stated frankly by representative officials that if motorists themselves will show more consideration for the general public, more regard for the ordinary users of the road and be more careful not to raise unnecessary dust, there is still a hope that no new law dealing with motor-car abuse of the public highways need be called for during the next session.

Public opinion as represented by communications received by the authorities is very adverse to the present condition of affairs, and it is urgent that the various motor-car organisations should use every effort to restrain the "road-hog" and others who are making—according to the information at present available in responsible circles—the highways not only uncomfortable, but positively dangerous.

THE CASH VALUE OF ANIMALS.

MANY years ago we recollect how the ten-year-old daughter of a country rector considerably astonished and puzzled her father by asking him what was a fair price for a dromedary. The child, who was of an enquiring and practical disposition, had been reading in her Bible the account of the vast herds of live-stock owned by the patriarchs and was desirous of assessing their cash value. For sheep and oxen she was able to fix a price, according to the modern European standard, but the camels puzzled her exceedingly. Hence the enquiry, to which the good rector was unable to give a satisfactory reply. Many persons, doubtless, have had occasion to ask themselves somewhat similar questions, and for the most part, in all probability, with equally unsatisfactory results. Now, however, thanks to Captain Stanley Flower, whose long experience at the Giza Zoological Gardens entitles him to speak with authority, we have a ready means of ascertaining the ordinary selling price of a large number of the mammals, birds and reptiles commonly exhibited in menageries. For this gentleman has contributed a paper on this subject to the August number of the Zoologist, in which he gives the results of his own personal experience on such matters during the last dozen years. It is true that he has had no dealings in rhinoceroses and tapirs; and we think it is a pity that he did not give some details on these points culled from the reports of the London Zoological Society, as the first named are, we believe, some of the most high priced of all animals. Perhaps this omission will, however, be supplied by other menagerie-menageries, as Captain Flower specially invites information from those who have expert knowledge of such dealings. In the great majority of instances the prices quoted are those for delivery in the principal cities of western central Europe, such as London, Liverpool, Marseilles, Rotterdam, Hamburg, etc.

Although his notes are intended to be of practical value alike to professionals and amateurs, the author is careful to mention that the prices he quotes are not to be regarded as representing anything like a fixed standard. Values fluctuate to an enormous extent according to supply and demand.

"If for instance," writes Captain Flower, "an individual or an institution wants to buy a lion at short notice and no one is wishing to sell, they may have to pay some hundreds of pounds for an animal that at another time its owner would be willing to part with for practically nothing in order to save the daily cost of keeping it supplied with food. 'Fancy' prices are not included in these notes, though in actual trading one is at times quite ready to pay them, or at any rate to 'allow' for them: as it is a curious fact that the general public that will crowd to see, and will pay to see, a tortoise that they hear has cost a hundred golden sovereigns, will take no interest in the same reptile should it have been known to have changed hands for a ten-pound cheque!"

The highest-priced animals with which Captain Flower has had to deal appear to be giraffes, which of late years have had an enormous "slump." At the time the Soudan was closed to Europeans it was impossible to buy one of these animals for £1,000; but no sooner were the country again opened up than the value fell to from £300 to £350, a price insufficient to repay the cost of capture and transport. At the present day a fair value for a healthy young giraffe should be from £400 to £500

Rhinoceroses will, we believe, still fetch sums approaching £1,000; but on this point Captain Flower, as already mentioned, is unable to furnish any information. Another animal which commands a high value is the hippopotamus; the price ranging from £500 to £550 for young animals, whether wild-caught or home-bred. Young African elephants, on the other hand, can be bought from £350 upwards, while the value of their Asiatic cousins is about £150 less per head. No price is quoted for a gaur (Indian bison); but an American bison ranges from £50 to £100 in value, while a young bantin has been offered for so little as £40.

Antelopes, as a rule, command much higher prices than deer; sable antelope fetching as much as from £125 to £150 each; and roan antelope f[illegible] The brindled gnu, again, ranges [illegible] £125; while its nearly extinct [illegible]in is to be bought at from £75 to [illegible]k ordinarily fetch from £40 to £50, [illegible] £75; while the scarcer bontebok has [illegible] hands for an even hundred. The [illegible]ther valuable antelope, fetching from [illegible]100; while for the lordly eland as [illegible]om £150 to £175 is asked. On the other [illegible]i can be bought at from £12 to £20 [illegible]le male Indian black buck sell for [illegible] from £4 to £10, although females are [illegible]m £8 to £13 15*s.* each.

[illegible]n Ammon wild sheep £100 has been asked; [illegible]l fell at from £10 to £25, and bharal at [illegible]15 to £25 each, while the arui or Barbary [illegible]heep fetches from £3 to £16 per head, accord[illegible]o age, sex, etc. Ordinary Arabian camels or [illegible]hedaries range in value from £20 to £45 each; [illegible]te individuals being those specially favoured in [illegible]e European market. The value of Bactrian or [illegible]o-humped camels has a rather wider fluctuation, [illegible]nging from £17 10*s.* to £50; white ones being [illegible]he most valuable.

The value of a healthy youg chimpanzee in Europe may be averaged at from £40 to £75; but £100 may be asked one day for an individual, which a few days later may be worth only the value of its skeleton. On the Suez Canal, where exceptional opportunities for buying animals not infrequently occur, Captain Flower once purchased an adult male orang-utan for £6 and a female for £14. Not much profit, one would think, at such prices, for the owners! Other valuable monkeys are the West African mandrill and drill, of which adult males will at times command from £50 to £100. The aye-aye lemur of Madagascar will fetch as much as £45; while marmosets sell at from 20*s.* to 40*s.* each.

Contrary to popular opinion, lions, according to one author, are of small value in comparison to the cost of their keep. "Wild-bred, imported animals in good condition are worth from £60 to £100. Menagerie-bred lions sell for smaller sums; and one Zoological Gardens were offering cubs for £10 each in 1907. The smallest sum for which I have ever been offered a live lioness in Europe was £3 15*s.*; the largest sum I have been asked for a lion was £250. Tigers and tigresses are worth far more than lions and lionesses. The range of price also appears to be much smaller; my notes give £100 to £125 for tigers, £72 to £112 for tigresses."

For leopards the average tariff is £25 to £30; but lower prices are frequently taken; for snow leopards, on the other hand, from £75 to £150 has been asked. Hunting-leopards, or chitah, come but rarely into the market, and £25 has been asked for a big cub and £37 10*s.* for a young female.

Bears, as a whole, are a cheap line; although Polars may fetch anything between £25 and £50 per head. "The other bears usually imported into Europe fetch very small prices. Unless the supply very much exceeds the demand, I cannot understand this; for they are as a rule hardy beasts in captivity, easy and very cheap to feed, and often great favourites both with their keepers and the public visitors. One factor that may perhaps keep down the dealers' prices is that many people, in India and elsewhere, obtain bear cubs as pets, and later, when the young bear gets too masterful for a private household, the owners are only too willing to present their pets to some public Zoological Gardens. Personally, in the last ten years I have had twelve bears in my charge, and only one was purchased, and that for £4! The brown bear is generally offered for sale at from £5 to £8 per animal, but I have noted £10 asked for a female and £11 for a male. The Indian sloth-bear is of rather greater value; prices range from £5 to £15, and I have seen as much as £25 asked."

To notice the prices of the smaller mammals would occupy too much of our space, and we must conclude with a few words regarding those of birds and reptiles.

Falcon and the smaller birds of prey can be bought for about 30*s.* each; while from 20*s.* to £4 is the usual price for ordinary eagles and vultures. Some of the rarer species will, however, fetch from £5 to £10, while the lammergeier ranges from £7 10*s.* to as much as £25, and £35 has been given for a pair of condors. Perhaps, however, the African Secretary-birds are the most valuable members of this group. Flamingoes range from £2 to £3 5*s.* each, and black swans from £5 to £10, although specimens have been sold at £2. Twenty sovereigns is not an unusual price for an Argus pheasant; and from £12 to £22 is the usual figure for cassowaries, although some of the rarer kinds will run to £40. Emus realize as a rule from £16 to £27 per pair; while grey rheas fetch from £6 to £12, and white specimens from £12 10*s.* to £25. The price of ostriches is not discussed.

Giant tortoises vary in value according to size and weight; specimens five feet long being worth about £100. Similarly snakes and crocodiles are sold at so much a foot with an increase of price according to increased length in a progressive ratio. Thus while an 8-foot alligator is worth from £9 to £12, one of 12 feet will be valued at £45. Similarly while pythons and boas when from 7 to 10 feet long are worth from £3 to £5, when they reach 14 or 15 feet their value rises to from £20 to £35, while when above 15 feet they increase in value about £5 per foot. One hundred sovereigns have indeed been asked for a 24-footer.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

A steady drizzling rain somewhat spoiled the pleasure of the Sixth Monsoon Meeting on Saturday and the consequent mistiness of the atmosphere made it almost impossible to see the races at all clearly till the horses got well into the straight, while the going was worse than it has been before this season. Only one event was divided so that the card had only seven items this time instead of the eight to which we have been accustomed of late.

The Pony Hurdle Handicap, Division I., had only five starters, of whom Killarney was made a hot favourite. Alford took her out to the front at a big pace, Emerald, Lily II., Pineal and Solace following in a regular procession. Killarney kept going well till a little before the last hurdle when she stopped pretty completely and Emerald running on won pretty easily from Lily II., adding another winning mount to Mr. Evers' long score.

Ynyslas was thought a good thing for the Third Handicap Hurdle Race, for which there was a field of six, as it was considered that the extra 7lbs. Dangar had to carry would more than account for the half length by which he beat the mare the week before. This proved incorrect however, as Mr. Cowper's horse jumping well had an easy win, while Ynyslas, who didn't much like the mud, finished a bad third behind Leading Lady. This mare challenged Dangar, who had been in front after they jumped the first couple, and just headed him over the last hurdle, but she took it very badly and lost too much ground to have a chance in the run home.

The fourth Amateur Hurdle Race with nine starters looked to be anybody's race and there was nothing "sticking out a yard." Matsumata and Queen of Hearts were liked best, but many others were backed. Mr. Tremearne took advantage of the light weight and went out to the front with Roland, who unfortunately however slid in the mud taking off at the fourth hurdle and went right through a wing. After that, Cain, Queen of Hearts, and Matsumata led from Lady Gold, whom however Mr. Turner brought through on the inside and, drawing away after the last hurdle, beat Queen of Hearts pretty comfortably by three lengths. Matsumata, who was third, was twelve lengths behind.

The Autumn Plate was considered by everyone to be one of those instances which will occur at times of a real bad mistake on the part of the handicapper. Golden had the best of it and the only chance of her getting beaten was that Lord D. or Queen of Gems might with their light weights get so far away that in the mud they would be beyond catching. However the favorite had too much in hand for that to happen. Lord D. got every advantage of the start and kept going well, but Golden came up at the finish "with a wet sheet" and sailed home a very easy winner from Flotsam who ran a much more honest horse than usual. Lord D. third.

The Pony Hurdle Handicap II. was a very hollow affair, as Bandy Leg, a very big good looking pony, who ran nowhere the week before, went straight out to the front and cantered in the easiest of winners by two and a half lengths from the favourite, Meprise. It was rather rough on Meprise, Pink Un and Lady George, who have been fighting for the places in the last two races, to be beaten with several stone in hand by a pony who had managed so completely to blind the handicapper as to his capabilities.

In the Elysium Plate Craigendarrie, who was penalised 5 lbs. for running second to Clynder in the Mediocre Handicap at the fifth meeting, came out and scored by ¾ length from Sir Ulric. The winner was not fancied much as the distance was thought to be too short for him, but though Murdison put in a very strong finish on the favourite he could not get up to Mr. Evers, who scored his second win of the day.

Murdison's turn came again however in the last race and he too added a second notch to his day's account by bringing Clynder home, half a length in front of St. Rule. This was also considered a very good thing for the winner, who was backed even at 2 to 1 on, but as a matter of fact she was very hard pushed at the finish and won all out. Davis, the young English light weight, rode St. Rule in real good style and made a great bid for the race.

The entries for the seventh meeting are fairly well up to the mark again. The Poojah Plate heads the list with 25 entries, Pony Hurdles 18, Pony Handicap 10, Selling Race 12, Goomtee Plate 13. The first two of these however will probably be divided and with seven duplicate entries in the horse race, fields will probably be on the small side.

The course did not present a very animated appearance on Tuesday and the only jumpers out that were noticed were old Cain, who went over a couple and then galloped on round the course, and Reha, whom Mr. Evers schooled fast over 5 flights, jumping well.

T. Lansdown, the Indian jockey, is now in England and had been riding at Hurst Park last month. He says he intends staying in England for the National Hunt season if he can secure a retainer for the winter months.

We would call the attention of our racing readers to the advertisement of the Calcutta Turf Club appearing further on giving the dates of the Official Measurer's tour.

The St. Leger for 1910 has closed with the capital entry of 348, including eleven made in New York.

His Majesty the King has nominated two, and other prominent subscribers are the Duke of Westminster, the Duke of Portland, Lord Derby, Lord Cadogan, Lord Durham, Lord Falmouth, Lord Harewood, Sir R. W. B. Jardine, Major Eustace Loder, and Sir John Robinson.

An interesting nomination is a Marco colt entered in the name of Lady Warwick, who has just registered her racing colours, "white, cerise sleeves and cap."

The Middle Park Plate will always be associated with the name of Blenkiron; sad it is to learn of the tragic end of William Blenkiron. At one time owner of a horse that, before it came into his possession, won the Derby, and one of the heirs to a fortune of some £70,000 or £80,000, William died suddenly in a common lodging house at Hammersmith last month.

At the inquest it was stated that Blenkiron, who had reached the age of seventy, was formerly in business with his father as a horse breeder at Middle Park, Eltham, Kent.

They purchased and bred several well known race horses, including Blair Athol, which they bought for £6,000 and sold for £12,500, a record price at that time. Blair Athol won the Derby and St. Leger in 1864, but was then the property of Mr. W. I'Anson.

When his father died Blenkiron with his brothers shared in a fortune of between £70,000 and £80,000. He had, however, squandered his money and had been reduced to living in common lodging houses, and receiving allowances from relatives.

Our London correspondent writes:—"I alluded in a recent letter to the death of Mr. George Cooper, the big book-maker, who collapsed at the Brighton meeting and died next day. His estate is estimated at close on £500,000!

"Nothing approaching this figure can be recalled in the case of bookmakers. In recent times the largest fortune left by a member of the profession was that of Mr. Alec Harris, who died worth about £150,000. Mr. Harris began life with a charity school education and a head for figures.

"Mr. Cooper was originally a stonemason in the north, and he commenced his career as a bookmaker by making a 'copper' book on a piece of waste ground in his dinner hour. From this humble beginning he in time rose to be one of the leading operators, everyone who went racing being acquainted with the firm of Cooper and Rowson.

"Mr. Rowson, who predeceased his partner by two or three years, left only about £80,000, but he probably spent as much as that on his family, the luxuries of life, and in charity. Mr. Cooper, unlike his partner, was a bachelor, with inexpensive tastes. It was not to bookmaking exclusively that he owed his great fortune, though that provided him with the means of making money in other directions. Among other things, he was an extensive landowner in Cheshire.

"There are several bookmakers whose resources must surpass even those of Mr. Cooper. One member of the profession is a manufacturing stationer on a very large scale, while two others have vast steel interests which yield them a fortune every year."

We are indebted to the J. J. Miller Printing Company of Melbourne for a copy of Vol. XXVI. of that extremely useful and interesting publication the "Australian Racing Chronicle." It contains full details of the six months' racing in Australia from February to July 1908.

The Quetta Polo Tournament was concluded on the 12th September when the Flagstaff House team met the South Wales Borderers in the final round. The Flagstaff House team was composed as follows:—Messrs. Wilson, Fielden and Colonel Vaughan (all 10th Hussars) and General Clements, Commanding Quetta Division, back: while Captain Welby, Captain Pritchard, Major Casson and Captain Reddie, back, represented the Borderers. The result was a win for the Flagstaff House team by 7 goals to 1.

Full results of the Sirhind Boxing Tournament will be found further on. The original idea of this tournament was to encourage boxing in regiments on a large scale by inducing as many men as possible to enter. It having been found that the entries have grown too heavy, and that regiments stationed near Simla could send more men than those stationed at a distance, this being to the advantage of regiments who send the greater number of competitors, the following proposals have been put forward for next year: First, that the number of competitors from each regiment be limited to 12, excluding officers and boys. Second, that not more than four men of the same regiment shall compete in any one weight. Third, that the same system of marking points and drawing as at present in force be followed, except that every win in the semi-finals scores 2 points, and 3 points in the final. Any suggestions in this connection will be gladly received by Captain B. G. R. Gordon, Superintendent of Gymnasia, Kasauli.

Particulars of the stirring contest between Burns and Squires in the Antipodes are given in our review of home sport. Australia had been looking forward with intense interest to the contest between her champion, Bill Squires, and the world's heavyweight champion, Tommy Burns, for Squires is one of those men who command respect and secure enthusiastic support, and the fame of Tommy Burns is world-wide. In Australia, Bill Squires is a hero who had not up till the 24th August been beaten in his own land, and the last contest with Burns—that at Paris—in which the Australian put up a fine show, gave the natives heart that in his own land he might just beat the American. That he made a great effort, and lost a splendid contest, is evident from the report.

Squires, in fact, would appear to have shown something approaching the form which his friends in Australia always believed him to possess until his first disastrous meeting with Tommy Burns at Colma on 4th July last year, when the Canadian so rudely shattered Squires' dreams of championship honours. That was a terrible blow to the Australian and his friends. His backer, however, stood by him, and gave him a chance to rehabilitate himself in a match with Jack "Twin" Sullivan. This took place last September, but although Squires stayed nineteen rounds with the clever twin, he was again counted out.

In his more recent contests in Europe, however, Squires showed marked improvement. In the genial climate of Wexford, he completely rid himself of the rheumatic affection which clung to him in America, and, gradually getting into shape, disposed of the Irish champion, Jem Roche, in the fourth round. This success did Squires a great deal of good and so heartened him that he jumped at the chance of another meeting with Tommy Burns. This took place in Paris on 13th July last, and Squires, boxing splendidly, gave Burns and his supporters some anxious moments. Indeed, there was a time during the contest when it appeared that the champion would lose his laurels to the Cornstalk, and it was as much head-work as hard-hitting which finally won the victory for Burns in the eighth round.

The Americans continue to amuse us over the Olympic Games. We are told of "terrific enthusiasm" everywhere expressed over the returned victors, of "patriotic spirit" of a "welcome home" on a scale commensurate with the epoch-making display of the American winners at the Stadium and much more in the same strain. But performance is somewhat behind promise when of the £5,000 wanted they had scraped together but £800 up to within three days of the national welcome! And of this £100 was contributed by Lipton!! Writing the day the mail left a correspondent says :—

"So far only a third of the total amount required is forthcoming. As £800 is necessary to furnish medals to the members of the Olympic team and a second sum equally large is required for the purchase of silver cups for Mr. Hayes, the Marathon winner, and Messrs. Carpenter and Robbins (the 400 metres runners), the committee is at its wits' end.

"It is probable that drastic changes will have to be introduced in the magnificent programme of the reception, which, as at present arranged, includes a parade of fifteen battalions of the regiments of greater New York in honour of the athletes."

Mr. T. E. Hammond, of the Stock Exchange, has won the twenty-four hours' walking race at the Stadium. He covered 131 miles and 580 yards, beating all the world's records from seventeen hours.

Mr. Hammond holds the record for 100 miles in 17hrs. 25mins. 22secs. made on the London-Brighton Road in June last year, when he walked from London to Brighton and back, 104½ miles in 18hrs. 13mins. 37secs. The professional record for 100 miles stands to the credit of W. Howes who covered the distance in 18hrs. 8mins. 15secs. at the Agricultural Hall in 1880. In March last year Hammond walked from Marble Arch, London, to the Martyr's Memorial, Oxford (54½ miles), in 8hrs. 51mins. 14⅘secs.

The Northcote Shield Cricket Competition was concluded at Poona on the 9th instant when St. Xavier's College beat the Deccan College in the final by 324 runs.

We regret to announce the death in England of Lieutenant L. F. Philbrick, R.I.M. This officer was a good cricketer and played for the Bombay Gymkhana in many of their fixtures last year. He kept wicket for the Presidency in their first match against the Parsees in 1907.

The Bombay Rovers Football Tournament opened on the 12th instant, when the R.F.A., Kirkee, met and defeated the Y.M.C.A. by 3 goals to 1.

The second game was between the East Lancs and the R. G. A. Their first meeting ended in a pointless draw but replaying on Tuesday, the East Lancs won by 2 goals to nil.

The fifth Gymkhana of the Naini Tal season was held on the 5th instant and in spite of the rain which fell during the afternoon it was attended with no small measure of success. The programme opened with the Affinity Stakes—ladies to take rings and gentlemen a tent peg. Won by Mrs. Ley and Mr. Faunthorpe: eight couples entered. The Potato and Bucket Race attracted nine entries, and Mr. Sutherland was the winner. Mrs. Kisch was the first arrival with the correct answer in the Progressive Mathematical Race, for which ten ladies entered. The fourth event was the Telegram Stakes—given a word from each letter of which in correct order a telegram was formed. Won by Mrs. Ross and Captain Plant. The Trotting Race for ladies brought out eleven competitors. The final resulted in a dead heat between Mrs. Ley and Mrs. Fremantle, the former winning in the run off. The Polo Ball Race, which concluded the programme, was won by Mr. Sutherland.

The Harris Football Tournament at Poona was concluded on the 10th instant when the R. F. A., Kirkee and the Leicesters from Belgaum met in the final. They had played a draw of a goal each previously, but Thursday's match ended in favour of the Gunners by a goal to nil, after a well contested game.

We are glad to learn that Mr. Strachan, the Sylhet planter who was recently badly mauled by a tiger, is making good progress towards recovery.

In a recent resolution of the Home Department it is stated that the total mortality amongst human beings reported to be due to wild animals in 1907 amounted to 1,966 as compared with 2,086 in 1906. This is the lowest on record since the practice of collecting these statistics was initiated. The most noticeable variations from the figures of last year occur in Bengal, the United Provinces, and the Central Provinces, while in Madras there was a comparatively large increase, from 167 to 201 in the number of persons killed by tigers. In Bengal the mortality rose from 756 in 1906 to 840. In the United Provinces the mortality fell from 280 in 1906 to 159. The decrease is principally due to a noticeable decline in the number of deaths caused by wolves in the Allahabad division. The mortality in the Central Provinces fell from 262 in 1906 to 174 in 1907.

The total mortality amongst human beings caused by snake bite fell from 22,811 in 1906 to 21,419 in 1907. So low a figure has not been reached since 1897. The decrease is noticeable mainly in Bengal and Eastern Bengal and Assam, where the figures fell from 8,862 and 2,730 in 1906 to 8,276 and 1,900, respectively, in 1907. The most important increases occurred in Madras and Burma, where the figures rose from 1,527 and 1,149 in 1906 to 1,677 and 1,348, respectively. The highest mortality in Bengal occurred, as usual, in the Patna division, the number of deaths being 3,393, as compared with 3,636 in 1906. The decrease in Eastern Bengal and Assam is attributed to the floods having been lower. The Central Provinces figure (996) is the lowest returned in any one of the last seven years.

The Lauder Brunton treatment of snake bite by incision and application of permanganate of potash, and the distribution of lancets, continues. It is too early yet to pronounce with any certainty as to the result of the experiment, but a number of favourable reports have been received. Eight cases are reported from the United Provinces of the successful use of Dr. Calmette's Antivenene. In two of these cases the permanganate of potash treatment was also employed.

The total number of cattle destroyed by wild animals was 88,835, as compared with 86,467 in 1906. The most remarkable increase—though the Local Government expresses a doubt as to the accuracy of the returns—occurred in the United Provinces, where the figures rose from 5,972 in 1906 to 9,306.

The number of licenses (in form 11) issued free of cost under the Indian Arms Act, 1878, for the destruction of wild animals or the protection of crops, during the year, was 11,796, against 9,357 in 1906 and the total number of licenses of the nature in force, including such as were valid from previous years, amounted to 43,583, as against 39,706 in 1906. A larger number of these licenses was granted during the year in each province, except Madras and the United Provinces; but in Eastern Bengal and Assam, where the number is 3,984, as compared with 2,299 in 1906, the large increase is due to the conversion of licenses in form 8 to those in form 11 in the Assam Valley Districts.

To the "Era" belongs the credit of supplying the finest fishing story of the year. We give it without comment.

"It is averred that a day or two since Mr. Alf. Sommerlad, the accomplished musical-director of the Devonshire Park Theatre, Eastbourne, came across Edgar Pateman with his rods, who informed him he was going to the Hippodrome to try and borrow a professional's dress-basket, as no creel was large enough for his average 'catch.'

"'I've heard about your powers with the rod,' said the musician, 'and now I'm coming on the pier with you, to see whether it is true.'

"Nothing abashed, the Cockney led the way to the staging under the pier head, and, dropping down a line, soon hooked a fine specimen of the edible crab.

"He was about to destroy the creature, when Mr. Sommerlad begged that its life might be spared, and it was then tossed back into the water.

"At that moment an accidental kick sent the tin box containing the lug and rag worms after the crab, and all the bait was gone!

"There being no other persons fishing from whom worms could be begged or borrowed, the disconsolate song writer lowered the line again into the sea, as one solitary fragment of bait was adhering to the hook, and sadly led the way to the refreshment department.

"The time approaching for Mr. Sommerlad to get to the theatre, Bateman went to fetch his rod, having decided to walk with him on the way.

"Judge the twain's amazement on finding the basket they had left empty on the still deserted fishing stage filled to overflowing with fine flounders, soles, rock-whiting, and plaice!

"They rubbed their eyes with astonishment at what seemed a miracle, when of a sudden the explanation was forthcoming! Painfully making its way backward up the fishing-line, which, as has been stated, had been left in the water, came the creature whose life had been spared, bearing in its nippers a fine young conger, which it carefully placed with the other fish on the basket, and then it dropped back into the water, to return no more.

"Apparently by instinct, knowing he had lost his bait, the grateful crab had deposited 15½lb. of live fish in the song writer's creel as a thank-offering for its life being spared."

The "Era's" story is a good story, but it lacks finish. A really well-meaning crustacean would have valued its own life at not less than 20lb. of live fish, and (weighing 4½lb. itself) would at this juncture have seen the desirability of snuggling personally into the creel to make up the deficiency.

"Are performing animals trained by humane methods or not? In India the question need hardly be asked, the fiendish cruelties of which the pitiful antics of the dancing bear and the goat and monkey are the outcome are too painfully familiar to us. In England occasional exhibitions—such as the present water chuting elephants at the White City—can only be produced by cruelty: they may stoutly assert to the contrary, but all who know the habits of elephants and closely observe these unfortunate pachyderms doing their senseless and unnatural 'turn,' can only marvel at the barefaced mendacity of the trainers and the ignorance of the public," writes an old Indian shikari now at home on leave. "But," he adds, "I am not sure that with dogs the 'all done by kindness' theory isn't generally entitled to a certain amount of credence. I am acquainted with one eminently successful dog trainer whose methods almost bordered on eccentricity, so sympathetic, patient and ultra-considerate and gentle was his system of all awards and no punishments. I know another, whose results are almost as wonderful, who belongs to the suavitor in modo and fortiter in re school. I suspect the surest road to success lies between the two, though after all said and done what does it all amount to? Performing animals can never appeal to the travelled, thoughtful or observant person surely?

In this connection it is not uninteresting to note what that clever trainer of dogs, Mr. Velanche, has to say concerning the methods employed by him in initiating his clever pets, now appearing at the Empire, into the delights of football. "I put them," he said, "first on stools, and got them to make for the ball, teaching each side separately. Dogs are perfectly human, and whenever the teams got mixed I had only to call the offenders by name to unravel the tangle. My chief difficulty, of course, was with the goalkeepers. These are on leash, and are very keen to slip it." As for any suggestion of cruelty, this trainer simply ridiculed the idea. "People must know very little of animals," he remarked, "if they suppose anything can be done by such means. Treat animals ill, and they get flurried and sulk, and can do nothing. No I reward them for a good rehearsal, and leave them unpaid when they do badly."

But whatever may be the case with performing dogs, it seems that simian comedians are entitled to very little respect at the hands of those who take their education in hand. For instance, Professor Macart, whose sagacious troupe has been recently introduced at the Palace for the first time, maintains that it is wholly erroneous to imagine, as some people do, that monkeys are of an affectionate disposition, and are as pleasant and fascinating to have about a house for domestic pets as purring kittens. [Surely no Anglo-Indian ever imagined such a vain thing.—Ed.] According to the experience of this accomplished trainer, the whole tribe is vicious, and if any monkey makes a show of being amiable and docile it behoves his owner to be on his guard, for the creature is only "pretending," and is really waiting for a suitable opportunity to scratch or bite. Let us add that we are not implying any serious misconduct to Professor Macart's own particular apes. Indeed, looking at their long list of accomplishments, it might very well be that one of them knows something about the law of libel. Discretion has always been the better part of valour.

One reads that the fashion of playing croquet in bare feet has shown signs of spreading this summer. In country houses and in suburban villas alike has been seen in a corner of the croquet lawn a row of deserted shoes and stockings while their owners' feet serenely thread the maze of hoop and ball.

So compelling has the vogue become that resistance to it is no longer expected. It is whispered that a duchess has succumbed to it, and during the last week-end at one of the best known, most hospitable seats in Surrey the croquet party comprised a leading society beauty, a prominent literary woman, the commander of one of his Majesty's destroyers, and a City merchant prince, all fashionably attired in nature's own footgear.

"Unlike most fashions, bare-footed croquet is not at all uncomfortable, we are led to believe. After the game the players invariably agree that they have never before played either so comfortably or so well. The unshod foot takes a splendid grip of the turf, far better than india-rubber or leather can, and, as a consequence, the poise of the body is much assisted and the aim much improved. The fact of the sole of the foot coming in contact with mother earth also seems to be distinctly soothing to the nerves." No doubt. The innovation, we fancy, is unlikely to catch on in India where little matters of centipedes, scorpions, "itch," caterpillars, and other crawling etceteras, an occasional grass snake, or the unconsidered trifles the mali is prone to leave about, rather militate against the idea.

About the time that many people predict the general disuse of the horse for purposes of traction comes a scheme for relieving him of a deal of the unnecessary hard work he has been compelled to perform for centuries! A Mr. T. W. Brigg, of Bradford, who has devoted nearly a quarter of a century to the study of the laws which govern locomotion and transportation, has arrived at the conclusion that horses have been made to work a great deal harder than they should and seldom achieve the results of which they are capable, by reason of the present unscientific methods of harnessing. It would almost seem as if Mr. Brigg had arrived too late on the scene; but if he is able to alleviate the lot of the dray horse for the few remaining years he is destined to be with us he will not have laboured quite in vain.

"When two horses are yoked to a wagon-pole," he says, "their chains run obliquely at an angle of about 42 degrees, from the collar to the pole. When they pull back the force has to pass along those chains and backwards down the pole, thus covering two sides of a triangle. If the horses exercise a pull of 400lb. each, only 300lb. acts on the wagon and 100lb. is wasted. In addition to that, each horse exerts a lateral, or 'sideways,' pull of 268lb. against the other, and these pulls, neutralising each other, are wasted.

"It is possible to obviate all this by a perfectly simple rearrangement of the gear. Instead of fastening the collar chains at a sharp angle to the pole I attach to the end of the pole a pair of arms bending forward and downwards, through the outer ends of which pass the collar chains. The horses then get a straight pull backward; their force is exerted in parallel or straight lines, and therefore in those of least resistance; the horses do not waste their power, and their legs, feet, and withers are saved to an enormous degree. The danger of falls is vastly minimised.

'I shall try to persuade Mr. Sandow to take part in a telling experiment. Placing a small wagon on an inclined plane, with myself as the load, I shall arrange the harness on the present plan and defy him to move the wagon upwards. Then, arranging the harness on a scientific plan, I shall ask a lad of ten or twelve to push me upwards—and he will do it."

Mr. Brigg certainly understands the conservation of force. He stood on one foot, extended his arms, and challenged the interviewer to push him backwards stipulating that it should be a straight thrust, with no jerks. Hard as his antagonist pushed Mr. Brigg stood firm still balancing himself on one foot. "Three men," he said, "could not push me back so long as they observed the rules, and I am by no means a strong man, as strong men go. The secret is a knowledge of the true laws of force."

The Calcutta Swimming Club bring their season to a close on Tuesday, 29th September, when they hold their annual autumn entertainment. An attractive programme has been drawn up and the meeting will take place as last year after dinner, starting at 9-15. P.M. We have attended a good many of these annual fixtures and can assure in the public of an enjoyable evening's entertainment. Tickets Rs. 2 each are obtainable through members or direct from the Honorary Secretary, Mr. A. R. C. Miller 1/1 Vansittart Row. The programme will be found in our advertisement columns.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—We continued with the Big Meeting on Wednesday when the conditions were in every way as favourable as on Saturday though in the large fields punters found themselves far from as pleasantly placed. Everything went smoothly till the last race when C. B. Mahomed and Mujeed came down with their horses at the bend, neither fortunately, being much hurt. In the same race there was an objection for bumping against the winner but this was over-ruled.

Opening with the Kharakwasta Plate betting was even between Recovery, Wakeful and Matalgia till a run on Wakeful made her favourite despite the fact that this was her first attempt in public. She jumped quite well, hanging on to Recovery and leading at the half mile, but from here the chestnut had her safe and Wakeful nearly coming down at the last jump was also passed by Matalgia. Captain Meynell has to be complimented on another judiciously ridden race.

The Dealers' Plate of a mile found Grey Falcon and Commander in demand, the former firming to favouritism and a ton coming for Moonib Pasha late. Grey Falcon led Commander out but whereas the former dropped out of the race at half way the latter killed himself out in front before reaching the bend. Here Ashroff and Little Joker were in the lead, and the former had them seemingly beaten when Moonib Pasha, full of running, put in an appearance outside and won easily.

Only six went for the Poona Plate with Killua in great demand till money for Chivalry made him an equal favourite. It was a magnificent race amongst these fliers, Chivalry getting the best of the start and leading Master Theo. The leader was just holding his own when Killua began to come outside and like a flash caught the leaders on the post to win by a neck. It was generally remarked how Hill's finish resembled those we used to see by Williams—coolness itself.

No less than sixteen faced the starter for the Poona Derby, it being a pretty sight opposite the stand before they got away beautifully together. The betting, by the bye, found Peculiar, Meazer and Nooman the shortest priced. Hadee and Hazza soon gave way to Amood and Dumra, the latter leading at the mile. Two furlongs later Peculiar and Sialkote began to come up and the latter led at the bend. It was an exciting race down the straight when Sialkote stayed the favourite out by just a clear length. Another upset, as usual in this race.

For the seven furlong Criterion eleven started with Metal Boy commanding most money though there was a good deal for Fireworks whilst Oakton gradually lengthened. As a race, it was a poor one as backers of Fireworks never had cause for anxiety. She led Admiral Crichton the whole way round and won well in hand.

THE Arab Pony Derby was the last and after his easy win in the Maiden Plate, Mudlool was backed as though it was a one-horse race. As it happens, he was fractious at the gate and got away amongst the last few in a field of twenty-one, Mountain King making the running from Sabah. Mudlool, Shanwar and Fantom made their appearance at the bend where Viceroy fell and brought Special down. At the distance Mudlool had a slight lead but Fantom on the outside was well in hand and had but little difficulty in upsetting the pot. As mentioned, the objection was over-ruled and the books were left substantial winners.

SATURDAY also turned out fine, though hot, and an excellent day's racing of seven events was enjoyed by the usually huge crowd. The class we are seeing out is tip-top and fields are big, the Autumn Plate having to be split up. The Poona Grand Annual found eight starters and despite a steadier of 11st. 8lb. Seclusion was sent out an equal favourite with Greenstone, Lamrock the only other seriously supported. Seclusion as usual made his own running till she found Lamrock making it hot enough and fell behind Clear Artist and Greenstone who hit the fifth jump very hard and was out of the race from there. At the half mile Seclusion put in a run again and coming into the lead had only to be shaken up to stay out a late run by Chassepot, on whom Mr. Charrington rode a nice race.

DEVELOPED into a bit of a stayer, Bay Middleton was in great demand for the Wanowrie Plate of six furlongs with stable and public money for Creditor. The former soon resigned the lead to the latter, Mumbra, and Darby, who ran second at the bend. Here Bay Middleton began to draw up and coming between the two had them beat down the straight and stayed out a late run by Grey Falcon who was not noticed till the last hundred yards.

BETTING was good and interest great in the mile and a half Aga Khan's Cup for which a smart field of nine faced the barrier. Currandooley was first asked for, but then a very confident rush was made for Black Wolf and Mr. Galstaun's breedy three-year-old went out a firm favourite from Pelargonium II. The last named got a poor start, Wandin and Cinder Bill going out to lead the favourite. At the mile Black Wolf came up to the leader, Pelargonium and Golden Gleam also drawing up and at the six the former two were out in front. Nothing ever looked like passing Black Wolf who won very easily from Hunting Horn putting in a fast run down the straight, Cinder Bill pulling up lame.

RUSSLEY ROSE found a pile of money for the International Plate, fives bar one being quoted, but after getting badly away could only get fourth. The race throughout lay between Tete-a-Tete, Pantry Girl and Chippy Norton who led out in that order. At the bend Pantry Girl came into the lead and after a desperate race under the whip just got home by a head. There was, I hear, an enquiry concerning Chippy Norton the result of which has not yet been made public.

FIRST of the Autumn Plates followed, Zotique shortening from Fireworks and Bucolic, who was left at the gate. Rustile jumped out with the lead from Zotique and Fireworks, but on turning the bend Fireworks went away to win easily from Rustile and Posco. This shows the winner to be pretty good and I believe a longer distance suits her: her two wins suggest it.

No less than eighteen went for the Bedouin Plate with favouritism resting on Precious, Moonib Pasha next in demand. Wild Poppy and then Gladiator were in front, and entering the straight Brigand II. looked all over a winner, but Robinson, riding a perfectly judged race on Moonib Pasha, came up outside to win easily.

SECOND of the Autumn Plates saw St. Patrick holding his own against Crossbred, who was backed at first but expanded. The colt gave trouble and got away badly, whereas Winsome took a long lead from St. Patrick. This was made up entering the straight where St. Patrick came away to stay out a late run by Mallinyook. This is muchly improved form by the winner, who up to now has done his owner but little good.

"Dose Irish make me sick, alvays talking about vat gread fighders dey are," said a Teutonic resident of Croydon, with great contempt. "Vhy, at Ninna's vedding der odder night dot drunken Mike O' Hooligan butted in, und me und mein bruder und mein cousin Fritz und mein frent, Louie Hartmann—vhy, ve preety near kicked him oudt of der house."

London Week by Week.

FRIDAY, 28th August 1908.

THE declaration of Britain's new Naval policy has been the news item of the week and its discussion has for the moment displaced the giant gooseberry from pride of place. Sunday's Observer was the first to make public the momentous statement to the effect that the leading members of the Cabinet are at one in the decision that henceforth "Two keels to one" is to be our policy. This is peculiarly significant when regarded by the light of recent Anglo-German relations. The programme involves an expenditure of nearly £50,000,000 over and above our present Naval Estimates, and while the Cabinet are not unanimous as to procedure, it is evident that the sum required will have to be raised by loan. Thirty vessels of the improved Dreadnought or improved Indomitable type costing nearly £2,000,000 apiece, will have to be provided for the carrying out of the scheme.

THE improved health of the British Army in India is matter for thanksgiving. I see from a report issued last Monday by the Director-General of the Army Medical Department that both at home and abroad the health of troops for 1907 has been exceptionally good. The admission, death, invaliding, and "constantly sick" rates are lower than those for the previous year, and show a still further reduction compared with the average for the decennial period to 1906.

The diminution in sickness has been most marked in India and Egypt—the death-rate for India being the lowest on record.

This all-round improvement in the general state of the health of the troops is "in no small measure attributable to the increased attention devoted to sanitation, and to the better appreciation by all ranks of the dangers to health incurred by the neglect of sanitary procedure." This is good reading and should be peculiarly pleasant to the large military contingent who, I believe, read The Indian Field.

A COTERIE of Liberal Free Trade Capitalist M. Ps. have now obtained possession of The Westminster Gazette which enters upon its new career as a limited liability concern with a capital of £150,000 and a directorate composed of Messrs. J. T. L. Brunner, Chas. S. Henry (the Anglo-American "copper king," and brother-in-law of Miss Edna May's husband), Alfred Mond, Frank Newnes, and Oswald Partington. The company has a quaint provision for the resignation of any member who may cease to hold Liberal and Free Trade principles.

MANY in India will be grieved to hear that Colonel Sir Frederick Henniker, of the King's Royal Rifles, who was so seriously ill when he sailed from Bombay in the Arabia, did not live to reach England. He succumbed to abscess of the liver on Wednesday, the 19th instant—three days before the vessel reached Plymouth—and was buried at sea.

The Arabia had an eventful voyage altogether. The storekeeper, William Newbury, fell overboard near Cape Finisterre, and was seized by a shark before a boat, which was sent to his aid, could reach him.

In addition to the two deaths during the voyage, there were over eighty cases of severe illness amongst the crew of 370.

THE undying interest in Dickens finds eloquent expression in the Dickens Exhibition now being held at the Dudley Gallery. To the million it cannot fail to be attractive, while to the disciples of the great novelist the treat is such as to place them under deep obligations to the members of the Dickens Fellowship, the organisers of the Exhibition. The chief feature is the fine collection of original drawings by the most famous illustrators of Dickens. Special reference may be made to the splendid set in colours of Pailthorp's illustrations for "Pickwick," whilst among the other famous artists represented are "Phiz," John Leech, Crowquil, Fred Barnard, Charles Green, and Mahoney.

Of great interest, too, is the complete set of first editions, from "Sketches by Boz" to "Edwin Drood." The latter novel has provoked a whole set of plagiarisms and sequels which are shown. One is the "Cloven Foot" by the American humorist Orpheus C. Kerr, who has adapted it to American scenes, characters, and customs. Then there was "John Jasper's Secret," a sequel to "Edwin Drood," published in Philadelphia a year after Dickens's death. There is a London sequel by Gillian Vase published in 1878, and a spiritualist version from America professing to be "by the spirit pen of Charles Dickens through a medium."

One of the most interesting exhibits is the little wooden midshipman mentioned in "Dombey and Son," which has been lent by Messrs. Norie and Wilson, the nautical instrument makers, now of the Minories but formerly of Leadenhall Street. Another is a model of the Maypole Inn, which Mr. J. L. Toole intended to present to Charles Dickens but could not obtain till after Dickens's death. At the sale of Mr. Toole's effect it was purchased by Mr. Bransby Williams who lends it to the exhibition.

A print of Warrne's blacking factory, near Hungerford Bridge, in 1824, is included because as a boy Charles Dickens worked there in that very year. Twenty antique champagne glasses purchased by Mr. J. L. Toole at the sale of Dickens's effects have a double interest. There is also a bust of Dickens carved in 1886 from the last piece remaining at Yarmouth of the old boat known as Peggotty's boat. Autograph letters, even cheques on Coutts's bank, signed by Dickens are also included in this remarkable exhibition.

NATIONAL GALLERY methods are peculiar. The trustees have but £5,000 a year wherewith to buy pictures, yet they have just purchased a family group by Franz Hals for £25,000 on the instalment system, which means that the Government grant has been pledged for five seasons and that until 1912 no money will be available for buying pictures. An evening paper remarks:—

Whether a Franz Hals, and a second class Franz Hals at that, can fairly be said to be worth £25,000, is a matter round which argument is vain. We can no more appraise the intrinsic value of an Old Master than we can give the capitalised value of the view from Richmond Hill. The Gallery authorities have but two considerations—whether they can acquire their picture for nothing less than £25,000, and whether, if chaffering fails, they could spend their money to better purpose on other canvasses? They cannot reason with the man who finds Franz Hals distasteful, and the man on a pound a week salary will hardly be persuaded that any picture can be worth five hundred years of his wages.

The Multi-Millionaire, with three or four hundred thousand set aside for his picture-buying hobby, will smile at his Imperial competitor. Even Bayswater and Queen's Gate have probably some dozens of collectors who do not grudge ten thousad sovereigns for a year's adventures in the auction room. It is time to reconsider our position. Either we must find more money, the nation bringing its expenditure on pictures to the level of the middle-class collector, or we must give up the struggle, and buy our Old Masters as coloured photographs.

THE play Censor once more affords us a topic of conversation. Whenever the value of his office is questioned a prolific and usually interesting controversy ensues and all sorts and conditions of people, from the prurient prude to the lover of freedom in the sphere of artistic enterprise readily join the fray. Recently Mr. Martin Harvey proposed to produce a version of Sophocles' "Œdipus Rex" written by Mr. Courtney, but the Censor has refused a license and as a result some of the papers team with letters pro and con. In the course of a letter Mr. Martin Harvey says:—

"It is the indefensible inconsistencies in the administration of the Censorship which are found to be intolerable and ridiculous. Mr. George Sampson rightly doubts whether any Government would dare to abolish the Censorship. I do not think the Government has been asked to do so. The deputation which waited upon Mr. Herbert Gladstone proposed that the Censorship should be transferred to a responsible and representative body of experts whose decision should be final. Such a committee would probably welcome the assistance of Mr. Redford himself. His point of view would be useful in discussion, but surely should not be the only and final one. The wisdom necessary for the guidance of a Censorship must be of the highest order. I would venture to say that no exalted wisdom is shown in refusing the public a performance of one of the dozen great tragedies of the world because unconscious incest forms part of the theme. Such an argument points to a lack of the sense of proportion. In the presence of the stupendous catastrophe which overtakes 'unhappy Œdipus,' the mind does not linger over the details of his crime, but is awed by the spectacle of a great and undeserved victim of mischance. But, Sir, I do not wish to plead here the cause of Sophocles. I should prefer to point out that, as the 'modern adaptation' has been carried out by so eminent a man of letters as Mr. W. L. Courtney, his name should be sufficient public guarantee of the manner in which the subject has been treated."

I am not prepared to discuss within the limits of this short letter the question of the Censorship it defects and merits; I will content myself with observing the plays to be produced at theatres have to pass the Censor, while short plays or sketches of almost identical construction are permitted at the halls without let or hindrance. Also if the Stage Society or any body of amateurs chose to put on the Œdipus—and took no money at the doors, they might present it indefinitely. Further if Mr. Martin Harvey took the piece to Dublin the Censor would have no jurisdiction. These, I submit, are points of which much can be made by the anti-Censor section of the British playgoers.

La Loie Fuller, famous as the inventor of the serpentine dance, which took London—and other places—by storm several years ago, appeared with a dozen of her pupils for the first time at the Hippodrome, on Monday afternoon, in a beautiful and artistic spectacular production entitled, "A Ballet of Light." Loie Fuller, who has her own views on dancing, and is famous as a teacher, has selected her assistants with the greatest care. They are as graceful as they are beautiful. The style they adopt is a variation of the serpentine dance, and the production is given a great distinction by the elaborate nature of the scenic and lighting effects which accompany it. There is shown the sea, a storm, there is the "Dance of Approaching Doom," the "Dance of Hope" the "Dance of the Fires of Purification," and the "Dance of Elysium," and to represent all these 1,000 amperes of electricity are used at each performance—in other words, a quantity sufficient to light a town of 30,000 inhabitants. Colour upon colour, scenic splendour upon scenic splendour flit across the stage, and meantime the lightly-moving dancers in their changing flowing draperies help to give meaning to the music and the subjects. It was not until the end that Loie Fuller appeared as "The Great White Lily"—a striking figure in the wonderful white light moving with an ease and grace to revive old and cherished memories. The reception was wholly enthusiastic, as so charming and novel a spectacle deserved.

Miss Elsie Kay, a member of Mr. Seymour Hicks's "Gay Gordons" company and one of the original Gibson Girls, was married in London on Wednesday to Mr. Ronald McAndrew, only son of Mr. McAndrew, who, a Dublin correspondent states, is a millionaire shipbuilder of Liverpool.

The "Gay Gordons" company is at present appearing in Dublin, and Miss Kay played her part up to Saturday night last. On Wednesday Mr. Seymour Hicks received the following telegram from her from London :—

Shall not be back. Am married. So sorry.

This is the eighth girl of the Company who, within the year, has married money or title.

An important novelty in autumn theatrical fixtures has just been announced involving as it does the reappearance of Mr. H. B. Irving as a West End Manager and head of his own company. He has secured a lease of the Shaftesbury, which he will re-open about the middle of October. He proposes to start operations with a revival of "The Lyons Mail," the drama with which his father's name was so long and so popularly associated. In it Mr. Irving will, of course, assume the dual part of Dubosc and Lesurques, while that of Jeannette will be sustained by his wife, Miss Dorothea Baird. Viewed from the standpoint of the leading lady, Jeannette is confessedly a minor character, although of undoubted value to the piece, yet it is interesting to recall that in the 1883 revival at the Lyceum it was played by Miss Ellen Terry.

Messrs. Derwent Hall Caine and M. V. Leveaux have acquired from Mr. Hall Caine the rights of a new drama which "the Great Boomster" has named "The Unwritten Law." This subject has recently been a good deal before the American and English public and from what one can learn the drama will be good enough; the action of the second act takes place in the polar regions so the scenic artist should be able to provide a setting of unusual grandeur.

"Captain" Shaw, the famous London fire fighter, died at Folkestone on Monday. Sir Eyre Massey Shaw was an Irishman, he served in the North Cork Rifles and had his first fire brigade command at Belfast, for thirty years he was the chief of the Metropolitan fire brigade and a popular figure in London society, His services were rewarded with a K. C. B. on his retirement in 1891, and he was given the Freedom of the City the following year. He was over seventy and had lost both legs, one was amputated some years ago and the other was removed not long ago.

The King of Spain has been over on a short visit. On Tuesday he tried to do a little shopping on foot, but had to give it up owing to the behaviour of the crowd which followed. Twice his hat was blown off and scrambled for and the mob growing in size and rudeness His Majesty was compelled to seek the seclusion of a hansom cab.

The death of Mr. Nugent Murray Whitmore Daniell, one of the few survivors of the Old East India Company, at Tan-y-Bwlch was announced last Saturday. Born in 1838, Mr. Daniell served in the Bombay Presidency for twenty years, was at one time Under-Secretary to the Government, and at the time of his retirement was serving as judge at Ahmednagar. He married in 1869 Lady Agnes Knox, daughter of the third Earl of Ranfurly, who survives him.

REMINISCENCES OF SOME LEOPARD HUNTS.

III.

Some twelve years ago when the writer was stationed temporarily at Bareilly, ten days' leave was obtained at Christmas time, and being little past my griffinage, an expedition was planned to the Terai at the base of the Himalayas. The perusal of various descriptions of works had thrown an undoubted glamour over this belt of forest land. It was as much with the intention of probing this veiled mystery as with an idea of getting sport that this outing was undertaken. Fate had drawn my footsteps to a meagre hamlet, and the inhabitants did not consider me unwelcome as my presence indicated an influx of the much-prized but little-handled rupee. Soon after the arrival of my cavalcade it was made evident that the neighbourhood was infested by a leopard of somewhat daring temperament. At varying intervals throughout the day, and intermittently during darkness, the harsh grating cough of this feline would be heard within a comparatively short distance of this primitive collection of huts. The latest victim to the claws and teeth of this pillager was a miserable, scraggy, raw-boned pony. It was noticeable that since the time this beast nearly met with a violent and sudden death it eschewed too near an approach to the fringe of elephant grass bordering the patches of cultivation surrounding the precincts of the village. The persistent cacophony of this marauder emanating from such close quarters was warranted to disturb the rest of even the most phlegmatic of natures. On the following morning I rose with the determination to investigate the locality where this depredator had apparently fixed its abode. The advance was cautiously conducted, until it was evident that felis pardus was within shooting range, if its place of retreat could be traced. A hedge of high grass barred our passage. In penetrating this barrier a considerable amount of rustling was inevitable, although the stems were parted as noiselessly as was practicable. In front stretched an open glade, bare of forest with the exception of one rough-barked tree of large dimensions. The tinkling of a hidden rivulet was distinctly audible, but all else was silence. On all four sides elephant grass and big tree forest stretched away indefinitely. To make any further search during the day time would have been merely a waste of time. Even at that very moment a pair of remorseless green eyes might be scanning our every movement from some leafy retreat. An examination of the near bank of the streamlet revealed the fact at this particular spot it was traversed by a well used game track. A fine large tiger had taken this route not long since, and the dainty slots of numerous deer and the heavier impress of the mighty boar indicated that this trail was regarded as a highway by the ferae naturae in general. Visible above these spoors, however, were the pugs of the object of our attentions. Alarmed and disturbed at our approach, the creature had taken refuge from danger in the thicket clothing the further brink. In doing so a small muddy island in the centre of the brook had been utilized as a half-way alighting place and the run-els of ooze which trickled past its lower margin told an open tale. An inspection of the monarch of the forest that guarded this animal right of way was carried out, and though it would have been quite feasible to erect the ordinary type of platform on one of its lower branches, its elevation would have been such as to render the distinguishing of objects in the shadow beneath one of practical impossibility, especially on a moonless night. After due consideration it was resolved to picket out a live goat, and to adopt the method usually practised in Berar. As, in my estimation, this form of ambuscade is one of the very best that can be selected when in pursuit of felis pardus a brief description may not be out of place. A hole is dug in the ground with the front edge about nine feet from the kill, or from the bait as the case may be. The site should if possible be so chosen that the carcase or body will be distinctly visible against the skyline when the eye is level with the surface of the ground. In many instances this condition will prove impossible of attainment in which circumstance a light background will have to suffice. By this means even on the darkest of nights the slightest movement of a beast in the vicinity of the lure will be at once noticeable. The excavation can be dug to suit the convenience of any particular individual. There is nothing so uncomfortable as being forced to sit for perhaps hours in a cramped and painful attitude. A leg becomes numbed, and when the position is altered the rush of blood through the nerveless limb causes agony untold, and the opportunity to give the circulation a free passage may be wanting. It has been my personal experience that the most commodious pattern of pit is one in which the rearmost portion on which the watcher sits is raised about a foot above the hollow for the legs. For those who are able, without discomfort, to squat after the Turkish style, this ledge will prove unnecessary, but the sportsman whose joints are not over flexible will find that the model built on the step principle will be productive of far greater ease. The width will be about 30 inches, and the length from front to back 4 feet. The depth will vary according to the height of the individual, but it should be such that when sitting bolt upright the eye will be level with the ground surface. Care must be taken that the earth dug out is effectually concealed, otherwise the suspicion of the feline may be aroused. An ordinary native bedstead, the stronger the better, is next placed over the pit legs upwards. The rear end is laid flat on the ground a foot or so behind the hole, and pegged securely down with hooked stakes. The front bar of the frame work rests on two forked staves driven firmly into the ground, the notches of which stand about nine inches above the surface. The sides are fastened down after the same fashion as the back portion, and the gap in front is blocked up with stout poles driven in vertically, leaving an aperture of about a foot or somewhat less in width from which to fire. The hunter is as safe in a rétreat of this sort as he would be gazing at a leopard behind the bars of a cage in the Zoological Gardens. Both flanks are banked up with earth, and the whole structure is covered over with a mass of thorny branches piled up so that in no place is the bedstead visible. In this manner the surroundings of the ambush have been rendered so formidable that no feline will have the courage to face such a massive obstacle. If constructed in proper fashion this lurking place will bear the appearance of a natural clump of thorny bushes, and the quarry will not suspect the presence of danger in that quarter. This pattern of ambuscade possesses one great advantage over the platform style. Being below the level of the ground and completely enclosed on all sides the watcher can move his arms and limbs without any fear of attracting attention, whereas in a machan the sportsman being visible against the sky from below discloses his identity when making any movement.

The day time was occupied in digging a suitable pit and about 5 P.M. I crawled into my hiding place. The goat bleated in commendable fashion, but when darkness had descended, no signs, oral or visible, of the leopard had been recorded. Whether my intended victim visited the spot or whether any other forest animals passed silently like spectres along the path during the early hours of the night is a problem that must remain unsolved. Drowsiness gradually merged into sound slumber till I awoke in hopeless bewilderment. The spectacle must have been indicrous in the extreme, though never in all my shooting days have my nerves received such a rude shock. The aperture in front had been left a little too wide. Consciousness, when it returned, found me crouching on hands and knees on the dew-drenched grass, weaponless, and gazing fixedly into the face of the terror-stricken goat. At first the situation was realised only in a dreamy manner as if the mind had been hypnotized and was incapable of independent thought. The first chord of lucid remembrance as to my real locality and position brought me to my feet as if an electric shock had been administered, and instinct drove me to secure primarily my means of defence. This piece of melodrama, finishing in such a tragic display, entirely disconcerted the mental equilibrium of the bait and it was not till I had once more crawled into my cavernous retreat that the goatish gyrations round its peg ceased. Had these antics been performed with a tiger or a leopard in the stalls, the curtain might have been rung down on a very different scene. The vigil was maintained till break of day, but the peace of the night was not broken in upon by violent murder and at morn the goat was led off, by no means reluctantly, and no doubt the crazy vagaries of the white mad man formed an enthralling theme amid the capric community.

Though success did not crown my efforts, yet the short campaign against "spots" had the desired effect, temporarily at any rate, of driving this particular feline from the neighbourhood, for which mercy the villagers were proportionately thankful. During the many years that I have wandered through forest and leopard country, except on this particular occasion, to come across a beast that persisted in uttering its harsh, grating cough at not infrequent intervals, both by day and night, has not been my experience. These creatures are certainly not as a general rule noisy prowlers. It would be of great interest if a similar coincidence has ever fallen to the lot of other sportsmen, if such would come forward with an explanation as to the cause which they considered brought about such a state of vocal restlessness.

The only reason that I can assign for this leopard making such a continuous clamour is that it may have been a female which had recently lost its cubs, and that it was endeavouring to make them acquainted with its whereabouts. This suggestion is put forward in a purely theoretical spirit, as there are no grounds whatever to establish its validity.

The experiences in Berar of a fellow-sportsman of my acquaintance when essaying the death of a leopard are worthy of being repeated, as such will furnish a most useful object lesson in the case of arms. The hunter took up his position in a pit of the type described above in close proximity to the carcase of a goat that had been slain. Shortly after dusk it was apparent that two leopards were on the prowl. One occupied itself in purring just out of sight beyond the "kill." To the horror of the watcher ensconced in his pit, the loud sniffings of the partner were distinctly audible in what he considered unpleasantly close proximity to the back of his head. Apparently some such episode had been anticipated, or else the love of self-preservation had over-powered the dictates of common-sense, for a revolver loaded and cocked had been laid down between his feet. In groping for this weapon in the darkness, a finger inadvertedly touched the trigger with the result that the fire-arm was discharged and the bullet lodged in the earth in front. This sportsman himself owns that his escape was unquestionably providential. The flight of the two leopards was rather more hasty than dignified, and the disappointment of my friend's sporting retainers was keen, though no word was breathed to them concerning the exact circumstances of the case: it is quite unnecessary, and as the above events tend to prove fraught with a spice of danger, to bring a revolver into one's lurking-place. It is needless to add that the hunter in those days was a mere novice at the game, but since then many a spotted cat has fallen to his true aim.

The writer's father adopted this plan with great success for very many years, and with the minimum of danger to himself. On one occasion a somewhat exciting episode occurred. The leopard was standing facing the front of the ambush. On receiving the bullet the beast leapt spasmodically at the flash and descended practically stone dead on the roof of the hiding place. The tangle of thorns broke the fall of the animal, and the up-turned bedstead protected the inmate from an unwelcome incursion. A shout brought up the eager retinue who were warned to advance with extreme caution, as from the position of the feline it was quite impossible to judge whether it was lifeless or otherwise. The horror and astonishment of the native following can well be imagined at the unexpectedness of the situation.

One morning on a bright December day some ten years ago, when the writer was stationed in an old-time cantonment, some cowherds brought in the news that an unusually bold leopard had slain a much-prized half-grown, water buffalo during the night previous. This marauder had been prowling round the precincts of the hamlet from dusk to near on dawn. The villagers had turned out en masse, on more than one occasion, with torches and bludgeons, but the audacity of the interloper was such that shortly before sunrise it had committeed the crime above mentioned, and had dragged the victim out of the cattle pen, depositing the carcase in some open fields about 50 yards distant from the nearest habitation. The chances of wreaking a well-merited vengeance seemed meagre in the extreme, and it was as much with the idea of encouraging the villagers to bring information on another occasion as with that of slaughtering the pilferer that led me to undertake the enterprise On arriving at the scene of the murder it was found that the cow-keepers' account was accurate in every detail. The dead body of the buffalo, hugely distended, lay in a patch of cultivated land, then bare of crops, and no possible means of concealment in the vicinity. There was no option but to have recourse to the pit system. The ambuscade was soon in readiness and at 6 P.M. when the cattle had all been driven home the vigil was commenced. The precaution of placing a few thorns on the farther side of the carcase had been adopted, otherwise "spots" could have lain down enjoying his meal under perfect cover from fire. The weather conditions were wholly in favour of the leopard. The night was as dark as Erebus and a slight drizzle was falling. In front the contour of the buffalo's body loomed up against the murky sky. Without the minutest warning a spectral outline of head and chest appeared beyond the carcase and perhaps ten feet away. The apparition was so sudden in its development that it struck on the senses with a force that seemed to cause a decided start, though whether this happened in the actuality it was impossible to assert. A better opportunity might not offer so the chance was taken. The flash from the ·577 was blinding, but though sight was temporarily rendered useless, two distinct sounds told their tale. The growling snarls and the fierce struggle of a body on the ground indicated that the beast was wounded. The singing of the projectile as it hurtled through the night air spoke of a hurt probably non-fatal, for with the beast end-on the soft lead missile would not have found an exit had the aim been true.

Blood and half-digested meat littered the ground, a sight that made the heart rejoice, for one of the cat tribe that tastes the force of the ·610 grain bullet in the intestines does not live very long after the infliction of the injury.

The leopard was found dead by the villagers next morning about 300 yards from the spot it was encountered. The beast was a small female in poor condition, measuring 6 feet 1 inch only. It was a marvel how so insignificant an animal could have slain a water buffalo of the size it did, and have dragged it out of a cattle pen; but the power latent in even somewhat puny specimens of felis pardus is one that should on no account be despised.

THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

REFRESHED by heavy rain overnight, the country down the Thames Valley looked fresh and bright on the 21st instant. Mr. Davis had kept the well grassed course, which improves every year, as green as emerald, and the sprinkling from Nature's water-pot put a potent finishing touch to the good work, the going being as near perfection as possible. The weather was bright enough, though the heat and passing masses of cloud suggested a repetition of the thunderstorm that broke up the fine weather at Ostend overnight; but with the exception of a few showers before racing commenced, Molesey Hurst escaped altogether. Considering that the meeting was unopposed, the attendance might have been stronger, but Tattersall's found all its busy members at their posts. Fields panned out very well and Maher added to his successes up North by riding the unlucky The Bedouin to victory in the principal event of the day. Details:—

Signs of the break-up of a long summer were apparent at Hurst Park on Saturday, the 22nd instant, by the cooler temperature and an unsettled afternoon, in which rain played a strong part. The chance of a wetting, however, was as nothing compared with the attractions of the important sprint race, and that sportsmen had reserved themselves for the occasion was patent by the vast increase on Friday's attendance, the enclosures being packed and the holiday folks mustering en masse. That all the fashionable world was not out of town was proved by the influential muster in the paddock and members' enclosure. The course well repaid the care and practical attention it had received by affording the best of going, while fields averaged well, although, as singularly enough happens with a particularly valuable and interesting event at many a

HEALTHY LIFE IN INDIA.

Punch's old and trite, but nevertheless, true saying—"Is Life worth living? That depends upon the liver" applies more to Anglo-Indians than to anyone else—only those who suffer know how very much more. And yet there is no reason why this should be so, why a man should not be just as fit in India as in the home country. The majority of those who come out do not regulate life in accordance with the climate and changed conditions of tropical countries. To be well and to keep well requiries the greatest care and discipline. In a country like India, where the extreme heat makes so enormous a difference to the functions of the human body, it is essential to life, that the requirements of the body should be regulated with more than ordinary care. But if we keep the digestive organs healthy and the nerve machine in good working order, one can be as well and healthy on the Bund as in Piccadilly. And we can do so, for medical science has evolved a substance that, whilst easily digested, contains in happy combination the two vital properties for nourishing the body and for stimulating and feeding the nerves.

Sanatogen, the never food is almost universally recognised by medical men as a true scientific food. Readily digestible—so much so that its use in the acute stage of typhoid fever is practised by many physicians—with a high nutritive value, almost every atom of it being absorbed and assimilated, rich in that necessary element of all the tissues of our body—phosphorus—Sanatogen forms at once an almost perfect and complete diet for the low-power system which most Anglo-Indians possess. Used in time it will prevent that devitalisation of nerves and indolence of digestion, respiration, circulation, etc., which all dwellers in tropical climates know and dread so much.

Mr. Hall Caine extols its virtues:

Whitehall Court,

London, S. W.

"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a tonic nerve food it has on more than one occasion done me good."

Hall Caine

Even when one of the numerous insiduous tropical diseases has gained a foothold, Sanatogen, according to medical testimony, is a power with which to dislodge the foe, if scientific theory and actual practice in the case of enteric and other fevers have any weight at all. The author of a paper in the "Indian Medical Gazette," December, 1906, entitled "The Maintenance of Health in Tropical Climates," states this opinion: "For residents in tropical climates, suffering from general debility, the best and most readily assimilable food is a combination of casein with glycero-phosphates. This cannot be prescribed as an ordinary mixture, pill or powder, but for some years past I have used the preparation known as Sanatogen, which is composed of 95 per cent. of pure casein and 5 per cent. glycero-phosphate of sodium. I have used Sanatogen on a large scale and have every reason to be satisfied with the results obtained."

This is only one of over 7,500 written endorsements from physicians in Great Britain and India. If any further proof were required it is to be found in the vast numbers of letters from distinguished men and women, who have themselves derived benefit from the use of Sanatogen.

10, Grove Hill,

Tunbridge Wells.

"I am glad to be able to tell you that Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years' enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Sanatogen which is a fine white powder, is put up in bottles and can be obtained from all chemists.

An engrossing booklet containing matters of vital importance to well-being in the Tropics has recently been issued. It is from the pen of a physician long resident in India and is entitled "How to keep well in India." It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well. A copy can be obtained free of charge from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta from whom also Sanatogen can be purchased.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From T. W. Geary, Jr. Exr. P., Calcutta, 30-5-95. "Just a line to inform you of the efficacy of your medicine. I had been a great sufferer from severe attacks of Diarrhœa and Dysentery for the past three and a half years, and had tried all kinds of Medicine, but only to give me relief for the time being. Only about a fortnight ago I heard of and tried your Catechu Mixture and I must say I found it a most wonderful medicine, for two or three doses have completely cured me. Thanks be to God and to your invaluable remedy, I am now as well as possible. You can make what use you like of this.

From Miss E. A. L., Lucknow. A friend of mine before going to Burma last year gave me a bottle of Catechu Mixture for the relief and cure of diarrhœa. As it has done me so much good, I will feel much obliged if you will send me a bottle of it.

From T. Otter, Esq., District Surveyor, Nellore.—Please send per V.-P. Parcel to be sent by Train addressed as below 2 bottles of Catechu.

I have to state that your medicines are very effectual and I have great faith in them. They are worth their weight in gold. You can make use of this statement as you please.

Mrs. K. Ellis, Meerut.—Please send to my address 1 bottle Restringent Mixture and 1 bottle Catechu. Both these preparations are invaluable and I never will be without them.

INDIAN SCULPTURE AND PAINTING.

ILLUSTRATED BY TYPICAL MASTERPIECES.

With an Explanation of their Motives and Ideals.

BY

E. B. HAVELL, A.R.C.A.,

Principal of the School of Art and Keeper of the Government Art Gallery, Calcutta Fellow of the Calcutta University; Author of "Benares, the Sacred City," "A Handbook of Agra and the Taj," etc.

In this book Mr. Havell gives the results of many years' study of Indian Fine Art for which he has had exceptional opportunities as Principal of the Government School of Art, and Keeper of the Art Gallery in Calcutta. He deals with the subject from the artistic, not the archæological, standpoint. Mr. Murray believes that this book will rank as a standard authority on Indian Fine Art, and take the same place in this subject as Fergusson's History (of which he is about to publish a revised Edition) does in Architecture.

THE INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES.

BY

E. C. STUART BAKER, F.Z.S., M.B.O.U.

Since Messrs. Hume and Marshall published their work on the "Game Birds of India" (1879-80), now, and long since, out of print, and which, when a copy is offered for sale realizes a considerable advance on the published price, no work has appeared on the Indian Ducks with coloured plates.

The Bombay Natural History Society are now preparing and reprinting Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's articles on this attractive group of birds, which have appeared from time to time during the past ten years in their Journal.

The book will form a handsome volume of over 300 pages of text, the same having been revised throughout by the Author, and will contain all the available information up to the time of going to press.

The thirty Coloured Plates will be reproduced by chromolithography, under the supervision of the well-known bird-artist, Mr. Henrik Gronvold.

The binding of the book will be in half-morocco, gilt top, with the plates guarded, and will form a very desirable addition to the library of the naturalist or sportsman.

The edition will be limited to 1,100 copies.

home district meeting, the runners could be counted on the fingers of one hand.

An incident occurred which ought to clinch the argument in favour of telephonic communication 'twixt starting post and weighing room. It could easily be done at up-to-date Hurst Park, and doubtless will ere long. In the first race Barker bolted round the course, and went on again towards the far side. He was absent such a long time that his number was taken out of the frame. A mounted policeman went down to the post, and met Mr. Coventry, who anxious to know what to do, was riding back. Then Barker returned, and after a long time No. 12 was entered on the board. So he ranks as a starter Details:—

YORK.

For the opening last Tuesday a change in the wind brought rain, very watery sunshine heralding the top of the morning, and those who brought wraps and umbrellas were lucky, as occasionally it came down in torrents. The new ground became very greasy, and the bank under the trainers' newly-grassed enclosure caused many a slip to those who had not donned shooting boots; but the course was all the better, and in good order. As usual, most of the country notabilities were present in the members' enclosure, including a strong complement of the fair sex, while Tattersall's and the further enclosures were crowded. In fact, up-to-date York is exceeding its past glories, and the liberal outlay will warrant expectations. Details:—

Brighter hopes were held out on Wednesday morning, when the wind had dropped, and though the sun had but few chances the afternoon proved fine enough, with a splendid light for glasses, and more solid going under foot in the big enclosures. That the Ebor Handicap has a name to charm the Yorkshireman to the Knavesmire was again patent, as the big county rallied to the occasion, although only four horses could carry their hopes. The afternoon's sport proved most enjoyable, though backers were not again to the fore.

Although a great number of people had returned home after seeing the Ebor, there was left a regular Knavesmire holiday crowd on the far side of the course yesterday. The club members stuck staunchly to their guns to the finish, their enclosure being as well patronised as on any of the two previous days, while the further rings, whence a grand view of the racing is now obtained, were again packed. The Clerk of the Weather did his best to atone for the wet opening day, and bright sunshine enhanced the pleasures of a good afternoon's racing. Details:—

MEMORIES OF A GREAT STUD.—The sad end of Mr. William Blenkiron must have come as a rude shock to all who knew him in the halcyon days of Middle Park Stud, when he was the right hand of his father at the time of the latter's death in 1872, which led up to the dispersal of the great stud, where had been accumulated a fine collection of bloodstock. When the Middle Park Plate was instituted in 1866, and won by Royal Rake, it was the father and son who gave the first bonus of 500sovs., a sum at first accepted by the Stewards of the Jockey Club, but subsequently refused by them, though they were willing to perpetuate the name of the Eltham establishment just the same as they did with Mr. Gee, who at the time was a contemporary of the Messrs. Blenkiron at the Dewhurst Stud Farm.

The Middle Park dispersal of 1872 put all records in the shades. It lasted over four days, and the late Mr. Tattersall there disposed of 328 lots, which realised no less a sum than 102,335gs. It comprised 13 stallions, 193 mares and 117 colt-foals and fillies. Few of the principal purchasers are now in the land of the living. Of the foreigners, Count Lehndorff, who purchased on behalf of the German Government, still remains, but our principal buyers, I think, can be counted on one's fingers ends. However, amongst them may be mentioned Sir Frederick Johnstone, the Honorable H. W. Fitzwilliam and Mr. Henry Chaplin.

Mr. Henry Chaplin at the sale bought Seclusion. She was the dam of Hermit, his great Derby winner, and subsequently the lord of the Blankney harem. He also bought the daughter of Tadmor out of Miss Sellon, covered by Blair Athol, at 2,500gs. If one goes into Eltham at the present time, all the old folks still point to an existing milk farm on the site of the old paddocks and tell you that Hermit was bred and reared there, and ran about at the foot of Seclusion, just the same as did a colt, afterwards called Marksman, at the side of Stray Shot. Mr. Chaplin bid for both at the Middle Park Yearling Sale in 1866. Curiously enough, Mr. Tattersall knocked them both down at 1,030gs. each. The late Mr. Merry got Marksman, and Mr. Chaplin secured Hermit. In the Derby, Hermit beat Marksman, after a desperate race, by a neck.

At the 1872 Middle Park dispersal Blair Athol was sold at 12,500gs., and was amid cheering kept in the country by what was a newly-formed English Stud Company, who bought the cream of Middle Park and started the Cobham. Other stallions sold at the time were Blair Athol's own brother, Breadalbane, at 6,600gs., Gladiateur at 7,000gs., Mandrake at 2,100gs., Saunterer at 2,100gs., and Victorious at 2,000gs.

On the death of his father, William Blenkiron for over ten years pretty well filled up the old boxes, kept up the annual yearling sales, and dispensed the old hospitality so well known in the days of his father. Having lost Blair Athol, the deceased tried Scottish Chief, who had run third to Blair Athol and General Peel in the Derby of 1864, but had afterwards won the Ascot Cup. He was not the success anticipated, but after much service came up for sale in September, 1883, and then realised 500gs.

Mr. Blenkiron was seventy years of age last January. Deceased was a brother of Mr. Tom Blenkiron whose remains lie in Eltham Churchyard, near to the old Middle Park home, and an uncle of the present owner of Ambition.

The following matches were abandoned without a ball having been bowled, and are therefore not included in the above table:—Surrey vs. Lancashire at the Oval; Kent vs. Middlesex at Tunbridge Wells; and Warwickshire vs. Leicestershire at Coventry.

For the sixth time in ten years Yorkshire have won the county championship by their victory over Gloucestershire on Saturday, having made good their claim to be the foremost county of the year. All that now remains for Lord Hawke and his men to accomplish is the retention of the 100 percentage which signifies an unbeaten record, and so to repeat the feat standing to the county's credit in 1900, when they won sixteen and drew twelve engagements without their colours once being lowered.

WINCHESTER

Rifle and Pistol Cartridges

It's the careful and scientific manner in which Winchester cartridges are made and loaded which has earned for them a reputation for accuracy, reliability and uniformity which no other brands can approach. Winchester cartridge shells are carefully inspected before loading for size, length and conformity. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them exact in size, contour and density. Then the loading is done by automatic machinery which not only insures a uniform charge, buts seats the bullet in the shell so that its axis coincides with that of the shell; hence with that of the barrel of the arm. These are a few of the many reasons why Winchester cartridges in all calibers are the most satisfactory on the market.

BOXING.

BURNS AGAIN BEATS SQUIRES.—Tommy Burns has successfully come through the ordeal of his first contest in Australia, and a Reuter's message from Sydney on Monday states that the champion defeated Bill Squires in the thirteenth round.

Squires has given Burns more trouble than any other boxer since the American defeated Gunner Moir, at the National Sporting Club, and in France a few months back he once had Burns in trouble, although the latter eventually pulled through.

The fight appears to have been a terrific one, judging from the details sent by Reuter's Special Service. As was the case in France, Squires, who is an Australian, made a great show, and on several occasions Burns went to his corner in a dazed condition. Once again, however, the superior generalship of Burns pulled him through.

In the second round Squires landed his left on Burn's body and head. Squires had the advantage in this round.

In the third, Squires landed Burns on the body repeatedly. Burns then pounded Squires unmercifully.

In the fourth Burns drew blood. Both men were fighting terrifically. In the fifth Squires landed his left on the American's jaw. The men clinched and the referee separated them.

In the seventh Squires landed on the face and jaw repeatedly. Burns dodged to evade punishment. Burns was groggy. In the eighth Squires landed a terrific straight blow with his left full in Burns's face. The fighting was most fierce.

In the eleventh Burns was decidedly groggy and staggered to his corner.

In the thirteenth Burns half-hooked Squires, who was down for nine seconds and rose groggy. He received an uppercut and went down again for eight seconds. Burns coolly waited, and landed his right on the chin of the Australian, who fell and was counted out.

It is expected that Burns will clear at least £5,000 during his visit to Australia as he refused to be a party to any matches unless guaranteed a big sum in each instance, win, lose or draw.

As a result of his victory (says the Central News) Burn, secures £2,000 and £500 expenses.

GOLF.

PROFESSIONALS AT SCARBOROUGH.—Monday's 39 holes stroke competition, on the course of the Scarborough Club, ended in another triumph for those two natives of Jersey, Edward Ray and Harry Vardon, who tied with 138 each for first place. James Braid, the open Champion, did not altogether disappoint the large crowd that, as a result of his recent fine form, elected to follow him. He played well, but he lacked the brilliancy associated with Ray's morning round of 65, and Vardon's homeward half of 31 in the afternoon. The champion totalled 141. A. Day, the local professional, took 149.

Ray, whose partner in the morning was Day, started in remarkable fashion, and reached the turn in 33—the best score of the day for the first nine holes. He got down a putt of twelve yards at the ninth. Coming home he maintained his form, and, with a score of 65, equalled the record for the course, standing to the credit of Mr. J. F. Wilson and Day. The other competitors recorded 74 each. Vardon ought to have done better, but he was in difficulties at the sixteenth, where he had a 6.

In the afternoon there was a change of partners, Ray being coupled with Vardon, and Braid with Day. At the ninth hole Ray still led his nearest opponent, Vardon, by five strokes, but the South Herts man played a wonderful game coming home, and, with five 3's and four 4's, accomplished the last nine holes in 31. He drew level on the last green. The figures were :

SWIMMING.

THE BAFFLED BURGESS.—A splendid failure! Such is the best description of Burgess's latest valiant attempt to swim across the Channel. He was beaten once more, last Friday and had to leave the water after a swim of 22hrs. 45mins., with the the French shore full in sight at the tantalising distance of only a mile and a half. Nevertheless, his attempt constitutes a record so far as the Channel is concerned, for when Holbein nearly reached England from France his swim was one of 22hrs. 21mins.

Burgess entered the water at 1-12 on Friday morning, just to the west of St. Margaret's Bay, Dover, the sea at that time being far from calm, while the easterly breeze did not tend to assist the swimmer. He had started farther east than usual in order that he should not get too far west, but after two hours' swimming the the wind changed right round to the south-west holding up the tide. Very good progress was made in the first four hours considering the weather experienced, the bearings showing Dover Admiralty Pier to be five miles distant, while the South Foreland was six miles off.

About six o'clock a haze came up over both shores, and no bearings could be taken till ten o'clock, and they showed that Burgess was nine miles from the South Foreland. Better progress was made during the next five or six hours, till the swimmer was between three and four miles off, and from then progress was very slow indeed, for although Burgess was swimming strongly he did not make much more than half a mile an hour. Another unfortunate circumstance was what. when he got one and half miles off Calais a strong head wind came up, and he put on a spurt.

But this was of no avail, for he simply drifted along the coast about one and a half miles out, the swim finishing, as already stated, after twenty-two hours and forty-five minutes, the same distance off opposite Gravelines fifteen miles to the east of Calais. By climbing up the side of the tug unaided he showed that he was good for some time.

The plucky swimmer still says he is not beaten, and will have another try in a few days time.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 5th September.—Briar Shola 8 A.M. It was a bright hot morning, after heavy rain the evening before. Hounds were taken beyond Briar Shola, and started drawing down the Yemmakal Valley along the banks of the stream. On the crest of One Tree Hill a jack was viewed; he led hounds up the Kabbalkod Valley, by the bottom of Yemmakal Shola, but was rolled over and killed on the ridge near Nadankod Mund. The east bank of the Pykara River was next tried in the hopes of finding an outlying jack, nor were we disappointed, as hounds came on a jack just below No Man's Land; he kept along the bank for some distance, then rose the hill by Irwin's Clump and down to the Yemmakal Stream, where he was killed, after quite a short run. In Chemmund a jack was roused; on leaving the covert he headed as if for Bungalow Shola, but swept round the hill into Wenlock, and ran the Pykara Road. Owing to the field all crowding on to the road, and the scent anything but good, hounds were unable to pick up his line again. Khed, Bracken, Hamlet and Beadnell's were drawn without success. As it was extremely hot and no scent, hounds were taken back to kennels.

Monday, 7th September.—Lake End at 7 A.M. There was a thick Scotch mist all over the downs at this early hour, but fortunately cleared shortly after we moved off. Near Brandt's Crossing, hounds feathered about in the swamp, but were unable to make anything of it. Jackal, Rallywood, and Bluegums were all untenanted. Between Staircase and the Sandy Nullah Stream, they touched a line and after puzzling it out as far as the edge of Staircase they warmed to it and carried it up through the Shola, on to the ridge, when they swung to the right along the top, and then plunged down into Briar, in which the jack managed to give them the slip, and though the Master put them through the covert again, they were not able to touch his line. They were trotted on to Gibb's Shola, where a jack had been viewed entering the covert, and as he seemed rather spent and draggled he was no doubt the hunted one. He was not allowed to dwell in Gibb's, however, but was made to hustle himself. Breaking covert at the top he headed for Staircase; taking a line through Herbert Plantation, he was pushed through the top of Staircase Shola into Round Shola, and on past Martyn's into Governor's Shola, where after running round for a time he was run into and killed in the covert. After breaking him up hounds were taken home.

Tuesday, 8th September.—Hungerford Hill 12 noon. It was late in the afternoon before hounds found the first jack going to ground almost at once, but was dislodged by the hounds and killed. No 2 jack played the same game, but having been more fortunate in his selection of an earth refused to quit in spite of all efforts on the part of the terriers Kitty and Nettle. Shortly after hounds feathered on a line, between Kabbalkod Mund and No Man's Land, a jack had been about some time before; they carried it slowly to below Kabbalkod Mund, when there was a very welcome halloa from Captain Duff on the hill above the Nadankod Stream, the pack was at once lifted and taking up the line they crossed the stream, pointed as if for Yemmakal Shola, but doubled back and rose the steep side of Hungerford, where they were swallowed up in a thick fog. It was a stiff climb up to the top. On getting on to the Krurmund Road, we could hear hounds running in the fog along the hill; it lifted slightly but came down again thicker than ever. Captain Duff again came to the rescue with a melodious halloa, which set us right and off we went below the Kurmund path touching Lancer Shola, then to the right over the path, and over the ridge above Sultan Shola and plunged down into Karamuda Shola. With a great drive and much music they pushed their jack out at the bottom and up a steep hill and on into a Shola at the head of the Sanarkudu Valley without pausing. They hunted him out of this in good style and ran him almost to the Pykara River, short of which they turned back and crossed the Mekod Stream, then on by the Krurmund Stream till they got on to the path near Mr. Hodgson's Bungalow, which they ran for half a mile, before they had to acknowledge defeat. It was a splendid run though greatly marred by the fog, and very good scent. Quite a small field, her Excellency Lady Lawley, Miss Lawley, Mr. R. E. Lawley, Captains Duff and Vesey, Mr. Stokes, Mr. Robertson and Mrs. Forsyth.

Thursday, 10th September.—Municipal Crossing at 7 A.M. It was a perfect morning for hunting cloudy and cool after the heavy rain of the previous night, and no mist. The first part of the morning was rather spoilt by the sambur, pig and other unwelcome wild beasts, that always prove so irresistible to the puppies in the pack. New Covert, Jackal and Monkey were drawn blank as far as jack were concerned, though riot was plentiful enough. The Nunjanad, however, provided a jack that jumped up close in front of hounds, and set his mask for Tiger Shola where a pig crossed his line and led some of the puppies astray. Hounds were taken back to below Monkey Shola. Near Owl Crossing they touched the trail of a jack, and were soon close at him. He was not inclined to quit the head of the valley at first, twisting and turning and dodging about the thick bushes around Kuruthugulli Village. Hounds stuck to him well and finally forced him to break covert in the direction of Bakic. Coming out at the top of this he doubled back and was viewed below Dudley, closely followed by the pack. He then took a line over the top of One Tree Hill into Jackal; running through he turned left handed up the side of Rallywood, crossed the Krurmund Road leaving Sheffield on the right, he raced down the hillside to Leeds. With hounds so close at him he dared not pause in the covert, but bent to the right across the valley and climbed up through Swamyar Bluegums, and on by the new ride below Hecuba, skirted Kuruthugulli Village, where a fresh jack jumped up, three couple of hounds running him through the Bagada Village and killing him in a cow house. The main body of the pack hunted their jack over to Kuruthugulli Shola and on to Sambar Shola, where they marked him to ground. On moving off homewards, a line was picked up near Hecuba and carried to Rugby, but scent was failing and they were unable to do much more. It was now late in the morning and getting hot as the sun came out powerfully, so hounds were taken home.

POONA OPEN TOURNAMENT.

GRASSHOPPERS vs. MOUNTED INFANTRY.—The tournament opened with this game on the 7th instant, the Grasshoppers practically having a wa'k over. They attacked from the start and scored 4 goals in the first period, the Maharajah of Kishengarh hitting three and Thakur Rewant Singh the other. The Maharajah put on two goals in the second chukker and Rewant Singh (2) and Bingham (1) added to the score in the third, the former putting on another goal in the fourth period. Play was up and down in the fifth chukker and there was no score, but Rewant Singh hitting two goals in the last chukker the Grasshoppers ran out winners by 12 goals to nil. Teams :—

13TH HUSSARS vs. 26TH LIGHT CAVALRY.—Played on the 7th instant, an interesting game ending in a win for the Hussars by 7 goals to 4. Each team scored a goal in the first chukker, and a like score was added in the second, Popham and Chaytor for the 26th, Twist and Dangar for the Hussars being the scorers. Twist opened the third period with a successful long range shot at goal and thereafter the 26th pressed but could not get on terms. Twist added another goal in the next chukker and then the 26th pressed, Chaytor hitting through. The fifth chukker was all in favour of the Hussars and they put on two goals. The 26th attacked but were robbed of the ball and the Hussars coming away hit another goal. The 26th were not to be denied and Moir scored a goal just in time. Teams :—

POONA GYMKHANA "A" TEAM vs. POONA HORSE.—This was the last game on the first day and provided an exciting struggle, the Poona Horse eventually winning by eight goals to two. The Poona Horse opened by scoring a goal: they rushed down again but failed to score and even play followed. The second chukker was level. Paterson scored for the Gymkhana. Up and down play in the third chukker, the Poona Horse scoring a second goal in time. The fourth chukker was devoid of score and the Gymkhana pressing hotly during the penultimate period equalised through Watson. The last chukker was most exciting. The Poona Horse were awarded a penalty hit for a foul against the Gymkkana but the shot missed. They returned to the attack, however, and Gulam Hussain scored the winning point. Teams :—

Semi-Finals.

GRASSHOPPERS vs. POONA GYMKHANA "B."—Played on the 10th instant, the Grasshoppers winning a slow and uninteresting game by nine goals to two. They scored a goal in each of the first two periods and three in the third. Rewant Singh (3) and Bingham (2) being responsible for the scoring. In the third chukker the Gymkhana registered their first goal through Wright, and having the best of the next period put on a second goal. The Grasshoppers resumed the attack in the fifth chukker and the Maharajah scored a goal; fast up and down play closing the period. The Grasshoppers continued to press in the final chukker and Rewant Singh adding another goal the game ended as stated. Teams :—

Umpires :—Captain Davie and Mr. Moir.

13TH HUSSARS vs. POONA HORSE.—A splendid exhibition of the game was put up by these teams on the 10th instant. Both teams played a fast and hard hitting game and play was very level throughout. There was no scoring during the first four chukkers. In the fifth period the Poona Horse got away and Gulam Hussain drove to the goal mouth where Hildebrand, who was lying handy came up and hit it through. The Hussars pressed for the rest of the chukker but could not get through. The Poona Horse got away on starting the final chukker and Hildebrand scored a second goal. The Hussars attacked next but lost a chance of scoring and the game ended in a win for the Poona Horse by 2 goals to nil. Teams as before.

MADRAS B. C. REGATTA.

Saturday, 12th September, 1908.

THERE was the usual big attendance at the regatta this afternoon and weather and rowing conditions being all that could be desired the function was attended with great success. The programme was a good one, but the last two events were rowed in the dusk and the tub race had to be abandoned altogether owing to the failing light.

The final heat in the junior sculls opened the proceedings. S. Burgess who had beaten Stafford in the preliminaries, scored a win over W.J. Turnbull, who had defeated Cartwright. Turnbull's arm gave way and Burgess paddled in. The big race of the day came next.

They got away together and rowed abreast to the Mound, where Poona went ahead and led by a length, Madras spurted at the finish but just failed to get on terms. Poona winning by quarter of a length.

The Challenge Fours brought out two crews, Brigstocke's boat rowed away from Lecky's and won by a length and a half.

Next came the Senior Sculls. A. K. Graham (Poona) met J. W. Madeley (Madras). It was a disappointing race. Madeley took Graham's water early in the race and interfered with his progress, but the race was continued and Graham began to go ahead. Near the finish, however, he sculled into Madeley's water and fouled his sculls. The foul was admitted and the race went to Madeley.

Two boats went out for the Senior-Junior Pairs.

Won easily.

In the Senior Pairs the Poona boat (Messrs. Graham and Cunningham) easily defeated the Madras Pair—J. F. Graham and Wilson.

MRS. MILLER distributed the prize at the close of the proceedings.

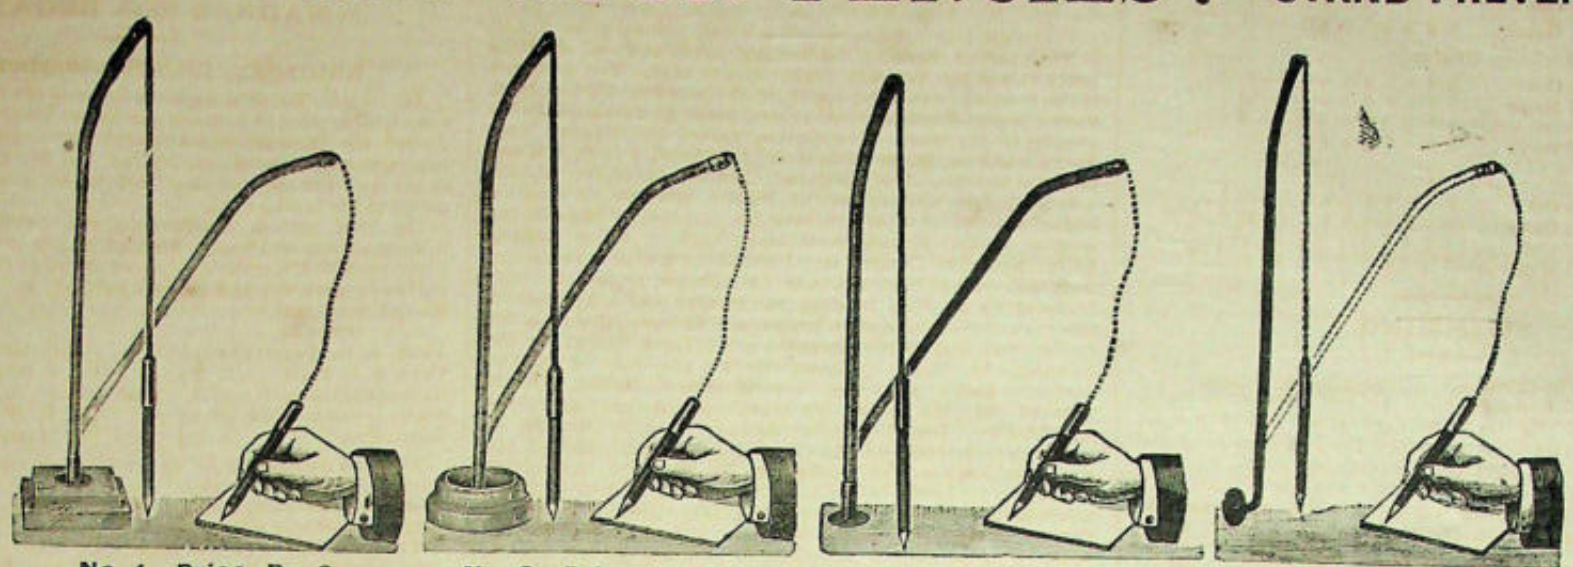
CRICKET AT POONA.

PRESIDENCY vs. PARSIS.—The annual Poona fixture between the Presidency and Parsis took place at the latter end of last week and, with the usual number of private tents of various clubs, including Tatt's, packed, the interest was as great as ever. Except that it was uncomfortably hot, Thursday was fine and the pitch fast but neither side made more than average scores so that the first innings of each was almost concluded by the time stumps were drawn for the day.

