The Horse.

HINTS TO BEGINNERS ON THE SADDLE HORSE AND HIS USE.

BY JOHN GILPIN.

CHAPTER IX.

LONG MARCHES.

THE care of the horse on a long "dawk" is one of the points on which a beginner most needs advice. There is no reason why a horse in good, hard case should not travel 40 miles in a day occasionally and there is no reason why he should lose condition over it, even in the hot weather.

All saddlery should be looked over beforehand. The saddle should be evenly stuffed, the numdah should be soft and free from holes and knots, and the girths soft and clean. The bridle should fit accurately and there should be no tags of leather hanging about to chafe the horse. It is a mistake to have a saddle restuffed immediately before a long journey. If the saddle requires attention it should receive it a few days earlier so that the flock can settle down to the shape of the horse's back during rides of ordinary length. The same is true of shoeing. A horse should be shod at least two days before starting so that we may be quite sure that no injury has been caused to the feet.

The horse should be fed at such a time that he will have finished his food about an hour and-a-half before starting. After finishing his food he should be racked up or muzzled to prevent his eating his bedding or hay. If he is racked up on a hard floor he will not stale so a little straw should be put under him before he is led out to induce him to do so.

The rider should look over the horse carefully before mounting to satisfy himself that all is in order, the curb chain of the right length, the saddle in the right place, the numdah well up in the arch of the saddle and secured to it by the straps, the skin smoothed under the girths, and the girths neither too tight nor too loose.

On a very cold morning it is as well to trot the horse for the first mile to increase his circulation and to prevent him from taking a chill from being suddenly robbed of his blanket. In warm weather it is well to walk the horse at first until he "finds his feet."

The best pace to travel at on kutcha roads is the canter. It is most comfortable both for man and horse. On metalled roads the trot is supposed to be less jarring to the legs. Every horse has his own "dawk pace" and should be allowed to settle down into it. The hotter the weather and the longer the journey the shorter should be the canters. When going really long journeys with one horse I get off and walk beside him for a short distance after each canter or trot. The relief to the horse is immense. The first time I dismount I look to the girths. Some horses distend themselves when being girthed up with the result that the girths are really too loose though they appeared to be properly adjusted at the time. When dismounted it is well to look over everything once more lest something should have escaped you before starting.

When owing to the hardness of the road you have to trot it is well to change your rise from one leg to the other occasionally. Say you start your trot by sitting down as the off fore comes to the ground. After a couple of miles you should change so as to sit down as the near fore comes down. This equalises the wear and tear of the legs. The change is effected by remaining up on the rise for an extra beat before sitting down. You cannot do it by bumping in the saddle. It is quite easy to remain in the air for two beats and to sit down on the third, and this brings you on to the other leg.

If there is no chance of baiting upon the road the horse's food must go with you. The simplest way to carry it is to tie up the mouth of the nosebag which should then be very firmly secured to the Ds. of the off side of the saddle. The nosebag should not be tied close up to the Ds. or it will chafe the horse. It should dangle at the end of about a foot of cord and will then not rub the horse at all. A forage net full of hay may be hung on the other side but this is rarely needed in India where grass or bamboo leaves are generally to be had on the road side. The bamboos, however, shed their leaves in the hot weather, about April, and are not to be depended on at that time, at which grass also is scarce.

Give your horse a drink whenever you get an opportunity after the first few miles, especially in hot weather, and remember to water him before feeding and not for some time afterwards. Food should be given in small quantities at intervals of from two-and-a-half to three hours. A horse has a small stomach and large intestines so his stomach has to be at work a good many hours a day to fill his belly. Fast work on the top of a large feed might cause colic so it is better to give about 1 to 1½lbs. of oats at a time rather than a full feed. By small feeds given at judicious intervals, a horse will keep his condition in spite of long marches, especially when his rider eases him by dismounting and walking by his side for half a mile or so after each long canter. In addition to the oats I often pluck bamboo leaves and feed them to the horse as I walk along, and also do so from his back when he is walking. This gives him refreshment and saves time. After feeding them with the bit in the mouth one should see before cantering on that the horse's mouth is empty. Leaves will sometimes get caught up in the bit and will choke the horse when he tries to swallow them on starting to canter. Out pigsticking I have known horses to choke badly when suddenly jumped into a gallop with their mouths full of thatching grass.

A horse should always be taught to lead freely. A man behind him with a whip will soon teach him to step out, or you can touch him lightly behind the girth with a whip held behind you in your left hand as you lead the horse with your right.

Seven miles an hour is very fast travelling over a long distance with one horse. If you have a horse at every ten miles you can travel ten miles an hour and more, and I have ridden one horse twenty-two miles in two hours, but if you are going forty miles with one horse and there is no urgent reason for great speed it is well to allow yourself about seven hours for it. In the hot weather it is well to start an hour before sunrise so as to get your horse under cover before the sun is at its hottest unless there is some place where you can rest during the heat of the day. With a good moon one can travel very comfortably at night but I do not believe in travelling long distances on dark nights. One has to go slowly and that means being a very long time on the horse's back, and I do not think that the absence of sun compensates for the extra hours spent on the road. Some horses feed badly in the open at night and stare about looking for jackals and wild pigs instead of eating their food and so waste valuable time.

If one has to go a long journey without having had time to lay dawks it is a very good plan to take a spare horse or two with one. I always train my horses to trot freely in hand and sometimes lead one on each side of me and change from horse to horse every five miles. In this way one can travel long distances at a great pace for a horse with no weight on his back is not easily tired. If two people are travelling and have only one spare horse it is better to take it with them than to send it on dawk. In this way each horse can get a rest in turn.

Sometimes led horses will try to bite or play up. In this case the led horse's head should be brought close to the hand. The longer the rein the more the horse can play up. If a fresh led horse tries to break away circle your own horse to the side on which the led horse is. He can then do very little and will soon behave himself. With practice led horses give no trouble though mares are apt to snap at each other. Horses travel better in company than alone as they do not get bored by the length of the road.

When starting early in the hot weather the best of use should be made of the cool hours so as to be able to save the horse when it gets hot. A steady pace should be set and kept. It is a great mistake to set a fast pace if one has far to go, tempting as the early morning may be.

In very hot weather it is a good plan to make short halts under shade as a respite from the direct rays of the sun has a most refreshing effect on the horse. The rider should always dismount when halted and, in hot weather, should turn the horse's head to the breeze. In cold, stormy, and rainy weather the horse's tail should be turned to the wind.

When travelling on a hot weather evening one should keep one's eye open for Nor'westers. These storms come on suddenly and are sometimes extremely violent, and are accompanied in many cases by hailstones which drive horses mad, so one should seek shelter when heavy clouds approach from the north-west. The lee side of a horse is as good shelter as any. Light sheds are apt to be blown down and trees also are dangerous owing to their liability to be uprooted in these storms as well as on account of falling branches and lightning. In the Nor'wester season travelling in the afternoon should be avoided if possible. Woolly, white clouds drifting up from the south-east in the morning are very apt to come back in the form of a Nor'wester in the evening.

Before starting on a long ride, especially if the weather be hot and one's breeches thin, it is a good plan to rub the inside and back of the thighs and knees with veterinary vaseline or Cuticura. This will prevent chafing. If one does chafe vaseline should not be applied. The wound should be washed with a two-and-a-half per cent. solution of carbolic acid in water and should then be dressed with boracic acid powder and covered with sterilized wool or lint. Carbolic acid should be dissolved in warm water as it does not dissolve readily in cold. If a man finds that he is chafing while riding he can sometimes obtain relief by altering the length of his stirrup leathers and thus bringing another part of his leg into contact with the saddle. Thin merino drawers prevent chafing to a great extent. I have found that the best treatment when one has to ride on a raw chafe is to smother it thick in Cuticura and to put a smear of the ointment on the breeches where they cover the gall. I have ridden thirty miles thus and found the gall rather the better than the worse for the journey.

Great care should be taken that no part of one's cloak or anything else attached to the saddle touches the horse's back. Once the horse is sweating freely the least touch of anything will make a sore.

Lemco
The original and only genuine Liebig Company's Extract of Beef.
It has long been known that LEMCO is not only perfectly digestible in itself, but it enables one to get much more nourishment from other foods partaken of.
Its action on the digestive system is tonic; for instance, many children and dyspeptics who cannot digest milk can do so if a little Lemco be added to it. There are many valuable uses of Lemco besides the making of beef tea and the strengthening of gravies and soups.

THE ENGLISH COUNTY CRICKET CHAMPIONSHIP.

By winning their match at Northampton Warwickshire became champion county of England for the year. The representatives of the Midland county have won their position by splendid cricket and may be congratulated without reserve. Since the end of June they have played in wonderful form, obtaining in 12 matches 54 points out of a possible 60. They won nine of the 12 games outright and were in front on the first innings in the other three. When the season began nothing was more unlikely than that Warwickshire would take the honours.

There is a very valid reason, apart from the merits of Warwickshire's achievement, why cricketers throughout England should find ground for congratulation in the Midland county's triumph. It gives promise of an increased stimulus to public interest in the game. Hitherto it has been possible at the beginning of any season to specify definitely five or six countries destined to provide the champion; the others could quite safely be left out of the computation. The influence of this fact has not given an impulse to those counties outside the inner circle. Nothing succeeds like success. But so long as there is a reasonable hope of success courage is maintained, and a fair measure of endeavour and help are assured. Not much had the remaining counties of lifting themselves into the premier position.

Warwickshire has produced a remarkable cricketer—a young man with brilliant gifts as a player himself, with conspicuous capacity for rousing the enthusiasm and exciting the admiring emulation of others. The county owes to Mr. Foster its success. As a record of achievement a thousand runs with the bat and well over a hundred wickets with the ball stands exceedingly high for an amateur. It has been truly said one must go back to the early eighties when A. G. Steel came to the front with meteoric flash, for a similar revelation of superlative all-round quality. The Warwickshire captain has helped his county for three seasons as a bowler. This year he has far eclipsed his previous performances with the ball, and has proved besides one of the most dashing of British batsmen. He stands among the general averages very high both in runs and wickets. But he has likewise proved himself an ideal captain, giving heart and encouragement to his men, carrying them with him to victory by personal magnetism.

The season began badly with the match against Surrey. The eleven was without a head. Mr. Foster was the man wanted as captain; but he did not then see his way to take the position, and was even on the point of withdrawing from first-class cricket. Happily for Warwickshire, he was induced to continue his services and to accept the captaincy, with the result that the trend of events was completely changed. He imparted a bold and adventurous spirit to the style of play; he inspired courage, he stirred hope, he created a backbone. The British public began to develop a keener interest in the county's career; they supported the home matches in numbers far exceeding the experience of previous seasons. The financial aspect is excellent and funds, it need hardly be said, are not an insignificant factor in the maintenance of cricket efficiency. With a commander of such outstanding capabilities there is no reason why Warwickshire, having emerged from the lower ranks, should not continue to make a bold fight in the forefront. Such steadfast friends as Mr. Byrne, Mr. Bainbridge, and Mr. Cartland, who have stood by Warwickshire cricket in its days of depression, have a deserved reward in its triumph. Warwickshire did not meet either Kent or Middlesex. Where there are twenty counties it is not possible for each one to play each other. The Midland county's victory would in ordinary circumstances ensure for next year a fixture card in which all the leading counties would be included; but the visit to England of the Australians and South Africans in 1912 may possibly prevent some of them extending their programme. Appended are the batting and bowling averages of the champion county:—

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Calcutta Monsoon Racing Season 1911 came to a conclusion on Saturday last after a series of nine days' racing. This is a larger allowance by one day than we usually have at this season of the year, and the Stewards' experiment has proved an undoubted success. The dates were so arranged as to give a six-days' meeting within a fortnight or a little more and so as not to clash with the opening dates of Poona big meeting and thereafter there followed three Extras. The object was to attract outside support and as was noted in our last issue it was attained. The innovation is popular with both owners and the public and if this system of condensation could be carried to an even greater extent, we think it would tend to give us even better racing still. It is a severe strain upon horses to ask them to keep strung up to concert pitch during some of the worst months in the whole year, and this season we have been more than usually unfortunate in our weather. The prolonged drought in the earlier part of the season very seriously hampered us and bore heavily upon both the equine and human population. It also gave us a very hard course upon which to race, and as a very large percentage of the races at these meetings are over obstacles things were made proportionately more difficult for those in charge of the arrangements. That so high a measure of success has been achieved redounds to the credit of the Executive all round. We shall probably find next season that even a larger number of visitors will come to Headquarters to race in the autumn and everyone who has the interests of local racing at heart will no doubt join with us in expressing the hope that we shall see this expectation realised. The principal point of interest in connection with the past series of Monsoon Meetings is the good class of horse that we have seen out and particularly in the jump races. The results give us leave to hope that the good racing we have had over obstacles portends better steeplechasing and hurdle-racing in the cold weather. Though sad experience in the past makes us diffident of building too much upon this, there are we take it better prospects in the coming cold weather season than we have had for some years past. In Poona there have been a good many jumpers seen out and Mr. A. A. Apcar for one will be very well supplied with cross country horses of class and there are also other owners who may, it is to be hoped, be induced to come eastwards and give the Calcutta and Tollygunge Meetings their support. There have also been a good few jumpers purchased in England this season. In Calcutta this autumn we have seen horses like Craigendorrie, To Kalon, Tommy Daw, Pilot, Maisonette, Mimicry, Blix, Levi, Idle, Pacific, Frank, Farthing Bun, Jaffa Girl, Suffragette, Dooneen, etc., out in jump races and some of these, at anyrate, are class enough for the more ambitious steeplechases at Tollygunge. Craigendorrie, To Kalon, Politesse who raced over obstacles at home of the new ones are all quite good enough to hold their own amongst the best that we are likely to see in handicap chases at the steeplechase meetings and another horse that must not be lost sight of is Captain Brough's staunch champion Mahoney Boy, who is said to jump well and to be designed for this class of enterprise in the future. Blix also, though by no means as young as she might be, has shown extremely good form and is now probably as clever and safe a conveyance as any in the country. Pilot is a remarkably fine stamp of jump horse and is, in our idea, quite class enough to make his mark in the open arena. Levi is another very good sort and though he has not had all the luck he deserved this year he has on occasion shown us that he is able to both gallop and jump. Pacific is another horse of much promise, likewise Frank, who was not always the safest of jumpers. Farthing Bun is another who has shown much improved form and though her energies may be confined to the minor fields of horse enterprise she has demonstrated that she is able to hold her own with a class a bit above the "hunter." The pony jumpers have not been so numerous, but here again we have seen several of a good stamp. Ormley, Lacrosse, Lionel, Charge, Shannon Lass, Stella II., Bandy Leg, Lola, Albatross, Spec, Loch Lily have all competed at these meetings with more or less success and a number of these have won. On the flat there has also been a fair class of horse and pony seen out and amongst those who have been most successful are Wise Hawk (2), Atropine (1), Bird of Freedom (1), Craigendorrie (1 on the flat 2 over hurdles), Downland (1), Elpis (1), Gilliflower (1), Isabela (1), Lasso (1), Light Metal (1), Mahoney Boy (2), Mallinyook (1), May Kenley (1), Miss Clare (1), Moira (1) both the last-named also being possibles for cold weather jump races, Northwood (2), Ormley (2—one of them on the flat), Politesse (2) Proprietor (2), Royal Colours (1), Sidonia (3), Winsome (1). Amongst the owners there has been a close contest for first place and up till the last meeting Mr. A. N. Das was leading, Mr. Evers' win with Scotch Girl on Saturday enabling him to beat his rival by a very small margin. Mr. Gutschke and Mr. J. D. Scott are also close up, the former gentleman with only two horses having done extremely well, as out of the sixteen times that his colours have been out they have scored four wins. Mr. Evers has the proud distinction of topping the list in all departments; he is the biggest winning owner; he has ridden more winners than any other person, professional or amateur, and he has trained more winners than any professional. Mr. J. D. Scott is head of the professionals and Butlin is well up. Amongst the jockeys Ruiz and Williamson make a close thing of it, the former beating the crack cross-country professional by one only. J. Davis, Fraser, Bloss and Trahan are all well to the fore and the first-named amongst the light weights, has shown some exceptionally good form and has ridden with good judgment and great dash. Williamson is a great acquisition to the ranks of the cross-country jockeys and a man of his extended experience is bound to get a very large share of the riding in the coming cold weather season. The following figures will speak for themselves as regards all other details:—

THE Calcutta Third Extra Monsoon Meeting was run on good going and in fine but warm weather. The course was on the soft side but was none the worse for that. The racing was of good quality but the results were somewhat disastrous to the fortunes of backers as not a single favourite won and in many cases the elect of the "fancy" went down very badly indeed. Bad starts and accidents at the gate were in many instances accountable. In the Second Consolation Plate for horses something charged the ropes and caused the gate to fly up, the consequence being that six of them got away and four, The Witch, Yum Yum, Mandeville and Annahean went the full course, their jockeys being under the impression that it was a start, and disregarding the advance recall flag which was up signalling "no start" rode the race out to a desperate finish. The Stewards ordered these four horses to go back and rejoin their field in spite of the owners claiming to be exempted under C.T.C. Rule 119 which, although it does not specially mention a case such as this, does so by implication, as it provides that there shall be no penalty under Rule 100 exacted under certain conditions of which a case like this should be one. It would, however, be a very good thing if the C.T.C. Rule 119 were revised and were made to state specifically, as the English rule 36 (ii) does that in a case like this owners need not run their horses a second time. The Jockey Club Rule reads :—

> "36 (ii). A start in front of the starting post, or on a wrong course or before the appointed time is void and the horses must be started again as soon as practicable, but in the event of any horse running the course from a false start or from a void start the owner may with the consent of the Stewards, withdraw his horse from the race; the horse shall nevertheless be considered as having started."

There is nothing like this in the C.T.C. Rule which after merely embodying Rule 141 Jockey Club Rules, has the following addendum :—

> "When such an order (i. e., an order for the race to be run over again owing to its having been run over a wrong course at wrong weights or if the judge is not in the box) any horse may be withdrawn from the race and Rule 100 shall not apply."

It is evident from this that the C.T.C. had in contemplation such cases as are specifically provided for by the Jockey Club rule, but why the English rule was not embodied in the Indian code which in many other particulars slavishly follows the English one, does not appear. Considerable discussion was aroused and the action of the Stewards in compelling these four horses to run again was much criticised. It is, of course, desirable that this thing should be put beyond all possibility of doubt. We wonder what would be said in England supposing there were a breakaway for the Guineas and four valuable three-year-olds ran the race out under the impression that it was a start and were then compelled to go back and run it again. In Calcutta the Stewards doubtless stand upon their Rule 109 which says that a horse once under the starter's orders must run in the race except in cases of accident. Rule 119 qualifies this but does not go far enough and is not as explicit as the English Rules. The whole of the C.T.C. Rules badly require revision, for there are many points—one of them the present Dead Heat rule—that might with advantage follow the Jockey Club rules. The rules as to starting declarations are also badly in need of alteration and amendment, but we slavishly cling to old tradition in this country and a thing that did 30 years ago is believed to be good enough to carry on with to-day.

Backers' misfortunes commenced early, as Light Metal was selected to win the Farewell Plate and at the weights nothing looked better, but in a close finish she was beaten a neck by Scotch Girl. For the fifth Amateur Hurdle Handicap Suffragette in a field of four was backed at odds on to win, but when it came to a close finish Jaffa Girl beat her all to nothing, giving her 8lbs. For the Pony Consolation Plate Lacrosse was undoubtedly a good thing and they also backed Charge. Lacrosse is very bad at the starting gate and was away almost last, Ormley, slipping the field and compelling the favourites to a very punishing pursuit, won by one and three-quarter lengths. For the Jumpers' Flat Race Pilot and Blix were both fancied, the latter probably carrying most of the public money, but she was beaten before the home turn and Pilot was also collared about that time, Frank and Dooncen fighting it out to a short head in the former's favour. In the Consolation Plate for horses, to which reference has alread been made, Etna was a warm favourite, and after Mandeville and Co. had run their little burst it looked an even better thing than ever for Mr. Burjorjee's mare; but the unexpected once more turned up and Downland, who came with a strong run in the last half furlong, won comfortably from Culverin, Etna a moderate third. In the last race, the Balaclava Handicap, all three of the fancied ones, Kim, Juba and Desmond, failed to connect and Cairo and Swashbuckler who were each at 12 to 1 had it all to themselves, the former winning in good style at the finish.

This year's St. Leger like many another before it has resulted in the unexpected happening, for although Prince Palatine was undoubtedly "expected" by his connections, as evidenced from the confident way in which he had been backed for three weeks and more before the race, the public favourite was King William, Lord Derby's colt retaining this position up to the last moments, his starting price being 6 to 4. As has so often happened before the extra 2 furlongs and 132 yards has discovered the soft spot, for not only was the favourite beaten but he was routed with signal slaughter, Mr. Pilkington's horse, according to the accounts so far received, having the race won a long way from home and passing the post six lengths in front of Lycaon, who was three lengths in front of King William. Recent public form did not encourage the belief that Prince Palatine was a better colt than King William, for his defeat of Phryxus from whom he was getting 7lb. in the 1½ mile Gordon Stakes at Goodwood, a race after which he was well backed for the Leger, did not on paper look quite good enough. We were faced by the fact that King William in the Ascot Derby, 1½ miles, had made a hack of Phryxus at level weights and we also had, to cap this performance, the excellent form King William had shown behind Swynford and Lemberg in the Princess of Wales's Stakes. So that it was a fair presumption to conclude, as the majority of people apparently did, that King William was probably a few pounds in front of his rival. The Leger course, however, finds them out if they are not the real and unadulterated "sticker" and it has proved so in the case of King William. Prince Palatine's tabulated pedigree was published in our last issue and students of the science of selection will no doubt have concurred that it would be very difficult to fault it. Glare, his grand dam, goes back to Ellen Horne, one of the jument base mares according to the French idea and Persimmon, who is Prince Palatine's sire, traces back to all the great ladies in the Stud Book such as Mrs. Ridgeway (dam of Vedette sire of Galopin) out of Nan Darrell, Martha Lynn (dam of Voltigeur) Queen Mary (great grand dam of Hampton and dam of Blink Bonny) Ellen Middleton, Pocahontas (dam of Stockwell, etc, etc, etc.) and numerous other "stars." The dam's pedigree is, however, the one that is most worth dissection, as Lady Lightfoot traces straight back to Paradigm dam of Paraffin by Blair Athol. Glare was by Ayrshire (Hampton—Atalanta) Atalanta by Galopin. Lady Lightfoot is by Isinglass, who gives her the Sterling and Stockwell strains and Isinglass' dam Deadlock traces back to the Dutchman's daughter by The Flying Dutchman (by Bay Middleton). The pedigree is a collection of excellencies. Prince Palatine is a No. 1 horse on Bruce Lowis' figures as Paradigm was a No. 1. Persimmon is a No. 7, vide Teterrima his great great grand dam.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—The first day of the closed meeting came off on Wednesday, which being a holiday brought up a fair number from Bombay, and with almost all the books standing up it assumed quite an important aspect. Fields were more than fair, but in almost every instance punters scored, contrary to the state of affairs last year. Poona is very full just now, and one was glad to see so many G. R.'s riding.

First on the card was the Hurdle Plate with six runners, and, though it was his first run here, the pony Cocoa was well backed with Mauser, and the two went out equal favourites from Ashdown. Unfortunately the pony's pretentions were settled at the first lep, where he came down on landing. He hurt his shoulder badly, but all were glad to see Mr. Miles soon recover after a lucky escape. From here Mauser assumed command and at the mile had a lead of several lengths from Utopian and Ashdown, who in turn were clear of Farewell with Small Scotch out of it. From the half mile the leader's advantage began to be reduced till at the last fence the front three were well together. A good race ensued, but Mauser stayed on from Ashdown, who came up along the rails to bring home the place money.

On the betting as well as in the race, the Lingfield Plate rested between two, Dojan winding up better favourite than Aden, Little King next. Dilerjang made most of the running, but as they faced for home Aden came into the lead closely followed by Dojan. These two made a great race of it, and only right at the finish did Dojan claim an advantage.

Unlucky as he has been to frequently place without winning, the five furlongs was on paper a good thing for Noomas, but he went out at fair odds thanks to money for Nelson and Dinar in particular, Nimar and Sirkar taken at long prices. Mars, then Framroz, cut out the pace, Nelson coming forward as they turned with two others of the stable, Nimar and Six Fifty, well up. Before the distance, however, Noomas came through, held Dinar and was able to go away again from a late run by Sirkar.

A field of nine went for the mile, and in fairly open betting Guinea Merchant retained his pride of place from Submit and Harry Johnson, Macedonia next. The last named shooting out in front of Harry Johnson made the running to the bend, where he was done. Submit here joined the other only to be shaken off, but Guinea Merchant was going too strong for any of them and won a good race.

The public had to wait for a lead in the Open Polo Plate, Chinook and Little Corporal settling down in that order with Blunkey warming suddenly from about fifteens. Wee Nan got the best of the start, then Little Corporal led on the rails, but, after fighting out the last furlong together, Blunkey just got his neck in front on the post.

Naturally the Kempton Park Plate attracted most attention, Bachelor's Knot being a warm favourite again, Obo and the two C.-B.'s, Cowslip and Valiant, about equally well fancied next. As expected, it took his syces all their time to hold Valiant, and it was some time before the field could be let go; the horse in question following Obo out, only to drop back. Lady Lomond, Sans Souci and Cowslip then were close on Obo, and at the three Bachelor's Knot ran up third. It promised to be a good race down the straight, but the favourite rolled badly, and anyway Obo had something in hand. Cowslip just beat Lady Lomond for a place, but the former came in without his leathers, which makes his placing the more creditable to his rider.

Lastly the "moral" of the day, Tofic Pasha being at threes on, Good Shot and Little Officer better fancied than Sir Jamal. All gave a certain amount of trouble and Tofic Pasha got away badly. He could, however, afford this and came up with the two next fancied as they turned for home. Good Shot finished gamely, but had no chance whatever with the favourite.

Saturday was probably the hottest day we have had this season, the occasion being the concluding day of the first part of the meeting. There were six races, all handicaps, and as betting was generally good the books had the better of the argument, though no really long priced one got home. The sport was good, and we look forward with interest to future events, though we are promised a Governor's Cup day without the donor's presence—in fact it is on the cards that H. E. will not supply his usual contribution. This presumably in substantiation of his views!

We first got going with the Poona Grand National, for which important event a field of only four went out. Opening out at a slight shade of odds on, Sholto remained so whereas Mauser expanded but was always better fancied than Utopian. Sholto set out to make the pace, then he and Mauser ran together for over a mile, the latter part of which saw a very hot pace set. These two were on their own, and, after a bad peck at which he lost an iron, Farewell was some way out of it. At the six Mauser shewed signs of feeling the pace, and from here Utopian began to draw on him and Sholto to go clear. The black was going well within himself and the race was not in doubt. The other two took the last jump together, but here Mauser came to grief, Northmore failing to remount till Farewell also had passed him. It was consequently somewhat of a straggly finish.

In the mile for Arabs nothing was found to stand out, Lookman being at threes with Tachreet and Brigand next in demand, in fact all but a couple came in for some support. Most of the running was made by Asfundier, who carried on into a place, but the race devolved into a match at the bend, where Lookman outside drew up to Tachreet on the rails. Lookman was under the whip some time before reaching the post, but nevertheless was able to stay on by a head in a very good finish.

Some fair class was out in the mile and a quarter Visitors' Plate, Gallileo's consistent running making him favourite only to be superseded by Ballymaclure, next being Lady Spring and Lancasterite. Devereux was out of the race, otherwise it was a perfect start and an uninteresting race. Royal Scotland was first away, then he, Lady Erna and Obo were together in front of Gallileo and Ballymaclure, the leaders later being joined by Vancouver. The last named and Lady Erna fell back soon after Royal Scotland did so, Obo left in command to the three. Here Gallileo shot up and, leading round the turn, had everything settled. Obo struggled on and staved off The Cockatoo and Ballymaclure, but Lady Spring beat him for second place without being able to fully extend Gallileo.

Next came the round the course race, the Sholapur Plate, Merrily being preferred to Grand Duke and going out equal favourite with Dawood Beg. There were only four runners, and they were never separated much till the last bend. Grand Duke went out to make the running from Young Japan, Dawood Beg of the other two being first to make a move. Five furlongs from home they were pretty well bunched, Merrily coming into second place, but he failed to stay it out, whereas Grand Duke had plenty in hand and was never troubled at all, though Young Japan came again well.

A very open affair on paper was the Eclipse Plate over five furlongs a great run on Lady Portland making this exceptionally well shaped mare favourite from Paul Pry, others fancied being Chivalry, Punt and Malmsey. Chobham cut out a very solid pace from Chivalry, Sequent and Malmsey to the turn, Punt bringing up the rear. Lord Carlyon was first to pass the leader, but failed to stay and Paul Pry went out holding Chivalry safe. A furlong from home Punt was seen to have made up his ground, finding an opening on the rails and catching and passing the leader with more ease than most would have believed possible on seeing his position in the first couple of furlongs. Pincher came with a late run and snatched third place from Chivalry.

Several again were well backed in the last race, which included a moderate lot of sprinters, Sinclair being favourite from Vazir, Bay Middleton and Electric. Vazir was first out from Pundit, then Electric took a slight lead. As they turned Sinclair came at the leader, but Electric staved off the challenge with a good deal to spare. Grey Mist came down with Meahjan, who came in as though he had had a nasty spill, but there are no serious results.

Just as we go to press a telegram reaches us announcing the fact that the Stewards of the W. I. T. C. have reinstated Mr. Percy Fischer, who was warned off in 1905 over the Key West affair.

At the June meeting of the Boulder Club Joe Trenoweth, jockey, was disqualified by the stipendiary stewards of the W.A.T.C. for two years for malpractice. Trenoweth rode Gaelic in the Farewell Handicap, and one of the stewards asserted that he saw him deliberately interfere with Agnostic, Trenoweth was refused leave to appeal against the disqualification, and he brought action against the Chairman of the W.A.T.C. to restrain that body from continuing the disqualification. Trenoweth stated in evidence that his earnings had averaged £800 a year for the last three years. Mr. Justice Rooth dismissed the application with costs.

It is with great regret that we have to record the death of H. H. Maharajah Nripendra Narain Bhup Bahadur of Cooch Behar, which sad event occurred at Bexhill-on-sea on the 18th instant. The Maharajah was only 49 years of age and his death will be much deplored in sporting circles, for His Highness was intimately connected in this Presidency with sport in all its branches. A great shikari, his big game shooting parties in Cooch Behar will ever be remembered by those who had the good fortune to be among his guests. In his day a splendid polo player, he as recently as 1906 was in the Calcutta Polo team which played before the Prince of Wales: he was also a fine tennis player and well above the average of most amateurs at cricket, racquets, billiards, and other games. He used to race for the love of the sport and at one period his stable was extremely successful at Calcutta meetings: he owned some very fine horses, among them Highborn, who won the Viceroy's Cup in 1892 and 1893, the Merchants' Cup in 1893 and 1894, and the Durbungah Cup in 1892; Good Hope, who won the Durbungah Cup in 1893 and the Metropolitan Stakes in 1892; Camillus, who won the Durbungah Cup in 1889; Tabletop and Jack in the Green, who dead-heated for the same race in 1884; Pickwick, who won the Metropolitan in 1894; Predominant, the famous English pony, who carried off the International Pony Stakes in 1893 and was subsequently sent to the stud in Australia. In 1909 First Bell won the Eclipse Pony Stakes for His Highness and last year (1910) the same pony dead-heated with Token for the same race. The last race of importance that His Highness won was the Civil Service Cup last February, in which First Bell was victorious, and on returning to Calcutta scored again at the Seventh Extra Meeting in the Kalighat Plate. The Maharajah had been ailing for some months but it was only a fortnight ago that we learnt of the serious nature of his illness. Subsequent bulletins had revived hope for his recovery and the news of his demise comes as a shock to his many friends.

The Rev. Mr. Swann, an old Cambridge Blue, has sculled from Dover to Calais in three hours and fifty minutes, which constitutes a record.

Warwickshire, the cricket champion county, met the Rest of England last week and were beaten by an innings and 365 runs.

As will be seen from the reporting appearing in our cricket columns the Presidency beat the Parsees at Poona by 140 runs. The Hindus play the Parsees on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd instant, their team being as follows:—C. V. Mehta, Captain, (Bombay), P. Baloo (Bombay), P. Shivaram, (Bombay), K. Seshachari (Madras), D. Rai, (Bombay), K. A. Date (Bombay), S. K. Divekar, (Bombay), P. Vithal (Bombay), Oghad Shankar, (Kathiawar), L. Sempre (Karachi), Erashaw, (Poona).

Reserves: Kharawa (Bombay), W. B. Talpad, (Bombay), and Deodhar (Poona).

The following players have been selected to represent the Presidency in the Triangular fixture on the 25th, 26th and 27th instant:—Major J. G. Greig (captain), Messrs. F. R. R. Brooke, H. L. Simms, C. A. Tennant, K. E. Cooper, W. S. Halliey, Major Southey, Captain Tillard, and Messrs. V. E. Purcell, E. E. Christie and T. H. Watts.

The 220 yards Amateur Swimming Championship of England was won at Sheffield on Monday by Harold Hardwick, the Australian, in 2 minutes 33 seconds.

Mr. H. H. Hilton, the Amateur Golf Champion of England, has just won the American Amateur Championship. He tied with Mr. Herreshoff after 36 holes had been contested and won in the 37th.

The death is announced of Mr. Edward Whymper, F.R.S.E., the well-known Alpinist. Mr. Whymper was born in 1840 and when 21 years of age he ascended Mount Pelvoux; in 1864 he climbed the Points des Ecrins (the highest in the French Alps) in 1864, and the Matterhorn (14,780 ft.) in 1865. He subsequently visited Greenland and Ecuador, where he carried out explorations and ascended the Great Andes, and more recently travelled in Canada, exploring and ascending the mountains in the neighbourhood of the "Great Divide." Mr. Whymper was a Fellow and Patron's Medalist of the Royal Geographical Society, honorary member of the Geographical Society of Paris, of the French, Swiss and Italian Alpine Clubs and was a Knight of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazare.

Recently a party of Cockney motorists passing through the country between Moffat and St. Mary's Loch in the South of Scotland, caught sight of one of the goats which farmers in the district keep to graze on the precipitous places where sheep are hardly safe. The car was stopped and one of the motorists, it is stated, produced a rifle and fired from the car at the goat. After the eighth shot the goat fell and rolled down a steep slope into a stream. Another "sportsman" then descended from the car and gave the goat its quietus by cutting its throat. It is alleged that the spoils of the day's "sport" were then carried in triumph to the car, which at once resumed its journey.

The local explanation of the goat's untimely death is that the motorists took it for a stag, and engaged in impromptu "deer-stalking."

After an interval of eleven years a boxing match open to the public took place on the 30th ultimo in New York, with the result that £8,000 was paid by 10,000 men to see Matt Wells, the light-weight champion of England, whip New York's champion, "Knock-out" Brown, a tough, resourceful young pugilist whose achievements during the last twelve months have placed him in the foremost rank.

Brown, who is usually called "Knock-out" because of his supposed invulnerability, was simply a punching-bag for the clever Englishman. In the third round Wells, with a short, snappy right-hook broke the American's nose, and henceforth until the end of the tenth round, which was the limit, he contented himself with knocking his opponent about at will.

The match was the first to take place under the new law legalising ten-round contests without decisions when approved by a commission of three police inspectors. The newspapers, while devoting a full page to a description of the battle round by round, and of picturesque incidents inside and outside the hall, refrain in their editorial columns from discussing the ethics of legalised boxing, not so much because there is any objection to boxing as a form of athletics, but because the law which now legalises such competitions was promoted and secured by Tammany Hall. It follows that the control of boxing matches, and, more important still, of the profits, will, to some extent, belong to Tammany, which, to quote one of its former bosses, "isn't in business for pleasure, but for what we can get."

The match for the World's Heavy-weight Championship between Jack Johnson and Bombardier Wells fixed for the 2nd proximo has attracted the attention of certain religious busy bodies in England who are straining every nerve to have it stopped. Reuter tells us that the Chairman of the London County Council has informed the licensees of the Earl's Court Exhibition that the fight will seriously imperil their license. The latter have expressed their inability to alter the arrangements pointing out that similar contests at Olympia and elsewhere have not affected licenses. The latest news affirms that the promoter of the contest, Mr. James White, having offered to abandon the fight if he were indemnified for his financial loss, a Nonconformist Minister, the Rev. F. B. Meyer, has accepted and undertaken to raise a fund for the purpose. The minister, however, stipulates for the exclusion of the personal expenses of combatants and referee. The promoter states that he is unable to agree to this exclusion.

We hear that the fight has been denounced from the pulpits and it is surprising to learn that Lord Lonsdale deprecates the meeting taking place. Lord Lonsdale is the patron of British boxing and the donor of the English championship belts in each of the various classes and it will be interesting to hear his reasons. If the agitators succeed in preventing the contest taking place in England it will not put a stopper on the event for those interested will skip over to France and bring off the fight in Paris.

Owen Moran, the Birmingham boxer recently beaten by Wolgast in the fight for the Light-weight Championship of the World, has signed articles with Jim Driscoll, the Feather-weight Champion of England. They are to fight for a purse of £2,600 on the 28th October.

Mr. H. D. McIntosh, the well-known Australian fight promoter, has returned to the Commonwealth and interviewed in Fremantle made the following remarks:—"I am giving Jack Johnson £18,000 alone to make the trip to Australia and fight one or two bouts here. He will box under my management while he is the undefeated champion of the world. Besides Johnson I am bringing out for next season Sam McVea, Sam Langford, Jimmy Clabby, and one or two second-raters. All this has necessitated an outlay on my account of £50,000. McVea alone is to earn £4,000 for his fight with Johnson. Langford will get a minimum of £1,000 for each of his five fights. Despite what a number of people say, Bill Lang has a chance of beating Johnson, because, with the exception of McVea, no other fighter has had a chance of studying Johnson's methods, and he is certainly the best white man living. Johnson says that himself. The champion will sail by the Orvieto on 6th October. His sparring partners will include Bob Armstrong, the famous coloured boxer, who prepared Jeffries for his test with Johnson, and Monte Cutler, another well-known exponent. The champion has agreed to meet Sam McVea, Langford, and Lang, and if undefeated will tour through India, China, Japan, and the Straits Settlements. The contests in Australia will be the last serious fights of his career. Johnson says that after he has finished with McVea, Langford, and Lang he intends to retire from the ring. Other boxers coming out under engagement to Mr. McIntosh are Jim Flynn and Dan Flynn.

The Calcutta Racing Pigeon Society will shortly be commencing work in earnest. The rules have been framed and printed, and are now being circulated to existing members; intending members or others interested can obtain copies of the same on application to the Honorary Secretary, Mr. F. E. Youd, 10, Government Place, East. The following races have so far been decided upon:—15th October from Naihati, 22nd October from Ranaghat, 20th October from Chooadanga, 5th November from Poradah.

After the flying of this programme, the Committee will then decide whether to extend the distances on the Eastern Bengal State Railway further north, or adopt a fresh route, so as to give members joining between now and the end of October an opportunity of competing over a new line of country on level terms, and to get the chance for the same amount of training as birds competing in the above races.

The services of a convoyer have been engaged, and this official will be available to take out members' birds for training stages on Tuesdays and Thursdays in each week. All birds for training stages should be sent to the Secretary's address not later than 7 A.M., on the above days, when they will be convoyed to the training stage and liberated.

Messrs. P. Orr and Sons have very kindly consented to present a Silver Cup to the winner of the inaugural race on the 15th October. The competition among the members for the distinction of winning the first race is very keen, and it is anticipated that some 40 or 50 birds will be entered for the event.

Mr. A. Ezra and several other sportsmen have also very kindly offered prizes for competition later on, and Mr. J. W. Fellinger will give a pair of young homers to the member who occupies the first place next to the prize winners in the race of the 22nd October. Mr. Wilson will similarly present a pair to the competitor occupying the highest position in the second race, who has not flown any birds in the first race.

The majority of racing pigeons are not yet through the month, but by the beginning of October training is expected to be in full swing.

An English sportsman named Sydney has approached R. Arnst, the World's Champion Sculler, on the matter of another race with Barry to take place on the Thames. He guarantees stakes and expenses to the amount of £750.

There will be no I. P. A. Championship Tournament this year, the Delhi Tournament being for the Delhi Cup only. The Calcutta Polo Club are giving a £100 cup to be played for in Calcutta during His Majesty's visit and the "no off-side" rule will be in force for the first time at a first class tournament in India.

A smaller attendance than usual graced the Mounted Sports of the Bombay Gymkhana held on the 13th instant. Tent pegging opened the programme and attracted a big entry. H. G. Meikle winning with Baird and Spence next in order. An affinity event followed: lady with tennis ball on racquet to ride a prescribed course. Her partner to ride alongside and assist her in recovering the ball should it fall from the racquet. This provided an exciting finish Mrs. Reynolds and H. G. Meikle just beating Mrs. M'Causland and H. F. Lodge. The Tug of War in half sections gave us lots of amusement and was won by H. G. Meikle and Knight Bruce who beat Baird and Pearson in the final. Knight Bruce won the Chatty Race from Pearson and Meikle and this was followed by the Cricket Stakes—a ladies' nomination: gentleman to ride with cricket ball and hand it to his partner, don pads and keep wickets for his lady, who bowls at them. When the wickets have been bowled down, the gentleman to remove his pads, recover the ball and ride home. Knight Bruce and Shanks finished first and second but were disqualified for not removing their pads and Mrs. M'Causland and Meikle were declared winners. The Pony Scurry ended in a most exciting finish, heads dividing the first three.

Some important provisions affecting animals are contained in the Protection of Animals Act, which has just received the Royal Assent. The maximum punishment for cruelty has been increased from three to six months and a fine of £25, while the period in which proceedings can be taken has been increased to two months. A private person may give another person into custody, on condition that the person so doing carries out the prosecution. In addition to providing for the destruction of animals which have been cruelly treated, a clause was inserted during the passage of the Bill through the House of Lords, inspired by the National Canine Defence League, the object of which is to prevent dogs or other animals being subjected to revengeful treatment after conviction of the owner, and also to provide a deterrent to cruel treatment of performing or other valuable animals, the loss of which would mean a greater penalty than would the imposition of a simple fine. Under this clause an order can be made depriving the owner of the possession of the animal which was the subject of the charge, if there is reason to believe that it would be the victim of further cruelty if left with its owner. In the case of an order being made for the forfeiture of dogs, the Canine Defence League is offering to find good homes for the animals and to bear all expenses connected therewith. The new Act also provides for the inspection of spring traps every 12 hours, and imposes penalties on those who sell poisoned grain or seed or place poison without taking reasonable precautions against access thereto by dogs, cats, fowls, or other domestic animals.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 1st September 1911.

If any doubt existed as to the popularity in London of the strong policy adopted by the Government for the protection of the railways, it would have been dispelled by the pitiful failure of the protest meeting in Trafalgar-square last Saturday. At the most some five hundred persons gathered to listen to the fiery oratory of the ridiculous Ben Tillett and his supporters. Of these a large number were loafers and others attracted by the notoriety of the speakers, or merely present because they had nothing better to do. Few in numbers and small in influence though are the Social Democrats of London, yet had the faintest suspicion of popular indignation been roused by the use of the military the meeting must certainly have swollen to some thousands. All the high-flown rhetoric of the orators lost itself ridiculously in the wide spaces of the empty square. It is very depressing to denounce a Government for enslaving a people and adopting as their model the tyrannies of the Middle Ages when the threatened victims will not even spare half an afternoon to join in a protest. The truth of the matter is that in London the soldiers, so far from rousing the wild indignation of a peaceful population, excited their interest and amusement. There are few things that the Cockney does not turn to a joke, and soldiers in the railway station bivouacking at the distant and lonely ends of the Victoria platforms or keeping solemn guard under the portico of Euston, excited a good deal of merriment. Indeed, Saturday's agitators missed a great opportunity. Instead of making themselves ridiculous by working themselves into perspiring incoherence, talking nonsense about Russianising England, they ought to have tried the easier task of making the Government ridiculous by laughing at its methods. All sensible people believe that the show of adequate force in London was justified by the proper anxiety of authority to minimise the chances of disturbance, but as events turned out in the Metropolis the number of railwaymen who went out was so small and their behaviour so peaceable that the presence of troops was not necessary.

* * * * * *

The strike is put behind us for the moment; the Government, the railways and the men are engaged in "conferring" and until their report is out our interest in the wicked business may be allowed to lie dormant. The trouble is by no means over, of course; the miners we are told are spoiling for a strike and already the alarmists are predicting a winter without fires. But these people have surely been discredited long ago; I dare say when my little family gathers round the hearth next Xmas Day to digest the traditional stodgy banquet and remember old friends and old days in "The Shiny" we shall be able to find enough ordinary combustile material in the scuttle wherewith to roast our chestnuts and boil the water for our modest Wassail bowl.

HAPPILY the football season opens next week. Street corner larrikins will now have something to occupy their minds and activities. Superabundant energy that in default of other outlets has had to relieve itself on plate-glass and policemen will be diverted into more harmless channels. The young hooligan will be enabled to expend it in yells of encouragement to his favourite players and howls of execration at their opponents (varied by occasional raids on the referee).

Those short-sighted reformers who rail at the passion for sport should bear this in mind. It is a splendid safety valve whereby many a window and many a head is preserved from being broken.

According to a social scientist, civilisation is responsible for the trouble given by the hooligan. It doesn't agree with him, and his temper is soured because he is hemmed in by the trammels of law and order instead of being in the wilds and fighting wild beasts. Put him in the jungle among lions and tigers, and he would be a perfect gentleman. I am in favour of putting him in the jungle forthwith.

THOSE Indian cricketers you sent us this season finished their engagements last week and will doubtless return in the condition my old head babco used to describe as "a pensive." They came over to learn and they have had ample opportunities for acquiring information I should say. The venture was a rank failure it must be admitted; it is quite clear the programme arranged for them was far too ambitious. In the circumstances it is not surprising that, after the novelty of the Maharajah of Patiala's enormous puggaree had worn off, they attracted practically no attention. I dare say the compiler of your weekly epitome of English sport will be giving you the usual statistics.

IN this age of vulgar curiosity and little mindedness we are gradually becoming afraid to do anything in public. Whatever we do we seem to see Mr. Sherlock Holmes eyeing us keenly and saying, "Obviously a bad lot; see how he carries his walking-stick; do you follow me, Watson?" In the old days, if one could contrive to exclude from one's face the brutal look of the born criminal, and from one's walk the furtive air of the innate sneak thief, one fancied that one was all right. But now everything appears to be a clue to character. Boy Scouts, we understand, when not engaged in flinging the squaler, can detect character from the boot-sole, and we once read an article in a monthly magazine showing that the expert can spot his man by the way he holds his hands. Now, in a weekly paper published in Chicago, we read that the manner in which a man holds his cigar is a sure key to his character. Photographic examples are given. Number five, we observe, that is to say, he who holds his cigar "delicately, between first finger and thumb," is "a thinker who never leaps until he looks carefully"—a useful man to have about you when there are banana skins around. Number twelve denotes a man who is "economical, but perhaps, from sheer necessity." It represents a hand holding a cigar-stump impaled on the blade of a knife. There is no safety from the modern sleuth. The only thing to do is to go about the streets in a complete diver's outfit.

THE premiere of the week was "The Concert," a three act comedy by Herman Bahr—English version by Leo Dietrichstein—which was produced at the Duke of York's theatre on Saturday.

Gabor Arany, the great pianist of the day, is pursued and flattered by a gay swarm of pupils, who throng his drawing-room while he practises. Sitting in mute admiration outside his door—"twenty love-sick maidens all"—they flutter round him when he at last appears, and weep and wail when he suddenly announces his intention of going away "to give a concert." He is an irresponsible creature, this musical genius, a spoilt child of fortune, and only his wife understands him, his whims and his oddities, his airs and his graces. "He's my baby," she says, "I can't send him adrift": and so she lets him go his way, feeling that, whatever happens, the wayward child will sooner or later return. One of his pupils, and the most favoured at the moment, is a Mrs. Dallas, and "the concert" which he has announced is but an excuse to retire with her to his bungalow in the Catskill Mountains. The husband of Mrs. Dallas, a shrewd, hard-headed doctor, in an interview with Mrs. Arany, suggests that they should follow the runaway couple, and see how the experiment has succeeded, for his one wish is that his wife should be happy, and if he finds that she prefers the musician to himself he is quite prepared to let her go. Needless to say, the elopement has not been a success: the love-sick pupil finds that the Master is most tolerable upon the platform and very intolerable in the bungalow. She is hungry, and he interrupts her breakfast; he frankly admits that she is only one of many; the very flower which she threw at his feet is cherished because it reminds him of his triumph—and not of her. There are stormy scenes between them, and she is on the point of leaving him and returning to New York when her husband and Mrs. Arany arrive at the bungalow. They very soon see that the elopement has been a failure, and that in a short time the wanderers will return to their respective folds. At first their jealousy is excited, for, in the most natural way, the doctor and Mrs. Arany profess ardent devotion to each other, and the musician is amazed that his wife can prefer any man to him. Then Mrs. Dallas, in a very charmingly written scene, is told by Mrs. Arany of the hundred and one anxieties that beset the path of the wife of a genius—especially of such a genius as her spouse—and in the end she returns to her big husband, and Arany admits that there is nobody quite so loving, quite so helpful, quite so watchful over all his needs as his own wife.

The play gave considerable pleasure to the majority of the audience, and there was much hearty laughter and applause for the many good things it contains. But it is not a wholly satisfactory piece of work, and many delightfully written scenes are spoilt by abrupt transition from sentiment to wild farce. Mr. Ainley played Arany extremely well all through, perhaps because he was the most understandable character in the play; Miss Irene Vanbrugh was very charming, very lovable, very tender in her motherliness as the wife of this fretful genius; Miss May Blayney was an admirable contrast as the silly little Mrs. Dallas; Mr. Charles Bryant was solid as the doctor, her husband; and a capital little sketch of the caretaker at the Bungalow was given by Mr. G. W. Anson.

IS the taste of the music-hall changing, or rather reverting to an older type. Last night I was at the Empire, and in the midst of a brilliant but unsentimental entertainment one of the artists sang a coster song to a child and its "mummy." It was declaimed over a cradle containing an imaginary—or "property"—baby; and the singer told us how he had dreamed one night that baby had died, and that when he woke up he found that his pillow was wet with tears. And this distinctly sentimental effort was received with tremendous applause; it was one of the successes of the evening. The Empire audience is evidently less cynical than many of us have imagined. I suppose the success of such a song as this is due to its essential truth, even if that truth be over-expressed and underlined to excess.

