
I thought and thought for hours, and turned over every kind of plan, carefully weighing every consequence, for I determined, whatever I did, to do it carefully. I told her she had made a bad bargain, as I was only a private in the Guards; that I had come in for £100, and was spending it on furlough when she picked me up, and that it would be all gone in a few days. She did not like that, of course, but when I proposed a divorce to her, she indignantly refused, as she said she was tired of the life she had been leading, and that a soldier was quite good enough for her. After a bit, she said she did not believe me, and that she would go to the barracks, and see for herself. To this I replied that she could do so if she pleased; but that if she did, I would be punished for marrying without leave, and would have nothing to do with her, and that, as my pay would not support her, she would have to go to the streets again, in which case I would be able to plead poverty, and get my divorce for nothing. That quieted her, but it did not make me any freer. I really believe her only object was to lead a decent life of any kind. This, however, was out of the question, so far as I was concerned. I simply boiled with rage for I was fairly cornered, but I never showed my anger for a minute. I knew I should hit on some plan if I only kept quiet and said nothing, but thought. It was a difficult nut to crack, and I had tried all my teeth on it without avail. But nuts that cannot be cracked right off will often get softer if only turned over often enough in the mouth, and I kept my nut in my cheek till it dissolved of itself. The idea came to me suddenly. Why not lead a double life? Why not be Charles Brown, a private in the Guards to her, and my proper self to all my friends? The more I turned the idea over the more it developed, and the better I liked it. I could easily account for my absences to my wife, by saying I was confined to barracks, and I could have the best part of my days and all my nights to myself. I determined to try it anyway, so I told her my leave had been up some days, but that I would not return till I had seen her safely lodged where I could afford to keep her. I further explained to her, that having outstayed my leave, I would probably be confined to barracks for a fortnight, when I returned, but that I would give her sufficient money to get on with till I saw her again, and trusted to her to keep straight while I was away, and on no account to go near the barracks. All this she promised, and I made show of being doubtful, and swearing that, since she was my wife, if I found she ever deceived me, I would kill her. This she naturally took as showing signs that I was getting fond of her, which was exactly what I wanted.

When I had seen her safely lodged in two small, dirty rooms in Lambeth, I left her, and made a bee-line for a second-hand theatrical clothes shop in the Dials, where I under pretence of wanting it for private theatricals, purchased a good, second-hand uniform for a private in the Guards, which I had altered to fit me. I next hired a small artist's studio, which stood by itself, where I took my kit. Here I set up as an artist, put my real name on the door, and purchased all sorts of easels, lay figures, brushes, paints, etc., and a few paintings of military subjects. In this way I lived for about six months, nobody thinking it very extraordinary that from time to time a soldier should be seen leaving the studio of an artist who painted military subjects. I always visited my wife in my uniform, and when I left her to "return to barracks" I drove to my studio, where I changed my uniform. I also got photographed in my tunic and bearskin, and gave her a copy. Besides this, I got to know by sight all the officers and non-commissioned officers in the regiment to which I was supposed to belong, and made a point of saluting them when we met. I knew, at least, four of the officers personally, but when I was in uniform I never turned a hair, or made any sign of recognition as I saluted them. This went on for some time, till one of the officers met me one day in my private capacity in the club, and said:

"Do you know, we have a private in our regiment exactly like you? When I met him the other day I could have sworn I had seen your ghost."

I told him quite calmly that I was not a bit surprised, as I had heaps of doubles everywhere, and never was introduced to anyone without being told that I was exactly like Tom This or Jack That. After this, the conversation passed on to something else; but a few evenings afterwards, when a big pool was on in the billiard-room, I shouted out to him so that everyone could hear. "By the way, have you seen my 'double' since?" This soon brought many inquiries as to my "double," and when the story, such as he knew it, was told, I finishing rather indignantly, "I wish to heavens next time you see him, you would stop him and ask him what the devil he means by it." On the following Sunday, when arrayed in my uniform, I was walking in the park with my wife, I met "my officer" friend face to face. He looked very hard at me, and, as I was bringing my hand up to the salute, he stopped me, and asked my name. I looked him straight in the face, and said, "Charles Brown, sir." He seemed puzzled, and not knowing what to say, said, "Is this your wife?" She answered at the same time as I did, "Yes, sir." "Oh!" said he, looking foolish, and putting his hand in his pocket, "That's right," and gave me half a crown, for which I thanked him, and as my wife curtseyed, I saluted him again, and marched off. It was very funny, a few nights afterwards, to hear him telling the story at my expense, to a lot of his brother officers, some of whom I knew, and the others to whom I was introduced on the strength of it. They all pretended they had observed the likeness themselves. I pretended to be very indignant, in consequence of which the story became buzzed about, and I was unmercifully chaffed about it.

The time was now ripe, and on the evening before Derby Day, I went to my wife's lodgings, as usual, in my uniform, and with a small bundle under my arm. She was already in bed when I arrived. The landlady let me in, and, as I had not seen my wife for a few days, I explained my presence by saying I had got late for tattoo, and might as well stop out now till morning as return, and the bundle as being my dirty linen, which I had brought for her to wash as usual. She raised no objection, and I stripped and got into bed. When she was sound asleep I chloroformed her and cut her throat. I then got up and washed myself, cut off the number of my uniform, and, taking the clothes from the bundle I commenced to array myself as an itinerant Christy minstrel. I had had already prepared the mixture of beer, sugar and burnt cork, so as not to make a smell by burning the cork in the house, and when I had blackened my face and hands, and got my clothes and wig on, I looked in the glass. It was certainly a magnificent make up, and nobody would have known me. I then returned to the bed, to make sure my wife was dead, and when I was confident of the fact, I made up the parcel again with the dirty linen, which I had concealed on my person before entering. The parcel certainly looked a trifle smaller, but not sufficiently so to be noticed by the landlady who let me in. The next thing to do was to burn a suit of grey clothes and a cap, which I kept at my wife's lodgings and which I had taken occasion to display more than once to the sight of the landlady. When I had done this, I opened the window, looked out, and waited for a policeman to pass. The air from the open window cleared away the smell of the burnt clothes, and when the policeman had gone well past, I crept quietly downstairs, and out into the street. Once there, I knew I was safe, and I was soon on my way to Epsom Downs, of which I had arranged with a morning paper to do a personal description "By a Nigger on the Course." All the first day I spent singing songs and chaffing my personal friends, who were occasionally surprised to find how well their private affairs were known. In the evening I returned to town by train, and drove to the office of the morning paper which I was representing for the occasion. Then, after washing my hands, I wrote my article, and drove to my chambers, where I washed and went to bed.

The papers next day were full of the "horrible murder at Lambeth," and there was no doubt in any one's mind that the murderer was Charles Brown, a private in the Guards. The portrait which I had had taken, and given to my wife, was reproduced, and adorned the "offer for reward," which was posted at all the police stations, with an accurate description, supplied by the landlady, of the grey suit which I had burned. The papers announced from day to day that the police were on my track, and had got "clues." When they got tired of this, they waxed indignantly and sparred the police on by jibes and leading articles, and a full and accurate list of all the undiscovered murders since the Conquest. The "latest intelligence" about "the Lambeth murderer" was that he had been seen at Greenwich, and then came arrest after arrest. Some of the papers were sure he could not have left London, while others said he had been seen at Kingstown, Liverpool, and Cork, and had evidently gone to America. Then came cables that he was arrested in New York, and some poor devil was dragged all the way back to London, only to be found to be the wrong man.

During all this time I went about London, and was unmercifully chaffed by my friends about my likeness to "the Lambeth murderer," and was eventually nicknamed "Quits," as I was so like my double.

By degrees the thing died out, and was clean forgotten by everyone, except the leader-writer, who added the name of "Charles Brown" to the list of undiscovered murders since the Conquest.

It may be well to explain why I disguised myself as an itinerant cork minstrel. I did so for the reason that if "a swell in evening dress" had been seen in the Lambeth street on the night of the murder, I should very probably have been, owing to my remarkable likeness to Charles Brown, suspected. I disguised myself as a cork minstrel because there would have been nothing wonderful in one being seen in Lambeth, and also because a man who commits murder should be prepared for emergencies. Any attempt at disguise, such as a false beard, in the London streets, only makes a man more conspicuous, whereas any man who has committed murder, whether he can or cannot sing and play, can, when disguised as cork minstrel, earn his living, and travel the busiest thoroughfares in broad daylight, or even get locked up for drunkenness at night, without anyone suspecting he has blood as well as burnt cork on his hands. The disguise is simple and perfect, and I can commend it to anyone who wants to get rid of his wife as I did.

Of course, I married my rich cousin, and am quite happy and contented. This is not a story, or I should have tried to make it more harrowing, with "qualms of conscience," "murder dreams," and the usual stock in trade of blood and thunder writers. I never felt, and have not felt, any of these things. I murdered my wife because I wanted to get rid of her, as hundreds of other men would if they thought they could not be found out, and, under similar circumstances, I should do so again.

MOTORING MEMS.

London, Friday, 29th November 1907.

There is not much in the idea of doing away with the Olympia Show. It may be, indeed everything points to the fact that next year, we shall have a seven or ten days Exhibition instead of fourteen days as this year. Whether the meeting held to consider the question of the abolition of the Show was a wholly genuine gathering is not for us to say. It looks very much like a "worked" scheme, to enable some of the big pots to let off a little gas in regard to business done. Everyone knows that Shows are expensive affairs, but how much per chassis sold would the actual cost work out at? One man had the audacity to say that it cost his firm an average of under £2 per chassis to exhibit, and the total cost amounted to nearly £2,000, including Show Chassis, Stand, Staffs, etc. Another suggestion that has been made is that prominence should be given to British cars. The home product, it is suggested, should have the central position in the Hall, while foreign stuff should be relegated to the annexe and galleries. That however will not be done for years to come yet, if ever.

Taking things generally as they appear on the surface, without going too deeply into matters technical, it was very noticeable how makers are constructing their chassis so as to make everything as get-at-able as possible.

Nearly everyone is making the differential with a large inspection plate, doors to the crank chamber have become very general, while the absence of lubricating pipes about the engine and chassis is very apparent.

There has been a greatly increased following of the multiple disc clutch to the exclusion of the metal to metal type. Positive forced lubrication is everywhere, while fixed ignition seems to be slightly increasing.

The Italian School which after all follows very closely upon the Mercedes practice seems most in vogue on the new cars, the inverted cam type of low tension magneto being especially popular.

Prince Ranji besides other purchases was noticed ordering a Calthorpe car during the second week of the Show. These cars are Birmingham made and have lately become exceedingly popular with the British public. In hill climbs and reliability tests they have been wonderfully successful of late. The cars are built at one factory only, and that is situate on the borders of the famous hardware town. For a moderate priced car, with really sound workmanship, it would be hard to beat these trustworthy Birmingham made cars; and the motoring public generally has shown its faith in them.

One of the first, if not actually the first, firm to consider the Indian market was the Albion Company of Scotstoun, a suburb of Glasgow, in their aim to make a car suitable for the Indian and Colonial market, the Albion Company have specialised in the matter of fixing solid tyres to an otherwise ordinary Touring Car, and, what is more important still, the firm has done so with unqualified success. That such has been the case is a very fine testimonial indeed, for a solid tyre necessitates considerations other than that of extensive springing. Ask any Scottish motorist what the reputation of an Albion car is, and hear what he has to say. Besides that, the firm specialise in the low tension magneto system; of their own design and construction, and one that has stood the test of six or seven years all round use.

One of the most honest exhibits in the Show was the Nagant-Hobson car. By honest we mean an exhibit that was something more than simply a motor car to be sold and paid for. The Nagant-Hobson car was a piece of work that no one could find fault with, built by engineers of the first rank the car does not suffer as so many engineer-built cars have done in the past by being overweighted. "Light but strong and a first class car." Such was the remark of a well known motorist at the Show in regard to this exhibit, and a better or truer remark could hardly have been made. This car will shortly be heard of very extensively in India. One of the successes of the home market, there can be little doubt, that it will repeat this performance in India and make even more friends than it has done up to the present in England.

SPORTING RIFLES PAST AND PRESENT.

THE essential qualities of a good sporting rifle are accuracy and flat trajectory—and these were combined in a remarkable degree in the weapons used by the American backwoodsmen and pioneers of more than a century ago—then long and heavy small bore "Kentucky" rifles, copied more or less probably from the German or Swiss models taken over from Europe. Shooting light spherical bullets with heavy powder charges from slow twist rifled barrels were very accurate and required only one sight for the ranges at which they were generally used.* As the bullets, cased in tight fitting greased linen patches, were not liable to strip in the slow twist deep rifling, the powder charge could be increased and high velocity almost up to the standard of the modern express obtained. And as the rifle was very heavy in comparison with the weight of the bullet accuracy was not affected by recoil. The sporting rifled weapons which came into use later on in India differed in every way from these small bore "pea" rifles—they were intended for use at larger game and were of far larger calibre. As the rifle was a fairly handy weapon of comparatively light weight and the twist of the rifling fairly quick, the powder charge was comparatively small and the trajectory of course, had a considerable curve, the flap-sights requiring to be used beyond about 50 yards. These weapons had only one advantage over the smooth bore of the period in their accuracy—they were inferior in other respects. Some fifty years ago considerable improvements were made in large bore sporting weapons by Forsyth, who by using a slow twist rifling was able to increase the powder charge and considerably increase the velocity so that a fairly flat trajectory was obtained up to one hundred and twenty yards. Spherical bullets were used in these rifles which were later made as breech loaders and are to this day considered most efficient big game rifles by many sportsmen.

Conical bullets, hollow pointed and solid, also explosive shells of various patterns came into use with these and other large bore weapons, but their increased weight gave greater recoil, a set off to the greater power obtained, and the trajectory curve was, of course, higher. Special rifles of large bore, 4, 8, 10 or 12 gauge, were formerly much used for killing big game in Africa and in India. They were strong heavy weapons firing big powder charges and spherical ball—sometimes conical—and are still preferred by some for big game such as elephants etc. Their place is, however being rapidly taken by the new nitro rifles mentioned later on.

In the seventies the small bore express rifle—an offshoot and modification of the small bore military rifle introduced some time before by Whitworth—was brought to the notice of the sporting world. It differed from the military rifle principally in having a short light bullet driven at high velocity by a large powder charge in place of a heavy bullet driven at a comparatively slow speed by a moderate charge. It was originally a muzzle loader like the other arms of the period. The light express bullet, which was generally made with a hollow point to unable it to open out on striking (which incidentally probably gave it greater accuracy by lightening its head), having a high initial speed of from 1,700 to 1,900 or more feet per second had a very flat trajectory at sporting ranges and no trouble was required to judge distances up to nearly 200 yards, an enormous advantage over the weapons previously in use. With the lighter bullets used in most expresses, however, extreme accuracy was not to be expected beyond about 150 yards a good useful sporting range.

* Later on light conical bullets very much of the "Spitzer" type were used in these rifles.

The original express was made ·450 gauge —the size of the then "small-bore" military rifle—and its bullet was about 370 grains weight. It was followed by the ·500 shooting a 340 grain bullet, and the ·577 shooting a bullet of 480 to 530 grains, also a miniature express, the ·360, which was only the rook rifle of the same calibre chambered for a heavy powder charge—its bullet was 150 grains. There was also the ·400 express an excellent weapon for antelope, etc. Some gunmakers to obtain greater power increased the weights of the bullets for the various calibres, and such rifles generally known as Magnum expresses besides being more powerful were if the powder charge was not excessive more accurate at the longer sporting ranges and their trajectory was very little affected by the change. A good example of this is the ·500 bore which gives excellent results with a 440 grain bullet. Of course, increased recoil resulted from increase of weight of bullet or powder. Ordinary express rifles can be used with far greater comfort with cartridges specially loaded with nitro powder and metal based bullets to give results identical with those of black powder, but with far less recoil, noise, dirt, and no smoke. With the advent of the modern military small bore rifle with nitro powder and metal covered bullet, of extreme high velocity and flat trajectory some fifteen years ago, the sporting weapon underwent a great change.

For the first few years the sporting small bore was merely the military rifle modified in its stocking and sighting to suit sporting requirements its bullet also being altered by having an exposed "Soft Nose" or its metal jacket slit in various ways to enable it to open out and expend its energy in making a deadly wound, the passage of the thin hard coated military bullet through an animal in most cases being almost innocuous. Single and double-barrelled as well as repeating rifles of the American type were soon afterwards built to take the small bore military cartridge, which varies from ·256 to ·315 calibre shooting bullets of from 160 to 240 grains weight with velocities from about 2,400 down to 1,950 feet per second, our own ·303 rifle shooting a 215 grain bullet with a velocity of from 2,000 to 2,100 feet per second.

During the last few years the high velocity nitro cartridge of the military type has been adapted to sporting rifles of calibres considerably larger than the usual military sizes, and the new "nitro expresses" are not only now taking the place of the old black powder expresses of the same calibre but have supplanted the old large bore big game rifles also. They are enormously powerful weapons compared with the old expresses as will be seen by looking at the ballistic tables to be found in many gunmakers' catalogues. The enormous power of the modern high power nitro rifles is due to their having a heavy bullet driven at a high velocity and this entails their being made very strong and comparatively heavy weapons if of large calibre.

Smaller calibre weapons of this class such as the ·360 or ·400, however, are light and handy.

Nitro rifles of low power made for lighter charges and bullets are light and handy weapons and more nearly approach the old black powder expresses in power. Rifles of this description can be had to suit all requirements.

The military type of small bore sporting rifle in spite of its many good qualities is under certain circumstances dangerous to use on account of its extremely long range and some of the low power nitro rifles with lighter bullets would perhaps be found more suitable. Bullets of larger diameter also we think give better shock effect.

The modern sporting rifle is made in such variety that it is difficult to select any particular one. Of course, the choice of a weapon depends on the game and to some extent on the country it is to be used in, but we should think a rifle of ·375 gauge with a comparatively light bullet driven at a muzzle speed of 2,500 foot-seconds as advertised by one of the leading gunmakers in our paper would make an excellent arm for most purposes, as it can be had as a double or single barrel or with magazine, and its light bullet in spite of its high speed and flat trajectory would not make it much more dangerous to use in open country than the old express.

In the German and American armies the pointed Spitzer bullet, which is considerably lighter than the ordinary military bullet (the new American bullet is only 150 grains weight compared with 220 grains of the old one) has been adopted. Extraordinary results are given by this bullet—its trajectory is extremely flat; so much so, that elevation on the sights for 600 yards for the heavy bullet carries the new one to about 1,000 yards, and it maintains its advantage to over 2,000 yards we believe. It has a further advantage in lightness of ammunition—a saving of some ten pounds in 1,000 rounds. Heavy bullets of pointed or Spitzer shape have beaten the ordinary ones for accuracy as demonstrated at Bisley and elsewhere, the pointed shape being better adapted for passing through the air, but, of course, in their case there is no saving in weight and not much gain in flatness of trajectory.

Messrs. Holland and Holland have a ·375 rifle shooting a bullet with 2,500 feet muzzle velocity. Assuming the weight of the bullet to be 250 grains its muzzle energy would be 3,466 foot-pounds while a 320 grain bullet of the same gauge travelling with a muzzle speed of 2,020 feet seconds, would have a muzzle energy of 2,915 foot lbs. The former would have a very considerably flatter trajectory and would enable one to use a standard sight for about 250 yards without overshooting at lesser ranges, while a slightly coarser sight would do for 300 yards or over. If the weight of the bullet were lowered to 200 grains it would still have the high muzzle energy of over 2,700 foot lbs, which would be ample for antelope, etc., at ranges of 200 yards or more.

From Messrs. Westley Richards' experiments they have established the fact that great accuracy can be had with light bullets of the same length as the long heavy bullets generally used, short light bullets of the type used in the old expresses being well known to be inaccurate at ranges much beyond 100 yards and they make their light bullets with far the greater part of the weight in the base, the front being hollow and light. This allows of a very formidable form of expanding projectile.

Bullets on this principle with very light hollow fronts have done exceedingly well in rifled shot and ball guns constructed specially for them; they shoot accurately to over 300 yards while the old short bullet cannot be depended on for much over 100 yards. As shot and ball guns of this type have with suitable nitro powder a considerably higher muzzle velocity than the old type they are almost if not quite equal to the heavy large bore rifles of a few years ago in power, while they are handier to use. The smaller gauges are still better in this respect as they have still higher velocities, the 28 gauge, though it weighs less than six pounds, shoots a 300 grain bullet with a muzzle velocity of over 1,700 feet per second, almost rivalling the old black powder express.

Automatic sporting rifles are also to be had at present. They are of various calibres, but two of them the Remington ·350 and the Winchester ·351, which shoot comparatively light bullets of 200 and 180 grains with M.V. o 2,000 and 1,860 foot seconds respectively, ought to be very nice weapons for antelope and light game with soft nosed bullets. They are fairly light and handy and carry 5 shots in the magazine and one in the chamber. They should prove excellent weapons for defensive purposes.

Repeating and automatic shot guns fitted with rifled barrels of the "shot and ball" type ought to make good weapons for big game. The 12 gauge Winchester "take down" with a special short rifled barrel makes a very good, handy weapon of this type.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Once more it is our very pleasing privilege to offer our congratulations to a good sportsman on the victory of a good horse. Fitzgrafton, on Tuesday, again won the Viceroy's Cup for the Hon. Mr. A. A. Apcar, and his Mallard was again placed second, thus repeating last year's performance.

We never swerved in our allegiance to this horse and that he won in record time is additional proof that—as the race showed—the prophets notwithstanding, he was the one animal in the race all along. Owing to the Christmas festivities in which our printers permit themselves to indulge we are unable to do more in this issue than give the results of the day's racing, reserving comment for next week.

The notice regarding the shooting restrictions in Chamba next year will be of interest to any of our readers who contemplate visiting that State bent on shikar. They will be found further on.

Just as we had gone to press last week, we received the report of the Chittagong Races. We had already given the bare results; we now, with apologies, give our readers complete details in our Turf Reports.

Race horse owners and trainers in Bengal frequently speculate on the possibility of discovering a really good situation for a summer resort, stud farm and training establishment, in a good climate, within reasonable distance of racing headquarters. Now that the E.I.R. line runs that way, it occurs to us that Hazaribagh might be found suitable; it has, we think, the attractions of climate, soil and tolerable proximity to Calcutta. We have in mind a large place that might be worth attention in this respect. The property consists of a commodious residence with outhouses, godowns, tea houses (with a tea engine and a pumping engine) and cattle sheds, together with some four hundred acres of land under tea and coffee cultivation, besides fruit and flower gardens, wells, tanks containing fish, and good shooting grounds adjoining, where snipe, quail jungle fowl, partridges and hare can be had in abundance. The property is at an elevation of nearly 2,000 feet., above sea-level and the station is one of the few health resorts of Bengal, the climate is salubrius and fodder, etc., cheap. The place is specially suited for the keeping of horses during the hot and rainy months of the year, and a race course being within a mile of the property, is a further advantage to owners of racing stock. Hazaribagh is 41 miles from the Hazaribagh Road Railway station, East India Railway grand chord line, but as a motor car service is shortly to be started this distance will be covered in from three to four hours and the journey to and from Calcutta will occupy from ten to twelve hours. The property would be suitable for an Indian prince, a retired military officer, a sportsman or a public trainer. If any of our readers are interested we could put them in communication with the owner.

The first day of the first Calcutta Meeting was another good innings for the favourites and the books at its close were asking, as cheerfully as they could manage under the circumstances, when they were going to come in. Sea Spray was the only winner at longer odds than 2 to 1, and 6 to 4 or even money on was much more the order of the day.

The great event of the afternoon was of course the Trials which as per expectation was a pretty soft thing for Stirabout, but the places were a bit of an upset as Botha who got second was on offer at 5 to 1 for a place. It is curious how this animal got overlooked, as a matter of fact he is quite good enough class to win the Trials most years and it was distinctly hard luck to run up against a horse like Stirabout, who is about the best that has been seen out here up to now. In a gallop the other day, Mr. Bell's horse did the mile in 1-43, and Stirabout won on Saturday in 1-42¾ so that the Australian must have been pretty consistent in his performance. A notable feature of the race was the way in which Fitzgrafton after coming up strong from the distance seemed to die away again and let Sacristan II. beat him for third place. Sermon was a great disappointment to his stable who fancied his chances for a place anyhow, but he got away badly and though he came up with Sacristan II. for a short space near the hospital he had soon shot his bolt and was out of the hunt before they got to the distance.

The Burdwan Cup was not much of a race to watch from the point of view of excitement, but was a very pretty spectacle, and Mallard's performance was an object lesson in how to race over hurdles. Not only was he without peer between the jumps but he gained a yard or more at each flight and took them with a beautiful easy action that was a delight to watch. Hoyt allowed Kipling to stay with him till after the last and then came away and won as he pleased. Of course it must not be forgotten that Mallard was receiving 14lbs. from last year's winner but even with the weights reversed it is probable that the result would be much the same. It is a pity that Stockman was not able to start, but it is said that he has never recovered thoroughly from that fall in Poona and they do not think that he will strike his old form until he has beed laid up for some time and given a thorough chance to get right.

The International Pony Plate went to Lady Avon for the third time and it is interesting to note that carrying 3lbs. less than she did last year, her time (1-31½) was just ½sec., worse. Lady Grey II., evidently found 9st. 1lb. too much for her, as last season in Bombay with 8st. up she won the 7 furlongs in 1-29⅘ without being pressed and it was on this that the public backed her to even money until the stable commission brought their other animal to first favourite. Learning that they were on the wrong one, the punters hastened to hedge and Lady Grey II. receded to fours or fives. It was a curious sight to see the two ponies from the one stable racing out ahead of everything, apparently cutting one another's throats. Their only dangerous opponent Wakeful however had got away badly, Mr. Barrett not daring to make too much use of [illegible] first under the big weight was too late ever to trouble the leader very seriously and though Lady Grey II., was finished at the ½ mile, Scott's other mare was able to go on and win comfortably from Wakeful by 1¼ lengths.

The Grand Stand Plate was not particularly exciting. In some mysterious way everybody seemed not only to think but to know that Florrie was back to form and must win and the stable were bitterly disappointed at the odds when they went to back her almost to the extent of wishing she might lose and even though their own money went with the rest. Moreover again, "everybody" was right and the little mare got right away from them from the start and Lady Metal could never get on terms with her. The time, 1min. 4⅘secs., was pretty slow and Lady Metal, if she had been in the form she was last January when she ran the distance in 1min. 3secs. with 9st. 10lbs. up might have made a better show as she carried but 2lbs. more on this occasion.

Mr. Dearis secured the Ellenborough Plate again this season but his winner this time did not show quite such a good form as did Meadow Saffron last year when she won the race in 1min. 16⅕secs. with 8st. 13lbs., up against Sea Spray's 1min. 17secs. under 8st. 10lbs. and she was lucky to find Pendred, a long way the best horse in the race, handicapped under such a big weight as 9st. 12lb. The struggle between the two was the most exciting finish of the day to the top weight appearing to have the race as they passed the big stand and it was by a magnificent final effort that young Robbins just brought the filly on again and won by a short head.

Honest Lady's win in the Paddock Plate was a very nice one for the stable, but not much catch for the public, who had got all their money on Fireworks. Our State and Merrie Elsie before the commission on Scott's mare showed them what to expect and then it was too late. In Killorn's capable hands she ran a very fine mare and carried her 10st. to victory in 2min. 11secs., a first-class performance and as she won comfortably by two lengths she probably could do even better if pressed. Of the public favourites Fireworks made the best show and raced with the winner to the distance from where she was beaten and had to take second place, Merrie Elsie was kicked at the gate and not liking it at all ran a very unkind mare: while Our State found 10st. not at much to this taste and was also out of the hunt from the beginning. Nirvana carrying only 6st. 8lbs. managed to run third, but a very bad one and he is nothing like the same class as the others.

The match between Tycannah and Sparkle was a very silly affair as the country-bred ran all over the place at the bend and the waler was out on his own for the rest of the journey and won anyhow.

We are very sorry to learn of the death from peritonitis of Mr. E. J. Chard, the well known bookmaker. He was only thirty-nine and was universally popular. A cheery kind hearted soul and a straight man of business he will be lamented by the patrons of the betting ring as one of the best of the bookmakers who worked here.

The first Calcutta paperchase this season was held as usual out past the sixth milestone on Saturday. It was a bright bracing morning and as far as overhead conditions went an ideal day for the game but underfoot there was quite another story to tell and the going was terribly hard. There were a goodly number going round but nothing like such a keen competition for places as in former seasons and many of last year's thrusters were away or merely looking on. Those great antagonists for the Average Cup Mr. Lamond Walker and Mr. Ballantyne are both at home, and among others who were usually in the forefront of the battle last season Dr. Forsyth, Captain Holden, Messrs. Stokes, Pugh, Pierson and Levetus were out merely in the capacity of onlookers, or cantering slowly over the course. Captain Fraser rode hard on his stout chaser Diabolo and if he cares to keep him for the Average Cup instead of racing him he should have a very good chance of securing that coveted trophy as Turk, the winner of this first chase, is, of course, not eligible to compete, as he has won more than the Rs. 550 limit. Mr. Evers, a most unlucky man with his paperchase horses has everyone's sympathy in his misfortune with Eclipse, who overreached badly and will, it is reported, be laid up for a week or two just now of all times when he is most wanted. Of the new animals Mr. Winckworth's Ermine looks one of the best, and carried his somewhat big weight round very comfortably to sixth place. The finishing order was Mr. Rees (Turk), Captain Fraser (Diabolo,) Mr. Scaramanga (Lucifer), Mr. Evers (Eclipse), Mr. Halliday (Ruddigore), Mr. Winckworth (Ermine), followed by Messrs. Fitzgerald, Radmore, Locket, Antram, Bingham, Dr. Hossack, Mrs. Forsyth, Mr. Barrow, Mrs. Damiano, etc. Mrs. Paris' new one, The Palmer, is a fine bold jumper but got a bit out of hand and ran off the course. There was a better muster of ponies than usual, but they were not racing very keenly and straggled in at very long intervals. They were nearly all old hands at the game and the only new ones to the paper that were noticed were Captain Holden's Warsprite who is likely to run well at Tollygunge next week and a taking looking 14-1 mare called Lady Rose ridden by Mr. Bletsoe who shaped very well for a young 'un. The chase was won by the Hon'ble T. D. Y. Bingham on Pathfinder II. with Mr. Evers second, Mr. Corbett on Mr. Lamond Walkers' old pony the Pink 'Un next and Mr. Wells' (Lady Wilful), Mr. Muir (Claris), Mr. Antram (Blazes), Mr. Levetus (Lady George), Mr. Wheeler (Envious), Mr. MacDonnell (Miss. Preston) Mr. Blestoe (Lady Rose), Captain Holden (Warsprite) straggled in after them at very long intervals.

The Indian Polo Association's Championship tournament opened in Calcutta on Monday when the 17th Lancers met and defeated the Carabineers in the first round by 7 goals to 6. The Lancers deserved to win; they showed much the better form, combination and judgment; the Carabineers were assisted by quite unusual luck.

On Tuesday the Calcutta team covered themselves with glory and the cognoscenti with confusion by beating Jodhpur by 3 goals to 2, after an unusually brilliant game. We hold over full report till next week, when we can give complete results of the tournament.

We have received a capital catalogue from Messrs Manton & Co., the old established firm of gunmakers, whose name has been a household word in the three presidencies longer than the oldest resident can remember. The list is full and complete and deals with those shooting and athletic requisites dear to the heart of all sportsmen, who, of course, will not fail to obtain a copy if they desire to keep in touch with all that is up to date in the sporting world.

We draw attention to the advertisement regarding the Tollygunge Club Horse Show which will be held next Wednesday. Her Excellency Lady Minto will present the prizes, the Leinster band will be in attendance; for the rest we refer our readers to the notice itself.

A Full account of the fight for the Heavy-Weight Championship between Gunner Moir and Tommy Burns will be found in our London sporting letter to-day. We were always of those who considered poor "Tiger" Smith's asperations to Championship honours as savouring of the ridiculous; taking a line through this fight and seeing how Moir fared, one wonders how many seconds the "Tiger" could have lived with the redoubtable little American who is acknowledged first class, while Moir's claims to championship class were never seriously advanced even by many of his friends.

The Baboo's essay on "The Horse" is sometimes quoted. Recently we were asked to give it publicity; we reproduce it now, some of it has been printed before, parts, we believe, have not hitherto been given to the public.

The Horse.

The horse is a very noble animal, but if you beat him he will not do so. He is ridden upon the spinal cord by means of a mechanical contrivance called bit and bridle, and sadly the rider puts his foot in stirrup and divides his lower limbs across the saddle. The horse has a long mouth and the head is attached to body by a long protuberance called neck. His coat is of many colours and he is provided with some hairs on his neck and somewhat longer ones on his tail. He has four legs—two on the front side and two on the back side—with these he propels himself too swiftly, or with those on the back side he defends himself from attack by extending them in the rear in a parallel direction towards his enemies. But this he does only when in a vexatious mood.

When he is minded to walk his pace is pleasant, especially to those parts of human anatomy exposed to abrassion and contusion of saddle. But when his gait is otherwise—as in gallop—the mind of the rider becomes perplexed and when he resorts to the devilish trick of buck jumpings then indeed the life of the rider is precarious and he has an instant mind to descend to terra-firma. And too soon his desire is accomplished.

The movements of the horse are various, some simple, others at once intricate. Sometimes he is said to "walk like a gentleman;" again he may have "perfect manners; more rarely" in respect of aged and fearful equestrians, he is "confidential." In cantering, he is at other times mendaciously described by the unscrupulous seller as "an arm chair," at other times, to borrow the lurid metaphor of the livery stable, he will "play up merry hells." In this mood it has been my invariable misfortune to encounter the European horse.

His fooding is generally grasses and grams. He is also useful to take on his back a man or woman as well as some cargo. He has power to run as fast as he could. He has got no sleep at night time, and always standing awaken. Also there are horses of short sizes called pony. They do the same as the others are generally doing. There is no animal like the horse; no sooner they see their guardian or master they always crying for fooding.

Country-bred tattoo is too docile and somewhat feeble, also he is very amenable to blows and the harsh word, but European horse he is at once a very Dam.

Australia won the first test match by two wickets.

Quite the neatest and most useful little pocket book we have handled for years comes to us with seasonable compliments from Messrs. W. Leslie and Co. of Calcutta. It opens both ways—back and front—contains a section for memoranda, one for a diary, calendars, tables and a "Daily wants Dictionary" which to us is quite a novelty. In addition there is much useful information put up in nutshell form.

Messrs. Oakes and Co., Ld., of Madras, sent us a copy of their special sectional list of fishing tackle—a comprehensive and helpful publication for Indian fishermen. We commend it to all who handle a rod in this country.

Harmston's Circus pursues the even tenour of its way and nightly collects under its huge canvas a large percentage of "Ditchers" of every nationality, every grade and every shade. It is one more proof of the oft-repeated saying that if a good feast is provided there will never be wanting men to come and eat it. Amusement caterers are wont to grumble at the apathy of the Calcutta public, but Harmstons are not troubled on this score: they offer a first class show and the resultant crowds attest the success of their enterprise. Throughout the week a well filled tent has assisted at the discussion of the big bill of fare set forth, and on Saturday and Wednesday the place was packed at matinee and night performance. One can't have too much of a good thing we know, but it sometimes strikes us that the management give almost too much, so long and varied are their programmes! Fifteen items introducing examples of human excellence and high trained animal talent, a number of them "star" turns too, ought to satisfy the appetite of the veriest glutton for amusement.

Miss Nellie Harmston-Love has a very graceful act with her clever waler pony "Beauty," there seems very little in the way of arena work left for her to learn. The rubber-like Pattersons continue their most astounding feats; they achieved popularity with a bound, so to speak, and have been bounding ever since to the intense enjoyment of all who see them at it. Those dainty maidens the Collins sisters have given us fresh items from their long repertoire; they sing and dance as prettily as ever and get more than a big share of the applause. The really funny clowns and the Frantz troupe have been quite at their best throughout the week and have impressed their audiences most favourably. The animals are capital in all they go through. The popular jumping competitions have begun; they nearly always fill well and are the subject of muchs peculative interest among a great many people. To-night the proprietary make their time-honoured presentations to the trainer and jockey of the winner of the Viceroy's Cup.

In the last number of Recreation, an interesting American sporting paper, a Mr. Thatcher contributes a few reminiscences of Indian pig-sticking, among them the following:—"On one occasion a huge grey boar had kept up a running fight for some miles, turning first on one pursuer and then on another in mad fury, charging and charging again, each time being met with a deadly spear thrust, until at last he took refuge in a muddy pond. At this stage of the game there were only three of us left, the others having dropped out or been knocked out for the pace had been fast and furious. It was very unfortunate at this critical juncture, as it was late in the evening and there is little or no twilight in India. There were we three, utterly helpless, sitting on our beaten, fagged-out horses with hardly a kick left in them, on the water's edge, whilst a few yards away, with his feet firmly planted in the deep mud, stood the boar, with the finest pair of tushes to be seen in a day's march, nonchalantly splashing water over himself, as if he had all Eternity before him. It was suicide to go in after him through the deep mud, and he knew it. 'Come in' he seemed to say with a grin, 'There's plently of room in here and it's delightfully cool'—and night was closing in rapidly. As we sat eyeing him with intense disapproval, before any one could get a move on his horse, the boar was out in the midst of us like a streak of lightning and we were all tangled up in a heap of hides and hoofs. Before we had quite realized what had happened, the boar was back again in the pond placidly splashing water over himself whilst one of our horses lay dying on the ground, and its rider left with a broken spear and a bad shaking. Again the boar made another sortie, and though on the second occasion he did not do so much damage, he retired to his fastness with easy honors. After the third rally we decided that we would leave him in possession and in my last view of him in the fading light as we slowly and reluctantly turned our bridles homeward, he was still standing scornfully laving himself in the cool water. When I renewed my acquaintance with him some few days later in a place where there was no pond, he fell fighting bravely against overwhelming odds, and his magnificent tushes now adorn the sides of a photograph frame."

"No. 15967," evidently a member of the English C. T. C., has been sending to the Gazette some notes on Himalayan cycling. He writes:—"The charms of running free for a long distance downhill has, I think, a peculiar attraction for all cyclists. Consequently, when I went the other day to Mussoorie, in the Indian Himalayas, I took my bicycle with me, having it carried up the mountain by a coolie, and riding a pony myself. Cycles are not allowed in hill stations, but certain things can be smuggled, among them bicycles. Mussoorie is 7,500 feet above the sea, and to Dehra Dun is a drop of about 5,000 feet in 27 miles or so. The ordinary road or path from Rajpur, 6½ miles from Dehra, to Mussoorie, is only about 7 miles, but it is far too steep for any sort of vehicular traffic. But there is a winding road only used by Mackinnon's Brewery bullock carts, which in my opinion was possible for cyclists, and I determined to make it so. By this road it is about 20 miles to Rajpur and 6½ on to Dehra Dun. I had never been along it, but had frequently caught glimpses of it winding round the hills from the road mentioned above. I had my free wheel drum removed from my bicycle, and a back-pedalling drum attached, also foot-rests, and by a simple arrangement was able to use both hands on the rim brake of the front wheel; I had no other brake. I had not proceeded far on my ride before it became apparent that I had set myself a rather awkward task. There was scarcely one straight fifty yards in the first twenty miles, and the bends were often an almost complete turn back. Moreover, at the bends the road was invariably steeper and banked the wrong way, namely, down to the edge of a precipice of perhaps 1,000 feet sheer, drop without even a six-inch kerbstone to delay matters. There had been no rain for about five weeks, consequently the road was a bit cut up, especially at the bends, and it was no easy task to ride round the sharp and very steep curves without side-slipping. However, nothing particular happened until rounding a curve about six miles from Mussoorie I almost ran into a herd of cattle. Dismounting, I attempted to pass on foot, when a cow with calf at heel made for me. Discretion lent me wings, and I flew up the hillside, which was like the wall of a house, with the agility of a Gurkha. A few march of considerable difficulty brought me in of the herd, and rocks came in handy to urge the beasts up the hill and clear of my machine, which I expected to find as scrap iron, but was fortunate enough to find intact. I could see the animals smelling it, but the ironwork was so hot from several hours' exposure to a tropical sun that it was scarcely possible to pick it up by the frame, and I fancy the nose of a cow is as sensitive as the back of our hands. This game was twice played on me by these beasts, who I fancy had never seen a white man much less a bike, before. I tried coasting once or twice, but it was too much for my nerves. They stood the strain of running round an unknown curve within twelve inches of the precipice very well for a mile or so, but the strain of not being able to see sometimes twenty yards, or even ten yards in front was too much to last long, and I steadied down.

At Rajpur I struck the main road to Dehra Dun, and for 5½ miles I coasted at about 18 miles an hour along a perfect road of so easy and uniform descent that I scarcely touched the brake the whole way, and only coming into the bazar at Dehra obliged me to check my pace. I send an account of this little ride, as I believe no one has ever attempted the first part of it before. I do not now recommend it to any but experienced riders, but to them it is well worth riding, and the last six miles could not be better in any country."

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—On Monday H. E. Sir George Sydenham Clarke opened the new Bombay Gymkhana building, a large number being present. He arrived at the maidan end and was received at the central gates, chairs being arranged in front on each side. As president of the club, the Hon. Mr. Justice Russell made a short speech, thanking those on whose shoulders the work had fallen and the Governor for consenting to open the new premises. His Excellency in replying said he was glad to hear the Gymkhana was in such a flourishing condition and that other communities also were exerting themselves in the cause of sport.

After the cheers he unlocked the door and declared the building open, he and Lady Clarke being shown round. Those assembled then adjourned for tea to the lawn which was made picturesque with Chinese lanterns, proceedings being enlivened by the G. I. P. R. Band under Mr. Mullandaine.

Two years ago Bombay was visited by a team of Ceylonese cricketers who met with considerable success and we now have another with us who term themselves a Malay team. It can scarcely be said they are up to representative European, Hindu or Parsee teams, but that they are good enough for ordinary club teams is evident by their success in the first match after a game up hill fight.

Their opponents on Wednesday and Thursday were the Islam Gymkhana eleven against whom they made a poor show in the first innings. 107 was all the visiting team could score against the bowling of Ali, Mullaji and Edroos, who took 3 for 48, 4 for 28 and 2 for 13 respectively. M. M. Yaldeen came out best with a score of 34, Buckman making 10, M. A. Yaldeen 11, Sampan 11 and Sulaiman 15 not out.

Thanks to a grand innings with but one chance by Razak of 122 in which he hit two sixes and eighteen fours, the Islamites made 242. Ali made 37, Mense 29 and Peer Mahomed 14. Warish with 4 for 47, and M. M. Yaldeen 3 for 32 bowled best.

With a deficit of 135, the Malay team opened their second venture well with Warish and M. H. Yaldeen 24 and 20, Mantara then putting on 83 undismissed; a faultless display in which eleven boundaries were included. M. H. Yaldeen, 25, and H. A. Amath 12, also helped towards a total of 192. Mullaji and Ali again bowled well, taking 5 for 46 and 3 for 61.

Left with 57 the Gymkhana collapsed, Edroos with [illegible] being the only batsman to play the bowling of [illegible] and M. M. Yaldeen who took, respectively, [illegible] wickets for 4 runs and 3 for 25. The innings only realised 37 and consequently left the visitors winners by 20 runs.

In the second Bombay Extra on Saturday, punters again had a good time, as they usually do with the terms races that open the season; five warm favourites out of six romping home, though there were one or two grand finishes.

The big upset occurred in the first event the Auction Plate, of half a mile which on form was at the mercy of one of the fastest sprinters amongst Arabs, Sherali. Backed down to threes on he looked all over a winner in the straight when Express came at him and gradually overhauled him. Seeing the way the favourite had won his five-furlong race the previous Saturday after first having bolted this performance was a poor one, the time only just being under 55secs.; a second longer than Sherali has been known to do. At the end of the day there was an enquiry the result of which is not yet known.

A TWO-HORSE race, the Holiday Plate saw Mudlool soon settle down to an even money favourite from Ashroff and the public opinion was thoroughly vindicated as Mudlul won from pillar to post with Ashroff beating Basheer in the run home. It is said there was also an enquiry into this after Mudlool's running last week when comfortably beaten by Sherali.

FIRST of the big horse races was the Winter Plate of 7 furlongs for which Rosewater and Admiral Crichton were fancied, the latter dwindling to odds on. This again was no sort of a race as Epitome made the pace to past the half mile where Admiral Crichton came out and won on his own. Rosewater was left and was never in the running.

AFTER his easy seven furlongs win last time and with less to beat now, Peculiar was a real good thing for the Arab Trial Plate for which he was made a 5 to 2 on favourite. Scarlet led him to the half mile and with Williams waiting nicely in front he had the race cooked from these, though Krushan came fast at the finish passing Hadee and Scarlet to get an easy second.

THE Little Arab Trial Plate over five furlongs included most of those that went over six last week and on the running Grey Falcon was made a hot favourite when insufficient money came for Rose with quite a parcel on Mudlool for his second outing. This race provided a grand finish as Gaucho was passed by Grey Falcon and Mudlool as the three furlongs and from there to the finish these two were locked together. Opposite the press enclosure Mudlool on the outside had a bare head lead but in a slashing finish the favourite just got there. Rose got a bad start and was never in the hunt.

LASTLY came the second big horse race, the Christmas Plate of 5 furlongs, with Killna and Faded Lily fighting for favouritism. Eventually, weight of money brought the former to twos on. To start with Jubilant and Projecture got away badly and Killna, Vocalist and Faded Lily were in a bunch till the last named on the outside forged ahead, Vocalist dropping behind Killna. At the bend the distances were a length each but Faded Lily going wide at the bend Williams dashed in on Killna on to the rails. It was a magnificent race down the straight, Faded Lily holding her own till on the post where Killna showed a bare neck in front. This was Williams' third win and that evening he started for Calcutta, where Killorn had already gone.

Express by the way, was bought in the Auction Plate by Major A. C. Pitman, R. A., for Rs. 1,350; he is a promising pony and should be worth the price.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 6th November 1907.

TRULY this winter has begun in as weird and wild a spirit as our summer. The gods have apparently got the seasons hopelessly mixed, for while we were lamenting alternations of fog, rain and frost in town, dwellers in the country are rushing into print with accounts of untimely primroses blooming and misguided thrushes beginning domestic operations. Two thrushes were detected in the folly of laying eggs in the last days of November, and I suppose the proceeding was merely representative of those going on undiscovered. It is treacherous weather: mild nights turning cold in the small hours and winds blowing all ways, all temperatures in a day.

Dr. Haffkine—whose misunderstanding with the India Office as you no doubt are aware has been adjusted—read a paper on the plague before the Epidemiological Society on Monday evening. He put the blame of distribution on the rat and its associate flea, but had to admit that eleven years experience with a "most devastating virus" in India showed no effect upon the rat population. A most carefully organised campaign in Sydney had failed to reduce the rats and the Tokio rats had only gained health and vigour by the slaughter of nearly five millions of their number: no doubt there was overcrowding. Dr. Haffkine was able, however, to give a very satisfactory report of the effects of inoculation, which he said reduced liability to attack by two-thirds in the case of natives.

The process of widening Constitution Hill has been finished, and the trees having been left standing on the margin of the new side walk, the appearance of the road is immensly improved while its amenity for traffic is increased. Lord Michelham has presented a bronze group—a quadriga—to be made by Captain Adrian Jones, which is to go on the top of the arch. Whether this will be an improvement remains to see; but it would certainly be discreet to try the effect of a full size model before the group itself is hoisted into position. Any statue takes quite a new aspect when raised on a pedestal as witness the failure of the equestrian Wellington on the arch in question. It was a subject for artistic tears.

In the dramatic world reigns the calm that precedes the pantominne season—the near approach of Christmas is brought home to us by the usual "post early" notices issued from St. Martins Le Grand—and about the only thing I have to record is the revival at the Lyric by Mr. Lewis Waller of Monsieur Beaucaire. This is the third time the play has been revived I think: at any rate the representation of Monday was the 700th. Mr. Lewis Waller, of course, played the title role: I retain my old opinion that he is too ducal in bearing and manner when disguised as the Barber, but his performance otherwise more than satisfies. Miss Evelyn Millard was the Lady Mary Carlyle and was graceful and charming.

If Messrs. Duval and Gordon Lennox had been content to make their "Angela" a comedy in one act instead of a farcical comedy in three they would have produced a very charming and dainty play. As it is Act II., which is delightful, is marred by the sordid scheming of two unpleasant old curmudgeons which makes up Act I., and the not always refined buffoonery which constitutes Act III. The play is a very free adaption from the French, which explains its improbability in England. Angela's father and Richard Evesham's uncle arrange the marriage of the lady, a widow of thirty with the man: Angela and Richard have never seen one another, but being in the hands of their father and uncle respectively obey; and by a necessary stage accident meet in the train en route to the country house of Angela's papa. They grow friendly, confidential, and thanks to delay half way at Mackborough, have time to fall in love with one another: and arrive engaged. The scene at the Mackborough Station Hotel is the whole play: the couple "happen on" a wedding and the happiness of bride and bridegroom and of an old couple among the guests precipitates matters. Evesham and Angela who have been hidden by the waiter behind a screen while certain members of a travelling theatre company lunch in the room, don't want to come out when he tells them the coast is clear; and when they do emerge it is arm in arm. Act III. with its accidental exchange of bags and display of contents, smashed hats, tumbling over paint pots and other foolery comes like a douche of cold water and is otiose. Miss Marie Tempest was excellent as Angela and Mr. Allan Aynesworth was an eager and devoted lover as Richard. Mr. Eric Lewis as the unpleasant father and Mr. Herbert Ross as the grasping uncle were also good. There are about twenty other names on the bill, but the parts are small. Cut out Acts I. and III. and a charming little play would be left.

Mr. Wirrall's curtain raiser "A Domestic Problem" at the Court has been scoffed at for its wild improbability; but if the author did not draw his text from actual life he might have done so. Many years ago there were two elderly maiden ladies living near Etchingham in Kent: their highly prized coachman "gave notice" and to keep him they invited him to marry one of them: he might take his choice. He did: his wife and her sister died soon after and the coachman found himself possessor of a large income and a big house: but naturally enough, nobody called on him save the local Doctor who having attended the man used to come and play billiards with him. The Doctor, by the way, was made the coachman's heir. Mr. Wirrall has reproduced this story with exactness, save that he introduces three sisters instead of two and makes the coachman a butler. It is a bright and cleverly written play full of delightful character touches.

Mr. Arthur Law's well tried farce "The New Boy" has been put on at the New. It stands the test of time and does not strike one as the least out of date. The Archibald Renwick was Mr. Leon M. Lion and he acted and looked the part of the unhappy new boy at Dr. Candy's school with great success: Miss Gladys Homfry played her old part,

Mrs. Renwick the large, imposing wife who passes for her husband's mother. Not unnaturally the piece recalls Anstey's Vice Versa, though Dr. Grimstone's school and Dr. Candy's are miles apart. It is a thoroughly amusing piece of nonsense and the audience was delighted with it.

Mr. Tree is going to open his London Season at His Majesty's on Saturday, 4th January, with The Mystery of Edwin Drood, by Mr. Comyns Carr.

* * * * * * * * *

One of the cleverest things ever seen in London —the cleverest as far as imitation business is concerned— is Mr. Cyril Clensy's work in the sketch "A Dress Rehearsal" at the Tivoli. Mr. Clensy gives the most extraordinarily close and accurate imitations of Mr. G. P. Huntley, Mr. Martin Harvey and half a dozen other actors; but the gem of his performance is his imitation of Mr. G. P. Huntley imitating Mrs. Patrick Campbell. This is really the work of genius and was recognised as such by the audience. "A Dress Rehearsal" is exceedingly funny; not the least amusing figure is that of Mr. Cervantes Hall Pain, who hangs about with a bust of Shakespeare under his arm waiting to force his new play upon an unwilling manager and drives everyone away when he insists upon reading it. A French wordless sketch called "Conscience" is likely to attract attention at the Palace. A workman is induced to get drunk by a hooligan friend in a cafe and while in a drunken sleep enter to him Vantour, a banker, who murders one Laveine for the sake of the money he has on him and puts the dagger in the hand of the sleeping workman daubing him with blood. The hooligan discovers the truth and blackmails Vantour; but is induced to reveal what he knows to the police. M. Leveron as the hooligan blackmailing Vantour was perfectly marvellous: words would be useless to so clever a pantomimist.

The copyright of "Alice" having expired, no fewer than five new Alices illustrated by five new artists and issued by five old publishers arise to proclaim the virtues of the deceased by force of contrast. It was at best a thankless task to try and improve on Tenniel: to try and divorce the pictures we know so well from the text known by heart, almost, was foolish; and even though the clever and ingenious Mr. Arthur Rackham of Peter Pan book fame is among the five, his mistaken endeavour only serves to compel attention to new editions which otherwise might well be ignored. It is curious to see how clever draughtsmen hobble and flounder in Tenniel's shoes: Mr. Maybank has done some work of rare humour and originality in Punch; but illustration of Alice is beyond him. You cannot perfect the perfect.

The French airship which, in a gale of wind, broke away from the 200 men who were holding her near Verdun on Saturday, came over to us. She was seen at a great height over Cardiganshire travelling erratically seaward on Sunday morning. Several hours later she passed over County Down at a height of about 1,000 feet, her propeller, working but not continuously, the effect of the wind, of course, as there was nobody on board when she broke away. On Wednesday she came down to earth between Strangford and Belfast Loughs, left some items of equipment behind her and after scoring her mark on a field and knocking down a few feet of wall soared away again.

The London Police Magistrate is called upon to render curious services in his day's work, but quite the most original office has just been pressed upon Mr. Rose. That gentleman in dealing with a man who had erred advised him to seek work in Canada. A settler at Sawyerville, Quebec, saw the report and wrote to Mr. Rose commending his advice: he proceeded to give an account of his own success in the colony and after reflecting on the evils of alien emigration asked Mr. Rose to be good enough to find him a wife, furnishing particulars of his requirements!

THE TSINE.

Of all the brutes met with the tsine is the worst,
He's as wary as Satan—and may I be curst
If on him I've not wasted more time and boot-leather
Than on all of the other big beasts put together!

He's tricky, suspicious, and wild as a hawk,
He'll do all in his power your endeavours to balk;
He has instinct and reason, yes, doubt if you can,
But it's perfectly true that he thinks like a man.

They may talk about elephants, bison, or bear,
Deer, tiger, or panther—not one can compare
In guile of the devil or cunning like sin,
With the tsine when he's thinking of saving his skin.

Now when luck was served out to the beasts of the field
The tsine unto none his demands did he yield,
But with bovine persistency bellowed for more
Till Job lost his temper and showed him the door.

I suppose it was Job—for there's no other saint
Could have truck with a tsine without wanting to faint.
But whoever it was, to get rid of the bore,
He gave all he asked and in fact he gave more.

Said the tsine "I want scent, I want sight and an ear
That is always uplifted odd noises to hear,
And as I'm to wander upon terra firma
Unless you object, I've a fancy for Burma."

"It's a country I'm told where there's plenty of jungle,
And where men, if they track me, are certain to bungle;
I want plenty of grazing—low hills—not too level,
And"—said Job in a rage "you may go to the Devil!"

"Very good, then, I will," said the tsine with a grin:
To the devil he goes and he asks if he's in.
"Oh yes" says Beelzebub, "Come under my roof
I've always a smile for a beast with a hoof."

Says the tsine "Howdy do. I can't wait for a chat,
So I'll mention at once what I want to be at.
Now be kind to me, please, and I'll make it worth while,
I want—some of your diabolical guile."

Says the Devil "Begad, but you ask for a lot,
That precious commodity's not on the spot,
And I need all I have—still, I've got a fresh brew,
And might possibly spare just a little for you.

"As for terms, they're peculiar, but I don't think too dear,
When you've got what you want you'll have little to fear
From men or from tigers and such beasts of prey,
And I haven't a doubt but you're willing to pay."

"All I ask is whenever a fool of a tsine
Falls into man's clutches—that animal's mine,
His head or his body I don't want at all,
But his soul from thenceforth is at my beck and call."

"Agreed" said the tsine, "what with instinct and sight,
And wonderful hearing, and great speed in flight,
And the Devil's own cunning, I think we shall do,
And the fool that gets floored shall be handed to you."

"That silly old Job got so tired of my chat
That he's sent us to Burma and Java, and that
Is just what I wanted—the grazing is fine
And the jungle is specially suited to tsine."

"Your terms, too, because they're so terribly dear
Are an extra incentive to caution—that's clear:
While our colour is so much alike (here's a pull)
That a cow will be frequently shot for a bull."

"By the way—as to cows—are your terms there inclusive?
They are ladies, you know, and their souls are illusive—
"If indeed they have any"—cries Nick in a pet—
Don't you know all the fish that are caught in my net?"

"Be off! or I'll make it so thundering hot
That you'll sell me your soul for a drink on the spot,
Away to your jungle, and understand well
Every soul of a killed tsine shall grizzle in Hell!"

Away goes the tsine without wasting more words,
And collects all his species and sorts them in herds,
And he tells them of Beelzebub's terrible toll
"Whoso loses his life shall thereto lose his soul."

Now to all you bold hunters I'll try to explain
Why you're balked of your trophy again and again.
(Of your hopes you may take it on reading this line,
That a sign of the end is the end of a tsine).

Why on earth do you think a bull tsine leaves the herd
To wander about on his own? It's absurd
To suppose he's been ousted—his horns are immense,
And a small beast to fight him has far too much sense.

It is simply the bull feels he's safer alone;
He argues like this: "I am off on my own,
If I stop with the herd there's a danger I vow
Of being betrayed by some fool of a cow."

"When I'm tired of this life I can choose me a wife,
And get rid of her, too, without bother or strife,
So in bachelor freedom I'll wander at will,
Nor spend my best days trotting after a Jill."

Away goes our friend and though joyous he feels,
Black care isn't long before dogging his heels,
For when walking or sleeping or taking a roll,
There is always the thought of the De'il and his soul.

It bothers him early—it bothers him late,
He broods day and night on his terrible fate:
Should a bullet well-placed in his hide make a hole
He knows that old Nick will grab hold of his soul.

So he keeps to thick cover and feasts in the night,
And by day makes a neat little bed snug and tight
On the top of some knoll with a good field of view,
Surrounded by "In" or the shady bamboo.

As he dozes he thinks of the terrible pact
Which his ancestor made with the Devil,—in fact
Whether sleeping or roaming or eating his fill
That horrible bargain will worry him still.

Not a murmur is heard—all nature seems dumb—
Save the cooing of doves or of insects the hum.
The jungle seems wrapped in the silence of death
And the tsine hears distinctly the sound of his breath.

But hark! There's a rustle—a brushing of leaves
Very faint—but though distant it never deceives.
'Tis repeated—the animal springs to his feet.
And motionless stands his destroyers to meet.

Ah, but for the cunning bestowed by old Nick
Our bull were indeed at the end of his stick.
That stealthy approach would defeat the most wary,
Unless he had supped like the tsine with old Leary.

Another faint rustle—the stealthiest tread,
And the bull catches sight of a Burman's bare head:
The next moment the cap of the hunter appears
And—the tsine gives a snort and at once disappears!

Alas! For your hopes as he crashes away,
That's the last you will see of that tsine for that day:
Back you wearily trudge thinking thoughts the most evil,
While the tsine is delighted he's diddled the Devil!

Now a word to the wise—tsine are frequently shot—
By the hunter's good fortune as often as not,
Among tsine e'en a few fools are sure to be found,
But e'er acting on this be quite sure of your ground.

Rise early. Fresh tracks of a solitaire bull
If found before seven are good for a pull;
If later—the chances are horribly small
Of your getting a shot at your jawar at all.

Don't track up a herd—if you do you'll note how
The first beast that you're likely to spot is a cow
Who will promptly alarm all the rest of the herd
Which will vanish before you can rap out a word.

You may be most lucky and may bag the bull,
But the odds are against you—that is as a rule.
Still if time at all presses, and tsine are but few,
We'll hope that good fortune may settle on you.

May and June are the months—the rains are no go;
I've tried them myself and I state what I know.
Give salt licks a look up whenever you can,
And your tracker should be a reliable man.

But whene'er you go and whate'er you do
Remember the Devil is watching you too,
By proxy that is, in the form of a beast
Who'll defeat you if chances you give him the least.

MORAL.

When you've slaughtered your tsine, think you well of the evil
Of selling your soul for a pact to the Devil.
If the hot weather here we can just barely stick
Imagine the pleasures of grilling with Nick!

Shooting.

THE KING AND HIS SHOOTING.

KING EDWARD'S first autumn visit to Sandringham for the purpose of entertaining a birthday party synchronises with the first shooting of the season among coverts that are admittedly the best stocked and the most strictly preserved in the country. Soon after Sandringham was purchased for the Prince of Wales, in 1861, His Royal Highness set to work to take every advantage that the property offered for the raring and preserving of partridges, hares, pheasants, and rabbits. The results have been wonderful, and year by year, as the figures of the King's Game Book show, the bags have increased, till they nowadays have reached immense proportions.

The first thing done on the Sandringham estate was to make all the farmers rear so much game, and they were also forbidden to do anything to disturb game birds. Every farm on the Royal property has to "carry" so many head of game; while to preserve them, each farm also has a cottage in which are a gamekeeper and two assistants. These keepers report at stated times to Mr. Jackson, who for years has been the King's head keeper, the number of head of game on the farm, and they are also expected to guard against poaching, or lack of food. These reports are laid before the King, who himself arranges every battue, selects the favoured guns, and maps out the position of each man. To the King is also submitted a list of capable beaters, who wear a uniform of a smock frock with a hatband of scarlet. The keepers themselves on a battue day wear a livery of green and gold, and the small army of lads who are employed to go into the highways and hedges after stray birds are armed with blue and red flags.

A battue day causes a cessation of all farm work on the Royal estates, for a notice is sent round to all the farms, and all field work and the use of steam engines is strictly prohibited. Neither is anyone permitted to go near the ground to be shot over. All beaters and lads are placed by Mr. Jackson according to the plans made by the King. He goes his rounds soon after drawn on a stout cob, and has all in readiness by nine o'clock, even the great game carts—which are built so as to resemble enormous larders on wheels—are placed where the biggest work is going to be done, and the arrangements for luncheon are also in full swing by that [redacted]ajesty generally limits his party to eight guns, but in the case of a day with the rabbits, which literally swarm in the sunny, sandy wastes around Wolferton, the party may be extended to ten guns. Each man is an approved shot, for everyone has to do a hard day's work towards making up the tale of a heavy bag. Wagonettes and country carts take the King, the Prince of Wales, and their guests to the starting point, which, on a fine November morning, is reached rather before eleven o'clock. The King then mounts his shooting pony, who is trained to stand fire, but sometimes shoots from a specially made portable stool. Two loaders stand behind with His Majesty's guns.

Luncheon is served according to the whereabouts of the day's shoot, but is always a plain and quickly served meal, for the King dislikes wasting the short winter hours at table. When the warrens are shot, lunch is served in a suite of rooms built by the King on to the side of Wolferton Station. During some of the big pheasant shoots, luncheon is served at a farm-house, and when no building is near, a tent is erected. One favourite spot, to which the Queen and the ladies always repair, is the "Folly," a very pretty cottage set in a thick plantation on the Wolferton road.

Till quite recently the King always topped the score. He is a singularly fine shot, his favourite and most sporting effect being the killing of "rocketers." It is said that the King never wounds a bird. The Prince of Wales is now, however, declared to be even a better shot than his Royal father, which makes him practically the best shot in the Kingdom. Others who come into the line of merit set down by the King include Lord de Grey, who is a splendid shot, and who is nearly always included in the Sandringham parties.

Needless to say, on a "big" day, Mr. Jackson is here, there, and everywhere, and at luncheon time always has a chat with the King on the quality of the sport. His work is, indeed, anxious, for not only has he to overlook the general arrangements for game-breeding and feeding, but he has to personally supervise the hatching and rearing of 10,000 pheasants a year. The hatching stage is done entirely by Hearson's incubators, till within four days of breaking the shell, when the eggs are carefully boxed and put under barn-door fowls, of which more than a thousand have to be ready for the purpose of hatching out the chicks and looking after them for the first few weeks of their existence. Once the hatching is over, the birds with the hens are placed in little pens, and are carried on specially arranged trollies all over the estate. Each farm has to rear and grain-feed so many hundred birds, who are so fed until they are fully grown, when they are turned out into the perfect coverts that edge the King's properties on all sides.

To see the pheasants feeding on a fine summer evening is to witness a most extraordinary sight, and one that cannot be matched anywhere. The roads about the park absolutely swarm with the radiant birds, while the air will be blackened every few moments by the flights of immense convoys of partridges, that flourish on the light soil of the neighbourhood.

But a glance through the pages of the Game Book will give some idea of the results of a season's shooting at Sandringham, it being always remembered that there are seldom more than six battues in the season, as the trouble and expense of these orgies of sport are great. On other days the King will just go out for an hour with a loader and a friend or two. The records of the sport at Sandringham show comparatively modest figures between 1870 and 1880, when the season's head of game rose slowly from 6,800 to 8,700 head. After that the figures always topped 10,000 head, and in 1885-6 the big shoots yielded 16,000. Of later years 5,000 head is considered a good day's shoot, but a day among the rabbits at Wolferton—the favourite sport of the Prince of Wales—6,000 are killed.

In these commercial days it is noteworthy that the King does not permit a single head of game to be sold. Everything is given away, either privately or in charity, with a lavish hand, while the tenants and labourers feast on fat game from now till the end of January. The storage arrangements at Sandringham, however, are very perfect. The King's game larder, which is the second largest in the world, holds 6,000 head at a time, while his newest game carts can transport enormous numbers of pheasants, all so carefully arranged that not a feather is brushed the wrong way. The result of a day's sport is invariably inspected by the King, who comments very knowledgeably on the size and condition of the game. There is nothing about his favourite sport that His Majesty does not know, and there is nothing he likes so well as a day in the coverts.

PRESERVING SPORTING TROPHIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Insects of various sorts, and all aggressively destructive, have for some time been playing havoc with several mounted heads of buck, sambur and bison which adorn my walls. I have tried insect powder and kerosine oil with no appreciable effect. Can you recommend anything?

Introduce it into the horns, holding the heads upside down, paint it all over the mask and ears, etc., with a large brush, previously removing out all dust with a hard clothes brush. The sublimate must be finely powdered before being mixed with the spirit and when applying the bottle should be frequently shaken.—ED.]

First Day, Saturday, 21st December 1907.

NOTHING could have improved upon the really sumptuous arrangements made by the C. T. C. for the opening day of the first meeting. We visited several of the big racecourses in England this summer and unhesitatingly set it down "right here" that we saw nothing which could compare with the completeness, luxury, and splendour of the stands and the appointments pertaining thereto; while though we may possibly never equal English turf on the lawns and English blooms on the flower beds we come as near to them as makes no difference. A racing friend out for the cold weather, and one who knows well every course in the old country, was almost overcome with delighted surprise and repeatedly expressed his admiration and wonder in terms of glowing eulogy. And well he might. Those, who like ourselves have attended Calcutta race meetings since 1876, cannot fail to be deeply impressed by the march of things around us and wax enthusiastic when contemplating what has now been achieved. We have before referred to the extensions and improvements, we will here only add that a walk round the enclosures to-day with a carefully peeled and critical eye left us for once proud to be a "Ditcher." The racing is fully dealt with in our Sporting Notes. We append the usual details,—

Second Day, Tuesday, 24th December 1907.

Cup Day must be written down a brilliant success. There was surely a record attendance, nevertheless the splendid new stands provided ample accommodation for the huge crowd. The arrangements were excellent and the racing first class. Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Minto and a party from Government House arrived in time to see the big race run. Honorary Secretaries:— E. E. FRANCIS, ESQ. B. K. MULLICK, ESQ.

First Day, Tuesday, 10th December 1907.

THIS meeting opened in beautiful weather. The recent rain had made the going excellent. There was a large number of visitors. H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor and Staff were present and remained throughout the day.

Owing to the exigencies of training, fields unfortunately ruled small. Mr. Mullick's little country-bred won the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup with great ease. He went to the front at flag fall and had his field settled before they had gone two furlongs and won pulling up. He also won the Pahartali Plate in the same effortless fashion. Another useful country-bred Gipsy, a half sister to Fortune, won the Cachar Purse in very convincing fashion.

The Stewards are to be congratulated on the very great improvements made to the course. The whole of the running can now be seen from the stand. Colonel Mayne, the Official Handicapper, adjusted the weights, and the Hon'ble Mr. Henderson acted as Judge:—

Second Day, Thursday, 12th December 1907.

The day was bitterly cold and a high wind blew directly behind the horses and in consequence there were some very fast time. There was a much increased attendance. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and Staff were again present. The Official Handicapper raised Fortune no less than 3st. 11lb. for his performances the first day. This was, however, unable to stop him and carrying the substantial burden of 10st. 7lb. he managed to present 2½st. and a two and a half lengths beating to his half sister Gipsy. Mr. Mullick, however, went to the well once too often as at the fourth attempt in two days the little country-bred could only manage to dead heat with Mademoiselle for second place. The Handicapper is to be warmly congratulated on his successful efforts as in the Patiya Handicap and the Rangamati Handicap only the Judge could know what had won. Mr. M. Halliday officiated as starter with great success.

THE TURF.

KEMPTON.

So thick was the fog all round London that doubts were entertained as to racing being possible last Friday. At Esher the platform could not be seen from the carriage windows, but the mist lifted, and the far side of the course was clear enough, but very looking after the rain. The almost hopeless prospect kept many an intending visitor at home, and the attendance suffered considerably, mere handfuls of spectators occupying the enclosures, and a scanty muster of vehicles representing the road division.

Unfortunately, Saturday's weather was the converse of Friday's, as it was fine in Town and foggy at Kempton, in a most tantalising way, too. After a sharpish night's frost which just glazed the reservoir with cats' ice, the blue sky was welcome; but, as a sportsman remarked, "We're not racing there," while the Park was enshrouded in such a persistent mist, growing worse, as prevented any view of [illegible] racing except within a short radius of the stands. [illegible] must apologise for the skeleton-like return of what would [illegible] been a most interesting afternoon's sport.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

ALTHOUGH in the South meteorological conditions on Saturday were not such as to cause complaint, in the North and Midlands they were most exasperating, especially in Lancashire, where three First Division League matches were either postponed or abandoned because of an impenetrable fog, and in other districts it was impossible to follow the play. In the Southern League home clubs swept the board, nine each obtaining two points, and the tenth sharing them with Bradford Park Avenue, the latter now having drawn eight of the fourteen games played. There is a keen and exciting struggle for the leadership between Plymouth Argyle and Queen's Park Rangers, and as both won on Saturday by the narrowest possible margin their relative positions remain unaltered. Tottenham Hotspur and Southampton are also both well placed, the only fault to be found with the former being their superlative cleverness. The most surprising win was that of Luton, who defeated Millwall by 3—1 after a big struggle at Dunstable-road. It will be noticed that three London clubs occupy places among the first five on the table.

In the First Division of the League the most noteworthy event was the overthrow of Manchester United at Owlerton, by Sheffield Wednesday. The home side owe their 2—0 win chiefly to brilliant half-back play, the Wednesday trio always having the measure of the Manchester forwards, who were never allowed to get really going. The Arsenal, before the smallest attendance ever seen at Plumstad in a First Division game, took a couple of points from Blackburn Rovers, and Bristol City gained a meritorious and emphatic win over Nottingham Forest, at Ashton Gate. Chelsea, with a curiously constituted front line, went down at Trent Bridge, and they have yet to obtain a point away from home. Aston Villa could only draw with Newcastle United, and it is now approaching three months since the former won on their own ground.

Both the London clubs in the Second Division were on the winning side. Glossop were completely outclassed at Craven Cottage, the Fulham team showing both cleverness and determination from start to finish; and at Homerton, Clapton Orient had no more than their deserts in capturing the spoils after a hard game. The Second Division table now presents

RUGBY RULES.

BLACKHEATH only sent a moderate side to Oxford, their back division undergoing several changes, and it was in no way surprising that the Dark Blues won by 4 goals and 1 try to 1 goal. Williamson, the half, was still away, and Vassall, the right centre was also out of the Oxford team, who, if not winning quite as easily as might have been expected in the circumstances, were not seriously extended. In th first half Milton obtained one and Martin two tries, while Portus scored for Blackheath, W. L. Rogers, the old international, placing a goal. The Blackheath forwards, ably led by Basil Hill, showed excellent form in the second half, but received feeble support from their backs, some fair chances being lost. On the other hand, Milton and Flemmer added further tries, and all the goals were kicked by G. D. Roberts. With this game the Dark Blues finished their list of trial matches prior to the great struggle with Cambridge to-morrow week. They have a brilliant record, for though badly beaten by the London Scottish in their opening engagement, they have won all their remaining matches—eleven in all. The present is scarcely the moment to discuss their chances as compared with those of their rivals, neither side having been definitely decided upon, but it may be of interest to mention that in their twelve games Oxford have scored 36 goals and 30 tries (260 points), as against 11 goals and 9 tries (79 points) by their various opponents. Following their decisive victory over Monkstown earlier in the week, the Cambridge fifteen easily accounted for the Old Merchant Taylors. They led by 20 points at the interval, and in the end won by 5 goals and 2 tries to 1 try. Kenneth McLeod was in great form, gaining four tries and placing all the goals, one being a particularly fine effort. The Light Blues play their final trial on Wednesday, their opponents being the United Services. The result of that game will be awaited with interest, as the Oxford men beat the Services very handsomely a little while back.

In a sense the game between the London Welsh and Northampton was something of a disappointment. It was announced that H. T. Maddocks, who has been playing so finely this season, would again assist the Welsh, having returned to town, but as it happened he did not turn out, and his partner in the centre, Gwillym Jones, who is regarded as a potential international, was also away. Northampton were without E. R. Mobbs, their crack wing three-quarter, who was suffering from rheumatism, and their best half, Claude Palmer, was still on the injured list. The game was thus shorn of its chief attractions, but for all that produced an interesting struggle. The London Welsh won by 1 dropped goal and 2 tries to 1 try, and were a little lucky to do so. The Welsh established a good lead in ten minutes, Williams, one of the forwards, and Rees, the left wing three-quarter, gaining tries, and it was not until just on the interval that Northampton, who pressed more often than their opponents, scored through Warren, a forward. In the second half Northampton, thanks to their superiority forward, had all the best of it but their attack always failed at the finish. On one of the very few occasions that the Welsh broke away, Jenkins dropped a goal. On the general run of the play Northampton should have won, but they lacked the necessary precision and cleverness to carry through an attack to a successful issue. On the other hand, the Welshmen, who were dangerous on not more than half a dozen occasions scored three times, thus making fair use of their opportunities. The game was an excellent illustration of the difference between Welsh and English players. The famous Welsh forward, A. F. Harding, who the week before figured as Richmond's full-back against Blackheath, appeared in a new character, going centre three-quarter. The old warrior did uncommonly well, taking a good share of the defensive work that was imposed on the Welsh backs. Northampton were penalised a good many times, mainly through the off-side tactics of one of their halves, and Harding, who kicked with a fine length, scarcely ever failed to gain a lot of ground. Stout defence and smart opportunism were the main factors in the Welsh victory.

Playing excellent football, the Harlequins beat the London Irish by 5 goals and 2 tries to nothing. The Irish forwards worked very hard, but received little support from the men behind them. Moreover, after the interval they began to tire, and then the Harlequins carried all before them. Prior to that, however, the latter had made victory fairly secure by gaining a lead of 10 points; afterwards they crossed their opponents' line five times. The Harlequin three-quarters were in fine form, and with the centres, Birkett and Field, working unselfishly and skilfully the wings came off very well, Powell obtaining five and Lambert two tries, the last-named placing all the goals. Sibree, at half, played excellently, and apart, perhaps, from the Scottish, whom earlier in the season they defeated, the Harlequins have the strongest set of scoring backs of any London club. Though in the end beaten by 3 goals and 2 tries to 2 goals, the Old Leysians gave the London Scottish a harder game than the score would suggest. In some respects the struggle ran on pretty much the same lines as that between the Irish and Harlequins. Forward the Leysians fairly held their own, but in the outside work they were outclassed. Having regard to the strength of the Scottish back division, that was in no way surprising. Behind the scrummage the Scotsmen carried too many guns for their opponents, Wade, Walter, and Purves easily pulling the side through.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital, who have been doing fairly well of late, met with a check, Roslyn Park beating them by 2 goals and 2 tries to nothing. In this game, also, superior pace and cleverness by the backs turned the fortunes of the afternoon. After some difficulty, London Hospital succeeded in defeating Lennox by 5 tries to nothing. The Hospital men were stronger all round, but Lennox defended very steadily. Heale, the London half-back, was much in evidence, gaining two of the tries and having a hand in most of the attacking movements. Guy's Hospital, who visited Newton Abbot, maintained their unbeaten record, but had something of a fright. The Devon team led them at half-time by a goal, but with McEvedy and Archer scoring tries afterwards Guy's just pulled through by 6 points to 5. With regard to the other games, it is to be noticed that Pontypool made a capital fight at Gloucester, the home club only winning by a goal, while Penarth drew at Leicester. Devon Albion went down at Swansea by 3 tries to nothing; while Bristol lost at Cardiff by 4 tries to 1 try. After being led at half-time by 5 points, Lancashire beat Cumberland by 3 tries to 1 goal. The match between Cheshire and Durham was postponed owing to dense fog, which was prevalent in most parts in the North on Saturday.

TENNIS.

E. H. MILES vs. PETER LATHAM.—At the Queen's Club, West Kensington, on Saturday, Peter Latham failed to conceal Eustace Miles 15, the amateur exchampion winning in the end by 5 sets to 1. Latham has seldom shown so badly, but the gloom which enveloped the court from the start may, to some extent, have been the cause of his indifferent display. At the same time, Miles was far from being at his best, and, as an exhibition of high-class tennis, the match quite failed in its purpose. Latham found his game the better at the outset, and after winning the first set at 6—2, led at 4—1 in the second. From this point the handicap of a stroke a game proved too much for Latham, and after Miles had taken the second set at 8—6, the professional champion won only the first, fourth, and seventh games in the third set, and the first and third games in the fourth. The play was mainly on the floor, but in the ninth game of the second set Miles found the dedans, winning gallery, and grille with consecutive strokes. Towards the end, Miles time after time disconcerted his opponent in the failing light with the excellent use he made of the foot of the tambour. The scores were:—2—6, 8—6, 6—3, 6—2.

ROWING.

A NUMBER of influential oarsmen, together with a great many friends and admirers of Mr. H. T. Blackstaffe, have persuaded him to emerge from his retirement and again to try for the Diamond Sculls in 1908. This famous sculler won the English Amateur Championship in 1897, 1901, 1905, 1906. He carried off the Diamond Sculls in 1905. Last season he was only beaten a bare half-length by the winner, who had the best station. Mr. Blackstaffe attributes his defeat to the fact that he was 11lb., above his usual rowing weight, owing to the weather last spring having been so unfavourable for training. It is more than probable that the ex-champion, who is now looking as well as ever and obtaining plenty of practice, may also compete at the Olympic Games Regatta.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY TRIAL EIGHTS.

One hears of the battle of the Blues in connection with Oxford rowing; but this is the first time on record that there has been a battle of the styles. Last year, however, Christ Church met with great success through adopting a style evolved out of the fertile brain of W. A. L. Fletcher, and it had a large number of supporters. So much so, in fact, that the Oxford president decided to settle the matter, if possible, for once and for all, and if the result of yesterday's race is any criterion he has done so in no uncertain fashion. Hitherto the object has always been to get two crews as nearly level as possible, and this is what was done on the present occasion. Up to a fortnight ago, so far as the watch could tell, there was practically no difference between them, and then it was decided to adopt the two styles. In the ordinary way this would have been a difficult task, but as there were no fewer than six Christ Church men rowing in No. 2, they quickly fell into the new, and when they raced yesterday it was considered by those in authority that the result would afford a very fair line in settling the merits or demerits of either.

Chadwyck-Healey (Trinity), who stroked the losing crew, would have rowed but for an attack of tonsilitis, and his enforced retirement let in Cherry Garrard. Hope was the only Blue rowing, and in the aggregate there was only a difference of a pound and a half between the crews. It is not often that the trials have been rowed under such exceptionally favourable conditions.

No. 2 crew embarked first, and here it may be mentioned that no fewer than six Etonians were rowing, five in No. 2, and one in No. 1. They reached the railway bridge, and at once took up their positions. The president, A. G. Kerby (Magdalen) acted as starter and referee.

No. 2 went off at the faster stroke, rowing 42 to the 40 of their opponents, but, notwithstanding, the latter promptly took the lead, and although the corner was all against them, they came round half a length to the good. By this time No. 2 had slowed down a trifle, and at the Beetle and Wedge there was a length's daylight between the two boats. No. 1 continued to increase their advantage, and a little later began to take their opponents' water, and went right away. On coming round the last bend, No. 2 quickened up, but failed to make any impression on the other boat, whose stroke, after taking a breather, reverted to a stroke of 40, as against the 42 of No. 2. But the latter fell farther in the rear, and No. 1 passed the post an easy winner by two and a half lengths clear, the time being 10mins.

From a spectator's point of view, it was a most uninteresting contest, only one crew being in it from start to finish. Heberden stroked the winners in a very capable manner, and was well backed up by Filleul. McCulloch rowed finely, and of the others Kitchin, Atkinson, Somers, Smith and Knox gave good promise. BOXING.

HEAVY WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE WORLD.

Burns vs. Moir.—Matches with the gloves between heavyweights of any note have been so few and far between in England for some time past, that it was not surprising to find a very large amount of interest centred in the contest decided at the National Sporting Club last night, between Gunner Moir, of England, and Tommy Burns, of America. Such a demand for seats has never previously been made at headquarters, not even excepting the greatest bout of all times—that fought out in the same building fifteen years ago by the late Peter Jackson and the Australian, Frank Slavin. On that memorable occasion the National gave a purse of £2,000, while, yesterday, Moir and Burns bored for £1,360 in addition to a stake of £500 aside. The match being for the Heavyweight Championship was, of course, at catch weights. These conditions favoured Moir to some extent, seeing that although at 29 he is nearly two years older than the other, he stood 5 feet 9½ inches to the 5 feet 7 inches of the American, and scaled 13st. to the 12st. 3lb. of the stranger.

Moir's record certainly justified his appearance last night for the heavy-weight championship of the world, for at 18 he won the championship of India, and he has only suffered one defeat since, at the hands of Charlie Wilson, of Notting-hill, when he is said to have not been quite fit, and he has not met Wilson again. He beat Sergeant Mockrell, champion of the Army and Navy, in one round, and in the Colonies he defeated the big black, Peter Felix, in the third round. He has had many other successes, and his last big victories in the same ring as last night were against Jim Casey in eight rounds, Jack Palmer (for the championship) in nine rounds, and Tiger Smith in one round.

Burns, whose real name is Noah Brusso, was born in Hanover, Canada, in 1881, of French-German parents, and is a terror for his size. His first victory was over Fred Thornton, at Detroit in 1900, and only in 1902 did he receive his first beating from Mike Schreck. Another series of victories followed, until he lost for the second time to Jack O'Brien in 1904. His third defeat was at the hands of Jack Sullivan in 1905, since when he has won everything, including the championship against O'Brien in twenty rounds, and against Squires, of Australia, in less than three minutes.

The appended table gives an interesting comparison of the two men:

Age	29	26
Height	5ft. 9½in.	5ft 7½in.
Weight	13st. 0lb.	12st 3½lb.

Long before nine o'clock Covent Garden was full of waiting enthusiasts, and little knots of men were sheltering from the rain under every doorway in King-street. Inside the famous club proceedings began at about a quarter-past nine with a merry bout of sparring between Joe Bowker and Spike Robson. This was followed by a contest between Killeen and Brayfield, at 11st. 6lb., an attempt on the Irishman's part to reverse the decision in the Army championships. In the first round Brayfield held his own well until Killeen got home a beauty on the head. They hit very hard at the next meeting, and Killeen was hotly stopped on two occasions straight on the nose. This roused him, and he knocked his man down twice, Brayfield being only just saved as the bell rang, and soon after the third round began Killeen knocked him out in most determined fashion.

Ever since the big match was arranged the American had been the favourite, and last night 6 to 5 was freely laid on his chances of victory. Both men were in the pink of condition. The ring had been altered to 18 feet, and was surrounded by large arc lamps to enable a cinematograph record of the contest to be taken. Needless to say, the handsome theatre was packed to its utmost capacity. Mr. Eugene Corri officiated as referee, with Mr. Zerega as timekeeper. Moir was seconded by Harry Williams, Arthur Cutteridge, and Sid Grumley; while the American was attended by Ben Jordan, Jim Styles, and Jim Lawes.

At a quarter-past ten the men entered the ring, and were introduced by Mr. Bettinson, secretary of the club, and preliminaries settled; a few minutes later the contestants faced each other.

First Round.—After the usual handshake, the pair retired to their corners. Upon time being called, Burns began the attack, and followed his man warily round the ring. Getting within measurable distance, the American twice drove the left home on the body. Several times the Englishman was cautioned for holding, while Burns delivered a succession of right and left-handed jabs on the head. When the round terminated, Burns had established a slight lead.

Second Round.—Both quickly got to business, but Moir appeared to lack his usual dash, while Burns was content to keep pinking his man with the left. The Englishman improved, and with a nice drive with the right made the American break ground. Following his man up, the Gunner succeeded in landing his right twice on the head, but the deliveries on each occasion were too high to do any damage.

Third Round.—Burns was the first to renew hostilities by swinging the right home on the body. Several times the Gunner tried to be there first, but his blows were neatly parried. Burns tried to fluster his opponent, but Moir was not to be drawn. Burns allowed his opponent to use both hands home on the head, but just before the gong sounded the American swung his right, which landed on the point, and Moir went down. He quickly rose, however, and planted the left on the face, which terminated the round.

Fourth Round.—The Englishman were a somewhat ruffled appearance when they faced each other for the fourth time. Moir, however, was perfectly strong, and he succeeded in delivering some heavy blows with both hands on the head. These blows had, however, but very little effect on the American, who unsuccessfully tried his right upon two occasions. At the end of the round Moir was again cautioned by the referee for holding, and threatened with disqualification if he persisted.

Fifth Round.—Moir was the first to lead, and the American tried to bring up his dexter hand. For some time Burns went for his man, and once came suspiciously near butting him. The visitor was now not quite so fast as hitherto, and Moir put in some useful work. At the end of the round the referee had to caution the American for boring.

Sixth Round.—In this round the American displayed marked cleverness by reaching the face with the left half-a-dozen times with considerable force. These blows left very pronounced marks on the Englishman, who, nevertheless, continued to persevere, and during several smart half-arm exchanges delivered some heavy punishment.

Seventh Round.—The American repeatedly rushed in with his head down, and once got home a couple of left-hand hooks on the head. Both men became rather slower, and the round terminated without any particular incident.

Eighth Round.—In this round Burns fought very cleverly, while the referee for the first time got into the ring to separate the boxers. Although receiving a deal of punishment, Moir stood up to his work unflinchingly, while towards the end of the meeting the Gunner's efforts were rewarded by getting home some hard body blows.

Ninth Round.—In this meeting both men fought at a very fast rate. Moir, although during most of the time on the defensive, frequently made spasmodic efforts at punishment, but was unable to do much damage.

Tenth Round.—This passage-at-arms opened with the American scoring with the right on the head. Upon again coming together, Burns swung his right, which landed squarely on the jaw, and Moir went down like a log. Slowly Moir rose to his feet, but upon Burns again coming after him he fell through sheer weakness. He managed to rise again, but Burns, after feinting with the left, shot across his right, and this put an end to the contest.

It was a poor contest for a heavy-weight championship, and not to be compared with Jackson vs. Slavin. The American was too clever in his defence especially; too tricky and too fast for the Britisher. He always looked a winner after the third round. He played the fox, letting Moir do most of the leading, his one idea being to land a knock-out punch. He was quick on his feet, and in the matter of ringcraft and generalship far in advance of Moir. The latter was splendidly game, resolute, and dogged, but his punch did not possess its old power, and he had but little speed. The American had an ugly habit of using his head, which did not commend itself to the referee or the gunner. More than once the latter's seconds complained of their man being butted. Burn's quibbling about the purse-money, which he demanded to see before the contest commenced, was regarded with much disfavour by the company. The American was hooted, and later his victory was not too well received.

The heavy-weight champions under Marquis of Queensberry rules since 1891 have been Bob Fitzsimmons, James J. Corbett, James J. Jeffries, Jack O'Brien, and now Tommy Burns.

Hunting.

QUETTA HUNT.

Monday, 2nd December.—Hounds met at Kotwal village and moved off to time for the Kotwal Karezes. A fox was found here and led the pack across the Beleli Road and railway making for Woodcock Spinney. The earths here had been stopped overnight however, and hounds pushed their quarry through, the latter making his point for Gallowith Spinney. Being pressed, however, he turned towards the Lora River and doubled back and was marked to ground in a hole in the Corkscrew Karez. Here he was shortly dislodged with a spade and hounds obtained the blood they so richly deserved. Mr. Boileau was awarded the brush. Scent was good at the start and the Master handled his pack with skill when it failed as the morning wore on.

11th December.—The rendezvous on the card for this date was Woodcock Spinney and a small field met the Master at 8-30 A.M. —a bit too early now—as the ground was still frozen and going very slippery. Not being out myself I learn from the Master that after a short and sharp run hounds marked their fox to ground in the Kotwal Karez and were called off. Seven hounds in the Kotwal Karez and were called off. Seven hounds refused to respond to the horn and were left behind, to return no doubt when night falls. Amongst those out were, Mrs. Tennant, Miss Finnis, Miss McMahon, General Clements, Captain Lawrence, Captain Day, and General Capper.

An excellent run ending in blood rewarded the small field out for the meet at the 4th milestone, Beleli Road, on Monday, 16th December.

Owing to a misunderstanding the majority of those hunting had to wait shivering in the cold from 8-30 till 9-0 when the Master put in an appearance. Even that time was, however, too early as the irrigated fields were frozen tight and made the going slippery and dangerous. Finding after some delay in the marshy ground near the railway Reynard set the hounds a cracker pointing towards Samungli village, but swinging to the left made for his home in the Woodcock Spinney, but failing to get to ground was driven East right up to the Polo ground and took refuge in the Grand Stand where he had "gone to ground" in a dark hole behind some steps. A most curious and unusual spectacle was witnessed by the whole field who had time to come up, as at first hounds were at fault and could make nothing of their unusual surroundings, and swarmed all over the Stand in their search for their quarry.

Amongst those out were noticed Mrs. Cobbold, Mrs. Goodwin and Miss Finnis and a lady visitor from, I believe, Karachi, who was awarded the honours of the chase which she had well earned; General Clements, General Capper, Captains Branker, Walshe, and Toogood, Colonel O'gilvie, Captains Hooper, Jesse and Harcourt, the Honorary Secretary. The Master is much to be congratulated on an excellent and fast run.

XXX.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

On the last Bye day there was another rattling good morning's hunting, the weather being quite nippy and cool, when a very large field, including quite a number of the gentler sex, met the Master at Parla. Quite a few, however, missed the two fast runs, as the pace being hot several came off going over the rough melon ground after dipping into a deep nullah on coming out of the narrow lane in which the field were packed together. In the past the bungalows that sprang up in the vicinity were a matter of considerable anxiety to hunting people and now a new one was seen in the very field in which they were accustomed to meet in past years. This is, however, not near enough to the woods to spoil "finds" and hounds were soon away in the direction of Chuckla Hill. Up the very steepest part the hounds went and down the other side into Bomanwady Valley over fine hunting country. The jack was making straight for Sahar, but was destined never to reach it as he was pulled down in a native hut in which he took refuge.

The run having been short and fast, a move made was made to the Sahar woods and very soon they were away again after another across the Andheri Road over thorn and cactus hedges. Up the hill near Mardoe Church, they were faced by stiff stone jumps and thence made for the hills. The pace was tremendous and as a consequence the run again was a short one, hounds pulling the jack down in the open. The way in which hounds are working and the pace at which they move is simply remarkable, this being another brace added to the five and a half they had accounted for up to last week.

On Tuesday there was an extra day's hunting, but this proved the exception to the rule, as after drawing blank for some time they got on to a jack who twisted and turned in such a way that he eventually saved his brush. Accustomed as one is to the beat out here the morning was really uncomfortably cold when but a sparse field met at Irla, between Parla and Andheri—the Yacht Club dance probably keeping many in their beds too late. From Chuckla to Jackal Hill is one long wood which on this morning was drawn blank, as also those on the slopes of Chuckla Hill. At last, in a mango tope, one hound after another gave tongue and chased a jack out, to be at fault for a moment before entering a thick jungle. It was difficult going for the horses, and when he was driven into the open the jack cut round to the right and once more scrambled into dense undergrowith. Once in here he twisted and turned to such an extent that after an hour's patient waiting hounds to be drawn off after a disappointing morning.

Better luck was met with on Thursday when quite fifty turned out hard by the Jackal Club and had to wait for the dawn before hounds could be put into the Parla Coverts and lost no time in ferreting their quarry out. The pace was a cracker over the melon grounds towards Sahar Hill, though the going was a bit treacherous. At fault for a moment on the hill, they dashed on again through the thick wood and circled about for a time till at last the jack broke into Bomanwadi Valley. The rice fields here make grand going and only a short bit of melon ground had to be covered before reaching grass fields and cactus jumps in a line with the Andheri Road. Veering to the right the jack crossed the Tulsi main pipe and reached the Backwater across which he swam. Good rice fields lie the other side as as far the Vehar Kurla Road. After acheck in the quarries hounds continue and he chase over stony ground and some stiff jumps. First bending for Powai the quarry then set his mask for Horse Shoe Valley, but in the paddy fields he was pulled down after a forty minute's run. It was a plea-ure to see the popular whip in the field again after his nasty accident over a month ago.

BALLYGUNGE C.C. vs. CALEDONIANS.—Played at Ballygunge on Saturday, 21st instant, when the home team won in hollow fashion by 7 wickets and 112 runs. Gould bowled extremely well, capturing 6 wickets for 19 runs, Whiteley getting the remaining 3 for 38. Had all the catches been held, the Caledonians total would have been even considerably less than it was.

For Ballygunge, the brothers Shallow started by putting on 128 for the first wicket, at which total A. W. Shallow left for 55. D. S. Shallow continued to hit brilliantly and at the close was not out with a splendid 107 to his credit; he gave only one chance, a difficult one in the long field when his score was 82. Score.—

BALLYGUNGE C.C. vs. LEINSTER REGIMENT.—The visitors were without Bredin in this match at Ballygunge on the 22nd instant, and with their bowling considerably weakened in consequence, the home team were able to exact ample revenge for their previous defeat.

The soldiers batted first, and were all out for 149, of which Lieutenant Burnand made 38, Lieutenant Ussher 21. Ballygunge run up 322 before the last wicket fell, A. W. Shallow, 48, H. M. Sherman 74, E. E. G. Eddis 67 and F. Gould 43, being the chief contributors.

It is noteworthy that on Saturday afternoon and on Sunday, no less than 726 runs were scored at Ballygunge, and that in rather less than 7 hours actual play.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

6th December 1907.

As a consequence of the new dignity recently conferred on the Cinque Ports Club, the Deal Links are naturally attracting a considerable amount of attention and notice. Those who are members may and do consider themselves privileged, those on the waiting list may consider themselves lucky to get in before they become too old or too rheumatic to care much whether they are members of any club, however famous and popular, or not! It may be interesting even to those on or off the waiting list to have a short history of the Cinque Ports Club. It was instituted 15½ years ago—1892, and was then only a 9-hole course: prior to that date attempts had been made by commissioners of sand and tracts of land to institute a club, but there was a difficulty in getting sufficient ground to lay out 18 holes, so the enterprise was abandoned. Major-General J. M. Graham came to the conclusion that any 9-hole course was better than none and that a good 9-hole course was better than a bad 18! So he set to work, and after considerable trouble succeeded in getting the necessary land, partly from the Corporation of Deal who to do them justice conceded it willingly, and part from other sources, who gave more grudgingly and the famous Cinque Ports Club Links were laid out. It was, no one can gainsay, a very fine course—labour and money were expended without stint, and even "only 9" it became famous, possessing, as it does, so many natural advantages; but however first class a 9-hole course may be there is always, and must be always, a big handicap: on count of this shortcoming no one would contemplate for one moment holding a first class competition on it and in medal play for various and obvious reasons it is unpopular. But about the year 1895 opportunity arose for acquiring more land; this was quickly seized and from that moment Deal has been recognized as second to very few. To become a member appeared to be the desire of every golfer who could afford a week-end club, the fame of the Links spread like wild fire, and with the constant improvement, so is its reputation still growing, the crowning touch has lately been given when the Royal and Ancient Club made it a Championship Links and in 1909 the test will be made. On the 19th of this month a match will be played over the course between James Braid and Arnaud Massy in which more than ordinary interest will be taken in a purse subscribed by the members, whilst the majority of golfers are tied by a variety of knots to the British Isles and are anticipating spending the next two or three months in the changeable horrible climate of this country, arrangements are being made, which make our mouths water, for gala days innumerable at all the foreign and Southern Clubs. Pau opens the ball (almost one may write the ball) on the 6th January and holds competitions at the beginning of every month until May. Biarritz, Nice, Cannes Hyeres, are all announcing festivities. The Nice Club has fixed its international Professional Tournament for 17th and 18th March when competition for prizes, amounting to nearly £200, will be decided. The course has lately undergone considerable alteration and improvements, it is now over 4 miles in length and of a sporting character. A curious case comes from the Antipodes: had it taken place in a ladies' competition the incident would have been laid before their union for legislation and they would in all probability not have dealt so leniently. The facts are these: the Hon'ble Maurice Scott (one of the famous family of which Lord Eldon is head) lately won both Amateur and Open Championship of Australia. After the event was over, it was found that at one of the holes he had teed outside the mark in playing for the Open Championship and the second man has claimed the title. The way the mistake arose was that the right hand "tee button" for most of the holes was covered by the sand-box which naturally led the players to suppose this (the sand-box) to be the boundary; but at the hole in question the button was behind the sand-box and Mr. Scott not noticing this, teed in a line with the box and consequently outside the limit. However the protest against him was not sustained, for the committee exercising their right to settle any point in dispute gave Mr. Scott the benefit of the doubt and Mr. "Second," who by the bye was no less than 8 strokes behind, remains where he was and the claim had better not have been made.

To demonstrate the enormous increase in the popularity and spread of Golf, even in Scotland, where it is supposed to be a sort of inherited instinct, the following figures will serve. The number of players who used the new course at Saughton during the first year it was opened was 3,560, but the very next year the number increased to 37,760. Before this course was opened there was no green in the immediate vicinity where the ordinary unattached golfer could play, unless he were a member of one of the private clubs or paid a big green fee, but when the Corporation (Edinburgh?) bought the Saughton estate, players of all sizes, ages, sexes flocked there and it is now one of the most frequented greens in the Edinburgh district; another instance is the Potobello Club on the other side of the city, where in 1905 the number of players was 21,000, and in 1906 no less than 51,094. At the Boards the total for a year has been known to exceed 94,000. Now on reading these figures, which are facts, can any one deny that Golf is the moving spirit of the age? In South Wales it is largely on the increase too, and knew courses are constantly being laid out and opened. Quite recently a committee was formed in the Aberdare valley to form a club, somewhere easily accessible to players from Aberdare, Mountain Ash, Nantyglo, and Brynmawr. It was in 1888 that the first course in South Wales was made; this was at Tenby, and two years later the Glamorganshire Club was formed.

The golfing ranks have lately been thinned by the deaths of many good golfers, the last who was laid dead under the green being Sir Arthur Kekewich. Everyone in Devonshire knows and reveres that name and Sir Arthur's death came as a great shock to his many friends and relations. A most enthusiastic golfer; he had, and I believe he was the only man who possessed one,—an indoor "Golf course," a padded room with holes cut in the floor which was covered with green felt. He was, however, never a first-class exponent of the game, but like many thousands of others did not aspire to championship honours but enjoyed the game, perhaps more than the shining lights who have to struggle perpetually to keep their lamps burning.

Fogs are not (the Londoner may rejoice in the knowledge) confined to the metropolis. Last week the annual St. Andrews' gathering at the Royal Liverpool Club, Hoylake, had to be postponed owing to a dense fog. This was the more disappointing as a specially big and good entry had been received including the three local cracks, Johnnie Bell, "Johnnie" Graham, and H. H. Hilton, the meeting is postponed until to-morrow, Saturday, 7th instant.

The Ladies' Championship is fixed to take place at St. Andrew's in the week beginning 13th May, the week before will be devoted to the usual international contests, and as it is announced that a large and formidable team of American lady players are coming out a match will also be arranged between them and a team representing Great Britain as at Cromer in 1905. The Amateur Championship will probably take place in the week beginning 25th May. At Sandwich on which links the "Olympic" Golf (save the mark) will also be held.

A Merry Xmas to all golfers "far away ober dere."

THE COLOURED BULL-TERRIER.

The question of reviving the old brindled bull-terrier is attracting the attention of kennel papers in England, and there is no doubt there are some points in favour of the measure. That white, and all white, and white only, should be the aim is a mere fancier's whim. As a whim, it has the advantage that it entails more difficulties than if colour were permitted, and difficulties are always an excitement to the breeder. But there the advantage ends, for although the pure white dog, if it possesses sufficient pigment in the skin to prevent the pinky appearance of so many specimens, is a handsome creature, the coloured bull-terriers are more handsome, and those would appear to be mythical reason to destroy what would otherwise be valuable animals solely on account of colour disqualification.

But why brindles only? The natural colours of the bull-terrier are those of the bull-dog, the colours may be brindle, fallow, red, black, fawn, white, or white piel with these colours. Many of us are old enough to remember the old coloured bull-terrier, and a good-looking creature he was in spite of the bar sinister which would now attach to him. Most of us would doubtless prefer whole colours, bright and pure, whether white or otherwise, to the piel, but stress could be laid on that as on any other point for judging purposes without disqualification of all colours except white; and many people would be attracted by a handsome brindle or, say, a fallow smut, when an albino like dog with pink rims to the eyes or a blemey, or butterfly, nose would be an abomination. For some strange reason also, the breeding to white only seems to lead to deafness and is consequently a distinct menace to the utility of the breed. Deafness used to be attributed to cropping, but cropping has been abandoned and the defect still prevails. A fox-terrier breeder, with a penchant for white, also experienced the same tendency to deafness with his white stock, and subsequently abandoned his predilections in this direction. There can be no question of cropping in this experience.

Rawdon Lee has surmised that the typical dog of the burglar-ruffian of the Bill Sykes order was a bull-terrier with a patch on his eye and one or two on his body, and that a pure white dog would be out of place in such company. For the same reason, he assumes that more peaceable and respectable members of society with a fondness for a game terrier preferred the entirely white animal. It is very problematical whether there is any force in this argument. The bull-terrier was originally bred from the bull-dog and the old white English terrier, with several crosses of the latter to one of the former in order to obtain the graceful appearance of combined strength and activity which is a characteristic of the breed, and which could only be ruined by a preponderance of the white terrier blood. The chances then were that the modern bull-terrier would be usually white, or white with a few patches of colour, and inasmuch as whole colours are generally preferred, white was probably chosen as the aim rather than whole brindles or fawns. Those who advocate the introduction of brindles will find a difficulty in breeding whole colours. It could be done, no doubt, with patience, the success which patient breeding will secure is extraordinary; but it would be a matter of time, and unless a certain amount of white were used somewhere it is doubtful whether the game would be worth the candle.

But a much more important point, if the bull-terrier is ever to become really fashionable, is that of size. The modern article is a large and heavy dog, and with certain limitations the big will always, ceteris paribus, beat the small ones in the ring. In former days, the bull-terrier could be obtained of any size, from the size of a toy of a few pounds weight to a weight of nearly sixty pounds. At present there is practically the one size, and it is not everyone who wants a large, ponderous companion. If a man is a terrier-man he likes a terrier, a large bull-terrier with the usual terrier characteristics, would be a positive nuisance, a pack of them would be impossible. On the other hand, if the large dog is peaceable and quiet, the terrier-man goes to some other breed for his pet. There is no doubt that the bull-terrier was largely selected. There is no doubt that the bull-terrier was largely ousted from his pride of place in public estimation by his size. The comely fox-terrier was advancing in favour by leaps and bounds, he was small and handy and handsome and a terrier. He could be seized by the scuff of the neck whether for the purpose of a walloping for misdemeanours, or for depositing under the seat of a railway carriage or dog-cart, when a fifty pound dog would be a formidable obstacle.

Ears have always stood in the bull-terrier's way; cropped, and cropped scientifically, his dart-like appendages to the head were delightful, but cropping was difficult, it was cruel, and was eventually illegal. The practice was abolished, and the dog, with bat-like ears flying in all directions, presented an unlovely spectacle. It is to be hoped that time will enable the lovers of the breed to produce ears which will be no disfigurement; but that alone will not render the bull-terrier popular in days when old-time sports are held to be brutalising and out of date. The salvation of the breed lies in the matter of size. Those who can remember the fascinating little bull-terrier of fifteen to twenty pounds or so in weight, with his perfect little figure as true in build as an ideal hunter, with his satin-like skin, his short whip tail, his eyes like bottled wild fire, will remember what a charming little creature he was. When the writer was young, he remembers that in appearance the very best fox-terriers looked out-classed, absolutely common and bourgeois, by the side of bull-terriers of the same size. And it was not merely a matter of appearance, there was nothing that the fox-terrier could do that the bull-terrier could not do and do better. He was just as tractable and more game; he followed a horse better, he was every bit as hardy in constitution; he was a far better pal; he would hunt with the spaniel, learn tricks with the poodle, and fight till all was blue. Mr. Pengelly, of the Forest Department in the Punjab in the seventies, had such a specimen which he would not part with for love or money. Colonel Earle, at the same time and later, was never without one. He always had one, rarely more than one, as one died another took the vacant place, and he used to patronise old Bill George, of Kensal Green, who never failed in those days to produce what was wanted.

Given this old day, small bull-terrier in make and shape and pluck and cleverness, colour becomes a secondary consideration. Bill George's dogs were usually white without any pinky disfigurement. No one wants to quarrel with the white terrier; but provided he possessed the other characteristics, a true terrier lover would not object to a mark over the eye, or a brindle. Colour, or attention to colour only, has done harm to many a breed. One of the reasons why the fox-terrier has thrived is because colour carries so little weight, evenly-marked or badly marked or not marked at all, all white or more black than white, the breed takes its chance in the Show ring on form merits. If colour scores it scores by virtue of a certain beauty of appearance, which is only right and proper, it is only when it is made the be-all and the end-all that the pure fancier prevails over the true lover of the dog.

The Story Teller.

AN ARTIST'S MODEL.

The studio bell rang with so feeble a tinkle that it was restlessness rather than the assurance that someone was outside that induced me to saunter to the door and open.

"Do you want a model to-day? Mr. Mulhouse sent me to you. He said he thought——"

"I don't require a model, thanks—besides, even if I did I——" The words, "I should not dream of employing you," died on my lips, as I looked a second time at the woman's figure before me.

She was of the order known as petite, and must once, when better covered with flesh, have been very attractive in a round, kittenish fashion. Now the sharp lines of her body were further accentuated by the skimpishness of the thin Cashmere cape that she wore about her shoulders, and that seemed to me a wretched protection from the biting east wind that whistled down the narrow street.

The implied snub in my voice or the cruel wind sent a long shiver through her frame.

"Please let me give you a sitting for the arms and hands. I—I——"

Two large tears slipped from under the frayed edge of her much-washed white lace veil, and her hands, one of which was ungloved and bore a plain gold band on the wedding finger, involuntarily stretched towards me. Perhaps it was her hands, well shaped and beautifully tinted in pink and white that persuaded me—or was it an extra sharp lash of wind that cut through the woman's scanty attire and drew another shiver from her, that made me change my mind? For humanity's sake, I hope it was that gust of icy wind that made me say:—

"Well, come in. I'm not busy this morning, and I'll do some studies of your arms."

With scarcely a "Thank you" she walked over to the stove and began at once to remove her hat and veil, and the bodice of her gown, while I sought for a canvas. When she was on the throne in the full flood of the hard north light, I looked at her and found that she was justified in sitting for the arms, for hers were white and soft as silk, plump and dimpled as a child's, and most remarkable in that they belonged to a pitifully thin body, and were evidently the only remains of a dead physical beauty. In the pinched face and red-rimmed sunken eyes, all traces of youth and freshness were obliterated, and yet, as I worked on, I felt instinctively that I was before a woman whose girlhood and beauty were not so very far behind.

"Yes! I've had a good deal of experience of the work," she said presently, in answer to an idle question of mine. "I've been in the studios for the past twelve years. I began when I was eighteen. You look incredulous; you don't believe that I am only thirty. Please don't deny your thoughts. You are not the only one who in his own mind has condemned me as untruthful, or a victim to that vanity which induces women to make out her years as being less than they really are."

