AERIAL NAVIGATION.

THE experience gained with the military airship Nulli Secundus in her trip from Aldershot to London, and perhaps most of all during her enforced sojourn on the cycle track at the Crystal Palace for the best part of a week seems to determine pretty clearly the limitations of aerial navigation at least in so far as balloon supported vessels are concerned. The vessel whose appearance over London created such a sensation on Saturday, 5th October, left Farnborough at 10-40 and well within two hours' time was over Charing Cross or thereabouts: she started in perfectly still weather and she travelled under her own machinery, sometimes at a rate of 20 miles an hour as the westerly breeze rose and freshened. So long as she was running before the wind she was quite under control, and though there was a tolerably fresh wind blowing her enterprising navigators were able to carry out their programme, circle St. Paul's at a respectful distance and drive her eastwards for a few miles. But the wind continued

d when over Clapham Com-

nnington Oval" Colonel he began to slow down
ntinued towards Clapham
Common the wind increased steadily and over the common it was so great that we came almost to a stop. We were over the Common for half an hour, sailing about and sometimes actually stopping." Eventually it was determined, in order to avoid the inevitable crowd the spectacle must have brought together, to run for the Crystal Palace and there descend: and this was done the airship behaving well before a wind which in nautical language would be described as "on her quarter." It was made clear to tens of thousands of spectators that in a light wind the vessel was under perfect control: her movements were watched—by "Onlooker" among others—and her graceful obedience to the helm was generally remarked. But when confronted with a wind of about 15 or 16 miles an hour, which was the strength estimated at the time she was stopped over Clapham Common she was beaten. It could hardly be otherwise: given a sausage shaped balloon 280 feet long, about 45 feet in diameter and containing 75,000 cubic feet of gas, and it is manifest that the power of engines to drive her against the wind must be limited. The Nulli Secundus carries on the long car suspended below her length, a motor capable of developing 60 horse power, but the question of travelling against wind is not one of horse power: it is a matter that depends upon the rigidity of the body the horse power is asked to propel. Were it possible to construct a balloon of aluminium or other material and make it as rigid, let us say, as a submarine vessel, it might be possible to equip it with driving power capable of driving the balloon against a high wind. We make, of course, the obviously impossible assumption that the metal balloon has the same degree of buoyancy in order to simplify our illustration. Given the buoyancy we have no doubt that it would be possible to drive such a balloon against a high wind: the material would render it feasible to give it a sharp point—the "bow" of the Nulli Secundus is as blunt as the end of a sausage—and what is infinitely more important the structure would not collapse under wind-pressure. That is the whole crux of the difficulty with a balloon of whatever shape made of silk or gold beater's skin, and distended with the aid of light struts as we understand is the case in Colonel Capper's airship. If such a body, large light fragile be driven against the wind, collapse is manifestly a mere question of degree of pressure. Colonel Capper and his courageous colleagues, therefore, yielded to a superior force beyond human skill, as exemplified in their vessel, to resist. Mr. Cody, we observe, spoke of the possibilities of a more powerful motor: he expressed his confidence in the feasibility of building an airship capable of facing a forty-mile wind. It is not for outsiders to question the grounds of his conviction: but we must confess that the collapsibility of the gas bag under wind pressure is a point which needs explaining away before we feel able to accept his view. Making all allowance for the natural flush of pride born of so remarkable and hazardous an achievement as that of 5th October, we cannot see how the difficulty is to be overcome of combining the buoyancy with that measure of rigidity which to our uninstructed minds appears indispensable. The trip proved all that her navigators sought to prove: they found themselves in possession of a "very decent slow speed vessel" which in still air can travel at fifteen or sixteen miles an hour, and could have remained in the air for another six hours were any advantage to be gained by prolonging the voyage. Whether a high degree of speed in airships for military purposes is particularly desirable must be left to soldiers to determine: we are not yet informed what part it is hoped they will play in warlike operations and until we know that the desirability of high speed seems to be an open question. If they are to be used for surveying the enemy's position it may be suggested that high speed is desirable, inasmuch as to perform this function effectively it must be done in daylight and at a comparatively low attitude. Modern artillerists will assuredly soon devise methods for getting the range of a travelling airship and solve the apparently difficult problem of bringing her down with a well directed shell. If the airship is to be used as a weapon of offence, to drop explosives within the foe's borders, then speed would seem to be of less importance: inasmuch as a shell can be dropped from any altitude, at night, when the vessel could defy all the guns of all the nations, but we conceive that her utility for this object would be limited by her lifting power, to say nothing of the meteorological considerations to be taken into account. Perhaps we may leave the Hague Peace Conference and its debates out of count for the present, that assemblage having so far displayed no great anxiety to deal with existing problems.

Science seems to have gone as far as she is likely to go in airships for the present: whether the aeroplane, in contradistinction to the airship is likely to accomplish more than it has done heretofore remains to be seen. It is a matter of common knowledge that experiments with these flying machines have been made during the autumn in the seclusion of the Marquess of Tullebardine's estates in Perthshire: but Mr. Dunn's work has been carried on with great privacy and nothing of the results achieved has been made known to the outside world.

"What does that mean: 'a six-horse-power motor-car'?" "Why one that requires six horses to drag it home, when something goes wrong with the works!"

The danger of sending telegrams is shown in the following story. A member of Parliament was to have made a speech at Derby, and being unable to do so because the heavy rains had destroyed the branch railway, sent a telegram as follows: "Cannot come. Wash out on line." In a few hours the reply came: "Never mind. Borrow a shirt."

On a recent railway journey Mrs.——, the wife of an M. P., discovered that her umbrella, which had been entrusted to the care of her husband, was missing. "Where's my umbrella?" she demanded. "I'm afraid I've forgotten it, my dear," meekly answered the M. P.; "it must still be in the train." "In the train!" snorted the lady; "and to think that the affairs of the nation are entrusted to a man who doesn't know enough to take care of a woman's umbrella!"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The fifth of the Tollygunge Club Gymkhanas provided some excellent racing and the handicapper may be congratulated on several very close finishes. The fields shrank very perceptibly from the entry list but this was probably the inevitable result of the great divergence in the class of horses and ponies attracted to these little meetings.

The card opened with a pony steeplechase, the first held for some years over this course. The four acceptors went round in close company and without mishap of any kind, and it is perhaps about time that the course was stiffened a trifle so as to exclude the flat racer from interfering with the hunter who has so far disported himself contentedly in these events. The race was thought to be a very good thing for Blazes and Mr. Buckland's game little chestnut eventually scored, but his backers had a very bad time when Mr. Evers set his half trained dun pony going in earnest. Some thought that the latter made his effort too soon, and no doubt the right thing to do is to win, but there is probably no other local amateur now riding in Calcutta, who would have done better or possibly half so well.

Mr. Rees had a stormy ride on Wake Up in the Horse chase, which was second on the card and in spite of his 12st. 4lb. penalty be preferred to make the running hotter than they have experienced it for years over that course. It is not difficult to forget that these races, though steeplechases in name and form, are barely a mile and a half over all, and there is no time at all to lie out of your ground if the man in front really means business. Lily ran a game mare in this race, but they were all too far behind to hope even to get within hailing distance of the winner, who probably had a soft thing on the handicap whatever way the race was ridden.

The pony race was spoilt by the non-arrival of Mr. J. Rowan's pair, who both figured on the number board to the distress of the layers of odds, who had to cancel bets shortly before the start. The result was that only three starters lined up and the race developed into a match between Lady Mana and Music at a difference of two stone four pounds. The topweight had the advantage of a very experienced and capable amateur in Mr. Fleming, the owner of Betrayer. He gave us a very pretty exhibition of quiet and determined finishing, which the average G.R. may envy but never attain. He was unlucky to lose the race by a head.

Four only started for the open horse race and again the problem was not so easy as it looked. Nothing can stop Mr. Das winning races just now and Miss Trenton rolled home a trifle distressed but none the less a very creditable winner.

In the Tyro Cup Mr. Pugh signalled his return by an easy victory on the big chestnut who has laboured so disconsolately through the swamps of the Monsoon course. After Sheila was damaged at the bend there was nothing left to chase him and he ploughed his way home in front of the unfortunate Lily whose day out is long in coming.

Picture won very easily, the other heavy weights being out of the hunt at a very early stage in the proceedings. Golden Star ran an improved pony but Lady Wilful was rather disappointing. This closed the card and a pleasant day's racing. The course was in excellent order and there is no doubt that the Executive of the Club take these meetings seriously and provide excellent accommodation for owners, who are attracted in ever increasing numbers.

The seventh and last meet of the year is advertised for the 16th instant, when fields and attendance should both increase. There will be a steeplechase as usual for horses, two open races, the Light Horse chargers' event postponed from the 2nd instant, a race for paperchase horses and a mile flat race for ponies that have never won at the Cub meetings. This programme should draw well enough.

The first entries for the Calcutta Races and Tollygunge Steeplechases closed on Monday night. We are not yet in receipt of full details, but doubtless we shall be enabled, through the courtesy of the C.T.C., to give our readers a complete list in our next issue. We are, however, able to publish particulars of the horses so far in for the Trials, Viceroy's Cup and Indian Grand National; they will be found below.

For the Trials there were last year a score; this year there are sixteen. Among these Sacristan II., Amplify, Saloon, Fitzgrafton and Stoinhager figured among the first comers last year. The first entries for the Viceroy's Cup are very promising; Mr. Apcar's famous trio will probably have to meet keener competition this winter than they met with last year. Boabdil, if he can be got ready and Realm will both have many supporters. Amplify is in again in company with Saloon while Mr. Galstaun's pair, though lesser in reputation than the other new comers, may train on past them before Christmas. The winner of the Trials will probably be much harder to spot than that of the big race; Golden Gleam is a rare flyer among the new ones. It is particularly satisfactory to see such splendid entries for Tollygunge and perhaps it is not altogether too late to join in the shout for an Extra Meeting on the jump course. The entries are distinctly good all round; with sixteen down for the Grand National, thirty-seven for the Suburban Cup, thirty for the Trial Chase, and the other events proportionally well filled it would appear that there is some prospect of the "illegitimate game" looking up this season, but we shall see, it is early days for indulging in a forecast. Of those in for the big event five appeared last year—Greenstone, Lamrock, Kipling, Loch Lochie and Aberfoyle. But here are the details:—

COLONEL KINCAID SMITH, the well-known owner of race horses, has just died in England.

MESSRS. P. ORR AND SONS of Madras, Calcutta and Rangoon, have secured the sole agency in India and Burmah for Gents' Silent Electric Impulse Clocks on the B. P. System and they have favoured us with a copy of their Catalogue which is fully illustrated and descriptive.

The system solves the difficulty of giving uniform and accurate time to any number of clocks situated throughout large buildings and it should prove a great boon to railways, clubs, hotels, Government offices, hospitals, mills and all public buildings. The apparatus necessary for a complete installation consists of the Transmitter or Control Clock, which is an accurate time measuring mechanism, the function of which is to send the current generated by a battery to any number of dials, moving their hands simultaneously forward every half minute. These dials are designed for all situations and requirements and their mechanism comprises of a simple one wheel or step-by-step movement. Any number and any type can be impelled by the one Transmitter. The battery consists of ordinary Leclanche Cells which will last for months without any attention being necessary. A Warning Bell rings every half minute when the battery requires recharging. The wiring consists of copper wire insulated exactly as used for Electric Bell installations, a single line only being used for connecting the Transmitter, Dials, Battery and Alarum Bell in a simple circuit.

Messrs. P. Orr and Sons guarantee that the Standard Transmitters will keep time within two seconds a week—this means that the total accumulative error throughout the whole year cannot make the system more than two minutes fast or slow at any time, which is as will be admitted far in advance of that needed to meet the most stringent commercial requirements. No weekly winding or continual attention is required such as adjusting the hands, regulating the pendulums, repairing and cleaning. Full particulars and estimates and catalogue are given free on application to the firm.

A SIND correspondent writes:—I am glad to hear there are some prospects of starting a pack of hounds in Calcutta, and I hope they will be successful and show good sport. The experiment has been tried I know in days long past and it has alway. been a puzzle to me why Calcutta hasn't had a subscription pack of late years; what's to hinder it; why can you bold bad Ditchers rise to nothing better than paper-chasing!

Take heart of grace by the example set you by Karachi. In recent times—almost within the memory of the youngest inhabitant be it remarked—the effort to start a pack in Karachi failed, but at the third time of asking the hour and the man arrived. The man was Mr. W. L. Graham, fairly well known to many of you on the Calcutta side and his pluck and patience have been most deservedly rewarded by the really splendid sport he has shown during the three years he has been M. F. H. It is his fourth season now and I'm sure all good sportsmen wish him and his followers continued good luck. He summers his hounds in Quetta and, I believe, his experience is that acclimatised hounds show better pace and endurance than newly landed ones, which isn't surprising to my mind. The pack now consists of fourteen couple and when Mr. Graham goes home in the spring, I believe, it is to be handed over to the Committee. Perhaps while he is in England he might feel disposed to help any Indian sportsmen in the selection of a pack.

THE new race stand and stables at Karachi which have replaced the miserable shanty which did duty for that purpose, are things of beauty and we hope joys for ever—they should last long enough, being constructed of stone and cement. There is no doubt the class of pony-racing in this part of the world is improving immensely. The Sind Club Ball, the ditto by the Commissioner in Sind, and the Horse Show were the chief items on the card for the Karachi race week just concluded and a report of which will appear in due course.

THE Quetta hunting season started on Saturday, the 26th ultimo, Captain R. H. Palin, of the P. W. O. Baluchis, is Master.

"WHAT is the gratification that comes from winning races?"

"An exaltation of spirit that is stimulating and healthy. A man who has looked upon his horses from the time that they were foaled until they walk into the paddock after a hard race, victorious over everything which could be run against them, glows with enjoyment. How can one help it? Here is a handsome, clean-coated, sure-footed animal which you have seen perhaps from the earliest days when he shambled awkwardly after his dam, who has developed every quality that it was hoped would be produced when he was bred. It may be that the colt which was selected as a yearling to be the star of the stable will happen to be the disappointment. Some uncertain gaited youngster that did not appear at first sight to be as well advanced as another that has been foaled in the same year suddenly manifests qualities which indicate grand possibilities. It is as interesting to develop him for speed contests as it is to develop the handsomest youngster that may be bounding around the fields. If he wins in some contest which is to become a part of turf history, your blood tingles and you are proud of your results."

There are stables which are operated solely to succeed in the betting ring if it is possible to do so. Their owners breed horses, or more frequently purchase horses, with the idea of gathering a collection that shall be invincible in certain contests in which they desire to wager their money against the bookmakers. The matter of stake racing and racing for purses is seldom given consideration. They plan from week to week to bring off some successful coup by which they may beat the bookmakers, and very frequently they are not over-scrupulous as to how they do it.

A RECENT enquiry regarding a good vermifuge for the Kennel, and in view of the fact that the second Championship Show of the Calcutta Kennel Club, is within measurable distance suggest a few remarks on the removal of one—probably the most fertile—source of canine disease. The experience of all who have bred dogs will, we think, confirm our opinion that hardly a puppy after weaning escapes the infliction. Endless trouble may be directly traced to this cause alone, fatalities are by no means so commonly ascribed to it as they should be, and yet we see daily on the Calcutta maidan and elsewhere dozens of unfortunate worm-infected dogs whose owners are obviously ignorant of the fact! It may be safely concluded that a newly weaned pup has worms and steps for their expulsion should be taken as a matter of course and without delay. In an adult dog the symptoms are usually so well defined it has often surprised us they have escaped notice, especially where the sufferer has been the constant companion of its owner. The coat is harsh and staring, lacks gloss and is generally unhealthy in appearance, the stomach has a tucked up look, the appetite is depraved, ravenous or poor, the nose is hot and dry most of the time, the breath is usually offensive, and so on. When these conditions are established a vermifuge is strongly indicated. There are breeders, ourselves among them, who are so alive to the importance of keeping dogs free of these pests that they treat their dogs for worms twice a year "whether they require it or no" as the Scotchman said of his annual bath.

There are some good worm powders, such as powdered arecanut, santonine, or kamala: but the first named is seldom ground fine enough and the latter are not invariably effectual, in our experience, on every sort of worm—for there are many which find the dog a good host. We pin our faith on Naldire's Powders, we have never known them to fail and what they have often accomplished has been little short of marvellous. They are safe, quick-acting and completely, effectual: they must be administered after fasting—twelve hours for pups under eight months, twenty-four for dogs above that age—they can be given as a drench or made up as pills. They are one of the four sheet anchors of the dog-breeder; the other three are, sulphur, cocoanut oil and Benbow's Mixture. While we think of it we would also recommend the excellent soap prepared by this firm. We are not advocates for the regular washing of dogs, there is far too much of this done and quite often to the detriment of the animal. But there are times when soap must replace the usual brushing and grooming, as when, for instance, fleas become too numerous; then Naldire's soap—by all means—plenty of it and lukewarm water. The fleas will be killed and the coat all the better for the extra cleansing.

A dog owned for many years by a gentleman in Coatbridge (N. B.) was in the habit every morning about seven o'clock of making a great noise to get out, until someone opened the door for it, it would then disappear until well on in the afternoon. This went on for some months, until the owner's curiosity was so much aroused to know where it spent the day, that he determined to follow it. Next day it left the house as usual, the owner following at some distance. It went straight to the railway station, and when the door of the guard's van was opened on the arrival of the morning train for Aberdeen, the dog jumped in. The owner of the dog then went up to the guard, and asked if he had seen this dog before. The guard informed him that he knew the dog well, as it joined him at Coatbridge Station every morning, and travelled with him to Aberdeen. It then returned with him later in the day, when it went quietly home. The dog was allowed and continued to do this for several years up till the time of its death.

An English fancier has evolved a new method of judging dog shows that seems to have considerable merit. The new plan is to bring all the dogs of the same sex of a breed into the ring at the same time, no matter what class they are entered in, and judge them all together, marking them consecutively from one to ten, fifteen or twenty as the number entered may be, the judge of course not to know what classes they are entered in. From this list, where each dog is given his number or rating of merit, each dog's position in the several classes he is entered in is marked.

Like with all other innovations there are a good many who claim to see serious objections to the new method. These, however, are the professional breeders and exhibitors who have been getting the long end of the rope by the present scheme of judging. Of the objections they have put forth, there is but one that has any merit, and that is unimportant. It is the claim that if the whole breed of one sex is judged together, an exhibitor who has more than one entry will have to trust the showing of all but one dog to the attendants.

There is but little in this, for unless the same exhibitor owned all the good ones the judge would weed them out from one end of the string or the other, and as soon as one dog was disposed of he could take charge of another.

But to far overbalance this objection is the fact that judges will have less opportunity to know who owns each dog, and not knowing the classes they are entered in they will be more likely to judge the dogs purely on their merits than to award the prizes to the other end of the chain, as is, alas, too often done under the present system. It will also prevent the judge from picking out a few favourites and sending the balance out in a lump of V. H. C's. It will also save time in judging and handling, thus giving the judge plenty of time to thoroughly examine each entry, and relieve him of the too prevalent practice of carrying certain dogs right through all the classes for fear of reversing himself.

Taken altogether the scheme is certainly a good one and a big step in advance of the present method. This of course is not as perfect as the score-card system, but there is little hope of the score-card being adopted, for the reason that judging by the score-card necessitates a better knowledge of the several breeds than our professional judges have, and under it judges could not jump into the ring after attending a show or two, look wise and do their guessing at random. Nor would any one judge, except after years of the most careful and intelligent study, be able to handle all breeds. Therefore, if score-card judging ever becomes popular, it will come into use by applying it to one breed at a time and employing only careful students of the breed to do the scoring.

In one of the recent obituary notices it was wrongly stated that the late Lord Brampton never found pleasure in hunting, and to support the statement the dealer who once sold him a hack on which he had been advised to take exercise was quoted. The animal had been disparaged, whereupon the man is reported to have declared: "The 'orse is all right, but 'Orkins will never make a 'orseman." As a matter of fact, in his early days the late judge was quite a respectable "bruiser" over a country and a keen and regular follower of Mr. Delme Radcliffe's hounds in Hertfordshire, whilst at a later period, whenever he could steal a few hours during the hunting season, he would slip down to Leicestershire, and, with his friend, General Burnaby, of Baggrave Hall, "have a peep at the Quorn." Of course, the late Lord Brampton was by no means the only English judge to take a delight in sport. Many have figured prominently in racing, hunting, shooting, angling, rowing, and cricket; and they have among them yet at home Lord Alverstone and Sir William Grantham, both keen sportsmen. Long before the former could aspire to a mount, he used assiduously to follow on foot Squire Thatcher's pack of harriers in the Isle of Wight.

The strength of a dog's jaws and teeth was never better exemplified than in the case of a Ross-shire gamekeeper, whose dog was unfortunate enough to be caught in a steel vermin trap. The gamekeeper, gun in hand, was soon on the scene, but in the short time the dog had become quite infuriated by the pain. Having nothing suitable to muzzle the animal, and fearing to place his foot upon the trap spring with the dog's jaws free, the gamekeeper placed the gun-barrels in the dog's mouth and held them there while easing the spring. With a vicious snap the teeth closed on the cold steel ere he regained his freedom. The barrels, which are of steel, were holed through—an almost incredible performance. The dog was an ordinary black-and-tan collie.

Since February last the well-known firm of Swaine and Adeney, Whip Manufacturers of 185, Piccadilly London, have been the sole proprietors of Kohlers Coaching, Shooting and Hunting Horns; these horns are well known as the best of their kind throughout the world, and now that the best known firm of whip manufacturers are also manufacturers of these horns we have no doubt that they will become still more widely and extensively known and used.

While our King is grouse-shooting and deer-stalking with the approval of all his Majesty's subjects, the American people are divided on the question of the propriety of President Roosevelt's bear-hunt. Mild criticism is the attitude adopted towards the American President's fondness for big-game hunting; but there are sportsmen in America, who applaud the manliness shown in high places in the United States, and think all the more of the man who heartily shares their own desires for hunting, shooting, and fishing away from the confinement of cities and the distractions of business and politics. There is abundance of sport for all on the American Continent, and now that game is being protected, there is not the slightest fear of its extinction.

Where game, large or small, is protected in America it is steadily on the increase at the present moment, and there is, therefore, no ground for the apprehensions of those objectors who would bar all game-shooting as unnecessary destruction of animal life. There is danger, in fact, that, with all other sports and recreations of interest to our American cousins, they might in time come to neglect the use of rifle and gun in the field of sport. The example shown by President Roosevelt, therefore, in taking his share in such big-game shooting as may be available is much to be commended, even by Americans themselves, while on this side, of course, there can be no question of the light in which partiality for such manly sport is regarded. The American papers that carp at the President's spending a holiday hunting in the wilds would object to anything he did, while occupying the position he does in the State, even if it was to try his hand at Diabolo!

Mention is made in a notice of the fishes in the streams of the Algonguni Park, Ontario, Canada, of speckled trout which, from the description, appear to be identical with the little blue spotted variety found in the pools of our eastern mountain torrents during the cold weather. These fish run about three or four pounds in weight, rising greedily to the black gnat or other dark coloured fly; the general brightness of the streams makes them shy of all glittering baits; these little fellows would look pretty in an aquarium and might be brought down in jars or globes by such fishermen who contemplate trying our eastern grounds which will bear comparison with the best in the country. There have been many attempts at the importation of trout from waters of the temperate zones; too little attention being accorded in India to the possibilities of transferring the indigenous fish from one district to another and it is time this matter should be taken up. The tanks, at any rate in private compounds or public squares, down in Lower Bengal can be thoroughly protected and, if deemed advisable, supplied with running water. The attempt at introducing the several varieties from up-country may fail, certainly, but we think it is worth a trial.

The representative of Jamrach, the wild animal man whose remarkable collection in Ratcliffe Highway is probably well known to many of our readers, has been pretty busy in India of late. Another huge shipment of big game—bears, tigers, deer, rhino and various—has just been sent off to London by the City of Edinburgh. It is quite possible that the operations of Messrs. Jamrach Hagenbeck, Chance, and others who make India their hunting ground for the upkeep of European and American menageries have something to say to the alleged paucity of big game in some districts.

Mr. L. Wazir Chand, Private Secretary to H. H. the Kour Saheb of Patiala, has recently brought out a practical handbook on "Hindustani Conversation" and presented us with a copy for which we thank him. The book is divided into the simplest introductory lessons, exercises, grammar and vocabulary and in general arrangement, selection, careful compilation, and utility it is, in our opinion, one of the best efforts of the kind that has ever come before us. It is neatly printed by Messrs. Endlay and Co., of Delhi, and they share with the author the full measure of commendation the publication deserves.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Till the Yachting and Hunting Seasons start in Bombay—which will be shortly—there is nothing whatever doing in the sporting line.

The Poona Aga Khan Hockey Tournament started on Monday, with its seventeen entries, a very satisfactory state of affairs after the success of last year's affair. In the first round all are byes except the Royal Fusiliers and R.G.A., Colaba, match; the former won by 4 goals to nil and will play the 2nd Suffolks. The Connaught Rangers beat the King's Royal Rifles by 3 goals to one and other matches in this round are Parel Gymkhana vs. Signalling Class, Leicesters vs. Poona Gymkhana, Royal Scots vs. R.A., Kirkee, Mounted Infantry vs. Bishop's H.S., 3rd Sappers and Miners vs. 1st Lincolns, and Ammunition Factory vs. Customs.

There are, therefore, four Bombay teams entered and, judging by the practice games we have recently seen on the Cooperage, the Customs stand out They went very near winning this Tournament last year and I would not be surprised to see them quite win this year as they have won every practice game they have played, in convincing style.

One of the most imposing presentation caskets we have ever seen is that just turned out by Messrs. Barton, Son and Co., of Bangalore, a firm whose reputation for the highest excellence in this particular line is proverbial. The fortunate recipient of this magnificent specimen of the silversmith's art is Sir George Sydenham Clarke, the new Governor of Bombay; and in it reposes the address of welcome presented to him by the citizens of Bombay.

The design is an embodiment of the Arms of the City of Bombay, the most prominent feature being two solid silver gilt models of a lion and a leopard which go to support the receptacle containing the address, (these being the supporters of the Arms of the City). The front of the casket is decorated with an embossed view of Bombay taken from the Taj Mahal Hotel, and looking over towards Malabar Hill. On either side of the view, and within a delicate gilt scroll is an oxydized silver ostrich feather, while the two sides show oxydized silver ships under sail, both of which are shown in the escutcheon of the City Arms. The opposite side is similarly decorated, but the view here given is that of the Apollo Bunder showing the shipping in the harbour. The lid of the casket is of burnished silver with an ornamentation of Acanthus leaves, and is surmounted by a model of the crest of Bombay, which is a lion guardant, passant, supporting with his dexter forepaw an escutcheon charged with a sprig of the cotton tree. The base is also of burnished silver, and is supported on four solid scrolled feet. The whole is fitted on to an ebony plinth on which is a silver plate bearing the following inscription:—"Address of welcome to Sir George Sydenham Clarke, G.C.M.G., F.R.S., Governor-Designate of Bombay, by the Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay 18th October 1907."

A correspondent writes.—"If the storage or compression of electricity in a concentrated form has really been accomplished by Edison, the revolution it will effect in the application of the current will be something startling. It is we understand three years since the great electrician professed his ability to solve the problem but, like the industrious bee he works in the dark, ever observing a reticence in regard to his inventions until by exhaustive experiments their efficiency has been proved beyond doubt; so we may accept the announcement of his success with all confidence. Motorists of all grades will then be able to send their accumulators to the nearest charging depots much the same as a few years back people did their gasogenes to the chemists. We shall get rid of the complicated machinery now in vogue, as the motive power will be conveyed to each wheel; the streams of evil smelling vapour at present emitted by the cars will no longer offend pedestrian or horseman, but the manifold advantage of adoption of accumulators are too numerous and self-evident to dwell upon" M'yes.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 18th October 1907.

The mind of the public, there is no mistake about it, is seriously disturbed by the Shrewsbury railway accident. This is the third "curve" smash, attended by heavy loss of life that has occurred within about fifteen months. Indirect responsibility for the Salisbury disaster has been laid at the door of an American millionaire who is said to have bribed the engine driver to "make a record" of that journey to town. Sudden mental failure is the only explanation suggested of the Grantham accident: and so far there has been no explanation at all of the Shrewsbury business. In each case the cause of accident was the same: rushing the train round a sharp curve at high speed in defiance of regulation and usage: and in Tuesday's accident, moreover, the signals were against the wrecked train. Once again, too, the only men who could throw any light on the affair are among the killed and once again we are left to grope in the dark after explanations.

* * * * * *

Mr. Lloyd George took a step which did something to commend him to those who least approve his principles by going at once to the scene of disaster and taking prominent part in the Board of Trade enquiry. He put some very pertinent questions to witnesses concerning the health of the responsible driver and the medical tests applied to all express train engine drivers. In the total absence of evidence or suggestion which would account for the unfortunate man's action in taking at 60 miles an hour a curve so sharp that ten miles is prescribed as the maximum, Mr. Lloyd George sought to establish the possibility of heart failure or some other disabling physical or mental seizure.

The three volumes of Queen Victoria's letters have come as a boon and a blessing: to newspapers whose columns are hard to fill in these days, this store of anecdote of peculiar interest has been a real godsend. The letters have been selected, with the King's sanction, and I imagine in many cases under His Majesty's editorship from the enormous series—five or six hundred volumes of manuscript letters kept by the late Queen. None of a later date than 1861 are included: having regard to the nature of the most interesting documents it is evident that the publication of more recent letters could not have been made consistently with State interests. Never was character, and the development of character, more lucidly brought out than it is in Queen Victoria's own letters. As a girl she was brave, trustful, conscientious and intensely conscious of her responsibilities: and as you read the letters you are impressed by the steady moulding of a really great character. It was the Editor's definite purpose to thus "bring out" the late Queen's personality: and Mr. A. C. Benson, who, I believe, was really the working Editor, has made his selection with rare skill and discretion.

* * * * * *

I dare not begin quoting from the letters, or I should touch on nothing else this week: but I must have this remarkable scrap from a memorandum written by the Prince Consort in February 1852: "On the Queen's accession Lord Melbourne had been very careless in his appointments and great harm had resulted to the Court therefrom. Since her marriage I had insisted upon a closer line being drawn, and though Lord Melbourne had declared that 'that damned morality would undo us all' we had found great advantage in it and were determined to adhere to it." This throws light on the difficulty the late Queen found in creating a Court with decent traditions. She and the Prince Consort asked no more than that the household should consist of people "not on the verge of bankruptcy and of moral character which would bear investigation." When you remember that Lord Melbourne was the Queen's most trusted friend, and deservedly so, of her youthful days, his growl against that "damned morality" sheds curious and suggestive light on the social standards of the 'forties.

* * * * * *

The book comes to an end with the Queen's letter to her "own dearest kindest father"—as she calls King Leopold—announcing the death of the Prince Consort. She refers to "our pure, happy, quiet domestic life which alone enabled me to bear my much disliked position." Much as Queen Victoria disliked her position, she was extraordinarily well fitted for it: her letters on political matters, particularly on the Unemployed Troubles of 1847-8: on Liberal "economies" on "retrenchment," so called, in military and naval expenditure at the wrong time, show her breadth of view and superiority to the considerations which too often actuate the advisers of the Crown.

I hope I may live to see publication of Queen Victoria's correspondence subsequent to 1861: but I imagine it would prove unpleasant reading for Mr. Gladstone's descendants!

equal celerity even as did that childlike foolishness "ping pong." Meantime, the awful pastime holds the music hall stage, the walks in the park, the slum the drawing room, back garden and area: for I have seen it in all these places. Intelligent enquirers are investigating the history and origin of the game. An M.A. says he remembers seeing the appliances at Eastbourne in 1859 and his father hailed it as a dear friend of his childhood. My young brother tells me he saw it played in China ten years ago and its origin was lost in the mists of antiquity.

A friend, well versed in French social history, says it was a favourite game in France before the revolution, and another friend says it is really of German origin. I hope the point will not soon be settled: I would much rather my friends discussed the origin than played the game while I am around.

I ought to have rendered account of Mr. Sutro's new play "The Barrier" (produced on Thursday week at the Comedy) last mail: but I had enough to do to deal with other matters. The play wants originality, spontaneity and, above all, it wants "go." The plot is an old old one and has done duty a score of times in various forms. A Duke's son wants to marry an actress and a rich bounder, formerly a lover of the actress, wants to marry the Duke's daughter. Actress knows rich bounder to be a bad hat and means to stop the match when she sees Lady Alma doesn't love him. Rich bounder threatens revelations and so stop actress's marriage to Duke's son: actress does the revealing herself. Horror of ducal family: relenting of duke: wedding bells. Miss Marie Tempest plays Margaret Verrall the actress, but the part does not suit her well: it is too nigh serious. "The Barrier" drags dreadfully in places and it struck me as dull.

* * * * * *

Mr. H. H. Davies has scored again with his character play "The Mollusc." It is really a brilliant study of character and excellently well worked out: there are only four parts. Mr. Baxter (Mr. Sam Sothern), Mrs. Baxter, the "Mollusc" (Miss Mary Moore), Tom Kemp, Mrs. Baxter's brother, (Sir Charles Wyndham) and Miss Roberts, the governess (Miss Elanie Inescourt). A human mollusc, according to Mr Davies, is one who has accomplished the state of recognised passivity. Mrs. Baxter comes of a molluscous family and has elevated indolence and inactivity to a science: whence all the trouble which keeps the house alternately fascinated and in a roar through three acts. Mrs. Baxter has brought husband, children and governess to the state she desires: they find her place in the hymn-book when she is taken to church, they run messages for her. Miss Roberts plays chess with Mr. Roberts and amuses him: Tom Kemp, returned from Colorado where he has had his molluscous tendencies knocked out of him, tries manfully to reform his sister, but her splendid inertia beats him out of the field and he rescues the household from disaster by falling in love with the governess, a thing Mr. Baxter was on the verge of doing.

* * * * * *

That is all the plot: but the thing is so cleverly worked out, the dialogue so amusing, and the points so well made that it caught on and held the house. I have never seen Miss Moore in a part that suited her better. The "mollusc" is always in the right; whoever is wrong it is not the beautifully inert Mrs. Baxter. Mr. Sothern as the advising husband who gradually takes refuge in the society of the attractive governess, is admirable, so is Miss Inescourt as the governess, mainstay of the household. Sir Charles Wyndham seemed nervous, but he won through. The play is permeated by a quiet humour something reminiscent of Jane Austen.

Mr. Bernard Shaw's play "The Devil's Disciple" was produced at the Savoy on Monday night. It has been played before at a suburban theatre and found much acceptance in America when given by the late Richard Mansfield: the fact that it deals with the War of Independence was no doubt much in its favour. The play in some respects is one of the author's best: the central idea is dramatic and strong. Dick Dudgeon, found at tea with Mrs. Anderson by General Burgoyne's men, is assumed to be the Rev. Anthony Anderson "wanted" for sedition and submits to be arrested. Anderson escapes and raises a body of rebels who rescue Dudgeon when he has the rope about his neck. The plot is quite good, but I like the Shavian humour nowhere so little as I do in this play. When Dudgeon asks to be shot instead of hung, a moment sufficiently tragic, he is told he would not make the request if he knew the wretched marksmanship of the British soldier. A poor jape enough and one that jars. But G. B. S. is a law unto himself, and we are less disturbed by his inveterate and sometimes untimely clowning than we used to be. The best acting in the piece was Miss Batenan's Mrs. Dudgeon; a horribly grim old crone. Miss Wynne Mathieson as Mrs. Anderson who accepts Dick Burgoyne's not altogether explicable self-sacrifice was very excellent. Mr. Granville Barker was the General, dry, cold and polite. The piece was very well received.

Mr. Louis Parker, opening a Dress Exhibition at the Tribune office a few days ago, put in an earnest plea for beauty in men's clothes. What he wants the male person to wear is velvets, snowy frills and heavy brocades; he wants them not to be afraid of colour: and above all he would have them wear feathers—above all, feathers. Profitting by his experience with pageants he maintains that people are never so happy as when strutting about in the gorgeous attire of the middle ages: he also draws attention to the exhilaration produced by a brilliant dress-gown. I must consider the matter carefully: if more gorgeous clothing would stimulate my brain centres clearly I owe to you, my dear Editor, to adopt such attire. I will begin with a really swell dressing-gown, I think: feathers—really beautiful ostrich feathers—are expensive, so I must put off wearing them just for the present.

The work of underpinning Winchester Cathedral has revealed a much more serious condition of affairs than was suspected. At the Diocesan Conference held on Tuesday the Dean made a statement in course of which he said that not the £20,000 first estimated but £87,000 would be wanted to do all that is necessary, and of this £14,000 is required immediately. With that sum they could leave the Cathedral in a safe condition but enshrouded in scaffolding and shored up at almost every point. Here is an admirable opportunity for Mr. Carnegie, but I fear the fact that he is a son of the kirk will stay his hand.

Mons. Gerard having failed to complete his proposals with regard to the vacant site in the Strand, the L. C. C. have withdrawn the extended option given that gentleman and are again open to offers for it. Sir Edwin Cornwall holds the singular opinion that the Council will never be able to develop the site till St. Mary-le-Strand is pulled down: but gives no reason for this curious theory. I wonder if he regards St. Paul's as an obstacle to city development or the existence of Westminster Abbey as an embarrassment to the locality!

TOOTHSOME DISHES.

SPORTSMEN who possess what our grandmothers used to call "a sweet tooth" will find somewhat to interest them in "Sweets and How to Make Them" just issued by Messrs Thacker, Spink and Co., Calcutta. If they are lucky enough to be married, they should, as a matter of course, hasten to present copies to the sharers of their joys and sorrows and await with confidence the pleasing results. The booklet is designed specially for India and the amateur sweet maker; it is written by the two ladies whose 'Bread, Pastry and Butter Making" has received such a flattering reception at the hands of Anglo-Indian housewives, it is very cheap, and teems with useful and novel suggestions for those dainty morsels which are to many people the most attractive items of the menu.

THE PIRATES OF MALABAR.

FROM the first page to the last, in "The Pirates of Malabar," Colonel Biddulph presents us with a most interesting account of the early struggles the East India Company encountered in suppressing piracy on the coasts of the peninsula. The narrative is full of interest revealing facts the reverse of flattering to the characters of those who under pretence of trading ravaged the towns abutting on the sea. English French, Dutch and Portuguese appeared to abandon all sense of honour and humanity on rounding the Cape for nigh two hundred years, nor do all the Honourable Company's own servants come out of the ordeal with clean hands. It is not exactly a work that calls for any lengthened notice in our columns, but we can confidently recommend to it the general reader as a valuable addition to the numerous ones now appearing dealing with the affairs of the Indian Empire.

SOUTH AFRICAN GAME.

II.

There are no deer in South Africa, which, however, is peculiarly rich in antelopes, gazelles, and other buck. Even these beautiful creatures are fast going the way of all other wild animals. The days are long gone when Roualeyn Gordon Cumming dreamed true dreams and saw real, tangible visions of plains dark with buck. We read of "herds of thousands and tens of thousands of springboks, interspersed with troops of wildebeeste;" of "vast herds—for as the eye could strain the landscape was alive with them, until they softened down into a dim red mass of living venison;" of "living masses of buck jammed together over miles and miles of illimitable area." And yet they were still more astoundingly abundant in earlier times. Think of it, O brother sportsmen! Try and imagine what the slaughter must have been during the past fifty or sixty years!

Whether as regards size or majesty, the eland is the king of the antelopes. It is the largest of all known antelopes, whether in Africa or elsewhere. The eland bul of the Kalihari often stands 5 feet 10 inches at the shoulder, and occasionally exceeds 18 hands. Specimens approaching a height of nearly 6 feet have fallen to the rifles of the late Duke of Edinburgh, Mr. F. C. Selous, Sir John Willoughby, Sir Robert Harvey, Dr. Knight Bruce (Bishop of Bloemfontein), Mr. A. Beit, Sir Edmund Loder, Captain Cookson, and others.

Gordon Cumming says (1850) that "this magnificent animal is by far the largest of all the antelope tribe, exceeding a big ox in size. It also attains an extraordinary condition, being often burthened with a very large amount of fat. Its flesh is most excellent, and is justly esteemed above all others. It has a peculiar sweetness, and is tender and fit for use the moment the animal is killed." Like the gemsbok and other antelopes and gazelles, the eland is independent of water, obtaining moisture from various roots of the melon tribe—the "thirst-plant." The grand creature is still to be found in the interior of the Kalihari and in the vicinity of the Chobe, Botletle, and Zambesi rivers. Eland are usually hunted on horseback. When excessively fat (which they generally are) these antelopes on being pursued, and if hard pressed from the start, will get winded and tire rapidly; but, on the other hand, when in poor condition, and more especially as regards the cows, they can travel with most unexpected rapidity and endurance.

But little less than the eland are the inyala, the nakong, the hartebeestes (including the tessebe), the gemsbok, the kudu, and the roan and the sable antelopes. Lesser species of great interest to the sportsman and the naturalist include the various bushbucks or boschboks.

Broadly, buck are to be divided into bush buck, veld buck, water buck, and rock buck. A typical bush buck is the inyala, everywhere scarce, but haunting sparsely the dense scrub of the littorals of Zululand and about Delagoa Bay. Water buck include the lechwe, the nakong, or sitatunga, the extremely rare pookoo, and the water buck. The last-mentioned is a fine, gamelooking, and stately antelope, now rarely ever met with, even in the unfrequented regions of the Crocodile and Limpopo rivers. Though heavy and short-legged, it is speedy, gallops through and over irregular and precipitous ground, and when brought to bay is fierce and dangerous.

The rock buck include the grysbuck, the steinbuck, and the klipspringer. The steinbuck is the most common and widely distributed of the gazelles of South Africa. Active and fleet, it is largely coursed in the neighbourhood of Kimberley and elsewhere. The klipspringer, less than 2 feet in height, the klipbok of the Boers, is the chamois of South Africa. Standing on a rock or stone, whence it derives its name, it can leap an incredible number of feet, or yards, from a standing jump, all four feet together, like a goat.

The wildebeeste, or gnu, is a very interesting creature. It forms part of the arms of the lovely Conoly of Natal. There are two species of wildebeeste in South Africa—the blue wildebeeste, or brindled gnu, and the black wildebeeste. The first is practically extinct south of the Orange river, and, indeed, of the Limpopo. Westward, the sportsman must seek it in the Kalihari, in the heart of which it is still fairly plentiful; in the Lake 'Ngami district, on both banks of the Botletle river, and thence right up to the Chobe and Zambesi. Quite recently blue wildebeeste were killed in the neighbourhood of the Victoria Falls. An old bull stands over 4 feet at the shoulder. In appearance this antelope suggests the American bison, on a smaller scale, but its heavy, clumsy, and ungainly appearance belies its speed, which is equal to that of a good shooting horse.

The black wildebeeste is some inches lower than the other variety, and has to be sought far up-country in these days. Both species frequent open plains, often remote from water. In arid wilds the black wildebeeste suits the scenery, presenting an appearance of ferocity, which, however, it does not possess. As it evinces an abundance of curiosity, and is neither shy nor timid, it is easily shot.

Old sportsmen speak of having killed specimens of a third variety—the white-tailed gnu. Of this creature the writer knows nothing.

Briefly harking back, it may be mentioned that the sitatunga may be said to live in the water of swampy regions, passing its life in flooded beds of reeds and papyrus, into the muddy bottoms of which its long hoofs, when splayed out, prevent it from sinking. It is practically web-footed. The greater kudu is a bushloving animal and very partial to wooded hills, though it is also plentiful in the vicinity of rivers which flow through level tracts of country covered with forest and bush. "In my own experience," says Mr. Selous, "it is never found at any great distance from water." These animals have been greatly diminished in numbers by the ravages of that terrible scourge, the rinderpest, so that this lordly antelope has almost ceased to exist in many districts of South and South Central Africa, where up to 1896 it was still very numerous.

The sportsman, in contradistinction to the pot-hunter, the butcher, or the professional slayer, covets heads. The largest and handsomest trophies are furnished by the hartebeeste, the blesbok, the gnu, the waterbuck, and puku, the impala, the kudu, and the eland.

A record hartebeeste head would have to be 25 inches in length and 12 inches in circumference, normal dimensions being 20 inches and 7 or 8 inches. These horns are thickly knotted at the base, curving obtusely forwards and then as acutely backwards. Somewhat similar in character and appearance are the heads of the kudu and the eland, spirally curved. A good kudu head would be 44 inches long, measured straight, and 56 inches round the curve. A typical eland's horns would be at least 30 inches in length and 11 inches in circumference. The horns of the gnu, often over 20 inches in length, are shaped like those of the wild buffalo or the domestic ox.

Coming to buck with taper, bayonet-shaped horns, whether straight and more or less parallel, or spiral, we have the waterbuck (30 inches long), the gemsbuck (45 inches), the Hunter's antelope (East Africa), and other gazelles. Steinbuck, klipspringer, oribi, and duiker have short, spiky horns only a few inches in length.

Perhaps the grandest heads of buck to be obtained with the rifle in Africa are those of a great eland, a large, well-grown adult bull kudu, koodoo, or balabala, and a fine addax. The addax has rarely been shot by Europeans or Americans. Its habitat is Northern Africa. It closely resembles the South African gemsbok. A specimen head recently came to England. The horns measured 35 inches in length (along the curve), 28 inches in a straight line, and 20 inches of spread from tip to tip.

CARROTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you or any of your readers tell me a good place to buy country carrot seed?

31st October 1907.

[Perhaps some of our readers may be able to oblige our correspondent. We are open to correction, but we are under the impression that a tea-planter named McWha on a memorable occasion years ago dazzled the eyes of all the world and his wife at an Assam flower and vegetable show with what an enthusiastic reporter described as "the largest and finest carrot ever seen in Assam." If this should catch the eye of Mr. McWha he might feel disposed to write something on the fascinating subject of these Esculent roots.—ED.]

THE 25 MILES BICYCLE RECORD.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you tell me the latest Indian Bicycle record for the 25 miles?

R. E. A.

[1hr. 3mins. 25secs. made by Pte. E. A. Fay, 10th Hussars, at Rawalpindi, on the 19th May last.—ED.]

A HUGE ELEPHANT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

DEAR SIR,—I send you the measurements of a big tusker which I killed in this district on the 8th instant.

R. Tusk length	4-6½"	Girth	16½"	Weight 42½lb.
L. Tusk length	6-4"	Girth	16½"	Weight 57lb.
			Total Weight	... 99½lb.

The right tusk is broken, and the tip bevelled from constant use.

The tusks were weighed and measured in the Battalion Godown with tested weights and both weight and measurements are absolutely to be relied on.

Unfortunately I was unable to measure the height of this elephant at the shoulder as when killed he fell in a peculiar position with his forelegs doubled up under him and his right tusk firmly imbedded in the ground. This prevented the carcase from subsiding altogether, as doubtless it would otherwise have done.

The girth of the forefeet measured with a steel tape after being cut off is 5'-4" both feet giving the same measurement to within a fraction of an inch. This should make the height of the elephant at the shoulder 10' 8" which seems enormous, but which nevertheless is probably within an inch or two of its actual height. I have never seen a bigger beast. He towered above his fellows and was considerably taller than a larger rogue killed in this district two years ago which measured 9' 9" at the shoulder.

.....when on the subject of ammunition there are some special bullets sold by the well-known Gunmakers Messrs. Lyon and Lyon of Calcutta called "Rotary" bullets which can be used with choke-bore barrels and with perfect safety. I speak from experience for I have tried them with my own guns which are full choked in both barrels. The shooting up to 70 yards was good and the wound made by the bullets appalling. I recommend them as most useful to have in one's possession at all events as a stand by in case of accident to a rifle. I had no idea until I tried it that it was possible to make such good shooting from a smooth bore. For close quarters I should prefer a gun, a gun with these bullets to a rifle.

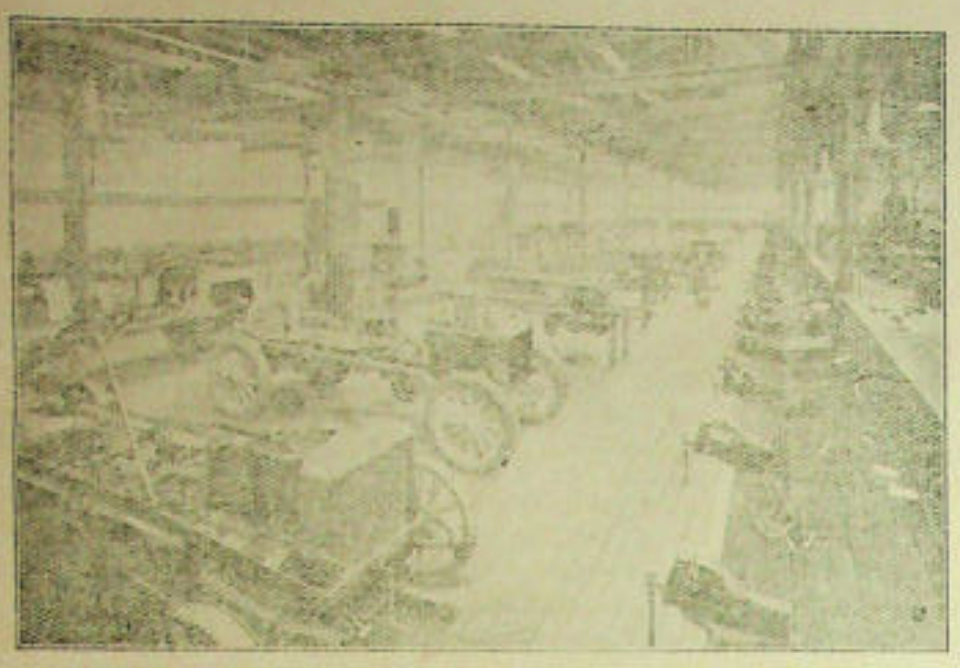
A DAY AT THE DAIMLER WORKS.

Last August we were lucky enough to receive an invitation to look over the world-renowned works of the Daimler Motor Company The welcome summons also suggested a "run round in one of our new T M. 1907 type cars," said journey to include some of the most beautiful and historical spots in fair Warwickshire. What need to add that we accepted with pleasure and alacrity. The Works take up rather more than twelve and a half acres of ground in Coventry and, at the time of our visit, there were in use eight and a half acres of floor space in the buildings alone, which gives a very fair idea of the importance and extent of the firm's business. The plan of organisation, which has been worked out on very simple lines, broadly speaking embraces four chief departments The Machine and Fitting Shops Erecting Shops, Coachbuilding, Testing and Delivery, and these are, of course, split up into a large number of sub-departments and offices, through nearly all of which we were conducted.



ERECTING SHOP.

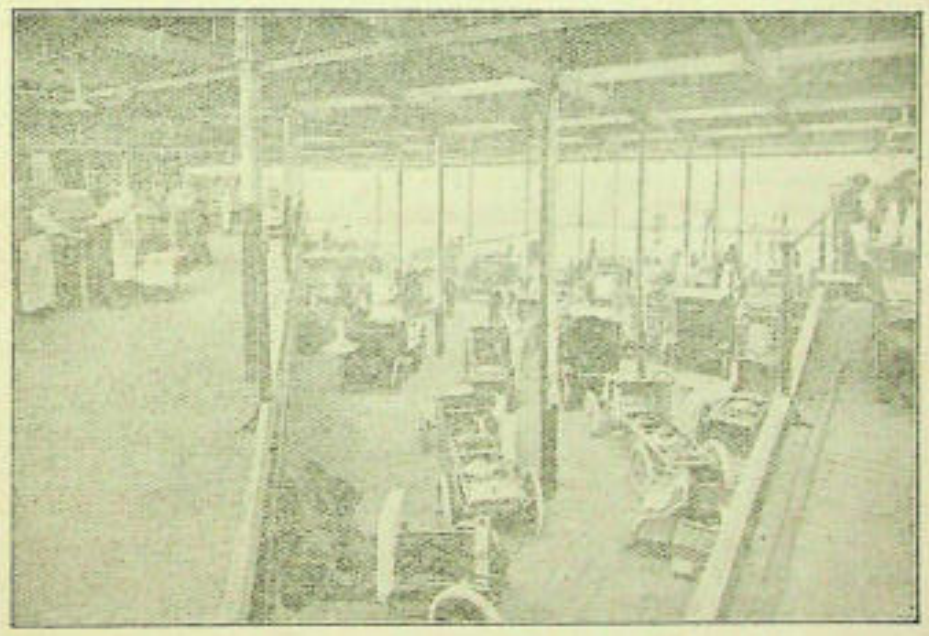
Entering first the laboratory we watched several interesting experiments by which a complete check is held over the different physical and chemical properties of the materials used in every part of a car. From this we passed through the Drawing Office where numerous draughtsmen and designers were busy on what is the first practical work in the production of a Car: it was roomy, well lighted and complete even to an Electric Photo-printing device for copying tracings. We had time to note that the Metric System has in its entirety superseded the old-fashioned and in some ways unsatisfactory inch system Close by is the Works Office which plays such an important part in the organisation of the enterprise, where order, classification, economy and the aim to obtain uniform output at lowest cost cannot fail to strike one. The department which controls the mechanical tests came next on the programme and we found it equipped with delicate apparatus for tension, compression, bending, torsion and impact tests. A few interesting minutes spent in the Inspection Department brought us to that in which Engines and Cars are tested and here we lingered for some time.

Following out the idea of rigid inspection, engine and car testing is carried out in a very complete manner. Increased accuracy of manufacture, standardisation and material testing, have largely reduced the chances of variation in different engines, but very thorough engine testing is still considered essential, and any "tuning up" necessary is done in the comfortable seclusion of the engine test shop rather than on the public high road. In the test shop, the engine, as received from the engine building shop is mounted on a stand and run under its own power, but without load, for 18 hours. This ensures the bearings and cylinders getting into good condition. The necessary adjustments are then made to the ignition and carburettor, and it is run against a brake for two hours at full power, after which it is taken to pieces and thoroughly examined. If satisfactory, a final test is made to measure the torque at all speeds from 150 to 1,000 revolutions per minute, and the engine goes forward to the erecting shop with the certainty that it will "pull" well, will pick up quickly and will, in fact, do all it is expected without further adjustment.

Car testing is much simplified, as the old fashioned idea of making engine adjustments on the road is no longer necessary. Every car undergoes a searching road test while in chassis form, and is again tested by the superintendent after it has been fitted with its finished body, and is not passed as ready for delivery till running to his satisfaction.

After this our attention was directed, en passant to the arrangements for heating, ventilating and fire protection, and it was a pleasure to see what a deal of forethought had been expended on the subject of healthy working conditions and safety of premises, staff and stock A very complete system of time keeping and registration is observed by the Daimler Company, and in this connection we had explained to us their bonus system, which, we understand, has after a protracted trial given eminently satisfactory results; it is one by which the workman is financially benefited in proportion to the actual work he does, while the firm benefits in increased output and reduced cost of wage per piece. A walk round the Tool Shop introduced us to many weird ingenious and complicated articles, many of which we saw being used in the course of our visit.

After this we had our attention turned to the production departments and their wonderful equipment departments in which over seventeen hundred men are employed. The limitations of space deprive us of the pleasure of touching on everything we saw, we must content ourselves with noticing a few of the more important.



BODY SHOP.

The machine shop is divided into different departments to make specialisation possible to a large degree. The original equipment was largely of light American lathes, which have since been replaced almost entirely by capstan lathes and grinding machines. All shafts are roughed out to within $\frac{1}{4}$ mm ($\frac{1}{100}$") on semi-automatic turret machines the type of machine most favoured being those of the single-pulley type, with change of speed by gear box, and a large batch of these machines is to be found on the first gallery of the machine shop. They are of English manufacture being made by the firm of Alfred Herbert, Limited, of Coventry. Shafts are then finished to gauge on Norton grinding machines, the saving of time on the older methods being remarkable, while the finish is, of course, beyond reproach. Gear blanks and cylinders are machined in turret lathes of size, sometimes as many as ten different tools being used upon one piece.

Milling has gradually taken the place of planing, the gain being enormous in the case of machining soft metals such as aluminium. Gear cutting is an extremely important operation, and a great deal of care and experiment have been employed in ensuring extreme accuracy both of bevel and spur wheels, as it is largely upon this that the efficiency of the transmission depends.

The shops are electric-driven throughout, each motor driving a short line of shafting. All gears used in the transmission and many other parts are case-hardened, making them wear extremely little. Great care is taken to obtain uniformity, and it has been found necessary to employ electric pyrometers for constantly checking the temperature of the furnaces In the sand blasting process a man with a kind of diving helmet cleans by sand blast castings and hardened parts that have been through the fire. Though always called "sand" blast, fine chilled iron shot is actually used, swept against the surface to be cleaned by a good pressure of air The helmet is to protect the lungs and face of the workman, fresh air from outside being pumped through the pipe at the top. Fitting as understood by engineers of twenty years ago scarcely exists at all in an up-to-date manufacturing shop. The general use of limit gauges and rigid inspection renders the work of fitting into merely assembling machined parts.

Before the erection of a car is begun, an order is passed to the Component Stores for a complete set of components required. It is then merely a question of assembling to form a complete chassis ready for road testing. In the erecting shop the tanks and radiators are made and the general coppersmith's work is completed. The Body Shop is somewhat differently constructed to the other shops, consisting of a ground floor for fitting the bodies to the chassis, and a gallery for doing the body-making and lighter work. The wood is first cut roughly to shape in a saw-mill adjoining, and is then passed on to the body shop to be finished. The Painting and Upholstering Shop was specially attractive. Coach painting is quite an elaborate art There are no less than sixteen distinct coats on the lighter coloured cars, and even more on the darker ones The feature of the paint shop is its cleanliness, as this is necessary for good work The chassis are painted in one shop, being stripped of fittings that are to be plated, while the body is removed and painted in an adjoining shop. The final coats of varnish are put on in a dust-proof room, and the body is ready to be upholstered. Daimler cars are very luxurious in this respect, a special system of springs being used in the seats and backs. In this department also cape hoods are made, and this means of protection from the weather is becoming very popular. There are besides these Plating, Smiths' and other Shops. The last we shall mention is the Repair Shop which is run as a separate organisation to the manufacturing department. It has its own machines, and undertakes repairs of cars of all sorts, though the majority of its work consists in repairing and overhauling the Company's cars. As a complete stock of spare parts is always on hand, replacements to Daimler cars can be made very rapidly and cheaply.

DAIMLER SHOOTING BRAKE.

Having completed our tour of the works our guide, philosopher and friend led us to the main yard where we found awaiting us the new "T. M. 1907 car" before alluded to and in which we were to spend the rest of the daylight at our disposal. Our motor-owning friends will, of course, be interested in details of this car which is, we believe, the most typical of those the Daimler Company are turning out this year.

The arrangement largely follows the usual lines, in so much as the 4-cylinder vertical engine is mounted in the front of the car with the Radiator and Fan in front of it, and the Transmission is by sliding spur gears and bevel gearing to chain pinions driving chain wheels mounted on the rear road wheels.

The Engine is of the 4-cylinder vertical type, has cylinders of 130 m-m. bore and stroke of 150 m.-m. The cylinders are cast in pairs with the valve box compression chamber and water jacket in one side of the engine and are sloping inwards at the top so as to reduce the compression space. They are operated directly by one camshaft without any rocking gear, etc.

The carburettor is of a design which gives the correct mixture at every position of throttle valve. The throttle valve and the ignition gear are connected together by a special arrangement of levers which are so designed that the ignition control being coupled to the throttle, the time for ignition is correct for all positions of the throttle valve when the engine is working at full load. The ignition distributor is in the high tension circuit, and only one coil is used for the 4 cylinders High tension magneto gear is also fitted.

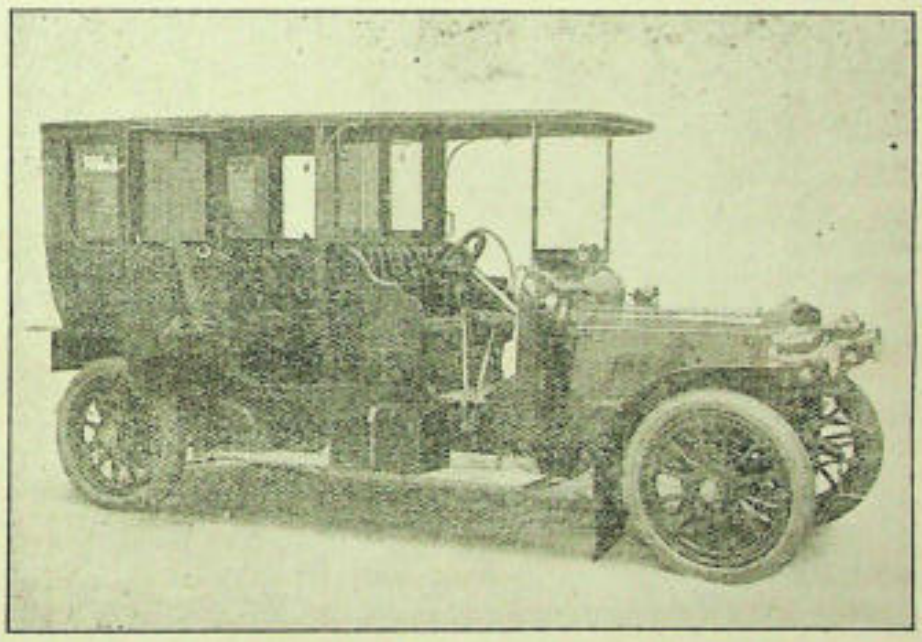
Circulation is maintained throughout the engine by a spur gear type of water pump which is driven directly from the end of the layshaft on the opposite side of the engine to the camshaft, which also drives the magneto.

The Radiator is of the gilled tube type, tubes fitting in at the top into a cast aluminium tank of special design, and at the bottom a sheet copper tank, a large diameter Fan is mounted behind the Radiator, and driven from the front of the Engine.

This is the ordinary metal and leather type, controlled by varying the compression of a spiral spring, by means of the left medal. The clutch itself is centred on an extension of the crankshaft, thereby ensuring perfect alignment Another feature of this component is the ease with which the clutch can be dismantled or the spring adjusted Any relative variation between the clutch and driving shaft centres, is compensated for, by the flexible square shaft couplings, fitted at either end of the transmission shaft.

The aluminium casing surrounding the gears is extended on either side around the cross-shafts, and is supported by a bracket from the frame close up to the chain pinions, and at one other point at the rear of case, thereby ensuring self alignment under all conditions. From the drawing of the case, it will be seen that 4 speeds and a reverse are provided and no "so-called" direct drive is given on any gear. The gears are arranged on the two sleeve principle, making a short and compact case Ball bearings are provided throughout.

A special form of "Gate" control is provided with a separate lever for the reverse gear, each speed is obtained by a positive thrust of the hand lever, thereby preventing the possibility of a gear being missed.



THE DAIMLER CAR SUPPLIED TO THE NIZAM OF HYDERABAD.

Two pairs of brakes are fitted. One pair consisting of steel bands tightening on drums mounted by the side of the chain pinions on the rods of the cross-shafts and supplied by the pedals With this method, no pressure from the brakes is taken through the transmission gear except through the driving chains Duplicates of these brakes are applied to drums on the rear road wheels, are applied by a hand lever working on a toothed segment on the driver's seat. Both brakes are amply compensated.

The Petrol Tank (capacity about 20 gallons) is carried across the top of the frame under the front seats. Pressure feed is used, pressure being maintained from the exhaust gases.

The frame is composed of pressed steel side members, coupled together by means of cross tubes of light section and large diameter, a form of construction giving great rigidity by "arching" the side members over the rear axle centre, to give the necessary clearance, the refinement of a low frame and consequently a low side entrance of the body has been achieved no underframe is used, the engine and transmission being bolted directly on to the main frame. The dimensions of this chassis are:—Wheelbase. 10′ 6″ or 3,200 m/m, wheel gauge, 5′ 1″ or 1,546 m/m, width of frame, 29½″ or 750 m/m, length behind dashboard available for body space, 8′ 6″ or 2,654 m/m.

Having had the salient points of the car explained to us and having admired its many beauties we jumped in and at speeds varying from 10 miles an hour up to—no we mustn't say what the top speed was, but the surrounding country did "whizz by" now and then—we visited Leamington, Warwick, Stratford-on-Avon, Shottery, Kenilworth and did the sights and sampled the good cheer almost everywhere It was with regret, leavened by the consciousness of having spent a most delightful day, we drew up at the "King's Head." Coventry and said farewell to our hosts.

By the courtesy of the Daimler Company we are enabled to present our readers with four pictures which we have no doubt will interest them.

AHMEDNAGAR SKY RACES.

First Day, Thursday, 31st October 1907.

APPENDED are results of a very successful little meeting engineered by Captain Gibbs. There was a good attendance and the Worcester Regiment were "At home."

ARAB HURDLE RACE.—Rs. 49. For Maiden Arab ponies 14-1 and under 14-1 to carry 11-7. W. I. R. C. About 1¼ miles, over 6 flights.

Hon. C. Annesley's St. Gatien ...	Owner	1
Mr. Benson's Eclipse	Owner	2
Mr. Webb's Spider	Mr. Whalley	3

Also ran: The Great, Gray Gander.

BETTING: Evens St. Gatien, 2 to 1 Spider, 5 to 1 and longer odds the rest.

PONY HURDLE RACE.—Rs. 49. For Maiden ponies 14-1 and under. W. I. Australians 14-1 to carry 11-7; C.-B.'s 14-1 to carry 10-7. R. C. About 1¼ miles, over 6 flights.

Capt. Carr's, The Joker	Owner	1
Capt. Tarbett's Araminata	Mr. Galloway	2
Capt. Lambert's Dinker	Capt. Gibbs	3

Also ran: Worc. Regt. Polo Club's Rufus.

BETTING: Evens each Joker and Araminata, 4 to 1 the rest.

POLO PONY SCURRY.—hs. 49. For bona-fide polo ponies. Catch weights 11-7. 3 furlongs.

Capt. Lambton's Ramah	Capt. Gibbs	1
Hon. A. Connesley's St. Gatien ...	Owner	2
Capt. Carr's Barrow	Owner	3

Also ran: Clipper, Sirabad and Patrick.

Won by a length.

MAIDEN PLATE.—Rs. 49. For Arab horses. Weight for age and class. 6 furlongs.

Mr. Alderson's Veronique	Owner	1
Capt. West's Cracksman	Owner	2
Mr. Raymond's Remnant	.....	3

Also ran: Bertie, Starlight and Rufus.

BETTING: 3 to 1 Veronique, Evens Cracksman, and 5 to 1 the others.

ARAB POLO SCURRY.—Rs. 49. For bona-fide Arab polo ponies. Catch weights 11-7. 3 furlongs.

Major Harrison's Dolly	Mr. Galloway	1
Capt Gibb's Noble Lady	Owner	2
Capt. Tarbett's Araminata	Owner	3

Also ran: Dinker, Rufus, Die Hard, and Sapho.

BETTING: 5 to 1 on Noble Lady and 6 to 1 the rest.

Won by half length. Favorite beaten on post.

ARAB PLATE.—Rs. 49. Handicap for Arabs 14-1 and under that have never won Rs. 250. 5 furlongs.

Capt. Carr's Korrgnon	Owner	1
Capt. Lambton's Ramah	Capt. Gibbs	2
Mr. Dobson's The Greek	Mr. Annesley	3

Also ran: Eclipse, Walbeo, Young Kaiser and Sirabad.

BETTING: Evens Korrgnon, and longer odds the rest.

Won easily.

RACING IN AUSTRALIA.

V.A.T.C. SPRING MEETING.

CAULFIELD GUINEAS.—For three-year-olds, Colts, 8st. 5lb. fillies and geldings, 8st. 1 mile.

Mr. W. Leonard's b c Master Foote, by Sir Foote—Wigelmar, 8st. 5lb. ...	W. Evans	1

Mr. H. Power's b g Sequent, by Maltster—Sequel, 7st. 9lb.	D. McGowan	0

BETTING: 4 to 1 agst. Kuban, 5 to 1 each Black Range and Peterhof, 8 to 1 each Buckle, Frances, Nushka and Miss Bass and 15 to 1 the others.

Won by a length. Peterhof was a length and a half away third. Time—49⅘secs.

A correspondent complains that the fashionable large hats completely dwarf the wearers. It has been said that women nowadays are nothing to what they wear.

"I was never so taken down in my life," remarked Lushington, more in anger than in sorrow. "That chap Nevertreat came up to me in Coventry Street and said, 'Well, old chap, what are we going to have?' Just as I was going to say 'whisky,' he said 'rain or snow?'"

He: Can you explain the difference between "shall" and "will." Par exemple, if I say "Will you marry me?" should you reply "I shall" or "I will"?

She (very icily): I should reply "I won't."

That survivor of the Birkenhead who went to see the scene of the sinking ship at Drury Lane no doubt noted the absence of the sharks. The presence of a few theatrical agents would have added to the realism of the scene.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

London, Friday, 18th October 1907.

THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK.

IN thunder, lightning, and in rain, racing commenced at Kempton yesterday. However, the midsummerlike chaos of elements quickly sobered down into a more sensible strain to the time of year—mellow October—and the air once cleared, we enjoyed a mellow October afternoon. In every department the attendance was a good one, and included many leading lights of the sporting world. The course rode a bit heavy, which may account for the upsets of form.

IMPERIAL PRODUCE PLATE—Of 300sovs.; nominator of the winner receives 200sovs., the nominator of the second 100sovs., the nominator of the third 50sovs. the owner of the second 200sovs., and the owner of the third 50sovs. out of the stakes; for two-year-olds. 6 furlongs, on the Straight Course.

Duke of Westminster's b c Vamose, by Orme—Vampire, 9st. 6lb. ...	W. Halsey	†
Sir D. Cooper's b f Leshia, by St. Frusquin Glare, 9st. 3lb.	D. Maher	†
Mr. J. Musker's ch c by Cherenmg—Minera, 8st. 5lb.	F. Bullock	3
Lord Rosebery's Sir Toby, 8st. 5lb. ...	W. Higgs	0
Mr. A. James' Rock Crystal, 8st. 7lb. ...	H. Jones	0
Mr. W. M. G. Singer's f by Love Wisely—Janitza, 8st. 4lb.	O. Madden	0

(Vamose trained by W. Waugh, and Leshia trained by Blackwell.)

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Leshia, 9 to 2 agst. Minera colt, 8 to 1 Vamose, 100 to 7 Sir Toby, and 50 to 1 others (offered).

Vamose, who had drawn the inside position, was very fractious, and delayed the start, and when the signal was given lost a length or two. The rest came on almost in a line, Leshia, second from the rails, with a slight lead of Sir Toby, Janitza, and Minera colt, on the outside. They ran in this order at a rare pace till a furlong from home, where Vamose came through and headed Leshia, who got up again in a ding-dong finish and made a dead-heat of it. Minera colt was third, half a length away. Stakes divided.

RICHMOND PLATE (Handicap)—Of 500sovs.; second receives 50sovs. 6 furlongs, on the Straight Course.

Lord Derby's b g Persinus, by Matchmaker—Polynesia, 5yrs., 8st. 9lb. ...	D. Maher	1

Mr. J. L. Dugdale's Lowland Lord, 3yrs., 7st. 2lb.	F. Greening	0
Mr. P. Gleeson's Toxer, 3yrs., 7st. 2lb. ...	J. Howard	0
Mr. R. C. Dawson's Fanita, 3yrs., 7st. 1lb.	H. Watts	0

(Winner trained by Hon. G. Lambton.)

BETTING: 4 to 1 agst. Paddington, 6 to 1 Meadow Rue, 7 to 1 each Fire Clay, Persinus, and Candahar, 100 to 12 Royal Lass, 100 to 8 Lady Hasty, 100 to 7 Tozer, and 20 to 1 each others (offered).

Won on the post by a head; half a length divided second and third.

COVENTRY PLATE (Handicap)—Of 500sovs.; second receives 50sovs. 1 mile, on the Jubilee Course.

Capt. F. Forester's b g Golden Saint, by St. Angelo—Mouche d'Or, 6yrs., 7st. 7lb.	W. Saxby	1

Mr. P. Nelke's Snatch, 4yrs., 6st. 13lb. ...	Wm. Griggs	0
Col. H. T. Fenwick's Rockbourne, 3yrs., 7st. 4lb.	S. Chandley	0
Mr. R. P. Wright's Balbriggan, 3yrs., 7st. 11lb.	J. Goater	0
Mr. D. R. Browning's Tom Wedgwood, 3yrs., 7st. 8lb.	H. Stokes	0
Mr. Soden's Aid, 5yrs., 7st. 4lb. ...	H. Robbins	0
Mr. L. de Rothschild's Croisette, 4yrs., 7st.	H. Watts	0
Sir E. Vincent's Angouleme, 3yrs., 6st. 12lb.	F. Greening	0
Mr. Anderson's Coolmoon, 3yrs., 6st. 6lb.	W. Broadwood	0

(Winner trained by Lewis.)

BETTING: 9 to 2 agst. Kaffir Chief, 6 to 1 Tom Wedgwood, 7 to 1 each Golden Saint, Croisette, and Snatch, 100 to 14 Catapult, 10 to 1 each Rockbourne and Stickup, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won cleverly by three-quarters of a length; a head divided second and third.

Racegoers have much to be thankful for in the institution of "gate" meetings, which enable the executive to denote prizes of value unheard of in the lamented days of the old country squire. The love of and the support accorded to racing has never been more keenly emphasised than in the present day, and since Miss Dollar won the first Duke of York Stakes fifteen years ago, the event, which has exploited some first-class horses, has steadily increased in public favour, as was evinced on Saturday, though the muster, which included many of the principal supporters of the Turf, was not a record one. The weather fell off a bit from the recent mellow spell, watery clouds hurrying overhead; but the overnight's rain, which had benefited the course, was not repeated, and for the time of year it was enjoyably mild. The motor brigade was well represented, the specials well served and well patronised, and, as usual, the fair sex mustered in good force, making a pretty picture in the paddock. Tips for the big race were plentiful, but nobody dreamt of the winner, and the stable, we understand, were as sceptical of success as the public generally. W. Lane, looking much better, and J. H. Martin, who has been riding in Austria-Hungary, were about in the paddock, and Martin will probably have a leg-up at Newmarket.

DUKE OF YORK STAKES (Handicap)—Of 2,000sovs. (1,600sovs. in specie and 200sovs. in plate or specie at the option of the winner); second receives 200sovs., and the third 100sovs. Jubilee Course. 1 mile and a quarter.

Mr. S. Gollon's b or br f Tirara, by Bill of Portland—Tirailleric, 4yrs., 7st. 5lb.	F. Bullock	1
Mr. A. Bailey's b or br c All Black, by Gallinule—Vortex, 3yrs., 7st. 4lb. ...	R. Brumby	2
Mr. Reid Walker's br h Dinneford, by Diana Forget—Gracie, 5yrs., 9st. ...	D. Maher	3
Mr. R. J. Farquharson's Dalkeith, aged, 8st. 5lb.	W. Halsey	0
Mr. A. Stedall's Kolo, 4yrs., 6st. (car. 6st. 2lb.)	W. Broadwood	0
Capt. C. P. B. Wood's Rosoate Dawn, 6yrs., 8st. 3lb.	G. McCall	0
Mr. A. McMicking's Var, 4yrs., 7st. 6lb. ...	J. Howard	0
Mr. W. M. G. Singer's Illustrious, 4yrs., 6st. 6lb.	F. Baker	0
Lord Westbury's Oakleigh II., 4yrs., 8st. 8lb.	H. Randall	0
Mr. Wm. Clark's Linacre, 3yrs., 7st. 4lb ...	F. Wootton	0
Mr. W. Raphael's My Pet II., 3yrs., 7st. 13lb.	R. Jones	0
Mr. J. Buchanan's Noctuiform, 5yrs., 7st. 9lb.	C. Foy	0

(Winner trained by F. Day.)

BETTING: 11 to 4 agst. Dinneford, 3 to 1 Rosoate Dawn, 100 to 14 Linacre, 8 to 1 Illustrious, 100 to 8 My Pet II., 100 to 7 All Black, 20 to 1 each Tirara and the others (offered).

To a happy effort they got away, Dalkeith and Linacre, who began slowly, soon becoming whippers-in. Tirara, at once taking hold of her bit, took a decided lead of All Black, Illustrious, and My Pet II. Then came Dinneford and Rosoate Dawn, heading Kolo, while Dalkeith began to part company from Linacre. After a bit the field began to string out, and before reaching the bend Rosoate Dawn's chance was gone, as the horse was losing ground in spite of McCall's efforts. Full of running, Tirara had slightly improved her lead coming into the straight, where Dinneford deprived All Black of second place some three lengths behind the leader. Illustrious still pegging away fourth, while Dalkeith was making up his lost ground. The race was thus early all over, as, finding perseverance fruitless, Maher did not further punish Dinneford, and judiciously eased up at the distance and left Tirara to score a hollow victory by four lengths from All Black, who was running on; three lengths divided second and third. Time—2mins. 8secs.

NEWMARKET.

THE closing of the Limekilns shows what a change the recent rains had worked on the Heath, while Sunday's downpour had made the racecourse side fairly soft. Everybody was agreeably surprised to see a bright morning break the wet spell, as on Monday night the rain looked like going on for ever, and the pleasant change put everybody on good terms. The Great Eastern Railway are gradually working into perfect "rapport" with the question of Newmarket traffic, as people say, "If we can get to Newbury under the hour, why such a comparatively long journey to headquarters on race days?" The 10-55 A.M., which is so handy for the West-Enders, found any amount of support yesterday morning, most of the carriages being labelled "Engaged," while its illustrious patron, the King, found a loyal crowd surrounding the roped-in space reserved for his entrance to the Royal carriage. Such an acceptance of the St. Pancras special as this cannot but be highly satisfactory to the company, who are getting alive to the fact that racing begins much earlier at the back end than in the summer. A capital programme had been prepared, and it was refreshing to see what extra life had been infused into the surroundings, the King being met by a representative muster of Society, which contrasted strongly with the somewhat humdrum state of affairs at the First October Meeting. The public, too, mustered in force.

CLEARWELL STAKES—Of 30sovs. each, h. ft., with 200sovs. added; for two-year-olds; second receives 50sovs. T.Y.C.—(5 furlongs 134 yards).

BETTING: 2 to 1 agst. Bridge of Canny, 9 to 4 Sancy, 100 to 30 Galvani, 6 to 1 Malua, and 33 to 1 each others (offered).

Keystone II., towards the left, made strong play from Bridge of Canny, the pair being two lengths in advance of Galvani and Rockbourne, then came Malua on the top ground, and Sancy slightly last. Before reaching the T.Y.C. winning post Keystone II. had fulfilled her mission as pacemaker, and Bridge of Canny came on from Malua and Galvani. In the dip Galvani deprived Malua of second place, and challenging Bridge of Canny up the hill, won in determined style by a length; three lengths between second and third. Rockbourne was fourth, and Keystone II. last. Time—2mins. 4-1/5secs.

BETTING: 5 to 2 on Jubilee, 6 to 1 agst. Dripsey, 7 to 1 Sweethope, and 20 to 1 each others (offered).

Won in a common hack canter by half a dozen lengths; half a length divided second and third. Time—3mins. 6-1/5secs.

Dull, cold, and spitting with rain, the early morning did not hold out much promise, and few sportsmen were early abroad, but matters greatly improved before mid-day, though the sun never had a chance, and rain came on again soon after sport commenced. Newmarket had narrowed the big race into a trio. The favourite could not be beaten, his trainer said, so everybody echoed it; Marsh was only afraid of the second in the Leger, as "Madame," who had done a rattling spin, was a very different mare to when she split The White Knight and Malua at Goodwood, and look at the last-named's forward show on Tuesday. Demure was a possibility, but The White Knight had too much weight. These opinions were iterated all over the place—in fact, the race was all over. And yet everybody came to see it, following the example of the King, whose welcome patronage has been the mainstay of Newmarket for some years past, and without whose presence racing here seems to fall flat. A thoroughly representative gathering of the rank, talent, and beauty of the country assembled to greet His Majesty, and the earnest of an enormous crowd given by Tuesday's muster was fulfilled in every department. Motors throbbed pettishly in serried ranks, and carriages of every description rolled along the smooth approach to the stand, while the specials discharged thousands of passengers, who kept trooping coursewards to fill the recently enlarged enclosures, long after sport had commenced. In their extension of the accommodation the executive acted none too soon, and must have had the general acclaim of the public, which massed in such crowds as to thoroughly test the capacities of the enlarged structure; and as it was locomotion in the rings was a matter of difficulty. The crush under old conditions would have been tremendous, for the attendance was undoubtedly the best on record. When backers and layers got together there was little alteration in the status of the favourites, and a desire was shown to befriend Asticot.

Mr. J. C. Sullivan's Winking Anne, 5yrs., 6st. 2lb.	F. Templeman	0

(Winner trained by J. Brewer.)

BETTING: 9 to 4 agst. Baltinglass, 4 to 1 Demure, 8 to Madame de Soubise, 100 to 12 Royal Dream, 100 to 1 Wuffy, 100 to 8 The White Knight, 25 to 1 each Outbreak, Detection, and Asticot, 33 to 1 Father Blind, 40 to 1 each Iman and Winking Anne, and 66 to 1 Spate.

Mr. Willoughby despatched them to a good start at the first attempt. Fairly settling down, Father Blind set a good pace to Iman on the left, Outbreak and Baltinglass on the right, Demure and Royal Dream at the favourite's heels, and the rest in a bunch, whipped in by The White Knight. In this order they came across Choke Jade, the leaders stringing out a bit after going three-quarters of a mile, and as they turned the spur of the ditch on to the flat, Baltinglass, who was pulling double, shot to the front on the inside, and Madame de Soubise took second place in front of Demure and Wuffy, while Outbreak dropped back a place, and Royal Dream was clear of The White Knight, who in turn left daylight between himself and Asticot, Iman dropping back. They were well together half-way across the Flat, but before reaching the T.Y.C. winning-post Demure shot past Madame de Soubise, who here was beaten, and cleverly captured the lead from Baltinglass, Wuffy and Outbreak keeping their relative positions in front of Royal Dream, to whose quarters The White Knight began to creep, whilst Asticot was in difficulties. Half-way from here to the Ditch Mile post Baltinglass showed signals of distress, and Howard's waking up had no effect, the favourite being hopelessly out of it. Wuffy was now second in command, and up to the Bushes kept pegging away at Demure, who kept him at bay, and at the same time The White Knight was drawing nearer and nearer, there being only the three thus early in the race. Edging towards the inside, Demure came on down the hill, and with Wuffy surrendering second place in the Dip to The White Knight, the latter strode on in pursuit, and took a little closer order, but Wootton kept his mount beautifully together, and despite The White Knight's magnificent effort, the winning-post came a little too soon for his tremendous stamina to tell, and Demure scored a grand and intensely popular victory by three-quarters of a length; three lengths between second and third, Baltinglass, two lengths off, struggling on, was fourth; Royal Dream, separated by another six lengths, fifth; then, with Outbreak faltering close home, Iman finished sixth just in front of him, whilst Asticot was eighth, Madame de Soubise ninth, Father Blind tenth, Spate (one of the first beaten) eleventh, Detection twelfth, and Winking Anne last. Time—3mins. 59-1/5secs.

CHEVELEY PARK STAKES—Of 300sovs., added to a sweepstakes of 20sovs. each; for two-year-old fillies; second receives 100sovs., and the third 50sovs. Brethy Stakes Course. 6 furlongs.

Won a splendidly ridden race by a neck; three lengths divided second and third.

Newmarket has never been so full on a big night before as on Wednesday, and frequent demands for beds in all quarters of the town made the inhabitants almost believe that old times had returned. Thursday's card, to the veteran sportsmen, was bristling with good things, and more attractive even than the previous day's, and its charm was not lost on the public either, as for an off day the attendance was an extraordinary one, the road to the stand being crowded by motors and well-appointed carriages, while the moving crowd of pedestrians stretched intermittently from the "top of the town" to the turn of the lands." Every department was crowded, though not so densely as on Wednesday, but there was little difference in the club enclosure. Though the wind was still easterly, it had a more refreshing twang. The light, too, was better, and the going improving after its recent soaking.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES

THE first of the season's representative fixtures has come and gone, and it was fitting, bearing in mind the happenings in league and competition football that the match at Sunderland on Saturday between the picked elevens of the English and Irish Leagues should have had its sensational incidents. In less than a minute the home forwards swept down, and Hibbert had scored, and then came the equaliser from Thornley. This was hurricane work, and there was naturally a lull, but before the interval two more goals had been added by the Rose, without any further success awaiting the Shamrock. There was not so much incident in the second half, because England was top dog, although Ireland first found the way to the net, but Crawshaw and Bache both defeated Glenn, and England won by six goals to three.

In the first place the members of the Irish League team are to be heartily congratulated on the plucky fight they made against their formidable antagonists. They did not enter the field with the idea that the result was a foregone conclusion, and from start to finish they put every ounce of energy they possessed into their work. They were well served in goal, and at back, and while judged as a whole the half-back line was not particularly convincing, Connor, in the centre, gave a great display, and it was his spoiling work that prevented the English forwards running up a double-figure score. Forward, there was plenty of grit and determination, at times some pretty combination, and occasionally flashes of individual cleverness, but Andrews in the centre was a weak link in the chain, and persistently forgot that he had outside wing men pining for chances to distinguish themselves. Young and Wilson were a really strong left wing, the ex-Evertonian showing that skilful generalship which was always a feature of his play. Murphy was fairly good, and Harris made full use of the comparatively few opportunities presented him.

The score of 6—3 suggests that the English League team were much the superior side. There is no doubt they were, but there were one or two weak spots in it. Williamson, one of the cleverest goal-keepers in the country, cannot give of his best in representative games. The Middlesbrough man, when the Irish International was played at Ayresome Park, made a dramatic blunder which enabled Ireland to draw level, and on Saturday he not only gave the first goal away, but made other mistakes. Whatever the cause—nervousness or over-anxiety—Williamson is not an ideal goalkeeper in games where there is International rivalry. The backs were a great pair. The turf was so slippery and the ball so greasy that occasionally both failed to kick as they intended, but there is no doubt as to their resource, skill, and dash. Crompton is a master tactician, and Burgess is an ideal partner for him. Provided both maintain their form, and others do not show unexpected brilliance their claims to further honours this season, must be seriously considered. I was not altogether pleased with the half-back line. I do not say there was a pronounced weakness anywhere, but the play did not reach the standard expected. There was at times a sense of insecurity from the onlooker's point of view—a strong belief that with just a little more smartness on the part of the Irish forwards, a lack of ability to cope with the situation would have manifested itself. The forward work was above the average, but not much, and although a half-dozen goals were obtained the shooting left much to be desired. Thornley was a success at centre, and Bache was the best inside man on the field, his only fault being a tendency to over-elaborate. J. E. Raine, the only amateur playing, was a pronounced success, but Hilton, who was brought in vice Bridgett, was not so sparkling as usual. Hibbert was useful, but did not open out the game enough.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

The Southern League again furnished several surprises, and the general results were remarkable. The axiomatic idea that playing at home is a tremendous advantage has been seriously assailed this season, and it had another heavy blow in the South, for of ten S. L. teams engaged a couple of days ago on their own pitches, only four gained victories, two shared in drawn games, and four were defeated. There was something peculiarly interesting about three of the matches, in which the points went to the home clubs. Luton gained their first victory of the season in the league, and their win was at the expense of Tottenham,, who dropped a couple of points as compared with the corresponding game last season. Swindon were at Crystal Palace, who had previously lost every game on their own ground but who now came along with a 4—1 win over a notoriously difficult team to score against. In Northampton, Brentford had to face the most improved team in the competition, only one loss having been debited against them in eight games, while the Middlesex county town team had been doing poorly. If the unexpected did not happen, the win was more emphatic than was anticipated. Watford were certainly not entitled on form to regard themselves as probable winners at Leyton, but the honours were theirs, and equally disconcerting was the triumph of Reading at New Brompton. A greater surprise than these was West Ham's 2—0 win at Fratton Park, and Portsmouth are indeed in parlous condition with only one win from seven games. Queen's Park Rangers did splendidly to beat Brighton and Hove on the Seasiders' ground, and Norwich deserve a word of praise for dividing the points at Bristol. Plymouth Argyle preserved their unbeaten certificate by participating in a draw at Bradford, and Millwall climbed up a bit as a result of their 2—1 win over Southampton.

The League tables to date are appended:—

LEAGUE I.

In the First Division of the League the chief feature was the success of the Lancashire clubs. Easily the most noteworthy performance of the afternoon was the sensational overthrow of Newcastle at St. James' Park by Manchester United, who had never previously won at Tyneside. Early in the year Newcastle beat them by five clear goals, and yet on Saturday the champions were metaphorically smashed up by 6—1. Manchester City won at home against Notts County, and both Liverpool teams also won, while to add to Lancashire's happiness Bristol City went down heavily at Preston, and Bolton Wanderers won at Stamford Bridge 3—1. Bury and Blackburn Rovers both failed to get a point, and the defeat of the former at Gigg-lane was an excellent achievement on the part of Sheffield Wednesday. As to Chelsea, while it is easy to write that something must be done, and difficult to precisely state what to do and how to do it, one views with considerable apprehension their consistent inability to win matches, and hopes for an early improvement in their prospects. With their injured men again available, Woolwich have turned over a new page, and their meritorious win on the Aston enclosure was a brilliant repetition of last season's performance in the corresponding game. There was no semblance of a fluke about Saturday's victory, the Gunners, for whom Neave, Satterthwaite, and Coleman played thrusting football, being considerably more than a goal better than their rivals.

THE SECOND DIVISION.

Fulham stoned in some degree for the failure of their local rivals, as they beat a Lancashire team up North. Burnley are a difficult side to overcome at Turf Moor, but the Cottagers fancied their chances, and getting the lead a quarter of an hour from the start never lost it. They played better football than their opponents, both in attack and defence, and Morrison and Millington deserve to be singled out for commendation. Clapton Orient did themselves a good turn by sending Derby County away empty-handed, but they would not have had more than one point had the County forwards been able to shoot with a reasonable degree of accuracy. While in the First Division of the League five of the home teams booked the full quota of points at stake, there were only three sides in the Second Division who were able to accomplish this.

RUGBY RULES.

LONDON WELSH VS. CHELTENHAM.—In this engagement—Cheltenham's first in London—at West Ham on Saturday, they fully maintained the good opinion which had already been formed of their ability as a combination. For although the Welsh were not at full strength, they turned out a powerful side, and the visitors are to be congratulated upon their success in avoiding defeat by a wider margin than 2 points. The Welsh started a player short, but beyond being unable to score, did not appear much handicapped. Pritchard, who filled the vacancy, signalled his arrival by taking the ball from a line-out and straightway scoring a try, which Dyke converted, fifteen minutes from the kick-off. The Cheltenham forwards heeled out the efforts, while the three half-backs formation completely baffled the Welsh backs, who could not open the game, and indulged in short kicks instead. Gradually the visitors developed a hot attack, and eventually Cossens just managed to score in a melee by the corner flag. Romans did not improve upon it, and the interval was announced.

From the resumption the pace was set at a furious rate, the Welsh commendable attempts at opening out being as splendidly frustrated by the lightning following up of Hayward, Fry, and company. In one of these kick-and-rush ding-dong series Dyke, declining to touch down, ran out, and was tackled in front of his goal. A moment later the ball was kicked over again, and Unwin, of international fame, touched down. Romans again missed the extra 2 points. Roused by this reverse and the loss of the lead, the home brigade attacked with real vim. Throughout the tackling was of the most resolute order. At last success crowned their efforts. From the quick breaking up of a scrummage near the centre, Clay, Meyrick, Rowlands, Gwilym Jones, and Maddocks indulged in passing, and a try was registered behind the posts. Dyke unaccountably failed to increase the points. Still faster play followed, and Richards neatly dropped a goal. Following upon a clever piece of work by Hayward, the Welsh line was once more reached, and Romans dropped a goal. Result:—London Welsh, 2 goals (1 dropped) and 1 try (12 points); Cheltenham, 1 goal (dropped) and 2 tries (10 points).

HARLEQUINS VS. LONDON SCOTTISH.—This, the chief Rugby game in the Metropolitan district on Saturday, was rewarded by an excellent attendance, some 4,000 spectators being present at Wandsworth to see the home brigade vanquish the Scotsmen by 13 points to 3. But the score is calculated to mislead. Though the Harlequins undoubtedly deserved to win, if only for making more use of their opportunities than did the visitors. There was never, on the actual run of the play, three, much less ten, points difference between the teams doing battle so vigorously and tenaciously. Indeed, up to half-time, the Scotsmen, though handicapped by losing their captain, J. D. Young, who was lamed after fifteen minutes' play, and took no further part in the game, were undoubtely the better team. They played together with a better understanding than did the home lot, and might easily, had their halves and threes taken the opportunities presented to them, have established a winning lead. Geddes, though he kicked a goal from a mark, failed somewhat badly at two early kicks from penalties. Had these goals been secured, the Harlequins would never have had their two points lead at the interval, and a different result might have had to be recorded at the close of the game.

Both teams were about as strong as they well could be, Tennent Sloan, the International, assisting the Scottish, and the Harlequins having E. Fuller Eberle in the three-quarter line. The Scottish started off with a rush, and some fine passing was seen on both sides. Then, after Geddes had kicked the goal referred to above, some splendid work on the part of the Harlequins, in which Birkett, Lambert, and Lewis were most conspicuous, ended in the first-named getting over for Lambert to convert. This was all that was scored up to half-time. The extra man which the home side had in the scrummage was beginning to make itself felt, and the pack eventually CALCUTTA.

"crumbled, though playing resolutely and vigorously the while. Splendid tackling was seen on both sides, and in this Lambert worthily took his part. After about twenty minutes of play in the second half Lewis scored a clever try, which Lambert, eventually converted, after "no charge" had been whistled for the first kick, which failed. Eberle further augmented the Harlequins' score before the end, gathering smartly from Lambert, whom Shean tackled beautifully. The try was not improved. Result:—Harlequins, 2 goals 1 try (15 points); London Scottish, 1 goal (from a mark) (5 points).

RICHMOND vs. LIVERPOOL.—Richmond brought joy to the hearts of their supporters on Saturday by a brilliant win over Liverpool. The actual margin in favour of the Metropolitan team was 24 points to 5, but, good as it is, it does not adequately represent Richmond's superiority, as they beat the visitors at all points of the game. If Richmond can only turn out such a team as they had on Saturday, they must give a much better account of themselves than they did last season. The presence of Frank Stout in the forwards had quite an electrifying effect on the pack, who heeled well, and followed up splendidly. W. J. Dow was a host in himself at half-back, and in addition to gaining three of the tries, he had a hand in most of the openings. He is a powerful chap, with a long stride that carries him along at a great pace. R. E. Godfray made a welcome return to the three-quarters, his usual fearless tackling being useful more than once, whilst F. R. Limpenny was a safe full back. Of the Liverpool men, R. G. Shocock was most prominent in the forwards, G. L. Williams at half, and A. W. Bennett and E. A. Bowring at three-quarters. C. G. Williams was an uncertain full back, and really gave Richmond their first try.

The game which was watched by a large crowd, amongst which were many Liverpool people, was not very old when Hearson scored as a result of the visiting full back's aforementioned mistake, for Chase to goal. A determined assault on the Liverpool goal ended in Dow going over, Chase again adding the major points. Once more C. G. Williams made a weak defence, and from a scrum following his tackle Dow slid over the line, but failed at the kick, and at the interval Richmond led by 2 goals and a try to nil.

In the second half Liverpool made desperate efforts to get on equal terms, and Bowring was particularly noticeable in a fine bout of passing, but he was well collared by Limpenny when within an ace of success. At last Bowring was successful, carrying home a good pass by "skipper" Williams, which was not converted by the latter player. Richmond were now penetrating the visiting defence time after time, and tries were added by Batchelor, Dow, and Wright-Nooth, the last effort being about the most brilliant of the match, the scorer gathering the ball smartly and forcing his way through. Chase converted one of these tries, and Liverpool not replying, the game ended:—Richmond, 3 goals and 3 tries (24 points); Liverpool, 1 try (3 points).

SURREY vs. DEVON.—Devon have been such a strong side for several seasons that it is no disparagement of Surrey to say that interest in the match played on the ground of the London Devonians, at Wimbledon, chiefly centred in the performance of the Westerners. Yet the actual play showed that the powers of Surrey had been underestimated, for the home side not only won by a goal (placed by Lyon from a try by Lapage), but had all the better of the game, particularly in the second half, and thoroughly deserved their victory. The margin of their success was not large, and certainly flatters Devon. Luck was against Surrey, however, on several occasions, particularly during the last ten minutes. During this period Devon were completely outplayed, and their lines had three most fortunate escapes.

Lapage, who throughout showed great pace and considerable swerving ability, was called back for a forward pass when he had run in right behind the posts, after a fine passing movement. Then Crowther burst away from a line-out near the D[illegible] twenty-five, and kicked over the line. He and Kelly [illegible] a race for the touch. The Devonian was just able to shoulder the Surrey forward off and kick dead, it being a very near thing. The third escape was when Birkett got clear and kicked over the line. He just reached the ball as it went dead under the ropes—another very narrow escape.

In justice, however, to the visiting county, it should be stated that they were a good deal below full strength, E. W. Roberts, G. D. Roberts, D. F. Moir, and S. McK. Saunders all being absent. Still, good substitutes were found, and at the start Devon were most decided favourites. They failed to realise expectations, however, being well held forward and beaten for the ball all through the first half; while in the second, as already stated, they were quite outplayed forward, both in the tight and in the loose, although more markedly in the former than in the latter department of play. The Devon forwards, of whom Kelly, Mills, and Dix were the best, were seen to most advantage at the lines-out and in that hand to hand passing which gave them so many victories last season. They were beaten in the tight, however, and, brilliant bits of play as they occasionally provided, the Surrey eight were the better lot on the day.

Crowther, who is now waxing towards the veteran stage, was the best forward on the field, being not only brilliant in the loose and more than useful at the lines-out, but also doing much hard work in the tight. He was well supported by the Services trio and by Chase. The Surrey forwards packed splendidly, and nearly always got the ball, while they used their feet on the whole well (a lack of control of the ball and a tendency to kick too hard being, however, faults that were too often in evidence), while they broke up quickly and gave their backs plenty of help both in attack and defence. It was essentially a forward game, and such combined back play as was forthcoming was of poor quality. One movement excepted, the passing was badly timed. Indeed, the solitary try of the match, scored by Lapage under the posts some ten minutes after the interval, was due to a brilliant individual run, for Birkett passed to the Services man as soon as he got the ball, and made no attempt to create a real opening. Lapage completely outwitted Lilicrap, and left him "standing."

Behind beaten forwards Jago and Peters were seen to very poor advantage. Both did some clever bits of work, but altogether it is doubtful whether Peters has ever played a more moderate game. Laing and Malkin were moderate for halves having so much of the ball and playing behind a winning pack. Their passing out was poor, and they were seen to most advantage in defence. Scott, though slow, was, on the whole, the best three-quarter on the field, Birkett being very disappointing both as an individual and as a centre with duties to his line. Ellis played in promising fashion, but appeared nervous. He has the makings of a good wing once he acquires confidence and experience of big games. Result:—Surrey (1 goal) (5 points); Devon nil.

BOXING.

THE IRISH CHAMPIONSHIP.—A distinguished company witnessed the contest on Saturday between Jem Roche (Wexford) and Charles Wilson (London). In the crowd were Mr. Richard "Boss" Croker and Sir Thomas Myles, ex-president of the College of Surgeons, Ireland, while a large contingent of well-known sporting men came over from England, and together with Irelana's chosen crowded the Empire Palace literally from floor to ceiling. The London section included Mr. A. F. Bettinson and Bob Habbijam.

The officials were:—Referee, Mr. R. P. Watson ("Sporting Life"); timekeeper, Mr. G. W. McConnell (Army Gymnastic Staff). Seconds.—For Roche: Bob Brown (Belfast) (trainer), Dan Kelly (Manchester), and his backer, Jem Clark. For Wilson: Bill Natty (trainer), George Chapman, and Jem Madden, of London.

Round 1.—Wilson toed the scratch with a confident smile. Roche looked serious. The Englishman led off and stepped back with a self-satisfied air. He repeated the performance, and twice swung the right, but was wide of the mark. After he had stepped in with several left-handed body blows and jumped out of reach, Roche set himself going. With the left he shot in straight from the shoulder, and at half-arm work scored so rapidly that at the call of time honours were pretty equally divided.

Round 2.—Again Wilson took the initiative, and made most excellent use of the left. His footwork was much in evidence. He was on his toes after every punch, which he often brought off without a return. Roche chanced himself half way through the bout, and was busy, but Wilson finished the fresher.

Round 3.—Wilson immediately commenced to take a good lead. Roche at last sent Wilson to the ropes with a straight left punch on the mark, and from this point Roche made the pace hot. Wilson at the close looked far the more distressed.

Round 4.—For the first time there was no smile on Wilson's face. He realised the importance of Roche, who started in at a great pace, and punched Wilson all over the ring. Wilson tried hard to stop Roche with his right, but never properly measured him.

Round 5.—Roche was very strong, and hit hard with the left in the stomach. Wilson rallied again and again, but Roche gave him no rest. His right was working with a will, and towards the end he showed to great advantage, and fought determinedly.

Round 6.—Roche was far stronger. Wilson made a jump with the left, and Roche answered it in a manner that startled Wilson. The Englishman was bleeding in many places, and growing tired, hung on for a few seconds. When Roche could stave him off he punched him, but Wilson stood his ground manfully.

Round 7.—Roche with left and right took a great lead, and drove Wilson round the ring. He belted him about the body severely, and Wilson dropped twice exhausted. When he rose, Roche dashed in, and though Wilson bravely endeavoured to drive him back he was a beaten man.

Round 8 and last.—Wilson was in a queer plight, and Roche as fresh as when he started. The Englishman made a somewhat feeble effort to land the left, but Roche stepped in and drove him back with a body punch. Wilson never flinched. Roche knocked him down, and he slowly rose to his feet. He tried a left and right and missed. Roche was after him, and with a left in the stomach and the right on the jaw dropped his man for good and all. Wilson vainly tried to rise, but was counted out, and his seconds came to the rescue.

Roche never fought so well. He has greatly improved since he defeated Sullivan, and learned far more of the defensive side of boxing. He is a game fighter, and can punish a man very severely.

Wilson was a sorely disappointed man. He regarded the contest as a certainty. When he found Roche was clearing him out the astonishment disorganised him. There could be no question as to his courage. He fought until nature failed him, and he was defeated by a better man.

WRESTLING.

KOCH vs. SNYDER.—The Oxford Music Hall was crowded to excess yesterday afternoon, the occasion being a match in the Graco-Roman style between Jacob Koch and Oscar Snyder, who belongs to Pierri's troupe. The contest was at catch-weights, best of three pin falls, fifteen minutes' rest between each fall, and two minutes' rest in the event of no fall at the end of fifteen minutes. The money was deposited at the Sporting Life. Mr. R. P. Watson, of the Sporting Life, acted as referee, and Mr. Jack Monro officiated as timekeeper.

The most perfect arrangements were made by the manager of the Oxford, Mr. Blyth-Pratt, and the match concluded with satisfaction to all concerned. Mr. Braff attended Koch as second, Cellus administered to the wants of Snyder, and Mr. George Harrington was M.C. There was a great disparity in the general measurements of the men, and 4st. difference in weight, Koch scaling 18st. Details:—

First Bout.—The men finessed for a hold in clever and cautious fashion. At the expiration of one minute Koch swung Snyder to the ground, and with tremendous force turned him on to one shoulder. Snyder smartly extricated himself, wriggled out of the difficulty, shot over Koch's back with a quick movement of his legs, and regained his feet. Once more they were in holds, and Koch grabbed his man fiercely. He dashed him to the mat, and, keeping a deadly grip on Snyder, dragged him across the floor. At the end of three minutes Snyder's left shoulder was less than an inch from the carpet, and the right pinned to it. Snyder from this dangerous position released himself, and with a half-somersault got behind Koch. His attempts to move Koch were so futile that the spectators laughed, but Snyder persevered bravely amid ironical cheering. Koch, when it suited him, moved Snyder alongside, and they were on their feet.

After twisting and turning, Koch threw Snyder, and the latter formed a very fine bridge. Koch lifted him three times and dashed him head foremost to the ground. Finally, when nine minutes had elapsed, the nearest possible margin of space separated Snyder from a fall. He rescued himself dexterously, but his fate was soon sealed. Koch made no mistake when he once more clutched him. In the struggle on the mat Koch pitched Snyder bodily near the footlights, and followed him with ominous forebodings of the end. Snyder struggled in the arms of Koch, who thrice nearly secured the pin-fall. Snyder had sufficient strength to keep one shoulder just clear of the ground, but finally overwhelming pressure brought about a full and complete fall in 13mins. 4secs.

Second Bout.—It was plain to the veriest tyro that Snyder was practically a beaten man; against all the skill of Koch and his physical advantages it is quite clear that Snyder had no possible chance. In the first bout he tested this very courageously, and thus early discovered that defeat was only a matter of time. This he demonstrated to the public at the outset by acting on the defensive, and making the most of the ring. Koch permitted no deliverance from danger, and went in hot pursuit. He cornered Snyder, and upending him gave the Leipsic man a throw at arm's length across the mat to the footlights. Going for him on his feet Koch downed him, and not gaining the fall Snyder slipped over and got behind. Here he wrestled with Koch's head, which he held in both hands to the infinite delight of the spectators. Koch otherwise was quietly passive and apparently unconcerned. He was resting, and it came as a welcome relief. Four minutes passed and Koch roused himself. It was Snyder's last despairing effort in the next minute, and he made the most of it without avail. Koch calmly took him in his arms, summoned skill and strength, and by dint of high pressure flattened Snyder out in 6mins. 40secs.

ATHLETICS.

POLYTECHNIC HARRIERS WALKING CHAMPIONSHIP.

UNTIL last February E. A. Spencer, who is twenty-six years of age, and on the diminutive side in physique, had not taken part in any walking competition. Since then, however, he has from time to time shown a marked improvement, and it is an open secret that he went away to specially train for the annual ten miles walking championship which the Polytechnic decided on the road in the vicinity of Ruislip and Ickenham on Saturday. So well did Spencer perform that Jack Butler, whose name has for years been associated with records, and who had won this particular event six times in nine years, was rather badly beaten, much to the surprise of all. Although a long way from being in tip-top condition, Butler persevered from start to finish. He has been walking for so many years that he must now begin to appreciate the axiom that youth will be served eventually.

Of the 27 entrants 21 competed, and practically all finished. The course, which was both hilly and heavy in places, was a circular one of five miles, and it had to be covered twice, starting, passing, and terminating at the Poplars. Result:—

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CIVIL vs. THE MILITARY.—This was opening game of the season in the Eden Gardens, and after some curiously fluctuating cricket resulted in a creditable win for the home side by 27 runs on the first innings. Stewart won the toss but put his opponents in, and though Stockley and Connor made a good start there were eight wickets down for 80. Downes and Platt then showed excellent form and some lucky hits by Wadsworth brought the full total up to 146. Stewart and Lee each took four wickets for 25 runs, and the latter bowled uncommonly well for some time. When the C. C. C. went in, Guise who had come practically straight on to the ground after forty hours in the train, failed, but Turnbull, Low, Bartholomew and Horncastle all did pretty well, and the 100 went up with only four men out. Then came a collapse and with Treadaway in as last man, for Calcutta were batting one short, 32 runs were still required to win. Lee, who played a really good innings and Treadaway proved quite equal to the occasion, and aided by some mistakes in the field the score mounted rapidly to 175 when Treadaway was bowled for a very valuable 18. Lee, took out his bat for 42, and his all round cricket clearly won the game for what appeared to be the weaker side. The Military at their second attempt scored 91 for seven wickets. Platt and Downes confirming the good impression which they had made in the first innings, and Guise and Low meeting with success with the ball. Full scores :—

BALLYGUNGE C. C. vs. BEHAR TEAM.—This inter-Club match at the week end resulted in a draw. The team which played the Behar Wanderers at Mozufferpore last month met another Ballygunge C. C. XI. The latter batted first. White and Shallow both took excellent knocks, although the latter was dropped twice, but White's innings was faultless. With 8 Ballygunge wickets down for 198, no very large score seemed probable, but Gould and Antram made a great stand, and carried the score to 305, when the closure was applied, Gould being not out 48 and Antram not out 54.

Coulthard with 4 for 47 had considerably the best analysis; Ogilvy also bowled very well, but was not favoured with much luck.

With less than two hours to bat, the Behar Team had no chance of knocking off the runs, and the game consequently became rather uninteresting. Eddis' 18 was the best innings, and he was unfortunate in being give out l.-b.-w. to a rather doubtful decision. Yeoman and Garth stayed together until time arrived, when with the score at 143 for 5, the game was abandoned.

The Behar Team lacked the services of A. C. von Ernsthausen, E. Studd and V. H. McCaw, all of whom went up to Mozufferpore, but who for various reasons, were unable to turn out versus Ballygunge; their places, however, were worthily filled by T. E. Thomas, T. Barclay and A. D. Garth. Score :—

The Naturalist.

SERPENT-EAGLES.

I.

THE Serpent-Eagles are divided into two genera represented in India by four species, viz., "Circaetus"—but one species and "Spilornis," three. The two can easily be separated from each other by "Circaetus" having no crest while "Spilornis" has a very ample, rounded one, which spreads out like a fan and covers the whole of the nape. The tarsus in both genera is naked or only covered with feathers at its top extremity near the joint in "Circaetus" which at once separates them from the True Eagles and Hawk-Eagles. Spilornis as I have said has a large rounded crest, unlike the long narrow one of the "Spizaetc" and this characteristic alone is sufficient for his identification, but "Circaetus" may puzzle the novice unless he be given the key which will separate him from the Buzzards (Buteo), Kites (Haliastur and Milvus), the Sea-Eagles (Haliaetus and Polioaetus) and The Honey-Buzzard (Pernis), all of which he, to some extent, resembles in point of size. All the remaining genera of "Falconidæ" are considerably smaller than "Circaetus" and cannot be mistaken for it. Both in the Buzzards and Kites, the measurement of the tarsus is not quite half the length of the bill from gape to tip, whereas in "Circaetus," the tarsus is long, being over 1½ times the length of bill from gape to tip.

Two out of the three species of "Haliaetus" are considerably bigger than "Circaetus" and the only one that resembles it, in size, viz., "H. leucogaster," the White-bellied Sea-Eagle, is almost pure white on the lower parts and dark ashy above, with whitish legs and hazel-brown eyes with some of the shields or scales on the tarsus broader than high.

In "Circaetus gallicus," the Short-toed or Common Serpent-Eagle, the chin, throat and breast are brown, the abdomen and tail coverts white and back brown; legs greyish brown, eyes bright orange yellow and no scutellæ or shields on tarsus broader than high.

In "Pilioaetus" the outer toe is partially reversible, which it is not in "Circaetus."

In "Pernis" the lores, and sides of the head are densely covered with small scale-like feathers, without any bristles, like the forehead and chin, which is not the case in "Circaetus."

The Short-toed Eagle measures between 26 and 28 inches in length with a wing of from 21 to 22 inches, is usually of a light colour throughout with dark bars or bands on the tail.

This Eagle, is widely distributed throughout India, except in Ceylon and East of the Bay of Bengal, but does not ascend far up into the Himalayas. Frequently to be met with soaring or beating slowly over cultivation, grassy slopes or marshes and is one of the four Raptores, which share the monopoly of hovering and may be seen for a minute or more at a time, absolutely stationary in the heavens, except for its wings. The only other birds in the entire family of the "Falconidæ" which is composed of some 26 genera comprising 77 odd species, who have acquired this accomplishment are the Kestrels and Black Winged Kites. The Osprey too hovers, but he does not belong to the Falconidæ," but is given a whose family to himself and is the only representative of the family Pandionidæ and genus Pandion in the world.

To return to The Short-toed Eagle, this species builds on trees and is said to lay a single egg, bluish white with spots and lives on snakes, frogs, lizards, etc.

"Spilornis," which is divided into 3 species, "S. cheela," The Crested Serpent-Eagle; "S. minimus" The Little Nicobar Serpent-Eagle, and "S. Elgini," The Andaman Serpent-Eagle. Of these the two latter are restricted to the Nicobar and Andaman Islands respectively and "S. cheela" is to be met with in most parts of India, but varies considerably in both size and markings in different localities and in consequence the species again has been sub-divided into the North India, South Indian and Andaman races, but it is sufficient for our purpose to know them all as "S. cheela" for the present.

This Eagle is, I think, the handsomest of all birds of prey, with its large imposing crest and the breast and under-parts profusely dotted with white ocelli, on a dark brown, almost chocolate in some, background. The back is very dark, almost black with a beautiful purple or greenish gloss. It can be recognised a long way off by the very conspicuous white bars on wing and tail, visible when on the wing almost as far as the bird itself can be seen. It has the characteristic flight of the "Spizaeti" and the Golden Eagle, i.e., with the wings held very far back almost like a large butterfly and when flying constantly utters its shrill plaintiff call composed of two sharp and three long-drawn notes, the long notes being in a slightly higher key. It lives chiefly on snakes, rats, and lizards and is said sometimes to kill small mammals and even birds, but the latter I doubt, as I have frequently set nets to catch one, with a dove for a bait, a tit-bit no bird of prey will refuse, if he finds one in difficulties, without the Eagle taking the least notice of it. On one occasion I tried for three successive days, changing the bait each day, from chikor to a mynah and from mynah to a dove without the Eagle making a move, and finally tried a rat and had the Eagle into the net within a minute from the time the rat was tied on the ground. A bird of prey, that will not even attempt to swoop on a bird, tied to the ground, is not in the least likely to pursue one when free. The same applies to a Honey-Buzzard. I have never succeeded in making him come down to any kind of bait, but in his case one can understand it, as he has a sweet tooth and lives to a great extent on honey and honeycombs, whereas the Serpent-Eagle is a flesh eater.