Sentiment, however, sometimes has its checks. The other evening a young journalist darted into Fleet-street at some early hour of the morning to get a breath of fresh air; and as he strolled eastwards he watched a flock of sheep coming up from Ludgate Hill. And he thought of the old lanes and the high wind-swept moors of his youth. "You don't often see a sight like this in Fleet-street, do you" he said, turning with a smile to a stranger by his side, who was also watching the novel sight. "Ach, no," said the stranger, adding after a slight pause, and with a strong Hebrew accent, "Do you vant to puy a vatch?"

Shooting.

LETTERS ON SHOOTING.

BY BALDATCHA.

LETTER No. IX.

KEEPING HAND AND EYE IN TRAINING DURING THE HOT WEATHER.

IN old days this was effected by the use of the two-stringed pellet bow called goolail. We are told that some of the best professional shots in England are to be seen in the close time aiming, as they move along, a forefinger, walking stick or an umbrella at any cock sparrow, pigeon, or other mark. It is said that one very celebrated marksman as he walks down Bond Street or Piccadilly indulges in this practice, but like the old writer on the partridge previously quoted "this I do not believe." The habit must, however, be no mean advantage, and in shooting as in all other kindred pursuits it is useless to expect to excel unless one keeps hand and eye working together. It is a great pity that the good and trusty goolail, with its tempting looking French-grey clay pellets, does not now form part of every youngster's kit on first joining his station, to be procured as a matter of course with his chilamchi (brass basin), newar (tape) bedstead, camp table, etc.

Properly strung, and supplied with very hard, smooth pellets made from the best clay obtainable in the neighbourhood (the soil in which rice loves to grow is A1), they must be of even weight, this being the secret of good practice, no one could wish for a more powerful and accurate bow. The native goolailee fits the little leather pellet holder exactly opposite his left hand, and as he releases the string, by a twist and turn of his left wrist to the left gets it out of the way of the speeding bullet. A clumsy and very unsatisfactory method as we all have found, as we survey our damaged knuckles and fingers. If, however, instead of twisting the left wrist the necessary direction is given to the flight of the bullet by slightly turning the right forefinger and thumb which holds the pellet to the left, (the leather pellet holder being fixed so as to deliver the projectile just over the left knuckle of the left hand) there is no possibility of a damaged finger and an enormous increase of accuracy as well of confidence is the result. The best bows are those made from the male bamboo—so called—and will last for many years and kill a vast amount of vermin. If the bow is vaselined every now and again, it adds to its looks and to its life, in a very remarkable degree. Catgut for the strings can be procured in any bazar. The use of this bow at moving marks—crows, parrots and other birds flying—keeps the hand and eye in, and gives added interest to a walk. When the first day of snipe shooting arrives it bears unmistakeable witness to the value of this pastime in keeping up one's timing. Many rascally paroquets, crows, sparrows, and flying foxes can be brought down on the wing by this wonderful bow, the advantages of which are very great. It is also useful in dealing with the rat, a varmint who to his other crimes has taken to himself the added villainy of disseminating plague by means of his personal parasite—the rat flea—according to the opinion expressed many years ago by Professor Hankin and which is now being assiduously preached by those with authority to speak from experience. Armed with the goolail, if the horse owner sallies out by night to his stables an attendant carrying a hurricane lamp, the light being shaded from the rear by a piece of paper, he will see every rat skip nimbly into a hole on the approach of the light, only to pop out again immediately to squat blinking at the glare with his bead-like eye and wonder what it can mean, till a pellet ends his speculations and his life.

Odol is the first and only preparation for cleansing the mouth and teeth, which by virtue of its special property—peculiar only to Odol—exercises its antiseptic and refreshing powers not only during the few moments of application, but continuously for some hours afterwards, by which means the entire oral cavity is completely protected against all microbic fermentation.

When the world was young in the early seventies, one "Chicken H.——." of the 10th Hussars and a callow youth in the Fighting Fifth engaged, like the gabies they undoubtedly were, in a duel with pellet bows at the Naini Tal Club. Both fortunately escaped without serious damage to eye, feature or limb, which was considerably more than they deserved as the many onlookers sagely opined. For inducing the mischievous monkey folk to quit, no more efficient persuader than the pellet-bow can be desired. To see an old Paddy of a buck-monkey, clothed with all his aggressive swagger and effrontery suddenly leap several feet into the air and fall to violent scratchings and pickings at his smarts, and then dash off and vigorously assault the nearest monkeyman to him, is enough to make the beholder call for three cheers before he dies of laughing.

Snakes in the open or when they have intruded themselves unbidden and unwelcome guests into the house, the civet cats who invade the roof, the sparrows that bark at you in the early morning and render sleep impossible, all find the goolail an astonishing enforcer of discipline.

The amusement is not an expensive one, 8 annas a month to the man who makes the pellets in their thousands, the bow itself costs the same current coin and requires a few annas a year to provide renewal of catgut, this is the sum total and limit of your expenditure.

If by an unfortunate chance you happen to plug a native, when firing at a vagrant cat, or the detested brain-fever bird, no more serious damage is done than can be covered by a small silver piece, nor is human life in jeopardy as with the unsafe and dangerous little pea-rifle, Winchester, Quackenbush, etc. More accurate than a catapult, and far more powerful, no bungalow is complete without a two-stringed bow.

Natives are said to be wonderful shots with these bows, but one seldom comes across these gentry. Up-country I have never seen them do aught but take close shots at cocki-oli birds. Inferior pellets and a lamentable want of accuracy seem to be the chief characteristics of the ammunition and performances of these sportsmen. That very big man, Colonel A. J. S. of the old 11th Bengal Infantry, and Colonel "Grupp" of the 5th Fusiliers could give very many points and a beating to the best native shooter I have ever come across.

As a companion for a walk in the close season a goolail affords great fun, and gives the smaller vermin pause. The terrific force with which these bows can drive a pellet has to be seen to be realised, and one can well believe the old yarn of the goolailer who was challenged to fight a duel, and exercising his privilege to name his weapon chose the goolail, on the understanding that his adversary was at liberty to use a muzzle-loading gun, and stand facing him at the regulation 12 paces. At the word go, the goolailer was to be allowed to commence firing his clay pellets, while the gun-man was to begin to charge his piece. If he succeeded in loading he could blow a big hole in his opponent. He never could have loaded that gun—not he—his fingers would have been smashed, his eyes put out, and if he escaped with his life he would be lucky.

For driving small birds from crops or garden at home and for shooting young rooks, the goolail would come in very well. Effect is largely enhanced by substituting lead bullets for clay ones, very much increased power and penetration is obtained by this change, but the size of the bullets has to be reduced and of course the trajectory is much higher.

Little Eddie (interrupting)—"Is we to believe this story mamma?"

Mamma (amused)—"Just as you please."

THE AYAH.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—There is an article in the September issue of one of the Home journals which will delight all Anglo-Indians who may chance to read it. Curiously enough, it is under the heading of Natural History, and nearly three columns are devoted by the author to speculations on an ayah, whom he saw, with her pallid charge, on the beach. As the atmosphere is full of railway troubles just now, let me hasten to explain that this is not the sort of charge employed against strikers, but signifies the pale faced child, whom this Indian servant was looking after. A ring shines from the ayah's nose, and she is described as wearing this adornment with the savage simplicity with which a tiger wears its stripes. She breathes her wild breath through the circle, or plays her trembling nostrils over the hoop. This latter operation sounds very acrobatic, and likely to terrify small infants. I do not think, however, that ayahs with noses like this are common.

The wild and savage creature's walk is next described. She is said to move with a liquid flow, and a bend forward from the hips: while long strides are necessary in order to maintain the upright position. The stooping ayah stalks like a tiger moving among the lights and shadows of its native jungle.

Then she sits gravely apart, with the grave intensity of a fragment of thunder-cloud. The soothing noises she makes, with their wild cadences, are elementary. It were easy to imagine her killing whoever would harm her charge.

The author goes on to surmise that the Indian climate perhaps shaded the spirits of the children the ayah was looking after, and touched their mood with wildness. Also that association with dark natives and their grave way had kept them closer to Nature. The grouping of them about the ayah, suggests to the author the attitude of cubs with their dam. He goes on to say that the free limb sweep of the dusky sisterhood points earthward to the long stealthy step, where, for balance, the forelegs must needs touch the ground.

I am sure that memsahibs will read this enlightening article with terror, and determine thence forward that if such feline characteristics are patent in the average ayah, it will be no longer safe to hand her precious babies over to them.

There is the comforting reflection, on the other hand, that the ayah instead of being, as we have always imagined, an Oriental of deep and subtle ways, versed in every art of deceit, is really only a wild simple tigress keeping guard over our kids.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER.
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot Devon.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.
"Truly yours, (Signed) SAML. W. BAKER.

OOTACAMUND HUNT RACE.

STEWARDS.

BRIG.-GEN. H. F. MERCER, C.B. | MAJOR A. A. DUFF.
COL. K. R. C. BUTLER. | S. COX, ESQ.
COL. J. DESARAJ URS, M.V.O. |
Honorary Secretary:—CAPT. THE HON'BLE C. A. J. ANNESLEY.

First Day, Saturday, 16th September 1911.

THOUGH only a sprinkling of the much wanted rain fell yesterday, the going at Hobart Park to-day was tolerably good owing to a thick covering of grass on the racing track. It was hot at noon when proceedings opened with the Willowbund Plate for which four went. This was somewhat easily secured by Sir A. Lawley's shapely mare Guinevere, though it was expected that John on the form of his previous gallops would pull it off The Hobart Park Plate furnished also a quartette; for this there was nothing in it with Golden Dream who won as she liked.

Then followed the luncheon interval. In the afternoon it became pleasantly cool and the attendance much better. No bookies were present, but two totes did a brisk business. Punctually at 2-30 P.M. the principal race was run, six out of the seven entries accepting. Naughty Novice let throughout, Beau lying rather too far behind was not brought up soon enough and could not catch the mare who won by a length, Arabian Night three lengths behind third.

For the Loch End Plate eight ponies started, Beresford making hacks of the rest of the field and winning by 100 yards The Ladies' Plate next figured and drew a classy quartette. Double Ruff winning from Widgeon who was fast catching him

The last event proved another fairly easy win for the English mare Guinevere nicely ridden by Mr. Nicholson.

Proceedings were all over by 4 P.M the pleasantest time of the day, and all regretted that all the events could not have been run off in the afternoon.

We pray for rain before next Wednesday to make the Downs rideable for the Point to Point races

Owners and trainers had ample inducement to patronise the meeting on the second day, as the going was excellent, and the contest for the Champion Sprint showed every promise of attracting a representative field of some of our best "short-cut" performers. With every detail favourable no one was surprised to find larger fields turning out than we have experienced for many weeks past, while the muster in each of the three enclosures was a distinct improvement upon that of the first day. Again, if anything, the weather was brighter, and a most entertaining afternoon's sport was furnished, while backers more than held their own. Results:—

YORK.

The ancient fires of York require much fanning to burst again into full flame, as despite the up-to-date antagonism of gate-money meetings, the embers have always been quietly smouldering, and the renovation of the stands has supplied the requisite material to create a shining light. Plucky outlays of the executive, who spared no expense in doing the thing thoroughly, are to be commended, for the public now enjoy the comforts of one of the best arranged stands in the country. A high wind had driven all threatening showers away by mid-day, on Tuesday and a bright, breezy afternoon gave the sun every chance, while the course, green as emerald, had rarely been in such grand condition. Stockton had in a measure paved the way and the rank, wealth, fashion, and beauty of the country was well represented in the county stand, while inside and out the attendance was a particularly good one. Results:—

Everything happily combined to furnish a complete success for the Ebor day, with the most perfect weather free from Tuesday's gale; a record attendance, a record field, and the best going galloped over the Knavesmire. It is possible that it brought together the largest assembly that has ever graced a similar occasion, and the capacities of the new enlarged stands were tested to their utmost limits. Yorkshire puts Robbie Burns's favourite Auld Town of Ayr in the shade for brawny lads and bonny lassies, and an Englishman might well keep proud of the beauty of his countrywomen when casting an appreciative eye at the pretty picture presented to the club enclosure and grand stands. The fashion enclosures were crowded, and beyond the distance on both sides of the course the holiday crowd mustered like a swarm of bees. A great day entirely. Results:—

It was evident yesterday that most of the popular interest had died out with the Ebor Handicap, as the attendance of holiday-makers on the Knavesmire was as companies to battalions, while the stands were not so strongly patronised, though the cheaper rings were well filled. There was a falling-off, too, in the club enclosure, in which King Manuel was again present. The weather was more unsettled, clouds obscuring the sun, and towards the close a sprinkling of rain fell, though it was hardly sufficient to call for umbrellas. Results:—

WINCHESTER

.22 Caliber Automatic Rifle.

This is the only automatic rifle using rimfire ammunition, and consequently it is inexpensive to shoot. It's rapidity of fire makes it a great game getter, and for shooting rabbits, birds and other small game, it has no equal. For running game it is particularly desirable, as a succession of rapid shots may be fired with accuracy while holding the rifle on the game. It holds ten strong shots, each of which is fired by simply pulling the trigger. Shoot one and you'll realize it's great effectiveness. It is strongly made and simple to shoot.

Winchester Rifles are Sold by All Dealers.

THE ALL-INDIA ELEVEN AVERAGES.

With a drawn game at Bristol on Saturday the Indian cricketers brought their tour to a close. It would be idle to pretend that their matches have attracted much attention. Beaten eleven times before they won a match they made no appeal to the public. It is clear that the programme arranged for them was too ambitious, but in one respect they were unfortunate, Mistri—admittedly their best batsman—only taking part in three matches. No doubt they have learnt a great deal in this country, and as they came to England mainly to improve their cricket, it would be unfair to insist on their failures. It must be said, however, that their fielding, about which so much was said in advance, fell far below the standard expected.

What to do if Your Horse Pulls

THE KEY TO HIS MOUTH IS A RENSUM REIN.

Sir Gilbert East, Bart., wrote:—"You have found the key to my excitable mare's mouth. I have now the pleasure of riding an animal chock full of life, with complete control."

You have three courses open if you own a puller. You may go on using him, to your great discomfort; you may sell him, to your loss; or you may cure him, if you know how. I am a veteran horseman with a reputation to lose, and I stake it upon the assertion that in my "Rensum" Pamphlet I will show you how, for £1 1s. (the cost of a "Rensum" Rein), you may, without severity, cure the worst puller. The Pamphlet will prove to you that by a new method you may turn a confirmed puller into a snaffle bridle hunter, or polo pony. The "Rensum" Pamphlet will also show you how you may cure a rearer, kicker, or other vicious horse.

THE IRISH OPEN CUP TOURNAMENT.

The Duke of Westminster, who has undertaken to take a team to America next year to play for the International Cup, had the satisfaction this afternoon of assisting his Eaton team to win the final of the Open Cup Tournament in Dublin. They beat the Woodpeckers by 5 goals to 2, the match taking place on the nine acres ground in Phœnix Park, and being watched by a crowd of at least 20,000 spectators. In the reserved pavilion were the Lord-Lieutenant and the Countess of Aberdeen, and many well-known people in Irish society. At the close of the match the cup was presented to the Duke of Westminster by the Earl of Aberdeen, who accompanied the presentations with his congratulations on the fine victory.

Popular sympathy was obviously with the Woodpeckers, who had won this cup for the past two years and only required to win it now to become absolute possessors of it. Moreover, Captain Hardress Lloyd and the Hon. Aubrey Hastings are Irishmen, and every good shot they made was loudly cheered. Another popular player was Lord Dalmeny, who played splendidly, and at the close there was a special ovation for Mr. Cecil Nickalls, who scored all five goals for his side, and throughout showed that form which made him famous three or four years ago.

Eaton thoroughly deserved their victory. With the best match ponies now in the Duke's stable, they were, of course, wonderfully well mounted, and this superiority undoubtedly told its tale. It enabled them to be in their places, to be quicker on the ball, to recover their positions, and generally to outpoint the Woodpeckers. Apart from that the side was undoubtedly a better balanced and more dependable one. Lord Rocksavage and Mr. Pat Nickalls combined in offering a tremendously stubborn and safe defence; the Duke of Westminster was safe, and Mr. Cecil Nickalls was at times brilliant, and always working desperately hard. His form was an astonishing improvement on what he showed in London, and proves what he is still capable of when well mounted and in full practice. On the losers' side most credit probably belongs to Lord Dalmeny, whose keenness and exuberant hitting were a feature of the match. Mr. Hastings was not hitting as straight as he usually does; Captain Wilson played very well; but Captain Lloyd was not at his best. He was inclined to dally too long when in possession and frequently he failed to get that very essential length on his backhanders.

In the matter of detail it may be mentioned that Mr. Cecil Nickalls shot the only goal in the opening period, and although Eaton had the better of the second period, the single goal marked up was to the Woodpeckers, for whom Lord Dalmeny scored with a brilliant shot. The ball had been driven up the middle by Mr. Hastings, and it looked like going through when Lord Rocksavage saved. This time Lord Dalmeny met the ball with a swift near-side shot, and it came off all right. Eaton took the lead in the third period. It opened with the Woodpeckers hitting out from their back line, the ball being met by Mr. Cecil Nickalls and given to the Duke of Westminster, who re-passed it in as he swung across the goal.

Soon after the throw-in at th centre, Captain Lloyd made a good run up. Lord Dalmeny backhanded to Mr. Hastings, and the latter scored. The third goal of the chukker was got by Mr. Cecil Nickalls, after a dribbling rush. There was no score in the fourth period; but the game went in favour of Eaton, who were now more than holding their opponents. The superiority in ponies was particularly marked in the last two periods, throughout which heavy rain fell. Mr. Cecil Nickalls scored a goal in each, the last one being a particularly fine shot from a long and difficult range. Eaton thus won by 5 goals to 2.

Eaton.—Mr. Cecil Nickalls, the Duke of Westminster, Mr. P. W. Nickalls, and Lord Rocksavage (back).

Woodpeckers.—Lord Dalmeny, the Hon. Aubrey Hastings, Captain H. Wilson, and Captain Hardress Lloyd (back).

Staff College Junior vs. 23rd Cavalry.—These teams met in the final on the 9th instant in the presence of a large assembly. It was a splendid game and an extra chukker had to be played which gave the victory to the Staff College. Captain Ward met with an accident shortly after the start and had to be conveyed to hospital with an injured arm. The accident being the result of a foul, the Staff College Captain availed himself of the rule which permitted him to demand the retirement of one of the opposing side and Captain Kirkwood was selected to stand down, the game being played three aside after the start of the second period. First Chukker.—The Staff College did most of the attacking at the start but all their efforts in front of goal were abortive and the period ended without score.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play till Paske got possession and scored. Then the Staff College attacked and Fisher put the teams on terms, combined play by Black and Fisher resulting in another goal soon after.

Fourth Chukker.—Fast up and down play, several chances of scoring being missed by both sides. The Staff College obtained one more goal in this period.

Fifth Chukker.—The Staff College took the ball down and Cunningham scored. Then the Cavalry took up the attack and added a third goal to their score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Cavalry pressed hotly, Egerton hit a goal and another point added soon after made the score five all. Play was fast up and down the field but the score was unchanged when time was called.

CRICKET IN POONA.

PRESIDENCY vs. PARSEES.—The annual match began on the Poona Gymkhana ground last Thursday. Major Douglas won the toss and the Presidency took first knock, Major Douglas and Major Greig going in first. The former was run out for 4 with the score at 11 and Tillard joined Greig but runs came slowly and at 23 Greig was caught in the slips for 13. Simms, the Kathiawar player, took his place and began to hit merrily and the score was taken to 47 before Tillard was bowled. Cooper who came in next was bowled first ball and Brooke followed him in and we were treated to some excellent batting. In half an hour Simms and Brooke carried the score to 86 when Simms' wicket fell. Kington made 3 and Tennant was next man in. At the luncheon interval the score was 128 for 6 wickets, and on resuming Tennant and Brooke continued to pile on the runs: at 183 Tennant was out to a fine catch by Driver, having contributed a faultless 62. Captain Yates failed to score, Armytage made 8, and Major Southey then joined Brooke. The innings closed at 20 past 4 when Brooke was caught after a careful innings of 62 compiled in nearly two and a half hours. The Presidency total was 225. The Parsees then went in and fared badly, losing 5 wickets for 55. Oomrigar was first to go scoring 25 out of 40, P. D. Chothia was out for a duck, S. M. Chothia made 1, Kapadia also contributed a single, and the Parsee captain only made 3, Driver was not out 25 when play closed for the day. On Friday Driver was caught off Southey's second ball and Parekh joined Kapadia. This couple scoring slowly took the total to 110 before Parekh was dismissed for 26, Canteenwalla was next in and Kapadia's wicket fell without addition to the score. Watcha, the next batsman, was out for 6 with the score at 124 and Madon and Canteenwalla took the total to 135 before the latter was out hit wicket, the Parsees being 90 behind on the first innings. The Presidency second innings opened disastrously, Greig being bowled first ball, while the last ball of the first over disposed of Tillard for 4. An adjournment was made for lunch soon after but on resuming Watcha bowled Simms for 2. Tennant and Douglas then came together, the former leaving with the score at 32 when Brooke joined Douglas. A long stand of an hour and a half was terminated with a rather doubtful decision of l.-b.-w. against Douglas who had compiled 51 in two hours and a half. Brooke continued to play carefully and just before play closed for the day he topped his century, the score being 208 for 8. The innings closed for 229 the next day Brooke having scored 115. The Parsees were thus left with 320 to make to win. Oomrigar and S. M. Chothia opened the innings but the former was out to the third ball of Southey's first over Driver then came in and we were treated to a spell of stonewalling, Driver keeping his end up while Chothia attended to the scoring. At 40 Driver was bowled and Kapadia and Chothia came together. They ran the total to 85 before Chothia was bowled for a well played 50. P. Chothia only made one, and Parekh who followed him in was also out for a single. Mody then came in and the century was put up shortly before the interval, an adjournment for lunch taking place with the fall of D. Kapadia's wicket. Mody took a little time to settle down but hit strongly when he got steady and gave a good display, being eventually out for 42. Canteenwalla made 4, and P. Kapadia 10 and Madon and Watcha were left in. They each made 10 and the innings closed for 170 leaving the Presidency victorious by 140 runs. Score:—

TWO NEW FLIES

FOR

IN

CEYLON

Unfortunately sketch cannot show colour.

We have probably the largest staff of fly dressers, and certainly the largest stock of fly tying materials, of any firm in the World; and we make our own hooks, a matter of no small importance, as it enables us to guarantee that they are perfectly tempered.

If any difficulty in obtaining please write direct to Works.

THE "O. P." FLY.
No. 6 size.
This fly will kill Rainbow trout anywhere, and on larger size hooks is proving a wonderful fly at home for Grilse and Salmon.

THE "HOLT MODEL."
Both brown trout and Rainbows will take this on No. 2 hooks and we have no doubt at all that it would prove attractive to the small Indian fly takers.

CALCUTTA RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE most interesting match played this season was the one between the West Ridings (holders) and Calcutta on the latter's ground last Saturday. The weather and ground were all that could be desired and there was a large attendance, but I noticed that the club enclosure, although pretty well filled, was not half as crowded as in days gone by. But the Rugby Challenge Cup Tournaments in recent years have not claimed the same distinctions as those held in the latter eighties and early nineties when the Calcutta Club were the champions of India, with the exception of the year 1891, when the Bombay Gymkhana carried all before them. Calcutta's last success in these tournaments was in 1900 and although the old club has since put up many a good fight, often appearing in semi-finals and finals the C. F. C. have not once annexed the prize during these long eleven years. With very unsatisfactory results in the recent League competition, Calcutta's chances for the Cup were very slender, but some of the old experienced hands were induced to turn out and the strongest fifteen available was pitted against the West Ridings. Prior to Saturday's match a victory for Calcutta was a little out of the question, but the wearers of the old red and white jerseys put up a far better fight than was anticipated and in the end lost by 11 points to 3. The Dukes had carried all before them again at Bombay having beaten the Gymkhana and the Leicesters without having had a single point recorded against them, but Calcutta had the satisfaction of spoiling this fine record, the distinction falling to Brown, the old Scottish International, who from an excellent dribble managed to score a try. The standard of Rugby this year has been very poor and our annual knock-out competition only drew six entries—just half the number we had last year—and even the display by the West Ridings has been a little disappointing, the team certainly not being as strong as they were last season, and it is perhaps lucky for the Dukes that Madras did not come over, for had the Southern Presidency a team as strong as they had last year I have no doubt that Madras would have won. Against Calcutta on Saturday the West Ridings had decidedly more of the game during the first twenty-five minutes, but on the amount of pressing they did, the Tykes should have led by more than 6 points to nil—two drop goals was all that the Dukes scored up to half time. The forwards and halves were seen to great advantage during this period, especially Morris and Wilson, the two halves, but the men in the third line missed some beautiful chances of running in, owing to indifferent passing. Thomas made the fatal mistake of hanging on to the ball too long; while Turner and Firth did not pick up properly, and but for this, the Dukes would have got over. Knowing that the West Ridings have invariably been seen at their best after ends have been changed, everybody present were under the impression that a big score in their favour would be registered during the second half, but the supporters of the local club got a pleasant surprise and Calcutta, playing for all they were worth, not only had quite as much of the play as their opponents, but they managed to reduce the margin, Brown scoring a try which Cumbertlege just failed to convert. However, just before the game finished a round of passing by the visiting team's three-quarters resulted in Thomas getting over. Morris failed in the attempt to add the extra points and Calcutta lost yet another year the score being 11 points to 3.

Calcutta deserve credit for the excellent play during the second half, but I am of opinion that the West Ridings did not extend themselves on resuming, for it is not likely that Calcutta, who have had little practice, could be expected to last better than a well-trained team like the Dukes.

The Nomads match against the United Services on Friday was a tame affair, the latter winning by 31 points to nil. Williams, the Moseley player, was unable to represent the Nomads, but it is a pity that with so many Rugby players in Calcutta the Nomads could not get out a better side. On Monday the Rifle Brigade rendered a good account of themselves against the West Ridings and considering that the regiment only started playing Rugger this season to be beaten by 15 points by the champions of India is by no means a disgrace. Lieutenant Durham is the only officer who represented the Fort team. Last evening the West Ridings and the United Services met in the final an account of which will appear in our next issue. The Services had out their best side available, but unfortunately had to do without the services of Trenchard one of the finest forwards in Calcutta. Calcutta are sending a strong team to Madras and I would not be at all surprised if they won the Cup. We wish Calcutta and the Madras Tournament all success.

There has been a marked improvement among our junior local teams and if it continues the standard of Rugby is sure to improve. On Tuesday the Calcutta "B" and the Rangers met in the final of the Gloucester Cup and although I have never seen so many novices appearing in a junior competition yet the game was a hard one and we all trust that the Rangers will stick to the game. The match resulted in a penniless draw and the re-play takes place to-morrow (Friday). The Medicals, St. Xaviers, Le Martiniere, Police, Mohan Bagan, and Oriental Sporting are also to be congratulated on having turned their attention to the good old game, and next year may we have many more teams, and a Cup open to school teams only, to be played on the same rules as the Cadet Cup.

THE NASIK WEEK.

THE annual Golf week at Nasik terminated on Saturday last and was every bit as successful as any of its predecessors. Details of the competitions will be found below.

The Annual General Meeting was held on the 13th instant with the Hon. Mr. H. R Greaves in the chair. The report on the last year's accounts was read by the secretary from which it appeared that the club was in a very satisfactory state. A proposal by Mr. W. P. Pechey that the Club property should be vested in two trustees was carried unanimously. A proposal by Capt. Betts that the subscription of the local members should be changed was put back for considerations by the

LONDON, 1st September 1911.

THE railway strike has not been without its effect upon all from the highest as well as the lowest in the land, but in each case the motor vehicle has done much to alleviate the inconvenience. No doubt in view of the complications following the strike the King in his journey North on Monday, from Bolton Abbey, where he had been staying with the Duke of Devonshire, to Moy Hall, near Inverness, where he is visiting Mackintosh of Mackintosh, made use of his motor-car during the first 96 miles of the journey to Carlisle. Bolton Abbey was left at half-past eight and Carlisle reached at noon, the King stating that he had enjoyed his ride over the hills of Westmoreland and Northumberland.

QUITE a number of firms have recently been compelled to make an unwilling trial of motor vehicles, and the results have been such as to ensure that they will become regular users in the near future. "It has opened people's eyes to the possibilities of motor transport," said the manager of a manufacturing firm to the representative of the Daily Mail. "We are receiving a large number of orders for vehicles of all sorts and sizes, from delivery vans carrying 24 cwt. up to 4 tons."

THE comparatively small use made of industrial motor vehicles, having regard to the seeming ample scope for their employment during the recent national strike in the transport services, has been commented on in the public press. To all practical intents the motor vehicle has been no factor in redeeming the situation. The dearth of fuel and the famine price it so rapidly commanded may have been largely responsible, but so far as relieving the public wants is concerned, such cannot be deemed a sufficient excuse. It surely was the duty of the trade and its organizing bodies to have anticipated a crisis on this score by "provisioning" the distributing depots and arranging for an efficient transport by road supplies. The thoughtful will not be unmindful of their late experience, the more notable since the breakdown occurred almost at the outset, and it will take a great deal of booming to rehabilitate the industrial motor vehicle as a practical and reliable means of transport and to remove the present impression of its comparative uselessness in an emergency from the mind of the public most concerned, whose recent dire necessity it did nothing to relieve.

THE great question during the past few weeks even amongst motorists has been how to keep cool—for even while out motoring the heat has been so intense as to be uncomfortable. The writer of motoring notes in the Birmingham Daily Post in dealing with this question, recommends that more use should be made of the Cape cart hood than is generally the case. The hood will be found to afford most welcome shelter in blazing sunshine, but to get the best results it should be kept copiously soaked with water, as the hood will be made cooler by the evaporation of the water. The glass screen and doors should also either be removed altogether or should be so adjusted as to allow the rush of air caused by the movement of the car to freely meet the passengers. Under normal weather conditions motorists complain of the draughtiness of the average hood, but now we are confronted by one of the rare occasions when this fault becomes a virtue. It has been noticed that the dashboards of certain cars are much cooler than others, weather and other conditions being equal. The explanation lies, it is suggested, in the vaned flywheel. The latter acts as a fan, and draws away the hot air that would otherwise accumulate under the bonnet.

THE thanks of all drivers of public service vehicles are due to Mr. C. W. Bowerman, the Labour M.P. for Deptford, who has introduced a short Bill for amending the Motor Car Act, which will render it unnecessary for them to take out duplicate licences. As the present system works, these men have to obtain the ordinary driving licence from the County Council, and for which the usual fee is exacted, and a police driving licence as well for which they are again mulcted. There is neither sense nor justice in such an arrangement, and we are only surprised that the matter has not been brought to the attention of Parliament long before this. Even though a man be so misguided as to elect to make motor driving his life's business, and thereby put himself outside the pale of the humanities—the motor-car being the unclean thing—it seems hard that he should have to pay twice over for the privilege of earning his daily bread. The Bill being an uncontroversial measure will doubtless be allowed to pass into law without opposition.

THE danger of engaging a chauffeur who has not passed the examination of some recognized club, institution or establishment, was well instanced recently in a case that was heard at Brighton. A chauffeur was engaged on the strength of a certificate of efficiency from a school of motoring, and at once proved his capacity and experience by badly damaging the car on his third drive. The owner brought an action against the instructors, and was successful in obtaining damages. The evidence which came out at the hearing of the case was, however, of a somewhat startling nature. It was stated that the man had, on the strength of six short lessons in the art of driving, been awarded a certificate of proficiency, and a prospective employer was informed that he had taken a complete course of motor lessons, and was a very capable driver. The danger to life and property that may be caused by allowing a man on the public roads in charge of a motor after a training of such short duration can hardly be too strongly emphasized. Our experience, and that of every qualified driver, is that a man gains but a superficial knowledge of motor driving after six lessons of an hour each. This case will bring home to all owners engaging chauffeurs that it is a duty to themselves as well as all users of the roads to enquire very strictly into a driver's experience, and if he possesses a certificate, to see that it is issued by a club or establishment whose certificates are beyond dispute.

Many delays and anxious moments are occasioned by, to use a racing term, "a non-starter." The usual mode of trying to find the "pebble on the beach" is to rush to the carburettor and joggle the needle. This, it must be admitted, is often effective; but, though a too weak mixture may be the cause of the evil, the reverse is oftener the case than is generally supposed. If the stop has been of only a short duration and the engine is still warm, flooding the carburettor may, and very likely will, spoil the mixture, and so sometimes the wait of a few minutes will do all that is required. If an excessive amount of petrol is injected into the cylinders, the mixture is too rich; a few drops are all that is necessary to insure a start, and if too much is put in, the mixture becomes overcharged, with the result that several revolutions of the crank handle have to be made and the surplus petrol evaporated before firing will take place. If the engine is warm when this trouble is experienced, though the rate of evaporation may be more, the chances of getting a spark are much less, especially if the jogging of the needle is repeated.

AVIATION.

The first official aerial postal service in Europe will start on Saturday, 9th September, when letters will be conveyed from Hendon to Windsor by aeroplane. The service will be in operation daily for a time, and while the fact is worth relating as the first attempt to utilise flight for industrial purposes, the actual commercial utility of the service is rather questionable.

The idea is rather to charge fancy prices for letters which will carry the aerial postmark, any profits accruing being devoted to a charity approved of by the Postmaster-General. Special pictorial postcards and envelopes will be used, and may be posted at a number of the leading London stores, and also at the Hendon aerodrome.

Details concerning the forthcoming Dieppe-Shoreham flying race have now been issued. The total of the prize money is to be £1,000. The date is 2nd September, and the time of start three o'clock. British competitors will start from Shoreham, and foreign contestants from Dieppe, so that they will pass each other in mid-Channel. Each competitor is to cross and recross the Channel, whether or not the same day to be decided by the respective committees. The first prize is £600, the second £200, and the third and fourth £100 each. If the weather is unfavourable the race will be postponed until the next day. The Channel will be patrolled by ships during the progress of the race. Since the foregoing was written, we learn that the committee of the Royal Aero Club have decided not to sanction the proposed race, as they consider that a flight of nearly eighty miles over the sea entails unnecessary danger.

An incident of very vast importance to those who have the interests of the British aviation industry at heart took place on the 15th instant. In connection with the Russian Army manœuvres two officers left Gatchina and made a reconnoitring flight round Krasnoe Selo, their mount being one of the nine Bristol biplanes ordered by the Russian Government. They returned after a flight of sixty miles in an hour and a quarter, and in spite of heavy showers and gusty winds had a valuable detailed report to present to their superior officer. Meanwhile other military aviators had flown over Gatchina keeping their comrades in sight. Similar flights were made on the following day.

The French aviator, Marc Pourpe, who had flown from Boulogne to Dover over night, started from Dover Citadel at half-past five last Monday morning, and made a flight of ten miles in the splendid time of six minutes, landing at the Golf Links near Shorncliffe Station. He first made a huge circle in the direction of Whitefield and back over Dover town to the Citadel, then swept along the coast to Folkestone, flying at a great height and inland to the golf course, where he landed safely.

The monoplane, after standing on the open drill ground all night in heavy dew, was very wet, and there was some difficulty in starting the engine. Pourpe had no mechanics, and it was only the volunteer services of an officer of the Royal Irish Rifles, and Mr. Eric Snepp, of Dover Aero Club, which enabled him to make a start. He went to Folkestone in compliance with a promise to deliver a message there.

Friends from Dover followed the flight by motor-car and assisted the aviator to restart for Boulogne at 9-40, the cross Channel journey having been delayed by a very thick haze. It would have been dangerous to cross before this lifted, as Pourpe's compass was working badly, and he was entirely unaccompanied.

The residents of Filton, near Bristol, saw some very fine flying on Monday last, when Mr. Graham Gilmour was testing a re-built Bristol biplane. After making a preliminary circuit over the ground in the neighbourhood of the Bristol Co.'s workshops, he went off for some distance in the direction of Horfield, and returned by a very sharp left-hand turn. Meanwhile quite an audience had gathered on the field at the back of the workshops, and Mr. Gilmour treated them to some very clever trick flying. First diving sharply to the ground he then rose again at a steep angle, after which he banked the machine very considerably in some sharp turns. A long switch-back flight followed, and Mr. Gilmour concluded his fine performance by coming down at a very sharp angle, bringing his machine to rest exactly opposite the door of the shop where it was to spend the night. During the flight Mr. Gilmour took his hands from the controls, and waved a salute to the crowd beneath, afterwards travelling for some distance with his arms folded.

An extraordinary occurrence happened on Saturday last at the Hendon Aerodrome when a foreign pupil named Hanot fired on the crowd present, killing M. Petit Pierre, engineer of the Bleriot school, and afterwards shot himself. Hanot undertook a course in aviation a week previously at the Bleriot aviation school, for which he paid £90. Apparently he was not satisfied with the progress he made, and on Saturday last demanded his money back. It was explained to him that this was impossible, and shortly afterwards he commenced firing an automatic pistol among the crowd and then turned the pistol on himself. Fortunately only one man was hit, M. Petit Pierre, and he succumbed next day to his injuries. After the firing, as Hanot was lying on the ground unattended, he took a razor from his pocket and cut his throat. Hanot died the next day within an hour of M. Pierre, at St. Mary's Hospital.

The Royal Aero Club have decided that, subject to protest, Vedrines, Valentine and Cody will share the prize of £250 offered by Sir George White and the 125-guinea prize offered by the British Petroleum Company in connection with the £10,000 aviation race to the competitors who, excluding the winner, completed the circuit with the most marked parts of the machine intact.

Some doubts which apparently arose at the last minute as to the buoyancy of the naval airship led to the arrangements for its reappearance in the open being abandoned after a day had been spent in getting everything ready on the 17th instant. It would appear that some difficulty was experienced in view of the railway strike, in obtaining sufficient hydrogen to completely fill the ballonets.

General Roques, the French Inspector-General of Military Aeronautics, carried out a tour of inspection of aviation schools by aeroplane one day last week. After visiting the St. Cyr School he took his place in a biplane piloted by Captain Eteve, while his staff officer was taken on board a second biplane. After an hour's flight at an average altitude of 1,500 feet they reached the military aviation ground at Etampes. The General was then conveyed on a Bleriot monoplane to visit two other aviation centres in the neighbourhood and returned to Paris by motor-car.

THE SALSBURY "ANTI-DAZLO" HEADLAMP.

An important point in connection with headlamps is that of obtaining a central beam of light that will penetrate a good distance ahead coupled with outer rays capable of lighting up the sides of the road to a considerably less degree. Furthermore, there should be as little glare, or dazzle, as possible to other users of the road.

Many different methods of attaining this end have been adopted by the various manufacturers, but not the least interesting is the method employed by the well-known firm of "Salsbury Lamps." There are really two distinctive features about their special form of construction, one being the "Anti-Dazlo" lens in front, and the other is the "Dublito" intensifier, that is situated just forward of the burner.

As regards the lens, this is made in either of two types one being built up from a number of horizontally disposed strips of glass, having highly-polished upper surfaces, but finely ground lower surfaces, while the other type of lens—that fitted to the lamp illustrated—is prismatic, and diverts the upward rays horizontally by virtue of its unusual shape. With the first of these the rays of light, striking obliquely against the internal upper surfaces of the strips or prisms, are reflected downwards, whereas those which strike against the lower internal surfaces are absorbed; and the latter model is made up in two parts, jointed horizontally at about a fourth the diameter from the top, with the inner surface of the lens perfectly flat, but with the outer face tapering from the centre up to the bottom of the top section, and with a similar tapering outer face across that upper section, thereby leaving only the lower half of the lens of uniform thickness.

Intensification of the beam of light is brought about by means of a small lens-mirror, or refractor, situated immediately in front of the burner. It is mounted in a support attached to the burner bracket, and can be easily adjusted. The front of the flame is thus utilised, and the light therefrom is projected by the large Mangin lens-mirror reflector—which is in the usual position behind the burner—in addition to the light from the back of the flame. It is claimed for this "Dublito" intensifier that over 50 per cent. increase in the volume of light is obtained. We give a diagrammatic sketch of the Salsbury lamp in section, showing the action of this device and also the principle of the front lens.

Within the lamp, between the front lens and the burner, there is also a polished reflector, which throws out a diffused beam of light at a very wide angle. And concerning appearance there is much to be commended in the design. That illustrated is 8½ inches high by 7 inches in depth, whilst the front lens is 5½ inches in diameter.

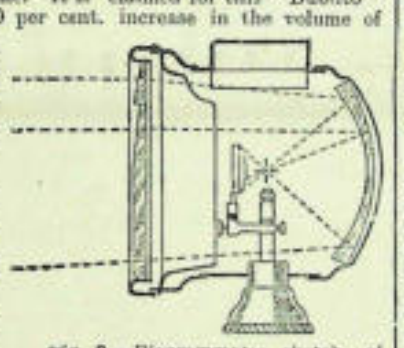

Fig. 2.—Diagrammatic sketch of the Salsbury lamp in section, indicating how the rays of light are intensified and deflected.

SOME MORE MICHELIN AVIATION PRIZES.

We reproduce herewith the translation of an interesting letter addressed by Michelin and Cie., to the President of the French Aero-Club:—

Sir,—The question is often debated as to whether the military aeroplane is simply a medium for reconnoitring, or whether, in a short time, it is destined to become a terrible engine of war.

By its use, can bridges and railway junctions be rendered impassable? Can the mobilisation of troops be prevented? Can fortresses be razed to the ground, and battleships be blown up? Or, to go even further, is it possible to destroy arsenals and powder magazines, and demolish guns and armouries?

Debate upon the first and second points is useless. The only reply is that, in the former case, a few machines would suffice, whereas in the latter, a whole fleet of aeroplanes would be necessary.

Let us try, then, to demonstrate the power of aeroplanes by practical tests. When once these tests have been carried out, we hope that both the Government and the public will not fail to realise the necessity of ordering, not only dozens, but five or six thousand aeroplanes from French manufacturers. After all, the cost will not exceed that of a battleship.

Accordingly, we place at your disposal the sum of 150,000 francs to be distributed in four prizes, which will be called "The Michelin Aero Target Prizes."

A prize of 50,000 francs will be given to the aviator who, in a single flight on or before the 15th August, 1912, shall have dropped the greatest number of projectiles into a circle having a radius of 10 metres.

The aviator must fly at a minimum altitude of 200 metres, and drop singly five projectiles, each weighing at least 20 kilogrammes, while passing several times over the mark.

In the event of several aviators having dropped the same number of projectiles into the circle before sunset of the 15th August, the winner will be the one whose projectiles are nearest the centre.

Another prize of 25,000 francs will be given, under the same conditions, to the aviator who, flying at a minimum height of 1,000 metres, shall have dropped his projectiles within a rectangle 100 metres in length and 10 metres in width. In the event of several aviators dropping the same number of projectiles within the prescribed limit, the winner will be the one whose projectiles, as before, are nearest the centre.

We are asking the Aviation Section of the Aero-Club to lend us its assistance in drawing up the rules and arranging the details for this competition.

Two other prizes will be given on the 15th August, 1913.

For the second year, we reserve the right to alter the conditions whilst retaining the original idea.

Only French civil and military aviators will be allowed to compete.

We have the honour to remain, Monsieur le President, etc., etc.

MODERN VOGUE OF THE PET.

Every dog has his day, they say, and this is surely the Day of every Dog. Never in all the long history of comradeship between Man and Dog has there been a time when the canine race was held in such high regard as now, when every care is taken by millions of dog-owners and dog-lovers to secure the comfort and well-being of one of man's most faithful friends.

The protection of Animals Bill, which has just received the Royal Assent, and now passes on to the Statute Book, marks a very decided advance in public opinion on matters affecting animals generally and dogs particularly, when compared with that widespread attitude of indifference prevailing thirty years ago. The new Act secures, among other things, the prevention of revengeful treatment of dogs or other animals after a conviction of an owner for cruelty, and provides a deterrent to the cruel treatment of performing animals. It also provides for the inspection of spring traps every twelve hours, and imposes penalties on those who sell poisoned grain or seed, or who place poison without taking reasonable precautions against access to it by dogs or other domestic animals.

Contrast this legislation with the comparatively hard time for animal life that followed the great hydrophobia epidemic in England. Many dogs were then destroyed, and there was universal muzzling. It is noticeable how much more secure a place the dog has gained in the affections of the English people, from the highest to the lowest classes, in the last decade or two. Instead of chaining the dog up in dull backyards or of muzzling the animal on every appearance in a public place, there is on every hand a remarkably demonstrative desire to make much of this most cherished among domestic pets. Societies innumerable now-a-days, exist for the protection, the breeding, and exhibiting of dogs.

There were last year in Great Britain 1,826,841 dogs in respect of which licences were issued. These were dogs that were happy enough to have owners and homes. To this number must be added 290,000 dogs happy in exemption from licence, making a total accounted for in the official returns of the Board of Agriculture and in the official accounts of the Inland Revenue Department of well over two million dogs. Upwards of an other hundred thousand may be added to this census of the dog life of Britain on account of ownerless, homeless dogs which always seem to manage to escape the policemen as well as the tax collector. The numbers show no very remarkable increase on those of ten years ago, when dog licences totalled 1,525,273, and exemptions totalled 346,346.

England has the preponderance of dogginess, with Scotland next and Wales third; and in England, Yorkshire, Lancashire, and London possess the largest numbers of dogs. During the last financial year for which returns are available the local taxation licences produced in London County alone £61,417 in respect of dogs, the county of Middlesex following with a contribution from dog licences of £20,039. There is, at a rough estimate, one dog to every twenty human beings in England, Scotland, and Wales.

Not for at least three years has any muzzling order troubled the canine peace of mind and natural love of liberty. New devices for dog comfort are continually being put forward, new methods of dog treatment invented by skilled dog doctors and there is even in existence at Brixton an institute for the training of canine nurses who, both men and women, shall have a better acquaintance with dog diseases. The number of dogs' homes in London and various parts of the country has considerably increased in the last few years, and there was, too, until lately, at any rate, a dogs cemetery in Hyde Park. Many veterinary surgeons specialise in doggie ailments, and an expert dog doctor can command high fees just as does the eminent specialist who treats the mere human.

The system of boarding-out dogs at suitable homes during the holiday absences of owners has developed to an extraordinary extent, and for five to six shillings per week the animal may be "stored" in palatial style. There is at East Finchley, for instance, a farm covering over twenty acres of ground, where the dog on holiday board is tended in cleanly kennels, exercised on well-laid-out grounds, and treated if necessary in canine hospital sheds and ambulance-houses.

Dog clothiers make fine raiment, from the jewelled collars which adorn the toy spaniels and Pekingese pets of pretty actresses and society belles to the warm woven and braided coats which clothe coursing dogs and show prize-winners. Railway companies are besought to view dogs as passengers rather than as baggage, and to provide accommodation accordingly, included a supply of drinking water. Breeders and owners are encouraged to improve the canine race and to exhibit of their best at numerous shows and field trials, of which there will be 114 between the beginning of September and the end of the year.

BUFFALO BEEF.

A SHORT time ago there appeared in an Italian scientific journal a note by Professor Magini on the high nutritive value of buffalo beef as compared with ordinary ox beef, and likewise on the extraordinary decrease which has taken place in Italian buffaloes and of late years on the urgent need for the Government to take immediate steps to remedy the deficiency. To this shortage of buffalo beef is attributed in a large degree the great increase in the cost of living in Italy, which, of course, makes itself most severely felt among the poorer classes of the population.

The high nutritive value of buffalo beef is attributed to the large proportionate amount of albuminoids and phosphorus it contains. These properties have long been recognised by the Jewish population of Italy, who at the present day appear to be the chief consumers of this article of diet; and their physicians are constantly in the habit of recommending it to convalescents and invalids, on whom it confers in most cases rapid improvement in strength.

The Italian buffaloes, of which large herds were formerly kept in the Pontine Marshes and other swampy and unhealthy localities fit for nothing else, are identical with the Indian species, and are generally believed to have been introduced into the country from the East about the year 600 by way of Hungary, where they are still kept in large, although diminishing numbers.

By a somewhat curious concidence the following a letter, signed "Zemindar," appeared in the columns of the Daily Mail of 14th June 1911.

"I understand that a monster petition is in circulation among Hindus for presentation to His Majesty at the Coronation Durbar, praying that His Majesty may be graciously pleased to direct that the supply of beef for His Majesty's troops in India may be obtained from Australia instead of from local sources. The Australian beef is infinitely superior to anything India can produce, so that the source of supply, being transferred to Australia, would be for the benefit of the British troops, and it would please two hundred millions of His Majesty's subjects, which of itself is worthy of the extra expense that would be incurred in providing cold storage. Besides, I understand the Hindu subjects are willing that a direct tax may be levied on them to cover the extra cost. It would be, however, a gracious act not to do this, but let the cost be borne as an ordinary item in the Budget. If necessary, the tax on salt might be increased to cover the extra expenditure.

"Such an order from His Majesty at the Coronation Durbar would be a fitting act and would form an epoch in the lives of His Majesty's Hindu subjects.

"As an agriculturist, speaking from an agricultural point of view, it would be very much to the interests of agriculture if such a large demand were supplied from outside of India. The cost of production has doubled within the last thirty or forty years. The price of a pair of plough bullocks is now double what it used to be."

An apparently editorial paragraph is added to the effect that the large herds of buffaloes on Melville Island, the beef of which is pronounced equal to the best English meat, should be able to supply the Indian troops. Additional cattle can be obtained from the mainland at a low price on account of their poor condition, which would speedily fatten upon the magnificent pastures on the Island, and thus make Melville Island the source of supply of beef not only to India but to Japan, the Malay Peninsula, etc. By another coincidence, an advertisement has recently been put in circulation by a firm of London solicitors announcing that Melville Island, off the coast of the Northern Territories of South Australia, which are really in North Australia, with its herds of introduced Indian buffaloes, is to be let on a long lease.

According to this document, the number of buffaloes now living on Melville Island is estimated at between 15,000 and 20,000 head and the annual increase at 3,000. At the present time some 2,000 buffaloes are shot yearly for the sake of their hides and horns alone; the meat, for want of suitable plant for cutting up and preserving, being wasted. The raw hides are sold in London, where they are estimated to be worth 22s. 6d. each.

If the meat were saved, each animal, presuming the average weight to be 600lbs., would yield about 200lbs., which would make 10lbs. of beef extract. The tongues, horns, hoofs, bones, blood, etc., have likewise a commercial value.