The warmth of the stove had thawed her poor little frozen body, and had awakened her mind into the life of reminiscence. Her eyes, faded by many tears and reddened by weary vigils, her thin face worn and furrowed by a past that might spell either vice or disappointment, absolutely took on a vestige of past beauties and lost charms as the model settled her still incomparable arms in the position I deemed most suitable, and began to talk.

"Perhaps as you don't believe me about my age, you won't believe me about my parentage either. I am a lady by birth and education. I suppose half the models who sit to you tell you that. I wonder how many of them could lay claim to the position. My father was——".

She paused, and her worn face quivered as though some hand had been laid upon some still sore wound. Then she gave me the information in another way.

"Do you remember the great case of the Queen v. Thurston? Ah! I see you do, and that can recall the Times accounts of the life led by Mr. James Thurston, fraudulent trustee, faithless lawyer, absconding bankrupt—forger and suicide. He was my father! The papers of the time—I was barely seventeen when it happened—were filled with descriptions of his houses, his equipages, and entertainments, his charities, and his munificent patronage of art. He was almost the greatest picture buyer of his time, and all the artistic world flocked to our house. Then one day, in the middle of it all, came the crash. Of the hideous weeks that followed I never speak. They were too awful, too cruel in their accumulation of ruin, sorrow and disgrace."

Unconsciously she shifted her position, raising her pretty dimpled hands to her quivering wrinkled face. Presently she sighed, dropped her arms, and after a murmured apology went on speaking:—

"When the dream of horror was over, mother and I found ourselves in very small rooms at Hampstead. The most modest remnants of our furniture had been bought for us by a friend, and our income was £50 a year! Think of the irony of such a thing! I laughed when they told me, and girded at mother for not seeing the joke. But she, poor soul, had lost her health along with the rest, and had no heart for aught but tears. For three months we lived with our hands in our laps, idle with despair, indolent by force of circumstances. Then I found we were in debt, and then"—through all her age, the poor soul blushed—"came the first step that stained the white garment of my self-respect. I went to the pawnshop, first with my trinkets, then with my costly gowns, the lace, feathers and furs I had accumulated during my extravagant home life, and even after a time with my beautiful underlinen. A man cannot quite understand the tragedy it is to a well-born woman to part with the dainty filmy things that are so intimate a part of herself.

"All this time my mother's health was growing worse, and that alone, if not pride, prevented me from telling her where the money came from to pay for our daily expenses. She would have died, I think, if she had known the truth. But even my jewel box and wardrobe had limits, and the day came when I was faced with absolute, real penury, with nothing left of a marketable value, and just one week's credit with the landlady. I dared not voice my misery to mother—who was then almost bedridden. I could only wait on her and in my few moments of solitude eat out my heart in impotent despair. It was some unconscious words of mother's that solved the problem of our future—and my life.

"'My dear, you look as pretty as a picture to-night,' she said, as I kissed her one evening, and all the long night hours through the words rang in my brain—'as pretty as a picture.' She was quite right. I was very pretty, in a babyish, round, dimpled way, with a lovely complexion and fine eyes and teeth. In the old days I had been something of a belle, but that was when a 'plum' stood for my dot.

"The very next morning 'the picture' went to market. In other words, I carried my beauty to the studio of an artist who owed much to my dead father's patronage, and asked him to use me and pay me as a model. I was young and supple, and necessity pressing me hard, I worked well, and quickly had as much employment as I could take. My face and hair, hands and feet were painted a thousand times —and—oh, yes! I may as well confess it, to a few I sat for the figure. But I was known in the studios under another name, and my poor mother always believed I went out to give music lessons.

"You're wondering if you ever heard my professional name. Did you ever hear of Cara? Don't stare so hard. I am she. Light-hearted, frivolous, fond of a jest and a laugh, always ready for any dare-devilry, and always unapproachable. The agonies of my home life drove me to commit every act of folly—save one. I was hail-fellow-well-met with all, comrade, friend—adorned by some, but loving none. Yet sometimes I was hard pressed. Oh! if you men only knew how cruel your love can be, out of very shame you would learn to regard us with indifference. Among all my friends were two who claimed to love me. Both were wealthy men, both vowed to win me, the one by honourable marriage, the other—he already had a wife, need I say more?

"Adversity had so sharpened my wits, however, that I was a match for them both. I half engaged myself to marry Frank Yugall, the other I merely kept dangling at my heels, as an example to other men.

"But he was avenged by time. My earnings had scarcely sufficed to give my mother the comfort she craved during her last illness, and the day she died found me grief-stricken and penniless. Frank was travelling abroad—it was the dead season, and all my little world was out of town and of my reach. All the world, save one. You can guess of whom I speak."

Her voice faltered and her hands moved nervously on the lap of her shabby frock.

"I went to him—and—he buried my mother!"

She stared into the heart of the glowing stove with wide eyes, as though the awful past was pictured there. Presently she said:—

"His fancy for me quickly died, and then I married Frank Yugall. I told him about it all on the eve of our wedding day. He cried over me and said he was sorry for me. Poor man! A month later I had to be sorry for him. His fortune dribbled into one of those holes in the earth that men call mines, and again I found myself faced with the problem of how to live on nothing. I went back to the studio, for the arms and face, you know, till my baby came. It was a girl, and I thank God every night that it soon died. Life is too hard for women. Since then we've lived on and off on what I earn. My husband sells but few of his pictures. His sight is going, and his colouring is wrong at times. He's at home now with his eyes done up in bandages and lotions."

The sitting was over and she put on her bodice and walking things.

"Thank you, sir! May I come again one day? It's warm here, and I like talking about the old times."

27 K. to Kt 2

Drawn Game.

(a) The opening is now resolved into a very ordinary phase of the K Kt's Gambit, with the exception that the White Q's Kt, instead of Q B P, is posted at Q B 3.

(b) We very much doubt if this move is so advantageous in the position before us as in the K Kt's Gambit.

(c) In this variation of the regular Kt's Gambit the Kt is usually sacrificed at the ninth move, but here it would be injudicious to follow the books with exactitude owing to the position of the Q's Kt.

(d) We should have preferred Q B to K 3.

(e) Again we think Black does not play the best move; Q to Q B 2 looks much better.

(f) Why not Q to Q B 4 ch!

Solution to Problem No. 45.

Z can win the game with two tricks in diamonds, five in clubs, and two in spades, provided the clubs go right. For fear they may not, however, and with a view to over tricks, he should make an attempt to establish his spade suit, but he must be careful to keep the lead out of A's hand, lest a strengthening heart should be led through the king. At trick 2, therefore, Z should lead the 9 of spades, and if A does not cover play the 7 from dummy. If B wins he cannot lead anything that will hurt Z, and will probably return the diamond, when Z puts dummy in with the ace of spades and plays two rounds of clubs, winning the second with the king. Z then leads the king of spades and if he finds that the suit is guarded goes back to clubs. If, on the other hand, A covers with the queen or knave of spades at trick 2, Y wins with the ace, and the club suit is tried before going back to spades. If the worst comes to the worst, Z has a risky finesse in the latter suit for game.

Problem No. 46.

Score: A B 0; Y Z 0; Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares no trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).—Hearts, queen, jack, 10, 2; diamonds, ace, 3; clubs, 5, 4; spades, ace, queen, 10, 7, 6.

Z's Hand (Dealer).—Hearts, 7; diamonds, king, jack, 2; clubs, king, 8, 7, 6, 3, 2; spades, jack, 5, 4.

The first trick is as follows:—

Trick 1.

Mr. Joseph Pennell, the well-known artist, declared the other day that wine had no connection with art. And yet a liberal application of old port will produce a nose of richer tint than any even dreamed of by the painters.

"Is there not" asked the prison visitor, "some line or two from the Bible that would be helpful to you? Something that would serve as a shibboleth, a motto—"

"Yes," interrupted the convict eagerly; "there is one motto I'd like to take if I could only live up to it."

"And what is that?"

"We are here to-day and gone to-morrow."

A Richmond (Natal) minister not long ago was asked to perform a marriage ceremony by a young negro couple. He had employed the groom for a year or two, and consented, knowing what a prestige would come to the couple by reason of having been married by a white minister. At the appointed time the happy pair arrived, and the ceremony proceeded.

"Do you take this man for better or for worse?" the minister asked.

For all her shyness, the bride spoke up bravely.

"No, sah; ah don't," she said. "Ah'll take him jest like he is. If he was ter get any better, I's' fraid he'd die: an' if he was ter get any wuss, ah'd kill him myself!"

A certain man says that his wife recently gave their domestic an afternoon "off" so that she might attend a matinee performance at one of the local theatres.

The mistress of the house was somewhat surprised when the servant returned at an unusually early hour.

"Why didn't you wait to see the entire show?" asked the lady.

"Because, mum," answered the girl, "I seen on the programme that it is said Act III. was the same as Act I. I didn't want to see the same thing twice!"

"You call me a liar, do you?" said the small man. "Ho! And do you know what happened to the last man who called me a liar?" "No," said the big man. "What happened to him?" "He was fined ten shillings for insulting language."

Doctor (to his cook, who is just leaving): "Well, Mina, I am sorry, but I can only give you a very indifferent character." Mina: "Well, sir, never mind. Write it just as you do your prescriptions."

THE INCORRIGIBLE BRITISH GAMBLER.

We wonder where the care of the State for the moral welfare of the public in England will stop. Papers recently received from Home contain the Attorney-General's opinion—guarded it is true by an "if" that the "Limerick competitions" which have lately enjoyed such vogue bring the promoters within the law; and equally we presume the reckless competitors. Our London Letter has contained remarks on the attention accorded this little matter in Parliament at the instance of the Member for Salford, and now we have the opinion of Sir J. Lawson Walton thereon—his considered opinion we may call it, remodelled apparently by the light of facts furnished by Mr. Byles. "In some cases at least," said the learned gentleman, "the prizes for these "Limericks" are chosen haphazard. If so, the so-called competition is undoubtedly both a lottery within the statute and a fraud upon the competitors." Before we go farther it may be well to remind the reader that the "Limerick" competition is not a rhyming competition: the participators are not invited to write Limericks on a given topic in competition for a prize: that would hardly pay the paper which should attempt it. The competition which roused the ire of Mr. Byles is a very much simpler thing: the editor supplies four lines of doggerel and invites competitors to furnish a fifth; each competitor sends in a sixpenny postal order with his literary effort and the editor (whose labours move our London friend, "Onlooker," to sympathy) decides which are the best and divides the money among those whose lines he most approves. Now such a competition might easily become a lottery within the meaning of the Act, but we must confess our inability to see how it is possible to prove it such. To put the case in its simplest form it would be a lottery pure and simple if the judge put all the fifth lines he received into his waste paper basket, drew out a dozen at hazard and awarded prizes to them. We are tempted to think that the literary taste of the judge in some cases at least is not of a very high order: some of the rhymes we have seen in a paper which goes in for the business make us wonder whether dulness and fatuity could achieve anything less deserving of reward: but assuming as in reason we must that some selection process is gone through before the prizes are awarded, where does the gambling element come in? No doubt there is an element of chance in the taste and temper of the judge: he will be very much easier to please during the first hour of his work than he will be during the last: and therefore those fifth lines which are fortunate to come early under his notice will have a better chance than those that may come later: but this is surely taking rather a delicately balanced point. It is obvious that a "Limerick competition" is not a lottery in the correct sense of the term: it involves a certain mental effort not of a very high order, but none the less a mental effort: and it seems to us that on the face of it there is no more of the lottery about the business than there is in an examination for which a thousand enter to compete for fifty vacancies. We do not suggest that the examination papers are treated as casually as the poor rhymes: but we are of opinion that the papers which come under the examiner's notice after lunch fare better than those which came under it just before!

Of course we shall be told that the "principle of the thing" is what the lawyers object to, and evidently the law has discovered objections on principle. But it is very difficult to see how such objections can be reconciled with the spirit of the laws against gaming. Are such competitions detrimental to public morality or public welfare? Is the temptation to lavish sixpences (and fifth lines) such as is likely to do harm to anyone who succumbs to it? Is any citizen, whether he be merchant or restaurant waiter,

THE INCORRIGIBLE BRITISH GAMBLER.

We wonder where the care of the State for the moral welfare of the public in England will stop. Papers recently received from Home contain the Attorney-General's opinion—guarded it is true by an "if" that the "Limerick competitions" which have lately enjoyed such vogue bring the promoters within the law; and equally we presume the reckless competitors. Our London Letter has contained remarks on the attention accorded this little matter in Parliament at the instance of the Member for Salford, and now we have the opinion of Sir J. "In some cases at least," said the learned gentleman, "the prizes for these "Limericks" are chosen haphazard. If so, the so-called competition is undoubtedly both a lottery within the statute and a fraud upon the competitors." Before we go farther it may be well to remind the reader that the "Limerick" competition is not a rhyming competition: the participators are not invited to write Limericks on a given topic in competition for a prize: that would hardly pay the paper which should attempt it. The competition which roused the ire of Mr. Byles is a very much simpler thing: the editor supplies four lines of doggerel and invites competitors to furnish a fifth; each competitor sends in a sixpenny postal order with his literary effort and the editor (whose labours move our London friend, "Onlooker," to sympathy) decides which are the best and divides the money among those whose lines he most approves. To put the case in its simplest form it would be a lottery pure and simple if the judge put all the fifth lines he received into his waste paper basket, drew out a dozen at hazard and awarded prizes to them. We are tempted to think that the literary taste of the judge in some cases at least is not of a very high order: some of the rhymes we have seen in a paper which goes in for the business make us wonder whether dulness and fatuity could achieve anything less deserving of reward: but assuming as in reason we must that some selection process is gone through before the prizes are awarded, where does the gambling element come in! No doubt there is an element of chance in the taste and temper of the judge: he will be very much easier to please during the first hour of his work than he will be during the last: and therefore those fifth lines which are fortunate to come early under his notice will have a better chance than those that may come later: but this is surely taking rather a delicately balanced point. It is obvious that a "Limerick competition" is not a lottery in the correct sense of the term: it involves a certain mental effort not of a very high order, but none the less a mental effort: and it seems to us that on the face of it there is no more of the lottery about the business than there is in an examination for which a thousand enter to compete for fifty vacancies. We do not suggest that the examination papers are treated as casually as the poor rhymes: but we are of opinion that the papers which come under the examiner's notice after lunch fare better than those which came under it just before!

Of course we shall be told that the "principle of the thing" is what the lawyers object to, and evidently the law has discovered objections on principle. But it is very difficult to see how such objections can be reconciled with the spirit of the laws against gaming. Are such competitions detrimental to public morality or public welfare? Is the temptation to lavish sixpences (and fifth lines) such as is likely to do harm to anyone who succumbs to it? Is any citizen, whether he be merchant or restaurant waiter, likely to be any the worse morally for having cudgelled his brains to evolve a line of nonsense and backed his opinion with sixpence that it shall be chosen as one of the best among thousands? The moral condition of folks at Home must be in a parlous state if he is. There is just enough of the speculative element about this craze to commend it the masses who went mad for a time on the "Missing Word" competitions until they were stopped by legal process. Men and women who would not entertain the idea of putting a small sum on a horse for the Derby or St. Leger, see no harm whatever in venturing a trifle in a Limerick competition: and these stern moralists can make out a very good case for their sanction of the latter and the embargo they place upon the former: they have no personal power over the horse's chances: they do depend—or fondly believe they depend—upon their own skill or ingenuity in the other case.

There has been peace in the camp of the anti-gamblers at Home: having raised fresh obstacles in the way of "street betting" they have driven it more or less out of sight and are content. "What the eye does not see," etc.; but we venture to doubt greatly whether there is much less betting now than there was before the new street betting Act was passed: the only difference is that it is done more secretly, and we cannot regard this as an improvement. The sooner our legislators realise that it is a mistake to draw the moral-bearing rein too tightly the better. People will gamble in some shape or form and if "Limerick competitions" do partake of the nature of a lottery "within the meaning of the Act" they would be wise to turn an indulgently blind eye to the fact. They may console themselves with the reflection that nothing is more fickle than public taste and that the most inveterate versifier or doggerelist must eventually tire of the new excitement. Leave the harmless, silly business alone and months hence it will not only be dead but forgotten.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

A Happy New Year to all our friends and supporters; may 1906 bring us all good luck and prosperty.

The Viceroy's Cup race is ancient history by now, but it will be long before it is forgotten by those who had the pleasure of seeing it. The finish of course was a procession and the race was won and lost in the first half mile, but the interest lay in the masterly way in which the Apcar stable smothered their chief opponents, though if Boabdil had not practically broken down by the Old Stand, there might still have been a great race. Stirabout slipped away out of the gate as fast as he could go to get to the rails and Ballark took him on, and the two cut out the work at a pace probably the quickest on record for the first part of this race. By the mile post the black was under whip and spur to keep him going, but Stirabout proved himself a wonderful horse for a mile by continuing to run strongly up to the Old Monsoon Stand, where Mallard took him on, and he was soon done with, and the famous "Fitz" sailed through in his own majestic style followed by Mallard, and the Apcar stable had fulfilled their boast of first and second in the Cup.

A residence of over thirty years in India may perhaps support a claim to some experience of certain industrial developments. The observation occurs to us on perusing a copy of the latest catalogue of pianos issued by Messrs. T. E. Bevan and Co., of Calcutta. The magnificent instruments seen now-a-days—the finest example of Broadwood's, Pleyell's, Collard's, Bechstein's, Steinway's and Bluthner's make—bear about as much resemblance to the curiosities of 1875 as chalk does to cheese. Those interested in the subject should procure and peruse this catalogue and if they are not soon numbered among the firm's constituents we shall be surprised.

Since then we have had two more days' racing in which the betting public have had a very bad time, but have seen some rare good sport. The handicaps have in one way shown up well, that is to say, that of the horses starting in each race a good batch have usually finished pretty close together, but there have been a large number of non-acceptances, especially among the bottom weights, and owners are saying that there should be one or two high weight handicaps in more than in name for the benefit of the lower division. At present about 10st. 4lbs. is the top weight allotted and consequently horses with a stone difference between them are lumped together on the 6st. mark. Why should not 11st. be allotted to the top weight, or if anything is entered obviously out of his class, put him down 11st. 7lbs., he would not start in any case and the result would be to give a chance of a start to many more horses at the other end than it would keep out among the top lot, and there are plenty of races for the top division anyhow.

J. D. Scott has been the most successful trainer in the number of wins, annexing no less than 7 race sin the 4 days. Though Watson's four were probably worth more in money value of stakes. The most sensational victory of the lot scored by the first named was Amplify's win in the Macpherson Cup on Saturday. As a five-furlong horse he was of course the best in the race by a long way, but no one would give him credit for being able to win a mile and three-quarters, and yet some of the knowing ones thought out beforehand how the race must inevitably be run and backed Scott's mare on it. The whole crux of the matter was that no stable had a second string going to take them along, and they each waited on the other, none daring to make his own pace, with the result that the time was about the slowest on record, and a non-stayer with the quickest turn of speed for a short spurt at the end was able to secure the stakes. Bray, when he found how things were going, did bring Steinhager out to the front from the 7 furlongs, but he could not possibly afford to take any liberties, and perhaps the only one of the party who might safely have made the pace himself and still won the race was Dirty Boy, but none of the trainers seem to have appreciated that there would be no pace-maker in the race at all.

Marmlade III.'s victory in the Grand Annual was another surprise, and Mr. Holmes tried unsuccessfully to sell her on the crest of her wave of success on Saturday, putting her up with an upset price of Rs. 5,000. The purchase of the mare, which was first mentioned in these columns at the time he got her last spring, does great credit to Mr. Holmes' perspicacity. She had just run about 9th out of 10 starters in a selling race carrying a light weight at that, was 7 years old and reported to be "dicky" in one of her limbs, and he picked her up for 75 guineas, then wins either 2 or 3 £40 or £50 races with her in England, and brings her out. She acclimatises quickly and secures the biggest hurdle race of the year This fortunate owner brought off another good win with Annamulloch in the Chowringee Plate, in which there were five horses more fancied than he. It was lucky in that both Lady Avon and Manlock each declared 17lbs. overweight, or there would have been another tale to tell as they finished second and third, even as it was, and with the lighter weight the mare would very likely have got beyond catching in her first dash away to the front and would certain y not have been so done at the end that Annamulloch was able to go past her as if she had been standing still.

The longest priced outsider to get a winning bracket in the meeting was old Springlock in the Xmas Selling Handicap. This great old horse started at ten to one and paid Rs. 200 on the tote, and it must have been very galling to Mr. Galstaun to see a caster from his own stable beat his much backed Silphoe by 1½ lengths. There were no bids for him and he remains Mr. Dass' property and perhaps may yet win another race for that excellent sportsman. Quien sabe! They said his days were done two years ago, but Thursday's performance does not much look like it.

The Christmas Paperchase, the second of the season, was run on 26th December and drew a fair field and a very large gallery, attracted no doubt by the proximity of the start, the lateness of the hour and the dainty chota hazari which they knew from past experience would be waiting for them after it was over. The course was the familiar one which starts by "Old Man" crossing and winds in route through the jungle between the railway and Tollygunge, a most interesting ride full of sudden twists and turns and yet always fairly open, with nothing really nasty to trap the unwary. Fusilier started out to make the pace in the horse chase, but soon found it too hot to keep up and it was finally won by Mr. Scaramanga on Lucifer, who is looking very fit and well this year, followed by Captain Fraser on Diabolo, Mr. Halliday on Ruddigore, Mr. Fitzgerald on Fermoy, Mr. Higgon on Sir Walter, Captain Holden on Jasper, Mr. Rees on Turk, Mr. Bertram on Myrene, Mr. Evers on Grey Maud, Mr. K. Hamilton on Fusilier, Mr. Campbell on Sayonara, Forsyth on Corydon, Mr. Wells on a bay, Mrs. Paris on the Palmer, etc., etc.

All got round without mishap, but in the pony chase Envious gave Mr. Wheeler a nasty purler but fortunately not damaging him too badly to enable him to ride on to the finish. The final order was: Mr. Evers on Minstrel Boy, Mr. Muir on Claris, Mr. Wells on Lady Wilful, Mr. Tanner on Emerald, Mr. Bliggon on Mr. Turner's new one, Mr. Robertson on Black Diamond, Mr. Bertram on Blazes, Captain Holden on Warsprite, Mr. Hanning on Dynamite, Mr. Hadow on Pinky, Mr. Barrow on Puck, Mr. Skinner on Pathfinder II. and Mrs. Paris on Zigzag, after a very rough ride.

The Indian Polo Association's Championship Tournament was won by the Rajputana Pilgrims who beat the 15th Hussars in the final by 4 goals to 3. Details of the play appear in the usual place.

Mr. Apcar's Mallard won the Indian Grand National on Tuesday very easily. This is our senior steward's fourth success in this race—his other winners were Simon, Milburn and Seclusion.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—What with the lack of other forms of amusement and the tournaments always organised during this festive season, billiards has been claiming more than its share of attention of late, but now, with the arrival of the great Stevenson, it is a positive craze. The first of several exhibition games arranged for him was played on Monday at Pyrke's Apollo Restaurant, where a large room was specially fitted up and crammed to the utmost. He was with you in Calcutta not long ago, establishing a new Indian record, so that a detailed account of this game in which he gave Mr. Carnall 650 in 1,000 and beat him by 238 can be of but little interest. Though there was nothing startling in breaks, needless to say those who were present witnessed some remarkably fine billiards, his delicacy of touch and rapidity of coring astounding onlookers and quite demoralising his opponent. His best break was a 201, in which he reached 141 by nursery cannons and made the last 60 off the red after losing the white. Breaks of 120, 103, 87, and 89 were put up, the last being perhaps the most wonderful as, except for five, it was entirely made up of nurseries. During the sequence of 42 cannons he did not move the two object balls more than an inch, and this is ample proof of his fine "touch." He averaged just over 29 and was playing an hour and a quarter for his 1000.

After a game of snookers, in which he gave a Parsee player, Mr. Powalla, 20 and beat him, he played some fancy shots for our edification, including the "anchor" which was shown for the first time this side of India. On Monday in the same room he plays Mr. W. E. Young, one of the soundest players we have.

This being 'Xmas week, there was an extra day's hunting at Santa Cruz on Tuesday, making three mornings in the week. On last bye day some fifty enthusiasts had a poor time of it, the morning being close. Scent was very poor and a jack being driven out of the Sahar coverts there was a long check before Bomanwadi Valley. He was not one of the thick-necked ones as the hounds getting on again soon caught and disposed of him in melon ground near the Sahar barracks. At Andheri the Master put them in again, but with no result.

Tuesday's sport amply made up for this, over fifty turning out on an ideal morning at the kennels. They soon found, made over the worst bit of Chuckla Hill, through Bomanwadi Valley, over the Tulsi main and across the backwater. Their quarry twisted here and recrossed, but was shortly brought down on the banks after a fast run. It had not been long and the drawing of the Sahar woods resulted in the run of the season, in fact the fastest gallop even the old stagers could remember. They flew off at a stationed; these, of course, did not pay for admission. Finally, it seems to us too much was left to the last, at least such is the impression conveyed by the incompleteness and confusion associated with many of the details.

The object of these remarks is not to render the task of Honorary Secretaries and officials more irksome by the addition of carping criticism; they are prompted by a desire to help the promoters of the show to guard against similar trouble next year and are made, as we think they will acknowledge, purely in the interests of the Calcutta Kennel Club, and the canine interest existing in Calcutta. There is one thing, however, we must say in extenuation of the conditions referred to and that is this. The Show, to be successful, should extend over two days. There is a very great deal to be done and it is always more or less of a rush to get a large number of exhibits, benched, shown, judged paraded and awarded in a short cold weather day. From what we can gather much of the muddle was due in the first place to the unsporting way in which a considerable section of the dog-owning public declined to support the C. K. C. by voting against a two days' show.

At the show we heard some good people expressing surprise that in certain instances imported dogs were beaten by Indian-bred ones. We find nothing to evoke wonder in this. Nowadays Indian breeders bring out stock which has either taken championships or big prizes at the very best shows in England, or the progeny of such. The offspring of these animals, born in this country, might, not unnaturally, be expected to be successful when competing against imported dogs of inferior breeding, even though they may have been winners at small shows in the old country. Exhibitors at Indian dog shows should not lose sight of the fact that, though their enterprise may lead them to bring out good stock, others are also at the same game and with longer purses, more discretion or better luck, may occasionally be successful with something better.

We draw attention to the advertisement of Harmston's Circus with its nightly performances, its Wednesday and Saturday matinées and its special holiday matinée to-day, commencing at 4 of the clock. Their flood tide of popularity continues without check; a well-filled tent most nights, a crush on Saturdays and some difficulty to get seats at the matinées, unless one goes early, attest this comfortable condition. We have expressed our opinion of the show every week since its opening; we have little to add to the encomiums it has been a pleasure to pen. The Decars improve as they go on: their clowning is really very funny, their "business" smart, clean and original, while Almiro is a wire walker of considerably more than average ability. He is a first-rate clown also and as clean built and well set up an artist as one could wish to gaze upon. The donkey, Tomato, which the Decar brothers introduce in their "button shifting" sketch "Off to the Races"—they don't get very far on their journey, by the way—is the cleverest ass we have seen, and we have seen a great many! The Frantz troupe, the light, fantastic toed Collins sisterhood, those big "bounders" the Pattersons, the Harmston-Loves, the elephant, horses, dogs and monkeys are all going sixteen annas and are seemingly capable of continuing indefinitely. To-night there is to be another proof of the generous, sporting proclivities of the proprietary who tender to the trainer and jockey of the horse which won the Indian Grand National trophies which are sure to be envied by more than two-thirds of the big assemblage who will witness the presentation. To-morrow there is to be another horse jumping contest.

It is amusing to find representative American oarsmen saying, in reference to the Grand Challenge Cup dispute, "The Henley stewards are trying to build a fence around that old cup of theirs." H'm—let's see. Isn't there a pretty tall fence around the America Cup?

The "muddied oafs" were lining up,
The world was there to see;
I grinned to recognise the strut
Inherited from me.
My cheer was loudest of them all,
Because my heart was glad,
Till someone whispered at my side—
"Why, there's the captain's dad."

Well, yes, it hurt. I had not learned
To know my day was past—
To know the pitcher at the well
Must shattered be at last.
I once had worn the laurel wreath,
Had felt the victor's joy;
And now I find I'm only known
As father of my boy.

For me no more the ardent light
That beats upon a throne,
And mine no more the face that on
For me no more the honoured place
Where mighty deeds are done—
I sat and watched the game to-day
As father of my son.

Of course he won and came to me,
A hero in his might,
And for a happy hour I shone
In his reflected light.
The old must pass, the young must win,
The tale for ever runs—
So here's to us, good fellows all,
The fathers of our sons!

The annual regatta of the Madras Boat Club has been fixed for the 29th February.

Mr. W. M. Armistead, the well-known pisciculturist, recently made an important discovery, which will probably explain many mysterious disappearances of trout from lakes and ponds. It was found that the fishing in a certain lake got worse and worse each year, and, notwithstanding much investigation, the cause could not be discovered. At last Mr. Armistead thought he would see what stock of trout was in the lake, so he constructed a trap at the mouth of the stream which supplied the lake. Every fish leaving the lake to spawn was caught, and it was found that there was only one male fish to every seventeen female ones. Trout are not polygamous—at least, it is thought so—and, therefore, the fact remains that only one spawning-bed could be fertile, all the remaining sixteen being barren. When one considers the destruction to the ova by natural enemies and other causes, it will be seen how quite a large stock of trout can in time be reduced to a few. The causes of this difference in the sexes can only be surmised. It is said that well-conditioned female trout produce more female fish. Another cause is the fighting that goes on at spawning-time, and the destruction of the younger male trout by ferocious big males.

A correspondent writes: "In May, this year, a nest was discovered amongst the bents of Holy Island containing fourteen eggs—eight of the mallard duck and six partridge eggs—and the duck was sitting close trying to hatch her curious brood.

What seems likely to prove the record pike of the season was caught a few days ago. The great fish scaled 34½lb., was over 50 inches in length, and was captured by Mr. Anderson, a member of the Bath Anglers' Association, in private water in Wiltshire.

The dim origin of cricket, we see is still the fascinating object of quest by those who dabble in old sporting lore, though, like the outspoken farmer, regaled on claret, cricket antiquarians do not seem to get "much forrarder." There is consolation in the knowledge that it was an Anglo-Saxon game, as its name implies, and the poor foreigner who nearly a century ago tried to fasten its original habitat to Iceland, above all places in the world, was naturally "bowled out" neck and crop. Fortunately, illustrations survive to show that it was played in the old time with a curved piece of wood in lieu of a bat, but it is curious that, although the word "cricket" is first mentioned in 1593, the Elizabethan poets, who refer to football tennis, and other ancient games, never speak of it at all. Even Shakespeare, we believe, has been drawn blank by those lynx-eyed investigators in search of references to it. Yet the immortal one, in his youthful days, probably swiped at many a shortpitched ball, for it is certain that cricket, like football, ninepins, quoits, pitching the bar, and cudgels gave amusement to the urchins and apprentices of his time.

The Eastern Command Hockey tournament was concluded at Cawnpore on the 21st ultimo, when the 18th Pioneers beat the 6th Jat L.I. in the final game by 3 goals to one.

We have to thank the Resident Manager of the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society for copies of their wall and desk calendars for 1908.

Commenting on the fight between Burns and Moir, the County Gentleman aptly remarks:—It is really a pity that "the noble art" does not find more exponents in other parts of the world besides those populated by the English-speaking race. England, America, and Australia are the three great homes of boxing, and with few exceptions, it flourishes nowhere else except where Briton or American has temporarily planted it. It is really a far manlier system of defence than jiu-jitsu, and the Britisher will not have the French science of La Savate at any price. On the other hand, it is singular that the Frenchman still considers his method far inferior to his, and it seems peculiarly contradictory also that he should pale at the sight of blood drawn from the nose or a tooth dislodged by "a straight one from the shoulder," whereas he can smile, and actually applaud, on seeing a man's jaw broken by a cunning kick as allowed in La Savate. The two systems are so dissimilar that a test between the two has always to our mind been unreasonable and unfair. Certainly there have been several such tests, and it says something for the pluck, if not the intelligence, of the British boxer that he has been found ready to face the champions of La Savate in the ring and to pit his two hands against the four trained extremities of the agile Frenchman. Most of our readers may remember the game fight put up by Jerry Driscoll in Paris eight years ago, and there may be others who recollect the occasion when the champion Charlemont came over with another Frenchman to give an exhibition of La Savate at the old Pelican Club, in the 'eighties. The exhibition over, Charlemont announced his willingness to have a bout with anyone who liked to enter the ring with him. Like Barkis, but unlike several who had seen the death-dealing kicks of which the Parisian was capable, an Irish cockney, Donaghue by name, and only a third-rate boxer, was willing. They say he had a skull like a cannon ball and a skin like a pachyderm; but scarcely had Paddy squared into position when down he went with a tremendous kick in the stomach that left him insufficient breath to express his thoughts in Gallic or Gaelic. A second and yet a third time he was sent reeling and grunting with a vicious long-range kick, and a gleam of triumph came into the Frenchman's eye. But Donaghue came up smiling. Luckily he got a timely tip to "close in and keep there," and carried out the plan to the very last letter. Weaving inside his antagonist's guard, he stuck to him like a leech and gave him no opportunity of getting in his "penalty kick." Of little use with his fists, the Frenchman was fairly baffled by the sudden change of tactics and Paddy's hurricane fighting. He dodged about, hoping to get room for a swinging kick, but to no purpose, and, after a tremendous hammering, down he went, and declined to have any more of it—at all events, that evening. None the less we hold stoutly to the opinion that the French and English systems should be kept strictly apart in the ring.

The articles on Indian Game Preservation, which a few months ago appeared in the Indian Field, were reprinted in pamphlet form and distributed to a large number of people who might be considered more or less interested in the subject. As far as our Indian contemporaries are concerned, we are led to the sad conclusion that our review copies, alas, helped to swell the contents of the editorial waste-paper-basket: such is journalistic sympathy and professional support out here! But in England the subject has aroused some attention tremendous pace without faultering over the Andheri Road into grand open country with big bund jumps through the mango tope. Away to Marole past the church and still the jack kept well in the open seeming to go even faster the further he went. The horses had to be driven to keep up over the perfect Gorebaum country till near the station the hunted animal made for a steep hill. This was the finish as he only got half way up when he was caught and found to be quite a record in size; as big again as the ordinary fox.

Thursday again provided two kills, over sixty people turning out for the popular Boxing Day meet. Hounds were put in at Paria and as soon came out in hot pursuit, but to the chagrin of all, their quarry crossed the railway. He was hotly pursued and at last recrossed with pack and field close behind. He was not done yet though and travelled at a great speed past Jackal Hill to Andheri, where he took refuge in an empty house and was promptly despatched. The Sahar woods provided No. 2 who set a hot pace over Tulsi water main to Sahar. He tried to hide in the market gardens, but the shouting workmen drove him off. Going was bad till crossing the Kurla-Vehar Road when he served away from Horse Shoe Valley and got into an enclosure bounded by stone walls where he was killed. Some of the field jumped in also and found getting out a difficult matter after two fast gallops. There were one or two spills, one of which resulted in a broken collar bone to a well-known member of the Club.

The Malay cricketers from Ceylon played the Bombay Gymkhana on Xmas and Boxing Day; the game resulted in a draw after a bad beginning by the home team. Going in first F. P. West played a lively innings of 68 in a total of 147. Milne early dismissed three Malay bat-men, but then a change came over the game, M.H., M.A. and M.M. Caldeen in succession made 53, 37 and 32 for A. C. Amath to follow with an unfinished 27 during which he hit out to all parts, whilst Rajadeen with 26 kept up his end. The innings realised 276.

129 runs behind, the Gymkhana showed up very differently in the second innings as when stumps were drawn they had made 125 with only one man out. S. N. Powell and Lieutenant Murray opened, the latter only leaving when the century was passed with 75 to his credit; Powell being not out for 46.

Five races were sailed at the Yacht Club on Saturday in a light breeze with large entries. "A" class had four entries, Turquoise shortly giving up, whilst Melody sailed finely, beating Eileen by over nine minutes, Sapphire seven minutes away.

Pixe got away well in "B" class, but Trixie soon passed her and led all the way after a desperate race with Sayonara whom she only beat by thirteen and a half seconds, Pixie a fair fourth out of five starters.

For "C" class there were eleven and Coralie was the only non-finisher. Wagtail sailed splendidly after taking the lead at Sunk Rock and won by nine minutes from Lapwing, who had a great struggle with Maud.

Of the three starters in "D" class, Scale was the only one to finish, as she left the others hopelessly in the light wind.

Thirteen went for the Ships' Boat event and in this wind the four big pinnaces had the race to themselves. The 30 belonging to H. M. S. Highflyer won from No. 1 and No. 2 of the Hyacinth.

Messrs. John Blees & Co., whose name is more than familiar to Calcutta and mofussil amateur photographers, have sent us a calendar, artistic as to its decoration and mounting, plainly printed as to its dates.

Tommy Burns, who defeated "Gunner" Moir at the National Sporting Club on 2nd December last, and secured for himself the proud title of heavy-weight champion of the world, is not to be allowed to rest for long on his laurels. First Jim Roche expressed a desire to meet him, but the Irish champion has intimated that it would be impossible for him to make a match before Christmas, partly because of the difficulty in securing in Dublin a suitable venue for the contest, and partly, too, on account of difficulties in immediately obtaining a sufficient purse. Jack Palmer (who, it will be remembered, Moir defeated last year in a match for the heavy-weight championship of England) has, however, been more successful, and at a meeting with Burns at the Sporting Life offices, he arranged a match for £500 aside and the best purse offered, the only stipulation being that £1,500 should be the minimum. The necessary deposits were made, and the contest will take place on or before 7th February; the venue will depend upon the club or persons offering the largest purse, of which the winner will take 75 per cent. Jack Palmer will train at Harrogate and Scarborough, but Burns has not yet decided upon his headquarters.

A Narainguge correspondent writes:—In the early morning of the 27th ultimo at Ian Bazar, Narainguge, on the premises of Messrs. David and Company, a leopard was shot measuring six feet ten and a half inches in the rough (sic). It appears that Mrs. R. Lawrence was returning from her kitchen to the bungalow and saw the leopard in her vegetable garden. She immediately called to Mr. Lawrence and the others in the bungalow. Everyone at once turned out just as they were—sticks, kukries, and whatever came handy being requisitioned. Fortunately Mr. Stansbury of Madaripur of the same firm, who was staying in the bungalow at the time, had a revolver. A hunt then ensued, the animal taking refuge among the cauliflowers in the vegetable garden, and a coolie line running alongside of it, alternately first in one, then in another as it was hunted, some shots from the revolver taking effect. In the meantime word had been sent to other gentlemen who kept arriving with guns. One of these with a double-barrel shot gun succeeded in hitting the brute when it was in the coolie line, whereupon it charged round the vegetable garden and towards the bungalow. Mr. Stansbury, who was at this juncture in the verandah as it was coming down the path towards the bungalow, fired. The bullet entered near the shoulder and killed the beast.

Full reports of the Christmas golf in Calcutta and the competition for the Indian championship are published among our Golf news to-day. Mr. Mann met Mr. Colville in the finals and beat him by 8 up and 7 to play.

The Tollygunge Club Horse Show yesterday was completely successful; some of the exhibits being above the usual Calcutta standard, notably those which had won prizes at English and Irish shows. The arrangements were excellent, the attendance most satisfactory and the general result should be as gratifying to the promoters as it was to the public. The hour of our going to press prevents our publishing details which must be held over for next week.

Two well-printed and intereresting catalogues and price lists reach us from the Cawnpore Brush Company, Limited. A perusal of their contents provokes the reflection that only a few years ago such industrial enterprise was non-existent in this country; now this Company may well say nous avons changé tout cela for any one wanting any sort of brush, from the little implement devoted to the teeth to the mammoth arrangements designed for drain-cleaning or road-sweeping, can get their requirements fully met here.

A special report of the Second Championship Show of the Calcutta Kennel Club appears in another part of the paper. In point of number, variety and class of exhibits, and the judging it was quite a success; in other respects there was something left to be desired. In our opinion it was held in the wrong place, and too early. February would be a much better month for many reasons. Also it was not sufficiently advertised; even on the day of the Show there was no announcement in the local papers indicating place, time and admission charge! The contractor who attempted to erect the benches was the object of execration, executive, exhibitors and public joining in the angry chorus. The ground arrangements were faulty, straw and bamboo litter being a leading feature of the show—the contractor again, we suppose. The lines of benches were far too close together and so faultily arranged and badly constructed that several exhibits were in the sun the whole day, many could not be benched and several benches were soon broken. The programme disclosed no list of stewards; we noticed some gentlemen (not members of the Club) officiating in such capacity! The typographical errors in the said programme were plentiful and important enough in some instances to cause confusion and delay in the judging. The prizes arrived on the scene too late to admit of any but a few of the specials being presented. The narrow ribbons which replaced the time-honoured rosettes for prize winners did not find favour; the colours of the award cards did not correspond with those set down in the rules. The big notices outside the show, placed apparently with the object of directing the public to its whereabouts, had arrows actually pointing in the opposite direction! The creature comforts of the hard worked judges and officials did not appear to be worth regarding; the executive should remember that judging in a hot tent for several hours or running round as callers-over or ring stewards is apt to produce hunger and thirst. The "gate" arrangements were of a kind that must have caused a certain amount of loss, for we saw quite a number of people entering the show from the East gate at which no gate-keepers were we are thankful to say; one copy to the County Gentleman has evoked the following preliminary reference: "In his speech to the Burma Game Preservation Association as long ago as December 1901, Lord Curzon expressed his close sympathy with the aims of that body as regards game preservation in India, not only for the sportsman, but also for the naturalist and the friend of animal life. In doing so he admitted that hitherto the attempts made by Government to deal with the question by legislation or by [illegible] based on Statutes had been lacking in [illegible], and that though their effect had been in the right direction, he doubted whether they had gone far enough. He indicated his idea that legislation of a permissive or elastic character should be framed, but provisions of which should be applied to the various provinces of India in so far as they were adapted to local conditions. But he observed that the question was somewhat complicated because of securing the co-operation of the Native States and their chiefs. It does not appear that the Government of India nevertheless has passed any such Act or regulation defining the principles of protection for game, though Local Governments have issued rules for this purpose which are periodically modified or altered." A few years ago the Indian Government drafted a proposed Act which was circulated to the Local Governments, but as yet nothing has been done. So that in India as in America the same process has been going on. The supreme Legislatures are evolving a comprehensive Ordinance, which will embody all the principles governing the subject. In any review of the proposed Indian legislation and the proposed Act, it will be necessary to keep in mind the interests of the various communities, providing for the wants of one and safe guarding the rights of the others by closely studying the various aspects of the question. We have received a number of communications on the subject of a very interesting character, written with a view of reconciling conflicting interests in the Act, to which we propose to return shortly with the view of ascertaining where they are to be found differing and where they are in agreement as to what should be done by the help of the Indian Government.

The King, His Majesty of Norway and the Prince of Wales, spent quite a long time at the Smithfield Show on Monday afternoon: it had been hoped by the executive that the German Emperor would be there also, to make the regality of the occasion unique, but the Kaiser had his hands full during his brief stay in town after the Isle of Wight visit and did not go to Islington. Among other places of interest he went to Warings, the furniture shop in Oxford Street, and having inspected a model of the place Warings are going to open in Berlin advised inclusion of cheaply furnished rooms on the same lines as those in the Oxford Street shop.

The Army Council's decision in the case of Mr. Woods, of the Grenadier Guards, was published on Tuesday. Mr. Woods withdrew the charges of bias and prejudice he had made against his seniors when before the Court of Enquiry, so the officers engaged had only to decide whether undue pressure had been brought to bear upon him to send in his papers. They thought "some degree of pressure was more than once brought to bear" on him, by Colonel Cavendish, Major Gathorne Hardy, and Captain Stucley; but holding the opinion that the pressure took the form of well meant advice to the complaining officer to avoid adverse reports in future by leaving, the Army Council deprecate the giving of such advice even in a friendly spirit. Perhaps the hardest cut given by the official memorandum to Mr. Woods is the remark that what he might justly complain of were the unduly favourable reports made on him early in his career! This is rather rough on the kindly Commanding Officer who wanted to give him a chance of developing the qualities for command which he lacked; but is it not tantamount to telling Mr. Woods that he was a rank failure from the first as a regimental officer and ought to have made his complaint against the colonel who did not tell him so.

Mr. Woods is found "inefficient as a regimental officer and his retention in the service is not in the interests of the Army." His unpopularity is found due in a word to his unsociable habits "he had not the faculty of associating himself with the modes of thought and work of his brother officers—he failed to recognise the duty of identifying his life and career with the interests and working of the battalion as a whole rather than with what his individual tastes led him to prefer." Reviewing the proceedings as a whole, the conclusion at which the mere outsider arrives is that Mr. Woods was not cut out for soldiering as a regimental officer. He did good work as a staff officer and there seems ground for thinking that in an office he might have done very well: he had abilities but they are the abilities of the recluse and those abilities do not include that of commanding men. One can't help feeling very sorry for the man whose career is thus cut short: he acted under bad advice when he applied for this enquiry, and would have consulted his own interests had he quietly yielded to the advice given him to quit, irregular though such advice appears to be. Of course, Army Councils cannot prevent the donation of such advice; it is often conveyed otherwise than by word of mouth: one has known it done with a boot—but that was in an elder day. We have not heard the last of the case yet, probably, Woods pere says as much in a letter he is addressing, he says, to all the papers. His son's case "may be brought before Parliament during the next Session." What in the name of obscurity does he expect to gain by that? He might, with the present crowd in power, get his son re-instated; it seems most wildly improbable: but assuming his success what good will that do young Woods? He is a marked man; and his next Commanding Officer would be something more than human were he able to regard him as he would regard a sub. who came in course of exchange or other ordinary route. Woods pere does not seem to be a very wise man, and "Colonel X" was, I suspect, right when he attributed the son's false move to the father.

The Atherton-Yarde Buller breach of promise suit was decided in the plaintiff's favour on Tuesday. Captain Yarde Buller you would remember was the co-respondent in the Atherton divorce suit. The promises on which Mrs. Atherton relied were given before the decree obtained by Colonel Atherton was made absolute: a fact to which the judge drew attention as one which would have to be argued in any future case of the kind. Mrs. Atherton did not ask for damages. The lady's name was a good deal in people's mouths when she was in South Africa during the latter part of the war, in connection with that of a certain youthful peer of exalted position. It was affirmed by the club gossips that Colonel Atherton postponed his action for divorce in the interest of the said peer, since married.

One of the sights of London has been swept away by the motor 'bus and the Commissioner of Police: to wit "Toy Fair" so called on Ludgate Hill. At all times of the year the gutters or pavement edges are lined with penny toy sellers and an amazing collection of ingenious trifles you could amass with five shillings worth of coppers. For the month before Christmas the toy sellers always increased in number till they literally stood shoulder to shoulder nearly half way down both sides of the hill. Now they have been "moved on" and have taken their stand in Holborn near Gray's Inn Road where a sympathetic public has been doing specially generous business with them. It was the vagarious conduct of the motor 'bus which caused the police to move them off Ludgate Hill: when the roadway is greasy the motors skid fearfully on the hill and the toy sellers on business bent were not always alive to the danger of their position in the gutters. Accidents have occurred and to avoid troubles Toy Fair has been swept away notwithstanding protest from Ex-Lord Mayors and others.

Some of the papers got up an agitation about the "Fitzgerald gun," the invention of an old Crimean officer, which is said to possess the most amazing qualities as a quick firer which does not get hot and could beat down any battery opposed to it at a range of two miles. Major Fitzgerald offered his invention to the War Office when the Boer war broke out but his letters were not even answered. During the "hot fit" after the war he tried again and was told to send his gun to Woolwich with particulars of his special cooling system and he should "receive further instructions later." He declined with the scepticism peculiar to old soldiers dealing with Whitehall. Whether the journalistic agitation has anything to do with it or not, who shall say? But this week a trial of the gun was made before official authorities who will no doubt report in due time.

The Savage Club dinner of Sunday was a very special dinner: marking as it did the fiftieth anniversary of the Club's career. I missed the "father" of the Club, old Mr. Tegetmeier, who joined in 1857; but even Mr. Tegetmeier with his splendid vitality begins to feel the weight of ninety years and he has been seldom seen at the Savage dinners latterly. Sir Charles Santly was a guest, and in his little speech confessed that his reason for not being a member was the hostility with which critics might

At the Hicks Theatre on Monday a new curtain-raiser by Mrs. Oscar Berniger called "The Agitator" was produced. Rather a "thin" piece of work, dealing with the troubles of a group of work girls in a pickle factory and their proposal to go out on strike which are solved in a very improbable fashion by their leader's threat to commit suicide in the presence of a member of the firm. The play is to be noticed only for the success scored by Miss Marjorie Murray as Kitty Kemp. She acted with power assurance and pathos, making more of an indifferent part than the writer has done. Miss Murray made a decided mark and we shall hear of her again or I am much mistaken.

"The Girls of Gottenberg" reached its 200th performance at the Gaiety on Saturday. Mr. Edmund Payne as Max is as fresh and comical as ever, and Miss Gertie Millar, restored to the cast recovered from her recent accident is as charming as ever in the part of Mitzi: she had a new song on Saturday, "A common little girl," which caught on at once. "Peter Pan" is to be restored to the Duke of York's on Monday with Miss Pauline Chase in the title role, and the original Wendy in the person of Miss Hilda Trevelyan. Mr. Robb Harwood, it appears, will be the one and only Captain Hook. Mr. George du Maurier was to have shared the duty, but I am told that he hates the part and would not play it if he could escape.

Another "Tetrazzini Concert" was given at Covent Garden on Saturday afternoon, the auditorium being specially arranged to accommodate the expected crowd: the space usually occupied by the orchestra was boarded over and divisions between boxes were removed thus making room for far more people than can pack into the place under ordinary circumstances: and the house was literally crammed to the doors. The enthusiasm was immense. Marie Tetrazzini gave the mad scene from Lucia and every pause was the signal for an outburst. Her range is certainly very wonderful, but I incline to agree with the critic who did not approve the lady's rendering of simple songs: she does not sing them simply; invests them with too much vocal training. There were Tetrazzini Concerts again on Tuesday evening and yesterday afternoon.

Messrs. Maskelyne and Devant's advertisment has not procured the secret of the "Indian Rope Trick." The St. George's Hall magicians have not discovered how to throw a rope skyward in such wise that the end shall stick to a cloud while a boy climbs up it (I never saw this wonderful trick while I dwelt on India's coral strand so am not clear about details of the proceedings); but they have put on a very clever illusion in which a rope plays part. Their rope is hung from somewhere above the stage clear of the wings, and a native climbs up it and vanishes when about ten feet from the boards: how he vanishes and where he goes is the mystery, but vanish he certainly does. Another extraordinary illusion is that in which the magician takes from a small basket the several limbs and trunk of a man, puts them into another basket on a bare wooden table when the native who climbed the rope appears out of it. One acquires a distinct distrust of one's senses in St. George's Hall.

Truly there are extraordinary women in London. On Saturday a man named William Smith was charged with robbing women of jewelry by tricks. His plan was to hang about the streets in the shopping regions, Regent Street, etc., and cultivate acquaintance with any woman he thought likely to suit his purpose: he would ask the victim to go to the Stores or somewhere to help him buy presents for his mother and would then offer his dupe a present for her trouble, preferably a ring, borrowing hers as a pattern. The ring secured he bolted sometimes with his victim's bag or any parcel she had allowed him to carry. On one occasion, having ascertained where the woman lived, he carried off her bag and keys and robbed her flat. The victims who gave evidence could only say in explanation that the fellow "looked like a gentleman:" three of them gave their addresses privately to the magistrate; a circumstance which points to respectability ashamed of itself.

The Piccadilly Tube began a five-minute service of trains last Sunday: an innovation which may distress the excellent people who object to Sunday movement, but will be welcome to the less scrupulous of the brethren. By the way, mention of the Tube invites reference to an advantage of these low level lines: the fogs, fog they never so densely, do not penetrate to the tube stations or the tubes themselves. You sink per lift to a clear atmosphere and welcome, yea welcome, the peculiar crypt-like stuffiness which distinguishes the tube, quite untainted by fog.

MR. ROOSEVELT ON AMERICAN SPORT.*

MR. ROOSEVELT'S new book consists of articles contributed to Harper's up to ten years ago, but the contents quite justify the publishers in reproducing them in book form for their avowed object—the enlightenment of the young concerning the game of North America and the sport to be enjoyed therewith. The President of the United States has wide experience of all sports with the rifle in his country and he is, as we have learned from other writings, a close and discriminating observer: hence though he professes in this work to teach only the ABC, to awaken or cultivate the taste which lies dormant in every well constructed boy, not boys only but their elders may read "Good Hunting" with profit as well as pleasure. The author devotes a chapter to each of the principal game beasts, beginning with the wapiti, which name he wishes his countrymen would adopt in place of "Elk." It is a digression, but we very much wish that the word elk might be expunged from the English dictionary altogether: when we have the wapiti branded as elk in America, the moose mis-labelled elk in Scandinavia, and the sambur miscalled elk in Ceylon there is, we suggest, a good case for getting rid of the word if it could only be done. To return to Mr. Roosevelt's book: his chapter on the grizzly is a particularly good one. We are interested to see that he believes the grizzly is only debarred by its clumsiness from becoming an habitual flesh eater: there is, as he says, something "grotesque and incongruous in comparing the bear's vast size and his formidable claws and teeth with the uses to which those claws and teeth are nominally put." We entirely agree with him: the spectacle of a grizzly employing his enormous strength on berries suggests power wholly misapplied: and it is not surprising that when opportunity serves he should be as destructive as he is among domestic animals whose comparative lack of activity by the side of deer and wild animals render them an easy prey. Pig, says Mr. Roosevelt, is his favourite prey among domestic animals: and we do not remember that any writer has mentioned before the grizzly's "peculiar knack in knocking down a hog and then literally eating him alive in spite of his fearful shrieking." Of wolf hunting with hounds—or rather with the American equivalent of a bobbery pack—Mr. Roosevelt had a good deal to say in his last book: what he has to tell us here is succint and interesting if it contains nothing very new. Bearing in mind that these pages were written on or before 1897 it is worth noticing that during the ten years preceding the wolves, which had almost disappeared with the herds of bison in Montana, Wyoming, and Western Dakota, had steadily increased in number. The increase of these brutes in the cattle raising regions has continued until at the present time their ravages have become so serious as to compel the attention of the Government. Their wariness has increased with their numbers until it is become most difficult to kill with the rifle, very hard to trap and difficult to poison, they profit by the misfortunes of their friends. When a few have been trapped the survivors in the district shun traps in a fashion which says much for the organisation of news distribution in wolf circles; and the poisoning of one or two, though easily accomplished in the first instance, is enough to warn off the whole wolf population. Hunting them down with dogs seems to be the only dependable method, whence the recent enquiry concerning Russian hounds, and this has the advantage of combining sport with economics.

The author has some pages of sound advice to youths whose ambition it is to "go west" and become ranch men. He sets forth very plainly the dark side of the picture as well as the brilliantly coloured. He does not deny its attractions but insists upon it that these do not appeal to all and that the young ranchman must be specially constituted. Having regard to the enormous flood of emigration now taking place from the old country to Western Canada the book should be useful at home as well as in America. The illustrations are fair and very thick paper and profuse margins reduce the quantity of the contents below that we expect, but the quality remains and that is the main thing.

RED SEA SPORT.

THE North African Ibex, which was the chief object of my expedition, ranges south from Suez for about 800 miles; but, communication between most of this coast and the outer world being almost nil, much of their habitat remains practically unexplored. On 20th January years ago, I landed near the southern limit of their range, meaning to work north towards the higher mountains, where the best heads are to be expected, and started with this intention on the 22nd, with a humble outfit of four men and six camels. The first day's march was about twenty-two miles, to a well. Here I intended to wait the return of two sportsmen, who would pass on their way from the hills, and from whom I could get information and advice. On the 23rd, I started towards the sea, about five miles off, through large trees, mostly mimosas. The country was full of camels and goats, with their attendant natives; so there was no sign of game for some time, till, as we cleared the belt of trees, and the scrub got thinner, we sighted a few Sœmmering's gazelle, called "ariel" by the natives. These gazelle are very conspicuous, nature having provided them with white quarters, which show up in the sun like a new tent.

After a long hot stalk I got to about 100 yards, and shot the only buck of the party, which, by good luck, had gone on feeding after the does had lain down. One of the does had seen me, and kept me lying motionless on the burning sand for nearly half an hour, till her suspicions were allayed.

The head of the buck was just over 14in. I measured a good many, and found none reaching 15in.; so they are considerably smaller than their neighbours in Somaliland, which go up to over 18in. I saw more ariel in very open ground, but only had one more shot; this was at a dorcas gazelle that continued to watch the camels after I had slipped off, and gave me a chance at 90 yards. He was standing three-quarters on; and the ·500 bullet caught him on the shoulder and nearly knocked him to pieces. I attribute this to the copper plug, as I shot small antelope last year with the same sized bullet and a wooden plug, without damaging them unduly.

24th January.—Shot nothing but a bustard, which was unlike those I have killed in South Africa, his feathers being tipped with white, weight I guessed at about 10lbs., perhaps 12lbs. On this evening I met my friends from the ibex hills, who brought bad news. It appears that the natives of these hills are not unfriendly on ordinary occasions, but become dangerous when worked up by the presence of a sheik. This gentleman was now among them, having come from the Atbara to collect tribute, and he openly proclaimed that he would send anyone shooting in his mountains as a present to Osman Digna. As the latter long ago declared his intention of skinning alive the first Englishman he secured, I thought it wise to change my plans. This was the more disappointing, as the returning party reported a good show of ibex, and had four nice heads, the best 37in.; one of 42in. has since been shot in the same hills.

On 25th January I moved camp west to some low hills, where I heard there were ibex, and shot a buck dorcas and some desert partridges on the road. We went over some very rough country, and did not camp till long after dark. On this day I got my only chance at sandgrouse, but I let them alone, expecting to see them daily, as, some years ago, they were in hundreds all over the desert. The Arabs say they go to the higher ground now, as there is plenty of rain water in the hills. I saw a few more, but always passing over out of range.

The next day we climbed a hill about 3,000ft., and slept at the top. The ironstone cuts a pair of boots to pieces in about two days. India-rubber soles are best, but felt is nearly as good and less expensive.

We were on the move at dawn, after a cold night. My followers, in their cotton clothes, were wet through, but did not seem to mind. We soon sighted seven ibex, and I got close to them; but there was no head fit to shoot, and the local men told me there were none larger on those hills. This I believed, as it was to their interest to keep me there. So we climbed down and shifted camp about ten miles, having finished the water, which was only a rain pool in the rocks. My party was to-day reinforced by two native police. They proved very useful, especially as they both talked Arabic, which few of the Hadendowas or Amarars understand.

On the morning of 28th January having filled our waterskins, we started early, as it was two days' journey to the next water. I saw two Salt's antelope on the plain—the first I had seen. They seem to be both scarce and local, but are easily seen, as they have none of the sneaking ways of the bluebuck of South Africa, or the little beast on the coral islands at Zanzibar. They seem to live on the plains and hills indifferently, and are very fast over rocks. During the afternoon luck came with a run, as we wanted meat. I got a dorcas, then an ariel, and then another dorcas—all good bucks, and all in an hour. The last was lying down close to a doe, and my first bullet hit a stone just in front of him, making a noise nearly as loud as the rifle. He got slowly up and shook himself, but the doe did not move till, having killed the buck with my second barrel, I got up and walked towards her.

On this day I adopted a new system of stalking. One of the policemen, Abu Ammon by name, was a keen sportsman, and had a most intelligent camel, which we utilised as follows: On seeing game we got out of sight and dismounted, took the saddle off the camel, and started towards our quarry, Abu Ammon guiding the camel with a halter and stick. I found it best to make him hold on to the camel with one hand, while I held his shoulder; once, before we adopted this plan, we were both left in full view of the ariel by the camel swerving on receipt of a whack. On getting within shooting distance I threw myself down behind a bush while the camel went on; the game watching the camel and usually affording a broadside shot. I was surprised to find that the Arabs ignored the direction of the wind, and it certainly seemed to make no difference; perhaps man's scent was overpowered by that of a very rank camel. I noticed this the more as the last natives I shot with in South-East Africa were continually throwing up dust to test the wind—evidently considering it of the greatest importance. These Arabs take a skin off the body fairly well, hardly using a knife at all; but they cannot be trusted with a head. If allowed, they will cut the throat right across, close under the jaw; but as long as the beast is bled somehow they will eat the meat. They have, as a rule, wonderful sight, which is much better when the camp is short of meat than when there is a full larder. This I have noticed with other natives as well.

On 29th January I shot a buck ariel, and hit another high in the withers. This last went about a mile, and lay down on the side of a hill. I waited for him to stiffen, when an Arab, who had seen what was going on, made a rush at him and off he went again. I followed for some hours, but could not get on terms, and eventually handed him over to some native trackers, who proably got him before dark.

The following day I moved about ten miles, and camped by running water, which is unusual in these parts. The stream rises in the sand, and flows for half a mile or so before it disappears again. On the road I shot a good doe ariel. It is hard to make out the sex, unless bucks and does are together, so that you can compare the heads.

The next day I shot small birds for skinning and some desert partridges. I saw no other game, as I did not go far from camp. The damp heat is such that specimens must be skinned almost at once; and even then the skins have no chance of drying.

On 1st February started early, meaning to march all day; but after about five hours there appeared a peaceful goatherd, armed as usual with spear and shield. I questioned him as to what game he had seen, and he replied that there were two small beasts like ibex on a hill close by. Just then a boy came up, who said he had seen some Salt's antelope, called "dig-dig" by these natives, so I determined to camp here for a day or two, as there was good water handy. While the camels were being unloaded, I went to look for the dig-dig, and saw three, but very wild, and I did not get a shot; so I went back to look after the other beasts on the hill, which was a collection of huge boulders. I had a stiff climb to get above where they had last been seen; but perseverance was rewarded, for I soon got a shot, as two little grey beasts passed almost directly below me. I rolled one over and would probably have got the other, but a boy who was close to me at once started down the cliff to hal-lal the victim, and so arranged himself that his head covered the survivor till it was out of range. Of course, I shouted to him to stop, but he knew no Arabic, and took my words as an incentive to haste. I ran after the other buck, but hopelessly failed to catch him, and in the meantime my native friend had cut the dead one's throat right across. It was a klipspringer, as I expected. I did not know they ranged so far north, as I do not think they are common in these parts. It was rather pleasing to meet an old South African friend in the north of the Continent.

Next day I went out after dig-dig and saw several, but very wild. I got a doe late in the day; they are so small that it is impossible to distinguish the sex—especially as the tuft of hair on the head looks like horns. A boy brought me a young dig-dig; it was quite tame, but only lived a few days. I think the jolting of the camel was too much for it on the march.

On 3rd February I shot some blue rocks for the pot; and then tried to get klipspringer, which, however, I failed to find; but just before dusk I succeeded in getting two dig-dig, buck and doe, close to camp. On the following day we made a long march up passes, where the camels had to be led to a camp where the wells had run dry—luckily we had filled the water skins. Plenty of dorcas gazelle were on the road and very tame. I drove them gently over a ridge, and then slipped off the camel and ran up. I got two good bucks and a doe in this way. My men had a dinner party and entertained a few friends who camped near us; they finished all the meat; indeed, I do not think an ounce was wasted all the trip.

On 5th February we made a short march, reaching camp soon after midday. I shot a buck dorcas off the camel with shot gun. We camped on a plateau about 4,000ft. above the sea in lovely country, with grass and trees, ferns and flowers, but too many people and cattle for game; however, I decided to stay one day at least and shoot small birds for skinning.

Early the next morning a deputation of Arabs turned up, who insisted on taking me to shoot a bird they called "goko," which, they said, was common among the trees and boulders. We walked about an hour to a hillside covered with thick undergrowth and rocks beneath the trees, and here the natives spread out to look for game. Almost at once they called me, and I scrambled on to a boulder and waited while the beaters closed in and put up the birds, getting a right and left, and soon after another from the same covey. They were large grey francolin, rufus on the head, and very like the bush pheasant of South Africa, but larger. Afterwards I had some very sporting shots as the birds crossed the valleys. I do not know how the beaters found the birds in the first place, but they were wonders at marking them down. I soon had three brace and then stopped, having no use for any more; but we had several birds marked down and every prospect of a good bag.

The following day was rainy and misty, so I marched down to the plains, over very bad ground, which lamed a camel. I got no shooting, though we heard francolin calling close by. There were some baboons barking; but I could not see them.

8th February.—Sent off the outfit to camp near some wells a few miles off, and started with two men towards the sea; soon found a solitary ariel, but underestimated the distance, and broke a leg just below the elbow. The two camel-men followed him at a good pace, but it took two hours before I bagged him; he had been joined by a doe, and I got within fifty yards of them behind the stalking camel. As soon as we had packed him on a camel we sighted another solitary buck, which I stalked and shot without artificial aid. The bullet cut his throat, but he went fast for 200 yards before falling.

9th February.—Shot some desert hares and stone curlew close to camp. The hares have enormous ears, which look pink in the sun; they are pretty wild, and no wonder, as the passing Arab always throws his camel stick at them, and seems to kill a good many. The stone curlew appears to be the same as the dikkop of South Africa. Next day I shot two hares and a dorcas gazelle, and then saw a doe dorcas dragging a broken leg; she joined a buck and a second doe, and I bagged her and the buck with a single shot. I saw some foxes, larger than the fennec, but smaller than the common Egyptian fox. There are various jackals about; and I thought I saw a ratel, but he was too far off to make sure. Wanting the complete skin of a doe ariel for setting up, I took a lot of trouble to get a good one; and then I overjudged the distance, and knocked a great piece out of her withers with a solid bullet, spoiling her skin. The next shot, with hollow-fronted bullet, took her in the ribs and hardly left a mark.

12th February was my last day, as the steamer was due about the 14th, and communication with the outer world is not an everyday occurrence. I shot some small birds and a good buck dorcas gazelle, and sorrowfully struck my tent for the last time.

I had a day's fishing in the Red Sea about ten miles from land, on a reef, where we had fair sport, getting bright red fish, going about 8lbs. Another large fish, like mackerel, and a dark-coloured perch, called by the Jeddah natives "soudance," because he is nearly black and has an enormous mouth. The sharks broke our lines several times; and though we hauled some up in to sight, it is only because they were not doing their best. We had no shark tackle with us. The method of fishing is rather quaint. The natives put on eight or ten little fish like sprats, running the hook through their heads; they then lay them on a flat lump of coral, and take a few turns of the line round the lot, add a handful of crushed fish for ground bait (which they call hacksheesh), put another piece of coral over them, and take a few more turns of line over all, fishing off with a sort of half hitch. When the stones reach the bottom, a jerk of the line releases them and the ground bait. The sharks are called Ingleze—the explanation being that they go up and down in the sea and eat up everything they find—a doubtful compliment.

A VERY BIG PANTHER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—As I see you keep a record of measurements of big game in the "Indian Field Shikar Book," it may interest you to know that I shot a panther near Goona, last April, which measured 8ft. 1in. (unskinned as he lay after being shot). He was a huge heavy beast with a very large head, massive shoulders and fore-arm. The measurement was taken by another officer and can be authenticated. All shikaris present agreed that this was the largest panther they had ever seen.

R. C. B.

[A very fine beast. The record is 8ft. 5½in. to the credit of Captain A. G. Arbuthnot and next to that comes the 8ft. 3in. specimen of Mr. A. P. Davis, vide "Shikar Book."—ED.]

BRITISH AND NATIVE METHODS OF TANK FISHING.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Early last August I had the pleasure of discussing with you, Mr. Editor, the methods in vogue among natives who fish tanks in the vicinity of Calcutta. Your own success with similar tackle, used in the same way, is sufficient proof of the soundness of the system. Now the native way of fishing for Cutla, Rohu, and Mirgil, is to use two hand-made hooks attached to a tusser silk line, without any gut. The bait and a piece of the line above it lying flat on the bottom. The rod used is a stiff cane 13 or 14 feet long, and the strike is always a very hard one; hard enough to drive the strong hook into the fish even if the mouth itself is missed!

Now the methods adopted by British anglers in the tanks of Northern India, are extraordinarily similar to the native ones in Calcutta; so similar in fact that the principles pursued may justly be termed identical. Thus my own tackle, and that of friends who fished with me consisted of a strong bottom of double gut, with a short shanked strong hook, and either a self-cocking peacock quill float, or an ordinary peacock quill with a pierced shot working freely, like a miniature ledger lead on the gut, but prevented from going lower than 8 or 9 inches from the hook by a silk whipping. When the pierced shot was used, the depth was so plumbed that the shot rested on the bottom when two-thirds of the 6 inch float were immersed. With the self-cocking float no shot was used on the line, and 8 or 9 inches of gut above the hook lay on the bottom. Personally I preferred the self-cocking float and unweighted line. From a practical point of view there is little difference between the two tackles, as the pierced shot is quite loose on the line, so that the gut moves through it without any drag.

As regards rods we used stiff canes of 10 or 11 feet. It will be at once seen that the main principles of the British and native methods are identical. For the Calcutta tanks, it would, of course, be necessary to use the very thickest salmon gut, as the fish run so large.

As to baits I attach but small importance to this point, for it is well known that with fish nature of food is largely a question of custom. Steady ground baiting, with ingredients similar to, but if inferior quality to the bait used on the hook, will ensure success. The most convenient hook bait is atta paste of good quality, i.e., with a high percentage of gluten. The paste should be thoroughly worked up, and above all things not too hard. The addition of a second hook to the line seems to be principally useful in increasing the chances of foul hooking shy biting fish. Of course the whole crux of tank angling lies in learning to know exactly what the movements of the float mean. This cannot be learnt from a book; the angler must study patiently and thoroughly at the water side. Once having mastered the language of the quill, he will find tank fishing a most fascinating pursuit.

I have tried Thomas' labeo tackle thoroughly in Northern India: it consists of one baited hook just touching the bottom, and a pair of hooks whipped back to back, and unbaited, lying flat two inches below the single baited one. This tackle will undoubtedly catch fish, if they can be induced to bite, but the unsoundness of the principle lies in the fact that the gut goes straight to the surface from the bait. No shy fish will take paste, when he can see the gut going straight up in this fashion.

For this reason one must condemn Thomas' labeo tackle, and all other tackles, which do not provide for 8 or 9 inches of the gut above the hook lying flat on the bottom.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.

THE NUISANCE OF SHAVING.

"THE thing is," Mr. H. G. Wells writes in an amusing passage "that I find life an extremely troublesome affair." He does not want to make any railing accusations against life which he finds neither very sad nor very horrible. At times he finds it distinctly amusing, and indeed, knows nothing in the same line that can quite compare with it. But at times he finds life a bother.

"The kind of thing that I object to," he remarks with engaging frankness, "is all the troublesome things one has to do every morning in getting up. There is shaving. I have to get shaved because Euphemia hates me with a blue jowl, and I will admit I hate myself. Yet if I were alone I do not think my personal taste would affect my decision; I will say that for myself. Either I back about with a blunt razor—my razors are always blunt—until I am a kind of Whitechapel Horror, nod with hair in tufts upon my chin like the top of a Bosjeman's head, or else I have to spend all the morning being dabbed about the face by a barber with damp hands." Could any two alternatives be more terrifying to a business man with no time to waste?"

SOME BARBERS' SECRETS.

Other writers have drawn in more or less gloomy or vivid language the miseries attendant on shaving unscientifically without proper knowledge and without proper appliances. But has the subject ever been thoroughly thrashed out, and the real reason found for the discomfort which is the fate of most men who dislike that sole alternative of not shaving—growing a beard? There is, to begin with, the difficulty in lathering, which necessitates a choice of soaps. Not even the most experienced shaver could get satisfactory results out of ordinary washing soaps; and the experienced shaver is, of course, just the man who would insist on always having a first-rate shaving soap. "Well-lathered is half shaved." But is the use of a first-rate soap the foremost requisite for an easy shave? In a recent discussion as to whether or not barbers possessed any shaving secrets of their own, somebody propounded the theory that the first thing to do was to sponge the face with hot water before applying any soap at all. Doubtless, that adds to the comfort of the operation. Another letter writer urged that the chief point to keep in view was that the skin must always be drawn tight before using the razor, and that the secret of doing this consisted in always keeping the fingers of the left hand perfectly dry. That, again, is a barber's "tip." Other litterateurs who have written on the gentle art have put forward other more or less valuable counsel; as, for instance, that the razor should always be dipped in scalding water immediately before and at intervals while shaving; then, again, that it must be laid flat to the face and must be drawn across the beard with a slanting stroke, the kind of stroke which makes it possible for the expert swordsman to cut a sheep in halves, when a stronger man, ignorant of swordmanship, strikes a harder blow but fails.

WHAT IS THE MAIN REQUISITE?

Still, although there is a great deal that a skilled barber could teach the ignorant or careless shaver, he could teach him very little if he were not provided beforehand with first-class implements for the purpose. Is the razor, then, the main thing? In a certain sense, of course it must always be the main thing. You could shave, in a kind of a way, with yellow soap and a paint brush if your razor would cut; but without a razor the best soap, the best brush, and the hottest water are not much use, unless, like the Emperor Tiberius, you mean to shave yourself with red-hot nutshells. But the razor is not always the main thing. Suppose that your razor becomes blunt. The best razor in the world must become blunt unless proper care is taken of it. Even a Wilkinson Sword Steel razor will not give the best result unless it is properly stropped. And there you have one of the greatest of all shaving difficulties. Many men can shave quickly and easily who have never succeeded in stropping a razor properly and who, therefore, are never able to get the best results out of their razors. "It's no good my buying a strop"—how often you hear the remark—"I can't use one. Stropping only makes my razor blunter." Some men, indeed, never strop a razor at all. They buy a razor and use it until it is blunt, and then throw it aside and buy another. That is not only throwing away money, but throwing away an opportunity. It is throwing away the opportunity of enjoying one of the most satisfactory sensations of a well-made toilet—the satisfaction of a really comfortable and easy shave. With a first-rate razor, such as the Wilkinson Sword Steel razor, properly stropped, shaving can be an operation to look forward to rather than to dread.

A PERFECT STROP.

Now, has there been no strop invented which is really easy to use and really efficacious, as well as being safe, handy, and easily packed? There is such a strop, and it is one which only needs a trial to convince the most sceptical of its value. It is the WILKINSON PATENT DOUBLE ACTION STROPPING MACHINE, and it succeeds exactly where dozens of other stropping machines have failed and continue to fail. Many strops will put an edge on a razor the first time they are used. The second or third time they are used they take the edge off again. That is because the razor is stropped at the wrong angle. Now stropping a razor with an ordinary strop—a plain, unimproved strop of the old fashioned kind—is an art. Watch the skilled barber who knows how to put an edge on a razor and keep it there. You will notice that he does not merely drag the razor down the strop with a single stroke executed at right angles to the leather. He carries the razor with a delicate, even pressure over the strop, holding the blade at such an angle that there is an absolutely level "heel to toe" movement, which exactly suits the set of the grain of the steel. It is precisely that movement of the skilled barber's hand which is applied to the razor blade by the WILKINSON PATENT DOUBLE ACTION STROPPING MACHINE. If you will look at the two accompanying diagrams you will see how it is done. In the first place notice that in the action of stropping it is not only the razor that moves but also the strop. But the machine moves both, regularly and automatically. There is no room left for making a mistake as to pressure on the razor blade or direction in which the blade is moved, as there is with other strops when the razor is held in the hand and moved backwards and forwards over the leather. In the WILKINSON PATENT DOUBLE ACTION STROPPING MACHINE the razor moves vertically while the strop moves horizontally through the machine, and this motion, while it exactly represents the movement of the skilled barber's hand is absolutely regular and unvarying. All that is necessary to do is this:—take the machine and hook it on to any convenient object, such as a bed-rail. Open the stropper as wide as possible so as to keep the strop free from the clip, and place the razor blade in the clip, as shown in the illustration. Then draw the strop backwards and forwards by the handles a few times in the manner indicated in the illustration at the head of the page. That is all that is needed. The razor will be perfectly stropped. The edge which will be put on it will remain there, and if the razor be stropped whenever used it will last a lifetime. A further point worth noting is that in the WILKINSON STROPPING MACHINE, the positions of the strop and blade are such that it is impossible to cut the strop. That is, of course, another great point. But the main point about the Wilkinson Strop is that it strops the razor as a barber strops it, and that means not only a sharp razor to-day, but a sharp razor to-morrow and the day after, and easy shaving every day of the week.

An advertisement in to-day's issue gives further details of this wonderful strop.

Mr. V. G. Weatherall of Purneah sends us the following letter:—

I am much pleased with the "Lethal" bullets invented by you and can recommend them for either choke or cylinder barrels. I can vouch that they deal a smashing blow and would stop anything, which one could not rely on a shot gun doing prior to this invention. I only wish I had had them in some of the big shoots in Nepal, for I have often lost a chance as I never relied with confidence on my gun as an auxiliary. In my opinion they will bring shot guns more into use for ball than they are at present, especially with the advantage of firing out of either choke or cylinder barrels. I have used a good many of the "Rotary" bullets, which are good, but these are a vast improvement on them. I am sure any sportsman who use the "Lethal" bullets will soon have faith in them. You are at liberty to use this letter if you desire to do so.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN.

LAST Friday was a perfectly charming day at sunny Sandown, with just enough frosty tinge in the air to give a spice to the occasion. The company in the members' enclosure was but scanty, Tattersall's supplying the main bulk of the attendance, with a fairly good crowd in the cheaper ring. The going even for Sandown's sandy soil was heavy, but falls were not more frequent than usual, while class and quantity helped to enhance a pleasant afternoon's racing.

Surely sunny Sandown surpassed itself on Saturday, with a midsummer sun which made a top-coat unnecessary, while the going was improving every hour. The attendance, more worthy of the occasion, showed a considerable improvement on Friday's meagre muster, and included many of the leading lights of the Turf, while the fair sex were more numerously represented, and the better filled public rings attested to the strength of the half-holiday division. Sandown certainly has given us the best sport seen since the season commenced, and the staunch patronage accorded the fixture ensures quality in the fields.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

The International campaign for 1907-8 was opened on Saturday, when the English Amateurs met and defeated the Irish Amateurs, at Tottenham, by six goals to one, in the presence of over 9,000 people. The attendance is the best answer to the numerous criticisms which have appeared in newspapers hostile to the F.A., to the effect that the game should have been played on the ground of an amateur club. The theory I absolutely agree with, but the practical difficulty is that there is not an amateur club ground in London where 10,000 people can see a game, though it might be possible to crowd the greater part of that number in. Yet a further objection was the absence of players who have shown good form in club matches, but here again the answer is supplied by the result, and it must be borne in mind that it is the duty of those who select the teams to put in the strongest side England can produce. Sometimes there are men so nearly equal in ability that it matters little which of them play, and the changes may be rung upon them, but the outstanding fact to bear in mind is that it is not the wishes of clubs, not the aspirations of individual players, that should be studied, but that the reputation of English amateur football is at stake, and excellence must be the only passport to a place in an England team. That the interest in amateur football under the ægis of the parent body is not a diminishing quantity was amply demonstrated by the enthusiasm of the crowd. And it was a game to enthuse over. The heavy ground notwithstanding, it was a match full of interesting incidents, brilliant footwork, incisive attack, dogged defence, and an intense earnestness. At the outset, the Irishmen were the better together, and there was more than one anxious moment, but when the Englishmen had grasped the points in the play of their colleagues, victory was certain, for they were thereafter the better team. There was not a weakness from goal to centre-forward, and the Irish defence had a most gruelling time. Hard as they worked the full ninety minutes, they could not hold the virile, thrusting English forwards, the whole front line, both in the matter of individual play and combination, giving an exhibition as pretty and as effective as any I have seen this season, either in amateur or professional football. The halves were great, particularly Lintott and Hawkes, the backs on top of their form, and Brebner was a complete success. Ireland was well served in goal and at back, but the halves were weak, McCann being the best, and of the forwards Hannon, Blair, and Hooper took the eye most in the order named. There was not a serious foul during the game.

The Southern League.

The enforced idleness of Plymouth Argyle gave Queen's Park Rangers an opportunity of which they availed themselves in emphatic fashion. It was a performance of great merit to defeat Watford on their own ground by three clear goals, and the two points thus obtained give the Rangers 22 to the 21 of the Argyle, but the latter have played a game less. In one other instance the home club went down, Leyton being beaten by Swindon, and the latter now occupy third place in the table. Millwall beat Brighton at North Greenwich by the narrowest possible margin, but Reading, at Elm Park, gained a significant victory over Tottenham Hotspur, whose fault was lack of finishing power. Brentford did no more than was expected of them in defeating Luton, and the result at Bristol, where the Rovers overcame Crystal Palace, was as anticipated, but the visitors only went under by the narrowest margin after a determined effort. West Ham are to be congratulated on compelling Norwich City to yield up a point at Newmarket Road, but Portsmouth were less successful at Bradford, the Avenue gaining the verdict by the odd goal in five.

The League.—Division I.

Manchester United have reached their half-century of goals, their latest victims being Bristol City, but the Westerners fought with grim desperation, and a goal was all that separated the teams at the finish. As Sheffield Wednesday lost to Blackburn Rovers at Ewood Park, the Mancunians have now a six points lead of their nearest rivals, while Newcastle United and Bury, third and fourth respectively, can show only 19 points as against the 28 of the leaders. Everton, who have not, I believe, ever won at Newcastle, again lost two points at St. James' Park, but home clubs did not have matters all their own way, for Bury humiliated Middlesbrough, Birmingham were mastered by Sunderland, and Manchester City took a point away from Chelsea, where the game was watched by a crowd of 40,000. The Liverpool vs. Aston Villa match was the most sensational of the afternoon, for the Villans were overwhelmed, five goals being scored against them without response. The Arsenal were not expected to win at Bolton, and the result was in accordance with anticipations.

Division II.

Fulham accomplished one of the best performances of the season on Saturday, in going to Leicester and defeating the Fosse by three goals to two. It is pleasing, too, to learn from trustworthy sources that there was not the slightest soupçon of luck about the win—it was the triumph of a better all-round team. The victory has brought Fulham within a couple of points of the leaders, who have a match in hand, but between them are Oldham Athletic, West Bromwich Albion, and Derby County. The latter have been going along very quietly, but how seriously they will have to be reckoned with is indicated by their three clear goals' victory over Stoke, at Stoke. Bradford City obtained two points at Grimsby that were not booked to their credit in advance, and West Bromwich did themselves and other aspiring clubs a good turn in scoring the only goal of the game at the Hawthorns against Hull City. RUGBY RULES.

As was almost certain to be the case, the Cardiff fifteen won comfortably at the Rectory Field, defeating Blackheath by 3 goals and 3 tries to 2 goals. The game may easily be summed up. Blackheath held their own forward but in back play were out-classed. This was in no way surprising, as Blackheath had a new three-quarter line—they make changes in their back division every week—and naturally they were lacking in combination. Apart from the forward work, most of the good points of the game were with the Cardiff backs. R. Davies, who has succeeded David as the scrummage half, was adept in getting the ball away, and Bush, the stand-off half, was in great form. The Blackheath men forgot the old maxim of going for the man with the ball, and Bush, who is one of the most astute of players, was quick to perceive this note of hesitancy. Time after time he feinted to pass, and was allowed to run through, but one could not but admire the daring of his methods, the delightful swerve, and the straightness of his running. He quite baffled his opponents, and it was not until late that Blackheath realised how to deal with him effectively. Bush did not himself gain a try, but he had a hand in most of the good things accomplished, and was the pivot of the back division. The Welsh passing, as usual, was smooth, and was done at top speed. All the men fielded the ball and took their passes cleanly, scarcely a slip being made, and when they were in motion their attack always had an ugly look. Four of the tries fell to the three-quarter line, Gibbs obtaining two and Gabe and Williams one each, while Brown finished a fine run by Bush, and Casey scored in a forward rush. Cardiff played a bold, open game—the kind of game that leads to the scoring of tries—but they overstepped the mark on one occasion. From a line-out near their own line a forward passed out to the three-quarter line. Like a flash Jolly, one of the Blackheath three-quarters, raced in between, intercepted the pass, and was behind the goal-posts before the Cardiff men quite realised what had happened. A liberty was taken, and met with proper punishment. Just score for a few minutes put new life into the game, as Cardiff's lead was then reduced to four points, but the Welshmen soon made matters secure, adding a couple of tries in quick succession. Blackheath's first try, gained by J. C. Chambers, was quite as good as any in the match, and was led up to by good work by Purdon and Portus, the halves. Except for the brief period just referred to, Blackheath never looked like winning. Cardiff very early secured a good lead, and afterwards practically always had the game in their hands. It was a pleasure to watch the skilful and speedy movements of the Welsh backs, and particularly the safe fielding and fine kicking of Winfield, the full back, but the enjoyment of the spectators was somewhat marred by the frequency with which the referee was compelled to penalise the visitors.

In their game with Leicester the London Scottish gave further convincing proof of their greatness. For ten minutes or so the Midland side rather more than held their own, but directly the Scottish had settled down to their game there was only one side in it. Like most teams that have opposed the Scottish this season, the Leicester men found themselves outclassed. Playing fine football all round, the Scotsmen won by 6 goals and 3 tries to nothing. One would like to see them pitted against Cardiff on a neutral ground. Such a match, if it could be arranged, would be worth travelling a long way to see. The Richmond and Moseley match was spoiled by the absence of several leading players from both clubs. The sides were little better than scratch lots, and it was not surprising that the play throughout was of a scrambling order. In the circumstances, a pointless draw was quite an appropriate result. In the third match on the Richmond enclosure Rosslyn Park beat Lennox by 2 goals and 2 tries to a try. Lennox made a fight of it until their forwards began to tire, and then the Park backs easily swept through the opposing defence. The Lennox forwards played very well, but were let down by their backs. Taking the field without several of their regular players, the Old Leysians sustained a heavy reverse at the hands of the Old Millhillians, who won by 6 goals (1 dropped) and 2 tries to a try. To most people the result may come as a surprise, but the old Millhillians have been playing uncommonly well this season, and possibly would make a good fight with teams with a better-known reputation. Stronger at all points the Old Merchant Taylors easily over-came the London Irish, winning by 3 goals (1 dropped) and 2 tries to nothing.

In beating the Marlborough Nomads by 1 goal and 6 tries to 1 goal and 1 try, the Harlequins gained a victory of more than passing significance. The latter were somewhat overcome forward, and were without Silcox, their half, but pulled through practically by the brilliant combination of their left wing, Birkett and Lambert. These fine players were in splendid form, each gaining 3 tries. In view of the near approach of the great games it is satisfactory to find them playing so well together, and more so that they have been included in the London fifteen against the West. It is to be feared that A. D. Stoop, who broke his collar-bone, will not be seen in the football field again this season, and the Harlequins will miss him in some of the later games. Guy's Hospital, who journeyed to Northampton, maintained their unbeaten record, defeating the home club by 1 goal and 1 try to 1 try, but the London Welsh lost their return match with the United Services. Earlier in the season the Welsh beat the Services at West Ham, but they were not as strong at Portsmouth on Saturday. The Services turned out their best side, strengthened by Blagrove, the speedy R.N.C. three-quarter, and the Welsh were beaten by 1 goal and 4 tries to 2 tries. Devon defeated Cornwall somewhat more easily than might have been expected, while Gloucestershire were a little hard pressed to overcome Somerset. After the two games the Western Committee picked the side to oppose London next Saturday at Taunton. They have taken the Somerset pack as the one to build round, picking four of that county's scrummagers. The other men will fit in all right: a good pack has been selected. Twelve months ago the Somerset forwards rushed the South Africans all over the field at Taunton, and probably the committee are wise in standing on form as their basis.

Oxford vs. Cambridge.—There was no surprise in store for the thousands who visited the Queen's Club on Tuesday afternoon, the Oxford fifteen, who were the more fancied side, winning handsomely by 1 goal and 4 tries to nothing. This is the most decisive result in this particular game since 1899, when Cambridge won by 2 goals and 4 tries to nil, and it cannot be said that yesterday's score in any way flattered the Oxonians. They were not the stronger side at all points, but held a distinct advantage in one important respect—the ability to carry through successfully an attack when the chance came.

When Oxford, who had lost the toss, kicked off against a strong breeze blowing from the pavilion end, there would be about 10,000 spectators present. Godby made a poor reply to a high kick, and the first scrummage was formed in the Cambridge side of the centre. Oxford "got the ball," but a passing movement broke down through Tarr failing to hold the ball. Some high kicking followed, and Macleod was tackled before he could get the ball away just outside of his own twenty-five. The Cambridge forwards wheeled the next scrummage, and just after Holloway set his backs going. The movement promised to be dangerous, but Martin tackled Coates very nicely at the Oxford twenty-five flag. The Oxford forwards, led by Roberts, got to the centre by good footwork, but a fine kick by Macleod found touch inside the Cambridge twenty-five. Here Holloway picked up in some loose play and kicked high and across. The ball bounced awkwardly for Vassall and Davies, and with Macleod up a try seemed imminent. The Cambridge captain could not reach it, however, and Vassall effected a good save. With the game just under the Oxford posts excitement ran high. The Cambridge forwards heeled, but Godby was too slow, and Crosje was enabled to despoil him of the ball, and to dribble to the twenty-five flag. A series of scrums followed, but at length, after some passing, Tarr gave Oxford relief by kicking to the centre. The Oxford forwards were getting the ball at this stage, and a fine kick by Vassall took his side into Cambridge territory. Their stay was brief, however, for some fine passing by the Cambridge backs and a strong run by Pyman saw Coates almost clear, but Davies and Martin between them checked the Cambridge wing-three just as he was getting dangerous, and he was forced into touch.

From the line out Tudsbury broke through, but he was unsupported. In some loose play, however, Godby picked up and made a dash through the ruck for the line, where he was only held up in time. Crosje once more came to the relief of his side by a good dribble to the Cambridge side of the centre, where the ball went into touch. A good kick by Pyman regained some of the lost ground, but this was neutralised by a penalty for an off-side tackle against Cambridge. Roberts took the kick and found touch outside the Cambridge twenty-five. Macleod, however, kicked back to the centre, and the Cambridge forwards gained further ground by a loose rush, in which Lely was conspicuous. Godby kicked across, but Wright knocked on in fielding the ball, when he appeared to have the line at his mercy. Just after Macleod tried a left-foot drop at goal from long range, but the kick, though a good one, failed in its object, and Oxford touched down. Holloway, aided by the wind, replied finely to the drop out, and his kick took the game once more to the Oxford twenty-five. Here Tarr intercepted a slow pass, and was almost clear. Macleod overtook him, however, and the Cambridge forwards rushed the ball back to the Oxford twenty-five. Milton was conspicuous for a clever pick up and straight dash. A bad cross kick by Wright caused Oxford to again touch down. The drop out brought the Dark Blues in relief, and in their overkeenness the forwards were penalised for "feet up" in a scrummage. Some thirty yards from the posts and near the touch-line Campbell took the kick and made a splendid attempt, the ball passing just wide of the left post. Following the drop-out, Williamson dribbled finely, but Holloway got the ball cleverly off the Oxford half's toes, and kicked into touch inside the Oxford twenty-five. Here Vassall fumbled a pass, and had the Cambridge forwards been a little quicker a try must have followed, as it was M'Cosh almost got clear. The game was now in the Oxford line, but slow and bad passing lost Cambridge a rare chance, and enabled Hodges to break away and dribble finely to the centre. A fine kick by Macleod, which found touch near the Oxford twenty-five flag, again placed the Dark Blues on the defensive, while the Cambridge forwards gradually worked their way nearer the line. Another bout of Cambridge passing broke down, however, and, try as they would, Cambridge seemed unable to do anything right except to gain attacking positions. At length, however, Macleod made a good opening for Wright.

The fast wing man looked all over a scorer, but he was splendidly tackled by Davies, whose head was hurt in making the tackle. On resuming after a delay, the first incident was some passing by the Cambridge backs which ended in Coates getting away. He seemed likely to score, but Williamson came across and effected a splendid tackle. Oxford were, however, hard pressed, and for a time were penned on their line. Their defence was excellent, however, while the Cambridge attack lacked finish. Once Macleod intercepted a rash pass and seemed likely to score, but Vassall came up at a great pace while Macleod was swerving past Davies and effected another fine tackle. Vassall hurt his foot in making the tackle, and there was some delay before he was able to resume. Oxford got the ball in the first scrum after resuming, and Williams kicked to the centre. Here a wide pass by Macleod went astray in the high wind, and Martin fielding well dashed off at a great pace. Being hemmed in, however, he kicked across the Cambridge line. Wright just got the better of the race for the ball. Following the drop out, a misunderstanding between Holloway and Coates let Howard dribble to the Cambridge twenty-five. Tarr failed to take a pass, and the Cambridge forwards breaking away, Davies was tackled at the centre before he could get in his kick. From the ensuing scrum Cunningham got the ball and deceived the defence, which was drawn to the left. Cunningham came away on the right, passed high to Vassall, who took the ball well, and running strongly, gave Martin, who had a clear field, and ran right behind. It was a most brilliant movement. Roberts kicked a goal from the easy place, and at half-time, which arrived just after, the score was:—

Oxford (1 goal)	5
Cambridge	0

With the wind at their backs and the inspiring influence of their lead to spur them on, Oxford, on resuming, played a winning game, and Cambridge looked a beaten side. After a brief period of midfield play Oxford got to the Cambridge twenty-five. Here Cunningham set his backs going, and after a fine run by Vassall, Martin scored his second try. Roberts failed at the difficult place. The second score was secured three minutes after the resumption. Oxford maintained the pressure, and from a cross kick by Martin, Cambridge touched down. Following the drop out, some beautiful passing by the Oxford backs ended in Milton being tackled just on the line. He lost the ball, and Cambridge again touched down. Pyman mulled the kick in reply to the kick out, and only a fine save by Campbell averted another score. Just after Campbell again saved nicely from a forward rush. A penalty for "feet up" against the Oxford forwards took Cambridge to the centre. From here Roberts and Blencowe broke away, but Macleod effected a characteristically clever save, but his fine kick just failed to find touch at the centre. Coates had an excellent chance at this stage, for a bout of Oxford passing broke down. The Cambridge wing three could not gather the ball, however, and though he dribbled on, Davies effected a fine save and kicked to the centre. The Oxford forwards broke away, and in some loose play following a rush Roberts picked up and passed to Milton, who scored the third try, after a dash for the line.

Roberts made a splendid attempt from the touch-line, but allowed too much for the wind, and the ball just passed outside the right post. Macleod—rare thing for him—mulled the kick in reply to the drop out, and a scrum was formed under the Cambridge posts. The Cambridge forwards brought relief with a rush to the twenty-five, where the game remained for some time. At length the Oxford forwards rushed the ball back to the Cambridge twenty-five, where another fine bout of passing ended in Milton scoring the fourth try. Roberts again failed at the goal. The drop out gave Cambridge needed relief, and a bout of Cambridge passing breaking down, the Oxford backs were again on the move. A knock-on spoiled, however, a promising movement. From a line-out, after some even play, Roberts passed back, and the Oxford threes were again in motion. This time, however, Campbell tackled Martin in great style. A further score was not long delayed, Vassall getting over after some fine passing, which he crowned with a clever run. Roberts again failed with the place, having the bad luck to hit the left post with a fine kick. Cambridge rallied after this, and Macleod made the run of the match. Getting the ball at the centre, he wormed his way right through the Oxford side, passing near the line to Coates. The latter was tackled. Just after Macleod made another equally fine effort to avert a pointless defeat, but was held on the line, while Campbell a little later made a splendid attempt to drop a goal from a 35 yards range. No side was then "sounded," and the game ended:—

	Pts.
Oxford (1 goal 4 tries) ...	17

BILLIARDS.

AGGREGATING 750 to Chapman's 160, at the Great Hall, Leicester-square, yesterday afternoon, Dawson who is conceding 3,500 start to his opponent in 9,000 up, took the lead. He made breaks of 299, 67, 60, 68, and 122 (unfinished), his play being very consistent throughout. Interval scores:

Dawson (in play)	6,750
Chapman	6,577

At night, when the attendance was only limited Dawson accomplished a brilliant performance, at his first visit to the table he by all-round billiards broke all records that have ever been made under Mr. Rimington Wilson's rules. The full break amounted to 823, and apart from the anchor stroke runs, is the highest that has been made since the Billiard Association code was revised. When play ceased in the afternoon he was engaged on an unfinished run of 122, and to this he added 701. He played excellently whilst making his first 400, but afterwards had to accomplish some very difficult strokes in order to keep scoring. There was a particularly fine run-through loser and a grand masse cannon. When the full break was 633 he had the misfortune to lose the white, but playing brilliantly at the red added 135 more. He made one remarkable hazard into the top pocket from just above the middle pocket, and eventually failed at an attempt to put the red in off the spot, his own ball being tucked under a cushion. This break is the highest he has ever made by all-round billiards his previous best under R.W. rules being 748 against Stevenson in February, 1906, and 742 against Weiss in December last. The recognised record under B.A. rules is Stevenson's 802, made against Dawson in the same hall in February, 1905. Roberts had just previously made 821 against Duncan at Glasgow but as the table had not been passed as a standard it did not obtain official recognition. Chapman made a break of 78, and then at his second attempt Dawson reached his points with 49 (unfinished). Scores:

Dawson (in play)	7,500

WRESTLING.

PADOUBNY vs. ZBYSCO.—The wrestling match to decide who is to meet Hackenschmidt is a thing of the past, and if the like is in prospective, the less we see of such events the better for the welfare of sport. The London Pavilion was crowded by a splendid audience on Wednesday, among whom could be seen many men of note in the world of fashion, politics, and science. Three o'clock was the time appointed for the match, and soon after Padoubny appeared on the scene with his seconds, Messrs. F. Wells and Vataroff, and accompanied by his manager, Mons Dumont. Zbysco followed a few moments later with his seconds, Sailor Barker and Weber, and Mr. C. B. Cochran, his manager. The arrival of Hackenschmidt was the signal for an outburst of cheering which seemed to embarrass the Russian Lion. He was pale, and apparently very seriously concerned; so much so that a stranger might well have regarded him as one of the principals. Throughout the match he looked on with studious intent, and never missed a single feature of the contest.

Mr. Nixon introduced the referee, Mr. G. T. Dunning, and timekeeper, Mr. Barton Wright, and explained that the contest was for £200 a side, in the Graeco-Roman style; one pin-fall to decide the match, and the whole of the gate-money, less actual expenses, to go to the winner. Hackenschmidt, he said, had promised to wrestle the winner. All holds were permitted bar the strangle, and after fifteen minutes a rest of two minutes would be allowed; then the men could go on for three hours. This last announcement provoked a ripple of laughter. Padoubny's weight was given as 13st. 10lb., and Zbysco's 13st. 2lb.

At eight minutes past three the men were in holds, head to head, and feeling their way with gentle grips which were spasmodic. Their work was apparently with a view of the one or the other being metaphorically caught "tripping," which, by the way, ended the match with stern reality. Padoubny was all the time forcing the way, and Zbysco was acting on the defensive. The latter after eleven minutes was perspiring rather freely. In twelve minutes Padoubny got a grip round Zbysco's body, and forced him on to the ropes. Padoubny later held him round the head, and shook him up. Again Padoubny drove his opponent to the ropes, and gave him a severe wrench with his right arm.

At this juncture Padoubny, in what appeared to be very forcible language, protested against Weber advising Zbysco.

Still Padoubny continued working on the attack, and Zbysco remained almost passive. Padoubny was cautioned for upper-cutting, and just before time was called (fifteen minutes) the Russian was again cautioned for a like offence.

Immediately after a resumption of hostilities play commenced with the heads of the giants, Padoubny, by virtue of his immense height, appearing to be by far the more aggressive, and likely to transgress the law. Up to this not one single good point in wrestling was observable. Padoubny again fouled Zbysco with his head. Gently the men's heads met, and they fumbled nervously for a hold. For the first time Zbysco butted. A few minutes later Padoubny ran full tilt at Zbysco with his head, and gave the Galician a terrific blow. This incensed the crowd, and they called loudly for Padoubny's disqualification. He was cautioned.

Soon after the only two incidents worthy of mention occurred. Padoubny got on a partial arm lock, which looked extremely dangerous. Zbysco's arm was wet with perspiration, and Padoubny failed to hold him. Padoubny dexterously fixed his opponent with a head hold, which in an ordinary way would have told immensely in his favour and, again to the surprise of experts, Zbysco freed himself. It now appeared to be nothing more than a matter of endurance, and not wrestling, as the men were never once off their legs. Zbysco had shown no real wrestling, and Padoubny had been on the attack all the time. As a wrestling act it was a huge farce, and finally became a huge fiasco.

Padoubny losing his temper, and with it the match, dashed at Zbysco near the latter's corner, and lunging out with his leg tripped the Galician up. Down went Zbysco with Padoubny on the top of him immediately under the rope. This violation of all fairness, as a matter of course could not be forgiven, and carried with it the penalty of disqualification—after thirty-four minutes' manual labour of a kind that was certainly the very opposite of that which we are accustomed to associate with Graeco-Roman wrestling.

After the referee had given his decision, there occurred an exciting scene. Padoubny, dissatisfied with the result gesticulated wildly and called upon Zbysco to come on the mat. The Galician was ready to oblige, but the supporters of each man forced the two wrestlers apart, and the curtain fell on a scene of great disorder.

Thus has passed the match which had been looked forward to with keen interest. During the time spent by the men on the mat—we cannot say in wrestling—Padoubny was on the aggressive, and never once did Zbysco attack. On points Padoubny was all over the better man, and had he been able to keep his temper probably we should have seen good wrestling. As it was George Hackenschmidt saw nothing to strike terror to his heart. On the form shown yesterday the Russian Lion has nothing to fear.

The referee bore kindly with Padoubny's butting, and the Russian cannot accuse Mr. Dunning of having been too severe.

We cast no doubt upon the genuineness of the match, but as an exhibition of wrestling the kindest critic could not regard it in any other light than a colossal failure.

The bright spots were the excellent temper displayed by the great audience, and the splendid arrangements made by Mr. Manager Glenister to cope with the great crowd which besieged his popular hall.

Hunting.

QUETTA HUNT.

HOUNDS met at the level crossing Sirinb Road, at 9-30, and those out, enjoyed one of the finest runs of the season. Finding in the gardens east of the road, hounds hunted their fox up the valley through Galbraith's Spinney and parallel with the Lora River. Scent was good and the pace consequently fast. Opposite the 5th mile stone there was a long check, and on "all round my hat" cast being fruitless; the Master lifted his pack and found that Reynard had slipped away into the grassy bed of the Lora. Scent was catchy here, but the hounds worked beautifully and after about a mile, a Whoop. Tally Ho announced that they had run from scent to view. The wily one by this time had left the grass and was making for the hills, the stones at the foot of which have saved his fraternity many a brush in the Quetta Dale. This time the pack were not to be denied and a most exciting hunt ensued, the quarry being in view for over a mile. At last, losing his head or finding no chance of safety the way he was going, he turned and charged the pack and ended a gallant run with a glorious death. Here's to him—a better fox—or was it a jack—Mr. Master—never ran 55 minutes with only one check. The only lady to finish was Miss McMahon, who was awarded the honours of the chase.

CARABINIERS.

Mr. M. U. Kennard	... 1
Major S. R. Kirby	... 2
Capt. W. E. Watson	... 3
Mr. P. H. Compton	(back)

Until the Rajputana Pilgrims had been seen at work the 15th were thought to be the most likely winners of the coveted trophy, but after the game between the "Rajah Ays" and Cooch Behar the form displayed by the Pilgrims left little doubt that as was the case they would come out victorious. The tournament throughout aroused the greatest interest on the part of Europeans as well as natives and each day not only was the enclosure full, but the other sides of the ground were lined with huge swarms of Marwaris whose enthusiasm at the victory of the men from Rajputana knew no bounds.

FIRST ROUND.

17TH LANCERS (7) vs. CARABINIERS (6).—This was a very uninteresting game, being particularly slow and sticky and the ball hardly ever seemed to travel at any pace or to go more than a short distance in any one run. The Carabiniers were outplayed throughout, but the 17th did not show anything like first-class tournament form.

CALCUTTA POLO CLUB (3) vs. JODHPUR PALACE TEAM (3).—After a dull opening chukker both teams got into their stride and some pretty and dashing play was witnessed. The game was fast and exciting as there was but little to choose between the teams and the issue was in doubt till the last moment. The Jodhpur men were the first to get going and scored twice in the second chukker, but Keighly, playing a very sound game on the defence, hardly gave them another opening and the few shots they had going wide they did not add to their total during the rest of the game. Calcutta got two in the third chukker thus equalising the score and the only other goal made in the match was a third for the C. P. C. in the sixth chukker the result of good combined play between Ismay and Graham.

RAJPUTANA PILGRIMS (13) vs. COOCH BEHAR (3).—This was a very one-sided game, but to some extent interesting as it was of an open nature and also was a fine display of straight hard hitting and fast riding on the part of the victors. It was a very sporting idea of Cooch Behar to put on a family team, and though absolutely outplayed at every point they were always trying hard and keeping things going, and there was no attempt to keep the ball close, as one so often sees in the case of a beaten team. The game needs no description as the Pilgrims appeared to score whenever they please and it was only when they slacked up in the last period that Cooch Behar were able to put on a couple of goals, bringing their total up to 3.

SECOND ROUND.

15TH HUSSARS (9) vs. 17TH LANCERS (0).—This was the most uninteresting game of the tournament, the 15th took things easy throughout and won comfortably. The game was slow, there was no free hitting or hard riding.

RAJPUTANA PILGRIMS (8) vs. CALCUTTA POLO CLUB (6).—Everyone expected another runaway affair and felt their opinion confirmed when the Pilgims scored 2 goals in the first three minutes of the opening chukker. But Calcutta from then onwards played with unexpected dash and brilliancy and the result was the brightest and most attractive game in the whole tournament. At the end of the 4th chukker the score was 4 all and at the end of the 7th 7—6 in the Pilgrims' favour and with seven minutes to go in the 8th the result was open till half way through the last period the Rajputana men got their 8 goals and settled the question. The Pilgrims were not hitting so straight as in their other game, probably because they were more harassed and the play on both sides was very uneven, a brilliant combined run at one minute being followed by three men of a side missing the ball in succession the next. The shot with which Ismay got the third goal for Calcutta, a hook from a distance of nearly 50 yards deserves special mention.

FINAL.

RAJPUTANA PILGRIMS (4) vs. 15TH HUSSARS (3).—This was a tough and hard fight, the superior combination of the 15th almost neutralising the individual brilliancy and skill of the Pilgrims, who are of course a scratch team. The deciding factor was the remarkable hitting of the Maharajah of Alwar at No 2, who was either directly or indirectly responsible for nearly all the goals scored by his side. One of them must have been hit from about 60 yards away from the posts and was a most almighty swipe the ball going high in the air but absolutely true to its aim. A curious incident of the game was the breaking of the ball against the goal post when half went between the posts and the other half over the line outside. No score was given for this and the new ball was dropped by the umpire at the point from where the other one had been hit. As usual in close fought finals, there was a good deal of fouling and play was of a somewhat reckless description, but, though the 15th No. 1 got rolled in the dust man and pony and by the end of the match the Rajputana No. 1 was a limping mass of bruises, there was was no great harm done and when victors and vanquished shook hands after it was all over they all felt that they had participated in a memorable game.

The challenge cup and four replicas for the individual members of the team were distributed by Lady Minto after the match.

THE ENGLISH TURF IN 1907.

"If I were to begin life again," wrote Harriet, Lady Ashburton, in a letter to Lord Houghton, "I would go on the Turf to get friends. They seem to me the only people who really hold close together. I don't know why; it may be that each knows something that might sting the other, but the effect is congenial and most peculiar." Since that letter was written Lady Ashburton's delicious innuendo has been reported in much blunter language by partisans of folk who can see in the Turf nothing but scandal. Happily, the people who go racing, and are thus in the best position to judge of the true state of affairs, know that there are many finer things on the Turf than mere monetary considerations. They know, for instance, that there are dozens of owners who race purely for the love of the sport. Some do not bet, and the others wager on a scale whose modesty would have been laughed to scorn by the youngsters of old. They know, again, that the Turf helps to foster and develop the nation's love for good horses. They know that the racecourse offers the only real test of our thoroughbreds' speed and powers of endurance.

That in itself would furnish a sufficient reason for the Turf's existence, as the fate of nations has often depended on the quality and number of their horses. Finally, average race-goers know that the morals of the Turf are admirably controlled by the Jockey Club, that self-elected body whose power within its own sphere is practically without limit. Nobody would be so foolish as to aver that the racecourse does not still have its dark and seamy side; but there is enough of good on the Turf to enable us to overlook the bad. Thanks to the continued watchfulness and the wise legislation of the Jockey Club, the Turf in 1907 is probably cleaner than ever before in its history. All records go to show that the racecourse is in a better state morally than it was in the early part of the nineteenth century—in the forties, for example, when Lord George Bentinck was Napoleon of the Turf, and Red Deer won the Chester Cup.