"S. cheela" is very common all over the Himalayas and may be met with up to an altitude of 8,000ft., but usually breeds lower down, at from 3 to 5,000ft., building in trees and laying one egg usually, much spotted with red.

The typical "S. cheela" measures about 29 inches in length with a wing of about 20 inches. "S. Elgini" is much smaller, being only about 22 inches in length and 14 inches in wing, and "S. minimus" is about three inches shorter again.

Drawn game by mutual consent (c).

(a) The defence has choice of many different moves at this point, viz., Q. to R 5 ch, Kt. to K B 3, P. to Q B 3, B. to Q B 4, Q. Kt. to B 3, and P. to Q4. We prefer either of the two last-named to any of the others.

(b) Apparently his best move.

(c) This game does not present a single feature of interest, and but that it occurred in a match of some importance it would be unworthy of preservation.

"What," queried the young man, "is the difference between white lies and black lies?"

"White lies," answered the home-grown philosopher, "are the kind we tell; black lies are the kind we hear."

A young teacher whose efforts to inculcate elementary anatomy had been unusually discouraging at last asked in despair:

"Well, I wonder if any boy here can tell me what the spinal cord really is?"

She was met by a row of blank irresponsive faces, till finally one small voice piped up in great excitement:

"The spinal cord is what runs through you. Your head sits on one end and you sit on the other."

THE INDIAN FIELD.

1, Hare Street, Calcutta.

THURSDAY, 14th November 1907.

VERY few of the Cup horses are in Calcutta as yet, but a big incursion is expected during the week. The Hon'ble A. A. Apcar's and the Kour Sahib's being among the animals due. It is rumoured among those "in the know" that the latter owner proposes to go for the Trials with Wandin and the Cup with Realm and has more than a chance of pulling off the double. Wandin is a much better animal than was thought at first and though possibly the Cup course might find a weak spot he will take a lot of beating over the shorter distance.

Watson, who trains the famous Apcar string, is still very seedy and there is no doubt that the horses in his charge have suffered to some extent in consequence. We shall be very interested to see how they do in their work here.

From all that we can see at present the order for the Cup is likely to be Realm, Fitzgrafton and Steinhager, but it is still a far cry to 24th December, and a lot may happen to change opinions before that time.

THE entries for the jump events are particularly good this year and give promise of some first class racing. A good many animals have been at work in the cage during the last two weeks.

ENTRIES for the Tollygunge Meeting on Saturday promise well. The steeplechase is likely to be a bit of a fiasco as there are not likely to be more than three or at the most four of them go to the post, but there should be some excellent racing in the other four events to compensate for the shortness of the programme.

THE Steeplechase is the only event in which we are likely to see a poor field. Out of the seven entries there will certainly be three which will not go and of the quartette left in the extra weight will not stop Wake Up from winning again if she does not get away with her rider and stands up, otherwise Lily will secure the cup easily.

THE open horse race has six animals of really good class and one first class hunter Myolene. Pallas is reported a nasty animal to ride, difficult to get to the post and liable to rogue at the finish and we should prefer to pin our faith on something more reliable. Teebee is hardly ready yet, Rubrette is an unknown quantity, but looks much on the light side and on the whole Mr. Das' selected will probably have the best of the battle.

THE open pony race has the biggest entry—12 in all, but of these Envious we understand is not in Calcutta, Golden Star and Lady Wilful, who have little chance at any weight can only get riders at 6lb. and 11lb., respectively, above their allotments at the best and we should think the race will develop into a very fine duel between Lady Mana, who is to be ridden by Mr. Fleming and Mr. Griffiths' Riot who is to have the advantage of Mr. Galstaun as jockey we learn. Mr. Griffiths has a very high opinion of his little pony which is evidently shared by the handicappers who only give it as a 14-0½. 2lb. from Lady Mana who is we, believe, a 14-1½ though described in the printed entries as a 14-2.

IN the closed race for horses there will probably be seven starters out of the eleven entrants. They surely will not be foolish enough to start a light timbered mare like Sal over the hard going under 12-7, and Wake Up is, it is said, going for the Steeplechase for which Roland will probably also have a shot. If Posey is well again the race looks a pretty good thing for Mr. Pugh with whichever of his pair he goes though if Lily contents herself with one race this time she may run him pretty close.

The closed pony race has ten left in as Lady George, who was entered originally is, of course, not qualified to go as she has won too much. Of the ten we, believe, there are likely to be at least eight starters of whom Starboard Light is probably the pick at the weights. To sum up there should be at least four good races out of the five events on the card and we hope there will be a bumper attendance with which to wind up the Tollygunge Club season.

They seem to be having a particularly good meeting up at Meerut this time, the quantity and quality of animals engaged both being a bit better than usual, while quite a lot of our better known jockeys including Melsom, A. Hoyt, Ames, Southall, Howie, Northmore, etc., are performing. The ever successful Major Holden scored another win over hurdles with that consistent performer Pathfinder II., owner up and carrying top weight. The best event of the day was the open pony race for which 13 went to the post. Three Calcutta ponies figure in the first four and the winner turned up in Mr. Rowan's Gold and Silver, a pony who raced in Darjeeling these poojahs and who just managed to beat Mr. Rose's Primrose by a head owing to superior horsemanship, Southall riding a great race. Primrose is the pony Maisie who was supposed to have a great chance for the Civil Service Cup, but missed her 14 hand measurement by half an inch. Sweet Rose who won here in the Monsoons as Gazelle, was equally fancied with Gold and Silver, but could get no better than fourth. We are likely to see all these ponies racing down here this cold weather.

First entries for the Indian Polo Association's Championship Tournament are:—The 16th Hussars, Muttra, the 17th Lancers, Meerut, the 39th Central India Horse, Agar, the Patiala team, and two teams representing the Calcutta Polo Club It is hoped there may be another team or two coming in before the date fixed for closing of final entries.

Melbourne Inman, "England's acknowledged coming billiard champion" vide press notices and illustrated circulars received by Tuesday's Australian mail, has been expected in India for some time. He writes us to say he will reach Calcutta about the first or second week in January when he will be prepared to show us of his best. He left Sydney at the end of last month and en route for Calcutta will exhibit at Hongkong, Singapore and Rangoon. From a tabulated statement of his doings since he started on his present world's tour we see he has made over two hundred and fifty breaks of 100 and over, among his best being 504 (his record) 434, 390, and sixty-five between 200 and 388. Among the latter is his 276, the red ball record for Australia. He will be worth seeing.

It has been remarked by more than one writer on canine matters that each year dogs seem more inclined to suffer from eczema and other skin diseases, particularly sarcoptic or common mange; or, to be quite plain, the "Itch." The former disease (eczema) is often difficult to prevent, but mange, with care and cleanliness, can generally be prevented; but if, unfortunately, a dog does contract it, with proper dressing ("Skincure") it can be cured effectually in a few days. Owners of dogs will often not permit themselves to believe their dogs have mange; if there is any skin trouble it is always called eczema, which is a non-contagious disease; and the result is that all the dogs in a kennel become infected; whereas if the first dog showing signs of skin trouble were isolated and properly dressed, a deal of trouble and expense would be saved. The symptoms of eczema are great irritation of the skin, causing licking, biting, and scratching of the affected parts; the skin is red and inflamed, and covered with a number of red pimples, which often break and discharge, and hard crusts may form, which are very painful. In eczema the disease seldom extends all over the dog, but patches are formed here and there—a favourite place is the back, just at the root of the tail—but it may extend all along the back up to the head. Another very common place for eczema to attack is around the edges of the lips, and sometimes around the eyelids; but as stated before, eczema is not confined to any one part.

In mange the dog, as in eczema, is constantly scratching and biting himself, and small red pimples like flea bites appear on the affected places (the pimples are smaller in mange than eczema), and sores and scabs form, the result of scratching.

In mange any part may become affected, it depending, of course, on the part that has come in contact with the infection or mange parasite; but the favourite places are the face, head, and ears, the soft skin of the abdomen, the elbows, etc.; the disease, if not treated, soon extends all over the body, and the dog becomes a miserable object; nearly all the hair may fall off; the skin is thick and scurfy, and covered with scabs and sores. There is often a difficulty in distinguishing between mange and other skin diseases. In such cases the mange parasite should be looked for, and it can easily be found by scraping the skin where the pimples and scabs are with a penknife, and examining the scrapings with a microscope; if it is a case of mange, the parasite will be seen; but in all cases of doubt treat the case first of all as one of mange.

During our trip home this summer we had the good fortune to become acquainted with the special preparations recently put on the market by Messrs. A. F. Sherley and Co., of 48, Borough High Street, London, manufacturers of dog medicines and patent dog foods. It appears to us that their "Skincure" and "Sulphur Bath" just meet the case and we might suggest their being tried. The treatment is as follows:—

Give twice a week a Sulphur Bath, and to all sore places apply some of the Skincure daily. It is quite non-poisonous, and it does not matter if the dog licks it.

It is also important to treat the dog for worms, for if they are not the cause of the disease—and in many cases they are—their presence in the intestines adds to the irritation and prevents a cure.

We have tried this treatment on an Aberdeen terrier with surprisingly good results.

There is only one certain cure for mange, and that is dressing the dog all over with the Skincure. Do not attempt to cure the case by just dressing the places, because neither you nor anyone else can find them all; so take the bull by the horns, do the thing properly, and dress the dog all over everywhere, without exception. It is not necessary to clip the dog, as the dressing is liquid, and can be easily worked into the skin with the points of the fingers. When a case of mange has occurred in a kennel, and the infected dog has been in contact with the other inmates, everyone, without exception, should be dressed and the kennels properly disinfected by fumigation and limewashing.

Internal medicine is not necessary in mange.

We thought the Sherley preparations so uncommonly good we brought out a few samples and some of their pamphlets "Hints to Dog Owners" and we shall be pleased to help any dog owning friends who may care to test the medicines and foods.

In the usual place will be found the prospectus of the Dibrugarh January Meeting, which has been fixed for the 21st, 23rd and 25th of that month. The first entries close on the 1st December. The station will be en fete from the 20th to the 25th January inclusive and wedged in between the racing there will be tennis, polo, billiard and bridge tournaments; Mr. L. Herbert, we are glad to see, is again Honorary Secretary.

At a distribution of prizes to Volunteers at the London Guildhall last month, Major Porter stated that the shooting men were but a very small proportion—not more than 5 per cent. of the Volunteer force—and under present conditions that proportion was not likely to be increased. In the Boer War sixty-six million rounds of small-arm ammunition were expended, and the Boer casualties might be put at 20,000; so that it cost 3,300 rounds to effect a hit. That was not shooting. Nothing was done for shooting, and if it were not for the National Rifle Association there would be practically no rifle-shooting in this country. Lord Roberts said that shooting was nine-tenths of the soldier's duty, but he feared that even in the new scheme for the administration of the Territorial Army nine-tenths of the regulations would not deal with it. If they were to shoot they needed help right from the top. They wanted ranges, rifles, and ammunition—tons of it. Public interest in it practically did not exist.

That the correct loading of cartridges is a scientific process, and one to be carefully studied with regard to the properties of different powders, is generally admitted by all gunmakers and cartridge-loaders. There is no doubt, however, that some loaders do not carefully adhere to the instructions of the powder makers, and consider that one wad is as good as another—with results very unsatisfactory to the sportsman. When American shooters have been over to England we have noted how careful they are in regard to the soft wadding they use. This wadding is expensive, and the best that can be obtained; but it pays. In our contemporary, Forest and Stream, "Blue Rock," an American expert shot, mentions that when in England last spring he saw some photographs showing the condition of a charge of shot when leaving the muzzle of a gun. He remarks that the chief points which these photographs seemed to prove were that a very hard wadding might be so driven through the charge of shot, at the moment of its leaving the muzzle, as to destroy the pattern entirely; also that felt wadding placed next the shot without any card wadding between destroyed the regularity of formation with which the shot left the muzzle. He says he has proved again and again, by experiment, that while chilled shot from a choke-bore would give, say, a pattern on a 30in. circle of 250 pellets at 40 yards, if replaced with soft shot it would give a much more open pattern, so that there would not be more than an average of 180 pellets on a 30in. circle. This is no doubt caused by the soft shot during pressure in the barrel losing its shape, and so being more deflected by the wind. Experiments in this direction, says "Blue Rock," show that the softer the shot—and there is great variation in this respect in different makes of shot—the more open will be the pattern. Even in the case of chilled shot some makes will be found softer than others, and the hardest make will invariably give the closest and most regular pattern.

In the course of a lecture entitled "Tales of Travel and Sport," delivered by Mr. Selous at Leicester on Monday, some very interesting early reminiscences of adventures in South Africa were given. The great hunter landed in South Africa in 1871, when the greater part of the interior was unknown and there was not a single railway line in the country. All travelling was done by ox-waggon, and it took him ten months to travel 2,000 miles. His first trip was to Matabeleland, elephant-shooting. He did all his hunting at that time on foot, armed only with an obsolete, clumsy old gun, weighing about 15lb. and taking an enormous charge of powder and round bullets, each of which weighed four ounces. He was very successful, however, although he had many narrow escapes. In the year 1878 Mr. Selous went hunting in North Mashonaland, and he related how one day there he came across a herd of 70 to 80 elephants, out of which he killed four and wounded a fifth. This animal charged before the hunter could reload, and Selous, who was mounted on a tired horse, fled. The elephant caught the horse like a battering-ram and knocked the hunter out of the saddle unconscious. When he came to, later, he found that the skin was removed from one side of his face and a good part of his chest, while his clothing was absolutely soaked and saturated with the elephant's blood. The elephant must have made an effort to kill him, kneeling down close to him, and endeavouring to impale him on her tusks, but apparently struck them into the ground close to his body. When he recovered consciousness he was able to slip between the wounded beast's forelegs and past her hind legs, which stood up like two pillars, and run as fast as he could for the thick bush. On reconnoitring he saw that the elephant was looking another way, evidently not knowing where he had gone.

Where the natural food for the babe is not available, as is often the case, it is a matter of vital importance that a thoroughly effective substitute be given. The want of this, and the improper feeding that results as a consequence, is the cause of thousands of deaths amongst children that should have been avoided. Statistics that have recently been published show that in England and Wales alone over 120,000 children die every year under twelve months of age. This is a deplorable fact, and the public attention that has been directed to it should have some practical outcome. This mortality is largely due to improper feeding. It is not always possible to find a supply of pure milk, and the method of feeding is often accompanied with a want of care that tells immediately on the delicate digestive organs of the infant. A pure milk food that is as easily digested as maternal milk, and so modified as to contain the constituents in equal proportions, is provided by the "Allenburys" Foods. By their use vigorous growth and health are promoted, and no digestive troubles need be feared. The Milk Foods are made from fresh, full-cream milk, and are so modified as to remove the difference between cow's milk and human milk, whilst the method of manufacture in vacuo absolutely precludes all impurity. A perfectly pure product is thus obtained which is both packed into tins and hermetically sealed by machinery. If the "Allenburys" Milk Foods were used in every case where maternal milk is not obtainable, the mortality amongst infants would be greatly lessened, and much of the sad waste of life that now takes place annually could be avoided. Advt.

Entries for the Army Cup Meeting constitute a record; over four hundred and twenty horses have been entered representing stables as far north as Peshawar and as far south as Bangalore, while Calcutta and Bombay have also sent fairly strong contingents. Owing to the shortness of the rainfall the course is in rather poor condition, but steps are being taken to get it ready by the opening day. A number of horses are in training and the course now presents an animated appearance. There is every prospect of a rattling good meeting.

During the past fortnight the Madras hounds, which have been recently imported from home, have been suffering from a similar epidemic to that which carried them all off in 1896 and 1897; fortunately on this occasion the disease was discovered in time, and hounds were at once removed from the seat of infection to the S.P.C.A. Kennels, where Major Gunn and other veterinary officers are attending them and are sparing no effort to check the epidemic. So far their efforts promise success, it will, however, under most favourable conditions, be after Christmas before anything can be done in the way of hunting.

A contemporary writes:—"The appointment of Inspector of Fisheries has been conferred on Mr. Mark Clementson, by order of the Governor of Madras, who, as President of the Game and Fish Preservation Association, has the right to nominate. The other members of the Committee have had no voice in the matter; in fact, are not in favour of His Excellency's nominee. Mr. Clementson has hitherto been working on his own account on the late Mule Breeding Company's grant at Anakutty, where he kept a dairy and grew cotton."

Sportsmen and naturalists will find some rare and valuable books advertised for sale among our Special Short advertisements to-day. The lots are being offered dirt cheap.

The second Championship Show of the Calcutta Kennel Club, is advertised for Friday and Saturday, the 27th and 28th December, and first entries close on the 7th idem. Late or final entries, chiefly for the convenience of mofussil exhibitors will close on the 12th December. This year the Honorary Secretaryship has been taken up by Mr. A. E. MacAuley Audsley, F.Z.S., a keen and knowledgable man in all matters pertaining to the dog. We look forward not only to a repetition of last year's success, but to improvements and extensions the natural result of further experience and a larger general interest among dog owners in India: large entries may be confidently expected from the other presidencies while there are now quite enough high class dogs in Calcutta alone to fill the benches in a big show.

The Calcutta Golf Club announces the usual opening tiffin and competition for a Cup and the Duffer's Prize: details in the advertisement further on.

Lucknow is arranging to start a Zoo, the site most favoured is one on the left bank of the river opposite the Horticultural Gardens.

There are numbers of Welsh villagers who are extremely clever anglers with both the fly and the worm; but it is with the worm in clear water that some of them exhibit exceptional skill, and they will fill their baskets whilst an ordinary angler will only bag a few couple. The other day, at a meeting of the Carmarthen Bay Fishery Board, attention was drawn to some phenomenal angling at Carmarthen. During the season an angler from Abergavenny had been staying at Carmarthen, and he had taken 20lb. to 25lb. of trout daily, when the best local anglers could only take a pound or two. The superintendent said that the man had been watched four days, and nothing illegal was discovered. He fished with a running worm up-stream, and took small trout, which showed that his success was due to the running worm. An angler at Brechfa had caught two or three hundred a day with a running worm. The superintendent reported killing twelve pike, ranging up to 15lb. each, near Drysllwyn since his quarterly report was drawn up.

Our Lucknow correspondent writes:—The grand stand is un fait accompli and there is no doubt it will be regarded as a boon by the sportsmen from all parts of India, who will shortly foregather here for the Autumn Meeting. The new structure towers above the other buildings in the enclosure and it is excellently situated, being placed at a correct angle to the course. It is three times the size of the old stand, being one hundred and fifty feet in length—ten feet longer than the grand stand at Poona. The approach is by means of a central gangway, and the tiers of seats on either side are reached by means of several staircases. The row of boxes at the top, of which two are reserved for the use of the Lieutenant-Governor and the Stewards, is reached by means of two spiral staircases at the back of the building. A feature which will undoubtedly be a great attraction is the splendid promenade in front of the stand. That the executive are determined to do all in their power for the convenience of the public is shown by the handsome reading-rooms and cloak-rooms with which the building is provided. Unfortunately neither time nor funds have permitted of the erection of a stand in the second enclosure to replace the old one which has been demolished, as it obstructed the view from the grand stand. A good deal of grumbling has been heard on this score, for although a temporary structure has been erected, it has no seating or covering. As the second enclosure is well patronised, there is no reason why proper arrangements should not be made. Major Ensor, the Race Secretary, has been very hard worked during the past few months to get the course into condition. Unfortunately there has been no rain since the 29th of August, and the going is bound to be very hard unless rain falls before the opening day.

Our Karachi correspondent writes:—"Since my last visit here in the spring, great improvements have been effected by the Karachi Stewards, a very fine stand has risen in the place of the somewhat old and antiquated one, large roomy and airy dressing rooms both for G. R.'s and professionals and also a new Steward's Room, besides this the stables which used to be in front of the stands on the far side of the course have been removed and are now situated in one line parallel to the road and on the same side as the grand stand. In spite of all these improvements, I fear racing in Karachi will never take on, the better class ponies and horses from Bombay will not come and so the meeting depends entirely on Quetta and Hyderabad and local sportsmen. The attendance, except on the last day, was extremely poor. Two bookmakers, Banvard and Steeden, were in attendance in the first enclosure and two in the second enclosure. Favourites were beaten race after race and, therefore, they should have done extremely well, but there did not appear to be much business doing: though I have always been led to understand Karachi was full of money, not much of it seems to find its way to the racecourse. The racing on the whole was interesting and there were some close finishes. Captain Toogood and Mr. Elgie divided the riding honours the former riding four and the latter five winners. The race of the week was the fine cup given by the I.C.S. in Karachi, this produced the best field of the meeting, nine ponies starting and was won in smashing style by Captain Toogood's good little English pony Maranta, this being her fourteenth win since landing in Karachi about 18 months ago. The Royal Artillery, The Commissioner, and the officers, South Wales Borderers were 'At Home' during the week, and the fine band of the 24th played each day."

Racing started half an hour earlier on the second day. As owing to the vagaries of the gate and the long waits the last race the day before was run in the dark. Captain Toogood, who brought down his string from Quetta en route to Lahore, had a great day, winning three races and getting two seconds. The great feature of racing in Sind and Baluchistan is the ubiquity of the G. R. and the total absence of the professional rider.

We had the best attendance on the final day, and the totalisator was kept quite busy. Four favourites out of the six got well whacked, and only in one case did the top weight win: it is a dangerous thing to raise and drop the weights by stones. The South Wales Borderers were "At Home" and did things in their usual lavish style. Full details of the racing will be found among our Turf reports.

Aeronauttism, as it has come to be called, appears to take on with those who can afford the cost as much as motoring on land has done, for the details of the several trips show that the aeroplane can be thoroughly controlled; the average speed against an ordinary breeze being 60 miles an hour. Assuming that we shall soon have the invention out here a vista of hope opens to those who long for a "week end" at our hill stations for it would be possible to reach Darjeeling from this under a couple of hours! and though that retreat is provided with rail communication there are others where the bone wracking tonga has to be resorted to. As yet weight is limited, the airship being only up to passenger traffic, but in these days of surprising inventions we know not what is in the future and those of a speculative turn of mind may conjure up a vision of aerial railways abolishing permanent ways, rails, bridges, and all other expensive paraphernalia pertaining to the present means of communication.

On New Year's Day the Howrah Bowling Club contemplate holding a rink bowling tournament open to all comers. Mr. W. Crawford, who can be found at the Royal Exchange, Calcutta, is the Honorary Secretary.

A VOLUMINOUS catalogue is that of Messrs. Hall and Anderson, now lying before us, containing almost three hundred well got up pages enclosed within an artistic cover. This publication is replete with full descriptions of almost the entire stock of this enterprising firm and cannot fail to prove a boon alike to resident and mofussil customers. The goods described have all more or less been personally selected in London, Paris, and abroad, and it is, of course, apparent that personal selection by one who knows both ends of the rope, and is fully en rapport with the leading fashions at home, as well as with the modifications of them required to meet the exigencies of a tropical climate, must have caused that selection to be of just that particular class of goods needed in this country. Intending purchasers will do well to consult the pages of this exhaustive list ere purchasing Xmas gifts, novelties and trifles as well as objects of a more serious nature.

THE Auto-Car recommends motoring as a nerve strengthener. We haven't yet met a motorist who was in want of it.

TEAMS for the Calcutta Polo Tournament next month have been granted the usual concessions of reduced fares by the East Indian and other Railways. These are single fares for the double journey for players; and 4½ annas per mile for horse boxes for the double journey.

FORDHAM, the old time trainer, will be remembered by many in India, especially those who went a racing many years ago: they will be sorry to hear the poor old fellow has died in poverty and distress after years of bodily and mental misery.

ANY Indian sportsman tired of the comparative tameness of shooting tigers from machans might, perhaps, (and perhaps not) feel disposed to try the methods of the Korean tiger-hunter as set forth by Mr. F. A. Mackenzie, the war correspondent, in a letter from Seoul. He says of them: "They are probably among the boldest sportsmen in the world. Their only weapon is a great, old-fashioned flint gun with a monster barrel and a trigger seven or eight inches long. They fire, not from the shoulder, but holding their guns low, and they never miss. They can only fire one charge in an attack owing to the time required to load. They are trained to stalk the tiger, get quite close to it, and then to kill it at a shot." This is a method, one would imagine, which demands unusual nerve, and considerable accuracy of aim. How, one wonders, does a person get "quite close" to a tiger—a tiger!—when carrying such a cumbersome weapon as the one described? And what happens when the flint-gun miss-fires! In that case, we presume, the hunter pulls the trigger and the tiger does the rest!

HARROWING accounts of the effects of rough weather from certain of our friends who have just returned to India with the unusually big cold-weather contingent suggest that some bad sailors might try an experiment we are assured results in one of the simplest cures conceivable—namely, a glance at a pocket mirror! Why it is that the sight of one's own reflection in a glass should enable one to forget the rolling of the ship, the smell of the engines, and all the rest of the ingredients of mal de mer we are unable to say. Possibly the explanation is to be found in the fact that when the eye is fixed on the mirror, which, of course, is steady, it is no longer confused by the rise and fall of the horizon, and consequently there is none of the dizziness and giddiness which precede a bad attack. However, no matter what may be the explanation, the looking-glass cure is usually a very effective one, and as a pocket mirror is not an inconvenient article to carry about, its use may be safely advocated.

ANOTHER unsuccessful attempt was made at Bangalore on Monday the 11th instant, to lower the Indian twenty-five miles cycle record. The rider was Gunner Jackson of the 7th R. G. A., Bombay, who took 1 hour, 3mins. 42⅘secs. to do the distance: this was 17 1/5secs. outside the time put up by Private Fay, 19th Hussars, at Rawalpindi on the 19th of last May. The record still stands to Fay's credit at 1 hour, 3mins. 25secs. Fay has left the country.

IT is proposed to erect a swimming bath at Rangoon. The site contemplated is near the racecourse and a local company of Europeans is to be formed at once. The actual swimming bath will be 100 feet by 35 feet and it will be lined with white glazed tiles. There will be private dressing rooms on each side and a gymnasium at the end. There will also be a gallery for watching aquatic sports. The total cost of the building will be half a lakh of rupees.

SPORTSMEN at home were startled by a wire announcing that Tommy Burns was injured in a railway accident in Colorado and was lying in hospital in a serious condition. Burns, who was on his way to England to fight Gunner Moir for the world's championship on 25th November, left San Francisco in the middle of the week, and had reached Colorado on Saturday the 19th October when the mail train, in which he was travelling, had an unfortunate smash. Burns sustained slight bodily injury, and it was feared a postponement of his contest with Moir would require to be made. But it was satisfactory to learn later that the news was not so serious as was at one time expected. Mr. A. F. Bettinson, the manager of the club, received the gratifying information that Burns sailed on the 24th October by the Deutschland from New York. The American is stated to be "all right," so he should be able to give every attention to his training for this important contest.

COUNTER ATTRACTIONS were responsible for the poor attendance at the first of a series of boxing entertainments promoted by Jack McAuliffe, held at the Calcutta Concert Hall on Saturday evening last. Nevertheless those present were given a good show, Mr. A. Crawford acted as referee and Mr. Alec Marsh was the time-keeper, Messrs. Reid and Smith were the judges. There were four preliminary contests which provided good sport and Mr. J. W. Kinsley gave an excellent exhibition of club swinging. The piece de resistance was a fifteen round contest for the Middle-weight Championship of Calcutta between Drummer H. Mundy and Private T. Day both of the 1st Battalion, Northumberland Fusiliers. Mundy recently won the catch weight competition open to the Presidency Brigade at Darjeeling and for two years was winner of the Middle-weight Championship of the Eastern Transvaal, but was defeated in twelve rounds for the Middle-weight Championship of the Colony. Day was Middle-weight Champion of Blomfontein. The battle only lasted five rounds: Day was no match for his opponent and threw up the sponge at the end of the fifth round.

THE Bombay Horse and Dog Show has been fixed for the 18th, 19th and 20th February next.

OUR Bombay correspondent writes:—Though there was a handicap sweepstake the previous Saturday the official opening of the Royal Bombay Yacht Club's season only really took place this Saturday, the 9th instant. There were handicaps for "A" and "B" combined, "C" and "D" in a moderate breeze; an almost ideal evening for the sport.

In the first of these classes Turquoise got away from the other three, but Sayonara sailed steadily and eventually saved her time and won comfortably by nearly five minutes with Mannikin beating Turquoise by two.

Nine actually started for the "C" class but Clutha gave up and Coralie, and Jean were badly out of the hunt. The race was a very easy one for Peewit, who sailed away beautifully and won anyhow from Valkyrie who finished twelve and a half minutes behind her. Lapwing was third by less than a minute with Midget very close up.

Only three sailed in "D" class which was again a one boat race as Invicta had all her own way and came in fifty minutes in front of Swale, who beat Swin by nearly four minutes.

A FITTING conclusion to the new-born Bombay Cricket League, which has been an even greater success than anticipated, was the match on Tuesday and Wednesday between the Parsees and the Rest. The game itself was a very easy win by 8 wickets and 128 runs for the Rest and a most enjoyable affair altogether. Tiffined and photographed and generally looked after, the teams assembled for tea and prize-giving on the conclusion of Wednesday's play. Mrs. McCausland was kind enough to give away the prizes which went as follows:—The Shield to the G. I. P. Administrative Officers, each player getting a silver medal, best batting average gold medal to D. M. Raja (senior) of the Customs, best bowling medal to Shivram of the G. I. P. and the one for their highest individual score to V. D'Souza of the Government Telegraph.

EIGHT teams have competed on this first occasion and these have sufficed to provide a long and interesting season. The greatest good fellowship has existed, and the interest infused into what would otherwise be insignificant games has done a very great deal of good to Cricket. It helps to bring out talent which otherwise would remain hidden and provides healthy exercise for those who are not eligible to play in what is known as first class matches.

WE make no apology for again alluding to that really wonderful little invention the Chicago Flexible Shaft Horse Clipping Machine, which is advertised among the notices appearing in the middle of to-day's paper. The Chicago Flexible Shaft Company turn out clippers and groomers in many varieties, sizes and qualities; our readers would not thank us for launching out into a description of each, but we cannot refrain from alluding to one which strikes us as peculiarly attractive to Anglo-Indian horse owners and that is what is styled the "Stewart No. 1 Clipper," one of the firm's very latest developments. It seems to us compact, strong, most ingenious and from the encomiums passed on it, surprisingly efficient, so much so that it may probably achieve the distinction of being "the clipping machine of the future." We quote some of its claims to consideration:—

1. It operates practically without friction or wear.
2. Crank handle turns slowly, machine works rapidly. It's mere play to run it.
3. Gearing is enclosed in a case, beyond the reach of dust or dirt, and runs in oil.
4. This is a wonderful little machine that robs even the smallest horse owner of all excuse for not keeping his horses clipped.
5. The machine is compact in form and can be packed in a very small space and even carried in a satchel.
6. It is guaranteed to last for 20 years!

But an ounce of practice is worth a ton of theory, of this any one can convince himself by visiting our office and seeing one of the machines at work. We shall be pleased to show it to any sportsman who may care to call round and we can promise that he will be interested and surprised.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 25th October 1907.

We seem to have got over the storm period for the present: last week was distinguished by more wrecks round our coasts than we usually hear of in a month; we did not feel the gales much in London, but some of the rainstorms were quite worthy of Bengal. The rainstorms in town, however, were not to those in other parts of the kingdom. In and about Lincoln, on Thursday in last week, they measured from 2½ to 3½ inches in the 24 hours. Harrogate had 2 inches, Leith 3½ and Portland Bill no less than 4·6 inches! Needless to add there have been extensive floods in several parts of the country.

His Majesty, who has taken great interest in the Haldane Army Scheme, is going to give it a Royal benediction. Lords Lieutenant of counties have been summoned to Buckingham Palace to-morrow when the King will receive them and, it is understood, will make a speech on the subject commending the territorial scheme to their good care. The wisdom of the step is entirely characteristic, for it is an open secret that the Lords Lieutenant are not unanimous, to put it mildly, in their appreciation of the new duty which Mr. Haldane's plan thrusts upon them, and the influence of throne brought to bear in this direct and personal manner will do a great deal to smooth the way. It is one thing to fag for a politician: quite another to serve the King.

Mr. Keir Hardie's fooling in Bengal has been Mr. Morley's opportunity: he spoke out like a statesman at Arbroath on Monday, and his Liberal audience cheered him to the echo when he gave that fearful wildfowl of parish politics unstinted "beans." No doubt Reuter has given you a tolerably full precis of the Arbroath speech which, let us hope, will put heart into the unfortunate civilians and others who have to work in Babooland. Mr. Morley's utterances are regarded as entirely above and outside party politics and have been received with unanimous approval by the press of all shades of opinion.

Are we going to see a great railway strike or not? The railway authorities have not said much: the Midland has issued a circular to its men pointing out all that has been done for them during the last ten years, in temperate and dignified language. Meantime Mr. Bell vapours and threatens: there seems to be no doubt that by dint of organising many of the vacillating and half hearted have been brought into line and the situation grows more serious. Mr. Lloyd George has invited some of the leading railway authorities to meet him and discuss matters in an informal way and the meeting is taking place to-day. The companies are quietly getting together men to take the places of strikers. The domestic results of a general strike are much discussed: we are filling coal cellars, laying in supplies of condensed milk, and of flour as far as our accommodation allows. "Get in a stock of everything that can't walk" is the advice (crystallised) of those who believe in the power of Mr. Bell to call the railway servants out.

Publication of Queen Victoria's Letters in three volumes at three guineas has set enquiring minds at work in the Times. I do not suggest that the Times inspired the correspondent; but it is the fact, for what it is worth, that several letters have appeared in the Times, whose Book Club does not love Mr. Murray, asking how Mr. Murray comes to claim, by implication, copyright in Her late Majesty's letters, and charge three guineas for them to his own large profit. It must be allowed that there is force in the contention that if the copyrights are vested in any one individual that person is His Majesty: if not to any one person then to the Nation. How then is Mr. Murray entitled to exploit Royal or National property to his own advantage? Meantime Albemarle Street maintains a masterly silence. It is, I conceive, raking in the three guineas of the lieges and enjoying itself, but I hope Mr. Murray will find time to reply. It is quite probable that the king entrusted publication to him on terms which would confer all Rights on the publisher.

Strenuous endeavours are being made to save Crosby Hall from the house breaker. The Chartered Bank, owners of the site, have been very public spirited in their treatment of the matter having extended the time for purchase till the 29th instant: but £60,000 is wanted and up to yesterday only some £12,000 had been given or promised: and the fate of the most famous of old city houses is trembling in the balance.

* * * * * *

Mr. Lloyd George yesterday received a deputation which wanted to receive a formal expression of the Government's views on the subject of the proposed Channel Ferry—alternative to the discredited and abandoned tunnel scheme. Mr. Lloyd George told his visitors that all parties in the state are in favour of a Channel Ferry and that he would do all in his power to further their views. With which official encouragement the promoters can now seek the good-will of the French Government. The Ferry scheme has my private benison in a negative form: my own experience of train ferries is limited to crossing from the German port of Warnemunde to the Danish harbour of Gedser a matter of two hours on a smooth sea, and crossing from Elsinore to the Swedish coast, forty minutes on a roughish one. Given a calm sea, the business of shipping the train is a pleasant variation of the monotony of a long journey: on a rough one—well I would very much rather be in the seclusion of a berth than share the agonies of a carriage full of passengers in the same state as myself. Under such conditions a turbine boat is good enough for me.

* * * * * *

It would seem as though there was something not quite regular on the train which came to such terrible grief at Shrewsbury. At the Coroner's inquest on Wednesday it was stated that the body of a man, since identified as a bank clerk, named Kelly, had been found lying under the tender in such a situation that he could not have fallen from a carriage, but must have fallen from the engine cab. The question is what was Kelly doing on the footplate and had his presence there anything to do with the mishap. Evidence was given to show that the brakes were full on when the train ought to have been slowing down to round the curve: but the circumstance if it prove anything proves only that the brakes lacked sufficient power.

If it be true that Mr. Edison has discovered a method of storing electricity in such wise that the weight is reduced to a trifle, it means a revolution in street traffic for which we shall hold that American inventor thrice blessed. Away with motor that smells; away with the motor that roars; away with the motor that slithers and skids. Peace and quiet will reign for the electro bus has already taught us what a heavy vehicle electrically propelled is like. Then our electric light bills! two-thirds of the cost will be saved for now the great source of expense is keeping costly machinery and trained mechanics idle lest we be overwhelmed with fog. Edison should be beatified.

Mr. Frederick Fenn's one act play "The Nelson Touch" was produced at the Haymarket on Monday that being Trafalgar Day. It is too slight to enjoy long life, and only deserves mention by reason of the dramatic finale. Sam'l Denyer, deserter from the navy appears at an inn on the Portsmouth Road to converse at length with the hostess Sarah Rigley. He rails at Nelson, but does not deny his coolness and power over men. Enter an officer to say Nelson himself is coming, his coach having broken down. Exit Sam'l, to blunder into the room while the Admiral is still there. Nelson puts a few questions to him and when his A. D. C. returns tells him quietly that he has found an old shipmate who is going to rejoin with him: and Sam'l walks out after the Admiral as tamely as a spaniel. Very effective at the last moment. Mr. Louis Calvert was the deserter and played his part admirably. Miss May Chevalier as Sarah was delightful.

* * * * * *

Mr. Roy Horniman's new four act play "The Education of Elizabeth" is amusing if it is not epoch-making. It seems to be the privilege, or the weakness, of the old master of stage craft to ignore human probabilities when convenience requires: and Mr. Horniman takes advantage of the privilege at the Apollo. Elizabeth Banks is a chorus girl: the romantic youth Harry Fairfax is in love with her, and has wit enough to see that she could be improved. The grammarless Elizabeth is much addicted to slang and swear words; indeed is a common young person enough. Unfortunately Fairfax goes the wrong way to work: he persuades Elizabeth to go and spend a year at Geneva with some elderly lady of decent birth and rests satisfied that the change will work wonders. It does. Elizabeth comes back in twelve months all prunes, prisms and priggishness. She has acquired grammar and knowledge of botany: in fact she is grown so awfully superior that she staggers Harry hardly less than her old stage friends. He seems to have lost his affection for her and she is quick to see it: in an evil moment she assents to the proposition of the middle aged roue Whitby and consents to run away with him: but repenting gives him the slip at Victoria and seeks refuge in Bloomsbury lodgings where her old chorus friends, also Whitby and Harry discover her in turn. The last doing the "right thing" by her before curtain fall.

* * * * * *

My "krab" against the play is Elizabeth's unaccountable silence during the year at Geneva. She never writes to anybody nor does anyone interested hear of or from her during her absence. Of course, she may have taken a vow to put no pen to paper till she has mastered the intricacies of Lindley Murray and conquered her old natural self out of recognition: but if she loves H. Fairfax well enough to "chuck" the bohemian life she adored, she might have sent him an occasional postcard: as it is she doesn't even send him a picture postcard: an omission so extraordinary that one marvels at the failure of the other people in the play to remark upon it.

Then that abortive escapade with Whitby after her return—I'm afraid it does not ring true.

The play was excellently well acted. Mr. Lawrence Grossmith as a vacuous gilded youth was delightful: Mr. Marsh Allen was fresh and sincere as Harry and Miss Florence Lloyd was really splendid as Blanche, Elizabeth's friend. Miss Miriam Clements was heavily handicapped as Elizabeth but rose bravely to its variations.

Mr. Louis Parker, the maker of Pageants, is to arrange the Lord Mayor's show next month. He has planned a procession of the Edwards of England starting with the Confessor and closing with the sixth Edward. His Majesty the seventh will be represented by a car symbolical of his reign called the "Harvest of the Peacemaker" to be drawn by Suffolk punches led by "genuine drovers" in smock frocks. A striking feature of each reign is to be introduced and the I. Y. Rough riders are going to provide the men. Quite a good idea of Mr. Parker is to have preceding each group a banner bearing a legend to say what it is. This is distinctly advisable: I suspect Mr. Parker has often mixed with the crowd.

Barnum and Bailey are no more. An extraordinary general meeting was held on Tuesday at which the chairman announced the decision of the Directors to wind up Barnum and Bailey and sell the whole show. Barnum the Great is long dead, Bailey the less died last year and with him died apparently the dividend earning power of the Company. More than any other, said the chairman, does the show-business depend upon the manager. The concern is to be sold for £82,000 and the money paid over, shareholders receiving about 8s. or 9s. in the pound. The name Barnum and Bailey was for sale apparently, but the Directors did not see any advantage in buying it when their right to use the same expired next year.

Messrs. Gatti, of the Vaudeville Theatre, have gained their case in the Court of Appeal. You would remember that Miss Newman brought an action against them and the jury gave her £300 damages for that they held she ought to have been retained as "the Belle of Mayfair" in her capacity as Miss Edna May's understudy when Miss Edna May threw up the part. The managers engaged Miss Phyllis Dare to play it after Miss Newman had taken it for a fortnight and Miss Newman refusing to understudy Miss Dare brought an action. Mr. Justice Ridley who heard the case disapproved the verdict of the jury and the result of the appeal was practically a foregone conclusion. What chance had ever a mere manager against a nice looking actress before a jury?

I wonder whether Miss Sydenham Clarke has given up the stage since Sir George was appointed Governor of Bombay. The young lady sang very prettily and when we saw her as Fiammetta in The Gondoliers, she made an impression more than favourable though the part is not a big one. Miss Clarke had a passion for the stage and wished to adopt it as a career.

Mr. Jasper Selwyn was the victim of a bad police blunder on Tuesday night. He was leaving the "Pav," when a fool of a constable pounced upon him and insisted on taking him to Vine Street as a "wanted" ticket of leave man! He was detained, in a cell if you please, for two hours before the police could be satisfied by the people at the hotel (five minutes walk from the police station) that the prisoner was the wrong man. Mr. Selwyn is a son of the late Lord Justice Selwyn, was master of the Dulverton Hounds for some years and went to South Africa with Lord Dudley's Worcestershire Yeomanry. He is largely interested in indigo: it was his partner, Mr. Bloomfield, who was murdered in Behar some little time ago.

Some interesting figures relating to the London Police were given by Mr. Jackson, M.P., at a Police Athletic Dinner a few days ago. The force consists of 15,000 men and of these only 28 were dismissed in 1906 for misdoings: really a remarkable proof of the high standard obtaining among the men. During the same year between 3,000 and 4,000 were injured while on duty. How many mistakes they have made Mr. Jackson omitted to say.

ONLOOKER.

The Paris Menestrel says that violin-playing causes the hair to grow. On the other hand, many of our most popular songs are bawled.

A contemporary remarks that great variety is introduced into life by practising the art of dropping your friends. Unhappily, the friends one most wishes to drop generally have so much bounce.

Uncle: You know you're a man's age now, and it's time you did something to show you are a man, my boy!

Bertie: Eh! I prefwer not to overdo it at first. I've had two bweaches of promise, and been co-respondent once, I owe four figures, and I've got a bob-nailed liver. I think that's quite good for a beginning. Plenty of time to bwanch out into big things later on.

The Proprietor (shouting down the service lift): Hi, belowa there, Antonio! Cursa you—maledicciones—send up ze steak at once. De fat customer he is eat alla the bread, alla the butter, alla the sauce, alla the pickeel, while he wait.

Fishing.

KASHMIR FISHING.

I.

It is a common thing nowadays to hear adverse comments on the fishing in Kashmir, but a large proportion of this grumbling is probably due to a want of knowledge of the various seasons of the year at which different localities are at their best. Again the "chirroo" which is the most common fish in the valley is not a great fighter, and the heavy tackle commonly employed only accentuates his non-sporting proclivities. Of course, heavy tackle is necessary in many places where there is a chance, (but a remote one I fear), of getting a mahseer, but where there is no prospect of meeting the finer fish lighter tackle may be used, and on that "chirroo" will give one quite good fun.

Therefore take two rods; one, a 14-foot greenheart mahseer rod, and the other a 10-foot split cane or greenheart fly rod with a spare top for spinning.

There are many places in the valley which are little known and if one gets to these at the suitable seasons a most enjoyable time may be spent in the most pleasant of surroundings. But it is necessary to know the proper time at which these places are at their best, and it is hoped that the following few notes which have been compiled during some seasons in Kashmir may be of some use to intending visitors to that pleasant country.

First as regards tackle. This should be purchased before starting, only such as is necessary to replenish breakage and loss being purchased locally. Traces should be of both wire and gut, both double and single. A supply of gut, swivels, trebles, etc., for repairing and making up the above and for making up flights for dead bait. The most useful artificial baits are the blue phantom minnow and the silver devon minnow, both in sizes from 1½ to 3 inches spoons should be silver and gilt, size 1½ to 2½ inches. Some small silver spoons about a quarter of an inch long are also very useful. These any mistri, if given a larger spoon as pattern, will make up. As regards flies very few of the ordinary varieties are of any use, and it is much better to tie one's flies one's self. With a little practice one can become sufficiently adept to tie a passable fly. Of the manufactured ones the following will be found useful, the Blackamoor, Smoky Dun, Zulu, Silver Sedge, Teal and Green, and White Moth. The home made ones will be described later.

The boat, which most people take on at Baramulla, should be a Doonga and not a Doonga Houseboat, for the latter although more comfortable in wet weather are a great bother to move about and sometimes cannot go to places where a Doonga would at low river. If the boat has not been engaged beforehand on the recommendation of a friend try to get one whose owner or some member of whose crew is a good fisherman. Without a good fisherman as boatman that expensive parasite the "machli shikari" will have to be engaged. Although many of these are quite good at their trade and will show one what is to be had, yet it is best to do without them if possible as they add largely to the expenses of the trip not only in the way of salary, but also by the intimate acquaintance one gets with that terrible pest, "the fissin teckle merchant." One finds that one's tackle is lost or breaks with extraordinary rapidity and has to be replaced by the latter specious individual, while a good boatman will, with a supply of materials make one up all the traces that are necessary and frequently will be able to make up flies.

Baramulla is not much good until the river begins to run down, that is, about the middle of August. Here there is a chance of mahseer as well as chirroo, which run fairly big. The best places are under and below the bridge, and at a dhobi-ghat on the right bank below the city. A mile or more below the city are two more good places. The first is on the right bank just opposite the place where the Tonga road comes round a bluff immediately above the river on the left bank. The second place is half a mile lower down and is marked by four large chenars on the right bank. In neither of these places are chirroo to be met with and as the mahseer are few and far between it as well to be prepared for many blank days. A two inch spoon or dead bait are the most successful, but the latter for preference. Fish deep and at the two lower runs use a wire trace as the river there is full of boulders which play "old Harry" with the gut. Further if one should happen to get into a mahseer the tackle needs to be as strong as possible for the current is very swift as the river is approaching the rapids. Both these places are well worth many a trial, as should one's patience be rewarded, the one red-letter day amply repays the many blank ones.

The next place moving up the river is Sopor. This place has a great reputation in the valley, which, speaking from personal experience it does not live up to. It's very renown has probably had a great deal to do with it, as it is always crowded and an early start is necessary to secure one of the likely spots which are always quickly taken. These, here, are under the two shoreward bays of the bridge and just below the bridge itself. But if fishing below the centre arches of the bridge beware of the sunken ruins of the old bridge which are just below the present one. Many a good trace and fish too, has been lost there. Below the bridge is a large pool where trolling, if you care for it, will give good results. Spoon, (1½ inch) phantom minnow, and dead bait are, like at Baramulla, all useful: the best season being from the middle or end of July onwards.

From Sopor boats moving up the river skirt the edge of the Woollar and go up the Nooroo Canal which comes out of the river at Shadipore above the lake. The canal enters the Woollar at the village of Nawidkai and a couple of miles above that is the village of Anderkoote. This is a small village built on a knoll on the right bank of the canal which here runs through a strip of pasture land reclaimed from the surrounding jheels by mulberry covered bunds on each side. These pastures are at high river completely covered with water and it is not till about the middle of July that the canal has subsided a foot below its meadow banks. From them onwards until early September, when the canal is very nearly dry it is quite a good spot, but passed over by nearly all the boats hurrying up to more celebrated places. The best places are half a mile above the village where the canal gives some bends finally giving a right angled bend to the left or then another to the right, left (looking up stream). The canal is only about five yards broad and not very swift flowing so here comes in one's light rod and light tackle. Use a single gut trace with one of the small silver spoons, or if the water is at all discoloured a small silver devon. Very small dead bait is also useful. Fish from either bank and cast right across to where the chirroo are rising at a shoal of chilwa. Cast right into the shoal and you will rise a fish almost every time; if you don't let the current work your line across to your own bank and you will perhaps rise one as you draw your line up under that. If the fish are on the feed do not fish deep and fish under the banks, but if they are not on the feed fish deep and in the middle of the stream. The best times of day are the early morning and the evening. There is a convenient backwater for one's boat opposite the village, but beware of the mosquitoes which fairly swarm. The biggest fish I caught there was seven pounds on a fine single gut trace and a small spoon and he gave me lots of fun.

On emerging from the Nooroo Canal into the river one arrives at Shadipore, at the junction of the Jhelum and the Sind. We will leave Shadipore for the present, as it is not much good until later in the season, and move up the Sind to Ganderbal.

This place is about six hours journey up the Sind and is situated at the foot of the hills which form the boundaries of the Sind valley. A little way above the camping grounds the river is no longer passable for boats as it comes down in several narrow pebbly beds which join into one just opposite a small village on the right bank. It is here that are the best places, fishing anywhere from the bank. The favourite place of all is from a boat moored in the centre of the stream where two branches meet. Ganderbal is one of the spawning places of the chirroo and, therefore, the fishing is not open until the 1st July, so that most of the fish that are caught there during that month are those who have not gone down again after spawning. They are all lying amongst the stones at the bottom so it is necessary to fish deep so use a wire trace for gut soon gets frayed. A two inch silver and gilt spoon is the ony thing to use here, for the fish will look at nothing else. The biggest fish I have seen caught was one of 23 pounds, though personally I have never taken anything over twelve. But a fish of that size in the heavy water makes a heavy rod a necessity. As the season advances the fishing deteriorates for the fish run down into the big river as the water gets low, until by the middle of August there is nothing to be got.

But early in September a fish called the choosh may be caught in large numbers by fishing at night with a frog. This fish is in every way much better than the chirroo: he is a nicer looking fish, his flesh is much better, and above all he is a much more sporting fish as he puts up quite a good fight. His only drawback is that at that season he will not look at anything in the day time. The river by this time is very low, several little sand bars appearing and it is in the runs below these either fishing from a boat or from the bank that the best results are obtained. Make up a small frog tackle (or at least half a dozen of them as breaks are frequent) consisting of a lip hook with a small triangle about an inch below. The lip hook is passed through the frog's head with the treble hanging below his belly and out behind his hind legs. The frog is thrown like a fly so to enable one to see what one is doing it is best to choose a period when the moon is nearly full. The fish do not take until the frogs come down to the river from the rice fields. They come down in swarms, little fellows about as big as a thumb nail, and directly one hears the flop flop as they jump into the river one knows it is time to begin. From then on to daybreak the fish will be on the feed. Use a light rod and light tackle and the choosh will give you many a nice little fight.

Sirdar Jewan Singh's Berzak, 10st. 7lb. ...	Ames	2
Captain Holden's Lady Drake, 8st. ...	Melsom	3

Also ran: Russley Maid, 9-14.

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Vienard, 2 to 1 agst. Russley Maid, 4 to 1 Berzak, 10 to 2 Lady Drake.

Berzak showed the way to the distance where Vienard joined him, a good finish resulting in favour of Vienard by three-quarters of a length; four lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 20secs.

THE EPSOM PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high-weight handicap for Arab and C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 500 or over and others 14-1 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 500 or over. 4 furlongs.

Sirdar Jewan Singh's Black Spot, 9st. 3lb.	Ames	1
Mr. Higgin's Wild Rose, 7st. 12lb. ...	Melsom	2
Major Williamson's Rockingham, 6st. 7lb. (car. 6st. 9lb.)	Kadir	3

Also ran: Sago, 9-4; Mousie, 8-12; May Queen, 8-0; Grey Lady, 6-7.

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Wild Rose, 2 to 1 Black Spot, 4 to 1 May Queen, 5 to 1 Sago, 6 to 1 each Grey Lady and Rockinghams, 10 to 1 Mousie.

Wild Rose led closely attended by Black Spot: at the distance the latter went to the front and won by three lengths comfortably: half a length between second and third. Time—53½secs.

SUBSTITUTION PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. For Arab C.-B. ponies 14-1, and other classes 14 and under with penalties and allowances. 1 mile.

Mr. Brandreth's Bob Major, 10st. 7lb. ...	Melsom	1
Col. Morris' Rifleman, 10st. 9lb. ...	A. Hoyt	2
Mr. Mulliken's K. C., 11st. 5lb. ...	Owner	3

BETTING: 7 to 4 on Rifleman, 5 to 4 agst. Bob Major, 5 to 1 K. C.

Bob Major led from start to finish winning in spite of a challenge from Rifleman by three-quarters of a length; K. C. third six lengths behind. Time—1min. 57secs.

THE SELLING PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high-weight handicap for ponies 14-1 and under entered to be sold for Rs. 1,000. 5 furlongs.

Sirdar Jewan Singh's Black Swan, 10st. 7lb	Ames	1
Mr. Power's Rosamond, 7st. 7lb. ...	Melsom	2
Major Williamson and Mr. Brandreth's Irish, 10st.	Hoyt	3

BETTING: Evens Rosamond, 2 to 1 agst. each of the others.

Black Swan was first away and after two furlongs was joined by Rosamond. In the straight Black Swan again went ahead and won easily by three lengths: half a length between second and third. Time—1min. 7secs.

THE PRODUCE PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high-weight handicap for C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 500 over. 5 furlongs.

Mr. Bedham's Lotus, 9st. 7lb.	Melsom	1
Sirdar Jewan Singh's Ringfaulka, 9st. 7lb.	Ames	2
Capt. Ley's Black Rock, 7st. 6lb. ...	A. Hoyt	3

Also ran: Butterfly, 10-0; Lady Wheeler, 8-1.

BETTING: Evens Lotus and Ringfaulka, 4 to 1 agst. Lady Wheeler, 6 to 1 the others.

Ringfaulka and Lady Wheeler made the running for a quarter of a mile, then Lotus took second place and in the run in passed Ringfaulka and won by two lengths; same distance between second and third. Time—1min. 8secs.

Third Day, Wednesday, 6th November 1907.

Fields were on the small side to-day and non-declarations in a couple of cases caused further depletions. The November Plate ended in a win for Captains Holden's Lady Drake after a close finish with Vienard. The latter was, however, disqualified for having a professional up, the race being for G. R.'s only. The last race was run in the dark and the judge being unable to separate the two runners at the finish, the owners agreed to divide. Results.

HURDLE HANDICAP.—

Mr. Mulliken's K. C., 10st. 7lb. ...	Mr. Dibben	1
Mr. Power's Rosamond, 10st. 6lb. ...	Owner	2

Also ran: Mosenstein, 10st. 2lb. (fell).

BETTING: 5 to 1 Mosenstein, 2 to 1 agst. Rosamond, 4 to 1 K. C.

K. C. led to the half mile where Mosenstein went to the front but came to grief at the last hurdle, leaving K. C. to win at his ease by two lengths. Time—3mins. 12secs.

THE NOVEMBER PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, Rs. 50 to the third. A welter handicap hurdle race for horses which are bona-fide and unconditionally the property of officers in His Majesty's Army on full pay. To be ridden by the same or by G. Rs. qualified under rule 68. About 2 miles over 8 flights of hurdles.

Capt. Holden's Lady Drake, 11st. ...	Owner	1

Also ran: Arcadia, 10st. (ran out); Vienard, 11st. (disqualified.)

BETTING: 3 to 1 on Vienard, 3 to 1 agst. Lady Drake, 5 to 1 Arcadia.

Arcadia ran out at the seven furlongs and Vienard joined Lady Drake, who was out with the lead. They were together after the last hurdle and a good race home ended in a win for Lady Drake by a head. Vienard was disqualified for being ridden by a professional.

THE PORTLAND PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high-weight handicap for Arab ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 500 or over. 4 furlongs.

Mr. Cooper's Little Red Rat, 8st. 2lb. ...	Bray	w. o.

Tommy Titus, 9st., was to have started and Melsom had been engaged to ride and was ready to weigh out, but Mr. Scott had forgotten to make his declaration in time.

THE VISITOR PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high-weight handicap for Arabs and C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 500 or over, and other ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 1,500 or over. 1,000 yards.

The Kour Sahib of Patiala's Sago, 8st. 12lb.	Southall	1
Mr. Osbourne's Grey Lady, 6st. 3lb. (car. 7st. 2lb.)	Manley	2
Major Williamson's Rockingham, 7st. 7lb.	A. Hoyt	3
Mr. Sydney Smith's May Queen, 8st. 8lb....	Bisesar	4

Also ran: Black Swan II., 11-7; Mousie, 9-0; Black Rock, 9-12 (carried 7-1).

BETTING: Evens Sago, 3 to 1 each agst. Rockingham and Grey Lady, 6 to 1 each May Queen and Black Swan, 10 to 1 the others.

Black Swan was first away but was quickly passed by Grey Lady, who led to the distance. Here Sago came alongside and drawing away won by a length and a half: a length between second and third. Time,—60secs.

THE FAREWELL PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high-weight handicap for Arab ponies 14-1 and under. 6 furlongs.

Mr. Mullkin's K. C., 7st. 6lb. ...	Kadir

BETTING: 5 to 2 on Rifleman, 6 to 4 agst. K. C.

After a close finish the judge failed to separate them and the owners divided.

KARACHI AUTUMN MEETING.

STEWARDS:

A. D. YOUNGHUSBAND, ESQ., C.S.I. | W. L. GRAHAM, ESQ.
LIEUT. COL. TRAVERS, 24th Regiment | G. O. BOASE, ESQ., R.F.A.
| C. S. ANDERSON, ESQ.
| G. O'HARA, ESQ.

Judge:—MAJOR H. W. COBHAM.
Starter:—CAPTAIN H. L. MURROW.
Clerk of the Scales:—R. L. PALMER, ESQ.
Time-keeper:—W. A. BRESLAUER, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary:—CAPTAIN T. C. GREENWAY, 24th Regiment.

First Day, Tuesday, 29th October 1907.

BEDOUIN PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the first, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For Arab ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 50 or over. 4 furlongs.

Mr. W. Graham's b a g Hero, 9st. 11lb. ...	Col. O'Donnell	1
Mr. G. E. Morgan's g a g Greyling, 10st. ...	Mr. Boase	2
Capt. Greenway's ch a h Snowflake, 8st. 13lb.	Mr. Greenfield	3

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Greyling, 4 to 1 agst. Snowflake, and 2 to 1 Hero.

Greyling and Snowflake made joint running to the distance when Hero challenged and won a fine race by a head. Time—57secs.

HYDERABAD STAKES.—Rs. 200 to the first, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For horses that have not won a race value Rs. 200 or over since 31st March 1905. 6 furlongs.

Mr. S. C. Woodward's b aus g P. D. Q., 11st. 6lb.	Mr. Elgee	1
Mr. G. O. Boase's b aus g Dawn, 11st. 2lb.	Owner	2
Mr. W. Llewellyn's ch aus g King Tom, 10st. 6lb.	Mr. Greenfield	3

Also ran: Bill Squires and Shooting Star.

After a lot of trouble at the post caused by P. D. Q. who repeatedly broke away and then refused to join his horses, they got off to a good start and P. D. Q. making most of the running was able to shake off a strong challenge by Dawn and win a nice race by half a length, bad third. Time—1min. 21½secs.

BETTING: 5 to 2 on P. D. Q., 3 to 1 Dawn, and any price the others.

ARAB POLO STAKES.—Rs. 200 to the first, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For Arab polo ponies. 24 furlongs.

Mr. W. A. Jelbart's ch a g Kashmir, 11st. 2lb.	Mr. Elgee	1
Capt. Morgan's g a g Greyling, 9st. 13lb. ...	Mr. Boase	2
Capt. Taylor's b a g Nigma, 10st. 11lb. ...	Owner	3

Also ran: Mick, Hero, Bhopal and Chicot.

Mick was a hot favourite, but in an execrable flag start was left three lengths as was Chicot, who had bolted twice previously, once nearly to Clifton and the other time ran the full course. Kashmir and Greyling got off in front and there they remained, the former winning by a head, with half a length between second and third. Time—31secs.

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Mick, 5 to 2 agst. Kashmir, 5 to 1 Greyling, and 10 to 3 Nigma.

THE TRIAL PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the first Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under and other ponies 14-1 and under, which have never won a race value Rs. 200. 4 furlongs.

Mr. W. Graham's ch aus m Achievement, 11st. 5lb.	Owner	1
Mr. H. Elgee's br g Eminent, 12st. 11lb.	Owner	2
Capt. James' b g Camrew, 11st. 7lb. ...	Mr. O'Hara	3

Also ran: Maranta, Careless, Silver II, and Jenny Lind.

Achievement got off in front and won a good race by half a length: three lengths between second and third. Time—63secs.

BETTING: Evens Careless, 3 to 1 agst. Achievement, 6 to 1 Eminent, and 10 to 1 the others.

Another long delay at the post caused by Careless bolting and running to the seven furlong post before she could be pulled up, she also bolted on her way back to the starting post and seemed to be giving her rider a most unpleasant time of it.

THE DESERT PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the first, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For Arab ponies 14-1 and under which have never won a race value Rs. 200. 7 furlongs.

Capt. A. Toogood's ch a g Broome, 10st. 5lb.	Capt. Marriott	1
Mr. W. A. Jelbart's ch a g Kasmir, 10st. 6lb.	Owner	2

Also ran: Alexis, Liberal, and Muscana.

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Alexis, 7 to 2 agst. Plebeian, 2 to 1 Kashmir, and 6 to 1 Broome.

Plebeian and Kashmir made joint running with Broome treading on their heels to the 3 furlongs post when Broome took the lead and keeping it to the end, won by a head. Time—1min. 43secs.

Second Day, Thursday, 31st October 1907.

THE BEDOUIN HANDICAP.—Rs. 200 to the first, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for Arab ponies that were eligible for and entered for the Bedouin Plate or Desert, Plate on the first day. 5 furlongs.

Mr. W. Graham's Hero, 8st. 12lb. ...	Mr. Boase	1
Col. O'Donnell and Capt. Toogood's Liberal, 10st.	Mr. Elgee	2
Mr. Jelbart's Kashmir, 11st. 4lb. ...	Owner	3

Also ran: Mick, Chicot.

Kashmir and Liberal made joint running to the distance post when Kashmir was beaten and Liberal appeared a certain winner, but all of a sudden Hero swept down on him and settled him in two strides, winning by one length: two lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 12secs.

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Liberal, 2 to 1 agst. Kashmir and 7 to 1 Hero.

KARACHI HANDICAP.—Rs. 200 to the first, Rs. 100 to the second and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for horses that were eligible and entered for Hyderabad Stakes on first day. 1 mile.

Mr. Woodward's P. D. Q. 12st. ...	Mr. Elgee	1
Mr. Boase's Dawn, 11st. 7lb. ...	Owner	2
Mr. Llewellyn's King Tom, 10st. ...	Mr. Greenfield	3

Also ran: Shooting Star.

When the barrier was raised Shooting Star refused to move, and Dawn and King Tom took a long time making up their minds to start, the result being that P. D. Q. soon established a 20 lengths lead, which he maintained to the end, bad third. Time—1min. 55secs.

BETTING: 6 to 4 on P. D. Q., 3 to 1 agst. Dawn, 20 to 1 others.

ARAB POLO HANDICAP.—Rs. 200 to the first, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for ponies that were eligible and entered for the Arab Polo Stakes on first day. 8 furlongs.

Capt. Toogood and O'Kelly's Mick, 10st. 8lb. ... ... Capt. Toogood 1
Mr. Jelbart's Kashmir, 11st. 7lb. ... Mr. Elgee 2
Mr. Edward's Bhopal, 10st. ... Mr. Greenfield 3
Also ran: Nigma, Greyling and Chicot.

BETTING: Evens Mick, 7 to 2 Kashmir, 4 to 1 Greyling 10 to 1 Bhopal.

Mick got off in front and won in a canter by one length: four lengths between second and third. Time—41⅕secs.

THE I.C.S. CUP.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for ponies that were eligible and entered for the Trial Plate on first day. 5 furlongs.

Also ran: Careless, Eminent, Achievement, Camrew, Carmela and Silver II.

BETTING: 2 to 1 Careless, 4 to 1 each agst. Necklace and Maranta, and 6 to 1 Jenny Lind.

Eminent made play for three furlongs when Necklace took the lead, Maranta who had been lying last closing up, at the distance Necklace gave way to Maranta, who won pulling up by two lengths: half a length between second and third. Time—1min. 52⅕secs.

DESERT HANDICAP.—Rs. 200 to the first Rs. 100 to the second, Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for Arab ponies that were eligible for and entered for the Bedouin Plate or the Desert Plate on first day. 1 mile.

Capt. B. T. Ready's Alexis, 10st. 8lb. ...Capt. Toogood 1
Capt. Toogood's Broome, 10st. 13lb. A ...Capt. Marriott 2
Capt. Greenway's Plebeian, 10st. 13lb. ... Mr. O'Hara 3
Also ran: Muscana.

BETTING: 7 to 1 on Alexis, 2 to 1 agst. Broome, 3 to 1 Plebeian, and 10 to 1 Muscana.

Plebeian and Broome ran side by side until rounding the bend, when Alexis strode to the front, and won easily by half a length: two lengths between second and third. Time not taken.

Third Day, Saturday, 2nd November 1907.

SCINDE HANDICAP.—Rs. 200 to the first Rs. 100 to the second, Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for Arab ponies that started on first or second day at this meeting. 6 furlongs.

MEERUT AUTUMN MEETING.

STEWARDS :

COL. F. K. L. BEAVER.	MAJ. N. T. NICKALLS, 17th (D. C. O.) Lancers.
LODOVIC POTTER, ESQ., C.S.	MAJ. NORLETT, Royal Irish Rifles.
MAJ. S. D. BROWNE, R.H.A.
MAJ. C. F MURRAY, S. AND T. CORPS.

First Day, Saturday, 9th November 1907.

IT is some seasons now since Meerut racing has shown such promise, as has been foreshadowed by the very full entries and this promise has obtained considerable confirmation through to-day's field and sport. The 17th Lancers made the reputation of Lucknow in their last Indian tour, and they will set their seal on the standard of Meerut racing, and as an earnest of this, Captain Lockett of this gallant regiment, who has raced in England, has now taken over the reins of office, so long and ably held by Captain Bryant, whom we were all pleased to see here as a visitor. All the details of management leave nothing to be desired. The course is somewhat heavy going, but this is a fault in the right direction. There was a very large attendance on the course, including General and Mrs. Henry. Many more visitors are expected by Monday when the polo tournament opens. The intending visitors from Lucknow have been detained by the opposition show, got up by the Lucknow race management in the shape of an open gymkhana, anent which an official representation has been made to the Calcutta Turf Club. We had a splendid day's racing, and the best race of the day was that for the Garmuktesar Plate, for which thirteen very high class ponies went to the post and provided a very close finish. Twenty-two were handicapped, and thirteen accepted. This race was a very flattering tribute to Colonel Mayne's allotment. There is every indication of to-day's class of sport being preserved through the next two days, and an extra day is to be held next Saturday. The 5th Cavalry and 31st Lancers were "At Home," and the latter regiment's fine band played a choice selection of music.

THE U. P. DERBY.—Value Rs. 350, Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, Rs. 50 to the third. W. A. & C. raised 3st. 7lb. For C.-B horses the property of zemindars in the U. P. 6 furlongs.

Thakore Hurnarainsingh's Chikari, 11st. 6lb.	... Capt. Bennett	1
Bahadur Ali Khan's Star, 10st. 10lb.	... Mr. Anderson	2
Ali Ahmed's Boy, 10st. 10lb.	... Mr. Platt	3

Also ran : Rani, 11-2.

BETTING : Evens Chikari, 2 to 1 agst. Rani, 4 to 1 Star, 10 to 1 Boy.

Star got away with a long lead off Chikari, but the latter gradually overhauled the former and finally won by four lengths : four lengths also between second and third. No time taken.

Rani giving trouble at the post, her jockey declined to ride, and she did not start.

BEDDOES PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for Arab ponies. ½ mile.

Captain Bennett's Pardon, 8st. 9lb.	... Melsom	1

BETTING : 6 to 4 agst. Pardon, 2 to 1 Betty, 4 to 1 Marengo, 6 to 1 others.

Lode Star was quickest out of the machine, and led for a couple of furlongs. Then he fell away, being passed in turn by Pardon, Betty and Marengo. After this Pardon kept the lead and won. Time—56½secs.

THE PONY HURDLES.—Value, Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for ponies. About 1¼ miles over 7 flights.

Captain Holden's Pathfinder, 11st. 5lb.	... Owner	1
Colonel Morris' Rifleman, 9st. 3lb.	... A. Hoyt	2
Captain Bennett's Pinfire, 8st. 12lb.	... Owner	3

Also ran : Companion, 11.

BETTING : Evens Pathfinder, 3 to 1 each agst. Pinfire and Rifleman, 5 to 1 Companion.

Pinfire and Rifleman at once went to the head of affairs, and raced side by side some lengths in front of the other pair, till after the three-quarter mile Pathfinder began to close up on the leaders. After landing over the final hurdle Pathfinder challenged, and drawing away won a nicely ridden race by a length : five lengths between second and third. Time—3mins. 38secs.

GURMUKHTESAR PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for ponies that have not won flat races value Rs. 50 or over amounting in aggregate to Rs. 800 or over since 31st March 1905. ¼ mile.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 25th October 1907.

THE TURF.

BIRMINGHAM.

THE course at Bromford Bridge is a bit on the boggy side, something like that at Derby, only more so; but by keeping the grass long and the liberal use of the Cambridge roller the executive had it in capital order yesterday, the going being as nearly perfect as possible. Neither of the London trains was crowded, the North-Western starting too early to drag people up to Euston on a Monday, but the Midland cross-country service was better patronised, and the attendance was a good one, though mainly confined to the local element. The sun shone in April-like fashion, taking the sharp edge off a coldish breeze, and the afternoon was pleasant enough. The members' enclosure held a fair sprinkling of ladies, and Tattersall's was pretty well patronised.

MONDAY NURSERY PLATE (Handicap)—Of 300sovs.; second receives 20sovs., and third 10sovs. 7 furlongs, straight.

Mr. J. L. Dugdale's b c Aristocracy, by Galeazzo—Lady Lena, 9st. ...	W. Halsey	1
Mr. J. F. Appleyard's b g Zancig, 7st. 7lb.	H. Watts	2

(Winner trained by J. Dawson.)

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Skevening, 5 to 2 Maggie Stuart colt, 6 to 1 Last Link II. colt, 8 to 1 Java, 10 to 1 each Lady Cringle and Vermont, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won a good race by three-quarters of a length; two lengths divided second and third. Time—1min. 45-4/5secs. The winner was sold for 220 guineas to Mr. G. Thursby.

GATWICK.

A MORE glorious day than lit up the magnificent panorama dominated by the grand stand at Gatwick could not have been afforded even by August. Though the card boasted no weighty item, the attendance, short of the corresponding number last year, redeemed the average of 1904 and 5, and from London and Brighton plenty of people came to make up a good company, whilst Tattersall's mustered in force.

STAYERS' HANDICAP—Of 500sovs.; second receives 50sovs. and third 20sovs. 2 miles.

Mr. F. Lynham's b g Asticot, by Krakatoa—Astree, 4yrs., 7st. 6lb.	H. Pike	1

Mr. J. C. Sullivan's Chrysoberyl, 4yrs., 8st. 6lb.	W. Higgs	0
Capt. E. M. Grigg's Salford, 5yrs., 7st. 13lb.	J. Plant	0
Sir E. Vincent's Charles Edward, 3yrs., 7st. 7lb.	F. Bullock	0
Duke of Portland's Witty Girl, 3yrs., 7st. 2lb.	E. Lancaster	0

(Winner trained by Owner.)

BETTING: 11 to 4 agst. Asticot, 5 to 1 Chrysoberyl, 6 to 1 Examiner, 7 to 1 Veno, 10 to 1 each Father Blind, Salford, and Knocknagarm, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won a good race by a head; two lengths divided second and third. Time—3mins. 32secs.

GATWICK STAKES—Of 500sovs., for three and four-year-olds; second receives 70sovs., and third 30sovs. 1¼ mile.

Lord Derby's ch f Yellow Peril, by Carbine—Orange, 4yrs., 9st. 9lb. ...	D. Maher	1
Mr. J. D. Cohn's b f Yashmak, 3yrs., 7st. 7lb. (car. 7st. 10lb.)	W. Higgs	2
Mr. L. Robinson's br c Larino, 4yrs., 8st. 5lb.	H. Randall	3
Capt. Laing's Paddington, 4yrs., 9st. 12lb.	W. Halsey	0
Mr. J. L. Dugdale's Ashkirk, 4yrs., 8st. 5lb.	C. Trigg	0

(Winner trained by Hon. G. Lambton.)

BETTING: 5 to 2 agst. Silver Bay, 4 to 1 each Easter Monday II. and Passing By, 5 to 1 Pillo, 6 to 1 Three Feathers colt, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won a good race by a head; three-parts of a length separated second and third.

As has often been the case, notably at Lingfield on Saturday last, the weather in Town has given a false index to that further afield, and yesterday those who braved the rainy morning found different conditions at Gatwick, where bright sunshine flooded the Surrey Weald. From Brighton and London the attendance was a capital one, including many of the principal patrons of the national sport. The course rode heavy, especially on the far side, and horses finished a bit tired.

CHARLWOOD HANDICAP—Of 200sovs.; second receives 20sovs. and third 10sovs. 5 furlongs.

Mr. A. Cort's b g Adlyh, by Maccana—Lady Ilsley, 3yrs., 6st. 4lb. ...	W. Broadwood	1
Mr. E. Christie Miller's br g The Devil, aged, 8st. 10lb.	W. Halsey	2
Mr. A. Stevens' ch f Elfin Revel, 3yrs., 7st. 10lb.	Walter Griggs	3
Mr. H. Trimmer's Poker, 3yrs., 7st. 2lb. ...	F. Greening	0
Mr. E. Dresden's High Flyer, 3yrs., 7st. 4lb.	F. Bullock	0

Mrs. E. Brandon's The Dame, 3yrs., 6st.	H. Watts	0

(Winner trained by Cort.)

BETTING: 6 to 1 each agst. The Loaf and Elfin Revel, 7 to 1 each Little Theo, High Flyer, and Poker, 8 to 1 each Adlyh and the Devil, 9 to 1 Wand, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won by a neck; a head divided second and third. Time—1min. 4secs.

SURREY STAKES—Of 500sovs., for two and three-year-olds; second receives 70sovs., and third 30sovs. 7 furlongs.

Mr. Fairie's b f Jubilee, by Diamond Jubilee—Japonica Rose, 3yrs. 9st. 4lb.	D. Maher	1
Mr. D. R. Browning's b c Tom Wedgwood, 3yrs., 9st.	H. Stokes	2

Mr. G. Moore's W. M., 7st. 2lb. ...	J. Howard	0

(Winner trained by Torterolo.)

BETTING: 3 to 1 agst. Understudy, 6 to 1 Ampelos, 7 to 1 each Arcas, Pillo, and Myne, 8 to 1 each Lister, Strangways, and Lagos, and 100 to 7 each others (offered).

Won by a length and a half; a head divided second and third. Pavia was fourth, Arcas fifth, Lagos sixth, Strangways seventh, Lister eighth, and W. M. last.

SANDOWN PARK.

THE Metropolitan brigade came down in strength to Sandown yesterday, to face pretty uncomfortably in an April-like afternoon, in which we got more showers than sunshine. The attendance was a fairly good one, including many of the principal patrons of the national sport, and a good muster of the silver ringers. The going was a bit soft, and the hoofs cut in slightly, but not so deeply as at Gatwick.

ORLEANS NURSERY HANDICAP—Of 300sovs.; second receives 25sovs. 5 furlongs.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE scoring in the leading leagues on Saturday was small in the First Division, heavy in the second, and up to the average in the Southern League. The ten games in the latter yielded 30 goals, and the results may be described as normal. In only one instance was there a turnover in the result as compared with last season, Queen's Park Rangers reversing the score of 2—3 by which they lost to Portsmouth at Park Royal, while other teams to gain a point were Crystal Palace and Plymouth Argyle on their own grounds, and Brighton and Hove at Tottenham. Six of the game were drawn—a remarkable state of affairs—and this suggests equality of ability to an unusual degree. The home teams won in each game where the two points were annexed. In the League premier division there was also one change over of a couple of points as compared with last season. Aston Villa accomplishing the altogether unexpected in administering the first defeat in the tournament to Sheffield Wednesday at Owlerton. A point each, as compared with 1906-7, was gained by Preston North End at Nottingham, by Bury at Bristol, by Middlesbrough at Sunderland, and by Manchester City on their own ground against the champions. In this League four home clubs won, three lost, and three games were drawn, the ten matches producing only 24 goals, of which 11 were obtained in two fixtures. There were 35 goals in the nine games in the Second Division; five home teams won, two lost, and two games were drawn. In one case there was a gain of two points, Burnley bringing off a dramatic win at Barnsley, and a single point was gained by West Bromwich, Leicester Fosse, Chesterfield, and Bradford City, when compared with last season's results.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

The best performance of the afternoon, in my opinion, was Milwall's escape from defeat at Plymouth. The Argyle have had a phenomenal run of success, having played eight games in the tournament without having suffered defeat. They almost had their escutcheon tarnished by the Dockers, the bustling, go-ahead style of the latter upsetting the more precise movements of the Westerners, who were frequently hard pressed, but halved the points at the finish. The first appearance in London of Bradford Park Avenue was an event of some importance, and they were welcomed by a big crowd at Boleyn Castle, a particularly hearty cheer being given Craig, the Avenue captain, who made a big name for himself when a member of the West Ham team. The visitors did not disappoint the onlookers, but they should not have been allowed to halve the points, for enough chances came the way of the United for them to have won comfortably. Faulty shooting and hesitation in front of goal were fatal to their chances of complete success. The game at Sydenham between the Palace and New Brompton was curious in the extreme. At half-time not a goal had been scored, but towards the close of the second period nothing seemed easier than to beat the defence at both ends, and the result was a draw of 3—3. The extent of Watford's win over Reading was more emphatic than was anticipated, and I am sorry to learn that towards the finish unnecessary feeling was shown. The points were very welcome to Watford, who needed a lift up the table, and if their forwards reproduce the dash and energy which characterised their efforts against Reading they will sorely trouble the defence of opposing teams.

The Queen's Park Rangers have the distinction of having scored more goals in the Southern League than any other club, but their defence has not been beyond reproach. However, the team is now playing well together, and it gave further evidence of its ability on Saturday, when Portsmouth were beaten by the odd goal in five in a keen struggle at Park Royal. The Rangers have been wonderfully consistent, and are now only a couple of points behind the leaders, for a similar number of games. Tottenham Hotspur cannot get into their stride, and their weakness lies forward. It is true that the 'Spurs' goal has been captured more often than one cares to see, but this is in some measure due to the extra work thrown upon the defence because of the poorness of attack. Further experiments were made on Saturday in the game against Brighton and Hove, but they were not a success. The honours were divided, and the visitors were fully entitled to their share of the spoils. Swindon, who made a few changes in their team, made themselves secure in the first half on their match against Luton, the latter being very disappointing. Leyton did not have a fruitless journey to Norwich, one point coming their way, and for this they have to thank in no small measure the stubbornness of their defence. The forward work on both sides was ragged, and the game was not one to enthuse over. Brentford did not belie their reputation in going down heavily at the Dell, and one begins to surmise whether the players leave their hearts behind them when they are away from Griffin Park. It is time the monotony of losses on opponents' grounds were varied by at least a draw. Northampton were very hard pressed by Bristol Rovers, at Northampton, and it was fortunate for them that Cooch was in brilliant form in goal. The Rovers were a trifle unlucky to only draw.

LEAGUE DIVISION I.

The tide has turned for Chelsea, and one hopes it will flow strongly in the direction of success. On Saturday they were at Birmingham, where they met a weakened City side, but the visitors were not at full strength, although they had the assistance for the first time of Fred Rouse, the ex-Everton player, who was formerly a great favourite in London amateur football. Chelsea did two noteworthy things on Saturday. They scored their first goal in the premier division away from home, and they returned without having to lament defeat, thankful that they had picked up a point, even though it was from so lowly placed a club as Birmingham. Rouse was a success, and there was such an improvement in the forward line that it more than favourably compared with the opposing quintette. Are we to see a permanent all-round improvement in Chelsea? Time is on the wing, and it is necessary there should be if lost ground is to be made up. That the South is on the mend was further shown at Plumstead, where Woolwich won a slashing game by the odd goal in three. It was a match one could look on and enjoy. It was not a kid glove exhibition, hard knocks being given and taken, and if there were more shoulder to shoulder charging the play would be so much the more enjoyable. As Bristol City managed to hold their own with Bury, the three Southern clubs in the First Division of the League all averted defeat on Saturday.

Manchester United are in a rampant mood. Not satisfied with the humiliation they put upon Newcastle United on 12th October, they made Blackburn Rovers go through the mill on Saturday. The Rovers had not given away a goal on their own ground prior to the visit of the Mancunians, but their defence was five times pierced by the latter, who have now 32 goals to their credit from eight games. The United may without egotism regard themselves as the finest team in the country to-day, but the race is long and trying, and it is yet too early to hail them as the coming champions. The result at Owlerton was highly significant. Aston Villa had been going very badly, and yet they defeated Sheffield Wednesday, one of the most consistent teams in the League, at the cutlery centre. Is this the beginning of the revival of the Villa? Bolton Wanderers won their first home match, Nottingham Forest obligingly providing them with the points. Everton did not have anything to spare against Sheffield United, Manchester City scored the only goal of the match at Hyde Road, where Newcastle United played in ragged style. Middlesbrough did well to draw at Sunderland, and Preston North End created a surprise by overcoming Notts County at the lace city.

THE SECOND DIVISION.

Once more Fulham has disappointed its patrons. A more remarkable club surely never took part in serious football. It provides a weekly sensation, and apparently takes the keenest delight in upsetting all calculations. Another defeat on their own ground was the experience of the Cottagers, Oldham Athletic being their latest conquerors. One thing is perfectly certain—that it is not in this direction that promotion lies. There must be good form at home as well as away. Of the other games in the Second Division, the win of 6—1 over Leeds City by Derby County is suggestive of a determination of the Rams not to be out of the running for honours. Hull City and West Bromwich Albion both won in capital style, and Bradford City routed Gainsborough Trinity. Next to Fulham's downfall most attention will be directed to Barnsley's defeat at Oakwell by Burnley who had not been doing anything to suggest they would succeed where so many better teams have failed. There was not anything out of the ordinary in the other games.

RUGBY RULES.

LONDON IRISH VS. OLD ALLEYNIANS.—When with only ten minutes to go in this match at Rutland Park, Catford, on Saturday, the Irish were eleven points in arrears, their opponents looked all over easy winners, but a rally by the home side brought about a remarkable change, and at the close only two points separated the sides. All the excitement was crowded into the final stages, the game having been of a dull character. On the whole the display of the Irish fifteen was disappointing. Blair, the full-back, was decidedly weak, and as a result of his indecision and poor clearances his line experienced many lucky escapes. Although performing better than in previous matches, the three-quarters still have a tendency to huddle together, and so hamper one another's movements, and the lassitude of the half-backs enabled the Old Boys' smart pair, G. A. M. Isherwood and L. S. Manvell, to be always in possession. Forward there is lacking the energy which is necessary to make a successful side, Watson being the only one to show up conspicuously and it was mainly owing to his efforts that his side were ever dangerous. The heroes of the match were L. S. Manvell, F. G. Manvell, and R. H. Owen, the first-named opening up the game splendidly for his three-quarters. In the initial period L. S. Manvell crossed over for F. G. to convert, and Watson reduced the home team's deficit by three points. Resuming, the Old Boys monopolised the attack, and L. S. Manvell, Owen, and F. G. Manvell obtained tries, but in the final quarter of an hour J. N. Walsh (twice) and O'Grady ran in for the home side, and the result was:—Old Alleynians, 1 goal and 3 tries (14 points); London Irish, 4 tries (12 points).

BLACKHEATH VS. NEWPORT.—In spite of the heavy rain which fell during Friday night and early in the day, the Rectory Field, thanks to a good drying wind and strong sunshine, was in excellent order on Saturday, while the weather proved beautifully fine. In consequence the crowd numbered close upon 4,000. A strong and rather erratic wind, which blew diagonally across the ground, favouring the side playing from the pavilion end, was the only drawback, but it in no way interfered with passing. Blackheath were, unfortunately, compelled to make several changes in their side at the last moment.

Although playing against the wind, Newport, thanks to the skilful packing and general superiority of their forwards, at once attacked, MacGregor being early prominent with some very straight running, which ought to have yielded a try or two but for the failure of Griffiths, who was playing in the centre, with Adams on the wing. Newport during the first fifteen minutes always looked like scoring, but the efforts of the backs lacked finish. At length a good kick by Robson, who began by playing five-eighths, but speedily fell back to centre three, gave Blackheath relief, and initiated a more even period of play, the home forwards making several good rushes, in which they were well supported after the usual fashion of Irish halves by Robinson. Once the Irish international got clean away with the ball at his toes, but he kicked rather too hard, and Burt, the Newport full-back, who throughout played a very fine game, effected a clever and plucky save.

After much desultory play in the centre, thanks mainly to the home backs making a poor and injudicious use of the wind in kicking, the Blackheath forwards rushed the ball to the Newport twenty-five. Here, in some scrambling play, Robinson picked up cleverly and scored a very characteristic try under the posts from a straight dash. The point was a doubtful one, for there were two infringements before the score was made. These escaped the eye of the referee, and the try was allowed. Robson converted the easy place. This lead of 5 points seemed to inspire Blackheath, and to have a correspondingly demoralising effect upon Newport. In any case the club had the better of the rest of the half, though they never looked like adding to their score.

In the second half Cargill was early conspicuous by a very fine run down the touch-line (he fielded a cross kick by MacGregor very finely, and ran with great resolution and pace), but he was not supported. This proved practically the last effort of the Heathens. Newport gradually obtained the ascendency, the forwards playing with great dash, and quite beating the home eight for the ball. The passing of the Newport threes continued to be faulty, however, and it was only after many fine openings had been wasted that Williams at length got over far out after the only bit of passing in the match that reached the Welsh standard. Griffiths failed with the difficult place. Following this reduction of the Heathens' lead, the home lines had many narrow escapes, Vile twice nearly getting through by going on after feinting to pass. The Newport backs were over-eager, however, while the handling of the threes was poor. As "no side" approached a victory for Blackheath seemed in prospect, but MacGregor, with only a few minutes to go, made a supreme effort, and scored too far out for Griffiths to convert. In scoring this try MacGregor declined to trust his wing. He drew the defence, however, very cleverly on to Adams, and then went on. It was a really fine try, although the way in which the movement was initiated was not above suspicion, for Vile operated on the blind side, and it was a reverse pass that gave MacGregor his chance. Newport thus won with nothing to spare, although they had all the better of the game. Result:—Newport, 2 tries (6 points); Blackheath, 1 goal (5 points).

LONDON SCOTTISH VS. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—The Dark Blue team, when they have settled down, should make an effective fifteen, but it was quite evident at Richmond on Saturday when they met the London Scottish, that they are not yet in condition, and at the conclusion of the game the Scots were victors by 25 points to nil. Such a margin, however, flattered the winners, for they were not all that much better than the 'Varsity team. The Oxford forwards worked well, especially in the loose, and their halves gave the threes several chances of getting away, but the latter failed to take advantage of these. Colin Gilray came into the Scottish three-quarter line in place of D. F. Moir. Much interest was evinced in his play, but the ball only came to him on rare occasions, and on one of these he scored, whilst again he initiated a run that ended in a try for his side. Geddes was again prominent for the Scots, he and J. R. Simson being the best of their forwards, and Purves was the pick of the threes. Vassall put in some good work for the Oxonians, but was rather poorly supported, and in the forward line Roberts was often prominent with the ball at his feet.

A few minutes from the start Cunningham ran in for the Scots, and Geddes goaled. A clever kick by Roberts and a rush by the 'Varsity forwards drove the Scots home, but soon after Purves followed up a big kick, and scored at the expense of temporary disablement, for Geddes to goal again. Just before half-time Purves shot out from near the scrum, and manœuvring well landed a fine dropped goal. At half-time the Scots led by 14 points to nothing.

On resumption of hostilities Gilray snapped up the ball, and running along the touch-line scored wide out. Geddes this time failing with the place kick. The 'Varsity then tried the Welsh tactics, and Williams gave Milton a chance, but the latter ran into the crowd. A forward Scottish rush ended in West securing a try which Geddes improved, and just before time Sloan kicked over the Oxford full-back's head and beating him for pace gathered and ran clear round. Geddes failed this time. Towards the end both teams were showing the effect of the hot pace. The game drew the largest crowd yet seen on the athletic ground this season. The final scores were:—London Scottish, 4 goals (one dropped) 2 tries (25 points); Oxford, nil.

LONDON WELSH VS. UNITED SERVICES.—There are few matches on their card more eagerly anticipated by London Welsh than this one with the United Services, who were the visitors at the Memorial Ground, Canning Town, on Saturday. The attendance was quite encouraging, and some capital play rewarded the onlookers. The visitors lacked the services of Orr and Gibbs, while the Welsh again relied—and not in vain—upon a couple of reserves, who proved their fitness for the best of company. In deference to the lessons taught by the experience of the experimental sides in the preceding "minor" engagements, the Welsh forwards had been materially strengthened. Considering the calibre of their powerful adversaries the Welsh seven performed admirably, with the assistance of Harding's weight and skill to overcome occasional difficulties. Both Dyke and Lyon were in international form, tackling and fielding unerringly, and kicking with force and discretion. The opposing "donkeymen" stuck valiantly to one another, their tenacity and smartness, no less than their absolute fairness, compelling admiration. Lepage did many fine things. Maddocks and Gwilym Jones were at the top of their form, tackling and fielding unerringly, and kicking juniors. Both Mevrick and Rees proved more than useful, being assisted, of course, by the ubiquitous Harding, who filled the vacancy in each case when Jenkins was absent for the last ten minutes of the first half, and afterwards when Rees had to retire early in the second.

Farewell old barber's pole farewell
Your useful days are done
No more your stripes of gory red
Will beckon me to come.

No more they'll lure me to the chair
Where stands the barber grim
With glistening steel within his paw
Prepared to soak it in.

No more a cold and clammy hand
Across my face will crawl
And clean itself within the soap
That slowly covers all.

I'll lie no more within that chair
No more that blade will glide
And mar my noble countenance
With scratches deep and wide.

Those days are gone, O glory be
New methods I employ;
The safe Gillette I now indulge
And scrape my chin with joy.

No longer has my wife to say
In tones both stern and grave,
O, children hush, be still as death
Your papa wants to shave.

No more of that, the children now
Can play and dance the while
Aye, even tho' they climb my legs
I still can shave and smile.

I fear no cuts—I use no care;
And as for time—well now
If I have lots of leisure—why
Three minutes I allow.

In other days I used to take
Five times as long and more
And in the rush, baptised myself
With drops of precious gore.

My tender neck no more will lie
Upon the velvet block;
What time my feet are pointing to
The hands upon the clock.

And many a time I've had to quit
Ah, render do not laugh,
And to the barber take my face
To scrape the other half.

For often in those dreaded days
The razor's edge would go
And every time it met my beard
Cuss words were sure to flow.

But now my Gillette is always keen
I never need to stop
And stir the edge to do its work
By whanging on the strop.

I've found a better, wiser way
I've ceased to be a fool,
I use a new blade every time
My beard begins to pull.

The price is such it doesn't count
So trivial is the sum
Four hundred shaves, with twelve blades
Over thirty-three with one.

So goodbye bone and goodbye strop
You've parted from my life
Your work is now to sharpen up
A hatchet or a knife.

No longer when I cross the grain
Shall I have need to frown
My keen Gillette can glide the cheek
Criss-cross or up and down.

Oh! rich and poor will welcome you
Past sorrows they'll forget
The moment that they touch a cheek
To you O—King Gillette.

For you Gillette are safe and keen
You glide the softest skin
Yet cut away the hardest beard
That ever graced a chin.

So good-bye pole, old chair farewell
Old razor too goodbye
I hold no grudge against you
But I'm glad to see you die.

During the first ten minutes the visitors pressed hotly. Lapage nearly dropped a goal, followed immediately by an attempt by Biggs and Lapage to score a try in the corner, but Dyke gained Mr. Gilliard's verdict. Play raged in mid-field, when Rowlands received a swift pass, and he kicked hard. The ball pitched short of Lyon, bouncing high out of his reach. In the ensuing race for possession, Rees won just on the dead-ball line—no fault of Lyon's. Dyke failed with the place. Rees also registered the second try as the outcome of masterly passing between several players having Maddocks as a pivot. A little later Maddocks pierced the defence cleverly, and scored between the posts. Harding converted both, and further distinguished himself as a fleet footed wing three-quarter by scoring from a pass taken from Maddocks near the centre flag late in the second half, Dyke just failing to improve upon it. Lapage, by a good run, almost got over. At the other end forward passes to Harding prevented a couple of tries. Result: —London Welsh, 2 goals 2 tries (16 points); United Services, nil.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. RICHMOND.—The Cambridge fifteen defeated Richmond in a most decisive manner, and their victory after Richmond's triumph over Liverpool the week before is significant. For the time being, however, the Richmond team are an uncertain quantity, and opinions as to the Cambridge side may well be deferred. The Light Blues are in town on Wednesday, playing Guy's Hospital, who have a good side, and their form on that occasion may be more reliable. Still, Cambridge have made a good start, and Kenneth Macleod would seem to have some capital talent at his command. The United Services were unable to send their full side to oppose the London Welsh at West Ham. H. J. Orr and Geoffrey Biggs were out of the three-quarter line, but much as these players were missed, their absence does not account for a defeat by 2 goals and 2 tries to nothing. The Welshmen, who began the season rather indifferently, gave a display quite in advance of anything they had previously done, and were not flattered by the score. Their victory was a notable one, clearly indicating that they will make a big bid for the metropolitan club championship. The Harlequins easily overcame Bath, and it is to be noted that Lambert placed 8 goals in eleven attempts, two of them being from near the touch-line. Of the provincial matches, perhaps the most significant result was the drawn game between Devon Albion and Pontypool on the ground of the former. That result, taken in conjunction with the defeat of Devon by Surrey last week, would suggest that Devon Rugby this season is below its old standard. By the difference of a successful place-kick Gloucester pulled through at Bristol, and Cardiff only managed to beat Swansea by a dropped goal. It is worth while recalling the fact that Gloucester two weeks before beat Swansea, and that last Wednesday the Gloucestershire fifteen came very near defeating Glamorgan.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. MOSELEY.—The Dark Blues played their first match on the home ground on Wednesday, and with a weak Moseley side opposed to them they gained a very easy victory. From the outset their superiority was very manifest, and in the first half they ran up a score of nineteen points to nil. Subsequently Moseley had to play a man short, Deakin having to retire. Oxford continued to have much the better of the game, their backs comparing very favourably with those of Moseley, for whom Grischotti dropped a clever goal. This, however, was their only score. Tries for the winners were scored by Steinthal (3), Cunningham, Cronje, and Williamson, four of which Roberts converted. The latter also kicked a goal from a penalty, and Cunningham dropped a goal.

The feature of the Oxford play was the excellence of the backs, whose tackling and passing was most effective. Quite half the side had a hand in the last try. Steinthal especially played well, but on both sides the backs suffered at times owing to the very slippery condition of the ground. Result:—Oxford, 6 goals (1 dropped, 1 penalty) and 3 tries (36 points); Moseley, 1 dropped goal (4 points).

GUY'S HOSPITAL vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—Cambridge quite failed at Honor Oak Park on Wednesday to confirm the good impression of their merits as a side left by their display against Richmond on Saturday. They should, it is true, have won the match instead of suffering defeat by a try. Yet as they lost by bad tactics, conjoined with indifferent back play during the major portion of the match, they were defeated on their merits. If an excuse can be found for their disappointing display, it is forthcoming in the fact that K. G. Macleod was unable to play through a severe cold, while Bower had also to stand down. The loss of Macleod, the only really class player among the backs, was irreparable. Had he been playing to control the game, Cambridge would have won by a goodly margin, instead of wasting all their opportunities by bad tactics and indifferent back play. At the start it seemed as if Cambridge would win easily, so finely did the forwards play. The backs, on the other hand, could do nothing right, Godby using his feet far too much, while Richard's passes were of the poorest kind. After the first five minutes the game was even, but it never rose much above a scramble, good kicking by Stringer, and an occasional dash by McEvedy, who has lost none of his pace, being the only redeeming features. Just on half-time, Guy's registered what proved to be the only score of the match. V. H. Coates fumbled a kick, and Archer being well up kicked to the left post Atkinson, and, regaining possession, scored near the posts. Hoby failed with the kick. Half-time:—Guy's, 1 try (3 points); Cambridge, nil.

In the second half the play improved, but never reached a high standard. Both lines were frequently in danger, but Cambridge had the better of the game, and ought to have won but for indifferent passing, an excess of kicking, lack of straight running by the centres, and irresolution on the part of the wings. The impression left by a poor game was that Cambridge are not the same side when Macleod is not playing. The Light Blues must also find a good scrum half. The forwards all played well, and are a good, if not a clever, pack. Archer was the best forward on the field, while McEvedy was the best back. Result:—Guy's Hospital, 1 try (3 points); Cambridge University, nil.

WRESTLING.

PADOUBNY vs. ALEX. MUNRO.—The manner in which Alex. Munro, of Govan, stood up against Ivan Padoubny at the Coliseum Theatre, Glasgow, last Wednesday evening brought a very large attendance to the special match arranged for Saturday afternoon. The stake money was £200. The match was to a finish, and the style, as in the previous bout, Graeco-Roman, with hammer-locks barred. Jack Bain, the well-known Scottish wrestler, officiated as referee. At the outset Padoubny tried the cross-buttock, but the Scot cleverly countered with an armhold. The Cossack immediately afterwards threw the Govan man to the mat, but he smartly rolled clear. Again Padoubny got behind, and with a body hold brought down Munro, but the Scot spun round, and got away. Padoubny evidently seemed surprised at the manner in which Munro always got clear, and he redoubled his efforts and continued, as he had from the start, to do most of the attacking. Padoubny got the Scot into a fix, but with a splendid effort Munro cleverly bridged, and the spectators encouraged him most enthusiastically. Munro's first real attack was when the match had gone about fifteen minutes, and he had Padoubny's head in "chancery," but the Cossack extricated himself well and resumed the attack. He got Munro on one shoulder, but as the Scot's head was on the edge of the mat, the referee ordered the men to the centre. There was a brief interval allowed after sixteen minutes' wrestling.

On resuming, Munro rushed in and caught Padoubny by the [illegible]. The referee interfered, and stated that if he persisted in those methods he would be disqualified. Scarcely had they begun again when the Scot got Padoubny by the leg, as in catch-as-catch-can. They went at it again, and it was now Padoubny's turn to be cautioned for what seemed like a strangle hold. Applying a half-nelson, Padoubny got Munro on the mat, and when in the act of levering the Scot over, the latter again got Padoubny by the leg, and was disqualified.

This decision did not seem to please the audience, who shouted to Padoubny to let Munro go on with the match. Padoubny was declared the winner, after eighteen minutes' wrestling.

Padoubny has had a very successful week, and has greatly enhanced his reputation in the eyes of local followers of the sport.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. MAJOR RIMINGTON'S XI.—This two days' match in the Eden Gardens on the Wednesday and Thursday of last week eventually resulted in a fairly even draw, but for some time the C.C.C. were pretty hard put to it to avoid defeat owing to their indifferent batting in the first innings. Lee confirmed the good impression he had made the week before and Guise and Warden both played two useful innings, while Turnbull and Stewart met with success at their second attempt. Ernsthausen bowled well for Calcutta, but really had shocking bad luck. For the visitors Major Hedley made his first appearance in Calcutta cricket and batted and bowled very steadily though without much fortune. Leipmann bowled with conspicuous success and A. Simson did good all round service, his runs though he made plenty of mistakes, being invaluable to his side. The fielding and catching of Major Rimington's team were excellent, and quite a lesson to their opponents. Score:—

Simmons. Behrend was shaping well but unfortunately stopped a straight one with his leg and succumbed to a leg before appeal by Simmons. He made 11, the other double figure batsmen being N. Cooper and H. W. Beer who got 18 and 34 respectively. The innings closed for 102 of which extras accounted for 5. The Caledonians had some of their best men away, viz., Rayneau, Rogers and Makepeace.

The Hornets sent in A. G. Moore and Knowles which Elliot and Chandler were entrusted with the attack. With only 2 scored Knowles was brilliantly caught by Meggitt at square leg off Chandler after scoring only 1. Moore, however, gave an extremely interesting and clever exhibition and retired when he had made 111. He had made nearly 70 before he gave his first chance. Yakchee made 15, Hughes 13 and Bayley 36 not out, the total reaching 213, extras accounting for 19. The Hornets thus won by 111 runs. The fielding of this team was particularly good while that of the Caledonians with one or two exceptions was distinctly the reverse, several catches being dropped. The following are the scores:—

Y. M. C. A. vs. CALEDONIANS.—The return match between these teams was played on the ground of the Young Christians on Saturday, and resulted in a draw as so many of our half day or rather half afternoon matches generally do. The home team scoring 122 as against 47 for 8 wickets by the visitors. The poor scoring of the latter was due entirely to the excellent bowling—a branch in which the Caledonians are particularly weak this year of Reynolds and Gay. The former took 5 wickets for 23 and the latter 3 for 17. The ground bumped a great deal. J. H. Reynolds 15, H. A. Lyon 19, H. G. Pooler 21 and H. Gay 30 for the Christians and Rayneau 13 for the Caledonians were the only ones to get double figures. Appended are the scores:—

BALLYGUNGE vs. CALCUTTA LIGHT HORSE.—A fairly good team representing the C. L. H. were met at Ballygunge on the 10th instant, but were badly routed by the home team by 6 wickets and 80 runs on the first innings. The C. L. H. batted first, but did not put up much of a fight against Abbott and Gould, the former who bowled in quite his old form, securing 7 wickets for 70 and Gould 3 for 64. Antram's 25 was a very stubborn innings, but Maurice Turner's 44 was the best knock of the day—his hitting was clean and hard, and was altogether an excellent display. Eddis and White opened for Ballygunge, but the former did not stop long, being well caught in the long field off Ballantyne with the score at 45. Sherman and White, however, scored at a tremendous pace, the latter eventually allowing himself to be run out for a vigorous, if not faultless 91, but even after his departure, the rate of scoring did not lessen perceptibly, the total being taken to 218 for 4 when the closure was applied. Sherman was unfortunate in not getting his century, but the Ballygunge skipper was unaware that he was so near three figures when he declared the innings closed.

Some idea of the rapidity of the scoring may be gathered from the fact that only 28 over were sent down, not one of which was a maiden!

The C. L. H. had a second knock, but fared little better, the score being 51 for 6 when time arrived. They were unfortunate in being deprived of the services of Curtis, Hayward, who had to stand out of the team, owing to a strained side, his absence weakening the C. L. H. bowling considerably. TELEGRAPH A. C. vs. BALLYGUNGE.—In addition to being one short, Ballygunge had out a very indifferent team last Saturday, when they met the Telegraph Club on the latter's ground, but no excuse can be offered for the miserable show they put up. Cowdrey and Coulthard started fairly well, by putting on 37 for the first wicket, but after they had both left at the same total; a rot set in and the whole side were out for 67, 6 of which were extras.

Wells, with 5 wickets for 30, bowled very steadily, both he and Moore seeming to be able to take advantage of the rather peculiar wicket.

Moore and Lopez made a good start for the home team, by putting on 43 for the first wicket, but after their departure, the next 3 fell for an addition of but 3 runs; Sharling and Cox, however, soon put the issue beyond doubt, and were still together when time arrived, the latter being not out with a hard hit 49 to his credit.

CALCUTTA C.C. OVER 30 vs. UNDER 30.—This in club game resulted in an easy victory for the juniors for whom Lee who is in fine form just now scored a stylish and practically faultless century. Ernsthausen, Turnbull also hit freely, but Turnbull was very fortunate. Leipmann again bowled very well, and Bayley met with striking success for the losing side, for whom also C.P. Beachcroft played a thoroughly sound innings. The weak bowling of the seniors was further handicapped on Stewart's in disposition. Score.—

CALCUTTA GOLF CLUB.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING.

THERE was a fairly numerous attendance of members at this meeting which was held on Tuesday evening 12th November, at the Club Pavilion on the maidan. Mr. T. Drimmie, the retiring captain, was in the chair, and characterised the past year as the most successful in the club's history, in the way of finance, new members and the quality of the golf played in the Championship and other competitions. H. E. The Viceroy has consented to become patron of the Club, and H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor has accepted the Presidency, and will present a prize for competition during the coming season. Mr. F. H. Stewart was elected captain for 1907-8, and Messrs. G. B Merry and G. L. Allan were re-elected Honorary Secretary and Honorary Treasurer, respectively, specially hearty votes of thanks being passed by acclamation to both for their past conspicuous services. The new Committee will be constituted as follows:—The Captain, the Honorary Secretary, the Honorary Treasurer, and Messrs. T. Drimmie, J. G. Melrose, G. B. McNair, Norman Mitchell Innes and G. W. Walker. The proceedings closed with the customary vote of thanks to the retiring Captain and Committee, proposed by the new captain, and carried by acclamation.

GOLF AT KARACHI.

THE annual "At Home" of the Karachi Golf Club took place on the 30th ultimo. Six competitions were put through, there were record entries, arrangements were perfect, and the weather all that could be desired. Mr. C Kennedy, the Honorary Secretary, is to be congratulated on the success of the gathering. Mrs. O'Keefe distributed the prizes. Appended are results:—

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

25th October 1907.

DESPITE truly British weather, by that term is meant rain and wind and general nastiness, the game of golf has been pursued with a zeal and intensity surprising to the as yet uninitiated and unbitten; the time will come and then those males and females who nowadays sit at home and gossip and bridge or even "diabolize" will jog off on a wet autumn morning with a small bag containing a complete change of raiment and will cheerfully play round the muddiest longest course with total disregard to discomfort or appearance so long as the ball is going well off the club and is finding the bottom of the hole all right. Last week thousands of enthusiasts assembled to witness the great "News of the World" Professional Tournament at Sunningdale. The various sections each hold qualifying competitions and then a certain proportion (varying according to the number of players in each section) qualify to take part in a Tournament of 32 players for big money prizes. The winner takes £100, the runner up £30, and so on until the substantial sum of £240 is won. The weather, except on the opening day, Tuesday, 15th October was unspeakable—cold, wet, windy and yet the spectators were undaunted, often the phalanx of umbrellas made the witnessing of stroke after stroke impossible, the strong and stout in the crowd managed to elbow their way to the front and effectually kept out the weaker, less muscular men and women, and a veritable army of officials, officious beings with short red flags, shouted impossible instructions in stentorian tones to the "golfers" who had braved the elements to watch the crème de la crème of professional or human golf. One old gentleman with an inverted moustache was especially officious and hurled words of command at the rank and file, whatever they might be doing or not doing, which was especially irritating to the onlookers, the majority of whom could easily be recognised as well known players. Well—after this long preamble, Braid has won, he and his old foe Taylor met in the 36 holes final and their skill was a treat to watch (where one could get a glimpse of a shot!) To say much about the various players in the several heats would take up too much time and space; but briefly the draw was this.

James Kinnel	vs.	Tom Watt	C W. Pope	vs. A. Marling.
Tom Williamson	"	A. J. Lewis	Edward Ray	" Rowland Jones.
Alex Herd	"	Jack Ross	J. Edmundson	" S. Whiting.
E. Gray	"	J. Bradbeer	James Braid	" G. Coburn.
R. Thomson	"	A. F. Kettley	J. H. Taylor	" E. P. Gaudin.
J. G. Sherlock	"	C. Roberts	A. Mitchell	" R. McKenzie.
W. J. Leaver	"	T. Drummond	C. H. Mayo	" G. Duncan.
G. Pulford	"	A. Bethworthy	H Vardon	" J. H. Oke.

I have put the winners of the first heat first: Braid's scalps were G. Coburn, whom he beat 3 and 1; Ernest Gray, 6 and 4; J. Edmundson, 6 and 5; Edward Ray, 4 and 3 and, finally, in the 36 hole fight J. H. Taylor, 4 and 2. Taylor in the lower half of the draw had put out E. P. Gaudin, 5 and 4; R. Thomson, 3 and 2; J. Sherlock, 2 up; Harry Vardon, 1 up (a most sensational, interesting match), and he finally succumbed to James Braid by 4 and 2. There was no doubt in the mind of connoisseurs of the game that the best man in was Braid, and therefore it was only meet and right that the best man should come through—it would have increased the interest of the competition had Arnaud Massey been a competitor, but, on the other hand, the meeting was entirely a British one and Britons like that. On Saturday, 19th, a big Professional Tournament was held at Chertsey, a succession of violent rainstorms interferred with the comfort of players and spectators, and the course suffered considerably in consequence. The most successful of the players was Robert Thomson, the North Bromwich Pro. but an objection was raised against him by the players, who alleged that his name was not among the list of those who entered and was not in the draw. The Committee, however, overruled this objection on the ground that Thomson was in the list of reserve players. Thomson eventually won the first prize, £25, with two excellent rounds of 76+77=153; next to him came Rowland Jones 77+77=154; then J. H. Oke 77+79 and C. H. Mayo 77+79=156, and there was only a difference of 5 strokes in the aggregate returns of the first and last competitor, 14 in all, Thomson 153 being best and four players tieing last with 158. There were no less than seven cards of the 28th showing a round of 77, four 76's and six 78's.

The two Varsities have been holding their trial matches for the Dark Blues, the Seniors beat the Freshmen by 33 points to 2, made up as below:—

Seniors.		Freshmen.
Hon'ble C. N. Bruce	4	Mr. R. K. Winter	0
Lord Maidstone	½	Mr. J. Leslie	½
Mr. C. V. L. Hooman	3	Mr. A. H. Murray	0
Hon'ble D. Finch-Hatton	4	Mr. M. K. McKenzie	4
Mr. D. E. Lindale	10	Mr. R. S. Chambers	0
Mr. C. F. Younger	½	Mr. D. Lyell	½
Mr. J. M. Challinor	2	Mr. R. S. Sword	0
Mr. C. H. Gidney	5	Mr. K. H. Loese	0
Mr. L. H. Gostwaltz	0	Mr. S. W. Strathairn	2
Mr. H. C. Olliey	5	Mr. C. P. Loese	0
Mr. N. F. Bostock	4	Hon'ble E. C. Fery	0
Total	33	Total	2

I give the names and results in full, for it may be interesting as the season advances to watch the Freshmen's progress. The Light Blues constructed their "trials" on different lines, the Captain heading one team and the Honorary Secretary the other, they scored by points and played only seven aside, resulting thus:—

Captain's Side.		Hony Secretary's Side.
Mr. V. C. Longstaffe	0	Mr. J. Colman, Junior	1½
Mr. E. S. Uyat	0	Mr. A. Reid	1
Mr. C. Macdona	1½	Mr. T. McNeill	0
Mr. C. L. Richardson	½	Mr. K. H. Bovill	½
Mr. A. F. Percival	½	Mr. E. H. Loese	½
Mr. Hugh Duncan	1	Mr. C. M. Hunter	½
Mr. C. G. Macandrew	1	Mr. A. G. Pearson	0
	4½		3½

It seems to be highly remunerative to fulfil the duties of Secretary to the Club so satisfactorily as Mr. D. L. Cottam has undoubtedly succeeded in doing at Ranger Hill from the occasion of his retirement from office, the Club presented him with a cheque, a gold watch and an illuminated address. Mr. Cottam has been in office as Secretary since the formation of the Club in 1900 and assuredly he deserves his reward. The relief course, consisting of an additional 9 holes, was opened on Saturday, 19th October, at Walton Heath. A Bogey Competition was decided, play being over 8 holes of the new and 10 holes of the old course, and was won by Mr. H. Maude with 1 up.

A rather interesting case has just been heard, Mr. Walter Best recently prosecuted one of the caddies at Handsworth for stealing balls, the boy had been previously warned off the course; but had apparently found a purchaser (a member) for any balls he could produce. It seems a great pity that men and women should constantly violate the wishes of the Club forbidding boys to sell and requesting members not to encourage the caddies in their nefarious trade by purchasing balls for a few pence, it is certainly putting temptation in the boys' way and should be strongly discouraged, though one must own to a very natural inclination to get an almost new "Colonel" or "Imperial" or "Blue Dot" for a few pence instead of the regular 2s.

The Stock Exchange Golfing Society held its annual 36 holes Scratch Competition at Walton Heath on Thursday, 24th October, and although "things in the city" have been very bad, there was certainly no indication of this either in the play or general appearance of the competitors who included such well-known jobbers and golfers as Messrs. S. H. Fray, A. H. Read, S. Muse-Fergusson, Horace Castle, W. C. Mickie, and J. A. Healing. Heavy rain in the morning made the Greens much slower than usual, but it was a perfect day for play, and although there was a slight wind, it was not enough to justify the somewhat high returns which won the medal.

Mr. W. C. Mickie headed the list with 81+82=163 and Mr. A. H. Read equalled this also 82+81=163, then a big gap came before Mr. S. Muse Fergusson's 172, Mr. Horace Castle's 173, Mr. A. G. Richardson's 173, Mr. Easterbrook 90+84=174.

On the same day at Acton the semi-final round of the London Press Golfing Society was played. Mr. Grey L. Estrange beat Mr. Douglas Hoare by 3 up and 1 to play. The final of 36 holes will be between Mr. S. J. Southerton and Mr. Grey L. Estrange.

THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

Connaught Rangers vs. 60th Rifles.—The Tournament began at Poona on the 4th instant with the match between the above teams. The Rifles drew first blood, but the Connaughts were not long in equalising and before the interval took the lead with another goal. In the second half the Rifles failed to score and the Rangers adding another goal, ran out winners by three goals to one.

Royal Fusiliers vs. R. G. A., Colaba.—This game was also played on the 4th instant. The Fusiliers opened with a goal shortly after the start and half way through the first half registered another. The Gunners could not get through and their efforts were equally unsuccessful in the second period. On changing ends the Fusiliers put on two more goals and won by four goals to nil.

Leicester Regiment vs. Poona Gymkhana.—An excellent game was witnessed when these teams met on the 5th instant, the Leicesters winning by the odd goal in five. The soldiers were first to score and Kennedy added a second point shortly after. The Gymkhana nothing daunted played up pluckily. Tillard opened their account and in the early stages of the second half Harvey put the teams on terms. It was a hard struggle to the end; the Leicesters notched a corner and from the hit in put the ball through. The Gymkhana tried all they knew to equalise but without success, the Leicesters winning as stated.

Royal Scots vs. R. F. A., Kirkee.—Played on the 5th instant, the Scots winning by two goals to one. The Gunners scored after some neat dribbling at the start. The Scots pressed and after several attempts drew level. On replaying from the centre the Scots rushed down and scored another point, leading by two to one at the interval. The second half was devoid of score.

Sappers and Miners vs. Lincolns.—These teams met on the 6th instant, a good game ending in favour of the Sappers and Miners. They went off at a great pace and scored three goals in quick succession. Then the game settled down and the Lincolns made desperate efforts to lessen the margin. They scored one goal before half time, but in spite of repeated onslaughts they were unable to get through again and, the second moiety being unproductive, the Sappers and Miners won by three goals to one.

Bombay Customs vs. Ammunition Factory, Kirkee.—Played on the 6th instant. The Customs attacked all through the first half, but the Factory team put up a good defence and half time arrived without score. On crossing over the Customs returned to the attack and almost scored. A run down by the Factory and an abortive corner followed and then once more the Customs pressed. They managed to score at length and won by a goal to nil.

Bishop's High School vs. Mounted Infantry.—This game was played on the 7th instant. The M. I. team drew first blood but the High School hemmed their opponents in for the rest of the first half. But it was not till several chances had been missed that they managed to score. Another goal was registered by them shortly before the interval and having the best of the second moiety they scored once more and ran out victorious by three goals to one.

Parel Gymkhana vs. Signalling Class.—Played on the 8th instant. The first half was very even. The Parel Gymkhana crossing over a goal to the good. They scored once more and then the Signallers shot a goal. Two attempts by the latter to equalise were unsuccessful and the Gymkhana outlasted them to the end. They scored three more goals and thus won by five goals to one.

Boxing.

THE UMBALLA TOURNAMENT.

2nd, 4th, 5th and 6th November 1907

The Umballa Boxing Tournament attracted a big crowd on each of the above four evenings. There were good entries and some excellent bouts were witnessed, results of which are appended. The referee was Major M. Williamson, 21st Punjabis. Judges: Major W. R. Walker, A.V.C., and Captain J. W. Ley, Superintendent of Gymnasia. Time-keeper: Lieutenant J. R. Robertson, 2nd Royal Berkshire Regiment. General Doom gave away the prizes at the conclusion of the tournament.

THE ORIGIN OF THE POINTER.

A writer in Field and Fancy says of the English pointer: The English pointer, which is almost in universal use today, was probably brought to perfection about 150 years ago, and is the result of a cross between the Spanish pointers of those days and the English foxhound or even the Talbot hound of the same period. There were also pointers in France and Portugal, and perhaps Italy, before they were in England. It is curiously on record that about the first if not the first, "Spanish" pointer was introduced into Britain by a merchant trading with Portugal. This sportsman, who resided in Norfolk, England, was so advanced in the art of fowling and firearms that he could kill game on the wing. This points to the first use of pellets of lead, now called shot. So the first pointer to arrive in England from Portugal was the one imported by the Norfolk merchant about 1730.

It was found that the double-nosed Spanish pointer was not at all good tempered, and the English did not like him for this reason. Indeed, he was not to be compared with their own fawning setter, which did exactly the same work as the newly imported pointer, save that the former "set" on his haunches or lay on his belly when he got close to the game, whereas the latter stood boldly up and "pointed." Hence the names of the setter and pointer.

But to return to the variety from Spain or Portugal, which it was thought well to cross with the foxhound. There was a celebrated sportsman of the latter part of the eighteenth century, Colonel Thornton by name. It was said that the Yorkshire gentleman was the first to use the strange blood, but whether he did or not, he possessed some wonderful dogs early in 1800.

There was one particularly good dog by the name of Dash. He was produced by a cross of the foxhound with a high-bred pointer bitch, this bitch being probably a descendant of the old and early cross between the Spanish breed and the English hound.

While it has been denied that the pointer contained a foxhound cross, every indication points to the truth of the above. To anyone familiar with the type of the Spanish pointer nothing looks more reasonable that the present so-called English pointer is the result of a hound cross on the Spanish breed.

This is especially apparent in the differentiation in skull, muzzle and ears. The mask of the hound is often seen in the eyes, and in the comparatively long hair on the under side of the tail. That very few of the existing breeds of dogs are original species and that most of the breeds we have to-day are the result of innumerable crosses, cannot be denied. For all time the dog has been the close companion of man and the real origin of the various breeds will ever remain as great a mystery as that of the several races of men.

Major G. A Beecher, 8th Cavalry.
Lieut.-Colonel A. H. Morris, C. M. G., D. S. O., M. I.
Major F. Wormald, 12th Royal Lancers.
Captain E. H. Cullen, 32nd Sikh Pioneers.
Honorary Secretary;—Major W. R. Walker. A. V. Corps.

THIS show now promises to become an annual fixture. This year's show was a great success and was largely attended by the public. The management was fortunate to again obtain the kind assistance of Mr. J. D. Scott as a judge, whose judging is highly popular with owners. The well-known Mr. McKay, of Patiala, assisted in judging the C.-B. class. The other judges were Major Sir J. Miltanke, Bart., V. C., Major T. Nickall, 17th Lancers, and Major Bramwell, 15th Hussars, who performed a hard day's work. Mr. Sherwell assisted in judging the jumping. Major R. St. C. Lecky again organised and judged the Driving Competitions. The prizes were distinctly good and the names of the generous donors are given under each class. The Horse and Pony Jumping was an attractive feature to the Show. The jumping was quite above the average in both classes. The jumps were so arranged as to give the spectators an excellent view whilst seated under the shade from the trees. The prizes at the close of the show were distributed by Major-General Woon, C. B.. Major W. R. Walker was warmly congratulated by many of his friends on the successful running of the second annual Umballa Horse Show.

CLASS I.—Bonâ-fide Chargers over 14-2.

First, Colonel Eastwood's Bolivar; second, Major Cartwright's Dorothy; Reserve, Major Pollard's Prince Olaf.

First prize presented by Colonel Kirkwood, D. S. O., and Officers, 1st Wilts Regiment.

Second prize presented by the Officers, Royal Sussex Regiment.

Of the nine entries Bolivar was certainly the best of a very good class.

CLASS II.—Bonâ-fide Chargers 14-2 and under.

First, Captain Fagan's Nancy; Reserve, Colonel Morris' Rajah.

First prize presented by Colonel Kirkwood, D. S. O., and Officer, The Wilts Regiment.

The winner had perfect manners. Rajah is a fine weight, carrying country-bred.

CLASS III.—English, Australian and Cape ponies 14-2 and under.

First, Mr Reynold's Harfleur; second, Mr. Truman's Pyrrhus third Major Wammald's Chatterbox.

First prize presented by the Officers, 36th Jacob's Horse.

Second prize presented by Sidar Jewan Singh, C. S. I.

Third prize presented by the Fund.

A very fine class of 20 entries. The English thorough-bred mare Harfleur, was an easy first; placing the second and third taxed; the energy of the judges.

CLASS IV.—Arab ponies 14-2 and under.

First, Major Clifton Brown's Lawyer; second, Mr. Wood's Sherif; third, Major Cookson's Paradox.

First prize presented by the Officers, 32nd Sikh Pioneers.

Second prize presented by Sirdar Jewan Singh, C. S. I.

Third prize presented by the Fund.

Another class of 20 entries and a number of them of very high class. The winner is of high class but we preferred Sherif to Lawyer and Messrs. Wood and Badger's Sheik might have been placed before either of them.

CLASS V.—Country-bred ponies 14-2 and under.

First, Mr. Reynold's Peggy II.; second, Mr. Scarlett's Kitty Brewster; Reserve, Major Clifton Brown's Searchlight.

First prize presented by General R. Clements, C. B., D. S. O.

Second prize presented by the Fund.

There were 12 entries in the class and Peggy II. is a beautifully made pony, Kitty Brewster, a grand weight carrier, and Searchlight very handsome.

CLASS VI.—Ladies' Hacks over 14-2.

First, Mrs. Dundas Alpha; Reserve, Mrs. Eastwood's Bolivar.

First prize presented by the Officers, 12th Royal Lancers.

Only four entries.

CLASS VII.—Ladies' Hacks 14-2 and under.

First, Hon'ble Mrs. Eastwood's Lena; second, Mrs. Fagan's Masurka; third, Mrs. Clifton Brown's Searchlight.

First prize presented by the Officers, Royal Berkshire Regiment

Second prize presented by the Officers, Royal Sussex Regiment

Third prize presented by the Fund.

Seventeen entries. Lena's behaviour was perfect in the ring and she was rightly placed first.

CLASS VIII.—Polo Ponies, English and Colonial. Heavy weight.

First, Captain Fagan's Nancy; second, Mr. Lascelles' Killarney third, Mr. Truman's Pyrrhus.

First prize presented by the Officers, Royal Horse Artillery.

Second prize presented by the Fund.

Third prize presented by the Fund.

This class contained 15 entries of good quality throughout.

CLASS IX.—Polo Ponies, English and Colonial. Light weight.

First, Mr. Badger's Bellmetal; Reserve, Captain Fagan's Mick.

First prize presented by the Officers, 12th Royal Lancers.

Only four entries.

CLASS X.—Polo ponies, Arabs, and C.-B's. Heavy weight.

First, Major Wormald's Nice Person; second, Mr. Lascelles Barrabas; third Captain Ollivant's Bedelia.

First prize presented by the Officers, 12th Royal Lancers.

Second prize presented by the Fund.

Third prize presented by the Fund.

Fifteen good ponies were shown in this class.

CLASS XI.—Polo ponies, Arabs, and C.-Bs. Light weight.

First, Mr. Wood's Lyddite II; second, Mr. Wood's Cranberry Third, Major Clifton Brown's Hamilton.

First prize presented by Colonel Rivett-Carnac, and Officers, 8th Cavalry.

Second prize presented by the Fund.

Third prize presented by the Fund.

Eighteen entries.

CLASS XII.—Jumping Competition for ponies over 14-2.

First, Colonel Eastwood's Bolivar; second, Mr. Scarlett's Doncaster; third, Miss Triscott's Stella.

First prize presented by the Officers, 12th Royal Lancers.

Second prize presented by Colonel C. P. Triscott, D. S. O.

Third prize presented by the Fund.

Of the 17 entries Bolivar was the best and straightest jumper. Stella was beautifully ridden by her owner and we thought might have been placed second. Stella cleared every jump in fine style and ran Bolivar very close.

CLASS XIII.—Jumping Competition for ponies 14-2 and under.

First, Mrs. Crawley Bosevy's Glennie; second, Mrs. Walker's Doctor Syntax; third, Mr. Connop's Small Scotch.

First prize presented by General R. Clements, C. B. D. S. O.

Second prize presented by the Fund.

Third prize presented by the Fund.

Eighteen entries. Glennie is a magnificent jumper and ridden with great judgment by her owner. The well-known Doctor Syntax jumped as straight as a die down the course.

CLASS XIV.—Children's ponies any breed.

First, Miss Feetham's Tommy; second, Miss Campbell's Princess Reserve, Master Atkinson's Peter.

First prize presented by Captain Van-der-Gucht, S. and T. Corps.

Second prize presented by the Fund.

Five entries. Peter, a remarkably handsome and shapely little pony, might have been placed first. Miss Peggy Dalzell's Maharanee is very classy and handsome, but is somewhat of a larger type than the other exhibits.

CLASS.—XV.—Team Driving, two officers per brake may compete.

First, Lieutenant McLean, R. H. A.; second Captain Foeman, R. H. A.

First prize presented by the Officers, Royal Berkshire, Regiment.

Second prize presented by the Fund.

The driving was good throughout and of the winner excellent.

CLASS XVI.—Ladies' Driving Competition Single Harness.

First, Mrs. L., second, Mrs. Walker.

First prize presented by Messrs. Hamilton & Co., Jewellers, Simla.

Second prize presented by the Officers, Royal Sussex Regiment.

The following ladies competed:—Miss Slack, Mrs. Clifton-Brown, Mrs. Ley, Mrs. Walker, Hon. Mrs. Eastwood, Mrs. Dundas, Mrs. Osborn, Mrs. Fagan and Mr. Sperrard. This competition elicited great interest.

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 42.

To win and save the game Z must make five tricks in trumps and two in hearts, or four tricks in trumps and three in hearts. Now B has led either from king, knave, 10 of hearts, or from the top of a short suit. In the former case Z may just as well make his queen of the second or third round as on the first, while in the latter, the king and knave being over him, he can do no good, but may lose a trick, by covering. He must play a small heart under the 10, therefore, and win the trick with dummy's ace. Y will then lead three or two rounds of trumps according as both opponents do or do not follow to the second, and continue with a small heart. Z's play will then depend upon A's card at trick 8. If he dropped the 9 or 7 of hearts he can be. If he dropped the knave, however, he is marked with the king, and Z must play small; or if the knave was a true card the king will fall, and Z make three tricks in the suit, while if it was false A is left with the king, 9, and no harm is done by under-playing. Of course, if B fails on the second round of hearts the game is gone.

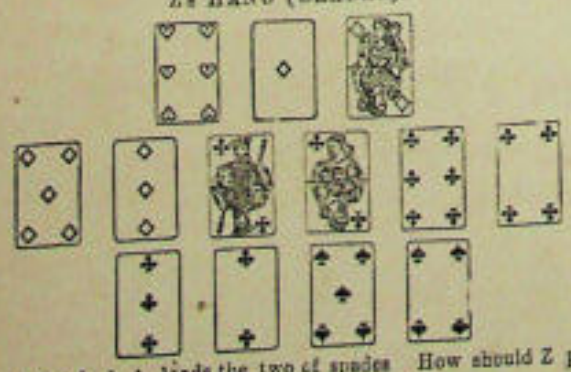
Problem No. 43.

PROBLEM AND SOLUTION.

Scores: A B, 24.; Y Z, 0. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares hearts. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:

Y's HAND (DUMMY).

Z's HAND (DEALER).



At Trick 1 A leads the two of spades How should Z play the hand, and why?

MOTORING MEMS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, Friday, 25th October 1907.

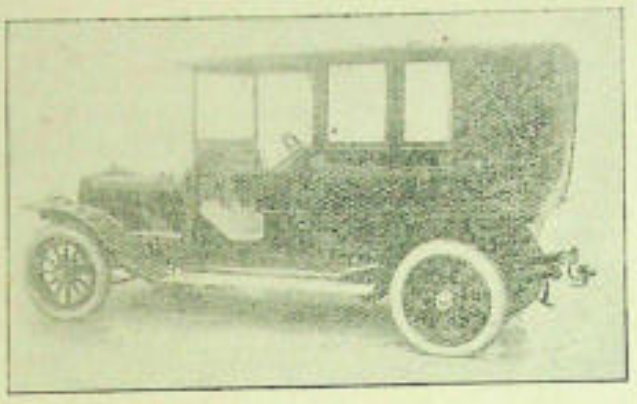
MATTERS are in a very bad way in France. The supply got level with the demand twelve months ago. Now makers are over producing, and with the result that at the present time a crisis is imminent. The result will be bad for the Motor Trade to the benefit of the private man. Chassis will be thrown in the market at much reduced prices, and for a time there will be rather a slump with the ordinary makers and agents. Putting the matter in a nutshell, it has been caused largely by makers rushing headlong into a market that could not last for long under its existing conditions.

IT must be quite eight years ago that the Hon'ble John Scott Montague, as he then was, initiated His Majesty the King into the delights of motoring. The car that was used on that auspicious occasion was a Daimler. The impression made upon the King during the early days must have been eminently satisfactory, for within the last fortnight we find that the King has ordered another Daimler, this being the ninth car that has emanated from the famous Coventry factory for the use of His Majesty. That His Majesty has tried every well known make at different times goes without saying, and the fact that he remains staunch to the Daimler Car is not without its significance, for the Daimler is far from being the only all British car. This famous Coventry factory is to be congratulated.



A ROYAL CAR. His Majesty the King's Ninth Daimler. It is painted lake, lined vermilion and has blue mouldings. The upholstering is in blue goatskin. The interior is fitted with clock, barometer speaking tube, and is electrically lighted.

A CONSIDERABLE amount of attention has of late been devoted to the old, old subject "Do cars run better at night?" Personally I think they do, no matter how perfect the carburettor. Speaking to an eminent works manager recently on the subject, he expounded the following theory as the reason, and this is I believe the first time it has been suggested:—Cold air, he points out, is richer in oxygen volume for volume than hot air, consequently a richer mixture is obtained at sunset than during the day.

While some motorists in India may have noticed increased speed at night, it is of course more apparent to the small car owner than the big.

IN semi-rural districts bordering on London bicycles would appear to constitute the major portion of road vehicles during the summer months. A census of push cycles taken in Priory Lane, Barnes, by a Mazy-Pop man or M. U. Road Agent, shows that motorists and horse drivers need to exercise extraordinary care to avoid accidents. Subjoined is a census of bicycles, motor cycles, motor cycles, and cars, for the week 15th to 21st September:—

	Cycles.	Motor Cycles.	Cars.
Sunday	4,029	28	190
Monday	2,680	5	118
Tuesday	2,282	3	109
Wednesday (Off day)...	.....	...	...
Thursday	3,456	19	188
Friday	3,251	8	202
Saturday	6,428	3	246
	22,126	66	1,053

NEXT year's Grand Prix Race will be held in France on a date between 20th June and 5th July. The regulations are those adopted at the International Congress held at Ostend. Each car must have an engine with four cylinders, with a bore of 155 millimetres (6¼ inches), or the equivalent in working area of any number of cylinders. The car ready for the road, but without petrol, tools, spare parts, or spare tyres, must weigh not less than 1,100 kilos (2,425 lbs.), including the oil in the car.

THE Kreisblatt, a paper published at Hoechst, near Wiesbaden, this week, contains the following amusing advertisement:—"Can anyone favour me with the names of the balloonists who, in passing over the village of Ried last Thursday evening, dropped a bag of ballast down my chimney and completely ruined a fruit tart which I was cooking? Julia Schmidt, 14, Britzelgasse, Ried."

DAMAGE to the extent of £30 has been done to a motor lorry near Reading under peculiar circumstances. A motor-car got into difficulties, and a lorry belonging to Messrs. Durham, Churchill and Company went to its assistance, and itself became disabled. The lorry was left by the roadside all night unattended and with no light. A gentleman, seeing that it was a source of danger to traffic, tied a bull's-eye lantern to the lorry with a strong string. The cord burnt through, the lamp fell on the lorry, setting it on fire and doing the damage named.

BOSHEY has a resident of which it may well be proud. He is not exactly a martyr to the cause of motorphobes, in fact, it is one of the weakest points of his scheme that he does not practise what he preaches. His suggestion is novel and it is easy to work. He simply says this: Fast moving motors are a menace to the public. If a man is run over, you cannot catch the driver—at present. If, however, everyone carries a small tin, say a pound, of guncotton, when run over the car will be blown up and the driver brought to book. Rather rough on the man that is run over, and most people would prefer to limit anything in the way of being run over to that contretemps; they would not want to be blown up as well. Besides, it would be so awkward if one were to trip over. Think of a martyr to the cause, out on the road looking out for cars to run over him. In his anxiety he would not notice the kerb. There would be a bang, and the papers would again chronicle another "strange disappearance."

THURSDAY, 21st November 1907.

THE DECLINE OF BRITISH HORSE-BREEDING.

THE "croaker" who hastens to predict disaster at the first symptom of competition is too common a being to attract much attention: and even those who liked the motor car least probably regarded those prophets of evil who foretold the disappearance of the horse from the roads of the old country as special pleaders who said more than they actually meant. When it became obvious that the self-driven vehicle had come to stay, the defenders of horseflesh consoled themselves with the reflection that in so far, at all events, as pleasure carriages are concerned the motor represented but a passing craze which in due time would fade out of existence and leave the horse-drawn vehicle master of the situation. We saw quite recently the report of a speech at some Agricultural Show luncheon in which the speaker bade his horse-breeding hearers take comfort in the ugliness of the motoring woman's dress as compared with that she could wear in a horse carriage: such hideousness he maintained could not long survive in an age of cultivated taste. It is an old argument, but not one, we regret to think, which has been strengthened by the lapse of time. On the contrary there is now much reason to think that the croakers had more of right than usual to support them, and that the horse-breeding industry in Britain is seriously menaced by the increase of the motor car. Earl Carrington, presiding at a luncheon at the Chiltern Hills Agricultural Show in September, told his hearers that there had been bred during the present year ten thousand fewer foals in the Kingdom than had been bred in 1906. This, as he truly said, is a matter of national importance and the War Office and the Board of Agriculture were in consultation with experts with the view of taking practical steps to arrest the decline of the industry. Examining such statistics as we have at our disposal we find that the decrease in the number of foals bred is not confined to this year. We set out below the figures given as representing the "Number of Horses under one Year" recorded by occupiers of land since 1901:—

1901: 191,450	1904: 208,271
1903: 204,136	1906: 199,437

and, on Earl Carrington's figures, the number of foals in Great Britain and Ireland this year is only about 189,400. Concerning the figures of previous years, we are quite safe in attributing the small number of horses bred in 1901 to the effects of the South African War: numbers of men who ordinarily bred a foal or two were absent at the front with the yeomanry and their home affairs suffered accordingly: in 1902 there was marked revival, and this was maintained in less degree during the two subsequent years: in 1904 the number of foals bred were about the normal, taking the standard that prevailed before the war as our guide to the normal. Since 1905 the decline has been startling in its rapidity. The foal crop fell off by about 8,000 in 1906, and says Earl Carrington by a further 10,000 this year: the net result being that in the course of two seasons the horse-breeding industry of the United Kindom has fallen off to the tune of ten per cent. If no significance attaches to these figures then statistics are utterly valueless for any purpose whatever. It may be said that the falling off is accounted for by increased imports of horses: that is the idea that naturally presents itself, but when we look at the official returns of importations of horses we find that outside supplies do not account for it. On the other hand they go far to bear out the view that the sphere of utility for the horse in Britain is being rapidly narrowed. Britain's imports of horses rose with remarkable steadiness during the twenty years 1880-1900: there was a marked rise during the last year of the period due, again, to the South African War: the figures for 1901 were still high (40,856), but from that year they have declined with great rapidity as the following return shows:—

Imported in	1902: 32,686	1904: 18,491,

We have not the figures for 1906 at hand, but if we may trust memory they show a continued decrease. Manifestly then foreign competition has nothing to do with the decay. We cannot get away from the fact, that during the last five or six years great strides have been made towards perfecting motor vehicles, that they have gained in popularity among all classes and have increased enormously in numbers. as regards the extension of their use the papers brought by last mail contain accounts of the successful trial of a motor plough: we do not know that this means much in opposition to the horse as the steam plough on large farms has held the field for many years: but it furnishes another and disquieting item in proof of the adaptability of the motor. We cannot shirk the disagreeable conclusion that the horse is being beaten out of the field and that horse-breeding if it is to be continued at all must be bolstered up by some method of State assistance; a fragile reed at the best when we remember that horse-breeding with an eye to our military needs is not likely to find favour with Governments pledged to peace and so-called economy. One slender ray of hope there is, but we fear that this too will soon be eclipsed as the art of motor construction progresses. Our London correspondent referred some few weeks ago to the fact that motor 'buses had been taken off certain routes in the Metropolis and replaced by horse vehicles because the former could not be worked at a profit. The cost of the perpetual repairs compelled the owners to discard their motor 'buses. Now the London 'bus horse is not an ideal steed and he has rarely nowadays the merit of being home bred: the large majority of such horses have been imported from the United States and from Canada: but whatever his origin he is a useful type of horse and he did well in his sphere as artillery and transport horse in the South African campaign. It is needful to lay stress upon this point because the decline in horse-breeding will be felt within the next two years by the Army Remount Department: it is not felt yet or only to a very small extent: but when in 1910 and 1911 the Remount buyers begin to enquire for the five-year-olds they want to meet the modest demands of regiments they will seek in vain. The horse that is least likely to pay is the stamp which farmers first give up breeding: and the remount market as everyone knows is the last refuge of the failure and the misfit. Earl Carrington has not taken the matter in hand a day too soon.

When King Edward was driving along a country road in Scotland one day, he came upon an old marketwoman struggling under a load which was more than she could manage.

"You might take part of this in your carriage," cried the old woman to the King, whom the did not recognise.

"Alas my good woman," replied His Majesty "I'm very sorry but I'm not going your way. However, let me give you the portrait of my mother."

"A lot of good that'll do me," was the reply "Take it all the same," said the King, smiling and he put a sovereign, bearing Queen Victoria's effigy, in the palm of the astonished old peasant.

Our Mariar had been to her first public ball. Sarah Jane: Well, tell me, Mariar, and how did you henjoy the ball?"

Mariar: "On the whole I liked it very well. I didn't think much o' the dancin,' but the uggin' was "envenly."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THERE have been two more sets of arrivals from Bangalore since we last went to press, and now only Ramshaw's string, which will be in Calcutta on Sunday next, are still left in that delightful summer resort of our leading horses. Thompson and Hoyt came up in charge of Mr. A. A. Apcar's lot on Thursday and Dignam arrived with Black Duke, Bon Bon, Jolly Abbot, Vespasia, and Winklet, the latter, however, we understand, is being relegated to hacking this season.

Our leading owner's lot include Fitzgrafton, Mallard, Ballark, Symmetrician, Golden Gleam, and Seclusion. They are indeed a half dozen magnificent looking animals and they attract many an admiring gaze as they parade round their paddock in the morning before work. They are all looking extremely well and have been doing half speed and slow work since they came up. Ballark is possibly a little on the fat side, but Fitzgrafton is glorious—just big enough for the work he has to do, but hard-bright, while Golden Gleam is full of joie de vivre and dances about like a two-year-old. Thompson, who has been helping with the work, went back to Bangalore on Tuesday, and Watson, really well again, will be up here by the end of the week to take charge.

THERE is still no betting on the big events and "three to one the field" is all that can be got out of the bookmakers. In the world of rumour Realm and Fitzgrafton seem to share the fancy, the latter for preference; but Steinhager has a rapidly growing band of followers, each new arrival from Bangalore testifying to the enormous improvement in Mr. "Charles'" horse. They are all nervous about Boabdil and until he has shown himself still going strong after a couple of weeks' preparation here he is not likely to be very strongly supported, good as he is. Dame Gossip is also beginning to whisper that Misty Morn is really a great deal better than he has shown himself hitherto, and that there will be one more "in it" when the day comes than is thought at present.

THE Turf Club have announced two more events for the Extra on 30th November and we gather that they are likely to fill well. The clause giving a 7lb allowance to G. R.'s will no doubt ensure some rides for our growing body of amateurs, but as the horse race is for a thousand-rupee stake it will keep out some of the hunter class who might have gone for it, the figure being beyond the paperchase limit' The stakes for the pony event are only Rs. 500, so that there will be no bar to this class competing, though they will probably find themselves up against some very hot stuff in it.

THE hurdles were up on the training track for schooling on both Thursday and Tuesday and a fair number went out for their trial trips. Minstrel Boy did a mile by himself each day in good form and Loyal, Reudice, Bonita, Dramatic, Idle, St. Odille, Pineal, Problem, Stepaway, Riverside, lady Rose, Jorrocks, and a big horse belonging to Mr. Robertson, who we think is called Sherrard, were all out once each. Bonita and Pineal were the pick of the jumpers, but Loyal, Dramatic, Idle, St. Odille, Stepaway, Riverside and Jorrocks (who was only out as a "lead") all did well. Reudice shaped very badly at all and came to grief at the fifth hurdle knocking a fetlock, and Mr. Robertson's horse fell at the third. Problem gave Bloss, who was riding him by himself, a very trying time, refusing a number of times at the first hurdle though afterwards jumping well, and Lady Rose started well but misjudged her distance at the last and crashed right into it, luckily knocking it over so that no damage was done beyond a small cut or two. Loyal seems to be taking kindly to the game and another dose of the cage on Tuesday morning has probably also done him good. None of the competitors for classic honors at the "illegitimate" game have yet shown us a taste of their quality, but we hope to be able to let our readers know how they perform later on. It was reported that there would be something going at Tollygunge last Sunday, but no one was to be found at the course save disconsolate sporting correspondents vainly seeking that which was not, and there is not likely to be much done on the steeplechase course for a week or two yet.

THE Tollygunge Club held their sixth and last Gymkhana of the season on Saturday, and despite the small fields and short programme there was a big attendance, who enjoyed themselves hugely and saw some interesting racing, marred only by the unfortunate accident to Mr. Pugh, due to a broken stirrup leather. This gentleman, we are sorry to say, is likely to be confined to his bed for at least a week and has had an unusually severe shaking. We hope he will be well enough to ride on the 30th November.

THE feature of the afternoon was the extraordinary fluctuations in the odds offered, as in nearly every case the margin between opening and closing prices was unusually large, showing that the public had come uninformed and only got its tips at the last minute. For instance Rulvette opened at tens and twos (out of three starters), but closed at fours, and there was no place betting. Lily went from fives to twos. Stepaway from threes to six to four on. Lily II from sixes to six to four on, and in the same race The Point from threes to six to four on. The first race nearly gave them all a big surprise. Of the three starters Rulvette, who has been only down from Darjeeling a few weeks and has never been known to have done a gallop, was considered a complete outsider and was hardly backed till at the last moment when the whisper went round that there was "something in it." In the result Mr. Levetus, who had the mount, somehow or other managed to give the other pair the slip at the post and got away with a lead of about four lengths into the straight, giving the favourite, Miss Trenton, all her work cut out to catch the chestnut and the English mare only just beat her by a neck in a very tight finish.

THE Ballygunge Bowl and the Cloister Cup gave two of our new G. R.'s their maiden wins; our congratulations are due thereon to Messrs. Rutland and Tremearne respectively. There have now been four additions in all to the list of authorised gentlemen riders "under Rule 68" since the beginning of the Monsoon season:—Messrs. Bletsoe, Levetus, Rutland and Tremearne, and they have, up to date, each had at least one win and we hope will, in common with their seniors, get lots more.

THE Ballygunge Bowl was a very hollow affair for Mr. Rutland on Picture. Mr. W. Griffiths' much talked of Riot could get no nearer than a very bad second, while the big bay was cantering in. After all it takes a very good pony to compete with an animal of Picture's class at 16lbs. worse than weight for inches terms.

IN the Cloister Cup we do not think that Tired Tim would have had very much show, even if he had been better handled; as it was he was soon a field behind the other two, and as there is a limit to the weight under which Wake Up can keep the lead throughout Lily was able to score for Mr. Tremearne with comparative ease.

THE Consolation Cup for ponies with seven starters produced the best race of the day and Mr. Petersen is to be congratulated on the smart performance of his mare Lily II, who is said to be one of three bought for "Rs. 6,000 the lot." The Point was much fancied by his supporters, but the little fellow did not have the best of luck. He was badly bumped at the start, but got away from them and then in the straight he seemed to get squeezed in between Dynamite and Lily II, after which he shut up, and small blame to him. In the sequel the big mare won cantering and Dynamite—the explosive pony did not "go off" this time—beat The Point for the place. Full details will be found in our Turf columns.

In our "Racing" columns to-day we give full details of the performances of some of the horses so far entered for the Viceroy's Cup; the rest will be given next week.

THE final in the ninth division polo tournament was played at Secunderabad in fine weather before a large assembly which included the Hon'ble Mr., Mrs. and Miss Bayley, General and Mrs. Hamilton, and General and Mrs. Rimington. Colonel Pedder and the officers of the 13th Hussars were "At Home" and their band played during the afternoon. The teams were as follows:—13th Hussars: Mr. Steele, Captain Bayley, Captain Marchant and Mr. Dangar (back); 20th Deccan Horse: Naik Siddi Kumar, Sowar Siddi Nur, Mr. A. E. H. Ley and Duffadar Nur Khan (back); Colonel Grantham and Major England umpired. The 13th Hussars won by five goals to three. Lady Wolffe Murray presented the cup.

Messrs. Brooke Bond who, for some time, have been advertising their tea in this city have now extended their business in the coffee line. We are indebted to them for a most excellent sample of their "Kora" Coffee, one of the chief merits of which is its most excellent method of packing. The glass bottles containing one and one half pounds respectively are fitted with patent stoppers, which are an effective protection against light and air, the action of which in this country, as we know to our cost, detracts from the value of most articles, directly they are opened. "Kora" Coffee retains its full flavour and aroma, and should, on this account, grow speedily in favour with the public.

We print in the usual place the trainers' lots which embrace the horses so far entered for the Calcutta Races and Steeplechases.

Apparently in spite of the adverse criticism which the Lucknow executive incurred through changing the conditions of the Army Cup they knew well what they were doing. The entries have proved that the new conditions are popular, and the race is now a more difficult one than ever to win and might easily be won by the last joined subaltern and his pony.

The increase of weight will make it inadvisable to put up a professional rider, and even the longest purse would find it hard to pick up a novice in Bombay which would be a certainty of winning the Cup.

The winner will probably turn out to be a pony for which a very moderate price has been given or a candidate from among the polo pony ranks. Even under the old conditions the race was won by Bin Curtas and Modesty and with so large a field as will this year come under the starter's hand, it is more than probable that some rank outsider will come out and upset the pot. From the present betting Mirdas appears to be the favourite; but he has so often disappointed his adherents that he may do so again; next comes Norwood, who seems to have found a very soft spot in the heart of the public.

This pony has only once appeared under C.T.C. rules when he ran down the street in a half mile race at Lucknow in 1904, since then he has won several gymkhanas. The pony is undoubtedly a stayer and we think should win.

At the same time Ittifaq's performance last year cannot be overlooked as he ran fourth in the Cup. Carrying the same weight as he will have to carry this year 11st. 8lb., but to give Norwood 1st. 10lb., as he will have to do, is trying him a bit high: but there is no doubt that he is the up-country favourite and that rupees in plenty will be lavished on him each way.

The Bombay contingent who do not back Mirdas will have their money on Little Exile to a man, being justified by the summary way in which he disposed of his opponents at Poona.

Madras will be represented by Martini who is much fancied. And the Punjab by Khalifa whose owner considers him invincible.

The great Wood and Badger stable, who have won the Cup twice running, have Woodie Major, Mr. Badger's polo pony, running, and unless we are much mistaken he will be there or thereabouts. Bridegroom, Anchor, and Peter the Great have also many supporters, but our placings are Norwood 1, Mirdas 2, and Ittifaq or Little Exile 3. In any case the race should be a godsend to the Bookies and should set them up for quite a long time to come!

The greatest animal dealer in the world is Mr. Carl Hagenbeck, who lives at Stellingen, a suburb of Hamburg. Here can be purchased almost any wild animal in existence. Asked how he managed to keep up his stock, Mr. Hagenbeck replied in an interview published in Chamber's Journal: "From my depots. I have depots everywhere—six in Asia, three in Africa, several in Europe, two in America, as well as depots in Siberia. I have over sixty travellers working for me all the time, whose sole business is to collect animals and ship them to me here. They employ thousands of natives to help them. Then I buy up everything that comes into Hamburg, and I may say that if anybody abroad wishes to dispose of his animals he invariably writes to me."

The next step is to telegraph to an agent in the neighbourhood, who inspects the stock with a view to purchase. "For instance," continued Mr. Hagenbeck, "the other day I received a letter from a resident in Rhodesia saying he had got a large collection of African deer and birds, and wished to get rid of them. Within three weeks I had secured the whole collection, and they are now on the way to Hamburg. I have at present several travellers on the way home, some of them with very large consignments of animals. Next week I expect one of my men from Siberia. He is bringing me deer, sheep, and other animals."

Two animals, it seems, are exceedingly scarce just now. These are the hippopotamus and the rhinoceros:

They are taken from their mothers when quite young—no easy feat, as you can imagine—and then brought up on milk. The feeding of them when you have finally secured them is no light undertaking. A baby hippopotamus will drink thirty pints of milk a day and bellow for more. To arrange for such a supply in the desert means that a large number of tame goats have to be taken along with the hunting party. Thirty years ago I supplied the London Zoological Gardens with an African rhinoceros. It was the first rhinoceros brought to Europe since the days of the Roman amphitheatre.

Another very scarce animal is the giraffe, and between 1880 and 1900 only three giraffes were imported into Europe. Among his innumerable adventures with animals Mr. Hagenbeck had one with a giraffe: "In Suez, some years ago, a full-grown giraffe ran away with me. The rope I held him by got entangled round my arm, and I could not get free. I was dragged along the streets and fearfully banged about. When I at length got loose I was so exhausted that I was obliged to lie down for a quarter of an hour without moving." The king of animal dealers considers that his narrowest escape took place while superintending the lowering into a pit of a huge alligator: "Suddenly, with a sweep of its tail, it knocked me right into the middle of a dozen large alligators. I jumped out in an instant, or I must assuredly have been torn to pieces."

That welcome harbinger of the cold weather, Messrs. Traill and Co.'s, Diary, has made its appearance with the usual regularity this year. The copy kindly sent us exhibits all the well-known features of its twenty-three predecessors. It is brimful of useful information and tables and the ever increasing sales speak volumes for the popularity of these indispensable books. Special attention is drawn to the very complete series of dates comprising Bengalee, Fuslee, Samvat, Mahomedan, Tamil and Malayalum, Telugu and Canarese and Burmese and the "Calendar" showing same at a glance. The diaries range in size from "pocket" to "foolscap" and there are thirty-six varieties of them.

Last week we announced the advent of Melbourne Inman, the billiard player, to-day we inform our readers that H. W. Stevenson, the English billiard Champion, will also be in India this cold weather and, of course, the two will fix up a meeting in Calcutta. They have met before in Sydney and Melbourne, Inman receiving long points—they won a match each. Messrs. C. Lazarus and Co., of Calcutta, are conducting the arrangements for Stevenson and are open to receive challenges and book engagements.

"Skene Dhu," the Indian sportsman whose writings are well-known to most of our readers, has recently contributed to The Motor a long and interesting article on "Motor and Gun in India" in the course of which he gives an account of a week-end motor run combined with a duck and snipe shoot in Central India. He writes in his introductory paragraph:—"That the motor car is useful in many ways, to many classes of people, there is no doubt; but to no one is it more useful in India than the keen sportsman, giving, as it does, such various opportunities of reaching distant grounds more or less inaccessible in a day's outing from any large cantonment.

For there is no doubt that shikar is getting more and more difficult to obtain in India. It is due to many causes, in small game shooting one prominent cause being the new scheme of concentrating troops at the various big stations, which means that all the good shooting grounds within reach of such cantonments are overrun by sportsmen at every week-end. And it is here that the motor car is such a blessing. Before its advent a few years back, say one wished for a day's duck and snipe shooting. A good ground lay some 40 miles away. This meant a big bundobast; perhaps three relays of ponies had to be laid out for one's tonga, their feeds had to be sent with them, and to reach the shooting grounds by daybreak, say 6 A.M., the unfortunate sportsman had to start soon after 1 A.M., some four or five hours of wearisome driving in the dark, and the same again in the evening, when home was not reached till after 11 o'clock.

Now take the motor. An early cup of tea at about 4 A.M., and then an exhilarating rush through the air, along the broad, flat road, almost deserted at this hour save for an occasional cart with its pair of plodding bullocks. Guns, food, all are stowed away in the car; there is no worrying at a little extra weight. And then the spin home in the evening, an hour and a half's ride bringing one home to dinner; in fact, the getting there and back is one of the pleasantest parts of the day, instead of being a wearisome toil."

According to the Paris correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, an American girl is diligently practising the jumps at Chantilly on horseback under the patient eye of a well-known trainer, her object being to obtain a license to ride in public very shortly. The excitement with which her debut will be awaited by our sporting Continental friends can readily be imagined.

Professor Leon Kendal of 89, Regent Street, London, who is among our advertisers, has achieved an eminent position as a man who deals apparently successfully with those problems that cause us all doubt at times and when we long for the advice of some one who can see further than ourselves. He is consulted by people in every land, and many noted men and women in India, China and The East generally have been in communication with him, and some wonderful accounts are related of his skill. He has made a great name for himself in this part of the world and his "charts" are deservedly famous.

One learns from the Daily Express that "the shooting of aigrettes has been forbidden in Upper Senegal for two years in order to preserve them from extinction. An attempt to breed the birds in captivity is also to be made." However, disappointed sportsmen are assured that this season Bombay ducks are both plentiful and strong on the wing; and Welsh rabbits will also afford good sport.

A sporting gourmet writes to a London contemporary:—"It has not been given to everyone to partake of swan—or rather cygnet—for I should think that father and mother swan would be rather weird eating. But it has twice been my fortune to spend October—the month of the Hunter's Moon and the fleecy evening mists—on the Norfolk Broads, and that privilege carried with it the right to so many cygnets from the Broad on the estate. Well, swan is good—very good, and neither oily, nor fishy, nor stringy, nor any of the things it is popularly supposed to be.

The bird is roasted very carefully, and for this process is swathed in vine leaves. No stuffing is necessary, but almost every good Norfolk house has its own traditional sauce, which in every case is rather sharp in flavour, and is best if fruit of the cranberry nature can be included in it. Cygnets never come into the London market, but first-class poulterers will obtain one for a customer.

In a recent article in The Pall Mall Gazette on "The Kaffir as a Sportsman," by a Policeman on the Veld, the following interesting allusion to cricket was made:—"It is nothing in summer for black teams in the Transvaal to travel thirty or forty miles to play a match, and it is impossible to ignore the fact that they show a wonderful capacity for the finer points of the game which many Englishmen never acquire. Not only are the Kaffir enthusiasts constantly practising, but they club together to provide themselves with the most orthodox gear—white flannels, shirts, and boots, pads, gloves and capital bats. There are no bank holidays nowadays in the Transvaal without plenty of native cricket, and it is well worth watching. In the last match which I saw there was a bowler quite good enough to have toured in England. He was a tall left-hander, and sent down a fast ball with a nasty break. The batting, too, was mostly very good, and there were many beautiful drives all along the ground, while the fielding would have put many a home team to the blush. The black soft sex, gaily bedizened in white skirts and coloured silk blouses, graced the cricket ground in great numbers, and showed much more genuine keenness than one could find in their white sisters on our "ladies' days" at home, never hesitating to join in the war-dance and general corrobberie which broke forth all round the ground, besides seizing the fielding side, whenever a wicket fell. As the batsmen lost their wickets, instead of retiring to the "pavilion," they ranged themselves near the umpire, and never moved from this position till the end of the game, when they instantly charged with wild yells at the last man out, who had made top score, and carried him round the ground in what seemed to be a most uncomfortable position for the recipient of the honour. This man, who was also the wicket-keeper, was a regular Blackham, and took balls of any pace with either hand, right, left, or over his head, in marvellous style."

It must be distinctly interesting to see the "black soft sex" joining in the corrobberies and war-dances.

Jockey Robert Robertson was last Thursday convicted of cheating Messrs. Treacher and Co., Poona, of Rs. 300 by means of a cheque drawn on a bank at which he had no account: the Magistrate gave him two months' rigorous and fined him Rs. 300, or, in default of payment, a further three months.

We apologise for the non-appearance of "In London Town" this week: it did not come to hand.

We are not aware whether the Assam authorities are prepared to grant permits for shooting big game in the Bijni, Jairung or Namlu reserves, but from all accounts the conservation of these places has resulted in a remarkable increase in the number of every sort of game—fur, fin and feather. One has hardly occasion to enter the jungle, as we are informed that at dawn and evening, prowling round the outskirts affords ample scope for gun or rifle. As might have been expected, cultivators complain of their crops being trampled, kine and poultry indented on by the big and lesser felines and wild dogs. Though rough paths ramify here and there, the solitary stalker, should any ambitious one elect to penetrate far in, runs the risk of being pounced upon like that unlucky sergeant who, cramped with the long journey in a dug out, attempted a short cut overland where the main stream in the Namlu takes a long sweep. There were indications of a struggle with a tiger, but a crushed sola topee was all that was ever recovered by the rescue party sent out! Up to date we have not heard of any destructive elephants knocking about, but they are decidedly increasing in numbers and boldness, while the goring of a woodcutter by a gyal in Chittagong a week or two back tends to show that wild cattle require thinning out. Taking everything into consideration we think the present rules might bear relaxing, at any rate for a while.

Waterfowl are coming down in the usual abundance to the Eastern Bengal and Assam bheels though they will not be in prime condition for another month. In this connection it is worth noting that the inland steamers have resumed running on the main branch of the Surma, which bisects the Sangoon district, so enabling those wishing to try their luck among the ducks to reach the very heart of it. As the diversion of the boats to the northern branch of the river for a year or two has left these jhils practically undisturbed it may be presumed the birds will be less wild than in places that have been shot over during the interval. Ajmerigunge is as good a camp centre as any, ordinary supplies being cheap and abundant. It would be preferable to engage a house boat at Dacca (for such are still to be had) than to build a basha on the ground, though small tents can be used, but the damp surroundings make the boat preferable.

The competition for the "Excelsior Cup" wound up the golf season at Darjeeling. It was won by Mr. S. O'Malley, who was followed closely by Lieutenant-Colonel W. J. Buchanan and the Hon'ble Mr. W. C. A. Oldham.

The annual general meeting of the Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association will probably take place on Wednesday, the 4th December.

Christmas and New Year holiday makers may be interested in the East Indian Railway announcement regarding the very liberal concessions offered to travellers over their system which appears further on.

Some days ago the question of reform in male attire was once again raised; this time by a person who should, at all events, be thoroughly competent to speak on the subject. Mr. Louis Parker has won for himself the name of "The Pageant King," and at the Tribune Rendezvous Dress Exhibition in London the other day he put in a strong plea for the adoption of more beautiful garments by men, and suggested that perhaps the pageant may eventually do something to turn male fashion once more towards the gayer colourings and more graceful shapes of the costumes of past ages. Certainly, if the pageant can change for the better our detestable hats and ridiculous trousers, it will not have existed in vain.

It is a singular thing, by the bye, that the man who does to some extent escape from the conventional ugliness of ordinary clothing is the sporting man. Shooting dress, for instance, may not be exactly beautiful in itself, but it is undeniable that the belted and strapped jacket and the wide knickerbockers are less ugly than the tight trousers, frock coat, and top hat of the City man. Again a good deal of adverse comment is generally made on the taste of the horsey man. Nevertheless, leggings and breeches, bright waistcoat and full-skirted coat, are infinitely nearer the picturesque than the business attire aforementioned.

The Indore Polo Tournament was concluded on the 16th instant and resulted in a win for Kishengarh who beat the Bhopal team by five goals to four. Details further on.

The final game in the Meerut Polo Tournament, details of which will be found in our Polo column, ended in a win for the 12th Lancers who beat the 5th Cavalry by four goals to three.

Hundreds of sportsmen will join us in hearty congratulations to Mr. W. J. Bradshaw on the occasion of his marriage with Miss Salome Blake. For many years he has taken the liveliest interest in local athletics, whether as Honorary Secretary, Committee man, or prize donor; he is a prominent Freemason, takes his full share in the public matters of the city, and as a keen and enthusiastic Volunteer officer is second to none in the Presidency. His wedding at the Calcutta Cathedral last Tuesday was very numerously attended, his brother officers honoured the occasion by appearing in uniform, H.H. the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal was present, and both at the Church and the reception at "Fairfield" the proceedings were marked by unusual cordiality, for this particular Benedick is among Calcutta's most popular personalities.

Fishing.

KASHMIR FISHING.

(Concluded.)

II.

Passing through Srinagar where a few fish can sometimes be obtained at the Dal gate and beneath the fourth and fifth bridges we move right on up the river to Bij Behara. Here the best times are August and September as the fish run down as soon as the river begins to get low. Spoon, phantom minnow and dead bait are all useful here.

Some little way below Bij Behara is the Sangam Bridge, and immediately below this on the left bank the Jhelum is joined by the Vayshoo. About a day's journey up this is Kaimoo, where the road from Islamabad to Shupiyon crosses the Vayshoo. Above this it is impossible to take a boat as the stream above is a shallow torrent, which is all good water for fly. The fish in this water never seem to take before four on the afternoon, but from that till sundown they take greedily. While the sun is on the water the only flies to use are black flies, a Zulu, blackamoor or black palmer. As the sun begins to sink exchange one of the black flies for a teal and green, and as soon as the fish take that readily change to nothing but white such as white moth. But far more killing than any made up fly is one made from a piece of the fringe of an ordinary bath towel. Take a few strands of this, lay them along the shank of an eyed No. 6 Limerick hook so that the eye is half way up the length of the strands and the barb of the hook is covered. Give them a few turns of whipping below the eye, turn the forward ends back along the top of the shank of the hook and whip again. Here is a cheap and easily made, good killing fly, for I think quite one half of the fish are killed on this. The time to be at Kaimoo is the first three weeks in August.

As the autumn approaches the places below Srinagar are the best till in September Shadipore is the best of them all. Going up the Sind from its junction with the Jhelum one first passes the place where all the camping grounds are until the stream gives a sharp bend to the left, with bluff banks on the left and a few huts on the right. This reach runs for about half a mile then turning sharp to the right forms a big pool under a village on the left. This pool is the spot and contains four good places. The best is a little above the bend on the right bank; two more are immediately opposite it under the right bank, while the fourth is immediately below them just above where an old mulberry juts out of the bank. But in taking up this place beware of mooring one's boat too low down, for there is an old Chenar tree-sunk in the stream, and its branches have been the salvation of many a nice fish. The spot is easily recognized by a slight hollow in the bank, where a portion of it, upon which the Chenar once grew, has caved in.

Neither in the afternoon or the evening is spinning of much use, but after four or five a fly will produce ite nice results though the fish will be small, not nning up to more than five pounds. Perhaps "fly-fishing" is rather a mis-nomer for the only resemblance this method has to fly-fishing, is that an arrangement of feathers on a hook is cast somewhat after the manner of a fly. But the ordinary fly is of scarcely any use, for it is necessary to make one, and manipulate one so that it looks exactly like a running Chilwa. Many boatmen can make them up. They whip two hooks on to a piece of gut about half an inch apart. Round the upper of these they whip a number of grey or light brown hen's feathers, so that the two hooks are hidden by them. But the result is very rough and clumsy. The two best flies I made were, one composed entirely of the blue feathers of a Blue Jay, with a white cotton body, and the other had a cock body, a tail of a piece of gray goose wing, and wings of the speckled breast feathers of a teal. As the fly should be slightly sunk, wrap a small piece of tin foil (from the top of a bottle) round your cast about a quarter of the way up. Now as to casting. Go up the reach leading to the pool, in a Shikara, at such a distance from the bank that you can just touch the bank with an easy cast. Watch underneath the bank until you see a shoal of Chilwa running up and a big fish chasing them. Then cast your fly so that it hits the bank and drops into the water among the Chilwa as they leap out of the stream. Draw it up stream amongst them, and ten to one you will rise something. You may cast a shop fly in amongst them until you are blue in the face, but unless you can make it resemble a running Chilwa you won't touch anything. One of the flies I have described above was so successful that it decieved a king-fisher who was watching operations from the top of the bank. I was casting against the ank when the little fellow suddenly popped down, caught my fly, and flew up with it. I think he was as surprised as I was, for having got a little way up, the line became taut, and he dropped his meat wondering at the unexpected resistance it offered. (N. B.—This is fact and not a "fisherman's yarn.") I found that fly a most successful one, but it was lost, together with a fish and a good piece of my cast, among the branches of the abovementioned Chenar tree. If Shadipore is crowded one will not do much good at the early morning fishing, unless one is an early riser, and if the competition for the good places is at all keen, a start at 3 A.M. is often necessary.

At Shilwat, which lies a couple of miles down the Jhelum from Shadipore, the same kind of "Chilwa fly-fishing" is to be had, but only when the river is absolutely clear. Anderkoote too, in September is good with a fly, of the type used at Kaimoo, the most killing of the lot being the "tag of tower." The bends in the canal which provided most sport in July and August are now useless. Just abreast of the village the falling water has uncovered a small bund, which, stretching half way across the canal, only leaves a narrow opening through which the water rushes. It is in the eddies and backwaters thus formed that numbers of fish, running up to 2lbs., are lying. My best afternoon there, fishing from half past four to seven produced twenty fish, the biggest of which weighed two pounds.

Shadipore is an excellent place in the autumn and in addition to fishing in the mornings and evenings, there is excellent duck or snipe shooting to be had on the jheels round about, which occupy one's time when the fish are not taking.

Below Shadipore is Jumbal where an old bridge spans the river. The best time for this place is from June to September; though at its best, it is not up to much. As at Sapar the best places are under, and just below the bridge, and the best things to use are a phantom minnow, and a spoon of an inch and a half.

Where the rivers flows into the lake are Hajan and Bunihara, both of them excellent places in the autumn. It is hard to point out any particular spot which is better than the others, but a sure guide to the fish are the flocks of water fowl, something like a gull, hovering over a patch of water Where you see these you many be sure there is a big fish underneath, driving the small fry to the surface and upon which the birds are preying. The early morning and the late evening are the best times of the day. Use dead bait, minnow and a two inch silver and gilt spoon.

Across the Woollar on the Southern shore is the shrine of Baba Shukr Din. It is perched on the top of a hill from which a spoon runs down in a jumble of rocks to the water. Round these little rocky islands there are fish, but the only way to get them is by trolling with spoon or phantom minnow. Towards sunset, however, the fish will rise to a small black fly, a black palmer for choice.

Ningal is situated where the river leaves the lake a little way above Sapor. The birds will here again point out to one where the fish are, but the results are obtained with a frog by moonlight.

In the foregoing notes mention has been omitted of two things which it is necessary to take with one when fishing in Kashmir. It must be borne in mind that in spite of Game Laws there will be many disappointment in store for one, so a large stock of patience, and a determination to enjoy one's self in spite of what ill luck may have in store for are very important items in one's outfit.

SHOT PATTERNS AND PENETRATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—There is a very general belief that if shot could be manufactured with the hardness of steel while retaining the weight of lead, we should be able to greatly improve the pattern and penetration of shot guns. I do not hesitate to affirm that this idea widely established though it be, is entirely erroneous. The present high degree of efficiency of choke bore guns is due not only to the individual weight of the shot pellets, which causes them to lose their velocity slowly, but also to that softness and inelasticity of the metal, which so many people mistakenly regard as drawbacks. The want of elasticity in the shot pellets allows them to be packed together under the pressure of the powder gas and driven in the form of a compact plug through the barrel, and the same lack of elasticity prevents their separating from one another, after leaving the muzzle, as rapidly as would shot made of some more resilient metal. Those who disbelieve in the advantages of inelasticity will very naturally ask "How about chilled shot; if softness combined with heaviness is good, why is it that chilled give superior patterns to the older soft shot?" The answer to this is that pure lead is altogether too soft: so compressible in fact that it will not stand being driven through a choked barrel without a large proportion of the pellets being so badly deformed, that they become unfit for flight through the air. Such badly deformed pellets turn aside in all kinds of erratic directions in face of the resistance of the air, and so waste themselves outside the killing circle made by the body of the charge.

Chilled shot while retaining to a very large degree the inelasticity of soft, resist deformation far better so that a great proportion of the pellets retain their spherical shape, while those which are deformed, are not flattened to such an extent as to become utterly erratic in flight. In tungsten we have a metal with a specific gravity of 19, i. e. more than half again as heavy as lead. If therefore in the future a tungsten-lead alloy is arrived at, having the inelasticity of chilled lead, or if tungsten pellets can be coated with a lead alloy, we may expect to see the efficiency of the shot gun largely increased.

It is perhaps more likely that some kind of shrapnel will be eventually devised for wild-fowl shooting at long ranges. A metal case arranged to release the charge of shot it contains, at a fixed distance after it has left the muzzle. So far attempts at making shrapnel suitable for the ordinary 12-bore gun have proved failures. They acted occasionally with surprising results, but their performance was so uncertain, that those sportsmen who tried them soon gave up using them in disgust.

That my statements regarding the undesirability of extreme hardness and elasticity in shot pellets are correct can be proved by any painstaking sportsman who will go to the trouble of loading a few ordinary 12-bore cartridges with small steel or iron balls. These when tried on the target will be found to give very inferior patterns to lead shot of the same diameter. I long ago observed the unsatisfactory results given by cast-iron case shot in heavy artillery.

These hard balls scatter far more in proportion than the antimony hardened bullets used in the case shot of field guns and siege artillery.

The progress of the shot-gun has of late years been very slow as compared with the enormous strides made in

BOVRIL RECEPTION.

25th September 1907.—To-day (Wednesday and Thursday) the Annual Reception took place at the Bovril Factory, in Old Street, E.C.

The Chairman, The Earl of Bessborough, C.V.O., C.B., and the Directors of the Company were present and amongst others may be mentioned Members of the London County Council, various Boards of Guardians, and representatives of public institutions, and General Sir William Wilson, K.C.M.G.

The first thing that meets the eye at the noble entrance in Old Street is the Royal Arms, denoting the possession of the King's Warrant. The visitors were conducted in parties up the marble stairs into the "home of Bovril" which is a veritable palace, and as regards cleanliness and brightness it is safe to say there is not another factory in London that can compare with it. The beautiful polished white tiles throughout the building and the clean concrete floors, together with the free circulation of air and the abundance of light went far to explain the healthy appearance of the busy factory hands, all of whom have to pass a medical examination.

The first rooms visited were full of advertising novelties, show-cards, circulars, labels, etc. Then came the splendidly equipped laboratories where much interest was taken in the delicate instruments and medical appliances, with which the research work is done. All the raw materials are subjected to repeated analyses; every batch is examined, and frequent analyses of the finished product are made before leaving the premises.

The raw materials were shown in exactly the form they are received from the carefully supervised factories in our various Colonies and the River Plate, where the healthiest prairie fed cattle are plentiful. Emphasis was laid upon the fact that Bovril is all beef. Bovril Limited will have nothing to do with the various cheap vegetable and yeast extracts now upon the market.

In the Milling Room was seen the preparation of the Albumen and Fibrin; it is the addition of this Albumen and Fibrin that forms the chief feature of Bovril and makes it superior to all extracts of meat and home made beef teas. The granulated beef (or Albumen and Fibrin) comes direct from the Canadian factory; it is ground to the finest possible powder and has to pass through a sieve of 15,000 meshes to the square inch. In this fine state the Albumen and Fibrin is easily assimilated by the most delicate digestion.

The actual manufacture of Bovril takes place in the next department, and it was interesting to note that during the whole process BOVRIL IS NEVER ONCE TOUCHED BY HAND; everything is done by specially prepared machinery. The large vats each contain the juices of over 300 oxen, and after thorough blending the contents are mechanically sieved; they then pass through pipes to the floor where the various sized bottles are filled. The speed with which the girls manage the filling taps is extraordinary; one girl actually fills 12,000 bottles in a day.

On the same floor the labelling, wrapping and sealing is done and the goods are then nailed up in dozens by special machinery and passed on to the despatch floor; here they are loaded into carts and vans to be distributed to every corner of the world.

In addition to seeing Bovril made, the visitors were much interested in some of the Company's Specialties, chief of which is "invalid Bovril" a highly concentrated, unseasoned preparation specially suitable for Hospitals and the sick room. It contains a high percentage of proteids and being unseasoned is often preferred by invalids to the ordinary Bovril.

Down in the basement were seen the huge boilers; the Company's private electrical plant, also their own artesian well, from which a splendid and efficient supply of soft, pure water is obtained by compressed air from over 400 feet below the surface. The water is actually forced to the top of the building, which means 500 feet actual raising.

Visitors were astounded to hear that the beautiful premises were quite inadequate for the huge business now carried on. However, it is a fact that additional space had to be found, and another place almost as large as the Old Street premises has been secured for storage purposes, not to mention the commodious premises of the Company in 16 of the largest cities of the Empire.

Afternoon tea and light refreshments were served to all the visitors, and after a most enjoyable afternoon one felt what a really sound and pure article Bovril was and how thoroughly suitable the premises were for the manufacture of a food of such a world-wide reputation as it enjoys.

The impression left upon all those who attended, was the care taken during the process of manufacture to ensure the absolute purity and standard good quality of Bovril. The Company under its present Directors is evidently most efficiently carrying on the traditions of the great Lord Playfair, Professor Sir Edward Frankland, John Lawson Johnston (the founder of Bovril), William Harkness (for 40 years Government analyst and food expert in Somerset House), who were all closely connected with the Company in their lifetime.

Mr. V. G. Weatherall of Purneah sends us the following letter:—

I am much pleased with the "Lethal" bullets invented by you and can recommend them for either choke or cylinder barrels. I can vouch that they deal a smashing blow and would stop anything, which one could not rely on a shot gun doing prior to this invention. I only wish I had had them in some of the big shoots in Nepal, for I have often lost a chance as I never relied with confidence on my gun as an auxiliary. In my opinion they will bring shot guns more into use for ball than they are at present, especially with the advantage of firing out of either choke or cylinder barrels. I have used a good many of the "Rotary" bullets, which are good, but these are a vast improvement on them. I am sure any sportsman who use the "Lethal" bullets will soon have faith in them. You are at liberty to use this letter if you desire to do so.

LANG

·470
HIGH VELOCITY
CORDITE RIFLE.

VELOCITY* 2,250 ft. sec.

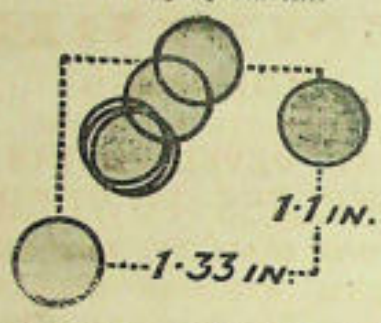
"FIELD," March 23, 1907: "The material increase in velocity which has been obtained shows that the revised specification of loading gives an enhancement of velocity which should prove of great value to the sportsman.

GREAT STRIKING ENERGY.
MINIMUM RECOIL.

Expressly designed to replace ·450 Bore Rifles, the importation of which into India is now prohibited.

"FIELD," March 23, 1907: ". . . . A very valuable advance has already been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

The best DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.



Seven shots at 100 yards with Lang's ·470 Sporting Rifle. Reproduced full size.

Full particulars on application.

LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY
CORDITE RIFLE.

An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD."

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR HOLIDAYS.

RETURN TICKETS AT REDUCED FARES.

First and Second Class Passengers.

1. During the period from the 7th to the 26th December 1907, inclusive, return tickets at single fares will be issued to first and second class passengers for any distance over 100 miles. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distance 100 miles or less, on payment of fare as for 101 miles. The tickets will be available for completion of the return journey up to, and including, the 14th January 1908.

The ontward journey must be completed within the same limit of time, after commencement, as allowed for single journey tickets,—vide paras. 15 and 21, pages 87 and 89 of the Monthly Time Table and Guide. One day is allowed for break of journey for every 100 miles or part of 100 miles, but no break of journey will be allowed at a station short of 101 miles from the point the journey was commenced.

Intermediate Class Passengers.

2. Return tickets will be issued during the same period and under the same conditions as to distances and break of journey to intermediate class passengers, at a charge of two third class fares.

General.

3. Tickets purchased at the Calcutta Offices (Fairlie Place and Chowringhee) will be available by trains leaving Howrah on the day of issue or on the following day. Tickets for Monday's mail trains are procurable at these offices on Saturdays. Tickets purchased at the Burra Bazar Office will be available on the day of issue only.

4. The return concession tickets for first, second and intermediate class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation, provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale :—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	Four.
Second	Five.
Intermediate (lateral compartment) ...	Eight.

5. The return concession ticket does not entitle the holder to any additional concession, such, for instance, as that under which women servants are, on payment of the next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in first or second class compartments. Concession tickets for children will be issued at half single journey fares.

6. The above arrangements apply to the East Indian Railway system, including the Tarkeswar Branch, and the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway.

LUCKNOW OPEN GYMKHANA MEETING.

First Day, Tuesday, the 12th November 1907.

THE first day of the Open Gymkhana Meeting provided what was in every sense a capital day's racing. Only one bookmaker was present on the course, but the totalisators were well patronised. Favourites won in nearly every event. It was a day out for gentleman riders and that sporting regiment, the Royal Dragoons provided all the winning riders, Mr. Charrington winning three and Mr. Tomkinson two races, both in fine style. The jump race was decidedly the event of the afternoon and Mr. Charrington won a very slashing victory, overhauling Mr. Sandbach on Double Keys near the post, though had Double Keys been held in at the start the result would probably have been different. The Durhams and the Mahomed Bagh Club were "At Home" and the Band of the 24th Punjabis played during the afternoon. Details :—

Won easily by one and a half lengths: half a length divided second and third. Time—40secs.

Second Day, Thursday, 14th November 1907.

THOUGH the fields to-day were smaller the racing again was of a most successful description. Seven events were down for decision and with two exceptions, backers had reason to be satisfied with themselves. The Horse Hurdles produced an excellent race, Craig, although leading throughout, winning by only a short head. Little Exile was favourite for the Arab Plate, but a good deal of money was on Rakhan, who won somewhat easily. An upset occurred in the Stewards' Plate, in which Naughty Girl came in to the general surprise. Lala Radha Mohan's mare was put up for sale after the last race, but was withdrawn as there were no bids. Mirdas, who won in very easy fashion in the Maiden Arab Plate, is looked upon as having strengthened his chance in the Army Cup Race, by reason of his performance to-day.

THE HANDICAP HORSE HURDLES.—Rs. 49 to the winner, Rs. 20 to the second, and Rs. 10 to the third. A Handicap Hurdle Race for Horses. 1½ mile over six flights.

MEERUT AUTUMN MEETING.

Second Day, Tuesday, 12th November 1907.

THE racing was again very good to-day. We had two big fields and though the Pony Chase had dwindled to two starters, these provided a most interesting spectacle. The attendance was again very full. The Supply and Transport Officers were "At home," and the Band of the 31st Lancers was again a very appreciable adjunct to the racing. Details.

THE NAUCHANDI PLATE.—Value Rs. 350; Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for C.-B. ponies that have not won flat races value Rs. 50 or over amounting in aggregate to Rs. 1,200 or over since the 31st March 1905. 5 furlongs.

Won by four lengths; a neck between second and third Time—1min. 40⅘secs.

Third Day, Thursday, 14th November 1907.

AN excellent day's sport brought a most pleasant meeting to a successful conclusion. The racing was close and there was no falling-off in any of the fields except in two hurdle races. The handicapping has been marvellously successful.

The executive have good reason to congratulate themselves on the new era that seems dawning on Upper India racing and the results they have been able to achieve here. The Civil Service were "At Home" on the race course and the Band of the 17th Lancers enlivened the proceedings.

DESERT PLATE.—Rs. 350, Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for Arab ponies. 5 furlongs.

ARAB HANDICAP HURDLE RACE.—

Mr. Goodman's Hermes, 10st. 8lb. ... Owner 1
Mr. Sydney Smith's Nadim, 8st. 9lb. ... A. Hoyt 2
Bodyguard Polo Club's Shahzada, 11st. 8lb. Capt. Holden 3

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Nadim, 5 to 4 agst. Shahzada, and 3 to 1 Hermes.

After they got over the first hurdle Shahzada attended by Nadim showed the way till at the third obstacle Nadim hit a hurdle and lost ground while Hermes went up to Shahzada. Then after the six furlongs post Nadim began to improve his position catching up to the leaders at the last hurdle. On landing over Hermes and Nadim drew away and made a desperately ridden race home, Hermes winning in the last couple of strides by a neck; a poor third. Time—4mins. 25secs.

HORSE HURDLE RACE.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for horses. About 1¼ mile over 7 flights of hurdles.

BETTING: Evens Primrose, 6 to 4 agst. Redshot 3 to 1 Tokani, 6 to 1 Black Spot, and 10 to 1 the others.

From the start the whole field ran in almost a dead level line till within the distance Mignon fell out, the rest keeping together. Then when coming into the rails, developments began and Black Spot got a slight advantage which he improved upon and won by half a length; one length between second and third; a neck between third and fourth. Time—1min. 20⅘secs.

MECCA PLATE.—Rs. 800. Rs. 500 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A handicap for Arab ponies. 1¼ mile.

Mr. Sydney Smith's Palmy Days, 7st. 8lb. Melsom 1
Capt. Holden's Marengo, 8st. 3lb. ... A. Hoyt 2
Mr. Fail's Chance, 7st. 13lb. ... ... Baichan 3

Also ran: Commander 9-10 Betty; 8-8; and Saglavie, 7-2.

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Commander, 2 to 1 agst. Chance, 4 to 1 Palmy Days, and 6 to 1 the others.

Soon after the start Chance attended by Saglavie showed out at the head of the field with Palmy Days lying in the rear. They ran in this order to the quarter mile where Palmy Days who had improved his position came through his field and soon took a clear lead and going strong came in a comfortable winner by five lengths; half a length between second and third. Time—2mins. 25⅘secs.

CONSOLATION PLATE.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for ponies that have run at the meeting and not won. 3 furlongs.

Col. Serryman's Quilt, 6st. 6lb. (car. 7st. 11lb.) ... ... Manly 1
Mr. Fail's Alice, 7st. 10lb. ... ... Kilcorn 2
Mr. Rose's Sweet Rose, 10st. 10lb. ... Howie 3

Also ran: Wild Rose, 9-7; Mousie, 8-7; and Grey Lady, 7-0.

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Mousie, 2 to 1 Wild Rose, 4 to 1 each Quilt and Sweet Rose, and 6 to 1 the others.

There was one break away in which Quilt damaged the starting machine. When let go Quilt soon came to the front and though challenged in the rails by Alice and Sweet Rose, she kept in front and won handsomely by a length; the same distance between second and third. Time—32⅘secs.—C. and M. Gazette.

Secretary:—MAJOR J. H. ENSOR.

First Day, Tuesday, 19th November 1907.

LOVELY weather favoured the opening day, and the promise of interesting sport attracted a very large gathering. Sir John, Lady, and Miss Hewett were among those present, and there was also a large party from Government House. Eight events figured on the programme and, although no time was lost, the last event was run off by moonlight, a situation which was entirely new to the oldest recegoers in Lucknow. The greatest sympathy is felt for Captain Holden in the serious loss he sustained by the accident to his mare, Lady Drake, in the Closed Chase. Lady Drake took off short at the water jump and came down heavily, breaking her back. Captain Holden had a narrow escape. She won the steeplechase and hurdle race at the recent Umballa meeting where she was ridden by her owner and she ran third in the hurdle race at Meerut with Northmore up and would have given a good account of herself in the closed races at Meerut. Details:—

THE PONY HURDLES.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, Rs. 100 to the third. A handicap hurdle race for ponies 11-2 and under. 1¼ miles over 6 flights.

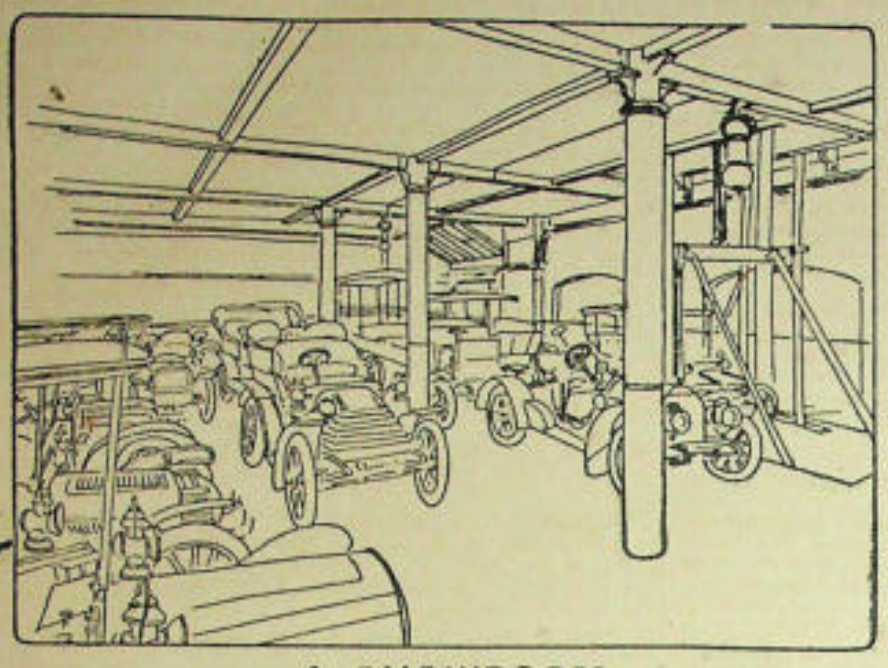
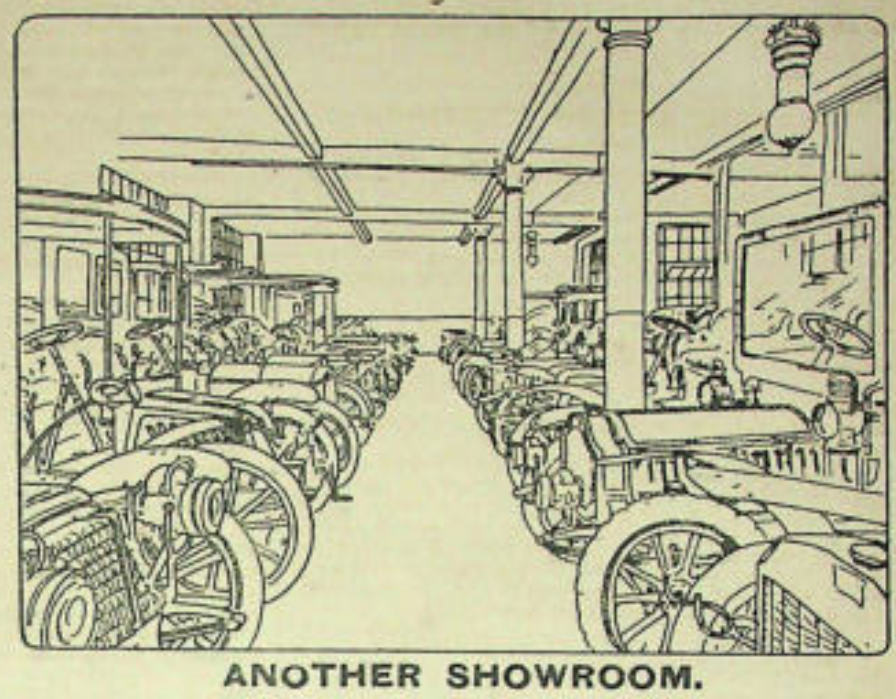
THE MOTOR HOUSE.

The spacious and wonderfully will equipped premises owned by the proprietors of the Grande Maison D'Automobiles, Limited, situated in the Euston Road, London, are doubtless the Mecca towards which turns every prospective purchaser of a second hand car, for if he cannot find here the particular object of his search, it is difficult to conceive where else in London town his requirements can be so completely supplied. The business here is carried on in four palatial showrooms and in addition there is a large place—The Progress Works—in that well-known habitat of the Motor Car and all pertaining thereto, Shaftesbury Avenue.



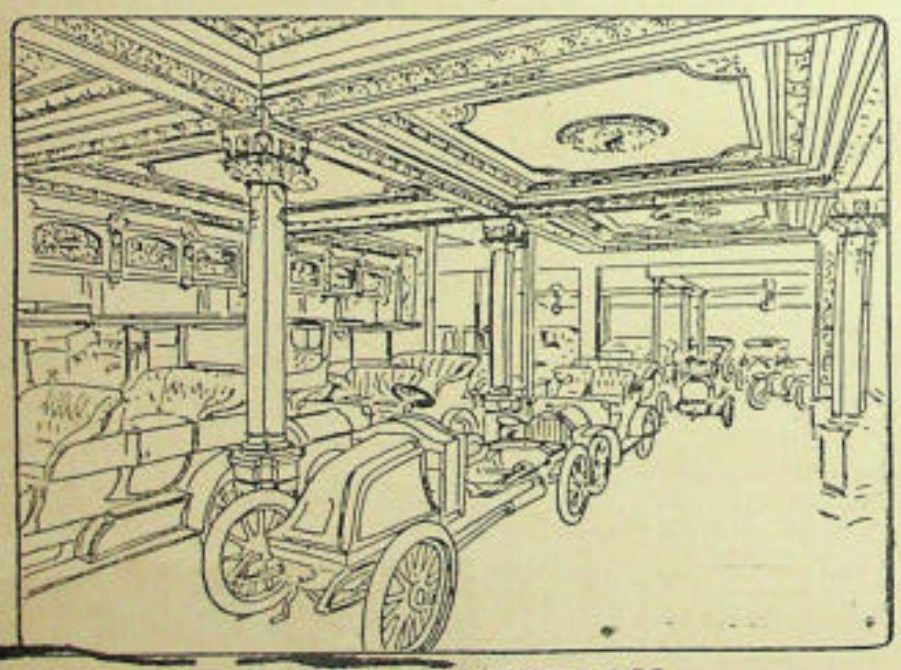
A SHOWROOM.



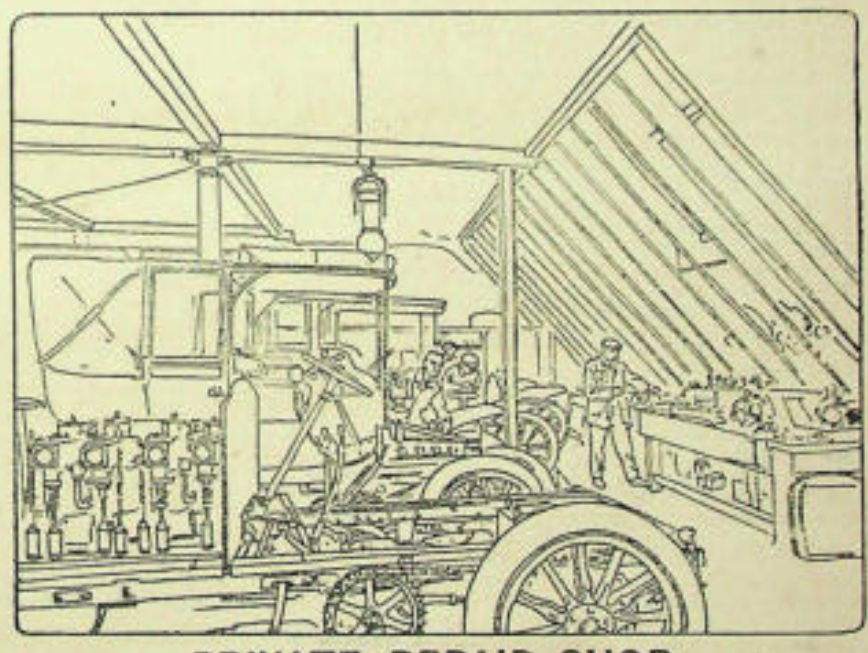
ANOTHER SHOWROOM.

At The Motor House the floor space is rather more than two acres. At Nos. 314—316 there are no less than six floors, each 50 feet by 100 feet, thr-e rather smaller and a roomy well lighted basement. At Nos. 366—368 the ground floor is 300 feet by 80 feet with a basement and, floor above approximately the same. These dimensions show us at once that many vehicles may here be ranged together; as a matter of fact there is ample room for the storage of six hundred cars and we believe, in the busy season the stock frequently approaches very close to this number. In the Shaftesbury Avenue premises, which enjoy the reputation of being perhaps the finest buildings in London devoted to the Automobile business, three hundred cars can be conveniently stored and comfortably shown. These figures in themselves go to show that The Motor House carries out, in its own particular a line, operations as extensive and as much appreciated by the motoring public as any connected with the vast and ever increasing industry, which has sprung up within quite recent years.

The Motor House deals very largely with second-hand cars and here may be seen examples of every make, English and Continental, from the titanic and resplendent models of big carrying capacity, which suggest the ownership of the multi-millionaire to the modest and bijou vehicles designed to carry but one unpretentious individual. Purchasers like the poor, are ever with them, but it is on Thursdays that the place is thronged, for on that day throughout the season the management hold an auction sale and the atmosphere of The Motor House becomes inspiriting and interesting even to the casual onlooker who, like ourselves, finds himself occasionally assisting in the brisk and rather novel scene. In addition to these weekly sales, there is held once a month a non-reserve sale and at such an average of sixty cars find new owners in an afternoon.



PRIVATE SHOWROOM.



PRIVATE REPAIR SHOP.

Now and then a special auction is held, the lots consisting for the most part of types of popular makes. For example, about the time we had the pleasure of being conducted over the premises, a special catalogue comprising almost entirely "Daimlers" and "Napiers" of all types and with various bodies had just been prepared and some spirited bidding was confidently expected, for these particular cars, we believed, at present hold the enviable position of being the best representatives of the four and six cylinder types now on the market. But besides the sale on commission of second-hand cars, The Motor House does a big business in new and shop soiled cars and the purchasing of brand new cars at what are called "Paris" prices. They have also been entrusted by the Wolseley Winton and Fiat Companies with the selling of overstock, shop-soiled and second-hand vehicles and with the holding of special sales. In connection with the Wolseleys, it may be mentioned that recently, within a period of ten days, they disposed of no less than sixty cars. Here is another instance of the firm's enterprise—in a single week they purchased fourteen big "Leon-Boilee" cars, listed at £1,250 each and disposed of the lot in sixteen days. We saw on the basement fourteen new Omnibus chassis, which they had recently taken over together with the whole of the assets of the Edinburgh District Omnibus Company.

Two important branches, we must not omit to mention are the completely equipped repair shop in Islington, whereby as the result of a process which vies with Alladin's lamp in celerity old cars are made as new, and the special department devoted to their export and packing business. The Motor House is extending its operations to distant quarters of the Globe and have already invaded India and the Straits, among their constituents being several native potentates including the Gaekwar of Baroda, the Sultan of Johore and Mr. Khwooi of the Federated Malay States.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

WE deserved better at the hands of the Clerk of the Weather than we got at Sandown on the 27th ultimo, as the afternoon, dull, wet, and depressing, was by no means the sort to suit backers of losers, and the tardy sunshine that came with the last race but one did not make amends. The light, too, at periods was very bad, a mist making it difficult to distinguish colours on the far side, especially in the Coombe Autumn Plate, in which Madame de Soubise showed that the stable had good grounds for fancying her Cesarewitch chance, though the distance and the class here were different. Yet she, Asticot, and Baltinglass have each of them wiped out the Newmarket defeats almost within the week. Despite the chance of another wet jacket, a big crowd under umbrellas and many under the stand shelter testified to the popularity of the meeting. The executive have every reason to be satisfied, and can also plume

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

WE deserved better at the hands of the Clerk of the Weather than we got at Sandown on the 27th ultimo, as the afternoon, dull, wet, and depressing, was by no means the sort to suit backers of losers, and the tardy sunshine that came with the last race but one did not make amends. The light, too, at periods was very bad, a mist making it difficult to distinguish colours on the far side, especially in the Coombe Autumn Plate, in which Madame de Soubise showed that the stable had good grounds for fancying her Cesarewitch chance, though the distance and the class here were different. Yet she, Asticot, and Baltinglass have each of them wiped out the Newmarket defeats almost within the week. Despite the chance of another wet jacket, a big crowd under umbrellas and many under the stand shelter testified to the popularity of the meeting. The executive have every reason to be satisfied, and can also plume themselves on having presented a capital afternoon's sport. The going was heavy for Sandown which is saying a great deal. Details:—

Had the sportsman acted on a commonsense suggestion he would, on the eve of the Cambridgesshire week, have prepared for the campaign in the shelter of the clubs of London, for a cold, thick fog, yellow in places, enshrouded the metropolis on Saturday, and there did not seem much chance of racing taking place, or of seeing the same if it did. Appearances were again deceptive, as by far the finest afternoon of the three awaited visitors to Sandown, but the attendance showed a falling-of. That the cross-country stables were eager for the fray was shown by the plethoric character of the fields, no fewer than 92 horses being seen out in the six races; in fact, the extra demands caused a lot of bungling at the number boards, which were filled with slats, like the sails of a windmill. In one event the lot were scarcely hoisted before they were off, while Amabit's number was very late in going up. Many of the competitors were not fit, and Saturday's form will be all upset before Christmas. The executive were lucky in respect of the going, which was regular steeplechase ground, and though falls were frequent only one was at all serious, and that happened to Smythe on The Longmynd in the Norbiton Hurdle, the horse being cannoned by something on landing over the last flight and rolling over his jockey, who lay there some time, with first aid promptly rendered. Removed to the neat little hospital, he had not recovered from the concussion when we left.

NEWMARKET.

We were lucky in being treated to a dull and somewhat windy autumn day for the big event, as during most part of the night the rain fell heavily. The last big autumn handicap attracted everyone's attention, and the news that Malua had secured marked favouritism overnight did not daunt the partisans of Dean Swift or Stickup, while Retort was the very latest, and seldom has partisanship run so high. Nothing occurred to give either a fillip in the morning's news, as speculators were taking a rest at the rooms after their labours overnight. That a rare muster was going to be present was shown by the stream of people trooping coursewards. Racing along the grand Cambridge turnpike road came motor after motor, and the space at the back of the stand was so crammed with cars de luxe that, it was a wonder how the men in charge stored them away, and the student of motobilia could well fill the day without paying for entrance to the stand at all.

His Majesty was welcomed by a thoroughly representative gathering, which included most of the leading patrons of the national sport, the club enclosure and Bird Cage being crowded, but there was much more space room in the other rings than on the Cesarewitch day, a judge who works on figures appreciating it at half, but perhaps two-thirds would be nearer the mark. However, in contrast with the times when the race used to finish at the top of the town, the muster was immense. The going, out of which lumps had been cut on the previous day, was none the lighter for the overnight's soaking, and bakers of the light-weights took heart of grace—hence the run on Retort.

Mr. R. Croker's Hayden, 3yrs. 6st. 13lb.	Walter Griggs	0

(Winner trained by R. Sherwood.)

BETTING AT THE START: 2 to 1 agst. Malua, 8 to 1 each Land League, Stickup and Dean Swift, 10 to 1 Retort, 100 to 9 Lady Hasty, 100 to 6 Andover, 20 to 1 Romney, 25 to 1 Linacre, 33 to 1 each Dinneford, Hanover Square, and Rosette Dawn, 40 to 1 Hayden, 50 to 1 Sagamore, and 66 to 1 Longcroft.

PLACE BETTING: 2 to 1 on Malua, 2 to 1 each agst. Land League, Stick-up and Dean Swift, 5 to 2 each Retort and Lady Hasty, 4 to 1 Andover, 5 to 1 Romney, 6 to 1 Linacre, 8 to 1 each Dinneford, Hanover Square and Rosete Dawn, 10 to 1 each Hayden and Sagamore, and 100 to 7 Longcroft.

Owing to previous loss of time the paddock inspection had to be cut short, and the competitors were not long on view before they were mounted. Dean Swift, Hanover Square, and Land League showed the way, whilst in trotting order the rear was brought up by Malua, Lady Hasty, and Stickup. Although a little trouble was given by Dean Swift, Linacre (who would not join his horses), Rosette Dawn, and Retort the start was not long delayed, and was a perfect one. On the right and left of a line like cavalry at a review were Lady Hasty and Sagamore, whilst close up in the centre raced Malua, Land League, Romney, and Andover, with Stickup on the near side, the last trio being Dean Swift, Retort, and Rosette Dawn. No changes occurred until reaching the T. Y. C. Post, where Lady Hasty shot up and dropped speedily to the rear, leaving Sagamore in front of Malua, Linacre, Longcroft, and Land League, with Stickup heading Romney, Andover, and Dinneford, Hayden, who was swerving all over the track, now joining Lady Hasty in the rear. Sagamore kept his advantage, and close on the Bushes was just in front of Malua, Stickup, Land League, and Linacre almost abreast, a length or so separating them from Andover and the fast tiring Longcroft, Dinneford now closing up in front of Romney and Rosette Dawn. Directly the pinch came Sagamore was done with, and Land League, on the upper ground, shot out with the first run of Malua and Stickup, Andover going on next, and from this point Captain Homfray's colt, standing pressure, kept at bay the challenge of Malua, who crept up and almost caught him on the post, but Land League scored somewhat luckily by a neck; Stickup, full of running, was two lengths away, third. Dean Swift was a moderate fourth. Linacre close up fifth; then after a gap came Andover sixth, Retort seventh, Longcroft (showed fine speed) eighth, Rosette Dawn (turned cunning) ninth, Sagamore tenth, Romney eleventh, Lady Hasty (tailed off) twelfth, Dinneford (easing up) thirteen, and Hayden (beaten off) last. Time—1min. 58-2/5secs.

The most perfect weather of the week crowned the Tuesday, when, the mass of the holiday public having dispersed, the course was left clear for the regular habitues of the Turf. A capital programme was set for the critical verdict of the frequenters of the Turf, who met in strong force to welcome the King, and though their ranks showed little falling-off the further enclosures looked bare by comparison with Wednesday's crowd. The going had improved, but was a bit stodgy, an unique circumstance on Newmarket Heath, but under bright sun and a drying breeze it got better hourly. Details:—

Dibs was very unruly at the post, and, though he jumped away sideways, he was soon up with his field. Your Majesty was the quickest into his stride, followed by Little Goose, Rhodora, Ednam, and Dibs, but after going a furlong and a half Dibs dashed to the front, followed by Rhodora, Vamose, Little Goose, Your Majesty, on the top ground, being just in advance of Ednam, on the left, and Perrier. Approaching the Bushes, Vamose lost his place, and, with Dibs holding out signals of distress immediately afterwards, Rhodora drew to the front attended by Little Goose, Ednam, and Perrier. In the Dip Little Goose compounded, and Rhodora, holding the King's horse at bay, won comfortably by two lengths; three-parts of length separated second and third. Ednam (running his race in snatches) was fourth, Your Majesty (ran well) fifth, Vamose (speedy) sixth, Norman III. seventh, Dibs (had tempered) eighth, and Pilgrim's Way last. Time 1min. 27 4/5secs.

FOOTBALL. ASSOCIATION RULES.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

UNQUESTIONABLY the most significant happening in Southern League circles on Saturday was the defeat administered to Plymouth Argyle by Brentford, at Griffin Park. One was not altogether unprepared for this. The Argyle had been playing pretty and effective football since the season opened, but they had not been so convincing during October as in the preceding month. In September they played two matches at home and three away, and won them all, a single goal only being scored against them. Their three October matches yielded them four points, Portsmouth being beaten 2—1 at Home Park, where Millwall shared the honours in a goal-less game, and on 12th October the Argyle took part in a draw at Bradford, where again there was an absence of scoring. With the removal of the cypher from the "lost" column in the Plymouth record an enviable distinction is lost to the Westerners. They were the only team in the leading leagues that had escaped defeat, and now their escutcheon has been tarnished. The team responsible for this thoroughly deserved the success which attended its efforts, and the more credit belongs to Brentford because they were not at full strength. It is true that the substitutes played well, and there was a swing and determination about the whole side which was inspiriting to watch. Brentford should show form of this kind away from home, and they would then soon improve their position in the table, the lowly place which they at present occupy being the result of their five losses on opposing grounds.

Tottenham Hotspur left it until the last Saturday in the month to score a Southern League win in October, and the merit of their performance is enhanced by the fact that the points were picked up at Fratton Park. The North Londoners had out their best side except that Hughes was still an absentee, and at times they played delightful football. Saturday's win was their first away victory in the present tournament, and it was Portsmouth's second home defeat. In the corresponding game last season they won by three goals to one, so that Saturday's reverse is another loss of two points, and assists to establish them more firmly in the twentieth place in the table. Crystal Palace were justified in assuming that they would not do worse than draw at Luton, notwithstanding that last season they provided the Strawplaiters with four points, for the latter had won only one match to date, and the Palace had not tasted defeat since 28th September when they were beaten at home by Queen's Park Rangers. Once more the unexpected happened, for after the first few minutes Luton played such football as aroused the enthusiasm of the onlookers, and made one wonder why a team able to show such dash and cleverness was only one degree removed from bottom place. The Luton halves upset the Palace attack, while Rankin at centre was a pronounced success. A win by four clear goals cannot be explained away. Queen's Park Rangers are attracting considerable attention just now, and it must not be overlooked that during the past six weeks they have not gone under. At Bradford they were not able to inflict the first home defeat on Park Avenue, but they picked up a point, and are now treading very hard on the heels of the leaders. Both have played the same number of games, and only a point separates them. There should be a big crowd at Park Royal on Saturday when the Rangers formally open their new ground, if only in recognition of the fine form the players are showing.

There was a typical local Derby at Millwall, when the opposition was furnished by West Ham United, who in the corresponding game in 1906-7 played the Dockers to a draw. They went North Greenwich on Saturday with excellent credentials, for they had not yielded up a couple of points to any team away from Boleyn Castle. Both teams were in deadly earnest, and from start to finish the struggle was of the ding-dong order. As so frequently happens where both sides have special incentives to come out on top, the defence was more prominent than the attack, and neither set of forwards finished off their work, though this was due more to the unceremonious methods of the halves and backs at each end than to the weakness of the attacking portions of the teams. There was so little in the game that there were doubts until the whistle went as to what was likely to happen, and it was consequently the more regrettable that the closing stages were contested in semi-darkness. Only one goal was scored, and as this went to the credit of the home team, the United suffered their initial away defeat. Leyton, on their own ground, were not able to command full strength against Northampton, and the latter also suffered in this respect. It was a bright and interesting game, and while there is no doubt as to the tremendous advance of Northampton as compared with last season, it is equally certain that Leyton are a much better team than a few weeks ago, and when their men have recovered from injuries they should do fairly well. The division of the points on Saturday was a fair representation of the run of the play.

The games among the provincial clubs all had their special points of interest. Southampton's visit to Bristol Rovers is regarded as one of the tit-bits of the season at Stapleton-road, and the Rovers finished up their October engagements in the League with a 4—2 win. Not since 21st September have they been defeated, and they were always the winning side on Saturday, although Southampton played a hard, skilful game. In their five home matches, the Western have scored 20 goals, and have had a half-dozen registered against them. Brighton and Hove Albion cannot get into a winning stride on their own ground, although away from home they are doing really well. It was thought that after drawing with Tottenham the Seasiders would win their first S.L. home match against Swindon, but disappointment was again their lot. The visitors frequently hustled Brighton out of their methods, but the game seemed a certain victory for the home team when they led 2—0 ten minutes from the finish. A series of rushes by Swindon then altered the complexion of affairs, and at the finish points were divided. Reading did not have anything to spare against Norwich, the odd goal in three giving them the victory, but New Brompton had a wider margin in their favour against Watford. The win was very welcome to the home side, who had not earned a couple of points in one afternoon since 14th September when they defeated Bristol Rovers.

LEAGUE DIVISION I.

The improvement in the form of the First Division League clubs in the South continues. On Saturday two were away from home, and the third entertained one of the strongest sides in the tournament. The three escaped defeat, and while congratulations are due to them all, it is to Chelsea that one's thoughts instinctively turn. In the presence of a huge crowd—newspaper estimates differ to the extent of over 20,000—they beat Everton by two goals to one, all scored in the first half. Reports to hand speak of the game as thoroughly interesting—football played as it should be, and the honours going to the team that deserved them. It is only doing justice to Everton to say that they scarcely deserved to be a goal down at the interval, but, on the other hand, they were fortunate in not having their defence beaten more than once in the second half. It was a classic game, and Chelsea, by following up their draw at Birmingham with a win over their powerful opponents, have proved that they are not out of their sphere in the division to which they won their way by merit. The Arsenal, too, did wonderfully well at Middlesbrough, for they obtained a point where last season they lost two, and there is no question that the Gunners are now providing opposition of a character that must mean points both home and away. In September they played six matches for three points, but in October their four games have provided them seven. What a startling contrast! On 1st October they were eighteenth on the table; to-day, they are thirteenth, but they have only two points less than Sheffield United, who are sixth. Bristol City took part in one of the most remarkable games in which they have ever participated. They met Aston Villa, at Birmingham, and at the interval the latter led 3—1. Early in the second half, the City were three goals down, but then came the sensation. Playing with irresistible dash, they drew level, and almost snatched a victory. It was a brilliant performance, and a great ending to a sparkling game.

There were other notable occurrences in the First Division of the League. The Villa-Bristol match, in which eight goals were scored, has been dealt with and a similar number was obtained in the Sheffield United-Sunderland encounter at Bramall-lane. While, however, two games produced 16 goals, the other eight yielded only 20. Manchester United are striding away with the honours, but Bolton Wanderers made them work hard for victory at Clayton, and only a goal separated the teams at the finish. Manchester was on good terms with itself on Saturday evening, for the City went to Preston, and administered the first defeat of the season to North End at Deepdale. The curious feature of the play was that there was no score at half-time, but a half-dozen goals were obtained in the second half, four of which were credited to the Mancunians. Sheffield Wednesday, by losing the second week in succession, have dropped well below the leaders, and their 3—0 defeat by Liverpool was their heaviest reverse of the season. Incidently, it may be mentioned that the Wednesday forwards failed to score on Saturday, and this was the first time this season they did not penetrate the opposing defence. Newcastle United have found their shooting boots, and Blackburn Rovers had to suffer in consequence. Only once previously in the present tournament had the United scored a trio of goals, and there was much jubilation at St. James' Park at the return of the champions to form. There war not anything in the other games requiring special comment.

THE SECOND DIVISION.

The Second Division provided its sensations on Saturday, but the result at Homerton scarcely comes within that category. Fulham beat Clapton Orient by a goal to love, and thus maintained their sequence of away wins. What a pity that home form should be so inconsistent. Some people are rather concerned about some of the incidents in Saturday's game more particularly in its closing stages. "Something should be done to weed out men who bring discredit on the game." We are all agreed as to this, but it is not always the player who appears to have done wrong who is really to blame; and one does not comment on incidents to the prejudice of a player unless one is an eye-witness. West Bromwich Albion seriously prejudiced their chances by losing both points at Glossop, the odd goal in three being placed to their debit, and all the scoring was done in the second half. Hull City won away from home, Gainsborough Trinity losing their third game in succession on their own ground, and each time by the odd goal. What a small margin there is between failure and success. The interesting struggle at Wolverhampton between the Wanderers and Derby County, who renewed old-time acquaintanceship, both being ex-First Leaguers, ended in a draw. Stoke failed to hold their own at Leicester, the Fosse adding one more to their home wins, but they have not to date beaten a club on foreign soil.

RUGBY RULES.

CAMBRIDGE UNIV. vs. OLD LEYSIANS.—The Light Blues atoned for their defeat on Wednesday last by scoring a splendid victory over the Old Leysians at Cambridge on Saturday. There was the usual large attendance at this fixture, and the game was an extremely fast and good one. Several changes were made in the Cambridge team. Bower was dropped from three-quarter line, and A. D. Roberts, the Durham freshman, given a trial, a great improvement being noticed. Roberts should turn out a good man. Gibb was up to his usual form, while Macleod and Wright were excellent. The combination of these two is likely to cause considerable trouble to the opponents of the University this season. MacGregor was given a trial as partner to Godby, and while being good, it is doubtful if he is quite the equal of B. H. Holloway, the Jesus "fresher," who was in the Leysian team, and played a good game. The forwards were again seen to advantage, continually getting the ball out of the scrum, shoving well, and being smart with their feet in the loose. The most conspicuous were Evans, McCosh, Purves, Kennedy, Gimson, and Te Water. The first two are Blues, while the last four should be sure of extended trials.

The Leysians were first to attack, and Atkinson was compelled to touch down in the first few minutes. Then Pepper broke away, and a try seemed certain when Wright cleverly intercepted a pass. The relief, however, was only temporary, as, after seven minutes' play, Oulton got clear and sent out to Brown, who placed the ball between the posts. Mellor had no difficulty in converting. A minute later the 'Varsity were over, Macleod, who had received from Gibb, completely outpacing his opponents. The place kick was unproductive. The 'Varsity pressed for a time, but the Old Boys carried play back to the centre line through an exchange of punts. A fine rush by the Cambridge forwards, however, nearly let them in. Nothing was gained, and Oulton got clear, with Macleod in pursuit. The Light Blue sprinter caught up his man, but not before the Old Blue had sent out to T. O. Pepper, who was dangerous until brought down by Atkinson. Play now settled down in the 'Varsity 25, and Oulton gaining possession, punted across to Brown, who beat Wright in a sprint, and crossed at the corner. Boyd failed with the kick. Macleod and Wright got going, and seemed certain to score when they were pulled up by a touch decision. The Light Blues played their hardest, and kept the Old Boys on the defensive. Once Godby smartly punted ahead, and was well in front of his opponents, and only a few feet from the line, but he failed to gather, the ball being kicked dead. Then Macleod tried to drop a goal. It was a wonderful kick, but the ball missed by inches. A minute from the interval Roberts got in, but Macleod failed to convert. Half-time:—Old Leysians, 1 goal 1 try (8 points); Cambridge, 2 tries (6 points).

After the restart Wright brought off a brilliant run, and Macleod added the extra points. The next three points went to the home team. Gibb was collared on the line, but managed to punt over, and Wright, using his pace, just saved the ball from rolling dead. The Leysians were now attacking, and after a good try by Brown, which he converted, they were only a point [illegible] Macleod kicked [illegible]. Cambridge were keeping up a hot attack, and [illegible] forward rush Te Water forced himself over, while two minutes later Wright nipped in on the wing. Neither of the tries were improved upon. Result:—Cambridge University, 2 goals 5 tries (25 points); Old Leysians, 2 goals 1 try (13 points).

UNITED SERVICES vs. HARLEQUINS.—There was a good attendance on Saturday at the Officers' Ground, Portsmouth, and the play throughout was creditable to the teams' engaged. Midway in the second half, Adrian Stoop unfortunately fractured his collar-bone, and thereafter the Services gained many points. The Services started the game, and the brothers Stoop tackled remarkably well. For ten minutes give-and-take play was the order, and then the Services sprinted admirably and passed effectually, as a result of which Lapage crossed, but Odgers kick failed. Orr now put in a clever run, and he subsequently was effective in stopping a combined rush by the visitors, while Lyon was prominent for the Harlequins. Interval:—Service, 1 try (3 points); Harlequins, 0.

The second half was ten minutes old when a way through was found by Longhurst, but this try was not improved by Lyon. Stoop's accident at this point dispirited the visitors, and the home team scored frequently. Tries came from Biggs [illegible], Orr, and Manners, but only that of Orr was converted by Watson. Lapage dropped an excellent goal. Result:—United Services, 2 goals (1 dropped) and 6 tries (27 points); Harlequins, 0.

O. M. TAYLORS vs. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—The counter-attraction at the Athletic Ground did not prevent a goodly crowd patronising this match at the Old Deer Park, Richmond, on Saturday, and those present saw some capital football, in which there was really not a great deal of difference in the teams forward, though behind the scrum the 'Varsity men, who turned out as advertised, were much the cleverer. In the many loose rushes which occurred the Dark Blues made better and more effective use of their feet than the Taylors, who were too prone to attempt to pick up the ball when hard kicking was the game.

The only changes occurred in the Old Merchant Taylors' side W. H. Bull taking the place of C. L. Parker, who was picked for both sides, at three-quarter, and Pullin-Thompson taking the place of J. T. Taylor. The Oxford pack went away at a great pace and soon had the play in the home team's quarters. Here Hodges secured, and dashing through scored wide out, Roberts failing to goal. Then the Oxford threes were given a chance, the forwards heeling well, and so enabling the halves to make the openings. Several times the line was set going in taking style, and twice in rapid succession Martin was sent in on the wing, Roberts, on one of these occasions, converting. The Old Boys' forwards made great efforts, but they still failed to get the ball, and from a scrum on the right the Oxford threes were again set going, and Parker completed a pretty movement by scoring, but Roberts failed at goal. A very fine piece of work which should have resulted in a try was then put in by the Taylors' backs, but Bull, when he should have gone on, passed badly, and so ended the effort. The scrum was formed on the Oxford line, and Cockell slipped over. Lepingwell's kick was abortive, and the teams crossed over with Oxford leading by 16 points to 3.

The second half of the game was a great deal more in the Taylors' favour. But though the Oxford forwards were outwitted once or twice, they still maintained their superiority in the loose, and Davies brought off some very fine saves. Soon after the restart came the prettiest bit of work of the match. R. A. Lepingwell and Bull broke away on the left, and handling the ball between them passed and repassed until with a clever dodge Lepingwell got in under the posts and kicked the goal. Then the Taylors' forwards got the ball at their feet, and moving strongly down the field overwhelmed Davies, who pluckily attempted to break them up, and Wallis ended up by securing another try, R. A. Lepingwell again doing the needful with the place-kick. The hopes of the home team supporters were now raised, but a similar rush was checked, and the Dark Blue forwards turned the tide, and, adopting similar tactics, regained the lost ground. When in the Taylors' twenty-five the ball was kicked across to Hoskin, and he, gathering cleverly, scored, Roberts failing. When "no-side" was blown the visitors were still attacking. The final scores were:—Old Merchant Taylors, 2 goals and 1 try (13 points); Oxford University, 2 goals and 3 tries (19 points).

BOXING.

TOMMY BURNS AND SOMETHING ABOUT HIM.—Tommy Burns, in company with his manager, Mr. Billy Nesil, paid his first visit to England on the 30th ultimo. The object of his journey from America was, as all the boxing world knows, to meet Gunner Moir in a contest at the National Sporting Club on 2nd December—the original date, 25th November, was abandoned owing to an accident to Burns, which has already been referred to in our columns—for the heavy-weight championship of the world and a purse of £1,100.

To a representative of Sporting Life, Burns, who is a man of more than ordinary intelligence, well groomed, and a striking personality, told the story of his life briefly and modestly.

Born in Canada, he is 26 years of age, 5ft. 7in. in height, weighs in fighting trim 175lbs., and has been in the fighting business six years. Until he makes a selection of his training quarters, he will be located at the Hotel Cecil. His communications are to be addressed to the Sporting Life, where Burns will transact all business during his stay in London.

Questioned as to his injury, from which he is slowly recovering.

Burns said:—"The contest with Moir cannot take place on the date arranged, but must be deferred until the end of November or very early in December. With regard to the suggestion of a match with Jem Roche, of Wexford, all will depend upon circumstances, and the value of the inducement. Should I beat Moir, and the offer from Ireland is remunerative enough, I will fight Roche. By comparison, I am getting little money for the Moir contest, but anxiety to see the country and have a little variety in a general way led to the acceptance of the offer made by the N.S.C.

"Out of the Squires fight I made £3,600 for a contest occupying 2mins. 8secs.—the most money I am ever likely to get for so short a period of fighting. All my business will be conducted by my manager, Mr. Billy Nesil. An Englishman will be engaged to box me in training."

Burns may be regarded as the smallest heavy-weight who ever stepped into the ring. In fighting gear he is marvellously developed from head to foot—a perfect Hercules. For fun his friends call him the "boy champion." He was disappointed in not finding a gymnasium on the Deutschland, and made the most of a five miles spin, which reduced his weight three pounds a day. He enquired about the Moir and Palmer fight, and thought Palmer would make a good sparring partner. His methods of training are very simple. Road work after breakfast, stomach exercises, shadow boxing, and punching the bag, together with other minor forms of athleticism. He has lost but one fight, and after a defeat by Jack O'Brien, beat the Philadelphian twice in succession. Burns prefers the old orthodox prize-ring—24ft.—which is in common use abroad, and the 5oz. glove.

When pressed as to a meeting with Jeffries, Burns said he did not fear any man, and as to Jeffries, he would never fight again. He had heard in America that Moir was a strong man and hard to beat. So said Summers and Moran. "I look slow," remarked Burns, "but my opponents say that I am up to my business in footwork. O'Brien was considered exceptionally smart, but he was no match for me in getting round.

"As to my fight with Moir, I objected to leave America until articles were signed. I am anxious to meet Charley Mitchell, and dined with several of his friends before leaving America. In fighting I want to be at work all the time, and do not believe in a breakaway unless a man is not fighting.

"The train wreck I was in nearly broke me up, and I was lucky to escape with a very bad shaking and rather severe injuries. They gave my manager, Billy Neail, 1,000 dollars, but considered me of less importance; I only received 500 dollars. I have had little sleep since. It has been a broken rest. My right arm is still very sore. I could have sued for big money, but wanted to get away.

"The railway journey from Plymouth to London has introduced me to more green land than I have ever seen, and the air is a revelation to me. The scenery is certainly very grand."

Burns was asked if boxing alone was his forte, and he said, with a smile:—

"Oh, dear, no! When I was sixteen years of age our team of twelve won in 1898 the lacrosse championship of West Ontario. Ice-skating out there is great sport. I was third in the championship to Woolner and Jones, and broke an arm in Association football. I can swim just a little, and won a long plunge contest against good men. Lacrosse is a very scientific but a very rough game. I have met with many accidents in various sports—broken limbs and what not—but in the fifty-one fights I have had there is not a mark left to tell the tale. I have been cut about, it is true, but have taken care of myself. I do not intend to be in the fighting business more than another year, and purpose drifting into some other employment.

"How I came to be a fighting man is rather interesting. I was out with a lacrosse team, and paid a visit to the Detroit Athletic Club. A man was wanted to supply the place of an absentee, and I was requested to supply the vacancy. I did, and won. For this I received 75 dollars, and later won four contests in succession.

"'Tommy,' said my friends, 'you will make good at this business. Go in,' and I did. I kept on winning, and finding money plentiful, made it soon and a good name.

"I am a married man, and my wife, along with a few friends, will be shortly on a visit to England. I have come prepared with the implements of war, and the gloves with which I will fight Moir bear me company.

"I attribute my speed in fighting to the training I had for lacrosse. In a few days I shall get into strict training with my manager, Billy Neail. I very much dislike to be disturbed once I start, and always make a bold and a determined bid for the quietude of a country life.

"You must not forget that I was born under the British flag, and am as much an Englishman as Moir. I do not know how far I am going to get on the road to victory with Moir, but there will be hard fighting where I am, and the best man is certain to win."

Hunting.

THE QUETTA HOUNDS.

HOUNDS met at the Gymkhana Spinney at 8-15 A.M. on Monday the 11th instant. A field of about 40 with a fair sprinkling of ladies met the Master on his arrival. After a short delay hounds were put into cover which contrary to general custom was drawn blank. A move was then made to the "Subaltern's Bog" when a fox was soon a foot. Scent was good and the pack raced along at a rattling pace. The fox, which was evidently a hill one, set his mask across the Meath country towards the Mardar Range, but was trunned by some labourers in a field. Hounds overran him here and there was a short check. The Master, however, soon got his pack together and quickly found his line which was now evidently pointing towards the hills across the Lora River. After hunting him for another one and a half miles, hounds threw up their heads again—but hunting well with scarcely any aid from the Master soon found, and crossing the Lora ran into view near the Kearni Village, and rolled their fox over into a small pond just short of the hills. This was quite the best run of the season lasting as it did nearly an hour. Amongst those out were noticed Mrs. Goodwin, Mrs. Young, the Misses M. Mahon, Mrs. Ready, Captain Day, General Capper, Major Kennedy Captain Thurnall, Major Goodwin, Captain Ready and many others. The Field Master Colonel O'Donnell was out, but had little trouble with the field as the pace was too hot for all but the keenest thrusters.

November 14th, 6th mile stone Sirlab Road 8-15 A.M. A long way out which accounts for the smallness of the field. The Master first threw the kareze west of the road, but drawing blank moved up North and tried the big kareze which crosses the road. An early fox was soon found here and took a line towards the earth in Gabruith's Spinney. These had, however, been stopped overnight and the pack pushed him through the spinney northwards towards the Subaltern's bog. Here some Brahmi encampments turned him and hounds were at fault. A longish check ensued, but making a wide cast the Master hit off his line and the pack worked their fox towards the railway and the Baleli Nullah. Here scent gave out and hounds were taken home. A long and stirring run. Amongst those out were Mrs. Ready, Mrs. Cox, Mrs. Tennant, Mrs. Waterfield, Miss Buckland, Major Trydell, Captain Marriott, Captain Henderson, General Capper, Major Waterfield, Major Goodwin, Captain Ready, Colonel Boileau, Colonel Bird, Captain Corbett, Captain Sinnott, Captain Selous.

SEMI-FINALS.

12TH ROYAL LANCERS vs. 17TH LANCERS.—These teams met on the 13th instant, the 12th winning by five goals to three, after a well contested game. Each team scored a goal in the first chukker, the next was blank and the third in which play was particularly fast, gave the 12th the lead. They put another goal to their credit in the fourth period but were kept busy defending at the opening of the fifth; their opponents scored a goal but the 12th replied with another and before the close had put through once more. The final chukker saw the 17th attacking again and Melville hit a goal. Final Score: 12th Lancers, 5 goals; 17th Lancers, 3 goals. Teams:—

12TH LANCERS.			17TH LANCERS.
Mr. C. E. Bryant	...	1	Capt. T. P. Melville	...	1

Umpires:—Majors Beatt and Bannerman.

5TH CAVALRY vs 31ST LANCERS.—This game on the 13th instant, though fairly level, was not as brilliant a display as the preceding match. The Cavalry opened the scoring in the first period and the play then settled down, and there was no score till after the third chukker. The Cavalry put on three more goals in the second half of the game, and the Lancers only scoring once were defeated by four goals to one. Teams:—

Umpires:—Major Nickalls and Captain Giraud.

FINAL.