Although 2,000 buffaloes annually would not go a very long way in supplying the European section of the Indian Army with beef, they would form a beginning; and if the idea be seriously entertained of supplying European soldiers in India with foreign beef, there seems little doubt that by introducing ordinary cattle into Melville Island, which contains an area of 2,400 square miles, the supply of beef could be increased to an almost unlimited extent.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

We publish in our Turf columns to-day the revised programme of the Calcutta Winter Meeting, Tollygunge Steeplechases, and first three Extra Meetings thus far arranged. The prospectus, which is subject to such alterations as may be considered necessary on account of the Royal visit, shows that proceedings will start with the First Extra, on Saturday, 2nd December followed by two other Extras on the two following Saturdays.

The first meeting commences on Saturday, 23rd December, on which date the big event is The Trials, while on the Wednesday following, the second day of the Meeting, the Viceroy's Cup will be run. On this day, too, the German Cup, value £50, presented by the members of the German Club, and Rs. 4,000 is down for decision. On Saturday, 30th December, the Cooch Behar Cup will be run for.

The fourth day of the first meeting, Wednesday, 3rd January, is to be the big day of the season. The King-Emperor's Cup, a cup value 100 guineas, presented by His Majesty King George, is in the programme for that day. The stakes are the same as in the Viceroy's Cup—Rs. 30,000, of which Rs. 20,000 and the cup go to the winner, Rs. 7,000 to the second, and Rs. 3,000 to the third. The race is a handicap for horses, distance round the course, and entrance up to 3rd November is Rs. 150. Between 3rd November and 5th December, when the race will close, the entrance money will be Rs. 250, with Rs. 100 extra for horses not struck out by 6 P.M., on Saturday, 30th December, and Rs. 100 more if not struck out by 12 noon on Tuesday, 2nd January. The Metropolitan will also be run the same day.

The second meeting will commence on Saturday, 13th January, and conclude on 20th January, and the Tollygunge Steeplechases will be held on Saturday, 6th January, and Thursday, 11th January.

The Official measurer of the Calcutta Turf Club, will begin his autumn tour at Lucknow about the 6th proximo. From there he will visit Meerut, Umballa, Lahore and Rawalpindi. Dates will be found in an advertisement appearing further on.

The other day Reuter's correspondent wired from Cape Town stating that the South African Government had published their Racing and Betting Bill, the provisions of which were most drastic. It was stated that the Bill rigidly controled horse racing, restricted the number of meetings, and prohibited betting except on the racecourse by means of the totalisator, of which 2 per cent. of gross receipts were to go to the Government, plus 2 per cent. of the profits.

The Bill was said to entirely abolish bookmaking and prohibit the publication of ante-post betting and ante-post information about races, whether inside or outside the Union.

We now learn that this report is incorrect. The Western India Turf Club cabled for information and have received a reply stating that the proposed Bill before being submitted to Parliament, has been circulated among racing clubs for opinions and suggestions. The rough draft of the South African Bill only proposes the reduction of the number of days of racing, the abolishing of bookmakers, and the legalizing of the totalisator on racecourses. The clauses prohibiting ante-post betting reports and publication of weights and entries are likely to be deleted.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—The second and last day of the Closed Meeting came off on Monday, when there was a card of seven events thanks to the substitution of a Selling race for the jump one. Entries were rather small, but this was made up for to a large extent by the closeness of most of the finishes. There was one very bad upset, but in the rest of the races punters were on the mark and consequently had the better of the argument with the books.

First on the card was an Arab sprint with only four runners, and it was difficult to establish a favourite, Dojan and Dilerjung eventually going out equal favourites. It was quite a good race between them, the latter making the running with Little Officer, who failed to stay. As they faced for home Dojan came up to the leader and a ding dong finish ensued, but the lighter weight told in favour of Dilerjung, besides the fact that he can stay, and he came away at the end to win by a neck.

Secondly a Polo Scurry, in which all we know of those running made Daulat out to be a very good thing, and so he proved to be in the race. Dabchick and Salim came in for a certain amount of money, but whereas the former was badly away in a poor start, the latter could never get anything like on terms with Daulat, who was first out and had the race at his mercy all the way.

There was another small field in the 14-2 race, five starting, the bulk of money coming for Joy Bell and Rolling Stone, the latter eventually going out at a shade of odds on. In this the public were wrong, as Joy Bell was first out from Glendale, who was then displaced by Deputy, and was six lengths ahead when Rolling Stone came into second place at the half mile. The latter made a game effort, but the leader was not only too far in front but was going easy all the time, winning easing up.

Following came probably the most interesting event of the day, the R. C. and distance race for horses. Some support came for Absentee and Cowslip, but the real weight of it was for Sholto and Obo, which resulted in the latter winding up slightly the shorter. Ashdown made the running past the stand and as far as the first bend, but then being a hard puller Sholto was allowed to go to the front, Ashdown, Cowslip, Obo and Utopian being the order behind. This continued to the six furlongs, where Obo came up third, and a furlong later he and Utopian were practically level with Ashdown, who then began to drop back. They were not far off the leader at the turn, but when Obo put in his run it was only to find that Sholto still had ample in hand to go away again with. It was a good race well ridden by the owner, and was well received.

Out of thirteen, unfortunately only five went for the sprint for horses, betting here again being uncertain for some time, Metal Boy being most in demand till a run came on Bachelor's Knot, which brought him down to the same price, 6 to 4, Lovania and Forfeit being next. This was never much of a race, Valiant being left at the post, and Metal Boy and Lovania getting off none too well. Forfeit was first away, to be soon passed by Bachelor's Knot, Metal Boy also passing Boat Song into third place. At the bend it was evident that Metal Boy was being ridden and making no impression, the only one to finish at all well bar the winner being Lovania, from whom Bachelor's Knot was able to go away without much trouble.

The big upset mentioned occurred in the Arab mile, for which Aden was a slightly better favourite than Dojan, the only other considered at all being Orion, who made the early part of the running followed by Benger and Aden. There was not much in it at the five furlongs, and then Dojan began to close with them. Rounding the bend Aden came into the lead, Dojan was done, but not so Benger, who ran on well and in a desperate finish was able to upset the good thing by barely a head.

Eight in the last race was the biggest field of the day, and betting was very good, Matheran and Good Morning winding up at twos with Lama at threes. The race rested between the latter pair, Good Morning being very slightly in the lead. Matheran looked like coming through in the straight, but he swerved across the course, whereas Lama was in difficulties, and had very little chance with Good Morning. Compact coming strong into third place.

On Saturday the Second Meeting opened, and it must be said that the sport was good, fields more than fair, attendance very large and betting open. It will thus be seen that everything went off as it should have, despite the non-attendance of the subscriber towards the big prize of the day.

We began with the All Pony Plate, and, all being saddled, eight started and after a run on Borgie her stable companion, Refresher, warmed rapidly to evens from Leo Grand at threes. The latter has certainly turned out a great pony, but he never had any sort of chance with the champion. Naughty Boy made most of the running closely attended by Leo Grand and Evening Herald. The former pair led into the straight, but Refresher was hard held behind them and in the last furlong won absolutely as he liked.

A poor lot were out in the Lanowli Plate, Young Japan and Aga coming in for most money, though at the last moment. There was a run on one of the latter's stable, Grand Duke, with fairly steady support for Shawcutt, whom we have not seen prominent for some time. Tressady and Shawcutt were in front at first, then Grand Duke ran up to them and went to the front. As they came into the straight Shawcutt came up and led, and when tackled by Aga was able to go away again.

Next came the Governor's Cup with a field of seventeen, and Precious's price gradually contracted till he firmed at twos, Winchester sixes and Braganza and Zainulmullook at sevens. It was naturally a most interesting race all the way round. Valens and others gave trouble, but it was not long before they were let go well together. Braganza, Urgent, Parliament and Artist in a line in front, and Artist showing slightly to the good as they passed the stand. Urgent was on the rails, the result being that at the first bend he shot into the lead from Parliament, Artist, Hadee and Sir Hugo, another furlong showing further change, in that Regent ran up close to the leader. This order remained about the same till at the six furlongs Young Salanic ran up third, and then was in the lead, but soon after dropped back again as did Merrily, who flashed up for a moment. At three furlongs from home Artist was again in the lead from Braganza, whereas Tajilmulook, Valens and Zainulmulook had drawn up handy followed by Winchester outside. None of the first three into the straight took part in the finish, as at the distance Zainulmulock came through attended by Winchester and these had the others settled, though Valens made up considerable ground on the outside. There was quite a demonstration as they re-entered the enclosure, and our oldest jockey has to be congratulated on a perfectly judged race.

One cannot say there were a very brilliant lot in the Western India Stakes, eleven starting with Hilarity favourite at 7 to 2 from Master Delaval, Beau Vive and The Loaf. It was a very good start, and being drawn No 1, Beau Vive went out in front from Ballymaclune, Aborigine and Lady Spring with the exception that Cattaro joined in and ran third, this order continued till after the three furlongs. Beau Vive and Cattaro here dropped out and Coat of Arms came up to take command with Ballymaclune, but both were done at the distance. Here Lady Spring and Aborigine promised, but Five Crown finding an opening cut through going strong and got home before Hilarity, who was shut in for a time, could get at him. Aborigine held on into place, and thus gives promise of striking something like his true form.

The sprint saw a much better class out and Soultline, though favourite, was at 5 to 2 owing to money for several others, Punt, Lumination, Master Theo, Aquatic and Watch Tower in order. There was nothing to claim an advantage in the start, but then Lumination went right away in front followed by Master Theo and, after another gap, Aquatic and Elser. Soultline was fourth at the half mile and Watch Tower came handy, but neither of these could ever catch the front three. Lumination continued to hold her own against Master Theo, but once Aquatic was asked he drew up and won with some ease. Paul Pry finished very well and beat Master Theo out of a place.

Lastly the Kirkee Plate for small Arabs, the betting resting between Tachreet and Rajput, only a quarter point separating them, with Lookman and Saree next in demand. Grey Falcon was first out, then Young Majub went away and Rajput fell in behind him. Lookman followed by Tachreet came close up as they neared the bend, where Rajput got the rails and took the lead. Lookman was done and after being shut in Tachreet could make no impression on Rajput, who won comfortably and is right back to his best.

The Skating Rink on Wednesday night was the scene of an interesting evening's boxing, there being a large number present including a fair share of civilians. Arrangements were all that could have been desired and everything went off as it should. There were no disqualifications and only one knock out, so that the proceedings did not end till a late hour. Sergeant-Major Chinnery of the Poona Gymnasium was brought down to referee and the judges were Lieutenants Wakely, L.N.L., and Knight Bruce, R.W.R., and it may be said that the decisions gave satisfaction.

Chapman, one time Sergeant of the R.A. in Bangalore, was billed to meet Sergeant Nolan of the Dublin Fusiliers in a ten-round affair, and this was the chief fight. It was a good one, but opened rather slowly, as though Nolan did the pace making there was not much in it as he did practically no damage. Chapman took it rather coolly, and left his work too late, as though he was all over his man at the end, Nolan had scored enough points to win, as he just saved the knock out. Chapman is a punishing fighter, and on more than one occasion he narrowly missed the right place with good left swings for the body. As mentioned, he very nearly had his man out, but was too much on the defence at the start.

There were other good fights, the first being lively between Morecroft of the Warwicks and Moane of the Dorsets. Morecroft at first took the eye, owing to a good left, but subsequently Moane opened up an old cut on his eye, and using both hands with effect wore his opponent down.

A tame sort of go was that between Cranbrooke and Shapton, of the Warwicks and Dorsets respectively. We know the former to be a great sticker, and he made most of the pace with great gameness. Shapton's hits were more effective, though he was by no means clever in the administering, but they told near the end, and Cranbrooke must have been glad of the call of time, when he lost on points.

Roughton, Warwicks, and Parr, L.N.L., put up a good fight for four rounds. The former had the advantage of reach, but the smaller man was much the quicker and thorough. In the last two rounds Parr had his man beaten, after opening out his cheek near the eye, and could probably have ended it sooner had he wished.

A Volunteer, Windsor of the B.V.R., put up a very good show against Hastings of the Warwicks, and beat him very comfortably on points. He had a big pull in reach, and going in strong at the start took a long lead of points. Hastings wisely tried to keep at close quarters, but even then the youngster more than held his own.

Last on the card was an eight round between Pool of the Warwicks and Makins of the L.N.L. They fought a pretty two rounds, plenty of mixing and hard hitting. In the third, however, Makins's superior strength told, and after some useful rights, he put his man out with a left swing to the jaw.

Prizes were subsequently distributed and an entertaining evening came to a close.

The Calcutta Rugby Challenge Cup was won for the sixth time in succession by the 1st Battalion West Riding Regiment. They beat the United Services in the final on the 20th instant by 11 points to nil after a disappointing game. The Junior tournament brought together Calcutta "B" team and the Rangers. Their first meeting ended in a pointless draw, but in the replay last Friday evening Calcutta "B" team were victorious by 8 points to nil.

The Calcutta Football Club are sending the following Rugby team to represent them in the Madras Tournament. They leave on Friday night:—

Cunningham (captain), Frank Kerr, Leakey, V. Sherman, Michie, Pitman, Kingsford, Tod, Richmond, Dempster, Strachan, Browne, La Prevost, Kidd, Armytage, Johnstone, Miller, and Burnett.

The 9th Divisional Hockey Tournament in connection with the big tournament at Delhi was concluded at Bangalore on the 26th instant, when the 1st Brahmins from Secunderabad beat the 20th Deccan Horse by 2 goals to nil, and thus qualified to represent the 9th Division at Delhi.

At the Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Cricket Club held at the Turf Club on Thursday last, the following officers were elected for the coming season:—President: Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar, C.S.I.; Vice-President: Hon'ble Mr. F. H. Stewart; General Committee: Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar, C.S.I., Hon'ble Mr. F. H. Stewart, Mr. F. C. Danger (Tennis Member), Mr. C. M. Pope, Mr. G. Turnbull, Mr. S. C. B. Lee; Honorary Treasurer: Mr. E. G. Bisseker; Honorary Secretary: Mr. J. C. Sewell.

The Annual General Meeting of the Ballygunge C.C. was held last evening, when the following office-bearers were duly elected:—

President: Mr. A. H. Abbott; Captain: Mr. R. C. Cumberlege; Vice-Captain: Mr. D. S. Shallow; Honorary Secretary: Hon'ble Mr. S. J. Best; Honorary Treasurer: Mr. H. E. Skinner; Honorary Ground Secretary: Mr. J. R. Coulthard; Committee: Messrs. R. C. Cumberlege, C. M. Pope, H. F. Yeoman, B.A. White, D. S. Shallow and W. E. Bayley.

R. Arnst declined Mr. Sydney's offer to row against Barry on the Thames. He holds out for £750 for expense alone. Barry's backers subsequently offered Arnst £500 if he would race Barry on the Thames for £500 aside but he has again declined, still demanding £750.

Following on the Rev. Swann's feat a fortnight ago, we now hear that a Dover oarsman named Mannering has rowed from Dover to Calais and back in twelve hours 40 minutes.

this together with a store of information, curious and often humorous, about the tribes resident on and near the banks of the Indus, their thought and manner of life forms the setting for the love story of an English girl who has come out on a visit to her Deputy Commissioner brother-in-law, and who picks the right man from among her admirers.

The authors who write with first-hand knowledge of their subject are Major A. J. O'Brien, C.I.E., and Mr. R. C. Bolster, I.C.S., the latter of whom has contributed to our columns under the nom de plume of Sarhaddi.

Mr. H. Noel Davies, the well-known lawn tennis player, who is now stationed at Trichinopoly, is endeavouring to establish a South Indian Lawn Tennis Championship, open to all-comers, says the Madras Mail. He has addressed a letter to the South Indian Lawn Tennis Association asking that body if it is willing to support the proposal. The idea is that this Championship may eventually lead to an All-India Championship. Mr. Noel Davies says that when he was at Home in 1909 this matter was discussed there, it being a matter for comment that there was no recognised Champion for India as there was for other countries and colonies. With this object in view, he has addressed similar letters to the Calcutta, Lahore and Bombay Lawn Tennis authorities seeking their co-operation.

The idea is a good one and we should like to see it carried out. There has always been a good deal of discussion as to the respective merits of the Champions of the respective Provinces, but the opportunities of their meeting are very few. Many years ago, Mr. C. H. Higginbotham, when he was at the top of his form, went to Bombay and won the Championship there. He proposed also to go to Calcutta to meet Major Fleming, the celebrated tennis player, and afterwards the Amateur Billiard Champion of the British Isles, in the Bengal Championship. The proposal, however, fell through because the South India and Bengal Championship Meetings are held at about the same time, and Higginbotham had to remain in Madras to defend his title to the Championship here. He did make a proposal to the effect that he might go to Calcutta and try his chance there, returning afterwards to meet his challenger for the South India Championship, but for some reason this was not agreed to. In later years J. H. Graham and C. Brooke-Leggatt entered for the Doubles Championship in Calcutta, but owing, we think, to the inability of Brooke-Leggatt to go, this arrangement fell through.

Apart altogether from the bigger scheme of inaugurating an All-India Championship, we think that Mr. Noel Davies' proposal ought to be given effect to. The winner of the Tournament held every year in February and March at Chepauk is by courtesy entitled to be called the Champion of South India, but as long as entries for this Tournament are restricted and Indian players are not allowed to enter, the title will continue to be a courtesy one. There are many very fine players among Indians, and we should like to see them pitted against some of the leading English players.

The Poona Junior Polo Tournament was brought to a conclusion on Monday last, when the 7th Dragoon Guards beat the 26th Light Cavalry in the final by 2 goals to 1.

Having beaten the Hindus by nine wickets in the first of the triangular cricket matches in Bombay the Parsees met the Presidency, the match ending on the 26th instant in a win for the Parsees by 8 wickets.

The annual rugby match at Kharagpur between the Bengal-Nagpur Railway and a team organised by Mr. E. A. Martelli was held on Saturday last, when the railway were beaten by 11 points to 8. Mr. Martelli's team was a strong one composed of Calcutta and United Services men, but the Bengal-Nagpur Railway gave them a great game and the issue was in doubt right up to the finish.

Sam Langford knocked out Jeannette in 10 rounds at the National Sporting Club, New York, on the 5th September. Jeannette was floored in the first round, and Langford went down in the second. Even fighting followed. In the sixth round both men were cautioned for holding, and heavy punishments were exchanged. Jeannette led in the seventh and eighth rounds. In the tenth Langford fought like a demon, and sent his opponent down three times, until Jeannette was finally counted out.

Tom Burrows has recently given an extraordinary exhibition of endurance club swinging. At the Theatre Royal, Tamworth, New South Wales, he was started at 7-10 P.M., on Tuesday, 22nd August, and the clubs were taken from his hands at 10 o'clock on the following Saturday night—99 hours, over four-days' and nights' continuous swinging without stopping. The previous record was 82 hours 17 minutes.

Cavalry "A" and the two Gymkhana teams having won an equal number of matches and points, the winner was decided by the most goals won under condition two, which turned out to be Cavalry "A" with 15 goals to their credit.

The last of the weekly Mounted Sports held by the Bombay Gymkhana was brought off on the 20th instant. Weather conditions were excellent. There was a large attendance and the programme attracted big entries and provided good sport. The jumping in half sections which opened the proceedings was a very creditable display and was won by Messrs. Spence and Roughton with Messrs. Baird and Kennedy second. Only three ladies turned out for the Musical Chairs, Mrs. McCausland winning from Miss Barlow. The Balaclava melee by half sections was most exciting and was eventually won by Messrs. Lodge and Louders. The V. C. race was run off in two heats and Messrs. Knight Bruce, and Graham, Roughton and Lodge qualified for the final which was won by Knight Bruce. The Marketing Stakes brought out nine couples and Mrs. McClausland and Mrs. Meikle were returned winners. A close finish in the Scurry brought the sports to a conclusion.

Thomas William Burgess, who has successfully emulated Captain Webb's exploit of swimming across the English Channel, was born at Rotherham, Yorkshire, about 40 years ago. For some years, says the Manchester Guardian, he lived in the district of Eastwood Vale, and was educated at the Rotherham National School. As a youth he was renowned for his great strength. He was apprenticed to a blacksmith, and later went to London. Whilst in London, he turned his attention to cycle manufacture, then a new industry, and after becoming proficient accepted a situation in connection with his business in France. He eventually became the proprietor of a concern which had for its main feature the manufacture of rubber tyres, and he is the owner of a valuable patent for the production of tyres.

Burgess's great strength served him in good stead when he took up swimming, which he did in connection with the Polytechnic Institute in London, gaining fame as a youth of great promise. In France he was soon prominent among amateur long-distance swimmers. In 1900 he swam fourth to Jarvis in the 4,000 yards championship of the world, and in 1903 he won the veterans' world championship, also in Paris.

From a perusal of the Protection of Animals Act, which comes into force on 1st January 1912, it seems an open question whether it applies to pigeon-shooting, stag-hunting, and rabbit-coursing. We are inclined to think that its promoters may have had this object in view and have deliberately refrained from mentioning these matters specifically in order not to alarm the votaries of these sports and so create opposition to the passing of the Bill. The definition of a captive animal is any animal not being a domestic animal of whatsoever kind or species, and whether a quadruped or not, including any bird, fish, or reptile which is in captivity or confinement, or which is maimed, pinioned, or subjected to any appliance or contrivance for the purpose of hindering or preventing its escape from captivity or confinement. In Section I., Sub-section 3, the Act says:—"Nothing in this section shall render illegal any act lawfully done under the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, or shall apply (a) to the commission or omission of any act in the course of the destruction, or the preparation for destruction, of any animal as food for mankind, unless such destruction or such preparation was accompanied by the infliction of unnecessary suffering; or (b) to the coursing or hunting of any captive animal, unless such animal is liberated in an injured, mutilated, or exhausted condition; but a captive animal shall not, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be coursed or hunted before it is liberated for the purpose of being coursed or hunted, or after it has been re-captured, or if it is under control." The last part of this clause is so involved that it is difficult to understand. To terrify an animal is an offence, and to keep it for six hours without sufficient wholesome food and water renders one liable to a penalty not exceeding £5. Gamekeepers and rabbit-trappers will be interested to know that any person who sets, or causes or procures to be set, any spring trap for the purpose of catching any hare or rabbit, or which is so placed as to be likely to catch any hare or rabbit, shall inspect, or cause some competent person to inspect, the trap at reasonable intervals of time and at least once every day between sunrise and sunset, and if any person shall fail to comply with the provisions of this section he shall be liable, upon summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £5.

A record bag of grouse for Scotland is reported to have been made the week before the last English mail left, when Lord Henry Scott, Lord George Scott, and party of eight guns, shooting on the Duke of Buccleuch's moors at Roanfell, in Liddlesdale, on 28th August, bagged over one thousand two hundred brace. The biggest bag for a single day's grouse-shooting in England was that made by Mr. R. H. Rimington Wilson and party, who brought down 2,648 grouse in 1893 at Broomhead Moors. This beat a previous record by Mr. Rimington Wilson and party on the same ground in 1872, when 2,626 birds were bagged. No one has nearly approached Lord Walsingham's personal bag of 1,056 grouse for one day's shooting at Blubber-houses on 30th August 1888. On 28th August, 1872 Lord Walsingham killed to his own gun 824 grouse, which occasioned, in all probability, marvellous shot though he be, the use of 1,100 cartridges, but so many people questioned the accuracy of the figures that the famous sportsman resolved to repeat the feat, and this he did sixteen years later on the well-known Blubber-house Moor. It is now matter of history that in the course of fourteen hours and eighteen minutes the sporting peer fired 1,550 cartridges, of which forty were signal shots, and brought down 1,058 grouse.

What this feat meant in endurance alone can be gathered from the following calculation:—To fire off a gun with two barrels 1,500 times naturally entails the lifting of the weapon to the shoulder a little short of 800 times, and, as the gun would weigh 6¾lbs., and would have to be raised something over 2 feet on each occasion, it is easily ascertained that in the course of his fourteen-hour day the record-holder must have exerted as much strength as would be required to raise 2½ tons 2 feet.

Nor was this all. The recoil of the powder he used, it has been ascertained, would be about 30lbs. per cartridge, from which datum it will be perceived that, in addition to his other labour, he must have sustained an energy of recoil equivalent to lifting 20 tons 1 foot.

One thousand and fifty-eight head of game in fourteen hours and eighteen minutes means, of course, one bird every forty-nine seconds.

NATURALISTS consider the elephant's trunk the most marvellous miracle of Nature. It contains over 4,000 muscles—a great many more than are found in the entire human body. By aid of these muscles the trunk will uproot trees or gather grass, lift a cannon or a nut, kill a man or brush off a fly. It is as useful as a hand with all its fingers to supply the elephant with food, and being hollow, is used as a suction pump. No other animal has a single member or organs so perfect and so useful. Elephants are so constituted that they are unable to eat flesh or any food that requires tearing apart. The reason for this is that they possess no front teeth. Eight teeth are all they have—two above and two below on each side—huge yellow molars as wide as a man's hand and about two inches thick. Over these hay or fodder is shifted by the queerest, ugliest tongue in the whole animal kingdom—a tongue that is literally hung at both ends, having no power or movement except in the middle, where it shifts back and forth from the side, arching up against the roof of the big mouth like an immense wrinkled pink serpent. There is nothing stranger than the working of an elephant's tongue, unless it be the working of his breathing apparatus when he sleeps. Elephants, like human beings, have two sets of teeth; the milk teeth, which are smaller than the permanent molars, fall out when the animals are about fourteen years old. These baby teeth—which are nevertheless enormous—are occasionally picked up by the circus-men among the fodder and preserved as curiosities.

FURTHER details of the wrestling match in which Gotch beat Hackenschmidt have reached us. Gotch won the first fall in 14mins. 18secs. and the second in about 5½mins., thus retaining the Championship.

Before he secured his winning hold in the first bout Gotch had slipped behind his antagonist, picked him up bodily, and thrown him to his knees. Then, before putting his hold upon the Russian Gotch punished him violently with a series of violent jabs in the nose delivered with lightning-like swiftness. At first it looked as though Hackenschmidt would repeat his action of the former match, when he refused to go on after Gotch had applied punishment, but he changed his mind and came to the centre again for the second and, as it proved, final attempt.

Coming together again at 3-42, or just half an hour after the first encounter began, Hackenschmidt opened with the full use of his strength in a determined effort to overpower the Iowan quickly. Gotch, however, displayed equal power. For five minutes the men struggled without the advantage being with either, and both men used rough tactics. At the end of five minutes Gotch again slipped to the back of his man and put him down with a leg-hold, following up immediately with the vicious toe-hold which has made him such a terrible opponent; 32-1/5secs. later Hackenschmidt had lost.

From start to finish Gotch had been obvious master, and at no time did the Russian look like regaining the title.

There is some talk of a match between Gotch and Ahmed Bux or Gama, and if it comes off there is very little doubt that the American would be beaten when he takes the mat with either of these first class men who cultivate their traditional art in Northern India. Gotch at his best was not the equal either in speed or skill or natural strength of the Indian wrestlers named above. Nor is it at all likely that his roughest work would expose any "yellow streak" or tendency to flinch from punishment in these Oriental athletes, even if they were deficient in courage and stamina, which is not the case. The catch-as-catch-can system as actually practised in India at the Courts of the client-Princes and elsewhere is a singularly inclusive pastime—as inclusive as Sumo, the Japanese diversion, in which butting, hitting, etc., are permitted and freely indulged in. If Gotch chose to turn a contest with an Indian challenger into a dog-fight, the latter would cheerfully accept the change and show him that even in the matter of shock tactics outside the spirit and letter of the code the swift harmony between hand and eye and the supple "Oriental leg" with its prehensile foot would leave him in the position of "under-dog."

London Week by Week.

FRIDAY, 8th September 1911.

RUSKIN, in one of his bitter moments, once said that the most unhappy feature of the unhappy age in which he lived was "the universal gabble of its fools." If he had to complain of the stream of talk in his day what would he have thought of it in this, when street corner demagogues never tire of screaming out their often blatant blasphemies; when the peace of Sunday in our public parks, and the quietude of rural villages are broken by the rude voices of political propagandists, and everywhere there is a babel of tongues, in which what should naturally be the soft tones of women are raised to the shrillest pitch that they may be heard above the din! But the talk of the age is, after all, only a small contribution to its noise. There surely never was, in the history of London, a noisier time. Tramcar bells, motor horns, shrieking sirens, the grinding noise of heavy wheels; aye, even the humble bicycle bell and whistle contribute to an uproar the effect of which upon human nerves is incalculable. Someone once said that those who spend much time in the reading of newspapers should occasionally take a bath in good, sound English literature. How much better we should all be could we possibly spend twelve months in a cool, delicious bath of silence!

But we have lost the art of being quiet. It is gone with the art of letter-writing, and quiet, dignified conversation. We do not even know that we are noisy, till something like the recent strikes empties the streets of their tramcars and their wagons, and then, putting aside the inconvenience, we notice how quiet everything has become.

BAD as the noises of the daytime are, they are not so exasperating as the noises of the night, and in this respect no city seems to suffer more than London, if one is to judge from plaintive letters which have recently appeared in London newspapers on the subject of nocturnal noises. The peaceful citizen complains that he cannot sleep because of the sounding of hooters, sirens, and exhaust whistles. It appears that the cause of all the trouble is Section 3 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, which says: "Every light locomotive shall carry a bell or other instrument capable of giving audible and sufficient warning of the approach or position of the carriage." Now there is no definition of "audible and sufficient warning," and nothing to forbid the misuse or immoderate use of noisy instruments; drivers are left to their own sweet will, and in the event of an accident are held inculpable if only they can prove they hooted loudly and long.

Up to now motor drivers, might drive furiously along empty streets at night, making noises which have been compared to a dying horse, a tuberculous cow, a famished seal, and to many another unhallowed sound. The dying horse and the tuberculous cow can be silenced by the poleaxe or the cattle killer, and the famished seal by a meal of fish, but the noisy chauffeur till last week had the warrant of the Legislature for his unreasonable and unseasonable uproar."

Now his capacity for torturing us is to be considerably curbed and thank goodness. The Commissioner of Police has backed the general and particular protests against the operations of this ruffian and has just issued an "Official Warning" (which is supported whole-heartedly by the Local Government Board) pointing out to all owners of motor driven vehicles the need for immediately restricting the pandemonium, and all of us are hoping that in this detail at least we have the blackguard chauffeur on the hip at last. The Commissioner points out that unless some alteration upon the now-prevailing practices is brought about by motorists of their own impulse, "there will be an insistent demand for repressive legislation," while it may be noted that the circular itself has been issued with the further concurrence of the Local Government Board.

Some day, perhaps, the recommendations of the Royal Commission on traffic will be considered, and then there may be some controlling body to deal with such evils as this. Meantime the unhappy Londoner is the victim of thoughtlessness and selfishness in the torments inflicted by unnecessary noise. No sane person imagines that mechanical traction is going to disappear from the streets, nor, indeed, does anyone wish that it should do so. Moreover, in the great main thoroughfares running East and West, South and North no one looks for the peace of a rural lane. You do not take a house in Piccadilly or Edgware-road, or a flat in the Strand or Holborn with any anticipation of enjoying quiet in it. If for any of half a hundred reasons it suits your pleasure or your business to do so, you know what the compensating drawbacks will be in the constant rumble of vehicles of all sorts, to which are now added the barking of pneumatic horns, the shriek of loud whistles, and a medley of hideous sounds that range from a high-pitched blast to a rolling roar. But we live in hope that Sir Edward Henry's recent activity will ere long deliver us from this evil.

THERE was a brilliant and wonderfully enthusiastic audience at the New Theatre on Saturday night on the occasion of the production of Romeo and Juliet, the chief interest in which was the appearance of Miss Phyllis Neilson-Terry as Shakespeare's heroine.

Miss Terry's interpretation developed from an uncertain beginning to a most interesting study, and there were moments when she struck a note of real distinction. In the earlier scenes there was a suggestion of lack of sureness in herself, and her delivery and facial play were not above criticism, the glorious cadences of the lines in the balcony scene being at times blurred and then taken too deliberately. In the third act Miss Terry really found herself and in the Potion scene there were many moments of histrionic greatness. The impersonation as a whole must be written down as one stamped with sweetness, sincerity, and real passion, and one that will add very considerably to Miss Terry's reputation. The reception accorded her was wildly enthusiastic.

The remainder of the cast played with all-round excellence. The Romeo of Mr. Vernon Steel was admirably conceived, the right note of passionate intensity being struck at once and maintained throughout. Mr. Fred Terry was prevented by indisposition from taking the part of Mercutio, but his deputy, Mr. Louis Calvert, left nothing to be desired, the elocution of his declamatory lines being a notable contribution. The best acting of the evening was that of Mr. J. Fisher White, whose Friar Lawrence was a vivid and sharply defined figure. Of the others, Miss Rosina Filippi (Nurse), Mr. James Berry (Tybalt), and Mr. Henry C. Hewitt (Paris) all did good work. Miss Julia Neilson took the place of Miss Evelyn Carleton as Chorus for Saturday night only. Mr. Percy Macquoid has designed a most impressive set of costumes, and Mr. Joseph Harper is responsible for the scenery, which is of remarkable beauty.

The production of "Macbeth" at His Majesty's Theatre last night (Monday) added another to Sir Herbert Tree's triumphs as a stage producer. No setting more beautiful, more appropriate, more suggestive could possibly be conceived. No more charming a series of stage pictures has ever been seen even at His Majesty's. Truly Sir Herbert Tree can imprison dreams in "back-cloths" and conjure poetry from a "wing."

The colour of the production is grey. The action takes place in the half light. Until the last scene there is an absence of stridency and no attempt to tear a passion to tatters. "Macbeth" is either a melodrama—many considerable critics consider it so—or a dream play as essentially unrealistic as Maeterlinck's "Pelleas and Melisande." Sir Herbert Tree takes the second view, and it must be the right view. Macbeth is nominally a ruthless soldier murdering his way to power, yet he soliloquises in the true Hamlet manner. Lady Macbeth is the cold encourager of crime, and yet she fades with remorse and dies in dreamy mystery.

Sir Herbert Tree, indeed, with the atmosphere he has created, profoundly helps to a true understanding of the drama and the dramatist. The characters are not flesh and blood individuals callously weltering in blood, but dream creatures commenting in their actions and their words on the life of men and women with all the wisdom and the beauty that come from a poet's imagining.

The play is arranged in four acts. The witches are seen first, flying in the deep grey gloom. Still intangible and most fantastic, they meet Macbeth and tell him of his fate, and the Thane goes on to pay his homage to Duncan, the King. His wife awaits him in his castle sitting in a sunlighted window, a particularly appealing picture. The courtyard of the castle is another elaborate and dignified scene, Mr. Joseph Harper at his best. The banquet, splendidly barbaric, is the great scene of the second act—Lady Macbeth gorgeously, almost savagely, garbed, Macbeth, weltering in terror at the appearance of Banquo's ghost, but never for a moment overdoing the realism. The supernatural appearance is ingenious but not very impressive. Perhaps it could not be.

The witches' cavern, with which the second act begins, is another scenic triumph, but the apparitions are again only moderately successful.

This act finishes with Lady Macbeth's sleep-walking, and this is the masterpiece of the production. A grey wall extends across the stage, a steep staircase running across it to a doorway on the left. From the door Lady Macbeth comes herself, all grey, with a twinkling light in her hand, showing the red of her hair and the whiteness of her face. She feels her way down the steps muttering softly, walks mechanically two or three times across the stage, and then goes up the stairs again, still murmuring in toneless whisper, "What's done cannot be undone—to bed, to bed, to bed." The episode lasts only a few minutes, but they were unforgettable minutes—minutes of sheer beauty.

In the last act the note of subdued greyness is less emphatic, possibly inevitably, and it should be added that this note, which gives the production its real distinction, is lost for a while in the third act by the inclusion of the scene with Lady Macduff and her son. The touch of domesticity always gives joy to an English audience, but when Sir Herbert Tree "cuts" this scene might well be left out.

The acting can only be justly criticised when the "idea" is fully understood. Miss Violet Vanbrugh was certainly tame and all too ladylike at the beginning. She called up spirits to fill her "from the crown to the toe top-full of direst cruelty," but there did not appear to be much genuineness in the appeal. But in the sleep-walking scene Miss Vanbrugh played with genuine poetic intelligence. It may be that no one actress could be equally good in the two moods. Miss Vanbrugh looked regally impressive, and she always poses well—this a no mean virtue.

Sir Herbert Tree is commonly said not to be a romantic actor. He would not, that is, be an ideal Henry V. He is subtle rather than strong. His mind and his imagination are greater than his voice. His is a Macbeth with a soul, more akin with witches and with apparitions than with blustering Thanes. Sir Herbert last night was often very fine. He was always interesting, always suggestive, always, to use a hackneyed but still meaningful word, an artist.

Mr. Arthur Bourchier is a lusty player, and his method did not fit into the scheme of the production. The witches were excellently acted by Mr. A. E. George, Mr. Ross Shore, and Miss Frances Dillon, and Mr. Basil Gill as Malcolm, Mr. J. H. Barnes as Banquo, and Miss Viva Birkett as Lady Macduff did their little admirably well.

Probably Reuter's Agency has already announced the sudden death of that brilliant novelist Mrs. K. C. Thurston, who passed away on the 5th instant at a Cork hotel; but I should like to add a few lines as a tribute to the memory of this really gifted authoress. She will always be remembered by novel readers because of one of her earliest books, "John Chilcote, M.P." Her other books, very good of their kind, had nothing in them that so vividly represented her talents as the sketch of the unfortunate morpho-maniac. Her presentment of the story was intensely dramatic. There was the meeting of John Chilcote and his double in the thick of the London fog, there is repeated interchange of parts, and the extraordinarily vivid sketch of what parliamentary ambition may mean to a man and his wife.

Few writers have excelled her in depicting the terror and pity that every one must feel for the morpho-maniac, with his loss of the moral sense, the complete absence of self-respect, and the craving for the drug against which he struggles in vain. Curiously enough, the novel did not lend itself to dramatisation, and on being produced as a play was not a success.

In 1906 Mrs. Thurston followed "John Chilcote, M.P." with "The Gambler." Two years later came "The Fly on the Wheel," and in 1908 "Max." In private life Mrs. Thurston, who was an Irishwoman, vividly recalled Meredith's creation of "Diana and the Crossways." She was an enthusiastic, healthy-living athlete, being keenly devoted to riding and swimming, and she always set a high value on her personal liberty.

THE TRAIL OF THE MOOSE.

A certain young man from New York was out with one of the most expert of the New Brunswick Micmac guides, bent on the shooting of a record moose. The first two days of calling produced no bull, and the New Yorker told his guide that the calling business was evidently all rot. This considerably ruffled the feelings of the Micmac, and he determined to give his employer an opportunity of changing his mind.

One afternoon he chose an ideal calling place, and made his employer swear not to shoot until he gave the word. The guide climbed to the top of a huge boulder close at hand, and sounded the first call. At once an old bull answered from a distance of about two miles. With much smashing of brush he was evidently coming pretty fast. The Indian called at regular intervals, and soon another and smaller bull answered, shortly after which a third joined in the chorus. Down from the boulder came the guide, and he and his employer lay down behind a smaller rock close to the larger one. The guide was sure that the big bull would come, and the smaller ones would be scared away by his presence. This did not happen, however, for the big bull was turned by some other hunters, while the second and smaller ones ceased to respond to the horn. No. 3, however, came steadily on. The guide satisfied himself that the advancing bull would appear on the same side of the boulder on which they were lying.

Again the guide called, and at last the bull appeared, trotting up the slope to where the hunters lay hidden. Having advanced to within ten yards of them, he began a most ferocious onslaught upon a bunch of sapling birches, and at last, tiring of that, he advanced still further, and went down on his knees, horning the moss, leaves, and earth into the air in all directions, and bespattering the hunters with part of it. By that time the New Yorker was in the acute stage of "buck fever," and his teeth were chattering in his head, while the guide had to hold his rifle to keep it from rattling against the rock. Again the bull advanced and stood broadside about twelve feet from the hunters, which was as close as even the guide cared about. He gave the signal to shoot, and the bull dropped to the shot, but got up again. Two more shots laid him out, however, and the New Yorker was at last convinced that a bull moose could be called up by using the birch-bark horn.

Calling for moose with a birch horn is an occupation full of thrills and unexpected happenings, for your bull may come with a rush, looking huge and savage in the half-light of a wood's evening, and again he may set your nerves tingling by answering and then crashing some distance towards you, only to get your wind and quickly decamp, leaving you shaking amidst a deathly silence, not knowing at what moment he may appear before you out of the trees like a huge spectre.

Moose are occasionally got when driving the woods for deer with a number of hounds, and the writer was present when two were thus shot near Bear Lake, Ontario. This is mere chance work, however, stalking or still-hunting them being by far the most successful method—at least, in the province of Ontario.

There is a certain amount of excitement in shooting one's first moose, but in the writer's humble opinion there is more sport in still-hunting the white-tail deer, which are better eating when killed, and afford more difficult shooting, and quite as much, if not more, skill to approach.

A big bull moose, weighing from 800lb. to 1,000lb., is no light load to get out of the woods when one has to consider the total absence of roads other than old logging trails. When the quarry can be loaded into a canoe, the river or lake solves the difficulty of transportation, but it is not always possible to do this. It usually means cutting a rough trail to the carcase, then bringing in a team of horses and a jumper on which the moose is loaded, the team then doing the rest. If shot very far back in the woods the only way is to take the head and what meat it is possible to carry, then let some settler or Indian return for the remainder at a later date. The largest deer can easily be handled by a single person, especially when snow lies on the ground, and this is quite a consideration if one is hunting alone far back from the nearest settlement.

We have often been asked what is the best rifle to use on moose, for many people imagine this giant of the forest takes a deal of killing. Like most of the accepted grizzly bear lore, this great vitality of both Mooswa and Ursus horribilis is immensely overrated. Any of the modern high-velocity weapons will kill both bear and moose if the "man behind" can only plant his bullet in the right spot. A ·303 or larger calibre rifle will kill moose perfectly if the bullet hits the neck, goes through the shoulders or just behind the latter. The great thing in all big-game shooting is to get up to as near your quarry as possible, then try to make the first shot do the business without relying on a reserve of cartridges in the magazine and subsequent rapidity of fire to complete the quarry's downfall.

Speaking of the vitality and the generally misconceived ideas of the public concerning the grizzly bear and other savage game, we may mention a book not long from the press, entitled "The Grizzly Bear." The author of this volume is Mr. William H. Wright, of Spokane, a hunter-naturalist of great experience, especially in the grizzly districts. Mr. Wright gives us a true and untrammelled account of his many experiences with Ursus horribilis, and describes minutely the habits and behaviour of this noble quarry. We advise all those interested in Sport or Natural History to obtain a copy of this book, feeling sure it will prove a valuable addition to any sportsman's library.

Moose are still plentiful in most of the Ontario forest districts, especially near such reserves as the Algonquin National Park, which is set aside by the Dominion Government as a sanctuary for all kinds of game, both furred and feathered. The writer has hunted through much of the country adjoining the park, and can say from experience that game is usually plentiful.

When in the woods the track of a moose is easily recognisable, being very like that of a domestic cow, only the foot-prints are decidedly more pointed. Although such a huge and clumsily built animal the moose can glide through the thick timber with surprisingly little disturbance; in fact, he can disappear from view in an extremely noiseless manner. The strength of a bull is enormous when he finds occasion to exert it. On a backwoods farm where the writer lived for some time, a moose once walked through a three-strand barbed-wire fence, breaking all the wires and pulling up a cedar post as a reminder of his presence on the place.

The moose does not run in bounds like the white-tail deer, but moves off in a long, slinging trot, which quickly carries him to a distance of five or ten miles from the hunter's presence. Once thoroughly roused, it is almost useless to follow on his trail, for he will seldom stop until he has put a sufficient distance between himself and his pursuer. The moose, like the deer and the rabbit, has a certain area, usually about ten miles in diameter, which he considers his home, and unless hard-pressed will not leave it. Every hole and corner of this area is familiar to him, and in a district where no sportsmen venture the moose would practically spend his life undisturbed within the above area.

The season for moose in Ontario is from 15th October to 15th November according to the locality chosen by the hunter. Hunting may be indulged in either during the first or second fortnight, one bull moose being allowed to each hunter.

With the fast boat service now available, it is but a matter of a few days until the sportsman reaches the moose country from England. Rifles, canoes, and other necessaries for a trip can be purchased at reasonable rates on the other side, and if the visiting sportsman will employ a reliable guide he will be practically sure to secure a good head if he can hold the rifle straight.—Shooting Times.

INDIAN FISHING.

"As regards the matter of fishing," said my shikari, scorning to know only his own business, "your honour must have heard of Chand Lal."

"Of course not," I said somewhat tartly.

"A man who had been given to many marriages contracted during his travels, and he seldom failed to bring home a fresh one to the established wife, saying he had thought deeply that she needed a person to fetch grass, seeing how she was being inconvenienced for want of such a help; then he would bring another to gather fuel; a third for harvesting, and so on. One of them he got by curing her of a stubborn malady, previously stipulating with the father as to that arrangement or he would have nought to do with it. The father kept his word, and Chand Lal brought her away. She was the eighth, though the old wife had protested against more on the ground that there were no available occupations. But he went on being considerate towards her. He was given to fishing."

"For fish?" I enquired with the flippancy which a whisky and soda—and perhaps one or two upon that—are calculated to engender.

The shikari saw not through the subtlety of the humour but suspected it, and relaxed the respectful and respectable rigidity of his countenance.

"His method, your honour, was curious. He constructed a big wooden reel almost as great as a small cart-wheel, ran an iron rod through the drum, rolled it around with rope which he called his line, got the blacksmith of the village to beat up a few hooks of the size to hang meat on, and then he would betake himself to the deepest pool of the hill-stream and arrange for the night. Usually his brother-in-law, to whom he was partial, accompanied him, and he had such confidence in the young man that he would wrap himself up in his blanket and go to sleep, leaving to the other the entire responsibility of watching. At such hill-streams, your honour, there is always the likelihood of leopard, perhaps a tiger or so, and once a bear had looked in; but besides these there was almost a certainty of evil spirits which haunt such places, especially where cremation is done, which is almost always the case near deep pools. I will relate a story about one such occurrence."

"This Chand Lal seems to have been a man of great mind," I said.

"All the people," said my shikari, "thought much of his system. He used to plant the wheel in the ground by driving one end of the rod deep into the soil, fix a fish on the hook as bait, heap stones on the line so as to topple over and inform him that the bait had been accepted by some big fish, go to sleep, and awaking to the sound would attend to the wheel. Such fish were generally of monstrous size, and the first rush away was estimated as half a mile very nearly. Then he would roll in, working the wheel vigorously like a grindstone, and scolding the young man the while in the greatness of the crisis and in order to teach him the craft of it, as became one who possessed the secret and was deep in the mystery; and the young man was duly grateful.

"After an hour or so at the grindstone the fish would usually be hauled in, and the biggest proved fatal to the young man—who, however, was young only by comparison. He wallowed in the roe and the slab's until it became too much for him; and he succumbed. It was said by the village folk and known to everybody that all big fishes when caught balance the account in kind, though Chand Lal argued that in that case he, and not the other, would have been the victim, for that he was the chief instrument in the capture. He said the misfortune was solely due to excess. Then for the first time the village began to suspect that he was ignorant, that he was unaware of the commonest home truths, and they feared something would happen to him."

"Well did it?"

"Not long after a goat got jammed under a wall, and vainly did they try to extract it; and it was told Chand Lal, and he came and ordered them to stand aside. Then he went in bodily and heaved the wall up, and after that he was never himself again. He said he had ruptured something inside with the effort: but all the people knew he had come under the displeasure of some godling and advised propitiatory measures. One man conclusively proved it by saying so whilst agitating his head by reason of a godling that always entered him. But Chand Lal waxed furious, seeming now to be quite void of reason, and insisted on exasperating the people by saying it was an ordinary rupture and medicines would set it right. They said he would advocate a hospital next where people were killed off at once to save further trouble, and that any remedies of the doctor kind would only anger the godling more. He never did get right of course, especially after he tried to explain away that spirit occurrence I spoke about."

"Did he try to explain it away?" I cried, and the shikari was pleased with my shocked tone.

"It happened thus. Chand Lal had that night taken two others in addition, he having heard that a man-eater was about, and he told the men that if they kept up the fire throughout the night the beast would sooner think of eating his own mother. They laughed over that saying, and kept up the fire for him, and after waking up now and then for a draw at the hubble-bubble—for they had brought us much tobacco as he had advised them—and reminding them of the truth of his words, he would fall to sleep afresh. It was while he was slumbering for the third time that another person came along, and after some mutual enquiries and conversation he directed them to throw a small net they had in a certain spot. They did so, and brought up a good-sized fish. They awoke Chand Lal, who gladly instructed them in the dressing and cooking of it, and did his share of eating on the spot. When they had cleared it all away the newcomer asked if they would like more. They replied with a smile that fish was fish, and they could hardly be expected to decline any offer. So he bade them cast the net again in the same place. Chand Lal afterwards said that from the first he had his suspicions and knew what would happen."

"What happened?"

"Chand Lal said if he had been awakened before the first cast he would have scrutinised the man and looked into the matter. He said if ever he met that man again there would be serious trouble and commotion, and he would strongly advise him to keep clear. When a man plays such a dirty trick he is not fit to live. To get guileless folk to drag out a body in the hope that it is fish was Satanic."

"Oh, he did that, eh?"

"He did, your honour. But whereas Chand Lal was indignant the others were impressed, and said it was a godling who disapproved of fishing in that place. Chand Lal declined this view, and said the body was not a spectral and supernatural one, and no godling would adopt such a plan. And no godling would sneak away to avoid unpleasantness. The others said he had disappeared, but Chand Lal said he distinctly noted him stealing off through the boulders directly the net was seen to drag. He said he understood the whole thing. It was the idea of that rascal Abdulla, who wished to frighten him away in order to fish there himself. And when the others urged about the fish caught on the first cast Chand Lal said it was an accident, the original idea being to get at the body first, and the fish happening to pass at the time lifted the net off the bottom. It was in vain that they spoke in awed tones and counselled belief in the godling. Chand Lal would have none of it, and alluded again to Abdulla in special terms."

"Who was this Abdulla?"

"A man who lived on his wits end had a hankering for fishing. But he derided Chand Lal's plan, saying it was tedious work and depended on the pleasure of the fish. He worked differently. Taking half-a-dozen others he would place a pair each up and downstream, and himself face another on the opposite bank. A submerged rope with several great meat-hooks at intervals would be held at each end by these two, and the fish driven by the beaters would come on to the hooks. A jerk by either rope man usually pierced a fish or two, which was then hauled out violently and with excitement. Of course, many fishes were merely hurt and got away, and some perhaps died from the effects later; but Abdulla, abusing the escapes, would resume the operation deligently."