Time was when the racing season closed with the Houghton Meeting at Newmarket, but now Manchester is the last scene, and with a big handicap on the final day the interest may be said to be maintained up to the very end. Looking back on the period of last racing which commended rather unusually last week, one fails to recall very much that will live in memory. No Grisaude have we had to evoke comparisons with the greatest performers in racing annals. No new pretty Polly has arisen to monopolise the affections of a public who, it would seem, are strong enough to become enthusiastic at the smallest provocation in these emotional days. No Sceptre has dazzled us with rare yet nonchalant brilliance. But for all that, it has been what can be fittingly described as a good, sound year. We have seen horses who prove that it is not impossible for us still to produce stout staying stock in these islands. If we were asked to name the best of them all we should choose Velocity. Here we have a magnificent specimen of the thoroughbred who has shown his ability to win races over all courses—from one mile to two and a quarter miles. A horse who can secure in the same season such widely differing races as the City and Suburban Handicap and the Doncaster Cup is surely something far removed from the ordinary. We have our sprinters and our long-distance performers; but rarely indeed do we find an animal who is sprinter and stayer too. Such is Velocity, whose victory in the Doncaster Cup, gained in a well-run race and without the semblance of a fluke, stamped him as the grandest thoroughbred in training.

There are some who will claim for The White Knight the distinction of being the best horse of 1907. Seldom has a more thrilling struggle been seen than in the Cesarewitch, when the splendid animal who is conjointly owned by Colonel Kirkwood and Mr. W. R. Wyndham made a mighty effort under a crushing weight to overhaul a rival in the last furlong of the race. It was a spectacle not easily to be forgotten, and if for no other performance, the name of The White Knight will always be associated in the minds of race-goers with unflinching gameness and the capacity to set weight at defiance. Earlier in the season he had achieved a remarkable sequence of victories in the great cup races at Epsom, Ascot, and Goodwood, his subsequent form proving that it was only right and proper that he should have received the Gold Cup at the Royal Meeting after the memorable dead-heat and Eider's disqualification.

It is often urged that the welfare of our thoroughbreds is placed in ever-increasing danger by the multiplicity of short-distance events, and we are asked to believe that the horses which are reared nowadays would not survive a course of the strenuous racing which was in vogue at the beginning of the nineteenth century. In short, it is declared that the four-mile heats would cripple or kill the horses of to-day. In this theory we have not the slightest belief. We have sufficient confidence in the adaptability and strength of the modern racehorse to think that he would not be long in proving his prowess over long courses if he were specially trained for that work. But there is no likelihood of a return to the old order of things.

At Newmarket in its early days there were six and even eight-mile races, and their abandonment was regarded at the time as an improvement, not only on the score of humanity, but as regards sport, for horses seldom came in near to each other at the end of such exhausting courses. "Nimrod" wrote that "so much is the system of a four-mile heat disliked, that, when it does occur, the horses often walk the first two." Yet it sometimes happened otherwise, and the same writer declared that the struggle between Chateau-Margaux and Mortgage and the state in which they appeared at the conclusion, could only be thought of with disgust. It would be well, therefore, to recall these interesting facts when the old and the new in racing are being compared. The Irish-trained produce of an American mare has carried off the Epsom Derby this year, and thoroughbreds from France have won the Lancashire Handicap and the Chester Cup. Yet in spite of all, the British thoroughbred in 1907 is still supreme in the eyes of the world, and that is proved by the great foreign market which exists for our bloodstock.

"My son's got a grand start in life. He's a waiter in a swell West End restaurant. Work hard? I believe yer. Yesterday he got rid of three inside forins."

"Look here, waiter, I asked you for a tender bit of steak, and you've given me a strip of leather?" "Not tender enough? D'ye want it to kiss yer?"

During the American War a colonel, finding that his regiment was likely to be placed in a warm corner, exhorted his men to heroism and wound up by saying, "But, my men, if you must run, and as I'm a little lame, I'll be going now."

"I say, waiter, I can't put up with it any longer! Tell me what makes you stare so fixedly at this Lady?" "It ain't rudeness, sir; it's admiration! This is the third time to-night she has been in here to supper."

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C.C. vs BOMBAY.—This match was played in the Eden Gardens on the 24th, 25th and 26th instant with the usual adjournment on the first day for the Viceroy's Cup, and after some interesting ups and downs resulted in a well-earned victory for the C.C.C. by 103 runs. Bombay had a strong scratch side, but the home team were much weakened in bowling by the absence of Major Hedley and A. C. Von Ernsthausen. Stewart won the toss and took first innings, but Calcutta lost five wickets for 46 runs, of which half were made by Lee before he fell to a very hot left-handed catch by Cooper low down at mid on. Manders then came in and hit cleanly and well all round the wicket until Wright secured him at cover point at the second attempt off a hard hit. Stewart, not out 15, and Gordon were together at the call of time on the first day when Calcutta had lost eight wickets for 115. Next morning the innings soon closed for 143. Joy coming out with the excellent analysis of 5 wickets for 36 runs. Airy and Wright then opened the Bombay innings in promising style and scored 55 runs for the first wicket, though Airy was missed at the wicket early on off Hechle and also gave Stewart a difficult one-handed chance in the slips off Leipmann. Eddis went on to bowl as third change and secured two wickets in his first over, but with only three wickets down for 119 runs at tiffin time Bombay seemed to be in a commanding position. After lunch however, Hechle asserted himself, and with none of the remaining batsmen doing anything the innings closed for 214 or 71 run ahead. Airy carried his bat through the innings for 110 and made many fine strokes especially after much, but he had the wicket keeper to thank for a good many lives. Calcutta had three-quarters of an hour's batting on the second afternoon and when stumps were drawn had scored 72 for two wickets, out of which Eddis also played a fine free game from the start, and Beachcroft put up 45 for the first wicket. Next morning Eddis not out 48, was joined by Turnbull, and though the latter started uncertainly runs again came fast. Eddis played beautiful cricket and reached three figures amidst applause with the total about 150; he was soon afterwards stumped by the Bombay captain, who kept wicket well and pluckily throughout, for a first class and practically faultless innings of 112 which included thirteen boundary hits and eight threes. Calcutta had 2 0 up with only three men out, but eight wickets were down for 213, when Stewart joined Manders and again stopped the rot. Manders hit up 43 in double quick time, and his batting was almost the best cricket of the match. Eventually Calcutta were all out for 290, which left Bombay with 220 to win and two hours and ten minutes in which to get the runs. Joy once more bowled splendidly and took seven wickets for 101 runs, but met with no support, and the Bombay fielding was not nearly so good as in the first innings, Turnbull, whose 52 runs were invaluable to his side, being distinctly favoured of fortune and fellmarn. The game was in a most interesting state when Airy and Stow began the Bombay second innings but Hechle, who was imparting any amount of swerve to the ball, made his opponents pay very dearly for his pair of spectacles, and though Cooper hit about merrily for some twenty minutes, and Rutter played some correct cricket for his runs, it soon became an obvious question whether Bombay, handicapped by the absence of Armytage, who unfortunately got a touch of the sun, could last out time. As events proved they could not, and when Eddis bowled Vlasto, who had copied Philbrick and Anstruther in a good attempt to save the game, there was still ten minutes to go. Eddis, Hechle and Manders fairly won the game for Calcutta, Hechle taking eleven wickets in all for 102 runs, while Joy and Airy were unlucky to be on a losing side. Full score and analysis.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. THE LEINSTER REGIMENT.—This match was played in the Eden Gardens on the 29th ultimo and resulted in the ernest of drawn games. Calcutta were weak in bowling and fielding, but their opponents did well to score 282, of which Ussher made 82 like a cricketer, though Turnbull missed him badly in the country soon after he had come in, and Bredin, who was similarly indebted to Jackson, hit up 44 Paine's lobs were very useful to the C.C.C., who when they went in had no time to get the runs, but on the contrary, with Ussher bowling better than he has yet done in the Eden Gardens, a very fair chance of being beaten. Paine and Manders failed completely, and Guise did little but Turnbull, after a very bad start hit better than on any previous occasion this year, and with Drew and Horncastle also scoring freely, 180 had been scored for five wickets when stumps were drawn, Stewart batted for over 20 minutes without scoring, but was to blame for the loss of Horncastle's wicket. Golf.

AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP OF INDIA.

THE sixteenth annual competition for the blue riband of Indian Golf was held over the Tollygunge links last week, and again proved a conspicuous success, nearly all of the 40 competitors being regarded as having at least an outside chance of winning the trophy. Special interest attached to the entries of Mr. Osborne Marshall, the Bombay crack, and Mr. Gilbert Whigham from Rangoon, a member of the well-known Prestwick golfing brotherhood, and these two with Lieutenant Campbell of the West Riding Regiment and Mr. A. Mann of Calcutta perhaps started as favourites for the big event, though Major Wolfe Murray, Mr. Colville and Mr. Drimmie also had plenty of support. Mr. F. H. Stewart, this year's Captain of the Calcutta Golf Club, who preferred to play cricket against Bombay, was the principal absentee among the local match players. The qualifying competition of 36 holes under medal rules was held on Xmas Day and resulted much as had been anticipated, except that Mr. Drimmie unexpectedly failed to secure his place among the elect. Mr. Whigham proved the winner with a fine record for the day of 158 strokes, his two rounds being 78 and 80, while the visitors' prize went to Mr. Osborne Marshall, next day Major Hedley did well to put out Lieutenant Campbell, and Mr. Stapledon effected a distinct surprise by defeating Major Wolfe Murray, while Mr. Landale made mincemeat of Mr. Melrose. The rest of the results were mostly "according to Cocker," and three visitors, Messrs. Whigham, Colville and Osborne Marshall, and one local player, Mr. Mann, quite the strongest of them all on this season's form, were left in for the semi-final round. In this Mr. Colville who hails from Mackrihinish, found Mr. Whigham a little off his game, and beat him one up, while Mr. Mann beat Mr. Osborne Marshall by 2 up and one to play. In the final match of 36 holes Mr. Mann maintained his excellent form, and was no less than eight up at the end of seventeen holes; thereafter Mr. Colville played better and held his own, but Mr. Mann was not to be denied, and eventually secured the Championship by 8 up and 7 to play, thus bringing back the honour to Calcutta after a lapse of four years, the last local player to win it being Mr. Drimmie in 1903. Mr. Mann thoroughly deserved his victory, and no one could wear the laurels more modestly; he played a very strong game throughout the meeting, and was not nearly so often at fault on the putting greens as he is occasionally. Messrs. Whigham, and Colville upheld the credit of Scottish golf, and the prominent place taken by Mr. Marshall was most gratifying to all who have hoped since its inception for more support from Bombay for the Championship tournament. The week's programme also included an eight a side match between the visitors and Calcutta which resulted in favour of the latter by six matches to two, Mr. Drimmie doing well to beat Lieutenant Campbell by 2 up: this game took place on the 27th ultimo, instead of the 24th as had been originally intended, some of the visiting cracks not caring to play a keen match just before the Championship rounds proper. The Tollygunge course was in excellent order throughout, and the putting greens, thanks to Mr. Jamieson's care in splendid condition. Mr. Whigham's score of 78 in the qualifying round equals the competition record for the green set up by Mr. A. Cormack last year.

Besides the play at Tollygunge the Championship meeting also included the annual Xmas handicap for the "Asian" Cup at Barrackpore, which attracted no less than 90 entries. Mr. R. Baker proved successful with a fine card of 90—14=76, closely followed by Mr. J. A. Tassie with 86—9=77. Mr. Melrose's scratch score of 81 was the best gross return, and with it he won the first optional sweepstakes, Messrs. Baker and Tassie not having entered: the second and third were divided between Messrs. Drimmie and Donetil. The full results of a most successful tournament will be found below, and it is pleasant to feel that it becomes more firmly established and grows in popularity each year. Results.—

WHILE we congratulate the Calcutta Kennel Club on another successful show, which must have been a great pleasure to all those who are interested in improving the breeds of dogs in this country, there are no doubt lessons to be learnt from the second show of the present Championship series held on the 27th December last. In the first place it would appear that Christmas week is not the best time for a Calcutta exhibition. It had been hoped that as the Lahore Show was postponed to February next, the up-country kennels would have strongly supported the Calcutta venture. But Christmas week is a busy time anywhere, up-country people had their engagements nearer home, and Calcutta is crowded out with amusements at this season of the year. The show consequently failed to receive the strong support which had been so confidently hoped for. A later date, preferably perhaps in February, might lead to better entries, and would also tend to improve coats and condition in those exhibits which have had to stand the previous hot weather without a change to the Hills. The site also was not a good one. The grounds of the Volunteer Headquarters possesses some advantages, but a more central and less cramped position would probably prove more attractive. For the judging of the Specials better arrangements are undoubtedly necessary. The class rings are always too small for this purpose, while judging without a ring at all must lead to obvious difficulties. The crowding and confusion which occurred on this occasion were a blemish on the arrangements. And it is not understood why the prizes could not have been given at the close of the proceedings in the usual way. A few specials were presented, but even that list was not complete, and no class prizes were presented at all.

With these remarks, our unfavourable criticisms close. The class judging was conducted briskly and promptly by two competent judges with good Ring Stewards, and was completed by lunch time. The entries numbered 189 with 74 classes and some breeds were strongly represented. The Greyhounds were particularly strong. Mrs. Pilgrim's Black Prince scored once more, but Mr. Kerr's, Mrs. Cuthbert Edwards', Mr. Lyon's, and Colonel Dawson's exhibits all ran the winner and each other very close. The judge remarked that he had rarely seen such a good Greyhound class in this country. Whippets are not common in India, but the breed has obtained a foothold in Calcutta and made a successful début at this Show. Cockers, though not numerous, were quite a feature in quality, largely owing to Colonel Willan Dawson's exhibits, which won the chief events for this breed. The Dachshunds were also conspicuous. Mr. Meugen's Nappie being held by the judge to be a dog of more than ordinary merit. The judging here was remarkable, in that Captain Kelly's Cupid, who won so handsomely at Simla and Mussoorie in September last under Mr. Clifford Batten, altogether failed to score. The Bull-terriers formed the strongest class yet seen at Calcutta, and Mr. Mollison attached a good many wins with his nice bitch Sweet Briar, closely followed by Mr. E. A. Lyon's Sher Oliva, a bitch of abundant quality. Airedales have not hitherto been much represented at Calcutta, and possibly for that reason much fewer classes were provided than the strength of the entries warranted. The Airedales were a distinctly strong lot, among which the [illegible] Imperialist was conspicuous. The Irish Terriers filled a good many classes, but generally failed in quality.

As usual the fox-terriers in respect both of numbers and of quality held the pride of place. In Smooths, Mr. MacAulay Audsley's Indigo, Messrs. Reid and Zimmerman's Spring and Winter, Mrs. Tredaway's team, and Mr. George Jameson's Up Jenkins, were all exhibits of far more than ordinary quality. The list is not exhaustive. Class after class, Dogs and Bitches, Puppies, Novice, Limit, and Open, all led to a fine display of excellent terriers. The Wires though not numerically so strong, were equally attractive, and Mr. Lionel Jacob's winners were subsequently well into the special list.

His Jim the Penman, who scored so strongly at the recent Simla Show, was first in all his classes, the special for the best wire terrier in the Show, the N. I. K. A. Best in Show, the Beaco prize with Diva, and was second for the Viceroy's Cup to a St. Bernard by a very narrow margin. The same owner's Diva won the cup for the Best Bitch in the Show. Mr. Lionel Jacob also exhibited two puppies who won well and will be heard of again. Mr. Low sent a strong team of wires from Jubbulpore, and he was unfortunate in having such a superexcellent team against him. The Scottish terriers were a very noticeable group, Mr. Rayner's Ems Banter distinguishing himself by scoring in all the dog classes. Other good little Scotties were Mr. J. O. B. Saunders' Charnock Wee Macgregor, who figures so prominently at the last show and got today the Calcutta Kennel Club special for Best Scottish Terriers, Mr. Swan's Bob, and Bandsman Turner's Waverley Pansy.

ANIMAL COURAGE.

If one could line up the wild beasts on parade, as Adam is fabled to have done in Eden when he gave them names, in what order should they be arranged from the view-point of courage? Should the first place be assigned to the lion, tiger, bear, or elephant? A difficult problem this to solve. Still the pursuit of its solution will lead us over the most interesting territory in the province of natural history.

For ages past, wild animals have been matched against one another in the struggle for existence. Hence there has arisen an established order of things; and the animal world can be roughly divided into beasts that prey and beasts that are preyed upon. In their mutual struggle is displayed defensive as well as aggressive courage. Man has been sometimes a witness of these brute combats in the jungle. In the Roman amphitheatre wild beasts were pitted against one another. But little is to be learned as regards their relative prowess from battles so conditioned, for captivity profoundly alters the nature of wild animals. Moreover man, in the case of the matador, has stepped himself into the ring to test the prowess of one among his reputed inferiors.

It is from the behavior of savage beasts in face of their natural enemy that we can most easily infer their courage. As regards tais there is a vast quantity of floating tradition in all countries where big game exists. There are the relations and personal anecdotes, more or less reliable, of hunters, trappers, and men of the wilderness. More important is the large body of evidence collected in the writings of famous explorers and sportsmen, of such men as Hornsday and Roosevelt, Samuel Baker and Gordon Cumming, to pick only a few noted names.

Let us take the case of the elephant first. Has he, the "biggest born of earth," a heart in proportion to his enormous bulk? Elephants, both African and Indian, have been hunted almost to the point of extermination for the sake of their ivory. Though admirably equipped by nature both for offence and defence, protected by a thick hide and armed with long tusks, they have not been able to hold their own against the cunning of man. Even without firearms the savages of Africa destroy great numbers of them.

The Asiatic elephant has been longest under observation. It has been trained to the service of man from time immemorial—as carriage of state, traction engine, even as a piler of lumber. The monster has proved docile, tractable, and intelligent. As the ally of man on his hunting expeditions, its staunchness has often been put to the test. Now it is a fact well known to all Indian hunters, and attested by such celebrities as Sanderson and Sir Samuel Baker, that the steadiness of the Mukna elephant is a very uncertain quantity.

Baker relates some annoying experiences he met with while riding on trained elephants of excellent reputation. Some bolted as soon as they smelt or saw a tiger, and tore through the jungle, subjecting him to the risk of being knocked off his seat by the branch of a tree. On one occasion the hunter lost the chance of an easy shot at close range at a tigress because his elephant began to quake like a mountain of jelly, throwing him from one side of the howdah to the other. The weak point of the apparently invulnerable creature is its trunk. This sensitive organ of touch can only be partly coiled out of harm's way, and the wounds inflicted on its exposed surface by a charging tiger are very painful and apt to be remembered long. An elephant that has once been badly clawed about the trunk loses its value for hunting purposes.

That a battle-scarred animal should "funk" is comprehensible, but how shall we account for the peculiar timidity which the elephant exhibits in the presence of dogs? The active movements of its nimble aggressor seem to disconcert the mammoth, and to inspire it with the same feelings that oppress a woman when a mouse scurries towards the haven of her skirts. Elephants dislike to have little dogs get between their legs, where they cannot see them and do not know what tricks they may play. A yapping fox-terrier will drive the huge creature to retreat in a most undignified manner.

More remarkable still is the case, recorded in the annals of Indian sport, of the elephant which ran away from a hare. It was a sensitive female, whose nerves had been shaken by the din made by the beaters and by the roaring of some bears which, however, did not show themselves outside the jungle. But when the little harmless creature darted out of the cover and fled towards the elephant, as to a tower of safety—the tower turned tail. Perhaps the great animal is too intelligent to be perfectly courageous; and its training to service may develop its imagination at the expense of its spirit. It may think too much; and, as Hamlet says, "Conscience doth make cowards of us all."

But when the elephant's sage self-control is destroyed by sexual insanity—when it becomes what is called musth—it is absolutely fearless. The mad creature runs amok, like a Malay. It begins its career of destruction by killing its keeper, and then proceeds to trample the life out of every human being that crosses its path. The "rogue"—a mild-ish name for such a terror,—after devouring the stores of grain in the village it has stormed, demolishes the houses out of sheer devilment. But this tempestuous fury is not courage. It only shows what a terrible enemy to mankind in the tropics the elephant would be, were it naturally aggressive.

Fortunately they are not. In the jungle, elephants are only dangerous in the breeding season. As a rule the herds retreat when they wind a hunter. A wounded tusker of course waxes furious and turns on his pursuer, but his charge can usually be stopped or diverted by a shot.

Elephants and tigers, though they live in the same jungles, do not come naturally into competition. The former feed on grass and leaves, the latter on flesh. But "stripes" when prowling walks wide of the herd that he hears tearing the branches down; not that he fears an assault, but because he must seek his prey in less disturbed places. Sensible animals learn to mind their own business in the jungle. It is man, working for his own ends, that has brought the two animals into the field against one another.

But at what odds! On the one side an army, a battle line of forty or fifty huge brutes, weighing tons, with the communicated courage that comes from numbers in touch, and the support and encouragement of their lord and master. On the other, a solitary but undaunted animal, small in comparison with even one of its opponents, but, oh! how stout of heart. Who that has seen a royal tiger flash past the muzzles of an array of elephants, challenging them with a ringing roar, waving defiance with his tail, can deny him the meed of superior bravery? Of the opposing herds few dare face him in single combat, and if such a champion be found, the tiger often brings the mammoth to his knees. No wonder that the Indians honor the tiger with the title of prince and rajah of the forest.

But how does the great cat show when its mettle is tried by the lord of creation? The title seems to beg the very question, but is itself open to dispute. For take away his firearms, or other means of killing at a safe distance, and what will man's naked strength avail against a brute that weighs four hundred pounds and is armed with teeth and claws? Very little. Therefore the royal beast denies a sovereignty that asserts itself so weakly, and either ignores or hunts the arrogant biped. Even where tigers have learned to respect the mystery of the armed man, the rifle damps but does not daunt their courage. It is tempered with a discretion that teaches them not to seek a combat.

A tiger rarely attacks a white man, even when unarmed. A friend of the writer's, taking an evening stroll away from his hunting camp, met a tiger face to face on the edge of the jungle. The two killers eyed one another for an instant, the man remaining quite still; then each went his own way. It was like the chance encounter of a pair of rival pugilists on the eve of a match. Yet that great authority, Baker, says it is not safe, if you fall in with a tiger, to trust to the imagined cowing influence of the human eye. You may arouse the suspicions of the animal. Thinking you mean mischief, he may take the initiative and charge. Again, a tigress with cubs will attack anyone that stumbles upon her lair.

A case of this kind happened some years ago in Central India. A young man, hearing that a tiger was lodged in a certain ravine, took a gun with him and ventured alone on the dangerous risk of a stillhunt. Winding him, the animal was the first to attack, rushing suddenly from cover and clawing him severely before he could handle his weapon. This was not the assault of a man-eater, but of a tiger annoyed at being disturbed. It was a warning to "keep out," but so severely punctuated that the intruder died from the shock.

When wounded, the natural courage of the tiger is goaded to a pitch of fury. It is then that the fatal accidents inseparable from this dangerous sport occur. They were often caused by the hollow "express" bullet, which exploded in the muscles and irritated without paralyzing the animal. The injured tiger determines to go down to hades, like a hero of old, in the midst of a heap of slain foemen. He springs at those unlucky beaters who have not climbed out of harm's way, and smites them perhaps to death. Men are mauled or killed outright, stately elephants dragged to the ground, the hunter perhaps wounded, before the courageous tiger receives the finishing stroke.

The lion has long been the accepted type of courage. Heroes, kings, and warriors of olden time adopted the lion as their emblem; and only the bravest of the brave were hailed with the title "lion hearted." The noble animal has held the centre of the stage so long because he was the most formidable wild beast known to the writers of antiquity, who were themselves not very accurately informed about his character. In Asiatic literature the tiger was equally celebrated, but little was known concerning him to Europeans until comparatively recent times. Before then painter, poet, and sculptor had securely established the lion on the throne as king of the beasts.

Whatever rivalry fabulists may feign to exist between lion and tiger, in nature there is none. One lords it in Asia, the other in Africa. Animal suzerainty indeed belongs rather in the realm of fancy than in that of fact. And whether the king of the beasts can even be said to hold undisputed sway in Africa cannot be determined without taking into account the records of some other denizens of that hunter's paradise.

The human natives indeed, whether forest dwellers or inhabitants of the sandy wastes, are not afraid to match themselves with lions. The Hamram Arabs of Abyssinia hunt the noble quarry on horseback, sword in hand. A common practice with many "bush" tribes is to entangle lions in a labrinth of nets and then rush in and spear them. Hence Leo Africanus has had pounded into him a certain respect for Homo sapiens, and as a rule discreetly refrains from attacking his camps north of the equator.

Regarding his boldness in South Africa opinions differ. Livingstone, the celebrated missionary, thought that there was no danger of an attack from the lions in the Zambesi district by day. On dark nights they would venture to attack his oxen, they were less brave when there was moonlight. But the Boers on their "treks," and the Mashonaland explorers, used to surround their camps with a strong zareeba of thorny wood, and to keep fires burning all night as a safeguard. In spite of these precautions it sometimes happened that a lion leaped the fence and carried off a sleeping man. Cumming, the lion-hunter, met with such an experience. The robber moreover had the nerve to devour his victim somewhere out in the dark beyond the camp, for the crunching of bones was distinctly heard.

The readiness to attack seems to argue for the superiority of the lion over the tiger, as regards courage. For the latter, although a man-killer in a furtive occasional way, keeps respectfully away from a camp. But there is a considerable difference between the surroundings of the two animals. India is a civilized country with tracts of jungle at intervals; and firearms have been in use there for many years. Africa is still for the greater part a jungle or a desert, with fringes and oases of civilization; and guns are of comparatively recent introduction there. All this tells on the habits of the animals. The tiger has been longer at the school of caution. But when a tug-of-war between man and brute is unavoidable, as in the case of following up a wounded animal, the tiger is as dangerous every way, and just as likely to turn on and rend his hunters as the lion.

If the attitude of a wild beast towards man and his works is a fair test of courage, the little leopard should rank high among the fighting cats. It would take two big leopards, and a cub thrown in the scale, to balance the weight of an average tiger. Yet the smaller animal shows plenty of "spunk" in a fight, and in addition a quality of nerve perhaps superior to that of his big cousin. "Spots" will take risks at which "stripes" looks askance. A tiger is very suspicious of a trap, but there is no keeping a leopard out of the grounds, or even the verands of a house where dogs are kept. The brutes' mouths water for a tit-bit like a fat little pug or terrier, and their tracks are not rarely discovered around bungalows in jungly localities.

I have seen a leopard expose itself in the day time quite near to habitations. The attraction in that case was a big retriever, trotting cheerfully along a wooded hill-path just beyond Naini-Tal. The leopard peered over a rock not many feet above the trail and seemed about to spring down; but the approach of a party of pedestrians, whom the dog was preceding, caused him to retreat behind the boulders with a flirt of his tail. In Africa it is not uncommon for leopards to prowl by night into the porches of the huts of solitary settlers and claw at the shutters.

Doubtless the smaller size of the leopard and its resourcefulness in hiding fortify its heart. "Spots" is not easy to hit in the dark, and has a hundred dodges for escaping. If discovered, which the tiger has not, being arboreal in its native haunts. It will prowl over roofs and outhouses where cattle lie, as unconcernedly as a tom-cat. The leopard is a venturesome animal that seems fully persuaded that it has nine lives to risk.

The courage of the great cats as a class is such as one would infer from their habits. They are hunters and killers, armed and active; they feed on flesh and lap blood. In the bears we have a tribe that is only predatory on occasion. They seem to lead a double life. Now they are meat-eaters for the nonce, like those vegetarians who find it hard to wean themselves entirely from the flesh-pots; and fatten themselves against the winter on the carcasses of deer. Again, they satisfy themselves with an innocent diet of honey, nuts, berries, and insects. With all this they are not of a mild disposition. The bear is the type of a surly man. Samuel Johnson was so ungracious, so overbearing when crossed in dispute, that he was nicknamed "Ursa Major." Bruin is solitary in his habits, morose in temper, and his growl is a warning that he is best left alone.

Bears are of patriotic interest to Americans, not indeed on account of their temper, but because the finest specimen of their tribe is peculiar to this continent—the grizzly. The annals of the West abound with testimony to the courage of old Ephraim—by the way, who gave him that name, and why? They are full of stories of terrific fights between trappers and big bears. But, as Roosevelt has pointed out, the pioneers, though good marksmen, were indifferently armed for battle with a large animal protected by a shaggy coat. The small bullet used was only occasionally fatal. Hence the "moving accidents," the hand-to-hand encounters, where claws were matched with knives. From these tales the grizzly bear looms forth an ogre of the mountains, a legendary and terrible creature.

The grizzly of the present day, though still formidable enough, is not surrounded with such a halo of terror. Improved firearms have taught the bear discretion. The hailstorm of lead pumped forth from a modern magazine rifle gives pause to the most ferocious temper. Grizzlies, says Roosevelt, do not now attack unprovoked, but if cornered they come on with reckless fury. A bear in a tight place, boxed up in a mountain cleft for example, is nearly certain to turn on his pursuers. Wounded, he will fight to the death against odds. Witnes the fate of the soldiers who, riding back to camp, lightly chased and wounded a grizzly. The brute clawed one assailant off his horse, and, when the other dismounted to aid his comrade threw him down and bit him to death. An intrepid gallantry was shown by that bear of whom it is related that, after being worsted in a fight with a stallion, with broken jaw and smashed face he sallied out from cover to meet the cowboys who had followed up his tracks. There is no questioning the courage of old Ephraim.

The black bear of India sustains the family character for pugnacity. The hot climate perhaps adds a dash of pepper to his temper, for he does not always wait for an affront. This variety is small compared with the grizzly, weighing on the average only 300 pounds, but he is quite as plucky. One would hardly imagine that a bear would face the huge moving bulk of an elephant. Yet they have been observed to leave the cover of the jungle and actually stand, fronting the colossus in a defiant "Come-on!" attitude, and the giant has taken fright and backed away from the roaring marvel of the woods. It is dangerous work following one of these bears when hit, for a shot does not always scare them from charging to close with the hunter. The ferocity of the grizzly is said to depend upon the amount of resistance it is accustomed to meet with. In the case of the Indian bear, it may be that familiarity with the generally harmless native has bred contempt for man, and that they are slow to apprehend the white man's power of offence. Though not usually aggressive, there is a determined quality of courage in this bear that makes it formidable.—Western Field.

Solution to Problem No. 46.

Z's best game is to lead the queen or 10 of spades from dummy, and clear the suit. If A has the king he cannot take the risk of passing the trick, and will probably go on with hearts, or else open clubs or diamonds, either of which leads will strengthen Z's hand; while if B has the king there would have been nothing gained by finessing. The knave of spades may be a useful card of entry to bring in a third diamond or the king of clubs, and Z is so long in the latter suit that he has little to fear from being led through. It is not impossible that the adversaries may make the mistake of establishing it for him.

Problem No 47.

Score: A, B, 21; Y, Z, 0. Z deals and declares no trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follow:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).—Hearts, queen, 3, 2; diamonds, knave 6; clubs, ace, queen, knave, 7, 4; spades 10, 9, 3.

Z's Hand (Dealer).—Hearts, ace, knave, 9; diamonds, ace, 10, 8, 5, 4; clubs, king; spades, ace, queen, 7, 2.

A leads the 7 of hearts. How ought Z to play the hands, and why?

PROGRESS AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Few persons, we imagine, spend the modest sum of nine pence on a copy of the Annual Return of the British Museum (including the parent establishment at Bloomsbury and the Natural History branch at South Kensington), which is published as a Parliamentary "blue-book." And yet these returns, or reports, contain a vast amount of interesting and instructive matter, as will be evident from the following extracts from the issue for the past year.

As regards the additions to the library at Bloomsbury during that period, it is stated that these (apart from detached number of series, etc., separate pieces, music and isolated maps), comprise 28,498 volumes and pamphlets (including 180 atlases, etc., and 1,336 books of music). Of these, 6,291 were presented; 14,454 received under the provisions of the Copyright Act; 468 by Colonial Copyright; 694 by International Exchange; and 6,591 acquired by purchase.

The number of newspapers published in the United Kingdom, received under the provisions, of the Copyright Act, during the year was 3,300e comprising 216,650 single numbers. 1,148 of these newspapers were published in London and its suburbs; 1,626 in other parts of England and Wales and in the Channel Islands; 285 in Scotland; and 241 in Ireland. 252 sets, containing 35,886 numbers of colonial and foreign newspapers, have been presented; and 83 sets, containing 12 volumes and 15,055 numbers of current colonial and foreign newspapers purchased.

The department of manuscripts has been enriched during the year by a great number of Greek papyri; among which His Majesty the King graciously presented two charred papyrus-rolls from Herculaneum, originally forming part of the gift of the Neapolitan Government to H.R.H. George, Prince of Wales, in 1803-06. Five rolls from the same collection were presented to the British Museum by H.M. Queen Victoria in 1865; the rest were destroyed in unsuccessful attempts to open them. Of the two rolls now presented one has been opened, and contains portions of the work of Epicurus, De Natura, the other is still unopened.

In the department of antiquities, Indian readers will be specially interested in the following items, which figure in the additions list as the result of the late Tibet expedition. These comprise an important series of temple-pictures and ceremonial objects, given by the Government of India. A series of temple-pictures, given by Lt.-Col. Waddell, C.B. A silk temple-picture, ceremonial vestments of bone worn by dancers, wooden horn, stool of Shigatse work, saddlemounts, Buddhist figure, and mould for clay figures, collected by Captain O'Connor. And seven silk temple-pictures.

Turning to the record of the department of coins and medals, the addition of most general interest is a medal in lead ordered by Napoleon I. to be executed when he was making preparations for an invasion of England in 1804. On the obverse is the head of Napoleon; and on the reverse Hercules overthrowing a marine giant with the legend Descente en Angleterre—Frappé à Londres en 1804. This medal was struck from unfinished dies made by Jeuffroy and Denon, and is probably unique. It formerly belonged to Dr. Burney, by whom it was sold in 1846 to Mr. Charles Stokes, whose collection was recently dispersed. The existence of this medal was known to the Museum but it had been lost sight of since the middle of the last century. The striking of this medal is perhaps one of the most remarkable instances in the world of being "too previous."

Among Indian coins received during the year, may be mentioned three rupees of the Moghul Emperors of Delhi, Aurangzib'Alamgir, Shah-Alam Bahadur, and Farrukh-Siyar, found in the Larkhana District, Sind. Two mohurs of the Moghul Emperors of Delhi, Alamgir II. and Shah-Alam II., found in the Poona District. Four silver coins of the Moghul Emperors of Delhi, Shah-Jahan, Aurangzib 'Alamgir, Farrukh-Siyar, and Muhammad Shah. Seven rupees of the Moghul Emperors of Delhi, Ahmad Shah and Alamgir II., struck at Jahangirnagar, Murshidabad, etc., all presented by the Bengal Asiatic Society. And thirty-two rupees of the Moghul Emperors of Delhi, Akbar, Shah-Jahan, Aurangzib'Alamgir, Bahadur Shah, Muhammad Shah'Alam, and Muhammad II.; thirteen copper coins of Akbar, Shah'Alam II., etc.; and also two Indo-Scythic tetradrachms of the "Great King," presented by R. W. Ellis, Esq.

Perhaps the most important addition to this series during the year was, however, the Parkes Weber collection of coins and medals, which also includes a number of specimens illustrating primitive forms of currency, such as the silver bars used in mediæval Russia and bronze rings from Africa; of the curiously-shaped coins from various countries of the East, such as the hat pieces of Pahang, the boat-money and tikals of Siam, and the fish-hooks of the Persian Gulf.

Passing on to the Natural History Museum, the most striking addition to the exhibition series during the period under review is the male African elephant, from South Nyasaland, placed in the entrance hall; while in the anthropological series reference may be made to a plaster cast of the bust of a pigmy from the Ituri Forest, modelled by W. Goscombe John, Esq.

As regards the pace at which the Zoological collection is increasing, it may be mentioned that the skins and other specimens of mammals acquired during the year comprise no less than 3,536, the highest number previously recorded having been 2,623 in 1903.

In birds the number of accessions was 9,659, while in reptiles the total reached 1,023.

This enormous increase in the number of specimens does not, of course, necessarily imply a correspondingly large increase in the number of previously unknown species; but is a necessity of the modern system of Zoological work according to which it is absolutely essential to have large series of specimens of individual species from different localities, in order to accurately determine the limits of their geographical range and their various local races or varieties.

Among the reptiles acquired, special mention may be made of the type specimens of a new land tortoise (Testudo travancorica) from Travancore sent home by the Trevandrum Museum; and also of another new tortoise (Cyclemys yunnanensis) from Yunnan. A rare Bornean lizard (Lanthanotus borneensis), previously unrepresented in the collection, is also a noteworthy addition to the series of reptiles from South Eastern Asia.

Finally, we must not omit to make mention of the acquisition during the year of the collection of land and fresh-water shells (chiefly Indian), bequeathed by the late Dr. W. T. Blanford. The actual number of specimens to be retained has not yet been ascertained, but it is estimated at about 2,000. The collection contains the types of a considerable number of species described by Dr. Blanford many years ago, and of numerous other species, descriptions of which were to have been published in the "Fauna of India," the Molluscan volume of which the late owner was engaged upon at the time of his death.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

FIELDS in the second day's chasing at Tollygunge had dwindled considerably, but the racing was of an even more interesting description than on the first day, with some great finishes and the freedom from serious accidents which marked both days was a great relief to race-goers whom past experience has taught to dread the casualty list on this course. The only thing which marred Saturday's enjoyment was the unfortunate loss of Mr. Harper's Bridegroom, who broke his shoulder at the water jump and had to be destroyed. The rest of the tale of grief was Kingpin's fall at the water on the first day which brought Senator down as well and sent Messrs. Evers and Miles sprawling and Prob's tumble at a simple hedge on Saturday. Fortunately nobody was much hurt by any of these mishaps and Mr. Evers had his revenge by bringing in Kingpin an unexpected winner after a well-ridden race on Saturday.

MR. APCAR again secured the principal event of the day on Saturday, winning the Tollygunge Plate with Seclusion after a grand race between her, Chassepot and Lord Harry, the three entering the straight together and fighting out a great battle all the way home. Look Out went very well for the first mile and a quarter, but then ran out at a jump, but the feature of the race was the running of Lord Harry which opened eyes a bit as to the form with which the unfortunate hunters have had to compete up to now.

THE books and the public finished about honours easy on the two days, as on Tuesday, except in one instance, the favourites rolled home with great regularity, while on Saturday with one exception they succumbed with equal certainty. A comparison of the starting prices of the victors on each day may be of interest.

	Tuesday.	Saturday.
4 "	2—5	8—1

Meaning that the average price against the winner on the first day was 2—1 and on the second 4—1, but the difference was also accentuated by the fact that on Tuesday the fancied horses at any rate saved their place money, while on Saturday for the most part they failed even to do that.

ANOTHER comparison that may be of interest is that of the times on the two days and it is curious to note that in every case but one they were slower on the second day than on the first. The time for the Hunters' race on Tuesday must of course be an error as Lord Harry could not possibly have run the 2½ miles in 4mins. 33secs. but it is the official record.

Pony open race ...	Branga	10	0	5-11	Lady Viola	10	13	5-10
Pony hunters ...	Pathfinder	11	0	5 34	Emerald	10	4	5-37
Open 2½ miles	...Greenstone	10	10	5-13	Kingpin	10	4	5-15½
Hunters 2½ miles...	Lord Harry	12	3	4-33*	Pretender	12	6	5-32½
Open 3 miles ...	Mallard	10	3	6-36	Seclusion	10	11	6-36½
6 furlongs ...	Creel	6	10	1-17½	Creel	7	11	1-18

* Should probably be 5-23.

LOOKING at this table one is struck by one or two interesting facts. For instance on Tuesday Lady Viola carrying 10st. 11lb. finished 10 lengths behind the winner, the time being 5mins. 11secs., while on Saturday she won in 5mins. 10secs. with an extra 2lb. up, so that she was evidently much the better for her gallop. Again it is pretty evident from the times that if Mr. Apcar had chosen he could have won the Grand National again with Seclusion instead of Mallard and a third noticeable point is how vastly greater is the difference between the ponies in the open and Hunter classes than that between the horses.

MR. EVERS had a most successful meeting, riding a winner in the open pony race on the first day and a winner in the 2½ mile open horse race on Saturday, when he also got a second in the Hunter, a third in the Hunter pony, and a third in the 3-mile open event. Not a bad record for a G. R.—four steeplechases in one afternoon and never further back than third. We are also glad to have the opportunity of congratulating Mr. Tanner on his maiden win which he scored by good riding on his new pony Emerald, beating that very hot favourite Lady George with ease in the Pony Hunters' Race on Saturday.

AMONG the professionals Clark Hoyt of course had the two winning rides in the big event, Waugh and A. Hoyt scored once each. The [illegible] races both fell to Melsom on Creel though second time his stable did not give him a [illegible] against their other string Colina, who could only fourth. She is, however, a little bit of a thing and it is surprising that they should have backed her to an extent under 9-15, as though she may be as they say quite good enough to give Creel 2st. 2lb. and a beating, if the weights were 8st. 2lb. and 6st. respectively, there is always a breaking strain point and it is quite a different matter when a light animal is asked to take on a welter weight and it is hardly fair to accuse her of being a jade when she does not run up to her form under such a heavy packet.

TOLLYGUNGE steeplechasing is now over for the season and on Saturday we are back to the Calcutta second meeting for which the entries promise very good sport, and it is to be hoped that some of the good horses like Wandin, Realm, Betrayer, Volume, etc., etc., who were unable to start, or if they started were too unfit to show any form [illegible] be well enough to do some good now. A good deal of dissatisfaction is felt with the terms of the extra races as they only cater for much the same class of horses as have already got plenty of events open to them for competition, and it seems a pity that they do not have anything for maiden horses and for those that have never won races value Rs. 1,600 or over. There are plenty of animals here to fill such and who have but little show in the races as at present published. The adoption of this course would also give an easier task to the handicapper as they would not then have to endeavour to bring together in one field animals of such extremely varying calibre and scratchings would probably be less copious.

THE name of the Maharaja of Cooch Behar has always been associated with sport of every kind remarks Indian Motor News, so it is not surprising that when motor-cars came into use in India, His Highness was one of the first to take up the fashion. His first car was obtained in 1901, and was a 10-15 H. P. motor which is still running well. Then came the following cars:—A 12 H. P. Darracq, 14 Renault, 15 Simms, 40-50 Leon Bollee, 16-20 Chenard Walcher, 24-40 Fiat, 38-45 Daimler, 6 Wolseley, and a 16 H. P. Panhard. His Highness' present stud consists of a 50-50 Leon Bollee, 38-45 Daimler, 24-40 Fiat, 14 Renault, 15 Panhard, and an 8 H. P. Wolseley. No less than 14,000 miles have been made on the Leon Bollee on jungle roads to shooting camps, etc., and only two stops have occurred and His Highness is so pleased with this performance that he has ordered a new 60-70 H. P. car of the same make. The Maharaja owns a splendidly equipped garage where all repairs are carried out under the skilled supervision of Mr. J. Davison, his Highness' engineer.

THE Murray Football Cup Tournament, the final of which is to be played early in March, shows every promise of having a record number of entries. Already some sixteen entries have been received from the following regiments and batteries:—1st South Lancashire Regiment, 1st Duke of Wellington's Regiment, the Cameronians, the Royal Irish Rifles, 17th Lancers, 2nd Leinster Regiment, 2nd Rifle Brigade, 2nd Shropshire Light Infantry, 1st Oxfordshire Light Infantry, 1st Royal Warwickshire Regiment, 1st Royal Dragoons, 2nd Berkshire Regiment, Royal Artillery, Lucknow, 5th Fusiliers, 1st Royal Scots Fusiliers, 1st Gloucestershire Regiment. Those regiments who have not already entered should note that the closing date for entries is the 15th January.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Following his visit to Baroda, Stevenson gave his second billiard exhibition at Pyrke's on Monday, giving Mr. Young 650 in 1,000. He had been ill and in bed for two days previously and consequently we have yet to see him strike real form. He nevertheless gave a rather more interesting display than on the former occasion as his breaks included a variety of strokes with fewer top table nursery cannons. On the evening he averaged 33·3, better than against Mr. Carnell, and Young 3·7, also better than the other amateur, though in scoring only 100 he made [illegible] champion made no less than thirteen breaks over 30 and two over the century, including a 220, his best in Bombay. This was a particularly fine effort, as for the most part he was juggling with the balls in the middle of the table. An example of the control he has over the balls was when he lost the red a quarter of an inch in bulk with the white at the top of the table. He went in off it with such perfect judgment as to bring it back almost touching the red.

As usual, he concluded with a game of Snookers in which he beat Mr. Saul.

On Friday in the same room he met the Amateur Champion, Mr. C. V. Louth, giving him 700, and a large number came to see what promised to be a good game. Louth is not one of those who suffers from nerves, and but for the fact that he got something in his eye, which was further aggravated by poking a handkerchief corner in it, would have won. He was first to get going with a 30 and it was immediately evident Stevenson realised he would have to play up. After 33 and 22 he came to the table for his biggest break, a beautifully compiled 289 when he made a bad mistake in playing for a cannon in such a way that the white kissed the red away. Subsequently Louth scored well six times in succession including another 30. Then, however, Stevenson again got going only to fail at a difficult in off at 211. At the interval he was 601 to Louth's 847, the champion having averaged 40.

There was nothing startling from Stevenson, 52, 68 and 47 being his best when Louth went to the table for a finely played 51, and when he followed with 13 and only required 17 to win he looked like winning. It was now, however, he got something in his eye which probably accounted for his breaking down at an easy run through. With 32 and 18, Stevenson eventually ran out with 46, Louth's score being 985. Stevenson averaged 31·2 and Louth a fraction under 9.

After this Mr. Saul played the champion at Snookers, giving him 20 and was beaten after a close game. Stevenson got to 56—50 but missed the black and consequently lost.

Louth was the player who with 650 beat John Roberts by 58.

There were again three days' hunting last week and once more hounds provided excellent sport. Last bye day they met at the Cross Roads and after quickly despatching one jack had a longer run after another, who eventually went under after shirking the Backwater, the kill being effected just about the winning post of the hunt races.

On New Year's Eve there was an extra day, about fifty meeting at Parla to again see hounds affect two kills. The first jack, as on the former occasion, refused the Backwater and did not provide a long run, but the second did though he twisted and turned. Twice he visited Jack Symons' hill and was caught on his way to the water.

Though there was no kill, Thursday's run was one of the best we have had, being both fast and over good country. The jack must have been one of the thick-necked order as he never attempted to gain cover till after an hour's run he successfully evaded his pursuers in the very dense jungle near Girgaum station.

The last being devoid of racing, we have had two days' racing this week and on both occasions have we had good sport accompanied by, where punters are concerned, good luck. On both days have we had our chance of judging the new Arabs, and though one or two stand out there are many who have yet to show their true worth when less sportly. The first race framed for them on Wednesday filled so well that it was divided into three. In the first of these there was a hot finish between the two most fancied, Esar and Fantom, in which the latter got home by a head. At the distance Dark Metal came down with Mujeed, who was stunned but only for a short time and was riding again later. In the second division there was again a tremendous finish between Mudkoor, the favourite, British Flag, Rogers and Good Chance. The first led to the distance, fell away but came again and just squeezing in on the rails won by a neck. The third saw a comparative walk over as Maimoon, well fancied, literally cantered in and must be the best of the bunch.

There was a bit of an upset in the Midget Maiden Plate, as Koomash, the favourite, never looked good and just when Hobart got his head in front of Norwood, the 6 to 1 chance, Ragub came and pipped them on the post. On the other hand the Maiden Plate was a good thing for Dhamas, who came in by streets at odds on from Rashad and Galopin, who made the pace.

The Mistletoe Plate devolved into a match between Killua and Baritone, who won it last year. Though giving away 30lb. Killua was made a 7 to 2 on chance and after letting Baritone make the pace won by a head in 1min. 16secs. It was none too good a thing, however, as he was all out and had Beaumont driven Baritone along a little earlier the positions might have been reversed.

There was a mad rush for Salanic in the Desert Plate with a bit for Vedas, Derby and Herricul, and the last three were the ones in it at the finish. As of old, Vedas streaked out and with Bradshaw keeping a nice hold stayed out, Herricul on whom C. B. rode rather an erratic finish, bumping Salanic badly. This was Bradshaw's third win and he should now be firmly established as the M. G. and A. N. jockey.

A half mile and a five-furlong race was framed for the new ones on Saturday and both had to be divided. In the first of the former, British Flag was the only one we knew and he was favourite from Martyn, Zari and Disguise. It was a scrambly sort of a race which seemed between Disguise and Martyn when Zari came along full of running and won a good race. Two previous winners, Fantom and Mudkoor, were fancied for the second and the race lay between them, the latter getting away well from the distance to stay out a strong finish by the favourite.

In the first for five furlongs Maimoon made his second appearance and, to cut a long story short, won on his own after Turkish Flag III. had made the pace. The second saw the first appearance of a pony who was said to have beaten old ones in a gallop and to be better than Maimoon. Respectable was made an even money chance and looked beaten before the bend. At the bend the whip was out on him, but he appears to want driving, as instead of stopping he went away to win by a wide margin under the whip all the way to the post.

The Bedouin Plate was a tickler, but punters were right when they made Grey Falcon favourite in a field of eleven. It was a great race, a whole bunch together at the bend where Salanic and Creditor led, but Grey Falcon got right through cleverly, whereas Shanwar had a rough passage. With a clear run it is probable Shanwar would have won, but as it was it could not catch the favourite who won under the whip.

The big horse race, the New Year Plate, was an open one, Admiral Crichton, Zotique and Baritone being in demand. It was a good race, Baritone coming from a bad start outside the other two with Epitome at the bend. Up the straight it was a good race, Admiral Crichton's huge stride just getting him there.

A good betting race was the mile, the Marine Lines Plate, in which first Spearmint and then Precious was made favourite. Neither could do much in the race, 10-12 telling on the old champion at the finish. Royal made the pace, but was beat before the bend, where Antica and Shella passed him to finish in that order under the whip.

Frenchmen do not seem to make much progress in football; they rarely acquit themselves well when opposed to Englishmen. On New Year's Day a representative team played England at Paris and had to own defeat by no less than 19 points to nil.

Imperial grouse have been very plentiful this season in Bikanir, judging by the bag made between 7 A.M. and 10-30 A.M. on the 16th ultimo by H. H. the Maharaja and party. His Highness got 475 and Major Erskine 286 to their own guns. Good enough for three and a half hours' shooting at driven birds! The previous best bag of Indian grouse in a morning's shoot was Sir Philip Egerton's 307.

With the present agitation in favour of forming an All-India Hockey Association we cordially agree; but past experience of efforts at founding "All India" sporting associations does not encourage one to hope that this last enterprise will be successful. The attempt to found an Indian Amateur Athletic Association failed, because Bombay declined to run its sports under A. A. A. rules as we do in Bengal; the Indian Football Association (which governs all Calcutta hockey competitions) is "Indian" only in name, it has no jurisdiction outside of Calcutta, and so on. The fact is presidencies have always been shy of amalgamating in such matters so far, and there does not appear much chance, as matters stand at present, of anything approaching the combination that would justify the existence of an All-India Hockey Association, more's the pity. We must not forget that India is practically a continent, not a country; and, above all, we must bear in mind the migratory nature of its white population and the fluctuating quality of its sporting interests.

This letter on the subject of "Game Preservation and the Police" has been addressed to the Pioneer:—

Sir,—The following account of what happened to us when we went shooting near Saugor last May may be of interest to any of your readers who are thinking of a trip to those parts. Shortly the story is this. We sent our servants and kit on ahead with orders to camp at a particular camping ground some 30 miles from Saugor. On our arrival there no camp was to be found. At the police post, the police, as represented by a head constable and some others, said they had no idea where our camp was. Our servants had certainly arrived the previous afternoon, but, said the police, they had disappeared during the night, and where our camp was they really did not know. When later that afternoon we did find our camp, some three or four miles from the place it was originally ordered to go to by us, the interesting fact appeared that the head constable had chased our servants away from the camping ground the evening before. He gave as his reason that the Inspector-General of Police was coming to shoot in those parts himself some three weeks later, consequently no other sahibs were wanted there, and that our servants must go and ordered them away to the village where we found them. On one of us going to interview him the next day he did not deny this, and gave as his only excuse that he had no orders concerning us. Stray men having no apparent business in the jungle abounded during the next few days, and one day we came across a party of them beating bushes, throwing stones and yelling at the top of their voices. On our enquiring who they were, they told us that they were sightseers! Now neither of us had ever come across this class of Indian villager before, and we were consequently much interested in them, but interested though we were, we could not keep thinking it must be very disturbing to any game that there might be in the jungles. Anyway we did not see any. Of course there is no proof that this disturbing of the jungles was due to any action on the part of the police, it is mere surmise as we pointed out later to the Inspector-General. But of the policeman's acts of, firstly, hunting our servants away from the camping ground, and, secondly, allowing us to roam all about the jungle looking for our camp through a long hot day, while he knew perfectly well where it was all the time, there can be no doubt.

Not liking the way we had been treated, we reported the case to the District Superintendent of Police, setting out all the facts in much detail. He entirely exonerated the head constable.

Then we forwarded all the correspondence to the Inspector-General who replied there was no doubt that the head constable had resorted to the usual native tricks to prevent his, the Inspector-General, being forestalled.

He also promised to investigate the case in November.

This he did, and the man was reprimanded for not knowing the whereabouts of our camp after it had left the camping ground we had originally ordered it to go to. As this does not appear to us at all a satisfactory ending to the case, and as the disciplinary action taken is hardly likely to have a deterrent effect on the "usual native tricks" we should be glad if you would publish this letter. It may be the means of saving others from a fruitless trip and also of knowing what to expect if they run counter to the ideas of the subordinate police as to who is, or who is not, entitled to shoot in the jungle in the Saugor District.

Successful prize winners at the recent Calcutta Kennel Club show will, we suppose, have to extract what comfort they can out of the following notice which has been published, presumably by the executive, though it is unsigned:—

"Owing to the poorness of the gate receipts at the Dog Show held on 27th December last, barely Rs. 300 being taken, the prizes cannot be given until the amount at the disposal of the Committee of the Calcutta Kennel Club is ascertained. The funds of the Calcutta Kennel Club are fortunately sufficient, but it is doubtful whether the various prizes will be of the same intrinsic value as at the previous show. The Committee are hopeful of sending successful exhibitors their trophies in the near future."

We have always kept the subject of big game preservation in India prominently before our readers. We are glad to see the matter being brought well to the front among sportsmen at home and we have reason to believe this is the direct result of the series of articles we published last summer. Mr. Reginald Gilbert, F.Z.S., in a recent paper read before the Society of Arts, in London, put in a plea for Indian big game and went over a deal of ground traversed in the articles already published by The Indian Field. In his opening remarks Mr. Gilbert disclaimed knowledge of wild beasts of India outside the boundaries of Western and Central India and the Central Provinces. After a short account of the disappearance of the lion from Central India, and the turning out last year of young cubs obtained from the Soudan by the Maharaja of Gwalior, the lecturer passed on to the tiger, and gave some account of man-eaters, concerning which he put forward the theory that the practice was either hereditary or taught to the cubs by man-eating dams. He also gave interesting details as to tiger-netting in Mysore, shooting over water and kills, the habits of the panther, sloth bear, gaur (or Indian bison), and sambur deer. At this point some very fine lantern pictures were thrown on the screen; all were exceedingly good, but netted tigers, a dead bison, captive elephants in the keddah, cheetah and black buck, and two three-year-old bison cows in the gardens at Mysore are worth special mention.

The most important part of the paper was the plea for the preservation of Indian big game, which, Mr. Gilbert said, was now so scarce in the Bombay Presidency as to be dangerously near to the vanishing point. Information received from the Conservator of Forests of the Northern Circle of Bombay was quoted with regard to the general decline in numbers, and this official laid the blame on poaching villages and the "wild tribes" rather than on European sportsmen who have to pay license. A similar view was taken by the Deputy Conservator of Forests in the Central Provinces. The remedies proposed were that the Government rewards for killing tigers and panthers should be abolished except in the case of man-eaters, and that licenses should not be issued to natives from March to July, which would put a stop to the indiscriminate slaughter in shooting over water during these months. Mr. Gilbert considered this plan the only way of completing the good work carried on under the forest rules, and in his opinion it would effectually protect big game. Sir W. Lee-Warner expressed his full sympathy with Mr. Gilbert's views, and hoped to see the question of preservation of big game put on the same footing in India as it was in Africa. Mr. Gilbert was cordially thanked for his paper.

Big carriage horses are in demand in London. A writer in a London trade paper says: "It is enough to say that the great and wealthy jobmasters of London are unable to let or hire anything but big horses; hence, in the absence of home-breds, they buy them in America or on the continent of Europe. The number they now require could be expressed in thousands, and the cheques they send would amount to something more like millions. To give an idea, a jobmaster's limited company recently paid £40,000 in one bargain for London carriage horses. The rapid growth of London will soon make 5,000,000 persons into a population of 15,000,000, and with increased wealth there will be a vastly increased demand for big London carriage horses, as long as men remain about the same height. Scientists tell us that there has been no material change of stature during the last 300,000 years, so breeders need have no doubt about future markets for any stylish, full-sized carriage horses they may be enabled to put upon the London market. In advocating the production of such full-sized carriage horses as now appear in the parks and fashionable streets of London, I have no desire to discourage the fashionable Hackney which adorns the elegant victoria, but I want the larger type to be bred in equal numbers."

When Jay-Eye-See electrified the horse world by trotting a mile in 2-10 at Providence twenty-three years ago, who would have dreamed that before the little black son of Dictator passed away more than three hundred horses would equal his then unprecedented performance? In the campaign of 1907 thirty-two newcomers were added to the 2-10 list, swelling the total to 318, according to the official count in Wallace's Year Book. It is not quite fair, however, to say that all these horses have equalled the performance made by Jay-Eye-See in 1884, for all save Sunol 2-08¼, Maud S. 2-08¾, Palo Alto 2-08¼, Allerton 2-09¼, and Nelson 2-10, were aided by the pneumatic sulky, which revolutionized trotting records in 1892, and some of them even had to get behind a wind shield to gain their illegitimate "records." Counting the pneumatic sulky as adding five seconds to the speed of a trotter—this is just what it added to the speed of Nancy Hanks—and eliminating all the wind shield performances there have been only eleven trotters since these "modern improvements" came into use that could stand comparison with Jay-Eye-See and the old time champions.

The vexed question of a dealer's or manufacturer's liability in the event of injuries being caused by the bursting of a gun barrel or any similar mishap has on various occasions come up for decision in courts of law. To prove defects of material or workmanship is, in such cases, difficult, and negligence on the part of the user is often shown to have existed. In 1901 an action was brought in Ireland against the makers of a nitro powder for damages for injuries sustained through the bursting of a gun. The gun was shown to be a muzzle loader, and the [illegible] was dismissed. In 1902 an important case on similar lines was decided in France, the manufacturer of a burst gun being exonerated because the shooter had loaded his own cartridges and had probably used an excessive charge. In 1903, for a similar reason, the case of Favo vs. Remington Arms Company, was decided against the user of the gun. Recently another case has been decided in the Supreme Court of New York. Full details are not, at the moment, before us. It appears that a repeating shot-gun had been purchased from a dealer in New York City, and the second day it was used the gun burst, causing injuries for which suit was brought to recover $2,000 damages. The verdict was awarded to the defendant. Evidence brought out the facts that the weapon was charged with a factory-loaded cartridge, and that the catalogues issued by the manufacturer represented the goods stated therein to be perfect in construction and to be made of the best material. The judge charged the jury that, if a manufacturer shows that he has exercised reasonable care in the selection of materials, and carefully makes and inspects his products before sending them out to customers, he is not thereafter liable, unless it be shown that there were defects in materials or carelessness in manufacture.

A popular and interesting extra item at Harmston's Circus last Thursday was the presentation of souvenirs to Watson and Hoyt, the trainer and jockey, who shared with Mr. Apear's "Mallard" the honours of victory in the Indian Grand National: the generosity of the management and the skill of the recipients were recognised by the large gathering in rounds of hearty applause.

The following night the extra turn took the form of a jumping contest for local horses: there was some very creditable lepping, the winner and runner up being Mr Johnston's "Donald" and Mr. [illegible]'s "Mad Mick." We have, we think, almost wasted our stock of adjectives of praise and admiration in previous references to the excellence of the show Harmston's have provided this year: it only remains to say that all the stars—the Pattersons, Decars, the really versatile Almiro, Frantz troupe and the Collins sisters—have contributed new feats, funniments, and dances to the programmes which have undergone regular change and revision, while all those in any way connected with the production of the "bill" continue to deserve and receive unstinted recognition from delighted audiences. And it occurs to us to mention here the specially good work of the ring attendants and those who carry out the humble but necessary offices in which flooring, carpet, gear, and sawdust figure so prominently: they are as smart and well drilled a body of helpers as we have ever seen, and though their share in the general result is liable to be overlooked, the fact remains that they contribute in no small measure to the success. Colonel "Bob" Love is to be congratulated on the efficiency of his small army of boys in khaki.

The amateur riding contest on Monday night was won by Mr. Gee, who carried away a valuable gold watch as his guerdon.

We remind our readers of Saturday's Matinée and of the time-honoured birthday benefit tendered to the Colonel. This is fixed for to-morrow night; needless to say the bill will be plethoric in its array of good things and the house should be in keeping with the occasion. The performance will be under the patronage and in the presence of Lord and Lady Minto and the popular Colonel with his proverbial generosity will present half the gross receipts to the "Lady Minto Nursing Home Fund."

By special request, the last high jumping contest for local horses will be held the same night, when a handsome trophy will be presented by the horse importers of Calcutta.

The native jockey, Kamad, did the hat trick at the Fourth Bombay Extra last Saturday, riding three winners in succession, vide our report elsewhere. Not a bad performance.

Hanlan, the famous Canadian sculler, is dead. Reuter's wire informs us that he is lying in state in the Toronto City Hall and that he is to be buried with civic honours. Thus Canada remembers one of her most distinguished sons. Hanlan was considered by a great many people, well qualified to judge, to be the very finest sculler who ever contested the world's professional championship, and he was always a thorough sportsman and a particularly modest, well-mannered fellow. He made his meteoric descent on the sculling world in 1879 when he wrested the championship from W. Elliott on the Tyne. He was champion the next five years running, defeating Trickett, Laycock and Boyd—all previous champions. In 1884-85 and 1887 he was beaten by that marvellous middle-aged sculler, W. Beach, who thereupon resigned the championship; but Hanlan went on. He never got back his old form, however, and after having been twice beaten by P. Kemp, on the Parramatta River, he retired.

A Lahore correspondent writes:—The four days' meeting held this year has not only been an unqualified success from a point of view of large fields and record attendances, but never before in the annals of up-country racing has such a good class of animal been saddled in an up-country paddock. The way in which Romany Lass won from her fields on each occasion proves her likely to trouble some of the cracks at the next Lucknow meeting, and rumour has it, that in Australia she carried all before her. But perhaps the feature of the meeting was the large fields that turned out in all the country-bred races, and both for breeding and looks nothing but the most unstinted praise can be given. That country-bred racing is becoming more and more popular was clearly demonstrated and it is to be hoped that some effort will be made to cater largely for this class at the various other mofussil race meetings. Avatar proved himself again the good pony he is, but on the whole the Arab class was a little below the average. Stables were represented from Meerut, Umballa, Quetta, Rawalpindi and Peshawar, Beedham having a large string in his care, whilst Captain Winter's string from Rawalpindi helped largely to swell the entries.

The second test match at Melbourne ended in a win for the M. C. C. by two wickets. Australia made 266 and 397 and the M. C. C. 382 and 282 for 9 wickets.

Henley regatta has been fixed for 1st, 2nd and 3rd July; we see the Stewards have resolved not to alter their decision which debars the Belgians from defending the Grand Challenge Cup.

With regret we learn of the death, from a riding accident, of Major Brandreth, Superintendent of the Remount Depôt at Secunderabad. He was a good sportsman and in the front rank of gentlemen riders.

The sculling match for the world's championship between W. Webb (holder) and R. Tressider, will be rowed on the Wanganui, New Zealand, on 20th February.

Mr. Deane, the well-known Bombay sports man, has been appointed to the Secretaryship of the Lucknow Races, and Mahomed Bagh Club—a popular and wise selection.

We see from the last Report of the Directors of the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society which covers operations during the year ending 31st December 1906, the ninety-ninth of the Society's existence, that there has been a satisfactory record of progress all along the line. The ordinary life proposals received during the year numbered 7,387 for £5,052,672, of which 648 for £907,840 were declined or not completed, while 6,739 Policies were issued, insuring £4,144,832, and carrying New Premiums of £200,518. These figures are again considerably in excess of anything previously achieved by the Society in one year. The corresponding ordinary Life Insurances for 1905 were £3,283,899, with Premiums of £143,544.

In addition to the above, the Society received the sum of £40,896-18-0 as Premiums for Leasehold and Capital Redemption Insurances completed during the year.

The income for the year was £1,284,566-13-9, and the Expenditure (including a provision for every outstanding Claim) £611,516-10-8. The difference, £673,050-3-1, constitutes the increase in the Funds, which at the close of the year amounted to £6,760,918-9-11. This is the largest addition the Society has ever been able to make to its Funds in one year. The interest, Dividends, etc., received during the year amounted to £291,207-8-0 which, excluding an item of £23,060-10-0 Profit on Securities, shows a net return on the mean Funds, including all unproductive Assets, of £4-5-3 per cent., after deduction of Income Tax. The amount of the Scottish Imperial Funds at the close of the year was £661,072-0-2, making a total for the two Funds of £7,421,990-10-1.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 20th December 1907.

The heavy rains of last week brought about floods in the Thames Valley. Maidenhead, Teddington, and Hampton Court have suffered badly, and Windsor and Oxford in less degree. At Teddington the water was higher than it has been since the serious flood of 1894. On Saturday we had a storm which caused numerous wrecks on the south coast and much loss of life. We felt it pretty severely in London. Piccadilly was blocked in the afternoon by a crowd waiting to see the fall of the great derrick 130 feet high which has been reared on the site of a new building at the corner of St. James's Street and Piccadilly: the structure yielded to the wind and looked so like falling that the police closed Piccadilly to traffic, sending vehicles and pedestrians alike round by Albemarle and Duke Streets. His Majesty was to have driven that way from King's Cross to the Palace, but his route had to be changed. Fortunately the gale abated and the derrick strengthened by guy ropes, stood strain, but Piccadilly remained closed as the south side on Tuesday.

I rejoice to say that a movement is on foot to make an end of the flash-light advertisement which plagues us. One does not object to a reasonable advertisement such as, let us say, "Criterion," in steady lamp-letters high up on the building: what are objectionable are the intermittent electric light announcements which throw a blaze of light on the street one moment and leave it in comparative darkness the next. When these flash-light advertisements occur at a corner where there is much traffic, they are both objectionable and dangerous. They are never beautiful; and it is on the ground of disfigurement that Mr. Joseph Rennell and a dozen of his friends are seeking the co-operation of certain societies to make an end of them. May they succeed.

New light of an unexpected nature has been thrown on the Beresford-Scott signalling incident. We were all wondering why we had heard nothing official about the affair and at last the reason appears. Sir Percy Scott's semaphore signal to the Captain of the Roxburgh that "paint work appears to be more in demand than gunnery," etc., etc., was made two hours before Lord Charles Beresford signalled to the fleet to "go out of routine" and prepare for the reception of the German Emperor: obviously therefore it could have borne nothing of a contemptuous or insubordinate complexion. The interchange of signals by semaphore between the Good Hope, Sir Percy's flag-ship and the Roxburgh was of the conversational character not uncommon when this means of communication is employed. Lord Charles Beresford did not arrive at Portland for two hours after the offending message was sent. What we want to hear now is Lord Charles' explanation of his mistaken public reprimand.

The Distribution Meeting of the King's Hospital Fund was held on Monday. No less than £120,000 was available for grants, being £10,000 more than last year. Guy's comes off best with £15,000, two-thirds of which is towards re-building the out-patient department. King's College gets £7,000, of which £6,000 is towards the expenses of removal. The Prince in his speech referred to Mr. Carnegie's donation of £100,000, which will probably be credited to the capital account. Mr. John Burns took his seat as a member of the Council and in seconding adoption of the report made some incisive remarks about the overlapping of charities in the matter of outdoor relief. It is a difficult subject to deal with efficaciously, but nobody can doubt that these great charities are worked for all they are worth by the unscrupulous.

A petition presented to the Dean and Chapter to grant burial in the Abbey to the remains of Lord Kelvin succeeded. The amazing thing is that this honour was not offered as soon as the greatest of British scientific men died on Tuesday night. Lord Kelvin had been ill for three weeks as the result of a chill, and since he was in his 85th year fatal termination of the illness was not unexpected. Probably there never was a scientific man who combined such extraordinary inventive power with practical talent: his versatility was equally marvellous; as somebody once said of him he could invent a new tap during a pause in argument concerning the age of the earth.

Sir John Strachey's death, which occurred yesterday, removes a survivor of the old school of Indian civilian, and a great example of it. Including his term on the India Council, he had given the East 63 years of his life, as he went out from Haileybury in 1842 and resigned his seat on the Council in 1895. Sir John was 84 years of age and the youngest of three brothers: the eldest, Colonel Henry Strachey, is 94 years of age, and though blind is otherwise hale and active. Sir Richard Strachey is now over 91: he retired from the Chairmanship of an Indian Railway Company about a year ago, feeling the weight of years. He left Lancaster gate to take up his quarters at Hampstead only a few weeks ago.

The Camden Town murder trial came to an end on Wednesday, the jury finding the expected verdict in Woods' favour. There was really some evidence to incriminate him, but that was of his own making: he had the character of a good young man to maintain and he lied, and asked another to lie, in order to conceal the fact that he had dealings with women of the class to which the victim belonged. He had an excellent character and has been 14 years in one employment; a fact which always tells with a jury, though none knows better than the average juror that a man may be a saint nine hours a day and a sinner the rest. A point which struck one in reading the reports of the trial was the fairness with which the case for the prosecution was stated. Sir Charles Mathews who appeared for the Crown, laid stress on the facts that the woman's room had been rifled and that none of the stolen articles were found in Woods' possession. Nothing could be made of the charred fragments of a letter found in the fireplace of the room where the woman was murdered, and the accused denied that they were the remains of a missive he had written to her.

It is not easy to account for the interest this murder trial has aroused. Woods is a designer, a man in a humble but respectable walk of life; the woman, Dimmock, was a prostitute: the whole affair with its atmosphere of public house assignation was invalid and void of any interest whatever over a score of similar murders, yet London has been agog over it ever since the trial began last Thursday. There cannot be a shade of doubt as to Woods' innocence: and as the murderer escaped without leaving a clue after cutting the sleeping woman's throat with "almost scientific precision" and taking what he could find, no doubt the Camden Town murder will add one to the long list of the sordid mysteries of London.

John Lee, who was condemned to death in 1885 for the murder of Miss Keyes at Babbicombe, and reprieved, is to be released. You would remember the unique circumstances of the reprieve: the drop stuck, and after three distinct attempts to hang the man he was removed from the gallows in a state of exhaustion. Let us hope that the sensational papers will not "interview" the man.

The only new things on the stage since I wrote last are two pieces produced at the New. In "Memories" a decayed actress become charwoman displays the versatility of her former art by acting a fairy, as Juliet and a heavy comedy lady (for the benefit of a picture hanger). Miss Rose Yule shows ability as a character actress, but the thing is not strong enough to stand.

The "Tenth of August" is a three-act play of small account dealing with the woes of an astronomer who is not on good terms with his wife. Miss Nina Boucicault played well as the discontented wife who flirts with her husband's step-brother at the critical moment in the observatory, but she could not make a bad play consisting of forced and hackneyed situations a success.

"Peter Pan" was revived on Monday. I do not know that there is much to say about it. The Pirate Captain has some new oaths (none better than that ferocious "Split my infinitives but I will hang him!" however) there are new bits of business, Nana, the dognurse, has a most beautiful new tail and there is a quite remarkable ostrich done by Master Marini. I mentioned the changes in the cast in a previous letter and need not touch on them again. The house was crowded and enthusiastic: there were more grown-ups than children in the audience, but that, I apprehend, is because the Christmas holidays had not begun and because people don't take their four-year-olds to the evening performance.

The long-closed Coliseum yesterday began its career as an afternoon music-hall. I cannot say that the programme is remarkable for its novelty: Mr. Albert Chevalier gives some of his familiar, and popular, representations: the three cricketing elephants we knew a while back play a turn: Miss Annie Purcell sings agreeably, and a boy named Frishey sings ballads with a picture accompaniment: the pictures apposite enough are something of a mistake to my thinking, they divert the attention. La Freya's turn is the most novel thing in the show; posing as herself, some ingenuous manipulation of light turns her a mermaid, a sentry, a toreador, a gondolier, and other characters almost imperceptibly: the illusion is clever and well carried out.

It is not often that one has to write "failure" against a turn at the Hippodrome, but Mr. Bransly Williams' "tabloid version" of Dickens' Christmas Carol could not by charity itself be called a success. It is a "tabloid" with a vengeance. It opens in unconcentrated failure with the waits playing outside Scrooge's door in a snow storm: this raises hopes: we expect to see Scrooge throw up the window and bark; but he does nothing of the kind. The waits scene is merely a prelude to a condensed monologue by the old curmudgeon in his own room: unDickenslike and void of flavour. Mr. Williams' excellent make up as Ebenezer Scrooge is thrown away on a tabloid tableau like this: his make up was the best feature of the turn.

The L. C. C. have adopted the recommendation of the Theatres and Music-Halls Committee to effect that smoking be allowed in the auditorium of theatre as well as music-hall. On common-sense grounds it was obviously unreasonable to forbid smoking in one and allow it in the other, but I doubt whether removal of the prohibition will be generally popular; we don't want to smoke always, and even in this advanced age there are women who don't like smoke. Which reminds me that in conversation a day or two ago with a lady who is managing director of a house of residence for working ladies, I was told that no attempt was made to prevent the young women smoking: in one house under her management every woman of the 65 residents smoked; and in the other two the majority do it—habitually.

Mr. Buxton, in a speech made at the opening of a new Post Office in Boston the other day, told his audience what the Limerick craze is doing for the revenue. In August, September and October 1906 the number of sixpenny postal orders sold was 311,000: which means £648—in poundage: during the same three months of this year 5,772,000 sixpenny orders were sold: which means over £12,000—in poundage. It must be a painful reflection for the Good people that the taxpayer is profitting to the tune of £18,000 a year by the hideous obliquity of participators in the Limerick craze. It was a wise provision of Peterson's Weekly to stipulate for sixpenny orders only: it took the G. P. O. into profitable partnership at once.

A member of the Battersea Borough Council has given notice of his intention to move that the silly inscription on the "Brown Dog" memorial be removed. Brown doggery has been much before the public latterly by reason of the demonstrations of medical students who "process" through the streets and come in collision with the police. The inscription, compiled by some rabid anti-vivisectionist, is void of accuracy, good sense and taste—is characteristically faddist in short—and offends many while it can please very few. It would be a good thing to remove the dog's figure with the inscription and let the anti-vivisectionists have it to adorn their office with.

TAXIDERMY.

A FEW HINTS ON THE ROUGH PREPARATION OF TROPHIES FOR TRANSPORT.

We are sure that many of our readers will have experienced the annoyance of having been put to a great deal of trouble in procuring heads, etc., and through a lack of the knowledge of skinning, had their trophies entirely spoilt. It is therefore our intention to give in as short a space as possible, a hint or two, which may serve to check any mistakes which the skinner is likely to make.

In order to obtain the best results all heads should be cut off by making an incision in the skin right round the neck in front of the shoulders (middle of shoulders would be better) and skin back to the head. Be sure to leave the skin longer in front than behind. Heads with horns, must have an incision made straight up the back of the neck, and on arriving at the back of the horns the incision must take a Y shape, and then around the base of each horn: skinners should be cautioned not to cut the eyelids which can easily be avoided by lifting the eyelid up from the outside and pulling against the weight of the skull.

The fleshing off should be done after the skin has been removed, either with a knife or scissors. The ears should then be skinned, and in order to separate the skin from the burr, a blunt tool such as the handle of a tooth brush is a very useful thing, but when this forcing apart nears the edge of the skin, a very sharp knife is required, but don't cut through or tear the skin.

The lips should also be split or pocketed, by cutting into the fleshy part and the skin proper, that is to say, instead of the lip being doubled back from the skin as in nature, when properly skinned it will lay in one continuous flat piece. In cutting into the flesh in animals with whiskers be sure not to cut down too deep or the whiskers will drop out.

Take the trouble to see that the whiskers and claws of a tiger, etc., are not purposely cut away.

It is advisable to wash any blood stains away with sponge and hot water.

The taking off of whole skins seems to be fairly well understood; but the skinning of an animal that it is intended should be set up whole, is quite a different method to the skinning required for a flat skin.

All animal head skins and skins should be well rubbed with GROUND ALUM (not burnt alum) on the flesh side and allowed to dry.

Before packing they should be well sprinkled with turpentine or any other available spirit; turpentine of course lasts longer. This with some ablo carbon in the box should reduce the chance of damage by insects to a minimum.

For further and exact details it would be as well to consult the many excellent pamphlets on the subject.

With regard to the final setting up of trophies, this is a matter which should receive the careful and well thought consideration of the sportsman. In our opinion it is far better to only have the skull and horns, if the expense of having the heads set up well is more than can be afforded; besides if a skin is properly made it could be set up at a later date. It is much better to have fewer heads, and have them well done, than to have a lot of atrocities hanging on your walls. It is not sufficient that a head should be a reminder of a fine day's sport,—it must be beautifully and well done, so that it may harmonize with the general scheme of ornamentation of the house, in fact it should be "a joy for ever."

Skilful taxidermy is like everything else that is good; it costs money, but we have recently had a firm brought to our notice which we have very much pleasure in recommending, not only because we have never seen any better work, but we understand that their charges are very moderate and any sportsman would do well to enquire from Messrs. P. Spicer and Sons (Taxidermists), Leamington, England, for their illustrations and terms. They are a very old firm, which till recently have been quite content to have their work recommended from one customer to another, and have thus built up a good reputation at home. Not having the heavy rents and rates of a large city their charges are more moderate than those of London.

New light of an unexpected nature has been thrown on the Beresford-Scott signalling incident. We were all wondering why we had heard nothing official about the affair and at last the reason appears. Sir Percy Scott's semaphore signal to the Captain of the Roxburgh that "paint work appears to be more in demand than gunnery," etc., etc., was made two hours before Lord Charles Beresford signalled to the fleet to "go out of routine" and prepare for the reception of the German Emperor: obviously therefore it could have borne nothing of a contemptuous or insubordinate complexion. John Lee, who was condemned to death in 1885 for the murder of Miss Keyes at Babbicombe, and reprieved, is to be released. You would remember the unique circumstances of the reprieve: the drop stuck, and after three distinct attempts to hang the man he was removed from the gallows in a state of exhaustion. Let us hope that the sensational papers will not "interview" the man.

The only new things on the stage since I wrote last are two pieces produced at the New. In "Memories" a decayed actress become charwoman displays the versatility of her former art by acting a fairy, as Juliet and a heavy comedy lady (for the benefit of a picture hanger). Miss Rose Yule shows ability as a character actress, but the thing is not strong enough to stand.

The "Tenth of August" is a three-act play of small account dealing with the woes of an astronomer who is not on good terms with his wife. Miss Nina Boucicault played well as the discontented wife who flirts with her husband's step-brother at the critical moment in the observatory, but she could not make a bad play consisting of forced and hackneyed situations a success.

"Peter Pan" was revived on Monday. I do not know that there is much to say about it. The Pirate Captain has some new oaths (none better than that ferocious "Split my infinitives but I will hang him!" however) there are new bits of business, Nana, the dognurse, has a most beautiful new tail and there is a quite remarkable ostrich done by Master Marini. I mentioned the changes in the cast in a previous letter and need not touch on them again. The house was crowded and enthusiastic: there were more grown-ups than children in the audience, but that, I apprehend, is because the Christmas holidays had not begun and because people don't take their four-year-olds to the evening performance.

The long-closed Coliseum yesterday began its career as an afternoon music-hall. I cannot say that the programme is remarkable for its novelty: Mr. Albert Chevalier gives some of his familiar, and popular, representations: the three cricketing elephants we know a while back play a turn: Miss Annie Purcell sings agreeably, and a boy named Frisbey sings ballads with a picture accompaniment: the pictures apposite enough are something of a mistake to my thinking, they divert the attention. La Freya's turn is the most novel thing in the show; posing as herself, some ingenuous manipulation of light turns her a mermaid, a sentry, a toreador, a gondolier, and other characters almost imperceptibly: the illusion is clever and well carried out.

It is not often that one has to write "failure" against a turn at the Hippodrome, but Mr. Bransly Williams' "tabloid version" of Dickens' Christmas Carol could not by charity itself be called a success. It is a "tabloid" with a vengeance. It opens in unconcentrated failure with the waits playing outside Scrooge's door in a snow storm: this raises hopes: we expect to see Scrooge throw up the window and bark; but he does nothing of the kind. The waits scene is merely a prelude to a condensed monologue by the old curmudgeon in his own room: unDickenslike and void of flavour. Mr. Williams' excellent make up as Ebenezer Scrooge is thrown away on a tabloid tableau like this: his make up was the best feature of the turn.

The L. C. C. have adopted the recommendation of the Theatres and Music-Halls Committee to effect that smoking be allowed in the auditorium of theatre as well as music-hall. On common-sense grounds it was obviously unreasonable to forbid smoking in one and allow it in the other, but I doubt whether removal of the prohibition will be generally popular; we don't want to smoke always, and even in this advanced age there are women who don't like smoke. Which reminds me that in conversation a day or two ago with a lady who is managing director of a house of residence for working ladies, I was told that no attempt was made to prevent the young women smoking: in one house under her management every woman of the 65 residents smoked; and in the other two the majority do it—habitually.

Mr. Buxton, in a speech made at the opening of a new Post Office in Boston the other day, told his audience what the Limerick craze is doing for the revenue. In August, September and October 1906 the number of sixpenny postal orders sold was 311,000: which means £648—in poundage: during the same three months of this year 5,772,000 sixpenny orders were sold: which means over £12,000—in poundage. It must be a painful reflection for the Good people that the taxpayer is profitting to the tune of £48,000 a year by the hideous obliquity of participators in the Limerick craze. It was a wise provision of Pearson's Weekly to stipulate for sixpenny orders only: it took the G. P. O. into profitable partnership at once.

A member of the Battersea Borough Council has given notice of his intention to move that the silly inscription on the "Brown Dog" memorial be removed. Brown doggery has been much before the public latterly by reason of the demonstrations of medical students who "process" through the streets and come in collision with the police. The inscription, compiled by some rabid anti-vivisectionist, is void of accuracy, good sense and taste—is characteristically faddist in short—and offends many while it can please very few. It would be a good thing to remove the dog's figure with the inscription and let the anti-vivisectionists have it to adorn their office with.

TAXIDERMY.

A FEW HINTS ON THE ROUGH PREPARATION OF TROPHIES FOR TRANSPORT.

We are sure that many of our readers will have experienced the annoyance of having been put to a great deal of trouble in procuring heads, etc., and through a lack of the knowledge of skinning, had their trophies entirely spoilt. It is therefore our intention to give in as short a space as possible, a hint or two, which may serve to check any mistakes which the skinner is likely to make.

In order to obtain the best results all heads should be cut off by making an incision in the skin right round the neck in front of the shoulders (middle of shoulders would be better) and skin back to the head. Be sure to leave the skin longer in front than behind. Heads with horns, must have an incision made straight up the back of the neck, and on arriving at the back of the horns the incision must take a Y shape, and then around the base of each horn: skinners should be cautioned not to cut the eyelids which can easily be avoided by lifting the eyelid up from the outside and pulling against the weight of the skull.

The fleshing off should be done after the skin has been removed, either with a knife or scissors. The ears should then be skinned, and in order to separate the skin from the burr, a blunt tool such as the handle of a tooth brush is a very useful thing, but when this forcing apart nears the edge of the skin, a very sharp knife is required, but don't cut through or tear the skin.

The lips should also be split or pocketed, by cutting into the fleshy part and the skin proper, that is to say, instead of the lip being doubled back from the skin as in nature when properly skinned it will lay in one continuous flat piece. In cutting into the flesh in animals with whiskers be sure not to cut down too deep or the whiskers will drop out.

Take the trouble to see that the whiskers and claws of a tiger, etc., are not purposely cut away.

It is advisable to wash any blood stains away with sponge and hot water.

The taking off of whole skins seems to be fairly well understood; but the skinning of an animal that it is intended should be set up whole, is quite a different method to the skinning required for a flat skin.

All animal head skins and skins should be well rubbed with GROUND ALUM (not burnt alum) on the flesh side and allowed to dry.

Before packing they should be well sprinkled with turpentine or any other available spirit; turpentine of course lasts longer. This with some able carbon in the box should reduce the chance of damage by insects to a minimum.

For further and exact details it would be as well to consult the many excellent pamphlets on the subject.

With regard to the final setting up of trophies, this is a matter which should receive the careful and well thought consideration of the sportsman. In our opinion it is far better to only have the skull and horns, if the expense of having the heads set up well is more than can be afforded; besides if a skin is properly made it could be set up at a later date. It is much better to have fewer heads, and have them well done, than to have a lot of atrocities hanging on your walls. It is not sufficient that a head should be a reminder of a fine day's sport,—it must be beautifully and well done, so that it may harmonize with the general scheme of ornamentation of the house, in fact it should be "a joy for ever."

Skilful taxidermy is like everything else that is good; it costs money, but we have recently had a firm brought to our notice which we have very much pleasure in recommending, not only because we have never seen any better work, but we understand that their charges are very moderate and any sportsman would do well to enquire from Messrs. P. Spicer and Sons (Taxidermists), Leamington, England, for their illustrations and terms. They are a very old firm, which till recently have been quite content to have their work recommended from one customer to another, and have thus built up a good reputation at home. Not having the heavy rents and rates of a large city their charges are more moderate than those of London.

Their staff of some 20 men has all been trained by themselves from boys, and they turn out some beautiful work, under the most favourable conditions.

We are sure our readers will be as delighted to hear of such a firm and any who care to inspect their pamphlets can do so at the office of The Indian Field.

Fishing.

WHIFFING.

There is perhaps a pleasure in whiffing for bass which is entirely absent, when railing for mackerel, or trolling for pike. Moreover, whiffing can only be accomplished with any chance of success, on certain tides, and then only, as a rule, for three hours during the day and the same time at night. A three-quarter moon is required for a successful night's bass fishing.

The bass or basse (Perca Labrax), as will be seen from his Latin name, is a member of the Perch family, but more resembles the salmon in colouring, with his bluish back and silvery sides and belly; in fact, he has been called the "salmon of the sea" and well named too, for not only is he like the salmon in appearance, but his fighting propensities and pluck, are equal to, if not superior to that of the salmon. A bass when hooked, if only one pound in weight, will give you the idea that he is four times the amount.

Now it does not suit the pockets of many of the hot weather leave-taking officers worn out with manœuvres, or the brain fagged Civilian, tired of his office, to pursue the wily grouse over moor and dale in August, or the partridge in the stubble and turnip fields in sweet September, when a day's sport with the guns will probably cost him not less than three or four days, hard earned pay. For the price of two days' sport on the moors or turnip fields, one can obtain the whole of the gear necessary for two months' sport with the pisces. I hear you say: "How can you compare a day's sport with the rod to a day's sport with the gun." I have heard sportsmen in America declare, that a day's sport with the bass is superior to any day's shooting. This is purely a matter of taste; both have their charms.

Having decided on a bass-fishing holiday, you must procure the necessary outfit. A four-jointed fourteen-foot rod, with a spare short top joint, is the best for your purpose, this spare top joint should be made to fit into the second joint, so that it will be extra strong at the base, and tapering so that it is fairly pliable, but not as much so as a trout rod; the reason for this I will explain later. The butt and second joint should be of East Indian cane, with the object of lightness, for whiffing is tiring work, and the two top joints should be greenheart for strength. Only upright immovable rings should be used. The winch should be wooden, and as light as possible, capable of holding at least one hundred yards of salmon line. The casting line should be of salmon gut, at least nine feet in length, dyed green-grey for use in very clear water and khaki yellow for sandy tinged water. Swivels if possible should be avoided, but are, of course, necessary for spinning, but not for whiffing. Never use snooded hooks, only eyed Limerick hooks, steel grey or light brown for choice, medium size with long shank, and fasten them to the casting line, in such a way that your fish can only get a straight pull on the cast. This can be done by passing the gut through the eye, taking two turns round the shank and making secure with a knot that will fit into the eye of the hook without passing through it. If this is done no fish will rob you of your hook and you will not have the mortification of losing a fine catch. Be careful that the point of your hook is of needle-like sharpness and the barb well projecting. A bass once pricked will seldom be bold enough to attempt a second rise at the same bait.

Of baits there are many, but I will confine myself to whiffing baits, except in passing, to mention that the hermit crab, or the soldier, as he is commonly called, owing to his scarlet jacket, and a piece of squid, are perhaps the best for bottom fishing. When obtainable, the most deadly of all whiffing baits, is the fry of the gower or guard fish, a miniature mackerel in appearance, about two and a half inches long with a pointed snout. Hook him through the snout, being careful to keep him alive, and no self-respecting bass can refuse him. White bait are distinctly good, but they are difficult to keep on the hook, die soon, necessitate constant rebaiting, and at all times very careful casting.

Sand eels after or during rough weather are excellent. Of dead baits my experience has taught me the following are the best. Take a slip about two inches long and one-eighth of an inch broad from the rainbow part of a smelt, cutting away sufficient flesh, as will allow of it appearing to wriggle like a tiny sand eel, this is a most fascinating lure.

A piece of the blue and silvery skin of a mackerel cut slantwise with all the flesh removed is a most tempting morsel and can be kept for any length of time. The same remarks apply to bass skin taken from the belly. This skin is so tough that it is very difficult to dislodge from the hook and the same piece can be used until an extra voracious fish devours it. Mackerel will also take all the above-mentioned whiffing baits. When none of these baits are procurable a slip from a white kid glove will be found to answer the purpose as a make shift, but it is apt to get sticky in salt water. If by any chance you should find these methods fail to entice the silvery beauties, then, and then only, try a small bright flexible phantom. There are many other good baits, but these will be found the best. Bass vary in weight up to 16lb., but the largest I have been fortunate enough to kill, was 10lb. 3ozs. in the summer of 1883 at Weymouth, in Dorsetshire, fishing from the Nothe breakwater, which was, in those days, an ideal fishing ground.

Bass usually arrive off the south and south-west coasts of England about the first week in July, but the time of their arrival varies, according to the weather. In August I have killed them as far north as Cromer on the East coast. When they arrive, they take up their abode near old piers and rocks where cockles, mussels and other kinds of Crustacea abound, and here they remain until they take their departure for deep water in October. In the year 189—I spent my summer holiday at a certain southern seaside resort. When I arrived I was not very long in discovering a talkative boatman, who was anxious to take me for an hour on the water for the modest sum of two shillings, his usual fee being half-a-crown. I accepted his kind offer, as I thought it would be a good opportunity for pumping the old salt as to the fishing to be had. We rowed round the pier head and I am certain, there could not have been less than twenty piscatorial sportsmen present. Some had two rods, some three, which were resting against the gunwale of the pier while their owners lolled about smoking. Every now and then, a bell suspended from the tip of a rod would tinkle, which indicated a bite and the owner of the rod would seize it and strike viciously, to find the fish gone. He would wind up, and probably found his bait had vanished. This seemed to cause a stir among the other fishermen, for they all commenced to wind up their lines. There was a lull and then the sound of many clicking wheels and I almost fancied "independent firing" had commenced as the leaden bullets fell short of the boat. "They don't catch many fish, do they?" I ventured to my companion. "No," said he, as he drew the back of his hand across his mouth. "They don't catch many fish, but there is a nice bar at the back of the pavilion where they sells good drink and that helps to while away the time. Fishing like rowing is thirsty work." His eye was steadily fixed on the bar, so nothing loth I took the hint and told him to row round to the landing stage. Having made the boat secure with the painter to a ring in a pile we made our way through sons of Neptune selling bait to the refreshment bar. It was thronged with amateur fishermen, aged from eighteen to nearly seventy. Having ordered the tots of rum, I took up a position near a garrulous veteran. He was evidently giving his friend the full benefit of his many years, experience. He said "I have fished from this pier, off and on for nigh forty years, but never do I remember them bite so feebly before and the bass are here, because I have seen them playing about on the top of the water and big ones too, as long as my arm, and no one seems to catch them." He was a kind looking fellow with a cheery face and I soon commenced a conversation with him. "Have you tried whiffing for the bass" I asked. "No" he answered, "but a young fellow did try one day and managed to hook a big fish and it broke the top joint of his rod, and I have not seen him since that day." I had learnt as much as I wanted to know, and bade him "good evening," telling the boatman I would walk ashore, and giving him his two shillings I strolled down the pier to see the "catch."

The tide was just ebbing and I calculated that it would be full flood about six hours later, that would be 10 P.M. Allowing the tide would be about half an hour later the following morning I decided to start whiffing at daylight, for bass always feed on the surface at flood tide when the sea is calm. Walking about I kept my eyes open and saw that both bass and pollack were breaking the water. The steel blue gleam of the bass and the brown olive back of the pollock were unmistakeable as they rose to the surface and the silvery flash of their bellies as they turned and disappeared behind the piles with a mouthful of white bait. Now the reason I advised the spare short top joint was on account of the piles. At angles of the pier head, where the water comes swishing round, forming a vortex, are favourite hiding places for the bass and the piles are generally placed close together so that it is impossible to cast here with a long rod and if attempted is disastrous to the rod. Moreover with a short rod you have greater power to prevent a fish when hooked from taking your cast round a pile; once he does so, your fish and casting gut are gone. If he gets between the piles and you find you cannot draw him out, drown him, by holding his head on a level with the surface of the water, but if he makes for the sea, let him go, keeping a tight line on him. That evening I procured a mackerel and prepared the skin for the morrow. At 6 A.M. I commenced operations and in three hours had killed eight bass, total weight 19lbs. 10oz. and three mackerel. At night, when the moon is full, and at this time the tide always runs stronger, bass fishing is unbeatable sport. On such a night, I killed thirteen bass, their total weight turning the scale at 37lbs. One evening when I was enjoying myself at the nightly concert, a pier hand informed me a large bass was lying off the pier near the refreshment room. They always were close to the refreshment bar when the pier-hands viewed them. I got out my rod and baited my casting line with a white moth. The tide took it down to him and he seized it with avidity and in ten minutes I had landed a 4lb. bass, much to the delight of the pier-hand who carried the fish home and drank its health and mine on separate occasions.

Shooting.

THE MODERATE SHOT.

We meet with all sorts of shooters, from the expert to the duffer. I can call to mind an example of the last-named that goes to show how thoroughly a man will sometimes throw himself into a pastime, no matter what the results are. Now, Mr. B. flourished many years ago; he lived in a Surrey village not far from the River Wandle, and was a patient of my father's. Mr. B. took to shooting late in life, and, to be strictly accurate, he could never shoot at all. He was never known to kill a bird—no one ever saw him do so, and he admitted it himself. Even if he let go both barrels into the "brown" of a big covey he could never manage to score; but this didn't trouble him a bit—he would bet five shillings with anyone he would kill at the next shot, which, however, he never did. Such was Mr. B.; he has long since been gathered to rest. In striking contrast to him was his constant friend and companion, Mr. A. The latter, with his old pinfire and one ounce and a-quarter of shot, seldom missed anything wearing fur or feathers. A better all-round shot I never saw for those days; no doubt the old gentleman would have taken a back seat had he lived in these times of quick-firing ejectors, for, armed with a pair of the latter and a man to load them, a gunner can now kill more game in half an hour than an old-time sportsman could in half a day. Mr. A., however, has also departed this life, so peace be to his ashes.

Come we now, though, to that ever happy, ever cheerful, and ever-contented fellow, the moderate shot. Some critics aver that the moderate shot is neither fish, flesh, fowl, nor good red herring, but I do not agree with that doctrine. The moderate shot is almost invariably a good fellow at heart, and a thorough sportsman. He is not good enough to be conceited, and so does not rub his friends or the keepers the wrong way. He is too good to be overlooked or discounted, and so always gets a decent, if not the best, stand in field or at covert-side. His skill is not of that order to bring a blush of shame to his cheek when he misses, nor is it so much above par as to rob him of enjoyment when he kills in good style. The familiar observation from the lookers-on of "Good shot, sir," or "Well killed!" falls upon the expert; he is so used to killing that neither his success nor the plaudits of his companions have any effect on him, while the duffer, on the other extreme, who never does score anything, takes his want of success as his fate, and no remarks he may chance to hear disturb him. Therefore, I say again, give me the moderate shot as the man who enjoys himself, for the hearty homage conveyed to him by the cry of "Good shot, sir," is in his case not only well deserved, but well appreciated into the bargain.

The moderate shot is always welcome. True, at some particularly "hot" corner or other he may not pull off such a series of brilliant kills as an expert would do, and as a result many birds will escape; but this is a detail, for many an expert is also what is known as a greedy shooter, and a greedy shooter, no matter what his skill may be, is never welcome, and too often is only asked when game must be got by hook or by crook. On some of our large estates the question of how such-and-such a quantity of game is to be got often presents serious difficulties to the host and his keeper. The host would like to invite Mr. This or Mr. That, and so would the keeper, but, alas and alack! neither is up to the mark as regards skill, though downright good fellows in all other respects. So the invitations go out to several well-known dead shots, just to ensure that a sufficiency of game may be got. Yet these experts may be jealous or greedy shooters to a man—indeed, they often are; their skill secures them their invitations, not their manners.

The moderate shot, on the other hand, when he is asked is always a welcome guest and appreciated by host, guests, and keepers alike. He is also a favourite with the ladies, a pleasant companion in the gun-room, and, lastly, is the prime favourite of all beginners. The young shooter out for his first or second season looks up to him for advice and guidance, and shuns the supercilious looks or remarks of the expert. A few observations from the latter will probably put the beginner off his shooting for the rest of the day. The cheery companionship of the moderate shot, though, with his friendly tips and advice encourages the youngster and helps him on his way. If he misses a couple or so of easy shots he is not despondent, for he well knows his good friend the moderate shot would quite likely have missed them himself; so there is a bond of fellowship established between them at once, often ripening into lifelong friendship. I know scores of experts and scores of moderate shots, and, if I am any judge of human nature, I give it as my opinion that the moderate shot enjoys himself better than the expert. I was at a big covert shoot but a few weeks ago, where one of the best shots in England was performing in a masterful style. Somehow he missed a particularly high and fast pheasant, so his "average," and also his temper, was spoilt for the day! Well, the moderate shot would have spoilt neither if he had missed twenty.—D. J. Hamilton, in Shooting Times.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—The sportsman who can carry back with him from his hunting trips clear photographs illustrating happy days in the jungle, collects bit by bit the most vivid and interesting record of his various wanderings. In order that the pictures may give pleasure, it is necessary to have them sharp and good, and also not too small. After trying various cameras, I have come to the conclusion that there is no size so generally satisfactory as half plate. If it is worth while attempting to photograph at all, it is worth while doing one's best to get good results. With a roll film camera and indiscriminate snapshotting, the proportion of decent pictures obtained is miserably small. It is far better to have a half plate camera, with a good lens, to take ordinary glass plates or cut films. A good lens is thoroughly worth the £6 or £7 one must lay out to possess it. When the camera is a well made one, with a Görz lens it is extraordinary what mistakes in time of exposure one may make, without spoiling the picture. Glass plates are in nearly every way much superior to roll films. They are very much easier to develop, fix, and dry. Also as each is separate, each can be treated individually instead of under and over exposed negatives being all treated alike, as in some of the present day daylight developing machines.

A dark room is unnecessary to the amateur photographer, as at night time any ordinary room with the door shut and dark coloured curtains drawn over the window, serves perfectly well. It is a great mistake to take snapshots of landscapes, groups, dead animals, etc., when it is possible to make time exposures. The latter method is as a rule far the most successful, bringing out as it does an infinite amount of detail which is necessarily lost if the exposure is a very short one.

Too much trouble cannot be taken over focussing: here comes in the immense advantage of having a bellows camera with a focussing screen of ground glass. The rough and ready method of measuring the distance from the lens to the object, and then racking the camera till the arrow is at the required reading on the scale, is all too crude. It is far more satisfactory to focus exactly and carefully on the ground glass with a piece of velveteen over one's head to keep out the light. A focussing camera can of course always have a view finder fitted to it, and be used for snapshotting when required. At these times when owing to movement of the object one cannot focus in the deliberate way, the focussing scale at the side should be employed.

For ordinary landscape work very fast plates are unnecessary. "Ordinaries" are on the whole more satisfactory. Of course if there is wind, and the trees, etc., are moving, one must use quick plates, and make very short exposures. Comparatively slow plates are easier for the beginner to work with. It must, however, be remembered that when the scene to be photographed is lacking in contrast, which it very often is, that in order to prevent flatness in the picture, one must make a rapid exposure. A quick exposure accentuates the differences between light and shade; a long exposure reduces contrast.

Glass plates have two disadvantages: they are heavy and easily broken. The cut film has, however, all the merits of the glass plate without the two above drawbacks. The tendency of cut films to frill can readily be prevented by putting them in a weak formalin or alum solution. Cut films are a little more difficult to put into the dark slides than glass plates, and being thinner, an extra card has to be inserted to fill up the waste space.

Useful fitments to have for a half plate camera, are the inexpensive wooden adapters, which permit of quarter plate, or five by four cut films, or glass plates, being used in the half plate dark slides. Negatives are liable to become scratched, so that having obtained a really good picture, it is an excellent plan to give it a coating of the special negative varnish sold by photographers. This gives a hard surface, and makes the plate very much less susceptible to scratching.

Except in very dry weather, prints should be soaked for ten minutes in a solution of formalin, before squeegeeing on to glass or ferrotype. This prevents their sticking. Strength of bath—one part formalin to forty parts water.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.

THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY OF THE WORLD.

A FULL page advertisement further on announces to our readers the interesting and pleasing fact that the Times is coming forward once more to provide Anglo-Indians with a maximum of literature at a minimum of cost.

There are at present in the world some half-dozen books of the first magnitude and highest scholarship. These books every public library must have upon its shelves as a matter of course. To this class belong La Grande Encyclopedie, the Dictionary of National Biography, the New English Dictionary, and the Encyclopaedia Britannica. They are books to which the student naturally turns for the verification of facts, and upon which the general reader relies to increase his store of knowledge. To them we now propose to add THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY OF THE WORLD, a work of epoch-making importance, comparable in scholarship and authority to those just named, but occupying an altogether distinctive field. This world-history includes among its editors and contributors the most authoritative historical writers of the present day. It presents the work of fifteen hundred historians. Its special contributors represent the scholarship of eighteen universities.

The story presented in the twenty-five volumes of THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY displays mankind as making up a mighty pageant of struggling and warring nations. From the dawn of history, five or six thousand years before the Christian era, to the autumn of 1907, there is presented to our eyes the majestic panorama of the birth, growth, and death of nations, side by side with the gradual, ever-widening triumph of civilisation. These twenty-five volumes trace the course of civilisation from Egypt and Babylon, through Greece and Rome, down to the divergent nations of modern Europe, Asia, and America. They describe all the striking events of the world, all its outstanding characters, all its great nationalities. Wars, battles, and military systems, treaties, massacres, revolutions, and conspiracies, great national calamities, crimes and mysteries—these make up the raw material of history and supply its romantic happenings; and in such a work as this they must necessarily be found in proper place.

But this is by no means a history of events only. We see all the great men and women who have shaped history. We have comprehensive descriptions of the nations that gave them birth. Political vicissitude and social evolution also receive attention. Here we have an account of the institutions of all the nations of the world, ancient, mediæval, and modern, European, Asiatic, and American, of their law, finance, and taxation, of their commerce and education, of their exploration and colonisation. Their arts, sciences, literatures, and languages, their buildings, costumes, and implements of peace and war, their philosophies, religions, and social conditions, are all adequately treated, and the text is supplemented by more than three thousand interesting and instructive illustrations. In a word, the life of all the forerunners of our race is re-created before our eyes, and we see the nations of every former age in their habit as they lived.

Nor is the manner of this fascinating narrative any less complete than the matter. All sources, ancient and modern, have been exhausted in order to make THE HISTORY thoroughly representative, thoroughly cosmopolitan, and thoroughly impartial. It is at once original, critical, and comparative in its method, at once romantic and philosophic in its outlook upon the world's affairs. The earliest, most authentic, and most picturesque sources are always utilised for the description of events; the oldest historical writings are supplemented by the latest discoveries in excavation and inscription. The enormous extent of the area covered allows a world-wide scheme of comparative criticism. Empires are compared one with another as to their growth and decline. The great men of all nations are set off by contrast with one another; and the majestic expanse of history is displayed to advantage by the light that is cast upon it from many opposite quarters. Thus country is linked with country, and epoch with epoch. In such a comprehensive work it is not necessary to abide by a single mood, or be limited by the temperament of a single writer. The ordinary historian is romantic or philosophic according as his own individuality dictates his outlook upon life. THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY is both. It is large enough to comprehend both the romantic and philosophic aspects of history, and to embody in itself the best of each.

"THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY OF THE WORLD"

ISSUED BY

(LONDON).

It is not possible adequately to describe this great new work because no description can do justice to its completeness, its scope, its variety, its charm, or to those features of its plan and contents which ensure its lasting utility. Adjectives are cheap and abundant, but not necessarily convincing. Next to an actual inspection of a complete set of the volumes themselves, perhaps the best way to help the reader of this notice to comprehend the nature of the work, is to give a bold outline of its principal features, such as the following:—

A History of 45 Nations and Peoples.

A History of all Peoples—Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians—Ancient Greeks and Romans—Mediæval and Modern Worlds—The Occident and the Orient—Minor Nations of all ages.

Authoritative History.

A History representing the joint scholarship of many Nations—Utilising Monuments and Documents of all Ages—Eye Witnesses and Modern Interpreters—Presenting the Texts of Charters, Treaties, Codes, Constitutions—Subjecting Evidence from every Source to the Searching Tests of Modern Criticism.

A Specimen Volume upon Application.

The offer of the work in this country is made in the conviction that it will most admirably meet the wants of a large number of Anglo-Indians and the better educated Indians. It is a work anyone of whose volumes will exactly suit the man who craves the delight of that intellectual companionship that is inseparable from the reading of good books. It is a work that affords endless enjoyment for the occasional reader, or for the man who can give only the half hour before dinner to a book that will repay him. The long Indian day and the isolation of station life will be made brighter with these well-stored volumes at hand, in which the reader may roam at will over the whole world, or by the aid of which he may review or enlarge his historical studies of an earlier day.

In order to introduce the work quickly, "THE TIMES" will send a complete Specimen Volume to any responsible person, postage paid for delivery to his address, and return to us. The only obligation the applicant will incur is to take reasonable care of the book and to despatch it to us within seven days. In Calcutta, delivery will be by peon.

Important Notice in connection with the above offer.

This Offer is open without restriction to the following persons:—

1. Government Officials, Officers of the Army, Members of the Civil Service, and to Government servants generally on salary of Rs. 100 or over.
2. All other persons whose names are listed in either of the Indian Trade Directories.
3. Land-owners, merchants, teachers, professional men, and other Indians of standing in the community in which they live.
4. Secretaries or other Officers of Libraries, Clubs, Educational Institutions, Service Messes, Reading Rooms, Railway Institutes, or other organisations.
5. Any other person who may satisfy "THE TIMES" of his responsibility.

Formal Application for a Specimen Volume.

(NOTE.—It is not necessary to cut this form, but in sending on an application, its phraseology should be followed.)

"THE TIMES" 6, Dalhousie Square, Calcutta.

Please send without expense to me for delivery or return a Specimen Volume of the "Historians' History of the World." I agree to take reasonable care of it and return it to you within seven days. It is understood that you will send me a stamped label to be used for returning the packages.

.....when on the subject of ammunition there are some special bullets sold by the well-known Gunmakers Messrs. Lyon and Lyon of Calcutta called "Rotary" bullets which can be used with choke-bore barrels and with perfect safety. I speak from experience for I have tried them with my own guns which are full choked in both barrels. The shooting up to 70 yards was good and the wound made by the bullets appalling. I recommend them as most useful to have in one's possession at all events as a stand by in case of accident to a rifle. I had no idea until I tried it that it was possible to make such good shooting from a smooth bore. For close quarters I should prefer a gun, a gun with these bullets to a rifle.

Extract from Lieut.-Col. K. H. Tyacke's revised edition "Sportsman's Manual" 1907.