12TH ROYAL LANCERS vs. 5TH CAVALRY.—The final game was contested by these teams on the 15th instant before a large crowd of spectators. A splendid game was witnessed ending in favour of the Lancers by four goal to three. Mrs. Henry presented the Cup to the winners.

First Chukker.—Level play, no score.

Second Chukker.—The Cavalry attacked most of the time and at length hit a goal.

Third Chukker.—The Cavalry were forced to defend but the Lancers were unable to get through.

Fourth Chukker.—The Lancers equalised but the Cavalry were not long in again getting the lead.

Fifth Chukker.—Each team scored a goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The Lancers once more got on terms and before the game ended scored another goal which gave them the game. Teams as before.

Umpires:—Brig.-Genl. Phayre and Major Nickalls.

INDORE TOURNAMENT.

CARABINIERS vs. 39TH CENTRAL INDIA HORSE I.—Played on the 11th instant, the C. I. Horse had the best of the opening chukkers and scored four goals to the Carabiniers two. But in the third period the Carabiniers gave a better show and scoring three goals took the lead. The C. I. Horsee equalised in the fourth chukker and the two remaining periods were unproductive. The goals were then widened and play resumed. Kirby hit a goal for the Carabiniers and gave them the victory. Teams:—

CARABINIERS.			39TH C. I. HORSE I.

KISHENGARH vs. C. I. HORSE II.—Also played on the 11th instant, a one sided game ending in a win for Kishengarh. They scored five goals in the first three chukkers and added a sixth in the fourth chukker. Then the C. I. Horse got away and Todd hit a goal, Kishengarh putting on a seventh before the close of the period. The fifth chukker saw the C. I. Horse score a second goal but in the final period Kishengarh notched another goal and ran out winners by eight goals to two. Teams:—

KISHENGARH.			C. I. HORSE II.
Kishori Singh ...	...	1	Mr. W. A. K. Fraser	...	1

Mr. Hoare ...	...	3	Capt. A. R. Eckford	...	3
Amar Singh	(back)		Mr. J. F. Todd	(back)

RUTLAM vs. BHOPAL.—These teams put up a fast and interesting game on the 12th instant. The first three chukkers were responsible for two goals to each team and the fourth chukker was unproductive. But Bhopal had the best of the exchanges during the remainder of the game and scoring a goal in the fifth period another in the sixth thus won by four goals to two. Teams:—

RUTLAM.			BHOPAL.
Nahar Singh	...	1	Golam Ahmed	...	1
Ruttanji ...	...	2	Abdul Wahid	...	2
Motilal ...	...	3	Imdad Ali ...	...	3

SEMI-FINAL.

CARABINIERS vs. KISHENGARH.—A splendid game was witnessed when these teams met on the 13th instant. The Carabiniers pressed in the opening chukker and scored two goals. In the second chukker Kishengarh attacked and a shot by the Maharajah went wide. They continued to press and Hoare hit a goal. Kishengarh made great efforts in the third period but failed to score and the Carabiniers rushing down Kirby put through. The fourth chukker saw Kishengarh attacking once more; the Maharajah scored a goal, Kishore Singh equalised shortly after and Amar Singh gave them the lead. Kishengarh continued to press for the rest of the game and there being no further score they won by four goals to three. Teams as before.

THE FINAL.

KISHENGARH vs. BHOPAL.—The last stage in the tournament brought these first class teams together, and gave the spectators quite as good a display as they looked forward to. It was a level and exciting struggle throughout every round and Kishengarh, who won by 5 goals to 4 had to work all they knew and most thoroughly deserved their win. Bhopal scored first and at the end of the second chukker were a couple of goals to the good; but in the third Kishengarh opened their account and equalised. The fourth was a very fine period, each added a goal and play ruled extremely fast and sound right through—Score, Three goals all. The fifth sound gave Kishengarh two more goals and proved the decider for though Bhopal in the last round added another goal they could not [illegible] were beaten by five goals to four. H. H. of Holkar presented the Cup.

CALCUTTA C.C. vs. BALLYGUNGE C.C.—Both sides were well represented in this match which was played in the Eden Gardens on Thursday and Friday, although neither was at full strength. Calcutta failed hopelessly in their first innings against the bowling of Coulthard, who probably accomplished his best performance up to date with the ball in taking eight wickets for 44 runs, and were all out for 95, batting one short. Ballygunge made an equally bad start, but a fine piece of determined hitting by Totam put them well ahead, and a long stand for the ninth wicket by Antram and Yeoman swelled their total to 220. Both Beachcroft and Ernsthausen bowled well for the Calcutta C. C., in whose second innings Guise and Beachcroft opened with a long partnership, the latter especially playing good solid cricket. Ballygunge were singularly devoid of bowling changes, and Ernsthausen and Turnbull also served freely though with some luck, and the innings was declared at 246 for six wickets. Gould bowled most steadily throughout the match, though he only got one wicket in both innings Ballygunge at the close had three-quarter of an hour's batting in a bobbish light, and lost their four last wickets all to the bowling of Leipmann who was well on the spot. The game therefore resulted in a fairly even draw. Full score and analysis.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. BALLYGUNGE C. C.—At Ballygunge. This was a game between members of the two clubs who were not engaged in the Eden Gardens, and the bowling on both sides was very weak, although there was plenty of batting. As in the Eden Gardens the Calcutta C. C. batsmen failed hopelessly in their first innings, but managed to extricate themselves without loss in their second, although the drawn game which ensued was altogether in favour of Ballygunge. BALLYGUNGE C. C. vs. CALCUTTA BROKERS.—A very enjoyable game was the result of the meeting between the B. C. C. and the Calcutta Brokers, of whom no less than nine were, as it happened, members of the home club. The Brokers won the toss and sent in McIntyre and Yeoman to face the bowling of Gould and Abbott, but the partnership did not produce much, as the former was sent back for eleven (well taken behind the wicket by Horncastle), and the latter for ten. Sherman made a few good hits before being well caught in the long field off Gould, and both Mytton and Antram showed obstinate defence, but the best innings on the side was Binning's not out 34—he made several really good hits and with Treadaway, put on no less than 47 for the last wicket. The bowling honours were shared fairly equally, Gould getting 2 for 28, Abbott 3 for 51, Coulthard 3 for 29, Cowdrey 1 for 18 and Whiteley 1 for 4. Ballygunge made none too good a start, and at one time, with 7 down for 109 things looked far from bright, but the partnership of the two left-handers, V. Sherman and Whiteley, soon put the result beyond all doubt; these two hit brilliantly and took the total to 207 before Sherman retired for a really brilliantly played 59. Whiteley was bowled shortly after for 49, when, the last man being absent, the innings closed for 226. Yeoman bowled very steadily, his 4 wickets costing but 30 runs, but the others did not do much, their averages suffering severely at the hands of Whiteley and Sherman.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. THE MAHARAJAH OF NATTORE'S XI.—For this match in the Eden Gardens the Calcutta C. C. were without Guise, Ernsthausen and Stewart, and owing once again to some poor batting against good bowling, and to failure to hold catches, sustained a very heavy defeat, which would almost certainly have been by an innings had time permitted. The Nattore team batted first, and ran up a total of 247, of which they scored 157 for four wickets overnight. Razzak, Imam Hossain and Surain were the principal contributors, and barring chances all batted well. Baloo and Banda then rattled the Calcutta eleven out for a miserable 57, seven of the batsmen only compiling five runs between them. Baloo took five wickets for 18 runs, and Banda four for 37. The Calcutta C. C. had of course, to follow on, but with the exception of Turnbull 35 not out and Drew 25, did not do very much better at their second attempt, and only totalled 103 for seven wickets; they were thus still 87 runs behind with only three wickets to fall and the match resulted in the easiest of victories for the Maharajah of Nattore's XI by 190 runs in the first innings. CRICKET AT RAJBARI.

GOALUNDO vs. RAJBARI.—Played on Saturday, the 16th instant, resulting in a win for the home team by 67 runs. The bowling was superior to the batting on both sides, but though the cricket was not of a very high order, a most enjoyable day was spent. In the evening Mansfield and Byrne for Goalundo beat Rowbottom and Ashe for Rajbari at tennis by 6 to 5 and O'Brien and Bibra for Rajbari beat Sope and Doyle for Goalundo by 100 to 72 at billiards. The cricket scores were :—

CRICKET AT LAHORE.

LAHORE vs. MULTAN.—An eleven from Multan played Lahore on the 8th and 9th instant and were well beaten by an innings and 90 runs. The home team batted first and made 488. The feature of the innings being the batting of Mistri and Tweedie. The former put up 211 before he was caught, while Tweedie compiled 105, the result of steady play. Multan were all out for 101 in the first innings and following on made a better show. Etlinger scored freely, but was caught after hitting up 97. Churchill (52) and Smith (81) were the other principal contributors and the innings closed for 247. Lahore winning as stated. Score :—

Golf.

GOLF IN CALCUTTA.

THE OPENING DAY.

THERE must have been about a record attendance at this function on the maidan last Saturday, when some 160 members sat down to the excellent repast provided by Messrs. P. Pelitti and Co. Mr. F. H. Stewart, the newly-elected Captain of the club, being in the chair. The only toasts were as usual, those of the "King-Emperor" and "Success to the Calcutta Golf Club," and after these had been duly honoured, and the customary club photograph taken, members dispersed to take part in the annual nine holes competition. The course was in unusually good order for so early in the season, and Mr. A. Mann took full advantage of the fact : playing over the old nine holes he recorded a wonderful score of 33, made up as follows :—3 5 4 4 4 4 5 3 4—beating all previous records, by a stroke, and coming in no less than five strokes ahead of his nearest competitor. In the Duffers' competition too Mr. C. T Beath put in an excellent card of 14—4=40 nett, and altogether it is probable that the play on the opening day has never been better. The best cards returned were as follows :—

THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

THIRD ROUND.

CONNAUGHT RANGERS vs. ROYAL FUSILIERS.—These teams met on the 9th instant, a good game resulting in favour of the Fusiliers. The first half was devoid of score. On changing ends the Connaughts pressed but failed in front of goal and the Fusiliers rushing the ball to the other end put it through. The Rangers were on their metal and repeated onslaughts, during which two corners were notched, ended in their equalising. On reopening the Fusiliers took the ball down and found the net once more. The closing stages of the game were fast and well contested but the Rangers were unable to score again and the Fusiliers won by 2 goals to one.

LEICESTER REGIMENT vs. ROYAL FUSILIERS.—These teams on the 11th instant, resulted in rather an easy win for the Leicesters. They scored twice in the first half and once again after the interval. The Parel team played one short but put up a great game nevertheless.

ROYAL SCOTS' vs. BISHOP'S HIGH SCHOOL.—An excellent game was witnessed when these teams met on the 12th instant. The first half was very even, both goals were visited in turn but the defence was good and nothing was scored. On crossing over the Scots attacked vigorously but without success and the Boys got away with the ball. They besieged the Scots' goal and after many attempts scored from an easy chance. The custodian fell and left his charge open for the Boys to put the ball through. The High School pressed during most of the remaining period but nothing further was registered. Final score :—B.H.S., 1 goal; Royal Scots, nil.

BOMBAY CUSTOMS vs. SAPPERS AND MINERS.—Played on the 13th instant, the Customs winning by 2 goals to nil. The Sappers pressed at the start and obtained a corner but the Customs cleared and rushing away shot a goal. The Sappers returned to the attack but were repelled and for the remainder of the period the Customs had the best of the exchanges. On changing ends both goals were visited the Sappers nearly scoring on one occasion. Play was fast and exciting till once again the Customs got away and registered a point. The Sappers were unable to score and the game ended as stated.

SEMI-FINALS.

LEICESTERS vs. ROYAL FUSILIERS.—This game on the 14th instant, was looked forward to with interest and spectators were not disappointed, for a good game was witnessed. The Leicesters opened the scoring within five minutes of the start and then play settled down. Both goals were visited but though the Fusiliers obtained several corners they were unable to put the ball through and the Leicesters held their advantage at the interval. The Fusiliers made desperate efforts to equalise on resuming but the Leicesters defence was sound. Play was then taken to midfield and even exchanges followed. At length, a few minutes from time, the Leicesters got another chance and their centre forward shot a second goal. Nothing further was scored the Leicesters winning by 2 goals to nil.

BOMBAY CUSTOMS vs. BISHOP'S HIGH SCHOOL.—The first meeting of these teams on Friday last ended in a draw of 2 goals all. A goal was scored by both teams in each half. In the replay on Saturday the High School beat the Customs by a goal to nil. Simmonds scoring in the second half.

Boxing.

THE OXFORDSHIRE L. I. TOURNAMENT.

SOME excellent boxing was witnessed in the semi-finals and finals of this Tournament on Wednesday night the 13th instant. Special prizes were won by Lance-Corpl. Smith and Private Johnson, for the most skill shown during the Tournament and for the best loser respectively. Private Slack also gained a special prize. He won the open contest for Light weights, but was knocked out in the Light-weights for novices. He pluckily reappeared to contest the open contest for the finals, but the match was stopped in the first round as it was apparent that Slack was very shaky.

Before distributing the prizes Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Locke Elliot congratulated the regiment on the great strides made in boxing since last year and rendered some advice. He said that judges gave points for trickiness and also paid more attention to the last round, for which knowing boxers generally husbanded their strength. The programme included a burlesque exhibition of boxing, which created much laughter, and three special events.

KENNEL NOTES

To supply an undoubted want we hope under the above heading to be able to give our readers, weekly, all possible kennel news—both Home and local.

To do full justice to the latter we shall be glad to receive any items of interest to fanciers in general. Co-operation on the part of all dog owners will greatly tend to advance the canine cause here in Calcutta. Communications should be addressed "Canine" care of this paper.

Simla Dog Show.—A great, and consequently, successful effort was made this year at Simla to have a good Dog Show, and it was a fine exhibition that was held on 21st September last. The exact total of entries we do not know, but we understand it was over 200. Forty-two classes filled, and besides the prizes for these, doesn't it make the mouth water? some forty-seven special prizes were given.

Should a show be got up again next year we opine a good few of our local owners will be applying for leave for a holiday in the Hills at about the same time.

The report of the show and list of prize winners has already been published.

Mussoorie Dog Show.—A week after the Simla show, on the 28th September, the annual Show of the Mussoorie Horse and Dog Club was held. The dog section was located in the grounds of the Savoy Hotel, an improvement on the Happy Valley space and its lack of shade. We regret though to have to record that the entries were below those of last year. Major W. H. Kemp, who had undertaken the work of Honorary Secretary, is to be sympathised with. After laying the foundation of an up-to-date successful show, and we have seen the work and trouble he had devoted to the object, he was stricken with a severe illness and totally incapacitated from running the Show through.

Mr. Goutiere, however, who pluckily undertook the arduous duties at the eleventh hour almost, earned everyone's commendation.

It was a fine collection of good animals. A Calcutta fancier was well to the fore, Mr A. E. McA. Audsley doing well with his fox-terrier, "Indigo," the Championship winner at the last C.K.C. show. Mr. Audsley's Japanese "Yen" also caught the judges' eye.

Calcutta Dog Show.—Following on the success of the Dog Show added to the features of the Minto Fête, this year our Dog Show will be held on the 27th and 28th December in the grounds of the Volunteer Headquarters, a well-known address and also central and convenient. The schedule is before us, and a complete one it is, nearly every breed being catered for in the 113 classes.

A good many special prizes will also be offered, most of these for members of the C. K. C. only as can only be expected. Mr. A. E. McAulay Audsley is the Honorary Secretary and his address is 8½2, Loudon Street.

Dichard Dottings.—Mr. W. S. Burke, who successfully upheld the honor of our city in this breed, against foreign competition at the last Show, has returned from his Home trip. He has disposed of his winning dog "Charnock Wee Macgregor," having several promising puppies by him coming on. The lucky purchaser is Mr. J. O.' B. Saunders, who is to be congratulated on securing such a sterling animal and putting himself in the front rank among Scottish terrier owners right away. "Wee Macgregor," it will be remembered, was the champion dog of his breed at the last Show, beating several dogs, winners at Home Gun Dog Gossip.—Mr. E. W. Antram, the well-known G. R. has imported a pair of Retrievers which he shot over at Home this year, so they are useful as well as ornamental.

Spaniel Sparks.—Mr. Frank Carter, well known to everyone chiefly from the interest he takes in the fortunes of the C.F.C., has imported a liver and white field spaniel; this was selected for him by Mr. F. S. Kerr. A special medal for competition at the forthcoming Show has kindly been presented by the Spaniel Club (England). This will ensure keen rivalry.

Fox-terrier Facts.—Messrs. Zimmermann and Reid have imported some hot stuff of this breed with which we hope they will have all the luck and success they deserve. Mrs. J. C. Shorrocks has imported a sweet brace of fox-terrier sluts of high lineage, one wire and one smooth, both of which should do well at the Show. Mr. Audsley had an unusual experience with his imported bitch "D'Orsay Venus." She had five puppies to his dog "Indigo," but refused to have anything to do with them and the whole of the litter was lost. The bitch was very ill, but has pulled through with careful nursing.

Bulldog Barks.—Mrs. Wardroper has secured another stud dog as her famous famous "Jeff-stone Monarch" one of the few remaining sons of that marvellous sire "Champion Rodney Stone" is getting on in years. The new dog is a fawn with a black muzzle and is a very typical specimen of the National Breed. This fair fancier has now a large kennel, strong in quality as well as numbers.

Bull-terrier Tattle.—This breed famous for centuries for its pluck is greatly advancing in public interest as can be judged by the increasing numbers entered at Shows at Home. It is expected there will be a goodly array of them on the 27th December and locally bred dogs are not likely to be out of the hunt altogether either. Mr. E. A. Lyon has recently imported a very good specimen of the variety that is fast becoming the popular craze at Home, viz., a miniature bull terrier. The little fellow only weighs about 9lbs. but is as active and plucky as any full sized specimen. The owner does not intend to breed miniatures, but hopes with the aid of "Sher Bamboo" as he is called, to re-introduce the whip tail and close coat such as the breed used to have—which points have been lost by breeders using cut crosses, such as pointers, to increase general size. It is an interesting experiment and we trust this breeder's views will be borne out in actual results; his breeding stock is sound, young and healthy and classically bred.

Whippet Wheezes.—Mr. F. S. Kerr, another who enjoyed the rigors of an English summer this year, has had his fancy perverted from Greyhounds to the smaller, and to many eyes more beautiful variety—whippets. The has secured a good brace, a black dog and a fawn bitch. They are due to arrive almost as these lines appear and we sincerely trust they will do so fit and well. Some other sportsmen are backing him up and have sent home for more of these "straight" running dogs, and it is hoped that Whippet racing will become an established sport in Calcutta. It has much in its favour as it could be indulged in almost all the year round and might become one of the features of the Tollygunge Club Gymkhanas.

Whippets are affect onate creatures, desirable both as housepets and companions, and there is as much fun to be got out of them as from any other breed of dog. Again they are so shapely, being built exactly on the same outline as a Greyhound, that any good one would be as successful on the Show bench as the track; they are not expensive to keep and good specimens may be bought at Home for from £5 to £10.

Great Dane Growls.—Mr. Thomas C. Tweedie, of Jessore, has imported a pair of this noble breed. The bitch was exhibited at the Ladies' Kennel Association Show and is a very taking specimen. It is possible that Mr. R. Hood Wright may be able to judge this breed at the coming Show. He would be met with a bumper entry as he is a past master on the points of the breed. However, it is a long journey from Nuwara Eliya for a gentleman getting on in years, although he is in such hale and hearty condition, and may he long remain so is the wish of his many friends all over the world, and none the less by those who had the pleasure of meeting him here last February.

Hounds and Hunting.—Our local pack the Chandpara Hunt are already having good sport with their new lot, although the long paddy is a severe handicap. Mr. Harry Abbott, that evergreen sportsman, has imported some Harriers again his year.

Obituary.—There is no pleasure in writing under this heading and we hope we shall rarely have to do so. Two bull terriers have handed in their checks—Mr. W. M. Borden has lost his imported bitch "Lonely Vixen" a winner in puppy class at Crafts' Show, the only time shown. From being apparently in good health she suddenly had a temperature of 106° which nothing could reduce—but with the tenacity of her breed held on to life nearly a week though the thermometer never recorded less than 103°.

The other is Mr. F. S. Kerr's "Sandford Alexander" a promising pup bred from imported parents. He had been sent up to Mussoorie to summer, but the change of climate brought on liver trouble. We have just heard that Mr. Frank Carter's spaniel previously referred to has also succumbed. Newly imported dogs require great care for a month or two in the way of diet and also should not be allowed outside when the sun is at all strong.

The Pariah and Rabies.—This is a very important question, and one that will have to be decisively dealt with in the near future. Calcutta as a city has not suffered much from the dread scourge of rabies, but the inhabitants were startled a week or so ago to learn from their evening paper that there was an alarming outbreak. This has not proved very widespread fortunately but as long as our streets are filled with unowned dogs, most of them covered with unsightly skin diseases, so long must there be the risk, and a very large one of rabies.

It is not jackals that do the damage. The only case the writer has had during ten years of dogs going mad was from a bite by a pariah, his dogs having frequently been cut and bitten by jackels. There has been a recent case in our knowledge in Calcutta, a dog that was bitten on the head by a pariah that has been hanging about the Golf Club Pavilion on the maidan, went mad in a fortnight. It must strike visitors to this city as curious that those dogs are allowed to roam about in such numbers, to stretch themselves across the pavements to sleep unmolested, passers by having to go round them. In past years, such were supposed to do the work of the modern incinerator and consume garbage, but with our up-to-date Corporation surely they can be dispensed with! It is a matter for the police authorities and we trust with the human population quiescent they will turn their lathies on the miserable dangerous pariah.

We hope next week to give our readers tips on general care of the dog—food, housing, and preparing for exhibition.

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 43.

If A's card is a singleton, Z can hardly go game, and he should therefore assume that a holds four spades to the king or queen he cannot hold both. Y should let B win the trick, but put up the nine to prevent him making a deep finesse. If he leads a club Z puts on the queen, and when he gets in with his ace of diamonds, discards one of dummy's spades on the king of clubs, and ruffs another, if a trump has not been led, in which case he finesses the knave of spades if B played the king or queen at Trick 2. If B leads a diamond, however, Z must finesse, and if successful he can discard Y's club, after which cross ruffs clubs and spades.

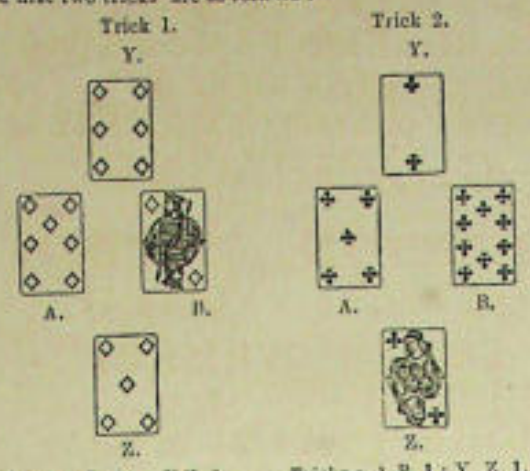
Problem No. 44.

Score: A B, 2; 4 Y, Z, O. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).—Hearts, ace, 5, 3, 2; diamonds, ace knave, 6, clubs; ace, 7, 4, 2, spades, 7, 3.

Z's Hand (Dealer).—Hearts, 8, 7, 6, 4; diamonds, 8, 5; clubs queen, 3; spades, ace, king, queen, 10, 9.

The first two tricks are as follows:—



Tricks: A B, 1; Y Z, 0. Tricks: A B, 1; Y Z, 1.

How ought Z to go on with the hand, and why?

MOTORING MEMS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, 1st November 1907.

EARLY in 1907 it was apparent that the value given in the then new models seemed far greater than had hitherto been usual. I say seemed because, on the face of it, makers were giving more power and more cylinders and additional refinements that greatly enhanced the face value of the cars. Unfortunately, the standard of quality in the material was by no means improving. Some, indeed, many of the old established firms, kept, and are keeping, up the quality of the material to that standard that made them famous in days gone by. Many of the younger firms set off improvements in the design against poorer material and cheap labour. Such policy has told its own tale in the various factories, and the early part of 1908 will be a period of unrest in the motor-car trade. At the present time there are several agencies and factories who are lingering on in the vain hope that Olympia will see them into a new lease of life.

THE year 1908 will see very much the same as the previous year. In the effort to live, makers are again giving too much for the money. The ordinary individual is so much taken with the side entrance body and all its shine, the four cylinders, and the various refinements with which some of the cheap cars are fitted, that he forgets altogether to inquire about the approximate life or trustworthiness. Before buying a car a man should study the second-hand market. If he finds his particular fancy is to be purchased freely, he must leave it alone. One of the best means of gauging a car's popularity with its user is the "Cars for Sale" column.

PENDING the arrival of the Olympia Show, the purchase of motor-cars by the public has practically ceased. As usual, at this time of the year, all sorts of rumours are afloat of a more or less sensational character, chiefly concerning prices. It is quite a common thing to hear people say, "Oh, you wait for the Show, prices are coming down." How far this is likely to prove true remains to be seen. One firm, it will be remembered, made considerable reductions on all models last year, and it will be interesting to see whether any others will follow. As regards new cars, many rumours are rife. One prominent firm will have a 10-12 H.-P. four-cylinder, four-seated, side entrance car selling at £230. Another well known firm, which has hitherto specialised in a two-cylinder car, will have a 12-14 H.-P. four-cylinder model selling at about £300 or probably under. Still another firm which has so far neglected the two-cylinder car, will have one ready for the public at Olympia.

"FUN on the Bristol." The heads of the motor trade are poking fun at each other, and the daily press is swallowing the chaff for wheat. The Star on Thursday solemnly printed, as an item of news, the mock challenge of Mr. Letts to race Mr. Charles Jarrott on the railway line from London to Brighton, one to drive a ten-cylinder Crossley, the other a ten-cylinder De Dietrich, each, of course, with suitably flanged wheels to fit the rails. The stake to be £50,000, a time limit of thirty minutes (equal to about 106 miles per hour) to be inflicted on the winner, and the race to be decided on or before 30TH October. The best of the joke is undoubtedly the serious gullibility of the untechnical press.

Messrs. Jarrott and Letts are, of course, partners in the business that holds the agency for the cars named.

COLONIAL MOTORING. Motoring is going ahead rapidly in the Colonies. Though in New Zealand, as well as in Australia, the Yankee got the first footing, the American car is no longer in demand. The British car is all the go now. Humbers, Rovers, Talbots and Daimlers being the most popular. The Motor House, who do an extensive business in the Colonies, say that De Dion and Renaults, and the previously mentioned British Cars, reign nearly supreme, and it is difficult to sell any others abroad. This shows that the Colonial is not very far behind in motoring matters, for the cars named are certainly the most popular in England at the present time. With the exception of India, very little has been done in big cars abroad. If the Colonial does not get the speed craze he will be lucky indeed.

CHUKKUR.

They had been married but a few months. In the middle of the night the young wife was awakened by the loud snores of her husband. She endured the horrible racket as long as she could. Then punching the man sharply, she said:—"Herbert, you'd make less noise if you kept your mouth shut."

Herbert, sleepy and surly, muttered:—"So would you."

A number of military men in a Washington hotel were giving an account of an incident in the Civil War.

A quiet man who stood by at last said, "Gentlemen, I happened to be there, and might be able to refresh your memory as to what took place in reference to the event just narrated."

The hotel keeper said to him, "Sir, what might have been your rank?"

"I was a private."

Next day the quiet man, as he was about to depart, asked for his bill. "Not a cent., sir; not a cent.," answered the proprietor. "You are the very first private I ever met."

THE INDIAN FIELD.

1, Hare Street, Calcutta.

THURSDAY, 28th November 1907.

THE annual meeting of the Calcutta Paperchase Club held last Friday at Golightly Hall brings to mind the near approach of the chasing season and delightful recollections of runs past and anticipations of runs to come. To what extent these will be gratified, however, is a matter of much misgiving. Every factor but one points to a most successful season. We have Messrs. Maurice Turner and J. H. Allen to make the courses, the former gentleman and Mr. Stokes as secretaries, lots of good horses, ever so many more ponies than usual, keen spirits galore to ride them both young and old, experienced hands and mere beginners, and with an enhanced subscription of Rs. 20 instead of Rs. 10 for riding men, there will at last be an end to the Society's chronic condition of shortness of ready money, but—there is always a but—where are we going to ride? The early cessation of the monsoons, and the continuous spell of dry weather have already baked the country as hard as bricks. By making a very early start a few decent courses may possibly be found for December, but without some relief from above things will fizzle out badly early in the New Year.

THE Calcutta course has been filling up a great deal this last week and arrivals of both jockeys and horses have been numerous. Among the former Colin, Barrett, Bradshaw and Manley were back here at the beginning of the week and Norton, with his big string, and Ramshaw, with three "specially selected," got up on Monday.

The railway authorities have risen to the occasion and a special train which arrived in the small hours of Tuesday morning succeeded in bringing down practically the whole of the Lucknow lot in spite of the strike. Up to time of going to press they have none of them been seen on the course so it is impossible to say exactly what has got down.

THERE was a good deal of fast work accomplished on Tuesday morning and most of Saturday's starters were extended. Fizgrafton has still done nothing at full speed and it is getting more and more unlikely that he will be in Cup winning form by 26th December, while Misty Morn is improving steadily and looks like giving Mr. Galstaun a very good run for his money after all. If the consensus of honest opinion of the regular frequenters of the racecourse were taken now it would not be surprising to find the majority place them Realm, Steinhager, Misty Morn, and they seem to make no account whatever of Boabdil. It is, however, all the veriest of guess work at present. It will be hard enough to get a true idea of their form when the various Cup horses are all at work on the course so that it is not very profitable to make surmises on hearsay evidence.

MR. FLEMING'S Betrayer is doing a lot of good steady work and if he gets fit in time for the big meeting the Hon'ble Mr. Apcar may find that in the jump events, as well as in the Cup, he will have great difficulty in coming out on top this season. Betrayer is a wonderful horse over hurdles and small fences, such as at Tollygunge and has beaten horses as good as Mallard "down under." He gets away with extraordinary rapidity, gains ground at each jump, and takes a lot of catching. They say that to see Mr. Fleming's horse get "over and away" is a revelation and that there is absolutely nothing here that will stay with him when fit. Mr. Fleming will probably ride him himself whenever he can get the weight and they rate this G. R. very highly as a steeplechase jockey in Australia.

HURDLES were up for schooling on Saturday and again on Tuesday while a few were out at Tollygunge on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Glen has had an unlucky time as Tiritiri came down with him on the steeplechase course and Miss Preston behaved in similar fashion at the penultimate hurdle on Tuesday. On both occasions the intrepid horseman remounted and finished the course unhurt and in safety. Miss Preston was also one of the unlucky school where Picture (Butlin) refused and running down her jump was bowled over by Smallman on Pineal. Neither jockey, however, was much hurt though Smallman got a kick and a nasty shaking. Among the more important performers, Mallard, Seclusion, Stockman and Advisor have been going, the two former doing the mile over five flights in great style and the latter a couple of fences only. Loyal did not jump as well as the first time and is causing his owner much heart-burning. Among the ponies who are entered for Saturday, Minstrel Boy, Solace, Reha and Pineal have been at work over sticks in addition to Miss Preston. Minstrel Boy is perhaps the best lepper of the lot, but does not strike one as having over much pace. Solace jumped well but rashly and always looks as if she might come a purler at any of them. Others out were Boolara, Lady Rose, Prob (who refused three times at the first hurdle and one or two more). Pretender was at Tollygunge on Sunday and seemed very much at home over the course.

The entries for the First Extra are very fair and as most of them are likely to be starters there should be a good afternoon's racing. As usual at the initial meeting there are any amount of new ones and the difficulties of punters will be enhanced because so many of them are not really ready and look upon this first run more as a training gallop than as serious racing, so that it becomes much more important to know what is "out for blood" than to be au fait with the comparative form of the competing animals. Under these circumstances a very good rule for backers is "follow the money" and never mind the horses.

The Criterion Plate has sixteen entered, of whom Conscience, Winsome, Fireworks, Cuirass, Alert, Metal Boy and Sparkle are new.

The latter is a very smart country-bred, the property of Mr. Manning, and with his 28lb. allowance may be expected to make a good show if he can stay. Conscience and Alert are untried, Fireworks and Cuirass have run but shown no form. Winsome is useful over 5 furlongs with a light weight as she won a race in 1min. 3⅘secs. carrying 7st. 11lb. but would not appear such a good stayer as Metal Boy who ran a winner over 6 furlongs carrying 10st. in 1min. 15secs. while the mare's best for that distance is 1min. 16⅕secs. with 8st. 5lb. up. Of the old stagers Lady Metal looks to have as good a chance as any: Jackeroo is good quality but hardly a 5-furlong animal.

The Pony Plate has nine, of whom only Mr. Galstaun's pair are new to Calcutta racegoers.

Of the old hands Lily II. on her running at Tollygunge the other day should have a great say in the matter and Riot is expected to run well.

The Town Plate with its 7lb. allowance for G. R.'s should provide many of our best amateurs with rides as there are 16 entered, of whom Lady Bentworth, Blix, Cardigan, Tehee, Singleton, Comprimil, Sea Spray and Conscience are all new to us. The latter is entered in the 5-furlong as well, as is also Pallas who is in this race. Cardigan is more of a chaser than a 6-furlong horse and Tehee and Singleton, two-year-olds both, will not have much show in spite of their extra allowance. Stepaway ran a very good mare at Tollygunge, and, if it is true as rumoured that Mr. Deakin is going to ride her in preference to his own, it will look as if she is thought pretty good.

The Club Plate has ten of them, of whom on paper Botha is about the best and Coin II. looks as good as any of the seven down for the Lilliputian Plate.

The Pony Hurdles has attracted only eight entries, of whom Miss Preston is the only new one, and she is hardly sufficiently schooled to race yet. Lady Knight has had a most victorious career in the mofussil and it remains to be seen how she will do in good company. Of these that have been seen out schooling lately Minstrel Boy and Solace have shown the best form.

The annual general meeting of the Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association. has been fixed for next Wednesday, the 4th December, and will be held, as usual, in the C. C. C. pavilion kindly lent by the Club. The usual business of accounts, programme and officials will be transacted and a date will be fixed for the next Championship meeting—probably Saturday, the 29th February.

The market on the Viceroy's Cup and Trials is very dull yet; the only two so far backed for any money are Fitzgrafton for the Cup and Sermon for the Trials. Messrs. Champion and Co.'s prices yesterday were as follows:—

Trials.	Viceroy's Cup.
2 to 1 Sermon.	7 to 2 Fitzgrafton.
5 to 1 Saloon.	9 to 2 Realm
5 to 1 Golden Gleam.	5 to 1 Boabdil.
6 to 1 Silrabout	6 to 50 the others.
8 to 20 the others.

Mr. Harry Goldspink has laid a few favourite D. E. Selections at prices ranging from 1,000 to 10 to 1,000 to 50 as for example:—

Sermon	and	Fitzgrafton.
Sermon	"	Realm.
Sermon	"	Misty Morn.
Sermon	"	Boabdil.
Golden Gleam	"	Fitzgrafton.
Golden Gleam	"	Misty Morn.

But there is very little betting at present.

Hearty congratulations to those determined and skilful sportsmen, Messrs. Wood and Badger, who carried off the Army Cup at Lucknow last Thursday with the gallant little Wordie Major who, our readers may remember, we thought would be "there or thereabout." Details of the second and third days' racing appear in our Turf Columns.

The Lucknow Autumn Meeting, just over, provided all who took part with most excellent sport, several interesting incidents and some regrettable contretemps. It is a pleasure to congratulate the executive on the pronounced success which attended their catering. Two days' Open Gymkhana and three big days of the actual meeting to get through is no mean task; but as if this were not enough, Lucknow has yet to witness two extra meetings which promise to be equally successful. There has been every regard for the public convenience and it is impossible to speak too highly of the way in which the meeting has been conducted. The duties which have fallen on Major J. K. Ensor, the Race Secretary, have been particularly arduous and the unanimous verdict is that he has discharged them to the entire satisfaction of the public. Colonel Mayne's handicapping has been uniformly sound and consistent; Lucknow should feel complimented on having such a keen official. Major Kennard, the Judge, had no end of hard work and many extremely close finishes to tackle: it is good to hear that his verdicts were generally appreciated. It is many years since a board of officials up-country has had a patron who takes such a keen interest in racing as Sir John Hewett, the Lieutenant-Governor; he was present on every day of the meeting which was graced by the presence of Lady Hewett and a large party from Government House. On Cup Day the Lieutenant-Governor arrived in state and was received at the entrance by the Stewards and conducted to his box. Lieutenant-General Sir E. Locke Elliot, the other patron, has had long and honourable connection with racing in the United Provinces and to him are traceable many of the more popular innovations on the racecourse including the new grand stand. The Oudh and Rohilkund Railway ran special trains and in spite of the strike Lucknow was visited by a large number of people from down country. The bookmakers, of whom there were quite a number, may be said to have covered their expenses.

Bhamo will hold a race meeting on the 28th and 30th December, entries closing two days before each day's racing: Mr. F. P. Dove is Honorary Secretary and his persuasions are expected to attract good support from Northern Burma owners.

Never in the history of polo in Burma, writes The Burma Critic, have matters been in the shipshape form which they are to-day and polo players are indebted to Captain Lane for this state of affairs. The Association which he has nursed and fostered with such sedulous and unremitting care is now on a permanent businesslike footing and when Captain Lane lays down the reins of office, which unfortunately he does early next year, his successor will find everything in apple pie order. Polo players throughout the length and breadth of Burma are under a deep debt of gratitude to the retiring Secretary of their Association and the silver-Burmese cigar box which they are presenting him with as a memento partially represents their real feeling of gratitude to him. It is rumoured that Captain Kirke may take up the post of Honorary Secretary.

The Bareilly Races prospectus may be expected shortly: the fixture begins on the 17th February.

The Tollygunge Club hold their thirteenth Annual Horse Show on New Year's Day, entries closing on the 16th proximo.

A correspondent, writing from Karauli, in Rajputana, relates a curious incident connected with the shooting of a tiger in that State a short time ago. News of a tiger being brought in from a village about three miles from the capital, the Chief of the State went out with a party. The guns were placed in trees, and the tiger being driven out the Maharajah wounded him in the jaw. The tiger thereupon sprang into a chila tree, and grasping the trunk with his forepaws and resting his hind legs on a branch remained hidden in the foliage for five minutes. The remainder of the story may be told in the words of the correspondent. "Then the dogs, the common country-bred, to add a new phase to it, were let loose, after the tiger. But he stuck to his seat and would not come down till the dogs, getting a scent of him, jumped up to catch his tail which was just dangling over their heads. Down sprang the tiger on one of the faithful dogs, breaking his spinal cord and wounding another at the glands. But his onslaught brought on his own ruin, through a deadly bullet of His Highness's new rifle."

"The most luxurious caravan of modern times." Such, says a London paper, is the claim put forward by a London firm on behalf of a vehicle, the total cost of which amounts to considerably over £2,000, which they have just constructed to the order of Messrs. Leach and Weborny of Bombay. Ten weeks ago the order was placed by an Indian Rajah, whose intention it is to use the vehicle as a movable shooting-box. It is now ready for exportation to Bombay. Between the windows—strongly barred without, so that they may be left open in safety, with no fear of intrusion from the wild beasts of the jungle—ten portholes are interspersed. The roof is curved slightly in the manner of a quarterdeck. The walls are built of the strongest teak—the only wood capable of withstanding the full onslaught of the Indian sun—lined inside with light oak.

Mr. Ernest E. Green writes in the Ceylon Observer of the 13th instant:—Replying to "Worried Mem Sahib" in your issue of Tuesday evening, I cannot do better than quote from Captain F. Wall's remarks on this subject as given in his Popular Treatise on the common Indian snakes—(vide "Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society," Vol. XVII., No. 2, p. 269). Under the heading of "Legends," he says:—"It is very generally believed amongst natives that the rat-snake mates with the cobra, and is in fact the male cobra, and it is surprising to me that even some educated English people seriously contemplate such an absurdity.....I think the most convincing argument in disproof of this fable lies in the fact that there are beyond dispute both male and female cobras, and both male and female dhamans (rat-snakes). One may assume that they breed true, since no hybrid, as far as I am aware, has ever been recorded. The possibility of a hybrid I am not prepared to doubt in face of the fact that hybrids have been produced in captivity, the progeny of parents of different ophidian genera, but if the outrageous attachment between Mr. Dhaman and Mrs. Cobra were true, our museums should be well stocked with evidences of their guilt." It seems to me possible that the myth may have arisen from the fact that a rat-snake—when excited—can puff out its neck to a certain extent, and may then perhaps be mistaken for its more formidable relative.

Although in action a man's life so often depends upon his revolver, it is wonderful how few officers and non-commissioned officers took the trouble, till within the last two or three years, to make themselves into good pistol shots. Deliberate standing fire at a black-and-white target, as a writer in the Cavalry Journal, the new quarterly, points out, is, of course, of very little practical use except as an elementary step. The object of instruction in pistol shooting is that a man should be able to shoot his enemy in the movement and rush of action; but his only practice to that end was to stand before a black-and-white target and fire deliberately aimed shots at [illegible] required on service was never indulged in, and yet once the knack of this is acquired it is a most effective defence, and the man who has it is blest with far greater self-confidence in a tight corner. The knack consists in loosing the hammer of the cocked pistol exactly at the moment when the muzzle is pointing at the object, and it can be acquired by anyone after practice. The pistol is quickly swung into direction and fired without aim being taken along the sights. It may be either flung upwards by an underhand movement, or overhand into alignment, according to the taste of the firer, though underhand is preferable. The act of firing is accomplished either by holding the hammer at full cock with the thumb and releasing it at the right moment, pressure on the trigger being meantime kept up with the forefinger; or the trigger is pressed exactly at the required moment. The act is very much like that of throwing a stone—the finger releases the stone at the exact point of the swing of the arm when it will be projected on to the object.

As an elementary practice, the writer in the Cavalry Journal goes on to point out, it is useful to stand before a big looking-glass, and, with your own reflection to represent the enemy, to swing and snap your pistol (N.B., not loaded), and notice in the glass where the muzzle pointed at the moment of firing. Then practise it on the move, walking past the looking-glass without any pause for aiming. The next step is to practise in the same way, with ball, on a dummy target representing a man, or, better, a man's figure painted on an iron target, so that you can see where your misses go to. As soon as you have got the hang of it standing, carry on the practice on the move by walking past the target or by firing at a moving target. The final stage is to practise mounted shooting at a dummy.

But the best practice of all is, of course, to fire at a mounted opponent who is also firing at you, and this practice appears now to be very nearly feasible since they have invented, in France, a kind of wax bullet which, though it will not penetrate clothes, etc., flies with sufficient force and accuracy at twenty-five yards to show where a bullet would actually go. The bullet is made of a mixture of wax and grease and is inserted like the ordinary bullet into the head of a special form of metal cartridge case, but without any charge of powder behind it—the detonating cap giving sufficient impulse to the bullet to propel it the required distance. The bullet thus discharged can be put into a target four inches by five at twenty yards. When two opponents fight each other special precautions have to be taken to avoid their being struck on the bare skin by the bullet, therefore, a wire mask like a fencing mask is worn, preferably one with plate-glass eyepiece. The hands are protected by gauntlets, or by a metal guard attached to the pistol. A blouse may be worn over the clothing to take the grease stains of the bullet. The bullet is the invention of Dr. Devillers, president of the Paris Pistol Clubs.

The annual sports meeting of the Upper Burma Amateur Athletic Association will be held on the 26th and 27th proximo, with Mr. Aubrey once more as Honorary Secretary. Entries close on the 14th December. A good meeting is considered probable.

The Southern India Hockey Tournament ended at Secunderabad, in a second victory for the 61st Pioneers who beat the 96th Berar Infantry by two goals to nil: the 61st won the Cup last year.

Mr. H. W. Stevenson, the champion billiard player, will play two exhibition games at the Dalhousie Institute, Calcutta, to-night and to-morrow night against leading local amateurs. The billiard table will be the Institute's new table, and will be erected by Messrs. C. Lazarus and Co., in the large hall, which will be lighted with electric light by Messrs. F. and C. Osler. Raised seats will be provided round the table for spectators, the charges for admission being Rs. 5.

As yet another example of the amount of killing some bears require, we reproduce the following story told by an Oregon sportsman in the columns of an American paper:—"I was passing around an old fir snag and I stopped as I noticed some dry ferns at the mouth of a small hole on the lower side of the snag. I got down on my knees and looked in, and an old bear ran her nose out to look at me. I then jumped down in a hole about 5 feet deep where another fir tree had been uprooted and took a shot at her, hitting her in the lower jaw, cutting it off so it hung down by the skin. She knocked a hole through the side of the snag about 6 feet up and covered me with rotten wood. She came out of this opening and came for me. I knew I had a fight on hand, so [illegible] her hind legs I shot her through the heart, cutting about 1½ inches of her heart off, as I found when I cut her open. She turned at the second shot and ran right away from her cubs (she had two cubs in the tree), and by the time I got so I could see her she was about 75 yards up the hill. But she was getting weak, I could see, so I took another shot at her, this time lifting the top off of her head. This stopped her, and I was glad of it, as it was my last cartridge, as I had left my belt in camp. She weighed about 300 pounds."

The following clever skit on the prevailing idiotic diabolo craze which appeared recently in Vanity Fair may amuse some of our readers:—

The mists of morning skyward crept,
As from a Balham villa stept
A youth, who bore with air benign
A band box with this strange design:—
"Diabolo!"

His hair was grey, his brow beneath
Was white and pleated, like his teeth,
And from his lips you might have heard
The murmur of an unknown word:
"Diabolo!"

In well-lit dining room the gong
Resounded loud and clear and long;
He saw the table duly spread
For breakfast, but he only said:
"Diabolo!"

"Try not the game!" his host besought,
"The spool is not so lightly caught,
The slipp'ry string is none too wide!"
With fearless smile the youth replied:
"Diabolo!"

"O, stay," his cousin urged, "and steal
Its freshness from the morning meal!"
As silently he passed her by,
She read the signal in his eye:
"Diabolo!"

"Beware the white, the fatal top,
The upward swoop, the downward drop!"
His aunt implored him with a snort,
He answered (from the tennis-court):
"Diabolo!"

At even, when the sky grew dark,
A kindly butler scoured the park,
And as he hunted here and there,
A cry re-echoed through the air:
"Diabolo!"

At length, with lantern and with dog,
He traced the player through the fog,
Still busy with his sticks and twine,
His band box with the strange design:
"Diabolo!"

There with the string a trifle frayed,
Breathless, but obstinate, he played;
And there, each time the bobbin missed
Fell like a falling star, he hissed:
"Diabolo!"

They placed him in a waistcoat strait,
And so to the asylum gate,
Thence to a special ward which bore
This superscription on the door:—
"Diabolo!"

Here for a twelvemonth he enjoyed
His spool of padded cell-uloid;
And here they graved upon his tomb
The single word that spelt his doom:—
"Diabolo!"

Professor Koch, who is now on his return from East Africa, has been living for the past 18 months on a small island in the centre of Lake Victoria Nyanza. His only white companion has been an Army Medical Sergeant, and the two have lived in a native straw hut, their only communication with the mainland being a rough native boat, hewn out of a tree trunk. Professor Koch has been investigating that deadly and mysterious complaint, "sleeping sickness," and as the result of searching experiments has discovered that there is a distinct connection between crocodiles and sleeping sickness. He found that wherever crocodiles exist the disease may be discovered, but only in places near the banks. The blood of crocodiles forms the chief nourishment of a tiny fly, which sucks the blood between the plates of the animal's hide. The extermination of this insect is impossible, but the same end may be reached by destroying the crocodiles or by the removal of the bushes and undergrowth where the animals lurk. Professor Koch has made attempts to destroy the crocodiles with poisoned meat, but had great difficulty in preventing the natives from seizing and eating it.

Whatever may be the general verdict as to British angling in 1907, it must be allowed that in individual results it has been productive of certain phenomena. The 64lb. salmon caught on the very last day of the Tay salmon angling season by a butcher named Stewart will be talked of for a long time to come. It is said to be the largest salmon captured there for forty years. It was landed after an hour's great fight just a mile and a half below Perth, and, alas for piscatorial classics, was taken on a worm! No wonder the brave butcher, as he landed his prize, exclaimed, "Ye gods and little fishes!" What an extraordinary record the Tay has! It has furnished many great angling trophies besides that just recorded. It yielded, in fact, one of the heaviest river trout ever secured—the gigantic specimen of 27½lb., killed on fly by Colonel Dobiggin in September, 1842. True, some six years later a trout was caught in Loch Stennis, in Orkney, which scaled 9lb., but that was taken on a "set line," so that it scarcely comes under the head of angling trophies.

The preliminary regulations for the Marathon race, which will form part of the Olympic Sports in London next year, have now been arranged.

The race will start from Windsor, from the grounds of the Castle, if the King is favourably disposed to such a proceeding; otherwise from Queen Victoria's statue or Prince Victor's statue.

The length of the course will be twenty-five and a half miles, a half-mile less than the Athens course. Arrangements for keeping the course have not yet come up for discussion, but as an official of the Amateur Athletic Association points out, soon after the start a walking race becomes a progress in single file. Each competitor will have with him two attendants. Means will be taken to preserve a clear

A unique collection of Chinese birds has been given to the Natural History section of the British Museum by Mr. F. W. Styan, of Sevenoaks. It comprises 10,000 specimens, and was packed in 28 huge crates. Mr. Styan was for many years connected with the tea industry in China, and took up bird-collecting as a hobby. Dr. Bowdler Sharpe, of the British Museum, describes the collection as the most complete ever made in China. It contains many extremely rare specimens.

Professor Pembrethy, of the Royal Veterinary College, addressing the members of the Farmers' Club at Whitehall Rooms this week, said that glanders among horses could be extirpated for a sum which, if capitalised, would not represent a tithe of the yearly loss of from £50,000 to £100,000 which it caused.

We learn from Brisbane that, at a meeting of the Toowoomba Gun Club quite recently, Mr. E. King, shooting with Ballistite, killed 50 pigeons straight—47 with the first barrel. This says volumes for the strength and regularity of this popular powder.

There may be few people, by the way, who know the wide variety of uses to which the skins of fish are put. Many are converted into leather used for fancy work. The Egyptians make the soles of their boots from fish taken in the Red Sea. In Siberia, the skin of the burbot is dried, and the dresses of women are trimmed with it, whilst it also acts as a substitute for glass windows. Serviceable leather is made in America from the skins of cod and cusk; eel-skins are utilised as whip-thongs, dried sole-skins for clarifying coffee, dried shark and ray skins for sandpaper, and we need not mention their value in the formation of glue.

The third annual Ladies' Amateur Golf Championship of India is to be held at the Tollygunge Club Course, Calcutta, on 6th, 7th and 8th January next—open to all ladies, entrance fee Rs. 3 each. There will be a qualifying competition of 18 holes medal play on 6th January, the four lowest scores to compete by match play on 7th January over the 18 holes course and the final for the Championship is to be played on Wednesday, 8th January, over 18 holes. The winner is to hold the challenge vase presented by Mr. George Walker for one year and receive a miniature of the vase presented by the Calcutta Ladies' Golf Club. The present holder is Mrs. Kennedy, of Shillong. Entries close on 1st January 1908. All particulars can be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, the Ladies' Golf Club, 3, Middleton Row, Calcutta.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 8th November 1907.

It was announced yesterday morning that the Railway Dispute had been settled. Mr. Bell and other representatives of the Men's Union met Mr. Lloyd George and Railway Directors at the Board of Trade on Wednesday evening, and after much palaver, too late for the latest evening papers to publish the fact, an agreement was arrived at. This must be regarded as a victory for the Railway Directors: the only point at issue was whether they should or should not recognise the Unions and treat with Union officials as spokesmen of their employees. Mr. Bell was quite prepared—so he said—to call a strike if recognition were refused. The agreement provides for a scheme of "conciliation and arbitration" which is to last for six years after which it may be terminated by twelve months notice on either side. Nothing whatever is said about recognition of the Unions.

The final thunders of Mr. Bell were emitted at the Albert Hall on Sunday evening. There was a tremendous crowd—as there would have been were the meeting for female suffrage, Congo affairs or the Salvation Army—and the Bell-thunder was very loud and threatening indeed. Seventy-seven thousand men were in favour of a strike: it sounded serious, but 77,000 men are only one-eighth of the railway servants in the country: moreover they were only in favour of a strike and did not say they were prepared themselves to "go out" at Mr. Bell's bidding. Like so many of us they had a strong sense of other people's duty, but a carefully weighed idea of their own. One thing struck me about the man of those at the Albert Hall on Sunday: their youth—eighty per cent. of the "men" present were mere lads: and the older hands present, few enough, looked much bored as though they had much rather be spending the Sunday evening at the Blue Pig or Railway Arms. So now we can put "finis" to the paralysing strike which Mr. Bell, hard as he worked, failed to bring off.

The news that the Seditious Meetings Bill had been passed at Simla and would be applied forthwith to the Bakerganj district was received on Saturday with a general sight of relief. The most radical of radical papers do not complain (it would not matter if they did) and some of these profess to regard the New Angel of Babcodom as the provocative cause. If their professions are right then truly was Mr. Keir Hardie a blessing effectually disguised.

Radicalism, by the way, must be feeling just a little bit uncomfortable. The municipal elections in England and Wales in 142 boroughs were fought on party lines (quite wrongly I admit, but then socialism forced a political complexion on them) and the Conservatives won all along the line: they captured 120 seats, the Liberals 21, Labourites 22, Independents (whatever they may be) 4, and Socialists 4. Socialism fared very badly everywhere—sign of returning national sanity. The candour of Mr. Victor Grayson and his like frightened sensible people and socialism has been snubbed very effectively: but how do C. B. and Co. like those heavy Tory gains as a sequel to the L. C. C. elections? Very few women candidates have been elected. A result of the suffrage campaign I suppose.

The Tuppenny Tube ceased to be exclusively Tuppenny some little time ago and now another change is contemplated. The busses have been cutting out the Tube over short distances, the public naturally preferring to pay a penny to go from Lancaster Gate to Marble Arch by 'bus rather than twopence by tube. Wherefore the short distance passenger traffic in Earth's bowels has fallen off 'tis said 10,000 per day: the Directorate accordingly proposed to establish short penny fares: thereupon the 'bus companies threatened, if they did, to carry people for a penny over distances much longer than the Tube should do for the same money. The result is that the Tube Directorate stays its hand for the present and a conference with the 'bus companies is mooted. Meantime while companies fall out honest men come by more than they have any right to expect. The distance one can travel for a penny in some parts of London is prodigious: only they are mostly those parts to which you don't want to go.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Lords Monkswell, Mayo, Clifford of Chudleigh, Lonsdale (something new for him to appear in philanthropic guise, but a strong ally to any cause), Sir H. H. Johnstone, Charles Dilke, Gilbert Parker, and a score of others have set their hands to a solemn protest against continuance of the existing state of affairs in the Congo Free State. They earnestly appeal to the nation to support the Government in the endeavour to secure justice and decent government for the natives. Nobody doubts now that affairs on King Leopold's rubber preserves sadly need correction: but it is a delicate business. Belgium is a state with which we are on the best of terms: King Leopold is also a relative of His Majesty, Sir Edward Grey will not thank the signatories of this Appeal to the Nation if it be placed on him to bring about their desires.

I do not think anyone was greatly surprised by the announcement in Friday's Gazette that a number of officers of the 5th Lancers had been placed on half-pay. The regiment has had a name for slackness for a good many years past and nobody who knew anything would let his son accept a commission in it. It must be eight years ago that a city friend of your correspondent saw his son gazetted to this regiment against which he had been warned: he wrote boldly to Lord Roberts and said he had indifferent accounts of it, but if his Lordship could assure him these accounts were incorrect he should be quite content: he added that his boy was very keen about soldiering. Next Gazette saw the young gentleman's name removed from the 5th and himself posted to a Lancer regiment which enjoys a deserved reputation for smartness: I had better not say which one.

Mr. Rowan Orme whose serious Comedy in three Acts was produced at the New on Tuesday, is a new writer for the stage I believe: and "Mrs. Ellison's Answer" has some of the faults of the novice. He can draw character, with uncertain hand it is true, has a nice sense of humour and not a little dramatic feeling which he uses to advantage. As for the play: Richard and Oswald Milvain, sons of a wealthy merchant deceased, have each of them made unhappy marriages. Richard adored Mrs. Ellison who is on bad terms with her husband, but for prudential reasons marries Sylvia Eadband; he is unhappy with her and dallies with Mrs. Ellison till a gun accident deprives him [illegible] Sylvia's devotion wins his heart and when Mrs. Ellison, who had invited him to bolt with her, comes for her answer he says in effect "no thank you: quite happy at home." Oswald, of the artistic tastes, does not manage quite so well. He married Patricia the floridly handsome daughter of an American art dealer; he wanted in his wife Art, Poetry, Passion. Patricia brings only the last and that for the wrong man. She loves a fearful bounder named Sozzenheim a "pal" I suppose she would say, of her prenuptial days: and Oswald is unhappy accordingly. I really do not think Oswald is a suitable subject for sympathy when Patricia runs away with Sozzenheim: she did not suit her lawful spouse; she led him a dog's life; and she should suit Sozzenheim. Oswald persuades Patricia's father to go and look for her: but he hadn't found the lady when the curtain fell on Act III. Personally, his failure left me unmoved but it was a ragged finale to the sub plot. The two threads run abreast but have no inter-relation, which is a flaw.

Oswald is the best drawn character in the play, a frank boyish young man admirably played by Mr. Walter Pearce. Richard's accident turns him into quite another Richard and Sylvia into a totally different Sylvia: another serious flaw. Each Richard was good as far as he remained that one: but Richard II. was not, never could have been Richard I.: Mr. Jerold Robertshaw did his best, but the author was against him. The same applies almost equally to Sylvia, played by Miss Lucy Wilson. Mrs. Ellison, well bred if naughty was very charmingly done by Miss Granville.

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs," at the Haymarket, has been curtailed by one act; the fourth and last. Lady Slandish now makes her confession that she was with Kitty when the latter went to Lord Verney's lodging at the ball in the third act. It says little for the homogeneity of the play that an act can be cut out thus easily: but the piece was not, is not, a strong one and nothing can make it so.

Sir Charles Wyndham is given a command performance of "Still Waters Run Deep" at Windsor on 16th November, when the German Emperor is there. Sir Charles will play Mr. Mildmay; Mr. Lewis Waller, Captain Hawkesley; Mr. Alfred Bishop, Mr. Potter and Mr. Sam Sothern, Langford: Miss Mary Moore and Miss Marion Terry take the ladies' parts.

To-morrow being His Majesty's birthday command performances of "A Quiet Rubber" and the Dressing-room scene of "French as she is spoke" are to be given at Sandringham by Mr. Cyril Maude and his company.

The Stage Society mean to make hay while Mr. Redford shines. It is going to produce, besides "Waste" Mr. E. Garnett's play "The Breaking Point" and Mr. Arnold Bennett's "Cupid and Common Sense," both of which the reader declined to license. I have not had the curiosity to read "The Breaking Point" which has been published—wisely I venture to think. From the Stage Society's point of view, of course, publication is undesirable as people can buy and find out what is the matter with the play for themselves.

The parson's performance of "The Christian" has been followed by publication of some parson's opinions of that great work. One unkind cleric says "a very superior type of play, made by the actors a great piece;" hard upon the great author, is it not? Another clergyman thinks it "almost reaches the sublime:" I like the qualification much.

The Coliseum so long closed is to be opened at the end of this month with —r. Albert Chevalier as leading star.

Tuesday was Guy Fawkes day: it was less honoured, if my own observation and that of friends go for anything, even than last year. I saw one "Guy" up a back street on Campden Hill: none of those of whom I made enquiry saw any at all. I fancy that the modern taste for pageantry has been so highly educated by recent achievements in this direction that Guy Fawkes on a coster's cart is regarded as a poor show. Then again there is not now, among those who organize guys, any public man so obnoxious that they gratify their feelings by making an unlovely effigy. Furthermore public patronage of guys, in the shape of coppers, grows, I am told more and more scanty: wherein no doubt lies the true inwardness of the passing of Guy Fawkes.

A WEEK END SHOOT.

EARLY in March a few years ago a brother and I went out for a couple of days' shooting on the banks of the Jumna. After a fifteen-mile drive in that most uncomfortable of all vehicles, the ekka, we left the main road and walked some four miles further along a country track. The jungle here reminded me of the hedges of a main road in England on a summer's day; the green of the foliage being dulled and spoilt by the dust which covered everything till it made one's eyes ache to look it. The trees, too, all appears the same and all wear the same dejected look. There are no landmarks to measure one's progress by, and one seems to pass the same tree or bush twenty times in an hour.

Just after dark we arrived at the village where we were to camp and sat down to eat our sandwiches by the light of a bush which blazed merrily as soon as we put a match to it. We sent a coolie on into the village to get some eggs, etc., and he soon returned bringing with him some native officials who were surveying near there. They took us off into the village and fitted us up with beds in the village school, which we were very glad to get as our bullock cart with our kit could not arrive before midnight at the earliest.

In the morning after telling our servants where to pitch the tents, etc., we started off under the guidance of an appallingly dirty person who called himself a shikari, taking with us some twenty coolies under the command of our friend the surveyor. The primary object of our expedition was hog-deer which were said to abound in the jungles along the banks of the Jumna. We neither of us had ever seen a hog-deer and had the vaguest idea of what it was like, personally I thought it was a kind of glorified hare with horns. The Jumna here was some 100 yards or so wide with large sandbanks here and there, on which various water birds were invariably collected. Spoonbills, wild geese, and some enormous black and white crane-like birds with red legs and a big pointed black bill some nine inches long, we saw frequently. Flocks of duck of which the pintail formed the greater part, were hurrying up and down the river in the way duck always do in India, in the morning before sitting down to sleep on their favourite sandbanks during the heat of the day. The jungle along the banks was entirely "jhow" which, with occasional patches of long grass, grew so thick that one could not see ten yards in front. So we formed our coolies up in line and ourselves went on along the bank of the river till we found an open sandy space where we could see to shoot, and there we posted ourselves behind bushes and gave the signal for the beat to begin. They came on with howls and shouts to about 200 yards away when a sudden increase in the noise told us that some game was on foot. There was a rush in the bushes in front of me and an old sow crossed the open space at her best pace. When the beaters got nearer, a hare raced passed and one or two black partridges rose with a whirr and went back. We were out for hog-deer so let them go.

We had several similar beats which produced only a few jackals, and a small pig or two, but no hog-deer. We were sitting down having some sandwiches when the lumbadar of the next village arrived and asked us if we would shoot a mugger which had been making a nuisance of himself having lately eaten a boy and several cattle. There was a ford near the village, over which the cattle were driven morning and evening on their way to and from the fields on the other side of the river. This mugger with several others used to lay in wait below this ford and pull down the cattle as they crossed. We had neither of us ever seen a mugger before so eagerly started off to try our luck. I got out my ·450 Cordite, "the memsahib," as my servants call it from the care and trouble I always take in cleaning and oiling it. The lumbadar pointed out the muggers lying asleep on a sandy island some fifty yards from our bank. With the naked eye from where we were a quarter of a mile off, they looked like a heap of dry logs that had been left there by the river. But with the telescope we could make out ten muggers on the little island and some thirty more on the far bank of the river below, all lying fast asleep in the sun. Both varieties were there in about equal numbers, the mugger with his rounded snout and skin covered with horny plates and the gharial, who has a long pointed snout with huge teeth projecting in front and a somewhat smoother skin. Some lay with their huge mouths wide open apparently as fast asleep as those who had their mouths shut. Here and there on their heads and backs were sitting birds and close to the gaping mouths, we could see several large turtles also sleeping peacefully. We wondered whether the muggers held their mouths open as a trap in hopes that one of the birds would step inside or whether that was the natural position for them to sleep in, it looked uncomfortable enough. Most of them were of the same dust colour as the bank on which they lay, but here and there was one who had only just come out of the water, and whose skin had not yet dried in the sun. These were of a dark green colour and sparkled in the sun, presenting a striking contrast to their mud-coloured companions.

There was one mugger on the little island which was much larger than any of the others in sight and this was pointed out by the lumbadar as the one who had eaten the boy. We decided that I should shoot at the big one with the ·450 as being more likely to kill him at once, and that when I fired my brother should try a shot at one of the others with his Mannlicher. I heard the bullet strike with a tremendous thud, and in an instant all the seemingly lifeless logs woke up and rushed into the water. It looked exactly as if a number of large trees had been pitched into the river all striking the water together with a resounding splash. My brother fired right into the open mouth of a gharial as it jumped into the water. When the tumult subsided we saw the big one still on the island opening and shutting his enormous mouth and lashing his tail, but apparently unable to move. I fired my left barrel, another loud thud and the mugger was dead. The gharial my brother had fired at was evidently hard hit and was struggling in the shallow water, but gradually his struggles sent him further and further into the river and at last he sank from view.

All the muggers were now swimming about in the river, a couple of round black eyes and a couple of inches of snout, only showing above the water. The natives said they would come out of the river again soon as they had not been shot at before, so we lay and waited. In a few minutes a gharial approached the sandbank; when he got a yard or so from the water he lay down by the big one whom he evidently thought was still alive. It was my brother's turn for a shot so he fired at the shadow behind the fore-leg with his Mannlicher. I had the telescope on it and could see the white spot the bullet made as it struck exactly in the right place followed shortly by a stream of blood. The beast was evidently done for, but he gave a couple of kicks, slid off the sand into the water and sank. This was very annoying so we decided that if another came out we would shoot at his neck and not at the heart, I have noticed this repeatedly with all kinds of game. The heart shot taken from the side even with the heaviest bullets is not necessarily immediately fatal, an animal going sometimes as far as a hundred yards before dropping dead. The heart shot from the front or a bullet through the neck always drop an animal stone dead.

I soon had an opportunity of again demonstrating this. A big gharial came out and the mannlicher bullet striking him in the upper part of the neck dropped him dead literally without a kick. A quarter of an hour after another gharial crawled out and my brother again hit him in the neck and he stayed there. We sent off to the village for coolies and a boat or raft to get those we had killed. After an hour or so, some hundred coolies arrived, one or two of them carrying bundles of reeds on their heads. These they lashed together making a rude sort of raft which they launched after a lot of trouble. Everyone in the crowd seemed to know exactly what ought to be done and proceeded to explain it to everyone else at the top of his voice. Nobody, however, seemed to want to do anything himself and it was not until we had cut a couple of sticks, and driven the crowd back after collaring half a dozen of the biggest that we got any work done.

The lumbadar asked us to fire a few shots to frighten the muggers before the boat started so I took a shot at a baby mugger some three feet long which was lying on the far bank a hundred yards away. I had to look through the glasses to see which was his head, and which his tail, so I was immensely surprised when the bullet got him nicely in the neck and laid him dead on his back. My brother hit another, but his luck was out and it got into the water. We missed one or two more and then I took a shot at the eyes of a big gharial swimming in the river forty yards off. The bullet struck him fair in the eye and up came a pair of gaping jaws and then a tail; he lashed and struggled on the surface for a second or two and then sank evidently dead. I have often read in books that when a crocodile is wounded or killed he is immediately seized and eaten by his companions, the story generally being accompanied by some such flowery language as "The water was lashed into a bloody foam," etc. There were fifty pairs of eyes and snouts some fifty yards down stream, but though we had lost two or three dead ones just above they never changed their position or took the slightest notice.

The villagers now thought the muggers were sufficiently frightened so two or three of them climbed on to the raft and five more swam beside it pushing it along. We sat with our rifles ready to fire at the eyes of any mugger that came near them. They reached the other bank without trouble and began to haul the dead brutes on to the raft. When they were ready to come back we fired a few more shots and they soon got back to our side and we hauled out the slain and measured and examined them with great interest. The big mugger measured 10 feet 3½ inches between sticks and the biggest gharial was not far short of this though, of course, he was not so big a beast as he had a snount eighteen inches long. When skinning the muggers in the evening the shikari found eight human vertebrae in the big one's stomach, so he was certainly the one that killed the boy a short time before.

The villagers told us that the hog-deer were all lying out in the corn which was as high as one's waist, so the next morning we started to walk the crops with a line of coolies. In the very first field two hog-deer went away in front of my brother, but he could not see them to shoot in the high corn. We were carrying our shot guns loaded with No. 2 as it was impossible to see anything more than ten yards. Presently one got up right under my feet with a rush that made me jump, so that I did not get my gun off till he had gone twenty yards. I did not know whether I had hit him or not, but apparently he was not much the worse for it as he went right away. I had not even caught a glimpse of him, only hearing the rush in the corn and seeing it part as he went. They run with their heads low down on the ground and go at a perfectly astonishing pace in the thickest crops, making it impossible to tell whether it is a male or a female and giving a very difficult shot. We then put away our shot guns and took our rifles, but though two more were put up we did not get either We tramped on half the day in the high crops until we were fairly done, but at last my brother got a nice shot at one crossing an open space, knocked it over, up again in an instant and raced away but was brought to bag after much tracking.

WHITE ANTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you or any reader of the Indian Field say if there really exists anything that will kill or effectually repel white ants?. I have tried a few things without success and am now as a man without hope.

DISTRACTED.

[The following we know has been tried with complete success :—"Take an empty kerosine tin, half fill it with tar, put fire under it, and bring the tar to a boil; then take the tar off the fire, take one ounce of powdered arsenic and dissolve it in spirits of wine, or any spirit will do, whisky, &c.; pour the dissolved arsenic drop by drop into the hot tar, stirring it well all the time; then, take a quart bottle of kerosine oil and mix this with the tar in the same way, (the kerosine oil makes the tar dry quickly.) If your floor is a chunam floor you must paint it entirely with a thin coat of the tar, but if, on the other hand, you have a stone floor you only require to paint the cemented portions where the stones are joined. If, as is often the case you are in a hurry to put down your mats before the tar is quite dry, I have found old newspapers spread over the floor after painting it prevents the mats being soiled with the tar oozing through."—ED.]

.....when on the subject of ammunition there are some special bullets sold by the well-known Gunmakers Messrs. Lyon and Lyon of Calcutta called "Rotary" bullets which can be used with choke-bore barrels and with perfect safety. I speak from experience for I have tried them with my own guns which are full choked in both barrels. The shooting up to 70 yards was good and the wound made by the bullets appalling. I recommend them as most useful to have in one's possession at all events as a stand by in case of accident to a rifle. I had no idea until I tried it that it was possible to make such good shooting from a smooth bore. For close quarters I should prefer a gun, a gun with these bullets to a rifle.

STEWARDS.

COLONEL P. K. L. BEAVEN, LIEUT.-COL. W. G. MACEY, R. A. | E. F. JACOB, ESQ., C. I. E. MAJOR S. H. CLIMO D. S. O., 24th Punjabis.

A. L. SAUNDERS, ESQ., C. S.

Secretary:—MAJOR J. H. ENSOR.

Second Day, Thursday, 31st November 1907.

THE racing to-day will long remain memorable in the annals of Lucknow sport. The weather was glorious and an enormous gathering filled the grand stand and enclosure. The card consisted of seven events and fields were large and classy. Yankee Boy fulfilled the anticipations of backers in the opening race; in the Grant Pony Handicap Minnie was made a warm favourite, but the event was carried off by Lady Grey II., after an excellent race. R. R. Morrison, on Daphne fell at the water jump in the Handicap Pony Chase, though fortunately both horse and rider escaped without serious injuries. Pathfinder II., ran out and took no further part in the race. The great event of the day was of course the Army Cup, for which these were twelve starters, Grey Knave and Grey Wolf being scratched at the eleventh hour. Most of the money was on Peter the Great and Midas while Itifaq was heavily backed for a place. The chances of Wordie Major who started at 6 to 1, appear to some extent to have been disregarded in spite of his easy victory in the Novice Plate on the opening day. Midas was led to the post and the rest of the field paraded, Kagal and Diamond wearing blinkers. There was some delay in effecting a start, but once they were sent away it was in every sense a memorable race, not its least remarkable feature being the splendid riding of Mr. Tomkinson of the Royal Dragoons, on the winner; he jockeyed his field to a nicety and made his effort a short distance from home, literally overwhelming [illegible]xile who appeared to have the race well within his [illegible]. He received a great ovation after the race. Wordie [illegible] a fine bay Arab, and though he has been raced at [illegible]as been used chiefly as a polo pony; he was played [illegible] Badger in many polo tournaments last year and [illegible]y been in training two months! Messrs. Wood and [illegible] have now won the Army Cup three years in succession—[illegible]illiam Rufus in 1905 and with Dilerjang last year, [illegible]urally they were the recipients of numerous congratula- [illegible] the event. Dilerjang ran in the Arab Handicap to-day [illegible] not succeed in getting placed. Sermon, another theorse [illegible]y the same stable, won the Calcutta Plate. The Royal [illegible]s and all the various regiments were "At Home" and [illegible]n and Lady Fewett were again present. Details:—

STEWARDS' PLATE.—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs. 300 second, and Rs. [illegible]00 to the third. A handicap for English Australasian ponies 14-1 and under, and C.-B. ponies 14-2 under. 5 furlongs.

Diamond led, with Little Exile in second place, Midas and Norwood well up, the others in a bunch. After the three furlongs Itifaq ran into second place with Diamond still leading Midas and Norwood on the outside. Wordie Major was lying about sixth, waiting on his field, and began to make his effort before the distance was reached. About a furlong from home Little Exile went to the head of affairs and the order at this stage was Little Exile, Itifaq, Midas and Norwood with Diamond in fifth place. Little Exile appeared to have things his own way and was going very steadily when Wordie Major, splendidly ridden by Mr. Tomkinson, came up with a great rush fifty yards from home and wearing down the leader, assumed command winning by half a length; half a length separated Little Exile and Itifaq, with Midas fourth a head behind; Norwood was fifth and Diamond sixth. Time—1min. 41⅗secs.

Third Day, Saturday, 23rd November 1907.

There were a few remarkable surprises to-day and the bookmakers, one would think, had little cause for complaint. Owing to the accident to Lady Drake on the second day the hedge in front of the water jump was a good deal cut down, but the Lucknow Chase to-day was, nevertheless, not devoid of incidents. Out of a field of eight, three horses fell at various stages of the race and one refused. Sheldrake, the well-known professional who was on Shotover, broke his arm and will be prevented from taking part in the Calcutta meeting. Mr. Cooper's Little Red Rat created quite a flutter by winning two races during the afternoon, whereas old and tried performers like Flotsam, Cinque Ports, and Dilerjung, the last of whom was made favourite for the Desert Handicap, made no show to speak of. The Lawn Plate was considerably below the standard of the other events, the two candidates simply crawling along. Captain Burch, of the Royal Dragoons, had a good deal of difficulty with his fields, but the starting throughout has been excellent. After their experience of Tuesday, when the moon rose over the proceedings, the executive decided on an earlier commencement and to-day the card was run off well before dusk. Details:—

THE LAWN PLATE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A handicap for Maiden Arab ponies that were qualified to enter and run in the Army Cup, 1906. 7 furlongs.

Col. Abud's Martini, 8st. 9lb. ...	Southall	1
Capt. Percy Smith's Wareed, 9st. 9lb. (car. 9st. 11lb.) ...	Mr. Charrington	2

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Wareed.

A very slow race. Wareed trotted out with the lead from Martini, the latter rose to the front near the rails and won by a length. Time—1min. 45secs.

THE LUCKNOW PLATE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap for C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under, and English and Australasian ponies and 14-1 and under. 6 furlongs.

Mr. J. D. Scott's Kathleen II., 10st. 5lb.	Killorn	1
Bodyguard Polo Club's Tokani, 6st. ...	Ram Pershad	2
Kour Sahib of Patiala's Redshot, 8st. 4lb.	Southall	3
Col. Beaver's Little Dolly, 7st. 4lb. ...	Baichan	4
Mr. J. Rowan's Picaninny, 8st. 3lb. ...	Ames	0

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Kathleen II., 3 to 1 agst. Picaninny, 4 to 1 Redshot, and 6 to 1 the others.

Picaninny gave trouble at the start and was left with Little Dolly who subsequently made up lost ground and ran fourth. Kathleen II. led at a great pace with Redshot some distance off and won by half a length; same distance between second and third; Tokani coming up with a rush deprived Redshot of second place. Time—1min. 18⅘secs.

THE LUCKNOW CHASE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A handicap steeplechase for horses. About 2¼ miles.

Mr. H. E. Norton's Biralee, 9st. 13lb. ...	J. Trenoweth	1
Mr. T. L. Robert's Refuge Bay, 10st. 11lb.	E. Thomas	2
Capt. Gibbs and Mr. Borton's Nell Gwynne, 10st. 4lb.	Northmore	3

Major Moore's Daroji, 9st. 13lb.	J. H. Trenoweth (ref.)	0
Col. F. S. Forbes' Shotover, 9st. 10lbs.	Sheldrake (fell)	0
Capt. Gibbs and Mr. Borton's Loddon, 9st.	Vining (fell)	0
Mr. W. G. Durham's Ruapehu, 9st. (car. 9st. 11lb.)	Owner (fell)	0

BETTING: 3 to 2 agst. Nell Gwynne, 3 to 1 Daroji, 5 to 1 each Umuthee, Refuge Bay and Biralee, 6 to 1 Shotover, and 10 to 1 the others.

After two false starts they got away, Shotover's rider, Sheldrake, being dislodged at the first hurdle and breaking his arm. Loddon and Ruapehu also fell during the race and Daroji refused. At the mile post the order was Refuge Bay, Biralee and Nell Gwynne; they ran in this manner until over the last jump when Biralee came to the head of affairs and won easily by three lengths; five lengths separated second and third. Time—4mins. 61secs.

CORINTHIAN PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high-weight handicap for Arab ponies 14-2 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 200 or more. ½ mile.

BETTING: 2 to 1 agst. Mumbra, 4 to 1 Little Red Rat, 5 to 1 each Pasha, Little Exile and Marengo, 6 to 1 each Lender and Thuyyar, and 10 to 1 the others.

Lender refused to face the machine and delayed the start for nearly seven minutes. Once they were away, the race lay between Little Red Rat and Mumbra, the former winning easily by a length and a half; half a length divided second and third; three-quarters of a length between third and fourth. Time—58⅕secs.

THE FAREWELL PLATE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap for horses that have never won a flat race value Rs. 2,000 or more. 6 furlongs.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 8th November 1907.

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

THE Newmarket meetings for 1907 ended on the 1st instant, and following the lead of the King, who as a country gentleman is at home here, Society stayed the meeting out, the attendance in the club enclosure affording a bigger average than produced by Tattersall's or the further enclosure, as after the Cambridgeshire the majority of the metropolitan division stayed at home. The going was again a bit soft.

(Winner trained by J. Brewer.)

BETTING: 9 to 2 agst. Fire Clay, 5 to 1 Nero, 8 to each Electric Rose and Mussulman, 10 to 1 each Certosa, Cradle Song Silly and Be Iantrix, 100 to 9 Balnault, 100 to 7 each Ignorance, Perky, and The Rialto, and 100 to 6 each others (offered).

Won easily by two lengths; a length and a half divided second and third. Time—1min. 1⅘secs.

LINCOLN.

Fog hung very thickly over Lincoln, but it was by no means so bad when the course was reached, and though incomplete, a better view of the racing was obtained than was suggested by the early morning. The capital special from town was not crowded by any means, as the majority of the London brigade had the Cambridgeshire settling to attend to at the clubs; nor was the attendance so large as in the spring.

BLANKNEY NURSERY PLATE HANDICAP.—Of 200sovs.; second receives 10sovs. 5 furlongs, straight.

Mr. J. T. Whipp's ro or br c Saucy John, by Pentheon or Pride—Sweet Hilda, 6st. 13lb.	R. Crisp	1

Mr. A. L. Robinson's Point of View, 6st. 10lb.	J. Howard	0

(Winner trained by J. Whipp.)

BETTING: 9 to 2 agst. Beau, 5 to 1 Well Matched, 11 to 2 each Mechante and All Fudge, 8 to 1 Saucy John, 10 to 1 each Maryport and Flower of the Veldt and 100 to 8 each others.

Won by a neck; a head divided second and third.

LINCOLN AUTUMN HANDICAP.—of 250sovs; second receives 20sovs. 1¼mile.

Lord Ellesmere's br h Kroonstad by Kilwarlin—Sabra, aged, 7st. 10lb.	Wm. Griggs	1
Capt. Laing's b c Rousay, 3yrs., 8st. 12lb.	W. Halsey	2
Baron E. de Rothschild's b c San Miniato, 4yrs., 7st. 4lb.	J. Howard	3
Mr. E. F. Schiff's Mimosa, 3yrs., 7st. (car. 7st. 2lb.	F. Greening	0

(Winner trained by J. Dawson.)

BETTING: 5 to 4 agst. Rousay, 5 to 2 San Miniato, and 7 to 2 each Mimosa and Kroonstad.

Won by three-parts of a length; five lengths separated second and third.

With best sport reserved for the second day it was a pity that the Great Northern Railway did not repeat their handy 9-50 special from King's Cross. Several distinguished sportsman who had built their plans thereon and travelled back to town had to leave by the uncomfortably early 8-15 and with a through special the London brigade would have taken Lincoln in their stride instead of going direct to Liverpool. The night was wet, but the heavy rain did not clear the mist to any extent, and the landscape was blurred by masses of vapour. The sun, however, came out about one o'clock, and gave us a brighter afternoon. The attendance was pretty fair in the enclosures, but the holiday folk were not present in anything like force. The going was, of course, heavy, but fields showed a strong improvement.

GREAT TOM PLATE.—Handicap of 500sovs; second receives 25sovs. The straight mile.

Col H. T. Fenwick's b c Rockbourne, by Donovan—Alix, 3yrs., 8st. 2lb.	W. Halsey	1
Mrs. Sadleir Jackson's br f Lady Hasty, 5yrs., 8st.	S. Donoghue	2

Mr. E. A. Winnet's Skiograph, aged, 8st. 10lb.	W. Higgs	0
Mr. P. P. Gilpin's Mildew II., 3yrs., 8st. 12lb.	B. Dillon	0
Mr. G. A. Prentice's Dalharco, 4yrs. 8st.	W. Broadwood	0

(Winner trained by Sharrard.)

BETTING: 7 to 4 agst. The Beloubin, 3 to 1 Rockbourne, 6 to 1 Mildew II., 8 to 1 Dalharco, 10 to 1 Lady Hasty, 100 to 8 Dumbarton Castle, and 100 to 7 each Skiograph and Koorhaan (offered).

Won easily by a length; four lengths separated second and third. Time—1min 45⅖secs.

CHAPLIN NURSERY PLATE. (Handicap)—Of 500sovs; second receives 25sovs. Seven furlongs, straight.

Mr. C. T. Pulley's ch c by Orvieto—Hush, 8st. 8lb.	D. Maher	1
Mr. R. A. Oswald's ch c Covenanter, 8st. 6lb.	H. Randall	2
Major J. D. Edward's br f Wavora, 7st. 4lb.	C. Foy	3

Mr. C. Meyer's Jaquette, 8st. 10lb.	W. Saxby	0
Mr. E. Foster's Pusing Lama, 7st. 7lb.	J. Plant	0
Mr. W. Raphael's Ronna, 7st. 4lb.	W. Broadwood	0

(Winner trained by G Chaloner.)

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Hush c, 7 to 1 Goldylocks, 8 to 1 Zanetz, 10 to 1 each Glimmerglass, Wavora, and Ronna, 100 to 8 each Pusing Lama and Jaquette, and 100 to 6 each others (offered).

Won like a smart colt by a length and a half; a neck between second and third. Time—1min. 32⅖secs.

LIVERPOOL.

A gloriously bright day attracted a large and representative company to Aintree on the 6th instant. The various enclosure, were well patronised, while a fairly big crowd paid for admission to the course, which was in beautiful order, though the going could not help but be soft, and the fields finished very tired up the new five furlongs which in all against collar.

78TH LIVERPOOL ST. LEGER.—Of 700sovs.; second receives 50sovs., and third 30sovs.; for three year olds. 1½ miles.

Mr. W. R. Wyndham's b f Dripsey, by Desmond—Canterbury Belle, 8st. 3lb.	W. Halsey	1

Won comfortably by a length; three-parts of a length between second and third. 1min 4⅖sec.

A misty showery day had one redeeming feature in sending the temperature up but the prospects of a wetting, did not much affect the attendance. The house parties from Sefton and Knowsley were met by a brilliant company in the club enclosure, and there was little falling off in the general muster but doubtless the holiday folk are waiting for the Cup. The going was a bit holding horses finishing rather tired, but good fields, especially in the steeplechase which gave a pleasant variety to the programme, were the rule.

Won a good race by a head; two lengths divided second and third. Time—1min. 17⅖secs.

Aintree's dreary drip of yesterday had continued more or less throughout the night. It was still in evidence when racing was resumed to-day, whilst to accentuate the miseries of visitors there was so much mist hanging about the course that little of the racing could be seen from the stands. The course had become churned up into a mass of mud, into which the runners sank fetlock deep.

THE scoring in the big leagues on Saturday was well up to the average, 29 games yielding 95 goals, the First Division of the League leading the way with 37, the nine Second Division games produced 31, and the ten Southern League games 27. The home teams did well, for 18 won, only 6 lost, and in 5 cases the spoils were divided. The goals credited to winning teams numbered 68, losing teams claimed 21—seven in each league—and there were a half-dozen scored in the drawn games. Fifteen teams failed to find the net, and of these seven were Southern League contestants. In League I. the results varied in only five instances as compared with the corresponding games last season, Woolwich Arsenal gaining a couple of points and a single point improvement was shown by Aston Villa, Manchester United, Sheffield Wednesday, and Preston North End. In the Second Division, Lincoln City are two points better off, and West Bromwich Albion and Stockport County each gained one. There were three changes in Southern League results, Millwall winning where last season they lost, and Southampton and Crystal Palace each converting a draw into a win.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

The formal opening of the Queen's Park Rangers' ground adjoining Park Royal Station was a noteworthy event in the annals of London professional football. The unpretending ceremony was performed by Lord Kinnaird, the president of the Football Association, and his lordship made some practical remarks at the luncheon attended by many well-known celebrities in the football world. It was not a happy combination that the Rangers should have chosen so auspicious a day to lose their first home match of the season and their second in the tournament, defeat not having come their way since 14th September, at Tottenham. Millwall deserved their win, if only for their splendid defence. Crystal Palace soon recovered from their lapse of form at Luton, their halves and backs playing so well that the Brighton attack was kept well in hand. There was a capital attendance at Tottenham to watch the struggle for points between the 'Spurs and Bradford Park Avenue, and a fine game ended in a draw, thanks largely to the cleverness of Baddeley the International goalkeeper, whose work between the uprights had much to do with the Avenue escaping defeat. The home half-backs, strengthened by Gray, were in great form. At Upton Park, West Ham did not have any difficulty in repeating last year's win over Brentford, and the latter have not yet credited themselves with a point away from home.

There were two outstanding features in Saturday's provincial games—New Brompton's win at Luton, and Reading's defeat of Northampton, the latter being on their own ground. Luton are a team of moods. Seven days earlier, against the Crystal Palace, they had played football of a kind that would have enabled them to hold their own with any team in the country, but their display on Saturday was very ragged. New Brompton were keen and determined, and obtained the points in consequence. Reading did what no other team had been able to do at Northampton since 2nd September, when Plymouth Argyle beat the Cobblers 2—0. The Berks club is now in a respectable position in the table, thanks to the points they have picked up away from home. Plymouth Argyle were in scoring mood against Bristol Rovers, but the latter struggled hard, though ineffectually, to avert defeat, they being the only losing team on Saturday to obtain a couple of goals. Norwich City placed a much-needed win to their credit at the expense of Watford, but Swindon could not do better than draw against Portsmouth, who will soon have to start winning matches if they intend to move away from the foot of the table.

LEAGUE I.

To Southerners the brilliancy of the Arsenal against Sheffield United is the most gratifying feature in Saturday's games. It was easily their most convincing display of the season, and while it was their most emphatic win to date, it was the most crushing reverse the United have been called upon to bear. In no previous game had the Arsenal scored more than a couple of goals, and only once had the Blades had so many as three registered against them. And now the Gunners come along with a 5—1 win, and not a semblance of a fluke about it. After this demonstration of skill much will be expected of the Arsenal. Chelsea did not find the air of Roker Park suitable, a defeat by three clear goals being their unhappy experience, but Aston Villa, Notts County, and Preston North End have had three or more goals scored against them on the same ground, so that the Pensioners need not be unduly depressed. Bristol City did well to obtain a two clear goal's win over Liverpool, at Ashton Gate, and Preston North End gave further evidence of improved form at home by defeating the champions by a similar score. Manchester United found Birmingham tough customers at St. Andrew's, but the odd goal in seven gave the Mancunians the victory in a match in which the forwards claimed a large share of attention. Blackburn Rovers were no more successful at Burnden Park than they have been on other grounds, but Aston Villa showed up the weakness of Notts County, at Trent Bridge, by obtaining three goals without response from the home side. Sheffield Wednesday just scraped through against Middlesborough, and Everton had not anything to spare against Notts Forest, while Manchester City could not do better on their own ground than draw against Bury.

DIVISION II.

With Clapton Orient engaged in a Cup tie with a Southern League Second Division club—the result was a draw, and the game will be replayed at Southend on Wednesday—the match among the clubs struggling for promotion which most appealed to followers of Metropolitan football was that at Craven Cottage, where Leeds City opposed Fulham. As the latter had alternately won and lost their home games, it was their turn to win, and they did so on their merits by as pretty a display of football as one could wish to see. They met clever opponents, who also played the game as it should be played, and the result was a highly interesting contest, in which the spoils went to the team that deserved them. It was not a surprise that Chesterfield should be beaten at home by Oldham Athletic, but West Bromwich Albion did less than was expected of them in allowing Leicester Fosse to walk off with a point from the Hawthorns, and Hull City certainly could not afford to share the honours on their own ground with Stockport County. Lincoln City played their best game of the season against Wolverhampton Wanderers, and incidentally, obtained three goals for the first time, beside registering their first win in the tournament since 16th September, when Burnley were beaten at Turf Moor. Derby County romped home against Gainsborough Trinity, and Burnley overwhelmed Grimsby, but Blackpool struggled hard at Stoke, and Bradford City only won on their own ground by the odd goal in three against Glossop.

RUGBY RULES.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. HARLEQUINS.—The Light Blue team showed considerably improved form in the annual fixture with the Harlequins, played at the University town on Saturday, but the forwards, although strengthened by the inclusion of Lely, were off-colour. The captain is, of course, compelled to try a number of men, but it is strange that no Water, of Christ's, who is playing remarkably well this term, should have been dropped. Atkinson, the full back, was not so good as usual, whilst Bower, the left wing three-quarter, was a distinct failure. Macleod and Wright were in good form, and are improving in their combination every match. B. H. Holloway, the Leys Freshman, who was not over good with the wet ball on Wednesday, played a great game. Gosby, the Blue, has not yet found his last-year's form.

As could only be expected with eight of their crack players away, the Harlequins were not able to make a very good show. Several of their men were quite out of condition, and suffered considerably from the hard game in the first half.

The Light Blues commenced scoring five minutes from the start, Holloway making an opening and passing to Gibb, who disposed of Bruce and crossed over. Macleod kicked a good goal. Then for five minutes the Harlequins kept up a spirited attack, striving hard to equalise, but Macleod at length relieved with a magnificent punt which extended over half the field, and his side were pressing when he and Wright combined capitally, with the result that the captain crossed over, but failed to convert. For the remainder of the first half the game was even, and nothing further was scored.

Crossing over, the 'Varsity at once set to work, and taking the advantage of an opening made by Godby, Macleod and Wright got going. The latter received inside the twenty-five line, and beating both Lambert and Bruce, landed over and ran round under the posts. Macleod easily converted. Five minutes later Wright again got in, but the points were not improved upon.

Then for a time the visitors were without F. M. Stoop, and in his absence Holloway smartly picked up and beat several of the backs, eventually passing to McCosh, who easily crossed over under the bar. Macleod converted. Holloway was also chiefly responsible for the next and last try by Cambridge, punting across to Wright, who grounded over, the captain adding the major points. Lewis then scored an unconverted try for the visitors. Result:—Cambridge University, 4 goals 2 tries (26 points); Harlequins, 1 try (3 points).

LEICESTER vs. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—At Leicester on Saturday, in the presence of 8,000 spectators, Oxford University inflicted a crushing defeat on Leicester by no less than 27 points to six. At the outset the Leicester pack literally carried all before them, and hopes of improvement behind ran high when Mann crossed the line after five minutes play, the result of a pretty bit of passing between Watson and himself. The Dark Blues were only waiting for a chance, however, which speedily came when Williamson snapped up a pass intended for Goodall. Easily clearing immediate opposition he doubled inside, and had a clear run for his quarters, either of which could have scored. Martin put the finishing touch, and Roberts, failed at goal. Scarcely had the ball been restarted than Leicester, who were getting almost undisputed possession in the packs, appeared to have a great chance. Their passing was badly muddled, and ground we lost. Before they quite realised what was happening the Oxford third line was well on the move, and Vassall repassed inside to Steinthal just as Dixie Smith tackled him. No mistake was made, and Roberts this time converted. Sensation followed sensation, and Watson burst through. Russell again failed at goal. Four tries inside fifteen minutes was a little exceptional in a match of this description. Another score came just before the interval. The ball came out to Goodall, and Wood was rushed over before he could gather. Howard kicked down for Vassall to field before the ball pitched, and the rest was easy. A good goal kick by Roberts just failed, and the interval was taken with the scores:—Oxford University, 1 goal 2 tries; Leicester, 2 tries.

After change of ends Martin and Vassall each scored brilliant tries, the opening for both of which came from missed Leicester passes. Roberts converted one. In the closing stages there was only one side in evidence—Leicester defended, and that was all. Their forwards were spent, they had played the game on their own, and probably were more than a little dispirited, and from a melee at the corner Hodges scrambled over. Roberts added the extras. Before time Roberts kicked yet another goal from a mark, and the game ended in a glorious victory for Oxford. Result:—Oxford University, 5 goals 1 field goal, 3 tries (27 points); Leicester, 2 tries (6 points).

BLACKHEATH vs. LONDON SCOTTISH.—This match at the Rectory Field on Saturday was true to the traditions of games between these old and keen rivals on that enclosure. The Scottish, though obviously the superior side (except at half-back) failed to do their powers justice.

Luck, except in the matter of a try scored by Geddes, and converted by the scorer five minutes after the start, inclined, however, the way of the home side, the Scottish on three occasions being extremely unfortunate not to score. Sloan, Purves, and Wade were just held on the line. This period past, Blackheath rallied in most plucky and praiseworthy fashion. The forwards, who had so far been outplayed, both in the tight and the loose, packed much better and "got the ball," while they heeled cleanly and made several good loose rushes.

It was at this point that the superiority of the Blackheath halves was not only most obvious, but of the greatest advantage to their side, Mainprice made a very fine opening, but a try might not have followed but for the cleverness of Chambers, who gave Finlinson a wide, fast belt-high pass, which the wing three took in his stride to run in almost unopposed. The defence was cleverly drawn, and the score was an admirable bit of work. Unfortunately for Blackheath, Mainprice failed to kick a goal from the fairly easy place.

Blackheath continued to hold the upper hand, and would have secured the lead from an almost similar movement, following a fine run by Mainprice, had Finlinson not knocked on in taking the final pass. Half-time arrived with the game in midfield and the Scottish leading by 5 points to 3.

With the slight breeze as their backs, it was generally expected that the Scottish would soon place the issue beyond doubt. The earlier stages were marked by a lot of kicking, but once the sides settled down again the Scottish had the better of the game. Wade early lost a very good chance by kicking instead of passing to Meir, who was unmarked. As it was only a splendid save by Finlinson deprived the Scottish of a try. A very fine kick by Paterson, which found touch a foot or so from the Blackheath line, placed the Scottish in an attacking position. A touch-down relieved the pressure, however, and for a time play was at the centre. Here Purdon was penalised for offside, and Geddes with a magnificent kick almost landed a goal, the ball hitting the cross-bar. The Scottish forwards had followed up, and got the ball as it rebounded into play off the bar. A pass forward, however, spoiled an excellent chance. Good work by the Blackheath forwards, backed up by a couple of fine touch-kicks by Mainprice, took the home side to the Scottish twenty-five. Their stay was brief, however, the Scottish forwards by excellent footwork taking the ball to near the Blackheath twenty-five. Here Verge made a good save, but his kick did not find touch, and Meikle made his mark near the centre. Geddes kicked a very fine goal, the ball going straight between the posts at a range of over fifty yards. The game was keenly fought to the end, but there was no further scoring. Result:—London Scottish, a placed goal and a goal from a mark (8 points) to a try (3 points).

OLD ALLEYNIANS vs. LONDON WELSH.—At Potash Farm, Dulwich Common, on Saturday, in the early minutes a very fast game was evenly contested. The Welsh had started short, but with a completed pack Morgan and Rowlands opened up the game. Mackinnon Clark, Inglis, Manvell, and Isherwood were frequently prominent with timely punts and sure tackling, but Stead made a fine mark just beyond the home 25, and dropped a goal. A movement initiated by Rowlands was spoilt through a bad pass by Evans to Watts, but the check was only a momentary one, for a subsequent round saw Maddocks sending Morgan over, and Stead placed the goal. A few minutes later, while play ruled at midfield, Harding gave Neagle a chance of proving his speed, whereby he beat all opposition and scored in a favourable position, Stead again converting. After the O.A.'s had been robbed of a good chance by Stead, and Watts had failed to take an easy pass from Maddocks when favourably situated, another electric round followed, and ended in Williams giving to Jenkins, who forced his passage in the corner, but Stead just failed from this difficult angle. At half-time the Welsh led by 16 points to 0.

The game thenceforward lacked seriousness, and the O.A.'s were rewarded with a try through smart following-up by Clark, Manvell converting. The Welsh seven were irresistible afterwards, and it would have required but very little extra effort on their part to double the subsequent score. Jenkins again distinguished himself on the line-out, from which he ran in and scored twice, while Harding also enabled Morgan to score once more, but Stead narrowly missed the goal each time. Result:—London Welsh, 3 goals) 1 from a mark) 4 tries (25 points); Old Alleynians, 1 goal (5 points).

left in to fight out the final, the result of which was a foregone conclusion. When Magdalen beat them on Wednesday Christ Church were certainly superior so far as the rowing went but their steering left a lot to be desired, and it seemed a somewhat hazardous proceeding to leave it in the hands of a Freshman, as they did, when the services of Barker and A. C. Gladstone were available. The weather proved very cold and cheerless, although fine, and there was a tremendous stream running, which favoured Magdalen rather than New Courge.

The two crews left in were Magdalen—J. R. Somers-Smith (Eton) (bow and steers), 10st. 10lb.; J. A. Gillan (Edinburgh Academy), 12st. 8lb.; A. G. Kirby (Eton) (stroke), 13st. 5lb.; E. H. L. Southwell (Eton) (stroke), 12st. 2lb.—and New College C. F. Connal-Rowan (Eton) (bow and steers), 11st. 9lb.; A. B. B. Howell (Winchester), 12st. 12lb.; D. D. Drury (Eton), 12st. 3lb.; E. V. Culme Seymour (Radley) (stroke), 11st. 14lb.

From an even start New College gained somewhat in the first 200 or 300 yards, but the long, powerful stroke of the Magdalen oarsmen soon told against the strong stream, and they were quickly leading by a substantial margin. New went wide at the Ferry, and Magdalen, taking a capital course through the "Gut," drew still further away. New rowed well and pluckily up the Willow Bank, but they failed to make any impression on the bobbers, and after passing the boathouse they began to get very ragged. Magdalen went out into the middle of the stream at the Cherwell, but they were right away, and finishing in splendid style, gained an easy victory by 3½ lengths. Some idea of the different conditions may be gathered from the fact that on Wednesday Magdalen covered the course in 6mins. 54secs. and to-day it took them 7mins. 24secs.

New College have been in the final for the last three years without winning. There was no Freshman in either crew.

CAMBRIDGE FOURS.

The second round of the coxswainless fours was rowed off on the afternoon of the 1st instant, when the conditions were again fairly favourable, although a slight mist hung round the river. Owing to the nuisance the cyclists were on the previous day, the president issued a notice excluding them from the towing path. A grand race was witnessed between "Third" and "First," the Etonians winning in only a few seconds outside record time. Results:—

Heat E.

(Station 1) Third Trinity—R. S. Guiness (bow) 10st. 11lb., Hon. J. H. Parker 12st. 5lb.; E. G. Williams 12st. 13lb.; E. W. Powell (stoke and steers) 11st. 6lb., 1; (Station 2) First Trinity—J. C. Warrington (bow) 11st. 4lb., J. S. Burn 12st. 12lb., O. A. Carver, 12st. 6lb., G. B. Lloyd (stroke) 11st. 4lb., 2

Third Trinity had the advantage at the start, and were half a length up at the Little Ditch. This they had increased to a length at the Red Grind, but after a ding-dong struggle up the Long Reach there was very little in it when the leaders shot the Railway Bridge. There was every prospect of an extremely close finish, but at the Pike and Eel First Trinity steered so badly that they ran into a boat moored at the bank, and "Third" won by three lengths. Time—10mins. 18¼secs. The winners were steered by Mr. D. C. R. Stuart and the losers by Mr. Drew.

Heat F.

(Station 1) Jesus—Eric Fairbairn (bow) 11st. 9lb., H.M. Goldsmith 12st. 3lb., N. E. Hawdon 12st. 7lb., F. H. Jerwood (stroke) 11st. 11lb., 1; (Station 2) Pembroke—C. J. Merton (bow) 11st. 4lb., C. P. Butler 12st. C. G. Lawson 12st. 10lb., W. H. Miles (stroke) 11st. 4-

Jesus, as on the previous day, had matters all their own way. They led at the Red Grind, and paddled up the Long Reach. At the Railway Bridge they broke into a row, and went clean away from their opponents, winning by 120 yards. Time—10mins. 34 4-5secs. Jesus were advised by Mr. F. G. Hudson, whilst Mr. Lawson steered the losers.

Mr. G. N. M. Bland was umpire.

The final heat of the University coxswainless fours was decided on Saturday, when Jesus opposed Third Trinity and gained a clever victory by a length in 10mins. 11¼secs. The winners, gained a lead at the start, and were half a length in front at the Ditch. After passing the railway bridge Third Trinity made a plucky attempt to draw level, and considerably reduced their opponents' advantage, but they were unable to get on terms.

Mr. J. S. Burn was umpire. Jesus have won this event eight times during the fifty-six races, but their last success was as far back as 1881.

ATHLETICS.

OXFORD FRESHMEN'S SPORTS.

The first stage of the Oxford University Freshmen's Sports was decided on the 5th instant when, although the interest taken in the meeting scarcely seemed as great as usual, there were some very good performances. Perhaps the most noteworthy was that of N. C. Hull, a Brazenose freshman from Michigan, who won three events off the reel, and appears to have very favourable prospects of gaining other honours. He won the opening heat of the 100 Yards in the easiest possible manner in 10 4-5secs. and later on carried off the Quarter-mile, after a splendid struggle with C. Howard Smith, of Wellington and Brasenose (the brother of the old Cambridge Blue), in 52 1-5secs. Hull is a fine, versatile athlete, as he showed by winning the High Jump, in which he cleared 5ft. 3in. and the Weight, with a put of 31ft. 6in. besides qualifying for the final of the Hurdles. The other heat winner in the last-mentioned event was J. S. Custer (Missouri and Worcester). The Rugby three-quarter, N. Field (Wellington and Brasenose), ran with fine judgment in the Half-mile, and finished first by 18 yards in 2mins. 7 3-5secs. The heat winners of the 100 Yards Handicap were K. T. Cox, Trinity (8½yds. start); A. MacNabb, Balliol (10yds); and E. A. Hunter (Christchurch); and G. S. Rivington, Hertford (90yds. start) beat T. R. Harley, Brasenose (82yds.) in the Mile Handicap by three yards in 4mins. 30 3-5secs.

The second stage of the Freshmen's Sports at Oxford yesterday did not provide such noteworthy features as the first, when the young Canadian, L. C. Hull, won three events and qualified for the finals of others. Hull easily secured the 100 yards, winning by three yards, but his time of 10 4-5secs. did not quite fulfil expectations. He was also engaged in the finals of the hurdles and the long jump, in both of which he finished second. In the former he was beaten by N. Field, Wellington and Brasenose, by a little over a yard in 18 4-5secs. and in the latter he covered 19½ft. compared with 20ft. 0½in. by A. W. Armitage, Wakefield and Queen's. The mile furnished an exciting contest, A. E. Cator, Bruton and Keble, finishing slightly in front of N. A. Macdonnell, Queen's College, Kingston, Canada, and Balliol, and J. F. Worsley, Winchester and Magdalen, who ran a dead-heat for second place. Cator's time was 4mins. 46 4-5secs. With respect to the handicap events, the 100 yards resulted in favour of T. Cox, Trinity, off the eight yards mark, in 10 1-5secs. and the quarter-mile fell to G. J. Hannington, Oriel (26 yards), in 50 4-5secs. The brothers C. M. and N. G. Chavasse ran very strongly from scratch, and the former finished third.

THE ROYAL DRAGOONS' CUP TOURNAMENT.

The opening ties in the Royal Dragoons' Cup Polo Tournament were played off on Monday afternoon, the 18th instant, on the Mahomed Bagh Club ground, which was in good playing condition. A large and fashionable gathering was present and followed the play with a great deal of interest.

The first game was of a most interesting description, and although the Royal Dragoons' Subalterns won by six goals to one, the Royal Artillery (Secunderabad) played a good defensive game and made several determined onslaughts, which, however, were not rewarded with success.

The 15th Hussars, who met the Durham Light Infantry in the second contest, showed their superiority at the onset, and had little difficulty in defeating the home team by the respectable margin of five goals to love.

The Durhams, at the close of play, entertained their numerous friends in hospitable fashion.

ROYAL DRAGOONS SUBALTERNS vs. ROYAL ARTILLERY.

First Chukker.—The Royal Artillery hit a goal at the onset, the Royal Dragoons retaliating shortly after. Score: Royal Dragoons, one goal; Royal Artillery, one goal.

Second Chukker.—The Royals scored twice, and pressed their opponents almost throughout. Score: Royal Dragoons, three goals; Royal Artillery, one goal.

Third Chukker.— } No score.
Fourth Chukker.— }

Fifth Chukker.—A goal was signalled for the Royals from a well directed shot by Miles. Score: Royal Dragoons, four goals; Royal Artillery one goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The Royal Dragoons' Subalterns hit two goals, winning a most exciting game by six goals to one goal by the Royal Artillery. Teams:—

DURHAM LIGHT INFANTRY vs. 15TH HUSSARS.

First Chukker.—The 15th Hussars scored a goal towards the close of the chukker. Score: 15th Hussars, one goal; Durhams nil.

Second Chukker—The Hussars attacked almost throughout, and obtained a goal. Score: 15th Hussars, two goals; Durhams, nil.

Third Chukker—No score.

Fourth Chukker.—Another goal was hit by the Hussars.

Fifth Chukker.—The Hussars obtained two goals in quick succession. Score: 15th Hussars, five goals: Durhams, nil.

Sixth Chukker.—No score. The Durhams were attacking at the close. The 15th Hussars won easily by five goals to their opponents' nil. Teams:—

SECOND DAY.

On Wednesday, the 20th instant, two more games were played in the Royal Dragoons' Cup Polo Tournament. The attendance was even larger than on the first day and included the Lieutenant-Governor and Lady and Miss Hewett, who stayed to the close.

The opening game, between the 12th Lancers and the 60th Rifles, furnished a most interesting contest. After the fourth chukker the Lancers got ahead and the issue was never in much doubt, the Lancers eventually winning by three goals to one goal by the 60th Rifles.

The second game was between the Somerset Light Infantry and the 2nd Lancers and it was quite the best yet witnessed in the tournament. Both teams were evenly matched and at the end of play had made four goals a piece. Play was continued with widened goal posts, when the Somersets scored amidst tremendous applause, winning a really great game and one of the most exciting in the history of Lucknow polo by five goals to four by the 2nd Lancers.

12TH LANCERS vs. 60TH RIFLES.

First Chukker.—The Lancers obtained a goal, a penalty was given against the Rifles, hit without result. Score: Lancers one goal; Rifles, nil.

Second Chukker.—No score.

Third Chukker.—No score.

Fourth Chukker.—The play was very slow, but the Rifles enlivened matters towards the close by hitting a goal. Score: Lancers, one goal; Rifles, one goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The Lancers played up, Mr. Badger, with a clear field in front of him, getting in a well directed shot. Score: Lancers, two goals; Rifles, one goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The Lancers attacked almost throughout and with another goal in their favour. The 12th Lancers, defeated the 60th Rifles by three goals to one. Teams:—

Umpires:—Colonel Forbes and Major Luard.

2ND LANCERS vs. SOMERSET LIGHT INFANTRY.

First Chukker.—Although the ball travelled freely, neither side were able to score.

Second Chukker.—Very fast play. The Somersets hit a goal. Score: Somersets, one goal; 2nd Lancers, nil.

Third Chukker.—A foul was given against the Somersets for crossing, and the Lancers scored a goal. The Somersets from the restart immediately attacked and hit a goal amidst applause. Score: Somersets, two goals; Lancers, one goal.

Fourth Chukker.—An eventful period. The Lancers scored twice in succession, and the Somersets scored on the point of time. Score: Somersets, three goals; Lancers, three goals.

Fifth Chukker.—No score.

Sixth Chukker.—Most exciting play was witnessed. First the Lancers scored, then the Somersets drew level, and at the call of time the teams were level, with four goals each. The goal posts were then widened, and the Somersets made the winning goal, thus defeating the 2nd Lancers by five goals to four. Teams:—

Umpires:—Hon'ble D. Bingham and Captain the Hon'ble H. Russell.

THIRD DAY.

Two games in the semi-finals of the tournament were decided on Friday, the 22nd instant, on the Mahomed Bagh ground. There was again a large and appreciative attendance.

In the opening game the Somerset Light Infantry began well and were unfortunate in not scoring in their two runs up the field. The 12th Lancers then controlled the play throughout and won as they liked, outriding their opponents at every point. The play was the most unequal yet witnessed in the tournament and the Lancers won very easily by 11 goals to 2 goals by the Somerset Light Infantry. Half way through one of the Somersets got a nasty hit with the polo stick, the blood streaming from his face, but he played on most pluckily.

The Royal Dragoons' Subalterns then met the 15th Hussars and after a most stubborn and gallant defence were defeated by 6 goals to 1, thus going out of the tournament. Most of the Royals' regular team are away just now including that famous player, Colonel DeLisle, who was recently a guest of the Kaiser at the German manœuvres.

12TH LANCERS vs. SOMERSET LIGHT INFANTRY.

First Chukker.—After two unsuccessful efforts by the Somersets the Lancers made a goal. Score: Lancers, 1 goal; Somersets nil.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers made two goals, and were attacking throughout. Score: Lancers, 3 goals; Somersets, nil.

Third Chukker.—Three more goals were signalled for the Lancers. The Somersets also obtained a goal. Score: Lancers, 6 goals; Somersets, 1 goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Several penalty shots were given against the Somersets, one of them resulting in a goal for the Lancers who subsequently got in another. Score: Lancers, 8 goals; Somersets, 1 goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The Lancers hit two goals. Score: Lancers, 10 goals; Somersets, 1 goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The Lancers made a goal, and the Somersets then scored from a well timed shot. The 12th Lancers defeated the Somerset Light Infantry by 11 goals to 2. Teams:—

Umpires:—Captain Hon'ble H. Russell and the Hon'ble D. Bingham.

ROYAL DRAGOONS' SUBALTERNS vs. 15TH HUSSARS.

First Chukker.—The Royals got in two shots at goal, both going wide. No score.

Second Chukker.—The Royals hit a goal from a penalty against the Hussars, amidst sustained applause. The Hussars scored on the point of time. Score: Royals, 1 goal; Hussars, 1 goal.

Third Chukker.—The Hussars got in two goals after a stubborn defence in front of the Royals' flags. Score: Royals, 1 goal; Hussars, 3 goals.

Fourth Chukker.—The Hussars hit a goal. Score: Royals, 1 goal; Hussars, 4 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—The Hussars scored two goals. Score: Royals, 1 goal; Hussars, 6 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—No Score. The 15th Hussars won by 6 goals to 1 goal by the Royal Dragoons' Subalterns. Teams:—

BALLYGUNGE C.C. vs. RANGERS.—Ballygunge could only put a very scratch team into the field against the Rangers on Saturday last, with the result that they received a severe drubbing by four wickets and 91 runs. Even with the team they had out, they should have been good for more than the 57 runs the innings realised; as it was, Gould, Sherman, and "Extras" accounted between them for 43 out of the total.

For the Rangers, Warden, Templeton and Hodges, all scored freely, though with some luck, the weak Ballygunge bowling being rather unmercifully treated.