"Is that method allowed by the Sirkar?"

"Abdulla was doubtful, and to be on the safe side used to work by night. It is said that he once used a cartridge-dynamite, your honour, as to which the Sirkar gets vindictive, many sections of the laws covering that course, such as being in possession of an explosive; then, stealing it; and again, destroying fish therewith. So Abdulla said the objections were too complicated, though the resultant fish were gathered in maunds as they floated down. But such fish, he said, lost flavour through some quality in the dynamite. And on the whole he would stick to his own method. It was this Abdulla and Chand Lal who regarded each other with abhorrence. Chand Lal said he had a plan with regard to Abdulla which would settle the matter once for all, and be a warning to people advising the casting of nets in special places for bodies."

"Well?"

"Chand Lal thereafter kept his eye on Abdulla, watching his proceedings. So it came about that during the rains he was watching him fishing with a hand-basket behind great boulders where the water whirls around and fish seek shelter from the rush and swirl of the current. At other times feeling for fish with his hands beneath the larger stones, when the fish, accustomed to contact with their kind and dizzy with the buffetting and blind with the thick water, have no suspicion of human touch, and are easily secured. Chand Lal noted with satisfaction the failures and sneered at the successes. And whilst he watched he observed Abdulla making for a bigger boulder at the edge of the current, and Chand Lal feared he would be more successful there. Then Abdulla staggered. 'Fool!' yelled Chand Lal from among the bushes above have you no more sense than—, and Chand Lal leaped down and ran and slushed as Abdulla got knocked under and was being carried away in disorder. Chand Lal was a strong swimmer, and Abdulla hardly inferior, but the current was fierce and the bottom treacherous, and it was with difficulty that Chand Lal reached the other side beaten and bruised, and Abdulla passed away and perished. 'Fool! unfortunate!' would Chand Lal mutter long afterwards, 'could he not hear the boom and the thud of the great stones rolling with the current and know that legs could be smashed by them? Oh, unfortunate!'

"And Chand Lal thereafter seemed to lose interest in the village, and went away, and, it is said, died in a foreign province."

THE OOTACAMUND POINT-TO-POINT RACES.

Wednesday, 20th September 1911.

THIS popular fixture came off to-day—a delightfully cool day, cloudy, and with a fresh breeze, but the going was still very hard, the paltry half inch or so which fell on Monday being, of course, quite insufficient. All Ooty turned out at Jackal Shola near the 2 mile post on the Kraimund Road, where the venue was marked by numerous shamianas, tents etc. Proceedings began punctually at 11 A.M. with the Ooty Hunt Cup for which nine competed : the line of country was (about 4 miles) well chosen as it gave a varied choice of routes and crossings to be negotiated, starting from near Somerdale, down the Demon Valley, over the Pykara Road, Lawley's Course and Newmarket to a finish near the tents at Jackal Shola. The winner, Mr. S. Cox, selecting a line which none of the others followed won in great style on that staunch horse Swanley ; he was followed by Major Duff's pair Matsumata and Beau. The ladies' event was next on the card, the eight being started off soon after noon on a good galloping course of about 3 miles—Guinevere, Double Ruff and Peggy were most fancied, and they would doubtless have finished in this order had not Mrs. Dennistoun's mount stumbled coming down hill nearing home and given his rider a nasty fall, luckily, however no serious hurt. Miss C. Lawley on Guinevere, who had been leading the whole way, won easily from Miss Lawley on Peggy, followed by Miss Irwin on Levent and Mrs. Gordon Price on Alphabetic a close thing for third place.

Five turned out for the Men's Pony Point-to-Point. Major Dennistoun on Saturn led the field for the greater part of the 3 miles but fell and though he quickly remounted Mr. Campbell was able to establish a lead and to repeat his last year's win on gallant little Sirdar.

Next followed the Ladies' Pony Race—a short galloping course of 2 miles, with no crossings to negotiate. This Miss Lawley won on Beresford, closely followed by Miss Butler on Punch and Miss C. Lawley on Coronation.

In the Novice Cup that breedy English mare Guinevere again showed us her quality by winning comfortably, ridden by H. E. the Governor, a most popular win ; while in the Medium Plate, the next and last race, he won again on Peggy, a fine riding performance, two stiff courses of over 3 miles each which drew forth repeated applause from the large concourse of spectators. Major Duff's two second placings in these last two events, viz., on John and Larry, were also very commendable.

Their Excellencies were "At Home" in the huge shamiana to practically the whole of Ooty, where their genial hospitality and all the good things provided in the way of refreshment for the inner man, to say nothing of a very excellent programme of band music, all helped to make the day an extremely pleasant one.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT CUP.—(Presented by Colonel the Hon'ble R. T. Lawley.) WARWICK.

On Monday the pretty pastoral Warwickshire country looked green and fresh after a morning's steady rain, in contrast to the parched meads south of the Thames, and the clerk of the weather being complaisant enough to introduce the sun in full warpaint before racing began, the afternoon proved most enjoyable. Helped by excursions from the Midlands, the attendance was a good one for this particular meeting, the club enclosure and Tattersall's being well filled, and holiday folk according good support. The course, though covered with rejuvenated grass, had hardly had the summer dry "tone" taken out of it, and you could hear the hoofs rattle. Results :—

DERBY.

Curiosity to see the improvements at Derby, which have made the members' stand one of the most convenient in the kingdom, and an assurance of the good sport Derby always provides brought a goodly company on Wednesday. The weather showed September at her best, in fact, the sunshine was almost too much of a good thing, in the absence of a breeze. The going was a bit on the hard side, but fields panned out well. CRICKET.

WARWICKSHIRE are the champions. They have sprung from fourteenth on the list to first, and there is no precedent in county cricket to a performance of this kind. We are wont to say that you may safely bet a hundred to one at the beginning of any season against any one of five, or six, counties being at the head of the poll in the following September. Such a bet, indeed, has actually been made, and the layer of odds is now a sadder and a wiser man. In one way the success of Warwickshire is somewhat discounted already. All that can be said on the subject of F. R. Foster's wonderful achievement as captain, bowler, and batsman has already been said. It is, however, pleasant to add that, although superlatives have been somewhat freely used in regard to this most remarkable young cricketer, there is absolutely nothing to take back. We can afford to leave it at that. Still, he has done more than merely put his county at the top of the list. At a time when we are comparing youth with experience, much to the detriment of the former, we can quote F. R. Foster and his recent doings with good effect. Seemingly you can, after all, bowl hard, and bat hard, and field hard, and captain finely without breaking down in any one of those departments; and after more than a generation we once more see a very young man right at the top of the first-class cricket tree. Youth wins; he makes the outsiders win, and pessimism has been dealt a severe blow. The fast bowler, Field, has shared the bowling honours with him, though that very reliable professional, Santall, has done a fair share of wicket-taking. Kinneir, Charlesworth, and Quaife stand next to their captain on the batting list. But it is not mere good batting and bowling which have told. Foster has put a new spirit into his men, and the Warwickshire eleven are now a match winning—and not as they used to be, a match-saving—side.

Admirably as they have played, it would be idle to pretend that it is not a matter of regret that they have not met either Kent or Middlesex. It is imperative to preserve unimpaired the principle and the system of free-will in the arrangement of cricket fixtures. Unfortunately, in this case, we pay a rather heavy price for freedom, and so the champions must bear patiently with those who love to "job backwards." It is almost impossible to avoid speculating as to what would have happened had the Warwickshire programme contained four more matches—two against Kent and two against Middlesex. Still, the champions have played the game fairly and squarely according to the rules, and they have won it.

Only one or two important games now remain, and the cricketers, after an unusually busy season, are no doubt glad of the rest.

Yet it is difficult to realise in the present weather that cricket is over, and that we are now in the full swing of football!

There were several outstanding features in the cricket of the week-end. Middlesex, of course, beat Surrey—by 353 runs—but reference to this match would not be complete without mentioning the nine wickets for 82 runs obtained by J. W. Hearne in Surrey's second innings, yet another performance to emphasise that this youth is the most brilliant cricketer amongst Middlesex's young men. Scores: Middlesex, 306 and 330 for five wickets (innings declared closed); Surrey, 82 and 201.

Worcestershire beat Sussex by six wickets, as they were expected to do, and Lancashire easily vanquished Hants by an innings and 27 runs, in spite of Philip Mead's batting. Mead has joined the select list of men who have obtained 2,000 runs this season. Sussex, 251 and 242. Worcester, 322 and 152 for four wickets; Lancashire, 375, Hampshire, 151 and 197.

Kent's was a brilliant victory by ten wickets over Essex at Leyton. Many men got runs in the match, but Seymour, with 218, not out, easily topped the list. It was his best score in first class cricket, and the highest made by a Kent man this season. Kent, 543 and 12 for no wicket; Essex 290 and 254.

Huish, the Kent wicket-keeper, in stumping Gibson at Leyton, brought his number of wickets for this season to 100. He has caught sixty-two and stumped twenty-eight. Prior to this season Strudwick, with ninety-one wickets, seventy-one caught and twenty stumped, held the record, the Surrey man's feat being accomplished in 1903.

There were heaps of runs in the festival match at Scarborough, where Yorkshire and the M.C.C. team drew. A century by Rhodes in each innings for Yorkshire, and three figure "knocks" by Jessop and Spooner, were the batting features. Jessop hit three 6's, one 5 and seventeen 4's in his 117, not out, Yorkshire, 387 and 225 for six wickets (innings declared closed); M.C.C. 274 and 334 for seven wickets.

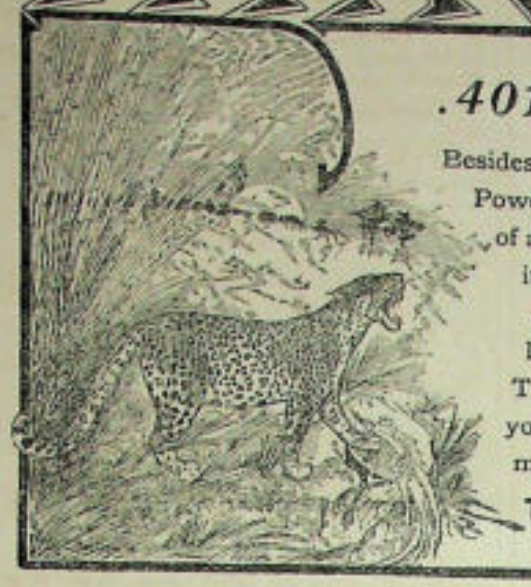
WINCHESTER



.401 Caliber High-Power Self-Loading Rifle.

Besides being the most powerful recoil-operated rifle made, the Winchester .401 Caliber High-Power Self-Loader is the simplest, strongest, most easily operated and most rapid shooting of all rifles of this type. For hunting game, the self-loading type of rifle is ideal, providing it is reliable; and when you can get the power and the swiftness and ease of action of the .401 Winchester, you have a battery that prepares you to meet any game alive. Just look at these figures: velocity of bullet, 2142 foot seconds; energy, 2038 foot pounds. These figures show that the .401 is more powerful than the .303 British, and in addition you have the increased rapidity of fire. This is further augmented by the interchangeable magazine system, the simplest, quickest and most effective method of loading ever devised.

THESE RIFLES CAN BE SEEN AT ALL GUNMAKERS'.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

IN weather far more suited to cricket than to the pursuit of what it is scarcely correct nowadays to describe as the winter game, the football season of 1911-12 opened on Saturday. Players naturally found the conditions very trying, and the strain of strenuous football in blazing sunshine on grounds still hard, despite the rain which fell earlier in the week, naturally told upon the pace of the games after change of ends, with the result that, for the most part, scoring ruled low. Football, indeed, is not a seasonable exercise before the end of the summer, and, although the many thousands of keen enthusiasts, for whom apparently the game cannot be entered upon too soon, would doubtless grumble were they deprived of competition matches on the first Saturday in September, the Football Association, in the interests of the players—assuming those to be a matter of interest—might well consider the advisability of extending the close time until the middle of September. So long, however, as the public are ready to assemble in their thousands at matches, whether or not the conditions are favourable for the pursuit of so exhausting a game as football, it will be difficult to persuade professional clubs of the advantages to be derived from a later opening of the season.

So keen a desire to see how the various First League teams would shape was manifested all over the country that the ten matches in that competition attracted an aggregate crowd of more than 200,000. At Hyde Road, where the two Manchester clubs tried conclusions, between 30,000 and 40,000 people assembled, and at several other places there were well over 20,000, the only ground where the company proved at all disappointing being the Owlerton enclosure, but for some time past the old enthusiasm for Association football in Sheffield seems to have been waning. Although unable to claim victories, Woolwich Arsenal and Tottenham Hotspur, in effecting draws at Plumstead and Goodison Park, made a better start than in either of the two previous seasons. Manchester United, the champions, had to rest content with halving points against Manchester City; and Aston Villa, who so narrowly missed first honours last April, went down at Bradford before the Cup holders. Of other famous clubs, Sunderland, Newcastle United, and Sheffield United registered victories, but Sheffield Wednesday met with an unexpected defeat. West Bromwich Albion signalised their return to the First League with a win at the expense of Notts County, but Bolton Wanderers, the other promoted team, sustained a reverse on their own ground.

GOLF.

THE IRISH OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP.

On Saturday at Portmarnock, the Irish open amateur championship was won for the third year in succession by Lionel Munn, of the North-West Club, Londonderry who in the final heat of 36 holes defeated the Hon. Michael Scott, of the Royal North Devon Club, by 7 up and 6 to play. Mr. Munn has thus equalled the record of H. H. Hilton, who secured the event in 1900, 1901, and 1902.

Considering the strong and fitful wind, the golf was excellent. The course measures 6,700 yds.; yet each player went round in 78. The 6's at the thirteenth were by no means bad, considering that the length of that hole, which was played against the wind is 800 yards. Mr. Munn drove considerably the longer ball, sometimes outdistancing his rival by 30 or 40 yards, but Mr. Scott excelled in the approaching. In the afternoon, however, the latter went off his game.

The scores for the morning were :—

L. Munn :—Out : 434455344—36 ; home : 443655546—42.—78.

Hon. M. Scott :—Out : 436334444—34 ; home : 554655545—44.—78.

Munn :—Out : 454454443—37 ; home : 543—12.—49 (for 12 holes).

Scott :—Out : 554555455—43 ; home : 514—13.—56 (for 12 holes).

SWIMMING.

BURGESS SWIMS THE CHANNEL.

On Tuesday the 5th September at 11-15 A.M. Thomas William Burgess, a hefty 6 feet. Yorkshireman forty years of age, started from the South Foreland on his sixteenth attempt to swim across the channel. At 9-50 A.M. on Wednesday, the 6th August he touched bottom near Cape Grisnez, waded ashore, flopped on the beach and burst into tears. He had emulated the late Captain Matthew Webb, though he took longer than that famous swimmer to do the journey in. The channel is twenty-one miles across, it is estimated that Burgess swam nearly sixty and he took 22 hours 35 minutes to do it in. The weather conditions were perfect, the water warm, but the tides were strong. He was stung by jelly-fish, was sick several times, had one or two periods of great depression but in the end worried through pluckily enough and to-day he is a national hero. The king has congratulated him—as he congratulates practically everybody who figures prominently in the penny illustrated papers—and the press have given him pages and pages and "Alexander the Great Tailor"—who runs a number of cheap cut fitting shops—has given him a silver cup and offered him a banquet. Doubtless Messrs. Wolffe, Holbein and the rest will not give up hope of adding their names to the list of "Channel Heroes" and now that 56 years after Webb's feat it has been demonstrated possible to do the thing we shall possibly have the channel thick with aspirants.

POONA JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

26TH CAVALRY vs. BOLARUM.—This was the first of the two semi-final games on the 21st instant and ended in a win for the 26th Cavalry by 4 goals to 1 after a hard-hitting and galloping game.

First Chukker.—The Cavalry were the first to press and Bolarum were kept busy defending. Four futile shots at goal were followed by a successful effort, Popham putting through. The Cavalry kept up the attack for the rest of the chukker.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play. Bolarum at length got possession and Wood equalised.

Third Chukker.—Bolarum pressed but Popham cleared and ran down with the ball but hit it out wide. The 26th did most of the attacking and Popham ultimately scored.

Fourth Chukker.—A run by the 26th, Popham hitting wide. They got another run shortly after and Greenway put the ball through. Up and down play followed till Armstrong brought the ball down once more for Greenway to score again.

Fifth Chukker.—The Cavalry got on and Collum hit a goal. Offside against the 26th, who had to bring the ball in from behind their own line. Both goals were visited in turn and at length a foul against the Cavalry gave their opponents a chance, but the penalty was not turned to account, and the chukker ended pointless. Final score: 26th Cavalry, 4 goals; Bolarum, 1 goal. 7TH DRAGOON GUARDS vs. CAPTAIN LUCAS' TEAM.—This game was fast and closely contested, the Dragoon Guards eventually winning by 3 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—Captain Lucas' team were first to attack and Lucas scored in a scrimmage. On changing ends the Dragoons got away and equalised, up and down play closing the period.

Second Chukker.—Offside against Captain Lucas' team and they had to bring the ball out from behind their line. The Dragoons got possession in midfield and taking it on Wood scored, Watson augmenting the score with a long shot soon after.

Third Chukker.—The Dragoons pressed throughout this period. They sent in several shots but they were all fruitless and the chukker ended without score.

Fourth Chukker.—Play was mainly in midfield till Captain Lucas' team got away but were stopped and the ball taken to the opposite end, where the Dragoons were awarded a free hit for offside against their opponents. Nothing came of it and Captain Lucas' team attacked once more but without success.

Fifth Chukker.—The Dragoons were forced to defend and hit behind. Their opponents failed to improve on the free hit and the Dragoons cleared, up and down play bringing the game to a close. Final score: 7th Dragoon Guards, 3 goals; Captain Lucas' team, 1 goal. Teams :—

Final.

26TH LIGHT CAVALRY vs. DRAGOON GUARDS.—A large gathering of spectators witnessed the final game between the above teams on the 25th instant. The Dragoons were better mounted and played a good combined game, while the 26th lost many chances owing to erratic shooting and were eventually beaten by 2 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Dragoons got in a couple of good runs at the start but were pulled up and play transferred to their end where Greenway drew first blood for the 26th in a scrimmage.

Second Chukker.—The Dragoons again attacked and Mansell equalised. Fast up and down play, strenuous efforts by the Dragoons failed to realise.

Third Chukker.—The Cavalry pressed but Watson cleared and the Dragoons got away but were penalised. Nothing came of the hit and the Dragoons returned to the attack but could not score.

Fourth Chukker.—Mansell got away and put the Dragoons ahead. Greenway was next prominent for a good run and the Cavalry looked like scoring in a melee but Clay cleared.

Fifth Chukker.—Up and down play, a fine shot by Popham just missing the flags. Dragoons then got possession and were attacking when time was called. Teams :—

ARE OUTDOOR GAMES BEING OVERDONE.

SPORT in some form or other has in recent years gained such a tremendous hold on Britishers of every class that the question arises whether in some cases it is not being overdone. "Old Blue," in a London sporting contemporary offers the following remarks on the subject :—

According to a writer in a current magazine, the last few months of the present year present a suitable opportunity for (as it were) a national stock-taking. Based on an article which recently appeared in the Sporting Life, presumably, he contends that British sport is fast becoming such a passion with the majority of people as to have a manifested effect on their lives and character. He particularly laments that with individuals games are becoming almost an obsession. In other words, that they fill the horizon for us, and blot out our view of the larger issues of life. Then he ably argues that a subtle charm sometimes lurks in sports of the most innocent kind, i.e., some cunningly concealed germ of fascination, and, finally that all pursuits nowadays called "athletics" are traps of unsurpassed attractiveness. In a measure, too, he is right.

Football, to wit, is of all games the most fascinating. Its devotees not only play it, but see everything in the terms of their favourite pastime. The routine of life is only interesting from some fancied relation to its ramification. Their common speech is full of expressions drawn from the same source. They even think in football metaphor. With most the conduct of life seems only a small thing compared to the execution of a "neat pass." Nor is this singular disease, as the writer calls it, confined to football alone.

We have the cricketer, with his astounding memory for recondite lore; the oarsman, who always carries furtively his calendar to be produced at every available opportunity; the athlete, who talks of nothing but times, records, etc.; and the golfer, to whom every momentous crisis of life is a "bunker." The golfer, indeed, feels sure that he has adopted the one serious work that is worthy the attention of an enlightened being, the one amusement that is equal to the true spirit of semi-divine manhood.

Other Fascinating Games.

Or take tennis. The tennis player considers life in all its phases simply as a calculation of bisques. Have we not heard of the M.P. who, during one of the most absorbing periods of political strife, visited the tennis courts once every week? "There," he said, walking away when one of his games was over, "now I've nothing to live for till this day week." Or of another enthusiast who spoke of his eight children as half-fifteen and a bisque?

Take, again, the person who, in a weak moment, is induced to employ his leisure hours in mastering the intricacies of chess. What an awful fascination it has for him henceforth! If the pastime has an unhappy affinity to his nature, well—his life is practically ruined. As he walks the street there are possibilities in the chance arrangement of the paving-stones. He cannot walk in a diagonal but it immediately recalls to him some stately bishop's move, or turn a corner without picturing himself as the erratic knight. The very stars at night range themselves to his practical eye in battle array. And all this is not a whit exaggerated. When the soul drives the mind and muscle the pace is generally at racing speed.

Another Side to the Question.

The writer, however, chooses to repeat the ancient saw that we take our pleasures sadly. Doubtless it is quite true enough to have fairly earned its popularity, yet, in a way, does it not also flatter our national pride? We fancy we can detect in this very seriousness with which we address ourselves even to relaxation an outcome of sustained energy and thoroughness. In small matters, you see, we must still strive after high excellence, and what is worth doing at all is certainly worth doing well. Granted that it is not possible for some devotees of sport to maintain that strength of mind which alone keeps them from extravagance.

As the writer truly says, and I have shown to be correct, it happens now and again that what was begun as an innocent relaxation is allowed to develop into an overwhelming passion. All this, and much more, might be urged from the titular point of view just as reasonably. But it is based on a sophistry.

After all, the greatest pleasure in life is to have a fanatical (if you like) enthusiasm about something. It may be the collection of stamps or coins; the preaching of tectotalism or socialism; a craze for horse racing or coursing; it matters very little what is the special hobby a man goes in for. But the possession of at least one hobby is the first condition towards a thorough enjoyment of life. In effect, the writer under discussion accepts the Frenchman's definition of the average Englishman as one who plays golf all day and talks of nothing but bridge, and who plays bridge all night and talks of nothing but golf.

It is gross exaggeration, of course, yet affords no argument against one's playing either game. Rather does it afford further proof of the powerful attraction of both pastimes. Granted, again, that excess is bad from many points of view; yet the main point is irresistible—a slavish devotion to sport is a temporary fanaticism of the most intense kind. While it lasts it is less a mere game than a religion. While it continues it may be made to occupy every hour of the day. And why not?

Sentiment not Argument.

"Miserable trifling," says the writer, "for a human being endowed with a soul and with more or less of reasoning powers!" But that is just my very point. How about the historian? He is nothing if not ready to spend a week, if necessary, in determining the true Christian name of someone who died and was forgotten by the world centuries ago. Or the lover? He would be considered remiss unless he showed that he cared about the smallest flower that dropped from his lady's hand. Very well, then; by a parity of reasoning, no man can be thoroughly in love with a game or a pastime till its very trifles become almost sacred in his eyes. The fact of so many Englishmen losing their identity, so to speak, after the manner referred to above, is only another proof of the intensity of the passion sport can occasionally inspire. Like other objects of a devoted passion, moreover, it is jealous of any rival. The writer errs in saying that this disease (sic) lasts for a lifetime.

As a matter of fact and experience, too warm an enthusiasm necessarily burns itself out after a time. It is given to very few men to devote their whole life to sport. But what if such were the case? The pleasantest of all bonds are those we form with fellow-sportsmen by talking nonsense with them and mistaking it for philosophy. And I know none which acts with more energy than a common devotion to sport and pastime. It implies the closest conceivable bond of union.

A Higher Standpoint Still.

That excess of enthusiasm in sports tends to make Young England talk and think far too much of such matters I also readily admit. Fond as I am of sport of all kinds, I sometimes wish other topics were broached more often than they are. From the very highest standpoint, however, even this slavish devotion to sport and pastime has its good feature. That is to say, were Young England not discussing such matters, they would probably be tempted to debate, and take part in, other and more questionable, topics and amusements!

And one other point needs emphasis. Sport, with the writer, as with so many other people, presumably, only means the cult of animal in man; whereas, tested by the volume of popular interest, it is even of more importance than Art. Keenness in sport, moreover, is just as real as the circulation of the blood, ergo as real as life itself. Does not this fact account for some of the ultra-enthusiasm complained of?

Anyway, according to Lord Harris, it expands by degrees to that very magnificent trait "Patriotism." Put another way, the athlete who is for ever combining deeds with words adds something to the traditional glory of his own particular community. Is not that the very essence of sportsmanship? Fighting for a cause and never for oneself is hardly a pre-eminent feature in the larger world, is it? For the rest, a sporting hobby is an occupation which seems to comfort men pretty well as knitting or sewing comforts women. It gives him something to do, and so relieves the irritation always produced in an active mind by absolute physical idleness. Even thus I submit it is invaluable.

Together with most of us, the able writer of the article under notice frankly acknowledges his inability to explain the charm of a too-enthusiastic devotion to sport and pastime. Part of it, no doubt, lies in the appeal it makes to the fighting instinct. There is a touch of Job's war-horse in the average Englishman. He "smelleth the battle afar off." And there is something exhilarating to English people in anything pertaining to games. It arouses in them the same sort of patriotic frenzy as is aroused by a royal procession, a military band, or a fire engine. And it is the sort of feeling, thrill, if you like, that every man, woman, or child is the better for feeling.

We are gravely told that England is in danger of encountering the fate foretold by Plato for Greece, in a prophecy only too dismally fulfilled, as the outcome of this excessive zeal propensity. Perhaps so, perhaps not; anyway, it is an undoubted fact that sport nowadays is having a most serious effect on the lives and characters of the vast proportion of British people of all classes.

It is rare to find a man under forty who is not a votary of one of them, and among most over that age the passion for them does not readily die out. Excess of enthusiasm is to be decried in some ways, and applauded in others—as I have shown. The misdirected enthusiast who is to be condemned is he who relies on the foolish hypothesis that ordinary success is not worth having. Oftener than not in such cases, to be pre-eminent at any game is to be that and nothing else!

But I trust that Young England will still continue to evince the liveliest interest in all that pertains to their favourite sports and pastimes. Only thus will English sport—which has grown with England's growth during her acknowledged term of existence extending back over 900 years—be carried on as it ought to be.

CRICKET IN BOMBAY.

Parsees vs. Hindus.—This, the first of the triangular matches, began on Thursday last on the Bombay Gymkhana ground, Divekar and Baloo opening the Hindus' innings. In the second over of the game Divekar was bowled and Oghad took his place. Baloo's wicket fell in the next over and Shivram joined Oghad. The latter was caught by the very next ball and Mehta came in. The score was taken to 24 when Shivram gave an easy chance to Pavri who made no mistake. Date was next man in and he and Mehta took the score to 47 before a separation was effected, the Hindu captain being out to a splendid catch by Parekh. Date fell to Bulsara when he had scored 18: Vithal, who followed him, only made one: Deodhar was out for 2 which took him half an hour to score. Sempre was caught off Warden's next ball and Seshachari and Errasha were left with the score at 57. This couple slogged away merrily and took the score to 82 when Errasha was out leg before to Pavri. After tiffin the Parsees sent Umrigar and Colahawallah to the wickets and they knocked up 24 before they were separated, Umrigar being caught for 12. Chothia took his place and spectators were treated to some attractive batting. The second wicket did not fall till the Hindus' total had been passed, Colahawallah being caught after scoring 20. Kapadia was run out after making 3, and Warden joined Chothia. With the score at 102 Chothia was caught after a fine innings of an hour's duration in which he scored 58 and hit 8 boundaries. Warden only made 5, Mulla 3, but Driver and Parekh playing with great caution stayed out the remaining 50 minutes and when stumps were drawn for the day the score was 142 for six wickets. Resuming on Friday they added 12 to the score when Parekh was caught and Pavri came in. Scoring was slow but the runs came along and 181 was reached when Pavri was out to a fine catch by Sempre. Bulsara made 1, Vatcha failed to score and the innings closed for 184, Driver being not out 42. The Hindus began their second innings at 1 o'clock but again started badly. Sempre was dismissed for 4, but Vithal who followed him in after being given a life at his first hit settled down and commenced to pile up the runs. The score was taken to 31 when Divekar was caught. Shivram was out for a duck, Oghad made 1 and was then out leg before, Baloo coming in to partner Vithal. This partnership produced some bright hitting and 86 was reached when Baloo was bowled for 30. Mehta contributed 3, Deodhar 5, but Vithal was still playing with confidence and 100 had been scored when Seschari came in. He was in a quarter of an hour and was run out after making 2. Date being unable to play the innings closed for 121, Vithal being not out 62. The Parsees were thus left with 20 to make to win and Umrigar and Kapadia came out to begin their second innings. They put up 11 when Kapadia was caught after making 9 and Driver joined Umrigar and they knocked off the required runs. The Parsees thus won by nine wickets. Score:—

PRESIDENCY vs. PARSEES.—Having defeated the Hindus in the first of the triangular cricket matches the Parsees met the Presidency team, the match beginning on Monday. The Parsees won the toss and put their opponents in to bat, Watts and Christie opening the innings. 16 runs had been scored when the first wicket fell, Christie being caught by Chothia after making 6. Brooke was next man in and after being let off by Warden put on 14 before he was bowled. Simms followed but only made 6, the score being 44 for 3 wickets. Tillard joined Watts but was not in long, Bulsara beating him when he had scored 15. Greig then came in and the score was taken to 75 when Watts was caught in the long field, having put up 29 in good style. Purcell and Cooper failed to score, Halliday made 5, Milne 6 and Southey nothing. Greig, who was not out when the innings closed, made 22, the grand total being only 104. The Parsees went to the wickets shortly before lunch and after the interval the cricket was slow, Pavri and Collahawallah took the score to 54 before the Parsee captain was caught and bowled by Cooper for a well played 31. Meherhomjee was next in and the score reached 97 before the second wicket fell, Milne dismissing Meherhomjee by a splendid catch. Warden followed and stayed till the score was 114 when he was caught at the wicket by Brooke. He was succeeded by Chothia but very soon after Colahawallah was stumped having laboriously compiled 37. Kapadia went in with the score at 123 for 4 wickets but only made one, Driver the next man in was responsible for 7 and Parekh joined Chothia. At 153 the latter was caught after having scored 24. Mulla was out for a single and stumps were drawn with the score 154 for 8 wickets.

The match was continued on Tuesday, rain falling before the start. Parekh and Madon, the over night not outs, were not long together, the former being stumped with the score at 159. Bulsara was last man in and they took the total to 170 when he was caught, the Parsees leading on the first innings by 66. The Presidency began their second innings at 12 o'clock with Greig and Simms. The Presidency captain was out for 9 and Watts took his place and the score was taken to 20 before Simms was caught. Brooke followed but failed to score and Christie joined Watts. He only made 2 when he was caught with the score at 29 for four. Tillard made a blob and was succeeded by Purcell. The score was then raised to 36 when Christie was caught. Cooper was next in and stayed till the score was 58, when he was dismissed. Halliday scored a single and Milne then joined Purcell. At the lunch interval the score was 73 for eight wickets and when play was resumed the Presidency took their total to 83 when Milne was caught. Southey failed to score and the innings closed for 85, Purcell not out 29. The Parsees were left with 20 to make to win and in doing so they lost their first two wickets without score, but Kapadia and Warden scored 22 between them and the Parsees won by eight wickets. Football.

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

THE Durand Tournament was to have begun on the 15th instant, but heavy and continuous rain on the 17th and 18th rendered it impossible to make a start till the 20th, when two games were played. The ground was in anything but a good state and a heavy shower just before play commenced turned it into a swamp. The Royal Scots and the Royal Fusiliers were the first to take the field and they put up a fair game, the Scots emerging victorious. They were the first to press and it was not long before Bolton opened their account. Play was up and down for a spell and then the Scots attacked once more and forced a couple of corners, but these were not improved upon. In the second half play was level for some time till the Scots again got possession and Ross scored. Hastie followed this up with another point shortly after, and the holders thus won by 3 goals to nil. The West Ridings next met the King's Own Scottish Borderers and a very even game ended in a pointless draw, twenty minutes' extra time also failing to produce a definite result. The match was replayed on Thursday morning and ended in another draw without score. Heavy rain in the evening caused the postponement of both matches but the sun came out next day and dried the ground and three matches were brought off. The K. O. S. B.'s and West Ridings met for a third time in the morning and this time the K. O. S. B.'s proved themselves the better team on the day's play, winning by 3 goals to nil. Large crowds assembled to witness the two matches in the afternoon, Their Excellencies the Viceroy and Lady Hardinge being among those present. The first match was between the 2nd East Yorks and the 5th Mountain Battery from Jutogh, the Gunners winning to the general surprise by 4 goals to 2. Play was up and down at the start till the E. Yorks conceded a corner but nothing came of this and the E. Yorks in turn forced a corner which also proved fruitless. The Gunners returned to the attack and Newman scored their first goal, another being added before half time. On changing ends the E. Yorks asserted themselves and opened their account. Desultory play followed and the next prominent occurrence was a penalty kick to the Battery who scored off it. The E. Yorks attacked and reduced the margin once more, but the Gunners were not to be denied and scoring again won as stated by 4 goals to 2. The second match was between the King's Own and the Lancashire Fusiliers. Although the Fusiliers pressed during the major part of the first half they could only score once, Abbott putting through. On crossing over the King's Own were again put on the defensive and in spite of great efforts to keep their opponents out they were beaten on four occasions, Lack (2) and Abbott (2) being responsible for the scoring in this period. The Fusiliers thus won by 5 to nil. The weather conditions were most favourable on Saturday when two more games were brought off. In the first the Gordon Highlanders met the 3rd King's Royal Rifles, a well contested game ending in a draw one all—the Gordons scoring in the first half and the Rifles after the interval. Extra time produced no alteration in the score. In the other match the H. L. I. played the Artillery Brigade from Roorkee. The first half was fairly well contested, but the H. L. I. led at the interval by 2 to nil, and having matters all their own way in the second moiety, put on two more goals and ran out winners by 4 to nil.

On Monday the match between the Gordons and the 3rd King's Royal Rifles was replayed and another good game was witnessed. A feature of the first half was the number of corners given—the Gordons conceding three and the Rifles seven but none of them were improved upon and the interval arrived without score. In the second moiety the Gordons scored through Galletly and though the Rifles made desperate efforts they were unable to equalise and were thus beaten by a single point. The second match was between the 13th Hussars and the Black Watch. The cavalry team pressed at the start and Deane scored a goal. Then play was transferred to their end and Watson equalised, Gordon adding a second goal shortly after. The Highlanders kept up the attack on changing ends and scored two more goals. Gordon and Dennison being responsible. The Hussars then invaded their opponents territory, but though they forced three corners they were unable to score again and were beaten 4 to 1. Tuesday's two games ended in draws. The Royal Welsh Fusiliers and Simla Volunteers failing to score in their match and the game between the 18th Royal Irish and King's Liverpool Regiment ending one all. Rhodes scored for the Liverpools in the first half and Mockler equalised on changing ends.

THE ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

The tournament opened on the 18th instant with the match between the Loyal North Lancs, who had recently won the Harris Tournament at Poona, and the Bombay Football Club. A big crowd turned out to witness the game. Play though vigorous was not particularly brilliant in the first half and the interval arrived without score, the military having had the better of the exchanges. In the second half the Lancs continued to have the upper hand but they only got through once, Martindale scoring a goal, which many thought should have been disallowed for offside. The N. Lancs thus won by a goal to nil but their display did not impress the spectators, who wondered how it was they beat the Warwickshire, the Bombay champions, in the Poona tourney. The Bombay Gymkhana played the Dorsets on Tuesday and a good game was expected, but the soldiers quite outplayed their opponents, who were distinctly off colour and gave a wretched display. The final score was : Dorsets, 7; Gymkhana, nil. Bonter, Bridge, Shute (2) and Drew scored in the first half, Drew and Shute adding to the total after the interval. The two local soldier teams—the Warwicks and the R.G.A. from Colaba—came together on the 20th and another disappointing display was witnessed. The Warwicks won comfortably by 3 to nil, a score which might have been a good deal bigger had they availed themselves of all their opportunities. Early in the first half the Warwicks opened their account and though they did most of the attacking in this period this was all the score at the interval. On crossing over the Warwicks scored two more goals, Parkes and Hisher being responsible, and in spite of desperate efforts the Gunners were unable to put through.

The York and Lancs Regiment met the Durham L. I. on Thursday last. It was a well contested game the Durhams eventually winning by 2 goals to nil. They had the better of the exchanges in the first half but were weak in front of goal and the interval arrived without score. After some up and down play on resuming Humble notched the Durhams' first point. The York and Lancs did their best to get on terms but without success, and Race putting on another goal the Durhams won as stated.

The Loyal North Lancs and the R. F. A. from Kirkee met on Friday last when a hotly contested game was witnessed. The Lancs were the better team but the defence on both sides was excellent and the game ended in a pointless draw. Replaying the next day the two teams put up a really excellent game. There was very little to choose between them and though the Lancs were victorious by 2 goals to nil, the Gunners had as much of the game as their opponents and their forwards were only kept out by a splendid defence. The first half was pointless, but half way through the second Connor scored and a penalty against the artillerymen enabled Roberts to register a second point.

The first of the semi-final games was played on Tuesday, when the Royal Warwicks met the Durham L. I. The teams were very evenly matched and the spectators were treated to the best display thus far in the tournament. The result was a win for the Warwicks by the only goal scored.

The Leslie cup sprinting competition results are as follows :—

CALCUTTA RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WEDNESDAY, the 20th instant, saw the last of the twenty-second Calcutta Rugby Union Challenge Cup Competition, and once more the trophy was carried away by a military team. This year's tournament was the poorest on record—the Rugby being the worst that has been witnessed in recent years and the entries the smallest on record. There is no excuse for the poor display given by our local teams, for there was very good material, but the men would not come out for practice. Calcutta, we hear, are sending a team to Madras, but as they have put in scarcely any practice since they were defeated in the local tournament they will meet most likely with no better success than they have experienced in recent years in the Southern Presidency Tournament.

The standard of Rugby has been very poor this year, but the tournament, as has always been the case, was run on satisfactory lines and the refereeing of Messrs. A. M. Barnett and C. Reid in particular has been all that could be desired.

The final this year was contested by the West Ridings (holders) and the United Services, and although the latter were expected to put up a good fight the issue was never in doubt, and the West Ridings won by a goal and two tries (11 points) to nil. The game was a hard one—the hardest that has been witnessed this season—but there was little doubt that the better team won. The United Services forwards brought off several rushes in fine style, especially during the first half, and Chase demonstrated that he was the finest three-quarter among local players. Butcher, the English International, made several attempts to open up the game, but in Morris and Wilson of the West Ridings Butcher had two halves a bit superior to himself. Connors, Sweeney and Captain Walker, the skipper of the Services team, were the pick of the forwards, but Pitman at full back did not pick up well and his kicking lacked length. Wilson kicked off for the Dukes at ten minutes past 6, the venue being the C. F. C. ground, which was in the best of condition, and the only thing to complain of was that the evening was a sultry one. The opening play was with the Services, and the scrummaging took place well inside the Dukes' twenty-five. The latter, however, offered a good defence, their tackling being deadly, and by good packing and strong punting into touch gradually ground was gained. Morris made a couple of attempts to drop goals but was not successful. On nearing the interval the West Ridings' forwards began to make their scrummaging abilities felt and Bootland, who is their best forward in the "loose," got over with an excellent try. No goal resulted, and at half time the Dukes led by 3 points to nil. This small margin was not sufficient to insure any confidence, but during the second half the Dukes had much more of the play, and when Wilson got over with an unconverted try a victory for the Tykes was assured. The Services were not disheartened and Chase and Marriott made several attempts to break through, but the defence was too good. Just before the finish Turner got over after a bout of passing, and the Ridings won as stated, Wilson adding the extra points. After the match Mr. Frank W. Carter, an old C. F. C. Rugger player, said a few words of congratulation and Mrs. Cobbold, wife of our well-known tennis player, gave away the cup. Teams :—

The Horse.

HINTS TO BEGINNERS ON THE SADDLE HORSE AND HIS USE.

BY JOHN GILPIN.

CHAPTER X.

BITTING.

IT is generally agreed that horses not intended for racing should be ridden in a double bridle of some kind. Personally for hacking and hunting I prefer the Mullen-mouthed or half-moon Pelham to all other bits for any but hard pullers. There seems to be no reason for putting two pieces of iron in a horse's mouth when one will do, and it is only in fancy high school riding that the two mouthpieces are really necessary. The Mullen-mouthed Pelham can be had with cheeks of various lengths to suit different horses. The harder the horse's mouth the longer should be the cheeks of the bit, and a very big horse sometimes requires a fairly stiff bit to make him collect himself. I do not consider the jointed Pelham at all a sound bit to use and strongly advise the beginner to have nothing to do with it. I had a pony that ran away with a number of practised riders in one of these bits but was held without difficulty in an ordinary double bridle. For most horses I like a sliding mouthpiece. This should have a leather or rubber guard at each side to prevent the horse's lip from being pinched between the mouthpiece and the cheek of the bit. A form of this bit without the sliding mouthpiece is known as the Rugby Polo Bit. The mouthpiece of all these bits should have a fair arch and should be pretty thick. The less the arch the milder the bit as the pull is received on the tongue instead of on the sensitive bars of the mouth. A thin mouthpiece hurts and worries the horse and may cut the bars of his mouth, therefore the broader the bearing surface, in reason, the better. Thin mouthpieces are very severe and horses seem to pull hard on them for the Irish reason that it hurts them to do so.

A common fault is to have the bit too high in the mouth. An inch above the tush of the gelding and two inches above the corner teeth in the mare is laid down in the books. I should place it from half to three-quarters of an inch lower in both. It should be comfortably clear of the tush in the gelding but not more. What is required is that when the reins are tightened the curb chain nestles neatly into the chin groove. The chain should not be too loose. When you can just get two fingers between it and the horse's jaw it is right. A loose curb chain is of no use whatever and only slaps against the horse's chin and may rub the skin sore. With an unbroken horse it is well to put the breaking snaffle pretty high in his mouth at first lest he acquire the habit of putting his tongue over it. If he does this he will never have a good mouth. Mr. James Fillis has a cure for this. He says in his book (translated as "Breaking and Riding" by Captain Hayes) " . . . . the only remedy is to put a small movable plate of the shape of a figure of eight, with its centre on the top of the port of the bit, upon which it can revolve." I have not tried this method yet but propose to do so the next time I come across a horse with this fault. It sounds as though it would prove effective. As soon as the horse has formed the habit of keeping its tongue beneath the breaking snaffle it can be placed lower in the mouth. I remember once being given a hawk on a horse that was supposed to be bad to mount and a large party assembled to see how I should manage to get on to it. When the horse was brought up I saw that both the bit and bridoon were far too high in its mouth and that it was girthed far too tight. I loosened the girths myself and let out the bridle until the horse was comfortable, when it stood like a rock, to the disappointment of the onlookers, and walked quietly off as soon as I was comfortably in the saddle.

A curb chain should be of thick, big, single links. Thin small links hurt the horse and irritate him into resistance, and I think the double-linked chains also deaden a horse's mouth. Above all avoid cheap curb chains. Everything about a horse's bridle should be of the best quality obtainable. The difference in cost between first quality bits and chains and the bazar stuff is not such as to influence materially one's yearly balance sheet, but a badly made or cast-steel bit may easily cost a man his life, and a broken curb chain can be nearly as dangerous.

Where both bridoon and bit are used the bridoon should be half way between the bit and the corner of the horse's mouth. It should not wrinkle the skin at the corner. Both bit and bridoon should fit the horse's mouth. If the bit is too broad it is apt to work to one side and so to get an uneven bearing, the straight part pressing on one side of the mouth and the port on the other with the effect that the horse carries his head to one side. It is also apt to bruise the lips by shaking from side to side. If too narrow it will chafe them. If a jointed bridoon or snaffle is too broad half of it will come out of the horse's mouth to one side with the result that the lip is pinched and cut in the joint. Bridoons and snaffles are to be had on the half-moon principle and are, I think, to be preferred to jointed ones for ordinary work. A very good cross-country rider tells me that there are some horses which could not be held unless the snaffle were jointed. Granting the truth of this in steeplechasing we may still hold that the point is unimportant when the bridoon is supplemented by the bit.

Some hard pullers with very callous mouths require very severe bits such as the Chifney or the "Three in One" bit but horses that require such engines to hold them need not be mentioned in connection with beginners who should carefully avoid such brutes. A man who would sell such a horse to a beginner is fortunately a rarer animal than a bad puller, but I have met such a one, and the beginner should not disregard even remote possibilities.

On the march a noseband should be used with the Half-moon Pelham otherwise there will be nothing to hold the horse by when the bit is removed to enable him to feed. This bit is not suitable to such horses as object to the bit being put into their mouths again after feeding. With them a double bridle should be used and the bridoon should be left in the mouth. The best way to make such a horse open his mouth to take the bit is to close his nose by gripping it above the nostrils. It is not safe to take him by the tongue unless you have something else to hold him by as there is a risk of pulling his tongue out if he suddenly tries to break away. To take hold of the tongue by inserting the fingers at the side of the mouth above the tushes is the recognised way of opening a horse's mouth. The tongue can be held between the second and third fingers and the lower lip between the thumb and index finger of the same hand. This removes all risk of undue strain on the tongue. Injuries to the tongue soon heal even if very severe.

In bridling a horse always remember to put the reins over his head before trying to put the bridle on. You have then something to hold him by if he plays up. Horses that are difficult to bridle should have their forelocks left on to hold them by, in fact I think that no horse should have his mane hogged until he is well broken. It is useful for all kinds of purposes.

A horse can be held by the ear by a man of ordinary strength and activity. I have often been lifted off my legs by a horse when holding him in this way. When a horse lifts me I find it helps me to retain my hold if I jump as the horse lifts his head. This reduces the strain on the hand. It is not easy, however, for a short man to take a tall horse by the ear if the horse suspects and resents his object. The best way is to gradually work the hand up the neck, but it is by no means infallible. When the ear is grasped it should be twisted half round so that if the horse pulls at it he hurts himself. The head should be held as low as possible. It is easy for an assistant to bridle a horse held in this way.

If you are holding a horse on foot and he tries to break away try to get in front of him so that he has to back and walk after him so that he cannot get a pull on the halter. He will soon stop. If he tries to turn sideways hit him on the rump with a whip to straighten him, and if he strikes out at you hit him on the leg he strikes with while it is still in the air. It is useless to hit him afterwards. Watch very carefully if he rears that he does not hit you with a foreleg. You should hold the leading rein near the bridle with the right hand and the extreme end of it in the left so that you can let go with the right hand and step out of reach of a blow without letting the horse go.

QUETTA HORSE SHOW.

THE Quetta Horse Show occupied three afternoons last week and the 24 classes on the programme attracted an entry of well over 300—a considerable improvement in quality being noticed. The arrangements were excellent and Captain Russell, who conducted the fixture, thoroughly deserved the nice things General Sclater had to say in this connection in his speech at the prize giving. The officers of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, the 121st Pioneers and the R.A.M.C. extended their hospitality to the station on the three afternoons of the show, and Mrs. Ramsay distributed the prizes, the awards being as follows:—

The Naturalist.

AN OLD-FASHIONED ANIMAL.

THERE are very few creatures on the earth to-day which so closely resemble their ancestors of Pleistocene days as the hedgehog does. Even the method he has chosen for his defence is of an old-world type, and no "up-to-date" wild thing would contemplate using such a plate of armour as he does, and somehow the use of such a defence recalls the armour of the Middle Ages as compared with the weapons of the present day. Exactly how it was evolved is unknown, but hedgehogs almost reproducing those of to-day are found among the remains of a long-vanished past.

Even the place accorded him in natural history books is reminiscent of the long-ago days when he first appeared, for he is not now an insectivorous animal except when he can get no other food, though in those far-past days it is probable that he and his kind were forced to content themselves with an insect diet for want of the rich choice before them at the present day. However that may be, he now much prefers a more solid menu, and beetles, slugs and worms all form meals for him, though whether he actually eats snakes is not settled. It is true that Buckland saw one eat an adder he had killed, but this was in captivity and the conditions aided the hedgehog, but in a state of nature a warning hiss from an angry snake has been observed to cause the retreat of the hedgehog, or "urchin," as country people usually call him.

Nothing is more interesting than to watch a contest between these two strange enemies, for unless an urchin can come upon a snake asleep he does not care to attack him. When he is exceptionally lucky, however, he will dart forward and make a lunge at the snake, biting him in the back if possible, in order to break his backbone; after which he will instantly curl himself up into a ball to prevent a counter-attack. If the snake is disabled by the first bite he will presently repeat the first stroke, but usually the snake will turn fiercely upon him and dart out his forked tongue, and the urchin will keep at a respectful distance while the snake, keeping up his hissing threat, will glide out of the way of the hedgehog.

The creature is not usually eaten as food, though the few who have tasted it declare it to be most delicate eating; but the gipsies, who, while fond of animal-food, are not able to gratify their taste as fully as they wish, are very fond of baked hedgehog, and like nothing better than a supper of this dainty. The way they prepare it is by rolling it in a layer of wet mud and putting the whole into the embers of the fire made in some waste place, and when they think it has been baked long enough, they draw it out, and upon breaking the hard shell of baked earth, the spines and skin come away, adhering to the earthen covering, and the flesh is then eaten with great relish; it is said to resemble suckingpig in flavour.

The spines of the hedgehog are beautifully adapted to his mode of life, and the roots are so arranged under his skin that even if driven inwards by a blow they do not injure him in any vital part; for the root is flat towards the outside, and this prevents the quills from being pulled out, while it is rounded at its inner side, so that should it be driven in, the rounded part will soften the blow. It is this structure which enables an urchin to fall from some height without injuring himself, though it is unlikely that he ever deliberately takes a leap, for he is but a clumsy creature and fears a fall from any height. He will—if he desires to get down some steep spot—wander along the edge until he falls over, when he instantly closes himself up and thus avoids the full force of the blow. Indeed, the speed with which he can close up is wonderful.