.....when on the subject of ammunition there are some special bullets sold by the well-known Gunmakers Messrs. Lyon and Lyon of Calcutta called "Rotary" bullets which can be used with choke-bore barrels and with perfect safety. I speak from experience for I have tried them with my own guns which are full choked in both barrels. The shooting up to 70 yards was good and the wound made by the bullets appalling. I recommend them as most useful to have in one's possession at all events as a stand by in case of accident to a rifle. I had no idea until I tried it that it was possible to make such good shooting from a smooth bore. For close quarters I should prefer a gun, a gun with these bullets to a rifle.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

The weather on Saturday was most unkind. The torrential rains during the week had caused floods in low-lying districts, and as hundreds of grounds were completely under water there was a wholesale postponement of fixtures. The exigencies of League football do not admit of idle days if there is the remotest possibility of playing, hence, not withstanding the terrible conditions in some parts of the country, the games were played to a conclusion, in the presence of the smallest crowds of the season. The slump in onlookers was extraordinary, and more than one club had to bewail the fact that a record was set up of an undesirable kind—lowest receipts and paucity of spectators. If the total gate money was comparatively small, the scoring in many cases was high, and the results in several instances have a freakish appearance, the explanation for which must be sought in the curious elemental conditions under which the games were played.

The Southern League.

In the Southern League the determined struggle between Queen's Park Rangers and Plymouth Argyle for the leadership is of absorbing interest, and very much depends upon the holiday programme. Both clubs were again successful on Saturday, and the margin was the same in each case. The most remarkable game in the League, however, was at Bradford, where New Brompton furnished the opposition. The home side early established a long lead, and when at the interval they led by five goals to two, it seemed the Bank of Bengal to an anna that victory would be theirs at the close. The men from Kent, however, rallied in wonderful style, and getting on terms shared the points in a match in which ten goals were registered. Tottenham Hotspur, whose scoring powers in the League this season have been conspicuously absent, no game having been won by a wider margin than a solitary goal, gave a glimpse of their old-time prowess by five times beating the Watford defence without response. Brentford received their usual defeat away from home, and Luton further jeopardised themselves by allowing Bristol Rovers to walk away with the spoils. The Strawplaiters are now footing the table, their nearest companions being Leyton, who have fallen on evil times, but hope to make up a lot of leeway before theNew Year is ushered in.

The League—Division I.

The First Division of the Football League provided a sensation on Saturday of gratifying interest to Southerners. Preston North End had played eight matches at home with only one defeat, and Chelsea had picked up a solitary point in seven away engagements. To add to the gloom of their outlook, the Pensioners had a weakened side, but they were not disheartened. They gave a determined display, in which the distinguishing features were skill and incisiveness, and as a result of their 2—0 victory they jump to the fifteenth place in the table, with such clubs below them as Sheffield United, Nottingham Forest, Middlesborough, Sunderland, and Birmingham. This is unquestionably Chelsea's finest performance of the season, and the win is of priceless value to them, not only because of the points but also because of the effect it will have on the morale of the team in future foreign engagements. Woolwich Arsenal were disappointing in the extreme, their failure to overcome Birmingham being due to inexcusable feebleness in front of goal. Aston Villa did something towards rehabilitating themselves in the eyes of their loyal supporters by winning their first home match for three months, and they put Middlesbrough through the mill in merciless fashion, a half-dozen goals being chalked up against the Teas-siders. Newcastle United were in riotous mood at Liverpool, but Manchester United could only draw against Notts County, and Bristol City had to be content with one point from their game with Blackburn Rovers.

LEAGUE II.

Derby County's form warranted the prophecy that they would be will in the neighbourhood of the top at the close of the tournament if they maintained their all-round excellence. How rapidly they have advanced is shown by the fact that they are now second on goal average, the failure of Hull City on their own ground against Bradford City having deposed them from the leadership, and placed them fourth on the list. Fulham are steadily pursuing their way, and the prospects are now set fair. They are not so favourably placed as the two clubs above them, because they have played more games, but they are doing credit to themselves, and may yet cause many anxious moments to the leaders. On Saturday, visiting clubs had a fair share of honours, the most amazing result being at Chesterfield, where Glossop, who had lost every away game of the season, won by seven goals to three! Clapton Orient could only draw at Homerton with Wolverhampton Wanderers, and unless they are careful they will soon be floundering in the vicinity of the foot of the table.

RUGBY RULES.

With regard to their two important Southern trial games, the committee have been singularly unfortunate in the matter of weather. That between the Universities and the Midlands a little while back was spoiled by drizzling rain, but the conditions at Taunton on Saturday were far worse. Under the circumstances good football, as the term is generally understood, was out of the question, and in a sense the match as a trial was something of a failure. It is, however, important to remember that international matches are often decided under similar conditions, so that the officials had an opportunity of seeing how players with claims to international honours could adapt themselves to the state of affairs. Speaking generally, the men came through the ordeal fairly well, but the handling of the ball was not as clean and certain as is the case with Welshmen, who seem almost at their ease with a wet as a dry ball.

London won by a place goal to 0, and thoroughly deserved their victory. That they were the better side on the afternoon cannot be questioned. Possibly on a more favourable day they would have won handsomely, but on that point opinions may differ. In this connection it may be remarked that the West were beaten at presumably their strongest point—forward. That was the surprise. Whether the Western Committee chose the best pack is possibly a matter open to question; but the fact remains that the scrummagers who were sent into the field failed to hold their own in a purely forward struggle with the London contingent, who were more or less a scratch lot. In view of the international encounters, one must confess to a feeling of disappointment. In the open the West forwards were fast, but they secured most of their openings from the accidents of the game. There was no solid purpose behind their work, and their dribbling was often spoiled by hard kicking. Lyon, the London full-back, frequently being able to get in his kick without any difficulty. The Western forwards dropped a good deal short of expectation, and one could not resist the conviction that one or two were shirking their share of the hard work. Be that as it may, they were worsted. The London scrummagers, as was to be expected, took some time to settle down. They were pushed about and rushed at the outset, but gradually they came together, and in the end became a cohesive pack. That stage having been arrived at, they scrummaged in an intelligent manner, were nearly always in possession of the ball, and dribbled in a manner that recalled the methods of Scotch forwards. They did not come along at quite the same rapid rate as their opponents, but they had a much better control over the ball. It so happened that a centre three-quarter, Lapage, scored the try and placed the goal, but the forwards provided the chance, and fairly won the game. This was about fifteen minutes from the finish.

In such a match the backs naturally came off badly, but as the game was played these of London all round were better. Sibree, who was quite on the top of his form, and Coombs were clearly a better pair of halves than Gent and Davey, though the last-named is a player who may be heard of later. Gent, however, was clearly outclassed. Bennetts and Solomon, the West left wing, were tolerably good, but except in defence had very little chance of displaying their skill. Benefits, however, easily held in check Longhurst, the London right wing, who was lacking in pace—the great essential in a wing three-quarter. The other London three-quarters—Lapage, Birkett, and Lambert—all did well as far as their opportunities permitted them. Between the full backs—Lyon and Wood—there was little to choose. The former kicked with the longer length, but occasionally hesitated in dealing with a rush. Wood, who had more work to do than his rival, saved time after time in a plucky and skilful manner, usually getting in his kick in difficult circumstances, and never once letting down his side.

The dreadful weather on Saturday played havoc with most of the matches. In nearly every case the turf was very sodden, while the high wind upset the football completely. As was only to be expected, most of the work was thrown upon the forwards, and the majority of games became little more than scrambles. There was, however, one notable exception, the London Scottish giving a delightful display against Marlborough Nomads at Richmond. Out-played at every point, the Nomads suffered a crushing reverse, the Scottish running up a score of 7 goals and 7 tries to nothing. With their forwards carrying the scrummages, the Scottish halves were able to open up the game time after time, and the three-quarters—Purves, Walter, Sloan and Moir—made the best use of their chances. Having regard to the boisterous conditions, the place-kicking of Geddes was particularly good, but, of course, several of the tries were gained in easy positions from which to improve. Guy's Hospital retained their unbeaten record, scoring a placed goal and a try against Richmond, who managed to obtain a penalty goal. The match at West Ham between London Welsh and Blackheath had been rather eagerly looked forward to, but it produced very little good football, the ground being all against a scientific display. Thanks to the superiority of their backs the Old Blues gained a creditable victory over Old Merchant Taylors at the Deer Park Richmond. The three-quarters took their passes and tackled in more resolute fashion than the Taylors.

Following up their success against Edinburgh University the Cambridge men, poorly represented, just managed to defeat Edinburgh Wanderers. K. G. McLeod did not play, but Wright scored a try and placed a goal, while the Wanderers could only get over once, and failed to improve. Oxford did not come off so well against Dublin University, being defeated by 2 goals and a try to 1 goal and a try. The match, however, might have ended differently but for an accident to Vassall, who was hurt so badly during the second half that he had to retire. The United Services went to Plymouth with a weak fifteen, and were beaten by 16 points to 5, Peters playing a fine game for Plymouth. A heavy ground and greasy ball caused many blunders on both sides. With several of their best men away, Devon Albion had very little chance of holding their own against Cardiff, and their line was crossed five times, Gabe being in fine form. Gloucester, too, lacked the services of Wood, Gent, and Hudson, but in a rather poor game they just managed to snatch a victory. The Leicester forwards were very strong, and thanks to their good work Leicester led for a long time by 2 tries to nothing. Then Gloucester obtained a goal, while just on time Welchman kicked a penalty goal and so won the match for his side.

ROWING.

With regard to the useless controversy over the presence of the Belgians at Henley this year the following letter to the Editor of The Daily Telegraph will be of interest:—

Sir,—At a meeting of the stewards of Henley Regatta held on the 14th instant, I was requested to forward to the Press a short statement with the object of removing the misconceptions, more or less widely spread, which appear to exist with regard to the resolution passed by the stewards early this year suspending for the year 1908 the rule under which all entries from outside the United Kingdom are accepted, and which suspension will prevent the Belgian Club, who won the Grand Challenge Cup in 1907, from competing at Henley Regatta in 1908.

In March, 1907, the Olympic Council decided to hold an international regatta at Henley in the last week of July, 1908, in connection with the Olympic Games which are to take place in England in that year.

When this became known to the committee of management of Henley Regatta it appeared clear to them that it would be unreasonable to endeavour to hold two international regattas in July, 1908, and that they ought to do all in their power to make the Olympic Regatta "the" international regatta of the year. With this object in view, they decided to recommend to the stewards that entries from outside the United Kingdom should not be accepted for Henley Regatta, 1908. The committee also felt that if such a course was to be adopted it should be settled before the entries were made for the regatta of 1907, so that any club from outside the United Kingdom intending to enter for the regatta of 1907 should be aware that they could not be represented at Henley Regatta in 1908.

The committee, therefore, made the above recommendation to the stewards, who at a meeting held on 4th May (two months before the date of the regatta in 1907) passed a resolution suspending for the year 1908 the rule under which entries from outside the United Kingdom are accepted. This resolution was forthwith communicated to the Press, and was published in the sporting and other papers in this country.

The views of the Belgian Club upon the subject may presumably be inferred from the following letter (translated) of M. Gregoire, the president of the Federation Belge des Societes d'Aviron, a body in Belgium that corresponds to the Amateur Rowing Association in this country, which appeared in "La Vie Sportive," Brussels, on 12th December, and in "La Flandre Liberale," Ghent, on 14th December.

"As you ask my views on the decision of the Henley Committee as far as relates to the year 1908, I tell you frankly that in my opinion the English are perfectly right. In a year like 1908, which will see the Olympic Regatta take place at Henley, and constitute there a world-wide exhibition of oarsmanship, it is not reasonable to hold an international regatta fifteen days previously upon the same course. Moreover, who would have gone there? One can safely say "no foreigners" would have been seen there. The winner at the ordinary Henley Regatta will have no importance as compared with the winner at the Olympic Henley, and one cannot ask an oarsman to make journeys to England twice in one month. I am therefore astonished at the feeling which seems to have been aroused in Belgium at the Henley Committee's decision, the more so as it is quite certain that the Belgian holders of the Grand Challenge Cup would not have any object in going to defend it in 1908. The Grand Challenge has twice been won by our countrymen, and that is enough for the time being. Before we return to Henley (I speak, of course, of the ordinary regatta), we may well wait until the Englishmen come in their turn to take part in our regatta—and I have reason to believe that this will come about sooner than people think—we will consider what course to take with regard to future entries at Henley; but for the present let us not occupy ourselves with anything except the Olympic Regatta at the end of July, where the cream of the whole rowing world will take part, and where Belgium owes it to herself to be largely represented. Besides, the decision of the Henley Committee dates from 4th May 1907, two months, therefore, before the last regatta, and all that can be said against the Englishmen is that they did not at that time inform the Belgian oarsmen. That, however, does not in any way affect the intrinsic propriety of the decision, which I find quite reasonable, and also in conformity with our own best interests.

OSCAR GREGOIRE.

Though the decision of the stewards does not appear to have been known to M. Gregoire, it was known to the Belgian oarsman who competed at Henley in 1907, as the resolution was the subject of conversation at Henley previous to the regatta between some members of the Belgian crew and several of the regatta stewards.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

HERBERT THOMAS STEWARD, Chairman of Committee of Management, Henley Royal Regatta.

CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING.

CAMBRIDGE vs. OXFORD.

History repeated itself in several ways at Roehampton, on Saturday, when Cambridge beat Oxford over the usual seven and a half miles course, as in 1906, by one point only—viz., 27 points to 28 (the lower score winning), and also supplied the first home in E. C. Inman, whose early experience of running was gained up and down the trying Sedbergh hills. Last year he was strongly fancied to finish in the first three, but broke down during the race, and had to be content with the rearmost position. This year by a singular coincidence a somewhat similar misfortune befel Oxford, for R. V. Hodson, of Wadham, who had been running steadily in trial races, injured his ankle a fortnight ago, thereby necessitating a rest. At the water-jump on Saturday his weakened foot gave way, and, instead of figuring, as on form he should have done, in the foremost flight, he hobbled home last, having run the last three miles in considerable pain.

A more exciting contest there has never been. A furlong from home Inman (Cambridge), Worsley (Oxford), and Pearson (Cambridge) were racing almost abreast, these three having not long previously got away from Butler, who made most of the running in the earlier stages. Sprinting grandly, Inman (Cambridge) showed the better turn of speed, and, finishing with a fine burst, breasted the "tape" (which was composed of two Cambridge colours and one Oxford colour, held by Messrs. C. B. Gull, of Oxford, and H. G. Weber, of Cambridge) five yards ahead of Worsley (Oxford), who beat Pearson (Cambridge) (the first man home in 1905) by seven yards, with Butler (Oxford) fourth another 150 yards away. When four men on each side had arrived the scores were equal, at 18 points each, but Hodson (Oxford), who had been leading Pratt (Cambridge) up to the water-jump, lost his place, and Pratt, getting away, secured the victory for the Light Blues. The order of finishing was as follows:—

Posit'n	Name.	School and College.	Time. M.	S.
1	E. C. Inman	... Sedbergh and Caius (C).	45	35
2	J. F. Worsley	... Winchester & Magdal'n (O)	45	36
3	A. H. Pearson	... Westminster & Queen's (C)	45	37 2-5
4	G. S. Butler	... Cheltham and Keble (O)	46	18
5	J. W. Salisbury	... Harrow and Oriel (O)	46	21
6	G. N. Selby Lowndes	... Clifton and Queen's (C)	46	45
7	R. S. Straombe	... Bedf'd Gr. Sch. & Keble (O)	46	55
8	F. G. Swan	... Shrewsb'y & Pembroke (C)		11
9	C. J. C. Pratt	... Tonbridge and Caius (C)	48	19
10	R. V. Hodson	... Cheltenham & Wadham (O)	49	57

The only change in the teams as originally selected was the substitution of Pratt for E. S. Dougall (Tonbridge and Pembroke) on the Cambridge side. Cambridge has now won on eighteen occasions to Oxford's ten, and has also on nineteen occasions supplied the first man home.

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.

MR. BETTINSON took his annual benefit at the National Sporting Club on Monday evening. On such auspicious occasions the beneficiaire is seen at his best, something novel and interesting is staged, something is given which forms a pleasing variety to what one is accustomed to witness at headquarters. Although the well-appointed theatre was hardly so densely packed as on the occasion when the world's featherweight title was in dispute a fortnight back, it was not far short of it. On "Bettinson's Night" even the far-off country member considers it a duty to be present. What the popular manager of one of the greatest of sporting clubs has done for the noble art is beyond measure. Long before winning the English light-weight championship in 1882 he took an active interest in the game, and during the past decade amateur as well as professional boxing has been stimulated by his aid. Mr. Bettinson has been associated with the National Sporting Club ever since its inception, and since he succeeded to the managership, on the death of Mr. Fleming, he has done much to elevate the sport to the high pedestal which it at present occupies. Among the distinguished visitors was Tommy Burns, the world's champion, who was accompanied by Billy Neall, his manager.

Besides three important contests and exhibition bouts between amateur and professional champions, a cinematograph display was given of the last historic battle at the ring. The latter item was intensely interesting, the clearness of the Urbanora pictures of Burns and Moir being the subject of general comment. Other contests of note in which the English champion, Gunner Moir, figured were shown on the screen, and these were followed with much interest.

is a true food and contains Albumen and Fibrine which go to form Blood, Bone, Brain and Muscle. Beef-teas and Meat-Extracts are stimulants only. BOVRIL is liquid life.

The exhibition bouts between the amateur and professional champions were followed very closely, and they served to give one an indication of the form of several of our most prominent amateurs. One of the best bouts was that between Mr. Holmes and Ben Jordan, which was decidedly noteworthy for the number of hard knocks given and taken on both sides. It was no mere exhibition. Mr. Holmes, who had by no means the worst of the deal, came in for a great ovation at the close. Carrying a good deal of weight, Mr. Brewer did not give a sparkling display against the veteran, Jim Styles, but others who excelled themselves were Messrs. Wells, Douglas, Adams, Murdoch, and Warnes.

There was a buzz of excitement when Mr. Bettinson sprung his surprise packet on the audience. Into the ring vaulted Charley Wilson, of Notting Hill, and some minutes elapsed ere his opponent made an appearance. This was no other than Tommy Burns, the champion of all champions. "Gentlemen," said Mr. Bettinson, after stepping into the ring, "I have much pleasure in introducing to you this evening Tommy Burns. He was in the building, and kindly volunteered his [illegible]" Needless to say, the cheering which follow[illegible]ent was great. Before proceeding with [illegible]: "Allow me to thank you one and all [illegible]on you have just given me. I take the [illegible]y of thanking the members of the National Sporting Club for their many kindnesses, and the thorough sporting manner in which they took my victory over their champion. I also seize this opportunity of complimenting Moir on his display against me. A gamer fellow I never met, and I wish him every success in the future." The bout which followed was remarkable for the cleverness displayed on both sides, and the exchanges throughout were of the speediest character. When the fistic celebrities vacated the ring they were vociferously cheered.

Hunting.

KARACHI HUNT.

December 15th.—The hounds met as advertised, at the Bunnia's crossing at 7 A.M. A large field including five ladies, Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Travers, Mrs. Crouch, Mrs. Seabrook and Miss Skelton, turned out. The Master commenced by drawing the orchards and cultivated ground on the opposite bank of the Lyari, but this did not hold a jack, nor did the Guavas. A jack broke away from the far end of Alli's khete, but the hounds, though they were laid on to his line at once, could make very little of it, and it was soon clear to all that we were in for a bad scenting morning. The hounds, hunting very well together, made the most of what little scent there was, and worked out the line to the thick scrub at the foot of the Maggir Pir Hills. Here, the jack was viewed only a short distance in front of the hounds, but so bad was the scent that the hounds could never get on terms with him, until he finally broke across the open. Then, the hounds running him to view almost got him, but he managed to reach the hills with a few yards to spare. Once there, he dodged in and out amongst the bare rocks, which carried no scent. He was soon away over the tops, and the hounds, following him slowly, worked the line out to within ½ a mile of Maggir Pir. There they could make nothing further of it, so were whipped off homewards. The run, which was a slow one, lasted 1 hour 20 minutes.

December 19th.—Another cold dry morning which promised badly for sport, but we were agreeably surprised and had an excellent run. Meeting at the Chokidar's khete, shortly after 7 A.M. the hounds were not long before they found. They rattled their jack at a great pace, hunting well together, and with lots of music. Master Jack set his mask for the hills at the back of the Pan Panjrapol, but being turned by some cattle, he made towards Oomer Dosal khete, over some excellent going. On nearing the khete he turned sharp to the right, and then dropped away down wind back towards Karachi. We finally lost him near the Panjrapol after a capital run of six minutes. Mrs. Graham and Mrs Seabrooke were the only ladies out.

December 22nd.—The hounds met at the New Jail at 7 A.M. A large field turned out, amongst whom we noticed Mrs. Graham, Miss Osborne, Mr. Jackson, Commander Hewett, Major Anderson, Captain Richardson, [illegible]ssrs. Skows Cox, Firlonger, Porteous, Newcommon (of the East Lancs.), Robson, Anderson, Nicoll, Breslauer Stewart, Woodward, G. O. Rosse (R.F.A.), Kennedy, Lawrence, H. Board (24th Regiment), and Hayward. The master drew the orchards and cultivation round the new Jail. It was very thick, and we had some difficulty in finding our way through. The hounds were some time before finding, when they did find they were soon away, and ran at a good pace across the fallow fields along the Maggir Pir road. Swinging to the right, our jack made a line for the Ruined Cottage, and away on across the Lyari. The hounds finally run into him after a nice run of 40 minutes. Watering at Graham's Well, the master then drew the rough scrub near the Ruined Cottage, but, not finding, drew Graham's Spinney. A jack was at home here, but he was a lazy fellow, so the hounds "chopped" him. The hounds did not find again and were whipped off home shortly after 9-30. The feature of the day's run was some hedges, over which some of our leading sportsmen took tosses, but were fortunately none the worse for them, and were soon up and on again. The country is getting very dried up and rain is badly needed. With good Xmas rains, scent and going will be very much improved.

Athletics.

BURMA AMATEUR ATHLETIC ASOCIATION'S SPORTS.

Referee:—Brigadier-General A. B. Fenton, C. B.
Judges:—Lieutenant-Colonel Walter, D. S. O., Captain Annesley, E. P. Marshall, Esq., M. A., R. B. Macdonald, Esq., and H. F. Huddleston, Esq.
Time Takers:—J. Messenger, Esq., M. Foster, Esq., M. A., and C. W. Ainsley, Esq., M. A.
Handicappers:—G. E. Wake, Esq. and A. G. DuBern, Esq.
Clerks of the Course:—Reginald Wrey, Esq., J. M. Sime, Esq., Lieutenant W. K. Intesh, F. F. Hardinge, Esq., and Captain Seale.

THE meeting was held on the 31st December and 1st January, and was successful enough to form matter for congratulation to executive and competitors, but it was a pity entries were so poor: alas for the general wave of slackness which seems to have submerged athletic activity, not only in Burma but in India too, from all one hears! The arrangements were most creditable and some of the results were above Indian standard. The hero of the meeting was that stalwart athlete Lieutenant G. E. Dunsterville—of the Devonshire Regiment—a veritable "chip of the old block," for even in distant Burma those who follow athletics know something of his evergreen father's old time prowess on the running path. Lieutenant Dunsterville won the 100 yards championship, the ¼ and the ½ mile, the hurdles, the 220 yards Handicap from scratch and was third in putting the shot. Of course he carried off the Amateur Championship with the fine total of 48 points. [Very hearty congratulations.—ED.] That sterling sprinter Private F. Brown, of the Devons, annexed the Army Championship with no less than 50 points, two better than last year. This makes the Devons' performance a remarkably fine one. The Schools' Championship went to the High School, Moulmein, and the Native Army Championship to the 91st. Punjabis. Details:—

Cricket.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. H. H. THE MAHARAJAH OF COOCH BEHAR'S XI.—Calcutta had very bad luck in this return match having to take the field at the last minute without Von Ernthausen, Lee, or a regular wicket-keeper, though Hornecastle, who officiated behind the stumps, displayed pluck and considerable promise. Major Hedley appeared for the first time for the Calcutta C. C. and proved that at cricket class must tell even when short of practice. Cooch Behar batted first, but made a a poor start, losing four wickets for 44 run. Vine started with a faulty stroke in the slips, and then ran himself out. Bajana however, soon acquired a complete mastery over the weak bowling, and received good assistance from most of the remaining batsmen especially Prince Victor, whose cricket was attractive though not faultless. Several of the latter players lost their wickets in trying to hit, and eventually the innings closed for 195, Bajana, who hit very hard at times, being not out for 137. He only gave one chance, low down in the slips to Beachcroft when he had made about 45, and he is clearly a very capable batsman. Hedley did much good work with the ball, and would have had better figures if he had met with any support. Calcutta lost four wickets for 56 runs overnight, including that of Eddis who played very good cricket. Next morning Guise and Hornecastle were together for a long spell of tame play and Hechle and Stewart made a short stand for the last wicket, but the total only reached 125, and the Calcutta C. C. had to follow on. This time thanks to a sterling display by Hedley who was only out to a wonderful catch at silly point by Daniell they got up to 141, and nearly played out time. Guise again batted very carefully but it was unfortunate that in his two innings he selected Daniell and Vine as the recipients of two really hard hit catches. Joy, Cox and Salamuddin all bowled successfully for Cooch Behar, and Vine's length was much better than previously in Calcutta, while Stow kept wicket admirably. It was bad luck on the Calcutta C. C. with a depleted team to have to meet the Cooch Behar men strongly reinforced by Stow and Joy, but they ought to have made a better fight than to be beaten by an innings and 29 runs.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

20th December, 1907.

WHATEVER we may do for the "last time" brings in its train something of sadness, something of regret : the last round on a favourite course, the last putt, even the last bunker we find ourselves in are recalled afterwards to our memory, not only by the quality and quantity of the strokes we played, but with a soupçon of pathos, inseparable to that "last"—whatever it may be. So too when for the last time in the year we set to work to do something even the common round (not Golf) the trivial task that same feeling creeps in unawares and bids us look back and ruminate. What has 1907 done for the golfer ? or rather perhaps what has the golfer done in that year of grace ? Some have achieved greatness, but no golfer has ever "had greatness thrust upon him ;" in this particular he differs from the fortunate being Shakespeare had in his mind's eye when he wrote these words. It would be impossible to enumerate all those men and women who have come to the fore during the past 12 months. The world of golf like the snow ball is constantly increasing in size as it revolves and one sometimes wonders to what gigantic dimensions it will eventually arrive. Everything connected with the game is increasing in leaps and bounds : clubs are springing up all over the world, every available bit of coast line, ("links" a waste place by the sea,—an old Anglo-Saxon word being the origin of the word "Links") is being laid out and advertised for golf. Spacious luxurious club houses and hotels grow up like mushrooms on these once bare tracts of country. The adjoining land is quickly offered for sale by impecunious owner or speculative landlord as "desirable building sites," and before one realises it, the waste ground is converted into a miniature town to which the eager London golfer resorts at week ends, on high days and holidays. Why does not some enterprising paper organize a guessing competition as to how many golfers leave the big cities regularly every Friday evening ; it would be far more interesting to golfers than the idiotic Limerick competitions which serve to advertise and swell the circulation of even the oldest established papers. Then let us look at the number of people who are directly or indirectly affected by golf : first and foremost there are the Railway Companies, the majority of these recognising what a powerful factor the game is, issue special fares to bonâfide golfers ; these must reap an enormous revenue from players ; then other means of locomotion are equally affected, a golfer starting off early in the morning with the prospect of a tight match and another in the afternoon would never dream of using up his strength by walking to a station, so a cab or 'bus is requisitioned, thus bringing grist to another mill. Once at the club, he, the player, finds he must fortify himself for the struggle by a drink ; he is beguiled into buying a new brand of ball which Jones swears is the best in the market : he engages a caddy, thus giving employment to a section of society who would otherwise be enjoying a "loaf", at some street corner, or gambling at "shove 'a' penny" on a village green. Think of the thousands and thousands of youths who are saved by the profession of caddying from such an undesirable "occupation"! The golfer and the caddy being merely human require bodily sustenance—beef, mutton, in large quantities—'tis true he requires food even if not playing golf, but the cooking, serving of club luncheons and teas employs a large staff of domestics. The club house of to-day too is such a luxuriously appointed abode that the big furniture repositories must fervently thank some over-ruling deity for sending into the world the golf germ, which produces and reproduces in so prolific a way and assists their own special "line" so materially. There is really scarcely a trade or profession that the Royal and Ancient Game does not benefit—perhaps the Church suffers—but no other. There are three distinct parties—distinct yet in a way united—in the great world of golf—men, women and professionals, and it would be difficult to say which has made most progress in the year to which we are now bidding a reluctant farewell. The motto of all three is "forward" and that each is acting up to this is proved by records and a hundred other signs each year as it glides by into eternity sees vast strides in the great golf movement and 1907 has contributed its fair share. Men are talking seriously of organising some tribunal, equivalent to the Ladies' Golf Union. The Professionals have their successful Association, and among ladies the game has now reached such a pitch, that they have started or are about to start early in 1908 a weekly paper entirely devoted to the doings of the golfing women : all over the world the necessity for this publication testifies to the enormous growth and spread of the game among woman, who number over 20,000 players.

The professional world was awaken to the fact this year that Braid, Taylor, Vardon and Herd, were not to have it all their own way, when a Frenchman, Arnaud Massey bore off premier honours in the Open Championship. An old stager, Mr. "Johnn'e" Ball, proved himself as good as ever and that the old school could hold its own against the brilliant new when he won the "Amateur" again this year. And although in Scotland a new comet dispossessed Miss Dorothy Campbell of her title of "Scottish Champion" yet none of the competitors at Newcastle could prevent Miss May Hezlet from winning the "Open" once more. One could "talkee talkee" on and on, for golf gossip is an inexhaustible topic, but there are a few events of importance taking place even now which deserved brief comment. Chief of these is the much talked of match between Braid and Massey at Deal ; it is the first match the two have fought since the Frenchman won the Open Championship and excited enormous interest. The great fight took place on Thursday, 19th instant, and was witnessed by fully 2,000 spectators. The Cinque Ports Club Links (recently promoted to a championship course) was in splendid order, and the majority of players, certainly those on this side of the channel, were backing the Scotchman. The contest was 36 hole and Massey won by 2 and 1. What further need have we of comments ; the facts speak for themselves : the play was very fine, if anything the foreigner showed better form : perhaps their scores will give a better idea of the excellence of their performance than any details of the game. The morning round resulted in Massey being one down after being 4 down at the 11th. BRAID :—out : 4, 4, 3, 3, 4, 4, 5, 5, 6—36 In : 4, 5, 3, 4, 4, 5, 5, b, 6—42,—78. MASSEY :—out : 5, 4, 5, 3, 5, 5, 5, 5,—41. In : 5, 6, 2, 6, 4, 4, 5, 5, 5,—41—81 Starting 1 down in the afternoon Massey levelled the game by holing out his mashey shot at the first hole ; his approaching throughout the day was superb, and at the turn he stood 2 up. Braid missed a short putt for the 10th hole, but in doing this gave his opponent a dead stymie which the champion negotiated in masterly style, and so on they played a ding dong game until Massey stood dormy 3 ; he, however, lost the 16th from being in the bunker, but a half in 4 at the 17th gave him a splendid hard-earned victory. No one takes a beating better than James Braid and no one is more modest when he pulls off a big event, but the majority of the spectators would have liked to see him victor yesterday, though a defeat in the last green but one in a 36-hole contest is practically no defeat at all.

The afternoon round was as appended :—MASSEY :—Out : 3, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 5, 4, 4—34. Home : 5, 5, 3, 5, 3, 4, 6, 4—35—71. 17 holes.

BRAID :—Out : 4, 4, 5, 3, 5, 4, 5, 5, 4—39. Home : 5, 5, 3, 5, 3, 5, 5, 4—35—74. 17 holes.

The suburban courses just now owing to the recent heavy "seasonable" rains are in a terrible state of mud and casual water, making play anything but enjoyable and swelling the medal scores to an almost alarming extent : there is absolutely no run on the ball, where it pitches there it lies, until it is dug out by a niblick, it is not golf, and as these notes are supposed to refer only to the Royal and Ancient Game, while the mud makes that game impossible for the nonce, I will desist.

DOGS AS DETECTIVES.

HOW THEY ARE TRAINED.

To the International Police Service Magazine, Mr. Raymond Barker of the Sind Police contributes a translation from the German of an article on "The training of police dogs in the tracking of human beings" by Herr Kappe, Commissioner of Police of Neubeim.

Herr Kappe says that as soon as the young dog has learnt to be obedient, to jump over obstacles, and perform other little duties is the time to instruct him in the following of human tracks. A good introduction is training in the carrying of messages, and in this work the dog should be taught to keep his head low. Five or six months is the best age to begin and the young animal should never be tired.

Before the exercise, continues the writer, it is [illegible] minded that some person who is well known to the dog, for preference the trainer himself, should caress the animal, then offer him a piece of meat and, still allowing the dog to see it, walk away in the direction of the wind and over a lawn, while the assistant holds the animal at the leash till the trainer is at first 50 yards, then 100 yards, away, and then has so concealed himself that the dog cannot see him. In this way the dog will be taught to find the trainer by means of the scent because he cannot do so by sight. As soon as he is able to track unaided, the distance should be gradually increased to 3,000 yards and more. This lesson learnt, the assistant goes away and lets the dog find him, commencing again with short distances. He orders the animal back to his trainer, who at first meets the dog in the last portion of the track with encouraging words, and if he returns to him, as the assistant did in the first lesson, rewards him with a piece of meat. As the dog grows sure on short distances the length is increased according to the performance. In case this has not been done before, the assistant should at each errand ostentatiously place in the message-box a note and give the order "off on your errand." It is plain that the person to whom the message is to be taken should be known to the dog, and the animal should before being sent on the errand be placed on his track. Here ends the preliminary exercise in the tracking of men, and now begins the special training.

The next thing is to put the dog on the track of the assistant who has gone off with some article in his hand and at some short distance away places it on his own track and runs back to the trainer.

The dog is then sent out to find the article and bring it to his trainer. Should the animal fail to discover the lost article the trainer goes with him along the track of the assistant up to the object of their search and induces the dog to pick it up and carry it back. The trainer continues the lesson in this way on his own track, so that in the course of a walk accompanied by the dog he drops something and afterwards sends him back to fetch it saying, "Back, fetch the lost article!" As the animal becomes proficient in this he is again exercised on the tracks of the assistant till he grows quite certain on his scent and does not fail.

THE FIRST TEST.

All these lessons should be at first at short distances and against the wind in order to avoid the chance of a failure. As the animal becomes more sure the distance is increased, and finally the assistant should proceed with the breeze in order to train the animal to work under all circumstances. Should the dog still not readily follow the track he must be persistently exercised till he quickly obeys the order to go to the assistant. After this the assistant should make an attack on the trainer, and when the latter excites the dog to protect him, the former should take to his heels, if possible unseen by the animal, to a distance of, say, 100 yards and conceal himself so that he is not visible to the dog. Then for the first time the trainer releases the dog and sets him to follow the assistant with the words "off catch him!" The trainer follows. When the dog has traced the assistant who should be a stranger, the latter must, with the help of a cane, keep the former off so that he cannot get hold of him but is forced to circle him barking or to stop him till such time as the trainer appears. Should the dog be inclined to leave him the assistant should follow striking the ground, not the dog, with the cane in order to attract the animal's attention to himself wholly. As soon as the trainer turns up, the dog should be excited to renew his attack till he again stops the assistant. Then the trainer chains the animal and takes the assistant back to the place where the affair started, preferably in a house. During this journey the assistant should be given an opportunity of a chance to escape, and by unleashing the dog and by his tracking and stopping the fugitive the flight should be frustrated.

The animal should be exercised each time on the track of a different and strange assistant who should hide himself sometimes in a bush, sometimes in a hollow, and even climb up a tree, so that the dog learns to find the person no matter where he conceals himself. The climbing of a tree should however, not be resorted to till the dog has been accustomed to tracking by the scent. A dog being trained in the following of human tracks often, certainly for the first time, passes the tree on which the assistant sits only to return scenting out the track or to stand fast undecided whether the man has retraced his steps or taken a turn. As soon as he finds that this is not the case he again appears at the end of the track and searches in the lower part of the tree with redoubled ardour till a favourable breeze blows the scent of the person he is after to his nose and betrays his presence. Eager dogs bark on this discovery, but the trained animal hunts silently. When the dog growls at the man on the tree the latter should fire a blank charge at him in order to accustom the animal to fire-arms. At first the charge of powder should be small so that the detonation may be slight, but it should be gradually increased as the dog becomes more used to stand fire.

TEACHING CONFIDENCE.

Another point to be remembered is that the trainer should in the beginning be present when the dog is fired at with a view to giving the animal more confidence. As the dog acquires this confidence, the trainer must keep at a distance increased always gradually. It is a very good thing to give the assistant a bundle of sticks, each about two feet in length sharpened at one end while the other is painted white. If the assistant takes a turn or climbs a fence he sticks one of these sticks to the ground and bends it in the direction he is taking. This will give the trainer who follows the track with the dog a means of checking the direction taken by the animal, although it is not always the best dog that runs closest to the track. On a fair day it is not unusual for the dogs to follow the track at a distance of 50 yards and more under the wind. When the sticks have answered the purpose for which they have been placed on the ground they should be taken up in order not to cause a mistake on another occasion. They are unnecessary if the dog has learnt to follow the track for a great distance and possess confidence in himself. He quickly learns to rely on himself and, as already remarked, to go back on the track if he has overshot it. One should on no account assist the animal if he is endeavouring to find the track. It is above all very important that the police dog should be confident. The ground should often be changed. It is not recommended that the dog should be permitted to work in the same place where he has on a former occasion been exercised.

NEVER TO USE HIS EYES.

The assistant may have for some reason, to avoid a herd of cattle, left the track arranged on. There is no greater mistake than to call the dog off the right track. A well trained dog relies entirely on his sense of smell and does not see the assistant till he smells his body or runs up against him. In order to avoid the possibility of the dog falling into the bad habit of using his eyes the assistant should always conceal himself at the end of his wanderings so that the dog will discover him by the sense of smell only. I consider it a very good thing if the police dog is taught to track while held in leash. Nevertheless, if the animal is proficient in tracking and is in the habit of doing so loose, it is not advisable to use a collar. Better than this is a strap with a hook right behind the shoulders, where it is fastened to the line.

From the preceding, one can easily answer the second question. "What points must the trainer of a police dog observe in the tracking of criminals, lost persons, etc.!" He must give the dog the scent of the person to be traced, and must endeavour to put him on the right track. This should not be too much effaced by the tracks of other persons. Should the track owing to the heavy traffic not be traceable in the place where the person last stopped the dog should be allowed to scent round about till he finds the track and takes it up.

If the track for a great distance follows a much frequented road and we can judge the direction taken, the animal should be set to scent along the edge of the road where the party has most probably left it. If the track is not picked up on this side the same should be done on the other. One should not search along one side for more than one to two thousand yards and then proceed along the opposite side before going further.

Should one not be able to judge the direction taken, the road must be followed by the dog up one side and back again up the other. This probably means that the road has to be followed for a distance of 10,000 yards both ways. The thorough search of the road by the dog should not be hindered by the impatience of the trainer. The calmer and more far-sighted the latter is, the surer will the dog be.

If the person followed has made use of a conveyance and has in this passed over the portion of the road which is being searched, the dog will, if the scent has not been quite destroyed by continual traffic, obtain a trace of it in the wind at one of the two sides of the street and will follow it. A trained dog should often, at least once a week, be exercised in these difficult cases in order always to have him capable of tracking under any circumstances, and to keep him constantly in training. This is self-evident if the animal is to be useful when required for actual work.

In conclusion, I will not dare to say that each person will have equally good work with equally well trained dogs. In order to solve such difficult problems as the tracking of human beings with the assistance of a police dog one must note—first, that the dog and the trainer are well-known each to the other; secondly, that the trainer is able to handle the animal with skill. That person will have the best result who has himself trained the dog. I therefore recommend that each one work with his own dog.

THE TOLLYGUNGE CLUB SHOW.

A goodly company mustered at Tollygunge on New Year's Day on the occasion of the thirteenth annual show held by the Club, including among them Lord and Lady Minto, Lord Kitchener, Sir Andrew and Lady Fraser, the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, Maharaj Adhiraj of Burdwan, etc., etc., and, though the show was distinctly below the average, a pleasant enough day was spent in the pretty grounds and people seemed to enjoy themselves. The polo ponies made the best show of any class, as there was not only a large number of competitors, but they were also of a high standard, and judging among the first few was a matter of extreme difficulty. The first prize among the Walers and English ponies eventually fell to a sturdy weight-carrying but extremely handy and clever light bay English mare owned by H. H. the Maharajah of Jodhpore, which was run very close, however, by a chestnut Australian mare of Captain Learmouth's. Jodhpore also scored in the Arab class with a clever grey entire. The double harness horses though few in number were distinctly good, Mr. Galstaun's chestnuts, Lord and Lady Batty, only just securing the first prize from a pair of handsome blacks of Lord Kitchener's, and special mention must be made of Lieutenant-Colonel Lloyd Jones' magnificent trapper, Cheriton Model, a glorious English bay hackney of the famous Motel breed, who won first prizes in the single harness class 14-1 and under and for the best complete turnout. It was in the jumping that the greatest falling off was apparent, as the greater number of the competitors made a very poor show at the ridiculously simple obstacles, which they were asked to negotiate, and Mr. Barrow's Pack, who won among the ponies, was the only animal in the two classes who shaped really well. Mr. Ismay's Day and Night being a pretty jumper, but by no means perfect at the game. Many of them failed to negotiate the 1 -foot water jump successfully and if it had been at all deep there would have been a good deal of grief. The late hour at which the competition was held may have had something to do with the poverty of the performances, as the shadows were across the jumps in a fashion that may have been somewhat puzzling to the animals. After the jumping there was the usual parade of winners, and then Lady Minto distributed the prizes.

Appended is a list of the prize winners:—

THE BUZZARD EAGLES.

To those who would expect a large bird, from the name, a disappointment is in store, for in the genus "Butastur" comprising in all four species, of which only three are Indian, the size is small, scarcely exceeding that of a crow.

Why this genus should have "Eagle" tacked on, is hard to say, for it in no way resembles any of the true Eagles and the only genus it is in any way allied to, viz., "Circaëtus" is an "Eagle" only in name and size and nothing else. In habits the "Buzzard-Eagles" are not unlike the genus "Buteo" or Buzzards sitting perched on a telegraph pole or a tree, beside the road side or cultivation watching for rats and insects on which they prey to a great extent. They seldom appear to hurry themselves and generally fly down quietly from their tree, secure the prize, whatever it may be and then fly back to the same spot whence they started.

The White eyed Buzzard-Eagle (Butastur Teesa) is among the commonest of birds of prey in Northern India away from habitation. Not that he is wanting in stations, for he may be found in the middle of a cantonment or in one's garden, but in such places he could hardly be called common. It's along the railway line, that this species is most often met with and everybody in India, who has done much travelling, must be familiar with the bird if not with his name. On the same wire may often be seen a couple of mynahs, two or three doves, a green bee-eater or two, the ubiquitous kingcrow and last, but not least, on the pole itself the White-eyed Buzzard-Eagle.

Being slow on the wing, he stands no chance of catching any of the smaller birds, who in consequence take no more notice of him than they do of a vulture. That he would love to catch a bird occasionally for his dinner, is proved by the fact of his coming down to a bird, tied behind a net, as soon as he sees it, but I suppose experience has taught him, that it is of no use his trying to catch one in its wild state and in full possession of its wing, and feathers and consequently he never tries.

In February and March, just before the breeding season, these birds may frequently be seen, soaring high up in the heavens and giving vent to their plaintive call and might be taken for falcons if it was not for their much more rounded wings. When at a height, their breasts appear dark and their wings (lower surface) very light and silvery.

In its adult stage, "Butastur Teesa" cannot be mistaken for any other hawk or falcon owing to its irides which are pure white. In the nestling the eyes are dark grey but grow lighter, and lighter till about the breeding season, i.e., when a young bird would be 9 months old they turn quite white with pale brown or yellow streaks in some specimens.

Though the foot and tarsus in "Butastur" resembles "Circaëtus," the chief difference lies in the scales in front of the tarsus in "Butastur" being much larger than those behind, whereas in "Circaëtus" they are of much the same size, at the back as in front. Whereas the inner and outer toe, without claw, in "Circaëtus" are of an equal length, in "Butastur" the inner is a little longer than the outer.

In size of course there is a vast difference; the largest species of Butastur not exceeding 18 inches.

The feet are a dirty yellow, very rough and the claws and toes frequently covered with mud. The colour generally varies from dark to light brown, the breast with dark shafts and banded with white becomes lighter on the abdomen and thighs. A buff patch at the back of the head and chin and sides of face white with three distinct black stripes, one on the chin and one on either side.

"Butastur Teesa" is widely distributed throughout India in suitable localities, but wanting in the Himalayas and Ceylon. "B. Liventer," the Rufous-winged Buzzard-Eagle, which is smaller than "B. Teesa" not exceeding 15·5 inches in length, is more rufous above than the former, has yellow eyes in the adult and bill and cere orange, is a native of Burma, Siam, Borneo etc.

"B. indicus" the Grey-faced Buzzard Eagle is found in the Celebes, Malay Peninsula and the Phillipines and has been recorded from Tenasserim. Resembles "B. Teesa" in size and differs in having broad dark cross-bands on the tail which is brown. In "B. Teesa" the cross-bands are narrow or wanting and tail tinged with rufous.

KITES.

THE BRAHMINY KITE. (Haliastur Indus).—The Brahminy Kite is to the Fish Eagles and Kites, what the Lammergeyer is to the True Eagles and Vultures, that is, it forms a link between them and is allied to both and like the Lammergeyer is a more gaudily plumaged bird than any of the species to which he is related. This bird is well distributed throughout India, in well watered tracts or near rivers, but is seldom found either in forests or dry parts of the country. There is but one representative of the genus known to inhabit India, and in Bengal and Southern India is perhaps one of the best known birds of prey, but is rare in Northern India during the winter, though common in the summer. His pure white head and breast and maroon wings are a familiar feature of the landscape, near every river, marsh or tank. He lives on fish, frogs, snakes and offal, but is not averse to attacking a small bird in difficulties.

Whereas the true kites are much too suspicious to be caught in a net, as a rule and if they see a rat or a bird tied to the ground they almost invariably sail over the place first and so see the nooses or net as the case may be and will not approach, the Brahminy Kite generally throws caution to the winds and no sooner it sees the bait makes straight for it. In parts of Madras this bird is said to bring good luck to those who see it the first thing in the morning and, if so, what a lovely spot Madras must be to live in, where one can't fail to have as much "good luck" as one can desire, for being about the commonest bird there, only a blind man can help but see at least one every half hour! Though smaller than the true kite, this is a more robust and generally stronger bird with short strong legs and well developed talons. It, like the kites, is given to swooping its prey off the ground in its talons and frequently robs crows and even kites of their tit bits. Though the plumage of the adult bird is unmistakable, resembling no other bird and very conspicuous, the immature dress is not unlike that of an ordinary kite at some distance, except that it has much more light coloured feathers in it and altogether a more particoloured appearance. The tail, too, is not so long as in the kites, rounded and never forked. In the second moult the bird gets a more rufous tinge but does not attain the full adult plumage till after the third moult. It breeds in trees, laying two eggs, greyish white, slightly spotted with brown.

THE TRUE KITES (Milvus).—The kites as a genus, are too well known in India to require any sort of description, every town in India, every railway station and almost every village, has its quota of kites sailing gracefully overhead and constantly giving vent to their shrill whistle, particularly during the breeding season. The long forked tail is sufficient to identify a kite by at any distance, and even if this useful appendage is cut short or wanting, as is sometimes the case, there is no mistaking the characteristic flight.

I have frequently been asked to describe the flight or explain how a bird can be identified at some distance, but to see for one's self where the difference lies is one thing to explain it in so many words, is quite another. Every genus, and nearly every species, has some peculiarity, or two or three characteristics taken in conjunction, which at once give away the identity of the bird, but nothing but experience and careful watching will teach one to recognise a bird by its flight at once. In several cases the flight may be identical, but in one case a square short tail and in another a long rounded or wedge-shaped one or in one, short rounded wings and in another long pointed ones will give the clue, which will separate them. Or again some characteristic bar or band on the wing or tail as in the case of the Crested Serpent Eagle and lastly the general colouring or size are all factors one instinctively takes into account, but to attempt to go into details of each species, would fill a couple of volumes and then leave the reader no further advanced, unless he has had some experience previously.

The flight of Kites, however, though light and graceful, when once well on the wing, strikes one as being somewhat constrained. The wings usually appear to be slightly bent from the last joint and are not straight as in the case of most birds of prey. Again the wings are held low, giving it an appearance of having stooping shoulders if one might use such a simile.

The three species of "Milvus" to be found in India are "M. Govinda," the common Pariah Kite, "M. Melanotis," the Large Indian Kite, and "M. Migrans" the Black Kite. These three species all resemble each other very closely, but "M. Melanotis" may be identified from "M. Govinda," firstly in being of larger size, the wing in "Melanotis" measuring over 19 inches in the male to 21·5 inches in the female, whereas in "M. Govinda" in the female it will not exceed 19·5 inches and in the male would be a couple of inches less. "M. Govinda" is the common kite of India to be found everywhere in the plains, and "Melanotis" being a shyer bird is not so often found near habitation as is the other, though fairly common in the Himalayas, ascending to considerable altitudes. "M. Melanotis might also be distinguished from the first named by a large white or whitish patch visible on the undersurface of the wing when flying and made by the inner webs of the quills which are white. "M. Migrans" is only known from the environments of Quetta and has not been found elsewhere in India. It can be separated from the other two "by having the edges of the feathers on the crown and nape whitish instead of light brown or rufous, and by the more distinctly ferruginous colour of the abdomen."—(BLANFORD.)

THE BLACK WINGED KITE (Elanus caeruleus).—This pretty little bird, though allied to the Kites, does not in the least resemble any of them in either colouring or habits. Though met with in almost every part of India from Peshwar to Ceylon, excepting in the Himalayas or mountainous forests it is by no means very common anywhere. Generally single it may at times be met with in pairs flying over thin scrub jungles, cultivation or over grassy plains or sitting on a tree overlooking such places. Like the Kestrel it is given to hovering a great deal and resembles a king fisher in the way it will stay stationary in the air for a few seconds, then if it sees nothing to drop after it will fly forward a short distance and hover again and so from one part of a field or plain to another, like a king fisher over a stretch of water.

When flying this bird appears dark above and white below, with only the tips of its wings black, not unlike a male Hen Harrier, but is much smaller. In reality the back and upper parts are a light ashy grey. The eyes in adults are a bright crimson and in the young yellow and feet and legs yellow.

It is said to have no fixed time for breeding and eggs have been taken at all times of the year in different localities.

It builds in trees, laying three to four eggs, much blotched and spotted with brownish red. This kite only measures about 13 inches in length with a wing of from 10 to 11 inches.

EXILE.

A conceited young parson was in the habit of fishing for compliments upon his preaching. After the delivery of a sermon, of which he seemed more than usually proud, he was told by one of his hearers—who was heartily disgusted with his long-winded discourses, and sick of his vanity—that there was a passage at the end of his sermon of which he highly approved. "What passage" inquired the parson. "Your passage from the pulpit to the vestry-room," was the reply. His reverence collapsed.

"Did you ever see Irving" asked a charming young lady of a toothpick "swell" at a recent ball. "Yaas. Deuced fine singer, Irving! Heard him at the opera lots of times last season," was the astounding reply.

"From the bottom o' my 'eart I pities yer," was the evening 'bus-driver's final sally at the brewer's drayman, as the break-up in the traffic block permitted him to proceed. It must be simply ruddy awful to have a mouth for beer like your'n an' nothin' but empty barrels all round yer!"

Peter Blobbs had been gushing so much over fine old Christmas and New Year's observances that the little woman thought she would hang up her stocking. "And what do you think Santa Claus will put in it?" she pleadingly asked. "Nothing prettier, my love, than it usually contains." Pretty—sweetly pretty—but mean and artful to a degree.

12 Kt to Q 5 check, afterwards taking the Queen.

The issue of this interesting variation is disputed. Some hold that Black can extricate the Knight, and that his pieces more than counterbalance White's Queen: others maintain a different view.

(e) Losing a piece and the game. The only move was to take Knight with Rook.

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 47.

A has evidently led from the king, 10, 8 of hearts, and if Z wins trick 1 with the knave or 9, will be able to block Y's only card of entry for the club suit. Z must therefore win with the ace and lead out the king of clubs, followed by a heart. Playing in this way he makes certain of winning the game unless five clubs are held in one hand against him in which case he has still a chance of doing so by finessing the queen of spades.

Problem No. 48.

Y's HAND (Dummy).—Hearts, 6, 5, 3; diamonds, 9, 4, 2; Clubs, ace, king, queen, 3, 2; spades, 4, 2.

Z's HAND (Dealer).—Hearts, king, jack, 8, 7; diamonds, king, queen, 3; clubs, jack 4; spades, king, jack, 6, 5.

THE MOTOR UNION AS AN INTERNATIONAL BODY.

The latest colonial organisation to affiliate with the Motor Union of Great Britain and Ireland is the Perak Motor Union, in the Federated Malay States. The officials of the newly-affiliated body have asked for particulars of the car badge for considerate drivers.

Colonial Clubs which have affiliation agreements with the Motor Union are the A. C. of the Transvaal, the A. C. of Ceylon, the A. A. of Bengal, and the Motor Unions of Western India and Perak.

Individual members of the Motor Union of Great Britain and Ireland are to be found in India, Transvaal, France, Canada, United States, British Columbia, Italy, Egypt, Germany, Straits Settlements, Cape Colony, Sweden, Argentina, Ceylon, Natal, Holland, Nova Scotia, New Zealand, China, Orange River Colony, New South Wales, Russia, Gold Coast, Cyprus, Switzerland, Chili, Japan, Belgium, Jamaica, Gibraltar, Soudan, Malta, Crete, Denmark, Spain, Southern Nigeria, Queensland, Pondoland, South Australia.

The Motor Union is in membership with the Ligue International des Associations Touristes, which is engaged in operations designed to remove annoying regulations which hinder touring. In response to a resolution passed at this year's congress, the Motor Union is endeavouring to secure in the new Motor Car Act a clause providing that cars arriving from abroad with sufficient means of identification may be permitted to register the identification mark already on the car for a period of three months, in lieu of having to obtain the ordinary registration plate. Application is also to be made to the Inland Revenue in favour of not demanding the carriage tax from foreign visitors staying in Great Britain for three months.

MOTORING MEMS.

Paris to Paris by New York.

Among the cars which attracted most attention at Olympia were those which successfully accomplished the wonderful journey from Pekin to Paris. That test of the reliability and adaptability of the modern motor car now bids fair to be surpassed by a trip which our Parisian contemporary Le Matin is organising. This is a tour from New York to Paris by land, viâ Chicago, Klondyke, Alaska, the Behring Straits (which will be crossed on the ice) and Siberia.

Levassor.

The monument erected in memory of M. Emile Levassor, the principal founder of the French automobile industry, and partner in the firm of Panhard and Levassor, was unveiled on Tuesday, 26th November, by Baron de Zuylen, President of the Automobile Club of France. The monument forms a facade of the Porte Maillot, Paris, and, in spite of the rain, a large crowd of motorists assembled to witness the ceremony. In unveiling the monument, the Baron referred to M. Levassor as the founder of the French automobile industry, and other speakers spoke of him in eulogistic terms, a letter of appreciation being received from Herr Maybach, a German pioneer. The statue represents M. Levassor's triumphant return to Paris in the Paris-Bordeaux-Paris race of 1905. He is seen applying the brake, while cheering crowds surround the car.

New Highways for London Motorists.

We are in a position to state that an application will be made to Parliament next Session for powers to construct a new trunk road from London westwards, for the exclusive use of mechanically propelled rubber-tyred vehicles.

The object is to provide a means of reaching the main western roads without traversing the tortuous and narrow streets outside the metropolis.

The proposed road will lead from Latimer Road, Shepherd's Bush to about two miles east of Datchet. It will run due West to East Acton, over the Great Western Railway, and alongside the line to Perivale, and then via Greenford, Hayes Bridge and Dawley, to the Bath Road, close to Dutton Park.

Another and similar proposal is also to be submitted to Parliament next year. By this scheme two roads, one commencing at Beadon Road, Hammersmith, the other at Glenthorne Road, Hammersmith, would join at Burfield Street. From that point the road would run close to the Chiswick Park Station, Metropolitan Railway, and through Turnham Green and Slough to the Bath Road, which it would join near Datchet.

Can they Pay?

It is quite another question, however, as to whether such projects are feasible or profitable. The initial outlay required to purchase the land for a sixty-foot motor way out of London, and to equip it as a high-speed motor-way would be enormous, and it would be hard to conceive that any profit could be made on such a capital sum by the tolls paid by motorists. The weak point about all these projects for special motor roads is that they secure no monopoly in routes for the promoters. Every motorist is at liberty to follow the existing and toll-less routes, and if too high a toll is placed on the motor route, it will be patronized only to a small extent.

Nearly 1,000 Miles at less than ¼ d per Mile.

The actual cost of motoring depends very much upon the driver. However good a car, given a bad driver, it will be found to be an expensive hobby. If, however, a man is careful, it will be found that the expenses are very low, and when the cost and the service are compared with those of ordinary vehicles the expense will be found to be very low indeed.

We have before us now some interesting figures relative to the upkeep cost of a 9 h.-p. Cadillac, fitted with a single cylinder engine. The car was privately owned. The following is the summarised table:—

Average length of time the cars have been owned is 1 year, 7 months, 20 days.
Total mileage of the 160 cars dealt with, 1,555,427.
Average mileage per car, 9,601.
Average petrol consumption, 21,895 miles per gallon.
Average cost of repairs per car, £8-15-11.
Average cost of repairs per car per week, 2s 8d.
Average cost of repairs per passenger per 100 miles, 6.035d.

Thus the average cost of maintaining a single cylinder Cadillac has been about 10,5d. a month, the times of use embracing periods of from 1 to 4 years, and the average cost per mile per car has been less than ¼d.

Chukker.

A young lady had just been shown through a garter-factory.

"Heavens!" she exclaimed; "ninety million pairs in one year! I don't see where they all go to."

"Neither do I," replied the young man, colouring slightly.

At Spa, some years ago, a great deal of excitement was caused at the gaming rooms by the appearance of a visitor who never failed to win. For a fortnight he had a wonderful run of luck at faro, and his appearance was always awaited with a certain amount of interest. So short-sighted was the lucky player that he was obliged to place his face near the counters when placing them on the card he had selected to back, and in order to aid his failing vision he wore a pair of spectacles.

At length the fortunate gambler announced his intention of leaving Spa, and the last night of his visit arrived. During the early part of the evening the stranger as usual won, and a half-drunk Irishman, who had "touched unlucky," was extremely wrathful at the success of his vis-a-vis, and began to abuse him.

"You old——!" he eventually cried, "I'll try my luck in your spectacles," and suiting the action to the word he seized them.

At first he failed to discern anything. By placing his face near the cards, however, he eventually discovered the glasses were powerful magnifiers, and, turning to ask the owner why this was so, found he had disappeared. Then a startling discovery was made. Included in the pattern on the back of each card was a small number with a sign indicating the suit, which could only be detected by the aid of magnifiers.

All proprietors of gaming tables go to Leipzig Fair every autumn, and the previous year a man had been selling cards of good quality there at low prices, so that all the neighbouring towns were full of them. It was conclusively proved that the vendor was none other than the successful gambler slightly disguised. But for the accident which led to his detection he would undoubtedly have broken most of the Spa banks—as it was he decamped with several thousand pounds.

ACADEMIC FENCING.

THOSE who are interested in fencing,—and the number in these days is much larger than it was ten or fifteen years ago,—will be interested in the remarks which Mons. Goemaere some time ago addressed to Mr. Charles Hancock on the methods which have crept in with the increasing popularity of the foils. Mons. Goemaere is a recognised authority on fencing and his observations on the contest as now conducted prove the genuineness of his views. "Sport in these competitions," he writes, "is nothing more than a name. What do these championships make for, if not for the sacrifice in my view of the most elementary principles of fencing with the object of 'touching' no matter how? I can understand that 'touches' are regarded as valid no matter where: but when it comes to no matter how, I venture to think this should be held inadmissible where there is any pretension to sport in the highest sense of the term." We need not be experts to take Mons. Goemaere's point: it is obvious to all who have ever looked on at a bout of fencing conducted under modern principles; and the Belgian authority has in his eye those who presume upon the artificial nature of their weapons and seek to score the hit that counts by any means. Without doubt many a hit fairly given and fairly credited to the fencer under existing rules would do little towards disabling an adversary or impairing his fighting power if inflicted with a rapier or sword with sharp point or edge; but inasmuch as it is quite impossible to measure the effects which any hit from a foil would produce except for the button, it is necessary to count each and every hit as of equal value. Hence it has come about that fencers, more anxious to score points than to preserve the traditions of the game, have acquired the habit of touching "no matter how." Mons. Goemaere does not object to awarding points for a hit "no matter where;" his reason no doubt is that a hit on any part of the body or limbs might, with the fighting weapon, disable the adversary or at any rate handicap his further endeavours; but when he objects to scoring hits made by methods which no sane man would employ were he fighting a duel in earnest he ought to have the support of all who wish fencing to be preserved as an exercise of skill. The Belgian expert asks what is the result of the system of awarding points for the hit scored anyhow with the innocuous weapon; and answers his own question. "The swashbucklers (or perhaps the word ferrailleurs in this connection were better rendered 'hammer and tongs men') take advantage of it (the knowledge that they cannot hurt or be hurt) to rush upon their adversary and belabour him. There is no real fighting." Carry the hammer and tongs method to its logical conclusion and the art of fencing would disappear altogether. Mons. Goemaere is a clear-sighted man of innate sporting instincts; he is a sincere admirer of the elegancies of fencing, but he also sees the objections to artificialism. As he says it may be conducted in one of two ways: either as though the competition were a serious duel in which everything likely to accomplish the desired end is admissible, or according to the conventions which have grown up about the sport of fencing as a pastime of pure skill. If the fencing competition is to be conducted on the former lines, imitating as closely as possible the conditions of a duel to the death, then it is obvious that we must dispense with the conventions which fencers of scrupulous taste piously observe and the hammer and tongs school misuse for its scoring advantage. We must away with them all: as Mons. Goemaere says, for example, "would you keep your left hand in your pocket on the field of battle? of course not." The old school of fencers knew but one method and that one was comprehensive; it permitted everything that would give an advantage or the user thought might give an advantage. To such an extent was license carried among the early Italian fencers that the highest authorities recommended the duellist if he had the chance to kick his adversary or strike him in the face with the small buckler he held in his left hand whose legitimate purpose was to parry! Under the conditions observed in 16th century Italian duelling we gather that a man might "ram" his toe in the stomach with his head if he thought he could do it without getting the steel through his own back. It was of course idle to try and bind duellists, bent each on taking the life of the other by rule or convention: by admitting this as fair and the other as unfair. It might have afforded a dying duellist a thrice melancholy satisfaction to be told by his seconds that the other man had "won on a foul:" but the fact would do nothing to affect the fatal result.

Modern hammer and tongs methods are refined and elegant by comparison with those which permitted everything; but they are in fact evasions of the spirit of rules; and we may sum up the whole matter with the truism that rules must be obeyed in spirit as well as in letter if fencing is to be a sport or to be a pastime for sportsmen. Its conventions and artificialities are necessary to its preservation as an exercise of skill and must be as scrupulously observed as the heat of combat permits. Mr. Hancock not obscurely hints that the Belgian expert is counsel of perfection, observing that the academic system is particularly difficult to observe with loyalty when the small sword is the weapon in hand. This we can well understand: the difficulties with which the umpire or jury has to deal in a smartly fought bout are so great that much has to be left to the honour of the combatants, and while human nature remains what it is, there will always be men who do not scruple to cross the very fine dividing line between the legitimate and profitably dubious.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

So it appears that steeplechasing is not all over for this season after all; the Stewards are endeavouring to meet the wishes of the public by holding an extra day at Tollygunge on 6th February, a bank holiday, and it is to be hoped that there will be a generous response to the invitation. Considering the large numbers starting in the Amateur hurdle races in the Monsoons it has been a matter of considerable surprise that the fields in the Hunter class at Tollygunge have been so poor this season. The reason is probably that the presence of such performers as Pretender, Lord Harry, Pathfinder has frightened away the small fry and a race for hunters that have never won Rs. 400 or over might fill better. Possibly too the fact that we are in the thick of the paperchasing season may have something to do with it, and animals are reserved strictly for chasing purposes that might otherwise be having a dash for fame and stakes.

The second meeting opened with a first-class day's racing, and though five favourites got home the ring had a healthy day as a good many horses were backed in each race. In the first meeting and steeplechase settlement there were some sensational wins and losses and the unfortunate and much-abused books have the pleasure of paying in the one case without always receiving in the other. It is hard on the bookmaker when punters who owe large sums express their entire inability or unwillingness to pay. They are no doubt posted in due course, but this is poor satisfaction to the pencillers who have their living to make like other people. This sort of thing is of course responsible to a great extent for the comparative meagreness of the odds and if they always got paid the layers would be able to stretch their figures considerably. However, there seems to be no immediate prospect of the racing millennium and we must be content to take things as they are.

With a huge programme to get through the fun started at the early hour of 2 P.M. on Saturday with a hurdle race for which a very good field went to the post. The public all thought that Marmalade III. had not been penalised anything like enough for her former success and made her a very hot favourite at 5 to 4 on, a surprising price for a jump event with so many starters. However she fully justified the confidence reposed in her and at the home turn had her field comfortably beaten. The outsider of the party Lamrock, who has come on a lot lately, made a great rush at the finish, but though Bond rode a clever race on him he had no earthly chance with the English mare at the handicapper's allotment.

Son of a Gun was most liked in the Scurry Handicap, but he would not go up to the gate and getting a bad start his whole energy was expended in catching up to his field in the first two furlongs, after which he was beaten and that smart country-bred Fortune was able to win with ease.

Florrie was the one only for the big pony event, and getting well out of the gate she was soon so far away from any of them that Barrett thought he could safely ease her up as she passed the Monsoon enclosure, but it was a dangerous move as Melsom brought Mandeville out with a great dash and all but caught the favourite on the post, Wild Boy getting third.

The divided January Handicap gave a win to the favourite in each group, Dunsinane scoring in the first half and Lipscombe in the second, though in both races there were lots of others well backed. Pure Gold ridden by Mr. Galstaun ran Lipscombe to a half length.

The Metropolitan was as usual a good betting race, and though Sea Spray, who scored her fourth consecutive win with it, started at 6 to 1 there was a good deal of money on her and she was by no means running loose. Prince Lyon was a good deal backed by "the talent," but more especially for a place, which he pulled off all right, and Barrett put in a great finish on Lavania, just bringing her into third place. The favourites, Paddy's Darling and Golden Gleam, were nowhere. The race was run in the sensational time of 1min. 13⅘secs., which is a record for Calcutta, but is not as good as the Mansfield Plate time at Poona last year when Sermon (9-12) and Manlock (8-0) made a dead heat of it in. 1min. 13secs., a remarkable performance.

The King's Plate was the big event of the day and Fitzgrafton was most fancied out of the large field that went out while Wandin, Steinhager, Boabdil, Ballark and Beaunero were all backed. There was a long delay at the gate chiefly due to the vagaries of Boabdil, who huddled them all up on to the rails and they started in a bunch resulting in a collision at the first bend, which sent Beaunero and Steinhager into the rails and finished their chances of doing anything. Cinder Bill made the running for the first half of the journey, when Wandin and Boabdil went to the front. Mr. Jiji's horse broke down by the 5 furlongs and came in dead lame and by the home turn, to the surprise of everyone, it was seen that Mr. Galstaun's Misty Morn, who had been lying about fifth, had come through to the front and had the race in hand, while Wandin could do no more than just beat the winner's stable companion, Dirty Boy, for second place. Fitzgrafton, the favourite, made a gallant effort to respond when called upon at the distance, but the big weight stopped him and his spirit soon died away. Misty Morn was a 30 to 1 outsider and paid the magnificent totalisator dividend of Rs. 1,872 to the lucky holder of the two tickets.

The last race put a fitting close to a first-class day's sport by finishing with a dead heat between the favourite, Lord Barrymore, and the ten to one chance, The Master. The latter made the most of his light weight and led all the way, but the heavily burdened Lord Barrymore of course had to bide his time and then had great difficulty in getting through the crowd. He came clear about the distance and Colin Barrett riding as for his life brought him up at a slashing pace and just caught the other on the post. In the run off it was any odds on Barrymore without the big field to trouble him and he won very comfortably by two lengths.

The meet for the usual weekly paperchase was near Jodhpur Thana last Friday and Messrs. Stokes and Maurice Turner had provided a most interesting course through the famous bund country and winding about in a most diverting fashion as far as the Tollygunge lane and back. Lots of jumping, many ups and downs, and banks and sharp corners to negotiate necessitated a wary look out and save Mr. Turner, who had laid it and therefore knew its route, no one succeeded in keeping to the paper throughout with a cast back and grief, though luckily not of a serious order, was prevalent, including such doughty champions as Messrs. Scaramanga, Halliday and Captain Holden. The misfortunes of the first two place Captain Fraser, who finished second on Diabolo, at the head of the list for the average cup with three chases and three places. The final order was: Mr. M. Turner on Lord Harry, Captain Fraser on Diabolo, Mr. Radmore on Agamemnon, Mr. Fitzgerald on Fermoy, Mr. Robertson on Solanus, Mr. Forsyth on Corydon. There was a good field again for the pony chase, Mr. Bletsoe on Seagull and Mr. Rees on Moll Flanders going off at a great pace, but they collided with one another at a narrow gap about three-quarters of the way round and Seagull lost a lot of ground, while Moll pulled up altogether and at the end Emerald and Minstrel Boy had a great race for first place, Mr. Tanner's pony just getting the best of it, so that the final order was:

Mr. Tanner on Emerald, Mr. Robertson on Minstrel Boy, Mr. Muir on Claris, Mr. Corbett on Pink 'Un, Mr. Bletsoe on Seagull, Mr. Hadow on Hempy.

Among others out we noticed Mr. Antram, who just missed his places in each chase on Myrene and Blazes respectively, Mr. Myers on Sir Walter, Mr. Curtis Hayward, Miss Wheeler, Mrs. Damiano on Colors, Mr. Muir on Ryong, Mrs. Paris on The Palmer, Mr. Rees on Wake Up, Mr. Bell Irving on Pretender, Mr. Evers on Viking, Mr. Gresson on Sedition, Mr. Wheeler on Dangar, Mr. Barrow, Dr. Hossack on Lady Gold, Mr. Levetus on Prince Moorfield, Mr. Ralli on Iona, Mr. Deakin, Mr. Paris, Mr. Wells on Lady Wilful, Mr. Elgee, Mr. MacDonnell on Miss Preston, Mr. Stokes on Sheila, Mr. Allen noting the order at the finish, etc., etc.

The Gorakhpur Race Meeting, fixed for the 29th and 31st January, has been abandoned, the dates clashing with those of the Lucknow Spring meeting.

A distressing accident occurred on the East Indian Railway between Jubbulpore and Allahabad on the 8th instant. A horse box, in which six polo ponies belonging to the 1st D. Y. O. Lancers (Skinner's Horse) were being conveyed to Allahabad to take part in the Connell Cup Tournament, caught fire and all efforts to extinguish the flames were useless. The syces, who were with the ponies, managed to escape, but the poor animals were burnt to death The fire is said to have originated from the engine sparks over the roof of the wooden box. The officers of the 1st Lancers sportingly telegraphed for other mounts and met the 2nd Lancers in the first round of the tournament on Monday, but were beaten by 7 goals to 2. On the same day the 14th Jat Lancers beat the Rifle Brigade by 4 goals to 2, and the R. A. from Lucknow beat the Allahabad Gymkhana by 4 goals to 1.

As will be seen by the notice appearing in our advertisement columns Messrs. We have to thank Messrs. Hoare Miller & Co., the Calcutta agents of the Harrison line of steamers, for a copy of their desk Calendar for the current year.

The final game in the Burma Battalion Polo tournament was played at Mandalay on the 31st ultimo, the contesting teams being the 72nd Punjabis and the 93rd Burmas. A splendid game was witnessed, the 72nd eventually winning by four goals to two.

Harmston's Circus is now advertising its "last nights," the joy of young and old will soon be deserting us, and once more the mammoth tent on the maidan will be furled and carried away till next cold season. For the last three nights there is a constant change of programme, while handsome gold and silver souvenir watches have delighted the lucky recipients of a winning number. All small folk are eagerly looking out for the last matinée, when, as well as two watches, a much-coveted Shetland pony, described by one little visitor as "a perfect darling," will be one of the prizes. For the last performance on Saturday night, coupons are now being given away, the winning one of which will entitle the holder to a splendid bicycle. As the holder of the winning number must be in the tent on that night a bumper house is expected. To-night, 16th January, a farewell complimentary benefit will be tendered to the marvellous Frantz Troupe, who must surely be manufactured of India-rubber! The champion riding contest will take place on this occasion when a handsome trophy will be presented to the competitor making the best attempt at standing on his feet on the pad, aided by a mechanical contrivance.

In bidding Harmston's Circus goodbye, we wish our old friends bon voyage and a safe return to India's coral strand next season.

The Bengal Lawn Tennis Championships will be held on the ground of the Calcutta Cricket Club, commencing on the 26th February and ending on the 7th March. The courts will be open for practice to competitors from 12th proximo. An advertisement appearing elsewhere gives further particulars.

The air is thick with challenges in the English boxing world. The defeat of Gunner Moir by Tommy Burns has spurred others to uphold the honour of the British Isles against the American. He has already been matched to meet Jack Palmer for the Heavy-weight Championship of the world and the contest has been fixed for the 10th February. In all probability the Yankee will also accommodate Jem Roche, the Irish Champion, later on. The wrestling stars have also been busy, Hackenschmidt is to meet Jem Rogers at the end of the month and a match between the Russian lion and Zbysco is also on the tapis.

The Ladies' Golf Club Championship, played in Calcutta last week, ended in a well earned victory for Mrs. Youngson, who met and defeated Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt in the final. Details will be found in the usual place.

Is tobogganing a sport? asks a writer in The County Gentleman. It was once described as "a form of luxury which consisted in sitting on a thing like a tea-tray and letting yourself slide to the bottom of a hill." If this were even a fair caricature, the tobogganer—or should it be the tobogganist?—could no more claim the title of sport for his favourite indulgence than could Bruin of the German explanatory legend, who, whenever he came to a snowy slope, sat downon himself and slid, and thus in course of time rubbed his tail to the stump now familiar to us. But there is far more in tobogganing than the uninitiated would believe. The Cockney who has enjoyed himself at Earl's Court or the Crystal Palace, or wherever artificial "runs" may have been erected in times past, can have little or no conception of what real tobogganing is like. Few Englishmen have, who have not made the delightful winter trip to Davos Platz or St. Moritz, which, by the way, is annually growing in attraction and favour. Tobogganing in England and even in Scotland is mere child's play at present in comparison with what is to be obtained in Norway and Sweden and Switzerland.

Yet Englishmen and not the Swiss have elevated tobogganing to its present pitch. Twenty years ago the latter looked upon it as a mere amusement for children except where it was practised by their elders as a necessity. The instance of the Gaulish soldiers tobogganing on their shields seems to have been forgotten by modern dwellers in the Alps. Then the "mad Englishmen" went amongst them and made of it a sport for men. "Now," the Continental hotel proprietor enthusiastically assures us, "you have gone still further: you have made that sport an art!" Fortunate for his balance at the bank that it is so. Tobogganing, then, may be classed as a sport at the present day; but its origin is probably almost as old as the hills and the snow themselves. "Toboggan" is, of course, a North-American Indian word, and was used to designate the small sledges in which they transported their provisions or household goods from one happy hunting ground to another. The sledge and the toboggan, though in these later days they have diverged so widely from each other, must be accredited with a common ancestor.

The Canadian tobogganer is, as a rule, a far less finished practitioner than the man who learns to guide his way down the Alpine-made runs which are so full of twists, and turns, and have, moreover, their "ups," as well as their "downs." In Canada as in Russia, most of the artificial runs are either quite straight or only modified by gradual curves. On the famous Cresta run the banks are constructed with almost fiendish ingenuity, and one must needs be an expert and a master in judging speed in order to negotiate the course without a spill, the chances of disaster being said to be more frequent and free than in the Grand National steeplechase course at Aintree. Still, a plunge into soft snow is seldom a serious affair, and there are few winter pastimes which yield so much health-giving pleasure and delight for such a moderate outlay as does tobogganing. A pity greater efforts are not made to establish it on a firmer and more popular basis in our Scottish Highlands, where in most winters there should surely be sufficient snow and natural runs to compete with the attractions of Davos and St. Moritz.

The wiles of the hunter to deceive the innocent wild duck are becoming more advanced as the sport of duck hunting grows. The art of man is being pitted against the wisdom of the feathered tribe and each day must the webfeet learn of new dangers that besiege them.

Years ago hunters merely took to the tules as a blind behind which to hide and wait for the ducks to pass. Then some imitative genius started to making ducks of wood to entice the flying birds to settle in range of the gun. Boats were constructed to resemble, to almost an exactness, a floating bunch of tule, and in this way many of the tribe were deceived into death, for the drifting imitation with a hunter concealed within could play havoc in a flock of feeding ducks. The hunted ones, however, became wise to this deception and now are not beguiled as before, and the hunter must devise other means of deception.

Among the latest of these means is the interbreeding or crossing of tame and wild ducks. Tame ducks were and are yet used as decoys, but their call is not always sufficient to lure the wild duck to the water from his lofty flight. As taming a wild duck for decoy was out of the question, the next practical thing was done, and that is to cross a wild and tame fowl. A hunter once found a wounded wild mallard drake, and taking it home bred with some tame mallards. He found that as a decoy the crossed bird is hard to beat. His success led to other hunters taking it up, and now many sportsmen use live decoys of crossed birds and say they give good results.

A drake and two ducks are generally taken out for the hunt and are placed apart from each other on different sides of a patch of tule. When the drake looks up and sees a bunch of wild ducks flying over, he, in his lonesomeness, calls out to them. The decoy hens, hearing the drake call, then give their answer, and as a result of the long-distance conversation the wild ducks circle around and then join those on the water. The hunter does the rest.

The Council of the Zoological Society has inaugurated an interesting scheme, which, it is hoped, will familiarise visitors to the Gardens with the animals and birds of the British Empire. It is proposed to hold in coming years exhibitions of the extensive fauna of the Colonies, and next June a start will be made with a special collection of the animal life of Australasia. The scheme has secured the co-operation of the State Governments and various zoological societies of Australia. Australian birds and animals, with a few exceptions, can be acclimatised in this country, as the southern parts of Australia are outside the Tropics. The difficulty consists rather in securing the specimens, as the fauna of Australia, though most interesting from the scientific point of view, owing to its peculiar character, has not that diversity of species which is to be found, for example, in Africa. Moreover, as Australia becomes more and more civilised, those animals which are antagonistic to man and his agricultural pursuits are gradually becoming exterminated, and the few specimens which are found are naturally appropriated by the local zoological societies. Although nothing has yet been definitely settled, it is hoped that Canada and various portions of Africa will send representatives of their animal life to Regent's Park in subsequent years.

The undoubted connection between epidemics of plague and other diseases in rats and in human beings marks the rat for destruction, and obliterates all considerations as its services as a scavenger. The Indian Government is said to be contemplating a renewal of the scientific campaign against plague, and has had the extermination of the rat under consideration for some time past. The only thing that has saved the rodent has been the failure of bacteriology or chemistry to find a poison which would operate on a sufficiently large scale. There is another aspect of the question, which is that it is the rat flea rather than the rat which is responsible for the conveyance of disease, and that if the rat flea could be exterminated both rats and human beings would have cause for 'relief and gratitude. The problem of exterminating insects is very much more difficult than that of destroying rodents, and there seems no prospect of solving it except in an extremely local and restricted way. Mr. L. O. Howard, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, publishes, however, two flea remedies which might be of use to travellers or to Europeans situated in infected districts. The first is that of an entomologist who is a Commissioner of Horticulture in California, and is as follows :—Fill a soup-plate with soap-suds ; in the centre place a glass of water with a scum of kerosene on top ; place the soup-plate on the floor in an infested room, and set fire to the kerosene at night. Fleas in the room will be attracted and will jump into the soap-suds. The second remedy is that of Miss Fielde, the well-known writer on ants, who spent a number of years in Southern China, where fleas swarm even in clean houses. She made her own house immune through many years by dissolving alum in the whitewash or kalsomine that covered the interior walls, by putting sheets of thick paper that had been dipped in alum solution over the floor matting and by scattering pulverised alum in all crevices where insects might lodge or breed. Powdered alum well brushed into carpets banishes many insect pest, including moths and fleas, and a shilling's worth of alum judiciously used in any room will effect a great deal in the prevention of undesirable immigrants.

An object lesson, sometimes, has more effect than all the preaching in the world. Our persistent advocacy of the cause of Game Protection and our continuous appeals to the sporting community in this country, have hitherto fallen on deaf ears. In the extract given below, taken from the American sporting paper, Forest and Stream, we present our friends with an example in point how our Transatlantic cousins manage their things in America. Have not British sportsmen in India the spirit and energy in them to do likewise ?

"Following promptly on the Forest and Stream's recent editorials urging action in New Jersey for better game laws, comes the organization of the new State Fish and Game Commission, and a report of its practical unanimity on the necessity of certain changes in the laws.

"It has agreed to a number of recommendations as to legislation, among which are the exaction of a gun license, the establishment of a non-resident license, the abolishing of spring shooting, prohibiting July woodcock shooting, prohibiting the sale of game, making the woodcock season open 1st October in North Jersey, and 1st November in South Jersey, fixing 15th June as the opening of the bass season, limiting the amount of game to be shot by one person, prohibiting the use of nets except for minnows, prohibiting the use of pound nets within one mile of the coast.

"These radical recommendations are perhaps a good indication of the feeling which prevails to-day among the sportsmen in New Jersey, and if the Legislature can be induced to change the game laws in accordance with these recommendations, it will be a great thing for the State. It will be well for every Jerseyman fond of angling and shooting to do everything in his power to bring about such wholesome changes. If personally acquainted with his representatives in the Legislature, let him speak to them, if he can ; if not let him write to them. Indeed, every good sportsman will do well to write to his representative urging that the changes indicated be made. Senators and assemblymen desire nothing more than to carry out the wishes of their constituents, but those constituents must take the trouble to let their representatives know those wishes. Now is the time for a strong push by all the good sportsmen of New Jersey."

Yet another extract from the same paper.

"A few years ago there were no deer in New Jersey, but few quail and a very few streams containing trout, except in the extreme northern part. To-day we witness the restoration of one of the greatest game animals on this continent, deer appearing in large numbers all over the State ; our depleted covers of quail quite fully restored to normal conditions, and hundreds of streams, which never before contained trout, now afford good sport to the anglers and food for the farmer. This is the direct result of the work of the present Board of Fish and Game Commissioners."

Mr. Frank Finn's literary and zoological activity, one is rejoiced to find, is unabated. Since he left this country he has enriched the bookshelves of sportsmen and naturalists with several volumes which are entitled to rank as standard works, and others equally useful, which come under the category of "popular" and appeal more directly to the general reader. A copy of his latest book is before us—"Pets and How to Keep Them"—and though the works of this clever and versatile author need no recommendation at our hands, we will say at once it is quite the best book of the kind ever published. It covers the whole range of "pets" from deer, monkeys and dogs, down the gamut of furred and feathered friends of every conceivable size, shape and genus to snakes, salamanders and miniature gold fish. What more would you my masters ? And all treated on Mr. Finn's eminently practical lines and described in the charming style he has made his own. Profusely illustrated with excellent photographic reproductions, lavish of full page coloured plates by leading artists, "Pets and How to Keep Them" is a volume for which we confidently predict a lasting popularity.

Calcutta has been for some time notoriously behind Bombay in so far as matters motoring, etc., but apparently an endeavour is now being made to dispel this backwardness. A new company entitled "Indian Motors," Limited, opened its doors at No. 1, Hastings Street, on 1st January last, and as the business is under most efficious management and Agencies for several of the foremost cars of the day have been secured, there is every prospect of the venture meeting with unqualified and well-deserved success. Arrangements have been entered into with the Bombay Motor Car Company, Limited, whereby the former Company represent the Fiat and Daimler Cars, and a small car for the man of moderate means, priced at about Rs. 3,000 is also promised at an early date. The innovation also of pricing cars at actual English prices plus cost of importation only should appeal to the Indian buyer. The shares, so we hear, have all been privately subscribed. In addition to the sale of cars, repairs will be carried out under expert supervision, thus fulfilling a want which has long been felt in the city.

We regret to hear that Lieutenant-Colonel Brownrigg, C.R.E., Fort St. George, burst a blood vessel in his brain while riding back from polo on the evening of the 10th instant. When the latest news reached us he was lying in hospital in a very serious condition, his right side being paralysed.

We understand that arrangements have been definitely concluded for the exhibition game of billiards of 1,000 up between H. W. Stevenson, the English billiard champion, and Mike Elias, champion of India. The game will be played at Cawnpore on the 22nd instant, and the exhibition will include games of snookers, pool, and fancy strokes.

A match between Stevenson and Melbourne Inman has also been arranged and will take place in Calcutta, beginning on the 27th instant. The game will be 9,000 up, Stevenson conceding his opponent 2,250. This event is looked forward to with the greatest interest by local billiard enthusiasts.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—Though on each occasion the quarry managed to save his brush the Bombay Hunt opened this week with two rattling runs. On the bye day a large field of nearly fourscore met the hounds at the old familiar covert at the base of Sahar Hill, which, as usual, concealed a jack, who was not long in getting to his feet—mighty nimble ones too ! It was one of those nippily cold mornings and the pace at which the hunt proceeded over the best going to be procured was fully appreciated. He immediately cuts across Bomanwadi Valley and recrosses over big cactus jumps to Chuckla, through the groves, across the Andheri road and into the Mango tope. He then heads for Goregaum and the hill in which so many have been lost, but skirts it. The jungle here is very dense, but the field follows till in the open hounds are at fault at the quarry. They pick up again, but by now the sun has spoilt the scent ; and after fruitless attempts hounds are drawn off after a long and fast run of quite forty minutes.

There was an extra day's sport and a good run but few turned out at the rendezvous at Irla. At the end of the narrow Chuckla lane a jack is put up and goes away towards Marole and past it at a tremendous pace, ignoring the shelter of the caves. In and out of the valley he continues at a pace it is hard to live with and swerves back towards the Club. At last here he takes to cover and is lost in the dense undergrowth, though hounds go in after it, and the field returns, leaving them to an almost hopeless task.

A big field was out on Thursday, when they met at Santa Cruz, the covert near Chuckla Hill being drawn with immediate success Away they go over dangerous country over the dried up Kalina tank and in the market gardens near by the jack hides but is soon driven out back over the same ground into Bomanwadi Valley. There is a check at Andheri road before they go into the Mango tope and then the hounds swim Stacey's tank. The jack veers away from Marole through the Goregaum woods and then twists back, but so hot are hounds on the track that they at last run him down in a native hut.

Mr. W. H. Stevenson completed his Bombay season and left for Pindi on Friday. He has had a busy week after his engagement at the Yacht Club last Saturday, when he gave Mr. Maughan 700 and beat him by 150, his best breaks were 228, 103 twice, 146 and 164 unfinished. At the Sailors' Home he was in grand form against Mr. Hallam, whom he beat by 129. His best were 256, 347 and 151 unfinished, establishing a Bombay record which he beat that very evening, giving 700 to Mr. McKenzie at the Gymkhana. He made 96, 143, 261 and an unfinished 361 which he increased to 389.

Owing mainly to the table being untrue he gave a poor show at the Asian Parsee Club when Mr. Powalla beat him with a start of 650. His only three-figure breaks were 105 and 117.

His other defeat was at the International Club when he gave Mr. Dastur 2,000 in 3,000, but had his revenge on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons, when they played for a side bet. On the first day Stevenson was 20 above his points and on the second his opponent held his own for some time, but eventually the champion struck form and scoring at a tremendous pace won by 102. This was 2,000 up giving 1,334.

On Wednesday he averaged 38 and on Thursday 29·3, Dastur 10·3 and 7·4. Stevenson made 205, 265, 110, 123 and 220.

Leaving this Club only at 8-30 he made his appearance in a far from fit condition at the Bombay Club after dinner. Tired out, he could not be expected to show anything like true form and went under by 60 points.

The fifth extra meeting came off at Mahalaxmi last Saturday and large fields provided a fair day's racing in punter's favour. In the first race the two unbeaten new ponies, Maimoon and Mudkoor, [illegible]ed and the latter was backed down to a favourite. The race, however, panned out otherwise as Maimoon wore him out to win very comfortably in the good time of 1min. 8secs.

In the second division they were a more or less unknown quantity, but Nofa's second to Maimoon made him favourite. He made all his own running and won comfortably from Golden Crown. About three-lengths past the post Nofa crossed his legs and came down bringing Abbas on Golden Crown with him. Yussuff is said to have broken his shoulder blade and this will perhaps teach him not to look round as some of the "cracks" do.

The third division came last on the card with Martyn and Turkish Flag backed, but the winner cropped up in Great Power, a 30 to 1 chance, who led out by quite half a dozen lengths and in the end won easily. Punters were right there when they made Moscow favourite for the Maiden Plate from Elector and Madrid. Sunlight and Silver Stream made the pace, but when it came to racing Moscow came out and won cleverly.

They, however, came a cropper over Dhamas in the Prongs Plate, as after making the pace till past the post he fell away. Scarlet and Gold Mint were with the favourite and the latter came away to win after a bustling to keep off a strong challenge by Recruit.

Only four faced the starter for the Epsom Plate with Admiral Crichton a hot favourite from Royalist and the race was between the two. Admiral Crichton early established a half a dozen lengths lead and, after an "easy" at the bend, went away to win almost as he liked.

Far from a safe race was the Midget Handicap to bet on, though Shanwar looked good and was made favourite, there was a late run on Creditor. Creditor got the best of the start and made all the running, Sahoon and Shanwar coming through at the bend after poor runs. Each made his effort, but the whip coming out on Creditor he just stayed out to win in a hot finish.

Only two were backed in the January Plate, Lady Lomond being better fancied than Baritone, who has run consistently. The latter got a poor start, but his stable companion, Vocalist, made the pace and had Lady Lomond settled at the bend. Here Baritone had made up his ground and coming along nicely in hand, won a good race from Vocalist.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 27th December 1907.

Frost and east wind have been with us for Christmas and to-day it looks as though we might expect the snow promised in the weather forecast. A feature of this Christmas has been the extraordinary amount of railway traffic: Londoners have gone away in incredible quantities, and as all who have gone are not possessors of country houses, and as the coast resort hotels brag of their inability to hold any more, we must conclude that the number who find Christmas a weariness increases. I am told that the season has not been a good one for the tradesman: the shops have been rather worse crowded than usual as it seemed to me, but the customers spend half crowns where aforetime they spent sovereigns.

Mr. Haldane's Special Army Order was issued on Saturday. The Minister for War displays his faith in the scheme identified with his name: he disbands twenty-three militia battalions, and abolishes the name "Militia" altogether to call what he leaves the "Special Reserve:" this may be a wise step or it may not. Apart from the disbandment mentioned, the changes are changes of name rather than of things. Seventy-four of the remaining battalions are attached to regiments of the Line and twenty-seven remain as unattached and liable for foreign service. The Auxiliary forces under their new name are on the knees of the gods. Time will show whether the Special Reservist will be any better than a mere militiaman or whither he will be at all. Let us wait: and Hope, for Hope is our mainstay in this matter I fear me.

The most interesting Christmas function was the dinner to the Mutiny Veterans at the Albert Hall on Monday organised by the Daily Telegraph. The matter had not been much advertised, but it could not be kept a secret and there was a huge crowd to see the men who formed up outside the Hall to receive, or be inspected by, Lord Roberts. Over 1,300 men had been invited and about half these came; not a man under seventy among them and the majority much older; some hale, some broken, many tottering, it was a sight moving rather than stimulating. The hall, boxes and galleries alike were crammed with friends and relations. Mr. Kipling was among the guests at Lord Roberts' table; verses by him were recited by Mr. Lewis Waller and Mr. Ben Davies sang "The Recessional."

Thanks to a strong judge, Mr. Ginnell, M. P., the apostle of cattle driving, has been put out of mischief for six months—or for so long as a weak-minded Irish Secretary will allow. The circumstances of his arrest were characteristic: when summoned for contempt of court for that he had urged a cattle drive on lands within the protection of the court, he bolted: then he avoided arrest in disguise. On Monday unable to keep quiet, he "welcomed" some of his dupes who had been released from prison, coming to Killucan in disguise. He threw off his disguise to make a speech and when the police closed round, promised to surrender after speaking: and promptly tried to escape in the crowd having resumed his disguise. The police gave chase on bicycles, collared him near Mullingar and amid much excitement took possession of his precious person and lodged him in Kilmainham. Will Mr. Birrell have the sense and small courage necessary to leave him there?

An interesting decision was given by Mr. Justice Swinden Eady before the courts rose for Christmas. Herbert and Cycil Beard, nephews of a testator, sought to establish their claim as absolute owners of bequests, their uncle having made their heritage conditional upon their entering neither the Army nor Navy. The learned judge ruled that such a condition is "against the welfare of and injurious to the community and absolutely void;" and declared the legatees' interest absolute and not liable to be divested if he should become a soldier or a sailor. A passage in Mr. Cecil Rhodes' will recurs to mind in this connection: you would remember that it declared service in the army as not "work" within his meaning. Such conditions are so obviously mischievous that Mr. Justice Swinden Eady's ruling is more than satisfactory

Lord Kelvin's remains were buried in the Abbey on Monday. Every British learned society was represented, and many foreign societies: the King and Prince of Wales were represented, numerous diplomats were present with men well known in every department of science and art. The day was very dark but the Abbey was crowded to its utmost and the gloom only made the ceremony the most impressive. There is no church in the kingdom in which organ music sounds more grandly than the Abbey, and never did it seem more solemn than in the gas lit darkness of Monday. Lord Kelvin lies just south of Isaac Newton, between his grave and those of Herschel and Darwin, on the north side of the nave near the choir screen.

The Lyceum was first in the field with pantomime this year. "Robinson Crusoe" was produced on Monday and was rapturously received. The piece is more remarkable for the excellence with which the leading parts are played than for any novelties introduced, and the Lyceum Crusoe will be remembered for that it has shown us what a delightful and clever actress we have in Miss Dorothy Craske. Miss Craske was one of the leaders in the Empire ballet, but, overshadowed by Mdlle. Genée, hardly had a chance. As Robinson Crusoe she has a chance and makes the most of it: her ballet training stands her in good stead and, endowed with a most pleasing voice and real histrionic gifts, she scores a great success. Mr. George Brookes is Mrs. Crusoe, a lady of robust character and modern opinions; and Mr. John Coyle as Will Atkins is very comical. The only novel "business," that recurs to mind is the cock-fight: Crusoe's Giant Rooster, most cleverly played by Mr. Walter Stanton, is pitted against a real barn yard cock and sustains humiliating defeat. It is a long show, a very long show: there are thirteen

"Alice in Wonderland" does duty at the Apollo. First act Wonderland, second Looking Glass as afore time. I liked very much the new Hatter, Mr. E. H. Kelly: he was neither disagreeble or alarming in his madness, but comically pathetic, really recalling the Hatter of Carroll and Tenniel. The Golliwog is still there I regret to say: a wanton trespasser who has no business on Carroll's premises. Miss Maidie Andrews is the Alice; she is very young and to this we must ascribe the fact that she has not absorbed the Alice spirit as one understands it, though she plays very prettily. Miss Ivy Sawyer is again the Dormouse and does it so admirably one wishes that the Dormouse had had more to do. Equally good is Miss Florrie Arnold as the Hare.

At the same theatre Mr. Weedon Grossmith has revived his farce, "The Night of the Party," playing Crosbie the butler himself: it is of the "roaring" order and was welcomed with as much hilarity as of old; and deservedly, for it is full of funny situations and was briskly played throughout.

The Drury Lane Pantomime is the "Babes in the Wood." It bears slender resemblance to the original—perhaps one should not bring to bear on this the eye one casts upon "Alice"—and is if possible more amusing and brilliant than usual. Miss Marie George and Mr. Walter Passmore are the well-grown Babes Cissie and Reggie: Mr. H. Fragson is the Governess, and surely so flirtatious a French governess might well have lost a dozen children. There is a Baroness of economical mind and Scottish ancestry in Mr. Neil Kenyon, who makes one of the most popular jokes of the evening: when the Robbers come to burgle the Baroness' castle they are invited to tender for the murder of the Babes: their price is high: "£10,000!" says the lady "A could get it down cheaper at the Storrs." The house roared consumedly. Every thing of recent interest of course is brought in; the Druce Case, Limericks, etc., etc., etc., as we expect. It is a long pantomime but not over long and is a marvel of stage mounting.

Mr. Norman McKinnel has dramatised that tedious but excellent old bishop in Les Miserables as "The Bishop's Candlesticks" and the play was produced as a curtain raiser last Friday night. If you remember Les Miserables you know the story. Mr. Henry Vibart was the Bishop and Mr. W. L. Warde the convict, Miss Evelyn Hall the Bishop's sister. It was a dreadfully ferocious convict the Bishops entertained and a very, very meek and mild Bishop that the convict robbed: such a milk and water Bishop that one attributed his proceedings to funk rather than to conscience. In Hugo's novel the action of the Right Reverend when the police bring the captured convict and the candlesticks strikes one as strained. On the stage you can hear the convict chuckle when he is dismissed bearing the episcopal blessing and episcopal plate. It was like a farce that misses fire.

I cannot say that Madame Tussaud's Christmas additions, largely advertised, are singularly appropriate to the season. They consist of a fascinating collection of criminal relics, including two old Newgate cells rebuilt, with an ironed portrait model of Jack Shepherd in one of them: also the judicial bench and jury box from the Old Bailey: just the sort of thing to please the children after a course of pantomime, is it not?

"Aladdin" at the Adelphi is principally remarkable for the merit of its Widow Twankey done by Mr. Malcolm Scott whose "Woman Who Knows," "Katherine Parr" and other guises have been familiar to the Halls for some years now. The Adelphi Widow has in common with Mr. Scott's other women a delightful garrulity: it would be unfair to call such entertaining nonsense "patter," though that is the technical word for it. The Widow's lecture on geography is one of Mr. Scott's best efforts "Japan is called the land of the Rising Sun; but there are other public houses in that country" is a good example of it. Miss Fanny Fields (the demand for whose services brought about a law case a week ago) is Gretchen, the Widow's laundry maid, a new character in Aladdin and a welcome one. Another innovation is the employment of the bioscope to show Aladdin's journey to the Cave of Riches; he makes it by motor car; and one wonders how the films were obtained, for surely no motor built by human hands could follow Aladdin's! I have only one objection to Aladdin at the Adelphi: and that is he keeps us amused for four solid hours, and I do not know what omission to suggest in order to curtail the show.

"Charley's Aunt" has been revived at the Royalty. Mr. Spencer Trevor plays Lord Fancourt Babberley who plays the "Aunt" and does it excellently well; quietly, effectively and with genuine humour.

The Underfed School Children question has been brought to the front prominently by the appeal of Lords Rosebery, Rothschild, and Avebury and Mr. Balfour. That appeal was made in support of one issued by the L. C. C. which is anxious that voluntary effort should relieve it of the necessity of levying the halfpenny rate allowed by the Act of 1906. Of course there has been ready response: Royalty led the way and where Royalty leads each follows. The question of underfed children is a particularly difficult one for no charity is more liable to abuse: but let that pass: it grows upon some of us that the whole great question of London charities needs overhauling and organisation. They compete one against another, they cause good things to fall upon just and unjust, they are too often conducted with more advertisement than discrimination and in a word do harm as well as good. Of the making of paupers there is no end.

Preparations for opening the Druce grave, or vault in Highgate Cemetery are in progress; a spacious hoarding has been erected round the burying place to take in a section of the wide road on which it abuts: and here the gruesome business will take place on a day which is said to have been fixed, but it is not to be made public—very properly. There is something of the ghoul in lower-order human nature and there are thousands who would wait for hours half a mile away from that hoarding on the lee side of it. The fact that a writ for arrest of Mr. Ca[illegible]well is out, was conveyed to the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria by wireless telegraphy. The news so upset Mr. Caldwell that when the vessel arrived he was taken ashore in a state of collapse and is reported seriously ill.

The regulations for the new taxi-horse-cabs have been issued. The regulations precede the vehicles for there are no taxi-horse-cabs on the streets so far. When they appear we shall have sixpenny fares: sixpence a mile or sixpence for twelve minutes, and threepence for each subsequent half mile or six minutes. Our old friend the Four-Mile radius is abolished altogether: I never met him myself save on the road to Ranelagh or Hurlingham and I fancy most people are in the same case as myself in not knowing where the Radius lived, though I understand he was legibly marked on all roads and streets concerned.

Those who, like your correspondent, have suffered for the faith that their friends and relations have in them will rise up and bless the advent of the Public Trustee. This new Boon is Mr. C. J. Stewart and he shines in Clements Inn: he is armed with powers to do all that a Trustee should do and a great deal the private Trustee cannot on receipt of insignificant fees. He comes into operation on new year's day, but has already, it is understood, been requested to take under his wing numerous estates, large and small. May his trusts lie lightly upon him; and may he stand betwixt me and my friends who want a trustee.

Mr. V. C. Musgrave, who was charged with cheating certain undergrads at cards at Cambridge last May and broke his bail, was arrested at Boulogne a little while since and was brought before the magistrates on Monday. One of the men he is said to have cheated gave evidence concerning the cards which were, according to his account, rather ingeniously marked; the device on the back was a bicyclist and among the landscape accessories were two guileless looking birds on the wing: the angle at which their tails were carried denoted the suit and the shading under the bicycle gave the number of pips, etc. Musgrave was remanded—not on bail this time.

ONLOOKER.

Some time since a new baby arrived at a home in an American city, and when Johnny, the little five-year-old brother, was sent on an errand to one of the neighbours a few days afterward, the good lady, of course, had to make the usual remarks about the event. "I understand, Johnny," said she, "that you have a little baby at your house." "Yes, ma'am," was the pleased reply of Johnny. "He has been there nearly four days now." "Well when he gets older you must bring him over to see me," returned the neighbour lady. "By the way, has he been named yet?" "No, ma'am," answered the youngster, "but I guess there will be something doing pretty soon, for when I left father was looking over the list of Presidents, mother was going through the Bible, and the nurse was hunting around in a history of the United States."

We asked Ikey Abrahams how his pal was. "Oh, you mean Aaron Solomans," he replied. "Well, he's werry bad, poor boy. He was ordered by his doctor to have a Turkish bath, and the blank ruffians nearly did for h'm. They first of all half-biled, and then, s'wulp me, scraped him until they came to the flannel shirt wot he wore ven he was a baby. Oh, he's awful bad, and no gammon."

Shikar.

A BADGER HUNT.

THE village is talking a holiday, for the squire's gamekeeper has bagged a badger, and there is sport afoot. The animal has been captured in the old-fashioned, sweet and simple way. Badger-drawing for business purposes is a prosaic arrangement in these parts. The men just dig down to the ca[illegible] where the creature lives when he is at home, and when the opening is wide enough, an expert creeps into it. He carries a lighted candle in his cap and a long pair of pinchers, or nippers in his hand.

Mr. Badger, seeing a visitor whose presence is not desired, backs from him until he reaches his uttermost wall. Then, unable to get further away from the trouble that threatens him, he becomes savage and spiteful. He is cornered, and is aware of the fact. As his dander rises he opens his mouth. That is the fatal moment, for a badger is like a human being—he can open his mouth too soon and once too often. The expert has only waited for this. As the snapping jaws divide, the man dexterously seizes the lower one with his long pinchers, and Mr. Badger, at his mercy, is triumphantly drawn out and clapped into a bag.

This is the preliminary procedure; the opening round. The remainder of the sport is to make the day a red-letter one. The badger is to be drawn again, this time by a dog, and dozens of men and boys are trooping along the road to the scene of act[illegible] For the young squire of the village is of a sporti[illegible] turn, and has made proclamation that he will present a whole sovereign to the man whose dog shall draw this particular animal; and a sovereign is a deal of money hereabouts. It represents nearly two weeks' wages to most of the inhabitants. So every able-bodied man and every hobbledehoy loses a morning's labour, and journeys forth to see somebody's dog win its master a pound.

All the local sporting folks are, of course, early on the spot. There are dogs to be backed and dogs to be laid against, bets to lose and bets to win. It is like a local "Derby," with a "satty" fair thrown in. There are serviceable dogs present; even the boys have brought their animals, likely animals, too, some of them—fit to go anywhere, do anything, and fight everything. In the country poor people do not keep dogs for the look of the thing, nor for company. They are kept for work. When a farm labourer pays seven and sixpence a year for a license, he expects a profit on his outlay. His dog will have to provide many dinners in the course of the twelve months.

The squire comes along in person to see the conditions properly fulfilled. He settles the order of the attack, and, of course, his word is law. He gives his special favourites the first chance, but they gain nothing by the preference, for this badger is a "'un."

A trench has been dug for the creature—a trench that starts level with the surface and gets rapidly deeper until the hole at the other end is about three feet from the top. The badger is popped out of the bag into the trench. He immediately retreats to the far end, and there he places himself, like a hero, with his back to the wall. He is game.

The dogs discover this. Each man in his turn places his tyke in the trench, and encourages him with, "Now, boy!" "At him, Rover!" But Rover, and Toby, and Jasper, and Jack, and Carlo are not so eager for the fray as are their masters. Not one of them will tackle the badger, who, with his jaws open waiting for them, looks a very formidable opponent indeed. He is ready for all comers, but none come.

The dogs back away, much to the fury of their owners and the amusement of the young squire.

"Well, boys," says that gentleman, "I'm afraid I shan't lose my sovereign to-day."

But at that psychic moment, as is the usual course of things, the unforseen and unexpected happens. On the top of the bank appears an old shepherd. At his heels is Mary, an antique and dilapidated mongrel.

"Can she have a go?" he inquires.

Everybody roars with laughter. The humour of the idea is exquisite, and the countryside rings with the jests of the sportsmen. But the shepherd maintains a calm and imperturbable demeanour.

"I'd like my bitch to have a try," he observes.

"Why, she hasn't got a tooth in her head!" Everybody is aware of that.

"It's a pound if she draws the badger, ain't it?" the shepherd humbly suggests.

There is another spasm of laughter. But before it dies away, the shepherd catches up his Mary and drops her bodily into the trench. Then there is a strained silence; for the derided mongrel has been dropped in "back'ards." Her tail is towards the badger, and her head is towards safety. She follows her nose and makes for home. But the badger has fixed on her hindquarters like a leech, and when Mary emerges from the trench she brings the badger with her.

The mongrel has "drawn" the badger, after all the champions have failed. She could not help herself. And the placid shepherd draws the sovereign.

Fishing.

A HOLIDAY IN TASMANIA.

SITUATED just below Melbourne, and separated from the mainland by the Bass Straits, is the snug little island of Tasmania, or Van Diemen's Land, where the rivers and lagoons present a most beautiful appear- [redacted] It is a veritable paradise for the sportsman of [redacted]. Fish of all sorts and sizes are to be had in [redacted]nce.

Some good shooting is obtainable, but sportsmen have often to tramp many miles to get a good afternoon's sport with the gun, whereas angling is within easy reach of all.

The open season for fishing commences the first day of September and continues until 30th April—practically the entire Tasmanian summer. During the season fishing is a national pastime, and is indulged in by both young and old. Camping out with rod and line is the usual method of spending the holidays.

The rivers rise in those stately peaks which form the backbone of the island, and pour down their waters through numerous lakes in different directions to the coast. The borders of the streams are clothed with rich verdure. Ferns with huge fronds, and flowering shrubs of numerous varieties giving out sweet odours, make a grand picture of Nature in her choicest garb.

Beside the banks of these rivers the angler may recline in the shade of some overspreading tree, watching the trout feeding in the clear stream at his feet. [redacted] a fine sight on a glorious summer afternoon to see [redacted]out coming to the surface to take the grasshoppers as they fall into the water and then gently glide down the stream.

When I was once staying with my chum at a friend's house at Launceston, it was suggested that we tried our hand at trout-fishing up the South Esk. The Esk, let me explain, is a shallow river which joins the Tamar at what is called the Cataract George, where good sport can be obtained for some seven or eight miles upstream.

We therefore proposed to camp out for a week; so on the second Monday morning in January of the year 19—we set out with the rising of the sun. Our swag had been in the process of preparation some days beforehand, so we were quite ready to start. After breakfasting we struck out across some fields and cut off the bend of the stream; then followed its course for some two hours, when we came upon a shady nook, and it was proposed that we had a sit down and put on our pipes.

While my friends were smoking (personally I do not touch the weed), I thought I should like to try my hand with my rod at once, and try for the first bite of the party. Suiting the action to the thought, I affixed my rod and proceeded to cast about for a good chap. I was out of luck, however, and only succeeded in getting my feet wet before I was joined by my friends.