Fortunate enough to win the toss, the Parsis took first knock and "Keke" Mistry, one of half a dozen left handers, soon got to work only to see Mody brilliantly snapped up in the slips by Greig. Runs came fast when the Jessopian Meherhomji came in but he left at 36. Mistry being clean bowled by Joy after a partnership with Dinshaw, five were out for 87. Mulla, whose century last year won the Parsis the match, gave the Europeans a bad time, though playing more carefully than usual. Kapadia kept his end up and the century was passed when he left on Cheetham being put on. Seeing the probability of being not out Mulla began to open his shoulders and was easily caught off a miss hit from one of Cheetham's donkey drops after being missed at 2 through Milne slipping. K. M. Mistry and Vatcha were in as last men at 136 and a somewhat lucky partnership saw the score raised to 161 at 5-30. Considering the wicket it was not a tall score and at last the Presidency were able to put on more than one bowler with whom the Parsis were not comfortable, and the fielding was quite smart. Joy, a fast left hander, kept a remarkably fine length taking 7 for 86.

Such a bad start did the Presidency make that it was thought the two and a quarter hours left would amply suffice to dismiss them; the Parsi fielding was very smart especially Warden at point. Greig opened with a single but the last ball of K. M. Mistry saw Townend make a feeble scrape at a ball that beat him all the way. Cheetham coming in things looked up, but at 27 one was surprised to see him fall into the trap Warden had palpably set. Both Greig, when well set after some delightful drives past cover, and Cooper succumbed l. b. w. off Mistry and four were out for 59. From past experience a collapse was expected, but was far from being the case. Heath and Airy coming together, some lively cricket was seen, quite demoralising the bowling. The latter was more cautious than usual, but Heath hit out grandly, finding the boundary seven times, including a grand tonk clean over, and reached 46 out of 63 during the partnership which sent the century up. Sprott's second ball beat him, but then Turner joined Airy and these two collaring the bowling some attractive cricket was seen, the latter being 25 and the former 20 not out, when play ceased with 134 up for 6. This was distinctfully hopeful, though had all the long hops to leg been taken advantage of it might have been double.

Resuming on Friday, these two went at it again with confidence, Turner scoring the faster and only after three-quarters of an hour with 168 up did Turner leave for a most useful and attractively played 35. Rutter, Milne and Joy giving no trouble, Airy was left with an unfinished 37, the value of his innings being by no means according to the score he made as it was his smothering methods that broke up the bowling and were responsible for a total of 176—15 more than the Parsis. Warden, taking 5 for 65, wiped off the last few wickets, all playing back being beaten to the world.



Nearly an hour remained before lunch when the Parsis went in a second time and the very first ball of the match saw Joy get Modi l. b. w. This disaster, however, was immediately followed by a really fine partnership between K. M. Mistry and Meherhomji, here as well as throughout the left hander, the former, being in with a right hander, must have been a great source of annoyance to the Presidency. Soon settling down, the pair held complete mastery over the bowling, Mistry hitting out finely, two successive fours off Joy and a six off Cheetham. A boundary by Meherhomji sent 40 up and a moment later Joy nearly held a hot return by Mistry, scarcely a chance, and the only approach to one till at 122 Greig held on to a hard drive at mid-off by Meherhomji who made 44 with Mistry 78. Dinsha made a useful 21 during wich Mistry was lucky in seeing a miss hit drop short of Joy at mid-on off Cheetham. He had 92 to his credit at the third wicket out of 158 and soon after he was beaten by Milne, most unfortunate in not reaching his century after a great innings of free cricket. Sprott caught Warden nearly at the wickets for 16 and Kapadia ran himself out at 20, to be followed by Mulla, 26, who played a more careful game than usual. The rest gave but little trouble and all were out for 237 after at one time looking like putting up a huge total. This left the Presidency 223 to get to win.

They went in on Saturday morning at 11-35, when a large crowd were present, some hoping for a victory for the Parsi bowlers and some ready to see the runs knocked off. Greig and Airy faced the bowling, the former snicking K. B. Mistry for a singles and then Airy hitting Warden twice for four past point. In Mistry's second over, however, he clean bowled Greig and two balls later found Cheetham's stumps. On Heath coming in Airy drove again to the boundary but with a break from leg Warden got Heath off his pads—15 for 3. Turner opened in a lively manner, hitting Mistry for two consecutive fours and kept Airy company for twenty minutes, but when seeming set was badly beaten by Warden who in the same over got Townend l. b. w. Airy was next to go, being bowled by a shorter ball than usual by Warden after a carefully played 16. Rutter and Sprott made a short stand, bringing the score to 70 before Sprott played on. Milne was magnificently caught by Pavri on the boundary, catching the ball after jumping and falling, there being some doubt whether he was in or out of the boundary as he fell. Joy soon followed and they were all out for 80 at 12-45. Vatcha, Warden and Mistry were never easy to play. Warden again coming out with a fine analysis. It was a miserable collapse such as we have been accustomed to see for the past few years and, as far as European cricketers are concerned, we seem doomed to be a laughing stock. Whether they have no heart or whether the Cinderella dance on Friday night at the Gymkhana is to blame the fact remains that the public have to grin and bear it.

Following are the scores:—

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

12TH LANCERS vs. GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—There was a big attendance to witness the opening game in the tournament between the above teams on the 14th instant. The Lancers are the holders of the Lahore and Murree Cups and were runners up in the Punjab Cup. The Gordons are the holders of the I. F. A. Shield and Walter Locke Cup in Calcutta. A great game was expected : rain shortly before the game made the turf rather soft. Play was very level at the start and the Gordons were the first to test the goal-keeper. He was all there and saved well and the ball was taken to the Highlanders' territory, where Vallis put in a good shot. This was got away but Cox lying handy banged it into the net. Even play followed till the Gordons were awarded a free kick which they did not turn to account. After the interval the Gordons pressed, but the Lancers goal-keeper played a splendid game and let nothing pass him. Then the Gordons' half was invaded, and a fine shot at goal just missed. A corner to the Gordons was not improved upon and the Lancers coming away again put in two shots ; a corner accrued from the second and from this the Lancers added to their score. There was no further scoring. The Gordons lost several opportunities owing to faulty shooting and retired beaten by 2 goals to nil.

DURHAM L. I. vs. ROYAL BERKSHIRES.—The second game on Monday was between the above teams, a slow game ending in favour of the Durhams by 2 goals to nil. The Berkshires pressed at the start and the Durhams goal keeper was called upon twice to save. He made no mistakes and the game was transferred to the other end where the Durhams forced a corner which proved abortive. A foul against the Berks gave the Durhams a free kick, but nothing came of it and the interval arrived without score. On crossing over the Durhams took up the attack. They secured two corners and bombarded the Berkshires goal. The first point was registered by the Durhams centre forward. The Berks then pressed but failed to take advantage of chances and the ball once more travelled to their territory, where the Durhams registered another goal and won as stated.

17TH LANCERS vs. CONNAUGHT RANGERS.—Played on Tuesday ending in a draw. The first half was pointless, though the Lancers had rather the better of the exchanges. After the interval the Connaughts pressed and nearly scored Up and down play followed and both goals were visited in turn, and the Connaughts lost more than one chance of scoring. When the whistle sounded neither team had scored. Extra time was played but without result. In the replay on Wednesday, the Lancers won by 4 goals to one.

KING'S ROYAL RIFLES vs. LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS.—The Fusiliers attacked hotly in the first half but were unable to get through. On crossing over, however, they again invaded the Rifles' territory and scored three goals in succession. The Rifles played pluckily and rushing down found the net. Then the Fusiliers attacked once more and registered a fourth goal, the final score reading. Lancashire Fusiliers 4 goals, King's Royal Rifles 1 goal. The fact that the Rifles goal-keeper injured his hand in the first half may have had something to do with his letting four goals get by him.

CALCUTTA RUGBY CHALLENGE CUP TOURNAMENT.

First Round.

WEST RIDINGS vs. UNITED SERVICES.—The match between the cup holders and the Services opened the tournament and was played on the Calcutta ground on Friday last. The game was fast and exciting throughout, the West Ridings winning by 13 points to three. Play was up and down the field at the start. Then the U. S. territory was invaded and the Dukes forwards put in some good work. Morris got the ball and opened the scoring by dropping a goal. The U. S. were prominent for a while but could not pass the Dukes' backs, who at length put in a good passing run which eventuated in Johnstone getting over with a try. The place failed and the teams crossed with a 7 points lead to the West Riddings. The forwards had most of the game in the second half and some vigorous play was witnessed. Wilson, the Dukes' captain, scored a try which Ryan failed to improve on after an excellent attempt. Then the Services rushed down and Beddie securing an opening ran over with a try. This remained unconverted and the succeeding play was fast and even. A free to the Services was charged down and several rushes by the Ridings' three-quarters were brought up by Bocquet, who was playing at the top of his form. Shortly before the close offside against the Services enabled Ryan to kick a goal from the resulting penalty and there being no further score the West Ridings won by a drop goal, a penalty goal and two tries to a try. Teams :—

WEST RIDINGS—Crampton, back ; Johnstone, Ryan, Chapman and Britton, three-quarters ; Wilson (Captain) and Morris, half-backs ; Webster, Macormick, Culpan, Stanbery, Stokes, Turner, Haigh and Waddington, forwards.

UNITED SERVICES—Catt, back ; Jackson, Bocquet, Rowe and Baker, three-quarters ; Beddie and Slater, half-backs ; Chase, Layard (Captain) Bull, B. Fraser, Wilford, P. Fraser, Hands and Walker, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. T. C. Manders.

H. L. I. vs. CONNAUGHT RANGERS.—These teams met on the Customs ground on Saturday last, a scrambling game ending in a win for the H.L.I. The ground was in a wretched state and good football was out of the question. The game nevertheless was well contested, the Dum-Dum team having the best of it forward. In the first half Duncan scored two tries, neither of which was improved upon and the H.L.I. led at the interval by 6 points to nil. On resuming play was level till Clarke got away and registered another try to which Tait added the extra points. Then the Irishmen had a spell of attacking and Ruffley scored a try which was converted. The H. L. I. were again prominent and Duncan put in a fine run and crossed the Connaughts' line once more. Tait added the major points, and no further scoring taking place the H.L.I. won by two goals and 2 tries (16 points) to a goal (5 points). Teams :—

H. L. I.—Tait, back ; Duncan, Lieutenant Alston, Lieutenant Lilburn and Clarke, three-quarters ; Lieutenant Campbell and Reid, half-backs ; Henderson, Schewrin, Peterson, Syme, Shrubshell, Duncan, McGlone, and Keith, forwards.

CONNAUGHT RANGERS.—Lieutenant Walsh, back ; Lieutenant Robertson, Lieutenant Milligan, and Lieutenant Hamilton, three-quarters ; Lieutenant Jones and Lieutenant Tulloch half-backs ; Private Odell and Lieutenant Denny, Sergeant Phillips, Sergeant McGrath Private Hayes, Private Ruffley and Private Ward, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Manders (C. F.C.).

CALCUTTA vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on the Dalhousie ground last Saturday, the visitors having the best of the exchanges and eventually winning by 19 points to nil. Dalhousie were outplayed and save for occasional run were kept in their own "25" during most of the game. Calcutta pressed hard at the start, Arthur was nearly through once but was collared ; the threes all did good work and at length a forward rush resulted in Cadell getting over with the first try. Kay failed to majorise, but the visiting three-quarters were again prominent and Siddons crossed the Dals line. The place again failing. Calcutta attacked till the interval, and after changing ends continued to press. Offside against Evans gave Calcutta a free hit but the kick fell short. Walker next got away for the Dals and the ball passed Schanmberg but Arthur dashed up and saved in brilliant fashion. The Dals were again forced to defend and Longbottom ran in with the third try, Burnett adding the extra points. Dalhousie made great efforts but without gaining ground and on resuming after a cessation of hostilities owing to an injury to Brewer Siddons scored another try. A free to Dalhousie for offside gained some ground, but Longbottom returned the ball to their territory. Shortly before time Dalhousie got away and a miskick by Schaumberg, looked as if they would get through, but Arthur was once more handy and got the ball away. Heilgers scored the last try and Burnett converted, Calcutta thus winning by 2 goals and 3 tries to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA F. C.—Schaumberg, back ; Longbottom, Siddons, Reid-Kay and Burnett, three-quarters ; Arthur and Morrison half-backs ; Kerr, McLeod, Cadell, Heilgers, Studd, LeCocq, Donald and Bryce, forwards.

DALHOUSIE A. C.—McGee, back ; Holley, Walker, Smith and Allen, three-quarters ; Greenwood and Evans, half-backs ; Brewer, Hughes, Grahamshaw, McLeod, Whysh, Bates and Stevens, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Martelli (C. F. C..

GLOSTERS vs. RANGERS.—On the Caledonian ground last Saturday the Rangers put up a great fight against the Glosters. They started with 12 men and two others joined later, but they were compelled to play one short all through. The Glosters scored a try shortly after the start through Rogers, the place kick being successful, but though they pressed during the rest of the opening half they could not get through. On resuming after the interval Rogers again scored a try which was converted. The play was fairly even during this period and the Rangers gave a good account of themselves. They got over once, but the try was disallowed for offside. The Glosters were forced to touch down on two or three occasions, but they kept their opponents out, the final score reading : Glosters 2 goals (10 points) Rangers nil. Teams :—

GLOSTERS.—Matty, back ; Bartlett, Smith, Rogers and Lieutenant Parnel, three-quarters ; Murray and Millwater, half-backs ; Hopcroft, Travill, Wilson, Bayliss, Lovell, Strong and Ford, forwards.

RANGERS.—Cody, back ; McNeill, Warden, Rae and Wheelock, three-quarters ; Fairley and Williams, half-backs ; Minet, Hume, Kerr, Bennett, Rogers, Wilson and Lyons, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Dick (C. F. C.)

KING'S OWN REGIMENT vs. KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on the 12th instant, the King's Own who were the better team on the day's play winning by 13 points to nil. Shortly after the start Price dropped a goal for the Lebong team and before half time Uzielli got over with a try which was not improved upon. The Dragoon Guards did not improve in the second half and were for the most part confined to their own "25". Basnett and Ashworth both scored tries for the King's Own, but the attempts to majorise failed and the King's Own ran out victorious by a drop goal and 3 tries to nil. Teams :—

KING'S OWN.—Scully, back ; Basnett, Ashworth, Lieutenat Uzielli and Price, three-quarters ; Allen and Wigley, half-backs ; Sigworth, Southerland, Fowler, Blackett, Massey, Lieutenant Scott, Dywer and Golding, forwards.

KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.—Liddle, back ; Wardlane, Walsh, Reilly and Connock, three-quarters ; Darosalskie and Eorayd, half-backs ; Addison, Wooley, Buxton, James, Gultrice, Alford, Rhodes and Stott, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. C Reid (C. F. C.).

Second Round.

CALCUTTA vs. WEST RIDINGS.—A big crowd turned out to witness the game between the cup holders and the League Champions on Monday. The heavy rain that fell early in the day rendered the turf rather slippery, but the game was well fought out from start to finish, an exciting struggle ending in favour of the West Ridings. Calcutta invaded the Dukes' "25" at the start but the ball was got away. Schaumberg stopped the rush, but from the scrum which followed Morris got his threes going and Ryan scored. He took the kick himself and placed a goal. Thereafter Calcutta were kept in their own half of the field and the Ridings pressed hotly. They could not get through again and the interval arrived with no further score. On resuming Calcutta showed up much better and had quite as much of the game as their opponents. They broke away on several occasions. Once Arthur got his third line going, but a knock on ended the effort : again Siddons and Reid Kay took the ball down the field and looked like getting through, but Kay was collared and the ball got among the forwards once more. At length Longbottom made his mark and Arthur taking the kick dropped a fine goal. Calcutta made desperate efforts to score again during the closing stages of the game but without success and once more they have had to knock under to the military team. Final score : West Ridings (5 points), Calcutta (3 points). Teams :—

WEST RIDINGS.—Crampton, back ; Britton, Chapman, Ryan and Newton, three-quarters ; Wilson (Captain) and Morris, halves ; McCormack, Stokes, Stanbery, Culpan, Turner, Haigh, Waddington and Donald, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Schaumberg, back ; Burnett, Siddons, Kay and Longbottom, three quarters ; Arthur (Captain) and Morrison, halves ; McLeod, LeCocq, Heilgers, Bryce, Kerr, Studd, Cadell and Donald, forwards.

Referee :—Lieutenant Bocquet.

H.L.I. vs. ST. XAVIER'S.—This match on the Dalhousie ground on Monday evening ended in a pointless draw. Replaying on Tuesday St. Xavier's retired during the first half on the alleged grounds of rough play. The H. L. I, had scored 11 points—a penalty goal, a try and a goal. Teams :—

H.L.I.—Tait, back ; Duncan, Lieutenant Alston, Lieutenant Lilburn and Clarke, three-quarters ; Lieutenant Campbell and Reid, halves ; Henderson, Schewrin, Peterson, Syme, Duncan, Shrubshell, McGlone, and Keith, forwards.

ST. XAVIER'S.—Anderson, back ; Apcar, Gregory, Rosser and A. Hamilton, three-quarters ; Porteous and Shave, halves ; Grosser, Ferris, B. Hamilton, Macguire, Rowe, Williamson, Butterwick and Goldsmith, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. H. McGee (Dalhousie A.C.).

GLOSTERS vs. SOUTH BEHAR BARBARIANS.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Tuesday. The game was played in a sea of mud and the Glosters who were more at home in the slush scored a win by 8 points to nil. The exchanges during the first half were very even and neither team scored. On changing ends the Glosters got away and Murray scored a try which Rogers converted. The Behar team made great efforts to get on terms and play was very even for a spell. Then Murray got the ball away and the Gloster forwards took it down, Strong eventually crossing the line. No further scoring was registered, though the Glosters kept the Behar team busy defending and the game ended in a win for the Lahore XV. by a goal and try to nil. Teams:—

MADRAS GYMKHANA vs. KING'S OWN.—This game was played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday last. The King's Own had the best of the exchanges throughout and ran out victorious by 5 tries (15 points) to nil. Madras pressed at the start, but the game was quickly transferred to their own "25." Basnett got over with a try in the corner. The place failed, but shortly after Massey scored a second try. This was not improved upon and the game continued in the Madras half for the rest of the period, all attempts to break away being stopped. After the interval play was fairly even for a spell and then the King's Own pressed. Price, Lieutenant Scott and Basnett all crossed the Madras line with tries, but none were improved upon and the game closed leaving the Lebong team winners as stated. Teams:—

KING'S OWN.—Scully, back; Basnett, Ashworth Lieutenant Uzielli and Price, three-quarters; Lieutenant Wigley and Allen, halves; Lieutenant Scott, Lieutenant Blackett, Fowler, Howard, Sidgworth, Massy, Sutherland and Briddock, forwards.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Tournament of 1908 is well under weigh now, and when these lines appear the final only will be left for settlement. The U. S. and West Ridings opened the ball on Friday last and so well did the former show up that they were only 10 points out at the finish, and seven of these points were a drop goal and a penalty. The game was a good display of Rugby, and there was not so much difference between the teams to make it one sided. The Ridings scored 1 dropped goal, 1 penalty goal and 2 tries to the single try obtained by the Services. The Ridings have no specially outstanding player, but all work together well and play a very hard game throughout. For the United Services Bocquet at three-quarter and Beddie at half caught the eye most. Both were in great form and the latter's "foxing" of the Ridings' back on one occasion when he jinked into the centre with a "command" to his "threes" to get behind him was splendid. Both he and Bocquet kicked well, and the latter's tackle of Britton in the second half was an excellent effort. Lavard was he best of the forwards, who struggled manfully on, but who were not in the same street with their opponents.

The U. S. have played good sporting football this year, and have been a most useful side. They have not had the best of luck, and might have won matches which they lost had fortune smiled upon them.

Saturday's games were terrible mud fights and of the "poor unfortunates" who got their dismissal from the Tournament none were so badly treated by wily fate as the Connaught Rangers from Dagshai. Their coming down was simply a sporting effort, as several of their forwards have never played Rugger before, and the team relied on their Sandhurst backs to see them through. Thus to be spluttered down on a sea of mud for their first engagement was in truth the hardest of luck. The Customs ground never played worse since the earliest days of import taxation—however long it may be since the Preventive Service took up their sporting quarters on this ground. The H. L. I. played the right game of kick and rush, and won handsomely by 16 points to 5. The Connaughts backs showed signs of excellent combination, and if the ground had been different another tale might have been told.

Calcutta were far too good for the "Dals" and won easily by 19 points to nil. There was some particularly good passing amongst the backs, and the forwards were all very much there. Heilgers and Cadell being particularly in evidence, both getting fine forward scores by keen following up.

The King's Own played on the C. F. C. ground which was fairly good and they managed to settle the King's Dragoon Guards to the tune of 13 points to nothing. T. Scott in the pack made a big difference to the Kings Own scrum, and reminded one of the doughty deeds of this good regiment when they won the Cup in 1905. Captains Young and Marshall are missed at half, and it is a pity that neither is fit enough to play, bad knees having called both to the "shelf" some time ago.

Rangers put up a good fight against the Glosters and were only defeated by a couple of goals. The game was played on the Caledonian ground, very kindly lent to assist the C. F. C. in their difficulty of grounds, the weather having rendered all the pitches very soft. The defence of the Rangers was excellent, and they played with a vigour not previously shown this year. We hope that this augurs better for their future and that next year we shall find them amongst the best.

This brings us to Monday's matces the most important of which was the C. F. C. vs. West Ridings—the Holders of the Cup. An excellent game—as stiff as could be asked for—resulted in a narrow win for the soldiers by a couple of points. It was very bad luck that the terrible downfall of rain should have come on Monday, and so spoil what promised to be the best game of the week. One end of the field was bad, and of course most of the game was played thereon. Calcutta got right down on the Ridings, line from the kick off, but from the resultant scrum, by dint of hard kicking on the part of the soldiers and fumbling by Schaumberg and Longbottom, the ball was carried to within a few yards the Calcutta line, and Ryan scored and kicked a goal. This was a bit of a corker for Calcutta, a goal to nil and the game just started. This proved to be all the scoring of the first half, although the Ridings had best of this period, their forwards packing, shoving and getting the ball in magnificent fashion. I don't want to see better forwards, but I do not like some of the tactics indulged in, and do not feel inclined to praise, although there is much of their play deserving of special mention. Their halves are a strong pair and both kick well, but to see them throwing a ball out of touch very often raises a spectator's ire. However this is a divergence.

Calcutta opened strong and keen in the second half and played a good game, having more of the play than their opponents. The forwards were all working like Trojans, but seemed absolutely unable to get the ball back to their halves, and I only remember seeing Arthur getting the ball out to his "threes" from a scrum on one occasion. The Ridings got the ball every time, and in this half invariably screwed to touch, hardly ever letting it out, and being penalised on at least one occasion for their halves putting the ball back in the scrum with their feet after it had come out. A tremendous lot of time was wasted in "knock ons" and "fists" at throw outs, and from one of the latter Longbottom marked, and Arthur taking the kick dropped a lovely goal from close on half way. This fairly set Calcutta on the go, and every effort was made to score, but this was not to be and the civilians retired beaten by 1 goal—5 points to 1 goal from a mark—3 points.

St. Xavier's played up well against the H. L. I. on the Dalhousie ground, and made a draw of the game, but no light was left for extra time to be played, so that the game had to be played again.

SCRUM.

A VERY stout old lady bustling through an English park on a sweltering hot day, became aware that she was being closely followed by a rough-looking tramp.

"What do you mean by following me in this manner?" she indignantly demanded. The tramp slunk back a little.

When the stout lady resumed her walk he again took up his position directly behind her. "See here," she exclaimed wheeling angrily, "if you don't go away at once I shall call a policeman!"

The unfortunate man looked up at her appealingly, and said: "For heaven's sake, kind lady, have mercy an' don't call a police man; ye're the only shady spot on the whole park."

Final.

White beat Morrison by 7 up and 5.

Boxing.

THE SIRHIND TOURNAMENT.

THE Sirhind tournament which began on the 1st instant, was brought to a successful close on the evening of Thurday, the 10th. The entries this year were bigger than they have ever been, the boxing was consistently good throughout, while the arrangements were all that could be desired and Captain R. G. R. Gordon, the Honorary Secretary and Sergeant Gaylor, M.C., are to be congratulated on the results of their efforts. As will be seen from the details given below the Gloster Regiment for the third time in succession carried off the trophy for the Regiment, scoring the greatest number of points. They scored 42 points and won the Boys' competition, the Feather Weights' the Middle Weights and the Officers Light Weights. The Queen's were next with 30 points. Lieutenant Read, a winner last year, won the Officers' Middle and Heavy Weight contests and Corporal Atkinson of the Gloster Regiment was awarded the cup for the best science shown. Major Williamson was referee and Captain Ley and Mr. Wallis were the judges. The prizes were distributed by H. E. the Viceroy at the close of the tournament. Details:—

MOTOR MEMS FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 28th August 1908.

PERMISSION has been received from the Highway Authorities of the Isle of Man by the Auto-Cycle Union to hold the international tourist trophy race for motor cycles on Tuesday, 22nd September, over the same course as last year, namely, St. Johns, Ballacraine, Kirkmichael, Devil's Elbow, St. Germains, Peel, and back to St. Johns.

The route will be traversed ten times, making a total distance of 158 miles 220 yards. This race is distinctly one for the development of ideal touring motor cycles of the horse-power required by the ordinary user, as opposed to the racing motor bicycles, and is not necessarily a race between existing standard types. The horse-power, and, consequently, the speed, of the competing machines is limited by fixing a definite allowance of fuel for a given distance. This year the allowance will be one gallon for every 100 miles for single-cylinder engines, or one gallon for every eighty miles for multi-cylinder engines. This method of limiting engine power was chosen on account of its simplicity. A special fund has been opened to provide good cash prizes for the winners, and to assist in defraying the cost of the race.

Some of the English papers are already sounding notes of warning on the races: thus The Times:—

"At a time when there is a storm of complaints about the nuisances caused by motor-cars—complaints which, as our columns daily bear witness, are not solely or mainly due to the dust they throw up, as some would have us believe, but which arise largely from the sense of irritation at the behaviour of many motorists, who drive inconsiderately and in excess of the legal maximum—the Royal Automobile Club would be consulting the best interests of motoring, whether regarded as an industry or as a pastime, if it abandoned this race, which is nothing but an apotheosis of speed. But if the authorities of the club remain unmoved by tactical considerations of this kind they will do well to remember that, in the only too probable event of serious accident, attributable to the high speeds that will be attained, either in the course of the race itself or in the practice preliminary to it, public opinion will assuredly fix the blame on them as its promoters and organisers, and will hold them morally responsible for a wanton disaster, which they had ample warning was to be expected from the conditions they themselves had devised."

The Auto-Cycle Union's annual race meeting was held at the Stadium on Saturday, when about six thousand spectators witnessed some exciting sport. The chief event was the one-hour scratch race, in which world's record for 76 by 76 machines was beaten. During the greater part of this contest C. B. Collier and C. E. Bennett were passing and repassing each other, and, in trying to get by on one occasion, Bennett and Collier nearly collided, but just managed to steer clear. After covering thirty miles Bennett stopped owing to a faulty contact breaker. The race went to H. V. Colver, the holder, who, getting inside record at nine miles, beat record onwards, and covered 52 miles 1,650 yards in the hour, or 1 mile 1,110 yards farther than the previous best, made by Collier on 13th July 1907.

Manufacturers are very much inclined to fit wheels and tyres of far too small dimensions on their standard pattern cars, and it would be well if intending purchasers were to carefully consider this point in connection with the amount of weight they are likely to carry, when they are buying a car. It stands to reason that a given spot on the surface of a cover is bound to come in contact with the ground and so get worn very much less on a wheel of, say, 870 mms. diameter than it would on a wheel of 810 mms. diameter. Not only this, but the larger wheel renders the passage of the car over rough roads very much easier, and very much improves the appearance of a large touring car. Some years ago it was the fashion to fit larger tyres on the back wheels than on the front wheels, but lately makers have been inclined to fit the same size of tyre on all four wheels. The latter plan has this to recommend it, i.e., that all covers are interchangeable and only one size of spare cover need be carried.

THE CONQUEST OF THE AIR.

WHILE much remains to be done before the conquest of the air becomes an accomplished fact it must be admitted that the recent wonderful achievements of Count Zeppelin and the Wright Brothers have materially advanced the science of aërial navigation. The disasters to Count Zeppelin's airship has aroused the sympathy of the world, and has led to a remarkable expression of confidence in Germany in the veteran aëronaut. It is true that Count Zeppelin's voyage from Lake Constance to Mainz and back again even if it had been completed would not have satisfied the letter of the conditions laid down by the German War Office, for they required that the ship should remain in the air for twenty-four hours continuously, and before his accident Count Zeppelin had descended twice to carry out some small repairs. But these were trifles, and the disaster itself, which was apparently due to the vessel being struck by a sudden hurricane, was one which might have overtaken any other kind of structure and was not due to faulty construction or to the inherent difficulties of aërial navigation. In July Count Zeppelin covered 220 miles, and in his latest voyage he travelled a distance of 300 miles, remaining in the air for eleven and a half hours continuously. Germany has fully realised that the development of aërial navigation may become a matter of national importance. Earlier in the year the Reichstag voted over two million marks for experiments with the Zeppelin airship and the recent dramatic catastrophe has struck the popular imagination and unchained a storm of national enthusiasm. Money has been pouring in by the million marks per diem, and the result has been to give an impetus to aëronautics in Germany and to arouse interest in aërial flight to an unprecedented degree. Count Zeppelin had never claimed finality for his airship number 4, and before he embarked on the voyage which ended in disaster he had been preparing the way for airship number 5. It is interesting to learn that some time ago he placed with the firm of Messrs. C. G. Spencer and Sons, Highbury, London, an order for the construction of the balloon for his next airship. It is a matter for congratulation that the German inventor resorts to an English firm for the construction of that, which, apart from the secrets attached to mechanical means of propulsion, is a great integral factor in the means of flight. The reason for this is that English firms are far ahead of their foreign competitors in the manufacture of gold beaters' skin for aërial purposes.

Mr. Wilbur Wright, who has astonished French aviators by his latest performances, went over to France at the invitation of M. Lazare Weiller who offered him a sum of £20,000 for the French rights of his invention. The conditions were that he should make two flights of 50 kilometres each with a second passenger on board or a bag full of sand equivalent to the weight of one man. In his preliminary trials on the racecourse at Le Mans he navigated his aëroplane with surprising facility, circling round the course and taking the corners at angles almost terrifying in their sharpness and descending at the starting point as safely as any bird. In one flight lasting 6 minutes 56 seconds he flew with the greatest ease and mastery of his apparatus, and covered about five miles. Two Russian officers representing the Tsar's Government who witnessed the flight, expressed the opinion that Wright's aëroplane could already be considered a remarkably effective weapon from a military standpoint, while Mr. Hart O. Berg, who has associated himself with the Wright Brothers, said "any stray doubts that may have crossed my mind as to the ultimate success of the apparatus have been cleared away entirely. To see Mr. Wilbur Wright at his real task has overwhelmed me. When he shot into the air and travelled like a train, darting and turning where he wished my dream became materialized."

The progress made by the Wright Brothers is an instructive study. Their work may be said to have begun with gliders in 1900, but we may skip those labours and commence with the date 17th December 1903, when the first flight was achieved with a glider equipped with a motor capable of developing the power needed to send it forward and to lift it off the ground, because that was really the first successful power-supported high speed, man-carrying machine. The longest flight made with this machine in 1903 lasted fifty-nine seconds, the speed being approximately thirty miles an hour. In the following year with a motor-driven aëroplane three miles was covered in three minutes. The important point in the progress achieved up to this stage was that whereas in 1903 it had been necessary to progress always dead against the wind, in 1904 it had become possible to deviate from straight courses during flight, so that cross-currents were encountered and successfully negotiated. The 1904 motor-driven aëroplane carried 70lb. of ballast, and the machine scaled 900lb., including the ballast aëronaut, and fuel for flying, while the motor developed 17 horse power normally and the lifting power worked out to 53lb. per horse power. The same motor was used for a power-driven glider of 1905, but improvements which were made resulted in the engine developing normally three more horse power. This new glider weighed 925lb. with complete load and ballast, and was able to lift 46lb. per horse power. The machine flew normally at thirty-eight miles per hour, and its longest flight was twenty-four and a quarter miles, this performance being brought to an end merely by the fuel supply carried running out. A notable feature about the manner in which the experimenting was carried on was that the Wright Brothers made the trips by turn, so that two men should share the knowledge acquired, whereby in the event of either meeting with a fatal accident, his secrets would not be lost with him. In 1906 work consisted chiefly of improving the four-cylinder 4-inch bore and stroke air-cooled motor of the inventors' own design until it developed 25 horse power continuously and was timed up to run reliably at that power for lengthy periods. In 1907 considerable time was spent in negotiating with representatives of Governments, also in perfecting minor details, so that, as Mr. Wilbur Wright has just demostrated in France a really practical power-driven glider has been evolved, because it is one that can be used and mis-used more than once without disaster occurring. Writing in 1906 Messrs. Wright observed that "even in the existing state of the art (science of aërial navigation) it is easy to design a practical and durable flyer that will carry an operator and supplies of fuel for a flight of over five hundred miles at a speed of fifty miles per hour." This seems even now a tall order, but nobody is so sceptical as he was.

Whether or no flying machines will realise the expectations entertained about them time alone can decide; but the possibilities are great, and in view of the efforts of foreign nations it behoves England to neglect no chance of keeping itself to the front in the struggle for aërial supremacy.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Saturday was a truly miserable day for racing, a succession of very sharp showers considerably damping the pleasure of the afternoon. The unsettled outlook of the weather, the counter attraction of the Rugby Challenge Cup final and the beginning of the holiday season all combined to keep a lot of people away and the stands were much emptier than they have been at the earlier meetings. The going was, of course, of the worst, the heavy showers having a disastrous effect on the already thoroughly soaked ground, and in nearly every instance animals with light weights were able to defeat with ease opponents of a much superior class but who could not struggle through the mud with a heavy packet on top. This was particularly the case with the first race, the Pony Handicap Plate, for which Madamoiselle, with 10st. 8lb., was thought to have a great chance with all the weight; there is no doubt that under normal conditions she would have run well, but as it was she never seemed able to go with them at all. Rezia got best away and led from Flo and Happy-go-Lucky for half the distance. The latter then went on but began to labour badly as she got near home and Gipsy and Plover passed her, the former winning easily. Most of the ponies were floundering about badly in the mud and the whole field stopped a few strides after they passed the winning post. The winner was practically unbacked and started at 10 to 1.

The Pony Hurdle Race Division I was one of those surprises to which we are getting accustomed. Spec and Reba were both great favourites and nothing else was thought to have much chance. But Solace, with top weight who finished last the week before, went away from them all after the third jump and won easily cantering. Spec, who showed no form at all, was a bad second. The Stewards thought that the discrepancy in Solace's running needed investigation and a protracted enquiry was held on Saturday and Monday evenings. The explanations of the trainer and rider were accepted, the reason given being that the mare had not had a school since last cold weather and Mr. Turner had not been on her back before and therefore she jumped badly on the first occasion. She was run it appears against the advice of her trainer as she had not had a school for months.

There was a field of nine for the Goomtee Plate of whom St. Rule and Sir Ulric were both very well backed. A fair amount of money was forthcoming also for Dangar, Idle and Ynyslas and Roland also had friends. The latter got well away and made the pace very hot till he turned it up coming into the straight. Ynyslas and St. Rule were next, in front of Sir Ulric and Dangar. The last named got shut in but St. Rule went through and after a fine race with Sir Ulric, who came up late on the outside, managed to win by a length.

We congratulate Mr. Corbett on his maiden win on the Pink 'Un who was favourite in the second division of the Pony Hurdle Race. After the surprising variations of form shown by some of the former winners of this event it was a great pleasure to see the race go to a pony who had run consistently each time she started and always been with them.

Mr. Corbett judged the pace very nicely and letting Nimrod, Ungava, Kipper and Furlong make the running, he waited till five furlongs from home and then came very fast through them all on the inside and won easily by one and a half lengths from Nimrod. Furlong who ran fourth might have troubled them but she baulked bally at the first hurdle losing ground, and put an end to her chances by hitting the last one very hard. Kipper who was next best backed to the winner died away to nothing after the fourth hurdle.

They made Colina favourite again for the Poojah Plate despite her well known currish propensities and yet once more she left her backers badly in the lurch and was never in evidence in any part of the journey. Eljin, who was next best backed, ran well with them to the home turn but could not get in from them and the race was an easy thing for Cyril, who, making the most of his light weight, led all the way and staving off a rush by Sir Roland won very comfortably by three and a half lengths.

Mr. Dass had another win with that popular veteran Springlock who was a warm favourite for the Poojah Plate II, but he had to race hard for it. He got away with Queen of Gems, Nirvana and Sir Ulric. Queen of Gems dropped out of the running in the straight, but Sir Ulric went on with the leader and a magnificent finish between the pair in which Murdison and Morrison both distinguished themselves, resulted in the former just pulling it off by a short head on the old horse. Lord D. came up very strongly on the outside but just failed to get up to Nirvana for third place.

Clynder, Wake Up, Craigendarrie were all well backed for the Selling Race and the first named was made favourite despite the handicap of such a heavy weight in the bad going. It, however, proved too much for the mare and she was never able to show up at all. Yulgibar, who was on 5lb. better terms with Wake Up than when the pair last met, was also favoured in such sticky ground by the weights being on a much lower scale. Getting well away in fronth was able to turn his one length defeat on that occasion into an easy win. The winner was bought in for Rs. 800.

The entries for the last meeting show a bit of a falling off except in the hurdle class for which they are good especially in the open race which has 13, the largest number yet for this event. Two of them,

THERE was a nice little school went out on Tuesday morning, Yulgibar (Thomas), Lord Chester (Mr. Levetus), Moachim (Mr. Tanner), Schoolboy (Mr. Wallace Jones) and Diablo (Mr. Bletsoe). They went at a strong pace the whole course. Yulgibar ran out at the third but was taken over the others. Schoolboy hit them all very hard and fell back a lot at the end and Diablo pecked and nearly pulled his rider out of the saddle at the last hurdle. Moachim finished best with Diablo. Lord Chester jumped well but a bit on the big side.

A PRIVATE endeavour to prevent the threatened extinction of the Army horse is now receiving the attention of the Board of Agriculture and the War Office. The scheme has made notable progress during the last few months and is likely to advance much further with the opening of the hunting season proper.

The scheme may be described, like Mr. Haldane's Volunteer reorganisation, as "territorial," with this difference—that the units of organisation are not the counties but the hunts. The master of over thirty hunts including such famous packs as the Quorn, have signed their approval of the scheme and consented to act as local presidents; and the Chambers of Agriculture in all parts of the country are beginning to assist in the organisation.

England is now quite 1,500 horses short of the complement of past years, several years ago Mr. Stapleton, a Lincolnshire yeoman, saw the approach of the shortage and worked out a scheme. The principle of it is this: that the several hunts should make themselves the local centres, a position that they are willing to fill for nothing.

The farmers, especially small farmers, and even village tradesmen will be invited to send in a record of the likely foals and the brood mares they possess. These will be offered on a fixed date for Government inspection, and those which receive a certificate would under the scheme receive a premium from Government, a bonus of £5 a year for brood mares, with an ascending scale of bonus for certificated foals, yearlings, and horses up to the age when the War Office should decide to take them or refuse them.

The idea has been eagerly taken up by many masters of foxhounds, of whom more than thirty have become members of the council of the society, which is named the Imperial Horse Society, and very many more are merely waiting for Government approval. The scheme, which is simple and effective, will, of course, depend wholly for its success on the financial support which it may receive from Government.

WHEN the mail of the 4th instant was leaving London, a Mr. Barthropp had announced his intention of riding one pony from Lands' End to John o'Groats. The animal is a pure bred Argentine and the intention is to demonstrate the superior stamina of the breed and their adaptability for remount purposes.

AN electrical device, by means of which identification numbers may be tattooed upon the gums of Army horses, is being experimented with at Woolwich and other military depôts. If it proves satisfactory the system is destined entirely to replace that at present in vogue, by which reference numbers are burnt into the horse's hoofs. Unless renewed every six months such a reference number disappears completely, owing to the natural growth of the horse's hoof, which brings the number lower and lower until, in the process of shoeing, it is filed away.

It is claimed that by the system which is being tried a number becomes absolutely indelible, and could only be removed by such a barbarous act as cutting away a portion of the horse's gum. The operation which the horse has to undergo is briefly this: Its upper lip is drawn back and a portion of the gum, above the incisor teeth, is deadened to pain by an injection of cocaine. Then a metal pencil, attached to an electrical battery, is employed. In the pencil is a reservoir filled with indelible ink. At its pointed end is a tiny, hollow needle, which, under electrical impetus, shoots in and out with tremendous rapidity, making tiny punctures in the horse's gum at the rate of many thousands a minute, and depositing a minute drop of ink in each. A number containing five numerals can be "written" by an expert in a few seconds.

OLD William Day, the veteran English trainer, died at Southampton on the 29th August in his eighty-second year. Some of our readers may have recollections of him, and some may remember his son's visit to India some years ago, when he brought out some rare good English racing stock. Two of the greatest horses the dead trainer was associated with were Crucifix, trained by Mr. Day's father, "Honest John," as he was more familiarly known, and Virago; the first-named is credited with having won Lord George Bentinck no less a sum than £100,000. Among the races which she won were the Two Thousand, One Thousand, and Oaks.

Virago achieved the great performance of winning the City and Suburban and Great Metropolitan Stakes in the same year. Those races were then run on the same day.

It is interesting to note that John Porter, of Kingsclere renown, was at that time a lad in the famous Danebury establishment.

Day, during his eventful career, had charge of many great horses, and amongst his patrons were Mr. Merry and Lord Palmerston, who had a long connection with the Day family.

Among the races won by William Day were the Two Thousand Guineas with Lord of the Isles, Promised Land, and Vauban; the Oaks and the Ascot Gold Cup with Brigantine—Joe Miller and Foxhall also won the Gold Cup; the Cesarewitch with Dulcibella, the Cambridgeshire with Catch'em Alive, and the Goodwood Stewards' Cup with Out and Out.

Vive l'Entente Cordiale! The following specimen of English as she is written may interest some of our readers accustomed as they may be to Baboo English and the high flights of the writer of bazaar accounts. It was found in a tin of white polish for boots, and the directions for use are printed in three languages—all incorrect. Here is the English part:—

THE MANNER TO IN EMPLOG.

Scrapp a jew pouder in a lettle Water Who forme a cream half liquide rub the shol Witte a smalb Bross, letted dry in the air or in the sun when the shoe is well drij Bross him up.

It sounds—does it not?—like a mediæval recipe for boiling an infidel Jew alive!

ON the 3rd instant, at Melbourne, Tommy Burns took part in the second contest of the series arranged for him by the syndicate of sportsmen at whose suggestion he undertook his present tour in Australia. His opponent was Bill Lang, the resident heavy-weight champion, and in the early part of the contest the native boxer would appear to have been pretty formidable.

In the first round, Lang floored Burns with a heavy swinging blow, but after the second round Lang was outgeneralled, and Burns thenceforward had matters all his own way. In the third round the Australian was knocked down several times, and in the sixth meeting was floored for the count out. The cable adds that Squires has challenged the winner to another match.

Bill Lang, who scales 13st. 8lb. or thereabouts, when in condition, is considered by many people to be more than a match for Bill Squires, and there appeared some likelihood recently of a meeting between the pair, but the negotiations fell through. Lang has beaten most of the leading Australian heavy-weights, including Williams, Cripps, and Kling, and about six weeks ago defeated Jim Griffin, the big brother of Charlie Griffin, who was in England earlier in the year. Jim is a pretty good man, and labouring under a big weight handicap, put up the fight of his life at the Melbourne Cyclorama, when he met Lang. The last named, however, was much too good after the first round, and in the sixth of the twenty rounds scheduled Griffin's second cast his towel into the ring in token of defeat.

THE doping of athletes threatens to become general if there is anything in the new "oxygen for athletes" fad preached by certain medical men and experimented with in America by certain cranks. The question appears to be this:—Can an athlete who otherwise might fail by a margin of seconds or inches in a walking, running, or swimming match be exalted to a surpassing achievement by the use of oxygen? and in the light of the extraordinary performances just put up by some American swimmers who were oxygenated ere they started, the question was discussed at the beginning of this month by Dr. Albert Wilson, the brain and nerve specialist, who was one of the first to use oxygen for medical purposes.

"Take the case of an athlete who, though he has trained until he is a machine of muscle, cannot cover a hundred yards in less than ten seconds," said Dr. Wilson. "Were he to inhale oxygen upon the race track until his normal respirations of sixteen a minute had slowed down to eight, and then spring off without delay upon his effort, he would, in all reasonable probability, be able to cover the 100 yards in nine seconds. The oxygen which he had just breathed, rioting in his lungs and stimulating his muscles, should make him just that one second quicker over the distance, and he would win most of this second by the tremendous spurt with which he would start off.

"A Channel swimmer, battling against an adverse current within half a mile of the shore which he had striven to reach, might also be spurred on by the use of oxygen to such a supreme effort as would bring him to his goal.

"As to the after-effect of oxygen, it may be taken that after buoying up an athlete or swimmer to excel himself it would allow his muscular energy to sink in a very short time to a lower level than when in his normal condition. It does not, however, permanently weaken or impair the muscles as an alcoholic or drug stimulant would do. The athlete, after oxygen had forced him to a mighty effort, would simply feel a complete and utter exhaustion. A long rest would then be imperative.

"There is no reason at all why record breakers who desire a sudden accession of energy at a critical part of their effort should not beat their previous achievements by a judicious use of oxygen."

The Royal Welsh Fusiliers have annexed the Walter Locke Shield in the football tournament at Rangoon this year. They beat the Rangoon Gymkhana in the final by a goal to nil.

A mofussil correspondent recently had a parcel of "Bombay ducks" and dried prawns consigned to him from Bombay. The postmaster of his station announced the arrival of the parcel thus :—

Sir, I shall be obliged if you kindly send a man for take to your V.P.P. Rs. 5 that the article come to this office that day. I request to you. Please send before Sunday as soon as you can by your Bearer, the V.P. article are very rotten smell I feel.—Yours faithfully Jagubandhu Mukerjee.

Poor Dorando Pietri of Marathon Race celebrity—the plucky little Italian who all but "got there"—has been overtaken by a bit of real hard luck. Cycling in Salso Maggiore, a motorist passed him throwing up such a dust that Dorando couldn't see, got confused, was thrown from his machine and broke his right leg. He was taking up cycling with a view to coming out as a racing wheelman : he has made a decidedly bad beginning!

From the international entry of over 600 received for The Evening News great Marathon Race on 10th October next, 100 names have been selected. In these are representatives of England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Canada, America, Italy, France, Ceylon, Sweden, Germany, South Africa, and Mexico every entry accepted being from a man who has accomplished performances far above the ordinary.

Picking a few names at random there are Len Hurst, the long-distance champion ; Harry Anstead, four miles professional champion of England in 1895, and the man who challenged Dorando for £1,000 ; Meyer, winner of many long-distance events in and around Rome ; Charles Meekcoms, victor in long-distance events in South Africa ; Walter Ewins, another South African ; Harry Hart, winner of the twenty miles at the old Royal Aquarium ; A. Crudgington, who won the last six days' race at the Royal Aquarium, the twenty-four hours race at the Sittingbourne, and the Southend go-as-you-please race ; Karl Machlet, three time winner of championships is Bavaria ; "James Walsh," who has run in Ireland and South Africa with great succes ; Henry Wenzell, a leading German distance runner ; W. Shelton, whose performances are too well known to need enumeration ; Paul Dubois, of Zurich. G. A. Wittey, who paced Len Hurst for nineteen miles when he broke the twenty miles record ; Sergeant Ernest Doubleday, the middle-weight wrestling champion of Ireland and a grand all-round athlete ; C. W. Hart, who has won distance races all over the country ; T. Mitchell, the well-known London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway runner ; Trinchero Domenico, who in 1901 was in the international race between the English, French, Russian, and Italian soldiers in Crete ; J. Punter, who challenged Len Hurst for the championship of the world at twenty-five miles ; Albert Aldridge, winner of the amateur ten miles championship for two years and winner of the international in Ireland.

Golfers in India will necessarily be keenly interested in what is being done at Home in connection with the important proposals for new rules now before the Royal and Ancient Club. They will see what has been done in the details we publish among our Golf notes to-day. One of the most important recommendations of the committee was that the penalty for "out of bounds" should be loss of both stroke and distance, and to this the meeting agreed. An important amendment was that of Mr. J. T. Inglis :—"If a ball on the putting green be in casual water, or if there be casual water between it and the hole, the ball may be lifted without penalty and placed by hand either directly behind the spot where the ball lay in water, or in the nearest position which affords a putt to the hole without water intervening, but such position must not be nearer to the hole than the spot from which the ball was lifted." This was accepted, so that when the rules come to be passed on 29th September, the golfer will have no further cause to complain about having to putt through a lake, while his opponent, perhaps, has a clear line to the hole.

The committee recommended that the lost ball penalty should be the same in both match and medal play. This official announcement presumably means that the penalty for a lost ball in a match should be stroke and distance (the same as for a ball out of bounds) instead of the long-standing punishment of lost hole. Several minor points were also considered.

With the multiplicity of golf links in England "how to escape golf" is now a problem with which the lost soul who abhors the game is confronted. A "Non Golfer" writes as follows to a London paper :—

"Sir,—I want to go for a quiet holiday in the country. Can any of your readers recommend a good hotel miles away from any golf links?

I find that it is positively painful to stay at an hotel that adjoins golf links. You get nothing but golf for breakfast, lunch, and dinner, and in the smoke-room at night nothing else is talked about. Fishermen are not in it with golfers."

In Canada a vast tract of country lies open to the big game hunter, where in the north forests full of big and small game, extending to the Atlantic Ocean, the area of which is 2,250,000 square miles, lie open to the sportsman. Much of the country is unexplored. The wapiti still frequents Vancouver Island in fair numbers, and with a slight snowfall it is not difficult to secure a good head. There are also a number in East Kootenay, British Columbia, but these are protected for two years. This species is now rare in many places where it formerly abounded, but wapiti are still numerous among the foothills of the Rockies, and they may also be found in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Mackenzie, and Keewatin territories. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have done much to open up new grounds for the sportsman, and they have issued at occasional intervals numerous pamphlets describing the best districts for particular kinds of both big and small game. The caribou, a speedyfooted and shy animal, is found in Newfoundland, Labrador, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Northern Quebec and Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. The full-grown animal is from four and a-half to five and a-half feet high, and often weighs over six hundred pounds. There are two varieties, known as the woodland caribou and the barren ground caribou. The former is larger and of darker colour than the latter, but its antlers are lighter, and it is generally found in herds of five or six. The barren ground variety travels in herds of from twenty to many hundreds, its coat is lighter, its muzzle more covered, but the weight is about the same. They are noted for their migratory habits, and display great vigour and activity. The most popular grounds in Quebec are doubtless those known as Les Jardins, the name being derived from the luxuriant growth of coarse grass sprinkled with occasional clumps of bushes and trees, forming admirable screens for the hunter. These grounds are some fifty miles north-east of Baie, St. Paul, near the headwaters of the Murray Bay River, and are now included in the limits of the Laurentides National Park. Enormous herds of these animals are seen every winter in this locality.

Our Shillong correspondent writes :—The October races at Shillong are likely to be the biggest on record. Mr. Delphin is bringing up Jean, Lily II and Golden Star. Mr. Barrow, the Calcutta G.R., is to ride for him. Rumour hath it that Mr. Holmes is also to be in Shillong for the Meet. Mr. George Hennessey has bought Lady George and she is likely to be the success of the races. Mac II is already up here. Hard is bringing up Energy, Skipping Girl and Amiable, who are to run in the colours of Messrs. Baker and Rankin. Mr. Delauney's Gipsy and Happy-go-lucky are also to be in the safe hands of Hard. The Hurdle Races and the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup will be sights worth watching, especially if Mr. "Sammy" McCall brings up Mademoiselle for the latter. These first-class performers are sure to scare away the lesser lights which may be in some respects a pity. There will be no dearth of capable riders, as Mr. Anderson, Captain Dening, Mr. McCall, Mr. Barrow, Hard and Tooney will all be in the pigskin. The race course is at present in a bad condition owing to the incessant rain, but the animals of Messrs. Holder, Hennessey, Rankin and Faulkner have had occasional work. It is to be hoped that Jupiter Pluvius will be kind to Shillong during the eventful week.

The Poona Tenth Extra Meeting originally fixed for Wednesday, the 7th October, will now be held on Monday, 5th idem (Dussera Holiday).

Our Poona correspondent writes :—The first drop of rain we have had in Poona for some time fell on Wednesday and made the going in the afternoon a trifle sticky, though scarcely heavy. The usual crowd, the usual heat, and another fine day's racing with some very hot finishes, which left honours fairly evenly divided.

Never filling well, the Champion Chase this time dwindled into a match between Perquisite and Robin at a difference of 31lb. This was amply made up for by the great finish we saw, those who had laid 3 to 1 on the mare feeling far from safe till the post was passed. Almost level, they raced to the open, where Robin held a decided lead and gradually increasing it was quite eight lengths to the good half a mile from home. On entering the course again Perquisite had made up to within a length. Whips came out on both here and they were hard at it all the way to the post, where Perquisite just got her head in front—as fine a race as one could wish to see after a journey of a mile and 7 furlongs.

Another good race which was in the balance till well down the straight was the Grand National with Seclusion, despite 12-7, favourite from Lamrock and Daroji. A sign that she did not like the weight was seen at the jump opposite the stand, where the favourite pecked very badly, Lamrock and Cairnsmore going to the front. In the open Nell Gwynne and Daroji came up second, but the former blundering at the jump brought Mr. Charrington off just when he seemed going best. Crossing the road Daroji went away with Seclusion having fallen back last. Nearing the run in Daroji was done with and Lamrock began to draw up to Cairnsmore, who had a fair lead. Seclusion flashed up for a moment, but Lamrock going strong stayed them all out. The going was not in Seclusion's favour and she did remarkably well to finish third.

The Visitors' Plate provided another nerve-stirring finish, The Master and Mallinyook fighting for favouritism till a rush on Oakton brought him to that position, though his previous performances scarcely merited it. He was asked to make all his own running, his stable companion, St. Patrick, just behind. At the bend St. Patrick still held on, though making no impression, but the sensation was caused by Mallinyook, who came outside with a most determined run and gaining gradually only missed by a head ; people being in doubt till the numbers went up. Whereas Southall rode another of his strong finishes. Hill further proved the coolness and judgment with which he can ride.

Following with the Dealers' New Plate, it was rather surprising to see Jehangir and Devon so confidently backed, as the former has never suggested being able to stay seven and the latter has disappointed more than once. The betting was, however, justified according to results, as after Winter and M. V. O. were done with there was nothing in it but these two, Jehangir passing them all at the distance to win anyhow.

Everything pointed to a one-horse race in the Horse Handicap when Wise Bird was so freely backed that she went out a two to one on chance from Chivalry at fours. More than gentle persuasion was needed to get the latter on to the course at all, but when the barrier went up he was first on his legs, had Rustile beat at the bend and was not seriously troubled to stay out a game finish by Ianthe.

Lastly the upset of the day, Caravan, being a firm favourite from Hermit, Disfigure and Sublime. Not one of these even placed, though I believe Caravan was shut in, Wadi making the pace from Rajput. The latter has always been considered only a mere sprinter, but now on coming into the lead at the straight he won very easily from Little Joker and Court Martial.

GOVERNOR'S CUP DAY, with H.E. Sir George Sydenham Clarke and his daughter present, should have been a gorgeous affair on Saturday, but history has a nasty way of repeating itself. Those arriving from Bombay reached the course as a heavy shower fell which, abating into a drizzle, continued aggravatingly throughout the afternoon. Rain had also fallen the previous night and the course was very heavy, though no postponement was necessary as last year when Wait-a-While won the mile on both occasions on which it was run.

To begin with the first race, the Lanowli Plate found a second-rate lot of sixteen with "fours the field," Chungiz and Court Martial being in greatest request. It was a capital race, Logan making the running from Mint, Hazza and Bendigo, who drew up second at the five furlongs and ran level in the lead with Brutus a couple of furlongs later where Chungiz was next. Though under the whip from the bend, Brutus plodded on in front of Chungiz, but at the distance Court Martial came wide and, though swerving badly, just passed the leader on the post by a head.

WE have been waiting for Lady Nannie in a distance race, and when she figured in the Mile Colonial Plate for ponies she was made favourite, though Recovery and Matalgia were dangerous elements. She fully came up to expectations, as after following Tete-a-Tete she came away almost as she liked staying out a late run by Matalgia.

THE important Western India Stakes followed with a smart lot of thirteen, giving punters something to think about. After some indecision Hunting Horn, Pelargonium II., and Dirty Boy were made equal favourites, but not one of these even found a "drum." First out was Golden Gleam with Coquette in close attendance, and passing him before a furlong, Fireworks third and Wandin, Sacristan, and Dirty Boy next. The first change came passing the five furlongs, Wandin running up to the leader and Absentee coming up to the bunch behind. At the half mile Wandin led clear from his stable companion, Absentee, Sacristan and Fireworks. Absentee and Mother Goose put in runs on coming into the straight, but Wandin going easy stayed them out. The stable had backed Absentee, so that Wandin came practically as a skinner for the Books.

SECOND of the big events, the Governor's Cup, saw even more open betting, sixes being on offer on the field. Peculiar, Famous (late Dhamas), Nooman and Mooreed in most demand. With Gladiator leading, Meazer and Precious, the first change occurred at the five furlongs, where Safoog came up to the leader, followed by Nooman, Precious, Hadee, Peculiar, Famous and Soheil in attendance. The leaders were done with at the bend, where Peculiar came outside into the lead with Hadee and the former looked a winner till Taylor came through on the rails on Famous to win comfortably after a very nicely ridden race.

ELEVEN smart sprinters went out for the Ganeshkhind Plate with Metal Maid a warm favourite from Wise Bird, Ianthe and Lord Merv. When Wise Bird was backed to twos on and lost to Chivalry, it was said she had had a bad run and this race bears out that she did not then show her capabilities. Ianthe led Wise Bird and Picturesque and these three were in front all the way. Wise Bird came into the lead at the bend, and going away from them won quite comfortably. Metal Maid got a bad start and could make no impression when she began to come outside.

LASTLY, punters met with a bit of an upset in the Lawn Plate of five furlongs when Young Gazelle was confidently backed, Mumbra shortening and Commander expanding. No less than nineteen faced the starter, and Vedas was quickest away to be soon passed by Mudlool, who in turn gave way to Lookman at the bend. All seemed well with Lookman till Mumbra came up to him a furlong from home, and after a struggle the latter went away. Taylor's third well-ridden race of the day. Young Gazelle only got through very late, just getting his place.

As will be seen from an advertisement appearing further on, the Calcutta Rowing Club hold their second regatta on the Alipore Canal on Friday and Saturday, the 25th and 26th instant. The Club will be "at home" on both days. Entries are very fair and good racing is expected.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 4th September 1908.

"COME OUT 'tis now September, the Hunter's Moon's begun." Correct no doubt, but one failed to enthuse much over it with the chill blasts, black clouds, and driving rain which ushered in "The First" and have been on top ever since. From all accounts the partridge season is not going to be a particularly satisfactory one, the recent deluges and violent wind storms having been anything but favourable to the birds. Suffering as they were for want of water and insect food, which is always scarce in a dry time, birds were very glad of the change from drought, but the rain, now that it has come, has been much too heavy for the welfare of young birds. Early broods will be all right except on the lower lands, where even old birds have perished. At the same time the prospects would seem to be better than they were last year which was a phenomenally bad one.

THE sun-bitten August holiday maker is back again with his nose once more to the grindstone, and I regret to find he is prone, at the moment, to snigger at the men—and they are by no means a microscopic minority—whose more energetic temperament leaves the loafing, dozing, shade-lingering, lymphatic pottering to those who find relief from a stuffy office in heat and dust and glare further afield while he prefers the bite of early autumn and the activities which freshen and exhilarate. This man wants his shooting, his golf, his motoring, his fishing and other things amidst the falling leaves. The fragrance of harvest, the bright crisp mornings, the cool fresh breezes and the glorious sunsets of September. And methinks he choses the better part. But when his September opens, as this has done, the autumn holiday maker has clearly "dropped his money-pus," as Uncle Remus says:—

For the last week the weather has been positively wicked. For days the record has been one of storm ravages on land and sea. Wrecks, wholesale drowning, exciting experiences and marvellous escapes around the coast; terrible damage to the fruit crops, wholesale havoc in Kent, Surrey and Sussex caused by wind of almost cyclonic force, many serious casualties and rain, rain, incessant rain. But let me switch off the subject ere incoherence supervenes, for I am of the September holiday brigade Mr. Editor.

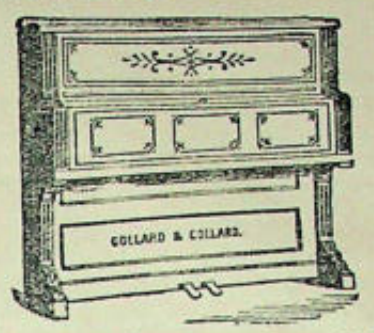
CLUBLAND awaits interestedly the bold experiment of the Royal Automobile Club, with its promised magnificent building in Pall Mall. It is matter of common knowledge that several ancient and exclusive clubs now languish: they are among the shoals and snags, the tide does not serve, indeed it is dead low water in some cases, and the names of eligible recruits now go up for immediate election instead of waiting long years as in days gone by.

With a falling membership the old-fashioned club has to face a change of social habits which strikes at the club income. Less wine is drunk, a whisky and soda or a soda-water without the whisky takes the place of the bottle of claret or Beaune. The club dinner-party has moved to the new restaurants. The automobile carries out of town many of the members, whose lavish spending was once to the club's advantage.



But it cannot be denied that many clubs have their administration to thank for their misfortunes. They have not moved with the times. The club which in Thackeray's day seemed the perfection of insolent luxury strikes the modern observer as combining the comforts of a railway waiting-room with the conveniences of a mid Victorian hotal. For such advantages men are less willing to pay thirty guineas as an entrance fee. The new Automobile Club, with its swimming bath, gymnasium, and fencing-room, its modern equipment and management, bids for the twentieth century clubman, who asks more than a respectable notepaper heading and a bottle of sound port.

THE unfriends of Miss Marie Corelli—and they are many—are hoping for a little fun as the sequel to her latest tirade which has taken the form of a novel with the curious title of "Holy Orders or the Tragedy of a Quiet Life;" "Drink and Demons" would have been infinitely more appropriate. The whole book is, so to speak, soaked in whisky and beer and served up in the lady's well-known torrential manner, words and phrases carrying her helpless, bewildered reader over the pages as a Hooghly bore carries light craft. Much of it reads like a temperance lecture of more than average virulence, and among others the House of Commons is venomously attacked. Here is a sample:—

"What an amount of casual drinking goes on among the members of the honourable assembly, in the midst of the nation's business, too! I remember being present once in the capacity of the intelligent stranger at an interesting debate one evening, and

I certainly came away with the impression that whisky and soda was more anxiously sought after than the national welfare! After the debate I stood in the lobby quarter of an hour, and during even that short space of time five men severally asked me to join them in swilling their favourite beverage. When you come to think of it, you know, it's not quite what one expects from the makers of laws for the future of Great Britain!"

And again (for the subject of drink is always on tap):

It would be difficult to find any statesman, politician, diplomat, financier, or for that matter, any clergymen in London who would refuse a glass of whisky and soda at any hour of the day. Not all the clergy are set against the drink, you know; some of them are good old humbugs, I can tell you! They talk a lot in their Church congresses about the "national curse"—but many of the very fellows who talk have invested money in breweries and distilleries, and get a good slice of their incomes out of the "curse" they condemn. So encouraging to the cause of religion, isn't it, to see such hypocrites in the pulpit preaching "Truth."

No sooner is "Holy Orders" cast upon a long suffering public than Messrs. Barclay Perkins and Company, Limited, the eminent brewers, issue a challenge to the preacher—beg pardon, writer. Resenting her attack on beer and brewers as unjust, this firm invite Miss C. to visit their brewery at any time and see for herself what care is taken to produce pure beer. She need not, unless she likes, apprise them of her coming, but may make a surprise visit. Miss C.'s card will always be a passport to immediate inspection say the brewers. Meanwhile Corellians, and others, await developments. Apart from this the book is bound to have a big sale, the temperance brigade will hail it as a powerful ally of the cause, while her admirers—and they are many too—and all who are sufficiently robust mentally and physically to tackle 500 pages of Miss Corelli, will doubtless help the circulation.

The Dublin Horse Show, just concluded, has been a big success and compares favourably with any of its predecessors. The quality of the exhibits, the number of visitors, the excellence of the arrangements, combined to secure this pleasing result. And the number of foreigners present was greater than was ever the case before. Most of them were eager to buy weight-carrying mares and well-bred horses. In fact there was a wonderful improvement in the prices asked by the sellers before the first afternoon of the show was well advanced. For all classes of typical Irish horses the average price in private dealing would probably work out at 20 per cent. more than has ever been known before.

Remarkable prices were given for hunters which had escaped the notice of the judges. Sums of £1,400 £1,200, and £850 were actually paid by three Continental buyers.

It is interesting to learn that Messrs. Longmans, Green and Co. have in active preparation an important addition to the scanty literature dealing with that prince of actors, Henry Irving. The work in question has been entrusted to Austin Brereton, whose fitness for such a task is well known. Mr. Brereton is indeed happy in having some of the materials from Sir Henry himself, and also having placed at his disposal original documents formerly in possession of the actor, and not hitherto published. This is by no means the first time that Mr. Brereton has written on this subject, for in 1883 he wrote the first biographical book on Irving, and again in 1903 appeared the History of the Lyceum Theatre from the same pen.

I think I referred in a recent letter to the impending production at the Lyceum of a play by Messrs. Hall Caine and Louis N. Parker, a play founded on one of the Great Boomster's novels and plays, to wit, "The Manxman." Well, it eventuated last Saturday night and it may be briefly described as dealing with two aspects of the interminable ethics of sex. Mr. H. Caine says he always writes with a purpose, but, for the life of me, I have been unable to track down his purpose in "Pete." Plain, old crusted, transpontine melodrama I allow, sugared sentiment, strong human interest, realism, good characters, pathos, and domestic atmosphere in abundance, and a conventionally happy ending there is, but as far as my humble investigations have gone "purpose" has yet failed to discover itself. Mr. Caine has undoubtedly improved on "The Manxman," in which Mr. Wilson Barret years ago scored a conspicuous success. He has strengthened the character-drawing, slightly shifted the centre of interest, and added new situations and motives. Indeed, "Pete" is to all practical purposes a new piece. When little more than a child, Kate Cregeen had become engaged to Pete. Pete has been absent for five years when the play opens, and he is believed to be dead. In the meantime Kate has given herself to Philip Christian, but he puts ambition before love and honour, refuses to make her his wife, and when Pete comes home a rich man she marries him.

Gradually she learns to love the big-hearted, rough-mannered fellow, who believes himself to be the father of her child. And because of this love she finds herself unable to go on living a lie, and leaves her husband's house. Pete, heart-broken, gives it out to the world that Kate has merely gone on a visit to some friends, to maintain the fraud he even writes letters to himself, and shows them as coming from his wife. But one night she returns to take away her child, and is seen by Pete. He offers to divorce her if Philip will marry her; but Philip refuses. Her father refuses to admit her to his house; so big-hearted Pete forgives her and the curtain comes down on a happy ending. Such, briefly, is the plot. There are not a few improbabilities, but its appeal is direct, and its scenes are sincere.

Mr. Matheson Lang was the ideal hero of melodrama as Pete, and Miss Hutin Britton, acting with commendable restraint, gave a beautiful interpretation of the character of Kate. Mr. Eric Mayne played Philip on the traditional lines of melodramatic villainy, and the rest of a strong company brought a good deal of character into their parts.

Mr. "Norman Trevor" (by which stage name Londoners know Mr. Norman Pritchard of Calcutta sprinting and hurdling celebrity) has now reached the big poster degree of success. On the hoardings we see him on a terrified, snorting steed cutting adrift with clasp-knife the heroine whom the villain has lashed to a stake to await death at the rising of the tide. In a miniature maelstrom, and regardless of a mountainous wave which topples above his head threatening instant annihilation, the manly hero (Mr. "N. T.") with a twenty Sandow power left arm swings the girl into the saddle as if she were a damp dutch doll, while with his trusty right he cuts the rope, the horse meanwhile apparently making an attempt at the Channel record, and in the background the villain (in a pale Assam silk sort of suit) tumbles headlong into the seething cauldron. Above is the legend "The Sands o' Dee, at the London Hippodrome" and really, for the Hippodrome, the thing is not half bad.

To begin with there is a stirring story. Polly Stephens is loved both by John Hooper—"N. T." made up as a jolly Jack Tar—and Basil Dean—the dark, scheming villain of the piece. Now, on the Sands o' Dee the tide comes up with terrible speed. And the wicked Basil, spurned by the lovely Polly, ties the heroine to a mast and leaves her to be drowned by the quickly-advancing tide. But the brave John, mounted on a splendid horse, braves the advancing tide, cuts her bonds, and—"all is well."

The sensation arrives when the sea gradually envelopes Polly's body. Real salt water has been imported from the Atlantic, "at enormous expense," and this, plunged forward from the back of the stage, actually casts the refreshing salt spray into the faces of the audience. Rube Stephens, the father, is played by that polished actor Mr. E. H. Barnes, Mr. Lawson Butt is the villain, Dean, while Miss Rosie Lee is Polly, and Mr. Norman Trevor the lover, both very wet before the curtain falls. Mr. Norman Trevor was understudy to Mr. Geo. Alexander a while since, possibly this music hall excursion is merely pour passerle temps.

"Idols," Mr. Roy Horniman's four-act adaptation of Mr. W. J. Locke's novel, with which Miss Evelyn Millard, on Wednesday, commenced operations at the Garrick as an actress-manager, appears to have some particularly strong moments, to say nothing of a singularly brutal murder (quite in keeping with the events of the day) and a stirring trial scene. There is also some remarkably good acting, for which the accomplished Miss Millard herself, Mr. Charley Somerset, Mr. Alfred Brydone, Miss Edyth Latimer, Mr. Allan Aynesworth, and Mr. Herbert Waring are chiefly responsible.

In "Idols" we have a secret marriage, a violent Hebraic father, who will curse his daughter if she marries a Christian, quite in the Shylock manner, a drunken manservant, a murder executed with a massive silver candlestick, a man wrongly charged with the crime, a trial at the Assize Court, a wonderful act of self-sacrifice on the part of the heroine—and, unlike the novel on which it is based, a felicitous denouement. Melodrama naked and unashamed, and good at that be it noted.

Item.—Mr. Harry Lauder has been released from his Christmas pantomime engagements at Glasgow (at a price I presume) to enable him to appear in America for twenty weeks, commencing 12th October, at the fabulous salary of £800 a week! When one reflects on this artist's humble beginnings as pit boy the mind is fairly boggled at the figure. And he has just acquired in Scotland a 4,000 acres estate.

A week or two ago I referred to Mr. Jerome K. Jerome's new play, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," a piece on all fours with "A Visitor from Mars," and a clever skit on the London boarding house and its tenants. The good ladies of Bloomsbury are perturbed over it. I see one of them writes to the Daily Mirror:—"Mr. Jerome is a very pretty writer, but I feel quite sure he can never have lived in a properly-conducted boarding-house.

"I have lived twenty-five years in this house, and never, during the whole of that time, have I had under my roof any of the extraordinary characters Mr. Jerome would suggest are types familiar to boarding-houses in general, and Bloomsbury in particular.

Now, Mr. Jerome has cast his net fairly wide; his boarding-house characters include a cheat, a slut, a painted lady, a shrew, a snob, a bully, a hussy, a rogue, a satyr, a coward and a cad: surely Landlady Land in London, as Boarding House Land in India, is familiar enough with these types?

The first woman who ever trod this earth was not manufactured out of Adam's rib according to popular belief. She owed her origin to the gentleman's funny bone. That, at least, is what the heroine of Mr. J. M. Barrie's new play, "What Every Woman Knows," produced at the Duke of York's Theatre on Thursday night, has to say. And that, presumably, is "What Every Woman Knows."

You must not take Mr. Barrie's play seriously. You must not judge it from ordinary human standpoints. It is simply yet another of his whimsical ideas. There is a young Scotsman who began as a railway porter, and who has risen to a position of prominence as a politician. And he falls in love with a lady of title. Now, that is quite possible. But the strange part of the affair is that his wife knows all about it, and, although loving her husband, makes no sort of fuss whatever. And in the end the husband learns that most of the success of his career has been due to the hints given to him by his wife. Result—a happy ending.

It is all wildly improbable, but it all has the "Barrie touch." It has much humour, and not a little pleasing sentiment. It is splendidly acted by Mr. Gerald du Maurier, Mr. Henry Vibart, Mr. Sydney Valentine, Miss Hilda Trevelyan, Mr. Norman Forbes, Mrs. Tree, and Miss Lillah McCarthy. The reception was wholly cordial.

King Alfonso's visit is over. The poor young gentleman knocked the bottom out of a record programme; he seems to have visited almost everything, seen almost every "sight," gone almost everywhere, and taken a hand at almost every kind of sport. I say "almost," for on second thoughts I am, as a truthful chronicler, compelled to tell you that he has not made an attempt at swimming the Channel and he has not appeared at one of the Halls.

"Peer Weds a Gaiety Actress" was a head line in my morning paper that caught my eye just before my matutinal kipper and coffee was announced. The peer is Earl Poulett, the girl Miss Lillian Storey, daughter of Fred Storey of early Gaiety days and a contemporary of Fred Leslie and Nellie Farren. It is stated that the union has the blessing and consent of the bridegroom's father.

I regret to announce the death of that sporting sailor, Rear-Admiral R. A. J. Montgomerie, in his fifty-fourth year, as the result of an operation on Monday. Once heavy weight champion of the Navy, a strong man and a handy, a big game shooter of celebrity—for he has the credit of having bagged the biggest lion and rhinoceros and of having killed the largest number of lions in a given time—a life saver of Humane Society fame, the Admiral was admired and beloved by many.

There may be among your older generation of Calcutta readers, especially those of the legal fraternity, who remember Mr. and Mrs. H. A. D. Adkin (Messrs. Sanderson and Co.) and who will be sorry to hear of the death, at Felixstowe, of Mrs. Adkin in her 60th year.

The Vagrant.

Review.

MR. SELOUS'S FURTHER AFRICAN EXPERIENCES.*

As President Roosevelt remarks in his preface to this interesting volume, Mr. Selous is the last of the old-time African great-game hunters, and therefore every scrap of his vast stores of information with regard to the fauna of South Africa in its palmy days ought to be preserved and made accessible to the public. For this reason alone we have therefore the greatest pleasure in according a hearty welcome to the volume now before us. That a considerable proportion of the experiences it records is not given to the public for the first time may be freely admitted, without in any way detracting from the value and interest of the work which includes a vast amount of new and important information conveyed in the author's well-known racy and distinctive style. To add to the attractiveness of the volume, the author has secured the services of the well-known animal artist Mr. E. Caldwell, several of whose pictures are all that can be desired. Unfortunately, however, in the portrait of the nyala antelope that artist has repeated an error of which he has been previously guilty, namely in putting the head of a buck on to the body of a doe. For in this picture the buck is represented as having the 12 or 13 body stripes of the female, whereas it should not show, at the most, more than half-a-dozen.

One of the most interesting of the new passages in the volume relates to a scene witnessed by the author on the Dett river, which recalls the vast wealth of the fauna as described years previously by Gordon Cumming. On the occasion referred to, the sun was already low in the western sky, when,—"A few hundred yards higher up the valley than where we were working a herd of nine giraffes stalked slowly and majestically from the forest, and making their way to a pool of water, commenced to drink. These giraffes remained in the open valley till dark, one or other of them from time to time straddling out its fore legs in a most extraordinary manner in order to get its mouth down to the water. No other animals came to drink in the pools between us and the giraffes. Possibly some got our wind before leaving the shelter of the forest, although the evening was very still. But below us, as far as one could see down the valley the open ground was presently alive with game. One after another great herds of buffaloes emerged from the forest on either side of the valley and fed slowly down to the water. One of these herds was preceded by about fifty zebras and another by a large troop of sable antelopes. Presently two other herds of sable antelopes appeared upon the scene, a second herd of zebras, and five magnificently horned old kudu bulls, whilst rhinoceroses, both of the black and white species (the latter predominating in number) were scattered amongst the other game, singly or in twos and threes, all down the valley. Of course all this great concourse of wild animals had been collected together in the neighbourhood of the valley of Dett owing to the drying up of all the vleys in the surrounding country, and during the rainy season would have been scattered over a wide area.

* African Nature Notes and Reminiscences. By F. C. Selous. London: Macmillan & Co. Ld. 1908, pp. XXX + 356, Illustrated. Price, 10s net.

"It is sad to think that of all those buffaloes and rhinoceroses I saw in the valley of Dett on that October evening, less than five and thirty years ago, not a single one nor any one of their descendants is left alive to-day. They were all killed off years ago by the natives of Matabililand after these people became possessed of firearms, purchased for the most part in the Diamond Fields."

The author then goes on to state how that the rhinoceroses were the first to disappear; but the buffaloes, in spite of their enormous numbers, were not long in following, for nearly all which up to that time had escaped the weapons of the natives fell victims to the great epidemic of rinderpest in 1895. Although buffaloes were numerous along the Zambesi, their great stronghold was the Chobi Valley, where Mr. Selous once saw an assembly of several united herds which he estimated at a thousand strong. By far the most remarkable story in the whole book is, however, one for which the author is indebted to a German traveller and sportsman, Mr. Max Fleischmann; and as the episode is illustrated by photographs there seems no possibility of doubt as to its absolute authenticity. The traveller in question was on a certain occasion encamped on a tributary of the Tana river when news was brought him that close by a rhinoceros was being dragged backwards in the water by a crocodile.

"The rhinoceros" runs the narrative "was held by its left hind leg which had been seized by the crocodile just as the big beast was leaving the river after drinking. At least half-a-dozen of the porters, who had been lying in the bushes near the scene, in reply to my questions, agreed as to the manner in which the rhinoceros had been attacked.

"When we neared the point of attack, the rhino appeared panic-stricken, making very little noise—simply straining and heaving in its efforts to release its leg from the jaws of the crocodile. While making but little headway, it did indeed for a time succeed in holding its own, keeping in shallow water. A moment or two later, however, blood appeared on the surface of the water leading us to believe that the crocodile had been reinforced by others which had been attracted to the scene by the blood and lashing of the water. The struggle continued on down the stream, the combatants having moved quite a distance from the original point of attack. The rhinoceros still managed to keep on its feet, facing either down-stream or towards the opposite bank, and for at least a distance of a hundred yards down stream had made no perceptible loss of ground. Shortly afterwards, however, apparently maddened by the pain it was undoubtedly suffering (for now much more blood and pieces o' flesh appeared on the surface of the water), the rhinoceros evidently lost its head, and attempted to cross through the deep water to the opposite shore. This move was the beginning of the creature's end, for as soon as it turned and met with deeper water it lost the advantage of a firm foothold in the shallow water, and the animal was quickly drawn beneath the surface."

The rhinoceros was a full-grown female, with a horn of apparently some twenty inches in length. Hunters to whom the story was related were of opinion that the unfortunate beast was seized by an unusually large crocodile, which had curled its tail round a submerged snag, and thus was enabled to hold on till reinforced by others of its kind. Such an explanation will, however, not hold good since a crocodile has no prehensile power in its tail; and Mr. Selous is of opinion that although a rhinoceros if properly harnessed to a crocodile could undoutedly pull the reptile clean out of the water, yet that the paralysing effect of the vice-like jaws on its leg would eventually lead to the defeat of the mammal, as happened in the case in question.

The author has of course much to say with regard to lions, although even to epitomise his account would occupy too much of our space. He also devotes a chapter to the spotted hyæna, in regard to which much less has been written by sportsmen.

In the opinion of Mr. Selous, the spotted hyæna is quite as dangerous and destructive a creature as is the wolf in North America. The ordinary howl of this animal he describes as commencing with a long drawn, mournful moan, rising and falling till it ends in one of the wildest imaginable shrieks. It is, however, but seldom that these hyænas are heard to laugh in their native wilds after the fashion they can be made to do in menageries by ranalising them with a piece of meat held just out of reach in front of the bars of their cage. When, however, a party of these noisome beasts are gathered round the carcase of an elephant or a rhinoceros the cries they utter almost defy description. On such occasions they laugh, howl and shriek, while in addition they give vent to sounds which may be best described as gurgles, grunts, and cackles. According to native accounts the females give birth to only a pair of whelps at a time; they being generally born in the deserted burrow of an ant-bear.

Very noteworthy, too, are the author's remarks on the hunting-leopard or chita, in the course of which it is stated that when pursued on horseback these animals will drop suddenly in their tracks, and allow themselves to be speared without an effort to escape.

The weakest part of the book is the second chapter, in which the author expresses his disbelief in the theory of the protective colouring of animals. The author has of course a perfect right to his own opinions; but a sentence like the following certainly does not seem to explain matters in a satisfactory manner:—

"I imagine that the white-faced bontebok was evolved from the same ancestral form as the topi and tiang of East and Northern Africa, for the new-born bontebok as well as the blesbok has a blackish brown face, and I believe—however fantastic this belief may appear—that the wonderfully rich and varied coloration of this remarkable antelope has been brought about purely through the influence of its exceptional environment."

A little later we find the author affirming that he has never heard of any explanation of the conspicuous black colouring of the Cape buffalo;—a statement which is merely a confession of his own lack of acquaintance with recent literature.

Taken, however, as a whole, the work is a most valuable contribution to the history of the African fauna in its early days; and therefore one which is absolutely indispensable to the working naturalist, as it should likewise be to the big game sportsman.

Fishing.

A WHALE HUNT.

We are out for whales, and the man in the crow's-nest high on the foremast, and the harpooner and mate on the bridge, are scanning every yard of water with keen, accustomed eyes. Suddenly, as if a cannon shot had struck the water, up goes a column of spray a thousand yards to port. The helmsman's wheel is whirling before the look-out's shout has reached him; down goes the engine-room telegraph to "full-speed ahead," and we are off in chase. That column of spray is the glorious puff that the big "finner" gives as he comes to the surface, blowing the used-up air from his mighty lungs, and sending the sea sky-high ere he replenishes his store. Think of it, ye swimmers, and, as you recall your own joys in a vigorous blow after a dive, envy him the glories of that gigantic exhaust!

Round swings the little steamer, "steady" is the word, and we head for a point in the sea which the eagle-eyed harpooner—who commands the ship—has determined as the place where the unsuspecting monster is likely to rise again.

Ninety-nine people out of a hundred think they have a fair idea of what a harpoon is like. Not one in a thousand has the faintest glimmering of the weapon which the ingenuity of the Norseman Svend Foyn devised a generation ago. The big two-barbed arrow which the whalers of Dundee and Peterhead used to hurl with sturdy arm into the black flank of the Greenland whale is an obsolete toy. The modern missile weighs a hundredweight, and its iron shank pretty nearly fits the bore of the gun. Through the length of the shank runs a slot like a prolonged needle-eye. In this travels an iron ring, to which is attached the line. Between that point and the other end, snug in the hold, is a thousand yards of the best rope the world can make. It is of no great thickness, not so thick, for example, as the butt of a billiard cue, but the first couple of 100 yards or thereabout will stand a pull of twenty tons, and the rest is little behind it. Part of it is coiled on a big tray, which is fixed to the bow in front of the gun, and it is led over a brass sheave and along the deck round the two drums of the winch, and so into the hold.

But we have not done with the harpoon. The shank is hidden in the gun up to the forward end of the slot. Immediately in front of this are four iron barbs hinged to the shaft and held close to it by a lashing of cord round their tips. Each of these barbs is about ten inches long and an inch thick. The lashing is stripped off by the impact with the whale's side, and the four great barbs spread out in its body the moment the pull comes on the line, so that the ship is as securely anchored to its prey as Milton's mariner to Leviathan. A deadly weapon, truly, but its possibilities are not yet exhausted. Screwed on the shaft in front of the barbs is a pointed cast-iron cone, three inches in diameter at the base and fourteen inches long. It weighs between eleven and twelve pounds, is hollow, and carries a charge of powder and a friction fuse. This is connected to a wire which, after passing through a little hole bored in the nose of the shaft is made fast to the lashing round the harpoon barbs. When the lashing is stopped by the whale's side the fuse is fired and the shell, buried by this time deep in the monster's body, explodes. The whaler's business is to kill, and that quickly, and it must be confessed that he leaves little to chance.

"Pooff!" There goes our "finner" a hundred yards to starboard, his black back and big upstanding fin sliding majestically down the green side of a long wave. He has changed his course, and we have overrun him. Back goes the telegraph to "half speed," the wheel flies round and we get alongside the wake he has left like a steamer, visible even to the untrained eye for 100 yards or so on the restless surface of the sea. The harpooner darts down the ladder, and in another second or two has cast loose his gun. With squared yet stooping shoulders and craning head, like an eagle on its rock, the big Norseman, with all his hunting instincts awake, scans the track and looks ahead from his perch on the bow. The engineer below is in for a busy time, and thanks Heaven for his up-to-date machinery. "Dead slow" comes the order from the bow, then a wave of the hand, and we alter course a point or two and glide slowly onward. In two or three minutes "half speed" again and then "slow" once more. The harpooner's imagination is busy gauging the speed and course of his invisible quarry, and responding to indication almost too subtle for words, and engineer and helmsman have no rest. But unfortunately the whale does not steer by compass. He changes course as the whim takes him, and perhaps for an hour, perhaps for two hours or even three, he fools us.

Presently, fifty or sixty yards away, up comes his big black head, the white of his lower jaw shows bright and clean against the water, with a stately swing the long back rises as the head goes down, and the waves close in over him as he disappears. The harpooneer watches in silence. "Dead slow," he says, so that one on the bridge can just hear; "Dead slow," says the helmsman down the speaking-tube in a different tone from any order given before the throb of the engine ceases, and all the world vanishes from your mind save the harpooner and the patch of water on the starboard bow. We are going six or seven knots, the nose of the ship is rising and falling, rolling, too, from side to side, yet everything seems to stand still in an ever-increasing tension as minute after minute passes. The harpooner swings to and fro with the swings of the heaving prow, gripping his gun and watching. Then comes the climax. Through the waves, parallel with our course, and some thirty yards off, comes first the head, then a gradually increasing waterline of black glistening side as the head disappears. Will he never fire? You gulp and clutch the rail. Will he never fire? "Crash" goes the gun belching forth gigantic wads of burning tow and a cloud of smoke that smothers the ship forward as the wind bears it across to leeward. And in the sea is chaos. There is a huge upheaval of white belly and black back, a great cauldron of foam, and then, before you have realised it all, there is nothing but the ship going astern, and the line running out slowly and more slowly already as the drums of the winch put on the brake of their mass and bearings. Now it is still. The harpooner gets off his platform, looks at the rope taut along the deck, lays hold of it, and pulls it upwards strongly, steadily, inquiringly. "Heave away!" The steam goes into the winch engine, and five minutes from the firing of the gun the giant bulk is hauled lifeless out of the depths.

The drama is at an end, and yet the scenes to come, if less thrilling, are no less interesting. The carcase is quickly brought alongside, and a heavy chain is belted round the narrow of the tail and made fast to the side of the ship near the bow. The spreading flukes or lobes of the tail are then cut off, leaving only a boss to hold the chain in its place. The whale, it should be explained, is not taken on board, but is towed tail first alongside, or astern by a stout hawser, according as the weather is fine or rough, and the removal of the flukes enormously facilitates towing. A long pointed iron pipe connected with a hose which leads to an air-pump driven by steam in the engine-room is thrust into the whale's side, the pump is started, and the whale is inflated, so that it shall float of its own buoyancy.

Meanwhile the harpooneer has been reloading his gun. A second harpoon is quickly fitted with its loaded shell and pushed home on a fresh charge of powder. The firing fuse is about to be fitted to the breech, when a great blast to starboard makes all look up incredulous. Heading straight across our bows is a huge finner not fifty yards away. The harpooneer hurries his preparations with lightning speed, but when the whale shows himself in a few seconds right ahead, a perfect mark, the gun is dumb. The harpooneer, maddened at the tantalising sight, levels it fiercely, but uselessly. The firing attachment is not yet in its place, and with a parting "pooff," that seems charged with contempt, the big brute sweeps magnificently down under the surface. The harpooneer turns his back on the sight and lifts both fists clenched to high Heaven, but whether the whale suffered from that terrible curse, as did the Jackdaw of Rheims from the anathema of the Church, not all the scientists and all the whalers of the North Sea will ever be able to tell us. Suffice it that we chased for an hour and more and never got another chance.

Commerce now holds the field. The romance of the chase, the poetry of the tumbling surges, the spacious skyline, the threatening cloud-capped cliffs of Mackle Fugga are as a dream, and we are face to face with dividends. Yet the fascination is as strong for the observing eye as in anything that has gone before. As in the ship, so on shore efficiency is the note of the whole undertaking. In front of you, as you look from the ship, is a square, level wooden platform. From the edge, which is built up on piles about high-water mark, a slipway runs out into the sea. At the shore end of the platform are several steam winches, and on either side are the square buildings of wood and corrugated iron, where the carcases are turned into merchantable commodities. Behind these again are the barracks for the shore hands and the houses of the staff. As the bell summons the workers to their morning duties, a skiff brings a line from the whale to the shore, it is passed round a steam winch, and in a few minutes the great carcase, weighing anything from thirty to seventy-five tons, is being hauled tail first up the slipway and on to the platform.

Rapidly one of the hands—the "flencher"—runs his knife, a blade about a foot long, shaped like a billhook, sharpened on its convex side, and fitted to a four-foot handle, along the carcase from head to tail, making a series of cuts parallel with one another, and reaching through the coat of blubber, which is thus cut into strips. Then, beginning at the point of the jaw, he cuts a flap, to which is secured a steel wire rope from a winch. This is wound steadily in, the flencher, as the blubber-flap is folded back, slicing between fat and flesh with his knife till the whole strip is clear. One side stripped, the hawser is passed round a pulley at right angles to the carcase, the huge mass is hauled bodily over, so that the other side is uppermost, and the process is completed. The head, huge as it is, is next severed from the body in a few minutes, so expert are the men, and while the flesh is being cut off, the carcase in great masses, the skull, which has already been cleared of the whalebone in the upper jaw, is cut into blocks by a steam-saw.

Meanwhile, the blubber is fed into a set of revolving knives, which cut it up and pass it into an endless chain of buckets, like those of a mud-dredger, for transport to the boiling house, where it is melted down into oil. On the other side of the platform, the flesh and bones are passed by similar buckets to huge vertical cylinders. When these are filled, they are screwed down and steam at high pressure is turned in. Under this cooking process the oil in the flesh, bones, and entrails is extracted, and trickles into receptacles at the foot. Then the cylinders are opened, and the mass of meat, cooked to shreds, and looking like the tangle of a ship's swab, is wheeled in barrow-loads to drying kilns, from which it eventually emerges with all the appearance of peat-litter, brown and dry, with the bones calcined white amongst it. It is then passed into a grinding mill, turned into a dry powder, so like snuff that even a veteran workman has been deluded into accepting a pinch. In this state it contains over 13 per cent. of ammonia, and is sold as whale-guano.

Waste is brought down to the irreducible minimum; all that is left of the whale is the soupy water condensed from the steam in the cooking cylinders. Even this is turned into a big settling reservoir, and skimmed of its grease, which goes to swell the total yield of oil. What is left emptied into the sea, eyed regretfully by the keen manager, who would gladly avail himself of any business-like process that could recover what still remains of oil and convert the effluent into pure water. So rapid are the processes that on one day recently the writer saw seven whales brought by the ships to the buoys between 6 A.M. and noon, and by noon on the following day the whole mass, weighing, at a reasonable estimate, 350 tons, had passed into the vats.

The bulk of the take consists of "finners," or rorqual, which though they may be of great size, are by no means so rich in blubber as the "right" whale of the Greenland seas, while their whale-bone is worth only £40 or £50 a ton, as compared with the £2,500 or £3,000 of their Arctic congener. But now and again a "right" whale is brought in, or a sperm, with its huge head full of pure and precious oil, and then there is great rejoicing.

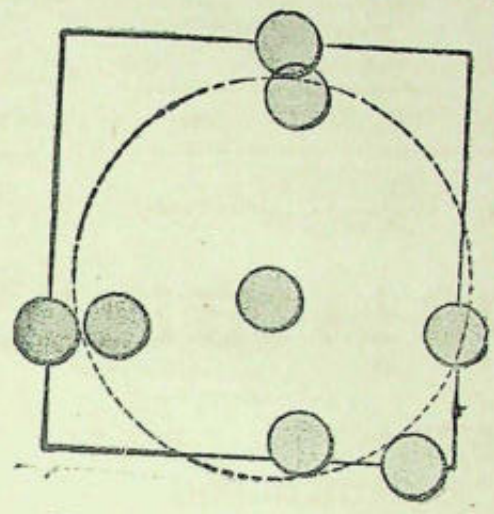
LANG



New No. 2 ·360 Bore

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

VELOCITY 2,150 F. S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of The Field and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD." "A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . A very fine performance for a double rifle very hard to beat."

New ·470 Bore

FOR SPORT IN INDIA.
VELOCITY 2,250 ft. sec.

This cartridge as originally designed did not, in our opinion, come up to a sufficiently high standard, and in consequence our expert visited Messrs. Kynoch's works, and in conjunction with their experts conducted a series of experiments extending over three weeks, ultimately designing the bullets now in use from this popular rifle.