CALCUTTA C.C. MARRIED vs. SINGLE.—With so many players now available this in-club match was arranged to give more members a chance of a game; it resulted, somewhat contrary to expectation in a fairly easy victory for the married men, the first innings, thanks almost entirely to the fine all-round cricket of Beachcroft, who took eight wickets for 49 runs, and followed it up by scoring a vigorous and well hit 64. Nealor also showed most promising form, on his first appearance in the Eden Gardens and Gordon hit hard. For the losers Quin and Turnbull made a good start, and Hornecastle batted freely and well in both innings, while Reid also made a successful first appearance. Ernsthausen once more bowled well with very indifferent luck. Scores :—

BALLYGUNGE vs. NATTORE'S XI.—After getting Nattore's strong batting side out for 124 runs in the first innings, Ballygunge should certainly have won this match last Sunday, but in the end they suffered defeat by 18 runs after quite an interesting game. Razak and Parsottom opened for the visitors, but their cricket was tedious in the extreme, the first 18 overs only realising 12 runs. Three wickets were down for 14 runs, but Baloo and Iman Hossain improved matters somewhat by putting on 31 for the fourth, and the latter and Sivram 25 for the fifth wicket; the end, however, soon came, the last falling with the score at 124. Both Gould and Abbott bowled extremely well, the former being credited with 6 wickets in 20 overs for 40 runs and the latter with 2 for 41 in 19 overs. Ballygunge started most disastrously, White being clean bowled by Baloo's first ball, and from this bad beginning they never recovered. Eddis made some beautiful hits through the slips, and looked like making a score, but it was not to be, Banda bowling him when his total was 26. Of the others, Shallow alone did anything, his 36 being a really excellent knock; in the end, however, he failed to get hold of one from Banda, and skied it to Razak in the slips who made no mistake about the catch. When he and Abbott were in together, it began to look as if Ballygunge might, after all, pull the match out of the fire, but at 94 the latter returned one to the bowler and had to retire, the wicket having put on 27.

With the last man in, Shallow hit out merrily, but somewhat recklessly, in a desperate attempt to save the game, but in vain the end coming with his dismissal when the score was 106. Both Baloo and Banda bowled very well, the former getting six for 59 and the latter four for 33. Score :—

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

LEICESTER REGIMENT vs. BISHOP'S HIGH SCHOOL.—A large crowd witnessed the final match played at Poona on the 18th instant. It was an exciting game throughout: the High School opened the scoring a few minutes after the start, but it was not long before the Leicesters equalised and scoring another led at the interval by two goals to one. On changing ends the boys drew level and play was fast and interesting: the Leicesters scored again just before time and won the game by three goals to two. Mrs. Richardson presented the Cup to the winners, and Brigadier-General Swan complimented both teams on the fine game they had put up.

KENNEL NOTES.

"THE poor dog, in life the firmest friend,
The first to welcome, foremost to defend,
Whose honest heart is still his master's own,
Who labours, fights, lives, breathes for him alone."

—Byron.

GENERAL NOTES.

Bull Dog Barks.—The British Bull Dog Club have presented a special to the Calcutta Kennel Club for competition among its members at the coming show in the shape of a handsome silver serviette ring. There are a number of good bull dogs in our midst, so the competition should be keen. A bull dog has recently been sent to Juneau, Alaska, from England. This must be a farthest north record for the breed.

Bull-terrier Tattle.—This breed is also being fostered by a Home Club and a presentation silver spoon has been presented to the Calcutta Kennel Club by the British Bull-terrier Club.

Chow Chow Chop Chop.—It is a matter of curiosity that so few Chows are entered at the local shows. Last year only five were forthcoming and at the previous year's show at Tollygunge only four. As a show animal, none are less bother to get into good condition, their coat comes naturally at the commencement of the cold weather.

Also as regards type there is no great diversity amongst them—the prize probably going to the dog with the heaviest ruff, i.e., hair round neck, and the best carried tail, i.e., well over back. Now then forward the yellow or black peril.

Whippet Wheezes.—The brace mentioned last week's Sporting Life and Ladies' Mail, have arrived all right by the S.S. Malakand and in very fair condition. The Brocklebank Line is certainly the best for dogs for Calcutta, every care is taken of canine passengers and the boats make quick runs. We notice some pups of this breed have been advertised lately in a daily paper. Should the owner not find purchasers we advise him to give our columns a trial—and put his animals before the notice of all the leading dog owners.

Diehard Dottings.—Any one in want of a good brood bitch is not likely to get a better one out here than Charnock Lassie, who may be seen at No. 1, Hare Street. She was imported from Major Richardson's famous kennels, is one of the best blood, and was a prominent prize winner at the last C.K.C. Show. Her produce may also be seen at the same address.

Irish-terrier Items.—Amongst the beauties that arrived by the S.S. City of Paris were two very smart Irish-terriers for a tea planter in Cachar. These are from the kennels of Mr. R. S. Knox, of Belfast.

Fox-terrier Facts.—America has for a long time been buying the best money could obtain of all breeds in England. And the day had to come when animals produced in the States, would "lick creation." Now Sabine Roller has been purchased and imported to England by that eminent fox-terrier breeder and judge Mr. George Raper.

He had a successful career in America, and in addition to many first prizes he won championship honours at Philadelphia.

Two weeks after his release from quarantine he made his debut at the Skipton Show and won three firsts and specials.

But it is principally for stud that he has been brought over as his dam was by champion Blizzard, many champions having been bred thus.

Airedale Amenities.—Mr. A. S. Manasseh has imported a good specimen of this sporting breed.

NOTES FOR NOVICES.

Show Condition.—It is quite time that dogs to be exhibited on the 27th December be taken in hand for a regular course of training.

First the coat, as this must get the judge's attention and a good animal will be quickly put aside should it not be shown in as good bloom as its competitors. If eczema is present dress the dog with: olive oil, 1 pint; oil of tar, 2 oz.; sulphur, 4oz. and give twice a day after food a desert spoonful: Epsom Salts 1oz; liquor arsenicalis, 1 dr.; tincture of ginger, 2 drs.; water to 6oz. Should the coat be merely rough and dull—first give the dog a good dose of vermifuge such as half a betelnut for an ordinary terrier. Your bearer will prepare this. Native name supari, a fresh nut well powdered, mix with plenty of butter and the dog will probably lick the mixture up. Keep the dog without food for at least 24 to 30 hours before giving the dose; follow an hour afterwards with at least a table spoonful of castor oil. It will also be as well if the animal has been suffering from constipation to give some oil before hand. Or by Naldires worm powders—most excellent stuff After this dosing and the dog has been thoroughly purged give lean raw meat finely minced; this is "one of the finest tonics for a dog at all poor or run down."

A course of Benbow's dog mixture will also assist in getting the requisite gloss on the coat. It is a mistake to wash dogs too often, a rub down with a duster rung out in phenyle and water, warm this weather, and then a thorough drying will be sufficient to keep vermin away—then give a good brushing with a dandy brush and after a final polish with a flesh glove. Here is a valuable tip—after cooking the food and it has cooled skim off the fat from the surface of the soup—this fatty matter is one of the most fruitful sources of skin diseases.

Exercise.—To bring up the muscles, brisk exercise is all important. Just sending out by the sweeper unless it is certain the dog is taken a distance does not come under this head. A few minutes in the compound chasing a tennis ball is effective—but the best of all is following a bicycle ridden slowly.

Dogs quickly learn to "heel up" and keep close behind the back wheel and so out of the way of passing traffic. This road work also knuckles up the feet, improving the animal's action.

This might be done in the morning and in the afternoon make the dog boy walk the dog down to the office. Thus assuring yourself exercise is being given. Greyhound's training for coursing are taken at least ten miles a day.

Training.—A dog without obedient habits is a poor companion, but a very little trouble suffices to teach them. Have some cheese, old not objected to, by you and then call the dog by name and say "come here" if he is quite new to it, put a long cord to his collar and after calling him—give a tug—call again and gradually draw in the slack and give him a piece of cheese. Two or three times of this and he will come readily 'Trust and paid for" is another good exercise also "come and lie down" "come to heel" or "heel up" with a piece of cheese in the hand, held up, attract the dog's attention, making him stand as alert as possible, a little training before hand will greatly increase his chances when he goes into the ring for judging.

MR. CASTLE ON THE FOX TERRIER.

MR. SIDNEY CASTLE'S recently published Monograph on the Fox Terrier is distinctly disappointing. The author is not an accomplished literateur, and skilful penmanship was hardly to be expected, but he has been playing at the game for about a quarter of a century, and as breeder and judge must have acquired within this period considerable knowledge and experience. The fox terrier is so eminently popular a breed that the subject of its origin, the history of its subsequent rise to fame, the various lines of blood from which the modern show terrier has descended, the principles of breeding, ending with some remarks on the prominent breeders and the super-excellent specimens of the day, have been exhaustively treated by many writers. Still the fact remains that lovers of the breed are never tired of discoursing on its merits, they are always ready to promise something new or even a twice or thrice told tale provided there is some charm in the telling, and in any case there is always the opportunity of bringing the record up to date. If Mr. Castle had begun where others had left off, and enlarged solely on his own experiences and reminiscences, his work might have been wholly interesting. It is not an ambitious work, it is not intended to be a publication for reference, and as a pamphlet to while away an idle hour it might have been presented in a much more attractive guise. In the earlier chapters we find the author sub divisa umbra fatentes and are content to skim, we have heard it all before from writers with far greater gifts of exposition. On the subject of "past breeders," the kindly allusion, to Mr. Fred Burbidge are altogether pleasing, no one worked with more zeal for the fox terrier than the Squire of Micklefield, no one bore a truer ideal in the mind's eye or strove more earnestly to attain it, and but for his premature and much lamented death he might possibly have arrived at his ambition to breed the best fox terrier of all time. The chapter on "present breeders" is less successful, the author is far too enthusiastic on the merits of the old day terriers, we also are old enough to have seen Belgrave Joe, and Dorcas, and Result, and Vesuvienne in the flesh and have no hesitation in saying they would have no chance in the show ring with dogs like Captain Double or bitches such as Donna Fortuna or The Sylph. The few good terriers of the past stood out so conspicuously from their fellows that people are apt to forget the extraordinary number of high class terriers of the present day and the difficulty in producing a specimen head and shoulders above the rest. When Shows first started, it can be readily imagined that progress should have been rapid and that a lucky hit in breeding should have resulted in a pronounced stride ahead of the raw material of those days. It is an entirely different thing to breed a terrier of decided pre-eminence over the very perfect animals of the present time, but that the past would beat the present we are not at all prepared to admit. Nor is it possible to agree with all the remarks on the wire-haired variety. There is some force in the contention that in wires the breeder has not only all the troubles of shape and make but of coat as well. A really first class wire jacket, which is at the same time straight and hard, is doubtless difficult to breed, but an indifferent coat sometimes hides a multitude of sins. The wire-terrier, as a show dog started later than the smooth and was admittedly behind-hand in form for many years, but at the present time there is not much to choose between them. And the wires also have their pillars of the stud book. If they are less known, it is because no one has taken the same trouble to trace them as in the case of the smooths variety or to group them by families If they, in old days, were coloured terriers, the old black, or grizzle, and tans, no shame to them, on the contrary the descent would be from the very best; and it is common knowledge that the smooths were also derive dfrom coloured terriers. The sire of Old Trap himself is said to have been a black and tan. But here and there, throughout the work, particularly in the later chapters, the tyro will be able to glean some tips which will be useful to him. The author is not a Burbidge, a Redmond, or a Doyle, he knows a good terrier when he sees one, but that is another affair from the faculties necessary to make a successful breeder. As an exhibitor and judge he is more qualified to speak, and under these headings his remarks may be read with interest. His selections of the terriers for illustrating the work are not altogether fortunate.

MHOW HORSE SHOW.

19th and 20th November 1907.

THE Mhow Horse Show was held on the above dates and Major Smythe of the Carabiniers, who has revived this function, is to be congratulated on its success. There was a large attendance on both days, the entries were fair and the judging gave general satisfaction. Mrs. Daly presented the prizes and the judges were:—Major C. Prescott-Decie, R.H.A., Colonel H. P. Leader, Major Kirby, Captain W. F. Watson, Colonel Earle and Major H. Askwith. Appended are the awards:—

Private Chargers.—1, Colonel Sahibzada Obeidulla Khan's b a g Shahin; 2, H. H. the Maharaja of Bundelkhand's b w m Princess; 3, Mr. A. E. Lloyd's b w g Jim.

Hired Chargers, Artillery and Cavalry.—1, Major S. R. Kirby's b w g r Tehene; 2, Major Wheatley's c w g Jim; Mr. Master's b w m Susette.

Infantry Chargers.—1, Colonel Mitchell's br w g Marquis; 2, Mr. W. Appleyard's b a g Mikado.

Pony Hacks.—1, Colonel Leader's b w m Flight; 2, Captain Swifte's c e m Folly; 3, Major Askwith's b w g Bristol; 4, Major Homes' b w g Boomerang.

Cobs.—1, Colonel Williamson's Queenie; 2, Colonel Scott's br s a g Belmont.

Best Trained Remount.—1, Private Meacher's b cb g D99; 2, Mandeville's bk w Beauty; 3, Charlton's g ch'g Acha.

Best Pair Royal Artillery.—1 Driver Peckham; 2, Driver Plant; 3, Driver Reeves; 4, Driver Smith.

Heavy-weight Hunters (over 12 stone).—1, Major Decie's b w g Royal Oak; 2, Major Askwith's b w g Jhansi; 3, H. H. the Raja Saheb of Dhar's d w g Bonzo.

Light-weight Hunters (under 12 stone.)—1, Major Decie's Elastic; 2, M. Master's b w m Susettee.

Best Turn-out driven by a Lady.—Captain Swifte's Turnout.

Ponies Jumping.—Mr. Compton's g w g Artist; 2, Mr. Mellard's b w g Jack, Best Turned-out Mounted Man, British Cavalry.—Lance-Corporal Davies' c w m A 13, first prize, Rs. 50; Private Monson, second prize, Rs. 25; Private Jaggard, third prize, Rs. 20.

Best Turned-out Mounted Man, Royal Artillery.—Gunner Mayne, first prize, Rs. 50; Gunner Wickens, second prize, Rs. 30; Gunner Collick, third prize, Rs. 20.

Best Four-in-Hand Team.—The Carabiniers' Team of Browns 1; The Officers R.H.A., Black Team, 2.

Best Arab in the Show (not to be shown under saddle).—Colonel Obeidulla Khan's Silver Prince, 1; H. H. the Raja of Rutlam's a g Ibrahim, 2; Mr. Gwatkin's c a p Spur Fowl, 3; Colonel Obeidulla Khan's g a g Signet, 4; Colonel Obeidulla Khan's c a h Sakuli, 5.

The Naturalist.

THE DOMESTICATION OF WILD DUCKS

AT an altitude of 1,291 feet above the sea level, and about fifty miles from Buffalo, as the birds fly, lies Lake Chautauqua, the largest of the inland waters of Western New York. It is a beautiful sheet of clear, dark-green water, of about eighteen miles in length, which, even in mid-summer, hardly ever has a temperature above 62° F., on account of its high elevation, and has, therefore, become a favourite summer resort for hundreds of people, who flock there to recruit health and strength. The basin of Lake Chautauqua is a deep trough excavated out of the rocks of the Chemung group, and well filled by the drainage of two low ranges of hills running at a short distance parallel to its shores. When these were covered with deep forests the rainfall was naturally more abundant and the level of the lake could then hardly have suffered any lowering, as its evaporation on account of its high altitude, is even now not excessive. But with the disappearance of the wilderness and the gradual deepening of its only outlet, the Conewango Creek, changes have been wrought within our recent periods, which are inferred from the lacrustine deposits near the shores of the lake, and attest that its level was once twenty or thirty feet higher.

We are informed by old settlers, that twenty-five years ago deep forests of beech, poplar and chestnut covered every foot of that part of Chautauqua county, where there are now only scattered patches of second growth timber, more or less separated by intervening clearings. Their disappearance has in turn naturally produced many changes in the avifauna of the lake, and many species of birds, which used to breed there have now deserted their ancient haunts for less disturbed retreats.

It is by kindness of one of these old residents, Mr. Geo. Irwin, an accurate observer of nature, living near Mayville, that I have obtained some information respecting the state of affairs before these changes happened, along with a brief summary of a series of systematic efforts, which were made by him for over thirty years, to domestic several species of wild ducks which seemed to suit best for this purpose on account of their tendency to become easily tamed.

It is from this source, supplemented by frequent personal investigation of his ingeniously devised artificial breeding grounds, that I am enabled to add a few notes of interest concerning the domestication of some of our wild waterfowl, and their habits under confinement.

Nearly all of the species of wild ducks which now occur about the shores of Lake Erie once frequented Lake Chautauqua before they were harrassed or driven away. Among them, as the most conspicuous, Mr. Irwin enumerates the mallard, dusky-duck, shoveller, red-head, blue-bill, widgeon, pin-tail, buffle-head, ring-necked duck, blue-winged and green-winged teal, ruddy-duck, gadwell, golden eye, scoter, old wife and canvasback. Their ranks were sometimes swelled by the occasional occurrence of the cormorant, Canada goose, white-fronted goose, snow goose and American swan. All of the above species comprised at that time, as now, the ordinary visitors, with the exception of the gadwell and canvasback, both of which have always been rare on the inland waters of Western New York. The thick fringes of weeds and tall reeds along the shores of Lake Chautauqua are also still the favourite hunts of the eared and pied-bil grebes, along with some scattered specimens of the muduck (Fulica americana), which like these two divers, breeds here. The great abundances of various species of fish, principally perch and sunfish, attract moreover each spring and autumn, the goossander and hooded and common mergansers, which last species bred here once in great abundance.

For the purpose of trying the final domestication of as many of the above species as could be conveniently obtained, a small lot of about an acre in extent and situated on the very edge of the lake itself, was at an early time selected for this purpose. The heavy weeds within that inclosure afforded secure shelter for the naturally shy and wild birds to hide in and enabled them to avoid detection on part of their many enemies, such as hawks, owls, minks, etc., while a large amount of natural food supply was thus also incidentally provided for from the tender shoots and roots of that spontaneous vegetation which formed the favourite diet of the wood-duck. A few crude and low wooden sheds, erected in various suitable places within the grounds, were designed for convenient shelter and served here and there for nesting purposes. These necessary preparations completed, the establishment was at last in readiness for the reception of its inmates, the first batch of which was obtained from young ducklings caught alive, or by means of eggs from the nests of the wild birds. From time to time old birds were added to this stock whenever they could be captured alive after having been winged in shooting them.

The species thus confined were chiefly the mallard, dusky-duck, wood-duck, and blue-winged teal, since they breed here and could be easily obtained. Occasional experiments were likewise made with the pintail and American swan, both of which freely bred and raised their young in the inclosure, although they were never fully domesticated, nor even transferred from the breeding pen to the barnyard. They remained virtually as wild all along as if they never had been subjected to captivity in order to finally transform them into fully tamed birds. They lived, bred and raised their young here without having any more restraints put upon them than were necessary for safe keeping. It was observed in case of the dusky-duck and mallard, which proved the most tractable for domestication, by which I mean a complete metamorphosis into tamed barnyard fowl, that they resisted all efforts to this purpose if transferred to the pen when over a year old, while the reverse happened when they were captured young and raised from eggs. The majority of them seemed to feel as much at home here as in any nesting ground of their own choice, and generally returned whenever they were permitted to migrate in autumn. They would breed the same as in the year previous, while others again only called for a few days, after which they left for localities unknown. In either case the females were accompanied by males, with which they mated while abroad, and these transient guests after migrating generally returned in late fall for a few days before their final southward migration.

This indicates that our migratory ducks not only remain with us in spring, but also call in autumn on their way back to their chosen haunts in order to rest themselves. Of the several species within the grounds, which proved least refractory, and were therefore finally transferred to the barnyard, none adapted themselves thoroughly to this state excepting the mallard, dusky-duck and Canada goose, the progeny of which prospered well and attained a greater weight and size than the ordinary domesticated stock.

Some of them are still living and betray in many instances a tendency to revert, in point of plumage, to their original condition, while the majority have become completely metamorphossed into ordinary barnyard fowl. No hybrids from any two different wild species, which bred only within the inclosure, were ever obtained, excepting from crosses between the mallard and dusky-duck.

I was unable to learn what became of them; whether they were ever permitted to migrate or whether they were incorporated finally into the ranks of the farm-yard stock. Whether such hybrids, if propogating their kind, transmit their peculiarities to the next brood, or otherwise, are interesting problems, as we could account for specific variations to arise as well in a perfectly natural condition, from which the birds here were hardly emancipated. A number of carefully conducted experiments with such hybrids would, however, be necessary to arrive at definite conclusions in order to demonstrate the origination of a permanent new species by voluntary interbreeding.

The food of all ducks under confinement was invariably such as they are addicted to in their wild state, and consisted of various grains, with a mixture of acorns and the shoots and roots of aquatic plants for the wood-ducks. This species, though freely breeding in confinement, resisted all efforts for final domestication, and never failed to manifest great alarm whenever any person besides their keeper, whom they quickly learned to know, happened to intrude upon their seclusion. They would then quickly skulk and try to hide themselves in the tall weeds, which were growing in rank luxuriance, for better protection and retirement. Suitable nesting places were ingeniously arranged for them by means of hollow stumps of trees with inclined boards toward the ground in order to afford the pinioned birds an easy mode of access to their breeding holes. It was in these that they made their nests, in the same fashion as wild birds, and raised here for many years successfully their young broods. In order to obtain additional information concerning the habits of the wood-duck and the manner in which their young reach the ground from their aerial nests, I made some special inquiries of Mr. Irwin which were kindly responded to by that gentleman. As they embody his original observations upon the habits of the wood-duck in his vicinity, I quote the chief portion of his last note.

Mr. Irwin states, that the wood-ducks generally commence here to nest about the middle of April, and always choose trees with suitable holes or hollows, in which to build their nests, preferring for this purpose rather high elevations. They deposit from nine to fourteen eggs, of a yellowish-white colour, and their incubation lasts four weeks. The young birds, after being hatched, remain in the nests only about twenty-four hours, and their toe-nails are then almost hooked like those of the birds of prey, and sharp as a needle at the point. When they are ready to descend from their nests, whether low or high, the old bird comes to the mouth of the hole, and takes for about a half hour a careful survey of the surroundings, to ascertain, as it were, that no intruder is near, and next utters a low call. The ducklings seem to understand its significance and now quickly make their appearance in front of the hole, which often extends to a depth of from six to ten feet. By means of their sharp toe-nails they easily manage to climb up on the side of the deep holes, at the entrance of which they remain a few minutes huddled together about the old bird. These preliminaries completed, the mother again descends to the ground near the tree, and calls upon her young brood, which now drop, one by one, from their airy perch, without any apparent hesitation whatever. Their bodies are already so thickly covered with down, that they seem to fall, as Mr. Irwin says, like a leaf to the ground. When the last duckling has accomplished this feat, they all gather again about the old bird, who now takes the lead and guides them to the nearest water, which they reach in a few minutes. The nest of the wood-duck is rarely more than fifteen or seventeen rods away from it, and the young brood quickly hides under the shelter of any nearby cover for protection against their winged and four-footed enemies. In the course of a week or more they exchange this first retreat for one affording security and prefer generally the shallow weed-covered ponds and edges of creeks and lakes. Their food for the first two or three weeks consists largely of the aquatic larvæ of insects or their developed imagoes, and this diet is shortly after abandoned in favour of the young and tender shoots of water weeds. When fully grown they feed in autumn upon beech nuts, acorns, etc., which they digest readily. The old birds mate here already about the first part of March, and commence to breed in captivity when they are one year old. During the earlier part of that period, until the female commences to hatch they manifest many peculiarities by odd motions and curious calls, in which they do not indulge at any other time. It is then a common occurrence to see the drake swimming about restlessly in open water followed by the female, uttering all along a cackling noise resembling that of a turkey-cock when strutting about the barnyard. The neck of the male is then stretched at its fullest length and the crest of his head is well raised, while his wings make a grating noise, which can be heard distinctly for several rods. All of these connubial antics can, however, only be satisfactorily observed, when the birds are without any suspicion of being watched. When domesticated no change of these habits is noticed.

Thus far Mr. Irwin details his own observations taken in the woods and in his breeding pen, and unbiased by any coloring from accounts of any other writers. His experience in regard to the wood-duck in particular is of value since he succeeded to raise successive broods of that species for many years, amounting frequently to thirty or more full-fledged young in one season.

All of the various ducks he experimented with migrated southward, if not maimed, each autumn, and returned infallibly with a male mate, which remained until the female commenced to hatch, after which he departed for parts unknown, never to return. The crosses obtained with tame birds retained more or less their original plumage, but excelled them in point of size and proclivity.

It is to be regretted that the completion of a branch railroad from the main trunk of the Cross-Cut Railroad invaded this secluded spot and ended these experiments, which had been conducted so successfully for such a great length of time. They indicate, in this instance, that the majority of our wild ducks are not prone to change easily their former wild condition for that of perfected domestication, but also that they manifest no aversion to breed freely, even when they are placed under artificial restraints. The birds here generally returned to their haunts each successive spring in preference to any other; and moreover in the case of the females, induced a mate to come along with them. It is also evident that the dusky-duck is fully as domesticable as the mallard, which has been thus far generally supposed to be the originator of our common tamed ducks. This species readily crossed with the wild mallard and produced hybirds without any need of resorting to special inducements to accomplish this result.

STRAY NOTES.

THE most interesting thing about the giraffe is the okapi. The remark sounds absurd, but it is true. The okapi is the new animal from the Congo forest of Central Africa, discovered in 1901 by Sir Harry Johnston. It is as big as a very large stag, has a neck like a deer, and is striped on the haunches and legs, not spotted as is the giraffe. Yet its teeth and its horns prove it to be a close ally, not of deer, but of the giraffe. Any points of agreement between giraffes and the okapi are, therefore, important. I have examined the baby giraffe at the Zoo, and find that she has stripe-like bands of hair on the face and on other parts of the head. Both her father and mother are from Kordofan, and have some six or seven strongly marked bands of dark hair over the eyes and on the muzzle. It is important to note any colour-striping in the giraffe's skin, since the giraffe's colour-markings are mostly in the form of great spots, whilst the okapi is only marked by stripes or bands something like those of a zebra, but confined to the haunches and the legs, the rest of the body being dark brown. The tendency to develop colour stripes in the giraffe is important, since it shows us that the stripes do not separate the okapi absolutely from the camelopard; they are a common possession or possibility of the two animals. It was the examination by me last year of a half-brother of the little giraffe now alive at the gardens which led to the discovery of striping on the head and face of giraffes. The mother in that case had died before the birth of her young one, and the dead calf was given to me by the secretary of the Zoological Society. Sixty-seven years ago Sir Richard (then Professor) Owen received a new-born giraffe from the gardens, and reported on it to the Zoological Society. No one had examined one since that date; none were obtainable from the Zoo and none could be got from African travellers and sportsmen, in spite of urgent requests. A great peculiarity of the young giraffe is that it is born with a pair of well-grown horns, nearly an inch long, and covered with coarse black hair. No other horn-bearing mammal—no antelope, buffalo, ox, sheep, goat, stag, or other deer—is born with horns, so far as we know, and we know a good many of these animals well. Before birth the young giraffe's horns are flat from back to front, and quite soft and flexible. They can be pressed backwards, so as to be made to lie flat on the head. Directly after birth a hard bony deposit commences inside the horn, and after some years' growth it becomes firmly fused to the skull. But the hard bony core never breaks through the hairy skin which covers it. The bony core of the okapi's pair of horns, on the contrary, does "cut" or break through the skin, exposing a sharp, hard point, a quarter of an inch in length. In the deer tribe, as everyone knows, the point of the bony horn-core spreads out as a large, branching growth from which all covering is shed, and forms the "antler." The deer tribe shed the antlers every year and grow a new and larger pair to take the place of the old ones. Moreover, in them the horn-core itself is a stem-like upgrowth of the bone of the skull (of the frontal bone). In the okapi and the giraffe the horn-core is a separate bone, free at first and fusing with the skull only when the adult condition is reached. The little antlers or bare-points of the okapi's horn-cones or cores seem to be shed in segments as growth goes on, and are only minute things compared with the true antlers of stags. The giraffe's horns always remain covered by skin and hair and have a broad, rounded top, not a sharp point. The real clinching feature in the okapi and giraffe which decides at once their close affinity to one another is found in the outer tooth on each side of the group of eight teeth placed in the front of the lower jaw. In both this particular tooth has a broad, chisel like crown, divided into two portions by a deep vertical slit. None of the other ungulate or hoofed animals have this very curious shape of tooth. It is a sort of family "mark" or "feature" in okapis and giraffes, as may be seen in specimens shown in the gallery of the Natural History Museum, where we have now no less than three fine, well-stuffed okapis and several varieties of giraffe.

THE sea-serpent had not been reported this year as putting in an appearance until the Cornish "manifestation" was reported. One of the last accounts of a strange marine monster, declared by some to be, of course, the sea-serpent, seen but to disappear, was that given by Lord Crawford's companions last year. In that case, and in others in which a huge fin-like structure, supported by fin-rays, has been seen projecting from the mysterious animal, it is not improbable that what was seen was a large seal of the "eared" kind, raising one of its long, webbed hind-feet from the water, a trick which some of them are known to have. Other reputed sea-serpents have been in reality, a school of porpoises, or a line-like flight of sea birds, or a mass of seaweed, or a whale in association with one or other of these—or, again, a real marine snake 5 feet long (such are well known and very poisonous), or a ribbon-fish 12 feet long. There is "no reason why there should not be" a huge and seldom seen kind of animal living in the sea—like a serpent in appearance, or really like any other aquatic animal. No one can say, as the result of observation, that there is not, since no one has thoroughly explored the dark, unfathomed depths of ocean. Yet we gain very little when we have admitted our ignorance, and agreed that there is no reason why something should not be. The real question is, Does the thing in question exist, not could it possibly exist? Does the great sea-serpent exist? The answer to that is, There is not much evidence to show that it does. Most persons who have looked into the matter would be willing to bet 100,000 to 1 against its being captured, dead or alive, and brought before the Royal Society within ten years' time. Unless it be so captured and "tabled" it matters very little whether it exist or not. It must be "discovered" in order to become really interesting.

THE "mouse deer" is the chevrotain, one of the smallest of hoofed animals. It stands less than 12 inches in height at the shoulder. The prevailing colour of the fur is brown, finely speckled with yellow. The spots are large, and sometimes run into each other and form stripes. The under parts of the body are white. It possesses the peculiar habit of walking on the tips of its hoofs. This lends a stiffness to the legs, which has gained for the chevrotain the reputation of having no knee joints. It has no horns or antlers; but, as in the case of the musk deer, the male is provided with large canine teeth or tusks in the upper jaw. It is of exceedingly timid disposition, and lies hidden in the jungle throughout the day, and only ventures to feed in the early morning and after dusk in the evening. In captivity this tiny native of India is gentle, quite tame, but always shy.

From the East-end comes a sad story of a pawnbroker. He was enjoying a beauty sleep, when a furious knocking at the street door brought him to the window with a jerk.

"What's the matter?" he shouted.

"Come down," demanded the knocker.

"But——"

"Come down!"

The man of many nephews hastened downstairs, and peeped round the door.

"Now, sir?" he demanded.

"I wan'sh know the time," said the reveller.

"Do you mean to say you knocked me up for that? How dare you!"

The midnight visitor looked injured. "Well, you've got my watch," he said.

The Story Teller.

THE WOMAN WITH THE GREEN EYES.

BY A. G. HALES.

WANDERING one evening in the famous old city of Ghent, my feet strayed into a bodega where men sat drinking and smoking, killing the idle hours with careless words, as men will who have thrown a hard day's work behind them.

Tiring of the drowsy hum of voices, I rose and rambled round amidst the big wooden casks, to look my fill upon the half-faded pictures painted upon the walls by the artists of a dead-and-gone generation. Some were so faded and worn by time that I could scarcely make out the artists' meaning. But there was on that still retained its rich colouring, and I stood long in front of it, for the picture told a story.

The central figure was that of a woman, with a nut-brown skin, a rich red mouth, a wealth of brown curly hair, cut short like a boy's, yet clustering so thickly round her shapely head that one curl ran into its neighbours, making a perfect tangle of beauty. It was a strangely fascinating face, strong, beautiful, cruel, yet full of warmth. All the features were good, but it was the eyes that held me; the artist had painted them so that even after the lapse of centuries they looked alive. They seemed to sparkle in their canvas setting, and as I turned from point to point they followed me. He must have been a magician with the brush, that unknown artist, for his work was wonderful. The strangest thing about those eyes was the colour. They were green, deep green, like two emeralds set in a brown mask. They dominated everything else. I tried to turn away, to interest myself in the living pictures around me, but the green eyes drew me back again and again.

I became aware at last that a hush had fallen upon the bodega. I could see all the folk peering at me intently through the haze of tobacco smoke, and I wondered why they should cease their pleasant talk to interest themselves in a stranger. There was nothing at all offensive in their manner.

Often have I in my wanderings found the dwellers in strange cities rude or hourish. They simply watched me, and I felt that the atmosphere was electric.

At last an old man, sitting by one of the little tables not far from where I stood, rose, pipe in hand, and motioning toward the picture, said with a smile, "That picture fascinates you, sir."

"Yes," I replied. "Those eyes will haunt me for a long time. Has the canvas a history, or is it merely the whim of a wayward fancy—an artist's ideal?"

With old-world courtesy the man of Ghent beckoned me to a seat beside him, and after filling a glass for me from his own flagon, and pushing his tobacco jar towards me so that I might fill my pipe, he asked if I would care to hear the history of the picture on the wall?

Filling my pipe, I sat back to listen.

"We call her 'the woman with the green eyes.' You noticed how every one in the bodega watched you as you turned again, and yet again, to the painting. We all knew it was the green eyes that drew you. That picture has been seen by many, and it has the same effect upon all, old or young, who gaze upon it for the first time. It was painted by an Italian named Basa, a younger brother of a man she lured to a dishonourable death here in Ghent. It was long ago, yet the eyes have never lost their brilliance. I am a very old man; it is sixty years since I first saw the picture, and it was centuries old then, yet the eyes are as bright now as when I first looked at them—as bright and as hateful. But perhaps I weary you? A quiet smoke and a peaceful glass may fit your humour better than an old man's chatter."

I laughed quietly, and asked him to proceed with the story. Then, sipping the yellow wine that had somehow the mingled flavour of the grape and apricot, I heard the tale of the woman with the green eyes, and I know now that most, if not all of it, was true.

Her real name was Beagica de Vaast, and in her veins ran a mingled current of Dutch and Spanish blood. Rumour said that her father was a King of Spain, her mother a Dutch drab. She herself was a demon in petticoats. Her lips, always parted in a half-smile, were moist and red, with the rich redness of the pomegranate before the bud breaks into full bloom. Her curl-crowned head was a sight to fill the eyes of princes; but her eyes of richest green were always cold and cruel. The laughter on her lips never warmed those eyes, and no shade of pity or remorse ever softened them.

She lived at the time the Netherlands were attempting to cast off the yoke of Spain, and made herself a tool for all who dealt in treachery, providing they had gold with which to pay her for her work. Her one great quality was courage. No man of her time could look death in the face with less fear than this dainty creature, with the slender tapering hands and wasp-like waist.

She even dared to defy the awful powers of the officers of the Inquisition. Vainly the cowled priests, in whose presence warriors proved on many a field quaked with dread, tried to affright her. She looked back at them all with those wonderful green eyes of hers, and laughed. They talked of fire and faggot. She never quailed.

They threatened her with the rack and with the axe. She never lowered her eyes, for fear had no place in her being. They talked of eternal torments beyond the grave, and she sneered at them, bidding them to keep such tales for their dupes.

She was as utterly without reverence as without fear, and all the thunders of the church could not frighten her. The wonder was that she was not spirited away, for in her day there was practically no limit to the powers of the officers of the Inquisition. She allowed princes and statesman to make love to her, and many a man found, when too late, that the path of love led to the scaffold or the rack. For she warmed their secret out of them and sold them to their enemies.

At one time or another she had fooled members of all parties. One month she sided with the Spaniards, the next with the Dutch, picking the warm-hearted and the meek, and using them remorselessly.

Only once had she tried vainly to snare a man, and finding herself scorned she hated the man with a hate as fierce as the fires of Hades. The man on whom she wasted her blandishments vainly was none other than William the Silent, Prince of Orange.

Beagica de Vaast laid herself out to entrap this prince, whose cool brain had enabled him to outwit legions of enemies during his stormy career; but her beauty had no charm for him. The magic of her wonderful eyes was powerless to hold him. He looked at her, and through her, and saw the vileness behind the beauty; saw the falseness beyond the professed love, and he rejected her advances with scorn.

From the hour when the woman found that William the Silent would have none of her, she lent herself to his foes; again and again she seduced his friends from him, worming state secrets from them, which she promptly handed to the lieutenants of his deadly and implacable enemy, Philip the Second, King of Spain and ruler of the Netherlands. Like an evil spirit she dogged his footsteps, and on more than one occasion she sought to have him assassinated. Once she enabled a man to approach the prince with a petition, which was but a cloak for murder; for as Orange glanced at the document, the assassin, stepping close to his side, fired a pistol right into his face, the ball passing through his mouth and going out behind his left ear. The instant the knave fired the shot a man standing by ran his rapier through his body, killing him where he stood. This speedy execution was not for the purpose of avenging the prince, but to silence the assassin, who might have betrayed the woman with the green eyes if put to the torture.

The gentleman who used his rapier with such deadly skill and effect was one of Beagica de Vaast's many adorers. Orange lived through the terrible illness that followed the shooting, and the woman again set about her fiendish task. This time she made sure of hurting the heart of the man she hated.

He had at his court a young noble whom he loved with a great love. This young man was the son of Count Egmont, a great soldier whom Orange had loved like a brother. The woman with the green eyes laid siege to the heart of young Egmont, and soon had him in her toils. She made him a tool and a catspaw, knowing that Orange trusted him as if he were flesh of his own flesh.

By this means she got hold of most of the prince's most dearly cherished secrets, and, using them to glut her hate, brought more than one proud head to the block; but she failed to work the ruin of Orange himself.

At last she prevailed upon Egmont to give a banquet at his own house to the prince, at the same time informing him that two adventurers of broken fortunes, one an Italian named Basa, the other a Spaniard called Salseda, were to be invited to the feast in order that they might administer poison in some shape or other to Orange during the repast.

The woman with the green eyes was carrying on low intrigues at that time with all the three men whom she meant to use as tools for her hate. The young noble, Lamoral Egmont, was utterly in her toils. He who was the son of one of the bravest captains of his period, was so utterly in her hands that he was ready to betray his country, his comrades in arms, and the prince who had befriended him all his life, just to hold that fair, frail woman in his arms. He had been one of the gayest of the gay prior to meeting her; but as time wore on he became moody, restless, taciturn, ready at the faintest excuse to fasten quarrels upon his bosom friends, until they shunned him as one possessed of a devil.

As for the other pair, Basa, the Italian, would have steeped his soul in Hades at her command. He had been at one time a soldier of some promise, and had carried himself boldly on many a field, but fast women and the dice-box had brought him very low. Then his handsome person had pleased the eye of Beagica de Vaast, and he became her slave, body and soul. Salseda, the Spaniard, was a noted swordsman, a dicer, and a brawler, whose sword was at the disposal of any man who filled his purse with ducats. He was the degenerate son of a great family, and it was a boast of his that wild horses could not make him betray one who employed him—a boast that he was to prove to be true to the very letter, for a hardier ruffian never emptied a flagon than Salseda. His one redeeming trait was his love for this worthless woman, who simply used him as a pawn in her own ruthless game. It was wonderful the skill with which she handled men so different in age, temperament, nationality, and position. Egmont was a Dutchman in the glory of his youth. Basa, an Italian, bordering upon his prime. Salseda, a Spaniard, grizzling towards age. Yet so thoroughly had she schooled them to her will that at her bidding they were willing to risk, and if need be, lay down their lives, and not one of them would believe a word against her, even when confronted with overwhelming proofs of her falseness. She had looked into their eyes with those devil's eyes of her, and their wills had departed from them; they ceased to be men and became mere instruments of her passions and her crimes—nothing more. She had bridled them as horsemen bridle horses.

When at last the night of the banquet arrived, Lamoral Egmont welcomed William the Silent to his house with the most profuse signs of hospitality, but one of the Prince's body attendants, noticing the presence of Basa and Salseda, became suspicious of foul intent, and whispered his suspicions to Orange, who, however, refused to believe that any harm could come to him in the house of the man he had loved and befriended.

The servants of Orange were less certain of Egmont's good faith, and one of them, dogging Basa's footsteps, saw him conversing with the woman with the green eyes, whose hatred of Orange was well known. This made those who loved the Prince doubly watchful, and they seized both the Italian and the Spaniard in the act of putting poison into a stoup of wine intended for the prince. They then went in search of Beagica de Vaast, but she had been warned in time by Egmont, and fled to the Court of the Prince of Parma, where she was sure of sanctuary. Egmont, however, was captured before he could fly, but so great was William the Silent's love for the son of his old comrade-in-arms that he caused much of the evidence against the ingrate to be suppressed, and Egmont was simply driven out of the country. Basa the Italian committed suicide in his dungeon, refusing to the very last to implicate the woman who had lured him to his fate. Salseda the Spaniard was equally obdurate. They threatened him with the rack, but he defied his captors, boasting haughtily that if they tore him to pieces with wild horses he would not say whose brain planned the attempted murder. He was taken at his word. Strapped to four untamed horses the question was again put to him, and again the grizzled adventurer refused to name the woman he loved in his wild way more than life itself. At a sign from the executioner the men who were holding the horses, each facing a different point of the compass, let the brutes go. There was a wild plunge, a terrible shriek of agony filled the ears of the mighty throng who ha dassembled to watch the execution, and the Spaniard's career of crime was at an end.

"And the woman with the green eyes, what became of her in the end?" I asked.

"No one knows," answered the old man, "but this much is known. She was dallying in love with the Prince of Parma at the very hour when Salseda was giving his life to prove his loyalty to her. Some say she was the devil in the guise of a woman. What do you think, mynheer?"

I looked up and saw the green eyes glaring at me from the wall as if they were alive, and I shivered. "Woman or devil," I murmured, "I would rather be a hewer of wood and a drawer of water all my days than fall under her influence. Landlord, another flagon."

THE EDUCATED HORSE.

The standard of education aimed at by the King's Regulations concerning the troop horse is notoriously higher than the average animal can hope to attain under the most capable tutor's hands. "Education," as distinguished from breaking, forms a conspicuous feature of the life of the modern cavalry horse; and riding masters and others concerned with equine military education have, therefore, a special interest in the mental powers of the horse as exhibited by such phenomena as "Hans" whose talents furnished the text of a book which we noticed in our issue of 9th May, or of "Trixie" whose performances in London a few months ago are considered by Major N. Birch, R.H.A., in the last number of The Cavalry Journal. Now it goes without saying that the higher the intelligence of any given horse the easier it is (always provided good temper accompany high intelligence) to make him "as active and clever as a hunter, as handy as a polo pony and as quiet as a shooting pony"—to quote the Regulation ideal: but the difficulty is for man to grasp the equine mental outlook as it were and adapt his system of teaching to its level. We must leave the accomplishments of the Berlin performing horse, Hans, out of count (if Herr Pfungst be correct and Hans responded to thought transference in obedience to his human guide) the method is not one that can be exercised by every cavalry soldier and is therefore of no practical value. The method is too obscure, and there remains grave doubt whether the most intelligent horse can be trusted to respond to that "inward call" on him, backed though it may be by a "high degree of expectative tension."

Princess Trixie offers a much more useful example of the educable horse. In the first place her trainer, Mr. Barnes, made no mystery about his method of tuition as did Herr von Osten, owner of Hans: Mr. Barnes told the committee of experts who sat in judgment upon the mare all there was to know, and they put her through an examination which was prolonged for an hour and a half. First it is worth noticing that this mare was the daughter of parents who had been famous trick horses in their time, her grand dam also having been a member of the "profession:" further she is three parts Arab, and she enjoyed the very valuable advantage of intimate association with humanity from the time she was three weeks old, running in and out of Mr. Barnes' house like a dog and being the constant companion and playmate of his children. A horse reared under such conditions as these could hardly fail to develop intelligence of an order much higher than that of another reared in the ordinary way, which is not a way calculated to develop sense of any kind. The education of the mare, Trixie, was begun by Mr. Barnes' children who, we gather, taught her to pick out at command any one of four letters which were printed on large blocks: Mr. Barnes conceived the idea that the talent might be turned to account and by dint of patience succeeded in teaching her to spell almost any word by syllables, showing that she associates the sound of the word with the letters forming it. She does not always spell correctly: her lapses into phonetic spelling are, properly enough, cited as proof that she spells by ear. She also learned the result of every simple combination of numerals up to nine in the four elementary rules of arithmetic: this also was done by sheer hard work on the teacher's part and patience on that of the mare. Teaching her to discriminate between colours was a much easier business than spelling and sums: beginning with rags of two distinct colours she learned to associate the sound of the name of the colour with the hue and picked up the proper rag when told to do so.

These achievements are to a certain extent on all fours with the acquirements of any troop horse: the facility with which the horses learn the calls and obey them is well known to every soldier, and the difference between halting when the halt is sounded and picking out coloured rags or letters of the alphabet to order is one of degree. Each depends on the association of ideas, horses have keen hearing and long memories: and any system of education must depend primarily upon these two qualities. Major Birch questions the theory held by Mr. James Fillis to effect that the horse's intelligence is reached not by the word of an order but by the tone in which it is given: there is, he says, now at Woolwich a horse which when turned loose in the school will walk, trot, canter, charge and jump at the word of command unaided by difference in tone: each order is given in the same level tone of voice and it is evident that the horse discriminates between the actual words—we might say "meaning of the words." This animal had no early educational advantages so far as is known: and indeed the horses which come into the hands of the Remount buyers have not generally received much attention beyond that necessary to fit them for the ordinary market as trap or saddle nags: the British farmer's ideas of equine education do not, as a rule, go beyond breaking and training him in the orthodox way. Before leaving the subject of Trixie, it may be remarked that the committee of experts failed to arrive at a unanimous verdict. Trickery on the trainer's part was carefully watched for, but none of those told off for this detective duty appears to have seen anything suspicious: a majority favoured a verdict crediting the mare with responsive intelligence as claimed by Mr. Barnes, but the minority were strongly adverse to them: and the adjourned test, so far as we know, has not yet been made.

As Major Birch says, spelling horses are of no practical use for military purposes; but it is obvious to any civilian that horses which can be depended on to obey commands given by word of mouth only are much more useful than horses which are not educated up to this point: and if a particularly intelligent horse can be taught to perform such feats as Trixie's, then it should be possible to teach horses of merely average intelligence to obey such orders as Major Birch suggests as of practical utility; such are turning, stopping, increasing or slackening pace; lying down or standing still, particularly while other horses are passing at a gallop; coming when called and following when told. The two last under ordinary circumstances scarcely require any teaching: we have all known horses which prefer to stick close to the heels of their masters when dismounted in some jungle path, and sugarcane judiciously administered will ensure obedience to a call, until obedience becomes the habit discipline requires. Remains always the question mooted by Major Brich, whether an elaborate education acquired in peace time will or will not be forgotten under the stress and excitement of the field. We are inclined to think that the education, or much of it, would show its results under conditions of trial: when all around is strange and novel, a familiar command, we suggest is likely to touch a responsive chord and procure the habitual obedience, more especially if it be one that happens to appeal to the animal's feelings of the moment. A loose horse ignorant of the uses of such freedom as he enjoys while burdened with the saddle and equipment of his lost rider, would we imagine respond to the call of an isolated dismounted man particularly if no other horses were within sight or scent: if there were other horses within nose or eye range it is probable that his gregarious instinct would induce the animal to join them. We have all read Zola's heart gripping account of the cavalry horses galloping to and fro in masses, saddled but riderless after Sedan: whether a mob of educated horses would obey verbal orders is a question which rests not upon the obedience of all but of one: where one led the rest would follow.

It was Ascot, and he had realised his last few hundreds ready to play up at the meeting—it was a case of sink or swim with him. He had gone to the best hotel, which was naturally packed, and was told that they were full up, but that one double room was let to the same man every year, but not always occupied. He volunteered to take it on chance, promising not to mind sharing it with the other man should he turn up later in the week. Things went badly for him, and on the Friday he was absolutely broke; minus hotel bill, and minus even money enough for a return ticket to town. As is usual with men in a hole, he had the best dinner he could get and a "large bottle" to buck him up. He retired early, and was just falling asleep in his lonely bedroom when he heard a noise in the corridor loud enough to suggest the whole hotel was falling down. Suddenly his door was opened, and a stranger half lurched and half fell into the room, knocking down a couple of chairs and a hanging bracket in the process. Speechless with rage at the entrance of this obviously "well-dined" creature, it suddenly struck him that this must be the man who had engaged the room. So he sat up in bed and awaited developments. The intruder soon began to empty his pockets on to the dressing-table, placing there (between many lurches and refrains of a drunken song) stacks of notes and pile of gold, silver and copper. The sight of so much money fascinated the man in bed, and at last he shouted, "What are you doing there, you drunken scoundrel! Don't you see you are mixing all your money up with mine!" "That'sh orlrigh, olsh shap, that'sh orlrigh, we'll dividsh 'em." And they did!

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The first extra meeting has come and gone and Calcutta racing has started on its 1907-08 season's career amidst all sorts of new and luxurious surroundings. Almost as much interest was taken in the various new arrangements as in the racing itself and the general verdict was one of approval. Members were delighted at their luxurious stand, tea and refreshment rooms; the public have a magnificent erection from which they can see everything in comfort and that usually neglected section of the community the "owners, trainers and press" were agreeably surprised to find that the portion of the members' stand had been set aside for their accommodation and "did them proud" as one of them said. Despite the scramble to get things ready at the last minute on the whole all the arrangements were good and the indefatigable Secretary had even found time to indulge in a little extra decoration of the ground by means of a border of triangular bits of stone to the walk behind the public stand. They were undeniably pretty but their effect was lost on all except those who were unfortunate enough to come into contact with them accidentally and it is to be feared that on the whole they were provocative of a considerable amount of bad language.

The return of the bookmakers was welcomed by betting men with no uncertain voice and the unfortunate tote was pretty well neglected; judging from its wretched results it deserved the cold shoulder accorded to it. It is enough to give any betting man the creeps to find that he has been laying 2 to 1 on to win and 10 to 1 on for a place! There should, however, be no need to rub it in any more, for those who manage the Turf Club as trustees for the public must have thoroughly satisfied themselves by this time that their departure in the Monsoons was disapproved by the great majority, and, of course, they will act in accordance with the wishes of the latter whatever may be their own private prejudices.

It is curious that in many quarters the idea exists that The Turf Club is a private institution that governs racing in Calcutta for the benefit of its members. This is, of course, a fallacy—the Turf Club acting through its Stewards is the warden of a great public trust. It enjoys special privileges from Government in return for looking after racing in Calcutta on behalf of all interested and it is certain that this thought is never absent from the minds of those gentlemen who so kindly undertake the duties of stewards. Mistakes, of course, are made—no man is infallible—but when pointed out they are always rectified and the whole policy of the direction is to find out what the public wants and when they are quite certain of what it is to give it to them if possible. Criticism, however, adverse is welcomed cordially as it is by the comments of others that errors are discovered.

However, on Saturday no one was in a complaining mood and there were no errors made even by the public in spotting the winners as the books found to their somewhat heavy cost, though they will no doubt get it all back with interest, before the end of the series. Some very good doubles and trebles were upset by the scratching of Coin II. and one man who had 50 to 1 Solace, Botha and Coin II. was most disconsolate at his bad luck. As it was known in the morning that the animal would not run it was, of course, impossible to lay off the bet. The Lilliputian Plate, which would have been a gift for the Maharajah of Cooch Behar's pony, in its absence fell to Mr. Green's Flo. We were very glad to see this gentleman get a win as he is a real good sportsman, and his pony was widely backed. He had a protracted period of anxiety as the Stewards spent nearly an hour hearing the evidence in the objection for crossing lodged by the jockeys on Miss Beryl and the two second horses, but it was finally overruled a verdict which was extremely popular to judge from the cheering with which it was received by the large waiting crowd.

It would seem that the evidence of the other jockeys in the race was in favour of the black mare and it was chiefly on this that the decision was made.

The proceedings opened with the Pony Hurdle Race for which the only two scratched were the aristocratic dames, Lady Knight and Lady George, who have been playing polo of late instead of schooling. Solace did not fall and that is all that there is to be said. Hoyt kept his mare in nice catching distance of that wonderful hurdler Prob and came away and won as and when he liked from the half mile post. The others finding themselves completely out of the race did not trouble over much and had a nice quiet schooling ride behind, but in any case they were a pretty poor lot.

The mile (Club Plate) produced the best race of the day. Of the seven starters there were only two in it, Botha and Metal Boy, and the chances of the others were fairly represented by their prices in the betting and anything from ten to one to thirty to one was freely offered about the field without finding many takers. The gate went up to a good start and they were all off in a bunch. Mr. Bell's "Cherry Sleeves" was the first bit of colour to break the line and Botha was soon clear of the crowd with Metal Boy hard on his heels. At the bend into the straight the two were out all by themselves, and it was a very fine race from there to the finish. At the quarter mile Metal Boy had caught the leader, but flagging again fell back and yet another final effort could only bring him within a head of Mr. Bell's horse as the winning post was passed. Firth, who knows every movement of the handsome bay, rode with great judgment, but Southall might possibly have been more successful if he had had more experience of his animal as it looked as if a long striding easy moving horse like Metal Boy would have gone better with less hustling than his jockey gave him.

Belligerent was scratched for the Pony Plate, again leaving only seven to face the gate. The public would back nothing but Chippy Norton to win and he never gave them an uneasy moment, but Flower Girl who was considered a very warm thing for a place got left at the post and her supporters money with her.

Mr. Griffiths' expensive pony Riot ran a fair second but 14-0½ is an unfortunate size and weight for inches will hardly bring these little animals up to the big ponies who race as 14-2's.

The Town Plate with its eleven starters was again a gift for the favourite Conscience, but there were a good many more of them fancied than in the previous event and Stepaway, Idle, Bonita, and Musette all received a certain amount of support. Mr. Galstaun made a great dash for victory on the last named and led well into the straight, but his mare could not stay it out and was caught first by Blix and then by the favourite who went on and won comfortably. Musette all out a bad third.

The Criterion Plate was all Lombard Street to a China orange for Vespasia who opened at three to one and started at even money though Metal Boy was also fancied at one time and stood as low as two to one though he afterwards lengthened to fours. Lady Anna and Winsome were the only others enquired for to any extent. There was a very long delay at the post caused principally by the country-bred Sparkle and until he finally disposed of himself by breaking his reins and getting rid of young Ferguson who was on top Mr. Bates could not get them going at all. Lady Anna and Fireworks were the first to show out from the start, the favourite getting away badly, but it made little difference as she went through them all in her own good time and won in a canter by five lengths followed by Fireworks, Lady Anna and Metal Boy who came away with a great rush at the finish but was too late to get near the others.

The Lilliputian Plate, which was the last event of the day, was run in the dark and nothing could be seen of it. We have already referred to the race above and it calls for no further comment. Mr. Potter's new pony Brown and Pink refused to start when the gate went up and then bucked Firth off when being schooled at it "just for fun" a second time and the mare came in on her own.

The entries for the second extra, which closed on Monday night, are good both in quality and quantity but are not likely to produce much exciting racing as in several events one or two horses stand out so far ahead of the others that if they start the result will be foregone conclusions from the beginning. What out of the 18 horses at present left in the Maiden Horse Plate can possibly compete on anything near level terms with Jolly Abbot? Or of the 18 in the Hurdle Race which of them hopes to be able even to see which way Mallard gallops? Stockman or Chassepot perhaps might be able to keep company with him over a hurdle or two but there is nothing else in the same street with the senior Stewards' horse. The misapprehension that existed as to the class of horse likely to be going in the second extra is shown by the juxtaposition of the names of such animals as Kingpin or Wake Up with Mallard and Stockman in the hurdles or Sal with Symmetrician in the seven-furlong race!

The two pony races have filled better than usual, the 14-2 class having 16 and the 14 hand 10 starters though 5 in the former are from one stable (Mr. J. D. Scott's) and 4 in the latter represent the interest of H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, and at a casual glance it would look as if he could make a certainty of it with one of them. Among the 14-2 lot if she is back to her old form Florrie ought to be a pretty good thing. The other two items are the December Plate with 21 and the Corinthian Plate with 11. The former with Sacristan, Volume, Misty Morn, Symmetrician, Noraina, Sermon, Stirabout, Amplify and Kaffirpan in it ought to produce the best race of the day and the weaker vessels will probably scratch when they see the formidable company arrayed against them.

Balayeuse and Amplify stand out among the lot in the Round the Course Race and it will probably resolve itself into a duel between these two.

There has been a good deal more fast work on the Calcutta course during the past week and on Tuesday, in particular much galloping was done. Among others Ballark, Mallard, and Fitzgrafton after trotting once round went a second time at a nice working pace. Fitzgrafton seemed a bit sluggish, but the black was moving particularly well and full of running at the finish. Misty Morn galloped a mile and gave a great impression of speed and power. Realm and Wandin have done a fair amount of work during the week, and the more that is seen of the former the less he is liked, but the second string is a somewhat underrated horse and it will not be surprising to see him put up a much better performance than some people think he has in him in some of the big events.

A report has been spread about that Saloon is crocked up, but it is stated on good authority that the whole matter is that he put his foot on a stone and is a little lame, but likely to be all right in a day or two: we shall probably see the country-bred very much there on the day of the Trials. Indeed Melsom, who rode him last year, declares that in spite of his poor performance in the Cup at that time he believes that on his day the little horse would extend some of them even in the bigger event.

The only final entry for the Cup is Mr. Potter's Volume, but it is a pretty significant one as it probably means that this first class horse is coming on well and if fit on 26th December he will be a factor not to be neglected in the big race. This now brings up the total number to 14 and we shall probably see a field of about ten face the starting gate with the probability of as fine a struggle as has ever been seen for this event. Betting is still very sluggish and the air is so full of rumours that the bewildered punter hesitates to make his investment. One is told that Bonbdil must win if he goes sound to the post, that there is still no horse in India to touch Fitzgrafton, that Misty Morn's performances are nothing to go upon as he never was properly trained in Australia and is really a great horse, that Steinhager is a different animal this year and has more than a good chance, that Mr. Apcar will really win the Trials with Fitzgrafton and the Cup with Ballark, and so on all through the list. What is the poor betting man to make of it all? The best advice is to wait developments.

There was a good deal of schooling done on Tuesday. St. Odille (Howie) and Idle (Butlin) were the first pair out and went seven furlongs over five jumps in 1min. 40secs. Idle fenced very well indeed but St. Odille is a bit wild yet. Lamrock (Bond) and Loch Lochie (Wall) did the whole course, Bridegroom (Thomas) cutting in at the seven furlongs and doing the last five jumps with them. Mr. Harper's horse was a bit outpaced by the other pair, but jumped surprisingly well for a first school. He is well-bred (Projectile—Bridesmaid) and though he has won several sprint races at unregistered meetings in Australia is still entitled to his maiden allowance and should be a useful horse. Lamrock and Loch Lochie were both going great guns. Swiveller (Leech) and Wake Up (Butlin), Trustee (Ferguson) and Aberfoyle (Mr. Evers), Chassepot and Biralee were out in pairs. Swiveller swerved badly at the first two and took them all in a leap frog sort of fashion, and Wake Up pulling hard was soon way out ahead, but finished up with a broken blood vessel. The next pair was also a bit of a procession as Aberfoyle soon tired and could keep nowhere near Trustee. Prince Moorfield (Mr. Levetus) then gave a paperchaser of Mr. Ord's (Butlin) a lead over three fences at slow pace and the final school of the day consisted of Roland (Bond), Picture (Butlin), Lady Rose (Mr. Bletsoe), and Lady George (Mr. Levetus). Roland was out in front to give a lead. Picture was all over the place and, pecking badly, very nearly fell at the first fence and bumped Lady Rose, who kept behind for the rest of the journey. Mr. Levetus' black mare jumped as perfectly as ever and waiting for Picture managed to shepherd her safely over the remaining four fences, but the bigger pony even so, went very crooked and must be a perfect cat to ride—it is to be feared that she will never make a fencer.

The Messrs. Peliti are to be congratulated on the unequivocal success of the inaugural dinner which started their new Restaurant, Dining Rooms and Banqueting Hall above their present extensive premises opposite Government House, last Monday night. It would be idle to attempt to say anything in praise of a firm which has maintained its reputation for quite a quarter of a century. As the proverb says, "good wine needs no bush," and the very name Peliti's—a household word in Calcutta and Simla—stands unique as Confectioner and Caterer in the second city in the Empire. A large number of guests, which included Sir Francis Maclean, K.C.I.E., Justices Fletcher, Stephens and Harrington, Colonel Lumsden, Mr. C. J. Branson, Mr. T. B. Wynne, Mr. Andrew Yule, Mr. and Mrs. D. King, Commendatore Mercatelli, the Consul for Chili, R. D. Metha, C.I.E., the Consul-General of Austria, Count Quadt, Count Thurn and many others did full justice to an excellent menu and responded heartily in bumpers of champagne to the toast proposed in humorous terms by the Chief Justice. The new restaurant can scarcely fail to be a popular feature of the cold season of 1907 to 1908, and no doubt people will dine less than ever in their own homes now that so cosy and pleasant a place is offered them elsewhere. For theatre and dance parties, and people going on to At Homes, etc., the arrangement should prove a boon, and doubtless will be much patronised. The well appointed little tables dotted about, continental fashion, and gay with crimson roses and the Italian colours, the handsome upholstery in cardinal and white, the splendid position of the restaurant in the heart of the principal thoroughfare of the city, should all go to swell the arguments in favour of its speedy popularity. In wishing the brothers Peliti every success in their new venture, we take it, we are echoing the sentiments of the greater part of Calcutta.

Many of our readers may read with interest the letter of "E. G. B." in our correspondence columns to-day. The horned doe is certainly a curiosity; can any sportsman-naturalist add to the information on the subject?

Our correspondent "Byculla," whose letter appears further on, gives another instance of the difficulties which beset the path of those who are working hard to secure the general preservation of game in India. We exposed a similar venture a few months ago, and we have reason to know that our efforts resulted in the spoiling of the little game of at least one wholesale game destroyer on this side of India. The action of the Bombay Natural History Society is highly commendable and can make for nothing but good.

One of the features of the recent Sonepur camp, which was this year as successful as of yore, was the polo tournament. Five teams entered:—Sewan, Mozufferpur, South Ganges, Highland L. I., Calcutta Polo Club, Samastipur and Rajpur. In the first round the H. L. I. beat Mozufferpur by 6 goals to 1; Rajpur Samastipur by 4 goals to 2; and South Ganges beat Sewan by 4 goals to 1. The semi-finals brought together the H. L. I. and Calcutta Polo Club, Rajpur meeting South Ganges in the other tie. Calcutta were victorious by 3 goals to 1, while Rajpur and South Ganges put up the closest game of the tournament. Full time was played and each team scored 4 goals: the goal posts were widened and the game resumed, a goal to South Ganges giving them the victory. Calcutta beat South Ganges in the final by 6 goals to love, nevertheless the runners up played a spirited game all through.

It is stated that Ranjitsinghji will play cricket for Sussex next year. A good thing for Sussex; but where do the Nawanuggerites come in with their ruling Chief at the other end of the world, more intent on big scores and averages than on improving his little State?

The Lucknow Open Boxing Tournament will commence on the 1st and last to the 5th February next. It will be open to all regular forces and volunteers. Among other events the Locke-Elliot championship belts for Middle, Light, and Feather Weights will be competed for. These are not challenge belts, but become the property of the winner.

Lord Lurgan, writing in M. A. P., says that when he was in the Guards his chief recreation was racing. Among the horses he owned was Acme. This animal was engaged in and heavily backed for the Lincolnshire Handicap. "Shortly before the race I was astonished," his lordship says, "to receive a letter from my trainer, Sherrard, saying he had been expecting to receive written confirmation of my telegram to him ordering him to stop Acme in his work, and asking what were now my intentions in regard to the horse. Of course, I had never sent any telegram of the kind—indeed, having already sold Acme for £5,500 to go to Buenos Ayres, I had no power to interfere—and the whole thing was a daring swindle. Unfortunately, a successful one, too. For Sherrard had obeyed the forged telegram, and although Acme ran a great race and was beaten by half a length only, the four days' stoppage of work was fatal to what would otherwise have been an 'absolute certainty.' However, three days later the horse won the Liverpool Cup in a canter. I had a shrewd idea of the identity of the perpetrator of this fraud, but it was impossible to prove anything, and the rascal and his confederates made a substantial haul."

Dr. Vernon Paul, a young Harwich medical man, was the victim of a curious shooting fatality at Ramsay, near Harwich, on 1st November.

He had been rabbit shooting with some friends, and, the sport having finished, the guns were placed in a motor-car in readiness for the return journey. By some mischance one of them was left loaded and at full cock. As Dr. Paul was stepping into the car a dog jumped in and touched the trigger. The charge entered Dr. Paul's body, passing through the left lung, and he died a few hours later.

Has it ever struck you, asks an English sporting scribe, that a "class" horse is an expression quite easy to understand, yet most difficult to define. A man asked me recently why I had enunciated the well-exploited euphemism—"his class ought to pull him through." He further put the poser: "What is a 'class horse' as compared to handicap form?" It is almost worth a competition for the best definition of what would be convincing to my interrogator. One explanation might be that, assuming "class" as the elementary stage, this being based on breeding propositions whereby a costly sire has been procured for a dam worth a lot of money; then, again, presumptive class can be said to hinge upon prices obtained for a yearling at sales or the fact that a large breeder, in sending drafts to auction, retains what he thinks may turn out some of the best for racing in his own colours.

The trial ground is another ordeal in arriving at the higher classification. Then, of course, a preliminary article, too, may have thrown a horse from his pedestal, or convinced the owner, trainer and public that the class claimed for an animal on account of his engagements is borne out by his qualifying debut. Any decently sustained effort for weight for age will emphasise that an animal is in a "class" as distinct from others, and, of course, later, when an animal like The White Knight, Radium, Galvani or Wool Winder, etc.; has gone through several severe tests, and one or the other appears in a handicap, one can be justified in designating him as a "class horse." I have endeavoured to make this as lucid as possible, but to the majority who read this I feel that it is almost unnecessary. Perhaps in a sentence some might be able to state epigrammatically what a "class horse" signifies. This may be done in phraseology easily understood and yet cover all the points I have set out.

Frau von Papp is the name of Berlin's first lady motor-cab driver. Frau von Pip-pip might have been more appropriate.

The following story is told of Mr. Herbert Spencer, who was an enthusiastic angler. One evening two Highlanders, strolling into their village hotel, saw displayed in the hall a splendid basket of trout. "Who caught the fish!" they asked. "Mr. Herbert Spencer, a gentleman from England," the landlord answered. "What with?" "With worm," the landlord believed, as he had seen Mr. Spencer digging in the garden early in the morning. The two Highlanders had been fishing all day with fly, with poor results, and they thought they should try worm next day; but, alas, they had no worm tackle, and none was to be had in the village. They decided to ask the Englishman for some hooks, so into the billiard-room one of them went. "Maister Spencer," he said, "we ha'e seen your troots. Wull ye kindly gi'e me, for mysel' an' freen, two bait hooks!" "Bait hooks" being a phrase practically unknown south of the Humber, the philosopher was at a loss, and silent, trying to puzzle out the meaning of the request. "Wull ye no gi'e me two bait hooks" the Highlander repeated, in louder tone, with a spice of indignation. "My good man," said the philosopher, "I have no bait hooks." The Gael retired, and, rejoining his companion, remarked that "Maister Herbert Spencer is a dawmed leear."

"A spice of uncertainty and excitement atones in a great measure for the dull monotony of the settler," writes one of the pioneers of North-East Rhodesia. "Last week the incoming mail was held up by lions near the Luangwa River, the postmen taking to the trees, with, it is to be hoped, no damage to their new red uniforms. We are now in a state of suspense as to how many of our letters were annexed by the lions." In another case where letters were lost, the postman stated that he was pursued by lions, and to lighten himself he threw the mail-bag away. Later the bag was recovered, but it was found that the lions, with peculiar discrimination, had eaten all the registered letters and left the others intact.

For the size of its population, Australia is, we should imagine the most sporting country in the world. The people there indulge, and excel, too, in every kind of sport, and, although their game-list is not a long one, it is yearly improving, and even now there is plenty of shooting of a sort to be had. For instance, we learn that the Dunbulbalane Gun Club recently held several shoots in the open. The bag totalled 1,827 hares, 664 rabbits, and six foxes. For the hares over £61 was realised. The duck-shooting, as we have reported from time to time, is exceedingly good, and bags are made that would gladden the heart of some wildfowlers.

We announced some time ago the outbreak of a peculiarly fatal epidemic in the kennels of the Madras Hunt; it has now been decided to destroy the entire pack. A meeting of the members was held at the Madras Club on Wednesday, the 28th ultimo, about 25 members being present. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Boddam was voted to the chair. The Master, Mr. H. M. Gibson, gave a rough outline of what had happened, stating that several hounds had succumbed to the disease, and that the whole pack was impregnated with it. Hunting was out of the question for this season, as there was absolutely no remedy for the epidemic.

After some discussion in connection with the question of having new kennels, Colonel W. D. Gunn, C.V.D., proposed that it was only humane to destroy the remainder of the living hounds, which proposal was carried unanimously.

A Sub-Committee was formed to make arrangements for hunting the country next season, and for endeavouring to defray the expenses of this season. The following gentlemen were elected:—Mr. H. M. Gibson (Master), Mr. H. A. B. Vernon, I.C.S. (Honorary Secretary), Captain Torrie, Colonel W. D. Gunn, C.V.D., Major G. G. Giffard, I.M.S., and Mr. A. J. Yorke.

The honorary secretaries of the Motor Union of Western India announce that the Motor Reliability Trials which were fixed for the last week in December have been postponed from 2nd February to 6th February of next year. This decision has been come to partly at the request of the Commissioner of the Bombay Police who has pointed out that trials would sadly interfere with the annual holidays of the Bombay Police and secondly by reason of the petrol famine, produced by the underestimation of the demand by importers and several big petrol fires which have consumed considerable quantities of petrol in the last few months. Supplies from Europe cannot be obtained before February.

The hunting man at home does not always regard the motor-car with a friendly eye. In a London sporting paper, to hand by the last mail, we observe the following paragraph:—

"The hunting season is gradually getting into swing, and one hears the pretty general abuse of the motor-car from the old-fashioned type of hunting man. It has come as a severe shock to the old country squire, the man with a pedigree dating back longer than many Royalties, to find the motor-car being used as a kind of "covert hack." Agitations against this are going on, and it is certainly probable that cars will be barred attending meets. To a highly-strung hunter the presence so near of a spluttering motor is not very wise, and many incidents have been caused, but luckily, however, they have not resulted in serious accidents.

"Another influence which the motor has on hunting is that some packs are overdone with the number of followers; it is so easy to cover miles in a car and hunt with all sorts of packs. The horses are, of course, sent on beforehand."

Polo players in India will read with a certain degree of interest some recent remarks of Lord Willoughby de Broke to the effect that the farmers of Warwickshire would find polo pony breeding an unprofitable industry. Lord Willoughby's view that it is "undesirable to encourage farmers to embark upon an enterprise which would only result in loss to them" is taken strong exception to by the council of the Polo Pony society, more especially as that view comes from a country which, with its immediate neighbours, contains several of the most influential and representative county polo clubs, and also the polo pony stallion selected for premier honours at the last London show. The council point out that the opportunity presented to farmers of securing gratis or at a nominal price most of the noted mares whose playing days are over, with the advantage of using the best polo pony sire of the day, cannot prove such an unprofitable business, more especially in view of the increasing demand for polo and riding ponies of high class.

As against Lord Willoughby's expression of opinion, the council give some results of an inquiry set afoot by them in June, 1907, with the object of ascertaining the extent to which ponies bred from stallions and mares in the Stud Book and on the Hurlingham Register were playing polo. One of the questions asked for was the returns of the prices realised. The figures returned indicated that among polo-bred ponies some had realised the following figures: A pony sold at five years for £210 made £400 at six years; a second sold at five years for 75 guineas subsequently changed hands for 175 guineas; two ponies realised 150 guineas each, one £130, three 120 guineas, and others 105 and 100 guineas each.

Harmston's Circus opens in Calcutta on the 12th instant: we look forward to a sight of the genial Bob Love in the near future and expect to hear something about the special treats he has in store for us. We see poor "Diavolo" (J. C. Carter), who used to loop the loop here last year and "nightly shook dice with death," as the poetic Love used to express it, has taken the risk once too often; he fell out of the loop in Singapore and was killed.

The greatest interest has been roused among billiard enthusiasts in Calcutta by the visit to this city of Mr. H. W. Stevenson, the English champion billiard player. Since John Roberts met some of our leading amateurs nearly ten years ago, the Calcutta public have not witnessed such marvellous proficiency at the game as was exhibited by the champion in his matches last week. Stevenson, who is making a tour in the East, recently met the Australian champion Inman, and each has a match to his credit, Inman having received long odds from the champion. There was some hope of these players meeting again in India; but a talk with Stevenson has dissipated the idea, his programme does not include any such item we are told.

On Thursday Stevenson met our local champion Mr. W. A. Bonnaud, who, for about a quarter of a century has been upholding the billiard reputation of Calcutta against all and sundry. Mr. Bonnaud, if our memory serves us, has played in exhibition matches Cook, Stanley, Roberts and other bright particular stars of the billiard firmament and has always acquitted himself with skill and address. When he met Stevenson last week he was in capital form; he played well throughout and showed veritable brilliance after the interval, scoring quite as quickly as the champion and in the event won one of the most interesting games put before the Calcutta public in recent years.

The following is an analysis of the scores:—

Stevenson:—(1), 0, 9, 33, 166, 0, 26, 20, 24, 0, 26, 27, 35, 39, 3, 4, 12, 9, 31, 114, 0, 0, 99, 4, 56, 0, 0, 2, 0, 7, 0, 0, 5 equal to 752.

Bonnaud:—0, (1), 11, 12, 17, 24, 3, 22, 7, 0, 6, 12, 0, 9, 9, 10, 20, 3, 16, 22, 3, 0, 8 15, 18, 4, 13, 2, (1), 6, 19, 17, 4, 25, 11 (unfinished) equal to 350 plus 650 received equal to 1,000.

It must be said that Stevenson, who has had a vast deal of travelling, had hardly got off his sea legs when he met Mr. Bonnaud: but that he recuperates rapidly was amply proved the following night when he was literally "all over" the gentleman from Monghyr and made the Indian record of 603 on a standard table, all in as smart and brilliant a manner as could be conceived.

The game was for the usual 1,000 up, the amateur receiving 650 points. Great things were expected of the latter, but they didn't come off. He got hardly any chances off what his opponent left and, moreover, appeared rather off his game, as a result of a very natural nervousness. Stevenson drew level at 856 and though, after the interval Mr. Murray showed better form and put up a pretty all round break of 63 among his other efforts, he failed to make any impression on the champion who compiled his thousand while the amateur was making 106, the final score being:—Stevenson 1,000, Murray 756. The champion visited the table when his score was 749 and ran out with an unfinished break of 254. In response to a general request to continue, he took up his cue again, and with a series of delightful nursery cannons and winning hazards at the top of the table, varied by a few pretty cannons, and losers in the centre pockets till the balls were once more in position in the vicinity of the top cushion, he stopped at 603 and beat the Indian record of 450 which till then stood to the credit of John Roberts. It was a treat to witness, and though he may not exhibit the style and dash of Roberts, he showed the marvellous knowledge, the judgment, the power and the delicacy one looks for in a champion. His average, for the twenty visits he paid to the table, was 70.

Then followed the usual exhibition of fancy shots, some positively weird and all astonishing.

On Saturday Stevenson, conceding the same points to a Mr. Johnson, a cold weather visitor, beat him by 212. The breaks were as follows:—

Stevenson:—(1), 28, 277, 33, 28, 105, 21, 96, 88, 95, 25, 8, 17, 3, 123, 31, 22 equal to 1,000.

Johnson:—(1), 25, 0, 4, 0, 5, 0, 35, 0, 7, 13, 0, 21, 20, 0, 7, equal to 138 plus 650 equal to 788.

Stevenson's average was about 60 and Johnson's about 9.

It remains to add that the arrangements, even to the smallest detail, reflected the highest credit on the Executive of the Dalhousie Institute in general and on Mr. F. E. Bushby, the Honorary Secretary, in particular. The Institute's new standard table was one of Messrs. C. Lazarus and Co.'s many triumphs, and Chrystalate balls were used.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—It is eight long months since the tranquillity of the jackals in the Salsette country has been disturbed, but their troubles began afresh on Thursday. The new Jackal Club pack has for the last few weeks been as carefully trained, from the plump condition in which it landed to a businesslike sleekness, as the most ardent hunting man could wish and, judging by their first performance, the "prowlers" are likely to have a hot time. The Bombay Hunt has earned for itself the name of the first in India, and the purchases of new blood by sportsmen here suggests this reputation being upheld. Great credit is due to the Hunt officials for the fine condition in which the pack was, and it took the field all their time to keep up during a glorious hour's run over some of the finest hunting country procurable.

The meet was in the flat near the Jackal Club, a new stone wall having to be negotiated on the way to the covert, and some fifty members were present. Thanks to a fairly heavy dew, scent was excellent and a jack very soon realised the inadvisability of hiding, making off almost as soon as the hounds got to work. He ran in a dead line for Bomanwadi, after passing Chuckla Hill over some nice cactus jumps, and out into a delightful bit of galloping country through rice fields. Straight as a die he kept to the Back Water into which he did not seem to care to go, but eventually did so when he realised the close proximity of the pack. The field, owing to the depth of the stream, lost time in finding a shallower part, and on crossing had a deal of ground to make up. At a stony hill, after crossing the Vehar-Kurla road, the field divided but met again and followed the hunt to the Hog's Back. Many a jack has run to ground here, but not this one who gamely held on towards the big hills edging the Horse Shoe Valley. What with dangerous, stony hills and thick jungle, the field were puzzled and, in their endeavours to cut round, all but four missed the conclusion of a grand gallop. By pushing through some thorny undergrowth, these four came up to hear the hounds give vent to their feelings on seeing their quarry go to ground on one of the dangerous little hills. One of them dismounting managed to dislodge the jack, and the pack after all brought to a satisfactory conclusion a run which sent everyone home satisfied that they in every way are all that can be desired for another successful hunting season.

That grand little boxer, Tommy Burns, has disposed of Gunner Moir, as his supporters confidently predicted he would. The fight, at the N. S. Club on Monday, went ten rounds when Moir was outed, after having given a rather poor account of himself.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—On Saturday there was a return cricket match between the Navy and the Bombay Gymkhana. Once more, however, the game ended in a draw all in favour of the Navy. The visitors went in first and Commander Brown 59, and Lieutenant Murray 20, made a good start for Lieutenant Wright to put up a stand with Brown making 76. With the score at 193 for 5 the innings was declared closed.

Though Powell as usual was in to stop, the Gymkhana made a poor start, Commander Veries 14 helping to raise the score. The best partnership was that between MacDonald 36 and Powell 74. After some fast scoring by these two, Vlasto and Major MacDonald, 14 each, made a stand, the latter being undismissed at the finish. Milne and Marshall were early out, but time arrived with Burns still to go in and four runs required to win.

Four races again were sailed at the Bombay Yacht Club on Saturday, with a good fresh breeze blowing. "A" class was sailed first and though Sapphire got away with a good lead Isca sailed beautifully with a wind to suit her and won by over two minutes; Turquoise being right out of it.

With Mannikin not starting and Peewit and Pixie giving up, Sayonara, Erin and Trixie were left to fight out a fast race. Erin was in front all the way and, though Trixie sailed finely, won by over three minutes with Sayonara third by as much.

There were nine for "C" class out, of which Valkyrie, Midget and Clutha did not finish. As in the previous race, all had a sound wetting but a close race was seen. Maud got well away to the front and keeping there beat Jean by a matter of seventeen seconds with Mey third, two minutes off.

Of the six that started for the Ships' Boat race the Defence's cutter had to go about twice and consequently started some way behind the others. The Submarine Defence's galley led to Tucker beacon and after being passed by the Hyacinth's pinnace went ahead again and well sailed by Sergeant Ley, R.E., held them all in hand, winning by five minutes from the Hyacinth's galley with the Defence's cutter a poor third.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 15th November 1907.

We had a typical specimen of November weather with which to welcome the German Emperor on Sunday and Monday. Dense fog prevailed in the Channel and the solent, and our vessels played hide and seek with the Hohenzollern and her escort. Pilots were sent out on Sunday to look for the German squadron, but they failed to find it until Monday, when it was discovered near the Warner Lightship, miles from the appointed anchorage. So dense was the fog that the boats did not run between Portsmouth and the Wight on Sunday and Monday morning. Tuesday night brought a regular gale and London was looking its best on Wednesday, when the Emperor and Empress came up from Windsor to lunch at the Guildhall. They were given a particularly cordial reception and the Imperial speech was particularly cordial to match. The German papers seem surprised as well as pleased. I wonder if it were expected that we should receive their Majesties with stony coolness! The crowds in Oxford Street were larger than usual when a procession is afoot and every window was crammed.

* * * * * *

The Lord Mayor's Show was a great success, perhaps because a larger crowd than usual was anticipated the route taken was longer than in recent years and certainly the crush on the embankment where the trams were stopped for the occasion was tremendous. Mr. Louis Parker's idea of a procession of Edwards proved immensely popular; most of all, by reason of its novelty no doubt was the Edward VI group, the boy king escorted by tutors and councillors in sombre garb, striking distinction from the array of mailed knights before and after. The historical knowledge of the crowd was rather severely taxed, but when it did recognise anyone it cheered the more vociferously: nobody attracted more notice than the Executioner in black casque and mask, with his axe. Speculation as to who was who ran high for, of course, the banners did not explain the identities in each king's train. I have never mixed with a crowd that displayed such a spirit of interested enquiry. But oh Editor! who supplied the beards and who stuck them on? Such beards were never seen by land nor sea: no wonder the ribald laughed.

The Cullinan Diamond was presented to the King on his Birthday under circumstances of extreme precaution. Special police arrangements were made at Sandringham and Wolferton: Sir Richard Solomon and Sir Francis Hopwood, who made the presentation were accompanied by two experienced detectives who had actual charge of the stone; and they drove from the station to Sandringham surrounded by policemen on bicycles and a procession of detectives in vehicles. His Majesty having accepted the diamond and admired it, as did the Queen, restored it to its custodians with commands to place it among the Crown jewels in the Tower: whither the stone was conveyed the same afternoon with the same precaution.

The Government have listened to the voice of Hugh Cecil Lea, M.P., in so far as they created no new peers when the Birthday Honours afforded the opportunity. The list in fact is only redeemed from dullness by the knighthoods conferred upon Mr. John Hare and Mr. Charles Santley. Mustard and radicalism are honoured in the person of Mr. Colman: coal and radicalism in the person of Mr. Ricketts: and if Mr. Colman could induce the Government to put a little of the spirit examplified by his commodities into their dealings with the apostles of disorder in Ireland we should hold the honour conferred on him well bestowed. Mr. A. C. Benson's share in editing Queen Victoria's letters has gained him the Victorian Order.

The case of the studious Mr. Woods, 2nd Grenadier Guards, occupies interested—I cannot say sympathetic—attention just now. A court of inquiry assembles at Chelsea Barracks next Monday to take evidence in the case. Mr. Woods, who has some six or seven years' service, is a particularly zealous officer, who takes his profession very seriously and his friends maintain that his brother officers create an atmosphere inimical to Mr. Woods' application and industry: they, so to speak, will make a noise when he wants to do his lessons. Which, now I have written it, seems to me very happily to express the case. Three Generals and a Colonel have got to examine this dreadful state of affairs.

Now, my dear editor, you may call me an Antediluvian or what you will, but I share the opinions privately expressed that this sort of thing is good neither for Mr. Woods, the Grenadier Guards nor the British Army, nor any one that therein is. Men who mean to go in for soldiering in a serious spirit do not go into the Guards: it is well recognised that the Guards exist for ceremonial and social purposes in the main, and for use only in extreme cases. Young men of good birth put in a few years in one Guards regiment or another, but, very few of those who accept commissions either as Pages of Honour or through the ordinary channel, stay long enough to reach field rank. Mr. Woods' ambitions and Courts of Inquiry will not change the state of affairs by an hair's breadth, and the general opinion is that the young gentleman's friends have taken a very ill-advised step in complaining to the authorities. He must be a tough subject if he is not obliged to do now what he ought to have done before—go to the Staff College and exchange into a serious regiment.

The Beresford-Scott quarrel is another teacup storm of passing interest. Of course, Sir Percy erred when he informed the Roxburgh by signal that as paint work appeared more in demand than gunnery she must cease her gun practice and come in in time to look pretty for the German Emperor's reception: but everyone who knows Sir Percy Scott understands the playful spirit in which he made the signal—everyone, but Lord Charles who regarded it as "insubordinate and contemptuous" and said so out loud—by signal. Sir Percy's application for an Admiralty Inquiry has not yet been answered, so far as the world knows; and perhaps the Lords at Whitehall will decide to smooth the matter over without one. It looks as though Sir Percy were seeking an official snub: but it is a dangerous thing to exercise a playful humour by signal at the expense of an Admiral Commanding in Chief.

The "Servant of the Crown" who wrote to the papers to protest against the ragging he believed to be an institution has publicly withdrawn his complaint. He has been in communication with the Commandant, and Colonel Cowan has told him all about the snookers concert: the information thus acquired has convinced the Servant of the Crown that he used terms unduly harsh when he described these goings on as "unseemly, ungentlemanly and discreditable:" and truly these be strong words to describe the compulsory song sung (badly as a rule) on a table. The pity of it is that the S. of the C. did not go to the trouble of addressing Colonel Cowan before he rushed into print.

The Druce case was resumed before Mr. Plowden last Friday when the American witness, Mr. Caldwell, was examined—and cross-examined. Mr. Caldwell is an old gentleman of 71. He explained how his misfortune in the shape of a bulbous nose brought about his introduction to the fifth Duke who suffered from the same disfigurement: and he gave a most circumstantial account of his intimacy with the Duke in his ducal and Druce capacities. Mr. Caldwell it was who ordered the coffin, bought the lead, arranged the funeral, and reminded the Duke when "Mr. Druce" was buried to make a will a day or two after the funeral. His story hangs together very well save for one item which as Mr. Winkle on a classic occasion "had no doubt could easily be explained." Mr. Caldwell gave the court to understand that he consulted Sir Morell Mackenzie about his nose in the year 1855: and, as Mr. Avory pointed out Sir Morell in that year was only 17 or 18 years old. Too much, of course, is not to be made of this incident, Mr. Caldwell may well have confused the order in which events occurred so long ago and the professional interview might have taken place in 1864 when he says Sir Morell, then plain "Dr.," introduced him to the Duke.

A sensation was caused at the opening of the proceedings by the reading of a letter from Mr. E. Kimber, the prosecuting solicitor, to Messrs. Freshfield in which he stated that the theft of the diary from Miss Robinson was the sixth that had taken place from his client and witnesses: "and the information which I have been able to gather points to the instrumentality of some agents employed by your clients in collusion with the agents of the Duke of Portland and Lord Howard de Walden." Messrs. Freshfields, of course, treated the suggestion with contempt and Mr. Kimber withdrew it. But it needs no greater experience of the courts than is inflicted upon one acting as juror to know the value of a statement made: it may be "withdrawn" by the maker on his knees; but the desired impression has been made. I am told on excellent authority that the Duke of Portland is very anxious about the upshot of the business. His own attitude has been most strictly correct, to wit entirely negative: he has the case "watched" and nothing more. Meantime a new Druce Portland Co., Ld., advertises for £25,000 working capital making large and sanguine promises.

Is the age of the Judicial Wig approaching its end? The great legal luminaries, including Lord Loreburn, and the Master of the Rolls, who lunched at the Guildhall on Saturday, appeared wigless: and the innovation, a judge in his gown but no wig has given rise to this question. I don't suppose a full bottomed wig is a very comfortable thing to wear, on a hot day particularly; but it lends the figure on the bench a certain distinction, even majesty, which sets him apart from other men. It would be a mistake to let this piece of legal furniture fall into disuse.

Mr. Cosmo Gordon Lennox has translated Mr. Henri Bernstein's Le Voleur and it was given at the St. James' as "The Thief" on Tuesday evening. The play does not suffer in translation from France to England, at least not much and was well received. The story concerns Mrs. Chelford's theft of certain bank notes and her acquiescence in the suspicions that attach to young Harry Leyton, whose calf love she enjoys. By accident Mr. Chelford discovers the notes in a case she is hiding away in a drawer and after a powerful scene between the two they go to bed, and Marise Chelford owns up next morning. Very unpleasant affair for all concerned because the Chelfords are on a visit to the Leytons. The gist of the play is that scene between the horrified husband and his wife. She is self-convicted of the theft and then she has to explain why young Leyton took her guilt upon himself: and not unnaturally Chelford puts no nice construction on the nature of her affaire with the young man. Miss Irene Vanburgh has a great opportunity in this scene and she makes the most of it. Cajolery, coaxing, passion, appeal, hysterical outburst, despair, collapse: she goes through the whole gamut while Mr. Chelford (Mr. George Alexander) gives a wonderful display of restrained emotion. It is essentially an actor's scene this. Mr. Reginald Owen, a new stage hand plays Harry Leyton and his gaucherie, sincerity and restraint in a part which might so easily be overacted promise well for his future.

Mr. Bourchier produced "Simple Simon" at the Garrick on Wednesday. It is a four-act play by Mr. Murray Carson and Miss Norah Keith; the piece has points, but did not impress me as of the kind likely to enjoy a long run. Perhaps we have been overdone with millionaires of the stage of late: perhaps because Simon Strange's financial operations are of the stage, stagey and he himself the same—even though acted by Mr. Bourchier—his business and his love did not greatly appeal. Simon is the lion in Lombard Street, the mouse in Mayfair. The Gwyn-Stanleys, mother and daughter, were dreadfully hard-up: why they went on living in that expensive maisonette is Lady Gwyn, Stanley's affair, but such was their condition that she has the back windows cleaned only once a year: we had this on the word of Perkins the maid; Doit, the window cleaner, a cab man and cab runner corroborating—rubbing it in, one may say. Under these circumstances the obvious thing for Gladys, the daughter, to do is to marry a millionaire and why not Simon who admires her so much that he cannot speak of or to her save in rhetoric? There was another—of course: one Captain Villiers who appeared to be addicted to drink. He loves Gladys: Gladys was so strongly under the impression that she reciprocates, that she consents at his bidding to take off the engagement ring Simon made her promise nevah, nevah, to remove and receive a farewell embrace from the Captain. Simon in the blundering way millionaires have in social stage life comes in while the kiss is going on (it is a long one) and sees that ring on the table. No matterrr! He will marry her all the same and—let Mrs. Strange look for squalls. Odd animals matrimonially minded millionaires (bother alliteration).

Well Sir, they marry and the Captain turns up again. He was hunting Gladys about the room for another kiss when the ill-timed Simon came in: Gladys really was out of luck and I cannot get over a sneaking idea that Simon had a low habit of hiding behind doors. Apologies wrung from the Captain close the incident. Act IV. takes place in Simon's office, St. Swithin's Court E. C. Simon is reported in deep water: enter Gladys to offer him her marriage settlement in relief: embraces, reconciliation, etc. Now, dear editor, I am not concerned to deny that Gladys was really and truly in love with Simon whose masterful if obscure financial methods are so admired of his clerks: but I think she carried her flirtation with the Captain too far and did not deserve a millionaire. Simon's simplicity was altogether too much for me: it was as baffling as his operations with that awful stage American "Chance." Mr. Cyril Keightley played Captain Villiers and did him exceedingly well: and Mr. Arthur Whitby as Marshall, Simon's old clerk was very funny. Miss Violet Vanburgh was admirable as Gladys and made her as life-like and interesting as such a stage type can be made.

Peter Pan is to be revived again at the Duke of York's with two performances a day. Mr. Gerald du Maurier will play Captain Hook six times a week and Mr. Robb Harwood six times. The player of the title role is not yet named, it would be hard to improve on Miss Pauline Chase.

Olympia has been the centre of attraction this week with the motor show which is reported an immense success both in respect of "gate" and business done. Some of the cars on view are marvels of luxury—when you don't know anything about the mechanism you are prone to feast on the comforts of the car. There are about 600 on view and at all prices from £100 to £2,200: second-hand vehicles, most desirable to the ignorant eye, but lacking modern improvements, can be had for as little as £50: a very comfortable reflection to the gharreh admi, who would like a car; but I suppose he would spend most of his time underneath it!

A WEEK END SHOOT.

II.

We then went off for another go at the muggers, having previously arranged for half a dozen coolies to be ready on the further bank to drag any muggers we got away up the bank and skin them on the spot. It was somewhat later in the day than when we started at them the day before and so there were many more lying out. There must have been a hundred at least scattered along the mile of river near the village. It was my brother's first shot and he fired at a large gharial at about 120 yards, they had deserted the small island where we had killed the big one yesterday, and were all now on the far bank of the river. The gharial collapsed, and I killed another who was somewhat slow at getting into the water, hitting him as before in the neck. The natives on the other bank came down and dragged mine away; but before they got to the other he seemed to revive a bit and gave a wriggle, which as he was on a somewhat steep part of the bank was sufficient to start him sliding down, and he fell into the water and sank at once. We now took up positions about two hundred yards apart, and as soon as a mugger or gharial crawled out he was greeted with a bullet. Most came out opposite my brother and with three shots he laid out three. I was not so fortunate as I was opposite the steep part of the bank and two I killed slipped off into the water and, of course, sank at once. I then shifted down the river a bit where, though the range was a little longer there was no slope to the bank. Here I missed one by underestimating the distance the bullet striking the water and going screaming away up into the air. The next shot, however, went home but the gharial began to kick and to wriggle nearer the water, so I shouted to the coolies on the far bank who came rushing down and fastened a rope to his hind leg and dragged him away struggling feebly. About half an hour after this, my brother got a shot at a big gharial and apparently hit it right. It began however, to slowly crawl down into the water which as that part was shallow for some distance from the shore. A shout brought the coolies racing down to stop it, but when they arrived it was a yard or two from shore.

The first one encouraged by the shouts of shabash from the crowd of natives on our bank rushed into the water and seized it by the tail. He was powerless, however, to stop it, and was being pulled along by it, when luckily it turned and instead of going straight out into deep water began to go along parallel with the shore. One by one the other coolies arrived and amid the wildest excitement and cheering from our bank caught hold of the brute's tail.

When five had got hold of him their combined strength was just sufficient to stop his further progress but they could not drag him back. He turned his head from side to side making vicious snaps with his huge jaws and we could distinctly hear the snap they made when they shut.

But he was too badly paralysed to be able to reach his tormentors, though it looked a dangerous job from our side. The shikari then arrived on the scene with a rope which he made fast round its tail and one hind leg. They all caught hold of the rope and slowly drew the snapping wriggling brute clear of the water, one of them walking behind and hitting it on the head with his stick. This greatly delighted the natives on our side who yelled and shrieked with laughter at every blow. I do not suppose the gharial felt it any more than he would a shower of rain. At last they got him some twenty yards from the water and one man killed him with a knife while two or three more held their sticks upright in the ground to prevent his head getting round. It was a most exciting scene and it was really most plucky of the natives to attack him in about 18 inches of water.

The muggers were now thoroughly frightened here, but we went further up and shooting at every one we saw we bagged a total of nine. We wanted to get their skins for making bags, etc., so were not particular as to size. Here I had a good illustration of the thickness and invulnerability of a mugger's skull. We found a big fellow lying exactly facing us and as the neck or heart shot were, of course, impossible, I decided just for experiment to fire at his nose. My brother watched him with the telescope while I shot at him with the ·450 High Velocity Cordite Rifle. The bullet struck him fair on the nose with a resounding smack and ricochetted off with a loud hum. He seemed a bit dazed but managed to crawl into the water all right. We then left the men to skin the muggers and went off to look for the buck we had previously seen. We sent a man to climb a tree near, and he soon came back to say that there were two bucks and half a dozen does about a mile away.

We hurried off as it was getting late in the day and on looking through the glasses when some 400 yards from them, saw that the two buck were fighting while the does stood looking on. Their heads were down and they struggled and swayed and pushed, kicking up clouds of dust. If one gave the slightest little bit the other leapt forward and with the impetus thus gained would drive the other back ten yards or so, only to be again driven back in his turn. We watched them for some time and could see distinctly the tactics they employed. The great thing seemed to be to keep the body and head in the same line as those of the opponent. If one shifted a little to one side the other did the same till he was exactly facing him. If he did not the other could strike him in the side with his horn. When their heads drew the slightest little bit apart, the one that was the first to spring in again seemed to get an advantage and carry the other back. For this reason they generally kept their heads touching.

We watched them for a quarter of an hour and then having ascertained that the wind was right, started to stalk them. We could, of course, disregard the bucks as they were too busy to notice us and really had to stalk the does. We went along in a crouching position for two hundred yards or so where there were some low bushes to hide us and then had to crawl on our hands and knees. Here there were numerous tufts of grass some eighteen inches high and the ground was bare sand. We got a tuft between us and the does and crawled up to it then if there was another tuft in the right line we could go straight on if not we had to creep absolutely flat to one side until we got another tuft between us and threw up to which we could go on hands and knees. In this way we worked our way nearer and nearer till we could distinctly hear the crashing of their horns as they fought. At about sixty yards we called a halt and looking carefully over a tuft located the watching does and decided that the blacker of the two buck was the better of the two. As however, it was getting dark and the light was very bad, and as my brother, who was to take the shot, was very shaky after his crawl we decided to risk it and try and get a little nearer. After going a short way, however, one of the does began to get suspicious so my brother fired at the buck we had decided on. At the shot both buck went sprawling one dead the other having lost his balance when the one he was pushing against fell. He jumped up immediately and raced away with the does one of them every now and then bounding high into the air as buck do when alarmed. The buck's horns were only eighteen inches but as it was my brother's first buck and as we had had a splendid stalk we were very well pleased.

The next day we had to return but as we had seen a great number of black and grey partridges in the crops when we were after hog-deer, we decided to spend an hour or two after them before starting. We formed a line with a dozen coolies and started walking the crops as one does at home. But though the partridges got up the same as they do from roots or clover, the scene was very different. Palm trees at intervals along all the fences, the enormous thorns in the latter, the burning sun overhead, and a thirst such as one can never acquire at home served to remind us perpetually of where we were. One missed too the cheery "mark forrard" of the English keeper, the shrill Teetur hai seeming to jar on one's nerves. There were plenty of birds but this was the first time the shot guns had been out since last April and the shooting was not good. A beautiful bird to look at is the black partridge. He is also a very sporting bird to shoot as he invariably rises some 40 yards in front and flies back over one's head giving one an awkward curving shot. We got ten brace in an hour or so; a couple of quail and a hare giving variety to the bag.

WANDERINGUM.

Shooting.

THE FITTING OF GAME-GUNS.

THE importance to the shooter in these days of using a gun that fits him properly cannot be gainsaid. There are men who can shoot well with any game-gun, but they are exceptionally gifted. To shoot at his best, whatever that may be, a man must use a gun or guns that accurately fit him. That is to say, his gun must be so built in the stock as to give him the greatest possible ease in correct alignment, so that he may be able to use his gun as the billiard-player does his cue, without having his attention always centred upon it. Accurate fit, of course, is much more essential in a game-gun than in a sporting or military rifle. The game-gun has to be aligned and fired very rapidly in any kind of position the shooter may happen to be in, whereas the user of a rifle can generally select the position that best suits him, and take his time over alignment, aim, and discharge.

It has to be remarked at the outset that gun-fitting in these days assumes greater importance in the eyes of sportsmen than ever it did before the driving of game became so popular and so widely adopted. In game-shooting driving has considerably altered the demand made upon the shooter's quickness and accuracy of discharging game-guns. Forty years ago, when winged game was generally shot when retreating from the shooter, and at much greater intervals between the shots, as birds were flushed over dogs, there was no such urgent necessity for very accurate fitting of one's gun-stock. If the stock was about the right length and the right bend the shooter was better able than he now is to adapt himself to the stock of his weapon, because he was not so pressed for time in discharging his cartridges. In other words, the game-shooter of thirty or forty years ago did no fire so quickly or so often as he now has to do at a shooting party. If his stock was too short he had time to get it well pressed home into his shoulder by his left hand and adapt himself to the shooting of it at the away-going bird. Nowadays he is not permitted to take things in shooting quite so leisurely, he has to take his shots much more quickly, and has many more of them in rapid succession. He has not the time to adapt himself to his gun-stock, if he is to make good shooting. He expects his guns—a pair or set of three—to be accurately and precisely adapted to him, so as to save him time, which has become so much more valuable to him in shooting driven game than it was felt to be when his birds were flushed up at his feet, or nearly so, and flew away from him. This explains much that happened in gun-fitting forty years ago, and the manner then obtaining of fitting guns in the gunmaker's establishment, after the mode for which Mr. James Purdey obtained such a high reputation. Shooters did not then obtain such absolutely accurate fitting as they now do, because then it was not required.

There were not so many birds to shoot thirty or forty years ago as there are to-day, and what there were to be shot were more regularly distributed over the shooting ground, calling for more walking but much less and much slower actual shooting. The gunner, in short, could take his time between each shot, and did so, while the quarry was being bagged and fresh game found and flushed. There not only were many fewer cartridges discharged, but there was a much longer interval between the discharge of each cartridge by the persevering gunner. Nowadays, as already stated, he has to fire six shots in the time it formerly took to fire one, and anything that delays him in taking accurate aim must be avoided as far as possible when birds are streaming over his head and he has quickly to make his bag or let his birds escape. A well-fitting gun, or set of guns, therefore, becomes an absolute necessity, as they never have been before. The alternative of badly-fitting weapons is loss of time, loss of birds, and loss of sport. It is no wonder, then, that those who drive their game and shoot many hundred cartridges in a day demand accurately-fitting guns to do it with. Without good fitting, in fact, the present day game-shot could not get through his work, and such hurried shooting as he did get through could not be his best. It can be easily understood, then, why greater attention is now bestowed upon the proper fitting of guns both by gunners and their gunmakers. The result is the recent introduction of many refinements in fitting with which gunmakers forty years ago never had to be troubled, and the laying down of rules which demand very close observation and attention by those who devote themselves entirely to the art of gun-fitting, which cannot be mastered quickly. Gun-fitting to-day is a much more intricate and closely-studied branch of gunmaking than it was in the days of our fathers forty, or even thirty, years ago.

There is no want of good authorities whose published works can be consulted concerning the rules that have to be observed in gun-fitting. Then again, those who want ocular demonstrations of the best modern gun-fitting can see it daily conducted, and, by payment of a moderate fee, may obtain the results arrived at in fitting by a visit to any of the popular shooting schools, where quite half the time of the experts is now devoted to that very useful branch. The modern sportsman can very well spend an hour or two being fitted for his guns at the grounds of such schools as The Metropolitan, The Regent's, The North-Western, The London Sporting Park, The Hendon, The Badminton, and various others. He will find the "Try-Gun" used at each and all of them. This as is well known, is a skeleton gun with many adjustable parts that, when locked after being altered to suit, leave the gun quite rigid enough for shooting purposes. This is an improvement on the old adjustable measurement stock of fifty years ago, and saves the fitter a good deal of trouble, besides dispensing with a variety of trial guns, which once were necessary. Within the last ten or twelve years the original try-gun has been itself very greatly improved, and when properly used as an appliance for the gun-fitter, it is a very useful tool that can show the gunner as well as the fitter some of the requisite points and dimensions in fitting. Every gunmaker now has his try-gun of more or less ingenious construction, but even still there are fitters who prefer to dispense with it and rely on a large selection of variously stocked guns. They believe that it is easier to shoot with a real actual gun than with the try-gun, however skilfully made and jointed. There is, of course, a difference perceptible between the "feel" of a try-gun and that of an actual gun, but it is not so material as to affect the shooting. Those gun-fitters out of favour to the use of try-gun, and find it advantageous to see how nearly they can bring it to the requirements of their clients. It is especially useful in demonstrating any peculiarities of the shooter, which have to be provided for in the building of his guns.

There is no mystery about the rules of gun-fitting. They are laid down in all the text-books of gunmaking, though expressed in language too technical for the layman thoroughly to understand. They should be plain enough, however, to the specialist in gun-fitting, who has no excuse for ignorance of them. His real difficulty begins in their application to individual cases. There are many differences to be noted in the shooting even of twin brothers, imperceptible perhaps to the ordinary eye, but evident they should be at the end of half-an-hour's shooting of clays, to the practised and experienced gun-fitter. His diagnosis has to be as carefully made as that of a medical man before he finds out the causes of bad shooting. It is in the quickness and certainty with which a skilled gun-fitter ascertains the weakness and faults of his clients that he shows his experience and skill. Though the barrels may be the most important part of a gun, in respect that the shooting depends almost entirely upon them, the supreme test of the well-made and carefully fitted gun is in the stock. Barrel-making and action-filing are plain sailing compared to the stocking in the manufacture of a gun that is expected to shoot well. There is comparatively speaking very little difference between the barrels and actions of one best gun and another. They are as nearly duplicates of each other as man's skill can make them, assuming best material and best workmanship. It is in the stocking and finishing that gunmaking skill is tested and tried to the utmost. All that skill is based upon the measurements of the skilled gun-fitter. An error in one measurement of the stock may render the whole gun useless to the shooter so far as shooting with it goes. Hence the immense importance we attach to skill in fitting. Gun-fitting, in short, should never be entrusted to an apprentice or very young man. It requires not only skill but also experience, beyond that of a youth, of the faults and peculiarities of shooters in the field, which have to be detected in the shooting ground in practice at clay birds. A first-rate gun-smith may never have seen a gun fired and still do his part of the work on it to perfection. But the gun-fitter of skill has to be well acquainted with sporting usages and surroundings in order to interpret the needs and requirements of each sportsman who consults him. He has, in short, to know a good deal not only about guns, but also about gunners and their habits and peculiarities, in order to be on the watch for their appearance in the shooting ground. He has to study the individuality not only of each shooter, but also of each gun, and to ascertain how near each other he can bring them so as to produce thoroughly harmonious work in the field.

We have heard it said that eighty men out of a hundred can shoot fairly well with any ordinary game-gun. This cannot be admitted, but, assuming its truth for the moment, what would become of the other twenty? And how is any shooter to be certain that he is not among that score of peculiarly constituted gunners? One-half of the score may be novices without mannerisms to eradicate or provide for, but it would be found very probably that each man of the score was differently constructed physically. Accurate and skilful gun-fitting would have to provide for every such physical difference, or the gun would not be an accurate fit for the shooter. The practised and experienced gun-fitter can run his eye over his client and take in almost at a glance all outward peculiarities in his build. He does not need to measure the length of his arms, the width of his chest, the length of his neck, and the height of his finger. He can tell these points almost at a glance, but only after he has seen his client devote half-an-hour or so to the smashing of clays before his eyes can he discover many other points that require attention equally in the shooter's eyesight, nervous organisation, and general carriage in shooting, as well as the mounting of his gun, his muscular development and strength of arm, the shape of his trigger-finger and size of hands, which all have their results in the dimensions of a really well and accurately fitted gun. With such a gun it is entirely the shooter's own fault (from want of practice or otherwise) if he cannot shoot well and consistently. We need not go into all the technical points in which a gun has to be altered to meet each and all of the peculiarities of the shooter. These peculiarities are entirely personal to the shooter himself, and, as a general rule, are exactly the same in no other man. No man's handwriting is exactly the same as another's, however like it may be, and no two men's bodily build and personal peculiarities in mind or manner are altogether the same. All these considerations add to the difficulties that have to be met and overcome by the specialist who is really skilful and painstaking in fitting men with game-guns. Furthermore, that specialist, if he is also a shooting instructor—and whether or not—has to consider whether his client is a novice or a veteran in shooting, and act accordingly. The veteran's peculiarities, even of manner, he judges are irremovable by tuition, and have to be allowed for in the build of the gun, whereas the novice's manner of shooting can be altered and improved with time and practice combined with careful tuition, and may be treated less seriously in the gun-building that has to follow. The young novice's manner of shooting is like a clean sheet of paper, whereas that of the veteran in shooting is a printed book that cannot be altered or blotted out and has to be allowed for as unchangeable and ineradicable, however faulty. All this has to be summed up in the mind of the fitter of skill before he determines all his dimensions. These dimensions are such as are presumed to make the most of the shooter's shooting powers, developed or to be developed. Every carefully and skilfully fitted gun should show the gunner's powers at their best. It is to obtain that certainty that he pays his gunmaker sixty or seventy guineas each for his guns. If he does not obtain a gun that fits him and enables him to shoot his best, he does not obtain full value for his cheque. Every shooter who does much shooting would prefer one gun that exactly fits him to two guns that do not. The difference is that with the former the shooter can put his gun up almost unconsciously and get on his bird at once, whereas with the latter the gun requires readjustment to the shoulder every time before firing, and birds are missed. A well-balanced, fairly light, well-fitted gun is a pleasure to shoot with, while an ill-fitting one, however beautifully made of the best materials, is a constant annoyance. It will be realised, then, why sportsmen are so keen about the fit of their guns, and how much importance is attached, with good reason, to the art of gun-fitting. The gunmaker has no more important duty to attend to than the accurate fitting of his gun-stocks to the build and peculiarities of his customers. On the skill with which his stocks are fitted and finished, in fact, depends his standing among his fellows as a high-class manufacturer.

RACKETS QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—We are in difficulties: can you kindly tell us the correct height of the service line from the floor, also the depth of board in a racket court?

TWO DUFFERS.

[The service or cut line is painted on the front wall 8ft. from the floor; the board is 2ft. 2in. in depth.—ED.]

THE CALCUTTA TO MIDNAPUR ROAD.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Two of us propose cycling from Calcutta to Midnapur. Can you give us "sailing directions" and tell us how far it is and whether there are any rivers to cross—we believe there are. Also are there any dak bungalows on the road?

T. AND S.

[There is no road from Calcutta; the road begins at Ooloobaria, down the river. This may be reached by steamer, or one may bike down to Budge-Budge on the Calcutta side, cross the river in a dinghy to Ooloobaria and pick up the road there. The distance is 52 miles—Ooloobaria to Midnapur—there are three big unbridged rivers to cross, the Damuda at Moheshdanga, the Rupnarain at Nowpolla and the Cossye at Panchkura, also there is the Cossye again at Kongsapalty close to Midnapur, here the stream is narrow. There is a fairly good dak bungalow at Ooloobaria, a P. W. D. Canal bungalow at Panchkura and a capital dak bungalow at Midnapur. At Panchkura practically no supplies can be got. It is some time since we cycled over this road; but the last three occasions on which we did so we were rather sorry for ourselves: it was as bad, most of the way, as any in Lower Bengal.—Ed.]

A CURIOUS DOE OF THE BLACK BUCK SPECIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—While out at work in the district the other day, I came across a herd of black buck consisting of two males and several females. I called for my field glasses, which I always have by me, and put them up to see if I could notice any horns of unusual length. I have shot one recently with 24 inch horns and two or three over 22 inches. Another sportsman of the district shot a 26 inch horn shortly before I shot my long one. To continue my story, I watched the herd in question for some time and noticed that one of the dark coloured animals had strange horns. I took my rifle (Sherwood ·300) and went towards them, but could not get within decent shooting distance of the beast I wanted. It went off hard and I got on my horse to keep it in sight. It gave me the slip in some high fields, and as I had some work to attend to, I left the creature alone for a bit. On my return I hunted every field near where he had disappeared, but could find no trace of him. Finally, giving it up as a "bad job" I was making for camp, when I suddenly roused my friend in a field, but he would not stop. I ran hard after him for nearly a mile and finally came up behind the mound of a katcha well within a hundred yards of him. I now discovered that I had dropped all my cartridges, but one, in the chase. However, I took a snap shot and bowled him over. On walking up to it, I found, to my utter astonishment, that the "buck" was not a buck at all but a doe. It was a very dark colour, such as is seen on an old buck; in fact there was no difference between the colouring of the two whatever. The most curious thing of all was that it had horns 18½ inches long—does of this species, as every one knows, never have horns. What is more the horns had no spiral at all, but curved straight back over the ears in a semicircle, the tips protruding below the throat on either side. They were closely annulated and very thin.

I do not think anything so curious as this has ever been seen or heard of before, and shall be glad of any information on the subject.

I have had the skin carefully taken off and am going to get it stuffed whole. Should anyone care to see it on its return or desire to have further particulars regarding it, I shall be glad to oblige him.

SPORTING QUERIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Can you, through the medium of your highly esteemed paper, let me know which has the greatest speed for the given distance of 100 yards a horse or a bicyclist, also which is faster, a buck or a cheetah?

I should also very much like to know, to settle a wager, the highest speed which can be attained by a buck over a short distance, and the greatest height a tiger can claw a branch in the attempt to pull down a man from a machan.

Kindly let me know the winner of the Melbourne Cup this year.

"Sport."

[A race horse would certainly beat a bicyclist in the hundred yards. We have no record of the horse for the distance, but the animal would be on its legs and away long before the cyclist got going. In a contest over a mile the case might be different: for example the world's mile record for a galloping horse is 1min. 30-4/5secs. While the cycling record is 1min. 20-4/5secs. We should say a cheetah—commonly supposed to be the swiftest running animal in the world—would outpace a black buck over a hundred yards, but we have no buck records. As to the tiger's reach much would depend on the length of the animal. A man in a machan eleven feet above ground level is usually considered safe.

The Melbourne Cup this year was won by Mr. R. L. Cleland's Apologue.—Ed.]

GAME PRESERVATION IN INDIA—ONE OF ITS DIFFICULTIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I send you enclosed a letter which has reached me: it speaks for itself. I send it to you to show what hard work it will require to establish anything like game laws in India, when gentlemen of this description evidently freely employ natives to trap wholesale in what is the open season. Apart from the question of trapping there is the cruelty of sending live birds over such distances it being practically impossible for them to be properly fed and watered en route.

It might do some good if you would refer in your paper to this instance, suppressing the man's actual name.

I am glad to be able to inform you that I have been trying to assist game preservation by asking the Bombay Natural History Society to take the matter up: they have made representations to the Railway Board and at the recent Conference it was passed unanimously that all the lines there represented would prohibit the carriage during the close season of their districts of game birds by their trains, the consignor rendering himself liable to a penalty for so doing.