We continued our walk until the afternoon, when we assumed a recumbent posture, and took forty winks apiece. After tea we fixed our camp for the night, and commenced sport in earnest. We put on our wading apparel and separated. It is usual to wade about the stream after the fish, for it is difficult to use your rod too near shore, owing to the overhanging foliage, and when once you have a heavy brute at the end of your line it is much easier to land him.

We met with medium success that evening, catching seven nice little trout, which, said to relate, were all caught on one line, and that belonging to our Colonial friend. The only casualties were the loss of two feet of rod to my chum, and myself returning minus three flies and five trout.

We talked far into the night round a small fire that had been kindled to light our pipes by. Sweet sleep at length claimed a victim, our host having fallen asleep where he sat. The other two of us followed in quick succession, and we were all soon soundly asleep and inhaling the pure air that was being gently circulated by a soft breeze wafted across from the Indian Ocean.

The next day we did better, my chum and myself claiming three small trout between us, and the Colonial a dozen.

No accidents occurred to mar the pleasant week other than the tobacco rations running out, which circumstance caused a little strong feeling to be expressed by the smoking members of the party.

On our return to Launceston on the Saturday night we were all in very good spirits, and promised ourselves another such week e'er we returned to Old England.

Taking leave at Launceston, Vernon (for such was my good chum's appellation) and myself proceeded by a small coaster to Hobart, where we had originally arrived, and took diggings there for a week. After attending to our business at this place, Vernon proposed a row round the harbour in a small skiff. I willingly acceded, and thereupon set out.

When leaving the shore it was not our original intention to do any fishing, but, as I shall relate, we did so involuntarily. We had not gone very far from the shore before a bream jumped into the boat. This is a common occurrence in these waters, but it was quite a novelty to us, and my chum, being rather anxious to secure the fish, made an attempt to bang it down in the bottom of the boat with the butt-end of an oar. To his dismay he missed the fish, and the oar struck with such force against an uncovered part of the boat's bottom that it knocked out half a plank. We rammed our coats in the cavity, but it was of no avail. So, while Vernon plugged the hole as best he could, I proceeded to gently row shorewards. Just as the boat came within wading distance of the land she was swamped. Happily, we brought both boat and fish ashore, and received the congratulations of the spectators.

MADAME HARMSTON-LOVE ... Proprietress
COL. BOB LOVE ... ... Manager.
R. ALTON ... ... Agent.

THE reading of history is delightful because it adds to the charm of style the fascination of a well-told narrative with a beginning, a middle, and an end; it combines the art of the story-teller with the literary skill of a master of description. When properly presented history possesses all the readableness of the best fiction. History and fiction are alike concerned with the sayings and doings, the thoughts and feelings of men and women. The historian's matter is far more copious than the novelist's, and he is not under the necessity to invent dénouements. They are all before him. He is looking upon a drama that is played out for his benefit, and all he has to do is to write an intelligible account of it. The actions, the speeches, the complications, the catastrophes, are all ready to his hand, and are infinitely more varied and abundant than any novelist's inventions. They are real; and curiously enough it is the novelist's constant pre-occupation to get the reader to believe, at least for the time, that his characters and incidents are real.

FICTION versus HISTORY.

But what fiction can equal the true stories of history, what work of the imagination can be compared to a recital of the story of the careers of real heroes and heroines, or the depiction of the ceaseless drama of the ages, in which the leading parts have been played by kings and queens, by statesmen and courtiers, by warriors and adventurers? "All the world's a stage and all the men and women merely players" in this tragi-comedy of life which is here revealed to us in the pages of THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY."

Here we have the best literature in the words of the greatest masters of historical narration—the authentic record of facts combined with dramatic accounts of battles and picturesque description of events, masterly characterisations of great men and celebrated women written by contemporaries; epics of nations and races, love stories of queens and personal studies of famous women who have made history; intrigues, conspiracies, mysteries, the romantic careers of historical personages, curious revelations of history told by eye-witnesses or by participants in celebrated episodes.

No form of reading can be so interesting and at the same time so instructive, so delightful and at the same time so profitable. "History makes men wise," said Bacon. It enables us to know human nature, thought Burke. It is "the unfolding of the divine idea in time," said Hegel. "It will contribute," wrote Bolingbroke, "to keep our minds free from a ridiculous partiality in favour of our own country and a vicious prejudice against others."

In "THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY OF THE WORLD" are endless opportunities for the reader who wishes to be merely amused or interested, or for the man who wishes to review or enlarge his historical studies of earlier days. The dry-as-dust quality which characterises so much modern historical literature is here conspicuously absent. No tiresome disputations on the philosophy of history are found, but only truthful narration, the whole story of human history told with wonderful vividness, with fidelity to fact and with encyclopædic fulness.

Should these claims seem to you to be over-confident, "THE TIMES" invites you to put them to the test, to examine a specimen volume of the work at your leisure and without expense.

TEMPORARY OFFER IN INDIA BY

(London).

"THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY OF THE WORLD"—25 volumes, 16,600 pages, offered now at the lowest price at which it will ever be obtainable in India, for Cash with order or on the plan of monthly payments of Rs. 7, Rs. 8, or Rs. 9.

The entire 25 volumes despatched for a preliminary payment of Rs. 5.

(The first shipment of the books is now being landed, and those who wish to have immediate delivery should register their names during the next few days).

By "The Times" plan of sale the ordinary methods of the book-trade are reversed, the early buyer being permitted to buy at the minimum price. It is the usual practice of publishers at Home to fix a price for a new book at the highest figure they think it will stand. Those who buy it when the book is in greatest demand and when everybody is talking about it, pay considerably more than do those who wait a year or two for a cheaper edition. Any one who follows the course of book-trade prices at Home will find that this is no exaggeration.

In the opinion of "The Times" this is manifestly unfair, for it is the early subscribers who, by buying a new book as soon as it is issued, actually ensure its success and enable the publisher to recover his original outlay. When this early demand at the high price has been satisfied, the publisher cuts the price and issues the book in a cheaper form, with the result that the man who waits until the second year of its existence is permitted to pay less for it than his more eager neighbour who bought it at the outset.

"The Times," believing that good literature should be issued as cheaply as possible, has taken the position that a book should be priced as low as possible at its first appearance that a low price inevitably induces a large sale, and that the interests of author and reader are best served when the price is such that it is within the means of the largest number of persons.

In the case of "The Historians' History of the World" the present prices are the lowest at which it will ever be sold in India. Those who shall subscribe now, at the minimum price, will therefore do so on the most favourable terms.

Complete sets of the Work may be seen at "THE TIMES'" Office, 6, Dalhousie Square, Calcutta, where particulars of Cash Prices, Monthly Payments, Bindings, Book-cases, etc., may be learned.—Agent on the Bombay Side: "The Times of India."—Madras, "THE TIMES" (London), 162, Mount Road.

First Day, Tuesday, 7th January 1908.

Favourite after favourite went down, and the climax occurred when Sicootine got beaten in the Horse Race. Farmer Giles spent his Christmas with Farmer Squires, and, getting rather bosky early in the evening, started off home. Several hours later some of his cronies came across him prone on his back in the road, fast asleep, with the moon shining full upon him. They proceeded to stir him up a bit, when Giles turned over and mildly ejaculated, "Mary, give me my share of the bedclothes, and put that infernal light out."

"I hardly know what to do with you—fining you seems to have no effect," said the poor man's magistrate, kindly but seriously. "Still, as you are becoming a public nuisance I shall commit you——"

"Edge a bit, yer worship!" cried the prisoner, hurriedly; "you'll get fined forty blow yerself if you commits a nui—— All right, bobby, all right! Yer needn't spifflicate me!"

THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK.

The old adage anent an east wind was confuted at Kempton yesterday, as it cleared the sky, and provided a delightfully bright day. Society was pretty well represented in the members' train, and the ranks of the holiday makers—who, as holiday makers will, rushed to mass themselves at the water jump, after skirmishing all over the course, in the hope, as a veteran steeple-chaser cynically remarked, of seeing someone get a ducking—were about up to the standard.

The London and South-Western did a wise thing in reducing their fares—a wrinkle which they have taken from their Northern congenors, and it would not be bad policy to stick to the same tariff. The going was excellent, with no slip nor slide about it, and to the pace in the bulk of the fences—here only second to Aintree—must be attributed the spills, which happily were of slight import to man or horse.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

The first of the Internationals on English soil under the ægis of the International Football Federation was played on Saturday at Darlington, an amateur stronghold in Durham, the English Amateurs being opposed by the Netherlands F.A. Looking at the side chosen by England, and particularly the powerful line of forwards, anticipations were that the home country would win in comfortable style, but it was not expected that the margin would be so wide as twelve goals to two. The bare score suggests a team of experts against an eleven of tyros, but those who saw the match are agreed that the figures do not properly represent the run of the game. The Netherlanders played really good football up to a certain point, but the subtleties of the game were absent from their work except in the forward line. The front string was really excellent—fast, clever, and with a competition of the requirements of forward play, but they had the most exasperating luck in their shooting. The half-backs were weak, chiefly because they failed to support their forwards, contenting themselves mainly by defensive work, evidently not having learned the lesson that the best defence is a strong attack. The backs were good, especially Stom, but the goal-keeper obviously lacked experience. The Holland team was one of possibilities, and against an ordinary side would be dangerous customers.

The English team was on its mettle, and for half an hour in the first half it had to give of its very best to hold its own. Brebner at times had to be on the alert to prevent the downfall of his charge, for the opposing forwards did not hesitate to shoot. Corbett and Scothern were a fine pair of backs, but the wing halves at times left something to be desired. Lintott well maintained his reputation in the centre, and kept the forwards plied with the ball. As to the forwards, a few words of general praise should first be given. There was a swing and rhythm about the work which always suggested danger, and how rapidly they settled down is demonstrated by the fact that after England had kicked-off not a member of the visiting side touched the ball until Chapelle kicked it out of the net. Thus England were a goal to the good before the visitors had touched the ball, the last occasion when this happened in an International encounter being when England scored against Scotland in the nineties, when the old Ibrox Park was opened. Stapley at centre was delightful, while Woodward at inside right was immense, and Bell at inside left completed a trio that would shake up the strongest defence in the country. Raine was much the better of the extreme wing men, but he should centre a bit sooner. The refereeing was excellent, the game was fought in a splendid sporting spirit, and the Dutchmen assured me that they would return home with pleasant memories of their visit, to say nothing of the wrinkles they picked up on the field.

Southern League.

Queen's Park Rangers are still at the top. They are showing a tenacity and doggedness of purpose which are equalled only by the stern determination and unflagging efforts of Plymouth Argyle. It is a long time since we had so dour a struggle at this period of the season between a couple of teams for the leadership of the Southern League. It would not have caused any surprise if the Rangers, short of the services of E. H. Lintott, had gone down at Northampton, where so many top weights have at different times had their pride humbled. It was a keen contest, with the Cobblers making desperate efforts to finish up all square, but the odd goal in three gave the West Londoners the victory. Had they made a slip they would have been deposed, for Plymouth Argyle just got home against New Brompton, a team that occupies a much more lowly position than it should, having regard to the constitution of the side. To lose by only one goal at Home Park is a meritorious achievement. The closeness of the games was the feature of the tournament on Saturday, the only exception to the rule being at Leyton, where the home club made a wonderful rally, and heaped disaster upon Luton by scoring five goals without response.

There was only one instance of a visiting team capturing both points, and Bradford must be accounted to have accomplished a fine performance in defeating Millwall at North Greenwich. This result was not expected, and the loss of these points has had an important effect on the position which the Dockers occupy in the tables. It is suggestive of improvement on the part of Portsmouth that they should be able to play Brentford to a draw at Griffin Park, and there is every indication that the Fratton Park brigade will soon be steadily climbing upwards. Tottenham Hotspur will soon be regarding Norwich as a bete noire, for they were overplayed there last season, and their latest visit did not yield them the slightest satisfaction, two of the three goals scored going to the credit of the Citizens. Watford, taking a glance at their recent doing, must not complain at one point coming their way as the result of their home game at Swindon, but Southampton will not be satisfied with the division of the honours at the Dell with West Ham United, who seem to have a penchant for the enclosure where the Saxonians disport themselves. Crystal Palace had a fruitless journey to Reading, but they went down only after a severe struggle.

League Division I.

There were some startling results in the First Division of the League on Saturday. To Southerners the overthrow of Chelsea, at Stamford Bridge, by Bury, was disappointing in the extreme. The outlook was all right at half-time with the Pensioners leading 2—1, but the Shakers came in the second half in no uncertain fashion, and finished up with the odd goal in seven in their favour. Chelsea have thus discounted the value of their win at Preston, and are now only three points ahead of the bottom team, the latter having a game in hand. The West Londoners must really not be guilty of any more blunders of this kind. They cannot afford them. It is much more cheerful to contemplate the result at Goodison Park, where Woolwich Arsenal shared two goals with Everton, and incidentally divided the points for which both were contending. All teams find it difficult to pick up spoils on the Everton ground, and the partial success of the Arsenal is, consequently, the more gratifying, and should stimulate public interest in their doings. Bristol City went even one better at Bolton, for they scored two of the three goals registered, and thus humbled the Wanderers before their own supporters. The Sheffield team had a poor day, for while the Wednesday were defeated at Birmingham 2—1, the half-time score, the United were not able to do better than draw at Bramall-lane against Aston Villa. Middlesbrough gave their supporters great satisfaction by sending Liverpool away empty-handed, and Newcastle United gave further evidence of their return to form by beating Sunderland, at Roker Park, by a couple of goals. The Nottingham teams shared points home and away, the Forest, on their own ground, against Preston North End, and the County, at Blackburn. The struggle between the two Manchester teams saw the United victorious.

League Division II.

Fulham do not win or lose in half-hearted fashion. They score well or allow their opponents to do so. Their jaunt to Stoke was most unfortunate—for Fulham. A defeat by six goals to one cannot be explained away, and it would be futile to attempt the impossible. The result has prejudiced their chances immensely, but they will continue their efforts until success crowns them, and much more unlikely things might happen than for the Cottagers to earn promotion this season. Clapton Orient picked up a very valuable point at Gainsborough, and they should now be able, with moderate luck, to keep well clear of the bottom cluster. The other games went very much in accordance with paper form, Glossop following up their last week's success by a win over Burnley, and Grimsby Town failing at Hull. Derby County had their run of successes stopped at Bradford, where the City obtained three of the four goals scored, but West Bromwich Albion, Leicester Fosse, Wolverhampton Wanderers, and Oldham Athletic all garnered in the maximum number of points.

RUGBY RULES.

NORTH, 3 points; SOUTH, 26 points.

Playing brilliant football in the last quarter of an hour of the game at Hartlepool on Saturday, the South fifteen gained a notable triumph, beating the North by 4 goals and 2 tries to 1 try. As during the period referred to the winners scored four times, it will readily be imagined that the match previously had proceeded on fairly even lines. Indeed, at that point the issue was in considerable doubt. The South held a lead of 5 points, but the North forwards had been for some time and were then playing so strongly that anything might have happened. Adamson only failed by three or four inches to kick a penalty goal for the North, and the South had been struggling for their lives outside their own line. Suddenly there came a brilliant and successful movement by the South backs, and in a few minutes an even fight had been turned into a rout. In a recent article on the building up of England's fifteen emphasis was laid on pace being the first essential in a wing three-quarter, and the great value of that quality was demonstrated in a striking manner on Saturday. All round the South three-quarters were faster than their rivals, but an important factor in the general success was the great speed of Lambert, the Harlequin and left-wing three-quarter. Taking his passes well and running with resolution, he not only gained 2 tries himself, but was practically responsible for a third. In obtaining his two scores he raced round the opposing wing and fell back, leaving them, to use an expressive term, standing still, and he gained his second try from a position in which nine men out of ten would almost certainly have been stopped. In the circumstances, a score was really only possible to a runner of more than an average speed, and Lambert's pace easily carried him clear of the opposition. In defence Lambert bore an honourable share, and was in all respects a success.

Apollo Bunder, BOMBAY.

In the winning of the match Birkett, as the left centre, bore an important share. He did not score himself, but was a tower of strength in defence, and was particularly happy in making openings for Lambert, his wing man. He was in quite his best form, kicking well, tackling resolutely, and passing out cleanly, and he and Lambert were obviously the strongest wing on the field. Lapage and Bennetts did not get on anything like so well together, each making some slips in the giving and taking of passes. Lapage, however, ran skilfully, and gained two tries, one single-handed, while in defence Bennetts left little to be desired. Even with such defects that were in evidence, the South three-quarters clearly had the whip-hand of their opponents, and enough late in finding their top game, eventually gave a superb display, quite, as an attacking force, out-classing their opponents. That such was the case was hardly a surprise, being fully expected by those acquainted with the form of the men. The North three-quarters have all been well tried in important games, and to some extent have been found wanting. Saturday's match left the impression that they were either below their best or have passed it. They by no means played badly, but fell a good deal below the international standard, and that, of course, was the standard by which they had to be judged. Assuming that the Northern selectors choose their men discreetly, one can only conclude that there is a dearth of good three-quarters among the rising generation of players in the North. It is only just to observe that the North three-quarters were badly let down by their halves, and that reflection touches on the vital point of the match. With Mainprice, Stoop, and Claude Palmer all damaged, the English selection committee have necessarily been puzzled over the half-back question, and they must have been sorely disappointed over Saturday's game. Three of the halves—May, Hutchinson, and Coombes—were failures, and Sibree only found his game late in the match. Sibree initiated some capital movements in the closing stages, but Coombes seemed a little overcome by the occasion. The Middlesex pair were much better than the Yorkshiremen, but, speaking broadly, the class was not good enough.

Between the full-backs there was not very much to choose, but it may be said that Kennard, of Lancashire, either has been very much over-rated by the Northern writers or that he did not live up to his reputation. His display on Saturday left the impression that he is a passably good back and no more—certainly he is not a Gamlin. He seemed a little flurried—too eager to get in his kick when no occasion for hurry existed—but possibly that was due to nervousness. The fact that six tries were scored against his side naturally told against him, but he could only be held responsible for two. Lambert twice ran round him, but the same fate would probably have befallen any other back. Kennard kicked with a better length than Wood, but his defence was not as sound. The Gloucester man, as at Taunton the week before, saved splendidly, his methods recalling in a milder degree those of Marsberg, the South African. With regard to the forwards, it was in a way a matters of honours easy. In the first half the South scrummagers had much the best of it; for the greater part of the second half the Northerners had the advantage. The South were smarter in obtaining possession of the ball in the scrummage and were cleverer with their hands in the open, while the Northerners showed superior skill in wheeling the pack and using their feet in the rushes. Each worked on slightly different lines and in turn succeeded to a certain extent. The play of both was robust, the tackling being keen, and in most respects was excellent, the chief weakness being the slowness of the heeling. It cannot be too clearly appreciated that heeling to be effective must be accomplished quickly. If not, the opposing halves have ample time in which to get round and smother the efforts of their opponents to open up the game. Among the forwards the men who stood out most prominently were Slocock, Kelly, Dibble, Bodin, Havelock, and Roberts. The last-named, even if he were not the fine forward he is, would be worth his place by reason of his ability to convert tries. He kicked all the South goals, one shot being particularly good.

There is no need to enter into any lengthy details of the play, and it will suffice to touch on the leading incidents. The South's first score came after about ten minutes. Birkett gave Lambert a chance, and the speedy Harlequin raced down. Kennard managed to pull him down just outside, but Coombes, racing up and dribbling over, scored. The second South try was obtained shortly before half-time, and fell to Lapage, who slipped through the forwards and dodged the centres and full back. It was a mysterious kind of try, and was only rendered possible by the North forwards forgetting the grand old maxim of going for the man with the ball. Between these two scores the South had the best of the play. The North were only once really dangerous, and on that occasion, following a strong attack, Adamson very nearly kicked a penalty goal. In the second half the North forwards went off at a great pace, and soon rushe dover the South line. May, the half, was up with them and scored. Then for a long period the North had all the best of it, and Adamson was unlucky in not kicking a goal from a penalty, the ball striking one of the uprights. Then came the brilliant period to which reference has been made. Sibree started the first movement, which was carried on by Lambert and Birkett, and ended by Lapage with a clear run, going right behind. The next effort began with Roberts picking up cleverly in a rush and passing out. Dibble and Sibree took the ball on, and Lambert raced round. The fifth try fell to Kelly after a long forward dribble, and then in the last minute Lambert, thanks entirely to his tremendous pace, gained the final try after good work by Sibree, Coombes, and Birkett. It was a brilliant finish to an otherwise moderate game.

Several capital matches were decided in the London district on Saturday, but, of course, one or two clubs suffered from the absence of their best players owing to the North and South match at Hartlepool. This was particularly the case in the game between Harlequins and Blackheath at Wandsworth. Harlequins lacked the services of Birkett, Lambert, Sibree, and Grandage, but Blackheath were not so affected, only Hopley and Chambers of their well-known men being away. In an interesting struggle the Harlequins were always slightly the better side, the score—11 points to nil—just about representing the difference in the merits of the two fifteens. Quite the outstanding feature of the match was the brilliant work of the Harlequins' wing three-quarters, A. C. Palmer, the London Hospital man, and R. T. Lewis. The latter gave a delightful display, but Palmer did all the scoring, kicking a penalty goal and gaining a try in the first half and placing a goal from his own try afterwards. The first try was the result of a skilful round of passing, Lewis starting the movement. Young did well at half-back, while Hammond and the two Wards played a useful game forward. On the Old Deer Park the Old Millhillians met with their first defeat. They gave Old Merchant Taylors a splendid game, but the superiority of the Taylors behind the scrummage turned the match. Cockell at half was in great form, and the three-quarters gave and took their passes well. Old Merchant Taylors ran up a score of 4 placed goals, a penalty goal, and a try to a placed goal and two tries, but there was not the difference between the teams that the score would suggest.

Guy's Hospital retained their unbeaten record, but in winning against Rosslyn Park they hardly showed their best form, the football being disappointing. Keeping the game very close, Richmond made a fairly good fight of it in the first half at West Ham against London Welsh, but after change of ends the Welsh backs controlled the play, and Richmond were thoroughly well beaten, their defence being unable to cope with the smart movements of the opposing three-quarters. In the provinces Cardiff sustained their first defeat in a tremendously keen struggle at Llanelly. There was very little between the sides, each scoring a try, but Llanelly improved upon theirs and so gained a fine victory. Leicester, too, secured a rather narrow win over Coventry by 2 tries to nothing; while at Devonport another hard game ended in a draw, Newport scoring a try after Vivyan had kicked a penalty goal for Devon Albion. Swansea went to Aberavon and scored twice against the local fifteen, who might have fared better but that several of their usual men were away. At Portsmouth, United Services were hard put to it in the first half against U.C.S. Old Boys, whose forwards played in excellent style, but the Services pulled themselves together afterwards, and won easily by 18 points to 3.

KARACHI HUNT.

December 15th.—The hounds met as advertised, at the Bunnia's Crossing at 7 A. M. A large field, including five ladies, Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Travers, Mrs. Crouch, Mrs. Seabrook and Miss Skelton, turned out. The Master commenced by drawing the orchards and cultivated ground on the opposite bank of the Lyari, but this did not hold a jack, nor did the Guavas. A jack broke away from the far end of Alli's khete, but the hounds, though they were laid on to his line at once, could make very little of it, and was soon clear to all that we were in for a bad scenting morning. The hounds, hunting very well together, made the most of what little scent there was, and worked out the line to the thick scrub at the foot of the Maggir Pir Hills. Here, the jack was viewed only a short distance in front of the hounds, but so bad was the scent that the hounds could never get on terms with him, until he finally broke across the open. Then, the hounds running him to view almost got him, but he managed to reach the hills with a few yards to spare. Once there, he dodged in and out amongst the bare rocks, which carried no scent. He was soon away over the tops, and the hounds, following him slowly, worked the line out to within half a mile of Maggir Pir. There they could make nothing further of it, so were whipped off homewards. The run, which was a slow one, lasted 1 hour 20 minutes.

December 19th.—Another cold dry morning which promised badly for sport, but we were agreably surprised and had an excellent run. Meeting at the Chokidar's khete, shortly after 7 A. M. the hounds were not long before they found. They rattled their jack at a greater pace, hunting well together and with lots of music. Master Jack set his mask for the hills at the back of the Panjrapol, but being turned by some cattle, he made towards Gomer Dosal khete, over some excellent going. On nearing the khete he turned sharp to the right, and then dropped away down wind back towards Karachi. We finally lost him near the Panjrapol after a capital run of six minutes. Mrs. Graham and Mrs. Seabrooke were the only ladies out.

December 22nd.—The hounds met at the New Jail at 7 A. M. A large field turned out, amongst whom we noticed Mrs. Graham, Miss Osborne, Mr. Jackson, Commander Hewett, Major Anderson, Captain Richardson, Messrs. Skews Cox, Firlonger, Porteous, Newcommon (of the East Lancs), Robson, Anderson, Nicoll, Bredaner Stewart, Woodward, G. O. Boase (R.F.A.), Kennedy, Lawrence, H. Board (24th Regiment), and Hayward. The Master drew the orchards and cultivation round the New Jail. It was very thick, and we had some difficulty in finding our way through. The hounds were some time before finding, when they did find they were soon away, and ran at a good pace across the fallow fields along the Maggar Pir road. Swinging to the right, our jack made a line for the Ruined Cottage, and away on across the Lyari. The hounds finally ran into him after a nice run of 40 minutes. Watering at Graham's Well, the Master then drew the rough scrub near the Ruined Cottage, but, not finding, drew Graham's Spinney. A jack was at home here, but he was a lazy fellow, so the hounds "chopped" him. The hounds did not find again and were whipped off home shortly after 9-30. The feature of the day's run was some hedges, over which some of our leading sportsmen took tosses, but were fortunately none the worse for them, and were soon up and on again. The country is getting very dried up and rain is badly needed. With good Xmas rains, scent and going will be very much improved.

FRONTIER FORCE TOURNAMENT.

25TH CAVALRY vs. 45RD SIKHS.—This game played at Peshawar on the 6th instant opened the tournament and was not productive of very exciting play. The Cavalry had the best of the two opening chukkers and scored twice; but in the third chukker the Sikhs played up and after several good runs notched a goal. The fourth period was very even, but the Cavalry managed to put through again and in the next chukker had the best of the exchanges, adding two more goals. The last period saw the Sikhs making great efforts to score, but the Cavalry defence was too strong for them and they retired beaten by five goals to one. Teams:—

GUIDES INFANTRY vs. 22ND CAVALRY.—A fast and exciting game was witnessed when these teams met on the 7th instant. The first chukker was without score, but during the second each team scored two goals. The Cavalry then took the lead by hitting a goal in the third period, and maintained their advantage during the next chukker. A goal was scored by each team in the fifth period and during the last the Guides equalised amidst great enthusiasm. The goals were then widened and two extra chukkers played during which the Guides notched another point and won the game by five goals to four. Teams:—

23RD CAVALRY vs. 57TH RIFLES.—These teams also met on the 7th instant and put up a good game. Play was fast and exciting throughout, the Rifles not having the best of luck on several occasions. The Cavalry drew first blood and putting on another goal in the second period continued to add to their score till the final score read: Cavalry six goals, Rifles one. Teams:—

WRESTLING.

THE return of the wrestling boom recalls certain features of its prevalence a couple of years ago, and none more insistently than the fact that none of the wrestlers of to-day in the front rank are of English, or even of Anglo-Saxon origin, with the doubtful exception of the man Joe Rogers. The doubt in his case applies not to his origin, of course, for he is unmistakably an Anglo-Saxon; but to his prowess as a wrestler. He had dropped out of the tourney owing to illness, but has since recovered and as his challenge to Hackenschmidt has been accepted, his worth will shortly be estimated. However, leaving him entirely out of the question there is no wrestler in the very front rank to-day who is either a Briton or an American. The giants whose struggle drew a crowded house at the Pavilion recently are a Cossack and a Galician; and the victor is to meet a Russian. It is these men to see whom British multitudes flock; and it is to foreigners almost entirely that the revival in England of stage-wrestling is due.

Now, we have already repudiated on a good many occasions the suggestion that English athletes are a degenerate lot because they do not retain the championship of every purse branch of sport. Nevertheless, we are more than ready to admit that in the attitude of the British public to-day towards wrestling there is a very great deal that is entirely regrettable. It calls to mind a certain article by the late G. W. Steevens—an article called, we believe, "From the New Gibbon." The idea was not an entirely new one, but it was most forcibly and suggestively put. Steevens, in the role of a Gibbon of a future age, dealt with the decline and fall of the British Empire, and the causes which led thereto. One of the chief among these causes was the disposition of the Englishman of the present day to do his fighting and his playing by deputy. The subject races, officered by white men, fought many of his battles in foreign lands; and instead of playing himself at cricket, football, wrestling, boxing, and what not, the Englishman crowded in thousands to see others do so for him.

Now, this is unmistakably a sign of degeneracy, and it has nothing in common with the defeat of our oarsmen by a Belgian crew, our English jockeys by Americans, Gunner Moir by Tommy Burns, the M.C.C. team by the Australians, and so forth. We can afford to lose all the championships in the world, but we cannot afford to lose our active participation in the sports for which our race is famous. A beaten sportsman is a far finer subject than an onlooker, no matter how enthusiastic the latter may be. Our danger lies not so much in being defeated as in ceasing to participate actively in our sports. Nothing could illustrate this danger better than the new wrestling boom. Wrestling is a magnificent sport. As a muscle-maker and a factor for litheness and agility it hardly yields even to boxing. It is a sport, then, of which anyone might be proud, and in which all may take a legitimate interest. What we complain of is, that the British public to-day does not take a legitimate interest in wrestling; for a legitimate interest is the interest of one who can participate in the sport, and can understand it from the practical, not merely the theoretical, side. But of the crowd, let us say, at the Pavilion, how many were wrestlers? Wrestling as an English sport, save perhaps at Grasmere, is practically dead. Most of those who went to see Zbysco and Padoubny recently went not from a love of wrestling. They wanted unhealthy excitement, not to learn how to wrestle themselves.

The same remarks apply to football and even to cricket, where it is a case of thousands flocking to see twenty-two men play a game. They would be better employed in playing even the most rudimentary forms of those games themselves than in watching other men do it for them, no matter how scientifically it be done. Not that the case against displays of cricket and football is so strong by any means as that against wrestling; and for many reasons. For one thing, most people still play, or have played, at cricket and football. But they do not wrestle. Modern wrestling is largely a music-hall affair, a thing of the footlights. And, moreover, people do not go to cricket and football matches on the chance of seeing a sanguinary accident and it is that chance, to be perfectly honest, which attracts a percentage of the spectators to a big wrestling match. Could the fine old English sport of wrestling among the people be revived in England, we should be the first to welcome it. But the interest of the spectator pure and simple we do most heartily deplore.—County Gentleman.

CRICKET AT PATIALA.

AITCHISON CHIEFS' COL. vs. PATIALA C.C.—The Aitchison Chiefs' College played a two days' match with the Patiala Cricket Club on 23rd and 24th December. The former winning the toss sent in Leslie Jones and Bannerji to open the innings, who put on 50 runs in 30 minutes with perfect ease. Half a century being scored for no wicket prompted the captain of the home team to effect a change in the bowling. The change altered the aspect of the game since Gurbakhsh Singh captured Bannerji with his second ball at 51 and Leslie Jones in the next over for 54. Leslie Jones was warmly greeted for his lively innings of 34. Mohindar Singh being l-b. w., and Ghulam Ali Khan clean bowled, the total stood 59 for 4. Then Bhupindar Singh and Nehal Singh made a useful stand and sent the score to 98. The former falling to Gokal Chand for his capital 17 and the latter being held by Sora Singh after a neat innings for 18 gave place to Ram Singh and Keshri Singh, who contributed 10 and 8 respectively to the total. Aitkinson being held by Raghbir Chand, the ninth wicket hit up a dozen more and the innings ended for 127 by luncheon.

After luncheon the homesters put in Gurbakhsh Singh and Gurdial Singh. The latter being rather impatient to make runs ran himself out and made room for Gokal Chand who, with Gurbakhsh Singh, pushed the score to 45 by steady play, but Aitkinson who was bowling well succeeded in getting Gokal Chand off a shooter and Gurbakhsh Singh was caught off him by Ram Singh after making useful 27. Now Sells and Tara Chand were left at the wickets. They were hardly set when Sells fell to Aitkinson. The board showed 62 for 4 when Cater appeared on the scene and put life into the play. Tara Chand, who took long settling down, made a bright stand with his partner, who began hitting with considerable ease and confidence, and gave an excellent exhibition of sound cricket. Several changes in the bowling were effected and the visitors showed their excellence in fielding, yet the pair hit up freely and produced runs quickly. The century was up and 150 shortly after. The captain of the Chiefs, Bhupindor Singh, took the bowling and captured the giant Tara Chand for his 51.

Hosbangji following Tara Chand stood for Cater who scored 71 in 75 minutes and was bowled by Bhupinder Singh at 202. Cater, the captain of the home team, was warmly cheered for his skilful and stylish cricket. The figure, 202, seemed a stumbling block, as four wickets one after the other fell without adding a single run. The last wicket however passed that barrier and added 27 more to make a respectable total of 229.

The Chiefs' College now required 103 to save an innings defeat. They started badly losing 4 of their best wickets for 30 runs only. Luckily Bannerji and Ghulam Ali Khan made a stand and steadily raised the score to 100. Bannerji ultimately fell to Gurbakhsh Singh. The remaining 5 wickets could only carry the total to 118, of which Ghulam Ali Khan's share was 29. The bowling honours rested with Sells and Gurbakhsh Singh, who bowled only three overs. They got four wickets each.

The home team in their eagerness to make the 14 runs lost two wickets; so they won the match by 8 wickets and 4 runs with the following scores:—

"Yes, a doctor's life is an arduous one. I have to get up sometimes three or four times in the middle of the night."

STRAY NOTES.

WHEN running leisurely, the length of the hare's stride is about four feet, but under conditions of fear its leaps extend to ten and twelve feet, while some authors claim that it can jump ditches twenty to twenty-five feet in width. Perpendicularly, a hare can jump on to a five-foot wall. The stride of the rabbit is about two feet; when necessary it can make [redacted] six or seven feet horizontally. A three-foot jump [redacted] the highest that a rabbit can attain in leaping a stone [redacted]

One of the Hon. Walter Rothschild's collectors has recently obtained six fine specimens of the Californian elephant seal. These animals are so called from their having a short trunk-like snout. They were supposed to be almost extinct, as they have been pursued so relentlessly by whalers in the Arctic regions that they are now hardly ever met with. A small herd was, however, discovered on a rocky isle off the west coast of Lower California, and it was from this little colony the above-mentioned specimens were obtained. It is said that no museum possesses a single specimen of this rare seal, so the recent arrivals are a great acquisition.

It is a fact well-known to naturalists that many animals appoint one or more of their number as sentinels to guard against surprise while the rest are asleep, feeding, or at play. Among the animals—using the word in its widest sense—that are thus prudent may be named the following:—Wasps, ants, chamois and other antelopes, prairie-dogs, wild horses, rooks, swans, Australian cockatoos, zebras, quails, certain monkeys, flamingoes, New Zealand silver-eyes, shags and other birds, seals, deer, antelopes, sheep, African wild cattle, guanicoes, and elephants.

It is a well-authenticated fact that the wild creatures of the woods dislike the sound of that solemn hymn, "the Old Hundredth." Muir, the naturalist, proved the truth of this by singing it in the woods of the Sierras to the birds and squirrels, which were very tame. They would come and sit near him upon the branches of trees and listen to any lively tune he might sing, but at the first sound of the "Old Hundredth" they would beat a quick retreat and not appear again until he changed the tune. This experiment was made in different places on various occasions with exactly the same result.

The amazing strength of spiders is shown in a number of well-authenticated instances, said a biologist. Thus, we have an instance of a half-inch spider catching a two-inch fish. The spider weighed 14 grains; it was of the ground, or wolf, family. A scientist came upon it struggling with the fish on the edge of a little pool. Its claws were buried in the fish's tail. Like a fiend the spider struggled to pull the fish up on the bank, and the fish struggled desperately to draw the spider into the pool. The scientist hurried away for a bottle to catch the fighters in. He was gone about half an hour, and on his return the end had come; the fish was dead, and the spider was slowly dragging its victim away.

According to a German newspaper the Swedish Consul at Frankfort has made the valuable discovery of a new means to combat malaria by means of a certain fish which subsists on the larvæ of mosquitoes and thrives in shallow water. By mediation of the Swedish ambassador he communicated the fact to the Italian Government, who took up the matter eagerly and requested the Consul to send a few thousand of these fishes in order to expose them in the swamps and marshes infected with malaria. It proved very difficult to find a sufficient number of fishes, but he succeeded, and a shipment was made to Naples. The success of the experiment (writes the American Consul at Frankfort) is awaited with great interest in Italy and other countries.

The "Pseudomugil signifer," or "blue-eye"—the [redacted] question—is about 1¼in. to 3in. long. The name is due to the brilliant blue colour of the iris; the male has [redacted] black striped fins.

So few capercailzie have been shot within recent years, and those who did obtain any, for obvious reasons, not being over-desirous of advertising the fact, it has been frequently said that this magnificent species of wild bird is extinct in the highlands of Scotland. This, however, is not the case, the fact being that ever since they were introduced into the Strathglass district between forty and fifty years ago, they have never quite died out in that locality. From Guisachan to Rhein-down this long stretch of 24 miles is almost covered with huge fir and larch woods. In these vast wilds the birds have thriven fairly well until the storms of four years ago, exceeding their predecessors in severity, drove the birds lower down in search of food and more congenial circumstances. Here, unfortunately, they were not so safe, with the result that during the past three years at least six of them have been shot. There is yet a fair number in that locality, while several have been seen in the woods in the vicinity of Dingwall. Surely, it is unnecessary to appeal to those who come in contact with these fine feathered creatures to abstain for several years and not cause the utter extinction of one of the most attractive of all the birds in the game-list!

It is very seldom that an opportunity occurs of watching the process of incubation of the eggs of pythons, but this has recently been offered at the Tierpark at Gross Borstel, near Hamburg. In August last, Herr Fockelmann bought a large reticulated python from a sailor trading to the East. Within a month she began to lay eggs, and when one was examined it was found to contain a partly-developed embryo. As time went on, others were opened, and in this way the proprietor obtained a series of specimens of young in different stages of development. The mother python paid the greatest attention to her eggs, leaving them only at night when she went for a time into the bath. An embryo taken from an egg on 15th September measured 25 centimetres long, and the eyes and mouth were plainly discernible. Another, taken out on 9th November was almost fully developed, and lived for about four hours. Three days later five managed to break the shells, but could not free themselves from their covering, and the next day they were dead. On examination it was found that, owing to the dry heat and the weight, the shells had become hardened, and in some cases the eggs were pressed together in a mass. On their removal from the cage they were carefully gone over, with the result that 39 had to be thrown away. Twenty-seven young pythons eventually came out, and their owner described them as very lively little reptiles, with much the appearance of common grass-snakes, measuring from 22 ins. to 30 ins. in length, and biting readily at anything offered to them with sufficient force to make an impression on one's finger. On 25th November they took food for the first time—white mice of a pretty good size. This appears to be the first instance in which this particular species has so bred.

The common house-fly is not so innocent as he looks but really a dirty little thing. He has not a sharp beak-like proboscis, and cannot stab, but he has a soft, dabbing pro-boscis, which he pushes on to every kind of filth as well as walking with his six legs on such matter. Then he comes and wipes off minute particles and germs on to our food, our lips, our fingers, and faces. It is quite certain that he, and others allied to him, are thus the means of spreading typhoid fever in camps where there are open latrines and open larders and mess tables. The house-fly breeds from a maggot, just as the blue-bottle or blow-fly does, but very few people have ever seen or recognised the maggot of the house-fly. The reason is that it lays its eggs in horse dung, and the grubs are hatched in the muck-heaps of stables. That is also the reason why it is much less numerous in London than it used to be, since stables and mews are now fewer and cleaner than they were. It is also reason why the house-fly abounds in ill-kept country inns and farmhouses. Its breeding ground is just outside the window.

There is not only one common house-fly in this country: there are three kinds, in addition to the blue-bottle or blow-fly, which is distinguished at once by its great size and blue colour, and lays its eggs in carrion. Late in the year you may often see what would pass for young or starveling house-flies going about among the others. This is a distinct species, the Homalomyia-canicularis of entomologists. The third kind, only to be distinguished by careful examination with the aid of a magnifying glass, is Anthomyia radicum. Both these are much less abundant than the common house-fly (Musca domestica), with which they almost always occur. Their breeding habits are similar to those of the common house-fly.

A fourth kind of fly is invariably mistaken for the common house-fly when it is noticed, as it sometimes is, in consequence of the sharp stab which it inflicts. They are common enough on the sea shore in autumn, and may be a severe nuisance. People generally take them for common house-flies which have lost their temper in the hot weather and give way to the bad habit of "biting" out of sheer exasperation. Really, of course, a house-fly could not stab or prick with its broad-ended proboscis. The fly in question, which looks almost exactly like a well-grown house-fly, but possesses a sharp and business-like beak or proboscis, is known to scientific men as Stomoxys calcitrans. There are many kinds of Stomoxys scattered all over the world, and it is probable, though not actually proved, that they carry parasites such as the trypanosomes of horse and cattle diseases from one animal to another, as do the species of Glossina or tsetze fly.

But we have yet to learn more about these flies and the parasites they transfer. In the case of the gnat, it has been discovered that the malaria parasite is swallowed by the gnat, and multiplies in it, producing thousands of spores in its blood, and it is these spores which the gnat hands or rather "mouths" on to man. No such multiplication of the trypanosome in the tsetze fly (Glossina) is known. The tsetze fly passes on the trypanosome as it received it, and yet it seems as though it is not any and every biting fly which can pass on the trypanosome of nagana, or of sleeping sickness, but only the particular species of tsetze fly. Perhaps it is a case of greater abundance, the tsetze flies being the obvious and dangerous carriers of trypanosome disease where they occur, on account of their abundance and the fierceness and celerity of their attack. It is almost certain that in India, Burma, and South America some other flies must transfer the trypanosomes from animal to animal, causing the diseases known as surra and mal de caderas, because no tsetze flies—that is to say, no flies of the genus Glossina—occur in those countries, and no other mode of transference, except by some blood-sucking insect, seems probable.

Ants in Africa are carriers of infection, and possibly also in London kitchens, where a little red ant sometimes abounds. The black beetle or cockroach is a creature to be got rid of, as it is very probable that it spreads certain kinds of infection over food and dishes during the hours of "revelry by night" which kind-hearted people allow it to enjoy in their kitchens.

The Story Teller.

THE CUPBOARD SKELETON.

Deep silence reigned in a sunny, costly-furnished room in Fountain Court, Temple. Two young men, good-looking and well-groomed, faced one another before the open window, through which floated, with the rays of autumn sun, a faint echo from the humming Strand.

It was easy to see that these two, who smoked and sipped their whisky and soda in such unbroken silence, were brothers, and also that such thoughts that filled their minds were anything but pleasant.

It was the broader and elder of the two who, having finished his cigar, at length spoke.

"You are quite sure that what Rosalie told you is correct?"

"Quite. Rosalie is a good little girl, and though she is only mother's paid companion, she really is interested in—in—"

"In you? Is that the way the wind blows, Archie?"

Archie Tremayne pulled his fair moustache and laughed a little before he answered.

"Well, yes, Jack. I am fond of her, and I think she cares about me. Surely you don't think the girl would condescend to watch mother and find out the contents of her letters unless she had some genuine incentive to such awfully mean actions."

Jack Tremayne smiled.

"Then it's thanks to your beaux yeux, Archie, that we are being so well primed as to what our mother's intentions are with regard to her marriage."

"Heavens! Jack, don't mention the word 'marriage' in connection with that dreadful man Azel," cried Archie, whom love had made somewhat sentimental.

"Nonsense!" said Jack, in steady, level tones. "It's no use shirking the fact, for it's got to be faced. Plainly, the state of affairs is this: When our father died two years ago, he left his fortune, of about £200,000, absolutely and entirely at the disposal of our mother. I wonder if he knows that his widow is contemplating marriage with an acrobat, a fellow picked out of the streets six months ago by the enterprising manager of a smart music-hall, who rightly judged the public, when he guessed that strong arms, sturdy legs, and a pair of rolling black eyes would draw the town."

"Whether our father knows it or not, it can't make much difference to him, though such a union will mean ruination to us."

"It will, indeed," asserted Archie. "Why, do you know, that in mother's escritoire there is a will duly drawn up, and complete, save for her signature, in which she leaves everything to this man Azel, or Jonas Smythe, as his real name is. That will is to be signed next Saturday, after her marriage."

"How do you know all this, Archie?"

"From Rosalie.—She found by chance a key that fits the escritoire—and—you know, she is so fond of me——"

"That she doesn't stick at a trifle," laughed Jack.

"Seriously, though, the issue at stake is sufficiently important to justify any means. But, Archie, I say—I should take care if I were you, that when you and Rosalie are married, she won't find any more keys by chance."

"After marriage! There'll be no marriage for any of us, if once Mr. Jonas Smythe gets the fingering of our mother's fortune."

"But how are we to stop the business which is fixed for next Saturday. To-day is Tuesday—the time is short."

"All the more reason for at once maturing some plan."

"No good saying he's married already, is there?" queried Jack, lighting a fresh cigar and preparing another drink.

"None. First because mother's had the good sense to ascertain that for herself, and second, because she would believe his word in the face of a hundred marriage certificates."

"She must be mad. Ah! an idea. Cant we pretend that—"

"Don't talk nonsence, Jack. We can't shut the old lady up without there being a lot of talk and scandal, which is what we must try to avoid. As yet no one knows of the affairs beyond ourselves, Rosalie, and mother's lawyer, who is not likely to spread such a discreditable story."

"Won't Azel have boasted of his luck!"

"I fancy that he is a little afraid of attracting notice by bragging before he has landed his quarry. It is, however, announced that his engagement at the Piara Music Hall terminates Friday next, as he is going to take a long holiday abroad."

"The papers say that!" suddenly cried Jack Tremayne, starting to his feet.

Archie nodded assent.

Then I think I see our way clear."

"Then he closed the window, and for the next two hours the brothers conversed in hushed voices and whispering tones

By half-past nine on Friday evening the Piara Music Hall was crammed to its utmost capacity. The crowd had assembled to take temporary farewell of the great acrobat, Azel, who, during the few months he had been before the public, had won immense popularity by his brute strength and coarse comeliness.

A perfect roar of applause greeted the hero of the evening as he bounded on the stage, in all the glory of pink fleshing and well-oiled curly black hair. He showed a set of square teeth as he smiled and bowed; then, as the orchestra crashed out the first bars of a waltz, he waved his hand towards the only box which was shrouded by its curtains, and began the business of his "turn."

That box, dark and apparently empty, was the one blot on the aspect of the brilliant house. Pretty women, sparkling with diamonds, and conscious of white shoulders and snowy arms, sat in serried ranks all round the horse-shoe tier. Men in immaculate linen and speckless broadcloth, lounged and smoked, while in the promenades a mass of people surged silently, except when a woman's light laugh, or a popping cork sounded high above the music.

Azel had nearly finished his performance when a discreet tap sounded at the door of that curtained box. It was just above the stage, on the left, and its solitary occupant was at first too absorbed in watching the acrobat to hear the gentle summons.

But it was a hurried and insistant knock, and so perforce the lady (who was richly dressed and wore some fine diamonds in her greyhair) tore her eyes from the stage and opened the door.

A roughly-folded scrap of paper was handed to Mrs. Tremayne, for it was the bride-elect of Azel who had been hidden by the drooping plush curtains all the evening. The messenger then disappeared in the crowd, leaving the lady to decipher the ill-spelt scrawl at her leisure.

"Don't cum to the stage dore, ternight" it ran, go straight home, and I'll try to cum to supper, if not will mete you in the morin as per arrandgment—J. S."

Azel's turn was now finished, and a wave from Mrs. Tremayne's hand pointed his final exit from the stage.

His first action on reaching his dressing-room was to swallow a large brandy and soda, his second to open and easy to read some half-dozen letters lying on the table.

One only among them was in a woman's hand, and he screwed his fine eyes into a broad smile as he read.

"Bless my soul, how sentimental the old gal is to be sure. Wants to see me partickler to-night, and not at 'ome either. Afraid of arousing suspicion. Lor! one would think she was fifteen, she's so shy. Will I drive down to the little nest she's took at Chiswick? Will I? Won't I. It's a long way, but there's too much hanging to this job to spoil it at the last. Besides, it's only for another twelve hours. When she's my wife—. Here, Jim, hurry up with my dress clothes. What's this in a P.S. 'Mind and take the hansom with a roan horse, standing twelve yards to the right of the stage door. The driver knows the shortest way.' Well, I don't mind anything to avoid driving about all night. Besides, I'm jolly hungry and want some supper."

Twenty minutes later, the great Azel, gorgeous in evening raiment, "oiled and curled like an Assyrian bull," waved adieu to his friends at the Tiara, and jumped into a cab drawn by a fine up-standing strawberry roan, which drew up at the stage door as he emerged from it.

Six months of wet foggy winter passed, and made room for the brightest and warmest spring within the memory of the oldest inhabitant.

Mr. Murray, the principal house and estate agent of Chiswick, stood in the doorway of his office, where he combined the booking of coal orders with the lucrative business of selling and letting houses. At the end of the street, the river sparkled and twinkled as it rolled seawards, and just before him a chestnut tree was bursting into leaf. The sun warmed Mr. Murray to his very bones, and put him in the best of humours.

He suddenly turned his head into the office, where a pale clerk sat on a high stool, for ever studying the wondrous advantages possessed by the residences to let or sell on Mr. Murray's books. "Edwards," he cried, "if this weather goes on, we shall have everything snapped up before Whitsuntide—I think I'll have a look round some of the liveliest little cribs. Some of 'em may want a bit of overhauling after the bad winter. Bring the keys of those bungalows down Bank Lane. They generally go first. They're quiet and small, and very popular with young men."

One or two houses had been looked over before Mr. Murray unlocked a green door set in a high brick wall, and entered a thickly-grown damp-looking garden.

"Now this place I do call dull," he said to Edwards, as they walked up the grass-grown path. "I don't like noise, but it always strikes me that this place is a bit too quiet. The last tenant, Mr. James, he called himself, evidently thought so too, for though he had paid a year's rent for the place when he took it, he sent the keys back at the end of a week. Umph! he took care though to shut it up before he left," and the house agent glanced up at the small windows, which were all closely shuttered.

"Faugh! the place smells like a tomb," he cried, as he entered a little square hall, which literally oozed with damp.

"Open the shutters, for goodness' sake, Edwards, and let in some fresh air and sunshine." He turned into a room on the right, and quickly unbarred and raised the grimy windows, but on his return to the hall, he found Edwards still struggling with the opposite door.

"It's stuck, or else there's something against it."

"Nonsense! it's swelled with the damp," cried Mr. Murray, as he flung his burly body against the panels, till the rotten wood started from the frame and fell with a crash into the room.

Then the police were fetched, and the awful thing which once had been a man was covered up and taken away.

It was unrecognisable, for neither papers nor jewels were found upon it. But amid the scattered debris of wood and plaster which had been torn from the walls of his living grave by the wretched prisoner in a frenzy of starvation and despair, was found a little medal of copper, thinly gilt.

It bore this inscription:

Solution to Problem No. 48.

A has led from ace, 10 to four diamonds. If Z makes five clubs at once he will have to weaken his hearts and spades by discarding, and, unless he makes a lucky finesse in one of these suits, he will have a poor chance of going game. On the whole, his best plan is to put A in with a diamond, sacrificing his chance of making the king. A will make his three diamonds, and on the last B will probably discard so as to show A his suit. Z should follow B's discard, throwing from the same suit. If led up to in hearts or spades, he is certain of one trick in the suit led, and will probably make two, which, with five tricks in clubs, and one in diamonds, will take him out.

Prolem No. 49.

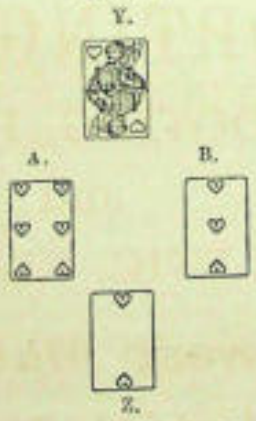
Score: A B 24; Y Z 0. Z deals and declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy)—Hearts, queen, knave; diamonds, king, 10, 2; clubs, knave, 6, 5; spades, queen, knave, 10, 8, 2.

Z's Hand (Dealer)—Hearts, king, 9, 4, 2; diamonds, ace, queen, 7, 5, 3; clubs, king, 9, 4; spades, ace.

The first trick is as follows:—

Trick 1.



How ought Z to play the hand and why?

Previous to the Cambridgeshire of 1862, some of the starts for the big events had been anything but satisfactory, and for the race under notice Admiral Rous had volunteered to assist the starter, Mr. McGeorge.

The Admiral fondly believed his presence would keep the jockeys in check, and did not anticipate the slightest difficulty in despatching the big field assembled at the starting-post. When the ceremony of counting the runners was about to take place, however, it was suddenly discovered that the tissue with the names of the starters had not been received, and the old salt thereupon declared they would have to wait until it arrived.

After a tiresome delay, Lord Coventry cantered down to the post, and, matters having been adjusted to the Admiral's satisfaction, he turned his attention to the business in hand.

"You blue and white cap," he commenced directly after reaching his station on the opposite side of the course to McGeorge, "I've got my eye on you"; and so he went on at intervals.

After a few false starts the handicapper's patience was exhausted, and the unruly conduct of the riders much incensed him.

"Take them all back two hundred yards," shouted Rous to the starter. "Half of them are in front of the post; it will be no race."

Though the Admiral gesticulated, threatened, and remonstrated in a style that told plainly of much experience in the same line at sea, a lot of the lightly-weighted division would persist in trying to "pinch" a few lengths at the start, and eventually the flag fell, though the Turf Nestor was far from satisfied, and the following year he was content to remain at the other end of the course.

SPORT AS A CIVILISING FACTOR.

To urge in a sporting journal the claims of sport and games to be regarded as valuable factors in the promotion of human progress necessarily incurs suspicion of special pleading in the eyes of those who take no interest and no share in sport of any kind, for these have no opportunity of discovering how far participation in sport goes to obliterate the great barriers that race feeling otherwise maintains between Black and Brown on the one hand and White on the other. Mr. Campbell Oman, in the course of some singularly clear-sighted and discriminating remarks on the social relations existing between ourselves and the natives of India, has this passage (Brahmans, Theists, and Muslims of India, page 231): "Sports in which both Europeans and natives meet in friendly rivalry also afford opportunities, not very numerous it is true, for the men of the two races to understand and appreciate each other: for tiger-hunting, and such games as polo, football, and cricket have a tendency to draw out certain good points of men's characters, whether the players be white or brown." We know that we come into closer and more intimate touch with the native on the race course, polo ground, and cricket field than we do anywhere else: we are brought in contact over business and public affairs but in either case either party stands upon his own ground and if the interests which bring the two in contact are not antagonistic, they are not of a nature to develop true understanding. It is only when white and brown meet on neutral ground on which no material interests are at stake, on which formalism and convention are set aside that the natures of either appear before the other in practical nakedness. Perhaps the explanation may lie in the circumstance that deep down in us remain the instincts of primitive man, and sports and games appeal to primitive instincts; hence we find a common foundation of the firmest description on which to build up common interests with our native fellow sportsmen. We may doubt whether our missionary friends would accept this as an explanation; but they would be the last to deny the value of cricket and football as a means of cultivating a good understanding with their young scholars. The popularity of English games has spread enormously among the native races of India since Sir George Campbell's interests in the baboo led him, in Ali Baba's words, "to encourage pedestrianism and football." Teams of natives meet teams of whites on the cricket and football field and hold their own: we have never heard it suggested that this development has produced any but satisfactory results. The appeal is certainly to the primitive instincts, but it need not remain there: we had much rather regard it as the beginning of an era of mutual understanding which will not, for all time, be confined to the sporting arena, of necessity progress must be very slow in this country: here we have two forms of civilisation, one of unfathomable antiquity, the other a thing of yesterday by comparison marching side by side, the latter ever trying to move the dead weight of the former and trying in vain. The white man may meet the native daily for years on the cricket, polo, and football grounds, and he may meet him in the paddock and on the racquet court for a change and the understanding between the two may be perfect, based on mutual esteem grown out of respect for fair play and prowess, but when the sun is down, when the lamps are alight, and the white man and black are, each in his own home amid his own surroundings, can we say that years of mutual enjoyment of sport have done much to remove race barriers? The white man would no more walk into his native friend's home as he would into the home of a European acquaintance than he would expect his native friend to "drop in" and bring his womankind. Nevertheless the beginning has been made, and a glance over all the institutions the natives share with us leads to the view that more is to be hoped from sport than from any other institution.

Nor is it only in this country that sport is playing its part in cementing good relations between white and dark. We were reading a few days since an account of football and cricket matches played between Kaffir teams in the Transvaal, and there are points in Kaffir play which appear to us very suggestive. Nobody will urge that the South African Kaffir is a very high type of humanity, it is acknowledged by all who know him well, not excepting missionaries fearless of truth-telling, that the adult Kaffir is a very low type indeed. The circumstance that the young men, up to the age of seventeen or eighteen, are much superior intellectually and morally than themselves at a later age and seems to indicate degradation from a higher type at some remote period, but with that we need not concern ourselves: the point we make is that the adult Kaffir is a savage and a tolerably low one at that. Yet what is seen when the Kaffir takes to football? We should hardly suspect him possessed of an idea of sportsmanship: we should regard it as only natural did his football match degenerate into a "dog fight" when his blood was warmed, and his cricket into simple clubbing when a dispute required settlement. We confess ourselves frankly surprised to read that an Association football match between two teams representing two locations 30 miles apart was an exhibition of scrupulously fair play, "the game," says the writer to whose essay we refer, "was not only the most exciting but also the most enjoyable to watch owing to the absolute cleanness of the play from beginning to end. In spite of desperate keenness I never saw one intentional foul." It was the same on the cricket ground: the men displayed both skill and innate sense of fairness which is much more important: that players and onlookers alike danced and howled with delight "charged with wild yells at the last man out who had made top score and carried him round the ground" are mere details: so is the fact that the players affect European dress and display a certain dandyism. The cardinal fact remains that the Kaffir whose honesty in-ordinary walks of life is far from being irreproachable and whose manners and customs in the home circle leave much to desire—becomes almost a different being when he plays an English game: he is an imitative animal; but the imitativeness which leads him to assimilate the spirit of games and carry it into practice in the hour of keen rivalry is the most hopeful, the most promising indication of the higher possibilities of his nature that has yet come to our knowledge. We have all heard of instances of rare self-denial, of gratitude and self-sacrifice on the part of black man and brown in connection with whites they regarded as their friends. We know there are on record examples of heroism which move us to more than respect for the individual; but even these revelations of an innate higher nature are less prolific of ground for hope than the circumstance that the black man playing with black men and entirely without the present example or restraining influence of white rivals or comrades adopts in its entirety the spirit of fair play.

Sports and games then are matters to be taken into serious account by those entrusted with the destinies of an empire like our own. The policy of leaving as far as possible alone the private and social affairs of the alien races we govern is obviously the right one; it is an admission that the white man does not think as the brown and black, that the standards of each are as the poles apart and are not to be drawn nearer by artificial means. If, however, anything can bring races so widely different one from the other to see larger affairs from a more nearly identical point of view, we believe that the medium will prove to be sport. It has done not a little to promote better understanding between the nations of Europe and we hold confidently the belief that in the long run it will lay the foundation of better understanding between races much more widely separated.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THERE was nothing very startling about the racing on either the second or third days of the Second Meeting, but there were good fields mostly finishing up in a bunch, pleasant weather, and pretty open races, so that when one did have the good fortune to spot a winner a satisfactory price could usually be got about it. The two big events, the Prince of Wales' Plate on Tuesday and Merchants' Plate on Saturday, both furnished surprises, Mr. Galstaun winning the first with his unbacked second string, Paddy's Darling, with his much fancied Cinder Bill fourth and Footprint, who started at 15 to 1, pulling off the latter. This little horse is looking very well indeed and has obviously been much underrated by the handicappers as with 9lb. overweight up he drew clear of Beaunero in the last few strides with ease and looked as if in a longer race his lead would have been still further increased. It will be remembered that carrying the same weight he was only beaten last year by Mallard with 9st. 11lb. up by a head in this race.

MOTHER GOOSE put up a very good performance on Saturday in running third in the 7 furlong Bhowanipur Plate and then coming out again and winning the City Plate round the course with 8st. 7lb. up. The mare, who is a well bred one, (Perigord —Fairfield Maid) has been a great disappointment up to now, as she has at times been much fancied, and carried a lot of money, notably last season in the Paddock Plate, when she started at 2 to 1, but was unplaced, and this is the first occasion on which she has given to her owners "a bit of their own back." There is not very much to be said about the other races on either day. On Tuesday Lady Grey II. won the Clyde Plate comfortably from Recovery, Mandeville, who was much backed, dying away to nothing after 4 furlongs, which is about his distance. Flotsam, who was the outsider of the five horses starting in the Howrah Plate, sprang a great surprise on them all and beat the favourite, Ferndown, comfortably by three lengths. Jackeroo won a very good race in the Sealdah Plate, Carnival and Sugar Apple making a great fight for second place. We have referred above to the Prince of Wales' Plate where Paddy's Darling, well ridden by young Fraser, beat Wandin, the favourite, by three-quarters of a length. Winsome was first out of the 17 starters in the St. Georges', 5 furlongs, but if Conscience, who finished second, had drawn a better starting position, the result might easily have been the other way about. In the Princep Plate, the last race of the day, Pendred won, cantering, from Lipscombe. The going was heavy consequent on the rain and times bad throughout.

SATURDAY'S card embraced no less than eight events. We have already referred to the Merchants' and City Plates. The Midget Pony Handicap at last gave a win to Son of a Gun, now everyone is sick of backing him and he started at 10 to 1! Circus Girl and The Point were much fancied but the latter though getting off well and dashing away to the front, was finished before he had got very far and Circus Girl could get no better than third. Foy won a good race in the Bhowanipur Plate. He came through from last with great effort, beginning at the ¼ mile and only getting clear of the bunch in the last few strides. Recovery, who had ran second to Lady Grey II on Tuesday, had no difficulty in winning the 14-2 race with Scott's mare out of her way. Musette and Abet were favourites for the Selling Handicap but there was no race about it as the firstnamed led all the way and was never troubled by the other, who was second. This was one of the worst starts that has been seen on the course, they were all kicking about at the gate, and when it went up they seemed to struggle out of it one by one. Windy won the second Bhowanipur Plate comfortably. She stayed with her field for 3 furlongs and then came right away from them, Pelargonium following her home. Lady Grey made the running for the first 2 furlongs in the Hooghly Plate, 5 furlongs, for which she was favourite and from thence there was a great race between Ferndown, Paddy's Darling and Manlock, all down the straight, the firstnamed just getting home a length at the finish.

THE jumping brigade had a rest throughout the week as there were no events over hurdles on either day, but they are going to have a good innings again soon, as on 7th February there is an extra at Tollygunge which will give them a chance of showing their prowess, and it is possibly with this in view that only nine have entered for the hurdle race on 25th January. There was very little schooling also on Tuesday, only Kingpin (Mr. Evers), Trustee (T. (Ferguson) and Lord D. (Bloss), going out. The firstnamed went particularly well and Trustee fenced fairly, but Lord D., tiring at the finish, came down at the hurdle in front of the stand, apparently without any ill effects.

PARTICULARS of an interesting sale of blood stock at Mr. J. Rowan's stables at 36, Old Ballygunge Road will be found in our advertisement columns. This is a new and welcome departure for Calcutta, and as in addition to Mr. Rowan himself such well-known trainers and owners as O. M. D. Bell, J. C. Galstaun, J. D. Scott, G. H. L. Mackenzie, G. Harper, A. N. Dass, Mumford, etc., etc. are including lots, there will be a magnificent string from which aspiring racing men can make purchases.

"VAULTING ambition o'erleaps itself" would be a good motto for the fourth Calcutta paperchase. The Salt Lake courses have a name for speed and the hunters assembled in large numbers to display their prowess, but they had reckoned without the heavy going for which the late rains are responsible and now arnica and lint are at a premium in Calcutta. The best of hunters at times find it difficult to take off properly from lumps of soft mud when going sixteen annas and one of the first walls proved the undoing of such leading lights as Dr. Hossack, Captain Fraser and Mr. M. Milton. The steeds undismayed by the fall picked themselves up somewhat more quickly than their riders and continued the pursuit of the paper, Mr. Milton's mount actually completing the whole course riderless and finishing a good third. Lady Gold, however, found another rider; leaving Dr. Hossack the mare went off on her own and proved a godsend to Mr. Bletsoe, who had just perforce parted company with Wake Up at the next wall and gladly secured the conveyance that fate had provided for him. Mr. Halliday is out of luck this season as Ruddigore is laid up for some time to come with a strained back, the result of the fall in the third chase, and he got another crumpler this time with a fine looking brown horse from the Viceregal stables. Even old Turk refused once, and Corydon made a mistake that might easily have caused an upset to a less clever animal or with a less experienced horseman than Dr. Forsyth on top. At the finish there were but few of the hard riding brigade left and Turk, who had the legs of them all sufficiently to recover his position, made a dead heat of it for the first place with Lucifer, Mr. Milton's riderless horse third. The final order was: Mr. Rees on Turk and Mr. Scaramanga on Lucifer, dead heat, Mr. Robertson on Solanus, Mr. Fitzgerald on Fermoy, Miss Wheeler on Trilby, Mr. Curtis Hayward on a bay, Dr. Forsyth on Corydon, Mr. Dudley Myers on Sir Walter, Mr. Maurice Turner on Lord Harry, Captain Holden on Jasper, Mr. Bertram on Myrene, etc., etc.

THE ponies did not assemble in quite such great numbers as of late, but there were a very fair crowd of them. Mr. Maurice Turner came to grief with Sea Gull going hard in front and Miss Curtis Hayward, Mr. Stewart, Mr. Campbell and two or three others also had falls. At the finish Minstrel Boy revenged himself on Emerald for his last week's defeat, and the final order was: Mr. Robertson on Minstrel Boy, Mr. Turner on Emerald, Mr. Bertram on Blazes, Mr. Corbett on Pink 'Un, Mr. Cowper on Envious, Mr. Tigart on a bay, followed by Mr. Mackenzie on R. B., Mr. Hadow on Hempy, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Stokes, Miss Waterhouse on a bay, Mr. Everson on Reha, Mrs. Paris on Zig Zag, Mr. Macdonnell on Miss Preston, Mr. Turner on Sea Gull. Among others chasing were Miss Curtis Hayward on Lady Wilful, Mr. Stokes on Irish Boy, Mr. Damiano on a bay, Mrs. Forsyth on Greyman, Mrs. Dudley Myers on Napier, Miss Thomas on a chestnut, Mrs. Hadow on a brown, Mr. Barrow on Puck, Mr. Campbell on a bay, Mr. Deakin on a grey, Mr. Levetus on Prince Moorfield, Mr. Long on a bay, Captain Elgee on Matilda, Captain Brocklehurst on a bay, etc., etc.

THAT sporting body, the Calcutta Light Horse, are gradually approaching the climax of their season. Camp is fixed for 9th to 23rd February and every one says is going to be a big success this year. Then follow their three big events, the Balaclava Stakes, which will probably be at the extra meeting on 29th February, the Paperchase Cup, and the Chart and Compass Race. It is early days to look for likely winners of these, but it is reported that Mr. Evers has bought Craigendarrie for the ranks and presumably will run him in the first named, while the best charger out chasing so far is Mr. Scaramanga's Lucifer, whose present condition does his owner much credit and is a striking contrast to his poverty last season. We noticed another charger, Prince Moorfield, after the paper on Wednesday, but he was going very modestly in the rear and seems to need a lot of schooling yet.

THE polo tournament for the Tradesmen's Cup was concluded at Rawalpindi on the 17th instant when the 10th Hussars "A" Team met and defeated the Seaforth Highlanders by 4 goals to 3. It was a splendid game and the scores were level at the end of the sixth chukker, but in the extra period the Hussars scored and won as stated. The Teams were :—Seaforth Highlanders.—Captain Carden, back ; Captain Buchanan, 3 ; Mr. Maclachlan, 2 ; Mr. Anderson, 1. 10th Hussars "A" Team.—Mr. Palmer, back ; Mr. Palmer, 3 ; Major Sir S. Milbanke, 2 ; Captain Annesley, 1.

THE third test match was won easily by the Australians, who thus win the rubber. England had a lead of 78 runs in the first innings and in the second innings took four Australian wickets for 133 runs, but the Colonials made a remarkable recovery and ran their score to 506 before they were all disposed off, Hartigan 116, and Hill 160 being the chief contributors. With 429 to make to win the M. C. C. lost five wickets for 139 and were all out for 183, Australia winning by 245 runs.

MELBOURNE INMAN, the billiard player, is matched to play Mike Elias, Champion of India, at the Calcutta Concert Hall on Friday and Saturday, Elias receiving 850 in a game of 2,000 up. On Monday Stevenson meets Inman.

THE big game hunter who takes out a £50 game license at Nairobi, British East Africa, can scarcely complain that he does not get good value—on paper—for his money. Once furnished with this document, he may shoot two elephants, two rhinos, two hippos, two zebras, two gemsboks, one eland, one sable hippotrage, one roan hippotrage, two koodoes, two tapirs, two haartebeste, one bongo, two aardvarks, two cheetahs, two marabouts, two egrets, ten antelope of various species and ten chevratains. All these he may slay and capture—if he can find them. A confirmed grambler might perhaps kick at the short allowance of bongos and hippotrages, but the supply of chevratains seems princely.

THE 4th Cavalry have won the Connell Cup Polo Tournament at Allahabad for the fifth year in succession ; they beat the 2nd Lancers in the final game by two goals to one. Details elsewhere.

THE only addition to the list in the final entry for the Civil Service Cup is Mr. Rose's b aus g The Point. This brings the total number to twenty-four : the full list is published further on.

A TRAGIC occurrence took place at Hyderabad City last week, a young native woman being killed and mutilated by one of the Nizam's shikar elephants. She is, we are given to understand, this rogue's sixth victim and it is satisfactory to learn that he has since been shot by order of H. H. the Nizam.

NUMEROUS indeed have been the devices employed to get rid of the rabbits in Australia, but the most successful, so far, is that employed by Mr. W. Rodier in New South Wales. He observed that whenever buck rabbits exceed the does in number, they kill all the young ones, apparently to prevent a new generation of rival suitors coming on the scene. They then persecute the does to such an extent with their marital attentions that these cease to breed, and finally die out, the bucks themselves dying in the natural course of things. Mr. Rodier, therefore, some years ago, enclosed the whole of his land with wire netting, caught alive all the rabbits he could, killing the does and setting the bucks at liberty. The rabbits killed themselves out, and he can now ride over the whole of his run and hardly see a rabbit while his neighbours' lands are still swarming with them. This plan is to be commended to the Office of Woods in relation to their newly-acquired estate in Argyllshire, where it is intended to start a scientific State forestry.

TIGER SMITH, the ex-Hussar and well-known boxer, who has not so far been a success in the prize ring at home, is to meet Jack Costello, of Birmingham, in a twenty-round contest at Sheffield, on the 27th instant.

SATISFACTORY progress is being made with the vast work of preparation for the 1908 Olympiad and the first detailed draft programme of events will probably soon be issued. The dates for all the games have not yet been definitely decided upon, but many have been fixed. It will be remembered that originally the idea was for football and other games to be decided in the spring of this year, but insuperable obstacles arose, and it is now officially announced that so far at any rate as the Stadium competitions are concerned, there will not be any contests during the spring. So far as the dates are fixed they are appended :—

GOLF.—1st, 2nd, 3rd June.

POLO.—During week ending 20th June, with finals on latter date, at Hurlingham.

ROWING.—28th July, at Henley.

SHOOTING.—8th, 9th, and 10th July, at Bisley.

YACHTING.—27th, 28th, and 29th July, at Ryde.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL, HOCKEY AND LACROSSE.—October.

The dates for lawn tennis, racquets, and other sports will be fixed as soon as possible. As to skating, speed contests have been abandoned, but figure skating will take place, presumably at Prince's in October.

WRITING to the Times with reference to the proposal made by Mr. Reginald Gilbert, in his lecture at the Society of Arts on "Big Game in India," that in future the Government rewards in India should be paid for killing man-eating tigers only, and not for killing tigers, Mr. J. D. Rees says :—

I have twice brought this matter before the House of Commons, asking that inquiry should be made into the indiscriminate offer of rewards by the Government of India, and by local government in India.

Tigers may be roughly divided into three classes, the deer-stalker, the cattle-lifter, and the man-eater—the latter being no more common amongst tigers than murderers amongst men—and all of them in their degree keep down the head of deer and the sounder of pig which destroy the crops of the cultivators. They operate only on the margin of cultivation, for tigers, though the fact is not generally known in this country, do not walk about the streets in India seeking whom they may devour, as lions actually do in parts of Africa. The only tiger I ever knew who acted in this manner was discovered after his death to have been suffering from some abnormal pressure on the brain, so that he was not accountable for his actions.

It may be taken as an invariable rule that tigers live just where cultivation presses up to the forest edge, where they are the best friends of the cultivators, whose crops are devastated wholesale in such situations.

There is no difficulty whatever in confining the reward to man-eaters, as the tiger is a personage everywhere well known, not only to the monkeys and the birds who announce his movements from the tops of the trees, but to the villagers themselves, who can discriminate perfectly well, and can inform any sportsman who wants to know which animals are their rare enemies amongst the many who are their frequent friends. As I said in the House of Commons a differential tariff on tigers presents no difficulty whatever, man-eaters being far better known to the villagers in India than murderers are to the police in Europe. Under existing regulations these useful and beautiful creatures are slain wholesale in the most unsportsmanlike manner without giving them a chance, by the village shikaris, who make a living by earning the Government reward.

My action in bringing the matter forward was approved by the Indian Press, though naturally it was regarded as absurd in certain quarters in the House of Commons, wherein the creed obtains that all tigers are man-eaters, all Anglo-Indian administrators angels of light. Tigers are not vegetarians, neither are we, and if we are monogamous, so are they, unlike the Kulin Brahmins of Bengal, and when more than two tigers are seen together, the sportsman may conclude that he is intruding upon a family party. The deer-stalker is a gentleman sportsman whose life is spent in well doing, for he kills the deer that eat the crops, that feed the cultivator, who pays the land tax, which keeps up the Indian Empire. Cattle-lifters no doubt have much of the poacher in their composition, but they generally only prey upon the feebler or less valuable members of a herd, and the villagers are willing that they should take toll, in recognition of the good they do, in destroying the crop destroyers. A herd together can repulse a tiger, and only stragglers, calves, or weaklings fall victims.

Man-eaters are responsible for quite a small number of the deaths from wild animals in India and, as the truth should be told regardless of the feelings of party politicians, is confirmed by Mr. Lydekker in his recent work on the Game Animals of India, though I would join issue with him when he lays it down that tigers cannot climb. I know for a fact that they possess this accomplishment. But the point is that they should not be exterminated wholesale, and I sincerely hope that Mr. Gilbert will be more fortunate than I have been in persuading the authorities to revise their tariff.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The Bombay hounds last bye-day provided two good runs, one of which resulted in a "kill," the morning being cool with plenty of dew making scent perfect till the sun came up. No less than nine side saddles were out—a credit to the gentler sex who show rare pluck over this dangerous country. Meeting at the cross-roads, the first jack went away from the Chuckla covert, past Sabar and the Kalina tank into an enclosure near the barracks. Thence into a house in the village, back into the enclosure and out again towards the Kurla Creek. This the field could not cross but viewed the finish near the opposite bank.

A move being made to Sabar another was very soon put up, but though he gave hounds a rare run it was not satisfactory from the field's point of view. All was well till crossing the Backwater when after a check at a steep hill the under-growth was so thick that progress was difficult. Twice riders had to dismount, once to cross a dangerous aqueduct with no guard rails and once to cross the Tansa water pipe, and just caught a glimpse of the pack on a steep hill before the jack escaped in the thick wood and saved his brush.

This Tuesday again there was an extra day, the Meet being at the Club on a very nippy morning. Both the Jackal Hill and Chuckla Hill coverts were blank but the mango tope at the Andheri Road gave up a jack who provided a fine long run and saved his brush. He moved throughout at a marvellous pace, the field all the time finding it difficult to keep up anywhere but in the open. A number missed the latter part as they followed hounds into a dense wood which, as a matter of fact, the jack did little more than skirt. There was only one check, and that a short one at a stony nullah, and the quarry gave them the slip after a fine run in the thick woods on the hills between Vehar and Goregaum.

Thursday's run was again a long one but, as before, without a kill. A large field met at Santa Cruz, the mornings still being cold and dewy, and from Sabar a jack was soon abroad. Over Bomanwadi Valley to the mango tope by the Andheri Road to Marole-there is only one bit of bad melon ground but up the Cavy Hill there is trouble for horses and before they reach the flat hounds are far ahead. A check gives the field time to catch up as the hunt proceeds up a hill and down its side into the aloe plantations. Crossing a stream the jack enters a thick jungle from which he could not be induced to break and thus escaped.

Though we all of us fear the uncertainty of new pony races there are large crowds every week tumbling over one another to back the "good things" in these events, which on Saturday last provided five out of a card of eight events. The victories of first and second favourites up to the present have caused no little anxiety amongst the books, but on this occasion they had a bit the better of it despite the success of three favourites.

The Little Nursery Plate was divided into three and in the first of these the favourite, Disguise, won very comfortably from the unsupported Orby, with Lassa, who was a last moment fancy, nowhere. Not so successful were we in the second when Good Chance and Hooded Falcon were equally backed, as though the race rested between them with Saraband for a place. Hooded Falcon has not run before and the stiff way in which he galloped does not suggest his ever winning. Good Chance, on the other hand, looked all over a winner, but Williams took too big a chance in waiting in front and unable to get him going again soon enough, was beaten on the post by Saraband with Taylor riding an excellent finish. Again in the third a pony only fancied for a place, Print Craft, won. Disfigure, a smart 13·2 chestnut with white socks, was well backed on a gallop, and had he got away with the rest would undoubtedly have won, such a remarkable finish did he put in.

With twenty-eight entries, the Nursery Plate was divided and the first provided the upset of the day. Winter, who ran well second to Respectable, was first favourite from his stable companion Devon. Transfer made the running, but in a desperate finish Traban popped up and won on Dardanelles, with Williams coming on Winter when the race was already won and Devon also finishing in a way that will find him money in future. Dangerous as it is to bet on track gallops, the public were right there on Ajeel in the second. Jumping out in front Killorn waited there and won anyhow.

Turning to older ponies, the Church Gate Plate of 7 furlongs was an open race with Shanwar, Sir Jamal, Gold Mint and Mudlool in demand. Gold Mint lost all chance by being badly left and Mudlool and Ashroff took it in turn to lead. At the bend the latter was done and Mudlool coming up won very comfortably from Amood who unexpectedly beat Shanwar.

There was plenty of money for the Charni Road Plate of 9 furlongs with Egypt, the fancy of Byramjee's lot, instead of Precious, and a late run for Eed. It was a good race, Shella making the pace for his stable companion who came up from fourth to Egypt at the bend. Eed here took the lead and, despite Williams' efforts, won pretty comfortably. An objection was lodged for crossing but over-ruled after the last race.

The big horse race, the Sandown Plate, over seven furlongs, was most interesting and very open in the market, Baritone settling down to favouritism from Admiral Crichton and Lady Metal. Baritone in finishing strong over six furlongs suggested being able to do seven easily and, after Lady Metal had run herself to a standstill, came up inside Admiral Crichton. From here he held them all safe and won a good race.

The Open Racquets Tournament is fixed for the 17th February and following days for Officers of any of the Services and members of recognised clubs. Entries, Rs. 5, close on the 9th of that month.

The Bombay Horse and Dog Show is to take place on the 18th and 20th February with first entries for the former closing on the 8th, and final on the 11th, and for the dogs on the 5th and 10th.

The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation have received a telegram from their Head Office at Hongkong advising them, that, subject to usual audit, the results of the half-year ending 31st December 1907 are:—A dividend on the old issue of £2; dividend on the new issue of £1-10; added to silver reserve $500,000; carried to next half-year $2,000,000. The amount received as premium on the issue of new shares has been dealt with as follows: I. To the purchase of Consols of sufficient nominal value to increase at 82; the Sterling Reserve Fund by £500,000; which fund will then stand at £1,500,000. II. To the transfer to Silver Reserve Fund of the balance of $1,250,000; this is in addition to the $500,000 above mentioned as being added to Silver Reserve.

Eminent Solicitor (giving advice): "So your husband has deserted you, and refuses to come back to you?"
Mrs. Malaprop: "Yes, sir, and I want you to take an action for me for Redistribution of Conjugal Rights!"

There is a certain ambiguity about this letter, addressed by a daughter to the doctor who attended her father:—
"Dear Doctor,—Father passed away last night.—Yours gratefully, "X."

"George, darling, I dreamt last night that you gave me a fiver."
"Well done, little woman! You can keep it!"

An extraordinary printer's blunder was recently made in a Nottingham paper. In an obituary notice the important letter "r" was omitted, and it read: "Fiends will please accept this."

London Week by Week.

Friday, 3rd January 1908.

A real old-fashioned Xmas Week! and much good has it done us! During the last eight days severe weather has been experienced in the Upper Thames Valley, the highest point touched by the thermometer during that period being 36 degrees. Large areas of water left on the riverside meadows after the recent floods at Henley, Marlow and other places are already frozen over, and will provide good skating, should the frost hold. At Southend, yesterday, 10 degrees of frost were registered, and there is every indication of increasing severity in the weather, so that by Saturday we shall probably see the fine ornamental lake in the park covered with crowds of merry skaters. In all the hunting counties, sport has been abandoned, owing to the hardness of the ground, and all hunting fixtures cancelled. But this is in the country. In London itself, we dare not hope for skating yet awhile, as the surfaces of the lakes in the parks controlled by the London County Council and in Hyde Park, are kept continually ruffled by a strong east wind, thus preventing the first formation of a thin coating of ice. On the coast and in the Channel, an icily cold easterly gale prevails, and a number of vessels are weather-bound. The Dutch mail packets and Dover boats report rough passages, and the storm cone is hoisted at Sheerness. A cold wave seems to prevail over Southern and Central Europe, and from Edinburgh a hard 15 degrees of frost is reported. We Londoners would fain exchange a dry cold, however bitter, for the east winds which pierce like a knife, seem to invade every crevice, and against which no fur nor overcoat seems proof.

And so have come to an end our Christmas junketings. Plum pudding is a national dish, and refuses to flourish out of England. You may teach a foreigner to dress like an Englishman and talk like one, but you cannot teach him to make, or eat, or really like plum pudding. That is a privilege peculiarly John Bull's own. But vegetarian turkey and roast beef are the very latest, and, of course, the meat-less enthusiasts declare you would never know the difference. Perhaps personally I am too old, or too stupid to change, but it would require a very deep, all-conquering faith to convince me that "fried walnuts give the flavour of bacon." But this, I believe, is an important article of the vegetarian's belief. Never have turkeys been so cheap in London, never have plum puddings been made and sold in such vast quantities, never have the statistics on Christmas fare furnished such stupendous returns on the amount actually purchased and consumed. What does this show? Perhaps that in this twentieth century of ours, as we live faster we enjoy more. Does it, I wonder. One man I know spent a sad Christmas, dimmed by tears. He is a cricket expert, and it grieved him sore that Australia should have beaten England in the Test match by two wickets. For my part I am ready to rejoice in the victory. It disabuses us of the theory so many hold that they "love the colonies." So they do, until the colonies get the better of us.

It is, however, comforting to reflect that 6,800 poor little London cripples have been rendered as happy as their circumstances permit at this festive season by the receipt of a hamper which contained a meat pie, a cake, a Christmas pudding (ready cooked), a packet of tea and sweets, bearing the good wishes of all those who have helped to make the Fresh Air Fund assume national importance and national proportions during Sir William Treloar's term of office as Lord Mayor. To ensure the hampers coming into the right hands, each claim was verified, and the arrangements for their actual delivery were in the hands of local honorary secretaries.

Perhaps the hardest worked people at this busy time, are, after the post office officials, the medical men of out-patient departments in our hospitals. Huge crowds apply for relief, always, after any time of national holiday making; partly because patients always try to keep out of hospital before any great festival, and partly because when the merry-making is over, there is a sudden rush made by those whose health has not entirely been suited by holiday celebrations. Add to this that out-patient departments have been closed on Christmas Day and Bank holiday, and we have sufficient reason for the overwhelming rush to the hospitals at the end of Christmas Week, and the overworking of our best medical men. It is that Bank holiday that upsets everyone, though the question concerning its virtues and vices has two distinct answers. It should be, and is to some, the joy of their lives. It is equally the curse of the nation and the ruin of the individual. Bassanio-like, we stand now at the portals of another year, wondering what the casket will reveal. Unlike Portia's lover, we have no chance of deciding whether the outer aspect of that sealed casket, called in vulgar parlance, nineteen hundred and eight is gold, or silver, or lead. Perhaps the national outlook may be a trifle dreary, but it is not every dawn of promise that ends with a sunset of rose and gold, and it may be that our New Year, though it does not open with brilliant promise, still will not close in disaster. What is our bill for the past year? In the Navy discord, culminating in the Fisher and anti-Fisher business; in the Army ragging cases; in Commerce failure on the Continent; swadeshi in the East; railway strikes everywhere; in art and literature, the ubiquitous picture postcard and Kipling; our [redacted] of justice, Caldwell and Robert Wood, while th[redacted]tuary list is heavy indeed.

Why then should there be always such extravagant hilarity at the turning down of another page of history, the same frantic hand-shaking and lavish toasting of the New Year, and all it holds concealed? We know not, but so it is, and ever will be, we suppose, especially with our Highland brethren, who once again duly celebrated "Hogmanay" outside St. Paul's, according to old established custom. But even this time-honoured tradition has lost much of its original spirit. "Man, it's a nane like the auld days, guid whisky's just wasted on some o' thae folk," remarked one genuine Celt, shaking his head sadly, as he regarded the somewhat mixed gathering, a goodly portion of which must have hailed from the regions east of Aldgate Pumps. By eleven o'clock a good sized crowd had collected in front of the Cathedral, and during the next half hour it grew considerably. But it was no night for standing still, for a piercing east wind froze one's bones, and it required in some cases a good deal of whisky and exercise combined to keep up the circulation. It was a relief to all concerned, especially the police, when midnight pealed. There was an impressive silence, and then as the last stroke died away, a confused babel of voices proclaimed the fact that nineteen hundred and seven was no more. Auld Lang Syne, followed by the National Anthem, was struck up, and soon the shivering crowd had melted away.

In many Anglican and Nonconformist London churches impressive midnight services were held, but the general view with regard to these, among the clergy, now seems to be that they create an unhealthy emotionalism amongst tired people; and that the inevitable reflections and good resolutions formed, do not promote any lasting morality; and that consequently their potentiality for good is very small; they are not as popular as they once were.

The Druce Mystery is no longer one, for it has been ascertained that the coffin did contain a human body, and not any lead. The identity of those human remains may suggest questions which may or may not keep alive legal action. With the police court proceedings still sub judice it is difficult to get at any definite course of action likely to be taken by either of the parties, or by the magistrate himself. The only course apparently open to Mr. Plowden is to dismiss the summons against Mr. Herbert Druce. Since the famous Tichborne case, nothing has seemed of such vital interest to the middle classes, who have taken the keenest interest throughout, and many of whom some weeks ago, anticipated the dismissal of the case, quite independently of the opening of the grave in Highgate Cemetery. Meanwhile, it is surmised that Caldwell, who figured so prominently in the case as witness for the claimant, will, should the American magistrate admit a case for extradition, be brought back to England as soon as possible. The crowds of people who visited Highgate Cemetery to see the Druce tomb yesterday morning, had but little return for their trouble, for there was nothing to be seen but the marble masons and the carpenters restoring the tomb to its original state, which was effected by lunch time. By the afternoon the shed built for the purpose of giving privacy to the exhumation was cleared away, and except for the signs of digging, etc., round about, the spot presented almost the exact appearance it has done for the last forty years. The claimant, Mr. G. Hollamby Druce and his legal advisors were in conference yesterday as to future action, in view of the disclosure made at the opening of the grave, and it has been rumoured that the issues raised by the exhumation would be left in the hands of counsel.

A good deal of interest is centering round the benevolent loveable person of Mr. Justice Grantham, for it was he who recently tried the sensational Camden Town murder case. With Jurymen he is very popular, and is believed to be almost the only Judge who wishes them "good day!" His patriotism amounts almost to a passion, and in this respect one recalls the remark he made when sentencing the murderer Chapman: "Severino Klosowski, I decline to call you by the English name you have assumed. The only satisfactory feature in this case is that I am able to address you as a foreigner and not as an Englishman." He once rebuked a sullen countryman for blowing clouds of tobacco-smoke in a "non-smoker." "This is not a smoking-carriage," he observed rather wrathfully. "I know that, old 'un," grumbled the stolid yokel, "but I be a-gooin' on with this 'ere smoke." Sir William's temper rose. Handing the man his card, he said he would report him at the next station. When they reached the next stopping-place the yokel changed into another carriage, but the judge sent the guard to get his name and address, as he intended to prosecute him. The guard went to the countryman's compartment, and, returning to Mr. Justice Grantham, whispered soothingly: "If I were you I would not prosecute that gent. He has just given me his card. Here it is—he is Mr. Justice Grantham."

Probate was granted last week of the will of the late Lady Brampton, of Park Lane, who died a few weeks after her husband, thus occasioning the payment of probate duty on the same amount twice within a very short space of time. The whole of the residuary estate was left absolutely to the Archbishop of Westminster, to provide for the education of ecclesiastical students, and to benefit the Hospital of St. John and St. Elizabeth at St. John's-wood. It now appears that the sum thus available, after paying the duties and certain charitable and other bequests, will amount to over £250,000.

Another exchequer windfall is the duties on the estate of the late Lord Nunburnholme a sum considerably in excess of £100,000, money which is badly needed to bring up the receipts from the death duty to the figure anticipated by the Budget estimate.

The model of the equestrian figure of the Iron Duke has been placed temporarily on the summit of the Wellington Monument, in St. Paul's Cathedral. It is to remain there for the next few weeks, in order that the public and the critics may have the opportunity of passing an opinion upon the work. The desire is to complete this noble memorial as designed by Alfred Stevens, whose death occurred when the horse and rider had progressed no farther in his hands than a sketch model; the imperfections of which were evident when it was erected for inspection a few years ago, and which there is little doubt Stevens would himself have considerably modified, had he survived to see the end of the great task he had undertaken. The sculptor, Mr. John Tweed, while working on the lines of the Stevens sketch, has departed from them in various detail. The pale grey of a typical English wintry day is not the best light for a statue, and possibly Mr. Tweed's work will be seen to better advantage later in the year, in a warmer, fuller light.

Lord Curzon of Kedleston has agreed to stand for the vacancy caused among the Irish representative Peers by the recent death of Lord Kilmaine. Your ex-Viceroy finds himself in a very curious position. He is physically unequal to the strain of the House of Commons; Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman refuses to grant him the recognition usually paid to all ex-Viceroys, and his only chance of entering Parliament is, therefore, as one of the twenty-eight representative Peers of Ireland. He is at present, the cynosure of all eyes, and you, in India, must naturally follow, with interest, his movements.

The last day of the old year has brought us a new dramatist. Mr. George Gloriel, who has made his debut with "The House," which was produced on New Year's Eve at the Court Theatre. Scarcely rising above the level of a sketch, it is so clever a one that it leaves the audience impressed with the ability of its author. Opening in squalor and dejection in an East end garret, he ends in a glorious burst of sunlight. The old grandfather, who has fought so valiantly against "The House" is, at last, cajoled into going; he departs a weak half-starving old man, and returns six weeks later a roguish self-satisfied septuagenarian, with the announcement that the

After a successful run of something not very far off 350 performances "The Earl of Pawtucket" is to be played for the last time at The Playhouse on the evening of Saturday, the 18th instant. On the following Tuesday, Mr. Cyril Maude will produce a dress rehearsal—Mr. Cyril Maude will produce a new piece in three acts by Mr. H. V. Esmond, entitled "The O'Grindles." The novelty will be described in the programme simply as "a play," but perhaps it might more fitly be spoken of as a romantic comedy. Although the plot is in the main of a bright and joyous character, there runs through it a certain serious vein, inasmuch as the hero, in the spirit of self-sacrifice, takes upon himself the burden of his brother's sin. The author has chosen the year 1810 for the action of the play, his aim being to paint a picture of country life in Ireland at that time. Miss Winifred Emery will take the leading part, and the heroine is Miss Alexandra Carlisle, Mr. Maude himself appearing as Jim O'Grindle. Mr. Arthur Bourchier will shortly appear in "Her Father," with Miss Marie Lohr in the role of the heroine, at the Haymarket. Mdlle. Adeline Genee has left to fulfil a three months' engagement in the United States and will be greatly missed at the Empire. The "Babes in the Wood," much cut down, is being played at Old Drury, and drawing large audiences. When it is borne in mind that such large places as Drury Lane, the Adelphi, the Lyceum, the Coliseum, and the Hippodrome are, between them, giving sixty performances weekly, the size of London's amusement-loving public will be readily understood. Many of the suburban theatres are also giving two performances daily.

The book of the week must surely be "Parliament from the Green Room" by Mr. Griffith-Boscawen. The author would seem to have devoted the leisure permitted to him by his recent defeat at the last general election to the weaving together of many interesting incidents, spread over fourteen sessions of Parliament, which he preserves in chronological order. To anybody who has lived through those times and scenes, the volume will prove vastly interesting.

The tradition that important books must be published between September and Christmas is quite discredited. Save for January, every month in the year contributes a substantial number to the total of books published. No doubt most popular novelists choose the autumn for their books, and so secure them a place in the one brief period when the non-reading public buy books. It is only at Christmas time that the people to whom books are one of the most superfluous of luxuries feel justified in spending money on them. But of novels, too, the spring and summer now give us a goodly company, and to the discerning eye the coming months are full of new interest. Messrs. Macmillan will shortly publish Lord Cromer's book on Egypt, while Mr. C. L. Graves and Mr. G. V. Lucas, the authors of "Wisdom while you wait" have hit upon a new idea which is to take shape under the title of "Hustled History," which shape under the title of "Hustled History;" this promises to be rather amusing.

DEER-STALKING.

DEER-STALKING may be placed high, if not the very highest on the list of British sports, for it is without a shadow of a doubt one of the most exciting and exhilarating outdoor pursuits. Before entering upon a detailed description of the habits of Scottish deer, and the manner of stalking them, I will endeavour to give my readers an idea of the country upon which these deer have their habitat.

Most sportsmen in America, who have read articles dealing with Scottish sport, will have noticed that the term "forest" is used when speaking of ground upon which deer are found. To the uninitiated, this word may lead them to believe that the Scottish deer inhabit a wooded country, as is the case in America and Canada, but in reality such is far from being the case. In a typical Scotch deer forest, trees are chiefly "conspicuous by their absence." Many of the best known "forests" have a peculiar wild and picturesque grandeur of their own, but as an example of the average ground used for purposes of deer-stalking, the reader may imagine a district very similar to the foothill country, bordering any of the large American mountain ranges, covered with heather and yellowish coloured grass.

A burn should ripple down every small ravine, and a river dash through every canon, with the addition of a dozen or two lochs scattered here and there throughout the whole, then the picture of a typical Scotch deer forest will be complete. In technical parlance, a deer forest is land cleared of sheep and carefully preserved for red deer. The best of the Scotch forests are "cleared" or forested ground, while there is an immense acreage which carries both sheep and deer, often made up of sheep walks "marching" with or adjoining some regular forest, land which in many cases is preferred by the deer, owing to the better and sweeter grass, as also greater shelter, which such land often contains.

All such country, as above described, is preserved, but very little of it is fenced in. In each forest there is what is termed a "sanctuary," which is seldom or never disturbed; and in it the big stags congregate, wandering farther away from it as the rutting season approaches and the end of September draws near.

A stag when laid low by the bullet of the stalker, belongs to the person upon whose land it is killed, which brings to our notice an important feature of deer-stalking, namely, the necessity of keeping deer on one's own land whenever possible, and not driving them across the "march," or boundary line, into a neighbour's forest. Although to the casual reader of articles on Scottish stalking, the successful killing of a stag may seem a tame affair when compared to the chase of the wild American deer, I may safely state that such is not the case, for there are but few if any men on this side of the water, unused to Scotch stalking, who could successfully approach deer on a forest without the assistance of a professional stalker. A Scottish red deer is extremely cunning, for he and his ancestors have been hunted for generations, which serves to sharpen his wits and make him most difficult of approach.

Practically the whole of the Scotch Highlands are cut up into shootings and fishings, which are leased to sportsmen at varying rentals, amounting in many instances to thousands of pounds. A big forest, with a grouse moor and salmon-river attached, and a large mansion, where every year a hundred stags are killed, will let for a sum of money quite as large as the salary of an American President. Such princely shootings are not for the man of small means, and unless he may have friends in "high places," he will have to content himself with something less ambitious. Fortunately for such a man, there are scores of shootings to be rented, upon which the limit of stags allowed to be killed is from eight to ten. Such stalking usually goes with a grouse moor, and in many cases the lessee of the moor will be glad to sublet the stalking which commences when the best of the grouse shooting is over.

If such a piece of ground can be thus obtained, by advertising in the leading London sporting journals, quite good sport may be had. A competent professional stalker will be provided by the lessor, and a gillie and pony may be hired for the season at the cost of a few pounds. An American sportsman, leasing such a shooting could, with fifteen hundred dollars, go over to Scotland and return after three weeks' stalking, and the killing of eight or ten good stags. Having thus given my readers some idea of the country which is the home of the red deer, I will try to describe the habits of these deer, and the methods employed to bring them to hand.

The red-deer stag of Scotland (Cervus elaphus) is in appearance closely akin to an American wapiti, although a smaller beast in both horns and body. In this article I will not enter into a long and detailed account of the habits of deer and their natural history, but rather allude to such traits as are very necessary for every one to know who goes stalking on a forest.

As every hunter knows, deer must be approached up wind or on a side wind. The actual distance at which the red deer will take the wind is rather uncertain, but with anything like a strong wind it is unsafe to go within a mile of them, and in a gale a mile and a half is not too far for this keen-nosed beast to wind his pursuers. For more than an hour after a person has passed by, deer will not easily cross the tracks, on account of the hanging scent. Deer always move up wind when feeding, and if disturbed, whatever direction they may at first take, they will always finally turn and run up into the wind again. Owing to this trait, on some forests stalking is out of the question on days when the wind is in a certain quarter, for fear of driving the deer across a neighbour's march.

In certain places on many forests, it is quite impossible to stalk and "get in" to deer on account of the eddies formed by the wind, no matter from which direction it may be blowing, and in such places, in many cases, no one has ever been known to successfully stalk and kill a stag. Of course, under such circumstances it is best to make the attempt, and trust to the deer moving to a better and more approachable position. In the middle of the day deer lie down, and often remain so for two or three hours; and when stalking them, it is often necessary when within shot, to lie perfectly quiet until the chosen beast rises and offers a fair chance.

When thus lying, in a cold wind and possibly on wet ground, it requires considerable patience to refrain from taking a long shot and probably spoiling the whole stalk. When deer lie on a steep hillside, the biggest stags are usually at the bottom of the hill, with the smaller ones and the hinds above them. When lying in this position they usually look straight down-hill, and will be found on the sheltered side of the valley, if there is a wind blowing. In such a case the wind comes over the top of them, on the face where they lie, making an approach on them almost impossible. To get in at them up wind from below is out of the question. Should there be stags outlying from the herd, a stalk from the top of the hill and to one side may be successful.

On a very steep face, with a strong wind blowing, a successful stalk may be made down wind, as the scent will in all likelihood be blown clean over the heads of the deer lying below; though in most cases the deer will get the stalker's wind. When in large herds, the sentinel work is left to the hinds, and unless alarmed the sight of either stags or hinds is not very acute. Once scare them, however, and they will not rest until their curiosity is satisfied; and they circle around until they catch the wind of the intruder.

Deer always prefer to face a danger, the nature of which they have previously ascertained, rather than run the gauntlet of an unknown and half-perceived one. This accounts for many deer drives going w[illegible] for the deer will break back through the [illegible] drivers, should a shot be fired too soon by [illegible] waiting rifles, and they will rush the line [illegible] yelling drivers, rather than face the unknown danger ahead.

On a fine, calm day deer will not move so far as on a cold or windy one, and on such windy days, it is no uncommon sight to see deer rush off at a gallop for no apparent cause whatever. On such days, unless the wind is right for the forest, it is better to leave stalking alone, rather than run the risk of driving deer right off the ground.

In warm weather stags lie upon the highest hills, but in bad weather they will be found on the lower ground. They watch other creatures, such as grouse, ptarmigan, hares, foxes, ravens, etc., and should any such animals or birds be disturbed by man, the deer at once take the alarm, although when the same creatures are passing them in their natural daily round, deer take no notice of them at all. When stalking ground not cleared of sheep, these animals are very apt to alarm the deer, as they rush wildly away on viewing the approaching stalker. The only way to stop this, is to lie quiet until the sh[illegible] have looked until tired, after which they will o[illegible]d quietly away.

Occasionally during the course of a stalk, a few hinds will be found in some hollow of the ground, directly between the stalker and his quarry, around which it is quite impossible to creep without being seen. Such hinds, if not in sight of the chosen stag, may be moved successfully out of the way by a low whistle, or showing the tip of a stick, and gently waving it; though very often the hinds move right off to the deer which the stalker is after, and will rouse them and take them off also; but very often the ruse works, and the "rubbish," as a stalker would call them, are successfully moved out of the way without alarming the other deer.

Having given the reader an idea of both the ground stalked and the habits of the deer, which every stalker should know, we will turn to the equipment needful to carry out a successful stalk.

In the "eighties," and even later than that, the double-barrelled ·540 breech-loading express rifle was the weapon usually carried by the deer-stalker. In these modern days, however, the black powder guns have given place to the high velocity, small-bore rifles. Sights and other details may be left to individual requirements. The rifle is always carried in a cover of some fairly stiff material, such as canvas, unbuckled at the opening, to allow of the rifle being quickly withdrawn for a shot. Such covers are necessary, owing to the long crawls which have often to be taken through wet and dirty ground.

Next to the rifle, the most important item of the outfit is a good telescope, for spying deer at a distance. A glass with a large field and sharp definition should be purchased, as deer at a distance, when using a glass with a small field, are very easily passed over when "spying."

With regard to the clothing suitable for stalking, a cloth should be chosen rather neutral in colour, which will harmonize with the general colour of the ground and surroundings. Stuff which does not turn black when wet should be used, and good flannel shirts worn instead of linen ones. Thick, well-fitting woollen stockings, with either boots or shoes, well nailed, should also be worn, and loose knickerbockers which do not impede free knee-action when climbing or crawling. The cap should fit close to the head and be of the same neutral colour as the coat and knickerbockers. Pockets should all be made to button, otherwise in a crawl or a slither down hill, knife, flask, pipe, etc., are very apt to fall out and be lost. An old cover coat or a light cape may be taken as an extra wrap, any heavier article making too big a load for your stalker, if but you and he are out alone. Some of the natives of Scotland wear the kilt when out on the hill, but I advise all those not acclimatized to such apparel to stick to the above-mentioned outfit.

A gillie and a pony can be hired for about two guineas a week, and the money is well spent; for when finishing a stalk ten miles from home, the advent of the pony is an agreeable sight in the evening, especially should the weather be cold or wet. The ponies are very sure-footed, and once having been over a trail, no matter how rough, they will take their rider safely over it on the darkest night, if he will give them their heads and let them pick the way.

If a man leads an open air life in the off season, with plenty of exercise, he will be in fair condition when the stalking begins; but if not in good trim he should go easy at first and not overdo it. The professional stalkers are always in condition and extremely good hill walkers, so it is best to stop now and then "to admire the view" rather than strain the heart in an attempt to "live" with the stalker at a four-mile clip up a steep hill.

Carry but a small lunch, but make a good breakfast, and finish with a good dinner at night, and drink hardly anything during the day, however, great the temptation to stop at every burn or stream.

Whiskey is the usual liquid in the flask, and should the sportsman prefer some "soft" drink, such as cold tea—which is certainly good—he should carry a horn or two of whiskey for his stalker in case of a successful kill, albeit there are some stalkers as well as their masters who prefer tea or some other temperance drink, and such men very often are the best walkers, as well as the best stalkers.

With reference to smoking, I would not advise the novice to light his pipe at the foot of a fifteen-[illegible]dred-foot hill, as professional stalkers often do, [illegible]at strong, black "twist," while they steadily [illegible]the ascent. It is better to wait until a halt is called at some convenient spot, for what is a pleasure to the stalker will not always be the same to his "gentleman." The latter word is applied to the man whom the stalker is piloting on the hill; each stalker looks after and brings his "gentleman" in to deer.

Let us suppose that a fine day has dawned and everything is in readiness for a start from the lodge. Cartridges, coat, flask, lunch, pipe and tobacco are all in their separate pockets, for in some parts of the Highlands it is considered a sign of bad luck to have to turn back for anything; and if compelled to do so some stalkers are quite put out for the rest of the day. Should you perchance forget tobacco or lunch, it is best, if accompanied by such a superstitious stalker, to refrain from going back, for he will be only too proud to share his "piece" or his black [illegible]p with you.

[illegible] started, an hour or so on pony-back or afoot [illegible] you to the spying-stone, or place from which [illegible] is usual to take the first spy of the ground to be stalked. It is a by no means easy task to search a corrie properly with a glass. If but a gentle breeze is stirring, the walking stick will give sufficient support if planted firmly in the earth, to rest the glass against. The best position is to lie nearly flat on the back, with a tussock or stone to rest the shoulders against; then drawing up the knees, hold the glass firmly against the left knee, and even in a high wind you can thus keep it perfectly steady. Practice alone will make a man perfect at the art of "picking up" deer with the glass, but keeping the glass perfectly immovable is the first thing to ensure success. Men who considered they knew how to use a glass well for picking up game in the open, have been woefully undeceived when first out with a Scotch stalker, who could pick up his deer amongst the peat hags and stones at a distance of one and a half or even two miles; and even when the exact position of the deer is pointed out to the novice, he will often have to wait until a nearer approach is made, ere he can see the deer through his own glass.

It is of great importance when using a glass with a bright sun overhead, never to let the sun's rays shine on the lens of the telescope, or the deer will be treated to a firework display, which will most effectually cause them to leave the ground in a hurry.

Having found deer, it is advisable to put yourself completely into the hands of your stalker, for without an intimate knowledge of the ground—a knowledge acquired by being on the ground for years—it is impossible, except by the merest fluke, to manage the stalk alone. After a little experience it may be possible to do the last two or three hundred yards alone, but often this has to be done again and even retraced two or three times, whereas if left to the stalker, that worthy will take you in without a single halt. As time is all-important in the getting of an easy shot, or possibly no shot at all, it is therefore the best policy to let your stalker lead the way.

When crawling on flat ground, go head first, but on a steep grade, feet first, keeping the legs flat when on level ground so that they do not show above the level of the head. A real good stalker will creep in on ground that only allows him to be a few inches out of his quarry's sight, and nothing is more disheartening to him than to find at the end of a long and difficult crawl, his "gentleman" has been on hands and knees when he has been flat on his stomach, in consequence of which at the last critical moment, the deer are startled and put away. A certain sportsman once did this, and on asking his stalker what could have put the deer away, the man gruffly answered, "Why, you was just wa-alking when I was cra-aling."

Stag fever, like "buck fever" on this side of the Atlantic, will often attack the novice, but time and a few bad misses will soon alter this.

For three or four hours has the sportsman walked, run, crawled, and crept, besides waiting patiently until the stag offers a fair chance of a shot. Should the beast be broadside on, put the rifle on the inside line of the fore-leg, raise it slowly up till the leg joins the body, then when you "see brown" squeeze the trigger. In shooting down-hill, sit up and plant the heels firmly in the ground, resting both elbows on the thighs; for an up-hill shot, always find a stone or tussock of grass, lie flat behind it, and poke the rifle round it. Always crawl in and get a rest up-hill, for it is not easy to shoot otherwise or hold the rifle steady.

In shooting at moving deer, practice alone will tell the novice how far to hold ahead of his quarry. A good rule to follow is to shoot straight at a walking deer; at one trotting, fire at the point of the shoulder, and if trotting fast, barely see daylight ahead of him. When a deer is on the dead run, two or three feet should be allowed ahead of it. For crossing shots in a gale, allowance must, of course, be made for windage.

The above rules apply to distances of from eighty to a hundred and twenty yards, though with the high power modern rifles, some little difference may occur; but with an express, the above facts hold good.