J. L. & S. therefore confidently claim that in collaboration with Messrs. Kynoch they were the first to introduce the ·470, and as evidence submit the following extract from the Field, and illustration of the actual diagram made before the editor of that journal.

"FIELD," 23rd March 1907: ". . . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450, and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

PRELIMINARY NOTICE
THE PESHAWAR-KOHAT HORSE AND CATTLE SHOW FOR THE YEAR 1908-1909.

1. The above Horse and Cattle Show will be held on the 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th November 1908, instead of, as heretofore, in the spring.

2. Attention is invited to the following new features, introduced with the object of popularising the show as a general market.

3. In addition to the usual classes, restricted to bonâ-fide breeders of the Peshawar and Kohat districts, prizes will be awarded in two Open classes, viz. (i) for horses, (ii) for mules irrespective of the district of origin or status of owner, but will be strictly conditional on the winners being sold during the fair.

4. No fee will be charged for entry.

5. In the case of breeder's exhibits from the Peshawar and Kohat districts, fodder will be provided free. In other cases arrangements will be made to supply fodder if desired at fixed rates.

6. It is hoped that both purchasing officers and dealers will avail themselves of the opportunity of visiting the fair.

7. Further particulars will be supplied on application to the Secretary, District Board, Peshawar.

THE STRENUOUS LIFE IN INDIA.

Is It Possible?

A want of energy and whim are characteristic traits of the white population in tropical and semi-tropical countries. It is a well established fact that this unfortunate condition is in a very large measure due to insufficient nourishment; to want of a diet that shall sustain the system under the increased demands upon the powers. Not only is the appetite feeble, but the food supplies also leave much to be desired in both quality and nutritive power as compared with the products of the temperate zone. Hence one often feels at a loss to know how to combat the depression and languor consequent on what may fairly be termed an improper diet supply. It follows therefore that the ideal remedy for physical exhaustion must be one which feeds the hungry tissues with a nutrient that is easy of assimilation, and at the same time enriches the blood and tones up the nervous system. This much-to-be-desired remedy is found in Sanatogen, the wonder-working food tonic.

Sanatogen is a scientific combination of two distinct elements, the one nutritive, the other tonic. The nutritive element is presented by pure milk albumen—the body building food, demanded constantly by the body for the repair of its tissues. Without a due supply of such food-principle, life would not continue.

The tonic element is represented by Phosphorus. The latter is an all-important constituent of the brain and the nervous system. But hitherto it has been impossible to administer this vital principal so that the nervous system could take hold of it. Dr. Andrew Wilson, the well-known medical author, writes:—"Sanatogen has solved the problem of administering Phosphorus in precisely the form in which the tissues can readily seize upon it and appropriate it to their various needs." The medical profession in Great Britain and India entertain the highest opinion of Sanatogen, which is amply evidenced by the fact that over 7,500 physicians have written in praise of it. This and the written attestations of very many distinguished men and women, whose names are well-known in the community, conclusively establish Sanatogen to be the pre-eminent recuperative and restorative.

The Rt. Rev. William Sinclair, D.D., Archdeacon of London, writes:—

THE CHAPTER HOUSE,
ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL,
London, E. C.

"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

Unlike other tonics the use of Sanatogen does not derange digestion but actually assists enfeebled appetite and strengthens the digestive organs. Its tonic effect is marvellous, and if taken regularly for a short period the feeling of being run down will be replaced by brightness, mental alertness, and healthy vigour. It differs also from other tonics in that its effects are permanent.

Mr. C. B. Fry, the celebrated cricketer, writes:—

GLENBOURNE MANOR,
WEST END, HANTS.

"Sanatogen is an excellent tonic food in training, specially valuable as a tonic during the periods of nervous exhaustion commonly called staleness, to which men who undergo severe training are liable. I have recommended it to many of my friends."

C. B. Fry.

There is no doubt that Sanatogen is the ideal food for invalids and convalescents. It can be borne by the weakest stomach when all other food is rejected. It is powerfully effective in all those cases where through illness, or overwork, or climatic conditions, the system has become debilitated. For the nervous and the dyspeptic, Sanatogen restores, naturally, sound digestion, healthy vigour, and the elasticity of well-being.

Sanatogen, which is a fine white powder, is packed in bottles, and can be obtained from all chemists.

An engrossing booklet containing matter of vital importance to well-being in the Tropics has recently been issued. It is from the pen of a physician long resident in India and is entitled "How to keep well in India." It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well. A copy can be obtained free of charge from Messrs. Smith Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, from whom also Sanatogen can be purchased.

THE GREAT EASTERN REMEDY.

The PLAGUE of INDIA is SKIN AFFECTIONS, such as Herpes, Scabies, Eczema, Scurvy, Rupia, Pustular Eruptions, Acne, Ringworm, Lichen, Scaldhead, Scaly Eruptions, Lepra, Elephantiasis, Freckles, Syphilitic Eruptions, &c., Boils, Blanes, Pimples, Blotches, Foul Ulcers, Indolent Tumours, Cancerous Tumours, &c., &c.; for these Dr. E. J. LAZARUS'S ESSENCE OF NEEM is the remedy.

The Baids and Hakeems of Hindustan have employed the MELIA AZADIRACHTA for very many centuries in the above diseases, and astonished the world by the wonderful cures they effected, but it was left for Dr. E. J. LAZARUS to make a preparation containing all the valuable therapeutic properties of the tree, in a PLEASANT, POTABLE and EFFICACIOUS FORM. We have a host of unscrupulous imitators [as indubitable proof of the value and efficacy of the above preparations] against whom we beg to caution our friends.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From PANDIT KOILAS NATH SUKUL, Physician to H. H. Maharaja of Bulrampore:—"Anything that can be said in praise of your newly-invented 'Essence of Neem' is insufficient to describe its merit as a Purifier of Human Blood. I have much pleasure to let you know, that within the short space of the past six months I have given it ten different trials in some of the most obstinate skin diseases, three of which were advanced cases of Indian Leprosy, and your Essence has in all of them effected most admirable cures, the like of which I have never noticed during my practice of last twelve months."

From MRS. A. R. B., Allahabad:—"Please send me by return post six bottles more of your invaluable 'Essence of Neem'; it is doing me more good than all the Doctors have done for me."

From MR. B. L. D. A.:—"I am happy to say that the 'Neem' is doing a great deal of good to the patient and I think he will ask me to write in a day or two for some more."

BY

E. B. HAVELL, A.R.C.A.,

Principal of the School of Art and Keeper of the Government Art Gallery, Calcutta. Fellow of the Calcutta University; Author of "Benares, the Sacred City," "A Handbook of Agra and the Taj," etc.

In this book Mr. Havell gives the results of many years' study of Indian Fine Art for which he has had exceptional opportunities as Principal of the Government School of Art, and Keeper of the Art Gallery in Calcutta. He deals with the subject from the artistic, not the archæological, standpoint. Mr. Murray believes that this book will rank as a standard authority on Indian Fine Art, and take the same place in this subject as Fergusson's History (of which he is about to publish a revised Edition) does in Architecture.

THE INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES.

BY

E. C. STUART BAKER, F.Z.S., M.B.O.U.

Since Messrs. Hume and Marshall published their work on the "Game Birds of India" (1879-80), now, and long since, out of print, and which, when a copy is offered for sale realizes a considerable advance on the published price, no work has appeared on the Indian Ducks with coloured plates.

The Bombay Natural History Society are now preparing and reprinting Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's articles on this attractive group of birds, which have appeared from time to time during the past ten years in their Journal.

The book will form a handsome volume of over 300 pages of text, the same having been revised throughout by the Author, and will contain all the available information up to the time of going to press.

The thirty Coloured Plates will be reproduced by chromolithography, under the supervision of the well-known bird-artist, Mr. Henrik Gronvold.

The binding of the book will be in half-morocco, gilt top, with the plates guarded, and will form a very desirable addition to the library of the naturalist or sportsman.

The edition will be limited to 1,100 copies.

THE TURF.

GATWICK.

Last Friday visitors to Gatwick were treated to an afternoon of fervid sunshine and strenuous storms that would make April's fitful efforts a mere bagatelle, and the celebrated South Down sea fret played a minor part between the acts, in a drenching afternoon. The course was in capital order, and local stables were so well represented as to give plenty of material for speculation; while the attendance was well up to the average for this time of year. Details:—

DERBY.

Again on Tuesday we were lucky in the weather, a stormy morning settling into fair and then fine in time to send a big crowd of holiday makers to swell a capital attendance. The members' stand was practically deserted, though a fairly goodly muster of local patrons redeemed the club stands from loneliness, but the sport-loving British public formed the bulk of the attendance which assisted at a capital afternoon's racing, in which sunshine played a pleasant part. Though during the early morning on Wednesday the sun came out and a brisk breeze suggested improved weather, before racing began the mist had settled over the valley of the Derwent, and rain of the accentuated Scotch mist sort caused a run on umbrellas and great coats, and made the shelter of the stands welcome. At this time of year we do not expect such big attendances as in the spring and late autumn, so many of the principal supporters being away, and the member's stand was by no means crowded. On the other hand, Tattersall's and the further enclosures were well patronished while the country side sent a strong complement to help swell the muster. After all the rain the going was not so bad as might have been expected. Details :—

CYCLING.

THE N.C.U. CHAMPIONSHIPS.—Three events were decided at the Stadium last Saturday in very unpleasant weather. Entries were decidedly good and the racing first class. Details of the finals are appended:—

ONE MILE.

W. Morisetti, Paddington C.C. ... 1
C. Brooks, Polytechnic C.C. 2
H. C. Bouffler, Polytechnic C.C. 3
J. Matthews, Marlborough C.C. 4
L. Meredith, Paddington C.C. 5

At the bell Morisetti looked in a bad position but half-way round the field opened out, and then the Italian's wonderful burst of speed left the others, and he won by a good three lengths; others close up. Time—2mins. 43⅕secs.

WINNERS TO DATE.

1891 P. W. Scheltema Beduin	1900 A. L. Reed
1892 U. L. Lambley	1901 A. L. Reed
1893 P. W. Brown	1902 A. L. Reed
1894 T. Osborn	1903 A. S. Ingram
1895 A. J. Watson	1904 H. D. Buck
1896 W. H. Bardsley	1905 V. B. Casey
1897 A. S. Ingram	1906 H. D. Buck
1898 E. J. Callaghan	1907 Time limit exceeded.
1899 F. Crowley	1908 W. Morisetti

TWO MILES TANDEM.

J. Matthews, Marlborough C.C., and L. Meredith, Paddington C.C. 1
F. G. Hamlin and H. T. Johnson, Putney A.C. (holders) 2
W. Lower and B. E. Ryman, Putney A.C. 3
E. C. Piercey, Polytechnic C.C., and C. McKoig, Putney A.C. 4

Matthews and Meredith went away with the lead, with the holders following. At 1¼ miles Lower and Ryman shot to the front. Matthews and partner were last at the bell, but drew up to the holders when the latter went all out for the honours. They held their own for a space, but were beaten at the beginning of the straight, and Matthews and Meredith won by two lengths; one length. Time—5mins. 8secs.

WINNERS TO DATE.

1900 A. S. Ingram and R. Janson	1905 A. E. Wills and S. F. Wills
1901 H. S Chambers and F. G. Growley	1906 C. V. Clarke and W. C. Le Grys
1902 A. L. Reed and H. D. Buck	1907 F. G. Hamlin and H. T. Johnson
1903 A. S. Ingram and R. Janson	1908 J. Matthews and L. Meredith
1904 A. E. Wills and S. F. Wills

TEN MILES CHAMPIONSHIP.

Time standard—22mins. 30secs.; time limit—30mins.

W. H. T. Isaacs, Putney A.C. 1
T. Flack, Essex Wheelers 2
F. G. Hamlin, Putney A.C. 3
J. Matthews, Marlborough C.C. 4

Also rode:—C. Brooks, Polytechnic C.C. (holder); H. T. Johnson, Putney A.C; C.A. Denny, Polytechnic C.C.; H. C. Bouffler, Polytechnic C.C.; B. E. Ryman, Putney A.C.; C Snell, Essex Wheelers; E. C. Piercey, Polytechnic C.C.; H. Wilson, Putney A.C.; R. C. Kebbell, Elite C.C.; M. Warren, Putney A.C.; W. Lower, Putney A.C.; W. J. Bailey, Polytechnic C.C.; S. F. Bailey, Polytechnic C.C.; W. Morisetti, Paddington C.C.; G. C. Anderson, Memorial R.C., E. F. Ryan, Polytechnic C.C. and G. F. Summers, Paddington C.C.

With half-lap prizes offered, Denny made the pace very warm. A regrettable accident occurred quite early in the race, S. F. Bailey and G. Summers falling. Bailey was able to remount and catch up with the leaders, but Summers was severely damaged. A little further on W. J. Bailey punctured. Denny was leading at the half-distance, covered in 12mins. 57⅕secs., but then Kebbell and Ryan acted as pioneers up to the completion of the eighth mile. Four laps from the finish Denny stole a march on the rest, and opened up a considerable gap. At the bell it seemed improbable that he would be caught, but with Johnson, Morisetti and Company crowding on great pace, he was relegated to the background round the final bend. At this point, however, Morisetti, Johnson, and Matthews were done with, and Isaacs shot out to win by one and a half lengths; inches. Time—25mins.25⅕secs. Denny won the first lap prize, and Kebbell the second.

ALL-IRELAND OPEN CUP.—Final. The Irish season finished on Nine Acres, Phœnix Park, on Saturday, with the decision of the final tie in the open cup competition, which last year was so cleverly won by Rugby. The holders were beaten in the semi-final on Wednesday by Court de Madre's team, The Tigers, and that well-balanced combination met the Old Cantabs—the holders of Champion Cup honours—in the final stage of the big event. Great interest was taken in the tie, and the throw in was delayed in order to give visitors to the races the opportunity of watching the match, but greatly to the disappointment of the crowd the Tigers never made any show against their smart opponents, Mr. Buckmaster and his fellow forwards getting the lead of 2 goals in the first half, and while not exerting themselves, added 3 goals in the later stages of the game. Mr. Bell and his captain early hit 2 goals, and the remaining point was hit by Mr. Freake. The feat of winning the Champion and the All-Ireland Cups, as well as the chief competitions at the Warwickshire, Rugby, and Cirencester tournaments, in the same season, stamps Mr. Walter Buckmaster's combination as being one of the finest ever put on the field. The sides on Saturday were:—

OLD CANTABS.—Mr. Isaac Bell, Mr. F. M. Freake, Mr. W. W. S. Buckmaster, and Lord Wodehouse.

THE TIGERS.—Count de Madre, Mr. L. St. Cheape, Mr. F. A. Gill, and Captain Mathew Lannowe.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 12th September.—Toda Coffee Shop, 12 noon. It was a nice cloudy day and for a time the sun was fairly strong. We started by drawing Toda Coffee Shop Shola and on down the valley towards Lord Roberts' Shola just short of which the first whip viewed a jack. Hounds picked up his line and were almost on top of him as he headed for the ghauts, overlooking Sholar village. But much to our surprise, instead of making his escape down there, he swung back to the left touching Kodamal mund and got to ground in a water course, out of which he promptly bolted as soon as the terrier was put in, but only to get to ground in another earth a short distance off. Again he was bolted by Kitty, after a good deal of excavating had been done; his last sprint was not far as hounds killed him in a small shola about half a mile further on and he was almost eaten up before the master or whips could get to them. Ampthill Wood was next drawn, without result. A jack was viewed to the east of Kengoda Shola, just beyond the large swamps. Taking a lefthanded circle through Kengoda Shola, in which he dwelt for a time, he ran through Toda Coffee Shop Shola, then on by Paragon and Warwick into Malkod Shola, when he went to ground, and it is believed hounds killed him in the earth. Hounds then proceeded to draw towards home by Bracken, past the lower end of Gibbson to Lawley's Course. Near Sandy Nullah Stream Captain Duff viewed a brace of jack, which led hounds at a tremendous pace up the ravine to Rawlin's Nullah and then to the right into Bluegums. Out at the bottom and up into Staircase Shola, coming out to the right and running through Herbert Plantation and over the Pykara Road and down the Dartmore Vale to Barber's Shop without a check and the pace a cracker. At Barber's Shop there was a slight check before they took up the line again along the Sholar Road and dived down to the right of Beadnell's into the Waterfall Valley where it is supposed he either went to ground or was killed as hounds were heard having a worry. The jungle is so dense and thick in this Shola, that it was quite impossible to get to hounds though several attempts were made by the Master. It was quite dark by the time we started for home.

Monday, 14th September.—Ree's Corner at 7 A.M. It was a damp raw morning with a thick white mist. Just before the Master arrived a brace of jack had been viewed near Dalrymaid, but hounds were unable to find them in this covert, the jack no doubt, having moved off into Woodstock so we drew on by Denmark to Ursula and Porcupine; in the latter hounds touched a stale line but were unable to make much of it. A little to the right of Malkavai Village they picked up a line and carried it over the stream as if for Kuruthuguli Village, but swung to the right along some cultivated fields and ran up the ravine into Leeds Shola, from there into Monkey and on into Bakie, coming out at the head of the swamp they turned sharp back into Dudley where they lost him. Jackal was next drawn but owing to the fog being rather thick and the Nunjanad fairly clear, the Master took the pack down the Valley, they spoke to a line below Dharma Tope and presently the jack was viewed just in front of them, they however lost him in some thick jungle in a nullah, where he probably went to ground, though no earth could be found. Hounds moved on down to the Avalanche Bridle Path when a jack was viewed, the pack getting away on very good terms with him, raced him up the slope to below Malkavai Village, keeping round to the right touching Porcupine, and on to Ursula where a fresh jack jumped up causing a division of the pack, four couple hunting the original jack into nattery Shola and the main body running back into Porcupine and losing their jack. By this time scent, which was never good, gave out altogether.

Tuesday, 15th September.—Avalanche Finger Post 12 noon. Drew down through Finger Post Shola and across the bog this side of Hookham Snivey a jack was viewed on the hillside, as hounds were being taken over, they picked up another line and dashed off at a great pace up above Nunjanad Village to Sambur Shola, out of it, and up Little Dangar Ride and back, just above the way they had come and ran him to ground under a clump of rocks almost at the spot from where they started. The terriers were put in, but were unable to make him bolt, so he had to be left. We moved on through Hookham Snivey to the Bridle Path and round Gaftree Hill, a brace of jack was viewed below the Shola, they led hounds up the bed of a stream towards Hookham Snivey, the pack dividing but running parallel for some distance and then joining up again and driving the selected jack through the Shola which lies between Kethothoral Stream and Hookham Snivey, and coming out at the top with a great cry and close behind the jack, they climbed the ridge below Vane's Copse, and raced down the far side with the jack in view all the time, and rose the steep hill opposite Pugpits, round which they drove him into Jerusalam Shola where they did some very pretty hunting, following very twist and turn and almost getting him once or twice, after about half an hour of this, they ran him to a standstill near the stream at the bottom and killed him.

POONA OPEN TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

GRASSHOPPERS vs. POONA HORSE.—The final in the tournament for the handsome challenge cup presented by H.H. Maharajah General Sir Partab Singh of Idar was played between the above teams on the 11th instant, a splendid game ending in favour of the Grasshoppers by 5 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Grasshoppers attacked at the start and Bingham opened the scoring. Lucas was kept busy for a spell and then the Grasshoppers broke through again and Wood hit a goal.

Second Chukker.—Pressure by the Grasshoppers was relieved and then the Poona Horse attacked. A penalty hit for a foul gave them an opportunity of scoring but they failed and the ball returning to their territory the Maharajah put through.

Third Chukker.—Fast and level play. Grimshaw ran the ball down towards the close and Hildebrand sent it between the flags.

Fourth Chukker.—Play was again very level and fast. The Poona Horse attacked but Wood relieved and the ball being taken down the field was put through by the Maharajah from a scrimmage in front of the Poona Horse goal.

Fifth Chukker.—A shot by Wood was cleverly saved by Hildebrand and play was very even in midfield and there was no score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Poona Horse were kept on the defensive. Offside against the Grasshoppers relieved the pressure but they soon returned to the attack. Lucas got the ball away and an unsuccessful shot at the Grasshoppers' goal followed. Then Wood got away and shot the final goal. Score: Grasshoppers, 5 goals; Poona Horse, 1 goal.

General Alderson made a congratulatory speech and Mrs Alderson handed the cup to the winners.

CRICKET IN BOMBAY.

PRESIDENCY vs. PARSEES.—The Hindus having drawn a bye, the Presidency, fresh from a bad licking in Poona, met the Parsees on Thursday and following days last week in connection with the newly-arranged tringular matches. Except for Commander Vines taking the place of Cheetham, who was unable to turn up, the former had the same team out. After his marvellous display with the ball in Poona, it was the worst of luck for the Parsees that Warden being down with fever was prevented from playing, especially as the wicket was just suited to him; Daruwalla, the stone waller, was included. It amuses one to hear the local scribes comparing the Gym. Skipper to the famous Australian hitter Bonnor; he has given some good displays of slogging in local matches, but if he had done so, against the tricky Parsee bowling it would have surprised me.

One of the biggest showers of rain we have had during the Monsoon fell on Wednesday night, but thanks to the Gym. ground drying fast a start was practicable by one on a wicket that promised to wear very badly. A bit of luck met the Presidency in winning the toss when everything pointed to a pitch more like a ploughed field for the second innings.

Greig and Heath faced the bowling and the former hitting K. B. Mistry for a couple of fours everything went well till in hitting K. M. Mistry he was brilliantly caught one handed by the bowler who had to jump to reach it. Airy followed and things went on well, though Vatcha taking over from the former was kicking very dangerously and after each had been lucky in misshits falling safe the new-comer was badly let off by K M. Mistry in the slips. Greig brought off a couple of very nice pulls off the same bowler, but in trying to do the same Airy was caught at square leg. From 21 they had taken the score to 54. After tiffin Cooper, Vines and Greig, with one of K. P. Mistry's slow ones, left soon and the score stood at 73 for five. With things looking bad, Townend, persuaded with some difficulty to play after his 'specs" in Poona and Rutter came together and a complete change came over the game. Both began rather stickily, but once they got set they seemed to quite master the bowling. Rutter setting himself to keep his end up. Townend gave a really delightful display; he has a taking style and when set gives the trundlers a bad time. After a most useful innings of 21 Rutter left through a pretty catch in the slips, it being most difficult to keep the ball down. The pair had added 66 and the score stood at 139. It was Townend who hoisted the century with a magnificent drive which landed on the roof of the second Gymkhana verandah; in the same over he hit two fours and a two, making 16. He was next to leave with 69 and met with the hearty applause he well deserved having hit two sixes and six fours being caught in the long field off a miss-hit. The rest were presumably told to hit with a view to getting rid of a Parsee or two before drawing stumps. Turner's was a slashing 16, both he and Sprott being stumped, and a few swipes to the ropes by the last pair brought the score to 196, a very fine one considering the wickets. The Parsee's skipper had varied his bowling well, but after Greig had taken the early sting out of it Townend quite demoralised them. They got no end of work on, all but Meherhomji, right handed, pitching on the off stump and breaking away, but the batsmen were quite up to them and left dangerous ones religiously alone. Breaking a foot and kicking up badly Vatcha was the most successful with 5 for 57.

During the ten minutes or so that remained the Parsees lost Daruwalla and Kapadia, the former a good man.

Though dry, the wicket was in a very worn state on Friday, when the Parsees resumed and the Presidency had matters all their own way with their two fast bowlers, Milne and Joy. The twenty they had put on overnight was more useful than might have been supposed as with their cracks they could only add 32, being all out for 52, faced with a deficit of 144, practically fatal on such a wicket. To go into the details of such an innings is superfluous, it was merely a procession and a triumph for Joy and Milne, who keeping a deadly length disposed of them in forty-five minutes. The former took 5 for 29 and the latter 5 for 21.

At 12-25 the Presidency opened their second venture with Greig and Airy and mainly through Greig 20 went up, though both were very cautious and Madon put down four consecutive maidens. Here Airy left smartly held by Mulla behind the sticks and was followed by Turner. He and Greig soon got set and by the tiffin hour after 95 minutes' play 71 was up for one wicket. During the interval it drizzled and after going out for an over they came in again and did not resume till four. Some really delightful cricket was now seen, both making little of the bowling, Greig in particular being delightful with his pet stroke past point, timing it to perfection. When Turner opened out he was inclined to hit them up a bit and just as the century was passed Madon dropped a sitter off him. This was the only actual chance either gave and when at 4-35 rain came down so hard that the game had to be eventually abandoned the score stood at 132 for 1 with Greig not out 83 and Turner 42. This means the Presidency had a lead of 276 and seemed assured of a win.

Resuming on Saturday, the interruption in their innings appeared to have affected neither bat and both Greig and Turner continued to play a confident game, risked much with success. Both treated the Parsee bowlers with scant respect. At 12-10, thirty-five minutes after the start Greig was caught off Vatcha at mid-on by Madon, when his score was 115. Marred though it was by several mistakes or chances, Greig's century will live in the history of the triangular contest. It comprised of twelve 4's, eight 3's, seven doubles and the rest singles. Vines replaced Greig but was soon clean bowled by Mistry. Turner being held off Vatcha by Daruwalla for 54, Townend and Heath were now working with the willow but the former was stumped off Vatcha (200—5—7). At this stage the Presidency innings were declared closed.

With 314 runs to the bad, the Parsees began their second venture at 12-45 and Joy's first ball a—full yorker—clean bowled Daruwalla. Mistry and Meherhomji then made a stand, but a catch by Vines off Joy dismissed the Parsee skipper when the score was only 11. Dinshaw partnered Meherhomji and playing steadily, at lunch time they brought the score to 67, both not out with 14 and 42 respectively. On coming to the field again 2-40 P M. both the batsmen appeared thoroughly set, but at 54, (the sides total 85), Meherhomji was smartly held by Greig off Milne. Dinshaw was shortly afterwards dismissed for 24. The Parsees however, continued to make a stand and by twos and threes raised their score to 168, the chief other contributors being Mulla (21), Masani (17. Towards the end, rain fell in drizzles. Presidency thus won by the handsome margin of 176 runs.

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

SECOND ROUND.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS vs. BLACK WATCH.—Played on the 16th instant. The Black Watch were first to attack, but the Fusiliers relieved and rushing down scored a goal. Even play followed till the Black Watch again pressed and a shot was sent in. It hit the bar rebounded into play, the centre forward banging it into the net. With a goal each both teams played hard, but there was no further scoring during the first half. On crossing over the Highlanders got away and put the ball through, but the point was disallowed for off-side. Both teams attacked in turn ; the Black Watch forcing several corners and having rather the better of the exchanges. Time arrived with the score one all. An extra ten minutes each way was agreed upon and during this period the Black Watch put on another goal and won the match by two goals to one.

CAMERONIANS vs. ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.—The cup holders met the Royal Irish Rifles on the 16th instant, a good game ending in a win for the latter by a goal to nil. Play was very level in the first half : both goals were visited in turn and both teams obtained corners, none of which were improved upon and the interval arrived with no score. On resuming, the Rifles attacked but lost opportunities of scoring and the game was transferred to their territory, where the Cameronians forced a corner. This proved abortive and the Irishmen returned to the attack. They secured a couple of corners which were fruitless, but they kept up the pressure and at length Kane scored. The Cameronians made great efforts to equalise but were unsuccessful, the Irish Rifles winning as stated.

SIMLA VOLUNTEERS vs. ROYAL SUSSEX.—Played on the 17th instant. The Sussex went away at the start, but were pulled up, and the Volunteers getting possession rushed down and forced two corners. They very nearly scored off the second of these. Thereafter the game was very even and half time arrived without score. On resuming the Volunteers' goal-keeper was called upon to save, but he was not to be beaten and disposed of several shots in masterly fashion. Then the Volunteers attacked, but could not score and time was called with a blank sheet. Extra time was played and McQain put the Volunteers ahead by scoring from a centre by Rogers. This was the only goal of the match, the victory thus going to the Volunteers.

SIRHIND MOUNTAIN ARTILLERY vs. GLOSTERS.—These teams met on the 17th instant, the Gunners winning by three goals to one. They drew first blood shortly after the start. The Glosters attacked and almost equalised from a corner. The Gunners again got away shortly after and scored another goal. The Glosters had the best of the game till the interval but could not score ; however, on resuming they kept up the attack and their right half put through. The Glosters pressed again and a bombardment of the Artillery goal followed, but the shots were all stopped and the Gunners at length got the ball and rushing down scored their third goal shortly before time.

BISHOP COTTON'S SCHOOL vs. 15TH HUSSARS.—This game on the 18th instant ended in favour of the Hussars by five goals to two. Both teams missed a chance at the start and then the School got away and Bewitt opened the scoring, Grindale adding another shortly after. The Hussars pressed, but their shooting was poor. At length they found the net and the shooting improved, for they added three more goals to their score before the interval. In spite of great efforts in the second half the boys were unable to get through and the Hussars scoring another goal from a penalty kick for hands ran out winners.

QUEEN'S REGT. vs. SHROPSHIRE L. I.—Played on the 18th instant. The game in the first half was very level, chances were lost by both sides and there was no score when half time arrived. On crossing over the Shropshires attacked and a rush down resulted in Hockenhull putting them ahead. The Queens next pressed and a shot at goal narrowly missed, the ball striking the bar. Thereafter the Shropshires attacked and put on a goal. Nothing more was scored and the Shropshire L. I. thus won by two goals to nil.

DURHAM L. I. vs. 12TH LANCERS.—This game on the 19th instant was very level during the first half. Both teams attacked in turn till the Durhams obtained a corner. This was not improved on, but they kept up the attack and eventually put the ball through. On changing ends the Lancers attacked and secured a number of corners, these were all fruitless, but not long after Barker got away and equalised. Time arrived with the score one all, but the Durhams found the net at the close of a hotly contested extra period and won the match by two goals to one.

LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS vs 17TH LANCERS.—Played on the 19th instant. The Lancers attacked at the start, but the Fusiliers soon got the ball. They obtained an abortive corner and shortly after Wood scored. Even play followed till the Fusiliers returned to the attack and followed up two unproductive corners by a goal. In the second half the Lancers showed up for a while and forced a corner. This was not improved upon and once more the Fusiliers pressed till hands against them relieved the pressure. The Lancers made great efforts to score, but the Fusiliers' defence was sound and when time was called they were victorious by two goals to nil.

THIRD ROUND.

BLACK WATCH vs. ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.—These teams met on the 21st instant. A strenuous game ended in a pointless draw. Extra time was played, but there was still no score. The game was replayed on Tuesday, when the Rifles won by a goal to nil. The first half was pointless : the Black Watch obtained three corners, but could not improve upon them. On changing ends the Black Watch again attacked and the Irish custodian saved at the expense of a corner. Then the Rifles got away and their centre forward scored the only goal of the match. Thereafter play was fast and furious, but neither side gained any advantage and the game ended as stated.

SIMLA VOLUNTEERS vs. SIRHIND MOUNTAIN ARTILLERY.—Played on the 21st instant. The Volunteers attacked at the start and put in a couple of shots which were saved. Then the Artillery got away and Holmes scored with a hot shot. Each team pressed in turn, a couple of unproductive corners to the Volunteers being the chief events till the interval. The Volunteers attacked hotly on resuming and forced a corner. This was not improved upon and the game was again taken to their end, where the Gunners sent in several shots, Holmes eventually adding a second goal. The Volunteers tried hard to score but without success, the final score reading : Artillery two goals, Volunteers nil.

SHROPSHIRE L.I. vs. 15TH HUSSARS.—Played on the 22nd instant. The Shropshires pressed at the start, forced a corner and nearly scored. Then the Hussars attacked, but were kept out and the Shropshires resumed the offensive, having the best of the game to the interval when there was no score. On resuming, the Shropshires continued to press and after one unsuccessful shot scored a goal. The Hussars tried hard to equalise but without success and the Shropshires again invaded their opponents' territory, a second goal was followed by two unproductive corners. They kept up the pressure and placed another goal to their credit before the game closed. Final score: Shropshire L.I. three goals, 15th Hussars nil.

DURHAM L. I. vs. LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS.—A well contested game between these teams was witnessed on the 22nd instant. Up and down play at the start; the Fusiliers obtained a corner, but this was cleared and the Durhams rushing down put the ball through. The Lancashires made great efforts to get on terms, but the interval arrived with the Durhams still leading. Crossing over play was very fast. Each team attacked, but failed to take advantage of openings. At length the Fusiliers equalised and had the best of the closing stages of the game. They forced a corner from which another goal was scored and thus ran out victorious by two goals to one.

CALCUTTA RUGBY CUP TOURNAMENT.

SEMI FINALS.

WEST RIDINGS vs. H.L.I.—A well contested and interesting game between these teams on the Calcutta ground on the 16th instant resulted in a win for the West Ridings by a try to nil. They pressed from the start and Morris got away and scored a try which Wilson failed to convert. The West Ridings continued to attack during the major part of the first half but the H.L.I. defence was impregnable and there was no further scoring. On changing ends the Dum-Dum team showed improved form and had quite as much of the game as their opponents. Both teams made desperate efforts but were unable to score, the Dukes winning as stated by a try to nil. Teams:—

WEST RIDINGS.—Pte. Crompton, back; Pte. Chapman, Lce.-Corpl. Ryan, Pte. Johnstone, and Pte. Newton, three-quarters; Lce.-Corpl. Wilson (Captain) and Pte. Morris, half-backs; Sergt. MacCormac, Lce.-Corpl. Haigh, Lce.-Corpl. Warmald, Ptes. Stokes, Waddington, Turner, Stanbury and Widdop, forwards.

H.L.I.—Tait, back; Duncan, Lieutenant Lilburn (Captain), Lieutenant Alston, and Clarke, three-quarters; Lieutenant Campell and Reid, half-backs; Keith, Henderson, McGlore, Simms, Cuthbert, Duncan, Shrubshell, and Pesterson, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. C. Reid.

GLOSTERS vs. KING'S OWN.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday last. Judging by the form they displayed against Madras the King's Own were expected to beat the Lahore team but the Glosters had out their best fifteen and having the best of the exchanges qualified for the final by 8 points to nil. Within five minutes of the start Murray got possession near the King's Own line and transferring to Bartlett the latter got over with the first try. Rogers' attempt at goal fell short. Offside against the Glosters brought temporary relief to the King's Own but the ball was not long in returning to their territory and a good passing run between Millwater, Murray and Parnell ended in the last named grounding the ball behind the post Rogers adding the extra points. The King's Own were kept mainly on the defensive again during the second half but they managed to keep the Glosters out. Barnett, Ashworth, Allen, Lieutenant Wigley and Lieutenant Uzielli got away occasionally but were tackled before they would get through. There was no further scoring the Glosters winning by a goal and a try to nil. Teams:—

GLOSTERS.—Russell, back; Smith, Rogers, Lieutenant Parnell, and Bartlett, three-quarters; Murray and Millwater, half-backs; Hopcroft, Travell, Wilson, Baylis, Ford, Strong, Robins, and Lovell, forwards.

KING'S OWN.—Scully, back; Basanett, Ashworth, Lieutenant Uzielli and Price, three-quarters; Allen and Lieutenant Wigley, half-backs; Fowler, Howard, Sigworth, Sutherland, Briddock, Barnett, Lieutenants Blacket and Scott (Captain) forwards.

Referee:—Lieutenant Bocquet.

FINAL.

WEST RIDINGS vs. GLOSTERS.—Last year's duel in the final of the Rugby Cup Tournament was fought again when the above teams met last Saturday, victory once more going to the West Ridings. The elements were unfavourable and a heavy downpour just before the game and another while it was in progress spoiled the ground, nevertheless an interesting and well contested game was witnessed. The Ridings pressed immediately on starting and the Glosters were kept busy defending, Russell and Rogers did good work and some tall kicking was witnessed. At length the Ridings threes got away and Morris tried a drop at goal but the ball went wide. Even exchanges followed and then the rain came down and after a series of scrums near the Gloster's line Johnstone got over, Chapman failed to majorise and the Dukes led at the interval by a try to nil. On resuming the Glosters assumed the offensive making desperate efforts to draw level. A free to the Lahore team in the Ridings' "25" gave them an opportunity but the kick was unsuccessful and Morris relieved with a good kick. Play was then transferred to the other end where it remained to the end. Offside against Murray gave the Dukes a free kick but Ryan's effort was charged down. The Ridings continued to press and at length Stokes got over with the second try Chapman failed with the place and shortly after "no side" was called leaving the West Ridings winners by 2 tries (6 points) to nil. Mrs. G. B. Paris gave away the cup at the conclusion of the game. Teams:—

WEST RIDINGS.—Crompton, back; Johnstone, Ryan, Chapman, and Newton, three-quarters; Wilson (Captain) and Morris, half-backs; McCormac, Webster, Haigh, Stokes, Chapman, Waddington, Stanbury and Turner, forwards.

RUGBY FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

ENGLAND vs. SCOTLAND.—The annual match was played on the Calcutta ground last Tuesday and ended in favour of the representatives of the Rose. The game was keenly contested throughout. Holley had to retire shortly after the interval with a dislocated shoulder and Manders was permited to fill the vacancy. Scotland pressed at the start and after Oliver had relieved by good punting the Scotch threes came away and Alston scored the first try. Burnett adding the extra point. Even play followed and just before the interval Candler got over but the try was not improved upon. On resuming hostilities the English three-quarter line put in a good bout of passing and Slater crossed the line, Longbottom kicking a goal. England continued to press and Manders got over twice adding the extra points to the second try himself. Scotland played hard and Walker, Campbell and Reid-Kay did good work. Some pretty passing led up to a try scored by Reid-Kay, Burnett converting. Nothing further was scored, an interesting game ending in a win for England by two goals and two tries (16 points) to two goals. Teams:—

ENGLAND.—Oliver (C.F.C.), Longbottom (C.F.C.), Bocquet (U.S.), Siddons (C.F.C.) and Manders (C.F.C.); Candler (C. F.C.) and Slater (U.S. Minet (Rangers) Studd, Birch, Earp, and Claydon (C.F.C.); Bull (U. S.) and Blacket (K O.).

SCOTLAND.—Carr (U.S.), Barnett (C.F.C.), Reid-Kay (C.F.C.), Alston (H.L.I.) and Walker (Dals.); Hemmingway (C.F.C.) and Campbell (H.L.I.); McLeod (C.F.C.), Heilgers (C.F.C.), Bryce (C.F.C.), Cadell (Customs) Cunningham (U.S.), Grahamslaw, and Smith (Dals.).

Referee :—Mr. C. Reid.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ONE of the best tournaments ever held in Calcutta for the Rugby Union Challenge Cup came to an end on Saturday, when the West Ridings beat the Glosters by 2 tries to nil. Everything, bar the weather, has been in perfect tune, and only those who have had the experience know the amount of work such a tournament entails, and Mr. Weatherhead and those who helped him are to be warmly congratulated on the perfect arrangements made both for teams and individuals.

IT has been a most excellent week of footer, and there is no doubt that the best side entered won the cup. The West Ridings record reads: 1 goal, 1 drop goal, 1 penalty goal and 5 tries scored whilst 1 goal 1 try was scored against them or 27 points to 8 points. Their wins were :—

United Services	...	...	...	13 pts.	to 8
Calcutta	...	...	...	5 "	" 3
H.L.I.	...	...	...	3 "	" 0
Glosters	...	...	...	5 "	" 0

With the exception of their first match their wins have been narrow as far as points go, but the last three matches were all played on very soft grounds which are not conducive to scoring. They deserved every win, and have reason to feel proud of their good displays, and their adaptability to circumstances.

This year's victory gives them the honour of winning the Calcutta Cup for three years in succession, no mean feat. The Glosters deserve the highest praise also for having on two occasions been the runners up. The keenness of this good regiment in giving their men the opportunity of playing in both League and challenge cup contests is very highly appreciated by every lover of Rugby in Calcutta. The Glosters have had little luck and Mr. Tweedie's injury early on was a nasty blow to the side. Mr. Parnell has, however, done excellent work both as player and skipper, and he and Mr. Tweedie will both be heartily welcomed back to Calcutta.

OF the other teams the H.L.I. did very well in running the Ridings to a solitary try. I shall be surprised if the H.L.I. don't win the Calcutta cup at no distant year. Someone has called them the "coming side," but judging from their performance previously mentioned they seem to have come. They indeed are worthy of every praise. The King's Own did very well and their squashing of Madras to the tune of 5 tries stamps them as a more than useful team. The Glosters were just too good for them, and won by 1 goal 1 try.

THE Connaught Rangers, the King's Dragoon Guards, and Behar had all the worst of the luck in the matter of grounds, and each only got one chance.

Dalhousie and Rangers put up good fights, but lost in the first rounds to Calcutta and Glosters, whilst St. Xavier's after drawing with the H.L.I. did not show good Sportsman Sship in the second match, and unfortunately refused to play on after half time, the score against them then being 11 points.

I HAVE referred to all the teams excepting the U.S. and C.F.C. The former made a good show against the Cup winners, and Calcutta drew the very best out of the Ridings. Theirs was a great game—one of the best that the Calcutta ground has ever seen, and there was not much in it either way, but the West Ridings were the better side on the day and were good enough to win.

WITH regard to the final there is not very much to say. The game was a very sporting match fought out in the fairest of ways, and very well ordered by Mr. Martelli. The contest was a very even one, and the play varied from the Glosters' line to the Ridings' line. The latter took full advantage of their opportunities and got a try in each half—the first a very good effort by their "threes," and the second from a very fine forward rush. All were good, the full back kicking and fielding perfectly. The three-quarters handled uncommonly well and every one can kick. The forwards were par excellence.

The Glosters' back Russell was first class, and played a perfect game. At half Murray and his partner were very useful, but I saw the former let Morris "slip" him, on at least two occasions. From a mark by Murray Rogers had hard luck in not scoring with a beautiful drop kick, which just fell under the cross bar.

So ended an excellent tournament with the West Ridings carrying off the honours.

SCRUM.

BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

THE second game of the Rovers' Tournament came off on Monday when the R. G. A., Colaba, met the East Lancs. from Poona. It was a desperate game from start to finish between two very evenly matched teams, both trained to the hour and fighting for every inch to the very call of time. Owing to there being less entries than usual, it has been decided that all drawn games shall be left over till the following day, and this one has to be replayed as no goals were scored and, furthermore, there was insufficient light. It is unnecessary to go into the details of a drawn game when nothing is scored, beyond saying that both let very easy chances go bye. In this I think the Lancs. were the more unfortunate, their centre twice beating the opposing backs only to be worried into shooting outside the net by the custodian running out on each occasion. The Lancs. are quite famous for playing drawn games.

IT was only what the majority had expected when on Tuesday the East Lancs. had decidedly the better of exchanges and came out winners by two goals to nil. There was all round more sting in their play and the excellence of their halves gave the forwards far more of the play than the opposition had. Again many very glaring chances were missed and the R.G.A. should have been first to score, but taken all round the Lancs. deserved to win. The long passing of the Lancs. was very effective and the defence of the Artillery has to be commended in only letting them through twice. As a matter of fact it should have been only once as the second goal was a mistake of the custodian who thinking it was going over deliberately allowed a long shot by Howarth to scrape in under the bar. Parsons, the centre, was seen to more advantage and his goal was a particularly pretty bit of play. He fed his wings to perfection and they were consequently always busy, Ainsworth being brilliant. Reynolds on the other side gave his outsides plenty of chances but was poorly supported. The winners are expected to do well, but the Scots have never taken two bites at the R. G. A., and if one can take a line through that they should just about win the Cup.

ON Wednesday the Carabiniers met the Commercial Gymkhana, peculiarly enough all the civilian teams meet military ones in the first round, and quite a good game was seen, though it was not brimming over with science. It was quite a level first half, Luxton opening for the visitors only for Barrett to equalise before the interval. In the second moiety, however, the military asserted their superiority and did nearly all the attacking, though as last year the forwards are inclined to wait for openings to be made for them instead of making them for themselves. Maxwell put the Carabiniers ahead and also scored the fourth, the third going to Chick, a fine shot from the left wing. Just on time the Commercials had the satisfaction of putting in a second. One was sorry that the game did not end without a player being sent off the field, for protesting against the referee's decision.

AFTER having seen the Scots and Telegraphs meet in the Harwood League one cannot perhaps be surprised that the game on Thursday did not create much enthusiasm. It was on form a foregone conclusion from the start, and though the Scots did eventually win by two to nil it was a fairly close game which might easily have resulted in a draw. It was only very late in the first half that they opened their account and that after a fine shot by Lakin. Mercer saved but did not clear, as he might have done by running out, and Bolton scored easily. The second followed very soon from a penalty through Cowper handling quite unintentionally, Lakin scoring. The second half was gamely fought out and the Scots failed to increase their lead, being left with two rather lucky goals to their credit. They will take a deal of beating, their combination is smart as ever, but their shooting might be better.

OWING to heavy downpour of rain, there was no game on Friday. On Saturday, Bombay Gymkhana turned out to do battle with the Somerset Light Infantry. The visitors completly outplayed the home team, who were one of the poorest eleven that ever donned colours for the Gymkhana. At half time, through the agency of Morris, the soldiers held a lead of 2 to nil and during the succeeding period, the local team bucking up scored twice through Abbott and Burnett, while the gyms also added two more points through Giggins, one of the best outside-left we have seen. Although the Somerset looked not playing their best, they will be tough customers in the semi-final.

Golf.

THE AMAZING GOLF EXPERIMENT.

THEY are at it again about the great golfing enterprise that is in progress near the Shinnecock Hills, Long Island, New York, where Mr. C. B. Macdonald (who is almost as well known round about St. Andrews as in America, and is a purely Scottish golfer), acting for a syndicate of first-class millionaires, is superintending the construction of a golf links that is to make the committees of all other courses everywhere feel rather ashamed that they have ever allowed such a fine game as golf to be played on such poor ground.

The golfer of the future who has a handicap below 20 will hardly permit himself to play for a week-end on such unattractive courses as the English championships are played on. With airships at his disposal he and friends will certainly go over to Long Island for their game.

There and there only they will get the real thing, such as only millionaires could afford to have made.

The idea of this course, briefly put, is that the natural features of the place, which are excellent, shall be so twisted and turned about, hills raised here, valleys cut out there, rivulets run through somewhere else, and a peninsula run out into the sea away in a corner of the course, and the face of the landscape so altered as to make it appear that a few earthquakes had been there recently and left not Long Island, but, as by some wonderful magic of the Arabian Nights order, bought by the millionaires, a composite golf course in which all the best and strongest features of the best courses all over the world are embodied.

Mr. Macdonald, before he set about the designing of this course, travelled far and studied much. He examined all the holes on most of the good courses of Scotland; he searched the nooks and corners of England; he went over to the Continent, and saw all that was worth seeing. He made portfolios of plans, had thousands of photographs taken; and then shut himself up for a winter in New York and evolved his Great Idea—this ideal course made by millionaires.

Where a hole in England seemed good, but with a certain flaw, he patched it up with a piece taken from some other hole in Scotland. All was copy, copy, copy, of the very best, except just one hole in which all was originality. It is the one effort of the millionaires and their henchmen. Then the men were set working in their battalions, and it is stated now that the course links will be ready for play in about another year.

The upheavals have taken place, the earthquakes seem to have done their business, the magic has answered, and lo! we have the eleventh at St. Andrews—only better—the seventeenth at Prestwick, the third at Sandwich, and so forth—all the most famous bunkers, the same rises and falls in the ground, the same putting greens, same everything.

It is intended to be the consummation of a great dream, and how we English and Scotch must rub our eyes when we see all these holes, so far apart in the original, lumped together in this wonderful compilation. It will be like seeing the men of different ages gathered together round the same dinner table—Julius Cæsar discussing tariff reform with Napoleon Bonaparte; Virgil having a few words on women's suffrage with Tennyson; Cardinal Wolsey arguing with Archbishop Benson on reform of the marriage laws, and so forth—all vastly incongruous, impossible, but wonderful and most interesting.

Let there be no doubt about it.

This thing in America is being done well, and Charlie Macdonald, as he is known to scores at St. Andrews and in other golfing parts of Britain, knows his golf very thoroughly, and is not the man to make egregious blunders.

His experiment is deeply interesting, and we can find it in our hearts to wish well to this Long Island enterprise of the New York and Chicago millionaires which is to make all the links we have look foolish.

But there are many things in golf which American millionaires cannot buy. They cannot, for example, buy the power to hole two-yard putts every time—a power which I have seen possessed by tiny little girls, but scarcely any others. No doubt Mr. Harry Payne Whitney or Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, junior, who are two of those at the back of this Long Island business, would give half a million to get this power. They would be able to get their half-millions back. They can get their artificial earthquakes cheaply; but they cannot make golfing sentiment with their money.

NEW RULES OF GOLF.

The proposed new rules of golf, which have created so much discussion during the last few months, came up for consideration at an extraordinary general meeting of the Royal and Ancient Club, held on the 31st August at St. Andrews, under the chairmanship of the Earl of Stair. This meeting was arranged so that amendments to the draft rules drawn up by the Rules of Golf Committee could be proposed prior to the formal acceptance of the code at the usual half-yearly business meeting of the club on 29th September.

One of the most important recommendations of the committee was that the penalty for "out of bounds" should be loss of both stroke and distance, and to this the meeting agreed. Both Mr. John Graham, junior, the Scottish internationalist, Mr. C. A. Palmer, the well-known Birmingham player, had given notice of amendments to the effect that the penalty should be the same as in the past, namely, loss of distance only. This view found considerable favour among golfers, because it was felt that an increase of punishment would lead to ultra-careful play when there was a chance of a competitor hitting a ball out of bounds, but the argument of the committee that a ball struck out of bounds ought to be as heavily penalised as a ball lost or lying unplayable on the course met with the meeting's approval.

Assuming that this rule be accepted on 29th September as no doubt it will, it will lead to an appreciable heightening of scores on some courses. It is an interesting fact that, when Harry Vardon made his record of 72 at Hoylake in the open championship of 1902, he drove twice out of bounds at the first hole. He did precisely the same thing at Prestwick this year. It is possible, however, that the new rule will lead to the practice above all things, of straightness.

An important amendment was that of Mr. J. T. Inglis :—

If a ball on the putting green be in casual water, or if there be casual water between it and the hole, the ball may be lifted without penalty and placed by hand, either directly behind the spot where the ball lay in water or in the nearest position which affords a putt to the hole without water intervening, but such position must not be nearer to the hole than the spot from which the ball was lifted.

This was accepted, so that when the rules come to be passed the golfer will have no further cause to complain about having to putt through a lake while his opponent, perhaps, has a clear line to the hole. The committee themselves proposed in 1904 a rule having the above effect, but it was then rejected.

The committee recommended that the lost ball penalty should be the same in both match and medal play.

This official announcement presumably means that the penalty for a lost ball in a match should be stroke and distance (the same as for a ball out of bounds) instead of the long-standing punishment of lost hole. In regard to Section 3 of Rule 4, which reads:

When playing through the green or from a hazard a player may have the line to the hole indicated to him, but no mark shall be placed, nor shall anyone stand on the proposed line while the stroke is being played.

Mr. B. Hall-Blyth proposed to delete everything after the words "indicated to him," and to substitute "by his caddie, his partner, or his partner's caddie." This was after discussion defeated.

Several minor points were also considered.

ENDURANCE GOLF.

It is done so frequently that there is really not much distinction in breaking the record of a golf course in these days, unless it be one of the very first-class, such as those on which the championships are played, and the record is made under the trying conditions of competition—e.g., the records made during the open championship at Prestwick this year. Indeed, those three made at Prestwick—the amateur by Mr. Robert Andrew, and the professional and general, first by James Braid and then by Ernest Gray—are the only records made this year which really count in the reckoning of great achievements.

So it happens that from time to time some golfers turn their thoughts to records of another sort—those demanding less skill but sometimes more endurance, and which, anyway, are rather more singular than the other kind. Such a one is that recently made on the Balgownie course at Aberdeen, where Mr. Harry Lumsden, a member of the Royal Albert Club, performed the feat of playing nine rounds in one day, which was one more round than he backed himself to do. Mr. Lumsden started at a quarter-past five in the morning, and he finished at half-past eight in the evening. It is calculated that in the course of the nine rounds he walked thirty-five miles.

Now it will be readily understood even by anyone who knows nothing whatever about golf that this is a feat of very considerable physical endurance, and the appreciation of it by such non-golfers must be increased when they are brought to realise that five or six times in every quarter of a mile or so a golf club has to be swung at the ball with more or less force, and again that the mind has to be kept concentrated on the game the whole day through, and sometimes very intensely. But there are circumstances in regard to Mr. Lumsden's performance which raise it above the class of freaks, or even the class of feats of physical strength.

The really marvellous thing is that for those nine rounds he averaged a score of 82 strokes per round, having declared beforehand that he would not be worse than 90. This was really a magnificent golfing performance, and deserves full credit as such. When the day's golf is very long drawn out it is not generally the man's limbs that fail him most in playing his shots. His eyes are the most faltering parts of his golfing machinery. On a bright summer day a large proportion of quite good players find it difficult to concentrate that mesmeric gaze on the side of the ball which is so absolutely essential to the proper making of the stroke.

It often seems at these times to require a simply enormous strength of mind to adhere to the first of golfing maxims "keep your eye on the ball" and after each effort a certain sense of mental exhaustion is experienced. How hard it must be to keep the eye properly on the ball in the eighth and ninth round so properly as to make it possible to do rounds of 82 even an old golfer can only faintly imagine, Mr. Lumsden knows.

This gentleman is not the first to accomplish a great performance in what we may call endurance golf, though unless I am very much mistaken this achievement of his is the greatest of all and must be accounted the record. Aberdeen is a place where the same kind of thing has been done before and it would be a tolerably certain surmise that it was a discussion on what had happened there long before that led Mr. Lumsden to brace himself up for his great effort to place himself at the head of the list of endurance golfers.

In the old days Mr. W. G. Bloxsom used to be a celebrated hand at this kind of thing, and the minutes of the Royal Aberdeen Club testify how he backed himself to do a prodigious number of rounds—and then walked out of some outlandish place in time for dinner at a certain hour. There was a considerable wickedness on the part of the golfers betting against him in making this stipulation about the walk afterwards, for there is nothing so terribly wearying as even the shortest of walks after a hard day's golf.

When pursuing the ball the activity of the mind serves to deaden the sense of the physical effort, but when the game is over that sense, as by an enormous reaction, is quickened almost to a point that is sometimes not very far from agony. Witness the fact that golfers away for a few days' holiday constantly take bicycles with them to wheel themselves back to their quarters, though the eighteenth green on which they finished be only half a mile away. They don't mind walking uphill and down dale for fourteen miles in the course of three rounds of play, but that extra half at the finish without any clubs and ball is too much.

If there is no bicycle, and it is a mile instead of the half, a cab is wanted, and the people who don't play golf and think this is inconsistent and rather silly don't understand.

WINCHESTER

MODEL 1907 SELF-LOADING RIFLE

.351 CALIBER HIGH POWER.

Before deciding upon a rifle for your next hunting trip, don't fail to investigate the merits of this new Winchester, which is reloaded by the recoil of the exploded cartridge. There is nothing complicated, cumbersome or freakish about it. It is a reliable, handy gun from butt to muzzle. The .351 Caliber High Power Cartridge which it shoots represents the latest development in powder and cartridge manufacture. Although small in size it develops tremendous velocity and energy, making it powerful enough for the largest game. This most modern type of cartridge also possesses the added advantage of economy. Owing to the comparatively small amount of metal used in the shell it costs much less than old style cartridges no more powerful.

STRAY NOTES.

WHILST man has learnt to avoid swallowing poisonous plants, although occasionally blundering over pretty-looking berries and deceptive mushrooms, he has had little to fear in that way from animals. To a small degree this is due to the fact that only parts of animals are eaten by man, and those very generally are cooked before being eaten, the heating often sufficing to destroy substances present in flesh, fish, and fowl which would be poisonous if taken raw. But, as a matter of fact, animals do not protect themselves from being eaten, as plants largely do by developing nasty or poisonous substances in their flesh. They fight rather by claws, teeth, and poison glands therewith connected, or else escape by extra quick locomotion, a method not possible to plants. Many insects (butterflies, beetles, and bugs), however, produce nasty aromatic substances which cause animals like birds and lizards to reject them as food. The toad and the salamander both produce a very deadly poison in their damp soft skins, which causes any animal to drop them from its mouth, and to regret "bitterly" the attempt to swallow them. The frog has no such poison in its skin, but can jump out of harm's way. The strong yellow and black marking of the European salamander is what is called a "warning" colouration, just as is the yellow and black outfit of the poisonous wasp. Animals learn to leave the yellow and black livery untouched, and tentative bites are thus avoided by the creatures so marked.

There is a curious variation as to susceptibility on the part of man to poison in the flesh of fishes and shell-fishes when taken by him as food. The word "idiosyncrasy" is applied to such individual susceptibility, and is, of course, applicable to the susceptibility shown by some persons to the poison of the American poison-vine and of others to acute inflammation from the dust of hayfields. Some persons cannot eat lobster, crab, or oysters or mussels without being poisoned in a varying degree by certain substances present in those "shell-fish" even when cooked. Often a "rash" is caused on the skin, and colic. Others again, cannot eat any fish of any kind without being poisoned in a similar way, or possibly are only liable to be poisoned by grey mullet or by mackerel. The most curious cases of this individual variability are found in the rash and fever caused by the vegetable drug quinine in rare instances, and the violent excitement produced in some persons by the usually soporific laudanum. All such cases have very great interest as showing us what a small difference separates an agreeable flavour or a valuable medicine from a rank poison, and how readily the chemical susceptibility of a complex organism like man may vary between toleration and deathly response, without any concomitant indication of such difference being apparent in our present state of knowledge in two individuals to one of whom that is poison which to the other is meat. They also furnish a parallel to that marvellous conversion of "toxin" into "anti-toxin," in consequence of which the blood of an animal injected with small increasing doses of deadly snake poison or diphtheria poison becomes an antidote to the same poison taken into the blood of an unprepared animal.

There is, over and above these special cases of fish foods, which are tolerated by some and are poison to others, a whole series of fishes which cannot be eaten by anyone without serious poisoning being the result, even when the fish are carefully cooked. Happily, these fishes are rarely, if ever, caught on our own coasts. They produce, when even small bits are eaten, violent irritation of the intestine, and death, the symptoms resembling in many respects those of cholera. The curious bright-coloured, beaked fish of tropical seas and coral reefs, with two or four large front teeth and spherical spine-covered bodies, and the trigger fish of the same regions, are the chief of these poisonous fish. But there is true anchovy on the coast of Japan and a small herring in the West Indies, and a goby on the Indian coast (Pondicherry), all of which are deadly poison even when cooked ; and there are many others, so that one has to be careful about fish-eating in the remoter parts of the world. The poisons of these fish with poisonous flesh have not been carefully studied, but they seem to resemble chemically the poisons produced by certain putrefactive microbes.

Let us now revert to the more special subject of poisonous stings. Everyone knows that although it is unpleasant to be pricked by the little spines on the leaf of a thistle, it is not the same unpleasantness as being "stung" by a nettle. There is no poison in the thistle. The hairs which beset the leaves of the common nettle are firm, but brittle and hollow ; they break off in the skin and a poison exudes from their interior. Under the microscope—and it is quite easy to examine it with a high power—the hollow nettle hair is seen to be partly occupied by living protoplasm—a transparent, viscid substance which shows an active streaming movement and has embedded in it a dense kernel or nucleus. It is, in fact, a living "cell" or life unit. The space in the cell not occupied by protoplasm is filled with clear liquid, which contains the poison. This has been examined chemically by using a large quantity of nettle hairs, and found to contain formic acid—the same irritating acid which is secreted by ants when they sting whence its name. But later observations show that the juice of the nettle hair contains also a special poison in minute quantities, an albuminous substance, which resembles that of the poison-sacs at the base of the teeth of snakes.

In tropical regions there are nettles far more powerful than that of our own country. The one called Urtica stimulans, which is found in Java, and than called Laportea renulata found in Hindustan, when bruised emit an effluvium which poisonously affects the eyes and mouth, and if handled produce convulsions and serious swelling and pain in the arms, which may last for three or four weeks and in some cases cause death. They are not unknown in the hot houses of our botanical gardens. There are other plants provided with poisonous stinging hairs besides the true nettles or Urticaceæ, though they are not numerous. The American plants called Loasa sting badly, so do some of the Spurges (Euphorbiaceæ), and some Hydrophyllæ.

"How did you find the steak, sir?" asked the waiter at the cheap restaurant of the man who had dined.

"By perseverance" was the reply. "The morsel was hiding under a Brussels sprout ; but I tracked him down."

A BARRISTER was urging that no man should be convicted on circumstantial evidence alone.

"Why," he said, "when I was a boy I knew another lad who, while his parents were absent, went into the pantry and nearly devoured a custard pie. Then, fearing the consequences, he looked about for means of hiding his guilt.

"He seized the cat, smeared her face and paws with the custard, and then took the innocent criminal into the back yard and shot her. As he did so, the boy observed to me :

"There goes one more victim of circumstantial evidence !"

The Story Teller.

THE SPIDERS AND THE FLY.

It was an advertisement which tempted the fly to the spiders' den. The fly possessed a fairly large business, but his capital was but small. So the advertisement caught him. He had been seeking just such an advertiser for some time.

"To Business Men. A gentleman is prepared to invest up to £20,000, as required, in one or more good, going concerns.—Apply, X.Y.Z., etc."

The fly wrote promptly, and received a speedy reply, making an appointment. The stationery was excellent. With some difficulty the fly discovered the address. It was up three flights of narrow, and not too cleanly stairs, somewhere in the City, no matter where. At the rather mean door the fly paused. It was so very like the entrance to a—well—a house-spider's web in a dark corner. He listened. Not a sound escaped from the office of the gentleman with £20,000 to invest. He pushed open the door and entered.

Instantly a Remington began to rattle and whirr. A lady had begun to type for her life. Another lady and a boy were addressing envelopes at great speed. A telephone bell rang in an adjoining room, and a man began to talk in very loud tones. The fly, having rather long legs, could see over the low partition in to the tiny outer office, and a few quick glances revealed one or two curious things.

The boy had no ink in the pen with which he was so rapidly addressing envlopes. The lady typist was writing lines of capital letters and figures on paper which bore no heading. The fly, being rather a wideawake fly, was exceedingly interested. But the loud voice in the inner sanctum drew his attention and riveted it. The Remington stopped rattling at once.

"That's quite right, Mr. Stoddart," said the voice, so that all in the building might hear without listening, if they wished to. "The accountant's report on your trading position is quite satisfactory, and the five thousand will be at your disposal as soon as—eh, what. Oh, yes—as soon as you have signed the contract. What? Certainly—ready by Friday next. Yes, yes—good-bye."

The voice ceased, and it was perhaps a curious coincidence that at that exact instant the lady who had been so busy with the capital letters and figures caught sight of the fly.

"To see Mr. Blank?" she queried, briskly. "By appointment?"

"Certainly," and the fly sent in his card. As the door of the inner office opened, the telephone bell rang, and the loud voice was heard again.

"Hello! Yes! Who are you? Oh!—is that you, Mr. Davis. Oh, yes. Well—you know—my client rather draws the line at a thousand. Just as much trouble to look after a thousand as twenty thousand. Yes, yes—well, that's his view. Oh, yes, very favourably impressed indeed. Pity you haven't business enough for two thousand at least. What?—of course. It's to my interest to do all I can. Yes—good-bye."

Again the voice ceased. At once the typist ushered the fly into the sanctum, which, if anything, was a size smaller than the outer office. At the table sat two gentlemen, one oldish, the other young, and both of marked Semitic type. They rose with alacrity.

"Good morning, Mr. Mouche," exclaimed the senior. "Take a chair. What can we have the pleasure of doing for you?"

"You got my letter?" began the fly.

The junior spider commenced to turn over a great heap of correspondence.

"Yes, yes," said the senior, "we shall find it. Hem! Pray excuse me one moment." The senior spider struck a bell. The typist entered with a note-book. "There is an important letter I must send off at once," he continued, "while the subject is fresh in my memory. Write to Mr. C. B. A."

The lady typist opened her book and wrote to the spider's dictation.

"Dear Sir,—I am sending this letter by hand, as it is important that you should receive it at once. Mr. Rawston will join you as a limited partner under the new Act. He will put three thousand into your business, but stipulates for a separate bank account, a joint account with you, all cheques drawn on that account to be signed by both of you. If you are agreeable you may consider the business closed." "That will do, miss. By hand, you know. Now, Mr. Mouche"—the senior spider turned to the fly—"I really must apologise. Ah, here is your letter—I—"

Instantly the telephone bell rang. "Dear me!" exclaimed the senior spider, "what a nuisance!" He reached for the receiver. "Hello! Who are you? What do you want? What? Oh, you're Mr. Green? Well, look here, Mr. Green, you know, the first thing to do is to pay this firm's fee—Eh! What? We can't do that——"

"Cool, anyhow," cut in the junior spider, who had the extra receiver at his ear.

"But I told you the booking fee," continued the senior. "Twenty guineas. The money you want is ready, but you must pay our fee—that's a sine qua non. Take your cheque? Of course, my dear sir. Send it along. If it's open, I'll get your affair settled to-day—Good!—Right you are!—Good-bye, Mr. Green." Once more the senior spider turned to the fly. "At last, Mr. Mouche, I can attend to you." Very carefully, he studied the fly's communication.

Meanwhile, the fly, being, as already remarked, fairly wide-awake for a fly, had covertly studied the correspondence on the table, now scattered about. He noticed that many of the sheets were soiled, while the dates at their tops were mostly in 1907, some even being dated 1906. Seated within a foot or so of the telephone standard, and, for a fly, being fairly familiar with telephones, he was struck by the fact that in not one of the conversations he had listened to had the young ladies at the Exchange cut the senior spider off, which in itself was almost a miracle. Then the inarticulate sounds which even the best instruments emit under vibration where not audible, and—well—the fly was, and is, quite prepared to take oath that wherever the Mr. Green who had been so backward in sending his cheque for twenty guineas may have been at the time, he certainly was not at the other end of the wire.

"I have studied your proposition, Mr. Mouche," said the senior spider, presently, "and it certainly appeals to us. I should say it will be an easy task, and the business will suit our very best client at this time down to the ground—I mean the gentleman on whose behalf we have been advertising. All you have to do is to get your name entered in our books."

"And the fee?" queried the fly.

"Is—well, generally twenty guineas, payable in advance, of course, but as your proposition is so good, and therefore should be so easy, suppose we say five guineas?"

"That's very moderate," said the fly, "but as I have left my cheque-book at the office I shall have to post you the money."

As the fly descended the narrow stairs he smiled amusedly several times.

"Fairly clever," he said to himself, "but too thin, and badly worked out in detail. Too great economy in type-writing, stationery, and in ink and envelopes. The telephone service is far too perfect. And as for those old letters, that is really gross carelessness."

And once more the fly smiled his amusement.—John Bull.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 4th September 1908.

It is curious to observe how from its beginning automobilism in England has been the victim of unintelligent legislation, of prohibitions that forbade things of which the law-makers could have no conception. The famous "man with a red flag" regulation was imposed by men who could form no anticipation of the admirable vehicles that but for its hampering effect would without question have resulted in a few years. Then we had the twelve miles limit, which, fixed in view of the clumsy cars then in use, made no allowance for the rapid development of light and manageable vehicles. At the same epoch of the motoring dark ages came the law of the motor wagon and trailer, which, passed by men who could not foresee the motor bicycle and trailer, equally limited that light, speedy, and safe mode of travelling to six miles an hour. The latest instance of the unfortunate effect of legislation that makes no allowance for developments is seen in the case of the Wicks spring wheel. The law on the subject says that vehicles such as motor-omnibuses must be fitted with wheels having a tread of soft or elastic material. The Wicks wheel has a steel tread, and although it may be a great deal better for the road than the wheels now in use, it cannot be put to the test of actual running because the law forbids it, even though the law could have no sort of prophetic insight that such a wheel could be produced. If only mankind could be restrained from legislating for things they do not understand! It is probably a most fortunate circumstance that the early trials in aëroplaning have been mainly carried out in France. Had English inventors made the first essays there would undoubtedly by now have been in existence laws forbidding aëroplanes to go up, or, being up, to come down.

A correspondent recalls an amusing incident which occurred in the early days of motoring when local authorities had an idea that they could impose any speed limits they liked. A certain town council adopted a five-miles limit for some important streets in its area, and conceived that it had done its duty when it had posted a notice to that effect on the walls of the town hall, which, of course, led to sundry motorists being pulled up by the police before they had the slightest idea that any such regulation—which was quite illegal—was in operation. However, the speed limit came to an early withdrawal, because some of the motorists in neighbouring towns who got wind of the situation made a point of calling at the town clerk's house which was on the outskirts of the town, in the small hours, and, explaining that they were strangers visiting the place, and had heard that some speed limit was in force, begged for precise information as to the streets to which it applied, as they were afraid to enter the town until they could obtain these instructions. After two or three nights of broken rest, the town clerk decided that the speed limit was hardly required.

In spite of the solemn warning from Printing House Square, at a meeting of the General Committee of the Royal Automobile Club on the 31st ultimo it was decided by a majority of twenty-nine votes to seven not to cancel the Four-Inch Race in the Isle of Man (regarding which I wrote you last week) nor to alter in any way the arrangements that have been made—and are still in progress—to ensure the safety of competitors and the public. The resolution was in the following terms:—

The committee, having considered all the arguments for and against the holding of the Four-Inch Race in the Isle of Man on 24th September next, resolve that the International Four-Inch Race for the tourist trophy be held in the Isle of Man on Thursday, 24th September next, the committee being satisfied that every precaution has been and will be taken against accidents to the public or to the competitors.

The question figured on the agenda paper for the meeting as the result of the protests against holding the race, on account of the undue risk which it was alleged would be incurred.

A clutch can either make or mar a car. A well-designed clutch which engages gently and slips when required without burning is a joy and a blessing, whilst a fierce clutch is—well, the other thing. The majority of makers have brought their clutches to a high state of perfection, but there are still some cars, noticeably those models of some years back, which were fitted with radically bad clutches. The best thing to do when one is unlucky enough to get hold of a clutch of this description is to cast it out root and branch and fit another one.

There are two popular kinds of clutch in vogue at present:—(1) the plate clutch; (2) the leather faced cone clutch. With the latter type most motorists will be acquainted, seeing that it is fitted to most modern cars of under 20-horse power, and was almost universally fitted two years back. The leather clutch is undoubtedly very efficient for low powered cars, and provided that care is taken of it, it will give little trouble. The leather will require dressing every now and then, and at certain periods will require renewing, but otherwise it will prove quite satisfactory. On high-powered cars a leather clutch is not so good because directly one gets in traffic and has to slip the clutch the leather burns at once. Besides, with a leather clutch on a high-powered car it is very difficult to avoid leaping forward at starting, a method of progression which is bad for tyres and transmission.

The great advantage of the plate clutch is that when it is of suitable proportions and properly designed it can be slipped ad infinitum. Thus it allows of a beautifully smooth start, even on cars of the highest power, and also renders driving in traffic a pleasure instead of a penance. There are several types of plate clutch, of which the Hele Shaw is the best known. In this clutch there are a number of plates made of mild steel and phosphor bronze respectively. These are placed alternately, the outer plates, made of phosphor bronze, being driven by the engine, whilst the inner mild steel plates drive the clutch shaft, and so transmit the power to the gear box. These plates are kept normally pressed tight together by a spring, when, of course, power is transmitted through to the gear box. As soon, however, as the clutch is withdrawn the plates come out of engagement and the engine ceases to drive the gear.

To ensure efficiency it is very necessary to pay great attention to a plate clutch. The clutch brake needs to be very nicely adjusted, or otherwise the operation of changing gear will be rendered very noisy and difficult, simply because the countershaft does not cease revolving when the clutch is withdrawn. Lubrication is a most important detail and thin mineral oil of just the right consistency must be obtained. One should always make a point of filling his clutch exactly half full of oil and religiously emptying this out every 500 miles and putting a fresh charge in. If oil of too thick a texture be used all sorts of troubles will ensue, the only remedy being to thoroughly clean out the clutch with paraffin and then start again with the right oil. This oil plays an important part in the action of the clutch, because it forms a cushion between the plates and before the clutch grips this oil has to be squeezed out and thus a fierce engagement is obviated. A clutch which starts smoothly and is flexible is bound to be economical because it saves wear of tyres and consumption of petrol and hence it will often pay to fit a new and up-to-date clutch in place of an old one which has proved a continual source of trouble.

There is no part of a motor-car which requires closer attention than its wheels, seeing that the breaking of a wheel is bound to bring disaster in its train. It has been proved over and over again that the tangent-spoked wire wheel is far stronger than the ordinary artillery type of wooden wheel, and the only reason which has militated against their more universal adoption has been their unwonted appearance. Besides, the wire wheel possesses the great advantage of weighing less and being very easily detachable, and the loss of a great many spokes will not make the wheel collapse. The old wooden wheel is very strong up to a point, but put a sudden side stress on it, such as a bad side-slip, and it will frequently give way. The staggered spoke type of artillery wheel is certainly superior in respect of strength under side stresses, but it does not nearly come up to the wire wheel. Many people are under the impression that the "dishing" of the front wheels of a car is for the purpose of strength, but this is not so; it is really to make the steering easier.

Wheels need very careful attention, and one should always make a point of examining them carefully once a week. After changing a tube or a cover paint is often knocked off spokes and felloes; these should always be repainted, as otherwise the wood may rot and become weak. After a bad side-slip always look to the wheels, and if any damage has occurred see to it at once; don't leave it till after you've had a bad accident by reason of a wheel collapsing. If you have to drive your car with a tyre down be careful how you go; it is very easy to "start" the spokes from their sockets. Always keep the bearings in your wheels in good order; wobbly wheels mean loss of power by friction and very much increased wear of tyres.

CALCUTTA MONSOON RACES, 1908.

THE season just passed has been in many ways a very big success and there is no doubt that we now have a sufficiently large number of keen Calcutta owners to run through an eight day Monsoon meeting without any extraneous assistance and can feel independent of upcountry stables in future. The entries have been kept up to a very good average right through the meeting and a large number of races have had to be divided giving cards of seven and eight events on most days, and one, two, three, betting has been the rule. The policy of the Stewards in increasing the amount of place money has been much appreciated and possibly has had an effect on the number of starters. Rs. 300 second money comes in very useful towards paying expenses in a small stable. Mr. Hutchison, has worked wonders with the courses; and though he has had to contend with cruel luck in the matter of weather, the going has only on one occasion been really villainous and on many days was very fast and good. Mr. Bates has lost none of his skill in despatching a field and everyone who has come under his orders testifies to the able manner in which he controls the men and makes them bring their horses up. great patience is shown for the real bad 'un but there is short shrift for the inattentive or clumsy man on top and Mr. Bates never makes the mistake of spoiling a real good start for the sake of one fellow who is a bit asleep.

The judging of the hurdle races has been subjected to a certain amount of comment, and under present conditions it is extremely difficult to separate two horses in a close finish on either hurdle course, as the man in the box has nothing on which to take a line except a particularly small flag and it would be a good thing if a proper winning post were put up similar to the one at the finish on the flat.

The class of animal engaged has not been particularly high, Golden and The Cingalee, of course, stand out a long way from everything else and are both mares of whom we are likely to hear a great deal more in the future, but bar those two they may be put down as a mediocre lot on the whole and certainly no better than in former years. Among the owners Mr. Dass has come out on top while Piper heads the list of trainers, with Mr. Cowper a good second Murdison is at the top of the list of winning jockeys and there is no doubt that his position is well deserved as he has been riding in consistently good style and can put in a very strong finish. Butters, who comes next, is a first class light weight and a very useful acquisition, and many were very favourably impressed with young Davis, who can go to scale at about 6st. 6lb. and who rode some real good races—notably his win on St. Rule. Howie had very bad luck in being second six times and only scoring one win!

The G. R. contingent has been going stronger than ever. Mr. Evers' figures speak for themselves and he is rapidly developing into a first class horseman. Mr. Barrow has shown that he can still ride a real good race and Mr. Turner has apparently quite got over the effects of his fall off Lady Gold, which put him out of the game for so long, and has come back to his old form. Lady Gold has given him a good deal of compensation for that disaster of 18 months ago as she has won three hurdle races and been second in one during these monsoons—two of the wins being with owner up and the second time carrying 13st. 2lb.! Truly a great performance. Among the new blood Captain Fraser and Mr. Bletsoe have had the most success but there are a whole string of keen men anxious to ride whenever they get a chance and there is no fear of the supply of amateurs running short at any rate for the next few years.

We now have an interval of two months till the cold weather season begins with the first extra on 28th November, but this gap will be bridged by two if not three Tollygunge Gymkhanas so that the Calcutta racing man will continue to find himself catered for well. Appended are the usual Statistics :—

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Mr. T. G. Evers, the well known Calcutta G. R., is going home shortly and is parting with some of his race horses. An advertisement appearing further on gives full particulars.

We supplement the details given in our Special Telegram of the 10th instant with a full report of the race for the St. Leger. Mr. J. B. Joel who, on the turf, seemingly cannot go wrong just now, had the honour of winning with Your Majesty, son of the late lamented Persimmon. The victory enables Mr. Joel to greatly increase his already commanding lead in the winning owners' list. He has won about £26,000 this season, and is certain to finish well ahead.

This is the second classic race won by Mr. J. B. Joel, who had never won the St. Leger before. He has, however, won the Oaks twice, with Our Lassie and Glass Doll. The latter gained a surprising victory last year. Had Your Majesty not been amiss at Derby time, Mr. Joel's name might now be included among the winners of the coveted Blue Riband.

This owner has had extraordinary luck with his horses this season. Your Majesty, of course, has been the principal winner, and the son of Persimmon has now won over £18,000 this year alone. The chief events won by Mr. Joel this season are as follow :—

Your Majesty.

St. Leger (Doncaster) ...	£5,900
St. James' Palace Stakes (Ascot) ...	£2,250
Eclipse Stakes (Sandown) ...	£8,870
St. George's Stakes (Liverpool) ...	£1,716
Dean Swift.
Liverpool Cup (Liverpool) ...	£1,075
City and Suburban (Epsom) ...	£1,675
Portland Bay.
Wokington Stakes (Ascot) ...	£815
Elmstead.
Stewards' Cup (Goodwood) ...	£557
Sunflower II.
Lavant Stakes (Goodwood) ...	£1,000

It was rather a tame Leger, remarks our London Correspondent, and the running was quite uneventful. Pom, one of Mr. W. Hall Walker's three candidates, immediately dashed to the front, with Signorinetta and White Eagle the last pair. Both Bullock and Maher, however, did not stay there long, and six furlongs from home they were well among the leaders. Pom was by this time beaten, and Walter Griggs sent Your Majesty to the front. At the distance White Eagle challenged, but Your Majesty had enough left to win by half a length, Santo Strato filling their berth four lengths behind. The result was a popular one, for Your Majesty was a hot favourite.

Signorinetta never flattered her admirers, and it is clear that she was feeling the effects of the ten days' stoppage in her work. Her hurried preparation did her no good, but the sensational Derby and Oaks heroine will improve upon her Leger form. The surpsise of the race was the moderate display of Norman III., the winner of the Two Thousand Guineas. He was considered to have a slightly better chance than his stable companion, Santo Strato, but the American bred colt was absolutely last.

The acceptances for the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire will be found in our Turf Columns. Taken all round, these are satisfactory, and it may be noted that, as last year, the Cesarewitch has forty-seven remaining in, while the Cambridgeshire has fifty-nine acceptors, which is five in excess of last season ; but the big event of the Houghton Week this year had an entry of ninety-seven as against eighty-three last year. The Duke of York Stakes has also done well, as only sixteen of the forty-eight entrants have retired. On the whole, those who indulged in early wagers on the two great Newmarket handicaps have little to complain of, though, perhaps, the defection of such as Eider, Dean Swift, Pillo, and Stickup may have involved loss to a few. In the Cesarewitch the two top-weights and constant rivals, The White Knight and Radium, stand in, which is perhaps as well, for with eight of the heavy-weights retiring, Baltinglass at 8st. 3lb. is the next in the list of acceptors, so that the defection of the two Cup horses at the head of the handicap would have meant an upheaval of 11lb. all round—though probably those interested in some of the extreme light-weight brigade would have been pleased rather than otherwise. Early backers of Pure Gem for the Cesarewitch will note with satisfaction that this four-year-old and Menu are the only animals now representing the brothers Joel in the long-distance race. Glacis has accepted, as also has his yesterday's conqueror, Yentoi, and it will be a moot point weather the 4lb. advantage which the Stanley House horse may have at Newmarket will enable the gelding to reverse yesterday's running. Other nicely handicapped horses remaining in the Cesarewitch may be noted in Turbine, Queen's Advocate, Wise Mason, Spate, Old China, last year's winner (Demure), Father Blind, and Carnegie. Probably the withdrawal of Deerstalker, who seemed thrown in at 6st. 2lb. will surprise none who noted at Ascot that he was no boy's horse. The Cambridgeshire, bids fair to uphold its reputation as being one of the highest-class handicaps of the season. With Galvani (9st.) standing in, the weights remain undisturbed, and while Your Majesty and White Eagle have retired, Norman III. remains in, the Derby form being represented by Llangwm, who accepts both for the Duke of York Stakes and the Cambridgeshire.

A golfing expert in a contempory declares that, unlike the caddie of the comic papers, the genuine article has no humerous tendencies. Even bearing in mind that the writer is a Scot, the statement is depressing. We expect to hear next that retired Indian colonels only smile a wan, sweet smile when they foozle at the tee.

A singular story is going the rounds in England : it emanates from a well known Sheffield firm of gold and silver refiners and has reference to the stolen Ascot Gold Cup. They state that some time after the Ascot Cup had been stolen a man called upon them wishing to dispose of an ingot of gold. It was of unusually pure gold, and, as men are not in the habit of running round with gold ingots, they became suspicious. They found that the gold was 20-carat, corresponding with the unusual carat of the Ascot Gold Cup, and that the ingot was within 2½oz. of the weight of the stolen trophy.

The police were informed, and careful enquiries were made. In the end they accepted the story of the man, who said he had got the gold in Abyssinia. It was worth 69s. per ounce. The heads of the firm, however, still feel convinced that the ingot was the Ascot Cup melted down.

A serious mishap befel the Duke of Beaufort on the 7th instant, serious by reason of his three score odd years. He was out cubbing near Chippenham when his horse stumbled and came down and falling on the Duke the latter's right leg was broken.

taken owing to numerous complaints of the dangerous and destructive character of the elephants in the district, which is only fifty miles from Salisbury and exceedingly promising for farming and mining. Six young elephants captured by hunters have been disposed of to a travelling menagerie. The animals are about the size of a donkey and perfectly docile. A contemporary suggests that this is an excellent opportunity of proving whether the African elephant is trainable.

A new pastime has been discovered—"Going on Safari," which, being interpreted, means the "simple life" in Uganda or the British East Africa Protectorate, with the additional feature of much big-game shooting.

These ditricts have been visited by great hunters ever since the time of Livingstone and Stanley, but it is only quite recently that the institution of such facilities for travelling as the Ugunda Railway has made it possible for the traveller to find there the comforts and even the luxuries of civilisation, and has brought within twenty-four hours of the coast country which a few years ago it took months to reach. East Africa is now beginning to challenge Egypt as the playground of the English leisured classes and the American millionaire. Lord and Lady Waterford, Lord Cardross, Mr. Bruce Ismay, and Mr. Abel Chapman, the well-known hunter and naturalist, are among the visitors who are shortly expected in the country, while Mr. Roosevelt is going with a party of friends in April next year. Lord Delamere is a resident in the country and owns 200,000 acres there.

"So strangely do the conditions of Mayfair and the primeval forest mingle at Nairobi," yesterday observed a resident of that town, who is visiting London, "that at the Norfolk Hotel, sometimes jestingly referred to, from the high rank of many of its guests, as the 'House of Lords,' you may see a man at one table in the dining-room in evening dress while at the next table sits a men in a hunting shirt with his bronzed chest bare, both of them quite unconscious of any incongruity in the situation."

Nowhere in the world is big game to be found so plentifully and in such variety. It can be shot a few yards away from the railway line, and at Nairobi shikaris can be found who will guarantee a lion within three days.

London dog cranks, among whom women are the most hopeless examples, have not yet exhausted their ingenuity in devising methods for making an honest dog look ridiculous. The latest lunacy takes the form of a bag or carrier, in which their mistresses can convey their luckless victims through the streets or on shopping expeditions. This contrivance is being sold in the West End in fine leathers of all the lightest and newest shades. One end of the bag is open to allow the dog to keep his head out. Should it be wet the mouth of the carrier can be buttoned up, leaving Fido merely breathing space. Bracelets for poodles are another canine novelty. These are worn over the pet's leather boots, are made of best nickel, and each has two small bell charms.

Accounts of the British Olympic Association, so far as they are completed, show that there will be a substantial surplus when the figures have been finally adjusted. To July 31 the receipts aggregated £18,863, of which £14,029 is the proceeds of public subscription, and £4,834 Stadium gate moneys. The actual expenditure at the same date was £6,111, but there are claims outstanding.

The surplus will constitute a nucleus for a fund for assisting British athletes to attend future Olympic celebrations, and for carrying on the work of organization.

The Calcutta rugby football season closed last Friday, when the final game in the Andrew's Cup tournament was decided, the United Services defeating the 75th R. G. A. by 16 pts. (2 goals and 2 tries) to nil.

Following the very good fight the Bombay Gymkhana put up against the West Ridings during the recent Rugby Tournament, they have decided to send a team to compete in the Madras Tournament. The fifteen are now in training and can be relied upon to do themselves justice. One can never expect such a team to be quite at full strength, and in that neither of their regular halves will be available, means a decided weakening. The inclusion of Corbett, who played for the Casuals in the three-quarter line, means that in this division they will be the strongest of all, but again at back the inclusion of Gillum instead of Cole is not in their favour. Weber and Fitzgerald will be the halves and should do well with the forwards practically at full strength.

If only a regular round of visits by Bombay, Calcutta and Madras could be arranged every year what a fillip it would give the game!

The following team will represent the Calcutta F.C. in the Madras Rugby Tournament this week:—W. G. Hemmingway, R. N. Bocquet, J. Reid Ray, A. M. Burnett, W. Lilburn, C. G. Arthur (Captain), A. P. Candler, F. S. Kerr, R. Cadwell, J. Blackett, A. P. Layward, J. McLeod, G. F. Claydon, and W. T. G. Huffam. Owing to the breach on the north-east line of the Madras Southern Mahratta Railway the train by which the team was travelling was detained at Rajamundry for some time but they arrived safely in Madras on Tuesday.

In the William Younger Football Cup Competition between Upper and Lower Burma, the first of the series of three matches ended in a win for Upper Burma by 3 goals to 2 after a close and interesting game.

The Australian Rugby team opened their tour in Britain last Saturday when they beat Devonshire at Devonport by 34 points to 3.

During the Civil Service week at Naini Tal the Gymkhana beat the Civil Service in the hockey match by 4 goals to 3. They also won the cricket match by an innings and 59 runs. The Polo tournament ended in win for the Rifle Brigade who won last year: the Military beat the Civil at football by 6 goals to nil, and the following are the results of the tennis:—Ladies' Doubles. Hon'ble Mrs. Ruttledge and Miss Murray beat Mrs. Hailey and Mrs. Fremantle. Men's Doubles. Won by Messrs. O'Donnell and Dillon. Mixed Doubles. Won by Mr. O'Donnell and Mrs. Hailey, Representative Pairs. Won by Messrs Streatfield and Dillon.

The Durand Football tournament at Simla ended last Saturday in a win for the Lancashire Fusiliers, who beat the Royal Irish Rifles in the final by 2 goals to nil. Details in our Football columns.

The motor race for the Tourist Trophy took place in the Isle of Man on the 24th ultimo. The distance was 339½ miles round a course of 37½ miles. The Hutton car came in first, in 6 hours 43 minutes 5 seconds. Darracq cars were second and third. Five cars overturned but the occupants were uninjured.

The Mussoorie Hockey tournament for the Bechtler Cup was concluded on the 19th ultimo. when St. Fidelis' School beat the Nondescripts in the final game by 2 goals to one.

There has for some time been revolt in the English Billiard world, and some interesting and important developments are imminent. It is an open secret that the Billiards Association has long been out of touch with the leading players and the big billiards public, and a new body has been formed with the object of controlling the game.

The new body has adopted the name of the Billiards Control Club, and has the Earl of Rutland, Lord Lonsdale, Mr. R. H. Rimington-Wilson and a number of noblemen and gentlemen at its head. These gentlemen will form the Amateur Council, and all matters referring to the game will be adjudicated upon by them.

This governing body will be supported by advisory committees of the leading professional players, the foremost table manufacturers, and the best-informed markers. Each of the committees will consider all questions directly associated with their own particular side of the game, and will convey their suggestions to the governing council, who will then make their own ruling on the matters. Such methods should result in good sound legislation.

The general mass of billiard players have not been overlooked, as there is to be a second club, to be named the Union, formed, and will be open to members on the payment of a nominal subscription. It is intended to be a rendezvous for all interested in the game, more particularly those who reside in the country. The general idea of the Union is to link up the numerous clubs, institutes, and billiards leagues throughout the United Kingdom, and so form a powerful amalgamation of all who are associated with the game.

The formation of an entirely new set of rules will be the first item in the long programme of reform which the B.C.C. and Union intend to carry out in ensuing winter season, and it is possible that the principal matches will be played under these rules.

The contest for the World's Featherweight Championship between Owen Moran, the English champion, and Attell, of 'Frisco, provided a fierce fight and ended in a draw. The American thus retains the title. This is the second meeting between the famous featherweights, and the result has been the same on each occasion—a draw. In the first battle, however, many of the best judges in America were of opinion that the Englishman should have been given the verdict.

The American is a "cunning" two-handed boxer, Moran being considerably more scientific in his methods. Attell has proved himself a wonderful fighter, and the Englishman has undoubtedly improved to a remarkable degree. Even in places where decisions are allowed it is often difficult in America for a "foreigner" to obtain a verdict unless showing overwhelming superiority.

This contest, held on the 7th August, was one of twenty-three rounds, a peculiar length. It was, however, the result of the two principals disagreeing in the first place as to the number of rounds to be fought. Attell wanted a contest limited to twenty rounds, while Moran, who is the better stayer, stood out for a larger number.

Moran, who claims that he broke his right hand in the second round, has again challenged Attell to a forty-five round contest, but Attell refuses to fight more than twenty-five.

Battling Nelson met Joe Gans at 'Frisco, on the 9th instant, for the Lightweight Championship of the world, knocked him out in the twenty-first round, won the Championship and cleared £2,100 into the bargain. He had the best of it throughout, the defeated man appearing nervous and on the defensive nearly all through. Nelson drew first blood in the third round.

Gans fought gamely, and in the fifteenth round planted his right on Nelson's nose and mouth, bringing the blood in streams. Thereafter, Gans showed signs of fatigue.

In the twentieth round Nelson fought like a demon, landing awful blows on Gans's head and body.

In the twenty-first round Nelson rushed Gans to the ropes, and Gans fell. He tried to rise, but was counted out.

Nelson met Gans at Goldfield, Nevada, in 1906, when the black won on a foul. As recently as July last the pair met again, when Nelson knocked out Gans in seventeen rounds.

Here is a cricket curiosity. In the London Daily Newspaper League at Dulwich on the 7th instant the Daily Telegraph scored 57 (W. Pearse 31), and then dismissed the Daily Chronicle for 3. J. Fish took five wickets with his first five balls, and in all eight wickets for no runs. Only twenty balls were required to complete the innings.

Ralph Rose, the San Francisco champion shot-putter, set up a new world's record at New York on the 8th September, the distance being 49 ft. 10 in. The weight of the shot was 16lb., and the size of the circle 7ft. Rose's previous record with a 16lb. shot was made at Montreal a year ago, and 2¾in. less than his present fine achievement.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—The sixth, and last but one, day of the Big Meeting in Poona came off on Wednesday, when owing to rain on the Tuesday the course was soft and at the end heavy after a sharp fall just before six. Six events figured and one can only say that entries were satisfactory.

The seventh and last day of the Poona big meeting came off on Saturday in splended weather, a huge crowd was present and some most exciting finishes were seen. It was a great day for the Books and the handicapper has throughout given us something to think about. A more patient and able starter than Mr. O'Gorman would take finding and Captain Hughes, with his Stewards, has the congratulations and thanks of all racing people for his success during the absence of Mr. Cecil Grey.

Half of those entered scratched in the Deccan Plate, including Seclusion and Chassepot, Lord Boyne and Clear Artist were the favoured ones. Bond got a nasty fall from Golden Morn and has, I believe, broken his wrist and arm. The remaining four raced well bunched, Clear Artist in front of Cairnsmore. At the last jump the leader pecked badly and nearly got Chassepot into trouble, Cairnsmore going away to win comfortably.

A great performance was put up by the old champion, Bay Middleton, in the Ghorpuri Plate when he carried 10st. 7lb. It was an open betting race with Scimitar and Mountain King giving way in favour of Betty. As usual, Mountain King was taken to the front, and so easily was he going on entering the straight that all looked over. When Betty, Minx and Bay Middleton came, however, he fell back. Robinson nursed the bay with consummate judgment, and when within a few lengths of the post shot out to just get there by a neck with Sir Jamal coming late to finish within a head of Betty.