The Honorary Secretary of the Society will, I believe, advise you of this, and I mention it as a matter of interest in connection with the enclosed.

Byculla.

[Appended is the letter referred to by our Correspondent.—Ed.]

Sir,—I am prepared to supply you livestock at the lowest rate as follows:—

Pigeon	Rs.	2 per dozen
Quails	,,	2 ,, ,,
Partridges	,,	3 ,, ,,
Grouse	,,	4 ,, ,,
Wild ducks, large	,,	12 ,, ,,

THE "SWAN."

As each succeeding Christmas brings to mind the same perplexing question of what to give, one is apt to turn a thought to that gift we have always found so surely acceptable because of its usefulness, its reliability, and its practical nature—the "Swan" Fountain Pen. For a young friend seeking success at school or in business nothing could be more suitable. For men friends who seem to have complete smoking outfits, and a stock of tie pins, sleeve links, and smart buttons, a "Swan" is sure to be welcome. For ladies' correspondence, literary work, or homely accounts, nothing could be more appropriate. In fact it is difficult to think of anyone to whom a perfect fountain pen would not prove most acceptable.

And one is always sure that the "Swan" is the best, and that it will last for years.

The "Swan" is a gift which will be admired not merely on Christmas Day and then laid aside and scarcely ever looked at again. On the contrary it will be kept in the pocket, or on the desk, and it's first use will probably be the dashing off of grateful thanks to the thoughtful donor. It will always be before the recipient, constantly reminding him or her of the sender.

It is supplied in plain vulcanite or in pretty patterns of silver and gold, or in a happy compromise between the two, in vulcanite with gold bands.

A fully illustrated catalogue of "Swans" ranging from Rs. 8 upwards will be sent on application to the makers, Mabie, Todd and Co., 79 and 80, High Holborn, London, W.C. We would refer our readers to the "Swan" advertisement in to-day's issue.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR HOLIDAYS.

RETURN TICKETS AT REDUCED FARES.

First and Second Class Passengers.

1. During the period from the 7th to the 26th December 1907, inclusive, return tickets at single fares will be issued to first and second class passengers for any distance over 100 miles. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distance 100 miles or less on payment of fare as for 101 miles. The tickets will be available for completion of the return journey up to, and including, the 14th January 1908.

The outward journey must be completed within the same limit of time, after commencement, as allowed for single journey tickets,—vide paras. 15 and 21, pages 87 and 89 of the Monthly Time Table and Guide. One day is allowed for break of journey for every 100 miles or part of 100 miles, but no break of journey will be allowed at a station short of 101 miles from the point the journey was commenced.

Intermediate Class Passengers.

2. Return tickets will be issued during the same period and under the same conditions as to distances and break of journey to intermediate class passengers, at a charge of two third class fares.

General.

3. Tickets purchased at the Calcutta Offices (Fairlie Place and Chowringhee) will be available by trains leaving Howrah on the day of issue or on the following day. Tickets for Monday's mail trains are procurable at these offices on Saturdays. Tickets purchased at the Burra Bazar Office will be available on the day of issue only.

4. The return concession tickets for first, second and intermediate class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation, provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale :—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	Four.
Second	Five.
Intermediate (lateral compartment) ...	Eight.

5. The return concession ticket does not entitle the holder to any additional concession, such, for instance, as that under which women servants are, on payment of the next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in first or second class compartments. Concession tickets for children will be issued at half single journey fares.

6. The above arrangements apply to the East Indian Railway system, including the Tarkessur Branch, and the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway.

First Day, Tuesday, the 26th November.

FIELDS were somewhat attenuated, the Calcutta stables having departed, but some stirring finishes were seen. Mr. Rose's Primrose, who was made favourite in the Mahomed Bagh Plate, has, so far, only won a Consolation Stake at Jubbulpore, but she fully justified the faith reposed in her and made backs of her field, with two other exceptions, the favourites were knocked out, the bookmakers scoring heartily.

It was a brief, though excellent day's racing, the proceedings terminating shortly after five o'clock, much to the satisfaction of everyone, for the strain on all concerned—and particularly on the Stewards—after the Army Cup Meeting has been intense. Details:—

THE HORSE HURDLES.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 75 to the second, and Rs. 25 to the third. A high-weight handicap hurdle race for horses. 1½ miles over 6 flights.

Second Day, Thursday, the 28th November 1907.

To-day's results showed one or two reversals of form, probably due to the rigorous handicapping. Diamond, though heavily weighted, won the Consolation Plate, but Nettle ran almost in the rear of his field in the Farewell Plate, which was won by Mr. C. Murray's Imtiyas. The latter has made several appearances during the past year and his owner is to be congratulated on the victory, which was due to the splendid riding of Melsom. Details:—

Taking off clothing appears to be one of the principal elements of humour in the British play of to-day. At one theatre the hero is almost continuously in pyjamas; at another the heroine affects a bathing costume, and her admirer removes his boots and stockings; and at the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh, different articles of dress are stripped off, to the great delight of the respective appliances. A Turkish bath scene is to be recommended.

An old gentleman, rather portly and clad in a somewhat youthful suit of light grey flannel, sat on a bench in the park enjoying the day.

"What's the matter, sonny?" he asked a small urchin who lay on the grass just across the walk and stared intently.

"Why don't you go and play?"

"Don't wanter," the boy replied.

"But it is not natural," the old gentleman insisted, "for a boy to be so quiet. Why don't you run about?"

"Oh, I'm just waitin'," the little fellow answered. "I'm just waitin' till you get up. A man painted that seat about half-an-hour ago."

By Royal Warrant to His Majesty The King.

BOVRIL & MILK

is especially suitable for growing children; it is easily assimilated when milk alone cannot be digested.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 15th November 1907.

THE TURF.

LIVERPOOL.

INTEREST was well sustained throughout a most successful meeting, each day providing some important items and excellent sport, and though a good many folk had travelled South on Friday to try their fortunes nearer home at Windsor, a goodly company, headed by the house party from Knowsley, was left to keep up the charter on the concluding day. Another foggy night left the mist in possession of the course, and little could be seen of the first two events, which were under National Hunt Rules; but a brighter light in the air augured better luck, and the sun, gradually asserting his power, cleared the sky, and rolling up the fog, allowed a clearer view of the remaining events on the flat. The going was again heavy, but fields averaged well.

LEICESTER.

An agreeable surprise awaited visitors who left London on Monday in a pea-soupy fog to find a gloriously brilliant day at Oadby, with a November sun so powerful as to cause visitors to discard their greatcoats. It was doubtless the perfect day that induced a big attendance from the town, though it was not market day, and the specials from various parts were well patronised, the Great Central having opened up new districts, now an easy railway journey from the course. A fairly good muster occupied the stands, and sat out in the paddock during the intervals. Under the welcome change the course had rapidly improved, and was much better going than expected, while fields ruled well throughout.

Perfect weather on Tuesday again favoured the meeting, which will be marked with a red letter in Leicester's calendar, and brought another big muster to the ground—one of the best we have seen for some time. The London division was swelled by members en route to Derby, and the meeting had its usual charm for the fair sex, whose dainty costumes made a pretty picture of the paddock.

DERBY.

Sudden as unexpected, yet wonderfully efficacious in clearing the lowlands of mist and fog, the gale that raged during Tuesday night did good service, leaving a clear, bright, wholesome day in which to go racing, and materially improving the course, which after recent rains had got a bit holding. With the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire's patronage unavoidably withdrawn through his lordship's ill-health, one missed the Chatsworth party, but from neighbouring seats the old custom was kept up, and a goodly company filled the paddock and the club enclosure, including many local notabilities, whilst, as usual, the fair sex was strongly in evidence. London was well represented in Tattersall's.

BETTING: 6 to 1 agst. Juanna colt, 100 to 14 Rodney, 9 to 1 Quelpart, 10 to 1 each French Partridge, St. Elf, and St. Orodoux, 100 to 6 each Mocassin and Raeberry, 100 to 7 Cornubian colt, 20 to 1 each Llangwm and others (offered).

Won by a neck; four lengths separated second and third. Time—1min. 2-3/5secs.

With the lulling of the breeze the mists became again strongly in evidence, and a dark sky completed the accessories of a grey November day. Though the weather was very unpromising, it had little effect on the attendance, which, in fact, showed an improvement on Wednesday's muster, the club enclosure containing a goodly company, which included most of the leading patrons of the Turf, the fair sex, as usual, being strongly represented. The going was not at all bad, thanks to the sensible custom of keeping the grass long, and with the arrival list materially supplemented, fields were well up to Derby form, the officials being kept hard at it all day.

The alteration of the distance of the Derby Gold Cup race from the straight mile to a mile and six furlongs has unquestionably taken the wind out of the sails, so to speak, of the Manchester November Handicap, and at the same time has effected no improvement in the Midland race, for the Derby course here is far from an ideal one. Still, public interest, as evidenced by the crowded rings to-day, is as great as ever, the only falling off in attendance being noticeable in the county enclosure, due to the absence of the house parties from Chatsworth and Rangemore.

It was a perfect autumn day, the sun shining brilliantly from an unclouded sky, with just sufficient nip in the air to remind us that we have reached the last days of the racing season.

THE CHADDESDEN PLATE (a high-weight handicap)—Of 250sovs.; second to receive 20sovs. 6 furlongs, straight.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THERE were some notable happenings in League football on Saturday, and perhaps the most significant was the first game played in London between two teams in the premier division of the Football League. In the second place, Hull City were deposed from the leadership of the Second Division, Oldham Athletic now heading them on goal average, and in the third place two home teams went down in the Southern League against opponents who on paper form should certainly not have won. In the First Division of the Football League a couple of teams playing before their own supporters had their pride humbled, but only one Second Division side was beaten on its own ground, so that visiting clubs did not have so large a share of the spoils as on some previous Saturdays this season. Once more it is averred that a League record crowd was at Stamford Bridge, but this statement has so often been made that I prefer to wait for official figures before commenting upon it. I do not forget the supposed 70,000 when Manchester United visited Chelsea, and the official figures showed an attendance of nearly 30,000 less.

Southern League.

The most dramatic result in the series of Southern League games played in the metropolitan area was the overthrow of Milwall at North Greenwich by Tottenham Hotspur. It was so unexpected. It was impossible from previous happenings this season to argue a win for the visitors. Milwall had played four home games, and of these they had won three and drawn the other, while the 'Spurs had won only one game away—against Portsmouth—and of the three last games on their own enclosure they lost one and shared points in the other two. And yet they go to Milwall and come away with the honours. No wonder football is popular, for it is so full of uncertainties. Leyton did just about what was anticipated in holding their own with Plymouth Argyle, and a similar remark applies to Brentford, who had their series of home successes interrupted by Queen's Park Rangers, one of the most improved teams in the League. Their form away from home is remarkable, for they have not returned pointless from a foreign engagement since 14th September. Two matters in connection with Saturday's game should be called attention to —Brentford gave away their first point on their own ground, and the Rangers failed to score two or more goals for the first time.

All the Southern League games were most stubbornly contested, and if the scoring may be accepted as an indication of the relative merits of the teams engaged, there is practically nothing to choose between them. In the seven games in which a decisive result was arrived at the margin in favour of the winners was a solitary goal, and I very much doubt if there be a parallel to this in the history of the League. Crystal Palace won their third match of the season away from Sydenham, and on this occasion Portsmouth were their victims. It is curious that the Palace should have overthrown three teams with such reputations as Southampton, Tottenham Hotspur, and Portsmouth, and that two of these away wins were registered before they had secured a victory on their own ground. West Ham United struggled hard at Bristol, but the Rovers were bent on winning. It must not be overlooked, that the United were deprived of Gault's services in the second half, and that they were most seriously handicapped in consequence. His absence probably made all the difference between a loss and a draw. Brighton and Hove won their second match of the tournament, and the first before their own supporters, by scoring the only goal in the game with Luton, and Reading managed to get the better of Southampton at Elm Park. Watford followed up their emphatic success at Cassio-road over Reading by a win at the expense of Northampton, who have not won a match for five weeks, and are now rapidly descending the table. New Brompton deserved their success against Norwich City, and Swindon did well to play Bradford Park Avenue to a draw.

League I.

The interest shown in the game at Stamford Bridge between Chelsea and Woolwich Arsenal was tremendous, and the result was as inspiriting to the home side as it was disappointing to Woolwich, who tasted the bitters of defeat for the first time since 28th September, when with a weakened team they failed to hold their own with Preston North end, at Deepdale. One effect of the two points going to Chelsea's account is that it enables them to pass the possession of the wooden spoon to Birmingham, and the Pensioners are also brought within two points of Notts County, who have played a couple more games. The quality of the football served up was disappointing, and not worthy of the occasion, though this was probably largely due to the excitement which obviously had the teams in its grip. The honours went to the team that deserved them. One of the smartest performances of the afternoon stands to the credit of Bristol City, who beat Middlesbrough, at Ayresome Park, by two clear goals, this being the first win that had come the way of the Westerners away from Ashton Gate since 7th September, when they took a couple of points from the Arsenal, at Plumstead. The great match at Bramall-lane between the two Sheffield clubs saw the home side go under, and another startling result was the 5—1 defeat of Preston North End, by Bury, at Gigg-lane. It was the heaviest score put up against the North End in the tournament. The forwards in the Manchester United-Everton match at Clayton beat the defence at both ends in the second half, and the Mancunians just scraped through by appropriating four of the seven goals that were scored. Nottingham Forest obtained four goals on their own ground against Sunderland, and their supporters were highly delighted, especially as the Wearsiders only once penetrated the home defence. The County side, however, cut a sorry figure at Anfield-road, Liverpool putting on a half-dozen goals without response. Blackburn Rovers get the better of the tussle they had with Birmingham, Newcastle United easily overcame Bolton Wanderers, but Aston Villa did less than they should have done by allowing Manchester City to play them to a draw at Aston Park.

League II.

Hearty congratulations to Clapton Orient on their emphatic win over Chesterfield. The Orientals were sadly in need of points and goals, and they obtained both. The small attendance at the match was a consequence of the poor form shown against Southend United, but it is when a club is down on its luck that its followers should rally to its support. The Orient had obtained one goal in their five preceding games, and now they score five in one afternoon, as a set-off against the trio of fives that have been registered against them. Fulham held their own at Wolverhampton in the first half, but not in the second, and consequently lost their first two points away from home since 28th September. The Cottagers have lost too many matches to date, but it is absurd to suggest they are out of the running, as some critics have done. It would be better to wait until after the New Year games are over before dogmatising as to the probable winners and runners-up of the competition. West Bromwich captured two very valuable points at Blackpool, but Oldham Athletic lost one to Burnley that may cause them deep regret at a subsequent stage of the campaign. Gainsborough romped home against Lincoln City, and Glossop, who had not previously scored more than a couple of goals in one afternoon, pierced Hull City's defence on five occasions. It was a wonderful performance for a club that had only previously won one game on its own ground. Grimsby had to struggle hard to defeat Stoke, and Leeds City could not do better than share points with Barnsley, but Leicester Fosse and Stockport County upset well-fancied teams by their respective wins over Bradford City and Derby County.

Old Malvernians vs. Oxford University.—The Old Malvernians were well represented against Oxford University at Queen's Club on Saturday, and won a bright, fast game. R. E. Foster made one of his rare appearances on the football field, and his fine work had much to do with the Old Boys' victory. Foster, indeed, showed much of his old-time pace and cleverness, and was responsible for some of the most brilliant work of the afternoon. Oxford, although clearly the inferior side, were by no means outplayed; but while there was little fault to be found with the Dark Blues' forwards, the Malvernians held a distinct advantage in defence. Page and Balfour at back always needed a great deal of passing, whereas the University pair were constantly bothered by Foster and S. H. Day. Oxford, however, were the first to score, a well-engineered combined movement terminating with a shot into the corner of the net by Lacon ten minutes after the start. A quarter of an hour later R. E. Foster, taking a clever pass from S. H. Day with splendid judgment, equalised from close quarters. Before half-time S. H. Day gave the Old Boys the lead. Interval:—Old Malvernians, 2; Oxford University, 1.

Five minutes after the resumption another fine pass by S. H. Day gave Foster a golden opportunity, and he increased his side's advantage with a clever shot. Before the end Oxford put in a good deal of attacking, but Page and Balfour proved equal to all emergencies. Result:—Old Malvernians, 3; Oxford University, 1.

Casuals vs. Cambridge University.—At Tufnell Park on Saturday, Cambridge University had to submit to their third successive defeat in eight days. The side was weakened by the absence of Yates and Farnfield. The forward line, as rearranged, was not a success, and although the Casuals won by 2 goals to 1, at no time did the play come up to the standard expected of such clubs. Individually Tudor-Owen, Hoffmeister, and Henley did well, and their efforts helped to brighten an otherwise moderate game. The Casuals had most of the attack in the first-half, but it was not until just before half-time that the opening score came. Tudor-Owen, receiving from Thew, defeated Whale with a splendid cross shot. Interval:—Casuals, 1; Cambridge, nil.

On crossing over, Morgan-Owen and Birks were at once prominent for the Casuals, but as the game progressed Cambridge improved, Herman and Forman especially doing well. The latter once brought Henley to his knees with a splendid shot, following a capital centre by Hoffmeister. At the other end Morgan-Owen was frequently busy, but Cambridge continued to have the better of the exchanges, and Snowden-Smith equalised. Almost immediately afterwards Birks again gave the Casuals the lead, and although Cambridge had most of the attack until the end, thanks to a capital defence, in which Henley often did great things, the visitors failed to draw level. Result:—Casuals, 2; Cambridge University, 1.

RUGBY RULES.

London Scottish vs. Richmond.—In view of the recent marked improvement in the play of Richmond and their successive victories over Leicester and Old Leysians, it was generally expected that this match at Richmond would produce a stubborn struggle. This expectation was not realised. Almost from the first the Scottish had the game in hand, and in the end won with almost ludicrous ease by the large margin of one goal and six tries to nothing. This result in no way flatters the winners. It fails, in fact, to represent their share of a very one-sided and hence uninteresting match so far, that is to say, as the issue was concerned.

The conditions were ideal, the ground being fast with just a nice "grip," while there was no wind. When Richmond kicked off before some 5,000 spectators, a keen, hard game seemed in prospect.

The earlier "scrums" seemed to justify this expectation, but once the sides settled down the issue was never in doubt. Packing finely and using their feet with great skill, the Scottish forwards soon obtained complete control over the game. A fine bout of passing in which Scott drew the defence before transferring to Moir, enabled that player to open the scoring. Geddes just failed with the fairly easy place. Soon afterwards Geddes, who was the best forward on the field, forced his way over, but again just failed with the place. The next feature was a fine dribble by Walter, which should have yielded a try. Simson passed forward, however, when Moir had only to get the ball to score.

A try was soon forthcoming, Robertson crowning a good rush by getting over near the posts. Geddes kicked a goal. Richmond rallied after this, and for the second time got into Scottish quarters. Godfrey threw away the advantage, however, by an ill-timed attempt to drop a goal. The Scottish were soon attacking again, and Sloan scored after fine passing by coming round outside his wing after the latter had been checked. This was the best try of the match. Geddes failed at the difficult place, and the sides crossed over with the Scottish leading by one goal four tries to none.

The second half was ludicrously one-sided. Richmond were kept on the defensive practically throughout. The Scottish seemed, however, content with their lead, and but few attempts were made to open out the game. Only two further tries were registered by the Scottish, Moir scoring at the left corner after one of the few bouts of passing in which the Scottish threes indulged, while Gowland got over from a line-out. Scott failed at both the places, and the Scottis won by 1 goal 6 tries (23 points) to nil. Richmond, it may be added, were at full strength, the only absentee of note being Chase.

London Irish vs. London Welsh.—Perry Hill, Catford, was the venue of the first meeting of the seasons of these very friendly rivals on Saturday. There was a capital attendance. The Irish fielded exactly as advertised, but the Welsh again suffered many changes, notably J. C. Jenkins and Alban Davies, two forwards who have been at the top of their form this season, being absent. The Irish forwards dribbled away in characteristic fashion, and sustained an attack for a minute or two on the Welsh line. The Welsh combination showed improvement, Gwilym Jones and Maddocks being responsible for smart defensive tactics. Harding's usefulness as a rover soon became apparent, and though playing up a steep gradient, the forwards fed Morgan and Rowlands just often enough to enable the Welsh backs to develop their attack. It was Rowlands who made the opening through which Maddocks scored the first try, which Harding converted. Just on half-time the ball was kicked over the line, and Lloyd won the race, scoring near the dead-ball line, no goal resulting.

The second half was productive of a brilliant Welsh try, Morgan, Rowlands, Maddocks, Gwilym Jones, and Meyrick participating in the round, which ended in Neagle's getting over between the posts, the place kicking unaccountably failing. Unfortunately, Meyrick, who passed to Neagle on being tackled fairly by O'Grady, sustained an accident which caused his retirement. A mark by Coppock led to another attack on the Irish line, and Harding subsequently essayed a drop at goal, but missed it by inches. The Irish forwards, who were well led by Watson, Whelan, and the Walshes, tried hard to score, but the defence of the Welsh was too much for them, and the inequality of the sides at half and three-quarter greatly favoured the Welsh. Result:—London Welsh, 1 goal 2 tries (11 points); London Irish, nil.

Blackheath vs. Cambridge University.—Blackheath experienced their fourth successive defeat at the Rectory Field on Saturday, being badly beaten by Cambridge University to the tune of 34 points to 6. The Light Blues' triumph was thoroughly well deserved, but it may be recorded that Mainprice was lost to Blackheath after thirty minutes' play, a straining of some sinews in his left leg bringing about his retirement. In the Blackheath rear division all was chaos; indecision and inepness were rampant. The club's utter feebleness in defence was demonstrated again and again by the manner in which the Cambridge right wing (Macleod and Wright), the other factor which contributed to Blackheath's defeat, by virtue of speed and brilliant tactics, ran completely through the backs. Unfortunately the match afforded us no criterion of the real merit of the Cambridge fifteen. In Atkinson the Light Blues possess a worthy successor to Scoular. The Scotsman tackles well, and kicks with splendid judgment. The rearrangement of the three-quarter line seems to promise well, but it would be unwise to infer too much from Saturday's game. At half Gadby and Holloway did all that one expected of them without showing any distinct ability. The playing of the former at "stand off" instead of "scrum" half has proved a distinct success. Forward, the Light Blues are nothing out of the common, though the reappearance of Lely has made considerable difference in their general play.

As for the club for whom A. L. Stokes, a son of the famous drop-kick, Leonard Stokes, played, and played splendidly, in place of L. M. Macleod, the less one says the better. The forwards, curiously enough, did better when they discarded one of their number on Mainprice's retirement, and, on the whole, they showed good work in the loose. But they badly need young blood of pace and virility. At back, as in front, uniformity and cohesion are needed before any great measure of success will come Blackheath way.

Little need be said of the actual play. After Purdon had missed an excellent chance of scoring for Blackheath, Macleod and Wright ran through for Cambridge, the former scoring, but failing to place the goal. Then Holloway dropped a goal for the Light Blues, and Mainprice dropped a goal from a penalty for the club, who were thus four points to the bad at the interval. Good play by Chambers and Newbold enabled Hopley to add to the Blackheath score, but thereafter the club collapsed, and Cambridge did practically as they liked. Macleod, well served by Wright, got in thrice, and Dew and Gimson once each. Macleod improved one and Atkinson three of these tries, whilst Wright dropped a goal. Stokes was always prominent for the club. Result:—Cambridge University, 6 goals (2 dropped) 2 tries (34 points); Blackheath, 1 penalty goal 1 try (6 points).

Oxford University vs. Harlequins.—After their brilliant victory over United Services it was expected that the Dark Blues would have the whip hand of the Harlequins on Saturday, but although they did ultimately prove successful, the Harlequins led at half-time, and were only in the minority of a single point at the finish. Oxford relied on the same side that had won on the previous Wednesday, but they did not play the same game, and the backs generally were anything but good; the halves were far too selfish, and again and again Steinthal bungled his passes. It was evidently an off day for him, and once more very few opportunities were given Gilray of showing what he was worth. The Harlequins forwards went off in very promising fashion, and within ten minutes of the start Young opened out to Lambert, passed to Lewis just as Davies collared him, and the Exeter player scored try, which Lambert converted.

A good bit of work by Williamson enabled Oxford to attack in turn, and a scrum was formed close to the Harlequins' line. Lewis sent the ball down field in a long kick, but Davies who was well clear of everyone gathered it, and, taking a long drop, landed it between the uprights. Oxford pressed again for awhile, but the attack failed, and the Harlequins returning, Young passed out to Lambert, and he ran in, his goal-kick proving a failure. Just before changing ends, Gilray passed out to Steinthal, and Vassall and Martin going in, the latter got through close to the line. Roberts failed in the place, and at half-time the Harlequins led by 6 points to 7.

Soon after the resumption, the Oxford forward, led by Huskin went away in brilliant style, and carrying the ball over the line, Robertson-Durham touched down, and Roberts kicked a fine goal. Sibree got his backs in motion, and a good combined efforts, in which Stoop, Lambert, and Tarr participated, ended in the latter getting through. Lambert's place-kick failed, and although the Harlequins had rather the better of the remaining play, they could not score again, and Oxford won by a placed goal a dropped goal and a try (12 points) to a placed goal and two tries (11 points).

CAMBRIDGE FRESHMEN'S SPORTS.

One of the best performances accomplished during the first stage of the 'Varsity Freshmen's Sports at Cambridge last Friday was that of A. C. B. Bellerby, of St. Lawrence and Emmanuel, in the high jump. Not for some time past has a freshman equalled his leap of 5 feet 5¼ inches. He nearly failed at 3 inches less, but fortunately cleared the bar at his third attempt. The sprinters were of very moderate class, all failing to get within eleven seconds. W. G. Wellenhall, of City of London and Caius, the winner of the first heat of the 100 yards, was also successful in the quarter-mile, in which his time of 53-4/5secs. was up to the average.

The weight was secured by D. T. Lacon, of Eton and Trinity Hall, with a throw of 31 feet 2½ inches, as many as six competitors being within 18 inches of this distance. The 120 yards strangers' handicap attracted thirteen competitors, the heat winners being S. Maugham, Emmanuel (4 yards start), R. H. Lindsay Watson, Trinity (1 yard), and H. L. P. Jolly, Trinity (3 yards). H. P. Dawson, Oundle and Trinity ran a strong race in the mile, finishing particularly well, five yards in front of W. Gavin, Uppingham and Trinity, in 4mins. 46-2/5secs. The hurdles was run off in two heats, the first in each being A. E. Boycott, St. John's, Leatherhead, and Selwyn, and A. C. B. Bellerby, who each took 19secs.

Eight events constituted the second stage of the Sports on Monday, the programme embracing two strangers' races. Perhaps the best performances were by C. Armstrong, of St. Lawrence's, Ramsgate, and Emmanuel, who cleared 20 feet 10½ inches in the long jump, and R. H. Lindsay Watson, of Trinity, in the Strangers' 120 yards handicap. The latter's performance of completing the distance off the yard mark in 12-2/5secs. was very creditable. The other strangers' event was a mile handicap, which resulted in favour of H. C. V. Jones, of Emmanuel, who had 90 yards' start, in 4mins 32-4/5secs. As was expected, W. G. Wellenhall, of City of London and Caius, easily carried off the 100 yards inside 11secs. M. D. G. Murray, of St. Peter's, York, and Trinity, had a much harder task in the hurdles, his advantage over the second man, A. E. Boycott, St. John's, Leatherhead, and Selwyn, being only half a yard. The winner's time was 18-1/5secs. S. J. Williamson, Highgate and Pembroke, ran strongly in the half-mile, and won by 15 yards in 2mins. 5-3/5secs., whilst making the running for practically the whole of the distance. K. Hooper, Aldenham and Queen's, was successful in the three miles in 16mins. 6-4 5secs.

ROWING

THE COLQUHOUN SCULLS.

The preliminary heats of the Colquhoun Sculls were decided at Cambridge yesterday under tolerably good conditions. Owing to the large entry it was found necessary for three competitors to take part in the first two heats. In the opening one R. S. Hooker (Emmanuel) gained from the start, and beat T. M. Sibley (Lady Margaret) by over two lengths, with R. C. Martin (Clare) further in arrear, the winner's time being 8mins. 11secs. In the second heat H. Lamb (Clare) upset and interfered with M. N. Perrin, the Pembroke man. As a result, E. Fairburn (Jesus) gained an easy victory by 50 yards in 8mins. 1sec. The third heat resulted in an easy victory for G. A. Carver (First Trinity), who beat N. E. Howden (Jesus) by 70 yards, in 8mins. 8secs.; whilst E. W. Powell in the fourth gained an even easier triumph over M. A. Lloyd (Pembroke), winning handsomely by 90 yards in 8mins. 3secs. The semi-final heats will commence at three o'clock in afternoon.

UNIVERSITY TRIAL EIGHTS.

OXFORD.

A continuance of the fine weather was experienced yesterday afternoon, although at the onset there was every appearance of rain. The president was again present, and, accompanied by Mr. H. Gold, coached No. 1 crew, whilst Mr. Gladstone was with No. 2. Besides the usual amount of tubbing, both had a couple of journeys to Iffley and back at a stroke of 28 per minute. No change was made in the constitution of either crew, the names being:—

No. 1 Crew.—C. A. Gladstone (Christ Church) (bow), 10st. 6lb.; F. R. Cudmore (Magdalen), 11st. 13lb.; C. S. James (Christ Church), 12st. 5lb.; G. O. Willink (Corpus), 12st. 2lb.; A. McCulloch (University), 12st. 10lb.; A. E. Kitchin (St. John's), 13st.; P. R. Filleul (Wadham), 11st. 1lb.; A. C. Haberden (Trinity) (stroke), 10st. 12lb.; J. A. St. G. Robertson (New) (cox), 8st. 5½lb.

No. 2 Crew.—P. M. Newman (Trinity) (bow), 10st. 8lb.; V. Le Harry (Worcester), 10st. 5½lb.; W. Atkinson (St. John's), 11st. 5lb.; H. R. Bousey (University), 13st.; L. C. Smith (Merton), 11st.; E. Majolier (Christ Church), 13st. 2lb.; J. H. Knox (Brasenose), 11st. 12lb.; J. R. Somers Smith (Magdalen) (stroke), 10st. 12lb.; A. Weyman (University) (cox), 7st. 2½lb.

CAMBRIDGE.

No changes were made in the Trial Eights, which, but for the usual chopping about and the inclusion of one or two of the Colquhoun candidates, may now be regarded as settled. For the first time yesterday tubbing was indulged in, all the aspirants passing through the hands of the coaches, Messrs. D. C. R. Stuart and E. W. Powell, before the outing in the eights. The order of rowing was:—

No. 1 Crew.—T. D. Richardson (Trinity Hall) (bow), J. N. Peck (Caius), L. T. S. Barrett (Christ's), J. Walmesley (First Trinity), G. C. Hutchinson (Trinity Hall), G. L. Thomson (Trinity Hall), E. S. Hornidge (Trinity Hall), G. B. Lloyd (First Trinity) (stroke), C. C. Dickens (Trinity Hall) (cox).

No. 2 Crew.—R. E. Freith (Selwyn) (bow), Hon. J. H. Parker (Third Trinity), E. G. S. Cane (Jesus), F. G. Hudson (Jesus), C. J. W. Henslow (Lady Margaret), H. E. Kitching (Trinity Hall), J. C. Warrington (First Trinity), F. H. Jerwood (Jesus) (stroke), E. Newman (Trinity Hall) (cox).

Hunting.

THE QUETTA HUNT.

Monday, 25th November.—Hounds met at 8-30 A.M. at the 4th milestone, Belali Road, and moved off punctually to the Karez and Spinney, half a mile to the north of the road. A biggish field taxed all the energies of Colonel O'Donnell, the Field Master, and hounds who were hard at work were several times ridden off their ground by some of the more careless riders. After trying the Karez without result the Master moved off down the Baz Mohomed Khan Karez where a jackal was soon afoot. Scent was fairish and hounds hunted slowly. Across the railway hounds threw up and a longish check ensued, but finding again pushed their jack across the Samungli Road and ran into him in a deep cut in the Subalterns' Bog. Mrs. Goodwin on Muskerry, late the property of General Sir H. Smith Dorrien, was awarded the honours of the chase, and amongst other ladies were noticed Mrs Bolleau, Miss Quinlan, Miss McMahon, Miss Day, Miss Lincoln, Captain Day, Mrs. Cobbold, Major Waterfield, Major Shearman, Captains Elliot, Swettenham, Harcourt, Parkinson, Jesse, Ashurner, Major Goodwin, Major Vaughan, Captains Toogood, Thurnall, Mr. Lake were also out.

28th November.—Hounds met at the fourth milestone on the Sirhab Road at 8-30 A.M. A fox was found in the broken ground to the East of the railway and made his point across the Meath Country to the Spinney near the Gymkhana. He was viewed away here heading for the Lora River, and after a short delay in the Spinney the pack found his line and hunted him across the Samungli Road near the jail. Here they overran and a longish check ensued, but finding again raced along on a good scent into view and pulled their fox down under the wall of the cemetry. Reynard had evidently got confused when he found himself near the villages by the Samungli Road, for had he gone straight he would have made his point good in the bed of the Lora and saved his brush. A good many ladies were again out:—Mrs. Waterfield, Mrs. Goodwin, and Miss McMahon being well up; amongst others were noticed Mrs. Smith, Miss Lincoln, Mrs. Cobbold, Miss Buckland and Miss Day. General Clements, Major Westmorland, Mr. McCudden, Captain Maxwell, Captain Harcourt, Colonel Mirewether, Mr. Egerton, Major Trydell, and Major Waterfield.

ROYAL DRAGOONS' POLO TOURNAMENT.

THE FINAL.

The final in the Royal Dragoons' Cup Tournament at Lucknow on the 25th instant between the 15th Hussars and the 12th Lancers furnished a most remarkable contest. The Hussars were the favourites, but they were off their play entirely in the first four chukkers during which the Lancers attacked nearly the whole of the time and made two goals. The Hussars then shook themselves together and after playing well in the succeeding period drew level in the final chukker. The goal posts were widened for extra play and the Hussars hit a goal, which was disallowed as the umpire's whistle had called a halt owing to Major Clifton Brown, one of the Lancers, having fallen. The Hussars then attacked again and scored, winning a magnificent game by three goals to two by the 12th Lancers.

The cup was presented to Major Bramwell, on behalf of the 15th Hussars, by Lady Hewett, with a few words of congratulation on their victory.

15TH HUSSARS vs. 12TH LANCERS.

1st Chukker.—The Lancers confined the play to their opponents' territory throughout and made several onslaughts on their goal, which were repulsed.

2nd Chukker.—The Lancers continued to have the best of the play, the game centring round the Hussars' flags. No score.

3rd Chukker.—The Hussars were still on the defensive, the Lancers' attacks going wide.

4th Chukker.—The Lancers scored from a fine shot, and subsequently hit a further goal. Score: Lancers, two goals: Hussars, nil.

5th Chukker.—The Hussars made several rushes, but failed to score.

6th Chukker.—The Hussars played up splendidly, and hit two goals in rapid succession. Score: Lancers, two goals; Hussars, two goals.

Further play followed in which the Hussars almost at once scored, but the hit was disallowed. They immediately carried the ball down and hit the winning goal. The 15th Hussars won the game and the tournament by three goals to two. Teams:—

BALLYGUNGE C.C. vs. DALHOUSIE C.C.—Time alone robbed Ballygunge of an almost certain victory in the match on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday as with only 3 wickets to fall the home team were 46 in arrears. Shallow and Gould opened well for Ballygunge by putting on 92 for the first wicket, but at this total the latter left for a useful 44—Abbott, Badham and Sherman did nothing, but Coulthard and Whiteley quickly took the score from 112 to 150, when the closure was applied. Shallow's 58 was quite a good display, and included no less than eleven 4's. For Dalhousie, Jackson's 18 and Carter's 21 were the best knocks, and towards the end Wright hit freely for 29 not out. The fielding on both sides left a good deal to be desired, more than one catch being dropped. Scores:—

BALLYGUNGE C.C. vs. THE LEINSTER REGIMENT.—The new Regiment made their first appearance on a Calcutta cricket ground on Sunday last, when they met and defeated a fairly strong Ballygunge team by 57 runs. A rather late start was made, owing to the unpunctuality of certain members of the home team who are frequent sinners in this respect, but as it so happens, scoring on both sides was low, and the match in consequence was brought to a conclusion; those at fault, please note!

Bredin and Usher opened for the Regiment, but neither did much, the former falling to Gould for 7 and the latter being bowled by Abbott for 2. Downes and Boyer, however, hit merrily, putting on 56 for the fourth wicket, but after this there was a collapse, the next 5 only adding 15 to the score; the last wicket gave some trouble, Gaye and Grenville between them taking the total from 119 to 142 before they were parted. Thomas bowled extremely well, his 7 wickets costing only 29 runs; Gould and Abbott, too, were steady, as usual, but they did not meet with the success usually associated with their names. Ballygunge opened with an extraordinary series of disasters, and at one time the board read 11—7—1; Eddis pulled the third ball he received, into his wicket, Sherman was stumped, Bayley, Badham and Gould clean bowled, and V. Sherman and Whiteley caught, all in the course of eight overs! Mytton and Abbott then came to the rescue, and by dint of sound defence, and letting off no loose ones, they put on 65 during their partnership. With the score at 76, Mytton was bowled for an invaluable 41, but after his departure the end soon came, Abbott, who could find no one to stop with him, being not out with a faultless 30 to his credit. The Regiment altogether appear to have a very fairly good eleven, and should do well; Ussher, in addition to being a fine bat, is a bowler faster than the average, Bredin, a good all rounder, and the team generally, distinctly useful.

CALCUTTA C.C. vs. RANGERS.—This match was played in the Eden Garden on Saturday last and resulted in a well deserved victory for the visitors by 57 runs on the first innings. The Calcutta side was extremely weak in bowling, and a large number of catches was missed though most of them were not easy ones. A. Hodges, G. Hodges and Warden, especially the first named, batted very well for the Rangers, whose total reached 26. Against this the first four Calcutta wickets fell for 14 runs, (all made by Lee,) Guise, Nealor, Daniell and Drew, all being credited with ducks' eggs, the first three falling to Lees who was in excellent form with the ball, and who shortly afterwards, held a magnificent return catch, thereby sending back Horncastle The C.C.C. had eight men out for 70, when Browne joined Lee, who had gone in first, and the pair added 75 runs for the ninth wicket before Browne, who had hit well for 32, was out leg before. Stewart, who was last man, batted very carefully, and 59 more runs were added before Lee was out to an easy catch at point off a poor stroke from a very bad ball just after he had completed his century. In the circumstances and looking to the miserable display given by the other reputed batsmen on the side, it is impossible to praise Lee's innings too highly: he gave one very hard chance to point early on, and an easy one in the slips at 43. Lee bowled well and took six wickets for 75 runs. J. Daniell, the old Cambridge University and Somersetshire cricketer, made his first appearance for the C.C.C. in this match, and though he failed with the bat set the side an example in the field which should bear good fruit anon.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, the 16th November 1907.

ONLY ladies' play this week forsooth! the Lords of Creation will scoff and ignore it altogether, except those who have sisters, cousins, nieces representing one of the four divisional winners in the County Golf Championship at Budleigh Salterton on the East Devon Club course this week. Yorkshire, Sussex, Worcestershire and Somersetshire were there; on paper the holder (Sussex) had a most formidable team, very considerably strengthened by the qualification by residence of Miss M. E. Stuart (the Irish International player), the Sussex team was headed by the Scottish International Mrs. F. W. Brown; the Yorkshire team was very strong, an ex-champion played second (Miss Bertha Thompson) the Yorkshire champion, and captain, and English International Miss K. G. Moeller played top, the Scottish International Dr. Mary Thomson and Miss Myrtle Backhouse, the Australasian Champion of 1905, were in the team too. Worcestershire was headed by one of the famous Foster Family of Malvern, Miss C. M. of that ilk, who was heartily congratulated on her engagement, and the Somersetshire team played at its head the young player, who a year ago, suddenly leapt into fame by defeating Miss May Hezlet at Burnham.

On Tuesday, 12th November, the battle began. Sussex encountered Yorkshire whilst Somersetshire and Worcestershire met, the results briefly were as tabulated below:—

SUSSEX vs. YORKSHIRE.

Mrs. F. W. Brown	0	Miss K. G. Moeller (at 20 hole)	1
Miss M. E. Stuart	0	„ B. Thompson (3 and 1)	1
„ Gully	0	„ Steel (3 and 2)	1
„ M. Gardner (6 and 5)	1	Dr. Mary Thomson	0
„ Henning Johnson	0	Miss Backhouse (at 20 hole)	1
„ M. C. Reid	0	Mrs. A. E. Kirk (2 and 1)	1
Mrs. Paxton (1 up)	1	Miss Robson	0
	2		5

SOMERSETSHIRE vs. WORCESTERSHIRE.

Miss Hilda Evans (5 and 4)	1	Miss Foster	0
„ B. Peck	0	Mrs. Bewlay (2 and 1)	1
Mrs. Tamworth (5 and 4)	1	„ Holcroft	0
„ Aubrey (2 and 1)	1	Miss J. Brown	0
Miss McNeile (9 and 8)	1	„ N. Cook	0
„ Poynta	0	„ A. Fell (7 and 6)	1
„ Stephenson (3 and 2)	1	„ Twinberrow	0
	5		2

Of these 14 matches 2 were carried to the 20th hole, that between Miss Backhouse and Miss Henning Johnson being particularly remarkable for the Yorkshire lady was 5 down at the turn and again with 6 to go, and yet she squared the match at the 18th and eventually won on the 20th green. Miss Moeller and Mrs. Brown fought neck to neck all the way, the Yorkshire Captain pulling off the match though her opponent finding the banker at the 20th hole. Some of the encounter in the Somerset-Worcester fight were decidedly one-sided, the Worcester shire champion, Miss N. Cook, being quite off her game only succeeded in halving one hole with the Irish player Miss McNeile. Miss Evans, contrary to anticipation, somewhat summarily disposed of Miss Foster. In the afternoon the winning counties met each other as did the two losers. Great interest centred in the match between Sussex and Worcestershire which resulted, however, in a decisive win for the former.

SUSSEX vs. WORCESTERSHIRE.

Mrs. Brown (2 to 1)	1	Miss C. M. Foster	0
Miss M. E. Stuart (5 to 4)	1	Mrs. Bewlay	0
„ Gully	0	„ Holcroft (3 and 2)	1
„ Gardner (3 and 1)	1	Miss J. Brown	0
„ Johnson (5 and 4)	1	„ N. Cook	0
„ M. C. Reid	0	„ A. Fell (4 and 3)	1
Mrs. Paxton (2 and 1)	1	„ Twinberrow	0

Behind these came Yorkshire and Somersetshire. Miss K. G. Moeller playing a very fine game, beat Miss Hilda Evans 3 and 2, the results being as appended:—

YORKSHIRE vs. SOMERSETSHIRE.

Miss K. G. Moeller (3 and 2)	1	Miss Hilda Evans	0
„ B. Thompson (3 and 2)	1	„ B. Peck	0
„ Steel	0	Mrs. Tamworth (5 and 3)	1
Dr. Mary Thomson	0	„ Aubrey (2 and 1)	1
Miss Backhouse (2 and 1)	1	Miss McNeile	0
Mrs. A. E. Kirk (6 and 5)	1	„ Poynta	0
Miss Robinson	0	„ Stephenson (2 and 1)	1

Mrs. Tamworth played a fine game against the English International (Miss Steel). With a start of 2 points over Sussex Yorkshire were decidedly first favourites next morning (13th instant) nor were their backers and wellwishers disappointed at the result for Worcestershire could make no stand against them and with 3 wins the North was the championship, the scoring being as below:—

YORKSHIRE vs. WORCESTERSHIRE.

Miss K. G. Moeller (5 and 4)	1	Miss Foster	0
„ Bertha Thompson	0	Mrs. Bewlay (at 20th hole)	1
„ Steel (6 and 5)	1	„ Holcroft	0
Dr. Mary Thompson (at 19th)	1	Miss J. Brown	0
Miss Backhouse	0	„ A. Fell (1 up)	1
Mrs. Kirk (3 and 1)	1	„ N. Cook	0
Miss Robson (5 and 4)	1	„ Twinberrow	0
	5		2

The match between the ex-champion, Miss Bertha Thompson and Mrs. Bewlay, was very exciting, the Worcester lady very soon established a lead which she kept until a fine 2 at the 17th made Miss Thompson dormy—a fluffed approach at the 18th lost her this hole and necessitated playing till one or other won a hole; not until the 21st could either do this and thus by weakness in her approach-putt the Yorkshire lady lost. Dr. Mary Thomson was taken by Miss J. Brown to the 19th Miss A. Fell and Miss Backhouse only finished on the home green. Meanwhile Sussex and Somerset were trying conclusions. Mrs. Brown could not shake off Miss Hilda Evans, who won at the 20th after a most severe struggle, with the exception of this win for Somerset, Sussex were up in all their matches.

SUSSEX vs. SOMERSETSHIRE.

Mrs. Brown	0	Miss H. Evans (at 20th hole)	1
Miss Stuart (1 up)	1	Mrs. Tamworth	0
„ Gardner (4 and 3)	1	Miss B. Peck	0
„ Gully (2 up)	1	Mrs. Aubrey	0
„ Johnson (4 and 3)	1	Miss McNeile	0
Mrs. Paxton (2 and 1)	1	„ Stephenson	0
Miss. Reid (2 and 1)	1	„ Poynta	0

Thus Yorkshire is Champion County again Sussex being second 2 points less. Somersetshire third Worcestershire last.

To the male sex apologies are due for monopolising the lines this week, but it is the last big event of the Ladies' Year, and dying flicker of the flame of golf in 1907. Next year the ladies will have a paper of their own and will not trespass on the sacred pages of the superior sex.

KENNEL NOTES.

"THE poor dog, in life the firmest friend,
The first to welcome, foremost to defend,
Whose honest heart is still his master's own,
Who labours, fights, lives, breathes for him alone."

GENERAL NOTES.

An important word was mutilated in last issue. In the paragraph on exercise the italics should read Ridden slowly—the correct solution may have been easily guessed, but the humane trainer must not be forgetful and exhaust his dog by making it go a long distance at a fast speed.

Bull-Dog Barks.—The services of Mr. Leonard Jennings have been secured to judge the National breed at the coming show. He is a sculptor of no mean ability and has made models of Bull-dogs, including one for the British Bull-dog Chit as a standard. There is likely to be a good master of the breed and a fancier from as far away as Madras will probably bring a team of six.

Should the classes be well enough filled the up-to-date executive will most likely make another advance step and divide the classes into two weights, heavy and light, 45lbs. and over, and under 45lb.

It is rumoured two or three bull-dogs have recently been imported, but this should not frighten away exhibitors at previous shows, for the more dogs the more prizes is the rule of the promoting body.

Chow Chow Chop Chop.—In continuation of last week's remarks the writer of these notes will give a handsome special prize for the breed, over and above the class prizes, provided there are five exhibits, the owners must be members of the Calcutta Kennel Club of course.

Five is a low enough limit, for there are at least five and twenty of the breed to be seen daily in our streets and of a quality, too, that would win high honours at home shows, for our supplies come direct from the animals' native land, it is true that there, they are practically pariahs, but having been taken to England, the Kennel Club have recognised them as a breed and drawn up a description and scale of points. Before last show the Chow Chow Club were approached for a special, they courteously replied and sent their book of rules and scale of points; these were published in the Souvenir Catalogue and illustrated by a Champion dog belonging to the Honorary Secretary. Owners not aware of the real quality and show value of their pets should apply at this office or send eight annas for a copy of this Catalogue, of which a few are still on hand, and which gives lucid explanation of the various points. The results of last year's efforts, three exhibits in open class, two belonging to one owner, and two puppies were not sufficiently encouraging to warrant another attack on the Home Club. It may be a surprise to learn that a Chow Chow, Mrs. Moore's Hildewell Ad Hok, was sold at the K. C. Show for £100.

Bull-Terrier Tattle.—News has reached us of the approaching marriage of Captain R. P. Wemyss Quin, an ardent fancier of this breed, and who has imported a number of specimens of the very highest class. Foremost Champion Haughton Ladylove who, after three or four years in India, can still beat the best brought against her, as she showed at Simla the other day. Then Champion Mill Girl and Champion Greenhead White Wonder and the perhaps almost equally well known, Brookside Bertha, Rawdon Kaffir, and Illixem Wild. We wish our friend all happiness.

West Highland Whimperings.—Mr. Neil Ballantrae, a well known Scotch devotee of this breed, has sent to India a brace of youngsters with coats as white as snow, at a price commensurate with their quality. We have no word that these are coming to Calcutta, but we know a very well known gentleman of this City was very much taken with the breed on his last Home trip, and there is every chance of the Calcutta Kennel Club having the pleasure of adding the breed to their schedule next year.

Ambulance and War Dogs.—Major Richardson, of Carnoustie, so well known as a trainer of dogs for war purposes, gave a very interesting lecture at the "Evening" promoted by the Ladies' Kennel Association in aid of the funds of the Royal Waterloo Hospital. He divided his lecture into two parts—Ambulance Dogs and Sentry Dogs, and commenced by saying that most of the continental countries have dogs trained to war attached to their armies, and that in England, though various efforts have been made, our Government up to the present have refused to employ them. That dogs have been so employed in ancient times is proved by Pliny and Plutarch, having both alluded to them. The Huns used them in war. Attila, their king, employed Mastiffs. Columbus sent dogs over to America when he went to conquer it. Philip, of Spain, employed them. The Knights of Malta sent them over. Frederick the Great used collies as sentries. Napoleon had dogs for scouts. At Austerlitz a detachment of the army lost its way. They placed a dog in front, who led them back to their own tracks, and in six hours brought them again to their camp. In the Franco-German War the Germans employed dogs as sentries. In 1857, in the Russo-Turkish War, dogs were utilised. In the American War Bloodhounds were employed. In the Russo-Japanese War Russian Sheep dogs were set to guard the entire Manchurian Railway down to Port Arthur and sentry dogs were used by both Russian and Japanese for ambulance work.

The Emperor of Germany sent dogs as a present to the Czarina. A Russian monk who had spent some time on Mont St. Bernard took back some trained dogs to Moscow, and a third consignment were sent from Major Richardson's own kennels in Scotland.

There are two duties a war dog has to perform, ambulance work and sentry work. In the former he is sent to search the ground after an engagement for any wounded the stretcher-bearers may have overlooked, and not many escape the nose of a well trained dog. The lecturer has been working for ten years among the soldiers and can testify to the immense use of the dog in warfare. He next spoke of the equipments of dogs in action. In Germany they have a sort of saddle containing bandages, etc., brandy and a waterproof round their backs, but this, Major Richardson thinks, is too heavy, and prevents their running or getting between barbed wire fences. They must have some sort of uniform when with their regiments to distinguish them, but, he thinks, as little as possible. The ambulance dogs have the red cross on a white coat over their backs, of course, and the lecturer brought two dogs thus equipped for the audience to see. They were crossbred bloodhounds, very gentle, and with most intelligent faces. In some armies the dog carries a bell; in others it has luminous paint on it. Keenness of scent is the chief thing necessary in a war dog and the crossbred bloodhound has been proved to have the best nose of any dog. Their sense of hearing, too, is very acute. They can hear when the air is still 400 yards away, and are placed between the sentries. A well trained dog is not allowed to bark, only to growl, when he wants to give the alarm. In the Austrian Army a detachment one night, being tired out with the day's manœuvres, all slept, even to the officer, when the dog who was with them awoke the officer by growling. He at once roused the men, who discovered the enemy was making a night attack. They were saved from disgrace by means of the faithful dog. At Innspruch an officer told his men to repair a bridge over the river, but did not place them under any cover. All at once their dog began to growl. The officer, understanding the dog, instantly ordered his men to hide on either side of the road behind the hedges. In a few minutes the enemy dashed through, the men in hiding cut off their retreat and the whole squadron was taken, entirely through the dog. The captain of the United States cavalry always took dogs with him when he went into an ambuscade.

The Germans use their own sheep dogs now: they formerly bought Airedale terriers and collies from Great Britain; and place a line of dogs outside their sentries, so that any nation who fights against them must be prepared to meet their dogs first.

Seeing the love the British soldier has for dogs, surely sufficient war dogs could be trained out in India for the whole army, and it would have the additional benefit of giving the men an interesting occupation. The cost of a few dogs would not be very great seeing that they would be imported without any freight charges.

CALCUTTA DOG SHOW.

We regret to learn that the entries for this Show are very scanty, that they will come along is not doubted, and by the time these lines appear most of them will be in the Secretary's hands. But it is thoughtless of exhibitors to keep back their entries until the last moment for the work involved in running a Show is incalculable and the Secretary to have so much thrown on to him when all the smaller details are being arranged nearly drives him off his head. Entries close on Saturday, the 7th, those bearing post marks of the 7th will, of course, be accepted. But after this date there will be an extra late fee of eight annas for each entry.

INVALID DIET.

An enquiry regarding the proper sort of food for invalids or dainty feeders has suggested the inclusion this week of a few notes on a subject on which dog-owners are often concerned.

Dogs when ill, especially during and after a severe attack of Influenza or Distemper, &c., require a tempting, nourishing but easily digested food, and often the appetite is so bad after a severe illness that it is difficult to think of anything that can be offered to encourage the patient to eat, for there is no doubt that a little food taken voluntarily does much more good than a quantity poured down the throat against the dog's will.

Raw Meat, a dog's natural food, is one of the best foods for sick and delicate dogs. It ought not to be given when there is any fever, but a small quantity given finely scraped when the active symptoms of distemper or other weakening disease have passed is a wonderful pick-me-up. It is also the best possible food in chronic stomach disorders and chronic diarrhœa, but not for dysentery. It seems to give old dogs, especially when they have not been accustomed to meat, a new lease of life

MEAT TEA.—An excellent meat tea can be made from a quarter of a pound each of lean beef, mutton, and veal, cut up in small pieces, and slowly simmered, not boiled, for about three hours in a pint of water, then strained off. This may be given cold as a jelly, or warm with bread or rice.

GIBLET SOUP.—Half a pound of fresh chicken's giblets and feet all cut up small and stewed in half pint of water for about three hours. Strain and give cold as jelly, or warm with stale bread, rice or toast.

SHEBLEY'S LACTOL.—Invaluable for invalids, especially for dogs suffering from distemper, when a strong, non-stimulating, food is required. Being a pure, natural, and highly concentrated food, it nourishes a dog as much as raw meat whilst not having its stimulating qualities, and dogs, however ill, take it readily. In the case of bad doers and dogs in poor condition a breakfast of Lactol very soon picks them up and increases their weight, it being very rich in cream, or it may be added dry to their ordinary food.

Small and delicate puppies should continue with the Lactol for some time, but strong puppies will do well on a stronger and cheaper food, like bread with milk or gravy.

An excellent and cheap food for puppies may be made with milk thickened to the consistency of cream with equal parts of fine oatmeal and wheaten flour. A good way of making this is in a frying-pan. The milk should just be brought to a boil, and then the two flours, which have been previously mixed in a dredger, should be slowly sprinkled into the milk, stirring the whole time, and gently boiled for about five minutes.

For very delicate puppies scraped raw meat is very good—a little three or four times a day often does wonders. It may even be given to a puppy four weeks old; of course, the quantity must vary according to the age and size of puppy. For a small delicate puppy a teaspoonful at a time is enough; big puppies like St. Bernards, when six weeks old, may have a tablespoonful at a time. This is in addition to other foods; when no other food is being taken, more is necessary to be given at a time.

A great thing in feeding puppies is to be very particular about keeping the feeding utensils clean, otherwise the youngsters will always be suffering from diarrhœa; also always mix the food fresh at each meal.

Young puppies, except when being fed entirely on a meat diet, do not require water.

A big uncooked bone or a small dog biscuit to gnaw is good for puppies.

Every puppy, when six weeks old, should be dosed with worm powder or tabloids.

Seventy-five per cent. of puppies suffer from worms, and it is impossible for them to thrive whilst infested with these parasites.

Sheep's brains boiled in milk are good

Chickens' livers, sheeps' kidneys, grilled and mixed with bread crumbs.

Different kinds of fish, boiled or fried. Sardines will often be eaten when all other food is refused.

Peptonised milk is a very easily digested food in cases of obstinate vomiting. It is best made fresh, and can be prepared with Fairchild's peptonising powders, which may be bought at most chemists.

Milk slightly thickened with Ising'lass is very nourishing and useful in cases of Diarrhœa.

Benger's food, also Force with milk, make good food for invalids.

Brand's beef essence is a preparation that dogs are very fond of. It is an excellent diet for invalids, especially when suffering from stomach disorders.

Invalid Bovril and Valentine's meat juice are strong extracts of meat, and are useful in weakening diseases, given with milk or water.

White of egg given beaten up with water or milk is very nourishing and soothing in stomach diseases. The white of one egg should be mixed with a teacupful of water.

Barley water is best made by placing about three tablespoonful of well-cleaned pearl barley in a jug and pouring a quart of boiling water on it; allow to stand about three hours, and then strain through fine muslin.

Sanatogen, a white finely-powered meal, a new preparation made in Germany, is a very valuable food for sick dogs, especially those suffering from stomach diseases and in bad cases of distemper.

An excellent compound liquid food for very weak and ill dogs—as in bad cases of distemper, for instance—may be made by adding to a teacupful of milk the white of an egg and a desert spoonful of Valentine's meat juice. From one teaspoonful to two tablespoonful may be given every hour, or double the quantity every two hours.

CANINE.

The Horse.

THE HORSE WHISPERER.

THE Horse Whisperer might be an unknown quantity in England and Ireland to-day, but there are not a few men who exercise a wonderful control with their voices over horses which, when the dominating influence is absent, are apt to, literally, kick over the traces. In the thoroughbred stables of England and Ireland to-day there are not a few stablemen and jockeys who succeed in checking the vice in horses, which in demonstrative manner show that they cannot tolerate the presence of other grooms or attendants. "Nimrod" claimed for Count Duval a power and influence of the human voice over the brute creation, but that power was backed up by a lecture to the horse with "his clinched fist in his face." But the Horse Whisperer of to-day avoids all gesticulation, and trusts entirely to a combination of sounds or words. There is no bullying done, and the Whisperer can face a mad horse with his hands behind his back, and apparently at the mercy of the beast that has to come under the charm. One means of keeping remount horses quiet in stations during the South African war was that employed by the Yeoman, who sat in a ring of head-to-head horses singing as loudly as possible, and riveting the ears and attention of the otherwise squawling and hungry animals. One of the first Whisperers to acquire fame was Tom Sullivan, who migrated in his youth from Killmallock, where he could trace his genealogy through a long line of snaffers, and became almost exclusively employed by Lord Doneraile.

So unaccountable and magical was the power Sullivan instantly acquired over the most savage brute that his parish priest, who had excellent grounds for not believing him a saint, denounced him as a sorcerer. The whisper of this man made an indelible impression upon any horse, bringing the pupil to a degree of docility unattainable in the ordinary course of discipline.

The racehorse, King Pepin, a famous racer, vicious, and reputed to have killed two grooms at the Curragh, once came under his charge. He was wanted to win a race at Mallow, but when saddling time came it found him in one of his unmanageable moods. He reared, plunged, and flung out fore and aft, until he completely cowed groom and jockey. It was at this crisis that some one recommended that he should be "whispered." As it was the only chance left of taming him in time for the start, his owner gladly availed himself of it, though warned that horses were sometimes thrown into a state of stupor by the process.

Sullivan was soon found and he was delighted at the opportunity of "whusspering" before so much "quality" from all parts. "Show us the wild baste," said he, "and we'll soon tache him manners." When he got within the circle, and a wide one it was, in which King Pepin was playing his antics he walked up to him, approaching the horse from behind. He mumbled some words as he walked, which, though not quite audible, were as unintelligible as a sermon in an unknown tongue, but they had a most magical effect on the horse, for he stood stock still. Sullivan then patted him on the neck, while he whispered a word or two in his ear, whereupon King Pepin went on his knee and incontinently lay down. The Whisperer then stretched himself on him at full length, took out a pouch containing pipe and tobacco, flint and steel, struck a light, and blew a cloud, as he lounged on the stomach of this high-mettled colt, with as much composure as if he were seated on a bench in his favourite tap-room. After two or three puffs, he got up, beckoned the nag to his legs, saddled him, and walked off to the starting post, the horse following and fawning upon him like a dog. He won the the race in a canter.

Sullivan's introduction to Lord Doneraile should be told in story, as it was, by Con's son, a whipper-in of some repute. His lordship was driving his coach and four from Ballygibbalin, when Wildfire, the off-side wheeler, lost a fore shoe and went lame. The horse was "a born devil in regard of shoeing him," and usually had to be slung before the operation was performed. His lordship was for throwing the horse down, and the blacksmith, Shawn Gow, was against it. They were debating the point when Sullivan came upon the scene.

"God bless the work," sez he, 'an thim that's at it, not overlookin' your honour an' the cattle,' takin' off his hat to the lord; 'an' may a poor boy make bould for to ax what moult you're in?' A hard case enough," sez the lord himself, tellin' him all about it, just as I'm afther tellin' your honour. 'Sharo lucen,' sez Soolivan, "tis myself is the boy can relase you, if that's all that's troublin' you.' "'Tis aiser said than done," sez the lord. "The devil a taste]—not contradictin' your honour," sez my father; 'just lave the boys be afther untackin' him out, and let myself an' himself have as much as one minit's discource all alone to ourselves inside in the forge there, and I'll give you my head in my hand if I don't make him stand as quiet as ever a baste your honor ever spread your fork upon.' 'Any port in a storm,' is a good maxim, thought Lord D., so he ordered Wildfire to be unharnessed. "Teeson a chopaleen!" (Come, little horse) sez Soolivan, an' into the forge he walked, the horse follyin' him as tame as a spaniel would a dog tacher. "My eye, if that 'ere chap ain't a rum un!" said coachee. But little time my father gave 'em for talkin', when he bid 'em walk in. "What's that I see?" cried the lord, openin' his two eyes like a body would be afther seein' a ghost. "Wisha, nothin' at-all, your honor, sez the Whuishperer, only a little suwsee I'm afther givin' this poor baste, in regard of the foolishness of sayin' agains them that wor for his good, and he's no way fractious now, for sez he to me, afore I spoke three words to him, sez he, 'What's your will is my pleasure, and I'll never no more do nothing out of the way; an' I'll be bound he'll have Shawn Gow att his leg as peaceable as if he was but skin and bone.' When the servants, and the smith, and the rest of 'em, seen him housdin' up Wildfire's leg, it bein' the first time he done anything of the sikes in Dublinlow, fair, they had a mind to be in his wool, thinkin' him no better nor the cowd boy himself."

Even when the hot shoe was clapped on to his hoof the horse failed to stir, and Sullivan had to be requestioned again to make Wildfire straighten his leg.

Another performance of Con's was on an artillery horse, pronounced unmanageable and unserviceable by men and officers. He was put in single and double harness, in leader, and to the wheel, alternately coaxed, beaten, or dragged along, but all to no purpose; not an ounce would he draw, and he was fit for nothing else. At last he was sold by auction for a few shillings, the Whisperer being the purchaser. No sooner was the precious lot knocked down to him than he asked a carman who was passing by to lend him cart and harness. He put him to at once, then led and drove him up and down the steep hill, near the old market gate, to the utter amazement of the artillerymen, who were not long enough quartered there to have heard of him. He did not strike him, and no one heard him say a word, but of course, he gave him the whisper. He sold the horse in five minutes after for as many pounds as he gave shillings.

Borrow knew a cob in Ireland which could be driven to a sense of kicking madness by a particular word used by a particular person in a particular tone. The same cob could be smoothed in a moment by another word used by the same individual in a very different kind of tone. The word was "deaghbiasda."

Many notable thoroughbreds have had to be "whispered." Tristan, the winner of twenty-three races, including the Ascot gold cup, the Champion Stakes and the Hardwicke Stakes, could not tolerate a gray horse or pony. Once nobody could be found to put his head collar on. Several stable lads failed, and in one instance Tristan fancied the pattern of one lad's trouser cloth. "Ginger," who usually looked after him, was found and asked to go to the horse. He did—with a broom. He "whispered" something—to the effect, "Do you see this?"—and the savage did, for he simply lay down to be "done" for the night.

MOTORING MEMS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, 15th November.

The Olympia exhibition under the patronage of his Majesty the King and also the Prince of Wales was opened to the public on 11th November. England, France, Germany, Italy and Switzerland are all well represented among the 300 exhibitors who, between them, show some 140 different makes of Cars.

This year's exhibition is quite a different affair from that of previous years. Hitherto it has seemed impossible for a man to make cars powerful enough; while last year there seemed to be a demand for the six-cylinder as well. This year it is the four-cylinder that is in demand and of quite moderate power.

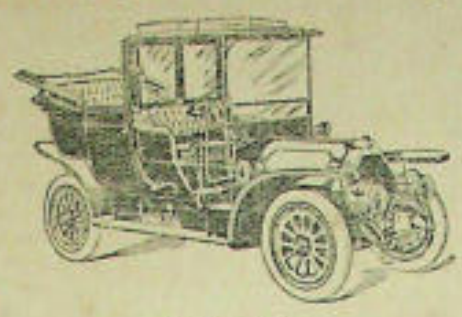
It is certainly very pleasing to see people taking to the less powerful models. Of course the tyre makers do not look upon this change of opinion in quite such a favourable light. When everyone drives about upon an 810-90 M.M. tyre the profits of the tyre maker will dwindle considerably. Some of the big cars to-day run into a new set of tyres every 1,000 miles, and it does not take long to do that distance upon a 40 H.P. car.

The reversion to the four-cylinder engine has been very complete less than a dozen makers exhibiting the six-cylinder type. There can be little doubt that four good cylinders are all that anyone wants. Among the many interesting exhibits those calling for special attention from the Indian point of view are the Adams, Iris, Lanchester, Talbot, Daimler, Fiat and Standard.

Taking them in the order named the Adams comes first. The feature of the Adams Car is, of course, the "Pedals to Push" system of control; the Adams car is all-British in manufacture, and has many distinctly original and at the same time excellent features. To start with epicyclic gearing has been retained. Those who have had experience with types of change speed gearing know only too well what an excellent system of changing speed this is, and more particularly so when done in the Adams way. In front of the driver are the three control pedals, top speed, low speed and reverse all these pedals are inter-locking. Now suppose the car is standing still and we want to move forward, in the ordinary way we declutch and put in our first speed. The Adams way is different. When you want to start you press the low speed pedal till it locks, and when you want to get into top speed you depress the top speed pedal till it locks, and at the same time releases the slow speed gear. It may not be so showy as the side lever, but experience has taught us that this system is undoubtedly all that can be desired.

The success attained by the Iris Car at Brooklands was quite sufficient to put it in the front rank of six-cylinder cars at Olympia. Like the car just mentioned, it is an all British production and the general outline and construction of the chassis are worthy of the highest praise.

While no Iris cars have been sent to India, at the present time these cars are quite well known both in Canada and New Zealand having acquitted themselves excellently in both places.



An Iris Car.

Three types are being made, 25 H.P. and 35 H.P. four-cylinder and 40 H.P. six-cylinder models, all being chainless drives. The chassis prices range as follows—£595, £700, and £875, including tyres. The cars are built entirely by British labour at the Wivesden Works, and the care which is exacted in the most minute details of construction is only equalled by the exclusive use of nothing but the best materials; this, and a two years warranty, is what you get with an Iris. The clean sweep inside of all unnecessary pipes and other projecting fittings is one of the first features noticed behind the well-known deeply scored radiator, as also the placing of the magneto, carburettor, etc., in positions that are not only accessible, but which do not interfere with the accessibility of other fittings. The same get-at-ability holds good throughout the entire chassis. Two chassis are on view, and three complete cars, the latter having a landaulette, Roi des Belges, and a Limousine body, all of which are fine specimens of graceful coach design.

To the Daimler Company belongs the honor of selling the first car in the Show and to a most distinguished person, namely, the Grand Duke Michael of Russia. The order was received by wire on the opening day, almost before most firms were prepared for business. The Royal purchase was one of the new 45 H.P. chain driven models. It is fitted with chain cases, one of the latest refinements with which the chain driven models are fitted. While a large number of the Daimler models remain the same as last year's types, some new lines axle models have been produced this year, so that those who favour the chainless drive can indulge in the "representative British car" and still satisfy their own particular fancy as to the best type of transmission.

Unusual interest attaches to the important announcement made by the chairman, Mr. Ed. Manville, at the annual Daimler dinner on Saturday evening previous to the Show, in connection with the inauguration of a series of Engineering Scholarships. Mr. Manvale pointed out that their idea was to overcome the difficulty experienced in obtaining the services of men of ability, and the scheme which the company was putting forward they thought would prove particularly attractive to those who are wishful of embracing automobile engineering as a career.

The scheme took the form of offering Scholarships to successful candidates in an engineering examination proposed to be held in July 1908. There would be a Daimler major scholarship, and four Daimler minor scholarships. The holders of these scholarships would be entitled to a two years' course in their shops at Coventry together with instruction and supervision in the theoretical side of automobile engineering, under a graduate in science.

In addition, the holder of the major scholarship would receive £100 per annum for the two years he passed in the works, while the winners of the minor scholarships would receive £50 per annum during the same period.

In each case the holders would be under agreement, on completion of their scholarships to work with the Daimler Company for a further two years at a salary of not less than £150 per annum should the Company desire to retain their services.

On the invincible Talbot stand day and night stood a constable. He had the rather tedious appointment of custodian of the hundred and one cups and medals that the invincible Talbot had won during the last season's hill climb. The Talbot stand was besieged all day with enquirers for these famous cars. From morning to night, day in day out it was one long wait for those who wished to inspect the models and trophies. The Talbot has been by far the most successful competitor of moderate power at this season's hill climbing competitions. It is another of the all-British productions and is made at Lambrook, practically the whole of the car being made under the one roof at this factory. Every Talbot is tested thoroughly before being placed on the road, the Company being one of the few firms who have a private testing track.

The famous Fiat has come in for its share of notice during the show. Like many another firm they are making both chain driven and live axle types, both of which were exhibited. They also showed the six-cylinder model but not with the self-starter as last year. The fact that they have discarded the self-starter is fairly indicative of the fact that a Fiat engine is soon put into motion, as a matter of fact they have a very good name as easy starters. They are, of course, fitted with the Simms Bosch low tension magneto ignition which makes them very suitable for out of the way districts. Many people, indeed the great majority of people, are beginning to recognise that the low tension magneto is far in advance of any other form of ignition.

Few men in the world of wheels are as well known as Mr. Chas. Friswell. He is among those who have been bitten with that infectious all-British fever, and now it will not be long before he lands in India with his latest convert, the six-cylinder Standard. This car is made in Coventry, the works at which it is constructed having been bought by Friswells at the time that they took up the sole selling agency, thus Friswells are not in that position so many people are, of being sole selling agents for goods that some other man is making. When a man is both maker and seller, he can invariably supply a better car than a simple agent can. Any faults that arise, and faults will come to light even in the best of cars, are easily rectified when the works are one's own. When, however, the works belong to someone else who is probably eaten up in the conceit that his car is the best the world can produce the agent, poor unfortunate man, can hammer, hammer, hammer but never get any satisfaction. These particular thoughts have been brought very strongly on the writer of late as a particular six-cylinder car that a certain firm is interested in as selling agents has had a great deal of trouble. No amount of argument with the makers is of any avail in altering one or two trivial details the reply invariably being, "We do not tell you how to sell the car, and we do not expect you to tell us how to make it."

The Standard is made in two types, a "twenty" and a "forty," both have six-cylinder engines and are fitted with magneto ignition a consideration for the Colonial motorist. Ball bearings are used throughout the engine and transmission. The chassis price for the Standard is remarkably low, being £595 and £650, respectively.

NATURALISTS AND NATURAL HISTORY IN 1907.

That Blanford and Medlicott, the talented joint authors of the "Manual of the Geology of India," should have passed away in the same year, was, to say the least, a remarkable coincidence. But when we find only a few years after this, two other distinguished naturalists who had been associates in an important literary undertaking, likewise, dying within a few months of one another, we are almost tempted to ask whether such events may not be something more than mere coincidences. We allude, of course, to the decease during the year of Alfred Newton and Howard Saunders, the joint authors, or perhaps, we should rather say the successive authors, of the fourth edition of that famous work "Yarrell's British Birds." Newton began the work with the intention of seeing it through himself; but he was a slow worker (largely owing to his thoroughness and attention to minutiae), and when, after an unconscienably long time, the first two volumes were completed, he left the two remaining ones to be edited, or rather re-written, by Saunders.

In education and character the two men were widely sundered; Newton having been nursed by alma mater of the Cam, under whose shelter he passed the remainder of his life, while Saunders was brought up to a business life, and appears to have picked up his science how and where he but could. Both were, however, first class ornithologists, and knew their British birds thoroughly; while both had an almost unrivalled knowledge of the geographical distribution of the various species, nevertheless, Newton was by far the stronger and more "all-round" man of the two; this being emphasised by the fact that he gained several distinctions which never fell to the lot of his associate. Without Newton, Cambridge on Sunday evenings in term-time must seem almost a different place to scientific men.

By the time these lines appear in print Sir Edwin Ray Lankester will, if rumour is to be trusted, have ceased to be director of the Natural History Branch of the British Museum, or, at any rate, will be on the point of vacating that position.

The seventh international zoological congress held at the Harvard Medical School, Boston, U.S.A., in August, appears, to have proved an unqualified success, the attendance of representative naturalists from all parts of the world having been very large, while the papers totalled to three hundred, and the exhibits were varied and interesting. Among the latter, perhaps, one of the most important was an illustration of the manner in which the bacilli of tuberculosis may be destroyed in certain animals. The species in which this destruction was displayed was a certain moth, Galleria mellonella, which is thus proved to be immune to the fell disease.

An hour and a half after injection the bacilli were seen to have been absorbed by the blood-corpuscles of the moth, in which traces of the intruders could still be detected five days after the experiment, when the bacilli were mainly changed into brown pigments, which thus seems to be their ultimate fate.

Rats, as the main disseminators of plague, have occupied the attention of investigators specially appointed by the Indian Government; and it is hoped that a general crusade against these rodents may lead to a sensible diminution in the ravages of the disease. Locusts have likewise been the subject of investigation by official specialists in this country; and although nothing new in the way of preventive measures has yet been announced, the publication of figures of the Indian species at all stages of development, by means of which they may be readily recognised by non-scientific observers, is a step in the right direction. An attempt was, indeed, made to introduce the South African locust-fungus as a remedial agent, but it ended in failure; the parasite being apparently unable to obtain sufficient hold of the insects in this country.

BREAKWELL & CO.

Under its new editor the "Fauna of British India" continues to make steady progress; one of the most interesting volumes issued during the year being the second on Indian butterflies, from the pen of the editor itself. The illustrations in this volume and its predecessor are almost beyond praise. We understand, too, that the manuscript of Colonel Godwin-Austen's volume on the land and freshwater shells is in an advanced stage, although still some way off completion.

Another important work is Mr. Lydekker's "Great Game Animals of India, Tibet, etc.," which is a revised and smaller issue of his well-known quarto volume on the same subject. Even this new edition cannot, however, be regarded as altogether up to date, since the author has just shown, in a communication to the London Field, that the takin of Bhutan is raciably distinct from the typical Budorcas taxicolor of the Mishmi Hills. To Mr. Claude White, Commissioner of Sikkim, belongs the credit of having supplied the materials for this new determination.

The method of feeding snakes at the London Zoological Gardens, has formed the subject of a somewhat acrimonious attack by the antivivisection and humanitarian clique, led by the Hon'ble Stephen Coleridge. As the result of this, the Secretary of the Zoological Society instituted a series of experiments with the object of determining whether the dread and terror alleged to be inspired in animals by the presence of snakes really exists. From these experiments it appears that terror-paralysis of this nature occurs only in certain monkeys—more especially South American species—; and if this be true, one of the stock arguments of the humanitarians is wiped out.

Among zoological works other than those devoted to Indian subjects, special mention may be made of a richly illustrated volume on the okapi, published under the direction of the administration of the Congo Free State at Brussels. This reminds us that, according to a French naturalist, Sir Harry Johnston can no longer pose as the first discoverer of the okapi, since Colonel Marchand, of Fashoda fame, states that when on the Bahr-el-Ghazal several years earlier he actually saw a living specimen among a herd of antelopes. Some have said that the okapi cannot possibly be kept alive in captivity; but the falsity of this is demonstrated by the fact that a young individual has actually been captured and maintained in health for some time by the Congo officials. Thanks to Major Powell-Cotton and Mr. Boyd Alexander, each of whom presented a specimen to the British Museum, the external characters of both sexes of the okapi are now thoroughly familiar to the public; three examples being shown in the building in the Cromwell Road. Judging, however, from a label which has been recently placed in the case, it would seem that the idea as to the creature being a hybrid between a zebra and some other animal is not yet extinct.

Collectors of birds' eggs should welcome the magnificent work by Mr. Dresser on the eggs of all the European species, now being issued as a companion to his "Birds of Europe." The coloured plates are reproduced from photographs of the eggs, and are really marvellous examples of tri-colour photography.

Another superbly illustrated work to be issued in parts is the monograph of petrels, albatrosses, etc., by Mr. du Cane Godman, of which the prospectus has recently been issued.

Mr. Selous gave us a short time ago an interesting little volume on his recent sporting and natural history experiences in Newfoundland and other parts of North America; and this has been followed by a more pretentious volume on sport and natural history in Newfoundland by Mr. J. G. Millais, whose well-earned reputation, both with pen and pencil, affords a guarantee that its contents are of more than common interest. Of course, there are other works on big game which have seen the light during the year; but since all, or most of these, deal with the subject from the sportsman's rather than from the naturalist's point of view, they have no claim to special mention in the present article.

Several rare and interesting animals have been exhibited at the London "Zoo," and in various private establishments in England during the year; and among these the first place should be assigned to the consignments of humming-birds and birds-of-paradise which have reached England, the latter obtained by a collector in the employment of Sir William Ingram. Out of a large series of each group put safely on board ship, only a comparatively small percentage reached there destination alive; and, in spite of every care and the most ingenious feeding arrangements, the humming-birds survived their arrival in London only for a brief period. The birds-of-paradise, we believe, did somewhat better; but even in their case the mortality was excessive, and, although we by no means desire to range ourselves on the side of the ultra-humanitarians, the question arises whither the attempt to import such delicate tropical creatures is really justifiable or advisable.

As regards general systematic zoology, a very large amount of work has been accomplished, although, for the most part at any rate, it is not of a nature to interest readers of the Indian Field, as a class. The large series of specimens of the more abundant species now being brought together in the bigger museums, continues to give a great impetus to the recognition of local races of mammals and birds. So long as such local forms are regarded merely as variations of particular species, no possible objection can be taken to such "splitting." The case is, however, altered when, as is the practice with some naturalists, every island representative of what is undoubtedly a single species receives a distinct specific name. This has been done, for instance, in the case of the two well-known Malay chevrotains. The British wild cat, again, has been made a species by itself, on account of certain slight differences in colour and markings from its continental representative. This animal has, indeed, had its name changed twice during the year. At the commencement it was known by its generally accepted title of Felis catus; later on it was suggested by one naturalist that it ought to be known as F. sylvestris and just as we were getting used to this, another worker gave it the brand new name of F. Grampianus!

The flying lemurs of the Malay countries have been still more unfortunate in the matter of change of name. Till recently they were almost universally known as Galeopithecus; but an American naturalist has come to the conclusion that they ought to be divided into two genera, for one of which he takes the name Cynocephalus;—a designation for many years appropriated by the dog-faced baboons of Africa.

Whether such splitting of species and "swopping" of names is for the advantage of scientific natural history, is not for us to say. That it tends to render the science needlessly puzzling to the amateur and the sportsman, we have, however, not the slightest hesitation in asserting.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Calcutta Second Extra Meeting last Saturday was a great improvement on the former week. A cooler afternoon, larger audience, a little more finish on the arrangements and better sport all combined to make matters cheery. It was noticeable that the pointed stone border referred to in these notes last week had been removed and encouraged by the success of our suggestion in that instance we would like to point out to the executive that, if feasible, it would be a popular innovation to have doors leading from the passage into Kellner's bar. Thirsty souls still find it a long way from the paddock to the place for refreshment and at present it is impossible even to buy a smoke without going all the way to the far bar unless one is a member of the Calcutta Turf Club: there seems to be no apparent reason why smokes and drinks should not be obtainable at the public tea tent in the paddock.

These, however, are small matters and everything passed off without a hitch leaving the hard working officials in self-congratulatory mood. The proceedings opened at the inconveniently early hour of 2-15 with the hurdle race for which there were no less than eleven competitors, but only one with a chance, and the starting price of 2 to 1 on Mallard was a fair index of the probabilities of his success. Hoyt rode a very pretty race on the favourite whom he never hustled but allowed to run comfortably at his own pace. He went up to third place at the old stand and jumped the last hurdle level with Camira and Chassepot after which he drew away and won with great ease. Clodian ran a much better horse than anyone could have expected and has apparently been under-rated. With the exception of Hill of Tara who went a bit big the whole field fenced well and it was a very pretty sight to see the eleven of them popping over the fences. Mr. Marshall's mare, Stepaway, who had been showing signs of very good form, dropped dead after reaching the paddock, a most unfortunate loss to her owner.

The Harrison Plate for small ponies produced the worst field of the day, only six going up to the gate. Coin II. was at first the public fancy but when it became known that Mr. Galstaun was backing his mare there was a rush to get on her and she started at 2 to 1 on. Nothing else in the race carried any money at all. To a bad start Coin II. and Circus Girl got away in front of The Point with Son of a Gun badly left. The mare, however, just waited on Cooch Behar's pony and put her neck in front at the proper moment. She could have done so at any time her jockey liked despite Robbin's most determined finish.

There were nine starters for the Maiden H[illegible] Plate and it was Jolly Abbot's race witho[illegible] doubt from the time the horses paraded in the paddock. The grey looked every inch a winner and it is impossible to imagine a horse in better fettle. He gave a bit of trouble at the gate and Mr. Fookes' persuader came in handy but they were despatched eventually in a perfect line soon to be broken by the favourite who left them all at the half mile and won as he pleased. Fireworks and Carnival next. Conscience, who was heavily backed for a place, could get no nearer than fourth and Seaspray, also much in request, was somewhere in the ruck. One of our contemporaries has stated that the former of these ran in his training shoes but it would seem much more likely that they were the new Aluminium Plates now much in vogue and which at a distance might be mistaken for heavy shoes. S[illegible]-metrician, we believe, also runs in these plat[illegible]

The Peel Plate had twelve of them going and provided a fine dish for the books to compensate them for the lean three before. Minnie and Chippy Norton were supposed to have the race between them and money for their support was plentiful even at the starvation price of 6 to 4 on either and nothing a place. Wakeful carried a fair amount of stable money for which the pleasant figures of ten's and two's a place was obtained. They thought that her quality would bring her through despite the great weight which the public considered put her out of court. Apart from these three there was very little backed at all and Scott's lot were certainly not on their own winner about whom almost any price could be got. Yankee Boy is a wonderful pony—he has been winning races now for seven years and there seems to be but little reason why he should not go on for some time to come. With Templeman to steer him he certainly seemed to win pretty comfortably on Saturday, but he had a lot of luck as the two favourites both got bad positions and were bottled up without a chance of getting through and the only one to push him at all was Wakeful on whom Barrett with top weight rode perforce a waiting race and though he made a determined finish could only get within a half length of the outsider. That wonderful pony Riot made all the running for the first two furlongs and finished third. What hacks he would have made in the 14 hand class if he had not had the cruel luck just to miss his measurement by a quarter inch!

The December Plate was the great race of the day and Sermon on his Lucknow form was thought to be a certainty with the other eleven to follow him home, but they were reckoning without the handsome Stirabout who, when it came to business, was away from them all and the favourite hard ridden and all out was a badly beaten horse one and a quarter lengths away. Amplify who finished third made a very good show.

Beaunero had a very soft thing in the Corinthian Plate which he won when, how, and where he liked. There were unfortunately only seven starters or else old Bundook would have been worth backing for a place on the gallop he did on Thursday, but, of course, he had no chance against Lord Boyne who beat Mr. MacJohn's horse as easily as he was himself defeated by the favourite. Child Adopted caught Queen of Gems some vicious kicks at the post, but luckily seemed to do no damage though little Barrett had a very narrow escape of a broken leg.

The entries for the Third Extra again include a lot more first-class horses and the quality employed is steadily moving upwards towards the grand climax of Cup Day.

In the Wellesley Plate (1¼ mile) we have 21 of whom only Stirabout, Jolly Abbot, Lady Bentworth, Kaffirpan, Amplify, and Beaunero have already been seen racing this year, and the new ones include such interesting performers as Fitzgrafton, Wandin, Realm, Ballark, Betrayer, Boabdil, Misty Morn, Cinder Bill, Steinhager, and Saloon. The winner is not going to stick out a yard this time anyhow.

For the Fort Plate there are only 10 entries of which two, Amplify and Saloon, are down for the 1¼ mile as well. Golden Gleam, Volume, and Berthier are the new ones here and they will be very keenly watched, especially the last-named who is a horse not to be despised and merits special attention.

The Maiden Horse (6 furlongs) is the first handicap of the season and everyone is on tip toe to see the allotments. There are 20 entrants all told and Vespasia, the best of them, is also in the 5 furlongs, the others being all single entries. It is interesting, as showing the tendency of racing here nowadays, to note that only 6 are Australians and the other 14 are all English animals.

The Zeerut Plate, a handicap hurdle race for ponies, has 17 to go, an enormous change from the last few years when it has been difficult to fill this class of event. Some of them, notably Cracker and Lady Knight, are new to Calcutta, though well known in other parts of the country, and judging from her school on Tuesday afternoon the former anyhow is by no means to be despised. If the weights are skilfully handled this should be a great race and it will take a great deal of acumen to find the right number on which to plant the money.

The other pony race (Bentinck Plate) is 7 furlongs on the flat and has 20 names in the list of which Solace and Picture are also in the jump event, though it is not likely that the latter will attempt to go in it after her pitiable attempts over the sticks in her schools.

The only new one to Calcutta is Primrose, another of those unfortunate ponies who just missed her 14 hand measurement and however good she may be she will have to get in extremely light to have much chance against the small horses that race as 14-2's nowadays.

The Cornwallis Plate, a 1½ mile handicap, is the remaining event, and here again there are 19 fair class animals entered. By the way there is going to be an unholy squash in the 6 furlongs events. It would be perfectly simple to take an angle out and widen the first part of the 6 furlong course as has been done with the five and it would seem almost worth while to do it as there is no possibility of the new course being ready for at least 12 months and perchance longer.

There has been a good deal of schooling done at Tollygunge on Sunday and over the hurdles on the course on Tuesday while the paperchasers have been busy out at Milton Park. It is still uncertain whether there will be anything to prepare for, as the latest reports are that it is impossible to find any ridable country and unless there is rain the paperchases must be abandoned. If this happens the terms of the Hunter Steeplechases at Tollygunge and races at the extra meetings will have to be altered probably to the same as those on the similar class in the monsoons.

The horses and ponies out at Tollygunge on Sunday included Ruby (Mr. Tanner), Dangar (Butlin), Myolene (Native), Blue Bell (Butlin), Lily (Mr. Tremearne), Tiritiri (Butlin), Aberfoyle (Mr. Evers), Miss Preston (Mr. Glen), Envious (Mr. Cowper), Reha (Mr. Evers), Lily II. (Mr. Barrow), Dynamite (Mr. Tremearne), Liska (Mr. Hilliard), Emerald (Mr. Tanner), Agamemnon (Mr. Radmore), Ynyslas (Mr. Evers), Bellara (Mr. Barrow). The jumping over the so-called obstacles that make up the steeplechase course was good on the whole; Ruby and Blue Bell both got rid of their jockeys in the course of the journey, but it wasnot apparent that the animals had made any particular mistake. Lily II. did noticeably well for a first school and was sent out for another dose over hurdles this time on Tuesday, when she went round the course in company with Pineal (Butlin).

The first couple out were Africo (Thomas) and Umutbee (Trenoweth). Africo pecked badly on landing over the first two but afterwards settled down and jumped in good style and the last mile was done in very good time.

The chief interest of the day centred in Betrayer who then came out for his first school. He is a big leggy bright chestnut and his appearance did not create a particularly favourable impression as he is a straggly looking sort of beast. Trenoweth was riding him and a little grey pony (Griffiths) went out to give a lead. The grey, however, made a mess of the first and then pulled. Betrayer got over in clumsy style, but going on by himself refused badly at the next and pulled up to wait for another school coming and chip in behind, but again with little success as he only took one with the lead and then refused, and blundering into the second very nearly came down, after which he gave it up as to bad job.

The school which Betrayer endeavoured to utilise to take him along consisted of Kipling (J. H. Trenoweth), Camira, Kingpin (Mr. Evers), and Hill of Tara (Bennett). They went the full course over 9 flights at a fair pace. Kipling and Kingpin showed up particularly well, the latter especially coming in full of running and hard held. Hill of Tara, however, was pretty well cooked three furlongs from home and she came in breathing as if her wind was touched.

Pinfire, Cracker, and Little Dolly then went the course at a good pace, Cracker showing up well and were followed by Bones, Lady Knight, Yardley, and Lady Viola, the first named looking to be considerably the best of the bunch. That uncouth jumper Picture then started for her third (and unless her owner believes in miracles) her last school. Roland was again out to give a lead but the mare stopped and jumped sideways over the first and refused altogether at the second. Its Government House to the meanest bustee that she will never take a fence properly as long as she lives and the sooner her connections appreciate that fact the better it will be for them. This performance finished the afternoon's work.

The world in general is still seeing nothing but Fitzgrafton for the Cup and after his gallop on Monday his price has shortened to 6 to 4 but for no statable reason we fancy that it is not going to be a favourite's race this year and there is likely to be a change in the betting after next Saturday's racing when the Wellesley Plate will show the world how some of the cracks perform in a good exercise gallop in public with the colours up—it will be nothing more to most of them, but even so will be an indication of form that is at present very dark. Tom Scott beat the touts on Tuesday morning and his pair were just returning to the rubbing down sheds when the first onlooker appeared. Nothing definite can be found out; but the birds on the trees who were the only spectators whisper that Wandin's performance surprised them into a regular twitter.

For the Trials Stirabout's performance on Saturday has brought him into the position of first favourite and it certainly would look as if he were a good deal more than 4lb. ahead of Sermon, but these are not the only horses in the race. Amplify was going on Saturday much stronger than Messrs. Wood and Badger's horse and looked as if an extra furlong might have easily brought him out in front while last year's winner, Saloon, must not be forgotten and Mr. Galstaun's horse Berthier, who has been having a nice easy time of it with no racing, is likely to strip a very fit horse on the day.

Saloon and Amplify did a mile in 1min. 51secs. on Tuesday morning and both were going within themselves.

Fast work was also done by Misty Morn, and Cinder Bill who did a strong two miles, Paddy's Darling seven furlongs at a great pace and Mozart and Mallynook a fourteen anna five furlong gallop. Despite all rumours Misty Morn does not look quite form enough to annex the Cup though he is likely to score some useful wins for Mr. Galstaun before the end of the season.

With deep regret we announce the tragic end of Mr. Duncan Macleod, one of the best athletes who ever pulled on a running shoe, a man who in his young days was in the forefront of sprinters in Scotland and who, after his arrival in India, gave us something to think about in the early days of the B. P. A. A. A. He was the only man who ever beat Norman Pritchard on the flat out here. A special telegram to the Empire on Tuesday, says:—

The news of a terrible tragedy has reached Calcutta from Sitarampur, where Mr. Duncan A Macleod, the local representative and colliery superintendent of Macleod and Co. of Dalhousie Square, has been shot dead.

The painful information was contained in a terse telegram from one of the Company's representatives at Sitarampur, and was received yesterday. This simply gave the bare fact that Mr. Macleod had been shot dead by a man named Myers that morning.

Mr. Norman Augustus Macleod, the brother of the deceased gentleman, left for Sitarampur last night, and the funeral took place this afternoon.

The man Myers, is a Eurasian, and was an assistant of the Sodeeh Coal Company. The manager of this concern was a man named Crabbe, and about three weeks ago the connection of these men with the Company was severed.

Sitarampur was the headquarters of Mr. Duncan A Macleod who was a popular man, and greatly respected throughout the colliery districts.

Mr. D. A. Macleod was in Calcutta as recently as October, and was well known here. He had been in India about 12 years, the first portion of his experience being gained in Behar.

It will be remembered that some three or four months ago Mr. D. A. Macleod was attacked in a train by a railway thief. He was a man of powerful physique and captured the fellow.

A particularly painful aspect of the tragedy is that his wife and two children recently came out on the Somali and went up to Sitarampur three weeks ago.

Mr. Macleod was about 45 years of age, a man of 6 feet 6 inches, and known in Behar, where he was indigo planting as "Dunkie Lal."

The following is the betting on the Trials and Viceroy's Cup. We note that Fitzgrafton is firmer than ever in the market; the best price now obtainable is about 6 to 4. Just as we go to press several big bets have been laid about him; a native has, we hear, taken Rs. 11,000 to Rs. 6,000 about his chance:—

There seems to be some impression abroad that there is very little betting on the Trials and Cup this year. We cannot understand how this has come about; as far as our observation extends it seems to us that there is far more life and go in the Calcutta betting market than there has been for many years. We found this opinion on the fact that we have seen several of the books on these two events and we have been interested to note that there has been a much bigger market than we have had since 1894, when Captain Orr Ewing's Metallic won the Viceroy's Cup. Two or three books have so far operated to big money and we know one, at least, which has at the time of writing, Rs. 30,000 on the Trials and Rs. 50,000 on the Cup. Two other books we have seen have got at least Rs. 30,000 on the Cup. This surely doesn't indicate any tightness?

True, the money seems to be going on "good goods," most of it on Sermon and Stirabout for the Trials, and on Fitzgrafton, Boabdil and Steinhager for the Cup; but eight others are also well backed for the Trials and five others are fancied for the Cup as will be seen from the quotations we give. We are well within the mark in saying that Fitzgrafton has already been backed to win a lac of rupees.

Last week when noticing the excellence of the C.T.C. arrangements around the stands and enclosures we, through inadvertence, overlooked the important part played by our old friends Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Co. Those who have not yet discovered it will be interested and glad to be told that the firm supply tiffins in the grand enclosure to non-members of the Turf Club—a public convenience that is sure of ready recognition, for it is often a bit of a scramble to manœuvre that meal between the time of leaving office and the ringing of the saddling bell for the first race on the card.

It is proposed to bring off the annual Murray Football Tournament during the cold weather, and the semi-finals and final will, it is expected, be played in Lucknow about the second week in March next. Major Hugh Lewrence, Brigade Major, Lucknow Brigade, has kindly undertaken the duties of Honorary Secretary. Last year the entries for this tournament were twenty-five, constituting a "record" number of entries for any tournament in the country. Certainly it is the most popular tournament in the East. This year there is every reason to believe the number of regiments entering teams will prove a further record. Entries for the tournament may be sent to Murray and Co., Ld., Lucknow.

We have just received details of the record Indian wild boar, bagged at Khummoo in Kashmir, on the 25th November by General Raja Sir Amar Singh, K.C.S.I. They are as follows:—

Height at shoulder	39 inches
Length from nose to vent	68 „
Girth	61 „
Girth of collar	50 „
Length of the tush (broken) ...	5½ „
Weight	700 lbs.

Surely this is the most colossal specimen ever brought to bag out here! In height it has been equalled by Mr. Macneil Ferguson's gigantic boar killed in Berhampore last January, and Major Priestley's magnificent 38 incher, speared in Nagpur not long ago, closely approaches it: but the weight! Mr. Ferguson's boar weighed only 278lbs. Major Priestley's (which was only one inch less in girth) weighed 350lbs. A boar 700 would be almost as bulky as a bull. Fifty cwt, "prodeegious," as Bailie Nicol Jarvie might have observed. We shall be pleased to show any interested sportsman a fine photo of the Kashmir boar.

We have received from Messrs. P. Orr and Sons, of Madras, Calcutta and elsewhere, a copy of their new Xmas and New Year Catalogue which contains a large and varied selection of the latest designs in jewellery, silver and electro-plated ware, and should be a great help to people selecting presents at this time of the year. The articles are so numerous and varied that there should be little difficulty in finding something suitable. In jewellery we notice that Peridots, Tourmalines and Amethysts are now very fashionable, and these stones in combination with pearls and enamel have a very handsome appearance, and make most effective brooches, necklets, rings, etc. In the silver ware, there is a very nice selection of articles suitable for presents to ladies and gentlemen, and also prizes for gymkhanas, etc. As regards the electro-plated ware, there is practically everything that would be found useful for the household. The catalogue is sent post free on application, and should be in every body's hands at this time of present giving. It will be found a great help to those who are unable to inspect personally the fine selection of articles on show at Messrs. P. Orr and Sons premises.

With reference to the correspondence regarding the abnormal doe antelope started in our columns last week, "Smoothbore" contributes a letter which will be found further on. Mr. Brown also addressed The Pioneer on the subject and has elicited the following reply to his letter:—"Three years ago in the Mainpur district I saw a horned doe similar to the one he describes, except that the one I saw was of the ordinary light brown colour. However, it is quite possible my brown doe after an interval of three years has developed into Mr. Brown's "dark black" one! To return to my light brown doe, I met her in a village and she followed my tum-tum for quite a mile, and then returned to the village to which, I was told, she belonged; she was then quite tame."

For some time the neighbourhood of Vickarabad, writes a correspondent, has suffered terribly from a marauding man eating tiger. News still continues to come into Secunderabad that the monster pursues his depredations among the villagers, and that within the last three months he has carried off five or six victims, one being a woman. At present something akin to a panic prevails at Pudoor, a place about five miles from Vickarabad, and the brute's lair is supposed to be in the thick jungle close by. Mr. Pendlebury, son of the Agent and Manager, the Nizam's Guaranteed State Railway, was out recently in that District, and he shot a tiger which was said at the time to be the one required, but fresh victims having been reported dispelled that idea. It would be a real boon to the terrified inhabitants if some sportsmen went out and rid the locality of such a scourge.

The Jhansi Hockey Tournament was concluded on the 2nd December, when the 33rd Punjabis and the 87th Dogras met in the final tie a capital game ending in a win for the Punjabis by 2 goals to 1.

The final game in the Frontier Force Hockey Tournament, was played at Kohat on the 23rd November, when the 52nd Sikhs beat the 23rd Peshawar Mountain Battery by 2 goals to nil.

Last week we had time and space for nothing else, but the mere announcement of the victory of Burns over Gunner Moir in the big fight which look place at the National Sporting Club. A few particulars regarding the winner will not be out of place here. Burns has come on with astounding rapidity during the past twelve months. A Canadian by birth, he has not by any means the physical qualities for a heavy-weight, for he only stands 5 feet 7 inches in height, but he has plenty of weight. Born in Hanover, Canada, in 1881, Burns fought his first real battle at Detroit six years ago, where he defeated Fred Thornton, a local boxer of considerable repute, in quick time. Detroit was his headquarters for a few years, and many notable victories were achieved over light-weights such as Billy Walsh, Dick Smith, Jack O'Donnell, Jimmy Duggan, Ben O'Grady, and Jack Butler. At the outset of his career Burns received a nasty check from Mike Schreck, but nothdaunted, the Canadian kept on tackling "big gan Jack O'Brien first crossed swords with Burns at Milwaukee, on 7th October, when the Philadelphian won in six rounds. Then followed a series of first-class engagements, in which only one defeat had to be recorded, and that was against Jack ("Twin") Sullivan, who defeated our Jack Palmer in America not long ago. Burns' fistic record for the past two years is as follows:—

July 4—W. Squires, K. San Francisco	...	... 1

The Calcutta Cricket Club have arranged the following matches for Xmas week:—

24th, 25th and 26th, C.C.C. vs. Bombay.

27th and 28, Bombay v. Maharaja of Cooch Behar's XI.

29th, 31st and 1st, C.C.C. vs. Maharaja of Cooch Behar's XI.

The fixture C.C.C. vs. Behar Wanderers has been unavoidably cancelled owing to the latter Club not being able to get together a team to visit Calcutta this year. There will be the usual Ladies' tiffin on the club ground on Xmas Day.

A veritable edition de luxe of Messrs. Hamilton's jewellery and silver-ware catalogue reminds us that the welcome season for receiving (and giving) presents is now close at hand. As an example of high art printing it is quite equal to anything issued by the best London houses—and they are certainly not behind the door in this particular enterprise—while the specimens of their huge stock therein depicted afford the donor the wildest selection of Xmas gifts and the donee the liveliest gratification we should say. Prices quoted! We can only refer questioners to the book itself—verily they cover a range to suit all purses as well as all tastes.

It is with peculiar satisfaction we, as old friends of the firm of over thirty years standing, note this is a centenary issue, for next month Messrs. Hamilton and Co., enter on their second century of existence. And long may they flourish and maintain the eminent position they have always held in the shiny East.

Mr. G. Mannington, in his recently published and very interesting book, "A Soldier of the Legion," gives an account of the shooting of a tiger which encamped in a cluster of trees inside a village, and regularly every morning helped itself to a villager. More interesting still is his account of the invasion of Thai-Nguyen, and even of its citadel by tigers which prowled about the streets after dark till no one dared venture forth at night without a torch. One night the doctor, asleep within the fortress, was awakened by a terrific scrimmage under his bed. It was a tiger fetching out from under it his favourite [illegible]ter which had fled there for refuge. The doctor [illegible]atched the brute with a single revolver shot!

A French sportsman was recently shot as the result of his having imitated the cry of a partridge. The regret which we feel at the announcement is only equalled by the sorrow with which we remember that some imitators of birds and things on the music-hall stage at home and elsewhere still survive.

A deer-stalker who can claim to have shot eleven stags in a single day may, or may not, be congratulated on the feat, according as one views the matter—some might call it wonton slaughter. But we are reminded that this is not a record. Seventy years and more ago, Captain Horatio Ross, one of the deadliest shots of his time, did even more execution, although his weapon was a muzzle-loader. On one memorable day the Captain killed thirteen deer (including seven stags) with only fourteen shots—a feat which must have been almost child's play to a man who, for a wager, killed ten brace of swallows on the wing, before breakfast, with a pistol firing a single ball. A few years ago, Mr. Walter Winans, the finest revolver shot in the world, butchered a dozen stags during a single stalk. This feat he achieved by crawling up to a herd of fifteen and killing a dozen of them before they could get out of range of his deadly rifle. Even more amazing is a feat credited to Mr. Louis Winans, his brother, who once pumped twenty consecutive bullets into as many stags, most of them running, in a single day.

As miraculous an escape from death as any we have ever heard of was recently recorded by the Almora correspondent of The Indian Daily Telegraph who writes:—"A lady from Ranikhet was riding along the Daulchhina road when her horse shied at a narrow unprotected part. It was a sheer precipice and the horse and rider fell sixty feet before touching the bank. Here the horse rolled over the lady and was dashed to pieces further down the khud. The lady's companion feared to follow her at first having no hope of her safety, but going down the hill he found her standing up awaiting him and she was presently able to walk home."

A boa constrictor, believed to be 121 years old, has just died at San Francisco. Great Snakes!

Scottish professional golf has suffered a distinct loss in the death of Jack Kirkaldy. The eldest of the three brothers, Jack, Andrew, and Hugh, he was perhaps less known to fame than Andrew, the master of pithy and humorous delineation of character, or Hugh, who died long since, the possessor of the longest and most perfect swing ever seen even upon that links which has given the "St. Andrews swing" as an almost unattainable ideal to the world. None the less, Jack was one of the best-known and best-liked professionals in Scotland. So long as five-and-twenty years ago he took third place in the Open Championship, and that he kept up his form well is shown by his victory in a big professional tournament at St. Andrews so recently as 1900, besides holding the record of the New Course, which he holed out in 73 strokes a year or two ago. He was, particularly, a master of the cleek, and one of his favourite forms of the game was to take out this club alone against an opponent with his full armoury; and it was seldom indeed that the eighteenth hole found him one down in this form of match. Not all his golfing career, however, was spent at St. Andrews; for some time he was at Byfleet, and he was also professional to the Cannes Club. His death will cause a regret in many a heart, and many a golfer will mourn the loss of a thoroughly good instructor of the game.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Not only was there a programme of five events last Saturday at the Royal Bombay Yacht Club but entries were very good; a light breeze blowing. Five sailed for "A" class in which Turquoise got away too soon, had to come back and gave in. Eileen sailed well, but was poorly handled in the run home when both Melody and Sapphire beat her, the former winning by over five minutes.

For "B" class there was a splendid race, Trixie getting well away only to be blanketed with Mannikin. Peewit led to the Mark buoy but from there it was a ding dong struggle between Sayonara, Pixie and Erin. The first kept a very steady course and eventually beat Pixie by just over a minute, Erin being only six seconds away and Peewit less than a minute off her.

Six sailed for "C" class which proved little more than a match between Tomtit and Meg. The former led to the last buoy where Meg drew up and making up no less than a minute in the run in won by a minute and a half; Maud third eight minutes away.

Also in "D" class, the race deve..ed into a match between the old rivals Siren and Swale, Invicta and Firefly not being timed. Eventually Swin won by a few seconds over the minute.

No less than thirteen went for the Ships' Boat race and after a straggly start there was but little to choose between any of them as far as South Karanja. From here the 36ft. Pinnace No. 1 began to draw away and finally won by a minute from the 36ft. Pinnace No. 2. A good race for third place resulted in a two minute win for the 32ft. Galley over the 30ft. cutter; the Hyacinth consequently providing the first two places.

London Week-by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 22nd November 1907.

There was a memorable gathering of royalties at Windsor on Sunday last. Our own King and Queen, the German Emperor and Empress, the King and Queen of Spain, the Queen of Norway and Her Majesty of Portugal, eight altogether. The occasion was obviously one for the photographer and Downey of Ebury Street, was sent for to take groups in the afternoon before the Royal Party dispersed. There was an enormous crowd in the streets to watch the comings and goings of the great personages. Prince Olaf of Norway was much en evidence: if H. R. H. is as popular at forty as he is as four he should be able to move Europe with a touch of his finger. As a special privilege the gardens of the East Terrace were opened to the public on Sunday, a thing seldom or never done while the Royal family is in residence at the Castle. Needless to say they were crammed.

The Royal Visitors have been vouchsafed abundant opportunity of making acquaintance with November fogs. We have had overhead fogs and ground fogs, black fogs and yellow by turns; at least as black and as yellow as we ever do have them now-a-days, for there is no denying it, we do not now get the fine old brand which was so distinctive a feature of London November twenty years ago. However, they have been bad enough to disorganise traffic and hold up trains, Royal specials and workmen's with strict impartiality, and we should welcome a stiff breeze to carry the murk away. Wednesday until lunch time was darker than the darkest night.

The "Guards Inquiry" into the case of Mr. Woods was opened on Monday and the business has been reported at length daily. The five officers sitting as the Court have to "record their opinion as whether the adverse report upon Mr. Woods made by Captain C. E. Corkran, Captain the Hon'ble J. F. Gathorne Hardy and Colonel W. E. Cavendish were unbiassed and justified, and whether any officers of the 2nd Battalion Grenadier Guards, and if so which of them and to what extent, have brought pressure to bear on Licutenant Woods with a view to his resigning his commission." Quite an array of counsel is engaged, Mr. Rufus Isaacs leading for Mr. Woods and Mr. C. F. Gill leading for the three officers who reported adversely upon Mr. Woods.

* * * * * *

To put a very long story into a few words, the case seems to be this: that Mr. Woods has shown aptitude and ability at book work, did well in blockhouse work in South Africa and was successful in dealing with confidential work under Colonel Henderson, who was engaged on the official history of the war. The unfavourable reports date from the spring of the present year. Major Gathorne Hardy after company training, reported his conduct as "most unsatisfactory throughout;" Mr. Woods in his judgment "was quite unfitted to command a company on manœuvre; showed no signs of initiative, self-reliance or military knowledge: no aptitude for the command of men nor knowledge of how to engage their confidence, respect or affection." He was "cordially disliked by the men" and in his opinion the "dislike was well merited. Colonel Cavendish endorsed this report. Major Corkran to whose company Mr. Woods was transferred after this report was made reported that he was "painfully slow" had "little or no power of grasping a situation," in the field, while he had a "disagreeable bad, nagging, interfering manner with his men." His want of tact and "perhaps unpreventible knack of rubbing up officers N.-C. Os. and men the wrong way" in Major Corkran's opinion entirely unfitted him for his position when taken into account "in conjunction with his want of go, initiative and common sense."

* * * * * *

All these officers reported that Mr. Woods tried to do his best, and there was general consensus of opinion that he wanted to go on in his profession. Subsequent evidence points to his unpopularity: he appears to be an unsociable young man, in Colonel Sir Charles Fergusson's words he "declined every offer made him by the other officers to join in their pursuits:" he wouldn't go out with the drag or play golf and if asked what he was going to do would say "nothing in particular." His studious habits were not the reason for his unpopularity as the regiment had "a quiet steady lot of officers—a particularly nice and quiet lot. They held well together and played games together but not expensive games: The sensational feature of yesterday's proceedings was the reading of letters penned by "Colonel X.," whose identity is not to be revealed. He attributed the attitude adopted by young Woods to paternal influence. The case is expected to last for a few days yet.

The Druce case has occupied a good deal of attention since I wrote last. Mr. Caldwell's evidence has been concluded and leaves the outsider in a state of puzzlement. Among other statements he said that on the day of the mock funeral, 28th December 1864, the Duke, in his ducal character, was superintending the arrangements for the interment of his double: this without any concealment. Mr. Plowden wanted to know who, under these circumstances the funeral was intended to deceive, but on this point Mr. Caldwell was unable to enlighten him. Miss Robinson who was in the witness box on Monday gave an account of her connection with the Duke and "Mr. Druce" which involved many references to Charles Dickens. She spoke to the Duke's wearing a wig and false whiskers, etc., when in London; but the arresting feature of her evidence was that she knew him as "Mr. Druce" in 1868 and for at least a couple of years later; he never told her that he had, so to speak, killed Druce and buried him in 1864. Before Miss Robinson was examined the question of the stolen diary was raised: the lady said she had copied it just before it was stolen in order to refresh her memory: but Mr. Plowden would not allow her to refer to it as Mr. Atherby Jones requested and it was excluded from evidence.

Mr. Macartney, Surveyor to the Fabric of St. Paul's, read a paper on the present condition of the Cathedral at the Institute of Architects on Monday night. He explained in detail where settlement had taken place and what the effect of the settlement had been: the dome carried on eight huge piers, was now parted from the man of the structure, the piers having sunk as much as 6 inches on the southern side: the towers at the west end are out of the perpendicular and there are settlements in many other parts of the fabric. Nevertheless Mr. Macartney holds that so long as the subsoil is not interfered with the danger can be reduced to a minimum.

Christmas is coming and with it quite a flutter of anxiety lest he among tradesmen who giveth a Christmas box should stray unawares within the mazes of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1906. May the butcher give my cook a present? and if the butcher does so, would it be dangerous to regulate the value of the present by the amount of meat he has supplied during the year? I should think if the butcher did so regulate his present, nay, if he gave the cook one at all without my knowledge, I could lay him and the cook by the heels. Sir Edward Fry wisely advises all tradesmen to ootain written permission from employers to give servants Xmas presents, so I fancy the number of presents will fall off somewhat.

At the annual dinner of the Brewers Society held the other night at the Metropole Mr. Charles J. Steward, Public Trustee, made a speech which included some interesting figures. Apropos of the Government's promised temperance campaign he pointed out that the brewing and distillery trades now provide the country with revenue enough to maintain the Navy and contribute about one-fifth the cost of the Army. He doubted, as do others than teetotal cranks, whether piling taxation upon the brewer would advance the cause of temperance. It appears that the 660 members of this Society represent 191 millions of capital.

Sir H. Campbell Bannerman's illness was much less serious than we were led to believe at first: but mere mention of the heart in connection with indisposition is quite enough to set tongues wagging. The Prime Minister had a cold, had been doing a great deal and overtazed his strength, with the result that he collapsed after making his speech at Bristol. At the age of 71 the recuperative powers are not, of course, what they are at an earlier age and the patient has been ordered to cancel his engagements and take a rest; which will probably continue till the re-opening of Parliament.

I am told that Sir Percy Scott has sent in his papers as a result of that unfortunate signal affair. His retirement has not been gazetted so far, and it is thought that the Lords of the Admiralty have asked him to reconsider the step. We only hope it is true: he is too good a man to lose for such a trifling matter as an ill timed jest.

The Trustees of the Rhodes Scholarship Fund have just published their annual report. There are 160 Rhodes scholars now at Oxford the majority from America. The men have done well in the schools but not so conspicuously well as we might expect of picked men as there are. They have proved shining lights in athletics though; six of the 'Varsity Rugby team against Cambridge were South Africans and one has been elected captain for 1908. Six Rhodes men took part in the inter 'Varsity athletic sports and they have made their mark in other athletics and games. The Chancellor and the German Emperor last Friday, at Windsor, seized the opportunity to rub into the Rhodes Scholars their peculiar responsibilities. On the whole the men seem to be quite alive to them: they have certainly learned something of British undergraduate methods. We do not now hear of American freshmen adorning themselves with their athletic medals to go and call on their tutors and the college authorities: an error into which the first importations fell with one accord.

Madame Patti is to sing at the Albert Hall on this day week. She promised Mr. Percy Harrison that she would sing at a benefit concert at the close of her professional career and this is the occasion. Madame Patti's professional career closed for London on 1st December last and for the provinces at Belfast on the 6th of this month.

People who have heard her (amongst whom your correspondent is not yet) rave about the new singer Mme. Tetrazzini who is playing in Covent Garden Opera. According to one musical enthusiast she is Patti, Melba and Albani rolled into one, and is destined to eclipse the fame of all three. More temperate critics allow that the lady's voice is beautiful, well trained and used with exceptional skill; that she sings with rare meaning and expression, and is a most capable actress. Mme. Tetrazzini may or may not be all that her sworn admirers claim for her, but she has certainly created a sensation and Covent Garden is crammed every night to hear her.