As a rule the hedgehog is a silent animal, and rarely makes a sound, but if caught in a trap he gives a piercing cry like that of a creature in terrible pain, and if much annoyed he will utter a short sharp sound like a bark; but except upon these rare occasions he goes on his peaceful old-world way with no sound to announce his approach. An observer who has told us much about this strange animal has discovered that he possesses hibernating glands which are in full work in the autumn when he retires for the winter, but atrophy in the spring. The same writer tells us that when about to retreat into his winter quarters armies of phagocytes make their way in the animals body to those parts most in danger during the winter's torpor—such as the alimentary canal—of the attacks of bacteria; and during the four months that the hedgehog sleeps, he does not usually rouse himself to feed as do certain other forms of life, but passes them in perfect rest. But in the spring when he awakes, he sets to work to mate, and presently the female brings forth two to four young ones, who are blind at first and without spines, but within twenty-four hours tender little spines begin to appear here and there upon the tiny bodies, and within a fortnight the baby hedgehogs are like little reproductions of their parents; but even then the family does not separate, but passes months together, and sometimes they spend the first winter curled up all together in the same burrow.

The little hedgehogs are a pretty sight, for they play like kittens, and can easily be tamed. They will then bite very gently a finger held out to them, and kick it with their little feet in play like a kitten; and even when grown up, a hedgehog which has been treated as a pet will remember its early friends and run to meet them when it sees them coming. Indeed, throughout its life, this strange animal has ways of its own well worth observing, and we have much still to learn about it.—The Globe.

THE GROUSE DISEASE ENQUIRY.

Lord Lovat and the other members of the Grouse Disease Committee are to be heartily congratulated on the conclusion of their labours, the results of which are published in a couple of handsome and elaborately illustrated quarto volumes, published by Messrs. Smith, Elder and Co., at the price of two guineas. The Committee, who were fortunate in securing the assistance of a number of experts in various branches of natural history, began their regular labours so long ago as 1905, when they were organised as a departmental section of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. From this official status the man in the street might naturally infer that the funds for the enquiry were drawn from the pockets of the long-suffering taxpayers. As a matter of fact the Government did not contribute a single penny to the funds, the whole of which were subscribed by sportsmen and others interested in grouse and their natural history. Very noteworthy also is the fact that persons belonging to many grades and ranks have contributed their quota to the enquiry ; the list including land-owners, sportsmen, gamekeepers and naturalists. In this respect the work is probably unique. As the enquiry proceeded, its scope gradually expanded, so that in the end it embraced everything connected with the anatomy, life-history, and habits of the grouse, together with a complete account of all the known parasites—and these are numerous—with which the noble bird is infested at various stages of its existence. Nor is this all, for it was found that the liability of the grouse to disease, or its immunity therefrom, depends to a very great extent upon the condition of its native moors and the amount of stock they are permitted to carry. Accordingly, the volumes contain a large amount of practical information with regard to the management of moors. This part of the work will probably indeed be the one which will prove of the widest interest to sportsmen and grouse-moor owners, for it seems that practically all that can be done in the way of mitigating and controlling the disease is to be effected by the proper management of moors.

In respect of the natural history of the grouse special interest attaches to the annual changes of the plumage, or moults, which are unusually numerous. This part of the enquiry was confided to Mr. E. A. Wilson, the well-known naturalist to the Natural Antarctic Expedition, who is once more amid the eternal ice and snow of the South Polar Regions. The changes in the plumage of both sexes are described in detail ; the coloured illustrations helping the reader to follow the letter-press. The difference in the seasons in which the cock and hen grouse moult is of importance as it is one of the causes which tells upon the mortality of the two sexes at different seasons of the year. One of the plates shows the manner in which grouse shed their claws once a year.

The important part of the work relates, however, to what we venture to call the true grouse-disease, viz., the one caused by a minute thread-worm, or hair-worm (Trichostrongylus), and therefore known as strongylosis. It is true, indeed, that there is a second disease, commonly known as coccidiosis, but which, as it is caused by a single-celled intestinal parasite named eimeria, ought to be termed eimeriosis. Since, however, this second disease only attacks young birds, it evidently cannot be the cause of the mortality which has prevailed in some years among the adult packs. To describe the life-history of either or both of these intestinal parasites would be quite impossible within the limits of a single article, and that without illustrations, so that for such details—full of interest as they are—we must refer our readers to the report itself. One important result of the enquiry is that "all the outbreaks of disease that came under the notice of the Committee can be ascribed either to strongylosis or coccidiosis, the only two diseases which the Committee now recognise as causing widespread mortality among grouse." One of the important signs of disease, either strongylosis or coccidiosis is loss of weight and the Committee state that "during the whole period of the inquiry, from 1904 to 1910, there has not been a single outbreak of grouse disease in which the birds died without loss of weight."

Although strongylosis and eimeriosis are the two most serious parasitic diseases with which the grouse is afflicted, they are by no means the only ones. Not to speak of other kinds, the birds are, for example, infested by three kinds of tape worm, of which two, the greater and the lesser grouse-tape worm, are more prevalent than the third; while of those two, the smaller kind is by far the more harmful, causing indeed in some seasons no inconsiderable mortality.

The proper management and economics of moors form the greater part of the concluding section of the report;—a section in which Lord Lovat, the Chairman of the Committee, shows not only his own mastery of all the details of the subject, but how all-important are the annual turning of strips of heather on every moor, and other measures calculated to promote the general health of the birds. After mentioning that the strongyle, or hair-worm, is the sole cause of the true grouse-disease, as distinct from eimeriosis, Lord Lovat proceeds to observe that the larva of this intestinal worm may be found on the open moors, especially on the spots where the birds collect to feed. This leads his lordship to add the following remarks:—"To put it briefly and in practical language, moor-management is the science of distributing the stock of birds over the moor, so that at no period of the year can any area be so infested by the strongyle worm as to make it a source of danger to the best well nourished bird (that is to the bird of lightest weight) on that area."

Heather-burning and draining are also discussed in considerable detail; particular attention being directed to the question whether particular moors should be burned in spring or in autumn. The answer to this question appear to depend very largely upon local conditions; but it is stated that in Scotland heather-burning may take place after the first of October, sportsmen will be specially interested in the amount of stock a moor of a certain acreage can advantageously carry; for on this, of course, depends in great degree the amount of the bag. The importance of having only strong and healthy birds is specially insisted upon; and to insure this, first broods should be encouraged, and later ones kept in check. Indeed, when shooting has once begun, it is urged that all "cheapers" should be relentlessly shot down.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The news has been wired out from home that Swynford broke his near foreleg while out at exercise on the 29th instant. There are, however, hopes of saving the animal's life. Swynford, as all our readers know, is Lord Derby's celebrated race horse. As a two-year-old he made but a single appearance running fourth in the Exeter Stakes at the Newmarket First July Meeting in 1909. Last year he put up a fine performance as a three-year-old scoring four wins in six appearances. He ran unplaced to Lemberg in the Derby and third to Mr. Fairie's crack in the St. James' Palace Stakes at Ascot. At the same meeting he won the Hardwicke Stakes and a month later cantered away with the Liverpool Cup. At Doncaster he turned the tables on his great rival, Lemberg winning the St. Leger in which Lemberg finished third. He closed the season with a walk over in the Liverpool St. Leger. This year he won the Chippenham Plate at the Newmarket First Spring and next came out in the Coronation Cup at Epsom in which he was beaten by Lemberg by three parts of a length on level terms. His next appearance was at Ascot where he again won the Hardwicke Stakes and in the Princess of Wales' Stakes at Newmarket in July he had another duel with Lemberg and, carrying 5lb. less, he this time made all the running and won easily by a length and a half. The Eclipse Stakes was his latest appearance and he was again victorious over to Lemberg, beating him by four lengths at level weights.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—There was more good racing on Wednesday, but a very poor attendance, the day rather a hot one to start with and punters had a poor time of it with only a couple of favourites to help them out.

We again opened with a pony race, for which only four started and Ask Mama (late Waimoko) was made a very warm favourite from Runaway Girl. Encourage was taken out to make the pace, and Ask Mama followed straining to pass his stable companion, but when they had covered half the journey the mare had ceased to pull and later was palpably beaten. Runaway Girl was sent after the leader and came round the turn on terms. Up to about a hundred yards from home the two were hard at it, the Encourage stayed on and Runaway Girl stopped so fast that Cheeky also beat her on the post.

A comparatively poor lot went in the mile and a quarter, Bedouin Plate, and there was good betting. Braganza being favourite from Winchester and at sixes being Sir Hugo, Meazer and Parliament. In front, the favourite's interests, Well Done went out in front, then Meazer as usual passed him at the mile with Brigand and Winchester close to the two. Meazer was the only one to hold on to these, Braganza and Parliament following him at the half mile. These three turned for home in line, but soon after it was evident that Braganza had a good deal in hand, and he went away comfortably. At the finish, Sir Hugo came with a rattle along the rails and beat the other two, Parliament losing his place.

Next came a most interesting race round the course, the terms only allowing of an indifferent class, Vancouver being established favourite from Sholto and Royal Scotland, and it may be imagined how the books got on when not one of these could even find place money. The Loaf was slightly in front of The Cockatoo, Devereux and Lady Spring in order, till at the nine furlongs The Cockatoo led and later was clear in front, Vancouver closing with the front bunch. At the six furlongs Devereux passed the leader with Lady Spring a close third, and these three led together for home. The Cockatoo was still going well, and a furlong from home secured an advantage which he kept to the end. Vancouver had dropped back at the half mile, but came again with a run which, however, failed to secure him any part of the stakes.

Again in the seven furlong, Talegaon Plate, we were rather wide of the mark, but open betting suggested that it was a difficult race. Young Thara and Mutrood were rather better fancied than Singer, those nibbled at being Mudkoor, Baloz and Little Laffy. First out were Baloz and Director, but then Maasal dashed away and was soon fully ten lengths in front. From the half mile Aden put in a race and at the last turn he, Baloz, Singer and Young Thara formed a bunch, the leader having had enough. Baloz and Aden led for home and a great finish ensued in which Hoyt's stronger finish on the former got him home.

On her last running over six furlongs, Lumination was a decided favourite for the five, the September Plate, next being Paul Pry and Aquatic. Lumination, Chivalry, Lord Merv and Elser were the most promising for the first three furlongs and as they came into the straight the first named had the measure of Chivalry. Paul Pry never really threatened much danger, but Aquatic put in a strong run after being some way back only to find Lumination still nicely in hand.

Finally the Lawn Plate, Abdul Malik and Ashroff, fighting for favouritism, ending in that order, with Zoolphokarr and Young Majub the only others fancied at all. Grey Mist, clear in front, Sharar, Majesty and Chechan were first in front, but none of these could stay it out. Zoolphokarr and Young Majub made up ground on the way to the bend, then in the straight they came into the lead. Zoolphokarr was going decidedly the better and at the finish held the black safe. Abdul Malik could never get through and Ashroff came up in time to get third place, beating Dojan.

The third day of the Second Meeting, and incidentally the Big Meeting itself, came to a close with a card of seven events on Saturday. A sign that the season is well advanced has been the heat, but a big crowd was present, punters having rather a poor time of it. It has been decided that in Bombay there are to be no bookmakers in the second enclosure, only the Tote, and one wonders how the experiment will act, as one may presume this to be a sort of test.

During the month there is no doubt we have had some very good racing, interesting team races and handicaps which have worked out more than creditably to Mr. Reynolds. This likewise reflects on Mr. O'Gorman, in whom we have every confidence in that we may depend on anything getting a fair chance and the benefit of his patience at the gate. Arrangements have been such as one could desire and it is to be hoped that these facts will come to the notice of certain people.

After being scarcely as well up as expected in the winning owners' list, Mr. Goculdass appropriated no less than three events, which now brings him close up to the other two big local owners, Messrs. Ali bin Talib and R. R. S., no one now standing out at all on his own. The two Calcutta owners Messrs. Apcar and Galstaun are very close up, Mr. Apcar mainly having Five Crown to thank. Another owner one is glad to see well up is Mr. Kelso, who has made so many lucky purchases at a comparatively low price, and runs them in a manner which stands as a lesson to others.

As to the racing, it started with the Deccan Plate, a hurdle race over a mile and three-quarters, and remembering what Five Crown did with Sholto in Calcutta, the betting went accordingly, Realm next, the only other being the pony Wild Boy. With Realm behind, the other three passed the Stand together, then the pony went out in front closely followed by Sholto. These two ran practically together to the six-furlong post, where Wild Boy, who had been jumping perhaps better than any, began to tire. At the half mile Five Crown came up and passed Sholto, and the race was over. Realm made a futile effort, and though Sholto also fought out to the end the previous positions were unchanged, the favourite having quite a bit in hand.

A poor lot went out in the Khandala Plate, the picked one of Mr. Ali bin Talib's three being Money Gold, Regent being next and then Baloz. Grand Duke and Shawcutt went out to make the running for these two respectively and from the three furlongs both dropped out of it. Here Money Gold came into the lead going well, but at the turn Hoojaz was well up and Baloz put in an appearance on the extreme outside. Though in difficulties at the distance, Money Gold battled on, but Baloz always had the upper hand in the straight and once more wore the opposition down. He has come on very well for a new one put late into work, and promises to turn out very well in future.

Bonny Boy being omitted in favour of Convent Girl, left nine in the Paddock Plate and Pincher, was established favourite, a position he retained despite money for Lord Carlyon and Socialist from the right quarter. All were away in a bunch together, first to show out being Lord Carlyon from Metal Girl, Comet and Huka. Shortly Metal Girl and Comet began to give way and Huka was close on the leader with Convent Girl next, the mare drawing up second on the outside before the bend, where there was not much in it between half a dozen. As they turned for home Lord Carlyon was still well in hand, next from the rails being Huka, Convent Girl, Pincher and Socialist almost in a line. The first named had Huka set and he had Convent Girl under the whip, whereas Pincher did not seem likely to catch Lord Carlyon. That it is never a good thing for the latter till reaching the post has, however, been shown before and almost on it he slackened. Pincher was, on the other hand, going strong and got up in the nick of time.

The great trial of stamina for Arabs followed, the two-mile Turf Club Cup, for which Valens was made favourite in preference to Parliament with Zainulmulook better fancied than Tajimulook or Merrily, Winchester and Artist also calling for some attention. To Parliament went the task of pace making but not till completing the straight past the stand was he allowed to go far away. He then established a long lead of fully dozen lengths from Merrily, Young Salanic and Thaboor, who also left the rest a good way behind. A mile was about enough for Young Salanic, and the race lay between the three remaining in front, none of the others ever being able to catch them. Merrily was close to the leader at the six furlongs, but as they neared the bend Thaboor came handy, and turning for home was in the lead, of which he was then never deprived. Instead of dropping right out, Parliament came on again and just caught Merrily on the post, Valens making up a deal of ground but failing to get into anything like a winning position.

There was not the class one might expect in an open handicap in the Stand Plate of a mile, but nothing appeared to stand out on form, the favourite being again Hilarity, half a point shorter than Lady Spring, Punt and Beau Vive next. The Cellarer gave trouble at the gate, was left, then ran up into the lead at the six furlongs after Sequent, Solution and Lawn Sand had shown the way. Here also Coat of Arms came right up and at the half mile was left in the lead with the Cellarer dropping out and Punt displacing the others. These two came round the turn practically together, the result being that when Coat of Arms began his usual game of running out he took Punt with him and in consequence neither was in the finish, though they otherwise might have been. Taking advantage of this, Solution and Sequent once more came along the rails into the lead, followed by Lawn Sand and the three made a good race of it, only for Hilarity to put in her run at the distance and leave them all standing.

Seven only went out for the mile Ghorpuri Plate with Grey Falcon decided favourite from Lookman, but neither could bring home place money. Saree made the running, followed by Dawood Beg, Grey Falcon and Dojan, but the leader had all these beaten at the quarter mile. Running on, he appeared to have the race won, but a furlong from more Young Majub came through and just headed him on the post, the reward of consistency.

The Kharakwasla Plate had a big but magnificent field in class, Zuffer Beg, Young Thara and Pendil in most demand in a good betting race—fours on offer anything. Secretary made the pace, but only lasted to the turn, Pendil here coming into the lead from Young Thara and Zuffer Beg. He was holding these two, when opposite the stand Sweden shot through and showed he had a bit in hand, probably only having waited for a convenient opening.

This is the end of the Big Meeting, but the Extras are likely to prove of more than ordinary interest.

The Stewards of W. I. T. C. have decided to abolish bookmakers in the second enclosure at the coming Bombay racing season.

"The Application of Genetics to Horse-breeding" was the subject of the paper recently read in the Agricultural Sub-section of the British Association by Mr. C. C. Hurst. Soon after the discovery of Mendel's work in 1900 his attention was directed to the thoroughbred horse as a promising subject of investigation. The question of coat-colour, he said, proved a useful beginning, but to the practical breeder this was a minor consideration, except, perhaps in a few fancy breeds, where certain colours were more popular than others. In the thoroughbred, at all events, a good horse was of any colour. A much more important question was:—"Can he win the Derby?" Generally speaking coat-colour and racing power did not seem to bear any sort of relationship to one another, being apparently inherited quite independently. On the other hand evidence was gradually accumulating which suggested that in certain strains there was a partial coupling of coat-colour and racing power. For instance the chestnut grand-children of the famous racehorse St. Simon had so far proved themselves to be much inferior in racing power to their bay and brown brothers and sisters. While these chestnuts had between them only won two classic races their bay and brown brothers and sisters had between them won fifteen classic races, and were only about twice as numerous. Another interesting point under investigation was the apparent partial conjunction of brown coats, high racing power, and female sex in St. Simon's own offspring. St. Simon's brown fillies proved themselves to be strikingly superior in racing power to the bay fillies, the brown colts, and even the bay colts, a few individuals of which were extraordinarily good. This was the more remarkable when one considered that in racing colts had many advantages over fillies. It seemed possible that the elucidation of such an apparently trivial thing as coat-colour might help to throw light on the more complicated question of the breeding of a classic winner. It was generally admitted that the most useful type of light horse was the hunter. Recently Professor Cossar Ewart and he had drawn up a scheme of experiments in horse breeding for the use of the Board of Agriculture, because at present there was no such thing as a pure breeding hunter. Their studies had been mainly based on the thoroughbred chaser as probably the most suitable material upon which to work. After eliminating many hundreds of animals they had found five mares and three stallions which, when bred together, had given nothing but horses of the chaser type as tested on the racecourse and at the stud. In view of this fortunate find of what might perhaps be called a pure chaser they had recommended the Board of Agriculture to purchase some of the offspring of these animals in order to increase the pure line.

The annual general meeting of the members of the Bombay Jackal Club was held on Wednesday, the 27th ultimo, and the following resolutions were carried unanimously:—

That the accounts for the season 1910-11 be duly passed.

That the following gentlemen be elected to serve on the Committee for the season 1911-12: Sir Henry Procter and Messrs. Dunlop, Alister Forbes, Harter, Hearson and Ash.

That a vote of thanks be accorded to Mr. H. F. P. Hearson for the excellent work he has done during his term of office as Honorary Secretary of the Club.

That Mr. H. F. Lodge be elected to serve as Honorary Secretary for the season 1911-12.

At the conclusion of the meeting Mr. Alister Forbes moved that a resolution be passed to place on record the great loss sustained by the Club by the death of Mr. Howie Blair, who throughout his life in Bombay was always very intimately associated with the Club.

The 21st annual Bombay Mounted Sports Meeting is to be held on the Marine Lines Maidan on the 10th, 12th and 14th instant, when the usual attractive programme of events will be discussed.

In our London Sporting Letter to-day will be found full details of the race for the St. Leger—the result of which was given in our Special wire of the 14th September—and some interesting notes on the English Sculling Championship and the Channel Sculling record put up by the old Varsity Blue, the Rev. S. Swann. Channel records have of late attracted some attention; here is a list of the most important:—

First Swim of the Channel: Captain Webb, 24th August 1875—21 hours 45 minutes.

First Flight across the Channel: Bleriot, 25th July 1909—37 minutes.

Quickest Flight across the Channel: Radley, 13th August 1911—22 minutes.

Latest Channel Swim: Burgess, 6th September 1911—23 hours 40 minutes.

Rowing the Channel: Mr. W. L. Grenfell's eight 1885—4 hours 22 minutes.

Sculling the Channel; The Rev. S. Swann, 12th September 1911—3 hours 50 minutes.

A meeting of the representatives of the Bombay, Poona, Hindu, Islam and Parsi Gymkhanas was held on Tuesday, at the Bombay Gymkhana, to consider the question of turning the triangular cricket match into a quadrangular one by allowing Mahomedan cricketers to take part in it. Among those present were:—Messrs. E. L. Sale, G. C. Phillips, J. S. Milne and F. R. R. Brooke (Bombay Gymkhana); Major J. G. Greig and Major W. M. Southey (Poona Gymkhana); Messrs. J. M. Divecha and D. B. Lam (Parsi Gymkhana); Mr. G. H. Naik (Hindu Gymkhana); and the Hon'ble Mr. Ibrahim Rahimtoola and Mr. H. C. Tyebji (Islam Gymkhana). It was unanimously resolved to admit Mahomedans to international cricket, thus making the contest a quadrangular one. It is arranged that the Mahomedan team may be selected from players all over the country. Under the new resolution there will be three matches and lots will be drawn to decide what teams shall play each other in the two preliminary contests. The final will be played between the winners of the first two matches. In the event of the first two matches not coming to a definite conclusion, the results of the first innings will be considered decisive, and in case the first innings are not completed a spin of the coin will decide who shall play in the final match. All the matches will be played on the Bombay Gymkhana ground, the contest commencing most probably in the third week of September and ending on Wednesday of the last week of the same month. The arrangement of the quadrangular contest will not affect the Poona fixture between the Presidency and the Parsis, which will, as usual, be played in the second week of September.

The English Cricketers left for Australia last Friday and were given an enthusiastic send off. A solid combination. That is the general opinion expressed by the critics with regard to the fifteen men selected by the M.C.C. to do battle for England in Australia during the coming winter (says Laurance Woodhouse in the Daily Mail). It is a somewhat younger team than usual, as will be seen from the following table showing the years in which the players were born:—

Mr. P. F. Warner (captain), (Middlesex), October 1873.
Mr. J. W. H. T. Douglas (Essex), September 1882.
Mr. F. R. Foster (Warwick), January 1889.
P. Mead (Hants), March 1887.
J. Hitch (Surrey), May 1886.
H. Strudwick (Surrey), January 1880.
J. Hobbs (Surrey), December 1882.
G. Gunn (Notts), June 1879.
F. Woolley (Kent), May 1887.
S. Kinneir (Warwick), May 1873.
S. Barnes (Staffordshire), 1876.
E. J. Smith (Warwick), February 1887.
W. Rhodes (Yorkshire), October 1877.
J. Iremonger (Notts), March 1877.
J. Vine (Sussex), May 1875.

From this table it will be seen that the average age of the team is just over thirty, the youngest member being Mr. F. R. Foster, the Warwickshire captain, who is twenty-two, while the oldest member, S. Kinneir, who also hails from Warwickshire, is thirty-eight years of age. The Australian team for the Test matches will also average just thirty years, if the majority of the men who toured in England so successfully in 1909 are again selected.

Of the English team selected for this tour six members have represented England in Australia before—namely, the captain, Mr. P. F. Warner, and Strudwick, Hobbs, Gunn, Barnes, and Rhodes. Another curious feature is the selection of three great left-handed batsmen in Mead, Woolley, and Kinneir. Previously only four left-handers chosen for their batting have visited Australia—namely, Scotton, John Gunn, and Messrs. Garnett and Ford. Perhaps the tremendous success of the three great Australian left-handers, Messrs. Hill, Bardsley, and Ransford, has led the English Selection Committee to this decision.

What about England's chances of success? Well, looking through the fifteen men chosen there ought to be plenty of runs obtained, for while, with the exception of Hobbs and Woolley, there are no very brilliant batsmen, yet every man selected is exceptionally sound. Judging by Kinneir's achievements on perfect wickets this summer, he ought, like the Frog Footman in "Alice in Wonderland," to "sit" at the wickets "on and off for days and days." Right through the team there is plenty of solid batting, and though the want of a Fry or a Hayward—two "rocks" on which to found the innings—is sure to be felt, yet the England scores should surely be considerable, and in Australia the pace of the run-getting does not matter, as the Test matches are played to a finish.

When we come to the bowling one does not feel so full of confidence, and yet there are ten bowlers of different styles and paces included in the team. Hitch and Mr. Douglas are fast right-handed bowlers, Mr. Foster is a fast medium left-hander, Hobbs a fast medium right-hander, Barnes and Iremonger are medium paced right-handers, Rhodes, Woolley, and Mead slow left-handers, and Vine bowls leg-breaks. Here, indeed, is a fine bag of "all sorts." It is in the fast division, however, that we seem to be weak. Although the ball comes along faster in Australia than in England, Mr. Douglas hardly seems to be fast enough, and Hitch, although he is rapidly improving, hardly accurate enough. Hitch has always seemed to me to depend on a "jumping" ball for his wickets, but I am told that in Australia the ball very rarely flies more than stump-high, and as a consequence if a fast bowler is at all inaccurate he gets fearfully punished. It is a great pity that Mr. Walter Brearley, undoubtedly our best fast bowler to-day, is not a member of the team. He would have revelled in the hard work, and the short hours of play would have left him as fresh at the end of the day as at the beginning. With the exception of the fast bowling the attack seems fairly strong. Much, however, will depend on Mr. Foster, and if he can find his true form out there I expect him to prove our most successful bowler. Mr. Warner, however, will probably have to "nurse" him rather carefully, for it is a great strain for a youngster of twenty-two to go straight out to Australia after an arduous season in England.

Much has been written about the fielding capabilities of the team chosen, and this, to my mind, is the most important factor of the game, especially in Australia. On those "plumb" wickets it is no easy task to get a batsman out, and especially to clean bowl him; but the best chance as a rule lies in the fact that batsmen are apt to take a "flick" at the bowling before they have got a proper sight of it, and offer a chance to the fieldsman. On the holding or dropping of that catch the result of a Test match may depend, especially if the batsman be Mr. Hill, Mr. Trumper, or Mr. Bardsley. Over here on our less perfect wickets a catch or two dropped in the course of a match may not have such dire results, but in Australia they are well-nigh fatal. It is due to this fact that the Australians themselves are such brilliant exponents of the art of fielding. They know from bitter experience the value of holding catches. The inclusion of Hitch, George Gunn, and Woolley has certainly strengthened the fielding, and Vine, although he no longer returns the ball from the out-field with his old-time brilliancy, can still cover an immense amount of ground at high speed, and should save many a boundary. If Mr. Warner can make his team a first-class fielding side English stock will rise rapidly.

Finally, nothing succeeds like success. After many years of defeat in Australia Mr. Warner led out a team "down under" in 1904, and succeeded in recapturing the mythical "ashes." This successful experience should certainly hearten this most enthusiastic cricketer and give confidence to the men under his command. Let us hope for two matches all and England to win the "old trick." Then what a battle royal in England next summer, when both Australia and South Africa will be over here to fight for the cricket supremacy of the world.

The sporting papers to hand by the last Australian mail bring details of the fight between Jack Lester and Bill Lang. We are told that it was by grim determination and remarkable powers of endurance and recuperation that Jack Lester made himself the heavy-weight boxing champion of Australia by gaining a point's decision over Bill Lang at the Stadium on the 9th ultimo, after 20 rounds of bitter fighting. With all the advantages of weight, reach, and experience in his favour, Lang was fairly and squarely beaten. A mere youth, Lester proved that his sole aim is to get to close quarters, and when there the wild swings which characterise his outfighting give place to damaging rips and uppercuts delivered with both hands. Lester never looked like a loser, but it was not until the seventeenth round that the tide turned strongly in his favour. Whenever there was any inclination to slacken in speed on Lang's part Lester carried the fight to him. At the end Lang's strength was fast waning, but Lester was apparently as fresh as at the start. At the final bell Lang was in such poor shape that it is probable that with a couple of more rounds to go he would have been knocked out. The decision in Lester's favour was greeted with cheers.

Reuter wired on Saturday from Sydney that Lester met Sam McVea, the famous negro heavy-weight, in a twenty round contest on that day and was out-generalled in every department, being eventually beaten on points.

The efforts of the Rev. F. B. Meyer were successful in preventing the Johnson-Wells fight taking place in the British Isles, the vigorous crusade commenced by this benign person resulting in the Home Office stepping in and stopping the proposed contest. It makes little difference, however, as far as the principals are concerned, for they have arranged to bring off the match in Paris on the 14th instant and a good many British sportsmen will arrange to be in the Gay City on that date. Wells has been matched to fight Gunner Moir on the 18th and we learn that while he fears a "flood of brutality" as a result of the Wells-Johnson fight, the Rev. Meyer does not wish to oppose the Wells-Moir contest, as he has no wish to attack boxing as a sport. So we take it that a boxing contest is "sport" if two white man are engaged therein, but when a coloured gentleman is one of the participants it ceases to be so and becomes a brutal exhibition!

There will be a boxing tournament during the period the troops are concentrated at Delhi for the Durbar. It will be open to the British Army. It is under the patronage of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and will be managed by the General Officer Commanding the 8th (Lucknow) Division.

The 6th (Poona) Division Football Tournament has this year drawn six teams and was to have begun on Monday, but a start was not effected till Tuesday, when the Royal Warwicks met the Lincolns. The Warwicks, who are the Bombay League Champions and last week won the Rovers' Tournament in the Western capital, were most fancied, but the unexpected occurred and they were beaten. The game was well contested throughout and the Lincolns scored the only goal of the match in the first half, their opponents in spite of desperate efforts being unable to get on terms. The Dorsets were to have met the R.G.A. from Bombay the same evening, but the gunners failed to put in an appearance and the Dorsets walked over. The 10th Brigade R.F.A. and the Loyal North Lancs drew byes in the first round.

The Madras Rugby Tournament opened on Tuesday evening, when the Calcutta team met Madras in the first game in the presence of a big gathering. The play was very level in the first half, during which the visitors lost a chance of getting through and the interval arrived without score. On changing ends Madras gave a much better display—the Calcutta backs were outclassed and a feature of the game was the excellent passing exhibited by the Madras threes. The home team eventually won by 11 points to nil.

Those much travelled Londoners who have given most of our sea side and inland health resorts a turn will shortly be able to dispense with the annual jaunt, that is to say if their main object is recuperation. We are to have ozone brought to our feet so to speak. In other words the jaded City man, pining for a breath of really fresh air will find it laid on for him in the "tubes" which may ere long become quite fashionable health resorts! Ozone for underground travellers is the latest idea.

Within a fortnight every station of the Central London Railway will have its own apparatus for mixing electrically produced ozone with the atmosphere at the platform level and in the adjoining "tube," so that its patrons can enjoy the health-giving element while travelling to and from their offices.

Some months ago the Ozonair Company, Limited, equipped the Bank Station with its patent ozone mixing system of ventilation. The increased freshness and purity of atmosphere obtained have been so striking that the work of installing similar apparatus throughout the whole system is being rapidly carried out.

At the Bank Station 6,000 to 7,000 cubic feet of ozonised air are pumped into the station and its adjoining "tube" every minute from seven in the morning until one o'clock at night. As a result the acrid, dampish odour so noticeable in some of the earlier-built "tube" systems has utterly disappeared.

What look like two large wooden packing boxes, perched on the roof of the booking-office, contain all the apparatus necessary for the revivification of the "tube's" atmosphere. A couple of square yards of cocoanut matting, kept wet by a constant stream of water trickling over it, acts as a filter through which air is sucked into one of these large wooden boxes by vacuum pump. This screens from the air all the contained dust, soot, and microbes. The purified air is then carried to a main ventilating shaft, where it is mixed with the ozone.

The ozone is produced in the second box, where by another suction pump a continuous stream of air is drawn across a space through which a high tension electric current is passing. In the process ozone is formed, and this, mixed with the filtered fresh air, is pumped down to the platform level, where it is distributed through a dozen ventilators. A portion of the ozone-laden air is also carried along in a large galvanised iron pipe to empty into the tunnel forty feet from its entrance.

It sounds all right, but I do not think I shall find myself among the London ozone clients—I have not yet acquired the burrowing habit, nothing but absolute necessity ever finds me travelling by tube. I can get practically everywhere in London I want to confer the distinction of my presence on by routes that lie along the surfaced.

There has been a great deal of activity in the theatrical world since I last wrote. Some of the new productions, however, leave us mildly wondering as per example. "The Great Name" at Wyndhams. It is rather difficult to guess what can have been the special attraction for Mr. Charles Hawtry in this play adapted for him from the German. It is not to be supposed that he thought he had discovered in "The Great Name" another "Private Secretary," for the piece is all, or nearly all, mild Teutonic sentiment, which, though it gains the quite cordial sympathy of its audience, leaves most of us waiting for the characteristic humours, whether of comedy or broad farce, which never come. There is plenty of innocent, good-natured, old-fashioned fun, but there is none of the wicked wit which one associates with the "great name" of the most accomplished fibber on the stage.

The story is of the simplest. The "great name" of the title is that of John Harcourt, the most popular and, therefore, the very prosperous, musical-comedy composer of his musical-comedy-loving day. When we first make his genial acquaintance he is raving about the utter incompetence of a certain First Violinist, in whom he remorsefully discovers Robert Brand, his Academy chum of twenty years ago. Brand with his high musical honours has gone down in the world while Harcourt with his much more modest promise has gone up.

Brand can christen his children Tristan and Senta, and call his dog Wotan, but he cannot get his great symphony "Orestes" accepted for love or, still less, for money. There is, it seems, no hearing for symphonies by composers whom no one ever heard; so Harcourt generously offers to father "Orestes" with his own "great name." He is a good-natured fellow to do this, since it involves the suppression of a symphony of his own composing. But he remembers that he was once in love with the Clara who is now Brand's wife. Moreover, it is urged upon him by pretty Stephanie, his mother's companion. After a mauvais quart d'heure at the Concert Hall, where in the musicians' room "Orestes" is unfavourably discussed by its proposed executants and nearly abandoned, Harcourt's half-humorous self-sacrifice is brought off, and the work with which he has so far been discredited is received with rapture. Thereupon it becomes his pleasant duty to pass on the congratulations to their rightful receiver, while it is his reward to win instead the charming Stephanie's hand.

In Harcourt Mr. Charles Hawtrey undertakes a character rather off his usual disingenuous beat. He is quite good as the impulsive, somewhat imperceptive composer of popular melodies; he behaves, or rather makes Harcourt behave, very nicely to his mother (tenderly played by Miss Mary Rorke), and is enthusiastically friendly, if still rather slow-witted, with his old love and her self-absorbed husband, the morbid, defiant Brand, in whose genius Mr. James Hearn almost makes one believe. Mr. Arthur Playfair with very poor materials contrives to be amusing as a particularly sordid and objectionable publisher of music. Miss Lydia Bilbrooke is a delightfully pretty Stephanie and acts with a becoming steadfastness which is most pleasing, and as Brand's sorely tried wife and very lively daughter Miss Dorothy Thomas and Miss Enid Leslie give two of the sincerest studies in the performance. Miss Mona Harrison is clever as a "slavey" that cannot resist the waltz and must as often as she hears it or thinks of it rotate distractingly. The piece was well received, but whether the general public will take much interest in a "shop" play remains to be seen.

Charming scenes, colour schemes of sheer delight, dainty music, a story intelligible, if a little too involved, an earthquake, and Miss Florence Smithson—these are the features of "The Mousme," the new musical comedy produced at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Saturday.

Detailed consideration of the plot is hardly necessary, but it may be said that the authors have based their story on the devotion and self-sacrifice of a beautiful young singing girl, one O Hana San. At the outset she is attached to a religious shrine, knowing nothing of the world and its wicked ways; in fact, as represented with the almost oppressive innocence and ingenuousness of Miss Smithson, she seems to be a creature all too good for human nature's daily food. Hence it is almost a relief to find that she is in reality sufficiently human to be capable of falling in love with a gallant young Japanese officer. But, of course, it must be a love of self-sacrifice in her case, and so when Captain Fujiwara cannot pay his debts of honour it is she who, unknown to him, comes to the rescue and finds the money by becoming a geisha girl. In this capacity she is called upon to suffer various humiliations, which enable her to revel again in her favourite role of meek unconscious dove. There is, for instance, another officer who gets her into his power by buying up her indentures, and her prospects look anything but cheerful when a providential earthquake comes along and saves the situation, so that all turns out right in the end.

O Hana San is Miss Florence Smithson, and any captain in any army might well fall in love with so sweet a singer. Her rendering of "My Samisen," one of the best numbers in the score, was exquisite, and all through Miss Smithson sang with feeling and genuine artistic power.

The earthquake takes place at the end of the second act, and very exciting it is. Houses topple over, the blossom is shivered from the trees, and there is a very riot of destruction. The earthquake was loudly and properly applauded on Saturday night, and as an earthquake could hardly take a personal call, the scenic artist came before the curtain hand-in-hand with Miss Smithson.

The humour of the play is in the hands of Mr. Dan Rolyat, a comedian of an individual drollness and exhaustless energy, Mr. Hestor, who recalls Mr. Alfred Lester in his methods, and Miss Ada Blanche. In the last act a particularly pretty cherry blossom scene, the fun became mechanical and a little tiresome. But Mr. Rolyat was really very funny, and Mr. Hestor has, in his song, "The Corner of My Eye," a worthy successor to the "I've Got a Motter" of "The Arcadians."

Miss Cicely Courtneidge is a little too coy as a fair-haired girl half-English, half-Japanese. Mr. Harry Welchman sings attractively as Fujiwara, and Mr. Nelson Keys is sprightly and amusing as Lieutenant Makei.

"The Mousme" is written by Messrs. A. M. Thompson and Robert Courtneidge, the lyrics are by Messrs. Arthur Wimperis and Percy Greenbank, and the music by Messrs. Lionel Monckton and Howard Talbot, and they have all done their work excellently well. It is a musical comedy of quite unusual charm, a jolly entertainment, with real distinction.

Nicholas Fawsitt, the central figure of Henry Arthur Jones' new play, "The Ogre," produced at the St. James' Theatre this week is a very unlucky man. His second wife is a pretty selfish little spendthrift. His son is an idle, brainless ass. His eldest daughter has written an undesirable novel, and his younger daughter is a schoolgirl suffragist with shocking manners. But poor Fawsitt's cup of unhappiness is not yet full. He is something in the City, and as sometimes happens in the City, he loses much of his money, and finds himself with a vastly reduced income. His home in Portman-square has to be given up, and he determines at the same time to live in the country and to become master of his own family. His wife is greatly rebellious. She will not help, and she will have her own way. She hates the Moat House, Paunder's Green—and it is rather ramshackle—and she plots with pouting prettiness to make Fawsitt so uncomfortable that he will be forced back to London. But Fawsitt nails a pair of breeches over the mantelpiece as a sign that the male must prevail, and proceeds to starve his family into submission in the manner of a modern Petruchio. His wife deliberately drives the servants away, only a misogynist gardener remaining. So the gardener is sent to the local inn for a chop, and Petruchio Fawsitt lunches alone.

Mrs. Fawsitt does not submit easily. She has had a mild flirtation with a tabby cat of a man called Cosmo Paradine (how much is often in a name), and she insists on bolting with him, much to the tabby cat's horror. She does not bolt further, however, than a neighbour's house, and is back again in two days ready to kiss and be forgiven. Everything, indeed, comes right for Fawsitt, as it were, in the twinkling of an eye. The elder daughter becomes engaged to a nice young man. The son marries an impossibly flamboyant music-hall lady, is promptly and, considering his vacuity, quite reasonably thrown over, and determines to start for Canada, and the younger daughter says, "I beg your pardon," and promises to go back to school and be a good girl.

"The Ogre" is cleverly constructed and well written, and is generally an excellent entertainment. But one expects much more from Mr. Jones, and unfortunately "The Ogre" is not much more. It is true that the relations between a father and his children may be full of drama, and are nearly always suggestive of problems. But Mr. Jones' characters are of the theatre rather than of life. They are overdrawn. The boy is too asinine. The girl is too rude. Moreover, to accept the reality of the characters is to make the conclusion of the play either incredible or unsatisfactory. Such a boy as Bertie Fawsitt would be an utter failure in Canada or anywhere else, and would be home again in three months. Such a woman as Dorinda would in a fortnight again be wasting her husband's money and being tiresome. The moral, too, is false to the times. It is impossible to build family happiness in the twentieth century on the theory that out of the mouths of husbands and fathers cometh nothing but wisdom. "The Ogre" is excellently acted notably by Sir George Alexander, Miss Kate Cutler, Mr. A. E. Matthews, and Mr. Sydney Valentine, and is well received.

YEARS and years ago, when Mr. Stiggins was a personality, and the Nonconformist Conscience really mattered, Mr. Alfred Sutro's "The Perplexed Husband" produced this week at Wyndhams might have made an appeal, regarded simply as a satire upon the events of the day. But in these enlightened times, despite a reference here and there to woman's suffrage, such frivoling fell more than a little flat.

The whole thing turned upon this: Thomas Pelling came home after a holiday, and found that his wife had come under the spell of the local "soul saver."

And although Mr. Gerald du Maurier was the home-coming husband, the piece lost everything that means and suggests life from the moment that he set his foot upon the stage. For his wife behaved as no reasonable woman would behave, and Thomas, according to the book, had, through force of circumstances, to behave as no husband ever behaved since the world began.

The result was a play planned to be supported by a single episode—and that episode failed to see three long acts through.

But, in spite of poor chances, Mr. Gerald du Maurier was a splendid Thomas Pelling—easy-going, light, bright—always a personality.

A STATE ball at Delhi, an earthquake in Italy, and the race for the Derby are among the scenes in Drury Lane's new drama, "The Hope," produced last night, by Henry Hamilton and Cecil Raleigh.

"The Hope" is a colt, upon which the whole fortunes of the house of Norchester centre. If the colt wins the Derby the family fortunes are saved, and Lord Norchester's fiancee, who has drawn him in the Calcutta Sweep wins £80,000, while "the villain," who has bet heavily against him, will be ruined.

"The Hope" just wins and virtue triumphs, but not before an amazing series of complications have been unravelled, his old home and "The Hope" sold up by a money-lender who believes Lord Norchester to have jilted his daughter, but who on learning the truth and being rescued from the earthquake by the hero, generously returns him his family estate as a wedding present.

Miss Fanny Brough is responsible for most of the humour, and she is excellent. Mr. Cyril Keightley and Miss Evelyn d'Alroy are respectively hero and heroine, and Mr. Lyston Lyle, the villain, performs all his villainies in the most matter-of-fact way.

TOMLINSON'S TIGER.

A STORY OF THE BURMESE JUNGLES

By A. ST. JOHN WRIGHT.

YOUNG George Raleigh, was in the middle of his first leave home from India, and was spending a week at his Uncle's place, Stebbing Hall, in Essex.

Colonel Tomlinson, late of the Indian Army, had spent all his service out in the East, and these last few days with his nephew had brought back to him many happy memories of his younger days.

They had just finished dinner one evening, and were enjoying their cigars, George was wandering round the hall examining the heads, and skins, of which many adorned the place. The Colonel had been a keen "Shikari" in his time, and he looked upon his trophies as his most cherished possessions.

"I do envy you having shot all these," said George, pointing to the heads; "before I went away to India, they did not interest me in the least," continued the younger man, "but now I could spend the whole day examining, and measuring them; next to those three Bison heads, I like the Tiger skins best. What are those Deer over the doorway there, those with the long brow-antlers?" "Oh those are Thamin (Cervus Eldi), I do not suppose you have seen many of those heads before, you do not get them in India; I shot them while I was in Burma, fine heads all of them, that centre one is just over 41 inches, exclusive of the brow-antler, and has, as you see, twelve points."

The conversation continued on "Shikar," and kindred matters, and then the old Colonel began to relate some of his unique experiences out Tiger shooting.

"I wonder if I shall ever get a Tiger," said George, "I have sat up over half a dozen times, and have not even had a shot yet."

"Ah! it is simply a question of patience, you will get one some day," answered the Colonel, "I was rather lucky, for I got a shot, and killed the very first time I sat up, surely I have told you about it?"

"No, I have never heard it, out with it Uncle, most of your stories are highly exciting, especially the one about when you lassoed that Panther from horse-back.

"This is a true story, and not very exciting," answered the Colonel.

"So the Panther story was not true then?"

"Eh! what? not true, who said it was not true! Of course it was true, quite true."

"Well here goes then," began the Colonel, "this is the story of my first experience of trying to bag a Tiger."

"It was just after I had joined, I was stationed at Thayetmyo in Burma, my first station. I was quite new to the country, my total bag of game was one Gyi (Curvulus Muntjac) up-to-date.

My bearer, a production of Madras, came to me one morning bringing a Burman with him; they both seemed excited, and after much cross questioning, and interpreting, I was able to glean the fact that a Tiger had killed a bullock on the previous night, at a small village about six miles from Allanmyo, across the river. I remember the morning well, it was a Saturday. I was, needless to say, much elated at the news, and rushed off to get leave. However, I only managed to get off Church Parade on Sunday, which meant that I had to start as soon as possible, so as to get to the village that evening, and then spend the night up in a machan over the "kill." I got away after an early lunch, and reached Yebaw, the village where the kill had taken place, about four o'clock. I set out at once with a couple of Burmans to the "kill," which was a good two miles south of the village, a jungle path led us there in very short time. Of course the kill had been removed; a Burman cannot resist the chance of a good meat-meal, and any animal reported killed, will attract them from all quarters. The first thing to do was to set about making some sort of an arrangement for a machan. This did not take very long; a Burman with a dah (native hatchet), and some bamboo, will make anything from a tooth-pick to a house. Luckily there was a good strong teak tree close to the "kill" and so far things were going very smoothly. As it was getting late, I got up into my tree as soon as the machan was finished, and sent the two Burmans back to the village, with orders to come back early in the morning. There was a good deal of blood on the ground, where the natives had cut the bullock up, but we had also tied up a village "pi" dog, as an additional bait for the tiger.

It got dark in about an hour, up to which time my only visitors had been a couple of stray dogs, evidently acquaintances of the "tied up" one, to judge from the effort the latter made to break loose and join them.

How dark it seemed during those two hours before the moon got up, and how the slightest rustle of wind in the trees made my heart beat faster, and what an extraordinary life-like shape that bush in front had. How I longed for the moon to get up. All sorts of thoughts were passing through my mind, as I sat patiently watching, and straining my eyes into the darkness. However, soon the moon did get up, and although it was very cloudy, I could see well enough now: the dog was behaving very well, and whining as well as one could wish. I was beginning to feel sleepy but kept myself awake by watching the clouds racing past, and wondering how soon the Tiger was going to put in an appearance, and thinking how fine his skin would look at home as a rug. Over an hour passed in this manner. The clouds now covered the moon, and it was quite dark again, the clouds seemed to be coming up from all directions, and it looked very like rain.

In the midst of my sleepy thoughts, there was a slight rustling noise behind me, I slowly turned round in that direction, then all was still, then it began again, slowly coming nearer. Here at last was the Tiger: just then the moon shone out clearly as a cloud drifted away. Here at last was my chance coming. I slowly, inch by inch, brought my rifle up to my side, then up to my shoulder, to be ready when he made his rush at the bait. He was very close now, to judge by the sound; then there was suddenly a hurried scuttling away of feet, and off rushed a harmless little "Gyi" under the tree with his white tail up in the air, and giving one of his loud dog-like barks. I congratulated myself on not having disturbed the jungles by firing at him.

A few drops of rain were the next things I remember that came: this rain gradually increased, and made any other sounds very difficult to hear. "I don't suppose he is likely to come to-night," I thought to myself as the rain settled into a steady downfall, "and I shall have to spend the rest of the night up here, soaked to the skin."

After this I got into a little more comfortable position, rested my head on my arm, and turned up the collar of my coat, to keep the rain from running down my neck.

I was feeling very drowsy, perhaps just a short nap while the rain lasts will do no harm: oh yes, it is certainly very sleepy work up here.

How long I had been asleep I don't know, but I suddenly woke up with a start, I must have slept a long time, for the rain had stopped, and the moon was down. My wits were all about me, I noticed the dog was now lying down.

Suddenly there was a loud rustling of branches away to the left, then it stopped, and all was perfectly calm again. Then there was a crack of a branch snapping straight to my front, beyond the dog, after that the noise stopped for a few minutes, then I heard it next away to the right. This must be the Tiger this time, I thought, especially as the dog now seemed very restless.

He is evidently circling round his intended victim, after the manner of his kind, and is now ready to spring on to him, when he is satisfied that all is as it should be. Slowly, as before, I brought my rifle up to my side so as to be ready for him.

When would he appear! What ages it seemed as I waited. Then the moving noise begins again, now the rustlings seem nearer. I keep my eyes glued to the "kill," nearer and nearer he comes. Then there is quiet again, surely he has not got my wind and gone off!

Suddenly the noise is resumed, this time quite close to the "kill," it is the sound of bushes being brushed aside. Then the bush just behind the "kill," begins to shake, there is no mistake now, the dog is very excited, and is trying to get free.

I stare hard at the spot and can just discern the dark mass moving slowly along, shall I fire! No, I wait, he is going very slowly along to the left still behind the bush. In another yard or two he will be clear of it, I take my aim just clear of the left edge and wait, he is still gliding along. Now at last, as far as I can see, his shoulder is covered by the rifle, I hold my breath, and press the trigger, bang! then all is still, there is no sound of any rushing off. It must have been him, it cannot have been imagination all that has happened in these last few minutes.

Then all my doubts are put at rest, there is the noise of the animal struggling, two or three convulsive kicks, that is all, then, absolute quiet.

After a time I could just distinguish the mass, lying to the left of the bush.

How dark it looked, it must be an old Tiger, or perhaps it was a black Panther; what the latter animal looked like, I had not then the slightest idea, but I had heard them talked about, as great rarities.

I was longing to go and examine him, as there was no doubt now that he was dead, but I could not do so, as I was 18 feet from the ground, and the Burmans had taken the improvised ladder down, after I had climbed up. I tried to light the hurricane lamp, but found the only box of matches I had, was one sodden mass of wet pulp.

So there was nothing to do but to make the best of it, under the circumstances, and settle down to sleep till daybreak. I was soon asleep, and dreaming of Tigers and Panthers the size of Elephants.

I was awakened by the sound of voices under the machan, it was broad daylight, and the Burmans had turned up, the ladder was soon fixed up.

There was the Tiger, I could not actually see him, as there was such a crowd of Burmans round him, the whole village seemed to have turned up, they were all laughing, and chatting away, and very happy.

I felt quite a public benefactor as I climbed down from my perch.