Another splendid finish took place in the Stewards' Purse, for which Hunting Horn was favourite, The Master and Sugar Apple next. Coquette jumped away with a clear four-length lead from Metal Boy. At the bend Hunting Horn came outside whereas The Master found an opening in the middle. Down the straight it was a ding dong finish, The Master squeezing home by a head, Sugar Apple a close third.

With thirteen starters, the Turf Club Cup was a puzzler, Precious suddenly shortening till he became a warm favourite. From the start, Gladiator was driven to the front and soon led by over twenty lengths, Dilerjung, Mooreed, Antica, Soheil and Precious next. At the five furlongs Antica went after the leader, and at the bend Swalior and Precious, the latter of these looking as though he would pass Gladiator. He, however, just had enough left in him to get there by a neck from Swalior, Precious a head behind.

Out of four outings Wise Bird, in the September Plate, won for the third time though Picturesque was better fancied. Picturesque and Master Theo led her to the bend, but here she passed the former and, gradually drawing up, passed the latter going well in hand.

We ended the day with an upset in the Kirkee Plate when Lookman, Shanwar and False Start were most backed. At the bend, False Start looked likely to walk home, but Vasco and Lookman later went to the front and Vasco got to the post a short head in front after a desperate race.

First was the Bhamburda Plate with four runners, and even with 11-12 on her back Recovery was an odds on favourite from Tete-a-Tete, the Champion Chase runners scarcely in the betting. With a view to making the top weight carry it all, Tete-a-Tete's stable companion, Robin, was sent away to make the running and soon held a huge lead of twenty lengths, Perquisite as far last. The two fancied ones began to close up at the six and later passed the leader. It was soon evident that all was over, and Recovery pulling double won the third out of three outings over the sticks.

A bad upset occurred in the Lilliput Handicap for 13-3's and under, in which Grey Falcon was favourite from Scimitar, Darby and Saree. The first was left and never in it, Yatim making the pace from the next two mentioned. At the bend Darby passed the other two with Sir Jamal and Rajput coming up, and after a bit of a race in the straight Sir Jamal won comfortably, Saree coming through late after a bad start.

The Mile Stand Plate had nine with a strong run on Posco, making her a better fancied one than Mallinyook. Most punters were in the dark about the mare's staying powers, but gave the stable, who have plenty of good trying tackle, the credit of knowing. There was never any doubt about it, as she went to the front followed by Mallinyook, Admiral Crichton and Sacristan, and these three could make but little impression on her down the straight.

So many smart short-distance ponies have we that the All Pony Plate took picking, Comeback being made favourite from Koko, Chippy Norton, Gun Metal and Florrie. To begin with, Chippy Norton after giving trouble got away badly, Gun Metal jumping out in front from Florrie, Koko and Comeback. Comeback and Encourage at the bend passed all but the leader who, though the lead was reduced to half a length, stayed the favourite out.

Open betting in the Desert Handicap saw False Start in greater demand than Lookman, Amood, and Company. For over half the journey Osborne made the running from Ashroff and False Start, the former of these then coming to the front with Lookman and Amood making up their ground. Entering the straight Amood came into the lead and comfortably stayed out the other with Company coming through too late. Antica also put in a late run passing False Start and dead-heating with Ashroff for fourth place.

The Paddock Plate found four out of the seven backed—Rustile, Prince Lyon, Mozart and Lady Metal in that order. Prince Lyon was unfortunate at the start but Rustile, after a break by Alruna, soon assumed command. Lady Metal was second, but was passed by Mozart and Dormant in the straight, Rustile going well within herself and romping in by three lengths.

The final bout of the middle weight contests at the S. I. Athletic Association Boxing tournament, which was held over owing to the illness of one of the principals on Saturday, the 19th ultimo, was fought on the following Monday. It was an excellent fight, Pte. Cook (Worcesters) eventually defeating Pte. Hall (Leicesters). The same evening several interesting special contests were put through, and the tournament brought to a successful conclusion.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 11th September 1908.

The King has returned from his month's "cure" at Marienbad, looking extremely well, and feeling the same, vide official report. He was enthusiastically greeted at Kings' Cross and, after holding a short reception at Buckingham Palace left by train for Rufford Abbey. The Doncaster week has been remarkable for house parties of exceptional brilliance, record crowds at the races and phenomenally fine weather, so that His Majesty's visit has been as completely successful as all Royal visits should be.

While I am on the subject of distinguished visitors I may remark that the Maharajah of Cooch Behar is at the moment a guest of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland at Dunrobin Castle.

Only one other item of social intelligence I have been able to glean this week—to-morrow's big wedding at St. Margaret's, Westminister, when Mr. Winston-Churchill weds Miss Clementine Hozier. The wedding is being well written up, already four columns have been devoted to the list of presents: I suppose some people wade through this class of "news," on the front page; many consider the right place for it is among the advertisements.

The latest addition to Clubland is the Billiard Control Club which has taken spacious premises close to Piccadilly Circus and it will, one hears, be run on the most approved West End Club lines. The Earl of Rutland, Lord Lonsdale, Mr. R. H. Rimington Wilson and several other well-known sporting and social lights are at the head of the enterprise. They will form the Council and will adjudicate on all questions referred to them and one of the first items on their long list of reforms will be the entire recasting of the present rules.

It is more than probable that the principal matches this season, including the professional tournament organised by Messrs. Borroughes and Watts, will be played under these rules. The safety miss in a limited form will again come into existence a common-sense supervision of the "anchor" cannon and legislation on the touching ball may be expected. If fore-thought and the experience gained through watching the mistakes which the body it supersedes count for anything, the Billiard Control Club and Union should work incalculable benefit on the future of the game of billiards. This, I presume, marks the end of the Billiard Association of Great Britain. Of course, the prospect of obtaining a set of rules that will give general satisfaction is welcome, but, as during the last few years all billiard legislation has been opposed from one quarter or another, it is not certain that the new body will succeed any more than has the Billiard Association.

I referred a week or two ago to what I considered the "hard bargain" of the National Gallery—the £25,000 portrait group by Frans Hals. It has now been hung, a re-arrangement of some of the picture in Room 10 having been necessary, and in spite of

If, as we must almost believe, there is a laughter cillus, it must be infection-carrying. For months irth has had its abode at Wyndham's Theatre, d hardly has the echo of the laughter from When Knights Were Bold" died out there than was last night aroused afresh by the first perfor- ance of "The Early Worm." The basis of the ory is, of course, an old one. A girl in love, oubtful of the stability of her fiancee's affection, ncourages another suitor to spur the inattentive nd confident one's affection. Sybil Annesley nd Lady Steyne, finding lover and elderly hus- and out on a prolonged motor trip with two unde- esirables of the other sex, try retaliation, one by upplying the ridiculous pretender to her hand vith funds to buy the yacht of her too confident iancee, the Duke of Tadcaster, the other by writing to her husband's old religious aunt the account of her elderly husband's peccadilloes.

The yacht is duly bought with Sybil Annesley's money and "The Early Worm," the medium, made to invite the ladies to spend the day on board, where entertainment is provided by the sad-faced boy steward, alternately bribed by both pretenders to fall overboard and be rescued as proof of their respec- tive bravery. All is duly discovered, and so to the conventional end, with really clever and original episodes.

In the ridiculous but wide awake "Early Worm" Mr. Weedon Grossmith has a part that just fits, and, needless to say, one of which he makes the most. In the wife of the elderly Lord Steyne, Miss Fanny Brough has also every opportunity, while the rest of the cast made the best of the many good things supplied by the play. Altogether a most clever and amusing production, "The Early Worm" should not fail to secure a long run of popularity.

Surrounded by all that magnificence and beauty of mounting with which the name of Mr. Beerbohm Tree is so closely allied, the much heralded new version of "Faust" was produced at His Majesty's Theatre on Saturday. There was an audience typi- cal of an opening performance at His Majesty's— that is to say, an audience containing many distin- guished men and women—and crowds of enthusiasts in the cheaper parts of the house, who had waited many hours for the opening of the doors. And the result of it all was a hearty reception and yet another triumph for Mr. Tree's art as a character- actor, and an interpreter of the weird and the sinister.

Many novel effects in the way of stage lighting and stage mechanism are introduced. The scenery— for which Mr. Joseph Harker is responsible—is beautifully painted; the grouping of the figures is a masterpiece of the stage manager's art, and there are many wonderful lighting effects. With the latter, however, we have one reason for complaint— there is such a lot of red limelight. In this respect, indeed, the piece occasionally takes one back to one's youthful days, when the demon of the pantomime lived amidst crimson surroundings. But, on the whole, the effect of the mounting is impressive.

Let me say at once that Mr. Tree has added yet another wonderful portrait to the wonderful gallery with which he has impressed and thrilled London. And yet it is a long time since he has played a part in which his several peculiar manner- isms have been more pronounced. The left hand on the hip, the forefinger of the right hand point- ing upwards—that is his constant attitude. But he gives the character force and power, and a dignity that sometimes approaches the beautiful. A little terrible, a little pathetic, largely repulsive, but sometimes almost lovable, and always fascinating, Mr. Tree's performance as Mephistopheles has a wonderful magnetism, and stands out among his finest work.

Mr. Henry Ainley with his fine voice, his striking features, and his splendid bearing, is seen at his best as Faust. Miss Marie Lohr gives a surprising amount of character to the part of Margaret—whose growth of love for Faust is very cleverly and subtly suggested both by authors and actress—and amongst others who stand out in bold relief in a long cast are Miss Rosina Filippi, Miss Madge Titheradge, Mr. Charles Quartermaine, Mr. Norman Page, and Mr. Godfrey Tearle. Altogether a notable night, some notable acting, and an interesting play.

A possible and perfectly human—though Ame- rican—story is presented to us in "Paid in Full" written by Mr. Eugene Walter and played for the first time at the Aldwych last Monday night. Joseph Brooks, a collector in the employ of the Latin-American Steamship Company, is married to the elder daughter of Captain Harris, deceased, late associate in business with Captain Williams, president of the Latin-American Steamship Com- pany. Brooks' salary is but a small one; he cannot give his wife the luxuries that were hers before marriage; he can see she is fading under the strain, and these things, and his cramped life make him morose and discontented.

At last he gets desperate. He has money belong- ing to the Trust. He uses a note to take his wife to a theatre. Once on the way the rest is easy. To explain the sudden access of wealth Brooks says that Williams has trebled his salary, and also given him six months' back pay on the raised rate.

Meanwhile, Captain Williams has gone on a voyage taking with him James Smith, Superinten- dent of Dockage of the Company. The fat is in the fire on his return. Smith, the truest of pals to Joseph Brooks and his wife, flies to the apart- ments of Brooks at once, and tells him Williams knows to a farthing what he has taken, and that detectives are watching him. Brooks suggests to his wife that she should visit Williams at his rooms and arrange things.

Williams tests Emma Brooks to the full; she is not found wanting and she leaves Williams flat with a "character" for her husband in her pocket. Emma Brooks tells her husband just what a mean, lying poor thing of a man he is and leaves him.

Mr. Louis Calvert, as Captain Williams, and Mr. Paul Arthur, as James Smith, were both very fine. Mr. Robert Loraine, called upon at short notice through Mr. H. V. Esmond's indisposition, was also quite satisfactory as Joseph Brooks. Miss Hilda Antony was rather overweighted as Emma Brooks, although much of her work was excellent. Needless to say, Miss Kate Sergeantson, as Mrs. Harris was, as ever, a pleasure to watch and listen to; and Miss Daisy Markham did all that her part demanded.

"The Duke's Motto" at the Lyric has naturally thrown the devoted band of Wallerites into ecsta- sies; it doesn't take much to do that you may say, but the noisy, flamboyant Mr. Waller in a swagger- ing, virile part with a sword hardly out of his hand from rise to fall of curtain will certainly do it every time, if the first night's reception on Tuesday is any indication. It is a transcript from the French by Mr. J. H. M'Carthy and is in some respects not altogether up to the standard he has taught us to expect; but it is romantic drama of robust type. The hero is always on the kill, indeed "Amok" would perhaps be a more appropriate title for the piece. It is full of effective scenes, and gives the impres- sion, of original work even though it may lack distinction.

The story, briefly, is the murder of the Duc de Nevers, who has contracted a secret marriage, ar- ranged by his kinsman and heir. To the band of assassins employed comes Henri Lagardere, gentle- man, ex-player, duellist, soldier of fortune, who has arranged a meeting with the Duc de Nevers himself to settle the question of swordsmanship. From the assassins he learns their object, and devotes himself to its defeat, and to save the Duke. In the night he is approached by the treacherous kinsman, and act- ing under his instructions, has the infant daughter of the Duke committed to his care. In the attack by the assassins which follows, the Duke and he are driving the bravos off, when the villainous kinsman stabs the Duke in the back. Lagardere escapes with the child, and during the next seventeen years wanders with her, killing off one by one the band of bravos. By mixture of craft and courage, he succeeds in the end in restoring the girl to her rightful position, having also incidentally won her love, and ending as her husband.

Mr. Lewis Wallers' methods secured for the part of Henri de Lagardere a great personal success and he had capable and ample support as the great- hearted, sinner—slaughtering Henri. He began with a rousing scrimmage in the first act—he and ill-fated Louis de Nevers against some nine opponents. He was at it again in the second act, and not to encum- ber the stage with dead, despatched one of his rash assailants "off."

By the end of the third act he was able to shout: "The last of the lackeys has gone; now for their master," and in the nick of time, before the final curtain fell, he had accounted for the master, the murderous Louis de Gonzague.

It was a sanguinary evening reminding one of a family feud in the Malay Archipelego or a change of Government in Nepal. Long before the play was over we had lost all reckoning of the casualties. What with the men we saw Lagardere kill before our eyes and those he assured us he had killed, in odd moments, the total dead and missing must have been enormous.

The parts of the lost daughter and her bereaved mother were sympathetically rendered by Miss Valli Valli and Miss Carlisle ; while Mr. Shiel Barry and Mr. Herbert Druce did full justice to their parts. The scenery was excellent, and a word of praise may be spared to the music specially composed for the play. A most commendable feature, and one rare at first nights, was the promtitude of the performance, everything going as smoothly as if the drama had already progressed far into its run.

As an anti-motor bus man and a persistent patron of the old fashioned omnibus the report presented at the forty-ninth annual general meeting of the London General Omnibus Company distresses me and the many thousands of Londoners who make it almost a point of honour never to be seen on the evil smelling engines of destruction which disgrace the city just now. The Company has had a disastrous year : the receipts have fallen off, the expenses have increased, the traffic has decreased owing to the giving up of many horse vehicles and to competition. The number of passengers carried showed a falling-off of over 12,000,000 as compared with the year before! The Company decide to struggle on pluckily in the face of the competition of legitimate rivals and what the Chairman alluded to as "the unfair and unjust competition of the L.C.C." in respect of their tramways.

RECORD BAG OF POLAR BEARS

MR. C. V. H. PELL, F.R.G.S., and a big game smiter of the hip and thigh order, recently returned to his home in Oxford and has been giving the English papers some of the incidents of his five weeks' trip into the Arctic regions. He had with him nine others, Germans, and they got within 20 miles of Franz Josef Land, 3,000 miles from England.

"In ten consecutive days," said Mr. Pell, "we shot twenty great Polar bears, some of them over eight feet long ; thirty-nine seals, one walrus, and a number of Arctic foxes. This is an absolutely record bag for so short a time. The value of the twenty bears' skins, when dressed, would be about £200."

Mr. Peel described how, becoming separated from two companions on the ice, he encountered and shot a couple of the Polar bears in the space of a few seconds. "Directly they saw me, the two awkward brutes bore down in my direction at a shambling run. At fifty yards I fired at the first with my Mauser rifle. The bear fell dead. But the other did not retreat. Instead, it made a dash for me.

"Firing again, I struck it in the hind-quarters, but only succeeded in wounding it. Fortunately, instead of coming upon me before I could reload the bear turned with a snarl and began to bite furiously at its wound. This gave me a moment's respite, and I managed to shoot it dead.

"Herr de Gisbert, the organiser of the expedition, was charged by a wounded bear, and narrowly escaped. He killed the animal when it was only a few yards away from him.

"Our hunting methods were as follows : A look out man, stationed with a telescope in a crow's nest upon the mast of our steamer, first sighted our quarry for us. Then we set off across the ice in pursuit. When we came up with a bear we lay down upon the ice and flapped our arms up and down. This manœuvre led the bears to imagine that we were seals, and caused them to approach within range.

"The hardships of the sport were considerable. The temperature was several degrees below zero, and an icy north wind made it seem frightfully cold. But we had one compensation : it was as light during the night-time as in the day, and we were able to shoot during the whole of the twenty-four hours.

"We took enough food with us, consisting of canned meats, vegetables, and bottled beers and wines, to last for a year, as there is always a danger of being wedged in an ice floe.

"As an indication of this, I may mention that as we were returning towards land in our little steamer, a 450-ton craft, we found that the channel through which we were passing had become closed by ice immediately ahead of us. As it might have taken us many months to discover another clear channel, our captain decided to try and break through the ice. The steamer's engines were reversed. Then, at full speed ahead, we charged the ice. The ship's bow struck it with a tremendous impact, and, to our joy, a crack began to appear, which widened until we were able to steer through to clear ater.

"Then fogs beset us, and we were in peril from great floating icebergs, some of which towered 300ft. high above the deck of our vessel. But we managed to reach Trondhjem, in Norway, which was our base of operations, without disaster."

THE LANG EJECTOR.

ALTHOUGH the changes made in the mechanism of sporting guns have, of late years, been confined chiefly to details, the process of improvement has never been stayed. Walking down Bond Street recently the writer took refuge in Messrs. Lang and Son's showroom from a torrential rain storm. After exchanging ideas on the subject of the partridge shooting season with Mr. White, the managing director of the firm, attention was diverted to an unstocked gun, "in the white" as the gun-makers say, which was fitted with the new Lang ejector. The mechanism is of the familiar "push-over-centre" system, and the improvement one of detail only. At the same time, it represents a not inconsiderable advance, in that while increasing the strength of the gun body it simplifies the ejector, rendering it less liable to get out of order, and so adds to the efficiency and durability of the whole weapon.

Ejector mechanism, although as a rule far from complex, is not very readily understood by one unversed in the technicalities of the subject. This probably is accounted for by the fact that practically the whole ejector is boxed in by the fore-end and cannot be properly seen even if the gun be stripped for examination. Nearly all ejectors consist of hammers arranged to hit the extractor legs, so that instead of the extractors coming gradually out, as they do when an unfired gun is opened, they are, so to speak, jerked out, and eject the empty case after firing. These hammers are cocked like the firing hammers and they have to be released when the firing hammers have fallen and a cartridge has been fired. This release is usually effected by some limb operated by the firing hammer, which is called a tripper, and there must be a connection of this kind between the lock and the ejector. In guns cocked by the fall of the barrels there exists already a connection between the lock and the fore-end in the form of the cocking dogs, arms or lifters which project through the knuckle of the gun, and the limb to trip the ejectors may conveniently be placed by the side of the cocking arm. In Fig. 1 there is shown a section of the fore-end at the knuckle with the slots cut to allow of the working of lifters and ejector trippers, one for either lock.

LANG'S EJECTOR MECHANISM.

The improvement introduced by Messrs. Lang and Son, Limited, consists chiefly in utilising the cocking lifters themselves to serve the purpose of ejector trippers. In Fig. 2 the slots in the fore-end for the new ejector are shown. As the slots in the gun body exactly correspond, it will readily be seen that by reducing the width of the slot this strengthens the action, the slots being exactly the same as though no ejector were used at all. From this circumstance arises the very great advantage that a non-ejector can be converted into an ejector without interfering in any way with the lock work or body. This having been made clear it remains to deal with the alteration in the ejector itself, which makes the improvement possible.

As the cocking arms or lifters at all times project from the body into the fore-end it is obvious that these projections can be utilised to trip, or release the rejectors when the gun is opened. But if arranged to do it at all they must operate in some way on the cams whether or not the locks are at cock. The essence of the improvement lies in the ingenious provision of an extension from the cams, in which extention is fitted a small plunger rod as indicated by the dotted lines in Fig. 3. The extension brings the cams into contact with the toes of the cocking arms. Now let us suppose that one barrel has been fired and the other has not. One cocking rod will lie in its slot, trapped so to speak by the fallen hammer, and the other will lie loose in the slot. When the gun is opened the cocking rod of the discharged lock will take its bearing on the side of the plunger in its ejector cam, and as the barrels drop the cam will be pushed over on its pivot until it goes over centre and ejects. The cocking rod of the other barrel will bear on the top of the plunger in the second ejector cam and instead of pushing the cam over, it will merely press the plunger up without disturbing the position of the cam. In this particular form, the selective mechanism is contained in the cam instead of in the tripper. The improvement is one that well deserves commendation, for it has been ingeniously thought out and represents a real simplification of what is perhaps the most delicate part of the mechanism of the gun.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—On the 5th of September I bagged 3 couple of snipe here, all Pintails and new arrivals from Tibet. Later in the month, the 17th to be precise, of a total of 10½ couple bagged no less than 4 were Fantails. Surely this is remarkably early for the European bird even for the Southern Shan States ?

Could you or any of your readers kindly let me know the earliest recorded date the Fantail has been shot in Upper Burma.

RINGED BIRDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

THE winter-quarters and routes of our migrant bi are until now yet unknown and there is only one meth which leads to positive knowledge on this account : marking of birds by aluminium rings, a method wh has been tried with success in Germany and in Denma as a house stork marked in Pomerania, was caught Africa, 15° S. of the Equator. The Hungarian Cent Bureau for Ornithology has now also begun the marking young storks, herons, gulls and swallows. The aluminiu ring is fastened around the leg of the bird and it bears each case the inscription "Budapest," followed by a numb which corresponds to the entry in the register-book of t Hungarian Central Bureau for Ornithology. Anyon catching such a marked bird or hearing of the capture such, is kindly requested to send the ring on to t Hungarian Central Bureau for Ornithology, József-kör 65, Budapest VIII., Hungary, accompanied by a noti stating the locality, time and particulars of capture.

THE PESHAWAR-KOHAT HORSE AND CATTLE SHOW FOR THE YEAR 1908-1909.

1. The above Horse and Cattle Show will be held on the 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th November 1908, instead of, as heretofore, in the spring.

2. Attention is invited to the following new features, introduced with the object of popularising the show as a general market.

3. In addition to the usual classes, restricted to bonâ-fide breeders of the Peshawar and Kohat districts, prizes will be awarded in two Open classes, viz. (i) for horses, (ii) for mules irrespective of the district of origin or status of owner, but will be strictly conditional on the winners being sold during the fair.

4. No fee will be charged for entry.

5. In the case of breeder's exhibits from the Peshawar and Kohat districts, fodder will be provided free. In other cases arrangements will be made to supply fodder if desired at fixed rates.

6. It is hoped that both purchasing officers and dealers will avail themselves of the opportunity of visiting the fair.

7. Further particulars will be supplied on application to the Secretary, District Board, Peshawar.

Entries for Races.

THE AUTUMN HANDICAPS.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE AND CESAREWITCH.

THE acceptances for the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire are both in a way disappointing, but the weights remain as adjusted.

The White Knight has accepted for the Cesarewitch, and Galvani saves the situation in the shorter race by accepting with 9st., Dean Swift (9st. 5lb.) and Elder (9st. 2lb.), both the others over the requisite 9st., having withdrawn.

Altogether there are forty-seven left in out of eighty-three in the Cesarewitch and in the Cambridgeshire fifty-nine have cried content out of an entry of ninety-six. The following are the accepters :—

"HAVE you adequate police protection for your house?" asked a man of a friend who was residing in a lonely spot.

"Rather," was the reply. "Why, we've got the prettiest servant-girl in the country."

"I'VE got a washing machine here," began the inventor.

The capitalist looked at him in the cold, calculating manner common to capitalists and answered.

"Well, if I were you, I'd run straight home and use it."

That night the Anarchist circle received another application for membership.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS).

LONDON, Friday, 11th September 1908.

KEMPTON PARK.

THAT the summer has not yet departed was amply demonstrated at Kempton Park on Saturday, as the afternoon was beautifully bright. There was hardly a breath of wind, and though at times the sky over-clouded, it was only for fleeting moments, and the sun held the mastery and lent lustre to the scene. That people are coming back to town after the holiday season was proved by the attendance, despite the fact that sportsman, preparing for the big Leger week, wanted a Saturday to look round in, and the company was a great improvement on Gatwick, Derby, or Lewis, many prominent patrons of the Turf turning up in the members' enclosure, in which the dainty toilettes of the fair sex lent additional colour. Fields panned out well, and backers had a rare day out, as with six favourites successful out of the seven events, the bookmakers generally had a bad time of it. Results :—

DONCASTER.

IF some of the many little Yorkshire meetings are reduced to mediocrity, and no longer carry the weight they did before the era of the gate, the two principal gatherings, York and Doncaster seem to have caught and absorbed the waning interest to strengthen their time-honoured programmes, and keep up the old Yorkshire charter. This is as it should be. The programme on the opening day as usual, included, outside the crack three-year-olds of the season, most of our best-class platers and promising two-year-olds, and all sportsmen who could afford the time had come to see the various issues fought out, the Town Moor for the nonce representing the stadium of the Turf.

The King, who returned from Marienbad hearty and strong, motored over on this occasion from Rufford with Lord and Lady Savile's party, and his welcome presence accounted for one of the most brilliant gatherings from the county of many acres ever seen at Doncaster.

From an early hour the sport-loving "Tykes" began an exodus along the wide elm-bordered boulevard which the London Road affords from Bennithorpe, and trains setting down in quick succession supplied a nucleus at the stations that kept the ever-increasing stream well supplied. Vehicles of every descriptions, some of which had come miles since early dawn, fell into the steady vehicular line so well controlled by the police.

Along the far side of the rails was a broad riband of humanity, backed by a phalanx of traps, and every point of vantage along the course was occupied by enthusiastic skirmishers. The rings were so crowded that locomotion was a matter of some difficulty, the attendance being estimated to be the largest which has ever been seen on the historic moor. The going was good, fields panned out well, and finishes were close and exciting. Results :—

All the world connected with racing seemed on the moor on Wednesday and among the earliest arrivals was the King. The broken weather did not make the slightest difference to the enormous crowds, and, apart from the minor racing, they had plenty of entertainment before witnessing the St. Leger. The great race was won in rather comfortable style by Mr. J. B. Joel's Your Majesty, from Mr. Hall Walker's White Eagle and eight others.

Mr. Hall Walker ran three, his first colours being worn by White Eagle, and Pom and Royal Realm, wearing distinguishing caps of white and blue. Signorinetta looked well in the paddock, and great popular interest was taken in the filly by the Yorkshire crowd, who cheered her in the parade and canter, and gave a marked reception to her rider, W. Bullock. This jockey, it should be said, looked none the worse for his short sojourn in the Newmarket Hospital.

Your Majesty was sweating profusely, but comported himself well, and the slight delay which occurred before Mr. Willoughby thought well to pull the lever was due to Pom and Bembo. The pair, on either extreme, behaved fractiously. Both, like Santo Strato, were in hood and blinkers.

The troop paraded in the order of the numbered card, but White Eagle, otherwise in perfect trim, showed a lot of temper, and in the canter tried to bolt with Maher. Indeed, for a moment it seemed as if the colt would charge the farther palings. Meanwhile, in the betting Mr. Joel's horse was all the rage tens being offered against the most dangerous of his rivals, though rather fancy rates were laid against Primer and Norman III. for places.

Pom was backed by a certain big speculator as the best outsider, and, drawn on the inside left, he began well, and led the field for more than a mile. Pom at the outset was followed by Santo Strato, Your Majesty, Primer, Royal Realm, Norman III., while Signorinetta and White Eagle figured as rearmost for fully a furlong. Here Royal Realm dashed up immediately behind his stable companion but was beaten at the rifle butts and dropped away as whipper-in.

Bembo then raced up to Pom's quarters, but both collapsed at the bend and immediately after entering the straight Your Majesty, beautifully handled by Walter Griggs, went ahead. White Eagle quickly became second and put in a most resolute challenge. For a few seconds the struggle seemed about to become intensely exciting, but the Eagle could not catch Your Majesty, and the victor thus confirmed the Eclipse Stakes form. Santo Strato four lengths behind, was third, where as his stable companion Norman III., finished last. Pom got fourth, Primer fifth, Ebor next, and Signorinetta seventh, in front of Royal Realm and Bembo. The time taken to cover the mile six furlongs and 132 yards was 3mins. 6secs. which is good rather than brilliant.

Lord Carnarvon expected Bembo to run with more distinction but apart from the St. Leger the owner of the scarlet is having a really good time at the meeting. Lord Carnarvon made a successful coup yesterday, and this afternoon led off by winning the Cleveland Handicap with St. Cyril, an outsider, and later on captured the Bradgate Park Nursery with For Bay. In the former race Temeraire showed again a lack of stamina. St Cyril, a very useful two-year-old, developed into a roarer, and now has a tube in the throat His form this season, as witness the selling race at Brighton, has been very mixed, but he now made short work of the lot in the Three-Year-Old Handicap.

The clever division connected with Canonite reckoned on repeating a success similar to that at Hurst Park, and betted with great confidence, albeit there were nearly a score of competitors. For Bay however, upset their calculations, and secured a rich stake for the Whatcombe stable.

Lord Durham was represented in the Rufford Abbey Plate by Glacis rather than Mercredi. The race won would not involve any penalty for a Cesarewitch candidate, and as Glacis is much fancied for that handicap, speculators now thought they should see a capital trial for the big Newmarket event and win money as well. Evens was accepted about Glacis, but he was decisively beaten by Yentoi.

The winner was well backed and his success gave great satisfaction to the owner, Lady de Bathe. The competitors had scarcely travelled a furlong when Father Blind slipped and fell at the bend, and the Honeybird colt ran right out. Yentoi secured a very long lead especially measured by the distance separating him from Glacis. Obviously Maher on the latter, expected to readily make up the ground in the straight but he was unable to and suffered defeat by two lengths.

Ardeer, heavily backed for the Milton Stakes brought his supporters to grief. It was won by Athlete, and Pameldry, who got second, was disqualified for carrying the wrong weight. The Whirlpool, a failure at York, made amends in the Tattersall Sale Stakes, scoring quite in a canter from Jacobite and others. Results :—

Pom, on the inside, showed the way to Santo Strato, Your Majesty, Primer, Royal Realm, Norman III., on the outside and Signorinetta, with White Eagle, bringing up the rear. So they raced for a furlong, when Royal Realm went on second in front of Santo Strato, Primer, Bembo, Your Majesty, and Ebor. Passing the rifle butts, Royal Realm was beaten, and became last before another hundred yards had been covered, Bembo closing with Pom in front of Your Majesty and Santo Strato, with White Eagle in close pursuit. Entering the straight Pom and Bembo were beaten, whereupon Your Majesty took up the running, and resisting the challenge of White Eagle a quarter of a mile from home, the favourite won comfortably by half a length ; four lengths dividing second and third. A Remarkable Book ON THE Preservation of Health.

The French have a particularly happy phrase which, literally translated, means "The Joy of Living." It conjures up in the mind's eye a picture of buoyant health and happiness which appeals with particular force to the jaded Anglo-Indian. Yet there is no earthly reason why the residents in the Tropics should not share that exhilaration of well-being with our sprightly Gallic friends.

That is exactly what a physician long resident in India now comes forward to show in a timely and fascinating publication with the very tempting title "How to keep well in India," a title that will find a sympathetic echo in every heart from Calcutta to Bombay and from Peshawar to Madras.

How to keep well in India is so easy, too, if you only know how. And this the doctor proceeds to tell us in such a breezy style that after reading it we feel that we possess the master key to health.

The author plunges right into his subject by first telling us frankly that many make the fatal mistake of attempting to regulate life on the European plan. There is hope and cheer in the declaration that "it is absurd to suppose that the European cannot live and enjoy life in the Tropics."

After the quaintdaaradox that "your stomach is only half a stomach in India," he dwells upon the necessity for supplying the stomach with something rich in that element which goes to build up the nerve health and without which there can be no bodily health, viz., phosphorus. And it is equally essential, the writer says, "that we should supply this substance in an easily digestible form, for the stomach is, as we have heard, a low-power one."

"It is here," declares this medical authority, "the tonic food called Sanatogen comes in as an aid to diet. It is so easily digestible that patients in the acute stage of enteric fever are constantly being fed on it, and it administers the vitalising substance upon which the vital forces actually depend, and in such a manner that the hungry tissues can seize upon them and adapt them to their various needs."

There is the solution of the whole problem And then a grave note of warning is sounded by this expert. Digestive disorders are the frequent forerunners of enteric fever and dysentery. "In this connection," says the doctor, "it must never be forgotten that we live not on what we eat but on what we absorb."

After pointing out the special milk dangers in India, he says:—"In Sanatogen we have a substance which is milk and yet is better than milk. Milk," he observes, "consists roughly of Casein and water. The Casein or nitrogenous part is made the basis of this new nerve food Sanatogen, which is almost universally recognised by medical men as the scientific food."

"In Sanatogen," he goes on to say, "we have 95 per cent. of Casein combined with 5 per cent. of phosphorus, the combination supplying the most powerful known substance for both stimulating and feeding the nerves."

He proves conclusively that with its high nutritive value Sanatogen forms at once an almost perfect and complete diet for the low-power system of the average Anglo-Indian.

He quotes, amongst others, the testimony of the famous Dr. Ewald, of the University of Berlin, who declared after an extensive series of experiments with enteric patients treated with Sanatogen that: "The inference to be drawn from our experiments is that Sanatogen, on account of its ready absorption and its perfectly non-irritant character, may be used with great advantage for increasing the nutritive value of a given diet in all cases of physical weakness, as well as in the acute stages of all those maladies accompanied by rise of temperature, and particularly in enteric fever."

His graphic pen brings home to us most forcefully how Sanatogen is a better tonic than alcohol; how it is indispensable in low fever, Dysentery, Malarial Fevers, and he concludes with some most profitable advice which every Anglo-Indian should read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest.

His points are pregnant with significance. To take only one of the many rich nuggets contained in this gold mine of information: "Don't be conquered by the debility which supervenes on most tropical ailments and allow yourself to drift into the 'interesting invalid' condition; you may be interesting to yourself but you will be but a bore to others."

And then he goes right on to tell us how to shake off the deadly debility.

"How to keep well in India" is absorbingly interesting throughout; plain, straightforward, and to the point. It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well.

A limited number of specimen copies of this interesting booklet will be distributed free of charge and can be obtained from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO., CALCUTTA, who also stock Sanatogen.

Price, Rs. 3 per bottle.

From G. A. R., Bettiah Champaran:—"I was suffering with diarrhœa, with which I was attacked nearly nine months ago, and all known remedies were greedily taken down by me, but to no avail, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Papiya.' My digestive organs which were considerably deranged are now as right as possible; the distressing symptoms attendant on indigestion have now almost entirely left me and I heartily thank you for the preparation, which through the intervention of a Kind Providence you have successfully brought before the public."

From Mrs. E. L. M., Asansol, E. I. R.—"I had very bad Dyspepsia. My food used to turn rotten and sour in my stomach, and I used one bottle of Essence of Papiya and now I am sure I could digest a brick, it has thoroughly cured me of my Dyspepsia, hence I have so much confidence in your medicines. You certainly deserve credit for introducing such a medicine to poor suffering Dyspeptics."

You may certainly publish what I have said about your Papiya Essence.

From Mrs. Elizabeth Wagentreiber, Delhi:—"With much pleasure and many thanks I beg to acknowledge the benefit I derived from your far famed 'Essence of Papiya.' I suffered from Dyspepsia in a most painful form, and found great relief after taking the first two bottles, and continued to take four more. After the sixth I felt so much better that I left off taking it regularly, but if at any time, I feel the old pain and symptoms returning I immediately take another bottle of the Essence. I am now able to eat more and can change my diet without fear of what were to me most dreaded attacks of indigestion."

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

To the great football public, Saturday the 5th instant was the opening day of the season. It was the first half-holiday since the new campaign was ushered in, and the keen appetite of the myriads of supporters of the Soccer code, whetted by the glowing descriptions of the capabilities and possibilities of the playing members of the leading professional organisations, had its reflex in the big attendances at the games connected with the principal leagues. A rough estimate shows that the thirty fixtures of the Football and Southern Leagues attracted an attendance of over 360,000 an average exceeding 12,000 per match a closer analysis revealing that the ten First Division games were played in the presence of 180,000 onlookers. What a testimony to the popularity of the winter pastime!

EARLY SEASON FORM.

Saturday's League games furnished some curious results. At the beginning and end of the football season the philosophical follower of the game, who does not worry about the future, and who does not imagine that an unexpected defeat means the permanent extinction of the glory of the club on which he has bestowed his patronage, is perhaps to be envied. There are many who regard the set-back of Fulham by Glossop, the awful thrashing administered to Norwich by Swindon, the overthrow of Sheffield United by Nottingham Forest, the drubbing of Preston by Manchester United, and the failure of Bristol City against Everton as calamities of almost national importance. That is ridiculous. Moreover, it is one of the chief attractions of football that the results cannot be prophesied with mathematical precision. There is always a possibility of the totally unexpected happening, and were it not so, the pastime would not have seized and held fast the interest of all classes of society. It is well, therefore, to be able to call attention to the fact that in the First Division of the Football League three home teams were beaten on Saturday, and two others only shared points. In the Second Division, two clubs were beaten before their own supporters, and three divided honours, while in the Southern League the two points were gained by visiting teams in a couple of instances, and two others succeeded in effecting a draw. Thus in the 30 games there were 16 home wins, 7 home losses and 7 drawn games. This is a good sporting start.

THE SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

The Metropolitan Southern League clubs had a most unhappy time on Saturday, judged by results. Victory came to only one of the five clubs, and that was where two London teams were in opposition. It was a sore disappointment to the Dockers to be beaten by Plymouth Argyle, and all that Millwall have to show for the two games played at North Greenwich is a single point, and a goal record on the wrong side. West Ham United just failed to hold their own with Brighton at Goldstone-road, and Brentford, at Griffin Park, found Southampton in that kind of mood which enabled them to head the table on a half-dozen occasions in less than ten years. Brentford have a really useful side, but Southampton are above the average, and will have a brillint season if present form be maintained. While admitting the usefulness of the representatives of the Middlesex county town, it is necessary to insist upon an improvement in the half-back line, as that is not equal to the other divisions.

Leyton found Crystal Palace in an aggressive mood at Sydenham, but heavy as the scoring was it pales into comparative insignificance with that in the Swindon-Norwich City game, the railway men netting the ball on ten occasions! What a disastrous beginning for the Canaries—two games, two goals and fourteen against! There is a lot of leeway here to make for up. Northampton confirmed the good impression they made of Gillingham by defeating Coventry City, and Exeter City showed their performance at North Greenwich was not a fluke, as they drew on their own ground with Bristol Rovers. New Brompton made amends for their slip against Northampton, Southend United being compelled to concede the two points, and Portsmouth got the better of their tussle with Watford, but Luton could only draw at home with Reading.

THE LEAGUE.—Division I.

Some cosidered that Manchester United would enjoy a repetition of the triumphal progress of the first half of last season if they maintet the form they showed against Queen's Park Rangers, and they took the first step on Saturday, when they went to Preston, and beat the North End by three clear goals. It was a great shock to the proud town on the Ribble, and others will have to submit to a similar experience if the Champions continue in their present mood. The downfall of Sheffield United before Nottingham Forest was perhaps, the sensation of the afternoon. It is true that last season the games between these clubs were drawn, but it was not thought that the Foresters would improve on their showing when last at Sheffield, or that they would repeat their win of a couple of seasons ago. Everton have opened in brilliant fashion, and Bristol City were put through the mill on their own ground but the game was devoid of really interesting incidents. Both London clubs were away from home, and both were defeated, but in each case only by the odd goal in three. Liverpool had given evidence of their ability in their engagement with Aston Villa but they were fortunate on Saturday to win by a goal that was hotly contested, and as to which an informant says:—"It was rank off-side." The referee thought otherwise, and his opinion is the only one that really matters, so far as results are concerned. There was considerable trepidation down Plumstead way as to what would happen at Nottingham after the debacle at Woolwich but the Arsenal had learned a lesson and with a remodelled attack they gave a much better display against the County and in the closing stages of the game they largely monopolised the play.

Bradford City and Leicester Fosse the two promoted clubs, were defeated on the banks of the Tees and Tyne respectively and Sunderland did not realise expectations at Bury, the home side winning comfottably by 4—2. Sheffield Wednesday did really well to return from Aston Park with a point and Blackburn Rovers showed they are a better team than they were credited with being by sharing the spoils with Manchester City at Hyde road.

THE LEAGUE—Division II.

The Second Division of the League has a very strong interest for the Metropolis, and this was increased by the fine win of Tottenham in their opening game of the season, the hope being encouraged that Leeds City would be compelled to at least yield up a point. It was most unfortunate that Vivian Woodward could not turn out, as his presence would probably have converted a narrow defeat into a victory. Tottenham were the more scientific side, and there is no doubt that they will hold their own in the new sphere they have entered. Fulham have not waited long to rehabilitate themselves in the good graces of their followers. Smarting under the defeat inflicted upon them by Glossop, they made a big effort against Stockport County. The re-arranged defence was a success, and the team working together with homogeneity, outmanœuvred and overplayed their opponents in every department. Clapton Orient have no reason to be ashamed of the result of their trip to Hull. Five goals were scored, and the City captured the points with the odd one.

The two home defeats are significant, because the winning sides were last year's First Leaguers, and aspirants for promotion will have to beware of Birmingham and Bolton. Blackpool's draw at Wolverhampton was meritorious, Derby County are not a spent force without Warren, as proved by their division of the points at Oldham, and West Bromwich Albion should be satisfied with the result of a tough match at Grimsby.

THE GAME IN SCOTLAND.

Saturday in Scotland was like a day at the end of October, the weather being cold and miserable, with heavy rain. Attendances were seriously affected, and the best gate of the day was at Aberdeen, where Rangers met the local club, the drawings amounting to £214., while the poorest was at Hamilton, the match with Kilmarnock only drawing £60. The surprises of the day were served up in Glasgow, Celtic going down on their own ground to St. Mirren, and Partick Thistle being able to divide the points with Dundee.

Celtic were without Quinn, who still felt the effects of the struggle at Dundee the previous week, but his absence was scarcely felt, as Kivlichan who took his place at centre, played a good sound game. It was a remarkable game, as Celtic from beginning to end had the best of matters, but they could not beat Grant, who gave a magnificent exhibition of goalkeeping. The St. Mirren goalkeeper's work on Saturday his work reminded one strongly of Doig, Sunderland's famous goalkeeper, particularly in his neat and effective manner of tipping the ball, when high up, over the bar.

Partick Thistle have not yet secured their new ground in the Maryhill district, and at present they are playing, when possible, their home matches on the Rangers' ground at Ibrox. They had Dundee at Ibrox on Saturday, and after the great display of the Northerners against Celtic the previous week, few had doubts as to the destination of the points. However, the unexpected happened, and Dundee's display came as a big disappointment, on the run of the play, Partick being almost value for both points. Encouraged by the fact that they held Dundee well in the first half, the local men gave a great display in the second, their forwards, headed by a new centre in McPherson, of Inverness Thistle, giving the Dundee defence a very hard time of it, Chaplin at left back being particularly weak.

Against Rangers, Aberdeen were unfortunate in having to take the field without Muir and O'Hagan—two of their best men—while shortly before the interval Halkett, their right half, was so seriously injured that he was of little account for the rest of the game. Rangers got both their points in the opening portion, the first through Bennett, who is playing as well as he did when with Celtic, and the second through Campbell, their centre-half. Colman and Hume did good work for the home men at back, but the rearrangement of their forwards in the second portion Halkett's accident unsettled the front rank, and Rennie in goal for Rangers had little to do.

Even although they are unable to get points, Queen's Park can draw the crowd, and against Hearts at Edinburgh they had the second biggest gate of the day—£195. As a game it was a poor one, neither team showing to advantage, the Edinburgh men, however, doing enough to secure full points, and thus record their first success of the season—unusually late for a team like the Hearts. R. S. McColl has yet to don the colours of the amateurs in a league game this season, and after the good form he showed in the Smith benefit match three weeks ago, one wonders why he delays his appearance, as his experience would go a long way to help the much younger men who compose the amateurs' front rank.

Third Lanark secured their first point of the season against Morton, and their rearranged team, which included a new outside right in Andrew Brady, of Newton, showed a better idea of the game than in previous matches. Hibernians did a good day's work in drawing at Falkirk, Kilmarnock were lucky in drawing with Hamilton Academicals, while Motherwell after a good opening, finished badly against Airdrieonians.

During the close season in Scotland, no question was more keenly debated than the system of free or restricted transfers between clubs and players, some feeling having been aroused by the movements of several prominent players at the end of last season. As a result, the Scottish League have passed a motion that it be remitted to the International League Board to take steps that free or restricted transfers between clubs and players be rendered null and void, and in further clubs are forbidden to enter into such agreements. The action of the Scottish League, however, is an unusual one, and it is questioned if the International Board has powers to interfere between players and clubs to such an extent.

CRICKET

GENTLEMEN vs. PLAYERS.—Played at Scarborough on 3rd, 4th and 5th September. Drawn. The weather on the first day was anything but cricket-like, the e being a cold wind, an absence of sun, and in the afternoon a poor light. The scoring, too was not brisk; in fact, during the four hours play was in progress thirteen wickets went down for 191 runs. The Gentlemen's innings was opened by Fane and Spooner, who were opposed by Tarrant and Cadman. Only eight runs had been made when the last-named sprained a tendon in his right leg, and was compelled to retire after finishing the over, in which he secured Spooner's wicket. Haigh took Cadman's place at the crease, and dismissed Fane, Douglas, and Hutchings in quick succession, the fourth wicket falling at 53. Bosanquet, however, gave an attractive display and in fifty-five minutes scored 38 out of 53 added whilst in. Then followed another collapse, and it was due largely to a last-wicket stand of 27 by Lord Hawke and Knox that the total reached 122, made in two hours and a-half. Tarran bowled with great effect after the luncheon interval taking five wickets in forty-three balls at a cost of only 10 runs. In the last eighty-five minutes of the day the Players batted in a poor light and found Knox's bowling very awkward. Hayward was caught-and-bowled before reaching double figures, but Myers remained with Tyldesley whilst 42 were put on for the second wicket. Denton followed his two hundreds against M. C. C. by failing to score, Bosanquet dismissing him at short-leg by an excellent catch, in making which he rolled over on the ground but maintained his hold of the ball. When rain caused stumps to be drawn at twenty minutes past five, the Players had three wickets down for 59. Tyldesley not out 29. There was a good deal of rain during the night and following morning, and it was not until five minutes past three on Friday afternoon that the game could be resumed. Runs were than found hard to get, and Tarrant and Hirst were soon out. Tyldesley's wicket was the seventh to fall, at 130: he was seen at his best and gave no chance during the hour and three-quarters he was in. Newstead made a useful 23, and the tail wagged vigorously. Buckenham, who hit seven 4's, and Haigh added 47 for the eighth wicket in twenty-five minutes, and the latter and Strudwick, who kept up his wicket whilst his partner hit, the same number for the ninth in twenty minutes. Haigh, who punished Bosanquet for 18 (four 4's and a 2) in an over, made his 51 out of 94 in forty-five minutes: he hit ten 4's the majority of them big drives, and was caught at mid-off. In a minority of 102, the Gentleman scored 4 runs for the loss of Bird's wicket in their second innings in the last quarter-of-an-hour of the day. On Saturday, Napier was soon caught and bowled by Haigh, but Knox showed unusually good form (for him) and scored 35 ere falling to a fine one handed catch at slip. Spooner batted seventy minutes for a stylish 33, but Bosanquet scored only 15 before being bowled by Hirst. When the fifth wicket fell at 109 the Gentlemen were only seven runs on, and the outlook for them was anything but rosy. Hutchings, however, was at his best, and in partnership with Fane put on 164 for the sixth wicket. The latter played a most valuable game, but was quite overshadowed by his partner, who, driving with great power, reached 50 in sixtyfour minutes, and doubled his score in twenty more. In all he made 120 out of 164 in one hundred minutes, hitting a 6, a 5, and fourteen 4's: he was seen quite at his best, and made his runs all round the wicket, though the feature of his display was, as suggested, his driving. With his dismissal the innings was declared closed with seven wickets down for 273, the Gentlemen, thanks to him, having made a capital up-hill fight. As there was not time for the Players to make the runs, and only a very remote possibility of them being dismissed, the closing stage of the match naturally lacked interest to a certain extent. Hayward and Myers made 54 together, and then, upon the latter's dismissal for 41, stumps were drawn. Score and analysis:—

MADRAS.

GOLF.

QUEEN VICTORIA VASE FINAL ROUND.—Play in the final round in the Queen Victoria Jubilee Vase, which has occupied the attention of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club since Tuesday last, was concluded on Saturday, the 5th September, at St. Andrews. The finalists were Mr. A. R. Macallan (owes 1), a young member of the club, and Mr. Edward Blackwell (owes 5). The pair were equally matched, and it was not until the home hole was played out that victory rested with Mr. MacAllan. The weather was not altogether favourable to good golf. Rain was falling at the start, and a strong westerly breeze made straight driving difficult. Mr. Blackwell failed to get a grip of his second to the first hole, and the ball found a resting-place in the shallow bed of the Swilcan. Instead of lifting and playing the penalty, he elected to play the ball, and lofted beautifully on to the green and he won the hole in 5 to 6. A putt of four yards gave Mr. MacAllan the second in 4 to 5, but at the next the older player, profiting by a sliced cleek stroke on the part of his opponent, again assumed the lead with a good 4. A putt of about three yards on the fourth green gave him another 4, and as Mr. MacAllan missed from a shorter distance, Mr. Blackwell's lead was increased to 2 holes. Though Mr. MacAllan took a stroke more at the long hole, his handicap, which came in there, saved the situation and a half was called. Superior putting gave the younger man the sixth in 4 to 5. Mr. Blackwell had a pretty chip from the rough above the seventh green, but he missed his putt for 4, and down in the figure Mr. MacAllan drew on level terms. With a nice 3 he took the lead at the short hole. Driving to the ninth, Mr. Blackwell failed to allow for wind, and the ball landed in the bunker to the left of the course, and after an ineffectual effort to recover, he lifted, and the match turned two holes in Mr. MacAllan's favour, he having won 4 holes in succession.

On the tenth green Mr. Blackwell ran down from a distance of about twenty yards for 3, and won in that figure. His opponent had a stroke at the short eleventh, but it was not needed, as he won the hole in 3 to 4. Halves in 5 followed at the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth holes, but at the sixteenth Mr. Blackwell had the best of the putting, and getting down in 4 after a deadly run up, reduced the lead to 1. Bunkered from the seventeenth tee, Mr. MacAllan got well out, and a half in 5 seemed certain, but Mr. MacAllan missed an easy putt, and lost the hole. Mr. Blackwell pulled his drive badly from the eighteenth tee, and he failed to reach the green with his second. Mr. MacAllan had kept a straight line, and lay dead in 3 Much depended on Mr. Blackwell's putt, and it was not until after due deliberation that he played the stroke. The ball slipped past the hole. Mr. MacAllan had no difficulty in getting down with the like, and thus won a hard match and the trophy by the narrow margin of 1 hole.

JAMES BRAID vs. HARRY VARDON.

Harry Vardon, who beat James Braid, the open champion, at Southerndown, on Friday, and set up a record for the course repeated the performance on the Ashburnham Club's links, near Llanelly, on Saturday, when the tour in Wales of these two players came to a close. In a medal round, Vardon accomplished the splendid score of 73 (four strokes better than his own previous record), Braid's score being 79. Each man took 40 for the outward journey, but Vardon played remarkable golf coming home, doing the last nine holes in 33, despite a 6 at the seventeenth. His figures were:

Out ... ...5 4 4 4 4 5 6 4 4—40 } 75
Home ... ... 4 4 3 4 2 3 4 6 3—33 }

A match of eighteen holes took place in the afternoon, when Varden won by two holes. The weather was fine, and there was a large gathering of spectators.

PROFESSIONAL TOURNAMENT AT BLACKPOOL.

After an abstention of about two months from public golf, Arnaud Massy, the famous French professional, was seen at his best as a match-player on the 10th instant when he won the first prize of £40 in the Blackpool Club's tournament, on the links at South Shore. In the final, he defeated J. H. Taylor by 4 and 3. The latter received £30, and Herd and Vardon instead of meeting, agreed to divide the third and fourth prizes of £20 and £15 respectively.

There was a large attendance of spectators. In the semi-final against Vardon the Frenchman turned with a lead of two holes. Coming home, he continued to outplay Vardon, and, after standing 4 up at the thirteenth, he secured the fourteenth, and finished the match. Approximately, the scores were:

MASSY.

Out ... 5 3 4 4 4 4 2 7 3—36 } 76 for 14
Home ... 4 4 4 4 4 —20 } holes.

VARDON.

Out ... 4 4 4 4 5 5 3 4 3—36 } 79 for 14
Home ... 4 5 4 5 5 3—23 } holes.

In the other match, Taylor and Herd were all square at the ninth. Taylor went to the front for the first time at the thirteenth, and, halving the last five holes, he reached the final. The scores were:

TAYLOR.

Out ... ... 4 4 4 4 4 5 3 5 3—36 } 75
Home .. ... 5 6 3 4 4 4 5 4 4—39 }

HERD.

Out ... ... 4 3 4 4 4 5 5 4 4—37 } 76
Home ... ... 5 4 4 5 4 4 5 4 4—39 }

Massy played a great game in the final, and, at the fifteenth hole, where the match finished, his score was an average of 2 under 4's. Driving splendidly, and making some perfect shots with his iron clubs, he forged ahead after the first three holes, at which point the players were level. Winning the fourth and sixth, Massy stood 2 up, but he lost the ninth, and was only 1 up at the turn. Coming home, he secured the tenth and eleventh in 3 each. Three halves followed, but Massy won the fifeeenth in 3, and so triumphed. The scores were:

MASSY.

Out ... 4 3 4 4 4 4 3 5 4—35 } 58 for 15
Home ... 3 3 5 5 4 3 —23 } holes.

TAYLOR.

Out ... 4 4 3 5 4 5 3 5 3—36 } 62 for 15
Home ... 4 4 5 5 4 4 —26 } holes.

Appended are the results:

SEMI-FINAL ROUND.

Arnaud Massy (La Boulie) beat Harry Vardon (South Herts) by 5 and 4.

J. H. Taylor (Mid-Surrey) beat Alexander Herd (Huddersfield) by 1 hole.

FINAL ROUND.

Massy beat Taylor by 4 and 3.

The six men who had been put out of the running on Wednesday played a medal round for a prize of £10 and five consolation awards of £5 each. James Braid (Walton Health), the open champion, and Tom Simpson (Lytham and St. Annes), with 73 each, divided the first prize. Fred Collins (Llandudno), George Pulford (Hoylake), and Walter Toogood (Ilkley) took 78 each, and J. Steer (Blackpool), 79.

The National and Chartered drew out from the start and rowed a level race to Craven Point, where the National gradually drew out and won by just under 2 lengths; 3 lengths; fourth close up.

Hunting.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

HOUNDS met on Sunday, the 13th instant, at 6-15 A.M., at the 7th mile stone, Bombay Road. There was a plentiful dew which rendered the grass quite wet, but, however, had no effect on the fast hardening ground of the uplands. The scent was of the best and two covers were drawn blank before the jack was moved from the ravine on the north. Without any hesitation the jack made the distant Sister Hills his refuge—a four-mile point. Pace was a cracker on the entire journey and none but the fittest of horses lived right through in the front rank, a gallant grey waler leading the right hand division throughout this clipping gallop and appeared quite fresh as he was pulled up under the lee of the hills. The hounds gaining the top of the hill worked the jack on to the eastern end and forced him again into the open but as it was getting on 8 o'clock and the sun coming out powerfully, there was no eagerness to press on. It was, however, a gallop to wake one up, occurring as it did in the early morning, there was a freshness and coolness of atmosphere most exhilarating to hound, horse and rider.

The hounds again met on Wednesday, 16th instant, at Kalas at 6-30 A.M., but owing to showers during the previous day, the scent was very bad, but the hounds with difficulty held the line of a jack through the Kalas country until the Alandi Road was crossed and the Yerrowda country entered. Here the scent appeared to be much better and the hounds travelling at quite a good pace killed just under the Sister Hills.

Meeting again the next day at the same time at the 8th mile stone, Bombay Road, a member of the hunt kindly providing a sumptuous banquet near the meet after the morning's sport was over. It was a lovely morning and there was quite a large field, the previous day's rain and the dew making things quite cool. Finding a jack on a kopje north of the gardens, the pack travelled towards Chickli, then a turn right round and again at a great pace to the east to the Sister Hills. Crossing the Nasik Road earlier than on Sunday, the horses were galloped to the Bhosari Village, over undulated country and ravines, but this had no effect on the hounds. The jack made the best of the way for the high hills, but when within a mile of the nearest hill, the hounds having raced him at a rare pace for some fourteen minutes, killed him in a small khet. The brush was presented to Major Bertie-Clay, R. A., who held a prominent position throughout the run, and the mask to Major-General Alderson.

After a few minutes' breathing time and when second horses had arrived, a move to the west was made and got a jack away from a deep nullah. Running at first due west he turned south until near the Bombay Road, ran parallel to the road towards Kirkee, passed through a heavy cover near the 9th mile stone and continuing his course near the 8th mile stone, was killed in the open. The brush was presented to Mrs. Perkins, the mask to Mr. Enthoven. After this, the hospital breakfast, and the doings of the chase were discussed, the latter, of course, between the entrées.

As far as at present known there is one more meet this week and the Hunt Races will take place in this country on Tuesday, the 29th instant.

DICK BRAGG.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday 17th September.—The Umbrella Tree 7 A.M. After drawing all the small coverts and Hanging Shola without result, we moved on to Middle Shola where hounds feathered on a line and a small boy told the master he had viewed a jack leave the covert some while before in the direction of Brooklands, so the pack was lifted over and at once hit off a line and carried it over Toll Bar Hill and across the Demon Valley Stream, where they swept up the slope of Rockey to the right as if for Toda Cathedral. Still keeping to the right and travelling at a great rate they crossed the Segur Road near the Black Bridge and ran up the Valley to Hanging Shola through which they pushed him. Coming out at the top, they hunted him through Middle Shola and on towards Farrier's Crossing, where they doubled back to the Land Slip and marked him to ground in a large earth under some rock on the bank of the stream. The terriers were quite unable to dislodge him, so he was left to run another day. Mills' Covert had held a jack earlier in the day, but he had moved off to safer quarters, as hounds touched a line and hunted it slowly over Bagman to Pearl Crossing and on to Blue Gums. On the ridge outside he had waited a bit as hounds seemed to be on better terms and were running at a fair pace as they crossed the Krumund Road at the top of Jills' Shola. They swept round the hill into Monkey through which they pushed him. Coming out near One Tree Hill they ran him over the top of the hill, and keeping to the right of Jackal they crossed the Krumund Road at the head of Long Swamp and pointed for New Covert, crossing the Municipal Stream just below and rose the hill on to the Pykara Road, along it for some distance beyond Elmhurst Corner, and on to above Trebel Crossing where they were at fault. After a wide cast round they spoke to a line above Double Crossing, but it was almost cold and they could do nothing with it.

Monday 21st September.—Sheffield Corner 7 A. M. It was a perfect morning, with quite an autumnal nip in the air, and a very heavy dew on the grass We moved on to Andy and drew down the large bog. A jack was viewed near the Mount Prospect Estate taking a line up the hill he dipped down the far side. No time was lost in taking hounds across, they picked up his trail above Dante's Spinney and carried it to the right of the Twin Sisters, up the valley to Middle Bit Shola, where there was a slight check, but they were off again fairly racing over the ridge and tumbling down to Egerton's Crossing, rose up the slope and crossed the Old Cart Track and dipped down to Kuruthugulli Shola, then to the left as if for Porcupine but turned right handed, over the spur between Kuruthugulli and Sambur Shola and dived down to Dangar Shola, where they turned sharp back into Sambur Shola and rose the slopes again coming out on top of Little Dangar Ride. Running hard past Mattey Bog and Vane's Copse with Hookham Snivey on their right they dashed down the hill to Finger Post Shola, through which they pushed him, crossing the Avalanche Bridle Path with a point for Italur village. The jack was headed by some coolies near the Melkundah Road which caused him to turn short back and climb up the Hardoake Hanger Hill with the pack in full cry close on his brush, he sank the valley and rose left handed over the hill past Appukuda when he was run into and killed just above Vommarkundi Village a point of seven miles, over rough and hilly country, time—well over two hours. Only the two whips saw the end of this fine run.

CALCUTTA ROWING CLUB.

SEPTEMBER REGATTA.

Friday and Saturday, 25th and 26th September, 1908.

THE Calcutta Rowing Club brought their season to a close with another very successful regatta on the above dates. The rain held off but the clouds looked threatening and this probably accounts for the small attendance on both days. The Club was "at home" and the proceedings were carried through without a hitch. Entries were good and the racing excellent, some exciting finishes being witnessed, notably that between the Remnants and the Insurance crew in the Class Fours on the first day, the finish in the Novice Sculls and that in the Scratch Fours. The Remnants, who were got together two days before the regatta and who had had no practice, did well and it is unfortunate that an accident in the Government boat in the final prevented a closer finish. The Canoe race, generally a mirth-provoking item, proved no exception on this occasion, upsets and erratic steering causing much merriment. Claughton won the Power Cup in good style, but the time for the race was slow, both scullers having rowed hard in the Class Fours earlier in the afternoon. Mrs. Ross gave away the prizes and the proceedings closed with the usual cheers.

The Honorary Secretary, Mr. H. B. Ridley, and his committee are to be congratulated on the success which have attended their efforts since the club obtained another site and rowing was once again possible. There has been a big increase in the membership roll and with the number of keen oarsmen we may expect a return next year to the former prosperous condition of the club. Results.—

GOLF.

QUEEN VICTORIA VASE FINAL ROUND.—Play in the final round in the Queen Victoria Jubilee Vase, which has occupied the attention of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club since Tuesday last, was concluded on Saturday, the 5th September, at St. Andrews. The finalists were Mr. A. R. Macallan (owes 1), a young member of the club, and Mr. Edward Blackwell (owes ⅘). The pair were equally matched, and it was not until the home hole was played out that victory rested with Mr. MacAllan. The weather was not altogether favourable to good golf. Rain was falling at the start, and a strong westerly breeze made straight driving difficult. Mr. Blackwell failed to get a grip of his second to the first hole, and the ball found a resting-place in the shallow bed of the Swilcan. Instead of lifting and playing the penalty, he elected to play the ball, and lofted beautifully on to the green and he won the hole in 5 to 6. A putt of four yards gave Mr. MacAllan the second in 4 to 5, but at the next the older player, profiting by a sliced cleek stroke on the part of his opponent, again assumed the lead with a good 4. A putt of about three yards on the fourth green gave him another 4, and as Mr. MacAllan missed from a shorter distance, Mr. Blackwell's lead was increased to 2 holes. Though Mr. MacAllan took a stroke more at the long hole, his handicap, which came in there, saved the situation and a half was called. Superior putting gave the younger man the sixth in 4 to 5. Mr. Blackwell had a pretty chip from the rough above the seventh green, but he missed his putt for 4, and down in the figure Mr. MacAllan drew on level terms. With a nice 3 he took the lead at the short hole. Driving to the ninth, Mr. Blackwell failed to allow for wind, and the ball landed in the bunker to the left of the course, and after an ineffectual effort to recover, he lifted, and the match turned two holes in Mr. MacAllan's favour, he having won 4 holes in succession.

On the tenth green Mr. Blackwell ran down from a distance of about twenty yards for 3, and won in that figure. His opponent had a stroke at the short eleventh, but it was not needed, as he won the hole in 3 to 4. Halves in 5 followed at the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth holes, but at the sixteenth Mr. Blackwell had the best of the putting, and getting down in 4 after a deadly run up, reduced the lead to 1. Bunkered from the seventeenth tee, Mr. MacAllan got well out, and a half in 5 seemed certain, but Mr. MacAllan missed an easy putt, and lost the hole. Mr. Blackwell pulled his drive badly from the eighteenth tee, and he failed to reach the green with his second. Mr. MacAllan had kept a straight line, and lay dead in 3 Much depended on Mr. Blackwell's putt, and it was not until after due deliberation that he played the stroke. The ball slipped past the hole. Mr. MacAllan had no difficulty in getting down with the like, and thus won a hard match and the trophy by the narrow margin of 1 hole.

JAMES BRAID vs. HARRY VARDON.

Harry Vardon, who beat James Braid, the open champion, at Southerndown, on Friday, and set up a record for the course repeated the performance on the Ashburnham Club's links, near Llanelly, on Saturday, when the tour in Wales of these two players came to a close. In a medal round, Vardon accomplished the splendid score of 73 (four strokes better than his own previous record), Braid's score being 79. Each man took 40 for the outward journey, but Vardon played remarkable golf coming home, doing the last nine holes in 33, despite a 6 at the seventeenth. His figures were:

Out ... ...5 4 4 4 4 5 6 4 4—40 } 75
Home ... ... 4 4 3 4 2 3 4 6 3—33 }

A match of eighteen holes took place in the afternoon, when Varden won by two holes. The weather was fine, and there was a large gathering of spectators.

PROFESSIONAL TOURNAMENT AT BLACKPOOL.

After an abstention of about two months from public golf, Arnaud Massy, the famous French professional, was seen at his best as a match-player on the 10th instant when he won the first prize of £40 in the Blackpool Club's tournament, on the links at South Shore. In the final, he defeated J. H. Taylor by 4 and 3. The latter received £30, and Herd and Vardon instead of meeting, agreed to divide the third and fourth prizes of £20 and £15 respectively.

There was a large attendance of spectators. In the semi-final against Vardon the Frenchman turned with a lead of two holes. Coming home, he continued to outplay Vardon, and, after standing 4 up at the thirteenth, he secured the fourteenth, and finished the match. Approximately, the scores were:

MASSY.

Out ... 5 3 4 4 4 4 2 7 3—36 } 56 for 14
Home ... 4 4 4 4 4 —20 } holes.

VARDON.

Out ... 4 4 4 4 5 5 3 4 3—36 } 59 for 14
Home ... 4 5 4 5 5 3—23 } holes.

In the other match, Taylor and Herd were all square at the ninth. Taylor went to the front for the first time at the thirteenth, and, halving the last five holes, he reached the final. The scores were:

TAYLOR.

Out ... ... 4 4 4 4 4 5 3 5 3—36 } 75
Home .. ... 5 6 3 4 4 4 5 4 4—39 }

HERD.

Out ... ... 4 3 4 4 4 5 5 4 4—37 } 76
Home ... ... 5 4 4 5 4 4 5 4 4—39 }

Massy played a great game in the final, and, at the fifteenth hole, where the match finished, his score was an average of 2 under 4's. Driving splendidly, and making some perfect shots with his iron clubs, he forged ahead after the first three holes, at which point the players were level. Winning the fourth and sixth, Massy stood 2 up, but he lost the ninth, and was only 1 up at the turn. Coming home, he secured the tenth and eleventh in 3 each. Three halves followed, but Massy won the fifeeenth in 3, and so triumphed. The scores were:

MASSY.

Out ... 4 3 4 4 4 4 3 5 4—35 } 58 for 15
Home ... 3 3 5 5 4 3 —23 } holes.

TAYLOR.

Out ... 4 4 3 5 4 5 3 5 3—36 } 62 for 15
Home ... 4 4 5 5 4 4 —26 } holes.

Appended are the results:

SEMI-FINAL ROUND.

Arnaud Massy (La Boulie) beat Harry Vardon (South Herts) by 5 and 4.

J. H. Taylor (Mid-Surrey) beat Alexander Herd (Huddersfield) by 1 hole.

FINAL ROUND.

Massy beat Taylor by 4 and 3.

The six men who had been put out of the running on Wednesday played a medal round for a prize of £10 and five consolation awards of £5 each. James Braid (Walton Health), the open champion, and Tom Simpson (Lytham and St. Annes), with 73 each, divided the first prize. Fred Collins (Llandudno), George Pulford (Hoylake), and Walter Toogood (Ilkley) took 78 each, and J. Steer (Blackpool), 79.

Hunting.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

HOUNDS met on Sunday, the 13th instant, at 6-15 A.M., at the 7th mile stone, Bombay Road. There was a plentiful dew which rendered the grass quite wet, but, however, had no effect on the fast hardening ground of the uplands. The scent was of the best and two covers were drawn blank before the jack was moved from the ravine on the north. Without any hesitation the jack made the distant Sister Hills his refuge—a four-mile point. Pace was a cracker on the entire journey and none but the fittest of horses lived right through in the front rank, a gallant grey waler leading the right hand division throughout this clipping gallop and appeared quite fresh as he was pulled up under the lee of the hills. The hounds gaining the top of the hill worked the jack on to the eastern end and forced him again into the open but as it was getting on 8 o'clock and the sun coming out powerfully, there was no eagerness to press on. It was, however, a gallop to wake one up, occurring as it did in the early morning, there was a freshness and coolness of atmosphere most exhilarating to hound, horse and rider.

The hounds again met on Wednesday, 16th instant, at Kalas at 6-30 A.M., but owing to showers during the previous day, the scent was very bad, but the hounds with difficulty held the line of a jack through the Kalas country until the Alandi Road was crossed and the Yerrowda country entered. Here the scent appeared to be much better and the hounds travelling at quite a good pace killed just under the Sister Hills.

Meeting again the next day at the same time at the 8th mile stone, Bombay Road, a member of the hunt kindly providing a sumptuous banquet near the meet after the morning's sport was over. It was a lovely morning and there was quite a large field, the previous day's rain and the dew making things quite cool. Finding a jack on a kopje north of the gardens, the pack travelled towards Chickli, then a turn right round and again at a great pace to the east to the Sister Hills. Crossing the Nasik Road earlier than on Sunday, the horses were galloped to the Bhosari Village, over undulated country and ravines, but this had no effect on the hounds. The jack made the best of the way for the high hills, but when within a mile of the nearest hill, the hounds having raced him at a rare pace for some fourteen minutes, killed him in a small khet. The brush was presented to Major Bertie-Clay, R. A., who held a prominent position throughout the run, and the mask to Major-General Alderson.

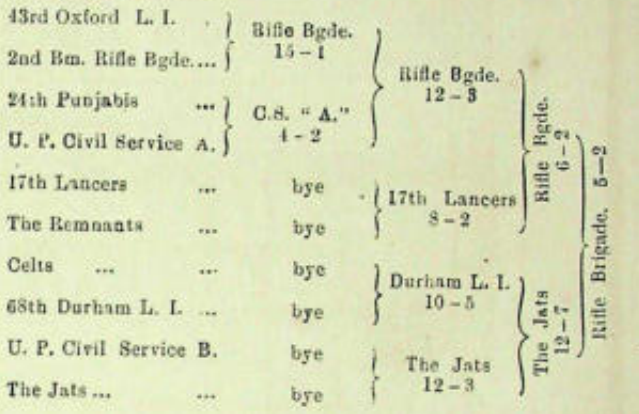
After a few minutes' breathing time and when second horses had arrived, a move to the west was made and got a jack away from a deep nullah. Running at first due west he turned south until near the Bombay Road, ran parallel to the road towards Kirkee, passed through a heavy cover near the 9th mile stone and continuing his course near the 8th mile stone, was killed in the open. The brush was presented to Mrs. Perkins, the mask to Mr. Enthoven. After this, the hospital breakfast, and the doings of the chase were discussed, the latter, of course, between the entrées.

As far as at present known there is one more meet this week and the Hunt Races will take place in this country on Tuesday, the 29th instant.

DICK BRAGG.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday 17th September.—The Umbrella Tree 7 A.M. After drawing all the small coverts and Hanging Shola without result, we moved on to Middle Shola where hounds feathered on a line and a small boy told the master he had viewed a jack leave the covert some while before in the direction of Brooklands, so the pack was lifted over and at once hit off a line and carried it over Toll Bar Hill and across the Demon Valley Stream, where they swept up the slope of Rockey to the right as if for Toda Cathedral. Still keeping to the right and travelling at a great rate they crossed the Segur Road near the Black Bridge and ran up the Valley to Hanging Shola through which they pushed him. Coming out at the top, they hunted him through Middle Shola and on towards Farrier's Crossing, where they doubled back to the Land Slip and marked him to ground in a large earth under some rock on the bank of the stream. The terriers were quite unable to dislodge him, so he was left to run another day. Mills' Covert had held a jack earlier in the day, but he had moved off to safer quarters, as hounds touched a line and hunted it slowly over Bagman to Pearl Crossing and on to Blue Gums. On the ridge outside he had waited a bit as hounds seemed to be on better terms and were running at a fair pace as they crossed the Krumund Road at the top of Jills' Shola. They swept round the hill into Monkey through which they pushed him. Coming out near One Tree Hill they ran him over the top of the hill, and keeping to the right of Jackal they crossed the Krumund Road at the head of Long Swamp and pointed for New Covert, crossing the Municipal Stream just below and rose the hill on to the Pykara Road, along it for some distance beyond Elmhurst Corner, and on to above Trebel Crossing where they were at fault. After a wide cast round they spoke to a line above Double Crossing, but it was almost cold and they could do nothing with it.



Monday 21st September.—Sheffield Corner 7 A.M. It was a perfect morning, with quite an autumnal nip in the air, and a very heavy dew on the grass We moved on to Andy and drew down the large bog. A jack was viewed near the Mount Prospect Estate taking a line up the hill he dipped down the far side. No time was lost in taking hounds across, they picked up his trail above Dante's Spinney and carried it to the right of the Twin Sisters, up the valley to Middle Bit Shola, where there was a slight check, but they were off again fairly racing over the ridge and tumbling down to Egerton's Crossing, rose up the slope and crossed the Old Cart Track and dipped down to Kuruthugulli Shola, then to the left as if for Porcupine but turned right handed, over the spur between Kuruthugulli and Sambur Shola and dived down to Dangar Shola, where they turned sharp back into Sambur Shola and rose the slopes again coming out on top of Little Dangar Ride. Running hard past Mattey Bog and Vane's Copse with Hookham Saivey on their right they dashed down the hill to Finger Post Shola, through which they pushed him, crossing the Avalanche Bridle Path with a point for Italur village. The jack was headed by some coolies near the Melkundah Road which caused him to turn short back and climb up the Hardoake Hanger Hill with the pack in full cry close on his brush, he sank the valley and rose left handed over the hill past Appukuda when he was run into and killed just above Vommarkundi Village a point of seven miles, over rough and hilly country, time—well over two hours. Only the two whips saw the end of this fine run.

CALCUTTA ROWING CLUB.

SEPTEMBER REGATTA.

Friday and Saturday, 25th and 26th September, 1908.

THE Calcutta Rowing Club brought their season to a close with another very successful regatta on the above dates. The rain held off but the clouds looked threatening and this probably accounts for the small attendance on both days. The Club was "at home" and the proceedings were carried through without a hitch. Entries were good and the racing excellent, some exciting finishes being witnessed, notably that between the Remnants and the Insurance crew in the Class Fours on the first day, the finish in the Novice Sculls and that in the Scratch Fours. The Remnants, who were got together two days before the regatta and who had had no practice, did well and it is unfortunate that an accident in the Government boat in the final prevented a closer finish. The Canoe race, generally a mirth-provoking item, proved no exception on this occasion, upsets and erratic steering causing much merriment. Claughton won the Power Cup in good style, but the time for the race was slow, both scullers having rowed hard in the Class Fours earlier in the afternoon. Mrs. Ross gave away the prizes and the proceedings closed with the usual cheers.

The Honorary Secretary, Mr. H. B. Ridley, and his committee are to be congratulated on the success which have attended their efforts since the club obtained another site and rowing was once again possible. There has been a big increase in the membership roll and with the number of keen oarsmen we may expect a return next year to the former prosperous condition of the club. Results.—

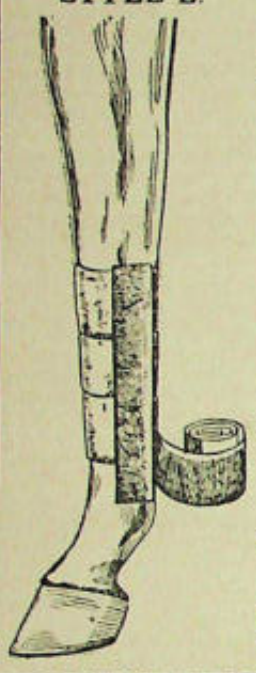
.405 Caliber, Big Bore High Power Rifles.



It's safer, when you are going after big game, to use a rifle whose power to kill you can always depend on. The Winchester .405 caliber Model 1895 rifle is at all ranges the most powerful made, a statement borne out by the following comparison: The remaining energy at 200 yards of a bullet shot by the .405 is greater than the muzzle energy of a bullet shot from the .45-70-405, which for many years was considered the most powerful rifle for big game hunting. The .405 is designed to use the Winchester .405 caliber cartridge, whose high velocity and 300-grain mushrooming bullet makes it particularly effective against all kinds of big game. Winchester rifles, with Winchester cartridges, each made for the other, are invaluable to all successful hunters.

CRICKET IN BOMBAY.

PRESIDENCY vs. HINDUS.—The Hindus being the bye, met the Presidency on Monday in connection with the Triangular matches in Bombay. The wicket was again on the soft side and the Presidency were again lucky enough to win the toss, though after about an hour's play the pitch was in about as bad a state as it well could be. All but Errasha are slow bowlers, as were the Parsees, and that he came off best and that the fast trundling of the Presidency has been so effective seems to prove that the wicket is suited to it, contrary to custom at Home. It may be interesting to know that the average age of the Europeans was 34 and the two oldest made the biggest stand of the day, taking every advantage of the tendency to slackness on the part of the field.

Being without Airey and Milne, the Presidency opened with Greig and Turner, and after giving a chance in a return to Baloo, Turner left caught at the wickets. The ball rose badly and continued to do so, which was the main cause of Errasha's success. Nine for one, this state of affairs was not to continue, as when Heath joined Greig and they got their eyes in runs came fast and free. Heath's driving was very powerful and Greig's slicing and snicking was as crisp and accurate as ever, and if he had only left alone one of those kickers we might have seen him make another century. The partnership realised 63. After that, however, except for a drive or two by Vines in a lucky innings, the bowling held mastery till tiffin when 7 were down for 135. Three more runs and Coombs left, his place being taken by Colonel Mosse, who joined Sprott. It did not take them long to get going and runs, especially on the leg, came fast. The crowd were anxious to see 200 go up and this eventually they did see, though only after Sesbachari had let Sprott off at the sticks. Date also let Mosse off badly in the slips and only after three-quarters of an hour was a separation effected, Errasha bowling Mosse off his pads. Sixty-eight runs had been added for the ninth wicket. After one run Joy left and the total stood at 207, Sprott not out 42.

The Hindu first innings was much the same as that of the Parsees, Joy being in great form assisted by Coombs and Mosse. Coombs started by getting the Hindu captain l.-b.-w. and also was unlucky in that Vines missed Agaskar off him. He, however, soon left prettily held by Greig in the slips and a rot set in. Date and Telang were clean bowled and Mosse, catching in his lap a ball he had missed with his hands, got rid of Baloo. It looked as though they would all be out by drawing of stumps, but a tremendous downpour put an end to further play and the score stood at 56 for 7.

Talpade having made 9 continued on Tuesday and by increasing it to 18 was the only double figure scorer. A couple of boundary slogs by Errasha before he left brought the total to 79. Joy again came out with a remarkable analysis which read 7 for 24, 8 maidens out of 17 overs.

Going in for a second time, the Presidency made a splendid start with Greig and Turner, and though the latter was never quite as comfortable as he might have liked the former played delightful cricket. At tiffin 55 had been made with no loss, but very soon after resuming Turner left for 18 and Greig soon followed for 38. Three more wickets fell cheap, but then Townend and Cooper took the score from 72 to 94 and again after two quick dismissals Sprott and Coombs put on 23: the side was eventually out for 124. Date was the successful bowler and had to thank Agaskar for two very nice catches on the boundary; he took 4 for 17.

With a wicket that was bumping badly the Hindus were faced with a formidable task when they went in requiring 253 to win. They began disastrously as Townend caught Agaskar prettily in the slips off Joy and the next ball clean bowled Talpade. At the other end Combs's third ball got Samel l.-b.-w and three were down without a run scored. Mehta joining Telang hit Joy so confidently for 4 past cover that they looked like making a stand, but in the same over he fell to a catch by Sprott at the sticks. At last on Date coming in a stand was made, the new-comer playing carefully whilst Telang hit the bowling all over the field. A delightful bat to watch when set; he was seen in his best form and up to the time of drawing stumps had not given a chance. Vines catching Date smartly at point when he had made 18 and had helped to put on 58 for the fifth wicket, the time remaining only sufficed to get rid of two more and 7 were out for 82; Telang not out 54. More rain falling in the night a postponement till one o'clock was necessary before Shivram came in with Telang on too wet a wicket to assist the bowling, but so cut up was it that the ball soon began to kick and Telang far from as comfortable as on the previous day was let off twice in the slips. With 71 he was at last bowled by Greig after providing some interest to a match which would otherwise have been a poor one. Shivram hitting out made a game bid, but eventually they were all out for 133, thus losing by 119 runs, and had such a disastrous start not been made it would have been a much closer thing. Joy again bowled with success and he and Greig are once more the heroes of the match. Fielding all round was very fair and the Hindus have the satisfaction of having lost by a much smaller margin than the Parsees. There was much less appealing and altogether they played like sportsmen.

It has been suggested that in future the first game be played in Poona and the final in Bombay, and this is likely to be adopted as three matches in succession is no little strain. That the Presidency have come out on top in the first Triangular contest is a matter of great satisfaction, and after their many reverses will give the game a fillip.

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINALS.

MOUNTAIN ARTILLERY vs. ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.—These teams met on the 23rd instant, a hard game ending with the score one all. The game was replayed on Thursday when the Mountain Artillery were beaten by 2 goals to nil. The Rifles had the best of the opening exchanges and after two unsuccessful shots a foul against the Artillery gave them a free kick from which they opened the scoring. They added another goal shortly after and play ruled up and down to the interval. On resuming the Rifles continued to have the best of the game and kept the Gunners busy defending. Nothing further was scored the Rifles qualifying for the final as stated.

SHROPSHIRE L.I. vs. LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS.—Played on the 24th instant, a fast and interesting game ending in favour of the Lancashire Fusiliers. The Shropshires opened well and scored a goal within five minutes of the start. Even exchanges followed. Hands against the Fusiliers gave the Shropshires another chance of scoring but the Fusiliers' custodian cleared and the ball was taken to the other end where they equalised. There was no further scoring till half time. On restarting the Lancashires set the pace and put on another goal after two fruitless shots. The Fusiliers continued to attack the Shropshires having a busy time in their own territory. They got away on a couple of occasions but could not get on terms and the Fusiliers scoring another goal held the game safe. The closing stages saw both teams attacking in turn but there was no further score the Lancashire Fusiliers winning by 3 goals to 1.

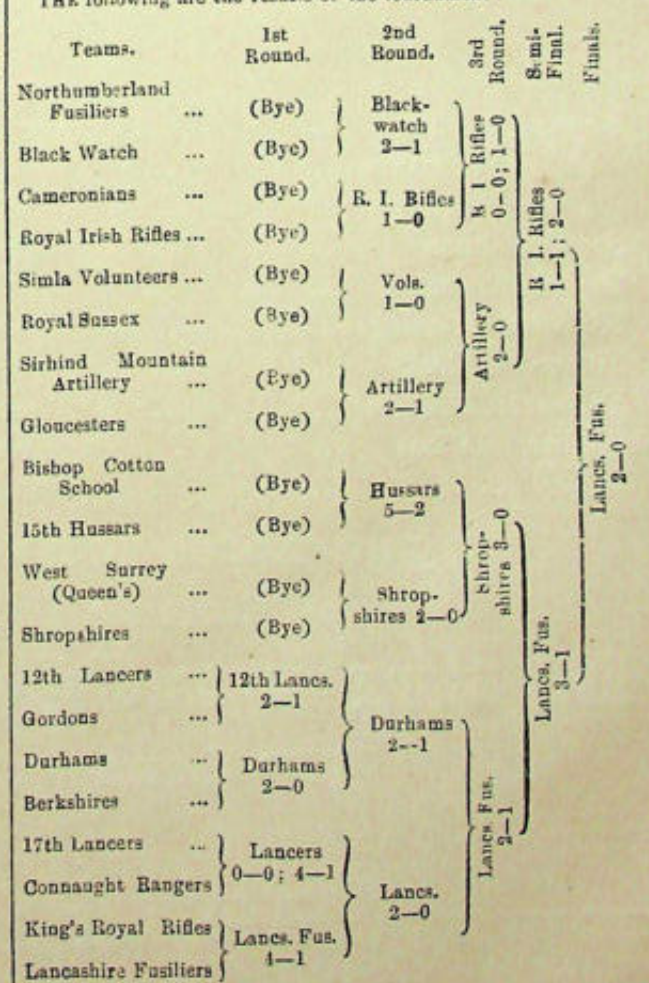
FINAL.

LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS vs. ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.—The tournament was concluded on Saturday, the 26th instant, with the match between the above teams. The Lancashire Fusiliers had the best of the game and ran out winners by 2 goals to nil. They attacked at the start and kept up a bombardment of the Rifles' goal. They forced four corners; three of which were unproductive but a melee in front of goal followed the last and the ball was put through. On resuming the Irish pressed and sent in a shot which failed. They were gradually forced back and when half time arrived were busy defending. On changing ends both teams attacked in turn and then the Lancashires hemmed their opponents in and several shots were sent in but all were disposed of and the Rifles broke away and forced an abortive corner. Level play followed till the Lancashires got away and their centre forward slipped through and scored. The Lancashires continued to press till the end of the game but there was no further score the Fusiliers thus winning as stated.

There was big crowd of spectators and the weather conditions were perfect. H. E. the Viceroy made a short speech at the conclusion of the game and Lady Minto gave away the prizes.

Challenge Cup.—(presented by Sir Mortimer Durand, K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E.), won by the Lancashires

The Simla Cup.—(Presented by the Simla Government Offices and Trade, value Rs. 1,500 to be the property of the team winning it for three years in succession; won by the Lancashires.



A Cup.—(Presented by the Hon'ble Major-General C. H. Scott, C.B., to be the property of the winning team) won by the Lancashires.

A Silver Medal to each member of the winning team and a cup to the Captain.

A cup value Rs. 150 to be the property of the second team.

A bronze medal to each member of the second team.

THE ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

PERHAPS the most important game of the Rovers' Tournament was that between the Royal Scots and East Lancs which took place on Wednesday and resulted in a draw, which nobody will regret as it gave an opportunity of seeing these two meet again. Naturally enough it was desperately exciting from start to finish, and if the Lancs were unlucky not to win the Scots would have been unlucky to lose. The Scots were first to score through a very lucky incident, the Lancs' custodian fisting out for the ball to rebound into goal off one of the backs. Before half time the Lancs equalised through Parsons who headed in, and the second half being blank the game, as stated, ended in a draw.

On Monday the game between the Worcesters and Rovers had to be stopped owing to rain, and when on Tuesday the Rovers found themselves several men short they withdrew, but finding men on the touch line willing to fill the places they played for the sake of a game. That the Worcesters won by 3 to 1 is therefore of no importance.

Turning to the drawn game again, the teams met on Thursday, and once more it remained unsettled as neither was able to score. Both must be in remarkably fine trim as from start to finish play was very fast. Some pretty forward play was seen all round and the Scots being rather the neater they had a shade the better of the game. Halves, backs and goal-keeper on each side were quite sound and this, added to poor shooting, was the wherefore of no scoring.

With a view to giving the teams a rest, the game between the R.F.A. and Carabiniers was put on for Friday. This was a splendid one all the way, long passing on both sides making it very fast. The ball was continually being taken from one end to the other and both goals had some very narrow escapes. The R.F.A. were generally expected to win and were first to open their account in the first half through a good low shot by Greaves, the right half, the ball being hidden from the goal, Judson, by the defenders. They had not had the better of the play and in the second half spectators were sympathising with the others when they came down on the left through Chick and the ball coming in Luxton put it through. Soon after the same thing occurred and the Carabiniers were ahead. Closing exchanges were most exciting and two terribly long tussles occurred in the very mouth of the Carabiniers' goal but nothing came of them and the match ended in a win for them. There can be no doubt that the R.F.A. were really unlucky to lose as there was nothing to choose between the teams and quite a few thought that they had actually the better of matters. The winning backs were the stronger kickers, the halves were good and level and whereas the winning forwards played a strenuous rushing game, the R.F.A. seemed the more solid and, as stated, were more than once unfortunate. Last year the way the Carabiniers talked during the game was remarked upon and it was just as noticeable now.

The keenly expected game—the tie between the East Lancs and the Royal Scots—was played off on Saturday before another crowded audience. The home team had again a new centre forward in Mounsey and for the first time the vanguard of the Scots combined perfectly. Much as we have decried the excessive fiddling about the ball by the Scots' forward line, we must confess that their success on the present occasion was due to that sort of play—happily however it was not overdone.

Both the teams had made a few changes in their elevens, but while the home team seemed to have benefitted by it, the Cup-holders were completely out of their form and training and their exhibition was decidedly inferior to the past four games they had taken a part in. Something was amiss with the Lancs, whether it was the climate—strain, it was certainly not, one can't tell. At no part of the game did they look their former self, while the enemy had matters much in their own way.

The Royals were the aggressors from the outset and though even play reigned during the first half, they led by one goal at the interval, the point having been scored after fifteen minutes' play by a brilliant shot of McIntosh, the Scots' inside-left. But in the ensuing period, however, the local champions had throughout the best of the exchanges and once more scored through McIntosh. One or two very dangerous charges were made by the Lancs' left wing but the home goalkeeper very skilfully saved.

The Scots, winning by two to love, thus find their way into the semi-finals and the final too seem a certainty for them. The two other teams in the semi are the Worcesters and Somersets, while the Scots will have to face the Carabiniers. In the other, which will be played on Monday, Worcesters are expected to come through and if the Scots meet them in the final struggle, and come out of it with hands up, it would be a grand revenge for their defeat in the recent Divisional Tournament at Poona, which many knowing men aver was owing to a wrong decision against them.

THE NASIK WEEK.

THE Annual Golf Week came to a close on the 12th after a most successful meeting. Entries were just as large as ever and a keen interest was taken in the various events which were followed round by a big crowd of competitors not engaged at the time. A somewhat boisterous wind having to be contended with almost throughout the week, the scores were not as good as last year, but one can say there is no falling off in popularity. The important Nasik Cup went to Mr. Priestley and after some hard games in the Challenge Shield and Gold Medal, Mr. Mackenzie won. In the ladies' events, Mrs. Newman of Bombay was most successful, winning the putting, best scratch score and Monday's Medal.

On the last day the Hon'ble Mr. Mackenzie gave away the prizes and a most enjoyable affair broke up in the usual pleasant manner.

Results of the competitions were as under :—

Nasik Cup.—With his handicap of 18, Mr. Priestley won by one from Mr. England.

Bombay Gymkhana Cup.—Three competed and were very close together, Mr. Deane winning with a score of 84 from scratch from Messrs. Williams and Preston with 85.

Handicap Foursomes.—Out of three pairs Messrs. Deane and Lumsden won.

Challenge Shield and Gold Medal.—Thirteen competed and in the semi-finals Mr. Radcliffe Smith beat Mr. Roberts and Mr. Mackenzie beat Mr. Deane. In the final Mackenzie was seen in very consistent form, but though Radcliffe Smith drove well his putting lost him the game, Mackenzie winning by 5 and 4.

P. W. D. Cup.—After a very interesting match Deane broke down in the last two holes which took him 17 being 71 previously and eventually losing to Mr. Blair.

Captain's Cup.—In this Sanderson beat Busch 4 and 3 and Shoubridge beat Meade by 1. In the final the two were going level, each leading in turn and but for an unfortunate drive by Sanderson at the 17th he might have won, whereas Shoubridge just got there.

President's Cup.—Mr. Radcliffe Smith beat Mr. Roberts, 87 and 88.

Handicap Cup.—Presented by Mr. Hormusji Sorabji. Messrs. Duggan and Newman tied with 86.

Driving Competition.—Cup given by Colonel Meade. Played against a strong wind between flags. Mr. England first with 210 yards, Mr. Roberts second with 208 yards.

Silver Medal for best scratch score.—Mr. Deane.

Bronze Medals.—For November 1907 Mr. Mackay, for July 1908 Mr. Mackenzie, for August Mr. Meade, for September Mr. Deane.

Allied Pairs.—Twenty couples competed. Mrs. Van Someren and Mr. Harrison won with 50, three dead-heated for second place. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd, Miss Wild and Mr. Mackenzie and Miss Bean and Mr. Priestley with 51.

LADIES' EVENTS.

Foursomes.—Prize by Managing Committee. Eight pairs with Mrs. Lumsden and Mrs. Thubron beating Mrs. Shaw and Miss Wray in the final.

Bogey Handicap.—Mrs. Shaw with – 13 was two up and won from Mrs. Boyd, who with – 8 was 1 up.

Bombay Bangle.—Mrs. Holmes with – 16 scored 80 and beat Mrs. Shaw – 13 scoring 81.

Monday's Medal.—Mrs. Newman beat Mrs. Holmes.

Putting.—Won by Mrs. Newman.

Best Handicap Score.—Mrs. Boyd.

CALCUTTA SWIMMING CLUB.

AUTUMN MEETING.

Tuesday, 29th September 1908.

President :—MR. F. E. H. POWER.
Judges :—MR. G. H. HARNACK, AND MR. G. O. RUSHTON.
Starter & Time-keeper :—MR. A. R. C. MILLER.
Handicappers :—THE COMMITTEE.
Honorary Secretary :—MR. A. R. C. MILLER.