Long shots should not be attempted, at least not very long ones, and should one miss with the first two shots, it is a bad plan to empty the magazine at the retreating deer, for it only disturbs the ground, and there is a chance of killing a small beast or a calf, which a stalker will good naturedly offer to bury rather than undergo the stream of chaff and banter should it be carried home to the larder. When a miss with the first two shots takes place, keep down and wait patiently, for deer sometimes circle round and will offer another good chance. Do not fire through waving grass when lying down, as it is a fertile source of bad misses.

Should you be overcome with an irresistible desire to sneeze or choke at the critical moment, bury your face in the peat and explode in that way, peat stains soon wash off, and even though you may look like a nigger after the operation, it is better than losing a shot. By tossing tufts of cotton grass into the air on a calm day, or by wetting the finger, what little breeze there is may be thus located. When taking close shots, be sure to hold very fine at the heart, or hold a coarser bead just on the under outline of the body below the heart. More shots are missed at close range by overshooting than would be supposed by a person uninitiated in the art of handling a rifle.

When a deer is badly wounded and cannot rise, be careful how you approach, for a vicious sweep of his horns or his fore-feet may reward your rashness. Deer-hounds are used to capture wounded deer, as are also collies, the latter being extremely good at the business, and they will "hold the bay" beautifully when they get up to the wounded animal. It is a fine sight to see a brace of deer-hounds run in and pull down their stag, but many dogs are thus killed or badly injured, and as a rule it is better to have dogs which will hold their stag at bay, until the shooter comes up, rather than run the risk of injury by dashing in to hold.

The weight of deer varies in different forests according to the food and climate; in some it ranges from fourteen to twenty-one stone, and in others from thirteen to seventeen; but they vary a stone more or less according to the weather in the spring. A stone is fourteen pounds, but on some forests I believe it is counted as more than that, though fourteen pounds is the actual scale of weight. On most forests, therefore, a stag, after the "gralloch," (the process of removing the offal) should weigh from 224 to 300 pounds, otherwise the stalker would not consider it a "shootable" beast. A stalker can with the glass tell at a glance at a great distance whether a beast is "shootable" or no. The stalker carries his "gentleman's" rifle, and crawls first on the hill, drawing the weapon from its case and laying it ready at the final moment.

A fine, open spring will bring condition on fast in deer, whereas in snowy or wet weather at that time a stone difference will often be found in their weight. On the Isle of Arran forests, it is not unusual to kill deer of twenty-five or twenty-seven stone; though in most forests a beast of seventeen to twenty-one stone is considered a good one. It is the cherished ambition of every Scottish landlord to increase the weight, and also the heads of his deer, and many experiments have been tried of crossing the wild deer with imported and heavier beasts; but in the end such crossing ends in a reversion to the predominant type.

The aim and object of every sportsman is to lay low at some time during his stalking career, a "royal" or twelve point stag, and such beasts are growing rarer every season; even though most forests possess a sanctuary in which the heavy beasts congregate. Killing young stags causes a falling off in size, for if a hundred deer are shot in a season, at least forty of them will be four-year-old beasts, which if spared for another two years would grow into heavy beasts with good heads.

Many foresters a...rm that certain beasts are born "royals," and will attain to that distinction if left to live long enough; while others aver that some will never attain to such honour even if left alone for eight or ten years. In some parts of Scotland the foresters so reverence a "royal" that they will approach the dead monarch with uncovered heads. There are but few forests which yield three or four "royals" in a season, and many of them produce none at all.

Stalking may begin, according to the forest, early in September and continue to about the fifteenth of October; and after the stags have been got, hind shooting commences, sometimes as early as the first of November. Stags have usually separated from the hinds when the latter are shot. Hind shooting is not at all bad sport and though not affording the keen pleasure which the slaying of a good stag does, it is yet well worth remaining on the ground for, when the stag season is over.

There are plenty of Scotch forests renting at over £200 per year each for practically but two months' sport, a rental of over £40 per day, not including other expenses, showing that this sport carried out on a large scale is a pretty expensive amusement; but as previously mentioned, there are chances for the man of moderate means if he advertises early for what he wants in the London sporting journals.

I will conclude this somewhat lengthy article, by quoting one or two interesting and amusing facts in connection with foresters attached to various shootings. The Scotch forester is, as a rule, one of Nature's gentlemen, kind and considerate, and ever ready and willing to look after the welfare and interests of his "gentleman." The genuine highlander is a firm believer in ghosts and the supernatural, and though brave as the best in the light of day, he will not face in the dark, places supposed to be haunted or otherwise visited by ghosts or "double goers." To remain alone in an outlying shooting-lodge, ten miles or more from the nearest habitation, will in the long run get upon any man's nerves so we cannot blame the stalker if he refuses to dwell in such places alone, when the season is over and his "gentlemen" have gone south. Many of these men, in spite of their retired and solitary life, are extremely well informed on all matters of public interest. If such a man sees you are keen and willing to learn, he will impart as much as he can of the rudiments of the profession to you, in the short time you may be together on the hill during the shooting season. Many of these men have rather a rough-edge to their tongues, but such liberties are allowed in old and trusted servants. Speeches which would hardly be brooked from others in a like station in the lowlands, are permissible from men who often spend days with you alone on some wild forest, where master and man are more really companions than they would be in more civilized parts. Hit your deer in the haunch instead of the heart and Donald will probably remark quietly, "Surely you mistook the end of him." A party, or rather picnic was once given on a forest in honour of a lady's birthday, and of course, the stalker was invited. Cigarettes, peaches and champagne were passed round, of which the forester had his share. The next day he informed his master that the "jump wine" was right good, and the "velvet apples" were no bad; but that tobacco in paper was far too tender for his smoking; surely a quaint and novel description. The forester is a strict observer of the Sabbath, and once a noble lord preparing for a shoot on a Monday, packed up on Sunday and had the ponies out to move to the ground on that day, to be ready early on Monday morning. The forester, on being handed the rifle in its cover to carry, respectfully declined to do so until it was taken to pieces and wrapped in separate papers, tied with string, when as a parcel, his scruples were overcome, and the procession started on its way.

One more story and I have done.

A certain Scotch landowner was once visited by a native Indian prince, who wished for a day's stalking. Donald was called in and the prince was, on the following day, entrusted to his care, with a warning to treat him as befitted his high rank. All went well during the first part of the talk—it was, "I doot yer Majesty will find the flow a wee bit wet," and so on, when crossing a burn. In crawling the last few yards, however, the prince incautiously raised his head, when suddenly the hairy hand of the stalker descended upon it, crushing the dark features into the soft ground, and his voice hissed in the potentate's ear, "Doun ye black deevil. doun!" SIR,—These 8-foot panthers are no doubt very fine, but how are they measured? This makes all the difference. Are they measured round the curves, or between uprights?

TROUT FISHING IN SMALL STREAMS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Brown trout are adaptable fish and manage to suit themselves to widely different conditions. The little burn trout of the Welsh and Scotch Highlands thrive in streams so small that a month of dry weather reduces the water to a mere trickle Many of the tiny pools are set in glens so deep, and amid foliage so rank, that the sun never reaches them, yet the fish live and even flourish under these dismal conditions, though they certainly lose entirely the brightness of their normal colouring, and put on a black-brown dress to match their gloomy home. Where the burn leaves the recesses of the woods to tinkle with sparkling waters in the open, its finny denizens throw off their sad garments and don again the gold and red, which are their proper dress.

Scotch burn trout are as a rule small, but their diminutiveness is due merely to scanty diet and want of water space. Put some of these same troutlets into a pond, or loch, and they will grow rapidly. In nearly every mountain brook there are occasional deep pools, and in these we invariably find fish which are as giants compared with the trout of the shallower parts of the stream. Thus even in burns where the fish average but two, or two and a half ounces each, the angler will take an occasional trout of three quarters of a pound, or even a full pound in weight. Where a brook runs through grassy flats, the banks become hollowed out, thus affording admirable shelter to the fish. Thus the little streams meandering through Devonshire meadows, though apparently only a foot or two wide, often extend well under the overhanging grasses which almost hide them. In these rivulets as in the deep sluggish brooks of Surrey and Sussex, the gentle is often far more deadly than the worm. The Sussex streams are different to both the Devonshire brooks, and the Highland burns. Their banks are high and steep, and the channels so overhung with brambles and other bushes, that it is often extremely hard to reach the water at all. The little trout which I have caught in the Sussex streams, were better conditioned, and more brilliant in colouring, than the average Scotch and Welsh troutlets. This is doubtless due to the abundant feeding found in the chalk streams of the Home counties, and also the comparatively large amount of sunshine.

The streams in Shetland are but little fished, and owing to the nature of the country are well furnished with deep pools. As might be expected the trout run larger than in similar burns in Scotland and Wales, and it is quite usual to have several half pounders in one's basket. Fishing a burn, when it is in spate, is an easy matter enough, but it is a very different affair when the water is low and clear. Then each pool and eddy has to be approached with the utmost precaution from below, so that the trout may not see the angler. In some places indeed it will be found necessary to cast the worm in order to reach the fish without showing oneself.

The Stewart tackle, consisting of three small hooks whipped one above the other on the same strand of gut, is said to be preculiarly certain in hooking trout; personally I have not found it so, but have always thought on the contrary that the percentage of fish lost is higher with three hooks, than with a single one. Of course, with the Stewart tackle baiting is very quick and easy, and one can strike at the first touch, so that on the whole the balance of advantages remains with the three hooks. When using a single hook the fish has to be given a little time, so that it may get the worm well into its mouth, and as the bait is often taken far down the throat, a disgorger is very useful. A single BB shot 9 to 12 inches from the hook, is quite sufficient for ordinary conditions, while when the water is low and clear, a smaller shot should be used. Burn fishing with the worm is quite fascinating sport, and under favourable circumstances heavy baskets are made. The angler often has his worm taken by a powerful sea trout; and whatever his sport good or bad, it can be never monotonous, for he is on the move all the time, and covers a great deal of country in a day's fishing.

A good place for a big trout is where a stream in flood enters a fresh water loch. There where the coloured water rushes out, the worm should be cast and worked with a gentle sink and draw motion, and if a big trout is waiting at the mouth for food washed down by the brook, he will usually take the worm like a tiger. I remember once when fishing a Shetland burn, I got the trout of the day, just where the stream was pouring its discoloured flood into the clear water of the loch. Bridges and culverts should always receive the angler's special attention for their dark recesses are often the lurking places of goodly trout. There is an old mill at Bettws-y-Coed, worked by a small leet, or artificial brook, from the river Llugwy. One day when the mill was not working, I caught a half pound trout right under the wheel; while another time I got a three quarter-pound sea trout out of this tiny stream.

A longish rod is quite an advantage when burn fishing, as it enables one to reach better: especially so when the water is clear, and one desires to keep as far away as possible. One usually employs an ordinary fly rod for worming, but a stiff light cane rod of about thirteen feet in length is a decidedly more suitable tool. Stiffness is especially useful as most of the trout are lifted out directly they are hooked.

When the bait employed is gentle instead of worm, a small single roach hook on fine drawn gut should be used. Two or three gentles can be put on according to their size. More fish are missed with gentles as bait, than with worm: this, however, cannot be avoided, and in some streams the trout take the gentle so much better than the worm, that one would never think of using the latter.

A spate coming after a long spell of dry weather is the burn fisher's opportunity. The trout then are as hungry as wolves, and I have known of bags as high as seven or eight dozen being made under these favourable conditions. The patient angler can, however, always get some trout, however, low the water, and it must not be forgotten that the scramble up the bed of a Highland brook even if it does not yield many fish, will at any rate reward the fisherman with plenty of lovely scenery.

Mr. V. G. Weatherall of Purneah sends us the following letter:—

I am much pleased with the "Lethal" bullets invented by you and can recommend them for either choke or cylinder barrels. I can vouch that they deal a smashing blow and would stop anything, which one could not rely on a shot gun doing prior to this invention. I only wish I had had them in some of the big shoots in Nepal, for I have often lost a chance as I never relied with confidence on my gun as an auxiliary. In my opinion they will bring shot guns more into use for ball than they are at present, especially with the advantage of firing out of either choke or cylinder barrels. I have used a good many of the "Rotary" bullets, which are good, but these are a vast improvement on them. I am sure any sportsman who use the "Lethal" bullets will soon have faith in them. You are at liberty to use this letter if you desire to do so.

LEMCO

THE ENTIRE BODY OF HISTORICAL KNOWLEDGE

HAS AT LAST BEEN SYSTEMATISED, CO-ORDINATED, MADE ACCESSIBLE, AND AT THE SAME TIME Interesting and Delightful to Read.

WHAT has hitherto been an impossible task, that is, the reading of general history with any sort of satisfactory return for the time and effort given to it has now been reduced to comparative simplicity by the publication of "The Historians' History of the World." It gives a full, connected, and authoritative narrative of the history of all nations. While it is a scholarly work it has been built with an eye to the needs of the average reader in an age of over-specialization. The Editors believe that the reading public have little or no sympathy with those historical writers of the last two generations who "have brought historical evidence under conditions nearly as stringent as those which regulate the depositions of a court of justice." History when written under such conditions becomes about as readable as an almanac, and fails to realise its true function,—that of interesting and at the same time instructing the reader in regard to past events. Without this quality of human interest, history is merely a dull and arid statement of fact, and mere dulness is repellent. Good history should be good literature. Its presentation should be picturesque and its style graceful, dignified and therefore charming. The story it tells should be worth telling. In the days before the arrival of the modern school of scientific historians, there was a class of writers of whom it has been said that they "produced striking compositions with grand outline and rich tints which were attractive and beautiful for their own sake."

THE GREAT DRAMA OF LIFE.

The Editors of the present work have recognised the shortcomings as well as the advantages of both schools of historical compositions, and by avoiding the mistakes of each have dealt with the history of nations in a manner which, while giving large space to large events, subordinates the minor details, emphasises the human side of history, and keeps the narrative always at a high level of interest. This, for the general reader, is a distinct gain, as he is now in a position to master the subject of general history, or of a given nation's history, with ease, profit, and delight. With these volumes at hand he will not feel that history is heavy or dry, or crammed with dates and unfamiliar names, but he will [illegible] that it is the story of the deeds of real people, who lived and [illegible] and struggled and achieved and left their mark upon their time, whose careers he can now follow and whose personalities he can now study because he is able to see them, as never before, as players in the great drama of life.

PRACTICAL VALUE OF HISTORY

"History," said the Right Hon'ble Augustine Birrell, "is a pageant and not a philosophy," and if this is true, the present work will not fall short of that description. But history is not merely a pageant, nor is it "philosophy teaching by example," as Bolingbroke has said. It has a more practical, more immediate usefulness to thinking men in these days of international competition. The rise and fall of empires, the careers of historic personages, and the past and present world movements which have influenced and will continue to influence the destiny and well-being of the race of man on earth, and of each individual of the race, constitute the greatest story ever told, a story that is fraught with essential truths with living ideas and principles for every man who is concerned with the solution of the political, social, and economic questions of the day.

TEMPORARY OFFER IN INDIA BY The Times (London).

A Complete Specimen Volume of "The Historians' History of the World' will be sent to any applicant in India, Burma, or Ceylon, without expense for delivery and return.

(This offer is not open to students, minors or irresponsible persons.)

In order to introduce this work as quickly as possible "The Times" proposes to let the book speak for itself—to stand on its own merits. "The Times" will therefore despatch to any applicant (minors and irresponsible persons expected) a Specimen Volume (one of the 25). We will pay the postage for delivery of the book to the applicant and its return to us. Local delivery will be by peon whenever possible. The applicant will incur no obligation further than to take reasonable care of the book and to agree to send it back, within one week, in the same box in which it will be despatched. This novel plan has been adopted because it affords the best and the most efficient means of proving (1) the importance of the work, (2) the large gap it will fill in the field of historical literature, and (3) its conspicuous merits as a work which the reader can turn to in perfect confidence that he will never fail to find in it something that is interesting as well as instructive. Having received the volume, you will be in the strongest possible position to judge of the work not only in respect of the paper, typography, illustrations, and binding, but also in respect of its merits as history. You will know whether you wish to add it to your library, and whether in buying it you will receive good value. We will thus reverse the old method of the book-trade, which does not permit of independent judgment before purchase.

Ordinarily, when you buy a new book, you are really at a disadvantage, for unless you know the author intimately, you act in the dark. By this new plan of sale there can be no such misunderstanding. With the Specimen Volume in your hand, you can, at your leisure, thoroughly inform yourself in regard to the work in every one of its details, literary and physical. You may, if you like, read the volume from beginning to end. You know exactly what you are buying. You read it first and buy it afterwards, whereas by the old method you pay for a book before you read it. By the new method your satisfaction is guaranteed, and this is a matter of no less importance to the publisher than to the buyer, for the publisher knows that every copy of the book that pleases the buyer is likely to lead to the sale of another copy to one of his friends. As the number of Specimen Volumes that are available under this offer is necessarily limited, application should be made AT ONCE.

Honorary Secretary:—CAPTAIN E. CAMPION.

Third Day, Saturday, 4th January 1908.

ON the second day clouds lent a sombre aspect to the surroundings, and rain fell on the third, nevertheless a good sprinkling of people filled the paddock on both occasions. Uproars were numerous, and the bookmakers continued their successes of the previous day. The adjustment of weights was such as to attract good fields, which resulted in exciting finishes, and rank outsiders winning, much to the chagrin of punters. Throughout, the sport has been of a high-class order, and much thanks is due to the Honorary Secretary who has worked hard to make the meeting a success. The course was in excellent condition and the jumps well made up, although perhaps somewhat on the big side for the class of steeplechasers of the present day.

THE POLO SCURRY.—Rs. 100 to the winner, Rs. 50 to the second, and Rs. 20 to the third. For all Arab ponies who have or who are playing in the Tradesmen's Cup, 1908, at polo. Catch weights 11-7. 2½ furlongs.

THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

THE good folk at Hampton on Monday saw through another pair of spectacles than those in town. Hard ground and a wintry climate suggested ice-bound country, whereas up the Thames Valley a murky atmosphere suggested a visitation of rain rather than snow—a contingency strengthened by a dirty bank of fog which came creeping up from across the Thames, and threatened to spoil all but the view of the first race. It backed and rolled up, however, and then followed nipping and eager air, with a slight sleet at intervals. The going was soft, nay, even heavy in places—a pleasant surprise indeed, though militating against the chances of the top-weights, as witness the downfall of Whipsnade under 12st. 13lb. For the time of year the attendance was very good, and Mr. Davis, who has had an anxious time of it of late, must have felt well content with the result of his labours. Many of the leading supporters of the Turf were present in the members' enclosure, and a good company in Tattersall's and the further enclosure.

HURST HANDICAP HURDLE RACE PLATE—Of 150sovs. being 120sovs. to the winner; 20sovs. to the second, and 10sovs. to the third. 2 miles.

Won in a canter by half a dozen lengths; a similar distance divided second and third. Time—6mins. 4-4/5secs.

Another "half-and-half" day, a cold wind beating back the fog engendered by the frost that had kept it in the Thames Valley, and now and again let it go, but towards the finish the atmosphere cleared, and we saw some racing. Hoping for better weather afield, sportsmen wended their way to Hurst Park, where a capital afternoon's sport awaited them, and horses that could run through dirt showed their prowess, for the going, despite the threatened frost, was gratefully soft as ever greeted the hoofs of a "lopper," as proved by the good fields that kept the game alive. At this time of the year we cannot expect a big meeter, as the holiday makers are recuperating from the Christmas festivities, but the general public were more numerously represented than on Monday, and the inner rings well patronised.

MOLESEY HANDICAP STEEPLECHASE—Of 120sovs.; 90sovs. to the winner, 20sovs. to the second, and 10sovs. to the third. 3 miles.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

Reviewing the doings of the Leagues during the first half of the football season is interesting and we append below a few facts:—

The Southern League.

At the time of writing Queen's Park Rangers are at the head of affairs in the Southern League with 29 points from 20 games, and they, with Plymouth Argyle, share the honour of being the sensations of the season in the tournament to date. In the first week of 1907 the Rangers were seventeenth on the list, and when the table was finally made up they were eighteenth, with 32 points from 38 games. There was no reason to suppose when the 1907-8 season began that they would be in the run when four months had run their course. There has been a magnificent struggle between them and the Argyle, and the latter are relatively in the better position, because they are only a couple of points behind, with two matches in hand, one home and one away. The Westerners went to the head of affairs at the start, and so consistently did they play that it was not until 26th October that they dropped their first two points in one afternoon, Brentford then beating them at Griffin Park by two goals to one. Their only other defeat was at Watford, on 23rd November, when they lost 5—0, this being the heaviest total registered against them. It is largely to the rock-like character of their defence that Plymouth owe their present position, for eight clubs have obtained more goals, but there is not one in either of the leading leagues that can boast of having had only a dozen goals scored against them. On the other hand the Rangers have been comparatively weak in defence, but exceptionally strong in attack. Until the holiday matches the Royalists scored in every game, but on Christmas Day and on 26th December they failed to penetrate the opposing defence.

With regard to other clubs, comparing their present position with that a year ago, many startling changes have to be noted. Portsmouth were then pressing Fulham hard for the leadership, and they wrested it from the Cottagers a few days later. Now they are only a few places removed from the bottom, and so recently as 7th December they were twentieth on the list with 8 points from 15 matches. Since then there has been a change as startling as it was welcome, for five games have yielded 9 points and 15 goals. Norwich City have sadly disappointed their friends, for they are not playing nearly so well as last season, but there has been little variation in West Ham United and Tottenham Hotspur, both of them doing well and indifferently by turns. The weakness of the United is in attack, for the defence is splendid, but 23 goals in 20 games is suggestive of wasted opportunities on the part of the forward line. The Tottenham team has witnessed many changes, and it is doubtful whether the directors have even now made up their mind as to which is their strongest available side. Bristol Rovers have improved their position, and so have Swindon; New Brompton, Northampton, Reading, Millwall, and Crystal Palace, but Leyton, Luton, Brentford, Brighton and Hove, and Watford have all progressed backwards. Southampton are practically all square, and Bradford, who fill the vacancy caused by Fulham's resignation, have done exceedingly well, thanks in some degree to their propensity for sharing points when away from home. Shortly, the Southern League tournament promises to be one of the keenest and most exciting in its history, and an upheaval of form would bring into the running clubs whose chances are not now seriously entertained.

League Division I.

In the premier division of the Football League it has been a case of Eclipse first and the rest nowhere. Manchester United are the team of the season. They started well, they have shown brilliant and consistent form, and their lead in the competition is now so pronounced that nothing but a series of misfortunes will rob them of the leadership. Their players have been fortunate enough to escape serious accidents, and the playing of practically the same side in match after match is largely accountable for the position of splendid isolation which the team occupy. What a transformation as compared with twelve months ago. Then the United were fifteenth, with 18 points from 21 games; to-day they have 36 points from a game less, and a goal record of 56 for and 24 against. Having said so much in praise of the United, it should be pointed out that there are not lacking indications of staleness, but with the holiday matches over they should run again into the form which characterised their work in the majority of the matches in which they have figured. The rise of the United means that others have failed to reproduce last season's form, and among them Woolwich Arsenal must be included. The Gunners are 7 points worse off to-day than twelve months ago, but it must not be overlooked that the team has been chopped and changed about as the result of injuries to players, with the inevitable consequence that there has not been that rhythm in the work which is so essential to success. The Arsenal, however, are coming along well, and are just in the first half of the table, a position on which they should improve.

The other London First Division club has given rise to much discussion. The directors soon learned from bitter experience that to tread in the higher walks of football did not mean a path of roses. Men were injured, others failed to reproduce last season's form, and match after match was lost. The first two months furnished a most unenviable record—played 10, won 2, lost 7, drawn 1; goals for 9, against 25. Chelsea were at the bottom, but new players were introduced and old ones improved, with the happiest results. Only one of the last seven games has been lost, but sensational victories have been gained at Preston and Liverpool, while Aston Villa were compelled on Saturday to share points with the Pensioners. A remarkable feature about Chelsea is the tremendous amount of public support the club receives. Huge crowds are the rule and not the exception, and all League records, both for attendance and receipts, were beaten on 9th November, when Woolwich Arsenal were the visitors, the onlookers then numbering over 58,000, and the gate receipts amounting to £1,626. Having got well clear of the bottom of the table, Chelsea are likely to make their position secure, for they are playing well enough to advance a few places in the table. Birmingham and Sunderland have had most disheartening experiences, and the clubs in the second half of the table are nearly all famous in history. Bury, in the doldrums nearly all last season, have aroused considerable enthusiasm by their return to form, but Everton, Aston Villa, and Bolton Wanderers are among the clubs which have deteriorated. Bristol City are neither better nor worse than twelve months ago, and other clubs are in practically a similar position. That there will probably be many startling changes in the second half of the season is most likely, as only eight points separate the fifth from the twentieth club.

League Division II.

It is as impossible to argue from the results of matches as to who will be promoted as it is to select the two clubs who must come down from the first division, or the three who will foot the second division table on 30th April next. Many clubs are in the running. Derby County, who for the moment are leading the Second Division, are 8 points ahead of Stoke, who are tenth on the list. Between these are clubs who must be deemed to have a by no means outside chance of gaining access to that circle, entrance to which is obtained only by merit. To Londoners the chief object of concern is whether Fulham will emulate the example of Chelsea, and while their prospects are not rosy they must not be ruled out of consideration. Unfortunately the Cottagers have developed inconsistency, and this is a fatal bar to success. They have, moreover, lost three matches on their own ground, but against this they have won where defeat seemed almost a certainty. Fulham may not go up this season, but they will persevere until they achieve the double object of their ambition—possession of the F.A. Cup and the Championship of the League—long though it may be delayed. Clapton Orient have had many vicissitudes, but they now appear to have surmounted the most serious obstacles to their progress, and with the team doing really well there should be no danger of having to struggle desperately to avoid one of the fateful places now occupied by Grimsby, Blackpool, and Lincoln. At the other end Oldham Athletic, West Bromwich, Hull, and Bradford City are all well in the running, and there will be as pretty a struggle as one could desire before the curtain is rung down a few months hence.

RUGBY RULES.

In the opening match of their tour at Leicester, the Fettesian-Lorettonians were rather badly beaten, but they had a pleasant afternoon on Saturday, defeating Richmond by 4 goals and 3 tries to nil. The result muddles up the form, as earlier in the season Richmond gained an easy victory over Leicester, but results at this time of the season need not be taken very seriously. Richmond had some trouble in getting together a back division, but were fairly strong forward, Geddes, of the Scottish, and Blencowe, of Oxford, turning out. The Richmond scrummagers did very well for a long time, but in the later stages were fairly run off their legs. Once they had thoroughly gained the upper hand, the Scotch forwards came through time after time, wing their feet in the traditional style. Hardly at any time did Richmond look like scoring, their weakness behind the scrummage being too pronounced. They were a goal and 2 tries to the bad at half-time, and in the last quarter of an hour were routed. They simply could not go the pace of their quick, resolute, and untiring opponents, and in the end became quite disorganised. For close upon an hour the match did not present any special feature. The forward play was good, but that of the backs left much to be desired, most efforts at passing ending in the loss of ground. In the last quarter of an hour the Scotsmen found their game. Their forwards dominated the proceedings, and their backs brought off three or four good bouts of passing. Though Richmond were never in the hunt, the match was an interesting one to watch, if only for the brilliancy of the winners in the last ten minutes or so.

On a previous visit the Old Merchistonians administered a beating to the Harlequins, but on Saturday the positions were reversed, the latter gaining a comfortable victory by 5 goals and 2 tries to 3 goals (1 penalty). The success of the Harlequins was more pronounced than the score would indicate. The Merchistonians began well with Tennant kicking fine. The Merchistonians began well with Tennant kicking fine. over the weight, 8st. 8lb. was agreed upon, and articles in the following terms were signed:—

"Abe Attell and Owen Moran agree to box twenty-five rounds in Coffroth's Mission-street Arena on New Year's Day, at 2-15 P.M., for 60 per cent. of the gross receipts, to be divided 60 per cent. to the winner and 40 per cent. to the loser; under the Marquis of Queensberry rules, at 120lb., weighing in at the arena at 11-35 A.M. the day of the contest. The contestants agree to submit at all reasonable times to examination by the club's official physician. Contestants agree to be in the arena at least thirty minutes in advance of 2-15 o'clock.

"Moran and Attell agree to have James J. Jeffries as referee of the contest, Jeffries' fee not to exceed £200, to be shared equally by the contestants, Moran and Attell to deposit not later than 10th December the sum of £300 for compliance with these articles. The said £300 to go as a forfeit of weight. If either contestant is over weight he is to forfeit the said £300. In case the contestant making the weight is willing to box he is to receive the entire £300. If he does not box he is to receive £50, and Coffroth to receive the £250. Contestants to weigh in in the presence of Coffroth at reasonable times."

There was some dispute as to the time of weighing in. Attell was dictatorial in his request that that important preliminary should take place just prior to the scheduled time of meeting. Moran, however, was equally firm in his objection, and said it was unfair that a boxer should have to worry his weight until he entered the ring. He wanted the weighing-in to take place at least five hours before the fight, and after a lot of chaffering Attell gave way so far as to agree to go to scale at 11-35 A.M.—three and a half hours before the contest.

Both men went into strict training near the city. Moran was under the sole charge of Alf Wicks, at San Rafael, a healthy and fashionable waterside suburb, where he had the services of Joe Thomas as sparring partner, and some few days before the contest his weight was 124lb., which made it certain that he would have no trouble on that score. Attell, who at the same time scaled a couple of pounds less, did his practice with Kid Farmer and Monte Attell. He expressed himself as feeling very fit and well, and said he would make the effort of his life to retain the championship, and that if defeated he would retire from the ring.

"Abe" has been a slight favourite in the little betting that has taken place. The Californians liked the little Britisher as the result of his show against Frankie Neil, but the "wise ones" considered that Attell would be too clever and that he would be able to beat his opponent down with body blows—a style of punishment, they said, that Moran "hedged to" in his go with Neil. How far correct their idea of the situation was we shall learn when the American exchanges come to hand. Anyway, it must be a source of great gratification to sportsmen on this side to learn that the clever little English boxer has at least held his own with the undoubted best that our American cousins could pit against him, and that so far as our lightee-weight boxers are concerned we are not by any means played out.

CONNELL CUP TOURNAMENT.

The tournament began on the 13th instant at Allahabad when the first round, consisting of three matches, was played off. Seven teams had entered and the 4th Cavalry drawing a bye found their way into the semi-finals. There was a large attendance and the Middlesex Regiment were "At Home" to their friends.

1ST LANCERS VS. 2ND LANCERS.—The 1st Lancers, who lost their best ponies in the unfortunate fire on the railway, on the way to Allahabad, were rather handicapped, but put up a good game nevertheless:—

First Chukker.—The 2nd pressed most of the time, but the period ended without score.

Second Chukker.—The 1st attacked, but were stopped and Knowles getting away opened the scoring for the 2nd.

Third Chukker.—The 1st put in some good runs, but could not get through and Knowles coming away scored another goal for the 2nd.

Fourth Chukker.—Muirhead hit a goal for the 1st, but then the 2nd attacked and scored three times. Gould, Ward and Robertson being responsible.

Fifth Chukker.—The 2nd ran down and Gould scored. The 1st attacked for the remainder of the period but without success.

Sixth Chukker.—The 1st hit a goal, but were unable to get through again, and the 2nd putting on another goal ran out winners by 4 goals to 2. Teams:—

RIFLE BRIGADE VS. 14TH JAT LANCERS.—A fine game ending in favour of the Jat Lancers.

First Chukker.—The Rifle Brigade drew first blood after a series of even exchanges, but the 14th were not long in equalising.

Second Chukker.—The Riflemen again scored and repeated attempts to get on terms by the Lancers were unsuccessful.

Third Chukker.—No score, though a penalty against the 14th gave the Rifle Brigade a chance.

Fourth Chukker.—The 14th were determined to score and after they had checked a good run by Harrison they came through and Mansa Ram equalised.

Fifth Chukker.—The Riflemen attacked but were kept out and Bromilow rushing down put the 14th ahead: the Rifle Brigade pressed for the rest of the period.

Sixth Chukker.—Sutherland scored and both teams attacked in turn, the game ending with a siege of the 14th's goal. Final Score: 14th Jat Lancers 4 goals, Rifle Brigade 2 goals. Teams:—

ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA VS. R. A., LUCKNOW.—Won by the gunners by 4 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The R. A. did all the attacking, but there was no score.

Second Chukker.—The Gunners continued to press and hit a goal.

Third Chukker.—The game was still at the Gymkhana end, and after one unsuccessful shot Mackenzie scored. A foul against the Gunners let in the Gymkhana who put through from the penalty hit.

Fourth Chukker.—The Gymkhana on the defensive: no score.

Fifth Chukker.—The Gunners pressed, Mackenzie and Webber hit goals, but several subsequent shots failed.

Sixth Chukker.—The Gymkhana were again kept busy, but their defence was not again pierced, and the R. A. thus won by 4 goals to 1. Teams:—

SEMI-FINALS.

The two games in the semi-finals were played on the 15th instant, and attracted a large crowd. The officers of the 4th Cavalry dispensed hospitality.

14TH LANCERS VS. 2ND LANCERS.—A splendid game, closely contested throughout.

First Chukker.—Up and down play till Hewlett got on and opened the 14th's account: the 2nd had the best of the rest of the chukker.

Second Chukker.—The 14th rushed down and Sutherland scored; the 2nd pressed during the remaining play.

Third Chukker.—The 2nd pressed but were penalised for a foul. They returned to the attack and Robertson put through. The 2nd continued to press and exciting play followed, but there was no score.

Fourth Chukker.—Up and down play. The 14th were penalised for a foul and Ward put the teams level. The 14th then came away, but Knowles scored.

Fifth Chukker.—No score: the 2nd had an opportunity, but lost it owing to a foul.

Sixth Chukker.—Both teams put in some good runs and Robertson at length got away and scored the winning goal for the 2nd.

Final Score:—2nd 3 goals, 14th 2 goals. Teams as before

Umpires:—Colonel Turner and Major Stainforth.

4TH CAVALRY VS. R. A., LUCKNOW.—The Cavalry made their first appearance and were victorious by 5 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Cavalry pressed, but all their shots went behind and there was no score.

Second Chukker.—The Cavalry attack was at length broken up and even play followed. But the 4th again invaded the Gunners' territory and good play by Johnston and Farran resulted in the latter scoring twice.

Third Chukker.—Play in midfield: no score.

Fourth Chukker.—Smith got away for the Gunners, but was stopped: Webber, however, followed up and scored. The Cavalry then attacked and from a melee in front of the Gunners' goal Harenc put through.

Fifth Chukker.—The 4th continued to press, but their attack was at length broken up and the Gunners put in a couple of good runs.

Sixth Chukker.—Harenc and Johnston both missed shots at the Gunners' goal, but Farran scored with a fine shot a little later. Play was next transferred to the Cavalry end, but Williams relieved and coming away hit a goal. A shot by Farran just missed and the game ended with the scores: 4th Cavalry 5 goals, R. A. 1. Teams:—

THE FINAL.

4TH CAVALRY VS. 2ND LANCERS.—These teams met on Friday when a great game resulted in favour of the Cavalry. There was a big gathering of spectators and the cup was presented to the winners by Mrs. Keir.

First Chukker.—Up and down play was followed by several good runs by the Cavalry, Farran eventually receiving from Harenc opened the score.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers playing up to their form did most of the attacking and Johnston was kept busy. He was, however, seen at his best and the period ended without score.

Third Chukker.—Another pointless period. The Lancers continued to attack but their shots went behind and good runs by Farran and Williams ended similarly.

Fourth Chukker.—The Lancers were most prominent and pressed hard, but there was no score.

Fifth Chukker.—Robertson hit a goal for the Lancers and equalised, but it was not long before the Cavalry regained the lead. They worked the ball to the Lancers' goal and Farran put through from a melee.

Sixth Chukker.—Play was fast and level, both goals being visited in turn. No further score, the Cavalry winning by 2 goals to 1. Teams as before.

The native team did not put up much of a show, C. Dutt with 28, being the only one to play the bowling with any confidence.

BALLYGUNGE C. C. VS. CALCUTTA BROKERS.—As in the match on the previous Saturday, time alone robbed Ballygunge of a certain victory in their return match with the Calcutta Brokers on the 19th instant. Batting first, Shallow and Frost made an excellent start by putting on 81 for the first wicket, but at this total the latter was caught for a careful 29; Stafford followed, but with his score at 24, was bowled by Sherman. With Whiteley in, further trouble was in store for the Brokers as he and Shallow hit the bowling all over the place, and together they took the total to 220 before the latter was caught by Antram off Garth for an excellent 115; his innings was only marred by one chance when he had made over 50, but otherwise was faultless. Yeoman finished off the innings in rather sensational style, as after Gould and Whiteley had taken the score to 259, he took the last 5 wickets in 3 overs for 3 runs, his analysis eventually reading 5 for 37, quite excellent figures. Whitley was not out with a capital 62 to his credit.

For the Brokers, Quin with 28, McIntyre with 80 and Mytton with 27, did best, but as when time arrived they were 134 behind with one wicket to fall, they were in rather a hopeless position. Scores:—

CRICKET AT PATIALA.

The following is the full score of the cricket match played at Patiala on the 28th and 29th December between the Umballa Garrison and the Patiala Cricket Club which resulted in favour of the latter by 8 wickets and 80 runs. The Garrison in the first innings made 68 and the Patiala Cricket Club 139. Following the Garrison put on 71 and left the Patiala Team to make only one to win the match. But both the captains of the team decided to keep up the play till luncheon for an hour more in which interval the Maharaja going in first kept up the wicket and played brilliantly. When the bell was rung for luncheon he retired not out 54, and was most warmly greeted for his forward and free play.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

3rd January, 1908.

CHRISTMAS is over! that's apparent from the date: the New Year has begun! that too is too true. What have we done in the dead year that we would wish undone, and what shall we do in the coming one that 12 months hence we shall wish too, we had had no hand in? We shall, the best of us scratch, plus and duffers alike have missed putts, pulled and sliced tie shots and fallen into evil bunker-strewn ways! that is the common lot of the golfer to which thousands and thousands of poor "links-eyed" humanity are prone; but these bad shots have not yet made history, nor saddened us: we are as yet only on the first tee of 1908; our clubs and balls quite bright and clean, and we hope great things in the ensuing season, but, alas, for golfers in the British Isles, we are indulging in a real rare old-fashioned white Xmas. The whole country looks lovely, no one except a golfer could deny that the trees, the ground, the whole covered with sparkling crisp snow; hunting men and golfers in despair hie them back to warm, well lit, up-to-date cities and think unkindly of the beautiful snow!

* * * * * *

But before it came there was Golf enough, the actual Christmas meetings being quite unmolested by this noiseless, unwelcome seasonable visitor. Chief among these was the annual match between the Malvern Club and the famous Foster Family. The teams consisted of 10 aside and the contest resulted in a solid victory for the "Family." Two of the sons of the veteran sportsman were unable to play, but Major W. L. of that ilk took on and handsomely defeated Mr. Humphries and Major Gosling and his brother G. N. did the same with Messrs. Burrow and Baker: the side was completed by the inclusion of the Rev. W. Greenstocks who was 2 up to Mr. C. A. Horn. Of all sporting families (and there are many in England) the one at Malvern is in the present day the most famous on cricket field, tennis and fives court, and golf green: the brothers and their sister and father rank second to none, and this Christmas Golf Match is now recognised as one of the most interesting fixtures of the year. Appended are the teams and results.

It will be observed that the family included their daughter and sister (Miss C. M. Foster), who is so able an exponent of the game. Miss Foster is nearly always Champion of Worcestershire, is an English Inter-national player and is generally considered one of the best of lady golfers. En passant we congratulate her on her recently announced engagement and hope that although she will in process of time change her name she will for many years continue to play in the Worcestershire vs. Fostershire Match at Christmas on her home green.

Another interesting contest which recently took place was in connection with the Headmasters' Conference at Oxford; this was a match between a team of Headmasters, "headmastered" by Mr. C. E. Brownrigg (Magdalen College School) and a team of Senior Members of the Oxford University Club, captained by the President, Dr. R. W. Macaw (Master of University). The match took place on the Oxford Club's supplementary course at Cowley in fairly fine weather and resulted in a tie at 5½ points each.

The Master of University played fine golf against a member of another well-known sporting family, the Rev. the Hon'ble E. Lyttleton, whom he defeated by 6 and 4: Mr. H. H. Howse (Malvern) and Mr. J. F. Stenning had a very close fight, resulting in a halved match. Eight of the big Public Schools were represented.

Some interesting play took place at Bramshot Heath at Christmas. In the morning Princess Victoria of Schleswig Holstein and J. H. Taylor receiving a half, beat Prince Albert of Schleswig Holstein and A. W. Butchart the local professional, by 3 and 1. In the afternoon the Prince played the best ball of the professional, receiving a stroke a hole which resulted in a win for the professional by 2 and 1. The New Year just begun promises brilliantly for Golf and Golfers. All over the world the game has caught us in the most astounding way and each of the three great Divisions has its own interests, its own principals, ladies, amateurs and professionals, but while this intense cold lasts, the clubs are relegated to a warm corner, covered with grease and not until King Frost breaks will they be brought out again, or will these notes be worth reading.

THE INDIAN RAPTORES.

BUZZARDS.

THE true Buzzards are represented in India by two genera comprising in all four species and are closely allied to the eagles, but differ in having less powerful bills and claws, the tarsi only partially feathered. In one species the tarsi are feathered to the base of the toes but they are naked in the rest. The genus Buteo is divided into three species viz. the Long-legged Buzzard; "B. leucocephalus" the Upland Buzzard and "B. desertorum" the common Buzzard and the genus "Archibuteo" which is very similar to "Buteo" except for the feathering of the tarsus to the base of toes, in front, comprises but one species, known to visit India and even this is a very rare bird only occasionally visiting the higher ranges of the Himalayas, whence a few specimens have been procured.

Of the three species of "Buteo," one, the Upland Buzzard is also a very rare bird, only two stragglers having been recorded to date, one from the Pir Punjal Range in Kashmir and the other from Sikhim. "Buteo ferox" the Long Legged Buzzard is perhaps the commonest species in the Punjab, United Provinces, Rajputana and Sind, but is not usually found further South and is not common in the plains even in the above named localities except in the winter months. "B. desertorum" is almost entirely restricted to mountain forests, seldom, only in the winter, frequenting the plains. This Buzzard is common all over the Himalayas and is also to be found in the Nilgiris and other high ranges of South India.

The nest, so far does not appear to have been taken in India, but that he does breed in Kashmir at all events, I have no hesitation in asserting, for I have frequently come across this species in fir forests at altitudes from 10,000 to 11,000ft. and have seen the nestling just able to fly being fed by the parents. They are rather noisy birds with a loud plaintive call, which they frequently utter and may be seen at high altitudes on plateaux which are bordered by a fringe of trees. Insects and voles appear to constitute their staple diet though, I dare say, rats snakes and mouse-hares also come in for a fair share of attention. On one occasion, I found a Himalayan viper (H. himalayensis) being eaten by one of these Buzzards. This species is the smallest of the true Buzzards, only measuring from 18 to 20 inches in length.

The Buzzards, unlike all other birds of prey, have one curious characteristic in common, and that is, the lack of any distinctive young plumage, i.e., they "assume the adult plumage at once from their downy stage." "Buteo ferox" may be found in three distinct plumages, viz., the pale or rufous plumage; the dark brown and the dark chocolate, but neither of these is necessarily a criterion of youth or age. Hume considered the pale plumage to be that of the young bird, which was followed by the brown, and the dark chocolate stage was the sign of an old bird, but Blanford positively asserts that the dark is certainly not the sign of age and I am convinced that the pale is not necessarily the garb of the nestling, for I have caught and seen specimens, in the pale plumage, still showing some dark brown unmoulted feathers, clearly proving that they changed from the dark into the pale and that the pale was not the first garb, whatever else it might be, or if it was, the bird had changed from it, into the dark and then back to light again. Blandford says, "it is evident that the dark birds are a melanistic form, and that the colour is not due to age."

"Buteo ferox" builds either in cliffs or on trees, laying it is said, from two to four eggs, greenish white, richly blotched with reddish-brown. The Buzzards are all heavy, sluggish birds, much preferring to sit on a tree or even on the ground and watch for their prey to flying, though they do occasionally soar and soar well too, going up to considerable heights. Whereas "B. ferox" is usually seen by himself, "B. desertorum" are almost always in pairs and are ever ready to mob any of the larger eagles, that poaches on their preserves and as the Golden Eagle is really the only one, that reaches their haunts, he gets the brunt of their temper and bad language. Both "B. ferox" and "B leucocephalus" are bigger than "desertorum" and about the size of a Common Pariah Kite or a little larger, but "B ferox" may be identified from "B leucocephalus" in having his tarsus feathered for only half its length in front, whereas, the latter, has his feathered for about ⅓rd of its length. In "Archibuteo hemiptilopus," the Himalayan Rough-legged Buzzard as I have already said the tarsus is feathered to base of toes but in front only.

THE CRESTED HONEY BUZZARD.

"Pernis cristatus," the Crested Honey Buzzard, in reality has no connection with the true Buzzards, so should not be placed alongside of them, but as he differs from all birds of prey, he might just as well be described here as elsewhere, especially as this will keep all the larger birds separate. There is only one species of this genus known in India, viz., the above named and he can be "distinguished from all other occipitrine birds by having the lores (space in front of the eyes) and the sides of the head, like the forehead and chin, covered with small scale like feathers, without any bristles or bristly ends." (Blanford). This species though widely distributed is nowhere common and restricted to thick forests or gardens, where it lives for the most part on honeycombs and the young of bees and wasps, though he seemingly thrives on fruit as well. His long sharp claws would also point to his being carnivorous, but I have never seen this species attack even rats or lizards and I have frequently tried to catch him with a net and for a bait used quails, mynahs, doves etc., but never succeeded in making him come to the bait. A very interesting account of this bird by Mr. J. G. Millais which appeared in the Field and was reproduced in the Aviicultural Society's Magazines, Vol. IV., No. 6 of April 1906 goes a long way to prove that fruit at all events does not disagree with him. Regarding his food, Mr. Millais writes: "For more than a week it refused all food, so that I feared it would soon die of starvation. Little birds, frogs and insects, were offered in vain and only as an experiment did I force a French plum down its throat, for that was the nearest approach to honey at hand. To my surprise, the bird picked up and swallowed the next plum with avidity and from that moment I had no trouble with its menu. "....." I shall never forget the first time we went to attack a wasp's nest, to which a farm boy was guiding me ..... the Honey Buzzard suddenly stretched its neck and intently watching a wasp that went by, threw itself into the air and with great rapidity flew low and straight to the 'like' about a hundred yards distant and situated in a high bank..... It used its beak occasionally to pull aside a root or other obstruction, but most of the work of unearthing the nest was done with the feet. Meanwhile, the wasps in access of fury swarmed all over the bird and of those little tormentors it seemed to take not the least notice, a circumstance explained, as I afterwards found out by the fact that though the wasps entered the plumage with their heads and could even reach the skin, they nevertheless found it impossible to screw round their metathoraxes and sting the bird, owing to the way in which it held the feathers and to the strength and elasticity of the down. During its meal the bird swallowed grubs, comb and full grown wasps and for three days afterwards wasps still remained in its plumage. These seemed to cause the Buzzard no inconvenience but rather a pleasant supply for I constantly saw it during this time searching its plumage and abstracting wasps, which it at once nipped and swallowed or allowed to drop to the ground."

PYRKE'S PROVISION STORES,

Apollo Bunder, BOMBAY.

According to Mr. Millais it makes a most engaging and affectionate pet. When soaring, the Crested Honey Buzzard rather resembles the "Spizaeti," but its flap is more hurried, though the speed is by no means as great as that of the latter. Crows seldom lose a chance of mobbing him. It breeds in trees and lays one or two eggs, white, blotched with red. Length 27 inches, wing 17 inches.

There is still another genus comprising one species. The Slender Billed Pern (Machoerhamphus alcinus) which resembles to some extent the Honey Buzzard in having the lores and sides of face feathered. This is an inhabitant of the Malay Peninsula, Borneo and New Guinea and nothing seems to be known of its habits. It is smaller than the last species, only measuring about 18 inches in length.

BAZA.

The "Baza" is a genus of small birds represented in India by three species, two of which are very rare and the third by no means common. Some naturalists consider this genus to be allied to the kites, others again to the Honey Buzzards, and some again hold that it is related to the falcons, but with the exception of the toothed mandible and dark eyes there does not appear to be much of the "Falco" about this genus in either outward appearance or habits. The three species known to occur in India are "Baza lophotes," the Black-crested Baza; "Baza jerdoni," Blyth's Baza and "B. ceylonensis," Legge's Baza. The last named has been recorded from Ceylon and the Wynaad; the second from Sikhim, Tenasserim, Malay Peninsula and Sumatra and "B. lophotes" is said to inhabit the forests of Assam, Cachar, Manipur, Arrakan, Tenasserim, Cochin China, Malay Peninsula and Ceylon and the base of the Himalayas as far west as Nepal.

This species undoubtedly wanders into the Central Provinces and the borders of Madras as well, as I have seen one on the Bastar boundary and another in the Jeypore Agency in the Vizagapatam District. The Bazas all have long occipital crests like the Spizaeti; the tarsus is feathered in front for about half its length and the upper mandible is furnished with two teeth in the adults though the young birds usually have only one tooth like Falcons. "Baza lophotes" is a small bird about the size of "Astur badius" the Shikra but "B. jerdoni" and "B. ceylonensis" measure up to 18 and 16 inches in length respectively.

The general colour of the black-crested Baza is black above with white on the scapulars (the wing feathers which lie over the back when the wings are closed) and a white band across the testiaries—(the last few wing feathers next to the body). A conspicuous white gorget, bordered by a blackish band. Abdomen and lower tail coverts, black. This species seems to restrict itself to the tops of very high trees, flying from one to the other and uttering a not unmusical whistle. It lives for the most part on insects and occasionally lizards.

One of those I saw was pursuing termites along with some drongos and smaller birds which did not appear to shun the Baza. It appears to build in trees laying two or three chalky white eggs.

The Story Teller.

THE HEAVENLY FLAME.

MR. ARCHIBALD DUCKEY, the great music-hall agent, sat in his sumptuously furnished offices in the Strand. He believed in doing everything well. He had done his clients well, he had done himself well; and when he moved across the water he had done up his offices well. He was unlike his rivals in every way. The music-hall agent is generally a short, oily, fat Jew. Archibald Duckey was tall, spare even to thinness, and a Christian. He succeeded with women because he was a humbug, and did not swear at them, and with men because he could drink without losing his head. The rumour was that his legs were hollow, but nobody said that about his head. He succeeded with managers because he was a Christian, and did not let his commission stand in the way of business.

He was strolling round his inner office, carefully scrutinising the frames of photographs that lined the walls, and seemed in deep thought as he moved from one to the other, when a clerk came in and handed him a letter. He sat down upon a large cardinal plush sofa, and opened it. It was a large, square sheet of paper, more like a billhead than anything else. It was adorned with a rough woodcut of a woman in tights, the words "The Heavenly Flame" printed in large block type, several complimentary quotations from "The Era," "The Stage," and minor trade journals, and some modest remarks that "The Heavenly Flame" was the greatest artiste living, and drew more money and more people than any other six ladies in her great songs, "The Snipperty Snopperty Snob" and "The King of the Girls." The letter was in pencil, and ran as follows:—

"Dear Duckey,—Yours to 'and. A bit late larst nite, as the boys 'ad a beano, so not up yet, and shvin' at the bread and butter; but shal soon be into my clobber, and will be with you as sune as the brume is roun'—very likely afore you get this, has the 'orse in the shoeful wot Nelly's fetch looks as hif he would do the same journey on 'is 'ead.—Yours hever,

"SALLY."

Mr. Duckey smiled, not at the curious spelling, for he was used to that, but with satisfaction; and, if he had been in the habit of speaking to himself, he would have said, "So she is coming!" He would hardly have had time to say more. A clerk entered to say that Miss Sally Wren wished to see him. Now, as everybody knows, "The Heavenly Flame," as she called herself, is Miss Sally Wren, and, though self-praise is no recommendation, she in no way exaggerated her talents when she described herself as drawing more people and more money than any other six ladies on the music-hall stage. Personally, she was as modest as she was talented and vulgar; but her profession required her not to hide her talents under a bushel, and to dress herself in the most absurd and vulgar fashion—as was evident when she entered, with a pot-hat on her head and her body wrapped in a blue plush garment which was half a Newmarket coat and half a tea-gown, stuck all over with diamonds, which, in a duchess, from their size, would have been taken for paste.

She flung herself on a couch without any more to do, and opened the conversation by saying:

"Well, Duckey, what's new?"

"Not much, my dear, except that I hear you're killing yourself with work, and that you're going to ruin yourself over this public-house business."

"I've got it on my 'ands. Bought it for me 'usband, as you know; found 'e was carrying on with the barmaids, so fired him and them into the street. Do you know a buyer?"

"I think I do—if I can do business with you."

"Well, what's the offer?"

"I hear you have quarrelled with your agent."

"Yes what of it?"

"You'll want another."

"So that's the game is it?"

"Now don't be in a hurry. Listen to what I've got to offer. You are the cleverest woman in your line, but you're going to ruin yourself with worry over your affairs, and what you want is rest and quiet, light work, good money, and to get away from it all."

"Where can I go? How can I do it?"

"I have a first-rate tour booked for a concert party in the best towns, and——"

"I heard that Molly Jerome had chucked you over."

"Exactly; she has. I made her, and she is too big for her boots. She has behaved very badly, and——"

"You're in a hole."

"I am; but——"

"You want me to pull you out of it?"

"Well, I thought it would just suit you to get away for a rest into the air of the seaside towns."

"You are a great big-hearted boy, Duckey."

There was a sneer in her voice which Archibald Duckey detected, and so he hurried on to throw in her way the golden apples.

"I'll give you £100 a week cert., pay all fares, £10 a week for hotels, give you 25 per cent. on the gross, and bill you like a circus."

"No good, my boy. I wouldn't go with you if you gave me the earth."

"Why not? One good turn deserves another!"

"It does so!"

"And I got you your first engagement."

"You did—and I'll tell you how. It's a good many years ago now, and I'll never forget it. I was sixteen, and was engaged at a sailors' public-house, where I scrubbed the steps in the morning, washed the pewters during the day, and sang songs at the free-and-easy. I had a baby to keep, and in the dinner-hour I used to go to your office, and asked you to get me a turn. Things were not what they are now, and you didn't think coster songs would go in the West End. You advised me to buy clothes and new songs. I did. I starved myself and I starved my baby to get 'em. And, when I'd got 'em, I went back to you. You promised to help me, and I went every day to see if you had anything to offer me. Every day, for months, I got the same answer; and every day I went back to wash the pewters. At last you gave me a note to old Benton, who had the "Kent" in those days. The woman who minded my baby was away during the dinner-hour, so I had to take the kiddie with me. I hadn't a 'bus-fare, so I had to tramp it through the snow and slush to the West End. I saw old Benton, and he read your note, and said he was very sorry, but he had nothing to offer me. I went down on my knees with the kiddie, and begged for a chance. He looked me up and down, and evidently didn't think much of me in my print marking dress, for I was pinched and worn, and a bit pulled down, and not too tidy after my walk. However, he asked me what I could do, and I told him how I made the sailors laugh and cry. So he called his accompanist, to whom I hummed over the tune for him to vamp an accompaniment. The light was turned up, and I did my song and dance in my wet shoes, while the kiddie slept in my old shawl in the stage-box. He made me sing three songs, and then said he would put me on as an extra turn if I came as I was. I was skeered out of my life when I went on; but I was new, and I went with a shout, and I was engaged at thirty bob a week, old Benton—God bless him!—promising to pay your coin. When I asked him why, he gave me your note. Do you remember how it ran?"

"Indeed I do not."

"Then perhaps you'd like to read it?"

She drew from her pocket a yellow old letter, and placed it before him. He commenced to read:

"'Dear Benton,—I send you the bearer——'"

He stopped dead, but she went on:

"Don't be afraid of it, man. It won't hurt you as much as it did me. Go on—read it out! I remember every word of it."

"'Dear Benton,—I send you the bearer to get rid of her. She's a dirty slut, and no good. Don't lose your time with her, but tell her she's no good and chuck her out.—Yours ever, ARCHIBALD DUCKEY.'"

"I don't bear no ill-will, Duckey, but that was a dog's trick, and I've always promised myself the pleasure of telling you how you got me my first engagement. I can afford to tell you now, and you can afford to pull yourself out of your own hole. You'd better go and make it up with Molly Jerome."

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 49.

Z can count two tricks in hearts and one in spades, and is fairly sure of five in diamonds. He may not make a club, however, unless the suit is led by the adversaries, and to guard against eventualities must play to make some of dummy's spades. Now, the best way of doing this is to lead a small one to the ace, and return the 4 of hearts. If A, who is marked with the aces, passes this trick, Y will clear his spades, while he has still a card of entry in the king of diamonds. If he takes it, he must then either lead a heart up to the king, 9, a club up to the guarded king, a diamond, which gives Y the opportunity of finessing the 10, or a spade, which makes the game a certainty for Z. It would be useless to lead the queen of spades at trick 2, as B would not cover unless she were obliged to.

Problem No. 50.

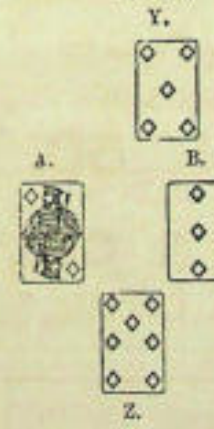
Score: A B 8, Y Z 24. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares spades. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy)—Hearts, ace, 10, 6; diamonds, jack, 10, 5; clubs, 9, 6, 2; spades, king, queen, 7, 6.

Z's Hand (Dealer).—Hearts, king, jack, 5, 3; diamonds, 7 clubs, 7, 5, 4; spades, ace, jack, 9, 8, 3.

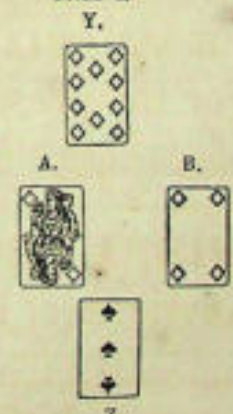
The first four tricks are as follows:—

Trick 1.



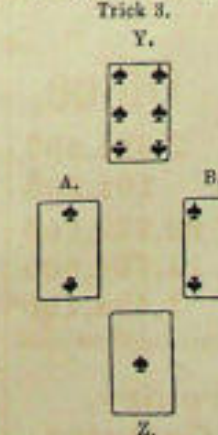
Tricks: A B, 1; Y Z, 0.

Trick 2.



Tricks: A B, 1; Y Z, 1

Trick 3.



Tricks: A B, 1; Y Z, 2.

THE EDUCATION OF A MAN-EATER.

THE "Man-eaters of Tsavo," who for three weeks put a complete stop to the construction of the Uganda Railway in 1898, will always hold a place among classic wild beasts with the Manala rogue elephant and certain tigers of bad repute: and it is well that Colonel Patterson, the engineer in charge of the railway works, which were so retarded by the attacks of the lions should have been induced to give permanent shape to his experiences. His book is something more than a recital of adventure exciting, dangerous and painful: it furnishes in a peculiarly lucid fashion evidence of the manner in which beasts of prey gradually learn their horrible business when they resort to man killing. Tales of man-eating lions and tigers are common enough, but never within our knowledge have circumstances lent themselves to the study of lion methods and self-education as was the case in the Uganda railway works. The task of constructing the line entailed the engagement of some 3,000 coolies from this country: and these being distributed among various camps as the nature of the work required, furnished food for the lions which, as it proved eventually, had their den close by. Colonel Patterson set himself a particularly difficult task when he determined to rid the neighbourhood of the man-eaters, for the brutes seemed from the first to realise that safety to themselves lay in attacking a different camp each night, and thus the attempts to kill from machans were almost hopeless. Chance never favoured him; or, we need not hesitate to share his belief that the lions watched him and avoided the camp he selected over which to keep his night watch. The history of the Tsavo man-eaters was in every way remarkable: there were only two of them—maneless males—they killed a coolie nearly every night; and during the nine months the reign of terror continued the change in their practice and methods could be, and was, only too clearly observed. There is something reminiscent of human intelligence in the story: the first endeavours of the lions were not always successful; they were bold enough from the beginning, but at the critical moment of seizure did not always keep their heads. Thus on one occasion a lion broke into the tent of a Greek contractor, seized and made off, not with the man but with the mattress on which he was lying: another night a lion sprang through the tent in which fourteen coolies were sleeping and grabbed in his haste a bag of rice which he carried for a little distance and dropped. These were early attempts: the lions, so to speak, were in their apprenticeship and had not learned that it is not enough to "bush" a tent and snatch up the first object that presents itself. Such incidents show unmistakably that the brutes were flurried and had not their wits about them: but as time went on they ceased to make such blunders and went about their deadly night work with the coolness and temerity which come of practice. They appeared to study the conditions under which they had to work, and refused to be frightened by devices which would scare their species under ordinary conditions: fires were kept blazing all night and the chaukidar on duty kept up a continual clattering of kerosine tins hung for the purpose; these were of no avail: the lions somehow contrived to make their way noiselessly through the dense thorn bomas erected round the camps and defying noise and glare carried off their victims. Another remarkable change in their tactics was noted after a time; at first the attack was always made by one lion, its mate waiting outside the boma, as the pugs proved, to share the meal the active partner seldom failed to bring out of the camp: with greater experience this method of hunting was discarded and both lions attacked simultaneously, each taking its own victim. It would really seem as though the two worked on a concerted plan, one keeping watch for a possible foe, while the other did the work, until they realised that they could without risk dispense with the sentry and both do active work. They acquired a lordly contempt for the unfortunate coolies, too: on one occasion a lion forced its way through the boma, recking nothing of sticks, stones and firebrands, and killed a man whose body it dragged away. Not only that but once outside the thorn fence it was joined by its mate and the two actually ate the victim then and there within thirty yards of the tent whence he had been seized while the jemadar of the gang fired several shots at them. The attack was invariably made in complete silence: every night the roaring of the lions was heard gradually drawing nearer; then it would cease and the listeners knew that the stalk had begun. We can well believe Colonel Patterson when he says that he never experienced anything more nerve-shaking than this nightly roaring followed by the silence whose purport he had learned to know only too well: we imagine that the silence must have been even more trying to the nerves than the roaring.

Traps and poison were tried but without avail; it was seldom that the lions would look at such bait as donkey or goat; but eventually, after "lion proof" camps had been arranged, the coolies placing their charpoys on the lofty water tanks, on trees or other inaccessible sites, the lions did condescend to animal prey and thus brought about their undoing; but probably no sportsman ever had a worse two hours than did Colonel Patterson when, sitting over the carcase of a donkey, he discovered that a lion, utterly ignoring the bait, was creeping slowly round and round the flimsy structure of poles which supported his machan. This one was shot and proved to be one of the two man-eaters: the second was killed a few nights later over goats: and parenthetically it may be noted that this second lion dragged for a distance of about quarter of a mile a half length of rail weighing 250lbs. to which were attached two other full-grown goats in addition to that he had killed. One point remains to be noticed: audacious, cool and calculating as these man-eaters became they appeared never once to have attacked by day, though opportunities of pouncing upon coolies working on the new line in dense bush must have been of daily occurrence. We half expected to read that, when the system of sleeping on places inaccessible to lions was adopted, the man-eaters changed their habits and hunted by day; but evidently there is a point beyond which the boldest lion and most practised in man killing will not go. Colonel Patterson is to be congratulated on a valuable, if painful, addition to our knowledge of lions.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

There was nothing very exciting about the Fourth Extra Meeting last Saturday and the muggy weather, thin attendance and poor fields in three out of the six events on the card all pointed to the fact that the season is on the wane, and though the Stewards, it is rumoured, hope to be able to continue the extra meetings well into March, the great days are things of the past and until racegoers adjust themselves to the new conditions they cannot but feel that something is missing. However the absence of bustle and excitement is not altogether a bad thing and no doubt we shall have lots of good sport and fun in a small way for several weeks to come.

The first item was the Fifth Horse Hurdle Race for which five of them went out. Only Clodian and Kingpin were backed to any great extent, though there was also a certain amount of money forthcoming for Lord Harry. Clodian looked a little tucked up and though on form he should have been the better after they had seen him in the ring the cognoscenti preferred Kingpin, and more money went on the latter, although the official starting price of both was the same. In the race Boolara and Trustee cut out the pace, but the former was finished with at the 6 furlongs. Trustee, who was then tiring, fell and lay stunned at the jump by the Old Stand and then the two favourites were out on their own, Clodian leading, and a great race home from the last jump ended in Mr. Evers just catching him and winning on Kingpin by a head.

There scratched for the Ganges Plate, leaving twelve in. Lady Teazle was a very hot favourite with Golden next most fancied and then at the last minute a lot of money came in for a big ugly looking powerful brown rejoicing in the untoward name of Umutoee and he shortened from tens to fives pretty quickly. This proved the winner, as Golden was left at the post. Lady Teazle had shot her bolt after 3 furlongs and the big gentleman went on and won from the 20 to 1 outsider Kendal King in the smartish time of 1min. 3¾secs.

In the Kedleston Plate the public found the pea out of the 15 of them all right in Pelargonium II, who, nicely ridden by Melson, won in good style after a good race with Silphoe, who was well backed for a place. Foy again ran well up and only finished a head behind Silphoe.

As has been the habit of late the biggest race of the day served up the biggest surprise. The Minto Plate (1 mile) looked a very certain thing for Prince Lyon, but unfortunately the horse was sick and could not start, leaving six of them to go for it. Saloon and Pendred were most in demand, then Killeevan, Botha and Annamulloch. Blitzen, though looking very well, has proved so unreliable that even her own connections gave her but little chance and she was on offer at tens or twelve to one and started almost unbacked. She then proceeded to demonstrate the contrariness of things in general and horse racing in particular, as the mare jumped away to the front and going well throughout was able to stave off a great effort by Botha and won comfortably by a length.

There were only five left in the Club Plate, and it was felt that it was practically a match between Galstaun's Wild Boy and Scott's Yankee Boy as the other three might as well not have been there. As far as the first two positions were concerned, wise people backed them both and could look unmoved at the exciting race which ensued and which ended in the victory of Wild Boy by half a length, due very much to Robinson's fine riding at the finish. Captain Holden's Thelma had the distinction of carrying the smallest jockey in India, Ram Pershad, a boy, who can go to scale at 5st., and has to put up lead to draw 6st.

There was another good finish for the wind up of the day for which the veteran "Jimmy" was again responsible. The race was a very open one. Santa Maria and St. Victor were equal favourites but Pure Gold, Bouquet, Creel and Kendal King were also well backed. Creel went out to the front and going well. Pure Gold however tackled her in the last few lengths and by sheer fine riding, Robinson just got his head in front at the post, the two favourites running nowhere. Now we have a respite for a week, while the keenest of our race goers run up to Lucknow to see the Cup. After that there is a steeplechase meeting at Tollygunge on Friday, 7th February, and another Extra on the 8th. It is to be hoped that this experiment of an extra day's chasing will prove successful.

The following are the handicaps for the Civil Service Cup to be run on 3rd February:—

Eileen, 10-5; Gyrtle, 10-5; First Bell, 10-5; Wal, 9-13; Circus Girl, 9-6; Matin Bell, 9-0; Lorette, 9-0; Coin II, 8-11; Son of a Gun, 8-9; Hooded Monk, 8-7; Curlew, 8-0; Fabius, 8-0; Devon, 7-9; Sago, 7-7; Lady Polly, 7-7; Lady Midget, 7-5; The Point, 6-13; Fortune, 6-2 and May Queen, 6-0. The others have been scratched.

The handicap for the Civil Service Cup given above has provoked a good deal of unfavourable comment. Mr. Bunting has scratched his ponies as a protest and it would not be at all unreasonable if H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar were to follow the same course, as on their running, the genuineness of which no one doubts, his ponies have not been well treated, and though First Bell may run well up in spite of his handicap he appears to have been given very little chance. Circus Girl, who is going so strong just now, is favourite and certainly deserves her position, as on her recent form she has got in very light and will take a lot of beating. When the books first opened on Friday morning Fabius and The Point were best backed and stood at 4 to 1, Circus Girl and Son of a Gun being at 6 to 1 and 8 to 1, respectively; however, Mr. Galstaun's mare was immediately snapped up to a big money at the price and by Saturday after the races she stood at 7 to 2. Son of a Gun has also had steady support and [illegible] who maintains his posi[tion] been the subject of a lot o[f] are probably more of the n[ame] than genuine support and the [money] recorded about him is 7,000 to [1] 1,000 a place, a price that could p[robably] got about him for the asking, as he has [no] Civil Service Cup form yet, and it is a [question] ness backing ponies on what they ought [to] be able to do.

We append the latest official quotations (up [to] time of going to press) from Messrs. Champ[ion] and Co:—

The fifth paperchase of the season on Fri[day] was out in the Jodepore and bund country, a fa[irly] long course with lots of sporting jumps and g[ood] soft going the whole way. It is just as well t[hat] it should be so as there seem to be even mor[e] clumsy horses than usual of late and their victim[s] would be none the happier if the ground was a[s] in the early part of the season of an iron-like consistency. On Friday grief was not quite s[o] plentiful as in the previous week, but there wa[s] quite enough for anyone except the simple villager who thinks there is no more amusing spectacle t[o] be seen than steed and rider roll over together and likes as many of these divertissements as he can get. Trouble began at the second wall where Captain Harker's bay fell right over and horse and man seemed mixed up in inextricable confusion. However they got apart all right eventually with no damage done. At the next fence Betty made a regular mess of it and gave Mr. Hadow a bad fall, but they fell clear of each other and there were no ill effects. Messrs. Scaramanga, Robertson and Barclay, Colonel Victor Brooke and Captain Fe[rmoy] made the running and it looked as if the finish [would] be a fight between the two fiends, Lucifer and L[ockhart] till at the penultimate fence the latter gen[erally] earned his name by coming a regular bad purler. [It] a miracle it seemed they both got on their legs aga[in] and friendly hands assisting him into the saddle with all despatch Captain Fraser made a plucky dash to get his place, but had the bad luck just to miss it, finishing seventh. The final order was: Mr. Scaramanga on Lucifer, Mr. Robertson on Solanus, Mr. Barclay on Lockhart, Colonel Victor Brooke on Holm, Captain Fitzgerald on Fermoy, Mr. Radmore on Agamemnon, Captain Fraser on Diabolo, Miss Wheeler on Trilby, Mr. Levetus on Prince Moorfield, Mr. MacCrae on a bay, Mrs. Damiano on Queen of Hearts, Mr. Hamilton on Pretender.

There was a good field of ponies and after a pretty fast chase the final order was: Mr. Sieger on Killarney, Mr. Robertson on Minstrel Boy, Mr. Antram on Blazes, Captain Elgee on Matilda, Mr. Mackenzie on Starboard Light, Mr. Bletsoe on Seagull, Mr. Wilson on King Lock, Mr. Stephen on a bay, Mr. Stokes on a bay, Mr. Turner on Emerald, Mrs. Paris on Zigzag, and Mr. Levetus on Lady George. In addition to those mentioned above we noticed out Mrs. Forsyth on Greyman, Miss Curtis Hayward on Lady Wilful, Mr. Stoke on a chestnut, Mrs. Dudley Myers on Napier, Miss Thomas on a chestnut, Mr. Dudley Myers on Sir Walter, Mr. Evers on Eclipse, Captain Ho[lmes] on Lord Harry, Mr. M. Turner on Bluebell, Mr. Halliday on a bay, Mr. Barrow on Cotswold, Mr. Hadow on a bay, Mr. Cowper on Envious, [and] Davies on Actress II, and many others.

THE chase for the Ladies' Cup on Tuesday was a short course, about two miles over the famous bund country and including the run of four mud walls that all Calcutta paperchase devotees know and love so well. Rain the night before had made the going very heavy and the Light Horse dance had kept many of the fair competitors up to within a very few hours of the time appointed for the start, but nothing daunted the very excellent field of twelve mustered between the flags to have a try for the much-coveted trophy, or at any rate a pleasant ride. It speaks volumes for the sportswomen of Calcutta that except for Goodfellow, who fell with the Hon. Mrs. Freivichs on landing after the first wall in such a way that no one could have kept him up, the whole dozen of them got round without mishap. Lady Violet Elliot on Lord Harry led the field the whole way and despite a great effort by Miss Waterhouse on Lady Gold, who made up a lot of ground in the last furlong, she won comfortably by two lengths. The final order was: Lady Violet Elliot on Lord Harry 1; Miss Waterhouse on Lady Gold 2; Mrs. Damiano on Queen of Hearts 3; Miss Wheeler on Trilby 4; Miss Collin on Day Dream 5; Mrs. Forsyth on Corydon 6; Mrs. Hadow on Betty 7; Mrs. Paris on Zigzag 8; Miss Dods on Dainty Lady 9; Miss Lukis on Sayonara 10; Miss Thomas on Moleen 11. There was a large gallery, including H. E. Lord Minto, and a good many of the spectators cantered round the course after the race for the cup was over. Chota-hazri was laid in khansamiana near the finish as usual on our big da[illegible] was no doubt very welcome to all.

THE Punjab Volunteer Hockey Challenge Cup tournament was concluded on the 18th instant, when the Munster Fusiliers beat the 1st Punjab Volunteers in the final game by a goal to nil. Results elsewhere.

THE Billiard match between Stevenson and Mike Elias was played at the Hazari Club, Cawnpore, on the 22nd instant. The game was 1,000 up and resulted in an easy win for the English champion. Stevenson ran out when his opponent, who was receiving 500, had added 341 to his handicap. Elias was in poor form, his highest breaks being 51, 42, and 30; Stevenson's best were 188, 90 and 85 with several visits to the table which produced sixties and seventies. In the game of Snookers which followed Elias, who got a start of 20 points, won by 21, the game standing 64 to 43.

THE game between Melbourne Inman and Mike Elias was played at the Calcutta Concert Hall on the 24th and 25th instant and produced an exciting finish. Elias, who was receiving 700 in a game of 2,000, was just beaten by the Colonial by 23 points. He was in excellent form on both evenings and made some really brilliant strokes. The scores when play ended on Friday evening were: Inman 1,001; Elias 1,173, and at the conclusion of the game, Inman 2,000, Elias 1,977. A local sportsman, who was of opinion that Inman would not beat Elias in a game of 1,000 up conceding him 350, offered a purse for another match and the couple met again on the 26th instant. A good game was witnessed, Inman running out when his opponent had scored 939. The great match between Stevenson and Inman is now in progress.

No definite reason was ever assigned for the withdrawal of H. L. Doherty from first-class lawn tennis last season. His last appearance was in the Monte Carlo tournament, and he was then beaten by M. J. G. Ritchie when requiring only one more victory to win the challenge cup outright. Even during the championship meeting at Wimbledon, last June, and later, when A. W. Gore and H. Roper Barrett were pluckily striving to retain possession of the Davis Cup, it was rumoured that the champion's retirement was only temporary. It is now announced that he will return to the game and attempt to regain the honours he so readily relinquished.

THE final game in the Bechtler Hockey Cup Tournament was played at Cawnpore on the 25th instant when the Durham L. I. beat the Royal Scots Fusiliers after an exciting game by 4 goals to nil.

IN connection with the open Boxing Tournament to be held at Lucknow from the 1st to the 5th of February, as Lieutenant-General Sir E. Locke Elliot vacates the command of the Lucknow Division this year the championship belts presented by him will become the property of the winners of the various competitions. In consequence of this very large entries have been received from all over India, the number to date being over 100.

SOME difficulty has arisen respecting French co-operation, so far as the cycling events are concerned in the Olympic Games to be held this year in London. To understand the position, it is necessary to remember that these Olympic Games belong to a cycle which was begun in 1896 at Athens, under the auspices of the International Olympic Committee, which had been appointed at an International Athletic Congress held in Paris. That Committee decides the places where the games shall successively be held; and accordingly, at a sitting in Athens in 1906, it invited the British Association to hold the Olympic Games of 1908 in London. The contests will therefore be held under the auspices of the International Olympic Committee. The British Association proceeded to ask the members of the International Olympic Committee each to form in his own country a National Committee to promote the participation of his countrymen in the games of London.

Committees have been formed in nearly all the civilised countries of the world. But a French union of athletic societies declines to recognise the French Committee so appointed, and claims that it and its affiliated societies should manage the French part of the business without the interposition of the Committee above referred to. This is the point on which the controversy has arisen, and not any question of what constitutes an amateur.

THE committee of the Humanitarian League has sent a letter to the Home Secretary concerning the rumour that the Zoological Society is to ask the Government to subsidise its work. The League expresses the hope that no subsidy will be granted, except under the condition that the "Zoo" shall be subject to inspection by some such body as the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The letter adds that the Zoological Society has no right to refuse, as at present, to give satisfactory guarantees that no cruelty is permitted on its grounds, "as for example, in the use of live animals as food for serpents."

WE have received from the Superintendent a copy of the Annual Report of the Committee for the management of the Calcutta Zoological Garden. It is satisfactory to find that the financial condition of the garden is even better than that of the previous year, which was exceptionally good in this respect, the takings from visitors during the year 1906-07 being Rs. 2,250 more than in the previous year. The attendance of visitors shows a big increase also. 457, 891 people were admitted to the garden during 1906-07, as against 422,282 in 1905-06, and 346,254 in 1904-05. The Superintendent's report appears further on.

THE following additions have been made to the collection of the garden during the past week.:—

One Tibetan Lynx from Tibet, three Red Cat-bears from the Sikkim Himalayas.

OUR Bombay correspondent writes:—The Bombay Hunt met last bye day at Parla for what proved to be a fine morning's sport with two very fast runs. A move was made to Jola before hounds were put in, thus avoiding a lane dangerously narrow should any horse get restless. The jack found set off at a tremendous pace towards Chuckla and round Sahar Hill into the Bomanwadi valley. Without slacking off he crosses the Tulsi main over firm going to the Backwater. Here there is a check, some of the hounds crossing only to find those the other side going away on the right scent. Near the stone bridge they at last cross and make for Vehar into Powai valley, where the jack shows signs of wear and is pulled down before he can reach the hills and their protecting woods. The brush was presented to Mrs. Cameron, who was well up throughout, and the mask to General Alderson, who arrived last mail to take General Richardson's place in Poona. Time remains, so the Sahar woods are tried and found fruitful. The jack goes through a deep nullah, which is awkward for horses, and after a check makes towards Andheri through the old familiar country. He then takes to the hills but comes down the sides of the one crested by the famous Marole caves in dense jungle. Refusing to face the open he ascends again as a number of the field were looking for a convenient place to descend. Hounds were almost on him when he suddenly twisted into the undergrowth and thus saved his brush.

THE extra day's hunting on Tuesday was not very largely followed, but a fine run was experienced from, we all thought, the same jack that twice before gave hounds the slip after being found in the mango tope at the end of Chuckla Lane. He travelled at a really marvellous pace, keeping well to the open past Stacey's Tank and skirting Marole Hill in the Goregaum direction. Still over good galloping ground he then made for Vehar and on nearing was lost. It was extraordinary the sudden-with which hounds completely lost the scent and never got on again after the way in which they had followed up to that moment.

THURSDAY'S meet saw the usual large field out at the club and in the tank near the teak-wood a real game jack was put up. Over indifferent going he leads us up Chuckla Hill and into Bomanwadi valley at a good pace till he gets a breather in a market garden. Thence to Kalina, where he avoids the creek which horses could not have forded, and on the bank of a big tank there is a long check—so long that many return to Sahar for fresh horses anticipating another run. Hounds, however, get on again towards Ghat Cooper and into the Horse-shoe valley when they make for the hills. The jack is not far in front but gives them a run round the top before he is pulled down on his way into the valley again.

THE conclusion of your meeting usually means an improvement here and the return of Alf. Hoyt and Vining as well as the two Parsi books is a sign. We are getting good attendances and on the occasion of the Seventh Extra on Saturday there was a capital day's racing. So many entered for the Beginners' Plate that it was split up into three and in two cases form worked out well. In the first Di-figure, who last week put in such a remarkable late run behind Print Craft, was made a slightly better favourite than Safoog who, since his one and only race, did a clock-breaking gallop. He ran well up to it as after Malik Jaman had cut out the pace he held the favourite very safe with Great Power, who lost ground at the bend, landing place money. The second saw the old rivals Maimoon and Mudkoor meet again with the mare Nafa commanding some attention on the strength of her easy win in 1min. 9secs. There was, however, no mistake about Maimoon as being made an odds on chance, he held Mudkoor once more safe with Nafa failing to stay after making the running. To wind up the day, the third division saw Print Craft made a solid favourite from Zari and Lookman who finished so strong behind Great Power when he landed odds of thirties. With Print Craft disappointing, Lookman made all his own running and stayed out hot challenges by Saraband and Zari.

THERE was quite a good class of Arabs out for the Mahim Plate with the public in doubts whether Byramjee's stable were going to plump for Scimitar or Mudlool and many supported both to be safe. A great rush came for Creditor when Mr. Essayie put the stuff on but at the finish Scimitar was half a point shorter. It was a splendid race as Settler once done with Creditor came into the lead from Scimitar and Grey Falcon and looked all over a winner. Passing the distance it was evident Creditor had very little left in him to keep his length lead and the whip came out on him and Grey Falcon. Williams rode one of his very best finishes on Scimitar, as keeping him together he just came out with the little he had up his sleeve to win by a head on the post, the other two being separated by the same. Mudlool ran a good last almost all the way—a very different performance to his last!

THE mile Arab race saw Dhamas, despite his former run when a hot favourite, well backed with money for Company, Recruit and Antica, whereas a late rush on Dumra made him second favourite. It was a most interesting race throughout, Sahoon, Dhamas, Recruit and Rashad in front till at the half mile the first fell away and Dumra came up behind the others in a bunch. He was seen to be going well, but it was doubtful if he could get through till past the distance he came in the middle and won cleverly from Hadee, who came outside late, and Recruit.

MORE of runaway victory was the seven furlong Dadur Plate for which Tachreet was favourite from Hermit False Start and Herricul. It was False Start's race from start to finish, as jumping out in front of Tachreet and Herricul he won easing up. Herricul ran a good race, but his chance was spoilt by trying to savage Tachreet up the straight.

WE now have the big horse races, the first of which was a five furlong sprint with Lady Lomond favourite from Lady Metal, Forfeit and Vocalist. Lady Metal made all the running but at the finish there was nothing in it but Forfeit, who won any how and landed a big pot for his owner, Aga S. Shah, the first time he was shown the form we have known him to be capable of.

THE other was the Lingfield Plate of nine furlongs for which Faded Lily was favourite till a run came on Circuit in preference to Royalist. Royalist made the pace very hot and had Circuit and Faded Lily beat at the bend and only Admiral Crichton to contend with; it was a great race all the way down the straight and Killorn's nursing served him well to land Royalist home by half a length thus outdistancing the others by three lengths. Thus ended a day's racing which, though exciting was not much in punters' favour, but the Books have still a bit of their own to get back.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 10th January 1908.

THE coldwave which has visited Britain and all Central Europe would seem to have had its origin in a cyclonic disturbance with its centre at the mouth of the Thames. The violent gale and snow storm raging along our north-east coast continued with almost unabated violence till noon yesterday, though all the while it continued to move eastwards. A long list of shipping casualties, fortunately not including any large-sized craft, is sufficient proof of its severity. The cold in the Channel was so intense that the sea is reported to have frozen where it fell on the decks of the Ostend-Dover mail packets. To-day there is brilliant sunshine and the prospects of skating, are most alluring in the London parks. From the Fen country come tales of miles and miles of ice on rivers and floods available for skating, and for no week-end during the past thirty years have professionals and amateurs, in the skating line, had such glorious opportunities. Needless to say there have been the usual ice tragedies, twelve lives having been lost as the result of various week-end fatalities. London seems fuller than ever, few people caring to travel in such bitter weather, and the children seem certainly to improve the shining hour. For the parks are full of them, and no prettier sight can be imagined than crowds of small people in smart winter clothing fashioned in the brightest, most vivid hues imaginable, skipping and prancing in the keen frosty air, revelling in it as well as in the sunshine. 'Bus-drivers in blue comforters, with noses to match, the crowds about the hot roast chestnut "barr'ers," the smart trade done in brandy-balls and bull's eyes and other condiments comforting to the "in'ards," are all mute testimonies of the exceptionally cold winter we have had and are having.

* * * * * *

At any rate this winter is not a farce or an abstraction; summer may be fickle and a delusion, winter is a stern reality. And so the world femine hurrying to the Sales must find it. The weather is undoubtedly in favour of a demand for warm and heavy wear, and furs and coats and thick tweed costumes have vanished, as if by magic, so say the manufacturers; it seems to have been a unique opportunity for both buyers and sellers, for although the intense cold of the last few days has not been good for the sales in general, particular departments must have benefitted. Fluffy feminine trifles and chiffons have not been swept away with the impetuosity of former occasions, but anything in wool or fur that would temper the wind to the shorn lamb has been in steady demand. The sight of a bodice decolletee with the thermometer running down to zero is not cheering, and I expect the purchases in the region of evening frocks must have been few and far between. When will the turn of the mere man come round as regards sales? At present his tailor, booter, hatter, etc., etc., do not confer on him the privileges of a bargain hunter. Perhaps, who knows, he has something to be thankful for! Bargain-hunters, as a rule, are not a hardy race, and the present prevailing north-east wind can be quite as cruel to those hurrying off in search of "enormous sacrifices," as to others intent on more peaceful avocations.

What a charming example do the ladies of the Royal household set the classes in respect of head-gear! The Royal ladies have been much en evidence recently in London, and while wearing feathered and picture hats, yet seem to have steered quite clear of the extraordinary monstrosities one sees in the shop-windows. The hats donned by the elegantly turned out members of our Royal family, though handsome, are of quite moderate proportions, and seem to the poor male eye to be all the prettier in consequence. Becoming to the fair wearers, and seasonable to the weather have been the toques—I think they are called—so much worn lately by the queen and other ladies of the Royal party, in velvet, fur, and sable.

The perjury case against Mr. Herbert Druce has been ignominiously withdrawn, and blown into thin air are all the noxious and horrible lies concocted for the purposes of the notorious Druce-Portland affair. Mr. Plowden, in dismissing the summons, entirely vindicated the character of Mr. Herbert Druce, and thanked this gentleman for having, in the interest of justice, consented to the opening of his father's grave. The discovery of the body of Thomas Charles Druce within that grave, and the non-discovery of any rolls of lead, together with the evidence of Professor Pepper and Mr. Vigers leave no room for doubt. The latter clearly showed that the vault had not been tampered with, for beneath the coffin the formation of the the thick London clay was evidently that of years ago; the former established the fact that the coffin bearing the name T. C. Druce contained the body of an aged bearded man, recognisable as that of T. C. Druce, being identified by photographs of the dead man, and by an old friend who saw him a few months before his death in 1864. And thus the whole story of the mock funeral vanishes into thin air, and not even the keenness of the public interest and the pleasureable excitement the case has given to thousands—who have fed daily on it—can excuse the lying bye-paths by which that interest was created and sustained. It is quite probable that Mrs. Anna Maria Druce, who started the agitation, firmly believed in the dual identity, and that she and the claimant, Mr. George Hollamby Druce, with the dazzling probabilities of the Portland millions before them, were only too glad to catch at anything that would substantiate the theory of the mock funeral. Like a stone thrown into the water has this strange [illegible] drawn stray straws within its circles, so t[illegible] even has the shade of Charles Dickens escaped. For the supporters of the Druce claimant theory find in the supposed proceedings of the late Duke, material for "The Mystery of Edwin Drood;" the byeways of a logic that would fain find fo its answe a foregone conclusion are devious indeed.

Not the least sad of New Year tragedies, occurring near London was the attempted murder of his wife, and mother-in-law, and the subsequent suicide of Major H. G. Coates Phillips of South African fame. The unfortunate man who had been divorced by Mrs. Phillips some two years previously seems to have been a prey to loneliness and remorse, and had twice made a determined attach on his wife's household at Velmead, Church Crookham. Mrs. Lucena the mother of Mrs. Phillips died of her injuries, and verdicts of wilful murder, and suicide—the latter during temporary insanity—were returned at the two inquests held; the tragic circumstances of the case will long be remembered in the spot where they occurred. Especially painful must they have been for Mrs. Phillips who had to go through the sad details of the shocking story no less than twice.

The Motor-Bus Strike is our latest piece de resistance, and almost rivals the weather as a [illegible] of conversation. The second day of the strike disclosed no weakening on the part of the men, when a considerable number again collected outside the Battersea Garage to await developments and discuss the situation, carrying a banner marked "No Slavery." The London Road Car Company then issued a notice warning their drivers and conductors on strike that they would be finally dismissed unless they resumed work within a certain time; this ultimatum had no appreciable effect on the men, and threats were met with defiance. When the period of grace expired, there was a fresh demonstration at Battersea, and cheers raised for the success of the strike, while the action of the company was volubly and audibly criticised as only the London unemployed can criticise! For the present it is unmistakeable that the drastic measures of the company have failed, but as only a week has elapsed since the beginning of the movement, it is yet too early for the strikers to feel much inconvenience. Probably by next week I may have some different news. The company are now said to be losing from £700 to £800 per day in traffic receipts. On the other hand, they are incurring no expense in respect of wages, and the idle 'buses are not suffering depreciation. The drivers and conductors sacrifice in wages something like £1,400 per week, and the fitters and cleaners who had been obliged to cease work in consequence of the strike are losing £700 weekly. If both parties maintain the present uncompromising attitude no way out of the dead lock is apparent. The Road Car Company declare that they cannot recede from the position they have taken up; that if they are to hold their own, it is essential that their vehicles should be worked to their full earning capacity; and that, moreover, they are doing no more than bringing the conditions of service into

The sorrows of the young always appeal to us, and it is in their name that Lady St. Helier and Sir John Kirk, have initiated a charitable scheme on a gigantic scale for providing poor children with shoes. "Help for the Shoeless" should be a good name for the scheme, though, I believe, it has been already christened the London Poor Children's Boot Fund. The Lord Mayor and other influential personages have already interested themselves, and the administrators of the Fund are fortified against possible imposition by the most painstaking inquiry on the part of their active coadjutors, who in the first place, issue the recommendations. In every case personal inquiry is made at the home to remove all doubt that the destitution is genuine. The entire earnings of the family are ascertained, and if, after deducting the rent, there is not sufficient left to provide the minimum of necessities, application is made to the Fund for assistance. Similar precautions are taken to see that the boots are made proper use of when distributed.

That veteran Royal Academician, Mr. W. P. Frith, R.A., who has just entered his ninetieth year, was received yesterday at Buckingham Palace by His Majesty who conferred upon him the Royal Victorian Order. Mr. Frith is the last survivor amongst the notable artists of the Mid-Victorian Era, and His "The Railway Station," "The Derby Day of 1857," and "Private View at the Royal Academy" have long been household words in England. It is now sixty-two years since he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and when eight years afterwards he received full honours and became R.A., it was to fill the place among the forty left vacant by the death of M. W. Turner. For some years he has laid aside his brush, but is still in the enjoyment of perfect health. King Edward with that act and thoughtfulness in small matters, which is one of the many delightful characteristics of our present reigning family, did not permit the aged artist to kneel when invested with the insignia, which is usual, but simply handed him the cross and ribbon after having warmly shaken hands and complimented Mr. Frith on his splendid health.

One evening last week the Princes of Siam witnessed the pantomime at Drury Lane, and were so delighted with it that they asked permission to "go behind" on a subsequent occasion to see "how it was done." On a recent afternoon they were shown the working of the scenery, lifts, lighting effects, and other appliances necessary in a huge production of this character. Later the Princes graciously presented Mr. Arthur Collins and Mr. Ernest D'Auban, the stage manager, with engraved cigarette-cases. How little they know of Drury Lane Theatre who only the auditorium know. The ramifications of the "world behind" are positively marvellous, and there is a legend that every year some new and unsuspected apartment in this grand building is brought to light. In the Babes in the Wood Mr. Arthur Collins has, if possible, provided more generously than ever for the vast crowds of happy children who annually fill "the Lane" with hearty laughter. Pantomime is also the draw at the Lyceum. Miss Sybil Arundale as principal girl is clever and graceful, and her song "Swing me higher, Obadiah" has quite caught on. The handsome and dashing "Crusoe" is well played, as I think I told you before, by Miss Dorothy Craske, while Miss Nora Guy scores as "Polly;" this plucky young lady has quite recovered from the severe cold in the face of which killing odds she valiantly played on the opening night. It is a first class pantomime, a panto to which every wise child in town will insist on being taken, and which every grown-up will find an excuse for seeing who has an eye for beauty (spectacular and feminine), an ear for sweet music, and a soul for honest hearty laughter. As for the beautiful Coral Realms of Aphrodite, with their nymphs, and the final march of the Sultan's troops, it is difficult to be too appreciative, when all London is talking of their wondrous spectacular effects. "Charley's Aunt," that most ever-green of modern farces has been revived at the Vaudeville, and in it Miss Amy Brandon Thomas, daughter of the clever author, makes her first appearance in the West End, as Kitty Verdun.

The Empress Eugenie has been much in our minds lately, figuring as the wonderful octogenarian who even now at the advanced age of over eighty is setting out on a journey to Egypt, and possibly later, Ceylon. It is not surprising then, that the book of the week should be Philip Sergeant's new work entitled "The youth of the Empress Eugenie, Wife of Napoleon III" which puts before the reader in graphic manner all the interesting details of this fascinating woman's life.

The King has expressed his willingness to become Patron of the Veteran's Relief Fund, and opens the list of subscriptions with a donation of one thousand guineas. The royal support given to the movement comes as a warrant of relief to every veteran pauper. Two Mutiny veterans—William Pole and John Farrell, both over seventy—have, this week, passed the great divide, so that it behoves us, whatever we intend to do for those who once covered our country's uniform with glory, to do it quickly. The movement is being engineered by Lord Roberts, who could never have worked in a better cause. This touches directly the honour of England. In reply to those who would say that some veterans may be themselves responsible for their pauper condition, it is only necessary to point out that the spectacle of the veteran in the Work House does more than any other cause to alienate the masses from the Army. With the chimes of Christmas and the New Year still in our hearts, it will be a happy reflection that they will never again usher in poverty and oblivion to those who have fought for their country.

It must have often occurred to those who are acquainted with the wealth of historical associations which London possesses, that while Oxford, Sherborne, St. Albans, and other places have been honoured as the spots chosen for the popular up-to-date "pageant," that the metropolis has been slighted in this respect. Some six months later, however, we shall be able to truthfully say, nous avons changé tout cela; for, next July it is proposed to stage on a grassy spot, accessible to all London, but at the same time, far from the madding crowd, a spectacle such as has never previously been imagined nor executed. The task is labourious but, at the same time, an inspiring one, which will tax to the uttermost all the ingenuity, talent, and resources of its promoters. Foremost amongst these is Mr. Lascelles, who is congratulating himself on the natural advantages the site possesses in the shape of twelve acres of artificial water. The site itself is at the present moment an absolute secret, but the public may guess at it without fear of reprimand. When we are told it is "grassy" and add to this statement the water, it is not difficult to get there and thereabouts.

It has been officially announced that the King in person will open Parliament on the twenty-ninth instant. He will be accompanied by the Queen, and the ceremony will be practically similar to the last State opening of this august body. Already preparations for the processions between Buckingham Palace and Westminster are in course of progress. The cream horses which always figure in these ceremonies are being daily exercised, and preliminary practices already made along the line of route which is the Mall, Horse Guards Parade, Whitehall and Parliament Street. In the procession proper the same half dozen carriages used in addition to the State coach are each horsed by four bays, the carriage containing the Master of the Horse is drawn by six blacks, and the State coach alone drawn by the famous eight cream coloured steeds, so dear to history and romance.

Considering the connection between rats and plague in a country devastated as India has been, of late years, with that virulent pestilence—it may interest you to learn of the formation of a new association, which is to wage a war of extermination against rats. It is to be styled the Society for the Destruction of Vermin. The adjourned inaugural meeting, which will be open to the public, will be held next week at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole. Sir James Crichton-Browne, who has frequently insisted on the necessity for a national campaign against rats, will take the chair and deliver an address. Lord Avebury, Sir Lauder Brunton, Surgeon-General Bradshaw, Sir Harry H. Johnston, Sir Gilbert Parker, Dr. Osler, and many other eminent men are supporting the movement. Of course, this gives a happy impetus to the patentees of various cides for the destruction of rats, the capture of rats, etc., etc., and no doubt the Society will be fairly inundated with offers for the purchase of the one and only infallible remedy.

PRETTY QUICK SHOOTING. A FACT.

THE punkah swung lazily over a group of half a dozen white robed figures lolling in easy long-armed chairs. A faint nebulous cloud of smoke rose slowly from cigar, pipe and cigarette; a cloud hardly swayed by the rythmic monotonous swing of the outdoor punkah.

The punkah coolie, his lithesome black body glistening in the pale moonlight, as his shoulders swayed in unison to the punkah's swing, dreamt that the six white uniform clad figures, lying silent in the easy chairs, before him, were ghosts of a past world, who held him prisoner bound to pull and pull, for ever and for ever, over their dead spirits.

The moon shone brightly, not a breath of wind stirred, no noise, no murmur of sound, broke in upon the unutterable calm and peaceful contentment of the scene—only the smoke rose ghostly upwards, now and then brushing the punkah's edge as it swung silently backwards and forwards.

The glamour of the moonlight's beauty, the silence of the night, has seized upon the six silent almost motionless men; and each was in deep and mystic communion with his inner soul, each under a spell that held him fast, speechless, and motionless.

How long the spell would have held them in its mystic sway, one cannot say, but mundane wants at last exerted their irresistible call, and one white ghostlike figure suddenly sprang upright in his chair, and called out "Here, koi hai, whisky peg lao."

The spell was broken, the punkah coolie started from his reverie, and pulled the punkah frantically for a jerk or two. The other five ghosts moved uneasily in their chairs, sighed heavily at being called away from that mystic direct communion with the inner self, granted to mankind only at uncertain and irregular moments—and conversation became general.

The six ghosts of the chairr, were the very much-alive hot-weather remnant—the officers of a well-known Regiment, stationed in one of the hottest stations in India, to which the luck, good or bad, of the unlucky soldier may send him.

"I had rather a curious experience last week coming up in the mail train from Bombay," said the senior Captain.

"Ah! really" said the Doctor, whose only idea of an experience was reduced to either a surgical operation, or a medical conundrum—"anyone one badly hurt!"

"Well yes," replied the Captain, "it was a case of fractured spine, and sudden death at seventy-five paces—the post mortem symptoms I did not get a chance of noticing."

"Really, tell us about it, and use scientific terms if possible," cried out the Doctor, sitting up in his chair all alert and at attention.

"Just what I intend to do—but my Latin is rather hazy nowadays Doc, so you must be content with plain English."

"Well what happened was this," said the senior Captain. "I was coming up first class with C— of the—Cavalry. You know him Major, don't you?"

The Major grunted what might be taken for an affirmative.

"We were making a non-stop run from Bhopal to Bina," continued the Captain, "and were running close on fifty miles an hour, when the people in the next carriage, a man and his wife, probably civilians, evidently became very suddenly thirsty."

"How could you tell that" queried the Doctor.

"Because the man stuck his head out of his carriage into ours, and asked if we could lend him a corkscrew to open a bottle of whisky with."

"I opened my dressing case and handed him a corkscrew. In doing so I spied my loaded revolver on top, and took it out; and suggested to C—, we should take pot shots at passing objects.

"There's a fine of £500 for such dangerous practices," said C—in his most judicial manner—"beside it might give the old lady next door the high strikes."

"Dangerous practices," said I, "why its only dangerous to the thing you aim at."

Hardly had the words passed my lips, when a fine black buck dashed off at eighty miles an hour, away from the railway wire fencing in an oblique and opposite direction to which the train was travelling.

"I'll risk the high-strikes for the lady," I said, "and they'll never squeeze £500 out of my year's pay try they ever so hard; so here goes. I raised the revolver, a rapid glance along the glittering barrel, a gentle even pressure on the trigger—a bang,—and the galloping buck leapt five feet in the air, and fell stone dead on his back all four legs in the air.

"By Jove! do you often do that," asked C—

"Always," I replied.

A platelayer from Bina, kindly volunteered to get me the head. He was given minute instructions as to the numbers of the telegraph posts between which the buck might be found.

Two days later, I received the head which taped 23½ inches, and a postcard from the platelayer, saying "Buck dead seventy paces from railway, spine fractured—head sent herewith; rest excellent eating—thank you, Sir."

"You are a rotter," murmured the Doctor, "I really thought you were going to tell us something interesting."

"I have sent the head home to be set up," continued the senior Captain blandly, "and a silver plate inscribed 'Shot with a W. G. Revolver at seventy-five paces going at 130 miles an hour, on 19th October 1899,' is to be placed on shield. Sorry I wasn't interesting, Doctor."

THE FLOAT.

WERE one setting out to construct a philosophy of angling, it would be proper, I think, to begin with the float, the link which connects the contemplative man with the wonders of the deep. Everybody knows about floats; even the Philistine uses them to support his inaccuracies touching the craft and the brethren. A sound scholar, from whom I was privileged to receive the rudiments of humane letters, a man decidedly of opinion that fishing, for small boys, was an undesirable species of "loafing," used, I remember, to be particularly severe about the float. It was unfortunate, perhaps, that the word lent itself so kindly to alliteration, for your sound scholar dearly loves a phrase, and if he be a masterful man is apt to make it not only define a situation, but also determine a policy. Happily, there were more ways than one out of the school demesne, and the river bank offered several secluded nooks to which the eye of authority never penetrated. The float of those days was a fat, globular thing, gross in aspect, clumsy in movement, and, though its painted cheeks were not unpleasing to the eye, so far as a float ever can legitimately be condemned as a symbol of folly, it could. Even in that halcyon time when fish were still unsuspicious it needed at least a perch to pull its unwieldly form under; a roach no more than made it wobble. Had the sound scholar based his imputations on the ground of using, not a float, but such a float, I should not now be protesting.

For I readily admit that virtue lies almost wholly in having the right float. Shape is important, and so is colour, and it is pleasant at times to dally with material. I have heard many learned disputations on the respective merits of quills from different birds, one man favouring swan, another goose, a third peacock, and each maintaining his opinion with epic accounts of past sport. But, as a rule, these disputants are a shade too practical; their floats are for use only, and they make no allowance for the element of beauty which should have its place in the consideration. I used at one time prodigiously to admire a certain slender kind of float fashioned cunningly out of twin sections of clear quill, amber varnished, silk lapped, and tipped at either end with a slim point of bone. I lavished a good shilling thereon (you can buy an admirable cork float for the half of that sum), partly out of respect for the ideal, partly from belief in the efficacy of the lovely object in pursuit of roach. Certainly it rode the stream in dainty fashion, peeping shyly out like some modest naiad, and responding even to that bite perceived by the men of Lea alone, when a fat old roach makes a round mouth at the bait and sucks it in only that it may expel it the more emphatically, as a peashooter expels a pea. Out of the water, too, that float was a delight; it was pleasant merely to let it hang in the air and to see the sunlight captured in its transparent body. Once we had a really great fishing together. It was a glorious August day, and the roach were on the feed in every hole of the backwater, which was a string of holes separated by short gravel shallows. With no more than a loose handful of groundbait scattered broadcast in each hole and with a good large piece of white paste on the hook we caught roach literally as fast as we could. The water was a clear brown, and it was most fascinating to see down in the depths the gleam of a broad side as the rod went up and the hook went home, and afterwards to be able to follow every movement of the fighting fish. The man who has not yet played a good roach on gassamer tackle in eight or ten feet of really clear water with the sun on it has a rare pleasure still to come. The roach that day were beauties, and of the twenty kept three would have weighed two pounds apiece had I trusted to instinct and not to a spring-balance which had neither heart nor soul and was (I maintain it) rusty somewhere inside.

It was shortly after that day that the naiad float disappointed me by parting asunder at the junction of the two sections of quill and leaving me floatless just as the fish were beginning to bite. The sections could be joined together again, but the float was never the same after. Sooner or later the water would leak in and the naiad ceased to be a float, becoming a thing of no classification—unless it belonged to the order of plummets. On the whole, I prefer my plummets to be of lead, so I gave up the naiad float with a sigh of regret as a last tribute to its beauty. There remains, however, a certain habit of mind induced by it, and I still strive after floats which are good to look at both in line and colour. A slender body of cork on a porcupine quill can be very gratifying. For colours give me scarlet above and green below, with a little knob of sealing-wax at the top of the quill. This last is for use as well as ornament. The uninitiated might suppose that nothing could well be more visible to the angler than the quill's natural white tip sticking out of the water, but what with the dazzle of sun and flicker of wavelets it is often very hard to see, and it is surprising how the little red knob helps the eye. Also with its aid one can gauge a bite very nicely. Properly poised there is half an inch above water and the half of this is white, the half red. When the white has disappeared, you have a noble bite as roach bites go, and you may strike at once It is not often that the roach of these degenerate days take one's float right down and out of sight. For evening fishing, when the last faint light is on the water, a black-headed float is most visible.

At one time I used to fish occasionally through the dark hours, and I was mightily puzzled to find a float which I could see at all after dark. I tried adding a cone of white paper to the tip, and at first deluded myself into the idea that it was visible, but when, after intently watching it for a long time, I discovered that I was really gazing at nothing, I gave it up. The discovery was due to a horrid eel which had taken my float off in a wholly opposite direction. Incidentally, that eel very nearly made me give up night-fishing also. Let him who doubts try to unhook an eel among thistles by the light of the stars and a wax match. Later in the same summer, however, I came upon an ancient bream-fisher at dusk perched on a camp-stool and brooding over the quiet waters like some sad heron. Attached to the top of his float was a feather blacker than the impending gloom, and, therefore, visible against the water line longer than anything else. A man of few words, that ancient. He may perhaps have been susceptible to the mysteries of night, the rustling and whispering of unseen creatures, the melancholy owls in the woods behind, the low murmur of the restless river, the reflected track of the stars growing ever fainter as dawn approached, to the deathly chill of the darkest hour. But of these things he said nothing; his hope was a sackful of bream before sunrise. I sometimes pick up out of a drawer a queer little object with a fat white head, which I am informed is a "luminous" float, and so often as I do so I think of that dear old bream fisher sitting solitary through the nights, and wonder whether he ever met the river-god face to face. For my part, I never could catch anything to speak of in the dark, and the luminous float goes back into the drawer where it has lain all these years unused. One old writer, by the way, two hundred years ago commended to his disciples the use of glow-worms imprisoned in a clear quill float, and is minute in his instructions as to getting the best light out of them! But I suspect him of depending on tradition rather than on experience. He is more practical when he comes to a float of reed: "Note, if at any time the angler should be destitute of floats when he comes to the waterside to angle, and ther be e'er a dry sound reed to be gotten, cut it close to the joints, leaving two joints to every float uncut; one at one end, and another at t'other, to keep out the water; it will make a good float in time of need."

Float-caps are most pleasing when cut out of quill and stained a deep red, but most practical when cut from a length of fine black indiarubber tubing. A foot of this will last a season through. You can also embellish your floats yourself if you please. A long swan quill can be given a coat of Lincoln green and a head of crimson with the aid of varnish stain or enamel, and it is then sufficiently attractive to be the companion of one's days. The true test of matrimony is said to be continued ability on the part of the persons involved to survey each other across the breakfast-table without weariness. If you consider that the angler often has to watch his float motionless, "a painted ship upon a painted ocean," for hours with no intrinsic interest beyond the float and the watching, you will perceive that a fair appearance has its value here also. But, of course, one is best pleased with one's float as it vanishes from sight, so I will not seek to press the analogy too closely. Moreover, you can always change your float when you get tired of it, and try another with a new colour scheme. If luck counts for anything, it is sometimes worth doing. But there is a thing about floats which I have noticed sorrowfully and cannot explain. The one which looks nicest, sits best in the water, and reveals most bites, always is to be found on the line of the other man. To comprehend this one must, I fancy, plumb deeper depths than those of angling.—S., in the Morning Post.

PRICE:

Extract from Lieut.-Col. K. H. Tyacke's revised edition "Sportsman's Manual" 1907.

.....when on the subject of ammunition there are some special bullets sold by the well-known Gunmakers Messrs. Lyon and Lyon of Calcutta called "Rotary" bullets which can be used with choke-bore barrels and with perfect safety. I speak from experience for I have tried them with my own guns which are full choked in both barrels. The shooting up to 70 yards was good and the wound made by the bullets appalling. I recommend them as most useful to have in one's possession at all events as a stand by in case of accident to a rifle. I had no idea until I tried it that it was possible to make such good shooting from a smooth bore. For close quarters I should prefer a gun, a gun with these bullets to a rifle.

One great reason why LEMCO is so valued by the medical profession in every part of the world is that it can always be relied on. It is essentially a standardised article, and not only does not vary in quality, but will keep absolutely in any climate. It is invaluable as a sustenant and restorative.

The genuine Liebig Company's Extract is now always and invariably labelled LEMCO. Refuse all jars not so labelled.

UTILITY—HUMAN INTEREST—AUTHORITY.