There is little to be said about the theatres this week. The only new piece is a curtain raiser "A Stroke of Business" adapted by Messrs. Arthur Morrison and Horace Newte from a story by the former. It is not a very pleasing play. Daniel Piker has an aunt, Sarah, who is said by the London doctor to be at death's door: Aunt Sarah has made a will leaving her all a £100 to Daniel with the stipulation that he buries her at Thorpe Dedham 30 miles from town. Daniel finding that it is much more expensive to convey dead aunts by train than live ones, persuades Aunt Sarah to come home—he lives at Thorpe Dedham—with him. She consents and the change of air does such wonders for her that when the curtain falls on Daniel's long face we foresee that the old lady has years of life in her yet. The action takes place in Daniel's cottage at Thorpe Dedham and the whole thing depends on the heir-apparent's cupidity and stinginess and I confess to laughing when Aunt Sarah polished off the viands and drank the beer which had been ordered in for her funeral, and also at Mr. Norman McKinnel's clever presentation of Daniel. But there is an atmosphere of sordidity and gruesomeness over the play which does not please.

The "Follies" have done with Music Hal' burlesque for the present and have revived "Bill Bailey" whose movements were a source of such extraordinary interest to London music hall goers a few years ago. It is sufficiently amusing as it must be in Mr. Pellisier's hands; but is not I think quite as clever or amusing as the burlesque of a music hall programme which took the town by storm. The Follies have made Terry's their own, and are become an accepted institution: deservedly for there is more wit and humour in their entertainment than in all the plays in London.

Mr. George Edward Wade, otherwise the popular George Robey of music hall fame, has lost his case against his employers the Robert Arthur Theatres Company. He had signed an engagement for three years at a salary of £130, £140, and £150 per week for each year successively, and for a fourth year at the £150, if the Company wished. He denied knowledge of the last option and his action was to rescind or cancel the claim on his services it was proposed to press. Mr. Justice Parker held that if the plaintiff had not read the agreement he had had every opportunity of doing it; that Mr. Robert Arthur's account of the personal interview at which the business had been settled was much clearer than George Robey's: and dismissed the action with costs. The successful defendants stated that the actor's salary for the fourth year would be £160 per week.

The Theatrical Managers' Association in meeting assembled have passed a resolution in favour of maintenance of the office of censor of plays: but they consider that plays which have been refused a license should not be presented anywhere. This is a side hit at the stage society. Copies of the resolution were sent to the Prime Minister the Lord Chamberlain and the L.C.C.

A curious case came before Mr. Justice Bargrave Deane in the High Court this week. In April last Mrs. Maria Josephine Leslie obtained a decree of judicial separation from her husband and alimony at the rate of £330 per annum. In July Mrs. Leslie was convicted of obtaining money under false pretences (in what was known as the Kennel Maid case) and got five years. The judge was asked to say that the woman was entitled to receive her alimony though in prison: he remarked that alimony was "not intended to enable a wife to save up while she is in prison," and reserved his judgment.

Review.

TERRIERS.*

Mr. Harding Cox's work on dogs, now in course of publication, has given rise to considerable pleasurable anticipations; and Volume I. on the Terriers, now before us, will certainly cause no disappointment. Of all lovers of the dog, those who have once been bitten with the terrier craze are perhaps the most steadfast in their affections. In this country the breed is specially popular, and at any Indian Show it usually proves the main feature of the Exhibition. The whole volume is the work of experts who write with an enthusiasm which is positively contagious. Those who are already fanciers will find their own particular fancy dealt with in a spirit which cannot fail to please; while those who refer to the book with a view to selecting some breed of terrier for companionship or show will find ample interesting descriptions, though they may feel embarrassed in their choice by the staunch support each and every variety has received. Terriers large and small, rough and smooth, the aristocratic fox-terrier, the powerful bull-terrier, the dare-devils and the die-hards, the representatives of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, all are there, and all depicted in colours which will certainly attract.

The introduction makes no concealment of the unwise fads of the faddists, a point on which the Editor has always held strong views, and it is impossible not to agree with him; but though the pendulum swung way far in the direction of various injudicious canine cults, there is hope that a more sensible feeling is now setting in, and at any rate, we in India, can refuse to be bound by the views of the extremists. Indian judges are usually too much of sportsmen to unduly favour sausage-like Spaniels which cannot hunt, or crippled bull-dogs, or to attach any extraordinary value to insignificant points of no possible interest to the honest cynophilist. The introduction also contains many sensible remarks on the subject of judging, which we commend to Show Committees, and on what it is considered should be held to be legitimate trimming. "Why," says the author, "forbid cutting, singeing, breaking, etc., of the coat? You might as well expect a man to go unkempt of locks and unshaven of chin; or ask an exhibitor of high-class trotting horses to bring his chargers into the ring with long hair on the fetlocks, coat unclipped, and mane unkempt. You cannot breed dogs of the rough-haired varieties to maintain a coat of constant and uniform length and appearance, and unless such coats are properly tended and manipulated, the appearance of the wretched animals is archaic and perhistoric. Why are poodles the only exception to this illogical and unnecessary rule? Why are all other breeds denied the right of coiffure?" Why indeed?

The fox-terrier occupies the pride of place in the volume. As the most popular of all breeds, because its size, beauty, intelligence, and loyalty make it such a boon companion, Mr. Harding Cox remarks "You cannot put a fox-terrier in his wrong place, and so we put him first." Of this charming little dog no one is more qualified to speak than the Editor, he has owned and bred and judged the breed for many years, he has a natural eye for a dog, and he has the pen of a ready writer. The chapters on the smooths and the wires are among the best, if not the very best, of an attractive publication, and will delight the hearts of all fox-terrier men. Those who imagine that the modern Show article has deteriorated in pluck or character or constitution would do well to peruse Mr. Harding Cox's remarks, also his views on size which we heartily endorse. There was no doubt a time when the giants had their fling, but it is also quite possible to run to the other extreme. We do not want to resort to terriers of the Trimmer and Belloma type, nor to the over-cobby specimens so fancied in India in days happily gone by. A fairly large terrier with true quality of outline will find a way to the quarry right enough. On only one point do we join issue with our author and that is on the point of the beautiful illustrations with which the book is copiously provided. It is said "To those who are already experts in canine lore, the plates which accompany the respective parts will form a valuable and lasting memento, which in after years, when haply even nearer approach to a universal ideal has been attained, can be referred to as ocular proof of type as it now exists in these early twentieth-century days. How interesting to the modern cynophilist would be a similar portfolio of portraiture of the choicest dogs of each breed as they existed in 1805." With these views regarding the value of portraiture we are in entire sympathy. They indicate exactly what is wanted. If we possessed more reliable portraits of former terriers, without harking back to 1805, or even 1850, or even many years later still, we should not hear so much from the laudator temporis acti. It is with the illustrations, not with their aim, that we are disposed to quarrel. They purport to be portraits of individual terriers, but they are not photographs, they are not even likeness. Except in the matter of colour or makings, they possess no value as pictures of the dog they are intended to represent. Take for example the frontispiece of Champion Donna Fortuna. As a work of art, as an aim at an ideal fox-terrier bitch, as a picture to hang on the wall to charm the eye and never tire, it is well nigh perfect; but it is not old Donna, beautiful bitch though she was. We have seen her over and over again in the Show ring and out of it, we have a high class photograph of her, an admirable likeness, and she is not, never was, what the illustration shows. We recognise the two black ears, nothing else. In a work which is intended to exemplify the best specimens of any particular dog as a record for another, the illustrations should be photographs re-produced by some suitable process. It is difficult to photograph dogs well, but nothing else will be of any avail for that special purpose, and a quarter of a century hence we shall have the laudator temporis acti coming into play again and arguing on false premises.

The chapter dealing with the Welsh terrier is another very attractive feature of the volume. Mr. Walter Glynn is a Welsh terrier enthusiast, he has been pre-eminent as a breeder and exhibitor of the only terrier representative of the Principality, he is a writer who never minces words, he is always deeply concerned with his subject, and there is no one more qualified to deal with this sterling breed of dog. The Welsh terrier is particularly pleasing in colour, it is very hardy, intelligent, and companionable, it has all the gameness of the fox-terrier without its pugnacity, and Mr. Glynn champions its merits stoutly in words which carry conviction. The breed is now almost extinct in India although Mr. Lionel Jacob did his best to popularise it. Genuine little terriers such as his Roger, Jackal, Joji, and Niger were once prominent features at Northern India Shows, winning champion honours and other important challenge trophies. The success which attended Mr. Jacob's exhibits led to other importations, but with the decease of the late Maharajah of Patiala and the Maharanee of Dholpur, both patrons of the breed, the Welsh terrier in India languished. The few owners could obtain no change of blood and by the time Mr. Lionel Jacob left India for Burma and parted with his kennel the Welsh terrier had disappeared from Indian shows. Yet there are few more attractive terriers in the world, and we cannot help thinking that the very steps the Welsh Terrier Club adopted to place the breed on a sound footing were partly responsible for the want of popularity. The Club resolutely set its face against anything that was not [illegible] Welsh in blood, the pure breed could not compete on [illegible] terms with fox or Irish terriers in form, there was a [illegible]r to short heads, and heavy skulls, and large ears. [illegible]ors in India, when it was a case of specials for all breeds, wanted something particularly classy, and when Mr. Jacob ceased to show, the breed disappeared. An infusion of the old English strain might have averted what is now a real want.

The chapter on the Bedlington is well worth reading. It has always been somewhat of a surprise to us that this variety of terrier has not caught on more in India. It is true that a Bedlington is not lovely, nor is it so hideous that its beauty lies in its ugliness; there is also the fact that it is one of the most difficult dogs to trim for Shows; but on the other hand it has many advantages and Mr. Harold Warners describes them with a whole-heartedness which is very refreshing. The Bedlington is exceptionally game, there is no dog of the weight with which it will not hold its own with something to spare; it is very active and hardy, and a most devoted companion; it is one of the most inexpensive of all dogs, a Champion can be purchased for a lower figure than a very third rate fox-terrier; and altogether Indian sportsmen might do worse than give a trial to this excellent terrier. We can only remember one good specimen, a first-rate little blue, which put in an appearance at the early Lahore Shows and never failed to score.

The White West Highland Terrier, an old breed which has recently come to the front, is quite safe in the hands of Colonel [illegible]elme of Poltalloch as far as any championing of its merits is concerned; and yet we are not sure that the Colonel is not wrong in its own true interests. In our opinion there is too great a tendency to multiply breeds without adequate reason. For that particular class of dog the designation Scottish Terrier would appear to be sufficient. The White West Highland at the most can only be said to be a sub-variety, it is a White Scottish Terrier which has not progressed so far in Show points because it has only recently appeared at Shows at all. The Scottie may be black, black-brindle, brown-brindle, grey-brindle, dark iron-grey, light iron-grey, wheaten, or sandy with a sandiness approaching white. The White Highland is never a pure white in the sense of a white fox or bull-terrier, and between a white dog with a near approach to a sandy, and a sandy which is nearly white there is not a world of difference. It might very well take its chance with the Scotties, of which we have known for a long time there have frequently been white specimens. It would at first of course fail to score at Shows, but that is only a matter of time. On the other hand if the variety is just a local breed maintained for sport, let it continue as such, sportsmen will love it none the less. Colonel Malcolm has been figuring lately as a judge of his own particular protege, and not with great success. The fact that a man is fond of a terrier does not necessarily imply that he is a competent judge in the ring, even when the breed is wholly familiar to him. The faculties of comparison and criticism are born not made.

It is, however, impossible for us in the space of this article to enter deeply into the large volume before us. The book treats of all varieties of the terrier, and we can confidently recommend it to all terrier-lovers as a publication of a kind which is not often produced. The volume can be obtained as a whole, handsomely bound, and is a complete compendium of all terriers; or the parts treating of each breed can be purchased separately. The artists' proofs of the many beautiful illustrations can be procured for 10s. 6d., and other proofs for 5s., and any of them would be an ornament to the Indian sportsman's gallery of pictures, whether as a delight to the eye or as a guide to breeders of the modern day perfection of form. In all respects the work leaves little to be desired.

Shikar.

A NARROW SHAVE.

I HAD a rather exciting adventure with a leopard towards the latter part of July. I was having tea in my verandah, rather early one morning, when I saw a couple of men coming up the road leading to the house. By the excited tone of their voices I knew that something had occurred and very soon the man, who appeared to be their leader came forward and said, that he had just seen a large leopard enter a pan or betel garden. These so-called betel gardens are not very unlike huge hot houses. The plant itself being a creeper is grown on stakes put down in lines or rows. These rows run parallel to each other and are three feet or so apart. The whole place is closed in on all sides and the top covered over with light thatching of grass or reeds, this preventing the sun entering and keeping the place cool and shady. The subdued light in those betel gardens makes everything rather indistinct. As I had, however, shot leopards in these betel gardens before, I knew fairly well what to do. This particular garden, where the leopard was said to be, was barely a quarter of a mile from the factory, and though I had seen it, I had never gone near it. I told the man, who had come with the news, to go and keep watch and see that the leopard did not sneak away. He had barely left and I had gone inside to dress, when I heard a great hubbub and sent out my bearer at once to find out what was the matter. He quickly returned saying, that a man had been brought in, who had been mauled by the leopard. Hurrying over my toilette, I went out to see what had happened. There was no doubt this time of there being a leopard about, for he had clearly left his sign manual on the unfortunate man's back. On making enquiries, the injured man said that he had often come across leopards in this very garden, but they had never molested or interfered with him, so believing in his immunity, he had gone to see, if there was really a leopard about; he had looked down several of the rows without seeing anything, when he suddenly heard a slight rustling and looking down the next row, came face to face with the leopard who at once charged with a growl, knocking him down and clawing him badly in several places. The man said he was positive the leopard had gone out of the pan bagan and volunteered to show the place where he had broken through.

Having sent for a couple of up-country peons, I always take these men with me, being far more reliable than Bengalees, I mounted my pony and followed by a motely crowd, who wanted to see the fun, made my way towards the betel garden, the leopard was said to be in. The very look of the place, showed me at once, that it would not be an easy task to get a leopard out of it. I had barely dismounted from my pony and gone for instructions to my two followers; when I heard a roar followed by a succession of coughs and saw the crowd running for all they were worth, and to all my enquiries the only answer, I could get was, that the bagh had eaten up some one! Many had already climbed trees, while others had found safety on the top of houses and other places of vantage. I made my way forward, but owing to the height of the undergrowth, I could not see very well ahead, so was not a little surprised to find myself all of a sudden in the presence of Babu Khan, a well known swash buckler and bravado, who with his lal pugree, shield and sword, thought a good deal of himself; but now, alas! with his pugree torn to sheds, his shield and sword sent flying from his grasp and himself covered with blood and dust presenting a truly, bedraggled appearance. Babu Khan lay in a half dazed state and to all my queries he could only point with a shaking finger towards the direction the leopard had gone.

Some of the crowd now came forward and gave a vivid descripiton of what had occurred. It would appear, that Babu Khan, quite ignorant of the leopard's whereabouts, was heading the crowd and challenging his invisible enemy and slashing away right and left with his sword, when all of a sudden there was a tremendous roar, and before the idiot knew exactly what had happened, his shield and sword were sent flying from his grasp and he was knocked over and badly mauled. After a hurried consultation with my two henchmen, we quickly followed the leopard. The country seemed to be quite open, the nearest cover, a grove of plantain trees, lay some 3 to 400 yards off and no one had seen the animal reach it. The next nearest cover to the road was a huge lemon tree, which grew in a small nullah totally overspreading it. This nullah ended at the road and closer examination showed, that the leopard, after crossing the road, had gone into it. The question now was, was he lying under that solitary lemon tree, or had he gone into the plantain grove where he would be practically safe from further molestation; as again beyond it lay some dense and impenetrable jungle. I decided on the lemon tree and when we got to within ten paces of it, I stopped and peered into the undergrowth but the way the sun struck on the bushes made the inside look very dark and gloomy. Warning my followers to be on the qui vive I again made a move forward and having got right up to the bush, made a careful reconnoitre. As soon as my eyes were a little accustomed to the gloom, I saw a huge leopard looking at me straight in the eyes and he could not have been more than 6 or 7 feet off. To raise my gun and fire point blank at the head was the work of an instant; and as I did so I quickly backed out and retreated to a safe distance and waited for further developments. To my astonishment, my shot brought no response and the man posted on some of the neighbouring trees swore that the brute had not come out of the bushes. Had I shot the brute dead, or had I missed altogether I asked myself; for no demonstration of any kind had answered my shot. If I had missed he would most likely have cleared out of the small cover, he had taken shelter in and if only wounded would ten to one have charged out. My men were confident that he was done for, so I walked round, spotted him again and found him lying on his side. I gave him another barrel and had him dragged out.

Though I had shot 23 leopards on foot, this was certainly the biggest I had ever seen, he was a perfect monster and measured 7 feet 8 inches as he lay, a couple of friends who came to see it in the evening said his forearms were more like those of a tiger than a leopard. It was a male in the prime of life, and though the markings were very distinct, the colour was very light. I was very lucky with my snapshot, or I should perhaps have got a terrible mauling. My bullet had entered just over the left eye completely fracturing the skull, so death must have been instantaneous. The brute was a terrible cattle slayer and disdained goats, dogs and such small fry. The week previous to his being shot he had accounted for two milch cows and a full grown bullock.

RAOUL.

The Vicar was addressing the school on the subject of truth. He expounded at some length on the wickedness of lying, and before going on to the merits of speaking the truth he thought he would see if the children really understood him.

"Now," said he, "can any one tell me what a lie is?"

Immediately a number of small hands shot up. The Vicar selected a bright looking youngster.

"Well, my little man?"

"Please sir, a lie is an abomination unto every one, but a very pleasant help in time of trouble.

THE HORNED DOE BLACK BUCK.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In your issue of 5th December, the "Doe Black Buck" story by E. G. B., interested me very much. I have heard of the doe having horns of this kind before; the following extract from Brigadier-General A. A. Kinloch's book Large Game Shooting "may enlighten E. G. B." on the subject.

The Indian Antelope (page 154). "The doe is of a light fawn above, and white beneath, with a light coloured line along the side; she is not furnished with horns except in very rare instances. When horns do appear they are slender and much curved, bearing no resemblance to those of the Buck."

BALL AND SHOT GUNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to Messrs. Westley Richards and Co.'s criticisms on my letter to the Indian Field of 11th July, they should remember that I regard the efforts of gunmakers to improve Ball and Shot Guns with the unbiassed eye of the practical sportsman. These weapons are at best but a compromise between the shot gun and rifle, and can never therefore be quite perfect in either role. The trajectory of the combination gun with ball is so high, even in the case of the Explora, that a high velocity rifle would always be preferred for shooting game at long range. I therefore cannot honestly see that accuracy at three hundred yards is, in a ball and shot gun, a matter of more than academic interest to sportsmen. Moreover, in justice to other manufacturers of combination guns, the Explora is by no means the only pattern which will shoot well at long ranges. The Paradox, for instance, shoots with great accuracy at 200 yards.

Moving back the centre of gravity to improve steadiness in flight is not a new idea, but Mr. Leslie Taylor has in his bullet carried this principle very much further than anyone else. In America, as everyone knows, there are large numbers of experimenters, or rifle cranks; and it has more than once been observed by these indefatigable workers, that certain bullets shoot better when hollow fronted than when cast solid.

I had an interesting experience with a minature howitzer illustrating the same thing in an exaggerated degree. This little model is of one and a half inches in calibre, and at the time of the experiments (1902) was a muzzle-loader, though I have since had it converted to a breech-loader on the interrupted screw system. This howitzer used a lead alloy shell weighing 2lb. I at first cast these shells with a hollow at the base, similar, though on a much larger scale, to that seen in the Snider bullet; wishing to make sure that the projectile would set up well into the rifling with small charges. Practising one day with very small charges of 4 to 6 drachms, and with an elevation of 40 degrees. I found that the shells turned over during flight and travelled base first. I then cast some shell with flat bases, thus throwing the centre of gravity further back. The tendency to turn over at once disappeared, and all the flat based shells struck the ground nose first. I have always, as my former letters show, given Messrs. Westley Richards fair credit for their enterprize and energy in the development of sporting weapons. They must not therefore take it ill if I cannot admit that the "Explora" possesses any very enormous practical advantages over weapons of the same type by other makers.

3. Tickets purchased at the Calcutta Offices (Fairlie Place and Chowringhee) will be available by trains leaving Howrah on the day of issue or on the following day. Tickets for Monday's mail trains are procurable at these offices on Saturdays. Tickets purchased at the Burra Bazar Office will be available on the day of issue only.

4. The return concession tickets for first, second and intermediate class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation, provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale :—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	Four.
Second	Five.
Intermediate (lateral compartment) ...	Eight.

5. The return concession ticket does not entitle the holder to any additional concession, such, for instance, as that under which women servants are, on payment of the next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in first or second class compartments. Concession tickets for children will be issued at half single journey fares.

6. The above arrangements apply to the East Indian Railway system, including the Tarkessur Branch, and the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway.

Mr. V. G. Weatherall of Purneah sends us the following letter :—

I am much pleased with the "Lethal" bullets invented by you and can recommend them for either choke or cylinder barrels. I can vouch that they deal a smashing blow and would stop anything, which one could not rely on a shot gun doing prior to this invention. I only wish I had had them in some of the big shoots in Nepal, for I have often lost a chance as I never relied with confidence on my gun as an auxiliary. In my opinion they will bring shot guns more into use for ball than they are at present, especially with the advantage of firing out of either choke or cylinder barrels. I have used a good many of the "Rotary" bullets, which are good, but these are a vast improvement on them. I am sure any sportsman who use the "Lethal" bullets will soon have faith in them. You are at liberty to use this letter if you desire to do so.

First Day, Saturday, 30th November 1907.

THE autumn meeting opened this afternoon and an excellent card was discussed. With the exception of the race for the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup all the other events brought out large fields and some exciting finishes were witnessed. The big race of the day was won by that invincible pony, The Butler, well known on Northern India race courses, and now the property of Mr. B. N. Burjorjee. The same owner's Locette won the Autumn Plate. There was a large attendance, ten bookmakers were standing up and did brisk business throughout the afternoon. Appended are details.

THE NEW LILLIPUT PLATE.—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs. 250 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third pony. A flate race for the Burma-bred ponies 10-0½. 12-0½ to carry 9st. W. I. ¼ mile.

LONDON, Friday, 22nd November 1907,

THE TURF.

WARWICK.

SIGNS of the beginning of the end were given at Warwick, on the 18th instant, which old-fashioned meeting proceeds Manchester in the last week of the flat racing campaign. The specials from town were well filled, and, strengthened by a strong contingent from Birmingham, the attendance was a good one all round. Fields ruled large, and the going was as usual at this time of the year very holding—a fact that backers had to take into consideration. Details:—

Warwick is a centre of chilly mists in winter, and one of the coldest places in England. On Monday night the sportsman welcomed a fire in his bedroom after the damp of the day, but a brighter state of affairs obtained on Tuesday, when the sun overcame his enemies and shed a more cheery light on the scene. Better weather brought a corresponding increase in the attendance, the club members turning out in force, while the excursion trains were more fully patronised, Birmingham sending a strong contingent, and the Metropolitan brigade putting in a representative muster in Tattersall's. The historic common, which alongside the far rails was covered by a big crowd, was hourly improving, and the going was in a bit better condition than on the opening day.

NEWBURY.

Notwithstanding the fact that a dense canopy of fog overhung the purlieus of Paddington, and that a white mist was prevalent throughout the journey, the Great Western specials to Newbury yesterday practically ran up to time. It was really a splendid feat on the part of everyone associated with the management of the traffic. The atmosphere was clearer at our destination, but until after the second race had been decided the haze was still sufficient to prevent much being seen beyond a radius of three hundred yards. In the middle of the afternoon the conditions materially improved, and for an hour there was genial sunshine, but about three o'clock the mist came up again. The attendance in the principal enclosures, although smaller than usual, was satisfactory enough, while there was a capital muster in the cheap ring.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THERE was plenty of goal scoring on Saturday in the leading leagues, and in not one of the thirty games played was there a blank. This kind of thing pleases the spectators, who are never so happy as when the ball finds its way to the net, particularly if the scoring is being done by the home side. And on Saturday visiting elevens did not do so well as usual. In two instances in the Southern League home clubs went under, and in each case the result was altogether opposed to paper form. In the First Division of the Football League, Manchester United's win at Sunderland was not an unlikely event, and yet the Wearsiders had been performing so brilliantly on their own enclosure as to warrant the assumption that the Clayton team would certainly not do more than halve the points. In the other instance in which a visiting side won, there was an upset of form, Newcastle United not having been sufficiently consistent to suggest they would triumph at Bury. In the Second Division of the League, the ten visiting clubs could not do better than lose nine games and draw one, Stockport County managing to share the honours at Lincoln.

Southern League.

The sensation of the afternoon in the Southern League was furnished at Boleyn Castle, for Leyton actually beat West Ham United on their own ground by two clear goals. This is easily Leyton's best performance of the season, for it is their first win on foreign soil, the first time they have not had their defence pierced in an away game, and it is their first victory since 21st September, when they beat Bristol Rovers by the same score as that of Saturday, and it is a coincidence that their other win was also 2—0, Brentford going under at Leyton on 3rd September. West Ham were disappointing, for they were as much below form as Leyton were above, and the spoils went to the team that deserved them. This is the United's second home defeat, and the second time two goals have been scored against them this season on their own ground. The game at Park Royal between Queen's Park Rangers and Bristol Rovers bordered on the sensational, especially in the second half, when the West Londoners popped on three goals in five minutes. Their 5—3 win is their heaviest score of the season, but it is significant that in every S.L. game they have played to date their defence has been pierced. It is apparent in which department there is weakness. Crystal Palace could not do better than draw with Bradford Park Avenue, and thus followed in the wake of West Ham and Tottenham. This is the sixth successive game that the Avenue have drawn, and the division of honours is getting somewhat monotonous. The encounter at Tottenham between the 'Spurs and Brentford was only moderately interesting, for the West Londoners were overmatched except in goal, and Montgomery's agility and skill saved them from a heavy defeat. The home side had a new outside left, named Middlemiss, from Stalybridge Rovers, and in him Tottenham have evidently obtained the player for whom they have been seeking since the season began.

The only surprise in the provinces was the victory of Norwich City at Northampton. The Citizens had not previously been successful away from home, and their form did not warrant the assumption that they would make a start at the expense of the Cobblers. It is worth recording that the latter have never yet prevailed over the East Anglians. Watford, who generally manage to produce their most stubborn qualities when opposed to Southampton, did no worse and no better than was expected at the Dell in halving the points, and history thus repeated itself. Millwall had to knuckle under at Swindon to the Wilts team, who thus had ample revenge on the Dockers for spoiling their home record last season. At Luton, where Portsmouth were the visitors, two clubs floundering in the Slough of Despond made great efforts to improve their position, but the visitors were always compelled to play second fiddle, and the Strawplaiters annexed a couple of priceless points. Portsmouth, with only four points from a dozen games, are in a parlous condition. The leaders still further strengthened their hold on the topmost rung of the ladder by scoring three goals without response at Home Park against Reading, and Brighton and Hove sent their supporters into ecstacies of delight by their record win in the tournament to date, New Brompton going under by three clear goals.

League Division I.

Woolwich Arsenal are steadily working their way up the table, and their meritorious win over Nottingham Forest has enabled them to advance to ninth place, next to Newcastle United, last season's champions. The points certainly went to the side that won them on merit, for the Arsenal were a better team than their opponents, and pleasing features of the game were the excellent work of Mordue at outside left, and Ducat's capable exposition of half-back play. Ashcroft, too, was in splendid form, and every other member of the side worked hard and successfully. Chelsea held their own with Sheffield Wednesday until half-time, but subsequently they fell off somewhat, and the Blades finished up well in front. It is, however, encouraging to receive the information that "so clever a team as Chelsea must be in a fairly good position when the curtain is finally rung down." Bristol City had to fight hard for supremacy against Sheffield United, and had the forwards from the county of bread acres been more deadly in their shooting the victory would have gone the other way. As it was, the Westerners only just got home, the odd goal in five giving them the two points at stake. Manchester United did not have anything to spare at Sunderland, but they scored their ninth successive win, and are now well on their way to a half-century of goals. Birmingham's narrow win against Bolton Wanderers enabled them to head Chelsea once more, but Bury lost ground by succumbing to Newcastle United, at Gigg-lane, the winners showing more skill and determination than the losers. Liverpool did well to take away a point from Hyde-road, but Aston Villa were quite off colour in their game with Preston North End, at Deepdale, their 5—0 defeat being unexpected, after their recent victories at Sheffield and Nottingham. Notts County were too smart for Middlesbrough, who have struck a disastrous patch, for they have gone down from seventh to seventeenth place in the last month.

The Second Division.

Fulham showed no mercy to Gainsborough Trinity on Saturday. A win by six clear goals tells its own story as eloquently as a column of picturesque word-painting. The Trinitarians tried, but their crude methods were of no avail against the polished and scientific attack of the Cottagers, whose forwards played delightful football. This is Fulham's heaviest win to date, and the sparkling work that brought it about makes one sigh that there was not a glimpse of it when Hull, Grimsby, and Oldham made their bow before the habitues of the Stevenage-road ground. Clapton Orient met with the usual fate which attends their excursions from home. They gave three goals away, but not one rewarded their attempts, and this is the fourth successive match on opposing grounds in which the Orientals have failed to pierce the home defence. There is no doubt where the weakness lies, and the forwards should seek to rehabilitate their besmirched reputation. West Bromwich just got the better of a gruelling game with Stoke, at the Hawthorns, and as Oldham Athletic and Hull were likewise both successful, the strenuous struggle for the leadership continues, the two latter clubs being level on points, but the advantage is with the Lancashire club, who have played a game less and possess a better goal average. Derby County were too good for Glossop, and Chesterfield obtained a couple of points in a heavy scoring game with Leeds City, but Wolverhampton Wanderers cut a sorry figure at Oakwell Park, where Barnsley piled up a 5—0 score against them. Bradford City walked through the Blackpool defence, but at Lincoln, Stockport County held their own in a ding-dong struggle, in which more vigour than science was shown.

RUGBY RULES.

The Oxford fifteen defeated Richmond on Saturday by 5 goals (1 penalty) to nil, but did not create too favourable an impression. Some allowance, however, must be made for the fact that shortly after the interval Williamson, one of the halves, rather badly sprained his left ankle, and this mishap necessitated a rearrangement of the back division. Vassall went from centre to half, Davies was brought up into the three-quarter line, and Roberts was withdrawn from the pack to go full back. In that position Roberts was quite a success, giving ample evidence of his versatility. The Oxford scrummagers, however, felt his absence, as afterwards they had the worst of the struggle, being penned for quite a long time in their own half. The Richmond backs, however, displayed little real skill in attack, their efforts to score being somewhat readily checked by prompt tackling. It would be well to judge the Oxford men on the form they displayed prior to the accident to Williamson, and it can hardly be said to be quite satisfactory. The forwards, who were fairly worried by the Richmond pack, scarcely found their real game. They did not do so against the United Services until after half-time, and on Saturday, with their number reduced to seven, they were somewhat rushed. This slowness in settling down to a sound intelligent game is undoubtedly their great defect. They are a strong, powerful set of men, but they have not that cohesion which was the main characteristic of last season's Oxford pack. They have not progressed as much as had been hoped, but there is time for them to get well together before the great game at the Queen's Club. The play of their backs was variable. Some of their work was admirable, the tries gained by Vassall, Steinthal, and Williamson in the first half all being the outcome of good football, but several chances were allowed to go astray mainly through the men being out of position. Cunningham, the outside half, stood too far back, being practically another centre three-quarter, and Martin, on the right wing, was frequently guilty of the unpardonable offence of standing in front of his centre. Vassall was tolerably sound in the centre, but Steinthal was unequal. The latter's try, however, was quite a brilliant effort. Davies, at full-back, was below his best, his kicking lacking its usual length. In the second half Roberts, who converted all the tries, dropped a fine penalty goal, and just on time Vassall gained the fourth try. The Richmond forwards played very well, but were somewhat let down by their backs, who forgot the sound maxim of going for the man with the ball.

Blackheath broke their spell of ill-luck on Saturday, defeating Northampton by a goal and 5 tries to nothing. Mainprice, who is on the injured list, was unable to play for them, but Basil Hill, the old captain, turned out. His presence had an inspiriting effect, the Blackheath forwards playing much better than in some recent games. Flemmer, the Dark Blue, and G. V. Porter, who is also at Oxford, made a satisfactory pair of halves, and the three-quarters helped their forwards a good deal by judicious kicking. Two of the tries were gained by Cave, one of the forwards, but the others fell to the back division. Two were obtained by Porters, and one each by J. C. Chambers, Cooper, and Verge. The last-named, who was playing full-back, followed up his own kick to score, and earlier in the game a long run by him led up to one of the tries by Cave. Northampton were generally out-played, but they had the misfortune to lose Palmer, their best half-back, in the first five minutes. A forward was taken out of the pack, and Mobbs went from wing three-quarter to half. The wisdom of this proceeding may be doubted, as Mobbs, with his fine pace, is essentially a player to finish an attacking movement, and at half-back he certainly was wasted. As a consequence the Northampton backs were somewhat disorganised, and their seven scrummagers were unable to properly hold the Blackheath eight. The breakdown of Palmer, who sprained his ankle, is unfortunate, as he had been picked to play for the Midlands and East Midlands against the Universities. So far this season the half-backs have come off badly, Stoop, Mainprice, Williamson, Palmer, and Webber, the Old Whitgiftian, all being more or less damaged.

After a keen struggle Guy's Hospital defeated the London Welsh by 1 goal and 2 tries to 1 goal, this being the first reverse sustained by the latter this season. The Welsh were without two of their back division—Maddocks, who has returned to Wales, and Merrick, who is on the injured list—but on the other hand, Guy's lacked the services of two of their regular three-quarters—McEvedy and Stringer. For the first twenty minutes the Welsh were a man short, and during that period Archer gained a try for Guy's, that being all the scoring in the first half. Afterwards Pinching placed the hospital further ahead, but with Harding converting a try by Pearce, the Welshmen drew within a point of their opponents. Guy's had the best of the closing stages, and J. P. Jones kicked a goal from a try by Williams. The hospital forwards played a strong, resolute game, and were well supported by their backs, Jones, the captain, being much in evidence with his fearless saving and clever kicking. The victory of Guy's was thoroughly well deserved, being the outcome of better football at most points. Though beaten by 3 goals and 1 try to 1 goal and 1 try the Old Merchant Taylors gave the London Scottish a capital game. The Scotch forwards, who the week before had walked through the Richmond pack, were fairly held by the Taylors' scrummages, but the Scottish were much stronger outside. In the second half they attacked repeatedly, and against a less strenuous defence would have run up a fairly heavy score. The tackling of the Taylors' backs, however, was very keen, being almost the best feature of the game.

After two disastrous Saturdays the Harlequins resumed their winning vein, beat Rosslyn Park by 2 goals and 2 tries to 1 try. The Park held an advantage forward, but were unable properly to cope with the Harlequins' backs, of whom Lambert was in particularly good form. In their game with the United Services the London Hospital led until well into the second half by 5 points to 3, but superior back-play eventually told, the Services winning by 1 dropped goal and 3 tries to 1 goal. The Marlborough Nomads inflicted a severe defeat on the Old Leysians, and St. Bartholomew's fifteen won very handsomely at Bedford. Journeying to Coventry, the London Irish found the home side much too strong for them, and Lemon were overwhelmed at Cambridge, the Light Blues, though below their full strength, running up the heavy score of 4 goals and 5 tries to nothing. Leicester made a fine fight at Devonport, the Albion only winning by 1 goal to nothing, and by a similar score Swansea managed to pull through at Neath. The Cardiff team for the second time this season beat Newport winning by 2 tries to 1 try. In losing to Cumberland the Cheshire fifteen sustained their third defeat, while Yorkshire followed up their victory over Northumberland by beating Lancashire. Durham, having defeated Yorkshire, would again appear to be fairly certain of first place in the northern division.

Eastern Counties vs. Midlands.—Although little interest, from the competitive point of view, attached to the match played yesterday on the London Welsh ground at West Ham, it produced a keenly contested game, the Midlanders proving successful by one point. Unfortunately, a dense fog hung over the ground, and made it decidedly difficult, particularly in the second half, to follow the game or to distinguish the players. This compels a general survey of the match, which is best described as an even contest, in which neither side could claim much advantage. The Midlands were, however, rather the better side at three-quarter in point of combination, their first try being the result of much the best bout of passing in the match. If this try had been the sole score, it would have not unfairly reflected the merits of the two sides in what was chiefly a forward game. For the first fifteen minutes the Eastern Counties played with only fourteen men, yet it was during this period that they were seen to most advantage, and looked likely to win. The forwards used their feet with effect, and their try, secured by Jones and converted by Sanders, was due to a fast bit of footwork.

From this point onwards it was a ding-dong struggle, characterised by more energy than science, the movement that led to the first of the two Midland tries excepted. This was an excellent bit of work, in which all the backs participated, Odell crowning the advance with a try near the posts, which Cooper failed to convert.

In the second half the Eastern Counties lost several chances—particularly from interceptions of the slow Midland passes—through hesitation, and the only score was a rather scrambling try, gained by Cooper in the right corner. This he failed to convert. Result:—Midlands, 2 tries (6 points); Eastern Counties, 1 goal (5 points).

Eastern Counties.—G. Sanders (Old Merchant Taylors); R. Daniell (Old Blues), K. Dalton (London Scottish), R. D. Jones (Ilford Wanderers), and C. O'Keefe (Leytonstone); A. B. Lindsay (London Hospital) and R. D. Norton (Old Merchant Taylors); J. Mehaffey, W. D. Kennedy, J. S. Gabe, and E. Galpin (London Hospital), Dr. R. Welply and H. E. Stubbings (Leytonstone), C. Essex, and R. D. Farman (Ilford Wanderers).

Midland Counties.—G. H. Rose (Stratford-on-Avon); J. G. Cooper (Moseley), E. W. Assinder (Old Edwardians), S. H. Evershed (Burton-on-Trent), and F. Odell (Camp Hill Old Edwardians); H. R. Somerville (Old Edwardians) and M. H. Barrowcliffe (Stratford-on-Avon); H. Hall (Coventry), A.C.F. Assinder (Old Edwardians), H. G. Howitt (Nottingham), S. Penny and A. J. Hobbs (Leicester), E. W. Horton and P. Thompson (Stratford-on-Avon), and J. V. Fiddian (Moseley).

ROWING.

Cambridge Colquhoun Sculls.

A capital performance was accomplished on the 15th instant, at Cambridge, when the semi-final heats of the Colquhoun Sculls were decided. The record for the course is 7mins. 40secs., set up in 1905 by R. V. Powell. On Friday the latter's brother, E. W. Powell, completed the distance in 2secs. outside that time. Needless to say the 'Varsity president won his race with Eric Fairbairn, the Jesus man, fairly easily, his advantage at the finish being two and a half lengths. The second heat, between G. A. Carver (First Trinity) and R. S. Hooker (Emmanuel), was splendidly contested until Grassy Corner was reached, when Carver took a slight lead, and the latter subsequently went ahead and ultimately won by the substantial margin of 50 yards, in 7mins. 57secs.

Many happy traditions are associated with the silver challenge sculls presented to Lady Margaret College in 1835 by Mr. G. Colquhoun, and the final heat decided at Cambridge on Saturday between the 'Varsity president, F. W. Powell (Eton and Third Trinity) aroused considerable interest. Notwithstanding a strong head wind, a capital race was witnessed. The Etonian showed splendid pace at the start, and gained rapidly. Carver made a plucky effort in Long Reach, but although he decreased his opponent's advantage, he could never get nearer than 25 yards, and Powell won easily in the good time of 7mins. 53secs.

At the word "Go," Powell dashed away like an arrow from a bow, and so wonderfully did he scull that he must have gained 25 yards in the first hundred. At the end of the first half the Blue settled down and arrived at the Ditch in 1min. 33secs. with a lead of about 30 yards. There was a chance of his beating his brother's time, but the wind was troublesome, and when he arrived at the Ditch he had taken 4mins. 45secs., and it was then known that the record was out of the question. Carver had been taking things fairly comfortably, although pulling hard, and being nearer 50 than 40 yards to the bad, but no sooner did he get straight in the Long Reach than he quickened up his stroke and sculled for all he was worth. He gained perhaps half a dozen yards before Powell got round the corner, and then came the struggle. Both men, cheered on by their supporters, made every effort, but it was soon evident that the Blue was no match for the old Carthusian in the straight, and the only question was whether or not his advantage was big enough. As it turned on it was, as despite the fact

OXFORD UNIVERSITY TRIALS.

The eights experienced pleasant weather yesterday, there being considerably less fog than on the previous afternoon, and the towing path was largely patronised. The president and secretary shared the coaching, and R. C. Bucknall, the old University stroke, was an interested spectator. There was a good amount of tubbing, after which the crews paddled to Iffley, and thence rowed a course through to Randall's Bridge. Both went off at high pressure, rowing 36 to begin with, but they slowed down considerably later and maintained an average of 32 in No. 1 and a slightly reduced rate in No. 2, the latter crew displaying considerable improvement. They pulled up at Randall's Bridge, and subsequently had another trip over the short course, but only paddling was done. The names and weights remain unaltered, as follows:—

No. 1 Crew.—P. M. Newman (Trinity) (bow), 10st. 7½lb.; C. R. Claimore (Magdalen), 12st. 11lb.; C. S. James (Christ Church), 12st. 2½lb.; G. O. Willink (Corpus), 12st. 5lb.; A. McCulloch (University), 12st. —lb.; A. E. Kitchen (St. John's), 13st.; P. R. Filloul (Wadham), 11st. 11lb.; A. C. Heberden (Trinity) (stroke), 11st. 11lb.; A. St. J. Robertson (New College) (cox), 8st. 7lb.

Hope (Christ Church), 12st. 10lb.; E. Majolier (Christ Church), 13st. 1½lb.; J. H. Knox (Brasenose), 12st.; J. R. Somers Smith (Magdalen) (stroke), 12st.; A. Weymss (University) (cox), 7st. 2lb.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY TRIALS.

The eights remained unchanged yesterday, when, as usual, the president (Mr. E. W. Powell) and hon. sec. (Mr. D. C. R. Stuart) were in charge. There was no tubbing. Mr. Stuart's crew (Jerwood's) were first afloat, and on the return journey rowed from bridge to bridge at about 32. The president started his crew over a similar course, but they were held up at the Grassy Corner by some barges. Names and weights:—

No. 1 Crew.—T. D. Richardson (Trinity Hall) (bow), 9st. 12lb.; J. N. Peck (Caius), 12st.; L. T. S. Barrett (Christ's), 12st. 13lb.; O. A. Carver (First Trinity), 12st. 7lb.; G. C. Hamilton (King's), 13st. 8lb.; G. L. Thomson (Trinity Hall), 12st. 5lb.; E. S. Horridge (Trinity Hall), 12st. 12lb.; G. B. Lloyd (First Trinity) (stroke), 11st. 3lb.; C. Dickens (Trinity Hall) (cox), 8st. 8½lb.

No. 2 Crew.—Eric Fairbairn (Jesus) (bow), 11st. 2lb.; Hon. J. U. Parker (Third Trinity), 12st. 3lb.; N. E. Hawdon (Jesus), 12st. 4lb.; J. Walmsley (First Trinity), 12st.; C. J. W. Henslow (Lady Margaret), 12st. 6lb.; H. E. Kitching (Trinity Hall), 13st.; J. C. Warrington (First Trinity), 11st. 7lb.; F. H. Jerwood (Jesus) (stroke), 11st. 10lb.; E. Newman (Trinity Hall) (cox), 8st. 8lb.

Hunting.

THE KARACHI HUNT.

THE Season opened on the 24th November, when the hounds met at the Bunnia's Crossing at 7 A.M. Large field turned out including our sporting Commissioner and Mrs. Younghusband, Mrs. Graham, Colonel and Mrs. Travers, Miss Dawn, General Westmeerland, Colonel Sitwell, Major Cobham, Captain Hewett, R. I. M., Messrs. Anderson, Robson and Crerar, Captain Greenway, Messrs. Pritchard, Elgie and Morgan (of the 24th S.W.B.), Captain Richardson, Messrs. Allardice, Skewse Cox, James, Newcommen, Fortune (of the East Lancashire Regiment), Captain Barry, Messrs. Stewart, Robertson, Kred, Mahon, Jupe, Haywood, and several others. The Master commenced by drawing the orchards and cultivation along the farther bank of the Lyari. Near the Guavas, the hounds picked up the "stroke" of a jack and made the most of a poor scent, running slowly towards Rai Singh's Well. The Master "lifted" them and cast forward again, fortunately hitting off another jack who gave us a short spin towards the ruined Cottage, but here scent became very "catchy" and though the hounds worked out the line well towards Graham Spinney, they could never get on terms with their jack. With scent going from bad to worse they were finally whipped off homeward, shortly after nine.

December 1st.—The hounds met at Rai Singh's Well at 7 A.M. Notwithstanding the festivities of the St. Andrew's Dinner the night before a large field turned out including the Commissioner, Captain Hewett, R. I. M., Captain Seabrooke (East Lancashire Regiment), Messrs. Anderson, Robson, Crerar, Nicoll, Kennedy, Breslaner, Sawer, Mahon, Palmer (York and Lancashire Regiment), Pritchard (24th S.W.B.), and several others. Five ladies, Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Travers, Mrs. Seabrooke, Miss Skelton and Miss Dawn, graced the field with their presence. A crisp cold morning with dew on the ground promised well for sport, and we were not disappointed. Finding in the babul clump, south of the road the hounds streamed away, full of music, across the ploughed fields just beyond, and away on over Moosa's bunds to the Long Bund at the end of which running from scent to view - they rolled their jack over, in the open after a nice burst of seventeen minutes. After presenting the brush to Miss Dawn the Master drew the rough scrub towards the Ruined Cottage, but without finding. Better luck was, however, in store for us at Graham's Spinney. Here the hounds soon proclaimed a find and a splendid dark coloured jack broke away from the covert, towards the nullah. The hounds were not far behind him and rattled him along at a great pace. The jack kept the nullah bed until he got his line for the hills, then he burst away across the open. The hounds were closing on him as he neared some rough grass and it looked as if his race were run. But he was not done with yet. Squatting in the grass for a few seconds he got his wind and then away again with his mask set for the hills. Shaking off the leading hound who tackled him, he was just able to get to ground in a big cactus bush as the rest of the pack came up and there we left him, in hopes we may meet him again some other day. It was a capital run. Thirty-one minutes from start and finish and horses and hounds had had enough so the Master did not draw again.

SPANIEL.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

[illegible] of the season, the Bombay Hounds have provided splendid runs and proved themselves a real fine pack, at times moving so fast that the field has found it difficult to live with them.

The weather is cool now and the early mornings quite nippy, so that there have been kills consequent on the good scent, but the going is a bit hard and we may be considered fortunate in that, considering some of the stony ground that has to be covered nothing has gone amiss with man, horse or hound.

Meets are, perforce, never fixed for far from Santa Cruz, it being deemed advisable to get going as soon as possible before the sun shews too much of its strength. On the bye day they met at Sahar Hill, one of the finest spots to be found with its beauty intensified by the sight of the field under the trees, the red packets of the huntsmen kicked out, and the pack. There must have been over sixty present and they were not kept waiting long as hounds gave tongue almost as soon as they had been put into the mangoe topes. At a great pace they crossed Romanwadi Valley and entered a dangerous bit of melon ground teeming with dangerous holes none, of which fortunately caused any serious accident. The risk was worth it, the beautiful strength of ricefields giving way to firm, grassy fields over which the hunt raced at a gallop. Cactus provided the jumps and after a fine burst the jack headed for the Backwater, but suddenly branched to the left and took refuge in a well. Down went the hounds after him to polish off the run in a satisfactory manner, leaving the huntsman to doff coat and pull them out.

Hounds were taken back to Sahar and once more were out of the covert after a stout jack within a few seconds of going in. Through the woods, over the water main, which makes a good jump, and across the Andheri Road they went. In dense jungle on top of a hill there was a check and then he made for Marole and up a steep hill. Being steep and stony it was a bad policy to follow on horse-back and with the jack twisting and turning in every direction the Master decided to call the hounds off.

Thursday morning was exceptionally cold and the Meet being near the kennels very little time was lost as on this mid-week day work necessitates a stop earlier than on bye days. The Parel woods proved fruitful and after taking a high bank the field was soon going over the dry lake and a fine rice field at a great pace. Then however, came a long and treacherous bit of melon ground over which they were spilt but none bad. This passed it seemed the jack was setting his mask for the Cahima tank which being in flood is unridable, but he cut it and went round. Hounds were going grandly and after crossing the paddy fields near the Karaks pulled their jack down in an open space opposite one of the bungalows.

It had been a fast but not long run and the Master took them back to the Sahar coverts where they soon put another up. The pace set was again a cracker over rice fields, the other side of the water main. This crossed they came to a deep nullah full of sharp stones and over a wall into good, firm fields to the Backwater. Crossing this they traversed the Kurla-Vehar Road and over good jumping country at a marvellous pace nearing the Hog's Back Hill and just as he seemed likely to enter Horse Shoe Valley, the jack was pulled down in the act of taking a high wall. There were thus two hills that morning and enough fast galloping to satisfy the keenest of sportsmen.

OLDCLIFF.

Racing.

RACING IN FRANCE.

It is the distinction of racing in France, whether it be a major or a minor course at Longchamps for a "classic" like the Grand Prix or at Enghien for the mere routine of the sport—that it always seems like a pastime. The crowd at an American race track, like Sheepshead Bay or Belmont Park, seems bent on its bets and little else. The horses often are no more than so many incidental machines. Even at Saratoga the air of festivity out of doors is very thin and unpersuasive. At an English race track, unless it be some exceptional course and occasion like the fashionable meeting at Ascot, there is no pervading air. Some have come for the sport, and they, as a rule, take their racing very seriously indeed. Some have come to make and win bets, and they are almost as businesslike as their brethren at the American meetings. Others have come for diversion, but in that case they usually conceal their amusement successfully.

Perhaps the pervading air is negative. Nobody seems to be having a "good time." Conversely the atmosphere of a Parisian race track is altogether positive. Everybody seems to find enjoyment. The French bet, but by far the largest part of those who go actually to the races make their wagers as an incident in the diversion of the day, and with characteristic thrift, in sums so small that to win or lose is a trivial matter. There must be "regulars," as the American phrase goes, who make their living by their bets, but there is no such crowd of sordid and hard-featured men about the betting machines as those that push and clamor around the bookmakers' stands at any of the race tracks near New York.

The French watch the races because they are amusing to watch. The familiar murmur—the voice of the race course the world over—rustles through the crowd at the start. Very hearty cheers hail the winner if the race is of any note or—still more—if the race has been hard fought. But I have yet to see a French crowd at a close finish sway back and forth, shouting, "Come on, This" and "Come on, That," in the hysterical fashion of American tracks. The race for the Grand Prix happened to end this year in a well contested duel that ended only at the finishing line between two horses. The crowd watched alertly, cheered warmly, talked eagerly for a few moments, and then turned to whatever else might give it interest or amusement. At Longchamps, as at every other of the tracks in the vicinity of Paris, as on every bright day, the spectators had come for pastime—for an afternoon out of doors, an afternoon of entertainment of which six races happened to make a part. If it were amused, it went home content.

The course itself almost always bears witness to this mood in those that come to it. So long as an American course has a track upon which the horses may run, a ring in which the bettors make their wagers, and a painted scaffolding on which they may watch the gain or the loss of their bets, it suffices. Recall, for example, the sordid shabbiness of the course at Gravesend or the meanness of the minor tracks about New York. At Sheepshead, the Coney Island Jockey Club does not seek neatness and comeliness. The newer Belmont Park has even sought to please the eye and to retain an occasional grace of nature. Many an English race track, except when it is in use, is a stretch of turf with fencing here and there and a few gaunt stands overlooking it.

A French race track of any sort must be pleasant to see and at the two better courses near Paris—Longchamps and Auteuil—it must even have a gracious and alluring comeliness. The Bois de Boulogne is the chief park of Paris, and by common consent one of the loveliest parks in the world. Yet two considerable and conspicuous portions of it have been set apart for those race tracks and portions that have their full share of the beauty of the place. From the course at Longchamps and from the course at Auteuil, the panorama on every side is delightful to see. The towering hill and chateau of St. Germain overlook them on one side. On another are the wooded ridges, dotted with white villas among the trees, that rose above the Seine. In all directions stretch lawns and woods in twenty different greens. Here and there the trees make a long vista or between them is a glimpse of water.

The stables at an American race track are often shanties of galvanized iron that defy what little there may be of landscape. The stables at a French race track make twin rows of low brick buildings, kept with precise neatness and often half-hidden among the trees. At Longchamps or Auteuil in June the paddock is like a garden with its bushes of clematis and peonies, its syringas and even its roses. The stands have a comely lightness and airiness of line. The lawns before and behind them are the smoothest and softest of green. Flowering shrubs dot them. Even a little fountain has its pare. Longchamps has its old windmill and its sloping "head" to complete the picture.

At Auteuil are hedges for the jumps and for pure ornament are hedges that win the eye with their ordered greenery. The ranks of little brown huts that contain the "Paris mutuels"—the legalized betting machines—are unobtrusively hidden. The huge red umbrellas under which "Le Pere Jules" or some other Pere serves his humble customers of the "field" with drinks and sandwiches only add an unoffending dash of color.

Longchamps and Auteuil, even when they are empty, have their unfailing air of elegance, of places of pleasure and refinement, of regard for the delight of the eye. The mile tracks, with less natural advantages, lose not an opportunity that situation, care or ingenuity may give them. The Parisian race-goer expects to be pleased when he looks about him, and he takes time to look.

Because the Parisian seeks the races for pastime, a much better quality of him, so to say, goes to them on any interesting day than goes to the tracks in England and America. Take the crowd at Sheepshead Bay, which is certainly the first of American race tracks, and who compose it? A relatively small contingent of socially significant folk interested in races; an equally small contingent of those who care for racing as a sport; a far larger company from the pavements and the restaurants of upper Broadway; and the thousands of "regulars," who live in whole or in part, as so many gamblers, off the races. Add thereto the followers of racing as an industry, and the catalogue is complete except for the comparatively few who have come to the races for an afternoon of amusement.

At Longchamps or Auteuil nearly all these proportions are reversed. On "great days," even on ordinary days, the socially elect fill the reserved stands—not merely that part of society that is, or that affects to be, keen on sport, but the whole social organization of the capital from the diplomatic service, through the old aristocracy, down through the established rich to the climbing rich. There are eager owners and lovers of horses in numbers; and there are indeed women of fixed or rising note in the half-world; but nowhere may the curious observer find a swarm of denizens of the still lower world that corresponds to our region of upper Broadway. They are legion in Paris, as any night cafe will witness, but they do not go to the races.

Nowhere either may be found those that correspond to our horde of "regulars" that follow the tracks day by day. There are thousands of them (as a whole range of French acquaintances will assure you) but many of them stay in Paris and place their small bets there. They have no wish to see the races; they desire only to win money off them; they can do that quite as easily and surely, if they stay in the city and await the newsboys with their abbreviated cry of "Resultats des Courses."

To replace them are hundreds, and thousands, and on "great days," even tens of thousands of ordinary and highly respectable Parisian folk, who have come for enjoyment and nothing else. They bring their wives with them, and their sons and their daughters. They are the same people that every day go about the streets of Paris as work or pleasure bids them, who are neither rich nor poor, who live quiet, decent, happy lives, who are the bourgeoise that makes the strength and the intelligence of France. Madam goes to the races with her husband as she might go with him to the theatre, eager for the spectacle. The son of the house may come, too, and even, if she be of the age meet for public assemblies, the daughter.

Scrutinize the ordinary stands at Longchamps or Auteuil, and they are full of such people. Cross the track into the field, to which the admission is only a franc, and there again are hundreds and thousands of poorer, but eminently respectable folk who have come, most of all, for a day of pleasure out of doors. They bring luncheons and they eat them in the field. They stretch themselves on the grass. They chatter; they idle; they play at leapfrog and other games. Hundreds of them are not even curious enough about the races to watch the horses, much less to scan the distant notice boards to discover the winner.

The thought of betting never enter their heads. The soft sky, the warm sun, the grass and the trees, a crowd to watch, the rustle of distant excitement, their own small adventures and misadventures delight them. Back they stream through the Bois, late in the afternoon, idling along the way. They have been to the races they say cheerfully; they are content and more. But how the American "regular" or the English sportsman, high or low, would despise them!

The official procedure at a French race track is copied, like that of most sports in France, from English methods, but the irresistible French instinct for rule and system has made it more rigid. Between the races at a French track you may cross the course, by certain gates, receiving a little ticket that will readmit you exactly as though you were at a theatre. Contrary, however, to the custom at many English tracks, the crowd, between whiles, may not stream up and down the turf. To the field enclosed by the course the admission is only a franc, less than half, and sometimes than a quarter, of the price charged in America. The racegoer leaves his franc at the outer gates and thereafter the whole enclosure except the ordinary covered stands (the "tribunes") and the reserved stands (the "pesage") are free to him.

To the tribunes, whither the average visitor goes, the admission is only a dollar in comparison with the American $2.50; but for the "pesage" the price rises to $4.00, and, as usual, there are certain privileged positions that only the members of the particular racing club and their guests enjoy. For the "pesage" and the "tribunes" the visitor receives badges much like those of the American courses, and the barriers of the different enclosures are strictly watched.

The irresistible French instinct for order again has arranged the paddock. In America the paddock is no more than an enclosed rectangle of grass, with a saddling shed, where the horses are led to and fro before their races or "cooled out" after them. Jockeys idle about, trainers, owners, whoever has bought a badge of admission goes where he chooses. Not so the French paddock. It is like a miniature track. In a dirt circle at Longchamps, for example, the horses walk around and around. On the edges of the circle are the bystanders. No one sets foot on the dirt, much less crosses it. The jockeys move about with self-possessed dignity. There is even a capital story of two boys newly brought from England to Longchamps. They happened to have no mounts in the third and the fourth race of the day. Down in the grass of the paddock they innocently set themselves and wantonly played at "stick-knife." The bystanders watched with perturbation, until an official of the course entered, caught sight of the offending lads and promptly set them on their dignity again.

Again, as in England, the races are run on a turf course, and from left to right. The track at Longchamps has a hill much like that over which the Derby is run at Epsom. At Auteuil the only races are steeplechases, which are much more fostered by breeders and owners and liked by the public in France, than in America, and therefore the jumps and the obstacles are substantial and permanent. Neither Longchamps nor Auteuil has adopted any form of barrier, and the starts are made in the old fashion, with much "lining up" and equality of position and "send off" as the starter and his assistants can secure. Many a Parisian, who knows something of racing in other countries, will say that the starts are often careless

DO YOU KNOW THIS MAN?

He is said by those who have consulted him to be greatly gifted. He has recently opened offices in London. To introduce his famous system into India he will send you a written chart of your life as a test of his ability.

Hundreds who have already written say he might have known them all their lives, so surprisingly correct was he.

He was consulted by Miss Alice Roosevelt and her brother Theodore (daughter and son of the President of the United States), in America, last August.

Mrs. Kendal, the great actress, has written to him saying, "You have astonished me with your accuracy. It is marvellous." Numerous other distinguished people have said the same.

Take an impression of your right thumb by rubbing a little ink over it and pressing on a piece of white paper. Send this with birth date and P. O. O.

105, MOUNT STREET, LONDON, 19th July 1907

SIR,—In answer to your letter of the 5th instant, I beg to inform you that I found the Detachable Polo Pads eminently satisfactory in every way. I intend using similar pads on my hunters the coming season, and I hope at the end of the hunting season the legs and feet of my hunters will be in the same excellent, sound condition as those of my polo ponies, upon which I experimented this past season.

Mr. B. P. GRAY. I am, faithfully yours, CRAIG WADSWORTH.

THE ONLY PAD FOR HUNTING, POLO, AND RACING MEN.

Shoe next foot—consequently no suction.
This Pad is narrow, takes all jar, and prevents slipping when galloping on either greasy or baked ground.

GRAY'S PATENT FIXED PADS.

Back of Shoe.

A few advantages of Gray's Wide Fixed Strip Pads.

(1) The use of a pad fixed in the correct and only natural position which receives all jar and concussion without covering the whole foot, thus saving the horse from wear, and at the same time retaining cool, healthy, and properly ventilated feet which can always be thoroughly washed out in the ordinary way.
(2) Feet expanded by means of natural frog pressure.
(3) No rubber or leather between shoes and walls of feet; consequently no suction or loose shoes.
(4) Prevent slipping on every kind of pavement—winter and summer.
(5) Easily fitted by any farrier to any shoe.
(6) The cheapest, best, and most sanitary fixed pads on the market. Specially adapted for London as all cities and towns where asphalt, wood, and other artificial and slippery pavements are in vogue.
(7) Equally suitable for riding or harness horses.

and unfair, and Sunday at the Grand Prix, when the starter came within an ace of leaving the favorite at the post, and did practically leave two of the most promising horses, he was most generously hissed. On the other hand the crowd having come for entertaining spectacle rather than for rigid sport, is as impatient of long delays at the post.

One detail quickly impresses the spectator from American race courses. The horses run without a number on the saddle-pad. Only the colors of the jockey's cap and blouse or familiarity with the horse identifies him. The notice-boards, with their lists of horses and jockeys, and with the result of each race, are much like those at an English or an American course, but an American crowd "would die of heart disease," as the slang of the racing reporters put it, if results were hoisted at their tracks so long after the finish as they are hoisted at Longchamps or Auteuil. Hoisted also above the lists of the "Paris Mutuels" is the sum won for a bet on the winning horse or on those that are "placed." For all the public betting at a French race course is done by machinery, and the Government controls and orders the machinery.

The figures that go up are the amount won on the basis of a bet of ten francs (8d). The bettor may have wagered more or wagered less, but the proportion remains the same. Officials, charged with the task, regulate every detail—odds and all—of the Paris Mutuels; a very minor official sells the bettor his ticket; and after the racing of the day, he may "cash" his winnings. Like most systems in France, that of the "Paris Mutuels" is to the foreigner amazingly intricate. In vain do his French acquaintances explain it. In vain does he bend his full mind to the understanding of it.

Suffice it that the system "works," certainly to the satisfaction of the State Treasury, apparently to the content of the race-goers. (You may bet surreptitiously, if you will, with thinly-disguised book-makers on the scale of a Gates, or you may wager half a franc in the petty hand-books that tempt the workmen of factories; but the average Frenchman is a very modest better.) Some of the revenue of the "Paris Mutuels" goes for breeding and charitable purposes, and for the cost of operation. At least 90 per cent. of it passes into the treasury for general purposes, and it is a fairly considerable item in the annual revenue.

For many a Parisian race-goer, however, the races themselves are the least interesting part of the day's entertainment. He and she watch them, of course. If they have commanding places on the stands, there, as a rule, they stay. Better to see and be seen than to lose such places for the mere sake of a wager. If they have no such favorable position, down to the rail they go, and oftenest hire a chair or a campstool on which to stand. Behind the serried ranks of those so provided, the careless or unprepared spectator may tiptoe as best he may, or flee, at Longchamps, to the field or to the hill. There is a becoming, but no very keen or excited, interest in the races themselves—not nearly so alert and intense, in spite of the Gaelic temperament, as that which usually prevails, even on an "off day," at an English or an American track.

The race run, the winner cheered, and Monsieur and Madame turn to other pastimes. Would they bet? As a rule, they know not one horse from another, and "records" and "past performances" are as sealed books to them. All but there are the papers. Nearly every one prints its list of probable winners. Some of these, that appear toward mid-day, summarise all the lists of the morning. There are two or three sheets that are devoted wholly to the turf. If Monsieur is provident, he has brought one with him. At least he has his morning paper. In faith and innocence he takes the choice of the racing reporter and bets his ten francs. He has had the benefit of expert advice, and whether he wins or loses, the process and the uncertainty have amused him.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. ST. XAVIER'S.—This match in the Eden Gardens resulted in an easy victory by 84 runs on the first innings for the Calcutta C. C. who had out perhaps the best side they have put into the field this year: indeed had the visitors played only eleven men they would probably have been beaten in an innings. Curtis Hayward made his first appearance and considering his want of practice bowled well, while Beachcroft and Manders met with success with bat and ball. St. Xavier's won the toss and did well to score 153 after losing eight wickets for 80. Ferguson played a first-class innings, hitting well all round the wicket, Vaughan batted very carefully, and Chandler and Cameron made a few good hits. When the Calcutta C. C. went in nearly everyone scored runs off some indifferent bowling, but much of the play was very tame, and only Beachcroft and Manders deserve any special mention. At their second attempt St. Xavier's with the exception of Ferguson shaped very badly against Manders, who took five wickets for only 16 runs, and at the call of time they had nine men out for 91. BALLYGUNGE vs. COOCH BEHAR'S XI.—The latter team made their first appearance in Calcutta on Saturday and Sunday last, when they met and defeated Ballygunge by an innings and 50 runs, a not altogether unlooked for result, when the strength of the visiting team is taken into consideration. In addition to Cox and Vine, the well-known Sussex professionals, and Daniell, the Somerset county cricketer, it included the Maharajah's two sons, both excellent bats, Razak, of Aligarh and Nattore's XI., A. G. Moore and B. Mukerjee, the Hornets' and Aryans' cracks, respectively, and K. B. Mistry, the famous Parsee fast bowler, quite the hottest combination (excepting perhaps the Oxford Authentics), ever sent on a Calcutta ground. Ballygunge had out quite a fair team, but were unfortunate in being without the services of B. A. White and H. M. Sherman, the former being a serious loss to the side.

Ballygunge won the toss and sent in Hill and Eddis to face Cox and Mistry, but the start was disastrous, Hill being bowled by the latter with only 2 on the board. Guise and Eddis improved matters considerably, and added 39 for the second wicket, but at 4, the former, who had been going most refreshingly for everything, failed to get hold of a breaking away ball from Cox, and was caught at third man. Eddis did not long survive him, Vine bowling him round his legs for an excellent 35, but with his departure at 80, a rot set in, and the whole team were out for 99, a distinctly disappointing total.

Cooch Behar's team had a few minutes batting on Saturday evening, when they scored 9 without loss, Daniell being responsible for 6 of these. On resuming the next morning, he was bowled by Gould without adding to his overnight score but this set back was only temporary, as all the rest of the team made runs, Vine's 55 being the top score. With the total at 241 for 7, Daniell declared the innings closed, and Ballygunge went in for a second knock, but this proved almost as disastrous as the first, Eddis, with 32, again being the only one to make any sort of a show at all, if we except Gould and Thomas, who hit gaily, and put on 44 for the last wicket.

The fielding on both sides was good, and only one catch that came to hand was dropped; one or two went dangerously near men in the long field, but they could hardly be described as chances. The Cooch Behar bowling was far and away the best seen in Calcutta, Cox in particular seeming to trouble the batsmen; he breaks a lot both ways and varies both pitch and pace in a most bewildering fashion. Vine has a huge leg break, though he seldom found his length, and Mistry is certainly the fastest bowler who has ever played at Ballygunge. The bowling of the home team was steady, and at no stage of the proceedings was hit, but it lacked sting. Full score and analysis:—

RANGOON GOLF CLUB.

THE Annual General Meeting of the Club was held on Tuesday, 26th November, with a good attendance of members. The minutes of last General Meeting were read and confirmed, and the accounts for the year ended 31st October, duly passed, showing the Club to be in a sound position financially. The office-bearers for the season 1907-08 were elected as follows:—

CAPTAIN—Mr. G. Ballance.

HONORARY SECRETARY—J. B. Orr.

HONORARY TREASURER—J. M. Sime.

COMMITTEE—Messrs. J. W. Anderson, S. Gordon Brown, G. C. Whigham, and W. H. L. Cabell.

The Annual "Opening Day" and "At Home" took place on Saturday, 30th November, and proceedings commenced with a Tiffin at 1.30 P.M., at which, however, only about 20 members were able to be present owing to the early start. Competitions commenced at 2-15 P.M., and continued till dark, and the following were the results:—

Long Hole.—Competitors teed up on the 7th Tee (about 800 yards distant) and played to the home green, a maximum of five strokes being allowed. Three players reached the green. 1st prize, Mr. E. Higginbotham; 2nd prize, Mr. J. M. Sime, Mr. Cabell being only an inch behind.

Long Drive.—Best of three drives: 1st prize, Mr. W. H. L. Cabell, 235 yards; 2nd prize, Mr. Stuart Macdonald, 245 yards.

Approach and Putt.—Three balls to be played from a tee 50 yards from the green over an obstacle half way between. The following seven competitors tied with nine strokes each and will have to replay:—

Messrs. J. C. Anderson, G. Blackstock, G. C. Whigham, S. Macdonald, J. B. Orr, E. Higginbotham and R. A. Horne.

Ladies' Putting.—Three balls to be putted from a mark 12 yards from the green. Mrs. Kincaid and Mrs. Eddis tied with 8 strokes each and on the replay Mrs. Kincaid again holed out in 8 to her opponents 9.

Mrs. Fenton presented the prizes to the successful competitors and was awarded three hearty cheers by the large crowd of members and their friends.

The Band of the 1st Devonshire Regiment played a selection of music during the "At Home" which was much appreciated, especially the Scotch selections included for St. Andrews Day.

The following were the winners of the annual competitions played off at various times during the season:—

Club Gold Medal Scratch—Mr. G. C. Whigham.
The Captain's Prize—Mr. Stuart Macdonald.
The Glasgow Trophy—Mr. R. A. Brereton.
Calcutta Silver Medal—Mr. H. Woodham.
Annual Foursomes—1st National Bank (Messrs. Sime and Laidlaw). 2nd Fetes. (Messrs. Gordon Brown and S. Macdonald.)
Shand Cup—Lieutenant E. G. Howlett.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

22nd November 1907.

THE delegates of the Clubs who have the framing of conditions controlling the Open Championship have made up their minds to add that very fine course Deal to the Links over which this meeting is played. The choice is undoubtedly a wise one for this course, neighbouring on Sandwich, is one of the finest in England. Next year the Open is booked to be played at Prestwick, but in 1909 the New Green will be tried. It will be remembered that the other championship courses are: St Andrews, Sandwich, Muirfield, and Hoylake; for a long time the delegates wavered in their choice between Deal and Westward Ho for the extra green, and although the latter had the support and favour of the Royal and Ancient Club the majority of votes went for Deal. Another alteration which concerns the Open Championship is in the condition of the Qualifying Competition. At Hoylake last year the competitors were divided into two sections and each half had a day to itself to play the qualifying round of 36 holes; in future (provided that the number of entrants permits of the qualifying round being played in two days) the first half will play one round on the Tuesday morning and another round on the Wednesday afternoon, whilst the other half will play one round on the Tuesday afternoon and the second round on the Wednesday morning. The Open Championship is fixed for Tuesday, 15th June, when these regulations will come into force, but the rule of the new green does not apply to the Amateur Championship.

The question of handicapping a three Ball Match has been exercising people much of late, though why trouble about it at all when the whole thing is only as the children say, "played for fun" (sometimes may be for money though) one can scarcely understand, it is the age of laws, and red tape, and so one concludes even a 3 hole match must be legislated for. This scheme, however, relates to a single player opposing the best ball of two others and the suggestion is "to multiply the single player's handicap by 3 and take the average of the other two"—thus "A" handicap 3 meets "B" handicap 6 and "C" handicap 10; "A's" handicap multiplied by 3=9 the mean of "B's" and "C's" handicap is 8, therefore the combined pair give "A" one stroke. It is an interesting query, but it is doubtful if this solution would be entirely satisfactory, however one could only give the idea a trial and see if it works out at all well.

Olympia is at present given over to the Motor Show, dazzling, attractive, but to all but the well to do, prohibitive, and yet the poor seem to be there, judging from the enormous crowds which stop all the gangways, all of whom cannot be wealthy. Next year we shall have the Olympic Games which are to include the Royal and Ancient Game, the idea is to decide the competition in that corner of Kent which includes Sandwich and Deal and if the leading Canadian and United States players come over, the interest of the event will naturally be much increased, it is probable then that an International Competition as well as individual matches would be instituted, even the entente cordiale about which we hear so much now-a-days would "embrace" golf, and a French team would be heartily welcomed as competitors—amateurs all of course.

The match between Oxford and Sunningdale on the latter Club course last Saturday, 16th November, ended in a very easy victory for the home club by 7 points to 2. Two prominent and useful members of the Dark Blue team were absent, the Hon'ble Denys Finch, Hatton and Mr. A. J. Robertson, Durham as will be seen by the appended scores, the matches were fairly closely contested except Mr. Healing's 7 and 5 over Mr. Foster whom assuredly he caught on an "off" day:—

On the same day the Light Blues were playing the Ipswich Club on their course, the result being an easy win for the visiting team by 11 matches to 3. The match consisted of both Singles and Foursomes, in the former the 'Varsity won 6 matches to their opponents 3, one being halved and the Foursomes (five pairs) ended in a "grand slam" for the Light Blues.

* * * * *

Before quitting this subject—the 'Varsity Golf—it may be interesting to many to know that the Captains of the Rival Clubs have held consultation and have resolved to decide next year's Inter 'Varsity contest by matches, instead of holes as hitherto. I think it is now the universal opinion that the former is by far the fairer and most popular manner of scoring and a case in point, which has probably brought matters to a crisis occurred in the Inter-'Varsity match last May. When at Hoylake the Dark Blues looked like gaining an easy victory until the tip of their tail came in having sustained such a disastrous beating that his deficit of holes gave the match to Cambridge by 1 point. Ever since Inter-'Varsity Golf has been established in 1878 the match has been decided by holes up. Cambridge has for some years been dissatisfied with this arrangement, but until now (and probably influenced by the contretemps related above) Oxford has been averse to change. No details are as yet arranged with regard to the new system, but in all probability both match and bye will count.

Royalties have been indulging pretty freely in Golf lately. The King of Spain is an enthusiastic player and has visited Ranelagh, he is left handed and on dit is quite a fair exponent of the game, the Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein may be seen any day at Sunningdale, so too when they are in the neighbourhood, may the Dutchess and Princess Patricia of Connaught the latter is a delightful partner in a Foursome as she appears to have the real golfing temperament, very few golfers, whether Royal or common, male or female, seem to possess this so essential to success in the game.

In "Golfing" of the current week avery strong article appears from the pen of Dr. J. C. McPherson. Bold indeed is the man who dares to condemn the methods of the Royal and Ancient Club. Dr. McPherson begins by stating that "matters have come to a height in the golfing world. There is a glaring need for reform in the ruling body to-day, and in the rules themselves. The Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews has had a very long innings depending on the ancient prestage of the links there"—the article is really well worth reading, it is too long to copy and extracts only destroy the sense by omitting the contexts. A well-known East Lothian player, Mr. Gordon Stewart, has won the Championship of the Cape Town Club and District which was played at Wynberg, with an aggregate of 319 for 4 rounds an average of 79¾: of course one doesn't know what the Bogey for the Green is, but he must have played fairly good golf on the whole. Mr. Stewart has also held the East Lothian Championship and holds the record of the old Craigielan Links.

Yesterday (21st November) a very interesting match took place on the West Middlesex Club's Course at Southall, between teams representing the "George Edwards Golfing Society" and the "Cricketers Golfing Society" under handicap. Scoring was by matches 1 point, the bye counting ½ and there were 10 players a side and the Cricketers were headed by Dr. W. G Grace, included Mr. P. J. de Paravicini, Mr. A. P. Day, etc., but perhaps the match set down in full fighting would convey more than desultory comments.

KENNEL NOTES.

"* The poor dog, in life the firmest friend,
The first to welcome, foremost to defend,
Whose honest heart is still his master's own,
Who labours, fights, lives, breathes for him alone."
—Byron.

Kennelling.—It is very important, but very seldom done, ris, keeping dogs in a loose kennel so that there is no necessity of them being perpetually chained up. This latter method spoils a dog's temper as he gets fretful at the continued restraint and moreover the dragging of the chain fastened to his neck causes a contraction of the chest and pulls the shoulders out of shape. An ordinary horse stall can be made into an excellent kennel with four places, with a simple wooden framework and wire netting. The writer has divided a stall up in this way and would be pleased to show the method to anyone who would care to see it, it gives ample room for four large dogs or eight smallish dogs such as terriers or whippets, as large a quantity as most of us have the time to look after properly.

Dogs must not be on cement or stone or brick flooring, by this we mean, of course, not continually. The majority of dogs that fade away and die with seemingly nothing the matter, in Calcutta, have diseased liver contracted this way, or get inflamation of the stomach or at this time of the year cold in the chest which is not observed until the animal is passed human aid. Keep your dogs from lying continually on cold and damp places and you may be surprised at their increased health and longevity.

Have a wooden platform made for the dog to lie on and if you will chain him, have the platform large enough or the chain short enough to ensure the dog staying on it.

Those who already have dogs, which are tied up on the verandah or which are kept in the godown with the sweeper and probably lie on the damp cement or mutti floor, don't lose another minute, send for the mistri and for five or six rupees save the life of your dog which is intrinsically worth twenty or thirty and to you, as a companion very much more. Each berth, if you divide up a stall must be provided with a wooden floor rather smaller than the dimensions of the berth, then it can be stood up on end to allow the stall to be thoroughly flushed with disinfectants.

Those who are going to get dogs, prepare a comfortable and healthy abode for your animal to spend his spare time in. With proper supervision and care and little or no need of Veterinary knowledge, for the dog's physique is much like human beings; dogs can be kept in health, and good stock can be bred and reared in Calcutta.

Fox-Terrier Facts.—We regret to learn of the death of Mr. Treleaway's smooth bitch Bloom. She is a heavy loss to the Kennel, for she invariably threw good quality puppies, and amongst them several winners such as Mrs. Kilburn's Toby, and her owner's Hardwicke Shacabac, the smart little terrier that ran Major Impey's famous Induna close at the last Show—a Calcutta bred and born one too. Fortunately besides the above there are in this premier Fox-terrier Kennel in Calcutta, two pups, a dog and a bitch, which are bound all being well to make history and which are almost certain to catch the judge's eye favourably at the coming Show. Our sincere condolences.

Bull-Terrier Tattle.—Mr. Mollison, a great fancier of his breed, who has imported several English prize winning dogs and who has a large Kennel of this breed, will be represented at the coming Show. The muster of bull-terriers will be larger than at any previous Calcutta Show.

Hounds and Hunting.—The Chandpara pack had a run of two and three-quarter hours from start to kill this week end. The quarry went to earth twice requisitioning the aid of the terrier.

Wanted.—We have enquiries for a pair of smooth or wire fox-terriers and a dachshund about nine months old.

FASHIONS IN DOG.

There are fashions in dogs as well as in ladies' hats, and while the "style" does not change quite so often, it nevertheless changes too often for the good of the dogs. That is, for the good of some dogs.

The fashions are generally the result of one or more enterprising dog brokers who get hold of a certain breed and then persistently force it into favour by getting one or two into the hands of the "right parties." The breed then becomes the fad—until the same or some other broker sees a chance to make a stake by working the scheme on some other breed. Then if the "right parties" take up the new dog it soon becomes the rage, and prices go up accordingly.

One of the peculiarities connected with fashions in dogs is the fact that seldom have the handsome breeds been favoured by being the fashion. At one time the whippet or small greyhound was the fashion in England, and while the whippet never gained a footing in America, the common greyhound became a pronounced favourite with the ladies of the southern states. With these dogs "good form" required that the fancier should have several and whether in her carriage, on horseback or afoot, she must be attended by the whole pack. And, as fashions generally go by extremes, the graceful, clean-cut, aristocratic greyhound was sent to the coursing field and the unshapely, sniffling pug became the style. The pug, possibly because of feminine pity for his deformity, held the carpet for a long time, until his "friends," breeding to intensify his deformities, made him so repulsive that even the most depraved tastes had to discard him. For a good many years following the dethroning of the pug there was no breed that could lay claim to being the real fashion, for during these years poodles, toy terriers, St. Bernards, and toy spaniels each had their fanciers; and each strove, with varying success, for the mastery. At one time it looked as if the holy breed was going to become the rage. But his size was against him in the first place, and secondly, as grand in size as the St. Bernard was, breeders strove for still greater size, and judges awarded the ribbons to size, irrespective of quality or soundness. With such senseless breeding and judging it only took a few years to make this grand breed a pack of degenerate cripples, unworthy of public notice.

In England the Russian wolfhound—a large setter-coated greyhound—gained a considerable popularity through the favour of the Duchess of Newcastle, and bid fair at one time to become the real thing. In America, however, the breed never gained any popularity, and soon lost its favour even in England.

Following the popularity of the pug, the foxterrier was the first that could lay claim to being really the fashion. This smart little dog became really popular with the fanciers of both sexes and for years formed one of the largest classes at our shows. But its reign was not a protracted one, for the cocker spaniel men conceived the idea of spoiling a useful dog in order to find a market for it as a ladies' pet. The cry for the "long and low" was taken up and, of course, the professional judges had, in order to curry favour with the breeders, to put the "long and low" to the front. But it was not enough to make a lap dog out of this bright little breed, and so the same influences put another nail in its coffin by reducing the weight limit. The pert little fellow with his large, speaking eyes soon gained the love of the ladies, and he became the fashion for a time. But his reign, too, was short; for the collie was gaining popularity at the same time, to such extent that he was able to take his position on debatable ground.

During all this time Boston had been evolving a new breed with designs on the spokes of the universe, and strenuous efforts were being made to force the Boston crossbred to the first place in public favour. It was a long time before the wiseacres of the American Kennel Club could be induced to recognize the Boston terrier as a breed and give it a place in the pedigree register. But even after this was accomplished it took years of persistent work to induce the rest of the country to follow the lead of Boston and take this new terrier to its heart. While the Bostons were fighting their campaign in America, the French bulldog, with a similar origin to the Boston terrier, and the toy Spitz were striving for the mastery in England, and in the mean time gained some little headway in America. But as the spokes radiate from the hub, so the little crooked-tailed terrier radiated from Boston into the public fancy and became the real fashion, a place it still holds.

An effort is making by some whose tastes incline to the outre to dethrone the little Boston with that hideous deformity known as the English bulldog. But there is no danger of this effort proving successful. The Boston is homely enough to meet the requirements of oddity, whereas the bulldog not only violates every law of beauty and refinement but every law of nature as well. The eye with a love for the beautiful, the symmetrical and refinement in lines, will never take to an animal that has been bred into a hereditary monstrosity.

The Boston terrier has now had a considerable reign, and under the laws of fashion's eccentricity it is nearly time for the heir apparent to ascend the throne. Just what this heir apparent will be remains to be seen. Present indications are pointing very strongly to the bull terrier as the "next of kin." If the bull terrier had a more pleasing expression and a handsome eye he would, with the beautiful lines of his body and limbs, prove a worthy successor. At any rate let us hope that the new ruler will be something handsome and sensible.—Western Field.

The Veterinarian.

BROKEN KNEES.

Not in the Winter, upon ice and snow, do we look for the accident which causes so-called broken knee, but in the warm months of early autumn, when horses are changing their coats, and are more or less affected in health by the process; some horsemen attributing to them a sense of giddiness when fagged by exertion, hot sunshine, and a coat already getting thick, as blackberries ripen. In many country districts we still hear of horses as having "the blackberry" upon them, and a call being made for alterative or condition powders, about whose composition there may be much mystery, but not much doubt as to the assistance they afford the animal in getting rid of the old and growing the new coat. The loose condition of the roads at this time of year is doubtless contributory to the number of stumbles and falls resulting in broken knees, and it may be remarked in passing that the horse has something for which to thank the motor-car in having brought about an improvement in the state of the roads, although horsemen in their loud complaints against the dust nuisance have forgotten this set-off to the account.

The term broken knee is somewhat of a misnomer, as we apply it to any injury to the skin covering that joint, and only in rare instances is a bone or bones broken. It is, however, always to be regarded as a serious accident, because depreciating the animal's value, however slight the scar left behind. Every degree of injury may be the result of a fall on this joint, from the slightest abrasion, in which the roots of the hair are not destroyed to the open joint or fracture of one of the many small bones of which the joint is composed. Even a slight abrasion leaves a coarseness in the hairs which an expert finger can detect, while the majority of accidents to the skin at this place are followed by a shiny bald patch of irregular shape and extent, with longer, coarser, and less tractable hairs, which persist in laying the wrong way and attracting the attention of the purchaser, to whom it is usually explained that the horse "did it against the manger" in his impatience at seeing another horse fed first. Whatever the explanation offered, buyers are rightly suspicious of a broken knee as being likely to cause the animal to fall again. It may or may not be any greater cause of depreciation than the blemish; the skin only may have suffered, and in uniting, drawn upon the adjacent integument, so that nothing but a cicatrix remains to interfere with the mobility of the joi[nt]. The expert finger will move the skin laterally and from [the] downward, and judge by its attachment whether the [skin] healed in such a manner as to adhere to the tendons o[r] to t[he] capsular ligament of the joint, or form such adhesions as wi[ll] interefere with the easy flexion of the knee. He will attach particular importance to any prominence or "bumpiness," as this suggests bad treatment at the time of the accident and excessive granulation, a matter to which we refer later.

As already hinted, the extent of the injury when a horse falls on his knees cannot be immediately gauged, nor is the size of the wound any criterion. What appears an ordinary case may later prove to be an incurable one with fracture of a small bone, and breaking out at the back of the joint, or the tendons may be so lacerated as to slough in part, and necessitate the keeping open of the wound until that process is accomplished. The injury which did not at once rupture the capsular ligament or containing membrane may nevertheless bring this about by the intensity of the inflammation and pressure of morbid products when the joint oil or synovia escapes, and an open joint presents one of the most difficult tasks that can be set the veterinarian. In deciding to purchase or reject a horse that has had the misfortune to "go down" we should further take into consideration his conformation; if he has turned out toes, old brushing marks about the fetlocks, or, what is still more serious, evidence of speedy cut higher up the limb. The fall may have been due to striking himself with the opposite foot, and in such case he is certainly prone to a repetition of the accident. In the absence of all these defects a horse with a chipped knee may prove a valuable servant, and there are experienced jobmasters and others who do not cater for the very best class of buyers who are willing to condone a slight blemish if the animal is in other respects desirable.

Treatment of broken knee affords a test of the surgeon's skill, inasmuch as the practitioner will often bring a bad case to a good termination, or leave an ordinary one so blemished as to be worth very little more than the cost of the treatment.

Treatment.—As the accident usually occurs on the road, it is desirable that the horseman should be able to afford first aid. The kind of assistance usually offered is not very valuable, since a bucket of water and a stable sponge used for many sorts of work is, of all things, most likely to contaminate the wound. In the absence of any antiseptic, it will generally be advisable to allow the blood to form a clot while removing the patient to the nearest asylum. Here it should be irrigated with a three or four per cent. carbolic or creasote emulsion, most of the advertised preparations being trustworthy if employed according to directions. Syringing to remove particles of road grit is time well spent. If the skin is cut right through the healing process must necessarily be carried out by granulation, preceded by the formation of more or less pus, and it will be desirable to put on a poultice inclosed within a muslin bag.

Crumb bread mixed with glycerine and a few drops of carbolic acid will remain moist and not decompose. No poultice should be applied hotter than a man can bear against his naked elbow. The stableman's hand is no guide in this matter, and he is apt to employ fomentations and poultices much too hot. With two or three days of such treatment bright red eminences or granulations appear; these will make rapid growth in some parts of the wound, while leaving little hollows in others. The mistake commonly made by amateurs at this stage is to continue warm fomentations or cataplasms, and later on have a mass of so-called "proud flesh" to deal with which grows beyond the level of the skin, and leaves behind those unsightly lumps to which reference has been made. The appearance of granulations should be the signal to desist from the line of treatment above indicated. The prominences should be checked by touching over with solid nitrate of silver, while powdered resin may be dusted into the crevices or hollows which are indisposed to fill up. The wound may be left open, and the discharges allowed to dry upon it. The skin below should be protected by frequent application of vaseline or simple ointment, and bandages should be employed to prevent filling of the leg. Bandaging below the knee is necessary in the first instance to prevent poultices from slipping down, and subsequently for the reason given above.

As soon as the new material reaches the level of the skin a dry scab should be encouraged to form; and this will not do so if the wound is covered. No sooner is it sealed over than the surgeon roughly rubs it off, leaving a red, raw surface, to which he applies his caustic pencil or hardened nitrate of silver. The red granular surface turns white, then brown, and in a few hours a new scab is formed. A day or two later this is rubbed off, and the cautery again applied. This apparently rude treatment is best calculated to minimise the blemish, as each time the scab is removed the edges of the skin are brought closer together by its successor, until finally nothing but cicatricial tissue joins the lips of the wound. No ragged skin should be cut away, and injured tendons had better be allowed to cast off the lacerated portions. The comparative frequency with which tetanus or lock-jaw used to follow on broken knee in pre-Listerian times led the old practitioners to believe that exercise in some way provoked it, and there remains a prejudice against walking the patient about until the wound has quite recovered. It is now known that the bacillus of tetanus lurks at the bottom or lower layer of the wound, and free irrigation at the commencement with some germ destroyer reduces the risk of such germs entering. Provided this syringing is practised during the first day or two, it is probable that exercise of a moderate kind is beneficial, as it helps to promote the secretion of synovia in the other joints, and reduces the tendency to swelling and to laminitis which may result from long standing. A mild aloetic ball or some simple diuretic medicine may also be given with advantage during the period of confinement without exercise.

Slings are sometimes provided to prevent the animal from throwing himself down, but with horses of ordinary temperament sufficient restraint is obtained by the halter.

A labourer charged with a petty offence.

"Have you anyone in court who will vouch for your good character?" queried the Judge.

"Yes, sir, there is the chief constable yonder," was the reply.

The chief constable was amazed. "Why, your Honour, I don't even know the man," protested he.

"Now, sir," broke in the accused, "I have lived in the town for nearly twenty years, and if the chief constable doesn't know me yet, isn't that a character for you?"

Wife: "Tell me, dearest, is my dress too low?"

Husband: "Tell me, my darling, the height of your partners?"

THE MANDALAY HORSE SHOW.

A most successful show was held on the 26th and 27th ultimo and Major J. H. Whitehead is to be congratulated on the results of his efforts. The entries were good and all the exhibits were ponies. On the second day H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma was present and gave a short speech at the conclusion of the proceeding. There was a contretemps when the prize giving took place, three of the awards being found missing—the work of some light fingered gentry during the afternoon. Appended are results:—

Stallions, 13-0 and under.—Two ponies were present when the judging commenced. Mg. Khin's Zawtika and the same owner's Kakuma; a third prize was awarded the first named pony.

Judges:—Mr. Mackenna, Mr. Place, and Capt. Lane.

Brood Mares, 13-0 and under, with foals at foot.—None of the three entries was deemed worthy of a first prize.

Mr. W. A. Battle's, b.bb.m. Amber, 2; Mr. Aung Hla's b.bb.m. (Not named), 3.

Judges:—Mr. Place, Major Campion, and Mr. Adam.

Burma bred colts and fillies, 13-0 and under—Thirteen entrees.

Mr. R. Ward's ig.bb.f. Hla May, 1; Mr. E. Cho's b.bb.m. Jealousy, 2; Mr. Ali Abkar's ig. bb.c. Toomy, 3 Highly commended: Mg. San's sk. bb. c. Tet Toe.

Judges:—Capt. Bolton, Capt. Lane and Mr. Hill.

Burma breds, 13-0 and under, the property of Burmans or Natives of India.—Twenty-two entries.

Mg. Kyaw Dun's ch. bb.g. Sein Kya, 1; Ko Shin Gale's d.bb.m. Ma Ma Gyi.2; U. Myat U.'s b.bb.m. Kya Ma, 3. Highly commended Mg. Nyein's b.bb.m. Ma Nyun; commended: Mg. Nyun's ch. bb.m. Mat Ma.

Judges:—Captain Bolton, Captain Merriman and Mr. Thruston.

Hacks, imported, 13-0 and under.—Fourteen entries.

Captain A. H. Wilson's blk.w.g. Marksman,1; Captain W. H. Lane's ch.w.g. Rising Sun, 2; Captain W. H. Lane's ch.w.g. Last Choice, 3. Highly commended: Captain A. H. Wilson's r.w.g. Blue Rock; commended: Mr. J. M. Fiilde's gr.w.m. Sweet Pea.

Judges:—Capt. Bolton, Capt. Merriman, Major Strahon.

Hacks, Burma-bred, 13-0 and under.—Twenty-six entries.

Major W. E. Campion's gr. bb.m. Beauty, 1; Mr. C. S. Pennell's ch.bb.m. Sein Nyun, 2; Mr. J. I. Minus's sk. bb.g. Eddy, 3. Highly commended: Major G. A. Strahan's ch.bb.g. Too Much; commended: Mr. J. Vertannes' b.bb.g. Recruit.

Judges:—Capt. Bolton, Capt. Lane and Mr. Thruston.

Hacks over 13-0.—Twenty-one entries.

Have you heard the story of the artist and the owner of horses? The painter suggested painting a certain celebrated animal, and he was told that if the horse won a certain race he could go ahead. The chance was thought very highly of, but it became "unstuck." What was the surprise of the artist to receive a letter telling him to go ahead with the work.

"But your horse didn't win?" suggested the animal painter when he greeted his patron.

"No, I know he didn't; but I can well afford to have my gee painted—and out of the race he lost."

The artist is still reflecting.

A correspondent writes to a daily paper to protest against the wearing of hat-pins, which he declares are a serious danger. After all unless a man is altogether too impetuous there is really very little risk.

The Naturalist.

FISH EAGLES.

II.

The fish eagles of India are divided among two "Families" which are again split up into three genera comprising between them six species. There is but one specimen of osprey known and he has a "Family" (Pandionidæ) and a genus (Pandion) all to himself.

"Pandion haliaëtus."—The osprey, as it were, forms a link between the nocturnal and diurnal birds of prey, resembling the owls in two important characteristics and yet not being nocturnal in his habits. He is the only diurnal bird of prey, that has no aftershaft to his feathers and has the outer toe reversible. That is the outer toe can face backwards or forwards, like a parrot's. The "aftershaft" of a feather, is to be found on its undersurface, where the quill joins the shaft, i.e., just outside the skin, and here there will be found attached to the main feather, a tiny, fluffy second feather, minute in some species, well developed in others, and totally wanting in many, such as the owls and ospreys.

These two characteristics are in themselves sufficient to separate the osprey from all other birds of prey. This is a winter visitor to India and at that time of year widely distributed throughout the country in suitable localities, i.e., wherever there are big stretches of water or rivers and can usually be found either sitting or flying over such places and recognized by his white under parts, more or less barred with brown, according to age and white head and neck with dark brown on the back and upper parts. He will often be seen to hover over a patch of water and then close his wings and drop straight into it with a frightful splash, very unlike the clean dive of the king-fishers, emerging therefrom with sometimes quite a large fish, in his talons. The osprey must find the struggle for existence, in this country at any rate, by no means an easy one, for apart from the fact that he has first of all got to catch his fish, which judging from the number of times he comes out of the water, without one, appears to be rather a difficult and tedious proceeding, he has so many keen eyed enemies to evade, ere he can enjoy his hard earned meal. The larger fish eagles, the steppe, imperial and even the tawny, are ever on the look out for him to appear with a fish, in his talons and promptly proceed to give chase. Unless the fish is a big one, the osprey can usually get clean away from either of the three latter, but from the fish eagle it is by no means so easy, as the latter has a pretty good turn of speed and will follow till he tires the other out.

The fish eagles, which belong to the Family "Falconidæ" are divided into the two genera "Haliaëtus" and "Poliaëtus" the former representet in India by three and the latter by two species. The two genera can easily be identified from each other by, firstly in the genus "Haliaëtus" the claws are grooved underneath and the outer toe is not even partially reversible, whereas in "Poliaëtus" the claws are rounded and smooth on the undersurface and the outer toe is partially reversible. Not completely reversible as in the osprey. The three species of "Haliaëtus" are "H. leucoryphus" Pallas's fishing eagle; "H. leucogaster," the white-bellied sea-eagle and "H. albicilla," the white-tailed sea-eagle, and of these, "H. leucogaster" can at once be separated from the other two firstly in being a good deal smaller, a female seldom exceeding 28 inches in length, whereas even the male in either of the other two, would be well over 30 inches and secondly in having a lot of white on his breast and lower parts whereas in both of the other two, the lower parts will be some shade of dark or light brown, but never white. The white-bellied sea-eagle frequents the sea coasts and is seldom found inland whereas both Pallas's fishing eagle and the white-tailed sea-eagle, are only to be found in Northern India and the former in Burma as well, "H. albicilla" being only a winter visitor to the plains of the Punjab, Sindh, and United Provinces. The chief distinction in the two latter species lies in the tail, which in "H. leucoryphus" is slightly rounded and in adults has a single white bar in the middle of it and in "H. albicilla" it is inclined to be wedge-shaped, the middle feathers being considerably longer than those on either side and the whole tail is white, except just at the base.

The ordinary colouring of the adult in the two northern species is a dark brown, almost black with the head and neck almost pale buff in some, always considerably lighter than the rest of the plumage with a conspicuous broad white band on the tail in the case of "H. leucoryphus" and almost the entire tail white in "H. albicilla." The plumage of the young bird is very variable, from a light brown generally, to varying shades of light and dark in two-year-old birds, which are in a transition stage, between the nestling and adult plumages. In the first plumage, they somewhat resemble a steppe eagle at a distance, except that they never have the two white bars on the wing, which are characteristic of that species. In no stage can either "H. leucoryphus" or "H. albicilla" be mistaken for any other eagle, for none except the true eagles of the genus "Aquila" approach them in size and they all have their tarsi feathered whereas in the fish eagles, the tarsi is naked except for about one-third of its length on the upper part where it is feathered in front only.

The two species of "Polioaëtus," "P. ichthyaëtus," the large grey-headed fishing eagle and "P. humilis" Hodgson's Fishing Eagle as I have mentioned before can be separated from the three species of "Haliaëtus" by having rounded claws and the outer toe partially reversible, and from each other chiefly in the former being considerably bigger than "P. humilis." These birds are seldom to be seen in open country or near the coast, but keep to the banks of well-wooded inland rivers and streams. The plumage is peculiar and striking; the head and neck being ashy grey; the upper parts and breast brown, the back generally being darker than the breast and the abdomen and thighs white giving the bird quite a patchwork appearance.

These species are both resident in India and widely distributed. All the "fish-eagles" have loud resonant calls anything but melodious and each and all seem to love hearing their own voices. "H. leucoryphus" in the plains of the Punjab may often be heard long before he is seen, particularly when soaring and though he himself may only appear a wee speck in the heavens, his call will be distinctly hear. The same applies to "H. leucogaster" who makes himself a veritable nuisance in the breeding season. A pair of these birds were building in a tree, quite near the bungalow in which I was staying in Waltair and used to rouse me up regularly every morning at sunrise, with their unmusical clamour and what is more they never appeared to get tired of shouting to one another and evidently thought everyone else appreciated their sing songs as much as they did.

Sea-snakes formed the staple diet of this couple, as nearly every morning one or the other arrived with a snake dangling from its talons and I suppose I noticed quite five snakes to every one fish they captured.

The genus "Polioaëtus" or rather its representatives are in no way behind hand with the members of the preceding genus in making themselves heard and it would be difficult to say which had the more rancous call.

"P. humilis" is to be found in the Himalayas to an elevation of about 6,000 feet and breeds in trees between March and May chiefly.

"EXILE."

The Story Teller.

THE CLEANSING OF THE RING.

She polished it industriously. Her cheeks were flushed, her eyes radiant with the blissful mystery which encompassed her.

She polished it shyly with a new piece of chamois-leather, torn from the large piece purchased secretly for the purpose. The husband of two days' standing came suddenly in and caught her—blushes, chamois-leather, and all.

"You sweet!" he cried. "You adorable baby!"

"I thought you'd laugh," she said, laughing herself, as she lifted her lips to his, "but I want it always to look bright, Jack. I can't bear to think that it should ever be dim or tarnished; and if I keep it very clean, years and years, and years hence, when we're both quite middle-aged, strangers will think we're still a honeymoon couple."

He kissed her again; then he kissed the ring. You see he was very extravagantly in love, and a little reckless. . . . And it was in this manner that they passed out from the sunlit brink—out to the wide sea of matrimony; and at first they found, as they lightly clave its waters, that each hour the sun grew brighter.

And every day the ring was polished till it reflected every bit of light and shone so brilliantly that it almost hurt the eyes to look at it. But, alas! they did not remember that the sea whereupon they floated was an uncharted sea. And upon uncharted seas the best navigators are apt to find, now and again, a submerged rock.

The submerged rock in their case was a sick man with magnetic eyes. The husband in the interest of his profession (he was a doctor) finding him an unusual case, took him, Samaritan-like, into his own house, the better to wrestle with his sickness.

Now the sick man's eyes were of the kind which from all ages have made bad women worse and driven good women to folly. They were excellently well shaped, and very darkly blue; and they had a trick of opening wide, all suddenly, and sending a look of reverent, lonely, soul-admiration, like an electric spark, straight at their victim.

This woman, being simple, withstood these looks for quite a long time. But once one dropped upon her when, believing the sick man to be asleep, she fell, as usual, to polishing her ring.

The look was accompanied by words.

"Why do you do that?" the sick man asked.

The woman started, and the little piece of chamois-leather fell to the ground.

"I want to keep it bright," she faltered.

And the sick man (he was not very sick now) said: "Do you?"

It was a short sentence enough—also, it was apparently harmless; yet the woman read a volume into it and she grew frightened.

In the long, long stretch of a protracted convalescence she grew more frightened.

And the ring lost its brilliance: it had not been polished since the day when the sick man had looked electrically and said:

"Do you?"

The doctor was busy, worried, and unobserving; and, by and by, the very worst happened

As the sparrow-hawk is helpless when the eagle hovers above; as the kid against its better judgment goes dazed to the maw of the tiger, so did the woman go half-hypnotised to her fate. . . .

After a while reason came back, and she beheld things in their true proportion. The sick man went his way and she had time to think.

Hatefully clear—hatefully distinct it all looked.

She had never learned duplicity, and in a short time her husband saw things in their true proportion too.

He neither killed himself nor her, but, ancestral instincts arising, he wrote to the man who had been sick, and proposed in level, sane language, that they should fight for the woman.

Now the man who had been sick was almost everything but a coward. Indeed, so little was he a coward that the idea appealed to him. Not that he was particularly anxious for the woman—now.

Her reticence had spurred him—her acquiescence had wearied him, but some alien blood—probably Italian—had brought wild romance with it.

To love and ride away was good. To love and slay was better—more stirring, more piquant.

The arrangements—the appointed place—everything was darkly kept from the woman, but she found it all out, as a woman will.

She had lost her colour, her lustre, her beauty, mourning over the ring that had been clean, and was now tarnished.

But on the morning of the appointed day she arose, and dressed herself in such favoured garments as she deemed to suit her best.

Her colour had come back again.

The appointed place was the sea shore—miles away from civilisation. A wild tract of Irish coast, at which law and order blink.

The woman, with burning cheeks and becoming clothes, hid behind a rock. She saw the two men step out on to the sands.

She saw them pile up a small bank of sand; heard them agree that when the first wave of the incoming tide touched it, they would fire; and she waited.

The tide crawled up, and twice it almost, but not quite, licked the mound only to recede and leave it dry.

At last, with a rush and a moan, one wave, bolder than the rest, swept in and cast its white foam on the barrier of doom.

As it did so two reports ringed out terse and clean.

One struck the sand behind the man who had been sick, and one pierced the breast of the woman.

For at the signal of the wave, she had sprung out and cast herself before her husband. It was by no means an original tragedy, and it was about a century too late to be up-to-date; but it satisfied the woman's sense of the fitness of things, for she died with a smile.

Into the warm, dark blood which welled up and dabbled the lace of the becoming frock, she dipped her finger.

Then she smeared her stained finger across the ring, until it too had received its baptism.

"Clean now!" she said, and, with her eyes still upon her husband's, she passed to the land where we, not knowing yet, passionately hope that great reparations may be well received.

Cards.

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 44.

B's king of diamonds can hardly be a false card for A is marked by his lead with the queen, 10, 9. Y is therefore safe for two tricks in diamonds with the ace and knave, and Z has only to make for tricks in spades to go game. He should put Y in with a diamond—winning with ace or knave according as A puts on the queen or a small one—and should then lead a spade finessing the 9. If A wins with the knave, Z's suit is cleared, and Y has the best heart, diamond and club for entry. If the 9 of spades wins, however, Z should not take a second finesse—for A might conceivably be "foxing" with the knave—but should lead out ace, king, queen of spades. In this way he makes sure of nine tricks, and will win ten if he drops the knave of spades.

Problem No. 45.

Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 0. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares no trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:

Y's HAND (DUMMY.)

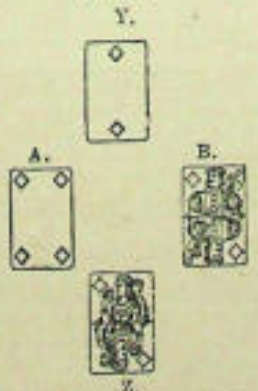
Hearts, K, 4, 3. Diamonds, 6, 5, 2. Clubs, A, Q, 10, 9, 8. Spades, A, 7.

Z's HAND (DEALER.)

Hearts, 8, 7, 6. Diamonds, A Q. Clubs, K, 8, 2. Spades, K, 10 9, 5, 4.

The first trick is as follows:

Trick 1.



How should Z go on with the hand, and why?

The late Mr. George Allen used to tell anecdotes, and probably none more picturesque than that which described how Ruskin one Easter Sunday morning, high up in the Alps, knelt down to pray with a peasant girl at a wayside-cross.

Observing some labourers working on the mountainside, Ruskin said, "I wish I could do what that man is doing."

Allen replied breathlessly, "Well, you can outwalk me!"

To which he replied, "And the reason is that I was never allowed to do any exercise that would have strengthened my back. I wasn't allowed to ride for fear of being thrown off; I wasn't allowed to boat for fear of being drowned; I wasn't allowed to box because it was vulgar; but I was allowed to fence because it was genteel!"

MARKSMANSHIP.

The British Committee of Enquiry assembled to investigate the Swiss military system, was to supply information which should provide every member with ample food for thought. They were to inspect barracks, stables and factories, they were to attend manœuvres and see the Swiss riflemen on the range, hear lectures and addresses and, in a word, be shown a "citizen army" at work with as complete an exposition of its organisation and methods as was possible in the time at their disposal. We hope that their visit may be the means of converting the foes of "militarism" to a saner view of the duties of a citizen but it would be sanguine to suppose that large results will follow the enterprise. Some labour members were included in the party, but we do not know enough of the views of any one of them to say whether these are men whose ideas stand in need of revision: probably they are not: the person who has made up his mind on any subject seldom cares to run the risk of having to revise his views. Thanks very largely to the unceasing endeavours of Earl Roberts the desirability of teaching men how to use a rifle has been recognised by the establishment of numerous Associations and by increased attention to shooting at various schools of different degree. Unfortunately England can never hope to see rifle shooting take among her sports or occupations the place it holds in mountainous and thinly populated countries. It is a matter of sufficient difficulty to find ranges whereon the regular troops can be put through their meagre course of musketry: and for the vast majority the miniature rifle and range must suffice; that mastery of this weapon is of value we have Earl Roberts' oft-expressed approval to assure us.

It is well that the movement should e making headway, for it seems as though the importance of marksmanship were being realised in other countries. Especially is this the case in the United States where there would appear to be a regular "revival" among military bodies. The authorised strength of the American Army is only about 25,000 officers and men, but like ourselves they have large numbers of Militia and Volunteers; and it is among the auxiliary forces that the revival in rifle shooting is taking place. The American citizen has several great advantages over the Briton: in the first place he has, in very many regions, opportunity of using both rifle and shot gun on game grounds which are for the most part well preserved. The man of very moderate means in many States can enjoy for a few dollars sport such as in Great Britain is only within the reach of the well-to-do. Then again the American citizen, less interested in cricket, finds his amusement in clay bird shooting: the number of clay bird shooting clubs and associations in America is enormous and the quantity of ammunition expended at the frequent meetings, to say nothing of practice, must be incredible. Such facilities and opportunities for acquiring mastery of firearms cannot fail to produce their effect; and we imagine that were America plunged into a struggle with some other nation there would be no possibility of passing upon her auxiliaries the criticism Earl Roberts recently passed upon the Volunteers, Yeomanry, and Militia who served under him in the South African War: "some of them had never fired a rifle before they got there."

What sporting facilities and clay bird shooting competitions do to familiarise the American citizen with firearms, that must the miniature rifle do for the Briton. We do not wish to insist overmuch on the uses of mastering the shot gun; but the man who is thoroughly at home therewith has less to learn when he takes rifle in hand than has he who never has used a gun at all. It may be the familiarity with sporting arms that has engendered the revival of long range rifle shooting in the States: "from nearly every State," says a writer in the New York Tribune, "come reports of increased activity and interest in rifle shooting. In a number of States hitherto without adequate ranges or with no ranges at all appropriations have been made for the purchase of a long rental of sites and the erection of modern targets, shooting lodges and moving figures." Those who are participating in the movement are inspired with the ambition to become long range marksmen; and the American idea of long range practice is essentially practical; he disdains none of the modern appliances that make to the desired end and seeks to make sure of his man at any distance up to a mile or even more; in a word to get out of modern weapons their full value. It is the greater intricacy of the modern small bore rifle and the fittings that may be applied to it that makes practice so important; half a century ago a recruit might be taught to make very fair practice with the Minie rifle in a week or ten days; the man was so much better than his weapon, or rather his abilities for straight shooting were so much greater than its carrying power. Earl Roberts informed an audience a few weeks ago that within his recollection "a man could be trusted in battle with very little training;" and as battles in the Crimea were fought at 200 yards range or less, massed troops being opposed to troops in line we can well understand that the requisite standard of marksmanship was not a very high one. It was one thing to master the old Enfield rifle: it is quite another to master the modern service weapon and it is because the modern rifle requires an apprenticeship so much longer that the National Service League with Earl Roberts at its head is exerting every endeavour to obtain musketry tuition for all. The American riflemen aim at creating a body of long range sharp shooters who shall be able to make the best use of telescopic sights and other appliances: this is not a body that can be evolved in a week nor yet in a month. We need not labour the point involved. What seems to be principally necessary at home is to kill the flabby spirit which objects to elementary preparations for defence of the country as "militarism." We doubt whether the apostles of the cult and their followers are nearly as numerous as they are noisy: it is one of the misfortunes of the age that exceeding tenderness should be displayed for the feelings of these mischievous and short sighted people. If they ventured to preach their silly doctrines in an hour when the peace of Britain herself were less assured they would probably learn to their cost that they have been presuming upon the indulgent contempt of the vast majority.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Before our next issue both the Trials and the Viceroy's Cup will be ancient history and we shall all be wondering how it was that we did not spot the winners. Much may happen between the penning of these lines and the day of the races; but at the time of going to press Stirabout for the Trials and Fitzgrafton for the Cup look as big certainties as we have ever had. But—there is always a but in racing—we can see two or three in each race that must not altogether be overlooked. Stirabout's defeat of Sermon on the 7th does not finally dispose of the chances of Messrs. T. Wood and Badger's horse. It is true that he was a tryer every inch of the way, but he got badly out of the gate and it is always disheartening to a horse to have ground to make up from the beginning of a race. Then he was not over and above fresh and his fortnight without a race will probably have done him a world of good. Saloon again seems to have been too lightly thought of. He won the race in the record time of 41⅘secs., could no doubt have done better if he had been pressed, and it is very doubtful whether either Stirabout or Sermon will be able to beat him Then there is still one more which may possibly be going to have something to say, and that is the outside Berthier. The horse has not been well, but is coming on every day, and if by any chance he is fit by the 21st he will show himself uncommonly useful over a mile. The money of course will speak, and if Mr. Galstaun's animal still stands at 15 to 1 it will mean that the stable do not like his chances and he is not sufficiently forward to back, but any sudden shortening of the odds against this big beast should be watched with great interest.

Is the Cup the horse that might be found to beat Fitzgrafton is Boabdil. Mumford is one of the cleverest trainers in India and he adds to his other abilities the capacity of keeping a tight shut mouth. The air is full of rumours as to whether the horse can or cannot stand the journey, and the only man whose opinion on the subject is at all worth having says nothing. Steinhager has received a good deal of support in the market during the last few days, but we can hardly fancy his chances very much. The only other dark possibility is Wandin, who is certain to be Tom Scott's representative if any, but he is a very outside chance. Realm is most probably to be kept for Tollygunge. Stirabout has been made second favourite to Fitzgrafton on his running on the 14th, and indeed one bookmaker who laid him Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 400 a week or two ago has rubbed him out altogether; for all that we believe Mr. Apcar's horse will beat him. Watson is shoving the work strongly into the handsome bay who is in good condition to stand it, while Stirabout is already fine, and the further Fitzgrafton goes the better he likes it, so that the extra ¼ mile is all in his favor. Boabdil is the great danger, and if he is sound the race itself this year, despite the paucity of interests represented, should be a great one.

The attractive card and pleasant weather on Saturday drew a really good attendance and the stands and paddock presented quite an animated appearance when at 2-15 the nine ponies faced the starter for the hurdle race. It had looked a pretty good handicap on paper but the event showed that Little Dolly and Lady Viola had got out and away the best of it and a lot of weight will have to come off Pineal, Daphne and Prob to give them a chance while Minstrel Boy and Bones would not be likely to show well in such company under any weight at all. We were unfortunately deprived of the chance of seeing what Branga could do as top weight amongst this class as something or other apparently went wrong and he was eased up after the second hurdle.