THE Calcutta Swimming Club wound up their season with the annual autumn meeting this evening, and to the efforts of Mr. A. R. C. Miller and an energetic committee is largely due the success of the fixture. There was a big attendance, a long and interesting programme and the racing was excellent. Two new records for the Bath were put up; Watkins' time for the six lengths Viceroy's Medal Handicap which he won, for the third time in succession, was 2mins. 37½secs., thus beating the previous best—2mins. 42½secs. established by himself last year, and Anscombe who started scratch and finished third in the final of the One Length Handicap covering the distance in the record time of 18½secs. The Diving display was interesting and some clever work was done by Messrs. Clarke, Beck, Anscombe, Watkins and the brothers Lawton. The Tub Race provided the comic element and there were many entries, few propelled their craft further than half way and many were the wrecks and huge the merriment of spectators and competitors alike. A water polo match terminated the proceedings. Appended are results.—

POONA HORSE SHOW.

Thursday and Friday, 24th and 25th September 1908.

THIS well-known fixture, which has existed for a great number of years now, began at an early hour on the morning of Thursday 24th September. The spot this year is the same which had been selected for the past four years, namely, the far end of the Volunteer Maidan behind Kahun Road. The attendance on the first day was however poor through the sky being heavy and it looked as if there would be a downpour. A larger accommodation in tents was provided this year and although this proved inadequate, yet it was quite an improvement on the past. The R.A.M.C. were "At Home," the catering being done by the Club of Western India, the premier caterers of the Deccan.

There was a bigger attendance on Friday and H.E. the Governor with a party from Government House were among those present. Mr. Morrison, I.C.S., Commissioner, Central Division was "At Home" and the Northamptons supplied the music. Appended are the awards :—

At the end of the Show and before Mrs. Alderson very kindly distributed the prizes General Alderson made a speech. He said :—

Your Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen,—One of the worst points about the giving away of prizes, or the referring to the giving away of them as I have now to do, is that it means a speech on this occasion. However, I do not mind, because the horse is a hobby of mine, also perhaps it is made easier by the fact that I have to receive as well as to refer to the giving. I am sure that we are all agreed that this has been a most excellent Show, the classes have been well filled and the quality of the exhibits has been good. If I am to refer to any one class, I would mention the horse jumping yesterday, it was a big class and nearly every horse jumped well, while there were very few refusals and only one fall. I am sure that we were all very pleased to see the one lady riding (Mrs. Gordon) beat all the men. She had a difficult horse to ride, and she rode most boldly and she sat on her horse better than any one. I am sure that we are most grateful to those who have so kindly given prizes, as we are also to the judges, notably to General Rimington and Colonel Gough, both of whom have come a long way to judge for us. Nor do we forget our ring stewards, who have worked so hard, though, perhaps, their work is not so generally seen. Last, but not least, we are most grateful to our energetic and popular secretary, Captain Hopwood, who has made such excellent arrangements. Everything has come off as he planned. For instance, he said he would have the prize-giving at 6 P.M., and here we are just starting it at 5 minutes to 6. During the last two days I have been thinking, looking now and then at the two changing pictures on the front of our programmes, somewhat as follows. What should we do without the horse, particularly in India and countries like it? I am sure that there are few more true sayings than the one, the best place for inside of a man is the outside of a horse. There is an Arab saying, "True happiness is only found on the back of a horse and in the heart of a woman." You will notice that the Arab puts the fair sex second. Then we find that poor Lindsay Gordon left out the fair sex altogether (mind, I do not say that he was right) when he wrote : "Yet if man, of all the Creator planned, his noblest work, is reckoned of the works of his hand, by sea or by land, the horse may at least rank second." I will now ask Mrs. Alderson to give away the prizes.

H.E. the Governor stepped into the centre of the assembly after the prize distribution, and in thanking Mrs. Alderson for having given away the prizes, observed that the success of the Show was very greatly due to the charming manner in which she did so, and added that the thanks of all were due to her.

In conclusion, His Excellency called for three cheers for Mrs Alderson. Three cheers were also given for Captain Hopwood.

NEW ·470 BORE.
VELOCITY 2,250 ft. sec.

The BEST Diagram made before the Editor of the Field with a Rifle of this bore.

"FIELD," March 23, 1907: ". . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridge complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

SPECIAL NO. 2. ·360 BORE.
VELOCITY 2,150 ft. sec.

Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from Lang double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cuts circle 2·1 in diameter.

Made By the Editor of the "Field."

"FIELD" "A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon."

The Story Teller.

THE THWARTED GHOST.

THERE were just four of us left in the smoking-room—Macquoid, who believes in ghosts, and Opper, who doesn't; myself with no settled conviction either way, and, finally, Hillaby, who has travelled so much in the United States that we always credited him with having imbibed as much of Yankee unbelief as he had adopted of Yankee ways.

As it turned out, we were wrong. Scarcely had Mac and Opper commenced the hot debate upon ghosts and ghost-seeing, which infallibly breaks out whenever they touch the subject (which, again, is pretty nearly every time they meet), when Hillaby struck in—

"Say, you fellows just quit your wrangling for a piece, and I'll tell you the realest ghost story of 'em all."

Mac brightened up at this unexpected support; Opper's lip began to curl.

"H'm!" he grunted, I'm tired of listening to real ghost stories which are invariably told second-hand."

"Well," said Hillaby, "you're going to hear one first-hand for a change. This is one little adventure of my own. I'm not putting up any second-hand goods this trip, so if you'll just sit tight while I fix my pipe, you shall have the tale straight and and no kinks."

We snuggled down into our seats, and prepared for thrills.

"I think you fellows remember my old school-mate, Burbridge," Hillaby began, "but whether you do or not won't matter, because he doesn't figure to any extent in the affair. I only mention him because it was at his place—or rather his father's place down to Rimingford—that the thing happened.

"I was down there for the shooting one November, and I had barely set my foot inside the door, so to speak, when Burbridge got me in a corner and asked me if I was the least bit particular about sleeping accommodation.

"'Not a little bit,' I said, 'so long as I don't get put in a damp bed or in a rat-ridden hay-loft. Just you fix up your arrangements right straight along, and give me the distinguished visitor's chamber or the top attic, as you please. I shan't mind whichever it is.'

"'Thanks awfully,' says Burbridge. 'I was sure you wouldn't mind, old chap, but I thought I'd ask you to make sure. The fact is, we are a bit crowded, and it's necessary to put someone in what we call the haunted room. Not that I believe it's really haunted, you know,' he added hastily, 'only one or two queer things have happened there, and that's quite enough to give the room a bad name, especially in an old house like this.'

"'I see,' said I. 'What sort of queer things, might I ask? You can trust me with all the creepy details; I guess I'm ghost-proof. What's the ghost like—shrieking female, with blue fire, clanking chains, and all the usual accessories, eh?'

"Burbridge smiled at this. 'Not exactly,' said he. 'Not that kind of ghost at all. To tell you the solid truth, I don't know that anyone claims to know precisely what sort of a ghost it is. It's like this. Somewhere about ninety years ago, the pater's great uncle—a buck of the Regency, and a notoriously wild blade in his time—took it into his head to get quit of some big trouble he was in by cutting his throat in that room. Now we don't know that his ghost haunts the room—in fact, I have as strong a disbelief in ghosts as yourself—but queerly enough the only two men who have occupied the room since then have done precisely the same thing; both of them were found dead in the morning, each with his own razor gripped in his hand. Seemed almost as if each of them had made up his mind to shave, and had changed his mind half-way, and done the other thing. There you are, that's all there is to it, and if you like you can decide not to sleep there.'

"'Not a bit of it,' said I. 'Tell John, or whatever his name is, to take up my traps, and I'll begin my lease of the room right now. Say, what o'clock do you dine? I want to clean up a bit. Have I time?'

"'Oh, heaps! You've the best part of an hour; we don't dine till eight.'

"'Very well, then. John can bring me up some shaving water, and I'll give your old ghost a chance to get some further practice. He must be afraid of getting rusty.'

"We both laughted at this, and I left him to follow the boy up to my room.

"I must say it was a good sort of ghost-room, the very kind of room that I should want to stay around and do my haunting in if ever I took up that line of business. I dare say you fellows know what I mean—panelled walls, old-fashioned chimney-piece, four-poster, and all that sort of fitment. And what made it all the more 'haunty' was the dead stillness of it when the door was shut. You see, it lay at the end of a long corridor, away from the main body of the house.

"Now, before I say any more, I want you to know that all that ghost talk didn't bother me any. I liked the room, it suited me, and if there was anything I could have asked for it would have been a chance to investigate something a little more authentic in the ghost line.

"Mind you, I'm not saying that it was exactly pleasant to remember that in this very room in which I stood three men had cut their throats, one after the other, and for no apparent reason. Nor was it comforting to reflect that Burbridge, for all his talk about not believing in ghosts, was probably twiddling his thumbs in a corner of the house and wondering whether I was going to be the fourth man. He's a good fellow, Burbridge, but beastly nervous and superstitious.

"Well, to get on. I unpacked my kit by the light of the candles—Burbridge's father would sooner have painted his house bright green than allow it to be desecrated by anything modern in illuminations—I unpacked and got out my shaving tackle. Then I lathered. I believe in a good long lathering, and whilst I was rubbing it in I fancied I felt a draught, as if the door had been suddenly opened. I turned round and found I was mistaken; door was shut as tight as I had left it.

"All right; I finished my lathering and picked up the razor. One, two, three—down the right cheek; turned to the left cheek and—there was my ghost, peering over my shoulder in the glass.

"My, it was an ugly face, I can tell you. Wicked! that's hardly the name for it. I couldn't see much of the figure, but what I did see was enough to tell me that this was the Regency Buck to whom Burbridge had referred.

"I don't mind confessing that I got all the thrills I wanted; in fact, I was too out-and-out frightened to move a muscle. I just stood in front of that glass as though I was carved in stone. Turn my head or move my arm I could not—not for my life.

"The face was shadowy at first—barely distinguishable in the candle-light; then it grew and grew in distinctness—and wickedness—until I could do nothing but hold my breath and stare, petrified, into its eyes. I would have gladly given every cent I was worth to be able to turn round and face it but I was fixed, as if I'd been a mummy.

"Then as I stood with my tongue sticking to the roof of my mouth, I saw a hand creep up to mine in the mirror—saw it creep up until it rested on that hand of mine which still held the razor. Like a flash it came into my mind how those other two poor fellows had met their death.

"Without removing his eyes from mine for an instant, the ghost began to draw my hand with his right across my throat. I could feel no actual touch—nothing but a sort of cold clamminess upon my wrist—but I could see the movement and feel the pressure of the razor upon my throat.

"For one moment I believe I tried to say prayers; the next I laughed—laughed, loud and long, whilst the old ghost, with a horrible glare of disappointed spite, vanished—just like a puff of smoke. And still I laughed. Oh, boys, I tell you, I lay down and laughed until I was sore."

And Hillaby laughed again at the recollection.

"But weren't you hurt? Didn't, anything happen?" we asked him in bewilderment.

"Hurt? Happen?" replied Hillady, still chuckling. "Not a little bit. Don't you see, the ghost was up against modern science. I was using a safety razor!"

EXHIBITS.

Goral Heads.

The Secretary drew the attention of members present to the pair of Goral heads, presented by General Osborne some time ago. These heads have been recently mounted in England for the Society, and make a valuable addition to the Museum.

A Live King Cobra or Hamadryad (Naia Bungarus).

The Society has just obtained through Major Wall, I.M.S., another specimen of this interesting snake, alive. The one now exhibited measures about 9 feet in length and was caught in Assam.

Photographs of Mosquitos and Tsetse Fly.

A set of photographs of the enlarged models of the malarial mosquito and tsetse fly from the cases in the entrance hall of the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, were exhibited. The Secretary mentioned that he found it was impossible to have similar cases brought out to India, even if the Society could afford it, owing to the models being made of wax which would probably melt in this climate. Mr. Kinnear, had however arranged for these photographs to be taken and Mr. John Wallace was now having them mounted for the Society in an album.

Indian Ducks And Their Allies.

The book on this subject which has been recently published by the Society by subscription, was shown to members and greatly admired. It contains 30 illustrations of the finest chromo-lithography of the Swans, Geese and Wild Ducks which occur in India and will undoubtedly become a standard work on this subject.

Mr. Savile proposed a vote of thanks be passed to the Secretary for his work in connection with the production of this beatiful book which reflected so much credit on the Society and Major Hoskyns having seconded it, this was carried.

Paper Read.

Captain Mackie, I. M. S., then read a paper by Captain W. Glen Liston, I. M. S., on the following subject :—

"The present epidemic of malaria in the port of Bombay, a description of the mosquito which is spreading the disease with some suggsted remedies."

Captain Mackie observed that it was by the irony of fate that Captain Liston was unable to be present at the meeting to read his paper owing to his having just been attacked by the very disease about which he was intending to speak.

In this paper Captain Liston pointed out that the cause and prevention of malaria resolved itself into the study of the malaria parasite in man and mosquito. Such a study necessarily involved a knowledge of the haunts and habits of mosquitoes particularly those species of them which were responsible for the communication of the disease from man to man. It was therefore a subject well worthy of consideration by the Society. After briefly referring to the history of our knowledge regarding malaria and how certain mosquitoes with spotted wings were proved by Major Ross to be the disseminators of the disease, he briefly sketched the life history of the malarial parasite as it occurred both in man and mosquito. He pointed out that for the maintenance of of the existance of the parasite it was necessary that it should pass through alternately a phase of development in man and a phase of development in the mosquito. Certain conditions on the one hand were required for the transferrence of the parasite from man to mosquito while on the other hand certain other conditions were necessary for its transference from mosquito to man. These conditions were eminently fulfilled in the present condition of the Port of Bombay. He then passed on to consider the epidemic which was at present afflicting the port. He said his attention was first directed to the matter by certain remarks made in the Municipal Corporation a few months ago by Mr. Watcha and Dr. Sukhia. These gentlemen declared that so severe was the epidemic of malaria in the Frere Road and certain parts of the Fort that houses were being vacated and people leaving the place. Investigation by him proved that these statements were correct and that a very severe epidemic was raging in this district. He said that there were four ways by which it was possible to ascertain to what extent malaria was present in a particular place.

1st—Vital statistics might be scrutinized.

2nd—The children of the place might be examined observing to what extent enlargment of the spleen was present among them.

3rd—Microscopical examination of the blood of persons living in the locality with a view to detecting the presence of the malarial parasite might be made.

4th—The anopheles mosquitoes in the district might be examined noting the species which were prevalent and especially the number of them which showed malarial parasites in their bodies.

With the assistance of Captain Mackie he had been able to gauge the severity of the disease in the present instance in all of these four ways.

Dealing first with statistics, he found that no accurate records had been kept but many cases of the disease came to his notice, among others some of that grave and fatal form of the malady known as cerabral malaria. He quoted from a letter received from the Superintendent of the P. and O. Company in which that Officer wrote : "Each steamer after being in the Victoria or Princess Docks for a few days returns its cases of malaria with painful regularity and not only does the sickness last the whole time the ships are in port here but the fever appears to be of such a maligaant character that it continues throughout the whole voyage to London and consequently incapacitates a large number of our crews from rejoining their vessels there. This state of things has become so serious that my general managers have telegraped to me from London that cases of malaria are increasiug to an appalling extent amongst the crews of the Bombay mail steamers. The Arabia which sailed from Bombay on 1st August last having had 82 cases on the homeward voyage, the Persia which sailed on the 15th idem landed 100 cases in London and a similar number occurred on the Marmora which left on the 29th August. This will give some idea of the seriousness of the epidemic."

Secondly, Captain Liston stated that no less than 30 per cent. of the children living in the Frere Road showed enlargement of the spleen and thirdly 50 per cent. of them harboured malarial parasites in their blood at the time the examination was made.

Fourthly, he was able to collect a large number of anopheles in the affected district, and examination of these showed that they belonged to two species, viz., "A. Rossi" and "A. Stephensi." The former he stated was a harmless mosquito while the latter was the mosquito which was spreading the disease. As many as 25 per cent. of these harboured the malarial parasite in some stage of developement in their body. This discovery was particularly interesting not only because it was the first time that this mosquito had been observed to be infested in nature, but also because it was associated with the construction of the new docks. It was well know that earth work of this nature had been in the past often associated with severe malaria and if for no other reason then to guard against such eventualities in future, the present epidemic ought to be thoroughly investigated. He then briefly detailed the points of difference between "A. Stephensi" which was carrying the disease and "A. Rossi" which was a harmless mosquito, and passed on to make some remarks about preventive measures. Three measures he considered under the headings "Personal Measures" and "Public Measures." He said "Personal Measures" dealt with the destruction of the malarial parasite in the human body by the administration of quinine and with adopting precautions to avoid being bitten by mosquitoes. He said that the "Public Measures" were the more important in this country because poverty and ignorance seldom permitted the personal measures being properly carried out. Public measures he said aimed chiefly at the extermination of the malaria carrying mosquito and this was generally affected by destroying the insect in its larval stage when found living in various collections of water. He pointed out that mosquito brigades could do their work intelligently or otherwise. On the one hand having ascertained which particular mosquito was spreading the disease, they could seek out and remove the breeding places of this mosquito. On the other hand they might blindly attempt to destroy all mosquito breeding places. This latter plan was the one generally adopted, but it appeared to him to be a foolish plan of operation and one likely to yield unsatisfactory results A knowledge of mosquitoes showed that each species selected a partrcular type of breeding place and if it was sought to destroy a particlaar mosquito it was comparatively an easy matter to find out its selected breeding places. He then dealt with the common breeding places of "A Stephensi" and pointed out that they had been found in the iron cisterns on the roofs of the houses in the Fort, in concrete water troughts, in disused wells, in earthenware "ghurras" and in tin pots filled with clean water. It was absurd to paint kerosin or Pesterine on every pool since each breeding place required to be dealt in a rational manner. If, for example, "A. Stephensi" was to be prevented from breeding in the iron cisterns on the houses in the Fort, the hinged trap-door now generally used on the cisterns must be re-placed by more accurately fitting covers to prevent mosquitoes gaining entrance to the water. Again the best treatment for the breeding places of "A Stephensi" in disused wells was to have them filled up. Dealing with the breeding places in this rational way it was possible to appreciate the effects of the measures by collecting from time to time the adult insects, noting whether they were more or less easily found. In concluding his paper he felt sure that they would all agree with him that the time had arrived when a through inquiry should be made into the conditions which had brought about this epidemic, and that measures should be taken at once to deal with the situation in some more thorough way than had been attempted in the past.

The paper (of which the above is only a brief extract) will appear in full in the next Journal of the Society.

Several members having spoken on the subject of the paper, Mr. Justice Mecleod said that it was to be hoped that either the Municipality or Government would investigate the matter, and he proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Captain Liston for his valuable paper and to Captain Mackie for reading it. This was passed unanimously and the meeting then terminated.

For once the American had discovered something British that was better than anything they could produce "across the pond." His discovery was a fine collie dog, and he at once tried to induce its owner, an old shepherd, to sell it.

"Wad ye be takin him to America ?" inquired the old Scot.

"Yes, I guess so" said the Yankee.

"I thocht as muckle," said the shepherd. "I couldna pairt wi' Jock."

But, while they sat and chatted, an English tourist came up, and to him the shepherd sold the collie for much less than the American had offered.

"You told me you wouldn't sell him," said the Yankee, when purchaser had departed.

"Na," replied the Scot ; "I said I couldna' pairt wi' him. Jock'll be back in a day or so, but he couldna' swim the Atlantic."

THE COUNTY CRICKET SEASON.

THE wind up of the English cricket season was miserable in the extreme, rain proving a big spoil-sport in several important fixtures. On the whole, however, followers of the game have little to complain of as the summer proved exceptionally fine. Yorkshire is again the champion county, and although there are some who regard the northern county as lucky to regain the honours, it is difficult to see what justification there is for holding such a view. In spite of the fact that there have been no test matches, that the season has been devoid of any games of a special nature, it has been particularly interesting by reason of the keen struggle for supremacy between three or four county teams.

The fact that Yorkshire have not lost a single match, while their nearest opponents, Kent, have thrice met defeat, is almost sufficient proof that the superior side has won the championship. When the season opened, it is true, the prospects of Yorkshire did not seem particularly bright. Lancashire was spoken of as possessing a very strong side, Surrey were thought to be particularly good, Sussex were considered to have a chance of securing championship honours, and Middlesex were regarded as a likely side.

Notts, the holders of the title, had practically the same side as during the previous year and they were quite expected to finish close up, though it was realised that if those two bowlers, Wass and Hallam, failed to reduce their form of the previous season the then champions would stand little chance of success.

To use a racing phrase, Yorkshire made the running practically from start to finish. Only on a few occasions were they really in danger of defeat. Yorkshire's claim to an untarnished record in the championship has been brought about by a consistency which no other team has come within measurable distance of.

There may be better batting sides, but the bowling and fielding have been so admirable when there has been a shortage of runs that the occasions when defeat has threatened have been few and far beteween. No side has dropped fewer catches, and an already formidable string of bowlers has, as a result, had its task rendered all the lighter. Even with such a trundler as Haigh absent during the most strenuous part of the season, the attack has more than held its own, thanks largely to the discovery of Newstead, who, during his first full season as a county cricketer, has enjoyed the felicity of taking 123 wickets at less than 15 runs each.

It is a striking testimony to the strength of Yorkshire's attack that Haigh, Hirst, Newstead, and Rhodes should figure at the head of the English bowling averages. Walter Brearley has the honour of occupying the sixth position, and when the number of catches dropped off his bowling are taken into account one must confess that his performance of dismissing 162 batsmen at a trifle over 16 runs apiece is a magnificent one. Hirst, much better supported in the field, has taken one wicket fewer, though at four runs less cost, and only Blythe, of Kent, has so far exceeded the number of victims claimed by the Lancastrian, though against his eleven wickets advantage is to be set the fact that he has bowled 330 more overs. It is, nevertheless, a fine achievement on the part of Blythe to take so many wickets when the state of the ground has, on the whole, been against the slow bowler. It says something for his versatility.

The county game has not provided anything dramatic during the season. The return of "Ranji," who is extremely popular, lent a personal distinction to the matches in which he played, but the Jam of Nawanagar has greater claims than cricket on him, while his old time partner in many big scores for Sussex, C. B. Fry, has not been seen much on the field. F. S. Jackson has not turned out at all, but it is hoped that he will be available for England next season when the Australians pay another visit to the old country. The old Harrovian is needed if only for his unique luck of winning the toss.

The advent of the colonials will lend an additional fillip to next season. Of course county cricket is the backbone of the game, but international cricket has an interest all its own, in which the British public are easy victims. At the same time, there can be too much of a good thing and one feels glad that the proposed international tourney between England, Australia and South Africa fell through. The idea was brought forward at an inopportune time to commence with, and, to say the least, the Cornstalks were not quite fairly treated in the matter. However, they will be in England next summer, when, given good weather, the English players will have a try to get those "Ashes" back. And after that the South Africans can try their luck against Australia. It will be time enough when they have beaten the Cornstalks on their own ground to talk of an international tournament.

The following table will show at a glance the result of every match in the Championship series. The top line gives the outcome of the home fixtures, the bottom line the result of those played away

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE Madras Rugby Tournament ended last Saturday in a win for the Leicester Regiment, who beat the Calcutta Football Club in the final game by a goal, a dropped goal and a try (12 points) to a goal (5 points). Details in our Football columns.

THE Murree Hockey tournament recently concluded once again brought together in the final two teams of the Royal Munster Fusiliers, "A" team running out winners.

THE second match between Upper and Lower Burma for the William Younger Football Cup ended in a draw, but the third encounter resulted in a win for Upper Burma by 2 goals to nil. This with their 3-2 victory in the first game gives them two wins and the possession of the trophy for the first time since its inception.

THE fifteen round boxing contest between Driver Sampson, R. F. A., and Paddy Gill, the light-weight professional, was decided at the Rink Theatre, Mussoorie, on the 30th ultimo. The match was for a purse of Rs. 300 and side bets and there was a big crowd of spectators. Sampson had defeated Gill earlier in the year and repeated his victory on the 30th, winning on points at the end of the full fifteen rounds.

AFTER an infinity of newspaper warfare, report, rumour, contradiction and confirmation, it seems now fairly safe to say that Tommy Burns, the world's heavy-weight boxing champion, and Jack Johnson have at last been matched. The articles of agreement were signed by Johnson at the New South Wales Offices in London on the 16th September. The terms are a purse of £7,000, winner to take 60 per cent. and the loser 40 per cent.

The fight will take place either in Sydney or Melbourne on some date in December. Johnson sailed for Australia accompanied by his wife and his manager, Mr. Fitzpatrick.

The easy victories gained by Burns over Moir, Palmer, and Roche, and his subsequent refusal to meet Johnson, were the sensation of the last boxing season. Unable to get a match with Burns in America, Johnson, it will be remembered, followed the champion to England, but his repeated challenges were at first ignored by Burns, who, however, afterwards stated that he would meet the black if paid £6,000, win, lose or draw.

These prohibitive terms made a meeting of the men in that country impossible, and, although Johnson offered to fight Burns on the understanding that the winner took the whole proceeds, Burns still evaded the challenge. Matters were at a deadlock when Burns sailed for Australia.

Undaunted, however, by Burns' repeated evasions Johnson announced his intention some time ago of following the Canadian to Australia, and even offered to stop Burns inside twenty rounds for a big side stake. Mr. Fitzpatrick some weeks ago cabled out Johnson's plans, and now that the huge purse Burns wanted has been put up, the latter has found himself left with no alternative.

ONE of the finest performances of the athletic age was achieved by T. E. Hammond, the pedestrian, at the Stadium, on Saturday, the 12th September. In the twenty-four hours' walking contest he covered 131 miles, 580 yards, 15 inches, to give the exact distance! A marvellous feat and an all round breaker of world's records as will be seen from the details given in our London sporting letter. His fine stride, easy movement and the apparent absence of fatigue throughout created profound astonishment: he settled down to an even pace at the start and scarcely altered it right through the arduous task. Just think of it. A shade under five and a half miles an hour for twenty-four hours. What endurance, what fitness! The grand walking of the white-haired veteran, Pemell, of the Surrey Walking Club, also attracted much attention. He footed it as merrily at ninety miles as he had done in the first five, winding up with a score of 92 miles, 1,470 yards in sixteenth position at the finish. Another remarkable performance was that of Gillespie, the old Essex Beagle. Not once did he retire from the track during the whole twenty-four hours.

ROWING men in India will be sorry to hear of the death of the famous old-time sculler, oarsman and boat builder, Mr. John Hawke Clasper. He succumbed to a long illness at Putney on the 16th September. Deceased came of a family famous as boat builders and rowing men. His father was Mr. Harry Clasper, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, who built the first keel-less racing boat, a four-oared craft, which he and three other brothers used first in the now defunct National Regatta on the Thames, and surprised the rowing world by the easy fashion they beat all comers. This boat was the original model from which our best racing boats of the present day are built. In fact, the name of Clasper is bound up with the history of the racing boat. The family all possessed inventive genius. They introduced the outrigger in 1841, and the introduction of the sliding seat followed some years afterwards. The sliding seat was practically discovered by accident by the deceased: Rowing men finding, after continuous hard work, a sore inconvenience in the most sensitive portion of their anatomy, had recourse to vigorous "soaping," in order to ameliorate the distress of body. The slippery properties of the soap caused the oarsmen to slide, and in process of time it came home to them that a longer reach was thereby obtained. Mr. John Clasper struck this happy idea, and improved upon it. He constructed a movable seat, to run upon rollers of either glass or ivory, that gave a slide of some dozen inches. Thus the sliding seat was introduced into rowing. Mr. John Clasper was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne on 13th October 1835, and had, therefore, almost completed his seventy-third year. Never more than a light-weight, he acted as coxswain for his father and uncles in their four-oared races when very young, but in 1851 he rowed his first race. His career lasted until 1875, and he won many races, but never being more than a light-weight—he stood 5 feet 5½ inch in height, and weighed about 8st. 8lbs.—he could never aspire to championship class. In business, deceased rose to the top of the ladder of fame. He carried on his labours first at Durham, and afterwards at Oxford and Putney. At one time he was the favourite builder for the Universities, and for years had a big foreign and Colonial connection.

M. INMAN, the billiard player, is evidently "cut for blood" now that he is back in London after his wanderings in Australia, China and India. He entered for the Championship and, as no one else entered the lists against him, he has proclaimed himself champion of the world. He is keen on playing T. Reece and has, he says, backing up to any amount. He has been interviewed on his travels and, among other things, he said the "game was looking up in India" and that our amateur talent was of good class. He seemed rather surprised at the degree of civilisation which some of us, especially the Maharajahs, have attained!

DOG flesh is creeping up in price in some parts of the world. Long ago specimens of certain toy breeds were sold for their weight in gold: now we read of a Griffon—said to be the smallest in the world and well he need be at the rate per ounce paid for him—lately sold—by Mlle. Atom to Mrs. J. T. Windrim at Philadelphia for £200. As the wee beast weighs 25oz., this works out at £8 per ounce, more than twice its weight in gold!

ALTHOUGH the dog is one of the commonest of the domestic pets it is singular how little people know about the proper way of feeding and caring for him. In the majority of cases the unhappy creature has far more to eat than is good for him, while the diet upon which he is kept is, in the main, unsuitable especially in India. There is no excuse for this sort of thing, but, for the benefit of those who do not know, a few homely hints may be given. Supposing you are starting with a puppy, it is well to remember that "little and often" is the motto to be observed. It is not often advisable to allow a dam to suckle more than half a dozen puppies, and it may be laid down as a general principle that the little ones will do all the better if there are not as many as this. When they are about three weeks old they may be encouraged to lap a little lukewarm milk. In another week this may be given two or three times a day, and by the sixth week they should be fully weaned. Before this, however, their food may be varied from milk pure and simple. A little broth will be appreciated, and this or the milk may be strengthened by the addition of some finely-rubbed breadcrumbs or boiled rice. These must be thoroughly soaked. After six weeks the supply of liquid may be gradually decreased until the puppies are able to masticate soaked puppy biscuits, of which Spratt's or Swallow and Ariel's may be thoroughly recommended. Finely chopped raw meat will bring them along splendidly, and the sooner they can take it the better. When the whelps are weaned they should be fed every two hours during the working day until they are eight weeks old, when every third hour will do. It is most important not to overfeed. They require to be in good condition, but they must not be pig-fat. Never permit them to gorge to the point of distention unless you would ruin their immature digestive organs. Another reason against excess is that puppies thus fed run a great danger of growing up with crooked legs, which is a great disfigurement. A dog that is not straight in front, especially if he belong to a sporting variety, is a terrible eyesore, and his value is materially reduced. Over-fed puppies rarely exercise themselves properly. Their day, if they are healthy, should be divided between play and sleep. Some puppies refuse to do well, however carefully they are coaxed. A little cod liver oil or Parrish's Food with two meals a day will frequently work wonders. Half a teaspoonful to a puppy, provided they are of medium size, of precipitated phosphate of lime, in the food once a day will be helpful in the formation of bone.

Adult dogs should never be fed more than twice a day, about nine o'clock in the morning and six in the evening being convenient hours. Once you have decided upon the time stick to it rigorously. A dog's stomach is a wonderful timekeeper, and you will soon be reminded if you go beyond the customary hour. No hard-and-fast rules can be laid down as to the quantity to be given, dogs varying so much, but the condition of the animal must tell whether he is receiving too much or too little. In the morning a dog biscuit or two will suffice, and at night, if there are not enough household scraps, the dietary may be varied with meat and biscuits soaked, or brown bread and boiled rice as variants. A dog must have a liberal allowance of meat if he is to be kept in good health, and any spare vegetables should go into his bowl. In most instances household scraps, reinforced by biscuits, will be quite enough, but if several dogs are kept it is as well to cook especially for them.

And never leave the feeding of the dog entirely to native servants; always see the food before it is given and make a point of seeing the dog eat it. It is the only way.

A LEADING Paris dog's tailor has just issued his winter novelties circular, which shows the canine fashion has undergone certain modifications.

A chic tailor-made mantle replaces last year's sealskin jacket. The new mantle is specially designed to protect the dog's chest when accompanying his mistress in her carriage or motor-car. Fido's handkerchief is now carried in a little purse attached to the leash. The lady experts whose speciality is canine hairdressing have decreed that the Parisiennes' pampered pets must use the same perfume as their mistresses.

The jewellery most in request for aristocratic dogs this winter will be gold bracelets, ornamented with diamond, attached to the fore legs. The collar is frequently enriched with precious stones. Footwear for dogs has been condemned, as it made the pets' feet look large. Smart motoring dogs are now provided with automobile goggles and hood to protect them from dust.

THE death is announced of Mr. Jas. J. Macken, a well known personality on the Australian turf. He had been under treatment for an internal complaint for some weeks, and had undergone an operation, but the news of his death on the 4th ultimo came as a shock to his large circle of friends. Mr. Macken, who arrived from Ireland nearly 25 years ago, was well known to the general public through his connection with racing, and many flattering demonstrations were accorded his colours. Among the horses raced by him were Australian Colours—who, after being sent to England, and racing there, won on returning to Australia—Luciana, Clonsilla, and Tartan, the last-named undoubtedly being the best horse Mr. Macken ever owned, his successes including the Sydney Cup, Australian Cup, and Champion Stakes. Mr. Macken was a plucky bettor, and those best qualified to express an opinion give him the credit of being that rarity a good loser.

OF the slump in the motor-car trade a good deal is still to be heard. A little while ago people liked to say that the motor industry was only in its infancy. Less is heard of that statement to-day. It is true that the commercial vehicle has scarcely been exploited in a manner worthy of its utility, but no doubt within a year or two great strides will be made in that branch of the industry. At present comparatively few firms own commercial vans, yet those that have embarked upon self-propelled vehicles of the sort are, as a rule, more than satisfied with the results. More orders are bound to follow. As far as the private car is concerned it is difficult to see where further expansion in any great degree is to come from. During 1907 the value of the motor-cars made at home reached £7,000,000, and, judging from what one hears from certain sections of "the trade," this about represents high-water mark—for the time being at all events.

A MOTOR-CAR is not a poor man's toy, and it is certainly a luxury to the somewhat vaguely described individual known as "the man of moderate means." Nor can it be said that wealthy people show the readiness to possess themselves of as many cars as they did a year or two ago. Those who could afford it then owned two or three, or even more. The great improvement in design of bodies, in hill-climbing capacity, and in controllability in the modern car is to a great extent responsible for the falling-off in the demand, because the need no longer exists of having separate cars for town and country use. The one satisfies both requirements at the present day. Then it was evident during the London season this year that there is a tendency to go back to the stylish pair of horses for driving about the Park and the West-End. Altogether, the slump in the motor trade was inevitable, though directly it finds its true level again the industry will probably prove as valuable as ever it was in this country.

OUR Bombay correspondent writes:—The weekly Mounted Sports Meeting of the Bombay Gymkhana came off again on Wednesday, and the numbers who are taking an interest both as spectators and competitors speak well for the forthcoming Big Meeting. The weather was ideal and, with the 116th Mahratta Band playing, no more way to spend a pleasant afternoon is to be found. It is pleasant to see the ladies so keen in the events provided for them and we have some very good horsewomen Their particular event was the Hallowe'en Stakes in which they had to ride to buckets with apples floating in them and stick one of the fruit with a fork before returning and without dismounting. Mrs. Rumboll was quickest, but in the return journey she was passed by Mrs. Turner Green.

Though entries were small, there was some good jumping, and a new one to the game in Mr. Barraclough's animal won the pony event from Mr. O. Symons. The horse class went to Mr Stileman, who carries off the majority of these with his cob who is really only a pony. In the Potato Race no less than thirteen competed, so it was run in heats. The picking up had to be done with spears on horseback, and Messrs. Symons and Scott and Capt. Mackie won the heats, for Capt. Mackie to win the final easily from Mr. Scott.

Not an easy event is the Postilion Race, but the horses have been well trained and did not give too much trouble. Mr. Symons's pair simply flew away from the rest, so much so that he had to leave one of them to look after itself whilst he pulled up the one he was riding. Scott and Mackie followed.

Ladies again came in when the Presidency Stakes came on, they having to bowl and knock off the bails after their partners had ridden up and donned pads, which they had to take off before returning. Mrs. Rumboll and Mr. Symons, Mrs. McCausland and Mr. Barraclough, and Mr. and Mrs. Nash won their heats. This is quite a pet event for Mrs. Rumboll who never wants more than the first ball of her over, and she won the final from Mrs. McCausland and her partner.

The sprints came at the finish, the horse race going again to Mr. Rommel on the State, and Mr. Barraclough winning the pony one; both after good finishes.

OUR Poona correspondent writes:—Though the Big Meeting is over, the size of the stakes is about the only sign by which one can tell, as the Eighth Extra was not only well attended but provided seven very full races with open betting very much in favour of the layers. As to the weather now in Poona, it is all that is to be desired and the course gave proof of its fitness by the times that were put up; Recovery doing the six in 1-16⅘ and Lady Lomond the five in 1-2⅘.

To start with, the first of the divided Maiden Plate opened the day, and gradually Gazban and Hishan shortened to favouritism. Hishan followed Naief in the early stage and when he fell back allowed Gazban and Light to come up to him as far as the distance where, after riding a nice waiting race on him, Taylor went away to stay out a late run by Holker. In the other division Real Blood, for whom many have been waiting, was made favourite from Surrender and Fritz. The first-named did not even provide his supporters with some excitement as he was never seen near the front, but we may confidently expect better before long. Surrender and Fritz made all the early running and, when the former was done with, the latter had Afreed and Narsin safe only for Toskin to come on the outside and pass everything after a drubbing he is likely to remember, administered by Heeroo.

HALF of the ten that went out for the Pony race, the Rosehill Plate, were backed—Cracker, Encourage, Matalgia, Koko and Recovery. Koko and Chippy Norton were first away and Cracker came up to them after a couple of furlongs only to be passed by Matalgia at the bend. This latter looked all over a winner a furlong from home, but Recovery suddenly made her appearance and snatched a head verdict in a pretty finish.

AGAIN in the mile Sandown Plate six out of eight were backed, Lachlan the most. Coquette played her usual game by getting away to the front from Zotique, Lachlan and Admiral Crichton, the rest getting off badly. Manley was waiting nicely in front but it was evident before the bend that Zotique was not being troubled to keep her within safe distance. At the bend Lachlan was under the whip and Zotique passing the leader won with a good bit in hand.

TWENTY faced the starter for the mile Consolation for Arabs, and Antica, Devon, Safoog and Rummah were the shortest priced though at sixes. Meazer acted as pacemaker followed by Ashroff, Hazza and Safoog, and at the distance Ashroff came with a slight lead. At the distance Safoog made his presence felt on the outside, but there was still something left in Meazer who went away again and won a good race. This is Mr. Ali bin Talib's first win for a long time after a sequence of tantalising places.

THE horse Consolation of five furlongs was very open with Bucolic and Lady Metal sharing most money. For the first time since before the Big Meet, Bucolic got out well but there was no getting away as on the first occasion, Mozart and Lady Metal hanging on to him, and at the bend he began to fall back, as did Mozart. Down the straight Lady Lomond and Pincher came up and nearing the post Conscience came like a flash only to miss Lady Lomond by a neck. Had Conscience found her way through a trifle earlier she would have about won.

EVEN the Closed Race was a bad upset when Deenar was made favourite from eight others. He won this identical race last year, no better treated than he now was, literally in a walk, but either he was made too much use of or is not wound up as, after leading to the bend, he was apparently in distress. Here M.V.O. and Gendarme were in front and the latter was going well after a sudden dash by Veto on the rails, but The Munshi full of running walked past them all.

A FAST course with a big attendance and large fields mostly in the seven events provided a good day's racing for the Poona Ninth Extra.

THE Bheema Plate dwindled down to a field of three, Clear Artist favourite from Daroji and Lord Boyne. Daroji made all the early running, but when Lord Boyne and then Clear Artist came up to him near the last jump he was finished. Taking the lead after that Lord Boyne had them all set, with Clear Artist jumping none too well and appearing to be going a trifle short on coming in.

THE Small Winners' Plate had seventeen with a pile on Brutus, money also for Fairfield and Squire, none of which found a place. Happy Hand set a fast pace, but five furlongs is his limit, and Rufus with Sabah caught him at the bend. Rajput and Safal then came up, and the latter gradually making up ground, was returned winner by a neck—many thinking it was Rajput's race.

ENOUGH for 1-2-3 betting started for the New Lawn Plate with Coquette and Posco the order till the commission came for Windy and Posco extended a bit. St. Patrick led Coquette at a cracking pace, but both fell away at the bend where Windy came up and went away. He held Pelargonium safe, but was very nearly being caught mapping by Forfeit, who put in a great run on the rails.

OF the sixteen for the Chinchwad Plate for Arabs, Jehangir was made a warm favourite from Meazer. Lofan, Sanjakdhar and Desert King made it a solid race and Jehangir came at the bend, but Meazer full of running held Desert King fairly safe.

THE Welter Plate, a closed race, looked a "moral" for Ashanti Gold though Umutbee and The Earl were nearly as well backed. St. Michael gave them the slip early, followed by The Earl. Just before the bend Umutbee and Ashanti Gold came, but too late, and St. Michael won pulling up, Captain Hopwood having ridden a nice waiting race in front.

ANOTHER win for Mr. Galstaun came in the Stand Plate, when Our State was well backed though Hunting Horn was actual favourite with Sugar Apple also supported confidently in a field of five. Dirty Boy went out to make the running for the other string and gave way to Sugar Apple after half the journey. The latter was going well when Our State and Hunting Horn came, but in the straight there was nothing in it but Our State, whose 2-39 was good time and a great improvement on past form.

LASTLY the Karjat Plate in which Salanic was the order, Fantom, though, eventually winding up an equal favourite. Sirur led Salanic for the early part, but after a couple of furlongs Salanic came out and won hard held with Fantom inside and Plassey outside coming into places past Hermit, who for the first time showed some inclination to gallop.

WE hear that the English Jockey Club have, at the request of the Calcutta Turf Club, selected Major the Hon. Rupert Leigh, late of the 4th Dragoon Guards, as Handicapper for the Calcutta Turf Club. Major Leigh must still be remembered when with his regiment in India, and he occasionally used to ride at up-country races. It is on the tapis that the present Handicapper of the Western India Turf Club will retire after the Bombay Meeting, as he feels unequal to carrying on his arduous duties much longer.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 18th September 1908.

IN an atmosphere of popular enthusiasm, in the presence of an unusually large and brilliant gathering Mr. Winston Churchill, President of the Board of Trade, and Miss Clemintine Hozier were made man and wife at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, last Saturday. There were over eight hundred guests (by special ticket only) in the Church, some twelve thousand (uninvited) outside the edifice, and of course a strong contingent of the "lor an order" gentlemen; and they were kept fairly busy too, for the crowd was demonstrative and effusive to the last degree. Canon Wilberforce read the earlier portions of the service, the actual ceremony was performed by the Bishop of St. Asaph, and Dr. Welldon, Dean of Manchester (erstwhile Bishop of Calcutta) and bridegroom's head-master at Harrow, improved the happy occasion with what were doubtless words of wisdom and comfort, but delivered in such a low tone as to be practically inaudible. He used to make himself well heard in the Calcutta Cathedral, if I mistake not. Lord Hugh Cecil was best man, Sub-Lieut. Hozier, R.N., gave away the bride, there were five bridesmaids, all pretty of course, equally of course the high contracting parties were "radiant"—I think that is the correct word—the presents were Surely the Admiralty are frequently as wasteful with public money as any Indian Municipality. For some months past now the cruiser Gladiator has been reposing at the bottom of the Solent, and we do not doubt for a moment that the salvage work has, so far, been worth the cost, since the guns and other valuable stores have been salved. To that extent the work on the battleship Montagu was also worth undertaking. But, without in any way deprecating the skill of the companies employed by the Admiralty on these melancholy occasions, one may fairly question whether attempts—even when ultimately successful—to resurrect warships are worth the outlay. In the case of the battleship Sultan a huge sum was spent, and the ship had to be almost rebuilt after her recovery from the Commino Channel. In all, upwards of £400,000 was wasted, for a better ship could, at that period, have been built for the money. The salving of the battleship Howe was considerably less costly, but the ship was almost out of date by the time her extensive repairs were finished. The Gladiator, again, is not quite an up-to-date cruiser, and a great sum may have to be spent upon the refit. The question arises whether the Admiralty sufficiently weighs the cost before embarking upon these salving experiments. Ships should not be raised merely as a matter of sentiment. Their value should decide the issue in all cases. What, in her present conditions, is the value of the Gladiator?

If I were ever of the great unemployed I would pray that it might be in any other place in the world than London town. India would be my choice, with the friendly chummery, the accommodating boarding-house keeper or the hotel proprietor with views on credit more or less liberal, but London—ugh! To the Anglo-Indian mind the contemplation of the terrible tragedy of poverty all around in this great city is simply appalling. Let me present your readers with the following details of an "Unemployed Drama" in which 2,000 men struggled the other day for a berth worth eighteen shillings a week:—"In a side thoroughfare by the Eye Hospital, City Road, called in irony, Peerless Street, were gathered a crowd of nearly 2,000 men. They had come to answer in person an advertisement for hospital porter at the munificent salary of 18s. a week with uniform and meals. So anxious was each man to profit by the golden opportunity of obtaining work, that a force of twelve policemen had to intervene to form the applicants into a long queue and to prevent injury in the keen struggle for supremacy. Only young men from eighteen to twenty were invited to apply, but others who had long since passed the required age, resolved to try their luck to save themselves from starving. From the great crowd some three hundred men paraded for inspection, and of these about fifty were invited into the hospital. Still the men waited on, despair written upon their faces, until the last chance had gone. Then they walked slowly away, to begin again elsewhere the hopeless search for work and food."

Your late Viceroy was in a very serious motor accident the other day and had what I take to be a narrow escape. Lord Curzon was travelling in a motor-landaulette from London to Hackwood Park, his residence near Basingstoke, and had reached a spot about three-quarters of a mile from Sunningdale Station when his car collided with another motor-car coming from the opposite direction. Lord Curzon, who was sitting alone in the landaulette, was thrown violently forward. He received a clean-cut wound on his forehead and was very severely shaken. Dr. T. M. Wildridge, of Sunningdale, was quickly in attendance and dressed the wound on the spot. Lord Curzon was very dazed, but after a little time was conveyed to Sunningdale Station and thence by train to Basingstoke for Hackwood Park. Both motor-cars were severely damaged, and were unable to be moved for some time after the collision.

The outcry against the reckless driving of a section of motorists appears to increase in volume every week. The offenders are being soundly rated in the Press, and some of the public are so incensed that there have been threats of lynch-law and no wonder when every newspaper one opens contains details of some fatality or serious injury caused by motorists. When the ordinary law is powerless to put a stop to reckless driving, and consequent resulting accidents the public temper is certain to be roused. And that the law has failed everyone must admit. Even the Royal Automobile Club itself has shown, by their recently-issued manifesto, that something is urgently needed beyond the present law. Whether the club's action will do any good is highly problematic, for the simple reason that the hooligan motorist will not be influenced by any appeal, even though signed by the hand of Royalty. The club's action, too, is somewhat late in the day. Had prompt measures been taken as soon as the scorching evil manifested itself, and had the club then co-operated with the authorities, reckless driving could have been reduced to a minimum. Instead of doing so, the club members rather ranged themselves on the side of law-breakers, and prominent members were frequently fined for exceeding the speed-limit. Now that the evil has grown to such large proportions, and now that the public wrath is affecting all motorists, the club is bestirring itself. Nothing but very stringent laws, very stringently enforced, will have the much-to—be desired effect of making our highways reasonably safe for cyclists, pedestrians, and other road-users.

The Anti-Licensing Bill demonstrators offer up their great national protest in Hyde Park on the 27th instant, a day on which I shall try and find something to take me many miles from London. The whole railway system of the country will be brought into play on that dread day; 166 special trains will bring in over 60,000 demonstrators—the greatest series of excursions to London for one day ever organised. And the cost will be over £20,000. The text of the resolution to be put at the platforms in Hyde Park is as follows:—"That this national demonstration protests against the provisions of the Licensing Bill on the grounds that it will fail to promote the cause of temperance, will violate those rights of property which have hitherto been encouraged and recognised by the State, will tend largely to the increase of unemployment, and will interfere with the reasonable liberty of the community."

There is much of interest to see at the Rubber Exhibition running at Olympia this month, and with the rubber boom now going strong one is not surprised to discover how it is doing its best to oust certain things, leather for instance, and to find it being now largely used in the production of numberless articles of domestic and general use. Some enthusiasts predict its extensive use at no distant date in street paving, provided the great obstacle of initial cost can be overcome, and with the marvels of the modern rubber industry here shown the realisation of a "Silent London" would seem to be within measurable distance. With streets paved with rubber instead of with wood blocks, or macadam, or stone setts, and with smooth-working motor-omnibus engines traffic would be carried on under conditions of almost perfect quiet. There would be no skidding, the roads would not have to be torn up for repair, there would be very little dust, a cleanlier state of things would prevail, and one's nerves would not be wracked by the incessant roar which people have to suffer now-a-days. Certain private firms have already taken it up, and we have before us the successful experiment of the courtyard of the Savoy Hotel and the approach to Euston Station, the latter laid down twenty-five years ago and, in spite of the enormous traffic that passes over it, still in a splendid state of preservation.

I am practically without theatrical news this week. I looked in at the Adelphi on Monday night, saw somewhat of "The Corsican Brothers" and the one act play which preceded it, "The House of Pierre" by Julie Opp Faversham and Kate Jordon. It is distinctly amateurish in execution, but clever in conception, while the acting of Mr. Martin Harvey and Miss deSilva helped to tone down its crudities to such a degree that the piece was more than favourably received. Pierre (Mr. Harvey) is a workman who is blind; a man who hitherto has been able to earn his daily wage with comparative ease, but now, owing to an explosion which has deprived him of sight, is reduced to the precarious device of wood-carving, while Lizette, his wife (Miss deSilva), is supposed to make and sell lace. Of course, neither the wood-carving nor the lace really sells; yet Pierre is kept in the comfort which he needs, and is surrounded with the little attentions which his invalid state demands. How is it done? Alas, the explanation is clear, when we see the wife stealing into her house in the early morning in the costume of a singer and ballet-dancer, and clutching the banknotes which as she hopes will enable them to leave France and make a new start in America. And then the fatal truth is revealed in the unlooked-for appearance of M. Crapeau—whose name clearly ought to be spelt "Crapaud"—and his riotous companions, Jaques and Cora and Blanche. A dreadful scene ensues in which Pierre tries to

THERE are unmistakable indications that in The King of Cadonia Mr. Frank Curzon has found a piece which will serve to fill the Prince of Wales's for a good many months. To help out an interesting story of adventure and romance, Mr. Sidney Jones has written some delicious music. Then, at the head of a fine cast, is Mr. Bertram Wallis, who, as the King, will have all the town talking in his praise, so debonnair and gallant a figure is he, and so splendid is his singing. Also, there is Miss Isabel Jay with several delightful numbers, Mr. Huntley Wright, and Miss Gracie Leigh, best of our musical comediennes.

SOME of the older generation of Indian Field readers in Bengal will, perhaps, remember Brigade-Surgeon Robert Lidderdale, formerly Sanitary Commissioner of the Presidency. He died at Torquay, where he had resided for some years, on the 14th instant. Writing from memory, I think he saw service in the Mutiny and was specially distinguished for his zeal in the extension of vaccination and the study of entomology. A Bhutan butterfly was named after him I believe. The British Museum acquired his valuable collection. Dr. Lidderdale belonged to old families in the south of Scotland, and he was a direct descendant of Andrew Lidderdale, the last lay abbot of Dryburgh, a great administrator of Church lands at the end of the fifteenth century. He married a Miss Scott, one of the "three belles of Cheltenham," and the other sisters married Mr Kilby, once Collector of Income-tax, and Mr. Kilby, the Legal Remembrancer; all three ladies were prominent in Calcutta society many years ago.

YOUR readers who know the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, may be interested to hear of a recent distinction conferred upon them. For the first time in English history a kilted regiment has done duty as King's guard at the Royal palaces in London. The honour has fallen to the 1st Battalion of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, Princess Louise's regiment, formerly the 91st Foot. It is the only infantry regiment in the service which bears Balaclava as a battle honour on its colours. The presence of the battalion in London on guard duty is due to the new system, introduced when the Duke of Connaught was Inspector-General, of giving every regiment a period of field training. All the battalions of Guards are now engaged in the manœuvres in Hampshire.

A NEW terror has been added to the summer invasion of Great Britain by the Yankees: many of them have brought over their own motor-cars this year and have added their full share of dust and stink to the highways, and quaintness in dress and picturesqueness in language to the country hostelries at which, by the way, they are none too welcome I am told.

SHOOTING IN COORG.

A BIG TUSKER.

IT was in the middle of a very wet June, not many years ago, that I found myself, in company with friend R., occupying a tiny forest bungalow buried in the depths of the Coorg jungles. For ten days previous to this I had been in pursuit of bison across the border in Mysore State, but no success had so far rewarded my efforts. There were plenty of bison to be sure, but the jungle was thick, and in places almost impenetrable. It was the same story day after day. Fresh tracks would be found in the early morning; after careful tracking for a few hours, pushing one's way through the matted undergrowth, there would suddenly be a snort and a crashing of bamboos as a herd of invisible bison would dash off further into the depths of the forest. At this time of year in these jungles it was often only possible to see ten or fifteen yards in any direction.

Occasionally one would see a pair of horns and an enormous head looking at one through the leafy undergrowth, but the usual snort and crash, and it would be gone before one could decide whether its owner was a bull or a cow, or raise the rifle to one's shoulder.

The herd would be quickly followed up, but the same thing would be repeated again and again with aggravating monotony. This was in the Kakankoti forest so frequently mentioned by Sanderson in his well-known book "Thirteen Years amongst the Wild Beasts of India." It was very interesting to still see the remains of the keddahs which he had made with such success; there were also still the remains of many old elephant pits, the use of which he was chiefly instrumental in abolishing. It was close to this spot that the large keddah was recently held for H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

The close season for big game shooting in Mysore territory having now begun, I started to trek through the forest with my bullock carts to the little forest bungalow mentioned above, to meet R. We started off gaily enough along a little-used cart track. Before going very far the track became overhung by jungle and creepers and the use of axes to cut our way through became frequent. Not long after both cart men and trackers began to hesitate as to which direction we should take, and a few hours later, as darkness set in, found us benighted in heavy forest with the rain pouring down in torrents.

Being assured that the bungalow was only an hour's walk further, I took a couple of trackers with a lantern in the hope of finding the wished-for shelter. After stumbling through the dripping grass for about an hour we saw a light burning in the distance, but this only turned out to be the fire of three "kabaras," the junglemen of these parts. One of these creatures—more like monkeys than men—squatted close to a fire at the foot of a giant tree, whilst a platform high up in the branches contained his two companions and another fire. These aborigines are extremely shy and timid, living entirely in the jungle and on jungle produce. They seldom, if ever, leave the jungle and spend the nights high up on a platform in a tree so as to be out of the way of elephants and other wild beasts. Occasionally a few will live together in a ramshackle sort of a village which is immediately deserted on the death of one of their number, for fear of the spirit of the departed one which is supposed to haunt the surroundings. I found several of these deserted villages hidden away in the jungle far away from any road or path.

After a deal of cross-examination, my trackers, who were of the same breed, but somewhat more civilized, managed to elicit the information from these "wild men of the woods" that the bungalow was at least another two hours' journey further on; so taking them with us to show the way back, we returned to the stranded bullock carts, where I had to make the best of a bad job and spend a wet uncomfortable night. Starting before dawn from this cheerless position, a journey of two and a half hours found us at the bungalow.

Living in a hut close by was an obliging native forest subordinate who fed me on bananas and coffee, and sent men to show the bullock carts the proper road. We had wandered no less than fifteen miles from our correct route, and it was not till early the following morning that they eventually turned up. Luckily, R. arrived during the day and provided me with the necessaries of life, including a hot bath and a change of clothes.

He also had had great difficulty in finding his way through the jungle, but his carts arrived by six that evening. Just before reaching the bungalow he had succeeded in shooting a sloth bear. We had each obtained permission to shoot one elephant, so it was with no little delight and expectancy, that that very evening we heard them trumpeting and pulling down branches within a few yards of the small clearing on which the bungalow was situated.

An examination of the visitor's book in the bungalow showed that no one had been here for nearly a year, and then only a forest officer for a day or two on duty.

Next morning R went off to look for bison, whilst I went in search of the elephants.

The latter had roamed about over a considerable area during the night, and it was not until five o'clock in the evening that my trackers came up with the herd.

Although I had come into contact with wild elephants in the Dim jungles on several occasions when after other game, this was my first experience of a herd at close quarters.

Approaching carefully with what little wind there was in our faces, we got within a few yards of a cow on the outskirts of the herd.

Having taken cover behind the trunk of a large teak tree, we saw the remainder of the herd gradually appear.

There must have been about thirty elephants altogether! What a trumpeting and shrieking they made as they tore down the bamboo jungle! The whole place seemed to be alive with them, as branches were crashed down in all directions.

Till now nothing but cows, some with small calves, and half grown tuskers had shown themselves, but at last a fine tusker with tusks about three feet showing outside the gum came into view.

On each side of him were several cows, but instead of waiting for a more favourable opportunity, I foolishly tried to get closer to him at once. After a few steps towards him, elephants appeared within a few yards on all sides of me, and then, of course, the inevitable happened; one of them got my wind.

A few seconds silence as the heard huddle up together, then one or two shrill trumpetings are followed by a crashing through the jungle by the one who leads the way; the remainder follow silently but rapidly in single file and disappear from view in the jungle beyond. So quietly and quickly do they vanish, they might be some huge phantoms! All now is stillness where only a few moments previously was noise and turmoil; and the trodden down and dilapidated jungle alone bears witness to their recent presence!

There were several other herds—or they may have all been detachments of the same large herd—in the vicinity, and for the next week, I practically lived amongst elephants. These herds seem to consist almost entirely of cows or quite small tuskers, though on one occasion I came upon my old friend with the fair tusks, but with no better luck than on the previous occasion.

Having by this time become quite accustomed to elephants, I amused myself by taking many snapshots of them with a Kodak, a tracker carrying a rifle handy in rear, in case of an emergency. Unfortunately none of these photos turned out successfully owing to the darkness of the jungle in which our game was always found.

Except for the fire lines, covered at this season by grass eight feet high, which separated one forest from another, there were practically no other clearings.

On every side the forest seemed to stretch to infinity, dark and sombre the giant trees blotted out the sky above, limiting the horizon to a small break in the foliage a few yards above one's head.

This endless expanse of jungle was so oppressive that it was quite a relief to occasionally find one's self on a small rise in one of these fire lines, from where one's view extended in two directions at any rate, for several hundred yards.

Having almost despaired of bagging a tusker from our present camp, it was from such a place, as I have just described, that the monster elephant was espied, which gave me a three days' hunt before he was eventually brought to book.

Having wandered in a different direction to usual, we had taken shelter from the persistent rain, which now fell in torrents daily, in a small kabara's hut on the fire line which separates Coorg from Mysore, and not far from the well-known Wynaad forest. There were some huge boulders close at hand and it was from the summit of one of these, that I saw, about half a mile away, the huge bull whose tusks were bigger than any I had seen before. The only other elephant visible at the time was a cow a little distance further away. He was on the Mysore edge of the fire line, and every time he raised his head to pull down an overhanging branch his long tusks gleamed in the sunshine which was now breaking through the leaden clouds in fitful rays.

As we feasted our eyes on him, I determined that he should be mine, come what may. The thought of losing such a prize seemed insupportable! The only thing which marred the pleasurable excitement of anticipation was the fact that at present he was in Mysore territory and my license only permitted me to kill an elephant in Coorg.

At last to my intense satisfaction the remainder of a large herd came into view and followed by the monster, slowly fed across the border and entered the forest on the Coorg side.

The wind was in the right direction, so no time was lost in getting to closer quarters.

An hour later found me within thirty-five yards of the tusker, but his vast body only could be seen, his head being hidden behind an intervening bush.

It was still early in the afternoon and the herd would not begin feeding in earnest for another couple of hours.

Owing to the wind there was no possibility of at present approaching in any other direction from where his head might be seen. Determined to take no risks I waited for him to make the first move. For an hour and a half he remained in the same position, whilst he could be heard continually flicking flies off his head and belly with a branch held in his trunk, and occasionally making a sort of gurgling sound.

My heart beat with excitement when at length he turned his quarters towards me and moved off to commence his evening meal. Perhaps soon he would give me a chance at his head!

As is usually the case a big tusker spends his midday siesta separated by some little distance from the rest of the herd. This was so in the present instance. Twice by waiting till the jungle became somewhat thinner, I succeeded in making a half circle and getting in front of him in the hope that he would feed towards me. On each occasion just as I had cocked the 8-bore, and thought that a shot was certain at the bump in his forehead, he turned off in another direction, without even giving me a chance of a side shot into his ear. Being unsuccessful in this manœuvre, and as it was getting dusk, I determined to leave him till next day knowing that as the herd had not been disturbed, or got our wind they would not wander far away during the night.

R. had so far been as unsuccessful after bison as I had been after elephants, and I am sure he must have been filled with envy at dinner that evening, when the proportions of the monster elephant were recounted to him.

THE LENGTH OF TIGRESSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—A correspondent of the Statesman, in a very self-laudatory epistle reproduced in the Pioneer of the 25th September, speaks of all tigresses recently shot by him being over nine feet in length. As his total bag of tigers was only eleven, we may presume that the tigresses did not number more than six or seven. Now, I have measured in recent years some twenty tigresses, and of these the largest measured to the best of my recollection (my diaries are packed away) 8 feet 6 inches, and few exceeded 8 feet and 2 or 3 inches in length. I have never seen or heard of a tigress measuring 9 feet

By the way, the writer in the Statesman, whose letter bristles with I's and who claims "world's records" or "records" of some description in every other line, a proceeding not very usual, happily, with English sportsmen, says that his bag of of 11 tigers is "the largest tiger bag for many years past." This it certainly is not, within my own personal experience, nor is it a remarkably large bag. It is not very many years since ten tigers were killed in one day by two sportsmen. At the same time sport is not always to be appraised by the size of the bag. A man who does all his own work, tracks down his tigers, arranges his own beats, etc., may have far more sport (even though he may not kill half the number) than one who has all his arrangements made for him by shikaris or others, and whose sole business is to aim and pull the trigger of his rifle. The latter may, in fact, not be a "sportsman" at all!

SHILLONG AUTUMN MEETING.

First Day, Friday, 2nd October.

THERE was an excellent card and very good sport was witnessed. Mrs. Hennessy was "at home" for lunch in the Race Pavilion and Mrs. Kershaw afterwards gave tea there. Proceedings opened with the Hurdle Race in which the first favourite was beaten by Ladybird, Mr. Rankin's polo pony. Glenlea was unfortunate enough to fall at the first hurdle. Ladybird's win was very popular. Mac II., who ran inthe Eclipse Stakes three years ago, easily won the Shillong Purse, Captain Dening riding another good race. Jean easily defeated the opposition in the Cachar Purse. The finish for the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup was most exciting, Lily II winning by a head from Jean, a head separating her from Ivy II. Eileen Alannah was considered a good thing for the Naraingani Purse but she ran unkindly and finished behind Ivy II., and Glenlea. There was a great race for the Hack Stakes, Quick March winning in good style from Hope Terry and Shepherdess. Full details are as follow :—

DARJEELING SKY RACES.

1st and 3rd October 1908.

WE have had most excellent weather for the first two days of the races, a slight shower on the first day just laying the dust nicely. The attendances have been very large, and there was a particularly large gathering on Saturday, probably the largest attendance ever present at a Lebong Race Meeting. The management and arrangements have, as usual, left nothing to be desired, and there has not been a hitch of any description to mar the harmony of the meeting. The racing has been very good indeed, particularly on the second day, when the handicaps worked out so well that nearly all the finishes were of the closest, necks or heads only separating the placed ponies. Fairyland and OK were the exception, and these won their races rather easily. Forget-me-not in the Polo Scurvy had the softest thing of the meeting. She could have carried one of the others and then won. Marie Lloyd's failure in the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup was a great disappointment, but her running on Saturday in the Burdwan Cup shows that she has gone off a good deal, and that she is not the speedy mare she used to be. Mr. Snillingford and Mr. Price have so far, from an owner's point of view, done the best, and Captain Whish, Mr. Galstaun, Captain Fraser, and D. Manley are right away in the riding statistics. The lotteries have gone very well each day, and there has been fair speculation on the course. So far the favourites, or those close up in the betting, have got home and the imperturbable "Russell," the bookmaker, has actually complained that it is time an outside showed up to give him a turn. The following are the particulars :—

First Day, Thursday, 1st October 1908.

NOVICE STAKES.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by P. K Ghose. For all ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a stake of any value. 14-1 to carry 11st. 2 laps.

Mr. A. A. Price's bk aus g Satin Beau, 10st. 11lb.	Capt. Whish	1
Miss G. Shillingford's b aus m Lavender, 9st 4lb.	D. Manley	2
Mr. Nahapits' b aus m Pretty Polly, 9st. 7lb.	Mr. Galstaun	3
Mr. C. C. Marshall's b cb m Colleen, 6st.	Native	0

BETTING: Evens Lavender, 2 to 1 Satin Beau, 3 to 1 Pretty Polly, 10 to 1 Colleen.

Satin Beau got away on the inside at once and making all the running won very easily.

LHASA PLATE.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by Messrs. John Dewar & Son, Ld. For all Bhutia ponies 13-1 and under. 13-1 to carry 12st. W. I. 3 laps.

Mr. Kwongman Cheong's dk br g Lingma, 10st.	Native	0
Mr. K. C. Gyalpa's br bh g Tiger, 10st. 6lb.	Native	0

BETTING: 3 to 1 on Lhassa, 3 to 1 Punch, 5 to 1 Paddy, 7 to 1 each Tiger and Rubi, 12 to 1 Lingma.

Lhassa dashed off in front but was presently pulled back to his field, and he went along in company with Rubi and Tiger for the first two laps. At the third lap Paddy and Punch went up and turning into the straight these two with Lhassa were abreast. A ding dong finish home resulted in Punch getting the best of it by half a length; Paddy a length away third.

STEWARDS' PLATE.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, for all ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a race value Rs. 200 or over. 14-1 to carry 11st. 7lb W.I. 2 laks.

Mr. A. A. Price's b aus g OK, 11st. 7lb.	Capt. Whish	1

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Marie Lloyd, 3 to 1 Gipsy, 5 to 1 Primrose, 6 to 1 Playful, 10 to 1 Kestrel.

Marie Lloyd made the running right through followed by Gipsy. Down the straight Primrose came with a great run, and gradually overhauling the leaders got level when almost on the post, eventually winning by a half length.

COOCH BEHAR CUP.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, for English and Australasian 14 hands and under, Arabs and C.-B.'s 14-1, English and Australasian 14 hands to carry 11st. 7lb., Arabs and C.-B.'s 14-1 to carry 10st. 12lb W.I. 2 laps.

Mr. A J. Shillingford's ch aus m Gowan, 10st. 3lb.	D. Manley	1
Mr. R. D. Mackie's br aus g Fairyland II., 10st. 6lb.	Capt. Whish	2
Mr. A. Daunt's bl aus g Chesterfield, 10st. 12lb.	Mr. Galstaun	3
Mr. A. J. Shillingford's b aus g Home Rule, 9st 2lb	Native	0
Mr. Lilburn's g a g Loretto, 9st. 8lb.	Capt. Campbell	0

BETTING: Evens Fairyland, 5 to 2 Gowan, 4 to 1 Chesterfield, 6 to 1 Loretto, 10 to 1 Home Rule.

Fairyland was the first to show out followed by Chesterfield with Gowan close up. At the second lap Chesterfield compounded and Gowan went on after Fairyland. Down the straight Gowan challenged, and a great race home resulted in the latter just scraping first part the post.

POOJAH STAKES SELLING RACE.—For all ponies 14 hands and under valued Rs. 750 or under. W. I. 11 hands to carry 11st. 7lb. 7lb. for every Rs. 50 off. A. and C.-B. allowed 24lb. Winner to be sold after any surplus over; selling price to be divided between Race Fund and owner of second pony. 2 laps.

THE TURF.

HULL.

What a potent factor in the success of a race meeting the railway that brings the public to the course can be has been completely proved at Newbury, which the splendid service of the Great Western Railway brings within the Metropolitan area. The enterprise that has resuscitated racing at Hull after a lapse of eighteen years would be equally well rewarded were the executive to receive any assistance from the railway interested. Unfortunately, when you get north of York especially, a lethargy seems to pervade the officials. Ripon got little assistance from the iconoclastic North-Eastern Railway, Redcar less, and the arrangements for Hull on Saturday were most inadequate and very badly administered. With the meeting handy as it ought to be to Doncaster, many sportsman stayed at the "Butterscotch Town" to finish up the week at Hedon.

The weather was perfect, and the attendance most satisfactory on the part of the holiday makers, and though fields ruled small, the sport was of a fairly interesting character, thanks to the liberal endowments to each race, which should bear good fruit, while the executive are to be complimented on the excellence of their arrangements. FOLKESTONE.

A reunion on the Kentish pastures at this period was an innovation, and not a few entertained a doubt if this alteration of fixtures, and the clashing with the new Hull Meeting, was not courting failure. However, an exceptionally big crowd foregathered, and if not a record for this pretty enclosure, the numbers present on Saturday last must approach the best very closely. Backers had a bad day, only two favourites scoring. Each of the races was well supported, and this meant fields turning out up to a respectable average.

Westenhanger Selling Handicap—Of 100 sovs. 1¼ mile.

Mr. T. A. Edney-Hayter's Enthusiastic Lad, by Enthusiast—Land Maid, 3yrs., 6st. 11lbs. ... ... Keeble 1

On the second day, Tuesday the 15th instant, the sun rose in a watery sky, and during a dull morning rain fell in frequent and rather heavy showers, which in the absence of any wind looked like hanging about. Nevertheless, by noon, streams of visitors from the Midland centres woke up the sleepy old town, which was alive with traps and pedestrians streaming course ways from G.W. and L. and N.W.R. stations and again was the common invaded by a host of holiday makers. The club enclosure again presented a gay appearance, as the beauty and fashion of Warwickshire include racing now-a-days as an important social function, and the stand enclosures found plenty of patrons. The weather improved only to deceive as the afternoon wore on as a heavy thunderstorm fell during the third race but the course freshened up by the drenching gleamed bright as emerald while good fields kept layers and backers busy.

HEALTHY LIFE IN INDIA.

Punch's old and trite, but nevertheless, true saying—"Is Life worth living? That depends upon the liver" applies more to Anglo-Indians than to anyone else—only those who suffer know how very much more. And yet there is no reason why this should be so, why a man should not be just as fit in India as in the home country. The majority of those who come out do not regulate life in accordance with the climate and changed conditions of tropical countries. To be well and to keep well requiries the greatest care and discipline. In a country like India, where the extreme heat makes so enormous a difference to the functions of the human body, it is essential to life, that the requirements of the body should be regulated with more than ordinary care. But if we keep the digestive organs healthy and the nerve machine in good working order, one can be as well and healthy on the Bund as in Piccadilly. And we can do so, for medical science has evolved a substance that, whilst easily digested, contains in happy combination the two vital properties for nourishing the body and for stimulating and feeding the nerves.

Sanatogen, the never food is almost universally recognised by medical men as a true scientific food. Readily digestible—so much so that its use in the acute stage of typhoid fever is practised by many physicians—with a high nutritive value, almost every atom of it being absorbed and assimilated, rich in that necessary element of all the tissues of our body—phosphorus—Sanatogen forms at once an almost perfect and complete diet for the low-power system which most Anglo-Indians possess. Used in time it will prevent that devitalisation of nerves and indolence of digestion, respiration circulation, etc., which all dwellers in tropical climates know and dread so much.

Mr. Hall Caine extols its virtues:

Whitehall Court,

London, S. W.

"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a tonic nerve food it has on more than one occasion done me good."

Hall Caine

Even when one of the numerous insiduous tropical diseases has gained a foothold, Sanatogen, according to medical testimony, is a power with which to dislodge the foe, if scientific theory and actual practice in the case of enteric and other fevers have any weight at all. The author of a paper in the "Indian Medical Gazette," December, 1906, entitled "The Maintenance of Health in Tropical Climates," states this opinion: "For residents in tropical climates, suffering from general debility, the best and most readily assimilable food is a combination of casein with glycero-phosphates. This cannot be prescribed as an ordinary mixture, pill or powder, but for some years past I have used the preparation known as Sanatogen, which is composed of 95 per cent. of pure casein and 5 per cent. glycero-phosphate of sodium. I have used Sanatogen on a large scale and have every reason to be satisfied with the results obtained."

This is only one of over 7,500 written endorsements from physicians in Great Britain and India. If any further proof were required it is to be found in the vast numbers of letters from distinguished men and women, who have themselves derived benefit from the use of Sanatogen.

Madame Sarah Grand, the distinguished authoress, writes:—

10, Grove Hill,

Tunbridge Wells

"I am glad to be able to tell you that Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years' enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Sanatogen which is a fine white powder, is put up in bottles and can be obtained from all chemists.

An engrossing booklet containing matters of vital importance to well-being in the Tropics has recently been issued. It is from the pen of a physician long resident in India and is entitled "How to keep well in India." It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well. A copy can be obtained free of charge from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta from whom also Sanatogen can be purchased.

Dr. E. J. Lazarus's ESSENCE OF CHIRETTA,

In Bottles Re. 1-8. 2-8 and 4.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From Mr. W.—Dear Sirs,—"I suffered from Liver complaint in its most aggravated form—pain in the side, shoulder-blade and stomach; vomiting after every meal, excessive acidity in the stomach, constipated bowels and extreme debility FOR TEN YEARS, I tried all the known remedies without success and had given up hope, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Chiretta.' I have taken it for some time and am now nearly quite well. Pain in the side nearly gone, in the shoulder-blade entirely so. No vomiting, little or no acidity in the stomach, bowels relaxed, no debility, being now a stronger and better man than I have been for years."

H. James Rainey, Esq., of Kodnah, Jessore, writes:—"Having derived a deal of benefit from the use of your 'Essence of Chiretta' (combined with VERY SMALL doses of Quinine) both as prophylactic and anti-periodic for intermittent fevers of malarious type, which would not yield to the usual remedies employed, and which disease is very prevalent in the Districts of Lower Bengal, in particular those parts bordering on the Soonderban, I think it incumbent on me to acquaint you thereof pro bono publico. You are welcome to give this letter all the publicity you may deem necessary in order that this excellent remedy of yours may become generally known."

From J. A. Farrell, Mooltan.—"Your Chiretta has already done me a WORLD amount of good. I had an enlargement of the spleen and fever for 9 months which reduced me to a mere skeleton. The fever I got rid of with your Antiperiodic Pills in 3 days; and the spleen I let be—thinking it could do me no harm. In this I was greatly mistaken, my complexion became as yellow as gold. Seeing your Chiretta I determined to use some of it, and see what good it did me. I have used it for about a week and already the colour is coming to my cheek and the TAN (through continued fever) has left my face. For the climate of India there is no medicine so good, for a Tonic, &c., as your "Essence of Chiretta." This is only an addition to the valuable testimonials you have so well earned through the Chiretta."

PLAYING CARDS

FOR

CLUB & MESSES.

GOODALL'S NEW "LINETTE" PLAYING CARDS.

These Cards are made with a finely grooved surface, which facilitates the dealing and minimises the possibility of misdeals.
In various floral designs or with plain backs. Per dozen packs Rs. 9-0 Per pack Re. 1-0

Special quotations for larger quantities.

De la Rue's "Pneumatic" Playing Cards.—

The Fronts of the "Pneumatic" Playing Cards are highly finished, whilst the Backs are minutely grooved or indented all over the surface, so as to provide an air-space between the cards, and a roughened surface which acts as a resistance for the thumb in dealing. This prevents misdeals, as the cards slide off one by one and can be dealt with the greatest ease and rapidity.

YARMOUTH.

The improvements made by the Yarmouth executive in the stands and enclosures have borne good fruit in an increased attendance now that the racing can be seen all round the sandy dunes. The trouble lies in the sandy soil in which this course affords the nearest simile to those of the Cape and Johannesburg to be found in England. The coarse grass is gradually improving and the going on the 16th instant was the best seen here, while liberally supported from Newmarket to which the place is as Brighton to London: fields ruled well throughout. The weather was perfect and sport of a brisk character. Results:—

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

HUGE attendances are reported from the various grounds where the matches were played on Saturday in the leading leagues, the smallest number at a First Division Football League game being 15,000, and 40,000 the largest attendance. In the Second Division they range from the 22,000 at Tottenham down to 5,000; while in the Southern League, with 10,000 at Plymouth as the largest attendance, 4,000 at Watford was the smallest gathering. It is not without significance that both in the first and second divisions of the Football League the biggest crowd was at games played in the Metropolis.

It is accepted in football circles that, other things being equal, the team playing at home, encouraged by its own supporters, should win. Fortunately for the game there is always the chance of the most powerful club being overthrown at home, and it is because the unexpected happens not infrequently at football that the pastime has so powerful a fascination for all classes of society. On Saturday in the Southern League three home clubs were defeated, and in one other case there was a draw, while in the First Division of the League visiting clubs were even more successful, the two points being captured in three instances, while in two others the honours were divided. The Second Division clubs on foreign soil did not get much satisfaction. Every home club avoided defeat, and in only three games were the points shared. Of the 30 games played by the leading professional clubs, 24 were won and 6 drawn, and 18 of the 24 resulted in victories for teams playing at home. It is truly a great advantage to the league footballer to have the friendly encouragement of the crowd.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE HAPPENINGS.

There were some really startling happenings in the Southern League games on Saturday. Who expected that Milwall, in spite of their indifferent form against Exeter and Plymouth, would on the occasion of their initial visit to Southend have to submit to a defeat by three goals? Again, who anticipated that Brighton, already twice beaten by Southampton, would for the second year defeat Plymouth at Home Park? What makes this result the more inexplicable is that the Argyle the previous week had defeated Millwall at North Greenwich. Then we have New Brompton winning at Coventry, thanks to the conversion of four successive corners into goals—an event probably without a parallel in the history of the game—and Crystal Palace returning from a visit to Upton Park with the spoils in their possession after a keen struggle with West Ham. The margin in favour of Southampton in their match with Luton at the Dell is further testimony to the abilities of the Sotonians, and a maintenance of their present form is certain to keep them at the top of the table. Leyton gave considerable pleasure to their supporters by sending Brentford away empty-handed, and Watford were naturally delighted with their win over Exeter City, albeit it somewhat flattered them, after the previous ragged displays.

THE LEAGUE.—Division I.

The paper strength of Chelsea worked out all right in the field on Saturday. An antidote was needed for the unpalatable dose administered at Preston on the previous Monday, not forgetting the minor discomforts of Anfield-road, and Stamford Bridge when Preston opened the season there. The win over Bury was well deserved. Prior to Saturday, Bury had played three matches, of which two had been lost by the odd goal in three, while the third was won by four goals to two. They had run Manchester United to a goal at Clayton, lost to Sheffield United on their own ground by a similar margin, and had triumphed over Sunderland by 4—2 at Gigg-lane. This was a much better record than Chelsea could show, and the latter won in such fine style because they played up to their reputation, and not because Bury were below theirs. The story from Plumstead is not so satisfactory. Newcastle United were a smarter team than the Arsenal, but in justice to the latter, it must not be overlooked that for more than half the game they were deprived of the services of Ducat, who, up to the period of his retirement, was unquestionably the best of the home half-backs. The most dramatic of the other results was the defeat of Everton at Goodison Park by Preston North End, this being the second reverse of the Liverpudlians before their own supporters in one week. Aston Villa secured their first win by a victory over Nottingham Forest at Nottingham, and Manchester United continued their conquering career by beating Middlesbrough 6—5 in a game at Clayton in which the defence on both sides was unequal to the task of holding the opposite attack in check.

THE LEAGUE.—Division II.

Metropolitans should be satisfied with the performances on Saturday of the three London clubs in the Second Division of the League. I have not overlooked the fact that Clapton Orient were beaten, but they went under to Derby County by the only goal scored in the match, whereas, in the corresponding game last season the County four times pierced the Orient defence without response. There is no doubt as to the solidity of the defence of Clapton Orient, but the forwards so far have not given unalloyed satisfaction, and it is in this department of the team there must be an improvement if the club intends to make a better show than last year. Matters are going very well with the 'Spurs. There was a huge crowd to watch them beat Barnsley, and the all-round excellence of the side was the subject of mutual congratulations. The forwards were brilliant, the halves fully understood their work and did it, and the backs, particularly Coquet, were in capital trim. There was considerable anxiety to learn the result of the West Bromwich Albion-Fulham match, and when the half-time message came through visions of a win for the Cottagers were conjured up Fulham way. The West Londoners divided the points, and thus confirmed the view that they have recovered from the discouraging beginning they made on 2nd September.

ATHLETICS

TWENTY-FOUR HOURS' WALK.—When the 15,000 spectators gathered shortly after mid-day in the stands of the Stadium on Saturday, there were still nineteen competitors trudging around the track on their self-imposed task of walking for twenty-four hours. With eighteen hours of steady plodding behind them, they looked what they were—leg-weary, tired men, with only their courage and determination carrying them along.

The freshest and most light of foot of them all was the man who ought to have been, by reason of the distance he had traversed, the most fatigued. T. E. Hammond from the eighth hour of his long struggle, had created record after record, yet he strode along, passing one after another of his fellow-walkers with but little signs of what it was costing him in bodily strength, in his face. Lean, lithe, wiry, with an improved swing of the arms, and a sweeping, tireless leg action, Hammond looks what he is—a walker of the grandest type. Well trained and coached, he has also that necessary will power which goes to make the true record-breaker.

A point which struck the observant was the fact that with one exception, the whole of the remaining walkers on the track were men of mature age. The strain of such an event as this is not fitted for youthful minds or bodies to withstand. The young competitor cannot control his impatience, and forsakes time-schedules and standards, and strides ahead at a hot pace until exhaustion strikes him down. The pitiable finish of the Marathon Race was proof of this, and it is interesting to note that the one youthful competitor who strode along with his older rivals and completed his twenty-four hours' walk, T. C. Habishaw, Queen's Park Harriers, was one of the few competitors who finished in the Marathon Race.

For bulldog courage and tenacity of purpose the performance of E. R. Gillespie, Middlesex Walking Club, deserves special mention. Almost in the veteran class, Gillespie never left the track during the whole twenty-four hours. He was the only one that did not do so, and although such self-denial is not calculated to assist a walker in the matter of distance, nor yet an example to be followed, the spectators showed their appreciation of his undoubted endurance each time he passed.

E. Pemell, Surrey Walking Club, also deserves a word of praise. By far the oldest of the forty-two competitors who started, his 50 years and grey hairs did not prevent him from doing his day's tramp and covering ninety-two miles 1,470 yards in the time.

When the last hour was reached a change seemed to come over the men on the track. Their lethargy disappeared, and one competitor, C. M. Sampson, Polytechnic Harriers, who was fifth when the pistol cracked, dashed off at a rare gait to try and cover the two laps which lay between him and the man lying fourth, F. R. Leatherby, Middlesex Walking Club. Sampson was successful, and secured the coveted fourth place by covering five miles 1,225 yards in the last hour, a great finish indeed.

In the final lap a strange and unusual sight was seen. With each of the first six competitors a group of admirers marched, and the services of the police were required to keep the track clear. As was only to be expected, Hammond had the largest crowd, and so dense did it become that in his final fifty yards he was completely hidden by the crowd surrounding him. The pistol brought him to a halt just a few yards away from the lap-scorer's tables by the track, and from the uncovered stands a host of cheering spectators rushed through the barriers and surged out across the turf, sweeping officials and all authority before it. Hammond was escorted in triumph to the dressing-rooms, and each of the other competitors came in for their share of public encomium. Although it was not exactly the wisest thing to do, yet, as a sudden act of respect and homage the crowd's action may be excused as a stirring final to a great event.

The distance and positions of the competitors who finished are as follows:—

1. T. E. Hammond, Surrey W.C., and Middlesex W.C., 131 miles 560 yards 1 ft. 5in. (world's record).
2. H. W. Horton, Surrey W.C., 121 miles 1,645 yards.
3. F. J. Wakefield, Surrey W.C., 118 miles 501 yards.
4. C. M. Sampson, Poly. H. and Middlesex W.C., 117 miles 1,225 yards.
5. F. R. Leatherby, Middlesex W.C., 115 miles 1,615 yards.
6. T. Payne, Lancashire W.C., 108 miles 785 yards.

GOLF.

BRAID AND VARDON BEAT MASSY AND TAYLOR.—Now that the four-ball variety of foursome has become so common, followers of the game of golf seldom have an opportunity of seeing the leading professionals engaged in the old-fashioned foursome. A large number of enthusiasts, therefore, were glad of the chance of witnessing the thirty-six holes ordinary foursome in which James Braid, the present open champion, and the famous ex-champions, Harry Vardon, Arnaud Massy, and J. H. Taylor, took part at Sheringham yesterday. After a very interesting match, Braid and Vardon gained the victory by 4 holes up and 3 to play.

The conditions were all that could be desired. The weather was fine, there was little wind, and the course, which has been recently extended, was in splendid order. There were about 1,500 spectators. Braid and Vardon made an admirable combination for a foursome. Vardon was weak on the greens at the start, but after the first nine holes he made no mistakes in this respect, and it was largely due to his efforts that he and Braid finished the first round with a lead of 3 up. The first round scores were:

BRAID AND VARDON.
Out: 443554454—36. Home: 533632444—34.—70.
MASSY AND TAYLOR.
Out: 354443465—38. Home: 434513444—35.—73.

Massy and Taylor got back a point at the first hole in the afternoon, when Braid was bunkered. The champion and his partner, however, regained their old lead at the fourth, where Vardon hit the pin with his approach shot. They became four up at the fifth, where Braid laid his approach dead, but lost the eighth through Vardon being short with his pitch. Taylor holed a good putt for a half at the ninth; and at the tenth Braid, in trying to play a half stymie, knocked in the other ball, and another half resulted. Braid and Vardon became four up again at the eleventh, and, halving the next four holes, won the match and £20 each by 4 and 3. The losers had £10 each. The afternoon scores were:

BRAID AND VARDON.
Out: 453453454—37. Home: 444544454—38.—75.
MASSY AND TAYLOR.
Out: 353554444—37. Home: 454544454—39.—76.

BILLIARDS.

THE SEASON BEGINS.—There is in connection with most of our national sports and pastimes a close season, but this can hardly be claimed for billiards, the greatest of indoor games, as amateurs to a modified extent play all the year round.

It is left to the professional players to open the recognised season and for some years past the Monday following Doncaster has been selected by them to play the inauguration game.

Never was the outlook more promising for lovers of high-class play than during the forthcoming season.

There is not a single player of note in the kingdom who will not be seen at one or other of the big London halls during the next eight months.

The disappearance of the "freak" tables, the baneful feature of last season—only tolerated because they brought John Roberts from his retirement—is a guarantee that the legitimate game will be played throughout, and this in itself will be welcome news to those enthusiasts who love the great scientific game.

It is a far cry to 19th October, when the big tournament begins at Soho-square, but prior to this several interesting matches will be taking place at the Grand Hall, Leicester-square.

On Monday, Edward Diggle, of Manchester, and the erstwhile South African champion, Cecil Harverson, began a match there. They will be playing for a fortnight, the game being 16,000 up, Harverson having 2,000 start, for a stake of £25 aside.

Diggle was in indifferent health last year, but after a long sojourn at Bournemouth he appears as fit as the proverbial fiddle, and should not only make the keen match-playing Colonial go all the way, but should before the season closes take his right position in the billiard world.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 24th September.—Municipal Crossing at 7 A.M. Mill's Covert held a jack that led hounds a short though merry chase. Breaking covert at the lower end, he went off at a great pace over the side of Bagman to the Blackmore Vale and swung left handed up to Brick kiln Crossing, when hounds ran into and killed him. The Master then drew up by Rallywood to Bluegums, when hounds touched a line, which took them over Rawlin's Nullah and along the whole length of Newmarket to just above Treble Crossing, when they sank the hill and crossed the Municipal Stream a little below Treble Crossing. They travelled at a good pace up over the Golf Links to Lascelles Covert, here there was a check, the Master cast them forward through Bingham. Picking up the line again just beyond, they ran through Brooklands to the Black Bridge and up on to the Connemara Road. The jack must have been very close in front of them as they raced up to the road to a short distance of the Umbrella Tree, when they turned up to the left off the road and dived down the Ghaut. Hunting well and sticking to their jack, they worked round to the right under the Marlimund Toda Mund and lost him in a bluegum plantation to the right of General Baker's Orchard. Going back to Hanging Shola a jack was viewed away with hounds close at him, he led them down to the Black Bridge and turned right handed up to the Connemara Road where he turned to the left and made for the Segur Ghaut Road, sticking to the road all the way to just above Dowahan—here he left the road and took a line to the right under Mr. H. E. Browne's Orchard and made good his escape in the dense jungle near the Billical Path. The field was not a large one.

Monday, 28th September.—Lake End 7 A.M. Hounds started by drawing Campbell's Copse, which lies within thirty yards of the Meet. This cover did not hold, but a brace of jack was viewed away from near the Municipal Sewage Farm. Taking a line over the hill hounds led past Rees' Corner to the bottom of Dairymaid, turned to the left through Denmark then along the stream at the bottom, they skirted round to the left leaving Ursula on the right and ran up the Fairlawns Valley, and then rose the hill side in the direction of Cairn Hill, but doubling back, they crossed the stream below Fern Hill coming away through the dense coverts of Fern Hill and Woodstock, with the jack close in front of them they crossed the Krurmund Road near Jaysingh Villa and pushed him on into Campbell's Copse and to ground in some thick scrub at the head of the Sewage Farm, near the overflow from the lake, where they were found by second whip. The Master and first whip, having been misinformed were searching for hounds round by the Lawrence Asylum. The field included His Excellency Sir Arthur Lawley, Mr. and Miss C. Lawley, Captain Due, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Stokes, Colonel and Mrs. Gordon Price, Mr. Colin Mackenzie, May and Miss Younghusband, Miss Jesson, Captain Butchart, Mr. and Mrs. French, Captain Ere, Miss Dangar, Mr. Wilbraham, Mr. Lockham Walsh, etc., etc.

Tuesday, 29th September.—Sultan Shola at 12 noon. A good day, though several jack were found, they almost at once went to ground. We had a short run later in the afternoon from Chemmund to the bottom of Road Shola and back into Chemmund, coming out on the ridge above Khed, through the latter and to ground in a water course between Khed and Little Khed. On the way home a jack was viewed at the bottom of Staircase, he led hounds through Stokes Shola and away from the bottom over Lawley's Course by Schmidt's Clump to Bluegums when they lost him.

PYKARA.

NOT FOR "BROCK'S BENEFIT."

THE Huntsman of the Waterford hounds has just made a discovery which has surprised some very experienced hunting men, and has suggested a new idea in reference to mange in foxes writes "Rusticus" in the Daily Telegraph. Within the decade this disease has passed through nearly every hunting country, and in turn has brought many of them to the verge of extinction. But for the possibility of purchasing foxes, many must have gone under altogether. Everybody interested has speculated in every conceivable direction for a cause of the trouble, and nobody has ever suspected the cleanly badger of harbouring foul disease. General belief about the relationship between brock and fox was crystallised by the author of "The Story of a Red-deer," but crystallised in Devon's dialect, which made the simple story of the woods almost as popular as, and more worthy than, the Uncle Remus stories, in which the beasts were endowed with human feelings and actions, as well as nigger language. This is the Devonshire picture of the badger: "He was waddling along slowly, and grumbling to himself. 'Tisn't often as I spake, but spake I will. 'Tis mortal hard that he should come and take my house. 'Tis my house; I made mun, and I digged mun. 'Tisn't right, 'tisn't reasonable.' 'What is it, old Grey?' said the hind. The badger looked up and stared. Then he said very slowly, 'Aw!'—drawing out the word until he could collect his wits. 'Wel, lo k 'ee, 'tis like this. Two days agone—I think 'twas two days—th' old dog-fox—you know mun, he that hath so much white to his brush—well, he cometh to me, and saith he, 'Brocky,' he saith—that's a name he calleth me—'Brocky,' friendly like, though he warn't no friend o' mine that I know of. Well, he saith, 'Brocky, I know of so pretty a nest of rabbits as a badger could wish to see. I can't dig mun out,' he saith, 'but you can. Oh, what I would give to be able to dig like you, Brocky!' he saith. 'Come along wi' me, and I'll show 'ee.' . . . Well we come to the bury, and wonderful sweet the rabbits did smell, sure enough. 'Now,' he saith 'I'll leave 'ee.' An' I digged the rabbits out; I forget how many there was—eight or nine, I think—I ate mun, all up, I know and very sweet they was, I won't deny that. And then I went 'oom; but bless your life, when I got there I couldn't go into mun. Oh! 'twas terrible, sure enough; 'twas more than my poor nose could stand. And the old fox, he looketh out and saith, 'Tis wonderful kind of you, Brocky' he saith, 'to give me your house. Mrs. Vicky liketh it wonderful, she doth. Ah! I wish I could dig like you, Brocky,' he he saith. And he's taken my house, and here I be. 'Tisn't right, 'tisn't reasonable.' And he waddled away growling out, 'Tisn't reasonable, for being a Devonshire badger he was, of course, fond of long words, though he might not always understand their meaning . . . . But if he fared ill, the vixen and her cubs fared well enough." Well seldom, but sometimes, fox and badger have been found in the same earth, and I believe they have both actually had young in it, but certainly not in the same compartment. Generally that which happens is as so well suggested above. The fox takes possession, and drives out the badger, probably also this is done by the dislike of the badger for the fox's scent, although men cannot judge of what other creatures can smell, or, smelling, find pleasant. The badger keeps her earth scrupulously clean, and the fox takes cubs' food into hers, and then leaves the remnants to rot. Therefore it was never suggested that the badger might be a cause of mange in foxes, but two of them recently killed by the Waterford Huntsmen were both so mangy that they could not be set up, an unheard of circumstance in itself, but one not nearly as strange as that the terriers used in drawing these badgers all contracted mange, too.