THREE CARDINAL FEATURES OF THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY.

One Subscriber writes: "An absolutely indispensable book to all lovers of history." Another says: "Its scholarship and the vast range of its authorities in all languages must commend the work to all intelligent persons."

It is not possible adequately to describe this great new work because no description can do justice to its absorbing interest, its scope, its variety, its authority, its charm or to those features of its plan and contents which ensure its lasting utility. Adjectives are cheap and abundant, but not necessarily convincing. Next to an actual inspection of a complete set of the volumes themselves, perhaps the best way to help the reader of this notice to comprehend the nature of the work, is to give a bold outline of its principal features, such as the following:—

A History of 45 Nations and Peoples.

A History of all Peoples—Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians—Ancient Greeks and Romans—Mediæval and Modern Worlds—The Occident and the Orient—Minor Nations of all ages.

Authoritative History.

A History representing the joint scholarship of many Nations—Utilising Monuments and Documents of all ages—Eye Witnesses and Modern Interpreters—Presenting the Texts of Charters, Treaties, Codes, Constitutions—Subjecting Evidence from every Source to the Searching Tests of Modern Criticism.

Impartial History.

A History of Cosmopolitan Authorship—Of Ripe Scholorship—Sympathetical and Critical in its View—Based on the Authorities of all Ages and of many Nations—Reviewing the History of each Nation in the Light of World History—Free from Prejudices of Scholarship, Politics, or Sectarianism.

Picturesque and Dramatic History.

The Events of History told Picturesquely—First-hand Narratives and Eye-witness accounts—Great Writers of all Ages—Historical Legends and Anecdotes—The Logical Sequence of Subjects—Large Space for Large Events—The Subordination of Minor Details.

War and Conquest.

The History of Men's Struggles with his Fellowman—From Stone Axe to Modern Rifles—From Catapult to Maxim—From War-Canoe to Dreadnought—250 Wars—3,000 Battles—Arms and Armour of all Ages—Military Methods—From Greek Phalanx and Roman Legion to Modern Armies.

The Makers of History.

The History of Celebrated Men and Women of the Ancient, Mediæval and Modern Worlds—Kings and Courtiers—Statesmen and Warriors—Philosophers, Religious Leaders, Scientists, Inventors, Discoverers, Artists, Writers.

Government and Constitutional Development.

The History of the Evolution of Political Institutions—From Oriental Despotism to Modern Constitutional Government—Political Parties—Parliaments—Conventions, Councils, Diets—Jurisprudence—Treaties—Peace Conferences.

Finance and Taxation.

The History of Economics—Wealth, its Production and Distribution—Money as a Medium of Exchange—Bank and Banking—Tariff Systems, Ancient and Modern—Panics and Crisis—The Cost of Governments—The Ever-present Problem of Taxation from Direct Confiscation of Property to the Income-Tax.

The Arts and Sciences.

A History of the Evolution of Human Culture—From Egyptian Papyrus and Babylonian Clay Tablet to the Modern Book—From Song and Saga to the Poems of Dante, Shakespeare, and Goethe—From the formal Sculptures of Egypt to the Art of Michel Angelo and Rembrandt—From Babylonian Astrology to Twentieth Century Science—From Chaldæan Magic to the Philosophy of Plato, Descates, and Locke—From Pyramid and Sphinx to Greek Temple and European Cathedral.

Social Conditions.

The History of the Evolution of Human Society—From Barbarism to Modern Civilisation—From the Stone Age to the Age of Steel—Feudalism, Slavery—Manners and Customs—Housing Problems—Costume—Food Problems—Marriage and Funeral Customs—Games and Recreations—The Status of Women—The Every-day Life of People of Ages, from the Cottage of the Peasant to the Court of the Monarch.

A Specimen Volume upon Application.

The offer of the work in this country is made in the conviction that it will most admirably meet the wants of a large number of Anglo-Indians and the better educated Indians. It is a work any one of whose volumes will exactly suit the man who craves the delight of that intellectual companionship that is inseparable from the reading of good books. It is a work that affords endless enjoyment for the occasional reader, or for the man who can give only the half hour before dinner to a book that will repay him. The long Indian day and the isolation of stationlife will be made brighter with these well-stored volumes at hand in which the reader may roam at will over the whole world or by the aid of which he may review or enlarge his historical studies of an earlier day.

In order to introduce the work quickly, "THE TIMES" will send a complete Specimen Volume to any responsible person, postage paid, for delivery to his address and return to us. The only obligation the applicant will incur is to take reasonable care of the book and to despatch it to us within seven days.

Formal Application for a Specimen Volume.

HIGH VELOCITY

CORDITE RIFLE.

VELOCITY 2,250 ft. sec.

"FIELD," March 23, 1907: "The material increase in velocity which has been obtained shows that the revised specification of loading gives an enhancement of velocity which should prove of great value to the sportsman.

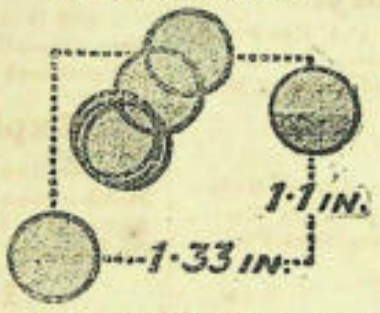
GREAT STRIKING ENERGY.

MINIMUM RECOIL.

Expressly designed to replace ·450 Bore Rifles, the importation of which into India is now prohibited.

"FIELD," March 23, 1907: ". . . A very valuable advance has already been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

The best DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.



Seven shot at 100 yards with Lang's ·470 Sporting Rifle. Reproduced full size.

Full particulars on application.

LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY

CORDITE RIFLE.

An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD."

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

LUCKNOW OPEN GYMKHANA MEETING.

Thursday, 23rd January 1908.

A MOST successful Open Gymkhana Meeting took place to-day in bright sunny weather, which was a pleasant change after a long spell of mist. The heat, indeed, was a little oppressive. Quite a large assembly patronised the racing, including Sir John and Lady Hewett Miss Hewett, and the Government House party, and Sir Edward and Lady Locke Elliot whom one was glad to welcome back.

There were very respectable fields, and in nearly all cases gentlemen riders were up, and steered their mounts to victory in fine style. Capt. Tudor and Mr. Carrington, of the Royal Dragoons, rode two winners apiece.

The racing was enlivened by the band of the VIIIth Rajputs and the Mahomed Bagh Club were "at home" during the afternoon.

THE PONY HURDLES.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 20 to the second, and Rs. 10 to the third. A high-weight handicap for all Ponies 14-2 and under. 1½ miles over 6 flights.

Sport in England.

London, Friday, 10th January 1908.

THE TURF.

Racing was entirely out of the question during the first half of the week and it was not till Thursday that sport was able to be resumed. Snow and heavy rain had caused the abandoning and postponement of several fixtures, but the Plumpton meeting was begun yesterday, and to-day racing was resumed at Windsor. No important events, however, were connected with either meeting.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

More fortunate than the votaries of the handling code, the followers of Soccer, whether players or onlookers, were not deprived of their football on Saturday, though the ground was hard as adamant, and the thermometer registered several degrees of frost. Here and there it was deemed advisable to postpone a game, Liverpool vs. Manchester United, in the First Division of the League, and Oxford City vs. Reading Grovelands, in the Amateur Cup, being among the number in which a start was not made, but with few exceptions the programme of important games was steadily gone through. There were some curious and quite unexpected results, but this is usual on frost bound grounds, and the charming uncertainty as to what is likely to happen may be one of the reasons why so many thousands attend football matches when ice woos them to put on their skates. In the Southern League the forwards had a sorry time, seven of the eighteen teams in the field failing to score, and in five other instances only one goal was obtained. Two home teams went under, and these were the heaviest defeats of the series. In the first division of the League only three victories went to home clubs in nine games, two visiting elevens were successful, and four matches were drawn. The ten fixtures in the second division of the League were duly decided, and four victories went to home teams, one visiting club obtained 2 points, and in five matches honours were divided.

Southern League.

Saturday's games have materially influenced the struggle for honours in the Southern League. Since the season opened Plymouth Argyle had been first or second in the table—first for three months without a break, and second since Queen's Park Rangers went to the head of affairs—but now they have dropped to third place. That is a statement of bald fact, but an explanation is necessary. The Rangers are three points ahead of Bradford, who have played one more game, and four points ahead of Plymouth, who have two games in hand, so that the Argyle are in a better relative position than Bradford, but are relatively slightly worse than the Rangers, whose prospects have been immensely improved as the result of their emphatic win at Gillingham over New Brompton.

The leaders have the most dangerous set of forwards in the League, and this is fully borne out by the fact that they have obtained over 50 goals in 21 games, and 25 of these have been registered on foreign soil in 10 matches. Only once have the Rangers failed to score on opponents' grounds, but on eight occasions they have scored two or more goals. Their four clear goals' victory over New Brompton is their best in the present tournament, home or away, and it was thoroughly deserved. Plymouth Argyle, who were at Swindon, had to leave both points behind them, an experience which falls to the lot of many crack teams, and one which the Rangers may have when they journey there a short time hence. Bradford have advanced into second place by virtue of their draw with Reading at Park Avenue. The Yorkshiremen did not show their usual form, but this was in a large measure due to the spoiling tactics of the Reading defence. This was Bradford's tenth drawn game. There were some close games on Metropolitan grounds in the Southern League, the home team in three cases winning by the odd goal. At Tottenham play was of a remarkable character. The 'Spurs had out the side that will probably represent them against Everton at Goodison Park next Saturday, and so cleverly did V. J. Woodward open out the game that at the interval the home team had a three goals lead. With only ten men in the second half, West Ham United made a sensational rally, and H. Stapley twice finding the net, the visitors lost by only the odd goal in five. Crystal Palace just got the better of Southampton, a penalty kick in the closing stages being the immediate cause of their victory, and it would not have been an injustice had the points been shared. At Millwall the Dockers did not adapt themselves to the conditions, but they had the best of the argument, and Schiller's cleverness was largely responsible for the small margin by which his side was defeated. Brentford went to pieces at Griffin Park, against Bristol Rovers, and their 3—0 overthrow is not in the least degree encouraging for next Saturday's visit to the Eden valley. Portsmouth continue their upward career, and are now in a respectable position, while Brighton and Hove opened the second half of the season with a much-needed win, Norwich City being beaten at Goldstone-road by the only goal of the match.

League Division I.

The prophets had justification in assuming, as the vast majority did assume, that Chelsea at Bramall-lane, and Woolwich Arsenal at Ashton Gate, would not capture the points at stake. When Bristol City were at Plumstead on 7th September, they won 4—0, and Sheffield United were successful at Chelsea by 4—2 on the same date. It was poetic justice, and just that kind of revenge which the whirligig of time provides for our jaded appetites, that the teams thus humbled before their own supporters should in turn humiliate those who had previously mastered them. In the Woolwich vs. Bristol result there is a double coincidence as compared with last season, for each team then also lost before their own supporters. The win on Saturday gave great satisfaction at Plumstead, for the Arsenal had only once previously this season obtained a couple of points away from home—at Aston, on 12th October. Bristol City had not eaten the leek at home since 14th September, when Sheffield Wednesday beat them. Chelsea's success at Sheffield was the most sensational event of the afternoon. There was nothing of a scratch victory about it, for a three clear goals' victory tells its own tale. The ground was hard and the foe dense, but the Pensioners triumphed over these drawbacks, and, playing a winning game throughout, inflicted on the United their second home defeat of the season. The other matches do not call for much comment, the only result that was out of the ordinary being Notts County's 4—0 win over Sunderland; and as Birmingham halved the points at Deepdale, the Roker Park and St. Andrew's representatives are on the same mark as to points, and are having a keen struggle to avoid the possession of the wooden spoon. Blackburn Rovers must have done more than they expected to draw as Aston, and Bolton Wanderers did well to share the spoils at Bury, but Middlesborough disappointed the Ayresome Park habitues by their inability to do more than draw with Nottingham Forest. Sheffield Wednesday failed to hold their own at Newcastle, and Everton, who are not doing well just now, were beaten at Hyde-road by Manchester City.

League Division II.

To Southerners the most interesting game in the competition was that between Fulham and Derby County at Fulham, but the conditions beat the players, and neither side played up to their real form. There were few sparkling moments and no thrilling incidents, thanks chiefly to the mediocre display of the forwards. Collins at centre half, and Millington at inside left, did not do anything to tarnish their reputations, and on the Derby side Morris, Nicholas, and Warren were the stalwarts. The visitors were somewhat fortunate on the run of the play to divide the points, and yet they would have deserved commiseration had they lost. Clapton Orient had to content themselves with a point from Blackpool at Homerton, but the home side had cause to complain against Dame Fortune, judging from reports to hand. The surprise of the afternoon was provided by Lincoln City, who won at Grimsby by two clear goals, and Barnsley won their first game since 23rd November, by defeating Hull City 4—2. Oldham Athletic were again on the winning side, and Bradford City, Leicester Fosse, and West Bromwich Albion each picked up a point away from home.

RUGBY RULES.

If we have a lengthened spell of frost (and the weather prospects seem to anticipate such a spell) then another very protracted season is assured. If, for example, England vs. Wales be not played on 18th or 25th January, then it cannot be played on 1st February, (Wales vs. Scotland) or 8th February (England vs. Ireland). The Internationals will, of course, have precedence of all other games, and what is most to be dreaded is a very late finish in the County Championship Competition. Even if there had been no frost there seemed some prospect of a protracted competition, owing to the probability of extra or deciding matches being necessary in the Northern Division and South-Western Group. A further effect of a protracted period of frost is to make from very uncertain. In any case, "surprises" are never so frequent, especially in international matches, as after a long period of enforced idleness, so far as football is concerned. Of late years the weather has been very kind to Rugby football, and it would be difficult to find since 1895 a Saturday on which only two or three Rugby matches were played. Matters will be even worse next Saturday if the frost continues, for the only game that has any chance of being played—and even it is doubtful—is the final Scottish Trial at Edinburgh. A postponement may be to the advantage of Scotland, for MacGregor will be unable to play next Saturday, while he will probably be able to do so on 18th or 25th January. Purves and Sloan have recovered from their injuries, but further rest will do both no harm.

Surrey, nil; East Midlands, 6 points.

In winning at Richmond yesterday by 2 tries to nothing, the East Midlands gained their second victory in the competition, and Surrey sustained their fourth defeat. The match was quite spoiled by bad weather, rain falling more or less during the game, and the whole surroundings being very depressing. The ground was heavy and the ball wet and slippery, and the play in consequence suffered in point of quality. The game proceeded on fairly even lines, each side in turn being dangerous. The Surrey forwards were the stronger, using their feet very well in the open, but they were not properly supported by their backs, who almost invariably muddled their passes. Surrey had quite as much of the game as their opponents, and in two forward rushes were a trifle unlucky in not scoring. They, however, spoiled matters by kicking a little too hard at the finish. Their superiority should have sufficed to have turned the scale, but unfortunately their backs were not equal to the occasion.

Though overweighted, the East Midlands forwards, among whom were some new young men, held up pluckily and managed to provide their backs with some chances. The latter made good use of them, and their play redeemed the game from mediocrity. They worked together extremely well, handling the wet ball with surprising accuracy, and Wood and Mobbs, the Northampton left wing, won the match for the side. Wood, who returns to-morrow to New Zealand, was particularly adroit in making openings for his wing man, and Mobbs, taking his pass cleanly and running with resolution, scored both tries, and on other occasions gained ground by his pace and skill in handing off. Both scores came in the first half, and after the interval the play was only brightened by the bursts by Mobbs, who was quite the hero of the afternoon.

WRESTLING.

Zbysco vs. Kara Suliman Owczarow.—In a match for £50 a side these Continental Graeco-Roman wrestlers met before a huge and appreciative audience at the London Pavilion, Piccadilly-circus, last Friday night. The Turk was the taller exponent, but in the Galician he had a powerful adversary. Zbysco was compelled to act on the defensive in the preliminaries, and the tactics adopted by his antagonist in an endeavour to effect a hold failed to meet with the approval of the spectators. The Galician was apparently all at sea with the Turk's methods, and not until a quarter of an hour had elapsed was he able to get the latter in difficulties, Suliman cleverly extricating himself from a half-nelson. The Turk held the advantage for the major portion, but was unable to secure a fall within the stipulated twenty minutes, and a draw resulted.

Pandemonium reigned for some time after the curtain had been rung down, tremendous cheers being given for Suliman, while a hostile reception was accorded Zbysco in the shape of continued booing, the crowd being exceedingly disappointed at the termination of proceedings. The audience dispersed when the information was imparted by the Turk's manager that a meeting will take place on Monday between the pair to arrange an additional match.

Mr. Bees, Suliman's manager, informs us that he is determined to have justice done to his man, and that he will demand a match to a finish. He is prepared to increase his money down to a reasonable sum.

CRICKET.

Death of C. Absolon.—Shortly before 9 o'clock on Saturday night Mr. Charles Absolon, the veteran cricketer, passed quietly away at his residence, Harringay, following an unexpected seizure exactly a week previously. Although not to be numbered among the great ones of first-class cricket, Mr. Charles Absolon had a career which can only be described as phenomenal, and worthily deserved the sobriquet of "the Grand Old Man of Club Cricket." He performed many startling feats as a bowler, but the most remarkable point above his career was the great age at which he continued to play with success. When in his eightieth year he actually captured a hundred wickets in a season, and after he had celebrated his seventieth birthday he performed the "hat-trick" no fewer than eight times. A lob-bowler, it was not necessary for him to exert himself to any great extent. Still, his doings at an age when most men find it difficult to hobble from one chair to another, let alone indulge in active games, are probably without parallel.

Mr. Absolon was born at Wallingford, Berks, on 30th May 1817. At that time George III. was still on the throne, and thus the old cricketer lived in the reign of five sovereigns. From his early youth cricket had a great fascination for him, and at the early age of thirteen he took part in his first "men's" match, playing for Wallingford against Oxford Town. He played for Middlesex so far back as 1839, but county cricket was not then organised, and most of his best performances were accomplished in club cricket. In 1868 he played in 66 matches, took 441 wickets, and scored 1,155 runs. The largest number of wickets he obtained in a single season was 519, in 1872, when he also scored 1,109 runs, while in the preceding season his victims numbered 453. In 1875, when fifty-six years of age, he got rid of 420 batsmen, and scored 1,043 runs. Between the years of 1871 and 1893 he performed the "hat-trick" 59 times, his record year by year being shown in the appended table:—

Year.	No. of times.	Year.	No of times.
1873	6	1884	4

1878	3	1891	1

Mr. Absolon always considered his most wonderful bit of bowling to have been done at Tufnell Park in 1884, in a match for Holloway United against Hatfield. In the first innings he took seven wickets for 3 runs, and in the second five for no runs. When Hatfield's fifth wicket fell in the second innings they only required 2 runs to win, but Absolon captured all the remaining wickets without another run being scored. In the same year, playing for the Waterloo Wanderers against Twenty-two of Hounslow, he secured fifteen wickets for 17 runs; and for Wood Green against United Willesden, on 22nd July 1877, he took all ten wickets in each innings. In 1861 the United Master Butchers played Twenty of Metropolitan Clubs, and Absolon, by capturing eighteen of the nineteen wickets, was instrumental in getting the whole side out for 4 runs. In 1882, when sixty-eight years of age, he stayed at the wickets for over four hours, scored 88 runs, and ran altogether 222.

In addition to taking twenty wickets in the match referred to above, he twice took ten wickets in an innings.

A performance of which he was particularly proud was that of clean bowling W. G. Grace, W. R. Gilbert, and H. Charlwood, in 1873 for 6 runs. A column might be filled with the sensational feats of this wonderful cricketer, but enough has been said to give some idea of his unique record, which extended over sixty years.

When bowling, he did not strive after a big break, but he used his head well, and owed much of his success to his changes of pace and flight. His interest in cricket remained keen to the end, and even as recently as last June he was present at Lord's to see the Middlesex and Surrey match.

Hunting.

KARACHI HUNT.

5th January.—The hounds met for the first time this season at the Hunt Camp, Landhi. Drawing near the Camp, it was not long before the rounds 'unkennelled' a stout jack, who gave us a tremendous run before yielding up his brush. He swung away across past the Palm village over excellent going, and crossing the river made his line, in full view, for the railway. A train was coming up, so Master and Whips did their utmost to stop the hounds. Fortunately the train was past almost before he crossed the line with the hounds after him. On the far side of the railway the hounds ran very fast, and after a capital run of 55 minutes bowled over their jack on the edge of a big nullah leading to the Cliffs. Most of us had to catch our train back, so did not accompany the hounds to the Long Covert, where they found twice again, killing a fine dog jack, who was taking life a little too easily and didn't realise the hounds were after him until he was too late. Heavy rain on the 9th prevented the hounds meeting.

12th January.—The meet was at the Bunnia's Crossing at 7-15 A.M. to draw the Guavas and Alli's Khete. Only a small field turned out, but those who were out were rewarded by a capital morning's sport. Three ladies, Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Crouch, and Miss Osborne, graced the field with their presence. After the rain on the 9th and 10th the air was cold and brisk. There was a good deal of water about, and the going in places was heavy. The master had 11 couple of hounds out, and they looked the picture of fitness and keenness as they tumbled out of the hound van. Drawing along the edge of Alli's Khete the hounds struck off a line of a jack moving towards the Ruined Cottage. The jack could not stand up before them long, as they were running very fast. After a sharp burst of 15 minutes they ran into him close to the Ruined Cottage. The Master then drew the Long Bund, but not finding, drew towards the river, the hounds struck off the line of a hill jack, who soon put the river bed and some big nullahs behind him. But the hounds were not to be denied, and they ran into their jack in the open, after a nice run of slightly over 20 minutes. The Master drew the country round Oomer Dosal's Khete, but we did not find again. It was a capital scenting morning and the hounds ran faster than they have done before this season.

16th January.—The hounds met at the Bunnia's Crossing and drew towards Rai Singh's Well. They were not long before finding, and were getting nicely away, when the mule who appeared from somewhere, and had come along with us, whilst the Master was drawing, made his way into the middle of the pack, much to the Master's consternation. The whips and some of the field rode the mule off towards the Rai Singh's village, but as luck would have it, the hounds after going right away across the Rai Singh's Bunds, came back again, and the mule chipped in again. Our jack was not a straight necked fellow at all, and jinked about backwards and forwards, until he got to the Long Bund, when he began to move away fast. But the hounds were one too many for him and they bowled him over in the open after a run lasting 20 minutes. After the brush had been presented to Mr. Seabrooke, the Master moved off towards the Ruined Cottage, but we did not find again and were home early.

19th January.—It was just getting light as we made our way to the end of the camp wood, whilst the Master drew the Camp Covert up towards us. This was blank, but the lye-bush along the river held a jack, and we were soon on and away after him. He set his mask for the cliffs. The Master and whips tried hard to stop the hounds crossing the railway, but it was no use. They were too full of running. Hunting beautifully together, and going a tremendous pace they carried the line across the railway and away on towards the sea, where the jack got into the cliff country, which is bad going, consisting, as it does, of precipitous nullahs and ravines. The hounds stuck to the line and hunted wonderfully. As we had left plenty of good country behind us and as the country we were in was unridable, Mr. Graham wisely decided to whip off. This was no easy matter, and Captain Neake who was the only whip out, had his hands full. It was only when we were trotting back towards the Landhi country, we realised what a distance we had come. The 'Point' must have been not less than 6 miles. We were running about 30 minutes. On nearing the Palm village, we found again, and this time we had a great hunt. Pushing him through the lye-bush covert, the hounds hunted their jack across the Malir river bed into the high grass on the Malir side. The hounds hunted splendidly together, and with lots of music, every hound in the pack giving tongue. They rattled their quarry through the long grass in fine style and he was viewed across the river. He squatted down near the bank, and letting the hounds and field pass him, he was away back again. The hounds were not long at fault, a short cast put them right, and we recrossed the river and were once again in the pampas grass jungle on the far side. The hounds were not to be denied and they rattled their jack along a great pace, and finally ran into him near Long Island after a run of 45 minutes. It was a capital run from start and finish, and we all enjoyed it immensely. The going unfortunately was mostly in the river bed which was heavy and treacherous. As riders and horses had had enough, the hounds were whipped off homeward without drawing again. Mrs. Graham and Miss Osborne were the only ladies out, the latter going well on "Saffron." Amongst those out, we noticed that keen sportsman Commander Hewett, R.I.M., Mr. Pritchard and Mr. Webb (24th Regiment), Mr. Robson, Mr. Calvocoressi and Mr. Stewart.

THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

The Olympic Games were by far the most celebrated and magnificent of any of the festivals held in Greece. The sanctity and solemnity of that institution, the majesty and supremacy of the god to whom it was dedicated, and the great value set upon the Olympic crowns by every province of Greece, were sufficient arguments for furnishing it with an august founder, and this honour was accordingly ascribed in the first instance to Jupiter himself, after his defeat of the Titans. Others have assigned it to Hercules, maintaining that he caused the games to be first celebrated about 1,222 years before our era. All agree, however, that after they had fallen into desuetude they were revived and enlarged by the advice of Lycurgus, and the orders of a king of Elis named Iphitus, who, being deeply afflicted by the calamities under which his country was then suffering, consulted the Oracle of Delphi for a remedy, and was told by the Pythoness that the safety of Greece depended upon the re-establishment of the Olympic Games. The non-observance of this solemnity had indeed, drawn down the indignation of the god to whom they were dedicated, and of Hercules, the hero by whom they were instituted. To the armistice which preceded the celebration of the Games Iphitus added a public mart or fair for the benefit of commerce, reduced the festival into a regular and coherent system, united the sacred and political institutions, provided for its regular recurrence at the commencement of every fifth year, and by making the epoch of its revival an Olympiad, or public era for the whole peninsula, imparted such stability to the institution that it lasted with little variation for over a thousand years—a duration exceeding that of the most celebrated kingdoms and republics of antiquity. The first of these stated Olympiads, which constitutes the earliest regular and authentic notation of time among the heathen, occurred in the year of the world 3,208, being 505 years after the taking of Troy, 776 years B.C., and 24 years before the foundation of Rome. This is a truly venerable and hoary antiquity.

The festival, which lasted five days, commenced at the next full moon after the summer solstice, and was held at Olympia, in Elis, in the neighbourhood of which city were the hippodrome, the stadium, and the sacred grove containing the celebrated temple of the Olympian Jupiter, together with the theatre, and other buildings appropriated to the games. So extensive were the preparations for this spectacle that the intervening period of four entire years did not always suffice for the completion of the necessary arrangements. The choice, breaking-in, and exercising of the horses for the different races, as well as the selection and embellishment of the cars, were a work of time. The candidates were obliged to enrol their names some months beforehand, to swear that they had been regularly exercised during ten months; and 30 days before the games it was their duty to assemble at Elis, where they were again compelled to exhibit their strength and skill every morning, under the inspection of proper officers, until the games commenced. After this severe probation, first at home and then at Elis, they were dismissed on their departure for Olympia, with the following exhortation:—"If ye have exercised yourselves in a manner suitable to the dignity of the Olympic Games, and are conscious of having done no action that betrays a slothful, cowardly, and illiberal disposition, proceed boldly. If not, depart, all ye that are so minded!" The city of Olympia, known also by the name of Pisa, was situated on the right bank of the Alpheus, and at the foot of an eminence called the Mount of Saturn, at an easy distance from the Ionian Sea. Within the Altis—a sacred wood surrounded with walls—stood the Temple of Jupiter, containing the celebrated colossal statue of that deity by Phidias, besides an infinite variety of columns, trophies, triumphal cars, and innumerable statues in brass or marble, dispersed throughout all the avenues of the sacred precinct. All these bore inscriptions specifying the motives of their consecration, the statues being mostly those of victors in the Games, whose exploits were thus recalled to the assembled citizens of Greece every four years, and handed down to the latest posterity, through successive generations of admiring spectators.

For some days previous to the festival crowds were seen flocking to Olympia in all directions by sea and land, from every part of Greece, and even from the most distant countries, for there was no part of the earth to which the fame of the Olympic Games had not penetrated, and few people who were not intensely anxious to become spectators of them. The ceremonies opened in the evening with sacrifices upon the altars, which were adorned with festoons, the principal offerings being reserved for the grand altar of Jupiter. These were upon a scale commensurate with the general magnificence of the celebration, all the principal cities of Greece sending victims for the Olympian Jupiter, while private individuals, especially those who had gained the honour of an Olympian victory, sometimes made very sumptuous sacrifices at their own expense. Alcibiades, after having gained three prizes in the chariot race, feasted the whole concourse of Grecians that were gathered together to view the Games with the victims offered to Jupiter, only a small part of which was consumed upon the altar. The sacrificial ceremonies, performed to the sound of instruments, and by the light of the moon, then near its full, were attended with every circumstance of magnificence and solemnity that could awaken admiration and inspire reverence. At midnight, when they ended, most of the spectators, with an eagerness that never deserted them during the whole festival, ran instantly to secure places in the course, the better to enjoy the spectacle of the games, which were to commence at daybreak. The Elean people, represented by judges termed Hellanodichs, had the entire direction of everything appertaining to the festival, being invested for the occasion with plenary authority to keep in perfect order the vast assemblage, composed of men of all ranks, and of every region and colony of Greece. Lycurgus originally fixed the order of the athletic combats, which correspond almost exactly with that described by Homer in the twenty-third book of the Iliad, and eighth of the Odyssey; but the judges had authority to modify and suspend any of them, or to add new games, according to circumstances. Never, however, did the Greeks, except for a short time at Corinth, adopt the cruel gladiatorial shows of the Romans.

The Olympic course was divided into two parts—the stadium and the hippodromus, the former of which was an elevated open causeway, six hundred feet long being appropriated to the foot races and most of the combats, while the latter was reserved for the chariots and horse races. The following animated picture of the scene exhibited at Olympia on the morning when the Games were opened is worth reproduction:—"At the first dawn of day we repaired to the stadium, which was already filled with athletæ, exercising themselves, in preparatory skirmishes, and surrounded by a multitude of spectators; while others in still greater numbers were stationing themselves confusedly on a hill, in form of an amphitheatre, above the course. Chariots were flying over the plain; on all sides were heard the sound of trumpets and the neighing of horses mingled with the shouts of the multitude. But when we were able to divert our eyes for a moment from this spectacle, and to contrast with the tumultuous agitations of the public joy the repose and science of nature, how delightful were the impressions we experienced from the serenity of the sky, the delightful coolness of the air from the Alpheus, which here forms a magnificent canal and the fertile fields, illumined and embellished by the first rays of the sun!"—Sporting Life.

Ballygunge C.C. vs. Hornets.—Ballygunge had fout only a very scratch team for their return match with the Hornets on the latter's ground on Saturday last, and time alone saved them from defeat. Winning the toss, the Hornets started with Rosser and Knolles, both of whom made runs, the former not being dismissed until he had 48 to his credit and the latter 31; Yakchee followed, and had contributed 60 by free hitting when he was stumped by Tatam off Watkins. With the score at 181 for 6, the home team declared, and in the time remaining for play Ballygunge put together 109 for 8 wickets, the chief contributors being Tatam and Horncastle with 37 and 24 respectively. The natural enemy of the African buffalo is the lion. Wiser than certain British generals showed themselves in the Boer war, the feline hunter never risks a frontal attack, but trusts in flank movements, or a leap out of the dark of an ambush. Even then he may have to pay for his untasted dinner with his life. For buffaloes are quick to rescue a herd-fellow who has been taken at a disadvantage, and charging will easily knock over the marauding lion. Thereupon ensues a very lively melee, or "mix-up" as the knightly term is rendered in the jargon of the prize-ring.

A South African hunter named Vardon was fortunate enough to witness the spectacle of a buffalo defending itself against the concerted attack of three lions. It was a case of "butting-in" on their part, for Vardon had wounded and was following up the animal, when the lions smelt out the sport and jumped in to rob him of the meat. But the bull defended itself gallantly. It gored its foes as they came on and held up its end of the running fight, till it dropped dead of the bullet wound it had received. This is hard to beat for an example of sheer animal courage.

Fearless indeed must this creature be. Thirty African native hunters, armed with guns of a poor quality, went in pursuit of a buffalo. They came suddenly upon the animal, which was wallowing in marshy ground. But neither the numbers of the band nor the noise of their volley fire daunted the brave bull. The leading hunter discharged his piece almost in the buffalo's face, missed, and was hooked by the infuriated animal, who danced a triumph on his mangled body, while the remainder of the affrighted hunters bolted for their lives.

There is no need to multiply instances of the valour of the buffalo. It is of a dogged, inflexible, unreflecting quality, like that of the famous British infantry of whom Napoleon remarked that they did not know when they were beaten. The French spoke more wisely than they knew when they nicknamed their adversaries "John Bulls." All the family of Bos, whether Africanus or Asiaticus, possess this soldierly courage, the spirit of the champion who fights for the herd. For the buffalo kind are not beasts of prey like the cats; it is not their part to wantonly assume the offensive. But woe to those that provoke their slow-moving indomitable courage.

There is another grass eater and fellow denizen of wild Africa that ranks near the buffalo—the rhinoceros. But though the bull has a stout hide to shield his brave heart, the rhino is much better protected. He is plated with thick armour that is almost spear proof, and his frontal bone is extremely thick. The consciousness of being mail-clad steels the heart of this formidable animal, and his temper is extremely aggressive.

In Africa there are two kinds of rhinoceros: the Cape or white rhino, and the Aethoa, which is black in colour. The latter is the gladiator of the family. His blood is up at the sight of strangers in the jungle, and he goes for them on general principles. Astor Chanler's caravan was repeatedly attacked by rhinos, during his march through East Africa. They rushed from the grass which borders the narrow paths that lead from village to village, and charged the line of porters and horsemen as if determined to drive the intruders from the country. The brutes bore down with blind fury on everything in their way, a packing case thrown down by a terrified carrier was smashed into pieces. Carbine fire was of no avail to stop their rushes—a pea-shooter would have been as effective. The natives at last became so demoralised that at the cry "Faro!" they fled helter-skelter to the nearest trees. Where this headless hide-clad bully abounds he is far more troublesome to the traveller than the warlier lion.

It must be a nightmare experience to be chased by an unicorn. In dreams, the sleeper is sometimes between the rails, fleeing across a trestle before a roaring locomotive. But the rider who is pursued by a brute, plated like a "Mogul" and nearly as heavy, is in a predicament equally hair-raising. This grotesque monster charges like the jobberwock, "Whiffling through the tulgy wood;" and impalement on his horn is death in a hideous shape.

The rhinoceros fears no foe, brute or human. Secure behind his solid shields, he knows that whatever lions may do to the deer and cattle, they will never be able to make a meal off him. He is too tough—in both senses of the word—for them to attack. If lions cross his path, he plays pitch and toss with them. Although Leo is the more imposing figure with his mane and his roar, the rhino is the real boss of the African jungle. The small brained, irritable monster is a type of unreasoning brutal courage. He is the Giant Blunderbore of his country.

What the rhino is on land the hippopotamus is in the water. They are two of a kind, equally aggressive and stupidly ferocious. The amphibian is perhaps the better protected of the two, his hide is so dense that it sinks in water. Crocodiles try in vain to bite their way into the carcass of a dead hippopotamus. Why the Greeks gave the animal this name, which means literally "river-horse," is not clear. It is really a colossal hog in armour, with the feet and shape of the porcine race.

Hoggish, too, is its temper. The animal of course is a grass feeder and has no use for beef; yet it will drag cows under water and drown them, as they swim across a river. It acts as though it considered the river its peculiar domain, and all non-amphibians trespassers to be promptly put out of the way. Canoes and boats of all kinds it holds in especial hatred; yet it is not hunted from canoes by the natives. It is this enmity on the part of the hippo that makes water travelling in Africa, from the Niger to the Zambesi, dangerous especially at night.

Like a submarine, the hippo shows very little of its surface above the water. It comes up to breathe and look out, just lifting an eye. A snort or puff perhaps is heard, and then bang! crash! your boat is sinking, crushed like a shell between the brute's harrow-teethed jaws. Samuel Baker on one of his Nile expeditions had a dinghy sunk and his big sailing-vessel charged by a hippo, which drove its tusk right through the iron sheathing. But the most remarkable naval action of this kind that he records is the attack on his steamer. As a rule steam-vessels put to flight, or rather diving, all aquatic animals; but hippos seem to be an exception. At any rate a champion of the Nile, irritated by the invasion of his domain, attacked and broke a float off the paddle-wheel of the explorer's boat. As the French general said of the "charge of the Light Brigade: "This is magnificent,—but it is not war." But what superb, if blind courage!

On the land the hippo does not feel so sure of himself as in his more accustomed element. Yet it is not safe to attack this pugnacious animal when sleeping on a sand bank or in a riverside melon-patch to which he may have resorted for a meal. Fruit diet does not soften his snappish temper. The Arab hunter may approach too near the sluggish monster, which rousing bites him in two. Being a bulky animal that provides meat supply on a wholesale scale, the hippo is hunted in an elaborate way by natives armed with harpoons and ropes. But hunt as they may, there seems no scaring the pluck out of this thick-skinned, thick-headed animal.

In spite of his grandiloquent name, there is a good deal of the pig, as we have seen, about the hippopotamus. But to appraise the courage of the actual hog seems like descending to the lowest step of an anti-climax, especially after questioning the spirit of the nobler game. But there is much in names, where reputation is concerned; witness the proverb about giving a dog a bad name. The hog is a useful but unsavory animal, and to call a man "hog" is not to pay him a compliment. But the word "boar" carries with it different associations. It brings to mind the wild animal, acorn-feeding and forest-dwelling, the quarry of noble Nimrods from the days of the Norman kings to the reign of the present German Emperor, who is fond of shooting wild boars. Baker, who followed his hounds on foot in Ceylon and killed his game at close quarters with a hunting knife, calls the boar "a determined fighter who does battle for the love of the thing."

Against this forest champion man sends a pack of hounds. All the boar has to defend himself with is his thick, bristly hide, and a pair of razor-sharp cutting tusks. Fierce and bloodthirsty are his enemies; and their number makes the combat unequal. But when the boar stands at bay, with his flanks protected by thorny jungle, facing alone a ring of yelping, snapping hounds, he shines out as an example of stubborn courage. He is fixed there, determined in his inflexible hog-mind to fight the battle out on that spot, and how it may. A terrible scrimmage takes place. Hounds that rush in, too eager for the fray, retreat ripped and slashed. The knowing ones wait a chance to seize the boar by the ear. But even when overpowered by sheer weight of numbers, he dies fighting.

Indeed, there is much pluck in this small animal. A horse and its rider armed with a long spear would appear formidable enough to cow the stoutest boar. But no: although the attempt seems as vain as Don Quixote's attack on the whirling windmills, he charges the "pig-sticker," and unable to reach the man wreaks his fury on the horse's legs. In countries where wild pigs roam in packs the tables are sometimes turned. The peccaries of South America are very quarrelsome and bristle up, even when no offense is intended. The harmless butterfly chaser who comes athwart of a pack of these small but peppery pigs had better climb the nearest tree. He may have a long time to wait before it is safe to come down. For their temper is uncertain, with a tendency towards the aggressively pugnacious.

If the weight and size of the wild boar are balanced against the weight and size of his enemies; if the handicap of the hunt is taken into account, it must be acknowledged that he ranks high in the roll of courageous animals. Among his fellows of the wild he is respected for his tusks and his temper.

With the boar, the least of these creatures that stand up against the attacks of the carnivorous killers, closes this incomplete survey of animal fighters. Deer, indeed, are at times pugnacious; and some, the moose for example, show much defensive courage. But it hardly seems worth while to open the question of the bravery of animals that, although horned, rely mainly upon their swiftness. Their valour is too much tempered by discretion.

Among the game animals enumerated it seems well-nigh impossible to select one as indisputably braver than the rest. Who shall say whether the lion is the true king of the cats, or the tiger? Nature does not try the question out, and if we turn to man for an answer, hunters differ considerably in opinion. The experience of most Nimrods is limited to one kind of fierce game, the boldness of which they are apt to overrate for purely personal reasons. Talk about lions to a veteran hunter of the Rockies, and he will be likely to say: "Aw, lions! Why, a grizzly would just chaw up a lion, claws and hide and all!" Men whose experience has been world-wide are not unanimous in their estimates of animal courage. Baker seems to think the wild buffalo the most formidable of big game. Sportsmen feel a chivalrous respect for the animal that has given them the grandest sport, and this they vote to be the bravest of all. Thus opinions vary and the question remains unsettled.

A quantitative analysis, as chemists call it, must then be abandoned as impracticable. Still it cannot have escaped remark that the quality of brute courage varies with the kind of animal, although not precisely in the way one would imagine beforehand. Thus, the most aggressive animals are found among the grass eaters. The surliness of the bear is more dominant than that of the irritable rhinoceros. The wary and aggressive courage of the predatory cats differs from the boldness of the buffalo. In the character of the leopard there is a trait of cheeky intrepidity lacking in that of the tiger. There seem to be shades and tints in the courage of animals as in the colours of their skins.

Although it is rash to argue in terms of human psychology concerning the spirit of animals, yet the motives of their courage appear in some instances like those of man's. Human mobs are influenced by a collective or "crowd" spirit to perform acts which the individuals that compose them would not dare to attempt single-handed. Similarly wild cattle feel the contagion of the crowd. The weaker members are heartened by the example of the bulls, and by the shoulder-touch of their neighbours, to face their predatory foes with a ring fence of lowered horns. The courage of animals, like that of men, is enhanced by special stimuli. Alcohol, indeed, they do not take to inspirit them with a temporary, or "Dutch" courage; but they are pricked on to bolder action by the maternal instinct and by jealous excitement. The sharpest spur of all is hunger.

But these particular incentives are a matter of times and seasons. The normal everyday fighting courage of a wild animal is based mainly on its equipment for attack and defense. Where it is used to meeting man as an enemy, it is influenced by its experience of his peculiar powers of offense. For while the creatures of the jungle are guided by immemorable habits, while they instinctively are able to gauge one another's powers of resistance, the action of man as a factor in their lives is forever uncertain. He is inventive and progressive. The weapons with which he attacks in one generation are in the next replaced by other and more destructive ones. As spear and bow are replaced by gun and rifle, as country that was once wild becomes settled up, the native animals lose their boldness and retreat before the advance of civilization.

Animal courage, when seated in the human breast, is the complement of another and higher form of courage, which is called moral. In this the wild beasts have no part. But that stoutheartedness which is quantified as "brute," they possess, if not in greater amount, then in a more available form than man does. Napoleon said that the rarest kind of courage was "three o'clock in the morning courage." He meant, one supposes, that at that chill hour a soldier's nervous energy is in a state of low tension; that under those depressing circumstances his spirit is weaker than when, in the heat of battle, he is cheered by the martial music of the band and heartened by the example of his comrades. A man roused from a bivouac slumber has to summon his courage before he is master of his powers of offense. Civilized man has departed so long from the wild life that it takes some years of training to turn him into a first-class fighter; and even then only the few always have their fighting wits about them.

But a savage animal does not need to summon his courage. He needs no call to arms; his armour is always on, his weapons ever ready. His is a nature far simpler than man's, at whose spirit pull the cords of emotion and reflective thought. Hence a ferocious beast is most dangerous when surprised. He strikes without hesitation, without calculating consequences, automatically, like a machine keyed up to the stress of a never-ceasing struggle.

To be gifted with some portion of brute courage is no small endowment to a man however highly civilized he be. But it is most prized under the conditions of savage life and in primitive communities: in short, where human life is least differentiated from animal.—Western Argosy.

The Story Teller.

MRS. WILKIE'S EXPERIENCES WITH A SPORTING SPOUSE.

I have before now alluded to the possession of an invaluable yet—on occasions—most heartbreaking cook-housekeeper, who looks after the necessities of a confirmed grass-widower. Her philosophy is so delightful on occasions that very frequently a sparkling and unconscious witticism carries one through the day. I shall venture to put down from time to time some of the topics she refers to. Usually she gets a friendly lead, and is ever slow to take the initiative. It is one of her good qualities that she is not loquacious, when perhaps one wishes to stalk about in pyjamas and dressing-gown, free to think out one's own thoughts, but a pause, a casual remark, or a question, will start the human phonograph going.

"I sat up pretty late last night, Mrs. Wilkie."

"Yes, sir, so I thought by the electric light being left on in the hall."

"I did not sit up so late as Mr. Williams in the next flat," was my apology, "but I am as big a fool as he is in stopping up after two o'clock."

"Yes, sir, I think you are."

An allusion followed on my part to the delights of a book or working by a Moderator lamp.

"I can't think how you do it. I never think of reading after the daylight is gone, myself," she said. "Then, fancy reading books. Wouldn't they keep for another day? I suppose you have so many of them you want to get through them all before you die."

"You see, Mrs. Wilkie, one gets absorbed in a book. Sometimes the plot is not much, but one goes on criticising the author's work."

"Oh! I thought you wrote most of them yourself," was the rather disappointed rejoinder. I explained that mine were very few, but I had evidently fallen from my high estate, or, who can tell, perhaps I had gone up in her estimation as being a really practical person as distinct from a romantic dreamer.

"Well, I must dress and get off to Gatwick, I suppose," I suggested later on, lighting a fresh cigarette.

"Don't forget to leave me the money for the butcher, the grocer, and the laundry, before you go," was the rather suggestive remark.

"Oh! of course," I murmured. "I don't forget them."

"I always think it better," she explained, "for a gentleman to pay what he wants to before he goes racing. Wilkie, my husband, you know, sir, used to go off racing far too much for my taste, until he reformed and went abroad. I would sit up by the fire until he came back. If he won he wanted to take me out and buy me something, but I wouldn't have any. I would never go with him, and was always right. You see, sir, a wife must never forget her duty to give her husband a welcome when he comes home. Wilkie used to say I was sarcastic-like, but then he was so down on his luck he looked at everything cross-eyed. There was nothing in saying what I did, sir, was there? You see, I should not like it to come to my mind that I ever caused Wilkie any annoyance."

"No, I'm sure you must be easy to get on with, Mrs. Wilkie."

"We never really had a row, Wilkie and me, except when I missed his Sunday suit one day, and did not know until the evening, when he says to me he had 'done it in over the favourite'—it was Jubilee day. I asked him for the ticket to keep, intending to give him a surprise by gettin' it out. You see, I was going to arrange to get mother to see us to her place the next day, Sunday, and leave Wilkie until Sunday morning wondering how he was going without his 'Sunday's.' Of course, he would have been a bit upset, and I should have sprung it on just to look at his expression of surprise when I produced them; likewise I was not going to provide any dinner, so that I should show what a good wife I was in saving money to make up for what he had lost. But he'd borrowed on the ticket, and on Sunday morning said he'd caught a cold and stayed in bed, and wasn't hungry. I think you will say, sir, I've been a good wife."

"Most excellent, Mrs. Wilkie," I replied. "One of a thousand—I mean one in a thousand. Did Wilkie ever get even with you in any way? I mean, do he ever turn on—I mean, did he sometimes try your peace of mind?"

"Only once, sir. He came home once from Hurst Park, and I shan't forget it, even though he is—abroad. He'd been a bit mysterious in the morning, and after he had gone I had a look round, and could not find his best overcoat, his Sunday clothes, nor his umbrella, nor new boots. 'So-ho, my gentleman,' I thinks, 'you have gone in for a bit of a wholesale order on another favourite to-day,' and I sat up for him in the armchair by the kitchen fire, leaving a pot of cold tea on the table and the gas turned low. Darn' the day I arranged to get my sister Lisbeth, her husband, her brother-in-law, and the brother-in-law's intended, here on Sunday."

"Quite a family gathering," I interjected.

"Yes, sir, I reckoned I would get the tickets from him, and this time I would not get them out, but let him go through all Sunday in his second-best, which were a bit off. In walks my gentleman, about half-past six, and says, 'No tea for me?' I says, 'We can't afford it. We'll have to take that provided by the parish if things go on this way.' Then I springs on him the party we were going to have on Sunday. He stares with his eyes open, and looks at his clothes. 'Yes, I know all about it, young man,' I replies, looking severe, 'and I'm not going to get them out for you. You will have to see those I have invited as you are, and you had better go to one of your racecourse friends and get your dinner.'

"'S'pose I'd won,' said he; 'you wouldn't have accepted a new bonnet nor come out with me to the Middlesex to-night, would you?' 'You know I have always refused to go when you have said you have won before.' 'Would you not have liked that violet dress, like we saw at Higgens and Picken's, nor that white fichu?' I says, 'The things I have are good enough for me, and I have told you a dozen times, Wilkie, I will not touch that "easy come, easy go" money you so seldom get hold of.' 'Well!' he says, 'I was thinking that as I came along, as you would not accept any present nor treats from me, so I goes in and buys a light suit and a pair of patent-leather boots with cloth tops,' he says, 'and I have bought this light overcoat.' He goes outside the kitchen door and bangs down the parcels on the table. 'I shall either wear these to-morrow or my best.'"

I had to smile, but blew a cloud of smoke to hide it.

"'My pal, Jim Blaker,' Wilkie continued, 'is a gentleman's valet, and he says clothes come out better if they are put under the mattress to press them, so that's where mine are, and what's more,' he says, 'I thought as we would have a party to-morrow afternoon, so I've asked Jim Blaker and two or three friends of his who cut a bit of a dash, and they are coming here to tea. Jim's bought his wife a new dress. I've bought two bottles of whisky and two bottles of port, and' he says, 'I have backed two 10 to 1 chances to-day, and it's a pity that you won't come out with me, but I'm going with Jim Blaker and his missus and her sister—nice young thing—to the pit of the Alhambra as soon as I've put on these new clothes; but I think I'll go as I am,' he says, and out he goes, laughing and callin' out, 'I'll leave you the evening paper, and you needn't mind turning up the gas.'"

"And he knew you never read after dark." (This was my only safety valve.)

"I'll tell you what happened on the Sunday, sir, another time, sir, if I may. Your bacon's getting cold."

MOTORING MEMS.

London, Friday, 10th January 1908.

The Grand Prix.—The racing committee of the Automobile Club of France have decided several points of interest with reference to the Grand Prix of 1908; the committee decided to adopt the formula which was selected at Ostend during the past season on the occasion of the international conference, to allow all types of machines with a maximum bore of 155mm. and a minimum weight of 1,100 kilos., empty. These regulations are definitely fixed as regards all motors of four cylinders, the conditions regarding vehicles of six cylinders, and the Gobron type will be settled at an early date.

With regard to the circuit on which the race will be run, this has not been decided, the committee having before them for examination the following:—Seine-Inferieure, Moryan (Cher), Marne, Rhone, Bretagne. It is the opinion of those acquainted with the inner workings of the organisation that the Seine-Inferieure course, as adopted in 1907, will be selected course for 1908.

The race will take place during the first two weeks of July, and entries, which are now open, will close on 15th February next, at ordinary fees, and on 1st June at double fees. The distance of the race will be between 400 and 500 miles.

An amusing story, for the truth of which we decline to vouch, is told of a motorist who knocked down and killed a policeman. His comrade at once started a subscription list for the benefit of his widow, and amongst others who contributed was a motorist who gave ten shillings. "That's nine shillings too much," he was told "subscriptions are limited to one shilling." "Oh, never mind," replied the motorist, "keep the other nine and kill nine more policemen."

The Daimler Company is to be congratulated. They are offering Scholarships that are worth winning and what is more, employment after the expiration of the Scholarship. At the present time there are not many firms who are laying themselves out to get fresh talent: and I believe it is with the idea of getting the best brains and talent that money can obtain, that the scheme has been formulated.

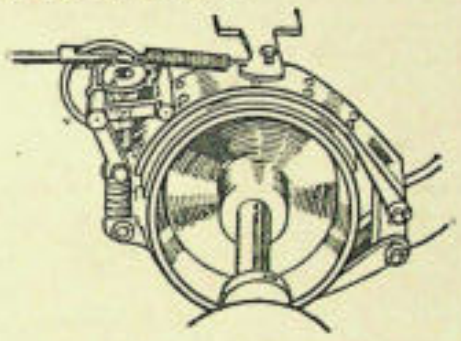
Hitherto the only way to get into a big works was to be an apprentice or an articled pupil, the desideration being according to the ability to pay large or small fees; even then it meant no salary. The Daimler Company offer two years tuition, in theory and in the workshops, at a salary of £100 per annum with a further £150 per annum for two years if the holder likes to stop with the firm. Indians, Anglo-Indians, Britishers and others wishing to obtain further particulars should write to the Daimler Company, Coventry, addressing their letters to the Pupil's department and be sure to mention the Indian Field as source of their information.

A good story is being told of a certain well-known motorist. He had adjourned on the Saturday morning to Maidenhead to see friends and was due back in the evening to a dinner party. It was at the time the floods were out and finding the company—or part of it—very congenial, he decided to spend the evening there instead of returning. So he sent this telegram. "'Can't come; breakdown: washout on the line.' The reply was:—'leave your wash out on the line. Buy a new shirt and come anyway.'"

One of the soundest pieces of advice that can be given to a motorist is "Keep your brakes in order." However, as is so often the case, this is very much more easily said than done. On the Daimler-Mercedes the braking system has had special attention paid to it, and the question of brake adjustment has been carefully thought out.

It is of course the natural order of things for brakes to wear and get out of adjustment, though on high-class cars the wear is not nearly so great as on the cheaper makes. With the idea of being able to take up any wear, however slight, instantly, the thumbscrew A has been fitted. This screw takes up all wear instantly by drawing the ends of the shoes together. The amount of work this saves is of course obvious, as no dismantling is necessary.

Such refinements as this one which is fitted to the Daimler-Mercedes all go to make the much-maligned chauffeur still less of a necessity than ever.



A. The drum and shoes of the brakes fitted to the Daimler-Mercedes—note the thumbscrew A beside the spring.

A Sporting Finish.—That somewhat sleepy cliquey body the R.A.C. has at last wakened to the fact that reliability trials do interest and has formulated a scheme for the holding of some trials of this nature in June. The 1908 trial will probably cover a distance of something more than 2,000 miles, with 20 miles of hill-climbs and a 200 miles race on the Brooklands track to provide a sporting finish. The calculations will be so made that immediately on the conclusion of the race, the winners in the various classes will be declared.

The trial will start from London and proceed to Glasgow, when the Scottish trial will at once begin, and at the conclusion of the Scottish trial the cars will continue their 2,000 miles journey. Entries can be made for the whole 2,000 miles trial or for the Scottish trial only, or for both. The distance run in Scotland will be roughly about 750 miles, and on the arrival of the cars at Glasgow the whole of the cars will be under the management of the Scottish A.C. until the conclusion of the Scottish trial when the Royal A.C. will again take over the direction of affairs. The Scottish trial will be run on the same lines as heretofore, and its distinctive character will be therefore preserved.

There will be ten classes in the 2,000 miles trial, based on R.A.C. rating, while in the Scottish trial the basis of classification will be price, as in former years.

Instead of following the Scottish A.C. system of classification which, from the public point of view, is by far the best, the R.A.C. have adopted the H.P. system with their own formula for obtaining the rating.

While at first glance Posters and Motor cars may seem rather far apart, it is quite interesting to study the different posters representing the various motor car firms. While on the whole most of the posters are common-place in the extreme, one there is which has attracted a lot of attention. It depicts a lady steering a Daimler car. The design was by a well-known Italian artist and in fact the whole of the work was executed in Italy.

It was certainly a happy idea of the Daimler Company to supplant the rather dry type of poster so prevalent by so artistic an effort. And what do the tariff reformers say?

There is certainly not much nonsense about Mr. D'Arcy Baker. Once the Brooklands Club had put the ban upon "New-paper talk" in regard to challenges, Mr. Baker and his Fiat were ready. During the Spring therefore the Fiat car with Nazzarro at the wheel will do its best to uphold Italy's prestige as the foremost motor car manufacturing country of the day. The challenges thrown out from New Burlington Street were accepted without a murmur. Not that Fiats were likely to want to alter the conditions but nowadays when a challenge is accepted, if the acceptor does not raise any objections, the challenger takes good care to and end anything that might develop into a sporting contest.

FRAUDS IN FUR AND FEATHER.

THE members of the fur and skin trades' section of the London Chamber of Commerce have been moved to action by the alleged practice of retailers of furs in bestowing wrongful and misleading names upon the pelts they dispose of to a confiding public. In no department of trade apparently does "skim milk masquerade as cream" more commonly than in furs, and this is hardly to be wondered at: furs are very largely purchased by the women who wear them, unaided by their men kind: and women are credulous, eager to believe they are getting more than their money's worth and easily deceived. Not, we think, that male assistance in such matters would be of very general utility: very few men, other than sportsmen or naturalists, who may have made close study of furs in their natural state can tell a dyed fur of any kind from an undyed pelt. And the arts of the dyer and "puller" (we do not know by what name the person who subjects furs to the process of "pulling" is known) have reached such perfection that only a trained expert can express a confident opinion as to the genuineness or otherwise of any given fur not in its natural state. The continuous demand for furs and the decimation of fur-bearing animals in all parts of the world to meet that demand has nursed into existence the thriving trade in what are called "substitutes;" and it is interesting to see what some of these substitutes are and under what names they are sold. First among them in importance stands the common rabbit: rabbit pelts are the cheapest of any that lend themselves to treatment and ingenuity has made the most of their cheapness and adaptability. Rabbit "sheared and dyed" we read is sold as seal skin of various kinds: "seal, electric seal, Red River seal and Hudson seal." Dyed it parades as "sable or French sable." White rabbit masquerades as ermine: white rabbit dyed as chinchilla. "Electric" seal we take it bears imposture written on the face of it: the least thoughtful of women must pause to ask herself if there be such an animal as an electric seal—but possibly she does ask herself, or somebody else, the question and, comforted by the reflection that there is such a thing as an electric eel argues by analogy that there are shock-giving seals. Perhaps there are to him who pays the furrier's account. Then surely it is trading boldly on the ignorance of buyers to offer a rabbit skin, or any other, as "French sable." The least well informed person must be aware that the sable is a denizen of cold climates and that France does not suffer from a climate which renders it habitable for this valued animal. "French sable" would not seem to be often offered; but "sable" may be fashioned from pelts whose wearers would be pardonably surprised could they know the use to which their skins are to be put. Dyed marmot is sold as sable or as mink; dyed hare skins also: musquash dyed, and mink likewise furnish "sables." It is a compliment to the sable whose increasing rarity has induced the furriers to devise these substitutes which are often very difficult of detection by any but the expert. One of the most striking examples of fraudulent substitute is that of goat dyed, of course, for bear skin. Bear skins of many species are by no means costly, but goat skins are very inexpensive, hence the impudent fraud. The preparation of skins for use as furs is carried to curious lengths: it is, it appears, a custom in the trade to insert white hairs in the skins of fox and sable for retail purposes: a fur "shot" with white hairs commands a better price than one of uniform hue and the demand is met by inserting the requisite percentage of white hairs.

Were these furs sold under "fancy" names not bearing more or less resemblance to the popular names of real animals: were they sold at prices bearing some relation to their real worth, or want of it, there would be nothing to complain of: on the contrary everyone interested in the preservation of wild life would welcome their substitution for the skins of beasts which are annually growing rarer by reason of the assiduity with which they are trapped by the fur hunters. We can form some idea of the way in which the sable of the old world, commonly called the Russian sable, has been killed off by the extraordinary prices demanded, and paid, for garments made of the finest skins: a cloak of undyed sable might have been seen at a great London furrier's a year ago, priced at 3,000 guineas; only the best skins procurable had been used in it and these had taken several years to collect. No doubt they had; and the point that suggests itself is the slaughter that the collection involved. The cloak had been made to order; and it would be interesting, though doubtless depressing, to learn how many scores of skins had been procured, offered and rejected for that single garment. Probably not one pelt in a hundred brought into the market came up to the high standard of excellence required. There is no indication of any slackening in the demand for sable, chinchilla, seal and other luxurious furs; on the contrary, as wealth increases so does the demand; and there appears to be no means of placing a check upon the destruction of fur-bearing creatures to meet it. We can hardly hope to see organised a social campaign against the wearing of furs, as we have seen against the wearing of feathers: and to say truth we feel small confidence in any such campaign. Nothing could have been more vigorous, whole hearted and sincere than the endeavour to make an end of the trade in plumage for use in millinery, a few years ago: for a brief period it really looked as though feather adornments were to be abandoned. Possibly "fashion" deemed it discreet for a time to forego the use of feathers: but if their temporary disuse were due to the decree of temporising fashion the omission to use feathers did not last long: never have feathers and plumage of every sort, kind and description been more universally employed in millinery than during the past year. Whole birds and fragments of birds adorn nearly every hat to be seen: and the excellent society which flattered itself that some headway had been made in the direction it desired seems to have abandoned the job in despair. No doubt a large proportion of the feathers so used come from bodies which have been cooked and eaten, and against the employment of such plumage there is nothing to be said. It may be arguable that to kill to gratify an aesthetic taste is at least as commendable, or permissible, as killing to gratify the palate; but into this nice point we do not propose to enter. What we have now in view is the fact that vast quantities of feathers, dyed and in their natural state, are sold under a variety of fanciful names bearing no relation to those of the original wearers. The buyer is not concerned with the name of the original bird: in nineteen cases out of twenty she does not ask it—and it is doubtful if the retailer could tell if she did: so long as it is graceful, pretty and becoming, does not cost too much, or costs enough, she is content: and there is no reason why she should not be. In the interests of the survival of such interesting species as many of the pelage animals are, we should welcome application of the same principle to the furriers' business. Unfortunately the value of certain furs set a standard: and while that standard remains we presume "electric seal," "French sable" and the like will remain also. Cheap furs will not satisfy: still less furs that look cheap; and the principle seems to be that if a cheap thing can be, by any device, made to look good it is entitled to a good, i.e., misleading name. We should feel inclined to regard with a comparatively lenient eye misrepresentations in fur were such misrepresentations the means of saving rare animals from extinction. When people lay themselves out willingly to deception, contributing to deceive themselves by paying a price they know cannot buy the fur whose name (qualified perhaps) is applied to their purchase, we do not feel that they are entitled either to sympathy or protection.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

We have a slack time to record for Calcutta as far as racing is concerned and all the fury and excitement has been transferred to Lucknow, where to judge from the accounts received from our correspondent they are getting enough and to spare. Here, however, we are going to put on the steam and have an extra day at Tollygunge to-morrow and at Calcutta on Saturday to make up for the blank week. Entries for both days are good on paper for the races that have filled, but when dissected it will be found that the same horses occur in many events and scratchings will be numerous, so the fields which actually go to the post are not likely to be particularly good. The Garia Hât Steeplechase did not fill on the original terms, and they have now been amended to include any horses that have not won a steeplechase value Rs. 1,500 or upwards since 31st March 1905, a pretty wide condition that should embrace almost everything in Calcutta just now.

The handicaps for the Molla Hât Steeplechase and Third Pony Handicap Steeplechase have been published with commendable promptitude. Wake Up should have a very good show in the former if she stands up and does not jump her jockey off her back Among the ponies the handicappers have given Solace 13st., a very reasonable course to pursue, as at any practicable weight the race would have such a gift for her as to be devoid of all interest. It now looks a very open affair and Lady Knight, Warsprite, Envious, Minstrel Boy and Emerald all look to be pretty well in it, though possibly the owners of the two last named may prefer the fun of riding their ponies in the paperchase in the morning to the honour and glory of seeing them run with some one else up in the afternoon.

The paperchase last week, the sixth of the season, was over a long and trying but very sporting course and finished with an accident to Lucifer, which everyone who is interested in paperchasing will admit was a real disaster. By dint of un-tinted pains and care Mr. Scaramanga has brought an animal who was never considered anything special, well up in the running for the Average Cup and indeed the only dangerous competitor to Captain Fitzgerald's Fermoy and it is not the less annoying that the fall which dislocated the grey's shoulder was occasioned at a little hand not 2 feet high and within a furlong of the finishing flags—shipwreck in sight of harbour with a vengeance. However we can but hope that the damage is not so bad as appears at present and that Lucifer may at any rate be able to run in the Paperchase Cup.

There were several other falls in Friday's chase, including Mr. Damiano junior on Posey when leading by a field and Mr. Dring on John, though with our usual good luck nobody was hurt. Ryong seemed to have the chase easily in hand at the end, and came cantering in to be beaten unexpectedly on the post by Diabolo, who finished up with a great rush. The following was the final order. Captain Fraser on Diabolo 1; Mr. Muir on Ryong 2; Mr. Morshead on Pretender 3; Mr. Robertson on Solanus 4; Captain Fitzgerald on Fermoy 5; Mr. Levetus on Prince Moorfield 6, followed by Messrs. Hadow, Hill, Pierson, Antram, Birkmyre, Winckworth, Montgomery, Captain Holden and Mrs. Dudley Myers.

In the pony chase there was even more grief. Mr. Antram fell at the first mud wall but manfully holding on while Blazes dragged him along the ground was able to remount, Mr. Muir came to grief at the next, Mr. Levetus and Lady George rolled over together at a wall about half way round and a very big ugly customer near home accounted for two or three more.

At the finish Pink 'Un won by a head but comfortably from Killarney hard ridden. The order was: Mr. Evers on the Pink 'Un 1; Mr. Sieger on Killarney 2; Mr. Tanner on Emerald 3; Mr. Bletsoe on Seagull 4; Mr. Tagert on a bay 5; Mr. Hanning on Dynamite 6, followed by Messrs. Stokes, Richardson and Hossack.

Others out included Miss Waterhouse, Mrs. Keighley, Mrs. Forsyth, Mrs. Hadow, Miss Thomas, Mrs. Dudley Myers, Mrs. Stokes, Miss Curtis Hayward, Mrs. Morshead, Mr. Macrae, Colonel Victor Brooke, Mr. Barclay, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Cowper, Mr. Barrow, etc.

The Calcutta Light Horse go under canvas on Sunday and they say they anticipate a record camp this year, there being already about 50 acceptances. It sounds selfish, but gallant warriors can stand a little wet and it is to be hoped that their camp will bring its annual downfall of rain as the going is getting very hard. There is going to be great competition for the Balaclava Stakes as among others they say Cragendarrie, Agamemnon, Dalgai, Prince Moorfield, Myrene and Jorrocks are all chargers and will be having a dash at it. There is some talk about turning the event from a five-furlong sprint into a round the course or at least a mile race, and it would certainly seem a better sort of an affair for chargers than a sharp brush over a short distance, which is not or should not be their game at all and tends to encourage the wrong class of animal to the ranks.

The thorough-bred Australian horse, Nat Gould, and the Arabs Nadir and Ajax were boxed on the 27th ultimo at Bombay en route for Durbhunga, they having been purchased by Mr. S. Weatherilt, Superintendent of His Highness's stud for the Raj and will be used for breeding from. Another thorough-bred English horse is expected out from home shortly. Lord Chippendale, the English horse which was purchased in December 1906, is the sire of four colts, all of which are doing well.

The stud is yearly improving, and a large number of three and four-year-olds have been disposed of at Rs. 600 per head. Pure bred Jerseys are also increasing rapidly and are early disposed of.

The Sialkot Polo Tournament ended on the 24th instant in a win for the 12th Lancers "A" Squadron, who beat the Gymkhana "B" team in the final game by 4 goals to one.

All interested in bloodstock will regret to learn that the King's famous horse, Persimmon, has sustained an accident which resulted in a fractured pelvis. Efforts will be probably made to save the horse, who is now in slings at the Sandringham Stud Farm. It has been found necessary to cancel all Persimmon's covering engagements, at any rate, for the present season Persimmon won the Derby for the King, and few who had the good fortune to be present at Epsom in 1896, will forget the scene of enthusiasm which prevailed on that occasion. His Majesty won the Blue Ribbon four years later with Diamond Jubilee, an own brother to Persimmon, while another famous brother is Florizel II. The horse is by St. Simon—Perdita II., and on the Turf won stakes amounting to nearly £35,000, including the Derby, St. Leger and Jockey Club Stakes as a three-year-old, while in the following season he appropriated the Ascot Gold Cup and Eclipse Stakes. He retired to the stud in 1898, and has been very successful. He sired the famous Sceptre, also Zinfandel, Peril of the Loch, Mountain Apple, Royal Dream, Your Majesty, Keystone II., and a host of other winners. His progeny last year won twenty-six races of nearly £13,000, his fee being 300gs. It may be recalled that Diamond Jubilee was sold a while ago for 30,000gs. to the Argentine.

The French dispute over the selection for the Olympic Games appears to have become very acute. Reading between the lines, the position appears to be that the U.S.F.S.A. will not deal with the Olympic Commitee of their own country, and wish for direct negotiations with the British Olympic Committee. Judging indeed, from comments in the semi-official organs over there, our Gallic neighbours think that they are in some way slighted by the British body; but a clear explanation would make it apparent that they are treated in exactly the same way as every other foreign country and indeed in the same manner as Great Britain would be treated were the games to be held in Paris, or any other venue outside of the British Isles. There have been many enquiries in England as to why the whole of the arrangements for the games are not in the hands of the A.A.A., but the position is that the governing body took no share in the promotion of the Olympic Games, and there is every reason to doubt whether the A.A.A. would have found it in any way possible to take the financial responsibility attached to the promotion of the games. In any case, the idea of re-instituting Olympic contests at regular intervals was that of a few of the leading European sportsmen. The ball once started rolling, has kept moving along, and gathering weight as it goes, and there is no doubt that the Games this year will reach a higher standard than upon any previous occasion. The council who promote the contests also select their own commitees, to whom they entrust the arrangements as to the participation of each country in the games. These committees in turn negotiate with the bodies governing amateur sport as to the details of selection and representation, and the entries have to be made through these bodies to the local committee.

It seems that so far as France is concerned their leading sports association declines to negotiate through Baron de Coubertin, who is the appointed person to deal with the matter, and are trying to manufacture a grievance out of the fact that the British Committee will not deal with them direct, but the latter body are bound by the general regulations of the Games. We must hope that our neighbours will not let their internecine quarrels interfere with the desire of their athletes to take part in the sports this year. Should they maintain their present attitude the blame for their absence must lie on the shoulders of those who allow jealousy to interfere with the well-being of amateur sport, and as amateurism is not at the zenith of its popularity in France at the present moment, it may suffer considerable harm through the dispute. Meantime, if as now stated, the French Association are threatening any of their athletes who compete in the Games with suspension, we may have to look once more at the position of the British cross-country men who are selected to take part in the International cross-country race next March, which is under the control of the U.S.F.S.A., for reprisals are quite possible if the parties concerned start open warfare. But for the good of sport in France we shall all trust that wiser counsels will prevail.

In an age crammed full of marvels in electricity we have ceased to be astonished at anything. But when entering a room, in which you are confronted with an instrument that under the influence of electricity plays without a soul seated at it, almost a sensation of fear comes over the listener hearing perfect reproduction of the execution of an artist who is well known to one; this borders on the phenomenal would almost seem uncanny. Such was our experience on Wednesday last, when through the courtesy of Messrs. T. E. Bevan and Co., of this city, it was our privilege to hear that musical wonder of modern times, the Welte Mignon piano. Messrs. Bevan have in their music saloons in Old Court House Street given several demonstrations of this marvellous instrument, and so popular have these "Recitals"—at which one may hear the best masters of the pianoforte reproduced perfectly—become that it has been necessary to limit the audience by requesting the general public to pay a small sum for seats, though Messrs. Bevan and Co's own clientele are always welcome free of charge. It would appear that in the "Mignon" the conclusion of the series of inventions in the realm of the reproduction of music has been finally reached. The instrument itself is a complete high grade overstrung upright piano with a full compass of 7 octaves, well adapted for reproducing all compositions and with a rich full tone that lends itself to all degrees of light and shade. The motive power is furnished by a small electric motor (1-6 horse power) which is placed inside the piano and can be readily connected by means of an ordinary flexible wire to the current which serves for lighting or for fans. The cost of maintenance when in use, being at the maximum the same as two 16-C.P. lamps. Where no current is available the apparatus will work equally well by means of an accumulator or from storage batteries. The operation of the instrument is quite simple. After inserting a paper roll, a button is pressed and the apparatus pours forth the desired melodies in masterly reproduction. After the piece has been played, the music roll is automatically wound back again, and the current automatically switched off. Each roll of music has been played by the hand of an artist and bears his signature.

The Welte-Mignon appeals to both the student and the amateur. To the former it is invaluable, for by its means he may hear the piece he is studying, played by a pianist of the highest rank; he may compare and contrast the renderings of the same composition by different players. To the amateur it is a delight of which he never tires, for by its aid he may at any time hear the performance of a beloved artist, and recall his very touch, so lifelike in its reality, that by closing his eyes, he may conjure up his absent master, and feel almost as if he is actually seated at the instrument. While for those who are, from force of circumstances, unable to ever hear the best performers it is an unspeakable boon. A point which will strike even the most casual of observers is that we favoured individuals and our successors who live in this twentieth century need never, like our forbears, rely upon contemporary notices to realise the rendering of the masters of our own age: thanks to one of the most wonderful of modern inventions, generations to come will be able absolutely to listen to the great masters of the present age themselves. Messrs. T. E. Bevan and Co.'s are the Sole Agents in India; they have already disposed of several instruments, and so great has already been the demand that they are forced to cable home for more.

A meeting of the North Punjab Fishing Club was held at Rawalpindi, Major-General Stratford Collins presiding. A report was read by the Honorary Secretary and showed that though the past year had been an unfortunate one for fishing, owing to too much rain in the spring and to failure of the summer and autumn rains, yet a fair number of fish had been taken from the four rivers protected by the Club, viz., Sohan and Karung at Rawalpindi and Harro and Chiblat near Hasan Abdel. The rivers are now seen to be full of young fish and there is every reason to expect fishing to improve yearly. The Club has so far thirty subscribers for the current year and many more are expected from outstations, such as Campbellpur, Nowshera and Peshawar. More members are needed so that the Club may be able to employ more bailiffs for the proper protection of the waters. All classes are eligible to become members and the annual subscription is only Rs. 8. Members are invited to send the Honorary Secretary records of fish killed, so that a total table of the year and state of the fishing may be known. The meeting elected a committee of management for the current year with Major-General Stratford Collins as President, and Colonel A. Hamilton of the 25th Punjabis as Honorary Secretary.

The great billiard match between Melbourne Inman and Stevenson was played at the Calcutta Concert Hall every afternoon and evening last week. The Colonial was receiving 2,250 points in a game of 9,000 up and eventually defeated the champion by 656, the final scores reading Inman 9,000, Stevenson 8,344.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—One does not want a better example of the peculiarity of hunting than we have had this week at Santa Cruz, as after an admirable morning's sport on last bye day, the extra hunt on Tuesday was absolutely blank without even a whimper from hounds denoting the proximity of a jack. Here, at any rate, was the exception to the rule.

The meet on the bye day was at Sahar Hill when about eighty turned out in pitch darkness, hounds being thrown into the covert fringing Bomanwadi Valley at the first sign of dawn. All are soon in full swing over paddy fields which soon give way to good going with plenty of jumps, the direction being Sahar. Before reaching it hounds swerve and cross Chuckla Lane and make towards Parla and then to the home coverts. Here the jack twists and turns for a time before he cuts across the railway at Irla and the field cannot follow. He, however, is pulled down not far off and hounds are brought back to Sahar, where they soon unearth another.

This one makes for the Backwater, but does not cross till through the mango tope and over the Andheri road he reaches a shallow part. Soon after he recrosses and tears away towards Marole, climbing up the steep hill of caves. Down the other side he is difficult to follow, as he makes for Vehar, but is in full view when, as he tries to cross the Tulsi main, he is put an end to after another very fast and enjoyable run.

There were two excellent runs on Thursday, when about sixty met the Master at Santa Cruz on an ideal morning. The Chuckla coverts were successfully tried and all made away past the hill at a great pace and to Sahar Hill into Bomanwadi Valley to eventually reach the Backwater. Near it there is a quarry half full of water and hounds making down this come right on to their jack.

Another is soon put up at Sahar and through the woods at a tremendous pace back to the Backwater at nearly the same place as before. Through the market gardens the pace is extraordinary as far as Kalina, where there is a check in the brickfields. Continuing through Vakola and past the officers' bungalows into the paddy field. The pace, however, is too much for the jack, who is pulled down in a clump of cactus.

A wise plan has been adopted by the Committee of the annual Poona Boxing Tournament which will, it is hoped, be found beneficial and that is to start a month earlier, i.e., from the 23rd to 28th March. This will enable those who compete at Lucknow to come down when fit without having to train over again. The usual weights are provided for, first entries closing on 29th February and final on 18th March.

Captain Umfreville is again Honorary Secretary and Major-General Alderson is President.

The Mahaluxmi course is getting busier every day as the Big Meeting approaches and this year is likely to be a record for class. We were all glad to see Watson looking so well after his touch-and-go affair. He has brought Fitzgrafton, Ballark and Golden Gleam, all fit. Ramshaw and Colin Barrett arrived with Lord Barrymore, Chivalry, Lovania, Florrie and Wakeful, and the condition the first two have put on since we last saw them is very noticeable. Firth also has come and rode Botha slow work but Jimmy Robinson, Mumford and the two Scotts have yet to put in an appearance. The course, by the bye, is in excellent condition.

Eight events each day at Mahaluxmi are becoming quite common, and on Saturday the books must have had more luck than on any previous occasion this season. There is plenty of interest in the Winter enquiry, which has been on for over a week, and two Books, Bucknell and Morton, as well as the jockey Williams are suspended awaiting the developments of a meeting arranged for Sunday.

Both races for new Arabs were divided, beginning with the Small Beginners' Consolation Plate, in the first of which Orby was a slight favourite from Disfigure. Lassa made the early running and at the bend Orby and Barrak came up, but the former soon fell away. Disfigure then came outside and looked like a winner, but Oomerkhan kept Barrak going and landed a 10 to 1 chance. There was one starter less, 18, in the second and Good Chance and Brussels were in demand till a rush came for the unknown Mountain King and made him favourite. The result was never in doubt as he led all the way and won easily from Good Chance in very fair time. This is Mr. Wallace's first win after so recently taking to owning racers.

In the first of the New Comers' Consolation Plate the much-talked-of Winter figured, but after the first rush his price extended and Najmi stood firme. Winter was never in the hunt and the latter ran third all the way to Wild Poppy and Malik Caman, there being no change in the order throughout. The second division was but little more interesting, as Devon, on whom there was a pile, came away as he liked, passing Sher and Saree at the distance. When he last ran two weeks ago I noted how strong he finished after coming too late to have any hope in the same race that Winter disappointed.

The first pony race of the season, the Rosehill Plate, found eight runners and proved interesting. At first Gun Metal and Russley Rose fought for favouritism till the latter's stable came hot for Lady Nannie. Gun Metal flying off had the favourite beaten at the bend, but Russley Rose came after her and in an exciting race home won by a head. Rain, in the morning, by the bye, made the going heavy and times were consequently poor.

Precious figured in the ten-furlong Andheri Plate, but punters forgot that the track was heavy and the distance a bit beyond him. Eed and Young Kohinoor were the only others seriously backed. It was a grand race, Antica, then Eed taking up the running, closely attended by Kastantin, Peculiar and Young Kohinoor. In the straight Eed looked like winning from Peculiar when Kastantin put in a fast run outside and won at very remunerative odds.

On his last run added to the fact that in his gallop he beat Admiral Crichton, Forfeit was made favourite for the six-furlong February Plate with Baritone and St. Patrick next in demand. St. Patrick went away to the front followed by Lady Metal and Uro, who is not ready yet. Forfeit and Baritone came up at the bend, but Killorn had a good hold of the leader and stayed them out easily, Baritone coming into third place. It is about time Mr. Kelso's horse won, but on his previous form he could not be confidently backed.

The Bandora Plate of six furlongs proved a very open betting race, Salanic being favourite from False Start, Young Gazelle and Sir Jamal ; two stables commanding all the money. As was the case last week, False Start got away in front and in a good finish stayed his stable companion, Sir Jamal, out by three-quarters with Darby very close.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 17th January 1908.

The Limerick Competition craze would now seem to have reached a crisis, for before many weeks have elapsed some London magistrate will be asked to determine the legality or illegality of these popular "draws." The National Anti-Gambling League is acting as prosecutor, and is now engaged in preparing information preparatory to applying for summonses. The Scotland Yard Authorities do not seem satisfied that "Limericks" are legally lotteries, and it may be remembered that last August it was stated in the House of Commons, pursuant to the question raised by Mr. Byles, that "Limericks did not fall within the law for the suppression of lotteries." The real question now involved seems to be whether "Limerick" competitions involve the exercise of skill or are decided by mere chance. Apparently they somewhat resemble Bridge in that the element of skill, if it is involved at all, is trifling, while the element of chance is conspicuous. In any case the prosecution is nearly certain to make capital out of the fact that as a rule "Limerick" competitions cost their promoters nothing, but are generally a source of considerable indirect profit. Add to this that an indefinite number of coupons is permitted to be sent which certainly invites "gambling;" and also that the prizes seem to be awarded more in the provinces than in London—"not because there are few competitors, but because the various competition journals are established as firmly in London as they are likely to be, and the field for advertisement is in the provinces;"—and the National Anti-Gambling League would seem to have a pretty firm basis to go upon.

* * * * * *

The case, when it does come up, will recall missing-word competitions, which, in the test case Barclay and others vs. Pearson, heard in 1893, were held to be illegal. In that case, it will be recalled, the competition was organised by the proprietors of Pearson's Weekly, who were ordered to return to competitors a sum of £23,628, which had been paid into court as representing contributions received from competitors. It is computed that about 200 newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals in London and the provinces have adopted the "Limerick" form of competition. Summonses will probably be taken out in only a few cases, and those are likely to be confined to London. One only is almost sure to be selected as a test case, seeing that all the competitions are run on similar lines, and involve the elements which have to be adjudicated upon, namely, the elements of chance or skill. Some interesting statistics have been made in the course of investigations. One journal announces the receipt of 84,708 coupons in one week, and another has intimated the distribution of £40,000 in prizes. On a particular day the money order department of the Post Office issued 170,000 sixpenny orders. Usually the demand is less than 100,000 a month, but in October 2,100,000 were supplied. However, the test case be decided, appeal will be almost inevitable, and the nation will probably ultimately have the decision of the House of Lords, a consumation devoutly to be prayed for, thus assuring us the judgment of the highest tribunal in the land. Even in the case of so mundane a thing as "Limericks," it were well to assure ourselves that law is justice.

The Motor-'Bus Strike is now a thing of the past, and the victory lies practically with the London Road Car Company. After being maintained more or less resolutely for eleven days, the men's fight against the substitution of the journey system for payment by the day has abruptly collapsed. This was after the London Road Car Company had returned the last of the licenses held by their employes on strike, and some eight hundred more motor-'bus drivers and conductors had joined the ranks of the unemployed. Two hundred only first resumed work on the employers' conditions, and some sixty 'buses were running by last Saturday. The disorganised services cannot, however, be restored immediately. Even if all the men return at once, two or three days must elapse ere the full complement of cars is once more at the disposal of the public. It was interesting to note that the centre of interest was yesterday transferred from Battersea to Westminster, and from 9 o'clock onwards there was a steady stream of applicants for re-instatement at the company's offices in Grosvenor Road. On their part, the London Road Car Company declare that no formal settlement of the dispute is necessary. So far as they are concerned, the former employees have been discharged, and henceforth can be treated with only as applicants for employment on the company's terms. A large number of new drivers are being trained as rapidly as possible, and meantime, since it is winter, the shareholders are losing nothing by the enforced idleness of so many cars. Such, in brief, is the company's statement of their position, and making all due allowance for the natural desire to put it at its highest, there can be little doubt that the balance of advantage is on their side.

Scarcely less sensational than the Druce-Portland mystery has been the York cruelty case, in which Mr. and Mrs. Rushworth were convicted at York of gross cruelty to two adopted children. The lady was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment in the second division, and her husband was fined £50. The latter gave evidence emphatically denying the charges brought by the prosecution. He is a solicitor, and secretary to the York Education Committee. The proceedings were instituted by the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and two charges were preferred against each defendant of wilfully ill-treating and neglecting Olive Mabel May, aged 14, and Dora Crees, aged 13, in a manner likely to cause them unnecessary suffering and injury to their health. Mrs. Rushworth was further charged with causing Olive Mabel

May to be ill-treated. The children went to the home of the defendants at Nether Poppleton as adopted children—Olive five years ago, and the other a little later. They alleged that they had been subjected to most inhuman treatment, ill-fed, and clothed, thrashed with a dog whip, and branded on various parts of the body with a hot poker and a flat-iron. No direct violence was charged against the husband, but he was held responsible for the terrible condition of these poor sufferers. The case has opened out a good deal the question of the "adoption" of children. Apparently the whole system needs thorough investigation, and some form of supervision by the State, some legal process, without which no adoption of children could take place, and which would ensure regular and systematic State inspection of all adopted children, is required. In the present instance the N.S.P.C.C. have assuredly done their duty in bringing the inhuman conduct of the Rushworth woman to light; the only question is, was the punishment meted out, sufficiently severe? It is hard to realize that in the twentieth century there exist in human semblance a Wackford Squeery and his wife. Knowing this to be so it certainly makes the legal aspect of "adoption" more necessary; otherwise any children who are "not wanted" are simply bartered, and hapless innocents left to the mercy of those with or without consciences.

In view of the recent disaster at Barnsley in Yorkshire, when several children were injured and sixteen killed during a cinematograph show in the Concert Hall of that town, the Chief Constable of Bradford yesterday asked the magistrates to insert a condition in the license of the Mechanics' Institute—one of the principal public halls in the city—that attendants should be stationed on all the floors and on the stairs. The licensee had consented to accept such conditions as the Act gave the magistrates power to impose. It is comforting to note that "the suggestion was favourably received." There is no doubt that had there been attendants midway and at the top of the stairs in the Barnsley Concert hall, the shocking disaster could not have occurred. The one bright feature in its many heart-rending circumstances was that the pleasure and happiness of the little ones who had reached their seats in safety was not marred with the knowledge of the fate that had overtaken their companions, and that no panic ensued.

There have been and are changes round about Westminster. The new Government buildings at the corner of Parliament Street and Great George Street, make a handsome and imposing pile, a valuable addition to one of the finest groups adorning one of the finest sites in the world. There is a great circular court in the centre of the new building, placed rather cleverly in axial correspondence with the spacious court of the Home, India, and Foreign Office block. This makes a vista right through the carriage entrances. As it stands a little further back than the adjacent buildings it enables one to get a better view of the Abbey and its surroundings. The new erection will accommodate the Local Government Board and Education Office, both of which departments have been outgrowing their limits for several years, but nothing can deprive this particular spot of its delightful associations and all its interesting landmarks, though some of the latter, sad to relate, have absolutely disappeared, and more are doomed; for the present block of Government buildings is to be continued to the edge of St. James's Park, and for this purpose it will be necessary to pull down not only the eastern side of Delahay Street, but also the houses on the western side, facing the Park.

If the proposed Russo-Indian Railway which is to take us from Calais to Calcutta via Baku and Krassnovodsk, int twelve days, be accomplished in the near future, it will facilitate communication between Europe and the East beyond the wildest expectations of our rude forefathers. And it is not at present altogether nebulous. For, since the signing of the Anglo-Russian Convention, the question of the new Indo-European Railway has been moved into the sphere of practical schemes. What it now needs, however, is thorough discussion. Nobody can seriously call in question either the vastness of the economic advantages which the realization of this railway project would secure to all the peoples directly and indirectly concerned, or the ease with which it could be carried out if Great Britain and Russia agreed to take it in hand. Already the Transcaspia and the Indian lines are within 530 miles of each other. And if the two nearest stations, Kushk on the Russian side, and Newchaman on the Indian, were connected, the problem of joining India and Europe would be an accomplished fact. The details are as follows:—The traveller to Calcutta will start from London, pass through Calais, Berlin, Alexandrovo (on the Russian frontier), in twenty-eight hours. Allow an hour for the Custom formalities at Alexandrovo, and he would then push on to Warsaw, Rostoff, and Baku, reaching the Caspian Sea at the latter city in sixty-three hours. A fast steamer would next carry him across the Caspian in from twelve to fifteen hours, and landing at Krassnovodsk, he would take his seat in a train which would convey him via Askhabad and Tedjend to Nushki and Quetta. The entire journey from London to Calcutta would take, perhaps, twelve days at first, but no more than ten days later on. Those who dislike a sea journey might travel direct from Warsaw via Moscow and Orenburg, to Tedjend in very nearly the same time. If the rails could be laid across Afghanistan, the traveller would be taken from Krassnovodsk on the Caspian on to Merv and Kushk, thence to Newchaman, Sukhova, and Karachi, and the time necessary for the journey along this route from London to Karachi would not be more than seven and a half days, while the cost for a first class fare, as at present computated, would not exceed £40. Does this not strike Anglo-Indians as particularly inviting?

It is a regrettable fact that the Times is no longer the authority it once was in the journalistic world, and the supposition that it may increase its influence as an organ of political opinion under the management of Mr. Pearson, of Pearson's Weekly and Tit-bits fame, is purely supposition without foundation. Granted that there may be alterations. These are not always improvements. The Times was once hard to beat, and though, to some extent, it has now become a tradition, yet it formed, a splendid link between the old and newer forms of journalism. May it never condescend to radically alter its conservative tone, or adopt the "tabloid" form that is in the present day so serious a menace to really good journalism. A decade ago the news of a change in its management or proprietorship would have made a real stir. To-day it is accepted with a sang-froid characteristic of our twentieth century temperament.

What is now a household word in London—the children's Fancy Dress Ball at the Mansion House—took place last night. The little people turned out in hundreds to grace the charming entertainment provided for them by the Lord Mayor (Sir John Charles Bell), who with his daughter, Mrs. Franklin, did the honours, the Lady Mayoress being unable to take a share in the revels owing to illness. The reception took place in the long corridor from 7 o'clock until 8, and an uninterrupted procession of youthful masqueraders passed the chair, the Lord Mayor lifting up some of the shyest of his tiny guests to kiss them into confidence. At nine o'clock the procession of children round the Egyptian Hall was the most interesting and prettiest item of the evening. The dresses were excellent and as varied as possible.

At St. James's Theatre Mr. George Alexander has arranged to give a special matinee on the 31st instant, in aid of Meals for Children Fund. For the occasion he is preparing a varied and interesting programme which will include the third act of "Lady Windermere's Fan," a scene from "The School for Scandal," the one act play, "A Marriage has been Arranged," "A Quiet Rubber" and that amusing trifle, "The Vandyck." The Sphinx scene from "Caesar and Cleopatra," with Mr. Forbes Robertson and Miss Gertrude Elliott in their original characters, is to be one of the features of the entertainment, which will conclude with the second act of "The Thief." Miss Ellis Jeffreys, Mr. Lewis Waller and Miss Evelyn Millard will recite, while Miss Ellen Terry has undertaken to announce the financial result of the proceedings. Mr. Charles Hawtrey will confine himself to the humble role of prompter, and a number of popular actresses have taken upon themselves to sell programmes. When it is added that the entire receipts are to be handed over, without deduction of any kind, we may be sure the fund will benefit largely.

That dramatic and realistic American story "A White Man" was produced at the Lyric last Saturday, with Mr. Lewis Waller as cowboy. To listen to the talk of downright rough, coarse creatures such as Big Bill, Shorty Andy and the rest, together with the Indians, to see their actions, takes one back at a bound to some of Bret Harte's early works, to "The Luck of Roaring Camp," "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," in which there is always suggested for us the "soul of goodness in things evil." Bret Harte is what most of the younger spectators will have in mind; but the middle-aged man will go further back still, and try to "recover the first fine careless rapture" with which he read the romances of Fenimore Cooper, or, better still, G. P. R. James, and became familiar with such things as the long trail, the great, dignified North American Indians, and the ways and habits of the wily trapper. It is a distinct merit in "A White Man" that it revives our boyish memories and makes us feel that we are not witnessing a purely fanciful scene, but coming across real things—the sweet, rough pathos, the mingled savagery and kindness of the Wild West. In Mr. Lewis Waller we have an ideal "cow-boy." No one so well as he can portray the gallant hero in gallant clothes, overcoming difficulties and laughing in the most attractive way at misfortunes. The new play was known in America as The Squaw Man, and it has been turned into a novel by Miss Julie Opp, a charming actress who played for several seasons with Mr. George Alexander at the St. James's Theatre.

On Monday Miss Fanny Brough will appear at the Palace for the first time, in a new play, entitled, "Law and Order," which has been specially written for her by Mr. Tom Gallon. The Coliseum will next week include in its bill a sketch entitled "Charles, His Friend," originally performed at the Palace by Mr. Courtice Pounds and Miss Louie Pounds. The former is enabled to appear owing to the termination of the run of "As You Like It" at His Majesty's, but Miss Pounds is still on tour with "The Merry Widow."

I cannot close my letter without a reference to the weather. A change to milder influences established itself on Monday night, and has been since well maintained for a ground thaw has set in, being aided by a gentle breeze from the sout-hwest. But the "bone" in the ground will hard'y be dispossessed, even if no set-back occurs, until towards the close of the week, when we may believe that as regards fox-hunting, we shall not now be unduly delayed. In South Lincolnshire, early in the week, the record frost of the winter was experienced, 23 degrees being registered. A snowstorm and south-easterly gale prevailed in the Channel throughout Thursday night. Such a heavy sea was running that it was not until 2 o'clock that the Ostend night boat was able to leave Dover. Mail packets arriving from Ostend reported terrific weather in the North Sea. But on the whole our promised "Arctic Wave" and blizzard have been distinctly disappointing in development.

BRITISH COLUMBIA A BIG GAME COUNTRY.

THE great North west offers the finest field for the sportsman to-day of any country now reached by modern means of transportation. Its hills and valleys shelter the deer, bear, elk, cougar, wolf, porcupine and marmot, while in the mountain fastnesses, far up near the snow-line, may be found the mountain goat, and according to some authorities, an occasional big horn or mountain sheep. Mr. O. E. Garland, a reliable sportsman and big game hunter, and Mr. H. H. Hollingsworth, of Hotham sound, both claim to have seen sheep in the vicinity of Powell lake mountains, and from their description of the animal, it seems that their statements are correct.

Mr. Garland further states that while photographing in the vicinity of Goat mountain, about 4,000 feet up, he came across a large ram, which stood and looked at him several minutes at a distance of fifty feet, before moving away. Mr. Hollingsworth also had a like experience.

As for mountain goats, they may be found upon almost any mountain of the Parker range, whose elevation is more than 2,500 feet. They are not shy, and it requires the near proximity of man for days before they seek pastures new.

Up around the snow-line, where the thistle and succulent grasses grow, and where the bald peaks give ample space for basking in the warm rays of the summer sun, is where the male members of the genus Capra—the "Toms" or old patriarchs of the flock may be found.

A good pair of field glasses is almost indispensable in goat hunting. By searching out the game before ascending the mountain, and by studying carefully the most advantageous way to scale the cliffs, much time may be saved. After once seeing game it is almost certain to be successfully stalked. A goat will remain on the same peak for days if not disturbed. They are easily approached and will stand and stare stupidly at the hunter, often after being shot at four or five times.

An adult male, or "Tom" as they are called, is much larger than a tame goat, often attaining a weight of 300 to 400 pounds and a height of three and one-half to four feet at the shoulders. Their flesh is rank and coarse, and often very strong. The neck is short and powerfully muscled—much more so proportionately than that of any other ruminant. Its horns are short and curve backwards.

In the female the horns are diminutive and the wool or fur shorter and finer. The fleece is of a silky white in both sexes and is slightly tinged with yellow on the back.

The goat breeds but once a year, though there are exceptions to the rule, and have from one to three kids at a birth. The flesh of the female is much sweeter than that of the male, not possessing the strong hircine scent of the latter, and in many cases is preferable to venison.

Probably the best goat-hunting in the North west, close to or adjacent to salt water, is along the Prince of Wales Reach, Princess Royal Reach and Queen's Reach, in British Columbia. Mount Diadem, 6,056 feet in height; Mt. Cambridge, 5,043; Mt. Frederick Wilhelm, 6,144; Mt. Arthur, 5,591; and the Parker range at the head of Hotham sound, from 5,043 to 6,831 feet in height, are favourite feeding grounds for these animals. These mountains are easily accessible to the sportsman with a stout heart and a stouter pair of legs. Water can usually be found near the tops of all of them, and grouse and deer are also to be found in great numbers.

As to the outfit: First and foremost is necessary a good, substantial pair of well-calked shoes. This is a part of the outfit that should be given particular attention. Hungarian or hobnails are worse than useless, as they only slip on the heather and afford no foothold upon the rocks. To know that you can depend upon your foot-gear when negotiating a dangerous place on the rocks is a great source of confidence. Good climbers have frequently had the nerve taken out of them in a critical place by a badly fitting, poorly calked pair of shoes. A sweater is of much more service than a coat. A coat is a useless encumbrance on a camping trip anyway. Count up the times you wear it, and see how easily one can dispense with it.

Therefore, to sum up, the principal requisites in goat-hunting are: good foot-gear, good warm clothing and a good comrade. The rest comes naturally to the sportsman.

Deer also abound in great numbers in the North-west, and can be found a few hours' drive from Bellingham, Wash., in sufficient numbers to make a good bag an easy matter. The best hunting in the immediate vicinity of that city is to be found on Orcas, Cypress and Guemes islands, but to the sportsman who has the time and the boat, the better way is to cruise up the coast and get the cream of the hunting far from the madding crowd.

Nelson island, Texada, Jervis inlet and Princess Royal Reach are easily reached by sailboat or launch and offer a nearly virgin field for the sportsman. The deer on the islands are small, weighing about 50 to 80 pounds, and are very plentiful. They feed on the salal berries and bushes through the month of September and are generally in good condition. Toward the latter part of the month they shed off their summer coat of reddish-brown and take on a sleek mouse colour. They may be found high up on the mountain side during the day, where they generally lie on some overhanging point, or bed beneath a windfall.

The deer on the mainland may be said to be divided into two classes, viz., the lowland deer, which attain a weight of from 75 to 100 pounds, and are a reddish-brown colour; and the mountain deer, which attain a weight of from 150 to 250 pounds. The latter are of a mouse-colour, and have much shorter legs and heavier barrel than the lowland deer. Their antlers are much larger and during the time when their horns are in the "velvet" they are much easier found, as they seek the open points and avoid brushy places on account of their horns being so tender.

These horns or antlers are fastened to the frontal bone and, according to some authorities, begin to appear toward the end of March. At that season it is said there is a marked determination of blood to the head, the large veins surrounding the frontal bone becomes temporarily enlarged, and the budding antlers grow with great rapidity, the antlers or horns of an adult stag being produced in about eight to twelve weeks.

At first the horns are soft, and are highly sensitive. A buck will lie for days at this season with his head in the open, dreading even the touch of a bush or twig. The horns at this stage are covered with a fine hairy substance called "velvet," and are full of blood. On attaining their full growth a bony ring is formed at the base of the horn which cuts off the blood supply and the horn hardens, when the velvety covering then begins to disappear. The deer at this period will hasten matters by rubbing its horns against trees and rocks. When the rutting season is over the deer again sheds its horns; a new pair, larger and stronger, growing each spring. It is thought that nature provides these animals with antlers as a means of defence and offence during the love season, when they are used in many a hard-fought battle between rival bucks for the possession of does. They make a terrible weapon, and a full-grown buck can strike an awful blow with them.

How many hunters know what the deep cavities are beneath a deer's eye and their uses? It is called the lachrymal sinus or "tearpit," and has a bad-smelling waxy substance secreted therein, but naturalists have never clearly discovered for what purpose nature intended them.

At Pender Harbour a mountain deer was, this season, brought in that weighed 252 pounds. It was killed by a storekeeper of that place, who states that it was the largest of hundreds he had shipped from that place. Mr. Walter Squier, a member of a recent hunting party at Hotham sound also killed a mountain deer which weighed approximately 225 pounds. It required three men to pack him out of the timber.

The wapiti is also found farther back on the mainland of Canada, but it has been driven back so far that it is practically impossible for a cruising party to reach its haunts.

The elk is practically extinct upon the mainland of Canada, but on Vancouver Island, at the north end near Seymour Narrows, are several bands, which are closely guarded by the Canadian authorities. The Provincial Government has also passed a law making it a misdemeanour to kill deer upon Vancouver Island for a certain number of years. So many hunters from this side have made a habit of indiscriminately slaughtering everything they saw on the island that the authorities have passed very stringent laws against non-residents.

A prominent official, connected with the Customs service at Vancouver, in talking over the game situation with visiting sportsmen, remarked: "Come right along boys, we are glad to have you visit us, but don't slaughter the game. Kill what you need; kill what you want, but don't try to exterminate it. There are a few, a very few, I am pleased to say, of the fellows on your side of the line who come up here, shoot at everything they see, and run the balance back so far it keeps anybody else from getting it. Or, if they are fortunate they will kill enough for ten men and take it back home by the boat load. They are the fellows we like to catch. But the average sport who kills only what he can eat and comes for the trip, we like to have 'em."

There is the whole question in a nutshell. Don't make a hog of yourself.

The open season for killing deer on the Canadian side begins 1st September. The license fee for non-residents is $50. The coast is patrolled by game wardens, who closely examine every boat and sportsman they run across. It is against the law to kill a doe at any time on either the island or the mainland, and the bag is limited. It is also illegal to kill the female of a wild goat or to kill a porcupine.

Porcupines are very plentiful and the reason they are protected by law is that they are the only animal whose flesh is good to eat that a man lost in the mountains can kill without a gun. Their flesh tastes somewhat like veal or pork. They live in trees and stumps and are nocturnal in their habits, though they may be found at any hour of the day feeding along old skidroads. They belong to the rodent family and have long hair mixed with their quills, four toes on the front foot and five behind, short flat tail, and when disturbed strike a vicious, sideways blow with the tail, the quills coming off in whatever they strike. They attain a weight of 30 to 40 pounds.

A bear hunt recently in that section is referred to by a writer in the Bellingham Reveille, who says:

"Black bears are also very numerous in most places in the North west. To successfully hunt them one needs a good dog, and as they have to be specially trained, it is not often that a bear is killed. They are wary and have a keen scent, making it almost impossible to stalk them. On a recent trip, right in the heart of a bear country, where the hills were crossed and recrossed by bear trails, we failed to see a single bear. One of the party refused to believe the tracks he saw were bear tracks, and said he didn't believe that there was such an animal in the woods. It is hard for a man to believe his eyes, sometimes.

"A Mississippi farmer, who was seeing his first circus, halted in front of the dromedary's cage and surveyed the beast with mouth agape and eyes popping from his head. The band struck up, the main show started, the people flocked into the main tent, and still he stood entranced, watching the immense hump, the crooked, uncouth limbs, the pendulous lip and immense cloven hoofs. Finally, as he turned away, unsatisfied, he muttered: 'Hell, they ain't no such a animile.'

"And so it was with our bear. For days and days we trod the primrose paths of idle dalliance, waiting and longing for the arrival of the dog-salmon, the harbinger of bruin and his numerous family. But no fish—no bear. We saw much sign, though none was fresh; but still it was bear sign, and with that we had to be satisfied.

"The black bear has forty-two teeth and while its incisors and canines are shaped for a carnivorous diet, its molars are roughened or grooved for the purpose of crushing and grinding vegetable or herbivorous food. It is by choice a vegetarian, and will eat enormous quantities of roots, grass, berries and the succulent stems of the skunk cabbage. They have five toes on each foot and their claws, unlike those of the felines or cat family, are not retractile.

"When the black bear is born it is naked and sightless, and its eyes do not open to the light of day until after a period of four to six weeks has elapsed. They are easily tamed and quite playful.

"In their predatory ramblings bears are not overchoice as to their manner of going, and the luckless hunter who follows a bear trail for an hour or so through devil's club, hemlock thickets and up and down and over and under fallen timber must have the patience of Sisyphus and the muscles of Ajax to come up to his quarry. Although an unwieldly, awkward appearing brute, there is no four-footed animal that can make the time through a Washington jungle that a good healthy black bear can. What he fails to climb over he rides down; and what he can't ride down he squirms over.

"Both the black bear and grizzly bear may be found in considerable numbers in the Parker range and at certain seasons of the year, it is said, they come quite low down on the mountains. The black bear is to be found along the creeks during the spawning time of salmon, and on the points and peaks of some low mountain during berry-time.

"The grizzly or silvertip bear is occasionally met with by the hunter after big game, but their scent is so keen and their hearing so good that they generally detect the presence of the hunter and are gone before he sights them. They grow very large, weighing from 600 to 900 pounds.

"It is stated that when young the grizzly bear is able to climb a tree, and many hunters have told of killing them in small trees, but it has never been verified.

"I realize that in making this statement I am liable to run counter to the pen of the highest authority on bears in the land, but I make this statement offhand, as it were, and without a single fact to bear me out. However, I have been told by old trappers and hunters that grizzly cubs climb trees. It may be that, like Mark Twain's buffalo, they just had to climb a tree. At any rate, I stand open for correction. I am not looking for grizzly bears, anyway."

Grouse in several varieties abound in the mountains. The willow or common grouse may be found everywhere on the lowlands, and higher up the blue grouse are in numbers. They are quite large, weighing from five to seven pounds. Up above the snow line the white grouse or ptarmigan may also occasionally be seen, but they are much scarcer than the two previous species.—Breeder and Sportsman.

CUT CARTRIDGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The following tip, probably known to many of your readers, is rather a good one to know especially if by any chance a sportsman finds himself with only a shot gun in his hand, no ball ammunition, and likely to run into dangerous game. Take an ordinary shot cartridge, any size of shot will do, and with a penknife cut round the case about where the middle of the felt wad is leaving a little piece here and there, which should be only half cut through, to keep the two portions together. This cartridge inserted in a gun and fired, makes a ghastly wound in an animal, as the whole of the upper portion goes out like a bullet. I hit a kakur once with one of these, and though it was a side shot, I blew the two hind-quarters to pieces, which could be seen hanging in shreds behind the animal. I then tried the same plan with a deal plank about three-quarters of an inch thick. The case made a clean hole in the first plank and all the shot (No. 6) were inside a circle of about 10 inches in a second plank, some distance from the first, say eight feet. The plan, however, will not answer if there is no card wad over the felt wad. I do not think that such a projectile is liable to harm the barrels of even a choke bored gun, as only the paper of the case comes in contact with the barrels.

A BIG TSAING.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The following are the measurements of a tsaing or banteng head I recently got up here. Length :—30½ inches, girth 20 inches, tip to tip 20 inches, spread 37⅔ inches. Solitary old bull.

While it is neither first in length or spread it appears from "The Indian Field Shikar Book" to be one of the best all-round heads on record.

I had been out after him three times and hit him once badly, but owing to work, had to leave him and he was finished off by the native shikaris (in self-defence) whom I sent a little later to get khubber of him. The place was Karenni on the eastern bank of the Salween on the border between Siam and Burma.

FISHING QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you or any of your readers suggest any fishing locality to go to in March, April and May in or near the United Provinces. I am going to the Sarda river on 1st March, about 28 miles from Pilibhit, United Provinces, and am uncertain where to go after this or if sport proves bad there. I am not a member of the Doon F. A. or would go there. I know the Surjoo Kumaon hills at Bageswar and it has not given good sport of late years. I thought of going up the Sarda and branching off where Surjoo runs in at Pachesar, but if I could hear of a better place I might go there.

THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY.

One Subscriber writes: "An absolutely indispensable book to all lovers of history." Another says: "Its scholarship and the vast range of its authorities in all languages must commend the work to all intelligent persons."

It is not possible adequately to describe this great new work because no description can do justice to its absorbing interest, its scope, its variety, its authority, its charm or to those features of its plan and contents which ensure its lasting utility. Adjectives are cheap and abundant, but not necessarily convincing. Next to an actual inspection, of a complete set of the volumes themselves, perhaps the best way to help the reader of this notice to comprehend the nature of the work, is to give a bold outline of its principal features, such as the following:—

A Specimen Volume upon Application.

The offer of the work in this country is made in the conviction that it will most admirably meet the wants of a large number of Anglo-Indians and the better educated Indians. It is a work any one of whose volumes will exactly suit the man who craves the delight of that intellectual companionship that is inseparable from the reading of good books. It is a work that affords endless enjoyment for the occasional reader, or for the man who can give only the half hour before dinner to a book that will repay him. The long Indian day and the isolation of station life will be made brighter with these well-stored volumes at hand in which the reader may roam at will over the whole world or by the aid of which he may review or enlarge his historical studies of an earlier day.

In order to introduce the work quickly, "THE TIMES" will send a complete Specimen Volume to any responsible person, postage paid, for delivery to his address and return to us. The only obligation the applicant will incur is to take reasonable care of the book and to despatch it to us within seven days.

LUCKNOW SECOND EXTRA MEETING.

Thursday, the 30th January 1908.

As a prelude to the Spring Meeting, the racing to-day was entirely successful. The weather was at one time threatening, but it cleared up, although clouds remained overhead. The programme consisted of seven events, and there was a capital afternoon's sport. The Pony Hurdles resolved itself into a match, while in the Horse Hurdles Nell Gwynne scored a run-away victory, after leading throughout. It is not often that one witnesses such a close race as that furnished by the Charbagh Plate, in which a short head divided the first three. Mr. C. Murray's Imtyas was regarded as an outsider by backers, who had apparently forgotten his performance at the last meeting. The race was a picturesque one, three of the four candidates being greys. The Stewards wisely overruled the objection lodged against Imtyas on the ground that the trainer, Skelton, did not possess a license. Those who made it were apparently not aware that there is no rule in India that a man should have a license to train.

