THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

No man wearing a summer suit and straw hat would have been counted out of season at Hurst Park last Friday, where the sun shone with a fervour far more suggestive of late spring. The meeting was more fortunate than Haydock, and the course, though a bit on the holding side, was dry, and the small fields of the Northern meeting swelled into a volume of runners that gave a wholesome fillip to the card and kept business at a brisk degree throughout. Glad to resume once more their favourite avocation, sportsmen kept the specials from Waterloo well filled, and the attendance all round was a strong one.

Fog looked like playing its part at Hurst Park on Saturday, but the sun resumed his innings again, and quickly took charge of affairs, giving us a glorious day's sport—few and far between in January. London again rallied round one of its favourite meetings in force, the Saturday half-holiday division helping the second day's attendance to exceed the capital muster of the opening day, and the good example set in the Members' Enclosure was followed in Tattersall's and the further rings. That we have not seen that last of such weather as is generally appropriate to this season of the year was proved by a hoar frost on the previous night, which, melting, left the grass as wet as after heavy rain, and the going, cutting up soft, was a bit lumpy and holding, but still of the best that the circumstances would allow anywhere.

MANCHESTER.

Towards midnight the fog had so thickened that belated pedestrians were groping as helplessly as were Londoners last Saturday, in Cimmerian darkness; and sportsmen bitterly thought of the Tuesday. That "you never know your luck" is a true enough axiom, and a brighter morning encouraged hopes that were to be realised, a bit of a breeze clearing away the fog effectually enough to allow of racing to take place and to be seen round half the course, the thick end being, of course, at the Irwell bend. That the meeting was handicapped by Monday's postponement there is no doubt, but, all things considered, the attendance was a very fair one, all round, mainly recruited from the district. Thanks to the hay covering, on which over 150 men had been at work on the previous day—and here the unemployed came in with a local strike for 2s. 6d. a man, by the way—the course had turned out in grand order, having escaped both rain and frost, and better going could not have been desired. Plenty of horses were on the spot, and capital sport was afforded.

WINDSOR.

Windsor had not much to boast of in the way of weather, which was dull and raw, but then on the previous day the fog had been almost like a "London particular," so the executive had to be thankful for small mercies. A flat had gone forth from the South-Western that trains must be punctual, and their service was all that could be desired, with a rattling run out and home. The attendance yesterday was a fairly good one all round, and some capital sport was enjoyed. Fields panned out exceptionally well, and the course was in good order; but the insidious fog made strong advances, and very little could be seen of the last three events on the card. Backers were pretty well on the mark, though they failed to land on favourites except in two instances.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

ALTHOUGH the First Division and Second Division Football League clubs all brought off their fixtures, four Southern League games were either unfinished or abandoned through fog, at places as widely separated as Bristol, Brighton, Swindon, and Portsmouth. A start was made at Portsmouth, but at half-time, when the home club were leading Northampton 1—0, further play was deemed impossible. At Swindon, where Queen's Park Rangers were the visitors, thirty-three minutes of the second half had elapsed, and neither side had scored, when the referee ordered the teams to leave the field. The Brighton vs. Southampton game lasted but ten minutes, and the Bristol Rovers vs. Leyton match was not begun, but it is curious that at Bristol the International Rugby fixture between England and Wales was decided, the fog notwithstanding. In the six Southern League games that were brought to a conclusion scoring was low, the twelve teams obtaining only 10 goals and 4 of these were registered in one game. Home clubs had a poor time, as only one of the six obtained 2 points, Brentford beating Reading by the only goal scored.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

Bradford and Plymouth Argyle, second and third respectively in the Southern League table, were both checked on Saturday. Bradford who had to meet Norwich City, should on League form have won with comparative ease, but the visitors gave a plucky exhibition, and returned with half the spoils. Bradford have now taken part in eleven drawn games, seven of them on their own ground, where they have not yet been defeated. Plymouth Argyle were expected to somewhat easily overcome Luton at the Beds town, but as the game went they were fortunate to escape a reverse. It must not, however, be overlooked that for a portion of the game they lacked the services of Ingham, their centre-forward. R. M. Hawkes, the captain of the home team, gave further evidence of his versatility by playing at inside right. Congratulations to Brentford on winning their first match since 7th December, and the two points will do the club some good. With loss of form there has been a marked decline in the support accorded the club, but this makes matters worse, and the crowds should roll up, and thus encourage the directors in their efforts to provide first-class football in the district. The greatest surprise of the afternoon was West Ham's win over Crystal Palace, at Sydenham, for the East Enders had not been doing much away from home, while the Palace had not lost a home game since September. West Ham have obtained four points from the Glaziers this season, and the only consolation afforded the latter is that in the Western League they have returned the compliment. Millwall, so far from repeating their last season's sensational feat against Watford, could only play their visitors to a draw, but Tottenham reproduced their September score against New Brompton, and thus won on the Gillingham enclosure by 2 goals to 1. This win was the more unexpected because the 'Spurs had not won away from home for over two months, and New Brompton only seven days earlier had performed so brilliantly against Sunderland. Truly, football form defies analysis.

League Division I.

The three southern clubs in the First Division of the Football League cut a sorry figure on Saturday. An aggregate of 10 goals was scored against them, and not one could they muster in response. The defeats of Bristol City and Woolwich Arsenal by Newcastle United and Manchester City respectively were anticipated, but what a shock was the emphatic overthrow of Chelsea on their own ground by Nottingham Forest! Certain clubs never do well against certain other clubs. The fact is well known and often commented upon in football circles. There has never been a satisfactory explanation of so singular a circumstance, and there never will be. Without pursuing further the abstract, the latest concrete case to illustrate the fact alluded to is Nottingham Forest and Chelsea. Twice last season the Pensioners had to metaphorically bend the knee to the Foresters. The latter obtained their largest score in this season's League football on 21st September, on their own ground, their 6—0 win on that occasion being at Chelsea's expense, and on Saturday the Foresters scored their first away win of the campaign by the convincing figures of 4—0, and Chelsea were the victims. It is passing strange, and the figures must be left to tell their own story. In addition to Chelsea two home clubs were beaten, and both were unexpected. Birmingham, unable to defeat West Bromwich on their own ground in mid-week, beat their great rivals, Aston Villa, at Aston, on Saturday, this being their first success on foreign soil since 28th September, and the second in the current tournament. Then Sheffield Wednesday, who for two months had not captured two points in one afternoon away from home, defeated Notts County at Trent Bridge. To add to the sensations of the afternoon Manchester United, who have so easily distanced all their rivals, succumbed to Sheffield United at Bramall-lane, where only two day's earlier Swindon had succeeded in the F.A. Cup. Then we have Bury's great victory over Everton and Middlesbrough's return to form, as noteworthy incidents of the afternoon. It was a day of eventful happenings in the first division of the league.

League Division II.

The Second Division was not without events of more than usual interest. The best performance stands to the credit of Fulham, who, on the ground where Bristol City were defeated in mid-week in the F.A. Cup, outplayed Grimsby in every department, and won by four clear goals. Cup tie successes have a strange effect on some teams, for Hull City, whose brilliant win over Woolwich Arsenal on Thursday was an unpalatable dish for the South, went to Burnley, and were quite out of the bill. Five time the Lancastrians pierced their defence, without response. One of the most stubborn games of the afternoon was at Homerton, where the popular West Bromwich Albion team strove desperately to win. Clapton Orient were just as keen, hence the battle royal which followed. It was a most inspiriting game, and the home team gave further evidence of improvement; indeed, so well did they shape against their famous opponents that they would not have had more than their just deserts had both points been in their possession at the close. The Albion were a trifle lucky to draw. Derby County and Oldham Athletic continue their conquering careers, and the latter made no mistake with Bradford City. As Leeds City were also defeated at home, Yorkshire second division clubs did not have a rosy time on Saturday, the only success standing to their credit being Barnsley's 2—1 win over the wooden spoonists.

Association Cup.

Brighton and Hove Albion, 1; Preston North End, 0., (replayed tie).

One goal scored thirty-five minutes from the start sufficed to give Brighton and Hove Albion a victory over Preston North End at Stamford Bridge on Monday. Really more decisive than the result suggests, the win went to much the superior side. Apart from Rodway and Lockett their backs, and Lyon, the left half, the Preston team played in disappointing style. After the first few minutes their forwards found it impossible to make much headway against a strong set of halves and backs, who worked together admirably. Bond, the famous outside right, still troubled by his injured knee, put in one good centre just at the start, but for the most part did nothing, few opportunities coming his way. Occasionally clever passing suggested that the Lancashire team would settle down to effective football, but smart combination was rare on either side, the Brighton forwards being very little better than the opposing front line, considering how often they got the ball, thanks to the excellent support accorded them. Throughout, feebleness in attack marked the game, which became absolutely dull during the greater part of the second half. By failing to increase their lead when having so much of the play, the Albion ran a great risk, and just on time Lyon, putting in one of the few good shots of the match, barely missed equalising. The Brighton team had been deprived of a well-deserved triumph on Thursday owing to the light failing at Preston, and they would have been very unfortunate had extra time again been necessary in this, the third meeting of the teams.

RUGBY RULES.

England v. Wales.—Played on Saturday last, Wales winning by 28 points to 18.

The fog was not sufficiently dense to interrupt the view of the game when Hammond kicked off for England sharp to time, while there was no wind, and the ground was in excellent order. Watts marked from the kick-off, and Winfield kicked into touch on the English side of the centre. The Welsh forwards wheeled the first scrum, but Peters checked the threatened advance by fly-kicking into touch. Bush broke away, and after gaining some ground, made a clever cross-kick, but Gabe failed to gather the ball, and thus early a good chance was lost by Wales. As it was, a scrum was formed close to the English line, but the fog was already beginning to grow dense, and it was not easy to follow the play. Wales got the ball, however, and Bush sent Williams away, but he was well held by Hudson, while the English forwards took the ball to the twenty-five flag. Trew just after kicked against one of the English forwards, but he regained possession, and started a bout of passing which ended in Gabe knocking-on just as the movement was getting dangerous.

Wales were penalised, and an exchange of kicks ended in Lambert finding touch at the centre. The Welsh forwards broke away, but Wood made a fine save and kick, which found touch near the centre. England were penalised for offside, and Winfield kicked into touch near the English twenty-five flag. Wales were getting the ball, but two bouts of passing broke down through a knock-on in one case and a pass forward in the other. Bush made another fine opening just afterwards, but Wood tackled Williams. From the ensuing scrum Vile passed to Bush, who at some twenty-five yards range dropped a very pretty goal after play had been in progress for nine minutes. Gibbs marked in reply to the kick-off, and found touch at the centre. From the ensuing scrum Bush again set his backs going, but Wood held Williams. England were pressed, and in their eagerness to spoil, someone got offside about fifteen yards from the line, and near touch. Winfield took the place and landed a very pretty goal, thus giving Wales a lead of 7 points when the game was twelve minutes old.

The English forwards got in front of the ball on resuming, and a scrum was ordered at the centre. This England carried, and got into Welsh territory for the first time. Their stay was brief, however, although how Wales got back to the English quarters was hidden by the fog. Wales continued to control the scrums, and a fine bout of passing looked likely to culminate in a score. Gabe held on, however, instead of passing to Trew or Gibbs, who were unmarked, and was tackled. Another bout, initiated by Bush, ended in Williams being tackled by Wood, who was playing a great game. A fine bit of play by Trew ended in Gabe being held just on the line—a very near thing. A further Welsh score was not long delayed, however. Bush broke away from right to left, and after beating three or four men, threw wide to Gabe over Trew's head, when the defence was concentrating on the Swansea player. This clever bit of play met with its reward, Gabe running in with a good try for Winfield to place a goal and give his side a ten points lead fifteen minutes after the start.

This third reverse roused England, the forwards rushing the ball to the other end. Nothing could be seen of the play, although a sudden storm of cheers announced that England had scored. The try-getter was Williamson, and the try was the result of very pretty combination by the English half-backs. Roberts kicked a goal. One Welsh breakaway excepted, England had the better of the game for some time, although of the actual play nothing could be seen. At length one got a glimpse of a white-jerseyed figure dashing through the gloom. This was Lapage, a second storm of cheers confirming the view that he had scored. Roberts failed with the place kick, so that only four points now divided the sides after play had been twenty-eight minutes in progress. The subsequent play was lost in the fog for a time, the only incident observable from the Press-box being a good chance which came to Lambert from a cross-kick. He was well tackled by Gibbs, however, just as he was into his stride. England once appeared to be in, but a scrum on the line was ordered. Lapage made one fine run at this stage, but was held on the line.

At length the Welsh forwards loomed through the fog with the ball at their toes. The rush gave Wales complete relief, in spite of a plucky save and good kick to touch by Lambert. A bout of Welsh passing in which all the backs shared took the game to the English twenty-five flag, Lambert finally checking a threatening advance by forcing Gibbs into touch—a fine example of the value of pace in defence. Just afterwards the Harlequin fumbled a cross-kick and nearly let Trew clear away. Peters was penalised at this point for very obvious offside, and Winfield just failed to land a goal, the ball dropping short of the bar. The drop-out took the game to the centre, where indifferent marking at a line-out enabled Brown to breakaway. He ran some distance, and then passed wide to Bush, who ran in for Winfield to fail at the place kick. Half-time arrived just after with the score:—

The fog was so dense, and play was so much confined to the far end and far side of the field from the Press-box, that a detailed account of the play, with any pretensions to accuracy, is out of the question. All exchange of kicks, which ended in Lambert finding touch at the centre, was visible, but a bout of Welsh passing took the game to the English line, and hence out of view. All that was known was that Wales were having the better of the game, and were pressing. At length a penalty-kick took England to the centre, where Williamson broke away very cleverly, and after beating Bush and Trew, passed to Peters, who was promptly held by Gibbs before he could re-pass to Williamson or cross-kick. Hudson and Winfield were in turn conspicuous by clever kicks, while Bush cleverly intercepted a pass from Williamson to Peters but kicked to touch instead of going on. This took Wales back to the English twenty-five, and once more the play was lost in the fog. Williamson gave England temporary relief, but a good kick by Winfield took Wales back to the English twenty-five. Here Bush cross-kicked, and the ball bouncing luckily for Trew (so it subsequently transpired) when both English centres were running for it, the Welsh centre was left with a clear run in. Winfield failed at the place.

This was fifteen minutes after the resumption, so that with twenty-five minutes left for play Wales had a lead of ten points. The advantage was speedily reduced to five points. An English rush, apparently started by the breakdown of a Welsh movement, took the game to the centre. Here, after Bush had set his backs going in a movement that ended in Wood tackling Williams, clever play by the English half-backs gave Birkett an opening. Of this he made the most. He easily beat both the Welsh centres and Winfield but had to run his hardest to keep ahead of Bush, who followed him to the line, but was unable to overtake him. It was a great effort on the part of the English captain, and deserved all the cheers which it drew. Roberts kicked a goal, so that with twenty minutes left for play only five points now divided the sides.

Play on resuming from the centre was mostly at the far side and far end, and little or nothing could be seen. At length there was a burst of shrill Welsh cheering, due, it transpired, to Gabe scoring a try from a wide pass by Bush. Winfield kicked a goal and Wales were once more ten points ahead. Wales got another try by Gibbs from a cross-kick a few minutes before the end, and Winfield kicked a goal. England were not done with, however, and a final effort by the forwards took the game to the Welsh line where Birkett scored a try from a clever repass by Lambert. Roberts kicked a goal, and a great game ended just after with the score:—

One very unexpected result occurred among the Rugby clubs in London on Saturday, London Hospital inflicting a defeat upon London Scottish. Until that match the Scottish enjoyed an almost uninterrupted run of success, the only teams to beat them having been the Harlequins and Glasgow Academicals, so that a win against London Hospital was fully anticipated. Outplayed, however, the Scotsmen had their line crossed three times without being able to score themselves. For the first twenty minutes they were without A. L. Wade, and during that time the Hospital obtained a try, but, even when the Scottish fifteen was complete, they failed to master their opponents. Lindsay and Heale, at half-back, gave a splendid display for the Hospital, while Palmer, on the wing, got through a lot of hard work with distinction. The outstanding figure on the side, however, was Monteith, who had most to do with the discomfiture of his fellow-countrymen. He tackled magnificently, and in the second half accomplished a remarkable performance. With Lloyd, the full-back, hurt, the Scotsmen were pressing strongly right on the Hospital line. Monteith, however, came away with the ball at his feet, and actually dribbled the length of the field for Kennedy to score a try. After that the substitute back was injured, but London Hospital, though playing only thirteen men, finished strongly, and Monteith scored a try, which Palmer converted. It was altogether a remarkable victory, and one which reflected great credit on the London men, especially as the Scottish were practically at full strength.

The meeting of Richmond and Blackheath was a very poor affair. Neither club was fully represented but that did not excuse the indifferent display given by both sides. From first to last the game proved little more than a scramble, Blackheath ultimately winning by a try, scored by Warden. Richmond had the best of the game after change of ends, but they threw away their chances time after time by wild passing, the three-quarters appearing to have the crudest ideas of how to push home an attack properly. At West Ham, London Welsh went down before Gloucester, the finish of the game being quite dramatic, with Gloucester scoring a dropped goal and a try in the last three minutes, and so snatching victory out of the fire. On the whole, the match was disappointing, the forwards keeping the game very close. Though without Birkett, Lambert, and Hammond, the Harlequins beat Rosslyn Park by 12 points to 8. The forwards were in capital form, and with Rosslyn Park playing well the match proved most enjoyable. Guy's Hospital got the better of Lennox at Wimbledon, but the latter gave their opponents a good game, the forwards tackling soundly and using their feet to advantage. Visiting Northampton, Old Merchant Taylors failed to hold their own, and London Irish were easily defeated at Portsmouth by United Services. Both sides were weak, the Osborne men of the Services team being unable to cross over owing to the fog.

BOXING.

Young Joseph v. Jack Goldswain.—Wonderland presented a wonderful spectacle on Monday night, packed as it was by a great audience to witness the struggle for supremacy between Jack Goldswain, of Bermondsey (the light-weight champion of England), and Young Joseph, of Aldgate. The battle has been on the tip of every boxing enthusiast's tongue ever since the match was ratified a match, it may be said, that had many important bearings in its result. Goldswain, quite a veteran at the game compared with his younger adversary, had the worst of the deal at a former meeting in November last, but keen devotees of the game, and the Bermondsey boxer himself, had many reasonable excuses to offer. But these points need not be enlarged upon, and on Monday evening the pair again met at 10st. 2lb., for a purse of £150, given by the promoter. According to the articles, the principals attended Wonderland during the course of yesterday afternoon for the purpose of weighing in, Joseph turning the scale at 10st. 2lb., and Goldswain at a pound less. Messrs. J. T. Hulls and E. A. Humphries were appointed referee and time-keeper respectively.

The relative merits of Goldswain and Joseph have long been a matter of much debate. How the Bermondsey boxer assumed the title of champion by reason of his triumph over Jabez White at the National Sporting Club in April 1906, is now a matter of history, but since that sensational victory fortune has not been too kind to him. American gold has its attraction but unfortunately for the Englishman matters did not materialise in the manner anticipated. On his return from the States, he scarcely had time to acclimatise when in a hurriedly-arranged affair Joseph upset his calculations and claimed a right to the championship. There was no dispute about Joseph's superiority on that occasion; he won almost all the way through a gruelling twenty rounds, and his many fine achievements in the ring fully warranted his elevation to the highest pedestal in his division in England.

At five minutes past ten Goldswain entered the ring, followed immediately by Joseph, a loud cheer heralding their arrival. The latter was seconded by Jacob Hyams, Bob Russell, Bill Natty, and Harry Fowler; while Goldswain was looked after by Ben Jordan, Andrew Jephtha, Jack Farley, and others. The Bermondsey boxer seemed rather finely drawn, while Joseph appeared in the acme of condition. At 10-15 the contest was begun.

Round 1.—Directly the gong sounded the pair closed. Standing high on his legs, Goldswain dashed in his left flush on the face, but Joseph swung his right hard on the ribs. Breaking away, the pair were at each other at once, and ducking splendidly, Joseph twice evaded two swinging blows. Reckless in his rushes, Goldswain staggered across the ring, and leaving himself very open, got into a dangerous position. The gong sounded at the end of two minutes and saved him.

Round 2.—The pair fought at race-horse speed, but Goldswain was wild in his deliveries, and had his adversary been smarter with the left considerable damage might have been done. Twice the referee had to separate the men, for they clinched at every opportunity. Thrusting out the left, Joseph caught his opponent hard on the eye, and in some scrambling exchanges he was easily on top. The pace was fast to the end of the round, which had been much in favour of the Aldgate boxer.

Round 3.—Darting after his opponent, Goldswain misjudged the distance, and before he could recover himself Joseph was after him. The latter was much stronger on his legs, and, boxing with better judgment, he gave more than he received. In some short-arm exchanges the Bermondsey lad brought off a few kidney punches, but these did not in any way affect Joseph, who boxed spiritedly to the close of the round.

Round 4.—Displaying fine headwork, Goldswain evaded several well-directed blows, but he fared better when fighting at long range. Mixing matters Joseph kept worrying his opponent, and adopting a crouching attitude he made himself a most difficult target for Goldswain. The pace still continued to be fast and the exchanges heavy, and Goldswain looked a bit distressed. Strong on his legs Joseph did all the forcing and kept adding to his lead.

Round 5.—Wild in his rushes the Bermondsey boxer was several times punished on the head for his trouble, but he worked his opponent into a neutral corner with hard left and rights on the head. Joseph played more for the body, and a short-arm under-cut shook Goldswain considerably. Several times the referee had to go between the men, as they hugged at every opportunity.

Round 6.—The exchanges opened in favour of Goldswain, but Joseph kept hustling him round the ring and giving him no rest. The ex-champion kept his left on the move, but Joseph was much the cleverer at short range, and kept driving both hands on the ribs. Towards the close Goldswain was on his knees, but he rose as strong as ever, and boxed merrily until the gong sounded.

Round 7.—Joseph continued to hold the upper hand, and improved his position with a left hard on the face. Goldswain retaliated a few seconds later with a grand body punch, and once more the East-ender acted on the aggressive. Rushing after his rival, Joseph kept fighting his opponent hard, and when the gong sounded Goldswain was seeking the refuge of the ropes, and showing signs of wear and tear.

Round 8.—Opening well with left and right on the head, Goldswain surprised his supporters, but not many seconds elapsed ere Joseph fought him all round the ring. Time after time, Joseph swung his right on the head, but the desired point could not be located. Goldswain was blowing hard when the gong sounded, and was badly used.

Round 9.—This was rather tame, as the boxers seemed tired from their exertions. Goldswain boxed with bad judgment, and scarcely ever got home his left when he tried for the face. On the other hand, Joseph was always certain of his distance, and a fine straight left found Goldswain's face just when the round ended.

Round 10.—At the opening Goldswain seemed to be short every time, with the result that he was always leaving openings, not one of which his opponent missed. On one occasion the Aldgate lad at close quarters got in a nice under-cut which proved effective. It staggered Goldswain, who yet again rushed against the ropes for protection. It was noticeable that the little work which the Bermondsey man put in was in the course of in-fighting.

Round 11.—The men fought with less speed than hitherto, but while Goldswain was quite palpably tiring, his opponent was perfectly fresh. Fighting at short range, Joseph was twice hit hard on the body, but he returned the compliment towards the close of the round, which was scarcely so much in his favour as the preceding ones.

Round 12.—Goldswain's right eye was almost closed when he stood up. Twice Joseph shook him with hard thumps on the nose, but clever two-handed work on both head and body by the Bermondsey man caused not a little surprise. The round closed with Goldswain fighting very hard, and having rather the better of the argument.

Round 13.—The spectators were raised to fever pitch when Goldswain gave a glimpse of his best form, and at every turn he met Joseph with telling blows. Hooking his left several times on the mouth, Goldswain drew blood, and his adversary now felt that the opposition was not to be trifled with. The blows of Goldswain had plenty of power behind them, but they failed to find the desired spot.

Round 14.—Dashing in with the left, Goldswain was just a trifle short, as he was a moment afterwards with a swinging right. His lack of distance on the latter occasion earned for him a right on the face, which did much to counter his chances. Still the Bermondsey lad was not done with, and kept mixing the business until the expiration of the two minutes.

Round 15.—Following a clinch Joseph darted in upon his opponent, and rushed him into a corner. Goldswain, however, was the master when it came to generalship, and his strategy in getting out of a most perilous position was a treat to witness. Joseph did not seem to be so much at ease now, and kept using his weight at every opportunity. Most of the aggressive work was done by Goldswain, and he displayed his best form.

Round 16.—Joseph got in a right on the side of the face, which he followed up with one for the jaw. The latter, however, was scarcely in the right direction, and Goldswain, catching his opponent on the hop, got in a few heavy digs on the ribs with the left. As the round was closing Joseph again essayed for the face, but this lacked sting, and when the gong sounded Goldswain was rapidly making up leeway.

Round 17.—The pace was set by Goldswain at express speed, and Joseph was at times a trifle puzzled at the rapid deliveries. Still the Aldgate lad played a fine defensive game, and guarded himself nicely, he was not in the least put about by his opponent's exertions.

Round 18.—Recognising that his only hope was a knock-out, Goldswain lured his opponent on with the left, and endeavoured to counter with the right on the point. Joseph was not slow to recognise this, and keeping his guard high, he did not give his opponent a chance.

Round 19.—Jumping in with left and right, Goldswain reached the head several times, but this did not disconcert Joseph in the least. Recognising that defence was the best method of attack, Joseph played the safety game all through, and, barring a miracle, the fight was his.

Round 20 and last.—Joseph made it quite apparent that he was going to risk nothing, and as he had everything to gain and nothing to lose by simply warding off his opponent's attack, he kept a safe position. Goldswain could not break through his opponent's guard at all, and the round ended amid tumultuous applause, as it was an absolute certainty the verdict was Joseph's.

ROWING.

UNIVERSITY BOAT RACE.

OXFORD.

THE practice of the Oxford crew yesterday afternoon was undertaken in cold weather, with fog in evidence towards the finish. Notwithstanding, there was a good attendance on the towing-path. No. 5 in last year's boat, J. A. Gillan, has definitely decided not to row again this term, by advice of his doctor. E. P. Evans, the Old Blue, accompanied the president, both being on horseback, and a satisfactory bit of work was got through. After Hope and Kitchin, and Heberden and Barker had been taken out tubbing, the composition of the Eight varied during the two usual journeys to Iffley and back. Majolier, after being superseded by Willink at No. 4 for the first spell, again occupied his seat at the interval, Willink in his turn standing down, and on this occasion last year's light boat was utilised. A stroke of 28 was maintained throughout the greater portion of the practice, but up to a certain point the form shown was none too good, the boat at times being the reverse of steady. However, the final run home was accomplished in improved style, the rate at the finish quickening to 29. The boat rolled very little, and had a much steadier appearance than in the second out journey. Revised names and weights:—

CAMBRIDGE.

Considerably improved weather prevailed early in the day at Cambridge yesterday, but before the 'Varsity crew had got up, and became very thick ere they had concluded their outing in the ship. As usual nothing was done during the morning, and after lunch Mr. Bushe Fox devoted a considerable time to Jerwood and Fairbairn, whom he had out for over half an hour. He also took Baynes and Williams for a brief outing. The work in the ship was similar to that undertaken during the past few days, the most important piece being a paddle over the Bridge to Bridge course. The crew were steadier, and at times paddled remarkably well. Fairbairn has not settled down to No. 2 place yet, being still rather clumsy with his hands over the stretcher, and he will have to improve if he wishes to retain his seat. Mr. Bushe Fox coached. BALLYGUNGE vs. ARYANS.—Played at Ballygunge on Saturday last, this match resulted in a draw in favour of the home team, who after scoring 122, captured 7 of their opponents' wickets for 77. Ballygunge made a very indifferent start, and it was only the efforts of Antram, Gould, Shorter and Eastgate (the two latter putting on 29 for the last wicket) that enabled the side to make any sort of a display at all; both McIntyre and Frost were given out leg-before-wicket to somewhat remarkable decisions, the ball hitting the latter on the back!

The Aryans' batting calls for no comment, J. Bagchi with 24 being top scorer. At one time, it looked as if Ballygunge might win on the post, but the steady defence of K. Bose and K. Bagchi saved their side from defeat. Scores:—

BALLYGUNGE vs. DUM-DUM.—Ballygunge were "At Home" to Dum-dum on Sunday last, and again scored an easy victory, winning in the most hollow fashion by 7 wickets and 24 runs. Winning the toss, Dum-Dum opened on a perfect wicket, with Lean and Sanderson, and in the course of about two hours' batting put together 158 before the last wicket fell; the chief contributors to this total were S. E. A. Whiteaway (who was not out with an excellent 53 to his credit), H. H. Lean 26, Captain G. H. Walker 17 and E. S. Smallwood 23. The wickets were shared by Yeoman and Horncastle, the former getting 4 for 46 and the latter, with his lobs, 5 for 32.

On Ballygunge going in, some extraordinary scoring was seen, as after Mytton had left, caught in the slips for 7, Horncastle, Sherman and Shallow did what they liked with the bowling and in the course of an hour and a quarter, put on no less than 282 runs, at which total the match was discontinued.

All three batsmen had lives accorded to them (both Horncastle and Sherman should have been caught and bowled by Wolfe-Murray, off very hot returns early in the proceedings) but chances are not uncommon when the attack are going for everything. Sherman was eventually caught and bowled by Pinkhard when 77, and Horncastle badly run out when 64. Shallow, however, put up another century (his third this season), and when stumps were drawn, was not out with exactly 100 to his credit compiled in half an hour. He hit with tremendous energy, scoring 24 (6 fours) in one over from Wolfe-Murray, and getting no less than 86 in boundary hits. The Dum-Dum bowling was very erratic, even Major Wolfe-Murray being unable to find his length. Score:—

Football.

THE WELSH MATCH: AFTERTHOUGHTS.

(By E. H. D. Sewell.)

"If we had played them in England we should have won" said a follower of football after the extraordinary not to say mysterious game against Wales at Bristol.

Footbally speaking I am not so sure that he was wrong. Wales "in Wales" are always twice as hard to beat as they are anywhere else and Bristol is only just over the dead-ball line so to speak. There were quite 10,000 followers from South Wales present and the foggy air was redolent of leek.

Best of all—for Wales—Bush was in form and that alone won the match. Had he been anything else, England would have swamped—literally swamped—Wales on the day.

Bush dropped a goal—he "made" the first Welsh try—he scored the second Welsh try himself—and his brilliantly timed left foot cross-kick "made" another try for Wales. Without him in form—or with any other outside half—Wales might have scored twice but it is possible they would only have scored once.

I know Bush did the things I have enumerated and I think he "made" the last try but one but, owing to the fog, am not sure whether the will o' th' wisp who beat two men before passing was Trew or Bush. A humble chronicler may be excused any mistake on a day such as that.

It is not accurate to state that our men got hurried during the first ten minutes and that was why Wales scored 12 points in the first quarter of an hour. The dropped goal was due to no flurry. The penalty goal was due to no flurry and the try whence the five pointer was scored was due to Bush, aided by our slow right wing. Slow in pace for the moment and in perception of what Bush was up to. Flurry, or loss of "head," had nought to do with those fatal dozen points.

It is an old Welsh trick to strike first. The luck of the game gave Bush the ball in a favourable position; for the most ardent Welshman will surely not argue that Welsh superiority at Rugby football worked up to that position; and his splendid drop kicking ability did the rest. First blow. It was unfortunate for England, but not due to inferiority at the game, that one of our team should be penalised within range as Winfield is a splendid place-kicker. Second blow.

Then the match began.

Uphill for us—but we have experience in this Winning for Wales—they also know how to play a winning game.

And the way our men played uphill will never be forgotten by the only man who saw them score 18 points, 3 solid goals and one try, against Wales in the teeth of a seven points lead very shortly to be made into 12 points—and the game barely awake! And he was the referee the Old Leysian Mr. J. T. Tulloch (President Scottish Union, 1906-07).

"Well played, Bush!" "Go it, Birkett!" cried the wags in the Grand Stand what time the deep throated boom from the far corner was our only weather cock.

One has since gleaned that R. H. Williamson was just as good for us as P. F. Bush was for Wales—except for first blood. That our forwards began a trifle too much on their own, lacking uniformity and cohesion, that Hudson on the right wing was too slow, and that but for Lambert's pace we should have had a couple more tries against us.

Mention of the fleet, Harlequin and Old Eastbourne boy reminds me that one of the few things I saw in the fog was a very clever bit of head work on his part for which he was soundly rated by the adjacent onlookers and abjured to "Go for the man with the ball.' Gabe was coming across from the left and had Trew and Gibbs on his right, all three opposing Lambert solus. Birkett had had enough to do with Bush. Lambert feinted to go for Gabe and then turned round and kept between Gabe and Trew all the while making both (and of course Gibbs) go nearer touch and slower and slower every yard. Had Lambert actually engaged Gabe the pass to Trew would have been made with plenty of elbow room for Trew and Gibbs to have beaten Wood, our last line of defence. As it was the attack was humbugged into trying to make the try doubly sure while all the time reinforcements were coming up and neither Trew nor Gibbs had in that particular movement anything at all to do with Wood. The attack was stopped before it reached Wood—simply because Lambert did not go for the man with the ball physically, but went for him with his brains and for the time being clean beat him. In spite of which he was scoffed at. A little knowledge is indeed dangerous.

The great afterthought of all is, however, that England has at last done something solid in the Rugby field. Those who like myself have followed English Rugby very closely for some time knew she could if her best team was selected and some of us whose duty it is to write without fear or favour have not hesitated to say so. I have seen every international but the Scottish defeat at Inverleith in 1906 in which England has played for the last four seasons and never until this match had her best fifteen been selected, not even when she played Scotland that fine game last season at Blackheath. It was most unfortunate that neither Vassall nor Kelly could play against Wales and though their absence may not have meant the difference between victory and defeat (Kelly's absence in this match was a most important one) England has now got a side which will beat Ireland and may repeat the 1906 victory at Inverleith. The majority are not old hands so that the future is bright and cheery. Enough for those who like myself were getting tired of seeing England occupy a position among the Rugby nations which was never deserved.

Boxing.

ALL-INDIA TOURNAMENT.

The All-India Boxing Tournament opened in the Central Gymnasium at Lucknow, on the night of the 1st instant. It was originally intended to limit the competitions to four nights, but so large were the entries, in view of the fact that the All-India Championship belts presented by Lieutenant-General Sir E. Locke Elliot, who is retiring this year, were to be competed for outright, that two extra evenings' boxing was held.

The Central Gymnasium hall and in which the tournament took place, was crowded on every occasion, the attendance consisting mainly of military officers, with a sprinkling of civilians. His honor the Lieutenant-Governor and the Government House party were present on two nights of the tournament, and witnessed the finals.

The decision of the finals took place on Friday, the 7th instant, and before distributing the prizes Sir E. Locke Elliot made a brief speech in which he referred to the strides made by the Tournament, the entries having risen from 54 in the first year to 120 in the present, and fourth year of its inception. He said that the contests had been fought in a most fair manner, and though he had had to disqualify a few men, their action was probably due to ignorance of the rules. Regarding the practice adopted by many of the regiments of forming small clubs, he thought that these clubs should be nurseries, where men could learn the art of self-defence and not be run for the purpose of gate-money. He was not averse to smoking, but he warned them against the practice of smoking cheap American cigarettes. To excel as boxers, it was necessary to eschew smoking altogether. He hoped, in conclusion, that their regiments would be proud of the men who had won the championship belts.

The officials were:—Referee:—Lieutenant-General Sir E. Locke Elliot, K. C. B., D. S. O. Judges: Captains H. G. Hyslop and Tudor.

The first two nights, 1st and 3rd instant, were occupied with the decision of the first round and the fighting was above the average, the feather and heavy-weights, notably, producing some fine exponents.

The second round was decided on the 4th instant; some rare good fighting was seen in which some of the best men were pitted against each other.

The competition reached the third stage on the 5th instant. An interesting incident is to be noted in this connection, an official high up in the Civil Service giving a prize of Rs. 10/- to Private Calloway, of the Queen's, who, though beaten by Lance-Corporal Yufa, East Surreys, in the feather-weights, and floored repeatedly took his punishment with admirable pluck, and came up each time smiling.

The third and fourth rounds were completed on the 6th instant, and on the 7th instant, the semi-finals and finals were fought.

The following are the results:—

Riding.

ON HORSE BACK.

The best thing for the inside of a man is the outside of a horse. Do you feel the need of exercise and lack the time and energy to take it? If you do, take up horseback riding. It is the best exercise known for those who have passed the age of competitive athletics, and is health-giving to all, young as well as old, women as well as men. Horseback riding is a sure cure for dyspepsia and all forms of stomach troubles, and a man with a healthy stomach must necessarily be in pretty good condition. There is an exhilaration that follows a ride to saddle that is not found in any other form of exercise, and any feeling of tiredness that comes will disappear as soon as you rest a little. That old saw, "The best thing for the inside of a man is the outside of a horse," is still true, and it is remarkable that more use is not made of this remedy.

Driving trotters or automobiles and riding bicycles are not in it with riding a galloper. Every minute spent in the saddle is beneficial, and the more you ride the better it is for you. A short ride before breakfast will insure a good appetite for the meal, but it is better to ride an hour or so after eating, and then take at least a couple of hours to it. But any sort of saddle riding taken at any time will surely help some if you are a man with business cares; it will refresh you and improve your general health in every way. Fleshy men will be reduced and thin men will take on flesh by regular riding to saddle. It will come nearer to rejuvenating your youth than anything else you can do, and at the same time you will be having the time of your life, if you go at it right. Don't try for style and punish yourself by riding a park trotter with an English saddle and short stirrups. That may be fashionable, but it is not comfortable, and once you learn to ride as you should it will not even look pretty to you. Get a McClellan army saddle, or, better still, a Mexican saddle with the high horn in front and wooden stirrups—one in which you can sit easily and comfortable all day if necessary. Set the stirrup straps the length of your arm, making it so that you can clear the seat when standing only a couple of inches. With such a saddle you will have no difficulty in learning to ride, even though you have never ridden before, and a couple of lessons at a riding academy to learn the proper way of mounting, dismounting and general directions about holding reins, etc., will be enough to set you going in the right direction. If your horse is a galloper and you keep off the hard pavements and much-used roads, you will not need any more riding lessons than you care to take, providing you always remember to keep your head up, heart up and arms close to your side. The saddle is made to sit on, so make sure that you sit on it. This may be a little difficult at first when for any reason you are forced to let the horse trot, for the temptation will be strong to do a lot of bobbing up into the air. This won't hurt you any, however, and it may help your digestion, and in time you will learn to keep your seat, no matter what gait the horse takes.

In large cities with their magnificent parks and beautiful suburban districts, it is truly remarkable that there is not more horseback riding. Thousands of business men who are threatened with nervous prostration because of their driving lives in pursuit of the elusive dollar persistently refuse this best of all nerve tonics, apparently for no other reason than that so few other men take it. Of course, there is a large number of American people who do ride, but the number is nothing like it should be, considering the advantages for the sport. The reason for the lack of interest in horseback riding in cities can be traced to several causes, the greatest of which is that so many of those who do ride try to make it a fashionable fad in place of a health-seeking exercise. The riding masters tell the inquiring beginner that he will try to make him skilled enough to go on the road in a dozen lessons, but that he must not think himself a rider until he has mastered a dozen or so more lessons in the art. This looks discouraging both from the standpoint of time and expense, and a large majority of those who make up their minds to ride never actually begin riding.

For a matter of fact, any man who is not afraid of a horse should learn to ride well enough to go on the road in a couple of lessons, providing he is properly fitted out with a well-broken horse. With that amount of experience he will not, of course, be fitted to be classed a horseman capable of showing off a gaited saddle horse, but so much knowledge is not necessary for those who are merely in search of health and recreation. In the country districts men, boys, women and girls learn to ride by getting on a horse and riding. It is just as unnecessary for any one to have a riding master in order to learn to ride as it is to have a skating master in order to learn to skate. You learn to skate by practising and everlastingly sticking at it, and the same tactics will make a good rider of any one. Of course, you may not ride in a manner to suit these riding masters, but you can get all the good there is in it for you just the same.

Cross-country riders, those who follow the hounds, are skilled horsemen, but not usually the riding master's product. They are fearless of danger and ready to take chances of life and limb for the excitement experienced in following the chase. Following the hounds, like many other very delightful but dangerous pastimes, is too tempting to be denied once you get a taste of it.

In selecting a horse remember that a short-barrelled animal with good legs and feet, will give better service in saddle work than a rakish-looking trotter, but, above all, if you are a beginner, make sure that he has no vicious tricks, and is fairly good tempered. It is a most natural thing for a man to become very much attached to his riding horse, and if the horse is what he should be and is fairly treated, the animal becomes very fond of his master. There is a much closer relation between man and horse in saddle riding than in driving, and for this reason it is important that there should be no natural antipathy between them. If you buy a horse for saddle use alone do not fear to select one that is young and rather wild, for unless he is naturally bad he will soon tame down with use and become perfectly manageable. If you are not a horse expert and find it necessary to make your selection of a horse at a sales stable, hunt up some friend who does know something about horses, tell him what you want and hire him to make the selection for you. Do not, however, be trapped by any of the "cyps" who hang around the sales marts with information to give away. If you do you must not be surprised if you lead away a worthless nag.

The ponies of the West and South-west are wonderfully enduring, easily travelling distances that would lay up an Eastern horse in one day, and the ponies will repeat the performance for day after day, and this, too, on a quantity and quality of food on which the Eastern horse would starve. These ponies are captured out of the wild bands of horses to be found all over the wild Western country and seldom weigh over 700 or 800 pounds when in high flesh. In some districts they become so numerous that the herders round them up and chase them over cliffs and precipices in order to get rid of them and thus preserve the pasturage for their cattle. The plains Indians, until they were wiped out, utilized the ponies to their fullest extent, the Apache, Navajo and Sioux tribes having become most famous as mauraunders whom the Government soldiers found hard to catch when mounted on their fleet Indian ponies.

The writer had a few months' experience with these Western ponies in the Rocky mountain district of the South-west, and the performances which came under his observation were truly remarkable. Fifty miles over a rough trail, carrying a large man and going the greater part of distances at a good gallop, was nothing for any ordinary pony, whose market price may not have exceeded $15. A good pony will travel 100 miles without rest and do it inside of twenty-four hours, and, if forced to, without food or water.—Kentucky Stock Farm.

THE ELEVENTH LAHORE DOG SHOW.

There is no doubt the glories of the old Lahore Dog Show have departed. The 11th Show of the series held on the 5th and 6th February last, though generally strong in quality, was quite a small Show. There were only 121 dogs entered and of these a good many did not put in an appearance. The management on the ground was business-like, but with such a small Show this was not difficult. The Show was very poorly attended, it was badly advertised, so much so that people at Lahore were asking whether the Show had been abandoned, it created no local interest, and practically there was no one present except the exhibitors themselves. There appeared to be a general lack of enthusiasm, and unless some effort is made to revive the former keeness of up-country kennels, the Lahore Show will have dropped all claim to the title of the premier institution of the kind in India. There is no doubt, however, that the management worked under exceptional difficulties, the old Committee are now scattered, there is a dearth of new blood, and the Show had to be run by the Rev. Mr. Bush who is at Jullundur, and Mr. Priestley at Cawnpore. Mr. Bush judged the whole show except bull-terriers and Cocker Spaniels, classes which were taken by the specialist judges, Major Smith and Colonel Willan Dawson respectively.

The entries were somewhat peculiar; of the total number pretty near one third were wire-haired fox terrier entries. The smooths though not so strong as the wires were also numerous. The two combined formed more than one half of the whole Show, and this made it especially important that there should have been a very expert fox-terrier judge. Unfortunately, and particularly in the wire section, this was not the case. The judge appeared to have a fancy for unkempt, heavy-coated specimens so different from the predelictions of the home expert: he went entirely for the heavily made, cloddy terriers in preference to those showing quality of outline and liberty of action; and he appeared to disregard all youngsters except when they competed together in a puppy class. It was the day for heavy, coarse terriers, full in fur, and a puppy however smart was out of it. Hairy heeled cart-horses, not thoroughbreds, had their turn of luck. Some spectators said they found it difficult to follow the judgments, but they appeared to us to be consistent to a system though we think the system was faulty. The redoubtable Jim the Penman, a quality youngster, though he won two firsts and three specials because it was impossible to keep a dog of that class out of it, failed to reach the Challenges. The puppy Jo Hokum was badly treated because apparently he was a puppy, to a less extent so were Indian Squib and Billie Burke, on the other hand Dil Parsad and Nettle Crumpet were far too high, and if Periwinkle deserved her second in limit she should have won in Junior and Puppy. The smooths were judged much on the same lines. The crack Craigie was beaten in the open by a much coarser terrier, but cutting Craigie aside there was not much quality in the smooth classes, and half a dozen terriers at the late Calcutta Show would have been conspicuous at Lahore, though on the system they might not have won as having too much quality or too little substance. In bitches Mr. White exhibited a good puppy, there were no good puppies among the dogs.

After the fox-terriers, the Cockers formed the most numerous classes in entries, but they were deprived of much of their interest as Colonel Willan Dawson's beautiful little Spaniels failed to appear owing to distemper in the kennels. In their absence the Maharajah of Jind's and Colonel Rodger's exhibits scored. The other classes were small and devoid of interest except in the matter of individual exhibits. The Maharajah showed an exceptionally beautiful grey hound which afterwards won the best in Show, his wise Osborn Tartar was lucky however to obtain his challenge, and lucky also were the great dane St. Andrew, and the Airedale Elrae Duke. With Mr. Clifford Batten and Mr. Fleming absent there was nothing remarkable in the great dane line. The bull-terriers were few and poor. Captain Martin did not enter and the Scottish and the Irish classes were very small. Mr. Rayner scoring in both with his Calcutta winners in very easy fashion. Mr. Priestley did not exhibit his strong kennel of Pekinese, and the Pekinese were consequently an indifferent class. The Dachshunds were few and the few were in no way remarkable. The variety class produced a good blood hound in Brigstock of Radnage who should have won also that good bull dog Nuthurst Dick, but the favours of fortune were against them both on this occasion.

H. H. The Maharajah of Jind, with an exceptionally strong kennel recently re-inforced with a good many new importations and admirably handled by his superintendent, Mr. Miles, was by far the most conspicuous winner at the Show. He contributed about twenty entries, mostly of very good class and without his support the Show would have been robbed of much of its interest and would have been numerically still more weak. The Show was a two-day-one, but although the judging was very slow and protracted it was difficult to occupy the two days. The proceedings were over very early on the second day and people dispersed after a very languid support. It seems probable that a Christmas Show at Lahore and an early February Show at Calcutta might improve the attendance at both. The last Calcutta exhibition was not perhaps a great success, but both in attendance and in competition—except in the wire-fox classes—it was in advance of Lahore, and the two Committees might possibly in the interests of both arrange dates that would be mutually more suitable.

The Naturalist.

THE ROOSTING OF THE BEE-EATERS.

One evening in August I was "on the prowl" with a pair of field glasses, when I came across a tree from which emanated the twittering of many little green bee-eaters (Merops viridis). As the sun was about to set it was evident that these alluring little birds were getting ready to go to sleep. Most birds seem to roost in company. They do so presumably for the sake of companionship, warmth, and, perhaps, protection. To my mind there is no sight more amusing than that of a number of little birds going to bed, so I turned aside to watch these emerald bee-eaters. The tree in question was an isolated one, growing at the side of a field. I do not know what it is called, but it was about twenty feet high, with fairly dense foliage, the leaves being in colouring and shape not unlike those of the rose. The bee-eaters in the tree were making a great noise; all were twittering at the top of their musical little voices, and, as there were certainly more than forty of them, to say nothing of some other birds, the clamour may be imagined. From a little distance it sounded like the calling of many cicadas. The birds were evidently busy selecting perches on which to pass the night, and there was, as there seems always to be on such occasions, a certain amount of squabbling. I was going to say fighting, but perhaps "fighting" is too strong a word to use for this scramble for places. At times, indeed, the scramble would develop into a fight, and two birds emerge snapping at one another. Once outside they would desist from fighting and return to the tree. Occasionally a bee-eater would dart out of the tree and make a sally after a some flying insect, and, having caught it with a loud snap of its mandibles, return to the tree and disappear among the foliage. While this was going on amid the foliage, fresh bee-eaters kept coming in from a distance, mostly in pairs. These all made direct for the tree, evidently knowing it well.

I crept up to within about six yards of the dormitory so as to witness as much as possible of what was going in amongst the foliage.

Some of the birds looked as though they had settled down for the night, since they were quite quiet. Two, in particular, had taken up a position, side by side, close up against one another on a somewhat isolated bough. They sat there quite still except for an occasional turn of the head, which seemed to express surprise and annoyance at the clamour of the other birds. Several other individuals had settled down in the same manner in rows of two or more, huddled as close as possible together, each row being on a separate branch.

I noticed one line of eight bee-eaters, squeezed up against one another, and very pretty did the eight little heads look. But these rows were subjected to constant disturbance, and were continually being broken up and reformed. The disturbances came both from within and from without. One of a row, usually the outside one, (outside berths are not appreciated by the bird folk), would suddenly determine to better his position. This he would seek to do by hopping on to his neighbour's back and trying to wedge himself in between him and the next bird. This would be resented by the aforesaid neighbour, who would try to shake off the intruder, and the struggle that ensued, would, as often as not, result in the break up of the whole row. Birds that had not already found suitable perches would join rows already in existence. This was a constant source of disturbance. Perhaps four bee-eaters would be sitting on a bough which their weight caused to hang horizontally, then a fifth bird would take it into his little head to alight at the extreme tip of the branch, and bear it down to such an extent that those already on it had to grip hard to maintain their equilibrium. It must be very disconcerting and annoying to a sleepy little bird when the angle of its perch is suddenly changed by 15 or 20 degrees.

While I was watching all this, some village boys caught sight of me, and with the curiosity so characteristic of the Punjabi came up to see what I was looking at. Shortly after their arrival one of them showed his country manners by clearing his throat with such violence as to frighten all the bee-eaters out of the tree in which they were settling down for the night! Some flew to a neighbouring tree, but the majority circled in the air with loud twitterings. Within less than three minutes, however, all were back again, trying to find suitable perches. Before they had half settled down a boy again disturbed them. This was obviously done to annoy me, so I sent the urchins about their business. All the bee-eaters were back again almost immediately. By this time the sun had disappeared below the horizon, a fact which the birds seemed to appreciate, judging by the celerity with which they settled down. It was now so dark that I could scarcely distinguish the birds from the foliage which they resemble so much in hue. But for the black streak through the eye I should not have been able to do so. I now crept up under the tree and was able by looking up to distinguish little groups of bee-eaters huddled together. I noticed several couples, two rows of three, four rows of four, and one of five. The tails projected from behind, and by counting these I was able to determine the number in a row. I noticed that the tails were not parallel; some were crossed by others, showing that the birds do not roost so closely packed as they appear to be when looked at from the front. Birds are composed so largely of feathers, that it is easy for them to have the appearance of being packed like sardines in a tin when in reality they have plenty of room.

All the birds in a row faced the same way, but some rows looked one way and others another.

Bee-eaters do not sleep with the head under the wing as some birds do, but are content to allow it to drop into their downy shoulders.

The little company did not all roost at the same elevation, but none slept on any of the lowest branches, nor could I distinguish any in the highest boughs. I should say that all the birds roost in the middle zone of the tree. The branches selected were not necessarily those where the foliage was thickest, nor, so far as I could make out, where the sleeping birds would be best protected from dew and rain. As it rained very heavily in the night in question, some of those bee-eaters must have had a nocturnal shower-bath.

BRIDGE.

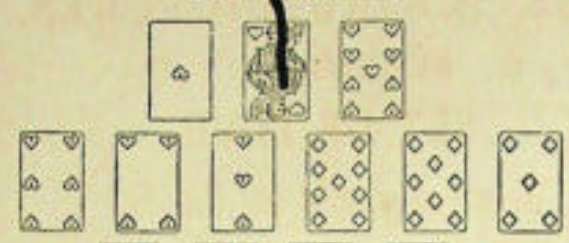
Solution to Problem No. 51.

To make certain of winning the game the dealer must act on the assumption that one of his opponents holds four clubs and should play for a trick in diamonds and a second trick in spades. Before leading a diamond, however, he must first clear his spade or the queen of spades may be used as an entry card for bringing in the diamond suit against him. Accordingly, he puts himself in with the queen of clubs—or better still by taking over the queen of hearts, as this conceals his strength in clubs—and leads the 10 of spades. If A wins with the queen, whatever he returns, either Y or Z must get in. If he leads a diamond through Dummy, the queen is put on and one trick in the suit secured. If he leads a heart, a spade or a club a round of diamonds is led by the dealer. Thus Y Z must make one trick in diamonds, three in hearts, two in spades, and three or four in clubs, viz., nine or ten tricks. If A holds up the queen of spades at trick 4, Z leads the diamond at once, and the same result follows.

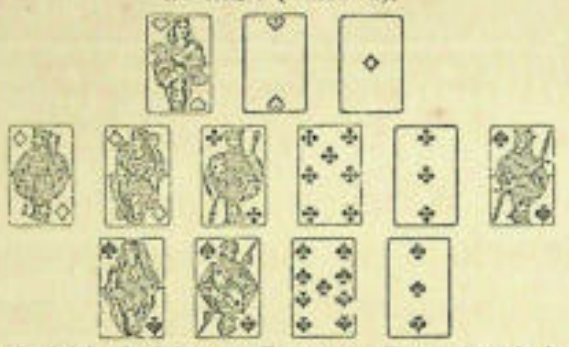
Problem No. 52.

Score: A B 20, Y Z 8. Z deals, and declares no trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y'S HAND (DUMMY).



Z'S HAND (DEALER).



A leads the 5 of hearts. How ought Z to play the hand and why?

(a) This and the preceding move are not good, neither in the present nor in any other form of the French or the Sicilian games. Driving the Black King's Knight to Q 2 is not disadvantageous to the second player, for the piece can render effective service on that square.

(b) Weak play; 6 B to K 2, followed by Castles, P to K Kt 3 and P to K B 4 give Black a fine game.

(c) The second player has now an evident superiority.

(d) Black might have advanced P to Q R 3 in security.

(e) This is now very disadvantageous to Black because the Queen is forced completely out of the game, and the White pieces come into formidable co-operation.

(f) Instead of this White ought to have placed his King on B 2, and if the Queen checked, have then carried it to Knight's square.

(g) The Pawn ought to advance two squares. The shorter march affords White an admirable opportunity of retrieving the loss of his piece by setting up a powerful attack.

(h) The finish is vigorous, and atones for the conduct of the game in its earlier stages.

MOTORING MEMS.

LONDON, Friday, 24th January 1908.

It has frequently been said that, considering the demand for powerful cars, there must be many more people about who have been well endowed with this world's goods than most people imagined. According to a contemporary, this statement is not by any means an exaggeration, but rather the reverse. It goes so far as to state that a man with £1,000 a year income might indulge in a 6 H.P. single-cylinder car. With £2,500 a year to spend, a four-cylinder car is not over reaching the mark. No mention, however, is made of the total income necessary to run a six-cylinder. From this it looks as though many of our friends who hitherto have been spoken of as "something in the city," are really budding city magnates, or is it that they are living on the proceeds of some criminal conspiracy? Certainly, to see them out on their cars does not convey the impression that there is any difficulty in making both ends meet. The truth of the matter is that neither the Carey Street officials nor the Police will claim them; neither are they budding "city magnates," and to imagine a 6 H.P. car cannot be kept, and kept well, on £1 a week is foolish in the extreme. The point is that, like any other hobby, any amount can be spent on motoring; but to suggest that £2,500 is the necessary income before it is reasonable to indulge in a four-cylinder, like the first statement, must be denied in toto.

I have obtained the following from a man I know. It refers to a 30 H.P. N.E.C.:—

"I bought from the N.E.C. one of their 30 H.P. landaulets, and took delivery on 22nd January last year, and have used it as required since, and my expenses are as follows:—

Insurance and License	17	4	0
Petrol	16	6	0
Lubricating oil	6	2	6
New non-skid tyre (just put on)	12	5	0
Retreading old one	5	4	6
Retreading plain tyre	3	11	0
Repairs at works (slight collision with brick wall in learning days)	7	15	0
Recharging accumulators, ignition and lighting	0	10	0
Calcium carbide	0	5	6
TOTAL ...	69	3	6

Taking the new non-skid and the extra tyre cover that I had at time of purchasing, I start the new year with practically two new back tyres, and reserving the two repaired ones as spares.

I use my car for pleasure trips only, and, of course, I do not want to be using it every day. The miles travelled total to about 3,000."

And that is what a "thirty" costs. Possibly he was a careful owner, but it goes to show what can be done.

The Olympic Show of 1908 will be limited to eight days. What will "mine host and hostess" of the adjoining hostelries say? And the papers: a well-known Fleet Street advertising man estimated that a quarter of a million pounds was spent in advertising in the last November Show.

Many of my readers must at some time have seen "sectional" books, either of the human form or of a locomotive. Few, however, have seen a motor car under such conditions. Recently I received from the Daimler Co. of Coventry a model of a Daimler car, latest type complete in such form. It is printed in colours, and consists of a dozen leaves. First the body, then the bonnet, and the side member can be removed; the valves are then swung back; the engine is in section, also clutch and crankshaft and back axle. It is an extremely clever production, very neat and highly instructive. I should advise readers to write for one at once. I understand the supply is limited, but mentioning the Indian Field will ensure a copy being posted. The Daimler Car is making great headway. Sweden is the latest country to take up an agency. There the Daimler is sure to go well, for few cars of the power of the Daimler can compare with it for running over rough roads, and it is the last word in hill climbing.

I have just received from a friend of mine a most enthusiastic letter anent the Nagant-Hobson. He is of those men who were attacked with the motor fever years ago, and has, step by step, risen from the old De Dion tricycle till to-day he has reached what he chooses to call the topmost rung in motordom. It is one of the 40 H.P. Nagant-Hobson cars that he is so enthusiastic about. He is a Scottish laird with an English residence, consequently at one time the railways received a good sum out of his pocket, for he frequently visits town. Things are different now, however, for he says, "Since November when I bought the car I have not been near the railway that previously took us from near dirty London to the Highlands," and he adds, "My groom attends to the car; I thought it unnecessary to put him through the mechanical part at the works for the engine is so simple." A postscript follows—"She is a poem in petrol!"

Austins, Arels, Weigels and Napiers have been entered for the Grand Prix. They can't all win, but it is to be hoped that among them will be found the winner. England could stand an International victory well indeed. It would give her a good lift in India and the Colonies.

From the Motor House, Euston Road, London, comes a Car Register. It contains particulars, photos and prices of 300 cars. This is well worth a post-card for it makes interesting reading, and, moreover, shows what bargains can be purchased second-hand and with extended payments if desired. The latter advantage costs but an additional 10 per cent. on the price agreed upon.

THE HUNTS OF INDIA.

We are interested to find that the new edition of Baily's Hunting Directory contains a new feature which appeals to us in this country; in the shape of a section devoted to "Foreign, Indian and Colonial" Hunts. It is not very complete; but we can appreciate the difficulty, referred to by the editors in their preface, of ascertaining not the particulars of hunts elsewhere than in Europe, but the fact of their existence. India fares better than Australasia in this respect, for we miss the names of only two recognised establishments, the Madras and Gordon's Horse; this comparative completeness is the more gratifying to us as our assistance was sought by and gladly accorded to the editors, in their endeavour to open communication with Masters of Hounds in this country. Of the six hunts described in the Directory the oldest, of course, is the Ooty Hunt, which was established so long ago as 1835 to hunt sambur in the Nilgiris: and for many years showed some of the best sport in India. We do not know the precise date when the original hunt came to an end; but search through a file of the old magazines might reveal the secret; it did come to an end and Ooty was without a pack of hounds until 1869 when the late Mr. J. W. Brecks, first Commissioner of the Nilgiris, revived it on a new footing to hunt the wily "jack." The Ooty Hunt is fortunate in that its sphere of operations is a country which carries a grand scent; and those who know both will recognise the aptness of the comparison to the Devon and Somerset country. The Bombay Hunt comes next in point of seniority; indeed having regard to the gap in the record of the Ooty Hunt, it might be awarded first place. Hunting on the other side began in 1862, the country is the Island of Salsette which provides great variety of going and fence; there is a great deal of paddy land with its inevitable bunds, but in the northern part there are nice stretches of grass which afford good going and carry a good scent in the cold season. The Peshawar Vale has a history dating back to 1865. The first pack was established by soldiers and it was carried on as a regimental hunt until the year 1870 when it was recognised under its present name. The Poona and Kirkee Hunt Club is one of the more recent establishments; the country—the district about Poona and Kirkee—was hunted by privately-owned packs of hounds for some years prior to 1890 when the existing club was established; theirs is a varied country much of which consists of undulating pasture land. The main stand by is, of course, the jackal, but the Poona and Kirkee hounds enjoy the distinction of being the only pack in India that hunts its own foxes, the little Deccani species which can stand up well before hounds and affords good sport. The Karachi—established in 1904—hunt vixens which are turned down in May in readiness for the next cold season when they are as wild as the jackals which share with them the privilege of providing sport. The Quetta Hunt is a few years older than the Karachi, having been established in 1901.

Comparison of the dates of opening and closing meets of the various hunts reveals the fact that if any enthusiast of leisure chose to do so he might hunt the year round in Hindustan saving only the month of April. The Peshawar Vale season practically corresponds with the foxhunting season at Home lasting as it does from the first week in November till the third week in March: the Ootacamund begin hunting at the beginning of May and continue till the end of October; or, if our enthusiast do not care to cross the peninsula and is willing to forego a month or two, he can hunt with the Poona and Kirkee from July to October, and his travels would make him acquainted with a very rich variety of country and fence. The facts collected relative to hounds are interesting. Bombay and Poona do not, apparently, attempt to breed their own packs; each has twenty-five couples which are imported fresh from Home each year and sold off at the end of the season; Karachi also imports its hounds, but these are summered at Quetta, the pack being kennelled at Landhi, fourteen miles from Karachi, during the hunting season. The Ooty pack is the largest in India, consisting of forty-four couples; three-fourths are imported from home, the remainder being bred in the kennels at Kandal. The Peshawar Vale also import most of their hounds, only a few being bred at the kennels in the Murree hills where the pack is summered. To the Quetta hunt belongs the credit of breeding hounds in Northern India. The pack consists of about nineteen couples and nearly one-half of that hunted last season, namely eight couple, were bred at the kennels. The experiment of breeding hounds is a recent one. Mr. C. P. Martin of the 1st West Yorkshires when Master in 1903 tried breeding from imported hounds and was so successful that his successor in office, Captain Sarel, continued to do so. Some of the country-bred entry proved the best hounds in the pack last season; they were fast, had good noses and plenty of music. Under these circumstances Captain D. A. L. Day, the present Master, has pursued the same policy and was able to enter a nice lot of youngsters at the beginning of this season.

As most of us know the theory is pretty widely held that summering hounds in the hills has the curious effect of impairing their hunting powers: it was, and is no doubt still, believed by some that owing to some obscure influence inherent in the more rarefied atmosphere at high altitudes hounds lose both their scenting powers and their music. There is ample evidence to show that this theory has little or no foundation in fact, and we should be interested to hear what has been the experience of Masters who summer their hounds in the hills and bring them down to the plains for the hunting season. We do not look for such information in a work of reference such as the Directory, but there are certain points in connection with hounds imported from Home which are worth noticing. Those which have passed a season or two out here are very generally better hunters than the drafts fresh out from Home: we can well understand that the new arrival should be less keen than the more experienced hound in owning the scent of the jackal after generations of his ancestors have stooped to fox, whose scent we may fairly assume to be very different; but the difference does not end here. We have been assured by Masters of experience that the hounds with a few seasons of work in this country behind them display greater "drive," better pace and more endurance. These qualities we may suggest are the outcome of acclimatisation: probably the new arrival feels the difference in climate, food, and surroundings, even as does the human griffin; and as he becomes more habituated to his new life his innate qualities assert themselves in the manner described giving him the advantage over the more recent arrivals.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Saturday's racing in Calcutta was not of a wildly exciting nature and there was more interest evinced by the small company present in the fluctuations of the market on the Great Western Handicap in Bombay than in what was actually going on.

The first race, a hurdle event for G. R's., fell to the top weight Jasper, owing to the slow pace at which the more lightly handicapped animals were taken. Captain Holden did not give his horse a chance and had not a penny on him, but the bad riding and bad judgment of the others gave an opportunity of which he cleverly availed himself. Lady Gold would have won in the commonest of canters had her owner been able to retain his hat on his head, owing to which obscuration of the helmsman's vision the mare roamed about the course at her own sweet will, finishing a close third in spite of the extra distance covered. She was purchased after the race by Mr. Maurice Turner for whom she is already making one of the handsomest of chargers.

The Serpentine Plate was one of the softest things of the day. Ames, on the favourite Eljin, stole a march on them all at the gate, and the pursuing Devil's Limit saw nothing but her quarters all the way home. Another good thing got home in the Mayo Plate, Bonita II., this even money chance giving her supporters no anxiety at any part of the journey and their only excitement was when the red cone was hoisted after the race. However it proved to be for an objection only to the second horse, Little Dolly, for crossing. The grounds on which it was laid seemed somewhat difficult to fathom by any one watching the race, and it was overruled after an investigation held at the end of the afternoon.

The rest of the afternoon was a case of Murdison first and the rest nowhere, this capable jockey doing the hat trick neatly with three good wins. In the Selling Handicap which he secured on Golden, he cleverly tricked Mr. Evers, who was riding Jack Sheppard, the equal favourite. The professional after racing neck and neck into the straight fell back apparently beaten, and then when the other thought he had the race in hand came again with a rush at the finish, and won comfortably by two and a half lengths.

Cyril was his next winning mount in the Esplanade Plate for which Sir Roland was favourite, but the black could only go 4 furlongs and indeed they none of them seemed to be able to gallop the last furlong, except the winner and Morette who challenged from the distance, but could not get on terms. Sir Ulric finished a bad third, five lengths behind his stable companion, Sir Roland nowhere.

Murdison completed his hat trick in the round the course race with Carnival, who was third favourite, Jolly Abbot and Merry Elsie being the two popular choices. Baichan made too much use of the mare however, as after 1¼ mile post he took her out several lengths ahead of Carnival who had held the lead till then. Murdison made no attempt to hustle his horse and let the mare go right away. By the 3-furlong post, however, she was beginning to come back and it was seen that the race lay between Carnival and Jolly Abbot who was lying just behind. The old horse proved a better stayer however than the grey and coming along strongly from the distance beat him by two lengths. Footprint, who had run last all the way round, made a magnificent sprint from the new stand and finished only half a length behind Jolly Abbot, beating Merry Elsie for third place by a length and a half. It is a pity that the handicappers did not make the weights on a higher scale all the way round as if Merry Elsie had not been compelled to put up 9lb. overweight she would probably have made a fine race of it with Carnival while three others had to declare excess and Rubrette was scratched for lack of a jockey.

The regular weekly paperchase last Friday was chiefly noteworthy for Captain Fitzgerald's failure to get his place. Fermoy was evidently feeling the effects of his last week's fall and would not gallop at all well and finished seventh behind a comparatively slow animal like Myolene. The result of this is that Captain Fraser and Captain Fitzgerald are now equal as regards number of places but as the former is a long way ahead on points he cannot possibly lose the cup unless he fails to get placed anywhere in the first six at the chases on the 21st and 28th which are the last two of the season. The course was about 3 miles starting from the south of the Molla Hât Road and traversing the bund country and the paper came back over the ladies' wall and the first hurdle reversed. A very fair field went out at a cautious pace but the going was good and the leaders soon began to make it hotter. Mr. Evers on Lord Harry, the lightest weight on the fastest horse, very naturally came in an easy first and the final order was: Mr. Evers on Lord Harry 1; Captain Fraser on Diabolo 2; Mr. Barclay on Lockhart 3; Mr. Radmore on Agamemnon 4; Mr. Winckworth on Ermine, 5; Mr. Corbett on Myolene, 6; followed by Captain Fitzgerald, Mr. Hill, Captain Holden, Messrs. Hadow, H. K. Pierson, Dudley Myers, Birkmyre, Forsyth, Miss Macrae, Miss Lukis, and Messrs. Montgomery and Lovell. There were fewer ponies out than usual and they started off as if for a 6-furlong race with the result that the weak spots were soon found out and they finished a procession at enormous distances. Mr. Hadow on Gentle Ida fell down a bank and there were one or two other spills, but no one was hurt. The first man to return between the finishing flags was Police Sergeant Wilson, but he had lost his way and not completed the course so that the actual winner was Mr. Muir on Clarice who came in a long way ahead of Killarney. The final order was: Mr. Muir on Clarice 1; Mr. Sieger on Killarney 2; Mr. Manning on Dynamite 3; Mr. Evers on Meprise 4; Mr. Tegart on Sheila 5; Mr. Bletsoe on Sea Gull 6; followed by Mr. Stokes on My Own and Captain Holden on Pathfinder.

The chase for the Pony Cup was held on Tuesday and as everyone thought proved a very soft thing for Pathfinder II. The start was near that of Friday's chase, but the paper soon turned across the Molla Hât Road to the northward and took an unusual course through the country to the Tollygunge lane and between there and the Red Road, from which it turned sharply back southward into the jungle and through the hole in the wall and eventually back over the first hurdle to the finish. The heavy mist kept away a lot of people, and also at the special request of their C.O. any Light Horsemen who were not actually taking part in the chase stayed on parade instead of turning out so that there was a comparatively small gallery of spectators who had to wait as patiently as might be till the fog lifted a little after 8 o'clock.

(fell); Mr. Maurice Turner's Sea Gull 11st. 2lb. (fell). Killarney followed by Clarice, Blazes and Pathfinder II. led over the first two jumps, but after crossing the Molla Hât Road the first two ponies ran off the paper and Pathfinder took the lead through the jungle followed by Blazes, Starboard Light, Sea Gull and Emerald. As they came into the open Pathfinder cracked on the pace and Blazes fell back. Sheila and Starboard Light each fell at a wall and Sea Gull slipped up at the sharp turn southwards from the Molla Hât Road, and then Pathfinder and Emerald began to go right away from the others and emerged through the "Hole in the Wall" with a long lead from Blazes. Killarney fell at one of the jumps on the homeward journey.

In connection with the Olympic Games it is satisfactory to note that the difficulty anent the constitution of the French Olympic Committee has been overcome. The representatives of the leading bodies governing sport in France have had a conference with two out of the three Olympic Committee and the outcome of this is an arrangement by which the real sporting bodies will be represented on an augmented committee. We may now expect the pick of French athletes to take part in the festival, and the fact of France joining in will also improve the chances of British athletes beating America's representatives in the track and field events decided within the stadium. This for the reason that France may score points in the pole jump and discus-throwing events, which otherwise would probably go to the Americans.

An amusing comment appears in a recent issue of the Pekin and Tientsin Times regarding an imitation, recently produced in Japan, of Messrs. Lea and Perrins' celebrated Worcestershire Sauce.

As our readers will notice, the wording of the label is of a decidedly "original" character, and if the contents of the bottles are as horrible as the English used in their description, we venture to think that the quicker our Japanese allies return to the genuine article, the better it will be for them!

We have just been shown a bottle of sauce made by the "well-known" firm Kirisu and Co., of "Louponn," which seems at first sight a clever imitation of Lea and Perrins'. The Japanese "manupacturers" claim that their excellent and "original" (?) "pikearation" is very suitable for roups," meaning, we presume, suitable for soups. The following is the label:—

That is a delightful touch about the "Opeiatal Ingreddirrts." Evidently, a new form of the "what is it" or "Gazeka" style of advertisement.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The Bombay Big Meeting opened on Wednesday with a really excellent day's racing, there being some stirring finishes on the good going with a large crowd in attendance. One usually looks forward to picking up a bit with terms races, but not so on this occasion as only one actual favourite came home though no absolute outsider did. A noticeable fact was that none of the up-country owners were present, and every race but one was locally won.

Beginning with the New Plate, punters got a set back when the moral of the day, Mountain King, was scratched and an open betting race saw Print Craft, Good Chance and Disfigure most in demand. Had Good Chance got away I think the race would have been over, but he did not, and Lassa passing Barrak in the straight looked all over a winner till Disfigure came wide and pipped him.

Perhaps the biggest upset of the day came in the Paddock Plate when Bay Middleton, though it was his first outing this season, was made a warm favourite from Rose, Creditor and Derby. It was a bad lot to get away and Little Joker got left, Rose and then Creditor making the pace. Before the bend the favourite came out and all seemed over, till Southall made an appearance on the outside on Derby and soon had them all beaten in the smart time of 1min. 7⅘secs.

The Importers' Plate of 5 furlongs followed with what are considered a second rate lot of sprinters. In some notes recently I made a remark about Uro, a shapely black, and, now belonging to Mr. R. R. S., there was no mistake about the stable's intentions. Tom Scott's money for Metal Boy failed to shake the confidence in the former who started at odds on. Lady Metal made the running with the favourite to the bend where she fell away to Epitome, who has improved beyond all knowledge. Here Metal Boy began to come a bit wide and from the distance a battle royal ensued. Opposite the stand he was neck to neck with Uro, both out, and the latter began to swerve but in a desperate finish just kept his head in front. That he had bored slightly there can be no doubt but he had not bumped and the objection lodged was over-ruled. Epitome found her place in front of Mereworth who was "tipped" by many.

Precious was picked out as the good thing of the Dealers' Plate but after lying too far back had shot his bolt soon after turning the bend. Peculiar was in the lead here going well and comfortably staying Dhafer and Young Kohinoor out, won for the fourth time out of five attempts.

One could not wish for a finer race than the Bombay City Plate of 10 furlongs with class represented. Ballark was always a steady favourite despite runs on Wandin and Beaunero; Wandin by no means raised the hopes of his supporters when he broke away and cantered back to the paddock. Southall remounting had to dismount again before he could be made to face the gate and though he was left he was in third place behind Royalist and Ballark before a furlong had been covered. At about the 5 furlongs Royalist was done with and Botha came into third place when Beaunero was seen coming. So fast a run did he put in that at the bend he had almost made up a gap of about fifteen lengths to the leaders but though he placed well up lacked the dash to win. At the distance the whip was out on Wandin and Ballark looked good but Southall riding one of his sterling finishes just got there by a short neck. It was a magnificent race done in the good time of 2mins. 9⅘secs.

Lastly, Grey Falcon was made a 2 to 1 on favourite for the Fort Plate with Mudlool and Sir Jamal at fives. Mudlool as usual cut out the pace from Herricul and though the favourite came up promisingly into the straight he never looked like catching the leaders and Mudlool won with a bit in hand.

The Bombay Polo tournament, the second since its revival, has come and gone, and though there were only four entrants it has been a success. It was a plucky undertaking on the part of Mr. L. Barraclough and his efforts should be rewarded on future occasions, as not only were all the arrangements excellent but the care he had taken showed itself in the ground which was first rate. Last year the Poona Horse were favourites in the final when they lost to the Staff Corps from Deolali and this year again they unexpectedly lost to the Bombay Gymkhana. The dash of the winners surprised even their admirers and they deserve hearty congratulations on regaining the Cup after twenty-two years on the twenty-fifth anniversary of its birth.

There have been three hunting days this week, last bye day providing two runs. Meeting at Parla a jack is put up at the Chuckla Hill coverts and chased through Bomanwadi Valley. He makes a long detour to Periera Hill and to the valley again and after a check on towards Marole where he goes to ground in one of the caves and has to be given up.

Another is put up in the wood near where the Tulsi pipe goes under the Andheri Road and at Marole, on his way to the caves, the jack is bowled over.

The extra day on Tuesday was poorly attended and after Chuckla and Jackal Hills were drawn blank, hounds met with success near the end of the lane. This turned out to be the same stiff-necked customer who on three previous occasions had got away and he followed the identical line to Marole. Past this hill he makes for another usually too far away to come into most hunts and here in the same inexplicable manner he baffles hounds.

On Thursday meeting at the Club a jack was put up, but he also was lost after passing Sahar, cutting along the Backwater without crossing and going clean over Jack Symons' Hill.

Thursday being a holiday owing to Muharram, there was a cricket match between the Bombay and Hindu Gymkhanas on the latter's ground. The home side taking first knock put up 241, Mehta 64, D. Telang 40 and Wagle 74. In two hours and ten minutes the Gymkhana by free cricket knocked the runs off. Christie 39, Cooke 43, Wright 71, Huckley 31, and Vines not out 28, all played attractive cricket and won with four wickets to spare.

Melbourne Inman, the billiard player, has been in great form with the cue and his free and open play has popularized him immediately. He has put up two remarkably fine breaks, a 302 against Mr. Carnall on Monday and a 280 against Mr. Young the next night, both at Pyrke's rooms. The latter was a really marvellous break for the fact that 276 of them were made off the red. This equals his Australian record and is only fourteen behind his World's record. His general average has been over 30, and he is meeting most of those who played against Stevenson. Karachi will probably be the next place he will visit.

There was a big attendance for the second day on Saturday when a card of seven events, including the rich Grand Western, provided splendid racing.

We opened with the new pony race and the troubles of punters began, Maimoon looking as great a certainty as could be on form for the Melton Plate. He wound up at twos on but the fact that he paraded in a bandage which was removed before he went out made many turn to Malik Jaman with Lookman and Great Power next at twelves. It was a bad start in a field of fourteen, Great Power flying off with a big lead from Malik Jaman, the favourite, and after a gap, Lookman. Killorn had Great Power nicely nursed and when Maimoon came up at the bend he was in trouble. Lookman, however, was seen to be coming great guns and Jack Taylor brought this handsome bay along to win comfortably; Maimoon just saving his place from Najmi.

The Tom Le Mesurier Plate on form seemed also little short of a gift for Tachreet who contracted to evens though a strong run reduced Grey Falcon to threes. Squire cut out the pace very fast, and should be watched for shorter distances. A noticeable fault with both Williams and Killorn has been the way they have used their mounts too much when on top weights and it was the way Tachreet was sent after Squire in the early part that lost him the race. He looked good on entering the straight but here Grey Falcon came at him and, in a great finish, won by a head.

In the Malabar Hill Plate we saw the cream of sprinters and with Posco getting a stone from Sermon she wound up a trifle shorter, Golden Gleam being deemed unable to give the chestnut 7lb. but money came for Lovania late bringing her to fives in a field of five. Love Song got a bad start but his run up to Posco in the lead within the first furlong was marvellous, Sermon taking last place and running badly as suggested when he went out seemingly sore. Posco and Love Song were having a great race of it when Lovania came outside and passed them all very comfortably.

A good betting race was the Bombay Derby in which Eed, Young Kohinoor, Dumra, Swalior and Nooman were fancied. They were a troublesome lot of thirteen but got away well together till Dhamas took a six-length lead from Peculiar, Dumra, Eed, Spearmint and Young Kohinoor. Dhamas went great guns and even when caught by Dumra at the 5 furlongs seemed to be going well. At the bend Eed went in front but at the distance Robinson came up on Young Kohinoor and stayed everything out comfortably, Swalior coming late and beating Dumra for a place.

Nine went out for the Grand Western Handicap which looked open, Paddy's Darling being firm at twos, Ballark fours, Sacristan nine to two and Annamulloch and Beaunero sixes. The race wants but little describing as Paddy's Darling going away at a cracking pace was never headed though Annamulloch and Sacristan hung on all the way. 1min. 56secs. is distinctly good time as also was 1min. 14½secs. for the 6 furlongs.

The other 6 furlongs saw St. Patrick in demand till a run on Mozart made them equal favourites at threes. It was a good race, Rustile making play from Zotique and the favourites. Entering the straight Rustile was done with and Zotique going away stayed out a remarkable run by Uro, St. Patrick failing to pass Rustile and Mozart dying out. This was done in 1min. 14½secs.

Lastly came the Stewards' Purse of 5 furlongs for ponies, with Lady Nannie all the rage, but she extended to threes when money came for Gun Metal, Florrie and Koko. Gun Metal, then Koko and then Florrie took the lead, but Gun Metal led down the straight and going strong stayed out a marvellous run by Yankee Boy who came from nowhere.

Mr. Brown had just had a telephone connection between his office and house, and was very much pleased with it.

"I tell you Smith," he was saying, "this telephone business is a wonderful thing. I want you to dine with me this evening, and I will notify Mrs. Brown to expect you."

Brown (speaking through the telephone): "My friend Smith will dine with us this evening. Now listen and hear how plainly her reply comes back."

Mrs. Brown's reply came back with startling distinctness. "Ask your friend Smith if he thinks we keep an hotel."

The story is told of Mark Twain entering a bookshop in Washington and asking the price of a certain volume, it was 16s. "But I am a journalist," Mark Twain continued, "will you not allow me a reduction?" "Certainly." "I also write for the magazines and I think you reduce prices in such cases?" "We do." "Well, I've written one or two books as well, and I belong to the American Society of Authors. That generally procures me a reduction, too." "We will make that reduction as well." "Now, look here. I'm a shareholder—in the firm that publishes the book. Can't I get a further rebate on that." "Undoubtedly." "My name is Mark Twain. Perhaps you have heard of me. Don't you think I ought to be favoured a little?" "Of course you should be." "Excellent," said Mark Twain. "And, now, how much have I to pay for the book?" "Nothing at all," was the answer: "on the contrary, the firm owes you at least three shillings and sixpence."

London Week by Week.

Friday, 31st January 1908.

The day before yesterday King Edward VII. accompanied by the Queen, opened the third session of His Majesty's second Parliament with the usual State ceremony. As a preliminary, an examination of the vaults of both Houses took place, this being a function which has been observed with unfailing regularity ever since the days of Guy Fawkes. At twenty minutes to two o'clock the Royal procession left Buckingham Palace, where guards of honour were furnished by the 1st Life Guards and the 1st Irish Guards. In concordance with time honoured custom, there was "King's weather," and although a sharp wintry wind occasionally swept round corners, and forced spectators to button their overcoats full closely, still there was a promise, nay more, a foretaste of spring in the air, and the sun came out to gild the already gilded roof of the Royal State Coach, all the way from Buckingham Palace to the Victoria Tower. More people came to see the procession in the park than have been present at any other opening of Parliament, while at the Horse Guards Parade, the crowd was, if anything, greater. To the tempest of greeting that awaited them, their Majesties bowed and smiled, and smiled again, and a voice from the crowd cried "I am glad to see that old coach again!" The bells of St. Margaret's pealed out cheerfully, as the procession wound in from Parliament Street, through the square, to the Victoria Tower; as the King alighted the Royal Standard spread itself to the breeze and Edward VII. entered his Palace of Westminster. The Royal Horse Artillery in St. James's Park answered the signal with forty-one guns, and very soon his Majesty was delivering his Speech from the Throne.

* * * * * *

And so once again the yearly pageant was completed. For the moment political conflict dies down. There is an orderly and decent courtesy about this annual opening of Parliament which serves not only to remind the combatants of a principle and a loyalty that are above party, but adds also a touch of dignity to the struggle that must ensue. For this yearly ceremony may be but the salute before the duel, but it has its own especial value, and its own especial significance for an Englishman. For if Parliament opens in winter, it closes in summer. Before peace comes the battle, after the fight rest to the weary, honour to the brave. The chill wind braces the spirit, the gleams of sunshine encourage the soul. In every phenomenon of nature we may read the spirit of the age.

* * * * * *

Though the London season changes somewhat in the distribution of its gaieties, the eve of the opening of Parliament has always marked a distinct date in regard to its development. The quiet phase that follows the last of the New Year's parties extends until the assembling of the members of both Houses, and with that comes a succession of dinners and receptions, which herald in the yet busier time in store. This year the session is commencing quite a fortnight earlier than usual, and to trade generally in London it is especially welcome. The expected arrival of the Court at Buckingham Palace, a diplomatic reception announced for 6th February, several fashionable weddings taking place between this and Lent, as well as various private parties, will give society much to occupy the time during the next few weeks. Also at private West-end houses a spell of activity is anticipated. As there was no autumn session, it is thought likely that more people will be in town this year before Easter—a period which in the last two or three years has been decidedly quiet. In any case, there is a disposition to look hopefully upon immediate prospects until May sees the metropolis at its fullest and brightest. The dullness and gloom of the past fortnight have not been good for trade, but this will, no doubt, be now remedied.

* * * * * *

With the first news of warmer weather, there is always a rush back to town, principally of those whose enforced exile abroad is more or less dependant on the rigours of our English winter. The West-end is much fuller than it has been of late, and smart carriages and motors are numerous in Piccadilly, Regent Street, and Bond Street. Numbers, too, are now to be seen afoot, and there is a lightening of rigorous winter attire. Furs are giving way to lace and chiffon and though it is still too cold to stand still for long, yet the florists' windows now gay with heralds of the spring, are often looked in at while their counterparts chez la modiste, and the milliner have also their admirers. Even if later afternoons be less bright, and a sharp shower or two somewhat thins the throngs of those who are merely strollers, yet tea-shops benefit, the picture galleries secure better attendances, and it is possible to think that London is one of the pleasantest places in the still young year.

* * * * * *

But is it going to be a London we shall be able to recognise at all within the next couple of decades? Who can say! Already the Marble Arch is doomed, not in itself—as it would be extremely costly to shift, and also the effect will be better if the Arch be retained in its present position as the central architectural feature of the proposed large open space to be formed outside the park—but in its surroundings, for the King has approved of the plans for their improvement. The structure will retain its present site, but the railings adjoining will be set back, and a wide space surrounding the Arch will be obtained. This isolation will give the Arch greater dignity and architectural effect; no longer will its hedged-in condition be a reproach, or visitors to the metropolis be unable to appreciate it as one of the sights. At a recent meeting of the London County Council a scheme of improvement was considered. As the work entails a cost of over £5,000, a decision was, according to custom, postponed. The Marylebone, Westminster, and Paddington Councils have, however, consented to contribute £2,112 each towards the improvement, and the work, the cost of which is estimated, approximately, at £19,000, will no longer be delayed, and the County Council, at its last meeting decided to proceed with it. The scheme which has been approved by His Majesty, is the addition of a sufficient area of Hyde Park to the street, so that a carriage-way 70ft. wide may be formed on the south side of Marble Arch. Greatly improved facilities will thus be afforded for all the traffic, particularly for that which passes from Park Lane and the park to the Edgeware and Bayswater roads; while the road north of the Arch will be left free for traffic to and from Oxford Street. The figures which were supplied to the Royal Commission as to the traffic at eight of the most crowded points in London showed that at the Marble Arch it is the heaviest, surpassing that at either Hyde Park Corner, Charing Cross, the Bank, Piccadilly Circus, Ludgate Circus, Piccadilly or the Strand.

* * * * * *

The disappearance of Rosherville Gardens, Gravesend, in order to make way for the erection of factories, severs what is practically the last link between the amusements of a previous generation and those of to-day. Highbury Barn, Vauxhall and Ranelagh, once part and parcel of London life, have also gone the way of all flesh. These favourite summer resorts, places "to spend a happy day," have given place to the builder, and the pleasure-loving public, less simple in its tastes, either seeks its amusement nearer home in the theatre and the music-hall, or further afield, at the seaside, by the aid of steam and quick travelling.

* * * * * *

The vehicular advances alone of the Metropolis can contemplate with merely tepid interest. It is all natural enough, and except for the inherent brutality of the motor-'buses contains nothing save the inevitable and the progressive. But the increase of noise and speed are not all. Even in the country motors are becoming common enough. We have now to accept the fact that people themselves are going for the future to rush through the world with an absolutely magnificent and appalling courage. One is already aware of this without travelling to gaze upon monstrous motor-'buses, or the new attractive taximeter cabs, whose swiftness and daring and incredible perfection of control are like an added joy to London's life.

* * * * * *

The fate of Crosby Hall seems sealed. The final appeal was to the Government, and the answer is unfavourable. They do not see their way to save the building by means of public moneys, and it will, therefore, come down. The Office of Works, after a very thorough investigation into the whole matter, have come to the conclusion that, though Crosby Hall is a very interesting building, it is also a decidedly patchwork structure, and is certainly not worth the enormous sum asked for its preservation. The question of cost, of course, has been the real crux throughout; had it been less, there can be little doubt that the public appeals would have been successful. The earnest appeal made to save the historic pile from demolition, by the use of public funds, under the Ancient Public Monuments Acts, has not been responded to. After all there is a limit to the price of even a genuine antique, and when the appeal to Londoners failed there was never much chance of Government finding the money. Apparently an enormous price is necessary to preserve the building, and simply amounts to le jeu vaut pas la chandelle; also Crosby Hall has been declared a local rather than a national memorial. A complete monograph on the historic pile, illustrated by reproductions of old prints and a splendid series of modern drawings of the hall, is in course of preparation, and this seems to have brought before the London public the crying need for a full and comprehensive record of the historic buildings which still exist within and round the metropolis.

Another disappearance is that of the well-known London hostelry, the Daniel Lambert, on Ludgate Hill, to make way for another of Messrs. Lyons and Co.'s popular cafés. Originally named the King's Head, the tavern became known by the more plebeian name from its association with the celebrity, of whom it is recorded that at 23 years of age he weighed 32st., and, in his 40th year, when he died suddenly, 52st. 11lb. Lambert used to sit in the tavern which came to be called after him, and was for a time, in the early part of the last century, one of the sights of London. It is indeed a vanishing London and the Daniel Lambert will soon be nothing more than a memory of Ludgate Hill.

* * * * * *

London's new theatre, when it comes, will be indeed a sumptuous playhouse. It will not be completed before another couple of years, and is the venture of Mr. J. N. Lyons, a brother of Mr. Joseph Lyons. The site is the corner of the Haymarket and Orange Street, practically adjoining Messrs. Dewar's new premises. Messrs. Runtz and Ford, who designed the New Gaiety Theatre, have been entrusted with the designs, which are expected, when completed, to produce one of the most luxurious theatres in the world. The frontage of 80ft. will be in the Haymarket. There will be no pit, but a very convenient and commodious upper circle. The house will, of course, be built upon the two-tier system. Every seat may be booked beforehand, and the entire theatre will provide over £250 worth of accommodation.

In Susannah and Some Others, just produced at the Royalty, Mm. Albanesi has written a prettily sentimental play. The best pieces of acting in a weak and rather tiresome piece are those contributed by Mr. J. Fisher White and Miss Frances Dillon. At the Alhambra, this week, under the direction of Mr. A. F. Bettinson, manager of the National Sporting Club, wrestling championships are taking places the programme containing competitions for light, middle and heavy weights, and these have attracted, in all, ninety wrestlers—many of whom are well known to the public. While at the London Pavilion there are, in future, to be Wednesday, as well as Saturday matinees. It is significant of the stress of keen competition that morning performances are to be offered at reduced prices. Matinees were once forbidden at the halls, under a fatuous regulation forbidding any entertainment previous to 5 o'clock. All that has long since been altered, but it is difficult to comprehend a rule that permits visitors to an afternoon performance at a smaller charge than to an evening one: which does not obtain at the theatres. What is the reasonableness of its application to the music-halls? The Empire has engaged a new singer, with a record of performances at Vienna, the Scala, Milan, the winter garden Berlin, and St. Petersburg. It is refreshing to think that we may find some respite in the human voice divine, from the eternal danseuse—not always, alas, la premiere—contortionists, conjurors and others of that ilk. Signor Federigo Barbalong is a friend of Caruso's, and if report speaks truly, will be well worth hearing. The latest attraction at Tellery's is "The Orange Blossom," an extravaganza by Mr. Victor Widnell, productive of much good humour and laughter, if one only views the play in the happy and inconsequent mood in which it must have been conceived.

The daring West Norwood burglary committed at the studio of Mr. Carl Heutschel, when three Royal miniatures belonging to our reigning sovereign, were stolen, is now most occupying our minds, and furnishing us with much food for conjecture. The entire machinery of Scotland Yard has been at work on the capture of the burglars and recovery of the booty which was affected at Brixton, where the miniatures were offered for sale to a barman.

Yesterday was the anniversary of the death of General Gordon, and the council of the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society, in the name of its 5,000 voluntary workers, placed a wreath upon the statue in Trafalgar Square, bearing an inscription. The London Burns Club endeavoured, at the Holborn Restaurant last Saturday night, to awaken suitable sentiments for the anniversary of the birth of Burns, in the hearts of some hundred and fifty diners, Sir James Crichton Browne presiding. Naturally the proceedings terminated with "Auld Lang Syne."

It is quite possible that fencing will come in again as a recreation of the fair sex; for, fired by the brilliant example of the World's Champion Lady Fencer, Miss Sanderson, several exciting bouts have come off between well-known Society ladies, who, for pure love of the sport, were trying to take down the champion lady fencer's number. Somehow a fencing bout, I fancy, appeals more to the majority of onlookers than a wrestling match.

Possibly you will have heard through telegram, long 'ere this reaches you, that the missing passengers of the Amsterdam have been found and landed safely at the Hook. They had endured no hardships; they had scarcely had any anxieties. Their relatives, who have been kept on the rack for two days, are really much more deserving of sympathy than they. There was immense relief at the Hook and throughout London, when the news of the rescue of the missing twentry-three souls was confirmed.

FIRST EXPERIENCES OF ELEPHANT HUNTING IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

It had long been my ambition to shoot big game in the heart of the dark continent, but for one reason or another the trip never came off until I had served my apprenticeship with the rifle in India, Burma, and Ceylon. The Asiatic elephant was already fairly familiar to me in his wild state, though I had never enjoyed the privilege of shooting one, but the thought of his African cousin, with the vast ivories that he sometimes carries fairly quickened one's pulse when once the expedition was planned. British Central Africa and North-Eastern Rhodesia were to be my hunting grounds, for in these parts of Africa carriers are cheap, elephants are still plentiful, and on the two licenses of £25 each you have the right of shooting five bulls, (two in B.C.A. and three in. N.E.R.) This is a far better bargain than in Uganda and British East Africa, where the license is £50 in each case and your limit is two. Also rhino could be obtained for a certainty; and as for the larger antelopes, most of which carry most glorious trophies, I imagine that no part of Africa nowadays can show greater variety or numbers of these animals than the country I went to.

It must, however, be understood that elephant tusks in this part of the world do not run to the size of those obtained in Uganda or on the Congo. The record in Rhodesia for a pair is 220lbs., but no other approaching this size has been shot—if my information is correct. Anything over 100lbs. the pair is good: 70lbs. for a single tusk is rare, and 80lbs. for the two is considered well worth shooting.

Throughout the length and breadth of the land there is not a particle of dense jungle as known in India. South Central Africa is essentially a plateau country; for the most part 3,000 feet and upwards above sea level, and consisting of light, open forest land, with small and large clearings known locally as "dambos." The dry season lasts from June to November, the grass being mostly burnt off during July and August, and until the rains break you will not come across a mosquito once a month, when you have fairly penetrated to the uplands of the interior.

I had worked my way up country for some six weeks or so, at the rate of about 15 miles a day, before I got to good elephant ground, and then for 10 days on end I hardly failed to see something of them every day. But time after time tusks were too small, and having but two on this license I was prepared to wait for a good opportunity. Meanwhile I was inspecting all the elephants in the neighbourhood at close quarters, was watching them by the hour, and carefully refraining from firing a shot at anything else, for fear of disturbing their blissful state of ignorance as regards the presence of a hunter in their midst. You will agree with me that such patience and such a remarkable power of control over the trigger finger, should have brought about their reward in due course, especially as it was known that there was one solitary beast in the neighbourhood carrying tusks of probably over 70lbs. each. Far from it! The day came when I informed Mashoni, the hunter, that my stock of patience was exhausted in that particular district, and that the next presentable bull that obtruded himself on my notice would be experimented on with the ·500 cordite. It was on the following day that we came up with a herd containing but one bull, and he a small one as to size of tusk, though his stature was within an inch of 10 feet. I kept my word and duly experimented. The conformation of the ground and the direction of the wind rendered a close approach an easy matter, and I was just about to press the trigger, aiming practically for the ear hole, when the beast turned his head half towards me—it having previously been exactly broadside on. This necessitated an alteration in the angle, and I took him just behind the eye in a line for the ear. He toppled over where he was, falling towards me, and a shot in the brain from two yards off finished him. I now observed that the first bullet (a solid, of course), had passed out of the body near the far shoulder. It has obviously glanced off some of the solid mass of head bone, passed around at the back of the brain and then taken a downward direction. (In fact it is more than possible that the bullet having missed the brain, the animal would have got up again after a few minutes.) The tusks were certainly small, but a very "pretty" pair, absolutely even and alike, and it being my first I could hardly have been more pleased had they been 80 pounders. I had properly blooded the ·500, and now felt that when the subject of conversation turned on elephants I had a right to be heard! Be it known that in these parts, amongst the few white men whose duties call for residence in the country, all antelope shooting bears the same relation to elephant hunting as duck shooting does in India to the pursuit of bison.

The scene now changes to North-Eastern Rhodesia, a few weeks later, when I experienced an extraordinary bit of luck. Armed with my £25 license, and determined to get my three elephants (besides rhino and other game) before again showing my face in Fort Jameson, where I had spent a couple of days collecting a fresh lot of carriers, etc., I had got but 30 miles on the way to the Luangwa river when the fortune of one morning left me but one more elephant to get on his license. Not expecting to come across these pachyderms for at least another day or two I was walking behind my carriers at 6 A.M. on the third morning out, about two miles from our camping place of the previous night. The path was narrow though the ground at the sides was fairly open. Suddenly the long single-file line ahead of me stopped, and then sat down to a man. Three elephants about to cross the path a hundred yards on! Always having the heavy rifle ready at hand, and a few solids in my pocket, I don't suppose 15 seconds elapsed before I had reached the head of the line, fired the rifle, and had one elephant down, shot through the heart, in full view of carriers, headman, kitchen-boy, cook and bearer! Without even allowing me time to look at the fallen monarch, my hunter now fairly raced me after the other two. They had already got into a long stride and were heading off for who knows where—probably a three days' journey. In an agony of mind lest the one on the ground should get up and go off, (for beyond the fact that I had aimed for the heart, and that he had fallen in a patch of long grass that completely hid him, I had then no notion of how he was faring), and with a feverish desire to see the tusks—which the hunter assured me were large—I set off at a jog trot, almost reluctantly. We soon came up with the others, and now saw that one elephant was a very good one, though unfortunately the left tusk was broken, whilst the other was but a moderate beast. With difficulty keeping them in sight, and getting more and more out of breath, it was all I could do not to drop out of the chase altogether. For the next mile or two obtaining a shot was out of the question, as too many trees intervened and the pace was too great. At last I saw they were about to cross an open space, and with a superhuman effort I managed to lessen the distance to about 65 yards, and then gave the larger one a raking shot behind the shoulder. It staggered him momentarily and then on he went at about the same speed. The other cleared off in a different direction. Five minutes was now taken to draw breath, and then we took up the tracks. To make a long story short he went another five or six miles, luckily in a circle, during the course of which peregrination I bombarded him (as he marched) five times more. Once he was good enough to charge me when I was so dead blown, that I could neither shoot straight nor run five yards, but he fortunately mistook a harmless tree for his aggressor, and after upsetting and soundly pummelling it, resumed his way groggily. The sun was high in the heavens ere he threw up the sponge, and rolled over in a thick bamboo clump. There was no doubt as to the merits of these tusks. The unbroken one was a 60-pounder, whilst even the short stump went to 42½.

I was now again all anxiety to get to the other. The carriers squatting on the path first hove in sight, and as soon as shouting could remove the doubt I learnt that he was "still there." It was as I had hoped, the bullet had found the heart all right. This one too turned the scale at well over 100lbs. the pair, so that my share of luck that day had been no inconsiderable one. We now returned to a village adjacent to our previous camp, and spent that day and the next cutting out the four tusks, whilst natives came in from all points of the compass to cut up and take away the meat.

After this favourable turn of fortune's wheel, it was a month before I again saw elephant, but meanwhile I had by no means been idle. Four rhino had succumbed to the ·500, besides hippo, whilst a lighter weapon had accounted for as much other game in the guise of antelope of all sorts as I cared to shoot—only good heads being picked out.

Two sets of circumstances are, I suppose, never precisely similar, but certainly my fourth elephant was bagged under totally different—and more interesting in one sense—conditions, to any of the others, inasmuch as not having a proper hunter with me I had to play entirely off my own bat. It was whilst after brindled gnu that we crossed the fresh spoor of a cow and calf. Taking it up to see if it would resolve itself into a herd, ten minutes had barely elapsed when several elephants came into view. At this sight a local guide who was with me betrayed such a state of excitement that he had to be sent hastily rearwards, whilst I kept but one man with me to carry a spare weapon. The herd was fortunately in a most advantageous position for taking stock of. Standing a bush about 70 yards from the bulk of them, I could without difficulty separate bulls from cows, observe the size of their tusks and count their numbers with exactitude. There were 16, with just one bull amongst them worth shooting. In the position in which they now stood he was impossible of approach, and there was nothing for it but to wait until they should open out, into a more favourable formation. This did not occur for perhaps half an hour, when at length a movement took place amongst the cows and calves whereby the bull that I had marked "for mine own" was separated from the rest. Manœuvring for position as best I could, I at last had to take him three-quarters on towards me. His head was mostly concealed by branches, and I could only give him a shot at the point of the shoulder, hoping it would reach the heart. As usual the rest of the herd vanished without a sound, whilst the stricken beast went off crashing through the bush. Taking up his spoor, we found him standing in the open a few hundred yards away, and creeping forward alone I finished his earthly career with another heart shot, more accurately placed than the former. These tusks, as my glass had already informed me, were short but of good girth, and panned out at 77lbs. the pair.

Is the reader anxious to have details of elephant No. 5? I trow not. Enough has been written to give him a glimpse of 20th century elephant hunting in Central Africa. Apart from this, a trifling obstacle bars the way towards the relation of how I slew my fifth, inasmuch as these lines have been penned whilst on the way to the ground where I hope to get him! At the moment of posting this epistle he roams the forest alive and well.

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON

(1) The Price of Books, (2) The Demand for Books, and (3) The Approaching Advance of Price

IN THE CASE OF

"THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY."

"The Times" offer in India of "The Historians' History of the World" has now reached a stage which makes it necessary again to call attention to the approaching advance in the prices.

The first half of the period during which subscribers can be permitted to have the advantage of a temporary concession in the price has now expired. The greatest interest has been shown in the book and in the offer, an unexpectedly large number of inquiries has been received, and more than 900 orders for the work has been registered in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Colombo.

A concession is allowed to prompt subscribers in order that the History may be placed quickly in the hands of as large a number of buyers as possible at a stage of the book's existence when their co-operation and support are greatly to be desired. In other words, those who shall subscribe now will do so at the lowest price at which the work will ever be sold in India. An ascending scale of prices will soon go into effect. "The Times" has reversed the usual methods of the publishing trade, and, instead of offering the work at the highest price a few subscribers will pay, has fixed a temporary minimum price as an inducement to a much larger body of readers who appreciate a bargain and who act accordingly.

THE FIRST PRICE OF A BOOK.

This plan of sale is based on what "The Times" believes to be ordinary commonsenses and fair dealing between publisher and buyer. "The Times" believe that the first price of a new book should be its lowest price and not its highest price, that a high price is a tax on knowledge, and that a low price attracts a large public. To issue a new book at a high price can have no other effect than to limit the demand.

Most persons will admit that the demand for a book is an absolutely unknown quantity. Who can forecast it? A book is a commodity, but it is not a staple commodity such as wheat, or coal, or cotton, or tea. The price of staples is regulated, not by the producer, but by more or less rigid laws that have their origin in known market values. The demand for them is constant, more or less uniform, and it may be, in ordinary years, approximately estimated in advance.

But who can estimate the demand for a book? The demand for a book, in these days of universal education and widely diffused knowledge, may conceivably run to tens of thousands of copies, provided, of course, it is a good book and its merits are effectively made known.

HIGH PRICE AND SMALL DEMAND.

There are about 55,000,000 English-speaking people under the British flag, not to mention 80,000,000 under the American. A man writes a book in the language of that mighty host, not a book for the learned, or the antiquarian, or the scientific, but just an ordinary book to amuse the ordinary man for an hour or two. The publisher prints a paltry 750, or it may be 1,000 copies for that vast number of the human race. He charges six shillings for a copy that ought to be sold at about two-thirds less, so that the man who buys it pays for his hour or two of amusement as much as would have bought him for a longer period the pleasures of music or scenery, the services of a whole company of actors, and a brilliant dialogue by Mr. Bernard Shaw. At six shillings the book will be absolutely denied to that vast body of omnivorous readers upon whom the reputation and popular approval of any writer must in the last analysis depend. To print a thousand copies of the book is merely to scratch the surface of the natural demand. The publisher who is content to depend for the sale of the book upon the few buyers (libraries and individuals) who will pay the high price, only appeals to a fraction—a small fraction—of the reading public. By making his appeal to this fraction of the public instead of the whole public, he shows either that he lacks faith in the potential possibilities of the book, or that he lacks business acumen.

BOOK-PRICES IN 1852.

The contention of "The Times" that the price of books is too high is not, as some people have thought, of recent origin. As long ago as 1852 "The Times" fought for cheaper literature, and condemned the combination known as the Amalgamated Publishers, because they had put artificially high prices on new books, and forbade price-cutting on the part of the booksellers. In that year there was a memorable controversy in England in regard to book-prices and publishers' profits, and the right of booksellers to sell at whatever price a book will bring. In that controversy, "The Times" voiced the opinion of practically the entire body of British authorship—Carlyle, Darwin, Dickens, Grote, Kingsley, G. H. Lewes, Macaulay, Mill, Milman, F. W. Newman, Goldwin Smith, Herbert Spencer and Tennyson. "The Times" (21st May 1852), referring to the dictation of the publishers, said :—

"Mr. Gladstone most truly said that the state of the bookselling trade was a disgrace to the community. Nothing in the markets of the universe is so dear as a British made book, whether contrasted with other productions of labour at home, or with similar productions abroad. With a large educated population, an inquisitive tone of society, and a general desire for knowledge, the most uncommon article of private purchase is a new book, and the commodity most certain to be procurable at a depreciated rate is a publication of credit and renown."

The allusion in the last clause refers to the quite universal practice among readers of not buying a new book at all, and of procuring second-hand copies from dealers, and it was on the question of the right of dealers to supply books at "cut prices," whether new or second-hand, that the controversy was waged.

Mr. GLADSTONE ON HIGH PRICES.

Mr. Gladstone, himself a large buyer of books, speaking in the House of Commons, 12th May 1852, said :—

"We have a country in which the class that ought to be purchasers of new books is the largest in the world; I mean the educated class in that sense—the men in possession of such fortune as ought to make them the natural purchasers of new publications. That class in this country is counted by twenties and by fifties, I might almost say by hundreds of thousands. But what is the fact with regard to the state of the book-market? It is, that with the exception of certain very highly esteemed and distinguished authors—with the exception of such cases as Mr. Macaulay's HISTORY OF ENGLAND—what are called new publications, not only in a majority of cases, but in an enormous majority, scarcely ever pass a sale of 500 copies. The purchase of new publications is scarcely attempted by anybody individually. (Hear, hear.) You go into the houses of your friends, and, unless in the case of books for which they have a professional want that must be satisfied, or unless they happen to be persons of extraordinary wealth, you do not find copies of new publications upon their tables, purchased for themselves, but you find something from the library, or something from the book club. (Hear, hear.) But what are these book clubs and books societies, which are engaged with such an enormous loss of time and waste of machinery in the distribution of books throughout the country? They are the ingenious expedients which under the pressure of necessity, men have adopted to mitigate the monstrous evils they experience from the enormously high price of books, and satisfy in some degree their own demand for that description of mental food." (Hear, hear.)

The issue by "The Times" of "The Historians' History of the World" is a direct result of the so-called "Book War," during the course of which "The Times" contended that the wide distribution of good literature was prevented by the high prices exacted by the firms who compose the Publishers' Association. "The Times" asserted that book prices are higher to-day than they were 50 years ago, and this notwithstanding the acknowledged fact that the materials of book-production and the processes thereof have been largely diminished in cost. The History was therefore offered to the public to demonstrate the truth of "The Times" contention that it is possible to issue first-class books at a popular price. The extraordinary welcome given to the History at Home has more than justified "The Times" position in the matter, and an enormous sale of the work is confidently anticipated. Here in India the sale of all the copies that are available at the present prices now seems to be reasonably assured. Whether as a work of reference, or as a book that is to be read merely for amusement, the History cannot fail to make a wide appeal in this country. For a station club, a library, a school, an officers' mess, or for that large class of Anglo-Indians who appreciate good literature, "The Historians' History of the World" offers just that combination of solidity and human interest, of scholarship and picturesque description, which will instruct the reader while at the same time it entertains him.

.....when on the subject of ammunition there are some special bullets sold by the well-known Gunmakers Messrs. Lyon and Lyon of Calcutta called "Rotary" bullets which can be used with choke-bore barrels and with perfect safety. I speak from experience for I have tried them with my own guns which are full choked in both barrels. The shooting up to 70 yards was good and the wound made by the bullets appalling. I recommend them as most useful to have in one's possession at all events as a stand by in case of accident to a rifle. I had no idea until I tried it that it was possible to make such good shooting from a smooth bore. For close quarters I should prefer a gun, a gun with these bullets to a rifle.

THE TURF.

NEWBURY.

THE bright weather came just in time to hearten up the vacillating, and shoals of visitors poured into Paddington Station on Wednesday for each of the three flying specials, which filled well, and, in the way of speed, did all that was promised of them. From its easy accessibility, Paddington appeals specially to the upper ten, who have taken as kindly to Newbury as to Ascot or Sandown, and a large and representative company, which owed much of its strength to the fair sex, whose pretty costumes lent colour to scene, filled the club enclosure. Tattersall's was well patronised, and from North and South a big crowd filled the further rings. After Colwick Park's squelchy going, the course was in excellent order, and yet falls were the order of the day, loose horses careering round the course or about the vast area enclosed by the rails, but, fortunately, no serious accident occurred to the riders.

No doubt the excellent sport enjoyed here on Wednesday helped to increase the spectators, as the specials yesterday were more fully packed, and the attendance all round must have gladdened the hearts of the executive, each department being most satisfactorily filled. The going, good to begin with was better still, and the good fields kept the officials at high pressure from start to finish. Falls were again pretty frequent, and as was the case on Wednesday, one proved fatal to the steed. Mason, who alights on his feet like a cat, has had as many spills as has any rider, and this time was so shaken in the first event as to have to look on for the rest of the afternoon.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

The Southern League on Saturday furnished some eye-openers. In the first place, Queen's Park Rangers, on their own ground, went down before an unrepresentative Crystal Palace team; and secondly, Plymouth Argyle, who had not tasted defeat at Home Park, and had given away only one of 18 points there, were humiliated by Brighton and Hove, a team well in the bottom half of the table, that had not won a league game on foreign territory for over four months. There were other surprises, but not so startling as those at Park Royal and Home Park. It is difficult to assign a reason for the failure of the leaders except that in the first half they were inclined to take matters in too leisurely a style, and then discovered, when too late, that the Palace would not allow their formidable opponents to metaphorically walk over them. The Ranger's inside forwards gave their weakest display of the season. The Palace team consisted of a band of thorough triers, every members of the side being in desperate earnest from start to finish, and it was pluck and perseverance that carred them through. The success of Brighton at Plymouth emphasises that the success of the former over Preston North End in the F.A. Cup was not a fluke. Admitting this, it was a wonderful achievement for the Seasiders' to score thrice against a team that had given away only nine goals in nine Southern League games on their own ground. As both the Rangers and Argyle went down, their relative positions in the table are unchanged, but as Bradford Park Avenue played their twelfth drawn game at Northampton, they are well in the running, for they are level on points with Plymouth, and Tottenham are only three behind the Rangers. Here are the elements of an exceedingly pretty struggle.

Brentford could not pick up points away from home in 1906-7 until they went to Watford, and this season prior to Saturday they had played 11 league games on opponents' grounds, had lost them all, and had scored only a half-dozen goals against 27. It is a long lane that has no turning, and Brentford have at length found the road to success. Watford were much below par forward, and it was lack of cohesion in this department that brought about their reverse. It was not a surprise for Tottenham to overcome Swindon, but reports to hand suggest there was too much feeling imported into the game in the latter stages. The usually sportsman-like Tottenham onlookers were disappointed that Woodward stood down, and when the word went round that he would not turn out because of the treatment to which he has been previously subjected when playing against the Wiltshire men, they became a bit restive. An authoritative statement is imperative, because if the idea be incorrect it is unjust to Swindon for it not to be contradicted. What were Reading doing on Saturday? A win of 5—0 over Bristol Rovers is staggering, especially as the Westerners were at full strength. This is Reading's most emphatic success of the season, and the worst defeat the Rovers have had inflicted upon them. Norwich, without their skipper, could not hold Millwall, and the Dockers returned with both points in their possession. Southampton and West Ham United did not have anything to spare against Portsmouth and Luton respectively, and the only goal scored at Leyton gave the home side a victory over New Brompton.

League Division I.

Visiting teams in the first division of the Football League shared the points in five instances, but in the other five games the home clubs were all on the winning side. This is a striking confirmation of the advantage of ground, and yet we have the Chelsea eleven running Manchester United—the team of the season—to a goal at Clayton. This is the first time in the current tournament that the United have failed to score more than once on their own ground, and the closeness of the game—a fortunate win for the leaders—makes next Saturday's Cup tie assume an open appearance. Woolwich Arsenal were disappointing at Plumstead, for they managed to only share the honours with Preston North End, and the price they have to pay for failing to capture the other points is the loss of three places in the table. Bristol City repeated last season's success over Notts County at Bristol, and Everton just managed to defeat the Villa at Goodison Park, with the unfortunate result for the Midlanders that they are now, among the last half-dozen clubs, with a lead of only three points above the present holders of the wooden spoon. Sunderland, now at the foot, will not long remain there if they maintain Saturday's form, for they smothered Bury at Roker Park; and Sheffield Wednesday, after their temporary eclipse, were in riotous mood at Owlerton, Manchester City coming in for a severe drubbing. Newcastle United did well to obtain a point from Nottingham Forest at the Lace City, and Middlesbrough gave further evidence of improvement by averting defeat at Bolton. Blackburn Rovers, although scoring 3 goals at Ewood Park against Sheffield United, could only draw, and Birmingham disappointed their supporters in increasing their aggregate by merely a single point, for numerous chances were thrown away, and Liverpool must be accounted fortunate to share in the honours.

League Division II.

In the Second Division of the League the games pursued the uneventful tenor of their way, except at Glossop, where Grimsby, whose previous solitary success was at Craven Cottage, defeated Glossop by one odd goal in three. Wolverhampton Wanderers came away from Stoke with a point, but in the other eight games the home clubs were returned winners. So stubborn, however, were the contests that in six of them only a goal separated the clubs at the close. The biggest win of the afternoon is to the credit at Lincoln City, their 4—0 victory over Chesterfield being their heaviest score in the tournament to date, and their first home success since 2nd November when Wolverhampton were defeated 2—1. Fulham did not have matters all their own way with Barnsley, but they had a large share of the game, and at the finish they won in comfortable style. As Oldham Athletic lost at Hull three teams are now level with 32 points each, while Derby County are in the van with 34, and Fulham, with 31 to their credit, must be taken into serious account when weighing up probabilities. Clapton Orient went down at Bradford to the City, but it was a creditable performance to lose by a goal, and there is no doubt that the Orient team as now constituted is the best the club has ever had at its command. It has been carefully built up, and its growing popularity in North London is due in no small degree to the fact that it has a big leaven of local players. Derby County and West Bromwich both succeeded at home, and the former are evidently determined to renew acquaintance with the upper circle next September.

Saturday was a big day in the ranks of the amateurs. The second round ties of the F.A. Amateur Cup furnished several keen struggles, and there were also a few notable surprises. Clapton, the holders, found Leytonstone a tough handful, and a draw was perhaps slightly flattering to the former. Oxford City made no mistake with Windsor and Eton, who were allowed to play a substitute in goal after Leaders had been injured in the first half. Ilford were in fine form against Stamford Town, the latter being altogether outplayed, and the Maidenhead Norfolkians put up one of the best performances of their career against Wycombe Wanderers. A gruelling game at Nunhead saw the honours with Deptford Invicta, but Shepherd's Bush and 2nd Grenadier Guards will have to meet again to decide the question of superiority. The Depot Battalion R. E. got through rather easily at the expense of the 1st Scots Guards, and the 1st Royal Scots unexpectedly beat Bromley at Shornecliffe. Another surprise was sprung by Custom House, who knocked out King's Lynn at the first time of asking, and Worthing had less trouble to settle the aspirations of Dorking than was anticipated.

North vs. South.—The international trial game, North vs. South, on the ground of the Manchester City Club on Monday afternoon was one of the most brilliant of the many that have been played under this title. Unfortunately persistent rain on Sunday night and Monday morning made the ground terribly heavy. There was an improvement overhead before the game commenced, and it remained fine until some ten minutes from the finish, when a storm of wind and rain drove the majority of the spectators who were in the open from the ground. There was not a big attendance for a match of this character, about 8,000 being present, and the receipts were £220.

The play, judged as a whole, was well worth watching, and its chief characteristic was unquestionably the clever footwork and effective combination of the South inside forwards. Hilsdon, Woodward, and Windridge, after the first few minutes, played together as if they were component parts of a smooth running machine. The North defence was frequently in difficulties, and it was well that so trustworthy a goalkeeper as Maskrey was between the uprights. Both the outside men also did well, Pentland especially, for he was generally able to master Rodway. With regard to the halves, Wedlock was the best of the six. His irrepressible energy and determination were important factors in the superiority of the South, and he was well supported by Ducat and E. H. Lintott, the latter shaping extremely well against the fleet-footed Rutherford, and his headwork was beyond reproach.

McEwen, although out of his usual place, thoroughly justified his selection, and Cottle added to his already high reputation. Kitchen did much of his work in the style of an artist, but he made two mistakes, each of which cost his side a goal. The North inside forwards were extremely disappointing, and the wing men were much more prominent, especially Rutherford, who was off whenever the least chance presented itself, but he was not given much room to manœuvre, and as a result his centres were not so accurate as usual.

On the left Wall did some smart things, but clever and speedy as he proved himself to be, he scarcely reached the high standard he frequently attains in club games. Duckworth was the best of three moderate halves, and Holden was easily the better back, Rodway being too slow in recovery, and much too considerate of his opponents. Maskrey had a tremendous amount of work in goal, and with few exceptions he did the right thing in the right way, while some of his saves bordered on the sensational. On form the South should have won by a good margin. Hilsdon obtained the four for the South, and while congratulating him on his performance, it must be pointed out that he missed a couple of glorious openings when he had burst through and had only Maskrey to beat.

Playing against the wind in the first half, the South soon asserted themselves, and at the end of five minutes an artistic touch by Woodward placed Hilsdon in possession. The latter swerved, and then running on, let drive from twenty yards range, and netted in the corner. A few spasmodic attempts by the North, and Lintott then pulled up Rutherford, made a lot of ground, and swung the ball across for Ducat to dash in and centre, and Hilsdon to score. It was largely a duel between the North defence and the South attack, the latter's forward being kept going by the halves, who were playing a capital spoiling game. Occasionally Rutherford and Wall threatened danger, but their centres were not improved upon, Kitchen experiencing no difficulty in dealing with the few shots sent in until nearing the interval, when he failed to properly clear, and Bradshaw, with an open goal, from the return, shot wide. Half-time.—South, 2; North, 0.

The second half was only two minutes old when Woodward drew the defence, then gave to Wedlock, who transferred to Hilsdon, and the latter netted. The North retaliated on the right, and Rutherford sending in a high cross shot, Kitchen turned the ball between the posts in endeavouring to give a corner. Fine football was shown by both teams hereabouts, both goalkeepers being called upon, and eventually, following an electric dash by Pentland, Hilsdon gathered on the centre, and gave Maskrey no chance with a swift ground shot. From a free kick for a foul on Wall, there was a scramble in the goal-mouth, and Kitchen had the misfortune to again help the ball into his own net, while Bradshaw supplemented this with a third goal after a smart bit of individual play. Six minutes from the finish Brown obtained possession not far from the uprights, and put the ball well out of Kitchen's reach. Prior to the two latter goals Hilsdon should twice have scored. Result:—North, 4; South, 4.

RUGBY RULES.

At Richmond, on Saturday, the London Scottish avenged the defeat they sustained at the hands of the Harlequins earlier in the season, gaining a capital victory by 2 goals (1 dropped) and 2 tries to 1 goal. Their success was the more meritorious as within five minutes they lost Kenneth McLeod, who received a wound over the right eye, and had to be surgically treated. J. R. Simson was withdrawn from the pack, and the Scottish thus played practically throughout the match with only fourteen men. As it happened, Lambert, on the other side, fell lame just about half-time, and retired soon afterwards, so that during the last half an hour the teams were on even terms. It was a fine, strenuous match, brimful of incidents and excitements. With the extra man in the scrummage the Harlequin forwards had the best of the struggle in the first half, nearly always getting the ball, and by their keen tackling and general tactics preventing the Scotch forwards from bringing off their well-known rushes. Each side in turn had some narrow escapes, Walter twice nearly getting through for the Scottish, and Birkett almost breaking down the Scottish defence. For half an hour the game proceeded with varying fortunes, and then Lambert, seizing on an opening provided by Sibree, raced past Wade, the Scotch full back, and scored, G. D. Roberts placing a goal. A little later Lambert came very near repeating the feat, but swerving inside, he could not get into his full stride again before Martin, the Oxford three-quarter, pulled him down. It was in this collision that Lambert was lamed. At half-time the Harlequins held a lead of 5 points.

In the second half, it is hardly too much to say the Harlequins gave themselves away. Finding himself useless, Lambert left, Hammond taking his place on the wing, but this loss was not responsible for the turn in fortunes that soon took place. The Harlequin forwards continued to get the ball and heel out, but as events turned out, they would have done better to have gone on with it. However, they let the ball out to their backs, and the passing of the latter was of the slow, obvious order. Quick to perceive the possibilities of the situation, the speedy Martin slipped in between the passing, raced down the field, punted over the full-back's head, and then, thanks to his superior pace, regained possession scoring a try, and Geddes placing a goal. Then came the turning point of the match. Field and Lewis, the Harlequin right wing, got quite clear, save the full-back, and a try looked almost certain. Unfortunately for his side Field, who was quite off colour, held too long, and then passed forward. Such a splendid chance never again presented itself to the Harlequins. Directly afterwards their passing was intercepted by Walter, who made an opening for Purves to score. A little later Purves, fielding a cross-kick by Martin, dropped an excellent goal, and then Martin obtained another try in precisely the same way as before. The victory of the Scottish, though quite deserved, would have been a little more convincing had one of their tries from start to finish been the outcome of good work by themselves. As it was, all three were the result of opportunism, and seeing that five of their backs will probably figure against Wales next Saturday, their failure to initiate and successfully carry through an attack, must, from a Scotch point of view, be a little disquieting. The hero of the afternoon unquestionably was Martin, who not only gained two tries, but probably prevented two or three. Once more the tremendous value of great pace, both in attack and defence, was brought home. Had Martin been possessed of only ordinary speed the Scottish probably would have lost.

On the adjoining enclosure, the Old Deer Park, the Old Merchant Taylors and Guy's Hospital had a hard tussle, though the match was not productive of much scientific play. The Taylors trusted to their forwards, who played a hard, battling kind of game, and the Hospital backs were kept idle during the first half. Afterwards, however, Steinger, their speedy three-quarter, had a couple of chances, and Guy's, who are an unbeaten side, won by 2 tries to 0. With their three-quarter line strengthened by the presence of P. F. McEvedy, of Guy's, the London Irish gained a handsome victory over the Marlborough Nomads by 2 goals and 2 tries to 1 penalty goal. McEvedy obtained one of the tries after running nearly the whole length of the ground. Early in the season Lennox lost to Rosslyn Park, but they reversed matters on Saturday, beating the Park team by 4 tries to 1 goal. Four leading London clubs journeyed into the provinces, and all returned defeated. Blackheath only sent a moderate side to Cardiff, and the crack Welsh club won comfortably by 1 dropped goal and 5 tries to 1 try. Though only playing eight of the side that opposed Cambridge, the Dark Blues at Oxford demolished a weak Richmond fifteen, running up the big score of 6 goals and 6 tries to 1 try. Though they beat Northampton at West Ham, the London Welsh found Saturday's task too heavy for them, the East Midlands' side winning by 4 tries to 1 goal. The London Hospital made a great fight at Portsmouth, and were a trifle unlucky to lose, victory resting with the United Services by 1 dropped goal to 1 try. Cambridge easily disposed of Bedford by 2 goals and 6 tries to 2 goals, and Swansea won their return game with Gloucester. In the case of another return encounter—Bristol vs. Cinderford—the previous result was reversed, victory this time going to the Bristol fifteen.

In the county match at Redruth, the Cornish fifteen defeated Gloucestershire in hollow fashion by 5 goals and 3 tries to 2 goals. Their decisive victory was all the more remarkable as Gloucestershire gained all their points before Cornwall scored. The latter lessened their opponents' lead to 5 points by half-time, and afterwards simply ran away with the game, scoring seven times. The result retards the county competition, as Gloucestershire, Cornwall, and Devon tie for first place in the South-Western Division, and will have to play off. Cumberland effected a surprise at Kendal by defeating Yorkshire by 2 goals to 1 try, while Durham gained a capital victory over Northumberland at South Shields by 6 goals (1 penalty) to 1 try. The issue in the North now rests between Durham and Lancashire, and these counties meet next Saturday.

THE NORTHERN UNION VS. NEW ZEALANDERS.—This match was played on Saturday at Leeds, before some 12,000 spectators. It was not a great game, though at times there were bouts of passing which aroused the crowd to enthusiasm. In this respect neither side could claim much advantage. The fact was, Messenger, the New Zealanders' star three-quarter, was badly missed. At the same time, his presence would not have brought victory the "All Blacks" way, for both fore and aft the Colonials were no match for their opponents.

The Northern Union team's great advantage was forward. Rarely did the "All Blacks" pack secure possession, and perhaps in no game during the present tour have the New Zealand forwards been so worsted.

The star performers for the winners were T. Llewellyn, of Oldham, and Leytham, of Wigan, the centre and wing men respectively. The first-named was always doing something, whilst Leytham, if having fewer chances, was always reliable.

The Colonials were best represented by Turtill at full back and Smith at centre three-quarter. The latter was in fine form, and his fine turn of speed, together with his sterling defensive tactics, were of immense service to his side. Result: —Northern Union, 1 goal and 4 tries (14 points); New Zealand, 2 tries (6 points).

CROSS-COUNTRY RUNNING.

THE champion cross-country clubs of England, France, and Belgium respectively met in an 8 miles race at St. Cloud on Sunday. In 1905, the Highgate H. proved successful, Aldridge being first. In 1906, Highgate H. again won, but Ragoeneau, the Frenchman, was first. Aldridge was not in the English team. Last year victory went to Sutton H., Welding being first man home. This year England scored another triumph, the club placings being :—

Birchfield H. (English champions), 32 points, 1.
Racing Club de France (French champions), 56 points, 2.
Union Saint-Gilloise (Belgian champions), 101 points, 3.

The English victory, although anticipated, was notable by reason of misfortune to the English team. The champion, A. Underwood, who has been called in France, the "new Shrubb," fell at at two miles, and retired; and A. J. Robertson, the four and ten miles Midland Counties' champion, lost his way when leading, and had to be content with second place, only two yards behind the winner. The first man to finish was the French champion, J. Keyser, the positions being as follow :—

Yesterday further trials were given to Fairbairn and Horndge, the two men who are fighting for the No. 2 place, and the most important piece of rowing of the term was undertaken. With Fairbairn at No. 2, the crew paddled down to Baitsbite in four stages, but as there was little life about the work, Mr. Escombe called upon Stuart to liven the crew up. Swinging round, Horndge then went in for Fairbairn, and the crew paddled to Ditton in one piece. They then stripped and rowed from Ditton Corner to the Pike and Eel—a distance of about three-quarters of a mile. For the greater part of the distance Stuart set the stroke at 28, but for the last 200 yards he took them at 30. Order of rowing :—

WRESTLING.

ZBYSCO VS. SULIMAN.—On Monday a second performance was given by Zbysco and Suliman at the Holborn Empire, at a matinee, the first having taken place at the London Pavilion recently. The style was Graeco-Roman, the best of three pin falls, one of the conditions being that the principals should wash themselves to the satisfaction of the respective managers. This ordeal having been satisfactorily gone through, and the combatants reported to be fit, they appeared in the presence of a crowded house. Zbysco had for attendant Sailor Barker, and Suliman had M. Delaloye.

After the customary preparations and introductions by the M.C., Mr. J. D. Dixon, of the referee, Mr. G. T. Dunning, and the timekeeper, Mr. Frank Mathews, the rivals advanced for the fray. Great caution was exercised in the anxiety to be on the alert for a sudden attack. They neared each other stealthily, and the spectators were intensely watchful for the first grip. Suliman made a grab at Zbysco, and was the first to get behind Zbysco, and tried the half-nelson, which nearly turned the Galician over. The latter quietly emerged from the difficulty, and rose to his feet. Suliman was twice cautioned for tripping, but again Zbysco was on the ground, and as quickly on his feet. Suliman commenced to be more aggressive, and now it was Zbysco's turn. Suliman remained quietly prostrate, and Zbysco was unable to move him an inch until Suliman jumped to his feet. Again he was cautioned for tripping. Zbysco rushed at his opponent, lifted him in the air and threw him. Suliman on the ground twisted Zbysco over and forced him on to his side. He got a hard throat grip on the Galician, and when the latter forced himself to the perpendicular he touched his throat and made attempts to cough. Soon Suliman was on the ground, and Zbysco tried in vain to shift him. Meanwhile, Suliman lay on his forearms at his ease. Suliman struck out with his hands like a Continental wrestler, and was bewildered when cautioned. He threw Zbysco, and with the half-nelson brought him very close to two shoulders. Zbysco was now on top and perspiring freely. Suliman, on the contrary, was as fresh as when he started. Zbysco tried to lift him, and Suliman remained passively content. Zbysco bore down, but Suliman seemed to possess the strength of a giant and knew well how to use it. (Time—20 minutes.) He was enjoying a well-earned rest. For several minutes this continued, Zbysco was working very hard, and appeared to be puzzled as to what to do, and Suliman, when it suited him, got up. Suliman tripped, and down went Zbysco, and the referee interfered, but Suliman did not appear to understand the interpreters. He picked Zbysco up and threw him. Here was an effort for a fall, but it failed, Zbysco got behind, and the same groundwork was repeated, with precisely the same results. (Time—27 minutes) Zbysco's armlocks were of no use, and Suliman now turned him over, and time after time brought him close to his shoulders. Finally Zbysco with a backward movement shot over Suliman, gripped him as in a vice, and with Herculean strength gradually forced him on to his shoulders with a reversed chest hold. Time—30mins. 40secs.

Suliman caught Zbysco in his arms, and flung him to the floor, but when there did not know how to act for the best. Zbysco easily rolled over on to his shoulders, and jumped to his feet. He caught Suliman in his arms, and put him on his two shoulders as though he were a mere child. Suliman did not resist, and seemed very satisfied to see the end of it. Time—33secs.

As an exhibition of wrestling it was poor. One would have to imagine the display of a man who has never wrestled Graeco-Roman in his life to understand Suliman's very poor exhibition. Even when he descended to catch-as-catch-can he did not appear very much at home, in addition to which the constant cautions so non-plussed him that he scarcely know how to proceed. Zbysco did nothing worthy of special comment, so that the best that can be said of the match was, it was a sight of two burly men tossing each other about, sometimes very aimlessly, and in a style totally devoid of scientific principles. Had Suliman been a clever wrestler he would have gained a fall in less than a minute. He missed scores of good chances, and relied upon his strength for victory. Zbysco met Suliman in his own style, but throughout the display showed unmistakeably that he has yet much to learn and is quite young enough to learn it.

HACKENSCHMIDT VS. JOE ROGERS.—The Hackenschmidt-Rogers match is over, and the "Russian Lion" is still the undisputed champion. At Oxford Music Hall yesterday afternoon he settled the aspirations of another challenger in the person of Joe Rogers, a Goliath in strength, and the pride of American wrestling. Hackenschmidt is, without the least shadow of doubt, the King of all Wrestlers in the catch-as-catch-can, and probably also in the Graeco-Roman style; he has still another challenge battle to fight, but the opposition of Zbysco, the next customer, is not to be feared. The Russian, in his match with Rogers yesterday, gave us an idea of what a perfectly trained man can do. He is the epitome of strength; a perfect Hercules. Confident from the start, Hackenschmidt won the first fall in 7 min. 35 sec., and the second—which enabled him to claim the match—in more decisive fashion in 50 sec. less.

The match has undoubtedly been the most interesting wrestling event of the season. The English public are fond of their own style of wrestling—the catch-as-catch-can method—which has been fostered for so many long years, more particularly in the Lancashire district. Hackenschmidt, on settling in England a few years back, soon mastered the style, and became champion, his memorable match with Madrali, at Olympia, last spring, emphasising his right to that title. Many challenges were hurled at the Russian by aspiring champions, but Hackenschmidt found that exhibition turns were more profitable than match-making. He had been booked for a lengthy tour at music halls both in England and America, and it was on his return from the latter country that negotiations for a match were opened up.

Rogers, who reached this country from the States in the fall of last year, had to scratch from a three-cornered match with Zbysco and Padoubny owing to an injury, but he was readily met by Hackenschmidt. Acting on a promise made while in America, the Russian came to terms with Rogers for a match the best of three falls, under catch-as-catch-can rules, for £50 a side and a purse. Both men desired that the "Sporting Life" should govern the contest and appoint the officials. For a time the question of the date hung fire, and it was only a matter of some three weeks ago that final arrangements were made.

The Editor of that paper appointed Mr. R. P. Watson referee, who, singular to relate, officiated in a similar capacity in Hackenschmidt's first contest in England a few years back. Mr. E. A. Humphreys, of the same paper, was timekeeper, while the seconds were two men well known in sport—Charley Mitchell and Charley Smith. Mitchell, who acted for Rogers, will be remembered as having fought a draw of 39 rounds with John L. Sullivan for the championship of the world, at Chantilly, France, on March 10, 1888; while Smith has a very fine wrestling record. Mr. Kinahan was M.C., and Mr. Blyth-Pratt, the able manager of the Oxford Music Hall, looked after the general arrangements, which were of the most complete order, everything going with perfect smoothness.

The ring was on the stage, and around it the Press and others directly and indirectly associated with the match were seated. There were many sporting celebrities in the huge building, which we might mention, had not a single empty seat.

The full Oxford orchestra rendered a splendid selection of music prior to the wrestlers taking the mat. Rogers was the first to appear, and some minutes elapsed before his rival, clad in a dressing-gown, entered the arena. Mr. Kinahan, prior to the start of the contest, briefly outlined the conditions of the match, which were the best of three pin falls under catch-as-catch-can rules, for a stake of £100. There was a "buzz" among the vast audience when the weights were announced—Hackenschmidt, 14st. 10lb.; Rogers, 17st. 10lb. These formalities over, the contest was then left in the hands of the referee, Mr. R. P. Watson.

First Fall.—Hackenschmidt Wins.—Time 7 min. 35 sec. Immediately the wrestlers were ordered to "hold to," they closed with neck holds. Locking the fingers smartly, Hackenschmidt endeavoured to drop his opponent by slipping on to his knees, but Rogers wrenched himself clear and stood away. The Russian was after his man at once, and with wonderful dexterity gained a strong neck hold, but Rogers again broke clear. The American wrestler, using his weight to advantage, rushed Hackenschmidt off the mat, but on again taking the centre the Russian's superior science was once more apparent. Breaking clear, Rogers manoeuvred for a drop, but in doing so he left himself open for Hackenschmidt to close on him. Getting both hands round the body, the Russian floored his opponent, and while outstretched on the mat Rogers displayed great cleverness by defeating many attempts made by Hackenschmidt to effect an arm-lock. Baffled at every corner, Hackenschmidt relinquished an attempt at a half nelson, and then confined his attention to waist holds all of which proved unavailing. The wrestlers were soon upright again, but Hackenschmidt would not allow his opponent to rest, and kept him moving at a very rapid pace.

So far, Rogers had been acting almost entirely on the defensive, and while attempting some offensive work he found himself again on the mat, and fighting hard to avoid defeat. While on hands and knees, Rogers being undermost, the Russian played for a roll over, but the American kept altering his position, tactics which compelled his adversary to change his methods. Instead of regaining his feet, Rogers still clung to the mat, and with Hackenschmidt on top, the latter was given another opportunity of effecting an arm-lock.

Rogers was now feeling the effects of the pace, which had, since the start, been set by the Russian. Lying flat on his chest, Rogers allowed his rival to get almost complete command of his left arm, while the American's legs were locked in such a position as to be almost immovable. Just as Hackenschmidt had effected an arm-lock, and was manoeuvring for a roll-over, Rogers wriggled from his grasp, and assumed a safe position. But a few seconds later Rogers once more faced the mat, and while resting on the left shoulder he left himself open for Hackenschmidt to gain a powerful wrist-lock. Keeping the right arm outstretched, and confining his attention to effecting a lock with the left arm, Hackenschmidt had his man in a desperate position. Gradually Rogers was rolled over; his right arm was powerless, and his legs locked in such a manner as to be of little use to him. Hackenschmidt brought every ounce of his enormous strength to bear, and it was only a question of how long the stamina of Rogers would last. A huge cheer rent the air as Hackenschmidt pinned both shoulders to the mat, thus gaining the first fall in 7min. 35secs.

Second Fall.—Hackenschmidt Wins.—Time, 6 min. 45 sec.

After ten minutes' interval, the contestants again took the mat to battle for the second fall, amid considerable applause. Hackenschmidt quickly darted for a neck hold but Rogers was alert, and with heads hard together they angled for holds. After they broke loose Rogers stood erect, but before he fully realised how it happened he was on the mat. It was a brilliant move on the part of the Russian, who gripped his adversary round the hips, and turned him over. It seemed one continuous move, executed with lightning rapidity. Rogers landed heavily on his left elbow, and many thought he had been damaged, but he assumed a kneeling position, and allowed the Russian to do all the work.

Unfortunately for Rogers, he played into Hackenschmidt's hands by clinging to the mat. This enabled the Russian to work in the Graeco-Roman style—all holds above the waist—a style, it may be remarked, of which Hackenschmidt is particularly fond. Rogers was on his knees, and Hackenschmidt picked him up with a crutch hold from behind. The Russian pulled Rogers on to his side, but the latter turned on his face. Finding himself baulked by these methods, the Russian tried a waist and arm hold on the left side. Still unable to succeed in his object, Hackenschmidt changed to the right side, and tried to pull his man over, but all to no purpose. Securing a strong arm lock, Hackenschmidt by sheer strength placed Rogers in an extremely awkward position. The Russian on his knees kept Rogers' left arm tightly locked, and then played on the right arm for a roll over. Rogers fought desperately hard to relieve himself, but he could get no purchase with his limbs, which were all at the mercy of Hackenschmidt. The excitement was now intense as the Russian was striving every nerve and muscle to bring the contest to an end. Panting heavily, the American strove his hardest to extricate himself, but the "Russian Lion" full of vitality, pressed both his opponent's shoulders to the mat, and gained the second fall, and the match in 6min. 45sec.

BOXING.

TIGER SMITH VS. J. COSTELLO.

The biggest crowd that has ever attended the Drill Hall, Sheffield, since Billy Plimmer and George Corfield fought for the world's championship, congregated last night, when Jack Costello (Birmingham) and Tiger Smith (Merthyr Tydvil) met to contest twenty rounds, each of three minutes duration, at 11st. 4lb., with 4oz. gloves, for £50 a side, and a purse of £100 given by Mr. T. White. As has been previously stated, both had undergone special preparation, the Midlander at Oldbury, under the care of Bill Jeeves, and Smith at his native heath, his mentor being Jack Daley (America). Both stripped in perfect condition, and as the fight progressed it was evident that great credit was due to each trainer. Each man scaled 11st. 2lb. Costello having two inches advantage in height, being 5ft. 6in. Costello was seconded by Jabez White, Harry James, Bill Jeeves (Birmingham, and Percy Laycock (Sheffield), whilst Smith's wants were looked after by Alf. Harry, Geo. Harry, Danney Davis (Merthyr Tydvil), and Jack Daley (America). The contest was one of the fiercest ever seen in Sheffield, Smith meting out great punishment to his adversary. It was evident by the way Smith started that he wanted the contest over in the first two rounds. He got home several right and left hooks, whilst in the third meeting he first got home the left on the jaw, and a severe uppercut, then missed with an attempted right upper-cut. Costello was weak, and Smith by his exertion was in the same state before the close. In a rally on the ropes Smith fell through exhaustion. The following four rounds were scrambles, although some furious work took place in mix-ups. In the sixth, Smith got home a right hook which cut open Costello's eye. In round eight Costello got the left home, but in return received four jabs and the right on the jaw, going to the boards for nine seconds. On jumping up he was again floored for seven seconds, but once more resumed, finishing the round fighting. In the ninth meeting Costello landed two rights, and after Smith had got home the right on the jaw Costello got home with his right on the jaw. Before the round closed Smith landed right and left hooks on Costello's face. In the tenth round after some furious fighting, Costello was sent to the boards for nine seconds, and on rising was again floored time alone saving him. The eleventh was the last, as half way through Smith got home right and left hooks, the Midlander just getting up in time; but Smith would not be denied, and rushing him to the ropes again got home a right hook on the point of the chin, Costello going down and being counted out, although making several ineffectual attempts to rise. On retiring Costello was given a great ovation. Costello's recuperative powers were wonderful, and at times Smith was quite as tired as his adversary through his own exertions. Mr. R. P. Watson (appointed by the "Sporting Life") was referee, and Joe Walker (Sheffield) timekeeper.

Before the principal contest Tipple Grey (Sheffield) beat Harry Norton (Wakefield) on points in a ten rounds contest. Young Fox (Sheffield) beat Pete Thompson (Sheffield) on points in a six rounds contest, and Young Sandow (Sheffield) knocked out Young Squires (Sheffield) in three rounds in what should have been a six rounds contest.

In the absence of the family the private grounds of a certain Scottish lord were often used by the natives of the two neighbouring villages, as thereby a saving of fully a mile was effected.

Occasionally, too, when his lordship was at home, attempts were made to "run the blockade" for whenever any trespasser was caught by his lordship he had to obey the command to "Go back the way he had come."

A local hawker, when cautiously wheeling his barrow along the forbidden path one day, happened to see his lordship before the latter saw him, and coolly turning his barrow round, sat down with his back to the dreaded laird, who, coming up, gave him a severe reprimanding and ordered him to "wheel about and go back the road which he had come."

The wily hawker did as he was bidden, thereby turning his barrow in the direction in which he wished to go, and so effectually outwitting the unsuspecting laird.

Hunting.

KARACHI HUNT.

On 23rd January the hounds met at the Bunnia's Crossing, when a large field turned out. Finding near Rai Singh's well, the hounds ran a tremendous pace in the direction of the Ruined Cottage—and after a burst of 15 minutes rolled their jack over in the ploughed field to the left of the cottage. The Master then drew Graham's Spinney, whence two jacks broke away. The pack settled down to the one which ran to the left, making his line past the White House to the hills. The White House nullah was full of water, and it was a pretty sight to see the hounds swimming across it. We had some difficulty in crossing, and on the far side could not see the hounds, owing to the mist. They were speaking well to the scent, and though we could not see them, we could hear them. They ran into their jack at the foot of the hills, after a very fast 20 minutes. Throughout the morning there was a heavy mist, and it was not easy to see far ahead. The air was cool and scent excellent.

On 25th January the hounds met at the Hunt Camp, Landhi, when a field of fifteen turned out. Mrs. Graham and Miss Osborne were the only ladies out. Moving off from the Camp Wood at 7-25 the Master drew the camp covert, but it was blank. Better luck was in store for us along the banks of the Landhi river, when the hounds were soon moving after a jack. He gave us a ringing run, taking us back through the Camp Wood, and then on towards the Malir river, on the banks of which, we killed him. A nice run of 25 minutes, and the hounds hunted nicely together. The Master then trotted the hounds back to the Long Covert, where the hounds were not long before they found again. The covert was very thick and it was with some difficulty they pushed him out in the open towards Cat Farm, but he was turned almost at once back into the Long Covert, by an enthusiastic Sindhi who joined in the chase, with a big stick! The hounds worked him again to the edge of the covert, and it looked as if he were going to break away over the Temple fields, but some of the field coming up at the moment, he broke back again, and there we left him. Drawing the sugar cane khets, in the Cat Farm, the hounds rattled a fine big jack out into the open, but he only gave us a short run, and then turned back into covert again. We found twice again in the heath beyond, but the covert was too thick for us, so the Master lifted the hounds to the Big Covert, near Rabu's khet. Here two jack were soon a foot, one of which after jinking about in covert for about 10 minutes was run into and killed. It was getting on for eleven, so we returned to camp without drawing again. There was plenty of dew, and scent was excellent. There were lots of jacks about, but they were all in thick covert, owing to the heath having been burnt recently. The hounds hunted very nicely together.

On 30th January the hounds met at Rai Singh's well at 7-15 A.M. A good field turned out and were rewarded by an excellent run. Finding in the thick hedgerow along one of the Rai Singh's bunds the hounds ran fast and straight towards the Chokidar's khet. Here the jack crossed the river, and caused the hounds to check, but a cast on the far bank soon put them right again, and they rattled along at a good pace through the cultivation. Towards the end of the khet, the jack broke away sharp right, setting his mask for the Panjrapol hills. The majority of the pack overran the scent—but a few got away after the jack at once and the consequence was that the pack got strung out a good deal. Without a check of any kind, the hounds ran their jack to ground on the far side of the Quarries, overlooking the railway. The earth was a shallow one, and the jack was soon evicted and yielded up his brush about half a mile beyond. It was a splendid run, lasting 50 minutes from the time of the find to the time they ran to ground. The hounds ran fast and hunted well. The going was rough and in places very difficult. Several of us got down at the bottom of a deep nullah and had some difficulty in getting out again. It was a most enjoyable morning.

On 2nd February a good field turned out to meet the hounds at the Bunnia's Crossing at 7-15. It was very cold but there was a fair amount of dew which promised well for scent. We were some time before finding, but the hounds eventually struck the line of a young jack, who gave us a long slow run over the bund country, past Graham's well, before yielding up his brush in the open near the One Tree Bund. The Master trotted straight ahead towards Bhagnani Village, on the far side of which we picked up the line of a traveller, who gave us a great run, before he got to ground in a cairn on the banks of the Lyari. It was with the greatest of difficulty that we got the hounds out and as the cairn was a deep one, the hounds were whipped off. We found once again about a mile down the river, but as the jack was making for the same cairn the hounds were whipped off homewards at 10, after a capital morning.

On 6th February the hounds met at the Pinjrapol at 7-15, when a small field turned out. In the absence of the Master, Mr. Robson carried the horn. Mrs. Crouch and Miss Osborne were the only ladies out. Finding near the Pinjrapol gate, the hounds made the most of a difficult scent, hunting the line out slowly towards Omer Dosal's khet, on the hill beyond which they ran into their jack, after a run of 20 minutes. Mr. Robson then tried in the nullahs round the hills, but did not find again.

On 10th February the hounds met at the Wind Mill at 7-30. Finding at the edge of Walis Nullah, they ran fast towards the White House. Here they checked, but regaining the scent hunted the line slowly out over the Rai Singh's Bunds to Alli's jungle, where they lost. There was very little scent.

BOMBAY TOURNAMENT.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. 26TH CAVALRY.—Played on the 10th instant. This was a very close game all through and though the Gymkhana won by three goals, the Cavalry had hard luck on more than one occasion, Mowat having particularly bad luck in dropping his stick when a goal seemed certain. In the first chukker the Gymkhana opened through Greig and his riding off enabled Watson to put through a second before it ended. From then to the fourth play was more in favour of the Cavalry but then the Gymkhana had all the better of it. In the fifth they put the issue beyond doubt as, with a back handed Greig hit a third. POONA HORSE vs. WANDERERS.—These teams met on the 11th instant and another close game was seen. Resildar Jan Mahomed was unable to turn out for the Wanderers, owing to an accident during practice.

Scoring opened early when Lucas got through for the Horse and Davie secured a second in the first chukker. From a pass by Lucas, Grimshaw scored a second early in the next but Kisborji put one in after a clever run, for the Wanderers. In the third chukker Hamar Singh put a fourth to the credit of the Horse and in the fifth Kisborji after a brilliant run scored another for the wanderers who eventually lost by 4 goals to 2.

Final.

Bombay Gymkhana vs. Poona Horse.—The final between the Gymkhana and Poona Horse was most exciting, the the former establishing an useful lead in the early portion. They had a chance through a free for crossing, but Graham missed, and the Horse having the better of play Grimshaw missed on no less than four occasions. At the very end of the chukker Watson got away and Greig scored cleverly. Peculiarly enough it was at the very end of the second that Grieg again scored a second for the home team: early in the third Graham put in a fine run and got home before Hamar Singh could reach him. After Graham had had a toss the Horse pressed hard and from a melee Hamar Singh scored for the Horse and a moment later Davie sent in a grand long shot. A cross by Hamar Singh led to Graham hitting a goal and they stood 4-2 when Grimshaw shot a goal and brought it to 4-3. Early in the fifth, Hamar Singh put in a fine run an angular shot making the teams level when after a broken stick by Grimshaw, Greig and Watson came away and the latter got home. Full time arrived soon after leaving the Gymkhana winners by 5 goals to 4. A short speech by Sir George Warrender was followed by the presentation of the Cup by Mrs. Russel to Mr. Donald Graham.

MADRAS NOVICES' CUP TOURNAMENT.

Rajah Venugopaul's Team vs. Government House.—The tournament opened on the 10th instant when a large gathering of Madras Society including H. E. Lady Lawley were present at the above game. Government House had an easy victory, for after the first chukker, in which each team scored a goal, they showed their superiority and piling on the goals ran out winners by 9 goals to 3. Captains Torrie and Duff scored all the points between them for the winners; Somar Venkatasubbiah (2) and Rajagopaul putting through for their opponents. Teams:—

Semi-Finals.

Government House vs. 14th Hussars "A." Team.—Another large gathering, including their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, witnessed the semi-final games on the 12th instant. In the first match Government House put up rather a disappointing show against the Hussars who had matters all their own way. The 14th all played at the top of their form and ran out winners by 6 goals to one, scored by Government House in the fifth chukker. Teams:—

Bunni Singh was most conspicuous all through and scored 6 goals: Gopal Rao, a promising young player hit four goals and the other was scored during a melee. Mr. Fetherston Haugh was responsible for the Hussars' solitary goal. Teams.—

Final.

14th Hussars "A" Team vs. Mysore Ursu Gymkhana.—The final game was played on the 15th instant before a large gathering. Their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley being among those present. It was fast game all through, and though the better team won the final score does not convey an impression of the game. The Hussars had bad luck on occasions and made desperate efforts to score during the concluding chukkers, the Mysore team being kept on the defensive. The Hussars were defeated by 5 goals to nil; Bunni Singh and Gopaul Rao scored two goals each and Gopaul Raj Urs one. The first, fifth and sixth periods were without score. The cup was presented to the winners by H. E. the Governor. Teams as before.