MANGE AND BADGERS.

It is not by any means every badger killed that is sent to be set up, and but for this attempt being made these two would probably have passed without much notice. The taxidermist found that the hair all fell out, and so drew attention to the fact that skin disease could exist in badgers without their appearing any the worse. How the disease was imparted to the terriers is not known. The bite of the badger may have inoculated the blood of the dogs, or their bites may have introduced the disease by way of the mouth, which is very much less likely in a skin disease; or, again, the rubbing of the canine skin on the badger earth may have set up infection. Mange in foxes is not supposed to be the same disease as either of those forms of it most common in dogs, although it is quite likely each can contract the special disease of the other. In most fox-hunting countries badgers are not uncommon, and in the wild districts that have most been afflicted with the mange scourge they are generally very common indeed. Some people regard them in a friendly way; others with ample experience, like the late Tom Firr, for so long the Quorn huntsman, have pronounced them antagonistic to the interests of hunting and of foxes. They are useful in some countries, because, they make fox-earths where foxes cannot make them. In others where are artificial earths the badgers sometimes take possession and block them and give much trouble, so that theft is not all on the side of "he that hath so much white to his brush." Besides which it is generally bad for a fox cub that gets in the way of a mother badger; one bite through the head tells the story of the tragedy, and also proves that nothing else could have done the deed. Gamekeepers and hunt servants generally agreed that these creatures should be prevented from destroying rabbits and game eggs, and that as nothing they find by accident comes amiss, the only way to treat them is to kill as many as possible.

Curious rustic beliefs surround these animals. Two of the most amusing are that on one side the legs are shorter than on the other, so that it is said the badger can only run well along the face of a hill. It never seems to have occurred to any rustic believer that so the badger must travel all round the hill to return to his hole. Another belief is that, as the badger is called the "grey," the greyhound was named after him. Quite clearly this dog is least fitted of all to deal with Brock, and the name no doubt is a shortening of degree hounds, the hounds that old forest law confined to the keeping by gentlemen of degree, so that the greyhound was doubtless originally 'greehound just as in America the engine house has been cut by the negroes first and since by everyone into 'gin house, and applied to the place wherein cotton is combed by engines for the market.

THE DOGS REQUIRED.

There are two best ways of killing badgers, one full of excitement by night, when the badger is found out at feed, after having all but one of his earths stopped, and that one prepared with an open sack, so that in retreat from pursuing hounds poor Brock goes to earth into the bag—in former times to be carted home to make badger-baiters' holiday. Now one man claims to have killed upwards of seventy badgers in one season in the West Country. But not every one has a terrier who will go to ground to these animals, which is the most desperate canine undertaking. The badger at home is both a fighter and a digger; he can dig himself further in, and in such fashion as to throw up ramparts of earth to impede the terriers. Besides which, the latter have been bred for show until they look frail, and seem to funk before the robust prowess of their mortal enemy. For this failure there has but now been a great outcry to establish clubs for trial of working terriers, lest the sort that is at home in the dark should die out. The idea of earth trials hangs fire, and some of those who would not go so far, but wish to have—or to be thought to possess—working terriers, have just banded themselves into a society for acquiring courage certificates for their dogs, but also for the opposite purpose of assisting dog shows. The certificates are to be obtained from hunt servants "or" any others having adequate knowledge, which for its looseness is a qualification not likely to endow the certificated with proof of anti-badger underground zeal. If masters of foxhounds would take over the matter, try as many terriers as possible, and give honest, but never lenient, certificates, it would soon be known whose are plucky breeds, and which dogs will go to ground. But I fear most owners of fox and other show terriers would suddenly discover that a fox is a very "fearful wildfowl," and their dogs "too valuable" to go to ground. That has already been claimed, regardless of the breed name, which truly implies that the dogs have no value above ground. In these days of shams and show I can imagine the probable outcry if old methods were suggested, as that of putting underground all those that voluntarily will not go to ground.

There is no doubt the show breeds that ought to work are doomed. The Royal Agricultural Society has at last followed the lead of the sheep dog societies, and had real and good trials, and, all told, there must be some twenty-five to thirty field trials every year. The Americans beat us easily in those for gun-dogs and hounds, but their only sheep dog trial, that I have heard of, was, unlike ours—a real sham.

Athletics.

PLEA FOR PROFESSIONAL ATHLETES.

It is remarkable how very quickly most amateur athletic records are "cut" nowadays observes "Old Blue" in Sporting Life. Very few now date back further than a season or two; indeed the majority are still more evanescent. As a rule the best performances are eclipsed in double-quick time in this record-breaking age. In the pedestrian or professional world, however, it is different. Far less encouragement has been vouchsafed to professional athletes in the way of record-breaking than there was even twenty years ago. Old time figures still stand, and under existing conditions are likely to do so for many a long year. Frankly put, professionalism in athletics is under a cloud at present. And it is in this connection that various champions of repute have entered a protest. They are justifiably perturbed at the idea—emphasised by recent events—that amateurs' records are the best that can be accomplished by Englishmen. A few days ago it was publicly stated that "English amateur athletes, as a body, are far ahead of the professionals." This presumably was the last straw: anyway, a famous professional champion writes to say the statement lacks the convincing testimony of proof. As he plaintively remarks "we should dearly love to test its correctness in open fray—as they do in every other department of sport." And why not?

Precedents from Kindred Sports.

During the Georgian period, and even later, athletes were pitted against one another irrespective of social status. The patrician raced with plebeian, and this arrangement was productive of the best results in proving "who were the best men." By gradual expansion, however, running men diverged into two sections, the amateur and professional. And not for a very long time was the pedestrian looked upon, as now, in the light of a black sheep. In the fulness of time amateur legislation passed a vein of purification through the pedestrian ranks, which hard and fast line still obtains. But, from a national point of view, has it assisted our best runners? I am not now concerned with the much-debated amateurism question proper, although it is ridiculous to go into a dissertation on the ethics of sport and professionalism and argue that one is impossible with the other. How about football, cricket, golf, and the like? Not only are professionals encouraged and honoured in these sports, but, what is more to the point, play with and against the best amateurs. Such sportsmen realise there is no disgrace in playing for money. And, by a parity of reasoning, athletes, whether amateurs or professionals, compete for a stake or its equivalent. Professional athletes of to-day are not at all anxious to compete against amateurs in the same way as do cricketers, footballers, golfers, and the rest of them. They, too, recognise the demarcation line drawn, and are content to do so. But they do ask for periodical contests on the lines which govern amateur vs. professional matches in kindred sports. Again, why not?

Ill-Advised Legislation.

Exactly why this stand-aloof barrier was ever erected puzzles very many besides myself. It has produced a bad effect; in other words, it has made an enemy of the professional—which is precisely what sportsmen of other persuasions have sedulously tried to avoid. What is more, it has checked the natural aspirations of world-famed amateurs like W. G. George, E. C. Bredin, C. A. Bradley, A. R. Downer, A. Shrubb, etc. It is my firm opinion that had most of these been vouchsafed ample scope for pitting their strength against the leading professionals of their day they would never have canted over. A. F. Duffey, too, assured me personally that had he had fair scope to test his speed against leading professional sprinters in his prime he would have finished up his marvellous career as an amateur. As it was, deeds of a separation were served upon them by the respective governing bodies at a time when they were vainly seeking for other worlds to conquer. Was it any wonder the inevitable happened? It seems to me that the A. A. A. might well devise and enact a law by means of which our most prominent amateurs and professionals could compete for supremacy at stated periods. And it might well be done without our governing body sacrificing an iota of dignity or principle. Such procedure would, at least, enable us to see who really are the better men; and, in my opinion, it would provide a very real need in these days of record-breaking. I should dearly like to see professional athletes placed under proper control, but the least we can do is to give them a sporting chance in the directon named. To withhold such a privilege makes pedestrians loise much of self-respect, for one thing. For the rest, have we any right to thus tacitly proclaim the athletic predominance of one class at the expense of another?

Some Objections.

To urge that, because some cases of rowdyism have occurred from time to time at pedestrian meetings, the professionals are rowdy as a body is absurd. It is equivalent to arguing that a ship ought to be scuttled in mid-ocean because some barnacles have clung to her bottom. Many of such deformities have a perpetual tendency to correct themselves. Besides, similar nuisances have been known to occur on the football, cricket, and golf grounds. Bad cases of rowdyism are not unknown on the racecourse, or even at political and religious gatherings. And it must be admitted that clique has always been a potent factor to that end—which is my strongest point. Englishmen are a race of sportsmen. From the earliest days of English history we learn how eagerly sports have been encouraged—some, we regret, of a brutal nature. Nowadays, we have become more civilised in the latter respect. We do not now go in for bear-baiting or cock-fighting, etc. The more manly pastimes are in the ascendant, including pedestrianism. Why, therefore, should its devotees be still looked upon as men outside the pale? Skill in sport is no easily acquired thing, and nowadays any man has a right to earn his livelihood by any skill in his power. Yet, the stern fact remains that professional athletes are the only sportsmen to be ostracised by amateurs. Here again, however, they do not seem to be greatly upset. Until some sort of professional union or governing body to control the sport is devised, they appear perfectly willing to continue their guerilla kind of procedure. What annoys most of them is the continued statement that, both in track and field athletics, the amateurs rule the roast. They demand a fair test of respective merit, and, in my opinion, it should be granted them. Anyway, the question is ripe for discussion, and there is much to be said from both points of view.

Should The Forces Unite?

Personally, I do not go so far as to say that the rival forces should unite. In the athletic world especially such would be inexpedient, if not impossible. Let amateurs cater for themselves and professionals likewise, only let each be respected after its kind. The cinder-path is now, like the Turf, an institution. Some exponents choose to run for prizes, and others for money. I have not a word to say against A. A. A. legislation, which drastically enforces the line dividing them. We are a nation of athletes also, moreover, and dearly love to hear of continual doughty deeds by our best men which makes a lot of difference. As the amateur may not run against the professional, how can we gauge the superiority of one or the other with any degree of certainty? How is it possible to really know what we possess in the matter of records? It is hardly fair to claim, as some do, all the honours in this connection for amateurs, and calmly taboo those of professionals. The Olympic Games records are, of course, another matter. Only amateurs competed in the Stadium, hence such records hardly affect professionals. But what about general records—those inscribed in the annals of sport? Given a meeting between the two sections on the same track, however, an attendance little less than vast would be assured. What is more we should get a real test of what British exponents are capable of. As the outcome, the watches would combine together, and without dispute a tale unfold which would delight the hearts of all sorts and conditions of sportsmen. I have said enough I hope, both to reveal the importance of the subject and to satisfy those mainly concerned. Anyway, I hope the day is not far distant when this athletic problem will be solved to the satisfaction of all alike.

A Suggestion.

The A. A. A. is composed of practical, far-seeing, hardworking athletes: in fact, some of the best sportsmen of the day. This body is supreme over the interests of amateurs. It can punish defaulters, and bring any to task who infringe the rules in the slightest way. And ever since its institution in 1864 it has done its work well, through good report and ill. Cannot it extend its operations so as to bring under its influence professional athletes also! "A sport purely national ought certainly to support both amateur and professional in bringing out the best men," once remarked one of England's best athletic patrons. This being so; the orderly goverment of the sport generally is a still greater consummation to be desired. It would be a colossal task, I am aware, yet the ultimate reward would be fully commensurate. The present state of pedestrianism is a blot upon our whole British sporting system. Its exponents are at present in the position of sheep without a shepherd, and afford an example of "arrested development."

Rowing.

KARACHI BOAT CLUB.

Autumn Regatta of 1908.

The programme for this Regatta was an unusually full one, an extra event, the "Open Fours," having been included, which attracted six entries, viz:—"Sind Volunteers," "Forbes, Forbes, Campbell and Company, Limited," "Merchants," "Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers," "Cambridge" and "59th Regiment," crews. Of these six crews, five being qualified under the rules for the "Boyce Combe" Cup, entered for it also. The "Hart Davies" Cup produced five entries, Single Sculls five, and Mixed Double Sculls three, or a total of 24 entries, which is a record in the annals of the Boat Club Autumn Regatta.

The first heats were rowed off on Monday, 21st September, and produced sporting finishes and interesting racing.

Open Fours.

"Merchants."				"F., F., Campbell & Co., Ld."
H. J. Hobbs	(bow)			E. F. B. Wyatt	(bow)
E. Zalichi	... 2			C. N. Brockbank	... 2
G. Thomaides	... 3	}	beat	R. Thorburn	... 3
W. J. Robertson	(str.)			E. A. Pearson	(str.)
Miss. Stuart Hunter	(cox)			Mrs. Pearson	(cox)

This resulted in a win for the "Merchants" by three-quarters of a length after a well contested race. The "Merchants" rowed a faster stroke throughout than the losers, who were, however, pulling up fast at the end and might have reversed the verdict if their cox had kept a course more in mid-stream than was the case. In fact, want of practice by the coxes was a noticeable feature of both this and the second race which was also for the Open Fours.

"Cambridge."				"R. A. and R. E."
Capt. D. P. Watson	(bow)			Lt. Jenkins, R.A.	(bow)
T. G. Elphinston	... 2			Lt. Chippindall, R.E.	2
C. E. Borton	... 3	}	beat	Lt. Trenchard, R.A.	... 3
W. H. Chapman	(str.)			Lt. Ubedell, R.A.	(str.)
Mrs. Gibbs	(cox)			Miss Watt	(cox)

Won by half a length by "Cambridge" who were hard pressed all the way by their opponents. The course taken by the winners' cox was a risky one being in her opponents' water practically all the way. At one time it looked very much as if there would be a foul, which must have been given against "Cambridge."

Single Sculling.

H. Hobbs vs. Lt. Cane.

For this event Lt. Cane was unfortunately obliged to scratch, leaving Hobbs to row over, which he did—all over the course in fact!

Mixed Double Sculling.

P. W. Jupe	(bow)			W. H. Chapman	(bow)
Miss W. Cumming	(str.)	}	beat	Mrs. A. J. Chase	(str.)
Miss B. Mungavin	(cox)			Mrs. G. W. Wilson	(cox)

Won by Miss R. Mungavin's crew by less than a quarter of a length. Mrs. Wilson's pair got away with a short lead, but were handicapped by having started too near the Boat Club side and having to fight against the set of the tide towards the shore, a fact of which the winners took full advantage and pulled off a well contested race by the "shortest of heads."

Tuesday, 22nd September.

Racing was continued on Tuesday, 22nd, but was not of so interesting a character as that of Monday.

Boyce-Combe Cup.

Merchants' "A."				Forbes, Forbes, Campbell and Co., Ld.
E. Fraser	(bow)			E. F. B. Wyatt	(bow)
G. M. Frost	... 2			C. N. Brockbank	... 2
P. W. Jupe	... 3	}	beat	R. Thorburn	... 3
J. Humphrey	(str.)			E. A. Pearson	(str.)
Mrs. G. W. Wilson	(cox)			Mrs. Pearson	(cox.)

Won easily by Merchants' "A" crew. The loser's stroke was not fit or undoubtedly a better race would have resulted.

Hart-Davies Cup.

C. E. Borton	... (bow)			Capt. D. P Watson	(bow)
E. A. Pearson	... (str)	}	vs.	W. H. Chapman	(str)
Mrs. Pearson	... (cox)			Miss Aldridge	... (cox)
		and
Lt. Cane	... (bow)			P. W. Jupe	... (bow)
Lt. Allardice	... (str.)	}	vs.	J. Humphrey	... (str.)
Miss Nemo	... (cox)			Mrs. G. W. Wilson	(cox.)

Mrs. Pearon's and Miss Nemo's pairs both scratched leaving their opponents to row over.

Single Sculls.

E. Fraser beat Lieut. Ubsdell, R.A.

Won by Fraser by 1 and a half lengths, after his opponent had given way to him while trespassing in his opponent's water.

Wednesday, 23rd September.

The racing this day was productive of more interest, all finishes being close and no "scratchings."

Open Fours.

"Cambridge."				"59th Regiment."
Capt. D. P. Watson	(bow)			Lt. L. A. F. Cane	(bow)
T. G. Elphinston	... 2			Capt. G. D. Leake	2
Lt. C. E. Borton	... 3	}	beat	Lt. G. H. Goff	3
W. H. Chapman	(str.)			Lt. Skewes Cox	(str.)
Mrs. Gibbs	(cox.)			Mrs. Leake	(cox)

Won by "Cambridge." The verdict given was three-quarter length, but this hardly represents the course of the race, the winners finishing with plenty in hand. The 59th crew, owing to absences on duty, etc., had been unable to put in all the practice they might have, and were hardly up to the form which they could attain with more practice. They rowed a losing race with much determination.

Boyce-Combe Cup.

Merchants' "A."				"R. A. and R. E."
E. Fraser	(bow)			Lt. N. Jenkins	(bow)
G. M. Frost	... 2			Lt. Chippindall	... 2
P. W. Jupe	... 3	}	beat	Lt. G. Trenchard	... 3
J. Humphrey	(str.)			Lt. Ubsdell	(str.)
Mrs. G. W. Wilson	(cox)			Miss Watt	(cox)

Won by Merchants' "A" by three-quarters of a length. The winners had to hustle to secure this verdict, and the losers were not helped by the bad steering of their boat.

Hart-Davies Cup.

Capt. D. Watson	(bow.)			R. Thorburn	...(bow)
W. H. Chapman	... (str.)	}	beat	G. M. Frost	... (str.)
Miss Aldridge	... (cox)			Miss Ashley	... (cox)

Won by Miss Aldridge's pair by something less than a quarter of a length. A most interesting race, and only won after a strenuous struggle.

Single Sculls.

J. Humphrey vs. H. Hobbs.

Won by J. Humphrey by three lengths after a race of an unusual character. Soon after starting, Humphrey broke a stretcher strap, and stopping to examine damages gave Hobbs a considerable lead. Resuming without his strap, Humphrey proceeded to reduce this lead and finally caught his opponent a short way from the winning post, where Hobbs had come to a standstill owing to his left arm having given out.

Thursday, 24th September.

On Thursday, 24th, there were only two races, the semi-finals for the Boyce-Combe Cup and the Open Fours.

Boyce-Combe Cup.

Merchants' "B"				"59th Regiment."
H. Hobbs	(bow)			Lt. L. A. F. Cane	(bow)
G. Thomaides	... 2			Capt. G. D. Leake	... 2

This resulted in a win for the Merchants' "B" crew by a bare length. A good race well fought out all through.

Won by "Sind Volunteer" crew by a length and a half. The result was not unexpected, especially in view of the fact that the losers had already had one hard race in the afternoon, but it was by no means a "walk over" for the winners. There was a material improvement in the coxing in this race.

There was only the one race on Friday, 25th, the final of the Open Fours.

Won by Cambridge by the shortest of quarter lengths. The expectations of a fine race which had been roused were not disappointed. It was a ding dong struggle from start to finish, and the result in doubt to the very end. The coxing was excellent.

Saturday, 26th September.

Saturday, 25th, saw the culmination of the week's rowing in the Autumn Regatta of 1908. In bright sunshine, tempered by a pleasant breeze, all Karachi flocked to the Boat Club to watch the struggles for the numerous and handsome prizes offered. The Boat House was effectively decorated in the Club's colours of red and white, and the Band of the 129th Baluchis played a delightful programme of music. The order of events was as follows:—

I.—Fours.—"Boyce-Combe Cup."

Merchants' "A."				Merchants' "B."
E. Fraser	(bow)			H. Hobbs	(bow)
G. M. Frost	... 2			E. D. Zalichi	... 2
P. W. Jupe	... 3	}	beat	G. Thomaides	... 3
J. Humphrey	(str.)			W. J. Robertson	(str.)
Mrs. G. W. Wilson	(cox)			Miss Stewart Hunter	(cox)

This was won by Merchants' "A" team by a length and a half, not an unexpected win, but a well contested race. The Merchants' "B" team, composed as it was of men whose first experience of racing this Regatta has been, are to be sincerely congratulated on the form shown all through the Heats and the good races they have rowed.

It may be mentioned here that the "Boyce-Combe Cup," presented in 1893 by Brigadier-General (now Major-General) Boyce-Combe, has now been rowed for 13 times since then. It was won by the crew of the Royal Fusiliers in 1893 and 1894 and nearly carried off for good by them in 1895 (a crew winning it three times in succession is entitled to keep the Cup) only they were prevented, after a severe race, by a "Civilian" crew and has been won seven times out of the thirteen by "Merchants' crew, three times by a "Civilian" crew, and three times by Regimental crews.

II.—Scratch Fours.

Won by Miss Mackenzie's crew. The course for this race is only half the full course rowed in other races. The coxing by the winner was somewhat "scratch" in conformity with the character of the race.

III.—Pairs—"Hart-Davies" Cup.

Capt. Watson ...	(bow)			P. W. Jupe	... (bow)
W. H. Chapman	(str.)	}	beat	J. Humphrey	... (str.)
Miss Aldridge ..	(cox.)			Mrs. G. W. Wilson	(cox.)

Won by Miss Aldridge's pair by a length and a quarter. The losers had already rowed in the "Fours" for the "Boyce-Combe" Cup but put up a good race, and if beaten were not disgraced.

IV.—Swimming Race.

100 Yards handicap. Ladies' Nomination.

Won by Mr. E. Fraser, nominated by Mrs. Squire from scratch against "limit man's" start of 16 secs. Mr. Fraser is a man we should like to have around if we were drowning!

V.—Mixed Double Sculling.

Miss Cumming	... (str.)			Miss W. Cumming	(str.)
J. Humphrey	... (bow)	}	vs	P. W. Jupe	... (bow)
Miss Mungavin	... (cox)			Miss R. Mungavin	(cox)

Won by Miss R. Mungavin's crew by the shortest of quarter length after a hard tussle all the way.

VI.—Single Sculling.

E. Fraser vs, J. Humphrey.

Won easily by Humphrey. This race was rowed in a failing light and not much could be seen of it, but the loser appeared to have got into difficulties on the way, leaving Humphrey, who had already rowed in three events, to win pretty well as he liked.

The presentation of prizes by Mrs. A. J. Chase, followed by three cheers for her and the honorary secretary, brought one of the most successful Regattas the Boat Club has seen, to a pleasant termination.

THE BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

Semi-Finals.

FIRST of the semi-finals came off on Monday when the Worcesters met the Somersets, the former being thought to have quite a fair chance of carrying off the Cup but after this game it will be odds against them in the final. The Somersets are a very keen lot but lacking in science and their play gave one the impression that they were a newly-formed team. A lightly built set, they were in that respect at a great disadvantage. Quite an extraordinary amount of heading was indulged in, the ball being kept far too much in the air. In almost every department were the Worcesters superior but there was no finish to their play and through the energy of the "Zums" they could only gain an advantage of 2 to 1 at the finish after the losers had led, through a goal by Coles, at half time. Both of the Worcesters' goals came from Harcourt.

THE other semi-final was of a very different description, it was a hard fight to the end and a very fair exhibition of the science of the game by both the Scots and the Carabiniers. A big number turned out in anticipation of this, and though the majority were in favour of the former, being stationed locally, their sympathies were with the opponents at the finish when they were most unfortunate to lose. A draw would have been well received as play was very open and even though in the matter of missing a score by the fraction of an inch the Carabiniers had the worst of luck. On no less than three occasions would that fraction have made all the difference. One magnificent shot by Chick from the left wing completely beat Underdown but striking the right post came back into play and the same sort of thing happened to Luxton, the centre, whose two shots hit the cross-bar and post. It was within five minutes of time that the one and only goal came after a pretty run down by the Scots' left wing, McConnan, who gave to Bolton at inside right and he made no mistake.

Last week the methods of the two teams were discussed in their respective engagements so there is no need to go over them again. The Carabiniers played their best game but this cannot be said of the Scots who were noticeably off in the forward line where they missed. McIntosh who, being slightly injured, was replaced by Ross, he being out of practice. Lakim's absence from the half line also did not tend to strengthen them. Both defences gave a very fine display, the kicking of the backs being exceptional and at forward the two left wings, Chick and McConnan were quite the best.

Final.

THE final came off on Thursday before a packed enclosure with the touch and goal lines several deep keeping up a continual round of advice and encouragement to the players. It was a determined fight throughout and a good exhibition of football as a fitting wind up to the eighteenth anniversary of its inauguration. This is the tenth year of Mr. Hogan's Honorary Secretaryship and one hears with very great regret that he now intends to withdraw owing to an extra call on his energies in the direction of business. That it will be hard to fill his place with all his experience is certain and it is to be hoped that as last year he will be induced to alter his mind. With the large attendances that have been attracted, the Tournament has been financially and otherwise a great success. Some fine games have been seen as a set off against the paucity of entries due to the state Bombay is in with regard to infection.

In the game in question the unexpected happened in that the Scots, warm favourites, after having the better of the first half and every bit as much of the second as their opponents, went under by a goal to nil to the Worcesters. This regiment will consequently hold the Cup after a lapse of sixteen years. After the game the crowd gathered round, and after a short and appropriate speech by the Hon'ble Justice Russell the presentation of the various Cups and Medals was made by Mrs. Greenfield, wife of Brigadier-General Greenfield.

Returning to the game, the Scots were, as stated, most unfortunate, as several times in the first half and at the end of the second they were distinctly unlucky not to score. The one goal of the match came within ten minutes of the final whistle after a run down by Plant and Sutton, and whilst the latter kept the back off the former beat Underdown with a sharp one in the corner. Even after this the Scots should have at least equalised as, pressing hard, they forced three consecutive corners and twice hit the cross-bar hard without being able to get that one all-important goal. Though the trickiness of the Scots forwards was too much for their opponents in the first half they began to get the strength of it and held their own in the second. It was an over-indulgence in this pretty play that lost the Bombay team the match, and I think I forecasted this for them some time ago. Backs and halves of both sides gave a great display of defensive work and were kept so busy all the time that, well trained as they were, they began to show signs of wear at the finish. At forward the cleverness of McIntosh, McConnan and Bolton of the Scots was frequently applauded whereas for the Worcesters Sutton, Plant and Greenaway were conspicuous and their advantage lay in the fact that they got away with the ball far quicker than did their opponents. They played a much better game than they did against the Somersets and came in for their full measure of applause during and after the game.

DURING the intervals of the games three of each team have been running for the Rovers' Sprinting Cup, the length of the field (nearly 120 yards) in football gear. This the Government Telegraph won last year as well as the individual prize through Game; this having dropped out this year. The same team were once more successful and all three of their men, Game, Holman and Nicholas finished in front of the first Worcester man in the final on Wednesday.

Other prizes were the Harwood League, Scots "B" and "A" runners up, Charity match medals for the military team and the Dewar Challenge Shield for the Scots, runners up of the Tournament; gold and silver medals also going to the winners and runners up respectively.

This brings the football season of 1908 to a close, and all we have to look forward to for some time is the Athletic Meeting and Mounted Sports.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MADRAS TOURNAMENT.

PERFECT weather favoured the South Indian Rugby Championship which finished at Madras on Saturday. The football shown during the week has been of a high order and the Madras Presidency has never had a more successful tournament. Owing to Calcutta getting storm stayed, or water logged on their journey down and taking four days and five nights instead of two nights and a day, the card of matches was somewhat altered in order to allow Calcutta a day to recover.

MADRAS played the Leicesters on Tuesday, 29th, and a capital game was the outcome. Madras were first to score from a beautiful bout of passing in which Steele and Battle were the chief participants, the latter pacing the ball behind the posts, and a goal resulted. Condition told, however, and the soldiers pack were too strong for the civilians, and had much the best of the argument. Some good passing resulted in the Leicesters speedy wing scoring, but no goal resulted.

The second half was much in favour of the Leicesters and they added two goals to their score winning by 13 points to 5. Mr. Liddel at centre three-quarter is the mainstay of the team and is well backed up by his brother officer Masters at half. The forwards are a very powerful lot, and with a little more practice will be an uncommonly good pack. The wing threes are weighty and fast and the full back has a splendid kick.

WEDNESDAY'S match was between the rival cities of Bombay and Calcutta and resulted in a big licking for the former, whose weakness lay at half, where Blair ought to have been, but wasn't. Calcutta got the upperhand, straight away their forwards playing a capital game gave the opposing eight little scope. Bocquet got away and when near the line passed to Arthur, who kept on for the corner flag, then came into the centre, and just got through too far out for Burnett to convert Soon after Arthur again scored, right behind the posts, and this time Burnett registered the major points. Hearson and Ward had some good efforts but they were too well watched and got too few chances to make much headway. In the second half Calcutta had things much their own way, scoring a drop goal through Arthur, and tries by Burnett and Kerr. The try by Burnett was the result of a fine effort by the C. F. C. threes, the same player kicked a goal and Calcutta won handsomely by 20 points to nil.

ON the following day Calcutta played the R. F. A. and won well by 26 points to 3. The scorers were Macleod, Kerr, Kay, Lilburn and Burnett, and Arthur dropped a goal, a penalty goal and kicked two others.

ON Friday Bombay and Madras had a friendly game which resulted in a win for the homesters by 1 goal and 2 tries to a dropped goal 11 points to 4. Battle was the best man on the Madras side and has a splendid turn of speed and a beautiful swerve. He was responsible for two of the scores, although the last one fell to Steele who played an excellent game and got throuh some good tackling and kicking. Hearson got little chance, and Ward was suffering from a sprained hand. Bombay's drop goal came from Ward, who evaded all opposition except the Madras full back, and when getting near him dropped a lovely goal. It was an excellent game, and the better side won. Sargent for Madras had some excellent runs, and Hickie at forward is a splendid foundation for a pack, being large, active and powerful.

THE final was played on Saturday, the Leicester Regiment beating Calcutta by 1 goal 1 penalty goal and 1 try to 1 goal, 11 points to 5. It was a splendidly contested game, but Calcutta are to be commiserated with on the rank bad luck which dogged their steps from start to finish.

The first part of the game was even, and during a forward rush about centre a Calcutta forward lifted the ball and was penalised for "pick out." The decision may have been right, but it was rather a doubtful point. The Leicester man dropped a magnificent goal from close on half way as a result of the penalty.

Warmed to their work the Leicesters followed up this success with a try at the corner flag, as a result of a good pass from Masters to his flying wing. No goal resulted.

After this Calcutta had nearly all the play, and first one and then another were within inches of the coveted points. Arthur got across only to be recalled, then Beddie followed this up and touched down before the Leicester back got to the ball. "A forward over the line" was the decision, and a kick from the 25 the result.

At length after a splendid round of passing by the Calcutta backs Lilburn scored and Burnett kicked a goal. Calcutta kept the Leicesters penned on their line and another good round of passing saw Kay get the ball down on the Leicesters line. A scrum at five yards and the whistle went for half time.

The score of 6 points to 5 in favour of the soldiers was the position of affairs at half time. Calcutta started great guns in the second half and fairly buckled to their work. From a penalty almost on half way Arthur for Calcutta just failed.

After this play raged in the centre of the field, but Calcutta had the best of exchanges and were constantly attacking. Towards the end of the game a fine attacking movement by the Calcutta backs left Kay with Bocquet and Burnett on his left and only a single Leicester to get past. The centre delayed his pass a moment too long and the Leicester man intercepted and raced down the field at a great pace, kicked over the backs head and continued his victorious career, and with the help of Liddel succeeded in scoring the most sensational try that could be witnessed. He literally pulled the match out of the fire and won the Cup for his side as Bocquet, or Kay, if he had stuck to the ball; had only to cross the line to score the winning points.

It was indeed a magnificent effort, and one which deserves every praise. A goal resulted, and match was over leaving the Leicester Regiment victors by the margin stated. They played a splendid game, and with an allround pack of 13 stone per man took some pushing. Their Officers, Liddel and Masters. at three-quarter and half, have taught the team the game, and very great praise is due to them for the football displayed by their man. True, hard and clean the Leicester Regiment have good reason to be proud of their Rugby team, and it is to be hoped they will pay Calcutta a visit in September 1909.

A better side has not represented Calcutta for years, and they played first class football. That they had the hardest of luck their victors were the first to acknowledge. Somehow the ball would not run for them, and they had to retire defeated, but by no means disgraced Their victory of 20 points to nothing over Bombay is a laurel to hold on to. The forwards were on top against both Bombay and the Gunners, and in the match with the Leicesters it was a case of "honours easy." All were excellent and none better than their leader P. R. Cadell hero of a hundred fights.

GOLF IN SHILLONG.

IN Shillong, October is the chief month of the year for golf, and there are competitions and tournaments galore. Several well-known Calcutta Golfers have been up here, and are full of praise for the links, though the greens are not yet as good as they might be. A 36-hole Tyros' tournament has just finished with the following result :—

DOGS FOR SPORT AND PLEASURE.

THE interest in dog breeding and showing in England has grown enormously of recent years, men and women in all grades of society entering into the pursuit with zest. The King and Queen have large kennels at Sandringham, and both are represented, as a rule, at the leading shows. In Sandringham Boss his Majesty has a Clumber spaniel which is good enough to win in strong competition, while her Majesty is in the habit of sending her beautiful Borzoi Vassilka, who was bred at Sandringham, and the smooth Basset hound Sandringham Dido. The Queen has owned Bassets for a good many years now, and it is a pity that Royal patronage does not make this beautiful little hound more popular. Probably there are quite as many ladies as men exhibiting nowadays, and some of the leading shows are quite society functions. At the moment the rage seems to be for the Pekingese or Lion dog, which, as its name implies, came originally from Pekin. The first to be imported came into the family of the Duke of Richmond after the looting of the Summer Palace, but it is only quite of recent years that the public has taken up the variety. Among the prominent owners are Lady Algernon Gordon-Lennox, Lady Samuelson, Lady Holland, Lady Decies, Mrs. Lilburn MacEwen, Mrs. Asheton Cross, Lady Harris, Mrs. Douglas Murray, and many others. Typical specimens of the breed command high figures, and puppies sell readily if carefully bred.

Many people consider that too many dog shows are held, and they would gladly see the numbers restricted. Last year there were no less than 620 shows held in various parts of the United Kingdom, thirty-five of which were of major importance, as evidenced by the fact that championships were offered. Naturally this affords great opportunities to the confirmed pothunter and dealer, but it is questionable if it is for the benefit of the dogs. These figures give one some idea of the work entailed upon the Kennel Club, which has to grant its rules, and, as far as possible, see that they are observed. It does its best to punish evildoers, but, of course, it is largely dependent upon the co-operation of exhibitors, whose duty it should be to lodge objections whenever malpractices are observable. Dyeing and trimming undoubtedly still exist but to nothing like the extent they once did. Several severe sentences passed by the ruling authority in Grafton Street have had very wholesome results. Still, the novice must exercise caution in purchasing a dog from a man or woman who may not be known. There are plenty of trustworthy breeders, but the difficulty is for the inexperienced to tell.

The man who wishes to start breeding pedigree dogs should endeavour first of all to seek the advice of some trustworthy person who is well up in the breed he favours. It is useless to imagine that because a dog has won a prize in keen competition it will necessarily make a sound foundation upon which to work. One has not been breeding dogs for long, or any other pedigree stock for the matter of that, before he learns in a practical manner what the scientists mean when they talk about the influence of the law of heredity. This is one of the fascinations of breeding. It is not only the immediate parents that have to be considered, but also their ancestors for some generations back. When we find out the characteristic good points and failings of these ancestors, and learn which strain has the habit of reproducing its qualities to the greater extent, we have mastered the A.B.C. of breeding.

The bloodhound has been about the most-talked of dog during the past few weeks, and it is really surprising that so much foolish stuff should have been written about him. Until ten or twelve years ago the tracking instincts of the bloodhound had to a large extent been allowed to slumber, only one or two enthusiasts, of whom Mr. Edwin Brough was the chief, working their hounds. Then the Association of Bloodhound Breeders came into existence, and at once set to work to demonstrate what could be done. Since then public trials have been held from time to time, so that now we are thoroughly familiarised with the idea that a bloodhound can puzzle out the scent of a particular man many hours after he has laid the trail. Few owners, however, have the patience to train a hound to work on a really cold line—say, one twelve hours or more old It can be done all right and is simply a matter of training. Obviously, if bloodhounds are to be of any real help to the authorities in tracking down criminals, they must be brought to a high pitch of perfection. There is absolutely no reason why they should not be, but even then we must not ask them to do impossible things. Scent will not lie for ever, and if the scene of the crime is to be trampled over by a dozen or more people before the hound arrives, it is quite plain that his task will be made very difficult. The dreadful murder at Seal Chart would have been an ideal opportunity for the bloodhound to demonstrate his powers if one had been available the same evening. No real good will be accomplished until a service of bloodhounds is established in different parts of the country, so that one could be on the spot at short notice. We are far behind the United States in this respect. There, bloodhounds are in constant use, with most satisfactory results. The cost would be insignificant compared with the outlay involved now, when the services of a number of detectives have to be requisitioned, possibly for a considerable period. Much good might be accomplished if a number of country gentlemen made up their minds to keep and train hounds. The task would be a pleasant one to an enthusiastic sportsman, especially if he had not the leisure or means to indulge in fox-hunting.

24th and 25th September 1908.

THE Quetta Gymkhana Horse Show open to all comers, (Government horses and ponies excepted) was brought to a successful conclusion with the prize distribution by Lady McMahon. Entries were numerous, and some ponies of the 10th Hussars were also included. Major-General R.A.P. Clements, C.B., D.S.O., the popular officer Commanding the Quetta (4th) Division, gained prizes in several classes, that for Polo ponies being also awarded to his (the Flagstaff) team which won the recent Open Polo Tournament. Major T. H. G. C. Goodwin, R.A.M.C., D.S.O., officiated as the Honorary Secretary, and the success of the show is attributable in no small measure to his indefatigable efforts. The Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon K.C.I.E., C.S.I., prior to the distribution of prizes, made a brief speech, in which while complimenting the various prize winners, and acknowledging the services of the Honorary Secretary and Committee, humorously touched upon various points and difficulties connected with judging and other details The political Department were "At Home" on the occasion The band of the York and Lancaster regiments under Mr. Ancliffe played an excellent selection.

THE SIMLA DOG SHOW.

THE Simla Championship Dog Show of 1908 was held at Ravenswood on the 25th September and was a pronounced success in the number and quality of exhibits and in the general arrangements. H. E. the Viceroy patronised and visited the show and gave a Cup for the best Dog in the Show. Her Excellency Lady Minto distributed the prizes. The awards were as follows :—

CLASS I.—Great Danes.

Judge.—Colonel Willan Dawson.
Mr. Clifford Battem's Kader Sanp 1
Capt. Dawson's St. Andrew 2
Reserve.—Major Pollards' Prince.

A very fine class of Danes, seven in number, were placed by the judge.

CLASS II.—Greyhounds.

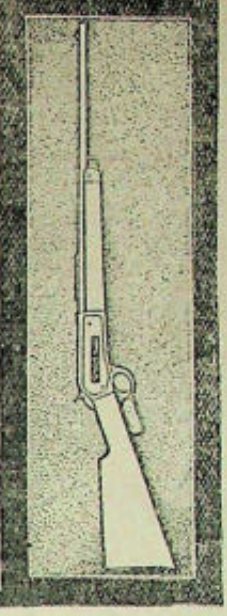
Judge.—Major Williamson.
Col. Willan Dawson's Rockmaid 1
Reserve.—Mrs. McLeod's San Toy.

A small, and average quality class, a pleasing bitch first.

CLASS III.—Litters, Pointers, and Retrievers.

Judge.—Major Williamson.
Mr. Thornhill's Beechgrove Sue 1
Sirdar Gurnaksh Singh's Fly 2
Reserve.—Major Windham's Duck.

A good class of three pointers, two Irish setters, and four retrievers. Beechgrove Sue, a bitch of good type, who won last year in the same class, first, but all were either in the prizes, or commendations.



WINCHESTER .33 CALIBER

A New Large Caliber High Power Rifle.

Big game hunters who have advocated a large caliber high power rifle will find in the Winchester .33 caliber a gun that will meet their requirements. The popular and reliable Model 1886 rifle has been adapted to handle this new cartridge, which is large enough and powerful enough to kill any big game known. The Winchester .33 caliber belongs to the high power smokeless powder class of cartridges, having high velocity and flat trajectory, and it develops great striking energy and penetrating power. The .33 caliber bullet weighs 200 grains. Soft pointed bullets used in this cartridge have special upsetting or mushrooming qualities, owing to their high velocity. This makes the Winchester .33 caliber a particularly desirable cartridge for big game shooting, as mushrooming bullets of this size have terrific killing power.

All Dealers Sell Winchester Rifles and Cartridges.

CLASS IV.—Cockers, Open, Dogs and Bitches.

Judge.—Mr. A. H. Longhurst.
Col. Willan Dawson's Rock St. Wulfram 1
Col. Willan Dawson's Rock Gipsy 2
Reserve.—Mrs. Edwardes' Skeltonian Jet.

CLASS V.—Cockers, Novices.

Col. Willan Dawson's Rock Heir 1
Reserve.—Col. Willan Dawson's Rock Heiress.

CLASS VI.—Cockers. Puppies.

Mrs. Edwardes' Ma Tiger Lily 1
Reserve.—Col. Willan Dawson's Rock Count.

All the Cocker classes were good owing to Colonel Dawson's strong team, and were well judged by Mr. Longhurst, a judge who officiated in India for the first time, and whose services will no doubt be much in request again by Show Committees. He is an acquisition to the list of judges in this country.

CLASS VII.—Other Spaniels.

Judge.—Col. Willan Dawson.
Capt. Orr's Massa Simbo 1
Reserve.—Mrs. Bevan-Petman's Kitty.

The other Spaniels were nothing like the quality of the Cockers, Simla has recently not proved strong in this class, there was nothing in it of high merit.

CLASS VIII.—Dachshunds, Open, Dog and Bitches.

Judge.—Col. Willan Dawson.
Miss Wapshare's Maidie 1
Reserve.—Mdme. Polachek's Baby.

CLASS IX.—Dachshunds. Novice and Puppies.

Miss Wapshare's Maidie 1
Mr. Patterson's Mrs. Gamp 2
Reserve.—Mdme. Polachek's Baby.

Miss Wapshare won in both classes with a very sound little bitch, a point to which the judge paid great attention. The classes were not large and not extra strong.

CLASS X.—Smooth Fox Terriers, Dogs, Open.

Judge.—Mr. White.
The Rajah of Pithapuram's South Cave Splinter ... 1
Mr. Bean's Honest Injun 2
Reserve.—Mr. Reid's Northop Winter.

The Calcutta winner Indigo did not turn up to compete. First and second very nice terriers, the latter excelling in head, coat, and style, the former a very well balanced little dog in every way. It was a near thing between them. The Northops have not improved, and Winter has an uncertain ear carriage.

CLASS XI.—Smooth Fox Terrier Bitches, Open.

Judge.—Mr. White.
Mr. Patterson's Dulcie Belle 1
Reserve.—The Rajah of Pithapuram's South Cave Sarcelle.

The position might have been reversed. Sarcelle is a quality bitch in all her outline.

CLASS XII.—Smooth Fox Terriers, Novice and Puppies.

Judge.—Mr. White.
Mr. Bean's Honest Injun 1
Mrs. Jackson's Black Bill 2
Reserve.—Mr. Patterson's Dulcie Belle.

Correctly placed, Honest Injun a good first, but the heavily marked Black Bill is a good terrier who will do better when improved in condition.

CLASS XIII.—Wire Fox Terriers, Open, Dogs.

Judge.—Mr. White.
Mr. Lionel Jacob's Jim the Penman 1
Mr. Lionel Jacob's Jo Hukm 2
Reserve.—Mrs. Williamson's Rassendyll.

A strong class, first and second very high class terriers shown in tip top condition. Rassendyll was a bit off coat. Mrs. Diack showed a good one in Peter Cackler, Mr. Bean in Darby, and Captain Normand in Dasher.

CLASS XIV.—Wire Fox Terriers, Open, Bitches.

Judge.—Mr. White.
Mr. Lionel Jacob's Champion Diva 1
Major Impey's Indian Lass 2
Reserve.—Mr. Lionel Jacob's Billie Burke.

Old Champion Diva added another open win to her unbeaten record, but it is a question whether she should not on this occasion have given way to Billie Burke who was too low down.

CLASS XV.—Wire Fox Terriers, Novice.

Judge.—Mr. White.
Mr. Lionel Jacob's Jo Hukm 1
Major Impey's Indian Lass 2
Reserve.—Mr. Bean's Joan.

The winner, a young dog with a great head and style, an easy first. The other two very nice bitches.

CLASS XVI.—Wire Fox Terrier, Puppies.

Judge.—Mr. White.
Mr. Bean's Joan 1
Major Impey's Indian Lass 2
Reserve.—Capt. Normand's Dasher.

There was some inconsistency here, as Indian Lass was placed by the same judge over Joan in the Novices. Quite a strong class of puppies, good ones such as Rassendyll, Darby, and Blackguard being crowded out by the quality.

CLASS XVII.—Irish Terriers, Open Dogs and Bitches.

Judge.—Major Williamson.
Capt. Bradfield's Baroda Muddler 1
Mr. Woodley's Martian Woodnymph 2
Reserve.—Mr. Dutton's Tim.

Irish terriers did not excel, a most moderate class in which Muddler won easily.

CLASS XVIII.—Irish Terriers, Novice and Puppies.

Judge.—Major Williamson.
Mr. Raynor's Dingle Damsel 1
Reserve.—Mr. Woodley's Martian Woodnymph. Also a poor class. Damsel is a nice bitch, but showed badly previously.

CLASS XIX.—Scottish Terriers, Open, Dogs.

Judge.—Major Williamson.
Mrs. Baird's Haji McPherson 1
Mrs. Hamilton's Raffles 2
Reserve.—Mrs. Ovan's Martian Peter.

In the absence of such teams as those of Captain Martin, the Scotties made no great show. Captain Martin did not exhibit this time in either Scottish or Irish terriers, but the Martians whenever they are about are not far from the front. Haji McPherson has a great head, but his coat is rather soft, and he was shown without any preparation.

CLASS XX.—Scottish Terriers, Open, Bitches.

Judge.—Major Williamson.
Mrs. James' Martian Scotty 1
Reserve.—Mrs. Drake's Sheila.

The winner is a very nice little bitch, but has shown in poor condition after a litter.

CLASS XXI.—Scottish Terriers, Novices.

Judge.—Major Williamson.
Mrs. Ovan's Martian Peter 1
Mr. Rayner's Dingle Quite a Little 2
Reserve.—Mrs. James' Martian Scotty.

CLASS XXII.—Scottish Terriers, Puppies.

Judge.—Major Williamson.
Mrs. Oran's Martian Peter 1
Reserve.—Mr. Rayner's Dingle Quite a Little.

CLASS XXIII.—Airedales, Open, Dogs and Bitches.

Judge.—Mr. A. H. Longhurst.
Mr. Miller's Imperialist 1
Mr. Bartrop's Nell 2
Reserve.—Mrs. Macnaghten's Jerry.

The Airedales were a good class, Imperialist, who won last year and at Calcutta, looking fitter than on previous occasions. Major Cleveland's Zulma, a very classy bitch with a long head, was unlucky not to be placed.

CLASS XXIV.—Airedales, Novice and Puppies.

Major Roosmalecocq's Dagnall Caesar 1
Mr. Bartrop's Nell 2
Reserve.—Mrs. Bantock's Prince.

Again a nice class, but Zulma was still more unlucky to be unplaced here.

CLASS XXV.—Bull-dogs, Open, Dogs and Bitches.

Judge.—Colonel Wapshare.
Mr. Callaghan's Bruiser Stone 1
Mr. Whales' Bob 2
Reserve.—Mrs. Street's Black John.

The winner rightly chosen, quite a good one, the rest only moderate.

CLASS XXVI.—Bull-Terriers, Open, Dogs.

Judge.—Mr. A. H. Longhurst.
Mrs. Mollison's The Cad 1
Mr. Jukes' Brutus Marquis 2
Reserve.—Mr. Mollison's Sweet William.

All the bull-terrier classes, judged by Mr. Longhurst, were interesting, and The Cad scored many successes. He is a puppy with pronounced merits and some failings. He has a splendidly filled up fore face, strong bone, good lips and feet, but his butterfly nose somewhat mars his appearance, his eyes are light, and his tail not all it should be.

CLASS XXVII. Bull-terriers, Open, Bitches.

Mr. Mollison's Sweet Briar 1
Mrs. Mollison's Lad's Love 2
Reserve.—Major Douglas' Sapho.

Sapho might have been higher and she is a bitch of great quality, and when fully furnished will be hard to beat.

CLASS XXVIII. Bull-terriers, Novices.

Mrs. Mollison's The Cad 1
Mr. Mollison's Extra Special 2
Reserve.—Captain Elliott's Naughty Girl.

A very strong class of ten Novice terriers, many good ones crowded out by the competition.

CLASS XXIX.—Bull-terriers, Puppies.

Mrs. Mollison's The Cad 1
Mr. Jukes' Brutus Marquis 2
Reserve.—Mrs. Mollison's Jewel.

CLASS XXX.—Pekinese, Open, Dogs.

Judge.—Captain Miller.
Mrs. Scott's Chinky Chog 1
Reserve.—The Maharajah of Patiala's Nanki Poo.

Chinky Chog was again to the front, a little dog of lowest type very difficult to get away from. Others only moderate.

CLASS XXXI.—Pekinese, Open, Bitches.

Judge.—Captain Miller.
Mrs. Hotz' Flossi 1
Miss Forbes' Minch 2
Reserve.—Mrs. Scott's Winky Wog.

Last year's winner won again and quite rightly. Minch is a very engaging puppy but at her age she was lucky to beat Mrs. Scott's bitch.

CLASS XXXII.—Other Large Dogs.

Judge.—Mr. A. H. Longhurst.
Mrs. Cowper's Monica 1
Reserve.—The Maharajah of Patiala's Midget.

The winner, an excellent poodle, who might have been higher in the specials, A St. Bernard second. Nothing else in the class of any merit.

CLASS XXXIII.—Lhassa Terriers.

Judge.—Mr. Lionel Jacob.
Mrs. Mackinnon's Ghilpo 1
Mrs. Artlett's Kim 2
Reserve.—Mr. Budd's Gingtok.

Kim was the only Lhassa in the ring of really good type, but was put back for a bad mouth. Ghilpo is sound all over, but has not the character of the other. The rest indifferent.

CLASS XXXV.—Soldier's Dogs.

Judge.—Col. Wapshare.
Sergeant Gale's bull-dog Victor 1
Only two bull-dogs, the property of the same owner competed.

SPECIALS.

Judge.—Major Williamson.

1. H. E. the Viceroy's Prize for the best Dog in the Show.
Mr. Lionel Jacob's Wire Fox-terrier Jo Hukm.

Col. Willan Dawsons' Rock Heir.
(c) Novice Member's Special.
Mrs. Miller's Imperialist.

The Naturalist.

NATURE'S SCHOOL OF ACTORS AND ACTRESSES.

YOU are wandering over a pasture or a clover-stubble, thinking of nothing in particular, when—crash! splutter! screech!—you think for an instant that you have trodden upon the fuse of a live volcano, writes Mr. E. Kay Robinson. In the next instant the flurry and noise resolves itself into two excited partridges, which have sprung into the air, so to speak, at the tops of their voices, and are now dashing wildly about, with ruffled feathers and earpiercing cries, just in front of you. As you stand and watch, the two birds gradually begin to adopt very different tactics. One, which you recognise as the male by the broad chocolate-brown horse-shoe on his breast, continues his violent demonstrations, as though challenging you to combat. If you are thereby induced to follow him and to turn your back upon the spot where you are standing, he will very soon take wing and whirr away.

A FAMILY ARRANGEMENT.

Instead of following the male, stand still and watch his mate. Her clamour quickly dies as as she retires into the background, and after a few anxious clucking notes she completely effaces herself behind the herbage and creeps, unseen if possible, into cover. What was all the fuss about? Examine the ground carefully in front of your feet and you will find from a dozen to sixteen living atoms in speckled fluff lying absolutely motionless among the herbage. You may even touch them gently, but they do not move. You had, in fact, walked into the middle of a partridge family. The parents had seen you coming from a distance, and at a warning note from them every one of the tiny chicks crouched. The parents crouched, too, because you might pass by without discovering them.

THE MALE ALWAYS TAKES THE RISK.

When, however, it was manifest that you would walk into the midst of the crouching family, the instinct of the parents bids them suddenly to leap from the ground together with clattering screams. This arrests your steps, and the next thing is for the male bird to draw you aside, while the female disappears into hiding. If this manœuvre succeeds, the female will quietly call the young ones to her when your back is turned, and presently the male, flying in a wide circuit, will rejoin them in safety. But all these devices would fail completely unless the chicks played their proper part, and it is really wonderful that, on the very first day after they have emerged from the shell, they should so perfectly mimic motionless fragments of earth, entirely regardless of your presence and the excited clamour of their parents.

UNTAUGHT DIVERS.

Equally wonderful is the instinct of the baby moor hen. You may approach the nest at the very time when the young are hatching. The quick eyes of the parents have detected your approch. The male promptly disappears among the rushes, and the female slips quietly off the nest and joins him. As you draw near, the young, in obedience to a gentle call-note from the rushes, slip off the nest-platform into the water and dive. They have never even seen the water before, and the youngest is only a few minutes' old. But he dives as well as any, swims under water like his brothers into the sheltering weeds, and remains hidden, with only his beak above water, under some covering leaf, until the danger is past. In the nest there may remain an egg with a hole in the side, through which you can see a still unborn chick pecking away to enlarge the opening and can hear him "cheeping" for freedom. Is it not amazing that he should come out of that egg-shell straight into a world of blue sky and sunlight, green rushes and grey water, and should know that, because your figure breaks a skyline which he has never seen before he must dive and swim under water into a hiding-place, and remain there until a parent whom he has never seen calls him to her?

THE DUCK'S DEVICE.

Take the case of young wild ducks again. You may surprise the mother duck alone with her brood—for the drake takes no part in the early nursery cares—in some straight, bare dyke where there is no herbage of any kind for concealment. Here you might imagine it to be hopeless for the little ducklings to escape. But what happens! On the instant when your head becomes visible over the bank there is a sudden, great splash, from the midst of which the duck re-emerges and at once begins scrambling and flapping along on the surface of the water. If you were one of the creatures of prey which are the natural enemies of ducks you would almost certainly make a dash to seize the bird struggling before you, only to find her too nimble for you. Then after, watching her swift flight into the distance you might turn to look up and down the dyke where this disappointing thing had occurred, and you would see not a sign of life anywhere.

A WONDERFUL INSTINCT.

Being an intelligent human being, however, and not a creature of prey, you have the sense to pay little attention to the excited duck, but look instead for the children whom she was trying to save. You see them at once, all paddling together, silently and quickly, close under the bank of the dyke, in the opposite direction to that taken by the duck. When they find a small hiding place in the bank they will all crowd quietly into it and remain there until they hear their mother calling them from a distance. And the peculiar thing is that, although they perform these wise actions instinctively without any prompting, they will, if the mother thinks that you have gone and calls them, swim boldly past you in full view to join her. This subordination of their instinct to hers seems to me almost more wonderful than the instinct itself.

The Story Teller.

A DELILAH OF THE SWELL MOB.

SOME years ago, said a fellow passenger to whom I got into a chance conversation, I had to go to Hampstead one afternoon and feeling lazy, I jumped on to the bus, I had fully intended to ride outside as the day was fine; but at the last moment, as it were, I decided to take a peep inside first, just in the way of business. That peep decided me. I stepped in and sat down. Next to me was a girl, flat-chested, sanctimonious, and untidy; but she had a little chain purse on her wrist with a sovereign showing plainly through the steel meshes. When I got out that purse went with me.

I had chosen an ordinary stopping place as being less suspicious than jumping off whilst the 'bus was in motion; and as it happened, the girl got out too. I slipped down a quiet street, intent on examining my haul, for I could tell from the feel of it that there was more than one coin in the purse. However, before I took it out of my pocket, I glanced round to see if I were alone. It was lucky I did so. The girl was within ten yards of me. I increased my pace so as to leave her behind, and did not look round again until I had placed a considerable distance between myself and the place where I had last seen her. When I did so I found to my disgust that she was still following. I glanced up and down the mean little street in which I found myself, saw that we were alone, and decided to let her pass me on, if she really suspected me, to brazen it out. Accordingly I slowed up and drew out my cigarette case. Selecting a cigarette with some care, I put it in my mouth and fumbled for my matches. By this time she had caught me up; but instead of passing on as I had hoped she would, she came straight up to me.

"Will you please give me back my purse?"

The sanctimonious look had vanished and given place to one of considerable determination. It suddenly struck me that I might have underrated her. I turned towards her in well-simulated surprise, my cigarette in one hand, a blazing match in the other.

"I beg your pardon, madam?"

"Will you please give me back the purse you—stole from me in the omnibus?"

"My dear madam, I still fail to understand you."

She moved closer, almost touching me and forcing me against the wall to avoid her. Suddenly her eyes filled with tears.

"I know you took it," she sobbed, "and it contains all the money I have in the world."

My position against the wall was becoming uncomfortable, besides being embarrassing, and I began to lose my temper.

"I tell you I haven't got your purse," I reiterated sharply. "What on earth should I want it for; do you take me for a thief?"

My tone seemed to cow her, for she shrank away a little.

"I made sure you had it," she murmured. "I don't know who else could have taken it."

I watched her curiously as she walked slowly back along the street, watched until she had turned the corner; and I remember thinking what funny things women are—and what fools!

When she was safety out of the way I put my hand into my jacket pocket. The next moment I began to feel hurriedly in the others. Then I regret to say I swore violently. The purse was gone, and with it a good deal of my available cash. I had a little left in my trousers pockets; but every coin in my coat and vest had disappeared. Cramming my hat more firmly on to my head I turned and raced up the street and round the corner after her. I was just in time to see her stepping into a hansom cab some fifty yards further on. As it moved off she leaned out and waved her hand to me.

I was a bit sore over the affair as you may imagine, and I sincerely hoped I might never set eyes on the lady again. One afternoon, however, as I was strolling along Piccadilly I felt a touch on my arm. Turning, I found myself face to face with her. For a second, indeed, I scarcely recognised her. She had developed a figure somehow, and her frock was unmistakably Parisian. Her hair was elaborately frizzed and curled and was vastly improved in the process. Her cheeks were delicately flushed, and her eyes flashed and sparkled in a way that I found disconcerting. Altogether, she had transformed herself into a very pretty young woman.

"Take me to tea somewhere," she commanded.

Hardly knowing whether to feel pleased or embarrassed, I piloted her to a certain fashionable tea shop in Bond Street. The place was very crowded, and this seemed to please her, for she nodded her appreciation as she sank into her seat.

"Well?" she asked, turning away from a survey of the pretty room.

"I scarcely recognised you."

"You think I have improved then?"

"I think you are simply wonderful," I answered.

"Wait," she laughed. "You don't know me yet."

She settled down to the enjoyment of her tea; and as I watched her dainty ways I came to the conclusion that it was altogether good to be in her company. I even had fleeting thought that I was rather a lucky man to be there.

She woke me from the reverie into which I had fallen, turning to me with mischievous eyes. In her hand she held the historic chain purse.

"Look after this for me please till we get outside. One never knows what sort of people are sitting next to one even in a swagger place like this; and I am afraid I am rather a careless person."

The little purse was fatter than ever; but it had no attraction for me now. I felt that this action of hers spelt forgiveness for my past misdoings, and I believe I flushed with pleasure.

"Thank you," I said. "It will be quite safe here until you ask for it."

I slipped it into my pocket, feeling strangely elated.

When we left the tea shop we found ourselves in the midst of a well-dressed throng, and I had to fall behind. Presently I saw her push against an elderly lady and apologise. When she moved away, a valuable watch that had been pinned to the lady's blouse had disappeared. A moment later a man started forward with the obvious intention of making mischief. Pushing my way roughly through the crowd I ranged alongside of her.

"Quick!" I whispered hurriedly, "you were seen: drop it."

Instead of doing so she clutched at me.

"You thief!" she cried, "give me back my purse."

For a moment I stared at her dumbfounded. Then I did the only thing left to me. I started running. In and out amongst the people I dodged, whilst they stood and stared at me in amazement. Suddenly the cry I was excepting rang out.

"Stop thief!"

But I was almost clear of them now, and I settled down to a steady run. I had no intention of being caught if I could help it, and I knew that if I could only get out of sight for half a minute it would mean safety. It was scarcely likely that they would dare to arrest a well-dressed man strolling quietly along. The difficulty was to get that half minute. Turn where I would, sooner or later I was sure to see a policeman at the end of the vista. Never had the force seemed so numerous. At last I began to grow hot and my wind failed me. That was the death blow to my plan. In desperation I jumped into a waiting hansom.

"Where to, sir?"

"Euston, and sharply too!"

The man sank back on his seat and closed the flaps; but the cab did not move. I jumped up furiously, only to see a grinning face looking at me through the trap.

"It's no use, old cock; the game's up. I'm not going to run foul of the police for you nor for twenty like you."

The next moment the cab was surrounded by a heated and excited crowd.

Well, I got six months and she came and gave the evidence that got it for me. I called the waitress at the tea-shop but she could'nt, or wouldn't, remember us. I didn't split on her. For one thing I doubt if they'd have believed me.—John bull.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 18th September 1908.

As no doubt has been noticed, the Nagant Hobson cars have been very successful during the past season. At Brooklands in practically every race for which it has entered, it has been placed either first or second, culminating last August in winning the August trophy. This car also ran through the 2,000 miles Reliability Trial, organised by the Royal Automobile Club, and finished second in her class. Knowing the extraordinarily trying time through which the cars had to pass, the mere fact of it even having finished, is speaking testimonial as to its merits. The Company has, I see, been appointed the English agents for the Delahaye cars. This car is extraordinarily well-known in France, and is second to none in quality and workmanship. Messrs. Delahaye are among the largest manufacturers of commercial vehicles, and at the present moment a large quantity of their cabs are running in the streets of France, and we hope before long to have a number of them in England.

As was predicted, the practice for the motor road race in the Isle of Man has been marked by a chapter of accidents. The principal sufferer was Mr. Brown, who is driving the Coventry-Humber car. Mr. Brown last week had a bad smash near Sulby Bridge, and in consequence his car had been off the road pending repairs up to Monday. As a result of the further accident it is doubtful whether the car will be driven in the race next week.

Mr. Brown had just completed a circuit of the course when, on the straight between Willaston and Bray Hill, the car skidded into the bank on the left side, threw Mr. Brown out clean, and then, swerving across into the opposite hedge, capsized, throwing out Howarth, the mechanician. Fortunately, Mr. Brown escaped unhurt, and Howarth, who for a time was unconscious, was found upon medical examination to have sustained nothing worse than a cut knee. The car had its front axle smashed apparently beyond repair, besides sustaining damages in other parts, the front of the frame being badly twisted.

A Beeston-Humber also broke down on the mountain road, while both a Hutton and another car were in temporary trouble elsewhere, the former at the hairpin corner over Ballune, and the latter near the Bungalow Hotel. A Darracq had a narrow escape of capsizing at Sulby Bridge, but just managed to clear it.

The performances of all the cars were noticeably slow owing to the state of the roads. Fifty minutes for the 37½ mile circuit was the best time made.

Most amateurs hesitate to touch the wiring on a car, even when it has got into a shocking state, because if they take it off they have absolutely no idea of how to put it on again. The same applies to touching the commutator, as although the timing of an engine is a comparatively simple matter, there are not nine men out of ten who know how to do it. The coil often proves a stumbling-block; it looks so fearfully formidable with its rows of terminals and cryptic symbols. These symbols, however, are quite easy to understand, and vary according as to whether the coil is of French or British origin. The following are the symbols most generally employed:—British coil: B—Battery, C—Contact breaker, E or M—Earth, P—Positive battery, S—Sparking plug; a plus sign (+) also indicates positive pole of battery. French coil: B—Sparking plug, P—Battery, M—Earth, T or V—Contact breaker.

To take the switch first, the positive terminal is connected up to the switch, whilst the other terminal is connected up to the coil. The negative pole of the accumulator is always earthed by being connected up with some part of the metal frame-work of the car. If an ordinary wipe contact is employed, the wiper has to be earthed, and the contacts are connected up with the coil. The plug terminals on the coil must be connected up with the plugs, but great care must be taken to see that the right terminal is connected to the right plug. This is easily discovered. Turn the engine round by hand and find out when the piston of one cylinder is at the top of its firing stroke, i.e., the stroke where the exhaust valve is shut; then find out which trembler is making contact on the coil and join up the plug and coil terminal. It is a great thing to encase all high-tension and low-tension wires in some sort of case or piping, so that they may be kept clear of grease and dirt, and their life prolonged. Also it is a good plan to fit all wires with spring terminals, or terminal clips of some kind, as this saves such a lot of trouble when adjustments have to be made.

Most motorists have realised for some time past the unsatisfactory nature of the R.A.C. formula for computing horse power, but as we had no better we had perforce to use it. Its great drawback was of course the fact that it did not take the question of length of stroke into consideration. And thus cars with short strokes were very severely handicapped in most competitions. The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders have just evolved a new formula which looks distinctly promising, although personally such a thing as a perfect formula is out of the question. In this formula we have two new factors introduced, i.e., length of stroke in relation to bore and piston speed, both of which factors were totally neglected in the R.A.C. formula, although they necessarily had a considerable bearing on the actual horse power.

The formula is as follows:—$K \times D\ (D-1)\ (R+2)\ N$, and here K is a constant of 0·197 for touring cars and 0·333 for racing cars; these are different because it is assumed that the piston speed of a racing engine will be much greater than that of a touring engine. D is the bore of the cylinder in inches, R is the ratio of stroke to bore (in other words, stroke in inches divided by bore in inches), and N is the number of cylinders. Its tendency is to increase all round the present rating of engines from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. In competitions it seems probable that some greater allowance than the constant K will have to be made for engines of varying piston speed. If every manufacturer were allotted a certain constant for his particular type of engine we should be able to compute the respective horse power of engines very fairly accurately.

The Maharajah of Nepal has just bought a Daimler car of the "Blackdown" landaulette type, painted red with black mouldings and lined gold. The Padma Rajah has also purchased from the same Company a "Stoneleigh" limousine car.

Solution to Problem No. 72.

The game being a certainty, the dealer can try to establish spades before leading out his clubs. At trick 2 he should put himself in with the king of clubs, and lead a spade, finessing dummy's 10. If B wins this trick, he will probably return his partner's lead of diamonds, when Z should take with the ace, make all dummy's clubs, and put himself in again with the ace of hearts. Having now won the game, he can finesse spades a second time, and may possibly make a little slam. If, however, B leads a heart instead of diamond at trick 4, Z must content himself with making his winning cards, and will win ten tricks in all. If A puts on the queen of spades at trick 3, Z should put himself in with the ace of clubs, and lead through him again, as he probably holds the king as well.

"How many servants does your mother keep?" asked the lady who had just moved into the neighbourhood.

"None," replied little Janet; "but we engage lots."

"WELL, Bobby, how is your sister?" asked the parson.

"Oh she's sick in bed, 'burst herself terrible'" roplied the youth.

"I am sorry to hear that. How did it happen?"

"We were playin' who could lean the farthest out of the window—and she won."

"WHY did their marriage prove mutually disappointing?"

He married her because she was poor and could make her own gowns, and she married him because he was rich and she wouldn't have to.

DOGS AS DETECTIVES.

PUBLIC attention has been drawn in England to the question of the value of dogs as aids to the police. Bloodhounds were recently employed after two murders had been committed, but the result was not successful. That, however, was not surprising owing to the delay in calling them in. For instance in the case of the mysterious murder of Mrs. Luard, near Sevenoaks, nearly seventy hours had lapsed before two bloodhounds of Major Richardson were brought on the scene. Major Richardson is of opinion that if their services had been requisitioned on the night of the crime some useful work might have been done. It has been represented that one of the difficulties of the situation was that no article was left behind belonging to the murderer from which to take a scent. Major Richardson declares, however, that this is not necessary under the system under which he works. He suggests that if the police would use more despatch in sending for the dogs and cover up the start of any supposed trail good work might be done by bloodhounds in the interests of justice. It is useless in these cases to send for any bloodhound that may happen to be in a neighbourhood, unless it is specially trained for police work. A bloodhound requires a special and arduous training in order to be of use to the police. There has been no stauncher advocate of the police dog than Major Richardson. For years past he has been training dogs for military purposes, and it was while pursuing his experiment abroad in connection with such work that he was struck with the increasing use to which the members of foreign police are putting dogs as guardians of the peace. Ever since the successful part which these animals played in ridding Ghent of a horde of undesirable ruffians their systematic training as thief-catchers has been pursued enthusiastically with gratifying results. Brussels, encouraged by this success, set up a large training establishment, and the idea spread throughout the Continent, until at the present day most of the principal German towns possess police dogs, while France, Russia, Holland, Switzerland, and Austria have also taken this matter up.

Conclusive evidence of the dog's natural proclivity for a policeman's work is furnished at the competitions of police dogs in Paris. Among their performances are the climbing of walls, an ingenious method of tripping a running man by getting between his legs, the art of holding him to the ground and above all the defence of their master from an attack. The animals are taught to get the better of a man armed with walking stick or revolver, and how to pursue fugitives. Dogs of various breeds are trained for the work. Some of the most successful of the Ghent police dogs are Airedale terriers, and the Belgians also have a predilection for the Berger Belge breed. About a year ago America bought a kennel of dogs from Ghent for use in their own country, and in the New York suburbs, where the police have long and lonely beats to patrol, the animals proved efficient assistants. Mr. A. Croxton Smith, Honorary Secretary of the English Association of Bloodhound Breeds, points out that it is doubtful if any variety of dogs has anything like the fine scenting properties of the bloodhound. "So much attention" he remarks has been bestowed upon breeding the foxhound for pace, that his nose is nothing like as good as it used to be, and it is a constant complaint that a pack will leave the line of a hunted fox to follow that of a fresh one. Now, "Mr. Smith continues," a bloodhound is of no use that will change in this way. If he is any good at all, he will stick to the original line, no matter how many times it may have been crossed by others. It is this immunity from a tendency to change that makes his work so highly appreciated." It is said that the authorities at Scotland Yard are quite favourable to a canine addition to their force, but offers to train dogs for them to experiment with have not been accepted up to the present.

If opportunities similar to those in other countries existed in England and other parts of the Empire, it would unquestionably be a great safeguard to the public. It has been proved that criminals have a wholesome dread of dogs. When "Jack the Ripper" was terrorising London twenty years ago it was significant that when bloodhounds were brought to the assistance of the police the horrible crimes ceased—the murderer was too astute to take any risks—but directly the dogs were taken away the sensations re-commenced. It is quite possible that the police may not care to add to their many duties that of keeping and training bloodhounds, but it should be an easy thing for a small annual fee to induce sport loving people to add a bloodhound to their menage. Of course, as Mr. Croxton Smith says, the hound would have to be well trained, but this would not present insuperable difficulties." Almost every puppy enters naturally to man-hunting. Occasionally a young hound has no aptitude for the work, but that is not very usual Early lessons are simple. As soon as the whelp has sense enough to be handy he should be encouraged to hunt. Some one he knows. Let him see the runner start, and then stimulate him to find, rewarding him with a piece of meat when successful. He will quickly enter into the game. When he has attained a certain amount of proficiency, set him to work on strangers, gradually increasing the lead given to the quarry until he will hunt a line some hours cold. "Mr. Smith advises that the hound should be habituated to hunting the clean boot from the outset; that is to say a man whose boots have not been doctored by any artificial preparation. No stronger scent than the emanations from the human body is necessary. To our mind the case in favour of police dogs is irrefutable. In Germany and France there are places where bloodhounds can be telephoned for, and Major Richardson has just sold one of his dogs to the French police for such purposes. Why should England lag behind?

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The last attempt this season to swim across the English Channel was made by Jabez Wolff on Saturday, 19th September, and resulted in failure. Wolff got within a quarter of a mile of the coast when he collapsed and was within an ace of being drowned. Details in our London Sporting Letter.

The American Amateur Golf Championship was won by Mr. J. D. Travers, his second successive win. In the semi-finals he beat Mr. W. J. Travis, ex-British and American Champion, so that his ultimate success was regarded as a foregone conclusion.

That phenomenal runner, Alfred Shrubb, who is now on tour in America, where he continues his unbeaten record and who is confident he could have won the Olympic Marathon Race, has now backed up his confidence by a sporting offer. Hayes, the winner, who has returned to America, has turned professional. Shrubb has offered to run him three races of 10, 15, and 20 or 25 miles, for £500. If a meeting takes place we should say Shrubb would start at odds on.

The final game in the South India Polo tournament at Secunderabad ended in a win for the 2nd Queen's Own Sappers and Miners from Bangalore who beat the Royal Fusiliers by 5 goals to 4 after an exciting game.

The Professional International Marathon race organised by the Evening News was run over the Olympic games Marathon course last Saturday and was won by Siret, champion of France, whose time for the distance, 2 hours 37 minutes, constitutes a record. White, an Irishman, was second, and the Englishman Reywood finished third.

The Sculling Championship of England over the Putney to Mortlake course was rowed on the 12th instant, Barry, of Putney, beating the Australian Towns after a magnificent race. We publish further on an article dealing with the championship which appeared in a London contemporary.

The Madras R. A. Cup Football tournament has once again been won by S. Battery, R. H. A., who beat the 83rd Battery by 2 goals to 1. This constitutes their third successive victory in this tournament. They very sportingly handed the cup back after having won it in 1896, '97, and '98 and this is the second time they have won the cup outright, which constitutes a record in football tournaments in South India.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Hockey tournament ended on the 9th instant in a win for Lucknow Railway Sports Club, who beat the Unao Police "A" team by a goal to nil. Their first meeting resulted in a pointless draw, but Lucknow won the re-play.

While the Puckeridge Hounds were cub-hunting last month, the quarry dashed into Down Hall, the residence of Mrs. Manning, in the village of Brents, Pelham, Hertfordshire, and took refuge in the drawing-room. The master, Mr. Barclay, who had just time to prevent the hounds from following, soon caught the fox and dropped it from the window.

That unfortunate man, J. B. Joel, millionaire and turfite, is not allowed much respite from the attentions of his enemies. Two men were arrested just before the last mail left England for threatening to murder him. At the preliminary hearing some amazing letters were read: these were sent by the men to Mrs. Joel and demanded £500 or the early death of Joel would be the result of their demand being unsatisfied!

The English Jockey Club is going to strengthen the starter's hand. At a meeting held at Newmarket on Wednesday, the 30th ultimo, Rule 37 was altered to read as follows:—"The starter has power to inflict a fine not exceeding ten sovereigns on any jockey who misconducts himself at the post and should a jockey be so fined the starter shall report the fact at once to the stewards. He shall also report to the stewards any jockey who refuses to obey his commands in any respect whatever."

Rule 38 will be altered to read as follows:—"The starter shall report to the stewards the time at which each race was started, and by whom, or by what cause any delay was occasioned. He shall also report to the stewards for transmission to the registry office all cases in which the starting-gate is dispensed with, and the reason therefor."

Strange discoveries on Newmarket Heath on the 25th ultimo engaged the attention of the town police and the Jockey Club officials. They indicate either a practical joke of a singularly wanton and dangerous character, or a wicked attempt to injure horses while they were at exercise.

While crossing the heath in the early hours on his way to work, a man noticed that a familiar post near Sefton Lodge, where Mr. Sol Joel's horses are stabled, was not in its accustomed place. Surprised at its absence, he looked around, and presently discovered the post—a large, heavy thing—lying, partly hidden in the thick grass, across a tan track used by trainers for cantering horses on. The spot was about three hundred yards from the commencement of the tan, or just about where a horse having a nice canter would be getting into his stride. Impressed by the suspicious nature of this discovery the man searched the ground further on, and found, at irregular intervals, many only a horse's stride apart, about fifty of the indicating dolls—upright, flat, the pieces of wood, with another piece nailed across—buried in the tan. At intervals rails had been also laid across the tan. He informed the heath officials, who at once removed the obstructions.

There was a disposition to regard the work of burying the dolls as a deliberate attempt to injure the horses exercising on the tan. Among the earliest users of it are frequently Mr. Sol Joel's horses and those from Stanley House, where one of the Cesarewitch favourites—viz., Lord Durham's Glacis, is stabled.

Footmarks were discernible on the tan, no effort apparently having been made to obliterate them. One of the uprooted posts was so firmly erected that two or three men were required to pull it up.

The Oxfordshire Light Infantry held a two nights' boxing tournament at Lucknow on the 7th and 8th instant, the event being the outcome of a friendly challenge in which "F" Company of the Battalion was pitted against "G" Company. Lieutenant duVal was Referee; Lieutenant Warren, of the Durhams, and Staff Quartermaster-Sergeant Cronin, Royal Dragoons, Judges; and Lieutenant Simson, Oxfords, Timekeeper.

The results were as follows:—Feather-weights—Final:—Pte. Evans, "G" Coy., defeated Pte. Nappin, "F" Coy. Light-weights—Final:—Corpl. Wooding, "G" Coy., beat Pte. White, "F" Coy. Middle-weights—Final:—Pte. Smith, "G" Coy. defeated Sergeant Ward, "F" Coy. There were also five special contests, three of which were won by "F" Coy., and one by "G" Coy., while in the remaining contest, Corpl. Smith, Oxfords, vs. Pte. Dixon, Durhams, the former was given the verdict on a foul.

"G" Coy. may be said to have won the tournament, as they secured the three cups, but "F" Coy. had the consolation of having the better of the special contests.

Ranjitsinghji may be considered as great a batsman as ever he was judging from the appended particulars which deal with his brilliant career as a first class cricketer which came to an end this season. His record is:—

An important addition to the London Zoological Society's menagerie has just been made in the shape of two specimens of the Aye-Aye, a rare lemur, which is very seldom seen alive in this country. The new arrivals are in the monkey-house, where one of the side cages has been placed at their disposal. This remarkable animal is of about the size of a domestic cat; it has a broad rounded head, a short face, and large naked ears. Its tail is long and bushy. Dark brown is the prevailing colour of its long and rather loose fur; its undercoat is woolly. To a great extent the Aye-Aye feeds on fruit, which it eats in its own way. On being given an orange it bites off a small portion of the rind, then scoops out the contents with its attenuated finger. In habits, the Aye-Aye is completely nocturnal; it lives among the branches of trees either solitary or in pairs, passing the whole day asleep in its nest of dried leaves. Although this extraordinary creature was discovered a century and a quarter ago, it was not until 1862 that a specimen reached Europe alive, to be duly exhibited by the Society. Twenty years after a pair arrived at the Gardens, only to live a short time. Then, in 1887, came another, which took very kindly to captivity, and lived upwards of nine years in the Zoo. During the whole of that time the Aye-Aye never changed its nocturnal ways. Never, by any chance, was that shy creature of the night found outside its hiding-place in the daytime.

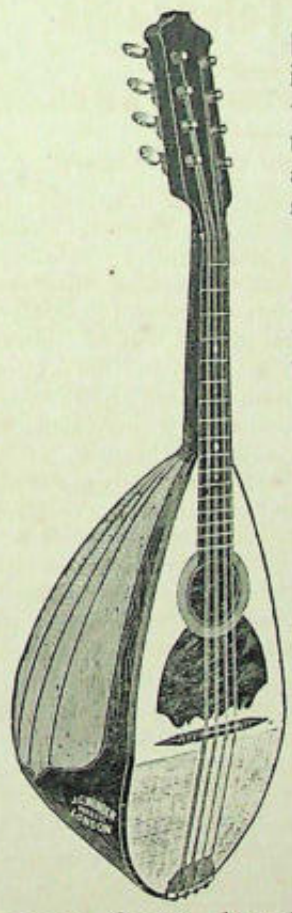
We have already given our readers the result of the fight between Nelson and Gans for the Lightweight title. We now publish full details as wired by the 'Frisco correspondent of the New York Herald.

Battling Nelson clinched his claim to the lightweight pugilistic championship by defeating Joe Gans for the second time at the Colma arena this afternoon. The fight ended in the twenty-first round, when Gans, beaten down by a succession of blows from his sturdy conqueror, failed to get on his feet within the count of ten. The veteran negro fighter was severely punished, but the champion, too, bore the marks of the battle. From the first clang of the gong to the last moment Nelson forced the fighting, never giving ground, and gradually battered down his older and less vigorous opponent.

The first round was in Gans' favour, but the second went to Nelson. He forced Gans all through, and was strong and confident, while Gans appeared worried. The third round ended in Nelson's favour, though he took many hard blows about the face. Nelson forced Gans at every stage, and badly cut the negro's nose. The fourth was about even, with Nelson carrying the fight to Gans every moment. In the fifth round Gans had the advantage, landing repeatedly without a return, and stopping Nelson's rushes. Nelson wore a smile of confidence all through the round. The sixth was even, with Nelson devoting his attention to Gans' body, and landing an occasional good blow.

Gans had a decided advantage in the seventh round, though the champion showed no ill-effects from the many stiff blows he got. Nelson came right back and took the lead in the eighth, hammering Gans's body. The ninth was also slightly in Nelson's favour. The tenth was even, but the eleventh was decidedly in Nelson's favour, and at its close Gans appeared quite tired, and his seconds worked vigorously over him. It looked at the close of the twelfth as if Nelson would win, and that it was only a question of time until he got the decision. He wore the negro down with his ceaseless rushes.

Gans held Nelson off for a time in the thirteenth, but just at the close of the round the champion landed a hard left to the mouth. Nelson was strong and confident, while Gans appeared to be tiring. The fourteenth was even, Gans taking a brace and giving as good as he took from the rushing Dane. The fifteenth was the hardest of the fight up to this time. Gans caught Nelson with a terrific right on the mouth and nose. Gans appeared tired and his blows lacked force. To the surprise of the crowd, in the sixteenth Gans rallied and battered Nelson about the face with every variety of blow, taking a good lead for the round. The seventeenth was even, and the eighteenth was slightly in Nelson's favour. Gans appeared to be tiring at the close, but rallied in the nineteenth and staggered Nelson with several hard rights, taking the lead for the round.



The tide of battle turned strongly in Nelson's favour at the close of the twentieth and it looked as if Gans would not be able to stand the pace much longer. Nelson fought like a demon landing some hard blows on Gans' face and body and defeat was written on Gans' face as he tumbled into his chair. The end came in the twenty-first round. Nelson sent in rights and lefts to the jaw which staggered Gans, and then delivered a rain of blows to the body and head. Gans sought to cover up, but Nelson rushed him to the ropes, and landed practically at will. He drove him to the ropes, Gans finally dropping to the mat more from weakness than from the force of the blows. He tried to get up within the ten seconds, but was slow and was counted out.

THE "Echo" Guide to Mussoorie is an excellent little compilation, for a copy of which we are indebted to the author, Mr. T. Kinney. It contains an amount of information on this charming hill-station and will be found most useful by visitors, especially by those who contemplate a march across the hills either eastward or westward, or a trip up to the "snows." The routes into the interior, were compiled by the author, Mr. Kinney, chiefly from notes personally made during sundry seasons survey work in the hills and up the Bhagirathi and Nilang Valleys from 1872 to 1878, amplified by information given by the late Mr. F. Wilson, the great Himalayan shikari and naturalist. Distances in and round Mussoorie are from the records of the old "Kumaon and Garhwal Party" G. T. Survey. The chapters on the settlement and land tenures, and that on walks, rides and excursions, are taken from letters to various papers at various times. The "Story of Mussoorie" is derived chiefly from Williams' Memoirs of the Dun, and was first published in 1878; it has now been supplemented by later personal information. "Business in Mussoorie," and the alphabetical list of houses have been compiled specially for this Guide.

OUR Bombay correspondent writes:—Last of the minor weekly Mounted Sports Meetings run by the Bombay Gymkhana took place last week and will be followed this week by the athletic meeting in conjunction with the final big mounted events. That the former of these will at last take place after a long lapse is a matter of great satisfaction—one hopes this is the first step of a revival which will last.

Every chair available was taken last Wednesday when the usual large numbers competed in the carefully arranged programme, the interest of which has been mainly responsible for the success of the Honorary Secretaries who have made themselves generally popular. First on the card was the ring and peg, a feat which proved most difficult and none brought off the double event though Barraclough took the ring and touched the peg, which secured him the verdict.

Try riding to a given point, dismounting and whilst holding a restive horse light a cigar, open an umbrella and remount. It is an amusing spectacle and no odds on the first arrival! Barraclough's useful pony allowed him to get away first but in a great finish Symons on a little flyer beat him at the death.

For a change the Chattie Race was for ladies, the feat of picking the chatties being simplified by the use of polo sticks. Seven competed and Mrs. Turner Green was an easy first from Mrs. Hatch and Mrs. Rumboll. We had an opportunity of seeing the new divided skirt, and the effect was far from displeasing.

The Croquet Lawn Plate was one of those exasperating affairs when the ball persists in rolling in the wrong direction and with her partner waiting the lady has to hit it back and try again, her hand about as steady as an electric bell tongue when in full swing. There were so many that it had to be run off in heats and in the final, Calt and Mrs. Nash won from Mrs. Crompton and Westropp and Mrs. Picard and Clare.

For the Hurdle Race only two ponies and two horses ran and the former being given a start never gave the horses a look in. Owen Symons on his pony took a big lead, but came back a bit at the last jump but one which he brought down. Capt Mackie took advantage of this and galloping his pony through the gap took the last jump a length behind and beat the leader in the run in.

The 116th Mahratta Band helped materially to enliven the last of a very successful series which have kept us amused and interested for so many Wednesdays.

IN comparison with the recent International matches that have of late taken place in Bombay, other cricket fixtures seem to fade into insignificance but, kia kurringa? we have nothing else but that and golf to look to for relaxation practically till the end of February. We shall begin the racing season before Xmas, but that does not give us the same daily bit of sport we get during the football period. Not that Bombay is empty though this is the time when people try and steal a week end at one of the small hill stations on the top of the Ghats which are just now so refreshing. Wood and canvas structures are springing up on the Esplanade maidan which speak of an overflow of cinematograph shows encouraged by last year's success, but this does not make up for an absolute blank in the way of what may be termed vigorous field sports. The question has frequently been brought up and suggestions have been made which promised well but we are, and are likely to be, no forrarder. I believe the proposition I spoke of last year concerning a Junior Football Tournament is likely to materialise in February and that large entries are expected including a native "bootless" team or two which will be a novelty for Bombay. Nothing further is heard of the Hockey League suggested about four years which would be far more interesting than the unimportant friendlies that take place prior to the Tournament and which would not be the walk over for military teams that the Association one is. I mention these facts in good time as people do nothing in Bombay in a hurry and I am afraid they are inclined to leave over till to-morrow what can be done to-day.

RETURNING to Cricket, the Bombay Gymkhana indulged in an interesting match with a Central India team on Saturday and Monday last which ended in the latter being saved by time. The ground was very fit and some capital exhibitions were given with the bat which is accountable for the draw. Joy, who was one of the main factors in the victory of the Presidency, captained the visiting team but did not meet with his usual success with the ball, the wicket being a batsman's.

OUR Poona correspondent writes:—Forty four Arabs being left in for the Nursery Plate on Monday it had to be divided, and as a consequence there were eight events during the day which proved exceptionally interesting and exciting. Two dead-heats in one day is a bit of a novelty and only bears out the above description of the day's sport. Quite a lot of ponies are out which we not only have not noticed as being ever prominent or giving promise of doing anything good, but have suddenly run into form and are spoken of as being smashers. Quite a few have, I believe, been on the tapis, but so far there has been nothing of an "unpleasant" description.

OF the eight events the first of the Nursery Plates came at the start and fifteen faced the starter, Amani and Muzloom the pick, the former being said to have beaten Moscow in a gallop. Whether he did or not, he was under the whip at the bend and then fell back without being able to catch Good Chance who led from the start from Orby, and these two positions were never interfered with. Good Chance first showed form in Bombay when Williams threw away a race on him, getting pipped on the post by Lookman with Taylor up after appearing to be winning easily. Turning to the second division, Real Blood was looked upon as a real good thing, as last week, but once more failed altogether to flatter, and after what one hears of his capabilities one can only suppose he is not himself, though it would have looked strange had he won after last week's performance. Establishing a commanding lead, Godolphin looked all over a winner, but from the distance Surrender came at him and a desperate chase ensued which ended in a dead heat. In the run off after the last race, Surrender made the running but was beaten from the bend onwards.

ONE of the two good races for punters was the Lilliput Handicap in which Saree was very freely backed, though Viceroy also had a strong following. It will be remembered that not long ago Viceroy fell at the bend, and the next day I was shown a none too small bit of bone that was extracted from his jaw. Though on this occasion he ran disappointingly it does not trouble him and he found a place in another event. Engine and Rufus led Saree to the distance where he and Najmi commanded the field, and at the finish Saree answering under one of Southall's strong finishes got his neck in front with Lassa finishing surprisingly strong.

THE mile and a half Bedouin Plate was a splendid race, Swalior, Dilerjung, Sialkote and Soheil being the best fancied. Sialkote made the pace for a couple of furlongs and then Antica took it up with Court Martial and Balmoral next. The latter two were done with at the five furlongs where Sialkote and Swalior came up from the rear and gave chase. At the bend Dilerjung displaced the former of these and Soheil came in behind. They made desperate efforts to catch the leader, but Kunia had ridden a more patient race than one thought him capable of and he managed to stay out. Swalior and Dilerjung dead-heated behind and had Soheil not been shut in and forced to come outside he would have troubled even the leader.

THE race of the day was the Strangers' Plate with the same two as on Saturday, Forfeit and Windy claiming all the attention, when the former who won on that occasion was actually at five pounds better terms, but on the strength of Forfeit's inability to get through he was made favourite. On this occasion there was no question of getting shut in as Forfeit made all his own running followed by Lady Metal, who though held throughout ran better than before. From just after the bend Windy put her run in and came up to them fast seemingly a clear winner on passing the post, but declared a dead-heat. The mare would have been odds on in the run-off but owners decided to divide.

IT was disappointing to see the top weight, Deenar, scratched for the Closed Race, 11-10 not being as bad as it looked considering the high scale of weights. Sher was the chosen one, a warm favourite from Minx and Ramah. Mashook led the way from Ramah and Mirdas, Minx getting jammed at the start. He, however, soon got on his legs and fell into second place at the distance where the favourite began to make his presence felt. Here also Mashook dropped back and later Minx assuming command held them safe.

SEVENTEEN out of twenty-seven went for the Arab Pony Plate and Maimoon was picked upon, Viceroy and Mutlag also having the confidence of their stables. After his last run-away win Salanic was well looked after by the handicapper but despite his 10-2 streaked away to the front and only Mutlag looked like troubling him at all. The weight began to tell towards the finish and Mutlag, driven hard by Taylor, crept up to beat him on the post by a mere head, Viceroy next.

LASTLY the Auction Plate with a strong run on Manlock, Dormant also fancied and some money for Spirea and Koko. After getting the best of them at the start Koko was this time not made too much use of and, nicely nursed by Killorn, stayed out late runs by Manlock and White Heather who passed Spirea after she had followed the winner round. We have only two days' racing left, but the season dies hard and we may expect more big fields and close finishes.

A CARD of seven events greeted us for the Eleventh Extra at Poona when the usual big attendance and fields produced some more good racing. Bond had his first outing from Hospital since his accident, his arm having been too swollen to set earlier. General regret is felt at the death of Mr. Pfaff, who owned a small string and was very popular.

THE Welter Hurdle Race had only half of those carded running and Cairnsmore was made favourite from Daroji. Daroji made the running, but at the last jump all three were level and then in the race home Cairnsmore stayed out. Daroji was the only real jumper and had he been made more use of would have gone even closer.

EIGHTEEN went for the Midget Handicap for maiden 13-3s. It was a very open betting race, fives the field with the public shying a bit at Real Blood who has let them down badly. After Brussels had made the pace, Tamim and Selection came away, but once Real Blood made his appearance all was over. After his previous inability to show up at all this easy win comes as a surprise to those who scoffed at his track form.

The Lanowli Handicap had fifteen, of which Mint was a slight favourite in another good betting race. Beyond his distance, Salanic could not go the pace beyond the bend where False Start passed him only to fall away after once more being taken along too fast. Lookman took his place and an exciting race saw him stay Company out after the latter had come all the longest way round.

A remarkable performance was put up in the Lingfield Plate when the mile Poona record was lowered. Pelargonium was made a very hot favourite from Lachlan and Jolly Abbot, who cut out the pace after giving trouble. Before the bend Whalley took the favourite to the front and won easing up in remarkably good time—1min. 42⅗secs.—which was checked by several people.

In the mile Kirkee Handicap for Arabs not winning Rs. 600, fourteen started and Ajeel was heavily backed, also Safoog and Nooman. The bad luck of Aga Shah made people sceptical about backing Ajeel who, after leading, seemed done when the whip came out on him at the entrance to the straight. He, however, answered gamely, whereas Dhafer buckled in when Robinson got to work with the result that Kamad just got the favourite there by a neck—the two being away on their own.