Just then one of the Burmans raised his dah, Oh! heavens, he is going to cut its head off, as if it was a deer. I called out, and rushed up to stop him, the natives made way for me. Oh! what a sight met my eyes, there lay,—not a record Tiger, but a splendid full grown doe Thamin!!!

I felt too taken aback for words.

The Burman who had just cut the head off, looked at me with a well satisfied grin on his face, "Kaunde Thekin" is all he said ("very good sir").

I did not stop long, but wended my way back to the dak bungalow. There I met Jones of the Police, I told him all my experiences. What he saw to laugh at, I don't know. "It is the close season for Thamin now, and it is hardly the thing to shoot Does, you know, at any time of the year."

That is all the sympathy I got from him.

"No, that is not quite the end of the story," added the Colonel, "to add insult to injury, Jones sat up that night over the remains of my poor massacred Thamin, and bagged the Tiger! a good one it was too, a full grown female, just over 10 feet long."

POT HUNTING.

Day was just dawning, and the sheen of the rising sun gilded the broken summits of a distant chain of kopjes. As far as the eye could range, a vast expanse of sun scorched veldt rolled away to the hazy blue horizon; a cluster of Kaffir kraals, a few stunted acacias, and patches of wacht-een-bitjee thorn and sugar-bush forming the only objects to break the unvarying monotony of the waste of virgin plain.

Some twelve miles to the northward of our outspan flowed the Crocodile River, the belt of jungle fringing its banks dimly visible from the practically unbeaten track along which my friend Jack H. and myself were travelling towards Rhodesia, in search of sport and, incidentally, gold; but of that precious metal we found not one single ounce during an eight-months' trek.

In the days of which I write, Buluwayo was but a mere township, and there being no railways, journeys north of Pretoria or Johannesburg had, perforce, to be made either by waggon or on horseback. We had met with very little game for a couple of days, and, wholesome food though mealy-porridge may be, it very soon begins to pall on the appetite of a white man. We agreed, therefore to scour the neighbouring country for the purpose of replenishing the camp larder with fresh meat of any kind, feathered or furred, barring jackal and aas-vogel (vulture).

Our frugal breakfast finished, we mustered the sable beaters. They were thirteen in number, mostly Zulus and Basutos, and captained by a huge Zulu, who stood not many inches less then 7 feet in his bare feet, and bore the somewhat questionable title of "Mamba," which being interpreted, signifies "Venomous Serpent."

To the westward of our camp and about three miles distant lay a small reed-fringed pan, or lagoon, of water surrounded by patches of brush interspersed with long grass and rough ground-cover, which appeared likely to harbour korhaan, francolin, quail, and, perchance, buck. While still a good half-mile from the lagoon we could see by the aid of our glasses that it simply teemed with wildfowl of many different kinds, from the great spur-wing goose down to the pink-billed teal and dabchick, the latter darting and diving here and there amongst the beautiful purple water-lilies and other aquatic plants, for all the world like his little British cousin, who, by the way, he almost exactly resembles in point of size, plumage, and habits. A colony of quarrelsome old coots had taken possession of one end of the pan, and right zealously did they hold it against the incursions of the other feathered denizens of the pool. A great flock of sacred ibis were busy quartering and boring into the soft mud like so many huge black-and-white curlews, while nimbly dodging here and there along the oozy shore were to be seen numbers of wading birds amongst other species the avocet, black-winged stilt, pied plover, full and painted snipes, redshank and greenshank, grey purple, and white herons, crowned and common crane, etc.

Ordering the beaters to halt at the widest end of the oval-shaped lagoon until given the signal to wade towards us in line, Jack and I went off to look for suitable stands amongst the reeds at the other end. After churning through almost knee-deep tepid water and foully-smelling slime and treading upon divers and sundry squirming and hideous mud-fish, firmer footing amongst the reed-cover was found. A handkerchief was now waved as a signal for the beaters to advance, and on they came, yelling and splashing like so many fiends released from Hades. A small skein of spur-winged geese was first set a—wing by the yelling herd, and with loud "trumpetings" the great birds flew down the pan straight for my companion's "blind." But the keen-sighted fowl must have twigged some portion of Jack's anatomy, notwithstanding the density of the reeds, for while yet a good sixty yards away they suddenly turned off at a tangent, and across the veldt they sped at a great racket. Not one of these geese showed the slightest sign of damage from the double dose of No. 3's which Jack poured into them; but powerful would be the 12-bore gun, cylinder or choke, that brought down a tough old "spur-wing" at such a range.

A "spring" of between twenty and thirty pink-bill teal was next driven forward by the beaters, and a couple coming straight for me at a pace such as teal only can show offered a very sporting "right and left." I managed to stop one of the twain with my first barrel, but the second bird went on without leaving so much as a feather behind. To my disgust, one of the empty cartridge cases jammed, and while I was extracting it seven Egyptian geese passed within easy distance of my stand, offering an easy left-hand crossing shot.

Jack was now blazing away almost as quickly as he could load and fire, and the air seemed fairly alive with fowl.

Suddenly a volley of deafening shrieks and whoops reached my ears. The Kaffirs had viewed either an antelope or a pig, but, owing to the belts of reeds which intervened between the "boys" and myself,

FISHING.

I could see nothing. Suddenly, however, a fine old water-buck emerged from the dense cover about 150 yards distant from me. Unfortunately, I had armed myself with a full-choke 12-bore in lieu of my old combined rifle-shot gun, with which I might have made pretty certain of the buck. The beautiful antelope proved himself an excellent swimmer, and in almost less time than it takes to tell he was on terra firma and slinging along towards the bush-veldt. It was with a sigh of regret that I watched him fleeting across the level plain, for he would indeed have proved a welcome addition to the larder.

My fellow gun was still hard at it, and I saw him drop duck after duck, coot after coot, and teal after teal as only a good shot knows how to drop 'em. Precious few came my way, however, and although I shot fairly well I am bound to confess that the number of empty cartridge cases which lay strewn around my blind greatly exceeded the number of slain.

At length the splashing of the natives as they half-swam, half-waded through the breast-deep water was heard, and then small companies of coots and one or two skulking old hammer-kops began to steal out of their fast havens of refuge. On came the sable fowl towards the hidden guns, now running over a patch of grey, greasy-looking slob, and now quietly paddling through the small channels in the carpet like growth of the water plants. With a mighty whirr the whole colony of coots rise in a body and come sweeping over my head. Four of their number drop with resounding splashes almost at my feet, while another hard hit "carries on" to the shore of the lagoon and then pitches into an antbear burrow.

The slime-soiled Kaffirs now come into view, and the last belt of reeds is beaten out, but beyond a few waterhens and coots, most of which break back over the heads of the beaters, it holds nothing. The drive is now over, and the "boys" are sent to gather the slain. Doubtless a good number of both dead and wounded birds escaped the eyes of the human retrievers in the dense reed-cover, while my contribution to the "bag" would have doubled had I shot in anything like the form shown by my companion. Nevertheless, the fowl when laid out on the veldt made a brave show, and the camp-pot was well filled that evening. Marshman in Shooting Times.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which penetrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Third Day, Saturday, 23rd September 1911.

THE Quetta Autumn meeting was brought to a successful conclusion with excellent sport this afternoon. There was a large attendance and the R. E. officers were "At Home." WINCHESTER

.35 CALIBER REPEATING RIFLE

AN EFFECTIVE BIG-GAME GETTER.

There's no question about it — when you go after big game, you want a rifle that has power. You get it in the .35 Caliber Winchester Repeater. This rifle handles a cartridge having a 250-grain bullet, which has a muzzle velocity of 2200 foot seconds and a muzzle energy of 2687 foot pounds. Think of this tremendous energy being expended inside an animal, as it is when a soft-point bullet is used! And you have five cartridges all told, which can be fired in rapid succession. What animal could withstand the terrible shocking effect of such a battery? Many so-called big-game guns seem mere toys in comparison. The .35 Winchester has a strong, simple and reliable action, and a short 24-inch barrel, which is easily handled and yet shoots straight and true at all ranges effective for big-game shooting.

ALL GUNMAKERS CARRY THESE RIFLES.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 15th September 1911.

DERBY.

THE meeting concluded last Friday. Such a perfect spell of brilliant weather has rarely favoured the September meeting, and told in favour of a capital attendance throughout, but with a per contra of very hard going. The executive can well be satisfied by the manner in which the county has milled round their remodelled old-fashioned meeting. Good fields were the rule, and sport maintained the traditions of the venue. Results :—

DONCASTER.

Meteorologists tell us that we need not bother about rain till the middle of chill October. This is cheery news for racegoers, who can postpone the adoption of umbrellas and mackintoshes, and may look forward to a continuation of the Indian-like summer weather that ushered in the great Doncaster carnival on Tuesday with hardly a breath of air to shift the heat haze that hung over the Town Moor.

The visit to Doncaster in Leger week is the hall mark of a sportsman, and under such glorious conditions it was not surprising that all roads were thronged by visitors eager to catch the first view of the long vista of noble elms that border the London road approach. As usual, the railway companies had so perfected their systems that the many sidings that relieve the station pressure landed their passengers without a hitch or a broken neck.

The road division, too, was in force, and loth to say, became a more perfect nuisance than ever, owing to the dry state of the country, and pedestrians perspired in an atmosphere permeated by dust.

The attendance was a very good one in every department, the holiday folk mustering in force, while the stands were well filled, and the country was well represented by its rank, fashion, beauty, and wealth—a capital attendance for the opening day, whose honours rested with the brothers Joel. The going, green and fresh, was, as might be expected, a bit on the top of the ground. Results :—

Prince Palatine's Leger—the last of the 1911 classics—will go down to posterity as one of the easiest gained victories on record. I will not work off the time honoured remark about Eclipse, but "the rest nowhere" has never been more appropriate. Shorn of dramatic touches by such a runaway success, there was at least some consolation in the result, for one horse managed to stand out quite by himself in a wretchedly moderate St. Leger field, and the pride of Whatcombe had never been the Prince before this afternoon.

When at Newmarket last July we saw him go down before Mushroom, failing by half a length, despite receiving 10lb. from the colt, who lacked classic engagements, how little did we ever think that two months later he was to astonish nearly a quarter of a million people by never finding one among his seven opponents who could make him stretch out and really prove what manner of horse he is at the present time! Behind him—many, many lengths in the rear—King William and Lycaon struggled for second place ; perhaps I had better say Lycaon struggled gamely to wrest it from the Newmarket colt who—and I must be candid—ran very softly. The battling power of a genuine good horse was never there. He may transform himself in his four-year-old days, but I begin to doubt now whether he will ever come up to Stedfast's standard. Mr. W. Raphael's b c Beaurepaire, 9st. ...	F. Rickaby 0
Mr. L. de Rothschild's b c Pietri, 9st. ...	D. Maher 0

STARTING PRICES : 5 to 4 agst. King William, 100 to 30 each Lycaon and Prince Palatine, 10 to 1 Pietri, 100 to 6 Atmah, 33 to 1 Beaurepaire, 66 to 1 each Cherry King and Longboat.

PLACES : 2 to 1 on King William, 6 to 4 agst. Prince Palatine, 5 to 4 Lycaon, 2 to 1 Pietri, 4 to 1 Atmah, 9 to 2 Beaurepaire, 8 to 1 Cherry King, and 10 to 1 Longboat.

Pietri had to be humoured before he could be induced to pass the stands, and even then he showed temper, as he did at the post, where Prince Palatine, after rearing up, kicked Atmah. Cherry King was always somewhat troublesome, but six minutes after the advertised time Mr. Willoughby handled the lever to an excellent start.

Cherry King dashed into the lead immediately, being followed by Beaurepaire and King William, then in their lead came Atmah and Longboat, with Pietri, being steadied, whipping in. At the end of the first quarter of a mile Atmah took a slight command of Beaurepaire and Cherry King, these being in line well in advance of King William and Prince Palatine. The latter improved his position on the outside, and raced up and joined Cherry King and Beaurepaire at the half-journey, these being well up before Atmah, Lycaon, and King William. The latter fell back in company with Pietri seven furlongs from home where Prince Palatine and Beaurepaire were racing side by side, Cherry King and Atmah lying next, while King William and Pietri were creeping up on the right.

Five furlongs from home Beaurepaire held out distress signals, leaving Prince Palatine with a clear lead of Lycaon and King William. At the Intake Turn Prince Palatine had secured such an advantage that all was over bar shouting, and the son of Persimmon strode on to win in the most hollow style imaginable by six lengths ; three lengths between second and third. Four lengths off Atmah was fourth, Cherry King fifth, Longboat sixth, and Pietri last. Time—3mins. 6secs.

The excitement of Leger Day was succeeded by comparative calm yesterday, and the vast crowd of excursionists who fill Doncaster and throng the Town Moor having scattered to their near or far abodes, in paddock, rings, and stands, the regular racegoer enjoyed more elbow room. The day, however, furnished its special item of interest in that important speedy cut, the Portland Plate, once, if memory serves, run on the same day as the St. Leger, and that on a Tuesday. But for the St. Leger crowd the attendance was the best of the week, the far rails being lined deeply up to the Intake turn. In the absence of wind the grey clouds floated high, shutting out the earlier sunshine ; but the cooler atmosphere thereby adduced was none the less acceptable. Results :—

What to do if Your Horse Pulls

THE KEY TO HIS MOUTH IS A RENSUM REIN.

Sir Gilbert East, Bart., wrote:—
"You have found the key to my excitable mare's mouth. I have now the pleasure of riding an animal chock full of life, with complete control."

You have three courses open if you own a puller. You may go on using him, to your great discomfort; you may sell him, to your loss; or you may cure him, if you know how. I am a veteran horseman with a reputation to lose, and I stake it upon the assertion that in my "Rensum" Pamphlet I will show you how, for £1 1s. (the cost of a "Rensum" Rein), you may, without severity, cure the worst puller. The Pamphlet will prove to you that by a new method you may turn a confirmed puller into a snaffle bridle hunter, or polo pony. The "Rensum" Pamphlet will also show you how you may cure a rearer, kicker, or other vicious horse.

H. S. RENSUM, The Cottage, Yardley, Worcestershire, Eng.

WRITE TO ME

That I may advise. Describe your horse's fault and I will send you the

"RENSUM" PAMPHLET free.

If you order a Rensum Rein, with it will be sent, the fully detailed instructions for making or re-making a mouth on the simple Rensum method which cannot fail.

I prefer to use the "Rensum Rein" on the cast half moon "Rensum Bit." The Rein and Bit together I will send for a guinea and a half.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

For the moment London stands well in the First Division of the League by virtue of the start made by Tottenham Hotspur. Hotspur's win over West Bromwich Albion was the second gained by the side during the week, and this, with the halving of the points on the first Saturday with Everton, gives to Tottenham a fine position. West Bromwich Albion had done so well in its first two games that everyone expected an extremely hard fight. Such it proved. There was comparatively little between the sides on the general run of the play, and the match was decided by a goal made in the first half. Perhaps for those who looked closely into the form the secret of the "Spurs victory could be discovered in that extra finish in the most critical line of the game—the half-back; there was a nice understanding between the half and forward lines, and when this occurs the opposing side does not often win. West Bromwich Albion had pace and enterprise, and in several instances almost saved the game, but Tottenham in the end possessed that odd goal which told. Without jumping to conclusions on the first piece of good evidence, it may be at least suggested that Tottenham Hotspur should do extremely well this season. Woolwich Arsenal, the other London First Division team, had a sad experience at Birmingham. It began well enough with the first goal, but then Aston Villa developed remarkable form. Everything "came off" for the Villa, which had a score of four goals against one when "time" ran out. Among the sides to which something more than general attention is given there is none that has achieved fame so quickly as the English Cup holders—Bradford City. Bradford had already beaten Aston Villa on the first Saturday of the season; it now won a handsome victory over Newcastle United at St. James' Park, Newcastle, by two goals to none. It was a hard tear-away struggle, and the first half of the game had been exhausted before any score came. While things are prospering so well among the new quarters of professional Association in Yorkshire, it is strange to notice that in some of the old strongholds the clubs have lost some of their prestige. For instance, Sheffield United was beaten by Bolton Wanderers on the famous Bramall-lane ground by five goals, while the old Wednesday team could do no better than draw at Bury. Manchester United, the Champions, did fairly well at Manchester, beating Everton by 2 goals to one. The results as a whole already show a characteristic in-and-out running in the form; but when the grounds lose their dustiness and the weather becomes suitable for real football we may look for some measure of consistency among the more highly-skilled sides. In the Second Division the London clubs may be said to have done fairly well on Saturday; Chelsea and Clapton Orient drew their matches in the provinces, and Fulham just managed to win at home against Birmingham. In the Southern League the Swindon team ran up the big score of five goals to three against Norwich City; but this feat was surpassed by Exeter City, who made eight goals in the game with New Brompton. There were the usual big crowds almost everywhere, and at Tottenham alone the company was estimated at about 35,000.

Saturday's results were as follows:—

ROWING.

THE SCULLING CHAMPIONSHIP.

The match for the professional sculling championship of England on the 12th September resulted in Ernest Barry retaining his title as champion by easily defeating his challenger, William Henry Fogwell, of New South Wales. As expected, the Australian led at the start. Off Harrod's Barry cut down his rival, and from Hammersmith Bridge to the finish the race was a mere procession.

This was Barry's third championship win. In 1908 he defeated the holder, George Towns, of New South Wales, and last May he met and defeated William Albany, the River Lea sculler. Between these two matches he met Richard Arnst, of New Zealand, for the championship of the world, on the Zambesi River, and was defeated. After yesterday's win it is hoped that Arnst may be induced to come to England and give Barry a match for the world's championship on the Thames. At present it is understood that Arnst's terms for the expenses of the trip are exorbitant. Fogwell holds the championship of New Zealand, for which he defeated Whelch last April. He has never met Richard Arnst, and two years ago was beaten by Thorogood for the championship of Australia.

With the weather gloriously fine, the crowd along the banks was the largest seen at a sculling match for many years, and the three steamers which followed the race were all crowded. The men were at the stakeboat punctually at three o'clock. At that time there was a splendid tide running, with a brisk following wind in Putney Reach. The challenger won the toss and chose the Middlesex station but there was little advantage in the choice.

The men got away on very even terms to a start by mutual consent. Fogwell made the pace very hot striking 18 and 33 in the half and full minute, Barry being content with 15 and 28. Fogwell went away so fast that he led by two lengths at the London R.C., and was giving the champion his wash. Barry appeared to be quite content to allow Fogwell to keep his lead, although he had closed up a trifle when Fogwell passed the mile post in 4 minutes 49 seconds. Above the mile the men ran into some lumpy water, and at the Crab Tree Barry went for his rival. He took the lead at the upper end of Harrod's Wharf, and gained so fast that he led by three lengths at Hammersmith Bridge in 8 minutes 26 seconds. From this point Fogwell was a beaten man. Although Barry was rowing the slower stroke, he gained steadily in Chiswick Reach, where the scullers had a nasty cross wind and rough water. At Chiswick Steps Barry's lead must have been eight to ten lengths, the time being 15 minutes 25 seconds. By this time Barry had dropped his rate of striking to 32, but he was going in beautifully easy fashion. Fogwell was very short, and he failed to get a proper finish to his stroke, relying far too much on arm work. At Barnes Bridge Barry led by half a dozen lengths in 18 minutes 32 seconds. Between the bridge and the finish the water was better. Barry was taking matters very easily, with the result that the Australian came up, and in the end was beaten by three and a half lengths, which could have been increased by many lengths if the winner had desired. The full time was 22 minutes 4 seconds.

Barry's win was exceedingly popular, and he met with a great reception from the towpath crowd. Fogwell was not up to championship form, and he was the first to acknowledge that he had been beaten by a superior sculler. The match was rowed in a good sporting spirit, and the only disappointment was the tame nature of the contest after Hammersmith. If Barry had been extended he would probably have made a very fast time, although the conditions were against the record being beaten.

LOVER TO CALAIS IN A RACING SKIFF.

A fresh record was made in the Channel on the 12th September, for the Rev. S. Swann, of Crosby Ravensworth, Westmorland, has rowed from Dover to Calais in 3 hours. 50 minutes, thus beating the 4 hour 22 minutes set up by the eight which, stroked by Lord Desborough, then Mr. W. L. Grenfell, crossed from England to France in 1885.

Mr. Swann, an old Cambridge Blue, whose son rowed bow in the Cambridge boat this year, left the inner harbour at Dover at 4-55 A.M., and he landed near Calais at 8-50.

The sea was rather loppy at times, and Mr. Swann, on an average, pulled twenty-seven strokes to the minute.

The skiff used was a Clasper-built only twenty feet long, and looked a fragile craft to cross the Channel. Mr. Swann returned to Dover in a motor-boat which had attended him on his attempt.

Only as recently as Friday of last week Jarman, a young waiter from Deal, set out upon a similar task, but was afloat for fifteen hours before he landed three miles from Calais. He thought he could cross the Channel in four hours, but was surrounded by a haze during the greater part of the time.

Attempts to get from England to France on the part of rowing men have been frequent. In 1885 Lord Desborough then Mr. W. L. Grenfell, stroked an Oxford crew across the Channel in 4 hours 22 minutes in a sliding seat, outrigged, clinker-built eight, every man being provided with a jam pot with which he baled as the waves broke over the craft.

Then in 1897 a crew of Old Etonians started from Dover for the French coast in a four-oared coast regatta built galley, the boat being an in-rigged craft 22 feet long and 3 feet 9 inches beam. Disaster befell this attempt, for the boat was sunk and two of the crew were almost drowned before a boat from the attendant tug could reach them.

In 1906 two young Frenchmen, M. Peron, son of the Mayor of Boulogne, and a friend M. Levy, rowed from Boulogne to Folkestone and back in a double-sculling skiff, but in 1907 Captain Frank Beddington, the well-known sculler, of the Yorkshire Light Infantry, was almost swamped in an outrigger, 21 feet long, with a 3 feet beam, being picked up by a lugger and taken back to Folkestone.

A year later a Folkestone R. C. crew rowed a four-oared galley from Folkestone to Boulogne, and on 2nd August last Charles Oviom, a Frenchman, rowed from Boulogne to Folkestone in a light outrigger skiff only 9 feet. long in seven and a quarter hours.

THE ROVERS TOURNAMENT.

THE second game in the semi-finals was played on the Cooperage on the 26th instant when the Loyal North Lancs met the Dorset Regiment. Play was interesting throughout: the Dorsets were the faster team but not as good exponents of the game as their opponents. The Dorsets pressed at the start and forced a corner but nothing came of it. They continued to attack but without success and play was at length transferred to the other end. Up and down play followed till a free kick against the Dorsets enabled Whitham to score the first goal for the North Lancs, who led by this margin at the interval. On changing ends the North Lancs showed greatly improved form and it was not long before Hall put them further ahead. The Dorsets then attacked but Bridge lost a chance and the ball was brought back to their territory again, Hall finding the net once more after a splendid individual run. Nothing daunted the Dorsets continued playing a strong game and being awarded another corner they scored off it, Bridge heading the ball in. There was no further score and the Loyal North Lancs thus won by 3—1.

The final brought together the Royal Warwicks and the Loyal North Lancs on Thursday last in the presence of a large crowd. The game was very fast and hotly contested from start to finish but the standard of play was hardly up to cup final form. The Warwicks were always the better team, though they only managed to win by a single goal. They forced the pace immediately on starting and obtained a corner which was not improved upon. Continuing the pressure Woods was again tested and some exciting play took place in front of the Lancs goal but the ball was eventually got away and the Lancs attacked in turn and obtained a corner. Nothing came of it and the Warwicks rushed the ball to the other end where Woods had a busy time but dealt with all the shots in capable fashion. Up and down play, in which the Warwicks had rather the best of matters, followed and shortly before half time the Lancs conceded a corner from which Westall put the ball through. The visitors made a sport on resuming but were driven back and then their play fell to pieces and the Warwicks were always attacking though they could not get through. Towards the close of the game the Lancs got going again and gave the opposing defence an anxious time. They obtained a couple of corners and Smart was called upon several times but all their efforts were unavailing and the whistle blew a termination of hostilities with the Warwicks winners by a goal to nil. Teams.—

ROYAL WARWICKS.—Smart, goal; Baker and Bench, backs; Jarvis, Mathew and Turral, half-backs; Parkes, Watson, Wimsper, Hillier and Westall, forwards.

LOYAL NORTH LANCS.—Woods, goal; Whittam and Spencer, backs; Quinn, Roberts and Gould, half-backs; Whitman, Martindale, Connor, Hall and Braut, forwards.

At the conclusion of the game Mrs. Vaughan presented the Harwood League Cup, the Rovers Cup and gold medals to the Captain of the Warwicks team.

The John Haig Shield with silver medals were presented to the Colaba R.G.A. as runners-up in the Harwood League, while the Leslie Cup went to the Durhams, the winners of the sprinting competition.

THE DURAND FOOTBALL TOURNAMENT.

THE King's Liverpools and the 18th Royal Irish who had played a draw of one all in their first encounter met once more on the 27th instant, when the Royal Irish won by 4 goals to 1. They did all the pressing throughout, scoring two goals in each half. The Liverpools owing to accidents were playing three new men, which rather upset their game. The same day the 4th King's Royal Rifles met the 1st South Lancashires and a fast and interesting game ended in pointless draw. The match was replayed on Friday last when the Rifles beat the Lancashires by 3 goals to 1. The Lancashires drew first blood, but their opponents did not take long in equalising and before half time had scored again. Their third point was obtained midway through the second half. The Cup holders met the North-Western Railway Volunteers on the 27th instant and a really good game was witnessed. The Scots scored from a corner shortly after the start and a second goal followed a little later. Then the Volunteers were prominent and Nelson put the ball through. Both teams pressed in turn on resuming after change of ends and the Scots eventually scored again through Dunmore. The Volunteers were not dismayed and keeping up a strong pressure they notched another point, Holloway putting through. Up and down play followed till shortly before the close France scored again for the Scots who thus won by 4 goals to 2. Heavy rain on Wednesday night and all Thursday necessitated the postponement of the matches arranged for that day. But on Friday two games were brought off. The 4th King's Royal Rifles beat the South Lancashire Regiment as stated above and in the other match was the replay between the Royal Welsh Fusiliers and the Simla Volunteers. This time the regulars had matters all their own way throughout and eventually won by 5 goals to 1. On Saturday, shortly after the commencement of the match between the K. O. S. B.'s and the 5th Mountain Battery, down came the rain and though the first half was played through each side scoring 2 goals, this and the other match down for decision had eventually to be postponed. Bright sunshine on Sunday and Monday brought the ground into very fair condition and the two remaining matches in the second round were put though. In the first the K. O. S. B's met the Gunners from Jutogh, a good game being witnessed. Half time found the score sheet blank, but on changing ends the Gunners scored twice and in spite of all their efforts the Borderers were unable to get through. The second match was between the Lancs. Fusiliers and the Gordons. The Lancs rushed down and Lark scored immediately after the start. Then the Gordons had a spell of attacking and were nearly through on one occasion, but one of the Lancs' backs saved in great style. During the second half the Highlanders were kept mainly on the defensive and the Lancs scored another goal through Abbott. The Gordons could not reply and were beaten 2—0.

The third round opened on Tuesday evening, when two more games were played. In the first of these the Black Watch met the H.L.I. and a fast game was witnessed. The Black Watch were first to attack and four corners followed in quick succession. The H.L.I. defence was kept busy, but they managed to clear their lines each time and ultimately got the ball away. It was not long before it was back again in their territory, and the Black Watch were awarded a penalty kick from which Gordon opened their account. Soon after the H.L.I. took the game into their opponents' ground and Lowrie equalised before the interval. The Black Watch had the better of the exchanges in the second half, but they did not add to their score till a few minutes before time, when Gordon scored again and the H.L.I. retired beaten by the odd goal in three. The second match was between the Royal Irish and the Royal Welsh Fusiliers. The Irish attacked at the start but were driven back and after one attempt had been cleared Murriel headed the ball into the net. Thereafter the Fusiliers attacked hotly and the ball was put through once more, but the goal was disallowed for offside. The Fusiliers continued to press on resuming after the interval but could not get through again. The Irish played up stoutly to the end but their efforts were unrewarded and they had to acknowledge defeat by a goal to nil.

MOTOR NOTES.

London, 15th September 1911.

No doubt the Delhi Coronation Durbar will be remarkable for splendid magnificence, but for nothing will it be more distinguished than for the veritable triumph of the motor car which it will witness. In fact, the principal thing we hear about it nowadays is in connection with the huge numbers of cars which are being shipped off to India to be used in connection with the celebrations. "East is East and West is West, and never the twain shall meet," sings Kipling, but therein he is surely wrong, for at Delhi we shall see all the fabled magnificence of the East mingled with all that is best and most modern which comes out of the West. It gives one to think upon the wonderful influence of the car in bringing together the peoples of the earth who, for a lack of mutual understanding, have always stood aloof one from the other. Not even the railway and the steamship have done in the years since they achieved maturity what the car has accomplished in the bare decade and a half of its existence. From Hudson's Bay to Cape Horn, from the Cape to Cairo, and from Peking to the Caspian, it has penetrated and received recognition as something which has come to fill a void in modes of locomotion—and now the Durbar is to witness its apotheosis. Whatever the scale of military pomp or spectacular display, it will be, above all, a motor spectacle, for there will be literally thousands of cars in Delhi during the period of celebrations. Assuming that the King goes to India, from Their Majesties down through the native princes and the high officials, civil and military, everyone will use the car; indeed, it is difficult to know how the function could be carried out as it has been planned without the aid of the car. And to think that but a few years ago the pioneers of mechanical traction were almost universally regarded as dangerous lunatics!

Probably the most extensive use of motor vehicles in army manœuvres in the United States was recently made by the Massachusetts State Militia, when seventeen motor-lorries supplied the needs of the Blue Army, while the Red Army used fifty of the old horse-drawn army wagons. The utilization of the two different equipments thus afforded an excellent opportunity for intelligent comparison, as the weather and road conditions for both classes of vehicles were exactly the same. The fleet of automobiles included one, two, three and five-ton lorries, and ten and fifteen cwt., vans. The manœuvres started in a drizzling rain, and the way in which the motor-vehicles ploughed through the mud of the soft country roads caused much favourable comment. Loaded with a complete field outfit for 5,000 men the lorries kept their schedule time without trouble, and, apart from the matter of speed, the attending army officers remarked on the amount of space saved by using seventeen motor vehicles instead of fifty teams of horses—an item which is of the utmost importance when it comes to guarding and defending a transport train.

A motor-car test from Land's End to John o' Groat's was concluded at 6.30 p.m., on Saturday last, when a Sheffield-Simplex 45 h. p. six-cylinder gear-box-less car completed the entire journey of 920 miles, using only the top gear. The run was interesting as being the first end-to-end trial of any kind carried out under the observation of the R.A.C. The trial commenced on Monday, the 28th ultimo and the car was driven by Mr. W. J. Engall. No high speeds were indulged in, the legal speed limit of 20 m. p. h. not being exceeded at any time. This added to the severity of the test, as it made it impossible to "rush" a hill. It may be added that the car ran under ordinary touring conditions, with a complement of four passengers, including the driver.

As a result of the recent complaints against unnecessary noise made at night by drivers of motor vehicles, Sir Edward R. Henry, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, has just issued a circular urging drivers to diminish the nuisance complained of as much as possible. In this circular Sir Edward Henry draws attention to the Act obliging motor drivers to give an audible warning to other vehicles and pedestrians with a view to preventing accidents, but he points out that in practice they go beyond this, and especially at night when drivers are apt to maintain a reckless speed, and endeavour to protect themselves from possible consequences by continually and obnoxiously sounding their horns. This practice, as well as the use of the "cut-out" and electric devices for magnifying and intensifying the alarm notes of horns, is much resented by residents in streets through which they pass, and the circular, which is issued with the concurrence of the Local Government Board, states that unless some alteration is brought about by motorists on their own impulse, there will be an insistent demand for repressive legislation. In connection with the heavy side of the motor industry this circular principally concerns drivers of taxicabs, and we trust that it will have the desired effect by inducing the latter to substitute care in the place of reckless driving and unnecessary horn blowing.

"Han Somi," continuing the correspondence in a contemporary on the delinquencies of motor repairers remarks: "It is astonishing how few garage people and so-called repairers have even seen the inside of an engineer's workshop. To mention the previous calling of a few garage owners and repairers in a large midland city, among them are: A shop walker, an eating-house assistant, a boot and shoe cobbler, a postman, a bookseller, and chauffeur-gardener." This critic might have enquired if the persons thus pilloried are really personally posing as mechanics, or are merely using the trade as an investment for capital. Presuming the latter to be the fact—and we know that it is so in some cases—surely it redounds to the credit of men who have by thrift managed to reach their present status from callings alike honourable but seldom furnishing more than a pittance insufficient to capitalize even for an old age pension under the existing age limit. It may rather be safely asserted that the incompetent in the motor repairs trade are of two classes: the make-shift "mechanic" or potterer and the ne'er-do-well members of the higher social strata whose friends find the money to continue them in idleness in the misbelief that they are using the capital wisely. The first class of man must obviously soon become extinguished by a natural process, but this cannot be said as surely of the second, and really more dangerous, sort.

From the evidence given at the inquest on the unfortunate victims of the recent char-a-banc accident in Durham two lessons may be learned by all motorists. Before a locomotive is allowed to start on a journey it is examined and passed and this is desirable from two causes; firstly the great number of parts of which the engine is composed, and secondly, the speed at which it travels when in motion. Now both the foregoing factors are present in the motor-car,

C.A.V. Colonial Accumulators.

C.A.V. colonial types of accumulators are as consistent, reliable and efficient as all other C.A.V. ignition fitments. They are specially suitable for use where charging stations and repair shops are few and far between. A prominent feature of C.A.V. colonial accumulators is that they retain their charge for a greater length of time than other types of accumulators. Hence their suitability to varying conditions. Tyres in the Making.

No. 5. Readers will have gathered from the previous four advertisements that the tyre manufacturers must exercise great care in selecting only the best materials for mixing the rubber.

That every manufacturer does not do so can be seen from fig. 1, which shows a poor mixture containing six different ingredients:

1. African rubber.
2. Flower of sulphur.
3. Artificial rubber.
4. Washed chalk.
5. Zinc Oxide.
6. Pieces of old waste rubber.

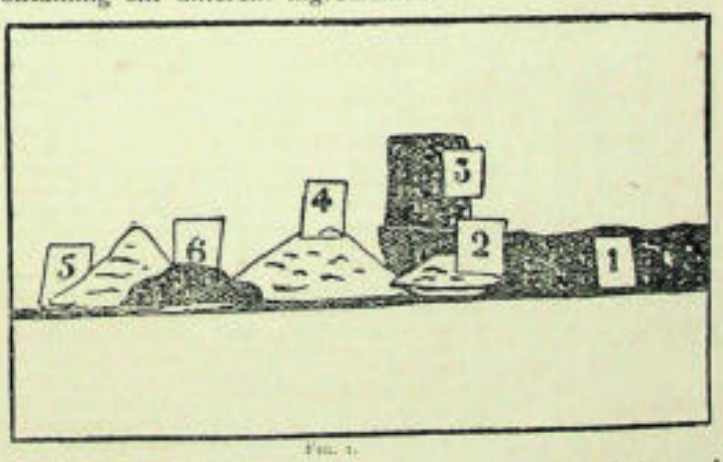

Fig. 1.

It is easy to see that the result of such a mixture is hardly worthy of the name of rubber, for rubber itself only comprises 20% of the whole—the remainder being divided, in different proportions, between the other five ingredients.

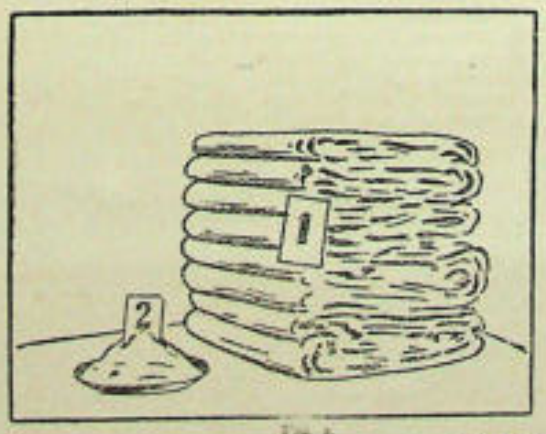

Fig. 2.

Now look at fig. 2. This is the rich mixture used in the manufacture of Michelin Tyres. It consists of pure Para rubber, with just sufficient sulphur added to allow of proper vulcanization. This is why Michelin Tyres are so famous—they contain plenty of good rubber; no foreign substances are introduced as "make-weights." The preparation derived from the former mixture would last possibly one or two months; that from the latter, one, or even two years.

and to such an extent that greater care and stricter examination are absolutely necessary. Metals, which become tired and fatigued exactly the same as human beings or animals, labour under the disadvantage of not possessing, to the same extent, recuperative powers. A careful survey should be made of the car at least once a month; bearings should be opened up, and spindles, bolts, frame, axles, wheels—travelling and otherwise—also the chains, if chain driven, examined and cleaned. A simple and effective test, if a cut bearing is suspected, is to put the refuse grease out of a gear-box, or oil from round a bearing, in the sun, and if any shining particles are seen it generally denotes metal, and a cut brass or spindle should be looked for.

AVIATION.

Although some time ago a prize was offered for a flight across the Firth of Forth, it was subsequently withdrawn, owing to lack of competition. On the 30th ultimo however, the double journey across the Forth was made in splendid style by Mr. W. H. Ewen on his Deperdussin monoplane, one of the latest "popular" type. Starting from the Marine Gardens of Portobello, Mr. Ewen rose until he was about 1,000 feet. high, and passing Inch Keith went on until within a mile of Kinghorn. He then turned and proceeded up the Firth in the direction of Leith. Two miles from the Port he once more turned, and this time headed for his starting point at Portobello. He was planing down there, but coming to the conclusion that the Sports Ground was rather too restricted for landing, he flew outside the ground, and descended in a field in the neighbourhood. As soon as the mechanics arrived the wings were taken off and the machine wheeled back to the aerodrome. Mr. Ewen was in the air for about ten minutes, and covered roughly twelve miles.

On his return to the Marine Gardens, Mr. Ewen was welcomed on behalf of the Executive by Councillor Rawson. Speaking of his flight, which he described as successful in every way, he said that he had a bad five minutes when at about the middle of the Firth on the return journey, when the machine rocked and swayed a good deal, but the Anzani-engined Deperdussin stood up to her work in fine style. He never had any difficulty in observing his location and when over the water was easily able to make out the steamers beneath.

Two French military aviators, Captain Bellenger and Lieutenant Chevreau, have been subjected to a peculiar test at Chalons. They were told to reconnoitre the position of eleven batteries of artillery between Chalons and Vitry le Francois. Their fellow-officers tried to convince them that the batteries were all concentrated at a certain point, and kept the aviators at the barracks for several hours while six batteries were hurried away to a place five miles from the camp, and the other five were set up in another direction. The two aviators were told to find where the batteries had been concentrated, but they were not caught in the trap. They soon found the first five, but, not discovering the others in the neighbourhood, they circled round, and in ten minutes, detected the position of the remaining six batteries, which, it was supposed, had been well concealed.

A fine flight from Boulogne to Dover was made a few days ago by Mr. Pourpe, a French aviator. He flew at a height estimated at from 1,500 to 1,600 feet. Owing to haze his Bleriot monoplane was not noticed until he was quite near to Dover. He passed over the castle, and, travelling at a high speed, made a magnificent vol-plane into the centre of the barrack square. The aviator carried a large air-bag in case of accident. On the following morning M. Pourpe resumed his flight and safely reached Folkestone. Later in the day he flew back to Boulogne, accomplishing the sea passage of thirty miles in 32 minutes.

Three fatal aviation accidents in France have unfortunately occurred during the past few days. Two military officers, Captain Camine and Lieutenant de Grailly, left Buc, near Versailles, on monoplanes, on Saturday last. Captain Camine had reached Vauvillier when the right wing of the machine seemed to break. The monoplane fell in rapid spirals and crashed against a bank and hedge. The aviator was hurled out of his seat when the fall began, and was picked up dead thirty feet from the wreck of his machine. Lieutenant de Grailly began to descend near the village of Faye-les-Marcilly. Just before he reached the ground something broke and the machine fell headlong. The pilot was pinned beneath the wreck, and, the petrol catching fire, the Lieutenant perished in the flames before anyone could reach him. The third victim of the day was Maron, whose biplane fell near Chartres, the pilot being burnt to death in the same manner as Lieutenant de Grailly.

During his visit to Weston-super-Mare Mr. C. B. Hucks decided to pay a visit by aeroplane to his one-time home at Cardiff. Everything was ready on the morning of the 1st. instant and when about 5 o'clock the Blackburn monoplane was wheeled out the wind was fairly calm. At ten minutes past five Mr. Hucks made an excellent ascent, but found the conditions altogether different immediately he began crossing the water. He was carried a considerable distance out of his course, but after getting clear of the Channel air-currents, was enabled to steer direct for Cardiff. He passed over Cathays Park at a height of 2,000 feet. and circling around the city, and over Gabalfa, Whitchurch and Llandaff, he steered in the direction of Marshfields, and then returned across the Channel to Weston, where he landed after a flight of 40 minutes. While in the neighbourhood of Cardiff Mr. Hucks dropped messages addressed to the editors of local papers, as well as a number of handbills announcing his flights. His speed was very great on the way back, as he had the wind behind him, and his altitude during the demonstration varied between 1,500 and 2,250 feet. It was the first time the double journey across the Bristol Channel had been in an aeroplane, and large crowds gathered both in Weston and Cardiff on hearing the peculiar hum made by the open exhaust of the Gnome engine. When he was over the Roath Dock all work was suspended while the return of the aviator across the Channel was watched. The demonstration was so successful that arrangements were at once made by Mr. C. E. Manton Day, Mr. Hucks' manager, for exhibition flights to be given on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week at Weston-super-Mare, similar exhibitions following at Cardiff.

Vedrines set out on his second voyage as an aerial postman from Paris to Trouville on the 16th ultimo. He made a splendid non-stop flight, using a new Morane monoplane with silk fabric covered planes. While flying along the shore at Deauville, preparatory to landing, the monoplane made a sudden lurch and fell into the sea about 100 yards from the shore. The aviator was unhurt save for a cut on the eyebrow, but the monoplane was somewhat damaged.

THE BOMBAY WEEK.

It was at one time thought that it would be necessary to abandon the annual Golf Week in Bombay owing to the Gymkhana maidan being taken up with a Fancy Fête and the Presidency cricket matches, but the committee managed to overcome the difficulty and arranged a series of competitions as usual. Instead of the usual 18 hole round, played over two days the course was made twice round the 6 holes available on the Marines Lines maidan. And by setting back the tees and introducing a large number of unusual screens a very difficult and sporting course was provided. On Monday and Tuesday, the 25th and 26th ultimo, a bogey competition was held, which attracted 48 entries, of which 24 played in the senior class, handicapped at 7 or less over 18 holes, and the remainder as juniors with longer handicaps. In the former division Major H. W. Nicholls finished on top, being 1 down on the Colonel; H. F. Busch was second, 2 down. Messrs. Owen, Power, Moir and Landon tied for first places among the juniors, being 3 down. Results :—

By the extraordinary contortions of her neck, he concluded that she was trying to get a glimpse of the back of her new blouse, and by the tense lines about her lips, he concluded her mouth was full of pins.

"Umph—goof—suff—waff—sh—fffs-pog?" she asked.

"Yes, dear," he aggreed. "It looks all right."

"Ouff wam—sc—gs—mf—ogh—igt?" was her next remark.

"Perhaps it would look better if you did that," he nodded, "but it fits very nicely as it is."

She gasped and emptied the pins into her hands.

"I've twice asked you to raise the blinds so that I can get more light James!" she exclaimed. "Can't you understand plain English?"

CONCERNING PARTRIDGES.

A YEAR ago we had the pleasure of welcoming a delightful volume on grouse and grouse moors, mainly written by that good sportsman Captain Aymer Maxwell. Apparently that work proved, as it deserved, a thorough success for the same publishers, Messrs. A. and C. Black, have just issued a companion volume under the title of "Partridges and Partridge Manors," the whole contents of which are by Captain Maxwell's pen. As the volume contains sixteen full-page illustrations in colour by George Rankin and is offered at the nett price of 7s. 6d. it is really a marvel of cheapness. Indeed, it is probable that the book can only be made to yield a profit by a very large sale ; and this it ought to secure, as the partridge is a bird which attracts a much larger clientèle than does its more aristocratic cousin the grouse. Not only should it become popular in England, but it ought also to be largely bought by sportsmen in India, many of whom will doubtless be interested in comparing Captain Maxwell's account of partridge shooting and the natural history of the partridge with their own experience of the chukor.

In the first five chapters the author discusses the economic value of the partridge manors of Great Britain ; the natural history of the partridge ; the records of partridge shooting in the old days, when our grandfathers walked up the little brown birds with single-barrelled muzzle-loaders, or, in the case of our great-grandfathers, even with flint-lock guns. How they succeeded in making the bags they did with such primitive weapons is little short of a marvel ; but it was true sport, while all modern partridge shooting is not.

Then follows a most interesting account of the evolution of modern methods of partridge preservation ; while the work of the game-keeper throughout the year is fully discussed. Hungarian partridges, and their advantages and disadvantages receive, of course, a full share of attention. Red-legs also come under notice ; the author observing that although these birds were objectionable in the old days of shooting over dogs, for driving they are as good as the ordinary species. Brief reference is also made to partridges and francolins of foreign species which have been turned out by the Duke of Bedford at Woburn ; and in this passage Indian readers will be surprised to see the black partridge described as a native of Palestine and Asia Minor, with no reference to its being such a common and well-known bird in India ! Very amusing is it to read that an Indian bamboo partridge (Bambusicolx fitchi), which escaped from Woburn and was shot near Bedford, was described and figured in the Field as a hybrid between a pheasant and a partridge !

The latter half of the book is devoted to the different ways in which the partridge is shot ; the tactics of driving being fully discussed and explained, while one chapter treats of the statistics of British partridge shootings. Very valuable is a series of notes by various experts on the preservation of partridges in different parts of England ; the whole of this section proving a most valuable summary of how shootings are managed under widely different local conditions.

When describing the life-history and habits of the partridge the author records a number of details which are not to be found in ordinary natural histories.

As an example of such details and likewise of the author's general style, the two following paragraphs are quoted at length :—

"The eggs as laid are covered carefully with leaves and grass, which saves them from late frosts and most effectually conceals the nest. When laying is finished, the birds proceed to arrange the nest for incubation, now placing the leaves and grass under the eggs, which are then neatly arranged in circles. During the two days or so that they are thus engaged partridges are, for some reason, peculiarly sensitive to any disturbance, and will desert altogether if interfered with in any way. The hen sits for three weeks, and like others of the gallinaceous tribe is able to secrete her natural scent while sitting, which serves to protect her from her many foes. This loss of scent is probably in some measure due to the fact that the feathers are all pressed close to the body of the bird, for the scent returns to some extent shortly before hatching, when the hen ruffles out her feathers.

"The cock takes no part in the actual incubation, but remains in close attendance on the hen while she is sitting. When the hen indicates that the eggs are due to hatch, the cock comes and sits close alongside of the nest, waiting patiently for the young birds to emerge ; he then takes them under his wing, one by one, as the hen hands them over to him."

As a specimen of the class of work in which sport and natural history are combined, Captain Maxwell's volume is all that can be desired and a copy should be in every sportsman's library.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Footprint, the bay English horse, owned by Mr. E. L. F. de Soysa, the well-known Ceylon sportsman, has been sold to Dr. Spooner Hart and will shortly be shipped via England to Australia where he goes to the stud. Thus passes out of history one of the most successful horses that ever raced in Ceylon, says the Times of Ceylon. By Marco out of Fracas, Footprint was brought to Ceylon early in 1905. Mr. de Soysa got him cheap, but, the winner of 18 races and Rs. 31,097 in stakes (including value of cups), the horse proved to be the most successful racer Mr. de Soysa ever owned. The winner of three Governors' cups (besides being placed second three times in the same race), four Turf Club Plates, and the Fort Plate and Horn Club Cup Footprint holds a unique record for "classic" wins in Ceylon ; while his total winnings are in excess of Dalkeith's Indian and Ceylon records. He shares with Jack O'Lantern the distinction of being the only horse to win the Governor's Cup, the Turf Club Plate, and the Fort Plate in the same year ; while in 1908 he won the Merchants' Cup at Calcutta, having in the previous year run second in that race, besides being third in the King's Plate, when Fitzgrafton finished first and Mallard second. He held the record time for the Governor's Cup, namely, 2mins. 14-1/5secs., till Black Buck came and beat it last year. Footprint's last appearance on the Ceylon Turf was when he ran third to Black Buck in the Fort Plate last year. He then went to the stud on one of Mr. de Soysa's farms. The horse was so well this year that Mr. de Soysa proposed giving him a run last August, but the horse hurt himself. He now leaves the island with a record that does his famous sire credit, and one that will long live in the history of the Ceylon Turf.

Our Poona correspondent writes :—Monday being the Dussera holiday, there was a full attendance on the course for the 8th Extra, the card being one of seven events. This for a change went more kindly for punters, as the fancied ones were closer up than has been the case of late. Two jockeys appropriated the majority of wins, three going to Ferguson and two to Barrett, who scored for Mr. G. K. in the horse races.

First was the mile consolation in which Grand Duke having nothing to beat was made a decided favourite from Asfundier. This was the order in which they led out, Young Japan at the six furlongs coming up to separate them. Asfundier was again second at the turn, but he ran as he has done before, failing to stay. Bashir put in an unexpectedly good run and beat Well Done home, but none had any chance of catching the leader, who won practically as he liked.

Secondly the Brisbane Plate for 14-2's with another field of only five, Evening Herald and Ask Mama warming from Ngakapa with some for Winnie R. without much stable confidence. This was another of Ferguson's runaway wins as, after a perfect start, Winnie R. and Evening Herald then shaking off the others, Ngakapa third to the three furlongs, where Ask Mama passed him and Winnie R. went clear in front. Ask Mama came from the turn, but the leader was going strong and won by a substantial margin of eight lengths.

A very poor lot were naturally out in the Auction Plate, some open betting leaving Sir Edward favourite from Nimar, on whom L. C. Hoyt had the mount, and Alf on Nelson, Shojelly also having a strong following. A good looking little chestnut in Golden Day was first out and making the pace had Sattara settled. In the straight Nimar came at him and very gradually wore him down, whereas Sir Edward after being shut in came outside and just failed. A head only separated each of the first three.