The farmer's son was ploughing, and a great black crowd of crows followed the plough, picking up the worms that wriggled in the rich, chocolate-coloured furrows.

The farmer ran into the house, got his gun, fired at the crows and peppered his son's legs with shot. The young man fell down and when his father ran up to him he groaned—

"Didn't you see me, father?"

"Yes," said the old man, "I saw ye well enough, but I didn't like to miss the chance at the crows."

The American millionaire who commenced to economize as soon as the monetary crisis in New York was announced was gently reminded by his secretary that his salary was in arrears.

"Ah, yes," remarked the "splendid pauper," lighting a half-crown cigar; "I owe you one month's holiday for it, and we shall be quits."

"So you are writing stories," said the friend.

"Not exactly," answered the cynical litterateur; "I am merely furnishing a certain amount of text to keep the illustrations from running into one another.

Calcutta C. C. vs. Dalhousie A. C.—This match was played in the Eden Gardens at the week end, and resulted in the hollowest of victories for the home team, the visitors, with the exception of G. Hodges, showing very indifferent form in batting, bowling and fielding alike. Calcutta lost six wickets for 63 runs which was a very bad start, but then Ernsthausen and Reid fairly collared the weak attack and added just on 200 more runs without being separated. Both hit extremely hard, but were decidedly fortunate; Ernsthausen particularly gave a number of chances, but his 117 not out included no less than 19 fours, and was a brilliant exhibition of hitting, while Reid played nearly as vigorous a game for his 77 not out, and once more proved himself a most capable punisher of weak bowling. All the Calcutta bowlers met with success. Hilary in the Dalhousie second innings taking four wickets for only 9 runs. This game concluded the C. C. C. season, which has only been moderately successful, the executive having experienced great difficulty in getting the best players to turn out. Scores:—

THE BLACKHEATH GOLD MEDAL.

THIS competition was held on the Maidan on Friday and Saturday last, when everything was in favour of low scoring, the course being in good order and a little shorter and easier than usual. There was a good outturn of competitors, and the scoring generally was low. Mr. Morrison, a very promising young golfer, who evidently needs looking after by the handicapping committee, carried off the medal with the phenomenal return of 86 – 12 = 74. Mr. Mann had the best scratch card of 79, and the following were the lowest scores returned:—

SILVER CHALLENGE BOWL.

THE annual competition for the Scratch Challenge Bowl was held last week, a handicap prize being played for at the same time. For the bowl there was a tie at 81, between Major Hedley, R.E., and Mr. L. G. Dunbar, which will be decided this week: everyone was glad to see the latter showing his old good form once more. In the handicap Mr. H. R. D. Munn's nett 74 must be an easy record, and it was hard lines on Mr. Birkmyre to find a nett 76 valueless. There were about 50 entries, but comparatively few returns, the best of them being given below:—

The Naturalist.

THE INDIAN RAPTORES.

THE HARRIERS.

THERE are in all six species of birds in the genus "Circus" or Harriers known to occur in India and these are all more or less migratory, visiting India only during the cold weather. A couple of species have been known to breed in India and stay over the hot weather, but among these two even, only a limited number remain to spend the year in this country and the majority migrate with the other species. All the Harriers resemble each other very closely and are what naturalists call a "well defined group" of birds. Though varying in size and in colour, their habits and flight are almost identical, though they may differ, in some preferring swamps and cultivation and others dry rocky tracts, to hunt over. Their flight is characteristic and the whole six species may be at once identified as Harriers, once the flight of any one of the six has been noted. They can be separated from eagles, falcons, kites, etc., by their tibia and tarsus being almost of the same length and very slender and from the true hawks which they resemble with respect to their legs, by their longer and less rounded wings. A curious ruff or collar is a conspicuous feature of most of the species but is almost wanting in others. Though easily identified as belonging to the genus "Circus" the various species in certain phases of plumage are so like each other that it is very difficult to tell one from the other. The males in full adult plumage cannot easily be mistaken, but with young birds in immature garb or females, it is quite a different matter. The young of the "Marsh-Harrier" and the "Eastern Marsh-Harrier" are at times almost impossible to distinguish. To go into all the details of distinction between the various females and young birds would be to copy verbatim Blanford's key to the species which could not be improved on and is both lucid and brief, but still as "keys" do not usually appeal to the ordinary mortal, I will attempt a short description of, at any rate, the males of each species by which the varieties may be recognised on the wing as well as at close quarters.

The six species found in India are: (1) "Circus macrurus," the Pale Harrier; (2) "C. cinereaceus," Montagu's Harrier; (3) "C. cyaneus," the Hen Harrier; (4) "C. melanoleucus," the Pied Harrier; (5) "C. æruginosus," the Marsh-Harrier; and (6) "C. spilonotus," the Eastern Marsh-Harrier.

In cases where identification proves troublesome, elimination often helps and saves infinite trouble. One may wade through five pages of descriptions of different species and at the end of it come to the conclusion that his specimen tallies with all five! I had a bird sent me once, which two keen naturalists and good ornithologists had overhauled and both came to the same conclusion from the description, yet the bird was quite a different species to what they had decided it was. Locality, whence the specimen was procured, often helps considerably. For instance in the case of a Harrier, say the bird you wish to identify was shot in the Punjab. Well that fact alone promptly precludes the idea of it being either the Pied or Eastern Marsh-Harrier, or at least very unlikely, and eliminates two from the six to begin with. Of course if one gets a clue from some specific characteristic, stick to it and follow it up directly, without troubling to eliminate.

Of the six species above mentioned, the first three resemble each other closely, in even the adult males; the fourth, the Pied Harrier, can be separated at once by the amount of black or darker colouring on the head, neck and upper parts and the two Marsh-Harriers by their greater size and more kite-like appearance generally. The adult male of "C. spilonotus" in colouring is very like the female of "C. melanoleucus," but the former is altogether larger and heavier and more clumsy generally.

The males of the Pale, Montagu's and Hen Harriers are all to a great extent white shaded with dark or light grey and black and here and there tinged with brown or rufus. In the Pale Harrier, the upper parts are pale ashy grey and lower parts white, the upper breast and throat with a light grey tinge. In Montagu's Harrier, the grey on the back, sides of head, chin and throat are darker than in the former species and in the Hen Harrier much darker still, forming a conspicuous blue line on the upper breast where it joins the white of the lower breast. In the Pale and Hen Harriers the ruff is conspicuous, particularly in females and young birds, but in Montagu's very indistinct. The tarsus, too, is shorter than in either of the other two, not exceeding 2¼ inches. If the primaries, the first 9 or 10 wing feathers, be examined, the hen Harrier will be found to have a notch in the outer web of the fifth feather as well, whereas in the Pale and Montagu's Harrier only the second, third and fourth quills are notched, never the fifth.

During the winter months these birds are common all over India, Burma and Ceylon, but neither "C. melanoleucus" nor "C. spilonotus" are to be found in Northern India. The former ranging as far west as Oudh, along the base of the Himalayas; rare in Ceylon and the United Provinces and unknown in the Central Provinces and Bombay. "Spilonotus" hardly comes into India proper at all though he has been met with in Manipur and recorded from Burma, Malay Peninsula, etc.

On the other hand "C. cyaneus" is a Northern India bird and to be found chiefly about the Himalayas, though stragglers have been recorded even from the Central Provinces. The other three species are distributed more or less throughout the length and breadth of India.

Of the six species, only two are known to breed occasionally in India, viz., the Marsh Harrier and the Pied Harrier, as both their nests have been taken in this country. Another species, whose nest has not yet been found, but I think may possibly breed in the higher Himalayas, is "C. cyaneus," the Hen Harrier, as some years ago, I frequently noticed a pair of these birds during May and June on the Padri Pass in Chamba, elevation 10,000ft., and again the same year I saw them in almost the same spot in August, so the presumption is that that year at all events they went no farther.

The Harriers one and all appear to be constantly on the wing beating over crops, scrub jungles, grassy plains or marshes, with a slow regular flap, seldom high in the air and frequently stopping to drop into the grass after their prey, which consists of grasshoppers, lizards, rats and small birds. The Marsh-Harrier may frequently be seen flying high in the air like a kite or a buzzard, but neither of the others often soar.

The Marsh-Harrier is a familiar feature of most jheels, its dark kite like plumage (in case of females and young) with a whitish head and white on the head of the wing being unmistakable. The male shows a great deal of dark grey on the wings and tail and rufous on the breast.

All Harriers prefer sitting on the ground to trees and even build their nests there. I on one occasion, in Madras, noticed a congregation of some two hundred or more of these birds, all in one field, where they roosted for the night and noticed three or four species.

Whether this collecting in flocks is usual or portends some event, such as a general exodus to their summer quarters or what I have never been able to make out, except that on this occasion, it was just a bit too early in the year for it to have anything to do with migration.

I reported the fact to the Bombay Natural History Society vide Vol. XVI, page 501, and asked if any of the other members had ever witnessed a similar occurrence, but up to date the question remains unanswered.

Solution to Problem No. 52.

A has led from four hearts, and B has only one. If Y plays small, and B's heart is the king, he may establish clubs before Y Z establish spades, and in that case they may not only fail to win the game, but even lose it. Z should put on Y's ace of hearts, therefore, and clear his spades. Playing thus he has almost a certainty of winning the game with four tricks in spades, one in hearts, and three in diamonds. He will be in a difficulty only if B wins with the ace of spades and leads the queen of clubs, since he will not know whether the ace is with A or B. He must pass the first trick, of course, and would probably be right in holding up the king until the third round. If B drops the king of hearts on Y's ace, Z should throw the queen.

Problem No. 53.

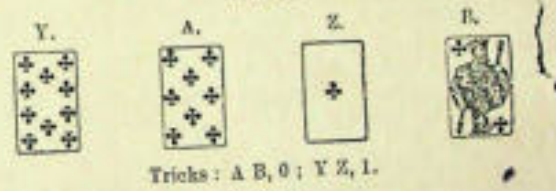
A and B are partners against Y and Z. Score, none all. Z deals and makes diamonds. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy): Hearts, king, 5, 4; diamonds, ace, 3, 1 clubs, queen, knave, 10, 7, 6; spades, ace, 2.

Z's Hand (Dealer): Hearts, 3, 2; diamonds, king, knave 6, 5, 4; clubs, ace, 9; spades, king, queen, 4, 3.

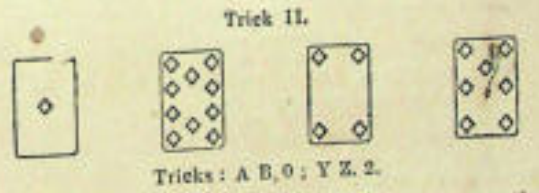
The first two tricks are as follows:—

Trick I.



Tricks: A B, 0; Y Z, 1.

Trick II.



Tricks: A B, 0; Y Z, 2.

At trick 3 Y leads the 2 of diamonds and B puts on the 8. What ought Z to play, and why? Give his play of the rest of the hand.

The rector's wife rather objected to the gardener being a single man, especially as he lived in a quiet picturesque cottage. "You know," said she to him one day, "the first gardener that ever lived had a wife." "Quite right, ma'am," replied the gardener "but I've heard tell, ma'am, that he didn't keep his job very long after he got her.

The following colloquy transpired a few days ago, when a district visitor, passing a public house saloon, happened to recognise a lad who was emerging from the premises with a can in his hand.

"What have you got there, Johnnie?"
"Only a pint of beer, ma'am."
"Who is that for, Johnny?"
"For father, ma'am."
"But he told me he never drank ale or beer."
"He doesn't ma'am. He only sops his bread in it.

A gentleman purchased at the Post Office a large quantity of stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers and other postal requisites. Finding them somewhat difficult to carry, he asked one of the counter clerks if he could supply him with a small quantity of string.

"We are not permitted by the Department to supply string," was the reply.

"Then give me a bit of Red Tape," was the retort. The string was supplied.

The scene was laid in a certain hall in London, where a number of girls of the ballet were being entertained to tea. When the wants of the girls had been appeased, one of the gentlemen on the platform, apparently desirous to emulate the illustrious Mr. Chadband and improve the shining hour, rose to address a few remarks.

His discourse was, however, continually interrupted by the wailing of an infant which had been brought into the meeting. At last the possessor of the youthful disturber of the peace rose to carry the infant out, but was immediately asked by the speaker to remain, as the infant was not annoying him.

His feelings may be imagined when the indignant reply was hurled at his head, "Garn! It's you wot's annoying the bybie."

ADDITIONS TO THE BIG GAME LIST.

No work on Natural History can nowadays long remain completely up to date. When Lydekker's "Big Game Animals of India, Burma, etc." was issued last autumn, both author and publisher flattered themselves, no doubt, that for the better-known districts, at any rate, it embodied practically the last word on the subject. It has, however, not taken long to demonstrate the falsity of such a supposition; and as time goes on further additions to the big game fauna of India and the neighbouring countries of Asia will doubtless be made.

As regards India itself, although no new species of race has been added to the list, a most remarkable variety of the leopard has been recorded from the Kadapa district of the Deccan. This variety is represented by a skin obtained by Mr. F. A. Coleridge, a well-known official of the district, who has had a number of leopard skins from the same part of the country pass through his hands, but has never seen one approaching the new specimen in the form of its markings.

In the large size of the black markings the Deccan skin presents a certain approximation to the South American jaguar. The head and back are, however, ornamented with an altogether peculiar big meshed network of broad buff lines; the head being occupied by a somewhat diamond shaped mesh of much larger size than any of the other. Many of the black rosettes on the body have the enclosed area of a darker tint than the general ground colour, and containing several small black solid spots, very much as in a jaguar. That this remarkable skin cannot indicate a new species, is a practical certainty; neither can it be regarded apparently as a hybrid between a leopard and a tiger, as the markings show no approximation to the tiger type. It must accordingly, therefore, be regarded as a "sport," or "mutation," of an altogether peculiar kind.

Recent researches have tended to show that leopards from certain parts of Asia and Eastern Africa exhibit a more or less decided approach to the type of marking characteristic of the jaguar, and hence lead to the conclusion that the latter animal is a derivative from the leopard of the old world; the connecting link which once no doubt existed in North America having died out. A further inference would seem to be that the jaguar type of marking is more primitive than that of the leopard; and that such leopards as exhibit an approximation in this respect to the former are "throw-backs" to the ancestral form. Sportsmen in the Deccan should be on the look-out for other leopards exhibiting resemblance to Mr. Coleridge's specimen.

That specimen has been generously presented by its former owner to the British (Natural History) Museum; and will, we believe, be in due course figured in the Zoological Society's Proceedings.

Of not less interest is the discovery by Mr. Lydekker, that the takin of the Bhutan hills indicates a well-marked local race of the species, for which the name Budorcas taxicolor whitei has been proposed in honour of Mr. Claude White, Commissioner of Sikhim, by whom skins and skulls of this interesting ruminant were first sent to England. The Bhutan takin, of which specimens are now contained in the collection of the British Museum as well as in Mr. Rothschild's famous museum at Tring, differ from the typical Mishmi animal by its much smaller horns. It seems indeed that as we go futher east the takin exhibits a progressive increase in length of horn: the Tibetan and Chinese representatives of the species having apparently the longest horns of all. This increase in horn length is also accompanied by a marked variation in colour, the Chinese takin having a golden yellow coat, whereas in the Bhutan and Mishmi races the colour is mainly brown, with merely a more or less well marked buff or yellowish saddle like patch on the back. Certain American collectors in North-Western China have, we are informed, recently obtained what they firmly believe to be a new ruminant. Great, no doubt, will be their disappointment when their supposed new animal turns out to be (as it almost certainly will) a takin!

For the greatest and most important of the new "finds" we have to record on the present occasion naturalists are indebted to Major Kennion, H.B.M. Consul at Seistan, in Eastern Persia. This takes the form of an entirely new species of gazelle, which has not yet been scientifically named, but will doubtless in due course be designated in honour of its discoverer. In a brief notice which has already appeared in our English namesake the new gazelle is stated to have been obtained from Bujnurd at the foot of the Kopet-Dagh range, which separates Persia from Turkestan, where Major Kennion recently obtained a fine series of heads of the Kopet-Dagh race of the urial. We have, however, reason to believe that its true locality is the district immediately north of Seistan, although with regard to this, definite information must be awaited from the discoverer of the new species. The chief interest connected with the new gazelle, of which by the way, only a single head has at present reached England, is that it has nothing to do with either the Indian or the Persian gazelle; but is nearly allied to certain north African species, more especially the Edmi of the Atlas, from which, however, it is markedly distinct. It is a much larger and finer animal than either the dorcas or the Arabian gazelle, and also excels in this respect the recently discovered Merrill's gazelle of Syria which is likewise of an African type. Additional specimens of the new gazelle will be anxiously awaited at home, where it is to be hoped that at least one will occupy a prominent position in the galleries of the Natural History Museum.

Although not coming, strictly speaking, within the scope of the present article as indicated by its title, we may conclude by a brief reference to the magnificent monograph of the okapi recently published at Brussels by the administration of the Congo Free State, under the authorship of Mr. Julian Fraipont. The memoir is elaborately illustrated with a number of coloured and other quarter plates, as well as by text figures; and embodies all the available information on the subject. It is noteworthy that the author recognises at least two species of the okapi; although, to our own thinking, the characters on which they are founded appear to be of the very slightest. Whenever a new animal is discovered nowadays there seems indeed to be a craze to split it up into as many so-called species or races at the earliest possible opportunity—a proceeding, in our opinion, as ill-advised as it is unnecessary.

With the publication of Mr. Fraipont's memoir it might well be thought that descriptions of the okapi might well be left alone, at least for a time We believe, however, that Sir E. R. Lankester is engaged on yet another work on the same subject based on the rich store of material in the collection of the British (Natural History) Museum, which have been placed in his hands by the trustees of that institution for description.

A fashionably-dressed young woman came hurrying into a bookstore recently and approached a salesman with the statement, "I want to get a book—it's a red book—not very thick! No, I don't know the name of it or what it is about, because I haven't read it. It has a picture in the middle of the cover—at least, I think it is a picture—it is something round, done in gilt. It may be the name."

"I wish you would hurry and hunt up the book because I am taking a train to New York, and I want to read it on the trip. I saw someone reading it on the train the other day and laughing over it, and that's why I want it.

"No, I don't think it was either of those books—it was thicker than that one, and more on the cerise shade than that one.

"Well, I can't wait any longer for you to hunt it up."

As the young woman passed out of the shop she turned to her companion and remarked, audibly, "Strange how stupid some of these clerks are! Well, I wasn't going to really get it anyway. I just wanted to find out what it was!"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THERE was another of those pleasant little extra meetings on Saturday and though attendances are getting small the racing keeps good and fields quite large enough for the Calcutta course. There were several good finishes and as four favourites got home a good many people must have had a successful afternoon. We are glad to see that the stewards are taking notice of the curious performances of some of the horses here. The running of more than one animal was enquired into on Saturday and after considerable deliberation Ferguson had his license suspended on account of his riding of Pure Gold in the Rawdan Plate. The pity of it in all these cases is the difficulty or impossibility of getting at whoever gives the orders as they are certainly more to be blamed for any corrupt practice than is the boy who carries them out.

THE business of the day opened with the Kalighat Plate for which of the six who went out Bonita II. was most fancied. The books opened her at 6 to 4 and all the money at the price was soon snapped up and they backed her right down to 3 to 1 on. However it was as good as it looked as she was first out of the gate and won all the way though another furlong would probably have seen the victory fall to Circus Girl who was coming up very strongly at the finish 10st. 10lb. up and all.

RUNAWAY GIRL was favourite for the Middleton Plate though on her last running she did not look to have a chance with Belle Cole and Solace. However her backers proved right and she must have had 10lb. in hand at least as after getting badly left at the post she came through her field and won very easily. Solace, who is an uncertain beast, made no fight of it after the distance and was apparently in non-staying mood.

THE Elgin Plate I. fell to Morette who was looking very fit and had the advantage of O'Neil's services, probably the best boy still here. Eljin, the favourite, got away badly and was never with them, while Jolly Abbot, who was also much backed, played the rogue when he was called upon to make an effort leaving only Jack Sheppard to make a fight with the winner. The Elgin Plate II. was the sensation of the day as two absolute outsiders finished first and second, and the two favourites, Rubrette and Lasso, were third and fourth. Ocean Bride, the winner, was not even fancied by her owner who is reported to have put on but a modest Rs. 20 at 20—1 "for fun" and the totalisator paid three lucky ticket takers Rs. 687 each. The race was a triumph for the handicappers as though the winner led throughout there were four more of them at her from the distance and the first five horses finished within two lengths.

CARNIVAL sprung another surprise on them in the Rawdon Plate, young Trahan who has only just come over from Bombay riding a nice race on this game old mare. The sixth selling race gave Mr. Rowan his first victory this season, his Sir Roland, who was favourite, winning comfortably from the heavily weighted Abet. This owner and trainer has not had the best of luck of late, and even in his win fate did not treat him kindly, as though winners of selling races in Calcutta are nearly always allowed to go back to their owner, in this case Mr. Rowan had to pay out Rs. 450 to retain his animal, it being run up to Rs. 1,200 before it was knocked down to him.

THE last item on the programme was a round the course race for bonâ-fide hunter ponies. Envious and Reba, had a great race on their own finishing fifteen lengths in front of the gallant Pink 'Un whose owner has ridden him out to the front of nearly every chase this season. Perhaps one of the most sporting starters was Loch Lily, who carried about 11st. 7lb. round the long and trying paperchase course on Friday morning and then led the field in this race for well over a mile—she must be a real good sort.

ENVIOUS was backed from tens down to twos. The pony must be a long way above the average as R. C. in 3mins. 15¼secs. with 11st. 7lb. is no bad performance even in a much better class. Pathfinder II. won this same race last year in 3mins. 16secs. with 10st. 10lb. up and as he was handicapped to carry 13st. 7lb. this time it is quite a little problem in arithmetic to calculate how much Envious had in hand.

OUR ninth paperchase provided a bit of sensation. There was great excitement and speculation as to whether either of the gallant Captains Fraser and Fitzgerald would miss his place and so give the other the lead for the average cup, but no one imagined that they would both do so. This is, however, what actually occurred and so they are still as they were. A tie in number of places, Captain Fraser leading on points. It happened though a silly accident too. Mr. Curtis-Hayward, who was out in the front, went off the paper and missed a fence and both of the cup competitors followed his lead. Fitzgerald went back and completed the course but could only get tenth, but Fraser carried on giving up the attempt to be placed. This looks to have been an error as with his faster horse he might still have well got into the first six if he had gone back and the cup would then have been his beyond redemption instead of being still an open question. The course was a long and interesting one with lots of jumping all through the Molla Hât and bund country. Only a small field went out and they finished as follows:—Captain Holden on Lord Harry, 1; Mr. Hill on Tired Tim, 2; Mr. Radmore on Agamemnon, 3; Mr. Barclay on Blue Bell II., 4; Mr. Muir on Clarice and Mr. Pierson on Queen of Hearts, dead-heat, 5; Mr. Halliday on a bay, 6; followed by Mr. Myers on Sir Walter, Mr. Corbett on Myolene, Captain Fitzgerald on Fermoy, Mr. Evers on Viking, Mr. Hayward on a bay, Mrs. Myers on Napier, Miss Lukis on Saionara, Mr. Levetus on Prince Moorfield, Mr. Hadow on a bay, Mr. Winckworth on Ermine, etc.

THE pony chase was limited to a select seven who went on a long at an easy pace until they mostly came to grief at a big wall. Mr. Given Wilson putting his shoulder out. Mr. Levetus lost his way but found it again and he and Mr. Dodgson had a great race home for first place which the latter secured. The first four home were:—Mr. Dodgson on Jezebel, 1; Mr. Levetus on Gentle Ida, 2; Mr. Stokes on Loch Lily, 3; Mrs. Stokes on Irish Boy.

were qualified in every way, are this week refused certificates on the ground that "the Committee do not consider they have been properly qualified" (no other reason is given) while we hear that others which under the ordinary interpretation of the published rules are barred have been given "tickets."

That the Committee which grants (or refuses) these Hunters' Certificates contains members, who are themselves competitors in the races for which these Certificates are required, is unfortunate. Cannot the C.T.C. in future decide what horses are or are not entitled to run in these closed races? If the C.T.C. were to frame the race they would at any rate stick to the letter of its conditions and the owner would at least know where he stands. As it is, horses whose entries have been accepted throughout the cold weather are this week suddenly refused, without notice.

We suggest the Paperchase Committee as it is at present composed, is not the body who should have the issuing of Certificates for Hunter Races and that the C.T.C. should be asked to frame these races on hard and fast conditions. The Calcutta Turf Club, we believe, recognise the Paperchase Club as a matter of courtesy in so far as these certificates go, but with all diffidence we beg to express a doubt whether strictly speaking, the Calcutta Turf Club are entitled to do even so much.

The annual general meeting of the Calcutta Turf Club will be held at the Club House, 49, Theatre Road, on Wednesday, the 11th March, at 9-30 P. M. The agenda contains the following items of business:—(1) to pass the accounts for the past year; (2) to elect Stewards for the current year under Rule 21; and (3) to consider the programme of the Calcutta Races, Tollygunge Steeplechases and First, Second, Third and Fourth Extra Meetings, 1908-09.

All efforts to save His Majesty's famous horse Persimmon, who met with an unfortunate accident recently, have been unsuccessful: the animal died on the 19th instant.

Stevenson, the world's billiard champion who is now on his way home to England, played his last exhibition game at Tuticorin on Saturday last. His opponent was Ferry, the marker at the Tuticorin Club, who put up a good game. Receiving 600 points in a thousand up he ran out when the champion's score stood at 847.

The Infantry Polo Tournament at Bareilly ended on the 21st instant in a win for the Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment who beat the 2nd Gurkhas in the final by 7 goals to nil. Details in another column.

H.H. the heir apparent of Bhopal has recently had remarkable luck while out shooting. He accounted for nine tigers in two days, four in a single beat and five sitting over a kill.

The Junior Polo Tournament at Lahore ended in a win for the 25th Cavalry who beat the I. M. S. in the final by 3 goals to 1. Details elsewhere.

At the water carnival held by the North Sydney District and Sydney Swimming Clubs in the Lavender Bay Baths on the 22nd ultimo Cecil Healy successfully attacked the world's 200 yards record of 2mins. 13⅘secs. standing in the late B. B. Kieran's name. A special handicap was arranged to provide the opportunity. Reg. Healy, by a few inches (18secs.) finished first, Cecil Healy (scratch) second and T. Jones (30secs.) third. Cecil Healy's time was 2mins. 11⅕secs.

Since the death of the late Barney Kieran, champion amateur swimmer of the world, several Australian gentlemen have interested themselves in the matter of securing for the State the many handsome trophies won by him, and at the suggestion of Mr. Walter Bethel (honorary treasurer of the Kieran Memorial Trust), Sir Francis Suttor, Mr. J. W. Turner, and Captain Mason, the Minister for Public Instruction (Mr. Hogue) authorised two of the gentlemen named to obtain the prizes and he recently approved of their purchase. They consist of three fine cups, two of them won at Stockholm (Sweden) and one at Stalybridge (England), a handsome shield for breaking the 200 yards record in July 1905; 26 gold, eight silver, and two bronze medals, won at distances from 200 yards up to one mile; eight small silver medals, mostly won in 1902 and 1904 represent Kieran's earliest successes. The first medal secured by him was at the Commonwealth celebrations in 1901, and on it is the legend, "In Honor of Thy Nation's Name." The last medal gained was for winning the 220 yards championship of Australasia, at Brisbane, on 8th December 1905. In that race Kieran put up 2mins. 28⅕secs., thus beating the previous record, standing in the name of his fellow-Australian, Fred Lane. It is Mr. Hogues' intention to have the Kieran trophies placed in some institution, where they may be viewed by the public. He thinks the showing of the emblems of Kieran's triumphs will have a good effect upon the rising generation, as encouragement to follow the example set by Australia's most famous swimmer.

The Mysore Gymkhana scored another victory at Polo when they won the Rajah Venugopaul Cup tournament at Madras, beating the Rajah's team in the final by 13 goals to two. We publish details elsewhere.

The annual general meeting of the Dalhousie Athletic Club was held at the Dalhousie Institute, Calcutta, on Thursday last, the following office-bearers were elected for the ensuing hockey and football seasons:—Hockey—Mr. F. Seabright, captain; Mr. E. B. Clarke, vice-captain. Football—Mr. A. P. Storrie, captain; Mr. J. Montgomery, vice-captain. The honorary secretaries for the hockey and football sections are Messrs. H. J. McGhee and L. R. Robertson, respectively. The officers for rugby will be elected later in the season.

The Hockey season has begun in Calcutta, several friendly games were played on Saturday and on Monday the first matches in the League competition were put through. In another column we publish the fixtures in both divisions of this competition.

The 6th Divisional Native Army hockey tournament was concluded at Poona on the 24th instant. Nine teams competed and the final game was between the 103rd Mahrattas from Belgaum and the 114th Mahrattas stationed in Poona. It was an exciting struggle throughout, the 103rd eventually winning by 2 goals to nil.

The Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway hockey tournament ended in a win for Moradabad, who beat Lucknow by 3 goals to 2 in the final. The defeated team had won the cup the two previous years.

Many stories are told of the extreme age to which horses have lived, but not all are authentic. Harry Wilkes, the fastest of the get of Geo. Wilkes, and who made his record at the old Fair Grounds in Sacramento, California, in April 1887, the spring he was eleven years old, is still living and was exhibited at a parade in the streets of Somerville, New Jersey, where he is still owned, on the 10th of last October. The old fellow made a brave showing hitched to a cart, and came in for quite an ovation. He was foaled in 1876, consequently is thirty-two years old this spring. He was gelded when a four-year-old, but is the sire of one standard trotter, has two producing sons and four producing daughters. His son, Billy Wilkes is the sire of four 2-10 pacers. Nathan Straus the fastest of the get of Director is out of a daughter of Billy Wilkes.

According to a German journal, Dr. Norner-Barensburg of that country has been collecting information as to the limit age of horses and finds that thirty years for equines is about the equivalent of "three score and ten" in the human family. It is a good old age for horses, but some reach it and a few surpass it.

The oldest horse of which he could learn any definite facts was a roan mare bred in the Government Stock Farm in Hungary, and she was at least forty-five years old when she died. In 1852 she was assigned to Lieutenant Theodore von Leyss, of Lemburg, serving in the Fifth Regiment of Uhlans. In the next year horse and rider were transferred to the Twelth Regiment, and in 1859 they made the entire Italian campaign together. At the battle of Magenta, the Lieutenant was cut off from his regiment by a body of French troops. His brave mare carried him to safety by an extraordinary leap over a stone wall.

In 1863 Von Leyss got into financial difficulties and in the following year he was obliged to part with his mare to a comrade who used her as a road horse until 1865, when she passed into the stable of a Major of Infantry. With him, it is believed, she made the campaign of 1866. Then Von Leyss, who furnished the facts to Dr. Norner-Barensburg, lost sight of her until 1873, when he found her, alas, serving as a cab horse in Vienna. He kept his eye on her after that and in 1882 she had sunk to drawing a delivery wagon for a manufacturer of paper boxes. Von Leyss by this time was in better circumstances and he bought back his old friend and comrade to take care of her until her death. This took place in 1892, when she was fully forty-five years old, according to the stock farm record. Down to the end she was employed daily at light work. She was a well set up animal with unusually clean cut, graceful build and limbs. Two days before her death she refused feed for the first time in her life. Her skeleton is now set up in the veterinary college in Vienna. The great age she reached is all the more remarkable when her military experiences, including the hardships of two campaigns, are considered. Her biographer considers her career as establishing the advantage of allowing horses to become fully matured before they are put to work. No horse set to work while green, he thinks, could possibly have gone through so much and lived to such an age.

Ten teams have entered for the Inter-Regimental Polo tournament at Meerut. They are the King's Dragoon Guards, Carabineers, Royal Dragoons, 10th Hussars, 12th Lancers, 15th Hussars (two teams), 17th Lancers, Rifle Brigade, Central India Horse.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—The third day of the Big Meeting came off on Monday and once more punters had not much to smile over as not only was betting very open throughout the day but those most fancied were not in an obliging mood. Firstly came the Midget Plate in which all Byramji's stable, Rose, Young Gazelle, and Shanwar were fancied, Rose being favourite from Shanwar. As a matter of fact none of these were ever in it though Rose from the outside flew out into the lead. Creditor took up the running before the bend and though Amood and Bay Middleton, who got a poor start, came at him he stayed them out to win in the fine time of 1min. 20⅘secs.

More open was the Salsette Plate of the same distance in which Gold Mint and Royal were in demand, fives the field being quoted. It was a huge field of twenty-one and Moonim was one of those fancied who got mixed-up in the ruck. Gold Mint, then Royal and Vedas made the running for the first to come away again on entering the straight. Moscow made an effort and Dhafer came late but Gold Mint had them set, covering the distance in 1min. 21secs.

Pelargonium at 5 to 2 and Metal Boy fours were the two seriously backed for the mile Mahaluxmi Plate, but here again the first found the distance too much and the second never showed up. Killeevan made all the running to the bend where Botha passed him and had Lipscombe in trouble going comfortably as Lord Barrymore came with a late run.

A dozen started for the Town Plate of a mile for Arabs, Vasco running to five to two with Hermit and Dumra next. Oomerkhan had a nice hold of Dumra behind Company and Nippon and came into the straight going great guns. Vasco had been lying a bit too far back and in a late rush just failed to catch Dumra, Eed also passing a number in the last furlong.

Chivalry was a common tip for the Flying Plate and even after a run on Sea Spray kept his place as favourite. There was never any doubt as to the result as Sea Spray taking the lead, Templeman waited in front and came away almost as he liked, as Manlock and Ferndown made their runs, to win in 1min. 1sec., which equals the record. Last year Sermon and Manlock dead-heated in the same time.

The pony race provided a puzzle. Lady Avon despite her 10-4 becoming to favourite with Wakeful at threes, Russley Rose, Matalgia and Comback also fancied. This again was a run away win as Comeback was never headed, though had Bradshaw used better judgment on Russley Rose he would have saved ground at the bend and made it hot for the black. Mandeville ran well and a late run by Wild Boy brought him into a dead heat for third place. There were a dozen runners which speaks well for pony racing here and the time was startling, 1min. 15⅕secs. for 6 furlongs.

On the fourth day, Wednesday, the books had a great time of it as not a single favourite got home and, several being backed in each race, betting was in most cases open. The Asian Plate opened the day with Tachreet at threes and he remained at these odds, though a great run came on Little Red Rat, who contracted to 6 to 4, being thought a "moral." He, as a matter of fact, was last away and never in it whereas Tachreet took over from False Start at the bend and went away to win on his own, though Gold Mint ran solidly and Darby came late.

Ajeel was the public tip for the Second Dealers going to 5 to 4 on, Safoog next at fives and Maimoon and Wild Poppy sixes. The race needs no describing as Wild Poppy jumped out with the lead and held Maimoon very safe to win by two and a half lengths, Safoog third. Maimoon ran surprisingly well after his exhibition in the Melton Plate, whereas, Wild Poppy's stable backed him on the strength of a gallop in which he easily beat Salaam who in the ninth extra ran third to Rashad and Moonim ; this mile was done in smart time for a new one, 1min. 53⅖secs.

Twelve went out for the Imperial Plate including all our best ponies and it is pleasant to see this class so fully represented. Comeback, Wild Boy, Lady Avon, Yankee Boy, Florrie and Gun Metal were all fancied and a good race was seen. For a moment Comeback showed out and then Koko went out followed by Florrie, Gun Metal and Lady Avon. At the bend Florrie came into the lead and just stayed out a run by Gun Metal with Wild Boy a close third beating Comeback, who came outside and was ridden none too well a judged race, by a nose. 1min. 2⅕secs. was the time given.

The Sir Cowasjee Jehangir Purse of 9 furlongs found sixteen with Swalior and Dilerjung most fancied, Precious and Vasco next. An upset was in store as after Mooreed had made the pace Peculiar came out and in a ding-dong finish the length of the straight beat Dilerjung, Bendigo and Swalior, a head between each of the four. It was a great performance by Peculiar who has now won five out of seven times and was giving Dilerjung 9lb.

As open as one could have it was the Exeter Plate of 7 furlongs, Paddy's Darling being favourite at threes from Sea Spray, Prince Lyon, Lovania, Botha and Golden Gleam. I have frequently in these columns pointed out the lack of judgment in sending a top-weight out in front and the fact that Sea Spray was ridden in this way lost her a place and possibly a win. She made the pace a cracker with 9-12 up and passing the half mile, Ferndown took the lead and eventually stayed out strong challenges by Botha and Golden Gleam to win in 1min. 27⅘secs., very near record.

Last on the card was the 5 furlong Stand Plate for which Posco was a 5 to 4 favourite from nine others Zotique, Mereworth and Rustile next. Posco was first out followed by Conscience who early gave way to Zotique and Rustile. At the 3 furlongs Manley drew up and away on Faded Lily and in an exciting finish just stayed Posco and Zotique out by a neck. She cut it out in 1min. 1⅘secs.; bringing off a distinct score for Glynn, who has just taken over Mr. Runchordass' stable, though she was unwell and should soon be back to the form she showed in Poona. Those who thought the trial of 1·5 on the outside good enough got ample of tens for their money.

The Big Meeting came to a close with Byculla Club Cup day on Saturday, which was as usual very well attended and did not break the rule of being a bookmaker's day, but few punters can look forward to settling day ! Racing was good, but there was plenty for the stewards to see if they had their eyes open.

Opening with the Bedouin Plate, Creditor, who has come on nearly 2st., was a shade better fancied than Bay Middleton, only giving away 2lb., and Tachreet who is now undoubtedly the best Arab in the country over short distances had to give the famous bay 12lb. The pace was made by Creditor but he has been just a bit over-rated and when Bay Middleton came into the lead the way he won reminded us of his old brilliant style. Shanwar and Tachreet came late but could not even catch Creditor. This race establishes a new record in time of 1min. 6⅕secs.

The mile Desert Plate was very open, Little Red Rat a slight favourite at fours, the fact that he went for this and not the first giving punters confidence. It was a fine race with Talal giving way to Recruit who looked all over a winner till Company came at him and secured a neck verdict. Many fancied the winner but the fact that Abdoola, and not Killorn, was riding put them off.

Another open race was the 1½ mile Colaba Plate, fives the field being quoted with Botha, Mother Goose and Jackeroo in equal demand. It was no race ; Our State got away from Admiral Crichton, Pelargonium took the lead at the 5 furlongs and never being headed won in a walk from Our State and Jackeroo. After his failure to stay the mile of the Mahaluxmi Plate it was quite impossible to back him for this and but for the fact that his owner lost something over twenty thousand in the former this run would indeed have looked stage.

This was followed by a rare upset in the Turf Club Cup of 1 mile 5 furlongs for which Dilerjung, Swalior, Nooman and Skylark were fancied. In the last long race I remarked how well Dhamas went and now taking a seven length lead Fraser had him nicely in hand coming into the straight. He had all settled except old Eed whom Taylor brought along full of go to pass the leader opposite the stand, Peculiar and Nooman following them. This fully proves how Eed has improved since being sent over long distances, being the only one to stand the pace Dhamas set.

Now came the great Byculla Club Cup with punters hot on the scent for the least hint. Ballark, Beaunero, Lord Barrymore and Wandin were largely fancied till a great run came on Misty Morn and made him favourite. It was an interesting race to follow in its various stages, Oakton being sent out to make the pace from Dirty Boy, Wandin and Misty Morn till when they settled down Wandin fell back to Ballark and Kipling with Clear Artist a bad last behind Beaunero. At the mile Wandin came with a rattle into second place and at the 6 furlongs caught the leader who fell right away, his stable companion, Circuit, coming up. Wandin did not last long and Kipling went out followed by Ballark, Circuit and Misty Morn and at the half mile Beaunero began to creep up. Turning the bend Ballark was full of running and taking the lead went away comfortably, Kipling staying out a late run by Beaunero and Lord Barrymore, who dead-heated. This is Ballark's second consecutive cup win though his "nowhere" in the Grand Western put most people off.

The same open betting ensued in the Mansfield Plate, the supposed good thing, Posco, being scratched in favour of Killna, who was not as much fancied as Ferndown, Manlock and Love Song, and there was a rush for Golden Gleam which established him a firm favourite though how the public could follow on his recent running I cannot understand. Chivalry, Love Song and Manlock made the running but at the bend Golden Gleam came out and going well comfortably stayed out Ferndown and Killna.

We concluded the meeting with the Innovation Plate for ponies and Wild Boy was thought good till the stable came for Matalgia but later on Lady Nannie's connections lumped it down as though it was all over. It was, too, as the mare got out in front and won cantering from Matalgia. This, perhaps, is the most extraordinary performance of the day considering that she had in her three previous outings given no indication of possessing such pace or staying powers, cutting out this 7 furlongs in 1min. 29secs. in a canter.

Last Bye day a large field of seventy turned out at Sahar Hill, a beautiful meeting place, and as soon as possible hounds were put into the covert and burst out into Bomanwadi Valley without any waste of time. Instead of going to Sahar the jack runs along the Tulsi main to the Backwater and those who cross have to return as he had made along its banks over open country towards Jack Symons' Hill. Before reaching it, however, he is pulled down.

Another is put up at Sahar but he saves his brush in one of the hills bordering Horse Shoe Valley.

The extra day's meet is at Irla and it is some time before a jack is found, and that near Stacey's Tank after Chuckla Hill had been drawn blank. He moves through thick undergrowth, makes back through the mango grove and he also is eventually lost at Goregaum.

Owing to the Horse Show on Thursday, the next outing was Friday when only a fair field was out near the brickfields but a good run was obtained. The jack passed Chuckla and Sahar and turning at the Backwater went past Vakola and on to Kola. Through the quarries he makes and on over a deep creek with the field unable to follow but a kill is brought off almost on landing the other side.

Time allowed of another cast at Sahar and this one takes much the same course but being presumably turned at Vakola he is lost.

The billiard match between Inman and Elias from Wednesday to Saturday was very disappointingly attended except on the last night. Though, of course, not the class of Inman, Elias plays a very consistent game and finding Inman below form won by a very narrow margin. He was receiving 1,600 in 4,000 and won by 109. On Wednesday Inman caught up a bit scoring 1,002 to 2,116, his best being 179, 116, 120 and 206, Elias' 45, 36, 43, 31, 31, 37, 73 (69 off red), 71, 33 and 35.

On Thursday Elias scored almost as many as his opponent, the score winding up at 2,739 to 1,715. Inman's best were 184 (90 off red), 85 and 69, Elias' 48, 41, 43, 65, 88 and 64.

Both were in poor form on Friday when Inman materially decreased the points being at the finish 2,716 to 3,151. His biggest were 91, 78, 67, 97, 157 (150 off red), 66 and 70, Elias' 41, 39, 34 and 49.

The last day looked good for Inman but an exciting finish was seen, the score reading 3,583 to 3,325, but with Elias having the luck and frequently having double banks the lead was never knocked off and Elias won by 4,000 to 3,891. Inman made 127, 70, 78, 83, and 62, Elias' 34, 75, 53, 47, 31, 34, 49 and 47.

London Week by Week.

London, 7th February 1908.

So variable has been the weather that it is excusable if it form our chief topic of conversation. To-day is bright and spring-like, though it is, of course, impossible to believe that we have done with winter already. Yet the spring flowers are beginning to struggle forth, and the really bitter cold seems over.

After the great tragedy all is now reported to be quiet in Lisbon and Portugal generally. The new Cabinet has met with a favourable reception, and special correspondents at Lisbon have been well occupied wiring particulars of the arrangements for the lying in state and funeral of the murdered King and Crown Prince. It is a strange coincidence that the widowed Queen of Portugal is a sister of the late King Humberto II., of Italy, who was also assassinated. Our own Royal Sovereigns have telegraphed warmest sympathy, and all Court functions and gaieties are a standstill pending the duration of Court mourning.

The appointment of Captain Neville Wilkinson as Ulster King of Arms in place of Sir Arthur Vicars, has been proclaimed simultaneously with the publication of the report of the Commission on the Dublin Castle jewel robbery, which found that Sir Arthur Vicars had not exercised due vigilance in the custody of the regalia. One paper in commenting on the affair wonders that a single jewel was left!—so lax was the custody of the Keys.

The decorous thoroughfare of Westminster is being attacked from either extremity. At the Victoria end it is being invaded by shops, which have already ousted a considerable number of ground-floor flat-dwellers. From the Abbey end there is an ever-increasing inflow of professional and business men, who must have offices not far from the House of Commons. Rents at the Abbey end have already gone up considerably by reason of this enhanced demand. It looks as though, just at present, there will be no relief from the pressure. At the Victoria extremity offices are in less request. It is shop premises that are wanted here. Victoria Street seems called upon to bear the brunt of the changes, because it happens to be the central thoroughfare in a district which is developing with great rapidity. To appreciate the situation one must go a little further afield. The beginning of the present situation at the Abbey end is traceable, in the first instance, to the widening of Parliament Street. When it was resolved to wipe out King Street, and to erect a new block of Government offices at the corner of Parliament Street and Great George Street, it meant the eviction of a large number of professional and business people. Premises had to be sought somewhere or other, and consequently the migration to Victoria Street.

Pantomime producers have come to the period when the children go back to school. Then comes the rub, and the considerably diminished attendance at the performances are not slow to discover it. There is an inevitable drop, and the rush of booking is stayed. For some mysterious reason the theatrical world is vastly superstitious, and if the demand for seats on a particular date is less than usual all manner of evil prognostications are indulged in. Next year we are to have four pantomimes in the West-end, and the competition this season seems only to have whetted the appetite for further enterprise. The interest created in competing Cinderellas should arouse many emotions in juvenile hearts.

The Gold Mounted Vanity Bag, offered some weeks ago by "London Sketches," as a test vote to decide who was London's most popular Actress in 1907, was won by Miss Lily Elsie, of the "Merry Widow" Company at Daly's Theatre. Miss Gertie Millar is a close second with a total vote of 1,980, while Pauline Chase is very near the others in voted popularity. The contest has been an exceedingly interesting one from start to finish, and the standing of the various Actresses changed from week to week. It has developed the interesting fact that London, in fact all England, has a newer and keener interest in the younger set of Actresses than in the older ones who for years have practically stood unchallenged as popular leaders on the stage. The next new competition is "Who is England's best dressed Actress"?

After affording lukewarm support during most of the Carl Rosa Company's season at the Royal Opera, Covent Garden, musical amateurs attended in force the concluding performances of "Carmen" and "Faust." Eighteen performances were given during the brief season, which opened on Boxing Day, and the operas mounted were "Tannhauser," "Lohengrin," "Carmen," "Faust," "The Marriage of Figaro," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "Il Trovatore," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Pagliacci," and "Esmeralda." In reviewing the general representation of these works they must be confessed to have been admirable. Among the artist who made a special impression were Miss Doris Woodall, whose Cherubino and Azucena were excellent, Miss Ina Hill—a charming Marguerite—Miss Grace Nicoll, whose dramatic Santuzzi was warmly praised, Madame Lucile Hill, and Miss Elizabeth Burgess, who appeared as the heroine in "Esmeralda," and also filled several other rôles with distinction. Messrs. Walter Wheatley, Edward Davies, Julius Walther, Charles Victor, Dillon Shallard, and Arthur Winckworth likewise made themselves welcome.

Attractive matinees for children have been given at intervals by Miss Esther Palliser at the Steinway Hall. In the programme have been found such fascinating numbers as fairy folk-songs by Humperdinck, "Bird Songs" by Madame Liza Lehmann, and "Child Songs" by Taubert, as well as suitable pieces by Cornelius, Massenet, Ethelbert Nevin, and other well-known composers.

The series was interrupted by the indisposition of the talented young organiser, who was for some time laid up with bronchites, but her appreciative juvenile audiences, which, it must be confessed, also contain many equally appreciative "grown ups," have now welcomed her back.

At Queen's Hall, Mr. William Boosey has had something unfamiliar to place before the patrons of the Chapell Ballad Concerts. This is nothing less than the first performance of Madame Liza Lehmann's latest song-cycle, "Nonsense Songs," comprising settings of lyrics from Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland." That some of the talented composer's earlier efforts in this direction had proved very successful needs no telling. "In a Persian Garden" has been listened to with delighted ears by amateurs on both sides of the Atlantic. The music here echoes the spirit and exhales the fragrance of Fizgerald's immortal translation. Again, in the "Daisy Chain" cycle, produced in 1901, Madame Lehmann set in very melodious and engaging fashion the lyrics, by Robert Louis Stevenson and others, which she selected for the weaving of her garland. Upon these latest nine numbers which include "How doth the little crocodile," etc., the gifted artist has once more lavished the refined and unobtrusive musicianship which invariably marks her compositions.

The deadness of politics has been one of the striking features of the recess. No life has shown itself in the political situation and although there will be the usual drum-beating towards the end of the month there is no doubt that the public interest is not just now excited. There is no burning question before the country, and the ill-health of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman makes things lag. The Prime Minister is not a young man—he is overdone, and, in his own interests, would be well to seek rest from arduous toil. Mr. Chamberlain is also unhappily, none too robust for the arduous duties of statesmanship.

*** *** ***

It has hitherto been commonly supposed that one leap year in four was enough to keep the male half of the world in its proper place. America, however, seems to be dissatisfied. The president of the Medico-legal Society of America proclaims that "if every year were leap year, and women could be brought to avail themselves of the time-honoured privilege of proposing instead of waiting for the men to propose to them, we should be far along the road toward a regenerate society."

*** *** ***

"Time-honoured" is a curious adjective. In primitive times woman did no proposing. Quite otherwise. The man knocked her on the head and it would have been regarded as unwomanly for her to take the initiative. But in discussing this momentous topic of the day we need not pay too much heed to the ways of our ancestors. It is not them we have to marry. What differences would a perpetual Leap Year make? Mr. Bernard Shaw has told us, not once nor twice, that the whole business of courtship is the persuit of the male by the female. If that be so it is surely a mere matter of technique whether the actual words of proposal are uttered by the man or the woman.

*** *** ***

Whether the man or the maid takes the first steps is a matter about which there is an infinite variety. People of sanity do not believe in the theory of Mr. Shaw and other philosophers, of the hunted male.

So it would seem that this demand for Leap Years this complaint that women have no right of selection, is, in subtance, a demand for things as they are.

There are very few things in this world about which there is no doubt, and marriage is not one of them. The failures of our present state are to be confessed. But while there are fools, which is as much as to say while there are men and women there will always be failures, and the ideal system of matrimonial arrangements is that which gives people the smallest opportunities to make fools of themselves.

ONLOOKER.

Fishing.

TWO HOURS WITH AN ALBACORE.

THIS is not the story of how I caught an albacore or got a bronze button for the killing of one of the gamiest fish that swims the western sea, but it is the tale of a splendid day at sea, of hours of worthy sport, and of the final victory of one who battled well with this fighter of the sea and won honorably the trophy he carried away. Such a fine day it was to me, so full of interest and of incident that I have set it down because I thought there might be others who would be interested in the battle.

The place was Avalon, on the magic isle which they have named Catalina; the time was the first week in September, and the fishing all summer for the two principal game fishes—yellowtail and albacore—had been good. We, Oscar Bryn, artist, and the writer, jack of all trades in the writing line, had every reason to hope that success should perch on our mast when we came in off the deep that night.

Rosy dawn lay on the coast peaks, crowning with crimson the fleecy sea of fog which still hung over the valley. Around the crests of the hills wreaths of mist yet bound the upper reaches of the canons, but for the most part the day was well born into a world of gold and amethyst and pearl and shell-pink. The over-arching heavens looked like the interior of some great sea-shell, some giant haliotis that Time had cast upon the shores of Eternity.

The hour was 7-30 when the launch drew up to the little wharf, scarcely more than a footboard set out in the rim of the biggest ocean in the world. Mr. McKendrick was the captain's name; before the day was over we called him "Johnnie," and better boatman never set foot in launch or rowboat.

Across the stern of the boat were set two chairs, for which we devoutly returned thanks ere the day had gone far toward its end; for he who tries to fight a twenty-pound fish with one leg hanging over the side of a pitching launch will find that he has something handed to him which is neither sport, pleasure nor very conveniently planned work.

For four miles we beat straight out to sea, into the channel, over as smooth a sea as ever washed the shores of Cyprus or the Ind. In the harbour smelt and anchovies had been plentiful, and we had filled the bait locker with them; here not a fish of any kind or size was to be seen. Evidently the big fish were feeding off shore or else sulking on the bottom.

Putting over live sardines for bait we trolled. Then we trolled some more; up and down the coast we went probably three or four miles on each side of our beats, and not a strike was there for either one. The water was like glass and the long white rifle from the launch's screw faded away into the sea like the the cutwater from some giant tuna, feeding on the lesser fishes of the channel.

We had trolled thus twice up and twice down, when Bryn had a strike. We were fishing off the stern, he to the right and I to the left when it came. The silver-sided sardines were floating almost on the surface of the water, so slowly was the launch pushing herself through the waves. Suddenly a sharp, blue-nosed, torpedo-shaped body hurled itself at the lure, seized the sardine so close to the surface of the sea that he broke the crest of a tiny wave with his rush, and was gone.

Zeee-e-e-e-e-e-e the reel sang, the staccato note of the trout brook magnified a thousand times and woven into a real scream of war from one of the gamiest fish that swims. There was no question of what my companion had hooked; nothing but one of these pirates of the sea could ever have torn away with that grip on the line; no fish of these waters—with all due respect to the yellowtail and the tuna and the skipjack and all the rest of them—would have run five hundred feet in his first rush, as did this fellow, without a break in his course.

When he started, Bryn gave him the brake a bit and I reeled in my line as fast as possible to give him room to play his fish. It was evident that his strike was something unusual either in size or in gameness and at first he tried the rushing but securely hooked fish only tentatively, throwing in the brake ever so lightly lest that thin thread be snapped, lest that slender rod go by the board.

One hundred, two hundred feet went out ere one could count the seconds. Then the red thread that marks the five hundred foot point was reached with a suddenness that caused the fisherman to set his leather brake hard on the running spool. The reel carried 1,000 feet of line, even, and before we could put the launch about and send her after the flying albacore the fish had torn out 700 feet of the fine thread that bound him to death. To those who have fished for albacore or for tuna or even for yellowtail which are not long distance fighters, this may seem strange, almost incredible, for the albacore which carries 200 yards of line is the exception, and the tuna which fights at this distance is by no means the rule.

But wait: With the aid of the launch and good handling of the rod, Bryn gained 200 feet on the fish and then he went down, down, down, and there he tried to stay, swinging out in great circles which sometimes seemed completely to encompass the boat, yet which always brought the fighting albacore back, directly beneath the angler, half a thousand feet below him and with his nose pointed still deeper in the sea.

Then came the fisherman's hardest work, the gentle act of pumping a fish from the deeps of blue sea below. Down went the tip of the rod, till it almost touched the water. Then, with might and main, the reel held firm, it was raised, then suddenly lowered, and the slack line taken up by the willing spool. Possibly three feet of line were gained at each pump; sometimes not even an inch was won from the wary finned fighter down there out of sight, battling to keep his hold on life.

In the course of twenty minutes another hundred feet of line came in, and then a hundred more. As the fish came nearer to the surface he seemed to fight less strongly; with one heavy lift on the slender rod there was a giving way beneath and the albacore rose almost to the top of the sea with a rush that left the line lying limp and threw the rod out in a straight line as if it were glad indeed to be freed from the long strain.

And with the rise the albacore went out, out, out, again, until he had won back far more in his horizontal run than he had ever taken with him on his headlong dive into the depths. Five hundred feet from the launch and the rod and the man at the butt of it the fish fought a good fight. Sometimes he took out another hundred feet or so, but as a rule he was contented to fight at his own length of line.

For a half circle he fought, now almost on the surface of the water but never breaking the unruffled blue; now down ten, fifteen, twenty-five feet, but always pulling, always shaking his head, ever trying some new trick to dislodge the barb in his mouth. But the lure held, the line neither frayed on the guides nor raveled at the swivel, as lines sometimes do, and at last his lordship came in, fighting every inch of the way, showing at times the mere edge of his dorsal, if such it might be called, as he ended a wide rush in a straightway dash from the boat.

Slowly Bryn brought him alongside, turned half on one flank, white with the pearly whiteness of things seen beneath the sea; blue with the azure hues which mark the royal backs of his kind the world over. At the side of the boat, with a last flirt of his powerful tail, that propeller which had in the course of his life driven him so many thousand miles and which had aided him so staunchly and so well in the battle he had just lost, with a last splashing blow upon the sea, he turned over, the gaff was driven into his gills, and the end of his story was written.

At Avalon he weighed twenty-five pounds; doubtless when he was taken he would have tipped the beam at twenty-eight pounds, for he lost a lot of blood and evaporation of moisture from the flesh on a day of such general heat as was this, would have accounted for many pounds.

Altogether the battle lasted exactly two hours and three minutes, pretty close to the record for a fish of this species and size, and both the fisherman and the writer can testify that the battle was a worthy one, hard fought from start to finish, with no chance of rest for either victor or vanquished.

The fight was worth while, just as a memory to carry the fisherman through the months until he should have a chance to wet his line again in the salt sea, but when there was the further reward of the bronze button which the club gives to all who take an albacore of more than twenty pounds weight, it was the final feather in the cap of the successful angler.

After we brought Mr. Bryn's fish into the boat we gave up trolling, for none of the other boats lying round about seemed to be doing anything, and began chumming. Now chumming is one of the gentlest of the angler's arts. If he has the right thing to chum with, and finds the place to throw it where fish are wont to look for food, he is pretty apt to make some catches that will make rivals' eyes a shade more prominent.

In short, chumming is the throwing out of chopped up bait on the surface of the sea in the hope of attracting fishes to come and feed. When they begin to gather thickly, he puts over his hook, baited with some attractive lure, and generally gets more fish than he can carry home in a boat. On the wharves, chumming for smelt and other small fish of inshore waters is usually done with bran, chopped up lobster or fine cuts of small mackerel, but out here in the open sea, fishing for we know not what so long as it was big and gamy and full of fight, we threw out a circle of whole sardines for twenty feet around the boat.

Ten minutes before we had been trolling over this very spot, with not a fish in sight save the one Bryn was fighting. Five minutes after we threw out the chum all the way from ten to thirty albacore were playing all around the boat. They would come up almost to the surface of of the water, seize a sardine and be gone like a flash of blue light in the green sea. Every minute or two one of these big mackerel would stop his torpedo-like rush a few feet from the boat and give us a fine view of his round body as he slid away beneath the waves, not in the least frightened by the launch or the close proximity of human beings, whom the fish could not help but see.

With the albacore were a few skipjacks, smaller than the average of the albacore, and even more bold. They are quicker than a flash of light, these skipjacks, and they hit bits of fish floating on the sea with the precision of a well-aimed rifle ball. Death rides hard on their trail when they hit a school of small fish, and when they strike a hook there is always something doing for the man on the other end of the line.

They bite harder and surer than the albacore, and while the battle is on they fight with a fiercer series of rushes, though they do not have the unpleasant habit of sounding to which the albacore has fallen heir. On the surface of the sea they are clever, tricky fighters, well versed in all the wiles of the game.

The shipjack can shake a hook from his mouth better than any other fish whose acquaintance I have ever made, and, though I regret to report that I have never seen a shipjack do this, I believe he can stand on his tail and do a double flip-flop to help him dislodge the barb. When shipjacks or albacore are hungry, they care little on the earth, in the sea or in the heavens at which they will not strike. A bone jig, if new and white, is a good lure, but a piece of red flannel trailed a bit back of the hook is just as good.

We could have been catching albacore and skipjacks there around that patch of chum yet, if the supply of fish and of bait had held out. As it was, we quit when we had two or three apiece, and as all of these were smaller than the one taken by Bryn we turned them back to the sea ere they died and had the satisfaction of seeing them swim away, apparently unharmed by their little trip into the outer air.

But fishing from a stationary boat, however, plenty the fish prove to be, is not to be compared with trolling, just as trolling from a launch is not to be mentioned in the same breath with trolling from a sailboat going down the wind with every sail drawing just enough and no more. We soon tired of the chumming game, and leaving a swirl of blue-backed fish around the rapidly disappearing scum of sardines which we had cast upon the surface of the sea, we flew for Avalon, arrived at which place we weighed and recorded the fish and were quite ready for dinner and the soft sheets of the bed.

If you, who read this don't think fighting a twenty-five pound albacore—which is a miniature tuna—for two hours is hard work, just go out into a half a thousand feet of water some sunny afternoon and try the job. Before you go you might ask Oscar Bryn about it—he knows, he did it. H. H. DUNN, in The Western Field.

NOTICE OF WITHDRAWAL.

THE offer of "The Historians' History of the World" at the present prices will be withdrawn on 28th March. These prices are the lowest at which "The Times" will ever sell the work in India, and

A higher schedule will go into effect as soon as the present offer has been withdrawn.

"The Times" now estimates that the probable total sale in this country will run to 4,000 and possibly as many as 5,000 copies. Although the work is new to the public, the enthusiastic response to our offer has made it possible to estimate the probable demand, and to make plans for the future accordingly.

The earliest subscribers—as many as shall register their orders before 28th March—will be allowed a concession in the price. "The Times" plan of sale is based on the conviction that the first price of a new book should be its lowest and not its highest price, that a high price restricts the demand, and that a low price and small profits is better than a high price and large profits—better for the subscriber, better for the author, and better, in the end, for the publisher. This is not the view of the Publishers' Association, whose members almost invariably bring out a book at the highest price they think it will stand, distributing a few copies—one or two thousand—to libraries and individuals who do not care how much they have to pay, and then depreciating the value of these copies by issuing a new edition at a greatly reduced price. "The Times" has reversed what it believes to be an antiquated and unbusiness-like method of publication, and has issued "The Historians' History"—a first-class book in every respect—at prices which have brought it, at the outset, within reach of the widest public. "A MIRACLE OF CHEAPNESS," was the spontaneous opinion of two reviewers, one writing in London, the other in Dublin.

The object of these announcement that have appeared in the Indian newspapers from day to day is not to "boom" the book, for every claim made by us in regard to the work has been re-asserted, in more emphatic language, by the reviewers at Home. Our object is rather to give publicity to the fact that by the application of modern ideas to the publishing of books, they can be, as we believe they should be, issued more cheaply and in larger editions, and thereby brought within the purchasing power of educated persons whose outlay on books must be kept within limits.

Any person who without prejudice examines a volume of "The Historians' History" will, we believe, admit that it is, in truth, a very good book at a very low price, and if he compares it with a volume issued by publishers at Home, he will find that it contains more than four times as much reading matter as the average 7*s.* 6*d.* book, three or four times as much paper, and is just as well printed and bound—yet "The Times" price per volume is the same.

ORDERS SHOULD BE REGISTERED WITHOUT DELAY.

To prove its contention that good books can be widely and quickly distributed if the price is low, "The Times" wishes to secure as many orders as possible, before advancing the price. More than 1,100 subscribers in India have already registered their names, while the sale of the work at Home has been equally gratifying.

THE TURF.

GATWICK.

THE sun shone brightly at Gatwick on Wednesday and a good company from town enjoying a beautifully bright afternoon. All traces of the overnight's white frost quickly disappeared under the sun's warm beams, and in the absence of the biting breeze which had "perished" people at Doncaster, Spring was in the air, and the going under the experienced supervision of Mr. Hook was excellent. FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

FAVOURED by fine weather, the sixteen ties in the second round of the F.A. Cup Competition Proper were watched on Saturday by great crowds. The first point to arrest attention in glancing down the lists of results is that there must be a tremendous advantage in playing at home in Cup ties, for only one club went down before its own supporters. As last season, there are five drawn games, all of which are to be decided on Wednesday.

Appended are results:—

The surprises of the round are all to the credit of Southern League clubs, and the palm for the best performance must be awarded to Crystal Palace, who followed up their sensational win at Park Royal over Queen's Park Rangers, on 25th January by knocking Plymouth Argyle out of the Cup. As the Argyle were at Home Park, the significance of their defeat is unmistakable, and the Palace have once more caused a gasp of astonishment in football circles. It is remarkable how well some teams shape in cup ties. It has not required much time for the South Londoners to establish a reputation in this direction, which compels the wholesome respect of every club in the country. There are two other surprises in the round—the drawn game at Liverpool, where Brighton and Hove held their own against the First Leaguers, and New Brompton's draw against Manchester City, at Hyde-road.

There were seven instances in which Southern League clubs were opposed to First or Second Division League clubs, and in three cases Southern League teams won, two were defeated, and two live to fight another day. It is little short of amazing that the First Division of the League should at present have only three clubs ready for the draw, as against the five of the Southern League and the three of the Second Division of the League. If the Southern League clubs win their replays, seven will take part in the third round, while a similar number will represent the First Division of the League should all the latter come out on top in the games yet to be decided. The Second Division of the League must have four clubs in the next round, and may have five. The Southern League was represented by four clubs in the third round last season, and of these Bristol Rovers and Crystal Palace are the only survivors in the current competition, Tottenham Hotspur and Brentford being the teams which have fallen by the way. While the Southern League clubs have done remarkably well, one regrets the departure of West Ham, especially under the circumstances reported from Newcastle. The Novocastrians had the assistance in the first half of a strong wind, and the East Londoners were nearly all the time on the defensive, but they prevented their opponents getting through, and Kitchen gave ample demonstration of his great ability. Just after the interval, Kitchen was injured, and Piercey, who had been playing a fine game at centre half, went between the uprights. It was cruel luck for West Ham, and small wonder that they were two goals down at the finish.

Reference has been made to Plymouth vs. Crystal Palace, and there were other games in the South in which more than usual interest was centred. Swindon entertained Queen's Park Rangers, and the earnestness and dash of the home team carried them through. The Rangers were never able to show that pretty combination which has so often brought victory in its train, for the Swindon halves played the spoiling game to perfection, albeit sometimes with less regard than they should have had to the sporting side of the game. There is a strong difference of opinion as to the first point allowed Swindon, but the officials had no doubt on the matter, any more than they had at Southampton, where West Bromwich Albion were defeated by the only goal scored. In this case, Robertson sent in a shot from half, which Pearson muddled, but eventually scooped out. The referee consulted one of his linesmen, and awarded a goal, a decision subsequently confirmed by the other linesmen. Goals of this sort are not altogether satisfactory to one side, at least, but it must not be overlooked that it would be most unfair to the team that has forced the ball over the line if it were robbed of the goal legitimately obtained. At Portsmouth there was a ding-dong struggle between the home club and Leicester Fosse, and the Southern Leaguers are somewhat fortunate not to have to visit Leicester for a replay, for the Fosse had a full share of the game. Chesterfield struggled hard against Bristol Rovers, but were beaten by a smarter side, and Fulham were not unkindly treated by Fate in placing a win to their credit at the first time of asking. Nothing seemed more likely during the last quarter of an hour than that Norwich would draw level, but the home defence held out and Fulham remained the sole Southern representatives of the Football League.

The games in the North had a consuming interest for the South. Chelsea were at Clayton, where they essayed in vain to vanquish Manchester United. Only one goal was scored, and this was obtained by the home side, but that usually deadly shot, Hilsdon, failed to net from a penalty kick, and Manchester United thus escaped a visit to Chelsea. Hats off to Brighton and Hove and also to New Brompton. With wonderful unanimity critics assumed the overthrow of both clubs in Lancashire, but the two lowly placed S. L. teams held their own. Both did exceedingly well, New Brompton's draw being an especially smart bit of work. It emphasises that the overthrow of Sunderland, at Gillingham, was not a fluke, and it will be with confidence that New Brompton will await the appearance on their ground of the Mancunians on Wednesday. A similar remark may be made with regard to Brighton and Hove Albion. Here is a club which has already paid two visits to Lancashire to play First League teams, and is still in the competition. Brighton have done splendidly, and have afforded one more proof of the truth of the oft-urged contention that there is not so much actual as paper difference between the teams in the three leading professional leagues.

The other ties may be rapidly dismissed. Aston Villa won in comfortable style against Hull City, who were beaten pointless, and Carlisle United had their hopes completely shattered at Grimsby, the Fishermen winning by a four goals' margin. Oldham Athletic, the baby of the Second Division of the League, did not triumph over Everton, but the game was most stubbornly contested. Notts County did less than was anticipated in finishing up all square at Trent Bridge with Bolton Wanderers and Stoke caused more than a mild surprise in allowing Gainsborough Trinity to share the honours. Wolverhampton Wanderers proved too good for Bury, who have apparently lost that cup tie skill

With one exception, the five ties in the second round of the Association Cup left drawn on Saturday were brought to a definite issue on Wednesday. Despite an extra half-hour, Gainsborough Trinity and Stoke failed to settle the question which of those two clubs should take part in the third stage of the competition, but Liverpool won at Brighton and Manchester City at New Brompton, Everton scored heavily against Oldham Athletic at Goodison Park, and at Burnden Park an additional half-hour's football enabled Bolton Wanderers to overcome Notts County. Altogether the five ties produced 19 goals, as against 8 when contested on Saturday. Somewhat disappointing four days previously, the Lancashire clubs—apart from Oldham Athletic—carried off the honours of the afternoon, with the result that five teams from that county have now qualified for the third round. The representation of the First League in the next stage of the struggle is increased from three clubs to seven, four Second Leaguers and five Southern Leaguers completing the field of sixteen. As a consequence of the results arrived at yesterday, Bolton Wanderers and Everton meet in the third round, Fulham play Manchester City at Manchester, and Newcastle United receive a visit from Liverpool. Not until Monday will the question be settled whether Stoke or Gainsborough Trinity go to Portsmouth. Although not in every instance favoured with fine weather—the afternoon turning out wretchedly wet at Bolton—yesterday's ties were all well attended, the five games attracting in all about 60,000 people.

RUGBY RULES.

WALES vs. SCOTLAND.

THE 35,000 people who witnessed the twenty-fourth match between Scotland and Wales at Swansea on Saturday had the good fortune to see the most strenuous and, in the opinion of most Welshmen, also the best international ever played in Wales.

The Swansea ground was in excellent order on the Friday, and with the weather fine, and the glass rising, there seemed every prospect of the game being played on a perfect "pitch" and under ideal climatic conditions. Unfortunately the weather changed for the worse during the early hours of Saturday morning, and became unsettled. Several heavy showers fell, while a gusty wind was blowing. At noon it was raining heavily, and the match seemed in serious danger of suffering from the weather, which cleared about one o'clock, however, and the afternoon proved delightfully fine; the wind, too, fell. It blew almost across the field, but was of no great force, except for an occasional squall. The ground was but little affected by the rain, and though not so fast and firm as it would have been had the weather kept dry, it was in excellent order.

The mystery of Scotland's third line was not solved until close upon eleven o'clock, when it was announced that the selected four were Purves, Walter, Sloan, and Martin. The Scottish committee would, it appears, have announced the line on Friday night, but for the fact that Sloan had been unwell and was uncertain as to whether he should play. Fortunately for Scotland a good night's rest had effected a complete cure, and he announced his ability to play. One says "fortunately for Scotland" for he proved much the best of the three-quarters.

Quite early in the game Scotland got right down on the Welsh line, penning their opponents for three or four minutes but Purves lost a good chance after passing. Scotland were doing quite well, when suddenly the Welsh forwards broke away with a capital passing movement, and quick to take advantage of this change in positions the Welsh backs were in motion. Bush and Gabe came away, and the latter made a fine opening for Trew to score the first try about twelve minutes from the start. After some good work by the Scotch forwards, Williams spoiled a bout of Welsh passing, and then, thanks to Greig and Martin, Scotland again took up a strong position. Martin, who ran resolutely, was almost through the Welsh defence, Gabe stopping him only just in time. Wales were let out of their difficulty by Schulze having his kick charged down, and nearly letting his side down altogether. Then came a truly magnificent burst by the Scotch forwards. Starting in their own half, and coming away in a body, they went down the ground with the ball at their feet. The Welsh backs strove in vain to check the rush, each in turn being brushed on one side. The ball was kicked over the Welsh line, and Purves, who had kept up with the forwards on the outside, dashed past and scored the try, which Geddes, with a good kick, converted. After this the play proceeded with varying fortunes, each side in turn being dangerous, but not making full use of their opportunities. Trew was twice at fault in his passing, but made some amends by a brilliant save when the Scotch forwards were under full weigh. Williams also lost a chance for Wales, and once Walter, in attempting to follow up his own punt near the Welsh line, looked to be hampered by an opponent. At half-time Scotland led by a goal to a try.

Shortly after changing ends the Welsh backs were dangerous, but again Williams missed his pass. Then Cunningham ran through cleverly into the Welsh 25, making a capital opening, but with a forward pass spoiled matters. Aided by Winfield's long kicking, Wales got well down, and Bush, with an adroit run, cleared the way for Gabe and Williams. This time the last-named took his pass and easily ran over, gaining the Welsh second try. This was a well-executed movement, and thoroughly merited a score. For a little time afterwards the Scotch forwards dominated the proceedings, and Wales had an anxious time outside their own line. The Scotch three-quarters made two or three attempts to break through, but were held off. Schulze lost Scotland their strong position by being collared, and then being penalised for lying on the ball. This blunder enabled Wales to take up the attack, and they secured another penalty in a moderately favourable position, but Bush's drop at goal went wide. A little later Scotland had a narrow escape, and were indebted to the faulty judgment of Gibbs, who, after clearing Purves, kicked instead of going on. With only some five minutes left for play the Scotch forwards made a fine effort, carrying the play down by sharp bursts. Amid great excitement they went right down, and Greig, joining in and picking up made a splendid dash. He was tackled and fell, grounding the ball barely six inches from the goal line. Directly afterwards Martin ran through, but unwisely panted instead of trusting to his pace. Winfield was penalised for wilfully throwing forward, and Geddes, from a long shot, only just missed kicking a goal. During these few closing minutes the excitement was intense, but with the failure of Geddes the tension was relieved. Wales touched down, and a minute later the great battle was over.

Referee: Mr. W. Williams (English Rugby Union).

In the match at West Ham between London Welsh and Devon Albion neither club was able to place their best fifteen in the field, but a fairly interesting game took place. Beaten forward, however, the London Welsh were never able to hold the Albion, who, getting a good lead in the first half, won, for the second time this season, very comfortably. Harlequins also gained their second victory over Blackheath, but the game was not productive of much good football. Harlequins always showed the better form, the work of the Blackheath fifteen being generally of an uneven character. Both Universities were successful, Oxford having no difficulty in running up a heavy score against Lennox. At Richmond, however, the Light Blues were given a good game, Richmond showing capital form against a strong fifteen, and only being beaten by 7 points to 3. The Hospital teams—Guy's and London—were, of course, successful. Heale and Lindsay again proved a smart pair of halves for London Hospital, and, with Palmer playing well, Old Leysians had their line crossed nine times. With several of their best men away, London Scottish came to grief at Bristol.

CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING.

WEMBLEY Park was on Saturday the scene of the first of the Metropolitan cross-country championships when the North of the Thames Association decided its fifteenth annual event. The weather was fine, and the afternoon being suited for sport, the attendance was over 1,000. Alliance H. not being represented, the number of competing teams were the same as in 1907. The course was again altered, the start being from the back of the main pavilion round by the grand stand to the starting point, thence to the grand stand and out into the country, entering the Park again below the polo ground, the outer section being covered three times, bringing the distance up to 7¼ miles.

After going 300 yards, Holdaway shot to the front, and on reaching the grand stand led, with Pullar, Holmes (Chalvey), Hatch, Laurie, Silsby, and Pingree close up. On again reaching the track (1¼ miles) Matthews (United) led in 8mins. 24secs., followed by Townsend, Bryant, Allen, Howard, Wood, Watson, and Holmes. On going out into the country Allen took up the running, and returning into the park, past the stand, 3¼ miles, in 19mins. 34secs., together with Watson and Howard, the others being Wood, Holdaway, Sheehan, Yardley, Thorogood, and Southgate, with Beckett (Watford A.C.) still last. At the bell Allen and Watson were running together, two yards in front of Howard, Wood being still fourth, four yards behind, followed by Yardley, Holdaway, Thorogood, Whybrow, and Hill, the Southend H. having thus three men in the first eight. A mile and a half from home Wood joined the leaders, and at once forced the pace, and though Allen was quickly dropped, Watson hung on. So they ran till entering the straight, when Wood, making his effort, won full of running at the tape. Both Hill and Finch ran very strongly in the last circuit, the latter gaining more places in the last three miles than any man in the race.

ROWING.

THE UNIVERSITY BOAT RACE.

OXFORD.

DELIGHTFUL conditions attended the practice of the Dark Blues yesterday, and it was not surprising to find the towing-path thronged with spectators, especially as the crew were confined to the home course. Mr. Guy Nickalls coached from the bank. No alteration was made in the order, and they had a couple of journeys to the Lasher and back.

On the first occasion no hard rowing was indulged in, but coming back from Rough's the second time they had a pull for half-a-mile at 30 and 32. There was a good deal of unsteadiness observable, the boat being somewhat down on the stroke side, but as No. 6 had broken his stretcher soon after the start this may have had something to do with it. CAMBRIDGE.

Yesterday was by far the most serious day's work of the Light Blues' practice to date, and, fortunately, they were favoured by most congenial surroundings. It was a most serious trial, especially for those members of the crew who are not "certs," as some of the old Blues who on Wednesday visited Oxford were present for the purpose of making a comparison. The crew went through the ordeal with flying colours.

No preliminary work was undertaken during the afternoon; in fact, the crew got afloat before half-past two. Mr. F. J. Escombe coached, and was accompanied by such famous coaches as Messrs. S. D. Muttlebury, W. Dudley-Ward, M.P., C. W. H. Taylor, and L. H. K. Bushe Fox. At a steady paddle of 24 the crew proceeded down to Baitshits. At the Locks they came about, indulged in a start which, with a few strokes of paddling, landed them at the Little Bridge.

The boat was got straight, and the crew were started by Coach Escombe. Pulling 16 strokes in the half minute, and 31 in the full minute, they made the boat run excellently, and reached the Ditch in 1min. 28secs. They were then pulling only 30, which dropped to 28 round First Post Corner, the rowing getting rather dead. Once in the Long Reach both President Powell and Stuart called upon their men to liven up, and 32 per minute was struck. Displaying decidedly their best form of the practice, they arrived at the Red Grind in 4.20, still striking 32. They fell off a point round Ditton, but picked it up in the Long Reach. By the time they reached the Willows several of the crew were showing signs of fatigue, especially No. 6, but Stuart never slackened the stroke, and it is only fair to say that the crew backed him up excellently, and although not sliding well at the finish, they were getting plenty of work on, and reached the Railway Bridge in 7.47. All the crew were completely rowed out, and took matters easily back to the Goldie Boathouse. Orders of rowing:—

WRESTLING.

THE ALHAMBRA TOURNAMENT.

THE tournament at the Alhambra, which concluded on Monday, proved a success in every respect. Not one event went to a foreigner. Joe Carroll, of Hindley, secured the middle-weight event from Peter Gotz, and his nephew Jack, known as Young Whistler, won the light-weight championship from the Bolton lad Frank Tongue. The heavies went to the Aberdeen giant, Jim Essen, who had a tremendous advantage over the Jap, Yamato, whose pluck, quickness, and skill gained for him an ovation at the finish. Colonel G. M. Fox distributed the prizes. Lord Lonsdale donated a handsome silver cup to each victor, and the prize-money was divided as follows: Heavy-weight, £80; second prize, £40; middle-weight, £50; second prize, £15; light-weight, £25; second prize, £10. Details:

HEAVY WEIGHTS.—Final bout: J. Essen (Aberdeen) beat Maida Yamato (Japan). Essen is 22, stands 6ft. 3¾in. in height, and weight 16st.; Yamato is 5ft. 6¼in. tall and turns the scale at 11st. 4lb. The Jap gave a wonderful exhibition of defence and stayed the limit, 30 minutes. He lost, however, on points. The second fall went to Essen with a half-nelson in 7mins. 30secs.

MIDDLE WEIGHTS (12st. and under).—Semi-final (one fall only): Peter Gotz (London) beat Henry Irslinger (Austria). Joe Carroll (Hindley) a bye. Final: Carroll beat Gotz. Gotz was giving away weight, and was handicapped by his severe exertions in his bout with Irslinger. Carroll gained the first fall in 15mins. 15secs. and the second in 2mins. 35secs.

LIGHT WEIGHTS.—Semi-final (one fall only): Frank Tongue (Bolton) beat Jack Bentley (Accrington). Jack Carroll (Hindley) a bye. Final: Jack Carroll beat Frank Tongue. Carroll looked nearly half a stone the heavier. After wrestling 16mins. 15secs., Tongue injured his neck, and thereupon retired.

Hunting.

KARACHI HUNT.

On the 13th February the hounds met at the Bunia's Crossing at 7-15 A.M. It was a cold, misty morning with a heavy dew, which promised well for sport. Waiting until the mist had lifted slightly, the Master moved off up the river. Drawing Alli's khete and the Gunvar, the hounds settled down to the line of what proved to be one of the best jacks we have met this season. The hounds went away fast, moving towards Rai Singh's village, cattle had "fouled" the line on the far side of the village, and they were at fault. But it was only for a moment, and they were on again; hunting grandly, they carried the scent along the White House Nullah, towards the Long Bund. Here the jack was viewed a short distance in front of the hounds, but before the hounds were out of the Nullah, he was away over the Long Bund, at the end of which he turned sharp right and ran fast, straight for the river, and away on, across it, towards Oomer Dosal's khete. The mist was now very heavy, and the field began to lengthen out over the broken ground and had nullahs near the river. After leaving Oomer Dosal's khete behind, the hounds ran very fast to the tops of the hills beyond, on the far side of which he had a nice gallop over turf. The jack swung away left handed towards Perimeter Hill, near which the hounds bowled him over. From start and finish, it was a splendid run, quite one of the best in the annals of the Hunt. The hounds hunted magnificently, and ran a tremendous pace. The run lasted slightly over an hour and we must have covered about 11 miles. Of the large field, who were out, besides the Master and Whips the only others at the finish were Messrs. Chapman, Kennedy, Robson, and that keen sportsman Colonel O'Donnell (of the Quetta Hunt) whom we were all glad to see out. We were a long way from home, so the Master did not draw again.

On the 20th February the hounds met at the Hunt Camp, Landhi, Mrs. Graham was the only lady hunting, but others out we noticed were Colonel O'Donnell, Captain Hewett (R.I.M.), Captains Richardson and Hill, Messrs. Porteous, Newcomen, Allerdyce (of the East Lancashire Regiment), Captain Pritchard and Mr. Edwards (24th S.W.B.), Messrs. Robson, Chapman and Stewart. The Master commenced by drawing the Camp covert, at the end of which the hounds struck off the line of a jack, but it was soon apparent that we were in for a bad scenting day. The hounds made the most of what little scent there was, and it was a picture to see them hunting, working out the line. We ran slowly towards Rahu's khete, across the Common, where the hounds were at fault. A native had seen the jack go away into Sarafud Wood. The Master lifted the hounds at once and laid them on. They rattled him through the wood, and ran into him in the high pampas grass opposite Long Island. We struck the line of another jack in Rahu's khete, but could make nothing of him. So the Master moved off towards the Heath. On the far side the hounds picked up the line of a jack, who gave us a run of about 3 miles over the Temple Hills, and across the open beyond, before yielding up his brush. Coming back again to the Heath, we came across another jack near the Cat Farm, but he crossed and re-crossed his line, and as there was very little scent the Master whipped off homewards. Drawing through the Long Covert on the way, the hounds picked up another jack, and hunted him beautifully. He wouldn't break covert, so they chopped him. So ended the morning, and the hounds were whipped off to kennels about eleven. Scent was never good and the day was more remarkable for hound work than for runs.

Third Chukker.—A hot attack by the cavalry who held the advantage throughout the chukker and scored another goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The I. M. S. tried hard to score but without success the final score standing: 25th Cavalry, 3 goals; I. M. S., 1 goal. Teams as before.

INDIAN SCHOOLS vs. ENGLISH SCHOOLS.—The annual match between elevens representing English and Indian Schools was played in the Eden Gardens on the 22nd and 23rd instant. The Indian Schools had first innings of the wickets and at the close of play on Saturday they had scored 174 for the loss of eight wickets. The remaining batsmen were quickly disposed of the next day and the innings closed for 190. Barlow (36), Rosser (33) and McCready (30) being the highest scorers. The English Schools made 282 to which total Eddis (57), Reid (40), Walford (38) and Shallow (31) were the principal contributors. The Indian Schools went in again and lost 4 wickets for 115 when stumps were drawn. The English Schools thus won on the first innings by 92 runs. Scores:—

BALLYGUNGE vs. OLD XAVERIANS.—This match, played at Ballygunge on Sunday last, resulted in the easiest of wins for the home team by the large margin of 123 runs and 6 wickets. Winning the toss, Ballygunge took full advantage of their opportunities, and the faulty fielding of their opponents, by putting up the big total of 333 for 4 wickets before declaring. Yeoman and Horncastle started well by getting 70 on the board before they were parted, the latter leaving at that total, bowled by G. Cameron, for 26. Oliver did nothing, but when Watson joined Yeoman, the fielding side had a busy time, the two left handers treating the bowling with very scant respect. Yeoman was eventually caught for a free, but lucky 62, he having three lives given him; Coulthard followed but was bowled for 17, the total then being 170. With Frost in, the visitors' troubles began in earnest; he started slowly, but warming to their work, he and Watson whacked the tired bowling all over the field, and they were still together when the closure was applied with 4 wickets down for 333. Watson's 112 not out, was the result of excellent cricket, and the same may be said of Frost's not out 75; each batsmen had one life accorded to him, but only one, and that when well set.

The Old Xaverians started none too well, losing Newton and Greene for 21, but Yackjee and Fergusson improved matters considerably; the former hit very cleanly and had 55 to his credit before being beautifully stumped by Frost off Yeoman. His innings was quite the best on his side; as although some of the others made runs there was an absence of freedom about their methods which contrasted strongly with Yackjee's innings. Fergusson with 40, G. Cameron with 33, and Klemis with 25 were top scorers, the last wicket falling with the board showing 210. Yeoman bowled very steadily, more than can be said of the other Ballygunge bowlers, who seemed unable to find a length, and Frost kept wicket in excellent style; the blame for the 21 extras can hardly be laid at his door. In addition to stumping two men and catching a third, he held two good ones, but was unfortunate in having the umpire's decision given against him in each case. Scores:—

BALLYGUNGE C.C. vs. SPORTING UNION.—Time alone robbed Ballygunge of a probable win on Saturday last, the visitors, at the call of time, being 98 runs behind with 6 wickets to fall. The home team knocked up 175 for 8 in about an hour and a half, before declaring the innings closed, the chief contributors to this total being Horncastle, Garth, Cooper, Antram, Frost, and Burns. Left with about the same time to get the runs, or be got out, the native team played painfully slow cricket, and could only put together 77 for 4 before the drawing of stumps at a quarter to six. HOW TO JUDGE HORSES.

HORSES are by all odds the most difficult of all classes of stock to judge, and systematic methods of work are now essential. This is especially true in show ring judging, where there are a large number of entries and a limited amount of time. The judge usually has horses moved when they first come out; any lameness will easily be noticed. He next has them arranged in line and then begins at one end and examines them as they come.

It is well to approach the horses from the front. Standing at a reasonable distance, he scrutinizes his general bearing and proportion of parts; also notices the straightness of his forelegs and his width of chest and spring of rib. He now approaches closer and observes the head more carefully; noticing the size of the nostrils, and the length of the head, the width of the forehead, and the shape, size and brightness or clearness of the eyes. He next steps back a little and drops down so that he can look back between the forelegs at the hocks, and he also views them from a position in front, yet a little to one side of the fore limbs. From these two positions any abnormality of the hock can easily be detected, and in making this survey the judge is careful to compare one hock with the other. He next observes the fore limbs closely, and if he notices an enlargement on the inside of the cannon bone, he examines it with his hand for splint. He next notices the feet at the hoof heads, and in hairy legged horses it is always well to examine with the hand for sidebone. The foot is also lifted and its general shape and texture is observed, as well as the size of the frog.

Having completed the inspection from the front, the judge next steps to one side and makes a critical examination of the animal, noticing his length of neck, chest, carriage of the head, slope of shoulder, depth of body, filling of fore flank, shortness of back, and shortness and strength of coupling. He also notices the letting down of the hind flank, and compares the length of the upper and lower lines. He also observes the length and levelness of the croup, the set of legs from the side, and the muscling of the forearm and gaskins. Next passing to the rear, he takes the spring of the rib and general width of the barrel; judges width and muscling of the crouch, haunch and thighs and raises the tail to notice the depth of the muscling in the hind quarters between the legs, and also notices the hock at the same time. The straightness of the legs is also observed and the inspection of form is finished.

The judge now has the horse moved straight away from him at a walk. This allows him to observe the straightness of movement, and the snap with which the horse picks up his feet; and as the horse is led back toward the judge the straightness of movement is again observed, and the judge then steps to one side and allows the horse to pass. As he does so the length and balance of stride and the freedom of knee and hock action is noted. The horse is moved again, this time at the trot, and the same points observed as at the walk. Any tendency towards going wide behind or to throw the front feet out in the manner known as winging, is readily noticed as the horse moves straight away; and from the side-view, overreaching, a short stilted stride, or any tendency to drag the limbs is revealed. Besides observing the details of action, the judge watches the general carriage, the freedom and buoyancy with which the animal moves off. There should be a spring and snap to the action that arises from an exhilaration of spirit, and which reflects the happy poise and vigour of the animal.

Having finished the inspection of the first, he should be sent to the other end of the line and the inspection of the next taken up in the same manner as before. After all have been inspected in this manner, and successively sent to the foot of the line, the judge has a few picked out for a short lect, and makes a more minute examination and comparison of those he has chosen as likely prize winners, until he has definitely decided between them. Good judgment in balancing points is very important just here, for many judges are able to see differences but go astray in their attempt to estimate the relative importance of these differences.

In actual work in large rings, it is often advisable to move all of the horses. In such cases the judge passes rapidly over the line, picking out those that by reason of unsoundness or deficiencies in conformation are not entitled to be considered. The rest he sends to the head of the line and makes a complete examination of them. This sometimes arouses some protest from exhibitors, who hold that every horse has a right to be shown in action; but in all large rings there are a goodly number that are so clearly lacking in top qualifications that it is a waste of time to stop to move them.

In conclusion it should be noted that the most successful judges follow some definite method of procedure in judging horses, and the plan used by some of the best judges has been roughly outlined in the sketch.—PROFESSOR J. W. KENNEDY, in Breeder and Sportsman.

A fine old inn the George, at Andover, figures in what is probably the most extraordinary solicitor's bill on record—the account rendered to Sir F. Blake Delaval, M. P., by his attorney for work done during an election.

This document was the subject of an action in the King's Bench. The most interesting item was: "To being thrown out of the window of the George, Andover; to my leg being broken thereby; to Surgeon's bill and loss of time and business—all in the service of Sir F. Delaval—£5 0s."

It seems the attorney owed his flight through the window to his having played a practical joke upon the officers of a regiment at Andover to whom he sent invitations to a banquet at the George on the King's birthday, purporting to come from the Mayor and Corporation, and similar invitations to the latter purporting to come from the officers.

The two parties met and dined, and at the end, each party thanking the other for their hospitality, the trick was disclosed and the author of it, having been indiscreet enough to attend to witness the success of his joke was seized and thrown out of the window by the enraged diners.

BOMBAY HORSE AND DOG SHOW.

18th and 20th February 1908.

THE annual Bombay Horse and Dog Show opened on Tuesday and one felt glad to see it so well attended with a large number of competitors. Mr. Owen Symons, who has made his mark as a G.R., took the matter in hand and has to be congratulated on the success that has attended his efforts. The enclosure was the same that is used for the Motor Show and was as well arranged as possible, the public, outside Gymkhana members, being at last provided with a refreshment tent run by the new firm of Chic's who are doing things very slap up.

H.E. Sir George Clarke, H.E. Sir George Warrender and H.H. the Aga Khan lent their patronage and Colonel Beaver, Major Peacock, Major Hunt, Captain Meynell, Captain Shore, Messrs. H. Crawford, M.R.C.V.S., J. D. Scott, J. L. Symons, O. Symons and O. M. D. Bell assisted in judging.

Entries throughout were very large but the class shown was no improvement, in fact not so good on the whole as on previous occasions. The hunters' class is always very sound but by far the best were the Harness classes which would take beating in any country, the winners being quite exceptional, Mr. M. Goculdass' May Queen in particular. There is one point which should be noted and that there was not sufficient discrimination between the heavy and light weights, noticeably amongst hunters. In many cases the ring had as varied an assortment of builds as one could find. Amongst heavy weights Captain Meyer possesses a fine brown waler in Battle, an ideal hunter who also won the class for Ladies' horses. Another who caught the eye was Vedette in the Hack class, a handsome bay country-bred with a beautiful carriage generally, belonging to a keen sportswoman, Mrs. C. A. B. Beatty.

Jumping was very fair, the first three being distinctly good, Mr. Lucas' Tom Tit, Mr. Harter's H. E. and Mr. Blair's Success. They were sent over a second time and Tom Tit, though he touched the stone wall, came out best, H. E. taking it poorly and Success knocking the top rail of the fence down.

On the second day, jumping for ponies was also good and resulted in another win for Mr. T. L. Roberts' Chartier who has now won three times out of four, Mr. Owen Symons up. Mrs. C. A. B. Beatty continued successfully and won the Arab and C.-B. hunters with Vedette and being unable to take both prizes won by this handsome C.-B. took this one in preference to the Hacks. She also won the Ladies' horses with Verdict and a second with V. H. B. in the Charger class.

The distinction of a red and white mixed badge meaning special excellence was conferred upon Mrs. Gale's Madame in the English and Colonial Polo pony class, Captain Davie scored again with Khurdie and it seems quite the regular thing now for Colonel Bull's Grey Irish mare Twilight to carry off the red ribbon.

Harness classes were again very good and Prince Vijaysinghi, of Palitana, won two out of three, the Arab and C.-B. with Macaroon and the Tandems with Whisky and Soda. Pairs went to Mr. M. Goculdass with a former winner, May Queen, and Sunshine.

Large entries were received for the Dog Show, judging taking place on Thursday morning. The judges were Mrs. Morris, Lieutenant-Colonel Hydeeatr, Messrs. Bowers and Fleming; with Mr. Douglas Bennett again taking on the duties of Honorary Secretary. The Terrier classes as usual filled best and were the pick, the Irish this year being exceptional. Quite the feature of the show was the success of two regular exhibitors who are invariably successful, Mrs. E. M. E. Duff and Mrs. D'Elliott Powell. The former won with her Bull Terrier bitch in the Poupy class and the Bull Terrier class, and the latter the Smooth-coated Fox Terriers with Karari Grand Duke and Wire-haired with Dusky Member. Mrs. Duff also scored with Kaladina, a Springer Spaniel bitch.

The Honorary Secretary himself won the bitch division of the Smooth-coated Fox Terriers with Brittle.

These prizes and those for the horses were presented by Lady Warrender, Sir George calling for cheers.

(a) This and the previous move are the proper course.

(b) Black's play here is disastrous, but P takes P could have led to no better result. (c) In the latter case, Black is permanently deprived of the power of Castling; and the first player, by Q to Q Kt 3 and R to K square, or P takes P, secures a terrible attack.

(c) P takes Kt is perhaps better, though the move in the text is effective enough.

(d) Q Kt takes B first would have terminated the game sooner.

(e) These moves with the Queen are admirably calculated to assist the adversary in maturing his aggressive projects.

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 53.

Z should put on the king of diamonds. If the queen falls he obviously wins the grand slam. If A does not follow suit he can win the small slam as follows:—Put dummy in by taking over the 9 of clubs, and lead two more rounds, discarding the 2 and 3 of hearts. A's 8 of clubs was probable a singleton or doubleton. If the former, B has a club left, and a fifth round of clubs should be played enabling Z to discard his losing spade after which a trump must be led from dummy. If A had two clubs originally, the trump is led one round sooner, and the same result follows. If A had three clubs originally, the play is much the same, except that if B ruffs the fourth round of clubs with the 9, Z must overtake the ruff spades once in dummy. If B ruffs with the queen, Z, of course discards his second heart.

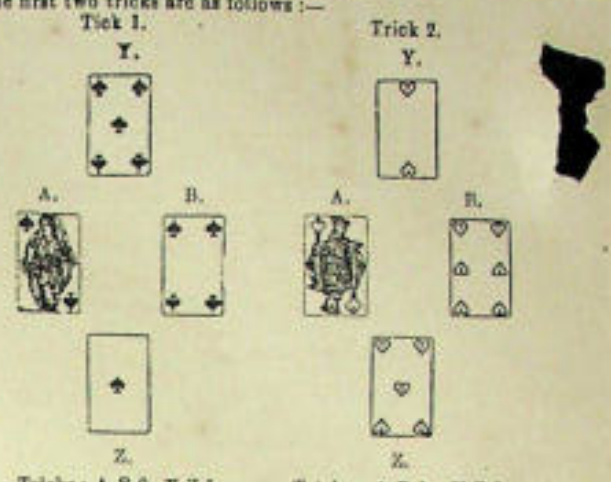
Problem No. 54.

Z deals and declares hearts. Y's (dummy) and A's (original leader) hands are as follows:

Y's HAND (DUMMY).—Hearts, J, 3, 2. Diamonds, K, 9, 8, 4. Clubs, K, J, 7, 6. Spades, K, 5.

A's HAND (LEADER).—Hearts, K, 4. Diamonds, A, Q. Clubs, A, 10, 9, 5. Spades, Q, J, 9, 8, 2.

The first two tricks are as follows:—



Tricks: A 8 6, Y Z 1. Tricks: A 8 1, Y Z 1.

What ought A to lead, and why?

Its favourite whistle was "The Village Blacksmith," and be the piper that played before Moses, wan day it whistled it so rael that burning sparks flew out of his neb, set the cage afire, and burned himself to death.

THE ANTIQUITY OF ANGLING.

THE history of any sport has a certain fascination for those of its votaries who take an intelligent interest in methods; and inasmuch as angling, by general consent, is the intellectual sportsman's speciality it is not surprising that a good deal of attention has been devoted to the history of the subject. The history of angling is at once interesting and baffling: interesting by reason of the remote ages to which the sport can be traced; baffling by reason of the slightness and generality of the references made by early writers. Mr. H. T. Sheringham, who read a paper on the literature of the sport before the British Sea Anglers' Society one evening in November last, remarked that angling was one of the oldest of human occupations, but it took a long time to develop into an amusement. In making this statement the very able authority merely said what may be truly said of any sport. Hunting, shooting and coursing—any sport that involves the killing of wild creatures—no doubt had their origin in the necessity for replenishing the larder: and by slow degrees changed their aspect from the industrial to the sporting. Mr. Sheringham remarked on the possibility of the ancient Egyptians having fished for sport. "Ancient Egypt" covers a long period: the oldest mummy in the British Museum is assigned, we believe, to a period ten thousand years earlier than the birth of Christ; but the earliest references to the use of rod and line occur on these lasting records the old sculptures of Egypt. These are frequent: they occur on sculptures at Beni Hassan, the Pyramids and at Thebes; and are assigned to the period about 2,000 years before Christ. The best known sculpture, because most frequently reproduced and most certain to indicate the existence of angling as a sport, is the Theban design, which shows a gentleman comfortably seated on a chair placed upon a kind of raft (constructed apparently of bamboos) fishing with a rod: a winged insect holding an independent position in the design is thought to indicate that the gentleman was a fly fisherman. However this may be, the whole spirit of the sculpture clearly suggests that the Theban angler was a sportsman and not a hard-working professional taker of fish. Fishing as an industry by the ancients as by moderns was conducted with the net as a much more lucrative means of capture than the rod. It has been pointed out that the Egyptians like the practical people they were invested with the halo of sanctity those fish which were regarded as unwholesome for human food, i.e., fish lacking scales and fins. Moses about 1500 B.C. adopted precisely the same method of classification reckoning scaled fish "clean" and suitable for food, while those without scales were banned as "unclean": and there is no reason to doubt that this wise enactment by Moses was the outcome of the experience he gained in Egypt. References to fishing with hooks in the Old Testament occur more than once: in Amos (iv. 2) which was written 787 B.C. the "kine of Bashan" are warned that they shall be "taken away with hooks and your posterity with fish hooks." Nothing could be more definite and lucid than the warning of Isaiah, uttered 714 B.C., that "the fishers also shall mourn and all they that cast angle into the brooks shall lament, and they that spread nets upon the waters shall languish" (xix. 8). Again Habakkuk (i. 15) writing 626 B.C. refers to the angle, the net and the "drag;" which last is interpreted by the commentators as the "flue net." We should be slow to assume that these references or any of them indicated the existence of angling as an amusement among the ancient Hebrews: but there can be no mistake about the use of rod and line, for hand lining would have been exceedingly difficult and inconvenient in the reedy brooks described by the prophets. Hooks were in use long before man arrived at the knowledge of using iron, as witness the ancient designs of hooks made from splinters of shell and bone. A modern writer who veils his identity under the pennname "Otter" states that the "flint flake hanging crosswise on the line has great claims to priority," though he believes the rude fish-spear came before that. These are points which cannot be cleared up in our present state of knowledge, but it would be rash to suggest that they will always remain obscure when we consider the wonderful lights which have been thrown on very ancient institutions by modern research and discovery. The old Greek and Roman writers refer to angling—sea angling—with rod and line. Homer's observations in the Odyssey being noteworthy by reason of their antiquity: we should have given the old Greek poet place before the minor prophets of the Old Testament. The most descriptive account of angling, however, belongs to an early date in the Christian era. Ælian writing about 225 A.D. describes in considerable detail the methods of the Macedonians who lived on the banks of the river Astræus "which flows midway between Berea and Thessalonica." The fishermen of this nation were "in the habit of catching a particular insect in that river by means of a fly called hippurus. A very singular insect it is, bold and troublesome like all its kind, in size a hornet, marked like a wasp and buzzing like a bee. These flies are the prey of a certain speckled fish which no sooner see them settling on the water than they glide gently beneath and before hippurus is aware snap at and carry him as suddenly under the stream as will seize bear aloft a goose from the farmyard." Ælian proceeds to explain that the anglers do not attempt to impale the living insect because the handling involved would spoil its colour and appearance and render it unfit as a lure. They "invest the body of the hook with purple wool and having adjusted two wings of a waxy colour so as to form an exact imitation of the hippurus, they drop these cheats gently down the stream." The rod used by these old fly fishermen was only six feet long, the line being of the same length. The occurrence of a fly or some other winged insect on the Theban sculpture of a period 2,200 years earlier has been mentioned as suggesting that the Egyptian angler of that age was a fly fisherman: but Ælian's description of the Macedonian angler's equipment must be regarded as the first positive and reliable account of fishing with an artificial fly. No doubt it was a clumsy lure at best: but the "speckled fish" being unsophisticated took it, and if the woollen "hippurus" answered its purpose it is not for moderns to criticise. After this date there is a very long hiatus in the history of angling; but when we take up the thread of it again in the tenth century, we have the satisfaction of doing so in English literature. There is mention of angling in a manuscript attributed to Ælfric, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the year 995. The first printed work on fishing is a Flemish volume produced in Antwerp about the year 1492: thereafter we come to the classic attributed to Dame Juliana Berners, the famous "Boke of St. Albans," and thence to John Dennys, Markham, Barker and so to Walton, and apropos of the three writers before Walton it may be observed that they "cribbed" each from his predecessor with a brazen effrontery only possible in days when a book was a rare and precious possession which few people could read if they got the chance. It may be worth observing that tempered hooks which would neither bend nor snap under strain were unknown until the time of Charles the First: and credit for inventing a method of tempering hooks is given to Prince Rupert who confided his secret to Mr. Charles Kirby. According to W. B. Daniel (Rural Sports, Vol. II., p. 156) this valuable secret remained a possession of the Kirby family until the time that well-known work was issued, in 1891. Gut was first used in England at the time of the Restoration; and from this period it is fair to date angling by modern methods. We have improved our tools in every department, but there have been no radical changes in the nature of the angler's equipment since.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Though the weather is keeping distinctly cooler than usual this year, everyone agrees that a card of eight events on a late February afternoon is rather trying and the comparatively small crowd of racegoers wore a distinctly jaded appearance by the time the day's sport was finished. However, those who did not back too many favourites must have had a most enjoyable day as the racing was quite good with close and exciting finishes. The public started well as in the Pony Hunters' Hurdle Race the two favourites, Killarney a very big 14-2, and Clarice, finished first and third respectively. That somewhat uncertain mare, Lady George, seemed to fancy having her owner up instead of a stranger as she ran an absolutely different pony to the last week and 15lbs. overweight and all came very strongly down the straight and beat Clarice for second place by half a length. Her jumping also showed a good deal of improvement from her performance at Tollygunge where she was all over the place running down every jump while on Saturday she went clean and straight at them all.

The Charnock Plate was another good thing for punters. Hardly anything was backed but Moira and Little Dolly for a place and they duly turned up at the winning post in that order. The favourite led the whole way and the second favourite carefully nursed came through with a fine rush from the distance and got within half a length of the winner. Ames as usual got quickest away out of the gate and thanks to this secured third place, though a bad one, with Primrose.

The February Plate I (one mile) provided one of the finest races that has been seen for some time. Carnival after being badly left at the gate came up with her field at the distance. Morette who was leading at the 5 furlongs fell back but came again and from the new stand there was a magnificent struggle between her, Maloya and Pendred with Carnival hanging on desperately. At the finish Ames by superior jockeyship just managed to get Pendred's head in front of Thomas on Maloya who many thought should have made his effort sooner and kept Pendred stretched. As it was the race was a slow one just suiting the heavy weight.

In the Seventh Selling Handicap, Automatic, Merry Elsie and Golden were the only ones backed, but this was the beginning of a series of reverses for backers as only Merry Elsie of the three could even get placed and the race fell to the unbacked Galley Slave, whom Mr. Evers brought away at a great pace from the distance, beating Mr. Galstaun on his own animal, Silphoe, by 3 lengths.

The Mediocre Plate was considered a very open affair and The Cingalee, Sir Ulric and Cuirass were all well backed, while there was also a fair amount of money coming for Clynder. Another bolt from the blue fell, however, when Peveril came away with a grand rush and beat Sir Ulric who had led throughout comfortably by one and a half lengths. Two of the other fancied horses, The Cingalee and Clynder, who came late on the outside, were close up but Cuirass was never in the hunt at all.

For the Harrington Plate the money was all for Abet and Sir Roland till at the last minute there was a big rush for Devil's Limit and Tana. History, however, repeated itself as the animals who carried the money finished second, third, fourth and nowhere and Morsel, a ten to one chance, won from start to finish.

The second half of the February Plate looked to be a fight between Mr. Galstaun's first and second string, with, one might almost say, of course, the second string Windy leading. This stout mare who is in the pink of condition just now kept going and won easily but the favourite Lasso came up and obtained second place by a head from Mr. Galstaun on his own choice Runaway Girl. Sir Ulric who was pretty well backed got kicked in the race and pulled up past the post dead lame.

A 1½ mile Hunters' Flat Race brought the day's proceedings to an end. Eight of them started for this and Lady Gold and Envious, who won among the ponies the week before, were made favourites. Mr. Turner had Blue Bell in the race as well as Lady Gold and they say that he backed them both but fancied the grey most though the public went for the other. Envious, however, had a very easy win of it, as though Mr. Evers by riding an uncommonly clever race managed to bring Blue Bell II. within a neck of the pony, Mr. Galstaun never really had to stretch the winner till the last few strides. Lady Gold began to tire from the 5 furlongs and was done with 3 furlongs from home and Mr. Bletsoe was just able to keep the weakening Wake Up's head in front of Raffles for third place.

The entries for the ninth meeting next Saturday show no abatement of enthusiasm for racing on the part of owners here, and there is talk of a tenth on the 14th instant. Mr. J. D. Scott is down again and will help to swell the entry list, and altogether there is absolutely no doubt of the success of the day, so it is probable that by the time these lines go to press it will be un fait accompli and the programme issued. The 7-furlong race for Saturday has so many entries that they are certain to make two divisions of it.

We much regret to report that Mr. Myers' horse Bon Bon was run into by a ghari while walking on Monday and received injuries to his back which necessitated his immediate destruction. Everyone will sympathise with this popular owner in the loss of this animal, who since he ran second to Balayeuse in the Cornwallis Plate on 14th December has not been treated too kindly by the handicappers.

The tenth and last paperchase of the current season before the gallop for the Cup was held on Friday over the Jodepore country with a finish over the bands. Interest centred chiefly in the duel for the Average Cup between Captain Fraser and Captain Fitzgerald. Both had been placed an equal number of times but Captain Fraser with Diablo a faster animal than Fitzgerald's Fermoy, and riding about a stone lighter had been first and second more often, so that he had only to be placed in the first six this time to win the cup. And he very nearly missed it; only about half mile from home Diablo almost came over, bringing his rider on to his neck and the reins over his head and it speaks volumes for both horse and man that they managed still to finish the course fourth, and so secured the cherished cup. A hot morning and the fag end of the season brought a smaller field than usual and the chase was chiefly noteworthy for the way in which Mr. Dudley Myers on Sir Walter led the field from the start and finished an easy winner from Queen of Hearts. There was no regular pony chase but a number of all sorts of equine beasts pottered round the course afterwards. The final order of the horse chase was:—1. Mr. Dudley Myers on Sir Walter: 2. Mr. Pierson on Queen of Hearts: 3. Mr. Scaramanga on John: 4. Captain Fraser on Diablo: 5. Captain Fitzgerald on Fermoy: 6. Mr. Macrae on a bay: followed by Captain Holden, Mr. Muir, Mrs. Dudley Myers, Mr. Arthur, Mr. Halliday, Miss Lukis and Mr. Hadow.

The sporting writer of a daily contemporary has taken us sharply to task for our remarks last week on the subject of Hunters' Certificates. He attributes to us a proposal to place the granting of Hunters' Certificates in the hands of the C. T. C. and this proposal he characterises as "idiotic." Quite so. We agree that such a proposal would be, to use his own word, "idiotic." But will this erudite scribe please point out where this proposal occurs in our para. We are perhaps not so expert as we might be in the matter of microscopic research and we have, we must confess, failed to discover the proposal credited to us.

What we did advocate, and we believe time will show with success, was that the C. T. C. should be induced to take over the framing of these races. Owners would then know exactly the terms and conditions under which they enter their horses. They would also know whether their horses would be qualified to start. These points they do not know with any certainty under present conditions.

A London correspondent writes:—Although the sports in the Stadium at the Franco-British Exhibition, at Shepherd's Bush, do not open till 2nd May, the gentlemen who are organising the meetings are anything but idle. The great arena, in which club sports and the Olympic Games will be held, has not only taken shape but is actually nearing completion.

The Stadium will cost about £60,000, and, as Mr. Henry explained, will accommodate nearly 70,000 spectators. On certain days, however, when portions of the arena are not in use, this accommodation can be nearly doubled. There is covered stand accommodation for over 17,000. It is intended to provide dressing accommodation of the most up-to-date character for upwards of 3,000 competitors, representing twenty-six nations.

The turf in the arena was brought specially from the country, and is considered the finest that could be obtained. The running track is three laps to the mile, and has been constructed under the special supervision of the Amateur Athletic Association. The cycling track, which experts expect to prove the fastest ever constructed in this country, and is already referred to as "the mile a minute track," is three-eighths of a mile in circumference, or two and two-third laps to the mile. Oval in shape, the field is about 700 feet long, and its extreme width about 300 feet.

Anything concerning swimming and diving was certain to receive ample attention, and the swimming bath is 100 metres (about 109 yards) long. A special diving board is to be erected, 55 feet in height, for the diving contests at the Olympic Games and other sports meetings.

The summer portion of the Olympic Games in the Stadium will commence on 13th July, and extend over a fortnight, finishing on 25th July, while the winter games will commence on 19th October.

It is rumoured that Indian athletes may be represented in England this year by at least two good men. Mr. Fred. Prike is said to be contemplating a trial of his luck at the Olympic Games and the A. A. A. Championships and at the latter meeting it is possible Mr. Knyvett may compete in the hurdles and high jump at least.

Alfred Shrubb, the English Champion long distance runner, has just returned to England from his trip to America, fit and well and apparently well pleased with his treatment there. He has a high opinion of some of the pedestrian talent he met over there; in the course of an interview with a Sportsman representative this week he said:—I have great confidence that the Stars and Stripes will figure prominently in the forthcoming Olympic Games. There is Dan Kelly, who has been timed to do the hundred in 9⅘secs.; he is coming over. Then there is Sheppard, of New York, the half-mile champion. He has been doing the four furlongs in 1min. 55secs. and 1min. 56secs. He is the finest half-mile runner I have seen. He is a real goer, I can tell you, and if fit and well will win. As to Taylor, the quarter of a mile boy, I am told he has done 48 1/5secs., and he should stand a good chance. Of high jumpers they have one or two excellent men, and although I have not seen them I am assured they will want a lot of beating."

It is well known that further legislation with regard to betting will shortly be introduced into the House of Commons. This was emphasised by the remarks of the Bishop of Hereford at the recent Convocation of Canterbury, and it is intended to introduce a Bill in Parliament with a view to various reforms. A writer in Truth says the sporting papers appear to treat the bishop's views with contempt, but they are probably not aware that the passing of the Street Betting Act was really the work of Convocation. The Government never would have taken up that measure in earnest but for being urged to do so by Convocation, and what happened then will no doubt happen again, especially as there is a strong and active party in the House of Commons heartily in favour of the kind of legislation which Bishop Percival desires.

The Bill, in a modified form, will no doubt pass, with the assistance of the Government, in the House of Commons, and its history will be simply that of the Street Betting Act over again. The report on which the proposed legislation is to be based will be presented to the Upper House on 5th May, and shortly afterwards the Prime Minister and the Home Secretary will be requested to receive a deputation from both Upper and Lower Houses on the subject.

Our London correspondent writes:—The usual list of winter quotations on the Derby is with us once more, and some of the prices offered literally make one's hair stand on end. For instance the generosity (?) of the pencillers, where Perrier is concerned should make them blush; while those who accept such a ridiculous price as "eights" about Mountain Apple must have more money than sense. Still, after all, backers are not obliged to accept the prices on offer, and, in these cold, wintry days, it comes as some sort of relief even to be reminded of Epsom Downs on an early June day. Here are the closing quotations for three big events in which readers of The Indian Field are interested:—

On Sunday, the 9th February, there took place on the Brianza Hills, near Milan, a hunt without precedent in Italy, and in which several well-known sportsmen belonging to the Lombard aristocracy took part. The object of the chase was to kill a lioness ten months old, which had become a decided danger to the people who were rearing the animal in the park attached to their villa. Extraordinary arrangements were made for the event, but, fortunately, there was little danger attending the "hunt," as the lioness was shut up in an iron cage. There were some forty huntsmen, all clad in costumes more or less fantastic. Some were in Arctic dress of heavy furs, others were attired as Africans, and others, again, wore the gaudy costume of the Red Indian. Commendatore Tito Ricordi, the music publisher, was dressed as a Bedouin. Many guests watched the operations from the walls surrounding the park, and carabineers kept curious sightseers within the bounds prescribed for safety.

At a convenient distance from the cage was a cinematograph apparatus, the operators of which were protected by four men armed with rifles. At a given signal the cage was opened. The lioness, frightened by the smoke of torches held by the "beaters," came out somewhat unwillingly, and ran with her tail between her legs towards a path leading to the centre of the park. Then she turned to the right, slinking towards the spot where the hunters were waiting with levelled guns.

Scenting danger, the lioness stopped for a moment, as though hesitating what course to pursue. Then, lashing her flanks with her tail and roaring loudly, she was about to hurry off in the opposite direction when she fell to the ground with a bullet in her skull.

The chase lasted only a few minutes, but it gave immense excitement to those who participated. Soon the huntsmen were crowding round the dead animal, which was carried in procession round the park, followed by a curious and motley cortege in all the costumes associated with a carnival. Indian big game shooters will read the above details with mingled feelings we should say.

The Oxford and Cambridge sports are down for Saturday, the 28th March. The 'Varsity Boat Race will be rowed on the 4th April; the Amateur Athletic Association's Championships will be held on the 4th July, at the Stadium, Shepherd's, Bush, London.

The Punjab-Bengal Football tournament at Umballa ended in a win for the Shropshire L.I., who beat the 12th Royal Lancers by a goal to nil.

The Punjab Commission Cup cricket tournament has been won this year by the North Staffordshire Regiment. The Gordon Highlanders, who had qualified for the semi-final by defeating the S. and T. Corps, had to scratch as the regiment had been ordered to Calcutta: so the other game in the semi-finals between the 2nd North Staffords and the 2nd Royal Berkshires was the last match in the tournament. The North Staffords won by 102 runs.

Horse-racing has been aptly summed up as "The sport of kings—and other blackguards;" fox-hunting has been classically embalmed by Wilde as "The unspeakable in full pursuit of the uneatable;" and football has been discreetly described as "The pursuit of brown leather by blown humanity."

We are tolerably familiar in Indian military stations with the "men versus elephant" variation of the Tug of War. In London a match was recently ratified between Mr. W. Sedgwick's female elephant, Lizzette, and thirty men in the employ of Mr. Patrick Collins, the well-known showman, to participate in a tug-of-war—the best of three pulls—for £50 a side.

The match, which was decided at the Fun City, Olympia, created a considerable amount of interest, and the first pull resulted in a win for the men in 35secs. The match was continued next evening before a tremendous "gate," and it was some considerable time ere the referee could get a fair start made. Eventually the signal was given, and the men putting all their strength into their task, rapidly pulled the elephant back, and won in the remarkably quick time of 10secs. Mr. Collins' men having thus won twice in succession were declared the winners of the match.

Some disappointment was evinced over the defeat of the elephant, who weighs two and a half tons. Up in the North, at the same trial of strength, she has never been defeated, but on the present occasion the ground was concrete, while the previous matches took place on grass.

What price this for a scatter-gun? "Mr. H. Malcolm, ex-deputy game warden, sends to the Baltimore Sun a photograph of a remarkable nine-barrel gun with a single trigger, which has the effectiveness of a Gatling gun in slaughtering ducks. A single pull of the trigger is said to have killed 189 ducks. Mr. Malcolm, assisted by Messrs. R. H. Cox, W. M. Lyons, and Sidney Barber, arrested a party of hunters who were using the gun to the great detriment of the wild duck-hunting sport on the Potomac River. Seven men were taken along with the gun, which is of a type forbidden by law. Mr. Malcolm says that for years they have been unlawfully killing ducks and driving others from the Potomac River and tributary creeks. The capture of the outfit, he says, is a great relief to the owners of lands in the neighbourhood." We can quite believe it.

Ballistite powder seems to be going very strong in the States just now. We learn that in the shooting at Brenham, Texas, held from 28th January to 1st February, the Sunny South Handicap event at 25 live birds, 25 dollars entrance, with 100 dollars added money, which was shot for on the first day of the meeting, was won by Mr. Fred King, of Denver, a young man not yet out of school. He shot with a Winchester pump gun and Ballistite powder. The live bird event, competed for on 1st February, was also won by the same shooter with a score of 25 live birds straight; the target championship by Mr. Otto, of Houston, Texas (score, 90 out of 100); and the "Houston Chronicle" Cup was secured by Mr. E. F. Forsgard, Waco, Texas. All these events were carried off with the assistance of Ballistite.

During his visit to London, the German Emperor made use of a fleet of Daimler cars, which, as is seen by the enclosed letter from his Secretary, gave him the utmost satisfaction.

A similar letter was received from the Private Secretary of the King of Spain, with regard to the satisfaction given to him by the Daimler cars, which he also used during his visit to London.

The Count Eulenburg has much pleasure in informing the Daimler Company, that His Majesty the Emperor has been very satisfied with the motor cars, which the Company has sent to the Imperial Household during his stay in Highcliffe as well as in London.

The motor cars worked without a fault and the chauffeurs showed themselves to be very reliable and careful, so that His Majesty has been highly satisfied.

A Clement Talbot motor car, for which the Russa Engineering Works are agents, made a test run to Hazaribagh and back, 550 miles, on Saturday last. The journey was accomplished in 18 hours 37mins. at an average of about 30 miles an hour, the highest speed attained being 45½ miles. The car used was a 15 h.-p. Talbot chassis, No. 889, type 4 D. and engine No. 211, four cylinders, bore 90 m.-m.; stroke 117 m.-m.; with dual ignition, the variation of the moment of ignition being secured by means of a ratcheted lever working over a fixed quadrant on steering wheel. Both ignitions are controlled by the same lever. The car was tyred with Michelin 875. 105 m. m. and fitted with Michelin's detachable rims. The chassis (of the landaulette type) has a wheel base of 10 feet 3 inches, with a track of 4 feet 7 inches. The car was driven by M. Doriat, Mr. D. J. Parsons acting as observer.

The Bombay Gymkhana Racquets Championship was played off on Saturday at the Racquet courts. In the first heat between Captain Balfour Bryant, Highland L. I., the ex-army champion, and Captain Leather, the former won by 3 games to 1. In the final, Captain Greig, six times champion of the Bombay Gymkhana, beat Captain Bryant by 3 games to 2. Captain Greig won games 1 and 3, and Captain Bryant games 2 and 4. In the fifth game Captain Bryant stood at 9—love, but Captain Greig pulled up splendidly, and won at 15—12.

The Somerset L. I. have just concluded a very successful three days' boxing tournament at Poona. Entries were good, arrangements all that could be desired, while the hall was crowded on each evening and the contests were spirited and interesting throughout. Captain H. K. Umfreville, Superintendent of Gymnasia, was referee, Lieutenant Mowatt, 26th Cavalry, and Sergeant-Major Butler, Worcesters, were judges. Captain Paterson, Somersets, held the watch, and Sergeant Smith (Somersets) was M. C. Results were as follows:—

Young-Soldiers (closed) won by Corporal Stockham; Feather-Weights (closed) won by Pte. Coles; Light-Weights (closed) won by Pte. Draper; Middle-Weights (closed) won by Pte. Edney; Feather-Weights (open) won by Pte. Wallace, Royal Scots; Light-Weights open) won by Pte. Tucker, Worcesters; Middle-Weights (open) won by Pte. Cooke, Worcesters.

The fifth and last test match between Australia and the M.C.C. was played at Sydney and resulted in another win for the Colonials. Australia batted first and were dismissed for 137, the M.C.C. replying with 281. But in the second innings the Colonials put up 422 and the M.C.C. were left with 279 to make to win. They were all out for 229 and thus were defeated by 49 runs.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Last Bye day the Bombay hounds met at the Cross Roads, a field of seventy turning out and, finding at Chuckla, a fast pace was set. He set his mask for the Andheri Road, ran in a complete circle through the mango tope and out over Sunday Hill. Eventually passing through thick jungle he was lost.

Time remained for another cast and a jack was put up at the Andheri Road. It was a sharp run into the valley near Marole Hill past the Church and across the road. Making back, he was pulled down near Sahar.

On the extra day the Chuckla covert was blank, but after some time the old jack, who has so often given hounds the slip, was put up in the mango tope. The pace he set, and kept up, was marvellous as ever. He kept in the open valley till reaching cover, when he turned, but again on nearing the tope made out again to Marole. After mounting a big hill the other side of the one in which are the famous caves he was suddenly lost in the same extraordinary manner as on previous occasions.

Thursday about fifty met the Master at Santa Cruz and a move being made to the Teakwood covert, hounds are soon away on the scent, making straight for Sahar Hill, climb it and come down again into Bomanvadi Valley. With the jack in view they turn towards the Andheri Road and then cross the Backwater. To Powai and Horse Shoe valleys the pace was hot and after a long hunt round one of the big hills hounds are successful in the plains below though very few were there to witness the kill.

Following the glamour of a Big Meeting there was naturally a bit of a falling off at the Tenth Extra on Wednesday, though for an Extra the attendance was very fair, as also was the sport. A sign of the resumption of these extras is that no less than in six out of seven races we beat the books badly.

The "good things" of the day rested with new ponies, the first division of the Arab Dealers' Pony Consolation Plate coming first. On his consistent form Najmi of the M.G. and A.N. stable was freely tipped as a moral. He went out at evens, sixes bar one, and proved all that was said of him, leading from pillar to post and winning easily. Porter and Print Craft failed to stay the six furlongs, Murzook ran third all the way, whereas Martyn came with such a rattle into second place that he promises better.

In the second division Saree was just as hot, Nofa being next at fours. To cut it short Saree came up to Arcadia and Godolphin at the bend and from there won almost as he liked with two unfancied ones in Porter and Narsin next.

The race of the day was the Coorla Plate of seven furlongs, an open betting race till a run for Vasco made him favourite at two's, but he never shewed up. Surprisingly enough Bay Middleton, with 9-10 and over a longer distance than he likes, was taken to the front from Meerjan and Gold Mint. When it came to racing the bay was going well, but so was Meerjan, who drew up and a great race ensued ending in a dead-heat. Imagine the consternation of those who had backed the new pony when it was announced that the race had been given to Bay Middleton. Whether the pony was lame or what the cause was is unknown, but surely this is a rule which does not protect the public. A similar instance, it will be remembered, occurred in Poona when Mukbool scratched in favour of Tachreet, and why the old rule of run off or divide is done away with passes understanding.

The fourth race for Arabs was the 9-furlong Parel Plate which had Scarlet as a warm favourite though many entrusted their stuff to Melbourne. He, the latter, has always shown a turn of speed, but could never last. On this occasion he cut the pace out and had Ashroff and Salaam beat when Scarlet came. The whip, to the consternation of backers, was out on the latter at the bend, but he is a rare fighter and gradually wearing Melbourne down won a great race.

The pony race of five furlongs saw money in turn for Comeback, Minnie and Lady Avon, making them practically equal favourites; stable backing also for Koko. First Comeback then Koko made the pace and they entered the straight level, but when let go Comeback went away very comfortably. Lady Avon a poor third most of the way, and Minnie next in a field of five.

For the Doncaster Plate of a mile Admiral Crichton was established a very hot favourite and thoroughly justified this confidence. He allowed Sir Galahad to make the pace and at the bend had Baritone to contend with, but having him beat won fairly comfortably though Harpist put in a very strong run.

Punters' only upset came in the other big horse race, the Ascot Plate of five furlongs, when Metal Maid held pride of place in the ring from Forfeit. The latter ran last to the bend, the former coming out to pass Vocalist and lead like a winner. She had Zotique and Ianthe well set when like a flash Forfeit came through, lucky to find an opening on the rails, and won a clever race by half a length with a neck between each of the next three. The winner had some stable money, but was only fifth best on the boards at sixes in a field of seven.

THOSE who had, and those who wished they had, been present on Wednesday were hot on the scent on Saturday when the Eleventh Extra, however, did not return results as favourable as previously. To begin with, the Brisbane Plate of a mile for ponies dwindled down to a field of three: Wild Boy at sixes on, Matalgia sixes, and Cheeky eights. The pace was set by Cheeky who gave way to Matalgia at the bend. In the straight the "moral" of the day came at his stable companion, but even Jimmy's finish failed to make young Ferguson move on Matalgia, who won with half a stone in hand.

THE new ponies' Selling Plate was divided and in the first Voucher and Ateyba fought for favouritism, the former half a point shorter with Woolwinder fives and Naief sevens. Monster and Duppas were out of it from the start and the four mentioned were in front, Voucher leading Naief. Ateyba made his effort down the straight and a good finish ensued, but Oomerkhan had a bit left in Voucher and stayed them out. Woolwinder came with a great rattle, but almost on the tan and failed to catch Naief who, however, lost third place owing to wrong weight. We had the second division as a last effort. Porter hardening to half a point less than Transfer after his late run on Wednesday, whereas money came for Mafood and Prince Chestnut, the best looking pony in the bunch. To begin with, Porter got a bad start and Transfer led from Prince Chestnut after Good Morning had made the pace. Before the distance Prince Chestnut went away and Porter came through on the rails, but the good thing just failed by a neck.

BETTING suggested nothing being in the Arab Dealers' Consolation for new ponies over seven furlongs but Respectable, ample place money coming for Fritz. Mutlag got away first, but Broadrib put in a marvellous rush lasting to the bend where Mutlag again went to the front followed by Respectable and Young Salanic. Mutlag had the favourite set when Mujeed flashed by on Young Salanic and won fairly comfortably. Here too both first and second could have been picked on looks and, judging by the time, 1-37⅘, I was not far wrong when suggesting some time ago that the new were very near the old ones.

VARIOUS were the opinions expressed for the Callian Plate of 1½ miles till a call on Nooman made him favourite from Dumra and Young Kohinoor. Wait-a-While, Melbourne and Bendigo made the pace till Tulal came up and led by no less than ten lengths at the seven furlongs. Dumra made his run and the leader was passed soon after the half mile. All looked good for Dumra till Young Kohinoor came at him, and though he only won by a neck he had enough in hand to get clear. It was a smart performance with 9-8 up and "Jimmy" nursed him to perfection. How many such races will he have to convince punters that their money is as safe with him as any?

SEVENTEEN went out for the Thannah Plate with Ashroff, Mint and Maharaja in demand, though many went on Saeed, who looked a picture. Wadi, Squire and Saeed made the pace till Vedas took Wadi's place. Once in the lead at the bend it was evident Saeed was going great guns and easily stayed out Maharaja and Sahoon with Ashroff going the longest way round and finishing fourth.

THE Leap Year Plate of ten furlongs had only four, but money came for all, two's three of them and three's Admiral Crichton. The last made all the running by four clear lengths followed by The Master, then Sacristan and Our State. Sacristan fell back before the bend where The Master coming up to the leader held him safe though passing the post by a mere neck.

HUNTER and Hack class was seen out in the Auction Plate when Harpist was made favourite from The Earl. Gunner made the running from Spirea, and these two were hard at it down the straight when the favourite popped up and all was over, the other two dead-heating.

It seems to be public property now that Mr. Cecil Gray will be going Home after this Season, and remains for eight months.

THE Motor Gymkhana, run by the Motor Union of Western India, has come to a close and may claim to have been a success. Mr. N. M. Marshall has been indefatigable in his duties as Honorary Secretary and deserves the thanks of all who have spent enjoyable evenings, both before and after dinner, there. It is a difficult matter to arrange a programme for five consecutive days and it must be admitted one tired somewhat of the proceedings, but Mr. "Jimmy" Young with a side-show put everyone in high spirits; as did the admirably arranged "Buffet" set out by Chic's, the genial port himself presiding.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 14th February 1908.

THROUGHOUT the week we have been having quite "unseasonable," but gloriously fine weather, which like somebody's cocoa is grateful and comforting. The days have been dry, bracing and clear, there has been hardly a drop of rain, we have seen much of the sun and our nights have been almost romantically moonlit. Of course, we shall pay the penalty shortly: probably before these lines are in type fog, rain and may be snow will be sent to teach us humility and fortitude. There is any amount of influenza about—it is the stock topic—and we are having a passably dull time at the moment; but soon, let us hope, the spring will come, gentle Annie, the spring time with its clearance—sales for the women and hardships for the men; the buttercups and the daisies the butterflies and all the rest of it and the opening of the butterfly period known as the London season. Meanwhile here we are jogging along in the old sweet way while "February fill dyke" tells us the new year is fairly set in: statesmen are ill, by elections are warming the hearts of Tariff Reformers, the lantern over Big Ben tells us Parliament is sitting and everything in the garden begins to look more or less lovely.

I have remarked that we were dull. I had almost overlooked the amusing little Suffragette pantomime provided for our delectation last Tuesday afternoon and most of which I had the good fortune to witness from the top of a 'bus what time the traffic at the foot of Westminster Bridge was held up. The field of battle was Palace Yard and the raid was carried out on parallel lines to those adopted by the wily warriors of Trojan Horse renown. The attack was two-fold, being in the first place strategical, and in the second direct. The strategical attack was attempted from a pantechnicon van, but it was not successful. Out of their strange vehicle as it drew up suddenly before the St. Stephen's entrance in Old Palace Yard, twenty-one disorderly females belonging to the National Women's Social and Political Union descended, and attempted to force an entrance into St. Stephen's Hall. The other invasion was made by "volunteers," who essayed to bear into the House of Commons a resolution of the Women's Parliament sitting in Caxton Hall, which protested against the Government's refusal to give a vote to women. A good deal of disorder occurred, and the police, who were assembled in large force, made some fifty arrests. The women came from London, Birmingham, Bradford, Preston, Worcester, Stoke-on-Trent, Jarrow, Mid-Devon, and Scotland.

Doubtless Reuter has given you details of the murder of the King and Crown Prince of Portugal. The incident with all its attendant horrors naturally created a profound sensation over here and unbounded sympathy was expressed in every community. Simultaneously with the obsequies at Lisbon a Requiem Mass was said for the late Sovereign and Crown Prince at St. James's Church, Spanish-place. The King and Queen were present at this service in state, and the congregation included the Prince and Princess of Wales, other members of the Royal family, many Cabinet Ministers and diplomatic representatives. Their Majesties and the Prince and Princess of Wales also attended a national memorial service in St. Paul's Cathedral. A vast assembly participated in the solemn ceremony. The bodies of the murdered King and Crown Prince of Portugal have been removed from the Church of Sao Vicente to the Pantheon, which is to be their final resting-place.

Many people have heard with regret, which may possibly be shared by a not inconsiderable number of Anglo-Indians, of the disappearance of the Tribune from the ranks of the London daily papers. It had reached its 647th issue, and the venture, therefore, has lasted rather more than two years. During that time the Tribune has been conspicuous for the high standard of its conduct, and for the fairness of its criticisms. While strongly and uncompromisingly Radical in politics, it never showed violence towards its opponents, and everyone will sympathise with Mr. Thomasson, M.P., in the disappointment of his hopes of success for a newspaper which maintained to the full the healthy traditions of the Metropolitan Press.

The interesting experiment of founding a high-class Radical morning paper has thus definitely failed. The Tribune, during its short life, started two somewhat original experiments. One was the provision of a public reading-room and rendezvous with occasional lectures and discussions, and the other was the device of supplying the paper free for six months in the hope that those who had received it gratis would afterwards become subscribers. But the results were exceedingly disappointing, and the end of all is the regrettable announcement of the demise of the paper.

I may be wrong, but I have an impression that I read not so long ago of an attempt (which I hope is now un fait accompli) to found a Dickens' Society in Calcutta. Be this as it may I have no doubt many thousands of Dickensians all over India will regard the recent Guildhall installation of the memorial library as a good thing done. Lovers of the master gathered in force on the 7th instant in the Guildhall library—it being the 96th anniversary of the birth of Charles Dickens and assisted at the ceremony of handing over the Kitton collection of his works to the City Corporation.

It is to form the nucleus of a national Dickens' Library, which it is hoped may be added to year by year. The Dickens Fellowship were generously met by Mrs. Kitton when they made the proposal to acquire the collection by purchase, and opened a public subscription for that purpose. Included in the gift to the Corporation, and through them to the public, are a number of original editions of Dickens' works, and drawings illustrating them by Cruikshank, Brock, Leslie Ward, and other well-known artists, and about 1,000 magazine articles, including original reviews of the novelist's books as they appeared. A considerable number of volumes have been added by the Dickens Fellowship.

The scene at the Guildhall was a brilliant one, and the unanimous chorus of tributes to the memory of Charles Dickens must have occasioned a warm glow of gladness and pride in the hearts of the members of "Boz's" family who were present. For the tributes came from men in all grades of life. Literature and journalism, for instance, were represented by Mr. Frederic Harrison, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Clement Shorter; politics and law by Lord James of Hereford and Sir Charles Mathews; the stage by Sir John Hare; and so on. Many of the novelist's personal friends were there, including Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, who wrote portions of some of the famous Christmas numbers of "Household Words" and "All the Year Round," and has testified to the affection in which he held his great friend in a score of books, and Mr. J. C. Parkinson, who was another of the famous brigade known as "Dickens' young men." Of the novelist's family, all were glad to welcome Miss Georgina Hogarth, immortalised as "the truest friend man ever had." She was accompanied by Mrs. Henry Dickens, representing her husband, who was unfortunately unable to be present and to take part in the tribute to his father's memory, and by the Misses Olive and Elaine Dickens, grandchildren of "Boz." Last, but not least, there was something particularly pleasing and touching in the presence of Mrs. Ritchie, daughter of Dickens' great contemporary and friend, the man who described the "Carol" as "a personal kindness to every man and woman who reads it"—William Makepeace Thackeray.

Of the new piece at the "Garrick" there can certainly be more than two opinions. For the first two acts it seemed that "The Woman of Kronstadt," the dramatic version of Max Pemberton's well-known novel, had the making of a popular success. If it was melodrama pure and simple, and rather crude, even then there was plenty of movement; and with a beautiful English girl scornfully defying a band of blood-thirsty Russian officers and secret service spies, to say nothing of a wicked cigarette-smoking princess, and telling them what a great and glorious country England is, there was no dearth of applause. But the third act proved a little too much for the most unsophisticated of playgoers. No one, of course, would look for a true picture of any phase of life in melodrama. It is something that must be judged according to its lights. But at the Garrick the characters broke every rule of commonsense so persistently in the third act that on Saturday there was laughter where there should have been thrills, and a play that had been received with such generous applause after the second act met with no little booing at the end.

The lady indicated in the title is Marian Best, an English governess in the employ of General Prince Stefanoff, Deputy-Governor of Kronstadt. She is young and pretty, but when she hears that it is possible to obtain a sum of £10,000 for the plans of certain forts of Kronstadt she becomes a political spy to the manner born. Not that she wants the money for herself—oh dear no. She is too good and pure for that. But she has a little crippled brother in Devonshire, and it is her laudable desire to obtain for him every comfort. By a simple trick, however, her guilt is discovered, and discovered, moreover, by the man who loves her, Captain Paul Zassoulic. When it comes to a question of love and duty Paul proves true to his country, and the governess is carried away to a cell. Here comes to her the now repentant lover, who promises to make his way to a British warship that is fortunately anchored off Kronstadt and make known her plight. Here, too, she has less pleasant interviews with Colonel Benzo, who threatens to have her flogged—the doors are opened that she may hear the cries of a man undergoing punishment outside, as a sort of taste of what is to come—and with Princess Mary de Hess, herself in love with Paul, and determined to subject the girl to every degradation since she has become her rival.

So far the play has been very improbable, but it has never become dull. The necessity for a happy ending, however, has caused the authors—George Fleming has collaborated with Max Pemberton in the dramatisation—to resort to all manner of absurd devices unknown in the book. The play in its later exaggerations becomes almost burlesque melodrama. First arrive two British naval officers—exaggerated types—who demand Miss Best's release. They hint at international complications, and General Stefanoff consents to their demands. But the murder is out that it was Paul who had given away the game to the English, and he is about to be dishonoured and punished, when his resourceful ladylove steps forward and saves him. "I am free to go," says Miss Best in effect, "and I remember by heart the details of the plans I made. If Captain Paul Zassoulic is punished I will go straight to the War Office and draw for them your secret forts." This reduces the Russians to a stage of great dismay. What is to be done? And then resourceful Colonel Bonzo finds a way. Let her marry Paul at once is his scheme, so that her interests may be Russia's interests, like her husband's. The general hails the plan with delight, and without a moment's warning—this is not the least amazing feature of the act—an organ peals forth, a door open suddenly disclosing an altar with lighted candles, and an aged priest steps forward as the happy bride and bridegroom advance. The genie of Aladdin's lamp could not have worked a greater miracle.

Of the acting, there is little to say. Mr. O. B. Clarence gave some character to the General, but an actress with the gifts of Mrs. Russ Whytal was wasted as Marian Best. Mr. G. S. Titheradge as the Colonel, Mr. Charles Bryant as Paul, and Miss Blyth Latimer as the Princess, all did excellent work among others, but no acting could have made plausible the end.

At a time when most of our serious dramatists seem bankrupt of original ideas, and show a singular inability to escape from the seventh commandment, it is pleasant to meet with a play so fresh in story and treatment as "Diana of Dobson's," by Miss Cicely Hamilton, produced at the Kingsway Theatre last Monday night. Unless we are greatly mistaken, Miss Lena Ashwell has secured a piece which will eclipse even the success of "Irene Wycherley."

The new "romantic comedy in four acts" may almost be described as a play with a purpose, for it vigorously champions the cause of the girls who "live in" at drapery establishments. But this does not prevent Miss Hamilton from telling an original story brightly and wittily. It is the atmosphere, the character drawing that make the piece so wholly delightful. It rings true to life, it is human and real. The dormitory scene, the scene on the Thames Embankment, present before the audience two phases of life with remarkable truth, and yet there is nothing painful about the play; the sombre touches are always lightened by a kindly humour.

As often happens when a dramatist succeeds in creating characters of real flesh and blood, the acting down to the smallest part is of the highest order. In the hands of Miss Nannie Bennett, Miss Christine Silver, and Miss Muriel Vox, the shop girls in the dormitory scene become perfect types of the class. Miss Beryl Mercer gives a perfect little character study as a ragged old hag on the Embankment—a small part, but acted as cleverly as it is drawn. Mr. Norman McKinnel, again, breathes life into the small character of a night policeman. Mr. Dennis Eadie as Sir Jabez Grinlay, the head of an immense drapery business, has a part that in many hands might become farcical. But for all his missed aspirates and slips of grammar, Mr. Eadie shows the shrewdness of the man, makes us realise that this is one who might really have had the courage to rise from an office boy to great riches. Mr. C. M. Hallard has a character which is rather conventional in the Engadine scenes, but he raises it to a high level in the last act; and Miss Gertrude Scott is the match-making aunt to the life. We have left Miss Lena Ashwell to the last, but her acting as Diana is one of her best achievements. The part does not give her many opportunities for displaying her powers as an emotional actress, but the irony and bitterness of the high-spirited young women so long crushed "in the hosiery department," are shown with sure, deft touches.

Other items of theatrical news this week are that Mr. James Welch reopens Terrys with a new play entitled "The Lord of Latimer Street" an adaptation by Mr. O. Maddox Hueffer, of James Wardle's novel.

Mr. Tree has found a success in The Beloved Vagabond. It is a delicious contrivance of sparkling wit and sweet sentiment, and Tree, as the Bohemian Paragot, has a part in which he absolutely revels. It is the temperament of the vagabond Paragot, the airy, flamboyant characteristics of the creature which so intimately fit the methods of Mr. Tree, and so here he is at his very best. For the play itself there is little to be said—Mr. Tree dominates all.

"Estacomentocorpodibaccatestuavelindicentaquarto-spaghetodichesi." To tell the truth, I am not quite sure what that means, but it is the nearest thing I can get as a description of the noise made by one of the Sicilian actors at the Shaftesbury when he is telling his rival that, if he doesn't stop fooling with his donah, he'll put it "well acrorst him;" or, in the more polished phrases of our Western brethren, "hand him a lemon." I do not know one word of Sicilian, but the shortcoming interfered but slightly with my keen enjoyment of the acting of these wonderful players. Here is neither reserved farce nor repressed emotion. Here is acting of the let-her-rip, take-your-breath-away, hurricane style. Acting that tells you, like a flash, what they're after. No delicate impressionists these, with hints and suggestions, but swarthy, brawny, flesh-and-blood mummers, who show you the animal side of human nature, and that most vividly and unreservedly. These people express fiercely the human passions—love, jealousy, hatred, and revenge—and they don't mince matters. When one wants a strong meal served by artistic hands, one should go and see the Sicilians at the Shaftesbury.

Some of your readers may be sorry to hear that Lord Elgin, while engaged last week in the invigorating diversion of tree-felling on his Fifeshire estate, fell and injured one of his legs.

Among the latest victims of influenza are Lord Ripon and that gracious lady, who erstwhile reigned in Government House, Calcutta, the Marchioness of Lansdowne—of whom many of your readers, of course, preserve kindly recollections.

Another of the famous Stracheys has been gathered to the great majority. It was only a couple of months ago his brother Sir John died at the age of 84, now Lieutenant-General Sir Richard Strachey, R.E., F.R.S., expired, as my morning paper informs me, at Hampstead last night. His fame as a military veteran whose service dated back to the old John Company's days of 1836, his brilliant career as an Indian administrator, and his reputation as a scientific worker are perhaps better known over on your side of the world than here. His death removes another link in the chain that binds the India of the present time with the days of good old "Kumpani Bahadoor."

Lord William Nevill, the notorious swindler, whose last "eccentricity" was to exchange bits of coal for pieces of jewellry if you recollect, has just been released from jail, after serving but ten months of his year's sentence.

Miss Florence Nightingale has just been presented with the freedom of the City of London: surely no nobler name has ever been included in this roll of fame.

SHOOTING IN CEYLON—KANTALAI LAKE.

CEYLON is now alas! no longer a big game hunter's paradise as it was up to the middle of the nineteenth century.

Yet much of the island is still clothed with forest, in which are here and there fine sheets of water, set like gems in a green garment. Most, too, of this glorious jungle is a wilderness unbroken by the clearings of cultivation; so that the sportsman and naturalist still find unabated interests in a realm where nature is still supreme.

The lakes of Ceylon are the abiding monuments of a vanished Empire. When one views the mighty embankments, which hold in the waters of these vast reservoirs; walls of stone and earth miles long, and wide enough to carry a roadway between two avenues of trees, we cannot but wonder at the splendid organization which permitted of such stupendous works being carried out. Also we marvel that a race capable of such efforts in the past, should have degenerated so utterly. For who would now dream that the effeminate Singhalese are the descendants of the people who built those wonderful cities, whose ruined temples, walls and colonnades still cover many a square mile.

The Kantalai Lake is a fine example of a great artificial reservoir created for irrigation purposes. The Trincomali Road runs along the great embankment which forms one side of the tank. This bund stretches for a great distance and is of most massive construction; built of stone, and of enormous width at the base, it tapers upward and yet is broad enough at the top to carry the road and a double row of trees.

Running almost at right angles to this main wall is another embankment, now almost hidden among the jungle. This is still called "The Women's Bund," and tradition tells us that it was built entirely by the labour of women. The waters of the lake do not now reach up to the base of the Women's Bund; yet reduced though Kantalai no doubt is, from its original dimensions, it remains yet imposing in extent.

In the dry weather the waters shrink, and so on the opposite side of the lake to the main bund, where the shore lies low, there appears a broad belt of green grass land, following for miles the irregular curves of the coast line. In the early mornings and evenings cheetal and wild hog come out to feed on this grassy plain. The hunter here finds ideal stalking grounds, where he may meet not only with spotted deer and pig, but even with buffalo, panther, or bear. Here too are peafowl: in Ceylon the wariest and wildest of birds; a startling contrast to the semi-domesticated village peacocks of Northern India.

A sluice and water channel carry the overflow from Kantalai Lake into the paddy flats which lie below the bund. In these rice fields the snipe shooting is often good. I find by my notes, that shooting over a certain portion of these flats, locally known as the "Doctor's paddy fields," I got 11½ couple of snipe one day and 16 couple another. Golden plover are not at all uncommon in Ceylon, and I obtained two specimens in the Kantalai rice fields. On the lake itself I saw no duck, indeed I believe that duck are everywhere scarce in Ceylon. There were, however, a good many Cotton-teal (nettopus) among the reedy bays of the far side of the lake. I also saw a few Whistling-teal.

All the Ceylon lakes are infested with crocodiles, the broad nosed variety (crocodilus palustris)—Kantalai holds plenty of these reptiles, and I saw one or two specimens which must have been quite 13 or 14 feet long.

Fruit pigeons are extremely plentiful in the forest around the lake. In order to make good bags of these birds the hunter must mark down some large banyan trees, full of ripe fruit. Having found a tree in which pigeons are in the habit of feeding, one should sit under it armed with an accurately sighted rook rifle. I lost much sport while in Ceylon through being unable to get primers for my ·250 rifle; I was therefore obliged to do all my green pigeon shooting with a gun;—a far less sporting way of bagging these birds seeing that all the shots are sitting ones. In fact, in big tree jungle one never even sees the birds until they alight, and begin climbing about like parrots among the branches. I shot 32 green pigeons one day and 33 another, all of them in a large banyan tree, not far from the Women's Bund. Three varieties were common round Kantalai: Osmotreron bicincta, a very beautifully coloured pigeon, the throat and breast being tinted with mauve and orange. Crocopus chlorigaster, a green pigeon with ash coloured head. Carcophaga sylvatica, a very large handsome pigeon weighing about a pound. The back wings and tail of this variety are metallic green, while the rest of the bird is a pearly grey.

There are a good number of buffaloes round about Kantalai, but though I saw several, I did not come across any bull with a decent head. Horns of deer also run small in Ceylon, comparing very unfavourably with Indian heads. Sambhur are still fairly plentiful in the low country, but owing to their nocturnal habits are much harder to come to terms with than cheetal.

There are a few hares round Kantalai though the country is not very suitable for them. The Ceylon hare is the Black-naped variety (lepus nigricollis), the same animal that inhabits the Neilgherry plateau.

The curious little mouse deer or chevrotain is common in the Ceylon jungles. I weighed an average sized specimen which was brought alive into Trincomali, and it scaled 5lbs., just about the usual weight of a hare.

The Ceylon jungle fowl seems to be common everywhere in the low country. This variety (G. lafayetti) differs from the common Red Indian jungle cock in several points; notably as to the comb, which is yellow centred with a red border, instead of being entirely red; then the Ceylon cock has a black throat, with orange red hackles covering the whole breast. The Indian cock has a red throat, with the red hackles below parting to either side, and showing a black breast. I obtained near Kantalai specimens of the Blue Breasted Quail (excalfactoria chinensis). This is a handsome little bird and appears to affect damp grassy ground at the edge of jungle.

The Kantalai resthouse is on the bund, with a fine view across the wide waters of the lake. To get across to the grassy flats on the opposite side, a boat of some sort is very necessary, the distance round being almost prohibitory.

The lake is full of fish, Olive Carp, mural, gudgeon and fresh water sharks (boalli) being extremely plentiful. One can have excellent fishing quite close to the bungalow.

FLEUR DE LYS.

A MAN-HUNT.

No one could shoot over the hills and plains of Andalusia without longing to do so again, and my shooting trips in the marshes of the Guadalquivir and on the Seirras had been thoroughly successful. Indeed, they could hardly have been otherwise, for a more ideal country for the gun is not to be found in Europe. So I hunted up my guide, Jose, once more.

"What is it to be this time, senor," said Jose, "buck or bustards?"

"I want to try the second Seirra," I said, "is it good?"

"Excellent, senor; we will start at six to-morrow."

I took a double Express and plenty of cartridges, and at six we set out.

A few hours' ride took us to the foot of the second Seirra; and after tethering the horses we started up the rise. Plenty of hares and red-legs were about, but nothing larger, and we soon halted at the corner of a little copse.

"We will take positions here" said Jose. "and you will get a shot within half an hour."

But I waited longer than that. At length something could be heard approaching, and I cocked the rifle noiselessly. Slowly the sound came nearer, and at last a pair of fine roebucks emerged from the thick cover, walking quite unconcernedly.

As I raised the rifle they took the alarm, and were off like the wind.

Bang! missed. Bang! missed. Bang! the bullet sank into the buck's shoulder, and he dropped on his knees. The doe tore off through the scrub.

Jose ran forward, drew a hunting-knife, and quickly despatched the buck.