According to the betting, there were only two in it in the Arab Selling Plate, form pointing to Osborne, who was a bit shorter than Winter. Osborne got the best of the start, Transfer fell away and Dodger came up. Still going easy, the favourite had him set and at the finish stayed Moonim and Winter out when they came up on each side of him.

The six-furlong Newbury Plate brought the day to a close, Conscience being a decided favourite from Bucolic and Lady Metal. Bucolic jumped out to lead Dulcimer, Wolferton and Conscience. Lady Metal held the favourite out of a place, whereas Dulcimer catching Bucolic was not all out to win by three-quarters in the fine time of 1min. 15secs.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 25th September 1908.

Looking over my notes for this week's letter I find myself confronted with a difficult task. The seven days have been remarkable for a deplorable dearth of news even remotely likely to interest Indian Field readers. They will not look here for details of how the acrimonious discussion over the forbidden Eucharistic procession progresses; for while it may be edifying, aggravating, instructive or only column filling according as one views the subject, it can hardly be classed as social or theatrical and it certainly isn't sport, this exhibition of narrow mindedness, intolerance and shocking bungling. I will likewise refrain from writing more than a line or two on the Sevenoaks double tragedy—the murder of Mrs. Luard and the subsequent suicide of General Luard. The papers have dealt with the matter ad nauseam, the police have failed to trace the murderer and the murder will probably be added to the long list of criminal mysteries of recent years, and many thousands of people will continue to cherish the terrible suspicions the expression of which in the hundreds of letters received by the General led him to destroy himself.

The general slackness has given the reformer a chance of raising his head. Reform is in the air; scores of things we are told want putting right forthwith. Here, for example, is Mr. Andrew Carnegie, pausing for a moment in the act of showering free libraries upon a bewildered and ungrateful world, to tell us that it is a simple matter to abolish war. Of course, if you could alter human nature and imbue everybody with a spirit of sweet Carnegie-like reasonableness, the rest would be simple enough; but this first part of the task will, I am afraid, take a lot of doing.

Then there is disease. How shall we conquer it? Dr. Doyen, of Paris, tells us that that is another simple matter. You have in your blood certain creatures resembling jelly-fish. They are so small that you can only see them under a microscope; but whenever any germs of disease get into your system, these jelly-fish creatures fall upon them and try to devour them all. It is a pitched battle, and if the germs are very numerous, or the jelly-fish brigade is a bit out of condition, why then you get the disease. Now the doctor just wants to keep your jelly-fish brigade, your territorial army, as it were, at full strength so as to be able to repel the invaders, and—there you are. It is quite easy—when you know how to do it.

Then there is poverty. Bless you! Alderman Hartley, the Socialist candidate at Newcastle, says that it is quite easy to abolish poverty. It is just done, as you might say, with a stroke of the pen. And then there are strikes. Mr. Winston-Churchill has got a machine for abolishing strikes. All you have to do is to persuade both sides to be reasonable and to submit the matter to arbitration. Unfortunately, they won't always do that, at present: but when we have taught them—well!

I was discussing shooting matters last Sunday with a Calcutta man who has been fairly busy with his gun since "the first." The general impression appears to be that the ensuing pheasant shooting season promises to be a poor one—for wild birds at any rate and this in spite of a much finer summer than last year. But we have a number of sudden and violent changes of weather and this plays the dickens with wild birds, while, even under fairly favourable conditions, the poor alien wild bred pheasant is never at home in our "climate of weather samples." With hand-reared birds it is, of course, an entirely different matter. Enteritis—the worst of all scourges to the game-preserver—occurred in many a rearing-field during the summer, but the average results of the year will not be much below the normal. Some such outbreaks occur every season in some part of the country.

Hares and rabbits will be quite as plentiful as usual in most parts, but in the south the former suffered severely from the April snowfall. Wildfowl are about as numerous as usual.

In spite of the example set by the Hindoos and Jains, Englishmen in India steadily decline to be converted to vegetarianism, in thirty years I encountered but two—the late Mr. Sanderson of elephant-catching fame and Mr. Bryning, the speedy cyclist, once of Calcutta, now in Bombay I believe—but in London the movement is advancing in a striking manner. Mr. Eustace Miles has thousands of enthusiastic disciples, many society leaders are ardent vegetarians, restaurants which purvey nought but assorted green stuff are quite common in the West End, and the London Vegetarian Association is particularly active just now. From hors-d'œuvre to sweet it is possible to get at many places a delicate, if somewhat unsatisfying repast. Here is a sample dinner menu:—

Hors-d'Œuvre, Olives Farcis in Aspic.
Soups: Petite Marmite, Green Pea Purée.
Fish: Fried Mock Sole and Piquant Sauce.
Entrées and Savouries: Raised Pie with Salad, Protose Brawn and Salad, Egg and Tomato Vol-au-vent and new Potatoes, Grilled Mock Ham and Peas.
Vegetables: Green Peas, Spinach, Potatoes, Cabbage.
Sweets: Jellied Prunes, Banana and Pineapple with Cream, Pêche Melba. Devonshire Junket.
Dessert, Café.

It reads very well, but I must confess a trial finds me unconvinced and I am reminded of Mark Twain's famous menu, at the conclusion of which we hear the Scotchman asking "whar's your haggis" and the South Sea Islander enquiring for his "missionary."

Attention was recently called to the cruelty involved in the idiotic display at the White City in which certain luckless elephants are made to slither down the water chute as part of the "hunting scene" in the Ceylon village, and the papers have been full of protests. I witnessed the miserable performance and noted the lavish application of the burchal and the hammering and goading needed to get the trumpeting, frightened beasts to slide, or tumble down the almost perpendicular chute into the tank below, and my sympathies were with those who protested, while I reflected that if instead of this senseless finale the British public had been shown the hathis working timber or even obeying the many orders known to mahouts a good idea of their docility, intelligence and usefulness might have been given. I must say I was surprised to read the contribution to the correspondence of Mr. Dalrymple Clark, the kheddah man, who scouted the idea of cruelty and would have the public believe the luckless beasts thoroughly enjoyed the business. Of course he had not seen the turn. I note with satisfaction that the R. S. P. C. A. prosecution has resulted in fines for the trainer and attendant and the binding over of Hagenbeck, the showman. En passant I may remark that the entire Ceylon village show is utter piffle and quite unworthy of the exhibition which in other respects teems with excellent side shows.

cousin apparently makes Nigel the Marquis, and trusting to this, Dudley, under the influence of the villain Jim Callender, forges his prospective brother-in-law's name on a bill. Meanwhile, however, Bess Bissett, the music-hall star, learns of a flaw in Nigel's legitimacy, and having captured his elderly uncle, the nearest heir, appears at the welcome arranged for Nigel by the Deerminster tenantry, and instals her husband and herself in Nigel's place as Marquis and Marchioness. Dudley Gore, terrified by finding that the name he has forged is now useless, is persuaded by Callender to steal the Tower jewels, but in the attempt is shot while trying to escape, Callender securing the plunder.

Meanwhile Bess has made things impossible at Deerminster and Nigel leaves for Switzerland to seek evidence of the validity of his mother's marriage, assisted by his uncle, now sick of his wife's music-hall surroundings, and feeling the justice of his nephew's title. On his way to the hospice where he hopes to obtain this evidence, he travels up the pass with Callender. They are overtaken by a storm, and Nigel is drugged and left to die in the snow. Dorothy Gore, however, having received at the hospice a second-sight premonition of her lover's peril, hastens through the storm to his rescue, while Callender, in avoiding her sleigh, is swept by falling snow over the icy precipice, things, then, of course, reaching a happy conclusion, after a few more scenes.

From the title of the piece one is almost prepared for a high moral lesson after the manner of Father Bernard Vaughan, but there is no effort to teach or improve, it is pure melodrama, villainy triumphs through three acts, then is very properly knocked out by virtue and, as is only right in a Drury Lane piece, the plot serves as a peg on which to hang spectacular splendours, scenic sensations, thrills and surprises, and the usual comic relief is plentiful. It is, above all else, an ingenious play. And with all its conventionality, it has some original touches. The villain—as black a one as has ever trod the boards at Old Drury—instead of being the usual polished man of fashion, is a cockney racecourse sharp—and there is no long-drawn out misunderstanding between the hero and the heroine.

The authors have kept their puppets constantly employed. There is no time lost in superfluous conversation. Incident follows incident without pause. So last night's great audience, while marvelling at the spectacle, followed the action breathlessly, and in the end accorded the production the most enthusiastic of receptions. Mr. Arthur Collins has scored another big success.

Mr. Albert Chevalier as Lord Adolphus has a part which gives ample scope for his artistic and subtle methods. Mr. Lyn Harding is an admirable and convincing villain, and Mr. Basil Gill a simple honest and manly hero.

Of the ladies, Miss Eva Moore played the part of Dorothy Gore sweetly and sympathetically, at times even forcefully. Miss Marie George as Bess Bissett, the music-hall star, vulgar, revengeful, but sound and simple at heart, made the most of an excellent rôle, and special reference must be made to Miss Lucy Sibley as Bess's mother, ex-lady's maid at Deerminster, lodging-house keeper, and then mother-in-law to the Marquis pro tem.

Among the most interesting and important of next week's happenings in the world of variety is the appearance at the Coliseum of Madame Yvette Guilbert. For, on the termination of her engagement there, the famous French chanteuse bids farewell—a temporary farewell, at any rate—to the music-hall stage. When next she faces the footlights it will be in a regular theatre and in a play specially adapted from the French to suit her requirements. Whatever success she may make as an actress the recollection of her triumphs as a singer, equally great in her comic and her tragic moods, is hardly likely to be effaced. Originally seeking her material in the grimmest and most grotesque aspects of life, Madame Guilbert has now come to be recognised as the deft exponent of all that is joyous and gay. Who that has ever heard any of them can forget her "Mary was a Housemaid," "The Keys of Heaven," or "I wonder when I shall be married." Nothing could be more whimsically conceived or more fully informed with the spirit of roguish merriment.

The speedy withdrawal of "Paid in Full" at the Aldwych is a theatrical puzzle: it has run but twenty-one nights. It had a brilliant reception, it has been enthusiastically praised by critics, it is a good piece, yet it has attracted nobody and has completely failed. Possibly the British public look for character interest rather than emotion in an American play.

* * * * * *

In the heart of the theatrical manager there is rejoicing, for this promises to be a season of great prosperity.

Heroic figures are attained by Drury Lane at pantomime time, when a thousand persons are checked off nightly at the stage door, and upwards of five hundred pounds are taken in respect of a single performance.

But consider the more immediate instance of "Faust" at His Majesty's. The play has now run three weeks—the "record" three weeks' business at the theatre. It has not been an uncommon thing for applications involving two hundred pounds worth of seats to be declined of necessity at the box office in a single day. Every night the house, holding some eighteen hundred people, representing something short of four hundred pounds, is crowded.

Mr. Tree's policy has been a short life and a merry one—he reckons with a hundred nights, in fact.

But seats for "Faust" are already sold for November and December, and there is every indication of a "run" extending into February of next year.

The death of Mabel Countess Russell, former wife of Earl Russell, afterwards wife of the ex-footman Brown alias Prince Athrobold Stuart de Modena, closes a remarkable and unhappy career. The daughter of the late Sir Claude Scott, of a well-known family of bankers, she was married eighteen years ago to the second Earl Russell, whom she left soon after the wedding, making certain charges against him, and suing unsuccessfully for a judicial separation. In 1904, however, she petitioned for a restitution of rights, but no order was made.

Lord Russell afterwards eloped with the wife of a Mr. Somerville and went through a form of marriage with her in Nevada.

On his return to England two divorce decrees were pronounced, and Lord Russell served three months' imprisonment for bigamy, afterwards marrying Mrs. Somerville according to English law.

Lady Russell, who had in the meantime made a brief and unsuccessful appearance at the music-halls as a singer and dancer, then made the acquaintance of a young man who described himself as Prince Athrobold Stuart de Modena, and as a son of the Emperor of Austria. In December 1902, the "Prince" and the unfortunate Countess were married at Portsmouth. Immediately afterwards she learned that her husband was one William Brown, an ex-footman. He was sentenced to two days' imprisonment for making a false declaration to the registrar, but the couple lived together for some months until Brown's cruelty and infidelity brought the Countess again to the Divorce Court for relief.

The last news of "Prince Athrobold" was his sentence to six months' hard labour for swindling in Toronto.

The Anglo-Indian novelist, Miss Beatrice Harraden, has never written anything equal to "Ships that pass in the Night," certainly her latest effort which bears the inappropriate title of "Interplay" does not even approach it in merit. It is outrageously spun out, for though the plot is simple enough, a mass of needless and uninteresting matter is introduced, yet some of the clever character sketches and clever pictures redeem the book from complete failure and here and there we find traces of the tenderness and sympathy which recall some of her earlier and justly popular writings.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. H. Wade, late of the 90th and 53rd Regiments, a Crimea and Mutiny veteran, died at Exmouth on Tuesday, at the age of 78. He served with the 90th in the Crimean and Indian campaigns, and was present at the storming of the Redan (severely wounded); the actions near Lucknow of 21st and 23rd September 1857; Havelock's Relief of Lucknow, 25th September 1857; and subsequent defence operations in Oude.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie is once more to the front. To-day it is announced that by a gift of £250,000, he has created a fund for those who perform heroic actions in peace, in the British Islands and the waters adjacent to those islands. The sum is invested in 5 per cent. bonds, and will thus produce £12,500 a year. If any doer of heroic deeds be maimed in the act of self-sacrifice, provision will be made from the fund for his maintenance. If he die, his family will be pensioned. Doctors, nurses, railwaymen, sailors, and firemen are specially mentioned among those qualified to receive such aid from the fund, in addition to all men and women following a peaceful vocation. The scheme of administration has been submitted to and approved by his Majesty the King. It is similar in outline to the scheme by which Mr. Carnegie's fund of £1,000,000 for the encouragement of heroism in Canada and the United States is administered.

The Vagrant

Review.

MEMORIES OF AN OLD "SPORT."

"London in the Sixties," is an absorbing portrayal of sporting life about the middle of last century, and in the pages of the book many illuminating sidelights are thrown upon the doings of well-known sporting celebrities of that rather wicked era—wicked, that is, judged by latter-day standards of morals. The author, who writes with knowledge, introduces us to many personages, mostly sporting and dramatic, of that period whose names if not their figures are still familiar, and in their company we make the round of innumerable night houses, wherein these roysterers foregather and hold mad revels.

The journey to Epsom Downs then was not quite the same as it is to-day, nor were the diversions when once arrived there. "While racing men have gained by the railway's close proximity to the course," writes the author, "others are now deprived of many of the sights there used to be seen along the road. From Westminster Bridge to the historic heath was almost one continuous panorama of life, joviality, and cheer; every hedgerow was lined with open-mouthed yokels, gaping at the coves from Lunnon, of whom they had heard so much but had never before seen; every ditch supported a natural artificial cripple; every beerhouse was fronted by holiday crowds, quaffing ale and inviting you to join; and, to cap all this, the miles of vehicles, with their accompanying dust, gave everyone the complexion of chimney sweeps, despite veil, artificial nose, and other guises incidental to a real journey by road. . . .

"The party Lord Hastings had organised was a thoroughly representative one: Fred Granville, Peter Wilkinson, Ginger Durant, Fred Ellis—not yet blossomed into Howard de Walden—Bobby Shafto, The Baron, Young Broome (on duty), and a host of smaller fry, all united in one purpose, one aim—to enjoy life to its uttermost limit, and to lose not one fleeting moment of the night preceding the first summer meeting at Epsom. Booths in these wicked days were booths not devoted as now to penny shots with pea rifles, and the excitements permitted by our prudish Legislature, but receptacles of every conceivable impropriety, to recount many of which would shock the virtuous reader.

"Here were gipsies of the old, original form, who, if permitted to tell a modest girl her fortune, invariably wound up by informing her 'she'd be the mother of six;' dancing booths and tableaux vivants booths; booths where sparring and booths where drinking might be indulged in freely; booths where terrible melodramas were given, gambling booths, and thimble-rig booths; roulette and three-card establishments, where every vice come down from the days of Noah might be indulged in without let or hindrance.

"Luncheon on the Derby and Oaks days in the long-forgotten sixties was an institution that dwarfs the most ambitious displays of hampers and cold pies consumed on the tops of drags. Conceive a huge marquee with tables the entire length groaning under every delicacy, from plovers' eggs at a shilling apiece to pates and blanc-manges of the Gunter school of creation. Imagine vats six feet high around the entire walls distilling the best champagne into goblets filled by the most expert of footmen. Conceive all this, free, gratis, and for nothing by simply presenting your card with the name of your regiment inscribed. . . . Incredible as it may appear, no instance ever occurred of enterprising chevaliers entering without a right, and the delightful custom only ceased when the usages of society, the abolition of purchase, and our advanced ideas made it absolutely necessary. . . ."

The author gossips entertainingly of Prince Soltykoff and the Duke of Glasgow, of the Earl of Aylesford and Bob Villiers (a brother of the then Earl of Jersey), of Lord Alfred Paget, and Fred Gretton, and in connection with the last-named, says: "Amid this genial phalanx, no better host was to be found than genial old Fred Gretton, and it was apropos of the Cambridgeshire that the following incident occurred: 'I should like you to win a large stake,' whispered to me a jolly old squire who had been my neighbour at dinner. 'Nothing would give me greater pleasure,' I replied, 'the more so as this is positively the last meeting I am ever likely to be at before going to Gibraltar. . . . Look here, Mr. Bowden, if you can put me on to a good thing, I shall be eternally grateful.' 'I suppose you've never heard of Playfair?' inquired Mr. Bowden. 'He's Fred's horse and he's certain to win the Cambridgeshire; he's only got 6st. 3lb., the acceptances are just out, but for God's sake don't let Fred know. Now, lad, do as I tell you; I've taken a liking to you.'

"It must be admitted, I had never heard of Playfair—very few had—but acting up to the tenets I had learnt during my two years' intimacy with the late Lord Hastings, I boldly took 1,000 to 15 within the hour with the Leviathan Steel. 'What are you backing?' inquired Mr. Gretton, who at that moment came hurriedly up, and on being informed by the bookie, he turned to me and whispered into my ear, 'There's only one man could have told you, and that's that d——drunken old blackguard, Bowden. But not a word, mind you; you keep to that 1,000.' And so the kind old man toddled off. Shortly before the race, at the Bath Hotel, Piccadilly, where he always stayed in town, he inquired of the two barmaids if they would like a sovereign each on his horse; and whilst the foolish virgin expressed a preference for the coin, the wise virgin elected to be 'on,' and after the race received from the genial punter £35—a sum, considerably in excess of the price. Suffice to say, Playfair won the Cambridgeshire for Mr. Gretton in '72, and it is no exaggeration to add that his taking to racing to the extent he then did suggested the idea—afterwards elaborated—of turning Bass and Co. into a limited liability company."

Apart from the sporting side, there is much in the book to hold the attention of the social historian, for there is a great deal that is interesting concerning now-forgotten clubs and inns, and streets that once played a great part in London's social life.

SHOOTING IN COORG.

A BIG TUSKER.

It was eleven o'clock next morning before we again came up with the herd about five miles from where we had left them feeding the previous evening. Whilst carefully peering and creeping about from tree to tree trying to find the big tusker, an old cow and a calf suddenly appearing from an unexpected quarter, obtained our wind and with a trumpet of alarm the whole herd made off. A weary day's tracking now seemed in store, and disgusted by this bit of bad luck we started off in hot pursuit. After splashing for a few minutes through a piece of boggy ground, my gunbearer, who was walking just behind, suddenly caught hold of me and whispered arna (elephant). Turning round, sure enough, there is a crackling of bamboo, the jungle is parted revealing an elephant advancing towards us at a rapid pace, and not more than forty yards distant, and, yet, there is no mistaking him, I can see his long tapering tusks, it is my monster! No doubt he was some little distance from the rest of the herd when the alarm sounded, and we have got between him and his companions! We are now right in his path, a boggy swamp with high grass on either side!

There is a stout tree just on our right; quick as thought we dodge behind this. Resting the 8-bore in a forked branch I keep the sights aligned at the bump on his forehead and wait. On he comes, only twenty-five yards on now, twenty, no! a little bit closer! fifteen! The rifle rings out, a shrill scream of pain and rage, and through the curtain of smoke I see the huge form disappearing whence it came!

Why hadn't he fallen to the shot? A steady and careful aim had been taken at the right shot for the bullet to reach the brain, with the only result that he is now beating a hasty retreat on his own tracks, will not stop travelling for miles, and I shall never see him, or indeed his like again! Well, there can be no harm in following him a little way! so disconsolately pushing a fresh cartridge into the right chamber, we start off on our apparently hopeless pursuit.

Scarcely have we covered a mile, when to my intense delight, we see his massive form, rolling along slowly, very slowly in front of us, like an animated haystack. Nothing can be seen but his hind-quarters, so keeping at a respectful distance we follow slowly in his wake. We must wait for him to stop and give me another opportunity. We have not long to wait; soon he comes to a halt, and creeping up to within twenty yards, I get in a right-angle shot at his ear-hole. He staggers to the shot, but still he does not fall, and off he goes again, but slower than before. This time too had I aimed very carefully, and now come to the conclusion that there must be something wrong with the sighting of the rifle, the bullets or the powder. However, it was too late to find out the reason of my ineffective shots now; the only thing to do is to follow him up and try again! The first shot must have been very close to his brain, or he would have put miles between us by this time. Slowly we follow in his rear, increasing the distance where the ground is open, and creeping up closer where there are plenty of trees for cover.

It is some while before he stops again; but on turning a corner we see the poor brute standing beneath a large tree and with his trunk blowing earth into the bullet wound in his forehead.

Whilst picking my way through a tangle of creepers and undergrowth in order to approach close enough for another shot, one of the trackers suddenly catching hold of my arm, pulls me behind a neighbouring tree. A puff of wind has warned the animal of our presence, and quickly looking up I see the infuriated beast with head held high, and trunk curled up, but emitting no sound, charging straight back on his tracks and already not more than twenty yards from us. As we disappear behind the tree, he pulls up for a few seconds to see what has become of his relentless pursuers. Taking advantage of this opportunity, though by now quite mistrusting the rifle, another ball on the forehead at so close a range makes him right about turn and continue his retreat.

Certainly an elephant's charge made, as it is, in absolute silence, except for the snapping of a few twigs, is a most impressive sight, and had not one of the trackers kept more wide-awake than his master, the impression made on the latter would probably have been a lasting one!

During the whole of this hunt, the rain has been falling in a steady downpour.

The cartridges, which were only provided with cardboard cases, are now so wet that the only way they can be forced into the chamber, is by taking the rifle to pieces and hammering them in against the trunk of a tree; a very risky method of loading!

Soon after we see by the tracks that he has been joined by the remainder of the herd, and this fact will increase our difficulties considerably.

Just before dusk, however, the herd come to a narrow gully through a deep nullah which they have to pass in single file. I manage to get within twenty-five yards of the defile, at the same time as the rear of the procession which includes the wounded tusker.

Another shot at the ear which has no more effect than the previous ones, brings the hunt to an end for the day. Our chase had led us almost in a complete circle and finished close to where the herd had been first apropached the previous day.

All the way back to camp I heaped curses on that wretched 8 bore. It was my own fault to a certain extent for not arming myself properly before setting out on the shooting expedition. But then on the other hand not expecting to obtain permission to shoot an elephant, I came unprovided with an 8 bore. Being informed by several people that it was positively dangerous to go after elephant unless armed with such a weapon, I had at the last minute been kindly lent one; in the first place it was a smooth bore, then the bullets were not sufficiently hardened, the cartridges only contained 8 drams instead of 10 or 12 of powder, and the cases were made of cardboard instead of brass, and having become thoroughly soaked by the continual rain, the powder was probably damp.

The rifle also, as I found later, was undersighted 5 inches at a range of twenty yards. The owner afterwards informed me that his brother had killed three elephants with this weapon, but probably he was familiar with its eccentricities.

On arrival at camp, R. informed me that his 8-bore, which had gone astray in the train, had just arrived, and that he would lend it to me on the morrow.

This was good news indeed; his was a genuine rifle, provided with brass-cased cartridges, loaded with 10 drams of powder and hardened bullets.

Leaving the bungalow soon after five next morning, the track took us out of Coorg, through a corner of Malabar, and into Mysore.

The tusker's enormous footprints were nearly always on top of those of the rest of the herd, showing that he was following in rear and probably still travelling slowly.

As he was carrying four of my 8-bore bullets in his head, and I had been already after him for two days in Coorg, I felt no compunction in following him over the border into Mysore territory to finish him off; and badly wounded as he was, I think this was justifiable if only from a humanitarian point of view.

By eleven o'clock we had not come up with them, however, and the trackers wanted to give up the chase. But this I would not hear of, and kept them at it.

Another half hour rewarded our efforts, and the whole herd were found in a comparatively open "shola;" plenty of trees scattered about, but not much undergrowth.

As we crept cautiously forward we could not for some time see our wounded bull. At length he slowly came into view from some thick jungle on the flank. He towered above every other elephant by two or three feet. He appeared somewhat groggy in his movements and kept looking about him suspiciously.

Stealthily advancing from cover to cover, I had almost gained the shelter of a tree from which I could have taken a head shot at about 15 yards range, when something attracted his attention and he came straight towards me.

Being fairly caught in the open this time, I took a hasty snapshot at his head, and bolted back to the tree I had just left. The shot brought him almost to his knees, but he struggled up again, and before the smoke had properly cleared, had disappeared into the thick jungle, which surrounded the "shola," with the rest of the herd.

Another long chase seemed imminent; but now a most extraordinary thing happened! Scarcely had I reloaded and gone a few yards in pursuit, when, for some inexplicable reason, they all seemed to have been seized with some mad panic, and came straight back on their tracks to the same spot from which they had stampeded only a minute before.

There they all stood huddled up together like a crowd of enormous dummies, apparently absolutely cowed by not knowing from whence the danger threatened.

For a couple of minutes they stood like this without making a sound.

Owing to his height I could see the big tusker all the while, but he was unapproachable, being well in the centre of his companions.

At length an old cow leading the way, slowly and solemnly they began to file away one behind the other.

As it came to the turn of the wounded tusker, running out from the flank on which I was concealed, I took a steady right-angle shot at his ear and with a mighty crash my monster fell to rise no more! Knowing several well-authenticated instances of elephants getting up again and walking off after having been apparently floored, I gave him a right and left behind the shoulders, just to make certain; but he never moved again.

There at last he lay! What a hunt he had given me! To a keen sportsman what greater satisfaction is there than to see lying at one's feet some beast carrying a grand trophy the attainment of which some short time before had seemed too much to hope for or even dream of!

Those who have shot in hilly country, and have gazed through a telescope at some magnificent pair of horns, whose owner perhaps miles away perched on some craggy height or for some other reason in an unapproachable position, know well this feeling, when after days of toil, of hope and despair, the coveted prize is theirs at last!

But, yet, at times like these, when all the excitement, the doubt and uncertainty of the chase is over and its object achieved, it is impossible, if imbued with any feelings of sentiment at all, not to be touched with a pang of remorse for a harmless life destroyed to gratify an ambition and satisfy a lust for excitement!

For, no longer would this monarch of the forest, lord of a mighty herd, wander through the vast solitudes of his jungle home where he had roamed at will for close on a hundred years! It was his fate to be hunted relentlessly for three days and killed by a man armed with a heavy rifle; and in all his long life he probably had never harmed a single human being.

Of the six bullet wounds in his head, all could be seen except two on the side on which he was lying. Three of the four shots fired with the first rifle were visible, two were between four and five inches, two low, and the third, though placed a bit low also, should have killed him, but had probably not penetrated sufficiently.

His height from shoulder to sole of foot, measured with a steel tape in a straight line between upright sticks, was 10 feet 5 inches. Having read that a ten-foot elephant was rarely to be seen, I measured him four or five times to make certain that there was no mistake.

The circumference of his forefoot was 5 feet 1½ inches, which, doubled, would make his height only two inches less than it actually was.

His tusks were long and slender, their greatest circumference being 14½ inches only. Their length was as follows:—

	Outside jaw.	When extracted.
Right ...	3ft. 4½ins.	5ft. 6ins.

The pair together weighed 68lbs., most of the portion inside the jaw being hollow.

I immediately reported the circumstances of his hunting and eventual killing in Mysore territory to both the Coorg and Mysore authorities; the latter claimed the elephant, but kindly made no difficulty about allowing me to retain the trophies.

BRIDGE QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The following case occurred in a small mofussil station. Three members were playing a "three-handed game" of bridge. On others wishing to cut in, it was claimed that the table was made up for the rest of the evening and the late arrivals were refused admittance to the table. I should be glad if you would kindly give your opinion on this point of etiquette.

APPEAL

FOR FUNDS TO BUILD A HOSTEL FOR INDIANS IN CONNECTION WITH THE PASTEUR INSTITUTE OF INDIA, AT KASAULI.

SIR,—The Pasteur Institute at Kasauli for the prophylatic treatment of persons bitten by rabid animals has now been open for eight years. The number of patients who apply for treatment has speedily increased from 321 the first year, until now, when from 1,200 to 1,300 are treated annually.

For these people accommodation has to be found, as the Institute itself is practically only a dispensary where patients come daily for their doses. For all classes of Europeans and Eurasians and for poor and indigent Indians suitable accommodation is available and nothing further is required at present. But for Indians of the upper and middle classes there is no proper accommodation and they are forced to be satisfied with what is available in the serai or elsewhere in the bazaar.

On this account in the past many Indians of these classes, who have come for treatment, have been put to great inconvenience, so much so that on their departure they have promised to do all that lay in their power to forward any scheme which had as its object the provision of a suitable hostel which would be available for all castes and classes.

The Cantonment Committee of Kasauli have offered a site within easy reach of the Institute and all that is now required are funds to build.

The sum aimed at is about Rs. 15,000. With this amount sufficient sets of suitable quarters could be built and furnished, ample for the present needs of the patients attending the Institute.

I, therefore, earnestly appeal to all Indians for subscriptions for this purpose. I am certain that there are many wealthy gentlemen who are only awaiting an opportunity to help on the good work which the Institute is doing.

I shall be pleased to receive subscriptions here or they may be sent to the Bank of Bengal, Lahore, marked, "Pasteur Institute Hostel Fund."

I am,
Yours faithfully,
GEORGE LAMB, M.D., MAJOR, I.M.S.,
Director,

DARJEELING SKY RACES.

Third Day, Tuesday, 6th October 1908.

THE meeting concluded here on Saturday under the most ideal conditions. The weather was perfect, the going good, and the attendance very large. Favourites realized expectations in five of the events, and the public must have had a good day in every sense of the word, for the racing was quite tip-top and some of the finishes first class. The management of the meeting has been exactly what good management should be, and Mr. Kenneth Mackenzie and the executive are to be congratulated on the most satisfactory way in which everything has passed off. The following are the particulars:—

THE Reverend Wilson Carlile is trying to get elderly men employed as golf caddies instead of boys. He thinks they will be more suitable for the work. After hearing the kind of language used by irascible golfers, one is inclined to agree.

UNEASY PASSENGER (on ocean liner): "Does not the steamer tip frightfully?"

Steward: "The steamer does, ma'am but I don't notice as the passengers are following her example."

AFTER a brief two weeks' acquaintance he invited her to go to a football match with him.

"There's Jarvis! He's a good one. He's a splendid forward. And that's Johnson, over there. He's going to be our best man in a few weeks."

"Oh, Walter! He'll do all right," she lisped hurriedly. "But it is so sudden, dear."

LONDON, Friday, 25th September 1908.

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

THE rain that ushered in the September Meeting at Castle Irwell, and the dismal conditions that prevailed generally, are, like the fog that effectually blotted out the view of the racing, no strangers to the environment; in fact, the light was so bad that neither horses nor colours could be distinguished until within a hundred yards of the winning post. Under these conditions it was impossible to describe the races in detail. The jockeys' jackets were so bespattered with mud that it was only with difficulty that the runners-up could be given. In short, it was a typical November day, and no surprise could be occasioned when it was found that the going rode fetlock deep. Form was bound to be at a discount, favourite after favourite going down, to the consternation of layers of odds. Results :—

I wired you on Monday the result of the Prince Edward Handicap. That this race has ever the power to draw the race-loving community of Cottonpolis to Castle Irwell was again demonstrated on Saturday, when, despite potent counter attractions in the shape of the United and City football match and the clashing of Hurst Park, the attendance was larger than at the corresponding fixture last year. Of course, the delightful change in the atmospheric conditions must have been the chief influence in this direction, though naturally there were some good class horses to compete in the well-favoured handicap that was the centrepiece of the card. The effort to popularise the club is bearing good fruit, and in the enclosure both days were only the most influential patrons of racing. Results :—

BIRMINGHAM.

When the specials left town on Monday morning, rain was steadily falling, but en route to Castle Bromwich matters brightened materially, and on arriving the sun was shining with midsummer radiance. The genial weather had its influence upon the attendance, which was well up to average dimensions, especially in the minor enclosures, and the sport throughout maintained a fair standard of interest. Backers had a shade the worst of the exchanges, with only two first favourites pulling through. Results:—

LINGFIELD.

Summer lingers long in the south-faced valleys of the Surrey hills, and visitors to Lingfield on the 25th instant were surrounded by a heterogeneous scheme of colour. From the coast and the Metropolis sportsmen turned up in sufficient force to make a good attendance all round. The sky was overcast, with an absence of wind—a dull, grey September day; but it was not till visitors were en route for their homeward trains that the rain began and sent them scattering to shelter. The going was in capital order, and good fields contributed to a full afternoon's sport, from which backers came back well satisfied. Results:—

HURST PARK.

Perfect weather prevailed at Hurst Park on Saturday, and to those who had left the mirk, mud and mist of Manchester the change must have been as if they had been wafted to the Riviera. The sun blazed with Midsummer fervour, the river being gay with skiffs, cutters, and punts; the course was as fresh and green as in the spring, the going in the best possible condition, and the whole backed by noble timber as yet innocent of autumn's golden wash. The road was lively enough the specials well filled and the attendance all round must have been most satisfactory to the hard-working executive. Fields panned out well, and Higgs, with three winners, made a good upward st ride in the race for the jockey premiership. Results:—

WINDSOR.

The temperature was very close and muggy at Windsor on Wednesday, with a suggestion of a thunderstorm to balance the recent bright spell of weather, but, barring a heavy shower towards the close, which fortunately ended before a move had to be made stationwards, we got off lightly. The going was in excellent order, while a capital card attracted good fields and sport was brisk and exciting throughout. Results:—

THE STRENUOUS LIFE IN INDIA.

Is It Possible?

A want of energy and whim are characteristic traits of the white population in tropical and semi-tropical countries. It is a well established fact that this unfortunate condition is in a very large measure due to insufficient nourishment; to want of a diet that shall sustain the system under the increased demands upon the powers. Not only is the appetite feeble, but the food supplies also leave much to be desired in both quality and nutritive power as compared with the products of the temperate zone. Hence one often feels at a loss to know how to combat the depression and languor consequent on what may fairly be termed an improper diet supply. It follows therefore that the ideal remedy for physical exhaustion must be one which feeds the hungry tissues with a nutrient that is easy of assimilation, and at the same time enriches the blood and tones up the nervous system. This much-to-be-desired remedy is found in Sanatogen, the wonder-working food tonic.

Sanatogen is a scientific combination of two distinct elements, the one nutritive, the other tonic. The nutritive element is presented by pure milk albumen—the body building food, demanded constantly by the body for the repair of its tissues. Without a due supply of such food-principle, life would not continue.

The tonic element is represented by Phosphorus. The latter is an all-important constituent of the brain and the nervous system. But hitherto it has been impossible to administer this vital principal so that the nervous system could take hold of it. Dr. Andrew Wilson, the well-known medical author, writes:—"Sanatogen has solved the problem of administering Phosphorus in precisely the form in which the tissues can readily seize upon it and appropriate it to their various needs." The medical profession in Great Britain and India entertain the highest opinion of Sanatogen, which is amply evidenced by the fact that over 7,500 physicians have written in praise of it. This and the written attestations of very many distinguished men and women, whose names are well-known in the community, conclusively establish Sanatogen to be the pre-eminent recuperative and restorative.

The Rt. Rev. William Sinclair, D.D., Archdeacon of London, writes:—

THE CHAPTER HOUSE,
ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL,
London, E. C.

"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

Unlike other tonics the use of Sanatogen does not derange digestion but actually assists enfeebled appetite and strengthens the digestive organs. Its tonic effect is marvellous, and if taken regularly for a short period the feeling of being run down will be replaced by brightness, mental alertness, and healthy vigour. It differs also from other tonics in that its effects are permanent.

Mr. C. B. Fry, the celebrated cricketer, writes:—

GLENBOURNE MANOR,
WEST END, HANTS.

"Sanatogen is an excellent tonic food in training, specially valuable as a tonic during the periods of nervous exhaustion commonly called staleness, to which men who undergo severe training are liable. I have recommended it to many of my friends"

C. B. Fry.

There is no doubt that Sanatogen is the ideal food for invalids and convalescents. It can be borne by the weakest stomach when all other food is rejected. It is powerfully effective in all those cases where through illness, or overwork, or climatic conditions, the system has become debilitated. For the nervous and the dyspeptic, Sanatogen restores, naturally, sound digestion, healthy vigour, and the elasticity of well-being.

Sanatogen, which is a fine white powder, is packed in bottles, and can be obtained from all chemists.

An engrossing booklet containing matter of vital importance to well-being in the Tropics has recently been issued. It is from the pen of a physician long resident in India and is entitled "How to keep well in India." It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well. A copy can be obtained free of charge from Messrs. Smith Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, from whom also Sanatogen can be purchased.

At first it looked as if we were going to experience a stronger spell of wet than cut the sunshine out of the previous day's weather chart, but yesterday the boot was on the other leg, as a dull morning preceded a beautifully bright, still, afternoon, with such a mild temperature as postponed the adoption of the autumn overcoat. The attendance exceeded Wednesday's good muster, Tattersall's and the further enclosures being packed. Fields again ruled exceptionally strong in a disastrous afternoon for backers, outsiders again turning up in all but one event.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE tale of surprises in League football continues. Saturday furnished an important instalment, the most sensational incidents in which were provided by the First Division of the Football League. Ten games were played, and in five instances visiting clubs won, while in a sixth the game was drawn. What an upset of form. In the Second Division four teams went down at home, and two played drawn games, but in the Southern League only one success on foreign soil was recorded. The goal getters were not on their best behaviour, as the ball was netted only 83 times in the thirty games, and 16 teams failed to beat the opposing defence. It is seldom that the Southern League takes the lead in goal aggregate, but it does on this occasion, thanks principally to the deadly accuracy of the Northampton forwards.

SOUTHAMPTON'S SUCCESS.

Southampton have done what few teams are likely to do at Swindon—they took two points away. What a remarkable run of successes the six times champions of the Southern League have credited themselves with ? Six matches have yielded twelve points, and the goal tally shows 21 notches against 6. This stands out alone in the tournament to date and of the performances which make up the sum total first place must be given to the defeat of Swindon at the railway centre. Ranking next to this for merit in Saturday's games is the draw which Reading effected at Portsmouth, because this was accomplished in spite of the loss of their centre forward who had to leave the field through an accident in which his left arm was broken. As anticipated, the meeting of the champions and runners-up at Park Royal provided a dingdong struggle, and while perhaps the Rangers just deserved to win, Plymouth Argyle may consider themselves a bit unkindly treated in not sharing the points. Both Millwall and Brentford won for the first time, and the rearranged Dockers' team gave the most workmanlike display of the season, but too much importance must not be attached to this, as the opposition offered by Coventry was not up to Southern League standard.

West Ham United do not appear able to get into their stride yet, and Brentford had no more than their merits warranted in obtaining both points at Griffin Park. Crystal Palace further confirmed the good impression formed of their abilities by the handsome way in which they beat Brighton and Hove, and my congratulations to New Brompton on their win over Bristol Rovers, a result better from their point of view than was anticipated. Luton did not have anything to spare against Leyton, Exeter won their first game at the expense of Norwich City, and Watford found the Cobblers at Northampton in merciless mood, losing by 7 goals to 0.

GREAT LEAGUE STRUGGLE PROMISED

There is already promise of a sustained and engrossing struggle in the First Division of the Football League. At the moment there are four clubs that have not tasted the bitters of defeat, but most eyes are centred on Newcastle United and Manchester United, who are regarded as likely to wage a tremendous duel. It were well not to forget this is but September, and lowly placed clubs may have a lot to say later on, although present form warrants the assumption that the Novocastrians and the Mancunians are the most likely candidates for League honours. How sadly all the prophets were at fault on Saturday, Chelsea was expected to succeed at Sheffield, and the United to defeat the City at Manchester, but the victories of Leicester Fosse at Preston, and Everton at Middlesbrough are examples of football vagaries that make students of football despair. But how charming they are ! We have also Sheffield Wednesday's win at Nottingham at the express of the Forest, and the draw of Blackburn Rovers at Bury, as incidents in an afternoon that provided many thrills. There was much joy Chelsea way when the news of their brilliant win was flashed through, and the victory is all the sweeter because it had no semblance of a fluke. Keen, incisive forward work, especially by the inside men, was backed up by the halves, behind whom the backs and goalkeeper were always on the alert when occasion demanded. Woolwich Arsenal made a fine attempt to hold their own at Bristol, but despite their great exertions in the closing stages, they were beaten by the odd goal in three, a goal that ought not to have been scored, but McDonald blundered, as keepers like other players, sometimes do, and the mischief was irreparable.

LONDON CLUBS UNDEFEATED.

With the three London clubs in the Second Division on their own grounds, it was expected that a couple of the games would have been won, but Clapton Orient were somewhat disappointing and Blackpool left Millfields-road with a point to their credit. Tottenham Hotspur, in meeting Bolton Wanderers, were handicapped in having to take the field minus Vivian Woolward, whose generalship and skill are potent factors in bringing about success It was therefore all the more gratifying that the spirit of earnest determination which animated the team carried them through, although at one period of the second half the dash and persistency of the Wanderers seemed likely to prevail. There was much pretty football and much bad shooting on both sides, but these blemishes notwithstanding, the game was worth watching albeit most exhausting to the players. Fulham got no more and no less than they deserved at home on Saturday, in drawing their game with Birmingham. The visitors were better together as a team, the weakness of the Cottagers being in the attacking department. There was an apparent absence of method, both in plan and execution when the home front string was in possession, otherwise the Midlanders would not have escaped without defeat. Of the other results Derby County's win at Leeds is likely to make other aspirants for honours think furiously, while Stockport County's triumph at Bradford, Gainsborough Trinity's victory at Grimsby, and the failure of Burnley at Turf Moor against the Albion are somewhat perplexing.

GLASGOW CUP.—FIRST ROUND.

3rd Lanark (h)... ...	4	Partick Thistle ...	0
Celtic (h)	2	Queen's Park	1

Drawn games saved club records in the Scottish League competition on Saturday, and Rangers, Dundee, Hibernians, and Clyde have yet to meet with their first defeat, while at the other end of the table Third Lanark, Partick Thistle, Hamilton Academicals, and Queen's Park have not yet won a game. With the meeting of Hearts and Hibernians at Tynecastle, Edinburgh recorded its highest gate of the season—£362, representing an attendance of 15,000. On the play Hibernians were decidedly fortunate to divide the points, as the Hearts were more often the aggressors, but weak finishing lost them many chances ; in fact, it is some time since the Hearts' wing men have been seen to such poor advantage. The backs and halves played finely In the only real chance the Hibs, had Burnett scored, while the Hearts had to defend on a penalty for the equaliser.

St. Mirren have been doing such good work or late that it was not surprising that at Ibrox Park against Rangers they attracted the biggest crowd of the day in Scotland, the attendance numbering 25,000, with £675 drawn. The Paisley Club fully justified their reputation, and in drawing they did a fine day's work, this being the first point the Rangers have lost this season. As a game it was the roughest seen in Glasgow this season. The work of the referee was not easy, much of his time being taken up in awarding fouls. Both teams were equally at fault.

A marvellous exhibition of goalkeeping, including the saving of a penalty, by McKenna, allowed Falkirk to divide the points with Airdrieonians at Airdrie, a game in which the home club had by far the better of matters. At Hamilton, Lennie's fine speed was responsible for Aberdeen's victory against the Academicals, while at Greenock Dundee's display against Morton was lifeless, the front rank showing poor combination. R. C. Hamilton improved on his previous week's play for Morton, and he sent in some fine shots. On their own ground Kilmarnock had no difficulty in beating Motherwell, and here the gate was the poorest of the League games—£86.

The undecided Glasgow Cup ties ended in victories for Celtic and Third Lanark against Queen's Park and Partick Thistle respectively. The Celtic and Queen's game was refereed by Mr. J. Lewis, Blackburn, and was witnessed by about 25,000 people. R. S. McColl made his first appearance for the amateurs in a serious game, while the Celtic directors, not pleased with the play of their team against Dundee and St. Mirren, dropped both of the backs, McNair and May taking the places of McLeod and Weir. If the amateurs had been able to sustain their play of the first half in the second portion they might easily have drawn the game, but in the end superior stamina told its tale. Queen's got the first goal and it was a pretty one, McLean, from a beautiful pass by McColl, giving the Celtic goalkeeper no chance. Before the finish Kivlichan and McNenemy scored for Celtic, who in the end were easy winners, although some of the rushes and great energy of the lighter amateurs upset them for a good portion of the first half. McColl did many clever things, but is still short of training.

RUGBY RULES.

ARRIVAL OF THE "WALLABIES."—A true British welcome was accorded the Australian Awateur Rugby team which arrived at Plymouth on Saturday on the Orient liner, Omrah.

Captain McMahon, the manager of the team, who had travelled overland from Brindisi, also went out to welcome "The Boys," and in the course of a chat described the team's colours, which are dark blue throughout, with the exception of the team badge, a "Waratah" (a red, bulbous flower almost scarlet, with a long green and leafed stalk) and the letter A on the breast of the jerseys. A light blue band adorns the top of the stockings.

Captain McMahon was very reticent when asked as to the prospects of the team, his only remarks being that they had been good boys on the voyage, and in real earnest. He added with seeming confidence, "We should win more matches than we lose."

Dr. Moran, the captain of the team, stated that with the exception of Murnin, who contracted a chill in the Red Sea, and was sent back to Australia, the twenty-eight men who arrived at Plymouth had had a thoroughly enjoyable voyage. They had a fine send-off at Sydney, and at Melbourne and Fremantle, where they played games with the local Unions, they gained easy victories by 26 points to 8 and 58 points to 6 respectively. They would have played a game at Colombo, but the English Rugby Union advised them not to do so, as some of the Ceylon players were alleged to have appeared against the professional side, doubtless unwittingly. The men had kept fit by daily exercise and gymnastics on board the Omrah.

Dr. Moran said he supposed the twenty-eight players could be described as sturdy and fast. "As to our strength, we have, of course, everything to find out. We can only compare ourselves with the New Zealand side which did so well over here and whom we met in three test games, thirteen of the men who took part in the big matches on this side being included. In the first match they beat us by 11 points to 8, in the second we beat them 14 to 0, and the third was drawn, 5 points all. We were winning apparently easily until our full-back was hurt, and it was after he had left that the New Zealanders crossed our line. Our players follow the E.R.U. rules thoroughly, and we have no extra or novel positions for players."

The team was chiefly drawn from New South Wales Club, but they had representatives from all parts, including some really small clubs. Every trade and profession was, he supposed, represented in their Union, "but," he added with emphasis, "we are very particular over our amateur status. In the main we are what you might call a working-class team. We may not be so fast as the New Zealanders in the back divisions, but we are quite as active forward, and we are a young side. We have some very fast men—Carroll, Hickey, and McCabe, as examples, all of whom have done well on the path. I should say our best side will be framed something like this:—Carmichael, Hickey, Bede-Smith, Mandible and Carrol; Woods and McKivat, Barnet, Griffin, McIntyre, McCue, Burge, Bow, Richards, and Middleton. They will require some beating, being all good lads and very enthusiastic."

When it was pointed out that Dr. Moran's name did not appear in the fifteen, he modestly remarked that though he hoped to play in the major portion of the games, he thought the team was all right as stated.

As the tender cheered off from the Omrah they raised a "haka" in true aboriginal style, followed by three hearty cheers. There was a huge crowd at the landing stage, and here in a roped-off enclosure was the Mayor of Plymouth (Sir Charles Radford), accompanied by the Town Clerk (Mr. J. H. Ellis), and the members of the team were presented individually to his Worship, who expressed pleasure at being there in his official capacity to welcome them to the historic borough. As brothers from far Australia they were delighted that the team had come to Plymouth, and delighted that they had come to show good sport—and it was a noble sport. He thought it was a happy and fortunate thing that their first match was to be played in the beautiful county of Devon, and he trusted they would try to make Devon "wake up;" at any rate he would assure them that Devon would do her best to make Australia "wake up." Captain McMahon briefly responded.

SWIMMING.

THE LAST CHANNEL FAILURE OF THE SEASON.—Jabez Wolffe, the Scottish swimmer, after a magnificent effort lasting fifteen hours less five minutes, has once again failed to swim the Channel, giving up in an exhausted condition when within a quarter of a mile of the French shore. It is probable that had not Wolffe been promptly drawn out of the water by those on board the tug Sea Wolf, which accompanied him, he would have been drowned, as he was in a state of collapse.

Wolffe started his swim from Shakespeare Cliff at 6-6 A.M. on Saturday, the 19th instant and amongst those on board the tug which accompanied him was Dr. Martin Flack, of the London Hospital Medical College, who had with him a supply of oxygen to be used if necessary to enable the swimmer to prolong his effort.

It was an ideal midsummer morning. The air was wonderfully warm, and the temperature of the water was 61deg., the conditions generally being quite exceptional for the time of year. There was very little tide, so the swimmer was able to make a direct line for his objective, and swimming at a greater distance than usual from the boat, made capital progress. At 8-30 P.M. about six miles away from France, Wolffe declared himself in capital form for accomplishing his task. Off Blanc Nez, however, about five o'clock, a heavy tide began to set, and progress now was very slow. Soon, Captain Birchfield took to the small boat with Dr. Flack and his oxygen apparatus. Wolffe was not over comfortable, and oxygen was frequently administered by the doctor. At seven o'clock Wolffe was one and a half miles from the shore; but at nine o'clock he declared himself a beaten man. With only a quarter of a mile to go and to the west of Calais Pier Wolffe was helped aboard the tug thoroughly exhausted.

100 YARDS SWIMMING CHAMPION.—The 100 yards swimming championship of England was decided at the Holloway United Swimming Club's gala at Hornsey-road Baths, last night. The result was a victory for Hermann Mayboon of Brussels, who beat G. S. Dockrell (Dublin University) and P. Radmilovic (Weston-super-Mare) easily in 60 ⅘secs. The 100 yards junior championship of Islington was won by the holder, A. E. Watson (Hornsey S.C.). Miss Lilly Smith won the 100 yards ladies championship in 1m. 34⅕secs.

GOLF.

AMERICAN AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—A cable to the Athletic News, this morning states that on the Garden City Club's course, New York, the amateur golf championship of the United States was won, for the second year in succession by Mr. Jerome D. Travers, of Montclair. In the final, of 36 holes, he defeated Mr. Max H. Behr, of Morris County, a player who had never previously taken a prominent place in the competition. This result was generally expected. Indeed, the general opinion was that the match between Mr. Travers and the ex-British and American champion, Mr. Walter J. Travis, of Garden City, in the semi-final heat, settled the destination of the championship. It was a splendid game, the golf on both sides being first-class. Each player did the first 18 holes in 76 strokes—a score which by the way, Mr. Travers reproduced in the first 18 holes of the final. In the afternoon the play continued to be of a ding-dong character. Mr. Travis eventually stood 1 down with 1 to go, and, losing the home hole, he was beaten by 2 holes. In the other semi-final match the golf was not of so high a standard. At one point Mr. Behr looked like winning fairly easily, but, in the end, he could only beat Mr. Fred Herreshoff, of Ekwanok, at the thirty-seventh hole.

NEW RECORDS BY HARRY VARDON.—Harry Vardon has seldom, if ever, given a more wonderful exhibition than in the 36 holes match against Rowland Jones the Wimbledon Park professional, on the links of the Bexhill-on-Sea Club on the 23rd instant. He set up a new record for the course by going round in 66 in the morning, and he improved on those figures in the afternoon by two strokes. The feature of his play was its deadly accuracy. His driving was superb; his short iron shots have never been excelled, and, in spite of the fact that he did not get down any very long putts, the 3's and 4's followed one another in an almost monotonous sequence. Details of the scores:—

Vardon.—First Round.
Out: 344443444—34. Home: 344353433—32. Total 66.
Second Round.
Out: 344444444—35. Home: 433343333—29. Total 64.
Jones.—First Round.
Out: 444543444—36. Home: 333354334—31. Total 67.
Second Round.
Out: 345553434—36 Home: 443353434—33. Total 69.

ATHLETICS.

THE L. A. C. AUTUMN MEETING.—Stamford Bridge was the scene of the London Athletic Club's autumn meeting. There it was that the quarter mile ex-champion and British Olympic representative, E. H. Montague, covered himself with glory.

It had long been thought that, given a fitting opportunity, with fair weather and track conditions, he was capable of beating E. C. Bredin's British record of 1m. 11⅘secs. for 600 yards. Montague found everything in his favour on Saturday, and, letting himself go for all he was worth from start to finish, he fairly smothered such fine athelets as the West London lacrosse player, W. H. Gunton, and J. B. Densham, when defending his title to the 600 yards challenge cup.

Gunton made a game effort and at one time managed to gain the lead, but Montague's superior pace and stamina proved irresistible. He beat Gunton by 15 yards. Densham was five yards further off. The winner's time was 1m. 11sec. or ⅘secs. faster than Bredin's British best which had stood since 10th June 1893; ⅘secs. faster than the cup record set up by Bredin when he won in 1902; equal to the world's record of 1m. 11sec., by the American, T. E. Burke, at New York (U.S.A.), on 19th September 1896 (twelve years previously to a day); and 2sec. faster than the British professional record of 1m. 13s., which J. Nuttal let up at Manchester in 1864, and which Bredin tied, after he had turned professional in 1897.

Next in point of interest among the events at Stamford Bridge, on Saturday, was a three miles inter-club race. It ended in a tie, at 12 points each, between the Birchfield Harriers and Surrey Athletic Club. Third place was gained by the Reading Athletic Club, with 23 points. The feature of the race was the fine running of A. J. Robertson, of the Birchfield Harriers, who won in 14m. 54⅕secs.

Had only the first men scored in each event in the match between the Polytechnic Harriers and Herne Hill Harriers, at Paddington, on Saturday, the result would have been a tie; but as seconds were also taken into consideration the Herne

Hill team won by 18 points to 11. Polytechnic's four firsts were: Quarter-mile, G. Nicol. 51⅘secs.; 120 yards hurdles O. Groenings 17secs.; high jump Groening, 5ft. 8ins.; long jump (also by Groenings) 21ft. 2¼ in. Herne Hill won the 100 yards E. W. Haley, 10⅗secs.; one mile, J. E. Deakin 4m. 30⅕secs.; three miles run, Deakin, 15m. 31s.; and three miles walk, E. J. Webb 22m. 12⅗secs. Other events were included in the programme. Details :—

600 Yards Challenge Cup Race.—E. H. Montague (holder), 1; W. H. Gunton, 2; J. B. Densham, 3. Montague was first away but was passed by Gunton after covering about 50 yards. With 200 yards to go, Montague again went in front, and running strongly to the end won by dozen yards; five yards separated Gunton and Densham. Time—1m. 11secs. British record.

Two-mile Walking Handicap (open).—H. Toplis, United H., 345 yards start, 1; H. Evans, Belgrave H., 185, 2; H. Lane, Cambridge H., 250, 3; A. Jones, Met. Police A.C. 310, 4. Won easily by 65 yards; 20 yards divided next two. Time—13m. 42⅗secs.

100 Yards Open Handicap.—Winners of Heats: J. Quealy, H.H.H., 10½ yards start (time, 10⅗secs.); J. Frankin, Stanmore A.C., 6½ (time, 10⅘secs.), R. Gibson, S.L.H., 2½ (10⅘secs.); A. M. Lamburd, Tooting C.C., 9 (10⅗secs.); R. J. Dunn, L.A.C., 4½ (10⅗secs.); W. W. Martin, Highgate, 7 (10⅗secs.) F. L. Peacock, Highgate, 8½ (10⅗secs.); A. E. Racine, Highgate 10½ (10⅗secs.). Second Round.—Heat 1; R. Gibson, S.L.H., 2½, 1; A. M. Lamburd, Tooting A.C., 9, 2. Won by a foot. Time—10⅘secs. Heat 2; W. W. Martin, Highgate, 7, 1; F. S. Peacock Highgate, 8½, 2. Won by half a yard. Time—10⅘secs. Final: W. W. Martin, Highgate, 7, 1; A. M. Lamburd, Tooting A. C., 9, 2; R. Gibson, S.L.H., 2½, 3. Won by a foot; inches between second and third. Time—10⅘secs.

800 Yards Hurdles' Match on the Cinder Track 10 Flights (Amateur Record for Grass Track. 36⅗secs., by C. Groenings at Stamford Bridge, 23rd September 1907).—L. A. Burton Broughton H. (exholder of the record for the distance) 1; J. B. Densham joint holder of record for 440 yards hurdles) 2. Densham was first to show in front, but was pressed by Burton before the half distance was reached, the latter winning by 2½ yards. Time—37⅗secs.

880 Yards Handicap (Open).—Heat 1: J. W. Hall, Belgrave H., 65 yards start, 1; J. T. Blissett, Kennington H., 65, 2; M. G. Lowndes, Small Heath, 48, 3; H. C. Lee, Essex Beagles, 77, 4; H. W. Shephard, S.L.H., 55, 5. Time—1m. 57secs. Heat 2: R. W. Pattison, Blackheath H., 75, 1; E. R. Small, L.A.C., 64, 2; E. C. Wood, Essex Beagles 56, 3; M. P. S. White, Blackheath H., 30, 4; F. L. Starness, Tooting A.C., 56, 5. Time—1m. 58⅗secs. Final: E. R. Small, 1; R. W. Pattison, 2; H. C. Lee, 3; F. L. Starnes, 4. Won by a good half yard; inches between second and third. Time—1m. 55⅘-ecs.

220 Yards Open Handicap.—Winners of heats: J. Quealy, Herne Hill, 19 yards start (time—23⅕secs.); J. A. Weller, L.A.C., 15 (22⅘secs.); A. B. Horner, L.A.C., 13½ (22⅗secs.); W. W. Martin, Highgate, 12½ (22⅗secs); A. F. Newling, Essex Beagle, 21 (24secs.); R. Gibson, S.L.H., 5 (23⅕secs.); E. H. Flatt, L.A.C., 14½ (22⅗secs.) Final: W. W. Martin, 1: E. H. Flatt, 2; A. B. Horner, 3; R Gibson, 4. Won on the post: half a yard separated Flatt and Horner Time—22⅗secs

Three Miles Inter-Team Race.—Individual placings of the first six men: A. J. Robertson, Birchfield H., 1; F. A. Knott, Surrey A.C., 2; F. C. Neaves, Surrey A.C, 3; E. F. Judson, Blackheath H., 4; E. Guest, Birchfield, 5; E. V. Loney, Birchfield, 6 The Birchfield H. and Surrey A.C. tied for first place, each with 12 points. Reading A.C. were third with 28 points, and Blackheath H. fourth with 29 points. Robertson led throughout and won by sixty yards in 14m. ⅘secs. In conjunction with this event the three-miles race for the Members' Challenge Cup was decided. There were two competitors, F. A. Knott (the holder) and E. F. Judson. Knott retained the trophy. He completed the distance in 15m. 1⅗secs., which beat the previous best by exactly 17secs.

CYCLING.

MANY NEW RECORDS.—With the sun shining as in midsummer, and the atmosphere standing still, it was not surprising that distance records were well beaten at the great meeting of Olympic and other cycling champions organised by the N. C. U. at Herne Hill on Saturday afternoon.

It was indeed an ideal day for fast times, and in Leon Meredith's essay upon the ten miles motor-paced record the previous figures commenced to go in the very first mile. Travelling at a terrific pace in the wake of a high powered motor-cycle, the world's long distance champion improved handsomely upon each mile's time afterwards, with the result that on the completion of the distance Meredith had beaten the ong-standing record of 15mins. 46⅗secs. made by G. A. Olley at the Crystal Palace in 1903 by 1min. 2⅕secs.

Later in the afternoon four well-known distance riders—C. A. Denny, C. H. Bartlett (Olympic 100 kilometres winner) J. H. Bishop, and W. J. Pett—rode in a thirty miles race, a distance which was arranged with a view to eclipsing the one hour record of 29 miles 480 yards held by H. Chinn and made at the Crystal Palace in September, 1900.

Pett commenced to beat record at seven miles, and at the end of the thirty miles he had put up the fresh time of 58mins. 42⅕secs. Continuing for the hour, this speedy rider covered 30 miles 1,170 yards, and beat the record by 1 mile 690 yards.

The afternoon's sport was not without its series of spills, in which A. J. Denny, the Birmingham rider, came off worst. In a very hot finish along the home straight in the quarter-mile "dash," which was won by C. B. Kingsbury Denny came a purler on to the track. Subsequently he made his reappearance swathed in bandages, and plackily competed in the mile scratch race. He won his heat, but fifteen yards after doing so, his front tyre came off the rim, and Denny turned a complete somersault, fortunately on to the grass strip at the side of the track, and was practically untouched. His victory in the final was the most popular of the afternoon. In this race Kingsbury and Isaacs collided and fell in the straight.

A REMARKABLE MATCH.—The concluding day's play in Messrs. Burroughes and Watts's provincial tournament match at Southampton between H. W. Stevenson and T. Aiken, was resumed at the Philharmonic Hall on Saturday, before a large attendance, and those present had the satisfaction of seeing the backmarker at his very best. In addition to several minor visits to the table, he was responsible for by far the biggest break of the match, amassing a huge break of 551, which included three sequences of 48, 82 and 30 cannons. He was loudly applauded. With other breaks of 115, 117, and 42 he ran to his points. Aiken's chief contributions were 146, 79, 68, 47, 70 and 39, and at the interval the Scotsman was 683 points behind Stevenson's aggregate being 1,003, with an average of 43 19, and Aiken 22·5. Interval scores :—

Stevenson (in play)	...	...	9,168
Aiken (received 2 500)	...	...	8,485

The evening's session was resumed before a large and appreciative audience. Stevenson was in play with 551 to his credit, but he added only 3 to the afternoon total, and then a complete change came over the game, as Aiken was seen at his very best, whereas Stevenson never got going. The first visit to the table resulted in the Scotsman putting up 200 in masterly style, mostly at the top of the table Stevenson's best were 101, 98 76 and 50, but scores of 183, 180, 111 and 54 by Aiken made the score 9,615 all Then Aiken soon forged ahead, and took the score to within 30 of his points, a break of 502 being compiled by grand all-round play, and including 30 nursery cannons. After two unsuccessful visits by Stevenson the receiver of points ran out with 16, Aiken's 31 innings producing an aggregate of 1,515, with an average of 48·27. Stevenson aggregated 563 and averaged 18·5. Full scores :—

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 1st October.—Briar Shola 7 A.M. A cold bright morning, but it got almost too hot later on Some second horsemen saw a jack going in to Stokes' Shola shortly before the Master and field arrived. Hounds found him almost at once, and went off with a good cry through the right of Staircase Shola and over the neck and down Back Staircase to the Devil's Dyke and up the steep ridge between Hungerford Hill and Yemmakal Hill. They got away from the Master and the field up this steep hill, and were heading for Irwin's clump. It was a long and weary chase, and when we got to One Tree Hill, they were running hard on the other side of the Yemmakal Stream below Bacon Wood. On they went with their jack close in front of them through Briar, where he was headed and hounds threw up for a few minutes, they hit it off again and raced above the Back Staircase Road. Here again the jack was headed, causing him to turn right handed along the top of Herbert Plantation to near Staircase Shola when they turned down Back Staircase to the Devil's Dyke again, over the ridge and marked him to ground in Duff's Earth. Though it was still early in the morning, the sun was very hot and the ground dry. Hamlet, Bracken and Beadnells were drawn without result, though hounds touched a cold line several times they could make nothing of it.

Monday, 5th October.—Sandy Nullah Toll Bar 7 A.M. Three jacks had been seen on the slopes of Rocky by the syces, a couple moving off at once to safer quarters, but the third awaited the arrival of the Master and field He was found among the rocks below Rocky Covert. Going away at a great pace he pointed for Cathedral Shola, taking a line along the ridge, leaving Toda Cathderal on the right, he went to the left over the top of Waterfall Shola, crossed the Stream made for Beadnell's Estate, when he made good his escape inside the fenced-in enclosure. A long draw through Hamlet, Wenlock, the upper end of Yemmakal Valley, Briar and Herbert Plantation without success. Below Staircase, however, hounds touched a line which led them over the Sandy Nullah Stream to Rawlin's Nullah and on into Bluegums. Breaking Covert on the Rawlin's Nullah side he ran back on the line he had come, over the Sandy Nullah Stream, with the leading hounds close at him, up into Staircase Shola. He led hounds round about the Covert for some time before they finally pushed him out, when he set his mask for Bluegums again, but before reaching it he went to ground below Rawlin's Nullah, where he was killed. Though the morning was at first dull and cloudy after rain all night, it was very hot at the end of this run, so hounds were taken back to kennels.

Tuesday, 6th October.—The Lawrence Asylum 12 noon. A small field of nine turned up to meet the Master. The Principal and staff and all the small boys were also there, we were sorry the latter were not allowed to follow and see something of the hunt. The clerk of the weather was not very kind to us; no sooner had we set off down the Davashola Road, than up rolled a thick dense mist from Coonoor and rain came down, rendering the short cut from the main road down to the valley a veritable butter slide. A jack was viewed by the first whip on the slope of a small hill, hounds went off with a good cry through thick scrub, up and down unknown (to us!) ravines, watercourses and past Badaga Villages. At first the jack headed as if for Katig Village, but turned to the left and climbed up a gorge leading down from the Lawrence Asylum, and went to ground in a cave on the side of a cliff facing the railway line, about a mile below the Asylum.

This part of the country has never been hunted by the Ootacamund hounds before, consequently the jack are less fearless than their brothers of the downs and wait till hounds are close at them before they realize the situation and make off. Having got hounds out of the earth we climbed up the face of an awful hill on to the Davashola Road again and continued along it for two or three miles before turning down into the valley below. After drawing down for a mile, hounds spoke to a line and carried it slowly to the edge of a large swamp; the jack was viewed on the far side taking a leisurely look at hounds and moving off quietly in the direction of the Karteri Valley. after some delay a way was found across the bog and hounds hit off the line going off at a great pace over two ridges to the edge of the valley overlooking the ghaut leading down to Mettapallium. To our relief we saw the jack turn back up the gorge, with hounds close at him, and head for the Katy Valley. Not fancying the game at all, however, he doubled back and dived down to the bottom of the valley! slipping and sliding, we crawled down goat tracks and when we got across heard we hounds running below. They turned back and re-crossed the valley climbing up the face of a rocky hill through Coffee and ran their jack to ground in a cave under some huge rocks, about two miles from the Karteri Falls To follow hounds up the precipitous hill, through coffee bushes, drenched with rain, was anything but pleasant. But on the whole it was quite a a good day's sport. Hounds hunted well and in the valley the going was quite good. Though I have no doubt, there may be a certain number of cavillers! It was about 8 P.M. before hounds got back to kennels

Rowing.

THE ENGLISH SCULLING CAHMPIONSHIP.

FOR eight years professional sculling has been as dead as a door nail, but at length a practical attempt is being made to revive what was once one of the most famous of English sports. On Monday, 12th October, at 2-45 P.M., Ernest Barry, of England, and George Towns, of Australia, row for the English championship, £200 aside and the Sportsman Cup, value 200 guineas.

It is an important occasion for professional rowing men, as there appears to be a genuine desire amongst amateur oarsmen that the men who live by the water shall have just one more chance. If they do not accept the opportunity they alone will be blameworthy, whilst if through malpractice or unsportsmanlike conduct the amateurs become dissatisfied, as happened years ago, professional rowing will be inevitably killed for good and all. It is its last chance of revival.

WHY ROWING WAS KILLED.

The larger portion of the stake money has been provided by amateurs, whose sole ambition it is to revive the sport, and happily the two men that are to row bear unblemished reputations. It is to be a contest between an Englishman and Australian, and public interest is already aroused to such an extent that it will not be surprising if on the day of the race the towpath at Putney is thronged by as many thousands as annually journey there to witness the 'Varsity boat race—the purest of all sporting contests.

Professional rowing has been at a stands ill in England for many years, but that is entirely due to the professionals themselves. The men that supported the "pro's" became disgusted by the shafty and "crooked" methods, whilst the man who had kept the sport alive for years, the late Mr. W. J. Innes (better known as "Pegasus,") after a particularly scandalous occurrence, decided to have nothing more to do with it. Directly Mr. Innes came to such a decision the sport declined, and the race will be the first championship that has been decided in this country since 10th September 1900, when George Towns—who is to defend his title—defeated Jem Wray.

Rowing was conducted in a more or less irregular manner until 1831, when the first championship contest was decided by Charles Campbell, of Westminster, and John Williams, of Waterloo Bridge. This race was rowed in the old-fashioned wherries such as was used for conveying passengers; as was the next, in which Campbell beat Combes. Then, however, the men discovered that such cumbrous affairs were not the handiest things in which to compete for the championship, and gradually they were improved upon. The first change was to wager boats, then outriggers, and gradually to the light shell weighing about 25lb. that is now the fashion.

The Thames in those days produced all the great scullers. There was Robert Coombes—a little man, who weighed only 8st. 12lb., and was called the Little Wonder, who won the championship three times. Harry Kelley, one of the best watermen the tideway has ever produced, either as an oarsman or judge of rowing; Cole, of Chelsea, a pupil of Coombes and Messenger.

THAMES VS. TYNE.

The Thames men were pre-eminent, and nobody could beat them, but in 1859 the Tyne, which hitherto had been content with four-oared matches against the Thames sent a sculler, one Robert Chambers. He was matched againts the then champion Kelley, and much to the horror of Thames men, Kelley was beaten. The London man always said that he was not beaten on his merits, and that he was stiff and cold at the start through being kept waiting at the post. Kelley for a long time afterwards could find no backers, and in the meanwhile Tom White, of Shadwell, G. W. Everson, of Greenwich, and R. A. W. Green, the first Australian that ever went to England to row, were beaten by Chambers. Green was a powerful man, who depended entirely upon his arms. He went right away at the start, but collapsed, and Chambers won easily. This brought Kelley back into favour, for it was known that he also could defeat Green. He was again matched against Chambers, and won, and thenceforward the contests for honours lay mostly between representatives of the Tyne and Thames.

One of the men who went over was Hammill, of Pittsburg, who rowed fifty-five strokes a minute, like a windmill. Another champion of these days was J. H. Sadler, who was originally a chimney sweep. At length, in 1877, the championship of the world and of England was divided, for the Colonies were now taking a strong hand, and had won with Trickett. The Newcastle Chronicle gave a cup, which was won outright by John Higgins, a Shadwell coalheaver, after which the Sportsman presented a trophy. W. Elliott, of Blyth, a Durham pitman, gained two shares, but then came the peerless Ned Hanlon, the most finished oarsman that ever sat a boat, and with four victories, gained permanent possession in 1882.

THE CUP WINNERS.

Another cup was given by the Sportsman in 1882, and that is the trophy that Towns and Barry are to row for. It has been held in turn by the finest oarsmen—G. J. Perkins, George Bubear, the ill-fated Harry Searle, Wallace Ross, Bill East (the King's Bargemaster), Tom Sullivan, "Wag" Harding (a very small man), Stanway, Gaudaur, Bill Barry, and Towns.

Ernest Barry is an unknown quantity, for, although a powerful and able sculler, he has never yet rowed against a first-class man for an important stake; but every man has to make a start and the fact that he has the support of such good judges of pace and rowing as Mr. H. T. Blackstaffe, the Olympic champion, Sam Emmett, and Gus Brewer, all of whom are confident of his ability to win, indicates that no mistake has been made as to his ability. He comes of a rowing family. His father, Henry Barry, was a good oarsman, his brother Bill became champion of England in 1898, when, in the final of the sweepstakes, he defeated the very man that his brother is to row next month, and another brother also sculls well. Bill Barry's victory over Towns was not quite on its merits, for the Australian ran into some drift wood, and so severely damaged his boat that to avoid sinking he was compelled to pull into the towpath. A few months later Towns had his revenge, and won the championship.

ERNEST BARRY.

Ernest Barry is a strapping young man of twenty-six years and as clean-limbed and powerful sculler as has been produced, in England for years. Both below and above the bridges—which is the aquatic method of designating races decided on one or the other side of London Bridge—he has done remarkable things in handicaps from 1,000 yards to a mile. Giving away long starts, he has pulled through repeatedly, showing great pace at the finish. His most recent performance was an excellent win at Wandsworth Regatta, when, starting off the scratch mark, he defeated a big field. He trained Mr. Blackstaffe for the Olympic Sculls, and prior to entering into strict training was employed at Billingsgate Market. Work that sometimes occasioned his pulling a barge and regular hours have kept him particularly fit, and when he started training there was little superfluous flesh to take off. His boat, which has been built by Sims Brothers, who for several years past have made the racers in which the Universities compete, is 27ft. long and when after the christening ceremony this week—its name, Gertrude Charlotte, being that of his wife—Barry sculled away from Putney to his training quarters at Tom Green's establishment in Barnes, he sat her as comfortably as could be wished.

ABOUT TOM GREEN.

Tom Green is a famous man in rowing circles. He is an old Doggett's Coat and Badge winner, and has a wonderful knowledge of the river and aquatics. He will in all probability show Barry the way—that is, lie prone in the bows of the cutter, and from there direct the Englishman's course. Nobody is fitter, for he is a splendid judge of rowing In 1886, he made Bill Beach beat Gaudaur for the world's championship. Beach, who was the first man that defeated Hanlon, and won the championship seven times, was a little off colour on the day, and it was said, had indulged himself rather freely. The race was remarkable for the terrific pace at which the men went away, it being Gaudaur's intention to row his opponent to a standstill. At Chiswick, Beach led, but then Gaudaur began to go up, and shortly afterwards Beach, who suffered from "stitch," stopped, rowed out, but the pace had told upon Gaudaur as well, and the remarkable thing was seen of two men racing for the world's championship "dead to the world" at Barnes. Green saw the position and called to Beach, "Pull six strokes, Bill, he's worse than you," at which the Australian managed to creep ahead and win. Beach was a wonderful sculler. He was never defeated, and is the only man who ever rowed and won two world's championships in one week.

GEORGE TOWNS.

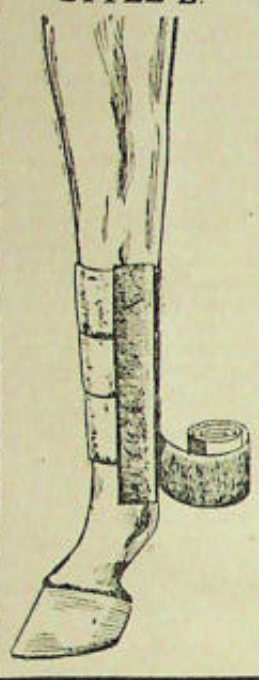
Towns is an Australian, but owing to his long stay in England and the honourable manner in which he fulfilled his engagements there, a most popular man. So far as experience is concerned he has the advantage, for he has won the World's Championship on four occasions and the English title twice. It is nearly ten years since he rowed his first race, that being the occasion already referred to, when

WINCHESTER

LIGHT WEIGHT .22 CALIBER RIFLES.

MODEL 1904
SINGLE SHOT RIFLE.

The biggest value in a gun ever offered. It is a take-down .22 caliber rifle, fitted with a heavy 21-inch round barrel, a handsome Schuetzen-shaped butt stock, and has the well-known Winchester bolt action, which has been so widely imitated. Ask your dealer about it. When you see it and learn its low price you will insist on having one.



The Model 1902 is a hammerless take-down and can be taken apart easily and quickly. It is made with an 18-inch round barrel, fitted with open front and rear sights. It shoots .22 Short and .22 Long Rim Fire Cartridges and Breech Caps. Its low price puts it within reach of all.

beaten by Bill Barry, but subsequent to that the New South Walian won all his races. He had his revenge upon Barry, and then defeated another Australian, James Wray, in easy style. Then he essayed to win the World's Championship, and travelled so far as Rat Portage, or Lake of the Woods, in Canada, where he met Jake Gaudaur, and won handsomely. He went back to England, but returning home to Australia in 1904 was challenged by Tressider for the world's title. The race took place on the Parramatta River, and Towns again won. Then a year later he was challenged by James Stanbury, the old champion, who had won the title fifteen years earlier. The race, it was thought, was a soft thing for Towns, for Stanbury when commencing training weighed seventeen stone. A tremendous worker, the veteran took off over 40lbs. in weight, and to the surprise of everybody won comfortably. Towns, it was thought, held his opponent just a little cheaply, and thought the race an easier thing than it turned out to be. A year later he turned the tables on Stanbury over the same course—the Parramatta—and then in 1907, having easily beaten Eddie Durnan, of Canada, a sculler of moderate ability, resigned the title in favour of of his brother Charles as the undefeated Beach did to Peter Kemp in 1887.

TOWNS' TRAINER.

For the race Towns is backed by Mr. Spencer Gollan, the well-known Australian racehorse owner, who in order to give him an opportunity of revisiting England cabled to him to come back there. Towns, whose wife is English, desired to see her parents again, and that is one of the reason for his return. He receives £50, win or lose, as his travelling expenses. Towns residing with his trainer, Tom Sullivan, and, by the courtesy of the committee, is training from the Thames Rowing Clubhouse. He will row in an Australian-built boat. It is two feet shorter than that used by Barry, and is that in which he defeated Durnan, the Canadian. Compared with such giants of the past as Hanlon, Beach Searle, and Stanbury, Towns is not a "great" champion, but at the same time he is a splendid oarsman. He never proved himself to be a particularly fast sculler, but is a wonderfully fine stayer, and one who won his races over the last half of the course. He has an attractive and such an effortless style of moving his boat that even experts wonder how he obtains his fine pace. Towns is a bad sailor and arrived in England unwell, but since he started strict training has come back to his old form, and although now approaching the veteran stage is sculling as well as ever. The disparity that exists in the ages and size of the two men is shown by the following table :—

	Age.	Height. ft. in.	Weight. st. lb.
Town	40	5 8½	11 2
Barry	26	6 0	11 10

The race, it should be added, is for the English Championship and must not be confounded with the world's title. If Barry wins he will be sent to Australia to challenge for it.

SHILLONG vs. CIVIL AND MILITARY POLICE.—Played on the 10th instant and resulted in a win for Shillong by four runs. With the exception of Bromhead, Gale, and Faulkner, the Police many of whom were entirely without practice, offered a feeble resistance to the Shillong bowlers for whom Moore took four wickets for seventeen runs. Seven of the Shillong wickets were down for forty-eight when Needham joined Kennedy, but before they were separated the board showed ninety. Bailey bowled with great effect, his six wickets only costing forty-five runs. Score :—

A BRIDGE-PLAYING set at one of the universities, who usually turned night into day, used to appear at morning chapel with remarkable regularity, and were pointed out as an example by the authorities. An alteration was made in the time, chapel not beginning until thirty minutes later, and the dean was astounded to see that none of these men, so regular before, was present. He sent for them and asked the reason.

"Well, sir" said one, "it is like this: when chapel was at half-past seven we could just manage it, but we can't keep awake till eight o'clock."

MUSEUM catalogues generally afford dry reading, but here is an item quite out of the common:—"The visitor's eye will be struck, on entering the room, with a porcelain umbrella"

"I SUPPOSE you know why you are here?" asked the judge severely.

"Yes, sir," answered the prisoner. "I wux dragged here."

Golf.

BOMBAY GOLF WEEK.

THE Bombay Golf Week was brought to a successful conclusion on Saturday, the 3rd instant, and the committee and management are to be congratulated on an excellent week's golf. The course was in splendid condition, the entries beat all previous records, and the competitions were all keenly contested. Proceedings opened with a scratch competition against Bogey for Seniors and Juniors. No one defeated "the Colonel" on the first day though Mr. R. P. Scott finished all square with the following score:—Mr. Scott 5, 6, 7, 3, 4, 6, 3, 3, 4=42: Bogey 5, 5, 6, 5, 4, 6, 4, 3, 4=42. But in the second round on the Tuesday Mr. Scott was 3 up with a remarkably fine round of 39, made up as follows:— 5, 5, 5, 4, 4, 5, 5, 2, 4=39. The Senior competition was thus won by Mr. Scott: Messrs. Russ and Innes Ker tied for second place.

	1st Round.	2nd Round.	Total.
Mr. R. P. Scott	all square	3 up	3 up*
Mr. C. A. Russ	3 down	2 down	5 down	†
Mr. M. Innes Ker	4 down	1 down	5 down	†

* Winner of first prize. † Winner of second prize.

No competitor can take more than one prize.

THE HANDICAP FOURSOMES.—No fewer than twenty-three couples competed. Messrs. Cargill and McKenzie led, on the first round their score being all square with Bogey but they were unable to maintain their form and finished 4 down on the second day. Messrs. Boyd and Macdonald beat Bogey by 1 up on the nine holes; as however they were 1 down on the previous day, their return for the 18 holes is "all square," and this would give them first prize but unfortunately it appears that on the second morning the wrong man drove off from the first "tee," and if this is the case, they lose every hole in the round and would, therefore, be 10 down on the two days' play. They played two steady rounds and it is unfortunate that they should be disqualified. Messrs. Tosh and Laurie with 2 down thus win the first prize, while four couples tie for the second and third prizes and will have to play another 18 holes to decide the awards. The following are results:—

IRISHMAN (to shopman): I want somethin' for mournin' wear but I don't know exactly what the coostom is. What do they be wearin' now for mournin'?

Shopman: It depends a little on how near the relative is for whom you wish to show this mark of respect. For a very near relative you should have a black suit, a black band on your hat, and black gloves. For someone not so near and dear you may have a broad band of black on your left arm, or a somewhat narrower one for somebody more distant.

Irishman: Och, is that it, Well, then, gimme a shoe-string. It's me woife's mother.

SCHOOLMISTRESS (in grammar lesson): "I didn't have no fun at the seaside.' How would you correct this Johnny."

Johnny: "Get a Sweetheart."

THE little child of the slums was enjoying her fist visit to the country and was enthusiastic in her admiration of the farmyard.

"Just look at the chickings!" she exclaimed in ecstasy. "They're all running about raw!"

THE INDIAN PHEASANTS AND THEIR ALLIES.

BY F. FINN, B.A., F.Z.S.

(Reprinted, by permission, from "The Indian Forester.")

CHAPTER IV.

THE LONG-TAILED PHEASANTS.

Of the various long-tailed types of pheasants, the true Argus is certainly the most remarkable, the genus being quite unique among birds in general. The most important characters, in addition to the bare head and long secondary quills mentioned in the previous chapter, are the rather long legs and the tail, which is folded like that of a common fowl and composed of only 12 feathers. It is only moderately long in the hen, barely exceeding the wing ; but in the cock the middle tail feathers are of enormous length, up to over four feet. In this sex also the secondary quills, which are very broad as well as long, exceed the primaries by considerably more than a foot ; even in the hen the primaries are some inches shorter than the secondaries.

THE ARGUS.

Argusianus argus:—Blanford, Faun. Brit. Ind., Birds, Vol. IV, p. 71.

Native names :—Quau, Burong quau, Kuang, Malay; Kyekwah, Siamese at Bankasoon.

The plumage of this bird would be very difficult to describe in full, but it is not hard to briefly characterize. In both sexes it is mostly of a dark brown, closely mottled with buff, the breast being of a plain bay ; the bare head is blue, and the legs red ; the cock has no spurs.

As above noted, he differs from the hen in his enormous secondary quills and central tail feathers, the latter being curiously twisted at the end. The male Argus's wing quills, also, both primary and secondary, bear the elaborate decoration which makes him one of the most wonderful birds in the world, but none of this is visible in the ordinary attitude of repose. The primary quills have a dark blue shaft, and a band of chestnut finely dotted with white alongside it on the inner web of the feather ; the secondaries have along the shafts of their outer webs a row of most beautiful eye-spots or "ocelli," shaded with ochre, drab, and white, so beautifully as to resemble balls lying in sockets, the "lights" being most artistically rendered. As Darwin has shown, on the plumage of this bird a complete gradation can be traced from these wonderful markings to ordinary spots. Another peculiarity of the male, concealed in repose, is that the lower part of the back is buff with black spots.

The male is altogether larger than the female, and his extravagant developments of plumage make him seem even bigger than he is. He is about six feet long, with a tail of over four feet ; the wing to the end of the great secondaries is nearly a yard long, but the primaries are only about a foot and a half ; the shank is four and a half inches long, and the bill rather more than one and a half. In the hen the length is about two and a half feet ; the wing a foot, and the tail an inch more ; the shank is about an inch shorter than the male's. Her general appearance somewhat suggests both a fowl and a turkey.

In our empire this bird is only found in the extreme south of Tenasserim, but it inhabits the Malay Peninsula generally, as well as Sumatra and the Laos mountains in Siam. It is a true jungle bird, confined to evergreen forest, and hardly ever seen, as it is very wary and a great skulker. There appears to be no regular breeding season, nor do the birds associate in pairs or families. The hens wander about casually, and the males remain near clearings, which each makes for himself, picking all the weeds, leaves, etc., off an area a few yards square. In this he generally lives, roosting at night on a tree close by, and going out to feed on fallen fruit and insects.

Here, too, he is too frequently captured by various poaching devices in the way of snares and deadfalls, for there is a considerable demand for his beautiful plumage. A good many birds also seem to be taken alive : they are very quiet and easy to tame.

It is in this arena, presumably, that the cock displays himself to the hen, for he has a most remarkable and elaborate display, which requires a good deal of space. This has frequently been witnessed in captivity ; I have seen it more than once myself. The cock, when at full show, spreads his wings to their fullest extent, at the same time bringing them down in front till they meet before his head, while behind they are elevated so as almost to meet in front of the raised spread tail, the whole effect being of a great, painted, almost vertical screen or fan, hiding the head and body completely. The bird, however, who is careful to have the hen in front of him, every now and then pushes his head between two of his quills to see what effect he is producing. The said effect, in the cases I have observed, was absolutely nil ; but very likely a captive hen, confined always with the male, is bored and indifferent. I did not see the peeping manœuvre on his part, but traces of its frequent performance may be found in the worn quills in skins.

The Argus does not seem to fight at all, and has been observed to give up his cherished parlour to an aggressive Fireback pheasant without a struggle ; but our old bird at the Calcutta Zoological Garden would fly at a hand presented to him, striking with bill and feet. In a wild state the males answer each other's calls. The note is a very curious one for a bird, a sort of double whoop, somewhat recalling the note of the Hoolock Apes, though not so rapidly repeated as theirs. The hen has a note of several syllables more quickly uttered, but of somewhat the same type.

She seems to lay at any time, the eggs being seven or eight in number and reddish buff in tint. Although the nest is, as usual, on the ground, the young fledge sufficiently to fly and take to a perch in a very few days.

The Argus, as it can hardly ever be seen wild, to say nothing of being shot, is rather out of court as a game-bird ; but it has considerable value as a menagerie specimen, live birds fetching about thirty rupees each in Calcutta. It seems to me, therefore, that snaring in such a way as to cause its death should be prohibited, and its capture in any way regulated, as, if preserved, the high price it fetches would render it a profit as well as harmless inmate of our jungles. It does well in captivity, and is easily tamed.

Only one other species of true Argus is certainly known, Gray's Argus (Argusianus grayi) from Borneo, which is rather smaller than our bird, but does not differ much from it otherwise.

There is in existence, however, a piece of a primary quill feather, now in the British Museum, on the evidence of which a presumed third species has been named (Argusianus bipunctatus), the double-spotted Argus. In this specimen the white-dotted cinnamon patch is found on both sides of the shaft, which is slighter than that of a corresponding quill from the common Argus. It is not known what the other feathers of this specimen were like, or where it came from, and it might have been merely a "spot ;" if so, it was certainly a progressive one, tending to greater ornamentation than the ordinary species possess.

We have next to consider the Peacock Pheasants, or Polyplectrons, which are rather small birds as pheasants go, with long legs short, rounded wings and long flattish tails, composed of as many as twenty broad rounded feathers. The upper tail coverts are also very long and broad. The general build is light, and the birds are very active. There is a bare skin round the eye in both sexes, but the female is smaller and less bright than the male, and is not spurred, whereas the male has more than one spur on each leg, whence the scientific name, which means "many spurred."

Only one species is certainly known as occurring in our empire.

THE GREY PEACOCK PHEASANT.

Polyplectrum chinquis:—Blanford, Faun. Brit. Ind., Birds, Vol. IV, p. 75.

Native names :—Paisa-walla major, Cacher Tea Garden coolies ; Munnowar, Deyodahuk, Assamese ; Deodurng, Deo-dirrik, Garo Hills ; Kut-mer, Chittagong ; Doun-kalah, Arrakan and Pegu ; Skwee-dong, Tenasserim.

The male of this species has a rather short, hairy-looking crest, always standing on end ; his tail is several inches longer than the closed wing. The general plumage is a grizzle, produced by numberless tiny cream-coloured spots on a drab ground, but the throat is pure white, and the back, wings, and tail studded with eye-spots of green shot with purple, and bordered with cream colour. "Studded" exactly represents the effect, for so beautifully shaded are these spots that they seem to stand out from the feathers like convex bosses of metal. They are round, small and single on the back and wings ; large, oval and double on the tail and its upper coverts ; in all cases being near the tip of the feather. His bill and legs are dull black, eyes white, and face pale sickly yellow.

The hen is considerably smaller than the cock, and has the tail much shorter even in proportion, this being less than two inches longer than the wing in her. In general style of plumage she resembles the male, but has a shorter crest, is duller and darker in colour, and has, instead of eye-spots, ill-defined black patches, with only a faint gloss of green. On the longest tail feathers and their coverts even these poor apologies for eye-spots are absent. Her bill, legs and face are less decided in colour, and her eyes grey.

The male is just over two feet long, with a fourteen-inch tail and wing of over nine inches ; his shanks are three inches long, provided with from one to three spurs each ; his bill about an inch and a half from corner of mouth to tip.

The hen is only nineteen inches in length, with a nine-inch tail, and wing of less than eight inches ; the shank is only about a quarter of an inch shorter than her mate's.

The Peacock Pheasant ranges from Sikkim through Assam and Burma to Siam, always keeping on or near hills, though not a bird of high elevations, as it seems not to range above six thousand feet. It frequents thick jungle on hillsides and ravines, and is very wary and hard to approach. The male has a most unpleasant call, a kind of harsh barking cackle, and will often reply to a gunshot with it. In showing off to the female he manages to display all his beauties at once, by raising one wing and lowering the other, at the same time spreading and slanting his tail, so as to exhibit all his spots on the side turned towards her. I have also seen him display frontally stooping down and spreading both wings and the tail, his crest in display is turned right forward over the bill. In captivity he is true to one mate, and she displays an interesting method of protecting her chicks, keeping her broad tail spread horizontally as a sort of natural umbrella to hide and shelter them as they follow her. They, in their turn, have the instinct to follow closely so strongly developed that when specimens were hatched under a Bantam fowl at the London Zoological Gardens, they persisted in running close behind her. In this way they got more kicks than cover, and it was not till the hen Peacock Pheasant herself hatched chicks that the habit was understood.

The eggs of the Peacock Pheasant are buff-coloured and about two inches long ; tame birds at all events only lay two. The wild ones nest about May.

It is possible that another species of Peacock Pheasant may occur in Tenasserim, since one is found in the Malay Peninsula. This is the Polyplectrum bicalcaratum, the male of which is speckled with black instead of cream-colour, and has a longer crest glossed with purple and green. The hen is also easily distinguishable by the dark instead of light speckling.

Moreover, Mr. Hume got in a Lushai village some tail-feathers like those of a third Polyplectrum, the P. germaini, whose known home is Cochin China. German's Peacock Pheasant has no rest at all ; its plumage is light speckled, but darker in tone than in our gray bird, and the eye-spots on the tail-feathers are longer. In the hen the eye-spots are better developed than in that of our species, and are found on the longer tail coverts. The males, at all events, of both these Peacock Pheasant have the bare skin of the face red, so that a red-faced Peacock Pheasant in British territory is a bird to keep one's eye upon.

These birds as a group are more interesting to the bird-fancier than the sportsman ; they are not difficult to tame the skulking habits which render them objectionable as game, being evidently the outcome of an intelligent appreciation of their circumstances, for a disposition to lay aside fear in domestication is characteristic of many birds which are inveterate in their love of cover in a wild state—the above-mentioned Argus for example. The singular and unique beauty of the males of these birds would, however, always justify the keeping up of a large stock of them as suppliers of ornamental plumes if they could be protected against wasteful destruction on this account.

The Story Teller.

THE WRONG MAN; OR, PRIVATE COLES ON BARMAIDS.

"'EARD the latest, Coley ?" said Tisher, breathlessly, as he flung himself on to a form in the canteen. "They're going to abolish barmaids."

"Strewth ! There's no end to this Government," said Private Coles. "They've got a perfect craze for doing away with things. The only hope I've got is that one day they'll make a mistake and do away with themselves.