The biggest field on the afternoon turned out for the Bibiapur Plate, and Captain Burch—whose starting throughout was admirable—took some time to get them away, S. S. being left at the post in the process. Here, again, an outsider secured the spoils, Fraser, on Devon, making his effort too late. Trenayr and Highland Fling were about equally backed in the next race, the latter winning easily. Cracker justified the anticipations of his backers in the Mahomed Bagh Plate and Colonel Abud's Musket won a good race in the Benarsi Plate.

There was a large gathering on the course, including Sir John and Lady Hewett, and His Highness the Koer Sahib of Patiala the latter of whom experienced somewhat bad luck with his candidates.

THE PONY HURDLES.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 75 to the second, and Rs. 25 to the third. A high-weight handicap for ponies. 1¼ miles over 6 flights of hurdles.

BETTING: Evens Commander, 2 to 1 agst. Nettle, 4 to 1 Thuyyar, 6 to 1 Imtyas.

Time—1min. 7⅘secs.

An objection was lodged owing to the trainer of Imtyas having without a license, but was over-ruled.

THE BIBIAPUR PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 75 to the second, and Rs. 25 to the third. A handicap for English and Australasian ponies 14-1 and under and C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under. 5 furlongs.

First Day, Saturday, the 1st February.

THE opening day of the Lucknow Spring Meeting was ushered in with very threatening weather, but, fortunately, though the afternoon remained cloudy, the rain forebore to fall. The elements, however, did not deter a vast assembly from patronising the racing and both enclosures were filled, the gathering being quite up to what one has in the past associated with the Civil Service Meeting. The day was a pronounced success from every standpoint. There was a formidable card of eight events, though scratchings were a little too much in evidence. Mr. Banting's Lady Vera and Son of a Gun were scratched, presumably as a protest against the severity of the handicapping and the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, who was present to-day, also withdrew Kitcon, the top-weight in the Maiden Plate. Mr. Fell's Chance, after winning the opening event, appeared again in the last race, which he also won—surely a creditable performance. J. Trenoweth was up on both occasions.

The Closed Pony Chase proved a very interesting race. It was run in open order, Ruislip, Companion and Perquisite leading in turn, the latter, well ridden by Mr. Charrington, winning a well-judged race. The G. S.'s had their opportunity in the Lucknow Military Handicap Chase, which followed. The entries for this numbered twelve, but actually only five were left in. General Sir E. Locke Elliot, had Look Out running, but the horse most fancied was Mr. W. T. Miles' Chassepot, ridden by his owner. The race was as pretty a one as could be wished. Look Out held a substantial lead at one time, which it was clear he could not maintain. The field closed up more or less at the last hurdle and the finish lay between Mr. Annesley on Baron Athel and Mr. Charrington on Wales, the former winning what was a splendid race. The only untoward incident of the day occurred in this event, Sinbad falling when half-way round and returning home across country. Mr. Leach, fortunately, escaped with nothing more severe than a shaking and was presently able to walk back.

The Koer Sahib of Patiala's Mallinyook was expected to win the Stewards' Cup and was accordingly rubbed off the slate. He came in most easily. Flotsam secured second place but had to forego it, as his jockey did not weigh in. After this race Mr. E. S. Deane, the new Clerk of the Scales and Course put up two of Captain McNeill's horses, White Heather and Colonel, to auction. There was a large gathering round the unsaddling enclosure, but the highest bids were Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 7,000 respectively and as this was below the reserve price both horses were withdrawn.

Jeddah was greatly fancied for the Great Oudh Handicap but this was annexed by Avatar after a close race with Dilerjong, a former Army Cup winner. The Maharaja of Cooch Behar's Coin II.—a Civil Service Cup candidate—won the Maiden Plate somewhat easily and Mr. Borton's Cracker scored a runaway victory in the Outram Plate.

The special trains run by the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway have brought in a number of sportsmen to Lucknow who are bent on having an enjoyable time. The opening day was consequently a great success. The honours were done by the I.C.S. and the Durham Light Infantry who had tents on the ground, the band of the Durham's providing the music.

THE MARTINIERE PLATE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap for Arab ponies 14-3 and under. 1¼ mile.

Second Day, Monday, the 3rd February

GLORIOUS weather greeted patrons of the sport of kings on Civil Service Cup Day and the prospect of some unusually interesting racing probably accounted for the splendid attendance. The stands and enclosures were filled by a gay and animated crowd, which included members of the Civil Service from all parts of the provinces and visitors from Bombay and Calcutta who had turned up to see the big event of the meeting. There were probably twice as many motor cars as have ever been seen at previous meetings and several regimental drags were in evidence. The police had their hands full in regulating the enormous carriage traffic, and it is to their credit that no complaints were heard on this score.

The rain which fell on Saturday night benefited the course immensely. There was a long array of bookmakers in the first and second enclosures, who gave generous prices, and the racing was marked by very open issues. The totalisators, too, were well patronised. Winners were easy to find in one or two of the events, but there is no doubt that the public were badly hit over the day as a whole, this in spite of the fact that the second favourite came in in the Cup Race. Quite half-a-dozen, out of a field of twelve, were backed to win in the big event, and a good deal of money must have been lost on Circus Girl, which re-gained its place as first favourite as the result of heavy backing just before the race.

18, Temple Chambers, LONDON, E.C.

There was a card of seven events, the first on the programme being the Club Plate, in which only four faced the starter, the event being won by the second favourite Rubrette, after leading from start to finish. Four also contested the closed Arab Plate, which was secured by a rank outsider, His Lordship whose merits apparently were not known. There were nine entries for the Pony Hurdles, but the field dwindled down to three and thereby lost much of its interest. Mr. Tomkinson, however, rode a capital race on Mr. J. D Scott's Lady Viola, beating Northmore on Irish by three lengths after a rattling finish.

The Maharaja of Cooch Behar scratched Kileen for the Civil Service Cup race, as she was not able to carry the 10st. 5lb. assigned to her, and Mr. J. D. Scott's Lady Midget was also scratched. This left a field of twelve. The paddock was thronged during the inspection of the candidates and it was generally noticed that Fabius was looking the fittest of the lot. The race was probably the closest of its kind ever witnessed. Every horse was extended to the full and they came up the straight in very close order. Circus Girl, when two hundred yards from home, looked as if nothing would beat her, but Fabius, who held a good position throughout, shot out of the rack at the finish and won, in memorable style by a head.

The winner is a bay English horse, five years old, and has achieved some remarkable performances during its two years on the turf out here. Last season Fabius ran five times, winning two races, and securing second place on the other three occasions. This season, curiously enough, the horse has also run five times, and has secured first place on each occasion, finishing up by securing the much-coveted Civil Service Cup race. He won a five furlong race at Umballa in October last, a 1,000 yards race carrying 10st. 2lb. at Meerut in November; a ¼ mile at the Lucknow Autumn meeting, with 8st. 10lb. on his back, a 5 furlong race at the Lahore Christmas Races, carrying 10st. 9lb. and the present Cup race, in which he carried 8-0. He was favourite at one time, but weight of one made Circus Girl favourite at the start. Fabius is the property of that sporting officer Major Popham Young, and was trained at Umballa by Beedham, who took him over in October.

Owing to the close order in which the first six finished, and the similarity in colours which might have been avoided, The Point was placed third, but this was subsequently reversed by the Stewards, who gave third place to Matin Bell.

The other events lacked interest after the Cup Race, and moreover, they were won somewhat easily, particularly in the February Plate, in which Kathleen literally ran away from her field. Eileen secured second place in this event, thus justifying the Maharaja of Cooch Behar's action in not running her in the Cup Race.

Sir John and Lady, Hewett Miss Hewett and a large party from Government House, including Major Gordon, Private Secretary and Captain Chamnick, A.-D.-C were present, also Sir Edward and Lady Locke Elliot and their house party, which included Count Gremont.

Lavish hospitality was dispensed on the course, the I. C. S., Royal Dragoons and R.A.M.C. being "at home" The band of the Royals played a charming programme of music.

THE CLUB PLATE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A Handicap for all horses. 7 furlongs.

There was a delay of several minutes at the barrier, but when the gate finally went up, the field got off to a fine start. The Point immediately took up the running, with Fortune holding a good position on the inside, and Son-of-a-Gun, Wal and Hooded Monk well up. This was the position until the half-mile post, where Son-of-a-Gun showed ahead, with The Point, Fortune and Matin Bell in attendance. At the quarter mile Circus Girl, Fabius and Devon improved their position, and then Circus Girl, finely ridden, drew to the front and looked all over a winner, when Fabius, shot out and gaining on the leader at every step, won on the post by a head; a head divided second and third, and there was a similar distance between third and fourth. Time—1min. 18⅘secs.

The Totalisator paid Rs. 24.

The Judge placed The Point third, but the Stewards subsequently decided that the third place had been secured by Matin Bell, with The Point fourth.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE first round ties in the competition proper of the Football Association Challenge Cup were played on Saturday under conditions that were both good and bad. The keen frost of the three previous days had made the grounds hard as adamant, and the surface was in many instances so slippery that players found it extremely difficult to keep their feet, even when shod with rubber-studded boots. Further, there was a natural shrinking from what is known as heavy, robust work, of the kind that is so frequently seen in cup ties, and which is so characteristic of old-boy football. Generally, one of the charms of games in a knock-out competition is that the players forsake the cool, calculating methods of league football, and give up a type of the kind of play furnished in an inter-'Varsity contest—strong, resolute, dashing, and good, heavy charging. Well, there was not a great deal of this on Saturday because of the conditions, and reports to hand show that in not a few cases the fare served up was not of appetising order. It was better, perhaps, to err on the side of ultra-carefulness, and it speaks volumes for the self-restraint of the players that 64 teams should be in opposition, and the casualties should be so few. Those who are so fond of denouncing the professionals, and especially of imputing to them a constant desire to wilfully injure opponents by their foul play, should take note of this fact. Appended are Saturdays results:—

A glance at the results reveals what an enormous advantage it is to have the right to play at home. In the first round last season only 19 games were settled on 12th and 15th January were drawn. Sixteen home clubs were then successful. On Saturday, 24 ties were decided, and eight games were drawn, but of the 24 that were settled, only five visiting teams won. A Southern League club beat a Second Division Football League at Burnley, while at Luton this position of affairs were reversed. Northampton were knocked out on their own ground by another Southern League club, Crystal Palace triumphed over Coventry City, and Portsmouth gave Hastings and St. Leonards their conge. No wonder that clubs are anxious to come out first in the draw. There were nine First Division League teams away from home on Saturday, and not one returned with a win to their credit. It is true that in four instances defeat was averted, but was there anything remarkable in Preston North End preventing Brighton and Hove gaining the winning point, looking at the form the latter have been showing? Does it add lustre to Manchester City that they could not do better than draw at Glossop? Sheffield United, who have played a brilliant part in the struggles for possession of the Blue Riband of the football world, had to be content with the right to meet Swindon on another day, and the Wiltshire team are certainly not regarded as among the stars of the first magnitude in the football firmament. It is a performance of great merit for Birmingham to escape defeat at the Hawthorns, but how much more so for Hull City to deny victory to Woolwich Arsenal, and Grimsby Town to Bristol City.

Some of the mighty have indeed fallen. Among the clubs which have said good-bye to the competition are four previous winners—Nottingham Forest, Tottenham Hotspur, Blackburn Rovers, and Sheffield Wednesday, the present holders. On the other hand, cup-winners who will take part in the second round include Aston Villa, Everton, Bury, and Notts County, while quite an unusual number of successful finalists were interested in the undecided ties—West Bromwich Albion Wolverhampton Wanderers, Sheffield United, Manchester City, and Preston North End.

What are the sensations of the first round, so far as the ties have been definitely decided? Looking at all the results, Southampton may claim to have accomplished the best performance. It was a tremendous task to meet Burnley at Turf Moor, and it was a really splendid performance to beat them by the odd goal in three. The most sensational result, however, was the overthrow of Sheffield Wednesday by two clear goals at Norwich, by the Southern League team. Such a result is almost stupefying. Then, again, look at New Brompton's defeat of Sunderland, at Gillingham, by three goals to one. It is the finest thing the Bromptonians have done—writing from memory—and they may well await the draw with confidence. Fulham are not regarded as a cup-fighting team, and yet they go to Luton and beat the Southern Leaguers by eight goal to three! Luton have indeed retrogressed, and this smashing overthrow must have filled their cup of humiliation to the brim. Fulham were out to win, and they played in just that style which they have shown on too few occasions this season, when they would hold their own with the best combination in the country. Most critics thought Crystal Palace would win at Coventry, and there is not anything startling about the 4—2 victory, and the same remark applies to the success of Bristol Rovers at Northampton. The battle between the League and the Southern League is a draw so far, but when outstanding ties have been decided the chances are that the League will have the better of the deal.

There is no need to dwell upon the respective ties. The fact has been established that there is no waning of the interest of the general public in the competition, for in spite of the powerful counter attraction of skating crowds rolled up in their thousands, and plunked down their sixpences, shillings, and half-crowns with the utmost cheerfulness. It was too much, perhaps, to hope that an amateur team would figure in the second round, but neither Woking nor Stockton have any reason to regret the form they showed or the fight they put up. They both created a favourable impression, and made an honourable exit from the competition. What a pity that a club like the Corinthians should not take part in the contest. The Pilgrims cannot, but the Corinthians might, assuming, of course, they acknowledged the jurisdiction of the F.A., and altered their club rules, which at present do not permit them to take part in ordinary competition football. Reference is made above to the fact that many stalwarts of previous seasons have thus early had to take a reluctant leave of the Cup, and one regrets, especially as a Southerner, the retirement of Tottenham Hotspur and Millwall. Such, however, is luck, and one must look to Southampton, the Rangers, Plymouth, Portsmouth, Bristol Rovers, Chelsea, and others to uphold the prestige of the South in the exciting struggle that will soon be upon us.

REPLAYED TIES.

Carlisle United	...	3	Brentford ...	...	1
Grimsby ...	...	2	Bristol City ...	...	1
Wolverhampton Wan.	...	1	Bradford City ...	...	0
West Bromwich Albion	...	2	Birmingham ...	...	1
Manchester City	...	6	Glossop ...	...	0

Five of the eight drawn ties in the first round of the Association Cup were replayed on Wednesday, and the results afforded more surprises than occurred in the whole thirty-two matches on Saturday. Two clubs suffered defeat at home two League Division I. teams lost to opponents belonging to the Second Division and Brentford had to admit defeat at Griffin Park from Carlisle United, who alone in the second stage of the competition will represent football outside the three leading professional tournaments just mentioned. Birmingham's reverse at St. Andrews from West Bromwich Albion, if unexpected after their ability to hold their own at the Hawthorns, was only in keeping with the many remarkable matches played between clubs of the immediate district ever since Association football became a popular sport. Bristol City had no special cause to fear their visit to Grimsby, but were beaten on their merits. At Hyde Road, Manchester, the Glossop eleven quite failed to reproduce their form of Saturday, the City team winning in the easiest fashion by 6 goals. This was the one instance of a one-sided game, but only at Brentford was extra time necessary, and there Carlisle United, showing superior staying power, deserved their success. As the outcome of these matches the First Division of the League has ten clubs, and the Second Division and the Southern League nine each in the second round.

Brighton and Hove A.	...	2	Preston North End	...	1
Hull City	...	4	Woolwich Arsenal	...	0
Swindon ...	...	3	Sheffield Utd.	...	2

Even more surprising than the results recorded in the replayed ties on Wednesday were those arrived at yesterday. While some doubt existed as to whether Woolwich Arsenal, having failed to dispose of the chances of Hull City at Plumstead last Saturday, would prove equal to the task of beating the Yorkshire club at Hull, everything suggested that Sheffield United would triumph over Swindon at Bramall Lane, and equal confidence was felt in the ability of Preston North End to overcome Brighton and Hove Albion at Deepdale. Not only did the Arsenal go down badly before Hull City, but, after an extra half hour's football at Sheffield, Swindon snatched a victory over Sheffield United, and at Preston, where also extra time had to be played, the Brighton team were leading North End by 2 to 1 when, with only a few minutes left, the referee stopped the game owing to fading light. In this last instance the opposing clubs will accordingly have to meet a third time, the rules of the competition providing that if from any cause a match is not completed, it must be replayed the full time of one hour and a half. With this one exception, the first round of the Association Cup is now complete, the First League, the Second League, and the Southern League furnishing ten representatives apiece to the second round, and the other clubs being Carlisle United, and, of course, either Preston North End or Brighton and Hove Albion. In the replays the First Leaguers have fared badly, three being knocked out by Second Division clubs and one by a Southern League team, only Manchester City of the six drawing on Saturday having so far pulled through.

RUGBY RULES.

WITH the grounds frost-bound, Rugby football on Saturday was out of the question. Thanks to the precautions that had been taken at Exeter, Devon and Somerset managed to bring off their match, the former county winning after a capital game by 2 goals and 2 tries to 3 tries. Somerset thus have lost all their engagements in the competition, while Devon have gained two victories as against one defeat. The match between Cornwall and Gloucestershire had to be postponed, and until that fixture has been decided the question of supremacy in the south-west remains undecided. Devon, who last season divided the championship honours with Durham, can only come in again in the event of Gloucestershire being beaten. The Durham-Cumberland match also had to be postponed, and this is particularly unfortunate, as so far Durham have only played one game—against Yorkshire—and there is a danger of the competition being a protracted affair. It would be well if Durham could arrange to play more games earlier in the season.

ENGLAND VS. NEW ZEALAND (Northern Union Rules).—One of the finest games of the season was the outcome of this match at Wigan on Saturday. The ground had been protected from the frost, and was in splendid condition, being dry and firm, with the result that a game brimful of interest was witnessed. At the outset England, though losing the toss, quite outplayed the Colonials, and three minutes from the start strong forward work led up to Eccles being served from the loose, and the Yorkshireman dashed over at the corner, Turtill making a vain attempt to collar him. Ferguson failed at goal, and though Messenger made a big effort for the visitors, England soon attacked again, and after Eccles had been bundled in touch, misfielding by Rowe led up to Lomas gaining possession, once again in the loose, and, transferring to Ferguson, passed to Padbury, who scored between the posts after ten minutes' play. The English captain easily placed a goal, and the visitors, who by no means appeared to put in all they knew, were still hard pressed. Leytham was twice tackled near the line, and then the visitors displayed something like their real form. A bewildering and clever series of exchanges took place between Rowe, Smith, Todd, and R. Wynyard, with the result that the last-named scored a brilliant try from which Messenger placed a goal. Succeeding play with both teams thoroughly wound up was fast and exciting. The Colonials exhibited fine combination, but met with a stubborn defence, the tackling on both sides being deadly in the extreme. Beetham and Taylor were responsible for fine individual efforts, and Leytham and Lomas both failed to place penalty goals for infringements in the pack. At half-time the scores were—England, 1 goal 2 tries (8 points); New Zealand, 1 goal 1 try (5 points).

On resuming the New Zealanders started in spirited fashion. Smith and Messenger were in great form on the left wing, and lightning passing between the pair saw the Australian crack held up right on the line. Taylor was a great stumbling-block to the Colonials, who were playing desperately, and Messenger ultimately dashed through and enabled R. Wynyard to score his try seven minutes after the resumption. No goal resulted from the place, and with the scores level play waxed fast. The English forwards wheeled several packs in fine style, and though Wrigley once saved his side, Firman snapping a pass from Wallace, cleared all opposition before serving Leytham for the last-named to dash over at the corner. Ferguson made a good but unsuccessful attempt at goal, and maintaining the attack England had very hard lines. Leytham was knocked into touch near the line, and Eccles actually got over, only to be hurled into touch in goal. These incidents were succeeded by a New Zealand revival. Smith and Messenger between them again all but penetrated the home defence, and their efforts led up to Rowe scoring from Wrigley's pass. The latter failed to improve, and then a brilliant run by Todd led up to England being penalised right in front of the posts. Messenger, however, failed to give the visitors the lead from the place kick, and England attacked strongly. Leytham kicked a fine goal from a free kick awarded for an infringement, and immediately afterwards dilatory tactics by Wrigley in failing to touch down resulted in Lomas dashing up and completing a try under the bar. The Salford skipper easily placed a goal, and with the New Zealand forwards apparently outclassed England had the match at her mercy. However, after Hogg had almost scored, the visitors made a tremendous effort in the closing stages. They passed the ball with wonderful precision, and with the home defence at sea owing to the rapid transfers, Byrne ran in under the posts, and, with Messenger placing a goal, only two points separated the teams. Excitement ruled intense

SKATING.

AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.

THE title of Amateur Champion, and with it the King's Cup, has at last been wrested from Fenland. Mr. Albert Tebbit, of Wentworth, who has held the championship for thirteen years, was on Monday, on Lingay Fen, beaten by two Northamptonshire men, Messrs. F. W. Dix and H. C. Hudson, the former carrying off the championship in the record time of 4mins. 37-2/5secs. Hudson in the final was only 3/5secs., behind the winner. Tebbit's best time was 4mins. 40secs. It was a victory for youth, Dix being ten years younger than Tebbit.

Never in the history of the National Skating Association has so much interest been taken in the championship, and never has the race been run under more favourable conditions. The ice was perfect, the sun shone with brilliance, and there was not sufficient wind to interfere with the skaters. All four who qualified for the final broke the previous record of 5mins. 10secs. established by Tebbit. Results:

First Round.—Heat 1: St. G. Ashe, Cambridge, 5mins. 27secs., 1; W. A. Ball, Cambridge, 2. Heat 2: W. Hawkins, Bedford, 5mins. 24secs., 1; H. A. Green, Newchesterton, 5mins. 37secs., 2. Heat 3: F. G. Christmas, Cambridge, 5mins. 13-3/5secs., 1; H. J. Graves, Cottenham, 5mins. 38secs., 2. Heat 4: F. W. Dix, Raunds, 4mins. 37-2/5secs., 1; C. F. Morley, Cambridge, 4mins. 55secs., 2. Heat 5: A. E. Tebbitt, Wentworth, 4mins. 57secs., 1; H. Searle, Waterbeach, 5mins. 15secs., 2. Heat 6: W. Shepperton, Whittlesea, 5mins. 20-4/5secs., 1; H. Gautrey, Cottenham, 2. Heat 7: H. C. Hudson, Northampton, 4mins. 49-3/5secs., 1; H. Collier, Leigh, Lancashire, 5mins. 3-2/5secs., 2. Heat 8: C. Lucas, Kettering, 5mins. 34-2/5secs., 1; B. Lucas, Kettering, 2. D. Lucas, Kettering, started on a bye, but did not complete the distance.

Final Round.—Heat 1: A. E. Tebbit, 4mins. 40secs., 1; C. F. Morley, 4mins. 57secs., 2. The pace at which Tebbit started promised faster time than he accomplished in the first round. For half the first straight Morley held him, but Tebbit gradually left him, and was 50 yards in advance at three-quarters of a mile. The leader's time was then 2mins. 16secs., or one second slower than Dix's time in the first round. Finishing strongly, Tebbit accomplished the good time of 4mins. 40secs. Heat 2: F. W. Dix, 4mins. 37-2/5secs., 1; J. H. C. Hudson, 4mins. 58secs., 2. This was the best race of the day. Dix beat the pistol by a yard or two and went away with a slight lead. Hudson, however, hung on to him the whole way. The half distance was covered in 2mins. 16secs., two seconds faster than Tebbit. The last turn was taken with Dix holding a slight advantage, and in an exciting finish the Raunds man won by about five yards. The final placings were:

H. C. Hudson (Northampton)	2
A. E. Tebbit (Wentworth)	3
C. F. Morley (Cambridge)	4

The King's Cup was presented to Mr. Dix by Dr. G. Cunningham amid scenes of great enthusiasm.

PROFESSIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.

The thaw which set in on Monday night was not sufficiently rapid to prevent the British professional championship being brought off on Tuesday on Lingay Fen. By hurrying through the programme a successful day's racing was concluded before the ice gave way to any extent.

When the first round was commenced the ice was in very good condition, though a trifle soft, and having a slight covering of water. As there was no wind fast times were expected, but none of the professionals equalled the record Mr. Dix, the amateur champion, set up the previous day. The champion, Fred Ward, of Whaplode, who was successful in 1905, appeared to defend his title against a very formidable set of aspirants. Among them was J. Bates, the Lancashire skater, who was champion in 1902; Walter Housden, of Upware; and several younger men. Of the comparative youngsters, S. Greenhall, of Landbeach, Cambridgeshire, and J. W. Strickson, of Yaxley, were looked upon with much favour. As in the case of the amateur championship youth beat advancing age.

The holder, though still possessing great stamina, is much slower in starting than of yore, and his rate of striking is laboured as compared with that of Greenhall, whose form and speed exceeded all expectations. He is one of the prettiest skaters the Fens have ever produced. In the first round he accomplished the fastest time of the day—viz., 4mins. 48-1/5secs.—and in the final was matched against the holder of the championship. Ward was no match for the younger man, who, leading from the commencement, won with great ease.

First Round.—Heat 1: H. Searle, Waterbeach, 5mins. 35secs., 1; R. Broom, Cambridge, 5mins. 34-1/5secs., 2. Heat 2: S. Greenhall, Landbeach, 4mins. 48-1/5secs., 1; J. W. Strickson, Yaxley, 5mins. 8secs., 2. Heat 3: B. Housden, Upware, 5mins. 14secs., 1; W. Stawes, Manea, 5mins. 22-1/5secs., 2. Heat 4: J. Bates, Leigh, Lancs., 5mins. 3-1/5secs., 1; W. Housden, Upware, 5mins. 4secs., 2. Heat 5: Fred Ward, Whaplode, 5mins. 2secs., 1; J. Wells, Isleham, 5mins. 17secs., 2. Heat 6: R. Wells, Isleham, 5mins. 9-4/5secs., 1; P. Tyrell, Spalding, 5mins. 37-2/5secs., 2.

Final Round.—Heat 1: W. Housden, 4mins. 57-2/5secs., 1; J. Bates, 5mins. 0-3/5secs., 2. Housden won the toss, and thereby materially improved his chance. The men got away to a level start, and along the first straight they kept close company. The turn gave Housden the advantage, which he retained to the end, winning by 15 yards. Heat 2: S. Greenhall, 4mins. 45secs., 1; Fred Ward, 5mins. 5-1/5secs., 2. Greenhall was very smart in starting, but Ward got away slowly. By the time both had got fairly into their stride Greenhall was leading by five yards. He went further away at every stroke, and at three-quarters of a mile had increased his lead to 50 yards. More than twice that distance separated the men at the conclusion. The final placings were:

W. Housden, Upware	2
J. Bates, Leigh, Lancs	3
Fred Ward, Whaplode	4

ROWING.

THE UNIVERSITY BOAT RACE.

CAMBRIDGE.

DULL and mild weather was associated with the practice of the Light Blues yesterday, and the work was witnessed by a large crowd. The chief feature was the advent of H. G. Baynes, the famous heavy-weight Blue, who has not touched an oar since last summer, who took the place of Kitching, who had rowed from the first afternoon. Thompson, last year's spare man, who occupied a seat on the first day, returned to No. 3. The amended order was:—

	st.	lb.
G. E. Fairbairn (Jesus) (bow)	11	3
F. G. Hudson (Jesus)	12	4
G. L. Thompson (Trinity Hall)	12	6½
C. J. W. Henslow (Lady Margaret) ...	12	7
H. G. Baynes (First Trinity)	14	3
E. G. Williams (Third Trinity)	13	1
O. A. Carver (First Trinity)	12	9½
F. H. Jerwood (Jesus) (stroke)	11	10
R. Boyle (Trinity Hall) (cox)	8	8

There was no practice during the morning, but on assembling early after the mid-day meal Mr. Bushe Fox had out in the gig Thomson and Henslow and Baynes and Williams. Mr. Stuart meanwhile advised Carver and Jerwood and Fairbairn. At the completion of these proceedings the men embarked, and travelled to Baitsbite and back. On the return journey they paddled over the Bridge-to-Bridge course. Mr. L. H. K. Bushe Fox coached, and was accompanied by the president (Mr. E. W. Powell) and Mr. D. C. R. Stuart.

BOXING.

WORLD'S FEATHER-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.

APPENDED are details of the fight for the feather-weight championship of the world at San Francisco on New Year's Day, between Owen Moran of Birmingham and Abe Attell the American Champion.

The little men, according to "The World," are the fastest boxers of their size in the world, and the contest was a long series of feints, rushes, and blows that were at times so quickly executed that the spectators at the ring-side could not follow them. Both men were so extremely clever at the game they were indulging in that at the end neither had sustained any serious damage, and the decision rendered by James J. Jeffries was a popular one.

At times during the contest it looked to the spectators as if one or the other of the fighters would succeed in landing a knock-out but in every instance the tide of battle changed and honours were even. In the first round the fighters felt each other out, and there was little real fighting. Each showed remarkable footwork and ability in blocking punches. In the second round both men missed many blows, not because the punches were not well aimed, but because of the great cleverness of the target at which they were sent.

In the long period of fighting not one knock down was scored. Once Moran slipped to his knees, but he was up in a flash and fighting hard. In the twelfth round the Englishman landed a heavy swing to Attell's jaw, and the American fighter staggered. It looked for an instant as if he were beaten, but when the little Birmingham boy stepped swiftly in to finish his work he was brought up suddenly with a jolt in the face that jarred him from the top of his head to the soles of his feet. Several times the giant referee had to pull the little fighters apart at the end of some particularly fast round, when they either did not hear the bell, or hearing, did not heed it.

Every seat in the arena was occupied, and the crowd was a record-breaking one. Moran had some little difficulty in making the weight, and when he stepped on the scales at 11-30 A.M., he weighed about an ounce more than 8st. 8lb., the weight that the articles called for. Attell claimed a forfeit of £300, and threatened to call the fight off if he was not allowed his point. He finally agreed to accept £50.

First Round.—Attell feinted and missed with light left. Moran ducked and Attell hooked him on the temple with the left. They clinched, and Moran got in a right on the ribs. Attell tried a right for the jaw, and Moran ducked and clinched. Attell missed a left hook, and Moran put in two straight lefts on the face. They clinched, and Attell used left face jolts. He then freed his right and bumped in right uppercuts. Attell jabbed the face with two straight lefts, sending Moran's head back. Both led short with lefts and clinched. Attell got in a stiff left jolt on the face just before the bell.

Fifth Round.—Attell shot his left to the face. Moran closed in on him, and some sharp in-fighting followed, in which the Englishman scored with his right to the head. Attell landed hard on the face with a fast left, and they clinched. Attell missed with a hard right cross, and they went to close range work, but neither could land successfully. Attell put a hard left to the head, and then uppercut viciously with a right to the jaw. For the first time in the battle Referee Jeffries had to pry the men out of a clinch. Attell drove his left to the jaw, and then shot a hard right to the face. The bell sounded, but the men kept on fighting and had to be dragged apart.

Sixth Round.—Attell began with two vicious lefts to the jaw. He dropped back and then shot two wicked lefts to the body. Breaking out of the clinch that followed, Moran swung two hard rights to the body. Attell had a shade the best so far, but Moran was strong and eager. Moran rushed Attell to the ropes, but Attell's wonderful footwork enabled him to wriggle out of danger unharmed. Moran swung a hard right to the body, but he took a vicious left on the jaw in exchange. Moran swung a right and left hard on the body, and drove Attell back as the bell came.

Seventh Round.—Moran rushed madly from his corner and chased Attell around the ring. Attell stopped and swung the right on the jaw, and then jabbed his left to the face as Moran stopped. Abe wriggled away from several vicious onslaughts of the Briton, who charged him again and again. He stabbed Moran's face with lefts and danced away. Moran slipped to his knees after one of the left hooks that Attell shot to his jaw, but he was up in a twinkling. Moran began jabbing and reached Attell's face with a couple of fast ones, and suddenly swung both hands to the jaw. Attell wobbled and covered up, falling into a clinch. It was practically an even round.

Eighth Round.—Attell opened the round with a left lead that landed on Moran's chest, and they immediately went into a tight clinch. Attell came back with a left swing to the head. He then sent Moran's head back with a straight left. It was a tame and even round.

Ninth Round.—Attell swung his right to the head, and took a similar punch with interest in exchange. They exchanged straight lefts to the face, and Moran forced Abe to the ropes. He could not land cleanly in the rush. Moran suddenly began jabbing viciously, and repeatedly sent Attell's head back with vicious pokes. Attell evened it up with a right to the jaw. Attell forced his man to the ropes, and they wrestled to the centre of the ring, the round ending in a clinch.

Twelfth Round.—Abe tried a double punch, but was cleverly blocked. Moran floundered while rushing, and went into the ropes. Attell used both hands before the English boy could straighten up. Moran covered his face and danced away laughing. They fought fiercely for a spell. Attell getting the neater work in the clinches. Moran whipped the right across and caught Abe fairly in the jaw. They clinched and Moran's backers shouted uproariously. Moran's right-hander was the best punch so far. Abe, in the clinch, gave Owen short arm lefts in the mouth and brought blood.

Sixteenth Round.—Abe tried with a left. Abe got away from a left swing and clinched. Moran ducked from an overhand right and clinched, drumming on the ribs with the right. Moran blocked two left body blows and hooked Attell on the mouth. Abe tried again with the overhand right, and Moran ducked safely. Abe got there with a left facer and Moran blocked a body right. Abe caught a left swing on the elbow and saved his ribs. He took a right swing on the other elbow. Both were fighting hard and blocking well. Moran rushed his man to the ropes, getting home a high left on the cheek at the bell.

Twenty-second Round.—Moran blocked Abe's right for the jaw. Moran rushed Abe to the ropes, and they clinched until Jeff broke them apart. Moran scored a left facer, and they clinched again. Abe was chewing his gum and taking things easy. He put in a straight left to the face. Moran fought him to the ropes with body punches. Abe straightened up with his body outside the upper ropes, and Moran still punched at him. Jeff went to Abe's rescue, and pulled them back into fighting posture. Abe got home on the body with both hands, and then Moran swung a left into the stomach. They were in a mix-up when the gong sounded.

Twenty-third Round.—They went into a clinch, Moran using a freer fashion. Abe rushed Moran and hit him with a right. They clinched again. Both scored with straight lefts, and Moran got in a left swing on the ear. Attell was there with a very light left on the face, and they clinched. Abe shot over a left facer, and another clinch followed, Jeff separating them.

Twenty-fifth Round and last.—Attell came to the centre of the ring for the final round smiling and chewing his gum. Moran rushed and shot his left to the body. Abe clinched. On the break Moran tried to get in a right, but this was blocked, and Attell shot a left to the chin. Moran rushed Attell to the ropes and landed twice on the head, but the blows were not hard enough to hurt. Attell stood off and jabbed the Englishman three times on the chin. The round ended with the men fighting furiously at close quarters.

THE 15TH HUSSARS' CUP.

FIRST ROUND.

THE first round in the Lucknow Open Polo Tournament for the Cup presented by the 15th Hussars was played off on Friday, the 31st January, the function marking the opening day of the Civil Service Week. Six teams have entered.

In the first game between the Lucknow Gymkhana and the Durham Light Infantry, the former had the best of the play until near the close, but the eighth chukker saw both teams level. An additional chukker was played, when the Durham Light Infantry emerged victors by six goals to five.

Some magnificent play was witnessed in the second game between the holders of the cup, the Rifle Brigade, and the 15th Hussars. The Rifles had swifter ponies and their shooting was more accurate. It was a Titanic struggle, in which the better side won by a margin of six goals to four. The Rifle Brigade received many felicitations on their victory.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CIVIL vs. THE MILITARY.—For this return match in the Eden Gardens the Military had got together a very strong all round eleven, and after some very indifferent cricket by the home team, which was not a good one, won hands down by 130 runs on the first innings. Major Wolf-Murray won the toss and took first innings, but Lord Francis Scott, who made a welcome reappearance in local cricket, and Usher were very cheaply disposed of. Stockley and Marshall then played free and attractive if somewhat lucky cricket, the latter giving Stewart an easy chance in the slips and also being let off by the wicket-keeper. After their dismissal Nealor and Hill also played stylish and good innings, and at the call of time only six wickets were down for 235 runs. Next morning Ernsthausen soon captured the four remaining wickets, and came out with the good analysis of 6 wickets for 68 runs, the innings closing for 258 runs. Over the C.C.C. batting it were well to draw a veil; Guise and Turnbull made a fair start before both were clean bowled by beautiful balls from Leipmann, and Lee who went in first wicket down, took out his bat for a careful and correct 40, but the rest were quite at sea against Leipmann, who on a pitch that seemed to have worn a good deal, took 8 wickets including the first seven in succession, for only 64 runs, a very fine record indeed. Usher also bowled very steadily, and Marshall was in fine form behind the wicket. The Calcutta C. C. total only reached 138, a very poor total, but they were distinctly the weaker side. Full score.

BALLYGUNGE vs. DALHOUSIE.—Ballygunge had out rather a weak team for their return match with Dalhousie on the latter's ground on Saturday last, and in the end (thanks to one of the team failing to put in an appearance), they suffered defeat by 23 runs. Batting first the home team started none too well, losing their first 6 wickets for 24 runs, but then Tremble, Carter and Hill came to the rescue, and took the score to 96 before the last wicket fell.* Ballygunge put up a wretched exhibition, only three of the team getting into double figures; Watkins was bowled in the last over of the day, and Watson being absent the innings closed for the miserable total of 73 for 9 wickets, Gould, Salvesen and Antram alone making any sort of a show.

BALLYGUNGE vs. THE MAHARAJAH OF NATTORE'S XI.—Played at Ballygunge on Sunday, a close game ending in a win for the visitors by 27 runs; neither side was at full strength, Baloo and Razak being absent from the native team's ranks and White, Eddis, Mytton and Tatam from Ballygunge. Mehta and Pursettom made an excellent start for Nattore, putting up 73 before they were separated; at this total, the former was well caught at deep square leg by Shallow off Yeoman, he having contributed 41 by very sound cricket. K. Roy came in and was bowled third ball by Yeoman, who followed up this success by getting Pursettom taken in the country for a careful 27, and clean bowling Bajana two overs later; the latter was distinctly lucky, as he should have been run out with yards to spare before he had scored, and immediately afterwards was missed at point off Watson. Of the others, Date and Shivram shaped well for 24 and 26, respectively, but all through the innings, the native team judged their runs very badly, and deserved to lose the three wickets they did in this manner; runs were attempted that never should have been, and on the other hand, many might have been taken that were not. Ballygunge started none too well, losing Yeoman, Garth and Antram by the time 17 was on the board, but then ensued an excellent stand by Shallow and Frost; both batted confidently against some very excellent bowling and together they put on 49 for the fourth wicket. Frost then succumbed to a splendid ball from Ambough for a very good 34, but after his departure none seemed able to do anything, and the innings closed for 125, Shallow being the last out for a really good 49. For the visitors, Ambough bowled extremely well and took 7 for 48, whilst for Ballygunge, Yeoman had the flattering figures of 5 for 37.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

17th January, 1908.

MOST amusing tales are current of so-called "Golf" in the recent heavy frost. Scoring competitions were productive of some extraordinary results : one man, for instance, won a Bogey Competition on a Surrey Course with a return of 12 down. A great many clubs had to abandon their competition on account of the snow, but in spite of the adverse conditions these were curiously enough some really excellent returns at one or two clubs. At Maidenhead, a long exposed course, 74 net was returned by players in both. But praise be! the frost has broken at last, and the world of Golf is pregnant with imminent events; fixture lists are being drawn up and published, for competition months ahead, for such is the congestion during certain seasons that a player much in request is booked sometimes half a year for a certain match; this applies equally to male and female golfers, perhaps even more to the latter, and of course the professionals' lists of engagements are complete long before the New Year is born. 1908 is famous as the tercentenary of the Royal Blackheath Club's institution : one cannot be quite accurate as to the actual date of its birth, but it has always been put down as A. D. 1608 in the reign of the first Stuart king, who is reported to have "never done a foolish thing and never said a wise one." Of course he and his courtiers brought the game from St. Andrews, where both he and his beautiful mother, "Mary of France and Scotland," were so well known on the Links. The Blackheath Club was for many years known as "The Knuckle Club," but what the means none of the annals of the club reveal. This curious name survived until 1822, when it was changed to its present one. Although the minutes of the Club do not go back as far as James I. the annals record entries, for "divers gallons of claret." Privileged visitors to the Royal Blackheath Club will be greatly interested in the collection of old clubs, and other requisites, the irons are extraordinarily unwieldy and massive and of most peculiar shapes. Most golfers are familiar with Lemuel Francis Abbott's delightful print of the old red-coated, cocked hat gentleman, whose caddy has a most suspicious looking bottle protruding from his pocket. This picture was dedicated to members of the Knuckle Club and its reproductions are now to be seen adorning the walls of pretty nearly every club house, and also the private "dens" of many and many an enthusiastic golfer. But the great peculiarity of the Royal Blackheath Club is that the course consists of seven holes only. The casual observer must often be puzzled at the scores sent in for the competition there. He will in all probability think the Blackheathens are very poor exponents of the game, when most of their best net returns are in the 90's, or he will get a very erroneous idea that the course is a very long one. True, two of the holes, and those consecutive ones are almost unrivaled in length, and then the lies—it takes a very untruthful man to say the lies are good! Flints, holes, scrapes and bad turf make Blackheath anything but an easy course. The bunkers too are quite unique, ladies perambulators, lamp posts, butchers' carts all intervene in an apparently ceaseless procession between the player and his goal. But never mind it is the Royal Blackheath Club, royal indeed and deserving of all respect, so golfers all would say vive the old Knuckle Club" rich in history, tradition and bunkers!

The arrangements for the Golf events to be included in the Olympic Games this year are now complete under the able management of Mr. W. Eyser Richardson, the Secretary of St. George's Club, Sandwich. There is to be an individual stroke competition of 36 holes to be played on each of the 3 links, Royal St. George's, "Princes" (Sandwich) and Deal on 1st, 2nd, and 3rd June and conjointly an international team competition, six being allowed to play and four to score for each team : as the games are to be strictly of an international character, the number of entrants even in the Individual Stroke Competition will be limited to 20 from each country. About six countries have up to the present time notified their intention to compete.

As regards the British entries, the competition for the St. George's cup, which is fixed to take place on 21st and 22nd May, will be a sort of qualifying round for the Olympic Competitions from the returns in this, the selection of 20 to represent Great Britain will be made. In the inter-team event each country will be allowed to send four teams, this will permit of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales having a team. The English and Scottish teams will be chosen from those who take part in the Annual International Match between those countries on 23rd May and the Irish and Welsh will be selected by their respective Unions.

* * * * *

It will perhaps be found of interest to readers to give a list of Golf champions in the past year. Twenty in all seem the most important and are as follows :—

Ladies' Open—Miss May Hezlet (for the third time).
Scottish Ladies	Miss F. S. Teacher.
Irish Ladies	Miss F. Walker-Leigh.
Welsh Ladies	Miss E. Duncan.
American Ladies	Miss M. Curtis.
Amateur	Mr. John Ball.
Open Championship	Arnaud Massy.
Irish Open Championship	Mr. J. D. Brown.
Irish Professional Championship	Edmundson.
Scottish Amateur Championship	Mr. G. C. Simpson.
Scottish Professional Championship	Hunter.
Welsh Amateur Championship	Mr. L. E. Phillips.
Welsh Professional Championship	Whiting.
American Amateur Championship	Mr. J. D. Travis.
American Professional Championship	Ross.
Canadian Amateur Championship	Mr. G. S. Lyon.
Canadian Open Championship	Mr. P. Barratt.
Australian Amateur Championship	Hon'ble Maurice Scott.
Australian Open Championship	Hon'ble Maurice Scott.
French Amateur	Mr. S. J. Chesterton.
French Open	Arnaud Massy.

Such a number of new names confront one in the above list Miss May Hezlet is only too familiar and so are the Hon'ble Maurice Scott and Mr. John Ball, but the majority were, except in their own countrie, comparatively "unknown quantities." All this influx of new blood is better than any other tonic for Golf : now it will stimulate the old hands to strenuous effort this year to regain their lost prestige. In 1907 Massy, was the brilliant meteor, who, flashing across the golfing firmament upset everyone's calculations.

It must be very gratifying to a retiring official to have his labour of love appreciated in so substantial a manner as was the case when Lieutenant A. E. Poland, R. N., in recognition of his six years' service as Honorary Secretary of the West Cornwall Club, was presented with a gold watch and a cheque. Similar and even more valuable presentations have frequently been made and the recipient doubtless feels that his faithful service has been amply requited, or if he has not this nice charitable feeling, he ought to have it. Rather an interesting piece of intelligence reaches us from St. Andrews: the caddies are all to be insured by the St. Andrew's Town Council. It is a great many years since the Royal and Ancient Club's links presented the appearance they did last week. First of all torrential rains descended and made a flood, then hard frost set in and skating and sliding on the historic links have been enjoyed by crowds of people. There was a solid flood of about a quarter of a mile on the Jubilee course, and in the "Heel" Bunker the water was about 8½ feet deep in places—shades of Mary Regina! to what depth of degradation has St. Andrews been frozen! Another curious item, must be told before these notes are closed. There is a Golf Club in St. Andrews, called the "Ten Club." The limit of membership is that number and is composed of the Provost and his friends. This select club held their annual competition early in the month under very adverse circumstances, and the scores are said to have been too bad to appear in print, but the order of merit was thus: 1st the Provost, 2nd J. G. Weighton, 3rd R. C. Stenhouse.

Let us hope we shall not be skating on the St. Andrews again this season.

THE ALL INDIA TOURNAMENT.

FIRST ROUND.

ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA A. vs. B.—The tournament commenced at Allahabad on the 27th ultimo, when three games were put through. The two teams representing the Gymkhana were drawn to play each other in the first round and it was a well contested game throughout. B team, though beaten by three goals to one, gave their opponents a good game and there was really little to choose between them. Ffrench opened the scoring for A and MacWatters of B team equalised shortly after. They crossed over with a goal each but Hotham and Norton both scored for A team in the second half and they won as stated. Teams:—

A TEAM: Goal, McNair; backs, H. G. Benton and L. Jones; half-backs, A. R. O. Mallock, Rev. N. Tubbs and R. Simson; forwards, G. P. Boys and Captain W. H. Norton, W. K. P. Ffrench (captain); J. C. Hotham and L. B. Ward.

B TEAM: Goal, S. G. Hill; backs, G. Dillon and C. Moore; half-backs, Dr. A. H. Pollock, G. E. Irvine and A. H. Rouse; forwards, G. D. Martin, R. W. Gaskell, C. C. Chesney, A. C. MacWatters and C. G. Rainford (captain).

QUEENS vs. NAINI TAL VOLUNTEERS.—These teams met on the 27th ultimo, when in spite of a double allowance of extra time the game ended in a draw of one all. Replayed the next day the Queens ran out winners by three goals to one. The Volunteers were quite off-colour, whereas the regulars showed improved form. They led at half time by a goal to nil and having matters almost all their own way in the second period put on two more goals. Jahanns and Littlewood after a good run scored a goal for the Naini team and their prospects brightened, but they died away again and were kept busy defending for the rest of the game. Teams:—

THE QUEEN'S.—Goal, Aubrey; backs, Arundel and Lieutenant Quill; half-backs, Mawditt, Stemp and Edwardes; forwards, Cooper, Cawte, Stolworthy, Lieutenant Somerville and Turrant.

THE NAINI TAL VOLUNTEERS.—Goal, G. Norton; backs, P. Haswell and E. Gregory; half-backs, J. Fergusson, R. Dewar and J. Goodwin; forwards, R. Littlewood P. Jahanns, R. Richardson (captain), W. Morrison and C. Schaefer.

DURHAM L. I. vs. ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS.—This was the last game on Monday and proved a great struggle. The first half was pointless and both teams put in some good runs. After the interval a melee near the Durham's goal ended in the Fusiliers putting through: the Durhams then redoubled their efforts and just before time they equalised. An extra allowance of five minutes was unproductive but another extension enabled Hurt to credit the Fusiliers with the winning goal in three. Teams:—

DURHAM L. I.: Goal, Marshall; backs, Causley and Lieutenant Greenwell; half-backs, Gardner, Ellison and King; forwards, Bury, Noddings, Lieutenants Harteup, Bowers and Haylett.

ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS: Goal, Taylor; backs, Lieutenant Nairn and Martin; half-backs, Bird, Lieutenants Miller and Wylie; forwards, Smith, Poynter, Lieutenant Burdett, Coombs and Lieutenant Hurt.

MIDDLESEX REGIMENT vs. SHROPSHIRE L. I.—Played on the 28th ultimo, the Middlesex Regiment winning by 4 goals to nil. The Shropshires were kept on the defensive during most of the game, their opponents scoring once in the first half through Cooper and three after the interval. Nevertheless the play was interesting all through. Teams:—

1ST MIDDLESEX REGIMENT: Goal, Robinson; backs, Kelly and Butterworth; half-backs, Pegrum, Rice and Mews; forwards, Wilmer, Brooks, Cooper, Wills and Daw.

85TH KING'S SHROPSHIRE L. I.: Goal, Turner; backs, Lieutenant Prince and Roberts; half-backs, Lieutenant Holmes a Court, Lester and Leder; forwards, Lieutenant Hanbury, Willie, Andrews, Mason and Crawford.

U. P. POLICE vs. BERKSHIRE REGIMENT.—These teams met on the 29th ultimo. The Police were first away and nearly scored but the play was transferred and the Berkshires drew first blood. The Police equalised almost immediately and not long after registered a second goal. In the second half there was no scoring though the Police had many opportunities of further augmenting their score. Savidge played a fine game between the posts for the losers. Teams:—

U. P. POLICE: Goal, D. R. Wright; backs, U. S. Naylor and Inspector Fitzpatrick; half-backs, Sergeant F. McLeod, Inspector Campbell and Sergeant Murphy; forwards, C. H. Faran, Sergeant Fitzpatrick, W. T. Troup, Sergeant McLeod and H. Reynolds.

2ND ROYAL BERKSHIRES: Goal, Savidge; backs, Lieutenant G. W. Hopton and T. R. Aldworth; half-backs, Lieutenant A. G. Sharpe, C. G. Dowding and Sommerfield; forwards, Crump, Lieutenants M. C. Radford, C. L. Waters, E. T. McCausland and R. G. Moody-Ward.

QUEEN'S REGIMENT vs. ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS.—Having disposed of their opponents in the first round these teams met on the 29th ultimo, when an exciting struggle was witnessed. Play was very fast throughout the first half and when the interval arrived each team had scored a goal. On changing ends the Queen's displayed excellent combination but all their attempts to gain the lead were unsuccessful and time arrived with the scores level. An extra allowance was played without result and in the second extension a determined rush by the Fusiliers resulted in a goal, the Queen's being thus defeated by two goals to one. Teams as before.

ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA A. vs. 6TH JATS AND 37TH DOGRAS.—The combined team, who are holders of the cup made their first appearance in the tournament on the 30th ultimo, when they met and defeated the Gymkhana by a goal to nil. There were some alterations in the local team, Poole having to play instead of Ward. The opening half was very even and both teams lost opportunities of scoring: at length the combined team scored a lucky goal, the ball after having been stopped by McNair rolling between the posts. The Gymkhana played a dashing game in the second half and had the best of the play, but all their endeavours to get on terms were unsuccessful and they retired beaten as stated. Teams:—

6TH JATS AND 37TH DOGRAS: Goal, Lieutenant J. S. Darlington; backs, Lieutenants C. A. M. Dunlop and R. C. Ross; half-backs, Lieutenants R. M. Brind, L. G. Dudley and S. R. B. Lyde; forwards, Lieutenants C. M. Thrushill, G. V. Lindsell, J. P. Gilbert, G. D. Astley and F. L. Nicholson.

ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA: Goal, A. W. McNair; backs, H. G. Benton and L. Jones; half-backs, A. R. O. Mallock, Rev. N. Tubbs and R. Simson; forwards, G. P. Boys, Captain W. H. Norton, W. K. P. Ffrench, Captain Poole and J. C. Hotham.

OXFORD L. I. vs. U. P. POLICE.—A strenuous struggle was witnessed when these teams met on the 30th ultimo. The first half was very evenly contested and neither team scored but on crossing over the Police attacked hotly and had it not been for the fine play of Strange in goal must surely have scored. He repulsed all their shots and play being transferred to the Police territory, White netted what proved the only goal of the game. Teams:—U. P. Police as before.

OXFORD L. I.: Goal, Strange; backs, Butcher and Lieutenant Sullivan; half-backs, Norris, Arett and Waters; forwards, Wallace, White, Lieutenant R. V. Simpson, Kearsey and Bowden.

ROYAL IRISH RIFLES vs. ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS.—This game on the 30th, resulted in a win for the Rifles by three goals to two after a fast and interesting game. Teams:—Royal Scots Fusiliers as before.

ROYAL IRISH RIFLES: Goal, Morris; backs, Lieutenant C. C. Lee and Jacsowich; half-backs, Savage, Lieutenant J. F. martyr and Ryan; forwards, A. J. Boyce, W. M. Lenyon, V. Hutcheson and Russell.

MIDDLESEX REGIMENT vs. THE CAMERONIANS.—Played on the 30th ultimo. The Middlesex had rather the best of the game in the opening half, though play was rather sticky. Half time arrived with a goal to each team but on resuming the Middlesex scored their true form, and Lieutenant McLellan was kept busy. They only scored one goal, however and the Cameronians, who played up pluckily, managed to equalise, time arriving with the score two all. In the extra allowance the Middlesex scored again and won by three goals to two. Teams:—Middlesex as before.

CAMERONIANS: Goal, Lieutenant McLellan; backs, Evans and Pearson; half-backs, Wilkie, Clarke and Eastwood, forwards, Lieutenant Greg, Mitchell, Welham, Banister and Lieutenant Reid.

SEMI-FINALS.

JATS AND DOGRAS vs. OXFORD L. I.—Played on the 31st ultimo. The combined team attacked immediately and Macpherson scored a goal. Up and down play was followed by a corner to the combined team. Then the Oxfords put through, but the shot was disallowed for "sticks." The Jats and Dogras pressed once more and Macpherson scored a second goal. This was followed by a rush by the Oxfords who registered a goal. They continued to attack, but without success and play was in their circle when half time arrived. On resuming the ball travelled up and down till Gilbert got possession and shot a third goal for the combined team. The Oxford were storming dammed and played hard to the end but there was no further score, the holders of the cup, winning by three goals to one. Teams as before.

MIDDLESEX REGIMENT vs. ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.—The other match in the semi-final round ended in a victory for the Middlesex Regiment. The Irishmen put up a good game but lost more than one chance of scoring. The first half ended with the Middlesex leading by a goal but though they had most of the attacking in the second period it was not till the closing stages of the game that they managed to score again, and thus won by two goals to nil. Teams as before.

THE FINAL.

6TH JATS AND 37TH DOGRAS vs. MIDDLESEX REGIMENT.—A large crowd of spectators witnessed the final game on Saturday and were treated to one of the most struggles in the annals of Indian hockey. The Middlesex Regiment were defeated by a single goal after a splendid game. Both teams gave a brilliant exhibition, the combined team, who in their earlier matches had not shown their best form, surpassed themselves, while their opponents were at the top of their form and played a wonderful game.

The first half was devoid of score; the Middlesex had done most of the attacking but could not break the combined team's defence, Darlington in goal proving himself as safe as a house. On changing ends the Jats and Dogras played with renewed energy and play travelled up and down the field at a great pace. Both goals were visited, chances were missed and when full time arrived both custodians held their charges intact.

Extra time was agreed upon and first five minutes each way and then a single period of ten minutes was conceded—still no result. Finally 15 minutes each way was allowed: Nicholson of the combined team put the ball through at the end of the first period but the pace in no way abated during the second half: no further score, however, was registered and the combined team were victors of a memorable game by a goal to nil. They hold for the second year in succession the cup presented to them at the conclusion of the game by Lady Stanley. Teams as before.

Solution to Problem No. 50.

Z is safe for three tricks in hearts if the suit is led by the adversaries, but not if he leads it himself. He should accordingly lead dummy's last diamond, ruff it, and throw away the lead with a club. The adversaries can then make three tricks in clubs, but after that they must either open hearts or else go on with diamonds or clubs, giving Z a third ruff and Y a discard. In either case they lose the game. It is important to ruff the diamond before leading the losing club, for otherwise Z might be forced with a diamond after all his clubs have been extracted.

Problem No. 51.

Scores: A B, 28; Y Z, 0. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:

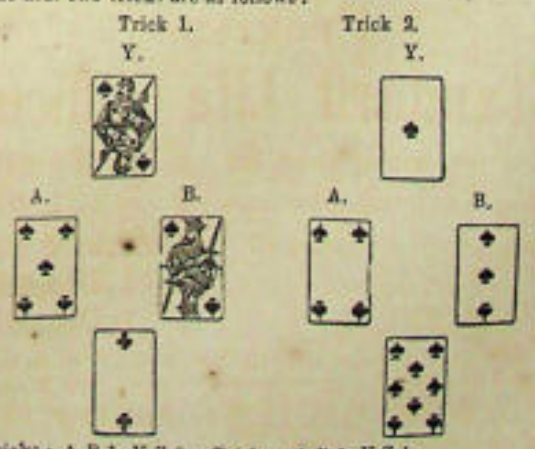
Y's HAND (DUMMY).

Hearts, Q J. Diamonds, K Q 6, 5, 4 Clubs, A, K, 6, 5 Spades, A J.

Z's HAND (DEALER):

Hearts, A, K, 7. Diamonds, 3, 2. Clubs, Q 4, 3, 2. Spades, 10, 9, 8, 2.

The first two tricks are as follows:



Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 0. Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 1.

How ought the dealer to go on with the hand, and why?

THE FEEDING OF SNAKES.

THE well-meaning persons who run the Humane Review, are organising a vigorous and sustained crusade against the feeding of the snakes in the London Zoological Gardens with living animals. For this purpose a reprint of an article published in the January number of the aforesaid journal has been extensively circulated. To a very large degree the agitators have our sympathy; for, of course, if these voracious reptiles could be kept alive and in good condition on such a diet, there is not an educated man in this or any other civilized country who would not vote in favour of feeding them with dead meat. It may indeed be freely admitted, on the testimony of all who have witnessed the process, that the manner in which a serpent kills and swallows its prey is cruel and revolting. Whether it is more cruel than many of the various modes in which defenceless and harmless animals are daily done to death by carnivorous creatures in every part of the world—as when a partridge is literally torn to pieces limb by limb by a fox—we are, however, not prepared to say.

While the humanitarians have, as already mentioned, our sincere sympathy up to a certain point, when they proceed to urge, after the well-known manner of cranks and faddists in general, that because snakes are cruel, therefore, the exhibition of living specimens should be abandoned entirely, we part company with them, and leave them and others of their kidney to plough what we hope will prove to be their comparatively solitary furrows. One of these arguments in favour of this policy is, however, so absurd and ridiculous that it cannot be passed over without brief mention.

As long as 1870, runs the pamphlet, there appeared a letter in the Animal World, urging very sensibly that "no new knowledge is taught by the exhibition of the wretched victims waiting to be devoured," and that if the serpents cannot live on food already dead, "a stuffed snake is as good an illustration of the kind as our humanity ought to allow."

Is it indeed? So far as our experience goes—and it has been pretty extensive—no taxidermist has ever yet succeeded in making a stuffed snake to have any real resemblance to its living prototype, and probably no one ever will. It is true that somewhat better results are obtained by the coloured casts of snakes prepared by Ward of Rochester, U.S.A., of which numerous examples may be seen in the Natural History Museum at South Kensington; but even these utterly fail to convey any adequate idea of the smooth and lithe coils of the living serpent; and a person who knows a snake only by its stuffed skin or by a reproduction in plaster, will have but a very sorry conception of the real thing.

The matter does not, however, end here, for some of the humanitarians are, we believe, advocates of "nature-teaching;" or, at all events, cranks of a very similar type are included among the advocates of that method of instruction. And we thus have the absurdity of two diametrically opposite opinions being urged—if not by the same people, at all events by other would-be reformers and idealists.

In the pamphlet referred to the authorities of the Zoological Gardens are directly charged with breach of promise. After alluding to the fact that visitors are no longer allowed to see the snakes fed, the writer goes on to observe that an announcement was made in the Morning Leader to the effect "that henceforth, except in special cases, the snakes would be fed on newly-killed instead of living animals;" and that this announcement was not contradicted by the authorities. Furthermore, it is stated that the Humanitarian League has in its possession a letter from the present Secretary of the "Zoo" (apparently, by the way, a private one), in which it is mentioned that the reform was being carried out.

Although we have not seen the originals of either of these communications, there seems no reason to doubt their accuracy. But the plain facts of the case probably are that the experiment was tried and found (as might be expected) to be a failure in the long run, although it may have succeeded temporarily in individual cases. At any rate, it appears to be admitted that the practice has been discontinued, at least as a general rule, and the old system of feeding with living animals resumed.

We fail to see how the authorities at the gardens could have done otherwise. Assuming that the dead-food experiment proved a failure, is it likely, or is it indeed justifiable, that the public should be deprived of the opportunity of seeing live snakes for the sake of what we cannot help calling mawkish sentimentality? Wild snakes will continue to feed on living prey despite all the outcries of the Humanitarian League; and if a certain number of their tribe are allowed to exercise their carnivorous propensities on tame instead of wild animals, we cannot see any great reason for complaint.

This, however, must, of course, be to a great extent a matter of individual opinion; and the Leaguers are not to be blamed for expressing their own. We do, however, take exception to the thinly veiled tone of animosity towards the authorities of the "Zoo," which is noticeable throughout the pamphlet. Apparently the League is forgetful that the Council (with a great nobleman at its head) of the "Zoo," formed by a body of highly educated and cultivated gentlemen, who are not likely to countenance any unnecessary or unavoidable cruelty in the collection under their control. If it were practicable to discontinue the live-food method, there is not the slightest doubt that it would be immediately forbidden.

The Humanitarian League, as we discover by reading between the lines of the pamphlet is, however, quite prepared to go a long step further than prohibiting the keeping of snakes in captivity if they cannot be fed on dead food. "We are confident," it is then stated, "that, as the feeling of mankind toward the non-human races [an excellent expression this!] is educated and humanised, there will be less and less desire to keep reptiles (or, indeed, any animals) in useless captivity for purposes of morbid exhibition."

The words we have printed in italics clearly indicate that the ultimate object of the Humanitarian League is to shut up the "Zoo," and all similar exhibitions entirely. To this cool proposal the British public is just about as likely to assent as it is to endorse and accept the doctrines of the socialists. When both events come to pass, the British Empire may as well close its doors and dispose of its effects to the first bidder!

Probably it would be waste of words to argue with the Humanitarian Leaguers as to menageries being "morbid exhibitions." The British public may, however, be trusted to have something to say upon that point. As to the zoologists, we presume they do not count at all in the Councils of the League; but so far as zoological science is concerned, it may be confidently asserted that its progress would be enormously hindered were such exhibitions prohibited. We have already referred to our belief in the accuracy of the statements made by the Humanitarian League in its pamphlet on snake-feeding. But a leaflet issued by the Indian section of that body on the subject of tortoise-shell collecting suggests that all the quotations should be verified. For in that pamphlet we find Sclater and Lydekker (the latter name, as usual, misspelt) given as the authors of the "Royal Natural History," whereas the former gentleman contributed only the preface. If such inaccuracies are made in a very simple matter, can we rely upon the absence of error in other respects?

In conclusion, we are glad to be able to find ourselves in full harmony with the Humanitarian League in its endeavour to stop the cruel method of roasting hawksbill turtles alive in order to obtain their "tortoise-shell."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

We have had two very pleasant days' racing to look back upon this last week, but nothing wildly exciting in either. As so often happens the public had it all their own way on the one day only to find themselves very wide of the mark on the morrow. At Tollygunge on Friday the favourites' colours were first past the post with most pleasing regularity. At Calcutta on Saturday the odds against the winners were so long in each case but one that a genius might have made a large fortune out of a ten-rupee note.

The Steeplechase Meeting was a great day for Captain Holden, who scored two wins and a second, all ridden by himself. He had a very soft thing with Lord Harry in the first race, as Lady Gold, the only other starter, was all out of condition, and indeed the winner made so certain of success that Mr. Evers on the mare almost succeeded in tricking him out of it. While Lord Harry was cantering home some lengths ahead the light weight got the mare galloping strongly from the home turn and succeeded in catching and actually for a few minutes heading the leader, but the effort was made a little too soon and Captain Holden had time to set his animal going again and won comfortably at the finish. His win with Jasper in the third and last steeplechase of the day took a great deal more doing, as Captain Fraser on Idle led the field by so much that 6 furlongs from home it looked an impossibility to catch him; but Jasper answered nobly to his owner's call and coming along at a great pace just managed to "get there" to the enthusiastic delight of his numerous supporters. Wake Up, who was pretty well backed, lost all chance by jumping badly, and Boolara, who was also much fancied in some quarters, was done at the last fence and could not gallop an inch from there home, leaving the despised Agamemnon to draw third money. The pony steeplechase fell to Pineal. Lily II. who was well backed ran out at the water and fell trying to jump the wing, giving Drew a nasty shaking, and Mr. Hamilton, who was riding Minstrel Boy, broke a stirrup leather and let the pony run up the road off the course.

The three flat races call for but little description. Lady Mana, the favourite, won the pony race easily from Captain Holden on Thelma, who was well backed for a place. Devil's Limit, the "absolute certainty" of the day, won the 5 furlongs from start to finish with Blix again the place favourite second, and the only upset of the afternoon was Miss Trenton's win from Golden in the last race. This came as a great shock, as Golden was backed with great confidence for the race and Mr. Dass himself considered the mare as his second string and preferred Trencherman of his pair. Considering that it came at the wrong time of the season and clashed with a paperchase the experiment of an extra day at Tollygunge may be reckoned a fair success and it is to be hoped that next year the Stewards may see their way to arrange an extra in November or early December or possibly a day in the Monsoons might pan out well. And the feasibility of running three or four days a year instead of two night make is worth while to carry out the much-needed improvements in the stand and course.

Saturday was a day of small fields and long prices. The evergreen "Jimmy" Robinson scored three wins, a second and a third out of six rides—not a bad record for a veteran. He started in the first race—a mile—with a clever win on a 3 to 1 chance Lasso, a very smart little horse; did the trick again in the third event, by bringing that uncertain mare, Colina, home in front of Clynder, the second favourite, Jacobus, the public fancy, running nowhere; and completed the hat trick by giving the public their only real win of the day with Pure Gold in the last race 1¼ mile. The Cone Plate for ponies fell to Solace, the absolute outsider of the party, Runaway Girl and Jolly Roger the favourites, running real bad ponies. The latter never going near them from start to finish.

The Curzon Plate, 1¼ miles, was a great surprise. Piper's stable had two in the race, Scamander and Bouquet, and confidently expected to win with the former who was looking grand and has run none too badly of late. So much was he liked that he stood at 6 to 4 and his stable companion at 7 to 1, but alas for the faith of men! Scamander was a beaten horse 3 furlongs from home and the despised Bouquet won after a good race by half a length from Rubrette, a mare who has improved wonderfully in Mr. Rowan's capable hands.

The Bengal Plate, 6 furlongs, was thought to be between Bundah, Eljin and Silphoe, but again the bolt fell from the blue and while the three favourites were struggling in front the 8 to 1 chance Haloya came through them from the distance, beating Silphoe with comfort by two lengths.

During these two days the new system of paying out on the totalisator for three places on six or more runners instead of on eight or more runners has been in vogue and on the whole has been very popular. The returns are, of course, pretty meagre, except when outsiders get home, but then it divides the winnings among a greater number of people which has the good effect of sending more of them home a little pleased which is always a good thing. The books do not propose to change their system, as they think that the more serious betting public for whom they cater prefer to get better odds for the two places than the extremely short prices which would have to be laid about them for one, two or three, in a field of six.

The meet for the sixth paperchase of this season was at Jodepur Thana on Friday and the course started just behind the thana on the east side, and after a hurdle and mud wall had been passed circled round across the Garia Hât Road into the Jodepur country finally finishing over the Ladies' wall with a straight run parallel to the Molla Hât Road to within a quarter of a mile of the thana. The course was a long one with 15 or 16 jumps, but the going was good and open with no really bad corners as in the last few chases. There was a very large muster at the start: grief was not so plentiful as of late, but unfortunately more serious as Mr. Robertson racing hard on a tired horse came down at the last wall and had the bad luck to break his collar bone. Captain Fitzgerald had fallen at the wall before without ill effects, but it loses him a point in the Average Cup, though he is still ahead of Captain Fraser, his most dangerous competitor.

The final order was: Captain Fraser on Diablo 1; Mr. Barclay on Lockhart 2; Mr. Turner on Blue Bell II 3; Mr. Winckworth on Ermine 4; Mr. Hadow on Betty 5; Mr. Hamilton on Pretender 6, followed by Messrs. Levetus, Curtis Hayward, Halliday, Graves, Muir, Myer, Miss Macrae, Messrs. Evers, Birkmyre, Miss Lukis and Colonel Victor Brooke.

In the pony chase the whole of the leading division refused the first mud wall and had to go at it again and there were two or three saddles emptied on the way round but with no ill results, and the final order was: Mr. Muir on a chestnut 1; Mr. Antram on Blazes 2; Miss Waterhouse on Meprise 3; Mr. Corbett on The Pink 'Un 4; Mr. Tegart on Sheila 5; Mr. Richardson on a bay 6; followed by Messrs. Stokes, Arthur, Harvey, and Captain Holden.

The Punjab Infantry Polo Tournament was originally to have been held at Lahore, but the venue was changed to Peshawar as favouring the majority of the teams. Heavy rain, however, spoilt the Peshawar grounds and the tournament was ultimately held at Mardan. Five teams entered and in the first round the 2nd Punjabis beat the 57th Rifles by 5 goals to two. The teams had each scored two goals when they entered on the final chukker, but during this period the Punjabis had the best of it and scored three times. The semi-final games brought together the 22nd Punjabis and the 53rd Sikhs, and the 2nd Gurkhas and Guides Infantry. The Punjabis were again victorious, beating the 53rd by 4 goals to nil, and the Gurkhas defeated the Guides by 4 goals to three after a great game. The final game was played on the 5th instant when the 2nd Gurkhas beat the 22nd Punjabis by 5 goals to nil.

Owing to the unfortunate accident to Persimmon and the horse's inability to carry out the stud engagements that have been made for him in the ensuing season, his Majesty has decided that his other stallion, Florizel II., shall be taken from his old quarters at the Heath Stud, Newmarket, to the Sandringham Stud, where he was foaled in 1891. Florizel II. has never stood at Sandringham before, having throughout his stud career been under Lord Marcus Beresford's care at Newmarket. He is the eldest of the famous band of brothers—Florizel II., Persimmon, and Diamond Jubilee—which carried the Royal colours so brilliantly on the Turf, and have since achieved much distinction at the stud.

Florizel II. has not made so great a mark in racing history as Persimmon, but that he was a high-class racehorse was amply evidenced by his victories in such races as the St. James's Palace Stakes at Ascot, the Royal Stakes at Newmarket, the Prince of Wales's Stakes at Epsom, the Manchester Cup (carrying 8st. 11lb.), the Ascot Gold Vase, and the Jockey Club Cup. At the stud his success was instantaneous. He established a new record, by begetting two classic winners in his first season, namely, Volodyovski, who won the Derby for the late Mr. Whitney, and Doricles, who rather luckily beat his half-brother at Doncaster, and won the St. Leger for Mr. Leopold de Rothschild.

Since then Florizel II. has been well represented by Floriform, Golden Measure, Mackintosh, Vedas, Kuroki, Prince of Orange, Altitude, Larig, etc. Altogether his progeny have won £90,160 in stake money in the United Kingdom. So it will be seen that this son of St. Simon and Perdita II. is in every way qualified to take the place of his distinguished brother at Sandringham. It is hoped that he will be needed only temporarily to fill the gap, as the veterinary surgeons attending Persimmon anticipate saving the great Derby winner for further years of usefulness at the King's stud.

A discovery bearing upon the early domestication of America's most famous bird was made recently by Dr. W. Hough, of the Smithsonian Institution, who came across a cavern in a steep bluff above the Tularosa River in New Mexico. Across the mouth of the cavern had been constructed five dwellings, masking the hollow in the hill. Exploration showed that the cavern had been used as a pen for turkeys. Dr. Hough believes that the turkeys were kept not for food, but the sake of their feathers, which were used in religious ceremonials and to decorate offerings to the gods of the under world.

The International Rugby Football match between England and Ireland played on the 8th instant ended in a win for England by 13 points to 3.

Two individual centuries were scored for the Maharajah of Nattore's XI in their match against Mohan Bagan in Calcutta at the week end. K. Roy made 109 not out in the first innings and in the second innings M. Bajana scored 108 not out.

We have received a copy of the North Point Annual for 1908.—the school magazine of St. Joseph's College, Darjeeling. Well printed and turned out, it contains all the school news of the past year and much of interest to old North Pointers and others interested in the Institution.

The fourth test match concluded at Melbourne on the 11th instant resulted in another win for the Australians, who thus won the rubber and recover the ashes. England scored 105 and 186 in their two innings; the Colonials 214 and 385, winning by 308 runs. The fifth test match will be played at Sydney, beginning on the 21st instant.

We have received from Messrs. Barton, Son and Co., the eminent jewellers and silversmiths of Bangalore, a photo of the Frontier Force Hockey Tournament Challenge Cup. It is a splendid piece of workmanship and is designed and manufactured in this well-known firm's very best style. The Bowl which is of solid silver is of imposing dimensions, the diameter at the mouth alone being 15 inches and the extreme width from handle to handle 24¾ inches; the height not taking the plinth into consideration is 15½ inches. It is heavily chased with an applied design of Acanthus leaves, and shows a medallion on either side with the following inscription engraved:—"Frontier Force Hockey Cup" "Subscribed to by Corps of the late Punjab Frontier Force" "1907." On either side of the plinth coming beneath the handles of the bowl are two finely modelled figures of Hockey players, one illustrating that of a British officer, and the other a sepoy of the late Punjab Frontier Force. Twenty silver shields to show the yearly winners are placed round the plinth, and the first to carry off the cup has been the 52nd Sikhs.

"R. C." writes in the Civil and Military Gazette:—As so many people import dogs from Home now-a-days, I think a few hints and an account of my own experiences may be of interest to the public.

I had never imported dogs before and on making inquiries from my "doggy" friends, I got the same advice in every instance, viz.:—1. That a kennel should be sent for the dog's use, 2. That a £1 tip should be promised to the English butcher in the event of the dog reaching safely, and in good condition. And that was all! That this is the general idea, was proved by the fact that most of the dogs had evidently been shipped with this view in mind.

A curious fact is, that dogs travelling alone cost £5, whereas those travelling with their masters cost £3. Why the extra £2 is charged, I should much like to know, for reasons which will appear below.

Now for a few facts. There was no English butcher and the native butcher neither fed nor ever went near the dogs—a fact which will not be surprising to those who know the native. They were in charge of the deck "topaz" who knew absolutely nothing about dogs. Dogs are kept in the forecastle, which has often got an iron deck. They have always to remain on a chain. The port—holes can very seldom be open, so the heat and smell can be well imagined. I am not writing this as a complaint, as naturally passenger steamers are not built for the convenience of the canine world, but it is the duty of every dog-lover, to look to the welfare of his dumb friends, and to mitigate, as far as possible, their sufferings on a voyage.

A dog's luggage for a voyage should consist of 1. a kennel, the making of which I will deal with later. 2. A sack of biscuits, according to the size of the dog. 3. Three feeding bowls, at least.—many of the dogs had none!—4. A coat. 5. Most important of all, bearing in mind that the dog will have to be tied up for the best part of three weeks—a long chain. Two chains soldered together will be none too long. Many of the dogs had scarcely room to turn round on their chains, much less to take any exercise.

Now as to the question of housing. There seems to be a fixed pattern for kennels, and, personally,

I don't think much of it, for the reason that though admirably suited for the Channel and Bay, it is anything but a success in the Red Sea and Indian Ocean. Besides, it lacked the most important detail, when one remembers the iron and cement decks, an outside bench.

A good kennel, I should certainly have. 1. A bench. 2. A removable top, and if possible, at least, one wall that will open on a hinge to allow of the utmost ventilation possible. 3. A catch on the outside of the kennel, for the dog's chain to be looped through—how often one sees half the chain wasted in tying up! 4. Legs, at least six inches high.

The customary battens across the bottom are worse than useless—first because they are not high enough, secondly, because when the decks are being washed, they act as a breakwater, and force the water against the bottom of the kennel. In fact, doing the very thing they are put there to prevent.

I THINK most owners will agree with me on this point, that, if importers do everything they can to supply their dogs with the necessaries of the voyage, the shippers should do their share which is to supply the dogs with a trustworthy sweeper, or "dog boy" to look after them.

Owners can but ship the food and comforts, surely it is but common humanity to see that the poor brutes get them, also that fresh water is supplied, kennels cleaned—that the dogs are not forgotten, sometimes left for days inside their kennels, and that they do not arrive in Bombay, still wearing the thick coats which were put on to protect them from the English climate.

Surely it is not asking much, considering £2 is charged for dogs travelling alone, evidently for this very extra looking after. Captains of steamers complain, that people break rules, and take their dogs into the cabins, but, I feel sure, this would not be the case if the dogs were made fairly comfortable. It is because the arrangements are generally inadequate, that people rather than run risks, put themselves to considerable discomfort by by taking their dogs into a small cabin. Therefore the remedy is obvious.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 24th January 1908.

LAST Saturday Londoners awoke to a black fog and a white frost. Along the east coast there was practically no sunshine at all; in the Channel, the fog was particularly thick and ocean traffic disorganised in consequence. The Ostend and Calais boats were much delayed, and one of the minor inconveniences of the darkness which could almost be felt, that we experienced at moments, during the day, was the failure of the rehearsal of the Royal Procession from Buckingham Palace to Westminster for the State opening of Parliament next week—owing to the density of the fog, the trial had to be abandoned. This when everything had been in readiness since early morning—the only convenient time—was distinctly disappointing. A more serious result was the railway accident near Wimbledon on the South-Western Railway, when eleven persons were injured. Also, up to the time at which I write, nothing whatever has been heard of the missing lifeboat belonging to the Great Eastern Railway Company's steamer "Amsterdam," which was in collision with the steamer "Axminster" early last Wednesday morning, near the entrance to the Hook of Holland. All the Dutch lifeboats are making an energetic search, and the police along the coast are keeping a sharp look-out. Some fifty vessels are lying off the Hook waiting for the weather to clear, so that they may enter the harbour, and it is hoped that the missing people from the "Amsterdam" may be on board one of them, or else that the boat has reached some part of the coast.

So far as the metropolis was concerned Saturday's obscurity proved local in its character, and the higher ground of Highgate enjoyed about four hours' bright sunshine. Brighton would also appear to have been exempt from fog, for several hours of bright sunshine were enjoyed at this ever-popular resort, though a tribute to the severity of the weather was perhaps paid in the demise of a Mrs. Colwell, a native of Maidstone, who celebrated her 100th birthday last year, and had resided in Brighton for upwards of half a century.

One of the greatest inanimate sufferers from the cold this year, has been perhaps the Royal Horticultural Society's Exhibition held this season. All exhibits, inevitably small, came from the shelter of conservatory or greenhouse, the only exception being a heavy cluster, filling a hamper, of the dwarf-growing, pitcher-plant, Sarracenia purpurea. Though a native of a much warmer climate than our own, the plant had only been lifted the morning of the Show from a patch of wet ground at Horsham, and had arrived at the Horticultural Hall with its delicate green and red "pitchers" encrusted with ice, yet apparently none the worse for the ordeal. This was grown in the open by Sir E. Loder. Major Holford, always an enthusiastic grower, received a first-class certificate for a new Cypripedium named Moonbeam, of dainty green and white hue, while the Society's gold medal was won by a long array of apples—fragrant and beautifully coloured—from Messrs. James Veitch, all having been grown, in open ground on the popular pyramid trees. Even at Brighton, the committee of the Brighton Flower Shows report a loss on last year's exhibitions, as well as a falling-off in subscriptions.

The accession of King Edward VII. and the seventh anniversary of the death of Queen Victoria have been equally remembered, the former by a salute of forty-one guns fired in St. James's Park by a battery of the Royal Horse Artillery from St. Johns—wood Barracks, and cheerful waving of many hued flags with which the principal buildings were gay; the latter by a service at the Mausoleum at Frogmore. It was attended by the King and Queen, and members of the Royal Family. The proceedings were simple and impressive. The Royal family occupied seats facing the altar; in the south transept were the members of the Royal Household, and of the late Queen's suite. The Archbishop of Canterbury read the lessons, the prayers being recited by the Dean of Windsor. The solemnisation concluded with the Benediction by the Archbishop and the National Anthem. After the service the King and Queen remained to lay wreaths on the sarcophagus, and other tributes placed round the tomb came from several members of the Royal family, the German Emperor, Princess Fredericka of Hanover, Prince and Princess Henry of Prussia, the Hon'ble Harriet Phipps, and the Colonel and officers of the 21st (Empress of India's) Lancers. By permission of the King, a large number of people passed through the Mausoleum during the afternoon. Thus is enshrined the memory of Victoria, the great, the good, in the hearts of her faithful subjects.

That historic hostelry "The Ship," at Greenwich, has gone the way of all flesh, and is no more. Authorities are somewhat uncertain as to when "The Ship" established its repute for banquets in which whitebait was the special feature. It certainly was among the longest-established inns or taverns in our midst, and was originally built with a weather-board front overlooking the river. But about the middle of the last century the newer and much handsomer structure was reared upon the site of the earlier one, and its pretty garden with its twinkling lights was the scene of many gay throngs, a striking contrast to its appearance yesterday, with drawn blinds, and barred doors. Old inhabitants of Greenwich tell of the changes that they have seen, since it was no uncommon thing on a Saturday afternoon in the London season to see as many as four-and-twenty perfectly-appointed coaches drive through its narrow streets to one or other of the hotels celebrated for their fish dinners. But it has felt the rivalry of other places; railway facilities to Brighton and the South Coast towns have created the popular week-end outing. Then the motor-car has taken people yet further afield, and the old riverside resorts have been more and more neglected. Again, the fashionable restaurants in London have sprung up in recent years, and it is no longer necessary to go to Greenwich to get a well-cooked dinner. But it was in the Ministerial Dinner that "The Ship" possessed a unique claim to distinction. The last that took place was in 1894, and a photograph is preserved of the appearance of the tables as they were laid in the fine room on an upper floor where they were always served. Though this was by no means the only sort of dinner served at "The Ship," as a glance through the books would convince us. Regimental dinners, Corporation, and City Companies' banquets, and Charity dinners also took place, and His present Majesty when Prince of Wales dined there, and for many years a few of the whitebait taken from those served to the Royal guest were kept in spirits as a souvenir of the august occasion. "The Ship" has always had a large number of American visitors who have made a point of visiting what they regard as a British National Institution, considering that at one time or another, its hospitable roof has covered so many of England's celebrities, as well as those of other lands, to whom the novelty of its fare seems to have specially appealed. This being so, the present generation may yet see "The Ship" resuscitated, or perhaps preserved as a national memento. The menu arranged in 1875 by Disraeli is still extant, and shows that gentleman to have been as great an exponent of the gentle culinary art as he was of politics.

King Edward's new Naval aide-de-camp, Captain Arthur Archibald Campbell Galloway, who has just been raised to the rank of Admiral, shows a remarkable life-saving record. He entered the Navy in 1869, at the age of thirteen, and after a period of service in the Royal yacht took three first-class certificates in passing as lieutenant, which rank he reached thirty years ago. He was in the "Invincible" during the Egyptian War of 1882, receiving the Egyptian medal and the Khedive bronze star, and he has been thanked by the Admiralty for the operations consequent upon the loss of the "Serpent" in 1880, when he was acting as lieutenant-commander of the "Lapwing." His astonishing exploits comprise a record for which he holds no less than three of the Royal Humane Society's medals. The Navy has reason to be proud of its new Admiral.

A profoundly painful impression was produced on Saturday, by the announcement of the death of the Attorney-General, Sir John Lawson Walton, K.C. In spite of the fact that the Attorney-General had been in delicate health for a considerable period, the event came suddenly. Several all-night sittings, and the labours connected with the passing of the Criminal Appeal Bill had somewhat overtaxed Sir John's strength, and in order to recoup, he had tried change of air in Scotland and elsewhere. Subsequently he paid a visit to Bournemouth, remaining there for three or four weeks, from about the middle of December. Though not perfectly strong, he returned much improved in health, and on returning to London, little more than a week ago, he was looking forward hopefully to the work of the coming session. Unfortunately, he caught a chill on Friday morning, and this, in the course of the day, brought about an attack of pleurisy, to which, complicated with other symptoms, he eventually succumbed. His remains were on Tuesday evening removed from his town house, where he died, to Marylebone Station, and thence taken by train to Wendover and deposited in Ellesborough Church. For the convenience of those who travelled from London to attend the funeral a special train was run by the Great Central Railway yesterday morning from Marylebone Station; the Home Secretary represented the Government. A memorial service was also held at the Temple Church.

London fogs were, for a few hours, brightened by the wedding festivities of Lady Cynthia Crewe-Milnes, youngest daughter of the Earl of Crewe, and the Hon'ble George Colville, youngest son of the late Viscount and Viscountess Colville of Culross, which were celebrated at South Margaret's, Westminster, last week. Another interesting wedding is that of Lady Constance Scott, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, and the Hon'ble Douglas Cairns, at whose nuptials, which took place at Dalkeith, the Queen and the Prince and Princess of Wales were present. His Majesty the King also attended this week at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, the christening of the twin sons of the Earl and Countess of Dudley, and stood sponsor for the elder child; the Prince of Wales, who was represented by Sir William Carington, being sponsor for the younger.

A young woman has lately been bound over under the Probation Act, one of the conditions being "that she shall not go to music-halls or theatres of varieties." This savours to me of a perverted appetite. Can anybody explain to me the difference between a music-hall and a theatre of varieties? The idea of binding an individual not to participate in any particular form of recreation seems to be a new legal departure. Surely one need not be restrained from attending music-halls! An occasional visit to such places is I should fancy calculated to satisfy any sensible being for a very long time. I looked in on a London hall last week, and a more melancholy evening it would be impossible to conceive. How sadly is there needed a rational reform in our system of public entertainment, when we shall cease to have to pretend to be amused by vulgar comedians and red-nosed vocalists, who bore us to death, and whose forced gaiety and so-called humour is of a fairly low type?

"The Mystery of Edwin Drood" will terminate at His Majesty's next Saturday week, the career of Mr. J. Comyns Carr's play has been of but short duration. It is the fortune of war, however, and one can only hope that Mr. Tree's next production will enjoy greater prosperity. The very latest item of theatrical gossip is reported to be that Miss Phyllis Dare, who is at present playing "Cinderella" in Mr. Cambridge's pantomime at the Birmingham Royal, is to appear in London as Juliet. The lady is young, and like other young and beautiful members of the profession, is ambitious no doubt to be seen as Shakespeare's sweetest heroine. In Miss Dare's case, there is undoubted ability for this class of work.

Mr. Matheson Lang has received an offer from Messrs. Smith and Carpenter, of the Lyceum Theatre, to return to their house in the spring as "leading man." Mr. Lang's success as John Storm in "The Christian" naturally led to this. But what a pity that with an actor like Mr. Lang at hand, the Lyceum does not make some attempt at a revival of ancient glories. It seems astounding that such plays as "The Ticket-of-Leave Man" and "The Colleen Bawn," which are absolute novelties to the present generation, should continue to lie neglected on the shelf, when rubbish, masquerading as melodrama, floods the smaller towns. For instance was there ever a better or more stirring melodrama than "The Harbour Lights?"

As Aladdin, Miss Millie Legarde has made Mr. Robert Arthur a delightful principal boy. When I first remember this charming young lady she was second boy in a provincial pantomime, and since that time she has become one of London's first favourites in musical comedy. Playgoers will remember her in "The Girl from Kay's," "The White Chrysanthemum," and half-a-dozen other successes, and always as an artist of singular grace and attractiveness. As Aladdin, she has added another leaf to her chaplet of laurels.

The short winter season in London has come to an end and Society once more is scattered abroad in every direction. The rush to the Riviera has this year been unusually great, and those lucky people who were able to go out there for Christmas enjoyed all the delights of summer days during the festive season. But this foreign exodus is looked upon with great disfavour by the majority of tradespeople, who complain bitterly of the fashion which has lately grown up and is so rapidly spreading amongst all classes for wintering abroad. Such favourite resorts as Biarritz, Cannes, Nice, and the several skating centres in Switzerland which have become popularised by that most successful venture, the Public Schools Sports Club, have this winter been full to overflowing with English people, who regard a winter as well as a summer holiday as one of the necessities of everyday existence. Surely it is the Britisher's own fault if we at home do not compete with our foreign neighbours and establish some good centres for amusement at such places as Brighton or Eastbourne. Second-rate programmes of music in a dreary so-called "Winter Garden" afford little or no attraction to the week-end visitor, but a first-rate orchestra playing in a comfortable and properly-furnished hall where tea is served, and where there is plenty of space for walking about, or a big skating rink run on the same lines as Prince's, where visitors could not only skate themselves, but watch display performances by professional skaters, should prove attractive enough to draw a goodly crowd of people to the many half-deserted resorts which, prior to the days when there was such a hue and cry for amusement, flourished amazingly. It seems a pity that we allow the Continent to monopolize our pleasure-seekers, owing to our own inability to supply the demand for cheap and good hotel accommodation, and the present craze for amusement.

I wonder if the following characteristic story of Lord Kitchener, whose name figures in the New Year Honours under the letters K.G.C.I.E., has yet reached India. A young subaltern in charge of some construction work in the Punjab had the misfortune to lose some native workmen through an accident with dynamite. Fearful of a reprimand from headquarters, he telegraphed to the Commander-in-Chief, "Regret to report killing of twelve labourers by dynamite accident." Back came the laconic despatch, "Do you need any more dynamite?" I say "yet reached India," as possibly in nine cases out of ten all the so-called "true stories" are fabricated in other climes than those in which the plot is laid.

Perhaps there is more in "diabolo" than meets the eye. County councils are keeping a watch on the new game, for the "reel" is a formidable implement, and should it "meet the eye" of a pedestrian in a public park the unfortunate person would have good cause to remember the occurrence. But there is science in "devil gambo," as MM. Marcel and Philippart, now appearing at the Palace, conclusively show. These athletes play a very keen game, the sharp returns of the whirling implement causing much interest among the spectators, many of whom have probably experimented with the new art and given it up as a hopelessly bad job. We are informed that this agile pair hope to establish the game in England. It is already established in several public thoroughfares, much to the inconvenience and danger of passers-by. As to its scientific development, it would be hazardous to prophesy, but the Palace exhibition is extremely exciting, and well worth the notice both of experts and the indifferent.

At the inquest on the sixteen children who were killed at the entertainment at Barnsley, the jury found that their deaths were due to negligence in not providing a sufficient staff to guard the gallery staircase. In future the contingency will surely be provided against, and the public spared the repetition of such a harrowing tragedy as occurred at Barnsley.

The bioscope is now no longer a mere entertainment. It has become an evening record, and surely forms a pleasanter method by which we may regale ourselves with the events of the day, than the older, if more orthodox, plan of skimming our evening paper. Par example, it was possible last week to step into the Empire and see the skating in the Fen country produced in a series of quite astonishing pictures, before it was many hours old. The terrible calamity in America through the explosion of the cinematograph at Boyertown, Pennsylvania, very naturally gives rise to a reflection as to the safety of our own theatres where these exhibitions take place. In conversation with the manager of the Empire, it was stated that such a calamity as that which has overtaken America is not merely improbable at his house, but it is absolutely impossible. The regulations affecting the bioscope, imposed by the London County Council, are stringent, and the management looks to it that they are carried out to the letter. Not only is the operator enclosed in an iron framework, precluding all possibility of danger, but a fireman is present in his immediate vicinity throughout the entire performance.

It is satisfactory to note in connection with the case of cruelty at York, Mr. Rushworth has been dismissed from his office as Secretary to the York Education Committee. The member who moved the resolution for his dismissal, very properly remarked that "the Secretary dealt with York citizens for failing to send their children to school while he himself had in his house two children of school age whom he used as household drudges without payment and without sending them to school." Every right minded person will surely agree with the speaker that this fact alone was sufficient in itself to justify the resolution to dismiss him.

The interest which has been aroused by the proposal to form a new Society for the destruction of vermin was demonstrated by the large attendance, which included a number of ladies, at the meeting held in the Whitehall Rooms, Sir James Crichton Browne presiding. This gentleman intimated that letters sympathising with the object of the Society and strongly recommending simultaneous action in large areas had been received from a number of gentlemen of high position in the scientific world. He therefore urged the necessity of a national campaign against rats. Besides being amongst the most destructive of animals, the rat had other criminal propensities. Trichinosis was really to be traced to the rat, and in Denmark and Germany powerful societies had been formed for the extermination of the rodent. It was, moreover, now clear that the rat was mainly instrumental in the propagation of plague. It was now fully established that the plague was carried to the human being by intermediaries in the form of fleas, the rat must be exterminated in every affected district. This might seem a large order, considering the prodigious fecundity of the rat, one pair producing 800 descendants in the course of the year; but even in India much might be done to prevent the conveyance of disease by it. If they were to deal practically with this matter they must put a pecuniary value upon the rat. In fact the programme of the Society ought to be no quarter to the rat, and if they wanted an appropriate motto it might perhaps be taken from "Hamlet"—"A rat, a rat. Dead for a ducat."

Review.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF THE HAPPY VALLEY.*

The perusal of a diary of some trip to foreign climes is more often than otherwise of interest only to the actual author, and to his immediate circle of relations and acquaintances. The diary of a tour in such a well-trodden region as Cashmere must be, in itself, something considerably more than mediocre to warrant its publication. We must own that it was with decided feelings of scepticism that we picked up A Holiday in the Happy Valley, but a glance at its 340 odd pages assured us that the contents of the volume rose undeniably above the stratum of generality. The reliability of a diary is solely dependent on its accuracy. Such accuracy is only obtainable by recording on the spot the impressions that strike the retina, otherwise accuracy is sacrificed to imagination. The writer has borne in mind this rule and the results are most creditable.

The English-speaking nation, taken as a whole, is imbued with the spirit of travel and conquest. Though these instincts may be lying dormant, it requires only a particular combination of circumstances to rouse them into full action. How is it then that the Britisher is not met with on travel-bent in such large numbers as representatives of other less nomadically-inclined nationalities. Is it not the fact that he is not possessed of the faculty of making a start? Once the machinery has been set in motion the remainder is plain sailing. The piecing together of the mechanism is the obstacle that debars the Englishman from launching out in the to him unknown. A study of A Holiday in the Happy Valley should go far to induce the traveller to bend his footsteps in the direction of that enchanting land. The initial barrier as mentioned above, is rendered passable by an exhaustive list of articles, indispensable to the comfortable outfit of the prospective tourist. Turning to the recital of actual experiences, passing events have been chronicled in a manner that must appeal to the reader, and if he has not already done so, the realistic descriptive effects should go far to fire him with a desire to explore in person the paths of that fair "Garden of the East." To the oldstager a perusal of the passages relative to the depiction of well-known scenes will touch a familiar chord, and will light up memories of similar adventures encountered under analogous circumstances. Passing scenes have been caught in a far from amateurish style by the facile brush of the author, and the 24 coloured illustrations form one of the most pleasing features of the volume. In Appendix IV. is detailed a precis of the expenses incurred during the nine months' trip and this account should prove of great help to the would-be visitor. The value of the book is greatly enhanced by the addition of an ample index and instructive series of notes, and also by a map of Cashmere. We can recommend this pleasantly-written and admirably illustrated narrative to those of our readers on whom the glamour of the Happy Valley has fallen.

Fishing.

FISHING IN ILLINOIS.

The party, concerning whose depredations upon the finny denizens of the deep I am about to give some account, comprised two lawyers, one minister, and myself. We set forth in a double-seated buckboard one fine afternoon in October from the city of Quincy, Ill., being provided with poles, lines, hooks, sinkers, and plenty of bait.

We directed our course to a point some ten miles from the city over a very dusty road, whose clayey surface from lack of rain had become converted into a fine, white powder, which, when rolled up by the wheels, floated in vast clouds in front and rear, and covered us with a tenacious deposit, to such a degree that we looked like a party of millers long before we arrived at our destination.

The sloughs where we intended to fish were deep pools of water, formed by the overflow of the "Father of Waters" in the spring, and while they were at this time low, they never ran dry, and always contained an abundance of crappies and also striped and black bass.

Upon our arrival, having safely disposed of horses and buckboard, we proceeded to prepare our tackle for business. The poles that we had were of bamboo, full twenty feet long, unjointed, and the lines had never been strung. As the lines were new, I did not wish to cut mine, and although there must have been full fifty yards of it, I wound it carefully around the pole from the butt upward toward the top, and after considerable lapse of time and tax to patience, had all ready for my first essay in Illinois waters.

On looking around me, I found that the two lawyers had already fixed their tackle and were busily engaged in whipping the sloughs below me. But the parson had made a poor job of it in trying to attach his line properly to his pole, and had not yet succeeded in his task. Accordingly I handed over my rigging to the parson, and told him to go ahead, which, with hearty thanks he was only too ready to do, while I again went through the unwelcome task of stringing his line. I presume before I got through a good part of an hour had been consumed; but I felt that I had not travelled a thousand miles from Massachusetts to be skunked at fishing, even if I had opposed to me both the law and the gospel.

I accordingly looked around me, and proceeding to a basin beyond those my companions were occupied with, I cast my line into a favourable looking spot and soon felt a nibble. I struck, and found my bait was gone. I put on another with a like result; and so with several others, although the bait scarcely touched the water before some good fish seized upon it and made off with it. I then adopted a different method. I had been heretofore running my hook through the minnow just above his back fin, and so gave him the appearance at least of swimming off naturally. These minnows were very small—the smallest I ever fished with; but none larger could be procured, hence we took them.

Now I took one and passed the hook right through him, from mouth to tail, and upon making a cast was rewarded with a bite, which resulted in the capture of a very desirable crappie. They call them crappies out west, but they are really a fresh water bass, Pomoxys annularis.

Meantime, the two lawyers had taken some dozen of fish between them, mainly crappies, and one black bass, but neither had secured any striped bass. Lawyer Mac, on coming up to me, pointed out a huge trunk of a tree, which had fallen into the pool before me, and said, "Have you been out on that log?"

"No," said I, "I have not."

"Well, you better go out and try it; that's a good place for a crappie. I had a bite of a big one there the last time I came."

"Well," said I. "I will go and try for him."

It must be borne in mind that we all wore rubber boots, as the margin near the water was muddy; and moreover, there were places where wading was necessary as much as it would be in a trout stream. Mac went on his way and I went out upon the log. I found that it was as smooth and slippery as glass, and felt that if I should have a fish take hold of my line the only way I could land him would be by throwing him over my head, for, if I undertook to turn around on that log, I knew I should go in. The water was as cold as ice, and we were a long way from home and with no change of apparel, so it would never do to catch a fish from the end of that log. So deciding, I cautiously, and with considerable difficulty, withdrew from my perilous position and safely reached the shore.

I then went on a little farther, and selecting a place by which Mac had gone without making trial, I threw in. I was soon rewarded with a notable bite, and brought to bag a fine striped bass of upward of half a pound weight. I continued fishing in that one spot until I had caught thirteen bass, without moving. In the meantime my friend, Anderson, the parson, approached and he had not caught a fish. I heard him calling to Davis, and saying that I was having fine sport, so I beckoned to him to come up, and said, "Here, Anderson, you take my place, and my word for it, you will soon catch a bass."

He did not wish to take my place; but I insisted, and he threw in. Almost instantly he had a bite and landed a bass. Again he made a cast, but when he pulled in his line he snagged it. This forced him to wade in to detach it, and after that he never had another bite. He pressed on and continued to fish, following the banks in the direction which had previously been taken by Mac.

Presently I saw Mac returning. He had a fine string of fish, but only one or two bass among them. He asked me if I had caught the fish off the big log. I told him I had not.

He accordingly stepped bravely out in his rubber boots upon the slippery surface of the fallen monarch, and, arriving at the end, threw his line far out beyond its extremity. He had not long to wait before there was a stout tug at the line, and he hooked his fish. With a mighty sweep he drew the fish out of the water and succeeded in throwing him to the shore. But, as he turned to come back, his feet slipped out from under him, and he came down upon his stomach directly across the log, with his legs hanging one side thereof, and his arms and head the other. Both legs were wet nearly to his middle, and both arms up to his armpits, but he secured his fish.

Upon counting the score the number of striped bass secured by the rest of the party was considerably less than I had secured alone. Hence I felt rewarded for my patience in stringing the lines.

As the day was now drawing to a close, we made tracks for our team, put aboard our poles, fish, and remaining bait, and taking our places, started back toward Quincy again. We had got to a very narrow place in the road, when just emerging at the brow of the opposite hill, we saw a carriage drawn by two horses enveloped in a cloud of dust, coming toward us at a furious pace. The occupants of the vehicle were evidently of a hilarious disposition, and were singing at the tops of their voices as they swept by us at top speed, without turning out an inch by the way. We had drawn out to one side as far as we could and felt a little anxious about the outcome, but there fortunately was no falling out about it, and again turning our noses to the central line, we rapidly speeded to our headquarters for the night.

I will merely say that the next morning we had some of the fish fried for breakfast, to which the good parson was invited; and I thought that he enjoyed the meal as well as any of us, for he did ample justice to the fish and the accompanying dishes, as did we all.—Arms and the Man.

THREE CARDINAL FEATURES OF THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY.

One Subscriber writes: "An absolutely indispensable book to all lovers of history." Another says: "Its scholarship and the vast range of its authorities in all languages must commend the work to all intelligent persons."

It is not possible adequately to describe this great new work because no description can do justice to its absorbing interest, its scope, its variety, its authority, its charm or to those features of its plan and contents which ensure its lasting utility. Adjectives are cheap and abundant, but not necessarily convincing. Next to an actual inspection, of a complete set of the volumes themselves, perhaps the best way to help the reader of this notice to comprehend the nature of the work, is to give a bold outline of its principal features, such as the following:—

A History of all Peoples—Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians—Ancient Greeks and Romans—Mediæval and Modern Worlds—The Occident and the Orient—Minor Nations of all ages.

OFFERED IN INDIA BY
The Times (London).

The entire set of 25 Volumes despatched immediately for Cash in full or per V.-P. P., or for a first payment of Rs. 5 and Monthly Payments of Rs. 7, Rs. 8 or Rs. 9.

This is a Temporary Offer, and will soon be withdrawn and prices will be advanced.

A Specimen Volume upon Application.

The offer of the work in this country is made in the conviction that it will most admirably meet the wants of a large number of Anglo-Indians and the better educated Indians. It is a work any one of whose volumes will exactly suit the man who craves the delight of that intellectual companionship that is inseparable from the reading of good books. It is a work that affords endless enjoyment for the occasional reader, or for the man who can give only the half hour before dinner to a book that will repay him. The long Indian day and the isolation of stationlife will be made brighter with these well-stored volumes at hand in which the reader may roam at will over the whole world or by the aid of which he may review or enlarge his historical studies of an earlier day.

In order to introduce the work quickly, "THE TIMES" will send a complete Specimen Volume to any responsible person, postage paid, for delivery to his address and return to us. The only obligation the applicant will incur is to take reasonable care of the book and to despatch it to us within seven days.

Formal Application for a Specimen Volume.

NOTE.—It is not necessary to cut this form, but in sending on an application, its phraseology should be followed).

The "TIMES," 6, Dalhousie Spuare, Calcutta.

Please send, without expense to me, for delivery or return, a Specimen Volume of the Historians' History of the World. I agree to take reasonable care of it and return it to you within seven days. It is understood that you will send me a stamped label to be used for returning the package.

LANG

HIGH VELOCITY

CORDITE RIFLE.

VELOCITY* 2,250 ft. sec.

"FIELD." March 23, 1907: "The material increase in velocity which has been obtained shows that the revised specification of loading gives an enhancement of velocity which should prove of great value to the sportsman.

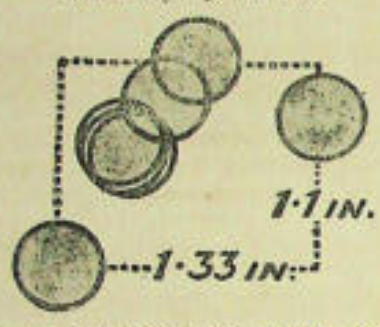
GREAT STRIKING ENERGY.

MINIMUM RECOIL.

Expressly designed to replace ·450 Bore Rifles, the importation of which into India is now prohibited.

"FIELD." March 23, 1907: ". . . A very valuable advance has already been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

The best DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.



Seven shot at 100 yards with Lang's ·470 Sporting Rifle. Reproduced full size.

Full particulars on application.

LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY CORDITE RIFLE.

An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD."

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

Mr. V. G. Weatherall of Purneah sends us the following letter:—

I am much pleased with the "Lethal" bullets invented by you and can recommend them for either choke or cylinder barrels. I can vouch that they deal a smashing blow and would stop anything, which one could not rely on a shot gun doing prior to this invention. I only wish I had had them in some of the big shoots in Nepal, for I have often lost a chance as I never relied with confidence on my gun as an auxiliary. In my opinion they will bring shot guns more into use for ball than they are at present, especially with the advantage of firing out of either choke or cylinder barrels. I have used a good many of the "Rotary" bullets, which are good, but these are a vast improvement on them. I am sure any sportsman who use the "Lethal" bullets will soon have faith in them. You are at liberty to use this letter if you desire to do so.

Third Day, Wednesday, 5th February 1908.

THE meeting, which was brought to a close to-day, has been more than ordinarily successful. This was perhaps a foregone conclusion, but the Stewards and all the officials concerned have worked very hard in its interests.

The card on the concluding day consisted of eight events, in all of which excellent sport was witnessed. It is many a long day since so many favourites came in, and backers who suffered serious reverses on Cup Day, were overjoyed. The two chases provided some good riding and were both won by amateur riders. The only upset of the afternoon occured in the Goomtee Plate, in which the cup horses were entered. Devon's win in this event was something of surprise, he Circus Girl and Fabius were giving him two and one sto respectively. It is a pleasure to record the fact that the cing has been carried through without a single accident—a ing which is rare in the case of the big meetings at Lucknow.

The Lieutenant Governor, Lady Hewett and Miss Hewett and Sir E. and Lady Locke Elliot were among those present to-day. The attendance, however, showed a noticeable diminution.

The Indian Civil Service were "at home." The Oxfordshire Light Infantry would have had a tent on the ground, but for the fact that they have cancelled all their engagements in consequence of the lamentable death of the late King of Portugal, who was Colonel in Chief of the Regiment. The Royals' band took the place of the Oxfords for the same reason.

It should be mentioned that the Stewards did not overlook the incident in the Stewards' Cup on the first day of the meeting in which Flotsam, who ran second, failed to weigh in. In addition to losing second place, Thomas, the trainer was fined Rs. 200 and the jockey J. Trenoweth, Rs. 50.

LUCKNOW THIRD EXTRA MEETING, 1908.

First Day, Friday, 7th February.

THERE was a diminished attendance to-day, and though a card of seven events had been provided, there was little zest in the racing, for the bookmakers laid odds on all the favourites, who in the majority of cases won easily; a few unwary people backed outsiders, but were soon sorry for their temerity. Many refrained altogether from doing business, for the issues were cut and dried. Sir John and Lady Hewett were present, also the Maharaja of Balrampur and many Indian sportsmen of note. Most of the stables left at the close of the Spring Meeting for Bombay and the principal jockeys have also departed.

THE ARAB HANDICAP.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 75 to the second, and Rs. 25 to the third. A handicap for Arabs 14-2 and under. 1 mile.

BOVRIL & MILK

is especially suitable for growing children; it is easily assimilated when milk alone cannot be digested.

Second Day, Monday, the 10th February.

The wind up of the meeting furnished some excellent sport, in spite of attenuated fields, and it was a pity the gathering on the course was so small.

A sporting event which brought the card to a close, was a match between Mr. Miles' Dandelion and Mr. Turners' Stepma—pony vs. horse—in which the former, who was well backed, won with comparative ease.

I am able to state that Mr. E. S. Deane has been appointed Secretary of the Lucknow Races with effect from 1st April, in succession to the late Major J. H. Knox. The new Secretary has trained and ridden at Bombay and Poona since 1903, and has ridden and trained a few winners every year. The way he has discharged his duties here as clerk of the course and scales shows him to be a hard and energetic worker, and he has a thorough knowledge of the rules of racing.

The next racing in Lucknow—the autumn meeting—is to take place about the third week of November. It will not, as far as is known at present, be preceded by a Gymkhana. The Lucknow race course will consequently enjoy a long spell of rest, and there will be plenty of time to bring it to a state of perfection, providing the Monsoon is a good one, and also to carry out several improvements to the course which are under the consideration of the Stewards.