"Help me get him behind the rocks, senor," said he, "you may get another shot if we are quick. Madre de Dios! What a pity you missed the doe!"

"You are a splendid woodsman, Jose," I said, "how did you know he would pass by here?"

"I ought to know, senor," said Jose, "for I have hunted on the Seirras and over the marshes since I was a boy. But get into position again; you may expect something more soon."

I dropped behind a fallen log and waited patiently.

By-and-by a loud crashing sounded in the adjacent wood, and a moment later another buck appeared, tearing along like a bullet, and apparently wild with terror.

"Don't shoot!" exclaimed Jose, as I shouldered the rifle, "Wait!"

He had hardly finished speaking, when a pair of wolves dashed from the undergrowth, evidently on the buck.

Bang! over went the nearest, and the other, on hearing the shot, dived back into the thicket.

The one I had hit lay on the ground with a broken thigh, snarling viciously, and positively foaming with fury.

Jose drew his knife again and fixing it, bayonet-wise, into the muzzle of his rifle, drove it through the wolf's body behind the shoulder. The brute expired at once.

"You won't get anything more here now," said Jose, "so I will bring up the pack-horse and strap the wolf and buck on his back."

He disappeared down the gorge, and I strolled up the rise. After a little I caught sight of a man's figure moving behind a boulder about two hundred yards away. I walked towards the spot.

"Another shooter," I thought; "I will go and see what luck he has had."

As I approached the rock the man rose. He was dressed in the usual peasant's costume, and held a long muzzle-loading rifle as if he were prepared to use it.

"Buenosdias," I said.

"Buena noche, senor. Turn out your pockets!" (he spoke, of course, in the local dialect).

"Que!"

"Turn out your pockets," he said impatiently, "make haste," and he fingered his rifle.

What was I to do? I had left my rifle in the copse. Nothing for it but to comply evidently, unless—

"Hola, amigo! What do you want?" said a well-known voice, and looking round I saw Jose, who had just emerged from the brink of the gorge, his rifle levelled at the stranger's head.

"Turn round," said Jose.

The man did so.

"Now walk ahead, and don't turn till you are over the hill."

This order was obeyed with alacrity.

"Why did you let him go?" I said. "We ought to have taken him to the captain of the guards."

"He would have given us no end of trouble, senor," said Jose, "and if you had had him punished, he would never have rested until he had revenged himself upon you."

"Well, I suppose you know more about it than I do," I rejoined.

"You should not have left your rifle behind, senor," said the guide, "but still, he would not have let you use it."

We fastened the buck and the wolf to the pack-horse and started for home.

"We may as well give information about this affair," said Jose, "it is time that fellow was caught."

"Seems to me we had better have kept him when we had him," I rejoined.

However, we went to the captain of the Civil Guards, and explained the matter. He overwhelmed me with courtesies, and despatched an officer and four of his riflemen to the scene, and requested Jose and myself, as a personal favour, to take them to the exact spot.

We arrived at midnight, and resigned ourselves to wait patiently for dawn.

As soon as the first streak of light appeared we started and took the direction which Jose pointed out. After two hours' tramp we halted.

"You will find him in that copse, I think," said Jose.

We searched the copse, but without result.

Suddenly my friend of the day before popped up from behind a boulder, and on seeing us, fired a shot in our direction, which took no effect, and started running like a greyhound.

"Halt!" shouted our officer with the effect of making him run faster.

Bang! Bang! the hunted man sprang up, and fell on his face.

We ran up and found him stone dead.

"Caramba!" said the guard pityingly. "Why did he not stop! He knew we should have to shoot him if he tried to run."

I was lost in astonishment.

"Why did you shoot him," I exclaimed.

"We have standing orders, senor, to shoot down any brigand or murderer who tries to escape on being challenged."

"Did you know who he was."

"Yes, senor, he is the man who killed Manuel in a quarrel, about three weeks ago, and as usual he took to the hills, and has shot one man and robbed two more since he started."

We examined the man. He had a handsome face, but scarred with wounds and pinched by starvation.

We carried him to the foot of the Seirra, fastened him to a horse, and made our way back to the village. And thus ended the only man-hunt in which I have taken part. I am not eager for another.

NOTICE OF WITHDRAWAL.

THE offer of "The Historians' History of the World" at the present prices will be withdrawn on 28th March. These prices are the lowest at which "The Times" will ever sell the work in India, and

A higher schedule will go into effect as soon as the present offer has been withdrawn.

"The Times" now estimates that the probable total sale in this country will run to 4,000 and possibly as many as 5,000 copies. Although the work is new to the public, the enthusiastic response to our offer has made it possible to estimate the probable demand, and to make plans for the future accordingly.

The earliest subscribers—as many as shall register their orders before 28th March—will be allowed a concession in the price. The Times" plan of sale is based on the conviction that the first price of a new book should be its lowest and not its highest price, that a high price restricts the demand, and that a low price and small profits is better than a high price and large profits—better for the subscriber, better for the author, and better, in the end, for the publisher. This is not the view of the Publishers' Association, whose members almost invariably bring out a book at the highest price they think it will stand, distributing a few copies—one or two thousand—to libraries and individuals who do not care how much they have to pay, and then depreciating the value of these copies by issuing a new edition at a greatly reduced price. "The Times" has reversed what it believes to be an antiquated and unbusiness-like method of publication, and has issued "The Historians' History"—a first-class book in every respect—at prices which have brought it, at the outset, within reach of the widest public. "A MIRACLE OF CHEAPNESS," was the spontaneous opinion of two reviewers, one writing in London, the other in Dublin.

The object of these announcement that have appeared in the Indian newspapers from day to day is not to "boom" the book, for every claim made by us in regard to the work has been re-asserted, in more emphatic language, by the reviewers at Home. Our object is rather to give publicity to the fact that by the application of modern ideas to the publishing of books, they can be, as we believe they should be, issued more cheaply and in larger editions, and thereby brought within the purchasing power of educated persons whose outlay on books must be kept within limits.

Any person who without prejudice examines a volume of "The Historians' History" will, we believe, admit that it is, in truth, a very good book at a very low price, and if he compares it with a volume issued by publishers at Home, he will find that it contains more than four times as much reading matter as the average 7*s.* 6*d.* book, three or four times as much paper, and is just as well printed and bound—yet "The Times" price per volume is the same.

ORDERS SHOULD BE REGISTERED WITHOUT DELAY.

To prove its contention that good books can be widely and quickly distributed if the price is low, "The Times" wishes to secure as many orders as possible, before advancing the price. More than 1,100 subscribers in India have already registered their names, while the sale of the work at Home has been equally gratifying.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

A BEAUTIFUL spring day last Saturday welcomed a goodly company, which kept the turnstiles of the further enclosure merrily clicking up to two o'clock. The club department was occupied by many a familiar face and figure to whom racing over sticks appeals as powerfully as Sandown as the more legitimate game, and keeps the badge bright all the year round. The going was in excellent order, and fields panning out well, kept the ball merrily rolling from start to finish, though only in one instance did the talent score off their own bat, and the wretched luck that spoils a successful week prevailed on Saturday. Details of the more important races are appended:—

Foo was in evidence at Castle Irwell, on the 10th instant, the bottom bend being obscured, but the course was in really capital order, and fair fields sustained interest in a somewhat moderate afternoon's racing, which included no startling incidents. Falls were not frequent, and fortunately no casualties were serious. Details:—

On Tuesday the wind getting up after sundown moved the fog and paved the way for a bright day overhead, but just a remnant of the mist was condensed up against the far bank, but the view of the racing was much clearer, to general satisfaction. Thanks to the careful "making" of the course with the best grass seed, the going was really excellent, while the fine open weather conduced to another good attendance, the farther enclosure being as well filled as on Monday, which is essentially a Lancashire operatives' day. Some details:—

RUGBY RULES.

ENGLAND vs. IRELAND.—Played at Twickenham on Saturday, 8th instant, England winning by 13 points to 3.

There is no necessity to enter into any lengthy details of the play, and it will be sufficient to outline the general run of the game. For the first quarter of an hour, while their forwards were fresh, Ireland had much the best of it, the play being confined to the English half, and more than once dangerously near their goal-line. The Irish three-quarters could do nothing right, either knocking on or failing to take their passes. They had two or three good chances, and England escaped more through the mistakes of their opponents than their own defence. During that early period Ireland, with ordinarily accurate back play, might easily have gained a couple of tries, but they allowed their opportunity to slip by. Gradually and somewhat slowly the English front rank pulled themselves together and became something like a cohesive pack. Ireland's early forward supremacy disappeared, and the attack passed into the hands of England. Lapage tried a drop at goal, and Vassall following up the kick went over, but was off-side. The game was right on the Irish line, and Williamson, feinting to pass out, dodged over, gaining England's first try. Afterwards Lapage, lost two tries through lack of the necessary speed, but the Englishmen more than held their own, and led at the interval by 3 points. In the second half England had most of the play. Their forwards had now gained the upper hand, and the Irishmen for the most part were on the defensive. The English attack, however, was not too well conducted, the somewhat slow back movements being repeatedly checked by the quick Irish backs. At length Williamson made a good opening, Birkett and Vassall carried on the movement, and Hudson finished it in brilliant style. Wood kicked a capital goal, and England with less than twenty minutes left, were 8 points to the good. Shortly afterwards the Irish three-quarters brought off their best bout of passing. Thompson, on the left, managed to elude Hudson, and nearly dodged past Wood. Happily for England, Wood managed to throw Thompson out of his stride, thus saving the situation, but the game was carried well into the English twenty-five. A little later England were penalised, and Parke, with a capital effort, kicked a goal. This score, which came some five or six minutes from the finish, naturally infused fresh interest into the game, but Ireland were never again dangerous. The final stages of the match were fought out in the Irish half, and Vassall cleared the way for Hudson in a masterly manner. Vassall's pass came rather awkwardly to Hudson, and the Gloucestershire man half-stumbled. Recovering himself, he raced right behind, and Wood kicked another goal. A minute or so later the match came to a close.

The record now stands: England, 20 wins; Ireland, 11; and one drawn game.

The following were the teams:

ENGLAND: A. E. Wood (Gloucestershire), back; A. Hudson (Gloucester), H. H. Vassall (Oxford University and Somerset), J. G. G. Birkett (Surrey), and Lieut. W. N. HOCKEY.

SCOTLAND, 2; WALES, 1.—This, the sixth international match between these countries, was played at Pollok Park, Glasgow, on Saturday, the 8th instant, before a good attendance. The exchanges in the opening period were fairly even, though, at times, the pressure on the Welsh defence was very severe—especially during the first ten minutes of the game. After this, however, the smaller State appeared to better advantage, and almost opened the score through a corner-kick. Though both goals were attacked in turn with some determination, honours were even at the interval, with no score on either side.

After crossing over the Scotsmen became very aggressive, but the honour of "first blood" fell to Wales, C. N. Jones bringing about the disaster to Scotland with a long and clean drive, and the defenders being few Williams scored a beautiful goal. Some ten minutes later Harper Orr, out of a scrummage, equalised for Scotland. However, two minutes had barely elapsed ere the Scots were back again, and McKenzie placed them ahead in shrewd manner. Excitement was maintained, for soon afterwards Harley had the ball through the uprights of the Principality, but the point was disallowed for off-side. Up to the close the Scots remained in the ascendant, though on one or two occasions, the Welsh [illegible] caused their opponents an anxious time. It was an excellent game throughout, and worthy of its importance. Scotland's victory by 2 goals to 1 was greatly contributed to by the fine display of Captain Foulkes, McKenzie, Harley, and Harper Orr, while for Wales Davies in goal was splendid, and both Fosbery and C. N. Jones, with the assistance of Whitehouse and Shepherd, put up a fine defence, whilst Bone, Williams, and Turnbull were the pick of the forwards.

BOXING.

BURNS vs. PALMER FOR £1,000.

The eyes of the sporting world were turned last Tuesday night on Wonderland, and Wonderland itself, realising that the fate of the chosen pugilists of the Old and the New Worlds was being settled within its famous roped square, had decked itself in a manner befitting the occasion. But the big crowd was doomed to bitter disappointment.

The result can create no surprise to the closer students of the fistic art. Those who saw Tommy Burns bowl out Gunner Moir after holding the admitted best man in England at bay round after round, had very little hope for Palmer, and the surmise proved correct indeed. The Canadian himself was at Wonderland, as he was at the National Sporting Club, the acme of power, the master of ring-craft; and knowing his own powers, he was the emblem of confidence.

To say the least of it, the contest, so far as Palmer was concerned, was ill-advised. He had seen his best fighting day many years ago, long before he even fought the battle with Gunner Moir which had so disastrous an ending for him. Candidly speaking, the display on the part of the Englishman was miserable in the extreme; it would not have done credit even to a novice at the game, far less a man who at one period of his career claimed championship rank. Without further preamble I give your readers a synopsis of the four rounds which was all they went.

1st Round.—In response to the signal both men came jauntily forward, and reaching the centre of the ring struck a business-like attitude. Burns, who possessed plenty of confidence, adopted a wide guard, and by dropping his chin well into the neck, the pull in height possessed by Palmer appeared to be largely augmented. The Novocastrian, who shaped in the more orthodox style, was extremely cautious in the preliminary moves. He eventually assumed a slight crouching attitude, but declined to be drawn by two quick feints. At length the Canadian made play by swinging the left at Jack's chest. Palmer broke ground, and foiled a couple of rapid drives from his rival's left. A right swing brought Jack forward, and directly afterwards he was pulled on to his knees, from which he steadily resumed. Burns, having taken the measure of his man, was content to ply a few light lefts, but could find no vulnerable point in his rival's defence. Adopting different methods, the champion stepped back, and succeeded in landing a straight left, following this with a short arm upper-cut, which brought his opponent at full length on the floor. Palmer looked distressed on rising, and affecting a very dogged defence, he frustrated the Canadian's efforts until the gong.

2nd Round.—Acting on his seconds' advice, Burns adopted forcing tactics, but the North Countryman was wary, and some clinches ensued. Answering to a demand to break away, they went on steadily. The Canadian sent home a sharp left clip on the cheek, which again brought them to close quarters. While so engaged Burns got the right home on the ribs, and again the Novocastrian dropped to the boards. He remained down waiting the count, and rose after 8secs. elapsed. On rising Palmer struck a huddled-up defence, but failed to avoid a swing for the body, which reached its intended destination. Visiting the face directly afterwards, Burns then side-stepped adroitly, although the intention to land a swinging left-hander on the head was unsuccessful. Palmer now weaved in with a wild swinging right which passed over his antagonist's head. He, however, was powerless to stem the tide, and until the rest he was leniently dealt with.

3rd Round.—Palmer led, and fell short, but escaped a return. These tactics were repeated, but this time the Canadian countered on the chin, which brought about a clinch. Burns directed his attention to the ribs, but neither visit contained much force, being spoilt by the North Countryman's ungainly but strong defence. The work was, at this stage, indifferent until the Canadian sent across a sharp right, which brought about a clinch. Pushing his man away, the champion sent the left straight on the nose, and brought the ruby. Towards the close of the meeting Burns kept punching away, and twice had his man down. It was quite plain Palmer could not withstand his rival's well directed blows, but he somewhat craftily swung the right on the side of the head without making much impression on Burns, who continued to rush his man, and administer innumerable blows.

Burns' next customer will be Roche.

SHOOTING.

THE MONTE CARLO SEASON.

GRAND POULE D'ESSAI—Of 100frs. each, with 3,000frs. added to a gold medal for the winner; second receives 500frs. and 25 per cent. of the entries; third 300frs. and 20 per cent.; fourth 200frs. and 15 per cent., the balance to the winner; one bird at 26½ metres; ties at 27½ metres.

Great interest was taken in the final shooting for the Poule d'Essai. The weather was fine, and the birds were of the same excellent quality as yesterday, but there was less wind. Rocke and Vaccari were the first to miss in the initial round, and in the following Laughendeouck, Prince Caraman Chimay, and Roberts retired. Thes Sendona, De Woot, Penna, and Beresford missed their seventh birds, while F. Thelusson failed to kill the eighth, leaving in seven shooters, who agreed each to take 1,000frs. Paccard broke down at his ninth bird, and Luterdonato at the tenth, leaving five in, all of whom shot at the eleventh bird.

De Lesse missed the twelfth, and, only four being left in, ties were shot off. Angulo and Fraser missed, dividing third and fourth money, and Count Czernin and Harrison agreed to divide the 8,502frs. remaining after Angulo and Fraser had taken the 4,578frs. and Luterdonato, De Lesse, and Paccard the stipulated 1,000frs. Angulo and Fraser missed the thirteenth bird, but Czernin and Harrison killed the thirteenth and fourteenth.

In the latter round Harrison, who had been shooting well, killed a bird on the trap, and, no bird being called, he was compelled to shoot again. Killing, however, he won the gold medal. Harrison used a Boss gun. He is shooting well, and had very difficult birds to deal with.

GRAND PRIX DU CASINO—Of 200frs. each, with 20,000frs. added to a work of art; second 4,000frs. and 25 per cent. of the entries, third 2,000frs. and 20 per cent., fourth 1,000frs. and 15 per cent.; the balance to go to the winner; twelve birds, three at 26½ metres and nine at 27 metres; three misses allowed.

The weather continued fine, and good birds were again provided on the concluding day. Hopes were entertained that the English shooters would distinguish themselves to the end, but these hopes were not realised. Among those who missed in the sixth round were Robinson, H. Fraser, and Brinckman, while the seventh round proved fatal to Beresford, who missed twice in succession, and when the round was completed only fifteen shooters could boast of a clean score.

Mackintosh, Erskine, Hercy, and Drury, representing the English-speaking competitors, then held their ground, but Erskine had bad luck in failing to score the eighth bird, which fell dead outside the boundary. Mackintosh, Hercy, and Drury killed their ninth birds in good style, but Hercy missed his tenth, and then Mackintosh and Drury, after killing the tenth, missed the eleventh, leaving Count Czernin (Austria) to dispute the issue with Henriet (France) and Grassini (Italy), who, killing 12 out of 12, tied for money and prize.

The three agreed to take 12,000frs. each out of the first, second, and third money, and abandon the balance with the work of art. Count Czernin, in fine form and shooting very well, killed his thirteenth bird, along with his two opponents, but Grassini broke down over the fourteenth, and then Henriet, reputed to be one of the finest game shot in Lorraine, but shooting at Monte Carlo for the first time, failed to kill the fifteenth bird. Count Czernin, the winner, received a most flattering ovation. Fourth honours, for which Kirkland, Mackintosh, Baron Tavernost, Baron Bianchi, Robinson, Cacciari, Guimet, Drury, Visalli, Ouchan, and Sacchi (killing 11 out of 12), tied, were finally divided between Robinson, Cacciari, and Visalli, who killed 15 out of 16.

Count Czernin had followed the example set him by Count Casimir Zichy in 1894 and Count Trauttmansdorff in 1892, in winning for Austria. His score was 15 out of 15, that of Henriet 14 out of 15, and Grassini 13 out of 15. English shooters had indifferent luck, for though the birds were good, more than one fell dead outside the barrier, but the first and second won on their merits, and proved themselves the finest shooters.

Final.

2nd Sappers and Miners vs. Mounted Infantry.—The tournament was concluded on the 27th February when a large crowd witnessed the game between the above teams. It was evenly contested throughout: the first five chukkers being devoid of score, but in the last period the Sappers obtained two goals and ran out winners of the cup for the third time. Mrs. S. M. Fraser presented the cup to the winners.

First Chukker.—Even play; each team was awarded a free hit for a foul but nothing came of it.

Second Chukker.—The Mounted Infantry were busy defending. They put in some good runs before the close however, but missed opportunities of scoring.

Third Chukker.—The M. I. attacked and again lost chances through poor shooting. Still no score.

Fourth Chukker.—Both goals were visited in turn but no score was registered.

Fifth Chukker.—Fast up and down play without definite result.

Sixth Chukker.—After an unsuccessful free hit for a foul against the M. I. the ball was secured by White, who notched the first goal, Irvine scoring a second shortly after. The M. I. did not respond and were defeated as stated. Teams as before.

Umpires:—Major Stephen and Mr. Astley.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

Ballygunge vs. Mr. B. E. G Eddis' XI.—As will be seen from the names given below, Mr. Eddis had out quite a strong eleven for the match at Ballygunge on Sunday last, and the home team did very well to win by the large margin of eight wickets, the visitors' total of 299 being passed with only two wickets down. Thomas and Curtis-Hayward started well by putting up 39 for the first wicket, but at that total the latter was bowled by Yeoman, and Thomas, who had played quite good cricket, soon followed. Lee and Scott did not do much, the former being caught and bowled by Yeoman, and the latter magnificiently caught at cover point by Guise off the same bowler. Manders knocked up 34 very quickly before being bowled by Gould, and Walford, who followed, suffered a like fate first ball. With 6 down for 108, the prospects of a large score were not brilliant, but Ross and Eddis put quite a different complexion on the game, and were not parted until they had added 90 for the seventh wicket. At this total, Ross was bowled for a very useful 36, and Eddis did not long survive him, being badly run out directly afterwards for a free 67, not one of his best efforts, but still quite a good innings. C. M. Curtis-Hayward, Pickford and Mason did nothing, and the innings closed for 200; Yeoman bowled very well indeed and had 6 wickets for 57 runs. Ballygunge made none too good a start, losing Guise when that batsman had made only 18, and the total was 37, but Horncastle and Low made a long stand, and added exactly 100 runs before they were parted. Horncastle was the first to leave for a very useful 59 compiled with but one mistake; Watson, who followed, stayed with Low until the runs had been knocked off and the match was won. With 204 on the board, Low was bowled for a steady 66; after his departure, the game was only prolonged for a short time, and with 216 up for 3 wickets, it was discontinued, Watson being not out 28 and Coulthard not out 4.

The Story Teller.

THE HORRIFIED BRIDE.

TERENCE DESMOND was a capital fellow, but I never knew any man so ridiculously nervous on the subject of his approaching marriage. Perhaps, being an Irishman, a little excitability was natural, but it was hardly in accordance with the chivalrous courage of his race to permit his sensitiveness to master him as completely as it certainly did when the time drew near which required him to lay his bachelorhood at the feet of Marjorie Maxwell, a charming and lovely girl, to win a smile from whom most men would have dashed through fire and water, to say nothing of a marriage ceremony. Probably old Terence would have done so too, but the fact is incontestable that he anticipated the ordeal of the wedding-day and its inevitable formalities with an amount of apprehension which bid fair to unnerve him.

I saw him off at Kingstown en route for London, where the knot was to be tied. On the deck of the steamer I gave him a few parting words of advice and encouragement, such as an experienced bachelor always has on hand for these occasions, and booked a promise that he would write me a full and true account of his "adventures" so soon as he found leisure to do so. A fortnight later, therefore, I was much interested to find a letter from Terence upon my breakfast table, directed from an unheard-of little place in Normandy, whither doubtless he and his charming companion had sought escape from the novelty of their sensations. Terence's epistle, which, as I quite anticipated, was of an extraordinary character, ran as follows:

Dear Harry,—First and foremost I am lawfully married. Bald as the statement may appear to you, I wish to be very definite upon that point, it being fraught with momentous significance to myself and Marjorie. In the first place it is the epitome of a most anxious and trying time, which, as you are aware, ever since Marjorie inspired me with thoughts matrimonial, I had anticipated with ever-increasing nervousness and apprehension; and in the second place, it has recently become our protection from the slings and arrows of a cold and callous world.

Oh, if Marjorie and I could only have been married without knowing it, and turned loose upon society armed, like twin Minervas, with that stoicism of language and bearing which is the peculiar attribute of riper married years! Why, in the name of goodness, I say, should both sides of the gate-way to the married state be hampered by the weeds and brambles of ridicule and sarcasm? And why should the inexperience of those who seek and gain admission be invariably hailed as sport for a Roman holiday? I have never failed to notice, too, that the demeanour of those who have themselves passed the ordeal of a wedding and honeymoon, instead of exhibiting tokens of sympathy for the neophytes, usually acts as the chief agent in inflicting upon them a sense of their position, a fact probably due to a feeling similar to that which prompts the schoolboy to bully the new comer on the principle of 'my turn now,' and to a sense of derision which possesses the [illegible] the very newest 'pair of fools.'

Well, I went th[illegible]ony with as much brass as I could muster, a[illegible]k as though I didn't resent the prehistoric witti[illegible]malities of a large gathering of friends and [illegible] had assembled to amuse themselves at our ex[illegible]ther, at mine, for I firmly believe Marjorie thou[illegible]yed being made a fool of. But worse was to co[illegible]

I had deferred t[illegible]es of my mother-in-law, who had been hysterically set upon an elaborate ceremony, instead of a quick, quiet business in some secluded spot, as I had suggested. But there my power of concession ended. I resolutely refused to be labelled wherever we went as a couple of novices on our first trip. And in spite of the disgust of my wife's mother, I was able to flatter myself there was very little to betray the recent event about our very ordinary travelling gear and the hansom in which we departed for Charing Cross, en route for Folkestone and the Continent.

A few veteran trunks, labelled with the trophies of many a previous journey, went down under the care of Mickey Macree, whom, as you remember, I brought over to valet me, and who had sworn by all the saints to defend my 'saycret with his life.' I had carefully instructed him that on no account was he to betray the fact of our recent nuptials, and upon his native wit and cunning I set much store. But who ever heard yet of a newly-married couple getting off without detection? There are worse things, too, than ridicule in this world, and I have told Marjorie that next time I'll wear orange blossoms and trail old shoes behind the carriage.

But I hasten to the final catastrophe, the calamitous defeat of all my plans. I had even gone so far as to risk a little discontent on the part of Marjorie herself, for she strangely failed to appreciate, as I hoped, the nonchalant demeanour I adopted towards her in public. Then, too, she'd got a way of looking as if she wanted to eat me, which would have quite given the show away, so I warned her off that. I had, also, to be constantly on the watch against subjects of conversation before others suggestive of the freshness of our present relations, and to appear as if we could both very well dispense with one another's society occasionally.

On the other hand Marjorie vowed she didn't care whether anyone knew we were honeymoon people or not, and thought it unkind of me to mind so very much. In fact, like most girls, I believe she would have preferred carte blanche to parade the captive of her bow and spear, and deemed herself deprived of the greatest triumph of a woman's lifetime.

Well, you know, we weren't to leave for Paris for a week, but on the second morning of our stay at Folkestone I noticed to my intense annoyance and disgust that we were unmistakably the objects of a peculiar kind of curiosity on the part of our fellow visitors at the hotel. It was observable as early as breakfast, and continued throughout the day whenever chance or meals brought us into touch with other members of the establishment. On the part of the male guests it manifested itself in somewhat obtrusively glances, and in other a stony inspection by the ladies or a transparent attempt at unconsciousness of our presence when Marjorie and I were near. One opportunity for commonplace civility on my part towards the wife of a reverend cleric of the party was received with so much hauteur that I immediately regretted the attempt, and longed to ask the old harridan if she disapproved of the state of matrimony altogether, or took us for a couple of hotel thieves. Anyhow, it was an exasperating addition to the petty annoyances of a honeymoon which I had not reckoned on, for, I thought, however much one might be laughed and jeered at, it seemed hard luck indeed if one was to be sent to Coventry for it, as now seemed extremely probable.

It is not very nice, darling, but I suppose all newly-married people have to go through this sort of thing," said poor, innocent Marjorie, who, of course, couldn't go back on her previous statements about not caring how many knew the truth. But I don't think she felt comfortable for all that.

"What puzzles me is how could they have found us out after the way we have behaved ourselves?" I pondered. There was a long pause.

"Do you think it was Mickey?" suggested Marjorie at length. I started.

"By all the powers!" I exclaimed, "you've said it. It's that scoundrel has given us away. We'll have him up this minute," and I rang the bell and ordered the waiter to send my servant immediately.

"Do be calm, Terence," entreated Marjorie, as Mickey appeared outside the door.

"Come in here, you thundering traitor, till I see you," I said, mastering my feelings with a supreme effort. "So it's you have been betraying your master and mistress after swearing by all the saints in heaven to conceal that we were just now married. Confess at once."

"Saints in hevin, sur," exclaimed Mickey, throwing up his hands in horror, "I nivver bethrayed your honour or your honour's lady."

"Mickey Macree," I said, "How can you stand there before heaven and say so? Haven't we been watched wherever we go since we came here like a couple of hotel cheats, and can't I see it's because your false tongue has told them all we were married just two days ago? You know it, I say."

"Shure it's not thrue, sur," cried Mickey, wringing his hands in distress. "If I die where I stand, Mickey Macree has been faithful to your honour. Didn't they ax me now whin your honour and my lady come here, 'Is it just married they are?' An didn't I up and say wid my own mouth, 'Shure they're not married at all, at all?'"

Oh dear. Poor Marjorie, shall I ever forget her bitter distress as she sank back on the sofa and covered her scarlet face with her hands while she sobbed out, "Oh! Oh!! Oh!!!" in a sort of agonised crescendo, which cut me to the heart as I thought how I'd been responsible for the terrible position in which we were placed. In one short moment I saw how futile are the efforts of puny man to strive with the ordinances and dispensations of custom and habit with the moral force of centuries at their back. I determined to give in, to become a weak, yielding mortal. So to make a start I kicked Mickey out of the room with a wild, vacuous look in his face, and ordered him to get us a respectable married character without another moment's delay, whilst I went out and took tickets for the boat crossing to Boulogne the very next day.

Now, old man, you know exactly all that has befallen me since we parted. At present both Marjorie and I feel that a terrible weight has been lifted from us, for all concealment on our part is at an end. We shall leave this place in a fortnight for Paris, and Mickey, with whom it has become a religion, never fails to impart at each stage of our journey, "Poor young things. Shure, it's only just merried they are."—London Opinion.

The warlike ancient Briton and the peaceful policeman have at least one extraordinary thing in common. The former clothed his nakedness with the blue juice of the woad plant, and the latter proudly parades himself in a uniform of woaded cloth.

"Then Mr. Rexley didn't really give according to his means?" said the minister's wife.

"No," replied the minister, "merely according to his meanness."

(b) The second player would not have lost anything by taking the Queen with Bishop.

(c) This error is the first of a series, which result in leaving the first player with a hopeless inferiority. The Knight might have been advanced to Q B 4, and afterwards established at Q B 5, by means of P to Q Kt. 4, for the adverse Bishop could not be played to K 2 on account of P to K B5, 17 P to K R 3 is also good play.

Solution to Problem No. 54.

A infers from Z's lead that B holds the ace of trumps, but he can only count on making two more tricks in his own hand. To save the game, therefore, he must play for a second trick in clubs, and should give his partner credit for the queen. Now if he leads a small one Z will probably suspect that dummy is being underplayed, and put on the king; but if he leads the 10 it is far more likely to be covered with the knave. A's best lead, therefore, is the 10 of clubs. This makes certain of forcing one of Y's honors if B holds the queen, and even if he does not, it is quite possible that he will be able to ruff the suit on the third round.

Problem No. 55.

Score: A B, 21; Y Z, 9. Z deals and declares hearts. Y's (dummy's) and A's (original leader's) hands are as follows:

Y's hand (Dummy): Hearts, 4, 3, 2; diamonds, A, K, 5 clubs, 8, 7, 6; shades, Q, 8, 7.

A's hand (leader): Hearts, 7, 6, 5; diamonds, Q. 10, 2; clubs K, 4; spades, A, J, 6, 5, 3.

THE PASSING OF PERSIMMON.

RACING men in all parts of the world, and those interested in horse breeding in particular, will regret the death of King Edward's famous race-horse, Persimmon, for not only was he one of the greatest equine giants of recent times, but he also bade fair to establish as great a name for himself at the stud as did his illustrous sire St. Simon. Last December Persimmon sustained a fractured pelvis as the result of a fall. He was put in slings, and it was hoped that he would pull through, but all the resources of veterinary skill proved unavailing, and his death occurred at the latter end of last month.

Persimmon, whose name was derived from "de ole 'simmon tree" of nigger minstrely, was bred by King Edward, and his dam, Perdita II., also gave His Majesty Florizel II. and Diamond Jubilee, all by St. Simon, three brothers whose deeds on the Turf will live long in the memory of sportsmen. Diamond Jubilee was purchased in December last for 30,000 guineas by Senor Ignatio Correas for the Argentine.

At two years of age Persimmon won the Coventry Stakes at Ascot and Richmond Stakes at Goodwood, but in the Middle Park Plate was beaten by both Lord Rothschild's St. Frusquin and Omladina, his unexpected defeat being attributed to the fact that he had not recovered from a recent illness. This ended his juvenile racing career. It was unfortunately found impossible to bring Persimmon to the post in proper trim for the first of the classic races, the Two Thousand Guineas, and it was therefore decided to give him a special preparation for the Derby. The Blue Riband of 1896 was of more than ordinary interest, and it was hoped that the Duke of Westminster's Regret would be found opposing St. Frusquin and Persimmon, though this was not possible, owing to the backwardness of the Kingsclere horses and the hardness of the ground with which trainers had to contend. The field for the Epsom classic, however, included in addition to the two colts mentioned, such celebrities as Earwig, Teufel, Bay Ronald, Bradwardine, and Knight of the Thistle. St. Frusquin firmly held the position of favourite, and 13 to 8 was his flagfall quotation. On the contrary, Persimmon was "easy" at the close, and 5 to 1 could be obtained about his chance. About a quarter of a mile from home the race resolved itself into a match between St. Frusquin and Persimmon, and, almost needless to say, the battle between the pair was watched amidst the keenest excitement. Watts succeeded in getting his mount home by a neck, and although T. Loates, on St. Frusquin, broke a stirrup-leather in the last stride, he did not consider that the mishap affected the result. The honours of the day were fairly Persimmon's. For many minutes following the decision of the race there was a scene of enthusiasm on the famous Epsom Downs the like of which has probably never been seen before on any racecourse. Peer and coster alike vied with each other to congratulate the horse's royal owner and the climax of the ovation was reached when His Majesty, then the Prince of Wales, walked into the centre of the square formed outside the saddling paddock and led Persimmon to the door of the weighing room. It was a scene never to be forgotten, and instead of the excitement "simmering down" as other events were decided, it constantly bubbled over until the end of the afternoon.

St. Frusquin was destined to have his revenge a month later, for in the rich Prince of Wales' Stakes, at Newmarket, with 3lb. advantage in the weights he beat Persimmon by half a length, but the royal colt wound up the season with easy victories in the St. Leger and Jockey Club Stakes.

As a four-year-old Persimmon underwent a special training for the Ascot Gold Cup, and put the seal on his fame by an eight lengths' victory. He next won the valuable Eclipse Stakes, and was then retired to the stud, having won £34,706 in stakes during his active career on the Turf.

As a sire Persimmon proved an immediate success, amongst the first of his stock being the famous mare, Sceptre, who, by winning four out of the five classic races, to wit: the One and Two Thousand Guineas, the Oaks, and St. Leger, accomplished a record of its kind that has never been equalled.

Persimmon's only other classic winner has been Lord Derby's Keystone II. who won the Oaks two years ago, but with such three-year-olds as Royal Realm, Rushcutter, Your Majesty, Mountain Apple, and Perrier (the King's colt) to represent him this year in the Derby, the prospects are bright that he may yet gain further posthumous honours as the sire of a Blue Riband hero.

The best of Persimmon's produce among the "sterner sex" has been Lord Howard de Walden's Zinfandel, who followed in his sire's footsteps by appropriating the Ascot Gold Cup. Other good horses are Mead, Cheers (Eclipse Stakes), Plum Centre, Colonia, Pomegranite, Gourd (Derby Gold Cup), Royal Dream (Goodwood Stakes), Plum Tree, Fugleman, and Pearl of the Loch. Altogether, up to the present, Persimmon's stock have won nearly an eighth of a million in stakes. His place at the stud will now be taken by Florizel II.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The extra meetings this year are coming to an end on Saturday after all. The ninth extra furnished quite a pleasant afternoon's sport for the perspiring crowd who witnessed it, for the weather though cool for the time of year was calculated to drive the energetic in search of liquid refreshment at no infrequent intervals.

The first event was the Pony Consolation Plate. Kathleen II. looked to be exceedingly well let in this when it was discovered at the last moment that she was ineligible to start as she had not run before this season, and only four were left to compete. Of these, Lady Vera was made a very hot favourite though they say that the stable did not fancy her much and their judgment was proved correct by the pony running nowhere in the race and finishing a bad third. Primrose, who was pretty well backed, went away at the distance and won comfortably from Thelma. This latter pony, who is a youngster with good possibilities, has been bought by Mr. Galstaun and will race in his colours on Saturday in the Amateur Race.

The chargers' race was to some extent deprived of interest by the absence of Craigendarrie and Prince Moorfield, both of whom have gone wrong, and this left the event an absolute cert for Dalgai, a fair horse who was originally one of Timol's string. Mr. Evers had the best mount placed at his disposal and had no difficulty in winning from Lily, that gallant grey Jorrocks being third.

Tana, who had proved such a disappointment the week before, was most backed for the Sprinter Consolation, but though she ran well this time, Jack Sheppard was in racing mood for a change and beat the favourite easily by two and a half lengths. They came with a rush for old Bundah just before the betting closed, but though he seemed to be coming through at one time he could not pace it out with them to the end.

The Farewell Plate I was a good thing for Windy, who is in fine form and had no difficulty in defeating the favourite Morette by two lengths. Sir Roland had bad luck in missing his place, Pendred just coming up and beating him at the last moment.

For the Farewell Plate II the favourites were the two small animals, Runaway Girl and Lasso, while Galley Slave was also well backed. There was a very bad start, the animals straggling out of the gate one after the other. Morsel off in front but the whole field was in a bunch at the distance, from where Runaway Girl went away from them. There was a magnificent race, however, for the places, which were secured by Pallas and Sir Ulric, who was just lifted in front of the Ocean Bride by Ames, our best jockey here now. He also secured a win by a bit of clever horsemanship in the Amateur Handicap as he was away out of the gate and on to the rails while the others were thinking about it, and though his mount Raffles was tiring at the finish he just managed to keep him going to win by a short head from Lady Bentworth, the favourite, in the poor time of 1min. 20secs. Capt. Holden's Jasper with owner up came in third.

The last item on the programme was the long distance Consolation Plate, for which Kipling and The Cingalee were favourites. It was a very interesting race to watch as the latter and Clynder fought inch by inch for the last two furlongs and Kipling, who had been up with the leaders but fell back, came again and made a hard but unsuccessful attempt to beat Steinhager for third place.

Next week we have only 5 items, of which the Second Farewell Plate has been divided, making a card of 6 events—quite enough for the time of year.

The chase for the Light-weight and Heavy Weight Cups was run on Friday. Contrary to precedent the heavy brigade were in the majority, numbering 9 out of the 14 competitors and they made a very brave show. Dr. Forsyth, who won the heavy-weight cup on Corydon for the third time, finishing second only to Lord Harry, the winner of the light-weight chase. Until the disease of anno domini begins to overtake him, as long as he keeps well it will be a very difficult task indeed to find anything to beat Captain Holden's horse, for this Cup he won on Friday with the greatest of ease, cantering in at the finish the freshest horse on the field. The chase was long as usual, probably about 4½ miles starting in the bund country from near the grand stand and was well arranged for the very large gathering of spectators, as no less than 7 fences could be seen by cantering a very short distance. The line was a good sporting one, starting at the bottom of the bund country it came back over the bunds and across the Tollygunge lane and up to the Railway, from where it went back across the Molla Hât Road and finally over the ladies' wall and the last hurdle to the finish.

There were unfortunately a few spills. Queen of Hearts came down at a wall in the ploughs near the Molla Hât and gave Mr. Pierson a nasty kick in the face as she got up, while Ermine gave Mr. Winkworth a bad shaking up by falling over another wall. Tired Tim also came to grief, but Mr. Hill was able to remount and finish the course.

The final order was as follows:—Captain Holden on Lord Harry (Light-weight), 1; Dr. Forsyth on Corydon (Heavy-weight), 2; Captain Fraser on Diablo (Light-weight), 3; Mr. Turner on Blue Bell II. (Light-weight), 4; Mr. D. B. Myers on Sir Walter (Heavy-weight), 5; Mr Macrae on Arsenal (Heavy-weight), 6; Mr. Hamilton on Pretender (Light-weight), 7; Captain Fitzgerald on Fermoy (Heavy-weight), 8; Mr. Curtis Hayward on Pardon (Heavy-weight) 9; Mr. Radmore on Agamemnon (Heavy-weight), 10; Mr. Halliday on Rainbow (Heavy-weight), 11; Mr. Winkworth on Ermine (Heavy-weight), fell; Mr. Pierson on Queen of Hearts (Light-weight), fell; Mr. Hill on Tired Tim (Heavy-weight), fell

After the chase the staff of H. H. the Lieutenant Governor were at home for chota-hazri in the shamiana near the finish.

Persimmon, His Majesty's first Derby winner, died last month as the result of a fractured pelvis which he came by while being exercised. The accident occurred in December, but he did not succumb till the 18th February. Details in our "Sport in England" columns.

A conference of members of the Houses of Lords and Commons, Army generals, and breeders of horses, was held at the Royal Services Institution, Whitehall, on the 20th ultimo, Lord Donoughmore presiding.

Colonel Granet startled the large company by showing the country's plight in case of a year's war. The number of animals necessary to mobilise our expeditionary forces, troops at home, territorial forces, and to bring all units up to correct strength, was 173,000, and of that total 59,000 were riding horses, the great majority being cavalry horses. They should have a reserve of about 10 per cent. to meet the demands made by such things as accidents in trains, deaths on board ship, and so on.

Assuming that the wastage of war was such that every unit would be required to be completely remounted every six months (considerably less than their experience in South Africa), at the end of the year of such a war they would have taken from the United Kingdom 332,000 horses, of which 180,000 would be riding horses. What were the resources of the country? It was extremely difficult to arrive at anything like a correct estimate of what our military horse population was. With some assistance they had come to an estimate of 1¼ million horses and about 150,000 were for cavalry purposes. Therefore, going on with his assumption, at the end of a year of war they would require 180,000 cavalry, and they only had 150,000 to meet the supply with.

The birth rate among horses was a decreasing one. There were 10,000 fewer foals dropped in 1906 than in the year before, and 75 per cent. of those would have been horses suitable for military purposes. In Ireland there was also a serious decrease. During the South African War the whole of the horse population of the world was open to them. It was extremely doubtful whether we should enjoy such an advantage on any future occasion. He understood that the Secretary of State for War and the President of the Board of Agriculture had had laid before them an important scheme for the encouragement of horse-breeding. The War Office, too, had a scheme in hand to secure for the country more horses for mobilisation.

Mr. Algernon Turner said a suggestion had been made to the Government that £25,000 a year should be devoted to brood mares, stallions, and the organisation and management of State-aided horse-breeding establishments.

Mr. Henry Chaplin, M.P., said the grant to the Royal Commission on Horse Breeding should be extended to £10,000 a year.

Sir Charles Dilke and Major Seeley were in favour of State aid to raisers of army horses.

Who would imagine that skunk juice would be particularly good for sore eyes or weak ones! A writer in an American paper describes how a friend of his received in his eyes a discharge from a skunk whilst out hunting at night. The pain, without counting other discomforts, was intense, and the man thought he would lose his eyesight, but, strange to say, the disagreeable lotion actually improved his sight, acting on the eye like atropine, and so dilating the pupils that he found he could continue his night hunt with a wonderfully improved vision. The new Wildfowlers' Association would do well to order at once a large quantity of "skunk juice" for the use of members. For fighting and finding their way home after convivial meetings at the club, we should think the new "eye-opener" would be worth quite 1s. 1½d. per large bottle.

"Tiger" Smith, erstwhile of India, may be remembered by those who follow boxing in this country: we see he is still earning a bit at the game in London; but, of course, has long since had to "try back" and turn his attention to such small fry as will accommodate him.

THE match between Burns and Palmer for the Heavy Weight Championship of the World, recently reported in our columns, shows up in no half-hearted fashion the utter dearth of good heavy-weights in England. To a certain extent this, perhaps, is not altogether to be wondered at, as very little inducement is offered in England these days to make it worth while for men to devote sufficient time to training and sparring exercises. After all, the question of daily bread comes first, and, one may be permitted to doubt whether many English prize-fighters in recent years could possibly have earned enough "on the straight" to keep themselves going without following any other profession. But in America things are different; the prizes offered are infinitely larger, and gate-money over there would make so-called "big nights" in London look very ashamed of themselves.

LECTURING to the members of the Manston Parish Church Guild last month, Lord Hawke, the Yorkshire County cricket captain, who met with an enthusiastic reception from a crowded audience, took as his text the words "Playing the Game." In the course of a powerful address Lord Hawke expressed his disapproval of gambling, and his next subject, as it happened, was the importance of good temper. He advised the man who was out first ball to take his dismissal smilingly, and to say to the bowler, "I'll bet you don't do it next time." This rather amused the audience, to whom the use of the word "bet" seemed curiously illogical.

Lord Hawke claimed as the superiority of cricket over golf or tennis that in cricket a man played not for himself, but for his side. Loyalty to a captain was the first elementary principle of "Playing the Game." The morale of no team was benefited by its members going about "grousing" that their captain was no good. So long as he was captain, a part of playing the game lay in giving him credit for doing his best. Unselfishness was also a great feature. The early Australian Elevens gave us a fine lesson in co-operative cricket, and the success of Yorkshire, though they had fine batting and magnificent bowling, was due to their fine fielding. Fine fielding was brought about by the esprit de corps of a side. It meant that the eleven was a happy family, each one striving to do his best to help the others. As an example of unselfishness, Lord Hawke specially mentioned Lees Whitehead when he was twelfth man, masseur, cobbler, and general baggage man. He shone not for himself, but for the good he did to others. (Applause.) It was also necessary to play the game off the field as well as on.

The famous cricketer in the course of his address also paid a magnificent tribute to Tunnicliffe. "It is sad to think," said Lord Hawke, "that our Yorkshire grounds will no longer see John Tunnicliffe. No one can know what a right-hand man he has been to me. Faithful, true, and upright to a degree, I am proud to think I have been connected with one who has ever held honour at its highest point. I can truly say that he has ever been a worthy example of everything that is good and noble. Let us hope that the example he has shown may continue to bear fruit. (Applause.) I have tried to set an example of playing the game on foreign tours, and I believe that everywhere where my sides have been they have won credit. Off and on the field they have respected themselves and each other, put on no 'side,' and were therefore, popular. The Englishman who looks on the Colonial or foreigner as a bounder does not deserve the name, but unfortunately that is an individual not unknown. Foster the sportsmanlike spirit, and whether success or failure attend your efforts in the sport you will attain popularity and respectively be able to consider that you have fairly and squarely played the game."

RANJITSINGHJI is going to be fed by the Mayor and Corporation of Cambridge, writes our London correspondent. Admirers in various parts of the country have been pressing invitations on the cricketer, but he has yielded only to that of Cambridge, and, as I write, an influential committee is actively preparing the feast. He maintains his popularity in England and though he may not take a prominent part in the game this summer, the sport-loving Britisher will always be ready to welcome him warmly.

THE match between the M.C.C. and South Australia at Adelaide last week ended in a draw. The M.C.C. batted first and scored 404, South Australia replied with 445 and the M.C.C. made 134 for four wickets in their second innings when the match was drawn.

EIGHTY-FIVE miles an hour is the latest motor record: it was accomplished by Mr. S. F. Edge on a 60 h.-p. "Napier" on the 18th ultimo on the Brooklands track, Weybridge. Full details appear in our Wheeling column.

THE conditions are now announced for the twenty-ninth annual inter-varsity golf match, which will be contested at Sunningdale on Wednesday, the 25th instant. As in the past, the teams will be eight a side, and play will be by singles over 36 holes. Scoring, however, will be on the principle of one point for each match instead of by "holes" up, and it has been resolved that halved matches shall be left halved.

THE final game in the Inter-Regimental Polo Tournament was played at Meerut on the 6th instant. The competing teams were the Carabiniers and the 10th Hussars, the latter winning by 6 goals to 4 after playing extra time. Details further on.

Two Malacca civets have recently reached the London Zoo. These are the animals from which the famous perfume was obtained that was so popular amongst the aristocracy many years ago, and a contributor to the Globe says that in Malacca these cat-like animals are still regularly farmed. The substance giving the scent is a white, fatty material contained in two curious pouches, or turnings-in of the skin, just under the tail, stronger and more abundant in the male than the female. It is gathered by scraping the inside of the pouch with a spoon at intervals of two or three days, a drachm or less being obtained each time. When pure it is still commercially valuable in the East, but is frequently adulterated with suet or oil to make it heavier in the purchaser's scales. While the well-known skunk uses an almost identical substance as a means of defence—and a remarkably effectual one—the perfume of the civet is probably an attraction, at all events to the opposite sex of its own species.

THE Grand Prix du Casino, as reported in our last week's issue, was won by Count O. Czernin, of Austria. We understand that Count Czernin used Messrs. Curtis's and Harvey's "Smokeless Diamond" powder. The winner last year also used this explosive.

THE South Indian Athletic Association Football Tournament ended on the 6th instant in a win for the Dorsets who beat the Leicester Regiment by 3 goals to nil.

THE Laver Hockey Cup tournament at Secunderabad was won by the Royal Fusiliers who beat the Royal Artillery in the final game on the 9th instant by 4 goals to nil.

OUR Bombay Correspondent writes:—The first two meets of the Bombay Hounds this week have been rather unfortunate, as on the extra day but few turned out and no run at all was provided. All the favourite spots away as far as Marole were tried but without luck.

On the Bye-day two were actually killed, but each gave but a very short run. Meeting at Sahar, the first was soon put up but immediately on crossing Bomanwadi Valley he was pulled down. The Mango Tope and country round the Andheri Road were blank, so a move was made back to Sahar. A second was put up here, but he too was soon finished in attempting to find cover in a deep nullah.

THERE was a totally different tale to tell on Thursday when there was no kill but two fine runs were experienced. Meeting at the Club, the Parla coverts were tried and found productive, the jack going over Sahar Hill into Bomanwadi Valley. Soon after the Backwater is crossed, but in the thick undergrowth beyond, scent is suddenly lost. Another is put up at Vaman near the Tulsi main and he took us over the Bomanwadi Valley and Backwater as before. He then makes for Pawai into thick jungle and after a near shave manages to give them the slip.

A CARD of seven events faced us for the Twelvth Extra Meeting and fields were very fair, racing good, and results a shade in our favour.

The first Karjat Plate set the ball rolling and though several clock-breaking gallops were whispered about some, Basheer opened up and went out a warm favourite in eleven with Ragub and Zari next. It was palpable from a furlong onwards that Basheer, who followed Silver Stream, would win and Jimmy was easing as he passed the post though Ragub put in a game run.

A DOZEN went out for the second division with Amood a bit better fancied than Happy Land and the crack new pony Mountain King. Amood has no dash over this distance and never showed dangerous, whereas Happy Land waited in front. Over half a mile he is one of the fastest in the country, but five is more than he likes. Mountain King was after him all the way and though he won by three lengths he was stopping fast.

THE Khandalla Plate of a mile found fifteen with Vasco, Grey Falcon and Meerjan favourites at fours. Saeed, Wadi, Meerjan, Grey Falcon was the order to the three furlongs where Meerjan came with a rattle into the lead. Many thought Manley had spoilt his chances, but he took a pull at him and when Grey Falcon made his run entering the straight he was able to hold his own with Antica and Gold Mint some way back.

ANOTHER miler was the Lanowli Plate with thirteen starters and Dhafer the chosen one from Dhamas and Rashad. Sialkote, late Salaam, made the running to the bend where Dhafer, Moscow and Dhamas drew up. They ran level to near the second enclosure where Forster shaking Dhafer up went away fairly comfortably, Moscow and Dhamas almost dead-heating.

THIS was followed by the horse race, the Goodwood Plate of 6 furlongs, with Manlock and St Patrick equal favourites from Faded Lily, Ianthe and Forfeit in a field of ten. Faded Lily made the pace but fell back and left St. Patrick, who at the distance was passed by Ianthe with Manlock level. A great race was anticipated when Forfeit coming outside fairly walked past them and secured his third bracket out of seven outings.

A LESS racy lot of hunters than were seen out in the Hunters' Flat would take finding, a raking grey, Bluey, being a bit better fancied than Haphazard, both owned by Mr. Crawford, M.R.C.V.S., and the former ridden by him. The pace killed both Good Luck and Roland and The State went away from Haphazard. Bluey only put in an appearance at the last bend and the various "finishes" were enjoyed immensely by the public. Bluey just managed it but had Haphazard's rider made any sort of a show the result would have been otherwise.

LAST was the little Strangers' Selling Plate with Veto and Ateyba equal favourites from Hooded Falcon, these three standing out. Veto soon came into the lead, but at the bend had the whip out on him. Hooded Falcon soon followed suit, but staying on gamely won a good race with Ateyba third.

THE Amateur Billiard Championship is approaching the final at Pyrke's Saloon, the first round being finished on Monday when Messrs. Ginan and Meyer met. Meyer was in slashing form, could do nothing wrong and ran out an easy winner by 500 to 219. His best were 45, 34, 32, 26, 22 and 20.

On Friday a surprise was in store when Messrs. Hallam and Pyrke met. Hallam at once took a lead of about 40 and on nearing the third hundred led by 100. Pyrke now had his turn and assisted by a fine 53 caught him only to see him go away again. Always hard at it Pyrke crept up again and a desperate finish ensued in which Pyrke just got there by three—500 to 497. Pyrke's best were 53, 40, 24 and 20 twice. Hallam's 40, 36, 35, 29, 27, 24 and 22 twice.

Meyer now has to play Hargreaves, the winner to meet Pyrke and the winner of that to meet the holder, Louth.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 21st February 1908.

IT has been a dismal week and the rain it hath rained every day, that is what we Londoners call "rain" but which you good Calcutta folk would classify as "mist;" still it makes for discomfort and provokes steady grumbling and all manner of uncharitableness. Up to yesterday, February had contributed only one-seventh of an inch (0·16) of rain, the average for the period being almost exactly three-quarters of an inch (0·74). Yesterday's fall amounted to 0·47, and as more disturbances are signalled from Iceland, the second month will probably make up an average amount of precipitation! The temperature of late has been remarkably mild. Yesterday a maximum of 54 degrees was recorded, this, too, with only half an hour of sunshine. All round the coast bright sunshine was nil, except at one or two places. Even Torquay, the most favoured, had only 3·3h. to record. Ponder on this, ye fortunates whose annual rainfall, spread over four and a half months in reality, amounts to over sixty inches. Influenza still holds us in its grip and one reads of much havoc among the Parliamentary forces and other great ones; the foul fiend has laid aside a great many legislators and notabilities as chronicled by the press; humbler persons disappear silently and return presently without the larger world being apprised of what has befallen them.

This and the butter famine—a rise of four pence per pound please note—are the chief topics of this dull week. The munkun walla's wiles are bad enough, but what is more heart breaking is the oily assurance of the dairymen that even then they will be out of pocket!

The death of the world-famed Persimmon has provided the sporting press with much copy and opportunity for pictorial effort. He broke his pelvis in two places last December and went to the happy hunting grounds three days ago. The loss is not only to the Sandringham Farm, but to the British stud at large. Many excellent judges, among them Mr. Somerville Tattersall, have expressed the opinion that Persimmon was the grandest specimen of the thoroughbred horse to be found in England, nay, in the whole world. With his superb combination of substance, power, and quality, Persimmon was indeed magnificent to look upon. Everyone who saw him at the Stud Farm at Sandringham was charmed with the horse, for after being taken out of training he "let down" perfectly, and became the beau ideal of a thoroughbred stallion. Foreign breeders longingly coveted this horse, and offers up to £50,000 were made for him. But the King always had a very genuine affection for his first Derby winner, and to all offers the reply was politely made that "Persimmon was not for sale at any price." But I trespass on the province of your London sporting correspondent.

There is practically nothing of importance to communicate to you of matters theatrical at the moment. Pantomime fires are burning low. In both London and the provinces the final performances of the holiday pieces are being entered upon, and in several instances the regular "dramatic" season—the "drama" being mostly musical comedy—has already commenced.

And this reminds one that daily the nominal barrier between theatre and hall is more and more broken. Mr. Cyril Maude evidently holds the view that good actresses are to be found in the ranks of musical comedy, for he, some days ago, offered the part of the heroine in "Margery Strode" to Miss Phyllis Dare, who, although she was naturally very flattered by the popular actor-manager's selection, was compelled to decline, as she is under a long contract to Mr. Robert Courtneidge. She and the indefatigable Mr. Dan Rolyat will anon be seen in London in a revival of "The Dairymaids."

Au Contraire several artistes famous on the "legitimate" stage have been induced to make excursions into vaudeville. For example Miss Ruth Vincent has gone to the "Palace" and has achieved an undoubted success at a bound. On her first appearance, on Monday night, even after she had given three songs, and bowed her acknowledgments time after time, the applause continued so enthusiastic that it seemed as if the audience would have been delighted to listen to the popular actress for the rest of the evening.

And Miss Vincent's triumph—for it was a triumph—was well deserved. Presenting a charming picture as she stood smiling obediently in the centre of the stage, her full, expressive voice was at its best. She began with "Charmant Oiseau," which she followed with "Ah Fors e Lui" from "Traviata," and finally, as an encore, sang, "Comin' Thro' the Rye," and at the conclusion of each a perfect storm of applause broke from the audience.

In addition to Miss Vincent, the Mas-Andres made their first appearance at the Palace the same night in a burlesque of a French drama, a very amusing little skit from which the two performers extracted plenty of laughter. Mlle. Roberty was also a newcomer in her whirlwind dances, in which she is assisted by a very clever boy and girl, the trio giving a novel exhibition of the acrobatic order of dancing.

Hats off to Mr. H. G. Pellissier, author, composer, actor, deviser, arranger, and leading spirit of that brave little company of entertainers, "The Follies!" Once more he and his merry comrades are back in town, bringing with them a splendid new budget of songs, dances, choruses, and drolleries. It says a great deal for the versatility of this small company of seven that they are able to fill one of London's largest West End theatres, and "alone and unaided" to keep an audience laughing for nearly three hours on end. That is what happened the night they began at the Shaftesbury, and it would be difficult to say which was the most amusing part of a varied programme that was from first to last a shining example of the peculiar humour that belongs to the writing of Mr. H. G. Pellissier.

The old Windsor Theatre was destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning. This brings a reminder that places of public amusement have been singularly free from such calamities during recent years. While the Windsor house was never an important feature in the theatrical system, it was a convenient refuge for amateurs, and many strange scenes were witnessed there in olden times. Soon after the demise of the Duke of Kent a party of practical jokers played havoc with a performance of "Midas." They contrived to strew a number of small glass detonators on the stage and in the orchestra, so that Jupiter, Juno, Apollo, and Vulcan, together with the first violin, the clarionet, and the double drummer, kept continually treading on the noisy petards. A select contingent in the gallery dropped more detonators into the pit, and the tumult caused the manager to appear before the curtain and offer a reward of £2 for the detection of the offenders. Mr. Addison—the father of Miss Carlotta Addison—when lessee of the Doncaster Theatre suffered from distributions of red pepper about the playhouse on St. Leger nights. Fortunately, these unpleasant forms of humour are gone out of fashion.

Londoners are to be interested by the news that Ellen Beach Yaw, an artist with an extraordinary range, who was very popular on the concert platform in the British metropolis some years ago, has been engaged to sing in the stead of Madame Sembrich at the Metropolitan Opera House, and is likely to be pitted, at least by the public, against Madame Tetrazzini at Mr. Hammerstein's Manhattan. Since London knew her she has married, and is now Mrs. Vere Goldthwaite. She sang in "Rose of Persia," an opera composed for her by Sir Arthur Sullivan. It was during her engagement at the Savoy that she interested Lady Meux, to whom she owes her subsequent musical education. "I don't believe I made much of a success in Sir Arthur's work," she says, "so imagine my delight when Lady Meux informed me that I was meant for grand opera. Till then I had been put forward as a kind of prodigy. My top notes were the attraction on which my managers had harped."

Miss Yaw is to sing in "Lucia" and "Rigoletto."

Certain music-lovers have started a game infinitely more fascinating—not to say elevating—than "Limericks." It is concerned with the strange and baffling coincidences which attach to the mystic number, thirteen. Something was quoted in a London paper recently as to the influence of the supposed unlucky figure upon Wagner's life. And now Mr. Algernon Rose writes to "Musical News," to expound some truly amazing discoveries he has made concerning "its cabalistic association with the history of the Royal Academy of Music." Thus, the institution's founder was Lord Burghersh, whose title and name total thirteen letters. William Crotch, the first Principal, had thirteen letters in his two names. The Academy was established in 1822. Those numbers, added together, make thirteen. Sterndale Bennett, one of its most distinguished Principals, was born on 13th April. His successor, Sir George Macfarren, was born in 1813. (So, one might add, were Wagner and Verdi, neither of whom was connected with Tenterden Street). The first five Principals held office for 10,27,7,9, and 12 years—the total giving an average of 13. "Prodeegious!"

The present frontier trouble in your part of the world is being boomed here for all it is worth to the manufacturers of "copy:" a cursory glance at the "scare headings" in the evening papers and the contents bills thereof, is calculated to render uneasy old Anglo-Indians and all connected with India, while the newsboys' cries of "War in H'india, slorter o' British troops" is calculated to impress the timid with a belief that the horrors of the mutiny are about to be repeated. Really one can hardly repress a smile even in the face of the fact that our casualty list will probably be quite long enough. Meanwhile music-hall song-writers are protesting against this Zakka Khel expedition. They want to know how any singer can effectively denounce a foe with a name like that.

EMPIRE DAY. INDIAN PRINCE'S DECISION.

The Earl of Meath has received the following letter from the Raja of Jawhar:—

JAWHAR, 29th January 1908.

"My Lord—I am much obliged for your letter of the 2nd instant, on the subject of the "Empire Day" movement. My friend Mr. P. C. Tarapore has also addressed me a letter dwelling on the importance of the movement for the Princes and people of India.

"I agree with my friend in holding that it is the patriotic duty of every native chief in India to co-operate in a general celebration throughout the Empire of a day so solemnly connected with the memory of Victoria the Good.

"After giving my best consideration to your lordship's proposal, I have ordered that in future 24th May, shall be observed as a public holiday in my state, and that the children of the schools in my territory shall receive a short lesson on the significance of 'Empire Day.'

"I sincerely trust the movement will receive the active co-operation of all the native chiefs of India, in token of their loyalty to the King-Emperor, and to the Empire over which his Majesty so nobly presides. Believe me yours faithfully, KRISHNAGHAH, RAJA."

Where is Jawhar? I confess my utter inability to place this State and of the loyal "Krishnaghah." Crass ignorance on my part mayhap; or has the editorial leg been pulled? Some of your readers may know.

It was found that the London pageant would clash with the Olympiad so the projectors have wisely decided to postpone it until next year. This somehow recalls the fact that during the chequered career of Cremorne Gardens the adventurous E. T. Smith attempted in 1863 to revive the glorious Eglinton tournament. But damp weather and the cold, grey light of uncongenial afternoons did not favour the experiment. The gentry in armour excited the native sarcasm of irreverent youth, and were assailed with irrelevant and commercial inquiries, such as "Are lobsters cheap to-day?" and "What will you sell yer tin for?" The Eglinton tournament needs to be done on a good scale. There is no reason, in that case, for its failing to create a considerable sensation.

Certain English charitable institutions, more or less deserving, have just had reason to rejoice. Mrs. Rylands, the well-known philanthropist, who died recently, widow of Mr. John Rylands, cotton manufacturer and merchant, of Lonford Hall, Stretford, Manchester, has bequeathed the enormous sum of £473,000 for public institutions and charities. Conspicuous among these bequests is a gift of debentures, estimated at the value of £200,000, to the library founded by Mrs. Rylands in Deansgate, Manchester. These shares are four per cent., Debentures of Rylands and Sons (Ld.). To the city of Manchester the testatrix bequeathed pictures by Sir J. E. Millais, Sydney Cooper, Val Prinsep, and Maclise.

My obituary reference this week include those of Mr. John Brinsmead the famous nonogenarian piano manufacturer and distinguished member of several societies and orders and Sir James Knowles the journalist. Sir James Knowles, who died last week, will mainly be remembered as the absolutely fair editor of an absolutely fair journal, the "Nineteenth Century." He would always hear both sides, and give a free field; as witness the famous controversy between Gladstone and Huxley. The "Nineteenth Century" was established in 1877, in which year Sir James Knowles retired from the editorship of the "Contemporary Review."

HUNTING HIPPOS ON THE ZAMBESI.

It is significant that while the rhinoceros and elephant are now carefully protected in Africa and the big game hunter must take out a £125 license to shoot one, the hippopotamus is viewed as a mere curse by natives and white men alike, from the great Nile to the Zambesi.

His ivory is no great commercial value, and his natural truculence of disposition a menace to life and limb. The big game regulations of Uganda, Equatorial Egypt, the Congo State, Nigeria, and other regions, say of the hippo: "No scruple is felt as regards the destruction of this animal, because of its marked hostility to man. It destroys native plantations at night when these are near river, lake or marsh, and will attack on sight and without provocation not only native dug-out canoes, but large boats and even steam launches.

"Its extinction, of course, is not desired either by the Administration or settlers; and no doubt when the creature becomes more scarce it will be accorded a reasonable amount of protection. At present, however, the hippo stands in no need of such measures, as it is able to retire at will to swamps, morasses and remote lakes where it is not likely to be attacked by human beings. Its hide is much more valuable than its tusks, and might even form considerable article of export."

There in a few short words, you have White and Official Africa's attitude toward the Behemoth of the Bible, who fairly swarms in the vast waterways of the Continent and greatly resents human intrusion. Once, not far from Fashoda on the Upper Nile, I beheld the monsters literally in thousands. Here the great river is lost in far-stretching swamps that extend for hundreds of miles: and the hippo reigns in solitary state over these alike of myriads of poisonous mosquitoes and gigantic crocodiles that infest the region.

Now and then a herd of elephant will cautiously try to cross a great pool treacherous hidden by the "sudd" or dense vegetation which here chokes the Nile and dams its current; but often the clumsy brutes crash through into deep water screaming in terror.

Every hundred yards or so in this desolate region of swamp one comes upon great people banks of hippos, lying close together with their huge bodies half exposed in the inky water; while countless others are lumbering awkwardly along in search of food on the islands and mudbanks.

And they are a very real terror to navigation. In the vicinity of Bors, the Upper Nile is four miles wide, with a current almost imperceptible, except where the great river has forced a narrow channel through the floating masses of "sudd." These reaches fairly swarm with hippopotami, and so angry do they grow at the mere sight of a boat, that they will charge blindly and follow in pursuit for a mile or two until turned by a well placed shot.

The hippo's favorite manœuvre on spying a boat afar off is to sink immediately out of sight and walk on the muddy bottom until he is just under the craft and her unsuspecting occupants. Then he will rise like an island upheaved, throwing the boat high into the air, only to seize and smash it on its fall and then turn his enormous jaws upon the men who are helplessly floundering in the weedly water at the mercy of crocodiles and furious hippos.

The Madi natives hereabouts attack these huge beasts with a harpoon-head fastened to the end of a shaft by a twist of the rope to which it is attached. And the head is so arranged as to detach itself from the shaft after the delivery of the stroke. Thus the long handle will remain in the hunter' hand, while the rope is free to run out until the float, which is tied to the other end, can be thrown overboard.

All the natives in Lake Albert Edward, too, harpoon their hippo enemies. And these weapons have large segments of cork or light wood on the end of the shaft so as to float the spear if the hunter misses his aim.

You can imagine no more curious sight than to come suddenly on a favorite bathing place of these ungainly creatures. I remember three years ago that a few miles from Muhokya in Uganda I arrived with an expedition at a circular lake known as Kikarongo; it had evidently been once the crater of a volcano. The water here is somewhat salt, and greatly appreciated by hippos, who visit it in great hosts for bathing and feeding. And Kikarongo has the additional advantage from the hippo point of view of being a shelving lake with no deep holes.

For a while the water's surface appears undisturbed. But suddenly half a hundred hideous heads loom up awash, with terrifying snorts and streams jetted through their leathery nostrils—which by the way, can be closed or compressed under water. A few moments later up come the monstrous bodies, some of them weighing upwards of three tons. The hippo yawns as if bored with the proceedings, and stares round inquisitively with its pig-like eyes.

The above-water survey does not take long, however, for the hippo loves to walk the bottom. So with a peaceful gurgle down sink the monsters once more to feed on luxuriant weeds which are their favorite food.

All the African natives stand in dread of these brutes and one's paddlemen on the Zambesi will fairly scream with excitement and terror the moment they behold the big black head awash in the broad stream. And yet even when one fires and mortally wounds a hippo, the creature will disappear mysteriously and perhaps disappoint the men altogether of the promised banquet. For it should be said that hippo meat is a staple diet in all parts of Africa north of the Zambesi River.

I have seen an immense cow turn over on her back and slowly sink after having been fatally shot, and her body has remained down for more than thirty hours; nor did it rise within two miles of the spot where it sank.

And yet when all is said one cannot held feeling sorry for the hippo. Every man's hand is against him in his habitat—probably has been ever since the Jews made his acquaintance in the Nile, by whose banks the Pharaohs kept them in close captivity. A full-grown specimen, such as one sees in the great pools above the Victoria Falls of the Zambesi, is 4 feet high at the shoulders, 15 feet long and weighs something over three tons.

The dreadful looking tusks, which fairly plough the river banks and lake shores of Africa, are often 40 inches across the curve and ten inches circumference near the lip. The skin of the strange beast—the "Behemoth" of the Book of Job—is more than two inches thick, and strange to say, yields both armour and nourishing food to the savages. So tough is it that the Congo and Zambesi tribesmen fashion it into war shields that will actually turn a revolver bullet at fairly close quarters.

Nor must it be thought that because the hippo is wonderfully fitted physically for his aquatic life he is clumsy and helpless on land. Certainly he loves the water. Eyes and nostrils are placed absurdly high, so that with nearly all his huge bulk under water he can yet see and breathe perfectly. He can even remain below the surface for five minutes at a stretch before rising to spout like a whale and strike terror into the natives' heart; as every African traveller knows their frail canoes are always a mark for the disturbed brute.

But clumsy though he looks the hippo can travel almost as fast as a horse on land for a short distance, and that over incredibly rough and broken country. When the Central African rivers run dry the hippos travel overland for many miles in search of water, raiding and devastating villages on the way. They appear to be extremely conservative and irritable, and will charge down upon anything that lives, from a horse to a porcupine.

The mothers are particularly dangerous when encountered in the great rivers carrying their grotesque looking infants astride on their backs. Almost the first request one's canoemen make on the Upper Nile, Congo, Niger or Zambasi is that the white man shoot a hippo.

The immense carcass is quickly dragged ashore, or if it has sunk, its under water movements are detected with marvellous precision, and even though it drift downstream for miles at the bottom, when eventually it rises the native anticipate the spot with rare judgment. They fall upon the carcass, yelling like demons; fires are lighted, and in an hour or so nothing remains of the erstwhile fighting hippo save the gigantic skeleton, and even that is picked clean by obscene birds of prey.—W.G.F. in Recreation.

BOVRIL LIMITED.

PRESIDING at the eleventh ordinary general meeting of Bovril, Limited, the Earl of Arran, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts for the year ending 31st December 1907, said:—

It is with much regret on both sides that the Earl of Bessborough has been obliged to sever his connection with the Company's Board after eleven years of pleasant and successful working. Lord Bessborough has recently been appointed Chairman of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, and he will have to devote considerable additional time and personal attention to his new duties. I would just like to read a letter I have received from Lord Bessborough.

MY DEAR ARRAN,

May I ask you to be good enough to convey to the Shareholders my deep regret that circumstances of increased work in another direction necessitated my relinquishing the Chairmanship of the Bovril Company, which I have had the honour of occupying for so many years; also to express my gratitude to them for their kindly consideration and indulgence which they have always extended to me.

I remain considerably interested in the Company, and shall be pleased if at any time I am able to advance its success. With best wishes for its prosperity,

I am, yours very truly,

(Signed) BESSBOROUGH.

The Board has also lost by resignation the services of the Right Honourable Robert Farquharson, M.D., who for a year or two has not enjoyed robust health, although his influential position in the country was of the greatest value to Bovril, Limited.

The Company has been fortunate to obtain in his place the services of Sir James Crichton-Browne, M.D., F.R.S., who has for years achieved for himself such a position in the world of foods and dietetics that his experience will be of the utmost value to our business.

Having discussed the principal figures of the Balance Sheet, the Chairman said:—

It is a matter for congratulation that the sales have been so well maintained, when it is remembered that a very high Bank of England minimum was ruling during our business season while we were offering our usual Bonus of 5 per cent. as an inducement to traders to take in winter stocks.

We regret very much the cutting down of our business with Australia and South Africa caused by the increased import duties in these Colonies. In Australia, the duty has been raised on Bovril and a new duty placed upon glass bottles. In South Africa, the duty has been increased from 7½ per cent. to 22 per cent. It will be remembered that Mr. G. Lawson Johnston in seconding the Resolution last year referred to the new duties in South Africa and explained that no revision could be expected before 1908. Well, the increased tariff has resulted in our business in that Colony dropping 35 per cent. as compared with 1906, which is really a serious matter. Every step has been taken to secure a reduction in the duties at present in force, and the matter now rests in the hands of a Special Committee appointed by the Authorities, who are considering the question of Tariff Revision.

You will all be pleased to hear that the Company has been appointed purveyors of Bovril to H.M. the King of Spain.

A very successful Reception was held on two successive days in September, when over two thousand of our trade friends paid our Old Street premises a visit and saw how Bovril was blended and packed for sale and despatched to almost every corner of the world.

The business of Virol, I am glad to say, continues to develop, and I am also informed that the sales again show an increase, and that there is a further encouraging extension of its regular use in the Hospitals throughout the country.

Although I have not been long connected with this Company, I have been attending almost daily for the purpose of making myself at home with the details of the management and general working of the Company, and one or two points strike me particularly as showing the interest taken by the management in the staff generally. I find that in our factory we closely study the healthful surroundings of our employees, and a medical adviser is retained to attend them.

Looking back upon the eleven years of the Company's existence, I find that we have actually earned Net Profit amounting to £1,668,684.

Mr. George Lawson Johnston, in seconding the resolution, remarked that Australia had been for nearly twenty years the favourite source for the supply of their raw material, and it was probably the last place from which they expected to have duties raised against them. He, the speaker, hoped that this would help towards a preferential duty on Bovril.

Sir James Crichton-Browne, in moving the resolution for the re-election of Mr. W. Lawson Johnston as director of the Company, said:—

Although new to the directorate of Bovril, Limited I am an old friend, for I have long recognised its nutritive and restorative powers, and during the short time I have been on the Board I have found a warm friend to Bovril in Mr. William Lawson Johnston. My interests in Bovril hitherto have been rather dietetic than commercial; but after all the success of Bovril must depend upon its dietetic qualities, properties and virtues. (Hear, hear.) It must further depend upon the belief of the public that these are carefully supervised and maintained. (Hear, hear.) I have found that Bovril is an excellent, wholesome, palatable aliment of fixed and unvarying standard of quality, free from disease risk, easily digested, quickly diffused throughout the system, sustaining and at the same time stimulating, and therefore to some extent capable of taking the place of those alcoholic beverages which, when too freely indulged in, are detrimental to health. Success in life mainly depends upon character, and it is by a good character that Bovril has made its way. (Hear, hear.) That has recommended it to the masses of mankind, and given it a world-wide reputation. It does not depend upon laboratory experiments, nor upon scientific testimonial, eminently favourable although these are to its merits. It found its claim upon millions of practical experiments which are being performed every day by millions of men and women. Experientia docet, and experience has taught the British public, many of our Colonists, and many inhabitants of foreign countries, too, that Bovril is really a good thing. This, if I might coin a word, is a fadistic age in which we live. Fads of all sorts abound, and food fads are fashionable. There is not, I suppose, any article of food at this moment, from cabbage to green turtle, that has not its friends and its enemies; but an enormous majority of commonsense people continue, and will continue, to be faithful to a good mixed diet, and in a good mixed diet Bovril forms, and should form an important element. Even to the faddists I think Bovril may be useful. Coming along this morning I saw some sandwich boards advertising the nut and fruit diet. I would suggest that an excellent addition to that diet would be a little of our nut-brown Bovril—(laughter)—and as for the vegetarians, I would suggest to them that they could not possibly find a better sauce for their salad than Bovril. I think I cannot give you any more convincing proof of the value of Bovril than by telling you that your directors, when exhausted by their labours, refresh themselves with a cup of Bovril. There are many imitations. Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. Bovril is not without that tribute to its genius, but I think as a great actor can afford to smile at the humble mountebank, Bovril can view with complacency the motley group that follow in its train.

and shooting parties should never go without a few jars of LEMCO. They take up very little room, and most sportsmen would no more think of leaving them behind than setting out without ammunition. Not only is LEMCO exceedingly useful for soups, entrées, and gravies, but it is a fine medical comfort, and a splendid fever preventive and restorative.

The Unity of World-History.

History may be defined as the record of the evolution of the present. The modern world is a living organism which has grown cell by cell, century by century, out of the protoplasm of barbarism; and not a single one of those cells, not a portion of all those centuries can be disregarded if we are to understand the process of growth that has made us what we are. Historians of the past have raised up artificial barriers by separating one epoch from another, and regarding each as a separate entity when they are in reality merely separate stages in the birth, growth, and decay of nations that go to make up world-history. From a comprehensive point of view it is necessary to cast away all distinctions of ancient and modern, dead and living, and regard the world as a single body in its progressive stages of growth. Professor Freeman crystallised this important truth into an epigram when he remarked in one of his Oxford lectures that "modern history began with the call of Abraham." Since that early date no single detached period of history can be understood in its fullness or clothed with its highest interest and profit without reference to those other periods of history which make up the great whole of human being.

THE FIRST COMPLETE WORLD-HISTORY.

This ideal of world history as a single whole, homogeneous in form, though infinitely varied in detail, is fully realised for the first time in The Historians' History of the World, which "The Times" has just published In this great work the whole of human history from the beginnings of Egyptian civilisation down to 1907 A.D., is treated as one gigantic story, continuous in outline, though it is necessarily divided into many separate chapters In the twenty-five volumes of The History we see set forth in orderly sequence the history of the nations of the elder world. Egypt, Assyria, Israel, Greece, and Rome, upon which our modern civilisation is founded. The Roman Empire dissolves in the darkness of the middle Ages, whence the nascent nations of modern Europe emerge. At this point the stream of civilisation becomes too diversified to be followed in a single course, and the history of the modern world is treated under the heading of different nations—England, France, Germany, Russia, America, Japan, and all the other nations, great and small, are represented as figures in the grouping of this great world-drama.

As the "Yorkshire Post" remarks: "The great and perhaps the peculiar merit of this History is that the student can rely upon finding a full and authoritative account of the affairs of any country at any period in which he may be concerned; and he will find that period dealt with in relation to both what preceded and what followed. The gaps which inevitably exist in even well-equipped libraries of history disappear in a work like the present, in which a careful editorial staff has watched that there shall be nowhere a breach of continuity. The work goes back to the dawn of history, and comes down to last autumn."

The Historians' History is the first world-history of English origin since 1779, and the most complete world-history that has ever been written in any language of the globe. Its twenty-five volumes contain 17,000 pages, and 3,000 illustrations which visualise for us the everyday life and costume of every former age.

ITS COMPACT AND CONVENIENT FORM.

The very idea of a world-history in twenty five volumes has something portentous in it. A man may say, "That is the kind of book for a large public library, it is too big for my modest household." That is precisely the impression which "The Times" most earnestly desires to combat. This book was specially designed for the wants of the average reader in plan, in scope, and in the size of the volumes and of the bookcase which contains them This bookcase only covers eight square feet of wall space; it will fit into any niche in study or dining room and will form a bright and attractive ornament The highly artistic binding of the different sets of The History, in red and gold, dark green, dark maroon, light brown, or cream, may be selected to suit the colour scheme, of any room The individual volumes of The Historians' History are super-royal octavo—that is, about 10½ inches long by 7 inches wide and 2½ inches thick. They are large books, but not too large to be easily handled. They are printed on specially manufactured paper that has the least weight compatible with durability and opacity. You will find it no hardship to hold one of these in your hand while turning its pages. For the purposes of the average reader they have been specially made much smaller and lighter than the "Encyclopædia Britannica" Placed side by side, the twenty-five volumes of The History occupy less than six feet of shelf room or in their special bookcase three shelves of two feet each. The bookcase itself is 4 feet high, 2 feet wide, and 9 inches deep. The bookcase is supplied with or without glass doors. Considering the extraordinary scope of the work and its diversity of contents the amount of space it displaces is really very little. Packed for shipment, The History weighs 1 maund 32 seers.

"Yes; he had some rare trouble with his eyes," said the celebrated oculist. "Every time he started to read he would read double."

"Poor fellow!" remarked the sympathetic person. "I suppose that interfered with his holding a good position?"

Not at all. The gas company gobbled him up and gave him a lucrative job reading gas-meters."

"Why can't you give me a decent sum of money and not dribble it ten thousand francs at a time?"

Questioning thus, the titled alien glared at his American wife, but she did not quail.

"It was distinctly understood," she returned, with firmness, "that I bought you on the instalment plan."

"Just a little touch of realism," remarked the dramatist with pardonable pride. "It's a wonder nobody ever thought of it before."

"What is it?"

"Why, my heroine is a brunette in Act I. and a blonde in Act II.

THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

On the 14th instant the sun shone cheerfully on the thick carpet of grass that has replaced the patchy covering of old Molesey Hurst. As usual, visitors from town found the silver lining of the cloud when clear of the fringe of bricks and mortar, and enjoyed a charming spring-like afternoon, enhanced by a most interesting outcome of a capital card. Details of the principal events:—

The spring-like weather of Friday gave place to conditions far less cheerful, heavy intermittent showers of rain being carried before a high, cold wind, that would have done credit to the month of March. The thinness of the attendance, comparatively speaking, was not altogether surprising, having regard to the uninviting meteorological outlook, though it was difficult to account for the falling off in the strength of the fields. It could not be attributed to the altered state of the going, the rain not affecting the turf until the card had more than half been worked through. The general tone of the racing was not so brisk. Details.—

His Majesty's famous horse, Persimmon, who sustained a fractured pelvis, while at exercise some weeks ago, died on the 18th instant. Since his accident the horse has been in slings, and the news of his death has come as a great surprise, as it was stated a day or two ago that the animal was making a good recovery.

Persimmon was the King's first Derby winner. He gained the Blue Riband of the Turf in 1896 amid an extraordinary scene of enthusiasm. His Majesty won the Derby again four years later with Diamond Jubilee, an own brother to Persimmon. Diamond Jubilee was sold about a year ago to an Argentine breeder for 30,000 guineas. Another famous brother was Florizel II., all three horses being by St. Simon—Perdita II. In addition to winning the Derby, Persimmon credited the King with many other valuable races, including the St. Leger, Eclipse Stakes, Jockey Club Stakes, and Ascot Gold Cup. Altogether, the horse won £34,706 in stakes.

He enjoyed a successful career at the stud, his fee standing at 300 guineas. He twice headed the list of winning sires. Persimmon's place at the Sandringham stud has been taken by Florizel II. His Majesty's representative in the Derby this year will be Perrier, a son of Persimmon.

The King was very fond of Persimmon, and at the Royal Derby Dinner at Buckingham Palace three years ago Lord Coventry, on behalf of the Jockey Club, presented his Majesty with a life-size statue of the son of St. Simon—Perdita II., to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the King's membership of the Jockey Club.

The best of Persimmon's offspring were Sceptre, Zinfandel, Keystone II., Cheers, Royal Dream, Fugleman, and the now three-year-olds Pearl of the Lock, Mountain Apple, Rushcutter, and Your Majesty. During the past seven years the sons and daughters of Persimmon have won 146 races of the aggregate value of a trifle over £125,000.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

Oxford vs. Cambridge.—The thirty-fifth match between Oxford and Cambridge University was played at Queen's Club, West Kensington, on Saturday, the 15th instant, and resulted in an easy win for the Dark Blues by 4—1, the score being a fair reflex of the run of the game. Thus the honours go to the team expected to secure them, and at no time during the game did the Light Blues convey the impression that they would prevent the Oxonians placing the second successive win to their credit, and the seventh in the last nine years.

Almost from the kick-off the Oxonians took charge of the game. Their halves dominated the situation, and the skill, finesse, and dash of G. N. Foster, K. R. G. Hunt, and E. L. Wright were more than a match for the pluck and energy of the Cambridge forwards. And yet Cambridge showed such grit, and defended so stoutly, that twenty-five minutes elapsed ere Berry found the net, but before half-time two other goals were obtained, and what interest there had been petered out. When Oxford had a lead of four clear goals their opponents for an appreciable spell rallied their forces, obtained a goal, worked with grim energy to still further reduce the margin against them, but the fates—the Oxford defence, to be strictly accurate—were against them. While there is not a scintilla of doubt as to the superiority of the winners, it was a serious misfortune for the Cantabs that P. H. Farnsfield should have partially broken down after Oxford scored their first goal. He went on the wing, Herman going to centre, and this arrangement worked fairly well.

There was no change in the Oxford team, but the Cantabs had to substitute at the eleventh hour G. G. Woodruff (Rossall and Caius) for W. A. Powell, the right half, as the latter fell a victim to appendicitis. There were probably some 4,000 spectators when the game was started, G. N. Foster, who won the toss, wisely deciding to have the wind and rain at his back. Hunt immediately set his forwards going, and a sweeping movement on the right was concluded by Clark shooting wide. Off to the other end dashed the Light Blues, and Cutter made a big but unsuccessful effort to elude the defence, and the next minute the Oxonians were in the neighbourhood of Whale. Hunt was delightful at centre half, both in defence and attack, and his delicious passes provided openings for Clarke and Berry. Whale was kept busy either repelling shots or kicking off from goal, but relief came from a brilliant run by Edwards on the Cambridge right. Cutter rushed down and received the centre, and banged the ball in, but Appleton made a remarkable save simultaneously with the whistle going for off-side against the Light Blue inside left. So far, the Oxonians had not shown such convincing superiority as had been expected, but as the game settled down they gave ample proof that they were the better team, there being a finish and method about their play which favourably contrasted with the spasmodic efforts of their opponents. After Jordan had severely tested Whale with a rasping shot, the Cambridge defence blundered, and Jordan had a clear run, but Thew was yards faster, and, overtaking his opponent, cleverly robbed him when a goal seemed a certainty. The run of the game greatly favoured the Dark Blues, but for a time so well did Thew and Mugliston kick and tackle, and so alert was Whale, that they could not find the net. At the end of twenty-five minutes Berry received the ball in his own half, and, making a delightfully sinuous run, during which he eluded three opponents, concluded with a terrific oblique shot, which Whale reached but could not stop. Within three minutes G. N. Foster drew the Cambridge defence, and then swung the ball out to the right, whence it returned to the centre, and Laron transferring to Maples, the latter easily scored. The Light Blues showed plenty of earnest determination, but, though their forwards made individual rushes, and now and again Edwards and Brisley combined cleverly, there was no cohesion in the attack, and the Oxford defence was not seriously extended. A few minutes before the interval Thew miskicked, and Jordan, dashing through, dribbled some twenty yards, and then netted with a swift ground shot, which Whale could not possibly intercept. At half-time the game stood:—Oxford, 3 goals; Cambridge, nil.

With the wind behind them, it was anticipated that Cambridge would offer a more stubborn resistance to their rivals, but the early happenings did not justify expectations. The Dark Blues were promptly on the attack, and Thew and Mugliston had a harassing time, but they came out of the ordeal with flying colours, the captain especially doing yeoman service for his side. Whale made a smart save with Jordan in close attendance, and after Laron had missed, Berry made another characteristic run, and Mugliston dashing in, the ball cannoned to Clarke, who promptly centred, and Jordan easily netted. Oxford appeared to ease up, and the Cantabs responded by putting more vim and dash into their work than at any previous period. For the first time the Dark Blue defence was seriously troubled, but it met the demands made upon it, and Jordan next cleverly headed into the net from a centre by Clarke, who had run half the length of the field. The point was disallowed for offside. When thirty-two minutes had elapsed, Herman sent in a warm shot which Appleton turned aside, but Brisley fastened on the rebound and hooked the ball into the net well out of the goalkeeper's reach. The Cantabs pressed on resuming, and Yates sought to further reduce the deficit, but this was the last expiring effort, and the Dark Blues maintaining the upper hand to the finish, the game ended:—Oxford, 4 goals; Cambridge, 1 goal.

England vs. Ireland.—These representatives met for the twenty-seventh time on Saturday, the 15th instant, the venue being the Cliftonville Club's Ground, Belfast. Of the 26 previous encounters, England had won 24, the other two games having been drawn, and had scored 134 goals to Ireland's 15. Scott won the toss for Ireland, who had the advantage of the breeze. Hilsdon kicked off, and Ireland were at once aggressive. Maskrey had to come out to clear from Young. England obtained relief through a free kick, and Woodward and Rutherford were conspicuous with some neat and attractive touches. Ireland next had a free kick, which availed them nothing, as McCartney shot wide. First goal came to England in a curious manner. After neat play by Wall and Windridge, Hilsdon dribbled past Connor, and lifted the ball over the heads of the backs. It appeared to be going over the bar, and great was Scott's surprise when the wind held it up and sent it through just under, the Everton goal-keeper being taken by surprise, and making no attempt to save. The Irishmen, who hardly made the most of the advantage conferred by the wind, were not so clever as their opponents, but possessed plenty of dash, and thirteen minutes from the kick-off Hannon netted with a fast low shot. Play afterwards was keen, but nothing further was scored up to the interval, when matters stood:—Ireland, 1 goal; England, 1 goal.

The second half found England having decidedly the best of the game. No doubt the wind assisted them materially, but then they utilised it better than their opponents had done. Only occasionally were Ireland able to clear their lines, and here their splendid back division came prominently to notice. Eventually the strong attack of England had its reward. Not, however, until the last ten minutes had been reached. Then, in attempting to neutralise the efforts of Hall, Craig found it necessary to concede a corner, and the Manchester United winger taking the kick himself, sent it in the direction of goal. Here Woodward was at hand, and from very close to the line he netted the ball. Additional success came to England later, and this time Warren showed the way. A pass to Hilsdon was cleverly met by the Chelsea forward, and he scored England's third and last point. Result:—England, 3 goals; Ireland, 1 goal.

OXFORD VS. CAMBRIDGE.—In the nineteenth annual inter-'Varsity match on the Bromley Club's Ground at Sundridge Park on the 19th instant, Cambridge beat Oxford by 5 goals to 1, thus bringing their number of victories to nine, as against Oxford's seven, with three games drawn. It was rather curious that H. J. Goodwin shot a goal for Cambridge with the last stroke made in either half—a circumstance that emphasised the necessity of absolutely accurate time-keeping. If the whistle had been blown a few seconds earlier on each occasion, the result would have been a draw. As a matter of fact, it was a question whether the first half did not last too long. However, the better side won. Cambridge made a creditable first appearance as full-blues, and, if they did not play so well as in earlier matches this season, the superiority of their forwards was sufficiently marked to justify the result. As is so often the case in the inter-'Varsity match, science was forgotten in the excitement of the struggle, and most of the brilliant work was of an individual character.

A minute after the start Goodman failed to stop a run by Mirfield, with the result that a corner was given against the Light Blues. There was no result; but a little later the Oxford forwards again became dangerous, and Cox had to save from Mackarness. The ball was subsequently transferred to the Oxford circle, where Sutcliffe had a chance of scoring. Edge-Partington sent him a capital pass, but the inside man missed the ball altogether. Oxford again attacked vigorously, Thompson looked like scoring from a pass by Mackarness, but the Cambridge defence temporarily relieved the pressure. The Dark Blues, however, returned to the attack, and Cox had to save a shot from Mirfield. A minute later Goodwin put in a piece of fine individual play. He got the better of the halves and Bennett, the Oxford left-back. There remained only the goalkeeper, Maltby. The custodian, however, was equal to the occasion, for he ran out and saved what looked like being a certain goal. Hurst cleared the Oxford circle, and for a time play was confined to the Cambridge half of the field. At length Edge-Partington got away, and taking the ball down the right wing, he centred finely when near the circle. In attempting to deal with the shot, Hurst gave "sticks," but there was no result from the penalty, and a little later Cox had to save from Thompson. Cambridge then set up a determined attack. They forced two corners in quick succession, and from the second penalty Leighton opened the scoring with a stinging shot. On restarting Oxford attacked vigorously, and a dangerous rush by the Dark Blue forwards was broken up by Goodman. A few minutes later, a foul was given against Cambridge in their own circle. There was no result, and shortly afterwards Edge-Partington again got away. He made a good centre to Goodwin, who just as the whistle announced half-time, shot the Light Blues' second goal. Half-time:—Cambridge, 2 goals; Oxford, nil.

Oxford attacked on restarting, and after five minutes Mirfield looked almost certain to score. Cox, however, ran out and saved. A little later, Sutcliffe put in a warm shot, but it was finely saved by the Oxford custodian. Sutcliffe returned to the charge, but this time his shot hit one of the posts. The Dark Blues at length got away, and Thompson ran through, but the two Cambridge backs got up just in time to stop him putting in a shot. Fifteen minutes after the restart Goodman missed the ball in attempting to clear, and Mirfield seized the opening and scored Oxford's goal. From this point there was practically nothing to choose between the sides. Each attacked in turn, and it was not till just on the call of time that Goodwin ran through the Oxford defence, and scored the Light Blues' third and last point. Result:—Cambridge, 3 goals; Oxford, 1 goal.

RECORD SCORE AT WIMBLEDON.—Playing in a match with H. L. Lawford, Mr. C. R. Girdlestone, the old Oxford University player, has set up a new amateur record for the Royal Wimbledon Links. Mr. Girdlestone holed out all his putts, and completed the round in 70, three strokes better than his previous round. Mr. Lawford, who is a scratch player, was easily beaten in the match.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY VS. SUNNINGDALE.—Playing their first match of the Lent term against Sunningdale on the Sunningdale Links on Saturday, the 15th instant, Oxford University sustained a heavy defeat by 8 points to 1. The only successful 'Varsity player was Lord Maidstone, who defeated H. J. Ross, himself an old Oxonian, by 2 and 1. An equally close match was that between the respective leaders, E. A. Smirke and J. A. Robertson-Durham. Scores:—

COURSING.

THE WATERLOO CUP.

THE big coursing event had reached the stage whereat public interest in the result had a tendency to increase rather than diminish, although the final issue appeared this morning more than likely to prove a bad one for the "books."

That Long Span would again contest the final course seemed a foregone conclusion; but, despite the pronounced overnight favouritism of Bachelor's Acre for his heat this morning, the Croxteth bitch, Silhouette, continued to be the fancy of many excellent judges, and this course promised to furnish the tit-bit of the morning.

It transpired this morning that Hallow Eve and Dendraspis got on to fresh hares subsequent to their trial yesterday, and Hallow Eve was very hard run. A couple of Lancashire greyhounds—namely, Silhouette and Hallow Eve—were now left in the Cup competition, Long Span being a representative of Scotland, whilst Bachelor's Acre stood for Norfolk.

The outlook was by no means promising this morning, but the wind continued hard in the west, and the broken sky raised hopes that the final stage would not be spoiled by bad weather. The attendance was again up to the average, and in this connection it may be mentioned that the approximate size of the crowd on Wednesday has been ludicrously exaggerated in several quarters.

In selecting the Withins upon which to complete the meeting, the committee were following the arrangement which has proved so satisfactory for many years past, and at twenty-five minutes to eleven the machinery was set in motion, with the course between Spearmint and Rivinia in the second round of the Plate. The wet state of the ground was unfavourable to the hares, and at the outset the trials were of less than average length. In eight trials in succession the hare was pulled down. Layers of odds fared badly, and the speedier greyhound in several instances suffered defeat. The fifth round of the Cup was commenced shortly after 11-15, a disagreeable drizzle being driven by the westerly breeze off the sea.

TWO UNLUCKY COURSES.

The semi-finals provided a couple of sensations in the defeats of Bachelor's Acre and Long Span, upon each of whom almost prohibitive odds were betted. Both were distinctly unfortunate in turning a complete somersault after securing the opening points. Their respective opponents are of the game and resolute type, and each had knocked up a winning sequence before being displaced. The win in each case was decisive, and created a marked sensation.

Hallow Eve and Long Span are brother and sister from the same litter, and the former was only put in the stake at the eleventh hour, so to speak, owing to Platonic, who is greatly her superior, going amiss. Hallow Eve is trained by Reynolds at Lytham, and Silhouette by R. Steele at Croxteth. Consequently, much local interest was centred in the meeting of the pair in the decider.

The Earl and Countess of Sefton were not present this week, but Mr. Edward Hulton, who is an enthusiastic follower of the fascinating sport, witnessed the performance of his bitch. After the customary interval Silhouette and Hallow Eve were sent to slips at twenty-five minutes past twelve, and odds of 11 to 4 were betted on Silhouette, who was expected to lead the red by a substantial margin. Anticipations in that respect were realised, but Hallow Eve found a hare exactly suited to her style of running, and Silhouette, having relinquished a nice position from the turn by running wide, the odds were again flouted in easy fashion. The winner's price on the night of the draw was 1,000 to 15, and all the long odds books on the event show a profit. To-day was one of the most disastrous for backers ever known in connection with a Waterloo Cup. Details:—

THE WATERLOO CUP (with Cup, value £100, added by the Earl of Sefton), for 64 subscribers, at £25 each; winner £500, second £200, two dogs £50 each, four dogs £30 each, eight dogs £20 each, sixteen dogs £10 each, the Waterloo Purse and Waterloo Plate, £560; total £1,600.

Fifth Round.

SILHOUETTE beat BACHELOR'S ACRE.

BETTING: 3 to 1 on Bachelor's Acre.

The favourite led three lengths, but stumbled badly, letting in Silhouette, who scored a good sequence, and killed.

HALLOW EVE beat LONG SPAN.

BETTING: 11 to 2 on Long Span.

To a good hare Long Span rattled up nearly four lengths for the turn, and he cleverly held his place for another good point before falling head over heels in a vain attempt to kill. This contretemps gave Hallow Eve a fine opportunity, of which she made the fullest use, and although Long Span had at one time subsequently again won the course, the hare persistently went from him towards the end, and when Hallow Eve drew out and killed, she was clearly the winner of a sensational course.

DECIDING COURSE.

E—Mr. E. Hulton's r b Hallow Eve, by Pateley Bridge—Forest Fairy beat E—Countess of Sefton's bk b p Silhouette, by Strange Mystery—Slish.

BETTING: 11 to 4 on Silhouette.

It was exactly at 12-30 when Wilkinson sent them on their momentous journey, and Silhouette, quick into her stride, opened up a gap of nearly three lengths. Hallow Eve closed up slightly, but she was quite two lengths behind when Silhouette shifted her hare. The favourite scored weakly again, and ran wide, letting up Hallow Eve, who, commanding a good hare in clever and resolute fashion, won a nice final course in decisive fashion. Hallow Eve administering the death stroke.

Pigsticking.

THE GUJERAT CUP MEET 1908.

YET once again it is my pleasant privilege to chronicle the doings of this sporting meeting always a cheery, jolly function, yet rendered this year even more so by reason of the delightfully cool weather experienced. Hacking out early in the morning thick clothes were most welcome, while even during the middle of the day it was never unduly hot.

At the same time it was recognised on all hands that while the early date might be credited with a charming climate, yet at the same time it must be debited with an increased difficulty in locating outlying pig and when found in riding to them. The jungle was thicker than most old bukkurs of Gujerat remembered at previous meets, many fields of kaumba and castor oil were standing, on quite a dozen occasions after heats were let go they lost their pig and had to be started over again. This was most disappointing to the Honorary Secretary and the shikaries, who most naturally get a trifle fed up when having located a sounder or a solitary boar nothing gets accomplished.

Another aspect of fixing such an early date is the question of leave, more particularly for soldier men. This year all competitors had to assemble at Dholka on the 25th February. Camps of exercise, staff rides, examinations are in full swing at this time, it is an almost impossible date for men, more especially those quartered at the bigger stations to get the requisite leave.

The number of men who actually competed this year show that something was wrong. Later in the year of course the heat is a trifle uncomfortable, but pigsticking have never been a thin-skinned lot; there is no possible question that the later in the year the meet is held the easier it becomes to provide pig, and looking at this year's actual competitors it can hardly be contended that the earlier date attracted a good entry. Only four soldiers competed in the Gujerat Cup and as two of them came from Rawalpindi the probability is that the attractions of the meet would have been sufficient to bring them at a later date.

The meet was held at Dholka on the borders of the Ahmedabad Hunt country; the hunt have in a most sporting manner closed this part of the country to general pigsticking for the last twelve months, in fact ever since the Gujerat Cup of 1907, there were plenty of pig on foot but as above stated there was, at times some little difficulty in getting on terms with them.

The following is a detailed account of the various heats.

HEAT No. 1.—Gujerat Cup value Rs. 1000, first nomination.

W. B. Soutar (scratched)
J. Milbanke (spear)
A. P. Wodehouse
R. C. Brown
Bhagwant Singji of Orcha.

A good boar gave a fine run across fairly open country. Wodehouse's horse came down and spoilt his chances. Milbanke had the best of it but a jink almost, let Orcha up: he, however, missed his opportunity and Milbanke, giving no more chances away, speared.

HEAT No 2.—

A. K. Graham
J. S. Forbes (spear)
F. S. Rose
Fateh Singh Rao of Baroda (scratches)
Ranjit Singhi of Baria (scratched).

This heat were six or seven hours in the saddle before they managed to get on terms, an abortive run in the morning favoured Rose, in the afternoon when they were again let go the boar took a most difficult line through babul jungle. Graham who is new to the game was quickly thrown out. Rose got delayed by a big babul tree with which he differed, thus leaving Forbes to spear at his leisure.

HEAT No 3.—

J. E. B. Hotson
F. P. Lory
F. Graham (spear)
J. St. John Graham

This pig gave a fine sporting run through some scrub jungle. Lory who was riding a pony would have had a better chance had his mount been a trifle handier. All however had a look in, Mr. F. Graham eventually pulling it off.

HEAT No. 4.—

R. E. A. Elliot (scratched)
Lakhaji Raj of Rajkote
D. N. Graham (spear)
H. E. Rudkin.

This was a magnificent run after a fine 32 inch boar. Rudkin mounted on an exceedingly smart white Arab showed a clean pair of heels to the rest. A sharp jink to the left, however, put Graham on an equality. Both then raced for the spear, it appeared almost a dead heat as both speared, the umpires gave it to Graham. The thing was so close that the result might have been different had Rudkin been using a long spear instead of a short one.

GUJERAT CUP.—Semi-final, first nomination.

J. Milbanke (spear)
D. N. Graham

This heat was rather unfortunate, their umpire pointed out a good pig in a sounder. Immediately the order to ride was given they took to some scrub, the result being that both competitors got on to different boars. Graham carried his on and eventually speared while Milbanke ran and lost his; both men thought they were following the correct pig and as it was impossible for anyone to say definitely, those of the committee who were on the spot decided to run it over again. This was done and in the run off Milbanke won.

F. Graham (spear)
J. S. Forbes.

This heat had a clinking good run, Forbes seemingly getting slightly the better of its

After a fine run the pig took to a lane closely pursued by Forbes while Graham elected to keep outside on the right. Unfortunately a woman coming up the lane was too much a glittering spear point at his tail, a lady in front, the gallant old boar made up his mind and shot through the high fence to his right leaving Forbes hopelessly pounded and Graham a tired pig to play with.

FINAL.—First nomination.

Milbanke and F. Graham were thus left in to fight for the final, the latter mounted on a very handsome thorough bred waler, Swiveler, seemed to have somewhat the legs of the other, but here again a jink in a lane changed the aspect of affairs, the pig jinked out of the lane towards Milbanke who taking him on into open country speared before Graham could quite get on terms.

Major Sir John Milbanke thus won the first rubber in the game.

GUZERAT CUP, SECOND NOMINATION.

HEAT No. 1.—
D. Graham (spear)
F. Graham
Bhagwant Singhi of Orcha
J. St. John Graham.
This heat had a nice run in the open, Orcha did not put much go into his work and was soon out of it. The three cousins had a rare set to, all getting on in turns, finally Donald Graham got his spear home.

HEAT No. 2.—
J. S. Forbes
J. Milbanke (spear)
F. S. Rose
Except the winner all in this heat had crushing luck. The boar took a most vile line of country selecting pretty nearly the only bit of black soil in the district. Milbanke's horse was the only one that stood up and he found himself in the pleasing position of being able to spear at his leisure when and where he liked. Fortunately no damage was done, although the falling was unusually hard.

HEAT No. 3.—
H. E. Rudkin (spear)
A. Graham
F. P. Lory
A fine sounder with several rideable pig broke away in front of this heat, the umpire galloping into them speedily separated a nice boar and started the heat away over a ripping good line of country with big jumps. Graham speedily fell back leaving the two others to race for the honors. Rudkin's fast pony proved more than a match, jinking the pig once he again got on and drew blood.

GUZERAT CUP.—Final of second nomination.

J. Milbanke
D. Graham
H. E. Rudkin
Rudkin's pony was by this time somewhat leg weary and as the pig was found in among crops he was further handicapped. Going away, however, he showed in front, a jink let up Milbanke who in turn had to make way for Graham, the boar ran right handed for some thick jow jungle fringing the river, through which he was forced in most gallant fashion by Graham, with Milbanke close up. Graham, however, thrusting on managed to reach and spear, an uncommonly fine performance considering the dense stuff.

This left in Mr. Donald Graham the winner of the second nomination to run against Milbanke the winner of the first nomination for the final of the Cup. As both men and horses had just run there was no individual hardship in starting them off at once after another pig.

A small sounder had been marked down close by, so a move was at once made and the beaters put into the field. They were most accommodating and came out at once. The order to ride having been given, Milbanke got up first and turned the pig, then Graham took up the running. Some shallow nullahs here seemed to favour Milbanke as he forged ahead and gained a twenty length lead, rattling the boar over a couple of fields they entered a lane. Half way down the pig jinked into a bush came out and looked round in an undecided manner and then in a flash was off down the lane again this time with him at his heels a hundred yards down the lane and he me a moment and speared handsomely, Milbanke ... well known horse Spartan thus won after.

Mr. Donald G. It was a most popular win as he is a staunch the Guis of pigsticking in the West of India but has never succeeded to pull it off before.

HEAT No. 1.—THE SALMON CHALLENGE CUP.—With Rs. 300 added.

Fateh Singh Rao (scratched)
Ranjit Singhi of Baria (scratched)
J. Milbanke
J. S. Forbes
H. E. Rudkin (spear)
Somewhat to the surprise of many Rudkin proved to have the legs of them all, having the best of it the whole way he jinked the pig and without giving a chance away, speared.

HEAT No. 2.—
F. S. Rose (spear)
J. E. B. Houson (scratched)
D. N. Graham
R. C. Brown
J. R. Darley
This was rather an unfortunate heat as after the word to ride had been given they got mixed up with a heat that was also riding their pig. Thus eight competitors, two umpires and at least a dozen pig were all flying round in a small patch of jungle. A Balaclava melee was nothing to it. Finally Rose emerged with a smile on his face and blood on his spear. Umpires should try and avoid as much as possible giving the word to ride before a sounder is split up. With four or five pigs of one size going away in scrub it is a difficult matter for all the competitors to be certain they are on the right pig and no one has changed.

HEAT No. 3.—
F. Graham
Soutar (scratched)
J. St. John Graham
F. P. Lory (spear)
A fine run after a good boar. Lory mounted on a speedy dun Kathiawar country bred, forged ahead and always having the best of a good run speared. Unable to show blood, he showed fat, which by the Gujerat Cup rules is sufficient.

HEAT No. 4.—
A. K. Graham
K. S. Lakhaji Rai
Narsinghi of Baria
G. Hutchinson, (spear)
This heat seemed fated never to get on terms with a pig. Two "No Heats" were called against them through no fault of their own. At last getting away on a nice boar, Lakhaji Rai nearly got home. Then Hutchinson galloped over the pig and missed him, turning round he got on to him and speared before anyone else got up.

Final.

F. P. Lory
G. Hutchinson
F. S. Rose
H. E. Rudkin
A preliminary canter proved a failure and was only productive of a bad fall for Rose who was knocked out of time for a few minutes and it was not until the following day that this heat was brought off. They were put on to a pig that turned out anything but a flyer. Rudkin got slightly the best of the start but a jink in a tall crop threw him completely out. Rose and Lory then took up the running, the former's big powerful pony seemed to positively revel in the heavy going. Forcing the pace he gave away few chances and ran into and speared his pig an easy winner of the Salmon Cup, Lory spearing a couple of seconds later.

Capt. F. S. Rose, 10th Hussars was warmly congratulated on winning this, his first appearance in competition pig sticking.

The pig sticking events having been thus brought to a successful issue, the next part of the programme, the point to point race had to be carried through.

TULLY HUNT CUP.—For horses, 3 miles, value Rs. 300.

Lieut.-Col. J. S. Forbes' bk w g Khala ... Owner 1
Mr. J. St. John Graham's b w m Ambrosine Owner 2
Mr. J. Symons' b w g Kingfisher ... Owner 3
Bhagwant Singhi of Orcha's b w g Vladimir ... ... Capt. H. E. Rudkin (fell)
Mr. A. P. Wodehouse's br w g Mastodan ... ... Owner 0

Sent away to a level start Mastodan seemed to go much too far to the left on the journey and it was difficult to see what occurred near the turning point which was a prominent tree one and a half miles away. As they came for home, Ambrosine and Khala held a slight lead of the others and getting the better of a good run in, the latter won by some dozen lengths.

PONY HUNT CUP.—2 miles, value Rs. 200.

Lieut.-Col. J. S. Forbes ch a p Substitute Owner 1
Mr. F. P. Lory's b a p Sandow ... Owner 2
Mr. J. Symons' gr w p Blue Rock Capt. H. E. Rudkin (disqualified).
Mr. St. John Graham's b a Jungli ... Owner (fell)
Capt. G. Hutchinson's gr a Dick Turpin Owner (fell)

The ponies were sent the same course as the horses and it proved a fairly stiff one for them. In the run home Substitute and Sandow misled by a native in a tree waving a flag went far too much to the right. This let Blue Rock in. Coming along a beautiful straight course he finished first easily but when it came to weighing in, it was found he was minus a bag of weights. The result was that he could not nearly touch the obligatory 12 stone. Substitute, therefore, who finished second, was awarded the race.

Much to the regret of several, the country bred point to point fell through owing to insufficiency of entries. Five was the minimum number allowed by the rules. Only four entered; the fifth which would have made up a race and was owned by a native sportsman hailing from Rajkote was taken away in the morning. It is difficult to see why such has event should not draw quite a big entry. Gujerat, Kathiawar and Baroda are all breeding countries, yet there was a Rs. 150 cup going begging.

The Honorary Secretary, Captain G. Hutchinson deserves the thanks of all for the great amount of trouble he undertook so cheerfully. All the arrangements were excellent. The Hunt shikarris toiled incessantly. No day was too long. They seemed to live on their camels, they had always to be up long before daylight and when the days hunting was over they had perhaps a fifteen or twenty mile ride to the scene of the following days meet.

One sometimes wonders if their services are always quite fully appreciated. Shikarries are like poets, born not made and there is no doubt whatever that sporting events of the nature of the Gujerat Cup almost solely depend on these men, for weeks before they have to watch the ground and see if the supply of pig warrant the meet being held.

SEMI-FINALS.

10TH HUSSARS vs. C. I. HORSE.—This game, in the semi-finals on the 4th instant, was witnessed by a large gathering and proved an exciting and interesting struggle, ending in a win for the Hussars.

FINAL.

First Chukker.—The Carabiniers attacked and Kennard opened the scoring, but the Hussars were not long in equalising.

Seventh Chukker.—With the score four all play was for every even for a spell. Then the Hussars attacked and Annesley scored.
Eight Chukker.—Fast play, the period being hotly contested. The Carabiniers tried hard to get on terms once more, but without success and the Hussars scoring again, the game ended with the score. 10th Hussars 6 goals. Carabiniers 4 goals. Teams as before.

MIFFKINS: "It is said that aggressive, impulsive people usually have black eyes."

Biffkins: "That's right. If they haven't got them at first they get them later."

"HERE, my dear," said the husband, producing his purse, "here are £10 I won playing cards over at Brown's last night. You may have it to buy that dress you wanted."

Reluctantly the conscientious wife took the money; then said with an expression of rigid rectitude:

"I simply shudder at the thought of using money gained in such a way. Henry, promise me that after you have won enough for me to buy the hat to go with the dress you will never again touch those awful cards."

PORTLAN novels and magazines are said to be the favourite reading of lighthouse and lightship keepers. Naturally these worthy men would go in for light literature. (Gaze steadily at this paragraph for fifteen seconds and a joke will appear.)

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

BALLYGUNGE vs. MR. E. W. ANTRAM'S XI.—This match, the last of the Ballygunge season, was played on the home ground on Sunday last, and resulted in the hollow defeat of the visitors by 154 runs and 2 wickets.

Gould and Whiteley made a good start by putting up 58 for the first wicket, the latter getting in front to a straight one from Yeoman at this total, and Gould did not long survive him, he also falling a victim to Yeoman when a further 15 had been added to the score; he had hit freely for his 38, but had a certain amount of luck. Shallow then joined Oliver, and between them they had a merry time, a separation not being effected until they had taken the score to 191, an addition of 118 for the third wicket. On this point, Oliver, who had batted extremely well, was well taken on the square leg boundary by Yeoman for a stylish 74, he hit freely all round the wicket, and after the first three or four overs, never seemed to be in difficulties with the bowling. Sherman, who followed, knocked up a characteristic 25 in about 8 minutes, he was caught by Lee at third man, and he was shortly afterwards followed by Shallow, when the latter had 58 to his credit, not one of his best efforts, as he was favoured with more than usual luck, but still it was a distinctly useful contribution.

Of the rest, Eddis was responsible for a very nice 30, not out, Eastgate 16 and Frost 13; the innings was declared closed with the latter's departure at 296, this total having been compiled for the loss of 8 wickets in a few minutes over two hours.

Lee and Yeoman opened for the visitors, but the start was not a very brilliant one, the latter being clean bowled by Gould when he had made 19. McIntyre helped Lee to add 40 for the third wicket, but after his departure, a regular rot set in, and although 100 was on the board with only 3 wickets down, the whole side was out for 142, of which Lee was responsible for a splendid 75; he was, it true, missed badly at point almost before he had scored, but his innings was an excellent one in every respect, his off driving being particularly good.

Coulthard and Horncastle met with most success with the ball, the former getting 4 wickets for 12 runs and the latter 3 for 17. Scores:—

SOUTH INDIAN A. A. TOURNAMENT.

DORSET REGIMENT vs. 11TH BRIGADE, R. F. A.—The match between these teams opened the tournament at Madras on the 27th ultimo, when a fast and exciting game ended in a draw of one all. The replay, on the 29th ultimo, produced another hard struggle, each team scored a goal in the first half, but the Dorsets scored again after the interval, and all the efforts of the Gunners to get on terms were unsuccessful. Final score: Dorsets, 2 goals; 11th R.F.A., 1 goal. Teams:—

DORSETS. Prestidge, goal; Brown and Emberson, backs; Perry, Banbury and Prouse, half-backs; Bouter, Farrant, Drew, Lieutenant Shute and Scott, forwards.

11TH R.F.A. Greeley, goal; Poole and Price, backs; Flack, Ford and Young half-backs; Bates, Bartley, Baxter, Hart and Jackson, forwards.

LEICESTER REGIMENT vs. 10TH BRIGADE, R. F. A.—These teams met on the 28th ultimo, when the Leicesters were undoubtedly the better team. They showed greater combination and were quicker than their opponents. The gunners backs were in good form or the score against them might have been larger. The Leicesters scored three goals in the first half and two in the second, the artillery not responding at all. Teams:—

LEICESTERS. Owen, goal; Bailey and Dooley, backs; Wardle, Wale and Whitmore, half-backs; Frey, Cooper, Hallan Jackson and Moore, forwards.

10TH R.F.A. Axam, goal; Bridge and Billows, backs; Lamb, Smith, and Flint, half-backs; Stevens, Grundy, Withes, McLulloch and Jack, forwards.

Semi-Finals.

DORSETS vs. PERAMBORE.—This match on the 3rd instant, was a very one-sided affair. The military team had matters all their own way: they scored two goals in the first half and two more on changing ends, and the railway team failing to score, the Dorsets thus won by 4 goals to nil. Teams:—

DORSETS. Prestidge, goal; Brown and Emberson, backs; Perry, Banbury and Dunn, half-backs; Bouter, Drew, Lieutenant Shute, Farrant and Scott, forwards.

PERAMBORE. Jones, goal; Lee and Willmott, backs; Nicholas, Conquest and Soggie, half-backs; McKenzie, Pereira, Fewkes and Hennesy, forwards.

LEICESTERS vs. SHERWOOD FORESTERS.—These teams met on the 2nd instant and put up a most exciting game. Both goals were visited in turn but neither team scored and the game ended in a pointless draw. The match was replayed on Thursday, when the Leicesters won by a goal scored in the second half to nil.

Teams:—

LEICESTERS. OWEN, goal; Bailey and Dooley, backs; Cliff, Wales and Whitmore, half-backs; Fray, Jackson, Barton, Hallam and Thorpe, forwards.

SHERWOOD FORESTERS. Marsden, goal; Byford and Orange, backs; Millington, Sibthorp and Scott half-backs; Madin, Gobber, Walton, Smedley and Rofer, forwards.

Final.

LEICESTERS vs. DORSETS.—This game on the 5th instant was well contested and proved rather a surprise, for the Dorsets played in excellent form and ran out victorious by three goals to nil. They led at the interval by a goal to nil scored by Bouter and on crossing over Brown netted twice and the Dorsets won as stated. Lieutenant-Colonel R. F. Formby Vice-President of the Association, gave away the cup. Teams as before.

THE BENGAL CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THE tournament, which began on the 26th ultimo, was most successfully carried through, and Messrs. Danger, Harvey and Hechle are to be congratulated on the results of their efforts. The courts were in excellent order and entries in both championships were good. The tennis did not, however, produce any very exciting matches. In the Singles the best contests were those between Hechle and Warden, Atkinson and Gresson, and Laing and Warden. Warden's meeting with the old champion produced an excellent match, ending in the defeat of Hechle, Warden succumbed to Laing in another great struggle in the semi-finals, while Atkinson's match with Gresson was the only time the Lahore player was stretched. The final game between Laing and Atkinson ended in an easy victory for Atkinson who thus secured the championship for the second year in succession. The Doubles was not characterised by very brilliant play either, the only first-class match being that in the final. Kalberer and Hutchinson, who had played in good form all through, put up a great fight against Atkinson and Deane, but were beaten, Lahore thus taking both championships away once more. Mr. Justice Holmwood distributed the prizes and congratulated the winners. Results are appended :—

The Naturalist.

THE INDIAN RAPTORES.

TRUE HAWKS.

NO species of birds, perhaps, are better known by name than are the hawks and falcons and none, more deserving of the encomiums, lavished upon them.

Falconry appears to have been introduced into England about the reign of Ethelbert and remained the "Sport of Kings," up to Cromwell's time, when it began to decline. It was at its zenith in the reign of James I., when we hear of a cast of hawks fetching as much as a thousand pounds. If the sport finds fewer votaries in these days, it is not because others have surpassed it in excellence, but that in England, it would be difficult to find space for it, and so from year to year, we appear to have allowed it to sink into oblivion, till, now, naught but the name remains and few men could be found, who would be able to distinguish a hawk from a falcon or a "noble" falcon from an "ignoble" one.

To return, however, to our muttons. We have in India three genera of true hawks comprising six species, which can be distinguished from other birds of prey by their short rounded wings and thin tarsi and tibia, being of the same length or very nearly so.

The harriers resemble them in the latter characteristic, but have longer wings proportionately to their size.

The three genera can thus be separated from each other: "Astur" and "Lophospizias" have shorter and thicker tarsi than "Accipiter" and in the two former, the length of the bill from gape, is ⅓ to ½ the length of the middle toe, without claw and in "Accipiter" the bill from gape, would only be about half or even less. The middle toe being strikingly long and thin as also the tarsus. "Lophospizias" can be identified from "Astur" by its having a short crest. The three genera are thus divided: "Astur," three species: A. palumbarius, the goshawk; A. badius, the Shikra; and A. soloensis Horsfield's short-toed hawk. "Lophospizias" only one species: L. trivirgatus, the crested goshawk. "Accipiter," two species: A. nisus the sparrow hawk and A. virgatus the Besra sparrow-hawk.

Of the three species of "Astur" the first named is a moderate sized bird, measuring as much as 2 feet in length in a female and the male 3 or 4 inches shorter. The other two are both considerably smaller, not exceeding 12 inches to 14 inches in length. In both the Goshawk and the Shikra the fourth quill of the wing is the longest, whereas in Horsefield's short-toed hawk the third is the longest. The last named is an inhabitant of the forests of Southern China, Malay Peninsula, etc., but has been also recorded from Burma and Southern Tenasserim; nothing is known of its indification.

The Shikra has been more or less recorded from every part of India and may be met with, either in the plains or right up among the snows of the Himalayas, though not in very heavy forests or deserts. It breeds in trees, wherever found, laying three or four bluish white eggs, sometimes plain and sometimes with light greyish specks.

The Goshawk is rarely meet with out of the Himalayas, except in the depths of winter, when stragglers may be occasionally met with in the plains of India. Though breeding in the Himalayas at altitudes varying from 8 to 10,000 feet this splendid hawk, is no where common and keeps almost entirely to thick forests, though during September and October they may often be seen soaring. When migrating to the lower hills in the autumn, the Goshawks appear to choose the same passes to cross over, as certain "saddles" along the main ridges are noted, by natives, as favourite haunts and it is over these the patient hawker sits day after day with his nets and nooses. I have myself seen as many as four Goshawks within a couple of hours, soaring over one of these "marked" haunts and one might wait a fortnight, elsewhere, without seeing half the number. Of course on another day, I may have sat in the same place and not seen one, but still I do believe that they cross year after year, in certain favourite spots.

The Goshawk is the most sought after of all birds of prey for falconry, among the natives of India, and though a magnificent bird, of undaunted courage and very fast, the sport obtained with the short-winged hawks cannot be compared to that shown by falcons, and few Europeans take to it who have once followed falcons.

The Goshawk is trained to kill houbara, heron, geese, hares, ducks, etc., and if the bird is in good hunting "yunk" it does not often miss its quarry, but the chase is of short duration and the hawk will not follow its prey for any long distance. If it does not succeed in catching in its first two or perhaps three attempts, it will give up the chase and sit down on the nearest tree or on the ground. The female Goshawk will realize as much as Rs. 150 for a young bird and a good male about Rs. 80. It breeds in trees from March to June, laying three to four eggs, similar to those of A. badius only larger.

Lophospizias trivirgatus the crested Goshawk, is not unlike the true Goshawk in colouring, but darker, especially about the head and has a small occipital crest and is a good deal smaller, a female measuring up to 18 inches in length.

Blanford remarks that birds from South India and Ceylon are smaller than the Himalayan birds measuring only 16 inches in length, but if this is the case usually, it certainly is not always so, for I myself obtained a specimen in Madras, which I presume is reckoned as South India, every bit equal in size to the up-country bird. L. trivirgatus closely resembles the Goshawk in its flight and when flushed from a tree like the Goshawk, it will drop almost to the ground, and skim along within a few feet of it and then suddenly rise, almost perpendicularly into the branches of the tree, it has selected to sit on.

I have never seen this hawk trained nor do I think it would prove of much use for purposes of falconry, for I have on many occasions put one up, on the outskirts of a dense sal forest, where spur fowl have been feeding, without its attempting to molest them. No Goshawk, not even a male would have resisted such temptation. It is said to breed in trees and lay two eggs, a pale greenish white. In "Accipiter," the two species are very closely allied to each other and both are much esteemed for falconry. They can both be identified from the "Shikra" or any species of "Astur" by their longer and slenderer tarsi and the mid-toe as I have noted above and from each other in A. virgatus being usually a little darker than A. nisus, in having a dark stripe on the throat and 7 to 8 dark bars on the fourth quill, in adults, whereas A. nisus lacks the gular stripe and has only 5 or 6 bars on the fourth quill.

The Besra is said to be even better than the sparrow-hawk, but I have never seen one trained. They, however, appear to be very delicate birds, and more susceptible to chills than any other hawk. Two specimens which I succeeded in catching both died in under a week.

The sparrow-hawk or "Basha" as the natives call the female, the male "Bashin", is a very plucky little bird and exceptionally fast for a short distance. According to Blanford A. badius has been taught to take young pea-fowl and small herons, but this must be a mistake unless he refers to tiny chicks when he speaks of young pea-fowl, for a partridge is just about a "Shikra's" limit (and it is not every bird that will even get that length.

The "Basha" is widely distributed throughout this country in the winter, but in the plains of India it is more or less a visitor, though I daresay some may also breed in suitable localities. I have caught a "Basha" in Wazirabad, on the Chenab, in July, so stragglers evidently remain in the plains. Both the "Basha" and the "Besra" breed freely in the Himalayas and in the spring and autumn may frequently be seen soaring at very considerable altitudes and far above the limit of trees. All true hawks have a curious habit, when soaring, of giving half a dozen or so quick flaps every now and again and after every three or four complete rings.

EXILE.

The Story Teller.

THE EAST STEPS IN.

The Blundells had reached Kashmir. In front of them were six months lazing in the most beautiful country and best climate in the world.

They had three dooneghas to meet them at Baramoola. One a huge boat seventy feet long, shaped like a Thames punt, and with a house built on it of bamboo frame work covered with matting. This floating dwelling was divided into four, a sitting room with open verandah in front, a bedroom, and bathroom in the centre, and in rear of all the portion occupied by the Kashmiri crew.

The second and third dooneghas were smaller: one acted as a bed and dressing room for Captain Blundell, the other was used as a kitchen, and living boat for the servants. Mrs. Blundell was rather a society person and had entered upon this Kashmir trip somewhat under protest. Her friends however, assured her that even in Kashmir she would find ample opportunity for wearing the smart frocks in which her soul delighted. Moreover was not her special friend Captain Roderick of the 25th Lancers also to spend his leave in Kashmir. Blundell was a man for whom now the rod and gun were sufficing companions. He had once been fond of his pretty frivolous wife, but of late years they had drifted apart, both living their own lives without worrying as to how the other was engaged.

The day after their arrival in the Happy Valley, Mrs. Blundell intimated her desire that they should move up the Jhelum with all speed to Srinagar, where she expected to find some of her numerous friends.

Blundell readily assented, for he wished to choose a suitable shikarri and lay in store preparatory to exploring the numerous valleys.

The three dooneghas arrived at Srinagar without incident, and Mrs. Blundell was instantly carried off by a party of people whom her husband hardly even knew by sight! Geoffrey Blundell spent the day by himself, interviewing shikarries and buying stores.

On getting back he found that the big dooneghas had gone while there was a pencil note from his wife to say that she had joined her friends on the Dal lake, but had left Geoffrey the cook, and kitchen dooneghas, and no doubt he would get on all right by himself.

Blundell smiled grimly over the characteristic massive and having given orders for the two dooneghas to start up stream towards Islamabad, had a lonely dinner and turned in.

Next morning after chota hazree he sat on the bows of his boat looking at the scenery, as the dooneghas were towed up stream. The Kashmiris use broad leather loops to go over the shoulders while towing, and generally two in pairs. At the end of his tow rope Blundell saw the backs of his fine old boatman, and a slim girl whom he had not seen before. He could not of course see her face, but her height was less than that of the old boatman's daughter whom he had seen towing with her father on the way up to Srinagar.

The girl's head was uncovered and her black hair plaited into a number of tails hung to her waist. Her short skirt was of better material and more gracefully fashioned than the shapeless garments usually worn by Kashmiri girls. As she walked easily along straining against her strap, her slender ankles, and about a foot of slim leg were visible. Her skin looked to Blundell unusually fair even for a Kashmiri.

Geoffrey at once became consumed with a desire to see the girl's face. At length they reached a place where a side creek entered the river, so that the towers had to come on board while they were crossing its mouth

Instead of jumping on to the boat first, Kareema the boatman stood on one side while the girl sprang like a fawn on to the bows: she alighted close to Blundell and looking up met his expectant eyes. He thought he had never in his life before beheld so lovely a creature. The colour of perfect health glowed through the girls creamy skin. Her features seemed to Geoffrey to be perfection; while the eyes, great oval wells of brown crystal sent a strange thrill to his heart. Could such a girl be a Kashmiri, one of that deceitful, amiable, cowardly race? The determined little chin, and sparkling intelligent type of beauty of the whole face made this almost impossible to believe. Blundell determined to take the first opportunity of pumping his boatman Kareema, about the girl. That opportunity soon arrived for the old man, and the unknown beauty remained on board, while Kareema's nephew and daughter took their place at the end of the tow rope.

Blundell began by talking about shikar, and throwing in a skilful word here and there in praise of the old boatman's perspicuity, soon got him into high good humour. Gradually the subject of the dooneghas and its crew was worked round to, and eventually Geoffrey elicited that the new girl's name was Azeema and that she was the boatman's niece. Kareema hesitated occasionally in his account, and Blundell who had a considerable knowledge of the native and his ways came to the conclusion that the story was not true: why, however, the boatman should make a mystery about the girl, he could not conceive. Moreover the unusual act of standing aside and allowing Azeema to get on the boat first struck Blundell as extremely curious.

Having reached Bichpahara, Geoffrey had his tents pitched in the fine chenar grove which here borders the river. It was afternoon when they arrived and by the time the tents had been properly set up, and the things carried over from the dooneghs, it had become dusk.

Blundell saw Azeema walking off by herself in the gloaming towards the far end of the grove, so lighting a cigarette he made a detour to avoid the others seeing where he was going, and then walking fast soon sighted the girl among the trees. He was most anxious to talk to the mysterious beauty, and try to discover her history.

His feet made hardly any sound on the soft grass, and he came within three yards of the girl before she heard him.

"I want to talk to you Azeema" he said—she looked up with eyes which gleamed in the dusk, and answered simply "Yes Sahib."

"Kareema tells me he is your uncle, then is Gafara (the boatman's nephew) your brother?"

"Certainly not" answered the girl quickly. "He is only a cousin."

"I did not think he could be" replied Blundell "he is but an ordinary Kashmiri while you are beautiful enough to be a Princess."

"I am glad that my face pleases you" replied the girl naively, Blundell started; Azeema had used the familiar "tumm" of an equal to an equal.

"You are truly the most beautiful girl I have ever seen, there is no one equal to you." Azeema smiled mischievously.

"You have doubtless said those words to many before. Your lady wife is certainly far more beautiful than I, a poor Kashmiri boat girl."

"A thousand times no. Come with me beautiful Azeema and we will walk a little through the grove; see the moon is rising yonder—we will go to the edge and watch it come up above the hills."

He held out his hand. Azeema put hers confidingly into it and said simply "I come."

They walked across the turf beneath the great chenars to the very edge of the grove. The rising moon lit up the beautiful upturned face beside him, and Geoffrey felt his heart beating in a way it had never done when he was wooing his shallow little wife.

As though she read his thoughts Azeema said "How is it that your lady wife does not accompany you, but stays in Srinagar?" Geoffrey explained in easy Urdu the very loose relationship existing between them, how each had their own friends and aims, and saw little of each other."

The girl's only comment was that it was "very strange."

"And you Azeema, how is it that such a beautiful girl as you are not married?" "I married to a Kashmiri boatman" she cried in indignant scorn "they are all cowards, the people here: when I am married it shall be to a man."

"If you were married would you go with your husband everywhere, even to the wild jungle Azeema?" "If I loved and he were a brave man, I would stand by his side while he shot the panther and the bear. Nay I would also hold a rifle so that I might protect his life if his own gun failed. You are brave and tall and handsome, yet your wife cannot love you if she leaves you to hunt alone!"

Blundell's spirit was stirred by these strange words. What a comrade this girl would have made had he only been free. All thought of his companion being an Eastern and inferior to him had vanished. He felt she was equal in every way. She had a bold haughty little air and carried herself in such fashion that she seemed like a Princess in disguise. Although not an impressionable man he was yet strangely stirred by the girl, so beautiful and yet so unusual.

Azeema seemed to half guess his thoughts and went on. "But why should you and your lady wife remain bound together if there is no love?"

"But if my wife were gone who is there to take her place: no one else loves me that I know of."

"Surely there be many women who would be proud to have you as their lord. Also cannot a brave man seek? Girls do not offer themselves do they? Must not the man woo them?"

"And if I wooed you beautiful Azeema. Could you ever bring yourself to look on me with eyes of love?"

The girl threw an irresistible glance at him half coquetry half invitation. "God knows! I have not yet considered the matter!"

Blundell sprang towards her and sliding his arm round the slim figure cried impulsively. "Already I love you Azeema: if my wife were to go would you take her place?"

Azeema twisted nimbly out of the encircling arm and in a moment was a couple of yards off.

"That I have not even thought about" she said in English almost as good as his own, and with a flick of her short skirt, she had vanished amid the shadows of the trees.

The next ten days were bewildering to Geoffrey; never in his life had he felt himself so helpless as now that he had become enslaved by this mysterious girl. The straight forward flirtations of the English girls he had known seemed bungling and gauche beside the inimitable coquetry and alluring little ways of brown eyed Azeema.

So occupied was he with the girl, that he hardly now noticed the deference with which the boatmen treated her, nor the strange fact that their numerous interviews were never overlooked or interrupted, in spite of the proverbial curiosity of natives. The girl's excellent English was a puzzle to him, but he had now reached that stage of infatuation that he accepted all she did without comment.

One day he heard Azeema giving the boatman orders about some alteration to the roof, and asked her for an explanation.

"Oh" said the girl airily in English. "The boats are mine, Kareema is my servant, and I am what is it you call it?—your landlady" and she broke into tinkling laughter. Blundell laughed with her, and with his hand succeeded in imprisoning her little one.

Suddenly Azeema turned towards him. "Do you know that I saw you last year many times when you were in Kashmir before? and then I decided——but I will never tell you what I decided!"

Blundell held the slim fingers tight. "Never mind what you decided last year, decide something now——decide that you like me a little."

"I like you a little, a very very little" said Azeema obediently in English, with her quaint little accent which Blundell loved so.

"Well as you like me a little give me one small kiss" pleaded Geoffrey. In a moment Azeema had wrenched her hand away, and had vanished amid the trees.

Blundell threw himself savagely on the grass, without attempting to follow his tormentor.

In a moment Azeema had stolen up behind him, and before he was even aware of her presence, two small hands were placed over his eyes. He caught one and as he did so the girl dropped besides him. "Why do you torment me so child," he said reproachfully "I cannot believe you care for me an atom. I shall give up the rest of my leave, and go back to India. All these ten days you have only made me wretched. Yes you are cruel, and I will go" as he said this Geoffrey unwittingly played a trump card, for so forlorn did he feel at the mere idea of going, that his blue eyes filled with tears.

In a moment two slim arms round his neck, and a flower like mouth was pressed to his own.

"You must not leave your little Azeema, Geoffrey—say you will not."

Needless to say Blundell was passionately delighted with this sweet and unexpected surrender, and swore that nothing but death should ever part them.

The next six days were a dream of happiness. Azeema now quaintly and charmingly constituted herself companion and chum; she paddled the little boat while he fished, she helped him with his photography, and last insisted on shooting daily with his rook rifle. Her provoking coquettish ways had changed at once into a charming camaraderie. Never was there a dull moment.

On the seventh morning Azeema told Geoffrey that she must go to Srinagar and would return in a week.

"I have to go Geoffrey and you must not come." Blundell expostulated, and then Azeema for the first time stamped her foot in a gust of passion. "I tell you it is necessary for me to go. I am not the poor Kashmiri girl I seem, I have possessions. It is needful that I visit my uncle who is manager of my estates" then suddenly her mood changed. "Do you think I would leave my Geoffrey for a trifling thing? Soon I will be back again. You shall stay here and fish and make pictures until I return."

"Kiss me dear one and promise that every day you will say a hundred times" I love only Azeema.

Azeema had a masterful little way with her and Geoffrey found himself sitting resignedly on the bank, while she waved good-bye to him from a small boat which was paddled rapidly down-stream by four stalwart boatmen who had suddenly arrived the night before.

* * * * *

Mrs. Blundell was lazing in her boat at the Naseem Bagh waiting for Captain Roderick, who was to take her to see the silk factories that morning.

For several days past she had noticed strange people about, and when she asked her servants about them, received only evasive answers.

She was musing about this, when she heard the sound of a rapidly approaching boat. She looked out of her doongha expecting to see Captain Roderick: instead of that young officer she beheld a stately looking old Mahomedan in a very smart boat, with a red silk awning, and propelled rapidly by six smartly dressed Kashmiris.

Her butler entered the verandah of her boat, and said in an excited voice "The Nawab Gufarik Khan desires to speak with the Mem Sahib."

The Nawab stepped on board and after saluting her politely, seated himself in the basket chair to which she signed him. He at once said in excellent English.

"I have come to see you Mrs. Blundell in order if possible to avert trouble. I have a very troublesome niece, she is partly of European birth for her late father the Nawab Huros Mahomed married a French woman. Azeema was educated in France and England and is an extraordinary exception to all other high born Indian ladies in that she is very advanced in her ideas, and does exactly as she likes. We tried to keep her purdah at first but she ran away to the wife of the Resident here, and made things so very disagreeable for everyone, that we were glad to give her all the freedom she desired.

Now Azeema for some reason best known to herself takes a great interest in your husband: As I have never known her to be interested in any other man before, I fear the matter is serious.

Mrs. Blundell broke in "What is all this to me. I am sure I am not interested in a Kashmiri girl's infatuation for my husband."

The Nawab waved his hand "Wait I beg." It seems that Azeema has made herself thoroughly acquainted as to your relations with Captain Roderick. Her servants have been watching your movements not only here in Kashmir, but I learn that one of her men was all last cold weather in Delhi also, where your husband is stationed. I have come to warn you that I fear there will be serious trouble and scandal unless you leave Kashmir. The matter has gone too far for me to do anything. I believe Azeema has full proof that your relations with Captain Roderick are not such as your husband would tolerate.

Captain Roderick himself now came on the scene. The situation was explained to him.

Gufarik Khan then went on "I have a somewhat strange verbal message to you both from the Lady Azeema. Tell Mrs. Blundell and Captain Roderick that if they will leave Kashmir together I will pay his debts which I am informed amount to 20,000 Rupees, and I will settle £5,000 on Mrs. Blundell. If this offer is not accepted within three days I will lay the whole evidence gathered by my servants before Captain Blundell.

The guilty gasped at this high handed method whereby Azeema proposed to drive her rival out of Kashmir. Eventually, however, on the Nawab informing them of certain damaging items of evidence that would be brought forward, they decided to accept the terms offered.

A further stipulation was that Mrs. Blundell should write a letter to her husband stating she had gone off with Captain Roderick, and entrust it to the Nawab to be delivered after her departure.

At the same time by the same messenger Blundell received two letters: the one from his wife informing him of her flight, the other from Azeema desiring that he should come at once to Srinagar, and meet her in a house to which he would obtain access by a small door close to the river and just below the fourth bridge.

Blundell went: the boatman who evidently had been instructed, took him to some little steps and knocked at a small wooden door in a high wall above them.

Blundell went inside the door; it was instantly closed and he then found himself in darkness. A girl's voice said "Come," and a hand took his, he was led up the passage to some stairs. At the top there was a large walnut door at which his guide knocked sharply. The door opened, and the girl who was behind him pushed him unceremoniously through it.

Blundell gasped with astonishment. He found himself in a brilliantly lit sitting-room furnished and upholstered in English fashion. A radiant vision in embroidered silk and muslin stood looking towards him with outstretched hands. It was Azeema looking like a princess out of a fairy tale.

Her hands, neck and hair glittered with jewels. Her soft arms and throat were bare: her little feet thrust into gold embroidered Moorish slippers.

Her short skirt and jacket were of creamy silk embroidered with gold and silver thread.

Azeema seeing that he hesitated, astonished, rushed into his arms with a glad little cry, one of her little slippers tumbling off as she ran.

Blundell picked her up in his arms like a child and kissed her again and again. She lay there smiling up at him happily, one little foot bare the other with the gold slipper balanced on her toes.

It was the supreme moment of their lives.

Solution to Problem No. 55.

A must go on with spades, for he cannot open clubs or diamonds without the possible loss of a trick, and it would clearly be wrong to lead a trump up to the declarer. Now B has not begun to call for a ruff, and of the three outstanding spades, therefore, he holds either—(1) king, 10, 9; (2) king, 10; (3) king, 9; (4) king only; (5) 10, 9; or (6) none at all. A should accordingly lead the knave of spades. In cases (1), (2), and (3) this will either gain him a trick or enable B to force a trump, and in cases (4), (5), and (6) it makes no difference whether he leads the knave or small one. If B ruffs spades he will probably lead a club, and this may enable A B to establish a double ruff.

Wheeling.

EIGHTY-FIVE MILES AN HOUR.

In rather unsettled weather Mr. F. Newton created fresh speed records on Mr. S. F. Edge's 60 h.-p. Napier motor-car, at the Brooklands Automobile Racing Club track, at Weybridge on the 18th instant. He started at 10-50 A.M. with the intention of making improved times for the fifty miles record of Mr. Charles Jarrott, the 100 miles, the 150 miles, one hour, and two hours records of Mr. W. E. Clifford-Earp. In this Mr. Newton succeeded, as he lowered the fifty miles record by nearly a minute, the 100 miles by over eight minutes, and the 150 miles by over twelve minutes. It was soon apparent to the spectators that the hour and two hours records would be improved upon if the Palmer corded tyres on which the car was running would hold out. This they more than succeeded in doing, as eighty-five miles was accomplished in the fifty hour, and the total mileage was over 169 miles when the bell rang to denote the second hour had elapsed.

It was a splendid performance, both of the driver and the car, as for two hours the Napier with its driver averaged a speed of nearly eighty-five miles per hour, while the Elliot speedometer showed that the fastest speed the car attained at any one moment was at the rate of ninety-seven miles per hour.

Fortunately, the only mishaps that occurred during the run were the breaking of the flexible driving-rod of the speedometer after thirty-eight miles had been done, and just before the fifty miles were completed a joint of the pressure air-feed to the petrol tank gave way. This latter misfortune compelled Mr. F. Newton to rely upon his gravity-feed petrol tank, which, fortunately, served him well. But the breaking of the flexible driving-rod of the speedometer was more serious, as it entangled itself with the steering-gear, and caused him to make a very awkward swerve wide on the railway side of the track. Fortunately, he steadied his car, and the bracket carrying the rod broke away and freed the steering-gear, while the remaining 100 miles were completed with the flexible rod trailing on the ground out of harm's way.

An interesting feature of this notable driving performance was the behaviour of the four Palmer tyres. These were inflated to 60lb. pressure on starting. While Mr. Newton was making his records it was noticed that the front off-side wheel was inclined to leave the ground a little over the rougher portions of the track. On testing the pressures in the tyres at the conclusion of the run it was found that the pressure had risen to 75lb. for the two back tyres, 70lb. for the near-side front tyre, and 75lb. for the off-side one, which was inclined to bump a bit. Very little wear was visible on all the tyres, which stood up well and did not become unduly heated. Two heavy showers of rain took place during the run, which made driving difficult while the rain lasted, but otherwise the weather was favourable.

50 miles	...	35mins. 7.56secs. = 85.413 m.p.h.
100 miles	...	1h. 10mins. 20.31secs. = 85.302 m.p.h.
150 miles	...	1h. 46mins. 6.17secs. = 84.82 m.p.h.

One hour, distance covered was 85 miles 555 yards.

Two hours, distance covered was 169 miles 615.6 yards.

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself has said,
As he stubbed his toe against the bed,
! ! ! ? ? ? ! ! ? — !

These motor-cars are getting terrible. The papers the other day recorded the case of a gentleman chauffeur who ran through all his money.

An old country gentleman returning home rather late, discovered a yokel with a lantern under his kitchen window, who, when asked his business there, stated he had only come a-courting.

"Come a what!" said the irate gentleman.

"A-courting, sir. I'se courting Mary."

"It's a lie! What do you want a lantern for? I never used one when I was a young man."

"No, sir?" as the yokel's reply; "I didn't think yer 'ad, judgin by the missis."

CALCUTTA RACES—SEASON 1907-08.

This tenth extra meeting has brought to a conclusion the most successful season ever enjoyed by the Calcutta Racing public. They were indulged in 23 days' racing as against 21 in 1906-07 and 131 events were decided. The new stands provided excellent accommodation for all, the course wore very well considering, and the public were enabled to see racing of a high order under probably more comfortable conditions than obtain anywhere else in the world. Grumbles there have been, and always will be, as perfection in anything is, we are told, impossible of human attainment and even at best is always a question of point of view, so that under any circumstances it is doubtful whether it would be possible to please everybody. In one of the few points on which there was a legitimate grievance at the beginning of the season, the handicapping, there has been the most marked improvement and those responsible are greatly to be congratulated on the way in which the horses have been brought together in race after race during these last few meetings. As a corollary of this it has been emphatically an outsiders' year as, of course, the better the handicapping the harder it is to spot the winners and since the first few extras the outsiders have turned up trumps with most unpleasing frequency for the noble army of punters. Timings have maintained a very good average and on the whole show that the standard of animals racing here is still steadily improving. The most sensational performance was Sea Spray's 6 furlongs in 1-13¾ on 11th January, being the mare's fourth win in succession over this same distance.

There was quite an incursion of English jockeys here, Killorn, Templeman, Blades, Colin Barrett, Bray and Robbins all staying till after the second meeting. Of these Killorn who is a very clever horseman, secured the best record with 6 wins and 3 seconds out of 18 rides, which is indeed the best average of any jockey riding in Calcutta this season. Robbins was riding for an unfortunate stable and his figures of 3 wins and 5 places out of 29 rides is not so good as he deserves. Templeman, had the misfortune to go sick at one time in the season and has not been at his best despite his 5 wins and 7 places. Young Barrett has come on a lot since he last rode over here and shone especially in long distance races in which he rides with much greater judgment than the majority of the boys. Tommy Melsom heads the list of winners but he has been favoured with a good deal of luck, and the great veteran, Jimmy Robinson, still holds indisputably the right to the title of Calcutta's leading jockey. Age does not seem to tell upon him at all and a record of 60 rides with 10 wins, 6 seconds, and 11 thirds is one that many a much younger man may well envy.

Clark Hoyt still remains easily our premier man over fences and for beauty of style and perfection of judgment would be very hard indeed to beat.

Among the G.R.'s Mr. Evers, who is the only light weight riding regularly in Calcutta is again easily top of the list with 7 wins and 18 places out of 47 rides. His added experience is having its effect and he has come on a lot since last season, putting in one or two uncommonly good rides. Captain Holden has the remarkable record of only being once unplaced out of eleven mounts and he is doubly to be congratulated that his five wins and five places were nearly all obtained on his own mounts. Among the new men none have put in a sufficient number of rides to enable an opinion to be formed of their capabilities, but some of them seem to shape well and it is to be hoped will be ready to take the places of their seniors as the latter drop out.

J. D. Scott with his own string in addition to those of Messrs. Deakin, Marshall and Paris, is not unnaturally the most successful trainer of the season though Ferguson with Mr. Galstaun's enormous stable is not far behind and we heartily congratulate Piper on pulling off 11 wins with the not very brilliant lot of animals in his hands and thus securing third place.

As usual Mr. A. A. Apcar with his small especially selected string comes out a long way the biggest winner, the gross earnings of his stable, taking into consideration the win and place money amounting to no less than Rs. 51,900, while Mr. Galstaun's with a long way the largest number of horses in training and with 15 wins against Mr. Apcar's 8 comes second with Rs. 44,750. Mr. Deakin is indebted to that useful pair, Beaunero and Sea Spray, for a total of Rs. 15,500, while Mr. Holmes has scooped in Rs. 10,000 with Marmalade III. and Annamulloch. It is instructive to note the sudden drop from the big figures of the two owners heading the list, there being nearly Rs. 30,000 difference between the earnings of Mr. Galstaun who is second and Mr. Deakin who comes third on the list and of course so long as the principal prizes are for terms races, and not handicaps, so long will they go to the select few with the longest purses.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

There was a very pleasant day's sport for the wind up of the season on Saturday. Finishes were good, the weather was not too warm and though no actual favourites got home the winners, except in Morsel's race, were all well backed.

It was surprising the way they backed Runaway Girl for the pony race as Solace was in on better terms with her than when she beat her over the distance a month ago and both ponies running true to form the favourite got beaten by a length and a half by Mr. Field's mare. The winner was on offer at one time at sevens but they backed her down to threes at the finish.

The Amateur Pony Race furnished a big surprise as top weight, Envious after getting away badly won in the excellent time of 1min. 5⅗secs., quite a sensational figure for a hunter class pony with 12st. 12lb. on its back. It also makes Thelma pretty useful as if Mr. Galstaun had not eased up under the impression that he had the race in hand, he might have secured the race instead of being beaten by one and a half lengths and his mare was carrying 11st. 9lb., no mean packet.

The second sprinter consolation race was a very pretty one to watch as except for Abet who was left absolutely standing at the post, the whole field were well together past the distance and a blanket would have covered the first six when they finished. The issue was in doubt right up to the last few strides as Mereworth collared and almost passed the leader, Tana, at the distance, but the English mare came again like a good one and fighting it out pulled off the race by a length and a half. The next four animals were all together the official verdict being a neck between second and third, dead heat for fourth place, while the sixth horse was only just behind!

On paper form Mercedes looked a very good thing for the first half of the Second Farewell Handicap, but her appearance in the paddock did not create a very good impression, as she was looking thin and tucked up and Morette and Jack Sheppard came in for most support in the ring. The public's opinion was well justified as the second named made the running from start to finish and staving off a great effort by the former, who came up to him at the home turn. Mr. Walmsley's horse won in the fine time of 1min. 15⅕secs.

Mr. Galstaun's handsome Wolf's Crag colt Black Wolf was favourite for the second half of this race but he has probably not got into form yet as he was beaten one and a half lengths by Morsel in the not very good time of 1min. 17⅘secs., a performance on which no doubt he will improve a great deal in his second season when he is more thoroughly acclimatised.

The handicap of the last race of the day, a 1¾ mile Consolation, was absolutely spoilt by the impossibility of getting light weight jockeys and all for the sake of including the top weight Kaffirpan who did not start anyhow! If the weights had been put 2lb. heavier all the way round Kaffirpan's impost would, of course, have been a monstrosity but the others could have got jockeys and it would surely be better to give one animal an impossibly heavy weight than to condemn seven of them to declare excess.

The race itself furnished a magnificent struggle between the two favourites Merry Elsie and Clynder. The two English mares entered the straight almost together and after a most exciting run home Merry Elsie just got the better of it by a head. Young Trahan is to be congratulated on the skilful piece of riding which secured him his second win in the short time he has been over here this season.