"Well, of all the durned silly ideas this takes the cake, and what good is it going to do ? I suppose they think that a barmaid ain't got the pluck to tell a chap that 'e's the worse for drink and refuse to serve 'im, but that's all my eye. If a barman or a landlord ses I'm tight, I always ups and dots 'im one on top of the nose with a pint pot, and returns to barricks with my clothes tore to ribbons and the picquet 'anging on to odd corners of me. But, if a golden 'aired barmaid ses as 'ow I'm drunk, I always ses, 'You know best, miss,' and return to barricks on my feet, calling myself seven different sorts o' fools, and thinking of my mother.

"I 'ad a good turn done me by a barmaid once. We was stationed at Portland at the time, and Clara used to serve behind the bar of one of the snuggest little pubs it was ever my good fortune to run up against. I used to be in there pretty nearly every day with my elbows in two pools o' beer, and sipping mild-and-bitter while I gazed into 'er eyes—like poetry, ain't it ? 'Owever, I wasn't the only bloke in the crush after 'er, for Sergeant Owen 'ad hung his 'at up there, but she favoured me most, and that's where the trouble come in.

"One evening, when I was sipping my drop o' turps, she whispers in my ear : 'Mind what you're doing to-night, 'Arry,' ses she. 'I 'eard Sergeant Owen talking to the Provost Sergeant this afternoon, and, if 'e asks you to 'ave a few drinks, take care not to take too much.'

"Afore I could ask 'er what it meant, Sergeant Owen come in, and ses, "'Ullo, Coles, taken root 'ere again,' ses 'e. 'What are you going to 'ave ?'

"'Mild and bitter,' ses I. 'Same as usual.'

"'Mild and bitter be blowed !' ses 'e. "'Ave a whi-ky ?'

"So I 'ad a whisky, and no sooner 'ad I finished that than 'e asked me to 'ave another, which struck me as strange coming as it did from him. 'Owever, it was no good refusing, so I 'ad another, the best part o' which I poured into the fern-pot, as the first sip didn't taste quite right. Directly 'e saw my glass empty 'e asked me to 'ave another, and this time I saw 'im put something out of a small bottle into my whisky.

"'"Ullo,' ses I to meself, 'so that's your game, is it ?' and, while 'e was chewing the rag to Clara about 'er eyes being brighter than the stars, I gave him my glass. In a few minutes 'e was so drunk that'e couldn't tell 'is right 'and from 'is left.

"'What's this 'ere little game ?' ses I to Clara.

"'Why,' ses she, 'this afternoon I 'eard 'im tell the Provost Sergeant in a whisper that you left this 'ouse blind to the world every night at a quarter to ten, and that if 'e and his men 'appened to be round about that time there would be a little job for them.'

"'The low 'ound !' ses I. I've never done 'im any harm, so why should 'e try to get me pinched ?'

"'Oh,' ses she, 'perhaps it was because I preferred someone to him. Never you mind,' ses she. 'Look at the time. It's just a quarter to ten. Sergeant Owen, will you change overcoats with Corporal Coles ?'

"'Cert'nly, dear,' ses 'e. 'Ere, youngster, gimme your coat afore I knock your two eyes into one.'

"'With a little 'elp we managed to get 'is overcoat off for 'im, and put mine on instead, and then Clara ses : 'Will you go out and see if it's raining, Sergeant Owen, dear ?'

"'No, cheese that,' ses I. "I don't want 'im to be pinched, whatever he's done. Come 'ere, Sergant Owen,' ses I. 'You don't want to go outside.'

"'If you want your blooming nose knocked all over your face,' ses 'e, 'you're going the right way about it,' and 'e pushed past me and staggered out.

"Next moment I 'eard the Provost Sergeant say ; 'Collar that man, 'e's as drunk as a lord.' And that was the end of Sergeant Owen—'e was a private next time I saw 'im !"—John Bull.

AN American woman who recently returned from a trip to Europe says wet weather hasn't bothered this country at all in comparison with what she saw abroad. She says that they ran into a town named Venice, where the water covered every street and you couldn't get anywhere except in boats. She added : "You bet we only stayed one day in that slosh."

A STORY is told of a Dublin Castle ball, at which a young military officer went up to a pretty girl, who was seated alongside her mamma, and asked her for the next waltz. But before the bud could reply the parent stem hastily broke in : "Faith ! none of ye can dance with Molly yit awhile. I'm keepin' her cool for the Lord Liftenant !"

Two friends who had not seen each other for several years met again, unexpectedly, as neighbours in a new suburban place.

"Hullo, Bilkins ! Who are you working for now ?" asked Simkins, over the garden fence.

"Same people," was the cheery answer. "A wife and five children."

POONA RACES, SEASON 1908.

THE Poona Racing Season of 1908, which came to a close with the Thirteenth Extra Meeting on the 17th instant, will be handed down as the most successful ever experienced. There always seems to be one stereotyped way of entering upon a resumé of this description, but as the class of racing improves year by year one may perhaps be excused. The reins have been handled with no small amount of tact and judgment by Captain Hughes, who gave over to Mr. Cecil Grey after the last day, and when a permanent change in the Secretaryship is necessary we shall not be wanting for an able substitute if he is available. A certain amount of inconsistent running is unavoidable, and under this cloak there is also a certain amount of "readying" which can only be put a stop to by the enforcement of the extreme penalty, and that only when there is no shadow of a doubt. Mr. Grey arrives at a time when quite an agitation has occurred against the supposed shady deeds of one stable in particular. It has been for some time now perhaps the strongest all round stable in India. They seldom make a mistake, and when the commissioners come into the ring they are followed by half the punters there, as the track form of their horses is known by very few. With a trainer who looks after his charges probably more carefully than does any other, there are cases of improvement the genuineness of which cannot be denied. Messrs. O'Gorman and Cursetjee, as starter and handicapper, have had not a little to do with the excellence of the sport enjoyed, both usually come in for either averse criticism or none at all so that they cannot be envied their duties. Very big fields throughout have provided difficulties for both and there is every reason to expect that their energies and care will be as severely taxed in the future.

When glancing over the season's doings it is above all noticeable the success with which Mr. R. R. S.'s stable has met, not only is he first amongst winning owners but Byramjee, the trainer, is first amongst his division, Killorn is head of the jockeys and Hill (Trenby) amongst the first few, with a very long string of Arabs. Mr. Kelso is second and Mr. M. Goculdas is as usual close up and would be still closer were his interests in other directions to be taken into consideration. Amongst what we may term outside owners come H.H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala and Mr. Galstaun, well up. Whereas the former has secured two of the bonne bouches of the Meeting with old ones, the latter has had the bulk of his winning from his colt Black Wolf—by Wolf's Crag out of Belle Demoiselle. The Hon'ble Mr. Apcar has again had a couple of wins but only in the jump class through Seclusion, who could give any of the others a stone.

The last couple of years have been remarkable for the number of English horses brought out to this country, and as they have been a success these importations are likely to continue. The two that have shone most have been Black Wolf and Wise Bird, the latter finding her way to the top of the handicap in sprint events. She belongs to Mr. Kelso and is trained by Byramjee, who, I hear, is at last to pay Calcutta a visit.

A wail has gone up of late at Home about the dearth of long distance horses, and the same want is felt here. Three English horses finished in front in the important Aga Khan's Cup of a mile and a half, Black Wolf, Hunting Horn and Pelargonium. The first two of these are, perhaps, the only ones seen out who were suited by such a distance, the rest of the stayers being only really milers. Over this distance Pelargonium the latter part of the season put up a good performance by winning the Lingfield Plate in 1min. 42⅘secs. In a minor event Our State showed great improvement by capturing the mile and a half Stand Plate from the four-year-old English horse, Sugar Apple, but neither of them can be called class. Over a mile and a quarter Wandin, Absentee and The Master proved themselves best. A great upset occurred in Wandin's Western India Stakes when he beat his better fancied stable companion, the recently imported Absentee. The Master took the Stewards' Purse though he only just beat Hunting Horn giving him 9lbs.

Over a mile we have last year's record breaker, Mother Goose, securing two brackets, the Old Stand and All Horse Plates, but quite the champion of the year has been Metal Maid. Last year she came out with a remarkable sequence of wins over five and six furlongs, but on this occason she was sent over a mile and at the first time of asking won the Trial Plate from all the cracks but after that was only seen out once and may be is being kept for your edification in Calcutta. In the same stable Oakton, Posco and Lachlan have won over this distance the Visitors' Plate, Stand Plate and Monsoon Plate, respectively, so that it will be easily realised what a strong hand Mr. R. R. S. holds. Watson did not bring the pick of his stable, and those that came did not do much good except Seclusion, as mentioned, and Fireworks. This five-year-old English horse showed nothing like her real form before this but won the Criterion of seven furlongs and Autumn Plate of six in the Big Meet. Sacristan, who showed good form some two years ago, seems dead off now and the stable that owned him probably made a mistake in training him over long distances.

Turning to the sprint division, Wise Bird has already been mentioned, she won three out of four races, the August Plate of five furlongs, the Ganeshkhind Plate of six and the September Plate of six carrying 9st. 8lb. Another of Mr. Kelso's which has come on to be a very useful one up to seven furlongs is St. Patrick who used only to be considered a squib. He won the Selling and Auction Plates of six furlongs and the Final Plate of seven. Forfeit, who won in Bombay and looked like coming on, only became fit at the end when he had to put up with a defeat and a dead heat in good races with Windy in the New Lawn and Stranger's Plate. Another of Mr. Galstaun's who did some good was old Dulcimer winning the Losers. Handicap and Newbury Plate. With a bracket in the Satara Plate, Conscience otherwise disappointed, and being a blower will not stay over six. Others not in form were Uro, reputed a real good one when ready, Metal Boy, who is not a success over anything like a distance, Ianthe and Master Theo. Mr. Jiji's youngster, Bucolic, won at the first time but then did no good, but Chivalry after being a trifle unlucky to lose the Poona Plate from Killua, won the Horse Handicap.

One was glad to see the 14-2 class well represented as there is always a fear that this class will be done away with. Some remarkably fine ones are being imported. Koko in the Auction Plate beat the big horses, previously annexing the All Comers' Pony Plate. Small fields have been seen out in the jump races for these and Recovery has proved herself a great mare over the sticks, winning the Sticks Handicap, Kharakwasla Plate and Bhamburda Plate as well as showing that game has done her no harm by passing all the cracks in the flat Rosehill Plate. As patiently as they waited in Bombay, Lady Nannie's stable waited in Poona for a mile race, and after being heavily backed for the Colonial Plate she won on her head. Gun Metal showed she is still useful by placing the All Pony Plate to her credit and Cracker wound up with a win in the Pony Consolation Plate which was merely a match with Matalgia, but will presumably again take all before him up-country.

There is nothing much more to be said about the Arabs than was said at the end of last season, as form amongst the old costomers has not changed to any great extent. Bay Middleton is the same game old champion as of old. Going out four times, he won the Arab Pony Trial Plate, Wanowrie Plate and the Ghorpuri Plate running third in the half mile Lilliputs in which he got a bad start and would otherwise have won. Our old mile champion also remains as such and he, Precious, proved this in H.H. the Aga Khan's Commemoration Plate carrying 9st. 12lb. Moonib Pasha came on since last out and in succession won the Dealers' and Bedouin Plates. Others which have improved are those of Mr. Beg's stable which he only bought at the beginning of the season. Dhamas won for him the valuable Governor's Cup—he has had his name changed to Famous. Mudlool won the Maiden Plate and just missed the Arab Pony Derby after being badly left carrying 9st. 1lb, and Happy Land won him another, being one of the fastest half milers we have. Others coming on are Mumbra, who won the Arab Welter and Lawn Plate, and Salanic, coming on about 2st. walked home with the Karjat Plate and the Consolation carrying 9st. 11lb. As to those that were new in Bombay previously, the champion then, Maimoon, has gone on well with a bracket in the Beginners' Plate and a number of places; probably the most remarkable has been Sialkote, who is now quite a top notcher even amongst our best stayers. He won the Arabian and Trial Plates of seven and eight furlongs and then came out to win the big pot, the Poona Derby, to follow with the ten furlong Khandalla Plate. Jehangir has developed into a fine sprinter, running away with the Hopeful Plate and the Dealers' New Plate in the Big Meet though he has some very serious rivals. Viceroy is one of these, appropriating two races as did Mutlag. It was not till the end that Saree began to fulfil his early promise and then he won the Lilliput Plate and surprised all by coming out to beat the stayers in the last race of the Season, the Arab Plate. Purely a flier over a short distance is Mountain King and does not seem to stay even five, though ridden more patiently he should do so. Since the beginning of the season it was rumoured that Real Blood could at least hold his own with Mudlool, but only after the public had tired of wasting money on him did he show his worth, and the ease with which he then won called for no little comment. It will be interesting to watch him in Bombay. Being himself an importer of Arabs, Mr. Ali bin Talib has the advantage of having first choice of some of the best. He has been fortunate in finding his selections justified, and can boast of some of the most promising of the new ones, Meazer, Merrily, Chungiz and Lookman. Meazer won him the Arab Consolation and Chinchwad Plate, Merrily the Hopeful Plate and Newcomers' Plate, Chungiz the mile Consolation, and Lookman the Lanowli Handicap.

We find Killorn once more at the top of the Jockeys' list with a fine record, and he has frequently ridden some very great races, the sort of one he won on Sialkot when the pony had to be most carefully nursed is where he shines. He is a splendid judge of pace and would be in demand anywhere in the world. Hill being a heavy weight does not get as many chances but showed up well as much the same sort of a rider as was Williams. One was glad to see Jimmy Robinson break his run of bad luck and once more secure the public confidence. By a good bit he is the veteran of the riders, and there is no getting away from his judgment during a race or the strength of his finish which has won so many events. Southall is another of our strongest finishers, and also amongst the first few is Alf. Hoyt who gets such a number of mounts with a convenient weight.

It is in the matter of finishing that the native lads can hold their own and Heeroo, Mujeed, Kamad and C. B. Mahomed are as usual at the top though, since first showing up in Bombay, Yussuff has a couple of brackets. Evans only made his appearance at the Big Meet and following Extras and won a couple, but did not strike one as being as brilliant as before he left India after last Calcutta races.

With Mr. R. R. S. and Killorn's success Byramjee is once more top of the trainers, the way in which he wins races with all those in his stable, however hopeless they seem to be, does him the greatest of credit. He is followed by Bleach who has charge of Mr. M. G.'s string, and Thomas with Thakur Sripal Singh's has also done well.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The announcement that the training track will be open for use from the 2nd proximo brings the opening of our racing season proper into very close view again. Meanwhile the Tollygunge Club authorities have stepped into the breach with a Gymkhana meeting on the 31st, and if it is a success, of which there is little doubt there will be two more during November. As there are not likely to be very many animals ready to gallop yet, the stewards have been wise in drawing up a mixed programme comprising three races and a couple of jumping competitions. All have filled well, and though as usual there are a good many duplicate entries there are likely to be six or seven starters in each of the pony races and probably at least eight in the Autumn Plate. The class in this latter is a bit above Gymkhana level and if he runs honestly St. Victor ought to be very difficult to beat. He and Ynyslas under the terms of the race will both receive weight from Harmony and Roland, who are winners at previous Gymkhanas.

Very little progress seems to have been made with the demolition of the old Monsoon stand lately, but there is lots of time yet before 28th November and no doubt it will have disappeared by then, and the view of the new course will be uninterrupted.

We hear that Mr. Thaddeus, who is well known locally, has bought the English racehorse Bedouin with a view to running him in the Viceroy's Cup at the coming big meeting. The Bedouin is a chestnut colt by Soliman—Queen of the Plains, and is a four-year-old. He ran six times in 1906 but without success. The following year, as a three-year-old, he appeared fifteen times and scored four wins, a second and a third. His wins were the Melton Plate, 5 furlongs, at Leicester ; the Visitors' Plate (Welter Handicap), 5 furlongs, at Newmarket Craven ; the Cromwell Handicap, 1 mile, at Manchester ; and the Grosvenor Cup, 1 mile 2 furlongs, at Liverpool. He has been out on ten occasions this year, winning the Nottingham Spring Handicap, 1 mile 2 furlongs, at Nottingham, and the Derby Handicap, 1 mile 2 furlongs, at Hurst Park, and being placed three times.

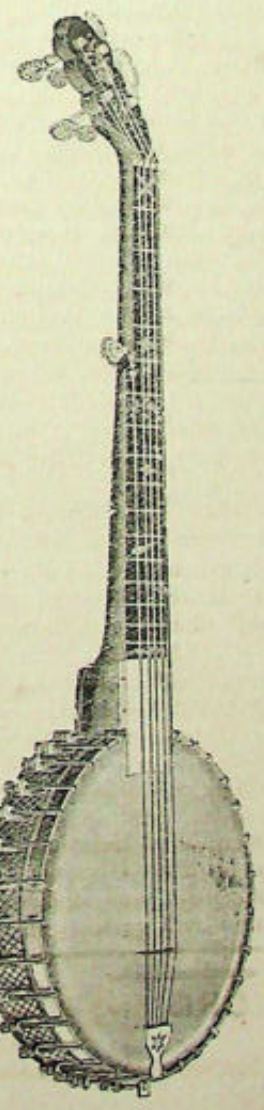
The three-year-old Mooltan, recently purchased for an Indian client by Mr. R. Baldock, won the A.J.C. Metropolitan at Randwick on the 4th instant, as will be seen by the details of the race in our Turf columns. Maranui, who subsequently won the Caulfield Cup, finished third.

There can be no doubt there has been a revival of the malpractice of doping on English courses, its frequency is now the common talk at meetings. Doping, supposed in its most poisonous form to have come in with the American invasion, had a vogue for a few years when such marvels were performed, and certain English trainers followed the example with much immediate profit.

In the old times a bottle of port or a bottle of whisky was often administered to give faint-hearted horses a bit of courage, but the evils of the new game became so manifest that the Jockey Club prohibited all stimulants, whatever the brand. And some of the brands were decidedly nippy.

Velocity, possibly the best handicap horse since Victor Wild, and the hero of two Doncaster Cups, dropped dead whilst at exercise on Saturday, the 3rd instant, at the Egerton House Stud, Newmarket, where he was standing for the first season at the stud. The cause of death was internal hæmorrhage.

Velocity was a bay horse by Speed—Ballast, bred by Mr. J. W. Corcoran, a hotel keeper at Roscrea, in Ireland, from whom the horse was purchased by Mrs. H. V. Jackson for a nominal sum. He first ran at the Manchester September Meeting in 1904, when he was among the unplaced division behind Amalgamation for the Lancaster Nursery. He ran in three subsequent races that season without, however, earning brackets. As a three-year-old the colt was very hardly worked, taking part in no fewer than twelve races during the season and being indiscriminately run over all kinds of distances in Ireland, Scotland and England. His first race at three years old he won at The Curragh over one mile, and after being twice unplaced, failed by a length to give Flax Park 17lb. in the Irish Derby. Later at Ayr he was in a similar position to Powder Puff, who gave the son of Speed 8lb. and a head beating for the Ayrshire Plate. It was in the Duke of York Stakes at Kempton Park, however, where English racegoers first had a glimpse of Velocity's real capabilities, when though by no means properly fit, he had won the race at a mile, and eventually finished a good third to Donnetta, who was conceding Mrs. Jackson's three-year-old 12lb. His prominent running at Sunbury immediately stamped him as a very likely winner of the Cambridgeshire, in which event he was weighted at 6st. 10lb. The colt was then under Dekering's charge at Newmarket, who set about preparing his charge for the big event in the Houghton Week, with the result that Velocity started a very warm favourite, and won cleverly in the hands of the apprentice, A. Templeman, from Santry, Dean Swift, and other good animals, and incidentally landed a tremendous sum in bets for his connections.



As a four-year-old, Robinson had charge of the horse for a short time, and after a failure in the Lincolnshire Handicap, he was put up for sale at Newmarket. No bid was made for him, the reserve of 5,000sovs. it was understood Mrs. Jackson had placed on him being derided. Yet subsequent events gave her the laugh of her critics. After several trainers had refused to have the horse he found a home with Mr. Peebles, that gentleman stipulating he should have full and uncontrolled liberty with the horse. From that time Velocity gradually developed his powers, till he became recognised as absolutely the best horse in training. His victories in 1906 included the Castle Irwell Handicap at Manchester, the Wellington Handicap at Sandown under the hunting burden of 10st. and the Doncaster Cup over a distance many thought he was incapable of staying.

Velocity's last season in training was undeniably his best. After being unplaced to Ob for the Lincolnshire Handicap last year, Mr. Peebles gave him a special preparation for the City and Suburban, which he won in a canter from Larino and Succour, and again netted a good stake for his connections' A few weeks later he was again well fancied for the Jubilee Stakes, in spite of a 10lb. extra for his Epsom success, being backed down to 4 to 1 against the hitherto unbeaten Polar Star to whom Velocity was set to concede 28lb. Again he put in a grand performance in finishing fourth with the burden of 9st. 12lb. His next race was the Grand Prix d'Ostende, run over a mile and three furlongs, wherein he beat some of the best Continental horses, and shortly afterwards at Goodwood, won the Chesterfield Cup from a good field, with 9st. 10lb. in the saddle.

It was at Doncaster last year, however, that he set the seal on his fame as a brilliant thoroughbred, when for the second year in succession, he won the Doncaster Cup, beating such grand stayers as The White Knight, Bridge of Canny, Radium, Torpoint, and the Chester Cup winner Querido, thus rivalling the feat of Vedette in 1857 and 1858. Although not a public fancy on this occasion, owing to a doubt about his staying the distance in such company, Mr. Peebles was nevertheless, very confident, and made no secret of the same with his friends; and the gallant son of Speed—Ballast amply vindicated the opinion of his trainer by a meritorious victory. The Doncaster Cup was his last race, and subsequently Mrs. Jackson refused an offer of 15,000sovs. for him from a Belgian breeder.

Velocity was only six years old, and his premature death, in addition to being a heavy blow to his owner personally, is a great loss to bloodstock breeders in general. We understand that the horse was insured for a substantial sum—10,000sovs., it is said—through a Dublin firm.

The Belgian Sporting world—writes the Madras Mail—is much disturbed by a Government "moral wave" of a similar kind to that which is threatening New York with the total abolition of horse racing. The Belgian Minister of Justice has issued a circular to the judicial authorities calling upon them to deal with betting as a "chance game," and to apply strictly to betting, whether done through the agency of bookmakers or by means of the pari mutuel, the laws in force against lotteries. It seems very probable that if the instructions of the circular are carried out, Belgian studowners will find themselves compelled to follow the example already set by many of their American confréres and to leave their native country and start new establishments abroad—probably in France, in this case.

The Rangoon racing community are considerably agitated. As will be seen from the report of the Eighth Extra meeting, appearing further on, the judges' decision in the Second Ahlone Plate did not meet with public approval. Captain Bush awarded the race to Lassie, but those present declare White Rose to have come in first. A meeting of stewards was held at which the judge maintained his decision and the stewards were to confirmed it. A subsequent objection to Lassie, lodged by the owner of White Rose, was not upheld. Some fifty native and Burmese owners held a meeting on the 21st instant at which it was decided to form a Horse-owners' Club, Yeo Eng Byan being elected President, Mahomed Hashim, Vice-President, Maung Nyun, Advocate, Honorary Secretary, and L. Beng Tee, Honorary Treasurer, as well as a committee of twelve.

The first Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Football Club will be held this evening, at the Saturday Club, at 9-30 P.M., to elect Officers and General Committee for the coming season.

Another good sportsman has gone the road that knows no turning. Mr. H. S. Street, of Messrs. Osler and Co., was the victim of a fatal motor accident at Rewah on the 21st inst. Mr. Street was well known in local football circles and played for the Dalhousie A.C. in 1903-04. He was one of the best goal-keepers that ever assisted the Club.

Great Britain has won the Association Football tournament in connection with the Olympic Games. On Saturday the British team met and defeated Denmark in the final round by 2 goals to nil.

The Australians won the Olympic Rugby Tournament, beating the United Kingdom by 32 points to 3 in the final tie played in the Stadium on Monday last.

The motor race for the Vanderbilt Cup took place at Long Island on the 24th instant. The course was 258 miles and there were twenty entries, an American car, the Robertson, winning in 4 hours 2 minutes and 36 seconds. The Italian Isatta car being second.

The Aga Khan Hockey Tournament will be held at Poona commencing on the 16th proximo. It is open to teams from any recognised club, civil or military; one British Cavalry or Infantry Regiment; four batteries of Artillery, combined; and British officers of any four native regiments. Entries close on 9th November, and ties will be drawn at the Poona Gymkhana the following day. Further particulars on application to Lieutenant H. N. K. Bremner, 114th Mahrattas, Honorary Secretary of the Tournament.

The annual regatta of the Rangoon Boat Club will be held on the 19th December. The programme includes the Senior and Junior Sculls, the Challenge and Scratch Fours, the Double Sculls, the Pair-Oared Race, the Ladies' Doubles, and the Mixed Doubles, the usual series of events.

The Bombay Polo Challenge Cup tournament will be held at Bombay beginning on the 16th February: a junior tournament will also be played commencing on the 1st idem.

The Polo tournament for the Begum of Bhopal's Cup held at Jubbulpore ended on Monday in a win for the 26th Light Cavalry. In the preliminary games the 26th beat the Fettesians by 5 goals to 1 and the Jubbulpore Gymkhana beat the 27th Light Cavalry by 2 goals to nil. The Central India Horse, holders of the cup, did not compete this year, nor did the Bhopal Lancers' team. The final on the 26th instant resulted in the defeat of the Gymkhana by the 26th L.C. by 11 goals to nil.

In the course of a most interesting article by "Vanoc," the well-known contributor to the Referee, under the title of "What is Luck?" the writer, with his usual broadmindedness, tolerance, and common-sense, says that "As much claptrap is talked about gambling as about temperance. Everybody gambles. The goody-goody do it in one way, other people in another. Where is the Scrunt who does not find it prudent to take the odds from that particular kind of ready-money bookmaker called an insurance company that his house will not be burnt down on one of three hundred and sixty-five days from the date of the bet? Almost every kind of business involves the study of chances, and the best business man is the best student of chances—i.e., he who knows when to increase his stake and when to cut his losses. So deeply is the question of luck bound up with the conduct of high finance that the House of Rothschild is understood always to have acted on the principle of having nothing to do with an unlucky man. In the vast field of sport one constantly meets with cases of men and animals who are so notoriously lucky or the reverse that the ancient belief in the good or evil star is accounted for if not established.

"If it were not for our belief in luck life would lose much of its savour. What is called the frightful prevalence of gambling is nothing more than insurrection against the rigidly severe and deadly conditions of monotonous industrialism. It has always been a mystery why British Governments refuse to recognise the existence of a universal passion for risking sprats in the capture of whales. In foreign countries considerable sums are easily obtained for the support of hospitals and for the relief of the poor by imposing a small toll on gambling transactions. The reason why sanctimonious counsels prevail is not because our rulers hate vice, but because they fear those of their supporters who are not sportsmen. National capital, in the form of telegraph plant and wages, is invested on every racecourse in the kingdom. As you cannot extirpate private vice by coercive laws, the wise statesman takes human nature as it is, and utilises national habits for national purposes. There can be no doubt that street betting is an evil, but if bookmakers were licensed there would be no more difficulty in stopping street betting than in preventing unlicensed hawkers from peddling their goods at the kerbstone. Perhaps Mr. Lloyd George's search after a hen-roost to rob will end in the discovery of a poultry-yard in the universal desire to try one's luck.

"After all deductions are made, however, there is a mystery about good luck and ill luck that is at present unfathomed. One man toils all day and catches nothing; another strolls to the banks of the stream of life and the fish jostle one another for the honour of taking his fly. Whether this is luck or not we cannot tell, but the elusive charm of good fortune is probably due to the fact that some of its laws are not understood."

ABOUT ANGLING.

Some fly afar to northern streams
With salmon huge abounding;
The fish I only see in dreams
They lure with skill astounding.
When I essay to cast a fly
My line gets in a tangle.
But am I bothered? No, not I,
I angle, angle, angle.

The quiet waters that I fish
Are never in a hurry;
They flow as near as I could wish
To my abode in Surrey.
And let my luck be what it may,
My bait I deftly dangle
For anything that comes my way.
I angle, angle, angle.

I envy not the football fiend
Who spurns the greasy leather;
The gentle triumphs I have gleaned
Are different altogether.
I never pant and fume and fret,
No dews my brow bespangle.
But be it fine or be it wet,
I angle, angle, angle.

The gentle river's placid face
The lilies scarcely budge on
As here I land a little dace
And there perhaps a gudgeon.
Let others golf or sail or mote,
Let politicians wrangle;
'Tis mine to watch the bobbing float
And angle, angle, angle.

Mr. Owen Williams passed away at Plas-y-Cefn, St. Asaph, early this month. The news will be received with widespread regret in sporting circles.

Mr. Williams, who was fifty-eight years of age, played a prominent part both in connection with the English Turf and the 'chase, and he was one of the finest judges of hunters and thoroughbreds in the country. His experience and acumen did much to assist the councils of the National Hunt Committee, of which body he was elected a steward last year. He never won the Grand National, but he nearly realised his ambition when his Drumcree ran second to Grudon in the great 'chase in 1901. Drumcree afterwards won the Grand National for Mr. J. S. Morrison in 1903.

Mr. J. Darling, the Australian cricketer, is leaving Adelaide for Tasmania and will probably not be seen again on the cricket field, and there is general regret at his severance from cricket in South Australia. As a cricketer Mr. Darling always exerted a strong moral influence on his comrades. A disciplinarian, he expected and exacted, as far as it was possible, in cricket, rational living, good conduct, and a proper regard for physical condition by those who played under him. As batsman in his prime, he was one of the most remarkable punishers of his or any age, and those who saw it will probably agree that no greater innings was ever played than his 160 in the final Test match of 1898 on the Sydney ground. Darling, as batsman, was greatest at the pinch. A bigger-hearted player never represented Australia, and if they produce a few young ones of his type "down under" England will not have things all her own way in the battles for "the ashes" of the near future.

Mr. Frank Finn's literary activity continues unabated one is glad to see. His Wild Beasts of the World now being produced in parts is not only fascinating in appearance but is of solid scientific value. It is quite a long time since any extensive series of coloured pictures of animals was presented to the public and all such have always been issued at high prices; but here we have a book being issued in seventeen parts at a shilling each and containing one hundred large drawings in colour by Louis Sargent, Winifred Austin and Cuthbert E. Swan. In so far as accuracy of detail and the up-to-date character of the information are concerned the treatment is scientific, at the same time the work is popularised by keeping as much as possible to such points as can be verified by any ordinary observer coming in contact with the various animals at home or abroad, by the avoidance of technical terms and of such subjects as only interest the zoological expert, and by the lively anecdotal style inseparable from all Mr. Finn's work. Parts I and II are ready : we strongly advise every reader of The Indian Field to subscribe, there has for some time been room for a new Natural History and this book, we think, quite supplies the want.

The Hon'ble Walter Rothschild has just presented to the British Museum of Natural History a unique example of a cross between the Alpine ibex and an Italian domesticated goat. The animal, a male, presents the profuse beard and shaggy coat of the ibex, combined with the peculiar white marks above the eyes and nostrils characteristic of domesticated goats. The horns are also goat-like, since they lack the knobs so conspicuous in the horns of ibex. The Alpine ibex, it may be remarked, is now extinct in the Swiss Alps and Tyrol, but survives, thanks to the protection of the King of Italy, on the Piedmontese side of the Monte Rosa. Hybrids between the Italian goat and the ibex of the same region would, it might be supposed, be met with at least occasionally, but such crosses appear not to take place except on very rare occasions.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—Following the Athletic Meeting, the first of the days of the final Mounted Sports Meeting came off on Thursday. Opposite the finishing point of most of the events a large number of chairs were set out, but nevertheless many had to stand behind, quite a bevy of beauty and fashion making up a pleasing picture. The arrangements were admirable and an evident interest was taken in the proceedings but, owing to the persistency with which the wood split, the Tent-pegging had to be postponed.

Some classy work was seen in the first of the completed competitions, the jumping, with eleven triers. Out of these Barraclough's Bernice, Steven's Donald and Captain Gordon's Woodnymph were selected to go again. Captain Graham's pony did not relish this run-off and, after pecking at the fence and gate, came down in the "in and out," his owner fortunately getting off free. Donald gave a good account of himself, but the judges had very little doubt when deciding on Bernice, who has won more than his share during the smaller meetings.

A Trotting Race was substituted for the Bending Race for ladies, though I do not know that the latter is not the more attractive. One was sorry to hear that such a good horsewoman as Mrs. Rumboll was away, whereas this event would have been a good thing for Mrs. McCausland had her mount not broken, as it was she was third in. Mrs. Pickard, on a pony who went like a show pony, was an easy first from Mrs. Hatch, with no less than ten "also rans."

Simplified by the use of polo sticks instead of ordinary ones, some of the excitement was taken away from the Chattie Race, the bowls being easily picked up. Barraclough was first away and a great race was seen as he was hotly pursued by quite a few and very nearly caught by Graham and Captain Crosse, whom we have not seen out for a long time.

One of the most amusing items one could think of was the Menagerie Stakes. The conditions of this were for the men to ride up to their partners and when standing at a distance of twenty feet imitate to the best of their ability the animal consigned to them individually. It was no easy matter for the side-saddlers as one can readily imagine the mixture of noises emitted and the contortions gone through. One standing on one leg frantically waving his arms about though making no noise, partly because he did not know the cry common to the stork and partly because he was laughing too much, another with his arm shooting out over his head and dangerously near "busting" in his attempts to trumpet, another standing on tip toe shrieking in a manner that would delight the heart of any dentist, another suffering from a fit of coughing brought on by his struggles at the crow language, another—but that will suffice to give an idea of what occurred to send everyone into fits of merriment. Mrs. McCausland soon jumped to what Barraclough meant, he being the crow, and he landed in first. As to Westropp, it was even money about a donkey or a pig, but Mrs. Blunt picked the winner, the latter, but though Priestley passed the post third his partner had failed to decipher his meaning and he was disqualified in favour of D. Graham, whose crowing was successfully interpreted by his memsahib.

We finished with the Horse Scurry, the finish of which did the handicappers credit. Carter getting a good start established a strong lead and, keeping a straight course, stayed out Priestley and Rommel, who got in a bit of a fix when he put in his rush at the finish.

On the outskirts especially, there was possibly an even bigger attendance on Saturday when a longer programme was gone through. On this occasion the Tent-pegging went off successfully and some particularly good form was shown by the winners of the event in sections of four. Scott, D. Graham, Barraclough and A. K. Graham only missed one peg in two runs.

The individual event went to Barraclough, though Froome and Savile also did well. Another good spectacular number was the Pony Jumping, which was of a high order, but it was rather surprising to see Stevens returned winner with his Donald after being unseated at the "in and out." Stileman's Lux, who has won on a former occasion, was placed second with Dunkley's Larry, and as the latter was non est for the run-off they were left as dead-heaters, though had all the three gone again it is more than probable the Joint Honorary Secretary would have pulled it off.

With one exception, the Lloyd Lindsay went to the section that won the first event. This was for sections of four to ride a given course over two jumps, dismount and knock over four cocoanuts on sticks and return. It was judged by time and dressing, and Barraclough, Stileman, D. Graham and A. K. Graham won from Captain Crosse, Symons, Froome and Franks.

The gentler sex are never great masters of either the art of throwing or of catching, and in the Ladies' Fielding Stakes they were required to ride a course and pull up before a hurdle and then to catch the tennis balls thrown over to them. More were missed than caught, though the first few in had a very fair "bag" to show. It was a good race home in which Mrs. Priestley managed to keep her lead with Mrs. Boyd and Mrs. Hatch very close together.

Second of the Ladies' events was the one in which they had to draw an animal for their partners to guess and crude as some of the attempts were, they evidently made their meaning clear in the least possible number of strokes, as half of the dozen competing got away soon after dismounting. It was quite a race home in which Williams beat Froome and Priestley, their partners being respectively Mrs. Boyd, Miss Froome and Mrs. Priestley.

Popular as ever is the old V.C. race, which had to be run off in two heats, won by Captain Crosse and D. Graham easily. In the final Scott was first after D. Graham had got there in front, and in the run in Scott won with a bit to spare from the other with Priestley third. Crosse had bad luck in that he would have made a race of it but for his pony coming down at the jump.

Lastly, owing to there being insufficient light for the Balaclava mêlée, came the Pony Scurry. It was exciting up to within half a dozen lengths of the post, Bernice slightly in front of Gimcrack and Mubarrak. Then, however, Phillips got to work on Gimcrack and showed that he had a bit up his sleeve. The order at the finish was:—

Major Kilkelly's	Gimcrack ...	Phillips	1
Barraclough's ...	Bernice ...	Owner	2
Weyman's ...	Mubarrak...	Franks	3

We regret to learn that Major T. E. W. Bidgood, 89th Co. R.G.A., met with a serious accident while playing polo at Madras last week.

The final game in the Lawley Football Cup tournament was played at Ooty on the 17th instant, and resulted in a win for the Cordite Factory, who beat the Government House team by a goal to nil.

Mr. Peet, a very diffident man, was unable to prevent himself being introduced one evening to a fascinating young lady, who misunderstanding his name, constantly addressed him as Mr. Peters, much to the gentleman's distress. Finally summoning up his courage, he earnestly remonstrated, "Oh, don't call me Peters. Call me Peet !" "Ah, but I don't know you well enough Mr. Peters," said the young lady, blushing, as she withdrew behind her fan.

An American was boasting of the terrific speed at which trains travelled in his rushing country. After telling an impossible story, an Irishman said : "An' sure, do you call that rapid ? Why, only last week I booked third class for Dublin at Belfast an' got there in a second."

"Now boys" said the teacher. "once upon a time there were two rich men, one of whom had made his fortune by honesty and industry, while the other had made his by fraud and roguery. Which of those two men would you prefer to be ?" There was a moment's hestitation, when young Solomon Isaacs inquired, "Vich made the most ?"

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 9th October 1908.

For over a week we have had a return of summer, bright blazing hot days and stifling nights, deaths from heat and furlongs of comment on these phenomenal conditions in the press. As I write it is almost oppressively warm, though probably ere this letter is half way to its destination we shall have snow. Somehow we never seem to get our fine weather when most required. The holidays were marred by much rain, fog and mist, and now we are all back with our noses at the grindstone here is autumn kicking her heels in the wings waiting for summer to finish her encore and come off the stage. This may put autumn in a bad temper and she may appear before us in tears and tantrums. Meanwhile many of us are much exercised as to how we should dress. It looks rather silly to go back to the light summer suit which one had laid aside, and yet the thicker garb of autumn is almost more than a man can bear. Curious that while our climate is so changeable most of us should be so entirely conservative.

My fixture card made Trafalgar Square the objective of my Sunday afternoon stroll there to gaze a while on the "Unemployed" demonstration. These hunger marchers took a leaf out of our Aryan brother's book and opened proceedings by actually "sitting dhurna," a form of passive resistance many of your readers know all about, I daresay. Instigated by their leader, one Stewart Gray, a hirsuite minister of the Gospel, sections of them sat down on the pavement in front of the lions and declined to budge when "lor-an-order" appeared on the scene. Then came blue coated reinforcements, mounted and foot, the squatters were dragged to their feet and hustled along, a mild riot and several arrests taking place ere the place was cleared. It was funny while it lasted, but the smile soon faded when one reflected that tens of thousands of white men, women and children in London alone are on the threshold of starvation; indeed it is quite on the cards than ere this year is out we may have serious bread riots. English people read a good deal about the poverty and distress in India, but after over thirty years residence in your peninsula and with many and peculiar facilities for observation, I incline to the belief that it is as nothing to what one may see now in England.

At last the wrecked warship Gladiator has been salved. You will recollect she was sunk in a collision with the American liner St. Paul off Yarmouth, Isle of Wight, in a blinding snowstorm. Twenty-seven officers and men were drowned. The disaster occurred on 25th April, so that the cruiser was under water for five months. For most of that time she has been in the salvage agent's constant care, tons of money has been spent on the business, and at last a weird mass of battered and patched up steel, twisted iron-work, timber cofferdams, tanks, etc., and leaking like a sieve she was safely towed into dry dock at Portsmouth and "a remarkable salvage feat has been accomplished." She is absolutely useless, no attempt is to be made to reconstruct her for further service, she is now ready for the shipbreakers. Naturally the British taxpayer enquires why this vast sum has been spent on this utterly useless experiment: the only reply seems to be that "a remarkable salvage feat has been accomplished!"

In common with many hundreds of Londoners my programme for last Saturday afternoon was knocked endways: I spent much of it in the bowels of the earth, the while I endeavoured to emulate the linguistic flights attributed to the army in Flanders. It happened thus. While scores of trains were bearing people homewards or to football grounds and what not, there was a sudden and prolonged halt and we were left in total darkness. An accident—in itself not at all alarming—had occurred at the generating station at Chelsea, a short circuit automatically cutting of the current from the lines and stopping all the trains. The railways affected were:—The District, Bakerloo, Charing Cross and Hampstead, Piccadilly and Brompton. Some of the trains were in the stations at the time of the stoppage, others were just outside, and many were in the various tunnels. This was at a few minutes to three o'clock.

After a while a mild panic ensued and eventually, by groping along the lines, personally conducted by the guards—my train was between stations—we found daylight and Baker Street. This is the second contretemps of the kind this summer.

It hardly needed the issue of the annual report of the Commissioner of Police to assures us that the dangers of London Streets steadily increase, yet the report is not without interest. We learn that during the past year there has been an appalling rise in the figures dealing with accidents causing death and injury. There were 16,772 cases of injury and 283 deaths or an average of nearly 47 fatalities or serious accidents per diem. The increase is, of course, due entirely to motor vehicles of all classes, these death dealing engines accounted for nearly 4,000 of the accidents. How many fatalities are traceable to motors throughout the whole of India in a year—probably not five; how many injuries to the public—probably not ten.

Closely adhering to the hard-and-fast lines of twencent musical comedy, Messrs. G. P. Huntley and Herbert Clayton have given us a bright and amusing thing in the "Hon'ble Phil," put on at the Hicks last Monday and fairly well received. There are pretty scenery, and pretty dresses, pretty music, pretty faces and shapely legs galore, and these be the pillars of musical comedy surelie. We are introduced to an imaginary island of France called Mont St. Angelo—one of those pleasant places where the inhabitants never appear to do any work, dress in most picturesque if highly impracticable clothes, and burst gaily into song on the slightest excuse. The peculiarity of St. Angelo is that all visitors are fined heavily unless they adopt the native costume. But this little fad on the part of the island's government is chiefly used to introduce comic situations. The real "plot" concerns the love affair of Marie Marinet, the daughter of a Paris chocolate manufacturer, and captain Jules de Valery. Marie begins by mistaking the gallant captain for a poor boatman, and considering the eccentric nature of De Valery's garb, the fair lady's mistake is perfectly natural. None the less she promptly falls in love with him, and anxious to make sure of being loved for himself and not for his money—rather an unnecessary precaution it would seem, since Marie's father is a millionaire—De Valery undergoes many discomforts in order that she may remain undeceived in her idea as to his social position. All goes well when papa's back is turned and the lovers make musical love whenever the comic people and the chorus allow them the use of the stage. And when it becomes necessary to let the audience depart, if it is to catch the last train three or four words of explanation set things right. Such is the plot.

But where, you will ask, does the Honourable Phil come in? Well, although he has a love affair of his own with Marie's pretty cousin, he chiefly comes in to soliloquise to the audience. But since he is played by Mr. G. P. Huntley, he comes in very often—which is not only right and proper, but vastly entertaining. In point of fact, "The Hon'ble Phil" is chiefly a series of "turns"—now a duet, now a song, now a few minutes of what is known in music-hall parlance as "cross-patter." Most of the dialogue is of a nature that may, perhaps, best be described as Huntley "gag." It is not exactly wit or humour, but rather a series of jokes, some small, some huge, and at least it kept the audience continually giggling, and sometimes caused a roar.

Mr. G. P. Huntley has written for himself a typical Huntley part—so Huntley indeed that he at times almost caricatures his own quaint peculiarities. He is the usual languid, blasè swell—that wicked libel on an English aristocrat—and he makes every point with effect. Then there is Miss Denise Orme as sweet Marie, radiant in all sorts of attractive costumes, from a bathing dress to the latest thing from Paris. Then there is Mr. O. B. Clarence as Monsieur Marinet, to be as amusing as he always is in an old man's part. Then there is Mr. Herbert Clayton, a tall, manly, handsome, mellow-voiced Captain De Valery. Then there is Miss Julia Sanderson, a new-comer to England, but a great favourite in America, who, with her admirable voice and bright, sprightly ways, should quickly be as great a favourite in London. Then there is Mr. Horace Mills, one of the big successes of the evening as a valet. Then there is Miss Elsie Spain to sing in that charming manner that has recently adorned Savoy opera, and there is Miss Eva Kelly as a quaint and pretty bathing attendant.

"The House of Clay," adapted by Mr. Herbert Swears from the French of M. Emile Fabre, was produced this week at the Coronet Theatre. It deals with the Napoleonic code and dowry system, and in particular in its application to the children, when either of the parents has married again. It shows its anomalies, it's working, its effects, its evil and demoralising influence. It is distinctly interesting and the technique is clever, though now and then inclined to be too discursive.

Mme. Armieres has married again, having by her first husband a son and daughter, by her second a daughter. When the play opens the second daughter is about to be married; her son has been away for twenty years, the other daughter is what the French call a révoltée.

But Armieres has been speculating; he loses all his money, only the proceeds of the sale of the factory entailed upon his wife by her first husband can save him, and she promises to give it him. At that moment Pierre—a stranger, an uncouth, uneducated lad—appears, and he, too, makes a bid for the factory on behalf of a syndicate. The scene between mother and son is brutal but highly interesting. He knows all, having had secret meetings with his sister, and together they "round" upon their mother; the money is theirs, Armieres is nothing to them, they demand it as their legal portion and birthright.

The end of it all is that Armieres and the mother acquiesce, sell everything, accept a humble position—and the law, the hard, inexorable law triumphs.

For Mrs. Kendal it is a veritable triumph. The moment she appears one feels the "sacred fire" of the real actress. Every movement, every flexion of voice, gesture, pose, has a reason, a harmony, a fitness which only the truly great ever attain to. At this moment it would be hard to name a single actress on our stage quite so clever, so sympathetic, so truly an artist. Her pathos is wonderful. How comes it we do not see her in London at some big theatre? It is indeed a mystery. Mr. Kendal was staid in his well-known manner. Mr. Bassett Roe clever as the son. The reception was very enthusiastic.

In spite of some really fine lines and a few splendid moments "The Last Heir" at the Adelphi is as dull as ditch water and neither the author, Mr. Stephen Phillip, nor Mr. Martin Harvey can be congratulated on the result. It is a version of "The Bride of Lammermoor" and aims at being a poetical drama but makes a bad miss. It is spun out to an unconscionable length, there are tons of talk, against ounces of action and a good caste is denied opportunity to do itself credit. Mr. Martin Harvey, as Ravenswood, makes a sufficiently and romantic figure, but he marred the part considerably by frequently adopting a clerical intonation—a "curate's whine," my neighbour in the stalls called it. Miss N. deSilva, as Lucy, alternates between a bread-and-butter school-girl and a screeching shrew; and with the exception of Mr. Charles Glenney, none of the other members of the company stand out prominently.

That wonderfully expressive and sensuous dancer, Miss Ruth St. Denis (whose performances at the Waldorf last year excited so much comment and admiration) reopened the Scala last Wednesday night for a season and presented,—vide playbill, a "Native Indian Company" in a scenic production in five acts. In these she gives many dances in which she endeavours to interpret Oriental customs and mysticism while striving to present everything accurately and with as much "atmosphere" as possible. She achieves a praiseworthy measure of success and is drawing good houses, though the Anglo-Indian critic can find much to carp at in spite of the interest and amusement offered. The "atmosphere" is nearly all right, the acrid fumes of incense pervade the place—minus the hookah, garlic and cookery stinks, thank goodness—and there are tom-toms, temples, clashing cymbals, native pipe music, monotonous chanting and an abundance of local colour. At one moment we see the purdah dividing to let a slim figure come out to light the incense bowls; at another moment we are in a street with jugglers, merchants, water-carriers, each busily occupied with their respective trades. Now we are in the gorgeous palace of some rajah with the nautch-girl pirouetting before his stately throne; and anon we are in a densely-matted jungle, where in a cleared space a Hindoo yogi is renouncing in his own fashion the world, the flesh, and the devil. And then comes a still more grandiose spectacle, in which the service of a temple is performed before our eyes, and Radha, wife of Krishna, instructs her priests in the great lessons of self-sacrifice.

It is very symbolic, most of it is interesting and all of it is artistic and pleasing, but as Miss Ruth St. Denis has never been in India it is hardly to be wondered at that her conception of a nautch is a trifle wanting in fidelity in spite of the obvious desire to sacrifice charm to accuracy and beauty to unflinching realism. But what of it? I have seen hundreds of nautches, the dances of the Sonthals, Cingalese, Nagas, and other wild tribes and cannot imagine anything more tedious and exasperating, and doubtless I voice the verdict of all who have similar experience. It was consequently a relief to find that Miss St. Denis and her company fell somewhat short of presenting the real thing. It occurs to me that if the average nautch wallee were anything like this fair lady in face and figure and if her dancing even remotely approximated what we see at the Scala, the nautch would at once become the most popular form of entertainment in India instead of being as it is the acme of stupidity and boredom.

By to-morrow twenty-four playhouses in the West End will be offering attractions to the seekers of amusements, and before a fortnight shall have passed the number will be increased to twenty-six. The majority of the plays now showing are doing well, a few are doing enormous business, and a few are not getting on any too prosperously. Even in good seasons, however, it would be too much to expect to find all the theatres turning over fortunes. Rarely if ever has London had a lot of plays so obviously set out merely to entertain; there is not a brain-racker among them, nor in the lot in preparation.

After very close on a year's run, "The Mollusc" was withdrawn from the Criterion Theatre on Saturday. Of course, the run was not continuous, for the piece was taken off for several weeks in the spring. Therefore, Sir Charles Windham's attraction does not nearly equal Miss Ethel Irving's success with "Lady Frederick," which has been played eight times a week for within a few days of twelve months.

"Oh dear! what can the matter be?" What meant the war, or rumours of war, between Arthur Collins, of Drury Lane, and that influential body of variety artists, known under the singular and euphonious appellation of the Water Rats? The Water Rats and the Variety Artists' Federation—the official trade union of the music-hall artistes—kicked because they thought their branch of the profession was held up to ridicule on the stage in "Marriages of Mayfair." What if they were? Have the postmen protested at the caricature of T. E. Dunville; have the barmaids "suffragetted" at the sallies of Will Evans; or have the policemen even attempted to arrest the laughable libels of Little Tich and Wilkie Bard? One suspects that the Water Rats' real cause of complaint was the imputation in the picnic scene that they were Whisky-and-Water Rats.

Miss Mary Moore, whose many triumphs in Sir Charles Wyndham's company have for years been one of the features of the London stage, starts next Monday at the Criterion Theatre as an actress-manageress.

She is producing, under the direction of Sir Charles, a new comedy, written by Mr. Hubert Henry Davies, and entitled "Lady Epping's Lawsuit."

Some remarkable figures, showing the loyalty of English-speaking people to Shakespeare, Dickens, Scott, and Thackeray, were given by Mr. Hedley F. Le Bas at the annual dinner of the staff of the Caxton Publishing Company, held last week. During the past year the company sold 180,000 volumes of Dickens, and the demand was continuous and increasing. It is interesting to note that Dickens was four times as popular as Thackeray and twice as popular as Shakespeare, and that Scott came next to Dickens in public favour. Both in colonial and home sales Dickens was first, then Scott, Shakespeare, and Thackeray. The exact figures of the sales during the year were Dickens 180,000 volumes, Scott 140,000 volumes, Shakespeare 90,000 volumes, and Thackeray 45,000 volumes.

The Vagrant.

"Let me see some of your black kid gloves" said a lady to a shopman. "These are not the latest style, are they?" she asked, when the gloves were produced. "Yes, madam," replied the shopman; "we have had them in stock only two days." "I don't think they were because the fashion paper says black kids have tan stitches and vice versâ." The shopman explained that vice versâ was French for seven buttons, so she bought three pairs.

A doctor who had recently married a young widow arrived home after performing a serious but successful operation on a patient. "How did it go?" asked his wife. "Oh, I pulled him through, but it was a stiff job." "How clever you are, Tom," remarked the admiring spouse. "If I had only married you four years ago I feel certain that poor John (her first husband) would have been saved."

A WARRANTABLE STAG.

Scotland has no less than three and a half million acres "under deer" as may be learned from two House of Commons returns. Not one-tenth of that immense tract of ground, of which, of course, the greater part is mountainous, is retained by the lairds in their own hands, so there is little wonder that the autumn rush to the north is welcomed in the Highlands. In many cases, moreover, the English visitors are not now content to be mere tenants; they have acquired by purchase not a few fine sporting estates, and thus in certain glens the Sassenach reigns over the clansmen.

It seems to be a matter of duty with the majority of gunners to be "out" on "the twelfth" shooting "the little red bird" at a guinea the brace, but in many instances the gun is soon laid aside for the rifle and the antlered stag at thirty or more pounds a head becomes the object of pursuit by the richer visitors. The ideal sporting estate, of course, embraces grouse, deer, and salmon, and even in the Highlands a certain number of pheasants is also considered desirable; the rearing of wild ducks is now also much in vogue.

Deer stalking, though it can never be anything but the sport of the few, attracts general interest, and the season's bags are more eagerly watched by outsiders than even the daily returns from the moors. It is a comparatively easy matter to make a respectable appearance in a grouse box, but when the gun is exchanged for the small bore it is wonderful how many bullets find a bed in the heather. The shoulder of a stag is, after all, not much of a target when the distance is well over 100 yards; the other end is of course, taboo, for haunching is worse than a crime—it is a disgrace. A long day on the hill may end with not a single cartridge having been fired; half a dozen may, however, be easily wasted, while a bag of one good stag is an excellent day's work.

The Access to Mountains Bill has not yet become law, and even if it should the deer stalker will suffer little more than at present. Probably the result will be as put recently by a forest owner on whose estate is a big mountain, popular in name but unknown to the general public owing to its height and situation. "Do you think I'll be bothered with a score more of uninvited annual visitors should the Bill pass? No! Others will probably suffer, but the deer stalkers' haunts are too remote and too steep for the average city man."

There is a natural curiosity to know how many stags are annually killed in the Highlands, but the numbers in some forests are never made public. Mere acreage does not determine either the size of the bag or its quality. Pasture and winter shelter are main elements to be considered in reckoning the crop of stags. Neither owners nor lessees are anxious to proclaim that their particular forests are in any way inferior to the best, but one learns much from the "limit" fixed by the landlord on comparing it with the size of the forest. Thus, if ninety stags are offered from, say, 30,000 acres in one case, and 140 from another of the same extent and only sixty from a forest of 40,000 acres, certain conclusions may safely be drawn.

The larger the "limit" per 1,000 acres the smaller probably will be the stags, and necessarily their heads will be in such instances insignificant trophies. Tenants, especially of a single season, take more out of a forest than does the owner when he shoots his own deer, or even than the lessee with ten years' assured possession. A warrantable stag requires much ground; the extent has been put on the average at 500 acres, which would give an annual bag of 7 000. Probably that number is over the actual kill; in certain forests nothing under thirteen stone is shot, while in a select few the standard is a stone more.

The stag is certainly a most peculiar animal, as for nearly a third of the year he is compelled by nature to live an unadventurous life even seeking seclusion for no small part of that period. He annually casts his horns: no matter how big or handsome, off they fall every spring, to be renewed, perhaps, with an additional point and "clean" free of "velvet," for the stalker in August or September. Till the "velvet" is gone the stag should be left alone, but the last tatter has no fixed date for its disappearance. The exact day varies, depending on situation and weather—the better the weather the earlier the date.

Parliament has fixed "the Twelfth" for grouse, but it has done nothing for deer, since a uniform date, either for opening or closing, is out of the question. The larder may requisition a little venison even before "the Twelfth" and so a stag is sacrificed, probably fat enough, though the velvet may have to be scraped off his antlers. This season the first warrantable stag grassed was reported from Glencally, a 10-pointer, with the excellent weight of 16st. 10lb., which fell on 10th August to a young lady's rifle. The next day that weight was exceeded by Lieutenant-Colonel Clarke in Fasnakyle, but his 17st. 2lb. stag was only a switch-horn, and some sportsmen kill such freaks at sight.

Deer stalking takes much more out of one than does grouse shooting. The gunners may ride up to the grouse boxes and thereafter have no anxiety; but with the rifle one must walk and climb distances, often following this up by a weary wait in the cold and a long crawl over all manner of objectionable ground. And not every stalk yields a stag; ere the firing point has been reached the wind may have changed or the deer have taken the alarm, or the sportsman misses with small chance of a second shot. Time was when it was thought derogatory for Highland chieftains to crawl on their stomachs after deer that should be left—and, indeed, often were—to the retainer.

Undoubtedly deer stalking is a great leveller, as witness the case of a celebrated Indian potentate and the stalker in Inverness-shire. When they met in the morning and proceeded into the forest the great personage was treated with all the deference due to a royal prince; but when, at a most inopportune moment, he ventured to raise his head, as he was crawling over rather wet ground, the stalker momentarily forgot everything, save the fear that the stag might see him, and so sternly whispered "Doon, ye deevil, doon, doon?"

The forest sportsman's natural ambition is to shoot a Royal—a 12-pointer—but, alas! Royals are comparatively few, and even 12-pointers are not all worthy of a place in one's hall. For the antlers must be uniform, the points regular and symmetrical, the horn rough and dark, the span wide; and such a combination is about as rare as a faultless horse. How often, too, does the beginner score when the old hand goes empty away! There are two stags an 11-pointer and a 10 within 100 yards of him; one stops to rub his antlers against the stump of a tree, to get rid of the last tags of velvet; as he rubs he hears not the shot which lays his companion in the heather. He follows unconcernedly, only to fall beside his friend.

On the first occasion of a Glenartney stalker taking a gentleman into the forest a blank threatened, but, after all, how suspiciously the day finished! A party of tourists came in the way and spoiled the stalk which had been all but brought to a successful finish. Three or four miles more of hill tramping, and the novice said he had had enough, but his man pleaded for just a little more of it. A bracken patch was reached, and here as they rested over two hundred deer passed close on the right and left. Two good stags fell to two shots, and so the sportsman received his baptism of blood, and the stalker was almost too big for his boots.

It is not for nothing that there is a forest rule which forbids the stalker to shoot the stag which his "gentleman" has missed. Yet we reveal nothing which is not well known when we mention the fact that often the sportsman accepts the credit which is only his vicariously.—Alex. Inkson McConnochie.

HEALTHY LIFE IN INDIA.

Punch's old and trite, but nevertheless, true saying—"Is Life worth living? That depends upon the liver" applies more to Anglo-Indians than to anyone else—only those who suffer know how very much more. And yet there is no reason why this should be so, why a man should not be just as fit in India as in the home country. The majority of those who come out do not regulate life in accordance with the climate and changed conditions of tropical countries. To be well and to keep well requiries the greatest care and discipline. In a country like India, where the extreme heat makes so enormous a difference to the functions of the human body, it is essential to life, that the requirements of the body should be regulated with more than ordinary care. But if we keep the digestive organs healthy and the nerve machine in good working order, one can be as well and healthy on the Bund as in Piccadilly. And we can do so, for medical science has evolved a substance that, whilst easily digested, contains in happy combination the two vital properties for nourishing the body and for stimulating and feeding the nerves.

Sanatogen, the never food is almost universally recognised by medical men as a true scientific food. Readily digestible—so much so that its use in the acute stage of typhoid fever is practised by many physicians—with a high nutritive value, almost every atom of it being absorbed and assimilated, rich in that necessary element of all the tissues of our body—phosphorus—Sanatogen forms at once an almost perfect and complete diet for the low-power system which most Anglo-Indians possess. Used in time it will prevent that devitalisation of nerves and indolence of digestion, respiration, circulation, etc., which all dwellers in tropical climates know and dread so much.

Mr. Hall Caine extols its virtues

Whitehall Court,

London, S. W.

"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a tonic nerve food it has on more than one occasion done me good."

Hall Caine

Even when one of the numerous insiduous tropical diseases has gained a foothold, Sanatogen, according to medical testimony, is a power with which to dislodge the foe, if scientific theory and actual practice in the case of enteric and other fevers have any weight at all. The author of a paper in the "Indian Medical Gazette," December, 1906, entitled "The Maintenance of Health in Tropical Climates," states this opinion: "For residents in tropical climates, suffering from general debility, the best and most readily assimilable food is a combination of casein with glycero-phosphates. This cannot be prescribed as an ordinary mixture, pill or powder, but for some years past I have used the preparation known as Sanatogen, which is composed of 95 per cent. of pure casein and 5 per cent. glycero-phosphate of sodium. I have used Sanatogen on a large scale and have every reason to be satisfied with the results obtained."

This is only one of over 7,500 written endorsements from physicians in Great Britain and India. If any further proof were required it is to be found in the vast numbers of letters from distinguished men and women, who have themselves derived benefit from the use of Sanatogen.

Madame Sarah Grand, the distinguished authoress, writes:—

10, Grove Hill,

Tunbridge Wells.

"I am glad to be able to tell you that Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years' enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Sanatogen which is a fine white powder, is put up in bottles and can be obtained from all chemists.

An engrossing booklet containing matters of vital importance to well-being in the Tropics has recently been issued. It is from the pen of a physician long resident in India and is entitled "How to keep well in India." It should be in the hands of all desirous of knowing how to get well and keep well. A copy can be obtained free of charge from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta from whom also Sanatogen can be purchased.

Are you suffering from Dyspepsia or Indigestion.

Then Try Edward's Papiya Essence.

It is strongly recommended by medical men in above complaints, and in many affections of chest and heart as asthma, palpitation, etc., which are only simulated diseases arising from disordered stomach. Apply to—

E. J. LAZARUS & Co.,
MEDICAL HALL, Benares.
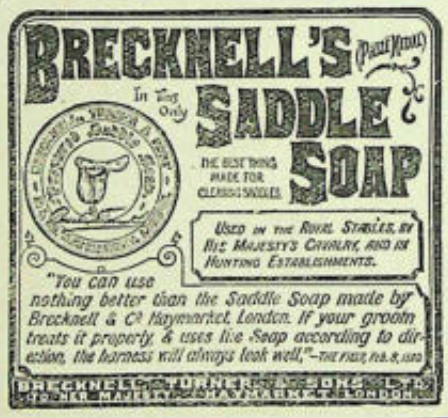
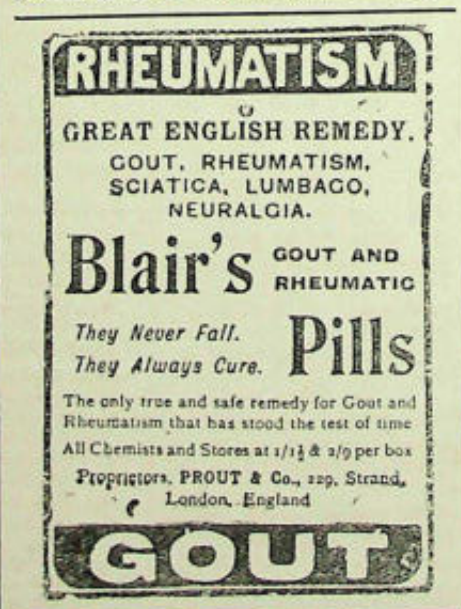
Price, Rs. 3 per bottle.

From G. A. R., Bettiah Champaran:—"I was suffering with diarrhœa, with which I was attacked nearly nine months ago, and all known remedies were greedily taken down by me, but to no avail, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Papiya.' My digestive organs which were considerably deranged are now as right as possible; the distressing symptoms attendant on indigestion have now almost entirely left me and I heartily thank you for the preparation, which through the intervention of a Kind Providence you have successfully brought before the public."



From Mrs. E. L. M., Asansol, E. I. R.—"I had very bad Dyspepsia. My food used to turn rotten and sour in my stomach, and I used one bottle of Essence of Papiya and now I am sure I could digest a brick, it has thoroughly cured me of my Dyspepsia, hence I have so much confidence in your medicines. You certainly deserve credit for introducing such a medicine to poor suffering Dyspeptics"



You may certainly publish what I have said about your Papiya Essence.

From Mrs. Elizabeth Wagentreiber, Delhi:—"With much pleasure and many thanks I beg to acknowledge the benefit I derived from your far famed 'Essence of Papiya.' I suffered from Dyspepsia in a most painful form, and found great relief after taking the first two bottles, and continued to take four more. After the sixth I felt so much better that I left off taking it regularly, but if at any time, I feel the old pain and symptoms returning I immediately take another bottle of the Essence. I am now able to eat more and can change my diet without fear of what were to me most dreaded attacks of indigestion."

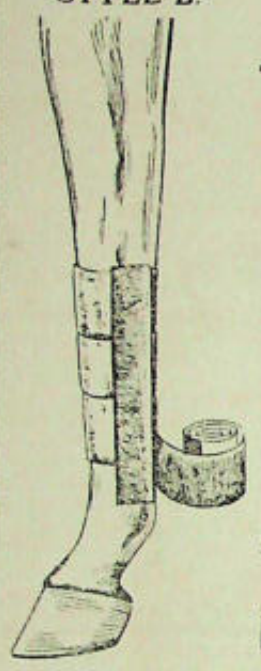
WINCHESTER



RIFLES SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG.

The name "Winchester" on a rifle barrel is the hall-mark of straight and strong shooting. This is due to the excellence of Winchester barrels, the knowledge and experience embodied in their manufacture and the great care taken in targeting them. Every Winchester barrel is shot to test its accuracy, the distance varying according to the caliber. A corps of experts devote their entire time to this work, and before a rifle is passed it must be capable of shooting seven consecutive bulls-eyes on the standard size target for the distance shot. The proper rifling or twist to give best results with a given cartridge is determined in the same careful manner, which assures accuracy and strong shooting.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS).

LONDON, Friday, 9th October 1908.

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

So heavy was the dew evolved by the abnormally hot spell that at early morn the grass was saturated, and the roofs and pavements of Newmarket dripped as if with rain. But for this the going would have been harder, and it was getting quite resonant to hoof-beasts at the finish. Such a summer in autumn has rarely been experienced. Perhaps a meeting some ten years or more ago when there were several cases of sunstroke amongst the police ran it close, but for almost Indian surroundings the first October Week of 1908 will perhaps never be rivalled. Friday's programme was much of a muchness, with no particularly striking item to charm. Moreover, we missed His Majesty sadly during the week, and so a good many temporary residents cut short their visit and left the more ardent few to await fall of the curtain, the muster being the smallest on the four days. Results:—

ROUS MEMORIAL STAKES—Of 400sovs. added, for two-year-olds 5 furlongs.

ALEXANDRA PARK.

The spell of abnormal heat gave sweltering Londoners an excuse for seeking the open fields, and Metropolitan sportsmen went in their thousands to the Muswell Hill slopes on Saturday. The favourite means of reaching this venue now is by motor cab, and these vile smelling vehicles have supplanted the hansom cabs, that until latterly used to line up at the rear of the grand stand in rows two and three deep. If the class of competitors did not amount to much (two of the six winners being ex-hurdle racers), the card admirably fulfilled its mission, and backers went away light of heart and full of pocket, inasmuch as the winners were easy to find. The course, with its luxuriant growth of herbage, afforded the best of going, and was in no way responsible for the accident that befel King's Tax and Muscosa in the October Sale Plate. Results:—

MUSWEL PLATE—Of 100sovs. 1¼ miles.

Mr. H. Hartigan's Dafila, by Laveno or Wildflower—Raia, 5yrs., 8st. 10lb. ... Maher 1

NOTTINGHAM.

On Monday, the 5th instant, for a long way into the heart of the Midlands the trains ran through a mist, but when more than half the journey had been accomplished, the sun began to brighten things up. It was a glorious morning for the holiday folk, who wound up the Goose Fair festivites with a day's racing, as Monday does not make strong calls on operative labour, and the further rings were filled. The specials from town took a fair contingent, while a good muster of the rank and fashion of the county occupied the club enclosure, and the going being perfect, fields panned out well. Results:—

SOUTHWELL PLATE (handicap)—Of 106sovs. 6 furlongs.

A stiffish breeze from the opposite quarter rushed some bigger clouds across the sky than have been seen of late, which suggested rain, but the visitation, however, was not yet, as from zenith to horizon all was clear, and shade when procurable was acceptable. As usual on Tuesday, the holiday element was of smaller dimensions, most having resumed their usual avocations, but Tattersall's and the club enclosure were again well filled. In fine weather and good going, the meeting has never been surpassed at this season of the year, and the executive have every reason to be satisfied with the success of their labours to please their patrons. LEICESTER.

While clear in the town, the fog, for lack of wind, brooded thickly over the higher parts of the course at Oadby on Wednesday almost shutting out the view till half a mile from home, and given the sun little chance during the afternoon. Helped by the previous meeting of Nottingham, which kept visitors in the Midlands, the attendance in Tattersall's was a good one, and the enclosures on each side of the course were well patronised, but we have seen a stronger muster in the paddock and on the members' lawn. Results:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE first round F. A. Cup ties were more interesting than usual owing to so many strong teams being engaged. In those instances where amateurs were opposed to professionals, the latter had matters nearly all their own way, as they were in better condition, thanks to their training. The weather was so sultry that condition was no inconsiderable factor in success or failure, and it is therefore all the more creditable to West Norwood that they should have played Croydon Common to a draw. Weymouth had a sorry experience at Exeter, 14 goals being chalked up against them, Hastings and St. Leonard's helped themselves to seven at the expense of Horsham and Tunbridge Wells: Rangers ran into double figures against Bognor. One of the most exciting games was at Leyton, and Southend United must be accounted a really fortunate side to win by a goal to love. The defeat of Clapton by a goal at Shoeburyness by the Garrison was a surprise, and Tufnell Park should have made a closer fight with Ilford. The draw for the next round takes place to-morrow afternoon at the F.A. offices.

League Football.

The programme in the leading leagues was not so extensive as usual as clubs in the Southern League and the Second Division of the Football League were engaged in the F.A. Cup. The goal scoring was much better than a week ago, the eight S.L. games producing 28, the ten Football League games 34, and the nine Second Division games 26. In the Southern League there was only one surprise—the win of Crystal Palace at Brentford by a two goals margin. Coventry lost, as anticipated, on their own ground to Plymouth, but in every other instance victory went to the club playing before its own supporters. There is a different tale to tell with regard to the premier division of the Football League. Only four victories were obtained by home clubs, one visiting club was successful and five matches were drawn. In the Second Division home teams claimed five wins, visiting sides three and one game was drawn.

Southern League.

Southampton were not engaged in the Southern League on Saturday, and Crystal Palace seized the opportunity to creep nearer to the leaders by registering a win at Brentford. Brentford have sadly disappointed, but they are not so poor a side as their position in the table suggests. Watford met their usual fate at Millwall. The win was much needed, and the visitors have to thank Biggar, their goalkeeper, that it was not of a more decisive character. Swindon were in winning vein against West Ham United, the railway men being the better all-round combination. Queen's Park Rangers returned from Fratton Park defeated by 3 goals to 1, but the score flatters the winners, who had no more of the game than the losers. It was to their ability to seize upon chances that Portsmouth owe their success. Luton won comfortably enough against Brighton and Hove, but Northampton did not have anything to spare against Reading. Norwich City went under to New Brompton, and the East Anglians now possess a record which should give them many anxious moments.

The League Division 1.

The most notable event in the First Division of the Football League was the defeat of Sheffield Wednesday at Sunderland. The visitors had an unbeaten certificate during September. At Roker Park, however, the Blades did not maintain a consistently high level, Sunderland being the superior side in the second half and their win leave Manchester United the only undefeated team in the competition. The Arsenal did really well—better than I expected—in bringing a point away from Middlesbrough, and it is pleasing information that the Gunners were full value for the draw. One does not expect Chelsea to get points on the Nottingham Forest Ground, but they ought to have shared the honours. The match at Bristol between the City and Newcastle United was a ding dong encounter in which the attack on both sides was better than the defence, especially in the second half, when five goals were scored in half an hour. Liverpool had to meet Everton at Anfield Road with a weakened side, and the visitors won a hard game by the only goal scored. Manchester United dropped their first point in the competition, Bury rising to the occasion at Gigg Lane, and compelling the champions to be content with a division of the points. Sheffield United are certainly on the up-grade, for following their meritorious win away from home of the previous week, they scored thrice against Bradford City, at Bramall Lane, and easily came out on top. Of the other games, Preston N. E. have only their own poor shooting to blame for allowing Notts County to draw at Deepdale, and a similar explanation suffices for the draw at Aston, by Blackburn Rovers.

Second Division.

The three London teams in the Second Division of the League were at home on Saturday, but they did not do so well as they should have done. Fulham certainly exacted ample revenge from Grimsby for the humiliation the fishermen put upon them last season, but although 5—2 is convincing enough on paper, not even the most ardent supporter of the Cottagers would pretend to be thoroughly satisfied with the work of the team. There was a hard, unyielding game at Tottenham, where superb work in goal by Maskrey saved Derby County from defeat. The defence all round of the Midlanders was excellent in the extreme. Clapton Orient must soon make a move if they intend to have even a moderate measure of success. Six games without a win is not cheerful reading, and against Glosshop they did not really deserve to succeed. What a surprise for Stockport County to beat Oldham Athletic, at Oldham, and West Bromwich went slightly better than was expected of them in inflicting defeat on the Wolverhampton Wanderers at the Molineux Grounds. Barnsley had a poor September, but they have started October well, with a 4—0 win over Blackpool, who had previously escaped defeat. Bolton Wanderers went down at Hull, quite an upset of form, but the other games were in accordance with anticipations.

RUGBY RULES.

Australians vs. Cornwall.—The Australians met Cornwall at Camborne on Saturday in the third match of the tour. There were three alterations in the visiting team to the side that beat Devon, Carroll and Prentice taking the places of Mandible and Smith at three-quarters, and Richards that of Burge in the pack. The Cornish team turned out as originally selected, but the side was not representative of the champions, E. J. Jackett, J. Davay F. Jackson, and J. G. Milton being the chief absentees from the team which performed so brilliantly last season. The ground was in perfect condition, there were over 8,000 spectators.

The game in the opening stages was fought out at a rare pace, the Cornish pack beating the opposing forwards in the loose, but the visiting backs kicked a rare length, and swift passing movement carried play to the home "25." Wedge started a counter movement, which covered half the length of the field, but Smith lost the ground by weak kicking. A bad mull by the home backs left the visiting forwards with a clear course for goal Bennetts kicking dead. The visitors made fine use of touch, and play settled in the home half, Middleton broke through with the ball at his feet and was only checked on the line. Solomon intercepted a dangerous passing bout, but knocked on with only the back to face, and Wedge came away from the scrum, and the forwards carried the ball over the line, Carroll touching down. Then came a rousing dash by the home pack, but Moran sprang into a heap of players at mid-field, and, racing away, caught the defence napping. After several exchanges Griffin crossed near the posts Carmichael converting after twenty minutes' play.

Bennetts ran strongly along the wing, but his pass was not taken, and a warm rush by the visitors was checked by Solomon near the line, Russell made a strong dash for the line, and was thrown into touch just outside. Play was confined to the forwards for a spell, and the home pack was on top, but when the ball came out the Australians' back division never failed to make ground. The tackling of the Cornish defenders was not up to the usual standard, and the line underwent several narrow escapes, McCue knocking on with the line at this mercy. A series of scrums followed on the home line, and Woods sent McKivett over at the corner, the kick at goal failing.

By loose rushes and fast following up, Cornwall twice reached the visitors' line, but their stay was of short duration, and close on the interval the defence cracked up badly before a loose forward rush, and Russell scored, Carmichael converting from a difficult angle. Australia led at the interval by 2 goals 1 try (8 points) to 0.

From the restart the visitors went away and were almost over. At midfield a lot of uninteresting scrum and lines-out followed, neither side attempting to open out the game. The Australian forwards swept across the field, and McKivett charged down a kick and rushed over behind the posts, Carmichael adding the extra points.

Dean spoiled a round of passing by the Australian backs, and the visitors were penalised for holding the ball Solomon making a good attempt at goal. Russell was sent clean away, and on the line passed in to Carroll, who muffed the pass with the line at his mercy. Russel collided with Flanagan, who was acting as touch-judge, and both were laid out, the latter sustaining a badly broken leg. Play had degenerated, and there was less of the fast footwork and sparkling dashes of the first half. Solomon ran from his own line to half way, and with a huge punt kicked over the line, but the ball went dead, and Jose spoilt a free kick for off-side in a good position. The home pack swept past the opposition with a fine dribble, and Lowry scored, Solomon converting.

Australia again reached the home line, but Solomon ran back and found touch at "25," and a marked improvement came over the game, Cornwall playing with inspiring dash, and Solomon keeping his side on the aggressive by splendid touch-finding kicks. Jackett was almost over after a fine burst from the line-out, and a series of rousing exchanges followed on the line. Solomon was held up in the crease, and Australia were simply routed. Smith dropped at goal, the ball passing inches wide. Near the close Prentice went away with a brilliant run, the length of the field, and was knocked into touch at the corner flag. Result :—

	Pts.
Australia (3g., 1t.)	18
Cornwall (1g.)	5

Cornwall.—Smith (Redruth); Barrie Bennetts (Penzance), Bert Solomon (Redruth), and F. Dean and E. Jose (Devon Albion); Wedge (St. Ives) and Richards (Playmouth), R. Jackett (Falmouth), Thomas (Devon Albion), Wilson (Camborne School of Mines), Tregurtha, (St. Ives), A. Lawry (Redruth), Marshall (Devon Albion), Willcocks (Playmouth), and Lang (Looe.)

Australians.—P. Carmichael; D. D. Carroll, J. Hickey, W. Prentice, and C. Russell; C. McKivett and F. Woods; T. Griffen, C. Hammond, J. Barnett, P. McCue, S. Middleton, N. Row, T. Richards, and Dr. Moran.

Australians vs. Glamorgan.—The Australians made a brilliant start to their tour in Wales by defeating Glamorgan by 2 goals and 2 tries to a penalty goal. The start was ominous for the Welshmen, the Colonials gaining possession in the scrum each time the ball was put in, and attack after attack was made on their line.

Although the defence was by no means weak the inevitable happened, Russell scoring, after brilliant passing, for Carmichael to goal. After this reverse Glamorgan did a bit better, and, thanks to Winfield's grand kicking, were able to get a sight of the Australians' line.

But they were never really dangerous, as the forwards, quite failed to heel, and consequently the backs were never able to bring off a concerted run. With only a goal against them at half-time, it was expected that the home men would do better, but, as at the commencement, Australia again started with a dash, and Russell crossed again after loose passing.

Glamorgan soon after brought off their first passing bout, but there was little sting in it. Ivor Morgan livened up matters with a brilliant rush, which left Glamorgan attacking, and Winfield placed a lovely penalty goal.

There was some strong forward play by both sides after this, but Australia where always too good, and another brilliant try by Russell put Australia further ahead. This looked like being the last of the scoring, but Winfield, for a wonder, misfielded—his first blunder—and a couple of forwards rushed over and another goal was kicked.

ATHLETICS.

Immense Marathon Meeting.

British runners will have their opportunity in the Marathon Race to-morrow to prove what most sporting writers and enthusiasts have claimed for them—that they can beat the times made by Hayes and Dorando in the Olympic Marathon.

Will they win, in face of the brilliant opposition from the Continent, whence formidable parties of long-distance runners are coming to compete?

H.R.H. Prince Christian fires the pistol and starts the race from the Long Walk, Windsor Great Park. There are 123 entries for the race. For the Olympic Marathon there were seventy-five and fifty-five starters.

Tomorrow's meeting, which has been organised by the London Evening News, is the most gigantic one-day athletic meeting ever held in London. There are 753 entries exclusive of the tug-of-war teams. These bring the total up to 1,700 competitors. Including the large teams of gymnasts, who mustered many hundreds, the entries for the whole fortnight's Olympic Games were about 2,100.

These figures indicate something of the magnitude of the great athletic entertainment of to-morrow. But pages would be needed to give the excellent performances of the first-rate athletes who are finishing hard training for the various events.

The prize for the Marathon winner is £100, with forty pounds between four others who follow him. No man has been ruled out of the race because he is a professional, and none has been shut out because he is, up to the time of competing, an amateur.

The aim is to bring the very best British runners into competition with the cream of foreign running talent, and thus to see if Great Britian and Ireland stand where they did in endurance races on the road.

The same words apply to the shorter races, in which the world's best men will oppose each ather. Every precaution has been taken to see that competitors are among the best at their distances.

The programme opens at 10 A.M. when the 185 fine sprinters in the 100 yards scratch begin their eighteen heats. Then comes the two miles walk which has been cut into seven heats on account of the ninety-nine entries—a splendid total.

The programme has been arranged to do no injustice to the man who cannot arrive at the Stadium before one o'clock. At that hour the semi-finals of the 100 yards will be decided. Next are the nine heats in the one mile race, for which there are 111 competitors. The 157 entered for the quarter mile are to run in sixteen heats. There are three heats in the quarter mile obstacle, with seventy-eight entries. Then the spectators will have—from 3-15 P.M.—five finals and one semi-final.

Apart from these, there are the battles of the 117 picturesquely colored teams in the light and heavy weight tugs of war, and the one and a half lap close of the Marathon Race.

The organisers of the huge meeting have learned a lesson from the Olympic Marathon day, when few of the spectators were deeply concerned with anything but the great race itself. During the seven hours walking and running tug-of-war there will be constant excitement, a provision that will commend itself specially to the sixty-thousand people who complained of the deficiencies of the general programme before the Olympic Marathon's finish.

GOLF.

The £240 Tournament.—The Professional Golfers' Association tournament, for gold, silver and bronze medals, and £24 in cash prizes, was brought to a close on the Mid-Surrey Club's course, in Old Deer Park, Richmond, yesterday, and in its closing stage was the most exciting of the six annual competitions which have now been held. For the third time the runner-up came from the younger school of professional golfers, but not so seriously did Edward Ray, in 1903, or C. H. Mayo, in 1906, threaten the supremacy of Braid and Herd respectively, as did F. Robson that of Taylor yesterday.

Robson, a self-taught young golfer from Chester, and now attached to the Bromborough Club, near Liverpool, showed that his performance in the last open championship, at Prestwick, where he tied for eighteenth place, was no mere flash in the pan, for he played brilliant golf right up to the final round in the tournament which concluded yesterday in a victory for J. H. Taylor, the Mid-Surrey professional, by 2 holes. Robson is a tall, loosely-built youngster, with tremendous hitting power, and it may be that the knowledge of the latter quality was a handicap to him for a critical point in the game he strained himself to the utmost to get length. It was obvious that he was putting his last half-ounce into his tee shots, with the inevitable result that they were frequently off the line, and got him into difficulties.

From the first Robson had a tendency to hook his shots, but he made some very fine recoveries, and repeatedly saved himself on the green. The excellence of his putting was a feature of the match, and almost solely the cause of his leading by three holes at the end of the first round. In the afternoon he appeared to be nervous at the first few holes, and some of his iron shots were very poor. He pulled himself together, however, from the sixth hole, where he outdrove Taylor by 30 yards, and from that point the Northerner continued to outdrive his opponent. The ninth hole in the afternoon was a serious set back for Robson, for he looked to have a chance of winning until Taylor holed a mashie chip from off the edge of the green. Taylor played with his usual determination, and an equally clever but less plucky golfer might easily have gone to pieces when his opponent, after being in trouble, was halving or winning holes by the brilliance of his short game. Mr. H. E. Taylor, Richmond Golf Club, was referee, and the prizes were distributed by Prince Albert of Schleswig-Holstein.

ROWING.

A CHANNEL RECORD.—A performance, which is of the nature of a record, has just been accomplished by two young Frenchmen, M. Peron, son of the Mayor of Boulogne, and M. Levy, who have succeeded in rowing across the Channel and back between Saturday and Sunday night in a small skiff. The journey to Folkestone from Boulogne was accomplished in a little over seven hours. The young men when they started had no intention of crossing to England, but when well out in the Channel the prevailing conditions were so favourable that they determined to make the attempt, and reached Folkstone after ten o'clock at night.

Following a rest, they determined to re-cross the Channel, and having laid in a stock of provisions, commenced the return journey at one o'clock on Sunday afternoon. Thick fog was encountered in the Channel, but they eventually reached Boulogne at eleven o'clock at night, a performance which establishes a record for the double Channel passage in so short a time.

BOXING.

THE BURNS-SQUIRES FIGHT.—In an extremely interesting letter to a brother in this country, a spectator of the recent Burns-Squires bout at Sydney, who from his description of the fight, shows considerable practical knowledge of the noble art, throws additional light on the contest, and also criticises very cleverly the methods of the men. His references to Burns's manner of fighting are exceptionally interesting and instructive, and entirely bear out the opinions formed of the champion by experts who closely followed his career in this country. The following are extracts from the letter referred to:—

"The only thing that was really worth while was the fight which I must say was the best fight I ever saw, though I am not sure that Burns could not have ended matters a bit sooner had it been really necessary. As it was, he simply let Squires beat himself, i.e., tired him out. Burns's capacity for taking punishment is simply marvellous. And he uses his face as a sort of a battering ram. When dazed, he used to clinch and lean up against Squires till he recovered, which never took long. The new American style of fighting was a revelation to me, as both men used to clinch and hang on and hit while still in holds. There must be a terrific lot of science in it; but it is not boxing as I was taught the noble art. Burns scarcely ever hit Squires in the out-fighting, but used to bide his time, and clinch and pummel away (always at the same place) at Squires's ribs with a terribly powerful half-arm jolt. This must have been very trying, as he always landed on exactly the same place (somewhere over the solar plexus).

"Right up to the thirteenth round, when Burns got all over Squires, it looked as though Squires was going to win. But if one looked at him during the intervals one saw that he seemed very distressed, while Burns seemed to be hardly breathing at all. But I must say that Squires seemed to have much the best of the out-fighting. But Burns's stabs to the head and body (chiefly the latter) seemed terribly punishing. He was much the cleverer at the in-fighting, and nearly always held Squires so that the unfortunate man could be hit but could not hit back.

"The rule about this fighting in clinches seems to be you can hit the other man provided you have one hand free, and break directly the referee separates you. Incidentally, the referee got hit a couple of times while separating the men.

"Burns always got the best of this fighting in clinches, and always seemed to get in a right hook as they were breaking. As regards the out-fighting, he never seemed to trouble very much about hitting his man. He seemed to be waiting for one special opening all the time. When it came, which was in a clinch, Squires took 8secs., and when it came again Squires took another 8sec., and the third time he was counted out. Very few of Squires's hits seemed to have the weight behind them that one expects from heavy-weights. But this may have been due to the fact that Burns was usually going away when Squires landed. But still, Squires gave him an enormous amount of punishment, and his (Burns's) recuperative powers were simply marvellous.

"When the men came into the ring first, Burns looked fat and soft, but as one afterwards discovered he was just about as hard as nails. Squires, on the other hand, looked a bit on the fine side though a friend who was sitting next me said he had seen him in Newcastle the day before, and that he was in beautiful nick. But he agreed with me in saying that he looked tied up across the loins.

"Burn's footwork was very good, and very pretty to watch. At the beginning of each round both men tried hard to get the other to face the sun, which was blazing hot most of the time. At the end of most rounds, when one thought he was almost tottering (Squires having inflicted an enormous amount of punishment), Burns used to run back to his corner apparently as fresh as paint, and as though he had been having a mere exercise spar. Either the man is a most wonderful actor, or else he never feels anything at all.

"The referee (Jew, and a former amateur champion of Queensland, and quite a good man at the game) provided the amusing side. He started in full evening dress. After the first round, he took off his coat; a couple of rounds later he took off his waistcoat and rolled back his sleeves; a bit later his collar went; and at the end he looked about as tired as Squires himself. But he had some hard work separating them. The preliminary was, a good, clever fight—mostly out-fighting, with hardly any clinching."

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Monday, 18th October.—Lake End at 7 A.M. It was a glorious morning, fresh and cool after good rain during the night. Hounds were trotted over to Municipal Hill and drew along past Rees' Corner to the head of Long Swamps. On the hill just above Captain Duff viewed a jack; on being laid on the pack went off in full cry towards Dudley, but checked just outside the covert for a moment, they cast themselves round and were off again, streaming over One Tree Hill and down the far side into Monkey; coming out at the bottom they swung up to the left of Leeds past Shamyar Bluegums into Tiger Shola. Here unfortunately, a few couple of the leading hounds drove the jack out over the top of Andy and ran him into Governor's Shola. There was some delay before the rest of the pack joined them in Governor's. They pushed him out to the left below Hungerford Estate, and ran him over the top of Martyn's right handed into Staircase Shola. Without pausing in this they went on to Herbert Estate and dived down into Stoke's Shola; here they were at fault. The Master casting them round below Pykara Road under Grubs Shola they hit off the line again, and carried it up across the road and along the ridge above Preston's Crossing; they then went to the left to Aylmer's Crossing and rose the opposite hill leaving Barber's Shop on their right, they swung round into Beadnell's. Coming out at the bottom they headed straight for Waterfall Shola, but fortunately lost him in the ravine leading down from Captain Beadnell's house. Waterfall Shola is not a pleasant place for hounds or the Hunt Staff: then followed a long draw from Beadnell's to Staircase and on to Bluegums, Forlock and Bakie; in the latter a jack was on the move and led hounds round below Porcupine and headed straight for the south side of Cairn Hill, where he made good his escape in this immense thick covert.

Wednesday, 21st October.—Lascelles at 7 A. M. (To finish the season) there was heavy rain over night, the morning broke damp and misty and the sky clouded. Moved off to Double Crossing, an outlying jack was viewed in Newmarket, heading as if for Rawlin's Nullah, he made off at a great pace along the ridge for some distance before he swung down to the right and crossed the Sandy Nullah Stream below Schimdt's Clump, and rose the hill into Staircase. But only touching this covert he went away up the Butter ..e on to the ridge, then dropped down on to Backstaircase Road, and ran it to the Pykara Road which he crossed, leaving Briar on his right; he raced along the saddle above Wapshare's Hare to Pirate Shola, and ran below the Bridle Path to Fuddler's Shola, then crossed the path and up the hill side into Bracken. Going away from this on the far side, he managed to get through the wire fence into some very thick close covert, where he dodged about for some ten minutes before he was viewed by Cyclops stealing away back to Bracken. It was some delay before hounds were got out of the enclosure, but scent was good, and they hit off the line at once and streamed down to the bog; turning sharp to the right, they ran down over the crossing below Warwick Shola and turned to the left along the hillside to the Bridle Path; crossing this, they kept up the hill and skirting Wenlock Shola on the left, ran past Brooksby into and through Wapshare's Hare, out at the top and over the ridge to Cox's Crossing and on to the Barber's Shop and round the hill right handed to short of Beadnell's when they turned to the right over the small bog below the road and continued the chase to the Waterfall River. By this time horses were fairly blown; some of the field were lucky to pick up their second horses. The jack had crossed the river so had the hounds, and the run was by no means at an end, this good jack meant to give us a record run to "finish the season." The hunt went on along the hills above Waterfall Shola to Cathedral Shola. On reaching this point, however, the jack swung round to the right past Toda Cathedral and took a line along the north side of Rocky to Karimuli Mund and back to Waterfall River; here he turned sharp up to the right once more into Waterfall Shola and went to ground under a large rock on the edge of it. It was a most excellent run lasting close on an hour and a half; the pace was fast throughout.

We next drew Brooklands, but found it blank so went on to Hanging Shola in which hounds spoke to a line and shortly after a jack moved off from the bottom and headed for the ghauts; going away at a fair pace he crossed the Connemara Road to the left of the Umbrella Tree and dived down towards Kulhutty village, where he saved his brush. Much sympathy was felt for Captain Duff who had the misfortune to lose a young and valuable horse. The accident was a curious and unaccountable one, the horse went lame going up hill; on examination Captain Duff discovered to his dismay that the off hind was broken above the fetlock joint. The poor beast had to be shot on the spot. This was indeed a sad ending to the season of 1908.

CRICKET IN SHILLONG.

Shillong vs. Police and Military.—The last match of the season was played on the 24th instant when the Police and Military easily defeated Sillong. For the former Coleridge bowled splendidly, taking six wickets for 26 runs besides performing the hat trick. The last five wickets of the Shillong Eleven fell in seven balls for one run. The Police and Military scored with ease, Kennedy and Giffard making runs freely. Padgett bowled with success towards the close of the afternoon when, aided by the shadows which crept over the pitch, he took four wickets for seven runs. Sir Charles Bayley was present during the afternoon. Mr. F. Turner gave tea in the Pavilion while the Band of the 8th Gurkhas discoursed sweet music. The scores were as follows:—

SECUNDERABAD HORSE SHOW.

Friday & Saturday, 17th & 18th October 1908.

The Annual Horse Show was held on the above dates and was a complete success. The programme possessed several new features, entries were larger than they have ever been, and the quality was excellent. There was a large attendance on both days. The 13th Hussars were "at home" on the first day and the 3rd Q. O. Light Cavalry dispensed hospitality on Saturday. Brigadier-General Rimington made a short speech in which he congratulated Lieutenant P. A. Wilson, the Honorary Secretary and his Committee on the success attending their hard work. A feature of the show was the Gold Medal presented by the Olympia show for the best heavy weight Polo Pony. This was won by Major Taylor's Gollywog. Mrs. Rimington gave away the prizes. Appended is a list of the awards.—