Next came the sprint for horses, four going out with Chivalry at odds on from Croat and T. M. S. whom we have not seen on this side for some time now. T. M. S. was quickest out of the gate, but soon Croat as usual went to the front and Chivalry fell in second. This remained till reaching the straight when Croat as before began to tire and Chivalry went away to win well in hand from T. M. S. Whereas Nimar previously had been bought in for Rs. 1,100, Chivalry now changed hands for Rs. 3,000 to Mr. Forage, whose purchase makes up for his loss of Lama last week.

The second Arab mile being for newly landed ones had a very moderate class field of thirteen, the time being over four seconds slower than the first. Regent was a decided favourite from Guinea Merchant, and the former ran well, but nevertheless the result was a bad upset. Crown Prince provided something of a side-show by bolting right round the course, and, of course, then had no chance. First St. Hilarion, then Ghalyum was seen in front, but at the three furlongs Rozelmulook took the lead. Little Laffy joined him and had him settled in the straight and was still well in hand when staying out Regent's run.

Again for the seven furlong horse race there was a small field of five, Bright Metal being first established favourite, then going out equal with Lovania at twos from Gallileo and Huka. Lovania made all her own running, Barrett keeping a good hold, and Cowslip and Bright Metal being handy. As they turned for home Cowslip was done and Bright Metal could make but little impression upon Lovania, though staving off Huka's challenge.

Finally a good class went for the Karjat Plate, nine starting, with Abdul Malik and Ashroff equal favourites from Singer and Jehangir. Good Evening set the pace, but on covering half the journey the two favourites passed him together and at the turn Abdul Malik dropped out. Here Singer became prominent, caught the leader, and though under the whip fought on gamely to win a very good race by a neck, Jehangir third well clear of Zari.

COMING very near the end now, we rolled up for the Ninth Extra Meeting on Saturday, when a very fair number were present, and amongst them Mr. Galstaun, who arrived by the mail after making several purchases. Punters had a poor time of it, the last race only being won by the favourite, the nearest before that being the third best fancied.

We opened with a ten furlongs race, the Cambridgeshire Plate, in which Grand Duke was left in preferably to Tajilmulook and consequently went out favourite from Parliament and Sir Hugo. As usual, Grand Duke went out in front, Parliament following and Sir Hugo drawing up third before the turn. Here Parliament came on terms and later Sir Hugo was also up, a good fight ensuing till about a furlong from home where the two began to stop whereas Sir Hugo ran on and won comparatively easily.

Next a shorter race for Maidens, St. Hilarion under a better jockey than last time being a strong fancy from several others backed, Mysore, Harry Johnson, Submit, Mexico and Ghalyum. Sir Edward gave trouble and with Mexico starting very slowly the impression was given of a bad send off. St. Hilarion at once led out from Turn of Luck II., Mysore, Harry Johnson, Ghalyum and Submit in order. The second dropped out after half a mile and at the turn Harry Johnson ran up to the leader. He was going very easy and won anyhow, whereas St. Hilarion outstayed the rest.

The horse sprint, the Alexandra Park Plate, had a field of seven with fairly open betting. Lord Curzon and Haut Park being equal in odds at 5 to 2, Convent Girl and Metal Girl better backed than Ruby Tin. Dauntless was quickest away, then Convent Girl led to the bend, and at the distance several were in a line, T.M.S., Lord Curzon and Metal Girl being up. Shortly after, Ruby Tin got through next but one from the rails and from there had Lord Curzon settled with probably something in hand.

Though scratchings detracted not a little from the interest in the Neral Plate, ten started and Mudkoor at 5 to 2 was shortest from Singer and Gray Falcon. After leading out and then lying handy Gray Falcon again ran poorly, Singer coming in the lead from Young Majub and Minerva at the half mile. The leader had a nice break as he turned from home, Mudkoor having an insufficient run in him, but at the distance Prime Minister came outside and, having the better fancied one in trouble, won comfortably.

Following came the Ascot Plate, a mile and a quarter race for horses, only four starting and most money going to the top weights, Gallileo at odds on from Master Delaval. Devereux and Bright Metal of course made the running, the former having had enough of the pace at the half mile, where Bright Metal was six lengths to the good. Master Delaval decreased the lead, to be all out on turning the bend, and here Gallileo put in a run. Bright Metal, however, still had something left in him and was able to outstay the black by over a length.

Naturally a poor lot went out for the newly landed maidens, Makeb being in prime demand from Red Monk, but a very strong call came for Baldwin, whose first outing this was since Bombay. There were eighteen starters in a five furlong race, so that much would probably depend upon the start, but as a matter of fact the first two home got away none too well. Verney jumped away with the lead from Golden Day, Khadravi and Sirkar, but as they drew into the straight Makeb came out like a winner. He was just holding his own against Verney, when Baldwin finding an opening came up very fast and passed them all with some ease.

Lastly the Selling Plate, in which there were only five, eight being withdrawn. Good Evening was made an odds on chance from Compact and the race was never in doubt. Good Evening led Fado out, and Compact failed to catch either, the favourite winning very comfortably.

OUR correspondent from Mysore writing on Saturday, the 7th instant, says :—What promised to be an exceedingly dull "Dasara week at Mysore" this season for His Highness the Maharaja's European guests, of whom there are some 35 to 40, and the quiet citizens of Mysore, has, thanks to the sporting proclivities of some gentlemen, been made sufficiently interesting to attract vast crowds of all sorts and conditions to the racecourse for the past few days.

The Animal Show inaugurated a couple of years back is now an annual fixture of the Dasara week and the Show held this year, which closed last evening was undoubtedly the best I have seen in three years. Mr. Mirza M. Ismail (Assistant Private Secretary to H. H. the Maharaja) who runs this Show as Honorary Secretary is the right man in the right place, for he, being on the Palace Staff can get the Maharaja's support to almost any extent and in this case His Highness most generously finds all or very nearly all the prizes.

The Yuvaraj and all the Ursus in the City help to make the Show a good thing for the public besides providing sport for themselves; and the officers of the I. S. Lancers, with their leader, Colonel Desaraj Urs, M.V.O., who, by the way, has just had the title of "Colonel-on-the-Staff" conferred on him by His Highness, are always to the fore in this programme.

To make things fit in with other engagements, the Show is held on two days (Thursday and Friday), both morning and afternoon, and it attracts thousands of natives who come here from all parts of the Province for the Dasara, because there are competitions provided for them also, for instance, there are prizes offered for the best cared for pair of draught bullocks owned by professional carters, and he same class owned by Municipal carters, jutka ponies and bandy bullocks are also provided with prizes as well for hackney horses, milch cows and buffaloes, and the winners think no end of themselves if they drop in for a prize and feel highly honoured when it is presented to them by His Highness in person. The village and other minor officers who bring their ponies for the Show are usually a source of amusement to the general public.

To proceed with the more important events on the programme. On Thursday morning there was a competition for polo ponies in two classes: (1) Arabs and C.-B.'s, and (2) English and Walers. The Yuvaraj and Major Henderson (Inspecting Officer, I. S. Lancers, did the judging after careful trials and tests awarded the prizes in the former class to (1) Shah Naraz, the property of the I. S. Lancers' Polo Club, (2) Encoy belonging to Jemadar Mir Saduddin and (3) Perreaz owned by Risaldar Mahomed Ismail. In the English and Waler class Kalpi owned by the Ursus Gymkhana secured the blue ribbon and Designer (Jemadar Faiz Mahomed Khan) got second place. Hacks were entered largely and split up in two divisions. In the first division, Noel owned by Mr. Mathan, Under-Secretary to Government, secured the verdict and later on the same animal won first prize in a competition for "the animal

In the Pony Hack class Police Inspector Mahomed Jaffer Mekri won. Mr. R. N. Subramanyaraj Urs, of the Palace took the prize for the best Cat and Mr. Wetheralls' Lady was adjudged the best terrier in the Show. Among Miscellaneous Dogs there was nothing to beat Mr. Sweeny's Scotch Collie Rover, a really grand specimen of his class. The Jumping for Horses and Ponies were both very good. In the former the winners were—(1) Jemadar B. P. Krishné Urs' Jap, (2) Jemadar Mahomed Nasir Ahmad's Knight, and (3) Jemadar Devara Sindhe's Thakoor. In the Pony class the Yuvaraj pulled off the blue ribbon with Domino, Mr. Krishné Urs got second place with Biglee and Fiaz Mahomed Khan third on Designer. The Driving competition was cleverly won by Mr. Raghavendra Rao, the popular Huzur Secretary.

The prizes were nearly all of them in kind and consisted of fancy articles in silver and electro-plated ware. Money prizes were given the cartmen, jutka wallahs, dhoby's donkeys and so on. His Highness distributed the prizes at the conclusion of the Show, and received three lusty cheers.

A local Polo Tournament is in progress and will conclude on Monday afternoon. A programme of Assault-at-Arms for the Troops and Officers is also being got through, for which Colonel Desaraj Urs is responsible.

We are officially informed that the Delhi Durbar Point-to-Point Races will take place on the 15th December under C. T. C. Rules of Racing. The meeting will consist of an All Comers' Race, open to ponies with a C. T. C. or W. I. T. C. certificate, or local certificate; welter and light-weight races open to horses; a race for Native officers of the Indian Army; and one for Imperial Service Troops. Full conditions can be obtained from Major Percy Hambro, Cavalry School, Saugor, to whom all entries close on 1st November 1911.

The Club of Western India Racquet Tournament which has been in progress at Poona since early last month was brought to a conclusion on Tuesday last. The open singles attracted but two entries, Captain Sloggett defeating Captain Mercer. The open doubles also brought out only two pairs, Captains Sloggett and Mercer beating Major Douglas and Mr. Eeles. The handicap singles was won by Mr. D. O. Fraser (+8) who beat Mr. C. Eeles (+5) in the final. In the handicap doubles final Captain Sloggett and Mr. Eeles (scratch) beat Captain Todd and Mr. Fraser (6+9). Only one other pair competed. The markers singles was won by Pudumjee of Poona who beat Manockjee of Poona in the final.

A sculling match over the championship course from Putney to Mortlake for £50 aside was held on Saturday between Jack Arnst, brother of the World's Champion, and Albany who was recently beaten by Barry. Albany won by three lengths.

The Leicester Regiment have just concluded a very successful boxing tournament at Madras, results of the finals in which are as follows:—

Open to All-India.—Feather weights, Pte. Bell (H.L.I.) beat Lce.-Cpl. Healy (Leicester). Light Weights, Pte. Sly (Middlesex) beat Pte. Harris (King's L. I.). Middle weights, Pte. Stevens (Camerons) beat Pte. Bolesworth (Leicesters). Regimental Contests.—Bantams, Pte. Yardley beat Pte. Hunter. Feathers, Lce-Cpl. Biddles beat Pte. Sheffield. Light weights, Pte. Wood beat Pte. Cooke. Welter weights, Pte. Jansley beat Pte. Paling. Novices, 9st. 7lb., Pte. Russell beat Lce.-Cpl. Lord.

From a long and interesting article in a home contemporary, in which the writer discourses on heavy-weight boxers in general and Johnson and Wells in particular, we extract the following:—

In the old days when the heroes of the prize-ring fought with naked fists (well-pickled for the purpose) and turned every trick of wrestling to account in their business, English heavy-weights were the best in the world. Now and again, under the ancient all-in code, a prize-fighter of foreign ancestry proved himself possessed of skill and stamina, but he was invariably a little fellow and no match for the men of mass and momentum who contended from time to time for the Championship Belt (there was only one in those days) and a capful of guineas. In these latter days, however, we have somehow ceased to produce heavy-weight boxers of first-rate ability, and for many a long year—in point of fact ever since the late Jem Mace ceased to be an effective force in the roped arena—the World's Heavy-weight Championship has been held by citizens of the United States, except for two or three years when it passed to one Noah Brusso, who happened to have been born in Canada of alien parentage (his father was a Corsican, his mother a German-American) and posed as a true-blue Canadian under the ring-name of Tommy Burns. The de facto "Champion of England" in the catch-weight division has invariably been easily beaten by the Transatlantic professors of the modern art of boxing. Jem Smith, for example, lost to Peter Jackson in a single round, and Gunner Moir in his prime was knocked out by Burns in the ninth meeting of a very one-sided contest which, but for the wily Corsican's desire to make something out of the picture-rights, would have come to an end much sooner. And it is much to be feared that the Wells-Johnson affair, which has been arranged for money-making purposes, will provide foreigners with yet another argument for believing that English athletes are not as good as their fathers or their grandfathers, to look no further back into the past.

The fact that our professional heavy-weights are either lacking in pace (like Hague or Moir) or in the commonsense of ringcraft (like Chase, of whom so much was hoped) or in the rudiments of the pugilist's physique (like Wells) is no proof whatever that the national ability for athletic pursuits is degenerating. We have scores of big men who, if they made boxing their profession, could hold their own with any of the American fighting machines. But they have something better to do; they prefer the open air of the football field to the limelight of the modern prize-ring. F. J. V. Hopley, the Cambridge boxer, was a case in point. He won all his fights with consummate ease; he probably did not spend ten minutes in all in the ring, since no amateur heavy-weight could live with him for a full round. He had every quality which a world's champion must possess; he was the equal of Jeffries in physique and immeasurably superior to him in point of natural aptitude for the arts of glove-fighting. Social considerations, of course, would have kept him out of the ring, even if he had not much preferred Rugby football and cricket. But those who watch football matches know very well that we are rich in what, under an older dispensation before co-operative pastimes became popular, would have been material for the making of heavy-weight champions. Crompton, for example, the captain of the Blackburn Rovers, would have made a glorious heavy-weight—his physique is perfect for boxing—if he had not become a professional football player. And dozens of other examples could be given. The truth is that prize-fighting is no longer one of England's national pastimes. We have decided to leave it to the Barbarians. Even at that we can still hold our own in the lighter classes of professional fighting men—men who were not built big enough to play football.

A Dr. Dunbar-Brunton, who has recently returned to England from North-Eastern Rhodesia, gives an interesting account of big game shooting and of the depredations by the man-eating lions.

There is something strange, says the doctor in the encounter of wild beasts in a country which has the charm and beauty of some parts of England or Scotland. For North-Eastern Rhodesia has not the savage character of tropical scenery. In the centre of the country there is a high plateau rising to 6,000 feet, richly wooded from top to bottom, and extending for 400 by 300 miles. With a temperate climate, it has the sylvan beauty of the Tyrol, and the trees rise up clean and free from jungle or tropical undergrowth. Little rivers like the trout streams of Scotland run down the hill sides, and in the valleys and plains there are districts like the park lands of England.

It is curiously disconcerting, therefore, to see the ugly old head of a hippopotamus poking through the rushes on the bank of a river, or an alligator lying asleep there, or herds of wild buck through a vista of trees like one may see the fallow deer in Bushy Park. It is still more curious to run up against lions, as I came suddenly upon two of them one day—crouching in the bush. One is inclined to ask "Where are the keepers?" and to write a letter to the papers about it!

The lions which roam the country stretching southward from Lake Mweru do not always avoid the presence of human beings. From time immemorial they have been man-eaters.

It happens not seldom that two or three men sitting in the open telling the old folklore stories which they love so dearly will be pounced upon by a man-eating lion and killed before they can turn their heads. Many a man stooping over his tobacco plants has been seized and carried off by a lion which has made its way stealthily through the outskirts of the village. One man had his face bitten off at the door of his hut, and walks about as a living horror.

In spite of the fate which so often befalls their comrades, the natives do not look with favour upon lion-hunting. Dr. Dunbar-Brunton, when following a man-eating lion, has found himself deliberately thwarted by the natives, who will not act as beaters because they wish to save the lion's life. This is due to their firm belief that the spirits of their dead chiefs take the form of lions, and that when a man-eater is killed the spirit is divided among other lions with the same thirst for human blood. They hold it better, therefore, to let one lion eat its fill rather than increase the danger by killing it.

Having had a walk over in the first round, the Dorset Regiment met the 10th Brigade, R.F.A., in the semi-finals of the 6th (Poona) Divisional Football Tournament on the 4th instant. The game ended in a draw 2 all and was replayed the following day. The Gunners had the upper hand at the start and scored two goals before the game had been in progress ten minutes, but the Dorsets equalised before the interval and just before time was called they registered the winning goal. Results:—

The Loyal North Lancs met the Lincolns on Saturday and beat them by 3 goals to nil. They led at the interval by 2 goals and shortly before time was called a corner enabled them to score again. On Tuesday the North Lancs met the Dorsets in the final, a fast and well contested game being witnessed. Each team scored a goal in the first half and the second half was pointless. The game was continued and during the extra period the North Lancs put on two more goals and won by 3—1. They thus win the tournament and will in consequence represent the Division in the Big Tournament at Delhi.

The "Large Scotch" is fast becoming a thing of the past, and instead we find in this age of increased taxation and high prices the general demand is for a "Small Scotch" whisky of the best quality, such as "White Horse," which, combining as it does a distinctive flavour and bouquet, and yet being beautifully matured and mellow, is not lost or drowned like the proverbial Miller in the Soda or water, as is the case with the cheaper and more flavourless whiskies.

In connection with the Old Bombay Exhibition it has been arranged to hold a sports meeting in the stadium and a three part prospectus has been published.

The first deals with those championship events which are open to the world, which are as follows:—Mounted Individual Competitions—Jumping Horses, Jumping Ponies, Jumping Horses open to lady riders, High Jumping Horses, and Tent Pegging. The dismounted events are: Marathon Race, over a distance of about 10 miles starting from near Bandra causeway (a cup is presented by the Maharajah of Patiala for the first prize), 100 Yards' Flat Race Quarter Mile, 120 Yards' Hurdle Race, One Mile Flat Race, Half Mile Flat Race, Quarter Mile Obstacle Race, One Mile Bicycle Race, Three-legged Race, High Jump, Long Jump, and Pole Jump. In addition to these there are six races for boys whose schools are members of the Bombay High Schools Athletic Association. The prizes for all these events are on a generous scale. In addition to these events there will be a Hockey Tournament, for which the prize is a cup of the value of Rs. 300 to be won outright by the winning team, with medals for members of those teams which play in the final. The Chief of Miraj has kindly undertaken to organise a Championship Wrestling Competition about which further information may be obtained from him. It is understood that several Chiefs are co-operating with him by subscribing to the Prize Fund. Those who intend to enter for any of these events will have ample opportunity to do so, as soon as the prospectus has been set in circulation. It will be sent to all communities, not only in Bombay but as far as Mhow and Madras. The Secretary of the Sports Committee, Captain Wintle, will be pleased to give information on any point that has not been made clear in the prospectus.

J. Braid has won The News of the World £400 Golf Tournament at Walton Heath, beating Ray by 1 up in the final on the 5th instant. This is the fourth time Braid has won this prize. He secured it in 1903, the year of its inception, and again in 1905 and in 1907. J. H. Taylor has won it twice, in 1904 and 1908, A Herd in 1906, Tom Ball in 1909 and J. G. Sherlock last year.

The October medal in connection with the Calcutta Ladies' Golf Club was played for on the 5th and 6th instant and won by Mrs. Bates with an excellent score of 85—8—77. Miss Binning was second with 81+2—83.

The All-India Hockey tournament will be held at Allahabad from 22nd to 27th January 1912, entries closing on Saturday the 13th idem.

The Madras Rugby Tournament last year was won by the Madras Gymkhana who beat the Leicester Regiment in the final after a drawn game. This year the same teams again contested the last round with a similar result. They met in the presence of a record attendance of spectators last Saturday and a splendid game was witnessed, the match ending in a pointless draw, in spite of extra time. Re-playing on Monday the Gymkhana were victorious. The first half was slightly in favour of the military but the interval arrived without score. On changing ends the Madras three-quarters gave a fine exhibition and got over with three tries. None of these were converted and, the Leicesters failing to score, Madras won by 9 points to nil. The Bombay Gymkhana and the Calcutta F. C. who had been defeated in the earlier rounds played a friendly match last Friday when the Calcutta team outclassed their opponents at all points and beat them by 21 points to 3.

The Durand Football Tournament was brought to a successful conclusion on Monday and the Managing Committee are to be congratulated on the satisfactory results of their efforts, while a special word of praise is due to Captain Watson Smyth in particular, whose energy and tact in the discharge of the onerous duties of honorary secretary insured the smooth working of the tournament. Wet weather had to be contended with and necessitated the postponement of matches and, though everything was done to protect the competing teams, to be under canvas during heavy rain is not the pleasantest of experiences. To overcome similar discomfort in future years it has been decided that all the profits of this tournament will be devoted to making better arrangements for housing the military teams. The football was witnessed by big crowds every evening, Their Excellencies the Viceroy and Lady Hardinge being regular attendants. The refereeing in the hands of Sergeant W. Muddle and Staff Sergeant T. Curley gave every satisfaction and some exciting games were witnessed. The Black Watch and Lancashire Fusiliers met in the final on Saturday when a drawn game without score was the result. At the second time of asking, however, the Black Watch beat the Fusiliers by a goal to nil and thus won the Cup for the fourth time. Details will be found in our football columns.

The Civil Service week, just concluded at Naini Tal, was one of the most enjoyable of recent years. The weather was perfect throughout and the various sporting events were carried through without a hitch. Eight teams entered for the polo tournament which resulted as follows:—1st Round.—Woodpeckers beat Civil Service "B" team by 5 goals to 4; Seaforths beat 4th Battalion Worcesters by 11 goals to 3; 3rd Skinner's Horse Subalterns beat Civil Service "A" team by 11 goals to 2; Follies beat Highland L. I. 2nd Round.—Seaforths beat Woodpeckers by 8 goals to 3; Follies beat Skinner's Horse Subalterns by 13 goals to 3. The final was between the Seaforths and the Follies and an exciting game ended in a win for the latter by 5 goals to 4. Follies—Mr. T. I. Thomas, 1; Mr. Armytage, 2; Captain Wilson, back. Seaforths.—Captain Wicks, 1; Mr. K. D. Maclaclan, 2; Captain Buchanan, back. The annual cricket match between the Civil Service and Naini Tal ended in an easy win for the Civilians but they lost the hockey by 4 to 3. The Horse Show was well patronised and proved a great success while the regatta which wound up the week was most enjoyable. There was a large attendance and many close races were witnessed. In the Rampur Fours the U. P. Police, Messrs. Waymouth, Warren, O'Driscoll and Belcher, Miss Young (cox) beat the R.A.M.C., Captain Bond, W. S. Thomson, W. B. Jones, F. Casement and Mrs. Grattan (cox), after an exciting finish. The Ladies' Fours was won by the Civil crew, Miss W. H. Leather, Miss Leather, Miss Reynolds, Miss Young, Mr. Crawley (cox) who beat Miss Waller, Miss Stack, Miss Shine, Miss Keith, Mr. Gubbins (cox) representing the Military. In the Rampur Pairs, the U. P. Police again defeated the R.A.M.C. The Scratch Fours produced four teams and much interest was taken in the event. The Highland Brigade defeated the Royal Irish and the Bareilly Gymkhana the R.A. crew and in the finals the Scotchmen just won after a most exciting race.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 22nd September 1911.

London is having a very dull week of it. The only excitement, at any rate in sporting circles, is provided by the acute controversy over the Wells-Johnson boxing contest and speculation is rife as to whether it will come off, at any rate in England. For the unco' guid have raised their silly voices in pulpit and platform, others have written to the papers, plethoric mayors and aldermen have denounced the contest, and leading sporting gents have expressed their opinions in some cases with more freedom than discretion.

According to the latest reports, if the affair is prohibited in this country arrangements will be made for the meeting to take place in Paris, but Johnson in the course of an interview declared that "the fight will come off at Earl's Court. They can't stop it." The "colour question" has considerable weight in certain quarters. Johnson, it is argued, has already beaten the American champion, Jeffries, and if he also beats the English champion, the effect cannot be productive of anything but ill-results in many parts of the Empire, and especially in Africa, where relations between black and white are at present in a very unsatisfactory condition. The racial aspect of the proposed contest, is, according to this view, of sufficient gravity to justify the strict prohibition of the fight on English soil, and is vastly more important on the ground of public policy than either of the other two grounds, the commercialisation of sport or the brutality, which are alleged.

The question has been raised whether the Home Secretary has the necessary powers to intervene and forbid the contest. It is said that the opinion of the law officers of the Crown has already been obtained on this point. What the view of the Attorney-General or the Solicitor-General on the point may be is so far only known to the higher officials at the Home Office, where all information on the subject is absolutely refused.

A representative of the Daily Telegraph called at the Home Office this week to make inquiries on the point. No one would express any opinion about the fight, nor could any definite statement about the Home Secretary's powers to stop a meeting be obtained. At last, however, the inquirer was referred to the Metropolitan Police Guide, which contains a chapter on riot and unlawful assembly. The book does not mention the Home Secretary once in all its 1,671 pages, and its references to prize-fights and boxing matches do not altogether amount to half a page. It does, however, set out that prize-fights are illegal and that a boxing match or a mere exhibition of skill in sparring may become a prize-fight "if the parties fight on and severely punish each other." But the question as to where the sparring ends and the prize-fight begins must be left to a jury. (Rex vs. Orton, 14 Cox, 229; 43 J. P. 72).

As to means of preventing a fight, the "Guide" quotes Mr. Justice Burrough as saying during the hearing of the case of Rex vs. Billingham, "My advice to the magistrates and constables is, in cases where they have information of a fight, to secure the combatants beforehand and take them to a magistrate, who ought to compel them to enter into securities to keep the peace till the next assizes or sessions, and if they do not enter into such security to commit them to prison." That is as far as this authority goes, and it is open to the promoters of the match to say that a twenty-round spar with gloves, in which the participants are paid a definite sum regardless of the result, is a very different affair from the "fight" which Mr. Justice Burrough had in his mind.

The "Police Code," compiled by the late Colonel Sir Howard Vincent, when Director of Criminal Investigations, goes a little further. It is there laid down that "Boxing matches may be in the nature of prize-fights, if taking place for a wager and between noted combatants. The proprietors of places in which matches of this particular character, not merely amateur meetings, are announced to be held, should be cautioned that they will be held strictly responsible if any infringement of the law takes place, and police should attend the match and similarly caution both principals and seconds, against whom, as well as against all persons present, proceedings may be taken according to the circumstances of the case."

This guide goes some way towards showing what may be done. But the arrangements for the match do not quite fulfil the conditions laid down by Sir Howard Vincent. Johnson and Wells are undoubtedly "noted combatants," but they are not fighting "for a wager." Neither of them has wagered a farthing on the result. They are fighting for wages, not for a wager. And pretty high wages, too, are being paid them by Mr. White to pummel each other for the amusement of a crowd of many thousands of spectators.

It is doubtful, therefore, however much they may batter one another, whether accepting Sir Howard Vincent's definition as accurate, the sparring can degenerate into a prize-fight and justify either the Long ere this letter sees print your readers will have heard—many of them with regret—of the death of the Maharajah of Cooch Behar. He came over for the Coronation and had been very ill for some time with some kidney trouble and this carried him off at Bexhill (Sussex) on the 19th instant, aged 49. Taking him "by and large" he was a good fellow and his weakness were those of his class. As a sporting Indian nobleman of the first rank his reputation rests on a very solid foundation; as a man of the world and in social matters he exhibited qualities that occasionally approached real brilliance; his hospitality was lavish and his friends were many. You could do with a few more like him in India I make no doubt.

At the age of seventy-two there died at Chamonix last Saturday Mr. Edward Whymper, the "conqueror of the Matterhorn" as the result of an apoplectic seizure. Thus the greatest of Alpine pioneers, the most famous of British climbers, passes away. Born in 1840, he began climbing in the Alps in 1860, and his first great ascent was that of Mont Pelvoux in Dauphine during 1861.

That same year opened his combat with the Matterhorn, for the conquest of which his name will ever be remembered. Driven back by the want of resolution of his guide, in 1862 and 1863 he made six more unsuccessful attempts on one occasion narrowly escaping with his life.

His eighth and successful attempt on the Matterhorn was made on 13th July 1865. He had six companions—three guides, Croz and the two Taugwalders; Lord Francis Douglas, and Messrs. Hudson and Hadow. Moving up from Zermatt, the party reached the summit of the Matterhorn without misadventure on the following day, and thus dispelled the guides' belief that it was inaccessible and haunted by demons. They spent one hour on the top and then began the descent.

They were passing a point near the top when Mr. Hadow slipped against Croz, the leading guide, and knocked him down. Both slid down the mountain face, and Mr. Hudson and Lord F. Douglas were dragged after them. Mr. Whymper was roped between the Taugwalders and was last but one in the party. He and his two guides braced themselves to meet the shock; they resisted it, but the rope broke midway between Taugwalder and Lord F. Douglas. "For a few seconds," says Mr. Whymper in his thrilling account of the catastrophe, "we saw our unfortunate companions sliding downwards on their backs and spreading out their hands endeavouring to save themselves. They passed from our sight uninjured, disappeared one by one, and then fell from precipice to precipice." All were killed on the spot.

The descent of the difficult part of the mountain had now to be achieved by Mr. Whymper and his shaken guides. "The two men, paralysed by terror, cried like infants and trembled in such a manner as to threaten us with the fate of the others. . . . The men were afraid to proceed, and several times old Peter Taugwalder turned with ashy face and faltering limbs and said with terrible emphasis, 'I cannot.'"

For many years after this fearful accident Mr. Whymper climbed no more in the Alps. In 1867 and 1872 he explored Greenland; in 1879-80 he climbed in the high mountains of Ecuador, and twice ascended the volcano of Chimborazo. Between 1901 and 1905 he ascended many of the Canadian Rocky Mountains and explored and mapped the country of the "Great Divide."

Mr. Whymper was a brilliant writer, and his "Scrambles Amongst the Alps" has already become an English classic, but he was also a good artist and an admirable wood engraver.

It is almost impossible to take "Married by Degrees," Mr A. P. Sinnett's psychic play just produced at the Court Theatre seriously. Moreover, it proved most entertaining when the players had a chance of sounding the farcical note, and that was in the last act. From time immemorial playwrights have used an awkward matrimonial situation as the means to laughter, and certainly no young man newly married could find himself in a more trying position than Monty Gaskell, when during the honeymoon his wife suddenly changed from the Leonora he had married to the Lucy to whom he was only engaged. Mr. Sinnett, who is a well-known Theosophist and an authority on psychic phenomena, would have us believe that his heroine possesses a double personality, that Lucy is ignorant of the doings of Leonora, and vice versa. Moreover, that each personality is antagonistic to, if not actually at war with, the other.

Lucy is described by Lady Belmont, her guardian, as gentle and negative; Leonora as vivacious and positive; and the heroine, who is her own sweet self as Lucy, when she becomes engaged to Gaskell, suddenly changes to her other self immediately before the marriage. When this complicated wife once more reverts to Lucy while she is alone in a hotel with Gaskell, and has just partaken of breakfast in a dainty peignoir, the feelings of her husband can be imagined. Lucy is now horrified at her position, and it is impossible to say what would have happened despite the efforts of Lady Belmont and Mr. Winthorp, F.R.S., if Count Garciola had not opportunely intervened. The Count is a wicked Italian who paid court to her as Leonora, and the exact colour of whose wickedness the F.R.S., had revealed to her in a mesmeric state. The Count can also practise the passes, and does; but fortunately he also imparts the "'fluence,' as the conjurors call it, to a handkerchief, and this has the effect of mingling Lucy and Leonora, of breaking down the barrier between the two personalities, and thus in some occult way of sparing "Lucyora" any further excursions of personality.

Before we came to the amusing scene in the private sitting-room of the Saxe-Gotha Hotel, Lucy and Leonora had been through several experiences, greatly to the perturbation of all her friends, whose seriousness, in circumstances which should have been funny, did not help forward the play as an entertainment. When Mr. J. D. Beveridge is less sententious as the F.R.S., Mr. Clifton Alderson less deliberate as the wicked Count, and the rest of the company have taken their pace from vivacious Mr. Kenneth Douglas as Monty Gaskell, the comedy will be much better fun. Miss Maud Hoffman, who we believe appeared as Lucy-Leonora when the Play Actors introduced the piece to a Sunday audience some months ago, gave an effective performance on Saturday. Mrs. Russ Whytal as Lady Belmont, Mr Rudge Harding, Miss Pollie Emery and Miss Mabel Knowles (the last-named admirable in a character part) were also of the cast.

Paris has laughed for months at "Le Mariage de Mdlle. Beulemans," the brightly-written comedy of Frantz Fonson and Fernand Wicheler which, on Saturday night, delighted an audience largely French at the Globe Theatre, and M. Jacque and his clever colleagues who have so long been associated with the success of the play will find no difficulty in repeating their triumphs in London. They are only here for a brief visit, and all playgoers who enjoy a merry comedy acted with delicacy and finish, can be cordially recommended to pay a visit to the theatre in Shaftesbury-avenue. "Le Mariage de Mdlle. Beulemans" is a story of the slightest, just a tale of the Belgian bourgeoise and a young Parisian introduced into a Brussels menage, but it is told so humorously, and acted with such a spirited sense of comedy that the resulting entertainment is of a quite uncommon order.

M. Jacque is the father of the story, a gruff but good-hearted Brussels brewer who divides his affection between his daughter Suzanne and the post of president of a particular society. Suzanne helps with the ledgers, and her vis-a-vis at the desk is Albert Delpierre, whose somewhat finnicking manners and very correct Parisian French are rather annoying to the homely Belgians. But he is speedily in love with Suzanne in spite of the fact that she is betrothed, and some of the best moments in the comedy are furnished by Mdlle. Gilberte Legrand and M. Jules Berry as they reveal by many tender and half-humorous touches their growing affection. As things turn out Suzanne finds a way of escape from her engagement, for her affianced, she discovers, has contracted an obligation of honour in another direction, and very human and appealing is the scene in which she tells the young man where his real duty lies. But Albert is by no means a persona grata with his employer until he suddenly receives the gift of eloquence, and by pleading Beulemans' cause, gains him the coveted presidential office. Then nothing is too good for him, and a partnership as well as a bride are offered him.

Those who know the life of the Belgian bourgeoise will greatly enjoy the play, and the performance of the three actors already mentioned. M. Jacque's comedy is rich in good things, and Mdlle. Legrand has a fascination which is rare, while the Albert of M. Berry is an extremely finished and engaging effort. The rest of the company, notably M. Bernard as the affianced and Mdlle. Charmal as Mdme. Beulemans, are all excellent.

The Vagrant.

AN ISLAND ON A YORKSHIRE RIVER.

Anglo-Indians who have settled at Home, after their years of exile are over, have a constant grudge against the uncertain British climate, and are ever regretting the sunshine and heat of the East. Well, this summer of 1911 has been hot enough to satisfy the most exacting. We have had months of brilliant sunshine and almost tropical heat, and all indications point to more of the same sort to come. In the low-lying plain of York the heat has been quite oppressive, and one has all those feelings of lassitude and limpness, which are so overpowering in an Indian hot weather. It is far too hot for golf, or any other strenuous pursuit, and obviously bottom-fishing in some shady nook beside a cool river is the most suitable thing to do in such weather.

There is a charming spot which we can reach from York, with a minimum of exertion. It is an island on the Derwent, at Buttercrambe. This village, with the very pastoral sounding name, is only three miles beyond the railway station of Stamford Bridge, and three miles on a bicycle is nothing, even in the hottest of weather.

We embark then ourselves and our bicycles on a local train, and going via Earswick, where there is a model village, in modest imitation of the Garden City, soon find ourselves crossing the bridge over the deep narrow Derwent, and entering the picturesque little town of Stamford Bridge. The old brick cottages, smothered with roses and Virginia creeper, and roofed with warm red tiles; the ancient mill with its broad weir, over which the river tumbles in a low fall; the rich meadows through which the Derwent winds its leisured way; the great trees which everywhere raise their leafy spires into the calm air—all combine to make a perfect picture of peaceful English landscape.

Having extracted our bicycles from the brake van, we are soon free-wheeling down the winding hill from the station, past the mill and through the little town. We cross the old-fashioned road bridge over the Derwent, one of the kind with a steep hill on either side, and the centre of the bridge making the apex of a triangle. It was at Stamford Bridge nearly 850 years ago, that Harold came up with the retreating Danes and inflicted a crushing defeat upon them. They were trying to get back to their boats. In those days, when there were no locks, the tide used to run up the sluggish East Coast rivers an enormous distance, and the small Danish ships were able to penetrate deep into the country when making their raids. From the bridge we follow a winding road for half a mile uphill, and are then on the flat again, and going parallel with the Derwent, but some way off from it and quite out of sight of the water itself. The pretty road takes us through two woods, and then breasting a slight rise we run through Buttercrambe village, and down the dip beyond to the river. Here a lately cut hay field lies to our left, between the canal which carries the water to the mill and the river itself. This canal, which is very broad and deep, must be a very old work, for large trees grow along its bank and shade its quiet water. It is the haunt of many very large chub. The road crosses the canal by one bridge and a little further on the river by another.

On the right of the road is the mill. As soon as the canal has passed under the road it branches into two. One arm, after tumbling over a little weir, joins the river, the other runs through the mill, and then forms a long pool, which also joins the river at its lower end. To the right of the road then there is a good sized island, with the forked mill stream cutting it off on one side and the river on the other.

Where the mill stream narrows, as it enters the brick arch under the mill, there is a permanent bridge of planks, and by this we gain access to the island. Our bicycles we take with us a short distance along the jungly path that leads into the heart of the islet, and stand them against trees in the deep shade. The island is covered with great trees from end to end: poplars, elms and willows. Beneath is a tangle of nettles and coltsfoot, through which winds an uncertain path, made by anglers like ourselves who have explored the wilderness in search of likely swims. We have no need to explore, we know our destination. Just below where the other arm of the canal meets the river there are some twenty yards, with a gentle current and clean bottom. The bank drops steeply down, and quite a short distance out we find the water is over seven feet deep. Having fitted up our light 10-foot rods and adjusted our porcupine quill floats, so that our hooks just touch the bottom, we turn our minds to ground bait. We have brought a good sized bag of bran and meal mixed, and this we wet and work up into balls. Our hook bait is to be gentles, and of these somewhat loathsome creatures we have another good sized bag full, so that there are plenty to spare to mix with the bran and meal balls. The simple way is to make a ball the size of a small orange, and then poke a hole in it and insert a score or so of gentles. I find this plan always seems to work better than throwing in the gentles loose, as it is much easier when balls are used to get them into the exact spot desired. Everything depends in bottom fishing on getting the ground bait into the exact place where you are going to drop your baited hook.

Besides our roach rods, we have extra ones to put out with a live-bait for perch or jack. Or if preferred, the extra rod can be baited with a lob-worm on a ledger. A live-bait on a float is rather a nuisance when one is roach fishing with another rod, as it wants a certain amount of attention. The live gudgeon is continually pulling the float ashore, or tangling itself up among weeds, if not constantly attended to, and when one is roach fishing the attention is completely absorbed, and there is none to spare for anything else. The lob-worm on a ledger has the advantage of staying where it is put, and giving no trouble. We compromise matters by having out one rod with a worm and ledger, and the other with a float and live gudgeon. Getting the gudgeon was not difficult, for one of these little fish took one of our gentles almost at the first swim.

For a time the ground baiting appears to attract nothing but gudgeon into our swim, and we transfer half a dozen of the smaller sized ones to the bait can. We try casting our baits rather farther out to the edge of the swifter current.

You have got rather a longer cast than I, and as your quill travels quickly down the swim, it checks for a moment and vanishes. Up goes the rod tip, and the plunge and eel-like wriggle that follow are most certainly due you will see to a small chub. Out he soon comes, a half pounder. We continue to cast out to the edge of the stream, and for some little time go on catching chub, but nothing of any size. Meanwhile the first gudgeon has been taken by a jack, which bit the fine gut before he could be landed. The lob-worm on ledger has produced no bite so far.

And now the chub have stopped feeding, while the roach have not yet come on, so we throw in some more ground-bait, and take the opportunity to have tea: a simple enough affair, when it is brought out ready made in a thermos flask.

While we are at tea, a nice little perch of ¾lb. takes the gudgeon, and is duly transferred to the basket. Perch are good eating, and so are always welcome amongst a basket of coarse fish, most of which are absolutely uneatable.

And now the sun has got somewhat lower, while our ground bait has had time to act properly. We ought surely to begin to get roach soon. You have the bottom end of the swim, and it is from the bottom end that the fish gradually work up, as they follow the fragments of ground bait to their source. Just as it is reaching the extreme end of the swim your quill tip depresses a little, you strike with most commendable promptitude, and are into something good, which is powerful enough to take out some yards of line towards the centre of the river. Soon the fish is on the top, a fat roach of just on a pound; a truly handsome creature, all green and silver and with fins and tail tipped with scarlet. Soon after it is my turn, and I land another roach which might be a twin brother to the one you have just caught. And now there is an interlude, for the loose line on the ledger rod begins to go slowly out through the rings. A strike and you have him, but not the hoped for big chub or perch, but an enormous eel which proceeds to make itself as objectionable as an eel well knows how. After an exciting struggle with the gigantic corkscrew, in the course of which the whole swim is disturbed, the beast is brought near enough for me to make an attempt at it with the landing net. With an eel, however, it is necessary to get its tail into the net first, and as the tail is the part which is farthest away, this is no easy matter. At last, however, the deed is done, and then the creature winds itself and the net into one tangle of glutinous slime. The hook has to be sacrificed, for it is well down somewhere in the eel's stomach, and then comes a lengthy but very necessary cleaning up process. However, we have thrown in more ground bait, so that the time may not be wasted, and hope that the roach may soon come back.

After a bit the roach do come, but they are the three to the pound size, and they come in shoals. We both of us get bites at every swim, but the net is not called into requisition as the fish are just the size that one can safely lift out, even on our delicate gear. The big basket is soon filled to overflowing with fish, all exactly the same size. We will take them back, for there are some people in the village at home who are glad of all the roach they can get.

All at once the three to the pounders stop biting: this may either be due to a jack in the swim, or because some larger roach have made a visit to our ground bait. Ah! there goes your float, and now you are fast into the roach of the day, a fine fellow which goes off with a rush into mid-stream, and has to be treated with care, till quiet enough to net. It is a real good specimen for the Derwent, close upon a pound and a half in weight.

Hardly has this fine roach been landed than the big egg shaped float with the gudgeon attached goes bravely under and out of sight. I give a short interval and then strike and have got him. It is a nice three pound jack, and this time the gut is in the corner of the mouth, so that it cannot be bitten. Soon the net dips him out, and he is stowed into the top of the bulging basket. And now you close the day's fishing by getting another good roach of just an ounce over the pound. We must pack up now, or we shall miss our train back to York. These trains back are always a trifle too early; it is just at dusk that one has the chance of getting the roach of a lifetime, and we must leave our swim at the very best time. However, we have spent a very pleasant afternoon in one of the few really cool spots to be found just now. So we cycle back towards Stamford Bridge well content.

Shooting.

AIDS TO MINIATURE RIFLE SHOOTING.

There is a growing tendency nowadays, among rifle clubs, to allow any sights, and consequently aperture backsights are becoming far more popular than they used to be. It is strange what a prejudice has existed against the use of peep sights for military rifles, although, as a matter of fact, a suitable aperture backsight is generally speaking infinitely more efficient for all purposes than any form of open sight. I proved this to my own satisfaction, in the case of rifles used for sport, very many years ago. There is nothing I look back to with greater pleasure than my early decision never to use anything but peep sights on my sporting rifles; and there is no doubt whatever that these same aperture sights had the effect of turning me from a poor into a very fair shot. They would have done the same for many another keen sportsman, who through his unfortunate conservatism in clinging to the old and unsatisfactory open sight, has remained a bad shot all his life. Lyman was the pioneer of the peep sight, and his excellent sporting backsight, with its large aperture, was really an extraordinary invention, enabling, as it did, the shooter to take quick accurate aim at the object, without having to focus the backsight, and without having his view of the lower part of the target obscured by the sight itself, as it always is when an open backsight is used. Those who are well used to Lyman sights know how excellent they are for swiftly-moving as well as for stationary objects. All thought and anxiety as regards the backsight are done away with: the Lyman peep, so to speak, takes care of itself, and all that remains to be done is to cover the object one wishes to hit with the pinhead of the foresight. This naturally quickens the process of sighting considerably, and that is why peep sights, provided they have large apertures, are so well suited for moving game. The days when the Lyman was the only decent and practical form of sporting peep sight to be had have long passed away. There are now numerous patterns of excellent aperture sights on the market. I am glad too that some of the very best of them are made in Britain. In a former letter I have referred to the B.S.A. aperture sight, a really excellent pattern. I have one before me as I write: it is attached to one of my Stevens' rifles. One of the many good features of this sight is its rigidity, due to a large hollowed base, which fits well on to the grip of the rifle, in exactly the same place as an ordinary Lyman. It has a roughened nut at the top for controlling elevation, and a similar nut at the right hand side of the base for giving windage. A special eyepiece can be fitted, which gives six different sizes of aperture—a most useful arrangement, as it enables one to instantly use the exact aperture best suited for the target and condition of light. A tubular combination foresight gives the choice of either a ring or bead. The ring is particularly nice for shooting at an ordinary black bull's-eye, as one sees the black dot centred in the ring and a margin of white round it, so that it is very easy to see whether one is holding exactly on the centre of the bull. This is not so easy with a bead, for the bead also looks black, and it is often difficult to be certain whether the bead is just touching the bottom edge of the bull, or encroaching a little into it.

A lens foresight is of course a great assistance in shooting at a small object, as it magnifies its apparent size, and so makes it easier to hold on it. If a lens is put in front of a ring foresight it will make a small bull take up more room in the centre of the ring, and not appear as a mere dot with a wide margin of white.

An eyepiece, which shuts out a lot of the outside rays of light, is no disadvantage when shooting at standing game in bright sunshine, while it is a very considerable help when shooting at a target. The large aperture sight, without eyepiece, is especially good for moving objects under all conditions of light, and stationary objects in a bad light. I have, for instance, been often enabled to shoot hares in the dusk by having Lyman sights on my rifle. The large peep hole without eyepiece makes it possible to see the object through the rear sight until it is almost dark, while the protecting hood of the foresight can be used as a ring to circle the object, long after it has become too dark to see the pinhead at all. As the pinhead of the foresight comes about the centre of the hood, the using of the latter as a sighting ring gives quite accurate enough results for short ranges.

No doubt a lens foresight would be an enormous advantage for shooting small game in the dusk. I have tested a rifle I have, which is fitted with a lens foresight, by aiming at various objects in the gloaming, and find the magnification given by the lens is a great help in a bad light.

The sling is a most valuable adjunct for steadying the aim, in deliberate shooting. The length has to be nicely ranged, so that when one's arm is twisted through the sling everything may feel just right. This is easily managed by having a buckle and plenty of holes, so that the length can be readily adjusted until there is the proper degree of stiffness and tension. The left arm is a strut supporting the barrel, and the sling is the tensile stay which gives it rigidity and gets rid of tremor. As I have mentioned before, some little ingenuity has to be exercised in order to fit a sling satisfactorily to a rifle which is unprovided with swivels. In the Stevens' Ideal rifles the fore-end acts as a convenient stop for the front loop of the sling which goes round the barrel. The rear end has to be fastened round the small of the butt, just behind the peep sight.

In using ·22 Long Rifle Ammunition there are two points worth remembering. One is never to extract an unfired cartridge from the breech unless absolutely obliged. If it is necessary to unload the rifle without firing, the cartridge should be gently pushed out by means of a cleaning rod introduced into the muzzle. If the cartridge is extracted by opening the breech in the ordinary way, the bullet will most likely be left in the barrel, while the extractor will pull out the case, spilling most of the powder into the action while doing so. The rifle can be held vertically while opening the breech which will prevent the powder spilling, but then the bullet will have to be pushed out with a rod separately. The reason for this trouble is that the Long Rifle shell has the bullet only held in its friction tight, so that the bullet comes out with the slightest pull. The other important point is that the bullets are outside lubricated, and therefore the greatest care must be taken to keep them clear of grit and sand. Grit of any sort sticks to the greasy bullets at once, and besides causing bad shooting, is liable to scratch and damage the rifling.

American rifles often have deeply hollowed butt plates with the ends projecting like horns. Englishmen rather jeer at these Swiss-shaped butts, and prefer our own pattern. I have however shot a great deal with rifles having horned butt plates, and they are much better than they look. The deep hollow is especially comfortable when the butt is set against the upper part of the arm, instead of against the shoulder. This one often finds convenient when using peep sights, in order to get the eye closer up to the aperture.

The ·22 Long Rifle Ammunition is so cheap, and so wonderfully accurate, that though primarily no doubt designed for target work, it has come to be largely used for sporting purposes also.

Naturally then these cartridges often get called upon to do more than they are capable of, and disappointment to the shooter and needless suffering to the creature shot at result. I have shot many rabbits with ·22 Long Rifle cartridges, and consider that an animal of this size should only be shikarred with this ammunition, when it can be hit in the head or neck. Such being the case, it will be readily conceded that aperture sights capable of giving the closest possible shooting, are almost a sine qua non with these rifles if they are to be much used for sporting purposes. Also the addition of a lens foresight is a still further advantage, and adds considerably to the effectiveness of the weapon.

Your Duty to Your Horses.

You may have done all you can. Your horses may perhaps be well stabled—well groomed—well fed—well taken care of and yet may not be properly clothed. Now that the winter will very shortly be on us your duty will be to see them fitted with suitable garments.

Elgin HORSE CLOTHING

is made from wool and is the best and most reliable kind that you can possibly buys. The fact that we have almost a monopoly for the supply of Horse Clothing to the Remount Depôts and many of the Cavalry Regiments and Batteries of the Indian Army will give you an idea as to the High-grade Quality of "ELGIN" Horse Clothing.

May we send you Samples, Particulars and Order Forms.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR on Saturday, in their First League match at Roker Park did not manage to beat Sunderland, but in holding their own with the famous Wearside club the Londoners accomplished a highly satisfactory performance. As a result of R. Steel's promptness in turning a centre by McTavish to account, Hotspur led before the game had been in progress a quarter of an hour, and the opening half was almost at an end when a foul by Wilkes on Hoiley enabled the latter to make the game one goal all. At that score the match remained to the end, but more than once, although Sunderland had perhaps the bigger share of the play, the visitors came desperately near regaining the lead. R. Steel went very close and another time, when Scott had fallen in dealing with a shot from Humphreys, and only a splendid piece of work by Tait averted what looked like a certain score for Hotspur. The North London club will scarcely know themselves with two wins and two draws as the result of their first four engagements. Moreover, on recent form, they should certainly hold their own in their next half dozen engagements, so there ought to be great times in store for Tottenham Hotspur.