The annual general meeting of the Calcutta Turf Club was held on the 11th instant. The accounts were passed and the following gentlemen elected stewards for the coming year:—The Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apkar, Mr. W. Garth, Mr. A. G. H. Macpherson, Mr. J. R. Stewart and Mr. J. D. West. The programmes of next season's racing was discussed, and it was decided to raise the stakes in certain races. All races in the first and second meetings will be worth Rs. 1,500 to the winners, while the Trials, the Metropolitan Stakes and the King's Plate, have been raised to Rs. 10,000, Rs. 3,000 and Rs. 1,500 for the first, second, and third horses respectively; and the Merchants' Plate has been raised to Rs. 7,000, Rs. 2,000 and Rs. 1,000. The dates for next season have been fixed and are as follows:—First meeting: 24th, 26th, 29th, and 31st December, second meeting: 16th, 19th, and 23rd January. Tollygunge steeplechases: 2nd and 9th January; with extra meetings on the 28th November, 5th, 12th, and 19th December and 30th January and an extra day's steeplechasing at Tollygunge on the 27th January.

The Simla summer race meeting has been fixed for the 11th, 13th and 16th June with an extra day on the 18th idem if sufficient entries are forthcoming. The Beresford Polo tournament will be held before the races, commencing on the 4th June.

The Secunderabad Novices Polo tournament was won by the Royal Fusiliers, who beat the 29th Lancers, in the final game by three goals to two. Details further on.

Horse owners are often compelled to tie their horses rather close in the stall, for fear of accident happening by the animals becoming entangled in a halter strap which is too long. A weighted hitching-strap is now to be had, with which the animal may have a good deal of liberty without any danger of this trouble. It consists of a piece of pipe with means of securing it to the woodwork of the stall, and a roller at the top over which the strap passes. A long weight slides up and down inside the pipe and the end of the hitching strap is secured to it. The weight takes up all slack, and the length of rope which it takes care of is sufficient to allow the animal considerably more freedom than if tied in the ordinary manner.

Those unfortunate sportsmen who have not been rushing onwards to wealth on the crest of the Coal share boom and who may be contemplating a return to the old country as a result of their ineptitude in the matter of the Pagoda Tree may be interested to read details of an enterprise that seems to give fairly decent returns. We cull the following from a London paper received by this mail:—

"The public examination of Thomas Cecil Mason, of the Haymarket, trading as Bishop Pie, was held at the London Bankruptcy Court to-day. He stated that from 1892 to 1900 he was intermittently employed as a Stock Exchange clerk. Since January 1904, he had carried on the business of a racing tipster, in connection with which he published from time to time a private racing journal called Bishop Pie's Weekly Notes. His income during the last three years had amounted to £20,000, but, owing to extravagance, he had spent it all, and now owed £1,056. The profession of the sporting tipster surely stands in jeopardy of getting overcrowded!

The final game in the Subalterns Polo tournament at Umballa on Monday last ended in a win for the 12th Lancers who beat the 15th Hussars by 3 goals to 2. Details further on.

H.H. The Aga Khan has presented a challenge cup for a polo tournament, which is to be played at Mahableshwar during the first week in May. The tournament will be held under I.P.A. rules, and under conditions that will not disqualify players from playing in Junior Tournaments. The entrance subscription for each team will be Rs. 40. All subscriptions to go towards purchase of four cups for the winning team.

A recent ten days meet of the Nagpur Hunt Club resulted in a record, if not in numbers, certainly in size and weight of boars killed. An average of between five and seven spears for ten days killed 23 boars averaging in height 32·3 inches and in weight 289lb. The largest measured 35¼ and weighed 319lb. On one day six spears killed seven pig averaging 33·1 inches. Last season the oldest Hunt in India accounted for 107 boars, and so far this year sixty have been killed.

The North-West Railway Institute Football tournament was concluded at Lahore on the 7th instant. Nine teams had entered and the final game was between the Right half and the Left of the Gloucester Regiment, the Left half winning by a goal to nil.

The M. C. C. tour in Australia concluded with the match against West Australia, which ended on the 16th instant in a draw.

The final game in the Punjab Native Army Hockey tournament at Lahore brought together the 14th and 15th Sikhs, a closely contested game resulting in a win for the 14th by two goals to one.

Among forthcoming hockey tournaments are the Banalore tournament commencing on the 6th April, the Aga Khan tournament at Bombay beginning on the 27th, and the Beighton Cup tournament in Calcutta during the same month.

Another noiseless firearm! We wonder what happened to the previous ones! Now we learn from the States that Mr. Hiram Percy Maxim, son of Sir Hiram Maxim, claims to have invented a "silent firearm," which, used with smokeless powder, may, he thinks, revolutionise warfare. The inventor says he got the idea while engaged in perfecting a silencer for motor-cars. The device can be applied, it is said, to the barrel of an ordinary firearm, and the gases are shut off just before the bullet passes. The valve is actuated entirely by the gas-pressure in the gun-barrel, and is free from all mechanism. After the bullet has passed out of the barrel the gases are allowed to escape gradually through small holes. This annuls all noise, except a slight hissing sound. The piston-valve is arranged to return to the open position when the gases have all escaped, and a safety device, working in connection with the firing mechanism, prevents the firing of a new cartridge unless the valve is in place. The construction is said to be extremely simple, the gun having the appearance of the usual rifle, with a small cross-piece in the barrel, about five inches from the end. Those who possess motor-cars understand the construction of a silencer and how the contrivance baffles or breaks up the sound wave. It would be a fairly large affair to attach to a firearm, and then there is the difficulty of cutting off the sound wave or explosive gases from the bullet just as they are exerting their greatest pressure of so many tons to the square inch. All things considered, we shall not give our trusty old 12-bores away just at present, but will calmly await the arrival of the "silent" firearm, which will probably make a considerable noise of some kind when it does come.

In course of a discussion at Bloemfontein, O.R.C., recently, between Sir Hamilton Goold-Adams, Governor of the Orange River Colony, Viscount Bury, and others, respecting the marching capabilities of the British Army, some doubt was expressed as to whether six miles an hour was a possible task for soldiers on the march. As a result His Excellency's Private Secretary (Mr. Courteney Shaw) undertook to walk three miles in less than half an hour for a cup offered by the Governor. Starting slowly, Mr. Shaw found himself 15 seconds behind time at the end of the first three laps, when Sir Hamilton gave permission to Mr. J. Mellett (ex-champion of South Africa) to pace the plucky amateur, and a marked improvement became apparent. At the commencement of the last lap Mr. Shaw was 7 seconds to the good and, with Mr. Mellett stretching him out, he finished in fine style, crossing the line in 29mins. 49secs., or 11secs. on the right side.

Seldom in the history of the Waterloo Cup have there been such upsets as occurred in its closing stages this year. As our readers have seen from our Special Telegram Mr. Hulton's Hallow Eve beat the Earl of Sefton's Silhouette ; winner and runner-up were quoted at 1,000 to 15 on the night of the draw. Hallow Eve was Mr. Hulton's third string so the extent of the upset may well be imagined.

Though a comparative newcomer in the coursing world there is no more enthusiatic follower of the leash than Mr. E. Hulton. He is the proprietor of several prominent Northern newspapers, chief of which are the Sporting Chronicle, Sunday Chronicle, and Athletic News, and it may be said that much of the present-day success of the enterprising firm of E. Hulton and Company, Limited, of Manchester, is due to the business acumen displayed by the owner of Hallow Eve.

Few coursers have been so lucky as to realise their ambition, that of securing the Waterloo Cup in such a short time as Mr. Hulton, for it was only last season that he was included amongst the select body of Waterloo nominators. In the pursuit of a candidate likely to realise his hopes Mr. Hulton has spent money fearlessly as his purchase of Platonic for 500 guineas and Fancy Lass for 250 guineas amply proves. Yet such is the luck of the game that it was left to the "unconsidered outsider," drafted in at the last minute, to repay him for his outlay. Curiously enough, Hallow Eve was his representative in the Cup last year.

Mr. L. Acland, a tourist and land owner from New Zealand, was badly mauled by a tiger while shooting near Khulna last Thursday. Mr. Acland had wounded a tiger which got away, and he was on foot when the animal burst out of the jungle on to him, seized him by the arm and was dragging him away. His shouts attracted the attention of his companions who were quickly on the scene. The tiger was shot and Mr. Acland conveyed to Khulna whence he was brought to the General Hospital here. Mr. Acland was very severely mauled and it has been found necessary to amputate his right arm below the shoulder. From latest reports we learn that he is making satisfactory progress towards recovery.

Many and various have been, and are, the preparations to take the place of bitches' milk in rearing pups, or to feed the offspring in conjunction with an ever-decreasing supply of mothers' milk during that trying and often fatal period of weaning.

We have in India so often tried, without success, to obtain a product which does not upset the digestion, is easily and quickly made, and which the pups will take readily and thrive upon, that it is a pleasure at last to be able to say that a preparation possessing all these essentials is now upon the London market. A few months ago we gave a thorough trial to "Lactol" in the weaning of a litter of Scotties and have since seen it used with conspicuous success in four other cases and every pup was got safely through the trying period of weaning without once going back in the slightest degree, losing condition or appetite : indeed we never saw healthier pups. It is well known that bitches' milk is about three times as strong as that of cows, and the makers of "Lactol" claim that their food when dissolved, as it very quickly and easily does, in three times its weight of water, forms a food identical in strength to that of bitches' milk ; that being so—and results from its use bear out that fact in a remarkable degree—it stands to reason that indigestion, diarrhœa, and other complaints so often noticed when cows' milk is used—are quite the exception. Breeders in India should hail the advent of "Lactol" as a boon and blessing : it is put up in tins, closely resembles fine flour or suttoo in its consistency, keeps well, and is easily made even by the veriest guddha of a native servant. We hope some of our leading chemists will stock it ere long.

Considerable interest was aroused by the billiard match of 4,000 up, at the Union Club, Lucknow, between Melbourne Inman, England's coming champion and Mike Elias, champion of India, Elias receiving a start of 1,500. The match was for a side bet of Rs. 250. Dr. Louis Bischoff, D.D.S., was referee.

Play opened on the 12th instant, but neither player was in good form, Inman having arrived in Lucknow the same day, after a tedious journey from Karachi. Inman's best breaks were 110, 84, 75 and 67. The score at the close stood :—Inman (scratch) 1,003 ; Elias (received 1,500) 2,046.

The match was resumed on the night of the 13th instant. Elias was in exceptionally good form and put on breaks of 23, 48, 47, 65, 77 and 95, the latter being his best performance. Inman was scoring more slowly than on the first occasion, though he put together 108 and a prettily played 169 mostly at the top of the table. The score stood :—Elias, 2,910 ; Inman, 1,955.

The match was resumed on the 14th instant, with play from 6 to 8 p.m., and again from 9-30, before a large number of spectators. Inman played very rapidly and by all-round billiards he ran up 179, the largest break in the match, his next best breaks being 135, 101, 87, 75, 59 and 41. Elias's best breaks during the evening were :—60 off the red, 43, 42, 38, 35 and 34. The score at midnight stood :—Elias, 3,722 ; Inman, 3,534. As it was impossible to finish the match, Inman asked the referee, Dr. Bischoff, to declare it a draw, and after a consultation between declare it a draw, and after a consultation between the players, this was done, the audience appreciating Elias's sportsmanlike conduct in giving way to Inman, with so many points in his favour.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes :—Three days' hunting have again been provided at Santa Cruz by the Bombay Hounds, and three excellent mornings' sport in the bargain. A brace of jacks were disposed of and another brace saved their brushes, all after long runs. Everything pointed to one of those getting away being our old friend who gives us a rare run and then mysteriously is non est. He took the exact line as before to the distant hills beyond Marole and over them. This time hounds kept the scent, but on returning to near the home coverts they had to cry second best.

On the extra day there was a kill after a very long run winding up in a thick wood and all were glad to see Mrs. Beatty, a fine sportswoman and a keen follower of hounds, presented with the brush ; she and one of the whips being first up at the death.

The first item of the Bombay Gymkhana Lawn Tennis Tournament has come to a close—The Marryat Cup. This last year was won by W. Reid who beat Capt. Lucas in the final. A surprise was in store as the former lost to J. Stuart Milne who is in great form. His deadly service stood him in good stead in the final as also his slashing back line drives and this left-hander scored a rather easy and popular win over Captain Lucas in the final by 6—0, 6—3.

Entries for other events are huge, the singles handicap being at present in progress.

Interest has been well sustained in connection with the Amateur Billiard Championship at Pyrke's Saloon. As I think I remarked last week, Pyrke scored an unexpected win over Hallam by only 3 points in 500 in the first of the semi-finals of the eliminating round. Meyer beating Hargreaves, met Pyrke in the final when the latter was seen very much below his form. Meyer played most consistently, soon established a lead which he made a hundred on entering his third century and eventually ran out by 500 to 390.

Meyer meets the holder, C. V. Louth, on Tuesday.

Another big crowd turned out at Mahaluxmi on Saturday for the Thirteenth Extra, when entries were large—so large that one race was split up into three. This was the Nursery Plate, in the first division of which fourteen started, with Balmoral a favourite from Colaba, whose first outing this was, but who has done great things on the track. Porter cut out the pace from Pootas and Clincher and the last came into the lead at the bend where Hooded Falcon and Colaba came up on the outside. It was a great race in which Clincher stayed the former out by a head. How good Colaba is may be gauged from the fact that he was last but one near the half mile, was twice put out of his stride by Kamad on Hooded Falcon and then came within three-quarters of him.

Nine went for the second with Respectable retaining favouritism from Meerdhan. Vendetta soon went to the front followed by Young Chand and Meerdhan and the front two had a race up the straight. Both with whips out were running dead level till C. B. got Young Chand in front on the very post.

Exciting as these two were, the third was more so, Viceroy and Saraband being practically equal favourites. An outsider in His Highness made all the running from the word go, Winter and the favourites coming to his heels on entering the straight. The finish down the straight was worth seeing, Saraband making a last effort and dead-heating. It was a nice bit of work on young Taylor's part, but the race Abdulla rode on His Highness was the finest thing we've seen him do. The Arab owner of Saraband was the cause of no little amusement, refusing to agree to any suggestion till he had the matter explained to him and divided. The first race was cut out in 1-37 and the last a fifth more, which only further proves how good the new ones are.

In the Little Maiden Plate fifteen faced the starter with Amood favourite from Moscow, Basheer and Happy Land. Happy Land confirmed my last week's remarks about staying as at the entrance to the straight he shut up like a book. Here Huzza came out into the lead, but Taylor had Moscow well in hand and came away to win fairly easily from Amood who came late.

Only five started for the Kempton Park Plate when a great run on Alruna made this whippy mare favourite from Lady Metal. Spirea cut out the early running with Alruna, who led like a winner into the straight and had a bit in hand to stave off Lady Metal's run. Epitome a poor third.

A fine betting race was the Andheri Plate of a mile and a quarter till Rashad firmed to two's from Dumra and Nooman. The race was a good one, Gladiator cutting away with Alma at a great pace, Rashad and Nooman next. At the straight Dhamas made a run, but fell away and at the three Rashad caught the leader and passed him. There was a bunch behind him but he was going when Moonib Pasha popped up on the outside Rashad just got home by a neck.

The Spring Plate of a mile saw money for Zotique, Admiral Crichton, Baritone and Mother Goose, who wound up in that order in the betting. Zotique, Crichton and Faded Lily took it in turn to lead and the big horse took it again at the three and going well looked good in the straight. Baritone and Mother Goose made their efforts when Zotique came through and had them all beaten. A good mare this to win over six in classy company and now over a mile.

But little space is needed for the Jackal Club Plate, a mile handicap substituted for the Pony Hunters' Flat, which did not fill. There was only money for Haphazard and Blarney but neither did any good ; the former third in a field of seven. Mr. Hill soon went away on Archie, and Good Luck and Haphazard settling down next were in the same positions when they passed the post.

"Your dead husband wor a good man," declared the pathetic Mrs. Casey to the bereaved widow.

"He wor!" exclaimed Mrs. Murphy, dashing the tears from her eyes. "No two policemin cud handle him."

London Week by Week.

Friday, 28th February 1908.

I open my letter this week with a tale of woe Early last Saturday, a few hours after I had mailed you my last budget, a south-westerly gale of great violence began to sweep over Great Britain and continued with unabated fury till well into Sunday morning. An old Quai Hai, whose service in India was confined chiefly to Dacca and the adjacent districts, writes me from Manchester that "it was a regular Eastern Bengal tornado and the havoc it caused was prodigious." The papers show us convincingly that immense damage was done, both inland and on the sea, and several fatal accidents are reported. Almost every part of the kingdom suffered from the strong wind, and in parts it reached the force of a veritable hurricane, the visitation being the result of a cyclonic disturbance of great magnitude and intensity. One effect of the storm was to delay communication of all kinds—telegraphic, telephonic, railway, and tramway—and the destruction of buildings was a marked feature of its violent passage.

Its effects were most serious in the north and the midlands, but even in London we feel something of it and your scribe considered he chose the better part when he devoted Saturday to the fireside, tobacco and a new book and took metereological observation from behind the window panes. The tale of disaster is a very long one. Naturally shipping casualties were numerous and many were attended by loss of life; buildings in many counties collapsed; enormous destruction was done to mills and premises in manufacturing districts; the Alexandra Theatre was blown down at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, a hotel at Stoke on Trent was struck by lightning; churches were not exempted from the storm fiend's operations; a train on the Donegal line was blown off the rails (Northern Bengal Railway fashion) and many passengers were hurt; but the gruesome list grows too big. Every sort of sport and outdoor pastime suffered. Race meetings were either abandoned or held under wierdly unpleasant conditions; football stands were overturned, many spectators were killed and injured, scores of matches were unplayed. In the fen country, where the weather is described as "terrific," a funeral was thrown into utter disorder by the toppling over of the hearse which was smashed to pieces.

But I could almost fill The Indian Field with details of the distressing and humourous incidents of this gale—which by the way I find precisely foretold in "Old Moore's Almanack" the date given as between the 21st and 24th—near enough methinks! But let me write about something else.

So the steamboats are to go after all, and London's dustless highway will no longer be open to those who prefer the river to motor buses. We expected it, but we none the less regret it. Economy is the order of the day on the L.C.C. It was made the platform at the Election and the Moderates, if they are to justify their position at all, must save all the money they can. The steamboat service has never paid and is therefore an obvious, though a comparatively small economy, and a certain percentage of Londoners must suffer. There does, however, seem to be a phase of this disappearing steamboat trick which must be classed as doubtful economy. Why are the boats being "scrapped" without any effort to recover the capital expended on them? Not so much as a ha'porth of paint is to be provided in order to sell them in a better market. This is moderation indeed, we seem to see a new cry for the next L.C.C. Election, not "It is your money we want," but "Sell, sell, sell." Sell everything, spend nothing, and then go for praise and thanks to the ratepayer.

Lovers—and praisers—of past times (and among Anglo-Indian exiles many there be) will be glad to learn the incorrectness of the rumour announcing the forthcoming dissolution of Rosherville Gardens. The environs of London are none so rich in rural features that the loss of the familiar and agreeable resort can be witnessed without regret. The place to "spend a happy day" may not be reopened until next year, and meanwhile there is no prospect of the grounds being absorbed for building purposes. Thus another "lung" is saved. What this metropolis would be like without the Crystal Palace, on the South, and the Alexandra Palace, on the North, it is hard to imagine. Rosherville was always a place of far better class than the North Woolwich Gardens. "Hornpipes, rum, and larking" were the order of the day in the latter place.

While human nature continues to be an unchanging quantity, it is not a little remarkable that the taste of the Londoner should have completely altered. If fifty years ago it was pleasant to sit in an arbour and drink tea; to watch conjurers and fire-balloons; and to dance more or less stately measures to the inspiriting strains of a string band, why should it not be equally agreeable to-day? The all-conquering builder is alleged to be the chief demon of destruction—the principal and implacable enemy of romance and "rurality." Locomotion is cheaper and easier to-day than it ever was, but not only on the fringe of London has the pleasure garden disappeared. It has practically faded everywhere, and motor-cars search for it in vain. The "Paris in London" scheme promised for the Strand last year has fallen through. Truly Earl's-court has ministered to the enjoyment of thousands, but Earl's-court is not a "tea garden," and it charges a shilling for admission. Who will revive the simple sylvan glories of Highbury Barn and the St. Helena Tea Gardens at Rotherhithe! And who will bring back into merited popularity the cheap and succulent shrimp, a dainty whereof thousands of young Englishmen are absolutely ignorant! Young Aladdin ordering "Two teas, two toasts. Hurry, attendant nymphs!" was reminded by the Widow Twankey, "And don't forget a half-a-pint of shrimps." Several of our old burlesque artists obtained their inspiration from the pleasure-gardens of the capital—Charlotte Saunders, the queen of burlesque at the Strand, performed at Rosherville—for they formed an essential part of the social life of our people. Now they—and the shrimp—have gone together.

Doubtless the bulk of your readers will read the following paragraph with the disgust all such intelligence provokes in the minds of Englishmen who know their India, it is from the "D.T.":—

"Romance has entered the life of the proud and splendid Maharajah of Kapurthala, according to a wondrous tale of the potentate and a beggar-maid told by Le Journal. Some years ago the Delgados, father, mother, and two little girls, lived at Malaga on the proceeds of a fried-fish stall at a street corner. They went to Madrid to better themselves, and the two little girls learnt dancing. The 'Hermanas Camelias' were tiny stars just beginning to sparkle on the music-hall stage in Madrid at the time of Alfonso XIII.'s wedding. For the latter ceremony the Maharajah of Kapurthala went to Madrid, saw the sisters, and was vanquished by the elder. He carried her off, gave her a palace in Paris, and masters and mistresses to teach every accomplishment befitting a princess. The other day Anita Delgado that was, the little Spanish dancing girl, whose father kept a fried-fish stall in the streets of Malaga, was married to the Indian Prince, and she is now her Highness the Maharanee of Kapurthala, and both are expected in Paris on their honeymoon."

How well Mr. Fred Terry knows his public! At the New Theatre last night he introduced us once more to the wonderful land of romantic drama. Here were the same highly-coloured, improbable incidents such as he has made so familiar through the plays of Mr. Paul Kester; here was the same bustle and noise; the same well-worn stage tricks; the same blundering villainy, and the same triumphant self-sacrificing hero, and here was a great audience, hanging on to every word of it, and applauding to the echo at the end of each act. Mr. Terry may only give us theatrical carpentry, but he has found another money-maker in "Matt of Merrymount."

The authors, Messrs. B. M. Dix and E. G. Sutherland, have paid careful attention to the rules of the game; they have not allowed their characters to talk very much without getting up and doing something, even if it is only the dancing of a minuet; there is generally something happening, even if it is only a wordy war between the heroine and her aunt.

Although Matt is discovered living a wild life in Massachusetts—period 1635—at the head of a gang of outlaws, he is really the grandson of an English nobleman, and has fled from England because he believes that he has killed his wicked cousin in a duel. When Diantha Frothingham, the daughter of the magistrate of the neighbouring town of Edgemouth, ventures into Merrymount disguised as a boy to consult a supposed witch, Matt detects her disguise, and saves her from the rough treatment of his followers. That is the birth of true love. It has a strange effect upon Matt; he apparently bids goodbye to commonsense for a season, and in order to obtain another glimpse of the little Puritan maid, goes to Edgemouth in broad daylight, thus courting capture. He then embarks boldly upon the self-sacrificing business, which leads him to the stocks, almost to the whipping-post, and results in his being bound as a bond-servant to the magistrate for a year. He takes it all without a murmur, and makes no attempt to escape. He makes successful love to Diantha, but when his wicked cousin appears on the scene, alive and well after all, the cousin buys him from the magistrate and sets to work to break him in. Even Matt cannot stand this; he kicks at last. "holds up" the room with a pistol handed to him by Diantha, and escapes to the mountains while this slip of a girl holds the door against four strong men. A heroine indeed!

It is almost superfluous to add that Matt comes into his own at last and is free to marry Diantha.

Fortunately Mr. Fred Terry is able to carry this sort of stuff off with an air. Matt presents a picturesque figure with his long curls and his belt crowded with huge pistols—which he never uses. Reckless and swaggering when in the wilds, he becomes sentimental at the sight of an English rose, makes love beautifully in the magistrate's kitchen, and rolls out his fiery speeches in the richest of voices. What more is required from a hero of romantic drama? The character of Diantha is rather colourless apart from the one big moment when she covers

"The Daly Trigamist," is not the title of a new matrimonial journal or Mormon monthly! It refers to the coming appearance at Daly's of "The Man With Three Wives," M. Lehai's musical play, recently produced in Vienna. The plot is an amusing one which revolves round the connubial calisthenics of a certain Don Juan, who has a charming wife in Vienna, and two bewitching unofficial "accordies" in Paris and London. Each of them has her "wits-off" through her hopeless infatuation for this pleasant polygamist, especially when he asks her to sing him a fascinating cradle-song. Complications arise when each happens to be "cradling" when the others are listening. That song should be set to the words of "There's only one girl in the world for me." It would seem that Captain Basil Hood will have considerable opportunities for exercising his ingenuity in making the play one which the daughters of Puritan England can safely take their parents to see. Personally, I await its production with an interest unusual in musical comedy productions. Its appearance just now as a West-En(d) production would be very topical, but such a plot will never be found behynd the times!

During the past week Mr. J. Maundy-Gregory's Company, including that superb actress, Mrs. Chas. Sugden—"the English Sarah Bernhardt," as she has been called—have been appearing in "Zaza" at Fulham. Originally produced in Paris when Madame Rejane had the part of her lifetime, "Zaza" scored one of the most brilliant successes in theatrical history, becoming the talk of two continents. As the weird, fascinating, unhappy, passion-swayed but self-sacrificing music-hall "star" Mrs. Sugden interpreted the whole gamut of feminine feeling with a vividity yet restrained artistry that held her audience spell-bound. Mr. Maundy-Gregory has indeed found in Mrs. Sugden an exponent of this role, whose mercurial and highly responsive temperament, allied to wide experience and savoir faire in the technique of her profession, have already placed her in the front rank. Mrs. Sudgen has never done anything finer than "Zaza." I will go further. "Zaza" has never had a more striking interpreter than Mrs. Sudgen, whom it is good to hear will appear in the suburban theatres on two or three further occasions during this tour. The part of the husband Dufresne, who leaves his home for the sake of his infatuation for this "goddess of the halls," and is eventually restored to his wife and child, is one which makes heavy demands on an actor's subtlety and resource. It finds that finished actor, Charles Sudgen, at his best. Mr. and Mrs. Sudgen are supported, moreover, by an exceptionally good company, in which Miss Anny Fauchette proves herself the best exponent of the drunken and evil old aunt, Rosa, I have seen. It was a remarkably strong performance.

Yet another great Indian official has gone over to the Great Majority since the year opened; Sir Denzil Ibbetson—as Reuter has no doubt informed you—died last Friday of cancer. With his Indian career you are, of course, better acquainted than we are. In January this fatal malady compelled him to resign, "amid innumerable proofs of regret and sympathy from all classes of the Indian people," and notably from the Mohammedans of Lahore and the Punjab. We may echo now the remark made by the Pioneer Mail on his leaving India: "It is one of those pathetic circumstances that touch the minds of all men that a cloud of sadness should suddenly have gathered over a career which, till its close, had known nothing but brightness and brilliancy."

VAGRANT.

Shikar.

A BRACE OF BEAUTIES.

Among my trophies are two fine black buck heads measuring 24 and 24¼ inches respectively. They are specially notable owing to the fact that both came from the same herd. They were not, however, shot at one time; the 24¼ was bagged on the 25th March 1902, while the pair buck was not shot until 2nd January 1903, over nine months later.

The history of these two bucks is rather interesting as it illustrates how antelope, as well as gazelle, cling to one locality if undisturbed.

After camping for five weeks at Nyagaon, we were marching back to Agra. Nineteen miles from the latter there is a considerable stretch of uncultivated ground. The country there is flat, the rocky sandstone ridges typical of Jagner and Nyagaon having been left behind. It is not however a plain, but rather a succession of glades divided from one another by large clumps of thorny bush.

One notable landmark there is a good sized banyan, a rare tree in that district. When its scarlet figs are ripe it is a sure find for green pigeons (Crocopus phœnicopterus). Close to and north of this banyan there is an expanse of low lying grassy plain, which becomes swampy in the rains.

While on this march, I had another man D—with me who was very anxious to have a shot at a black buck. As he had no rifle, I lent him my ·28 Stevens, and we made a cast through the glades, searching for antelope. We soon found that there were a number about, all apparently belonging to one herd but much scattered around.

After a short time we sighted a buck with a good head, and as D—was new to the ways of Indian game I helped him to work up within shot.

This black buck had evidently never been hunted before and we had no difficulty, assisted as we were by the numerous thorn clumps, in getting up within easy range. D—however was bothered by the Lyman sights on my rifle and missed. Strange to say even then the buck did not go far, but after reaching the grassy plain near the banyan tree, halted within shot of a clay bank. D managed to get up behind this bank without much trouble, and had a second shot, missing again. This last attempt rather alarmed the buck, and he went off at a gallop, but circled widely round and went back towards the grass glades, and vanished amid the bushes. D—was greatly disgusted and declined to shoot any more.

The animal he had shot at struck me as having a goodish head of 22 inches, or thereabouts, but neither of us thought it was anything much out of the way.

D—having given up, I took the rifle, and followed warily in the direction the antelope had taken. The does that were scattered about had not been alarmed by the light report of the ·28, and consequently seeing the rest of the herd looking peaceful and unconcerned, the buck had slowed down and joined them. When he saw me coming along again in the distance he was suspicious, but not really frightened, and only went off at a walk. A couple of does followed with him, and I went cautiously and warily after the trio, taking advantage of every friendly bush to keep out of sight. After some time spent in this way, a piece of favourable cover enabled me to make a detour, so that by hurrying I reached a bush clump about 150 yards from the line the animals were taking. They walked slowly past, and then the buck halted for a moment to look round. I had to shoot standing, there was no time to sit down for a deliberate shoot. As however I had been doing a lot of shooting at the time with the ·28, and knew the rifle perfectly, I was not afraid of taking off hand shots. In this case my confidence was justified for the hollow bullet took the buck about the middle of the body, and knocked him down at once, in the thorough way which was characteristic of the good little ·28. On reaching the fallen buck I was at once astonished at the length of the horns. Somehow from the way the animal carried its head, and the set of the horns which were somewhat narrow in their spread, I had never thought that the buck was anything particularly good, though I had looked at him through my glasses. On applying the tape I found to my delight that the longest horn was 24½ and the other just over 24.

The buck had a fresh graze on the skin of one foreleg, which had been probably caused by one of the first two shots. D—after seeing this fine head became anxious to have another try, so again took my rifle, and we prospected anew through the glades. Suddenly as we were stealing along, there was a rattle of hoofs, and the whole herd which had been alarmed in some way we did not discover, dashed past us at a wild gallop.

Close to us, with his head thrown back, a buck swept by which seemed to both of us to carry a most beautiful head. The wide spread horns made almost an equilateral triangle, and in that momentary glimpse I judged them to be about 25 inches in length.

D—had the rifle at half cock, and the passing of the buck was so sudden and unexpected, that he had no time to raise the hammer and try a flying shot.

The memory of that wide head haunted my dreams, and nine months later I decided to go down to Kagerol, to hunt for its owner.

This time I was alone, but I still carried the faithful and dependable ·28.

I sent on my camp early in the morning in a bullock cart to Kagerol, giving the cook instructions to pitch the eighty pound tent in a mango tope just beyond the village.

I followed in my trap, starting late and taking the sixteen miles of sandy road so leisurely that it was evening before I arrived at Kagerol.

The haunts of the historic buck were only three miles further on, so next morning early I walked out to the place.

From glade to glade I stole for long in vain. At the banyan tree my hopes were raised by spying two bucks out on the grass plain, but the glasses revealed poor heads. At length having worked up towards the west of the uncultivated land, and when almost despairing of finding the buck I was after, I suddenly saw some does among the bushes. Soon after I viewed two bucks but neither of them was the good one. I felt sure I should know his head with its wide long horns anywhere.

I circled to avoid the scattered herd and then soon after we had cleared them my man, Kassim, signalled to me with his hand. His keen ears had caught the clash of horns. I listened and heard the unmistakable sound of bucks fighting.

On we glided and at last three hundred yards or more away we saw an interesting group. Two bucks sparring furiously, while three more looked on.

When the spectators came into the field of my glasses, what a thrill of excitement ran through me, for I recognized at once the well remembered head, with its unmistakable angle!

The subsequent proceedings were alas! all too tame. I noted a clump of bush growing about a hundred yards from the combatants. My plan was to work up to this and shoot round the side of it.

Other bushes helped me, and the antelopes themselves were all absorbed in the sparring match so that I reached my selected cover without the slightest difficulty. After pausing to regain breath and steadiness, I peeped round the thorns, and saw the monarch of the herd broadside on; and only ninety yards away. At such a range there could be no doubt as to the result. The hollow bullet from the ·28 went home and the buck fell on his side.

I sat down and put in another cartridge, and then while the four other bucks were hesitating, shot the next best. After that I ran up to measure the master buck's horns. Alas! the 25 inches I expected proved only 24, when tested by the inexorable tape!

Still the head was a beauty, and it was certainly strange that there should have been two such magnificent specimens in the same herd.

Radiol.

THE ONLY ADVANCE FOR 60 YEARS IN THE TREATMENT OF LEG TROUBLES IN HORSES.

It is no longer necessary to wait until your Horse drops lame from damaged legs, parts of which have become inflamed through over-strain at a critical moment, or from the wear and tear of everyday work.

RADIOL LEG WASH checks Inflammation, is sedative and cooling in action, and is also a diffusible stimulant, dissipating the products of these inflamed centres before they become hardened into fibre and bone, and by its sedative action takes away the pain: the cause being removed, the Horse becomes sound.

The tendency for bony enlargements to be thrown out in certain positions on the legs of the Horse is hereditary; but they can be checked in their primary stages when the Horse first goes lame, as they are then simply inflamed patches of the skin covering of the bone (periosteum).

Strained parts, tendons, and ligaments can also be quickly restored. Horses which have broken down will become sound in a fraction of the time spent over the old methods of blistering and firing, and without disfigurement or removing the hair.

A regular daily use of RADIOL LEG WASH prevents inflammatory changes in a horse's legs, keeps them firm down, and fit and strong.

An intelligent use of the RADIOL LEG WASH counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of RADIOL will make a Gallon of valuable Leg Wash.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse, as Sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, &c.

No Blister; No Laying Up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs, and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints & Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

Accidents may happen, but "Radiol" checks inflammation in a few hours. Reduces swellings, relieves pain.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS FOR RADIOL.

King's Langley, Chippenham, Wilts, July 5th, 1905.
Dear Sirs,—I should be glad of one of your pamphlets, having mislaid mine (red booklet). I have a high opinion of "Radiol," which I have found most efficacious in reducing filled legs, &c., and for hunting accidents of a mild character, and I always keep it. Yours faithfully, M. PHILLIPS.

Bearsby Old Hall, Leicester, 19-1-06.
Dear Sirs,—I have found "Radiol" most efficacious in removing [illegible] splints; and in one instance where puncture firing [illegible] resorted to, the splint disappeared, although of long standing. This was an aggravated case which had given much trouble. I found the leg-wash most useful after hunting.
Yours faithfully, D. C. JOHNSTON (Major).

The Lodge Farm, Kineton, Warwick, June 5th, 1906.
Dear Sirs,—I am in receipt of the two bottles of "Radiol." I have been using it on windgalls on a trotting pony. They were extremely bad, very hard, and of long standing. I am very pleased to say that your liniment has done them more good than I could have possibly hoped for. They have almost disappeared, and I feel confident that two more bottles will effect a thorough cure.
Please enclose me cheque for £1 10s., in payment of your account and for two more bottles, which please send immediately.
You may make any use you think fit of this letter.
Yours faithfully, BASIL HANBURY.

Broad Oak, Sembley, Wilts, June 22nd, '05.
Dear Sirs,—I applied the "Radiol" you sent me to the hind fetlock of a pedigree Jersey cow. The enlargement was of some standing [illegible] was lame. The enlargement was considerably reduced [illegible] tenderness disappeared.
Yours faithfully, T. SEALY CLARKE (Capt.).

Swanage, April 30th, 1906.
Sirs,—I consider "Radiol" a very valuable preparation, as it [illegible] all soft swellings.
Yours faithfully, H. J. CLARK, L.R.C.P., Lond., M.R.C.S.

Forda, Black Torrington, North Devon, March 29, 1906.
Dear Sirs,—I have pleasure in informing you that after using one bottle of your "Radiol," I completely cured a mare suffering from a big knee, the result of a hunting accident, when several other things I had tried had failed. I also find it is invaluable for keeping horses' legs fine. Yours truly, H. ROY STOCKER.

Hill House, Carhiel, January 30th, '05.
Dear Sirs,—I used part of the bottle of "Radiol" on a hunter that had a large swelling on seat of thoroughpin. It reduced it considerably and he has been doing his work regularly since. I also tried it on a recent knock on shin bone of foreleg, and it quite reduced it in three or four days. I have highly recommended it to my friends. Its great advantages are that it leaves no mark and the horse can be worked while using it. Yours truly, J. W. MURPHY.

52, Robieson Street, Stalybridge, November 11, '05.
Dear Sirs,—Will you kindly forward me one more bottle of "Radiol" as it is doing very well to a horse with strained tendons. I enclose Postal Order 5s. Yours truly, ALLEN GARSIDE.

THE USES OF RADIOL.

BY "VET."

Of "The Farmer and Stockbreeder," etc., etc.

WHEN a convenient quantity of Radiol reached me, I was agreeably surprised to find the modesty with which it was recommended, and when putting it to physical and analytical tests I was at once struck with its probable value.

I have given Radiol a fair trial in my own practice, have questioned other practitioners as to their results, and have placed it in the hands of the most careful users, whose employment of it would give fair opportunity of ascertaining what results might be expected of intelligent nurses who received the preparation disguised by other labels than that of the makers. The result is, I confess, a surprise. When one has had forty years' experience of wind-galls, bog-spavins, capped hocks, thoropin, and such-like swellings, and tried all the officially and unofficially approved remedies with but occasional success, and is aware that similar failure is the experience of others, it certainly does come as a surprise when one finds that, by Radiol, these obnoxious swellings are quickly and permanently cured. And yet the explanation is not difficult to the anatomist, familiar with the true pathological condition which gives rise to those apparently different diseases. They are, in fact, very much the same; hence the same remedy has the desired effect.

Take wind-galls and capped-hocks, for instance. What is a wind-gall? Well, it is not a "wind" gall at all. It is a name that has survived an ignorant age when it was supposed that such enlarged bursæ contained air. They, however, contain nothing of the kind. A wind-gall is an enlarged bursal sac. The unprofessional reader may ask, What is a bursal sac? The answer is briefly as follows: that is to say, wherever friction may occur between tendons, or from the passing of tendons over the bones, Nature provides little oil bags, which have the power of selecting from the blood circulating in their texture, a fluid which, to the eye, resembles glycerine, and to the touch, the finest lubricating oil ever produced; finer, indeed, than any oil as yet supplied for the most delicate instruments. These oil bags, issue just as much lubricating fluid as is required; so long as they remain healthy. When the strains of hunting or fast road work, or other labour, make an excessive demand upon them, or owing to strain of the tendons where they are situated, they become inflamed, the result of such inflammation of any gland or secreting surface is to alter the nature of the fluid or substance which is produced so long as it is healthy. This is the case with all those soft swellings of horses' limbs.

This, I find, is accomplished by the diligent use of Radiol, because it contains a direct sedative and anodyne which removes pain and restores greater mobility to the parts.

Its ingredients, I find, have the effect of reducing temperature, and of diffusing or radiating the swelling into adjacent parts where the absorbents are not wearied with past efforts to clear away the harmful products of inflammation.

A splint or spavin, ringbone or sidebone is, first of all, an inflamed membrane which, when allowed to run its usual course, deposits bone upon bone. I have tried Radiol as a "stopper," and can say that it has this most desirable effect, if the trouble is diagnosed immediately, and treated energetically.

It may be observed that the proprietors of Radiol do not make extravagant pretensions. They do not profess to remove an old splint or spavin. In their modesty, indeed, they hardly say enough in their recommendations for the early treatment of these frequent sources of lameness. It is one of the merits of Radiol that it does not blister or lay up a horse under treatment for many disorders. The makers are veterinary surgeons with a reputation of long standing, and they recommend common-sense methods and the utilisation of other substances as well, that will add to the efficacy of their remedy for particular purposes. Some of these I have tried. The massage motion advised for removal of old blemishes, the bandage at night, the fold of cotton wool and the leg-wash composed of a wine-glassful of Radiol, another of vinegar, and a teaspoonful of sugar of lead in a wine-bottle of water, are recommendations that prove helpful as well as economical to the user.

The majority of cases in which Radiol is employed is upon limbs, but there are other uses in which the remedy has proved specially valuable in my hands; namely, swelled glands. In place of the usual iodine preparations, Radiol is rubbed into enlarged parotid sub-maxillary and other glands, which are of such great importance to horse owners, because so liable to result in roaring, whistling, and thick wind, reducing the half-bred horse's value by half or more, and ruining the prospects of the race-horse and the hunter.

Bruises are dissipated by Radiol by fomentation, dry rubbing, and then an injunction of equal parts of Radiol and glycerine. The avidity of glycerine for water is utilised to carry in the Radiol and spread it rapidly as a diluent to the congealed blood. That it does so is evident in white-skinned animals by the absence of such staining as would be shown under other circumstances, and by the usual methods of treatment.

Though I have heard from others that it answers well, I have not tried Radiol for fistulous wounds such as those caused by the saddle or poll evil, or quittor.

Successful as have been the trials with quadrupeds, they are exceeded by those conducted on bipeds whose anxiety to get relief has made them more persistent in carrying out directions which are commonly regarded as troublesome until the benefit is realised.

Their use of Radiol includes the following troubles, viz., neuralgia, bruises, and strains incurred in golf and football, enlarged joints, housemaid's knee, rheumatism, and gout.

Persons who have been taking lithia citrate for uric acid troubles, and have found first one finger-joint and then another becoming swollen and painful, have resorted to Radiol and dispersed the swelling almost immediately, while relying on lithia or diuretics to carry away and eliminate from the body the inflammatory material which would otherwise have consolidated and left the joints permanently enlarged, and their mobility more or less restricted. Of even more value to the user has Radiol proved where the large joint of the big toe has been the seat of incipient gout or gouty rheumatism with a tendency to deposition of calcareous matter which presently might form a union of the bones: an anchylosis like that of spavin in horses.

Note.—Attention is directed to the fact that Radiol for Human use is specially prepared and sold only under the title "Radium."

Radiol.

THE ONLY ADVANCE IN 60 YEARS IN THE TREATMENT OF LEG TROUBLES IN HORSES.

What the Sporting Press says about "RADIOL"

The Field, June 16, 1906.

"Treatment for Horses' Legs.—We have lately had submitted to us for trial some bottles of 'Radiol,' a specific for leg troubles in horses. It is claimed by the makers that by this treatment the bad results of sprains, bruises, and inflammation can be quickly removed, while its special advantages are that there is no blister, no laying up, and no removal of hair. We have been able to test the above-mentioned samples in cases of wind-galls, splints, and puffy swellings, and have found 'Radiol' to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

County Gentleman and Land and Water Illustrated, June 23, 1906.

"A New Liniment for Horses.—Our readers may be interested to hear of a new liniment for horses' legs. This is 'Radiol,' a chemical liquid for the removal of soft swellings in horses' legs, such as wind-galls, bog spavins, capped hocks, sprained tissues, etc. This has been found a most reliable preparation by many well-known owners of hunters and stud grooms. We think that it should be specially noted that, unlike other drugs, it neither blisters the skin nor removes the hair, and what, perhaps, is of still greater advantage, the horse, while under treatment, can be worked as usual. We understand that the manufacturers have supplied it to nearly every civilised country, and that it is now being used in the leading racing and training stables of Europe."

Horse and Hound, August 4, 1906.

"The New Chemical Liquid.—Many hunting people and horse owners generally have had good reason to be thankful to that excellent chemical liquid, known as 'Radiol,' which is rapidly taking the place of blistering and unsightly operations in the treatment of leg troubles. For ugly and chronic soft swellings 'Radiol' is remarkably effective, and the claim is reasonably made that it is less harmful than water to a horse's skin. At the 'Radiol' Laboratory they are pardonably proud of the praise which has recently been given to the preparation by Mr. Basil Hanbury, who, it will be generally admitted, knows more about horses than most people. Mr. Hanbury, it appears, ordered two bottles of Radiol for his trainer, Sam Pickering, and two bottles for himself. A fortnight later Mr. Hanbury wrote as follows from the Lodge Farm, Kineton, Warwick: 'I have been using it on wind-galls on a trotting pony. They were extremely bad, very hard, and of long standing. I am very pleased to say that your liniment has done them more good than I could have possibly hoped for. They have almost disappeared; and I feel confident that two more bottles will effect a thorough cure.' This is praise, indeed, and should be marked by observant horse-owners."

The Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News, August 25, 1906.

"The Liniment 'RADIOL' manufactured by the Radiol Co. will be found invaluable for the treatment of horses. Sprains, bruises, and inflammation are rapidly reduced, and the various ailments of the legs are promptly got rid of. It does not blister or remove the hair, and does not involve laying by. It is a capital leg wash when applied after violent exercise, and is much used for polo ponies. 'Radiol' has been already widely adopted, and its beneficial effects are appreciated in most of the racing and training stables at home and abroad."

The Farmer and Stockbreeder, October 13, 1906.

"'Radiol.'—We have been asked to give a trial to the new remedy, 'Radiol,' which is specially recommended for all sorts of soft swellings, such as wind-galls, capped hocks and elbows, bog spavin and thoropin, enlarged glands, and any but permanent bony deposits. We find the preparation exceeds our anticipations, both in the measure of success obtained and in the time occupied in dispersing wind-galls and other enlargements. Whatever the active ingredients may be, they are disguised in highly rectified spirit, which, of course, adds to the rate of diffusion. The action appears to be due, first, to the subjugation of inflammation and pain by an anodyne narcotic; next, the restoration of healthy function; and, lastly, the absorption of the inflammatory products which constituted the bulk of the swelling. The claim is made for this preparation that wind-galls dispersed by it will not return under ordinary fair conditions of work. We have seen them go, and not as yet return, but a longer time would be necessary to prove the advertiser's claim in this respect. We will say this for 'Radiol': It is the best thing of its kind upon which we have experimented up to the present date."

The Sporting Times, July 14, 1906.

"'Radiol' is the name given to a new liniment for horses, and from the reports that reach us from racing and training stables it fulfils everything that is claimed for it. For the removal of soft swellings in horses' legs, such as bog spavins, capped hocks, wind-galls, etc., it has been found very beneficial, and, unlike other drugs, it neither blisters the skin nor removes the hair, and the horse may be worked while under its treatment. The Radiol Co. are its manufacturers, and, we believe, have supplied it to nearly every civilised country."

KARACHI HUNT. POINT-TO-POINT RACES.

Saturday, 7th March 1908.

This annual fixture was held at Landhi on Saturday the 7th inst. Special accommodation was provided on the 2 P.M. train and some 60 people including many ladies journeyed out to the Hunt Camp. To those, and there must be many, who have not seen this excellent institution before, the beautifully laid out camp and charming surroundings must have been a revelation, and it is all the more surprising that so few take advantage of the excellent week-end arrangements made by Mr. and Mrs. Graham and Mr. Robson for those who care to avail themselves of the chance of a hunt in a naturally sporting country. On arrival at Landhi, tongas were in readiness to convey the ladies the short distance which separates the Camp from the Station. Mr. and Mrs. Graham were "at home" and dispensed hospitality to all comers. Among the many ladies present we noticed Mrs. Crouch, Mrs Craigie, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Robson, Mrs. Sunday, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. Bradly, Mrs. Seabrooke, Mrs. Hewett, Mrs. Trydell, Mrs. Winsloe and her sister, Miss Osborne, Miss Mackenzie, Miss King-Hunter, etc.

PONY CUP.—Open to all ponies regularly hunted with the Karachi Hounds. 11st. 7lb. catch weights; to be owned and ridden by members of the Hunt, about 3 miles over country.

Mr. W. Graham's b w m	Dudds	...	1
Mr. H. T. Ryan's b w m	Lady Flo	...	2
Mr. Arnott's b a p	Dandy ...	...	3
Capt. W. Pritchard's gr a p	Nareen		4
Capt. G. Hill's gr a p	Jinoase ...	...	5
Mr. H. Mahon's gr ch m	Iveride	...	6
Mr. H. T. Robson's b a p	Pasha	...	0
Mr. A. Board's ch w m	Isabel	...	0
Mr. H. Mahon's b ch g	Stile ...	...	0
Mr. Smith's b w m	Fatima ...	...	0
Mr. Fletcher's b w g	Grasshopper	...	0
Mr. F. G. Stenart's dun w m	Mischief	...	0

From a good start Mr. Ryan on Lady Flo and Mr. Mahon on Iveride were the first to show in front. Three fences had to be negotiated early in the race and the whole field accomplished this without incident. From this point the course lay almost at right angles and the dry bed of the Malir river crosses the direct line to the turning flag. Two courses were open to the riders, either to go straight up the river bed or keep along the bank. The Master, whose sound knowledge of the country stood him in good stead, chose the latter course, and as events proved was right. Those who went up the river bed were early in difficulties and the intricate nullahs brought Captain Hill and Mr. Mahon to grief. Meanwhile Mr. Graham on Dudds had obtained a commanding lead, passing the turning point well ahead of the next competitor Captain Pritchard. On the homeward journey a deep irrigation channel caused some refusals and brought Mr. Ryan to grief, though he was up and off again at once. Dudds meantime was going beautifully and making no mistake won as he liked, a popular victory and a fitting wind up to her owner's generous and able Mastership of the Hunt. Mr. Ryan who had the worst of luck, was next home followed by Mr. Arnott on Dandy, Captain Pritchard on Nareen, Captain Hill on Jinoase and Mr. Mahon on Iveride in the order named. Most unfortunately for his owner Mr. Robson's Pasha, a winner on two previous occasions was lamed the day before the race.

HORSE CUP.—Presented by Mr. W. Graham. Open to all horses regularly hunted with the Karachi Hounds. 12st. 7lb. catch weights; to be owned and ridden by members of the Hunt, about 4miles over country.

Mr. A. Boase's b w g	Dawn ...	...	1
Capt. Hewett's b w m	Perry ...	...	2
Mr. A. Lucas's b w g	Shooting Star	...	3
Mr. C. S. Anderson's b w m	Jean	...	0
Mr. W. Llewellyn's ch w g	King Tom	...	0
Mr. W. H. Chapman's b w m	Arabella	...	(fell)
Mr. B. Newcommen's b w g	Rozzi	...	(fell)

The horse race which attracted five competitors was over a four mile course, the first and last part being the same as that for ponies. The start was eventful. At the first fence Arabella pecked badly and Mr. Chapman was thrown heavily, being temporarily incapacitated. At the same obstacle the popular whip had some difference of opinion with his mount, Shooting Star, a horse well known on the Karachi race-course.

At the second fence Rozzi and Peggy ran out and Dawn, well steered by Mr. Boase, went on with a long lead, completing the course in excellent style. Peggy ridden by Major Winsloe was second and Captain Noake on Shooting Star, third.

Rozzi when well up had the misfortune to fall at the water, Pride, who had carried the Master so well throughout the season was unfortunately lame and unable to compete.

PONY JUMPING.—Cup presented by Mr. L. Byng Stephens. Open to ponies 14-1 and under to be owned and ridden by members of the Karachi Hunt.

Capt. Hislop's b e m	Dazzle ...	...	1
Mr. W. Graham's b w m	Dudds	...	2

Eleven competed.

HORSE JUMPING.—Cup presented by Colonel R. Baker I.M.S. Open to horses to be owned and ridden by members of the Karachi Hunt.

Mr. G. O. Rose's b w g	Dawn ...	...	1
Mr. L. Byng Stephen's b w g	Commissioner		2

Five completed.

The Pony jumping which immediately followed the conclusion of the second race produced nine entries. General Westmorland, who kindly officiated as a Judge, had some difficulty in separating the first two or three. Dazzle, a nice free jumper, eventually won with her owner, Captain Hislop up. Of the others Isabel, Dudds, Kitty, Lady Flo and Pierrot, the latter nicely ridden by Miss Osborne, were the best. It was in this competition that one of the competitors performed an equestrian feat of no mean degree.

We all regretted that the sporting donor of the cup. Mr. L. B. Stephens, was prevented by illness from coming to see the keen competition for the trophy he had presented, but he will no doubt be pleased to hear that another prominent Karachi sportsman, overcome with a desire to emulate his example, has, we understand, promised a cup for the Horse jumping, which event concluded the day's programme.

Dawn ridden by his owner thoroughly deserved the judge's verdict, and of the others, Commissioner seemed the best.

It was now time for those of us who were not staying in camp to leave for the station to catch the 6-30 train, and General Westmorland having called for three cheers for our host and hostess, we returned to Karachi after a most enjoyable day.

The departure of Mr. and Mrs. Graham in the near future will be a source of deep regret to the Hunting community and all lovers of sport in Karachi. The establishment of the Hunt on a firm basis and even its very existence up to the present, has, in a large measure, been due to the liberality and untiring energy of Mr. Graham. We shall greatly miss Mrs. Graham's cheery smile and cordial greeting at the meets next season. Those of us who have been fortunate enough to have been able to pass a week-end at Landhi know what a debt of gratitude we owe her for all the trouble she has taken to make the camp a success and "keep the Tambaurin a roulin."

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

London, Friday, 28th February 1908.

THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK.

THE terrific gale of last week end made racing practically impossible, so under this heading I have but little to chronicle this week. An improvement in weather conditions on Tuesday enabled us to enjoy good sport at Kempton Park and concurrently witness a "National Trial." This, one of the most popular and important meetings in the London area, is so associated with first-class sport, even under National Hunt Rules, that it could almost afford to turn up its nose at a one-day meeting. The liberal scale on which the programme was framed bore excellent fruit in a capital afternoon's racing, in which plenty of quality leavened the card. The weather was on the side of the executive, sunshine predominating over cloud, and a mild afternoon, succeeding Monday's touch of winter, brought a strong attendance from London, to which, as ever, the South country meetings owe their mainstay. The going was just soft enough to be cut into, but afforded good galloping. Here are results of the best races on the card:—

LITTLETON HANDICAP HURDLE RACE—Of 150sovs.; second receives 20sovs. 2 miles.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

FOOTBALL in most of the big centres last week and this suffered the fate of many other sporting fixtures—the boisterous weather either put a stopper on proceedings or marred the play to the extent of rendering it a nuisance to those engaged and a penance to those looking on. In three places stands were blown down or damaged by Saturday's gale and in one case, at Lincoln, many people were injured. Naturally I have little football news to give you this week; but here are some details:—

AMATEUR INTERNATIONAL.

England, 1; Wales, 0. In a game played under the most unfavourable conditions, at Stockport, on the 22nd instant, England's amateurs scored the only goal, and gained a victory—well deserved, but not the outcome of any special excellence. Before the match started torrents of rain had saturated the turf, and the wind blew with the force of a gale. Consequently accurate play was quite impossible and even when playing with the wind behind them the forwards could not control the ball sufficiently to bring off any successful attacks. Indeed, the one goal which carried victory with it came from a low cross-shot by V. J. Woodward just before half-time. Facing the wind, the Englishmen, though showing superior skill and resource, had been kept mainly on the defensive, but, thanks largely to W. S. Corbett and the half-backs—of whom Chapman and Cleminson were substitutes for E. H. Lintott and K. R. G. Hunt—they prevented any scoring, and this goal lead was under the circumstances fully deserved. The ball only just crossed the line, Morgan, who kept goal instead of L. R. Roose, clearing at the second attempt, but the referee was in a position to see what had happened. Bailey, the English goalkeeper, had few shots to stop, and when in turn helped by the wind, the home team gave Morgan little to do. Horace Blew and J. Jones were extremely good in covering Morgan, but the Englishmen certainly played poorly. Woodward and Hardy on the right and H. Stapley in the centre worked with a good understanding, but Williams, the great success of the North and South match, quite failed to turn to account the openings made by Bell, and the halves, of whom Hawkes was specially skilful, apparently suffering little from the heavy state of the turf and the wet ball. Williams missed one great chance of scoring from a centre by Woodward, and the best attempt in the second half was by Chapman, who sent in a hard, long shot which Morgan only just kept out. Spoiled by the weather the game attracted barely a thousand spectators, and was in every way disappointing.

HOCKEY.

IRELAND, 4; WALES, 2. Under miserable conditions, and consequently before a small gathering, Ireland and Wales met at Whitchurch, Cardiff, on Saturday. Wales were represented by a strong team, only making two changes from the side originally selected. Ireland were a good deal weakened by absentees. In the first half the wind hampered the Welsh backs, and Ireland did nearly all the attacking. The brothers McWilliams, on the left wing, were quite the best amongst the visiting forwards, and the Irish team soon had two goals to their credit. The third goal came from Coulter, and this was the total of the scoring at the interval. Pearson and Williams made several clever runs for Wales, but frequently no one was up to take Pearsons centres.

In the second half the rain stopped completely and the wind dropped, too, so that Wales did not get the advantage that Ireland had enjoyed. They, however, had their share of the game and within a minute of the restart Turnbull scored from a corner. Ireland replied, going straight down the field, and Allman Smith, with a pretty cross shot, gave the visitors the fourth goal. The remainder of the game was very evenly contested, and Turnbull, putting on another goal for Wales, the game ended in a victory for Ireland by 4 goals to 2.

BOXING.

FEATHER-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.

JIM DRISCOLL vs. C. GRIFFIN.—To a Britisher with a fancy for boxing, a contest for one of his country's championships has an attraction which surpasses almost everything for the time being. When with it is associated as a principal one who has gained high honours in the King's "Dominions beyond the Seas," it possesses an even more intense interest for him. So one was in a measure prepared for the scene of bustle and excitement which pervaded the National Sporting Club in King-street, Covent Garden, on Monday night. The leading feature of the programme arranged by Mr. A. F. Bettinson, the capable and courteous manager, took the shape of a twenty rounds contest for the feather-weight championship of England, £200 a side, and the club purse of £340. Everyone present—and these included several of the leading sportsmen of the United Kingdom—evidently found the discussion as to the probability of Jim Driscoll (Cardiff), the English feather-weight champion, defeating Charlie Griffin (New Zealand), feather-weight champion of Australia, or vice-versa, an absorbing topic of discussion.

Driscoll entered the ring first for the all-important feature of the evening, being followed by Griffin almost immediately. The referee's attention was called by one of Driscoll's seconds to the fact that the Colonial wore kid gloves over the palms of his hands and wrists underneath his boxing gloves. Some discussion took place on the subject between the principals, seconds, and referee, and eventually the referee ordered them to be taken off. The Welshman had for seconds "Tiger" Smith, Jim Driscoll, Joe White, and Albert Jones, while the Colonial had Eddie Dixon, Tommy Burns, C. Cotter, Mr. "Carlton," and Arthur Gutteridge.

1st Round.—After sparring for an opening Driscoll led, only to touch his opponent's right arm lightly. In fact, so careful were the pair that it was some time before a blow of any serious character was struck. Then Driscoll managed to get within the Colonial's guard, and brought the right smartly on head and ribs. Once Griffin reached the face with the left, but Driscoll had the best of the first round.

3rd Round.—So effective became the work of Driscoll that Griffin found it advisable to hang on. However, by means of a number of half-arm jabs the Welshman caused him to give way. Once again at a distance, Driscoll scored splendidly, two particularly good rights on the jaw being introduced. This round went decidedly in favour of the Welshman.

4th Round.—During this meeting Driscoll did practically as he pleased for a time, his left repeatedly finding its way to the jaw. A fine chance offered when Griffin, on the referee left himself open on recovering, but Driscoll failed to take advantage of it. At last Griffin managed to get one home without any effect.

5th Round.—It became necessary to order the men to break away frequently, so often were they in holds. Driscoll now began to pay more attention to the body, and his straight drives to the wind made his man wince. It was evident that the Welshman could do almost as he pleased.

8th Round.—Very smartly contested was this round, and twice in breaking away Griffin brought the left home on the face. Driscoll's footwork served him in good stead whenever serious danger threatened, though he always appeared to have one ready in answer to a score.

9th Round.—Griffin came up smartly when operations were resumed, but a left on the ribs, followed by another on the head, stayed him somewhat. Unfortunately, the clinching which had occasionally been noticeable in previous rounds again spoiled the meeting. When apart, however, only by clever headwork could either avoid punishment.

10th Round.—A well-contested round was this, for while Driscoll seemed content to pay attention to the body, he received an occasional reminder in the shape of a swinging left on the face that left its mark. Still Driscoll always managed to return two for one.

11th Round.—So aggressive did the Colonial become, that the Welshman found it necessary to take advantage of the ring, as he did not sustain the effort, and once Driscoll's second drew attention to the Colonial butting. After the gong had sounded Griffin tried to get in a punch, which brought a caution from the referee.

12th Round.—Driscoll again brought into play his capital knowledge of ringcraft, avoiding cleverly his opponent's well-intended efforts. Notwithstanding, Griffin managed to reach the face twice, but really his attempts lacked power. Just as they were parting after the gong Griffin again tried to land a blow.

13th Round.—Both were very eager to resume, and after Driscoll had sent his opponent to his knees, the pair were continually in holds. Once Griffin brought a backhander across the Welshman's face.

14th Round.—Shortly after the start a nasty butt by Griffin under the Welshman's chin brought a reprimand from the referee, who now entered the ring. Twice subsequently Griffin repeated the movement, and much excitement was aroused among the spectators. Driscoll managed to introduce the left to the face, and cut it.

15th Round.—When the pair stood up and sparred for a few seconds they came to holds, during which Griffin again butted the Welshman under the chin, and the referee disqualified him, Driscoll being declared the winner.

CROSS-COUNTRY RUNNING.

SOUTHERN COUNTIES' CHAMPIONSHIPS.—I daresay there may have been occasions when cross-country championships were decided under worse conditions than those of Saturday, when the Southern race was held at Wembley Park; but none of those present were able to recall a more unfortunate day. The venue was the very worst which could have been adopted for a contest under the circumstances, although, of course, the Association officials could hardly be expected to foresee the climatic conditions. Nevertheless, I fancy that the doom of Wembley as a championship course has been sealed after Saturday's experience. The park is quite unsuitable for the start of such an event, and there were several bad falls, one poor youngster, J. E. Marsh Herne Hill H., meeting with a very bad accident, and having to be conveyed to the Middlesex Hospital, with, it is stated, a broken thigh. The cracks were not without their misfortunes, J. E. Deakin falling heavily.

The first twenty came home in the following order:—

ROWING.

Sculling Championship of the World.—I daresay you have already learned by wire the result of the meeting between Webb and Tressider on the Wanganui river, New Zealand, on the 25th instant. Webb won by two and a half lengths.

William Webb was the holder of the title by virtue of his victory on the Parramatta on 3rd August last over Charles Towns, to whom the honour had been handed down by his brother George. Previous to that victory the New Zealander had beaten Jim Stanbury, the ex-champion, and showing wonderful grit, great staying powers, and perfect style, he created such a favourable impression that his victory over Charles Towns later was no matter for surprise.

Dick Tressider is a native of New South Wales, Australia, and has also taken part in a championship contest, having unavailingly thrown down the gauge to George Towns, who met and easily beat him on the Parramatta on 30th July 1906. The time was 21mins. 48·4 5secs., compared with the 20mins. 45secs. accomplished by Webb when he beat C. Towns. Tressider also bears the reputation of being a determined sculler, but he was giving away age on the present occasion, and while he had done everything expected of him in his training, he and his supporters alike recognised that in Webb he would be meeting a sculler of class within quite measurable distance of William Beach.

Varsity Notes.—The penultimate stage of Boat Race practice has now commenced. Both crews are in strict training, and that change has been marked by a very significant alteration in the Cambridge eight itself. It has practically been remodelled. G. E. Fairbairn has superseded Burridge at No. 2. J. S. Burn (the Blue) has gone from No. 4 to 5, H. E. Kitching (who understudied Williams so well last week) is at No. 4, while H. G. Baynes (another Blue) has disappeared. But the boat will be far better balanced as it is, and there was quite enough weight in the ship to dispense with a good deal without doing any harm. All that can be said is that Baynes had lost that lightness of hand and neatness of form which were features of his 1906-07 rowing. Stuart is now stroking with his usual life, and that the men behind him are just the sort to fall into shape at the right moment after looking rough for awhile. It is probable the crew will do some work over the Ely course after all between now and 9th March, but there will be no Upper Thames break. They will proceed direct to Putney from headquarters.

With President Kirby back again the Dark Blues ought to make rapid progress henceforth. Thanks to Mr. Guy Nickalls' careful coaching they are now well together—perhaps too well together for this stage of work—while they sit their boat 10 per cent. better, and show much improved watermanship. As a crew, they are far better fitted for their hard task on 4th April than was the 1907 combination. Gladstone is rowing longer this year, and giving the heavy men behind him more time to finish, for one thing. His work is livelier, too, and the beginning more like that he showed at Henley. At present I incline to favour Oxford as in the better state for future improvement. They seem to have got out of that rut of useless and bad style which afflicted them like a pestilence for so many years. And, better still, every man is now fit and well at absolutely the worst time for the crew—the time when hard work and strict diet have began, and when Abingdon Lasher and Nuneham Reach are a weariness to the flesh. It has been decided that the crew shall go to Henley on 9th March, reaching Putney on 17th March.

THE MURRAY TOURNAMENT.

Two games were played at Lucknow in the third round of this Tournament, on the 9th instant.

The Carabiniers, the winners of the Cup last year, met the Royal Irish Rifles, on the Dragoon's ground. The Carabiniers, losing the toss, had to play with the sun against them, and they were further handicapped by their goalkeeper hurting his hand prior to the game, and a substitute had to be played. The Carabiniers attacked from the start, but the ball was quickly transferred to their own goal. The Irish gained an easy opening, and scored. In the second half the Carabiniers tried several times to draw level, but no further scoring ensued. The Royal Irish Rifles thus won by one goal to nil. Teams :—

ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.—Miller, Russel, Macdonald, Carder and Lieutenant Tee, forwards ; Kyan, Hazlet and McConville half-backs ; Bailey and Murphy, backs ; Clarke, goal.

CARABINIERS.—Chick, Brown, Luxon, Maxwell and Doolen, forwards ; Bradshaw, Rotwell and Kennuier, half-backs ; Chilton and Barlow, backs ; Sergeant Gillan, goal.

In the second game, played on the Oxford Light Infantry ground, the King's Shropshire Light Infantry defeated the Royal Scots Fusiliers by one goal to love.

Only one game was played on the 10th instant, the Durham Light Infantry having a walk-over as the Glosters had scratched.

Very fast and exciting play was witnessed in the match between the Cameronians and the 5th Fusiliers. The Fusiliers scored first, but the Cameronians equalised within a few minutes. After a period of level play, the Fusiliers were successful in making a second goal, and before half time sounded, the Fusiliers scored again. There was no addition to the score in the second half, although the Fusiliers goalkeeper was frequently called upon to save. The game thus ended in favour of the 5th Fusiliers by 3 goals to 1.

MADRAS GYMKHANA TOURNAMENT.

SHERWOOD FORESTERS vs. RAILWAY CLUB.—This match began the tournament on the 9th inst. The Foresters had the upper hand in the first half and scored a goal, but on changing ends the railway team played a better game. SOUTH INDIA TOURNAMENT.

THE South India Tournament was in progress at Chepauk from the 24th ultimo to the 7th instant, and was a great success from start to finish. Good entries, excellent play all round, and perfect arrangements, add to these the admirable handicapping and we get results which must have been most gratifying to the promoters of the tournament and to Mr. H. L. Padday in particular, on whom the largest share of the work devolved. The championship singles attracted eight entries, including three former champions, Messrs. Higginbotham, Brooke Leggatt and Allen, and the holder, Mr. D. Mount. The last named was unable to defend his title however, and Mr. C. Brooke Leggatt has once more gained that honour. Both classes in the Men's Singles Handicap filled well and provided good games. Twenty couples competed in the Men's Handicap Doubles, and the Mixed Doubles also brought about some keen competition. The Ladies' events, however, were not so satisfactory, the Handicap Singles fell through for lack of entries, while only six couples entered for the Doubles. Results were as follows :—

THE ENGLISH TURF.

With the opening of the flat-racing season on the English turf at hand, interest in the doings of the candidates for the Spring Handicaps and other big events under Jockey Club rules naturally increases. So does the betting market—what there is of it. On the Lincolnshire Handicap the wagering has been singularly light. Only fifteen of the thirty-six acceptors have been honoured with a quotation, and that does not mean that they have been actually backed. By the time these lines are in print the result of the race will be known.

The Irish chaser, Roman Law, which has been tipped to win the Grand National Steeplechase ever since the entries for the blue riband of the chase were announced, is said to have ruined his reputation, and from what one hears, Mount Prospect's Fortune will have to fence in vastly different fashion to his most recent exhibitions if he is to get the formidable line at Liverpool. Lara, too, must "come on" with giant strides or he will never live the pace they go in the "National." Like Mount Prospect's Fortune, who has changed ownerships, Lady Malta appears to be well sold for it is suggested by some who profess to know a lot about her that all her rivals will have to fall if she is destined to bear off the prize at Aintree. Sweet Cecil seceded at the minor forfeits stage, but his owner still has Kirkland in, and, according to what one hears, the hero of 1905 is not at all unlikely to create a stir in the market before the day of the race. Tom West, Mattie McGregor, Seisdon Prince, Extravagance, Logan Rock, and Rubio have all come through dress rehearsals without incurring displeasure, and all appear to be genuine candidates. By-the-way it has been stated that Newey will ride Roman Law at Liverpool. Indeed? It will be a remarkable feat if he does seeing that he injured his shoulder so badly a few weeks ago.

Of the several items of interests published recently in the "Racing Calender" the most important is the entry for the Chester Cup. This old-fashioned race year after year seems to have more ups and downs than any other event of the flat racing season in the old country. The number of times it has failed to fill is extraordinary, yet it manages in the long run to get enough horses of one sort or another to make it possible to race. This year, the executive asked for forty-five entries, but they were not forthcoming at the first attempt, and the race was reopened. Even at the second time of asking the required number was not forthcoming, but with thirty-six names sent in, the authorities have had to rest content, and the list has been published. Included in it are some good horses, such as Sancy, Bridge of Canny, Baltinglass, Royal Dream, and Wuffy, raising the event from mediocrity, but the commonplace is arrived at when one sees Devereux, Euroats, Gun Barrel, Jenkins, Corduff, and Master-at-Arms among the number. Last year, the race attracted twelve runners, but Torpoint, who then finished third, Bridge of Canny fourth, and Devereux are the only candidates entered for this year's anniversary. If only for the sake of redeeming the race from a very poor contest, it is to be hoped that the three named will again be seen in the field.

In connection with the Derby very little business is recorded. A small amount has gone on Mercutio, a son of Forfarshire and Sillabub, winner in September of the Michaelmas Plate at Manchester, among the lot behind him being Rushcutter. To the Two Thousand Guineas no reference is heard. At one period that race gave rise to much discussion. Among the candidates of note this year is the much mentioned Perrier, the colt by Persimon—Amphora, who can carry the colours of the King. Another possible competitor of mark is Sir Archibald. Prospector can be one of the runners, and so may Mercutio, who is trained by Couch, Rodney, Nelson, Ednam (a promising son of Isinglass and St. Ia), Kilcarby, Your Majesty, Poor Boy, Green Drake, Col. Hawker, Dalgety, Lauderdale, Royal Realm, White Eagle, and the Kingsclere comrades Morena and Vamose. Materials certainly exist for a stirring contest, and time was when the "Guineas" would already have given rise to brisk speculation. Dalgety, a son of Ayrshire and Pindi, has sound judges among his admirers, and Lauderdale ought to race, being by Ladas—Avilion. The better of the pair owned by the Duke of Westminster, Morena and Vamose, is likely to finish in the first flight.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Those people who have grumbled so persistently at the handicapping all through the season will no doubt be glad to learn that this department will be under a new regime in future. Colonel Mayne has resigned his position and is probably going home, and the handicapping during the next Monsoons will be done by Mr. Kindersley alone, while for the coming cold weather arrangements are being made to secure the services of an experienced professional from England. This is no doubt a move in the right direction. We believe that the day is also not far off when it will be deemed advisable to go a step further, and include among the number of the Stewards also an experienced stipendiary from England or Australia, and, though we consider that Calcutta is particularly fortunate in the body of Stewards who rule things at the moment, they cannot always depend upon having such suitable men to draw upon and the presence of at any rate one member of undoubted experience and free from all possible suspicion of local prejudice or sympathy would be a distinct gain.

With the end of the racing season the final exodus of trainers, dealers, etc., was not long in following and the "horsey man" is once more becoming a rare species in Calcutta. Jack Scott has gone back to Dehra, Rowan and Joe Harper to Australia via Colombo to bring back all sorts of fliers with them for the Monsoons. O. M. D. Bell is still with us, but leaves for Bangalore in a day or two. Piper is staying on through the hot weather. Drew stays with Piper and is busy making the young 'uns, while Smith is looking after Rowan's lot in his absence. We now have two whole months before it is even time to begin to get ready for a Tollygunge Gymkhana. These meetings were so successful last year that they hope to hold four of them again before the Monsoons, probably on 13th and 27th June and 11th and 25th July, and it is said that the programmes are to present some novel features this time and to include many more jump events than before, but it is a far cry yet to June, and nothing is absolutely settled. Meanwhile the ground is so hard everywhere that exercise at anything but a walk is almost impossible and everyone is longing desperately for rain.

We are sorry to learn that the first hot weather game got up by the Junior Polo Club this year proved a fiasco, only six men turning out. The Honorary Secretary has decided to wait for a few weeks and then make another attempt, and it is to be hoped that the few playing members still in Calcutta will make a great effort to turn out as otherwise there is great danger of the Club going the same way as its predecessor. This would be more than a pity as though it has fallen on evil times at the moment it is likely to be only a temporary phase, and if the Club can hang on is sure to get a further influx of playing members a little later on. Just now they are feeling badly the loss of the 25th Fusiliers, who nearly always fed one or two members of their mess in the game and at the same time many of the keen spirits are home on leave, others have no ponies, etc., etc. All this is, however, a condition of things that will pass, and if those who are keenly interested in this sporting little affair will keep up their hearts and manage to keep things going somehow over the bad time, the Club is bound to revive presently and get back to the prosperous times of last year.

There are few better ways of spending an off season Saturday afternoon than at a Gymkhana, especially if it is well done, and the hearty cheers which terminated the Hon'ble Mrs. E. W. Colin's function last week were well earned by that energetic and hospitable hostess. The large number of guests whom she had gathered at the bodyguard lines all spent a very pleasant afternoon and now everybody wants more. The following were the results of the various events:—

Driving Competition.—Miss Colin. Tent Pegging in Pairs.—Gentleman to take peg, lady to take ring. Miss Keene and Mr. H. D. Cartwright. Putting Competition.—Gentleman rides to lady and hands her putter, lady puts into hole. 1st—Miss Keene and Mr. Gourlay Harvey. 2nd—Miss Colin and Mr. R. A. C. Pugh. Jumping Competition.—Mrs. Damiano on Myrene. 2nd—Miss Lukis on Sayonara. Tandem Competition.—Lady on leader to be driven by man also riding.—Miss Colin and Mr. C. W. N. Graham. Hat Trimming Competition.—Miss Curtis-Hayward and Mr. Daubeney.

As every horse owner in India ought to be interested in the subject of the feet of his animals, we make no apology for drawing attention to "Gray's Patent Detachable and Fixed Pads" as advertised in our paper. They are, in our opinion, peculiarly suitable for India and all tropical countries, they allow perfect ventilation, prevent concussion and slipping, are claimed to be the only pads suitable for saddle and harness horses alike and from all we hear very many prominent English trainers are using them extensively in their stables. They should be the very thing for all who race, hunt, paperchase or pigstick in this country. Many and diverse are the advantages resulting from the use of hoof pads in India and among those that "Gray's Patent" have undoubtedly established are—instantaneous application, effectual fitting, impossibility of detachment save by hand, cheapness, sanitary benefit, absence of suction and expansion of foot by natural frog pressure. They are, we think, by far the best detachable pads now on the market.

"We have an excess of sport, so called, remarks a writer in London Opinion. In former years horse-racing was extolled because it 'improved the breed of horses.' This bunkum was continued for many years, but with the disappearance of the Queen's Plates—which the country paid for—the old story was abandoned. Football is said to enhance a love of true sport and the inculcation of a fine spirit of manliness and the physical improvement of the race. Golf is claimed to be the salvation of the middle-aged. From all of which I infer that Englishmen of a past generation, when football and golf were practically unknown, were a weak, decrepit, and unhealthy race of human beings. People go in for football and golf just as they go in for wines and spirits—because they like them. A people never seeks to improve itself by processes unpleasant to itself—that is to say, a people with a will of its own. We are mad about football and golf because they are exciting and pleasant.

We shouldn't care twopence about the amelioration of the condition of the British race if they were unpleasant. They are offshoots of delight which our native country gives us. If you kiss another man's pretty daughter, why do you do it? Because it is exciting and pleasant, and partly because the young lady herself enters the strongest protest against the outrage, and continues to protest even after her resistance has become passive. What is she? She is an offshoot of delight which her father and mother have given us. But when you take a girl to your manly breast and hug her tenderly—oh, the ruin to the shirt front, and they charge sixpence a time at the laundry for 'getting up' that garment!—do you care a brass farthing for her miserable father and her grumpy mother? Hang her family tree!—In the same way play football and golf, if you wish. But don't let us have any of this nonsense about the recognition of the claims of physical advancement.

One of the greatest hypocrisies in the English character is its boasted traditional love of 'fair play.' Where does it come in? I have never seen a football match in my life, and I trust I never shall. I read occasionally, however, that referees and such like have to take refuge and seek protection from 'the English love of fair play' manifested by spectators enraged at the defeat of their own side."

Tommy Burns, the champion boxer, tempered his arduous preparation for the meeting with Roche with somewhat of "blowing." He issued a challenge in which he said he was prepared to meet "any three of the best English boxers in one evening." Naturally the proposition is regarded in boxing circles as little short of amazing, and it has given rise to a considerable amount of discussion; but, for ourselves, we do not see anything particularly remarkable in it, having regard to the present poverty of Britain as to heavy-weight boxers and in the light of the fact that Gunner Moir is doing practically the same thing every night at the various London music halls where he appears!

Jem Roche, who was matched against Burns for the heavy-weight championship, has been fairly inundated with correspondence from various parts of the globe—India, Australia, South Africa and America, as well as from several parts of England, but perhaps most inquiries regarding him have come from the United States. Some of these says Irish "Sport," are of a unique character, as might only be expected from a land where "hustling" is so well recognised. One of the letters from the "land of the free" reached the Irish champion, the contents of which, in the writer's own words, read thus:—

Mr. Jem Roche, Dear Sir,—I see you are matched to fight the Canadian, Tommy Burns, for the World's Championship, and wish I could assist to train and second you. I can fix you up to fix the gloves on your hands the way you can win with any of the heavy weights.

I have a Secrete Way to fix on the gloves. I am an old prize fiter. I have retired. I have given Boxing lessons to over 1,000 Bankers and Brokers and Clerks. One of my pupils was our President of the U.S. of America Mr Theodore Roosevelt. If you require me to Put the Finishing Tutches on your Training I can be hired on those terms.

"I want my Passage Paid both ways 50 Dollars Cash mailed to me and 50 Dollars Per week. I will guarantee you to win. I will make you to knock out that Big Man."

Then follows the name and address of the writer, and the following postscript:—"I am Irish, borne at Rathkeale, County of Limerick, Ireland, 5 feet 6in., 160lbs. A citizen of the U.S. of America."

Tommy Burns continues undefeated. We learn by wire that in the fight for the World's Championship and stakes of £600 aside plus a purse of £1,500 which came off at Dublin on the 17th instant, Jem Roche, the Heavy-weight Champion of Ireland, was knocked out by Burns in one minute. The Canadian has proved himself the superior of all our champions at home and will go back to the west with the title still in his possession and his banking account considerably increased. The following is a complete record of the men Burns has met during his career, as well as the amount netted as the result of each contest, and the full total of winnings to date:—

K. O. means knock out; d, draw; w, won on decision; l, lost on decision.

Included in these larger amounts particularly, in the latter part of 1906 and 1907, are outside bets made by the champion on himself, so that some of them do not actually represent the purse that he received.

Another good sportsman has crossed the Great Divide. It is with deep regret we have to record the death of Fr. Anroy Sandell, District Superintendent of Police, Jeypore Agency tracts in the Godavery. Mr. Sandell was out in camp in the Peepore jungles and had shot a fine panther. The same night there was an uproar in the camp and he was informed that the panther he had shot was worrying the elephants. He went out to see what was the matter and saw an animal crouching in the elephant sheds. A mahout upset a pan of cinders and the shed caught fire and the elephants stampeded. Meanwhile the animal which turned out to be a wild dog, flew at Mr. Sandell and buried its fangs in his face. The animal was secured and killed and Mr. Sandell immediately started for the Pasteur Institute at Coonoor. It took him about ten days to reach that station, but he was too late as hydrophobia had set in, resulting in his death.

A Moradabad correspondent sends the following remarkable story of an encounter with a tiger to The Indian Daily Telegraph: Two brothers (Dhuda Baksh and Shaik Abdul Ghani of Moradabad) were despatched recently to Rampur on an errand. While they were entering a grove at Khadpora a tiger sprang upon Dhuda Baksh, who, being an athlete, warded off the blow aimed at him with his right hand and caught one of the paws with the other hand and maintained his hold though the tiger was mauling the other hand. Abdul Ghani now rushed up with a stout stick, which he forced down the tiger's throat, making it release his brother's hand when Dhuda Baksh seized another paw with his wounded hand. Forcing both paws back he wrestled with the tiger keeping it down by sheer force, while Abdul Ghani belaboured it with his lathi and killed it. The dead tiger was carried by the brothers to His Highness the Nawab of Rampur, who has kept the skin as a memento and sent Dhuda Baksh to the State dispensary for treatment.—Prodigious!

The Football Tournament for the Murray Challenge Cup ended at Lucknow on the 19th instant when the Shropshire Light Infantry beat the 5th Northumberland Fusiliers in the final by a goal to nil. Details elsewhere.

Lord Hawke has arrived in Bombay by the Oceana, the object of his present visit being some big game shooting in Central India. He is the guest of the Maharajah of Rewa. After a stay of a few weeks Lord Hawke returns to England for the cricket season and expects to be home by 8th May.

An endurance race from San Francisco to Washington for a bet $5,000 has been arranged between the champion Arab horse of the New York Arab Horse Stock Company and the Canadian stallion Shamrock, owned by Mr. Fred Cornwall of Edmonton. The horses will start in April or May.

Before leaving for Bombay, Melbourne Inman, the well-known Billiard professional, met Mike Elias at the Mahomed Bagh Club, Lucknow, on the 18th instant, in a game of 1,000 up, Elias being conceded 450 points. Inman proved to be in great form, and made breaks of 141, 172, 115, 106, 85 and 77. Elias's best breaks were 62, 56 and several over thirty. Inman won easily by 215 points.

In the championship round of the singles at the recent Punjab Lawn Tennis Tournament, Mr. T. C. S. Rendall, who beat Mr. L. Deane in the final, met the holder, Mr. E. L. Atkinson. Mr. Rendall was decidedly off colour and was beaten. The score read 6 0, 6-2, 6-2 and we add our congratulations to the many Mr. Atkinson has already received on his securing two championships within the last month.

THE final in the Lawn Tennis Tournament for a cup presented by the Hon. Mr. G. H. Sutherland was played off last Friday afternoon on the Sova Bazar ground between A. C. Gupta and B. Mukerji and ended in an easy victory for Gupta by 3 sets to love. (6-2, 6-3, 6-4).

THE news of the death at Cowes on the 12th instant of Mr. John F. Macnair, late partner in the firm of Messrs. Begg Dunlop and Co., was received with deep regret by all who knew him. It is sixteen years since Mr. Macnair retired from India, but there are many who remember him as one of Calcutta's foremost sportsmen. He was a prominent member of the Calcutta Tent Club, a fine polo player, and ever well up in the paperchases, besides being a crack pigeon shot, a great golfer, and a keen volunteer.

VETERAN cyclists in India, as elsewhere, often seek to impress upon newcomers to the pastime that the cycle for which a good price is paid invariably proves to be the cheapest in the long run. It is hard to say how long a high-grade cycle ought to last; so much depends upon the sort of treatment it receives, and even upon the rider and the district in which it is mostly used. Now and then one hears of remarkable instances of longevity in cycles, and one such has just come from Tipton in Yorkshire. Mr. R. A. Lowe writes that his father has been riding his Humber for eleven years, while he and his sister have been riding their Humber machines for nine years. What is more extraordinary still, he says that the machines have never needed any repairs since they were first purchased. There is no reason why, with reasonable care, a machine of high class such as the Humber might not last an average rider a lifetime. Cheap rubbish would not last the same sort of rider a month. It is this knowledge, the result of years of experience, that makes the veteran always plump for the high-grade machine.

* World's records.

There are others.—Shrubb, for instance, holds world's record for all the quarters between eight and eleven miles. The above, however, will be sufficient to show that the man who undertakes to lower the little runner's times has got something in front of him.

IT has been reserved for the little town of Rochester to establish a new athletic record when its mayor and deputy mayor early this month opened the new athletic Club and boxed a three round contest to the huge delight of all who attended the inauguration. It is not, perhaps, the atmosphere which one naturally associates with a cathedral town, but Chatham, its close neighbour, is full of fighting men from both sea and land, and it may have been influenced by example. At all events the public attitude of Rochester towards the "noble art" is such that the mayor (Alderman Charles Willis) and the deputy mayor (Councillor E. W. Willis) felt it appropriate to put on gloves and take their places in the ring. It may, perhaps, be well to mention that, despite the similarity of name, the distinguished combatants are not related, and find their greatest point of agreement in a common admiration for boxing. The physical qualifications for the aldermanic chair are not popularly supposed to be exactly those which best fit a man for the ring. Unhappily, there is no record of the weight at which the contestants entered, but the mayor is described as "stout" while the deputy mayor is tall and thin. It may be taken therefore that they were pretty evenly matched for the mayor's weight and power were counterbalanced by the deputy-mayor's agility and length of reach. The formalities of referees, time-keepers, bottleholders which are customary on these great occasions seem to have been overlooked and neither of the gentlemen had spent much time in training. Indeed the sporting journalist who described the event for the local newspaper states "Neither had had on the gloves for years" before they met in the ring. So they started even and after three merry bouts the affair resulted in a draw.

LADY DECIES, whose cats lately gained so many prizes at Cruft's Show, is the greatest cat fancier in English Society. One of her cats, a "glorious chinchilla," was valued at a thousand guineas two or three years ago. Her "catteries" are very wonderful places. They are a series of cosily-arranged rooms, each with a fireplace, artistically draped windows, and a cork carpet, which is painted white and varnished. Some of her most valuable pets—such as the chinchilla, Siamese, and Burmese pussies—are provided with pretty little beds and toy ladders for exercising on. An amazing amount of care is lavished on these fortunate felines. Lady Decies feeds them herself with every kind of meat and with puddings to make a human being's mouth water. A special cat attendant washes the cats' faces every morning, combs their hair, and brushes their backs. Lady Decies is also a noted fancier of black poodles, Japanese spaniels, and piping bullfinches. The finches she has taught to do all kinds of quaint tricks, her patience and skill in managing them being extraordinary. She is a sister of Sir John Willoughby of Jameson Raid fame. In 1901 she married Lord Decies, who is a horticulturist, a keen sportsman, and a grower of prize orchids.

THE Mysore Birthday Polo Tournament begins on the 12th June, entries closing on the 25th May.

THE Royal Scots Boxing Tournament, held at Colaba last week, was a most successful function. There were some excellent bouts, the refereeing and judging were most efficiently carried out; there was a large attendance each evening and the arrangements were all that could be desired. The prizes were presented by Colonel W. G. Murray, Commanding the Regiment, and the awards were as follows: Boys' Competition won by Boy O'Leary; Bantam-weights won by Pte. Anderson; Feather-weights won by Lce.-Corpl. Jones; Light-weights won by Pte. Keal; Middle-weights won by Pte. Ellis.

WE publish to-day the Ballygunge C.C. averages. The club have had a most successful season and have got through a programme of no fewer than forty-one matches. Mr. D. S. Shallow has put up a splendid performance which is, we believe, a record in local cricket, for as far as we know no one has ever yet made over 1,000 runs in one season for one club. He has played most consistently all along. He takes the bat presented by the club for the best batting average (qualification 15 innings); that for the bowling goes to Mr. J. R. Coulthard (qualification 20 wickets). Mr. B. A. White's absence was a great loss to the Club, illness keeping him out of the field right away from the end of November.

THE Secunderabad Football tournament, was concluded on Monday last, when the Leicester Regiment and the Sherwood Foresters met in the final game, the Leicesters winning by 2 goals to one.

OUR Bombay correspondent writes:—The Jackal Club Race Meeting was held on Wednesday, and this is always a sign of the close of the hunting season. With but little dew falling the sun makes his unwelcome appearance betimes at this part of the year and as a consequence hounds cannot boast of a kill on any of the three occasions on which they were taken out.

Two jacks were put up last Bye-day, but the first was lost amongst the officers' bungalows at Vakala and the other after a longer run at the base of one of the steep hills bounding Horse Shoe Valley.

On Tuesday our old friend was found at his old haunt at the end of Chuckla Lane, but he too was lost after a short, sharp run.

A long run was experienced on Thursday when again Hog's Back Hill and the Horse Shoe Valley were reached. Near Powai Lake, however, all traces of scent were lost.

THE holiday on Wednesday was made use of to hold the Fourteenth Extra at Mahaluxmi, and a great success it was; large attendance likewise entries and some great finishes. Both the Little Nursery and Arab Consolation Plates filled so well that they were each divided, the first into three.

Opening with the first of the Little Nurseries no less than seventeen tried Mr. O'Gorman's patience with Sir Askar, who has never shown any form as was the case before the same stable won with Mountain King, an odds on chance, with 6 to 1 bar one. He gave his backers a good run but, as is usually the case with such big fields, a disturber of the peace came in Aden, who was on terms with the leader all the way and beat him fair and square after a great finish.

ANOTHER surprise followed in the second when Fallah and Naief were equal favourites at threes, the former only placing third and the latter finding six a furlong too far. Spectator being done with at the bend, the favourites, Ateyba and the outsider Talib were in a line. Opposite the Stand Southall got Talib in front and in a desperate finish he won by a quarter length from Ateyba from fifteen others.

The third division later on saw fifteen out and Safoog a firm favourite though a strong call came for Rising Falcon, when the stable showed a preference for him over Mountain King, who shut up surprisingly before the bend whereas Rising Falcon got away badly and was never in it. Great Power made the running, but Southall on Safoog was handy and came away comfortably down the straight from Sanjakdhar and Viceroy.

A PRETTY open betting race was the Verar Plate, of nine furlongs with Eed a bit better fancied than Moonib Pasha and Dumra in a field of eight. The pace was made by False Start and in running third he stayed remarkably well. At the bend Eed came out like a winner, but Moonib Pasha lay too far out of his ground though he is always a slug for at least half a mile. He came with a great run, but was too late.

FOURTH on the card was the first of the Arab Consolation Plates, with nine runners and Maharaja favourite from Talal and Madras, though I saw no commission come for the last named. Maharaja lay behind Great Hope to the bend and went away well in hand to stay Talal out comfortably.

THIRTEEN in the second division saw Recruit favourite from Bendigo and Mint with several others supported. Gladiator as usual cut out the pace giving way to Joker with Hazza always handy. As they neared the bend Bendigo began to come up and Mooreed, whereas Joker fell away. Bendigo and Mooreed came at Hazza up the straight, but he just stayed on by a neck.

ONLY four went for the March Plate with the long expected Winsome at 6 to 4 on, Flotsam and Gun Metal next. The last got a very bad start and the favourite getting away in front of Conscience and Flotsam, the positions never looked like changing.

LAST on the card was the Arab Pony Selling Plate, a poor lot with Madrid, Mirdas and Ariff fancied in that order. Ariff jumped out with the lead and when the other two came there was a desperate finish in which the leader stayed out by a head.

THE Bombay Racing Season, of 1907-08, came to a close on Saturday, when seven events provided a capital day's racing, the public being present in numbers to show that they would not object were the once suggested scheme of racing the year round in this Presidency to be carried out.

ENTRIES were again more than satisfactory and the card opened with the first of the divided Arab Pony Consolation Plate, in which all seventeen on the card started. Betting was open, Fritz firming to threes, Patna fives and Rufus sixes. Muzeade, then Barrak made the pace, but when Rufus was asked he came away to easily stay out Mirdas and Farce.

THE second found fourteen with the new pony, Mountain King, winding up favourite from Sabah. Rising Falcon got the best of the start, but Mountain King soon passed him and only had to be asked to stay Great Power and Ashroff out. This is a change from last week when in a six-furlong race he fell right back before the bend and now cut this race out in 1min. 7 4/5secs.

In the Horse Consolation seven went with Gunner always a firm favourite from Lady Metal and after taking up the running the favourite looked a winner at the bend. Here, however, Lady Metal came only herself to be pipped on the post by Conscience, who came late and wide; a neck separating each of the first three in poor time, 1min. 3secs.

No less than sixteen started for the nine-furlong Good-Bye Plate with Eed and Moonib Pasha again fancied, also Meerjan. Scarlet and Wait-a-While made the pace but at the bend False Start came with Rashad and Eed. Rashad at the distance came out full of go and Moonib Pasha, who had been last as usual to the bend, coming with a great rush fell short by three-quarters.

There were rumours of gallops about almost every one of the seven that started for the mile Final Plate, but Circuit and Faded Lily settled down to practically equal favourites. As was the case when she won in Poona, Faded Lily streaked away to hold a seven-length lead and though Circuit passed St. Patrick and gave chase, the mare stayed on to win easily by three lengths.

The Arab Selling Plate, found fourteen with Little Joker better fancied than Royal and Deenar. Royal made the running from Anee, but once it came to pacing Rummah came through and all was over; Royal Slaying Kour Sahib out well over these seven furlongs.

Lastly came the Arab Pony Selling Plate, in which the news went round that Hullo had broken the clock and this made him a better favourite than Ateyba and Veto. Hullo soon came into the lead followed by Veto, whom Ferguson brought along at the bend and easily stayed out the only other two seriously backed.

The Bombay Light Horse also held their Annual Point-to-Point races on Saturday, and they may be said to have been a great success despite the counter attraction. Mr. T. L. Roberts was Honorary Secretary, Mr. H. E. E. Proctor, the Starter, Mr. R. W. L. Dunlop, the Judge, Mr. D. Wilson, the Clerk of the Scales and Clerk of the Course, Sergeant-Instructor Coy on whose shoulders a great deal of the work falls.

Many of those competing in the Jackal Club affair were out now and a number were present when Mrs. T. W. Cuffe presented the prizes.

The jumping filled well and Mr. F. R. Hill's Billy did well to beat a good lot. In the first race, the Light Horse Scurry of about two furlongs, Mr. Blair was successful on Mr. Roberts' Bushman in a fair finish with Mr. Carder's Firefly.

Only two went for the Open Point-to-Point, the course being about 2½ miles, Mr. Blair on his Nimrod beating Mr. Hingley's Wood Nymph with Mr. Wayman up by streets.

Nine went for the Light Horse Cup for Horses when Mr. Blair took a long lead on Mr. Robert's Early Dawn, but in a great finish Mr. F. R. Hill beat him on the post by half a length.

Mr. Max Rommel brought off a double by winning the Open Point-to-Point for Horses. In this Mr. Blair fell and unfortunately broke his collar bone leaving only Mr. Rommel on Good Luck and Mr. Glover on Mona. The former lost his way, but making up his ground won by a neck on the post, putting in a great finish.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 6th March 1908.

Was it not the scaly crocodile of the Nile, who in some mysterious manner—the details of which have escaped me—assisted in the erection of the Pyramids! This week I fear I shall find myself unable to emulate the achievements of that industrious saurian for I am very short of "straw" wherewith to evolve the necessary brick. There have been very few happenings in the metropolis, the recounting of which is likely to interest your readers. Hunting through the papers for inspiration evokes the confession that I have drawn blank; though some curious reflections occur on running through the headings. For example, the head lines of seven columns of yesterday's Daily Mail, were connected with war, political assassination, more war, drowning, poison tragedy, big burglary, disasters by gale, terrific blizzard, assorted domestic tragedies of the "'orrible" class and the new Licensing Bill bomb. True it is that "good news never sold a newspaper."

* * * * * *

In re the Licensing Bill I am well within the mark in saying that at the moment Mr. Asquith is the best hated man in the United Kingdom. Its introduction has caused the widest spread alarm and indignation; on the stock exchange last Saturday, a shrinkage in brewery shares of £32,000,000 was recorded and Capital has been driven abroad; "spoliation," "robbery," "confiscation," "coercion," "outrageous measure," "violation of every principle of equity," "dishonest attempt at social reform," "radical revenge," etc., etc., one reads at every turn. The brewers will be ruined, the publicans rendered practically extinct, for their profits will be inadequate to the extra strain, the glass of beer will cost more, on Sundays, the thirsty Briton will have to travel over six miles for a drink, and so on ad infinitum. Organised and strenuous opposition is abroad, among all concerned and to give you an idea of the extent of the trade campaign, I may mention that in less than four days over a hundred meetings have been planned all over the country, and these are to culminate in a huge mass gathering in the Albert Hall. The temperance people are wreathed in smug smiles, the publicans and sinners gnash their teeth, but some comfort may perhaps be extracted from the assurances given by the great brewers that the measure is impracticable and that the bill is doomed. So mote it be.

* * * * * *

Women continue to loom fairly large in the public eye. From time to time they discover a new walk of life previously undreamt of. Sandwich women are the latest thing in the London streets for men to carp at or crack a passing joke. The damsels I have encountered appear in the guise of trim housemaids, in cap and apron, peripatetic advertisements of somebody's Household Cleanser. As an occupation for women during the most inclement season of the year this beats all. Woman, it has been said, unhesitatingly rushes in where angels fear to tread. The London gutter on a muddy day strikes one as the hardest of treadmills. To me the spectacle of a man down on his luck is of all sights the saddest. It has, however, its humorous side. Well do I remember, when Mrs. Patrick Campbell was appearing in Sudermann's famous play at the Royalty Theatre, how my feelings swayed between laughter and pity on seeing a poor wretch, the picture of human misery, trudging along in the gutter as an advertisement for "The Joy of Living." That had its counterpart quite recently as I beheld another child of misfortune bear on his breast and back the mocking words, "How I succeeded in business!" Truly, the line between humour and pathos is only a hair's breadth.

And this suggests a passing reflection on the suffragettes. It is morally certain that woman's suffrage will come in the end. The means adopted by the present clamourers for it may not be the best or the wisest, but they—or rather the cause they espouse with such doubtful tact—can, I think, make sure of ultimate success. The vote for all women would render this a curious country to live in, yet we cannot get away from the fact that the intelligent portions of an electorate are often swamped by the weakling section thereof. Much as we pride ourselves on our smartness it is undeniable that a large proportion of voters have only the faintest notion of what they are voting about. The average woman would have even less, for one must not judge the average woman's attitude towards politics by that of the active women who have been stirring up the recent agitation. Some of the more prominent of these—Mrs. Pankhurst par example—is now being modelled for Madame Tussaud's collection. Phew!

The Parliamentary "bump supper," inaugurated in 1906, by Mr. R. C. Lehmann, himself an oarsman of repute, is likely to be repeated this session. Since last year an addition has been made to the list of famous scullers in the House of Commons by the return of the Hon'ble Walter Guinness. Another comparatively new recruit is Mr. E. G. Hemmerde, winner of the Diamond Sculls at Henley in 1900. The company will probably include one member of the Cabinet, Mr. McKenna, who was bow in the Cambridge boat twenty-one years ago; as well as Mr. Dudley Ward, who rowed thrice for the same University; and Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Eugene Wason, Mr. Mitchell-Thomson, Mr. F. N. Rogers, Mr. Percy Illingworth, Sir Robert Hobart, Sir A. Acland-Hood, the Hon'ble W. F. D. Smith, Mr. D. A. Thomas, and Mr. Geoffrey Howard. Possibly, Lord Ampthill your ex-Governor of Madras, and Lord Desborough will also be present.

The subject of big dinners reminds me to refer, en passant, to the Ladysmith Anniversary Banquet, held at Prince's Restaurant, early this week, and presided over by Sir George White. It was a brilliant function and a glance at the list of those present engendered quite a martial spirit, especially when one noted the name of Mr. Lionel James at the end. To note the inclusion of our old friend "Truthful James" among this gathering of heroes was enough to send a glow of pride and a thrill of joy through anyone, who like your "Vagrant" has recollections of the truthful one's career in Bengal and Behar.

Another Anglo-Indian has recently figured, pictorially, too, on the "Interesting Personality" page of a London weekly. No one less than Mr. Harvey James the younger, who will be remembered by many in Simla and Calcutta. He now graces the boards under the stage name of Arthur Scott Craven, has played with Mr. Tree at His Majesty's and Mrs. Langtry at the Imperial, played the lead with Viola

AND ALL HIGH CLASS DEALERS.

Allen and Mrs. Fiske for three years in America and appeared with notable success in such plays as "Zaza," "The Gay Lord Quex," "A Royal Family," and the "Duke of Killicrankie." On his return from his American tour he played Mr. Fred Kerr's part in "Letty" and has recently been seen in London, first at the Coliseum, where he temporarily accepted the part of Joseph in the production of "Joseph and His Brethren," and more recently at the Lyceum, where he played Prince Maurice in "Her Love against the World," and at the Garrick in "Flander's Widow."

This may seem to the young amateur would-be actor a fair measure of success, seeing that "Mr. Craven" is only now thirty-three years of age, more especially as during his American tour he was feted and starred and seemed to have reached the goal of his ambition. But the stage has a curious way of dropping some of its successes on occasion, and we find that when Mr. Craven returned to England his achievements and records on the other side of the herring-pond are not sufficient to insure him a leading part in a London production, and he has not, as a matter of fact, been seen on the London boards during the last few months. But perhaps "Mr. Craven" has decided to forsake the footlights for the thorny path of the playwright and poet for I see he has been lately devoting himself to lyrics in conjunction with Mr. Cosmo Gordon-Lennox and to poems which have been praised by both the London and provincial press. Shabash!

Lent, on which we entered this week, exercises a smaller influence upon London theatrical business than it used at one time to do. The advent of this season, however, must have some effect on managerial receipts, especially in the more highly-priced parts of the house. Generally speaking, the theatres are doing well. "The Merry Widow" still pursues a triumphant career, and it seems almost a pity that a competitive "waltz" play should be produced while the cheerful work of Mr. Lehar is pursuing its course of uninterrupted prosperity. "A White Man" is also continuing to do an immense trade. Few changes of importance are likely to occur before Easter, as productions in Lent are not popular. The lateness of Easter this year is, nevertheless, rather embarrassing, because, when it arrives, only two months of the London season will be left.

"Pride of Regiment," a new one-act play by F. D. Bone, was produced at the Haymarket Theatre last Friday night, to precede "Her Father." This is a sentimental fragment having some humanity. There are but three characters—a father, a mother, and a son. The father, now a gamekeeper, is an ex-soldier, a man who won several medals and the regard of his regiment. He has made a fetish of the Army (one can imagine that he sleeps with his medals; at any rate, he wears them at tea). He has treated his son more like a drill-sergeant than a father, and he has forced him to become a soldier entirely against his will. He proves a dead failure; he is entirely out of his element, and he ends by striking a sergeant and being discharged as an undesirable character. When he returns to his home the father turns him out of doors, but the mother wins the father over, and in the end the three sit down to tea together. Altogether a simple little tale, but neatly told, and having some appeal. The little piece is capitally acted by Mr. Charles Rock, Miss Cicely Richards, and Mr. Ashton Pearse.

The performance, however, was chiefly notable for several important alterations in "Her Father," Mr. Michael Morton's charming adaptation of the big Parisian success, "Son Pere." As originally produced at the Haymarket, the pleasant young man who became engaged in the first act to Irene Forster (a part in which Miss Marie Lohr has won so real a triumph) was ignored for the rest of the play, and Irene became fascinated by the aristocratic Sir Claude Trehmayne. Now she remains true to her first sweetheart, a great improvement. Further, the last act is laid in Lord Claremont's house instead of in Mrs. Forster's flat, and it is the wife who comes to the husband instead of the husband going to the wife. The result is an altogether much improved ending—a softer, more human ending.

Mr. Arthur Bourchier has now settled down into the part of Lord Claremont, and is seen at his best, while in spite of its slender plot, the clever comedy and the delicate sentiment and the character drawing combine to make a delightful play.

Mr. J. C. Snaith stands among the most delightful of our present-day historical novelists. His books have colour and life and literary distinction, and he possesses an unusual ability for drawing feminine characters. All these virtues are contained in his book called "Lady Barbarity," but although Mr. R. C. Carton has arranged it for the stage with great dexterity, it must be confessed that the version presented at the Comedy Theatre last week end lacks much of the charm and delicacy of the novel. But, all the same, there is a deal of light comedy, plenty of movement, and an interesting tale to tell—a tale with the proper to-be-continued-in-our-next ending to every act—and the piece fully deserves to be a big popular success.

A Jacobite prisoner, the pretty daughter of a loyalist earl, who cuts the rebel's bonds and hides him in her room—such is the play's foundation. The rebel is Anthony Dare, believed to be of lowly birth, but a hero every inch; and Lady Barbarity, who rescues him only to gratify a whim, soon learns to love him. To ensure his safety she disguises him in her own clothes—neat of figure, long of hair, and with a voice that lends itself to the character, he plays the role well—and although he is at length unmasked by Captain Grantly, the King's officer, who is himself in love with Lady Barbarity, all comes right in the end.

It is only necessary to say that Miss Marie Tempest plays Lady Barbarity to make it apparent that the part is acted with humour, piquancy, and feeling; but this is not what has become known as "a Tempest part," and the actress is given fewer opportunities for distinction than usual. Most of the plums fell to Mr. Graham Browne. Hitherto he has been known almost entirely as a nice-looking, agreeable young man in modern comedy. It was something new to find him as a hero of romance. He was gallant enough when the time came, but he was delicious in woman's garb, and his assumption of the feminine voice was wonderfully good.

Mr. Allan Aynesworth is also an actor who is best known as the hero of drawing-room comedy; but as Captain Grantly he is quite at home in his Georgian wig, and enters into the atmosphere of the period with no little success. Mr. J. H. Barnes and Miss Dora Barton play the remaining important parts with a deal of credit.

I'm sick of writing about the weather; but I must, as a snapper up of trifles this week, note that winter has returned. Heavy snowfalls have been the rule in almost every county, disastrous blizzard in the north—especially in Derbyshire—accounted for a few distressing deaths from exposure, snowdrifts, snowploughs, blinding sleet, and hail, gloom and conditions that find one whistling the "Dead March in Saul" have been our portion for days.

Major-General Paske, has just died in his eightieth year, he was the hero of several daring exploits in the Indian Mutiny. He first saw active service sixty-two years ago, in the Sutlej campaign. Probably some of your Calcutta and Rangoon readers may remember one of his sons who some time ago held an appointment in the Bank of Bengal, if I am not mistaken.

I had closed this letter when I read with regret (which will be shared by all, who ever saw her act) of the death last night of Miss Lily Hanbury.

Miss Hanbury's first appearance on the stage took place at a Savoy matinee in 1888, when she took the role of Myrine in "Pygmalion and Galatea." Two years afterwards she was seen with Mr. Tom Thorne at the Vaudeville, in "Clarissa," and six months later she created the part of Julia Topliff in "Meadow Sweet" at the same house. A long experience in many parts at the Olympic with Mr. Wilson Barrett followed, when Miss Hanbury essayed several Shakespearian characters.

At the St. James's Theatre, under the management of Mr. George Alexander, she appeared in "The Ider," "Lord Anerley" and "The Prisoner of Zenda." One of her greatest successes was made in 1893 on the production of Mr. Pinero's "The Amazons" at the Court Theatre. Together with Miss Ellaline Terriss and Miss Pattie Browne, she wore masculine dress as Lady Nocline Belturbet. On His Majesty's stage she was seen in several plays, and her performance of Penelope in Mr. Stephen Phillips's "Ulysses" will be remembered, as it was one of her last appearances.

An actress of considerable versatility and great emotional power, Miss Hanbury was much missed when in 1905 she abandoned her professional engagements to marry Mr. Herbert Guedalla. Her death at Bedford-court-mansions followed the birth of her first child.

Miss Hanbury was born on 26th April 1874, and was the cousin of Miss Julia Neilson. She married Mr. Herbert Guedalla on 18th April 1905.

A JAGUAR HUNT.

FELIS ONCA, the Jaguar, South American Tiger, or "Old Spots" as he is commonly called by the hunters, is about as savage, dangerous, and ferocious as a grizzly bear. He is large and powerful enough to break a cow's neck at a single stroke with one of his great paws, a thing he has often been known to do. The Jaguar is certainly the king of all South American animals, and to overcome and kill this monarch of the jungles is the highest ambition of most hunters that go to that wild, beautiful region to hunt.

Therefore, when I arrived in South America and drifted out to the frontiers, I was naturally like all the rest; I wanted to kill a tiger. In fact, I was in a great hurry to kill one tiger at least. But wanting to kill the beast and killing him, are two vastly different things, as I found out by many years of experience and hunting after that, in the Gran Chaco Forests of Northern Argentine Republic.

In the first place a tiger is not always so easy to find when you want to kill him; and again it is no child's play killing him after he is found. For "Old Spots" is liable to make a two-handed game at any instant of the play, and if he does you are almost certain at the time to wish that you wasn't there, even if you get away with the fight afterward.

Of course the novice has heard all this many a time, but he never takes it very seriously till some day he runs up against a tiger in a jungle, where he can not get away from the animal, and has to stand his ground and fight. Still a tiger does not always fight when you come on to him. In fact the chances are about even that he will let you alone if you do not start the fight yourself.

But there are some tigers that will charge on a man the instant he comes within sight in close quarters. And if he does, no matter how courageous you may be, nor how good a shot, you are certainly in a terribly dangerous position for a few seconds. For if you miss your aim, or only wound him, it will be a miracle if you escape with your life, for you are sure to be almost literally torn to pieces. Yet these tigers are not man-eaters; and bad and dangerous as they are, they are not to be compared to the Bengal tiger of India, nor to the lion of Africa for danger.

When I first went out into the jungle country I had my mind made up to massacre the first tiger I came in contact with; and I also had my mind made up to come in contact with the first tiger I could. But after I had been out there awhile, and saw a man carried in who had been killed by one, for some cause or other my mind changed. I wanted to kill a tiger just as badly as ever and may be worse, but not bad enough to go very far into a jungle after him.

The first tiger hunt that I ever took I went with an Englishman by the name of Mr. William King, a famous hunter and a crack shot. He had taken in many a tiger in his day, and said he knew of a place in the forests where we could have a mix-up with one of the brutes in the course of eight or ten days at most. "For sometimes they're hard to find, don't you know, even when there's plenty of them."

We each carried a rifle, a long-barreled ·44 calibre six-shooter and a good knife. We also took plenty of ammunition, for there were always a few wild Indians roaming around through the forest, and although they were not particularly bad they would kill a man if they got a good chance. They were just dangerous enough to keep one forever on the lookout, and caused a great deal of trouble and watchfulness that otherwise would not have been necessary.

We took provisions to last a week or so; and went out about three leagues from the estancia (a cattle farm) and camped on the banks of a little river that ran through part of the Gran Chaco Forests. The country was literally alive with deer and ostriches, and many other kinds of game. We also saw quite a number of tiger tracks that certainly had been made within the last two days; for two days before there had been a heavy rain and these tracks had not been rained in. King said it was a good place to hunt, so we camped and prepared to stay there for a few days at least.

After we had been hunting two or three days, without having killed any tigers, I came, one evening, on to some very fresh tiger tracks leading into a small jungle. I circled the jungle and saw that the brute had not come out; and knew to a certainty that he was in there, and at no great distance at that. Now I did something that I never heard nor read of any other hunter ever doing before. You may not be able to believe it, but I assure you that it is a fact: I did not charge into that jungle and tear it all to pieces, and shoot the spots all off the tiger as I had intended to do, and as nearly all hunters do—in books.

Instead I peeped around very cautiously, listening to try if I could hear anything in there; and finally decided that the jungle was too thick, that I couldn't get into it, and went to camp. I never fully realized till then what a vast difference there is in reading and in thinking about danger—and actually facing it. I can assure you, boys, that when you come up against the real goods you will find the difference is far greater than you expected. I was not afraid, I had plenty of courage, but some way it didn't seem to be wound up quite tight enough. Courage is a quality that fluctuates a good many degrees sometimes, and a tiger is about the worst thing I ever saw to cause a sudden fluctuation.

I said nothing to King about my little adventure, but casually asked him what he would do if he found a tiger in a small jungle.

"Why, I'd go in there and shoot the bloody bones out of him," said he.

This made me feel slightly smaller than I was; still I made up my mind that I'd wait till I found a tiger in the open, before I started in to bloody up his bones too much; for "Old Spots" is rather a noted bone-bloodier himself, and I didn't care to have my bones mussed up by him if I could help it.

Several days after that I happened to pass by that same jungle again and concluded to go in and see what kind of a place it was. The place did not look quite so thick to me now as it did when I knew that the tiger was in there. For I felt quite sure that he was not in there then. But what if he was! was I not tiger hunting?

But after I had got into the jungle a short distance the tiger tracks looked very fresh; there were plenty of them; and be as careful as I could, I could not get along through the brush and high grass without making quite a little noise. Any animal that might be in there could be certainly hear me, and would thereby have a decided advantage if it wanted to attack me. The case looked pretty serious, still I did not like the idea of being bluffed out just by the tiger's track, so I decided to see a little more of it. But I had quite a scuffle with my courage before I could get enough of it gathered up to take me any farther in. And then it was so elusive that I didn't make much headway.

Courage seems to me to be something like this: It begins at one notch and goes up to 100, that being the top. Unfortunately, however, mine stopped before it got up that high. My courage stands very nicely at about 27. Now, 27 is all right for rabbits and ducks, in fact all small game, but it will never do for tigers and wild Indians. A man has to have his courage wound up to about 98 before he can go into a jungle where he knows there is a live tiger and then he wants to have his hand on the crank, ready to give about two more turns right quick when the tiger shows up, or he can stand.

Well, after considerable trouble I managed to get mine up to about 41, and went very cautiously into the jungle a little farther. I was peeping around, undecided whether to go any farther in or not, when all at once I thought I heard a sound. I stopped instantly, held my breath, and listened attentively. In a moment or two I heard the sound again, there was no mistake about it this time; it sounded like a low, coarse growl.

My courage instantly slipped off the notch, and ran clear down below one before you could say scat. The sound was repeated, and I got out of there. But my gun, hat, most of my clothing, and some hide and hair, was in there. But no blood; it hadn't had time to run yet; for I had made it through about one hundred yards of "cat-claw" brush in something less than thirteen seconds!

At the outeredge of the jungle I halted for a moment to get my breath, and that deep, savage growl was repeated once more, "nearer, clearer, deadlier than before." Paralyzed with fear I looked behind me, and saw—a tiger the size of an elephant? No! I saw an old locust tangled up in a big spider's web, and buzzing away for dear life.

This made me furious. I wanted to fight. I looked at my hands; they were all scratched up. My breeches were in tatters, and my pretty blue shirt, with white and red specks on it, was entirely ruined. I grabbed a club and smashed that infernal locust to a jelly. I would have smashed the spider, too, but I couldn't see him. I also made a few remarks that I happened to think of about that time, and then started back into the jungle as fast as I could walk, to get my hat and gun. I didn't care whether I met a tiger or not. But after I got in quite a ways, I thought maybe it would be a good idea to slow down a little, for it was such a nice place for a tiger that there might be one in there after all.

Well, I got my hat and gun, washed the blood off my hands and face, and went to camp.

"Why how in the world did you get scratched up so?" asked King.

"In the brush, of course," said I—and I said it real cross, too, so he wouldn't ask any more about it.

Thus ended my first tiger hunt. Now, I never heard before, nor read of a hunt that turned out quite like this; but from strong circumstantial evidence, and many years' experience in the jungles of South America, I have just a vague suspicion that they occasionally do.—W. F. in Western Field.

APERTURE SIGHTS AND MILITARY RIFLES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The great advantages of aperture over open V sights, have now been so thoroughly proved by the countless sportsmen who use them that it seems extraordinary that they should not be given a thorough practical trial for Military as well as sporting arms. The shortening of the barrel of our Service rifle has resulted in a corresponding reduction in the sight radius which is now five inches less than in the old long barrelled Lee Enfield. Errors therefore in the alignment and elevation of the sights are proportionately more serious in their results; and a mistake in the amount of foresight taken, would, with the new rifle, send the bullet 30 per cent. higher or lower than the same error made in sighting the old long barrelled ·303. The adoption of aperture sights would, therefore, be of special value with the short Service rifle owing to the lengthening of the sight radius.

It is well known to all practical riflemen that the eye cannot simultaneously focus the backsight, foresight and object aimed at; but has to rapidly change from one focus to another in order to define clearly these three objects at three different distances. The foresight being further away than the back is more nearly in the same focus as the object; and it is, therefore, usually easy to see the bead sharply defined against the object without blur. With the backsight the affair is different; it is comparatively speaking so close to the eye that the efforts to change focus rapidly, so that the V may appear sharply defined are often unavailing, and the backsight frequently seems blurred and misty. The aperture backsight entirely gets rid of this difficulty. It is close to the eye and is never focussed at all, but appears merely as a large indistinct ring, in the centre of which one sees most of the barrel of the rifle, the foresight, the object at which one is aiming, and its surroundings.

The big aperture of the Lyman admits light so freely that I have at times been able to shoot animals in the dusk, when an open backsight would have been absolutely useless.

So, too, when shooting at a rapidly moving object; the large field and the fact that the foresight is all that one has to think about, make an aperture backsight perfect for this work.

Great stress has been laid of late on the importance of the soldier being able to shoot quickly. An aperture sight, with large opening, makes snap shooting comparatively easy.

It is somewhat harder to fit a peep sight to a bolt action rifle, than to a weapon with falling block. It is essential that an aperture sight should be close to the eye when the rifle is mounted to the shoulder, and the backward travel of the bolt of most rifles is so great that it interferes with the fixing of sights of the ordinary Lyman type.

Probably the most satisfactory arrangement would be to have a large loop or bridge, solid with, and forming a part of the action, on the top of which the peep sight could be rigidly fixed.

A foresight which can be changed from dead black to ivory white, at will, is suitable for all conditions of light. With the Lyman combination foresight, one can use either a black pin head, or an ivory bead. I found that the black pin head was always best when the light was reasonably good; but for a bad light or shooting at a dark coloured object in deep shade, the ivory bead proved invaluable.

As regards solidity and ability to stand moderately rough usage I have never had any fault to find with the ordinary sporting rifle. For Military purposes, however, there would be no difficulty in designing a stronger heavier pillar to carry the aperture. With the present day flat trajectories, the stem would not need to be of great length in order to secure the necessary elevation for long ranges. All who have taught recruits the elements of rifle shooting, can realize how the instruction might be shortened and simplified if aperture sights were introduced, sweeping away at one stroke the necessity for focussing the backsight, and thus levelling up to a large extent individual peculiarities of eye sight. I have no hesitation in declaring that if two equal squads of recruits were furnished, one with the old sights, and the other with aperture backsights; and after a month's course were pitted against one another on the ranges, that the results would be an overwhelming victory for the peep-sight squad, no matter what the targets or what the ranges.

It is essential that an aperture sight should be close to the eye when the rifle is mounted to the shoulder, and the backward travel of the bolt of most rifles is so great that it interferes with the fixing of sights of the ordinary Lyman type.

Probably the most satisfactory arrangement would be to have a large loop or bridge, solid with, and forming a part of the action, on the top of which the peep sight could be rigidly fixed.

A foresight which can be changed from dead black to ivory white, at will, is suitable for all conditions of light. With the Lyman combination foresight, one can use either a black pin head, or an ivory bead. I found that the black pin head was always best when the light was reasonably good; but for a bad light or shooting at a dark coloured object in deep shade, the ivory bead proved invaluable.

As regards solidity and ability to stand moderately rough usage I have never had any fault to find with the ordinary Lyman. For Military purposes, however, there would be no difficulty in designing a stronger heavier pillar to carry the aperture. With the present day flat trajectories the stem would not need to be of great length in order to secure the necessary elevation for long ranges. All who have taught recruits the elements of rifle shooting, can realize how the instruction might be shortened and simplified if aperture sights were introduced, sweeping away at one stroke the necessity for focussing the backsight, and thus levelling up to a large extent individual peculiarities of eye sight. I have no hesitation in declaring that if two equal squads of recruits were furnished, one with the old sights, and the other with aperture backsights; and after a month's course were pitted against one another on the ranges, that the results would be an overwhelming victory for the peep-sight squad, no matter what the targets or what the ranges.

RIFLE.

Expressly designed to replace the prohibited ·450 Bore.

J. L. & S. were the first to submit a Rifle of this bore to the Editor of "The Field" who reported March 23, 1907: ". . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridge complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

ESTABLISHED 1821.

SATURDAY NEXT, MARCH 28 will be

THE LAST DAY.

This will be the Last Announcement.

The lists for the first edition of "The Historians' History"—at first edition prices—will be closed Saturday Night. The first edition prices are the lowest which "THE TIMES" will ever offer.

ORDER BY TELEGRAPH.

If too late for the post, Up-Country subscribers are advised to telegraph Orders by telegraph will be promptly acknowledged, but no such order can be accepted unless followed immediately by signed order form and a remittance

Telegrams should be worded as follows :—"KNOWINGLY, CALCUTTA."
Book Three-Quarter Morocco (or other binding as desired.)
My remittance follows by post.

The advantage to be gained by those who shall subscribe now—at the last moment—is the advantage of receiving the best bargain, getting the most value, of securing a copy of the great work at a price which gives them the benefit of large economies due to manufacturing an enormous edition, and of receiving a concession in the price in return for their co-operation in helping to make this first edition a success.

"The Historians' History," being a work new to the Indian public, has had to prove its merits to establish its right to a foremost position in literature, to overcome the natural indifference of the public towards a book about which nothing had previously been known. These results have now been achieved ; the work is widely known, its merits are recognised, and public approval of it has been most cordial. Had it been offered at twice the present price, it would have had a steady but a restricted sale. At "The Times'" price the sale has been extraordinary

Some persons who have inquired about it, and who have examined a specimen volume, have decided to wait until next year, or next cold weather, or after their return from the Hills, before sending their orders. We do not wish anyone to buy this work until he decides that he really wants it. Those who may wish to take delivery three months or six months hence may have that privilege, and be permitted to subscribe before the prices are advanced, if they register their names now and send us their order form, with remittance, but not otherwise.

FIRST EDITION THE CHEAPEST.

¶ We are, however, far less concerned about next year's or next month's subscribers than about those whose names will go down on the lists to be closed Saturday night for a copy of the work at the lowest prices at which we shall ever offer it. And for the following reason :—

Having contended that the first edition of a new book should have such a price as will be likely to cause it to appeal, at the outset, to the widest possible public, and having made a radical departure in publishing by issuing this book, as an experiment, at the lowest instead of at the highest price, we wish to swell the subscription list to such a number as shall prove that our attitude in a matter which directly concerns every man or woman who has ever bought, or ever will buy, a new book, is the correct and the only rational one. We have, therefore, invited the public to co-operate in making this offer of the first edition an unprecedented success, to the end that the time may be hastened when books shall be published at cheaper prices, when good literature shall be more widely disseminated, and when the "natural purchasers" of of new books shall be permitted to buy them at a reasonable price as soon as they are issued, instead of having to wait, as they do have to wait now, until the publisher has sold off a small edition at an unreasonable price.

"THE HISTORIANS' HISTORY OF THE WORLD."

25 VOLUMES.

Cash Prices—Cloth, Rs. 145 ; Half Roxburghe, Rs. 179 ; Parchment, Rs. 233 ; Three-quarter Morocco, Rs 261 ; Natural Leather, Rs. 335 ; Full Morocco, Rs. 450. No. 1 Bookcase, Rs. 16 ; No. 2, Rs. 30 ; No. 3, Rs. 40. Monthly Payments Rs. 7, 8, 9 or Rs. 10 or quarterly payments if desired.

We repeat—this will be the last announcement, and this is the end of the opportunity. The offer of "The Historians' History" not only in "The Times'" opinion, but in that of the leading British journals, is, from the point of book values of the present day, absolutely without precedent on Saturday night the offer will be withdrawn and the first edition price will come to an end.

BOMBAY JACKAL CLUB POINT-TO-POINT RACES.

Wednesday, 18th March 1908.

Mr. E. M. Wynn, the Honorary Secretary, has to be congratulated on the success of the club's Point-to-Point races at Bomanwadi, on Wednesday. This is always a popular fixture and a special train, excellent catering and the Band of the 109th helped to make the meeting the pleasant one it was. Mr. H. E. K. Proctor was starter, Mr. R. W. L. Dunlop, M. F. H, the Judge, Mr. T. L. Roberts, Clerk of the Scales, Mr. Cole, Clerk of the Course with Messrs. Dunlop, Symington, Proctor, Burney, Lord, Lieutenant-Colonel Forbes, D. N. Graham, J. Symons and A. Forbes the Stewards.
Entries throughout were good and some capital leppers figured in the jump events that always open the programme. Mr. Harter with H. E. won that for horses and Mr. Owen Symons that for ponies.
The Hunt Cup for Horses had for two years been won by that fine veteran sportsman, Mr. Jack Symons, on Kingfisher but this time Mr. Bommel on Good Luck intervened, and to a keener man it could not have gone.
With his fine grey Arab pony, Akbar Khan, Mr. "Tommy" Moore made a record by winning the Pony Hunt Cup for the third consecutive time. Both the pony and rider are well-known in the hunt and were followed by Mr. Owen Symons, on Ortolan, who was not as successful as last year.
The Jackal Club Point-to-Point for Horses went to Curlew, Mr. Forbes himself riding with Mr. O. Symons next on Mr. Lucas' Tomtit.
That for ponies went to Mr. Williams on his Taffy beating Mr. Wayman on Mr. Hingley's Wood Nymph. A four mile sporting course was mapped out.
At the conclusion, Mrs. Priestley presented the prizes. Results :—

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 6th March 1908.

NEWBURY.

TALES of rough weather from North and South had confirmatory evidence at Newbury early last Friday morning, as at sunrise snow and sleet were falling, and the Clerk of the Weather so neatly timed his effort that the members' special just caught a temporary blizzard, which kept careful folk prisoners in the station, and enhanced the convenience of the covered approach. The driving snow was so thick that one could hardly see a hundred yards ; but suddenly it was all over, winter gave place to spring, and the rest of the afternoon was beautifully bright and sunny—a charming change. The course, however, had suffered by the soaking, and at first was so stodgy that the horses could hardly crawl home in the initial event. Several falls took place, but no serious results occurred, and for the most part finishes were wonderfully close and exciting. Considering the time of year and uncertain weather in town, the attendance was large and representative, fields panned out very well, and everything passed off satisfactorily. Details of the best things of the afternoon are appended :—

Next day a pleasant morning in town sent sportsmen in force to Paddington, but singularly enough history repeated itself, the last handy special landing its passengers in a regular snow blizzard, which fortunately did not last long; but several short storms succeeded. The attendance was again an excellent one, with an increase on Friday's muster in the members' enclosure, where, as usual, the fair sex were numerously represented, and many prominent patrons of North-country sport were present. Under the showers the course again rode heavily, and falls were rather frequent, but fields for the most part panned out well, and capital sport was enjoyed. Details:—

SANDOWN PARK.

THE roofs on the stabling at Sandown on Thursday afternoon still held snow, and along the side of the rails opposite the tents erected by the military, snow was in evidence. Still, everything panned out well, and more enjoyable weather could not be wished for after a sharp frost during the early hours. As usual, there was a large attendance all round, and in the principal enclosures were to be seen many bookmakers who have been wintering abroad. The going was really excellent. Details:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

LEAGUE INTERNATIONAL.

ENGLAND v. SCOTLAND.—With the defence on both sides proving far stronger than the attack, Saturday's inter-League match, which resulted in favour of the Englishmen by 2 goals to nil, did not produce a very attractive display of football. The piercingly cold wind and snow showers affected the attendance, not more than 10,000 people assembling at Aston Park, Birmingham, so that altogether the match fell below expectations. No doubt the conditions worried the forwards more than the halves and full backs, the high wind, blowing almost straight down the field, often influencing the flight and run of the ball, while the rather greasy turf retarded attempts at short passing. For some reason all the players seemed to think it expedient to kick hard and frequently put the ball in the air, presumably to cover ground quickly, with the natural result that a defender almost invariably cleared before a colleague had an opportunity of opening the game by securing a favourable position. Probably the desire to profit by the wind and force a winning advantage led to the adoption of these methods by the Englishmen in the first half, and the scoring of two goals, which won the match, justified the use of these tactics. Afterwards the forwards could not adapt themselves to a short passing game, and only once did a combined movement with the ball under close control bring out the most delightful feature of Association football.

The Scotsmen erred in the same way, but their failure to play the short, low passing game was mainly due to the effective spoiling work of the opposing halves. Still, individual cleverness in dribbling was lacking, and the inside forwards could neither settle down together nor shoot ever tolerably well. The temptation to try long shots in the hopes that the wind would increase the force with which the ball travelled or cause Hardy to blunder seemed irresistible. Happily for the Englishmen, their goalkeeper very seldom seriously troubled, always fielded the ball accurately, and cleared in the smartest fashion. Consequently, with the halves and backs indefatigable, and working together with rare cleverness and judgment, the home team maintained the advantage secured early in the game, and gained a triumph in every way creditable.

Experimental, the English forwards did little worthy of an international line, Hilsdon, in a class by himself, receiving very poor support. The ability of the halves largely atoned for the uncertainty forward, so far as concerned the match-winning power of the side, and also made the defence sound. Warren, quite at his best, tackled and passed in his own accomplished style; Wedlock, still harder worked, was, perhaps, of even greater value, if not quite so finished in his play. By comparison, Greenhalgh fell short of his colleagues, but quite early he helped to obtain a mastery over the Scottish forwards, which was maintained throughout a very fast and keen match. Crompton, by his sure kicking, pace, and strength, often cleared brilliantly; but Burgess was uneven and often in difficulties. Having played together in a trial on the previous Monday, the Scottish forwards seemed likely to become a highly effective line, but apart from Bennett, who ran round Burgess and put in some good centres, they were all disappointing, and as a concerted force a complete failure. Their short passing, seldom in evidence, always ceased before a clear opening had been obtained near goal, where hesitation and want of dash ruined many chances. No doubt the splendid English halves had a subordinating influence, but this should not have kept five high-class forwards in a state of impotence throughout a period of constant pressure. Well balanced, without a suggestion of weakness in it, the Scottish defence did wonders, and should have enabled the forwards at least to put the side on terms. Thomson excelled among a most capable set of halves and backs, and one shot by him—the fourth Hardy saved in the course of a couple of minutes—was perhaps the best of the match.

Crompton's success in tossing probably won the Englishmen the match, for after a couple of corners to the Scots the home team practically controlled the play, and, with Hall putting in a couple of good centres, some chances soon occurred. Smith let slip one clear opportunity, the ball travelling across too fast for him. The first goal was scored fifteen minutes from the start, Tickle placing a corner-kick accurately, and the ball rolling out to Warren, who shot hard and low into the net. Good of its kind, the goal was certainly lucky. Warren's kick sending the ball close by several players who impeded Rennie's view. Such strong attacks ensued that England deserved the other goal. From shot by Hilsdon, the ball struck Agnew's fist, and a penalty was awarded though there seemed no intention of the Scottish back to infringe the rules. Hilsdon took the kick and scored, the Englishmen being two goals up midway through the first half. Almost from that point to the finish the play went in favour of the Scots, and after change of ends McTavish and Thomson made some fine shots, but the visiting forwards never got near Hardy, except when a corner had been forced, and the most promising attacks were by the home side. Hilsdon twice cut in strong dribbles, West ruining one effort and the other terminating with a shot a foot of the post.

RUGBY RULES

IRELAND v. SCOTLAND.—Several surprises have in recent years been effected in International Rugby by Irish fifteens, and last Saturday at Dublin, Ireland once more upset all calculations and predictions by defeating Scotland by 2 goals and 2 tries to 2 goals (1 penalty) and 1 try. All the previous form of the season went by the board, the match emphasising the futility of venturing on any definite prognostication as to the probable outcome of an international encounter.

Almost throughout the first half, Ireland, without making any particular use of the wind by kicking, dominated the proceedings. Their forwards at once went off with characteristic dashes, and in the first few minutes Scotland only just averted a score. It was not, however, until Walter had left the field that the first try was obtained. In a bout of passing the ball was thrown out rather wildly to Thrift, but the right wing three-quarter, gathering it beautifully on the bounce, raced in near the corner, and Parke, with the charge disallowed, placed a fine goal. A minute later Parke came within an ace of kicking a penalty goal. Ireland continued to have so much the best of the play that fully twenty minutes elapsed before Hinton, their full back, first touched the ball. Shortly afterwards Parke made a weak kick, the ball going straight to Martin, who was almost unmarked. The latter promptly raced down ,and when checked passed inside to McLeod, who, cleverly eluding two or three opponents, scored. The position was quite favourable, but McLeod's kick hit an upright, the ball rebounding into play. A little later came Ireland's second try. The movement that led up to it was started by Caddell, who handed on to Smartt, the outside half. The latter with a feint made a good opening for the left wing. Beckett and Thompson, and the last-named, running strongly, scored. Some hard tussling among the forwards that followed was relieved by a brilliant run by McLeod, who could not quite get through, and an unsuccessful effort by Martin to finish off a passing bout. Just on half-time Ireland scored again. In endeavouring to intercept a pass McLeod knocked up the ball, which went to Parke. Racing through like a flash, Parke quite deceived McCallum with a feint, and, swerving inside, secured a clear run in for Beckett, who came up in the centre. Hinton converted the try, and Ireland led at the interval by 13 points to 3.

Scotland now had the wind with them, and set themselves resolutely to wipe off the arrears of 10 points. For some time, however, they could not make any real headway, and once were very fortunate to escape another score being recorded against them. Following a long run by Parke, who intercepted, the ball was kicked into the open, and Smartt had only to gather the ball to gain a try, but as it was he knocked on. The play was in the centre when Martin intercepted a pass intended for Thompson, and after running some distance, punted over Hinton's head, and beating the full back for pace, scored, McLeod placing a goal. Soon afterwards came the best forward rush in the match, the Irish pack dribbling the ball from their own to their opponents' 25—a truly magnificent burst. Scotland, however, got back again, and Ireland being penalised, McLeod dropped a great goal from near the touch-line. This splendid feat reduced Ireland's lead to two points—13 to 11—and the issue was fairly in doubt. The period of intense excitement that followed was brief, as two minutes later the Irish backs brought off a good bout of passing, and Thrift, racing at top speed, scored, having a narrow escape of going into touch. Afterwards the game was once carried near the Scotland line, and in the closing stages Ireland held their own. Scotland had one more chance, but Sivright lost it. He dribbled to the centre, and the ball bounced up to his hands. He preferred to go on with the footwork instead of gathering and running on with only the full back in front of him and three or four of his own side up with him. Had he done the obvious thing it is quite possible a try might have been obtained and defeat averted. After that Scotland had no further opportunity, and Ireland were left with a capital win.

Wales vs. France.—As was only to be expected, seeing that Wales placed their full strength in the field at Cardiff, the Frenchmen proved no match for the representatives of the Principality. Indeed, the visitors found themselves engaged in a task which would have proved beyond the powers of most international fifteens, for, in addition to the Welsh team being thoroughly representative, the conditions prevailing at Cardiff Arms Park were such as to bring out the special quality of Welsh football to marked advantage.

Quite bewildered by the skilful combination of their opponents in the opening stages of the game, the Frenchmen had their line crossed twice in the first ten minutes, and half way through the first portion of the match found themselves 14 points to the bad. Then at length they rallied, and not only did they twice nearly score, but Vareilles, seizing a chance in some loose play, dropped a goal before the Welshmen got over for the fifth time. The visitors accomplished their best work on changing ends, tackling so vigorously and saving themselves with such a series of neat kicks into touch that for a quarter of an hour they succeeded in preventing Wales adding to the score. An injury to Lesurier, the fastest of the French three-quarters, then left the visitors for a few minutes with only fourteen men, and during the absence of that player Wales put on a placed goal and a penalty goal. One strong effort after this the Frenchmen made, and got right under the Welsh posts, but they could not press the attack home, and during the last few minutes the Welsh backs raced round their opponents three times in quick succession, the end coming with the score: Wales, four goals, one penalty, and six tries (36 points); France, one dropped goal (4 points).

ATHLETICS.

Oxford University Sports.—These sports were begun on Saturday, the 29th ultimo. Unfortunately, the events were decided under favourable conditions, the weather being very cold, with a strong wind prevailing. Good form was shown in the sprint, L. C. Hull, of America, and N. G. Chavasse winning the two heats respectively in 10-2/5secs. Chavasse also won his heat in the quarter-mile in 51-2/5secs. In the hurdles G. Grossman beat T. Bowring by four yards in 16-4/5secs. In the first heat, and E. R. J. Hussey finished two yards in front of G. F. Olive in the second in 17secs. The high jump and hammer fell to A. M. Stevens, of Yale University, who cleared 5ft. 6in. and threw 107ft. 2in. The mile was won in the good time of 4mins. 36-3/5-secs. by N. F. Hallowes.

A good deal of interest was evinced in the concluding stage on Monday, and though the conditions were scarcely favourable, some good performances were accomplished. The final of the 100 yards created rather a surprise, Hull, the American, beating N. G. Chavasse easily by two yards in 10-2/5secs. F. G. Grossman carried off the Hurdles with two yards advantage over G. F. Olive in 17secs., and N. G. Chavasse, who ran with fine judgment, finished first in the Quarter-Mile in 51secs., beating C. Howard Smith by ten yards. G. F. Rogers was successful in the Half-Mile in 2mins. 2secs., and N. F. Hallowes beat A. E. Calor by eight yards in the Three-Miles in 15mins. 34secs. The best performance in the weight was by R. L. Robinson, who put 37ft. 3in.

Cambridge University Sports.—Some fairly good performances were accomplished at Cambridge on the 29th ultimo, when the first stage of the University sports was decided. The winners of trials in the 100 yards were C. C. G. Wright (Pembroke), in 10-4/5secs.; E. H. Ryle (Trinity), in 10-3/5secs.; and W. T. Wetenhall (Caius), in 10-3/5secs. K. G. Macleod, who was hurt at football on Saturday, will start in the final. The hurdle race was decided in one heat, and the ex-president, K. Powell (King's), again showed much of his old form, winning easily in 16-4/5secs., M. G. Murray, an Australian, being second, four yards behind. The first heat of the quarter-mile went to K. B. Horsfield (Trinity), in 51-4/5secs.; whilst E. H. Ryle (Trinity), won the second heat inside 50-4/5secs. The best high jump was 5ft. 6in. by A. C. B. Bellerby (Emmanuel), S. A. Meller (Trinity) clearing 5ft. 4in. T. H. Just (Trinity) won the mile race in 4mins. 34-2/5secs., beating E. S. Dougall (Pembroke) by six yards. J. L. Michie (Trinity) put the weight 39ft. 5¼in. (record).

The sports were concluded on the 2nd instant, when some distinctly good performances were accomplished. Unfortunately, the president, E. H. Ryle, was unable to take part in the sprint and quarter-mile, owing to a sprained back. The 100 yards was won by the Rugby captain, K. G. Macleod, who did not take part in the preliminary trials, owing to the injury he sustained in the international match against Ireland last Saturday. In the final, yesterday, he beat W. T. Wetenhall, of Caius, by one yard, inside 10-2/5secs. R. H. Lindsay-Watson recorded a sports record in throwing the hammer. Subsequently, in an exhibition throw, he reached 139ft. 5in., this constituting a sports record. H. M. Irwin, of Selwyn, was second, credited with 116ft. 2in. After a capital race in the quarter-mile, R. B. Horsfield (Trinity) beat W. T. Wetenhall (Caius) by inches, the winner's time being 51-3/5secs. C. H. Williams (Emmanuel) carried off the long jump, clearing 21ft. 1¼in., A. C. Bellerby, of the same college, being second, at 20ft. 9¼in. There were twelve competitors in the three miles race. The old Blue, F. M. Edwards (Queen's) took the lead at the half-distance and drawing away, won by 100 yards from K. Hooper (Queen's), in 15mins. 26secs., G. Selby-Lowndes, also of Queen's, was third.

ROWING.

THE UNIVERSITY BOAT RACE.

Oxford Row a Full Course.—The most important piece of rowing Oxford have attempted since their arrival at Henley was witnessed yesterday, when they had a fast trial over the long course between the Royal Hotel at Henley and Hambledon Lock, about two miles and a half, with the stream. Conditions were favourable, and after covering the regatta course in 6mins. 40secs., the crew completed their task in 12mins. 41secs.

The rate of striking set by Gladstone averaged about 30 to the minute all through, and although there was unevenness more than once, the rowing was good for this stage of practice.

Taking all the conditions into consideration, the watch makes the Oxonians much more than an average combination, and with the most notable faults effaced they should prove a strong and fast lot. There is no change in the crew.

Cambridge Crew Finally Settled.—We are officially informed that the remaining two oarsmen, H. E. Kitching and G. E. Fairbairn, have now been awarded their Blues, which means that the crew at present rowing will, bar accidents, represent their Alma Mater on 4th April. G. L. Thomson, of Trinity Hall, who as a member of a well-known Putney club has had several years' experience on the Thames, will act as spare man again this year, and there is certainly no one at Cambridge more fitted to fill that important position.

To-day the Light Blues conclude their practice at Ely, and will not be afloat again until Tuesday morning, when they are expected to be out about 11 at Putney, and probably in anticipation of some extremely heavy work on the Adelaide course to-day Mr. Wauchope did not take his charges for yesterday, not even going to Day's Farmhouse. They were also excused the usual preliminary advice. While the exercise was not of a very arduous character they again accomplished good times; in fact, they rowed half a mile on the Adelaide course in the extraordinary time of 2mins. 16secs.

BADMINTON.

England vs. Ireland.—The chief feature of the Badminton Association's meeting, at the London Rifle Brigade's headquarters in Bunhill-row, yesterday, was the international match between England and Ireland. There was a crowded attendance, and the play was followed with great keenness, applause punctuating the games at any particularly good shot or clever save. As was expected, the Irish players suffered defeat, only winning 1 game out of 9. This 1 game, however, was alone worth seeing. It was a single match between Mr. A. M. Cave, who is the best player of the visiting team, and Mr. N. Wood, the holder of the English Singles' Championship. Mr. Cave won by 2 games to love, the scores being 15—9, 15—12.

Hunting.

KARACHI HUNT.

8th March.—The hounds met at the Hunt Camp, and moved off shortly after 7 A.M. It was bitterly cold, and a good many of us were making the most of hot coffee and an excellent khota hazri in the Mess Tent, when we heard the horn sounding in the Camp Covert. With a fine crash of music the hounds broke out of covert and across the turf fields towards the Malir river. We ran fast along the near bank, past the small village, away across the Common towards Rabu's Mete and Sure Find Wood. Here the jack swung sharp left towards Long Island, and putting a deep nullah behind him, ran fast down the river bed which he crossed nearly opposite the Camp, and got into the high pampas grass jungle on the far bank. The hounds were not to be denied, and soon the fate of the rover was sealed. The Master came down at one of the open ditches, but the popular whip was always going strong and to the fore throughout. It was a splendid hunting run from start to finish, just under 50 minutes, and all who were out thoroughly enjoyed their gallop in the crisp morning air. We had a long trot back to the Heath where we found another varmint, but he had no heart, and pottered about round the old cemetry on the Temple Hills, so the Master whipped off and moved down to the Heath to try again. We found again, but could make nothing of it, so the hounds were whipped homeward shortly after ten. Amongst those out were Mrs. Graham, Miss Osborne, Col. Baker, Capt. Hislop, (Scinde Horse), Capt. Pritchard (S. W. B.), Messrs. Anderson, Steuart, Thomsides, Bosse (R.F.A.), and Edwards (S.W.B.).

13th March.—The hounds met at the New Jail at 7-15, when a good field turned out, including Mrs. Crouch, Mrs. Seabrooke, Miss Osborne and Mrs. Ryan. We were glad to see our sporting Commissioner out on 'Lady Griseline.' The Master commenced by drawing the Chokidar's khete. The hounds soon found, but ran what turned out to be a 'beel' line. A cast forward put them right, and they were soon away across the open towards the Panjrapol Farm stead, near which they swung away left-handed towards Oomer Dosal's khete. Without a check of any sort, and running a tremendous pace they carried the line away on over the bare hills beyond down to the Pipe line. Here they over-ran the scent, but a judicious cast towards some deep nullahs put them right, and they soon rattled the jack out into the open, and rolled him over after an exceptionally fast 34 minutes. We were a long way from home, so the Master did not draw again.

CRICKET IN AUSTRALIA.

THE FINAL TEST MATCH.

As we have already announced, on receipt of an Australian cable, the final test match was won by the Colonials, after an exciting finish, by 49 runs. The winners' two innings produced 137 and 422 to which latter total Trumper contributed 166 ; the Englishmen made 281 and 229 respectively, Gunn's 122 and Rhodes' 69 being the best features of their batting. For many reasons the victory of the Australians was well deserved, for their bowlers supplemented cleverly the good work already done by their batsmen. Saunders, Noble, and Armstrong all bowled well, Rhodes, Jones, and Barnes all being beaten by the balls which bowled them. All three men, however, batted extremely well. So, also, did Crawford ; indeed, when Rhodes and Jones were together so well were both playing that an English victory seemed quite possible if not probable. Appended are full scores and analysis :—

THE MURRAY TOURNAMENT.

DURHAMS L.I. vs. 5TH NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—These teams met in the semi-finals of the Murray Football Tournament, at Lucknow, on the 17th instant, the game resulting in a draw. Their second meeting, on the following morning, was productive of a similar result, no goals being registered. In the afternoon the two teams met for the third time. The Durhams were playing at a disadvantage, as two of their men were injured, and two new players had to be substituted. They played up exceedingly well, but were defeated by the Fusiliers, by three goals to one.

FINAL.

The final between the Shropshires and the 5th Northumberland Fusiliers, took place on the 19th instant, in the presence of a large gathering of spectators. The Fusiliers, who had played four games on three consecutive days, were somewhat off-colour, and it was a pity, in fairness to them, that the deciding match of the tournament could not have been postponed for a day or two. The Shropshires were on the offensive nearly throughout, but the Fusiliers' goal was very ably defended. The only goal of the match was scored within a few minutes of the call of time, when the Fusiliers' goalkeeper was beaten by a difficult shot. The Shropshires thus won the game and the tournament by the narrow margin of one goal to nil.

Major Lawrence, in addressing the two competing teams, said he would have liked to have seen the Fusiliers win after their hard-fought games ; they had come a long way and had experienced bad luck.

The Murray Challenge Cup, was presented by Lady Macdonald to the Shropshires, and gold medals to each member of the winning team, the Fusiliers, as runners up, receiving silver medals.

Hockey.

HORNETS vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—These teams played a draw on the Hornets' ground, on the 18th instant, the score was one all.

UNITED SERVICES vs. E. I. RAILWAY.—On the Caledonian ground, on the 18th instant, the Railway beat the U. S. team by a penalty goal to nil.

ARE OUR DOGS GOING TO THE DOGS?

I CALL the attention of the patriot to the above searching question, writes Mr. Leigh Thomas in London Opinion, and my reason for asking it is this—the foreign dog is superseding the good old British friend of man. In order to save space, may I ask the reader to suppose that the phrase, "good old," is written before the word "British" every time that word is used in this article? Having come to that reasonable understanding, let us turn our attention to this serious inquiry which demands the earnest and careful attention of Sir Howard Vincent, Mr. Jesse Collings, and every anti-dumper in the land.

CHOW CHOWS AND SCHIPPERKES.

My attention has been led to the consideration of this subject by the fact that at a recent great dog show in this country a careful observer declared that he was—

Confronted by a serried array of Great Danes, Borzois, Dachshunds, Chow Chows, Schipperkes, Pomeranians, Japanese and Pekinese spaniels, and other weird creatures which have succeeded in ousting some good old British breeds from their former positions of pre-eminence.

I have had to admit the words "good old" in this instance because I was quoting the words of another man. But I ask the reader whether it is to be tolerated that our shores should be polluted by the presence of Borzois and Dachshunds, Chow Chows and Schipperkes when the honest bull-pup languishes in the cold shade of neglect?

GIVING US PAWS!

The other day I was at the country house of a member of Parliament—a presumed patriot, seeing that he is a Tory of the deepest dye and a Tariff Reformer of the purest ray serene. He had thirteen dogs—and what breed does the reader suppose they were? Was the good ol—, I mean was the British bulldog there? He was not. I looked in vain for the English, Irish, Scotch, or Welsh terrier. The scene was not graced by the pensive beauty of the bull-pup. No—all those thirteen dogs were poodles, French poodles, fantastically shaved and curled. As they sat up in a row I said with obvious truth, "They give me paws!"

SPECIAL SCOTCH AND SHAM IRISH.

Experts tell me that the Scottish deerhound has been eclipsed to a great extent by the Irish wolfhound. Now I would not complain of this were the Irish wolfhound the real thing and worthy of its name, for I have never taken sides in any rivalry between two great and unconquered races. But, alas! that a noble name should be desecrated and soiled by such ignoble use—the fact remains, however, that the so-called Irish wolfhound has not a drop of Irish blood in it. The creature is the result of a cross between a deerhound and a Great Dane. Here we have another grievance.

THE NATIONAL DOG OF ENGLAND.

And what about our national dog, the patron dog of England, the dog that for generations has been shown in pictures as standing by John Bull. This old friend has far more claim on our affectionate regard than the British lion, for, after all, the lion is not a native of this island, whereas the faithful bulldog is. Well, I find according to the researches of an authoritative expert, such pranks have been played in connection with the type of bulldog that the national dog of England has degenerated into something like a reproach in canine circles.

After this I learn with regret, but without surprise, that even the mighty mastiff has had to retreat before the German Great Dane.

A REAL DANGER.

Let it not be supposed that I mourn over all this from the sentimental point of view alone, for it is not the case. I see in this movement a real national danger. In Germany they are training dogs not only to assist the police, but also to perform military duty, and I for one believe that the great influx of German dogs has something to do with the great invasion which large-headed publicists assure us is just about to take place. They are here to establish a footing, a four-footing, on our shores. They are nosing things out as the advance guard of the German intelligence department.

A HINT FROM AMERICA.