Little Dolly won pretty easily at the finish, but if Lady Viola had jumped as well as she did when schooling, the result might easily have been different. She hit the last one a rap which knocked her right out of her stride and she lost a lot of ground in getting going again.

Bones gave Bennett a fall at the second hurdle, but luckily he was not hurt and was out at Tollygunge riding schools on Sunday.

The Maiden Horse Handicap was considered a moral for Fireworks on form with Conscience and Vespasia next most fancied till a whisper went round that Sea Spray was being backed by his stable which brought a fair amount of money out for Mr. Deakin's horse. His one and a half length victory was really a pretty easy thing as Robinson who rode him, doesn't give over much away as a rule. Fireworks and Conscience who finished second and third had a length between them which was just what thoughtful people would expect on their previous running. Vespasia found 10st. 1 a bit of a stopper and could make no headway under it at all. Lassoo (Coil—Constancy) ran a pretty good horse for four furlongs considering that it is his first gallop in public and we shall look to see him do well later in the season. We remember him, when he was standing in Smallman's yard last August and though poor then he was a very taking little animal and if he gets a 14-2 measurement next spring may be a bit of a scorcher among the ponies.

The Fort Plate was only interesting inasmuch as that it gave one a chance of seeing Golden Gleam and Berthier in action, the race itself was an easy thing for Amplify, the favourite, from start to finish. Golden Gleam moved well and with great power, but obviously needs a lot more galloping to get fit. Berthier is an extraordinarily big awkward moving animal, but has a very long stride and if well would probably prove a dangerous opponent to the best of them at a mile. Volume and Amplify, as was to be expected, ran absolutely nowhere and are both very backward.

The Wellesley Plate was of course the great race of the day. For appearance Fitzgrafton, Stirabout and Ballark stood out a long way from the others as they paraded round in the paddock and then it was a pleasure to watch the Cup favorite move. The race was rather curiously run, as Stirabout made his own pace and never pushed, won in the poor time of 2-11⅕. Saloon's for the same race last year was 2-10. Fitzgrafton came up a bit at the ½ mile, but seemed to ease off again and his final rush was much too late to be of any effect, while Ballark never seemed to get going properly at any part of the journey. Jolly Abbot stuck as close as he could to the leader, but was flagging badly from the distance, and if the pace had been really hot he would not have been in it with that class. Fitzgrafton was going great guns at the finish and would probably have won if there had been another half mile to go.

The Bentinck Plate produced the best finish of the day though it wasn't quite as close a thing as it looked. Jimmy Robinson is a past master in the art of making a good race and he could probably have left Solace a little sooner if he had liked even though he lost a bit of ground by a swerve in the straight in which he just managed to avoid fouling the mare. Duplex II., who was much fancied, could do no good at all and his stable companion Pat C made the better show. Picture ran pretty well up and just missed her place. She would have paid a first class dividend on the tote if she hadn't just missed it as there were only four tickets on her.

Mr. Myers' Bon Bon was made a hot favourite for the mile and a half, but Lord Boyne, Balayeuse, Scamander and Cyril were also well backed. Messrs. Goculdas, Nanjee's North American mare, however, is the right stamp of animal for this distance and with the comparatively light impost of 7-10 was able to do the trick with great satisfaction to her supporters. She is a wonderfully consistent performer, as last season out of the large number of twenty starts she annexed five winning brackets and drew place money no less than eight times, and now in her first appearance this season she has begun with a most satisfactory score. Scamander and Queen of Gems were sent out to the front and made all the running at the beginning and thereby disposed of any chance they might have had. Bon Bon might also have done better if he had not commenced quite so soon and A. Hoyt on the winner wisely lay behind till well in the straight, when he came through the ringleaders and won comfortably by 1½ length from Bon Bon.

Saturday is the first day of the First Meeting and the entries promise some uncomfortably big fields in the shorter races. Indeed, unless there are some very extensive scratchings there will be a good deal of heartburnings about positions and it looks as if two races would have to be divided, which would mean a start at 1-30 o'clock! The Ellenborough Plate (6 furlongs) has 49 and the Grand Stand Plate (5 furlongs) 31. The Paddock Plate (1¼ mile) has 38, but over this distance the crowd doesn't matter so much. The Burdwan Cup with only 12 will have a small field and there may not even be 1, 2, 3 betting by the time the starters' names go up. Mallard is already a very hot favorite for this race as is Stirabout for the Trials and Lady Grey II. for the Pony Plate, and on Tuesday even they were talking about 6 to 1 for the treble, which doesn't sound very tempting. Out of the 20 in for the Trials probably about a dozen will go to the post and it is certain to be a fine race whoever wins it, though Stirabout's supporters are backing him as if it were all over already. The Pony Race will most likely also have only twelve or so to start, which, however, is an improvement on the seven who faced the gate last year.

Schooling has been plentiful again. Sunday at Tollygunge was principally a hunter's day, but there were some more interesting lots out over the hurdles on Tuesday. Betrayer (Trenoweth), Chassepot (Ferguson), Camira (Waugh), Kingpin (Bennet) and Kipling (J. H. Trenoweth) went the whole course at a fair pace. Mr. Fleming's big chestnut showed that much as he might dislike jumping on his own he is a real good fencer when in company and the whole five of them went the round without mistake.

Bridegroom (Thomas) and Maori (Butlin) did a mile over seven in fast time, the latter pulling hard and leading all the way. Marmalade III (Thomas) and Blue Bell (Bloss) started together, but the latter pulled up after a mile and then Fusilier jumped in and finished the course with the other. Marmalade III is Mr. Holmes' new importation who won some useful little races for him at home and is a very taking looking bay mare. Captain Holden rode Lord

Harry round with a new one from his stable and afterwards steered Pathfinder in a school with his other pony Warsprite (J. H. Trenoweth), Bones (Bennet) Lady Viola (Trenoweth) and Yardley (Waugh), all going well, but not a any great pace. Cracker (Ferguson) and Curfew Bell (Bond) did 2 miles at a strong pace and both jumped in really good style and we are looking forward to Cracker's first race down here.

TEMPLEMAN is still down with dysentery and it is to be feared that Scott's stable will be without his services throughout the whole of the first meeting. [illegible] very bad luck both on jockey and stable for this to have happened just now of all times and they have our sincerest sympathy.

THE match between Mr. Manning's Countybred, Sparkle, and Mr. Love's Tycannah is to come off on Tuesday next and is certain to attract a good gathering of sporting men as it is a very genuine little affair and both owners are desperately anxious to see their animals win.

THE first paperchase will be held on Saturday about half a mile beyond the 6th milestone on the Gariahat Road. It is a fearful long way out, but the only country where anything at all practicable in the way of a course could be found and even then those who have much consideration for their animals legs will take care not to travel at any very desperate pace.

FINAL entries for the Calcutta First Meeting, first entries for the Second Meeting and final entries for the Tollygunge Steeplechases are published in to-day's issue of our paper.

AMONG our "For Sale" advertisements (in the middle of the paper) to-day, will be found one relating to sporting and reference books which ought to particularly appeal to our readers. These books are all in excellent order, many of them are new, all should be on the sportsman's bookshelf, while as to prices they are almost given away!

Too late for publication in our last issue we received a list of the entries for the Indian Polo Association Championship Tournament which begins in Calcutta on the 23rd instant. They are:—The 15th Hussars, 17th Lancers, The Carabiniers, Jodhpur Palace, Rajput Pilgrims, Patiala, Cooch Behar, Club "Z" Team.

MESSRS. BARTON SON AND CO., the jewellers and silversmiths of Bangalore and Octacamund, recognise the advent of Christmas with a specially attractive issue of their general catalogue which is now being spread broadcast over India, Burma, Ceylon and the Straits. Experience of many previous editions of this firm's alluring lists naturally leads us to expect something rather above the average in this case; needless to say we find it here in a catalogue which reflects the highest credit on the firm and its printers: it is bigger, gives more particulars of the stock, and is better turned out than those of other years and is altogether a matter for congratulation to all associated in its production. The Christmas present seeker will find here in a happy hunting ground and a sure find.

ANGUS BENNETT, "one of the best cross-country riders in Australia(vide the Sporting Judge) has just reached Calcutta, and may be seen in the saddle at our big meetings this cold weather. He brings excellent letters of recommendation and is equally good on the flat according to these. He should find no lack of riding here.

WE cull the following item from a live-stock advertisement which recently appeared in the columns of a daily contemporary:—"Two beautiful Australian Milch Cows, one in full milk, and the other expected to calf (cow) daily." Should "expectations" be realised, the vender has evidently struck a somewhat prolific brand of milch cow. It would not take long to raise a herd on these terms, especially if this wonderful cow could be persuaded to transmit her capabilities to her offspring!!

A Dog Show will be held at Mozufferpore next month during the meet: the Honorary Secretaries are Messrs. G. Disney and H. E. Abbott who have put forward an attractive schedule.

EVERY one knows the story of Rev. "Jack" Russell when he was asked by the Bishop of Exeter whether he thought it was correct for him to be in the hunting field where "he must hear so much bad language." "No, my lord" he is reported to have replied, "I am always a field ahead of that." But the correct version of the answer, we have been told, is: "Bad language is never in the same field with me." By that "Parson Jack" meant that the clergyman's presence acted as a check, if check were needed, to the tendency to use strong expressions, and there is no doubt that it exercises a wholesome and beneficial influence in other ways. Perhaps it would be an exaggeration to say that a divine is morally the better for being a foxhunter, but it would be an even greater perversion to declare that he is any the worse, and for our part we have always found the clergyman who is ready to have a fling at the fences, and show his laymen friends the way across stiff country, to be a broader-minded, more genial, kindly, and sympathetic man in every possible way than his brother of the cloth who lives more or less the life of an ascetic.

WHAT a splendid physical training it must be to be officially included in the suite of the present President of the United States. We read only the other day how the energetic Mr. Roosevelt utterly wore out the detectives employed to protect him in his journeyings, by taking long walks at a furious pace. Now comes a hint of the joys peculiar to his private secretary, Mr. Loeb. An exhibition of Japanese wrestling was given at the White House recently, and Mr. Roosevelt, who was greatly interested, "learned some special tricks in jiu-jitsu, which," according to the Press, "he will practise with his much-enduring private secretary!" Mr. Loeb's is a post for which, one would think, Hackenschmidt, Bob Fitzsimmons, or Sandow might hesitate to apply.

THE dates of the Bombay Dog Show are the 18th, 19th, and 20th February; it will be held in conjunction with the Horse Show which seems a pity: the show ought to be able to run "on its own" and if possible should be disassociated from the horses unless, of course, there are not enough dogs to fill a separate show, but surely there are?

THE date of closing for entries for the Tollygunge Horse Show has been extended to to-day.

ONE of the most famous men on the American turf at the moment is Miller, Mr. James R. Keene's chief jockey, who now holds the remarkable record of having ridden no fewer than 224 winners in his comparatively short career, a record which puts him at the head of the jockey fraternity in the States.

Some figures published recently give a good idea of Miller's value to his employer. Nearly half of Mr. Keene's huge winnings this season, or to be more precise, £49,100 was obtained by him, and as he gets a cheque at the rate of 5 per cent. on that total it will be seen that a comfortable bonus of £2,455 falls to his share. Miller's total income for the season amounts to an even £10,000.

MR. W. T. LORD, of the Argyll Motor Co., has just motored from Bombay to Calcutta and his example has been followed by Mr. Bell-Irving, the well-known Calcutta sportsman, who drives a Deasy Car and is probably having a good time all along. The journey is plain sailing most of the way; the roads are good, bungalows numerous, and most of the rivers are bridged or provided with ferries. The only difficulties are found between Benares and Calcutta—the little Teelajan river between Dhunwa and Shergotty and the Soane at Dehree—both are unbridged: but the railway and a slight detour through Gya overcomes the latter obstacle. An ordinary car could be carried over the Teelajan or if the river were low it could be driven across.

THE Columbia Skating Rink, under the management of our old friend Mr. Kealman, who did such yeoman service in the Minto Fête last year, has been open for some time, and is now in full swing. The morning session is largely patronised, especially by beginners, but at the Club Session, from 5 to 7 P.M. a tyro in the gentle art of roller skating is scarcely to be seen. For so popular a form of amusement and exercise combined has it become, that all our residents and most of our visitors, have either already learnt or determined to do so; and during the couple of hours usually so hard to kill in the evening in Calcutta it is quite the thing to run in to the Rink and take a turn or two on the wooden rollers. The first Fancy Dress Carnival has already been held, and a handsome silver cup of the value of Rs. 100 will be presented to the most successful competitor in the coming races, which are advertised to shortly take place.

THE final tie in the Cawnpore Polo Tournament was played on Monday, the 9th December, between the Central India Horse and the 9th Hodson's Horse, the former winning by eleven goals to one.

MR. W. E. ADCOCK, Assistant Superintendent of Police, lately had a dust up with a panther in which we are sorry to see he came off second best. While shooting near Fatehpur Sikri he was charged by the brute and hit, but didn't stop him; he was bowled over and rather badly mauled in the thigh, and detention in hospital was the next item on the card. It is quite refreshing to record that his orderly—instead of doing the usual record sprint—pluckily came to the rescue and beat off the leopard with his lathi.

The date fixed for the beginning of the All India Hockey Tournament, at Allahabad, is the 27th January. Entries close on the 23rd instant; we are glad to hear there are several teams in already and that the prospects of a good competition seem assured. The cup is held by the 6th Jats and 37th Dogras who tied last year.

The programme for the annual Athletic Sports Meeting of "F" Company, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, on Christmas Day, embraces a dozen items and is practically on all fours with those of the last few years. Every item is closed to members of the Company and there are three handicaps—75, 100 and 220 yards. The Bradshaw Challenge Shield for the best aggregate on points is again offered; Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Co., do the catering; there will be the usual steamer service to the Botanic Gardens and Messrs. J. Chaplin and G. H. F. Eatwell, the keen and experienced Honorary Secretaries are mainly responsible for the arrangements which, in their capable hands, are sure to be of the best.

"A Traveller's Paradise" is the title of a neat little guide-book to Ceylon just written by Mr. H. W. Mills, Co-editor of the Times of Ceylon, and issued by the management of the well-known Galle Face Hotel. Its object is to bring Ceylon to the better knowledge of the ever-increasing travelling public, and we make no doubt the author's enthusiastic advocacy will achieve this laudable aim. Its attractions are set forth from the point of view of the sportsman, the archaeologist, the business man, the artist, the invalid and the mere tourist, it is well illustrated and the information it imparts is up to date, accurate and attractively set forth.

The Xmas annual of the Times of Ceylon is always a high class effort: the review copy of this year's publication, with its cover by no less an artist than Walter Crane, is excellent and of universal interest; we tender our hearty congratulation to Messrs. Capper and Sons, the enterprising proprietors of our Colombo contemporary.

We have now before us full details of the colossal gayal shot on the 2nd ultimo, at Hinguli, in the Chittagong district by Mr. A. St. A. Smith, of the Assam-Bengal Railway Company. It was a very old, solitary bull and was come up to, after eight and a half hours' tracking, in a large patch of sun grass nearly 8 feet high, over the top of which his dorsal ridge was plainly visible. Judging his mark nicely Mr. Smith loosed off both barrels simultaneously, firing through the grass about two feet below the animal's hump, and had his front teeth knocked out—but that is a detail. The gayal collapsed and was finished off with a shot in the shoulder. Then Mr. Smith realised that he had got probably the biggest specimen of Bos frontalis ever brought to bag. The head was good enough, but the height and bulk struck him immediately as extraordinary. His first attention, however, was turned to the damage done by his shot and a careful examination showed that the gayal's right shoulder had been smashed by one of the bullets, while the other had gone through his lungs, touched the heart, struck the other shoulder and broken up, several of the pieces being found in the liver and kidneys. On measurement the following results were obtained:—

Base of hoof to top of hump	...	8 feet	7 inches
Base of hoof to top of shoulder	...	7 ,,	1 ,,
Base of hoof to top of hind quarters		6 ,,	4 ,,
Tip to tip of horns, round sweep	...	6 ,,	2½ ,,
Girth of horns, at base	...		19½ ,,

These measurements were taken in the presence of eight influential people who have appended their signatures to the certificate which lies before us.

The largest gayal or gaur shot or recorded by such authorities as H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, Colonel Pollok, General Kinloch and Stuart Baker fall a good deal short of this mighty specimen in height. The record height at hump so far was 20 hands 3 inches or 6 feet 11 inches. Mr. Smith is to be congratulated on his good luck.

Messrs. Lyon and Lyon are also to be congratulated on the share they had in the bag, for the weapon used was one of their new "Expedition" ball and shot guns and the projectile was the "Lethal" spherical bullet introduced by them and which has had a very cordial reception at the hands of the many sportsmen who have tried it. Mr. Smith has reason to be pleased with his weapon, he writes enthusiastically of its merits and adds "by the way I shot five and a half couple of snipe with it the Sunday previous." A gun that will bring down a 5oz. snipe and lay low a gayal 8 feet 7 inches high may fairly claim to be considered an all round weapon!

We have received from their agents Messrs. Cutler Palmer and Co., a presentation Blotter and Diary for 1908 issued by Messrs. Andrew Usher and Co. One of the novel and interesting features of this publication is the sporting and athletic information and records incorporated therein.

A village on the Lehra Estate, near Bridgmanganj in the Gorakhpur District, was recently the scene of an exciting leopard hunt. About 9 o'clock in the morning a large leopard attacked and badly mauled three women and two men, and afterwards took refuge in a house in which were several women and children. A party consisting of Miss E. Howard and Miss Cook, Mr. Stares and Mr. Billinghurst were shooting near, and quickly learnt the story of the leopard. The party hurried over to the house occupied by the animal, it had several rooms around a small central courtyard, and, having seen the women and children safe behind a barricade in one of the rooms, they opened the thatched roof and saw the leopard crouching in a corner. Owing to the intense darkness in the room below both the shots fired at him missed, and bounding out the leopard tried to spring on to the sloping thatch roof, but slipped and fell back before the awkward position of the sportsmen allowed them to shoot. Escaping into another room, he was seen through another hole in the thatch to be running round, and evidently furiously angry. Suddenly he sprang on to a corubin, and tried to escape through the hole in the roof. Miss Elsie Howard, niece of Mr. J. J. Holdsworth, proprietor of the estates, most pluckily faced him and shot, wounding him in the back. Mr. Billinghurst cautiously entered the room into which the leopard had been seen to enter, but gleaming eyes and furious growling showed that the animal was not by any means dead. Luckily his wounds prevented him springing, but he made for the sportsmen and villagers who had followed him, and was among them before any could get away. A shot fired at less than a yard pierced the leopard's chest and killed him. The leopard is supposed to be a man-eate reported to have come from the North, where he had been committing ravages.

Harmston's Circus tent once more spreads its hospitable canvas to the Calcutta public and the maidan now looks completely equipped for the cold-weather divertissment we seek and find there. All the old familiar features present themselves and remind us that Colonel Bob Love and his merry men are on hand to give us of their best. The well-lighted, comfortably furnished interior, the Menagerie with its four-footed favourites still very much en evidence, the long and varied programmes, the star artistes with astonishing new turns, the old stagers with welcome additions to their repertoire and the general arrangements as complete as we have been taught to expect, satisfy us that Harmston's this year is bent on keeping up its reputation.

The management were rather handicapped at the start last Thursday, for the exigencies of the steamer service resulted in several important members of the company being no nearer than Colombo on the opening night; but they are now on hand, and, as the donkey observed at the lion's tea-party "ready to do their best." The rather moist, inclement weather did not have any appreciable effect on the attendance at the initial performance, for all parts of the "house" were packed and extra seating accommodation had to be provided. In a word the show was an unqualified success. The Harmston-Love family, whom we have seen grow in stature and wisdom since the days when pinafores and feeding bottles were intimately associated with their daily lives, were at their best and working like beavers the while: they show improvement in form all round. Those delightful tumblers and equilibrists, the Frantz Troupe, again fill the bill and the eye and add to their feats of last year some intricacies which we do not remember having seen before. The Collins Princess Quartette continue to charm in lively song and dance, and the educated animals all seem to have taken higher degrees than when we saw them last. In this connection we must make special mention of the burlesque monkey introduced by Mr. Gus Burns who has here an eloquent testimonial to his patience and skill as a trainer: this jolly little simian is at the top of his profession we should imagine and his turn is as popular as anything on the card; it is really instructive as well as clever and funny. The bounding Pattersons in the astonishing item styled the "Trampolin bar act" give us a daring and finished exhibition of the highest class of work on the horizontal bars coupled with some saltatory sensations that are as refreshing in their novelty as they are sterling in their merit. It is long since we saw anything as good as this in Calcutta.

On Saturday the programme was much stiffened by the inclusion of the Decar Brothers, Almiro and Leoni, who are a host in themselves. Their clever clowning and the unique pole act entitled the "Midshipman Aloft" were really excellent and the same remark applies to the merry sketch "Off to the Races." Also there is a donkey introduced by them which seems to be able to do almost anything short of actually speaking, a most accomplished quadruped and a big attraction on the bill. There will be the usual matinees this Saturday and next Wednesday and, of course, the week end change of programme.

The competition for the Penang Medal offered by the Calcutta Golf Club resulted in a close finish between the first three and a win for Mr. D. H. Brackenbridge whose handicap was 10 and net score 81. One of the scratch players, Mr. T. Drimmie, ran him exceedingly close with 82. Scores among our Golf notes.

Says a fishing contributor to a London sporting paper: "Ladies who find embroidery, poker-work, water-colour painting, and the like, hobbies which are not only pleasing occupations for leisure hours, but on occasion profitable amusement too, might do worse than turn their attention to artificial fly-making. They will find it a most engaging pastime, admirably suitable for deft feminine fingers; and a good fly-maker can add considerably to her pin-money by means of her amusement. Some of the finest artificial flies and similar lures are made by women, and the process is not so difficult but that the dexterous amateur might derive both pleasure and profit from it. In America, several women gain quite respectable sums by fly-making. It is easy to get their angling friends to give them orders; and when once their skill becomes known to a few, it is not long before their fame spreads and their profits increase. Indeed, ladies in straitened circumstances have been known to live almost entirely on the proceeds of their art; while their more fortunate sisters can often make quite nice little sums to spend on trifles. At the least, they can add to the undying esteem of their sporting men-folk."

The Corrick Family of entertainers have been amusing Calcutta audiences since Saturday night with an olio of music, song, dance, and biography novel good and artistic. It is many years since India was visited by a really talented "family" of public performers—indeed in this direction there has been nothing worth noting since the Kennedys were with us with their "Twa hours at Hame." They were distinctly high class and so are the Corricks, but the latter have a further claim on our support in that they are undoubtedly versatile. When they interpret really good music combined as an orchestra they provide us with something rather above the Calcutta average; their rendering of part songs is more than usually pleasing; they dance well and are quite convincing as bell ringers and instrumental soloists. Added to this they bring with them a selection of cinematograph pictures which in our opinion for variety of subject, skill in manipulation, artistic merit and general interest are unquestionably better than anything we have yet had set before us. They opened to a crowded house at the Calcutta Concert Hall and received a deservedly hearty welcome, and as their entertainment is of the class that undoubtedly appeals to the Anglo-Indian public we trust they will play to good business throughout their short stay.

"ADVANCE AUSTRALIA!" Certainly, with regard to the excellent quality of the edible goods supplied by that most enterprising of firms, Messrs. Swallow and Ariel. We have had the pleasure of personally sampling their "Cherry Cake," "Fairy Short Cakes," and Milk Chocolate Cream Crackers" to say nothing of their rich Australian honey, which bids fair to rival that produced by the bees of Attica from the flowers grown on Mount Hymettus. "Christmas Family Cake" and "Ye Olde Englishe Plum Pudding" are also specialities of Messrs. Swallow and Ariel, and at this season of the year must be alike acceptable to young and old; though it is still too early to partake of these comestibles, we feel no hesitation in saying that do they keep up to the excellent standard of "Cherry Cake" and other delicacies specially manufactured and imported for consumption in India, there can be no fault to be found with either. Intending purchasers would do well to place their orders early with Messrs Swallow and Ariel, whose agents in this city are Messrs. Knowles and Co., 1, Hare Street.

"A. D. L." writing on physical culture in a home paper has a few words to say on the perils of athletic training. He writes:—"The death of Lewis McLeod, that brilliant young Rugby football three-quarter, from appendicitis, draws attention to the prevalence of this complaint among very active athletes. We have not had an appendicitis scare for some time now; it is no longer the same fashionable complaint with medical men as it was, but the fact remains that, from time to time, many prominent athletes have to undergo operations for this trouble. Where the danger lies, and it may have been the case in McLeod's case, is that the average athlete is inclined to ignore personal ailments. He feels so physically fit otherwise that he refuses to believe anything can be the matter with him internally. This delightful feeling of fitness does not allow some unknown ailments to produce the same feelings of unsoundness, such as in the case of an inactive man, who very quickly realises that he is ill or hurt.

It will be recollected that when the South African footballers were touring in England last season, Krige had suddenly to cease from taking any exercise and to be operated upon for appendicitis. The surgeon informed him at the time that he ought to have been attended to several years before and that it would be fatal to continue playing under the circumstances. It stands to reason that the many pranks athletes have to play with their bodies are bound to affect some of them, and I think no man should ever take the risk if the medical man—provided he be not an "old woman"—orders otherwise.

I was talking last week at Richmond to E. H. D. Sewell, and he told me that he felt certain there were hundreds of athletes with weak and strained hearts, but yet were in total ignorance of the fact. Being himself a thoroughly active man and a versatile exponent of several games, he should know what he is talking about. It was not long ago that his doctor put him altogether on the "retired" list from sport.

A well-known old Welsh Rugby football international, and also a leading London medical man, informed me earlier in the season that, to his mind, footballers laid in a stock of future ills by going "mad" at the start of the season. Many of them had, he said, spent slack summers; yet, in the opening trial and match games, they flew about the field and expended vigour just as though they had been perfectly fit and playing footer for months. They may not have felt any bad effects at the time, but the future was quite a different matter.

He pointed out that the heart was caused to do about ten times as much work in the same period as it had been asked to do for months, which was obviously wrong on the face of it. Much better for athletes to go "dead slow" at first rather than to overdo anything. Of course, if they were perfectly sound up at the time—how many are?—it was quite a different matter.

It has always been an open question whether the distance of the annual inter-University boat-race between Oxford and Cambridge is not too long for youngsters. The course between Putney and Mortlake is 4¼ miles, and many prominent rowing men think that just as good an object would be attained if it were made shorter. W. G. East, the King's Bargemaster, and who looks after the Cambridge crew when they are at Putney, once told me that he thought the strain was a bit too much for them, and he pointed out that only a very small percentage of rowing "blues" did much subsequently in the rowing world.

That continued mental and physical strain of training for rowing events, and the sustained ordeal of the race itself, are apt to play havoc with many constitutions—the great dangers to fear being from the heart or from consumption. I have no wish to frighten athletes, nor to make them give up games, but I would ask them to be moderate in some things and to ascertain if they are constitutionally fit for what they are doing.

MESSRS. FRANCIS, HARRISON, HATHAWAY AND CO. have for so many years held a foremost place in Calcutta, Simla, and Darjeeling, for millinery, dressmaking, furnishing, men's wear, fancy goods, etc., etc., that it is with real delight the purchasing public will hail their new and comprehensive catalogue descriptive of every novelty with which their extensive premises are now stocked. For the purchase of Xmas and New Year gifts at prices to suit every purse, and toys which seem to have been specially manufactured for the young of all ages, we can confidently recommend every intending purchaser to pay Messrs. Harrison and Hathaway a visit, while for purchases of a more serious character from wearing apparel downwards, there is seemingly inexhaustible store from which to make a selection. For up-country residents the well got up descriptive catalogue of one hundred and twenty pages will prove an inestimable boon. Nobody realizes better than those who have tried it, the seemingly insurmountable difficulties of shopping by post; these will be entirely obviated if, armed with, Messrs. Harrison and Hathaway's current price list for December and January 1907-1908, we are guided in our choice by the accurate and careful descriptions, well backed by suitable illustrations, (certainly one of the best of its kind) now lying before us.

MESSRS. CHARLES LANCASTER have rather stolen a march on the other gun makers, by being the first to get out a rifle for the new ·280 Ross-Eley Cartridge. It is gratifying to see that the value of improved ballistics for sporting weapons, has been so promptly recognized. The ·280 will prove accurate enough to satisfy the most exacting, preliminary trials having proved that it will shoot into a two inch circle at 100 yards. As the recoil of the rifle is very light, full advantage of this accuracy can be taken, by fitting peep, or telescopic sights. One could not do full justice to its capabilities with ordinary open sights. The trajectories of the 140 and 160 grain bullets are sufficiently close together to allow of the same elevation being given for both and one sight serves for all ranges up to 300 yards.

Messrs. Lancaster's example, will no doubt be quickly followed by other manufacturers, and sportsmen will soon be able to obtain rifles for the new ammunition from their own gunmakers.

High striking velocity causes enormous disruptive effect on the soft internal organs of the animal struck; it is therefore quite probable that the ·280 will prove very effective even on tigers, when broad side shots can be taken.

MR. OLSEN, a cinematograph maker, has lost money and gotten himself in some trouble through trying to fake a lion hunt. As lions do not roam through Hamlet's country, two live ones were purchased from Hagenbeck, at Hamburg, and arrangements for the big game skirmish made on the little barren island of Roskilde, near Copenhagen.

A mid-African background was made with palms and artificial sandhills, and into this tropical scene were introduced horses and sheep, with sportsmen clad in lion hunting garb.

The plot of the jungle drama was to let the famished lions kill and eat the animals, after which the bold hunters would kill them with their trusty guns. However some humane people protested to the Minister for Justice, and the police suddenly appeared on the island, stopping the show.

Three days later, however, the man of exhaustless enterprise concluded to turn outlaw, and pull off the hunt regardless. At an early hour he placed his cinematograph operators in position, some in iron cages, some on an elevated stage, and some in boats. Then the manacled jungle monsters were loosened at a given signal. One of the beasts at first refused to stir. When, however, its companion dashed upon and killed a horse, the other awoke, and a furious struggle followed for the carcase. The lions went for each other like the legendary cats of Kilkenny. When sufficient films had been secured of this contest men dressed as hunters fired and killed both beasts, after which all concerned made a very hasty retreat. They have buried the two lions and arrested the photographer, whose license has been withdrawn, while the Minister of Justice has prohibited the purchase of the fight films.

Now that the arc-oval billiard-table has been to an extent accepted, all sorts of eccentric shapes and forms are being devised. I am afraid, writes "Gareth" in the Referee, that disappointment awaits the devisers. In the long run I fancy that the old familiar table will retain its popularity. The arc-oval is likely to have a certain vogue, for it does lend itself to interesting play. I have found several men who, like myself, went with a disposition not to approve of the innovation, but who rather took to it. There was the other design, on which I commented a few weeks ago—the square table with pockets on the top and bottom cushions two or three inches from the corners. That, so far as had been ascertained, effectually prevented the pernicious perpetual cannon, but I do not think it has "come to stay," as the phrase runs; and the latest invention—tables with sides and ends partly straight and partly curved, are mere eccentricities, never in the least likely, to be adopted. Men will not take the trouble to practise three or four different kinds of billiards, and a new table really necessitates a new game. As to the refusal of the Billiard Association to grant Reece a certificate for his score of half a million—a refusal which has caused so much controversy of late—there is much to be said on both sides, but without going into details, it seems to me that there is most to be said on the side of the Association.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The Bombay racing season opened with the first of the Extra Meetings on Saturday and, though, of course, numbers of our biggest punters and layers are over your side, there was a very fair attendance and interesting sport. As to the weather, the first part of the evening was blazing hot and the going naturally hard, but it was evident that as yet the majority are on the big side. A dozen Books stood up in the first enclosure, including those who have returned from Rangoon, and betting was rife on the Trials and Cup, Mr. D. D., our new Sheriff, coming in for hearty congratulations on another success for Stirabout as soon as the news went round on the course.

The day opened with a Selling Plate over five furlongs for which six started and Royal was at once installed a steady favourite from Deenar though the owners were not present owing to the marriage of Mr. M G.'s son. We have in the past been accustomed to see Royal go over longer distances when it has always been his mission to make the pace and now he fairly walked in after leading all the way and gave Killorn a win at his first attempt at Mahaluxmi. After sweating profusely in the paddock, Comesoon broke up after half a mile and gave way to Deenar and Rummah, the finish being a procession.

A few who remembered Ramah's performance at a small Kirkee Meeting expected him to not only win, but win as an outsider in the poor class represented in the Novice Plate. His gallops, however, appear to have been public property, as there was a tremendous push when he opened at evens. Koomash was next in demand and the rush on these for win and place, respectively, paved the way for a hollow victory for punters. The race was over from the first when Ramah led out and was never headed, winning very easily with Koomash comfortably holding second place throughout, Muddaries, Zir and Ragub fighting out third place.

An open race was the Arab Plate with Herricul, who showed such good form in the last few Poona Extras, favourite from Peculiar till a run on Ashroff brought him to level money. This, however, was destined to be the second successive win for Williams as he immediately took Peculiar to the front, with Herricul and Ashroff handy, and held them all the way, the favourite filling second place on passing the distance with a long gap after Herricul.

The one and only big horse race, (the other falling through) followed, and Vocalist was immediately installed favourite, though a late run brought Lady Lomond to two's in a field of five. Lady Lomond and Sir Galahad led out abreast two lengths in front of the favourite, who closed at the bend but in coming round lost at least a length. Lady Lomond was going well within herself till Williams made his run on Vocalist, but Killorn shaking the mare up won a good race by a length and thus far these two jockeys had, as usual, swept the pool.

Byramji's all-conquering stable was at last represented in the Arab Pony Trial Plate when Rose was made a 2 to 1 on chance in a field of eleven over six furlongs with Grey Falcon at 7 to 2. Grey Falcon and then Darby took up the running, but at the bend Rose found room on the rails and came through. He, however, is by no means wound up and was in difficulties, so that Grey Falcon, nicely nursed, came through and won very comfortably with Meerjan beating Darby in front of the favourite.

Again in the last race did Byramji seem to have the race in hand with either Sherali or Mudlool and soon shewed his hand, backing the former as though all was over. There was a steady run on the latter for a place and when Williams got caught in the tapes and Sherali ran the course on his own, many rushed to the ring to hedge, but Sherali remained favourite though extending to evens. Once away, Sherali streaked away to the front from Jalmood with Mudlool left fairly badly. Nearing the bend he had come up to his field who were bunched behind Sherali, who was now followed by Engine and from there held him and the rest very safe, though the late run Mudlool put in suggests the probability that he would have made Williams bustle had he got away with the rest. This was Williams' third win of the day with two for Killorn, and on the whole honours were fairly even between public and Books. Royal in the first race was bought in for Rs. 1,600.

Four races were sailed at the Royal Bombay Yacht Club on Saturday in a very light wind; the starts being in almost dead calm. In the first four boats got away to a nice start with Sapphire in front till Eileen glided past, but the breeze strengthening favoured Melody. She sailed beautifully and eventually beat Sapphire by over five minutes with Isea just a minute off.

Six went for B. Class but Erin gave up, leaving five with Trixie in front, but she was two and a half minutes behind Peewit, who sailed better as the breeze freshened. No less than nine started for C Class and Mr. Wordsworth's Curlew made her first appearance a successful one. Lapwing got well away and nicely handled, held a good lead at Sunk Rock where Tomtit was thrown out by the sudden wind which sprung up. Curlew was near the leader here and up to her at South Karanja buoy, and at the finish had something in hand beating Valkyrie by over two minutes with Lapwing just in front of Jean.

Lastly, there was the Ship's Boat race with its ten starters who went away very scraggily. The Hyacinth's two pinnaces sailed right away from the rest till the breeze came to the assistance of the others, and the Proserpine's waler drawing up won a good race by six minutes from Pinnace No. 2.

The entries for the Amateur Golf Championship of India now number some 35, and will probably reach 40, as the entry list for visitors does not close till to-morrow. All the local cracks will be playing, and a number of prominent golfers from other parts of India, including Lieutenant C. Campbell, of the West Riding Regiment, who won the year before last, and Mr. Gilbert C. Whigham from Rangoon, a member of the well-known Prestwick Golfing family. Favouritism is probably divided between these two players, but if chief honours fall to a local competitor, it is thought that Mr. A. Mann, who won the qualifying competition last year, has the the best chance, while Major Wolfe-Murray is sure to be well up. But the event is a very open one, and it is impossible to predict the winner.

There is not so much betting on the Trials and Viceroy's Cup as there was last week; the favourites, Stirabout and Fitzgrafton, seem to monopolise the market. Messrs. Champion and Company's prices yesterday morning were as under:—

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 29th November 1907.

Winter has come at last; but, so far as London is concerned, in the half-hearted fashion set by the late so called "summer." One morning frost on the roofs, another is foggy, a third dismally, drearily wet; Sunday last will be memorable as a really fine day: we saw the sun for hours together. In Scotland, the north of England and Midlands and Wales there was a heavy snow fall at the beginning of the week, and hard frost. The snow was deep enough to stop the Quorn on Monday: they met, but hounds had to be sent home.

The King received the Swazi chiefs on Monday morning at Buckingham Palace. A crowd had collected in the expectation, as I gathered, of seeing wild black men in fibre kilts and feathers, but the hope was disappointed. The black envoys were dressed in black coats and trousers and wore tall hats with a creditable air of being entirely at home in them. The interview with His Majesty was formal and lasted only quarter of an hour: after kindly speeches they were dismissed with the intimation that the petition which enshrines the purpose of their visit would be received through the Colonial Secretary. The chiefs are now to be regaled with reviews and inspection of battleships, etc., etc.

The Guards Inquiry case came to an end so far as its public sittings are concerned on Friday afternoon, having gone so far as it did some surprise is expressed at the decision to finish the business in camera: whether the court will only consider the evidence given or will take more nobody seems to know. Captain Stucley who urged Mr. Woods to seek service in Uganda, or "go into the City" or at any rate to clear out of the regiment, was the last important witness. He had no recollection of saying that he would not be seen lying dead in the same street as Mr. Woods, and the whole object of his conversation was to prevent the ragging scandal he felt sure must follow if that officer remained on in the regiment. I suppose a particularly nice and quiet lot (to cite Sir C. Fergusson's evidence) are quite capable of ragging a man if he is sufficiently unpopular, but we had not gathered from previous witnesses that this danger to Mr. Woods existed. We shall know the result of the Inquiry before long no doubt: but whatever the result of it I fail entirely to understand who is a penny the better of this laundry work.

The patronage by visiting royalty of Rumpelmeyer's as an Afternoon Tea resort has given the St. James's Street place a fresh "lift." It was quite the thing to go to tea at "Rumpels" last season chiefly because the lowest charge is half a crown I suppose. It is the new reading. "To him that asks much," etc.

The "Missing Bridegroom" or "Kidnapped Banker" case which made such a stir in 1892 has been brought into notice again, an application having been made in the Probate Court to swear the death of the chief actor Mr. W. R. Lidderdale. You would remember the business: he was manager of a bank at Ilminster: on 8th January he left Ilminster having drawn a large sum of money, intending, as was supposed, to carry out his promise to marry Miss Chapman at Newbury in the following week. He arrived in London, wrote her that he had seen Miss Vining and had "got rid of her:" and disappeared. No more was heard of him till an intimation appeared in the papers a month later to effect that Mr. Lidderdale had succumbed to the effects of an accident on Miss Vining's yacht on the very day he disappeared—8th January. About the same time Miss Chapman received anonymously £500 in notes (the very notes Mr. Lidderdale had had in his possession), and among other matters a card bearing the words "was true to you" in his hand-writing. Nothing has ever been heard since of Miss Vining or Mr. Lidderdale: and the name of her yacht Foresight was unknown at Lloyds. Under the circumstances Mr. Justice Bargrave Deane refused leave to swear the death and the mystery remains where it stood fifteen years ago.

Mr. Bernard Shaw's modernised Caesar and Cleopatra was produced at the Savoy on Monday. Mr. Shaw's idea is that Shakespeare in his day sounded to his audience just as Sir W. S. Gilbert sounds to us. Now you will not think me guilty of assuming equality with Shaw, Shakespeare or Sir W. S. Gilbert if I try and modernise a morsel of Shakespeare to show how the thing is done at the Savoy. Lets take the Balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet:

Rom. He jests at scars that never climbed an orchard wall (repairs with pin rent in unmentionables Juliet app. at window). There you are darling! Brighter than the sun: the moon is a fool to you, lovely as it is (rhapsody for five minutes vide any subaltern with any girl in any kala jugga).

Jul. H'sh! I'm in an awful fright lest Aunt Jane should catch me.

Rom. O speak again My angel! (more rhapsody as above).

Jul. O Romeo! you really mustn't talk like that.

Rom. (aside) shall I pop the question now, wait a bit!

Jul. I must say I'd rather you hadn't such an odd name—Romeo—Its rather a silly one don't you think?

Rom. (sulkily) I didn't christen myself (brightening up) I can change if you want me to.

Jul. Oh don't do it to please me.

Rom. If you don't like it I hate it. (rhapsody).

Jul. You do say the most extraordinary things! But I say; you never told me how you got in. The orchard walls are high and hard to climb.

Rom. (sucking his fingers) By Jove they are! Cut myself to bits on that beastly glass, and deuced lucky it's so dark you can't see the state my clothes are in (endeavours to conceal rent in pants).

Jul. But hadn't you better go away! I'm so afraid my big brother might come and the gardener and the groom—and—and—my cousin John.

Rom. pointedly (ignoring reference to cousin John). No fear. It's so dark. (rhapsody).

Jul. Really Romeo you make me blush. But you really do like me—a little: now don't you?

Rom. I take my oath; upon my word of honour—I swear.—

Jul. H'sh, h'sh! Really I'd rather you wept away. I don't like this a bit. I'm so afraid we shall be caught.

Rom. I adore you!

Jul. (in agonised whisper) Fly! hide! run! I hear Aunt Jane (exit rapidly and shuts window).

Juliet only shuts the window in defference to the limitations of your space. Candidly this is not exaggerated. Caesar and Cleopatra are quite as colloquial, not to say slangy, in their speech as Romeo and Juliet above. Mr. Forbes Robertson was Caesar but Shavian Shakespeare is not quite his forte: can you see that dignified, forceful actor playing the lead in burlesque? Miss Gertrude Elliott was Cleopatra—a most modern Cleopatra, with not a little of the cat in her. Mr. Ian Robertson as the "respectable" Brittanus was very funny: the part of the slave lends itself to burlesque. The play is certainly amusing: but to enjoy it you must go in the right mood.

I have not seen "Waste" myself, but a friend who has patronised the Stage Society's performance of Mr. Granville Barker's work speaks of it with regretful enthusiasm as a clever and powerful play marred by indulgence in topics not usually discussed. The plot hinges upon the seduction of a married woman by a rising politician, her agony at the discovery that she is with child and her fulfilled resolution to procure miscarriage; which leads to the suicide of the politician at the moment his ambition is realised and he has been asked to join the Cabinet. There is no reticence in the play, no evasion: spades are called spades if not by the navvy's name. I fear me that the principal purpose "Waste" serves is to prove the value of the office of the Censor of Plays.

Professional story telling takes us back to the Dark Ages, but a clever story teller can count upon a good audience even in these days when the rising generation is often blase at ten years old. Miss Marie Shedlock has a reputation behind her and she had a full house at Chelsea Town Hall on Saturday afternoon when she told the old old stories from Hans Andersen and Grimm. She tells them remarkably well: with an air of thoroughly enjoying them herself and full appreciation of their humour: moreover she is blessed with a delightful voice so clear and musical that it is a pleasure to listen to it.

The Edinburgh forgery case has attracted some attention in London by reason of the fact that the convict—who has been given ten years—is a step-son of Mr. John Morley who married Mrs. Ayling, mother of the misguided man. Reuter has no doubt given you particulars of the case which involved five charges referring to a total sum of £13,350. Mr. Morley's name being among those forged. Ayling pleaded guilty and his counsel could only ask for mercy on the ground that he had suffered and that punishment would fall most heavily on his client's wife and children: but as he had also to admit that Ayling could have reckoned on the assistance of those whose names he forged had he possessed the courage to confess his difficulties and ask for help, one can hardly feel surprised that the Lord Justice Clerk gave a heavy sentence.

The Coroner's Jury acquitted Sir Henry Rawlinson of all blame in connection with the unfortunate death of Sir Henry Colville. Sir H. Rawlinson could prove that his motor was going very slowly at the cross roads: he enjoyed the reputation of a very careful driver, and independent evidence was available to prove his reputation. On the other hand Sir H. Colville was known to be somewhat reckless on his motor cycle, had boasted that day he could go 30 miles an hour and independent evidence showed that he was travelling at dangerous speed on the wrong side of the road when the accident occurred. The cross roads at Heather corner are flanked by high banks and hedges and it was manifestly tempting Providence to pass at any but a low speed.

The negociation for purchase of Crosby Hall as a monument have come to nothing after all. On 31st October the directors of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, wrote to the Committee requiring a guarantee by 14th November from the Corporation or other responsible body that the preservation scheme would be carried through and that the substituted site should be transferred to the Bank without any payment in respect of the difference in value between the substituted site and the Crosby Hall site. The Committee tried to meet the Bank's desires but failed: the Bank people would not discuss the question of values, and the Committee did not feel justified in giving a site 15 per cent. larger and much less hampered by "ancient lights" restrictions and others, for the price set upon the Crosby Hall site. The correspondence published is temperate enough, but relations between Bank directors and Committee grew strained before negociations were broken off. Now, it is to be feared, there is nothing left to do but return the £50,000 to the subscribers and raise a tombstone to the old Hall. A Banker undergoing the last penalty of the law would be device suitable for this memorial as exemplifying public feeling on the subject; but I cannot myself see why obloquy is cast upon the Bank. It is not a philanthropic institution and were I a shareholder I should strongly object to sacrifice dividends to a cause about which the public has shown itself rather lukewarm.

A very unusual procession monopolised the Strand on Friday afternoon. The day before Mr. Paul Taylor had fined a number of medical students for attempting to damage the idiotic "Brown Dog" memorial at Battersea—You know the thing with its silly distribe against a hospital where vivisection is carried on. The incipient doctors of the Metropolis were exceedingly irate at the incident and on Friday several hunred, headed by an effigy of Mr. Paul Taylor marched to King's College in whose quadrangle they tried to burn the effegy. The police attempted to break up the procession in Trafalgar Square, but were overpowered and the students escorted by an enormous mob of the unwashed flooded the strand stopping traffic and creating much disorder. Mr. Paul Taylor's duplicate refusing to burn, more obstruction was caused by the necessity of casting him with ceremonious obliquity into the river.

The suffragists, dissatisfied with the results of interrupting political meetings, which they did on several occasions last week with considerable success, have hit upon a new method of protest. On Saturday a member of the Women's Freedom League attended nearly every police court in London, and when a female prisoner appeared in the dock the apostle of female freedom got up and protested against the trial of a woman by "man-made-laws." Beautiful impartiality was shown by these earnest women: no matter what the prisoner was charged with: drunk and disorderly, wounding another woman, drunk and using obscene language, fighting, or anything else: up rose the appointed apostle to protest and be politely but firmly escorted, or pushed, out. This new campaign would be a degree less foolish if the suffragists had exercised a little discrimination in extending their protection to prisoners; but they seem bent on discrediting themselves as far as ingenuity can achieve it.

The Druce case was resumed on Wednesday when Mrs. Hamilton aged 77, gave evidence which corroborates in the main that given by Mr. Caldwell. She said that she and her father were intimately acquainted with the late Duke plus Druce: that in 1864 the D+D told her that Druce was going to die and proposed to get a corpse from some workhouse or hospital for the funeral, and that Mrs. Hamilton's father opposed this urging the use of bricks, mortar or lead to fill the coffin. The witness informed the court that the D+D "had been a wicked old man" and she remembered one very pretty woman who lived under his protection: she also spoke to his collection of wigs and beards. Very fluent was Mrs. Hamilton's evidence but she was rather confused about dates, which is not unnatural.

POLO IN INDIA.

VOLUMES on the sport obtainable in our Indian Empire, and how best to become a proficient hunter of the denizens of the forests that overspread this peninsula are compiled in very considerable numbers. For many years we have been lamenting the absence of a treatise on the king amongst pastimes, namely, polo. We have felt that what might very well be termed the national game of our Eastern possessions has been singularly neglected from a publisher's point of view. In 1895 an instructive and amusing book on polo saw light. We refer to "Station Polo" by Lucifer. This production was never intended to be a standard work in any sense of the word, though the pictures of station polo-players were cleverly drawn and are marvellously true-to life even when judged by more modern standards. A year or so later—"Hints to polo players in India" appeared, and for want of a better this booklet has been in demand ever since by students of the game. The author himself admits that its contents never could fulfil the requirements he wanted, having been put together more in the form of lectures than as a complete work. A cursory glance through Polo in India assured us that at length a volume had been published which would, without any possibility of doubt, be considered the standard work on this game as played in India. A very careful study of its 230 odd pages has satisfied us that it will, moreover, take its place as one of the leading treatises on this pastime throughout the entire polo-playing world. The 20 years experience of any exponent should be worth a study. To the aspirant after fame in this branch of sport the records and advice tendered by such a well-known expert as the author should be read and re-read till the impressions gained are so indelibly focussed in the mind's eye as to be correctly applied in practice on the instant: for swiftness of decision and celerity of action at polo is the criterion of a first-rate player. An opportunity thrown away may mean a tournament lost.

The book is divided into three parts, supplemented by eight appendices. The first portion is to a great extent devoted to the instruction of the beginner, and the second division treats more of tournament polo. We are at one with the author in his advice to youngsters who can afford it to start the game at the very earliest opportunity. There are, alas, many griffins arriving year by year whose income is such as to totally debar any idea of enjoying this pastime. To these £100 amounts to a small fortune, and though the temptation to launch out into this fascinating sport may be great, it should be made a golden rule that polo should never be made an excuse for running a youngster into debt.

The author considers that polo-pits are of little utility except as an excellent way of exercising the arm. Now like most things on this earth there are polo-pits and polo-pits, and it has been our invariable custom when a beginner has come to us for instruction to firstly arrange a meeting at the polo-pit. The usual type to be seen is not worth entering. Surrounded by wire netting with a bumpy mud surface, the ball either trickles to the striker or more often lodges in some hollow half-way up the slope. To sit for an hour on a log of wood in such a pen with a blazing sun on one's back is hardly the height of bliss. Firstly, the polo-pit should be covered in; secondly, in front and in rear, and to an angle of 45 degrees on both sides, the walls should be constructed of solid male bamboos on end, and inserted at right angles to the slope not perpendicular. By being male bamboos, the force with which the ball is driven back is astonishing, and the fact of having these bamboos placed at right angles to the slope ensures the ball being kept low, instead of flying skywards as is usually the case; the floor, too, must be made of some hard smooth substance. In such a pit real hard practice is obtainable for the balls fairly race round and moreover come down at every imaginable angle. It has been our experience that faults in hitting the ball can very readily be rectified with a comparative small amount of tuition in a pit of the above description.

The chapters devoted to preparation of polo ponies, stable management, grooming and feeding teem with sound advice. The owner who follows out the numerous suggestions and maxims advocated will find himself the richer pecuniarily, and also in the amount of pleasure he derives by having a string in perfect fettle. We cannot pass without comment the short paragraph appertaining to the misuse of the curry-comb. How frequent a sight it is in a badly regulated stable to see a pony being driven nigh frantic purely from being scraped over with this instrument of torture. Any and every bare spot or other cutaneous excrescence is berated and becomes a seat of infection for disease germs. As the author states—"The object of a curry-comb is to clean the body-brush, not to clean the horse."

In the chapters that follow, the notes on sticks, saddlery and gear in general are most comprehensive. A perusal should go far to lessen the difficulties frequently experienced in this direction.

We now pass on to the question of the schooling of ponies. The author states that he considers a school whose sides are 16 inches high is all that is necessary provided the rounded ends are raised to 5 feet. Our views on this subject differ. We have always worked on the principle of constructing the walls of such a height as to prevent a pony from being able to see over the top. Place a school boy during his lessons near an open window looking on to a street, even the most lenient of task-masters would be constantly checking him for inattention. When it is remembered that the will of the rider has to be conveyed to the brain of the horse through the sensitive membrane of the mouth, by the feeling of the reins on the neck, and, by the pressure of the legs, anything that tends to distract the attention of the equine pupil should be rigidly avoided. It has also been our invariable custom when first starting to teach a raw pony in the way he should go to work the remount in company, care being taken that this company contains a large proportion of fully schooled animals. A pony will usually follow another of its kind instinctively, thus the application of the aids is rendered doubly easy, and the beast soon learns and recognises the meaning of the various mute signals. The diagram facing page 61 gives the main evolutions which should be employed; we notice, however, that one movement, which in our opinion is a most useful one, has been omitted—we refer to what is termed in the Cavalry drill book as The Ladies' Chain. This exercise engenders a sense of staunchness combined with handiness in changing legs both of which are essential elements on the polo field. As the correct schooling of a pony forms one of the most important stages in its education we would recommend all those who train their own mounts, or who essay to do so, to study this chapter with the utmost diligence. The difference between a good polo pony and a first-class one is more often than otherwise the outcome of its original schooling.

Passing on to Part II., the chapter devoted to horsemanship is most instructive and the outline on horse-breaking is full of useful information. The main faults that are common to horse flesh are tabulated in Chapter XII and the methods advocated for the correction of these vices should recommend themselves to the reader who is the owner of some obdurate beast. In dealing with "rearing," the author remarks that if this feat be performed in order to avoid going a road he does not approve of, he can only be cured by judicious punishment. It is not an infrequent sight just before a chukker, to see a pony refusing to go on to the field. It has been our experience that this vice is due to two causes—firstly, obstinacy; secondly, fear. Now judicious punishment for obstinacy is the right and only remedy, but if we take the case of a highly strung, excitable C.-B. mare, a lathering may succeed in driving her on to the field, but in such a state of terror and nerves as to render her totally useless for that period at any rate. The only method that we have found of any lasting benefit is the exercise of patience combined if necessary with the application of a rope crupper.

If an animal of this type refuses to face the music when mounted, it will frequently allow itself to be led on to the ground without any show of resistance. If such be the case it is far better to humour her mood, mount her peaceably in mid-field and enter the chukker comparatively collected, instead of on the back of a terror-stricken plunging madcap.

The rope crupper is a most useful invention and is adjusted in a moment. Get a length of strong rope taping about 30 feet. In the centre of this tie a loop (not a running knot) and slip it under the pony's tail, cross the stirrups over the saddle, and pass one end of the rope through each iron, continuing up along either cheek, inside the head stall. The animal if it backs or rears will throw its entire weight on to the loop under its dock: the intense pain caused will force the animal to come forward at once, and after a very short fight it will acknowledge itself defeated.

The question of hitting is one of the most important in connection with polo-experience, experience is the best school, combined with practical illustration. To convey an adequate idea of this subject in 13 pages of printed matter is an impossibility. But the author has made the most of the space allotted. We notice that the use of the running martingale is advocated. This is a point on which expert opinions differ. We ourselves have always employed the standing form attached to the noseband, with the buckle well up towards its top end. The fact that the running pattern is used with success speaks for itself. The writer draws attention to the great importance of satisfying one's self that the curb chain has not been tightened up before a tournament, so as to make the mount surpass itself. Not long ago we underwent the same unfortunate experiences as mentioned by the author. Since then we have adopted the following simple plan. Tie a piece of coloured wool on the correct links of each curb chain, employing a different colour for each pony. A glance will show whether the chain is in its customary place or otherwise, spare chains should be treated in the same manner, and such should be provided for each pony.

However brilliant a horseman a player may be, however strong a hitter, unless he possesses a thorough knowledge of the game, and acts up to that knowledge, he can never get beyond mediocrity. He will find himself passed over by what he considers men of inferior powers, and he will wonder at the reason. Combined play has taken the place of individual dash. In our opinion the backbone of this exhaustive volume is contained in Chapters XV. to XIX. wherein are set forth in words of wisdom the duties of all four players, each in his own particular sphere. The ambitious wielder of the stick should make a careful study of the lessons taught in these pages. The captain of a team, if he wishes to prove himself worthy to be a leader, should know every point by heart himself, to enable him the better to teach his supporters. The 20 diagrams illustrate the fundamental bases of combined play, and the situations depicted therein should be practised on the field time after time till a state of perfection is reached. In diagram XVIII we have always placed our half-back on the wing and No. 2 in the centre, on the system that if the ball is sent direct to No. 2, No. 3 will cut in to his correct place as soon as possible and if sent to No. 3 first, the latter will pass it on to his No. 2. If the original positions are reversed as recommended in the diagram in question Nos. 2 and 3 would appear to fall into their wrong places. The difference, however, is immaterial as the principle is identical.

The plan recommended in plate XIX is one that should be constantly practised. Even in important tournaments the number of opportunities lost by failing to take advantage of penalty hits is quite out of all proportion to the otherwise high standard of play witnessed. The portion of the book devoted to notes on veterinary matters should prove of great benefit to all owners of pony flesh. Complicated cases must be handed over to a qualified man, but the horse master is not worthy of his name unless he has a certain amount of knowledge of the rudiments of veterinary science, and of standard cures for common ailments.

The chapters relating to famous players and ponies in India are full of interest and are enriched by the addition of many excellent photogravures.

We cannot but say that we think it a pity that the Rules of polo in India, etc., have been embodied as part of the volume. Regulations change year by year, at least they are liable to do so. Had space been allotted for them in a pocket inside the cover, each revised edition would be handy for reference, and the treatise would have always been as up-to-date as possible.

To the errata should be added "feet" for "yards" as dimensions of goals at the heading of example I and 50 yards for 60 yards in line 2 of page 255 Penalties.

Of this book we cannot speak too highly. To the old-stager, to the medium performer, and to the beginner alike it will prove indispensable. To the captain of a team it will serve as a ready help in instilling the principles and advantages of combined play into the brains of those elected as his apprentices. It ought to figure prominently on the table of every Mess Room, and should be included in the library of every Club House. We can recommend every polo player disinterestedly and with the certain knowledge of conferring upon him a distinct benefit to purchase this encyclopedical work on his favourite pastime at the earliest opportunity. We heartily congratulate Colonel de Lisle on his excellently written, profusely illustrated, and highly finished volume—Polo in India has come to stay.

ANGLING FOR BLACK BASS.

Mention has already been made by me of the wide diffusion of the small mouth black bass and of the gamey qualities it possesses, which, in the opinion of many anglers, places it at the head of our fresh water game fishes, some enthusiasts even declaring that, pound for pound, it has no equal so far as pluck and stubborn resistance to the rod and reel are concerned.

While I am not prepared to subscribe unqualifiedly to this statement, I do not pretend to dispute the point with black bass anglers that the fish is a strong, sturdy fighter, that it is often brilliant in its movements, and that it justly and properly occupies a very high place among the game fishes which make their home entirely in fresh water.

The black bass, whether indigenous to, or planted in any waters, is by reason of its courage and pugnacity quite able to hold its own against all other species of fish, even the muscalonge and pike being unable to conquer and extirpate it.

The methods by which the bass is taken are varied, each being adapted to special conditions of water and general environment.

Bait Casting for Bass.

The favourite method, that which is now most generally practiced by enthusiastic bass anglers, is by bait casting, which is followed in degrees of popularity by still-fishing with bait, trolling, and fly-fishing; the latter method, I am sorry to say, not being practiced to anything like the extent its great merits deserve.

The tackle employed in bass angling is very similar to that used in trout fishing, but averages somewhat heavier the line being one or two sizes larger than that employed trout, and the rod increasing in proportionate degree.

Much has been written in recent years of the fascinating sport of bait casting for black bass, but the subject seems to lose none of its interest, and the devotees of the sport appear to be always eager to avail themselves of such information as brother anglers may be able to lay before them.

In bait casting the short, somewhat stiff rod seems to be coming into general use, and adepts at the sport are laying aside their somewhat pliable bait rods and employing only the shorter and less flexible tool, which seems such a favourite among our western brethren of the angle.

In bait casting the methods most employed are similar to those used in casting for lake trout, which I have already described, but which I will again briefly mention for the benefit of those who have not read my former article.

The rod I have employed is a split bamboo about eight feet in length, and is considerably stiffer than the ordinary bait rod. My reel is always affixed to the upper side of the rod, and is, of course, a multiplier. The rod guides and agate funnel are sufficiently large to permit the line to pass out freely, and the momentum of the reel is checked, when my bait has reached the desired point, by the pressure of my thumb upon the line on the spool.

The cast is made by reeling the line in so that the bait is but a short distance beyond the tip of the rod. The rod is lifted, vertically, then backward to an angle of about thirty-five degrees, and the forward stroke is then given.

The movement of the bait is regulated by the strength of the stroke, precisely as we used in our boyhood days to impale an apple on the end of a stick and cast it forward by an energetic stroke.

This method of casting is termed the upper or overhead cast and is the most generally practiced. The underhand or scoop cast is made by depressing the tip of the rod to a height sufficiently clear of the ground to permit the bait to swing clear of obstacles and the forward cast is made by a vigorous thrust, somewhat similar to the manner in which a hockey is made to propel a ball forward.

The side cast is made by holding the tip of the rod a trifle lower than the shoulder of the caster, and the bait is swung forward by a strong stroke, the rod being kept at practically the same elevation throughout.

All these methods are easily acquired by the novice after a little practice.

Bait casting for bass furnishes a vastly more exhilarating sport than does still-fishing, and as a general thing fills the creel more quickly.

Another great advantage derived from it lies in the fact that artificial baits may be used instead of natural lures, and the variety of these that are now for sale in the tackle stores is so very great that the angler may provide an outfit of such diversity that even the most fastidious bass may be tempted to forget its wariness.

Still Bait Fishing.

This is often more uncertain in its results than is the method just referred to. The bass is capricious both in its choice of food and its times for feeding and the angler may rest assured that no matter how strenuously he may endeavour to seduce the wary fish from its native element, his creel will often return home with him with a most unsatisfactory filling.

It is very rarely indeed that the black bass is what might be called a bold, aggressive biter, even when its appetite is whetted by hunger. Unlike the trout, it does not gorge itself with food, and consequently it on no occasion feeds voraciously.

I was once fishing in a small lake in Plymouth county, Massachusetts, in which the bass were fairly numerous, and some of them were of good size, ranging as high as 3½ pounds each. In no part of the lake was there an abundance of food, and as all the other conditions were favourable for a successful catch, we expected to leave the lake at the close of our day's fishing with full creels and happy hearts.

Our catch, however, was limited to a very few fish, for our bait was almost invariably seized by bullheads or horned pouts, before the slow moving bass could reach them. In vain we tried fishing in various depths, even almost at the surface of the water, but the horned pout were vastly more active than the bass, and our stock of helgramites and small frogs, which we were using for bait, was pouched by the quick moving but little desired bullheads.

So capricious is the bass that it takes a lure of helgramite for a short time, and then absolutely refuses it and will accept nothing but a small frog.

I was on one occasion using frogs for bait when, instead of attaching the ordinary green frog with the under side of the legs of salmon colour, which most anglers prize very highly, I handed down a small speckled or leopard frog, so-called, such as one often finds in the fresh water meadows and swamps. This bait was seized in an instant by a large bass, which proved when landed to weigh nearly four pounds. The frog was lost while playing the fish, but I had one more of the same species in my bait pail, which I put on my hook and dropped down to my finny friends below. That frog was also quickly seized, and as a consequence another good fish was landed. Subsequently, for an hour or more, I tried the green frogs, of which I had an abundant supply, but met with no response. The bass had evidently settled down to the conviction that that was a speckled frog day and nothing else would answer.

Acting on that belief, we rowed ashore and searched the meadows for fresh specimens of the pictured frog, and succeeded in securing three or four. With these we returned to our former anchorage, and dropping the killick, we offered a brace of the variegated frogs, but to no avail, and it was only after tempting the capricious bass with various baits that we succeeded in securing several more fish, whose fancy had then turned to the helgramites.

All this happened within the short space of two hours, and it goes to show that the angler will do well to provide himself with a variety of bait, even taking care to have a few angle-worms along, which are often accepted when all other bait is refused.

In affixing the frog to the hook most anglers pass the barb through the skin at the back, which permits the frog to move freely about in the water, a rather small sized hook, of course, being used, which is ganged on a gut snood. I have often found that the hook passed through the tendons of the frog's hind leg meets with good success, for the frog in kicking about in the water has great freedom of motion, and the presence of the hook is not detected by the wary fish as easily as it is when attached to the frog's back.

Before striking my quarry, I permit him to head the frog around and bolt it, for in my experience more black bass are lost by striking too quickly than in any other way. The trout seizes its prey and quickly swallows it, but a bass holds it between its closed jaws before attempting to pouch it. This is also the habit of the common pickerel, as probably every angler has noticed.

It is often the case that a bass will refuse every other lure for a minnow or shiner which is impaled on a hook, by thrusting the barb through the back just below the dorsal fin, without permitting it to touch the spine; the minnow thus attached swims about as freely as if no hook were present.

In still-fishing for black bass, sinkers of rather small size are employed, my preference always being for swivel sinkers. As for hooks, my choice always is for the Limerick bend, from which fewer fish seem to escape than from any other pattern. The hook should be of moderate size, not larger than No. 1-0 to 3-0, or perhaps a size larger, ganged on double silk worm gut, stained if possible to the colour of the water.

Many anglers use a cork float, with which the bait is adjusted and maintained at any desired height; but I do not use one, for I prefer to be guided by the sense of touch when the fish takes the bait.

In this method of fishing, artificial baits are rarely used, they being employed chiefly in bait casting and trolling, the latter of which methods together with the more sportsmanlike one of fly-fishing I shall treat of it another paper.

AUTOMATIC SHOT GUNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I have seen it stated that the automatic shot gun is altogether too murderous for English sport. When, however, one considers that it is quite en règle to use two double barrelled, single-trigger ejectors and a loader, at a big shoot, the arguments against the automatic are not very clear. The potential rapidity of fire of the latter weapon, is not after all so very much the greater. The recognition of the automatic as a legitimate weapon might prove a great boon to sportsmen of slender means, enabling them to hold their own at big shoots with a single gun costing £9, instead of having to pay anything up to £120 for a pair of first rate ejectors, and employ a man as well to load.

A fair discussion of this question might prove amusing and instructive; for the automatic shot gun is now an established fact; and though a bit clumsy from being machine-made, is yet a very effective weapon indeed.

THE KAKUR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Will you or any one of your numerous readers kindly inform me whether the female muntjac (kakur) has canine teeth in the upper jaw or not? Also will some one enlighten me on the peculiar clicking noise a kakur makes when running? Is it done with the teeth or in any other way? Often when out in the jungle, a kakur has got up close to me and I have distinctly heard the clicking at regular intervals, but on one or two occasions I have failed to hear it. I have always connected the noise with the tusks—I don't know why—hence my question as to the presence of these in the female. Sterndale mentions canine tusks when speaking of this deer, but does not say definitely whether they are present in both sexes or not.

Naturalist.

[The canines are present in both sexes, but are very small in the female: we believe it has not yet been satisfactorily settled exactly how the animal produces this clicking noise.—Ed.]

DIVIDING A LITTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Can you say when a litter of pups should be divided between owner of sire and dam? Is there any fixed rule regulating choice of pick, when should the selection be made, and how soon may the pups be separated from the bitch?

R. G.

[When sire and dam are the property of different owners, there is no absolutely fixed rule about the division of the pups; it is purely a question of previous agreement. A very common procedure is, however, for the owner of the sire to claim first and fourth pick, i.e., he would have the first pick in any case, but a second puppy only if there were at least four in the litter. The age at which the selection is made is also a matter of agreement, but it is usual to fix weaning time, or when the whelps are six weeks old.—Ed.]

MESSRS. CUTLER PALMER'S VINTAGE REPORT FOR 1907.

Bordeaux.—Although delayed by the rains in spring, the flowering took place under favourable conditions, but the gathering was hindered by continuous falls of rain, and this has undoubtedly had its effect on the Wines produced, which compare unfavorably with those of 1906. These are developing to our full satisfaction, being full bodied, stout, and well coloured. The Wines of 1904 have confirmed the opinion we formed of them at the outset, it is indeed a remarkable Vintage.

Burgundy.—The Vintage of 1907 has been adversely affected by the rains, the difference in the Wine made during the first half of the Vintage and that made in the second half being very marked, though that gathered in the first half will be little inferior to the Wine of 1906. This Vintage and that of 1904 are indeed most excellent.

Champagne.—The Wines made at the start promise to be of sound ordinary quality, but torrential rains have spoilt the Vintage. There is, however, plenty of the 1900 Vintage still on the market, and the Vintages of 1904 and 1906 will be in every way most satisfactory.

Saumur.—The year of 1907 will not prove a Vintage one, but has turned out better than expected. As with Champagne, the 1900 Vintage is deservedly popular, and those of 1904 and 1906 are progressing most favourably.

Cognac.—The quality will be inferior to that of 1906, and the quantity will probably be one third less. The Wines are low in strength and buyers must fall back on the 1906 Brandies.

Germany.—The yield may be reckoned at half a Vintage, and owing to the cold wet summer the Wines will not be of great promise.

Portugal.—The Vintage of 1907 suffered from the vagaries of the weather. We expect the production approximately to be 34,000 Pipes, the Wine being in every way thoroughly sound. The 1905's are showing splendidly. It is cheering to find the Medical profession generally recommending the consumption of the higher qualities of this truly delightful Wine.

Sherry.—The yield is smaller than last year, owing to the boisterous East winds which scorched up the crop of grapes. The "Musts" show a density of rather over than under 13 degrees saume, and should develop into good stout Wines with plenty of body. The fine quality of Sherry now being offered seems to have at last attracted the attention of the community in England, and a gratifying increase in sales is notified.

Madeira.—An average crop of fair quality.

Marsala.—The new Wine will be less luscious and alcoholic than was expected, and the production will be less than last year, the damage caused by the ravages of the "Phylloxera" not yet having been made good, and in fact an average Vintage cannot be expected for two or three years. This is a great pity, seeing the considerable demand there is for this most health-giving Wine.

Italy.—A Vintage below the average and of ordinary quality.

Shooting.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE HIGH VELOCITY GAME RIFLE.

SHOCK-GIVING VERSUS PENETRATION.

The remarkably high velocity, the flatness of trajectory, and the improved accuracy of shooting displayed by the small-bore game rifles, are qualities greatly appreciated by sportsmen. Naturally the two important qualifications last named arise, more or less, from high velocity which is a quality meriting the highest commendation as tending to raise the standard of field practice with the rifle to the greatest possible pitch of perfection. Relative to this same high velocity much has been spoken in the past, and some have striven to teach us that high velocity is the greatest and most desirable qualification in the sporting as in the military arm.

With all due difference to the deliberate and fully considered judgment of those of my fellow sportsmen who hold to this belief, I venture to remark that high velocity which secures excess of penetration, fails in helping the hunter in the best possible way. With solid bullets fired at animals of medium size and of light build, a great waste of bullet energy frequently occurs, for the high velocity projectile which pierces the animals through and goes humming on its way for some distance beyond, fails to exert its power in the best way and, moreover, may prove a possible source of danger to human life.

Those sportsmen who seek to obtain the greatest amount of effective work from their rifle and its projectile may be interested to know of some experiments that I have made with a Novel sporting rifle and new form of expanding bullet recently brought out in England.

Both weapon and bullet are the outcome of a desire to supply something that will deal a weightier blow and prove altogether more deadly than high-velocity small-bores, such as the ·256 Mannlicher and ·303, which have been found deficient in stopping effect when used with solid bullets. Indeed, the evidence at my disposal distinctly shows these rifles to display an excess of penetration at the cost of stopping power, when used with solid projectiles. Many big game shooters can tell of animals lost, even though pierced from side to side, or end to end, by solid bullets from a small-bore; and even the passage through a deer or other animal of a non-expanding solid projectile of the size of the ·360 or ·400 does not invariably secure that speedy collapse essential to the ready bagging of game.

The new ammunition furnished with this rifle which is of calibre ·318, provides evidence of the intelligent endeavour to modify the tendency towards excess of penetration exhibited by an abnormally high development of bullet velocity, and of utilising it in the direction of expansion, thereby ensuring that, as nearly as possible, the bullet may be pulled up within the animal, and the maximum amount of its impetus be exerted upon the beast; instead of using up but a small proportion of this energy in passing through the object, and the useless expenditure of the remainder upon the air beyond.

I have recently conducted some experiments with a view to determining the nature of the gain secured in this matter of expansion and consequent stopping power exhibited by this high velocity rifle when firing special forms of expanding bullet—one of which the new "L. T." pointed hollow-nose is here shown in section. Appended are the results of various experiments:—

·318-BORE ACCELERATED EXPRESS RIFLE, made by Westley Richards & Co., London. Experiments with two forms of Capped Expanding bullet against flesh.

(1) The Kynoch Copper-capped Rounded-nose Bullet.
(2) The pointed Nickel-capped "L. T." Bullet.

Powder charge, 50 grains. Weight of Bullet, 250 grs. in each case. Range, 100 yards. Target, 112 lbs (1 cwt.) of beef without bone.

Section of the "L. T." hollow-pointed Bullet.

(1)—ROUNDED-NOSE COPPER-CAPPED BULLET:—

Made entrance hole same size as Bullet.
The cap commenced breaking up on piercing some 5 or 6 inches of flesh.
Shortly after entry the bullet expanded and the wound-channel was of about 2¼ inches in diameter, there being extensive laceration of tissue.
Bullet stopped at 14 inches.
Perfect and most complete expansion secured, as here shown.

The Kynoch copper-capped bullet on recovery from the beef.

(2) POINTED-NOSE NICKEL-CAPPED BULLET "L.T." SYSTEM:—

The "L.T." hollow-pointed bullet as recovered from the beef.

Made entrance hole its own size.
The cap commenced breaking up on penetrating some 4 or 5 inches of flesh. Shortly after entering, the bullet expanded with markedly deadly effect, causing a wound channel some 2¼ inches in diameter.
This bullet pulled up in 13½ inches.
Utmost expansion secured, as here shown.

Each form of bullet delivered a very heavy blow upon the huge mass of beef, their shock-giving qualities being truly remarkable. This, of course, was to be expected, seeing that the whole of the enormous energy of these capped bullets was expended upon the beef. Of the two, the copper-capped appeared to break up rather more than the nickel-pointed capped bullet.

Shot for accuracy, both bullets, rounded copper-cap and pointed nickel-cap, proved themselves capable of making excellent diagrams at 100 yards, groups of 7 shots with each bullet being within a diameter of two inches.

In this connection it is interesting to observe that I had previously ascertained that solid nickel-covered bullets invariably pierce boneless beef of the same substance, and fly to a considerable distance beyond; their shape being practically unaltered by passage through the beef.

The remarkable degree of expansion and great smashing effect exhibited by the two forms of capped bullet might lead one to imagine that they would be useless for piercing tough hides such as those of elephant and rhinoceros, and that on meeting with any such solid resistance they would simply expand upon impact and so fail to enter. I therefore proceeded to shoot four different forms of bullet from the new Rifle against Steel Plates, with the object of ascertaining their relative penetrative qualities on meeting with some firm resistance of a form at least equal to that offered by the toughest, thickest skin devoid of fur or wool.

·318-BORE ACCELERATED EXPRESS RIFLE.

Experiments with four forms of bullet firing at a Steel Plate of 7/16th inch thickness. Powder 50 grains of Axite. Bullet 250 grains.

RANGE.....100 yards.

Bullet	Diameter of hole in plate.	Depth of hole.
1. Solid Nickel-covered ...	·5781 inch.	Through the Plate.
2. Solid Soft-nosed ...	·5781 "	" " "
3. Copper-capped ...	·625 "	" " "
4. "L.T." Pointed Nickel Cap.	·625 "	" " "

There was slightly more burring around the entrance of the bullet hole with each of the capped bullets than with the two solid forms. The capped bullets exhibited less penetrative power and whilst making a larger hole and tearing away a wider area of plate on exit, they still managed to get through, the force of the blow delivered by them being most severe.

On testing these four Bullets against an increased thickness of steel, the following results were revealed. As more clearly demonstrating the effect of the solid and the hollow pointed bullet I have had diagrams prepared showing the bullet holes in the plate, also cross-sectional drawings giving the diameters, depths, and the heights of the bulges caused by these projectiles.

·318-BORE ACCELERATED EXPRESS RIFLE:—

Experiments with four forms of Bullet firing at a Steel Plate of 9-16th inch thickness. Powder 50 grains of Axite. Bullet 250 grains.

RANGE.....100 yards.

Bullet.	Diameter of hole in plate.	Depth of hole.	Height of bulge at the back of plate.
1. Solid Nickel-covered ...	·623 inch	·340 inch.	·161 inch.
2. Solid Soft-nosed ...	·6562 "	·301 "	·153 "
3. Copper-capped ...	·6875 "	·274 "	·143 "
4. "L. T." Pointed Nickel Cap.	·750 "	·300 "	·185 "

With a view to testing their behaviour a short range, these four bullets were next fired at:—

RANGE.....30 yards.

Bullet.	Diameter of hole in plate.	Depth of hole.	Height of bulge at the back of plate.
1. Solid Nickel-covered ...	·594 inch.	·503 inch.	·3 inch.
2. Solid Soft-nosed ...	·625 "	·461 "	·285 "
3. Copper-capped ...	·641 "	·363 "	·240 "
4. Pointed Cap "L. T." ...	·688 "	·421 "	·239 "

The pointed bullet caused more extensive rending of the plate—that is to say there was greater burring of the metal around the mouth of the bullet hole, and also wider bulging at the back of the plate—than any of the others.

The copper-capped was next in order in this respect.

As was to be expected, in view of their great penetrative qualities, the injury caused by the solid bullets was more concentrated, that is local.

HIGH VELOCITY

CORDITE RIFLE.

VELOCITY 2,250 ft. sec.

"FIELD," March 23, 1907: "The material increase in velocity which has been obtained shows that the revised specification of loading gives an enhancement of velocity which should prove of great value to the sportsman.

GREAT STRIKING ENERGY.
MINIMUM RECOIL.

Expressly designed to replace ·450 Bore Rifles, the importation of which into India is now prohibited.

"FIELD," March 23, 1907: ". . . A very valuable advance has already been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450 and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

The best DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.

LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY

CORDITE RIFLE.

An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD."

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

.....when on the subject of ammunition there are some special bullets sold by the well-known Gunmakers Messrs. Lyon and Lyon of Calcutta called "Rotary" bullets which can be used with choke-bore barrels and with perfect safety. I speak from experience for I have tried them with my own guns which are full choked in both barrels. The shooting up to 70 yards was good and the wound made by the bullets appalling. I recommend them as most useful to have in one's possession at all events as a stand by in case of accident to a rifle. I had no idea until I tried it that it was possible to make such good shooting from a smooth bore. For close quarters I should prefer a gun, a gun with these bullets to a rifle.

HAMILTON'S IRISH HOMESPUNS

Some of the smartest and best-dressed ladies and gentlemen in the British Isles wear Hamilton's Irish Homespuns. Fashion demands this material for outdoor wear—for shooting, golfing, cycling, hunting, driving, and sport generally. Incomparably the most comfortable, dressy, and hard-wearing material of which garments are made.

We guarantee our Homespuns are hand spun and hand woven from pure wool only, by Irish peasants.

From 1/9 yard.

Suits and costumes made to order at moderate charges.
Material also supplied in lengths. Patterns free on application.

THE WHITE HOUSE, DESK 6, PORTRUSH, IRELAND.

Contractors to His Majesty's Government, The Indian Government, The Cape Government, The Natal Government, The Crown Agents for the Colonies, The London County Council, The Netherlands Railway, The British Electric Traction Co., and Hundreds of Local Authorities.

CROSBIE'S PAINTS.

We shall be pleased to receive your enquiries.
Samples will be submitted free on application.

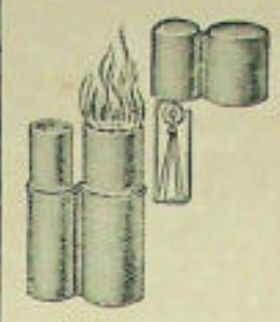
JUST THE THING FOR INDIA.

THE PATENT POCKET LIGHT.

"JANUS"



is the most perfect Patent Pocket Light at present on the market.

Consists of two cylinders, one containing cotton wool soaked in pure methyl spirit 99/100 and the other 2 fine platina wires. To light, the fine platina is inserted into the saturated cotton wool when it begins to glow and sets the spirit on fire.

Why we do not know, but it does.

The Metal parts will not rust.
It keeps burning in wind and storm.

Smaller, more compact, and less exasperating than the ordinary matches.

PRICE.

Janus Pocket Light with 1 cz. pure methyl spirit 99% Rs. 2-4.
This spirit is obtainable from—SMITH, STANISTREET & CO., Calcutta, @ 4 annas per oz.

If not approved and returned within 1 day from receipt value will be refunded.

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

A COLD, biting nor'-easter packed the fog back, and though it hung over the far end of the course, sufficient space was cleared to enable visitors to congratulate themselves on racing being practicable. Despite the strong breeze, the enemy made encroachments on the straight, and it was impossible to see more than five furlongs. The attendance was much greater than it would have been but for the first day's disappointment, while the course has never been in better order here since the change of venue occurred, and fields panned out well.

Won by a head; a neck divided second and third.

The season wound up under most depressing conditions, as a steady downpour threw a wet blanket over the proceedings. The card attracted a much bigger muster than on Friday, but the enforced postponement had put the meeting out of joint, and marred a perfect success, the programme being far too lengthy.

CASTLE IRWELL HANDICAP—Of 500sovs.; second receives 50sovs. 1 mile.

The delay at the post was not of long duration, and when the start was eventually effected, Salford, who had given some trouble, Marlow and Wise Mason all hung fire, and followed their opponents in straggling order. Lischana, taking advantage of her position in the draw, jumped into her stride immediately, but the pace she set to Procope, Baltinglass, Wuffy, Hanover Square, and The Bedouin was but a moderate one, and they had not gone more than three furlongs before Wise Mason had raced through his horses and joined the leaders. Nearing the first bend Wise Mason had deprived Lischana of the lead, the pair being attended by Baltinglass, Salford, Hanover Square, The Bedouin, and Marlow, whilst the rear was now brought up by Hill Climber, who had struck into the heels of Salford and become tailed off. Wise Mason turned into the straight with a three lengths' lead of Lischana, Salford, and Baltinglass, with The Bedouin next, heading Hanover Square, Marlow, and Wuffy. Below the distance Wise Mason's jockey became a trifle uneasy, and Baltinglass, drawing up to him, quickly had his measure, as crossing to the rails, he placed the issue beyond all doubt and won cleverly by a length and a half; six lengths separated second and third. The Bedouin was fourth, then a long way off came Wuffy (never dangerous) fifth, Salford (struck into) sixth, Marlow seventh, Hanover Square (interfered with) eighth, and Hill Climber last. Time—2mins. 48secs.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THERE were some startling results in the principal leagues on Saturday, and in the Southern League four home clubs went under, in addition to which Tottenham Hotspur, whose steady improvement is a gratifying fact, shared the points at Bristol. The scoring propensities of the Queen's Park Rangers' forwards were well in evidence at Leyton, four goals being obtained in the second half. Even without their two crack forwards, Southampton overcame Norwich City at Norwich, West Ham United accomplished the unexpected in defeating Reading at Elm Park, and even more surprising was Northampton's success at New Brompton. After playing six successive drawn games, Bradford Park Avenue placed a win to their credit, Luton losing at Bradford 1—0.

A significant happening in the First Division of the League was Chelsea's emphatic win over Bristol City. In no previous game had the Pensioners scored more than a couple of goals, their total being a dozen for a similar number of matches, but Hilsdon netted the ball four times for his side on Saturday. Woolwich made a splendid fight at Clayton until the closing stages had set in, when the leaders put on a couple of goals, and won 4—2 at the finish. Both Liverpool and Sheffield United were beaten before their own supporters, Birmingham were flouted and routed at Newcastle, Everton were outplayed at Bolton, and Aston Villa could not do better on their own ground than draw with Bury.

Clapton Orient did a good turn to some of the clubs in the Second Division who are struggling for promotion by defeating Oldham Athletic, and this is probably the best performance of the Orientals this season. Fulham had a fruitless journey to Stockport, but Derby County astonished the critics by administering a defeat to Leicester Fosse at Leicester. Tables to date are appended :—

RUGBY RULES.

IN their engagement with the London Scottish, at Richmond, the Cambridge fifteen came off badly, losing by 4 goals (1 dropped) and 4 tries to 2 tries. Like the Oxford men earlier in the season, they were outplayed at all points, but it is only proper to observe that the Dark Blues were then taking part in their first match. Saturday's game did not shed any satisfactory light on the probable outcome of the University match. The Cantabs only shared the fate that has overtaken nearly all teams who have opposed the Scottish this season. The fact must be recognised that the Scotsmen are a really strong side, well armed at all points, and when on the top of their game are capable of brilliant football. They were in their best vein on Saturday, and the Cambridge men found themselves outclassed. As usual, the foundation of the Scottish success was laid by the forwards. They are a comparatively light set of men, but are speedy, resolute, and clever. They hang together like one man, and after wheeling the scrummages come away in a body. Their foot work is quite in accordance with the best traditions of the Scotch schools, and their following up and tackling leave little to be desired. These scrummagers set a pace that passed beyond the powers of their opponents. The Cambridge forwards were soon pushed off their game. Their packing in the scrummage became ragged, and before long they were obviously a beaten lot. They lost all idea of cohesion, and were practically unable to obtain possession of the ball. They stuck to their task pluckily enough, collaring in grim fashion, but as a body were more or less demoralised. Receiving very little assistance from their front rank, Godby and Holloway, the halves, had an unpleasant time of it, having few opportunities of making openings for the men behind them, and, like the three-quarters, were mainly engaged in defence. The Cambridge three-quarters stood too close up to the scrummage, the wing men, Wright and Barton, sadly offending in that respect, and mainly owing to this fault their defence was rather easily penetrated.

Further, in their tackling the note of hesitancy was to be detected. It is sound policy to go for the man with the ball. Doubtless had he been playing Kenneth McLeod would have had his backs under better control, but brilliant player as he is, he could not have overcome the forward rout. The best point about the play of the Cambridge men was that, while only dangerous on three occasions, they scored twice. One try was the outcome of a well-executed back movement, and the other came after a long, hard-kicking rush. Apart from these efforts, the honours were all with the Scottish, whose backs ably seconded the fine play of their forwards. How skilful was the work of their back division may be judged from the fact that all seven tries fell to them, and in nearly every case after clever passing, while Mear, one of the three-quarters, dropped a neat goal with the left foot. Though the game was very one-sided, the brilliant display all round by the Scotchmen afforded obvious enjoyment to a crowd numbering close on 4,000.

After a heavy scoring match Blackheath defeated their old rivals of Richmond by 2 goals (1 penalty) and 5 tries to 1 goal and 2 tries. Both clubs were below their full strength, but happily for Blackheath Basil Hill, with Mainprice still on the injured list, took charge of the side. Under his leadership the forwards maintained the improvement that had marked their play against Northampton, and practically won the match, the stalwart scrummagers, who were without Frank Stout, not doing as well as in some recent matches. Dow and Morris, the Richmond halves, were not as happy as in some former games, and as a consequence the three-quarters came off rather badly. At half-back Blackheath were stronger than their opponents, W. A. Pocock, who is up at Cambridge, being a capital partner to G. V. Portus. The latter made a great impression in the game against Northampton, and he was much in evidence in Saturday's encounter, gaining three tries. Blackheath led at the interval by 9 points to 5, and ten minutes after changing ends practically placed the issue beyond doubt by obtaining three more tries. It is interesting to note that in the Blackheath three-quarter line was G. L. Stokes, a younger brother of A. L. Stokes—sons of the famous old three-quarter, Dr. Leonard Stokes. The youngster played uncommonly well, and should find a regular place in the team. The strangest fact in connection with the game was that Richmond's full-back was A. F. Harding, the Welsh international forward.

Though without Sibree and playing a man short, the Harlequins easily defeated the Old Alleynians. The chief point about the game was the brilliancy of Lambert, the wing three-quarter, who gained four tries and placed as many goals. He had Birkett in the centre with him, and the two men worked together harmoniously. On the form he has been showing this season Lambert can hardly be passed over in the representative matches. He has great speed—the first essential in a wing three-quarter—and would attain high rank if he acquired the almost obsolete art of handing off. At present he is a somewhat easy prey if his opponent can get up to him. The Old Leysians put a rather weak team into the field against St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and further played a man short up to half-time. In the circumstances it was not surprising that the Hospital team gained a comfortable lead in the first half and won the match. The Old Merchant Taylors easily overcame the old boys of the University College School, and Guy's Hospital, who are an unbeaten side, had no difficulty in disposing of the London Irish. The London teams that ventured into the provinces were all beaten. The Marlborough Nomads were routed at Oxford, but Lennox gave Bedford a hard game. The London Welsh sustained their second reverse, Devon Albion defeating them by 2 goals and 3 try to nothing, and having much the best of the game. The Greenwich Naval Collegians found the United Services too strong for them. They made a good fight forward, but were beaten for cleverness outside. Experience turned the scale in favour of the Services. For the second time this season Cardiff defeated Swansea. As at their former meeting there was not much in it, a dropped goal once more turning the fortunes of the afternoon, but for the time being Cardiff must be regarded as the strongest Welsh club. A game between them and the London Scottish on a neutral ground would be worth going many miles to see. After holding their own up to half-time, Gloucester fared rather badly at Newport, and after a poor game Llanelly drew at Leicester.

BOXING.

Owen Moran, the young English feather-weight, outgeneralled and out-punched Frankie Neill, the Californian, at San Francisco, last Friday night, and in the sixteenth round of a slashing fight the American's seconds threw up the sponge. It was agreed that the winner should meet Abe Attell for the world's feather-weight title, and this fact gave the battle great importance. Moran's prowess was a revelation. He fought Neill magnificently and battered him all round the ring, knocking his head to and fro with his double-barrelled left, blacking his eyes, contusing his ribs, and knocking him down time after time.

It is agreed here that Moran is a masterly boxer with a superb defence. Whether he can beat Attell for the championship is the subject of fierce controversy. Moran is strong and very clever, but so also is Attell. The latter admittedly has not such smashing powers as the young Briton.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE TRIAL EIGHTS.

This year's trials have discovered one or two oarsmen who a few weeks back were practically unknown. First and foremost comes O. A. Carver, of First Trinity, who was the pick of the sixteen oarsmen. The young Carthusian first gained fame in the Colquhoun Sculls a week or two back, when, it will be remembered, he put up a fine race against President Powell. Another "dark horse" who was seen to advantage was C. J. Henslow, of Lady Margaret, who rowed far above his early practice form. H. E. Kitching and G. L. Thomson, of the Hall, also rowed good races, as did N. E. Hawdon, of Jesus, F. H. Jerwood, of the same college, and E. S. Horridge, of the Hall.

The victory of Jerwood's crew yesterday was in no small measure due to his own excellent judgment, but without having any shining lights behind him he had the better all-round crew. Hume-Hamilton and Peck were particularly poor in Lloyd's combination, whilst Barratt was not so good as twelve months ago. Had these three men pulled their weight over the whole course the finish would have been very close.

A number of places have to be filled in the University boat, and most of those mentioned are pretty sure to be selected "up" early next term. Only three Blues are certain to be "up," Messrs. E. W. Powell, D. C. R. Stuart, and J. S. Burn, but Mr. H. M. Goldsmith may be in residence, whilst Mr. F. G. Williams, the Eton Freshman, who, like so many other famous Etonians, has not been called upon for the Trials, is sure of a place against Oxford.

A capital start was effected, both crews getting off at about 40 strokes per minute. There was a desperate struggle for the lead, but, as was fully expected, Lloyd's crew, who had practised the fast stroke, had decidedly the best of the opening sprint, and were half a length to the good at the end of the first minute. From then the race was never in doubt. Lloyd continually called upon, his men for a spurt, but Jerwood, keeping his men going at 36, well within themselves, answered spurt for spurt, and always got the best of it. A quarter of a mile from Day's there was daylight between the boats, whilst on arrival at the farmhouse Jerwood's crew were a length and three-quarters up. They then increased their stroke to 38, whilst Lloyd got 36 out of his men, but they were rowing extremely short, bow side being very weak and splashing a lot. As they neared the post the Trinity men increased the stroke to 38, and then 39, but there was no life in the crew as a whole, and Jerwood's combination without going above 36, passed the post the winners by 2½ lengths. Time—13mins. 53secs. The following were the crews:—

OXFORD TRIALS.

There is every promise that the floods will be well over the towing path by the end of the week. Work yesterday was confined to the home water, and in neither boat was any alteration made. The president and secretary shared the coaching, the latter being in command of No. 2. There was a good amount of tubbing, only bow and No. 2 in each boat escaping the ordeal, and two journeys were made over the home course. Both crews did a hard row from Iffley to the Red Post, the form displayed by No. 1 appearing to give most satisfaction. Beyond this they were restricted to steady paddling at 28. Names and weights:—

ATHLETICS.

CAMBRIDGE UNIV. vs. RACING CLUB DE FRANCE.

In their meeting with the Racing Club de France on Saturday the Light Blues succeeded in making a much closer fight than had been anticipated. They only brought up one old hand—K. Powell, who is eligible to compete and will turn out against Oxford next spring. The international meeting between the French and English 'Varsities was with the same French club who, visiting Cambridge two years ago, suffered defeat from Trinity College by 6 events to 3. In the return match twelve months later, at Paris, the Englishmen were easily defeated by 7 events to 2, and so they challenged the whole University, but the meetings are, it is understood, not to be of annual occurrence. Just now the Frenchmen have several good athletes, and on this occasion they brought the famous weight-putter, A. Tison who experienced no difficulty in winning that event. Considering the time of the year, the Cambridge contingent being short of practice, while the Frenchmen only crossed on Saturday morning, some excellent performances were accomplished.

A fairly good attendance assembled, and the surroundings were more or less favourable. The programme opened with the sprint, which the Light Blues easily secured. They again triumphed in the next event, although Poullenard put up a good race with the winner, T. H. Just. The visitors started winning through the agency of A. Tison in the Weights. This they followed up in the mile, but of course they had no chance in the hurdles, ex-president Powell showing his old ability, and doing excellent time. The Frenchmen got level again by winning the broad jump, but they were out-classed in the quarter. R. Berthet secured the high jump for them, and made 4 events all. It was fully expected A. H. Pearson would give the French crack—L. de Fleurac—a good race in the three miles, but the last-named left his man standing still in the sixth lap, and won in handsome style, thereby securing the odd event for France.

In the evening the visitors were entertained to dinner at the University Arms, and returned to Paris on Sunday night. Officials:—Judges, Hon. G. W. Lyttelton and E. H. Ryle; referee, Rev. J. H. Gray; starter, W. M. Fletcher; official timekeeper, J. Newton Digby, A.A.A. Details:—

100 Yards.—A. E. D. Anderson, Cambridge, 1; R. H. Lindsay-Watson, Cambridge, 2; J. Perrier, France, 3; H. Sandre, France, 0. Anderson won by nearly 2 feet, with Perrier some 4 feet farther off. Time—10·4 5secs.

Half-mile.—T. H. Just, Cambridge, 1; C. Poullenard, France, 2; W. T. Wetenhall, Cambridge, 0. The last-named cut out the work, but Poullenard went ahead 300 yards from home only to be overhauled by Just in the last 100 yards, the Blue winning by 20 yards in 2mins. 0-3 5secs.

Putting the Weight.—A. Tison, France, 1 (39 feet 4½ inches); J. L. Mickle, Cambridge, 2 (33 feet 1 inch); Dr. P. Paruske, Versailles, France, 3 (35 feet 6 inches); C. C. Barclay, Cambridge, 0.

One Mile.—J. Keyser, France, 1; F. S. Dougall, Cambridge, 2; T. J. Mils, Cambridge, 0; A. J. N. Williamson, Cambridge, 0; L. de Fleurac, France, 0. The last-named only ran a lap. Mils led the first time round in 1min. 24secs., but Dougall was ahead at the end of the second lap in 2mins. 55secs. In the final straight Keyser came with a splendid sprint and cleverly won by 4 yards in 4mins. 35secs.

Hurdles.—K. Powell, Cambridge, 1; H. Molinie, France, 2; V. I. Imberti, France, 3; M. G. D. Murray, Cambridge, 0. Powell, taking the lead half-way, won fairly easily by 8 yards. Time—16·4 5secs.

Long Jump.—H. Sandre, France, 1 (20 feet 1½ inches); O. H. Williams, Cambridge, 2 (19 feet 5½ inches); C. Armstrong, Cambridge, 3 (19 feet 4½ inches); R. Berthet, France.

Quarter-mile.—R. B. Horsfield, Cambridge, 1; A. E. D. Anderson, Cambridge, 2; C. Poullenard, France, 3; V. Perrier, France, 0. The Frenchmen were never prominent. Anderson made the pace, but easing up in the straight allowed Horsfield to win by half a dozen yards in 53secs.

High Jump.—R. Berthet, France, 1 (5 feet 3½ inches); C. C. Barclay, Cambridge, 2 (5 feet 3½ inches); A. C. Bellerby, Cambridge, 3 (5 feet 2 inches); H. Molinie, France, 0.

Three Miles.—L. de Fleurac, France 1; A. H. Pearson, Cambridge, 2; J. Keyser, France, 0; H. P. Dawson, Trinity, 0; F. G. Swan, Cambridge, 0. The second French string soon dropped out; Swan, after making the pace, retired in the sixth lap, leaving Fleurac and Pearson alone. The Frenchman began to draw away in the sixth lap, and won by 180 yards. Time—15mins. 17·4 5secs.

Hunting.

THE KARACHI HUNT.

December 8th.—The hounds met at 7-15 A.M. near the Panjra Pol. A large field turned out, amongst whom were Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Travers, Miss Skelton, Miss Osborne, Major Winsloe, R.E., Captain Watson, R.A.M.C., Messrs. Shews-Cox, Porteous, Newcommen, Firlonger (of the East Lancashires), Captain Pritchard, Mr. Morgan (29th S. W. B.), Messrs. Anderson, Breslauer, Stewart, Nicoll, Heywood, Sawyer, Thomaides, Mahon, Kennedy, Jupe, and Reed. On moving off, a jack was seen on a hill top outlined against the sky-about 300 yards to the right, but as it meant hill climbing and a rocky ride, the Master elected to draw the Panjra Pol Bunds straight ahead.

A few of the hounds got away after the first jack, but were brought back, just as the pack were settling down to give us the best run we have had so far this season. Bursting into a fine crash of music, they pushed their jack through the thick cover along the Panjra Pol Bunds through the small Hall Bund and on, skirting Omer Dosal's khete, over the bare hill beyond. Here the jack turned sharp right, and led us a merry dance through the Far Supura Gap—up and down terrible hills, across yawning nullahs—until he finally yielded up his brush, after a very fine run of 54 minutes. After presenting the brush to Mrs. Graham and the mask to Mr. Anderson, who were first up, the Master was making his way slowly with the pack, back towards Omer Dosal's khete when the hounds struck the line of a fox. They drove him off the hills on to Noonan's Plain, but there he jinked and jinked again in the rough ground and long grass, and as scent was none too good, and as it seemed probable that the hounds were more likely to "chop" than run, the Master decided not to waste time, but to push on, back towards Omer Dosal's khete. We were much further from home than we all of us realised, and we had a long trot before us before we reached the khete. Here the hounds struck the line of a good jack, and were soon full of running, but an immense herd of cattle 'fouled' the scent badly and destroyed further hope of the run. The Master cast forward, but it was getting late and scent was practically gone, so the hounds were whipped off towards about 10.

On December 12th.—Rai Singh's Well was the meet. It was a nice cold morning, and the hounds looked the picture of fitness and keenness, as they tumbled out of the Hound Van at the Bannia's Crossing. Drawing along the right of the road, the hounds found in the hedge beyond the Well. With a breast-high scent, the hounds ran at a tremendous pace, skirting Moosa's Bunds, over the Nullah towards the White House Village. Passing the village, the jack must have been turned as he whipped round, and set his mask for the Long Bund, at the end of which the hounds ran into him, after a very fast 17 minutes. Watering at the Long Bund Well, the Master trotted off to draw Graham's Spinney. Not finding, he moved to draw the Commissioner's covert. A fine big jack broke away and setting his mask for the Maggar Hills made his point, and got to ground in a cairn on the very top of the hill, as the hounds were within five yards of him. He ran very like the jack who gave us such a good run on the 1st, and may have been the same, as he took a similar line. It was getting late, so we jogged off homewards, leaving the Master and Whips hard at work getting the hounds back. Mrs. Travers and Miss Skelton were the only ladies out. The East Lancashire Regiment were, as usual, well represented, no less than eleven officers of the Regiment turning out amongst whom were Colonel Sitwell, Major Anderson, Captain Seabrooke and Captain Richardson. Others out were Captain Watson, R.A.M.C., Messrs. Anderson, Stewart, Robson, Woodward, Thomaides, Hechliger and Morgan.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

The promise the new Bombay Hunt pack game in the initial run of the season and the number of those expected to turn out and follow them have both come up to expections. Splendid sport has been providing during both days this week with hounds picking up the scent remarkably well and setting a pace which makes it difficult for the field to keep up with them on any than very good going.

No less than eighty members met the Master and Huntsmen at the Melon Ground Cross Roads last bye day—a marvellous field for any hunt in India. One is almost always sure of a quick find in the coverts near Chuckla Hill and this occasion was no exception as hounds were soon in full song and making away at a great pace over rice fields and up the steep hill. The field went round skirting Bomanwadi valley and past Sahar Church. After a deep nullah they once more gave their horses rein and race across a stretch of melon ground with good mud jumps. The Jack was going parallel with the Backwater but branching to the left, crossed the Kurla-ellra Road straight for the creek.

Those that tried to follow hounds across had to return but those who know this bit of the country went further down to the bridge and consequently were up for the kill in a house in Kurla, the centre of a crowd of flabergasted natives.

Hounds were trotted back to Sahar and after a quick change of mounts, the field were soon after another "Varmint" who broke from the covert near the Tulsi water main. The country here is ideal for hunting, safe going and plenty of jumping; both mud and cactus. At the Anakeri Road there was a moments' check and then after a stone jump, they crossed the road, went through a mango tope and past Stacey's Tank. The jack seemed to be making for the Marole Caves, but half way across the valley he twisted for a hill which he never reached as the hounds were going so strong that they pulled him down almost as soon as he had changed his mind.

On Thursday a field of about fifty met at the Jackal Club and an early start was made for another fine morning's start. Hounds were not long in finding and set a cracking pace as far as Chuckla Hill, up which they went.

On the edge of Bomanwadi Valley the field was left some way back owing to the steep and stony going, but they had made up their ground before reaching the Tuld Mala. The melon ground near Sahar is not "all joy" but this led to paddy fields and high jumps till a winding nullah came in the way before grass fields, every one of which provided a cactus jump. It seemed they were bound for the Powai Hills but there was no beating the hounds and before the Backwater they brought their quarry down.

It was a fine sight, this kill in the open in full view of every one, and, as the run had been short and sweet, hounds were taken back to put into the covert between Sahar and the Andheri Road. Scent was still good as they again gave tongue and, coming out behind their quarry, crossed the Andheri Road into some rice fields which allowed of a fast gallop. Up and down a small, grassy hill, the jack set his mask for Marole and the famous Caves but in the valley he was tiring fast and sneaked into a cactus clump in the hopes of being passed. Hounds, however, were guilty of no mistake and the run was promptly brought to an end. The second morning of two kills this week and the eleventh kill of the season, which surely promises a record!

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. MAHARAJAH OF COOCH BEHAR'S XI.—The hollow beating by 146 runs which the visitors to the Eden Gardens inflicted on the leading local club last week was almost entirely due to the fine cricket of the two well-known Sussex professionals Cox and Vine, the former quite retrieving the position of his side when they were in a very bad way indeed, and the latter bowling unchanged throughout the Calcutta innings. The Calcutta C. C. were handicapped in bowling by the absence of Ernsthausen, but thanks to some excellent work by Hechle, who was quite in his best old form, had eight of their opponents out for 113, of which Bajana contributed 58 by some rather rash hitting. Then came a prolonged stand by Vine and Mistri, which added over 120 runs and eventually the last two wickets put on no less than 155 runs, of which Vine scored 123 by careful keen cricket: his play on the legside was excellent, and he often pulled well, but he never cut a ball and rarely drove one. He gave no chance, but Guise nearly got to one at deep mid on before he had scored, and there were several appeals for leg before which must have been pretty near things. Hechle came out in the fine analysis of 7 wickets for 59 runs, but the rest of the bowling was innocuous, and the fielding though keen was not nearly keen enough. When Calcutta went in Guise soon threw away his wicket but Eddis and Lee made a bit of a stand, though the latter was always in trouble with Vine's legbreaks and eventually played on to one. Eddis played a good innings for over an hour but should not have missed the ball from Cox which he ran out to drive. Of the rest Turnbull and Wanders reached double figures somehow, but the total only amounted to 122, after 70 had been on the board with only two wickets down. Cox bowled unchanged, and most steadily, and took six wickets for 43 runs, while Mistri had 3 for 20. Vine was expensive.

The Kuch Behar fielding led by Daniell was first class. Full score and analysis:—

THE PENANG MEDAL.—The annual competition for this prize took place over the Maidan links on Friday and Saturday last and resulted in a win for Mr. D. H. Brackenridge with a card of 93—12=81. Mr. T. Drimmie's 82 was much the best scratch score of the competition. Owing to the rain of the previous day the ground was in better playing order than usual, but the putting greens were difficult on the Friday. Full scores:—

SHOW NOTES.

Calcutta Dog Show.—The Calcutta Kennel Club have not been too well supported this year and only about one hundred and eighty dogs will be benched on the 27th instant, in the grounds of the Volunteer Head-quarters, which is the venue this year.

There is more than one reason for the lack of support to the generous schedule, one is, the difficulty upcountry exhibitors have in securing accommodation for themselves and their dogs at this time of the year, at reasonable rates. Another, in the case of local dogs is want of Show condition; all who have kept dogs in Calcutta have been worried at the end of the rains by their dogs coats becoming rough and slight eruptions of the skin appearing, this takes some little time to pass away and for the coat to come on again, in fact locally kept dogs are rarely in good bloom until at least the middle of January. So the club will have to have their Shows in future at a later date to get the entry they deserve.

However, for the mere spectator, there is plenty of variety to see, thirty separate breeds being represented, numerically as follows:—Starting with the saintly breed St. Bernards, 3; Deerhounds, 4; Great Danes, 1; Bull Mastiffs, 1; Collies, 1; Greyhounds, 15; Kangaroo hounds, 5; Rampore hounds, 1; Retrievers, 3; Dalmations, 2; Poodles, 2; Bull-dogs, 7; Whippets 7; Cocker-spaniels, 7; Fox-terriers, smooth, 21; Fox-terriers, Wire, 11; Irish-terriers, 21; Scottish-terriers, 21; Airedale-terriers, 12; Bull-dogs, 6; Bull-terriers, 13; Japanese, 3; Pekinese, 4; Lhassa terriers, 1; Pomeranians, 3; Chow Chows, 3; Mexican Hairless, 4; Miniature Bull-terriers, 1; Skye-terrier, 1; Schipperke, 1. That experienced judge Mr. Lionel Jacob, I.C.S., is handling half the classes and it is hoped Dr. J. H. S. Martin will again be able to spare the time and trouble to make the awards in the rest of the classes. It has been decided on account of the small entry to finish the Show on one day, Friday, 27th December; this is convenient to the exhibitor and we trust that the public will warm to this interesting exhibition so that the Club may not be losers.

An early start will be made with the judging, so all dogs should be benched by 8-30 A.M.

Mozufferpore Dog Show.—Under the auspices of Messrs. H. E. Abbott and G. Disney a dog show will be held at Mozufferpore during the January meet. The programme will be found in the Planters Gazette of the 7th of this month.

Bombay Dog Show.—This annual function will be held in conjunction with the Horse Show on the 18th, 19th and 20th February.

GENERAL NOTES.

There is no doubt that dog stealing has been on the increase lately. We therefore welcome the appearance of a book entitled "Dogs and How to Keep Them."

Great Dane Growls.—A pillar—undoubtedly the greatest pillar in the Great Dane breed—has passed way in Champion Viceroy of Redgrave who died recently at the age of 8½ years. He has been one of the few dogs, who, with intrinsic exhibition virtues, has combined procreative faculties, for he has sired many champions and first prize winners, and really left imprints of his very desirable form and features in every direction.

Dachshund Data.—The imported German Dachshund Recker von der Ecke—whose portrait illustrated the breed in the Souvenir Catalogue of the last Show, and who was imported to improve the legs, feet, and true Dachshund character, has already produced a big winner for his owner, Mr. John Sayer, in Champion Spotted Dog. This dog is a dapple, which is a picturesque variety, and the first German bred dapple ever to have achieved that honour.

Airedale Amenities.—Anyone wanting to start a first class kennel of this sporting breed cannot do better than communicate with Mrs. Ffolliott Powell of Tithal Bulsar, who is disposing of her entire kennel consisting of imported as well as young dogs—all of the best blood—as this fancier is going home for good.

Pekinese Paragraphs.—A club to specially foster this breed is being formed in London, under the name of the Imperial Pekinese Association.

Whippet Wheezes.—Three highly bred puppies of this breed have been secured by two local sportsman and so the proposed racing should soon be an established fact.

CANINE.

NOTES FOR NOVICES.

One of the secrets of success in the breeding of dogs is to make sure of the foundation of the kennel. Blue blood in brood bitches is of much more importance for the stud than good looks or exhibition merit. Some of the best specimens on the show bench, of several breeds, were bred from the most indifferent-looking bitches, who would not be worth a "highly commended" in ordinary competition.

In this way, the ladder of fame in the show ring is almost as easy of access to the working man and amateur of modest means as to the millionaire.

The latter, of course, has the advantage of being able to take the shortest cut by his long purse putting him in possession of the best right off the reel; but the humbler fancier, by care and perseverance, will get there just the same, and at very little cost, if it takes him longer to do it.

There is, moreover, very much honour and credit attaching to a fancier who breeds his winners than to the man who buys them, and infinitely more pleasure, and generally more profit in the process.

Beginners in the fancy generally have marked tastes for certain breeds, but they should, if they wish to be successful either as breeders or exhibitors, endeavour to regulate their fancy, not only in accordance with their purse, but premises. Big dogs, to do well, require a lot of room, are much more costly to keep and many of the breeds are not nearly so profitable as some of the smaller varieties.

Some breeds again are hardier than others, and some much more popular and therefore likely to be more remunerative to keep. These monetary considerations do not always enter into the calculations of a fancier of wealth, but it is an important matter to many, the costliness of keeping dogs having often driven some of the most promising recruits to the fancy right out of it.

If a hobby can be made to pay its way, it is much more likely to be enduring and there is not perhaps in these days any other live stock pursuit which offers to both sexes the same prospects of success and remuneration as the breeding and exhibition of prize dogs and few the same fascination and enjoyment. This is because Great Britain is the market of the world in the matter of most live stock, and this breeding and fancying faculty a national instinct.—Our Dogs.

The Story Teller.

THE GREAT LAMBETH MURDER.

Nothing sticks like a catch-phrase. No matter how false it may be, people believe in it far more than in a long, sensible argument, if the "catch-phrase" is only short and crisp. Shakespeare invented the catch-phrase "Murder will out," and it caught the public ear. They liked the sentiment of it, and so they have gone on believing that it is impossible for a murderer to escape. That this is all nonsense the following statement will, I think, prove. I make this confession now, not because I have any silly qualms of conscience which sentimentalists are troubled with, but because I know that it cannot get me into any trouble. I have long wanted to let the world know my story, because I am rather proud of what I have done, and I think it a pity to do a smart thing without getting any credit for it. Besides, I am anxious, as I go about, to hear what people say when they read of me. The affair has long blown over, and no one suspects, or ever will suspect me, for I am well dressed, am a model father and husband, and move in what everyone is pleased to call his own set, the best society. If I had not hit on this typewriter, I should never have been able to have written this, for I am not fool enough to make such a statement in my own unforgeable handwriting.

It is perfectly easy to commit murder without being found out. Doctors know this as well as I do, but they naturally will not tell how. I have no ambition to tell people how they could commit scientific murders. Being a murderer myself, I naturally have a sort of pity for the poor devils who get hanged, and I am anxious to show the blundering fools who do what I did, how to get off. It cannot be said to be a very difficult thing for a man, with his wits, and a few pounds about him, to keep out of the way of the police, when an ignorant rough like Carroll can walk about London for weeks without a shilling in his pocket, and eventually, when he is starved out, have to write a note to the police, and make an appointment to get caught. My story, however, will speak for itself.

Some fifteen years ago I was fool enough to get drunk, in which state I was kept by a low woman into whose hands I fell. She did not know who I was, as I had given her the name I usually gave such women when I knocked about London. I suppose, however, she was tired of the life she was leading, and, seeing I was a gentleman, made up her mind to marry me, and chance the consequences. When I recovered from my drunk, which lasted, I believe, over a week, I found myself in respectable furnished lodgings, which she had taken for herself and me, as I found we had been made at a registrar's office man and wife. To the landlord and landlady she had posed as a poor unfortunate woman with a drunken husband, and as she kept me too drunk to make a disturbance, we were allowed to stay. Needless to say, when I was sober I did not believe the story about the marriage till I had been to the registrar's office and seen my own signature; for, although I had not signed my own name, I could not dispute it was a name I went by, and my own handwriting. I saw I was fairly caught, and determined not to make a fuss, or let my wife know who I really was. I was engaged to my cousin, a very pretty girl with a good fortune, and I made up my mind to marry her. The difficulty was how to get rid of my first wife, who was a low-bred, vulgar, but decently pretty girl, who, from her hands, had evidently been a "slavey" before she went wrong.