A thoughtless reader may be tempted to say that dogs may be ignored as part of the intelligence department in an invading force. Such a reader may feel interested in certain particulars published in the Century Magazine concerning an American mongrel named Roger. Had this tale come from any part of the world other than America I might have been tempted to doubt its accuracy, but as it is I accept it unreservedly, asking no questions for conscience sake.

TALL, BUT TRUE.

According to this carefully-written record of fact, Roger spelt words correctly at the first time of asking. I do not mean simple little monosyllables, but such words as "Constantinople," "phthisic," and "pneumonia." Nor was this by any means all, for when Roger had spelt "dog," his master said, "Translate it into German," and the bright little mongrel replied "hund." The master then said, "Spell it in French," and without delay the answer came, "chien."

ANOTHER STIFF ONE.

Possibly the reader felt a slight choking sensation when he read that tale about Roger's linguistic acquirements. Here is another about the same mongrel which may induce a passing cough:

I asked him to solve problems like 2 multiplied by 3 plus 4 divided by 2 minus one. He never made a mistake. Fractions presented no difficulties to him. He selected colours correctly the first time he saw them, and made change as quickly as any cashier.

I pause here in order to give the reader a chance to fan himself, for I confess that even I, inured to this sort of thing by years of experience in Fleet Street and in Parliament, find myself perspiring freely. But there the tale is, just as it is told by the original writer—and there is more to the same effect.

WHAT ARE WE DOING.

Now what is this nation doing to train its own dogs in this way? Our Education Department is worrying about Cowper-Templeism and dogmatic denominational teaching, and is allowing the British dog to loll about in ignorance. Meantime these Chow Chows and Schipperkes that come here unchecked could easily pass the London matriculation. There are German Great Danes and Russian dogs that are equal to drawing an ordnance map of any district in which we have foolishly allowed them to prowl. When will England wake up?

FISH INSECTS.

FISH-INSECTS are too well known to Anglo-Indians to need description. We all have seen the flat, scaly, shining creature, over an inch in length, which is found lurking among papers that have lain long undisturbed in some out-of-the-way place. We have remarked its fish-like shape and noticed its three long caudal stylets.

Fish-insects belong to that primitive order of the hexapoda called Thysanura. These creatures have no wings, but many of them can run with great rapidity. Their life history is simple. They undergo no metamorphosis. They pass through no larval stage. The young ones are miniatures of their parents. The order Thysanura is divided into two sub-orders, popularly known as the spring-tails and the bristle-tails. Fish-insects belong to the latter sub-order and to the family Lepismatidae.

Fish-insects are not by any means confined to India. They appear to be found all the world over. As long ago as 1665 R. Hooke, a Fellow of the Royal Society, gave a graphic account of the creature. He describes it as "a small white silver shining worm or moth, which I found much conversant among books and papers, and is supposed to be that which corrodes and eats through the leaves and covers. Its head appears big and blunt, and its body tapers from it towards the tail, smaller and smaller, being shaped almost like a carrot. . . . It has two long horns before, which are straight and tapering towards the top, curiously ring'd or knobb'd and bristled much like the marsh weed called horse's tail. . . . the hinder part is terminated in three tails, in every particular resembling the two longer horns that grow out of the head. The legs are scal'd and hair'd." Everybody knows how rapidly books, papers and photographs deteriorate in this country unless they receive constant attention. Anglo-Indians, with one accord, blame the fish-insects for this damage. It is true that no one has ever caught a fish-insect in fragrante delicto. But that is not surprising, for the fish-insect is a creature of the night, coming out from its lair, like rats and blackbeetles, only when the lights are extinguished. There is however strong circumstantial evidence against the fish-insect; he is always to be found near the place where the offence has been committed.

The men of science equally with "the man in the Street" shares Mr. Hooke's view that fish-insects are injurious to books.

Mr. Blades in his work, entitled "The Enemies of Books" writes "there is too a small silvery insect (Lepisma) which I have often seen in the backs of neglected books, but his ravages are not of much importance." The American entomologist, Packard, states that the Lepismatidae are "sometimes injurious to papers and books." According to him Lepisma domestica has injured books in the library of Wellesley College.

The Anglo-Indian entomologist, Mr. E. P. Stebbing believes that the fish-insect "perhaps does the most damage in libraries and to pictures. In the latter it apparently feeds upon the saccharine matter used in mounting the picture in its frame."

Sir J. E. Tennant, however, holds a very different opinion of fish-insects, believing them to be most useful creatures. He describes them as "foes who pursue and feed greedily upon" the hordes of minute insects which destroy books. He adds "instead of their services being gratefully recognised these insects are popularly branded as accomplices in the work of destruction. One of these ill-used creatures is a tiny tail-less scorpion (Chelifer), and the other is the pretty little silvery creature (Lepisma), called by Europeans the fish-insect. Like the Chelifer, it shuns the light, hiding in chinks till sunset, but is actively engaged throughout the night feasting on the acari and soft-bodied insects which assail books and papers. There are thus two opinions regarding the character of the fish-insect. One is that the fish-insect is a hexapod without guile, a poor dog who unjustly has been given a bad name; the other is that the fish-insect is the arch-enemy of our books and pictures. It behoves us to decide which of these two views is the true one, for upon the result arrived at our policy towards the fish-insect should depend.

I have given some attention to the subject and have held each view in turn. At one time I was orthodox in the extreme, then I became heterodox and was inclined to side with Tennant; more mature experience has, however, convinced me that the fish-insect is no friend to man. Let me recount the reasons for these changes of opinion. One day I discovered in an old box, which contained neither books nor paper nor indeed anything but dirt, a fish-insect. It is true that it was not of the ordinary species. Its body was black with the exception of a white band running transversely across the hinder part of its back. As the old box was in an empty room, this discovery seemed to show that some fish-insects, at any rate, can get along without paper or books.

On a subsequent occasion in Madras, I saw a dark-coloured fish-insect emerge from the crack between the bricks and the lintel of a gate in a compound wall. It is fairly obvious that that particular fish-insect did not feed upon paper.

Then again, the fish-insect is obviously not the cause of those round holes often found in the leaves and covers of books. Some of these excavations are nearly an inch in length. The mouth of the fish-insect is not an instrument capable of boring such a tunnel. Nor is the shape of the tunnel that of the Lepisma's body.

I then determined to capture some fish-insects and keep them under observation. This resolution seemed to have the effect of producing a dearth of fish-insects in a locality where previously they had appeared to be exceptionally abundant; many days elapsed before I managed to secure one. If any person desires to rid his house of Lepismidae I advise him to make a collection of them. They seem as difficult to collect as five-pound notes! Having at last secured my fish-insect I placed him in a square cigarette box, with a paper of a book, which was already riddled with holes that were the handiwork of some insect. I selected a book of this description, as I am assured that the paper which helps to form most of our modern books is loaded with lead and other impurities to such an extent that the life of the book-worm is now scarcely worth living. The fish-insect did not appear to be enthusiastic over the paper. I had him in that box for three weeks during which the paper remained altogether unaffected. On the second day of his captivity I introduced into his cage a dead mosquito which did seem to excite his curiosity. Later I actually saw him with the corpse of the mosquito in his jaws. After that I used almost daily to put into his box some small insect which I had previously killed. On the twentieth day he was as lively, as hale and hearty, as when he was first captured, and as I have said before, the pieces of paper were not touched. After I had had him for about ten days I placed in his box a piece of the paper which makes the foundation of the back of a book, but the fish-insect did not take the least notice of it. When it ran over it, it did not stop to investigate.

On the twentieth day I caught a second fish-insect, a smaller one than my first capture, and introduced it into the box. The two creatures ignored one another so long as I observed them. A fish-insect abhors the light, it is therefore difficult to observe his habits. Although these insects took no notice of one another while I was watching them, they must have played high jinks after my back was turned. It happened that I did not close the box tightly, the consequence was that my fish-insects had disappeared by the next morning. There had probably been an elopement during the night! I went to England on leave shortly after that. On returning to India I was posted to Lahore where fish-insects seems to be unusually scarce. Hence my researches were at a standstill for a long time, during which I held a good opinion of the fish-insect, going so far as to make the following public declaration: "I believe that the fish-insect does prey upon the insects which attack books, also upon any other soft-bodied creatures he is able to catch. It is possible that he does soil and stain books when he is lying up in them during the day. This I believe is the worst that can be said against him." But, alack and alas! I have since been disillusioned. I am once again among the company of the orthodox. It happened in this wise. Last July I went for ten days to Mussoorie, where I was given a dressing-room which contained anything from twenty to a hundred fish-insects. I had not been three days in the place, before I noticed that the label on my bottle of quinine tabloids was growing beautifully less. Some tissue paper that my wife had put on a shelf became literally riddled with holes in an incredibly short space of time. The same fate overtook some muslin which had never been used. The fish-insects also played havoc with some new hats that had come out from Home and were being stored up for some great occasion. The tulle in the hats was the attraction; it was this that rapidly became riddled with holes; no other part of the hats was touched.

The Mussoorie fish-insects also did considerable damage to the covers of some books which were bound in what publishers describe as "linen."

The glaze on these proved the attraction. In order to keep out the fish-insects my wife placed quantities of naphthaline and black pepper in her boxes, but this seemed to attract rather than repel the hardy creatures! The above-enumerated articles alone were touched. It is evident that whatever the fish-insect may eat in the way of insects, it is injurious to the covers of books if these contain any kind of glaze. It does not do much damage to the leaves of books, even when these are glossy, because it cannot get at them. Anything starchy appears to be particularly palatable to fish-insects.

There are, of course, many species of fish-insect, some of which are probably purely insectivorous, and hence not to be regarded as pests. But the common fish-insect—the Lepisma domestica—of India is assuredly not a creature to be encouraged.

Give a man a horse he can ride,
Give a man a boat he can sail;
And his rank and his wealth, his strength and health,
On sea nor shore shall fail.

Give a man a pipe he can smoke,
Give a man a book he can read;
And his home is bright with a calm delight,
Though the room be poor indeed.

Give a man a girl he can love,
As I, O my Love, love thee;
And his heart is great with the pulse of Fate,
At home, on land, on sea.

THE DUCHESS'S DEVICE.

Miss Kittie Marjoram had been born pretty and rich, and with that strange insistence with characterises some people she had gone on growing prettier and richer ever since. When she attained her social majority—eighteen—and was presented by her aunt, the Duchess of Dulverton, princes praised her beauty, the peerage hankered after her dollars. Proposals for her hand were popularly supposed to average a score a week; but all suitors met with one reply from Miss Marjoram, a sweet but decided "No!"

"I'm sure I don't know what you are about," snapped the Duchess, on the evening of the day on which Kittie had for the third time refused the Earl of Barchester.

"I sometimes think I don't know myself," said lovely Kittie, nesting her fluffy, golden hair amid a heap of downy cushions, and giving a tiny sigh.

"Perhaps you are waiting for a prince of the blood royal?" pursued the Duchess, who was chaperoning the heiress of the season.

"No, I think not," answered the girl, with a fine smile. "I should hate to be a morganatic wife. It almost sounds as if it were not proper."

The Duchess looked annoyed.

"You should not say such things. It's bad form for a young girl in her first season to make remarks on marriage. Well bred girls consider it the ultimatum of existence."

"Then I am——!" queried Kittie, rather pertly.

"Foolish, my dear, only foolish," responded the Duchess, graciously.

Her Grace was a woman of the world, and could read the heart of the unsophisticated heiress like an open book. She knew her to be an honourable girl, but she also knew that she was headstrong, wilful, and not a little inclined to take the bit between her teeth. On one hand she was not displeased with Kittie's attitude towards her many suitors, for she destined the girl and her fortune for her youngest son, Lord Freddie Belmire, a handsome scapegrace, who, the Duchess always maintained, would be at once steadied down by marriage.

Until the beginning of July the Duchess, therefore, had viewed the girl's dégagée ways with indulgence, but an incident, a living picture, seen as pendant at the State Ball, rather opened her eyes to the dangers that beset her son's marriage, for the Duchess had seen Allan Tremayne, of the Foreign Office, kissing her niece's white wrist. It was scarcely the man's audacity that shocked her Grace, even though he had drawn the soft wrinkled glove down from her rounded arm, and was following with loving line the tender tracery of the wee, blue veins, but it was the expression on her niece's face that alarmed her.

The girl was pale beneath the shifting shadows of the balcony on which she stood, her full, carved mouth was quivering with emotion. One glance was enough to tell the Duchess that the lovely heiress was deeply in love with Allan Tremayne, a man whose very friendship was dangerous for young girls, a man who boasted of his successes with half the fair women in Europe.

From that moment the Duchess of Dulverton scarcely let Kittie Marjoram out of her sight, and yet, with all her care, she knew that the lovers met, and that the girl was daily growing more and more enamoured of this man, who bore the most damaging reputaiton in London.

And now Kittie had given evidence of the strength of her feelings by definitely refusing Lord Barchester, the very match the Duchess would wish her to have made—after one with her own son.

"Perhaps, my dear," she said presently, keeping one eye on the girl's tell-tale face and the other on the big feather fan she swayed slowly to and fro, "perhaps you really don't care about Lord Barchester?"

"I hate him—I told him so to-day."

"My dear," exclaimed the Duchess, with a mildness of manner and oiliness of tone that should have warned Kittie, "you must have some reason for so doing, for his connections and position are undoubted, and——"

"He's so ugly!" blurted out Kittie, falling easily into the trap laid for her.

"I cannot believe that any low-class idea concerning a man's looks can possibly influence a girl like yourself. There must be some other reason."

Kittie blushed as scarlet as the gaudy poppies she wore in the bosom of her white gown, but answered nothing.

"Your cousin Frederick loves you sincerely. Is it possible——?" But Miss Marjoram burst into a ripple of merry laughter. Freddie was a dear boy and all that, but she couldn't possibly love him—and she refused Lord Barchester for no reason at all, which was a woman's reason—and there was the carriage, and auntie had better hasten, or they would miss Melba's waltz song in the first act of "Romeo et Juliette."

For a brief space the Duchess' fears concerning Kittie's affections were lulled, but they roused again to instant suspicions when, at the beginning of the "balcony scene," Allan Tremayne, all uninvited, entered her box and coolly slipped into a chair at Kittie's side.

Every sigh of love, every thrill of passion of the two stage lovers found an echo in Kittie Marjoram's heart, and the Duchess saw it, for she was an observant woman, and knew well how to read fleeting blushes, downcast eyes and panting, snowy bosoms.

When the fond Veronese pair sung of a secret marriage, the chaperon's sharp eyes saw Tremayne's knees press ever so lightly against Kittie's satin skirts, and his lips—handsome, clean-shaven lips—shape rather than utter a word or two in her ear.

Tremayne put the ladies into their brougham after the opera, and, as he did so, said an impressive "Good-bye."

"Au revoir! I presume you mean, Mr. Tremayne," said the Duchess, her tones somewhat sharpened by the certainty that as she and her niece entered the Park next morning Mr. Tremayne would spring from somewhere, with an offer of chairs, or the latest scrap of little-talk.

"No, really good-bye! I'm off for six weeks' salmon fishing in Norway. Lord Tregath has lent me his river, and the chance is too good to be missed."

"And you won't be at Goodwood or Cowes?" cried the Duchess, in accents of most uncomplimentary joy.

"Alas! no. So once more good-bye. Back 'Tipler' for the Goodwood Stakes, Miss Marjoram, and you'll win a lot of gloves."

Well, I hope that affair is done with," sighed the Duchess to herself, after Kittie had kissed her "good-night" and gone to her room. "It's a mercy that man has gone. He might easily have persuaded the silly child to any act of folly—even to marrying him. Perkins, Miss Marjoram has left her gloves and fan here. Take them to her."

The Duchess pushed Kittie's belongings aside, and as she did so, felt the faint crackle of thin paper beneath the pressure of her hand.

"Never mind," she cried, hastily. "Miss Kittie need not be disturbed to-night. You can go, Perkins."

Once alone, the Duchess drew from the palm of the small, scented glove a note written on foreign paper.

"My own Darling, Thanks for your trusting faith in my love, and your sweet promise to become my wife. You must leave the Goodwood course during the luncheon hour on Wednesday. Drive to the station at Chichester. I will meet you there with a licence in my pocket. We'll be married at Dover, and then for a lifelong honeymoon. You will see how beautifully I shall catch her Grace over the Norway lie.

Your adoring,
Allan Tremayne.

"I wonder to how many women Allan Tremayne has signed himself an adorer," cried the Duchess to the silver-topped bottles on her dressing-table, "and how many women have been fools enough to believe him. But Kittie, poor little simpleton, shall be the last. Her heart is broken, I know, but she's a proud girl, and won't wear it on her sleeve for the rest of her sex to peck at. Anyway, it will be for her own good, even if the cure hurts. Now, what's my best plan of action? She twisted the tiny note in her fingers for a moment. "Kittie must not know I've seen this, it will put her on her guard, and only result in another pair. I can't let her have this back, it's too valuable a weapon to part with. I wonder—I wonder if I've any paper nearly like hers?

With the activity of a young girl she ran to her escritoire, and, searching through her blotter, found a half-sheet of thin foreign paper.

"The very thing," she cried, and, sitting down, the Duchess of Dulverton proceeded to trace word for word Allan Tremayne's note on the fresh scrap of paper. It took an hour to do, and the dawn was peeping round the blinds as she folded the forged letter into Kittie's glove and locked the original document in a private drawer.

On the following Monday the Duchess of Dulverton, with Miss Marjoram, Lord Freddie, and a party of friends, repaired to Down View, Goodwood. The weather was delightful, and the party in high spirits, except the Duchess herself, who complained of headache and depression. She went to the races on Tuesday, however, but on Wednesday declared herself unfit to leave the house, and her guests drove to the course without her.

She watched Kittie from her window as she entered the carriage. The girl looked pale, but very lovely, dark rings of sleeplessness enhanced the beauty of her soft eyes, while the plaintive droop at the corners of her sweet mouth lent an added charm to her face.

She wore a white serge frock, just touched with her favourite poppy-red at the throat and hem, a neat, close hat was fitted above her curls, and a large dark wrap cloak was handed into the carriage after her.

"Umph! Quite equipped, I see," muttered the Duchess, as she rang her bell for Perkins, demanded to be dressed at once, and ordered her single brougham to be brought round in an hour.

"Wants a quarter to one, then she won't be here yet," said Allan Tremayne, as he sauntered into the Chichester railway station. "By Jove! Allan, you're a lucky dog to land such a prize, a real little beauty, and heavily gilt from top to toe. I love her, too, for her big eyes and for that rose-bud mouth of hers, which she has never yet let me touch—but I'll—the devil! The Duchess!"

"Good morning, Mr. Tremayne," cried the Duchess of Dulverton, cheerily, as she walked along the platform, "I expected to find you here. No, I won't shake hands, thanks."

She glanced at the station clock.

"One already. Dear me, how time flies, and we've only ten minutes for a chat."

"Ten minutes! I don't——"

"A quick train for London stops here in ten minutes," interposed the Duchess, with an air of imparting agreeable information, "and you are going to catch it."

"I beg your pardon, Duchess, but I think not. You are labouring under a mistake." Tremayne tried to keep his temper, but the knowledge that something had gone wrong with his plans made him brusque of speech.

The Duchess, too, altered her tone from simple urbanity to a colder key.

"Come into the waiting-room with me," she said. "Ah! you need not look so eagerly at the door. I know you are expecting Miss Marjoram every minute. I cannot prevent her coming here, but I can stop you from speaking to her."

"Wild horses could not do that," blustered Tremayne.

"I daresay not," replied the Duchess; "but those three constables over there, who hold a warrant for your arrest, can."

"A warrant!" gasped Allan, turning pale. "What for?"

"For attempting to marry a ward in Chancery without the consent of the Court. Ah! you needn't deny. Your letter arranging this—little affair—is at this moment in the hands of the magistrate who granted the warrant. It will be forwarded to the proper authorities to-night in the event of your arrest. Now, Mr. Tremayne, your train is just due; hadn't you better get over to the opposite platform? One moment, though—your disappointment concerning my niece is, no doubt, great—and the trip to Norway is—expensive."

She drew from her pocket a roll of notes and thrust them into his hand.

"Your train," she said once more, smiling. "You'll have to run."

And he ran.

The Duchess turned to find Kittie behind her, white as her gown, and trembling from head to foot.

"The coward! The mean wretch to be bought off like that with a few paltry notes!" cried the girl, indignantly.

"They were five hundred pounds' worth, my dear," said the Duchess, slipping her hand through Kittie's arm and leading her from the station.

The matter was never referred to again, except on the evening of the day on which Kittie Marjoram promised to become the wife of Lord Freddie Belhairs.

"I owe you a big debt of gratitude, auntie, dear," said Kittie, kneeling at the Duchess's feet. "I feel I can never repay you."

"You have done so to-day, my child," cried the Duchess, parting her golden curls and kissing her forehead.

Solution to Problem No. 56.

Z should lead a small heart from dummy, and finesse the 10 If the finesse fails, Z must be content with the odd trick; if it is successful, he should play two rounds of clubs, winning with the ace and king, and, if A and B both follow, lead a third round. If the suit is evenly divided, Z will then have a long club, and should the opponents go on with the spades, instead of opening diamonds, he can put himself in to make it with the king of hearts. After this he will go on with hearts, and unless B held three guards to the queen originally he must make four tricks in the suit. Z obviously has not much to fear in diamonds, for B has not doubled, and Y Z hold seven of the suit between them, and playing in this way he has just a chance of going game.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

LONDON, Friday, 6th March 1908.

Though only a few competitions have as yet taken place [illegible], the Indian F.I.A.T. cars have already asserted themselves, as only a F.I.A.T. car has won the Mysore Cup, and in Sweden the Winter Cup over a 500-kilometre course. This firm has now completely overcome all their initial financial difficulties, as the increased capital has now been fully subscribed, so they find themselves in a strong position to meet competition. The works are full of orders, including ten 200-h.p. engine sets for the Italian Government, probably for use in the sub-marine boats. Nazzaro, the famous F.I.A.T. driver is taking a great personal interest in the 50-h.p. car that is being constructed at these works for the match for —— side with Mr. C. S. Edge's ninety-h.p. Napier. This F.I.A.T. car is, in fact, being built under his observation, and has been bought by Sir George Abercromby to race at Brooklands after the match has been run off. Sir George hopes to win with this car the Montague Cup, at present held by Mr. J. E. Hutton, who gained it last year on a Mercedes car.

Quite the most welcome news to motorists this week is that a new tyre-filling substance has been invented by a German chemist, Herr Traumer, of Dresden. This gentleman has produced a most remarkable material. It consists of gelatine, glycerine, and compressed air, with a very small proportion of other chemicals. This combination has resulted in a sort of pale yellow India-rubber substance of great resilience, and tyres filled with it that have run 5,000 miles, appear to have lost none of their initial elasticity. The glycerine and gelatine are mixed together at a moderate temperature in a water-jacketed boiler. After being well amalgamated, compressed air is forced into the admixture. This results in forming a spongy rubber-like material, containing a multitude of minute cells, each filled with compressed air.

Of all known resilient mediums, air compressed to a moderate degree is the best. It never loses its excellent qualities as long as the compression is retained, but to hold this has been the one drawback to the pneumatic tyre. This pneumatic material, as this new substance is to be styled, cannot be punctured, is extremely light in weight, and retains the compressed air as far as can be at present ascertained, as after many lengthy experiments its life is still undetermined. It is extremely cheap to manufacture, and should prolong the life of the outer cover, as there is no chance of bursts from inner tubes filled with Herr Traumer's compound. It also should make a splendid and comfortable stuffing for the upholstered seats in a motor-car, as it has the advantages of spring cushions without their drawbacks. As this material is filled into a canvas tube, it is easily fitted on wheels with detachable rims to replace the ordinary air-filled inner tube, or can be forced on to the ordinary tyre rim. So far, this appears to be the nearest substitute for the pneumatic tyre, and its future career will be watched with interest.

It is not at all uncommon that a brilliant inventor is a very indifferent mechanic, and there can be little doubt that ideas worth thousands of pounds have frequently been abandoned because of their inventors' lack of ability, accommodation, or opportunity to make models that would facilitate selecting the best of half a dozen pieces of mechanism for the performance of a certain function. Having these facts well in mind, Messrs. Leonard and Levassor have instituted at their Acton Vale works a new department devoted exclusively to the development, modification, and general furtherance of inventors' ideas. They are prepared to set to work on an invention in any shape, make drawings or models—do anything, in short, that can help the inventor, putting at his command all the resources of a highly-trained and splendidly-equipped staff of engineers. Already a number of new mechanical ideas have been put into practical shape at these works, so this department should have a busy future before it.

Mr. Harry Dutton has just commenced a hazardous ride across Australia, having undertaken to drive a motor-car from sea to sea. Mr. Dutton has, however, made provision against tyre troubles by stipulating that his car shall be fitted with Stepney wheels, a wise provision, which will certainly secure immunity in this direction. Mr. W. T. Lord, in his trip from Bombay to Calcutta, also insured himself against tyre bother on his Argyll car on roads by carrying the indispensable Stepney. This spare wheel will be exhibited at all motor shows this season in Russia, Austria, Hungary, and Switzerland. There seems to be no end to the enterprise of the successful Lhanelly firm.

Mr. E. Heath Reason, of Blackpool and Warrington, has made an apparatus for fitting to the back or front of a motor-car to indicate to vehicles and pedestrians the way the car is about to turn when changing direction. It takes the form of a larger pointer, which can be worked by the driver from the steering-wheel. This pointer can be moved to the right or the left, indicating which way a turn is proposed to be made. It can be fixed on any vehicle, whether self-propelled or not; so this way-indicator should be of great service to prevent accidents often caused by the covered van. If people using the road knew which direction a vehicle was about to take many catastrophes often might be averted, especially in crossing the road where several streets converge.

Guarantees of all sorts are given by different motor-car manufacturers to the purchasers of their wares. The latest novelty in this direction is that given by Messrs. De Dion Bouton (Limited). This firm now state they guarantee that every 12-14-h.p. chassis purchased from them will do over fifty miles an hour on the Brooklands track. This was issued after Mr. J. W. Stocks had driven a chassis of this horse power ten laps of the course, equalling about twenty-seven miles, at an average speed of 53·08 miles per hour. It must, however, be borne in mind that higher gears are fitted for the Brooklands course than are usual for the ordinary buyer would have lower gears fitted after he had witnessed his chassis average this speed. Also that this is done on a stripped chassis, with only a racing seat fitted on it, and not with a proper body. It is remarkable how speed has increased in the past few years, especially for the smaller powered car. A few years back thirty miles an hour for a 12 h.p. car would have been quite a feat, and now this engine will do fifty miles in the hour.

ALREADY the Royal Automobile Club have received several entries for their 2,000 mile international touring-car trial. These include Le Dion cars in Class 1 and Class 3, Beeston-Humber cars in Class 5, six-cylinder Napier cars for Class 7 and Class 10, six-cylinder Rolls-Royce cars for Class 9, and a 20 h.p. White Steam car and a 30-h.p. White Steam car. All motorists will be good to know that these two latter vehicles are entered, as the White is undoubtedly the premier steam-propelled pleasure car in motordom. Considering that steam-engines have been one of the leading manufactures of this country it appears somewhat extraordinary that the competition in the steam motor-car has been so neglected here by engineers.

One of the best signs of vitality of the motor industry is the manner in which the pleasure motor-car manufacturer is gaining a rapid popularity in the Colonies and the Far East. No one will deny that there is still a large unexploited field which, if only thoroughly worked, will result in a great demand upon the motor industry, and in this respect it is interesting to note that during the past week the Adams Manufacturing Company have shipped one of their 10-h.p. mail phaeton cars to Kuala Lumpur, Malay Peninsula. The car is extremely well finished, the body and upholstery being royal blue in colour with yellow wheels. It speaks well for the excellence of the Adams car that a good number of them should now be running in the Malay State, and in other parts of the East, where they are highly praised. Two cars of the same type are being sent to Northern India, and a two-cylinder 16-h.p. car has recently been shipped to Batavia.

This year, for the first time, the A.C.F. have initiated a small car race, which is to take place over the same course as the Grand Prix, but on the previous day. The entries for this race have reached the magnificent total of fifty-eight, and some fine racing should be the result. Last year, in a race for voiturettes, the winner, a little single cylinder Sizaire, averaged over forty miles an hour, truly an astounding performance. It is a pity that no British manufacturers have been enterprising enough to enter, because here we have a race which appeals essentially to the man of moderate means. The car of the future will undoubtedly be a light, fast car, economical to run, and a race such as this should give one a pretty fair guide as to the worth of any particular car. That high power is really not necessary is proved by the performance of a little 14-h.p. four-cylinder De Dion, which averaged practically fifty miles per hour for twenty-seven miles at Brooklands the other day.

The Bombay Motor Car Company have just delivered a very fine 25-h.p. Daimler with body by Mayhorn, to the agent to the Governor-General in Rajputana, The Honble Mr. L. C. Covrin, C.I.E. This is a Government order, which is highly satisfactory.

The same Company have received a letter from Professor Dawson, Principal of the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute, and Joint Honorary Secretary of the Motor Union of Western India, eulogising the performance of the 25-h.p. Daimler Car which he drove in connection with the recent Indian Motor Trials. As the car was only received a few hours before the commencement of the trials, there was no opportunity of tuning it up, yet there was no hitch of any kind whatever, and the vehicle made an absolutely non stop run. Only 1½ gallons of lubricating oil and 2lbs. of grease on chains were used through the entire trip, and the petrol consumption worked out at 15·2 miles per gallon.

In order to discover the existence of dogs upon which no tax has been paid the Paris authorities have men who go about the streets barking. It is scarcely to be wondered at that while fishing for information in this way the barkers often get a bite.

At a numerously-attended meeting, held after midnight in Caxton Hall, it was unanimously resolved to form a Society for the Protection of Ancient Similes. The company was first addressed by that hardy veteran, the Curate's Egg. He began by remarking that it was contrary to his habit to come out of his shell, but the conditions of his servitude were absolutely rotten. A certain well-known writer thought nothing of working him in three or four articles a week, while he was on duty almost daily in the productions of another. (Sensation and cries of "Name!")

The Sailor's Parrot observed that he was totally unaccustomed to public speaking, but, as was well-known, he thought the more. (Laughter and cheers.) He really though it was about time he had a rest. It was only last week that he had made his 19,847th appearance in the pages of a certain popular weekly. (Shame!) Being a bird of few words, he would not detain them further, but would now call upon

The Housemaid's Baby, who remarked that it was getting a big boy now. What about child-labour? (Cheers.) Although it was only a little one (a laugh) it could assure its hearers that it had figured at least once in the columns of one of our leading newspapers everyday for years. (Sensation, and cries of "Name! Name!")

Macaulay's New Zealander then rose to address the meeting, but Mrs. Partington, with her mop, got up at the same time, while at the back of the hall several of the late Charles Dickens's creations, including Sam Weller, Mr. Barkis, and Mrs. Harris, endeavoured to obtain a hearing. In the midst of the confusion a resolution for the formation of a Society for the Protection of Ancient Similes was put, and declared to have been carried unanimously.

Dawn beginning to break, the meeting then dissolved.

BOMBAY RACING SEASON, 1907-08

ANOTHER Bombay Racing Season has come and gone and if ever a sign was wanted that the game in that Presidency will continue to prosper, we have had it probably more strongly this season than any. The importation of fresh racing stock from England and Australia is, of course, common talk and such fine performances were put up during this recent Big Meeting that it will indeed take the classiest of Home blood to show anything better. Not only in these classes is there need for comment, but in the ranks of the new Arabs. There have probably never been such a promising lot of novices landed in Bombay, as this year, and whereas the majority are every bit as good as the average old pony there are some who need watching when pitted against the recognised top-notchers.

First taking the English and Colonial sprinters, we find Sermon out of form and Killua, as far as the big stakes are concerned, not the smasher he was and have to turn to one we saw for the first time, Sea Spray, for the best. At his first outing he won the Flying Plate of five furlongs carrying 8st. 13lb. in 1min. 1sec. pat. He, however, did nothing after this which, though he had to carry a bit more than a galloping weight, was to a certain extent due to the way in which he was asked to take this weight away to the front; it is surprising how many of our best jockeys do this with top weights when it seems beyond all reason.

Zotique, too, has proved a very sound investment, improving as he has at almost every outing and the fact that he can go as far as a mile was proved before the Extras concluded. Big Admiral Crichton has come on no end, though he found the Big Meet class a bit too good, winning four times and being still a comparative youngster may yet continue to improve. Golden Gleam had his turn on the last day when on the strength of his previous runs his win came as a surprise to the public, as much of a reversal of form as when Ballark won the Byculla Club Cup for the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar after his failures in the Bombay City Plate and Grand Western. The former of these went to Wandin after a great race proving him a better horse even than when he won his Poona race. Paddy's Darling won the latter and remembering his Calcutta form the majority of punters were on him. Whereas last year Fitzgrafton might just as well have stayed in his stall, he did not run on this occasion.

Bombay's Sheriff, and a keen sportsman Mr. D. D., was to some extent recompensed for his bad luck with Boabdil and Stirabout, by the success of Pelargonium II. He is quite a young horse and may improve stones. Judging by his runaway win in the Colaba Plate of 1¼ mile he will, though had his owner not stood to win as much in the Mahaluxmi Plate, when he failed to stay the mile, there might have been cause for comment.

As to the 14-2 and under classes, the feature of the season was Lady Nannie's win in the Innovation Plate, which she cut out easily in 1min. 29secs. for seven furlongs. The public had "expected" her more than once previously and when money did come from the right quarter they fell over themselves to back her. It was her last outing and I think we shall find her the champion of her class over almost any distance. Lady Avon always had more than she could carry, but Russley Rose still has her dash and old Matalgia ran up to his form, though when he beat Wild Boy he caused about the biggest upset we have had; he covered the mile in 1min. 44 2/5secs.

Turning to the old Arabs there is not much to be said, Bay Middleton at last showed his worth, but Tachreet, who improved so much in Poona, is quite the champion from five or even four furlongs to seven. Our old champion, Precious, was a disappointment, not that I think he has gone off but he is asked to do a bit too much. The two most improved are Peculiar and Eed, the former now proves that careful nursing up the rise at Poona would have seen him more successful there, whereas Eod seems capable of carrying almost any weight. Moonib Pasha only began to show form towards the end of the season when twice there was just one too good for him, his inability to live with his field in the early part of a race telling too much against him over only nine furlongs. True, he won over a mile in Poona, but the heavy going and the nature of the course there makes a difference of over a furlong.

Young Kohinoor did well over a distance and Grey Falcon carries out the promise he gave some time ago, but Rose, Mint, Young Gazelle, Vasco, Dilerjung and Commander appear to have been quite out of form.

As to the new ponies, I think we need look no further than Maimoon for the champion, though he unfortunately contracted a "leg" and it was this that was responsible for his failure in the Melton Plate. The long race, the Second Dealers' Plate, went to an undoubtedly good stayer in Wild Poppy though we are told, and still wait to have proved, that had Ajeel got away with the rest there would have been nothing else in it. Disfigure is not the pony many thought him, but Safoog, Mountain King, Saree, Prince Chestnut, Young Salanic, Malik Jaman, Veto, Hullo and Ateyba will have to be reckoned with in Poona. On the timing and the fact that some have actually beaten a fair class of old timers the pick of Arabs seen in the hill station last year will have to look to their laurels.

Mr. Cecil Gray, who is on a holiday, and his Stewards have the thanks of all race-goers for the excellence of the sport provided. There has been but one unfortunate incident, the wiping out of two books who came from South Africa, Bucknell and Morton, and of Williams who gained such a reputation through his sound judgment that the trainer was once heard to remark that even were he on a donkey one could not get a long price. Mr. Cursetjee continues to puzzle the most knowing of racing folk, his knowledge of the doings of the various horses and his judgment are little short of marvellous, whereas one must not forget the starter, Mr. O'Gorman. He has had huge fields to deal with, bigger even than formerly amongst new Arabs, and nobody can justly do otherwise than compliment him on his success with them. Captain Hughes takes over from Mr. Cecil Gray in Poona and from what is known of him he should make a very able substitute. Appended are the usual statistics.—

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY BOAT RACE.

THE annual inter-Varsity boat race which will be rowed over the Thames Championship course, from Putney Bridge to the Ship, at Mortlake on the 4th instant, bids fair to be one of the most interesting of the long series of aquatic contests that have been decided between the sister Universities.

During their training both crews have accomplished some smart performances which have so perplexed the Thames waterside critics that when they have been asked "which crew will win?" they have replied:—"It's a toss up!" For my own part I think that the Cantabs will repeat their victories of last year and 1906, my reason for coming to this conclusion being that while the two eights are about equally matched as regard strength, the Light Blues have experience in their favour and this I expect to stand them in good stead. By this I do not wish it to be understood that the Cantabs have an easy thing on. Far from it. It is my firm conviction that Mr. D. C. R. Stuart and his men will be hard pushed over every inch of the tiring course.

The betting favours the men from the Cam, on whose chances of victory odds are laid, but this is no criterion to go by. Many are the years in which the odds freely given on one crew have veered round in favour of the other as the day of the race draws near, and on the very eve of the race there often happens some little incident detrimental to the chances of the favourites which is known to few, but would probably make their backers hedge if they heard about it. Such secrets are jealously guarded and most carefully kept from members of the crew if possible. Eight men, to say nothing of the cox, in a highly wrought condition, with nerves strung up to the highest pitch for the ordeal before them, are easily affected by some untoward incident, and it is of the utmost importance that their confidence in themselves and their fellow-members should be absolutely unimpaired. A flurried crew will make a bad start, and though one which starts well does not mind being led at first, a crew which goes off "all over the shop" gets very easily demoralised.

Last year as much as 5 to 1 was laid against the Oxonians before the race, but they nevertheless put up a magnificent fight, and had their coxswain shown better judgment than he did during the contest the finish would certainly have been much closer. Instead of taking advantage of the Surrey side of the river, which nine coxswains out of every ten would have done in the weather conditions which prevailed then, Donkin the Dark Blue cox steered his men right up the middle of the Thames thus adding considerably to their labours. They never lost their heads, however, and rowed in magnificent form right along to the finish. Not once did they look like breaking up and as a matter of fact their work was much prettier to look at than was that of the Cambridge men.

As regards the present crews each have three old Blues rowing—Stuart, Powell, and Burn for Cambridge—Gladstone, Kirby, and Southwell, for Oxford Stuart (stroke) and Powell (seven) rowed in the same places last year. Gladstone again strokes Oxford, but their present seven (Barker) is a new choice. The two sixes are also fresh hands. Williams, of Cambridge, a former Captain of the boats at Eton, has done enough rowing to have the necessary qualifications for such a responsible position, and McCulloch, the Oxford representative, besides his rowing, has a good record as a sculler. By the way, there was great joy in the Oxford camp when McCulloch came up to row. They were hard up for a six, and he was by far the most promising man they had for the place, but at one time it did not seem likely that he would be able to row. Of the two, fives, Kirby has rowed twice against Cambridge. Burn rowed four years in the Cambridge crew. Southwell rowed seven last year, but is now at three and the other Oxford bow men and the other Cambridge men are all new comers. We have here two powerful crews, with a sufficient stiffening with tried hands in each, and they should turn out well above the average. Cambridge have a slight advantage in weight, but no great difference.

The crews are:—

Of the previous matches of which the "wet-bobs" from the Cam and Isis have rowed, Oxford have scored the most wins, having 34 victories to their credit as against 28 of Cambridge. Only once has the event ended in a dead-heat. Such a result occurred in 1877 when the time occupied by the two crews was 24 minutes 8 seconds. The fastest time the race has been rowed in is 18 minutes 47 seconds. This has been done twice. The representatives of Oxford accomplished it in 1893, and the Cambridge crew did it seven years later. But most merit attaches to the performance of the Light Blues for whereas their opponent won by one length only in 1893 the official verdict in favour of Cambridge in 1900 was "twenty lengths."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Of racing news in Calcutta there is none and everyone has settled down to a period of monotony, though the Duggan vs. Turf Club case will no doubt provide sufficient excitement and to spare when it comes into Court. Mr. Duggan claims Rs. 50,000 damages for libel and his case as set out in his plaint is, briefly, that the Turf Club for two years have printed his name in the list of defaulters without his knowledge and without giving him any notice. That on 21st December last, when he and his wife were having tea in the public enclosure at the races with Mr. Manson, Mr. Hutchison, the Secretary of the Turf Club, went up to that gentleman and told him that Mr. Duggan was a defaulter and must be removed from the ground or the consequences would be unpleasant. As other mutual acquaintances of Mr. Hutchison and Mr. Duggan began to gibe at the latter in the paddock to avoid further unpleasantness he went away. The Turf Club's reply to this is not yet filed, and as the matter is sub judice we refrain from all comment, but in the hearing of the case questions will doubtless arise as to the exact powers of the Stewards, the decision of which will be of great interest to the racing public.

Calcutta people were interested to learn that the winner of the Grand National, Rubio, was ridden by Mr. Bletsoe, a brother of Mr. W. B. Bletsoe, who is well known in connection with local G.R. races and of Mrs. Judd, of Bharatpur, who was a familiar figure in Calcutta Society up to the time of her marriage last hot weather. Mr. Bletsoe's performance is the more noteworthy as it was the first occasion on which either horse or jockey had started over the Aintree course, and our readers do not need to be told what a feat it is to win the stiffest steeplechase in the world at the first time of asking for both steed and rider.

Mr. O. M. D. Bell is off to Australia next week, and he says he is going to bring up some real smashers for next season. Botha, Mount Dane, Jackeroo and his present lot are to be left altogether in the shade. This will take some doing as they are a useful string, but "O. M. D." is a good judge and we shall wait the advent of the new arrivals with much interest.

Many of our readers will be sorry to hear of the death of Mr. Edward Kerr ("Ted" Kerr), for some years breaksman and foreman at Messrs. A. Milton and Co. He succumbed at the General Hospital last Thursday night after suffering from fever and complications, at the age of 47. He will be remembered as an assistant to Messrs. V. Macklin and Cavanagh, Horse Importers, also to Messrs. Hart Brothers and as an expert buck-jump rider. He was the right hand man of the late Captain Horace Hayes, when he toured through India, Burma, etc., giving exhibition in Horse training. Mr. Kerr was a good all-round horseman, a good whip and an obliging and industrious assistant.

The annual polo tournament for the Murree Brewery Cup, at Rawalpindi, met with misfortune this year. Several teams had entered, but they dropped out for various causes and only four local teams were left in—the 10th Hussars, R.A., West Yorks and 11th Lancers. The 10th Hussars beat the R.A. by 6 goals to 1 and the 11th Lancers beat the West Yorks by 5 goals to 3. The final was to have been between the 10th Hussars and the 11th Lancers, but owing to the death of an officer in England, the 10th have scratched from the finals. The game between them and the 11th would have been most exciting and well worth watching. But the luck of the tournament has been bad from beginning to end.

The annual garden party of the Sporting Union Club was held on Sunday last at Agarpara. There was a good gathering of about 100 members. In connection with this a walking contest was held starting from 93, Circular Road. The winner, N. Roychowdhury, covered the distance of 9½ miles in 1 hour and 28 minutes, thus carrying away the valuable prize of a watch. He was closely followed by P. Maitra, who thus won a wrist watch. The third prize of a silver medal was won by P. Bose. There was also a swimming contest in which M. Mitter swam the distance of about 80 yards in 1 minute and 26 seconds, being closely followed by S. Ghose. It was not before nightfall that the gathering separated after thoroughly enjoying the splendid programme of different amusements and music.

In the final round of the English Rugby county championship at Redruth last Saturday, Cornwall beat Durham by 17 points to 3.

The Polo tournament for the Bechtler Cup at Jhansi ended in a win for the Bhopal I. S. Victoria Lancers, who beat the 30th Lancers in the final game by 4 goals to 3.

This year the International Horse Show is to last nine days instead of six, and there will be no judging in the mornings if it can be avoided, and unless extremely large entries necessitate such a course. Visitors will find this a much more convenient and satisfactory plan. There is every prospect of the rivalry from America and the Continent being even greater than before, for already it has been announced that several famous foreign studs will be represented at Olympia next June, which were not competing there last year. It is to be hoped that this prospect will only stiffen the backs of British exhibitors, so that there may be even a more representative display of native hunters, hacks, hackneys, polo ponies, and harness horses of various breeds than was the case in 1907.

The 16th Rifles won the Jubbulpore Polo tournament, defeating the 7th Light Cavalry in the final game by 6 goals to 1.

The Sirhind annual open boxing tournament will take place in Simla at the Town Hall commencing 8th June next. It is open to all officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the regular forces and volunteer corps in India. The "All-India" Regimental Championship challenge trophy will be competed for during this tournament. This trophy will be presented to the Regiment which scores most points throughout the tournament. The trophy is to be held for one year. A trophy in bronze will also be presented, to be held permanently by the winning regiment. Officers' and Boys' Competitions will be included.

Our Shillong correspondent writes.—The Shillong Spring Meeting is to take place the end week in May. The Races are only worth Rs. 150, so extra-provincial ponies are likely to be conspicuous by their absence. Mr. "Charley" Holder has returned after his winter tour of the various race-meets, and has brought with him Topsy III., Repute and Glenlea (his own ponies), Mr. Allen's Ivy, Mr. Forbes' Venetia, and Mrs. Ward's Circus Boy. The last mentioned pony which, at Jorhat, did a mile in record time for Assam will probably go down to Calcutta for the Monsoon Races, and he should do well for he is the build of pony who would revel in the mud. The Shillong Races are now a much more comfortable function since the erection of the new race stand. Rumour hath it that the Silchar Races are to be revived next November.

Our London correspondent writes:—Most of your readers, especially the "G.R." section, who periodically take a hand in the jump events at your race meetings, will be interested to read about the appearance in England of a new patent hurdle which ought to become popular in India if anyone has sufficient enterprise to introduce it. It was exhibited at the Hunters' Improvement Society's show held this week at the Agricultural Hall and its merits were practically demonstrated; it is called the "Mortimer Patent Jumping Hurdle." The main principle involved, is that of a rapidly returning though easily displaced hurdle, and the displacement restricted to the smallest possible area.

The framework is composed of the usual type of bar foundation, which can be safely secured to the ground and made perfectly immovable, but the hurdle proper is composed of sections each giving the same resistance as the ordinary hurdles, and each independent of its neighbour, though all firmly secured to the base with specially strengthened hinges, and kept in a vertical position with carefully-designed springs. These sections are so arranged as to make it impossible for a horse to disturb the line of hurdles to a greater extent than the width of its own body, and should a horse so stumble, the sections disturbed are back in position instantly. This is not accomplished by any aggressive flyback, but by a gentle though properly sensitive spring which can never fail to act or in any way cause the slightest possibility of injury to horse or rider.

From a humanitarian point of view the hurdle is as near perfect as possible, and a great point in its favour is the distinct advantage it secures over all other types of hurdles inasmuch as it puts all horses on an equal footing. Every horse must jump straight and must jump every flight; no undue advantage can be secured by a horse taking a fallen hurdle; each horse must attempt the flights. The innovation is attracting considerable attention among National Huntsmen here, I wonder if the executives at Calcutta, Bombay, Lucknow, and other big racing centres in India will ever give it a trial, or will they rest content with the primitive contrivance plus the bamboo, the matting, the coolie and the racecourse mali.

The merits of the "Colonel" ball are being much discussed just now in England and as far as one can judge the consensus of opinion in professional and amateur circles awards it a pre-eminent position among the scores of favourite "spheroids" now on the market. In India, too, it has found very many staunch advocates. If we would but pause and ponder ever so little, it must appear very evident that it is the professional fraternity that provide us with the best and safest data on which to base our opinions. Whatever balls he may play from time to time, and recommend to his patrons, throughout the golfing season, as the championship comes round the average professional, if he has any chance at all of qualifying for the final stage of the year's greatest event, will use that ball with which, in his heart of hearts, he believes he will accomplish the greatest measure of success. There is no secret about the business. Every year as the English championship comes round, the same eagerness manifests itself in the crowd: "What ball is he playing?" For some years past it has been the same story. The products of the English and American ball-makers were of small account in the championship as against those of the Scotch makers. For instance, at Hoylake last June, of 193 competitors 94 per cent. played with balls made in Scotland, and, what is more startling still, 90 per cent. used the "Colonel" ball, made by the St. Mungo Manufacturing Company, Govan, Glasgow, the pioneer company of the rubber-cored balls in Britain.

It may be of interest to learn that Massy ascribes much of his success to the fact that he always sticks to the same make of ball for big Matches and Tournaments. There is a good deal in this, for though all golf balls have much the same outward appearance, some are more lively than others, and require a lot of knowing, particularly for the delicate strokes of the game. Massy's choice is the St. Mungo "Colonel" ball, and it may be said in all sincerity that he could not have made a better selection. Some balls drive particularly well, others show their best qualities on the Putting Greens, while others, again, possess their durability as their strong point. The "Colonel" happily combines all three virtues: hence its popularity and the preference which Massy and other famous players show for it. The public records prove that the "Colonel" has materially helped to win more competitions and break more records during the last few months than all the other balls put together. What more can one say?

Several thousand attempts have been made to secure the prize of two guineas London Opinion recently offered for the best epigrammatic definition of golf, and the average of amusing replies has been high.

It has been difficult to exhaust the many likely lines down to the winning effort, but after much cogitation, the editorial fancy finds itself most tickled by the effort of Mr. William Gibbons, of Elm Lea, Linnet Lane, Sefton Park, Liverpool, who declares the game to be:—

"The pursuit of pale pills by purple people."

Nobody can have been on many golf courses without observing the fine, ruddy, not to say beetroot, complexions which the open-air life of the links gives to golf's devotees; and whether or not the scarlet coat ever comes back again to general use, "purple people" must ever remain a fair colourable description of golfers, by and large. Other efforts submitted include:—

Spleen on the green.
The sublime stooping to the ridiculous.
The cult of the strenuous idler.
The pursuit of the rubber-cored by the rather bored.
A clubber bored searching for the rubber-cored.
A cross between hockey and marbles.
Billiards gone to grass.
Polo on shanks's pony.
Croquet elongated.
Peripatetic tiddleywinks.
A pleasant walk spoilt.
Ball grazing by queer cattle.
Pedestrianism punctuated by problems.
The fearsome in pursuit of the foursome.
The game Scotchmen knock "I" out of.
A tee-fight with clubs.
A game in which the ball usually lies badly and the player well.
A combination of contemplations, excavations, and exclamations.
A bounder, a stick, and a rebounder.
Three acres and a ball.
The mighty in pursuit of the atom.
The chastisement of erratic indiarubber with unmanageable weapons and impaired temper.
An assault on the insignificant by the incompetent armed with the grotesque.
The idle man's business; the busy man's idleness.
The insane flogging the inanimate.
A game mid the bunkers, both for old 'uns and younkers.
Following a ball and bawling at a follower.
A country dance, after the ball.
The triumph of Hope over Experience.
The pursuit of flying cores by lying bores.
The pursuit of the elastic by the bombastic enthusiastic.

A game indefinable, with a ball oft unfindable.
Hitting a ball in the morning and looking for it all the afternoon.

That violent words play the most prominent part in the game is the fixed belief of many hundreds. We therefore get "compressed gutter language inspired by the vagaries of compressed gutta-percha," "The misuse of land and language," "A hol(e)y ideal pursued in a cursory manner," "The cursory pursuit of the infinite," "Futility relieved by profanity," "Red coats, white balls, and blue language," "The despair of the Recording Angel," "Obesity in pursuit of blasphemy," "The language producer and the liver reducer," "The game where the language is less chaste (chased) than the ball," and "A mixture of the heights of idiocy with the depths of profanity."

Apt alliteration's artful aid has been sought by many competitors besides the winner, and we find such definitions as "Pill punching by bilious blighters," "Fagged fops flogging the furze," "The pursuit of the painted pillule by peripatetic paterfamiliases," "Be-knickered bipeds belabouring balls," and "A curious ceremony comically contested by cranks with crooked clubs."

That golf is a game principally for the stout and the aged is another point of view widely held and the replies in this connection include: "The pose of the adipose," "The bald white chasing the white bald," "The pursuit of a youthful figure by the middle-aged," "The flicker in the dying fire of athle-

A CHAUFFEUR is one who takes life easily.

THE old man laid down his newspaper.

"My child," he said to the fair girl in sables who had just come in, her cheeks pink and her eyes shining from the frosty air; "my child, I am unspeakably shocked and grieved. Your mother informs me that you are engaged to five young men at once."

But his daughter laughed and patted his shoulder in reassuring fashion.

"Dear old stupid dad; it's all right," she said. "They are football players, and at the end of the season I shall wed the survivor."

AT 6 A.M. on the 10th March at the Crystal Palace Zoo, Queenie, the camel, of a daughter. Mother and little one doing very well indeed.

This was the interesting announcement that caused great excitement among the inhabitants of the Crystal Palace "Zoo" a few days ago. The new arrival is the first camel ever born at the Crystal Palace. It is a slender, graceful creature, covered with mole-coloured hair, according to our London correspondent. In the middle of its back are two little tufts of black hair. These are the humps, undeveloped as yet, but in another month they will be quite presentable. Camels are very hardy, and there is little fear that the new arrival will not thrive. By the way the young Giraffe and the young Hipo born in the London Zoo, within the last year are in excellent fettle.

DURING some automobile races near Cairo, on the 10th March, one of the cars dashed into and killed a native policeman, and then swerved into the spectators, killing two and injuring five Europeans. Nine natives were also injured. The accident occurred at a very sharp corner, while the car was travelling at 60 miles an hour. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Khedive of Egypt were present at the meeting.

A BILL has been introduced into Parliament for the purpose of extending the liability of those who own dogs. At present to claim damages for bites from dogs it is necessary to prove that the dog is a ferocious animal, in the habit of biting people, and that the dog's owner was acquainted with its character. The new Bill is, in fact, intended to do away with the old privilege of allowing a dog one free bite.

INVENTIONS are in the air. Recently we reported a silent rifle from the States; now it is a bullet-proof coat of mail from Russia. This piece of armour is the invention of a Colonel Chomerzin, of St. Petersburg, and it is said to effectually protect the body from Mauser bullets fired two paces off, flattening the bullet into a mushroom-shaped piece of metal, but retaining it under the tissue of the covering. The coat of mail is scaly, but the composition of the metal, which includes platinum, silver, and iridium, is the inventor's secret. The composite metal is three and-a-half times harder than steel, and a layer half a millimetre thick keeps out a Mauser bullet fired three paces off, and hinders any contusion. The price of a coat of mail weighing five pounds, protecting the chest and back, will be stiff.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 13th March 1908.

MARCH having come in like a lion, according to tradition, pursues its rough and blustering course. It has been a week of stormy weather and the list of shipping casualties grows apace. But the west wind which put in an appearance yesterday, has raised the temperature a trifle and to-day we are cheered and encouraged by hours of sunshine and the welcome assurance by the doctors that the influenza epidemic has been checked. Also there really are, at last, signals of spring; a motor spin down Crawley way on Monday, indicated that everything was conspiring to make the coming days the busiest of the year in the country. What promised to be an early spring is now a normal spring, so the moment the ground is dry enough twenty-four hours a day will be almost too little for the farmer and gardner.

An extraordinary outburst took place in the London press this week and found an echo in Berlin: it was occasioned by a letter the German Emperor saw fit to write to Lord Tweedmouth. It was alleged that in this precious epistle the "maily fist" had been guilty of an attempt to influence in the interests of the Fatherland, the minister responsible for the naval estimates of Great Britain—and the fat was in the fire with a vengeance. In Parliament the matter naturally caused a flutter; Mr. Asquith made a statement, Lords Lansdowne and Rosebery made speeches, other watchful legislators asked questions and Lord Tweedmouth—amid complete silence—tendered an explanation. His statement was to the effect that the communication was private, personal, friendly in tone, and quite informal. After it had been shown to Sir E. Grey it was treated as private and non-official, and the First Lord of the Admiralty replied in a friendly and informal manner "Bust" as you say in India, the incident closed and the papers have apparently forgotten it in their desire to keep the public well up-to-date regarding the odious Licensing Bill—some of them to the liberal extent of pages! But, of course, Reuter has already told you all about it.

Once more the professional good man rushes in where the experienced but unregenerate fear to tread. Despite the lesson learned hundreds of years ago, that a community cannot be made moral by act of Parliament, those eminent but confiding divines the Bishops of London and Southwark, and with them a band of reverend enthusiasts and morality cranks have decided that London's morals need taking severely in hand. They have just opened "a great campaign," as they call it, and the objects of this crusade are the Promotion of Public Morality by rigid attentions to the following five subjects:—

1.—The strong discouragement of all degrading spectacles and exhibitions.

2.—The removal from all shop windows of undisguised incentives to vice.

3.—The suppression of those cheap illustrated papers which contain pictures of a directly suggestive character.

4.—The abolition of questionable houses.

5.—The elevation of public opinion until what is condemned in woman is no longer condoned in man.

"By such drastic reforms as these," says the bishop, "and by them only, can we hope to make London a decent city; and if the law fails to help us, the Bishop of Southwark and myself feel confident that we should carry with us the great weight of public opinion were we to bring a suitable Bill before the House of Lords. Certainly we should, in such a project, obtain the courageous support of the Labour members of the House of Commons." Naturally the L.C.C. are organising the movement and soon religious London will be uncommonly busy over the proposed reforms. The living pictures, and living statuary have vanished, when the picture postcards, the evil literature, and the special displays in the Chemist's shops disappear it will be really very nice won't it? Meanwhile the National Gallery, the Academy and the scores of other institutions where the "nood" prevails are not yet demolished and our piano legs are so far not en culotte.

Without employing any action to speak of, Captain John Kendall has succeeded in writing an amusing little play in Mrs. "Bill," which was produced at the Court Theatre last Monday. The scene of the comedy is laid in India, and the story revolves round a match-making aunt, and a young girl and a subaltern who do not know their own minds. All the characters are familiar enough, but the author has succeeded in putting plenty of amusing lines in their mouths, and at the fall of the curtain the reception was warm. Miss Marie Illington acted capitally as Mrs. "Bill," the match-making aunt, one of those clever women who make the arrangement of other people's affairs their recreation, such as Kipling has so often written about. Miss Beatrice Terry was charming as the niece, Mr. Vivian played pleasantly as the subaltern, Mr. E. W. Garden got a deal of fun out of Mrs. "Bill's" husband, and the other parts were satisfactorily filled by Mr. Rudge Harding and Mr. Arthur Holmes-Gore.

A new revue, with the enigmatic title "Oh, Indeed!" written by George Grossmith, junior, with lyrics by C. H. Bovill and music by Cuthbert Clarke, made its appearance last Saturday night at the Empire. It may be said at once that the new revue is an assured success. Put briefly, "Oh, Indeed," is a highly coloured burlesque of topical events, social and theatrical, and introduces in some way or other practically all the successful plays of the day. Some capital fun was made by Mr. Arthur Playfair, who appears in something like a dozen characters; Miss Sybil Arundale, "brought down the house" with her imitation of Mlle. Adeline Genée and her clever and artistic dancing; Mr. Farren Soutar and Mr. Arthur Playfair burlesque in a screamingly funny manner the methods of the Sicilian Players; and Miss Valli Valli, the Merry Widow, contributed to the full her share to the general gaiety of the house.

If a quantity of beautiful light music, fluent and graceful and haunting, were all that is necessary to make attractive a musical play, then one might predict a huge success for "A Waltz Dream," for the production of which Mr. Charles Frohman and Mr. George Edwardes have joined hands at the Hicks Theatre. This "operetta in three acts" has already won a triumph on the Continent, but after sitting out the performance at the Hicks it is impossible to conclude otherwise than that the book has suffered greatly in the course of adaptation. One received the impression that the original version contained certain "naughty" incidents which were deemed unsuitable for this country. The consequence is that the story is at times unpleasant without possessing the redeeming grace of humour, and I must not forget to add that there was a good deal of hissing and booing. Lieutenant Niki, of the Austrian Army, has been prevailed upon to marry the only child of Joachim XIII., the reigning prince of a small European State. The marriage is purely one of convenience. All that is aimed at is an heir to the principality. But after going so far with the business, the lieutenant expresses his intention of "striking," refuses to go near his bride on the night of his wedding and steals out of the castle to indulge in wild revels in a garden restaurant near by. He is traced thither by the Prince, the Princess, and other members of the court, and he is discovered making love to Franzi Steingruber, the leader of a Viennese orchestra. The lieutenant returns to the castle, where he is very much an outcast, for he still keeps his wife at arm's length, but the Princess induces Franzi to come disguised to the castle. While the lieutenant and the Princess are together Franzi plays the waltz which had first attracted him, with the extraordinary result that he immediately falls in love with his wife—an ending which is without rhyme or reason.

* * * * * *

The operetta is beautifully mounted, and the music, is charming. The waltz tune is even more captivating than that which won such favour in "The Merry Widow." In a week everyone will be playing it or whistling it or dancing it. But beyond the music and the mounting the piece has scarcely anything to give. The story is slight and fragmentary; Mr. Adrian Ross has not succeeded in writing anything very special in the way of lyrics, and the book is almost entirely without humour in any shape or form. Nor is the cast quite happily arranged. Miss Gertie Millar was a big success as Franzi. But, unfortunately, she does not appear in the first act at all, and is only on the stage for a few minutes in the third. Mr. Robert Evett, given many of the "plums" of the music, sang splendidly and acted agreeably as the Lieutenant. Miss Mary Grey showed herself an accomplished vocalist as the Princess, but her acting methods were amateurish. Mr. Arthur Williams played the part of the Prince on the lines of a Baron in pantomime; and although Mr. George Grossmith, junior, as the Prince's cousin, won a certain number of titters the audience very seldom really laughed by reason of the oddness of his movements, he was given nothing funny to say.

Mrs. Langtry makes her re-appearance on the stage very shortly; she has taken steps to secure a theatre and about Easter she will begin operations in a piece by Mr. Sidney Grundy. Mr. Grundy, has been disappointingly silent since the production at His Majesty's in May, 1905, of "Business is Business," the version made by him for Mr. Tree of Octave Mirbeau's play "Les Affaires sont les Affaires." The piece he has just completed is a light comedy in three acts, written with Mrs. Langtry's requirements specially in view. The novelty, contains no serious interest, no deeply thrilling situations, its chief, if not its only, aim being to amuse. The principal part, to be played by Mrs. Langtry, is that of an up-to-date wife, full of modern ideas, who, after various vicissitudes, settles down comfortably and happily with her husband.

Mr. Upton Sinclair, of Chicago horror fame has just produced another thrilling book, which from all one can gather will have a somewhat similar effect to that which ensued on reading "The Jungle." From Chicago the scene is shifted to New York; from the horrors of the stockyards and packing-houses to the mansions of Fifth-avenue, the freak palaces of the country within a motor-run of New York; the interest is diverted from the hideous lives of the lowest labourers to the no less hideous lives of some of those who arrogate to themselves the name of "Society" in the American metropolis. Mr. Sinclair introduces us to a young southern lawyer, Allan Montague, who comes to New York with his mother and his cousin Alice. His younger brother, Oliver, who has preceded them in migrating to the city, and has become one of "the little brothers of the rich," makes preparations for their arrival by taking a suite of princely apartments. At once they are plunged into the New York "Society" of the nouveaux riches, and the author portrays in a remorselessly straightforward fashion the lives of various sets, as they would impress an observant newcomer, who was honest and a clean liver. Oliver Montague is one of those who have learned the most imperative of the modern commandments, "Make money," and succeeds in leading a sumptuous life as a hanger-on in the entourage of multi-millionaires. Allan Montague is, however, made of sterner stuff, and though he goes about in the metropolis and on visits to country centres of luxury, there is always about him a certain detachment, and the reader knows that the moment must come when he will irrevocably break with it all. Mr. Sinclair calls his book "The Metropolis," your readers might do worse than ask their booksellers for copies, I fancy they will not fail to be impressed!

An action of a most unusual character was commenced in the Official Receiver's Court yesterday; in it Mr. Frank Harris, editor of Vanity Fair, claims £315 from Mr. Arthur du Cros, M.P., for literary work done in connection with the defendant's political campaign at Bow and Bromley in 1904 and 1905.

The plaintiff's bill was, in effect, as follows:—

To ten leading articles for the Bow and Bromley Unionist (a paper established to promote Mr. Du Cros's candidature)—fifty guineas.

To a biographical sketch of Mr. Du Cros—100 guineas.

To preparing two speeches of from 2,000 to 3,000 words each—100 guineas.

To preparing one after-dinner speech of 5,000 to 6,000 words—100 guineas.

Total—350 guineas.

But Mr. Arthur du Cros, M.P., for Hastings, was unwilling to pay the piper, hence this very exceptional litigation, which as it proceeds should teem with quiet fun.

What next! It looks as if we are in the near future to add to the trappings of grief black edged postage stamps whereby to advertise our sorrow for the dear departed! The Postmaster-General in opening early this week an exhibition of postage stamps at Caxton Hall, under the auspices of the Junior Philatelic Society, said that objection had been taken by some people to mourning envelopes. It had been suggested that he, as Postmaster-General, should produce a stamp with a black border. He was rather inclined to make a small issue of such a stamp, and he hoped that philatelists would buy them up at high prices.

It may interest such of your readers who go in for "ticket" collecting to learn that the total value of the stamps on show an expert put at £80,000. "The fascination of stamp collecting," he said, "lies in the rare 'finds' which are continually made, and the curious 'points' which sometimes make a stamp of the face value of a few pence worth hundreds of pounds. For instance, the 2d. blue Mauritius stamp which the Prince of Wales bought at a public auction recently for £1,450 was unique in one respect. The proper wording on it, 'Post Paid Mauritius' had, by a strange error, been altered to 'Post Office Mauritus.'"

As all Anglo-Indians should take an interest in the subject of accelerated sea travelling they may like to know that the famous Cunard liner Mauretania has just broken the Atlantic record by steaming 2,932 miles in 5 days 5 minutes, which works out at an average of 24·42 knots an hour. She had 1,572 passengers aboard. When will the Indian liners emulate this! And mention of travelling reminds me to tell you that a couple of Frenchmen have come forward with a totally new type of aeroplane having five pairs of wings and cleaving the air at no less than sixty miles an hour. It is something like a flying fish and will probably be tried within the next seven days.

It consists of a long spindle-shaped framework, measuring 46ft. from head to tail, near the centre of which are placed the motor and driver. Three pairs of wings—arranged side by side, and not above one another, as in the former machine—and measuring 20½ft. from tip to tip, and 3ft. in depth, are fixed above this frame in front of the driver. These planes are arranged in a descending position, so that the air, from which they gain their support, may have free access to all.

These are the main sustaining planes, but right in the rear are arranged two smaller pairs of wings—15ft. by 3ft.—the rear pair of all being pivoted, so that they can be deflected upwards or downwards to regulate the course of the machine. A rudder fixed to the tail of the main frame steers the aeroplane to left and right. Both these steering devices are controlled by a single steering-wheel acting through levers and wires.

The screw in the new machine is placed in front, has a diameter of 8ft., and is driven at 1,100 revolutions a minute by a 50-h.p., eight-cylinder, air-cooled motor, of a new type, weighing 315lb. The aeroplane runs along the ground before rising into the air on three pneumatic-tyred wheels, the front pair of which are steered by the steering-wheel, which simultaneously works the rudder. Those who contemplate taking leave in 1910 may as well be getting used to the idea of having to decide by that time whether they will fly or steam home.

Of a truth the enterprise of the latter day showman soars to giddy heights, as witness the latest effort of the cinematographist. Last Saturday morning "Ye Olde Red Lion," hotel, which many Indian Field, readers no doubt know stands at Hampton-on-Thames, was seen to be in flames, and the local fire brigade and that from the Metropolitan Waterworks, with three steamers and several fire escapes were soon on the spot. A number of people, who were in the house when the fire began, were able to make their escape by the front doors, but presently several others, including two women, whose escape appeared to be cut off, were seen at the upper windows, calling loudly for help. By means of the fire escapes they were brought safely through the smoke and flames to the ground. A man observed crawling along the roof, and another at a window were rescued in the same way. The last to leave was a man who escaped by jumping from the top of the porch over the main entrance. The firemen also managed to rescue two horses from the stables. They continued to pour water on the flames for half an hour afterwards.

There may have been some amongst the crowd who thought the whole affair real, but the great majority knew that it had been carefully prepared for the purpose of taking a cinematograph picture. An operator was present with his instrument, and the picture was taken for exhibition in aid of the funds of the Fire Brigades Union.

The whole affair was most realistically carried out. Comparatively little damage was done to the old house, though parts of it were much charred by the flames, whilst the interior was swamped with water. Cotton-wool, saturated with paraffin, had been employed for the purpose. This was ingeniously affixed to the window frames, whilst paraffin was sprinkled about other places.

Three dauntless heroes in the cause of suffering humanity are to-day working in the London Hospital. A paragraph in my morning paper tells me they are Messrs. Harnack, Wilson and Blackhall, all victims to their constant use of the X rays apparatus; each is suffering from "X ray dermatitis," an incurable disease. The hands of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Blackhall are coated from the nails to the knuckles with dried cancerous ulcers, which are steadily eating away the hands and spreading up the arms. Mr. Wilson has recently lost one finger, and another is threatened. Mr. Blackhall, whose arm is in a sling as the result of an operation only a few days ago, was in a worse state, if anything, than his colleague. The pain at times is excruciating. Such is the spirit which animates these workers for humanity. Facing and fighting death, they are patiently plodding alike in the interests of science and the public good.

This week's obituary includes the name of Sir L. Griffin, K.C.S.I., another of the old brigade of Indian celebrities of whose career it is superfluous for me to write. He died on Monday night after a short illness, the cause being pneumonia following influenza.

With universal regret was received the announcement of the death last night of the Rev. Benjamin Waugh, the founder of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The very name of such an institution is a disgrace of a community which sends out to convert the heathen shiploads of missionaries who would be infinitely better employed at home.

A sigh of regret will be heaved by the old-time playgoer when he hears of the death of Mr. J. B. Howe, the old Britannia player, better known to the world as the "cosmopolitan actor." The venerable gentleman, who had lived an arduous life of stress and struggle, has passed away at his residence in Chiswick, in the seventy-ninth year of his age.

A profound shock was caused in the hunting field with Mr. Fernie's Hounds yesterday, when it became known that Mr. Hugh Owen had sustained a very serious fall, and that his condition was regarded as grave. He was removed home to Nethergreen Lodge, Great Bowden, where he expired shortly before nine o'clock at night.

In his younger days Mr. Hugh Owen won renown as a gentleman rider. He always rode at the old Stockbridge meeting, and even of late years had been seen in the saddle at Croxton Park.

As starter to the Jockey Club, he was quiet and effective. Few men were better judges of a horse, and to the last he followed racing closely.

THE VAGRANT.

Shikar.

A CHIKARA SHOOT.

HAVING often heard that chikara were to be had along the raving banks of the Jumna river, I thought I would take a day or two off from work and try my luck with the little "phuskailas" as they are locally called—a name given them by the natives owing to the sneezing noise they make when alarmed. I accordingly camped within a couple miles of the scene of my intended shoot, and, judging from the accounts of the natives of the shikar to be had in this particular locality, I made up my mind for a good day's sport. The evening my camp came in, I thought I'd take a preliminary look over the ground, but in my eagerness to see something, I went on and on, and when night set in, I found myself quite five miles away from camp, in the very "thick" of a country intersected everywhere with deep ravines. With great difficulty we managed to find our way back to camp as there was no one present who had any previous knowledge of the locality. My servants actually had the sense to hang a lantern to a tree, and this helped us home, where we arrived fairly done up after a fruitless search. I hoped, however, to meet with better luck on the morrow, and to put the accounts of the natives to the test, having arranged to leave camp at a very early hour. Chikara generally leave the fields an hour or so after sunrise—at least so I have found in my previous experience of them—unless the fields are in isolated places, where they may stay in or near them throughout the day. To continue, I left camp with half a dozen men, about 6 A.M., a good hour later than I wished to, thanks to my worthy "retainer," a mild Hindu who overslept himself. On getting to the edge of the raviny tract we were addressed by an old woman adorned with numerous rags of various colours and ages, who had just got up from a nap on top of a machan rigged up in the centre of a field, where she had evidently taken up her position to shout away anything that might be inclined to have a feed at her expense. She informed us that a herd of some ten or fifteen nilghai had just left her field and couldn't be far off, and begged of me to shoot the lot. As I had not come out to shoot nilghai I refused her request at first, but she persisted, and showed me part of the field where the nilghai had been at work. They had eaten all they could and had then evidently had a game of "last touch" in the field, as there was scarcely a square foot of it without hoof marks. Though only armed with a Sherwood ·300 and a shot gun—minus ball ammunition—I went off in the direction she indicated as having been taken by the nilghai. I soon came upon them and getting within fifty yards or so, let drive at the bull hitting him in the left shoulder. He acknowledged the shot with a grunt and a shrug of his shoulders and went off for all he was worth, which struck me as being a good let. It wasn't till about two o'clock that afternoon that I saw him again, when he "sent in his papers" to a neck shot. I felt sorry afterwards for killing the beast, as nilghai are no good for the table and their skins are too thick to cure and keep. After following his blood trail for some time, my friends the "phuskailas" came into my thoughts, and I separated the six men I had with me and sent them off to scour the ravines on either side of me. We had gone winding in and out of and up and down the ravines for a mile or so, when I heard a whistle away to my left. I set off at a run, which didn't last long, and came up to the whistler who showed me a buck about three hundred yards away. It was easy work stalking him in such country, and I managed to get quite close to him. A cloud of dust from a mound behind him made me think I had missed, but on going up to the spot where he had been when I fired, I found blood, and a little further on the buck, dead. While standing over this one I spotted another buck who had been disturbed by the jabbering of my servants. I fired at him but went over, and had a nice little up and down run to get within range again. This time I hit him fair in the shoulder and down he went. Having deprived the two buck of their internals, we had them slung on a bamboo and sent off to camp, while I sat down in at horny piece of ground, which was far from comfortable, to enjoy a pipe.

It was some time before we saw a sign of a chikara again. I was going along a bushy watercourse, and had just disturbed a wild boar, who gave me rather a start, when I heard the familiar sneeze and saw some does scamper off. There was no buck among them, so I paid no more attention to them, but turning off to my right into a varn with a small patch of wheat growing in it, I turned up another buck, who dropped to the first shot. Having treated him the same as his relatives who had "gone before," we started for camp, thinking we had had quite enough sport for the day. On my way back I saw some does and a buck who gave me a very easy shot, the temptation proving too much. My bag for the day consisted of four chikara and a blue bull and cost me, in all, seven shots. I left the locality the following morning, but hope to return and have another go next season, if all goes well.

The Sherwood ·300 is an excellent weapon in my opinion, for chikara. It answers well enough for black buck too, but seldom fetches down a buck if he is hit through the ribs or further back. I have lost several buck in this way, but I suppose I must really blame my shooting, and not the gun. Chikara, however, seem to drop to it from a shot placed anywhere.

CAPT. F. RICHARDSON, 59th Regiment. | C. S. ANDERSON, ESQ.
W. D. SANDAY, ESQ.

First Day, Tuesday, 17th March 1908.

THE opening day of the above meeting was held on Tuesday, the 17th instant, in perfect weather. The attendance in both enclosures was poor though no pains had been spared to provide an enjoyable afternoon's sport. The Band of the 2nd East Lancashire Regiment played a nice selection of music during the intervals and all the arrangements had been carefully thought out by the Stewards. Mr. C. S. Anderson did the starting and was very successful in getting all his fields away to good starts. Results:—

PONY HUNTERS' HURDLES.—Cup value Rs. 49, presented by Karachi hunt fund to the winner. For ponies hunted regularly with the Karachi or Quetta hounds, to be owned and ridden by members of the Karachi or Quetta hunts. About 1½ mile.

Mr. H. T. Robeon's Pasha, 11st. 7lb. ...	Mr. Sanday	2
Mr. Fletcher's Grasshopper, 11st. ...	Mr. Gough	3

Also ran: Mischief, 11-7 and Clodha, 11-0.

At the second attempt the flag fell to an even start, Grasshopper led over the first hurdle closely followed by Pasha and Clodha. Before the second hurdle was reached Pasha had begun to make the running and was followed by Clodha, Grasshopper and Dodds, in the order named until half the distance had been covered, when Dodds moved up into second place. At the turn into the straight Dodds assumed the lead and never being pressed passed the post an easy winner half length in front of Pasha with Grasshopper five lengths behind. Time—3mins. 8secs.

Totalisator paid Rs. 10.

KARACHI STAKES.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 10 to the second. For Waler ponies and others 14-1 and under. 4 furlongs.

Mr. H. Ryan's Lady Flo, 11st. 4lb. ...	Owner	3

Also ran: Jenny Lind, 11-2.

The starter soon despatched the field to a good start from which Jenny Lind on the inside was the first to show out. After covering one furlong Ariadne had assumed the lead, closely followed by Achievement; at the distance the latter was a neck in front and from here in a capital finish was witnessed Ariadne defeating the favourite and securing the verdict by a neck, Lady Flo being third three lengths behind. Time—54⅕secs.

Totalisator paid Rs. 3.

LANDHI STAKES.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 10 to the second. For Arabs 14-1 and under that have not won Rs. 200 or over. 6 furlongs.

Capt. W. Pritchard's Snowflake, 11st. 8lb.	Mr. Greenhill	2
Mr. Bell's Milo, 11st. 2lb.	Mr. Cane	3

Also ran: Five others.

On the barrier being raised Gendarme was first away and led for half a furlong when he was steadied and passed by Ludhiana, Milo and Snowflake in the order named and thus they ran to the 3 furlongs when Snowflake assumed the lead. After entering the straight Gendarme began to close up and at the distance had caught up the leader—from there in it was anybody's race, but Gendarme staying out passed the post a neck in front of Snowflake with Milo two and a half lengths behind. Time—1min. 52⅕secs.

Totalisator paid Rs. 4.

LYARI STAKES.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 10 to the second. For maiden ponies 14-1 and under. 5 furlongs.

Capt. A. Bishop's Dazzle, 11st. 8lb. ...	Owner	1

Capt. Noake's My Fancy, 11st. 2lb. ...	Owner	3

Also ran: Challenger, 11-5 and Great Dane, 10-5.

Dazzle, My Fancy and Challenger were first out of the machine and ran a neck for a furlong, when Dazzle went to the front, followed by My Fancy while Challenger was passed by Southern Pearl. In this order they ran to the turn into the straight, where Southern Pearl passed My Fancy and tried to get on level terms with the leader, but the latter held matters safe and entered home an easy winner by one and a half lengths; Southern Pearl being five lengths ahead of My Fancy. Time—1min. 15secs.

Second Day, Saturday, 21st March 1908.

THE attendance was somewhat better than on the first day, though the second enclosure was again almost empty. The Members of the Karachi Hunt were "At Home" and dispensed hospitality to all their friends, thereby adding considerably to the success of the Meeting. The fields that faced the starter were mostly small, but thanks to the excellent adjustment of the weights by the Handicapper, the finishes were good, and it was no easy matter to spot the winners. The Band of the 2nd East Lancashire Regiment again enlivened the intervals between the races. The starting on the whole was good, though what was expected to be the best race of the afternoon, was marred by the barrier being raised when only one of the field was facing in the right direction.

KARACHI HANDICAP.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 10 to the second. A handicap for all ponies 14-1 and under that started on the first day. 5 furlongs.

Capt. Bishop's Jenny Lind, 11st. 9lb. ...	Owner	1
Mr. H. Ryan's Prince Arthur, 6st. 7lb. ...	Juman Shah	2
Capt. Noake's My Fancy, 10st. 9lb. ...	Mr. Bosse	3

At the third attempt the flag fell to an even start. Jenny Lind was the first to show out and held a lead of a length at the 3 furlongs from My Fancy with Prince Arthur two lengths behind. At the quarter mile My Fancy closed up on the leader and looked as if she were coming through but tired in the rails and dropped back while Prince Arthur, well ridden and coming with a rush at the finish, rapidly caught up on the leader and dead-heated on the post. Time—1min. 13secs

THE POST HUNTERS' HANDICAP.—Cup value under Rs. 49, presented by the Hunt Fund. A handicap for ponies hunted regularly with the Karachi or Quetta hounds, to be owned and ridden by members of the Karachi or Quetta Hunts. 6 furlongs.

Mr. H. T. Ryan's Lady Flo, 11st. 11lb. ...	Owner	1
Mr. W. Graham's Dodds, 11st. 7lb. ...	Owner	1
Miss C. Osborne's Clodha, 9st. 10lb. ..	Mr. Bosse	3

Also ran: Mr. H. Robson's Pasha, 10-7.

The quartette were soon let go to a fair start from which Lady Flo immediately went to the front, and made the running, followed by Pasha with Dodds lying last. At the turn into the straight, Dodds endeavoured to close up on the leader, but Lady Flo, staying out and going well within herself, passed the post an easy winner by one and-a-half lengths; Clodha being beaten three lengths by Dodds for second place. Time—1min. 28⅕secs.

Totalisator paid Rs. 6.

ALLADAD HANDICAP.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 10 to the second. A handicap for C.-B.'s and Arabs 14-1 and under that started on the first day. ¾ mile.

Mr. W. Sanday's Viking, 10st. ...	Owner	1
Major H. Were's Ludhiana, 10st. 7lb. ...	Mr. Allardice	2
Mr. G. O'Hara's Challenger, 11st. 6lb. ...	Owner	3

Also ran: Prince Arthur, 10-7; Flying Fox, 9-12; and Tom, 9-7

On the release of the gate, Challenger was quickest away and soon held a two lengths lead from Ludhiana and Viking. At the distance the weight began to tell, and the field began to rapidly gain on the leader. An excellent race home resulted in Viking securing the verdict by a head from Ludhiana, with Challenger one and a quarter lengths behind. Time—56⅕secs.

Totalisator paid Rs. 6.

MALIR HANDICAP.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 10 to the second. A handicap for all ponies 14-1 and under that started on the first day. ¾ mile.

Mr. W. Graham's Achievement, 11st. 6lb....	Owner	1
Capt. Molloy's Ariadne, 11st. 7lb. ...	Mr. O'Hara	2
Capt. A. Bislop's Dazzle, 11st.	Owner	3

Also ran: Lady Flo, 10-6; and Cadet, 10-0.

From a very straggling start Achievement obtained a three-length advantage, followed by Ariadne, Dazzle and Cadet in the order named. At the distance, Ariadne had reduced the lead to one length, but from here in, she was unable to gain any further, and Achievement secured the verdict by a length, Dazzle being one and a quarter length behind Ariadne for second place. Time—58⅕secs.

LYARI HANDICAP.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 10 to the second. A handicap for Arabs 14-1 and under that started on the first day. 7 furlongs.

Capt. Davis's Gendarme, 10st. 12lb. ...	Mr. O'Hara	1
Mr. H. Robinson's Pasha, 10st. 2lb. ...	Mr. Bosse	2
Mr. W. D. Sanday's Viking, 9st. 12lb. ...	Owner	3

Also ran: Milo, 10-6.

At the third attempt the flag fell to a good start from which Gendarme immediately shot out, but before a furlong had been covered, Viking and Pasha had taken up the running and lay abreast to the half mile with Gendarme three lengths behind. At the 3 furlongs, Gendarme passed Pasha, and at the distance had got on level terms with Viking, Pasha being in close attendance. From the distance in an excellent race took place, Gendarme just getting home by half a length from Pasha with Viking half a length behind. Time—1min. 47secs.

Totalisator paid Rs. 4.

TEMPLE HILLS STAKES.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 20 to the second, and Rs. 10 to the third. A handicap for all horses and ponies in the station. R. C.

Mr. Furlonger's Fox, 11st. 7lb. ...	Capt. Hill	1
Mr. G. O. Bosse's Dawn, 10st. ...	Owner	2
Mr. W. H. Chapman's Arabella, 12st. ...	Owner	3

Also ran: Shooting Star, 10-0; Ivoride, 10-7; Phillip, 11-[illegible] Kismet, 10-0; Peggy, 12-10; Meteor, 11-7; Clodha, 11-[illegible] Dandy, 11-7; The Mouse, 11-7.

Notwithstanding the large number of starters the field was soon let go. Fox made all the running in front while Dawn was rapidly drawing up in the rear. When the leader had reached the five furlongs the scratch horse was still some 50 yards short of the 6 furlongs, with nearly all the field between in the same order as at the start. But from here changes took place rapidly and it was apparent that Dawn would be well up though it could hardly be hoped that he could catch up the long lead which Fox still held. At the quarter-mile it was obvious that the handicapper had underrated Fox's worth, and though Dawn struggled on gamely to the end the former passed the post an easy winner by 50 yards, Arabella being third 10 yards behind Dawn.

Totalisator paid Rs 9.

CONSOLATION RACE.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 10 to the second. A handicap for ponies 14-1 and under that have started in the meeting and not won. 4 furlongs.

Capt. Noake's My Fancy, 11st. 4lb. ...	Owner	2
Col. R. Baker's Pierrot, 6st. 6lb. ...	Mr. Bosse	3

Also ran: Plasmon, 9-1.

On the barrier being raised My Fancy was quickest away, and after a furlong had been covered, held a lead of a length from Southern Pearl who was half a length in front of Pierrot. From here to the distance no change took place but Southern Pearl then began to draw up and maintaining the challenge an excellent finish resulted in Southern Pearl securing the verdict on the post by a head from My Fancy, with Pierrot three lengths behind. Time—56⅕secs.

Totalisator paid Rs. 3.

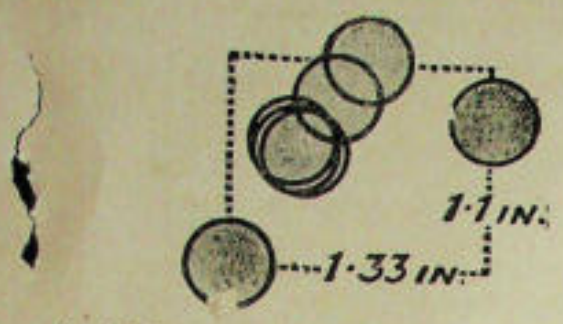
NEW ·470 BORE.
VELOCITY 2,250 ft. sec.



The BEST Diagram made before the Editor of the Field with a Rifle of this bore.

"FIELD." March 23, 1907. ". . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridge complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

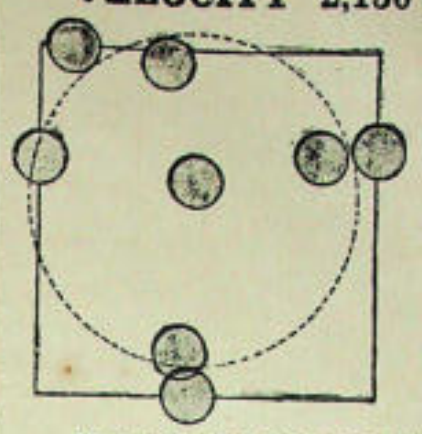
SPECIAL NO. 2. ·360 BORE.
VELOCITY 2,150 ft. sec.



Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from a Lang double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cut a circle 2·1 in diameter.

Made By the Editor of the "Field."

"FIELD" "A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon."

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

Last Saturday Fortune was again on the side of a sunny Sandown, the pleasantest day of the three being reserved for the second half of the soldiers' meeting, in which the card was strengthened and varied by two open events, one of them that important item the Imperial Cup. A south-west breeze gave the temperature an April-like touch, and materially improved the going, the sandy soil rapidly drying under the combined influences of sun and wind. The popularity of the venue on this particular occasion was again evinced by an attendance which perhaps exceeded the monster muster of Friday. In the crowded paddock and on the pretty members' lawn, celebrities in all ranks of life were noticeable, the aristocratic patrons of the Turf were in force, and, as usual at this meeting, the fair sex were as staunch in their support as at Ascot or Goodwood, spring tints, which are beginning to relieve the more sombre shades of winter, giving a charming effect to the costumes. BIRMINGHAM.

The tempestuous wind that swept the Castle Bromwich Course throughout the time racing was in progress on the 9th instant, was a blessing in disguise in more respects than one. It counteracted the heavy overnight rainfall, which had left the tract in a sodden condition, and kept the atmosphere free from haze and smoke. With the sun in evidence for the greater portion of the afternoon the light for discerning of colours was remarkably clear. This afford a rare opportunity of closely watching Roman Law in the Tamworth Steeplechase, and many were anxious to see what improvement Mr. Buckley's Grand National candidate had made since his execrable display at Manchester. Next day the only spark of animation that stirred the small army of sportsmen who visited the Castle Bromwich race venue in the vilest of weather was the outcome of a regrettable mistake made by Mr. P. Whitaker when riding The Lawyer III. in the Liverpool Trial Steeplechase. The distance of the race was three miles and three furlongs, and the horses had to jump the water twice and pass the winning post three times. Spectators marvelled when seeing the owner of the favourite finishing and riding for all he was worth on reaching the judge the second time. Their astonishment, however, was increased when Mr. Whitaker pulled his horse up altogether, believing he had won the race. His two opponents continued the journey, and it was not before they were more than a fence in front that Mr. Whitaker made up his mind to follow them. Details:—

NATIONAL HUNT AT WARWICK.

On the way down to Warwick yesterday, we ran into a thick fog, and though hopes were entertained that this would not be in evidence in Shakespeare's country it lay there thicker than ever, and merely a fitful glance could now and again be got across the Swan Meadows, whilst little could be seen from the stand of either end of the straight, so that the good folk who so numerously patronised the meeting might just as well have stayed at home. A large and representative muster filled the stands to overflowing, whilst holiday-makers were on the course in their thousands. The going was decidedly holding, and many horses finished dead tired, as did the amateurs due to ride in the big race, who very properly walked over their lines of country and came back loaded with mud. details:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

ENGLAND VS. WALES.—On the Lansdown Cricket Ground at Bath on Saturday, England defeated Wales for the eleventh year in succession, the final score being 4 goals to 2. It was the closest game of the series. Never before had Wales lost by so small a margin as two goals, although at Bath four years ago, England only won by 4 to 1.

Despite dull and threatening weather, about 2,000 spectators were present.

For the greater part the match was a struggle between the English forwards and the Welsh defence, and the latter came out of the ordeal with no small credit. B. Turnbull in goal saved many shots, and E. W. G. Richards and G. W. Fosbery at back got through a tremendous amount of work in very sound style. They always fell back in time to assist Turnbull, and these three men were difficult to beat. C. W. Shepherd gave a polished display at right-half, and R. F. Lyne in the centre was far from weak. The forwards showed nothing like the same skill in combination as their rivals. They attacked chiefly by rushes. Still, the goal with which P. B. Turnbull equalised was the outcome of a clever piece of passing, and towards the end the whole line played with renewed energy, and gained a second goal.

H. I. Wood, the English goalkeeper, was seldom troubled. The backs and halves, especially Freeman, Page, and Noble, were splendid, and the three inside forwards, Logan, Goodwin, and H. R. Jordan, combined cleverly. Perhaps, however, they would have been wise if they had passed more to their wings. Rees and Slade had little to do.

The first real chance fell to Wales. Their right wing beat Marshall, but Pallott missed a glorious opportunity. B. Turnbull was saving finely, but ten minutes after the start Jordan took a rebound from the goalkeeper and scored. A quarter of an hour later P. B. Turnbull equalised, after he and Williams had made a clever run, but in the last ten minutes of the first half the English forwards, admirably supported by Page and Noble, attacked strongly. Logan and Jordan added goals, and England led at the interval by 3 to 1.

Fifteen minutes elapsed in the second half before Goodwin shot England's fourth goal. Then Wales put on pressure; Turnbull hit the post; Phillips scored from a penalty corner, and Wales finished fighting hard, though beaten.

ENGLAND.—H. I. Wood (West Bromwich); H. S. Freeman (Staines) and C. W. Marshall (Oxton); B. Hatch (Bath), E. W. Page (Wolverhampton), and A. H. Noble (Formby); P. M. Rees (Barnes), G. Logan (Hampstead), H. J. Goodwin (Cambridge University), H. R. Jordan (Staines), and H. S. Slade (Cheltenham).

WALES.—B. Turnbull (Cardiff); E. W. G. Richards (Abergavenny) and G. W. Fosbery (Rangor); C. W. Shepherd (Whitchurch), R. F. Lyne (Newport), and W. T. Farr (Swansea); T. W. Pearson (Newport), F. Gordon Phillips (Newport), P. B. Turnbull (Cardiff), J. Ralph Williams (Newport), and W. J. Pallott (Whitchurch).

IRELAND VS. SCOTLAND.—About 5,000 persons saw Ireland defeat Scotland in the sixth annual match between the countries at Belfast on Saturday, by 6 goals to nil. The Irish forwards exhibited a great display of passing. R. L. Kennedy was brilliant at outside right, and R. McWilliam and C. C. Gotto, each of whom shot 3 goals, gave the Scottish defence endless trouble. That defence, it must be said, was good, despite the somewhat heavy score. A. B. Burt—at centre-half—was one of the best players on the field, and W. Neilson and R. Dunn, busily engaged all through, rendered yeoman service at back. J. Burt in goal also cleared on several occasions in brilliant fashion, especially in the second half, during which Ireland scored only 1 goal. L. A. Mackenzie was the pick of the Scottish forwards, although J. Harper-Orr was prominent on several occasions.

Ireland, who made three changes in their originally chosen side, had to defend at the start, but Brown checked the Scottish forwards. McComas did clever work, and at the end of seven minutes McWilliam began the scoring. Peterson repulsed a Scottish attack, and McWilliam scored again. Maintaining the attack, Ireland gained three more goals through Gotto, and led at the interval by 5 to nil.

Soon after the restart Holmes, the Irish goalkeeper, had to save from Mackenzie, and then from a scrum in the circle McWilliam shot what proved to be the last goal of the match. Scotland were outplayed towards the close, but their defence was most stubborn.

IRELAND.—E. P. C. Holmes (Cliftonville), W. Peterson (Palmerston), and W. Brown (Dublin University); H. L. Murphy (Three Rock Rovers), D. L. Robinson (Malone), and W. Graham (Monkstown); R. L. Kennedy (Bambridge), S. McComas (Monkstown), C. C. Gotto (Malone), C. T. Power

(Three Rock Rovers), and R. McWilliam (Three Rock Rovers).

SCOTLAND.—J. Burt (Rutherglen); W. Neilson (Rutherglen) and R. H. Dunn (Carlton); Captain Foulkes (Carlton), A. B. Burt (Rutherglen), and H. Fraser (Carlton); R. H. Robertson, junior (Rutherglen), J. Harper-Orr (Edinburgh), L. A. Mckenzie (Edinburgh University), A. Walker (Edinburgh University), nd G. L. Orchardson (Cths).

AN ARMY INTERNATIONAL.—ENGLAND vs. IRELAND.—Fully 10,000 people were present on the Army Athletic Ground, Aldershot, on the 11th instant, to witness this match which was really arranged to afford assistance in picking the team to oppose the Navy at Portsmouth on Saturday. From the start the Army in England had much the better of the play, but their opponents nevertheless gained the victory. This was due to the weak show made by the Reds time after time in front of goal; to the splendid forward play of Webb (Essex Regiment), who scored both goals, doing practically all the work in connection therewith himself; and the grand goal-keeping of Gunner Coope (R.F.A.). At the start Exford made a good run for England, but kicked over the bar, and then McKeer put in some very dangerous shots. R. Davies received a bad kick in the ankle that delayed play for some time. Exford again almost scored, but Coope was equal to the occasion. Twenty minutes from the start the Irish brigade got possession, and Webb, almost unaided, made a grand run, went right through the English defence, and scored. Fletcher touched the ball, but it was too swift, and passed into the net over his head. Although the Reds frequently bombarded their opponents' goal the interval score was:—Army in Ireland, 1; Army in England, nil.

On resuming, the Army in England were still aggressive, but Webb once again proved too clever for his opponents. He was, in fact, the only really dangerous player on his side. Dodging very cleverly, he screwed a ball from the left wing and completely beat Fletcher. Webb did all the work towards scoring the goal himself. The Reds still fought hard, and showed much the better form, but the opposing goalkeeper was never caught napping, and although there were several narrow escapes, the result was:—Army in Ireland, 2; Army in England, nil.

ALL-ENGLAND CHAMPIONSHIPS.

BEFORE about 1,500 spectators on Saturday, the finals of the All-England Badminton Championships were decided at Bunhill Row, E.C. H. N. Marrett, the English champion of 1904-05, defeated A. M. Cave, the Irish champion, 1908, in the final of the English singles championship, after three good games, in which each man showed remarkable skill in play, but at the same time, the redoubtable smashing which so much helped the Irishman in his previous rounds was absent. Miss Lucas again won the Ladies' Singles, and with Miss Murray, won the Ladies' Doubles. H. N. Marrett and G. A. Thomas won the Gentlemen's Doubles, while Miss Lucas and N. Wood beat Miss Murray and G. A. Thomas for the Mixed Doubles. Details:—

CROSS-COUNTRY RUNNING.

THE "NATIONAL" CHAMPIONSHIP.—The thirty-second National Cross-Country Championship was brought to a most successful issue at Newbury racecourse on Saturday. It is the first occasion on which a race of this character has been decided at the Berkshire venue, and there was much curiosity as to the nature of the course which would be provided for the contest, and the manner in which it would be supported by the public. So far as the first item was concerned, it may be said that there has never been a course better suited for the race from an all-round point of view.

Little description is necessary. W. P. Clarke went out at once, and at the stands, quarter-mile, was ahead, with F. A. Knott. Coming round again, 2 miles 300 yards or thereabouts, Clarke was ahead, with G. Pearce, W. Coales, and A. E. Wood, the four being close together in 11mins. 3secs. Then came Perkin, Owen, Deakin, and Robertson. Going out of the course Pearce, led, and at the first fence Clarke came down. Coales and Pearce now took up the running, and at the half-distance were together in 35mins. 41secs. Then came A. J. Robertson, A. E. Wood, J. Murphy, W. Birtles, F. C. Neaves, J. E. Deakin, T. Johnston, W. Scott, W. H. Watson, G. W. Colcroft, C. C. Rhodes, S. Welding, W. H. Day, F. Long, and E. Owen in the order mentioned. The leaders kept ahead till a mile or so from home, when Coales, Wood, and Robertson began to get away. Entering the racecourse, Robertson strode out finely, and came home an easy winner, despite a good spurt by Coales, while Wood was close up.

Appended are the best individual results:—

GOLF.

OXFORD vs. MID-SURREY.—Oxford University were narrowly beaten by Mid-Surrey at Old Deer Park, Richmond, on Saturday, by 5 matches to 4. The most interesting match was that between Mr. S. H. Fry and Mr. J. A. Robertson-Durham, the University captain, wherein the latter won by 1 up. The result was an open question throughout, even to the last stroke, when the Oxonian holed a two yards put for the hole and match. Mr. Fry putted well, but was laid several stymies. Lord Maidstone and the Hon. C. N. Bruce also created surprises by defeating J. S. Worthington and S. J. Chesterton respectively. The match between J. A. Healing and the Hon. C. N. Bruce was fought out until the last hole, as also was the match between F. A. Newnes, M.P., and N. P. Bostock. Details:—

BOXING.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—At both Universities the annual inter-'Varsity contests invariably arouse an immense amount of interest, and the twelfth annual competition at Oxford last Monday, produced a record attendance in the large and handsome town hall, every seat being occupied. Of the eleven previous meetings Oxford had won six and Cambridge three, whilst two were drawn. Both Universities were well represented, although a broken wrist prevented the Oxford president, A. S. Hoernle, from taking part in the trials, and W. R. Reynell represented the Dark Blues in the heavy-weights. Results:—

Bantam-Weights.—J. C. Surtees (Clare, Cam.) beat E. G. S. Gordon (Exeter Coll., Oxon.). Won easily.

Feather-Weights.—C. H. Fisher (Clare, Cam.) beat E. D. M. Barbs (Exeter, Oxon.). Barbs was plucky but unfortunate.

Light-Weights.—J. M. H. Thornewill (New, Oxon.) beat E. C. Storrs (Pembroke, Cam.). The winner was not as clever as his opponent, but proved the better fighter at close quarters.

Middle-Weights.—D. Portway (Downing, Cam.) beat A. Mains (Brasenose, Oxon.). The winner displayed excellent judgment throughout.

Heavy-Weights.—W. R. Reynell (Balliol, Oxon.) beat G. A. Lilly (Caius, Cam.).

Won well.

FENCING.

Foils.—First Strings.

P. G. Doyne (Winchester and Trinity, Oxford) beat V. C. M. Reeves (Magdalene, Cambridge).—Amateur Fencing Association Rules governed this; two and a half minutes play at each end. Doyne, displaying the better style, gained the Dark Blues their first victory.

Second Strings.—M. F. Namek (Queen's, Oxford) beat M. C. Kashorn (Trinity, Cambridge).

Sabres.

Count Esterhazy (Queen's, Oxford) beat J. Greenwood (Peterhouse, Cambridge).

Oxford thus won five events—the light and heavy-weight boxing and all the fencing bouts—while Cambridge were successful in the bantam, feather, and middle-weight boxing competitions.

Hunting.

KARACHI HUNT.

15th March.—The hounds met at 7 o'clock at the Hunt Camp, Landhi, and proceeded straight across the river bed to draw the woods and gardens on the far side. Starting from the Three Sisters, the Master drew northwards along Parker's Nullah. There appeared to be very little scent, and the hounds were some time before finding. We finally got away after a fox, who gave us a nice little run before he went to ground. Moving across towards Rahu's khete, they found a jack in Sure Find Wood, which they chopped. Another jack broke out of covert, but as it was getting hot, the hounds were whipped off homewards.

22nd March, witnessed the last meet of the season, when a good field including the Commissioner-in-Sind, Captain Hewett (R.I.M.) and others turned out. Mrs. Crouch and Miss Osborne were the only ladies out. Finding near Rai Singh's well, the hounds ran fast towards the Ruined Cottage, and on to Graham's well. Here the Master tried to check the pack, as they were getting distressed for want of water. But the jack was not far in front, and apparently in the same plight, as the hounds rolled him over about half a mile further on. After watering, we had a scamper after a fox near the Long Bund, but he went to ground before the hounds could get on terms with him. We did not find again. Thus ended the season 1907-09, during which the hounds have been out 31 times, and have killed 34 jack, and have run 4 to ground. This is quite a record in the annals of the Hunt. The hounds have shown themselves possessed of great pace, endurance and hunting power.

Football.

A CRITIQUE OF FRENCH FOOTBALL.

LONDON, 6th March.

IT was really most unfortunate for the gallant Frenchmen that the ground was so heavy at Cardiff on Monday. Of course they have played on such pitches time and oft before but, as is well known, Welshmen are facile princeps when the ground is heavy and holding or the ball "difficult," and the Frenchmen did not need this additional handicap placed in the scale against them.

They fought valiantly, however, right out to the finish, but it seems to me that they have been badly taught. They possess so many of the essentials of success in the Rugby game that had their education been on the right lines the results must by now have been better.

Since, contrary perhaps to general knowledge on the point, Rugby football in France is not a beginning of yesterday. The Racing Club was founded in 1882, the Stade Francais in 1883. The two joined forces in 1885 and played together as a combined club for ten years. They separated in 1895, when a third club was formed, the Olympique, since disbanded. In 1891, the first English club team, that of Rosslyn Park, visited Paris. That was four years after the formation of the U. S. F. S. A., which is the French Rugby Union. In 1894, the first French team, a combination of the Racing Club and Stade Francais, visited this country playing the Civil Service, and Park House at Maze Hill.

Thus, Frenchmen have been playing Rugby for 20 years, beginning about ten years after the institution of our own international games. So that they have really had plenty of time in which to "tumble" more to the little artifices and moves of the game than they have done, on Monday's showing at Cardiff.

And the Rugby game has been played for quite as many years in the provinces of France where the Stade Bordelais Universite Club, which now runs five Rugger and two Soccer teams, came into existence in 1889 and is the leading organisation with its regular Sunday "gate" of ten to fifteen thousand.

Then there are the Stade Olympien des Etudiants de Toulouse of which club Mavsonnie the stand-off French half at Cardiff, who will always be remembered by the roomy "bags" he puts on after an accident to his original pair, is a member. The Havre Athletic Club, the Velo Sport Toulousain, the Football Club de Lyon, and the Sport Athletique Bordelais, a minor Bordeaux organisation.

Yet, with all these clubs scattered about, the best French fifteen players, possessing fine pace, any amount of pluck and grand tackling power, had apparently never seen the long pass which misses out one or two players on purpose, since they were wholly hood-winked by this every day ruse at Cardiff. The reverse pass, too, completely "did" them. But almost more fatal than anything was the unexpected way in which when the Welsh centres were in possession the Frenchmen ran along with them towards touch thus bunching themselves on to the Welsh wing, who was never destined to receive the ball, in a way which left the road open for the Welsh centres to double in. Again, the French threes roamed all over the place. Vareilles the left wing was more than once thirty yards from his centre, alike in the Welsh as in his own half of the ground. When the Welsh threes were attacking and had got well towards the wings the French left wing pair, especially, receded as though unable to make up their minds. They were in fact waiting for Gibbs to receive the ball, scenting in him—because he was the wing man—the only danger. If he had received the ball both would have gone for him and left the road open for Trew. Meanwhile, however, Trew was gaining yards and yards of ground. When the Welsh forwards were dribbling in a body Martin the French back receded in a similar manner. Not in a flinching manner, far from it, but indecisively, uncertain when to make his dash in at the ball.

All these little "points" are, I feel sure, simply the result of bad bringing up. I mention them in the most cordial spirit of hope that some day they may be eradicated. The Frenchmen, in short, seem to have been taught the game rather in the haphazard way it is taught at many of our schools. Every year we see youngsters fresh from their School three-quarter line, whose one idea on getting the ball appears to be to kick it into touch.

If we had the players of this French team in England for a season or so what players most of them would become! Lesieur a wing three than whom few would ever excel; Leuvielle a promising centre; Communeau, Masse and Branlat forwards sans pareil, Martin and one or two other full-backs I know in Paris, not forgetting Denance of the Sporting Club, who would be worthy of our national teams.

Still, a beginning must be made, and after all England beat Wales at Blackheath by 8 goals and 5 tries at their first meeting!

E. H. SEWELL.

Boxing.

DURHAM LIGHT INFANTRY TOURNAMENT.

THE above tournament came to a successful close in the Durham Light Infantry Lines, Lucknow, on the 27th March. The fighting throughout was of a splendid description and keen competition prevailed during the four nights of the tournament. The string band of the Durhams was in attendance each night and played in the intervals of boxing. Lieutenant-General Sir E. Locke Elliot refered on the second night, and Mr. Owen O'Neill on the first and third nights. The Committee on the night of the finals was: Referee—Major H. H. Tudor, "S" Battery, R. H. A. Judges:—Lieutenant U. R. Lovering, Durham L.I. and Lieutenant G. E. Whittle, Oxford L.I. Timekeeper—Sergeant-Major C. Watton. M.C., Color-Sergeant J. P. Cherry.

The Cups and medals were presented to the winners by Brigadier-General Sir J. R. L. Macdonald, who said he had been impressed with the excellent boxing witnessed and was gratified to notice the large number of entries from regiments not stationed in Lucknow. He also congratulated Lieutenant Lovering and his staff, especially Color-Sergeant Cherry on the success of the Tournament.

In the second round Robson was down, but soon showed himself to advantage, and won on points.

Regimental Novices.—Light-weights.—Final.—Corporal Lowe vs. Private Furness. After two rounds of level fighting, both men went down in succession in the third round. Lowe forced Furness to surrender, just before the close, with a couple of hard blows on jaw and body.

Accounts for 1907.

The Honorary Treasurer, Mr. L. H. Savile, presented the statement of accounts for the year 1907, which he observed showed a fairly satisfactory result. The subscriptions for the year were Rs. 13,304 showing an increase of some Rs. 800 as compared with 1906, but the entrance fees were Rs. 640 less, as only 144 new members had been elected in the year against 208 in 1906. The amount received for subscriptions just covered the cost of publishing the Journal, postage and general charges. It was to be hoped that a large number of new members would join the Society this year and so enable them to continue the heavy expense of producing the Journal in its present form.

The accounts were accepted subject to the usual audit.

Proposed Alteration of Rules.

Certain alterations to the Rules proposed by the Committee were read and will be brought forward for final decision at the next meeting.

STRAY NOTES.

No two animals, or plants even, when born of the same parents, are ever exactly alike. Not only that, but if we look at a great number of individuals of a race or stock, we find that some are very different from the others, in colour, in proportion of parts, in character, and other qualities. As a rule it is difficult to look at such a number, because in Nature only two on the average out of many hundreds, some times thousands, born from a single pair of parents, grow up to take their parents' place, and these two are those "selected" by natural survival on account of their close resemblance to the parents. But if we experimentally rear the offspring of a plant or animal to full growth—not allowing them to perish by competition for food, or place, or by inability to escape enemies—then we see more clearly how great is the in-born variation, how many and wide are the departures from the favoured standard form which are naturally born and owe their peculiarities to this birth-quality—called innate or congenital variation—and not to anything which happens to them afterwards differing from what happens to their brothers and sisters.

Of course, we are all familiar with this "congenital or innate variation," as shown by brothers and sisters in human families. How and why do innate variations arise? They arise from chemical and mechanical action upon the "germs" or reproductive cells contained in the body of the parents, and also sometimes from the mating in reproduction of two strains or races which are already different from one another. When an animal or plant is given unaccustomed food or brought up in new surroundings (as, for instance, in captivity) its germs are affected, and they produce variations in the next generation more abundantly. The best analogy for what occurs is that of a "shaking up" or disturbance of the particles of the germ or reproductive material, somewhat as the beads and bits of glass in a kaleidoscope are shaken and change from one well-balanced arrangement to another. And the same analogy applies to the crossing or fertilising of one "strain" or "race" by another differing from it. A disturbance is the consequence, and a departure in the form and character of the young from anything arrived at before often takes places. These variations have no necessary fitness or correspondence to the changed conditions which have produced them. They are, so to speak, departures in all and every direction—not very great, but still great enough to be selected by survival if occurring in wild extra-human nature, and obvious enough when produced in cultivated animals and plants to be seen and selected by man, the stock-breeder or fancier.

The extraordinary musical sensitiveness of spiders has several times been proved. Everyone has heard of Pellisson's spider. Consoler of the unfortunate prisoner, it perished because it listened too closely to the captive's violin. The gaoler saw it and crushed it brutally.

Gretry, the composer, speaks of a favourite spider which descended along its thread upon his piano as soon as he played it. When giving recitals at Brussels, Rubinstein saw a large spider issue from the floor of the platform and listen to the music. He gave three concerts at the same hall, and on each occasion the spider appeared.

Insects in general, though less sensitive to music, do not object to it. Fishes betray little or no interest in music. Everybody, on the other hand, probably knows that music is often used in order to attract snakes from their hiding places.

The Indians catch iguanas in that manner; and there is an experiment that we can all make to demonstrate the truth of the matter. If a violin or piano is played whenever there is a lizard visible, the lizard will stop and listen with obvious pleasure as long as the music lasts.

It is a well known fact that in those countries where oxen are used for labour they take great pleasure in the singing of their driver. They work better at the plough when stirred by a cheerful song. Arabs sing to their camels during long journeys across the desert.

Horses are particularly sensitive to music. Guenoe, who carefully studied the matter, quotes the following curious fact: "In 1892 the 58th Regiment of Infantry was making a military test march, when the music struck up. The young horse of Captain de R—— hastened forward and placed itself, in spite of its rider, behind the last rank of the musicians. Then it followed peacefully, giving obvious signs of pleasure.

"When the music ceased the captain was able to resume his place at the head of his company, but the band struck up again, and the horse, notwithstanding the efforts of Captain de R——, galloped and once more placed itself behind the musicians. This happened every time the band played."

Lions have been found to listen with marked joy to the piano. They appreciate the top notes and the medium, but roar terribly when the bass keys are struck loudly.

Scarlatti, the Italian composer, owned a cat which loved to walk on the keys of a piano and struck certain notes in preference to others. The composer took those notes as the theme of one of his fugues, which, for that reason, received the name of "The Cat Fugue." I have seen many cats walk up and down the keyboard, showing obvious pleasure at the sounds thus produced.

The writer knows of a dog which will listen intently and silently to all melodies, but displays every symptom of pain and agony at the sound of a chromatic scale. This dog becomes quiet as soon as the melody is again taken up. It is only the succession of semi-tones which makes so extraordinary an impression upon it. I know of another dog which is fond of organ music, but wails terribly as soon as the "Vox Celeste" stop is used.

If one wished to make serious experiments in musical psychology, the dog would no doubt prove the most interesting study; and the monkey, too, would be fascinating. Darwin mentions a gibbon which was able to sing a complete octave, and it is known that black chimpanzees will gather to the number of from twenty to fifty and form a kind of orchestra, beating pieces of hollow wood with sticks for their own pleasure.—M. Daubresse, in La Revue.

The Horse.

HORSE BREEDING IN AMERICA.

Writing in the New York Herald, Capt. A. H. Waddell deals with the problem before horse breeders in the United States, and in the course of his most recent article says:—

In continuing my recent communication to the Herald, in which I endeavoured to point out beneficial results of national importance which are certain to grow and flourish out of the open-handed and patriotic move on the part of the breeding bureau of the Jockey Club in donating fifty thoroughbred stallions for breeding purposes throughout the State, my remarks were confined to the wisdom of this movement as a basic operation for the production of the very finest type of cavalry and artillery horses.

While being able to supply an unlimited number of army horses as well bred and as fast as anything on earth is undoubtedly the most important achievement which will arise directly from this wise and patriotic move on the part of the breeding bureau of the Jockey Club, still there are many other reasons for welcoming this far-reaching procedure.

Prejudice, bias, and narrow-mindedness must find no place in so vast a territory as the horse world; it is too big, too grave, too serious, too momentous a question to admit of any "littleness" on the part of any person or persons, politicians, or politics.

I have no doubt in the world that the large majority of farmers, horsemen, and others to whom the horse is of the utmost consequence will come, after careful consideration, to the one and only conclusion that this generous move on the part of the breeding bureau of the Jockey Club is eventually going to do more for the horse industry of the nation than the combined breeding operations of the last hundred years have accomplished.

With all the enormous breeding establishments in this country, with all its wealth, with all its greatness, with all the interest that is taken in horses here, and with all the millions that are expended upon them, the American breeder has not yet succeeded in developing one single type of horse of any kind.

The only types that can be called types at all are the Kentucky saddler and the Kentucky gaited saddle horse, and they are not really American productions, for they both emanate from the English thoroughbred, and it is this animal that has given them their bloodlike quality, their smooth and easy gaits, their staying qualities, and their value.

The American trotter, too. All the grit, stamina, pluck, and endurance that have made him what he is, come from the thoroughbred. It is from the thoroughbred that we get the speed element in the first instance, not trotting speed, bear in mind, which by years and years of breeding and encouraging and training and developing has been directed into the extreme trot or pace through a natural tendency to this gait on the part of his cold-blooded ancestors, and which has now assumed an hereditary character. The trotter has never developed the speed of the thoroughbred, nor will he ever do so, although I think that he is quite likely to lower somewhat his already extraordinary record.

What a magnificent type of heavy harness hopes could be developed from the American trotter by conservative breeding and careful selection! Every now and again you see such horses, and then what are they? Why, they are unbeatable and unapproachable in every conceivable way. There ought to be thousands and thousands of horses of this class and with a pronounced type in this country to-day, but as it is there are precious few, and it is all on account of our American methods of breeding.

Now, here are three classes, not all types, of the most fashionable and sought after kinds, and they all owe everything they possess of value to the thoroughbred. What think you, then, will be the result of careful breeding among the bigger and better individuals of this class of, say, trotting-bred mares not fast enough to race, not high-actioned enough for city swelldom, not marketable outside the place where they were foaled, but still having the grit, bottom, and rugged constitution of the up State horse?

What, I say, will be the result of such mating with the thoroughbreds presented by the breeding bureau of the Jockey Club in a few years from now from this excellent class of mares? And what, I ask, also, from the cross of these horses with the lighter draught animals, and what the outcome of careful selection in mating from among these first-cross thoroughbreds to a system of breeding from the results of this class?

There is but one conclusion, and that is a dead certainty. It is this, that in a few years from now there will be a type of brood mare in New York State that will be sought for all over the world. There will be a type of hunter in New York State that hunting men from Leicestershire, Warwickshire, and Northamptonshire will come to buy. There will be, with a little more attention to further thoroughbred crossing, a type of steeplechaser that good Americans will take over to Aintree and win the Grand National with. There will be a type of saddle horse that will grace Rotten Row, and a type of general utility horse that will always be saleable and always in demand.

Then, best of all, and most urgent and necessary, with perhaps another dash or two of the proper kind of thoroughbred cross, will be the cavalry horse, heavy and light, the artillery horse and the transport horse, ready for the ranks.

The Medical Practitioner remarks: For the first few years the young doctor has to sit in his consulting room like "Patience on the Monument." After that, presumably, the monuments are all on the patients.

From a Northern town comes a sad story of a pawnbroker. He was enjoying a beauty sleep when a furious knocking at the street door brought him to the window with a jerk. "What's the matter?" he shouted. "Come down, demanded the knocker. "But——" "Come Down!"

The man of many nephews hastened downstairs and peeped around the door. "Now, sir?" he demanded. "I wan'sh know the time," said the reveller. "Do you mean to say you knocked me up for that? How dare you?"

The midnight visitor looked injured. "Well, you've got my watch," he said.

Solution to Problem No. 57.

A is marked with the knave of diamonds, assuming that B has not played a false card. If Z puts Y in with the 10, however, and finesses in hearts the king may be held up until the third round, when he will be unable to put Y in to continue the suit. It is safer to establish hearts, therefore, without finessing, and at trick 2 Z should accordingly lead the ace followed by the queen, and if necessary the 4. Unless B holds four hearts to the king and 10, or is void, this will clear the suit, and Z is bound to get in with a club or a spade, sooner or later, to lead up to Y's tenace in diamonds. He is safe for a trick in clubs unless he is led through twice by B, and the ace, queen, and 10 are all with A.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

London, Friday, 13th March 1908.

Yesterday, at 5 p.m., the Royal Automobile Club made their formal entry into the old War Office buildings in Pall Mall. The occasion was the annual general meeting of the members of the Royal Automobile Club, who had to receive and pass the annual report, elect twenty-five members on the committee, and discuss the usual general business on such occasions. It was a happy idea to hold this meeting in these buildings, which are to be pulled down shortly. On this site the new club premises will be erected, and when finished give promise of being the most complete club house in London. No wonder that members are joining the Royal Automobile Club in greater numbers than before, with such rosy prospects of excellent accommodation before them.

Continental racing events start on the 15th instant, with the Verona Meeting, and the programme continues until 27th September, when the Chateau Thierry hill climb takes place. The Targa Florio is to be held on 10th May, while the Grand Prix will be decided on 7th July. In English motoring circles the first contest of any real importance is down for 11th April, when the Crystal Palace Automobile Club decides their flexibility trials. From the latter date the British motor world will be in theham of a continuous excitement, for although the Continental events will be watched with a certain amount of interest this side of the Channel, the programme of forthcoming British events is sufficiently long and interesting to satisfy the demands of the most enthusiastic disciple of the wheel. Following the Crystal Palace flexibility trial, the Brooklands Racing Club holds its first race meeting on 18th and 20th April, and have also arranged for six other meetings during the season, the last of which takes place on 3rd October. The international motor contest organised by the R.A.C. starts on 11th June, and will not be concluded until 29th June. The Shelsey Walsh hill climb, so greatly prized by Midland automobilists, is to be held on 27th June, while the "four inch" race is down for decision on 2nd October. Several firms, too, I learn, are seriously contemplating organising competitions on somewhat similar lines to the successful Argyll monthly competition, so that the motorist who is out for plunder should have no difficulty in returning heavily laden at the end of the racing season.

I hear that the Bombay Motor Car Company, who, of course, are well-known to all your motoring readers, recently received a letter from Professor Dawson, Principal of the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute, and Joint Honorary Secretary of the Motor Union of West India, eulogising the performance of the 38-H.P. Daimler car which he drove in connection with the recent Indian Motor Trials. As the car was only received a few hours before the commencement of the Trials, there was no opportunity of tuning it up, yet there was no hitch of any kind whatever, and the vehicle made an absolutely Non-stop run. Only 1½ gallon of lubricating oil and 2lb. of grease on chains were used through the entire trip, and the petrol consumption worked out at 13·2 miles per gallon.

Mr. C. L. Freeston, in the current issue of the Car, has a most interesting article on the effects of automobilism with regard to horse-drawn carriages. The article contains the official figures for some years of the number of motor and horse-drawn vehicles that have paid taxes of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and is particularly apt at this moment, when increased taxation for automobiles is proposed by the present Government. Motorists will be surprised to learn that in 1906 (the last year completed figures are obtainable) that the total number of horse-drawn vehicles was 532,452 which paid a tax. These contributed a sum of £477,183 15s., whereas 79,513 motor vehicles were taxed to the extent of £118,945 16s. The average tax therefore on motor vehicles was practically four times as great as that of the average contribution of the horse-drawn carriage.

Whenever one has had trouble with a brand new cover, which possibly has worn very badly and only run half the distance which it ought to have done, the stock excuse of the manufacturer has been, "Your tyres were not pumped up to the right pressure, and therefore you cannot expect them to be satisfactory." Up till quite recently it has always been an accepted fact that tyres, to be satisfactory in running, should be pumped up "board hard," but in the light of recent experiments this assumption has had a nasty shock. Some time ago Mr. Edge made certain experiments with regard to tyre pressures on Brooklands, and the result proved that, if the tyres were inflated to a considerably less pressure than that usually recommended by the manufacturer, the speed was in no wise affected, whilst the durability of the tyre was considerably increased.

For instance, the car upon which Mr. Newton set up world's records for two-hours' continuous running the other day had the tyres inflated to about 60lbs. pressure at starting and on the completion of the trial the pressure was found to have risen to 75lbs., owing to the heat engendered by friction. Now, supposing these tyres had been pumped up to 75lbs. or 80lbs. to start with, at the end of the run the pressure would have been somewhere near 100lbs. to the square inch, a pressure which no fabric could successfully resist for any length of time. Mr. Edge asserts that by reducing the pressure from 85lbs. to 70lbs. the average lift obtainable by a cover is increased by about 900 miles. Added to this, we get better adhesion and less slip, and as the speed is not affected there seems to be every possible point in favour of low pressures.

Another popular fallacy has been that the colder you can keep an engine the better it runs; in fact, some people put forward this assertion as the solution of the problem. "Why does an engine run better at night?" Experiments have recently been conducted to attempt to get at the minimum temperature at which an engine develops its maximum power. And I fancy my readers will be surprised when they learn that the most efficient temperature was 149 degrees Fahr. The following table will show results of the test. The car was a 30-h.p. six-cylinder, and the engine revolutions were kept constant at 1,100, or as near that as possible.

Results of the Test.

Water-Jacket Temperature			B.H.P.		Petrol Consumption
140°	F.	...	Highest	...	Lowest
212°	F.	...	1 per cent. less	...	3·5 per cent. more
186°	F.	...	·66 " " "	...	1·38 " " "
56°	F.	...	6·6 " " "	...	11·8 " " "

It will be thus noticed that when we get the temperature down to 56 degrees we get the extraordinary loss of 6·6 per cent. in horse-power. It will also be noticed that 149 Fahr. is by far the most economical temperature to run at, owing to the fact that we get a considerably lessened petrol consumption. I have found from actual experience that when the weather is very frosty it is often advisable to remove the fan belt and thus keep the engine from getting too cold: the increase in power by adopting this device amazed me the first time I tried it.

COACHING.

Who said that the days of coaching in the Old Country are over? The merry tootle of the post horn is seldom heard nowadays it is true. Nor are many four-in-hands to be seen, as a matter of fact the muster, even at a Coaching Club Meet, at the Magazine in Hyde Park, which was wont to be considered one of the principal social events of the London season, has seldom during the past few years totalled many more than a score. There is likely to be a big revival of the healthy old pastime during the coming season, and if such proves to be the case all the credit of bringing it about will be due, not to an Englishman, but to an American in the person of Mr. Alfred G. Vanderbilt. Quite a flutter of excitement has been caused among adherents of the sport of driving recently by the arrival in London of a large stud of coach horses from the United States, all of which are the property of Mr. Vanderbilt. The consignment Mr. Vanderbilt has had shipped across the Atlantic numbers seventy-one and it is said that the value of the horses is estimated at something like ten thousand pounds. The horses, nearly all of which are youngsters and quite green, are now stabled at a farm about three miles out of London, where they will remain until they are wanted for the road. What is the reason for sending the horses to England? everybody interested in coaching is asking. Mr. Vanderbilt himself says that it is his intention to run the coach on the London to Brighton Road for six weeks before the International Horse Show at Olympia, beginning on May 4. Probably he will start from Northumberland Avenue, but that is not definitely settled yet. On being asked whether his object in taking such a large string of horses to England was to tool his personal friends along the popular English coaching roads, Mr. Vanderbilt said "No. It is to be a public coach, and anyone can book seats if they like. I am going to make a charge, and no matter what he may be, a man can coach it with me so long as he pays his money." Mr. Vanderbilt further said that he would drive the coach himself, but that he would be accompanied by a professional whip. Thirty-six horses will be used on the journey from London to Brighton, so that there will be nine relays. Apparently Mr. Vanderbilt did not wish to "give away" his real object, which is believed to be an attack on the London to Brighton and back record, for on it being pointed out to him that nine teams in fifty miles should enable him to make the journey in record coaching time all he would say was that "it will be a fast coach, but I cannot say what time I shall do the journey in. That all remains to be seen. It may be done in three hours and a half or four hours, or less." Whatever Mr. Vanderbilt's intentions are and whether he be going for records or not, his doings will arouse keen interest, and it is not at all unlikely that his lead will be followed by others. The schedule time for Goodman's famous coach from Brighton to the Elephant and Castle, which is about a mile from the City of London (fifty-two miles) was five hours. It is presumed in some quarters that this is the time Mr. Vanderbilt means to improve upon. It would be impossible to break Selby's record daily. Selby's record was the result of a bet made at Ascot in 1888, that the journey from London to Brighton and back could not be done in eight hours. Selby did it in seven hours and fifty minutes, and won his backer one thousand pounds. Selby died the same year, when he was only forty-four years old. It is curious that a man who lived when the glorious days of coaching were over should have set his name above many of the immortals of an earlier generation. As to the greatest speed ever achieved by a coach, I should think it must have been in a drive of four miles (Wincanton to Last Gate) by a friend of the late Duke of Beaufort. He started at a gallop, and did the four miles in just under twelve minutes. But that may have been equalled by the Quicksilver, which the Duke of Beaufort himself drove. Nemo me impune Lacessit was its motto, which the Duke used to translate "No one ever gives me the go-by."

IRELAND AND GOLF CHAMPIONSHIPS.

A BIG controversy on championship courses is being waged by golfers in the British Isles. For some time past the enthusiastic golfers of Ireland have been crying for the inclusion of an Irish green in the rota, and the recent announcement that they have found an advocate for their cause in the Innerleven Club, seemed to indicate that at the meeting of the delegates to the Amateur championship at Sandwich the feeling of the governing body would be tested on this vexed question. It is now certain, however, that there will be a competition for the coveted honour. The inclusion of the Westward Ho will be proposed, and the Cinque Ports Club, apparently not satisfied with having "bagged" the Open Championship, after a contest with its Devonshire rival, want the Amateur Championship also brought to Deal. There are thus three claimants in the field.

There has been no official announcement of any intention on the part of the delegates as a body to increase the number of greens on which the Amateur Championship is played; but it seems to have been taken for granted that because a sixth course has been added to the Open rota, an addition will naturally be made also to the list of greens which have the privilege of "housing" the amateur event.

The first amateur championship was played at St. Andrews in 1886, the next meeting took place at Hoylake, and the third at Prestwick. In 1891, Sandwich was admitted to the rota and two years later Muirfield was included, although the first championship on the East Lothian green did not take place till 1897. Since then no change has been made, but while the open championship was held on each of these five courses in regular rotation, the Amateur meeting took place in Scotland and England in alternate years. Hoylake and Sandwich, therefore, had it more frequently than the Scottish greens.

According to the history and regulations of the Amateur Championship, as set forth in Nesbitt's "Golf Year Book," the venues are allotted as follows:—1904, Sandwich; 1905, Prestwick; 1906, Hoylake; 1907, St. Andrews; 1908, Sandwich; 1909, Muirfield; 1910, Hoylake; 1911, Prestwick, etc., etc. We do not know whether this arrangement is inscribed in the minutes of the ruling body. If it is, then one would conclude that they did not intend any alteration to be made in the rota for a considerable time; but doubtless means could be adopted at any meeting of the delegates to cancel the order and add another green to the number, if the majority so desired. There can be no great objection to a policy of enlargement.

The point to be decided is, how many new greens could be included. The clubs that already have periodical custody will probably not object if a somewhat longer time elapses between their visits of their particular course. Nowadays, with a formidable field of two hundred competitors taking part in the event, a considerable strain is put upon the championship links. The wear and tear at teeing grounds must be taken into account as well as the displacement of turf through the green although it may carefully be relaid and tramped down, not to mention the arduous work the tournament entails on the officials of the club.

To come now to a consideration of the candidates eager for the privilege of showing hospitality to the Amateur Championship, we think, if only one course is to be added, the contest should lie between Westward Ho and an Irish link. The claim of Deal can only be advocated on the ground that it is in future to be one of the venues of the Open Championship. There is no question as to the merits of the course, but the objection urged against it in the recent discussion—that it was not desirable to have two championship courses next door to each other—should be cited again in favour of Westward Ho, and with stronger reason this time.

In regard to Ireland, it cannot be denied that the golfers across the Channel have a strong case if any addition is proposed to the rota. One cannot blame them if they feel they have a grievance against the governing body. For years they have pleaded in vain for some kind of recognition. Many first-rate Irish golfers take part in the Amateur Championship, and the Open events held across the Channel are patronised every year by large numbers of English and Scottish players, who speak in glowing terms of the fine sportsmanship of the Irish golfer, and of the excellent courses the country possesses.

The present agitation for another Championship course was raised by the Irishmen, and it would be a particularly sore blow to them if an English green were to be chosen after all. It will be argued by those who favour the latter proposals that the growth of the game in the South entitles them to the same number of Championship courses as Scotland, but on the same ground is not Ireland entitled to some consideration?

Why not add two courses to the rota—Westward Ho and one in Ireland? The choice of an English course to the exclusion of an Irish course would constitute an undoubted injustice to Ireland; on the other hand, to neglect the English claim in favour of the Irish claim would arouse indignation. The difficulty could be, and it is to be hoped, will be, amicably met by recognising both.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The English turf has suffered yet another great loss. Following close on the death of his famous son comes the news of the demise at Welbeck Abbey, Notts, of St. Simon, the famous stallion. St. Simon was foaled in 1881, was bred by the late Prince Bathyany and was by Galopin out of St. Angela, by King Tom, her dam Adeline by Ion out of Little Fairy by Hornsea. In his running days St. Simon was at the top of the tree, but owing to the death of his nominator, Prince Bathyany, he had no chance of distinguishing himself in classic events. He was purchased at auction for the Duke of Portland for less than £2,000 and his new owner, losing all the nominations, had to make fresh engagements for him. As a two-year-old he won the Halnaker Stakes, at Goodwood, and beat a solitary opponent in a maiden race the following day. He next ran at the Derby September meeting and won the Devonshire Nursery in a field of twenty carrying 8st. 12lb. At Doncaster he beat twenty-one others in the Prince of Wales' Nursery with 9st. up and winning a £500 match against Duke of Richmond at Newmarket, retired for the winter with an unbeaten certificate.

His first appearance as a three-year-old was in a Trial Stakes at Newmarket, when he met Tristan (winner of the Ascot Cup the previous year) at weight for age. St. Simon won easily and thoroughly proved how lucky it was for the owners of St. Gatien and Harvester that St. Simon could not take part in the Derby. At [illegible]om we walked over for the Gold Cup and [illegible] Ascot carrying 7st. 9lb., he again beat Tristan in the important race of the same name with such stayers as Faugh-a-Ballagh and Friday among the beaten lot. He next won the Gold Cup at Gosforth Park and then took the Goodwood Cup, carrying 8st. and winning in a canter by twenty lengths from Ossian, winner of the St. Leger in the preceding year. He never ran again, but was taken out of training perfectly sound—an unbeaten horse. He had run ten times in two years and had beaten the best that could be brought against him in the four most important cup contests of the year. Not only was St. Simon an unbeaten horse, but he was never seriously challenged in any of his races.

Sr. Simon's produce at first were disappointing. Curiously enough the best of his early stock were fillies and he had sired three winners of the One Thousand, four winner of the Oaks and two winners of the St. Leger (both fillies) before he had given us a winner of the Two Thousand or Derby. This feat he accomplished with St. Frusquin and Persimmon in 1896, and as Persimmon also won the St. Leger and Diamond Jubilee the Triple Crown in 1900 when Winefreda and La Roche won the One Thousand and Oaks, respectively. St. Simon has been responsible for the winners of seventeen classic races, while the offspring of his famous sons Persimmon, St. Frusquin and Florizel II. have between them accounted for a dozen classics. St. Simon's earnings at the stud were enormous—his serving fee even at the age of 25 being 500 guineas. The winnings of his stock in 1902 totalled no less than £36,531.

The Programme for the Calcutta Races, Tollygunge Steeplechases and first four extra meetings for the season 1908-09 appear in the Calendar issued this week. The inclusion of a fourth extra meeting before the big meeting has necessitated the framing of six new events and we are glad to see that on of them is a genuine Maiden Race, i.e., for maidens on the day of the race, an item at the omission of which from the programme we have often wondered. There is a Welter Horse and a Welter Pony Plate for G.R.'s with a 7lb. penalty for professionals—for animals that have not won Rs. 500 in each case, a Midget and a Giant Pony Plate for animals that had not won Rs. 200 up to 31st December 1907, with penalties for winners after that date, and a season's Maiden Horse Plate for horses, which were maidens on 31st March 1908. A programme which should produce some very interesting racing. The second extra follows the lines of the first extra of last season with one novelty in the shape of a 6 furlong race for three four and five-year-olds, which takes the place of the Town Plate. The third extra is precisely the same as last season's second and the fourth as the third as far as the four events now published are concerned. The other races published so far present no very striking new features, the principal alteration being an increase of the Stakes in one or two items—a move in the right direction.

We hear that Mr. W. O. Rees, to whom we tender our congratulations on his recovery from a troublesome illness, has left for Europe this week and has sold his game little mare, Wake Up, to Mr. Crawford, in whose hands she will probably finish her days as a pigsticker at which she should prove a more than useful animal. Her half sister, Sal, is now pulling a tum-tum. How are the mighty fallen!

We are sorry to hear that Mr. J. D. Scott has lost that very good animal, Honest Lady, through an attack of fever. If ever a mare deserved her name she did, as though over eleven years old she ran a real game animal in the past season, and her win in the Paddock Plate (1¼ mile) with 10st. up in 2mins. 11secs. was a fine performance. She was very well bred, by Veracity out of Meadowley and has earned her oats and a bit more in the four years she has been out. We learn that fever has also carried off two of this successful trainer's ponies, a real bad bit of luck.

Young Northmore has been in Calcutta for a day or two, it is only a flying visit and we are not likely to see him riding down here as he has a retainer for the various mofussil meets again when he hopes to repeat his success of the season just concluded during which he has ridden no less than 44 winners in various parts of the country, and gained golden opinions for himself in all directions.

The tank by the Old Monsoon Stand is now completely filled in and there is no doubt about the new 5 furlong course being ready for next season, which will be a very great boon. It will, however, be quite unsafe to use during the Monsoons and it is impossible to hold out any hopes. The hurdle course is likely to be very much better as the draining has been greatly improved and we shall not have to wade through the thick swamps of former years, but we do not hear of any attempts to mend the training track in which the events on the flat will probably again be decided. The Clerk of the Weather cannot possibly treat the racing public worse than he did last year and by he law of averages there should be a good time coming in that respect, lots of rain in June and July and mid week showers for the racing season "'Tis a consumation devoutly to be wished."

Our London correspondent considers the Polo and Riding Pony Show, held early in March, as one of the most lively and successful ever put through, and a feature that must have impressed itself on most visitors was the numerical strength of the smaller exhibitors. This strongly indicates a growing increase in the cult of the pure bred polo pony, a condition of affairs which will certainly be hailed with satisfaction by poloists in India. One sees every year more polo ponies bred as a distinct class, and the bending and circling competitions and dropping of polo balls into baskets begin to take a much larger share of public attention, and to be taken more seriously by specialists. A few of the ponies showed a manifest delight in the game and an understanding of it; and the question arises whether polo ponies can be "bred for brains," as Argentine breeders believe, and inherit an instinct for the game. Indian players could probably quote more instances of "brainy" ponies than observers in any other polo playing country, some almost rivalling in intelligence Mr. R. Kipling's famous "Maltese Cat."

By direction of the Marquis of Bute an interesting experiment was carried out early in March, at Quien Loch, an inland sheet of water, measuring 14 acres, which he is desirous of stocking with trout, and which is infested with pike and other voracious fish. The loch was set with dynamite mines, each about 100 yards apart, and these were exploded. The spectacular effect was curious, each mine sending up what seemed to be a solid cone of water to the height of from 60 to 100 feet. The experiment is said to have been a success, thousands of dead fish being subsequently found.

Among the items of interest in "Sport in England" this week, is a short summary of the novel billiard match played between the veteran Peall, of "spot" celebrity, and Dawson. Peall was beaten, but he put up a good game and fully demonstrated the possibilities of the stroke he made famous.

The revival of the spot stroke reminds us that it was Peall who furnished Dawson's debut in London billiards years ago. Dawson came from Yorkshire with a great reputation as a spot-stroke player. Two matches with Peall were arranged for him, spot-barred the first week, spot stroke the second, Peall, of course, conceding long starts. The newcomer opened very weakly, and, if memory serves, he was overtaken early in the game, but with that pluck which has since become a byword Dawson actually pulled the match out of the fire by about fifteen points.

Peall had his revenge in spot stroke, one of his breaks amounting to 3,304, and from that time Dawson, appreciating his possibilities, devoted himself to the restricted game, with such results that he very quickly became the next best player to Roberts, whom, indeed, a few years later he challenged and played in a level match. Diggle came out at the same time as Dawson, and with even greater promise, but though Diggle could then beat his rival on level terms, he lacked the physique to make the same progress.

Then came Stevenson. Encouraged by his success in the tournaments in the old saloon in Dean Street, Stevenson challenged Dawson for the championship. It was some years before Stevenson could vindicate his right to equal rank, but his genius for the game was irrepressible, and now by common consent Stevenson is the better player.

Dawson and Stevenson and Mitchell are Yorkshiremen; Roberts, Diggle, Reece, and Mack are Lancastrians; Peall and Inman are Londoners. At some time Inman and Reece may be fighting for the title, but billiard skill is so enduring that Stevenson especially has still a long career before him. Dawson at forty-something is very nearly as good as ever he was, and sometimes even better.

The big boxing match for the championship between J. Roche and T. Burns turned out, as will be seen in our London sporting letter, a colossal fiasco; Burns outed his man in 1min. 28secs.

Details of the International Golf Championship, played near Nice, are included in our budget of Home Sporting news this week: Vardon, the hero of four championships, won again. The contest was remarkable for much brilliant play.

The strangest divorce case ever heard in these courts (writes the Chicago correspondent of the Evening Standard) was one in which a Mrs. Rickart applied for a divorce from her husband, who is secretary of a local football club, on the ground that the club in question lost too many games during the season. The husband in evidence stated that the only happy moments in the grief-laden house came when his men won.

According to the I. S. and D. News, "The decline of the hunting parson may be attributed to the High Church movement of modern times, but the mere layman finds himself hopelessly at sea when he essays to differentiate between the virtues of croquet, lawn tennis, and other such mild forms of recreation canonically allowed to pimply curates and the vices of hunting and all such manly field sports as the rigidly orthodox old tabbies decry with mittened and uplifted hands as anathema maranatha."

When the last received mail left London the betting on the Derby was not over brisk: the two horses at the top of the list were Perrier at 9 to 1 against (taken and offered) and Seasick II. at 100 to 3.

The Mercantile Bank of India, Limited, are advised by wire that the profits of the Bank for the year 1907, including £19,437 brought forward from the previous year, amount to £1,00,350. The Directors have declared a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum and have placed £40,000 to the Reserve Fund, £2,000 to the Pension Fund, leaving £24,600 to be carried forward.

The Kadir Cup pigsticking meet was held this year at Shujnama, three miles from Sherpore. There was a record number of entries and a fair number of visitors. The arrangements were excellent and a most enjoyable time was spent by all. The Kadir Cup was won by Lord Kensington on Twilight: Captain Fraser won the Hog Hunters' Cup on Diabolo, and Major Maxwell, the Pony Hog Hunters' Cup on Upstart.

In a golf match of 36 holes, played over the Deal course last week, Harry Vardon defeated Massey by nine up and seven to play.

Entries for the Beighton Cup hockey tournament closed on Saturday last, and number 24 as against 26 last year. They are as follows:—1. Dhanbaid Recreation Club, 2. 10th Jats' Hockey Club, 3. St. Xavier's College, 4. C.F.C., 5. Rangers, 6. B.-N. Railway Recreation Club, 7. A. E. R. C., Jamalpur, 8. E. I. Railway A. C., 9. Customs, 10 Medical College, 11. Ranchi, 12. Caledonia, 13. Y.M.C.A., 14. United Services, 15. Hornets, 16. Dalhousie, 17. Sibpur, 18. Rovers, 19. Calcutta Port Defence Volunteers, 20. Wanderers, 21. Sporting Union, 22. Mohun Bagan, 23. Town Club, 24. H. L. I.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—In continuation of the Lawn Tennis Competitions of the Bombay Gymkhana, the Western India Challenge Cup was concluded last week. In this again, W. Reid was defeated and Captain Lucas once more was left in the final. Major Field, however, is in excellent form just now and won fairly comfortably.

The Doubles also have been decided and in this J. E. C. Jukes and L. Barraclough met Major Field and Captain Lucas. As may be imagined the latter pair, a hot combination, won with comparative ease.

A very satisfactory number, sixteen pairs, competed for the Mixed Doubles and some very keen play was witnessed, the ladies, as a whole, showing up well. In the semi-finals, Mrs. Kemp and Captain Lucas beat Mrs. Brady and L. C. Margolionth, and Miss Gorrie and A. H. Glendenning beat Miss Macdonald and J. E. C. Jukes. In the final, Mrs. Kemp and Captain Lucas playing splendidly together won easily by 6-2, 6-3.

Generally speaking, there is nothing of importance just now in Bombay's sporting circles, but practice is in full swing for the Aga Khan Hockey Tournament, which will commence at the end of the month. Judging by the form already shown, the Bombay Gymkhana, who run it, will have but little chance and a Parsee combination, the Pioneer Club, are beating all they meet.

Before this comes off, we shall have the junior Rovers' Football Tournament, which promises to fill well and to be most interesting. It is a couple of years now since the idea of holding a tournament for schoolboys was started and Mr. Hogan has to be congratulated on bringing matters to a head.

Our Ootacamund correspondent writes:—The bill of fare provided by the committee of the Ootacamund Gymkhana Club, for the season 1908, has just been issued, and is a very elaborate one, comparing very favourably with those of previous years. The programme opens with cricket: the first match has already been played between Married vs. Single on the 4th instant, on the 11th idem the Civil meet the Military. The 18th and 20th are fixed for a match between the Ootacamund Gymkhana and Madras; on the 24th and 25th Wellington will play the Ootacamund Gymkhana, on the 30th, a match between Residents and Visitors, and on the 6th and 8th May the Ooty will meet Bangalore.

The Lawn Tennis Tournament will commence on the 13th instant, and ending, weather permitting, on the 23rd April, and in view to finish the tournament by that date, matches will be played both morning and evening. The Badminton Tournament is fixed for the 27th and 28th April and the Polo Tournament will open on the 29th April, and be continued on the 1st and 4th May. The Ooty Races will take place on the 5th, 7th, and 9th May, and the Horse Show is fixed for the 15th and 16th May. The Golf Championship begins on the 25th May and will finish on the 30th idem, and golfers visiting Ootacamund for the Golf Championship will be considered Honorary Members of the Ooty Gymkhana for such period as the competitions last not, exceeding ten days. It may be mentioned that Railway Companies grant concessions to teams of four travelling together.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 20th March 1908.

These lines will see print five days after the occurrence of an event in which all readers of The Indian Field, are interested. I allude to the marriage of your popular and sporting Viceroy's daughter, Lady Ruby Elliot, to Lord Errington, son of Lord Cromer. I understand that the wedding, which has been fixed for the 4th proximo, is going to be the matrimonial happening of that showery month and it will take place from the mansion Lady Minto has rented in Great Cumberland Place. There will be a brilliant company present at the ceremony and the subsequent reception, and the bride and bridegroom-elect have already been the recipients of many magnificent presents. Lord Cromer's long connection with Egypt, of which he may be said to have been the uncrowned king, and Lord Minto's brilliant Colonial record, make this wedding of interest to Britons in both hemispheres. This is a mere foreword, so to speak, for I make no doubt full details of the wedding have already reached you by cable. Your "Vagrant"—who when in India was occasionally honoured by Their Excellencies' patronage at sporting gatherings of which he has carried away happy recollections, begs leave to join your many readers in respectful congratulations.

I'm not sure that many people over your side of the world take a keen interest in the latest Townshend litigation, but my duty as a chronicler of those matters, which have exercised the public mind during the week impose on me the obligation of telling you that the ten days' legal battle in the Court of Chancery has ended in a victory for the Marquis whose trustee, Mr Arthur Geoffrey Robins has been dismissed. The plaintiff made the following grave charges against Robins.—

(1) That he exercised mesmeric influence over him.
(2) That he improperly sold heirlooms of the Townshend family and appropriated the proceeds.

On this account Lord Townshend asked:—

(1) That Mr. Robins might be dismissed from the trusteeship of deeds under which the heirlooms were brought into a resettlement of the Townshend estates.
(2) That Mr. Robins should be compelled to furnish accounts of his trusteeship.

Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady gave judgment for the Marquis, and ordered that Robins should be removed from his trusteeship.

You in India now and then have curiosities in the way of railway accidents; I doubt whether your records can produce anything quite like the extraordinary disaster which occurred to a Great Central train last week end near the Wembley Park Station. The engine and tender of a passenger train of five heavy bogie carriages broke away as the result of the tender leaving the rails and travelled over 500 yards over the permanent-way ere they came to a standstill practically uninjured: two carriages toppled over a ten-foot embankment, a third was brought up against a tree with its front wheels in the air, the two others bumped and jumped around in the liveliest fashion ere they settled down athwart the rails. Beyond a few scratches not a soul was injured. Marvellous!

While on the subject of records I will mention another, one connected with a lawsuit. There is now proceeding at the King's Bench Division a case the mere preparation of which has cost £30,000. On Tuesday, although it had reached its eighth day of hearing, only one witness had been called; there are nineteen more and it is expected that it will continue for at least another thirty days at an estimated cost of about £600 per day.

"Wyler and another vs. Lewis" is the record-breaking action in question. It involves the question of certain South African concessions, and bristles with so many legal and technical difficulties that even experts have occasionally been placed in a quandary. Such a labyrinth of evidence has presented itself that a brief outline of the essential facts occupied three clear days, and another four were required to read through the voluminous documents which affect the case.

These papers have become a serious embarrassment to the court. By the third day counsel's table groaned; by the fourth, every possible nook and cranny in the court was littered with them; and, by the fifth, seeing that the papers steadily accumulated, the officials in despair set aside a consultation room for their reception. Here a clerk is busily evolving order out of chaos as agreements and deeds shower upon him.

To the imposing array of counsel engaged the case may, it is humorously suggested, become more a question of physical endurance than of legal argument. An idea of the great cost of such lengthy litigation is conveyed by the appended table:—

Counsel.	Retainer.	Daily "Refresher."
Sir Edward ...son, K.C. ...	£1,000 ...	... £100
Mr. Rufus Isaacs, K.C. ...	£1,000	... £100
Mr. Montague Lush, K.C. ...	£750 ...	... £75
Mr. G. F. Hohler, K.C. ...	£750 ...	... £75
Mr. J. G. Joseph ...	£400 ...	... £50
Mr. George Wallace ...	£400 ...	... £50
Mr. C. F. Lloyd	£300 ...	... £25
Mr. R. A. Cohen	£150 ...	... £10

India, by all accounts, is still a happy hunting ground for senior counsel, but what do some of your big guns think of this little lot!

I think I mentioned in a few weeks ago that after fifty-four years, the Crimean heroine Miss Florence Nightingale was about to be remembered by a grateful country and that London contemplated conferring its freedom upon her. The unpardonable omission of a former generation was repaired on Monday. Owing to her age and infirmity the noble woman was unable to attend the ceremony, the presentation was in consequence made to her nephew, Mr. L. K. Shore Nightingale. At Miss Nightingale's wish the usual gold casket was dispensed with and the money that would have been spent on its purchase is to be devoted to charity. She is only the second lady to receive the freedom of the City, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts having been the first, while never before has the freedom been conferred by deputy, though Sir Rowland Hill received it at his house in Hampstead. On this occasion the City spokesman was Sir Joseph Dimsdale, a former Lord Mayor, and father of that cricket enthusiast the ex-Captain of the Calcutta Caledonian A.C. Caledonians may care to hear that their old skipper was seen in Piccadilly last week looking "ruddier than the cherry."

The spectacle of a couple of guns, drawn by six horses apiece, proceeding down Whitehall to Parliament Square the other afternoon led me to form one of the crowd which accompanied them to Star Court where they were unlimbered, their muzzles pointing to the windows of the house. My first impression was that another suffragette outbreak might be impending, but I gather from my evening paper that they represented the new quick-firer and one of the old pattern for the Territorial Force which Mr. Haldane had caused to be produced for the inspection of M.P.'s. They were duly examined and commented upon by numerous members and the general opinion seemed to be that the new firing apparatus would very much improve their fighting value. The contrivance fitted to the quick-firer consisted of a curious kind of metal cover extending along the barrel. Its effect is to minimise the recoil, while about ten shots can be fired in the same time formerly occupied to fire two. Good!

Most of the London picture galleries have been fairly well patronised this cold weather. Last Saturday witnessed the close of the winter exhibition of "Old Masters," at Burlington House, in order to prepare for the reception of the twenty thousand works of art that seek admission to the spring exhibition each year, of which on an average only eighteen hundred are hung. The sending-in days for these take place at the end of the month. The winter exhibition has been an unqualified success, and has done much to raise Hogarth's work from the oblivion into which it was sinking. By the way not long ago, I strolled into Mendoza's gallery in Bond Street, and found there installed as one having authority an erstwhile Calcutta Society favourite; one who took a leading part in the old "Qui Hai Minstrels" which some of your old stagers doubtless remember and who was (with his brother the "Cowboy") a fairly good performer at the Ballygunge C.C. Sports and a particularly popular person on the amateur concert platform.

The revival of "Romeo and Juliet" at the Lyceum is well worthy of praise though it may fall somewhat short in dignity, depth and beauty of acting of some other revivals of the great masterpiece. It was put on for the first time last Saturday, and on the whole I think it has not suffered much by revision. It ran smoothly and at times with briskness and virility; the scenic effects and mounting left nothing to be desired; there were many splendid pictures and the acting was sufficiently good without rising to great heights. Mr. Matheson Lang is an excellent Romeo; Miss Nora Kerin's Juliet, while not so satisfying altogether, is excellent at times; and good work is done by Mr. Eric Mayne as Mercutio. Mr. Halliwell Hobbes makes an excellent Tybalt; and Messrs. George Annesley, Herbert Grimwood, and Frederick Ross, and Miss Mary Allestree (as Lady Capulet) all bear their parts admirably; and the demonstration at the curtain augurs well for the success of the Lyceum revival.

A novel theatrical departure took place last Saturday night at the St Saviour's Social Club, Oxford Street, when, to demonstrate their remarkable facility of communication, certain deaf mutes of London arranged an entertainment which took the form of a one act play. All who assisted—actors, scene-shifters, and stage manager were all deaf and dumb, as were the audience who witnessed this wonderful performance. Sir Arthur H. Fairburn, the deaf and dumb baronet, who was one of the spectators, had interested himself greatly in the project.

The scene was an extraordinary one. Not a sound broke the stillness of the hall during the whole time the play was on, both action and dialogue being accomplished in silence. The actors, with mobile faces, gesticulated quaintly under the limelight, reeling off their parts upon fingers which moved with a lightning-like rapidity!

Even the Hippodrome, so justly famed for the magnificence of its spectacular effects, has never presented anything more beautiful than Hagedorn's Floral Fairy Lake, which delighted a large audience for the first time on Monday afternoon. Unlike most of the spectacular productions made familiar at the Hippodrome, the latest success is not wrapped up with a story. It is a spectacle pure and simple, which delights the eyes for no longer than three or four minutes before the curtain descends to shut out a glimpse of fairyland. In the centre of the arena a fountain is placed, surrounded by water. A number of fair girls, made up to represent statuary, are grouped about the fountain. Jets of water spurt upwards, nearly to the roof of the theatre. Remarkable electric lighting arrangements add greatly to the beauty of the spectacle, which is thoroughly artistic and delightful.

Between next month and next autumn we're to have a bunch of American plays in this dingy old town. First of all Charles Frohman is bringing Way Down East (a play of characteristic country life in Eastern Massachusetts) to the Aldywch; then Miss Grace George, who scored last year in Divorcons at the Duke of York's, will be along with Pretty Peggy (a Woffington play); and possibly Miss May Robson with Finding a Father for Flossie; and the other Miss Robson (Eleanor, the daughter of Mrs. Wiggs Carr Cooke—with Solomy Jane) may play seasons here.

I told you in my last, did I not, of the diverting little bit of litigation in which Mr. Frank Harris, editor of Vanity Fair claimed £300 for writing ten articles in the Bow and Bromley Unionist, in the interests of Mr. Arthur Du Cro's candidature for Hastings? The bill included 50 guineas; for writing a biography of Mr. Du Cros, 50 guineas; for preparing one speech, 100 guineas; and for preparing two other speeches, 50 guineas each. Defendant alleged that the claim was excessive and so thought the Official Referee who found that the £20, paid into court was sufficient to compensate plaintiff. He gave judgment for the defendant, and ordered the £20 to be paid out to the plaintiff.

Tuesday was St. Patrick's Day. The "sweet little flower" was very much in evidence in London as also in Birmingham, whither business allured me that day. One interesting item in the day's programme stands out among the dinners and gatherings—Field-Marshal Earl Roberts, as honorary colonel of the regiment, presented the Queen's annual gift of shamrock to the Irish Guards at Wellington Barracks.

For the purpose of convincing the Government of the strength of the "Votes for Women" movement, the Suffragettes are to hold a monster demonstration of some 150,000 of their followers on Sunday, 21st June. It is to take place in Hyde Park, and a minimum gathering of 100,000 women is already guaranteed.

The death is announced of M. Sukhorovsky, the Russian artist, whose painting, "Nana," has been exhibited all over the world, making a fortune for himself and others. I daresay some of your readers have seen it and retained vivid impressions of this really startling canvas. After receiving some £60,000 from the various exhibitions of Nana, M. Sukhorovsky sold the picture for £4,200 to a dealer, who resold it for £8,000 to an American. The latter is said to have made £200,000 by the enterprise. M. Sukhorovsky lost all his money in speculations, and was reduced almost to beggary.

THIRTEEN DAYS ON A ZAMBESI HOUSEBOAT.

AT the commencement of the 1907 rainy season I found myself at Tete, an old Portuguese Settlement on the Zambesi some 400 miles by waterway from the mouth of the river. At this time of year the small stern wheeler steamers that ply up and down from Chinde—at the mouth—are unable to make the journey owing to lack of water, a state of affairs that exists throughout half the year or more. It therefore behoves the belated traveller to make his own arrangements for the voyage.

After the usual difficulties invariably incidental to African bargaining, I secured an open boat with a "box" to sleep in at the stern end, besides a dozen natives to paddle, pole, push and pull until I should reach the coast. The journey down was to occupy roughly a couple of weeks; the journey back (which didn't concern me) probably six. It is the record of the voyage down that I intend to set out here under.

2nd December.—Got off at length, but not before midday, having at the last moment discovered that the boat—which had only been brought across the river from the other side the previous night—leaked. Then again when on the point of starting one of the crew was found to be suffering from leprosy or some disease akin to it. This meant reducing our crew to eleven, ten to paddle and one at the tiller behind the box in which I am supposed to sleep. Even thus the squash is appalling. The boat is piled high with all sorts of kit: the bottom of it is swimming in water, in which my large parcel of skins has to repose: the men have to sit on bags or horns, heads, etc.: a basket of live fowls gets trodden on at every moment, whilst I sit on the floor of the "box" amidst a heterogeneous collection of guns, cartridges, bedding, boxes and personal luggage.

To make matters worse, about every ten minutes we stick on a bank, and the entire crew has to get out and push. Just before sundown, we anchored to one bank, and after baling out the water left by a passing thunderstorm have gone off to spend the night at a tiny village of five or six huts that we marked about a hundred yards inland. The headman has turned out of his hut for me, and my retinue sleep outside.

3rd December.—I now begin to wish heartily that I had not been fool enough to sell my tent after reaching Tete. The fact was that I understood there was a room in the box at the stern of the boat to squeeze a 6-foot camp bed into, and it was not till we were on the point of departure that I discovered my error. Not wishing further delay I decided that as the bed would not go into the box, I would either sleep out on the bank, where possible at a village, or lie diagonally across the box on a mattress. In the former case I reckoned without the rain, and in the latter without the mosquitoes. As the hut that the headman lent me looked clean, I did not bother to have my bed made up, but just had a mattress and rug placed on the floor. In one sense I was in luck's way this night, for the roof had recently been thatched and none of the rain came through. But on the other hand I was bitten to death by every loathsome animal that crawls and flies, and found a huge scorpion a foot off my head in the morning. During the day we made fair progress though we had several times to lighten the boat of its entire human cargo in order to pull her off the shoals. Once we anchored during a sudden squall, that only lasted about fifteen minutes, but which necessitated a vast amount of baling afterwards. The squall was followed by a heavy thunderstorm and eventually in torrents of rain, we went ashore and sheltered for the night under an enormous overhanging rock. I forget to mention that to-day we saw numbers of hippopotamus in the river, besides a few crocodiles, one of which latter I shot. The hippo are not worth shooting at, for the boat being on the move all the time, and the hippo being too shy to come very near, one is not likely to make an accurate shot. On the other hand if one does give them a bullet in the brain, some hours elapse before they float, and by the time one has cut up the meat a whole day has gone by. Ever since there were stern wheelers on the Zambesi it has been the cruel custom to bombard these unfortunate animals from the decks whenever they put their heads out of water, whether there is any chance of recovering their bodies or not: hence their not unnatural shyness.

4th December.—For euphony's sake the tub in which I am dwelling at present is known as a "house boat." Suffice it to say that the house itself is so low that when kneeling on the floor one's head touches the roof. Ahead of us are the Lupata Georges where the river for some 30 or 40 miles flows through a narrow channel between walls of perpendicular rock, having in the dim ages of the past, cut its way thus through a chain of small mountains that here oppose its progress to the ocean. . . . . Later same day. We have come right through the gorge and are now in the open flat country beyond. An easy day for the crew with a six or seven knot stream coursing through the cleft in the hills. At the same time the man at the wheel had his work cut out to avoid sundry rocks, to say nothing of sandbanks, that had to be steered clear of.

5th December.—Last night presented every appearance of fine weather for a change, and about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, I decided to sleep on a clean grassy bank under the stars. Having got our fires going and having dined off a portion of spur winged goose that I had shot that afternoon, I retired shortly after dusk as the mosquitoes were becoming more than troublesome. At this time of year the weather is warm enough in the Zambesi Valley, and apart from rain I was in for a comfortable quiet night, on my camp bed and under a good mosquito net. I must have been asleep for perhaps an hour when my head boy woke me up to say that a thunderstorm was brewing, that half the crew had gone off to a village nearly a mile away and that the rest were anxious to follow. I replied that the others were to remain, that personally I should stay where I was and that a drop of rain on a warm night would do no one any harm. Half an hour later the storm broke overhead with a violence that is only possible in the tropics. In less than two minutes my blankets were sodden, the ground was flooded with water, and the remaining boys had fled into the darkness. Only my three personal servants were left. These by the way consisted of headman, cook, and "valet," and the three had been with me throughout my whole five months trip. At their urgent solicitation I now undertook to retire to the box on the barge, whilst they went off to get a shake down in the village. Wrapping myself up well in a soaking blanket—not for warmth but to keep out the swarms of mosquitoes, I huddled myself up in the hut as best I could. Neither door nor window would close within about an inch—both being of the sliding pattern—so it may be readily understood that, anchored as we were in a dense reed bed against the bank, there were not a few of these pestilent insects to avail themselves of the unexpected feast. Eventually I had recourse to a scheme that I had never before put into operation and hope never to again on a hot night. Being as I have already remarked, completely enveloped in a blanket, there remained my face to be dealt with. I accordingly cut a small hole in a bath towel to fit my nostrils and mouth, covered my head completely with it and thus lay till dawn. It is perhaps unnecessary to state that by daybreak my nose had assumed the dimensions of a pumpkin, and my lips were so swollen with bites that I could barely speak. Many times during the night I debated as to the advisability of going ashore again, but the fact of the night being inky black, my having no fires and no attendants, and its being a well known lion country effectually held my ardour in check.

Fortunately, however, it is not by these trifling discomforts that one remembers one's eastern travels. The morning broke fine, and before the sun was an hour on its journey across the heavens I was skinning a duck that I had just shot (and that was a new species to me) and I would hardly have exchanged places with anyone. Before sundown we, of course, had the usual storm followed by the usual baling, and everything was again in a filthy mess, though the morning sun had enabled me to spend an hour or two ashore and stretch my legs whilst things were being dried out.

6th December.—I have seldom indulged in such unfeigned and hearty laughter as I did last night. We camped near a village, the men under a solitary tree, I in the open. Just before midnight without any warning whatsoever the rain came down in sheets. We carried my bed to a newly built hut, not yet occupied, but found no grass thatch on the roof, only the skeleton bamboo structure. There were, however, plenty of large trusses of grass propped up against the side of a neighbouring hut, only awaiting willing—or unwilling—hands to convert themselves into a very comfortable roof.

The headman now came out of his dwelling and his were the antics that caused such immoderate laughter on my part. The noble fellow, seeing at a glance that speed was essential, had not even troubled to fling around his waist the usual rag, goatskin or string, but what was far more to the point had gathered up a lantern in one hand and a long whippy stick in the other. In the twinkling of an eye he had routed out a dozen other savages as stark naked as himself, and before one had time to turn round, the construction of the roof had begun. The rain was descending in a steady stream; black forms scurrying hither and thither with bundles of grass were glistening in the fitful glare of the lantern. Our gallant headman seemed ever in three places at once; the resounding thwacks as his stick continually descended on the shoulders of slow workers caused the still night air to re-echo; his own voice uplifted in one incessant cannonade of strange oaths, exhortations to put forward their best legs, and dire threats should they not do so, by no means lessened the turmoil; dogs howled; babies yelled, whilst afar off across the river a hyena contributed his weird tune to the discordant overture.

At about a quarter past twelve, by which time the chief's arm must have been weary from smiting and his throat hoarse from shouting, the roof was in order and I turned in. It had been quite one of the most amusing sights that I ever witnessed. Of course, long before the grass was on the roof my blankets were dripping, but there is little fear of feeling cold in these parts at this time of year, however wet you are. You will understand that the headman was supplying labour, grass, stick, noise and excitement quite gratuitously. I had not made any request for either one or the other. Of course, the whole thing was done for the present that he hoped to get in the morning. The much bethwacked individuals were his own village "pals," and no doubt shared with him the salt that I gave him before my departure at sunrise. It's a very shallow, but broad river, this Zambesi, mostly only three or four feet deep, often less, at this time of year. Flat grassy islands, reeds beds and sandbanks abound, and where the water looks deepest we frequently run aground. From the low level of the boat it presents very little appearance of being a river; apart from the Lupata Gorge one would imagine at any given moment one was floating in the centre of a vast lagoon.

7th December.—Good shelter last night for a change, an open sideless hut, but the roof was all right; however, there was hardly any rain. Here is an instance of the difficulty of obtaining information from a native. At about 5 P.M. yesterday, I asked if there was any game near enough to go after and return by sundown, i.e., about 6-15. Oh yes, there was; so I started off with some villagers. By 5-30 we had passed another village, and after wasting ten minutes picked up another guide to show us "where there was a herd of waterbuck." At about 6, when the sun was nearly down and we had almost an hour's walk back, let alone shooting, I again asked where the place was. The guide now gravely pointed to the foot of some hills at least ten miles away! Had I said nothing they would have gone on mutely until the middle of the night, probably thinking that the mad "white man" wanted to go there for some reason best known to himself, at such an hour!

The two common geese on this river, are the spur winged and the Egyptian. One seldom sees any other. Ducks are curiously conspicuous by their absence, though many of the flat grassy islands look perfectly adapted for their needs. The only ones I have seen up-to-date are a few of the white-masked tree duck species. The spur-winged geese are fairly tame, but take a large dose of very heavy shot to bring them to bag. One or two have even gone off with a hole through them made by a solid Mannlicher bullet. They are toughish for the pot, but always a welcome addition to the scanty fare indulged in by the crew.

At midday I found myself opposite a small Portuguese trading station, and went ashore to look up the owner. Eventually I remained to lunch with him, after which function we had a pleasant chat of a couple of hours' duration. By the way, the meal struck me as rather a severe tax on the digestive organs. Course after course—nearly all, I need hardly say, being the skinny village chicken in different guises—was brought on to the table by three small boys, who seemed never to stop running between the kitchen hut and the luncheon apartment. I kept tally up to about 10 and then lost count. As for the wines and spirits their name was legion, but beyond a whisky and soda (the first I had tasted for months with the exception of one other at Tete) I left them severely alone. My host told me that his country at home was in a parlous condition, and that the King's life, was not worth a moment's purchase. How truly he prophesied has sadly enough, but recently been proved. The weather now when one does happen to get a fine day is exceedingly hot. To-day I got out on to a sandbank to fetch a wounded goose, and being in socks had only gone 50 yards when I had to race to the water for all I was worth. Had there been another ten yards the soles of my feet would have been badly blistered. Niggers hardly seem to notice it. In the same way they can carry a hot plate in their hands that no white man could touch. We have passed to-day a stern wheeler steam boat endeavouring to reach Tete. This is the first boat that has come up the river since last July, and even now the attempt is unusually early owing to the rains having commenced somewhat previously.

8th December.—Last night I was able to sleep in peace under the twinkling stars; no clouds, no rain. Sometime or other during the night I woke up to the strains of a full Handel Festival Chorus of mosquitoes, serenading the outside of my net. There were sopranos, altos, tenors and basses. The only thing wanting was the organ, shortly afterwards supplied, several bars late, by the snoring of my boy. Joking apart they must have been in a solid phalanx all round the net. My experience of mosquitoes may be said to be fairly extensive, having met them in China, Burma, Ceylon, India, Sweden and Africa, but I can certainly not recall to memory any occasion upon which their joyful song was so harmoniously and so loudly blended. The native either lies all night in the smoke of a fire inside a hut that has no opening, whence he emerges in the morning with streaming eyes, or else covers himself mummy wise with a large piece of cloth if he can beg, borrow, or steal such an article. Those who possess neither huts nor cloth, lie as near a smoky fire as possible without getting burnt.

9th December.—I seem to write of nothing but the weather, however, its vagaries form sufficient news at present. Yesterday at midday, we had a heavy squall, and had to anchor the boat to avoid being driven on to some rocks. We shipped several small seas and also stove a fair sized hole below the waterline. Continual baling all the afternoon. At night a most terrific thunderstorm: as usual I lay all night in a sopping wet bed, and the boat in the morning was half full of water—with its contents floating. Altogether a heart-breaking business. Never have I seen such lightning as there was [illegible] night; the flashes were so continuous that for an hour [illegible] more it was light all the time. After the big shower had passed I walked over to the village, a few hundred yards distant, and though there was no moon and the sky was black with thunder clouds, each time I put my foot down, walking at an ordinary pace, I could see exactly where I put it. Thus you can form some idea as to how incessant the flashes were. Many of these reached from high in the heavens to the ground, and almost blinded one with their intensity. others ran about in various fantastic shapes all over the sky like titanic streaks of quicksilver, whilst many formed complete rings of various forms and sizes. Altogether as impressive a sight as I ever witnessed.

10th December.—Yesterday afternoon we passed the mouth of the Shire River, where it debouches into the Zambesi, so that now I am again on old ground, having ascended the Shire in July last on my way up to Nyasaland. Chinde is now but 120 miles away and we should do it in five days. Put my bed last night under the eaves of a nigger's hut. The whole place was a mud swamp from the recent rains, and all my belongings got into the most disgusting mess, but as at present I am living the life of a wild beast, it doesn't seem to matter much whether one's blankets are covered with mud or not! Yesterday the sun failed to show all day, the wind blew and ordinary rain fell, not to the usual accompaniment of thunder.

11th December.—The Shupanga Mission—a French one—might have been my headquarters last night, for these people are always most hospitable to strangers, but I preferred camping on an island opposite. The mission itself is of peculiar interest in that Mrs. Livingstone was buried there—one can see her grave from the river—but the bother of having to talk a strange language and the certainty that my own cook would give me a dinner more to my liking than theirs, decided me to make for a few ragged looking huts on the island. These proved to be the temporary abode of a few fishermen—they having to clear out when the river gets high and the island submerged.

To get to the huts from the water (a distance of about 600 yards), we had to wade through a sea of ankle deep slush, and soaking 10-foot high reeds. I lost my shoes in the mud, scratched my legs to shreds, and used much language unfit for publication. The rain now came on with redoubled fury, and—oh well, it was much the same as usual—I got fixed up under a little grass on some sticks driven into the ground. One becomes very philosophical about all these absurd discomforts. In a cold country, of course, such proceedings would be impossible.

However, much it pours and whatever the adverse conditions, my worthy cook always produces my dinner done to perfection; true, that my meals are of the simplest, but all the more credit to him in that he makes them appear so excellent. Upon opening the "box" on the boat this morning, I found the glass of the window pane simply black with mosquitoes trying to get out. I at once afforded them every facility—employing three strong men to open the window. This always has to be done both for opening and shutting door and window, as they are made to slide, but, of course, do not and have to be hanged alternately above and below. The operation takes about a quarter of an hour each time, and needless to say a sudden shower floods the box long before the deed is done. Well, to return to the mosquitoes, the ungrateful brutes, instead of departing when the window was at length open, swarmed upon my legs, which are completely bare from above the knee—the most comfortable way on the boat—and thus added another gray hair to my already whitening beard.

I regard the loss of several skins now as a certainty, and possibly a pair of elephant feet, but I shall at any rate have done my level best to bring them safely to the coast from 800 miles inland under the most adverse circumstances, and there the matter must rest. Anyhow, no rain can affect my tusks! As the crew are in the water about every half hour for the purpose of hauling the boat off a sandbank, their scantiness of attire is reduced to a fine art. A string is passed around the waist, and then a rag a quarter the width of a handkerchief is passed between the legs and hitched over the string fore and aft! Even thus most of them, when they get out carefully remove this garment, and appear as they were created, save for the string around their waist, and a large straw hat of their own making. At noon we had a clear sky and a hot sun, so were able to spread everything out on a bank to dry. All the matches had got sodden and were refusing to strike, but after an hour's lying in the sun outside their boxes, they showed wonderful signs of recuperation.

12th December.—No rain in the night. Dry ground: village right on the bank of the river: a clean little hut, newly constructed for Portuguese officials when on their tax collecting rounds, and altogether everything thoroughly comfortable. Also there was game in the neighbourhood, and I went out for an hour before sunset, but only succeeded in missing a reed buck. This will no doubt be the last shot I shall fire this trip except perhaps one or two at crocodiles, of which brutes by the way I have killed a few during the last day or two.

The men say we shall get to Chinde to-morrow, as the water is running down very fast. I sincerely hope we do as to-morrow is Friday, and both Saturday afternoon and Sunday are dies non for getting my papers through the Customs and the skins, etc., into my own hands. Until everything is signed in due form I have to deposit them under lock and key as there is more red tape about the Portuguese Customs here than even our own War Office can boast of.

13th December.—Yesterday was really a ludicrous day. At midday, had anybody been there, I might have been observed the solitary occupant of the boat —the men sheltering in a village on the bank—sitting in my box, mopping the floor, over which a stream was coursing, with all the handkerchiefs I could muster, and at intervals casting an eye on the other part of the boat, where many of my boxes were floating in more than a foot of water, whilst an elephant's foot was swimming about in a little pool of its own. Torrents fell for two hours. Finally we started again in merely ordinary rain, and then just before dusk I got out after a goose I had hit and which I at length secured after wading about up to my waist. Meanwhile all the boys were on the bank after another, up to their necks in black slime and mud; the cook much to the fore, and quite the keenest of the lot, but with ever an eye to business, collecting sodden firewood as he fell about in the slime. This bird we lost, and it now became necessary to camp somewhere for the night.

Landing on the shore—here tidal—we plunged through some black cream up to our knees for ten yards or so, and were then confronted by a perpendicular wall of slime eight feet high. This meant hands, knees and eyelids, digging into the filth to get up at all! At the top, unrecognizable as human beings, we found four tumbled down huts and a few natives, and here we spent a sodden night. The boys remain wonderfully cheery, no matter how unpleasant things are. Upon my soul, I don't think I should much care if I was a naked savage, with no possessions, but when I think of the trouble I've had in bringing my skins down to the coast, it really is somewhat annoying. All the sandbanks hereabouts are broadly marked with hippo tracks, showing that their nightly wanderings are considerable. The day time they invariably spend in the water. Rain all day.

14th December.—A slight touch of lumbago yesterday: gone to-day. 6 A.M.—10 A.M. a succession of mangrove swamps. Steady rain all the time. 10-30 A.M. sun appears. 11 A.M. Chinde sighted. 12-5 P.M. arrival, five minutes too late to purchase a packet of cigarettes. Everything shut till Monday. "What a nuisance," which being interpreted stands for. . . . . .

Fishing.

A DAY'S FISHING AT TAMPICO.

Steps on the stairs and a knock at the door. It is my friend the Colonel come to call me (a colonel by courtesy); he has never been connected with the regular army, although rumour affirms that in former times he had quite intimate relations with various of the irregular organizations that flourished in the republic, now, happily, dormant or extinct, due to the vigorous persecution of Don Porfirio, writes M. L. in the Mexican Herald. There was not room for them both, and the weakest had to go to the wall. "Get up," he says; "the pleasant chill of the salt sea breeze coming through the window, the muffled roll of the gentle surf, the morning gray chasing the darkness from the glassy ocean, the twittering of the beach birds as they flattered upon the sands, all call us from our beds. Let us get into the sea before the sun gets out of it, a plunge and then our coffee."

In light and airy costume we run across the sands and into the briny. A plunge through a roller, a race on the sand, another dip in the water and then back again to our coffee. The rosy blush of the storm-compelling clouds, whose purple masses edged with streaks of feathery silver and red gold are hanging in the east, promised to shade and defend us from the rays of a southern sun and the glare of a shimmering sea. "Give the impediments to the mozo," says the Colonel; "leave the sun umbrellas behind—we will not need them; those clouds will serve instead," and now along the beach past the "cantina," pavilion and bath-houses to the jetties.

"Do you notice the sand? How smooth it is! Millions of shells have been ground and polished by the breakers in its fabrication. Those bluish, irridescent little navigators that you see sailing on the waves are 'Portuguese men-of-war'—a pleasant combination of sailor and shellfish, who come out to sail on days like these. Don't handle them; they are very poisonous at times. Look at the gray alcatras with long bills and short legs as they come sailing over the waves but a few inches above the water, rising and falling with the billows; they are professional anglers, not amateurs like ourselves; and here are the jetties, when the northers blow; they are a streak of white foam on a dark-green sea. Millions of tons of stone were used in their construction. This beach where we now stand was once well out to sea, but the shifting sands have been held here by the dyke."

We go out into the jetties a little way to find a fishing place—the Colonel, his boy, the "mozo," and myself. Here is where the river ends and the sea begins, where man's work struggles with nature's for supremacy. To the right the ocean, to the left the river. In the background, the white beach and the whiter surf, while the gray stone wall that divides the salt water from the fresh serves to emphasize the ceaseless, restless roar of those foaming waters which it separates from the gentle ripples of the river. To the right green water, to the left brown; those waves come curling around from the capes of Florida and reefs of Yucatan; these brown waters fall in crystal raindrops on yonder mountains that form our western horizon, rolling through deep and gloomy canyons, over precipices, under mighty trees, past plantations of cane and orchards of oranges, forests of palm, by Indian villages, until at last this rocky dyke alone separates them from their final home—the sea.

There is a current from the north, and when it strikes the jetties it curves out to sea. A few yards beyond the surf, where the waves roll, but do not break, is the place to try our luck. Two lines in the sea and one in the river. To suit all piscatorial tastes we bait one hook with a piece of fish and the other two with fresh shrimp and with a swing of the sinker throw the line about thirty yards into the eddy. It is well to have some slack in case of hooking something large. This surf fishing is worse than buying lottery tickets; it may be a little fish with a big mouth or a big fish with a little mouth. There are all kinds and sizes here. I get a bite at last and a big one, too; how the rigid line cuts the water like a wire. I pull him in and let him go play with him and give him slack. That was a pretty leap but it was his last. He is tired now I bring him in—a twenty-pound robalo. And now; the Colonel is struggling with a monster, but he is out of luck; his line is snarled and caught around a rock and will be broken with the next rush. "Now he is gone, Colonel, with hooks, sinkers and all. Don't mourn his loss; be a philosophic, if not a scientific, angler." But it is an aggravation when the victim marked for sacrifice bids us adieu, after showing his fan-like tail and burly shoulders above the water, that we may know we have lost. After about ninety minutes of fishing, in which we caught above one hundred pounds of fish of all kinds and sizes, we left the jetties and walked along the river bank to the pilot wharf to take our canoes. As we were standing on the little dock awaiting our boats—for we were to use two—an Indian with a basket walked out to us, sat down and took out his fishing lines. As he looked a bit different from the other people hanging around, I began a conversation by asking if he were a Tampico man. "No, amo" (boss), he said, "I am a Mexican" (meaning a City of Mexico man). "I heard that this was a good place and so ran away from the hunger there and came here."

"How much is the fare?" I asked.

"I don't know, as I walked it." (It is about 500 miles the way that he must have come.)

"What are you working at?"

"Nothing; no one but 'tarugos' (chumps) work here."

"Well, how do you make a living?" said I, getting interested. He stood up and pointed to the woods back of us: "Those woods are full of fruit, and this river of fish; any tree will do to sleep under; the sun keeps me warm; I pay no rent and feel no hunger." He then sat down and went to fishing. "A queer country this," thought I, "where a man will walk 500 miles to get a good place to loaf."

The boats provided by the Colonel were one a stiff and the other a dugout canoe made from the trunk of the "ceiba" tree. My crew was an Indian paddler who officiated also as captain. The canoe was about 20 feet long and 20 inches wide, painted blue outside and green within. The paddler sat in the stern and I took my seat amidships. My line was braided linen about 600 feet long, of which 450 feet I coiled inside of the canoe as slack in case something big was hooked, for tarpoon, jew-fish, shark and cruel (a large species of the jack family weighing up to sixty pounds) are plentiful in the river.

We went up the river with the tide on the south bank, but at first the fish did not seem inclined to bite, and my sailor man told, to pass the time, a number of stories. He said to me: "You catch fish, boss, or try to catch them, with a hook and line, but there was once an 'Americano' here who used only 'hot bricks.'"

"How is that?" said I; "fish will not bite on bricks."

"Yes, they will, if you fix them right. When the jetties were being built and the piling run out into the sea to support the track the sharks were very plentiful in the river, and if any one fell into the water he was almost sure to be eaten. They became so tame that whatever edible was thrown or fell from the tugboats or pile-drivers was at once picked up and eaten. The captain in charge of the work heated a brick one day until it was almost red hot and wrapped it up in cloth full of grease. He then threw the bundle to a 14-foot shark that was swimming by. The palatable morsel was swallowed at once by the shark. When the brick had burned through its covering and began burning through the intestine of the shark he jumped and plunged in all kinds of ways (brinco by salto de muchas maneras). The boss called it his aquatic circus, but it was the last performance of the shark."

On the south bank of the river are extensive pastures where hundreds of cattle were feeding waiting shipment to Cuba and Yucatan. These cattle are from the para grass pastures of the foothill country. One large steamer, already loaded and ready for sea was waiting for a pilot. I noticed that she was rocking back and forth, though the river was perfectly smooth. My Indian told me that cattle ships frequently do so. If anything started them rolling the movement of the cattle on board would keep them going indefinitely.

Talking with my Indian I had almost forgotten that I was fishing, when suddenly my line was jerked from my hand, and about one hundred and fifty feet astern I saw a silvery fish jump into the air. He looked six feet long and seemed to jump twice his length out of the water. A tarpon, the king of brackish waters. Up into the air he goes again, his silvery scales shining in the sun. He means to keep it up until he is dead or free. "Liberty or death" is his motto. I keep a steady strain on the line, giving him slack or pulling him in with the hope of tiring. Now he sulks at the bottom of the river. I pull him gently toward me, when he makes another rush; but it is his last; he is tired now. I pulled him to the boat's side for the Indian to gaff. Though it seems but a short time in telling, forty minutes were spent in his execution. My Indian says he is not a large one and will weigh about three arrobas and a half (about ninety pounds). He does not look as large alongside the boat as he did when first jumping and plunging. My Indian tells me that these fish have been caught 7 feet 5 inches in length and weighing 215 pounds. If the large ones are as active in proportion to their size as this one it must be a hard half-day's work to capture one. He is too big to take into the canoe, so we will tow him alongside. Now we are in front of the astillero (ship repair yard), and the Colonel, who has come up astern, suggests that we anchor just below the shipyard, out from the rocky point the river bends around. We anchored a short distance astern of a small river steamer that was slowly rotting at its moorings. The water was about fifteen feet deep inshore from us, but outside there was a deep pool, and there we threw our lines; the current ran about two miles an hour and only light sinkers were necessary. For the first ten or fifteen minutes we caught nothing, but at last the Colonel's boy threw into the boat two pargitos about a pound and a half each. For the next quarter of an hour we were all landing fish as fast as we could, until thirty or forty had been caught; then they stopped biting. The pargito is a fish weighing from one to five pounds, of dark colour above and white below. In shape they are very similar to black bass and make a good fight when hooked. After waiting a few minutes we concluded to go to Pueblo Viejo (the old town). The tide was with us and we drifted and paddled up the river and turned into the estero, about one hundred yards wide at its mouth. This must have been a great place for oysters once; the banks were a mass of shells.

Those poles driven V-shaped are fish traps and supply Tampico market with shrimp and river fish as they come from the lake with the tide. This is one of the minor highways of commerce. Do you notice the canoes laden with corn, fruit, beans and fish that are constantly passing us? That canoe seems to have a family party abroad. The lady in the stern with the sun umbrella over her head and sandalshod feet on the gunwale evidently considers her complexion of the first importance, even if it is chocolate-coloured. I am a little hungry and thirsty. Shall we go up to that palm-leaf house and ask for their hospitality. It has an inviting look. At least the doors are wide open and after this sun on the water the shade of its roof will be comfortable.

We left our canoe on the bank and went up to the house to ask for a drink and a light lunch. The ladies of the family came to the fence to welcome us, while two of the young gentlemen stood by the gate to usher us in. The patriarch and founder of the settlement stood by himself in placed dignity watching the arrival of the strangers. Our hosts were pleasant people, with black eyes, shining teeth, cheery smile and ample person whose round arms and well developed busts suggested the good things of this life taken otium cum dignitate. We passed a pleasant hour in their company listening to the tales of sharks, smugglers, floods and forests sandwiched in between the courses of shrimp salad, fried bananas and quesadillas. The old gentlemen told us what he had done and the young men what they hoped to do.

Pueblo Viejo, situated at the junction of lake and river, facing the west, is a characteristic little place. Its long street parallel with the shore of the lake, the bamboo and palm houses on either side surrounded by gardens and orchards of oranges, mangoes and plantains, its pair of of country stores, where everything from dried shrimp to green bananas can be purchased, the canoes drawn under the sheds at the beach, the languid, lazy, loafing Indians, the small boys whose black skin and white teeth show to advantage under their undress uniform of board straw hat and escapulario.

Down the estero with the wind and current to the mouth of the Tamesi and into the river, to paddle and sail and fish for a few hours among the many tree-covered islands that divide the river into a labyrinth of waterways, will be our afternoon's diversion, and then a moonlight ride back again with the tide. So let's be going and get the tarpon line ready. It will take us but a few minutes to run through the estero, with the wind and the current in our favour.

With this wind with us we'll put up a sail and you'll see what fine sea craft these canoes are. That schooner-rigged affair that is overhauling us so fast is loaded with a family, their goods and chattels, homeward bound. You notice they have hoisted a red blanket as a foresail. The sheets (from the same bed, no doubt) make a very fair mainsail.

"Hoist the mainsail, you copper-coloured son of Neptune, and get her under way. This lovely afternoon must not be wasted." This isn't bad, sitting in the shade of the sail and sniffing the sea breeze tempered by the odour of the forest.

We are at the bridge at last. Let's tie up and take a rest. The bridge is over the Tamesi, the Panuco bending away to the southwest, while the Tamesi extends to the north to lose itself in the labyrinth of lakes. There are hundreds of miles of navigation for the canoeist on these waters, where hunting and fishing are to be found in their greatest perfection. The sun is down and the moon is up. The wind has dropped to a gentle breeze. We will drift down with the tide and call it a day's fishing.

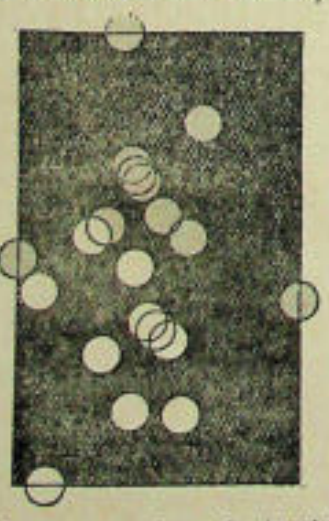
Shooting.

A NEW LANCASTER EXPRESS RIFLE.

Mr. Charles Lancaster, who introduced in England the Canadian Ross rifle, has recently brought out a sporting pattern magazine ·280 with Lancaster rifling, which has been constructed in Sir Charles Ross's factory to take the new ·280 Ross-Eley cartridge. This rifle having been very favourably received, Mr. Lancaster has just introduced a falling block pattern ·280 single rifle, of his own manufacture, bored and chambered for the same ammunition.

The Ross-Eley cartridge gives the extraordinarily high velocity of something over 3,000 f.s., the propellant used being the New Explosives Co.'s "Neonite" a gelatinized gun-cotton powder containing no nitro-glycerine. There are four weights of bullet used with the cartridge, 140, 150, 160 and 180 grains respectively. Two of these have the Spitzer type of sharp point and two have hollow noses. The magazine pattern of rifle is equipped with the Ross straight-pull bolt, but with its short force-end and good finish shows no indication of military design. The four weights of bullets render it suitable for a great variety of game, both hard and soft skinned. It handles extremely well, its cost is moderate, and all the details of its construction are thoroughly sound and workmanlike.

With the Lancaster falling-block single-loader the barrel used is oval-bored in the manner so long associated with Mr. Lancaster's name. The cartridge being of the rimless type, an ingenious and simple pattern of spring-actuated extractor has been devised to serve the double purpose of withdrawing the spent case from the chamber and also of holding up the cartridge to the striker. This latter is a consideration of some importance, as there are marked disadvantages in allowing the cartridge to be supported, as is so often the case with rimless cartridges, by the bottle-necked formation of the chamber just behind the bullet. The falling-block breech action, which might perhaps be designated a sliding-block to distinguish it from falling-blocks of the Martini and similar character, is of course one of the very strongest breech closures that has ever been devised. With the oval-bore rifling the difficulties of cleaning are of course reduced to a minimum and the wearing qualities of the barrel are correspondingly enhanced. This should be a factor well worth consideration in view of the durability of the weapon, having regard to the abnormally high velocity secured with the ·280 Ross-Eley cartridge which must necessarily affect the rifling. At all sporting ranges, which we may take to lie within an extreme distance of 300 yards, the flatness of the trajectory is such that it seems practically to make no difference whatever in the elevation whether the bullet used be of the heavy or the light weight. The appended diagram affords the best possible indication of this valuable quality.



There is shown a series of twenty consecutive shots, ten with the 140 grain and ten with the 160 grain bullet, at 100 yards. The shaded bullet holes represent the diagram made with the 160 grain bullets, while the plain ones represent the grouping of the 140 grain bullets. The diagram is two-thirds the size of the original, and it will be noticed that the two groups actually intermingle at the range of 100 yards. This indicates, of course, that the weight of bullet has not, to any appreciable extent, altered the configuration of the group. It is further found, on shooting the rifle, that at any range up to 300 yards the same elevation serves, so that the effect of errors due to misjudgment of distance is minimised. With a limit of effective range of over 1,000 yards, the rise and fall between 100 and 300 yards is barely noticeable, the flatness of the whole trajectory being of course an attribute of the ultra-high velocity obtained. An interesting experiment conducted when the London Field tested this rifle showed the enormous power of the ·280 bullet. It was fired at an armour plate and produced a ¼ inch cavity in the solid metal, projections round the crater thus formed being raised fully a ¼ inch above the surface of the plate. Being exceptionally pleasant to use, and producing recoil of a very slight character, the Lancaster ·280 oval-bore Express seems to combine all the qualities most sought for in weapons of this class. The calibre is, of course, small, and the penetration enormous, so that for soft skinned light animals the use of open fronted instead of pointed bullets seems to be indicated. At the same time, Sir Charles Ross has himself found that with the ·280 cartridge "stopping power" much in excess of what one is accustomed to with small bores is developed. At the present time our experience of the effect of comparatively light projectiles, leaving the muzzle at a velocity of 3,047 f.s., is necessarily very limited and it may well be that an "explosive" effect on animal tissues might under certain circumstances be produced. This so called "explosive" effect is of course entirely distinct from expansion, depending for its characteristics upon imparting to the immediate object struck some portion of its own velocity, so that a shattering or explosive effect is produced upon the surrounding tissues. With increased weight of bullet velocity must be correspondingly decreased, and what is gained in stopping power by the extra weight may therefore conceivably be lost in "explosive effect." That the difference in velocity is not very great is, however, shown clearly enough by the fact that within all sporting ranges the heavy and the light bullets together will hold quite a decent group, while at 100 yards there is barely a noticeable difference between them.

TWO GOOD BLACKBUCK TROPHIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I send you measurements of two blackbuck heads in my possession, as they are better than some mentioned in your "Shikar Book." The first is 24 inches long with a spread of 20½ inches and was obtained last August. The second is 23½ inches with a spread of only 16 inches and was shot in December last year. Both heads were secured in the Mainpuri District and their lengths can be authenticated at any time.

Also I shall feel obliged if any of you, readers will kindly let me know whether Pterocles arenarius is the scientific name for the bird known to sportsmen as the "Imperial Grouse." I cannot find the latter name used for any of this family in the reference books at hand.

A SPOTTED TSINE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Yesterday I shot a bull which differs from the usual "tsine bull," in that his skin is spotted with white. His horns are similar, evidently a very old bull. Generally speaking the skin is very dark-brown, bay on shoulders and rump, white spotted all over, spot about the size of a 2 anna piece, upper legs, neck and face almost black (with white spots), white stockings. The above was shot in the Wong forest, Siam, I might say that for a long time past there have been reports of "spotted cattle" having been seen in this forest. I should be obliged if you or any of your readers will let me know if "tsine" are sometimes spotted.

A CURIOUS DEER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—A native brought in a small deer yesterday, which does not answer to the description of either the hog deer or mouse deer. If either you or any of your correspondents can recognise it from its description, I shall be much obliged if they will tell me what it is. It was shot about 17 degrees North in the South-West of Siam. Size about the same, but lighter than a hare. Sex, male; hornless; head, dark-brown on top; eyes, large and brown; ears, small. Two upper tusks about ½ inch long. Appearance of the whole head like a mouse's. No hollows under the eyes. Back, brown, and top of neck dark-brown. Sides, and sides of neck and outsides of legs, yellow. Chin, stomach, and inside legs, all white. Tail about 2½ inches; brown on top, white under. From back of lower jaw to back of chest, triangular brown mark (with white centre) on the white throat and chest, and from base of this triangle a brown streak down middle of the stomach terminating in yellow patch about half way. The whole appearance is like that of a barking deer with a rat's (or mouse's) head.

GRAY'S PATENT HOOF PADS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—In common no doubt with many of your readers, my attention was arrested the other day by the paragraph among your Sporting Notes, relating to the new safety and detachable hoof pads introduced by Mr Gray. They appear to me to be the very thing for India and invite a trial; but alas, Mr. Editor, you have not told us where they may be procured and a diligent search through your advertisement pages has been barren of result!

RIFLES FOR THE ROSS-ELEY CARTRIDGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Mr. Charles Lancaster makes both a falling-block model and a magazine rifle for the new high velocity Ross-Eley ammunition. The magazine pattern is the well-known Ross straight-pull rifle adopted by the Canadian Government.

The prices of the ·280 falling-block model vary from £18 to £25: the magazine sporting pattern costs from £15 to £20. ·280 Ross-Eley cartridges cost twenty-four shillings a hundred, if loaded with 140 or 160 grain hollow-pointed bullets; twenty-five shillings, when loaded with the 150 or 180 grain sharp-pointed bullets.

The powder charges are 57 grains of Neonite with the heavier types of bullets; 58 grains of the same powder with the light patterns. Trajectories over sporting ranges, i.e., up to 300 yards, are identical with all loads, and one fixed backsight serves the sportsman for all ordinary distances. The smokeless powder employed is made by the New Explosives Company, and is a black coloured gelatinised compound in the form of flat squares. Black-lead enters into the composition and acts as a lubricant. There is no nitro-glycerine in Neonite; it is a simple guncotton powder. As to how it behaves in hot climates, I have no data at present, but in all modern powders the question of stability and non-sensitiveness to climatic changes is carefully kept in view, and I not not therefore think that there would be much fear of an Indian hot weather having any great effect on Ross-Eley ammunition.

The sharp-pointed bullets are of the usual Spitzer type; the taper form point to shoulder being long and easy.

Mr. Lancaster has adopted his oval method of rifling for the new weapon, and as far as I can [illegible] there is no difficulty in cleaning and no trouble from metallic fouling. A fixed sight, preferably a Lyman, set for 250 yards, would serve for all ordinary work. With this elevation the bullet would be a little over four inches LOW at 300 yards, and not more than 4 inches HIGH at any of the shorter ranges.

RIFLE.

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High-Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy. Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

VELOCITY 2,150 F. S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 20th March 1908.

THE TURF.

HOOTON PARK.

THE first touch of spring in the air, and the sun shining with considerable warmth, visitors to this pretty Cheshire venue experienced the most enjoyable conditions on the 13th instant. The sport did not reach quite that standard of excellence that has before now characterised the Spring Meeting here, though with all the winners extremely well supported backers found no grounds for complaining. The going has never been in better order, and the manner in which Rubio and Let Go the Painter sweated before going out for the Great Cheshire Steeplechase attested to the mildness of the atmosphere. A dead heat; length and half away. Boniface was third. Stakes divided.

The temperature was decidedly wintry for the concluding stage of this fixture, a chill of wind sweeping the course, to the general discomfort of a representative attendance. The sport, however, showed little or no improvement upon that of Friday. Four of the six winners on Saturday were horses trained south of the Trent. Frank Hartigan was responsible for two of the winners in the moderate Happy Hampton—thought by many exceedingly lucky to have beaten Yeoman—and Brookwood. On the latter "Tich" Mason brought his winning aggregate of mounts to 50, and incidentally the success of the Weyhill horse did the race fund a turn, inasmuch as he was one of the two competitors entered to be sold in the event of his winning, the firm, generous to a degree in distributing their prize money, thus qualifying for a share in the surplus. Details:—

HURST PARK.

LOVERS of cross-country sport evidently intend to make the most of the swiftly-waning season, judging by the large and representative attendance on old Molesey Hurst on Saturday, the enclosures being crowded and the public mustering in force on the course and at the big jumps, as is their wont here and at Kempton. Extra excitement was afforded by the catching fire of one of three stacks of hay in the stable enclosure which abuts on the road, but it was satisfactory to note how promptly the brigade reached the scene of action. With such brilliant sunshine the coldish wind was not noticeable until sundown, and then the temperature quickly dropped, and a slight fog seemed to presage snow. The going was in splendid order, and though sport was not of a particularly high standard, it was interesting and fields panned out pretty well. Details:—

THE INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES

BY E. C. STUART BAKER, B. A. S., M. B. O. U.

Since Messrs. Hume and Marshall published their work on the "Game Birds of India" (1879-80), now, and long since, out of print, and which, when a copy is offered for sale, realises a considerable advance on the published price, no work has appeared on the Indian Ducks with coloured plates.

The Bombay Natural History Society are now preparing and reprinting Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's articles on this attractive group of birds, which have appeared from time to time during the past ten years in their "Journal."

The book will form a handsome volume of over 300 pages of text, the same having been revised throughout by the Author, and will contain all the available information up to the time of going to press.

The Thirty Coloured Plates will be reproduced by chromolithography, under the supervision of the well-known bird-artist Mr. Henrik Grönvold.

The binding of the book will be in half-morocco, gilt top, with the plates guarded, and will form a very desirable addition to the library of the naturalist or sportsman.

The edition will be limited to 1,100 copies.

Fourth Edition. One Hundred and Eighty Illustrations.

Super-Royal 8vo., cloth gilt. 338 pages. Rs. 18-6. Reduced Rs. 12-4.

GAME, SHORE, AND WATER BIRDS OF INDIA

With additional reference to their allied species in other parts of the World.

By COL. A. LE MESSURIER, C. I. E., F. Z. S., F. G. S., LATE ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Author of "Kandahar in 1879." From "London to Bokhara," and "A Ride through Persia."

Nature.—"Colonel Le Messurier writes as a field naturalist for field naturalists and sportsmen without any great pretensions to scientific knowledge, but there is no doubt that all naturalists will gain useful hints from this volume which is profusely illustrated with wood-cuts giving the characteristic features of most of the species."

Knowledge.—"Compact in form, excellent in method and arrangement, and as far as we have been able to test it, rigidly accurate in details. Colonel Le Messurier's book should become the vade mecum of every sportsman and naturalist whom duty or pleasure may compel to visit India."

Demy 8vo., cloth. Rs. 6-6.

"MODERN SPORTING GUNNERY."

BY HENRY SHARP.

The author is a sportsman of large practical experience who has written many books on game shooting. Thinking, however, that most shooting men would welcome a book which gave them in an intelligible form more technical information about their weapons and ammunition, two years ago he secured the entrée to the gun-works of a well-known firm, and this fine volume of 526 pages is the result. In it he enters with great detail into the construction of all kinds of shot-guns and rifles and into the question of their loads and ammunition, noting all the latest inventions. There are chapters on game and wildfowl shooting in the British Isles, and on shooting abroad, in which the author gives lists of the game obtainable in different places with notes on the best weapons and ammunition to use, and on the duties to be paid. The Duchess of Bedford contributes a chapter on "Ladies in the Field." Copiously illustrated.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

IRELAND vs. SCOTLAND.—Notwithstanding that the Ireland vs. Wales Rugby match at Belfast last Saturday, drew quite 50 per cent. of the football following out of Dublin, and that the Ireland vs. England hockey match, also decided in Dublin on Saturday, claimed its quota of enthusiasts, there was an attendance of very respectable dimensions at the Association attraction. The Bohemian Club venue was not, however, taxed to anything like its full capacity. It was generally reckoned that Ireland held a chance to beat Scotland, and thus initiate a more hopeful era, but she failed lamentably to reduce the long lead of 21 successes which Scotland had run up. It is not too much to say that the Irish eleven played a most spiritless game, and there was a decided lack of dash about the forwards. Seldom has such a faint-hearted effort been displayed, and there was an absence of enthusiasm among the spectators which gave the game a solemnity which is not characteristic of internationals in Ireland. Of the losers' display few words are needed. Going through their paces with a beaten team, it is difficult to single out any man for individual recognition, and as to the Scottish players, each did a man's work, and the combination as a whole was immensely superior to Ireland at all periods of the game.

The turf was soft and greasy, and the skies wore a frowning aspect, but the ever-threatening downpour fortunately held off. Thomson won the toss for Scotland, and Andrews started the game. There was a promise about the opening effort of the home forwards, but the rally was only a flash in the pan, for the Scotsmen, working together, literally carried all before them, and McColl placing to Quinn, the latter easily scored. Continuing the pressure, Scotland severely taxed the Irish defence, and Scott time and again covered up many weaknesses. Young on the left burst away, but this time O'Hagan let the team down. Once more Scotland attacked, and with a persistency which was almost monotonous. Had it not been for a few of those brightening interludes when the Irishmen took heart of grace the game would have been deadly dull. Craig clearing, Ireland forced matters, and Connor steering his way nicely sent to Young. The latter beat the opposition, and Andrews receiving from him put in a well directed shot, which Rennie cleared. The Irish right wing was at fault subsequently, and after some work in midfield, Galt, the Scottish left half, netted for Scotland well out of Scott's reach. Half-time:—Scotland, 2 goals; Ireland, 0 goal.

Quinn restarted, and at once the Scotsmen got into their stride. They were repulsed, and Ireland raised hopes among her supporters of better things to come when Blair centred right in front of goal, but his effort was frustrated. The Irishmen had practically shot their bolt, and were powerless to combat the Scottish dash. For a time the home defence held out bravely, but Quinn had a free area when the ball was placed to him, and eight minutes from the restart he scored. At short intervals Quinn added the fourth and fifth. Result:—Scotland, 5 goals; Ireland, 0 goal.

ENGLAND vs. WALES.—At Wrexham on Monday the 16th instant, England beat Wales by 7—1, but while there was no fluke about the victory, Wales have good cause to complain of the way in which Fate frowned upon them. Neither side turned out as advertised, H. Bailey (Leicester Fosse) keeping goal for England in place of Hardy (injured), while Matthews (Chester) took the place of Lot Jones in the Welsh team. There was a large attendance in spite of the inclement weather, but the onlookers must have been disappointed at the way matters went, for England were always masters of the situation, and the forwards got together so quickly that goals were only a question of time.

Unfortunately, at the end of fifteen minutes, Roose, who had done fine work, came into collision with Hilsdon, and had to leave the field, Morris dropping into the goal. Wales were almost constantly on the defensive, and in eighteen minutes Woodward cleverly headed through a corner kick by Rutherford, Roose returned, but had immediately to retire again, and he was quickly followed by Hughes, who was indisposed.

With only nine men, Wales were at tremendous disadvantage, and the brilliant passing of the English forwards constantly had the opposing defence in difficulties. Windridge scored while Roose was still in goal, and Wedlock and Hilsdon added further points. Interval:—England, 4 goals; Wales, 0 goals.

The English Selection Committee consented to Davies (Aston Wanderers) keeping goal in the second half for Wales, and he frequently saved his side. The visitors were in great form, and play centred in the Welsh half, Lintott completely holding Meredith. In seventeen minutes Hilsdon headed past Davies from Rutherford's centre, and Wales then made strong but unsuccessful efforts to reduce the adverse score. England were more successful, Woodward scoring with a smashing shot, and a few minutes later he netted the seventh goal. Davies defeated Bailey just on time. Result:—England, 7 goals. Wales, 1 goal.

RUGBY RULES.

WALES vs. IRELAND.—Wales won the triple crown handsomely by defeating Ireland at Belfast on Saturday by one goal and two tries to one goal. The game took place on the Royal Ulster Society's fine enclosure at Balmoral on the 16th instant, which, despite heavy rain overnight, was in fine order—and attracted a crowd of sixteen thousand.

Wales opened very strongly, and for twenty minutes were all over the Irishmen, whose forwards could not obtain possession in the scrums. Owen opened up the game splendidly, and after twenty minutes Williams, who had previously claimed a try which was disallowed, ran in, and, swerving beautifully, beat the Irish defence. Winfield had no difficulty in landing the extra points.

Ten minutes before the interval the Irish backs handled for the first time, and after Parke had crossed the line, Aston was given a try, and Parke, kicking a great goal, made the scores even. Ireland was distinctly lucky to be on level terms at the interval. The game underwent a very curious change in the second half. The Irish forwards improved beyond measure, and held the game until within seven minutes from the end when the Welshmen made a great effort, and Owen engineered two scores beautifully. He sent the ball on different sides of the scrum on each occasion, and it travelled to the wing, letting first Gibbs and then Williams in for tries, which Winfield did not convert.

Wales thus won comfortably, although ten minutes before time a draw or a defeat seemed in store for them.

HOCKEY.

ENGLAND vs. IRELAND.—As several changes took place in the original constitution of the English team against Ireland at Dublin, neither J. Y. Robinson, H. R. Jordan, nor C. W. Marshall being available, it was considered that Ireland might have a reasonable chance of securing a victory. Yet, although the game was played on a veritable quagmire through the recent heavy rains, the Irishmen were soundly beaten by 4—0.

Stanley Shoveller, who is the greatest centre forward ever produced, was instrumental in hitting the first three goals, two in the first half, by which margin England led at the interval, and a third as the result of a penalty corner. Gerald Logan's fourth goal was a real beauty, and went into the net like greased lightning.

The Irish defence in goal and at back was often brilliant, Holmes and the two brothers Petersen excelling. There was, however, a manifest weakness among the halves, Graham at centre being by far the best. The Irish wings were well held by the clever spoiling work of Burns and Noble, while Page thoroughly shadowed C. C. Gotto, the brilliant Irish centre. Ireland ought to have perhaps scored on at least two occasions, as Gotto missed a couple of easy chances, while McWilliam also missed a fine opening.

England deservedly won without question, and the brilliancy of their defence was a feature of the match. Wood was little employed in goal. Freeman and Baillon accounting for the Irish attack in superb style. Stanley Shoveller was the pick of the English forwards, and led his attack in his usual inimitable manner. His first goal was one only to be expected from such a strategist as the Hampstead man, being a single-handed effort combined with a beautiful piece of dribbling. Allowing for the state of the turf, the English combination was especially smart, and only the remarkable resistance offered by the brothers Petersen, Holmes, and Graham saved Ireland from a much heavier reverse. The Irish forwards were terribly disappointing, though the half-back display of the English halves easily explained the weakness of the wing work, as E. W. Page never permitted Gotto to get many chances of distinguishing himself.

GOLF.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SOCIETY.—On the Royal Worlington and Newmarket Club's course, on Saturday, the 16th instant, Cambridge University played their last trial match prior to the inter-'Varsity contest. They opposed the Oxford and Cambridge Society, and, showing exceedingly good form, won on the day's play by 5½ matches to 3½. This was their first victory of the term. Mr. V. C. Longstaffe, the Cambridge captain, beat Mr. R. Darwin, an ex-captain of the 'Varsity, by 2 and 1; while Mr. C. B. Barry beat Mr. G. Hoffmann, another ex-captain, by 1 hole. Mr. J. Bruce Kerr, who beat Mr. E. S. Ulvat, was putting wonderfully. He took only one put on each of nine greens. The finest golf was seen in the afternoon, when in the four-ball foursomes Mr. Longstaffe and Mr. R. Hammond Chambers, with a best-ball score of 72, beat Mr. H. D. Gillies and Mr. Hoffmann. Details are appended:

INTERNATIONAL TOURNAMENT.—In the first important professional golf tournament of 1908, held yesterday on the course at Cagnes, eight miles from Nice, the success of the French golfers, which had been so pronounced a feature of last year's play, received a check. The man to administer it was Harry Vardon, who, playing with all his old-time brilliancy, won the 36 holes stroke competition and the first prize of 1,000f., with rounds of 72 and 71, total 143. Four strokes in the rear came the champion, Arnaud Massy, with 73 and 74, total 147; while for third place, a Frenchman, Jean Gassiat, 77 and 71, and a Britisher, James Braid, 73 and 75, tied at 148. J. H. Taylor was fifth with two 75's, and B. S. Callaway, an Isle of Wight man, now professional at Cannes, sixth with 83 and 77; while, for seventh place, A. Covington, the local professional, and Baptiste Bombouidac (who, like Massy and Gassiat, hails from Biarritz) tied at 164. Massy secured the second prize of 500f., and Braid and Gassiat divided the third prize of 250f. Gassiat also shared with Vardon the special prize of 125f. for the best single round.

Vardon reached the turn in the morning in 37, and played wonderful golf on the homeward journey. Three perfect shots took him on to the tenth green, and he was down in 5, and having nothing higher than a 4 during the remainder of the round, he recorded 72, which gave him the lead.

Braid, after playing faultless golf for an outward half of 36, pulled out of bounds at the tenth, and registered a 7. Massy, out in 38, drove into the stones at this hole, and, having to lift and lose, also required a 7, so that this figure was common to three of the leading players at the hole in question. Massy and Braid each totalled 73, Taylor, who played steadily, but not brilliantly, coming next with 75.

In the afternoon Vardon placed the issue practically beyond doubt by going out in 34. Gassiat had the same scores, and, curiously enough, he equalled Vardon's homeward half of 37. Both men played splendid golf, and, but for Gassiat's breakdown at the tenth hole in the first round, another triumph for France would probably have been chronicled. Massy showed good form in the long game in the afternoon, but his putting was weak. Braid went out in 36, but failed near the end, a 6 at the sixteenth, a par 4 hole, being among his misfortunes.

The scores are appended:—

MILITARY CHAMPIONSHIP FINALS.—This more than usually interesting competition was brought to a brilliant conclusion on Saturday at Princes' Club. The contest was won by the 1st Life Guards, as will be seen from the details that follow; but they had undoubtedly the best of the luck and many present thought the better pair lost.

As the holders the 2nd Batt. Highland Light Infantry were not represented this year, the final round carries with it the championship. Accordingly the Guards hold the cup for a year. Details:—

1st Life Guards (Mr. J. J. Astor and Lord Somers) beat 4th Batt. Rifle Brigade (Capt. S. E. Holland and Hon. H. C. O. Prittie) by 4 games to 2; 83 aces to 54. Scores:—15—5, 9—15, 15—1, 18—16, 11—15, 15—2.

1st Game.—The Guards won the spin and Somers scored an ace, Mr. Prittie at the next hand equalising. Capt. Holland failed, and then Lord Somers went from 2—1 to 10—1. The Riflemen each scored a couple before letting in Mr. Astor, who went to game.

2nd Game.—The old Etonian only added a single, the like coming from Mr. Prittie's following hand. Then with good service Capt. Holland went to 11—1 with a sequence of ten. Mr. Astor replied with three, and small and unproductive innings were the order until the Riflemen reached "game ball—five." Lord Somers scored a run of five, but Mr. Prittie made the necessary ace.

3rd Game.—The latter did not add, and then, while the Riflemen had a barren hand apiece, the Guards reached 7—love. Capt. Hollond followed with the only ace scored by his side in the game, for after Lord Somers had made one, Mr. Astor ran out, the final point being gained at the end of a tremendous rally.

4th Game.—Mr. Astor put on a couple, and so made his full sequence nine, but Mr. Prittie with nine established a good advantage. In the next five hands the only score was an ace by Lord Somers. Mr. Astor then went to 8—9 with a sequence of five, and his partner followed with a like number. Mr. Prittie then scored three, and Capt. Hollond equalising, the game was "set" five at "13 all." The latter added three aces, but serving on to the board let in Mr. Astor who went to game.

5th Game.—Mr. Astor increased his sequence to seven, and small hands followed, the only one of note being five to Mr. Prittie. Eventually Lord Somers got possession at 5—13, and drew close with six aces. The Guards had no further opportunities in this game, as with an ace each Mr. Prittie and Capt. Hollond won the game.

6th Game.—Capt. Hollond continued with a single and Lord Somers equalised. Then Mr. Astor added eight, and after the Riflemen had scored their second ace, Lord Somers, running up half-a-dozen, won the game and the match.

The umpires were Capt. Tufton and Col. Williams, and the referee Mr. E. B. Noel.

BILLIARDS.

C. DAWSON vs. W. J. PEALL.—There has not been much worth putting before Indian readers lately, but on Monday, the spot-stroke was revived, when, at the Soho-square salon, Dawson and Peall commenced a game of 4,000 up level, in which the veteran was conceded the advantage of being able to make 100 consecutive spot-strokes. During the day Peall gained his favourite position on several occasions, but he did not make any big breaks. His highest was 86, which included 27 spots, and altogether he only compiled 406. Amongst his other contributions were 42 (12 spots), 73 (21 spots), and 64 (20 spots). At both sessions Dawson gave a capital display. In the afternoon, when he aggregated 668 to 186, he subscribed breaks of 54, 183, 61, 204, 47, and 58 (unfinished). The Huddersfield man played with unusual rapidity at night, and he scored with fine consistency. In consecutive hands he put on 60, 68, 135, 22, 88, 109, and 69 (unfinished). Closing scores:—

Dawson (in play)	1,335
Peall	406

Next day Peall made a fine recovery, especially at night, demonstrating much of his old skill in playing the spot-stroke. In the aggregate he compiled 1,297, his chief breaks being 46, 213 (71 spots), 106 (33 spots), 294 (18 and 61 spots), 177 (40 spots), 299 (91 spots), 110 (32 spots), and 40. Dawson made fairly good use of his chances, being responsible for runs of 87 (full), 50, 115 (102 being made off the red ball), 55, 51, and 58 (unfinished). He only totalled 451, however, and his lead was reduced to 490. Closing scores:—

Dawson (in play)	2,452
Peall	1,962

The concluding stage was very interesting. With the advantage of being able to make 100 consecutive spots, Peall compiled two fine breaks of 315 and 327, which included 98 and 95 spots respectively. Altogether he totalled 784, with an average of 56. Another feature of the session was the consistency of Dawson. He subscribed 188 (full), 62, 68, 72, 104, 82, 113, and 138 (unfinished). Interval scores:—

Dawson	3,333

Peall again gave another fine display at night, and was only beaten by 94 points. He aggregated 1,106, which was made up chiefly by breaks of 311 (40 and 55 spots), 107 (30 spots), 326 (99 spots), 102 (26 spots), and 182 (53 spots). Dawson contributed runs of 163 (full), 229, and 170. Closing scores:—

Dawson	4,000

BOXING.

T. BURNS vs. J. ROCHE.—No event in the history of Irish boxing has created so much interest and excitement as that decided on Tuesday night in Dublin between Jem Roche, of Wexford, and Tommy Burns, the French-Canadian. The latter, in defeating Gunner Moir, the reputed best of English present-day heavy-weights, in ten rounds at the National Sporting Club, showed great natural powers of boxing, and demonstrated to the full his claim to the title of champion heavy-weight boxer of the world. Since that victory he has also defeated Palmer, of Newcastle, at Wonderland, and although that contest did not enhance his reputation by reason of the extremely poor exhibition given by his opponent, he was still regarded as the best man at his weight when he took the ring last night. The record of Roche in comparison was by no means as brilliant, but his performance in beating Charlie Wilson, who had previously beaten Gunner Moir, was some foundation for the supreme confidence placed in him by almost the whole of sporting Ireland. Roche had many friends, those who understand something of boxing as well as the ordinary Irish patriot being included amongst them. Burns, however, was, as indeed he well might be, thoroughly confident of his ability to win, as was indicated by his wager of £600 to £200, laid upon himself. The conditions of the match were twenty rounds of three minutes each, at catch-weights, with 4oz. gloves, under Queensberry rules, for £500 a side, and a purse of £1,500, provided by Mr. Martin FitzGerald on behalf of a syndicate of Irish sportsmen.

The contest proved of very short duration, for after boxing only 1min. 28secs. the Irishman was sent down with a light blow on the jaw and counted out, Burns thus gaining a third easy victory.

HOW JOCKEYS WASTE.

As a rule jockeys increase in weight when they are not at work, observes "Thormanby" in The Sportsman, but with medicine and hard labour they can usually pull off a lot of flesh in a very short time. On an emergency more than one has been known to reduce himself 7lb. in twenty-four hours and in four hours Nat Flatman is credited with getting rid of 4½lb. The old generation of jockeys seems to have been of a strong and hardy breed, and for some of the weights in many of the great races the wasting process was very severe. It was a piteous spectacle to see Sam Chifney stepping out, with his lop-ears down, and a grim visage, although the perspiration came out of every pore in his skin as he tore along the Dulling-road in order to boil himself down by ounces to 8st. 2lb. for an Ascot Cup mount. Jacques, I think, put himself through the process more than most jockeys ever did, for after leaving off riding for many years he resumed the sweaters when quite fat, and wasted himself down to a 7st. 3lb. shadow in order to don the white and blue for his old master, Col. Craddock, when Sim Templeman could not ride the weight. Stephenson and Dockeray were especially difficult to deal with, and it took them lots of time to get fit, until at last they were obliged to leave the saddle, as did Heseltine, Holmes, and George Francis, the latter of whom used to waste to half-ounces.

One night Sam Day, or "Uncle Sam," as he was always called, was supping at Hobson's, the trainer, when a letter came from Lord Henry Fitzroy that the Duke of Grafton's mare, Leo, was to run the next day in an A.F. race, and that the money was on. Sam finished his helping and then went off to a weighing-machine, which made him 8st. 4lb. without his coat; but he went at it like a Briton, and with physic and a fourteen-mile walk got off 12lb. and won. He used to be very fond of holding forth to the young jockeys on wasting. "Drinking, he would say, "inflates you just like a balloon: champagne and light wines are all rubbish: they only blow a fellow's roof off. But no man can work if he can't eat; you can't get light without eating. Have a good mutton chop, that's my style, it gives tone to the stomach." Then he would add: "Depend on't, a man doesn't know the comforts of life if he doesn't know the wastin' part of it."

Another jockey famous in the wasting line was Sam Darling, who gave up riding in 1844. His walks for 25 years in the sweaters alone were estimated to have amounted to 5,000 miles. He quite knocked up young Day, who was considered a fair pedestrian, in a strong twelve-mile walk from Newmarket to the Swan at Bottisham and back. John's sweaters got slack, and he was so dead beat that he had to give in. In 1832 Sam rode 174 races and won 72. One year, after riding in the St. Leger, he borrowed a clever hack from a brother jockey, and catching the coach at Sheffield won twice at Shrewsbury the next day, and had time to waste as well. He had a habit of closing the eye when he was saying anything particular. He had backed a horse on some racecourse with a stranger for two sovereigns, and next day was asked for the money. "Dash me," exclaimed Sam, opening both eyes very wide, as if astonished at the request; "me bet you two sovereigns?" The man looked at him rather puzzled for a moment, then said apologetically: "Oh, I beg your pardon, sir; the gentleman I bet with had only one eye. I've made some mistake." He was turning away when Sam, having enjoyed his joke, called him back and paid him the money.

Nat Flatman's real Christian name was Elnathan, and he was a Suffolk lad by birth. It was in 1841 that he did his astonishing feat in the way of "wasting" by reducing himself in two days from 7st. 12lb. to 7st. 4lb., and the last four pounds was said to have been knocked off in less than that number of hours. To realise the wonderful feat, it must be remembered that there were no Turkish baths in those days—only salts, sweating, and starvation—neither were there "skeleton" or even 2lb. saddles. But Nat's drastic "wasting" had its reward, for he steered the Irish Vulcan to victory for the Cambridgeshire. His ordinary riding weight was 7st. 8lb., which gave him an immense advantage over his most formidable rivals in the saddle, for while Frank Butler and Sam Chifney were tearing their "too solid flesh" to pieces and enduring untold agonies in the process, little Nat, "the pocket Hercules," was comparatively enjoying himself. Even in the very height of the racing season he always had his pint of beer at breakfast, and there was a comfortable look about him which would have led a casual observer to suppose that Nat's normal condition was absolute "fitness," and that it cost him no trouble to get himself down to the lowest weight in a handicap. But, fortunately for Nat, he was not naturally inclined to make flesh, and at fifty his ordinary riding weight was only 11lb. more than at twenty-nine. There is a picture of him mounted on Voltigeur, by J. F. Herring, sitting square and strong, as was his wont, and the painter has cleverly conveyed a suggestion of the jockey's peculiar style of "hustling." There was nothing brilliant, however, in Flatman's horsemanship: his set-to was usually hurried and fussy: he had neither the wonderful power of Bill Scott, the electric dash of Sam Chifney, nor the elegance of Jem Robinson or Alfred Day (all of whom were his contemporaries), and yet at Newmarket, for many seasons in succession, he rode twice as often and was more than twice as successful as any one of his rivals. At one time he was able to reckon his 250 mounts in a season—a prodigious record for those times. "I shall die happy if I can win a hundred races in a season," he used often to say in his earlier days. He passed the summit of his ambition in 1848 by scoring 104. That was his high-water mark: 94 was the nearest approach he ever made to it. This looks at first sight but a poor record as compared with Fred Archer's from 1881 to 1885, viz., 220, 210, 232, 241, and 246. But the number of races was much smaller in Nat's time, and his percentage of wins was, perhaps, greater than Archer's. Nat Flatman won his first Derby in 1844, but it was not a satisfactory victory for his horse. Orlando was second to Running Rein, and it was only through the latter being disqualified for fraudulent entry (he was discovered, as is well known, to be a four-year old) that Orlando was returned the winner. It was in that year that Nat made the largest sum he ever realised in one season, £5,000. I think I could name more than one jockey of these later days who has netted as much and more over a single race! But Nat managed to amass a very respectable fortune, though he never bet largely. He won nearly all the great prizes of the Turf except the Oaks. For three years in succession he carried off the St. Leger—in 1856 on Warlock, in 1857 on Imperious, in 1858 on Volta—a feat which no other jockey has accomplished.

Fred Archer carried "wasting" to a point where it becomes fatal. In his last Cambridgeshire he had to get himself down to 8st. 7lb. to ride St. Mirin. After he had won the Criterion Stakes on Caller Herrin by a masterpiece of jockeyship he went straight home, had a dose of his "wasting mixture," got into his vapour bath, where he remained over two hours, and then went to bed, in order that he should not be tempted to eat. He did not taste food (I have this information from one of his most intimate personal friends) from the Saturday morning until he had ridden St. Mirin on the following Tuesday afternoon! Every Turfman knows how, after a desperate race, St. Mirin was done on the post by Sailor Prince, to whom he was giving three years in age and a stone in weight.

Archer bore his defeat like a stoic, and when, on coming out of the weighing room, "Hotspur," of the Daily Telegraph, said to him, sympathetically, "Sorry you were beaten, Fred," Archer, without so much as a muscle on his face moving to indicate any emotion, replied quietly "So am I." And the stoicism was the more creditable because he stood to win a fortune on St. Mirin. "I had," he told the friend I have already mentioned, "seven thousand pounds of my own money on, much more than I ever had or ever shall have on a horse again, and if it had not been for Melton I should have won it to a certainty. I thought he was 'going home by himself' at the red post, and I was bound 'to go after him'; but I had no sooner got to his girths than ... stopped as if shot. Of course, I dared not pull my horse about, and so in reality I was making running for Sailor Prince, giving him three years and a stone over the most severe course in England."

Melton was ridden by Tom Cannon, and up to the point at which he suddenly collapsed seemed to have the race at his mercy. "Melton wins, Melton wins!" was the shout from hundreds of throats, and above the din came the roar of one well-known stentorian voice, "Two hundred to one on Melton." But before the echo of that shout had died away Melton, to the utter consternation of his backers, had shot his bolt and was done for.

All who are au courant with Turf affairs know that Capt. Machell at a certain period of his career owed much of his success to the counsels of Fred Archer, with whom he was on such intimate terms that one winter he made the great jockey his travelling companion to Monte Carlo. The breaking off of this friendship came about in a curious way. It was another case of cherchez la femme, though not in the usual sense of the proverb. Every racing man knows what a pest a betting woman is, and how persistently she will tout for a tip. When Archer was going to ride Queen Bee, one of these gamblers in petticoats ran up to him in the birdcage and begged him to tell her what was going to win, as she wanted to put on a £10 note. Out of mischief more than anything else he gave her Draycot, while just before he had told the captain to back his own mount, Queen Bee. By one of those peculiar freaks of fortune which the fickle goddess is so fond of playing upon her votaries, Draycot won by a head. Immediately afterwards the delighted lady met the captain and told him of her good luck, and upon his asking who had given her the tip she answered, "Archer." Naturally, the captain was in a rage, and exclaimed "Save me from my friends," in the jockey's hearing. As Fred had lost a thousand pounds by Draycot's winning, he was equally exasperated by the remark, and from that misunderstanding an ill-feeling sprang up between them, which, however, might have blown over but for Archer's tragic death not long afterwards.

Among the many good stories current about the famous "Tinman," I give the following, which may be new to some of my readers. When Fred Archer was bitten and savaged by Lord Falmouth's horse, Muley Edris, he was advised to see Sir James Paget. That eminent surgeon having examined and dressed the wound, Archer requested to know how long it would take to heal.

"Oh," said Sir James, "I think in three or four weeks you will be all right."

"But shall I be fit for the Derby?" asked Archer.

"Ye-es," was the reply, "Oh yes! I think you may go to the Derby."

"No, but you don't quite understand me, Sir James," persisted the jockey. "I mean, shall I be fit to ride."

"Well, I don't know," was the answer. "Better drive! better drive!"

Archer, rather taken aback by this very innocent and unexpected rejoinder, had to explain. "I'm afraid, sir, you scarcely realise who I am!" "No," said the surgeon, politely, referring to the patient's visiting-card, "I see I have the honour of receiving Mr. Archer, but——"

"Well," said Archer, "I suppose I may say that what you are in your profession, Sir James, I am in mine," and proceeded to tell him what that profession was. The famous surgeon, on learning of the status of his visitor, was at once greatly interested, and asked him many questions, among others what would be his loss supposing he should be unable to fulfil the Derby engagement, to which Archer replied, "About £2,000." His average income he stated to be about £3,000; upon which Sir James is said to have remarked, "You may well say that what I am in my profession you are in yours. I only wish that my profession were half as profitable as yours." But that was modesty on Sir James's part, for his income at this period must have been not far short of double that sum.

GOLF IN MADRAS.

THE golfers of the Madras Gymkhana gave an "at home" on the Island on the 2nd instant. There was a large gathering and a most enjoyable afternoon was spent. The Band of the 88th Carnatic Infantry was in attendance and a programme of seven events was run through. All filled well, but The Golf Booth was the centre of attraction throughout the evening. The tee (a door mat) was crowded with ladies waiting to have a loft into the artfully devised hole or target and the prizes were not won without difficulty. Details.—

GENTLEMEN'S DRIVING COMPETITION.—Each competitor allowed two drives. The ball that rests nearest to or furthest beyond a given line shall win.

Mr. C. Morrison (75 yards), 1 ; Mr. Down, R. A., 2.

FILES TENT-PEGGING.—Competitors to start from a given point, pick up a sword on the way and jump a hurdle, taking the peg after jumping the hurdle.

Captain Torrie and Mr. Walker (of the Bodyguard) in their second run took both pegs and so won from six other files.

LADIES' PUTTING COMPETITION.—Two holes.

Lady White, 1 ; Mrs. Lloyd 2.

Lady White's score of 3 for the two holes was the best, and Mrs. Lloyd secured the second prize with 4, after playing off a tie with three other ladies.

CADDIES RACE.—100 Yards Flat Race Handicap.

Won easily. A large crowd of caddies entered.

MISSING WORD STAKES.—Ladies Nomination.—Gentlemen to saddle their horses and ride to lady partner, taking with them an envelope in which a verse or verses of some well-known poem will be enclosed. Several words will be missing from the verse or verses and the lady will have to fill the same in. Gentlemen may help lady with the solution. First in with the nearest correct answer wins.

Mrs. Rae, 1 ; Mrs. G. W. Mitchell, 2.

APPROACHING AND PUTTING COMPETITION.—Gentlemen to select lady for partner. Gentlemen to approach over hurdle and lady to put out.

This was a very popular event and competition was keen. Four couples returned scores of 3 ; and as it was getting too dark to play off the tie in the original conditions, the ladies were required to "put off" the match on the putting brown. In the end Mrs. Dene was the winner, with Surgeon-General Benson.

An extra event the children's driving competition, was won by Miss Joan Robinson. Mrs. F. M. Robinson the wife of the Captain of the Golfers gave away the prizes.

POONA ALL INDIA TOURNAMENT.

Referee :—Capt. H. K. Umfreville, Supdt. of Gymkhanas.

Judges :—Lieut. Mowatt, 26th Cavalry, and Lieut. Mellor, Royal Marine Light Infantry.

M. C. :—Lieut. Morrison, Royal Scots.

Asst. M. C. :—Q.-M. Chinnery, Gym. Staff.

Time-keeper :—Mr. Defreece.

THANKS to the fact that, benefiting by the experience of last year, an earlier start was made with the Poona Boxing Tournament, it was concluded within the week, i.e. from the 23rd to 28th of last month. When one says that the arrangements in the centre of the race-course were in the hands of Captain Umfreville and Q. M. S. Chinnery of the Central Gymnasium, one understands they were all that could be desired. This, however, will most unfortunately be the last time Captain Umfreville will be able to lend a hand, as he is to be transfered. He has established a reputation as one of our authorities and the capable manner in which he fills the Referee's chair will make competitors and spectators deplore his absence in future.

Mr. Ben Defreece held the watch with Lieutenant Morrison, Royal Scots, M.C., and Lieutenants Mellor and Mowatt, Judges. On the whole, the decisions were according to public opinion, but in one or two cases, I think the actual points scored were insufficiently taken into consideration and a preference given to the more powerful man. Boy Scott of the B.V.R. in particular, was most unfortunate in getting an adverse decision with Boy Wyse, who eventually got the prize ; this being a repetition of last year.

Despite the various tournaments that have taken place of late, entries were very large though we missed a number we should have liked to have seen compete. The Heavy Weights, unfortunately, filled poorly and no further progress has been made towards deciding the Championship. Tansil of the Worcesters won it after some hard fights, but none of the leviathans were competing. Since Tiger Smith, we have had no actual champion, as though last year Henry beat Kirk, Smith of the Lincolns had still to be considered and, though he was entered this year he was unable to compete.

As to Middle Weights, Gunner Lyons was this year an absentee and main interest centered in Cook of the Worcesters and Atkinson of the Glosters. They met in the semi-final and, after practically sparring for the first two rounds, Cook got his man on the ropes and finished him. Ellis of the Scots, though he must be almost a light-weight, fought his way to the final when he found Cook too big a handful.

A very even lot were found in the Light Weights, when the defeat of Strickland of the 14th Hussars came as no little surprise. He is a very hard hitter, but Hillier of the East Surreys has the all-important gift of a good left, which beat him. He in turn, however, lost to Marke of the Middlesex in the final, after a very pretty fight, and, I think, the cool methods of both of these were scientifically superior to the perhaps more exciting hurricane fighting of last year.

We can only repeat what was said last year with regard to the Feather Weights—that Blake won as he chose. He had some useful boxers to meet in Yufa, East Surreys, Bounds, Manchesters and Manning, Northants, but there is a something about Blake that puts him in a class of his own. It is no herculean strength that secures him his victories, but a quickness and a perfect timing, more like a professional than anyone we have ever seen in a tournament out here.

Almost as easily first was Wallace of the Royal Scots in the Bantams, whose ducking and foot-work was always too good for any he had to meet. Though not as good, he makes a fitting substitute for Evans of the same regiment, who won last year.

It was disappointing to see the Officers' events fail, and the one was a middle-weight contest, in which Salano of the Worcesters knocked out Morrison of the Royal Scots. The Committee might in future find the inclusion of some Civilian events more popular. Results.—

DOGS AS DETECTIVES.

To the International Police Service Magazine, Mr. Raymond Barker contributes a translation from the German of an article on "The Training of Police Dogs in the Tracking of Human Beings" by Herr Kappe, Commissioner of Police of Neuheim.

Herr Kappe says that as soon as the young dog has learnt to be obedient, to jump over obstacles, and perform other little duties is the time to instruct him in the following of human tracks. A good introduction is training in the carrying of messages, and in this work the dog should be taught to keep his head low. Five or six months is the best age to begin and the young animal should never be tired.

Before the exercise, continues the writer, it is recommended that some person who is well known to the dog, for preference the trainer himself, should caress the animal, then offer him a piece of meat and, still allowing the dog to see it, walk away in the direction of the wind and over a lawn, while the assistant holds the animal at the leash till the trainer is at first fifty yards, then 100 yards, away, and then has so concealed himself that the dog cannot see him. In this way the dog will be taught to find the trainer by means of the scent because he cannot do so by sight. As soon as he is able to track unaided, the distance should be gradually increased to 3,000 yards and more. This lesson learnt, the assistant goes away and lets the dog find him, commencing again with short distances. He orders the animal back to his trainer, who at first meets the dog in the last portion of the track with encouraging words, and if he returns to him, as the assistant did in the first lesson, rewards him with a piece of meat. As the dog grows sure on short distances the length is increased according to the performance. In case this has not been done before, the assistant should at each errand ostentatiously place in the message-box a note and give the order "off on your errand." It is plain that the person to whom the message is to be taken should be known to the dog, and the animal should before being sent on the errand be placed on his track. Here ends the preliminary exercise in the tracking of men, and now begins the special training.

The next thing is to put the dog on the track of the assistant who has gone off with some article in his hand and at some short distance away places it on his own track and runs back to the trainer.

The dog is then sent out to find the article and bring it to his trainer. Should the animal fail to discover the lost article the trainer goes with him along the trck of the assistant up to the object of their search and induces the dog to pick it up and carry it back. The trainer continues the lesson in this way on his own track, so that in the course of a walk accompanied by the dog he drops something and afterwards sends him back to fetch it saying, "Back, fetch the lost article!" As the animal becomes proficient in this he is again exercised on the tracks of the assistant till he grows quite certain on his scent and does not fail.

All these lessons should be at first at short distances and against the wind in order to avoid the chance of a failure. As the animal becomes more sure the distance is increased, and finally the assistant should proceed with the breeze in order to train the animal to work under all circumstances. Should the dog still not readily follow the track he must be persistently exercised till he quickly obeys the order to go to the assistant. After this the assistant should make an attack on the trainer, and when the latter exortes the dog to protect him, the former should take to his heels, if possible unseen by the animal, to a distance of, say 100 yards and conceal himself so that he is not visible to the dog. Then for the first time the trainer releases the dog and sets him to follow the assistant with the words "off catch him!" The trainer follows. When the dog has traced the assistant who should be a stranger, the latter must, with the help of a cane, keep the former off so that he cannot get hold of him but is forced to circle him barking or to stop him till such time as the trainer appears. Should the dog be inclined to leave him the assistant should follow striking the ground, not the dog, with the cane in order to attract the animal's attention to himself wholly. As soon as the trainer turns up, the dog should be excited to renew his attack till he again stops the assistant. Then the trainer chains the animal and takes the assistant back to the place where the affair started, preferably in a house. During this journey the assistant should be given an opportunity of a chance to escape, and by unleashing the dog and by his tracking and stopping the fugitive the flight should be frustrated.

The animal should be exercised each time on the track of a different and strange assistant who should hide himself sometimes in a bush, sometimes in a hollow, and even climb up a tree, so that the dog learns to find the person no matter where he conceals himself. The climbing of a tree should, however, not be resorted to till the dog has been accustomed to tracking by the scent. A dog being trained in the following of human tracks often, certainly for the first time, passes the tree on which the assistant sits only to return scenting out the track or to stand fast undecided whether the man has retraced his steps or taken a turn. As soon as he finds that this is not the case he again appears at the end of the track and searches in the lower part of the tree with redoubled ardour till a favorable breeze blows the scent of the person he is after to his nose and betrays his presence. Eager dogs bark on this discovery, but the trained animal hunts silently. When the dog growls at the man on the tree the latter should fire a blank charges at him in order to accustom the animal to fire-arms. At first the charge of powder should be small so that the detonation may be slight, but it should be gradually increased as the dog becomes more used to stand fire.

Another point to be remembered is that the trainer should in the beginning be present when the dog is fired at with a view to giving the animal more confidence. As the dog acquires this confidence, the trainer must keep at a distance increased always gradually. It is a very good thing to give the assistant a bundle of sticks, each about two feet in length sharpened at one end while the other is pointed white. If the assistant takes a turn or climbs a fence he sticks one of these sticks to the ground and bends it in the direction he is taking. This will give the trainer who follows the track with the dog a means of checking the direction taken by the animal, although it is not always the best dog that runs closest to the track. On a fair day it is not unusual for the dogs to follow the track at a distance of fifty yards and more under the wind. When the sticks have answered the purpose for which they have been placed on the ground they should be taken up in order not to cause a mistake on another occasion. They are unnecessary if the dog has learnt to follow the track for a great distance and possess confidence in himself. He quickly learns to rely on himself and, as already remarked, to go back on the track if he has overshot it. One should on no account assist the animal if he is endeavouring to find the track. It is above all very important that the police dog should be confident. The ground should often be changed. It is not recommended that the dog should be permitted to work in the same place where he has on a former occasion been exercised.

BOVRIL

Should be in every home as well as in every hospital.

BEWARE OF CHEAP IMITATIONS.

By Royal Warrant to His Majesty the King.

The assistant may have for some reason, to avoid a herd of cattle, left the track arranged on. There is no greater mistake than to call the dog off the right track. A well trained dog relies entirely on his sense of smell and does not see the assistant till he smells his body or runs up against him. In order to avoid the possibility of the dog falling into the bad habit of using his eyes the assistant should always conceal himself at the end of his wanderings so that the dog will discover him by the sense of smell only. I consider it a very good thing if the police dog is taught to track while held in leash. Nevertheless, if the animal is proficient in tracking and is in the habit of doing so loose, it is not advisable to use a collar. Better than this is a strap with a hook right behind the shoulders, where it is fastened to the line.

From the preceding, one can easily answer the second question. "What points must the trainer of a police dog observe in the tracking of criminals, lost persons, etc.?" He must give the dog the scent of the person to be traced, and must endeavour to put him on the right track. This should not be too much effaced by the tracks of other persons. Should the track owing to the heavy traffic not be traceable in the place where the person last stopped the dog should be allowed to scent round about till he finds the track and takes it up.

If the track for a great distance follows a much frequented road and we can judge the direction taken, the animal should be set to scent along the edge of the road where the party has most probably left it. If the track is not picked up on this side the same should be done on the other. One should not search one side for more than one to two thousand yards and then proceed along the opposite side before going further.

Should one not be able to judge the direction taken, the road must be followed by the dog up one side and back again up the other. This probably means that the road has to be followed for a distance of 10,000 yards both ways. The thorough search of the road by the dog should not be hindered by the impatience of the trainer. The calmer and more far sighted the latter is, the surer will the dog be.

If the person followed has made use of a conveyance and has in this passed over the portion of the road which is being searched, the dog will, if the scent has not been quite destroyed by continual traffic, obtain a trace of it in the wind at one of the two sides of the street and will follow it. A trained dog should often, at least once a week, be exercised in these difficult cases in order always to have him capable of tracking under any circumstances, and to keep him constantly in training. This is self-evident if the animal is to be useful when required for actual work.

In conclusion, I will not dare to say that each person will have equally good work with equally well trained dogs. In order to solve such difficult problems as the tracking of human beings with the assistance of a police dog one must note—first, that the dog and the trainer are well known each to the other; secondly, that the trainer is able to handle the animal with skill. That person will have the best result who has himself trained the dog. I therefore recommend that each one work with his own dog.

The Horse.

THE FRENCH HORSE SUPPLY.

The present time, when a show of thoroughbred stallions is being held at the Royal Agricultural Hall, London, in competition for twenty-eight premiums of £150 each, seems an opportune moment for calling attention to the intelligent and up-to-date methods by which France deals with the question of her horse supply, observes a sporting expert in the Daily Mail. If those in authority will attentively study the facts and figures which I shall proceed to cite, they must admit that the English haphazard system contrasts very unfavourably with that on this side of the Channel. No wonder therefore, that the stock of horses for the requirements of the English Army is not only lamentably deficient, but horse-breeding as an industry in England is rapidly declining, through lack of encouragement and State support. It is announced on good authority, there were 12,500 fewer horses in England last year than in any preceding twelve months in modern times. Surely, the lessons of the Boer War should have been taken more seriously to heart by those responsible for this department of national need. When horses were required for South Africa, England had to scour the world for them, and was compelled to pay almost a million pounds for most inferior animals. Should the country be drawn again into war, the situation will be one for great alarm, especially if Continental complications arise to prevent purchases, even at exorbitant prices. All the countries of Europe are providing for the future in the matter of their horse supply, but England appears to be doing little or nothing to meet forthcoming demands. I intend to deal only with France, as I am writing from personal experience, but inquiry will probably demonstrate that Germany is quite as active in this respect as her neighbour over the Rhine.

What France Spends on the Horses.

The sum of £1,200, which is distributed annually by the English Government in the shape of King's Premiums, sounds very paltry against the £53,080 which was voted in the last Budget of the French minister of Agriculture for the uses of the National stud Farms. In the Budget of the Minster of War there was also included an item of £753,208 for remounts, nearly all of which goes into the pockets of French breeders and agriculturists. All this is entirely independent of the £118,190 given to breeders last year as premiums by the various Race Societies out of the percentages on pari-mutuel investments. And here let me once again correct the mistake that seems to prevail to the effect that the French Government benefits by the parimutuel percentage. This is not the case. When Ramrod, Prince William, Veronese, and other stallions were acquired last year for the National Stud in France I noted that many English writers stated they were bought with money accumulated through the pari-mutuel. Nothing of the kind. The Government receives no money from the pari-mutuel. According to law, each Race Society may instal the pari-mutuel on its racecourse on the condition that they deduct 8 per cent. from all moneys staked; out of this 8 per cent. they are allowed to retain 4 per cent. for working expenses, 2 per cent. must be distributed in charities, 1 per cent. is devoted to a fund which gives premiums to the breeders of winners, and the other 1 per cent. is for special purposes, which the Ministers of Finance and Agriculture may decide on. At the present time, it is being used for conveying water to districts in France that are not adequately supplied, and for the establishment of water-works. The breeder of the winner of every important race in France now receives a certain sum, whether he is, at the time, owner of the horse or not, Baron de Rothschild get £600 in addition, as breeder of the grand Prix winner last year, while M. Edmond Blanc received something every time Finasseur won a race for M. Michel Ephrussi. Sometimes the breeders of both first and second horses are given premiums, these sums being derived from the 1 per cent. on pari-mutuel stakes. In this way, £118,190 were distributed last year, and the prospect of participating in this is alone an inducement to breeders to keep up the supply of horses. The allowance of 4 per cent. for working expenses produces nearly half a million sterling, and this is more than is required, even when 2,000 officials and clerks are employed. Last year, when the Budget of the Minister of War was under discussion, it was moved that the surplus should be taken by the Government for military purposes, but this was negatived, and the surplus is now employed by the Race Societies themselves to increase the value of the prizes that are given. In this way, £12,000 will next year be the sum of money added to the sweepstakes for the Grand Prize of Paris, and I can see the time approaching when this race will be worth £20,000, and all other races will be proportionately increased in value. Is not this alone an inducement to breeders? In England an entirely contrary policy seems to prevail. Official neglect, cant, hypocrisy, and narrowmindedness are combining to uproot the sporting instincts of the British nation, to curtail its commercial enterprise and cripple both individual and collective effort, so far as the horse supply of the nation is concerned. The Frenchmen recognise that to maintain the standards of speed and endurance in the horse the racecourse is an absolute necessity, and they, therefore, place racing under Government control, and encourage the various Race Societies to be financially successful and at the same time to feed the State with horses that have given proof of efficiency. Horse-racing and horse-breeding must go hand-in-hand together, and under direct and active Government control in France they have become two great national industries.

The Stud Farms of France.

Into the subtleties of horse-breeding, which provide so much material for discussion among experts, I shall not now attempt to enter. In France there are two parties, the one urging that for cavalry and artillery horses the best plan is to mate thoroughbred mares to shire and hackney stallions in order to obtain size of structure and bone and strength for carrying and drawing weight, while the other party, representing actual authority, maintains that better results are obtained by mating half-bred and other mares to thoroughbred stallions. Statistics support the theory at present in practice, and it must be admitted that, taking the classic races as a guide, the winner of the Grand Prize or a Derby has never yet been sired by a non-staying stallion. Character may come from the dam, but strength and endurance must be inherited from the sire. It is upon this basis that the Director of the great national Stud in France works, and at the present time the Government owns over two hundred thoroughbred stallions, selected with great discrimination. They own, besides, a large number of other stallions, shire hackney, Arabs, and Normandy trotters. Last year the acquisition of the champion trotter in France for a very large sum of money provoked a long discussion in the Chamber, but in the end the Minister who was responsible justified his selection. Horse-breeding in France is not relegated to theorists and faddists. Men of experience are chosen to sit on the various committees, and the special Permanent Committee that has been appointed by the Minister of Agriculture to look after the race meetings and betting is made up of statesmen, breeders, race-horse-owners, and practical commercial men. Frenchmen would ridicule the idea of relegating the control of their stud farms, racecourses and the speculation that arises therefrom to intolerant bishops and ignorant bigots. In the matter of breeding, the Government exercises no monopoly, and it gives every assistance to private enterprise. There are about 150 private stud farms in France raising thoroughbred stock outside the Government depots, and considerably over 100 of these breeders received premiums for producing winners last year. The Comte de Gouidee headed the list with £850. Then there are the Normandy stud farms where hackneys and trotters predominate, and there are thousands of small farmers and agriculturists who keep a few mares and avail themselves of the services of the Government stallions.

Encouragement to Breeders.

In England a large proportion of the money paid for Army remounts is sent out of the country, but in France nearly all the money so spent goes directly to benefit the French breeder. The Government stallions, many of them the winners of the Derby and other important races, serve thoroughbred mares for a fee of 4sovs, and serve half-bred mares for a fee of 12s, but only mares whose owners are domiciled in France are accepted. The breeders are always sure of selling their produce to the Government, which has a guarantee of quality, for they have supplied the stallion, and their inspectors have approved the mares. Can anything be more simple, effectual, and protective for the benefit of both the individual and the State? Last year 229 thoroughbred stallions, belonging to the Government, served about 8,000 mares, and 234 Anglo-Arab State stallions served 10,000 mares, and more than half the produce will ultimately pass back into the hands of the Government for Army purposes.

GREAT PUNJAB HORSE SHOW.

The 5th annual meeting of the great Punjab Horse Show was held at Rawalpindi on the 30th and 31st March and 1st April. There were 32 classes and the exhibits were of a high standard. The B. A. M. C. The Naturalist.

STRAY NOTES.

Among lower animals there are curious cases of the greater strength and size of the female. Thus, among spiders, the female is nearly twice as bulky as the male. She makes, in many cases, a nest ready for her young, and is visited there by the wandering irresponsible male, who, in spite of great danger to himself, is irresistibly attracted to seek a brief caress from the terrible spideress. She is terrible, not only on account of her bulk, but because she makes a rule of killing and sucking the blood of her infatuated admirer unless he is sufficiently alert and agile to escape from her side more quickly than he came to it. The courtship of spiders is a very interesting bit of natural history. The males execute a sort of dance, and are strangely excited by the vibrating note of a tuning fork. Two American naturalists, Mr. and Mrs. Peckham, and also Dr. McCook, have studied this subject in great detail.

A strange-looking, dark green worm, as big as a walnut, with a ribbon-like trunk six or eight inches in length attached to its mouth, lives in holes in the rocks in the Mediterranean. A similar worm has been found off the Norwegian coast. Fanciful names are given by zoologists to these two worms—the first is called Bonellia, the second Hamingia. These goodly-sized worms are females, only females. For years the corresponding male was unknown. At last a minute creature one-eight of an inch in length, like a tiny fragment of green thread, was found crawling about on and into these big green Bonellias. Its structure when it was examined with the microscope proved it to be the adult male of the worm on which it was crawling. It was insignificant and minute as to escape all observation except that of a trained naturalist searching for it with a magnifying glass. Some seven or eight of these diminutive males are found on one female, infesting her as fleas infest a mouse, and of about the same relative size.

So there is nothing in the eternal fitness of things proclaiming the male as the necessary superior of the female throughout Nature. The fact is that the question of equality and of general superiority and inferiority has no place in regard to male and female from a naturalist's point of view. It is true that women are so very much less endowed with muscular strength than men that practically every woman is inferior to every man in this respect. It is also true that woman's brain is smaller than man's, and that, apart from mere size, the intellectual activity and capacity of women, by whatever test you examine it, is less than that of man. When exceptional cases on both sides are excluded, the definite intellectual inferiority of the average woman, as compared with the average man, is established as a fact. The observations of those concerned in the education of young men and young women side by side confirm this, and it is further demonstrated by a consideration of the intellectual performances of average men and average women. But women, on the other hand, fill a place in human life as mothers, and administrators of detail, and as companions, in which man, by the nature of things, cannot compete with them at all.

At the Zoological Gardens a dog and a wolf are caged together, presumably with the object of obtaining a hybrid animal by interbreeding. It is well enough established that the domestic dog and the wolf have been known to interbreed, but whether there has ever been a hybrid between the domestic dog and the fox is a matter in which there is less certainty. The late Mr. A. D. Bartlett positively affirmed that he never met with a single authenticated instance of a dog-and-fox hybrid, and further, inclined to deny any ancestral relationship between the two animals. In this he went against the view of most modern naturalists, who hold that the domestic dog as we know it is the descendant of the wolf, the jackal, and the fox.

It is singular that there should be so much doubt as regards interbreeding between dogs and foxes. Nevertheless, while some people will dogmatically affirm that it does take place others are no less positive in their denial of it. In this connection, the statement of Xenophon that dog-and-fox hybrids were used in Greece for hare-hunting is interesting. Xenophon says that two breeds of dog were used for this purpose, one being the Castorian and the other "fox-like, being originally the progney of the dog and the fox, in whom, through lapse of time, the two-fold characteristics of their progenitors have become blended." This, of course, though a definite, is not necessarily an accurate statement; nor need it be interpreted as meaning that the interbreeding took place in the time of Xenophon, or that he ever beheld a creature directly descended from a dog and a fox. Altogether, the matter is one of much mystery, on which even modern naturalists are by no means agreed.

Two specimens of the grison, which are among the recent additions to the Zoo, furnish an exception to the common rule in the colouring of animals. Most mammals have the under parts of the body lighter than the upper, but in the case of the grison this colour scheme is reversed. The fur on the under part of the body is a dark brown, while that of the upper parts is of a lime-grey hue. The natural habits of the creature afford some explanation of this. The grison is more or less nocturnal in a wild state, and lives in clefts in the rocks, and also in hollow trees. Its colouring is protective. Like most of its kind—for the grison is a South American species of the weasel family—it is a fierce little beast, and has an enormous appetite for its size.

All members of the weasel family seem to be endowed with a kind of almost reckless ferocity. It seems as though they are marked out by Nature for the superior branches of scavenging. They kill for the sheer love of killing, as though their mission included the reduction of surplus population in the small wild life. Their voracity is certainly great, but it is perpetually exceeded by their appetite for slaughter. They have also, as anyone who has ever killed a stoat or weasel knows, a most remarkable tenacity of life. A blow with a walking-stick that would break the back of many a larger animal seems hardly to affect them, and often enough, after being left for dead, will creep away and recover. Also, their muscular strength, when one considers their size, is truly astonishing. A stoat has been known to drag the body of a dead rabbit or hare over incredible distances. Indeed, it almost seems that the strength of animals is in inverse ratio to their size. A horse endowed with strength in the same ratio to its size as that of a weasel would be far stronger than is an elephant; while an elephant in such circumstances would literally be capable of moving mountains.

In the insect world this matter of strength and size becomes even more remarkable. The feats which an ordinary ant, or fly, or beetle can perform indicate an amount of strength which, if they could be transmitted in proportion to human beings, would almost enable a man to carry a country villa on his back. Lewis Carroll had a quaint conceit of a flea, which, magnified to the size of a cart-horse, made but one bound, and was no more seen in the neighbourhood whence it started. Then, again, just imagine what a fearsome beast a spider would be if it were the size of a tiger! The tiger is a docile and affectionate animal compared to such a monster. After all, man's position in the scale of nature is an extremely fortunate one for man. All the really horrible monsters of creation are so much smaller than he is as to be practically insignificant. If their order were reversed, with elephants and whales at the bottom of the scale, and weasels (to say nothing of spiders, flies, wasps, earwigs, and so on) were at the top of it, this world would be an impossible place for the lord of creation.

The Story Teller.

THE EVIL EYE.

From time immemorial "the Evil Eye" has been made accountable for every kind of misfortune that may befall one and even in this enlightened age, the unsophisticated "pahari," attributes everything, for which he cannot account without a little thought, to the machinations of some luckless "debta."

It is bad enough to have a bad day, when intent on shikar and when you know your own rotten shooting is to blame for a miss, but while in no very pleasant frame of mind, you are "sweating" up an almost perpendicular hill, to your camp, you are told by your shikary, that, on top of all your other sins, you are under the surveillance of the "Evil Eye"—Well you feel like manslaughter. Of course, the poor chap means well and says it to show, that, he does not think the "Sahib" capable of such a crime, as missing an easy shot and for him to have done such a thing, can only be explained, in the one delightfully accomodating way, but the expression, somehow, never has the conciliatory effect, which it is no doubt intended to convey.

On the occasion which I am about to describe, the beastly "eye" never left me for a moment all day and I'll prove it to any scoffing sceptic, that there is a "debta" who gets you by the leg, so to speak and hangs on until you pacify him, with a goat, or at the least scatter a couple of marigolds, a handful of rice and some herbs before His Worship. Of course, if you can leave a rupee or two at the shrine and by way of a goodbye, toodle for a minute on a sort of foghorn arrangement, guaranteed to frighten every animal, within a radius of 2 miles, you need fear nothing, for the "Debta" is your friend and well-wisher all that day and you may safely lay heavy odds on hitting every shot you fire. For the latter part of this statement I am indebted to my shikary, whose veracity is unquestionable.

Personally, of course, if I took on such a wager myself I should take very good care not to fire that day, as it would be so much safer for my purse, besides obviating all risk of the Debta, being maligned in the event of a miss.

But this is all a digression, so now for my experiences on a certain day, not long ago, which proved to me the existence of an "Evil Eye" beyond all shadow of doubt. Of course, I know there are men, who after reading this, will try and prove me wrong or a fool, but I warn them here and now, to save both breath and ink for I won't believe them. I had gone to bed early, having given orders to be roused at 4 A.M. and intended to put in a good snooze and rise as fresh as a lark and with a clear eye, but I counted without my host and the "Debta," at least it must have been he that started worrying me, no sooner I got into bed, for sleep I could not. I tried counting up to a thousand and then started it backwards, but that was no good, for imagination ran away with the idea, that they were sovereigns I was counting and that made me more wide awake than ever. Then I started on counting imaginary sheep, going over a fence, but before I had got to thirty a panther struck in and carried off the thirty-first and being so near the brute myself, I broke out into a cold perspiration and that was not conducive to sleep. At last, about midnight, I fell into a doze and shortly after, was roused by two of my dogs fighting, so I got up to heave boots and pillows at them and then had to get out of bed, to fetch my pillows. However, 4 o'clock came at last and so did my "chota hazri" but just then I was doing a lovely sleep and nearly threw more boots at the man for rousing me.

The night had been cloudless, but when I got out, after my tea and eggs, it was to find a dense mist covering the hills around me and a fine drizzle falling. I looked at my barometer and it said "Fair" so either it or the weather was telling lies and it remained to be seen which. I preferred to believe the barometer, rather than the evidence of mine own eyes, on this occasion, so started off without further delay.

Six A.M. found me far up among the firs, with the mist still hanging low, but the drizzle had stopped. We wandered from ravine to ravine, round enumerable spurs and through countless nullahs, but never a sign of even a footprint of anything could we find with the exception of the scratchings of a panther, but I might as well have tried to follow the tracks, of the one that carried off my thirty-first sheep, the night before, as to follow this one, so looked for something more substantial.

It was nine o'clock before I pulled up to "peep" into my tiffin baskets. The "peep" was a long one I admit and took some 20 minutes, and just as I was shutting it up (the basket not the peep) a hen grey-winged ouzel, arrived on the scene, with a worm in her beak. Good, thought I, I want your youngsters, so please hurry up and feed them and show us where the nest is.

They had, however, left the nest and were able to fly, as we soon discovered, but we gave chase to a young cock and hoped to tire it out, but my lucky star was below the horizon still and declined to show up. I made a violent dash for a small bush, into which the youngster had gone and was on the point of grabbing it, when—mercy on us—fire, mustard, chillies and all the other torments of the nether regions, seemed to have got a hold of my legs. I was wearing "shorts" which I have always found most comfortable for hill work, but I discovered for the first time, one great disadvantage, and am now able to give anyone, who is inclined to "go in" for them, a piece of good advice, viz., don't sit on a jungle bees nest. I did not even sit on it, I only stood on it and the little fiends were on to my bare knees and up my legs, in less time, than it takes to swear, even mildly.

Well needless to say I did not wait to grab the ouzel, but ran like a hare, through the thickest brushwood I could find managed to get rid of most of them and had much pleasure, in murdering the others that still persisted in sticking to me. Cruel beast, you say, but just you wait till you get a few up your leg, stinging for all they are worth and see if you don't feel like murder yourself.

In my mad rush through the brushwood, my hat came off, so we gave the bees time to settle again and then started to search for it. I was in a nullah as it was, so it could not have rolled anywhere, yet we searched high and low, three of us for well nigh an hour, but no sign of that hat could I find. Every blade of grass and every stone along the path, I had taken from the bee's nest, had been carefully examined and a "sola topee" is not the sort of thing, one can walk over without seeing, but no trace of it was visible and I was meagre to give it up. I expect the "Debta" is wearing it now, but let me just catch him at it.

Fortunately it was a cloudy day and looked as though it would remain so and I was able to do with a cap. We again set out on the war path and shortly after, came upon a rotting log, simply covered with a mushroom-like fungus, on which a black bear had been feeding that very morning. So we took up his tracks and followed them, over the top of the next ridge and into a deep nullah, which I knew of old, to be a good one for bears. He once or twice swerved from his course, to look for some dainty morsel, but otherwise kept to a small good path. On the whole the tracks were easily followed, but where we were at a loss, a spaniel I had out with me, soon led the way and in an hour or so, from the time we first took them up, we came upon Mr. Bruin himself. He had suddenly left the path and gone off at right angles to it, down the hill and was now sitting up with his back to a tree and regarding us with surprise, but did not mean to make a move. It was a perfect shot, at about 50 yards and I got a fine big target in his massive chest and while the dog slowly followed up his track, I drew a bead and pulled.

Away went old "Bhaloo" head over heels, picked himself up again and then disappeared from view, but without a sound, and that fact did not tend to buoy up my hopes of a hit.

"U isabellinus," will frequently remain silent, after receiving even a mortal wound, but "U torquatus" invariably "speaks" on receipt of the first bullet. I went down to investigate and there was the mark of my ball, slap in the centre of the tree and just about where his white V should have been. I bowed to the power of the "Evil Eye" now, if I never did before.

Had I missed the bear, the tree and the entire hill side, I perhaps should have been sad, but relieved my feelings at hurling anathmas at my rifle and its maker, but to miss the bear and yet hit the tree, directly behind it, beat me altogether.

"Tajub ka bat" said the shikary and "Dr'd tak the himmoot" echoed I— what the bear said, I need not repeat or I already feel I have fallen low enough, without being reminded of it.

We followed the tracks for about half a mile, just to make sure that he had not been hit, though in reality I had no great doubts on the subject, in my own mind, but of course found no sign of blood anywhere and all I got for that move was, the pleasure of again having to climb the hill.

It was on the way back, that the shikary said something about "Debta ka dosh lug gya" which being interpreted means "The Evil Eye was on me" and made me feel homicidal at the time, but after a hot tub and dinner and the soothing influence of a cigar, I went over the incidents of the last 24 hours quietly in my own mind and came to the conclusion that somebody's evil eye was on me right enough and I did not feel charitably disposed towards that individual either. A sleepless night to begin with, with a dog fight in the middle of it. Now my dogs are the most peaceable pet in India and why should they choose this night of all to fight in? Then to get stung by bees—after tramping all sorts of jungles for the past 15 years and never once being touched by them before. Thirdly to lose my one and only sun topee and that in a most unaccountable manner, and fourthly and lastly but by no means least, to hit a tree in front of which a bear was sitting without touching the animal, was really one too much and more than Job himself could have borne in one day. The next time I go out shooting, I shall take with me a newly laid egg, some rice and a couple of marigolds to lay at the "Debtas" feet. Now that I think of it, the one I mean ain't got no feet—in fact it would be hard to define exactly what he has got or what he is supposed to represent, if anything in particular, but any way I'll leave the offering, and in lieu of the fox-hora try him with "Home Sweet Home" with variations, on a banjo and if that does not "fetch" him I shall return to my former belief and join the ranks of the "Vicar of Bray."

Since writing the above I have been informed by a goatherd who may be considered an authority on the subject, seeing that he lives up on the hill tops among the "Debtas" that "Kali" (sounds like a "She") had undoubtedly appropriated my hat, in order to cut a dash, at the next big festival. I shall make a point of attending that "mela" and see what the forward minx has to say for herself.

A being marked with the knave and 10 of clubs, Z must lose one trick in the suit, and he had better lose this at once. At trick 3, therefore he should lead the 3 of clubs from dummy, and put on the 8. This clears and unblocks Y's clubs, whilst leaving Z with a card of entry, so that he can lead a diamond later, if necessary, or make any card that becomes good in his own hand. The subsequent play will depend upon A's lead at trick 4. If he goes on with diamonds, or opens hearts, Z cannot well make more than two by cards. If he should lead the queen of spades, however, H is marked with the king, and Y can win with the ace and return the 6, making the knave good, which may enable Z to win the game.

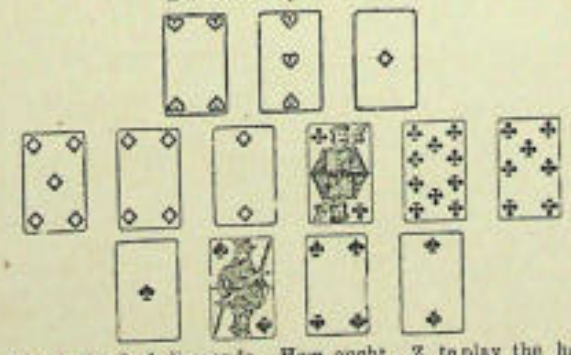
The objection to winning trick 3 with the queen of clubs and returning the 8, is that if the game takes the course described above, and B wins the second round of spades with the king and forces out the ace of hearts, Z cannot make the knave of spades without blocking Y's clubs and moreover, B is given the chance of completing a call before A makes the critical lead.

Problem No. 59.

Score.—A B, 21; Y Z, 20. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y'S HAND (DUMMY).

Z'S HAND (DEALER).



A leads the 8 of diamonds. How ought Z to play the hand and why?

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 28th March 1908.

ONE of the most ardent devotees to automobilism is his Imperial Majesty the German Emperor, and it is doubtful whether any other Royal personage has such a large stud of cars at his command. The latest automobile for Royal use is the Adler car, which is fitted, like the majority of the cars which His Majesty uses, with "Continental" tyres. The recent Indian reliability trials have again furnished evidence of the reliability of the "Continental" tyres in hot climates, for out of the eight cars fitted with these tyres, no less than six secured places and three obtained first prizes, whilst the results of the Buenos Ayres races are gratifying to this make of tyre, "Continentals" securing no less than four firsts and two seconds. At the Or[illegible] races every race run has been won on Continentals.

Reliability and the usefulness of the small car are becoming more apparent every day, and it is no uncommon thing at the present time to find a small car of proved worth being selected for duties of which only a higher-powered car would, a short time ago, have been considered capable. It is, therefore, no matter of surprise to find that an 8-h.p. two-seated Rover car, with wire wheels and magneto ignition, has been chosen by Sir Alfred Sharpe, Governor of Nyasaland, for his use in British Central Africa. A similar car, fitted up with Cape-cart hood and Stepney wheel, has also been supplied by the Rover Company to the Crown agents for the Colonies for use by the Resident Engineer in Southern Nigeria. This emphasises the fact that there is a great future for the reliable small car.

When the Brooklands Automobile Club was formed the committee expressed the intention of encouraging by every means in their power the participation of amateurs in the motor races at Brooklands. The definition of an amateur—difficult in all branches of sport—is especially complicated in connection with motor racing. Yet a differentiation between competitors interested in the motor industry, who have at their disposal the resources of factories and numerous workers, and the private individual who has no such help, is essential. Competitors must therefore be divided not into professionals and amateurs, but into those with trade resources and those with private resources only. The B. A. R. C. have therefore established a body of private competitors, who will be registered on the general lines of "gentlemen riders" on the Turf.

Darracq cars were very successful in the kilometre race recently held at Djursholm, about ten miles from Stockholm, where the Swedish Automobile Club held their first meeting. The events was contested on the ice during a terrific snowstorm, and though snow-ploughs were used to clear the course, the surface was far from ideal. A great number of spectators were present the course being lined with some hundreds of cars. The handicapping was by cylinder dimensions, the classes being for motor-cars of from 40-h.-p., to 60-h.-p., 31-h.-p., to 40-h.-p., and for voiturettes. In the first class the best time for the kilometre was made by Mr. Lindstrom's Darracq (54⅘secs.); in the second class, Mr. Hyden's Darracq won in 51secs.; and the voiturette prize was gained by Mr. Hystrom's Durkopp, which finished in 49secs.

Of the making of catalogues "there is no end"—as King Soloman once observed in connection with the publisher's business of his day. A perusal of a score of makers' catalogues will give the diligent and enquiring motorist in India a mass of information on the first cost of cars of every description, on powers and sizes and what not; but it is often the case that the point of greatest interest, that on which special and detailed information is required either escapes one, or is not really supplied. It is here one naturally turns to some one of experience and as that accommodating party is not always at hand—and India is the country of long distances remember—the pursuit of knowledge is at times attended by difficulties approximating those which confronted Jason when he set forth to discover and retrieve the Golden Fleece. Indian motorists, however, should now find themselves within measurable distance of a happy issue out of their afflictions for the Motor Agency of the London and Paris Exchange, who dispense their favours, from 55—59, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, have just brought out in booklet form the collated experience of actual motor-car users, said information being authentic, up-to-date and eminently useful and practical.

The records shown cover every item of expenditure to which prospective purchasers may be put and the average cost over distances up to ten thousand miles a year. Space is devoted to the consideration of the expense of up-keep of cars from 6 to 45-h.-p., cars of every variety of Cylinder are discussed and steam cars have a special section devoted to them. Notes on housing, garage, treatment of tyres, chains, lubrication etc., are included, the book in short decidedly meets a want and to the attention of the Indian motorists it is most strongly to be recommended and particularly so to those fortunates who may be running Home this hot weather.

The more one reads the account of this so-called race from New York to Paris the more one thinks what an absolute farce the whole thing is. It has taken the competing cars the best part of sixteen days to do the 1,000 miles which separate New York from Chicago. From South Bend to Chesterton, a distance of sixty-four miles, the Thomas and Zastlaw have together spent the best part of £400 for horse haulage and labour in shovelling them out of snow-drifts. Seeing that they have spent so long a time on the first 1,000 miles, it will now be necessary for the cars to be taken on the rail so as to reach Seattle in time to catch the steamer Portland, which will carry them to Valdez—and they call this a race! Apparently there is dissension amongst the passengers of all the cars, and one or two desert every day. The latest to give in is Captain Hansen on the De Dion, the only man who really knew any thing about the route at all. One cannot call it a race, because even in the remote event of any of the cars completing the distance, the probability is it will have been pushed, hauled or carried most of the way.

THE M.C.C.'S AUSTRALIAN TOUR.

THE M.C.C. Team having concluded its visit to Australia is now on the way back to England, where all being well the tourists should arrive in time for the commencement of the cricket season in the Old Country. Inasmuch as the M.C.C. men lost four of the five Test matches, the result of the trip cannot be regarded as at all flattering, but it is not going beyond the truth to say that with a little luck they might have won the rubber. In every one of the test matches they stood at some time or other in a winning position, but they lacked the power to push their advantage home. The weather did much to spoil their chances, and they were unlucky in having players injured. Moreover, they suffered a great misfortune in Mr. A. O. Jones, the Captain, having to stand out of the first three test matches owing to illness. Mr. F. L. Fane did his best as leader in the emergency, but no one would pretend that as a captain he is Mr. Jones's equal.

At a farewell entertainment at Melbourne, the President of the Melbourne Club said that a balance of three to two instead of four to one would have perhaps properly represented the difference between the two sides, as he added that the bowling of the losers was equal to anything ever sent from England. This high compliment applied chiefly to Mr. J. N. Crawford, Barnes and Fielder, upon whom in the test matches the bulk of the work devolved. All three of them did brilliant things, and it was unfortunate that the slow bowlers could not give them better support.

Blythe only played in one test match, and Rhodes was far indeed from approaching the success as a bowler that rewarded him when he first visited Australia four years ago. Had the team included a slow bowler of the type of Mr. Bosanquet there might have been a very different story to tell.

A sad error of judgment, which has never been explained, was committed in the first test match in playing Mr. R. A. Young as wicket-keeper in preference to Humphries. Up to the time he was laid aside by injury, Humphries earned golden opinions, being regarded on all hands as one of the finest wicket-keepers in the world. It was always feared that the batting would be deficient in class, and, as events proved, the Australians were far superior in solidity and run-getting power on the big occasions.

The two Notts professionals, George Gunn and Hardstaff, carried off the batting honours, Gunn heading the averages, and Hardstaff, who has added in an enormous degree to his reputation, being easily first in his aggregate of runs. Gunn, who made 100 in both the test matches at Sydney, did not go out as a regular member of the team, but it was arranged from the first that he would play whenever required. To judge from the comments of the Australian critics, he showed far finer form than anyone else on the side. Rhodes stands third in the list with an average of 46·50. He played in every match except one, and his aggregate of 930 runs is exceeded by only three other members of the team. Hobbs, after a bad start, played consistently well, but Mr. K. L. Hutchings, apart from two or three brilliant innings, was very disappointing, being apparently unable to play his natural game.

In all the team took part in 19 matches (including only one against odds), their record coming out at seven wins, four defeats and eight draws. The test matches when they began dwarfed everything, but the early games against the single States excited great interest. Certainly the Englishmen did nothing so remarkable as their victory in November by 408 runs over the full strength of New South Wales.

The averages of both the English and Australian players in the five test games work out as follows:—

Lawyer.—"You say you made an examination of the premises. What did you find?"
Witness.—"Oh, nothing of consequence a 'beggarly account of empty boxes,' as Shakespeare says."
Lawyer.—"Never mind what Shakespeare says. He will be summoned, and can testify for himself if he knows anything about the case."

Egbert.—"I don't really remember."
Bacon.—"Don't remember when he was born!"
Egbert.—"Oh, yes, I remember when he was born, but I don't remember when he first saw light of day. You see he was born in London."

A new French mitrailleuse to fire 800 shots per minute, and an American scheme to destroy an army in four minutes by means of electric waves of 20,000,000 horse power, are announced. Thus do science, civilisation, and the cause of sweet humanity go hand in hand.

For every pony Rs. 10.

For subsequent measurement of every pony not passed for life Rs. 5.

Station Committees requiring his services should communicate to him direct, and must remit double first class fares for the journey. 1st April to 15th April, Umballa; 16th April to 31st July, Simla; 1st August to 30th September, Poona; 1st October to 30th November, Umballa; 1st December to 15th January, Calcutta; 16th January to 15th February, Lucknow; 16th February to 15th March, Meerut; 16th March to 31st March, Umballa.

(8) The I.P.A. Committee are empowered to delegate anyone to act as official measurer should the occasion arise.

OUR London correspondent, when up at Birmingham last month, visited Messrs. Webley and Scott and had the privilege of seeing a sample of their new and improved Automatic Pistol (·25 or 6·35 m/m calibre), which whilst combining all the advantages of the ordinary automatic weapon, presents further claims to consideration in that it is more simple in construction, its mechanism is stronger, its weight and bulk have been reduced. Unquestionably it is the lightest, simplest and most perfect pocket pistol now produced and it will be good news to Indian sportsmen to hear that it will shortly be placed on the market. Messrs. Webley and Scott were, a matter of fact, only waiting for the completion of the big stock they were producing to offer it, for the demand is likely to be brisk and big. The following particulars should be noted:—

Weight of the Pistol, without Magazine ... 11 oz.	Depth ... ... 2½ in.
Weight of Magazine ... 12 drams	Capacity of Magazine 6 shots.
Length over all ... 4½ in.	Weight of Powder ... 2 grains.
	Weight of Bullet ... 45 grains.

Penetration at 20 yards—Four 1 in. Pine boards placed 1 in. apart.

"GUY FAWKES," the popular hippo at the London Zoo, was found dead in her tank on the 23rd ultimo. Looked like a case of suicide, if so it was probably suggested to the poor brute as a protest against a climate that has lately been laid on entirely in the interests of the polar bears. She was born in the gardens on the 5th November 1872, and was the best liked of all the hippos there. Her keeper observed to an interviewer, as (like Mr. Wegg's elder brother) he "wiped away a tear" that she weighed three tons, ate one and a half trusses of hay daily, was a lovable creature and "she passed peacefully away." She leaves no family.

"Dick," one of the most distinguished gorillas in the collection, preceded "Guy Fawkes" to the happy hunting grounds by one day.

DETAILS of the proceedings at the Lincoln meeting given in our review of English sport this week, show how the flat racing was ushered in. Promise of interesting and good sport seemed well assured when last advices left London. It is, perhaps, scarcely realised by people with no knowledge of racing what immense financial interests it involves.

Scattered about the different stables are nearly 3,500 horses, and the cost of training them alone runs into huge figures. On a basis of 50s. weekly for each, which is about the average charge for a public trainer, it works out at £455,000 for the year.

Exactly what these 3,500 represent in original expenditure is a very difficult matter to calculate. There is little available data beyond the sale records, and these account for only a minority of them. Of the juveniles, 426 were purchased last year as yearlings for 129,101 guineas, which gives an average of about 303 guineas. Of the 1906 yearlings, the 649 disposed of at auction fetched 172,518 guineas, and it is a reasonable assumption that the great majority of these are now in training as three-year-olds.

Many of the privately bred majority are by expensive sires, while, of course, their dams have also to be considered, so that in striking an average of £200 for the 3,500 one would probably be under rather than over the mark.

That means the huge sum of £700,000 added on to the £455,000 for training.

Jockey's fees and railway charges are heavy items, forfeits literally run away with money, and then there are presents after a win, a practice which has been grossly abused by rich or gambling owners. One jockey, not the least celebrated either, lately refused to acknowledge a cheque for £50 for riding the winner of a £200 handicap.

What are the possibilities of gain? Well, upwards of half a million—£533,219 to be exact—was the aggregate value of the races won last year; but nobody must imagine that all this was added money. Plenty of the races were subscription affairs, in which owners simply ran for their own money.

A scandalous instance of this was the St. Leger, which did not cost the Doncaster corporation a farthing, and never would have done, so greedy are they in collaring every possible shilling for the relief of the rates, if the Jockey Club had not insisted that from this year onward the race should be of the same guaranteed value as the Derby, viz., £6,500. Last year 3,455 horses ran, and the percentage of successful ones was barely over one in three. Of the 435 winning owners, 155, being over one-third, had to be content with a single victory, generally in a small race.

Every sovereign won on the Turf entails the expenditure of many more to win it. Every owner starts the season with a deficit on his year's racing staring him in the face.

After all Rs. 32 per doz. "WHITE HORSE" WHISKY IS THE BEST.

AS SUPPLIED TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Last month there died at Epsom the holder of a sort of sporting record. Mr. Robert Dearle—aged ninety at the time of his demise—had seen the Derby on eighty successive occasions.

The struggle for possession of the old Calcutta Cup was more than usually interesting this year, it might in some respects be said to have been sensational and was witnessed by about 25,000 people. The game proved in every way worthy of the sides, the occasion, and the conditions. It was fast, open, and interesting. Scotland in the end winning by 3 goals (two dropped) and a try (16 points) to 2 goals (10 points) after England had led at half-time by 10 points to 7. The match will be memorable not only for the high quality and pace of the play, but also for the sensational scoring during the first eighteen minutes. During this period England scored two tries, both of which were converted, while Scotland replied with a dropped goal and a try. This scoring is without parallel in the history of the match, while only one of the previous 34 games produced six scores. Full details are given in our London Sporting Letter.

An account of the final stage in the English Military Singles Rackets Championship is given in "Sport in England" to-day. By defeating Captain A. C. G. Luther (1st Battalion Yorkshire Light Infantry), Lieutenant J. J. Astor (1st Life Guards) earned the distinction of being twice a champion, as he and Lord Somers won the doubles the previous week for the Life Guards. Astor's success was very popular. He was playing an uphill game for four games out of five, but class told, and showing magnificent coolness and judgment in the deciding game he just got home after a most exciting struggle.

"What with the smell of scented women and the motors," said a dear old London magistrate recently, "the streets are becoming unbearable." This association of aromas is a cruel libel on a comparatively inoffensive vehicle. May be; but our friend the magistrate has surely been peregrinating where his footsteps should not wander, aiblins Piccadilly or Leicester Square about supper time!

Writing on the 27th ultimo our London correspondent, who had seen a good deal of the training of the 'Varsity crews, remarks in many respects the preparation will long be remembered as decidedly unorthodox. To start with Cambridge broke through convention by proceeding straight from home waters to the tideway at Putney; then Oxford indulged in a full course trial within a few hours of arrival at Putney, and now both crews are indulging in every effort to perfect themselves in flying starts. It is a great and good thing to get off well—but it is also handy to be capable of lasting it out well; riverside critics were divided in opinion and there was considerable headshaking in some quarters. Then influenza threatened at the most critical period of their preparation to lay out the Oxford crew, but they pulled through in a manner little short of heroic. The Cambridge men declare they escaped the "flu" by their devotion to oranges: but nowadays there is always some food fad connected with the training of the light and dark blues, is there not!

One of the best-known sportsmen in Great Britain is Lord Desborough, who, as chairman of the British Olympic Council, will, with his council, have control of the great Olympic Games to take place next July in the magnificent Stadium now being erected in connection with the Franco-British Exhibition at Shepherd's Bush.

In all the arduous preliminary work Lord Desborough has been so conciliatory and yet so businesslike that hardly any trouble has occurred, and the consequence is that there has been issued a comprehensive code of laws governing international sport, in which the best ideas of every country as to judging and other pertinent matters are included, which will, no doubt, form a permanent guide to the Olympic Councils of those other countries who will in future have to carry out the recurring Olympiads.

In connection with this vast enterprise there has been formed an Imperial Sports Club, of which Lord Desborough is president, and his lordship will also act in the same capacity for the great Sports Exhibition which is to be held in conjunction with the great Olympiad. This exhibition will afford travellers from all parts of the world the unique opportunity of seeing gathered together in one space all the latest improvements in sporting goods and appliances, and the vast arena, with its field, bath, and tracks, will allow of practical trials of such appliances being made on the spot.

Lord Desborough was born in 1855 and was educated at Harrow and Balliol College, Oxford. In 1887 he married Ethel, the daughter of the Hon'ble Julian and Lady Adine Fane. He played in the Harrow eleven in 1873 and 1874, represented Oxford in the three miles race against Cambridge in 1876 and rowed against Cambridge in 1877-78. His lordship was president of the athletic and beat clubs of his university, has climbed the Alps, hunted big game in the Rocky Mountains, India, etc., swum twice across Niagara, stroked an eight across Channel, sculled from Oxford to London, and was special correspondent in the Suakin campaign.

Since leaving his University, Lord Desborough has always taken keen interest in sport. For three years he held the amateur punting championship, and as late as 1904 he won the Military Tournament Epee Prize. In 1906, when appointed by the British Government to represent England at the Olympic Games at Athens, he took part in the fencing contest, and reached the final.

For swimming and angling Lord Desborough has done much. As president of the Bath Club he has combined practical knowledge with business acumen, and the institution in Dover Street, Piccadilly, is now a great social and financial success. For the Royal Life-Saving Society he has worked strenuously, and it is largely due to his efforts that this humane body, of which he is acting president, received Royal recognition, and also the gift of an International Cup from His Majesty the King, and a trophy from His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Being a skilled angler himself, his lordship has interested himself in fish preservation, and has made personal efforts to re-introduce salmon into the Thames.

A cable from Marseilles announces the death on his way home of Colonel F. S. Peck, I.M.S., which news has been received with universal regret in Calcutta and Behar where Colonel Peck was well known. No details are to hand but it is feared that the serious accident Colonel Peck met with at home last July, and from the effects of which he had not entirely recovered when he returned to Calcutta, was ultimately the cause of his death. It will be remembered he was knocked down by a train at Sheringham in Norfolk. Colonel Peck's health had not been good during the recent cold weather and he left Calcutta on the 28th ultimo, under orders of the Medical Board. He was a good sportsman, a keen volunteer and a popular member of society.

The Annual General Meeting of the Indian Football Association was held at the Dalhousie Institute last evening and was attended by representatives of sixteen affiliated clubs.

Lieutenant C. W. Ford, representing the United Services, was unanimously voted to the chair, and, the notice convening the meeting having been duly read the business on the Agenda was proceeded with. The report and accounts for 1907 were taken as read and passed unanimously and the following clubs were then selected to be represented on the Council for the ensuing season:—Dalhousie, H. L. I., Y. M. C. A., Gordon Highlanders, Rangers, Hornets, Customs, Mohun Bagan, National Association, and Sova Bazar.

Messrs. Douglas Baker (C.F.C.) and D. L. Walker (Caledonia) were again elected Joint Honorary Secretaries and Treasurers, and Mr. Archy Birkmyre was unanimously elected Vice-President of the Association.

The question of defining senior and junior clubs was then taken up, it being eventually decided that the rules as at present constituted provide sufficient definition.

The meeting then dispersed on the usual vote of thanks to the chair.

Messrs. Everett and Co. are publishing this month a new book on miniature rifle shooting entitled "The British Miniature Rifle," by Mr. W. W. Greener, the well known gunmaker and author of "The Gun and its Development," "Sharpshooting for Sport and War," etc. The book has been written to supply just that information which the tyro requires. It deals with the subject in a simple way and, while presuming the reader to be a novice, yet gives many hints that cannot fail to interest the expert shot.

The annual Merchants and Bankers' Fours Boat race of the Madras B.C. will be rowed on the Adyar on the 25th instant.

The Marylebone Cricket Club has issued invitations to South Africa and Australia to play a series of triangular contests.

It is with deep regret we have to record the death on Sunday morning last, of Mrs. G. F. Greenhill, the wife of the proprietor of Messrs. Cook and Co. Complications set in after an attack of cholera and the efforts of four doctors were unavailing. A fine horsewoman, Mrs. Greenhill was extremely popular in Calcutta. We respectfully tender to Mr. Greenhill our sincere sympathy in his sad bereavement.

When one stops to consider it is surprising how very few men in India take walking seriously either as a regular exercise or as a preparation for something else. In our early morning tramps round the Calcutta maidan or in the suburbs how many walkers do we see? We can count the habituals on the fingers of one hand. Perhaps there is a certain monotony in it, and the maidan does not always teem with attraction to the pedestrian; but surely this holds good in respect of the same tennis courts, cricket or football ground, racket court or ride we regularly patronise! Brisk walking, as opposed to the practically useless stroll, is par excellence the best exercise for those who are verging on or have unhappily passed the period of life when the circumference of the "lower chest" is a matter of serious consideration.

A great authority on personal hygiene once said that walking was the father of all active exercise. This should be made the motto of every middle-aged person who decides to throw off a period of lethargy and to seek health in outdoor exercise. Seeing that heart is the one essential which must be consulted gauging the amount of exercise one can take. king is the best preliminary training for any form sport. Its peculiar fitness lies in the fact that re is no possibility of straining the heart in walk- If a man, thoroughly out of condition, chooses first opportunity he gets for indulging in his ourite form of exercise, be it tennis, cycling, or y other strenuous sport, he is very apt to be carried by the enthusiasm of the moment, and to think at in any case he is rapidly accumulating health en if he does run the risk of being sore and lame ail his muscles on the following day. He forgets at besides being in danger of straining his limb or dy muscles he may also be asking altogether too uch of his heart.

In walking there is very little danger of his "overoing it" to the extent of injuring his heart. In ny active exercise the muscles demand an increased upply of blood. The heart must work with increased igour to supply this demand. The lungs also are alled upon for extra effort. In walking, however, hough the heart and lung action is increased, the xtra work is slight in amount but continued, and as nearly all the muscles of the body are in active use, the muscles themselves will warn one to stop before any real strain can fall on the heart.

In vigorous exercise, such as in tennis or bicycling or rowing, the reverse is the case. The body and limb muscles, while their work is increased, are not put on strain to the same extent as is the heart. To supply the demand for blood made by actively used muscles the heart beats faster and normally empties itself each beat of all the blood which has entered it from the lungs. With continuous strenuous exercise the heart, if not in good training, will, like any other muscle, tire and refuse to do its work completely. The result is that a certain portion of the blood which flows into the heart from the lungs at each beat is not pumped out into the arteries and a certain amount accumulates in the heart cavity. With the next beat the normal amount of blood flows in, and, added to the amount accumulated, gives the tired heart even more work to do. Being unable to thoroughly contract in their tired condition, and to pump out this increased amount of blood, the walls dilate, and the result is "heart-strain." Such a condition will, of course, in normal cases pass off in a few days, but the sensations in the meantime are apt to make the sufferer believe that he is past the days of taking active exercise, and he may be even discouraged into looking upon himself as an old man. The fault is not with his heart, but with himself for not realising that this organ is a muscle which he has allowed to degenerate through disuse, and that it has rebelled against such treatment.

The final game in the Quetta Divisional Army Hockey Tournament was played on the 13th instant when the 104th Rifles beat the 128th Pioneers by two goals to one. In the first round the 104th beat the 7th Hariana Lancers by eleven goals to nil; the 1/7th Gurkhas beat the 106th Hazara Pioneers by five to one. In the second the 127th Baluchis scratched to the 128th Pioneers; the 2/7th Gurkhas beat the 124th Baluchis by one to love and the 104th beat the 1/7th Gurkhas by two to love; both goals were obtained in the extra time played: the 126th Baluchis scratched.

In the semi-finals the 104th beat the 130th Baluchis by one goal to nil, close on the finish, and the 128th Pioneers beat the 2/7th Gurkhas by three goals to two after a draw at half time.

A meeting of representatives of the various communities was held at the Bombay Gymkhana last week to arrange dates and discuss matters in connection with the Presidency triangular cricket matches.

The representatives were:—Bombay, Commander Vines, R.I.M., and Mr. Vlasto; Poona, Mr. Clifton; the Parsis, Mr. Divecha; the Hindus, Mr. Mehta and Mr. Naik. Additional.—Captain Greig.

The following resolutions were passed:—That the first Presidency fixture will be 17th, 18th and 19th September and the final 21st, 22nd 23rd September.

This year Byes will be drawn as usual. In future years the champion XI. will play the winners of the first match. In the event of a drawn game in the final, byes will be drawn again the next year. In the event of a draw in the first match it has been agreed that the teams shall toss up as to who shall play in the final. Bombay Presidency is recognised as Bombay Presidency and the Southern Command. Agreed that last year's arrangements with regard to territorial limits should be carried out. Should any doubt arise as to the qualifications of players in these matches, the names of such players shall be submitted to representatives of the Presidency.

Byes were drawn with the following result:—17th, 18th and 19th September, Presidency vs. Parsis. 21st, 22nd, and 23rd September, Hindus vs. winners of first match.

Speaking at the recent annual dinner of the Motor Union of Western India, the Hon'ble G. O. Dunn, Chairman, said:—"Next I may say by way of reassuring those who have criticised (and I am bound to say not without good reason) our recent reliability trials that the Committee have definitely decided that there shall be no more such trials as far as this Union is concerned. They have had their day and there is so little to choose nowadays between the best cars of different makes that such trials are apt to be misused and the Union promoting them thus brought into some degree of disrepute. I will refrain from saying anything more on this subject."

The Bangalore Hockey Tournament was concluded on the 14th instant, when the Cheshire Regiment beat the Royal Engineers in the final game by two goals to nil.

On Monday playing in a four-ball match at Barrackpore, with Messrs. Melrose, Fergusson and Whiteley, Mr. Bruce Sinclair completed the round in the remarkable low score of 73 made up as follows:—

Out	4,	4,	4,	4,	4,	4,	4,	3,	4=35	73
In	4,	4,	4,	5,	5,	5,	3,	4	4=38

Mr. Melrose was 76.

Mr. Sinclair is playing a very strong game just now. On Sunday he returned a 76—out 41; in 35. The second half being a very fine exposition of Golf.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 27th March 1908.

I presume little more than a faint, far echo of the Peckham bye-election has reached India. It has been boomed ad nauseum in London, for days the press has bored to death those readers who prefer their politics in homœopathic doses and appreciate the convenient and concise paragraph dose more than the distressing six column drench in this connection. It was a "stupendous victory" (vide contents' bills) for the Unionist candidate Mr. H. C. Gooch who defeated the Liberal (and some say ill-mannered) T. Gautrey by the conclusive majority of 2,494 votes. The capture of Peckham was, of course, the occasion of wild rejoicing among Unionists and others, and considerable excitement in House and Lobby. The "others" I refer to were the vociferating mobs who made last Tuesday night hideous in many parts of London and whose political gladness took the form of comic choruses, brass bands and yells.

That mischievous and misguided person Mr. Kier Hardie, returned to England at the beginning of the week and has, of course, been copiously interviewed. To give him his due he is, amusing, if preposterous; you found him as in India did you not. Here is a sample of the flap doodle with which he has returned replete, it was on tap to a Daily Mail man:—"As to India, the Labour leader was much impressed by the condition of the people in native States compared with those under direct British rule. He intends to urge that a small commission should be sent out to study this comparison.

"The native ruler is far more in touch with those he rules than British officials can be. He embodies the Eastern notion of a ruler. He is the father of his people. For example, they pay to him by way of taxes a certain proportion of their crop. If it is a poor crop his share is small. When they suffer he suffers too. It is the cast-iron character of British taxation which weighs upon them. Unless the harvest is a total failure nothing is remitted. To the native there is nothing fatherly about the British Raj; it is merely a machine.

"The danger of Mahomedan and Hindu fighting in the event of India being allowed gradually to govern herself more is, in my opinion, absurdly exaggerated. They meet freely on public bodies. They eat together. They are good friends. The caste system, too, is rapidly weakening. India is by no means the hot-bed of religious and racial animosities which many people at home imagine it to be."

But enough of political reference, which I know is forbidden ground to me, Mr. Editor. Let me carol the praises of dear old Dame Nature, who has wielded her wand during the night and astonished and delighted London with an ideal spring day. The warmth and sunshine are welcomed effusively; everyone, whether on business, or pleasure, is going about smiling, we are once more alert and cheerful and the weariness and boredom of many weeks has disappeared from our faces. Even the animals and birds bear eloquent testimony to the prevailing geniality, "all nature is smiling and gay," and Spring has come at last.

[If it should snow ere I close this I will mention it in a P.S.]

Some people are asserting that it is as certain as anything with which the South-Eastern Railway is connected can be that before very long—and the sooner the better—goods and passengers will be able to travel from London to Paris and from Paris to London without change or transhipment.

The van or carriage in which they begin their journey will be the van or carriage in which they will end it. There will be no more struggling with hats and belongings on the gangways at Dover, Folkestone, and Newhaven; no more shifting from train to steamer and from steamer back again to train; no more interruptions of sleep on the night journey; no more breaking of bulk or muddle of loading and unloading, whereat all ye Indian holiday makers en route for the "little village" viâ Brindisi or Marseilles should smile.

It is the Channel ferry that is to work the miracle. Of all the schemes for improving communications between England and France that have been put forward in the last hundred years it alone holds the field. Its rivals have all been squelched. Tunnelling below the Channel bed, tunnelling through the sea with tubes placed on the bed, spanning the Straits with an upraised bridge, spanning them with a submerged bridge—all these projects have been formulated, discussed, and finally abandoned. Given, the co-operation and good will of the various authorities involved on both sides of the Channel, there is absolutely no reason why in a few years a man should not be able to travel from London to Paris or the Riviera, or even further afield than that, without making a single change.

Admirers of the writings of "John Strange Winter" (Mrs. Stannard), will regret to read the following which I cull from an evening paper:—

Under the failure of Mr. Arthur Stannard, husband of the well-known authoress, John Strange Winter, his creditors met at the London Bankruptcy Court to-day. The debtor, who returned his liabilities at £855 and his assets at £1, attributed his failure to the illness of himself and his wife, and the consequent falling off of her earning powers. He lost a leg many years ago, and has since managed his wife's publications and affairs. He now consented to an order of adjudication.

Doubtless the "Blue Post," the "Bristol," the "Continental" and other well-known favourite haunts of men about town are not altogether unfamiliar to Anglo-Indian exiles, some of whom may be interested to hear that the licensee of the latter hotel has just been fined for permitting the premises to be the habitual resort of the half world. "A. I. Es." will, of course, recall how their nerves have been shaken by the time-honoured disorderly exhibitions incidental to closing time and they will, perhaps, be rejoiced to hear that several other houses are likely to be similarly noticed in the near future—perhaps not. This is yet another instance of the concern shown in certain quarters for the moral welfare of the Londoner: we grow more good daily without a doubt.

He has come at last—the Japanese globe trotter! A band of no less than fifty Japs, male and female, has set out with the deliberate intention of touring countries other than their own, and the announcement is made that on the 1st May London may expect to be startled by the descent upon its thoroughfares and public places of this big party of little people from the land of the Rising Sun. They come under the wing of Cook and give us their company for a fortnight. How long, I wonder, will it be ere His Highness the Bengali Babu follows suit and necessitates an addition to one of the deliverance clauses in the Litany.

To our great relief we hear that one of the worst eyesores in London is at last to be removed. The Aldwych wilderness, where once stood Wych Street and its classic environs and which has been nothing but hoarding, posters, noxious weeds and desolation for so long, is now to be taken in hand in real earnest by the builders and by Whitsuntide several important

"The danger of Mahomedan and Hindu fighting in the event of India being allowed gradually to govern herself more is, in my opinion, absurdly exaggerated. They meet freely on public bodies. They eat together. They are good friends. The caste system, too, is rapidly weakening. India is by no means the hot-bed of religious and racial animosities which many people at home imagine it to be."

But enough of political reference, which I know is forbidden ground to me, Mr. Editor. Let me carol the praises of dear old Dame Nature, who has wielded her wand during the night and astonished and delighted London with an ideal spring day. The warmth and sunshine are welcomed effusively; everyone, whether on business, or pleasure, is going about smiling, we are once more alert and cheerful and the weariness and boredom of many weeks has disappeared from our faces. Even the animals and birds bear eloquent testimony to the prevailing geniality, "all nature is smiling and gay," and Spring has come at last.

[If it should snow ere I close this I will mention it in a P.S.]

Some people are asserting that it is as certain as anything with which the South-Eastern Railway is connected can be that before very long—and the sooner the better—goods and passengers will be able to travel from London to Paris and from Paris to London without change or transhipment.

The van or carriage in which they begin their journey will be the van or carriage in which they will end it. There will be no more struggling with hats and belongings on the gangways at Dover Folkestone, and Newhaven; no more shifting from train to steamer and from steamer back again to train; no more interruptions of sleep on the night journey; no more breaking of bulk or muddle of loading and unloading, whereat all ye Indian holiday makers en route for the "little village" viâ Brindisi or Marseilles should smile.

It is the Channel ferry that is to work the miracle. Of all the schemes for improving communications between England and France that have been put forward in the last hundred years it alone holds the field. Its rivals have all been squelched. Tunnelling below the Channel bed, tunnelling through the sea with tubes placed on the bed, spanning the Straits with an upraised bridge, spanning them with a submerged bridge—all these projects have been formulated, discussed, and finally abandoned. Given, the co-operation and good will of the various authorities involved on both sides of the Channel, there is absolutely no reason why in a few years a man should not be able to travel from London to Paris or the Riviera, or even further afield than that, without making a single change.

Admirers of the writings of "John Strange Winter" (Mrs. Stannard), will regret to read the following which I cull from an evening paper:—

Under the failure of Mr. Arthur Stannard, husband of the well-known authoress, John Strange Winter, his creditors met at the London Bankruptcy Court to-day. The debtor, who returned his liabilities at £855 and his assets at £1, attributed his failure to the illness of himself and his wife, and the consequent falling off of her earning powers. He lost a leg many years ago, and has since managed his wife's publications and affairs. He now consented to an order of adjudication.

Doubtless the "Blue Post," the "Bristol," the "Continental" and other well-known favourite haunts of men about town are not altogether unfamiliar to Anglo-Indian exiles, some of whom may be interested to hear that the licensee of the latter hotel has just been fined for permitting the premises to be the habitual resort of the half world. "A. I. Es." will, of course, recall how their nerves have been shaken by the time-honoured disorderly exhibitions incidental to closing time and they will, perhaps, be rejoiced to hear that several other houses are likely to be similarly noticed in the near future—perhaps not. This is yet another instance of the concern shown in certain quarters for the moral welfare of the Londoner: we grow more good daily without a doubt.

He has come at last—the Japanese globe trotter! A band of no less than fifty Japs, male and female, has set out with the deliberate intention of touring countries other than their own, and the announcement is made that on the 1st May London may expect to be startled by the descent upon its thoroughfares and public places of this big party of little people from the land of the Rising Sun. They come under the wing of Cook and give us their company for a fortnight. How long, I wonder, will it be ere His Highness the Bengali Babu follows suit and necessitates an addition to one of the deliverance clauses in the Litany.

To our great relief we hear that one of the worst eyesores in London is at last to be removed. The Aldwych wilderness, where once stood Wych Street and its classic environs and which has been nothing but hoarding, posters, noxious weeds and desolation for so long, is now to be taken in hand in real earnest by the builders and by Whitsuntide several important edifices will be in course of erection thereon. The ridiculous terms of letting were the stimulating block hitherto, but the decision of the L. C. C. to revise them has resulted in this immediate activity. The new buildings include Government offices, a big bank, insurance and merchants' offices and the homes of some important associations. The total cost of making the new streets and acquiring the properties was £5,000,000, and for eighteen months the late Council made no effort to let the land which had cost so much.

There is very little theatrical "gup" to retail this week. The most important item is the fire at Drury Lane Theatre which, for the fourth time in its long history, was threatened with extinction very early on Tuesday morning. The stage and part of the roof were entirely destroyed, the property room and many "props" were extensively damaged and it will probably cost over £50,000 to put things right in the home of stupendous spectacle. The fire-proof curtain saved the rest of the building and the promptitude of the fire brigade did the rest: but this morning a run round on my bike disclosed a confused mass of charred scenery and properties below, bare walls and blackened beams standing out against the sky above. Much of the property destroyed belongs to the "Sins of Society" which was to have been removed next month. The work of reconstruction has already begun!

Mr. George Edwardes has just decided that the date originally contemplated by him for the first performance of the new Gaiety piece shall be adhered to. It will accordingly be produced on the evening of Saturday, 25th April. The book is, the work of Mr. George Grossmith, junior, and Mr. Graham Hill, while the title, provisionally if not absolutely decided on, will be "Havana," where the action of the story is laid. Mr. Edwardes promises us a rich feast of colouring in the matter of scenery and costumes, the locality lending itself particularly to sumptuous pictorial treatment. Miss Evie Greene, as the "Carmenesque" heroine, heads a company of exceptional strength, in which, however, practically none of the old Gaiety favourites will be found.

Miss Marie Tempest is to appear in a new play by Mr. W. Somerset Maugham, at the Comedy Theatre immediately after Easter, under the management of Messrs. Charles Frohman and Arthur Chudleigh. The new piece is a modern society comedy in three acts entitled "Worthley's Entire," and a propos of the much-discussed Licensing Bill it has a name very much up-to-date.

At the moment Sir John Hare, the original Sam Gerridge of "Caste" is being honoured in London comes the sad news of the death of Miss Ada Dyas, a foremost actress of the "sixties" and "seventies," and one of the few survivors of the original "Caste" company which went into the provinces to perform the Robertson comedies, with one result—among others—of utterly revolutionising the theatrical "stock" system of the country. Miss Dyas, as perhaps some old "Qui Hais" may remember, was the first Esther Eccles in the provinces, and in that capacity confirmed the reputation she had formerly acquired.

Things are not particularly brisk at the Halls just now, though some good turns here and there rescue the bills from being absolutely dull. To mark the fiftieth anniversary of the siege of Lucknow, Miss Constance Collier was this week reciting at the Empire Theatre "The Leaguer of Lucknow," an intensely dramatic piece by Henry Hamilton. The popular actress brings everything that perfect elocution and great dramatic gifts can to the aid of the poem, and was received with much enthusiasm.

Everyone is going to see Miss Maud Allan at the Palace just now. One might have thought that it would be hard enough in these days to find a new variety of dancing or even a new method of performing the many varieties at present known to the public. Miss Allan, however, seems to have a style all her own, and dances not only with her feet but with her hands. Even archdeacons are writing to the daily press about her performance, though less in admiration than for the purpose of criticising the fact (known to them through the medium of the newspapers only) that the head of John the Baptist on a charger is one of the "props" used by Miss Allan in her dance, "Salome."

The new turn at the Hippodrome surely cannot appeal to any one with decent feelings and a perception for the fitness of things. Some weeks ago the management, in their insatiable quest of novelty, were ill-advised enough to attempt to bring over Raisuli, the notorious brigand, and some of his band, with the intention of including them as star items on their programme! Their emissary was, happily, not quite successful in his egregious mission, for he failed to catch the arch-bandit—some people suggested the enterprise would have been not altogether lacking in humour if the bandit had caught him—but he has returned with some of the gang and the management has had the timerity to present them to the British public in their fantastic and obviously stage-designed, garb, their idiotic and uncouth prancings and stampings (described as "dancing") and their meaningless and incessant resort to blank ammunitions. I am of those old-fashioned enough to think that if one wants to gaze on criminals and vagabonds, thieves and cut-throats and the like, a visit to the Courts, the jails or the purlieus—would suffice. I do not expect them to be served up on a menu de divertissement to which the most respectable and the most talented artistes in London contribute. I wonder what the said good people think of their "brother artistes." I agree with those who regard this innovation as scandalous and pray for its speedy removal while hoping that similar excursions into the seamy side of existence may not be made for our "amusement." The Hippodrome management, usually exhibits a good enough taste and discrimination in its catering: methinks they show neither on this instance.

Early last Tuesday morning we received the announcement of the death of the Duke of Devonshire: he died at the Hotel Metropole, Cannes, of heart failure following pneumonia. On his distinguished career as a hereditary legislator it is not my province to touch, but I may be permitted to allude to his reputation in another direction. As a sportsman no one in the history of the Turf was more honoured than the deceased Duke, whose loss will be deeply regretted by all racegoers. In the early days of his Turf career, when Lord Hartington, he raced for a few years under the name of Mr. J. C. Stuart. In 1877 he carried off the One Thousand Guineas with Belphœbe, while in 1902 his grace's colours won the Eclipse Stakes, but probably the best horse he ever owned during his long association with the Turf was Morion, which in 1890 won the Royal Hunt Cup, and the following year the Ascot Gold Cup.

The Duke was delighted with these two victories, as the son of Barcaldine was bred by himself. His grace owned some other highly-bred horses, but was never successful in carrying off any of the plums of the racecourse the Two Thousand Guineas, the Derby, the Oaks, or the St. Leger. He was elected a member of the Jockey Club in 1883. By his death several nominations become void.

Alas! my obituary notices this week must include reference to the death, at Surbiton, on Tuesday, of Sir Auckland Colvin, a distinguished Indian Lieutenant-Governor and the son of a Lieutenant-Governor, and mutiny veteran. Sir Auckland Colvin had just completed his seventieth birthday. This makes the fifth celebrated administrator who has gone out since the beginning of the year. Sir Auckland Colvin's death was closely preceded by the demise of the brothers Stratchey, Sir Lepel Griffin and Sir Denzil Ibbetson!

Review.

THE NATIVES OF NORTHERN INDIA.*

An authentic and trustworthy popular account of the natives of British India (in the widest sense of that term) was undoubtedly wanted; and we are therefore pleased to welcome the volume before us, in which Mr. W. Crooke, late of the Bengal Civil Service, has done his best to fill this gap, so far as Northern India is concerned. As the volume includes the natives of Afghanistan, Ladak, Nepal, etc., in the North, while to the southward it embraces those of the Northern portions of the Central Provinces, it will be easily recognised that the author has been compelled to avoid details, and to confine his observations to the more salient features connected with the environment, racial types, social and industrial life, and religious beliefs of the races discussed. Possibly he may help to open the eyes of those well-meaning but misguided persons in England who are for ever repeating the parrot cry of "India for the Indians," when he states in the preface that in dealing with this extensive region it has been necessary, so far as possible, to avoid general statements concerning its inhabitants. "The Punjabi," he writes, "stands to the Bengali much in the same relation as Scotsmen to Italians: they differ one from the other in race, character, language, and social institutions."

The book opens with a brief but excellent account of the physical features of the country and of its history, binding up with a discussion of the influence upon the people of their natural surroundings. As regards the last item, the author remarks that there is perhaps no area of equal extent in the world where environment has so indelibly stamped its impression upon the people as in India and the adjacent mountains. We have for instance, in Kumaun and on the Tibetan frontier races living amid snow for the greater part of the year, whereas those inhabiting the Ganges delta seldom experience a temperature lower than 52° F. even in mid-winter. Contrast, again, a rainfall of something approaching sixty feet annually on the borders of Assam with the almost rainless deserts of Rajputana and Baluchistan.

In the deltas and larger cities education flourishes, while, as a rule, the labourers of the plains are steeped in ignorance and superstition. Savagery still prevails among the frontier tribes of Assam and in Orissa; the Juangs of the latter district having but recently discarded the use of garments made of leaves. In the plains of the Punjab agriculture has reached an advanced stage, while among the wilder hill-tribes of Central India periodical felling and burning the forests does duty for cultivation. Similar differences characterize social relations. In the Himalaya, for example, political divisions depend almost solely upon the configuration of the country. The areas of cultivated land are necessarily restricted, isolated, and dependent upon irrigation; and the natural tendency is, therefore, to the establishment of petty kingdoms, without inclination or means for federation. Similarly the Gujars of the plains, with their villages perched on alluvial plateaux, tend to become more or less insulated; whereas in the lowlands of Bengal everything induces community of type and institutions.

In the plains, with their dreary monotony of scenery, torrid heat at one time of year and torrential rains at another, a melancholy disposition is induced among the populace by their physical surroundings, aided it may be by the congested condition of the population in many districts, and the powers of the priesthood and the bonds of caste where Hinduism is dominant. The natives, writes our author, "seem to talk of little but food and bargaining, of the petty squabbles and jealousies of the hamlet. To save or borrow a little money for a wedding or a funeral is their main object in life. On the other hand, it is only in the hilly tracts that we meet really cheery, light-hearted people like the Oraons and Mundas of Chota Nagpur, and the Ghorkas of Nepal."

In the next chapter we have a discussion in regard to the origin and relationships of the primitive tribes of India—before the Aryan and Mongolian invasions—which is perhaps the weakest part of the whole book. It is stated, for example, that these so-called Dravidian races, as represented by the Gonds and Bhils of Central India and the Veddas of Ceylon, have been regarded as "allied to the Oceanic Negritos in whom are included the aborigines of Australia and Tasmania," while later on we find it stated "that Northern India was peopled by three distinct strains—the white, the yellow, the black."

According to modern ideas, much of this is wrong, Australians not being Negritos but low-grade Caucasians, and Dravidians probably coming under the same category. Hence, if that term be used as equivalent to Negro, there is no evidence of the occurrence of "black" people in India; all the inhabitants of which are formed by a mixture of Caucasian and Mongolian stocks.

There were, however, undoubtedly two distinct strains of the Caucasian stock,—the primitive black Dravidians, and the fair Aryan-speaking races from the North. As we learn from the Vedic texts, the Aryans looked down with supreme contempt on the Dravidians when they found in possession of the country, calling them Dasyus or Dasus (= ? foes), and describing them a black and "Noseless"; the latter epithet referring to their broad and flattened noses. The same idea occurs in the writings of the old geographers who described the Dravidians as wanting noses, in place of which they had merely apertures near the mouth through which they breathed. They dwelt, it was stated near the source of the Ganges and subsisted on the savour of roast flesh and the scent of fruits and flowers.

In regard to the Aryan immigration, the author refers to Mr. Risley's theory that this probably took place by way of Baluchistan (which was once much less infertile than at the present day) instead of by the Khyber route. The supposed necessity for the theory rests on the fact that upon their arrival in the Punjab the invaders forthwith founded a white race, which apparently implies that they were accompanied by their wives and families, who it is urged, could not have stood the hardships of the journey through the inhospitable Khyber.

"The difficulty in this theory," observes Mr. Crooke, "is to prove that the early fertility of Baluchistan was contemporaneous with a migration of which we have no historical evidence, and it seems to lose sight of the fact that even in our times the northern passes are used largely by caravans which include women and children."

With the third chapter the author enters on the description of the various races and tribes, commencing with those of the northern hills. Among these, he has much to tell concerning the manners and customs of the Nagas, who are of the Mongolian stock. One remarkable feature, is that the Naga village is far from being a united community. The unit is a khel, each of which is constitutionally an exogamous group of brethren by blood at war with the rest of the world. Consequently, till the pax Britannica made itself felt, there were continual feuds between the various kels in each village, to say nothing of those between different villages.

The most savage of all the Nagas appear to be the Semas, who till recently were unacquainted with money, and practised head-hunting. "We see this practice," writes the author, "in its most archaic form among the wilder tribes of Upper Burma, who are related to the hill-people of Assam. Their object in capturing the head of an enemy is to bring into subjection the spirit of the dead man, which is believed to accompany his skull to the home of the murderer. Hence, with a logical grasp of the situation, the skull of a stranger is preferred, because the spirit does not know its way in a strange land, and is therefore less likely to wander. Among the Nagas, on the contrary, the habit arose from "the much less primitive desire of possessing a trophy."

The fourth chapter is devoted to the Dravidian tribes of the southern hills inclusive of Bhils, Gonds, Oraons, and Santals; and, together with the third, forms one of the most interesting sections of the whole work. Among these tribes, the hill Bhils are noteworthy on account of their retention—at all events till quite recently—of many primitive customs and beliefs. They live, for instance, in round, hive-like huts, with narrow doorways through which the inhabitants creep. If disease make its appearance, the site is supposed to be haunted by spirits and unlucky, and fresh huts are built in a new situation. Obviously this is an excellent sanitary arrangement, which helps in some degree to explain the comparative immunity from epidemics of the hill Bhils. Scantily clothed, although wearing a profusion of rude ornaments, these simple people, as is well-known to sportsmen, live chiefly on the products of the forest, and show the thriftlessness, gaiety, and distaste for continuous hard work characteristics of savages generally.

The Gonds, who number something over two and a quarter millions, and stand apart from the other Dravidian tribes of Northern India as having in former days established kingdoms and a polity of their own, are treated at considerable length.

In commenting on the degraded condition of some of the Gonds and other jungle tribes, the author observes that, in spite of this, their general status is far superior to that of the menial castes of the plains.

"Many of the latter are regarded as so foul in the eyes of orthodox Hindus that their touch causes pollution. But the unkempt, semi-naked Gond or Bhil suffers from no taboo of this kind. He regards himself as a free gentleman of the forest, and when he meets the Hindu and accepts his culture or religion as a substitute for his own, he does so without any admission of inferiority. . . . It was at a late period of their history that the Aryans came in contact with these jungle folk. The former had long been settled in the Gangetic valley, and had thus become more tolerant of people whose skins were darker than their own. Thus they gradually ceased to regard them with the horror which the first Aryans exhibited towards the Dasyus. By this time there had been a certain amount of inter-breeding and admission of the Dravidian groups into the inner circles of Hinduism, and race-distinctions had come to be merged in the gradations of caste and occupation."

For the author's account of the natives of the plains, we must refer our readers to the book itself, which is certainly entitled to high rank among ethnological works, and should be in the library of every Anglo-Indian who takes an intelligent interest in the people among whom his lot is cast.

Shikar.

JUNGLE MEMORIES.

THE "ELEPHANT."

How they crowd into one's head at times those reminiscences of the field, the stream, and the forest. In the silent watches of a sleepness Indian night, on a solitary country walk at home, in the long still wait over a kill, one's musings invariably revert, to those memories of the jungle. The tigress which charged at the shooting ladder, the bison of the Sonewani Ghat, which cracked the stock of the old rifle, that glorious twenty minutes with the seven lbs. mahseer on a nine foot trout rod, the death of the monster boar at Esumbha, the stalk of the big black buck, the scurry through the kine grass, dodging in and out of a herd of panic-stricken elephants, all these and many more, are incidents that occur to me at times when the mind is full of musings of the days that are gone.

That good old rider to pig who wrote the "Mighty Boar" summed up every true shikaris in that third verse, which goes:—

"When age hath weakened manhood's powers, and every nerve unbraced.

Those scenes of joy will still be ours, on memory's tablets traced.

When with the friends, whom death hath spared, and youth's career is run.

We'll talk of the chases we have shared, and the trophies we have won."

It has been very seldom in my life, that the cacoethes scribendi has seized me, but I have now ventured to put down in as good English as I can command, some of my shooting experiences in the hope that they may prove of interest to my brother sportsmen, many of whom like myself read eagerly all the shikar yarns and sporting literature, they may come across.

I propose beginning with that jungle monarch, the elephant, to whom I had my first introduction in the cold weather of 1898. I was at the time in command of a detachment of a military police in Meiktila, and in my wanderings had heard of a small herd of two tuskers and two females, which were generally to be found in the Yamethin or Kyoukse districts. My first Christmas leave therefore saw me en route for a jungle village sixteen miles from Thazi junction, on the Fort Steadman road, which I reached the same evening. The village only consisted of three small huts, but the thugzi was by way of being a mokso (hunter) and said he would put me on to the herd within two days. He had seen them about five miles off three days before, but could not say where they would be then. The next day at dawn saw us on our way to a big chaung (nullah) up which we proceeded for some miles looking for fresh tracks in the sandy bed, but unsuccessfully, though there were many old ones, where the herd had crossed and recrossed. By their size one of the bulls must have been a monster. We stopped and restored the inner man by a shady pool, and then slept through the heat of the day.

We next retraced our steps but saw nothing except two sambhur stags, which suddenly cantered across the stream bed, about 100 yards away, and for which, of course, I was not ready. The next day saw us again on our way, this time down stream, and after proceeding three or four miles, we struck the fresh tracks we were looking for. We followed along slowly the ground being very hard and tracking difficult, as the elephants had not been feeding near the chaung. After another mile however, they had begun feeding again, a branch torn off here, a young tree flattened out there, and in places the track criss-crossed with bamboos bent down in every conceivable position were evidence of their recent presence. Here we got along faster in spite of the bamboos, but the sun was high overhead before we sighted our quarry. The tracks had again crossed the chaung when it made a deep bend and gone up the steep bank on the further side. Here we left them and walked along the edge of the bank, as the thugzi said they would now be lying up for the day, and would probably be standing in the cool sand, under the thick overhanging branches on the river bank. We had not gone far, before he suddenly stopped and pointed, and 40 yards away to the right front were the flapping ears and bulky body of an elephant. Having the wind right we stole gently forward and soon saw it was an old cow placidly asleep. Almost at the same moment M. attracted our attention (a movement down below us in the river bed) and under some heavy overhanging foliage, we saw an indistinct black mass. Suddenly a branch was brushed aside and the head of a monster bull appeared with tusks, which showed every now and then, and seemed to be as long and as thick as a man's legs. He seemed to me the biggest bull in Burma and I never again saw another as big. I had no proper target to shoot at, as his head was hidden so giving a sign to the thugzi we retraced our steps and crossed back over the chaung, and making a slight detour came on to the further bank, whence I thought there was more chance of my getting a shot when he eventually showed himself. To my astonishment, however, he was no longer there, though we had not been more than three or four minutes getting round. We crossed again to where he had been standing and took up the tracks, hoping he had just walked up the bank into the bamboo clumps, but neither he nor the rest were ever again visible, though I followed for another hour. A slant of wind must have given them our taint, and they had moved rapidly and silently off. By this time I was pretty done up, so after a rest and a feed we wended our way wearily homewards and after losing ourselves, eventually struck the camp about 9 P.M. I went out again next day, but saw nothing more of the elephants, the thugzi saying they would not stop for another 20 miles. The morning after therefore I sadly returned to Meiktila.

Two years afterwards I got command of the Magwe battalion, and three good shooting districts to tour in, so that I was often able to halt for a day or two in any particularly good spot, or make journeys into the Yomahs for a few days off my line of march. It was on one of these occasions that I had my next experience of elephant, and not a particularly pleasant one while it lasted. I was on my way to visit a post I had at Taungwingyi, and halted at Netmouk for a day, where I had ordered my mokso to meet me and let me know if there was any game about. He was there waiting for me when I arrived, with the news that there were two herds of tsine and one of elephant near a place called Juingyiquin, about fourteen miles away. I started therefore next day, finding fairly fresh tracks of both on the way. The next morning we were up and off to seek a closer acquaintance with the elephant, but without success. An old bull tsine suddenly got up when we were having a rest in the middle of the day, on the opposite side of a small valley we were in, and galloped past us. I got a snapshot into his ribs, but failed to stop him and though we followed for some time, the blood eventually ceased and he got clear away. The same night I was awakened by my old bearer, and the Burmans with me, to say that elephant were feeding close by. The men were all in a great fright that the herd might come our way and flatten out the camp, as they said though timid by day time elephants were funny brutes at night, and one never knew what they might do. We could hear the branches breaking about 200 yards away, so I loaded my rifle to be prepared for eventualities and put on some clothes. However, the big brutes fed away from us, and after an hour we could hear no more of them. I was in great spirits and highly delighted at their being so near, as the Burmans did not think we should have to go far that morning before we got on to them, so I turned in again for a couple of hours. We started as soon as it was light, followed up the trail for a couple of hours, and at last caught them up. We found them feeding in a large patch of kine grass on an island in the river bed. This was a poser, as I had always sworn to myself that nothing would ever induce me to go into kine grass after elephant. Pyat Gyi my ancient mokso, who had been a noted leader of dacoits in the old days, and was greatly feared by the Burmans round, flatly refused to go in, as he said he was too stiff to run if it was necessary and there were no trees to climb. We waited a bit to see if they thought of coming out, but as they showed no signs of doing so, I at last made up my mind to go in and try my luck. Kine grass is similar to elephant or tiger grass, growing from ten to fifteen feet high. It is very thick and one generally follows the elephant paths, which zigzag all over it, when elephant are about. A man called Shwe Yin, also a mokso, volunteered to accompany me, and carried my second rifle a .B.D. .500 express, while I carried a double barrelled 8 bore Ubique, which I had not yet tried. The island was about 200 yards long and 100 yards wide, with channels about 10 yards wide on each side, separating it from the river banks. It was not at all a nice place if one had to do a bolt and I knew nothing about Shwe Yin, except that as he was a mokso, he was probably a blackguard and so he proved to be. After we had gone into the grass about fifty yards, we began to hear the great brutes feeding close by, and walked quietly along the path we were on, in their direction.

Shwe Yin watching the smoke of his cheroot as we proceeded. This by the bye is a custom generally in use with Burman hunters, and very seldom seen in India. I can confidently recommend it to my brethren of the rifle, when tracking big game. With a lighted cheroot one can always watch the general direction of the wind, and can stop for a bit when a sudden slant comes on till the wind is right again. Human taint will carry quite as far and as quickly as tobacco smoke, so that smoking does not militate against sport, as one would at first think. However, revenons a nos moutons. In another minute or two a vast grey body appeared, a little on our right, we edged a little towards it, and when about five yards off saw it was a female, so got on to the path again, and after proceeding another two or three yards No. 2 appeared on the scene directly in front of us. This also after examination turned out to be a cow, so we edged off to the left into the grass to pass her. We had nearly gone by, when a stunning report close by my head nearly deafened me, and at the same moment the big cow went over with a crash. I jumped round instantaneously to see Shwe Yin on the run with my smoking .500 in his hand. The next moment the high grass seemed absolutely alive with elephant rushing hither and thither trumpeting and gurgling, with loud flatulent noises, they appeared to be on all sides of me. Almost immediately the grass parted in front of me, disclosing an old cow with ears cocked sailing straight down on me. I stayed not on the order of my going but dived into the grass almost inside her nose. I was scurrying on as fast as I could, when I heard one of the big brutes coming towards me on my left.

I could not see a foot in front of me, so stood stock still, and another huge beast crashed past within a yard of me, followed immediately after by two more, but whether cows or bulls I could not see.

As soons as they had proceeded on their wild-career, I started on mine again and luckily hit an elephant path, which led in the direction of the river bank, which I was making for, down this I sped and after twenty yards or so, I had just observed to my joy the grass was getting thinner when I again heard the crackle of the grass behind me, but the edge of the island was reached, and the high river bank twenty feet above appeared in front of me. How I got up this, carrying a heavy 8 bore, I have not the slightest idea. It seemed to me that I gained the bank in about three bounds. Fear must have lent me wings. I dont mind admitting in the least that I was in a blue funk, while the incident lasted, but I console myself by thinking, there would have been very few men, who would not have been as frightened as I was. I felt for all the world as a hare would feel, as when in her form she sees and hears a part of harriers nosing all round her. On gaining the bank, which I afterwards found, I could only ascend with great difficulty without my rifle; I saw the whole herd of about twenty, streaming away up the island, their broad backs bobbing along about a hundred yards away. From the commotion still going on in one part of the grass, I guessed that the cow that Shwe Yin had knocked over, was trying to get to her feet. I waited therefore, and in order to get my wind back sat down. After a minute or two, with a big heave she staggered to her feet about sixty yards away from me, and stood swaying. As she seemed pretty nearly done for, I thought it best to finish her, and as soon as her head was steady for a second, I took a rapid squint along the barrels and blazed. The cloud of the smoke hung and hid every thing, but when it cleared off, she had vanished. I waited a few minutes longer, but since the grass did not move I concluded I had killed her. As the herd had gone I scrambled down again, and cautiously making my way back into the grass found her as dead, as the proverbial door nail, my bullet having hit her just in front of the ear hole. I have no doubt it was a fluky shot, as I was not too steady, and the Ubique was only sighted for fifty yards, but still I was rather pleased at it. The Burmans having seen her fall, and me go into the grass again, now turned up highly jubilant at the prospect of so much meat. I then began to make enquiries as to Shwe Yin's whereabouts, for if ever a man deserved a thorough cow hiding, he did. He never turned up again, and after having handed my rifle minus its fore end to another Burman, when he had got clear off the island, he vanished as quickly as he could, and I never saw him again very much to my regret. I set the Burmans to work, to cut off one of the elephant's feet, while I had a rest. It was no use going after the herd though there was one decent tusker among them, so the Burmans said, as from their elevated posts in the trees they had been able to see everything that went on. The herd was now thoroughly scared and would go for miles before it stopped again. Though we were some way from any village in about two hours time a lot of Burmans turned up and the scene got to be a very bloody one, as they hacked away with their dahs, and made the meat up into bundles to take away with them. I thought at first of broiling a bit of the trunk to eat, but on second thoughts gave up the idea, as I was a little delicate for the time being. The Burmans, however, seem passionately fond of it, as they are of any meat, and will even eat it when it is quite putrid. They are a curious people in their tastes; as I have said above, they will eat rotten flesh, and snakes, and yet they will not touch milk as the idea of drinking it is to them very disgusting. This I presume to be the reason, why they have such magnificent cattle, compared to the scraggy Indian bullock; as the calves are never weaned. In some districts it is almost impossible to get milk, as the cows are not milkers, and violently resent any attempts at milking them, as I have tried on some occasions, whenever I happened to have a few Punjabis with me. A few weeks later I went again to the same jungles and on the second day I arrived while following up some bison tracks with old Pyat Gyi and my Pathan orderly. Having heard elephant trumpeting in the valley below we turned off to interview them. After going about a mile and a half we heard them feeding close by, so went gently forward and as the wind was right began examining them. The first three we saw were cows and passing them we heard a brute feeding close in front. The jungle was very thick here, and though we were only five yards off we could not see properly. On lying down, however, and peering up I was able to see the tip of a white tusk, moving up and down as the bull was feeding. On his making a step forward he showed his eye and the upper part of his ear. I got carefully on to one knee, when he suddenly stopped feeding and stood motionless. Not thinking I should get a better chance, and knowing there were three females in my rear, who might get my wind at any moment, I raised the 8 bore and aiming where I thought his ear hole ought to be, pulled the trigger. Over he went, and a huge commotion started. Old Pyat Gyi made confusion worse confounded by running amongst the herd and yelling at the top of his voice. The next minute, however, he came bolting back shouting out that a large sin ou (bull elephant) was after him. I ran towards him and saw a huge dark form, suddenly turn off and crash down the hill about 30 yards away. I was running on to see if I could get in a shoulder shot, when my orderly hollered out, that the tusker I had knocked over was getting to his feet again. Thinking a bird in the hand was worth two in the bush, I ran back and met the tusker just beginning to walk towards me, so blazed at him with both barrels. He flinched to each shot and ran back a little, but did not go over. I loaded up again and fired at him once more, the second barrel knocking him off his legs. My cartridges then jammed; and I was a minute or two getting them out. In the meantime he had got up and began making off. I scrambled over the fallen bamboos with despair in my heart, as I had only three cartridges left, and thought I was never going to finish him. Getting parallel with him I fired again upon which the poor brute turned and attempted a feeble charge which was met by the left barrel, when down he went for the third time. I had only one cartridge left, which I put in, and going as close as I could to where he was rolling about, I fired at the back of his head. He was still alive though unable to get up and as my 8 bore cartridges were finished I got my ·500 from my orderly and using a steel tipped bullet, put the barrels within a foot of his bump, and fired for the ninth time. This, finished him: all this sounds very bad shooting, but as his head was never still for a moment, and often hidden by the leaves, I was never able to get a steady open shot, and was myself generally flounding about over and under the trampled bamboos, which were lying in every direction. By this time it was 11 o'clock, and I was bathed in sweat and absolutely exhausted. I lay down on the spot and do not think I moved hand or foot for an hour. The physical exertion had been tremendous. We were now about eight miles from camp and on our return with my usual luck, we lost the way again, and did not reach camp till long after dark, and must have gone a good four miles out of our way. It was certainly one of the hardest days I ever had in my life, and during most of the next day I enjoyed thorough rest in bed. The bullifant's tusks unfortunately were only of moderate size. The one which chevied Pyat Gyi was a bigger brute altogether, and it was a pity I did not get on to him first. The rains were now just starting, so the day after my rest, I started my kit on the pack ponies back to Palin, a distance of twelve miles. They did not get off till eleven, as one of the ponies had strayed, which caused a certain amount of delay. I told my servants to hurry, as the sky was lowering, so as to cross the Palin chaung before there was too much water in it. This was a nullah about fifty yards wide, and about 14 feet deep, which when we had crossed three or four days before had only a thin trickle of water in it about three inches deep. Knowing how rapidly these chaungs filled, I was anxious to get my baggage over without its getting wet. I started with them, but after doing a couple of miles, came across the fresh tracks of a solitary tsine I let the kit therefore go on and turned off to follow up. The tracking was not too easy and after following for about an hour, the rain suddenly started to come down in torrents, and we had to give it up as the tracks had got washed away. We plodded wearily on and eventually reached the chaung a little before dark. But what a sight met our eyes, the nullah was now a muddy surging torrent and the water bank and bank. I turned round and asked Pyat Gyi how we were to get across, but his answer was only a groan of despair. After a bit he said that we must either wait till the water went down, which would not be much before four o'clock the next morning or swim. As for himself he was too old and stiff to do the latter, so he would sit down and wait. The crossing looked perilous in the extreme, the more so as we had our ponies to get to the other side as well, but at the same time I utterly scouted the idea of sitting down soaked to the skin and waiting for another twelve hours in that torrential downpour. I asked my two mounted orderlies therefore if they thought they could get across with their ponies, to which they replied they thought it was possible. The Sikh said he had swum the Chindwin with his pony once before, and volunteered to go first, so that we could watch what he did. To this I unwillingly assented, but as he had the experience, while we had not, I let him go. He got the pony in after a little difficulty, and as they were swept off their feet, he slung himself over on the down stream side, so that the current should not carry his legs under the pony's belly. He swam with one hand resting lightly on its withers, while from time to time he splashed the water in its face, as it tried to turn and swim down stream. They gradually forged diagonally across and eventually struck a sloping part of the bank. About one hundred and fifty yards down. It was then my turn, so stripping off everything except a singlet, after a little trouble on the pony's part I rode him in, and at once parted company as we went under. It was a horrible moment with the water roaring in my ears, but I came up again on the right side of the pony with the reins still in my hands. We were carried swiftly down at first, but I soon managed to turn his head and we began making good progress. Half way across I had to turn up stream slightly to avoid a large branch that was floating down and here my mount lost his head a little and began beating the water with his forelegs, while he nearly went under. However, I pulled him round again, and resumed our journey. Just then some Burmans appeared on the bank and two or three plunged in, and swimming towards me, one of them took my place at the pony's side, while the others went across to get my rifle, clothes, etc. As soon as I landed I sent the others across also to fetch old Pyat Gyi along, while I stayed on for a bit to see how the Pathan was progressing. He and his pony were swimming strongly and soon arrived, when visions of hot tea and dry clothes came into my minds' eye, so leaving them to bring the gees on, I trotted off to the village about half a mile away. As I entered I was greeted with shrieks of laughter from the Burman ladies who were immensely amused at my costume which left nothing to the imagination. On arrival at the phoungye kyoung I found to my great disgust that everything was soaking wet. Although the pack ponies had arrived two or three hours before I had, yet the water had been nearly up to their withers, and they had crossed with great difficulty being very nearly carried off their legs. To make matters worse, no dry wood was obtainable so cooking was out of the question. Three fingers of raw whisky, however, warmed me up, and after ascertaining that Pyat Gyi together with my rifle and wet clothes had been safely brought across, I got into my wet blankets and slept like a log till the next morning. We halted next day to dry our things and clean up generally, and I reached my head quarters a couple of days after, none the worse for my trip except a congested liver which soon disappeared.

A month later I was back in my old haunts, and one day was following up some bison tracks, when by the crashing sounds ahead, I knew that elephant were close at hand. We immediately stepped a little aside to interview them, and soon came on a small herd of three cows and two calves, after inspecting these we worked round to see if there were any more of them, when I suddenly heard a shrill trumpet in the direction of my right rear, and turning quickly round saw one of the bulky mothers coming down on me. To dodge behind a bamboo clump, and dart on to another was the work of a moment, but she did not continue the pursuit when she lost sight of me, and after feeling about with her trunk for a few seconds turned about and shuffled away after the rest of the herd which had already made off. I may here remark that even if suddenly charged as I was, by a cow. She will almost invariably desist as soon as she loses sight of the sportsman, and there is really not the least necessity to fire at one. Those with calves are the ones that are usually nasty, but half-grown tuskers also are often viciously inclined and are a bit more pertinacious in trying to get a closer acquaintance with the shikari.

I think the young sportsman may find the following hints of some use to him. The brain shot is the neatest and most sportsman-like one to take, and can be taken at almost any angle, if he aims so as to cut the centre of an imaginary stick, running between the two ear holes. A bullet behind the shoulder should only be given, when an elephant is on the run, and if properly placed he should find his big quarry either dead or dying at the end of half an hour or so. If on examining a herd a tusker should not be visible the sportsman should wait and let the herd feed away from him, when if there is a bull, he will probably follow after a little time. Tuskers are generally on the outskirts of a herd and sometimes half a mile away. After firing he should remain still, unless another shot should be necessary. The herd soon clear off; at times, however, elephants get bewildered bolting in every direction and on meeting others coming towards them, they run back and meet others again till they get so confused that huddling together in a circle with their heads inward, they remain absolutely still. The slightest sound on whiff of tainted air will now bring them in one raging mass in the shikari's direction; but if after a few minutes neither noise nor wind betray the hunters presence, the leader of the herd will suddenly back out of the circle and shuffle off up wind followed by the remainder. It is as a rule useless following an elephant wounded in the head, as he will go without stopping for miles and will in all probability be little the worse for his wound.

Should my story so far have been of sufficient interest to the reader, I propose taking him on a further journey into a certain jungle tract, that I know of, at the head waters of the sun chaung on the western side of the Pegu Yomahs. We have made our camp in a broken down forest hut the previous night, and have been met with the news that a large herd of elephants is within two miles of us. Early the next morning then sees us on our way up the hill side, which slopes away from the little valley in which the tay (hut) is situated, and on to the ridge along which we proceed. It is still dark and the lantern we carry is a necessity to us white men, though the moksos trot on ahead with little difficulty. Shortly, noises come to our straining ears, and once we hear a heavy crash, as some big animal which we have disturbed, and which has stood silently watching the flickering light, suddenly dashes off on our closer approach. The eastern sky now seems to be becoming paler, as the false dawn appears, the birds are beginning to twitter, and we feel the first faint puffs of the morning breeze in our faces. A little further on the light is put out, and descending the hill we make our way diagonally across the valley and climb on to another ridge. It is now broad daylight, and a pair of pee-wits suddenly begin their discordant notes, anon the harsh bark of a Gyi (muntjac) breaks out and we catch a glimpse of his little red body, as he skips behind a bamboo clump. With light hearts and springy tread we wend our way revelling in the fresh cool air. But hark! what was that faint crash down in the valley? We stand listening till again we hear it, and then all doubts are set at rest by an elephant trumpeting. We are approaching our quarry. Still keeping to the ridge we proceed on our way for another few hundred yards, until we reach a clearing, whence a view can be obtained into the valley below us. The sounds of breaking branches, and of an occasional squeak now come plainly to our ears, and here and there the foliage is violently shaken by a feeding pachyderm.

The wind is blowing across the valley so we must descend the steep hill side and cross the chaung before we can get on terms with the herd. As we scramble along two fine sambhur stags suddenly start up close by and stand gazing for a moment at the strange mortals who have disturbed them, ere they wheel round and dash off. A right and left should have accounted for both of them, but they must be left unmolested under the circumstances. The two moksos San Young and Po Saw, now have a hurried consultation and then advise a wider detour than at first intended, as they are of opinion that the elephants seen and heard only comprise a small part of the large numbers they know to be in the vicinity; it would be wiser therefore to keep well along the side of the hill for some distance before crossing the chaung. On we plod, therefore, for another half mile and then turning down hill, we cross the chaung and enter the jungle on the other side. The valley is a fairly wide one, the ground sloping gently up to a low ridge, where it falls steeply away to a smaller branch of the chaung and then again rises abruptly to the higher hills that forms the further boundary. The elephants will be scattered all about this locality, as the herd is estimated at about one hundred head, and will therefore require considerable space to graze. We soon hear some of them ahead, but they are only cows and we continue on our way below the wind towards the low hill in front of us, turning aside from time to time to examine a feeding elephant. On reaching the top, the country is much more open, the side of the hill being covered with thakeh grass about three feet high, with here and there an occasional bush and small bamboo clump. It is a good place to stop to view our surroundings and decide on the best steps to be taken, so down we sit and watch the ground in front. An occasional crash and the shaking of the foliage far up the hill on the opposite side of the branch chaung, shows that the herd is feeding over a good square mile of country, and it looks as if our quest is likely to be a prolonged one. Suddenly Po Saw points downwards to our right front, and following the direction of his hand, we see three stupendous dark forms walking in single file up the nullah. The first is a huge cow, but behind her comes a large bull with heavy white tusks, and behind him again a smaller tusker. We watch them pacing slowly and solemnly along not a hundred yards away, their backs almost level with the small trees that fringe the side of the chaung. We wait till they have passed, and then run down and cross the nullah, so as to get to leeward of them, trusting to luck that the elephants further up the hill will not get our wind. Diving into the jungle for thirty or forty yards, we follow in the direction the tuskers have taken, and running along soon get ahead of them. We then hasten down hill, and take our stand behind a bamboo clump close to the edge of the nullah. With hearts excitedly beating we listen to the swishing branches denoting their approach, and in another minute not thirty yards away the big cow comes into sight, stalking majestically forward, she gets within five yards of us, when she suddenly turns and walks up a game path on the opposite bank. Steady now! for the big bull is close upon her heels take him half way between the eye and the ear hole as he turns, my rifle will be ready for the other if necessary. See him now towering over us, his massive tusks in startling relief against his dark skin, his sinuous trunk slightly curled at the tip, as his ponderous legs propel him irresistibly forward. Now he arrives at the game path and half turning one massive foot is in the air when bang! The smoke hangs for the breeze has dropped, but at the same moment there is a long rustling crash, and darting out we see the immense body, rolling on to its side, and at the same time a back view of the smaller tusker as with tail up and loud gurglings he bolts down the nullah. For a few seconds there is a profound silence, when whish-crash, crash-whish and the hill side seems alive, as an animated avalanche tears down upon us, to rejoin the remainder of the herd. Stand steady, they are almost on top of us, but don't shoot unless absolutely necessary. Now one huge brute emerges, then another on our left, now one on our right, now three or four together higher up the nullah. The air is filled with their gurgles and sharp trumpetings.

"Look out one of them is making a bee line down the hill on to us, stick close to the bamboo clump, she will probably avoid it." Now the branches open out in front and a large cow with a calf in front of her sweeps down, her wits are completely gone, but she has still sense enough to avoid the clumps of bamboos and thunders past across chaung helped on by a murderous yell from San Young. Well, that is the last of them, so let us examine our prize. That was a good shot of yours, it has caught him about eight inches in front of the ear hole, and penetrated his brain at an angle. What an immense beggar he is tall man as you are, you cannot see over him as he lies, with his little pigs' eyes still bright and staring. His tusks are regular and massive; out with the tape and let us see what they measure. They look a good hundred lb. the pair. What do the figures show? Twenty-eight inches from tip to gum and fifteen inches at girth; they are trophies well worth the winning. And now for his height. Get the tape under his fore foot, Po Saw. That's right, bring it round. It reads just fifty-three inches, which makes him about eight foot ten inches. Well, you won't get them much bigger. And now for the tiffin basket. San Young meanwhile trots off to get coolies from the camp, to assist in getting off the feet and cutting out the tusks. How we enjoy our breakfast, while we talk over and recount all the incidents of our shikar, and later on in the afternoon, with tusks and feet coming along behind us, how light-heartedly we retrace our steps to the little tay. These are the red letter days that live in a man's memory, and forgotten are, the long unfruitful wanderings and the disappointing tramps, when leech bitten, bone wet, and dog tired we have so often returned long after dark to the unassuming little camp.

LANG'S NEW SINGLE TRIGGER GUN.

PERHAPS the most interesting development in gunmaking of recent years has been the perfecting of the single trigger. Of course the single trigger itself is anything but a new development, having been well-known long before percussion caps were invented, and while the flint lock was the only "fowlingpiece" in use. The old single triggers had such radical defects that sportsmen would not use them. The modern single triggers, although as a rule perfectly efficient, have not by any means as yet achieved the universal success that a few years ago their sponsors confidently expected. In England, certain of the London gunmakers have undeniably experienced a very considerable demand for single triggers. Some sportsmen swear by guns of this type; others swear at them. But it is noticeable that of the new best quality guns produced in London a considerable proportion will always nowadays be single triggers.

In India, single trigger mechanisms have not hitherto had any considerable vogue. In the first place some of the early models produced were faulty, and difficulties would be experienced in having repairs made. In the second place the single trigger, as compared with the double trigger, costs more, and as a rule has been fitted only to expensive weapons of the best quality. In order to meet this consideration, Messrs. Joseph Lang and Son, Limited, have brought out a side lock hammerless ejector, fitted with their single trigger, and placed it on the market at the very moderate price of 25 guineas. Of course, ejector guns of sound quality have for years past been obtainable for even less than this amount, and Lang's themselves some considerable time ago brought out a gun of the box lock type (fore-end lever cocker) which is listed at 25 guineas. Many sportsmen, however, have been found to prefer the side lock type, and this new weapon has been accordingly introduced at the same price.

The writer has had an opportunity of examining the mechanism of the gun, which is, in principle, as concerns the ejector and the single trigger, the same as that used in the higher qualities. The ejector is of the two piece type, and operates perfectly. The single trigger is constructed on a very simple system whereby two cams are mounted above the trigger blade and arranged to turn on a pivot so that when one cam is under the sear of the right lock the opposite cam cannot reach the sear of the left lock, and vice versa. Only two pulls are required to fire the two barrels, the involuntary pull occurring while the cams are making their turning movement and before they get into position to actuate the second sear. The writer has many times used this mechanism and in his hands neither baulking nor double discharges have ever been experienced. The cocking mechanism is of the type in which rods tilt the tumblers back into bent as the barrels fall, and the gun is equipped with the usual safeties. Double under-snap-bolts, and a top connection bolting down the barrels as the top lever closes, make the very substantial breech fastening.

The Lang 25 guinea gun can be had with double triggers if preferred, and it is made in 12, 16 or 20 bore at the same price. All the models are nicely balanced, and are engraved in an unostentatious manner, sufficient, while avoiding elaboration, to insure a pleasing appearance. The quality of material used throughout is guaranteed by the name of the maker, and the fitting of the parts is certainly sound. The mechanism works sweetly, and in handling the gun one is inclined to wonder that such excellence has come to be associated with so moderate a price. Any sportsman in want of an inexpensive gun upon which he can rely, and which in appearance and use will do him credit, may be recommended to send to 102 New Bond Street, London, W., and obtain details of the weapon Messrs. Lang and Son have introduced.

ELEPHANT TUSKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—It may interest some of your readers to know there are still as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it, or rather beasts in the jungle. Many sportsmen will not allow this.

Last week I shot a rogue elephant, that has been preclaimed for the last two years in Kamrup. The measurements of the tusks were—right 6 feet 11½ inches in length, weight 61lb. and circumference at base 18 inches. The left 7 feet 60½lb. 17½ inches circumference. The 18 inches circumference is, I believe, the record for Indian elephants. They will shortly be in Messrs. Lyon and Lyon's window for exhibition.

As I am very interested I should esteem it a favour if you would let me know, if this circumference is a record?

No other measurements were taken; the feet being destroyed by natives.

L. W. MIDDLETON.

SONAPORE T. E., ASSAM.

[The record circumference of tusks of the Indian elephant is 18½ inches. Two tusks owned by Mr. H. Shaw Dunn have this girth, one is 6 feet 8 inches long and 84lbs. in weight, the other 6 feet 5 inches long and 83lb. in weight. The 18 inches specimen referred to in the above letter is the next best of which we have details.—ED.]

NEW ·465 BORE VELOPEX SYSTEM

EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.

MESSRS. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been specially designed to replace the ·450 bore, the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

Record Target made before the Editor of "The Field."

AUTHENTICATED DIAGRAM. See "THE FIELD," 19th January 1907.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

PRICES*:—DOUBLE BARRELLED RIFLE, best quality and finish, Royal Hammerless. 70 Guineas. B. Grade, 55 Guineas.

Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from Lang double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in. wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cut a circle 2·1 in. diameter.

"FIELD" "A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. 300 pages of Letterpress and 30 Coloured Plates. Bound in half-morocco, gilt top. Price, Rs. 36-12 net.

THE INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES

BY E. C. STUART BAKER, F. Z. S., M. B. O. U.

Since Messrs. Howe and Marshall published their work on the "Game Birds of India" (1879-80), now, and long since, out of print, and which, when a copy is offered for sale, realises a considerable advance on the published price, no work has appeared on the Indian Ducks with coloured plates.

The Bombay Natural History Society are now preparing and reprinting Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's articles on this attractive group of birds, which have appeared from time to time during the past ten years in their "Journal."

The book will form a handsome volume of over 300 pages of text, the same having been revised throughout by the Author, and will contain all the available information up to the time of going to press.

The Thirty Coloured Plates will be reproduced by chromolithography, under the supervision of the well-known bird-artist Mr. Henrik Grönvold.

The binding of the book will be in half-morocco, gilt top, with the plates guarded, and will form a very desirable addition to the library of the naturalist or sportsman.

The edition will be limited to 1,100 copies.

Fourth Edition. One Hundred and Eighty Illustrations.

Super-Royal 8vo., cloth gilt. 338 pages. Rs. 18-6. Reduced Rs. 12-4.

GAME, SHORE, AND WATER BIRDS OF INDIA

With additional reference to their allied species in other parts of the World.

By COL. A. LE MESSURIER, C. I. E. F. Z. S., F. G. S., LATE ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Author of "Kandahar in 1879." From "London to Bokhara," and "A Ride through Persia."

Nature.—"Colonel Le Messurier writes as a field naturalist for field naturalists and sportsmen without any great pretensions to scientific knowledge, but there is no doubt that all naturalists will gain useful hints from this volume which is profusely illustrated with wood-cuts giving the characteristic features of most of the species."

Knowledge.—"Compact in form, excellent in method and arrangement, and as far as we have been able to test it, rigidly accurate in details. Colonel Le Messurier's book should become the vade mecum of every sportsman and naturalist whom duty or pleasure may compel to visit India."

Demy 8vo, cloth. Rs. 6-6.

"MODERN SPORTING GUNNERY,"

BY HENRY SHARP.

The author is a sportsman of large practical experience who has written many books on game shooting. Thinking, however, that most shooting men would welcome a book which gave them in an intelligible form more technical information about their weapons and ammunition, two years ago he secured the entrée to the gun-works of a well-known firm, and this fine volume of 526 pages is the result. In it he enters with great detail into the construction of all kinds of shot-guns and rifles and into the question of their loads and ammunition, noting all the latest inventions. There are chapters on game and wildfowl shooting in the British Isles, and on shooting abroad, in which the author gives lists of the game obtainable in different places with notes on the best weapons and ammunition to use, and on the duties to be paid. The Duchess of Bedford contributes a chapter on "Ladies in the Field." Copiously illustrated.

THE TURF.

LINCOLN.

AT last the longed for day has arrived! On Monday the flat-racing season began and as far as one can judge we are faced with the prospect of more interesting sport than it has been our fortune to witness for months. Everything attending the opening was couleur de rose: we had perfect spring weather, bright and warm sunshine, the going was excellent, the sport A1 and the attendance somewhat above the average, including many patrons of the national sport in the members' enclosure, which, as usual, was well patronised by the fair sex, while in Tattersall's were a representative assemblage, and the locals made a good show on the far side of the course, which was never in better order, while big fields were the rule throughout the day, and with the success of five favourites backers began the season well. One has no excuse for lying late at Lincoln, particularly on the Handicap day, when visitors from all parts are swarming into the railway station, which, thanks to the big sidings along the Fossdyke, has like Doncaster, ample accommodation for an invasion of this sort. Every year a record is claimed, but there is no doubt that in every respect—distinguished patronage, stout support from the members of Tattersall's, and the unqualified approval of the general public—the muster on 'Handicap day" this year takes precedence, the enclosures being crammed, while all Lincolnshire seemed to have left business for the nonce to go a-racing, and the executive can be proud of a well-deserved success.

There were no changes in the probable starters and jockeys for the Handicap, and the twenty runners assembled at the post in good time. Morgendale was saddled at the post, whilst Petual, Duke of Sparta, and Bellatrix took no part in the parade. The lot were despatched eight minutes late. Saccory made the running clear of Var, Bellatrix, Longcroft, and Queenie V., for halfway, when Longcroft took it up, being soon afterwards challanged by Kaffir Chief, who won by a length and a half; three lengths between second and third. Forerunner II. placed fourth, Details.—

On the third day a complete change in the weather sent copious rain, which did good service but it lasted too long, and was still falling heavily when a move was made for the course. There was also a thick mist which grew so bad at the finish that little could be seen of the last two events. A mere handful of spectators replaced the enormous mass of holiday-makers on the course, the further rings showed a falling-off, and in Tatt's alone was the charter kept up. Details:—

LIVERPOOL.

HEAVY rain did much to spoil sport on the opening day: it was all very well for those horses which could act in heavy going, for others it was hopeless, for the humans it was depressing:—A fiasco is the only way to term the start for the Liverpool Spring Cup. There were eight runners, but owing to the fractiousness of D'Orsay—always bad at the gate—there was a delay of eight minutes. The man in charge of D'Orsay took him back some dozen yards, and then ran him up to the webbing evidently bent on getting a flying start. The tapes, however, stopped him twice, but when Mr. Coventry pulled the lever the man holding the head of Glacis appeared unprepared, and the result was that the son of Carbine was left. The Bedouin half-whipped round, and the spectacle was seen of the first and second favourites in hopeless difficulties. Both riders went on and the ground Glacis made up clearly proved what a good thing the race would have been for him. The fiasco left St. Savin to score a lucky victory for Mr. A. James. Details:—

A more ideal Grand National day than that which greeted visitors to Aintree to-day could not be imagined. The sun was in evidence by the time the earliest risers were abroad, and the commodious Liverpool streets were crowded by men and women carrying racglasses hours before the time fixed for a commencement.

During the night the wind had dried up the course, and the going was quite good—at least this was the opinion of jockeys who rode at early morning exercise. Quite an hour before a start was made the paddock was so crowded that it was a matter of difficulty to move about in comfort, whilst the turnstiles were kept so busy that there was every reason to expect all records to be broken.

The forces assembled in the ring in good time, and the spirited market business inaugurated yesterday was continued with equal vigour. Tom West, who pleased the critics immensely by the style in which he acquitted himself before breakfast, settled down favourite. Kirkland and Springbok also had friends who were not particular how much money they invested but there was a disposition to field against Seisdon Prince, despite the fact that the confidence of the stable remained unaltered.

INTER-'VARSITY STEEPLECHASE.

There was a large and fashionable attendance at Kineton on the 23rd instant, to witness the inter-'Varsity point-to-point race. The stewards were Lord Willoughby de Broke (who has quite recovered from his recent accident), Mr. Basil Hanbury, Capt. Allfrey, Mr. Faber, Mr. Lees, Mr. Loder, and Mr. E. R. Hanbury. Capt. Allfrey was judge, and Lord Willoughby starter and clerk of the course. The race was over four miles of good hunting country, and there were ten starters. Mr. T. E. K. Lees's Esterhazy (Oxford), winner of three previous point-to-point races this season, won by three lengths, and Mr. N. W. Loder's Balsham (Cambridge) was second, with Mr. E. R. Hanbury's Mischief IV. (Oxford) third, four lengths behind. Cambridge beat Oxford by one point on aggregate. There were thirteen starters.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

NAVY VS. ARMY.—The annual Association game between the sister services took place at Portsmouth on Saturday, before a distinguished company, which included the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Sir Day H. Bosanquet and Lady Bosanquet, Major-General Sir Henry Settle, commanding the Portsmouth Defences, the Admiral Superintendent of the Dockyard, Vice-Admiral C. G. Robinson, and many naval and military officers, and also a party of cadets from the Royal Naval College at Osborne. The attendance was composed largely of soldiers and sailors, and numbered 6,000. The match is usually played in London, where last year at Stamford Bridge a draw of one-all was registered, but for a change the provinces were chosen this season.

The Army started the game with a hot attack. Their combination was of a superior character, and for the first five minutes play was all in their favour. Filby centred well, but Pearson failed to screw the leather in the net. The sailors got away, and Charlesworth sent into the crowd from twenty yards out, but the shooting soon became accurate. Beazley, when pressed, unwisely left the goal-mouth, and was soon involved in a scramble for the ball with the left-wingers. Bell joined in, and the leather coming out to Kerkin, that player with an oblique shot along the ground sent into the open goal.

This success after eight minutes' play was inspiriting to the Navy, and their play vastly improved. Kerkin finished up a smart bit of work with a grand shot that went wide, but after this bright incident the game deteriorated into the kick-and-run style, in which the defences excelled. For half an hour the Army could not get a shot in, but at length Pearson broke the spell. Further incidents were a whizzing oblique shot by Lawrence, pretty wing work by Filby, and a lightning shot by Flint. Beazley saved grandly from Lawrence, and then Curtis had the misfortune to renew an old injury to the knee, and had to be carried off the field. The interval came directly after with the score one—nil in the favour of the senior Service.

Curtis resumed on the restart, but was quite a passenger, being only able to hobble about and get in his kick when the ball came his way. With this handicap the sailors had much to do to keep their lines clear, and time after time the Military experienced bad fortune, Godfrey especially so. McKinnell and Martin were the shining lights of the defence. Once Webb broke right through and had only Wiggins to beat, but he shot high over the bar. On time the Navy were all over the Army, but could not get past Beazley. Final:—Navy, 1 goal; Army, nil.

ENGLAND VS. FRANCE.—Although France is not quite so formidable an opponent at Association football as at the Rugby game, the progress she has made during the last few years shows that the time is not far distant when her players will have the right to demand that the strongest side that England can produce shall be placed into the field against them.

This meeting took place at Park Royal on Monday, and the score of 12 goals to nil which represented England's winning margin was decidedly flattering. There was nothing like that disparity between the two teams, but it was one of those cases in which all the luck went to the stronger side.

To begin with, France were handicapped by having to play a reserve goalkeeper, who at starting was so nervous that he was quite unable to do himself justice until the game was three-parts over.

Then, their forwards, who possessed plenty of pace and dash but at present have only a very rudimentary notion of combination and tactics, were very unlucky in not scoring at least one or two goals. Something always seemed to go wrong just at the critical moment. The ball would be safely steered past the half-backs and backs, and then with only the goalkeeper to beat, the exuberant French forward, rejoicing in his lusty strength, would sky it high over the bar, or else send it with the force of a cannon shot straight into Bailey's hands.

Many chances were missed in this way, through the man in possession trying to send in an unstoppable shot when a gentle little well-judged tap was all that was required. In this matter they might have taken a lesson from the English forwards, whose footwork was of the highest quality, the clever short passing of the three inside men and the pace and accurate placing of the ball by the outside players being well worth the Frenchmen's consideration. Jordan and Woodward were altogether too tricky for the French half-backs, and E. G. D. Wright, at outside left, when once he had taken the measure of the opposing defenders, ran round them pretty much as he chose, and got in his centres unhampered.

RUGBY RULES.

THE CALCUTTA CUP.

THE Calcutta Cup remains in Scotland. The English fifteen made a brave fight at Inverleith on Saturday, the 21st instant, but the Scotsmen were just a trifle too good for them, winning by 3 goals (2 dropped) and a try to 2 goals—15 points to 10. During the early stages matters went very well with England. They scored first, were three points ahead at the interval, and held their lead until the last fifteen minutes. Then Scotland came along great guns, and gained a well-deserved victory. McLeod scored a brilliant try, and Schulze dropped a goal, and all was over.

There was quite a sensational opening to the match for play had not been in progress more than three minutes when Birkett made the run of the afternoon. Taking his pass in his stride, he deceived both McLeod and Gibson, and then after getting Schulze to stand still, raced round him and the posts, and Lambert kicked a goal. Scotland soon rallied, and McLeod and Martin, who made a very dangerous wing, upset the English defence, McLeod taking the return inside pass and going over. Geddes, however, failed to convert. That was after ten minutes' play.

This was fairly hot work for an international, but there were soon further sensations. Williamson, who was the best of the halves, slipped through in some mysterious way and reached Schulze. Silecock, who had broken away from the scrummage, was up with him and, taking Williamson's pass, ran on, crossed the line, and Lambert kicked another goal. A couple of minutes later England were in trouble, and, left with a rather fair chance, Purves dropped a goal. That finished off the scoring in the first half, which had gone in England's favour.

After changing ends, the Scottish forwards played better than they had done before, and the English pack could not quite go the pace with them. Scotland lost two or three good chances, either through bad passing or failures to accept passes, and England clung tenaciously to their lead, but had a bad time of it.

Directly afterwards McLeod and Martin were away, and the former, taking another inside pass, went right behind, and Geddes kicked a goal. The issue was still open as Scotland were two points up, but a little later Schulze settled matters by dropping a goal. He got his chance from a weak kick by Williamson—about his only mistake—and I do not believe that Schulze would have tried the shot earlier in the game.

In fact, he was framing to punt into touch when he was called at by the crowd to drop at goal. It was a fine kick, but I would always wager 3 to 1 against it coming off. Still, all these things are in the game, and in the evening Schulze's face wore a happy expression.

The Scottish forwards stayed a little better than our men, but it was McLeod who turned the fortunes of the afternoon. Apart from his two tries, in the making of which Martin had a big hand, he did many fine things, and he kept Martin up to concert pitch. McLeod and Martin won the game for Scotland, and if both keep fit and well they will win some more.

England were rather let down at three-quarter. Birkett was great, but the others were moderate, and I doubt whether Lambert was fit enough for the occasion. Williamson and Davey got along all right at half, and were much better than Robertson and Wade. At full-back Lyon was not as good as Wood had shown himself to be.

It was an extremely good match—bright, open, and full of excitement, with very little close scrummaging, and the bulk of the crowd naturally were delighted with the result. Victory went to the better side on the afternoon's play.

Scotland's victory places them in a no better position than Ireland and England in the international table, which is as follows:—

	Played.	Won.	Drawn.	Lost.	Points.
Wales	3	3	0	0	6
England	3	1	0	2	2
Ireland	3	1	0	2	2
Scotland	3	1	0	2	2

GOLF.

TOURNAMENT AT HYERES.—The professional tournament promoted by the Hyeres Club resulted last Friday in another triumph for the British players. J. H. Taylor with 72 and 67—139, secured the "Tatler" Cup, value twenty-five guineas, and first money prize of 250f. The second prize of 200f. fell to James Braid, with 71 and 71—142, and the third prize of 150f. to Harry Vardon, with 71 and 73—144. The Frenchmen were outclassed. Arnaud Massy, the open champion, finished fourth, with 76 and 74—150, and Jean Gassiat fifth, with 80 and 73—153. Next came two British professionals attached to Continental clubs, namely R. G. Macdonald, with 80 and 80—160, and W. Freemantle, with 81 and 85—166. Baptiste Bombombine, the other French professional, brought up the rear with 84 and 83—167.

Taylor did not start particularly well, but at the eighth hole he did a remarkable thing. The length of this hole is 187 yards. Taylor took his brassie for the tee shot, and holed it. He accomplished a similar feat in a tournament at Guildford last year. His success at the eighth hole to-day enabled him to lead at the turn with 35, Braid and Vardon coming next with 36 each. Massy took 38. On the homeward journey Taylor's approaching was not particularly good, and at the end of the morning round Braid and Vardon led with 71 each, Taylor coming next with 72, and Massy standing fourth with 76.

Massy began by laying his chip shot to the first hole seemingly dead, but he missed the put, and never afterwards got on his game. Vardon played steadily, except that he slipped a few strokes on the greens. Braid laid a twenty-five yards pitch 2 feet from the hole at the third, and obtained a 3. He would have led the field at the end of the morning round had he not missed a put of no more than 18 inches at the ninth.

In the afternoon Taylor played wonderful golf, and beat all records for the course. Hyeres affords plenty of scope for mashie play, and Taylor handled his mashie with all the dexterity that made him famous years ago. Out in 33, he had a splendid 4 at the tenth, which is 491 yards long, and, although he dropped a stroke at the twelfth, he recovered it by getting a 2 at the sixteenth. No professional had ever before done better than 71 in competition at Hyeres. The amateur record is 73, by Mr. J. B. Watson.

Braid played a very fine game on the outward journey in the afternoon, and, like Taylor, reached the turn in 33. Vardon spoilt his chance by the all-round indifference of his golf for the first eight holes in the afternoon. Massy required 39 for the outward half. Homeward, a couple of 2's helped him considerably, but he finished badly with two 5's. Gassiat accom-

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—The thirtieth annual 'Varsity match, which was played at Sunningdale, on the 24th instant, had an unexpected result. The Dark Blues were considered warm favourites, but early in the contest the Oxford side was in a poor way, and at the end of the morning round only C. H. Gidney was "holes up" on his opponent. The Light Blues, in fact, played the better golf all through, and, in the end, gained the victory by 4 matches to 3, one being halved. It was the first occasion on which the contest had been decided by matches. Previously it was by holes, and each 'Varsity had won 14 times, the match at Wimbledon in 1896 being halved.

Throughout the match rain fell in torrents, and the conditions were very difficult. There was, for example, a lot of casual water. The players were not, however, troubled by much wind. A feature of the day was the remarkable game played by J. A. Robertson-Durham, the Oxonian. He started by losing the first three holes, became 6 down at the turn, and was still 6 down at the end of the round; but by some brilliant play in the afternoon he beat his opponent, V. C. Longstaffe, by 4 up and 2 to play. Full score:—

CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING.

AN international cross country race took place yesterday beginning at the Stade du Matin, Colombes. The distance was ten miles. As anticipated, the result was a win for England after a well contested match. The five teams representing England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and France got away well together. Half a dozen Englishmen and Ragueneau (France) soon took the lead, which they kept throughout. The race was an excellent one. Of the 59 starters, 50 finished, the last man getting home within ten minutes of the hour. Six out of the first seven were English, Ragueneau finishing fourth.

Robertson was first in 50mins. 26-4/5secs.; Neaves was only ten yards behind; Pearce, England's captain, was third, fifty yards away. Then came Ragueneau, Clarke, Deakin, and Wood, in the order named. The team result was:—

England, 24 points, first; France, 81 points, second; Ireland, 104 points, third; Scotland, 125 points, fourth; Wales, 237 points, fifth.

Robertson, who had been in bed for a week with influenza, ran contrary to the doctor's orders. He received a great ovation, as did Ragueneau.

THE MILITARY SINGLES CHAMPIONSHIP.—Although suffering from an injury to his right arm caused by an accident in the hunting field, Mr. J. J. Astor on Saturday last, at Prince's Club defeated Capt. A. C. G. Luther in the final of the Singles Military Championship. In the court the winner did not appear in any way handicapped, his returns being almost invariably severe, but his service was much weaker than usual, and it was quite apparent that he was unable to make the full use of his injured limb that the "cut" service demands. Capt. Luther played well in the first three games, and showed good generalship, but it is satisfactory to record that in the end the better player won. Details:—

THE MILITARY CHAMPIONSHIP (Singles).—FINAL.

Mr. J. J. Astor (1st Life Guards) beat Capt. A. C. G. Luther (1st Batt. King's Own, Yorkshire Light Infantry) by 3 games to 2; 67 aces to 48. Scores:—11—15, 15—9, 11—15, 15—1, 15—8.

1st Game.—Mr. Astor began, but was put out by a low stroke without scoring. Capt. Luther scored a couple, and the next hand gave Mr. Astor a run of seven aces. A low stroke brought in Capt. Luther, who added five, and then eleven hands were taken before Capt. Luther with a sequence of three won the first game.

2nd Game.—The first five hands gave Mr. Astor a lead of 2—1, but then the Guardsman put on a sequence of eight. Capt. Luther followed with five, and from this point the innings were small and unproductive, Mr. Astor going out with a couple.

3rd Game.—The small and barren hands continued the best being four to Mr. Astor. With the score 10—9, in Capt. Luther's favour, each player had three futile essays. Then Mr. Astor took the lead with a couple, but Capt. Luther at the succeeding hand reached "game."

4th Game.—Capt. Luther, on continuing his hand, added a single, and so made his full sequence six, and this was the only point he scored in the game. He had four opportunities afterwards, Mr. Astor meanwhile making the games even by putting on runs of four, a single, seven, two, and a single.

5th Game.—At the outset Mr. Astor ran up five, to which his opponent responded with four. After the Guardsman had failed, Mr. Luther equalised with a single, but with five aces Mr. Astor went to 10—5. Small innings, in which Mr. Astor had the advantage, ruled to the end.

Mr. F. H. Browning was referee, and Mr. J. H. Saunders, the club secretary, admirably looked after the comfort of the visitors.

Racing.

ENGLISH RACING REFORM.

What luxurious, flabby, languid, captious folk we all are nowadays! A man who "goes racing" to-day wants to sit down on the grass and cry if he has not been brought from his own front door to an armchair in a club enclosure by a sixty-mile-an-hour corridor-carriage special train, and grumbles if there is any perceptible difference between his luncheon here and at the Savoy.

After some years' study of the English, French, and Italian racing worlds, I have come to the conclusion that comfort is the bane of all sport, the cause of much gambling, and the reason of half the grumbling and bickering which one hears on a modern racecourse. A man shut up in a club enclosure at Sandown or the pesage at Longchamps or Nice or Rome has nothing whatever to do but over-eat himself and bet. The bookmaker or pari-mutuel is ten yards away from him on one side, the luncheon-rooms ten yards away on the other: he may even sink to the level of having afternoon tea, and if it rains he sits about in a large sheltered stand for the greater part of the afternoon. For all sporting purposes he and his friends had much better be sitting at a petits-chevaux table at Dieppe. Naturally, when he comes home he has nothing whatever to think of except whether he has lost or won money, and whether the quails were overdone or not.

Newmarket and Liverpool are at present the only two places left in Europe where sportsmen go to take their pleasure, where betting is just one of many considerations in an afternoon's fun, and where one can go to bed at night £100 to the bad on the day, and yet say that one has thoroughly enjoyed oneself. People who are surprised at the light-hearted way in which men like the late Marquis of Hastings could lose £50,000 in an afternoon and joke about it at dinner forget the fact that they were sportsmen first and gamblers afterwards, that they loved a race, loved fresh air, took a two-mile canter on their backs between one big gamble and another, and knew rather more about their subject than the "past performances" of the horses published in that morning's papers.

Reforms, Reasonable or Contemptible.

Several people have come to me in the course of the last five or six years asking me to advocate various "reforms" in the racing world; but on examination these have always dropped into one of two categories: either the cheapening of the business, for which there is sometimes something to be said; or increasing the comfort of its conditions, my contempt for which demand lacks power of expression.

To deal with the latter category first. Places like Auteuil and Sandown Park are, in my humble opinion, the curse of the whole sporting world. They are built and maintained for betting men, and for women who cannot otherwise find a sufficient number of garden parties at which to display new hats. Such places may or may not have useful work to do in the social world: they are as much a part of the racing world as Rumpelmayer's or a first-night at His Majesty's Theatre. The only conceivable reform which could be included under this heading is an improved railway service to Newmarket.

The cheapening of the business is more open to debate. But racing is pre-eminently the amusement of men with money to pay for amusement; and any suggestion that it can be indulged in without financial loss is as silly as it is mischievous. The sensible spectator, planning a day at Epsom, says to himself: "Admission £1, railway fare and cabs 15s., lunch, race-card, and a whisky and soda 15s., bets £5; total loss on the day £7 10s." The owner of five or six race-horses, willing to pay such an amount of entrance fees and forfeits and jockeys' fees as will give him a certain amount of fun for his money, without paying ridiculous sums to fashionable jockeys or entering his horses wildly for every available race in the year, reckons that by quiet, cautious bets he can reduce the cost of his racing stud to £250 per annum per horse. The working man going down third-class to Kempton for an occasional afternoon's holiday might be able, by a cautious bet or two, to reduce the cost of his amusement to an average of 5s. per holiday.

To talk of cheapness in connection with such a form of pleasure is preposterous nonsense. There are hours of holiday fun in the world which cost more and give you much less amusement for your money; but to discuss them is as if one should discuss the relative cheapness of Biarritz and Cannes as holiday resorts. Nevertheless one may say that the fares charged by the racing specials to Epsom and Ascot are a great scandal, that the cost of stabling is a legitimate grievance to owners, and that the municipal authorities of Paris ought to fix a tariff for cabs to Longchamps.

Dishonesty on the Turf.

Luxury in the racing world, as I say, produces increased betting, and is therefore a large factor in the mischief which really does want reform—and reform of a very prompt and forcible description. Let us have about five more years of the open, impudent, unpunished fraud which has been a distinguishing feature of the English Turf for the past five years, and a Bill will be quietly introduced into the House of Commons one day, and slipped through both Houses practically, without opposition, which will close half the racecourses in this country and leave the rest in a very parlous financial state.

The indignation of an ordinary, decently honest racegoer, who runs down to Lincoln, Sandown, Epsom, and such-like places two or three times a month for a day's racing, and finds that he has won or lost £10 per month on contests in half of which somebody has been accused of swindling, and in 20 per cent. of which the stewards have "carpeted" the swindler, is more considerable than most people realise. Hardly a meeting—I was going to say hardly a day—passes now without the stewards summoning somebody before them to explain some more or less dishonest proceeding; and the dismissal of the case is so obviously due to the inability of these judges to obtain evidence that their verdict either way is a good or bad joke according to whether one wins or loses money by it. There are about twice as many race-meetings in the country as the Jockey Club and its subordinates have the slightest power of dealing with; there is no difficulty in obtaining licenses for any new meeting which a few speculators like to establish; and no man, woman, or child who wanted a training license would trouble themselves to wait for it before building their training stables. One must be fresh from ten years' penal servitude to run any risk of refusal.

Turf reform is certainly very badly wanted, but not in the direction of better cooked luncheons, better decorated stands, or cheaper enclosures. If the Jockey Club would be so good as to warn off the Turf about 200 owners, trainers, and jockeys whose names any experienced racing man will cheerfully give them to-morrow, and let it be known that the same fate awaits about 200 more whose reprimands, cautions, and fines become a more pestilential nuisance every season, then the three-day-per-month racing man, and the sporting owner of four or five racehorses, whose departure from the English Turf would mean its prompt descent to the level of racing in the Argentine Republic, will doubtless continue their patronage.—Daily Mail.

THE INDIAN RAPTORES.

FALCONS.

I.—Peregrine Group.

We now arrive at the most interesting genus of the whole family of Accipitrine birds, namely, "Falco" which comprises many species and is distributed throughout nearly every portion of the world, but only 8 species are known to occur in India and of these only 4 are resident and breed in the country, the remainder all being winter visitors. The typical falcons may again be divided into three groups, viz., The Peregrine group with "Falco peregrinus," the Peregrine falcon. "F. peregrinator," the Shahin Falcon and "F. barbarus," the Barbary Falcon as its representatives. The Lanners with only "F. jugger" to stand for the group in India and lastly the "Sakers" of which there are two "F. cherrug" the Saker or Cherrug Falcon and "F. milvipes," the Shanghar Falcon. The Hobbies, "F. subbuteo," the Hobby and "F. severus," the Indian Hobby resemble the Peregrine group in certain features and may also be grouped with them to facilitate identification.

The typical falcons may be recognised by their long pointed wings, which reach to within an inch of the end of the tail in the closed wing if not to quite to the end in some cases; their thick set build and stout bill which is furnished with a strong tooth; small round nostril with a tubercle in the centre and their short thick tarsus which is equal in length to the middle toe, without claw or nearly so. They vary in size from nearly 2 feet in length (the Sakers) to about 12 inches in the Hobbies.

The separation of the 3 groups is most convenient and a glimpse of the wing will show to which the specimen belongs and the following is the key:—

No. I. The Peregrine group: Second quill longest; first longer than the third.

No. II. The Lanners: Second quill longest; first and third subequal.

No. III. The Sakers: Second quill longest; first shorter than third.

The native phrase for distinguishing between Hawks and Falcons is convenient but does not hold good with very young birds. They call the Hawks "Golab chashum," i.e., "yellow-eyed," and the Falcons "Shiah chashum" or "black-eyed." All the typical Hawks after about 9 months old have bright yellow eyes and the Falcons, very dark brown, almost black.

The training of Falcons differs considerably from that of Hawks and all Falcons are taught to "stoop to the lure" but more of that anon.

From centuries past, the Peregrine Falcon has been one of the favourites of falconers, and having stood the test of time, even when competing against the more powerful and swifter gyr falcons of Greenland, Norway and Iceland has come out top as the hardiest and most generally useful of all Birds of Prey.

Where the nobler northern varieties have failed the Peregrine has excelled. Its courage and endurance are equalled by few and surpassed by none and a day spent with a team of the Peregrine group, be the quarry heron, houbara, duck plover or partridge, is one to be remembered and chronicled in letters of red.

Of the three species belonging to the first group the Peregrine is the largest and most powerful bird, but is not such a pretty flier as either of the other two, while in grace of movement there are perhaps none to touch the hobbies, but these little Falcons have never proved a success in falconry and the few that have been trained to wild quarry are the rare exceptions.

Of the three larger species, the Peregrine Falcon can be identified by its slightly larger size and stouter build; its light grey back in adults and white breast and under parts finely spotted with dark brown or black, and narrow bars on the flanks. The young birds are more or less brown above and the breast and abdomen of a slightly rufous tinge profusely dotted with large brown spots. The cheek-stripe is broader than the eye and there is no nuchal collar.

The dark plumage of "F. peregrinator" is unmistakable, the head and back being very dark, almost jet black, and under parts deep rufous. In "F. barbarus" the back is grey mixed with brown and with dark cross-bars. The under parts varying from dark to light rufous, spotted and barred. The cheek-stripe in this species, unlike that of the peregrine is narrow and a conspicuous rufous nuchal collar, always present at all stages. "F. peregrinus" measures about 19 or 20 inches (female) and the Shahins are an inch or two less in length.

The Hobbies cannot be mistaken for any of the other three abovementioned, being considerably smaller, "F. subbuteo" the larger of the two being only about 13 inches in length. The chief distinction in "F. subbuteo" and "F. severus" lies in their breast feathers, those of the former being "white or buff with brown streaks" while those of the latter are "deep rufous, unspotted in adults." "F. severus" is also an inch or so shorter than the Hobby. The nest of the Peregrine Falcon has never been taken within Indian limits, with one solitary exception from Ceylon (Blanford).

This is a winter visitor to India, arriving in Northern India with the duck in September and leaving with them in April. The Peregrine is usually to be found over rivers or large swamps flying low and at a great pace over the banks in the early mornings and evenings or sitting on a dry stump by the river banks watching for teal, duck or coots which form its staple diet. Where crows and rooks are given to roosting in great numbers, as in trees along the banks of the Chenab River, a mile or so above the Alexandra Bridge on the North-Western Railway, where some hundreds of thousands must come from all parts of the District, is an almost sure find for a peregrine and many a good Falcon have I trapped there. Failing to secure a more toothsome duck during the afternoon a Peregrine is almost certain to come for the crows just before or after sunset and it is incredible to see the commotion one small bird makes in that vast corvine colony. A few will be, first of all, seen to rise from the more distant trees and make for the thicker jungle where the main body has elected to spend the night. These will be joined by others from every tree en route and so the throng swells and the noise of the whirr of wings and the cawings increase till suddenly the entire colony now thoroughly alarmed rises, like one huge black cloud almost shutting out the sky and in the din one must shout to be heard even a few yards away. The dread enemy has arrived and woe betide any number of that black flock that strays or comes within reach of those talons. It is now impossible to distinguish crow from Falcon in that dense compact mass all flying in the same direction but the course of the Peregrine can easily be followed though the bird itself cannot be seen. One portion of the cloud will be seen to break as it were and dive hither and thither, some seeking shelter among the trees and others trusting to their wings and dodging powers to elude the Falcon. As the Falcon approaches another gap occurs and some more crows dive while those that the Falcon has passed come up again and follow in the rear hurling anathemas at the disturber of their peace and so the movement continues as the Peregrine progresses like a gigantic wave in a heavy sea, till the end is reached and now all the crows are seen to be flying round in circles or hither and thither but no longer in the same directions, till the Falcon returns from the opposite end and the wave of frenzied, cawing, flapping feathers is once more seen over the tree tops. Only very occasionally may the Falcon be seen in that seething assemblage and recognised by the quick short flaps of the wings or tearing through the air with half closed wings at a speed which appears to leave the crows as almost stationary objects.

Sometimes the disturbance is of short duration and the Falcon procures its dinner in its first stoop, while at others I have known it to go on for half an hour or more and darkness has come to the rescue of the crows. Usually when flocks of crows see a Falcon they at once proceed to "mob" it, especially if the latter has a bird in its talons, but here the one thought is of escape and the Peregrine, even when successful, carries off one of the brotherhood to the open sandy river bed and proceeds to pluck her prey, only a very few of the bolder spirits attempt to go out into the open to protest and those that do are no longer the cheeky, venturesome birds one is familiar with, but timid, scared crows ready to retreat precipitately, to the security of the trees, at the slightest sign of excitement among their more cautious brethren. Who knows another Falcon may arrive on the scene!

Both "F. peregrinator" and "F. barbarus" are resident species in India, the former breeding freely throughout the country in suitable localities while the nest of the latter has frequently been found in parts of the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province. These birds affect well wooded country, but may also be seen like the peregrine near rivers and swamps but they prefer hilly country to the plains and breed in almost inaccessible cliffs laying two or three eggs, "brownish yellow, blotched and spotted with reddish brown." Doves, pigeons, partridges, quail, and such like pay a heavy annual toll to the Shahins.

The Hobbies, have long been considered migratory species and till very recently little appeared to be known of their nidification and so far as India is concerned, nothing as no nest had ever been found. That one of them, "F. severus," undoubtedly breeds in the Himalayas there can be no doubt, as I have taken its nest with 4 young ones in Tehri Garhwal in 1895 and since then have found two nests in Kashmir while Mr. Macdonald records having taken a young one, from a cliff in Upper Burma (Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society, Vol. XVI, page 518).

Blanford records Kulu as the most westerly point at which "F. severus" may be found in the Himalayas but to this I can add Chamba and Bhadarwa, the latter being a part of the Kashmir State. Both hobbies occur in Bhadarwa and I should think it very likely that both breed in the State as I have seen the young birds still flying with the parents in the case of "F. subbuteo," but as I have not so far seen the nest I would not care to positively assert this as a fact, but with regard to "F. severus" there can be no doubt. All three nests which I have seen have been on trees, two on pines and one on a fir and almost at the very tip in each case.

Both species are inclined to be crepuscular, except just after the paddy crop has been cut, when they may be seen at any time of the day, sailing about in pairs or with a couple or more youngsters, rising and falling or making sudden sallies after insects and very much resembling large swallows, in the way they so constantly beat over the same area.

A Hobby has a tremendous turn of speed and it is beautiful to watch it stooping either at a bat or a draggon fly or even in play. They live chiefly on insects and I have never seen either of the species pursuing a bird, though on two or three occasions I have seen "F. severus" take small bats late in the evening.

The golfer naturalist, says the Field, may, while he is playing, listen for the songs of birds. Fancy asking a Calcutta man who, at the critical stage of the match has topped his drive, if he heard the gentle note of the brain-fever bird or the coo of the maidan crow!

JAUNTS IN BURMESE JUNGLES

VI.

A certain amount of excitement is always attendant upon a move into a fresh portion of forest land when in pursuit of bos gaurus. That excitement runs higher when the area to be explored has the enviable reputation of harbouring this fine ox in considerable quantities. These bovine Eldorados are, however, frequently prolific in disappointment. From east to west, from north to south the sportsman may wander the live-long day, and never meet with the slightest indication that the quarry of which he is in pursuit has taken up its residence, even temporarily, within its confines, for many a week past. Yet other hunters in that particular haunt may have encountered diametrically opposite results. There are many causes that tend to drive game out of a well-defined tract of wooded country, or on the other hand to attract herbivorous animals to that same area. The entry of a pack of wild dogs into a region heralds the exit of all other game, and these persistent pests have been the means of spoiling many a hunter's expectations. The sportsman whose fortune presents the obverse side of the problem may indeed consider himself lucky, for game is occasionally found in unexpected quantities in districts which are usually blank. There are more reasons than one to account for this condition of affairs. As previously stated it may be the outcome of a canine visit to more frequented haunts, or a better prospect of obtaining more nutritious or palatable food. The gaur is a wandering creature, that is to say, gipsy-like, he takes up his residence for a few days at a time and then moves on to fresh pastures, but during the months of August and September he will regulate his halts according to the luxuriance of the growth of bamboo shoots.

There is one peak, the highest in this herring-backed portion of the main Pyingadaungs, famed for the size and quantity of the bison it harbours on its wood-clad slopes. The native trackers and wood-cutters, will point out to the hunter with awe the spoor of a giant gaur, and with bated breath inform the would-be slayer that assuredly this beast must be the renowned bison with but one monster horn. He will relate how such and such a European spent days in its pursuit only to meet with failure; how another wounded it but only slightly, how it charged a third with almost fatal results to the over-ardent sportsman, who in the flurry of saving his own skin was in too excited a frame of mind even to discharge the second barrel of his weapon, although when this monster ox flashed past him at racehorse speed his flanks nearly brushed the muzzle of the rifle. What a reputation the successful hunter of these mighty fiends in bovine flesh enjoys amongst those simple village folk.

It was to this conspicuous peak that my footsteps were now turned. Throughout the expedition this rarely-visited expanse of forest had been the goal of my ambition. If the exploration of the other reserves through which my course had been mapped resulted in total failure, it was on this elevated tract that I pinned my faith for the retrieving of my fallen fortunes. The lower slopes of this hunting-ground had been thoroughly ransacked, but not a single track of a gaur, fresher than ten days, had been struck. Disappointment was bitter, but as the mountain would not come to Mahomet, Mahomet-like I was forced to go to the mountain. It was decided to pitch our bivouac as near to the fire-line, which followed the water-shed, as water and level ground would permit. In this manner the upper glades both east and west of the ridge would be within easy reach of camp. Through the courtesy of a member of a timber trading company baggage elephants were placed temporarily at my disposal, had this loan not been effected, this jaunt would never have been accomplished, for the river-side villagers had a great fear of the nats of this forest.

The baggage elephants cannot be expected for an hour or two at the earliest, so after a leisurely smack we set off to explore the fire-line, as a tramp along the water-shed will show us what animals have passed from east to west and vice versa. To reach our goal, however, is fraught with difficulty; the waving tufts of the elephant grass meet overhead. Of a sudden, the tracker who leads the way, disappears from view; another step or two discloses him wallowing on the ground, but anon he emerges with a beatic smile wrinkling his pudding-faced visage. He has succeeded in capturing a land tortoise. This prey is examined by all of us with undeigned delight. The capture of a testudinidae emys is regarded by many Burman hunters as the best of good omens. With pride and evident feelings of joy this man of the woods pockets the reptile remarking that of a surety on the morrow, a bison will fall to my rifle. In my mind sorrow for the poor harmless creature's fate is uppermost, for I know full well that unless a gaur is brought low on the following day the days of this Chelonian are numbered. The Burman woodsman is not impartial to meat, and in the absence of other flesh that of a land tortoise is not to be despised.

For half-an-hour we wade, one might more appropriately say, dive, through this sea of thickest stems, but anon we emerge somewhat breathless on to the water-shed and what a spectacle meets the gaze. Westwards, standing out in bold relief rise the massive bulwarks of a lofty chain of mountains; cloud-capped pinnacles raise their crests skywards to a height of 7,000ft. and more, the home of a race of aboriginal savages only partially welded into the customs of civilised nations. In the middle distance, like a mammoth serpent in its death agonies, writhing in fantastic loops and curves is seen the main river of these parts, draped in a background of sea-green, a vein of silver in a setting of beryl, whose course is chequered here and there by emerald green squares of cultivation. An amber-coloured patch in this quiet work of verdure indicates a plot of elephant grass, the refuge of these pachyderms during their bold forages among the adjacent paddy crops. In the nearer distance just out the rugged and spurs of the outer barrier of the Kyingadaungs, and below at our feet wave, with rythmic motion, the shimmering blades of the kaing, and the feathery sprays of the bamboo, breaking, as it were, round the massive trunks of many a lichened centenarian. But the hunter is more eager to scan the features of the promised land, so our gaze is turned eastwards. Here a different but more the less thrilling panorama arrests the vision. As far as the eye can see, north-east, east, and south-east stretches one endless ocean of tree-tops, malachite and cinnamon, olive and aqua marine, maroon and drab, a beautifully harmonious mosaic picked out by Nature in one of her artistic moods. There is not one single break throughout the entire expanse. No hamlet nestles tamely in this endless stretch of solitude to put trepidation into the hearts of the ferae naturae. No woodman's axe gives forth ringing echoes to disturb the unbroken silence. No wreath of smoke, curling skywards, indicates the presence of that arch enemy man. No tainted atmosphere offends the delicate sense of smell of the denizens of this eastern wood-lands. Here indeed is a harbourage, where the crack of the hunter's rifle has seldom if ever been heard, where the lord of the herd can manage his harem and progeny without the constant fear of interruption followed by a headlong rush for precious life.

Here in this equatorial amphitheatre are waged those fierce battles for supremacy, where the young bloods put their strength against each other, where the strongest of the rising generation, being tired of the chains of servitude, challenges his lord and master. Woe betide the vanquished, there is no quarter expected or given in these titanic struggles. Death or exile is the reward for the conquered. Whether the bulk of the war-scarred veteran, or the agility of his more youthful antagonist gains the day, one or other is driven from out the lists and doomed to eke out his existence in solitude.

What a sight one of these Herculean contests must present—and what luck to be a witness. How this land must teem with game of every description including the cumbrous rhinoceros, and what an Elysium it would prove to the sportsman could he only sojourn for a while within its pristine borders.

The temptation is strong to plunge into its dark recesses, but half the day has already passed and camp must first be pitched. Much useful information, however, may be gleaned by a stroll along the fire-line. We soon strike the game path which connects the eastern with the western pastures—and there is visible evidence that it is utilized as a grand highway. The herd of elephants which has been disporting itself on the western slopes, has filed down this gangway, and is no doubt at this present moment enjoying a leisurely life deep down in some hidden gorge. Sambur, bison, pig, barking deer, and the stealthy tiger have all passed to and fro. No fresh tracks of gaur are struck, so a return is made to our camping ground. Soon the bamboo framework to my shanty is in position and the tarpaulins stretched across, and all is made snug for the night. The elephants are hobbled and let loose to graze, and I sit and ruminate over the fitful blaze of a log-fire till the evening meal is served. It is a somewhat boisterous night, and the wind howls dismally through my airy retreat; the rain descends in torrents, sliding off the tarpaulins overhead in little runnels. I lie awake for some time listening to the warring of the elements. Of the rain I am thankful for it will obliterate all old tracks, and render our work more easy for the morrow. Sleep refuses to close my eye-lids, in its place a racking neuralgia seizes the face, no doubt the outcome of the humid atmosphere which pervades everything. There are two remedies which, in my experience, prove beneficial in curing this scourge. The first lies in taking a strong dose of phenacetine, but the habitual use of this drug is pernicious. The second solution is a purely practical one and acts as an opiate. Take a sip of best whisky and hold it in the mouth for as long as possible. When ejected light a cigarette; taking care to inhale every puff of it. Drowsiness will soon get the upper hand, but it must be remembered that the cigarette end should be flung away before the torpor has taken entire possession of the brain otherwise a conflagration may ensue. In the present instance the latter antidote brings relief.

It is 6-15 A.M. before a start is effected, an hour and a half later than the wonted time. The deluge of the previous night has soaked the entire stock of fire-wood, so that a blaze to cook the early morning tea has to be coaxed tenderly. Even after quitting camp another check is immediately sustained. We get hopelessly mazed in the labyrinths of the stretch of elephant grass, and eventually force a passage through, a full half mile from the game track. We follow the elephant trail for a short distance and then strike northwards, following the lanes traced out through the undergrowth by these pachyderms. Signs of bison are conspicuous by their entire absence. A consultation is now held as to our plan of campaign. The trackers wish to continue along the same level and then strike upwards—for one thing the grass is too thick and for another it is evident that we have not yet found their habitat. I determine to strike downwards where the undergrowth will prove less of an impediment, and where the bamboo shoots will be in greater profusion. This plan is adopted, but its elaboration is not so easy as would at first sight appear. A convulsion of Nature has edged the upper eastern slopes with a perpendicular precipice which proves quite impassable. A spot is reached where a streamlet has cut a passage out of this strong barrier, down which gulley we scramble welted by the spray from a series of picturesque cascades. At this stage the rain comes down in real earnest, so the shelter of a friendly ledge of rock is sought, and taking advantage of this enforced halt our morning repast is consumed. A resumption of our wanderings brings us fresh hope. The jangle of the kaing clad spurs with its accompanying obstruction to view has vanished, and in its place are the well-loved clusters of bamboos with the young shoots springing forth in all directions.

Ha!—At last!!

There lies the fresh spoor of a bison. True the slot is filled brimful with muddy water, and the tracker declares it to be an old one though the edges of the impress still appear to be clean-cut. A few paces furnished conclusive evidence. A large teak leaf has recently fallen and dropped over one imprint. Though the leaf itself is sodden on the upper surface, it has effectually protected the hoof-mark beneath it from the recent downpour. This visible and infallible sign is greeted by my retainers with a grunt of satisfaction and numerous nods of the head. There is no possible room for doubt—that trail is only a few hours old. The sight of that one would denotes that the bison which made it passed after the rain of the previous night and before the recent shower. We cast about for further clues, and discover where the beast has plucked off the ends of some grass stems. The sap is still oozing forth—one more link in the chain of evidence. The herd consists of eight or nine animals, and the bamboo shoots have been torn off greedily. This is an excellent portent, for it indicates that they do not belong to a "travelling company," but having found a suitable locality intend to enjoy a temporary residence.

At first the trail baffles all unravelling, round and round in circles we wander, back on our tracks for 20 yards or so, where an extra succulent shoot has caught the eye of one of the drove. But at length we head on down a spur. It is now necessary to reorganize our forces. Four human beings make double the noise during their progress and raise double the scent that two do, so the Gurkha covers with the .8 bore and one hunter are ordered to bring up the rear, just keeping us in sight and no more. My slippers are discarded and we creep on noiselessly. We have not gone many hundreds of yards before we come upon some dung which is still warm. Our precautions are doubled. The surface of the soil is like a sheet of ice for slipperiness and it is only with the greatest difficulty that a foothold is maintained.

Hark!—What is that noise?

The tracker hears it likewise. There is no mistaking that sharp rending sound—a bamboo shoot being torn off by some denizen of the forest.

The herd is now within 100 yards, but concealed from view amid the leafy verdure. About 50 yards below is a level oval patch; the quarry is either on it, or just beyond the lip. The tracker's work is over, the remainder of the business rests entirely upon the gunner's shoulders. A motion of the hand and all three of my retinue sink on to their hunkers and stoically prepare to await events. Shall I ever reach that miniature plateau without breaking a twig. It seems to take an eternity to traverse that short space—one false move and the game will dash off and be lost for all times. I am now within 15 yards of the goal.

God of my Fathers!—There is one of them sniffing—How distinctly I can hear the air being sucked through the nostrils.

Ten yards more—what an agony of suspense—shall I be in time?

Heavens what a snort.

What if the beast is a cow after all this excitement—No, banish the thought. Dame Fortune cannot be so cruel.

Ah! What a relief—I am now on the level.

Click—click go the hammers of the .577. I glide noiselessly towards the verge, crouching slightly the better to peer through the tangled mass of foliage. There is one source of satisfaction. I have done my level best to achieve success. To have done more would have been impossible. Not one single false move has been committed to mar the success of the hunt. The rest is luck, pure and simple. Which will it be? Will the bull of the herd be confronting me, or will it be a cow or calf?

Oh, H—— There he is not 15 yards away.

As I raise myself to an upright position, I discern a nose pointed direct towards me. The moist muzzle is twitching spasmodically, the saliva is dribbling from the upper lip which is slightly raised to aid the sense of smell. A pair of prominent ears protrude from under horns that never yet adorned the head of a cow.

Ha!—He sees me.

What a change of expression a fraction of a second can produce. One moment every feature indicates an attitude of intense mental application, where every nerve is at straining point, the next the whole body exhibits the climax of physical rage. The brute gives vent to a snort of mingled anger, defiance, and warning which serves to send his harem helter skelter down the hill side like an Alpine avalanche let loose.

Is he going to charge, or is it to be a bolt for precious life?

The question is soon decided.

Still facing me but with head in air he starts prancing side ways. Fear prompts flight, blazing wrath urges attack. In another instant down go those horns, up whisks his tufted tail—one mad plunge and he flashes past presenting his flank for a few short moments of time. Two shots reverberate in quick succession through those silent woodlands. An extraordinary characteristic of this sort of snap-shooting is the accurate manner in which one can gauge whither the bullet has sped. The action of the eye and brain must be practically simultaneous. I was positive that the first missile had gone high, and that the second had righted true. The orderly now rushes up with the '8 bore, but the bull has vanished from sight, the crash of bamboos as he splinters his way through all obstacles is still distinctly audible, but this too of a sudden ceases. The tracker, whom I dropped behind, while the trail was still red hot is now seen to be gesticulating wildly and beckoning in a most imploring fashion. The 50 yards of glissade that intervene are soon traversed and a welcome sight meets the gaze. Yonder is the bull standing stock still at a distance of about 60 yards and offering a very fair chance. Now an '8 bore rifle is not the easiest of weapons to wield under the most favourable of circumstances, but to discharge such a firearm with any degree of accuracy whilst standing on a slippery gradient of 25 degrees is liable to lead to disaster. By the time I have scrambled up to the cosgu of vantage on which the tracker has taken up his position, I am blowing like the proverbial grampus. A moment's thought would have satisfied me that to attempt to fire standing under such adverse circumstances would probably result in a miss. The recoil of the '8 bore with its charge of 12drs. of black powder nearly sends the weapon flying out of my hands, at the same time my legs are jerked violently from under me and I arrive somewhat more briskly than comfortably in a sitting attitude.

The quarry once more moves on apparently unharmed, and the second barrel fails to bring him to earth. I am now hatless, where the head-gear has found a resting place I know not, and care less. Through my own muddling idiocy that prize has escaped when its capture lay in the hollow of my hand.

The trail is soon struck and my delight is great to find it sprinkled copiously with blood. The spoor is followed up cautiously. Soon his heavy breathing becomes distinctly audible and dropping the trackers, I go in on my own account. As I top a slight knoll I spy the beast within easy range, but with his tail towards me. The position is not a good one but I can rely on the penetration of the bullet to carry through to his vitals. His death knell has sounded. I find him in extremis. When I appreach his limbs quiver and stiffen, and his last breath leaves his huge carcase with a gurgle.

Long life to the land tortoise!

Needless to add the creature was released from durance vile on our return to camp. It was a real pleasure to watch him scuttle off and seek refuge in the homely lving.

24 Q R to Q sq	24 R to K 7 (e)
25 R to Q 2	25 R to K 8 ch
26 K to K B 2	26 R to K 6
27 B to K 2	27 B to Q B 3
28 B to Kt 5 (f)	28 Q takes R and wins.

(a) An unusual move, perhaps played for the sake of novelty

(b) A very good reply.

(c) This is not good. P takes P would have been better.

(d) Well played. The two Bishops can now act powerfully on White's King, whilst the two Pawns are more than equivalent to the advantage of the "exchange."

(e) Black could here have played with considerable effect R to K 6, for if Q takes R, P takes Q, winning easily.

(f) A slip that loses the game at once, but in any case we think Black must have won.

Solution to Problem No. 59.

The danger is that the opponents will, if they regain the lead, change suits to hearts. Z should accordingly mask the ace of diamonds from B by winning with the king. He then puts himself in by leading a small spade to the ace, leads the knave of of clubs, and finesses. If the king is with A, Z will go game without having to risk a second finesse. If it is with B, the latter, unless he holds ace, king, knave of hearts, will probably return his partner's suit, when Z wins with the ace, and makes the odd trick in clubs, after which he can finesse spades for game. He must not part with the knave of spades at trick 2, because, if B does not cover, he dare not risk a finesse at this stage.

Problem No. 60.

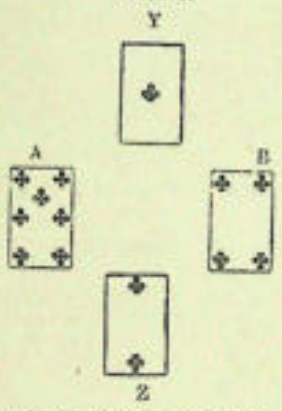
Score.—A B, 0; Y Z, 0. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (dummy).—Hearts, ace, queen, 9, 4; diamonds, ace king, jack, 3, 2; clubs, ace; spades, queen, 6, 5.

Z's Hand (dealer).—Hearts, 8, 7, 6, 5; diamonds, 9, 8, 4; clubs, 10, 2; spades, ace, 8, 3, 2.

The first trick as is follows:—

Trick 1.



How ought Z to play the hand, and why?

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 27th March 1908.

As the Royal Automobile Club dinner, at Covent Garden, was the event of last week, so the annual dinner of the Automobile Association, at the Hotel Cecil, was the function of this week. It was very well attended by private as well as trade motorists, and the Automobile Association are fortunate in having Mr. Walter Gibbons on their committee. Marie Lloyd, notwithstanding a bad cold, Victoria Monks, and Bransby Williams all kindly responded to an invitation to contribute to the amusement of the assembled company after dinner, besides a host of dramatic talent, including Mrs. Lewis Waller. This lady has just become the owner of a 20-30 h.-p. August-Iveson car, which, by-the-by, are now being fitted either with chain or live-axle drive without extra cost. Mr. Stenson Cooke, the secretary, worked hard, and both he and Colonel Bosworth, and the committee generally, are to be congratulated on the success of this annual festival. The Automobile Association now numbers 9,000 members.

A new price-list has been issued by the famous Dunlop Tyre Company. Tyre prices are always an important item to motorists, whose cuts in this direction can never be too small. The Dunlop British-made tyre has made some substantial reductions in this out in the past by their excellent wearing qualities. Now they have further lessened this item of motoring expenditure by reducing the prices of their tyres, and this, too, pretty considerably. As an instance, the steel-studded 105 by 870 is now priced at £10 10s. 10d. complete, or cover only at £8 15s. 10d., while the 105 by 875 grooved pattern covers is now marked down to £7 9s. 9d., a decided reduction, as many of our readers will doubtless realise if they refer to their last tyre account. So throughout all the sizes and patterns proportionate lowering of prices has been made.

Tyre-filling substitutes for air in the inner tubes have long made a bid for public favour. The latest of these is termed Resilcon. This product is manufactured by boiling bones and gristle, in fact, all the gelatine making portions of animals, and then adding certain chemicals. This patented material, in its liquid state, is then pumped hot into the ordinary inner tube, at a pressure of 80lb. to the square inch, and allowed from three days to a week to set. When set in appearance it is like brown rubber, and has a resiliency that is remarkable. A set of tyres filled with Resilcon on an 18-h.p. Hotchkiss car have just completed satisfactorily a 1,000-mile test on the road, under the official observation of the Royal Automobile Club. These tyres have run altogether over 5,000 miles, and there is little sign of wear on the Dunlop covers. While riding on the car the passenger would notice no difference on the averaged road surface, but in passing over bad roads the jolt to the occupant is a shorter jerk than with pneumatic tyres, the filling evidently acting as a shock absorber, as there is not the usual rebound. In weight Resilcon is considerably less than some of its rivals, and the tyres of the driving wheels heat but little compared with those filled with air. Punctures do not affect this material, and if a large gash is made in the tyre cover and inner tube revealing the filling, exposure to the air produces by oxydisation a hard outer crust on the Resilcon sufficient to permit the car to be driven home or to a garage. A portion placed in the fire quickly tested that this filling neither flares up or liquefies by heat.

The final report of the judges in the R.A.C. "dust trials," at Brooklands last year is now available. It appears that 150 photographic records were taken of the competing cars, when travelling at speeds from 20 to 60 miles an hour. "The photographic records," we are told, "show that the density of dust does increase with the speed, although the Committee thinks not in direct proportion to it, but in some cars the increase with speed is far larger than in others. . . Every one of the steam cars raised less dust than the petrol cars. . . The Committee has noticed that cars fitted with dust screens and overhanging hoods at the back, although they may contribute to the comfort of the passengers in the car, certainly do so at the expense of that of the other users of the road."

London pedestrians, as well as those using vehicles, were much attracted by the appearance on the streets of a yellow and blue motor-car. This was to be seen gliding along noiselessly without sign of steam, smoke, or exhaust. A further detail that attracted attention, especially from the omnibus and cab drivers, was that the steering gear was on the near, or left-hand, side of the driving seat, so the controller of this vehicle had to put up with many caustic remarks from these critics. The car itself was the new electric touring car about to be marketed by the Electric Vehicle Company. This is the lastest achievement of the electrician and the motor engineer. Deriving its power from a battery of forty Tudor cells, it has an output of sufficient strength and quantity of electricity to cover a distance of 80 to 100 miles on one charge. It was built in Westminster, so that, though foreign in its outward lines, it is of British manufacture.

One hears it is quite possible that, within the next few weeks, Mr. Warwick Wright, the famous racing motorist, will attempt to beat the present London to Monte Carlo motor record. He will probably be accompanied on his "flying trip" by his "fidus Achates," Mr. Frank Foulkham, and Mr. R. J. Bruce, and that he will drive a 60-h.p. Metallurgique. The present record will, take a deal of beating, but still no one is more likely to do it than Mr. Wright, who is undoubtedly one of the finest drivers of the day.

There is a curious type of motor quite common over in America, but never seen over here, which rejoices in the name of "Bugmotor!" It is really nothing more than an ordinary kind of horse buggy adopted as a motor vehicle by the fitting of steering-gear and engine and transmission. The whole affair is of the simplest, transmission being usually by belt, and sometimes there is no gear-box. They sell at prices ranging from £40 to £90, and are very popular in remote country districts. These machines will average about 14 miles an hour, cost next to nothing to run, and, owing to their simplicity, are easily mended and kept in repair. The very thing for getting about in the mofussil, for the district work of Indian Officials, for planters and shikaris one would think.

CHUKKER.

Forty-seven thousand persons in this country are, says the Honorary Secretary of the Divorce Law Reform Union, tied for life to certified lunatics. The fact that in thousands upon thousands of other cases the partners for life are uncertified lunatics living at large is far more deadly for the race.

One of the released Suffragettes, describing the horrors of Holloway, said that the bed wasn't wide enough, and she actually rolled out. Just the sort of bed, of course, that man with his narrow views would devise.

"You say you wish to marry my daughter. But she is only a mere school-girl as yet."

THE CONQUEST OF THE AIR.

The development of aeronautics, both as a sport and science, and the public interest taken in its possibilities, has during the past few years increased at an amazing rate. If proof of this were needed it is only necessary to point to the rapid growth of literature of late dealing with every phase of the subject, and an English translation by Mr. W. H. Story of Captain Hildebrandt's comprehensive work on "Airships Past and Present," published by Constable, is the latest and one of most welcome additions to this library. With perhaps the exception of Major Moederbeck, few living aeronauts can claim to speak with the authority of longer experience on the military and scientific aspects of ballooning than the author, a man who helped to organise the very efficient balloon corps of the Prussian Army and who has given valuable assistance to Professors Hergesell and Assmann in many of their most interesting meteorological investigations.

In many respects the volume is, to an Englishman, rather chastening reading, because it is impossible to put it down without becoming conscious of the fact that in scientific aeronautics the old country has a good deal of leeway to make up. It should furnish the British Æro Club with many valuable hints, more especially on the score of organising the movement both in its aspects as a science and a pastime (there is no reason why, as the author points out, they should be divorced), and it will also, no doubt, be read at the British military head-quarters with a good deal of interest.

Reviewing the early history of aeronautics, the author seems to be under many obligations to that curious and truly monumental work "Astra Castra," and it is consequently comprehensive, if very condensed. His sketch of the experimental use of the balloon in warfare at the close of the eighteenth century is, however, very full and interesting, as is also that of the part the balloon played during the Franco-Prussian War. Coming to modern times, the author, like most German authorities, seems to be a good deal more interested in the evolution of the "dirigible" than to the aeroplane or any other type of "heavier than air machine." Captain Hildebrandt's critical account of the construction and the performances of the "dirigible," both in France and Germany, is that of an expert and the details he is able to give of the interesting Parseval Sigsfeld kite-balloon and of the organisation of the military balloon corps in Germany, France and England are admittedly valuable. Incidentally, it is worth noting how much the development of scientific aeronautics in Germany owes to the interest and personal liberty of the Emperor and to the receptivity of the War Office, which in this instance seems to have risen above the shackles of red tape.

Dealing with flying machines, it soon becomes obvious that the author's interest in them is academic, "inasmuch as from the practical point of view little of real importance has been accomplished in this department." The book was, of course, published in Germany before either M. Santos Dumont's or Mr. Farman's accomplishment in this department were on record, but apart from this, the bias of the author's favour is all on the side of the dirigible.

On every subject connected with the proper equipment and management of a balloon, whether as a pastime or for scientific purposes, the author has many interesting personal experiences to draw upon. His journey from Berlin across the Baltic to Markaryd in Sweden, was a very sporting trip, and it is worth noting that for the purposes of final descent the German aeronauts in all weathers use the ripping cord. He is in a position to discuss the instruments necessary for the equipment of a scientific expedition with authority and to outline the meteorological investigations which well-organised and concerted ascents in different parts of the world have yet to undertake.

Here, too, the readiness with which the assistance of the military authorities is, in Germany, proffered to further the enterprise of private investigators is instructive. The reason for it seems to be that in Germany "the command of the air" is beginning to have a definite meaning, and that the authorities realise that, as whether for military or any other purposes, an efficient balloon service can be improvised at a moment's notice, the prize will fall to the competitor whose training has been methodical and on scientific lines.

Two very valuable chapters are devoted to the methods and equipment for balloon photography for the purpose of cartography and survey work. Equally important is the chapter on the use of carrier pigeons for balloon work, because it opens up a subject which has not, we believe, been greatly studied and seems well worth attention.

In short, Captain Hildebrandt's book as guide to the practice of aeronautics on scientific lines is obviously the work of a man whose qualifications as a pilot are beyond question. The volume is well illustrated and Mr. W. H. Story's translation of it strikes us as careful and adequate in every respect so that it furnishes a most valuable contribution to the literature of its subject.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

We hear that Peveril is for sale at Cook's to-day and should be a good chance for owners to acquire a useful sort of horse at a reasonable figure. He is said to be quite sound and Mr. Torrington is selling up here only to avoid the expense of taking him back to Colombo. The bay is a well bred English horse (Folson out of Mountain Sweet) has run fairly well as a four year-old, and looks to be improving. Calcutta race-goers will remember his sensational win at the Eighth Extra. With the big impost of 10st. 4lb. he was thought to be quite out of the running and started at 20 to 1, but running the 6 furlongs in 1min. 18secs. he beat Sir Ulric by one and a half lengths, going strong and paid his totalisator supporters the handsome dividend of Rs. 295.

There were two rather sad cases of "missed measurement" on 1st and 2nd April. Lasso, who ran as a horse last season, was thought to be a certainty to get 14-2 but after a very severe preparation was unsuccessful, and Thelma, who ran as a 14-2 as a four year old has now failed to manage to get under the standard and will also have to run with the horses, though we shall not be surprised to see her winning among them in the Monsoons, as she is a good sort and is on the improving tack.

It is pleasing to note that the Junior Polo Club have succeeded in running a couple of successful games during the Easter holidays and there is now a good prospect of keeping things going twice a week at any rate till next cold weather and no longer any danger of the club falling through. The ground is a bit hard, but there must surely be some rain soon to mend matters a little in that respect as the phenomenal drought cannot go on much longer. Tuesdays and Fridays on the Ellenbrough have been fixed for the Junior Club days for the present while the Senior Club plays on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays on the race course so that the enthusiast can now get his five days a week. Bravo Calcutta.

Two extra meetings will open the Rangoon Racing season 1908-09. The first fixed for 2nd May, the second for 16th May.

Last week we published an article entitled "English Racing Reform," an extract from the Daily Mail. In to-day's issue will be found an article by Mr. W. B. Purefoy which appeared in a recent number of London Sketches upholding the honesty of the Turf and making a vigorous onslaught on the Daily Mail writer.

Our London correspondent writes:—"I wired you the result of the Grand National just after I had closed my weekly budget of sporting news. It was a record 'National' in every respect. It was run in perfect spring weather, it is doubtful if ever before it attracted such an enormous crowd, it produced a huge upset in respect of its result and 'Grief' was abundant and serious. Rubio's win will long be remembered, he just caught the public on the solar plexus, so to speak, and knocked them out to a man, for not a respectable sized wager was traceable to him. Hundreds might have been had about him from the more venturesome layers, these odds being vainly shouted, and his returned price of 66 to 1 constitutes a record for the race. Mr. R. Hall Walker's The Soarer (40 to 1) was the longest-price winner known to the younger generation until Rubio yesterday relegated him to a back seat. Some other aspects of the great steeplechasing carnival invade the domain of record and romance. Eremon, last year's winner, was the only horse Mr. Stanley then possessed and, I fancy, it is also a case of 'Single-speech Hamilton' with Major Douglas-Pennant and Rubio, though, having omitted to make sure, I cannot say positively that such is the case. Rubio is an American-bred gelding, and was originally bought for eighteen guineas at Newmarket. Major Douglas-Pennant got him from a Buckinghamshire farmer, the price, of course, being a good deal in excess of what he had realised at headquarters. Rubio has passed through some vicissitudes. Not long ago he became unsound, and the stable manager, Mr. Withington, sent him to an acquaintance at Twocester to be driven about on the road with the idea of rendering his legs callous. On one occasion he covered thirty-one miles in a single day. Now there is no sounder horse in training, and a Grand National is a fitting climax to such a romantic and variegated career.

There was a dramatic sequel to the race for the gallant Lawyer III, who finished third, was later in the day found dead in his box. The post-mortem verdict was 'strained heart and ruptured lung.' Who that beheld him sprinting home to beat Flaxman for third place would have imagined the gallant creature to be labouring under these grave afflictions, and that within a few hours he would lie down in his box and quietly die? Twice in the race he was nearly down, and after the second blunder his jockey—whose boots had touched the ground—realised that something was wrong, for instead of the horse quickening as usual at his fences and taking him over, he had to take the horse over. Still, as he continued all right otherwise and finished at a rare bat, Mr. Whitaker came to the conclusion that whatever the trouble was it could not be serious.

Writing in the Cornhill Magazine Mr. A. C. Benson, a son of the late Archbishop Benson, makes the following rather curious observation in connection with cricket:—

"My own experience, the older I grow, and the more I see of life, is that I feel it to be a much more bewildering and even terrifying thing than I used to think it. To use a metapher, instead of its being a patient educational process, which I would give all that I possessed to be able sincerely to believe it to be, it seems to me arranged far more upon the principle of a game of cricket—which I have always held to be, in theory, the most unjust and fortuitous of games. You step to the wicket, you have only a single chance; the boldest and most patient man may make one mistake at the outset, and his innings is over; the timid tremulous player may, by undeserved good luck, contrive to keep his wicket up, till his heart has got into the right place and his eye has wriggled straight, and he is set."

There is sustained activity in English boxing circles one is glad to note. We see by our home papers to hand this week that Squires and Roche have been matched to meet in Dublin on Empire Day and box twenty rounds in an 18 feet ring for a purse of £300. It is to be hoped that Roche will render a better account of himself than he did when he met Burns.

In our issue of the 2nd instant we pub[illegible] usual special telegram giving the 'Varsity Sports which resulted in expected victory of Cambridge by our notes on English Sport this wee[illegible] full details.

THERE was evidently some capital play in the final stages of the English Amateur Rackets Championship at the beginning of the month. As will be seen in "Sport in England" to-day, Mr. E. M. Baerlein, the challenger, defeated Mr. E. B. Noel, the holder, by three games to one in the Singles. Messrs. Pennell and Dames-Longworth beat Captain Luther and Mr. Noel in the final of the doubles by four games to three after a really keen and pretty fight.

EUSTACE MILES and Peter Latham, respectively English ex-amateur champion and professional champion tennis players, who went to America recently soon got into harness at Tuxedo Park, New York, and gave an exhibition game, in which Latham conceded 15. The game was a very fast one, and the spectators were especially amazed and delighted at the professional's fast footwork, which they considered the main factor in his victory by 6—2, 6—3, 6—3. On the following day Latham played young Jay Gould, Eustace Miles' victor in England last year. The amateur champion in receipt of 15, played a brilliant game. His service forced Latham to keep running all the time, and his cleverly conceal-d strokes puzzled the professional a great deal. Jay Gould eventually won by 3 sets to 1: 4—6, 6—1, 6—2, 6—1. Eustace Miles' visit to the States is made with the avowed intention of winning back the championship from Jay Gould, and the pair were to meet this month, immediately after the American Court Tennis Championship Tournament.

MUCH more than usual interest was taken this year in the preparation of the rival blues for the Boat Race as we remarked in a recent edition. In addition to the "oranges for oarsmen" controversy and the other minor details connected with the training—all of which have furnished the papers with more or less interesting "copy"—there are the burning questions of the propriety of competitors acting as newspaper paragraphists and Oxford's "secret trial." On these subject "Amateur" writes to the Daily Telegraph. "I should like to express through your valuable medium the regret felt by many of the older school of rowing men at incidents connected with this year's University Boat Race practice. It has, unfortunately, become tainted with a mixture of advertisement and professionalism, from which the devotees of rowing have always been proud to boast the freedom of this purest of all sports. I refer, in the first instance, to the writing of articles in a well-known daily paper by members of each crew—a most undignified course to pursue for men whilst actually active participants in a coming contest of the standing of the University Boat Race, and one not altogether free from the stigma of making money out of rowing—indirectly though it may be. Then, the last and most regrettable instance is the secret trial so cleverly engineered and carried out by Oxford this morning, the details of which were arranged with an amount of entirely unnecessary and ingenious deception that should forever stop any protest from our side concerning the methods adopted by our friends in America, and not to be beaten by the 'cutest' professional element in his country. For what reason such a thing should be carried out it is impossible to imagine. It is unfortunate that such an incident should be the immediate reply to the well-expressed article upon the purity of rowing as a sport in your to-days issue. And again, it is a poor example to our foreign friends with whom we are to compete this year at the Olympic Regatta."

THE death at Johannesburg is recorded of one of South Africa's most brilliant all-round sportsman. This was Mr. C. P. Jones, assistant secretary of the Geldenhuis Mine, who was struck dead by lighting on 6th March. "Charlie" Jones was one of the finest all-round athletes that South Africa has ever produced. He is credited with 10secs. for the 100 yards on no fewer than three occasions, and in 1903 held the triple sprint championships, of South Africa—the 100, 220 and 440 yards. In the following year he competed at Green Point Track in the South African championships, but met a younger and even more brilliant athlete in H. T. Phillips, who for three successive years carried off the sprint honours. As a Rugby player Jones was right in the front rank, and had worn the Transvaal colours at full-back since 1898. He was considered to be without a superior at long drop, or place-kicking. He had played for South Africa, and in 1903, kicked a sensational goal from beyond the halfway line. He was just out of the front rank in cricket, and there were few who could hold their own with him at tennis.

THE current number of the Contemporary Review contains an article "Can Science Abolish War?" by Colonel Maude, a well-known military writer, in which the statement is made that an inventor, Mr. Simpson, has devised a new and marvellous electrical weapon. The following claims are advanced on behalf of this weapon:—

1. It can impart a velocity of 30,000ft. per second to any projectile up to 2,000lb. in weight.
2. It can throw a projectile from London to Paris, or 300 miles.
3. There is no recoil, and, owing to this, the weapon can be mounted in any vessel.
4. There is no smoke or flash.
5. The weapon is cheap to construct, and so simple in design that it can be made in any workshop.
6. Its power is such that it could perforate any armour.

These details have aroused great interest among naval officers and designers of guns. A distinguished artillerist has observed that practical men are inclined to discount the claims put forward. The velocity per second obtained with the most powerful modern guns is only 3,300 feet. Even that involves an enormous strain upon the metal of the gun. The extreme range of modern guns is about twenty miles, but at such an enormous distance it is impossible to control fire or to see where the shots are falling. It is not likely that a weapon could be devised with fifteen times the range of any existing gun. Moreover, the mathematical difficulties seem insuperable. The projectile of Mr. Simpson's weapon is said to travel through the air at nearly six miles per second. The sun only travels through space at twelve miles per second. The friction of the atmosphere at such a velocity would be so enormous that any projectile would be melted and dissipated into vapour.

A VIGOROUS, almost bitter, quarrel has been disturbing the English Kennel Club on the burning question whether women shall be allowed to act as judges at the greater dog shows. For the moment the party for what may be called the full enfranchisement of women in the dog world has been defeated. However, at the less important shows women judges are in especial demand. This was the case even at the show of the Great Dane, Borzoi and Deerhound Club held last month at the Crystal Palace, when two of the three judges were Mrs. Horsfall and Mrs. MacIntyre.

A LARGE gathering of football enthusiasts assembled at Fenchurch Street Station on the 3rd instant to witness the departure of members of the British Rugby team for North New Zealand. The tourists, who were in charge of Mr. George Harnett, the Kent secretary, numbered twenty-eight. The team is drawn from the English and Welsh unions.

REUTER announces the death of Harry Custance the famous Jockey. Custance rode the winner of the Derby three times—Mr. Merry's Thormanby in 1860, Mr. Sutton's Lord Lyon in 1866 and Mr. George Cartwright's George Frederick in 1874. He also steered Lord Lyon to victory in the St. Leger of 1866 and the following year won the One Thousand Guineas on Colonel Pearson's Achievement.

MR. W. P. PYCRAFT, of the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, recently read a paper upon "Sea Birds in their relation to Fish Life" at a meeting of the British Sea Anglers' Society. Mr. Pycraft described the evolution of the bird from the fish, and said the adaptation of the fish to life on land was clearly traceable. The earliest bird remains were known only from fossil remains found in the Jurassic formations, and showed a descent from reptiles by the long tail resembling that of a lizard. The feathers manifested themselves at the joints of the vertebræ of this tail in bunches, the foot was perfectly birdlike, the third finger as it were of the wing was the most distinct, but had a claw. The jaws had teeth. There were in existence only two specimens, one in the British Museum, and the other in the museum at Berlin. Nothing more was found until the Cretaceon period was reached. Some American remains showed the development of fish which found life easier on shore, some spreading from forest to open country, some forced up rivers, some remaining on the seashore, and others taking to the capture of food by swimming and diving in the sea. All these underwent changes as a result of the varying struggles for existence. These changes were described and illustrated by lantern slides. The evolution from the first sea bird to the shore bird and the diving bird was fully developed, and occupied probably millions of years. The lessening in size and form of the wing of the flying bird and the change it underwent till it became a powerful paddle in the swimming diving bird was ably traced and shown, and these changes were demonstrated in the grebe, petrel, albatross, guillemot, gull, penguin, cormorant, gannet, duck, and osprey. The development of the beak, also, involving the disappearance of what had formerly been useful, but was no longer required, and its lengthening out into the dagger form for purposes of offence, was described. The huge gatherings of sea-birds during their breeding season was shown by some excellent slides and the extraordinary way the emperor penguin incubated created much interest. The birds never touched land, but rested and bred upon the ice in mid-winter. They had to carry their eggs, and even their young, upon their feet, no nesting being practicable. The feathers turned over the egg, and kept it in place, and in this the male and female relieved each other in turn. The members of the Society had discussed the habit of certain fish to cease feeding during the breeding season, and much interest was taken in Mr. Pycraft's statement that a similar habit existed in the sea-birds. They migrated in clouds to breeding grounds, which were seldom feeding grounds, and occasionally they managed to eat, but having fattened exceedingly previously, then lived mainly upon the stored fat.

A CORRESPONDENT writes as follows to the Civil and Military Gazette anent the height of the polo pony:—Throughout all the history of the game of polo we see a gradual increase in height of the polo pony until 14-2 has been found suitable; for to raise it higher would mean loss of handiness and therefore danger, while to place it lower means diminishing the field of purchase, and for heavy-weights in many cases undermounting and also consequently danger.

In India we still stick to the 14-1 pony: and the object of this letter is an attempt to remove that conservative fear that reigns always among polo players, i.e., alteration; and also to point out the advantages that the 14-2 pony measured officially would bring.

First, when purchasing a pony in the raw with the hopes that it will make a polo pony; the purchaser is anxious to make certain as regards measurement.

With the present I.P.A.C. system this becomes impossible. I have no hesitation in saying that certain men who know the ropes, also know where to go for measurement, etc., can get very big ponies measured. A great many I.P.A.C. measurements are a farce. As perhaps the above is rather harsh, before I quote any cases, I invite the I.P.A.C., if they doubt my statements, to apply to me—the Editor of the Civil and Military Gazette has authority to give my address for that purpose. But really the fact is so well known that most polo players could quote cases of incorrect measuring. I have seen measuring carried out, when the rod was not properly adjusted—each pony was being measured half an inch too small until the mistake was discovered. One gallant officer was notorious; he would measure anything. At Gulmarg the measuring is a scandal—done on an old wooden platform allowing a "give" enough to make a difference of an inch or nearly so.

I have seen several measurements but only once have I seen the official unlock the box and fit the rod together himself: the omission to do which may become an obvious deterrent to correct measurement. A lawn tennis court is often considered a correct enough platform. Let us have official measurers. This was discussed at the I.P.A. annual meeting and vetoed; the objection being the difficulty of getting ponies measured; and the men, who voted against it, are the men who gain by getting big ponies measured, and are as a rule able to do so, both by experience and arrangement. There are a great number of ponies now playing, that with any amount of preparation would never go near passing a 14-1 C.T.C. or W.I.T.C. measurement, and a good many could with great difficulty get 14-2, a fair number would even fail to do that and in the racing world be classed as horses.

And so, if we have official measurers, it certainly seems expedient to increase the height, and this increase would have an excellent result in opening the field for the purchase of well-bred C.-B.'s, a class that a few good judges are already regarding as having a future on the polo ground. They have already established themselves on the racecourse. But it is difficult to get the right stamp under 14-1. The majority of players, I am sorry to say, still look with contempt on the C.-B. "Bad tempered" "Won't stay"—"not to be depended on"—Yes, a few years ago they were guilty of these faults, but the C.-B. now is yearly improving—he is usually quiet, temperate and very easily trained to polo; and as to staying power, pluck etc., the breeding is bringing it out more and more. I cannot but fervently hope that soon the height will be raised, a strict measurement enforced, and that a fair number of ponies in each team in a tournament will be seen not to be Arabs and Walers, but ponies born and bred in the country that has made the game of polo famous.

OUR Bangalore correspondent writes:—It is only possible at present to refer generally to the prospects of our brief racing season, as there are undoubtedly more horses to come in, but on the whole those prospects appear to be good. The first entries for Mysore are fair, and I hear of about a score from Poona which were just too late for the first entries. Consequently the second entries should produce a real good meeting during the annual Birthday week, and if the Mysore meeting is a good one, it generally follows that the Bangalore Races will be successful. At any rate we are getting a few new people from the western side, which is satisfactory. What horses are here are only doing gentle work at present, and indeed the course is scarcely fit for anything else, being as hard as iron. Rain is badly wanted.

THERE are growls about the date on which the Official Measurer visits Bangalore. It is said that if he cannot be here in person at the beginning of April instead of the end, a deputy should be appointed, as the present date leaves no time whatever for animals to be got fit for Ootacamund, and not too much even for Mysore. Like Uriah Heep, we in Bangalore are "umble," and our racing may not amount to much as compared with the bigger racing centres. Still it is clear that animals measured on the 27th April cannot be fit for the Ootacamund meeting and an earlier date would distinctly please us.

THE competition for the Bangalore Hockey Cup always arouses much interest in South India and this year's tournament has been no exception. There were eight entries, including two teams from the local volunteers, who have been the holders for the last two years, the Cheshire Regiment, the Leicester Regiment, the Sherwood Foresters, the Kolar Gold Fields Rifle Volunteers, the Royal Engineers and the Royal Artillery. In the first ties the Cheshires beat the B.R.V. first team (holders) by 5 goals to 1, the K.G.R.V. inflicted a similar defeat on the R.A., the Leicesters beat the B.R.V. second team by 5 goals to 2 and the R.E. were victorious by a single goal, the only point scored against the Sherwood Foresters. None of these games call for much remark, but the easy defeat of the holders caused some surprise. Though not the side of the last two years, they were strong, but were apparently over confident and met a real good team in the ultimate winners of the Cup.

THE second ties saw the Sappers win a good game against the Leicesters by 4 goals to 2, but the Kolar Gold Fields and the Cheshires played two drawn games before a definite result was arrived at. In the first match there was no score, and at the second meeting the Cheshires scored in the first ten minutes and "Miners" in the last five minutes. On both the above occasions an extra five minutes each way was unproductive. For the third time of asking the teams met, and the excitement was intense, the partisans of each side shouting themselves hoarse and at times allowing their enthusiasm to overcome their sense of fair-play. Also the play itself became somewhat rough, and matters culminated in one of the Kolar forwards being ordered off the ground by the referee for striking an opponent. There was no doubt about the offence and he "had to go," but neither team was absolutely blameless as regards rough play. The occurrence was particularly unfortunate for Kolar, as for the whole of the second half they played ten men, and, although sticking to it most pluckily, were palpably a beaten team from this point. Previously the Cheshires had scored 1 goal, subsequently they put 3 more and won by 4 goals to nil.

THE final was played on the 13th instant between the Cheshires and the R.E. and was thought to be a gift for the former. But whether they were stale (a distinct possibility after three desperate matches with Kolar on successive nights) or from whatever cause, they appeared to be off colour and repeatedly mulled chances. However, they were good enough to win, and scoring a goal in each moiety of play, annexed the cup by 2 goals to nil. The trophy itself is a magnificent challenge cup, and a smaller replica was this year presented by the Bangalore Gymkhana to be permanently retained by the winners. There are just a few players who deserve honourable mention amongst a good lot of exponents of the game. Of the winners, Russell at centre half, Sergeant Price at right back and Hayes amongst the forwards were all first-rate and the greatest of these was Russell, who was an absolute tower of strength, and in addition played a scrupulously fair game. The feature of the play of the runners-up was the marvellous defence of Shadwell and Keenan, their two backs, who repeatedly cleared in the most brilliant manner. And one of these two left off being a boy a good many years ago. Kolar were distinctly unlucky. They possessed a wonderful back in Gillespie, who (I believe) is an international, they were without their brilliant centre (Morris Davies) when they met the Cheshires for the third time, and, as already noted, they played a man short in the closing scenes of the tournament. A side which was probably at least as good as the winners, who nevertheless fully deserved the cup, for clever combination and dogged determination, were both apparent in all their games. General Aitken congratulated the winners and Mrs. Aitken presented the Cups.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 3rd April 1908.

THE sustained rush on the chemists, who are said to be simply coining money just now, indicates the recurrence of that change in season when the public health needs a lot of looking after. The weather is distinctly treacherous, but spring really is here at last and, worse luck, it is ushered in by a revival of the influenza scourge. Once more it has assumed epidemic form and is reported to be raging in many parts of the metropolis.

If my notes to-day exhibit traces of incoherence I beg the indulgence of those who may be good enough to read them. I am not an influenza victim at the moment I am thankful to say; but I am trying to write under a visitation equally distracting—two strect organs are combining to reduce me to the condition which impels the Malay gentry to rush around with cutting implements shouting "amok." This pest appears to me to have achieved proportions which call for immediate legislative interference.

Somewhere in her entertaining memoirs, Lady Dorothy Nevill remarks that in the years gone by Punch and Judy shows were quite common in the London streets, but that now they are rarely to be met with. "And the piano-organs," she adds, "look like sharing the same fate, for of late there has been a great diminution in their numbers, and few are now to be heard in the West-end." According to Lady Dorothy, "they have been practically banished from many squares and streets." How delirious would be the satisfaction of a vast number of Londoners—not necessarily those with musical ears—were such banishment to be complete. As a matter of absolute fact, the author is wrong in stating that few piano-organs "are now to be heard in the West-end." There must be an enormous number of residents in the metropolis who will be glad to know that, as the result of a resolution proposed by Mr. George Bernard Shaw at a meeting of the Betterment of London Association, the attention of the Home Secretary is again to be directed to the evil of allowing mechanical pianos and the like "to be played in public thoroughfares to the annoyance and disturbance of private life, and the serious hindrance of the work of the professional classes." (Hear, Hear.)

Wedding bells are ringing right merrily in London just now; a record rush of fashionable weddings has begun, this sudden matrimonial activity being due, as I am informed, to the fact that May is commonly regarded as an unlucky month to marry in. (By the way it is the most popular month for Hindu shadis is it not?) At St. Margaret's, Westminster, to-morrow Lady Ruby Elliot, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Minto, marries Viscount Errington, son and heir of the Earl of Cromer. I hear that many royal gifts have been received by the happy pair, the beautiful array of cadeaux including a charming present from the Queen, a diamond pendant from the Prince and Princess of Wales, and a blue enamel brooch and a calendar from the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia of Connaught. Cheques have been received from Lord Cromer and Lord Minto, who also gives his daughter a gold fitted dressing case. Other gifts are from the Queen of Spain, Princess Henry of Bettenberg and Princess Beatrice of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha.

It is almost certain that the Queen, Princess Victoria, and Princess Christian will be present at the ceremony.

The bride will be given away by her elder brother, Viscount Melgund, and she will be followed by two small pages—Master Evelyn and Master Richard Baring—and eight bridesmaids.

The 29th has another big wedding list, in which there are Sir Lionel Alexander, Grenadier Guards, and Miss Cable, daughter of Sir Ernest Cable, of Calcutta, at Holy Trinity, Sloane-street.

The Volunteer Force of England, in the fiftieth year of its existence, passed away last night amid a good deal of bugling and musketry and from its ashes arose, an All Fools' Day, Mr. Haldane's newly fashioned "Territorial Army." The obsequies were not without a certain impressiveness. There was, of course, a big muster of citizen soldiers, the "Last Post" was sounded, three volleys were fired, then the bugles called "Lights Out" just as Big Ben announced midnight. A moment after we heard the "Reveille" which signalised the birth of what our King has styled "The Imperial Army of the Second Line" and then followed a good deal of Auld Lang Syne, and cheering and brass band effort.

The new Territorial Army will be organised on severer principles than the Volunteers. All the battalions will be of one strength, 1,009 officers and men. The organisation will consist of fourteen mounted brigades, each composed of:—

3 Yeomanry Regiments,
1 Horse Artillery Battery,
Transport and Ambulance, and fourteen infantry divisions, each consisting of 3 Infantry Brigades (twelve battalions),

3 Field Batteries,
1 Howitzer Battery,
1 Heavy Battery,
Divisional Cavalry,
Ammunition Column, Transport and Supply, Ambulance, and three companies of Engineers.

In addition there will be a number of battalions, infantry, and cyclist, not embodied in the divisions and brigades for use as army troops or reserves. The total strength is to be 314,094 officers and men, which is 48,000 above the force of the old Volunteers and Yeomanry. The service uniform will be of drab colour; the annual training will include eight days in camp, which will be compulsory for efficiency.

There is almost a famine in theatrical news this week: after Easter will come an awakening from our Lenten abstinence I suppose. One learns that Sir John Hare, although at present holiday-making on the Continent, has practically completed all arrangements connected with his farewell season at the Garrick. It was originally settled that this should begin on Saturday, 25th April, but in order to suit the convenience of Mr. Bourchier and the present occupants of that theatre, Sir John has waived his right to the date, and will, instead, commence operations on Thursday, the 30th instant. The piece selected for the occasion is, as already announced, Mr. Pinero's "The Gay Lord Quex," in which Sir John will repeat his brilliant performance as that notorious but popular peer. A hearty welcome, also, will certainly await Miss Nancy Price, who has been given the reversion of Miss Irene Vanbrugh's original part of Sophie Fulgarney.

Mr. Granville Barker and Mr. J. E. Vedrenne, so far from having severed their partnership, are to be associated during the present season in producing a new play by Mr. Bernard Shaw. The theatre decided upon for this interesting event is the Haymarket, and Mr. Frederick Harrison, as well as Messrs. Vedrenne and Barker, feels that the arrangement just concluded which makes this possible is one for general congratulation. Mr. Bernard Shaw is now out of London putting the finishing touches on his play, in which marriage will be used as the basis for the central interest of the story.

"The Gay Gordons" continues its run of success at the Aldwych Theatre, and is likely to do so as long as it holds the boards. The piece is a glorious and certain cure for the dumps. Miss Maudi Darrell, owing to temporary loss of voice, has been compelled to resign her part. She has not been in good health for some time, and her doctor has ordered complete rest.

This week, at the Shakespeare Theatre, Clapham Junction, is a return visit of Mr. William Greet's principal London company, in the late Wilson Barrett's great religious play, "The Sign of the Cross," which has now been played for over 20,000 performances in the United States and England.

Miss Aida Jenoure, described as "The English Yvette Guilbert," will be presented by Mr. Alfred Butt at the Palace Theatre on her first appearance in variety this evening in an extensive repertoire of old English and French folk songs. Mr. Reggie de Voulle also makes a first appearance.

"The White Man," "The Thief" "The Merry Widow," "Miss Hook of Holland" and "When Knights were Bold" continue their successful careers. If the last named runs—as it has every appearance of so doing—well into the summer, no home-coming Anglo-Indian should miss it. It is one of the cleverest and funniest pieces ever presented.

Never before in London has such a large number of side-shows been gathered together as will be provided for pleasure-seekers at the Franco-British Exhibition at Shepherd's Bush. By the time the exhibition opens, something like £120,000 will have been expended by amusement caterers, apart from the great sums spent upon the exhibition proper. Of the 146 acres covered by the exhibition, over forty will be given over to side-shows and novel devices.

To sit in a comfortable electric car and be whirled away through mountain gorges, with a snow-topped peak on one side, and a rushing, tumbling stream on the other, should make one feel cool, even on the hottest summer afternoon. That is the experience which will be provided by the Canadian scenic railway. The railway will cost £20,000, and the mile of scenery will be highly realistic. A similar railway was a great attraction at the St. Louis Exhibition.

The sensation of "flip-flapping" is absolutely new to Londoners, so the giant "flip-flap" at the exhibition is expected to be very popular. The "flip-flap" consists of two tapering steel arms, each 150 feet long, with a car suspended from the end of each, supported upon a central base.

Imagine the blades of a monster pair of scissors closing together in mid-air and you have a picture of the first motion of the "flip-flap." Worked by a powerful engine, the steel arms, with the cars attached, are raised from the ground until they stand straight in mid-air. Then the motion is continued. Each arm goes forward to the ground again, and the passengers alight on the opposite side to which they entered the cars, having completed a half-circle through the air. At the top a stoppage of two minutes is allowed for the "flip-flappers" to have a bird's-eye view of the whole exhibition.

All your readers who know their Strand must remember "Burgess's" the quaint old Italian warehouse, a quaint and ancient landmark and "an idlers' mile-post" as a brother scribe expresses it. From Rimmel's one got a bouquet of rose and violet—from Burgess's a whift of anchovy and sauces. The old house is doomed, it is to come down and will soon be little else than an aromatic memory. Apropos of its exit how many of us can repeat thrice quickly the words over which our great grandfathers used to be bothered—"Burgess's fish sauce shop!"

Yet another historic edifice in a few weeks will go to swell the list of Vanished London. Legal men in India may perhaps learn with a sigh of regret that No. 1, Brick Court, Temple, will be in process of demolition by the time these lines are in print. Oliver Goldsmith and Blackstone lived in "No. 2," next door, and there the latter wrote his famous "Commentaries on the Laws of England." In "No. 1" itself the late Lord Coleridge had his chambers; likewise Henry Thesiger, son of a Lord Chancellor, and himself afterwards a Lord Justice; also Mr. Justice Day, Sir William Anson, and in later days Mr. Charles Gill, K.C.

A select gathering of our wise men are still trying hard to answer the question "What is Whisky?" Early this week a startling statement was made to the Commission, and as whisky is the wine of the country in your huge peninsula you may be interested to hear that one of the witnesses, Dr. Philip Shidrowitz, a great authority on the chemistry of brewing and distillation, declared that a whisky, in all respects similar to a high-class brand of Highland pure malt whisky, had been achieved in a new form of patent-still at one operation.

"And what of it," I fancy I hear some old Calcutta man remark, "was it not one Croft of Entally, who some years ago evolved unlimited Irish or Scotch of any grade, strength or age with little but a big tub, a few bottles of flavouring a consignment of assorted lables and somewhat of methylated spirits to help him?"

It is announced in my morning paper that on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for India, the King has been pleased to approve the following appointments:—To be Chief Justice of the High Court of Bombay, Mr. Basil Scott, Barrister-at-Law, in succession to Sir Lawrence Jenkins, K.C.I.E., who has retired. To be a Puisne Judge of the High Court of Calcutta, Mr. Henry Reynell Holled Coxe, Indian Civil Service, in the place of Mr. Justice B. G. Geidt, Indian Civil Service, who is about to retire. To be a Puisne Judge of one High Court of Allahabad, Mr. Henry Daly Griffin, Indian Civil Service, in the place of Sir William Burkitt, Indian Civil Service, who is about to retire. But perhaps your Gazette has already given you the news.

India. Lieutenant James Murphy, of the Indian Army, was yesterday granted a decree nisi and costs against Donald William Rathbone, also an officer, in respect to the latter's misconduct with Mrs. Murphy. The parties met in India, where petitioner and co-respondent belonged to the same regiment, and the petitioner had to complain of his wife's friendship for the co-respondent. There was no defence, the respondent wrote making false charges against her husband, and making suggestions as to his aiding her in getting a divorce. The petitioner refused to do so, but owing to lack of means determined not to defend the divorce proceedings of the wife. Ultimately the respondent and co-respondent admitted their misconduct, and the petitioner filed his petition for a divorce. "We have absolutely thrown ourselves on your mercy," wrote the co-respondent, who expressed his intention of marrying the respondent although his father had cut him off with a shilling. Having heard the evidence his lordship said that owing to the petitioner's position he thought it only right to say that the accusations made by the wife against her husband had been disproved by the petitioner's own evidence.

A LUCKY MORNING WITH BISON.

NOWADAYS it is by no means easy for the ordinary sportsman to secure a good bull bison in the Central Provinces, where they formerly abounded in large numbers. The shooting blocks in the Reserved Forests in which bison are found are comparatively few in number, and the best are generally reserved for district officials and other big bugs on tour (!) and the ordinary outsider has but little chance of obtaining the necessary permission, although blocks in which other game such as tiger, sambhur, cheetal, bear, etc., are to be had are easy enough to obtain. Yet there are a few places in very out-of-the-way and inaccessible spots in which bison still abound and recall the good old days Forsyth talks about in his "Highlands of Central India." It was recently my good fortune to stumble upon one of these spots in a certain remote part of the C.P. I had got the all important permission to shoot two bison and the next thing to be done was to find them. A long and horrible ten days march along dusty roads, along which passed a perpetual stream of bullock carts laden with timber, causing much profanity on my part for the awful dust they raised, brought one near the base of the hills I was going to work. A few small villages were scattered about the lower parts of the hills and with great difficulty I collected the few coolies I required for my scanty baggage. In some cases I had to flee from the torrents of abuse poured on my devoted head by the female relations of the men I was trying to induce to do an honest day's work! Taking sufficient supplies for ten days we started up the hillside. The path was very narrow here and there covered with large boulders and with long grass growing on both sides and a terribly steep ascent. It must have been fearful work for the poor coolies, and I was not surprised to hear when the baggage arrived that two coolies had bolted throwing their loads by the roadside, one of which happened to be my precious rifles. Luckily the rearguard of my following found the loads and brought them in. That night we all lay down dead beat by a little stream on some rocky ground. The next day I marched ten miles along the top of the plateau, which was here about 3,000 feet high, and there halted as I got khubber of bison in the vicinity. In these parts owing to the dry nature of the ground the only way in which bison can be located is by visiting the feeding grounds in the early morning. These at that time of year consist of patches of ground where the grass has been burnt and the new grass has sprung up and where owing to the grass having been burnt it was possible to see the tracks in the ashes, and thus ascertain if bison were in the habit of visiting them. The first day I went out with a local tracker and found numerous tracks of bison but all about three days old. In the evening I came across a swamp deer stag which allowed me to approach within about twenty-five yards but was left alone as I did not wish to disturb the ground. I also saw a sambhur stag which apparently could not make out what strange animal I was for some time; they do not seem to know much about rifles in these parts I thought with satisfaction. The next day I was up long before dawn and visited another part about five miles away. We wandered about for some time finding a lot of fresh tracks on the open burnt places but no bison visible. Suddenly we heard a sort of lowing sound some little way distant and going towards it through some long grass I suddenly came on a young bull bison but as he was rather a wee one, we only looked at each other for a few seconds when he thought it was time to quit. The men with me declared this was not the bison that had made the noise. Going on a bit further I suddenly saw a good bull looking at me over a bush with only his head showing. Not liking to risk a head shot I tried to move cautiously to one flank but he was off and away in the long grass before I could get a good chance at him, and I did not want to risk a snap shot as I thought I might get a better chance at him next day near the same feeding ground. The grass, except in the small patches which had been burnt, was very long and thick and tracking was impossible. The next morning again I visited the same spot very early but no signs of any game were seen. The local men said they knew another feeding ground about five miles off which was a certain find for bison and that the grass was much shorter there. Although it would then be a bit late to find the bison out feeding and was a long way from camp I decided to have a look at the place anyway. After about three miles, going along a little pathway we saw the fresh tracks of a good sized solitary bull very like our friend of the day before and going in the same direction as we were. These we followed up and after about a mile the tracker suddenly said quietly "Boda;" about 250 yards off feeding about in the grass I made out a whole herd of bison. Getting behind a small tree I became aware of the fact that the bison were actually grazing towards me, what wind there was blowing from them to me in the most satisfactory fashion. There were about fifteen bison in the herd and it was a most interesting sight watching these huge beasts grazing unsuspiciously so close to me. I couldn't for the life of me make out the bull nor could the shikari who gave vent to agonised whispers of "madhi hai, sub mahdi." On they came to within about forty yards and then they suddenly seemed to think something was wrong, as they began bunching up and moving away to my right at a fast walk, at last I saw the bull who had been hidden together with some other cows in the long grass and came out to my right front. He was rather mixed up with the cows but I got a snapshot at him as he passed, whereupon they all rushed off. I wasn't at all sure whether I had hit him or not: we followed up in the direction the herd had taken, but could find no blood, but we had had only gone about two hundred yards when I suddenly saw the bull standing half broadside on in some long grass looking at us. I was just on the point of firing at him again when he suddenly subsided in the grass. At the same moment I heard a whistle behind me and looking back I saw the shikari who had previously climbed a tree excitedly beckoning to me and pointing to his left; moving quietly to my left I suddenly saw an immense black bull looking at us over a bush with only his head and chest showing about two hundred yards away. Creeping cautiously a little nearer and getting behind a small tree, against which I leant, I took a careful aim at his chest. This time there was no doubt about the bullet telling on him, and turning sharply round off he went at a gallop across a bit of open ground. The second barrel missed nobly as he rushed into the jungle. Changing my ·400 high velocity for the heavy ·600 high velocity we now proceeded to follow him up pretty cautiously. The ground, however, was at first fairly open. There was not a drop of blood to be seen but from his tracks there was no doubt about his being hard hit as he seemed to have staggered every now and again as he galloped along. After about three hundred yards we came to a deep nullah on the far side of which was some long grass jungle. The shikari declared he would be in this to a certainty and we proceeded to reconnoitre from the tops of trees in the vicinity! Suddenly one of the men saw him lying in the grass with his head and the ridge of his back showing. Crossing the nullah I crept cautiously in the direction where the man pointed but could see nothing owing to the long grass. A few yards further on was a fallen tree one of whose branches was about three feet off the ground. Standing on this I suddenly saw him lying down only about twenty yards off. Letting drive with the heavy rifle, up he bolted like a hare, at the same time the recoil knocked me clean over backwards off the branch. I knew now that he was mine for a certainty as the ·600 had caught him right enough more or less behind the shoulder and a bit high up perhaps as far as I could judge. The grass was here very long and thick so I again sent men up trees close to where I had fired as I was pretty certain he couldn't go far. One of the men spotted him lying only about 30 yards from where I had shot him, he having made a short circle round to the left. Walking gingerly up with the rifle ready I found him lying stone dead. He was a splendid fellow, evidently an exceedingly old and solitary bull with grand massive horns very much worn down and his teeth worn down to practically nothing. Another point which struck me were his immense hoofs which made an almost circular impression, those of an ordinary bull, even a solitary one, being more or less elongated like a sambhur's. It was certainly great luck finding him by chance so near the herd, and his lengthy career should have taught him not to be so curious as to investigate what caused a rifle shot only about 500 yards from where he was feeding. He was certainly not the solitary bull we had been tracking, whose tracks were only about half his size, so that there must have been another solitary chap feeding not far off too! Returning to the bull first shot, we found him lying dead, the bullet, a solid one from the ·400, having been correctly placed behind the shoulder. This ground was evidently from the large number of tracks a very favourite feeding ground of the mountain bull. The local men said it was then really too early to get good sport, but they said in April and May great numbers of bison and some immense solitary bulls were to be found here. However, I was quite content with what I had got, two good bulls, one a very fine one, within a quarter of an hour of each other. The rest of the day was spent in skinning and preparing the masks and shaving down the skins of the latter, which as there were two to be done was by no means a light task, and I had four men on them for several hours. The next day was devoted to further work on the heads and to repose on my part, and the day after I proceeded down the hill again on my way back to civilisation and hoping to visit again in some future year this splendid bison ground if possible in the month of "Jeth."

"CHAMTIGHR."

SPORT IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

THERE is no part of the continent of North America where sport of every kind, save deerstalking, is more accessible and abundant than in the beautiful province of Prince Edward Island. Reposing on the cool, blue waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which bathe its sandy beaches, and lying directly in the route of the migratory birds, it cannot be otherwise.

Native game is scarce, and limited to the dusky or blue grouse and Arctic hare. There are foxes and bears, and, until quite recently, beavers. The migrants are very numerous, and comprise the Canada goose, brant, black duck, teal, wigeu, woodcock, snipe, golden plover, and about fifteen other varieties of the same family, great flocks of curlews, and many waders of less importance.

Early in March the "honk-honk" of the goose is heard in the land, and sportsmen are everywhere on the alert. Geese come to the island in immense flocks arriving before the ice disappears from the coast, but not before it breaks up. Gladdened by their first glimpse of water after their long and rapid flight from southern rice-fields and lagoons, the tired birds alight in the pools of water amid fissures in the ice, and there wait until the movements of the ice floes shall have given them more sea room. It is now, in large part, that the sportsman has to bag his game, since the geese are partial to fresh water, and there may have been early freshets in some of the rivers. At all events, he will get no sport without the aid of the goose-boat or tub, or both.

The goose-boat is of small dimensions, ill-proportioned, white, and fitted with side-wheels, which are worked from within by means of an ingenious pedal arrangement, conveniently placed amidships. Thus it is easily carried from one place to another, pretty nearly resembles a lump of ice—which it is intended to do—and may be propelled through the water in almost absolute silence, when drifting is not possible. The boat is carried out across the "board" or standing ice some time previous to the expected arrival of the geese, and placed in a position whence it may be easily and rapidly launched. Decoys are placed in the water at various points, and the sportsman's patience and skill are rarely unrewarded. If the tub be used, it is sunk into a hole previously cut in the ice, of sufficient depth to conceal its occupant, who, having set out decoys, waits the incoming of the birds. This is, in fact, the more general method of circumventing the geese. Spring goose-shooting lasts about a month, and the number of birds killed is always large. There is scarcely a creek or a cove along the whole cost of the island where geese may not be found, hence everyone who can goes after them. A youth of our acquaintance shot 300 birds during the Spring of 1891, for all of which he found a ready sale in Boston. This is not an isolated case. Still the number of geese does not sensibly diminish from year to year; indeed, sportsmen declare them to have been more plentiful last year than ever before.

When they return in the Fall from their breeding places in the Arctic and semi-Arctic regions of Greenland, Labrador, and Newfoundland, they are again shot in considerable numbers, and, because wilder, giving better sport than in the spring. Latterly, at this season, pinnaces have been employed to pursue the geese in the rivers and creeks. But since they have proved hobgoblins to the birds, in some instances frightening them away altogether from favourite haunts, their use has been wisely forbidden, and more sportsmanlike methods adopted.

Though fascinating to an unusual degree, spring goose shooting involves serious risks to the health and personal safety of the sportsman by reason of his long enforced exposure to the chilling winds that blow across the ice, and there is always the possibility of the ice suddenly breaking up and floating away seaward.

The departure of the common goose for higher latitudes allows the sportsman just enough time to prepare for the arrival of the more desirable, and more delicate, if smaller brant goose, which takes place early in May. Brant are not nearly so plentiful as the Canada goose, though they are found at many points in the island in pretty considerable numbers. By this time the ice has almost disappeared, although a few blocks may possibly linger about. Again, the goose-boat, as described above, tub, and decoys are called into requisition, and good sport will be secured. The habits of the brant are such that the early morning is the best time to get them when they come to the inshore feeding-grounds. At other times they paddle off to sea, where is almost impossible to get within range of them. The brant enjoys the distinction, with the black duck and canvas-back, of being one of the best table birds in the world. Since they do not generally reach the island shores before the farmer begins his spring ploughing, brant are not so generally hunted as the common goose, hence they rarely fall save to the guns of the more leisured classes. The high market value of this fine bird, and the keen sport he gives, are powerful considerations, and, not uncommonly, quite enough to turn the young yeoman from the field and tempt him to exchange the prosaic plough-handle for the gun. The brant leaves the island about the middle of June, with the same mysterious suddenness as that which seems to mark all his movements; nor does a single bird appear thereafter until late in the Fall, when they pause for a few days on their way south.

During the spring goose-shooting parties of sportsmen leave the capital town of Charlottetown for the haunts of the birds. Besides the usual sporting appliances, each party is provided with horse and wagon, the latter being built with a view to carrying the goose-boat if necessary. During their expedition they generally put up at the most convient farm-house.

The rivers of Prince Edward Island afford first-rate trout fishing. They are carefully preserved, and are well stocked. Besides, heavy baskets may be made all through the summer months in the tidal rivers off the numerous sand points which jut out from the land, though the fish are not generally larger than from 1lb. to 3lb. Good old Izaak has an extensive following in the Garden Province. The beginning of August brings the mackerel. About 10th August black duck shooting begins. At the end of the month the fields are everywhere dotted with golden plover and many other varieties.

Few islanders, save those whose living depends on it, devote any time to mackerel fishing, though, if the fish be abundant, it is such good sport. In Great Britain and Ireland mackerel are caught from boats under sail; in the island, on the contrary, the boats are anchored, finely-chopped herring being thrown overboard to attract the fish thereto. In this manner immense catches have been made; as, for instance, on a morning in August last, a friend hooked and caught 780 fish in the space of a few hours. The chances of success in mackerel fishing are fewer than in most other forms of sport. We have gone out to the fishing grounds many times in succession, and have returned without a fish, though the good haul invariably came sooner or later.

Breeding in the Island, black ducks are always more or less abundant, and are shot from 10th August until about the middle of November, at which time they generally leave. They arrive in June, though we have seen them on two occasions as early as March, and, last year, a couple were shot by an Indian some time in that month. The numerous grass-grown and willow-clad mill dams of the island afford good sanctuary for the ducks. Plover are to be had all over the island, though, unlike the geese, they only visit it once a year on their southern flight. In September, snipe and woodcock may be shot in the marshes and covers, though these last are growing scarcer every year. Good bags may, however, yet be made in some parts of the island. The woodcock is a visitor from the south, and is a small variety of his class.

By the end of November, if the weather be fine—if not earlier—the migrants have all departed, but so long as the grouse continues to be represented on the island, and the hare, there is always the prospect of something to shot. Unlike the grouse—properly ptarmigan—of Newfoundland, it never changes its colour, though its feathers are thicker in the winter than in summer. Grouse are becoming scarcer every year, and unless the mild provisions of the Game Laws are enforced, they will, ere long, have grown a thing of the past. The hare is very abundant in every copse and wood. With the assistance of a good dog, he gives fine sport.

Deer have not been found on the island within the memory of anyone living, nor, would it appear, for a very long time before. But there can be no doubt that herds of moose and caribou roamed over the island at a remote period, since there are so many existing evidences to the fact.

Fishing.

TWENTY-SEVEN POUNDS ON A TROUT ROD.

The mahseer had been frequent but small. For a week I had been getting two or three fish every day but all of about 5lbs. in weight. Now a 5lb. fish at the end of a 14-foot stiff mahseer rod hasn't got much of a show, so I thought I would try a lighter rod. The only other rod I had got was a light 11-foot trout fly rod, made by Foster with his patent steel ribbing. I thought I wouldn't have a chance if I got into a big one with this but that it would be just the thing for a tussle with a 5lb.

Accordingly I pursuaded my host, who spends a cheerful existence in growing tea, to come down and jeer at me on the bank and we set forth having first sent on a khitmagar and a large supply of tea and soda-water, for it was a horrid hot day. When we got down to the river we found that frying pans were nothing to the river bank. Not a breath of wind and the temperature up out of sight. D. wisely retired into the only bit of shade available accompanied with the khitmagar and the soda water I started fishing—also dripping! In about five minutes I felt like an ungummed card board box, however D. was within shouting distance and the khitmagar was agile so I didn't do so badly. I had my chuprassi with me and the landing net. He is not a genius. One time I got some weeds mixed up with the spoon so I put the rod down, told him to clean the spoon and went to take a bit of a rest with D. When I got back I found that the idiot had got some sand and had carefully scrubbed all the silver off the spoon! A brand new one too. Finally after about an hour, D. called out that the kettle was boiling so I went off and joined him in the shade. D. said that he thought he was sufficiently cooked ...sted a return. I said "give me just half an hour ...all pool above here." He said right, and off I went ...or about ten minutes. Now the pool proper was ... size of a tennis court. Then the river consisted of ... rapid for about 300 yards and finally it broadened ...plit into two channels. I had worked down to about the centre of the pool standing up to my waist when suddenly I felt the welcome pull of a fish taking hold. There was a screech from the reel as the fish rushed down stream for a few yards—then silence and then it dashed furiously up stream like a torpedo boat. As it passed I saw him and nearly fainted with surprise. He looked like a whale. I reeled in as hard as I could when whish he turned and went down stream, the reel yelling. There was I up to my waist, so I couldn't follow and with only a light trout rod to stop a fish of unguessable size in a rapid. The rod bent till the tip touched the water but praise be to Foster nothing broke. By the time I had floundered ashore there were only a few turns of line left on the reel. I legged it down the bank reeling in when I could and finally he stopped just above the fork in the river, but dangerously near the far channel. I fairly bent the rod double and got him to get out of that, for if he had gone down there I never could have got him. Meantime I was shouting for D. to come. The khitmagar heard and said "the sahib is shouting I think he wants a drink!" As I knew that my genius of a chuprassi would not be the slightest use when it came to landing the fish I sent him to fetch D. who came with the khit. By now the fish had sailed in to about twenty yards from the bank and sulked. My little switch of a rod of course wouldn't move him so I got the people to stone him from below. It had the effect for whish up stream he went did a chukker round the pool and sulked again. Same treatment, same thing. This went on for about half an hour, the fish going off with fifty yards line as if nothing was holding him. At last, however, the rushes got slower and shorter and he began to give in. Then came the question how to pull him out, as I only had a landing net and no gaff. The problem was solved by D., the khit, and the chuprassi getting into the water knee deep and forming line whilst I towed the fish between them and the shore. Very slowly and gingerly I towed the fish along and after several attempts managed to ground him on a sandy bit of beach half out of water. With a shout of "now!" from D. three pairs of hands dived under him, a simultaneous heave and out he came, a hurried slump on the head to make sure and D. and I could admire him and guess at his weight what time the khitmagar performed his official duties. The fish weighed 26½lb. an hour after and measured 41 inches in length and had a girth of 22 inches, fairly fought and killed with a rod weighing 15 oz. not counting the reel which was a Hardy's large Silex.

FRENCH MANUFACTURERS OF FISHING TACKLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—We Englishmen are rather prone to regard ourselves as the one and only nation who angle for sport, and it will come as a surprize to many to learn that the French are every whit as far ahead as ourselves in the manufacture of refined and high class fishing gear.

One of the best known French firms is that of Wyers Freres, who besides three establishments in Paris, have a fishing tackle manufactory at Redditch in England. They are also editors of a well-known French Angling Magazine La Pêche Moderne.

Wyers' great speciality are built cane rods of what they call "Java Steel Bamboo." These special Javanese canes are supposed to be of extraordinary strength and elasticity. The firm also have a patent lock fast joint of their own, which they fit to their rods, and an extremely neat and effective winch fitting, which allows of winches always being readily and firmly attached to a rod, no matter what size they are. It is on the principle of the inclined plane: after the winch has been placed in the seating, a slight twist of the ring grips the plate firmly.

Wyers are very strong in casting reels, making several patterns of the multiplying variety for casting in the American fashion. They also have an unique method of stiffening and strengthening light cane bottom rods by winding them closely throughout with silk ribbon. The winding is done very tightly and the rod is entirely covered over its whole length. The ribbon is saturated with a cementing varnish, which not only attaches it very firmly to the rod, but makes it waterproof. The new process seems of decided value for stiffening and strengthening the delicate white cane roach rods without adding appreciably to their weight.

Wyers Freres use a special cane known as "Spanish Roseau" for their bottom rods.

Specially to be commended are two patterns of hooks manufactured by the firm, viz., the "Alerte," a sneck bend with two barbs. The upper barb is so sharp and tiny that it enters the fish's lip with the minimum of resistance, retaining the hook hold there till the pressure of playing drives the steel in beyond the second barb. The "Alerte" hook is said to be specially effective for roach; The other hook is the "Qui Vive." It is hand forged, wide in the bend and short in the shank, with a small barb and extremely sharp point. It strikes me as being the perfection of a hook for roku fishing, and I hope that some one of the readers of the Indian Field will try a few and report on them. I am going to try both patterns, in the smaller sizes, on roach, and hope to record their practical value at an early date. I think the above notes will suffice to show that we hardly give the French due credit for their progress in matters piscatorial and that they have certainly no need to go to English shops for their gear.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

THE INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES.

BY E. C. STUART BAKER, F. Z. S., M. B. O. U.

Since Messrs. Hume and Marshall published their work on the "Game Birds of India" (1879-80), now, and long since, out of print, and which, when a copy is offered for sale, realises a considerable advance on the published price, no work has appeared on the Indian Ducks with coloured plates.

The Bombay Natural History Society are now preparing and reprinting Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's articles on this attractive group of birds, which have appeared from time to time during the past ten years in their "Journal."

The book will form a handsome volume of over 300 pages of text, the same having been revised throughout by the Author, and will contain all the available information up to the time of going to press.

The Thirty Coloured Plates will be reproduced by chromolithography, under the supervision of the well-known bird-artist Mr. Henrik Grönvold.

The binding of the book will be in half-morocco, gilt top, with the plates guarded, and will form a very desirable addition to the library of the naturalist or sportsman.

The edition will be limited to 1,100 copies.

Fourth Edition. One Hundred and Eighty Illustrations.

Super-Royal 8vo., cloth gilt. 832 pages, Rs. 18-6. Reduced Rs. 12-4.

GAME, SHORE, AND WATER BIRDS OF INDIA

With additional reference to their allied species in other parts of the World.

By COL. A. LE MESSURIER, C. [illegible], F. Z. S., F. G. S., LATE ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Author of "Kandahar in 1879." From [illegible] London to Bokhara," and "A Ride through Persia."

Nature.—"Colonel Le Messurier writes as a field naturalist for field naturalists and sportsmen without any great pretensions to scientific knowledge, but there is no doubt that all naturalists will gain useful hints from this volume which is profusely illustrated with wood-cuts giving the characteristic features of most of the species."

Knowledge.—"Compact in form, excellent in method and arrangement, and as far as we have been able to test it, rigidly accurate in details. Colonel Le Messurier's book should become the vade mecum of every sportsman and naturalist whom duty or pleasure may compel to visit India."

Demy 8vo., cloth. Rs. 6-6.

"MODERN SPORTING GUNNERY."

BY HENRY SHARP.

The author is a sportsman of large practical experience who has written many books on game shooting. Thinking, however, that most shooting men would welcome a book which gave them in an intelligible form more technical information about their weapons and ammunition, two years ago he secured the entrée to the gun-works of a well-known firm, and this fine volume of 526 pages is the result. In it he enters with great detail into the construction of all kinds of shot-guns and rifles and into the question of their loads and ammunition, noting all the latest inventions. There are chapters on game and wildfowl shooting in the British Isles, and on shooting abroad, in which the author gives lists of the game obtainable in different places with notes on the best weapons and ammunition to use, and on the duties to be paid. The Duchess of Bedford contributes a chapter on "Ladies in the Field." Copiously illustrated.

THE TURF.

LIVERPOOL.

SOON after the wet crowd had cleared off the course last Friday, rain began to fall, and was pattering down in such persistent style at bedtime that it looked any odds on our finishing up under umbrellas. The fates, however, were happily propitious, and the concluding day of a successful and brilliant meeting supplied the grandest weather of the three. Thousands of visitors had departed for home after the Grand National, and thousands more were reserving themselves for the semi-final between Newcastle and Fulham, at Anfield-road, but except so far as the holiday element was concerned, the attendance was large and thoroughly representative. Although rain fell heavily during Monday night, the roads were as hard as nails up Oadby way by midday, and the going from being stodgy, left off at the sticky stage, and under sun and wind was rapidly improving. GATWICK.

IN London we do not often know what the weather is doing further south, but on this occasion—"All Fool's Day"—he seems agreed with the sample, as the watery sunshine in town blazed resplendent on the Surrey weald, and in the absence of wind the temperature was of a mild, springlike character. From London and Brighton the specials were well patronized, and the attendance all round a fair one, while after the recent rains the going was a trifle sticky, but fields ruled well. Details:—

NOTES ON LEAGUE GAMES.

MANCHESTER UNITED have been a little off their form lately, but they found it again on Saturday, when Sheffield Wednesday were badly beaten at Clayton. Halse recently transferred from Southend, made his début, and he gave more than general satisfaction.

For the third year in succession Sheffield United were beaten at home by Manchester City, but the United were without Brown, for whose benefit the match was set apart. A thrilling game between Everton and Birmingham was seen at Birmingham, and the Northerners were perhaps unlucky not to share the points, but the victory enabled the home side to move up from bottom place in the table, which position is now occupied by Bolton, who made a serious slip when they allowed Sunderland to take away a couple of points from Burnden Park.

The Arsenal made a meritorious draw at Blackburn, and the London side are now practically safe from relegation. Bury, of course, beat Liverpool, and the match at Middlesbrough for the benefit of Williamson saw the defeat of Preston, after a very strenuous game.

Leicester Fosse's recent succession of victories has placed them on almost equal terms with the leaders, but the Midland team has some stiff games yet to play, as they have to visit Fulham, Oldham, Chesterfield, and Clapton. Both Derby County and Bradford City had to respectively come away from Blackpool and West Bromwich without points, but Oldham again placed themselves in a satisfactory position by a victory at Leeds Stockport followed up their victory over Fulham by beating Barnsley, and Clapton brought a point away from Grimsby, where so many good sides come to grief.

The victory of Queen's Park Rangers at Reading practically gives the Southern League championship to the London team, as Plymouth failed unluckily at Norwich, and so fell five points behind, and Bristol Rovers who won again, may finish second. Portsmouth, who have played wonderfully since Christmas, obtained another victory at New Brompton, but the most sensational football was seen at Leyton, where the "Spurs" forwards were irresistible, and scored four goals in eighteen minutes.

COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP—FINAL.

CORNWALL, 17 points; DURHAM, 3 points.—After many disheartening reverses, the pluck and perseverance of the Cornishmen were handsomely rewarded at Redruth, on Saturday, the 28th ultimo, when they defeated Durham by 1 goal and 4 tries to 1 penalty goal, thus carrying off the County Championship for the first time. If only on the grounds that it is well for the honours to go round, the success of the Cornish team will be generally popular. It is perhaps open to question whether they are quite as good as the best Middlesex fifteen, but one, of course can only take facts as they are. Beginning rather badly in the competition this season, the Cornishmen steadily improved; and by consistently good play in their later matches have proved themselves thoroughly worthy of the distinction that has been gained. They have a hard working set of forwards, who, if not clever, can be trusted to last through a severe encounter, as they did on Saturday, but their great strength is at half-back. In Davey, the international, and Wedge they possess perhaps the best pair of halves of any county, and these two men had much to do with the winning of Saturday's match. Wedge played the humble part of the scrummage worker skilfully and Davey was clever in making openings for his three-quarters. Dean and Jose were a little disappointing, but Solomon, in the centre, was in great form, and was ably backed up by Bennetts. The combination between the halves and Solomon and Bennetts turned the fortunes of the afternoon. The Durham forwards had the best of the argument, but their superiority was not sufficient to determine the result, Cornwall possessed the stronger scoring powers, and therefore won. Durham had several chances, but their attack lacked finish, a blunder of some kind always being commited at the critical juncture. On the other hand, the combination of the Cornish backs, with some exceptions, proceeded on smooth lines, three of the five tries being the result of movements cleverly initiated and skilfully carried through. Cornwall won because they possessed the capacity to score.

The game, which attracted a crowd estimated at 17,000, was played under excellent conditions. At the outset the Durham forwards were much in evidence, and Cornwall had an anxious time. After a while the play became more even, and Jose lost a good chance of scoring for Cornwall. The home county took up a strong position, and some combined play between Solomon and Bennetts ended in the former scoring. Afterwards the attack passed into the hands of Durham, and with Imrie, who played well, running strongly, a score looked fairly certain. Imrie's pass was not taken, and Cornwall escaped. Durham, however, kept up the pressure, their forwards nearly going over, but the Cornishmen by keen tackling saved the situation. During this period of the game the Durham scrummagers put in some fine work, very seriously troubling the defence, but eventually Solomon and Bennetts came into play. Their first effort was checked, but the second ended in success, Bennetts running right round, and Jackson placing a goal. A little later Cornwall were penalised and Adamson kicked a good goal. At the interval Cornwall led by 8 points to 3. In the second half Cornwall had all the best of the game, and once more Solomon and Bennetts beat the Durham defence. They swept down the ground and Solomon, with a beautiful feint to pass, raced over. From that point to the finish the Cornishmen, whose forwards stayed well, were playing a winning game. From a scrummage close up, Davey dodged through in smart fashion, and Tregartha, following some fine work by Milton, also scored. In the closing stages Cornwall exercised an undoubted superiority, and were left with a brilliant triumph.

HOCKEY.

ENGLAND vs. SCOTLAND.—It is only since 1901 that England has met Scotland in the hockey field, and with the exception of 1903, when Scotland drew at Glasgow, the other matches have resulted in victories for the Rose. The Rose bloomed at Edinburgh on Saturday, the 28th ultimo, once more, as the Thistle suffered a reverse by 3 –1.

Changes were necessary in the English team, Freeman, Shoveller and Logan not being able to accept, and their defection gave an opportunity to Marshall, Goodwin, and Draper. The North and Midlands thus supplied seven of the eleven players. Unfortunately, the turf was somewhat bumpy, and skilful play was almost impossible.

The whole of the goals were registered in the first half. R. G. Pridmore, the Coventry forward, accomplishing the "hat trick" for his country, a feat that was highly meritorious for one fresh to international honours this season. After England had scored the first point, Mackenzie equalised for Scotland. The Edinburgh University forward is acknowledged to be the cleverest exponent of attack in the country, while J. Harper-Orr is regarded as the Scottish "Shoveller."

In the last half Scotland revealed surprisingly good stick work, which was certainly exceptional. The game in the last "thirty-five" was chiefly in English territory, as the Scottish forwards indulged in hit and rush tactics. Yet England's defence was so good, Baillon and Marshall playing so finely, with the help of Robinson, Page and Noble at half, that these rushes proved abortive, and the Scots were rarely allowed to get in a shot. A. B. Burt, the centre half, saved several ugly situations.

ATHLETICS.

THE 'VARSITY SPORTS.—I have already apprised you of the result of these sports—to the consternation of the cognoscenti the Light Blues carried the day by winning six events out of the ten. The surprises of the day were the hundred and the hammer. It was not generally known all round that Lindsay-Watson was throwing the hammer in the tremendous form he was in last week.

In two consecutive throws at Queens he did 146ft. and 152ft. odd. This contest, therefore looked, a good thing for Cambridge. Unfortunately, however, Lindsay-Watson came outside the circle every time, and though he got well in front of his opponent was penalised for a non-throw every time.

Things started splendidly for Cambridge. McLeod got the inside berth in the hundred, and they say that that is worth about a yard. Jumping off two good yards in front of Hull, McLeod ran strongly to the finish, and won in 10⅘secs.

The half was looked upon as the Cambridge certainty all the time, and T. H. Just sustained a fine reputation by winning by thirty yards in 1min. 55⅘secs.

K. Powell got a poor start in the hurdles, losing nearly a couple of yards on both Oxford men. He hurdled splendidly, though, after that, and won by a yard and a half good. Considering his bad start and the fact that the ground was a bit soft, Powell's time of 16secs. dead was distinctly good. That win put Cambridge 3 up and 7 to play.

A. C. Bellerby gave Cambridge another point in the high jump with 5 feet 8 inches. The Oxford pair tied at 5 feet 7 inches. N. G. Chavasse broke down at the start of the quarter, and E. H. Ryle, who ran magnificently, strolled home quite happily with over ten yards to spare. Ryle has a ripping stride, and knows how to use it. Cambridge were now 5 up.

S. P. L. Lloyd beat E. S. Dougall in the mile after a good race by eight yards, and was just the better man. This was Oxford's first point. A. M. Stevens, who threw the hammer 139 feet 8 inches put on another, and W. H. Bleaden, with 22 feet 9 inches in the long jump, made the score 3—5. J. L. Michie settled things by putting 37 feet 2½ inches and then came the finest event of the day, the three miles.

F. M. Edwards was thought to have a good chance against N. F. Hallows, but A. E. Cator, the Oxford second string, put paid on his bill. Cator's pacing was the finest piece of judgment, not to mention unselfishness, of the day.

Passing Edwards, Cator always dropped his pace, and either made Edwards race to pass him or be content with a slow race. This, of course, the Cambridge man could not afford to do. At the finish Hallow's stride just did the trick, and though Edwards made a fine attempt up the hill, he was beaten by seven yards in 14mins. 53⅘secs. a very fast race indeed.

100 Yards.—K. G. McLeod (Fettes and Pembroke, Cambridge), 1; L. C. Hull (Michigan and Brasenose, Oxford), 2; N. G. Chavasse (Liverpool College and Trinity, Oxford), 3. Won by two feet; a foot between second and third. Time—10⅘secs.

Half-mile.—T. H. Just (St. Paul's and Trinity, Cambridge), 1; P. Stormonth-Darling (Winchester and New College, Oxford), 2; G. F. Rogers (Liverpool College and Brasenose, Oxford) and C. J. Milln (Eton and Pembroke, Cambridge), failed to finish. Won by nearly thirty yards. Time—1min. 55⅘secs.

120 Yards Hurdles.—K. Powell (Rugby and King's, Cambridge) 1; E. R. J. Hussey (Repton and Hertford, Oxford), 2; G. M. D. Murray (Australia and Trinity, Cambridge), 3. Won by a yard and a half; three yards between second and third. Time—16secs.

High Jump.—A. C. Bellerby (St. Lawrence College, Ramsgate, and Emmanuel, Cambridge), 5ft. 8in. 1; A. N. Doorly (Trinidad and St. John's, Oxford) and J. S. Huxley (Eton and Balliol, Oxford), each 5ft. 7in. dead-heated for second place.

Quarter-mile.—E. H. Ryle (Eton and Trinity, Cambridge), 1; C. M. Chavasse (Liverpool College and Trinity, Oxford), 2. Won by over ten yards. Time—51secs.

Mile.—S. P. L. Lloyd (St. Lawrence College, Ramsgate, and Magdalen, Oxford), 1; E. S. Dougall (Tonbridge and Pembroke, Cambridge), 2; H. Sutton (Melbourne and New College, Oxford), 3. Won by eight yards; 60 yards between second and third. Time—4mins. 29⅘secs.

Throwing the Hammer.—A. M. Stevens (Yale and Balliol, Oxford), 139ft. 8in., 1; H. M. Irwin (Haileybury and Selwyn, Cambridge), 120ft. 6in., 2.

Long Jump.—W. H. Bleaden (St. Edward's School, Oxford and Brasenose, Oxford), 22ft. 3in., 1; A. C. Bellerby (St. Lawrence College, Ramsgate, and Emmanuel, Cambridge), 21ft. 7⅓in., 2.

Putting the Weight.—J. L. Michie (Aberdeen and Trinity, Cambridge), 37ft. 2⅓in., 1; R. L. Robinson (Adelaide and Magdalen, Oxford), 36ft. 10in., 2.

Three Miles.—N. F. Hallows (Felsted and Keble, Oxford), 1; F. M. Edwards (Bath and Queens' Cambridge), 2. Won by seven yards, in 14mins. 53⅘secs. Only two finished.

CLEVER ATHLETES AT R. M. A.—The Royal Military Academy sports, postponed from Friday last owing to wet ground, were held in the field in front of the Royal Military Academy yesterday.

K. P. Atkinson (first term) was the best athlete on the ground winning the 100 yards, the 880 yards, the 440 yards, and the relay race. E. L. B. Anderson (first term) was almost as good, winning the one mile, the two miles, and getting second in the half mile. Atkinson won the silver challenge bugle as winner of most races, and the commandant's prize for the greatest number of points.

RACKETS.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THE SINGLES.—At Queen's Club on the 31st ultimo in the final E. M. Baerlein, the challenger, defeated E. B. Noel, the holder, by three games to one.

The play was of a very uneven nature; in fact, there was very little good rackets except in the final game, when E. M. Baerlein played and killed the ball splendidly. After Baerlein had placed the first game to his credit at 15-1, Noel improved and won the second after a hard struggle. The third game looked to be a good thing for Noel, but with the score at 11—10 he missed an easy return, and Baerlein running out, stood 2—1.

In the fourth and final game of the match the challenger never gave his opponent a look in. Serving well, he fairly smothered all Noel's returns and ran out an easy winner at 15—2, and so secured the championship for the third time in his career having previously held the title in 1903 and 1905. Noel was weak in his back-hand shots, getting much too close to the ball. Neither player really showed his best form.

Last year E. B. Noel beat R. S. Foster after one of the most sensational finals in the history of rakets. Foster had won the two first and was leading at 12-10 in the final game. Noel, however, secured the game at 18—14, and winning the next two gained the championship.

THE DOUBLES.—The final round between Mr. V. H. Pennell and Mr. F. Dames-Longworth and Mr. E. B. Noel and Captain A. C. G. Luther was decided at Queen's Club on the 31st ultimo. The result of a keenly-fought match was a win for Mr. Pennell and Mr. Dames-Longworth by 4 games to 3, the score being called "12 all" in the final game. Mr. Pennell played splendidly in the rallies, hitting tremendously hard and keeping the ball low. His partner served with effect, but made a good many mistakes in the court.

Captain Luther's service was most effective at times, but in the rallies the Infantryman showed a tendency to high-hitting. Mr. Noel made many brilliant strokes, some of his angle-strokes being extremely fine. As the holders, Captain W. L. Foster, D.S.O., R.H.A., and Mr. B. S. Foster, are unable to defend their title owing to the latter having not yet recovered from his recent illness, yesterday's match decided the doubles championship. Details:—

Mr. V. H. Pennell (Charterhouse and Cambridge) and Mr. F. Dames-Longworth (Charterhouse and Cambridge) beat Mr. E. B. Noel (Winchester and Cambridge) and Captain A. C. G. Luther (1st Battalion King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry) by 4 games to 3, 93 aces to 88. Score: 16—14, 15—10, 10—15, 12—15, 10—15, 15—7, 15—12.

First Game.—Mr. Dames-Longworth won the spin and served two. Captain Luther made a single, and his partner put on three. Five barren hands followed, and then Captain Luther with seven went to 11—3. The Old Carthusians, however, with a best run of three by Mr. Pennell, eventually stood at 13—11. Mr. Noel equalised, and scored the first ace in the "set three." Mr. Dames-Longworth made a single, and Mr. Pennell with a couple won the game.

Second Game.—Mr. Pennell did not add, and Captain Luther and Mr. Noel both failed. Mr. Pennell made two aces, and his partner then carried the score to 7—love. After a single to each player, Captain Luther with good service went from 2—9 to 10—9. Mr. Noel failed. Mr. Pennell with five reached "game ball," and Mr. Dames-Longworth gained the winning ace.

Third Game.—Hands were small, the best being four each by Capt. Luther and Mr. Dames-Longworth, until the former got in at 7—10, and ran out, five of his eight aces being by service.

Fourth Game.—The Infantryman did not increase his sequence and for a time small and unproductive hands were the order. Runs of five by Mr. Pennell and four by Mr. Dames-Longworth gave the Old Carthusians the strong lead of 12—3. They did not score another ace, however, as Captain, Luther put on seven, and Mr. Noel ran out with five.

Fifth Game.—Continuing his innings, Mr. Noel added a couple. Captain Luther scored two, but Mr. Pennell, with three and his partner with four, took the lead. Capt. Luther then ran up seven aces and eventually he reached "game" with four.

Sixth Game.—Captain Luther added three. Mr. Pennell, with three, made the score 4—all, and then the Infantryman went to 7—4. "Seven—all" was called, and after small and barren hands Mr. Dames-Longworth went out with three.

Seventh Game.—Mr. Dames-Longworth went to 5—love. Capt. Luther scored a single, and Mr. Noel, with five, took the score to 6—5. Mr. Dames-Longworth put on four aces, and the old Carthusians led at 9—6 and at 12—9. A single to Captain Luther and a couple by his partner made it 12—all, Mr. Dames-Longworth then running out with three.

GOLF.

VARDON BEATS MASSY.—The long-anticipated match between Arnaud Massy, of La Boulie, the French and British open champion, and Harry Vardon, of South Herts, four times open champion of Britain, and once champion of the United States, took place on the 3rd instant on the Cinque Ports Club's links, at Deal. Play was over 36 holes, and Vardon won by 9 up and 7 to play.

Massy drove off before 1,000 spectators, Vardon won the first hole in 4 to 5, while at the second Massy was weak in his putting and had to be content with a half in 4. At the third Vardon holed out a beautiful 3 and became 2 up.

At the fourth hole Massy was weak on the green and Vardon holing out in 3 to 4, now stood 3 up. At the fifth the Englishman went farther ahead, and his opponent was short from the tee and too strong with his approach.

At the sixth hole Vardon was short all the way and Massy won easily in 4 to 5, and scored his first win. At the seventh hole Massy was three-quarters stymied on the green and failing to negotiate Vardon won in 4 to 5, and again became 4 up.

The eighth hole was halved in 5, while the ninth was won by Massy through the Englishman missing a short putt. Vardon was three up at the turn.

The scores out were: Vardon. 4 4 4 3 4 5 4 5 5—38; Massy: 5 4 6 4 5 4 5 5 4—42.

Massy lost the tenth hole through weak putting, Vardon winning in 4 to 5. At the eleventh Vardon went further ahead by running down a long put for 4, and thus increased his lead to 3 up. Vardon failed to reach the short twelfth hole with his tee shot, and the Frenchman had no difficulty in winning in 3 to 4, and thus reducing the lead to 4.

The thirteenth was divided in a par 5, while at the fourteenth the champion found the pot bunker to the left of the green, and making a miserable recovery, lost the hole in 5 to 4, and Vardon again became 5 up. The fifteenth and sixteenth were divided in moderate 5's, but at the next Massy pulled his second so badly, and approached very weakly that he finally gave up the hole.

The last hole was equally shared in 5's, and the round ended with Vardon 6 holes ahead. The scores on the return were:—Vardon: 4 4 4 5 4 5 5 4 5—40, aggregate 78; Massy: 5 5 3 5 5 5 5 5 5—43, aggregate 85.

There were about 3,000 spectators present when the afternoon round started in lovely weather. Vardon won the first hole, and increased his lead to 2 up.

Massy, after a good drive, took his eye off the ball in playing the approach and missed it badly. In playing the third shot Massy took his eye off the ball again, and landed it in the burn. He then gave up the hole. Vardon was on the green in two.

The Englishman found the rough with his approach to the second hole, and Massy, keeping a perfect line, won in 4 to 6. Indifferent play characterised the third hole, which ended in a divided 5, the only feature being a remarkable clerk shot by Vardon, which, however, was spoilt by weak putting on the green.

Vardon was trapped on the fourth journey, but a splendid recovery enabled him to snatch a hard half in 4. The fifth hole was won by Vardon in 5 to 6, and the Englishman was again 7 up.

Racing.

RACING REFORM.

The other Point of View.

It is not very often that one sees a foolish or ignorant article in the Daily Mail; its rapid growth and large circulation have been built up by smart journalism. The latest news, crisply put and brilliant articles on interesting subjects are what one expects in the Daily Mail. Therefore, the surprise is greater when one finds a really foolish article like the one headed "Racing Reform" in the issue of Saturday, 21st March. It is not signed but is described as being by an "Old-Fashioned Sportsman." It is a pity he did not give up writing before getting into his dotage. He starts by denouncing comfort in racing and says: "A man shut up in the Club enclosure at Sandown or the Pesage at Longchamp has nothing whatever to do except over-eat himself and bet." It is hardly necessary to denounce such "rot" as that. Many of the people who go to Sandown and Longchamp, of course, do not pretend to be deeply interested in racing, but go there to get a breath of fresh air, talk to their friends and walk about in the pleasant paddocks between the races. Those interested in racing go there to see good racing and to take good stock of the horses running.

While the "Old-Fashioned Sportsman" may be over-eating himself, I will describe to him what an ordinary keen racing man does with his time. After carefully watching the horses leaving the paddock, noting the condition of each, etc., he closely watches them as they canter to the Post, noting such as go extra well and others who possibly are going a bit short; then if he is going to bet on the race—and unless he is a fool, he does not bet on every race—he watches the market and takes care to get the best odds available to his money. He then takes up the best position he can find to watch the race, and when the Gate goes up takes careful note of what gets off best, what starts slow, etc. He follows the race carefully with his glasses throughout, and notices what runs well, if any of the runners are unlucky in the race, etc.; and after they have passed the Post he returns to the Paddock and notices which of the competitors seem most distressed and if any of them do not seem quite fit.

During these proceedings he is very likely to notice that one (or more) of the official handicappers is doing exactly the same as he is, hence the excellence of modern handicaps and the extreme difficulty of hood-winking modern handicappers.

This will probably be news to an "Old-Fashioned Sportsman." In his day handicaps were made in much more casual fashion, and handicappers were more careless, less astute, and, in some cases, less upright than they are now. The result was that in the old days most important handicaps were won by some "rusted" horse, whereas nowadays most important handicaps are won by fully-exposed animals. The great increase in the number of valuable stakes to be won, the decadence of ante-post betting, and the greatly increased vigilance and astuteness of handicappers is the cause of this desirable state of affairs. It does not pay to "bottle up" a useful horse and, what is more, when it comes to racing, the "bottled up" horse probably gets beaten by the exposed animal, who has been running his races right out in public. A horse requires practice in racing, the same as a man requires practice in golf.

However, we must now go back to our racing man in the Paddock. After looking over as many of the competitors in the last race as he can manage, before they are led away, he probably discusses the last race and the one to be run next with other racing acquaintances, whose opinions are worth having. By this time the horses for the next race are walking round ready saddled, and these he carefully looks over, and in fact, the whole routine of the last race is gone over again. As a matter of fact he has not a moment to spare and I know many racing men who make a rule never to have lunch on the course unless they have time to do so before the first race; no time for eating and drinking between the races for a man who really wants to watch the game.

Our "Old-Fashioned Sportsman" then goes on to say: "When he comes home he has naturally, nothing whatever to think of except whether he has won or lost money, and whether the quails were well done or not." As a matter of fact he has lots to think of: for instance, why he backed a certain horse without sufficient reason, why such and such a horse ran badly or well and which of that day's competitors are likely to improve in the near future. He does not bother about the quails at all, but goes and orders some for dinner at Romano's where he knows they will be well done.

After a lot more drivel he goes on to say: "The owner of five or six race-horses reckons that by quiet, cautious bets he can reduce the cost of his racing stud to £250 per annum per horse."

Rubbish! Nowadays he had far better not bet at all, very little, so cramped is the market and so rotten the prices, but if he knows a horse from a cow, has his horses properly trained, and "places" them with any skill at all, they should not cost him anything like £250 per annum per horse; in fact, in some years they should pay their way, and in real bad years not cost anything like as much as that exclusive of bets altogether. In fact, I maintain that nowadays if a man knows his business as rich are the stakes to run for, that he can keep a small racing stud and have his fun for nothing, without betting a shilling and by running his horses out for their engagements in a straightforward way. There are some men who seem content to keep a stable full of "has beens," "never was-ers," and "never will bes," and they, naturally cost him a lot of money, but even then, exclusive of bets, they should not cost him £250 a year each, unless he enters them like a lunatic.

Of course, he can lose what he likes betting, though he can't win what he likes; in fact, I doubt his being able to win at all, unless he bets small and seldom. A certain little section of the public who don't go racing much, still imagine betting on a vast scale goes on, and for some reason or other, the brief is encouraged by a certain section of the Press, but it is not true. I believe I personally am credited with betting heavily, and if I stated the usual maximum of myself and my friends, it would be greeted with surprise and incredulity. However, let us back to our senile sportsman.

Of course, he has a lot to say about dishonesty on the Turf. He says: "Let us have five more years of the open, impudent, and unpunished fraud which has been a distinguishing feature of the English Turf for the past five years, and a Bill will be quietly introduced, etc., etc."

Why does the poor old man not stick to the times he knew about, if he ever did know anything about racing. One hears marvellous stories of the old days, of readied horses and big coups, of owners running horses in half-a-dozen names, etc., but to a great extent that has all passed away. I have been intimately connected with racing for a quarter of a century. During my time the state of the Turf has never been very bad, and it has been steadily improving year by year, till I venture to state, without fear of contradiction from anyone who really knows, that it is in a better state to-day than ever it was before.

The Stewards took two great steps towards purifying the Turf when they introduced the Starting Gate and the Apprentice Allowance, thereby breaking up the Jockey Ring. I will not say much about Jockey Rings, as it is hard to do so without mentioning names of people still alive, but there is no doubt that before the two innovations mentioned above, the game was far more in the hands of the older and more experienced jockeys than it is now, and that certain jockeys, and jockeys' friends made large sums of money, and were supposed to make much larger sums than they probably actually did. I am the most unsuspicious of mortals, but I fancy I was "thrown down" by jockeys, as the Americans would call it, on one or two occasions. Certainly, before the Starting Gate, the old jockeys always "got off," the starters were afraid to "leave" them, while the boys, got "left," as then the starter did not get blamed. Also before the Apprentice allowance there was no inducement to put up a boy on even terms against experienced jockeys. The consequence was that a limited number of experienced jockeys had far too much power in their hands, and, in fact, it was almost impossible to win a race without having one of them riding for you.

Then came Sloan, who taught us how races should be run, right through at top speed instead of doddering along for three parts of the journey. Then came the Apprentice Allowance, and it was speedily discovered that in races run through from end to end, five pounds meant a great deal. After this came the Starting Gate, and it was speedily found that a smart lad could get away as well as an older jockey, if the horse he was riding was properly schooled to it. The day of the Jockey Ring and of some of the old "heads" was over, and some of them soon retired into well merited oblivion, and now we have a large selection of keen and well-conducted lads, anxious to ride winners and to get on in their profession. Therefore, there is less dishonesty among jockeys in the last five years than ever there was before. There is less dishonesty among owners for reasons that I explained above, viz, the increased value of Stakes, the decadence of betting, and the increased vigilance of handicappers. Lastly, the Stewards of the Jockey Club regard their duties in a more serious light than ever they did before and are more astute and vigilant than ever they used to be. Offenders know they would get short shrift from the present Stewards of the Jockey Club and act accordingly.

The concluding paragraphs of our senile sportsman are even more misleading than his earlier ones and not worth quoting; but briefly he states that at "Lincoln, Sandown Epsom and such like places" someone is accused of swindling in half the contests run for, and in "20 per cent. of them the Stewards have carpeted the swindler." Such nonsense as that, of course does not need repudiating. Our senile sportsman must have been to some "flapping" meetings and imagined they were the well conducted meetings he alludes to. Fancy poor Lords Stanley, Downe and Durham at the next two Epsom Meetings, instead of being able to watch the City and Suburban, Derby and Oaks, having their whole time taken up "Carpeting swindlers," on an average, on every fifth race.

He then says: "Turf Reform is very badly wanted," and his ideas of reform are to "warn off" about two hundred owners, trainers, and jockeys at once, and let it be known that the same cheerful fate awaits about two hundred more as soon as the Stewards have got through with the first batch. It would indeed be a reform; a reform that would abolish racing in three months. A reign of terror would be established; no self-respecting man would run a horse, and the whole game would collapse, throwing thousands out of work banishing the thoroughbred horse from the kingdom, causing rich men to spend their money abroad, instead of at home; in fact, doing countless evil. However, it is not in the least likely to be carried out. Our present Stewards are strong and just men, who would condemn no one without clear evidence, and public opinion would not allow them to do otherwise. Fair play one can always be assured of in the British Isles. It seems absurd to quote this old gentleman at such length, but a Daily Mail article is a serious matter. It has a circulation of nearly a million, and is probably read by about four million people.

This paper only has a circulation of some 10,000 and will only be read by some 40,000 or 50,000 people, so it will not do much to cure the mischief of an article like that does; but I hope the Editor and Proprietors of the Daily Mail, if they see these lines, will take expert opinion thereon, and learn who understands the present state of the Turf best; your humble servant or "An Old-fashioned Sportsman."

W. B. P. in London Sketches.

A dentist was visited by a native of a rural district to be treated for an ulcerated tooth. "That's a bad tooth," said the man of the forceps, "and I should advise you to spare yourself pain by taking gas. It will only be two shillings more." And the dentist showed his machine to the doubtful visitor, explaining it working—how he would fall asleep for a minute or two, and then awake with the tooth and the pain gone. At last the patient consented, and took out his wallet. "Never mind paying now," said the dentist, patronizingly. "I wasn't thinking of paying," responded the countryman, "but I thought if I was going to sleep I'd like to count my money first."

The Rector's wife rather objected to the gardener being a single man, especially as he lived in a quiet, picturesque cottage. "You know," said she to him one day, "the first gardener that ever lived had a wife." "Quite right, ma'am," replied the gardener, "but I've heard tell, ma'am, that he didn't keep his job very long after he got her."

There are a few even in America who can smile over tight money and the collapse of financial houses. They are ringing the changes upon a joke which was first started in the Valley of the Nile about 2476 B.C. "Why," it is asked, "is J. Pierpont Morgan like Pharoah's daughter?" And the answer is "Because they both found a little prophet in the rushes on the bank."

Athletics.

THE RISE OF BALL GAMES.

Many people are not unconscious that in the middle of the Fifteen Century football and golf were "utterly cried down" by the Scottish Parliament, while the practice of archery for military purposes was decreed by law. In Scotland, writes Mr. Andrew Lang in the Morning Post the most admirable laws were promulgated by every Parliament. There was to be no private war, no Biblical study, no river pollution, no poaching, no golf, and no football. But the public, even when the penalty for infringement of the laws was death, took no notice whatever of the Draconian enactments. They would not practise archery, they would pollute rivers, poach, cut each other's throats, drive their neighbours' cattle, read the Bible, plunder monasteries, play golf and football, and, it is to be feared, when they cut the green with their irons, they would firmly decline to "pit back their divots" (restore the fragment of turf to its place).

A modern poet, humbly but faithfully following Robert Burns, has celebrated these national characteristics.

Scots, wha fush wi salmon roe,
Scots, wha smiggle as ye go,
Heed the walter bailie? No!
Let the devil deel
Scots, wha read in Freedom's track
Scots, wha fozzle when ye whack,
Will ye pit your divots back?
Never you nor me!

The English, to judge by an essay of the late Monsieur Simeon Luce, were a more law-abiding people, wherefor they beat the Scots in many a battle and inflicted on the French (who were quite as independent and lawless as the Scots) the defeats of Crecy, Poitiers, Azincourt, Cravant, and Verneuil.

According to M. Luce, Edward III. from 1337 prohibited, under pain of death, every sort of game. Men must amuse themselves with archery practice, and with no other pastime, "from pitch and toss to manslaughter." Meanwhile the French and Scots pursued all these diversions with reckless eagerness; could not hit a haystack at fifty yards with bow and arrow, and, as a general rule, were defeated, despite their honourable endeavours to force the fighting and come to sword strokes, when they met the archers of England. There were exceptions to the rule. The Scots in French service at Baugé understood that a certain day was an off-day; no fighting. They therefore organised a football match, and were busily punting for touch and drop-kicking at tackling and passing when they saw the perfidious English crossing Bauge Bridge to attack them. To jump into harness and seize spear and sword was to the active Scots the work of a moment. They caught the Duke of Clarence "en flagrant delit" crossing the bridge, charged the English before they could deploy, killed the Duke of Clarence, and won a great victory, which most of their descendants—thanks to the progress of education—never heard of in their lives. Thus the practice of football does not inevitably disqualify the "muddled oafs" who indulge in it for military success. But Bauge was an exception to the general rule.

All Games Banned.

Strong in their bowmen, the English between 1370 and 1380 made three military promenades through France; and even the great Bertrand du Guesclin and the gallant Clisson recommended a Fabian policy. It was better, they said, to lie low and let John of Gaunt insult Paris than face the archery.

On 3rd April 1369, Charles V. took a leaf out of the book of Edward III., and barred all games but archery. The penalty of disobedience was not the threat of death—far too severe to be put in execution in France—but a fine of forty "sous." A penalty of "saxpence," enforced, might have turned the Scots to bowmanship from golf and football. But the French, with characteristic audacity, laughed at the fine of forty "sous," and went on playing games like the sportsmen they were, even though five "sous" per man were assigned to captors of sportsmen.

The results of the law and the futility thereof are discovered by records of cases in which the players quarrelled and broke the peace. Dicing is not an athletic exercise, and dicing was forbidden, but the quarrels over the dice none the less were "innumerable," says my cautious and accurate author. In 1370 the Duc de Berry cleaned out at dice, lost his coral rosary, valued at forty francs. The game of "tables," a form of draughts, was less popular and less apt to sap the manhood of the nation; chess was reserved for the highest intellects. Tennis (jeu de paume) in all its forms, from handfives to the regular "Game of Kings," was played by all classes without remorse. Often it was played over the roof of a church; probably a broken window scored high against the side that did the mischief. It cannot be denied that this was an interesting game though there may be objections to its revival, at least pending disestablishment.

Henri II. was devoted to regular tennis. "When he was not in the tennis court," says Brantome, "he was working at rugger" ("balle a emporter," the players ran with the ball), "or at ballon" this term was applied to various games, "or at palle malle" (jeu de mail, golf with hammer-headed clubs), "for he drove far and sure very long and straight he drove."

In 1427 almost the best tennis-player was a young lady affectionately termed Margot, a native of Haimault: "the best player ever seen, her back-handed strokes were as swift and cunning as any man's," say the contemporary diarist called the Bourgeois of Paris. The Falee-Pucelle, who pretended (1436-1462) to be Jeanne d'Arc, and was recognised as such by the brothers of the Maid, was notoriously good at tennis.

Bowls and skittles flourished in defiance of law. Bowls in France was, and still is, a casual kind of game, played on any kind of ground, rough or smooth. No bowling green was in use, and the curl or twist appears to be given by the fingers, as in bowling at cricket, not by aid of a bias in the bowl. In the reign of Charles VII, two town folk played a game at bowls from suburbs through the Regnart gate (where Jeanne d'Arc lived during the Siege of 1429) up to the gate of St. Aignan. Billiards were originally played on a pitch with hockey sticks, probably there were holes in the ground by way of pockets: if so the game was a rudimentary form golf. Billiard tables did not come in till the sixteenth Century, and were to the original open-air billiard what ping pong is to lawn tennis.

Ferocious Hockey.

The game styled "soule" or "choule" was then merely hockey, played by large numbers, one parish against another with great ferocity, like old Scottish football, which was played through the streets of a town or across country. In 1598 or so a more legitimate football was played by six a side, Armstrongs against Musgraves, at Newcastle. Incidentally the Scottish spectators discovered and cut to pieces an ambush laid for them by unsportsmanlike Englishmen and captured all their horses. "An enjoyable day was had," as the Northern reporters of school feast are apt to write. At "soule" it was legitimate and usual for the players to come to fists "punching each other," says an author of 1572, "both in the face, and body." In 1380 a priest named Percival said "play peacefully, keep out of touch," when a player, resenting the interference of the Church in matters purely secular, beat the priest on the nose, to the effusion of blood.

Perhaps Percival was acting as referee, his remark, though meritorious, was reckoned inopportune. Games between married and single were very common especially at Christmas. As a rule there were no bounds of touch; the ball might be knocked into a forest, or even into sea; the players then rushed up to the neck into the waves, as we read in the Journal of Monsieur de Gouberville, for 15th January 1542. One Jacques Cabart rushed into the winter deep after the ball, and was thoroughly ducked; however, he changed his clothes and gave a supper after the match. On his way home after supper M. de Gouberville helped to drink four pots of cider—cost him four sous.

Soule a gêra of course merely football; the other kind soule a crosse, was hockey. At present, in Northern France and Belgium, soule or choule or chole, is a sort of golf. The club used is an iron, with a small head, much "spooned" or "baffed." The ball is egg Haped, and made of beechwood. One player backs himself to hit from, let us say, St. Andrews town kirk to that of Cupar in so many sets of three strokes, while his opponent, in every sets of three strokes, has one stroke, knocking the ball into a hazard, the railway, the river, the stationmaster's garden, a bunker, or what he pleases. Thus modern soule a crosse is rather more akin to golf than to hockey. M. Luce himself does not seem to have understood this hybrid game, though he cites the recognised and classified authority of M. Deulin. He admits we did not borrow cricket from the French whom he credits with the origin of most of our game. M. Jusserand, however, claims even cricket for these French. French as a matter of fact cricket and hockey were commonly played in Ireland before the time of St. Patrick and in its prehistoric Irish form, cricket is played in Argyll to this day. Give man any where a ball or even a "cat" or chip of wood a club, and a hole in the ground and he will inevitably invent rudimentary arms of cricket, golf, billiard and hockey. The moderns have only specialised and differentiated the prehistoric pastimes.

5, 5, 4, 5, 6, 3, 4, 4, 4, 4, 5, 5.

"Oh, my!" exclaimed the excited woman who had [illegible] her husband, "I'm looking for a small man with one eye."
"Well, ma'am," replied the polite floor walker, "if he's a very small man, may be you'd better use both eyes."

It was at a country football match. The referee had just sent Giles off the field for deliberate fouling. Instantly the other team sent off another man with him.
"Why do that?" asked the referee. "You can have eleven men, though the other side will only play ten."
The opposing captain was firm as a rock.
"If you think," he said "that we're going to let Giles get into that dressingroom alone, all among our watches and money, you're pretty badly mistaken."

THE BEIGHTON CUP TOURNAMENT.

First Round.

HORNETS vs. CALEDONIANS.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on the 17th instant, an uninteresting game ending in a win for the Hornets. The Caledonians kept the Hornets out for quarter of an hour and then Apcar got away and registered the first point. Hoff scored another shortly after and a continued onslaught on the Caledonians goal ended in L. Rosser scoring a third. On changing ends the Hornets harrassed the Caledonians' back division. Four times was the ball put through but the points were disallowed for offside. At length Apcar got away and scored a fourth goal. The Caledonians made no score and were beaten by 4 goals to nil. Teams:—

HORNETS.—Goal, Cox ; backs, Cooper, and E. Russell ; halves, Simmons, A. S. Rosser and Jewell ; forwards, Rossetti, Hoff, Apcar, L. Rosser and Rowe.

MEDICALS vs. TOWN CLUB.—Played on the Town Club ground on the 16th instant, the home team being outplayed at all points. Boileau and McNally scoring in the first half, Rowley, and Bennett after the interval.

Y.M.C.A. vs. E. I. RAILWAY.—This game on the Y.M.C.A. ground last Thursday resulted in a win for the home team. They had not their full complement of men at the start but played pluckily and profiting by their opponents faulty shooting were only one goal behind at the interval. On crossing over the Young Men attacked and Gay equalised. Encouraged by this success they kept up the pressure : Price and Nahapiet each scored a goal and the final score read. Y.M.C.A. 3 goals ; E. I. Railway, 1 goal. Teams :—

CALCUTTA vs. UNITED SERVICES.—This game on the Calcutta ground on Friday was a very one-sided affair. The United Service were not at full strength, notable absentees being Lilburn and Holson, who were playing for the H. L. I. Calcutta were in excellent form : they scored six goals in the first half. Sherman (2), Simson (1) and Manders (3) being credited with the points. After the interval Hill put through for the Services. Manders added another goal to Calcutta's score and the red and white Shirts ran out winners 7 goals to 1.

RANGERS vs. HIGHLAND L. I.—On Friday this game resulted in an easy win for the Rangers by 5 goals to nil. They did all the attacking and might have scored more goals if the shooting had not been faulty. Cody, McKay and Lyons netted in the first half, Cody and Lawton in the second moiety. Teams :—

RANGERS.—Goal Kay ; backs, Margrett and Postence ; halves, Lawton, Warden and Durnford ; forward McKay, Davis, Cody, Lyon, and Templeton.

HIGHLAND L.I.—Goal Macpherson ; backs, Henderson, Scrubshaw ; halves, Marshall Petri and Lieutenant Hobson ; forward Lieutenant Lilburn, Cuthbert, Captain Walker, Tait and Sim.

PORT DEFENCE VOLUNTEERS vs. SPORTING UNION.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on Saturday, the Port Defence winning by 3 goals to 2.

B. N. RAILWAY vs. 10TH JATS.—Played on the Rangers' ground on Saturday, the Railway winning by 2 goals to 1. Ismay opened the scoring from a corner hit shortly after the start and Tirka of the Jats equalised. The Railway team had the best of the second half, but it was not till the closing stages that the winning point was scored by Ismay, who played a great game throughout.

CUSTOMS vs. ST. XAVIERS.—This was expected to be the best game in the first round and so it proved. Both teams were at full strength, save that St. Xaviers played Boyd in place of Owens. The first half was evenly contested. The Customs' goal had several narrow escapes and the St. Xavier custodians was also kept busy. The interval arrived without score, though the Customs should have led, McCready missing an open net. Both teams played hard in the second half but could not get the lead till, three minutes before time, Burkley of the Customs put the ball through. The goal was disputed but the referee's decision was in favour of the Customs and they thus won by a goal to nil. Teams :—

CUSTOMS.—Goal Fredricks ; backs, Anderson and Quiterio ; halves Cadell, L. A. Smith and Barlow ; forwards, Berkley, Goldsmith, L. H. Smith, McCready and Vears.

ST. XAVIERS.—Goal, David ; backs, Yakches and Vaughan ; halves D'Cruze, Maguire and Cameron ; forwards, D'Silva, Manuel, Boyd, Newton and Klemis.

Second Round.

HORNETS vs. MEDICAL COLLEGE.—A large crowd witnessed the match between these teams on Monday. The first half was vigorously contested and the play was of a high standard, the Medical College being the superior team. Their forwards and halves played brilliantly and the Hornets custodian was called upon to defend his charge on several occasions. Rogers beat him once but the point was disallowed for offside : shortly after however, McNally scored with a hot shot and in spite of all their efforts the Hornets could not equalise. The second half was slow and had the Hornets taken advantage of chances the game might have ended differently Mann was kept busy but kept his charge entact and Rogers getting away during the last five minutes of the game, passed to Rowley who scored the Medicals second goal. Final Score. Medical College 2 goals. Hornets Nil Teams.—

HORNETS.—Goal, Cox; backs, E. Russell, and Cooper; halves, Jewell, A. B. Rosser and Simmons; forwards Rowe, L. Rosser, Apcar Hoff, and Rossetti.

Referees :—Messrs. Dixon and M. Remfry.

Y.M.C.A. vs. JAMALPUR.—This game was played on the Y.M.C.A. ground on Tuesday. Play was evenly contested but the Y.M.C.A. forwards were slow and lost chances of scoring. The visitors took advantage of their opportunities and put on two goals, Milchem and Bennett being responsible. Final Score : Jamalpur 2. Y. M. C. A. 0.

CUSTOMS vs. SIBPUR.—The League champions made their first appearance in the tournament on Tuesday, when they met the Customs Sibpur were playing three substitutes and were beaten by three goals to nil. THE INDIAN RAPTORES.

FALCONS.

II—THE "LANNER" AND "SAKER" GROUPS.

"FALCO JUGGER," the Laggar Falcon, the only representative of the Lanner group in India is, says Blanford, exactly intermediate in structure, as it is in plumage, between the Peregrine group and "F. Cherrug" and has thus been the means of keeping the Peregrines and Sakers in the same genus Formerly both the Sakers and Hobbies were considered as deserving of generic rank under the heads of "Hierofalco" and "Hypotriorchis" respectively but are now incorporated with the Peregrines under "Falco."

Besides the length of the three quills which I mentioned as one of the points of distinction between the Peregrine group and the Lanners and Sakers there is another point also with regard to the wing feathers, and that is, in the former only the first primary is notched on the inner web whereas in the Lanners frequently the second is also notched and in the Sakers almost invariably. The Sakers and Lanners have been termed "soft feathered and slack mettled" and though they have been tried for Falconry in England did not prove much of a success, the variable and severe climate of the Old Country during winter not suiting them or their tempers.

In India, however, the Laggar Falcon does very well and though the sport cannot be classed in the same rank as that shown by the Peregrines, is nevertheless by no means to be despised and many a good day have I had with a cast of these birds in quest of paddy birds and crows. In out of the way stations where time hangs heavy in the afternoons and shikar of any sort conspicuous by its absence a lot of healthy amusement and exercise can be had by keeping a couple of "Laggars" and training them to the commoner birds such as crows and pond herons, which one can be pretty sure of finding without having to search far for. They can also be trained to kill hares, but only the better and pluckier ones will take kindly to such big quarry.

The Laggars in their wild state generally hunt in pairs and are frequently a curse to the Falconer attacking his Falcons and often making them give up their quarry. The adult "Lagger" has almost a pure white breast, and lower parts slightly spotted with dark brown or black, the spots becoming less and the white purer with age. The sides of the head and cheeks white with a distinct narrow dark brown or black cheek stripe. The back and upper parts brownish-ashy and the two middle tail feathers entirely brown in adults. The young birds are almost uniformly dark-brown with some white on the head, chin and throat and under tail coverts. This species is fairly common throughout India from the Punjab to Madras in suitable localities but wanting in Assam and Burma and not to be met with in the higher ranges of the Himalayas or dense forests, preferring as it does open plains or cultivation, though I noticed a pair building in the Vizagapatam District at the edge of a village clearing some three square miles or so in extent and surrounded by dense sal forests on either side for miles. They live on rats, lizards and bats to a great extent though birds of various kinds from a partridge or plover to quail perhaps constitute their chief food. They build usually on trees, but sometimes on cliffs, and it is said often take possession of an old kite's or crow's nest and lay three to four eggs of the usual Falcon type, brownish speckled with a darker shade of the same colour.

"Falco cherrug," the Saker Falcon, is an old favourite with the Indian falconer and justly deserving his popularity. Resembling the grand Gyrfalcons of N. Europe almost in point of size and power, the Saker was much used and still is in parts of India for kite flying which was the quarry at which the gyrfalcons of old showed up best. The Saker shows splendid sport after houbara, kites, grass-owl and is even trained to take "chinkara" occasionally but it is only the first year passage hawk that can aspire to such heights and a haggard cannot be trained to gazelle. Even in the case of a young falcon, she will only hunt gazelle for one year and I believe in very rare cases for two, but no longer. It is rather as an aid to the dogs that the Falcon is slipped for by hanging on to the head of the "chink" she impedes his speed and so lets the dogs run in. A flight after a grass-owl is in my opinion one of the prettiest sights one could wish to see, though there is often little or no riding necessary and the whole chase is often best witnessed lying flat on your back with a pair of strong binoculars. To see the end, glasses are frequently necessary, but if you wish to recover your falcon it is wise to throw out the lure and call her back long before she gets to a height where glasses are necessary.

As soon as the owl finds that he is the quarry he begins ringing, and his soft round wings are admirably adapted for rising; the flaps though slow and regular and about one to the falcon's three send him up and up at an incredible pace and it takes a good falcon to get well above for she must be considerably higher than her quarry before she can stoop. This is another point where Falcons differ from the hawks. The latter bind to their prey from below whereas the Falcons stoop from a height. When the grass-owl finds his enemy has caught up and is getting above him, the pursuer for the time becomes the pursued and the owl sticks as close as he can to the tail of the Falcon and so ring after ring is accomplished till the Falcon gradually draws away and when sufficiently high above the owl down she shoots with closed wings, but the owl is a past-master in the art of dodging as well as of rising and one twitch of his wings and he has avoided the talons. The impetus brings the Falcon past the owl like a bullet, when the wings may be seen to open just a tiny bit and next instant she is rising at almost the same speed at which she descended and nearly perpendicularly, till she has reached the pitch to which the impetus has carried her, when the wings open wide for just an instant and she turns in the air to recover herself and once more the wings close and again down she comes like a bolt from the blue. Again and again the performance is repeated, till the owl, which after each dodge continues rising, has nearly reached the original pitch, whence the Falcon first stooped and to which the impetus of each stoop carried her back again when once more the "ringing" begins, the two birds circling higher and ever higher till two little specks only are visible and by degrees these even may disappear. A chase after a grass-owl is seldom a short one and as often as not, in fact in the majority of cases an owl is too much for a single Falcon which has either to be called down before lost sight of or you say good bye to both owl and Falcon for the time being at any rate. This and the next species "F. milvipes" are the biggest of all Falcons either resident in or visitors to India and both of them are winter visitors only to the Punjab, Sindh and U.P.A. and O. in the case of the Saker.

The Shanghar Falcon is a rare bird, only a few specimens having been obtained in the North of India its habitat being Thibet and Mongolia and nothing appears to be known of either its habits or nidification.

The Saker is essentially a "desert falcon" seldom being met with near trees or cultivation and lives largely on rats and lizards. This species has not been known to breed in India. "F. Cherrug" can be distinguished from "F. Jugger," firstly, in being considerably larger, a female measuring 22 inches in length, while the female of "F. Jugger" would not exceed 18 inches; secondly, in having no cheek-stripe and the two central tail feathers with white spots on both webs while those of "F. Jugger" are plain brown in adults. In the young of "F. Cherrug," however, the central tail feathers are plain brown and unspotted and a moustachial stripe from the gape well defined though not the cheek-stripe from the eye.

The Shanghar Falcon is more rufous generally and is banded with that colour on back, wings and tail. That is instead of the spots on the tail as in "F. Cherrug" the bands in the Shanghar extend right across the tail feathers.

EXILE.

The Story Teller.

AN UNGUARDED MOMENT.

A most fascinating little lady sat at breakfast: she was however for the moment busy reading letters, to the neglect of a tempting brown egg. The olive tinted face framed in dusky curls, and great velvety eyes, were purely Southern in type, while her husband the big fair man sitting opposite, with shrewd good humoured face, grey eyes and light hair looked almost ultra English.

"I have a letter, Sam, from the McKoon asking us to stay with him for September. That is usually a good month in Scotland and you'll get some shooting, which will do you good poor boy. As for me I shall be fully occupied in taking care of our impressionable Chieftain, and seeing that his latest little affair does not reach a serious stage."

"Way who's the last flame?" asked Sam Carrington.

"Oh my dear boy how should I know? We're not seen the McKoon for nearly nine months; and from all accounts he seems to have been steady for so long, that a love attack must be quite due now." "And do you propose to take on the duties of anthrote Nita?" queried her husband with a grin. "For if so, I better take a few lessons in the use of the broad sword, so as to be able to meet "the chief with his own peculiar weapons, when the time comes." "My dear Sam you must never presume to interfere in the least with my philanthropic missions. At Ben-na-Stiel remember your rôle will be entirely among the grouse. Poor mot!" and springing up from her chair she swept him a coquettish curtsey. "Mine is a far wider field!"

A fortnight later saw the Carringtons arriving at their destination in the far Highlands. The mail boat swept up to Ben-na-Stiel pier, and her reversed paddles beat the calm waters of the loch into foam. Sam and his wife were leaning over the rail as the boat took the pier, and they could see several kilted figures grouped on the wooden staging. "There are the retainers" said Carrington "but where is the McKoon himself?" "Hullo Angus" he shouted to a tall, Highlander "How are you all at Ben-na-Stiel, and where's the laird? Angus did not reply until Sam was shaking hands with him on the quay, when he said in a serious whisper "The lairds up the hill boosalizing with the new lassie. Faith maam and he turned to Nita "its full time ye came!"

The Carringtons walked up to the grey old house, which frowned from a rocky cliff across the land locked fiord. Nita straight way vanished to reappear later looking a picture of alluring daintiness in a tea rose coloured blouse of crepe de coeur. But still the McKoon and lady Jo lingered on the hill side though tea time was near, and fat Mrs. Crowther, Jo's ever amiable chaperon, had awaked from her afternoon sleep, and after greeting the new arrivals, sat watching the door thirstily. At last, however, came a sound of feet in the hall and the door opened to admit a tall fair girl closely followed by McKoon. Jo to give her full name, Lady Jocelyn Steele, wore a coat and short skirt of heather coloured homespun, with a tam-o-shanter crushed down on to her rough yellow curls. She had regular features, a clear skin, and a pair of brilliant blue eyes set far apart. Sam Carrington's eyes met the laird's, as the ladies were introduced to one another and a sympathetic smile of suppressed amusement passed between the two men. "The Laird's by no means a fool," thought Sam to himself while McKoon whose self-control was not good left the room on the pretex of changing his boots, but really to enjoy a hearty laugh. "Here's Jo wants to marry me, because poor girl she is hard up and loves the good things of life; while little Nita who looks upon me as her special friend and private property, has all her hackles up ready to drive away every husband seeking girl——Dear me it is very pleasant to be the subject of so much interest."

On his return he found the ladies chatting amicably over their tea cups, having met on the common ground of matters Theatrical. The next morning broke calm and bright. The Laird was absent from breakfast having been been called away to one of his farms; but he left a message to say he would be back about eleven.

After breakfast Mrs. Carrington settled down to write letters, her husband went out to talk to Angus and Mrs. Crowther wandered round the garden with a pair of scissors collecting flowers. Jo seemed at a loose end and walked up and down the room so impatiently that at last Nita turned round in her chair and regarded her with interest. "You look bored Lady Jocelyn—I have brought a few rather good novels with me, shall I go and and get you one?" "Thanks very much but I think I will go and take my dog Jack for a walk."

Jo knew the direction of the farm to which McKoon had gone and also the short cut by which he would probably return so why not set off and meet him?

Nita looked up from her writing as Jo passed the window and followed the lithe young figure with a gaze of honest admiration. After all what business of hers was it to interfere: this girl was handsome and good tempered, and would no doubt make McKoon an excellent wife. If poor she was at any rate an Earl's daughter, with nothing against her as in the case of one or two of those other ladies, with whom the laird had philandered in former days . . . . and she smiled over the recollection.

Meanwhile Jo strode along the mountain path with the buoyancy induced by keen air and perfect health. Her Irish terrier Jack in his accustomed fashion left her to hunt rabbits along the hill side. She had walked for some twenty minutes when suddenly from far below came a pitiful yell of anguish. Jo whistled and called but distant agonised howls were the only response; evidently the dog had come to grief and could not get back. The path at this point ran along a slope so steep and rocky that it might almost have been called a precipice, but Jo was ever reckless and confident in her youthful strength, so without a moment's hesitation she started scrambling down towards where the dog's cries came from. The slope became steeper and steeper, but aided by her strong arms and the numerous birch saplings, she made her way steadily down until the yells sounded near and she was able to encourage Jack with her voice. At this point when Jo was only some thirty yards above the patch of scrub where the dog seemed to be, she came to a bad place. There was an almost perpendicular wall of rock which ran so far right and left that there appeared to be no way of avoiding it by going round.

There were still, however, stunted trees growing in the crevices to assist her. At one place she had to throw her whole weight on a branch, while feeling for a ledge below to get her foot into. With a crack this branch suddenly gave way and Jo fell straight on to a small birch tree growing out from the rocks about fifteen or sixteen feet below. She clutched frantically at this, but her head struck a branch and losing consciousness, she slipped through the tree, and dropped an inert mass into the juniper bushes below. Five minutes later McKoon coming along the path from the opposite direction, heard with surprise the frantic cries of a dog. He promptly climbed down by very much the same route as Jo, but as he had known every stone of the countryside from boyhood, found little difficulty in reaching the bottom. There to his horror and astonishment he found poor Jo lying in a huddled heap, with her face colourless and her yellow hair dark with blood.

Now, however a man may have steeled himself to resist the blandishments of a pretty girl, when she is well and happy, he is quite incapable, if he be naturally tender hearted of viewing with calmness the same girl wounded and insensible.

He gathered Jo into his strong arms and kissed the pale face again and again, calling upon her by all manner of endearing and foolish names to open her eyes.

As Jo was a healthy young creature with a sufficiently hard head she soon came to, and opening her sapphire eyes gave a sigh of returning consciousness.

The McKoon was too upset to stop kissing on that account and Jo did not seem much discontented with the process' until an absolutely heart rending howl from Jack brought her suddenly back to mundane affairs. "Oh Mr. McKoon my poor dog! I was climbing down to see what was the matter with him when I fell!"

The terrier was soon discovered held fast in a rabbit trap, but his paw was luckily not very badly lacerated as the trap was an old and weak one.

Very few words were spoken on the homeward journey, but Jo was very badly shaken, and had to be helped along a good deal. She was most anxious not to be seen in her dishevelled condition, so the laird got her unobserved to a side door; and then went off to commune seriously with himself. He had kissed the girl and called her his darling and all sorts of other pet names. How far was she conscious of what he had said, and how far was he bound now? Ought he in honour to ask her to marry him? Above all did he really care for this girl? He could not truthfully admit that he did, although she was a sweet enough specimen of fair English maidenhood, and moreover of excellent birth; so that there was absolutely no reason against the match. Unconsciously he was using to himself the very arguments that Nita had when she almost decided that it was not her business to interfere.

The fact was that McKoon did not know what love really meant. His healthy busy life had been too full for his many wayside dallyings with women to make their mark upon his somewhat selfish heart. Directly he seriously faced the idea of marriage, he felt just as though he were looking into the door of a prison. He had ever made a point of leaving himself a convenient loop hole, and despite all his flirtations no one could say that he had on a single occasion behaved dishonourably to a woman. Had he passed the border line now or could he yet draw back with credit?

One of McKoon's faults was that he was quite unable to keep his troubles to himself. He had been a spoilt darling of fortune all his life, and so no doubt looked at his few woes, all of them be it noted of his own making, through a very large magnifying glass.

He sought out Carrington took him off for a stroll, and confiding the whole matter to him asked his advice. Honest Sam cuddled his chin into the palm of his hand, a habit he had when puzzled, and instead of replying, sucked his pipe vigorously.

At last he spoke "well look here McKoon the business seems to me to hinge on the way the lady regards the matter. If she heard and remembers all you said, and thinks you really meant it, I don't see how you can well help marrying her. My only advice is to wait and watch and see how the land lies, when you next meet her."

In spite of Nita's faults and they were many, she possessed a quality somewhat rare in woman.....a sense of honour. Consequently her husband never hesitated to tell her the whole affair and ask her criticism on his advice to McKoon.

"Your advice was quite good, old boy, and I tell you that a girl who will risk her life for the sake of her dog, is a really fine character and good enough for any man; and there shall be no word or act of mine to influence the laird one whit in the matter. In fact if the girl marries him I think he will have got more than he has ever deserved." Sam kissed his wife affectionately "You are a sportswoman Nita." There was a happy moisture in the little lady's dark eyes, for that statement bald as it sounded meant a very great deal from the lips of straight going Sam.

Jo was up next day but not quite her usual robust self, and even for the following three days her accustomed high spirits remained strangely suedued. Nor did the McKoon seem to be able to get an opportunity of being alone with the girl, though it was not very clear to the onlookers, as to which of the two was responsible for the avoidance. All this time the self sufficient McKoon was under the impression that he was exercising marvellous tact in trying to discover what view the girl took of the affair. Poor Jo was under no illusion as to her own feelings she liked McKoon greatly. She hated being poor, and was honestly fond of having a good time. Also she was fully aware of the value of her birth and title, and thought herself no bad match for a middle aged Scotch commoner, rich though he might be.

But Jo was no fool, and if the laird was learning nothing during those three days, his mind was at any rate an open book to her. The girl's sturdy simple nature rebelled at the idea of cajoling anyone into matrimony, and it was plain enough from the McKoon's furtive air and anxious manner, when he spoke to her, that he was simply terrified as to how deeply his lack of caution had committed him.

At last one day they were alone, and it was unmistakeably Jo who had engineered it. They walked for a while almost in silence, and then suddenly she stopped and faced him. "Look here Mr. McKoon, I thoroughly understand all you are thinking about, and I wish to tell you that I have thought nothing of your having kissed me, when you found me stunned. It was perfectly natural, and what any man would have done to any woman under the circumstances. I can see you have worried about it and are afraid that I am offended. Please forget the matter entirely and shake hands and let us be good friends as we were before." The laird looked surprised and crestfallen, and held out his hand mechanically. Jo grasped it and shook it cordially with her firm boyish grip.

The walk did not last long and they talked of indifferent matters. McKoon at any rate was thankful to reach the house again. How easy it had all been made for him, and what a cur he felt. This honest girl, with her loyal simple way of solving difficulties was all too good for him. A glow of warm admiration for Jo entered his heart mingled with no small self-abasement. Had those feelings existed three days before, the story would have been altered.

JADU.

During a very bad performance of Hamlet, the audience in its entirety commenced to hiss with the exception of one man. At last the man next to him said:

"Why don't you hiss this show?"

"Oh, wouldn't hardly be fair," he said, "as I came in on a complementary; but if they don't do better pretty soon, bothered if I don't go out and buy a ticket and join you."

Wife: Have you any secrets you keep from me, dearest?

Husband: None, darling.

Wife: Then I am determined I will have none from you, either.

Husband: Have you secrets, then?

Wife: Only one, and I am resolved to make a clean breast of it.

Husband (hoarsely): Go on!

Wife: For several days I have had a secret—a secret longing for a new dress, with hat to match, for my birthday.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 3rd April 1908.

ANOTHER epoch in the development of the motor industry in Great Britain is marked by the opening of the Second International Commercial Motor-Vehicle and Motor-Boat Exhibition at Olympia, Kensington. The Exhibition, which is organised by the Society of Motor Manufactures and Traders, is under the patronage of the Prince of Wales, and will remain open till to-morrow.

Motor transport for commercial purposes has always been the most interesting development of automobilism on account of the great variety and almost unlimited possibilities of the field before it. Up to about three years ago, when the motor car for pleasure and sporting purposes had already attained to a state of comparative perfection as the result of experience, the legal restrictions were still such that the use of motor cars for commercial purposes generally was hardly a practical proposition. Under these circumstances it is not surprising that the earlier trials of commercial vehicles should have demonstrated difficulties not calculated to induce business men to invest in this form of traction, and the ill-success of the earlier motor carrying and cartage companies served to confirm these views.

All this, however, did not deter the government and railway companies, the large carriers, stores, and big users of road transport generally from continuing their experiments in this direction, and last year the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders decided that the time had arrived for this branch of the industry to receive special treatment. They consequently resolved to organize a separate exhibition for these vehicles at Olympia, which exhibition was successfully held in March last, and they co-operated with the Royal Automobile Club in the organization of the Commercial Vehicle Trials, which commenced in September last. These Trials extended over a distance of about 2,000 miles, covering long stretches of road daily, the vehicles carrying full loads as in ordinary service. The cars entered in nearly every case bore the names of, and were, in fact, actually constructed to the order of users, and of the fifty-six vehicles which started no less than fifty completed the journey in time, whilst of the remaining six some were put out of the competition by tyre troubles and the like, which in no way indicated unfitness for ordinary use.

The fact that the users who have overcome the initial difficulties inseparable from such a radical change in methods of transport continue to place repeat orders and increase their use of these vehicles, is sufficient proof that they are profitable since trading firms are guided in the matter purely by business considerations. With regard to the question of reliability for instance it is certain that the large and extending increase of motor mail services would not be possible if the element of uncertainty were at all considerable. It is not possible to give a list here of all the different trades in which motor traction is being employed for the simple reason that it would be too long but a visit to the Society's Exhibition will show vehicles actually built to order of leading firms in all trades.

The commercial motor vehicles in the exhibition may be divided into three sections, viz motor-cabs; petrol vans, lorries and omnibus chassis; and steam waggons, lorries, omnibuses and tractors. Motor-cab chassis show a remarkable increase, being exhibited by no less than 13 firms, England leads the way with 8, France sends 2, Scotland 1, Switzerland 1, and Italy 1. Thirty-seven firms are exhibiting petrol vans, lorries and omnibuses, the former having carrying capacities of from 15 cwt. to 60 cwt. Englands again leads the way with 26 exhibitors, though Scotland, France and Germany are also represented. In the heavy steam section Great Britain's only competitor is the Darracq-Serpollet omnibus, but even this, though of French origin, is now made in this country. The preponderence of the home made article is a gratifying proof of the expansion of the industry in Great Britain as compared with the advantage held by foreign makers a few years back.

The Darracq stand has the finest show of motor-cabs in the exhibition, three varieties being staged, all of which would make most suitable landaulettes for doctors and other private motorists who requires economical carriages quite fast enough for ordinary travelling, and yet in expensive in their first cost. On this stand there is the Darracq cab which is running in New York. It is somewhat larger than its London prototype, and is fitted with a four-cylinder 14-16 h.p. engine. The well-upholstered body seats four comfortably, has the usual folding-back landau hood, but has a canopy over the driver for carrying luggage. This is an improvement on the London vehicle which it is to be hoped will be adopted here. A footwarmer is also provided inside for the passengers, heated from the exhaust pipe and controlled by a neat valve on the dashboard, so the driver can turn the heat on or off as requested. Fares are somewhat higher in New York than London, so perhaps this accounts for the more powerful and better appointed vehicle. For whereas in London 8d is the first charge, in New York one cannot sit in a motor-cab for less than 2s. 1d.

London however, is going to have soon a better cab for the Darracq Company are showing here the new two-cylinder 10-12 h.p. cab of which a fleet has been purchased by the General Motor-Car Company (Limited.) This is intended for four persons instead of the usual two has a roomier body and the same foot-warming arrangement as the New Yorker. The Darracq "United Company's cab familiar to our streets licensed for two persons is also staged as well as a commercial traveller's brougham. Other exhibits on the stand are a one ton van for Messrs. Barker's of Kensington and a one-ton van for Lipton's, so many and varied wants in transit facilities can be supplied from these exhibitors.

A fine example of the five-ton petrol chassis is to be seen on the Milnes-Daimler stand. Strength and finish are embodied in this 35 h. p. vehicle, which is particularly clean-looking. Many similar chassis in the show look clumsy and heavy compared to this one, which should delight the engineer and practical mechanic. Technical details here would be out of place, but the arrangement of that most important portion of a public service vehicle, the brakes, deserve special mention. Omnibus and transport managers were full of its praises, and it was difficult to find the captious critic. It is a distinct improvement in the petrol motor vehicle. Other exhibits by Milnes-Daimler (Limited) are a 28 s. p. omnibus built as a single-decker for the Great Western Railway; the 22 h. p. box van that won the R.A.C. gold medal in the recent trials; a tip-wagon for corporation street-cleaning work; and an 18 h. p. five-axle-driven post office van.

A useful shooting brake, with folding-up seats, receptacles for guns, with accommodation for the dogs and fifteen passengers, is staged on the Arrol-Johnston stand, fitted with a 15 s. p. motor. The 20-30 h.p. 'bus chassis, as used by the Great Eastern, is also exhibited, as well as a 15 h.p. char-a-banc, two covered vans, a three-ton and a one-ton brewer's dray. Sir William Armstrong and Whitworth Company display a substantial-looking chain-driven, 28-32 h.p. lorry, while a canvas-hooded wagon for three to four ton loads is the principal exhibit of Atkey and Gimson.

Probably the exhibit that will prove of general interest to every visitor to the show is that of the Motor Schools (Limited). For here are displayed all the working parts and mechanism of the motor-car, sectioned so that the scrutiniser can see how any part performs its particular duty. All are in motion, and attendants are ready to explain any point to the inquirer.

Messrs. H. M. Hobson, Limited, are now fitting the 20-30 Nagant Hobson with both chain drive and live axle and are marketing both at the same price namely—£500, chassis complete with tyres. Amongst the latest purchasers of these cars are Mrs. Lewis Waller and Mrs. Burns, sister of Mr. Pierpoint Morgan.

They have recently completed negotiations with Monsieur Claudel, one of the best known engineers in France, whereby they have acquired for England and the Colonies, the sole rights of his carburettor of which they have made an exhaustive test and are in a position to guarantee increased power with reduced consumption upon practically any carburettor on the market and if any one has the slightest doubt as to their claims they are prepared to fit this carburettor without charge, and take in payment half the cost of petrol saved by the user.

OXFORD & CAMBRIDGE BOAT RACE.

As suggested in an article which appeared in the Indian Field a few weeks ago, Cambridge easily defeated Oxford in the annual boat race between the representatives of the sister Universities, although of course, displaying that invariable good sportsmanship, begotten of undergraduate life, in not too severely trouncing a beaten opponent. Otherwise the race was what is generally termed a "procession," or technically in aquatic language, a "paddle" for the winners. Cambridge led throughout, though some argue that their opponents were actually in front for a couple of strokes through getting away sharpest in their first stroke.

Three times D. C. R. Stuart has now stroked the Cambridge eight against Oxford, and three times has he led from start to finish of the r[illegible] It is a fine record for an oarsmen. He learnt his rowing as a member of the London, R.C., and on going first to Cambridge his credentials for a place in the eight were immediately recognised. Tried in various places, he at length was honoured with the first thwart. And that he has retained ever since, and, in addition, stroked his 'Varsity to victory against Harvard University. Stuart has what might be described as a "winning temperament," and, happily for his University, has a personality that inspires confidence in others. In the race under notice he rowed like a winner from end to end of the tiring four miles and a quarter that divide Putney and Mortlake. Several times during the contest, says Sportsman, he could be heard calling to his men to "Come on," not because they were flagging, but to let them know, as he did during their training, that he was keen. It is good for men half-way through a tiring race to hear a confident voice. Mr. Stuart, if he remains at Cambridge, will in all probability be President of the Boat Club next year; and if, as it is hoped, he retains his form, he will be as great an asset as ever.

The race itself reflected the training, for Light Blues certainly appeared as if they were holding their opponents thoroughly in hand from the mile post to the finish. Stuart rowed a very well-judged race, and never at any time hustled his men, although, for the matter of that, as he was never called upon for a great effort, there was no reason why he should have done so; but at the same time he kept them going well all the time, a powerful and long stroke proving very effectual. The form through the boat was quite good, and but for slight signs of tiring at Barnes the men were always rowing well within themselves. Whilst on the subject of the Cambridge crew Boyle, the coxswain, must not be forgotten, for he again steered excellently. Last year he saved his men from the rough water at Chiswick by taking them quite near the Middlesex shore. On the present occasion, although the wind was never particularly strong, he took the first opportunity that came his way of getting what shelter there was from it, and as a result all the way from the Crabtree to Hammersmith Oxford were ploughing along in their opponents' backwash.

The Dark Blues slightly improved upon the form that had been expected from them, but rowed by no means well. Gladstone was generally pulling more strokes a minute than Stuart, but he was much shorter and his men less powerful than those in the other boat. The individual rowing in the Oxford boat was but moderate, but all the crew were thoroughly game, the way in which they answered Gladstone's calls for an extra effort being quite interesting. Otherwise it seems that the race lacked incident; indeed according to reports to hand it was never at any time exciting after the first three minutes rowing. Those following in the launches and the thousands assembled were stirred, when going along the Duke's Meadows, Gladstone twice drew up, but as Stuart went away again, apparently with ease, interest in the race, if not entirely evaporating, ended, and to those that were watching it was merely a question of by how much Cambridge would win. Still, to see those two eights contending against one another for the love of the sport must have been a stirring sight. The Boat Race is indeed a national event, and in itself serves as a splendid object-lesson in pluck, strength, resource, and self-denial.

Whilst giving all credit to the winners for the very nice win, praise must be accorded the losers and their coach for the unexpectedly good showing that they made. Oxford this year suffered so severely from illness at a most important period of the training that in turn five men had to temporarily retire. They pulled round, but it need hardly be mentioned that when they returned to training the coach had to exercise the greatest care. He was in the unenviable position of having to nurse a crew of convalescents, and that they were well enough to race hard, as they did all through, was an achievement. What would have happened if the Dark Blues had remained as well as their opponents it is, of course, impossible to say, for we gather from mail advices to hand that they were not as vigorous and dashing as Cambridge, a state of affairs no doubt due to causes mentioned; but in any circumstances it is difficult to think that they would have won with Gladstone as the stroke. He was not rowing at all well during the last week. Instead of lengthening out as Cambridge did, he rowed shorter and irregularly, and in the actual race did the same thing.

A medical man, in large practice, duly made the return of his income. At the foot of the return he added to his signature his academic distinctions, including that of D. P. H. In the course of post came a letter from the local surveyor of taxes, pointing out that while the medico had stated his income from the exercise of his medical profession, he had not included the revenue which he appeared to derive from "your business as a Dealer in Public Houses."

At first the recipient thought the surveyor must be mad; then, as he realized that the public-house conjecture represented a zeal for the revenue which had been engendered by his own addition of the letters "D. P. H." to his signature, he wrote a caustic letter to the surveyor.

In that communication he advised the surveyor to turn his thoughts less in the direction of public-houses and more in the direction of his public duties. And this suggestion, it need hardly be said, has closed the correspondence.

It is said of the late Attorney-General that he was once examining a dealer in condensed milk, who seemed determined to tell as little as he could. "I believe you sell milk?" said counsel, quietly. "I do," was the reply. "Then, of course, you know something about agriculture?" "No," replied the witness, "I—— Oh, I see," swiftly interrupted Mr. Walton, "you are one of those dealers who don't get their milk from agricultural sources!" After this rather irrelevant sally counsel had things a little more his own way.

CAPTAIN N. J. LIVINGSTONE LEARMOUTH, 15th Hussars, met with a serious accident while out pig-sticking at Muttra last week, his spear passing upwards through his leg and side. His wounds were attended to without delay and we are glad to hear that he is now convalescent.

ALL old Oxford boating men in this country will read with regret news of the death, early this month, of poor old Tom Tims, the popular veteran waterman of the University B. C. At his funeral his universal popularity was demonstrated by the floral tributes, over forty in number, from leading sportsmen and acquatic clubs. The Leander Club sent a wreath 11 feet in circumference, while wreaths from the various college clubs bore the college colours. The body was conveyed along the waterside, watermen leading the way and carrying wreaths. All the college flags flew half-mast. The University Boat Club was represented at the graveside by Mr. Kirby, the president, and Mr. Gladstone, the stroke of this year's 'varsity crew.

"BOAT RACE"!—As the towpath critic remarked on his return to town after seeing Cambridge paddle in, "I didn't see no race, I saw a bloomin' procession." And he was not so far wrong according to our London correspondent, who saw somewhat of the event and watched the Light Blues approaching the winning post rowing absolutely in form and with any amount of strength and dash obviously in reserve. It was by no means a bad day; it was quite fine during the struggle, there was a steadily westerly breeze, (which favoured Oxford who won the toss and took the Surrey side) and the water was a bit rough in parts. But in spite of not being fully extended, Cambridge covered the course in 19mins. 20secs. which was about what was expected of them. Oxford were palpably in want of condition and though pluck and determination were apparent throughout the boat they never at any time looked like overtaking their opponents.

After the usual dinner, the crews visited the "Empire" at the invitation of the management and saw the race reproduced on the cinematograph—such is music hall enterprise nowadays. Naturally this theatre became the headquarters of all the young men in town claiming to belong either to Cambridge or Oxford. It was a boisterous evening.

Scarcely for an instant did the enthusiastic youths let the chorus of "good old" this or that slacken. They pushed about, singing and shouting, occasionally losing an energetic friend or two. For the police, for various causes, hustled struggling young gentlemen from the promenade, and left them with the admiring crowd outside in the street. The crews, accepted the cheers and noise with becoming modesty, and heard with the keenest interest that their admirers, as fast as the police pushed them out, were willing to pay to return.

How the "Empire" was eventually cleared when the performance ended no one can accurately describe. After the theatres had closed and the streets in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly Circus were filled with people, bands of young men marched about cheering on the slightest provocation, or more generally without any.

WITHIN cry of the great Stadium at Shepherd's Bush there will be a little fencing ground on which will soon be given an exhibition of the French practice duels which were invented by Dr. Devillers, of Paris, about two years ago in order to train Frenchmen for the "real thing."

The duels will be fought under duelling conditions in many respects, though the bullets will be wax, and some of the "foes" will presumably wear the masks which were part of the Devillers outfit.

At least one famous pistol shot, however, has asserted his intention of not wearing a mask, and the fact that the bullets are of wax does not mean that the encounters are unexciting. The wax bullets expand on contact, and thus appear to explode.

At Dr. Devillers' practice duels at the Jardin de Paris some time ago, the competitors, wearing fencing masks with a small square of thick glass at the height of the eyes, and long black blouses, stood at a distance of twenty-five yards.

The commandant, reports a spectator, ordered "Feu. . . . Un, deux, trois . . . !" and they had to fire between "feu" and "trois," about four seconds, measured with a metronometer, elapsing in that time. The bullets used were round and black, and had an initial speed of ninety-five yards per second. Apparently at the Franco-British Exhibition the bullets will be whitened, so as to leave visible marks on the clothing.

Dr. Devillers, a well-known personality in sporting circles in Paris, started a society in order to train men who might be called out for a real duel, and for the benefit of those who take pleasure in pistol shooting. His society soon had a hundred members, counting within their ranks some of the best shots in France.

SOMETHING akin to consternation prevailed in many quarters when the news of the defeat of Hackenschmidt reached England. The hitherto unconquerable wrestler and idol of the strong man contingent was, on Saturday the 5th instant, defeated by Gotch the American, whose victory seems to have been achieved by means of foul tactics. At any rate he gave an utterly unsportsmanlike exhibition and has been alike denounced by American and English press. Details of the encounter appear in our London sporting letter to-day. Hackenschmidt, in the comparatively short space of four years and a half, rose from obscurity to a foremost position in the athletic world, and from poverty to riches, for during the time he has been wrestling in England he has amassed a fortune of £40,000.

Thirty-two years ago the ex-champion was born in the southern part of Russia of poor parents. Although his mother was a woman of particularly small stature, Hackenschmidt early showed remarkably fine development. At eighteen he took to professional wrestling, and after years of struggling became in 1901 winner of the international championship tournament in Paris. This carries with it the acknowledged championship of Europe.

At that time Hackenschmidt did not weigh more than 14st. 6lb., and for that reason his victory aroused unusual interest, as he was probably by far the lightest man who had ever won this prize. With the championship as his passport he came to England. He had many difficulties to contend with at first. At that time Antonio Pierri had the game almost to himself. Hackenschmidt first came before public notice by leaping from a box at the Canterbury Music-hall on to the stage and offering to wrestle Madrali on the spot. A music-hall engagement followed, but success was still a long way off. The public got tired of seeing him polish off opponents like a terrier among mice.

So he drifted into the provinces, taking small halls and giving his own show, often playing for £2 or £3 a night. At the end of eighteen months he managed to get back to London, securing a fortnight's engagement. From this date he went from triumph to triumph.

His first serious match in England was with Tom Jenkins, of America, whom he defeated at the Albert Hall. Jenkins went over to get a match, and as Hackenschmidt would not give way in the question of styles, the American had to go without a match or to wrestle in the Graeco-Roman style, of which he knew little. Hackenschmidt's next trial was his first match with Madrali at Olympia, in 1904, which had such a dramatic conclusion, the Turk having his arm broken. This also was wrestled in Graeco-Roman, for the Russian refused again to give way on the question of styles. Soon after Hackenschmidt declared his intention of abandoning the Graeco-Roman style for catch-as-catch-can, and gave Madrali a second match in the Turk's own style. This also took place at Olympia, and, as all the world knows, the Turk again lost. That was Hackenschmidt's last great match—except for the recent bout with Joe Rogers, of America. Since his second victory over Madrali the Russian has been one of the greatest music-hall "draws" in the country. On the occasion of his two most recent appearances at Glasgow he drew £390 on one occasion and well over £400 on another for his week's work.

OUR London sporting letter this week contains full details of the almost sensational football exhibition which resulted when England and Scotland drew at Glasgow on the 5th instant, with a goal each. The gate produced £7,300, over 121,000 people paying to see the game. How gladdened would be the hearts of distracted Honorary Secretaries in India were their efforts to provide sport encouraged by, but a fractional part of such gate receipts! The police regulations in Calcutta make it impossible to have a gate for anything held on the maidan, the executives have in consequence no other source of income but the microscopic entrance money and what can be garnered by the time-honoured and not particularly satisfactory practice of sending round the hat. Racing is happily exempt from such discouragement, but every other form of sport languishes by reason of the attitude adopted by the authorities who permit itinerant showmen to encumber and litter the maidan with tent and enclosure for months at a time, but set their faces resolutely against every attempt to provide proper facilities for cycle racing, athletics and other forms of sport requiring a track or some sort of prepared ground. Small wonder that the sight of our cold weather amusement camps, or the contemplation of the debris and the unsightly condition the maidan remains in for months after the horse riding, moving picture, rink and merry-go-round people have departed, has a tendency to turn the Secretarial optic positively green.

Poor "Tiger" Smith continues to offer himself as a chopping block for the boxing fraternity. When last advices reached us he had travelled over to Paris to try his luck against a few good men at present touring the continent. On the 5th March, he met, at the Folies Bergere, one Walter Stanton of California, in a twenty round contest with 5oz. gloves and, as usual, since he left his happy hunting grounds in the Shiny East, he was well beaten.

The latest contribution to the sportsman's library is "Advanced Golf," by James Braid, the open champion of 1901-05-06. This is a book for advanced, or, as Braid terms it, "progressive players." It is not a text-book of terms and shots for the novice, but aims at making the player who has found his game a better golfer—perhaps even a champion. In these days of actual pictures—photographs—no book of this kind is complete without copious illustrations, and so Braid has embellished his book with eighty-eight pictures, mostly photographs of actual shots, such as "Stance and address," "Top of swing," "Impact," and "Finish" in playing for the slice. And these photographs tell you more than hundreds of words of technical explanation. Braid talks learnedly on clubs, stances, the various shots, systems of practice, match and medal play, science of the stroke, planning, of courses, and finishes up with "some personal matters" and championship experiences. Whilst the book is one for progressives, it should form part of the library of every golfer. The novice, before he has mastered the 322 pages, will be more than a beginner; and there is much food for thought in the admirable chapters telling how to do it for the best of the advanced brigade. The book is published by Methuen at 10s. 6d.

Fashions in dogs change as in most other mundane matters. Upwards of 190 French bulldogs—a great increase over the number of last year—and many Brussels Griffons, Pomeranians, and Pekinese were exhibited at a dog show confined chiefly to breeds now in favour as pets held on the 9th instant at the Royal Horticultural Hall, Westminster.

When all else fails in the pursuit of the oof bird in India, some of us might find it worth while looking to the London "taxi" for salvation. We have it on the authority of a home paper that Taxicab drivers have been so successful during their first year on the London streets that some have been able to pay down substantial amounts and secure motor-cabs of their own, while scores of others are engaged in trying to make arrangements with motor-cab manufacturers in order that they may become proprietors on their own account.

Mr. Rawlinson, managing director of a large motor-car company in London, has stated that between fifty and sixty drivers had applied to his firm with a view to becoming possessors of cabs.

For a year taximeters have been on the streets, and they now number 800. Their scanty numbers at the beginning meant a harvest for the drivers, and throughout last summer they did extraordinary business. Drivers taking 25 per cent. of the receipts could earn from four to seven pounds a week. The change of seasons and the increasing number of the vehicles lowered earnings later, but many drivers have earned £200 in the year.

The many friends and admirers of Robert Abel—and they are all over the world—will be very sorry to hear that he is again suffering from the complaint—gout in the eyes—which led to his premature retirement from first-class cricket a few years since. He was in hospital when the last mail left London and his condition was considered none too hopeful.

Two well known cricketers died in England early this month. One was the Rev. R. Lang, old Harrovian, Cambridge blue and one of the finest short-slips in England: he was also a magnificent round armed bowler and a fine, free hard-hitting batsman. He was born at Jessore, Bengal, on 6th April 1840, and died at Woodham Walter, in Essex, of which place he was Rector, on the 23rd ultimo. The other notable addition to the obituary is the name of Mr. Arthur Blackman who died at Brighton on the 6th April. He was one of the few cricketers who could claim to have played for three first-class counties. He played in one match for Surrey in 1878, three times for Kent in 1879 and 1880, and on fifteen occasions for Sussex between 1881 and 1887. He was a free and attractive batsman, a good field at cover-point, and a useful medium-paced bowler.

A popular Archdeacon whilst out one day with his dog and gun met a parishioner. "I hope," said the Archdeacon, "you attend church regularly and read your Bible?" "I do read my Bible," replied the parishioner; and added in a severe tone, "but I nowhere find that the Apostles went out shooting." "No," said the Archdeacon; "the shooting was very bad in Palestine, so they went fishing instead."

When the venomous rattlesnake sees his enemy, the king snake, of terrible constricting power, the "rattler" quickly throws himself into a coil and prepares for war. He knows there is no getting out of a fight should a king snake once set eyes on him. The latter begins circling around the rattlesnake, going faster and faster, until he looks like a bright crimson streak in a circle on the ground. The rattlesnake seems to get dazed or dizzy. When his head is twisted so far around that he cannot recover quickly, like a flash the king snake darts in upon him, seizes him by the back of the neck, out of reach of his poison-fangs, and wraps his coils like lightning around his victim. The contest ends in the life being fairly crushed out of the rattlesnake.

A largely attended meeting of the representatives of all the leading Hockey Clubs in Calcutta and Suburbs was held on Monday evening on the C. F. C. ground, Mr. Eric Studd, of the Calcutta Football Club, presiding.

The following resolutions were put to the meeting and carried nem con.:—

(1) That a Hockey Association be hereby formed and that it be called the Bengal Hockey Association.

(2) That the following 17 clubs be invited to join the Association as its original members:—(1) C.F.C., (2) Customs, (3) Caledonia, (4) Dalhousie, (5) Rangers, (6) Y.M.C.A., (7) Rovers, (8) B.-N. R., (9) United Services, (10) Mohan Bagan, (11) E. I. R., (12) Ranchi, (13) Medical College, (14) 10th Jats, (15) St. Xavier's College, (16) Hornets and (17) Sibpur College with an entrance fee of Rs. 5 only.

(3) That all Hockey Clubs in Bengal composed entirely of amateur and playing the game under the authorised Rules of Hockey as passed by the International Board be eligible for affiliation.

(4) That a Committee of five with power to add to their number be now appointed to draft rules for the affiliation of further clubs and for the general control of the Association, and that they be instructed to present their draft rules to a general meeting to be called in June, 1908. Each affiliated club to be represented at this meeting by only one member.

The following Provisional Committee were then appointed with Mr. N. R. Bhattacharjee as its Honorary Secretary (pro tem).

Messrs. T. Richardson, A. B. Rosser, M. Remfry, P. S. Dixon and E. T. Studd.

(5) That the Committee now appointed be authorised to approach the Calcutta Hockey League Committees with a view to taking over the control of that Competition.

With the usual vote of thanks to the chair the meeting separated.

We have to thank Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co. for a copy of their Indian Directory for 1908. This valuable publication increases yearly in bulk, the information it contains is comprehensive and reliable and it is an indispensible adjunct to the office table.

The final tie in the Murree Brewery Divisional Hockey Cup Tournament at Quetta, brought together the 29th Battery, R.F.A., and No. 5 Mountain Battery. Their first meeting ended in a draw, but in the replay on Tuesday No. 5. M.B. won by two goals to one. Results in our Hockey columns.

More or less descriptive details of the wedding at St. Margarets Church, Westminster, last Saturday, in which your Viceroy's second daughter Lady Ruby Elliot was one of the "high contracting parties" have probably reached you by cable, unless the general telegraph operatives strike of which we hear such alarming accounts has cut down your English news for the moment to the barest references to the most important matters. The assemblage, it is needless to remark, was of the large and distinguished order and everything connected with the ceremony was brilliant and impressive. The bride, in the unavoidable absence of her father, was given away by her brother, Viscount Melgund, who is in his eighteenth year. She was attended by eight bridesmaids—two of whom were children—and by two pages. The bridesmaids included the Ladies Eileen and Violet Elliot (the bride's sisters) and Lady Evelyn Grey, her cousin. They wore charmingly-pretty palest-blue dresses, and the pages Court suits to match. Hon'ble Windham Baring, the bridgroom's brother, was best man. After the wedding a reception was held at 46, Berkeley Square, lent by Mr. Frank Mildmay, M.P.: here the magnificent array of presents was on view. The King and Queen sent a beautiful pendant on a platinum chain. In the centre hangs a large pear-shaped aquamarine, the front of which is flat. In it are inlaid the cyphers "E" and "A," in small diamonds, surmounted by a tiny Imperial crown, also in small diamonds and platinum. Outside is a wreath of diamond leaves, with pearl berries, tied with a diamond true lover's knot, studded with whole pearls. The Queen also gave the bride a beautiful Indian shawl. The Queen of Spain has given a set of French blue enamel pearl and gold links and studs. The Prince and Princess of Wales sent, with a card written by her Royal Highness, and expressing cordial good wishes, an almadine and diamond pendant, suspended from a Louis Seize bow of white enamel by a platinum chain. Princess Victoria, with a personally-indited card, expressing good wishes to Lord Errington and Lady Ruby Elliot, sent a beautifully-finished Sheraton clock. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught gave a perpetual calendar, framed in pale blue enamel and silver, with a jewelled fly in one corner. The Duchess of Connaught also gave an agate and gold seal; Princess Patricia of Connaught, a set of four lace pins in white enamel, with peridot centres; Princess Henry of Battenberg, a water-colour drawing of a garden, by H. Montgomery; Princess Beatrice of Coburg, a set of waistcoat buttons of similar enamel to the links given by the Queen of Spain and very many illustrious people also "weighed in" with tokens of good will, among them Lord Kitchener: but the names of Indian present senders were not numerous, that is if the list published was anything like complete. Viscount Errington, the bridegroom, gave the bride a tiara, earrings, and brooch of diamonds and emeralds. The Earl of Minto gave his daughter a green crocodile dressing-bag fitted with gold engine-turned, coronetted, and monogrammed brushes, bottles, and trays, also sables. The Countess of Minto gave furniture and a cheque; Ladies Eileen and Violet Elliot, Viscount Melgund, and the Hon'ble Gavin Elliot, a rope of pearls with tasselled ends and cabochon emeralds; the Earl of Cromer, a pair of handsome diamond hair sprays, and cheque; Countess of Cromer, jewelled clasp.

Reference to Viceregal social matters reminds me to mention the fact that the Dowager Lady Dufferin and Lady Hermoine Blackwood, who should be well-remembered by many in India, have just returned from a visit to the West Indies. Both ladies were looking remarkably well I thought, from the glimpse I caught of them on their arrival.

I must not, Wegg like, drop into politics, I know; but I cannot avoid mention of the large and important fact that the Right Hon'ble Sir H. Campbell Bannerman, has resigned the Premiership and the Right Hon'ble Mr. Asquith is his successor. The news of the resignation has created no surprise, but, even among those who approve not of H. C. B. and his ways and there must be general regret at the cause—his long continued illness. Poor Sir Henry was never a victim of ambition and six years ago he would have scouted the idea of becoming Premier. His tastes—in spite of an income of £50,000 a year—were simple, and he once admitted that he never aspired to a higher position than the Speakership. One hears that unusual social brilliance is to mark the new Premiership. There are to be regal fetes, dinners to ministers and the rank and file of the Liberal party are to be entertained; Mrs. Asquith, it is said, will dispense hospitality on a scale unknown to the present generation.

"The richest young man in America," one Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, arrived in London on Monday and on the 4th of next month enters upon his experiment of driving his coach, the "Venture," to Brighton and back. The runs from London will be made on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, and return journeys on alternate days. Sixty horses are to be used in connection with the coach and eight changes of horses will be made on the journey at the places mentioned above.

Mr. Vanderbilt intends to keep a careful record of his expenditure and receipts, in order to show whether or not such an undertaking can be made a financial success. He states that no record breaking is to be essayed, but the "Venture's" runs will inevitably recall two famous coach drivers. One was the trip of the late Mr. James Selby, who, in 1888, drove the "Old Times" coach from Piccadilly to Brighton and back, a distance of 104 miles, in 7h. 50min., and the other the single journey to Brighton of the "Criterion" coach, which was effected in 3h. 40min.

Mr. Vanderbilt's guard is to be Walter Godden, a famous figure in coaching circles. He was the guard upon the "Old Times" coach when it made its record run.

The start will be from the "Hotel Victoria," Northumberland Avenue, and the finish at the "Metropole," Brighton; lunch at the "White Hart," Reigate, and the journey will be over the usual route. If we are to have a repetition of the weather we had last summer, Mr. Vanderbilt and his magnificent teams are not likely to be over patronised. By way of giving him a cheerful send off I see his wife is suing for a divorce!

It was bitterly cold last Saturday night, the wind and rain made things most uncomfortable for those who had to be out in, consequently one cannot help admiring the fortitude of the Bishop of London who at the head of a little band of Church Army workers marched in procession with banners and a brass band (which they relieved with hymn-singing and exhortation) through some of the slums. The bishop in his soft felt hat sang lustily and "addressed" frequently and with refreshing heartiness. I suppose the promoters of this curious spectacle are satisfied with the results; but there are those who he inclined to think that ribaldry and irreverence were more readily evoked than the sentiments to which these fervent processionists hoped to appeal. Par example during the singing of hymns some men broke out into "For he's a jolly good fellow," their voices eventually drowning the hymn and whistles, cycle bells and hooters occasionally assisted the vocalists!

On Saturday afternoon, I was an amazed—and intensely amused spectator at what is perhaps the record strike of London. One of the waitresses in the "Cabin," Piccadilly, had been discharged, and all the others, sympathising with her, decided to leave work simultaneously and present an ultimatum to the manager. Their spoke-girl, a tolerably good looking and extremely determined little blonde, engineered the business most delightfully and carried it out with most creditable dramatic effect. They chose 5 o'clock in the afternoon the busiest hour of the day—for putting their scheme into execution. There were then between 400 and 500 customers in the establishment (your "Vagrant" who was returning from a drougthy matinee among them) and, on the stroke of five, the waitresses suddenly put down their trays of tea and toast and muffins, and hurried upstairs to the manager's office. There the spoke-girl delivered the ultimatum, the immediate reinstatement of the dismissed waitress and a guarantee that no member of the staff would be dismissed within the next three months. Failing a satisfactory reply, it was intimated that the whole staff would leave the restaurant there and then. They won, bless their little hearts, and we hungry and thirsty ones had our wants attended to amidst hilarity or ill-temper according as we viewed the situation, while the crowd outside burst into cheers and had ultimately to be dispersed by the police. I must say—though I had to wait half an hour for my tea—I admired the girls' enterprise and pluck; my own impression is that the young women in most of these establishments are not overwell treated and have many real grievances.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree has triumphed again. Last Saturday at His Majesty's this versatile actor's Shylock was presented to an audience which was unanimous in declaring it to be the most famous of all his impersonations, his Svengali and Fagin not excepted, and there were certainly two of the most extraordinary Jewish characters of our time.

Impressively despairing when, shouting "Jessica! Jessica!" he is seen rushing from room to room searching for his eloping daughter; scornfully defiant when, after the court scene, he finds the angry anti-Semite mob outside the justice doors; expectantly revengeful when, sharpening his knife upon his shoe, he looks yearningly at Antonio's breast, as if calculating where his blade shall cut; carelessly prodigal when, refusing the proffered gold, he scatters it upon the judgment floor—this last of a line of Shylocks is the most human and the most impressive of them all.

When, kneeling in his agony outside his doorway, Mr. Tree's Shylock beats his brow upon the ground, tears his garment and mixes dirt with the silvery curls upon his head, one sees, as never one saw before—not even in Sir Henry Irving's wonderful impersonation—the outcast Jew of the Middle Ages, outlawed by the customs of his time, bent in secret to indulge the misery he never showed to others.

Most of the other characters, however, are hopelessly modern, notably Miss Alexandra Carlisle's Portia. Alone in their cleverness stand out Mr. Basil Gill's Bassanio and Mr. Leon M. Lion's Tubal. But Mr. Tree has given us something really human and intensely impressive and all London is flocking to see and hear him to-day.

The funny men are at it again, talking about building and endowing a National Theatre at a cost of half a million. The most remarkable thing about this business is that not one of the men creating the genteel uproar is offering to put his hand in his own pocket. They very generously wish others to be able to claim the glory of supplying the needful. At the same time they must be very simple-minded enthusiasts to imagine that wealthy men of sense are going to subscribe half a million in cash in order that a committee of unbusiness-like men may fritter it away in providing something for the public that the public does not want. The still more preposterous proposition has been put forward that the Government should found a National Theatre. Tax the people for something that is not wanted. Waste half a million on a bankrupt playhouse in London. It would be interesting to learn what the country would say to such a proposal if any Minister was fool enough to make it.

Though nearly three weeks must pass away ere Covent Garden opens its doors for the grand season of Royal Opera, there has been no lack of interest shown in the prospective scheme, as the list of those who have already become subscribers testifies. Indeed, regarded from the social standpoint, the forthcoming season bids fair to surpass all of its predecessors, since the list is the longest hitherto recorded. To add to the brilliance of the summer a gala performance will probably be arranged in honour of M. Fallieres, President of the French Republic, and the admirers of the beautiful in singing should have no cause for complaint, as a glance at the long list of eminent singers engaged will prove.

On the opening night, Thursday, 30th April, Madame Tetrazzini will make her reappearance after a highly successful winter in New York, the opera selected being "Lucia di Lammermoor," in which the popular prima donna will, of course, undertake the name-part. During the season Madame Tetrazzini will appear also in a most welcome revival of Rossini's evergreen "Barber of Seville," and for her it is intended also to reintroduce "La Sonnambula" and "Les Huguenots," and Bizet's earliest opera, "Les Pecheurs de Parles." Not till the middle of May will Madame Melba make her rentree, and during the season the diva is to sing not only in many of her favourite roles, but also in a newly-cast version of Verdi's "Otello," in which, of course, she will be Desdemona's interpreter to the Otello of Mr. Zenatello, whose return also will be eagerly awaited.

America has sent us yet another performer, and it is refreshing to learn from a preliminary announcement, that she is said to be "the sprightliest and most engaging little creature ever discovered." It must be difficult to live up to such a reputation as that, but the "Ginger Girl," as the newcomer styles herself, will, no doubt, do her best. One of the American papers tells us that the "Ginger Girl," who answers to the name of Miss Annie Doherty and who will be seen at the Oxford next week, "jiggles around the stage as if she were attached to an inexorable galvanic battery." From the time she makes her first entrance to her final exit, "she is one electrifying bundle of nervous animation." Her humour, it is added, is infectious, and for each of her songs she has a different costume. The simple explanation, apparently, is that they fall off, one by one.

A great stroke of luck has befallen Mrs. Langtry. As she was rehearsing Mr. Sydney Grundy's new play, "A Fearful Joy," at the Haymarket, a cablegram was handed to her from a firm of brokers in San Francisco advising her that gold had been found on a property she acquired in California for a mere song more than twenty years ago, during her first visit to the Pacific Coast.

It has been a week of big disasters. First we had the sinking of the destroyer Tiger by the Cruiser Berwick during some manœuvres at Portsmouth. Thirty-five lives were lost. Lieutenant-Commander William E. Middleton, in command of the Tiger, went down with his ship, and the conduct of all on board was marked by coolness and courage. So sudden was the collision and so deadly its results that the fore-part of the Tiger sank immediately, not a single man being saved. All on board the other remnant of the vessel were hurled by the violence of the impact into the water, and twenty-three men were picked out of the water by boats of the Berwick and other vessels of the fleet.

Two houses in Castle Street, just off Oxford Street, which were already condemned to demolition, collapsed early on Monday morning without the slightest warning, killing eight and injuring over twenty. It occurred at 2 A.M. when pitch darkness added to the dangers and difficulties of rescue and most of the structure fell like a deck of cards. Descriptions of the scenes are heartrending in the extreme.

Old Harrovians in your parts will be sorry to hear of the big fire at Harrow when "Westacre," occupied by Mr. R. Somerville, was burnt out, the damage being estimated at something like £8,000. Happily the forty boys accommodated in the building were in the speech room attending a lecture when the outbreak took place, and all answered the roll-call directly after the alarm.

Are we within measurable distance of relief from the grotesqueries of the Suffragettes I wonder. I read that "Miss Christabel Pankhurst, speaking in the Portman Rooms, Marylebone, last night, said that nothing for women would be got out of the present Government, and that the appointment of their opponent, Mr. Asquith, as Prime Minister, was the last straw that would break the camel's back." Hear, hear: the breaking cannot come about too soon for some people.

The Marble Arch now resembles the last rose of summer in that it is "left blooming alone" so to speak: reminds me very much in its present isolation of your Prinsep's Ghaut memorial in Calcutta. To relieve the chronic traffic congestion this corner of Hyde Park has been improved, the corner turning into Park Lane, has been cut off and a new road sweeps round the back of the Arch and cuts it off from the Park, giving it just now a curiously forlorn appearance. This road was opened yesterday and in the first hour no fewer than 2,400 vehicles passed along it! How does this compare with Clive Street and the Exchange at noon on a busy day!

I have to report the sudden death of that man of many parts, Sir Howard Vincent, the pioneer of tariff reform, amateur theatrical manager, barrister, volunteer commandant, special war correspondent, criminal investigator, M.P. and what not. His was a crowded career and an useful, and his great heart and wide sympathies have left many who will sincerely mourn his less. He died of Bright's disease at Mentone on Tuesday.

The Rev. Edward Reynolds, for 40 years Master of the Coniston Foxhounds, died during the night at Ambleside. Mr. Reynolds was in the saddle as recently as the past winter. He was one of the finest lawn tennis players of his day, and only two years ago took a prize at Leicester. He had no equal in the North of England as a figure skater.

BLACK BUCK SHOOTING IN UPPER INDIA.

THE climate of Upper India is glorious in the winter. The keen dry air and bright sunshine, make an atmosphere so perfect and exhilarating that one enjoys to the full the mere act of living. I have especially affectionate remembrances of the Agra district. The name rather suggests the Taj, Laurie's Hotel, and American Globe trotters. The mere tourists, however, only cling to the beaten track: they know nothing at all of the varied and charming country around Akbar's city.

When however one has lived there for three years, the affair is different. Such a time suffices to make one quite familiar with each nook and corner within a radius of twenty miles.

Every secluded network of ridge and ravine such as the Indian Gazelle love; each grassy plain with its dotted babool trees, its scattered mango groves, and herds of antelope, is sought out in turn.

Then it is that one observes how black buck cling to one locality if undisturbed. Some peculiarity, perhaps makes an animal easy to recognise, the unusual set of his horns, or the loss of one of them, or perhaps a limp in one leg.

Returning to a favourite hunting ground, the first object to be seen is the familiar form of the same old buck

Sixteen miles from Agra is a village called Kagerol, and three miles beyond that again is a stretch of wild uncultivated land. This piece of country is grassy, but can hardly be called a plain in spite of its flatness for big clumps of thorn and scattered trees, break it up into a succession of glades.

At the beginning of 1902 I was marching from Nyagaon to Agra, and when passing this particular piece of waste land, saw a remarkably fine black buck, not far from the road. The length of his horns and the wide angle at which they were set, made the buck's appearances so distinctive, that I felt sure I should recognise him if I saw him again.

Some ten months later, in January 1903, I thought I would go to Kagerol for a couple of days to try and find this buck. As the place was not well known and nineteen miles of sandy unmetalled road separated it from Agra, it was unlikely that anyone had visited it in the meantime.

I accordingly hired a bullock cart and sent on my tent, etc., early in the morning, while I followed in a trap later in the day. I had a light strong tum-tum with a big wiry country-bred pony, so in spite of the heavy sandy road we got out to Kagerol easily enough. There, in a mangoe grove, a little beyond the village, I found my tent pitched ready for me, and a table and chair outside under the trees. It was too late to do anything that evening.

Next morning I was up at dawn, and with Kassim Khan, a man who generally came with me on expeditions of this kind, started on the three mile walk to the antelope's haunts. I carried a single shot ·28-30 Steven's rifle with Lyman sights. This excellent weapon had the merit of not only shooting a hollow-fronted bullet at a fairly high velocity, with its full charge of 35 grains of Black powder, but it made also a perfect rook rifle, with a reduced charge of 5 grains of smokeless and a solid bullet. With this latter charge the report was so slight that I could use the rifle for small game without the least fear of disturbing the country.

Our way took us along the Jagner road, and at that early hour birds of all sorts were much in evidence.

Every babool tree we passed had its quota of cooing doves, and just as we reached a clump of neem trees a couple of pea-fowl sailed down from their tops and settled in a corn field close by. Every now and then we would see a roller flap across the road with the sunshine glinting on its brilliant blue wings. From all around came the cheery ringing calls of grey partridges "Teetur! teetur! Kateetur, kateetur!"

About a mile and half out of Kagerol the road crossed a dry canal by a brick bridge. Here I spied a couple of partridges running about among the thorn bushes on the canal bank. After a little manœuvring I got a shot with the reduced charge and killed one. We had not walked very much further before a crook overhead gave warning of passing sand grouse. I glanced up and saw two, and as I looked they slanted down and pitched in a patch of open ground near the road.

So like the ground are sand grouse in their colour, that though we had marked as near as possible where they had settled, it was only after the strictest search that I at last spied them crouched flat in a slight depression. Luckily they were not so wild as usual and allowed me to approach within thirty yards, when a careful shot killed the cock. It was one of the common pin-tail sandgrouse (P. exustus).

Later, I added a couple of blue rock pigeons, and a second grey partridge to the bag.

This illustrates the usefulness of a rook rifle in India. Much of the small game which afford poor sport when a shot gun is used, become infinitely more interesting if one takes a rifle to them. At last we reached the edge of the rough ground where we expected to find the antelope.

We made our way straight to the open glade where I had seen the big buck ten months before. The long stretch of grass was however quite deserted. Next we inspected a small open plain beyond a large banyan tree, which acted as a landmark to guide us. There in the distance were two solitary bucks, and my hopes were raised, only however to be dashed again, when an inspection through the glasses showed poor heads nothing like the trophy I was in search of.

Then followed a strict quest through glade after glade. For a long time nothing rewarded our eager eyes, but at last Kassim caught sight of some does. Advancing cautiously we next viewed two bucks; neither however proved to be the historical one. There were now a great many does scattered about amid the clumps of bushes, but by making a detour we got beyond them. A little further on and Kassim signalled to me; his keen ear had caught the faint clash of horns. On we worked our way, and at last saw the cause of the sound. There some two hundred and fifty yards away were five bucks; two were butting at each other, while the other three looked on. Quickly I got them into the field of my glasses; the combatants were first inspected; then disappointed I turned and looked at the spectators. There he was! There was not the faintest doubt as to his identity: the wide angle of his long horns was quite unmistakeable.

The subsequent stalk proved almost too easy. For once the watchful does were too far off to see to the safety of their lord. The two bucks were intent on their sparring match while the other three were equally interested in watching the combat. The numerous thorn clumps gave ample cover. I had marked one which looked about a hundred yards from the unsuspecting animals; and from cover to cover made my way towards it, while Kassim sat down out of sight and waited.

Soon I was behind the bush I wanted, and paused to regain steadiness before peeping round it.

Then when I looked, there was the big buck standing proudly with his head up, only ninety yards away. At such a range it was unnecessary to sit, and I took the shot standing. As the rifle cracked the buck plunged forwards, then suddenly stopped, swayed for an instant and rolled over on his side.

I sat down and pushed in another cartridge. Then while the other bucks were still undecided which way to bolt, put a second bullet through the shoulders of the next best.

Then Kassim and I rushed out: he in his hurry to kal-lal the animals before they had ceased to breathe, and so make them fit food for Mussalmen; I to run the tape over the horns of the big buck—they proved a full twenty-four inches: a really fine trophy.

"FLEUR-DE-LYS."

NOT LOADED FOR BEAR.

We were enjoying our evening smoke, my old guide, Steve Norris and I, in the comfortable log cabin he had erected for one of his trapping camps in the northern wilderness.

As on all such occasions reminiscences of hunting adventures were freely exchanged between us, and a late hour was reached before we sought our comfortable beds of hemlock boughs and twigs of fragrant balsam.

Among the stories the old guide told were several thrilling accounts of the strange changes which sometimes occur among the denizens of the forest some animals which are usually of a timid and cautious nature, becoming bold, aggressive, and even vicious in their attacks on man.

"Yes," said the guide, as he refilled and lighted his pipe, preparatory to narrating some incidents of more than ordinary interest, "it don't pay to monkey with any of the wild animals unless you have a gun along, no matter how harmless you think they are; they are all vicious at times, and even the gentle deer sometimes becomes as ugly as a bear or panther.

"We had a fellow down in the settlement who tried it with a bear, and he wished he hadn't for a number of days after. He was travelling along a by-road toward his home when lo, and behold! within twenty rods of the house there came out a big bear right into his path.

Now, as a general thing, a bear will turn tail; leastwise he has no tail, but will back away from a man as soon as he sees him. It isn't very often a bear will face a man, though sometimes a she bear with cubs will, and it is likely this one would have gone off about his business if the chap had minded his own. But he thought it would be great larks to give the brute a scare and so he turned his coat-tail up over his head, stooped over, let out a big screech, and rushed toward the bear.

"My wife says its the unexpected that happens, and it proved so in this case, for I'll be durned if the bear didn't make for him and give him a dab that ripped his coat to tatters and was about to make things lively for the man when he turned and ran; but no matter how fast he could run, and he swears he cleared six feet at a jump, the bear was giving him a box behind now and then to hurry him up, and he declares that the last clip he got as he tumbled into the house he'll never forget if he lives to be as old as Methusula.'"

"Speaking of bears," he continued, "I once had a curious adventure with one that I shall never forget; it was when I was a youngster, sixteen or seventeen years old, and it happened on our old farm the other side of the settlement."

Our family was a small one, leastwise all there was of us left at home, for my sister was married, and my two older brothers had gone to the city to work, so there was no one left but my father, whom we always called Pa Norris, my mother who was always Ma Norris to us, and myself, who, as far back as I can remember, was always Steve; sometimes 'drat-that-boy-Steve' as they used to say, when I was wanted in a hurry to pick up chips, cut firewood, or drive the cows home from pasture and milk them.

One evening, just as dusk was coming on, although there was a mighty bright moon, the old gentleman was sitting on the porch smoking his go-to-bed pipe; mother was clearing up the supper table; and I was up-stairs in my room working out some arithmetic figures before going to bed.

As father was sittin' there quiet and comfortable-like, wonderin' how many potatoes the bugs would leave, and whether or not there would be any corn or cabbages, for farming wasn't all pie in those days, he seed an animal come into the door-yard, which he declared looked as big as a four-year-old. Fust he thought it was a moose, and a big bull one at that, but he soon discovered he was mistaken, for when he picked up a stick and hove it at the creature, whistling at it and shouting for it to get out of that, the animal came a little nearer, stood up on its hind legs, and began waving its forepaws in the air, as if he thought Father Norris was a ball tosser, and he was in for a game of baseball.

Father vowed he never was so scared in his life, for the bear was a lunker, and as he had no gun handy he saw he was at the creetur's marcy; he declared that his hair stod straight up all over his head.

But he didn't tarry there long, for the bear begun hitching toward him; and so, dartin' into the house and slammin' the door behind him, he shouted to Mother, 'Run for your life, Ma Norris! there's the dodwollopingest big bear out here I ever seed!'

Mother was a middling heavy woman,—she must have weighed considerably over two hundred—but the way she climbed up the ladder into the loft, where I was sittin', was a caution to sinners, and father was not a great ways behind her.

I will here say that the upper story where I had my bed, etc., was not finished off, and we had no stairs leading up to it, only a rough ladder which stood against the side of the opening between the two stories which was only about two feet wide and four feet long, just big enough to allow people to go up and down comfortable-like.

Father hadn't climbed up more than three or four rungs of the ladder when the old door was pushed opened, for the latch was a shaky affair, and in walks Mr. Bear, just as if he owned the whole premises, and he really did, too, for a while, any way.

As soon as Pa Norris got up into the loft he pulled the ladder up after him, and then we knew we were pretty safe, for there was no other way the bear could get at us.

And so we all stretched ourselves on the attic floor over the stair hole and looking down upon the varmint as he pranced around the kitchen, watched him with all sorts of feelings as he made himself at home.

By Mighty, but he was a big brute! a regular Jumbo and no mistake.

Mother hadn't cleared the things off the tea-table, and if that creetur didn't have a high old time, it's no matter.

There was quite a good-sized plate of doughnuts that had been fried that afternoon, and a big hunk of cheese, and they disappeared as quick as they'd have done at a donation party at the minister's house.

But the doughnuts were only an appetizer to him, and he got outside of a pot of baked beans, and ate up all the bread and ginger cake there was on the table, in no time at all, and finished off by emptying the sugar bowl and lapping up the sugar.

You can imagine what our feelings were as we stretched ourselves out on the floor of the attic and watched the brute eating up our provender; it must have been a comical sight and I have often wished I had a snapshot picture of the scene.

The brute made a clean sweep of the table, emptying the dishes and the bean-pot with his paws as handy as a man could, and if any one had told us that the bear had been eating at a table all his life I honestly think we would have believed him.

Having swallowed everything there was in sight, he went into the pantry, and poor mother moaned wofully as we heard the dishes and tumblers of jelly and such like rattling and tumbling about, as Mr. Bear filled himself chock-a-block with the good things he found there.

'Well,' says father, as we heard the bear lapping up a pan of sweet cream, which was intended for the churning on the next day, 'did you ever hear of the likes of that.'

We lay there a while longer listening to the beast roaming around in the pantry, when, as everything seemed pretty quiet, Mother Norris said in a low tone, giving father a punch. 'Now's your time, Hiram, set the ladder down to the kitchen, and go down easy like, close the pantry door and fasten it and we've got the beast safe and sound.'

'I've seen the time,' replied the old gentleman "when I was a dum-quizzled fool, but not to-night, oh, no, not to-night! My rheumatiz has taken hold the worst way with my lying on this hard floor, and that big brute would make doughnuts and cheese of me in no time; but here's Steve, he's young and spry, he can slip down the ladder quicker'n thinkin, fasten the bear up in the pantry, and go and rout out the neighbours.'

'Not on your daggerotype, Pa Norris,' said I. 'I'm not loaded for bear either and I don't want to be made doughnuts and cheese of any more than you do.'

Well, the bear had everything his own way in the pantry a while longer, and then coming out into the kitchen he began dancing around for fresh fields to conquer, as the fellow says in the story book.

At last he spied father's gun hanging over the dresser, when he climbs up and reaches it down just as if he was used to fire arms all his life.

"Hold on, Steve," I exclaimed, interrupting the guide, "cut that out old man. The rest of your story is likely enough, but when you talk to me about a bear handling a gun it seems to me you are drawing the long bow; cut it out, Steve, cut it out!"

"I know it sounds a little fishy," he replied, "but wait until I come to the end of the story and I reckon you'll believe it. Yes, sir, the bear took down the gun, which had a good heavy charge of partridge shot in it, and, taking aim at a big picture of George Washington, that mother had got as a premium with a pictorial monthly, the critter blazed away.

Great Caesar's ghost, how the glass rattled about as the frame tumbled to the floor! Of course, Washington's portrait was teetotally ruined.

Well, sir, when the bear shot off the gun Mother Norris began to scream at the top of her lungs. She thought we were all murdered for sure, and as she was, as you can very well imagine, excited the worst way, she began moving around on the attic floor a hollering to Father Norris to go down and drive out the bear or all our throats would be cut from ear to ear!

Just then she accidently trod on a loose board, which tilted up and let down one of her feet and a portion of her lower limb through the opening, which put her foot just within reach of the bear.

Father and I did our best to pull her up, but the two of us were not strong enough, for the board held her like a vise, and it began to look as if she was to become bear's meat after all.

Of course, she screamed louder than ever, and the brute began to get uneasy like.

In the midst of the hubbub there came a loud rapping at the front door at which Father Norris sung out, 'Come in, come in quick, for marcy's sake, but look out, mind your eye! there's a wild bear in here with us.'

At his words the door was thrown open, and two men armed with long bludgens, or staffs, rushed in and pointing to the bear one of them said 'Dere he ees, dere he ees! the tam scaramouche! ah, you mauvis sujet! You run away again, will you,' and he hit the animal a rousing wack over the head with a staff.

The men were two French Canadians, and this was their performing bear, which had escaped from them during the day.

It took them but a few minutes to hitch a chain to the critter's collar and lead him dancing out into the road, down which they hurried away in the bright moonlight.

It did not take us long to climb down the ladder and help poor Ma Norris out of her awkward predicament.

As soon as she was landed safely on the kitchen floor she began mourning over the mischief the bear had done, while father and I went out into the yard and watched our visitors until they disappeared from sight. After returning to the house, and while mother and I were cleaning up the wreck, he sat down on the porch and again lighted his pipe to steady his nerves.

Poor Ma Norris sputtered and scolded good enough, but all father could say as he came into the house and got ready for bed was, 'That's the worst bear scrape I ever got into! and to think, after all, it was nothing but a dirty Canuck performing bear that gave us such a scare! its too rediklous, yes, by thunder, its altogether too rediklous!'"

Fishing.

TARPON FISHING.

Tarpon fishing is more kinds of sport than any other known game. Tarpon of any age will rise to a fly. Young members of the family, from fifteen inches to two feet long, may usually be found in the creeks that feed the rivers of the west coast of Florida, and captured with a light trout rod, but only after a fight more brilliant than was ever put up by the most gallant trout that was ever spawned.

The swift waters of the syndicated salmon streams and the rugged country through which they flow possess peculiar charms with which the placid rivers of the Florida peninsula make no pretense of competing, but the gamest of salmon compares with the gorgeous Silver King as a satyr to Hyperion. As a game fish the tarpon presents an acrobatic performance and chromatic spectacle not to be paralleled in the animal kingdom. Imagine a gracefully contorted body, as big as yourself, quivering ten feet in the air, panoplied with a thousand glittering silver scales, reflecting, like facets of a great diamond, the rays of a tropical sun, surrounded by a halo of prismatic drops of flying water and all backgrounded by the massed black clouds and solid wall of falling water of a near-approaching storm.

The tarpon fights with all the spirit of the purest strain of racehorse, the proud product of a thousand years of selection and training. From the time he feels the steel until he rolls exhausted on his back, his activity is incessant. He leaps out of the water, several times his own length, from two to a score of times and the action of his gills and head is so rapid that the eye cannot follow it. We know of it only through the camera, which divides time into thousandths of a second. Of a hundred leaps no two are alike and there is individuality in every fish. When struck, your tarpon may leap straight up, or at any angle, or he may skim along the surface of the water, rising clear of it half a dozen times in as many seconds. He may speed like a racehorse away from you until your 600 feet of line runs out, or he may dash straight for your skiff, rubbing against it, diving under it, or even leaping over it and tangling you in your own line.

The tarpon lends himself alike to the needs of the dilettante of the private yacht and the barefoot boy of the fishing boat. The cost varies from that of the yacht with its expense lid off; from the chartered outfit of houseboat, launch and dingeys with a per diem of from $100 to half that sum, down to the five dollars and upward of daily disbursement by the personally conducted tourist, and the one dollar or less by cruisers in fishing boats who conduct themselves. Though the methods differ widely the result is much the same, and the game is always worth the candle, whether played with a $100 tackle outfit, one of four dollars, or a cotton hand line and a pair of canvas gloves. The strenuousness of the sport can be graduated to the weakness of the invalid or the capacity of the athlete.

On the Gulf Coast of Florida the tarpon season is from March to November. They are especially numerous in June and July and, between Capes Romano and Sable, a few can be found all the year 'round. The last hour of the ebb and the first two of the flood can be recommended for trolling, and the slack water of the flood tide for still-fishing; but the only sure time to troll for tarpon is when they are in the humour. The most successful tarpon fisherman of my acquaintance assures me that the more he studies the tastes and habits of the fish the less he knows about them. Sometimes they will take the bait as it touches the water, at others I have vainly dragged it over a deep hole, from which the fish were rising to blow at the rate of five a minute, only to see it knocked three feet in the air by the contemptuous toss of a tarpon's tail. You cannot make an appointment with your tarpon as you do with your dentist. If you are patient he will come to you in his own good time and bite at any old rag you choose to offer him.

Still-fishing for tarpon is the old and lazy method, but is best practised occasionally. Your boatman anchors your skiff beside a channel which runs through the shallow waters where the tarpon finds his prey. The tarpon hook is attached to the line by a three-foot snood of braided flax or other soft and strong material and is baited with half a mullet. Then cast your baited hook fifty or one hundred feet out in the channel, place your rod across the skiff with its point toward the bait and its reel free to run. Reel off a dozen yards of line, coil it loosely on the seat before you, light your pipe and muse a little, or cut the leaves of the latest magazine, while your boatman "chums" from time to time by casting bread upon the waters in the form of fragments of fish.

In a few minutes, or it may be hours, or even days, the line begins to run out, you lay aside your magazine and pick up the rod, while your boatman takes in the anchor and sits down to the oars. You must feed out the line as called for, resisting all temptation to strike until perhaps fifty yards of line have gone and the fish has been allowed ample time to swallow the bait. Then, pressing your thumb firmly on the brake, strike. Two hundred feet away a gleaming form of burnished silver leaps, gyrating in the air. The whirling handle of the reel raps your incautious knuckles and the friction of the line burns your thumb through the thick brake of sole leather. You cry out to your boatman as you watch the diminishing line on your reel, and his struggles mightily with the oars. Soon the line slackens, as the fish turns, and the multiplying reel whirs beneath your nervous fingers as you labour to wind it in. Another leap, and the strain on the line shows that the fish is well hooked, and with skill and care on your part the chances are now even that you will conquer him. He will play tricks on you, will leap out of the water beside your skiff and then dash under it and away. Perhaps as you reel in your line you will find the tip of your rod on the wrong side of the skiff. Only the quickest action, mixed with good luck, can save you then. He will twist the line around a snag or a mangrove root, cut it on an oyster reef, or if the struggle is too prolonged, grind apart the snood between his bony jaws. He may tow you for miles and miles before his leaping is over and he floats vanquished beside the skiff. You should then give him his freedom, but if he is your first tarpon and you wish his scales or skin as souvenirs you will strike him with the great steel gaff and probably go overboard to him in his final struggle.

The strike, after the first anxious paying out of the line, is not always followed by the leap of a Silver King. Sometimes there is a steady tug at the line, which comes back minus the hook, the snood having been bitten in two by a shark. That is what the snood was for, so that the shark could bite it. If steel wire had been used you would have had to choose between cutting the line and being towed for miles until you could get the brute to the surface where you could shoot him or kill him with an ax. Other creatures trouble the tarpon still-fisherman. The sting-ray, unpleasantly armed and hard to handle; the sawfish, which will tow you back and forth all day without seeming to know that anything has happened to him, and big 300-pound jewfish, great inert masses, catching which is nearly as exhilarating as hoisting an anchor, but which on the Pacific Coast are caught, weighed and labelled Black Sea-Bass.

Better than still-fishing is the more modern trolling, or deepsea fishing, in the big passes, where the rod must be held ready for instant action and conditions of wind and tide become of active and often controlling interest.

It is in the passes of Charlotte Harbour, notably that of Boca Grande, the big pass, that tarpon fishing de luxe has reached its fullest development. Day by day, during April and May, fishermen and fisherwomen gather here from near-by yachts, American and foreign, from house-boats anchored in the harbour north of the pass, or in one of the coves south of it, and from hotels near as Joseppa and far as Punta Gorda or Punta Rassa. The typical outfit is a dingey with a little motor, and a revolving chair in the stern in which the fisherman sits, facing backward. There is also a boatman to do the work. The tackle consists of a $25 one-piece, six and a-half foot rod with agate guides and top, a big $40 reel, built like a watch, with jewelled bearings, noiseless machinery and a perfection of action which is a perennial delight to the mechanical eye; a $4 twenty-four thread line, two hundred yards long and tested to forty-eight pounds; a dollar hook with a bronze cable and swivels; a socket in the belt to hold the butt of the rod; and a vacuum-surrounded bottle warranted to keep coffee hot or other liquids cold—if the cork is not removed too frequently. A good brake on the reel is essential. Some fishermen wear a thumb stall and press the protected thumb against the line on the reel; others hinge a piece of sole leather on one of the pillars of the reel for the same purpose. The trouble with these methods is that when a fisherman gets real earnest in using them he burns his thumb. The ideal brake is a friction disc device interposed between the reel handle and the reel axle, capable of adjustment by set screws and acting automatically when the handle is held.

The best bait for trolling is a strip of flesh six inches long by one inch wide, cut from a mullet or some other white-bellied fish, and roughly trimmed to suggest a small fish. When trailed behind a skiff, canoe, or little, slow-moving launch, this lure is very effective. While trolling, the fisherman is seldom bothered by other fish, although an occasional Spanish mackerel, cavalli or grouper may strike at his bait.

In his first wild leap the tarpon, as he feels the hook, usually throws it with the bait high in the air. If, instead, it catches in his bony mouth, the sportsman must keep a constant strain upon the line, through all the leaping, twisting, turning and sulking of the quarry. How difficult this is with a rod so nearly springless and so short is best known to the fisherman of most experience. Even when success seems assured in the big passes and among the outer keys, a fourteen-foot shark is likely to take in half of your six-foot tarpon at a single bite.

In fighting the tarpon the fisherman holds his left hand as high as convenient on the rod and throws his weight backward against it. Then, throwing the tip of the rod forward, he reels in the slackened line. The process is called "pumping," and the fisherman's heart soon pumps with it. The tarpon which I have captured have required of me from ten minutes to three hours each, or an average of something over half an hour, of incessant toil, before they have yielded. For those who fish to kill, the boatman's skill with the gaff shortens the time. To me much of the pleasure of tarpon fishing lies in giving freedom to the fish after his surrender. Even after he has given up and been drawn beside the boat he keeps up a powerful motion of his tail and there is excitement in removing the hook from his mouth. Usually a quick motion of the hand will back out the hook, sometimes a small pen-knife blade must be used to free the barb, and once in ten times it will be necessary to use a stick or the handle of a paddle as a disgorger. It is a delicate operation, which the tarpon is always likely to complicate. He is the slimiest thing in creation and can only be steadied for the work in his mouth by holding his jaw or inserting a few fingers in the outer edge of his gills. To put the hand in his gills would invite something worse than laceration. Yet I have removed the hooks from scores of tarpon, even in rough water, while holding them beside a tiny, cranky canoe, the sides of which rose only five inches above the water line. Of course, in still-fishing, the snood usually has to be cut to free the tarpon, which must then get rid of the hook as best he can.

Excitement is doubled when the hand line is substituted for the rod and reel. The line should be one-sixteenth of an inch in diameter, of cotton, loosely twisted, and the hands must be guarded by leather or canvas gloves. The mouth of the tarpon can be felt by the fisherman as, through the reins, the horseman feels that of the animal he drives. Each stroke of the tail or turn of the swaying body of the fish is telegraphed to the hand that holds the line. Even the emotions of the tarpon can be inferred from the angry shaking of his head, or its gentle yielding to the persuasion of the pull of the line.

The hand line lends itself to work with the canoe and the camera. A light canoe, which a twenty-four thread tarpon line could sustain suspended in the air, can be held by a light trolling line as near the big fish as the fisherman chooses. He may enjoy his ride at a safe distance from his fiery steed or he can invite the mix-up, which is easy to get. He ought never to try this in the sweeping tide of the big pass, no matter how much of a water dog he may be, without a friendly boat at hand. There is probably no danger from sharks, as these brutes apparently never attack living human beings in this country, yet, after seeing the eagerness with which they gobble up tarpon from beside the boat, I have become conservative in acting upon my faith in their harmlessness. In less turbulent water than Boca Grande I have often seen the shark temper tested. In Marco, women and children swim about the pier from which men are fishing for sharks, and more than once, while swimming there with my daughter, fifty feet from shore, I have seen a shark glide between us and the bank.

In hunting the tarpon the true sporteman's weapon, I think, is a light harpoon. The fisher with a hook is the trapper of the craft, who neither sets nor baits his own trap. But the harpooner of a tarpon has earned his laurels. There is no royal road in that business and no mercenary can carry you to success. Nothing that is done with rifle or fowling-piece is more sportsman-like or calls for greater skill. The game is a lottery without blanks, for if you miss the tarpon with your harpoon, the joy of the pursuit, the excitement of the near approach and the delirium of the throw, though it fail, is greater even than the capture of the creature by trapping methods.

Leave your hired guide at home and go forth with your friend and companion in the lightest canoe or skiff that will carry you, paddling or sculling one another by turns. Find and follow the bayonet fin of the tarpon as it cleaves the surface of the shallow waters of the feeding grounds; explore the deep rivers and look under the dark shadows of their banks for the sleeping Silver Kings; or paddle out to the tide-rips in the big pass, to where a school of tarpon are rising to blow at the rate of twenty a minute within an area of an acre. If you are skilled with your weapon and your companion cautious with the paddle, you may get half the fish you follow on the flats, one in five of those you see under the banks, or succeed in hitting one in a hundred that rise in the pass to blow within twenty feet of you. The camera man says that the latter would be a good average for the camera as well. And even if you fail to find tarpon your time will not be wasted. On the flats, beautifully spotted whip-rays will attract your big, vicious sharks tempt your steel, and huge saw-fish tender you their four-foot weapons as trophies. The rivers will be found alive with fish of many kinds, the flora and fauna of the banks will lend interest; while in the big pass, if you fail to get the tarpon you seek, there is always the chance that he will capsize you and give you a story to tell at home—when you get there.

There are old dyed-in-the-wool rodsters whose feelings will be outraged by what I have written. I know the breed. They cherish notions about dainty tackle and would soon have people who go fishing carrying visiting cards to be left in case Mr. and Mrs. Tarpon should not be at home, and all that sort of drivel, if allowed to. They talk about using a 9-ounce rod and an 18-thread line for even the largest of tarpon, which to an outsider sounds extremely sportsmanlike. But I happen to know that this sort of 9-ounce rod often weighs a couple of pounds. The 9-ounce part of it is only the tip. And with a good, tough tip backed up by a heavy enough butt, a man could land a small whale. I take no issue with these men, nor with anyone. I go tarpon fishing for the fun of it, not to see how near I can come to ruining a hundred dollar outfit without doing so. So I fish in any one of the three methods I have described, according to conditions and the dictates of my fancy. I will say, however, that for rod work I prefer fly-fishing for tarpon of the size of salmon. When I want excitement I prefer to get fast to a good big Silver King and let him tow my canoe by the hand-line, the shorter the line the better. If you ever try it you will know why.

Would you reach the ultima thyle of tarpon fishing and touch the very heart of the game? Then forget all that has been written here. Take your best girl out in a little canoe and don't bother with rod or reel, but provide a trolling outfit, which is less tiresome to a fisherwoman and leaves one hand free. The lady should troll the lure—for the tarpon—about fifty feet behind the canoe, while you paddle silently through channels, up bayous, around and between islands and along shores lined with mangrove trees, from whose branches hang great bunches of oysters begging to be eaten. Your course should lead through beautiful winding rivers, with banks covered with pine, cypress, liveoak, palmetto and red cedar; adorned with myrtle, mistletoe and thousands of air-plants, and fragrant with magnolia and jessamine. From the trees hang festoons of gray Spanish moss and great cables of swinging vines. Less frequently you may find wild orange, lime, mastic and tamarind trees, while an occasional royal palm lifts its magnificent head far above the forest which surrounds it. Rarest of all, a palmetto may be seen thrusting its slim, straight body upward through the hollow trunk of a wild fig tree, with its crested head twenty feet above the widespreading branches of the latter. As each bend in the river is passed, ducks rise from the water and snipe from the banks. Herons, great and small, flap their lazy wings. Night herons fly, squawking, pink curlews flutter from the trees, snake birds drop from the branches into the water and clumsy pelicans wing their way, with intermittent stroke, to other waters. The sullen plunge of the alligator, disturbed in his siesta, is followed by the cautious lifting above the surface of the water of a pair of unwinking eyes which gravely gaze at you. Occasionally a quick step is heard, a startled deer stands in bold relief upon the bank for the instant preceding the toss of his white tail, which is your last view of him.

Just as you have forgotten that you are fishing, there will come a tug at the trailing line, a cry from the girl who holds it and, if it is your first tarpon, the most glorious sight you ever beheld—the wild leap of the radiant Silver King. Thereafter don't bother about rules, just sit tight and enjoy yourself. Probably the girl will attend to playing the fish. Intuition will, no doubt, tell her when to give him his head, and when to bring him up with a round turn. She may know nothing of Izaak Walton, but it's a hundred to one that she's up in the methods of Simon Peter. If the first run of the tarpon threatens to carry away the whole line, you may have to brace up and paddle mightily toward the flying fish. When the early rushes are over and the tarpon settles down to business, the drag on the line as it tows the canoe is about equal to the pull against the bit of the average trotter. If the girl is game this will suit her immensely; at any rate she will be glad to "drive" for a while.

You can now ride quietly for miles behind the gorgeous creature that at irregular intervals leaps high in the air, or if you are greedy for excitement and the girl can swim, the canoe may be pulled close up to the tarpon and the excitement will come. When the leaping is finished and the tired fish rolls over on his back, the canoe may be pulled beside him and after his length has been measured, the hook should be taken from his jaw. If you desire a souvenir scale from your adversary, that is the time to take it. If you wish to record his weight, cube his length, in feet, divide by two, and you have his weight in pounds. After a few minutes' rest the tarpon will swim slowly away, sometimes jumping once in the air by way of a P. P. C.—A. W. D. in Recreation.

Shooting.

THE CARE OF YOUR GUNS.

SOMEHOW or other quite a number of shooters make a tremendous rush to get all the value they can out of the closing season, blaze away up to the last day and last hour, and then suddenly, as it were, drop it all and consign their gun to the corner. This is a noticeable feature in many a shooter I am acquainted with; it is, in my opinion, a sort of temporary falling off, because it is certainly not permanent, and I take it that what is not permanent is temporary. During the earlier part of the same season—indeed, throughout its whole course with the exception of the closing few days—the gun is carefully cleaned and oiled and put away or made ready for the following day. In the higher ranks of shooters all this is done by the keepers or loader, or others brought in at the close of the day for the purpose; but I am not dealing with those in such social position. Lord This, That, or The Other seldom touches his gun except to fire it, hand it when discharged to the loader, take another one, fire it, and hand it back too. His Lordship drives off the ground at the end of the day's sport, and his guns are taken away by his keeper or attendant and cleaned. At the end of every season they are sent off to the gunmaker who made them, and are thoroughly overhauled, cleaned, and dressed up as new; they then very often are stored away by the gunmaker till required for the following season. Guns treated in this way cannot go wrong or get out of gear, and it is a decidedly good plan to send one's gun to the maker once a year as a means of being assured it is all right. Few men, however, do this except the big-wigs, and then it is done for them by their keepers or valets. Lower down in the social scale men clean their own guns, or make an attempt at it, but it is astonishing how wearisome the process becomes to anyone whose heart is not in the job, or who is getting tired and off colour towards the end of the season. That men do get tired and off colour towards the end of the season we all know, and that they then get careless and indifferent in the care of their guns is also well known. So it comes about, then, that when the close time dawns and the last day is finished up, they lay their guns in some corner or other, intending to give them a through going-over the next day. Well, the next day too often passes, and two or three additional ones also, and still the guns are uncleaned, with the result that very often they are permanently injured by the inside of the barrels being "pitted" by the corrosive action of the powder.

One cleaning is never sufficient in these days of nitro powder if the gun is intended then to be put away for any length of time. The merest speck of anything even impure oil adhering to the highly-polished interior of a gun barrel will, if left there long enough, "pit" it, or cause a speck or stain to be seen on the spot affected. This spot or speck will in time corrode and eat into the metal just as a spot of rust will and when this process takes place from any cause throughout the interior of one's gun barrels we have them set up the unsightly and dangerous condition known as "honeycombing." A honeycombed barrel is a disgrace to its owner, spoils the appearance of the gun and also its sale, and, according to its degree, is a source of danger to the user.

It is commonly thought that honeycombing is brought about by allowing the barrels to get rusty. Rust has a good deal to do with the matter, I admit, as every wildfowler knows to his cost; but I take the liberty of saying there are as many pitted barrels to be found inland as shorewards, and actual rust cannot be held responsible for this condition in barrels that possibly were never on the sea or seashore at any time of their existence. What happens here is that the users do not exercise sufficient care in the cleaning of their guns, little specks get into the barrels and spread, with the inevitable result that actual honeycombing soon results. The user then gets still more careless and indifferent, he opens his gun, looks through the barrel, sees the honeycomb and pit marks, says he cannot help it, and leaves it at that. How rapidly a honeycombed barrel will go from bad to worse until it touches the danger zone is common knowledge among gunmakers, and ought to be (although it is not always so) among shooters.

I have never experienced any difficulty in keeping my gun barrels as bright and spotless as quicksilver, so far as their interiors are concerned. I have at the present moment a Westley-Richards twenty-five years in use, a Greener sixteen years in use, and a Weeks nearly thirteen years in use. Wildfowling, shore-shooting, inland shooting, clay bird shooting, and live pigeon shooting, they have all three had their share of rough work, smooth work, and all other kinds of work at home and abroad that guns can be put to; but every night, no matter how wet or weary I was, I invariably thoroughly cleaned my gun, and never failed to give it an additional polish over the next morning. In my humble judgment it was the next morning's rub that did the trick, and many of my old wildfowling friends say that one cleaning, no matter how carefully carried out, will never leave a gun fit to be put away.

I now propose to mention a few matters in connection with the cleaning of one's barrels, and I will undertake to say that barrels so cleaned and cared for will never rust, corrode or honeycomb but will remain bright to the end of their existence.

After anything like quick firing, some guns are very liable to "lead." That means that the shot in their passage up the barrels leave streaks of lead adhering to the inner surfaces of the tubes, and this process is known as "leading." Now, lead itself is of no great harm, but if left in long enough rust may form under it. Take out the lead, then, as soon as you notice it, and for doing so, Mr. W. W. Greener's advice is still the best on the market. A brass-wire brush (not a steel or iron one) should be passed up and down the barrels until the lead is cleaned away. The brass-wire brush should be kept steeped in spirits of turpentine and used as directed. A steel or iron wire brush will scratch your barrels badly a brass one cannot harm them, but even a brass brush should never be used dry; paraffin oil, vaseline, Rangoon oil, or spirits of turpentine should be used as a lubricant, and of these turpentine is by far the best. Thus Mr. Greener:

It cannot be denied that, with all their advantages, the present-day nitro powders corrode your barrels more than the old-time black powder did. Of course, this is due to acid reaction and decomposition acting on the metal on the barrels, for few metals will stand the action of any acid. This makes no difference, though, if the gun is properly cleaned as soon as the day's shooting is over. Barrels cleaned out regularly after each day's shooting can come by no harm from acid reaction as the reacton is not long enough at work. On the other hand, leave the gun lying in a corner for two or three days, and in all probability the mischief is done.

When I start to clean a gun, my mode of procedure is as follows:—I never use tow, but put a small square piece of flannel on the cleaning rod, and wipe out all dirt and dross from the interior of the barrels. I next take a fresh piece of flannel and repeat the process. I can then see if there are any specks, spots, or lead noticeable, and if so I at once use the brass-wire brush as stated above. I then polish with flannel again, and by this time the barrels when looked through are like a mirror. Then I oil them with Rangoon oil, or grease well with vaseline. The next morning I again pass a piece of oiled flannel through them, and they are then fit to be put away for weeks, if necessary. As for the exterior, of course, the outside must be seen to also, but this is easily done, and a little Rangoon oil will keep all in order. The stock and fore-end may be similarly treated, and as for the locks they may well be left alone on any decently-made gun. On a cheap and nasty one they are as likely to go wrong as the barrels, because they are not fitted properly to the stock or action.

After years of wildfowling along the seashore, and, indeed, of shooting of all sorts at home and abroad, the following formula remains the very best gun-cleaning fluid I have ever come across. It is used now by scores of my old shooting chums, particularly among Irish wildfowlers, and is made up easily by any chemist as follows:—Pure paraffin oil, 4 parts; spirits of turpentine, 3 parts; Rangoon oil, 1 part; camphor, ½oz. These proportions are for a pint of the fluid and I can confidently recommend it to all those who want a reliable cleansing and lubricating compound for their guns. No rust can affect barrels inside or out, treated with it, for the oil prevents it, the turpentine antagonises and decomposes the lead, and the camphor acts as an evaporator of moisture, etc. Finally, the fluid itself is harmless, and a gun saturated lock stock, and barrels with it can be left lying in a corner as long as you like and will even then wipe out as clean as a new pin. Perhaps it was this attribute that prompted a facetious sporting acquaintance of mine to call it the "lazy gunner's oil." Anyway there it is: those who like to try it can do so and I feel sure that once tried the triers will try no other. If it helps any of my wildfowling friends to keep their sea-going guns clean, I shall feel well rewarded.—D'A. I. H., in Shooting Times.

NOTES ON REPEATING SHOT GUNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Besides the automatic 12-bore shot gun, there are several very efficient repeaters on the market. The fore-end action has proved itself to be the quickest and most convenient movement for the magazine shot gun. The first Winchester gun on these lines, viz., the 1893 model, proved an immediate success; and certain alterations in the present pattern (model 1897), have further increased the efficiency of the weapon.

Two important alterations are, the increase in length of stock, by three-quarters of an inch; and the leaving of the upper portion of the frame solid, which, besides adding to strength, enables one to use 2¾ inch cases. Into these long shells one can easily get 3¼ drams of powder and 1¼oz. shot, and an important consideration when the gun is to be used for duck shooting. Full choke Winchester shot guns give close enough patterns to please anyone; well loaded cartridges will put about 70 to 75 per cent. of their pellets within the 30 inch circle at 40 yards. Though repeating shot guns are but little used by Englishmen, they are really very reliable weapons, and much superior to a double gun, AT THE SAME PRICE. Although they feel a bit strange just at first, a very little use will prove that they are nearly as handy for quick shooting as the ordinary double. A friend of mine tried one of these repeaters at driven grouse, and discovered he could shoot just as well with this £5 machine-made gun, as with his sixty guinea hammerless ejector, which had been built specially to measure!

The Winchester Company also sell short barrelled 12 bores, and 16 bores, made on exactly the same lines.

Their only lever action shot gun now is a 10 bore; this latter weapon I cannot altogether praise.

It weighs 8¾lb. and is essentially a duck and wildfowl gun. Yet the heaviest shot charges which the Winchester Company load into their 10-bore shells is 1¼ ounces! Such a load is absolutely absurd for a 10-bore. English guns of this calibre shoot 1¾ ounces easily and comfortably. Certainly in my opinion the very lowest charge for a 10-bore should be 1½oz., otherwise there is no earthly use going beyond a 12.

How the Winchester 10-bore would perform if one used cartridges in it containing a decent charge I don't know; but the action and barrel both look strong enough for anything; and were I using one of these guns for duck, I should at any rate never use less than 1½oz.

The Marlin Company also turn out cheap and efficient fore-end action, take-down, shot guns. The Stevens Company on the other hand manufacture by machinery double hammer, and hammerless shot guns: the prices being very much about the same as for repeaters. On the whole, however, I consider the machine made repeater superior to the machine made double, especially as regards weight and handiness. The sportsman can add a take-down repeating shot gun to his battery for £5 or thereabouts, and he will find many occasions when the magazine gun will prove most useful. If his own pet double is cylinder, or only partly choked, it will often be at a discount for high duck, or other close plumaged large birds. Then it is that the full choked repeater with long cartridges, and heavy charges, comes in so useful.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).