Saturday not only saw Tottenham Hotspur safely through a formidable engagement, but also brought victory to Woolwich Arsenal for the first time this season and at the expense of no less renowned a side than Newcastle United. The Plumstead men were perhaps a little lucky with their first goal, inasmuch as Flanagan was at hand to score after Chalmers had missed the ball. Still, having once secured the lead the Arsenal held on to their advantage. Newcastle were obviously the cleverer side, but they showed lack of finishing power and the home club at intervals caused Lawrence a good deal of trouble, and just before the close a free kick enabled Common to put on a second point. Upon their excellent achievement in beating Newcastle United by 2 to 0 the Arsenal team will be heartily congratulated. Badly beaten by Aston Villa a week previously, they looked as if once again troublous times were in store for them, but a win such as that achieved on Saturday suggests that the Plumstead team as well as that of Tottenham will for some period of the season at least escape the anxieties of recent years.

Both Manchester clubs meeting with defeat at the week end, Tottenham Hotspur share with Bradford City the distinction of being the only clubs in the First Division without a reverse. Bradford City, however, possess much the better record, inasmuch as they, having beaten Aston Villa, Newcastle United, and Sheffield United in succession, can show six points out of a possible six, whereas Hotspur, with an equal number of points to their credit, might have raised their aggregate to eight. Manchester United, last season's champions of the First League, went down before West Bromwich Albion, who in April secured the place of honour in League Two. The Albion had nothing to spare; indeed, on the general run of the play, they were lucky to win, seeing that they only obtained one goal and United, working skilfully together, did everything but score. Extremely unlucky were Manchester City, inasmuch as, with the game at one goal all, they lost the services of Smith, their very efficient custodian. In the absence of Smith Aston Villa put on five goals and ran out winners by 6 to 2.

Both promoted clubs are justifying their readmission to League One, for Bolton Wanderers, as well as West Bromwich Albion, have three victories to set against one defeat. The Wanderers have special cause for satisfaction, as they opened with a defeat on their own ground and have since beaten Liverpool, Sheffield United, and Oldham Athletic. Everton, it is to be noted, secured their first victory but were a little lucky, inasmuch as Liverpool, who visited Goodison Park, lost the services of Orr before the match was half over.

After three very unsatisfactory matches the Chelsea team at last showed the form that everyone felt that they were capable of, and, beating Wolverhampton by four goals to none, gained their second victory in the Second Division of the League in a manner worthy of their reputation. But this improvement was not brought about without some drastic changes in the forward line having been made. V. J. Woodward and Brown superseded Hilsdon and Whittingham, while Freeman, who had played so well against Derby County, kept his place to the exclusion of Windridge. Singularly enough these three men scored the goals yesterday, Freeman getting two and the others one each—all in the second half. During this period Woodward led the line splendidly, opening up the game in the manner of which he is such an able exponent. This excellent victory should set fresh heart into the side. One thing they can boast of—they have not yet had a goal scored against them, a distinction no other club in either division of the League can claim. Clapton Orient, like Chelsea, gained their second victory, but they had to work hard to hold their lead against Leeds City, who nearly succeeded in equalising after the Orient had obtained a couple of goals. So two of the London Clubs are still unbeaten, but Fulham, despite the fine display they gave the week before, met with their second reverse, going down at Huddersfield in a well-contested game. The surprise of the afternoon occurred at Hull, where Burnley, who had won four games off the reel, were beaten by four goals to none. Hull City played splendidly the defence being sound and the attack, for the best part, brilliant. Grimsby Town are showing themselves to be a good side, for after being two goals to the bad at half time they drew with Gainsborough Trinity, their form in the second half being very fine.

Very few of the games played in the Southern League this week fulfilled expectation, and the most surprising of the results was the one reached at Gillingham, where New Brompton inflicted on Brentford their first defeat of the season. Brentford had shown such fine form in their previous match that the chances seemed all in their favour, the more especially as the week before New Brompton had lost to the City team at Exeter by no fewer than eight goals to one. Yesterday, however, New Brompton gave a vastly improved display and but for a bad mistake by one of their backs, which enabled Sibbald to score for Brentford, they would have won more readily. Of the leading clubs only Queen's Park Rangers managed to win, and it is noteworthy that of the three games already played the Park Royal team have won two away from home, a fine victory over the Argyle at Plymouth on the opening Saturday of the season, being followed yesterday by success at Watford. This is all the more satisfactory, from the fact that last season Queen's Park Rangers, like Brentford, failed in the most pronounced manner to reproduce on opponents' grounds the excellent form they were capable of showing at home. Swindon, who had by brilliant football beaten Leyton and Norwich City, could do no more than divide the points with Crystal Palace at Sydenham, and Northampton, who also opened with two wins, went down before Norwich City at Norwich. As an outcome of these results Queen's Park Rangers stand at the head of the table and are now the only side who have not dropped a point. Reading proved too good for Millwall, but Stoke, the other promoted club, sustained a reverse at Coventry.

RUGBY RULES.

ANOTHER fortnight will elapse before the season is in full swing in London, but the large majority of provincial clubs took the field on Saturday and even the Metropolitan clubs were hard at work with trial matches and other forms of preparation for the winter game. No one wants to see Rugby men playing under such tropical conditions as prevailed on the first two Saturdays of the month. Being their own masters, they are not likely to adopt any such course of action, but it is unquestionably a satisfactory sign of the times that players should take the trouble to get themselves really fit for the opening engagements of the season. Rugby football is, indeed, in a very healthy condition at the present time. Possibly we in London see the game, not necessarily in its highest stage of development, but certainly in its most refreshing aspect, and are inclined to claim for it a standard which does not obtain in all parts of the kingdom. However, that may be, Metropolitan Rugby is now played not only in the excellent spirit always associated with it, but with appreciably more keenness and far more intelligence and initiative than in some seasons most of us can readily recall. This development in quickness to seize chances and to make attack rather than defence the first endeavour has spread all over the country with highly gratifying results. Indeed, even last season, although the England fifteen failed to retain the championship, carried off so skilfully in the previous winter, there was matter for congratulation in the victory over Scotland, and the defeats from Wales and Ireland occasioned nothing like the feeling of depression which prevailed in so pronounced a degree for quite a number of years. As a matter of fact, although England cut a disappointing figure against Ireland, the form displayed against Wales at Swansea was so good that only a slight turn of luck would have been necessary to change defeat into victory. In these circumstances the forthcoming season will be approached with plenty of confidence. Possibly our representatives may once again have to admit a reverse at the hands of Wales, but it is of good augury that the encounter takes place at Twickenham, where England have never yet been beaten. Even in the event of defeat from the Principality, there should be compensation in the results of the matches with Scotland and Ireland. For whatever measure of success or failure may be in store for the England fifteen, followers of the Rugby game must possess their souls in patience for something like four months. Meanwhile they will have plenty to interest them in the early form of the various prominent clubs, the building up of the University fifteens, and the numerous contests in the county championship.

CYCLING.

National Cyclists' Union.—An interesting programme was arranged for the meeting of the N.C.U. champions at Herne Hill. The weather being fine, nearly 6,000 spectators attended and witnessed some splendid racing. The chief event bore an international character as four of England's best riders were matched against a French four in a teams race. The visitors, though lacking the services of Schilles, were strongly represented by Bey, Dumoussant, Masson, and Dupuex, but England's four, consisting of Victor Johnson, H. T. Johnson, C. B. Kingsbury, and A. J. Denny, were too good for them and won by the greatest possible margin of 12 points to 28. The Frenchmen also competed in the lap race, and one of them, Bey, rode very well, to be beaten by H. T. Johnson by a wheel in his heat. Victor Johnson in accordance with general anticipations secured the final from Kingsbury in a splendid race by a length, the time being 35 4-5 seconds. The same riders fought out the sprint in the five miles scratch race, and Johnson came in first again, but Kingsbury who was hindered by the Rover cyclist swerving appealed, with the result that Johnson was disqualified. Time, 11 minutes 35 seconds. An attack on the thirty miles and one hour records was made, the following riders competing:—H. H. Lee, Kentish Wheelers; C. H. Bartlett and S. F. Bailey, Polytechnic; A. A. Stewart, Yorkshire Roads C.C.; and H. Hughes, Marlborough A.C. The records were not beaten and Bailey covered the 30 miles in 61 minutes 35 1-5 seconds, Bartlett being second in 62 minutes 27 seconds. Lee third in 62 minutes 44 seconds. Hughes fourth, and Stewart last.

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

On the 4th instant the Royal Scots met the 4th King's Royal Rifles. These teams contested the final last year, when the Scots were victorious, but on the present occasion the tables were turned, for the Rifles beat the Cup-holders by 2 goals to nil. The Scots were first to attack and besieged the Rifles' goal, but the defence was equal to all demands, and the ball was eventually transferred to the other end, where a brilliant combined run ended in Davies scoring a goal. The Scots made great efforts to equalise but without success and the Rifles led at the interval. The opening play in the second half was confined to the Rifles' territory, but the Scots could not break their defence and the ball was taken to the Scots' end where the Rifles kept up a strong pressure, Lee eventually adding to the score. The Cup-holders were unable to reply and retired beaten as stated. The remaining match of the third round was between the 5th Mountain Battery and the Lancashire Fusiliers. The latter were the better team, but their opponents, though beaten, put up a very fine game. The Gunners pressed at the start, but play was soon transferred to their end and Lark scored a goal. The Gunners ran down on resuming and were nearly through, the ball just going outside the post. The play was up and down for a spell till the Lancs got possession once more and rushing away a second goal was scored by Abbott. In the second half the Lancs did all the attacking but the Gunners' defence was excellent. They played up pluckily till the whistle went and only let their opponents get one more goal. The Lancashire Fusiliers thus won by 3 goals to nil.

The semi-finals were played on Thursday evening. In the first the Black Watch met the Royal Welsh Fusiliers and beat them by 4 goals to nil. The Welsh did not play up to form and were outclassed by the Highlanders, who did most of the attacking. They forced a corner at the start and from the kick the Fusiliers were penalised. The Black Watch scored from the penalty kick and keeping up a hot attack had several shots at goal, Egerton at length finding the net. They continued the pressure and Watson getting possession scored their third goal. The Welsh were next prominent and Gearson was given a good chance of scoring, but the Scotch custodian brought off a brilliant save and the interval arrived shortly after. On changing ends the Welsh showed a little better form and play was fairly level. The Fusiliers disposed of all the Highlanders' efforts till a few minutes before time Egerton again netted the ball. The Welsh could not respond and were beaten 4 - 0.

The second match was between the Lancashire Fusiliers and the 4th King's Royal Rifles, and a splendid game was witnessed. The Lancs pressed at the start, but the Rifles cleared, and taking the ball down they drew first blood. Fast play followed till the Lancs at length besieged the Rifles' citadel and a penalty was given against the Rifles, from which Wilkinson equalised. The referee did not see this penalty and had awarded a throw-in as the ball had gone out. The Lancashires, however, claimed a penalty and were supported by the two linesmen, the referee altering his decision before the game was restarted. In the second half the play was even for a spell, but the Rifles did not show the form they had exhibited in the earlier stages of the game and the Lancashires soon assumed the upper hand and did most of the pressing, Abbott eventually giving them the lead. The succeeding play was fast and exciting, but there was no further scoring and the Fusiliers qualified for the final by 2 goals to 1.

The Black Watch and the Lancashire Fusiliers contested the final in the presence of a large gathering on Saturday last and a most exciting game was witnessed. The Black Watch had rather the best of the exchanges but time was called without either team having scored. The game was continued during extra time and though the Fusiliers lost one of their backs owing to an injury early in the first part they managed to keep their goal intact and a pointless draw was the result. The replay on Monday attracted another large crowd and another excellent game was witnessed. Play was slow at the start but the Black Watch soon settled down to a strong attack. They were unable to get through however and the Fusiliers got possession and Springs was prominent for a couple of good shots at goal. These were cleared but they kept up the pressure and Lark had a shot. Nothing came of it and the interval arrived shortly after with the score sheet blank. Play became faster on resuming, the Black Watch keeping their opponents on the defensive. At length Watson got the ball and seizing an opportunity banged the ball into the net amidst prolonged applause. The Fusiliers were next prominent but it was not long before they were driven back again and Egerton sent in a fine shot. This was cleared but the Black Watch continued to press. They forced a corner and a scrimmage followed on the kick, the ball being got away in wonderful style. The whistle sounded soon after leaving the Black Watch victorious by a goal to nil. This is their fourth victory in the tournament as they took the Cup in 1897, 1898 and 1899.

Her Excellency Lady Hardinge presented the prizes, and Sir F. R. Wynne, President of the Managing Committee, called for three cheers for Her Excellency.

MADRAS RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

The Tournament opened on the 3rd instant with the match between the Madras Gymkhana and Calcutta F.C. and a very fair game was witnessed. Calcutta with a strong breeze in their favour in the first half did most of the attacking but failed to score and the interval arrived pointless. On changing ends, however the situations were reversed, Madras being the aggressors during the major part of the play. Firth nearly got over shortly after restarting but was pulled down. Then Browning made his mark and Moir taking the kick opened the Madras goal. Play continued in the Calcutta territory and the visitors had to touch down a long kick by Purves. Sayers was next prominent getting over after a smart bit of dodging. Moir added the extra points. In spite of all their hard work Calcutta were not able to make much headway. Their threes put in a good run, but this was stopped and Madras dribbled the ball back for Rogers to cross the line. The place kick failed and the game ended soon after in a win for Madras by 2 goals and 1 try (11 points) to nil.

The first game in the semi-finals was played on the 4th instant between the Leicester Regiment and the Bombay Gymkhana. The military were much the stronger side but play was interesting nevertheless. The soldiers pressed at the start and were soon awarded a free kick which they did not turn to account. But they kept up the attack and Hougham dropped a splendid goal from nearly half field. Bombay were kept on the defensive and Brewin got through for Hougham to add the extra points shortly before the interval from offside against Bombay another goal was scored, the soldiers leading by 12 points to nil at half time. In the second half Bombay had the advantage of the wind and showed up more prominently. The first item of note was a free kick to the Leicesters but nothing came of it. Bombay then got away but were pulled up and play transferred a series of scrums in their territory leading up to a try by Noden. The kick failed but the Leicesters maintained the pressure and Atkins was next across. The attempt to major ise was a good one but the ball hit the post and rebounded into play. Close on time Walker put in a five run for the Gymkhana and got over with a try, Liptrott kicking a splendid goal from a difficult angle. The whistle found the score Leicester 18 points, Bombay 5 points.

Madras met the Leicesters "B" team on the 5th instant. It was a foregone conclusion that the Gymkhana would win but the soldiers put up a good fight and Madras had to work hard for their victory. They led at the interval by a goal (5 points) to nil, Legge getting over from a line out and Moor converting. In the second half they got over three times, Frith, Gray and Sayers being responsible. The major points were added to only one of these and the Leicesters failing to score, Madras won by 3 goals and 1 try (18 points) to nil.

The final between Madras and "A" team of the Leicester Regiment attracted a big attendance of spectators. The betting was slightly in favour of the military but the game proved that there was practically nothing to choose between the teams. The play was almost entirely with the forwards and the tall remained in midfield during most of the operations. Madras lost chances of getting through and the soldiers were also lucky behind the scrum. Neither team scored and the game ended in a goalless draw. The match was replayed on Monday and a telegram announces a victory for the Gymkhana by three tries (9 points) to nil after a hotly contested game. The Leicesters had rather the best of the initial period but the interval arrived without score but in the second half the Madras three-quarters, playing a fine game, crossed over with three tries and won as stated. THE AMERICAN AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.

Harold H. Hilton defeated Fred Herreshoff on the thirty-seventh green at Apawamis on the 15th September and so won the amateur golf championship of the United States. The game proved one of the most exciting imaginable. Hilton finished the first round 4 up, and seemed to have the match in hand. He had holed out in approximately 75, thus making his tenth consecutive round in 77 or less, a really wonderful performance under any circumstances and on any course. But to be 4 up to Herreshoff, with an enormous and unsympathetic gallery which frantically cheered the American favourite at every beautiful shot he made, and lapsed into silence that could be felt when Hilton laid his iron dead, must have been a great strain on the Englishman's nerves.

When the pair came out after luncheon brilliant sunshine prevailed. The morning crowd had received numerous reinforcements, and must have numbered fully 5,000 people watching an international struggle. A dozen officials did their best to prevent the crowd molesting the play, and they were assisted by a couple of men with huge megaphones. "Stand back or you'll be hit" could be constantly heard reverberating over the hills. Never was championship golf played under such remarkable conditions. To begin with, every hole less than 400 yards in length had a continuous line of spectators right from tee to green. It really resembled a crowd waiting the advent of a racing motor-car. From the tee one could see two parallel lines of people stretching eagerly forward to watch the flight of two white balls. The wonder was that several people were not hit, not so much because of an occasional slice, but because groups of visitors constantly crowded on to the fairway 200 yards from the tee whom no megaphone on earth would seem to affect.

Hilton increased his lead to 5 up at the nineteenth hole halved the twentieth, won the twenty-first, and when on the tee for the twenty-fourth hole he actually stood 6 up, with 15 to play. Everyone thought that it was all over; but golf, like cricket, has its glorious uncertainties. Hilton did not win another hole until the thirty-seventh. The turning-point in the game came at the short eighth or twenty-sixth, where Hilton, after making a perfect recovery from a bunker, missed a putt which he could have knocked in with the back of any club in his bag. This sent renewed heart into Herreshoff, who, amidst loud and exciting well-earned cheering proceeded to lay mashie shot after mashie shot stone dead, and thus captured 6 holes. With 2 to go the game stood all square. The suspense was tremendous. Both men got to the edge of the seventeenth, and each missed putts. Coming to the home hole Hilton laid a 20 feet approach putt dead, and it was realised that Herreshoff had a 12 feet putt to win the hole, the match, and the championship. The ball lipped the hole, and stayed outside, so they had to go an extra hole. Both had fine drives. Hilton sliced his second, a jigger shot, the ball pitching on a flat rock in the rough to the right, and fortunately bouncing back on to the green. Herreshoff attempted a full mashie, topped it, and then overran the green, leaving the Englishman an easy putt for victory.

Hilton interestingly explains how he narrowly missed his triumph in the following words: "Of course, those who did not see the match will say, 'However did you manage to let him get all square?' It really is a very simple story—one man coming on to his game, and one man going off his game. Mr. Herreshoff played magnificent golf, and, moreover, exceedingly plucky golf. It was a great effort, and coming on top of Travers's exhibition on Thursday, gives me greater respect than ever for the plucky recuperative power of the young American players. They are great, and with experience, which will bring consistency, supremacy over British golf will be but a matter of a very few years."

THE BUSINESS OF GOLF.

A £7,000,000 INDUSTRY.

Every sport has its industry; wages are paid in varying scales, implements and garments are planned, made, bought, and sold, clubhouses are built, and trains are taken. But the business of golf surpasses its colleagues. It is newer; it is more widespread; its extent, indeed, makes it a factor of importance in the trade of the nation: the affairs of many companies which supply its equipment have their place in national finance, and the presence of its clubhouses and its links sends up the price of land. Fifty years ago there was no business side to the game of golf. To-day there are more than 200,000 members of golf clubs in England and the nation's annual golf bill amounts to no less a sum than £7,000,000.

For the first time probably the money figures of a game in all its ramifications have been collected and set down. To the September issue of the London Magazine Mr. Henry Leach has contributed a remarkable article in which he gives the financial statistics of golf. With infinite care he has accumulated those figures, and their significance as one reads them is notable. It is an astonishing narrative of industrial progress without parallel, one may well conclude, in our industrial history.

Fifty years ago there were only two golf clubs in England—one at Manchester and the other at Blackheath—and they had most probably not 200 members belonging to them.

There are now about 2,000 golf clubs and societies in the British Isles, of which nearly three-fourths have courses of their own. Estimates of the number of members vary between 200,000 and 300,000. It is difficult to lay out a satisfactory eighteen-hole course on less than 70 acres of land. Some of them occupy over 200 acres. Half-sized or nine-hole courses, which are numerous, need about 40 acres.

Taking the average at about 70 acres, we come by the calculation that 105,000 acres of land in England are devoted to golf. That is nearly as much land as there is in the county of Rutland.

There are many of these clubs, particularly those of the most recent beginning, that have cost £20,000 or more for their establishment, including taking possession and construction of the course, building and equipment of the clubhouse, and so on. A new club of any pretensions to completeness, even in the provinces away from the big centres, can rarely be properly set going on less than £500.

Only to-day a friend has told me of the £25,000 he has been concerned in spending on a new club and course not long since established in the south of England. But at the suggested average of one-fiftieth of this sum we have for the 1,500 clubs a total capital sunk of £650,000.

What Golf Clubs Spend.

From a large number of balance-sheets the London Magazine proceeds to estimate the expenditure of one club, large and small, throughout the country. The accounts of the important Mid-Surrey Club at Richmond are analysed in detail.

It has over a thousand members, who among them play over a hundred thousand rounds on the course in every year. Its total income in its most recent financial year was £6,906, of which £1,053 was derived from entrance fees, £4,758 from subscriptions, and £576 from visitors' green fees. Being a members' club with no thought of profits and dividends, it spends its income chiefly on its course. As much as £1,900 goes in wages to the green-keeping staff, £380 in expenses incidental to their work, £900 in rent, and so forth. Of course, this is in the London district, where golf is more expensive and is conducted on a grander scale than it is elsewhere, and the Mid-Surrey Club is one of the chiefs of the centre. But there are now 180 clubs within easy reach of Charing Cross, embracing 20,000 members, and a large proportion spend £2,000 a year and more. Then the greater seaside clubs, which are chiefly fed with members from London, will often spend £3,000 or more in the year. If we put the average expenditure of all golf clubs at only £500, we have a total of over half a million sterling for the year.

Pass from the club to the individual. Here, of course, estimates of expenditure must vary. One player gives his annual sum total at £500 ; a general consensus of opinion placed the minimum average expenditure of all classes at £10. In one recent year 20,000 people were converted to the game, and their necessary preliminary expenditure in entrance fees, outlay on materials, and so forth, is placed at £5 per head. In good clubs entrance fees often amount to 15 guineas, and subscriptions vary from 1 guinea to 10. Nor in a financial estimate such as this can women players be omitted. The Ladies' Golf Union, the ruling authority in this country, has over 50,000 members, and reckoning the average individual expenditure at £5 offers at once a total of £150,000.

The Profits of Holiday Golf.

Nor is vagrant or holiday golf, just now in full swing, without its statistics.

Tens of thousands of enthusiastic people take short holidays for the more thorough pursuit of their pastime. Visiting clubs of which they are not members, they are called upon to pay "green fees" for the privilege of playing on the course, these fees generally varying from 1s. to 5s. a day, although in some cases a minimum of 10s. or even a sovereign has to be paid. A few seaside clubs practically live on these visitors' fees. At several of them over a thousand pounds is gathered in this way in a season. Taking at random two cases, for example, there is the £1,264 of Newquay in a recent year and the £1,250 of Sheringham.

I have no doubt that in many cases these figures have been exceeded, especially when I hear on the best authority that a club on the south coast, which is comparatively little known and is very inaccessible except by motor-car, collected over £800 in these fees last season. About £500 is a very common year's aggregate of fees for a seaside course, and hardly any club of any pretensions takes less than £300.

Even more remarkable figures than these Mr. Leach now proceeds to give us as he describes the development of the golf ball. Round the rubber-cored ball a great industry has come into being in the space of thirteen years.

I went to the manager of a prominent firm, who gives me his real confidence, and demanded of him the most conservative estimate it was possible to make of the consumption of golf balls annually in Britain. The firm's books were at hand. We went together through various calculations, rejecting every doubtful figure. When we had got to the bedrock of fact we knocked 25 or more per cent. off nearly everything, "to be on the safe side," and the conclusion was that possibly not fewer than 7,200,000 balls are used up in Britain every year. The prices of these range from fifteenpence to half a crown, the great majority being two shillings, or that with the extra sixpence. Putting the average at one and eightpence, we have here £600,000 spent by our players annually in balls alone.

Then there is an enormous trade done in clubs, varying in price from four shillings to half a guinea each. Huge factories in different parts of Scotland and one or two in England are constantly engaged in manufacturing them.

Golf has its effect on railway finance. At the last half-yearly meeting of the Highland Railway Company an increase of £10,000 in revenue was accredited to golf and grouse. In one year the Great Central carried 11,093 golfers to the Notts Golf Club at Hollinwell, nine miles from Nottingham, and netted £539 thereby.

And golf has its effect on the value of the land itself. Near golf courses estates are developed, roads constructed, railway communications opened. Near London the price of land round golf courses has risen in several places from £50 to more than £200 an acre.

At Sandwich a golf course and club-house were constructed six years ago at a cost of over £20,000 ; the erection of an hotel and laying down of motor roads brought the expenditure to over £60,000. Now the price of land there is £800 an acre.

The national significance of this vast business of golf has been realised by many municipalities whose links—as at Bournemouth—have proved very lucrative. And the business of golf is growing ; the wonderful figures are mounting with eager rapidity. We are only, concludes Mr. Leach, at the beginning of the great golf "boom."

The Horse.

By John Gilpin.

CHAPTER XI.

Saddling and Saddlery.

The fit of the saddle is of such importance that too much attention cannot be given to it. Every horse should have his own carefully fitted saddle. A sore back is the result of bad fitting and a sore back means, at the least, a horse in the stable eating his head off and losing condition as fast as he can. To avoid the sore one sets the saddle farther forwards or farther back, or one tries some hanky-panky with a folded blanket, with the result too often that the sore gets touched up again or another one is caused owing to the abnormal position of the saddle.

The first thing to see to in fitting a saddle is that the arch is wide enough not to pinch the withers and high enough not to press on them. The first point does not receive enough attention. Some saddlers in India seem to imagine that a narrow-grip saddle is a saddle with a narrow arch and they send out the most dangerous stuff under that misapprehension. The arch has no more to do with the grip than the arm of a chair has to do with its seat. I do not for a moment mean to say that all Indian saddlers make this mistake but some do. Sufficient width in the arch should be insisted on.

The saddle should rest on the broad muscle on each side of the backbone and there should be a channel down between the pannels so as to ensure freedom from pressure on the top or sides of the bony processes of the bone itself. The saddle should nowhere come in contact with any part of the spine. Hence the importance of a muscular back. A back poor in muscle is hard to fit as the dorsal ridge projects far above the part on which the saddle rests and so is liable to be touched by it. Very slight pressure is sufficient to do serious mischief.

The saddle must not be so long as to press on the loins, and if it is of the military or semi-military pattern the fans should be well curved upwards or they will dig into the loins and cause a sore. They should also be long enough to ensure that the cloak or back pack cannot touch the horse's back, no matter how lightly.

The saddle should be stuffed with well cleaned flock, not cotton wool, and there should be enough stuffing to ensure freedom from pressure but not enough to allow the saddle to rock about. New saddles often require the addition of a little flock at the withers after having been ridden in for a few days as the stuffing compacts under the rider's weight. After mounting the rider should insert two or three fingers between the pommel and cantle of his saddle and the horse's back. If the movement of the horse causes the saddle to pinch his fingers between it and the back more flock is required. Major Hughes-Onslow says that he never goes out hunting without a pair of thick, knitted, woollen gloves under his girth straps. If he notices that his saddle is down on his horse's withers he puts the gloves under the arch of his saddle and is saved a sore back. The spongy Newmarket Pad is first rate for the same purpose.

Walers are lighter bodied than English horses as a rule and I think that Australian saddles fit them better on the whole than English ones. This is, after all, only to be expected when it is considered that the majority of English saddlers have probably never seen, let alone measured, a Waler.

I believe in pretty thick felt numdahs cut from one piece with no seam down the middle. Thin numdahs are an abomination, smart as they look. I once bought three and in three days had three sore backs in the stable. A thick blanket folded does well provided that it is put on properly but a thin blanket will ruck up and cut the back. Leather numdahs are excellent so long as they are in regular use and kept soft by means of the horse's sweat. If they get hard they are worse than useless. Castor oil is a good thing for keeping them soft.

The threefold leather girth with a piece of cloth inside to hold oil is so far the best that no others need be considered. They can be obtained cheaply from Cawnpore.

A surcingle should always be used if possible, especially with a horse that fidgets, or when anything is carried on the saddle.

The position for the saddle on the horse's back is generally pretty clearly defined in the case of horses that are really fit for saddle work, and, as a rule, if the saddle fits the horse it will find its place of itself. The shoulders should have room to work freely but the cantle of the saddle should not be back on the loins. The Army regulation is that the saddle should be put on "a hand's breadth behind the play of the shoulder." For racing the saddle should be as far forward as you can get it. The farther forward a horse's centre of gravity can be brought the longer will be his stride as shown in Hayes's "Points of the Horse."

If the saddle is inclined to work backwards a breastplate should be used, if forwards a crupper. The hand should be capable of being easily turned between these straps and the horse's body or they are too tight. A well shaped saddle horse does not need a crupper as a rule though I have known one or two very fast horses whose saddles were apt to work forward.

A horse in soft condition is always liable to get a sore back just as a man who has not ridden for some time is apt to chafe on the saddle, and such horses should not be asked to carry a rider for very long at a stretch until they harden. They should be brought into long work gradually. In the same way a horse that has been accustomed to a short hunting saddle is apt to chafe under the fans of a military saddle as that part of his back is unaccustomed to friction. Volunteer Chargers should therefore be gradually accustomed to the long saddle before camp or they will be likely to go into hospital with sore backs after the first long field day. In the same way horses should be gradually hardened to the carbine bucket and scabbard.

Cheap saddles are a mistake. A secondhand saddle by a first-class maker is much better value than a cheap new one and can be sold again for about what it cost. It has the further advantage that it is much easier to sit in than a new one which, unless it is made of "reversed hide," is always hard and slippery. The reversed hide saddles are made of buffed leather and are easy to cling to. Kangaroo hide makes charming saddles but these are expensive and not always obtainable. Plain flaps look smarter than knee rolls and as the latter are of no use that I can see I do not recommend them. When buying a secondhand saddle a trial should be had if possible to see whether it is comfortable to man and horse.

Saddlery should be dressed regularly with Saddle Soap which can be obtained very good and cheap under the name of harness soap from Indian Soap Factories. Vaseline makes a nice soft saddle but soils the clothes and attracts dust. Buffed leather should be dressed on the reverse side only and for this purpose vaseline is excellent. If you want a highly polished saddle use beeswax but you will find a polished saddle slippery and hard to sit in, and a saddle well cleaned with soap looks smart enough for any purpose.

Level seated saddles are the fashion now and no fault is to be found with them provided the grip is narrow, but I think that the Australian pattern of saddle gives the firmer seat across country.

Stirrup leathers should not be too thick. Thick leathers are apt to cut the knees and are unsightly. I like to have holes made through the leathers for the tongue of the buckle between the original holes so as to admit of a nicer adjustment.

Surcingles should be of leather and care must be taken that they are not drawn tighter than the girths. This is important if you would avoid galls. The girths should admit of two fingers between them and the horse's body and the skin beneath them should be carefully smoothed and freed from wrinkles.

BALUCHISTAN NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

PROCEEDINGS of a Meeting of the Baluchistan Natural History Society held in the Sandeman Library and McMahon Museum Building on the afternoon of 31st August 1911.

PRESENT: Members.—Major A. M. Anscomb, V.D. (in the chair), Mr. A. Anderson, Miss Anscomb, Mr. N. A. Golwalla, K. S. Marker, D. Ardeshir, Dr. Mohamlal, Mr. Shiawakshaw Pherozeshaw. Honorary Secretary.—Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

Read list of donations made to the Museum since the last Meeting, the objects themselves being passed round. Of these the most important were :—

Two fine leopard skins from Las Bela presented by the Jam.

Two hyæna skins from Las Bela presented by the Jam.

Read letter No. 904, dated 14th July 1911, from the Times' Supply Agency, London, stating that live singing thrushes can be had at 4s. 6d. per pair and blackbirds at 6s. 6d. (exclusive of carriage).

Resolved that further action in the direction of introducing these birds into Quetta be suspended pending the return of the Hon'ble Colonel Ramsay from Ziarat.

Read letter dated 14th July 1911 from Mr. Y. Geneau, Entomologiste au Museum, Avenue Eugene Harel, Nantes (France), stating that he would be glad if Members of the Baluchistan Natural History Society would kindly favour him with specimens of the genus Eurygaster (Ins. Hemipters), on the study of which he is at present engaged.

Read also D. O. letter dated 18th August 1911 from Major F. Wall, I.M.S., Almora, stating that, among the last lot of snakes sent to him for identification, there are two more of the variety which he at first referred to as Psammophis Schokari, but which on examination of the teeth in their maxillary he has now no hesitation in pronouncing a genuine new species.

Resolved that a description of the new species of snake be awaited.

Read letter dated 28th August 1911 from Captain E. Willis thanking the Members of the Society for electing him a Member and stating that during the present year he has, as late as the 17th August, seen see-see chicks no bigger than a golf ball and also many cheepers still among Chikor.

The Honorary Secretary next reminded the Members present of the return of birds on migration and asked for their assistance in securing specimens. He mentioned having seen in Quetta a European roller for the first time this autumn on 30th August 1911.

MODERN WHALING.

To those unfamiliar with the various species of whales it may seem curious that while whaling is being carried on by the Norwegians in various parts of the world, inclusive of the British Isles, with greater activity than ever, the supply of whalebone continues to diminish, with a proportionate increase in the price of the comparatively small quantity that is annually put on the market. It might be suggested that modern whaling is concerned with whales that carry teeth in place of whalebone; but this is not the answer, for although sperm-whales are the object of pursuit at the new Bedford whaling-station in Massachusetts, and a few are killed from time to time in the Shetlands and elsewhere, the Norwegians hunt whalebone-whales. These are, however, almost exclusively rorquals and hump backs, which have the plates of whalebone so much shorter and so much less elastic than those of the so-called right whales, that they are of comparatively little value, even if they be of any practical use.

In the Atlantic or black right whale the plates of whalebone are commonly from 8 to 10 feet in length, and are worth about a couple of guineas each. They are still larger in the Greenland whale, in which those from the middle of the series may be from 10 to 12 feet long. The whalebone of this species is the most valuable of all, the number of pairs of plates being in some instances as many as 380, or even more. A full-grown Greenland whale should yield about a ton of whalebone, the present value of which is between £2,000 to £3,000, whereas three-quarters of a century ago the price ranged from £50 to £60. This enormous rise is due, of course, to the scarcity of the species, which has been well nigh exterminated by the Arctic whalers, as was the black whale in the North Atlantic by the Basques at a much earlier date.

The Basques, who were the first people to take up whaling in real earnest, used to hunt this species in the Bay of Biscay, with the result that its numbers became so reduced as to render its pursuit no longer profitable. For a long time the black whale was indeed believed to have become almost or quite extinct in the North Atlantic; but owing to the long rest it has enjoyed, it is now considerably on the increase, and during the last few years a considerable number of individuals have been taken by Norwegian whalers in the Shetlands and elsewhere.

Both kinds of right whale are comparatively short and bulkily built animals, with enormous heads, furnished with the above-mentioned long and slender plates of whalebone. They feed exclusively on minute molluscs, shrimps, etc., for the capture and retention of which on the huge tongue the straining machine formed by the long plates of whalebone is absolutely essential. The beautiful mechanism by which these plates are folded up as the whale slowly closes its ponderous jaws would take too long to describe on the present occasion. It may, however, be mentioned that a skeleton of the Greenland whale, with its two thousand pounds worth of whalebone in position, is one of the most urgent wants of the Natural History Museum at South Kensington; and it would be a thousand pities if such a specimen were not secured while there is yet time. Funds are, however, the main difficulty. Right whales, it may added, are comparatively slow-moving and sluggish creatures, which, in the old days, when they were not frightened half out of their liver by incessant pursuit in noisy steam-vessels, could be approached quite close, and killed without much difficulty by hand-thrown harpoons.

Very different, however, is the case with rorquals, or finners, as they are commonly called by English whalers, which are longer and more slenderly built, and swim at a far greater rate. They are, in fact, compared to right whales, "clipper built," and thus the greyhounds of the sea. Their heads are much smaller in proportion to their bodies than in right whales; and the sides of their lower jaws are not raised into great semi-circular walls, with a corresponding cutting away of the sides of the skull itself, in the manner characteristic of the latter, and essential for the accommodation of the 10 foot whalebone. In connection with their smaller and less specialised type of head, rorquals have short, broad, and triangular plates of whalebone. Although some of these whales feed on minute shrimps for some portion of their lives, when fully adult most, if not all, of them subsist on fishes ranging in size from sprats to mackerels; and for these a much less complex type of straining machine than that of the right whales will suffice. Moreover, in order that they may go "full steam ahead" when among a shoal of herrings and catch as many as possible without the necessity of slowing down for the purpose of swallowing their prey, their throats are provided with capacious collapsible pouches, formed, on the umbrella-principle, of stiff longitudinal rods connected by membrane. When contracted, these pouches are marked by longitudinal flutings in the skin, from which these whales take their Scandinavian name of rorqual. When a rorqual is fishing

RECENT LIBERAL ARRANGEMENT ENABLES EACH READER OF THE CALCUTTA "Indian Field" TO SECURE TEST HOROSCOPE FREE OF CHARGE.

Is there truly any significance to the seventh veil theory? What gift of talent or power enables Prof. Clay Burton Vance to peer inceptively into the lives of people and unfold the hitherto unknown mysteries of life? These are the problems that thousands of men and women are seeking to have explained. So great and far reaching has the renown of this great adept become known that his advice is being eagerly sought by scores of people in every part of the civilized world.

Among the many expressions of praise and opinions of his work, the following are fair examples:—

Mr. Robert C. Bewes writes:—"The powers of Prof. Vance are nothing short of miraculous. I was absolutely astonished by what I read." Miss Minnie Burnett says:—"This morning I have had another proof of the accuracy of your wonderful predictions." Mr. Lafayette Redditt writes:—"My reading received. With the greatest amazement I read, as step by step you outlined my life since infancy. I must admit that you are indeed a very remarkable man, and am glad you use your great gift to benefit your clients."

Arrangements have been made to give free test Horoscopes to all readers of the Calcutta "Indian Field," but it is especially requested that those who wish to avail themselves of this generous offer make application at once. If you want to know about your business, marriage, changes, occupation, friends, enemies or what to do to achieve success, simply send your full name, the date, month and year of your birth, and also state whether Mr., Mrs. or Miss. Send your letter to Prof. Clay Burton Vance, Suite 433, No. 14 Rue de Richelieu, Paris, France. If you wish you may enclose 6 annas (stamps of your own country) to pay postage, clerical work, etc. Please note that 2½ annas postage is required on letters posted to France. Do not enclose coins or silver in your letter.

the pouch expands in accordance with the bulk of fish taken; and after this the fish are, it may be presumed, swallowed at leisure. The blue rorqual, which grows to about 80 feet, is the largest of all whales.

In shape and colour the whalebone of the different rorquals varies considerably. In the blue species the plates form broad, blackish triangles. The common rorqual has them narrower, and slate-grey in colour, striped with yellow or brown; while in the smaller Rudolph's rorqual they are black with a curling white fringe, and in the lesser rorqual they are yellowish white.

To capture such racers with the old hand-harpoon was a practical impossibility, especially since, if struck, they are quite likely to turn on their pursuers and smash the boats. Moreover, as their whalebone is practically valueless and their yield of blubber relatively poor, rorquals were for the most part left alone in the old days of whaling, and they accordingly increased in numbers, and swarmed in almost every sea except the Arctic.

A day of reckoning was, however, to come, and at the present time the destruction of rorquals is so great and so rapid that fears of their extermination from some seas have been entertained. The doom of the rorqual is due to the Norseman, Sven Foyle, who early in the second half of last century invented the exploding and expanding harpoon, the latest form of which is a really terrible weapon.

The modern harpoon weighs about one hundredweight, and is so made that its iron shank fits the bore of the gun from which it is fired; the latter being mounted in the bow of the whaling vessel. Though the length of the shank runs a slot like the eye of a huge needle, in which travels an iron ring, carrying the line. The shank is hidden in the gun as far up as the front end of the slot; and just in front of this are four iron barbs attached by hinges to the shaft and held fast by a cord round their tips. After being fired, this cord is stripped off by the impact against the whale, when the four barbs spread out in the body of the latter directly the line becomes taut. A pointed cone is screwed on to the shaft in front of the barbs. This cone, which is of cast-iron and measures 14 inches in length, with a basal diameter of 8 inches, weighs about a dozen pounds and carries a charge and friction-fuse. This fuse is connected to a wire which, after passing through a hole in the nozzle of the shaft, is made fast to the cord holding the barbs. When the cord is snapped by the whale's flank, the fuse is fired and the bomb, buried deep in the monster's body, explodes.

With such a weapon a rorqual can be hit and killed at 30 or 40 yards' distance; and within 5 minutes of firing, the carcase will be hauled up alongside the whaler. In the old days of Greenland whaling the carcase was stripped of blubber and whalebone at sea and cast adrift; but the Norwegians utilise practically the entire whale, which after being rendered buoyant by the injection of steam, is towed to the whaling station, where it is hauled, tail-forwards, despite its weight of from 35 to 70 tons, by machinery up an inclined stepway to the flensing platform. After all the oil has been extracted from the flesh and bones by high-pressure steam in the metal cylinders in which they are treated, the solid residue is dried and ground up and sold as a fertiliser under the name of whale guano. The whalebone of the larger rorquals realises from £40 to £50 per ton, but that of the smaller kinds is worthless.

Humpbacks are shorter and more heavily built than rorquals, although perhaps, on account of the greater length of their flippers, nearly as rapid swimmers. In any case, they are just as difficult to catch; and they do not appear to have been regularly hunted previous to the use of explosive gun-fired missiles. The long flippers, black or piebald in colour, with serrated front edge, render them easy of recognition. The black whalebone is narrower than that of rorquals.

Of late years humpbacks have been regularly hunted—probably by Norwegians—off South and East Africa, where they abound.

In addition to stations on their own coasts, in the Shetlands, on the coast of Mayo and elsewhere in the Northern Hemisphere, the enterprising Norwegian is killing rorquals by the thousand off South Georgia and in other parts of the Antarctic Ocean. This fishery, we understand, is leased to Norwegians by the British Government; but unless proper means are taken for the restriction of the slaughter there is every probability that the golden goose will be killed. In other words, whaling will become no longer profitable; and when that time comes the whales will have a chance of recuperating. But this must be a long process, for whales, as a rule, are slow breeders; one calf being generally produced at a birth, although rorquals and humpbacks not infrequently have twins. As to the age at which whales breed, there is probably no authentic information; the same being the case with regard to the duration of pregnancy. In any case, however, the rate of increase must be comparatively slow; and it is certain that wherever whaling is practised with the energy characteristic of the Norwegian stations the rate of reproduction can bear no proportion to the destruction.

From all points of view this excessive slaughter is a mistake; and it is much to be desired that an international commission should be forthwith appointed and empowered to make enquiries as to the limits within which whaling can be carried on without danger of exterminating the species forming the object of pursuit, such enquiry—with legislation to follow—would be of little use if confined to stations under the jurisdiction of the British Government, as in such case the stations would merely be transferred to the domain of foreign powers.

That the Norwegians are entitled to all credit for the energy and enterprise with which they have established rorqual-hunting as an important branch of commerce cannot for a moment be denied. At the same time it cannot but be a matter for sincere regret that British subjects have been so supine as to let valuable industries of this nature be established on their own coasts without the slightest attempt to share in the enterprise and the profits. It is probably now too late for the British nation to wake up and establish whaling stations of its own on the home coasts as the Norwegians have occupied the best positions and enjoyed the pick of the harvest; but let us see to it that the same enterprising people do not establish whaling stations on the shores of the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean, or, at all events, not until British subjects have refused the chance.

THE SALSBURY ACETYLENE GENERATOR.

A new generator on distinctly novel lines has been introduced by Messrs. Salsbury Lamps, Limited, of Long Acre. The accompanying illustrations give an idea of its external appearance, and when it is stated that in the ordinary course of events there is only one removable part—and that for cleaning or recharging purposes one screw only has to be unscrewed slightly—it will be understood that a marked degree of simplicity has actually been attained. The generator is encased in a handsome polished mahogany cabinet, having a spring clasp lid and a lock-up door, which when closed prevents the tap from being moved either to the "on" or the "off" position.

The generator itself consists of a brass cylinder, the top portion of which forms the water-tank and the lower portion receives the carbide-container. The water-tank has a funnel top, provided with a filter, so that the tank can be filled with ease from an ordinary pail, without the trouble of removing any screw caps or the like. At the bottom of the water-tank is an umbrella-drip, which screws into the former.

The carbide-container or pot rests on a screw table, which raises the former up against the bottom of the tank, a gas-tight joint being made by means of a rubber washer. To charge the generator the door is unlocked, and the table supporting the carbide-container is lowered by screwing it down, and the latter removed. The container is then filled up to a mark with any kind of carbide, ordinary or coated, and again raised into position by screwing up the table, and on opening the lid of the cabinet water can be poured into the tank.

The generator is then ready for instant use, gas being automatically generated on turning on the water-tap, which is the lower one shown in the accompanying illustration. Gas is taken from the bottom of the water-tank through a purifier consisting of a coil of tubing within the tank itself, and led out through a tap at the top of the latter. From the generator, the gas is taken through brass piping to a distributor situated in front of the car. This latter system of piping, which is shown diagrammatically in the accompanying sketch, is permanently attached to the car, so that little or no trouble should be caused through faulty connections, etc.

MURREE HORSE SHOW.
Monday, 2nd October 1911.

After two postponements owing to bad weather the Murree Horse Show was successfully brought off last Monday. Entries were good and the judges—Surgeon-General Crofts, I.M.S., C.I.E., Colonel Edwards, Colonel Strange, Captain Lance, and Captain Gibbs—had no easy task in making their awards. The Northumberland Fusiliers were "At Home" and Lady Willcocks gave away the prizes. Prior to the distribution Major-General Young made a speech and in the name of all present thanked the Honorary Secretary, Captain Gordon, of the 5th Fusiliers, to whose tact, energy and talents the successful Gymkhanas of the past three years and the two Horse Shows had been entirely due. Lady Willcocks after the prizes had been given away presented Captain and Mrs. Gordon with a silver tea and coffee service, subscribed for by their many friends in and round Murree, in recognition of the many pleasant and sporting afternoons (including the gun club meetings) that Captain Gordon had arranged for them on the Gharial ground.

THE ORIGIN OF MAMMALS.

AMONG the papers read at the recent meeting of the British Association at Portsmouth, one of the most interesting was by Professor G. Elliot Smith, who took for his subject The Origin of Mammals. This may sound as dry as dust, but the Professor treated his subject in a popular manner; and as he has an excellent and impressive delivery, his audience was delighted. Even in print the lecture is full of interest.

It has, of course, been known for many years that mammals are derived from reptiles, although not, of course, from any of the existing groups of that class; the real ancestors being the carnivorous section of the long extinct mammal-like, or anomodont, reptiles of the Karru formation of South Africa. While fully accepting this reptilian origin, Professor Smith put the matter in a somewhat new light by emphasising the important part played by brain-development in mammalian evolution.

During what is known as the secondary period of geological history reptiles attained a wonderful development all over the globe, and were in fact the dominant land animals. They attained, moreover, such a development in the matter of bodily size as has never been equalled, let alone surpassed, before or since. But they lacked brain-power; the brains of even the biggest of them being inferior in size, and doubtless still more so in quality, to that of a fox. Consequently, they were in all probability sluggish in their movements, and had no "go-aheadiness" about them.

This lack of brain-power sealed their doom; for early in the secondary period the aforesaid anomodont reptiles, which may be regarded as the chosen people, gave rise to a warm-blooded opossum-like creature, which had within itself a progressive brain-capacity destined in the future to beat the reptiles all along the line, and to finally triumph over the whole creation in the shape of man himself, who, with the help of his ancestors, has literally trodden the reptile beneath his heel.

The African mammal-like reptiles, it appears, at an early stage in their career took a step in advance of their relations in other parts of the world by the development of powerful limbs; and it was this greater length of limb that gave them the initial start in the race. They no longer crawled on their bellies in alligator-fashion, but took to walking on their feet with the body well raised above the ground, and thus rendered possible the development of warm blood. All the characters distinguishing a mammal from a reptile are indeed nothing more than the direct results of this increased activity; and to this one step are due the soft flexible, hairy skin, the more freely movable jaws, the completely four-chambered heart, and the warm blood of the mammal.

How this fateful lengthening of limb took place naturalists generally confess themselves unable to guess. Perhaps it would help matters if they were to acknowledge it as directly due to the influence of a higher Power!

With this development there must also have arisen for the first time the distinctive structure of the outer layer of the mammalian brain, or, as it is called in scientific diction, the cerebral cortex. In fact the development of this type of brain-structure, the lengthening of the limbs, and the freeing of the skin from its crippling coat of scales and its conversion into a highly sensitive tactile organ, must all have taken place more or less concurrently.

The cortex of the brain having thus acquired the power of receiving tactile impressions and bringing them into correlation with impressions from the special sense-organs gave increased importance to the tactile sensibility of the ridges of skin between the scales of the higher mammal-like reptiles. At the same time more exact regulation of the movements of the limbs became practicable as they were brought, so to speak, into telegraphic communication with the brain, owing to the better development of the nervous system. Finally, the scales disappeared, and gave place to hair.

"It is such developments as these," said Professor Smith at the conclusion of his lecture, "that made the mammals what we know them to be, that gave them their dominant position and their plasticity, or power of rapid adjustment to varying environment."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Tollygunge Club will hold two Gymkhana race meetings next month, the first on the 18th and the second on the 25th proximo, the Calcutta First Extra being fixed for the Saturday following.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—There was not a very large attendance on Saturday for the Tenth Extra, and those who missed it lost a chance as in six of seven events the public were not far off the correct goods. Only a couple of days' racing remains and the poorer class are getting their say, though many scratchings in some instances seems to suggest that certain owners have made their gram bills. It was decidedly cooler and more pleasant on the course after a very hot spell.

Two races were made of a Welter Maiden Plate, the class which has meant so much diversity of opinion recently. The first of these opened the card, Makeb being favourite on his last run from Secretary, Verney and Golden Day. The favourite is not good at the gate, and was again poorly away, Verney once more shewing the way from Golden Day and Secretary. At the turn the last named came outside and passed the others, Makeb and Sir Edward then coming through only to be held safe.

Turning to the other division, Ordinary and Magistrate were the pick, but a good deal of money came late for Turkish General. The first two were too badly away to do any good, Turkish General flashing past War Eagle to lead like a winner in the straight. It looked all over, but a furlong from home, Mars was seen to be dangerous, and in the finish proved himself the better stayer.

But four went out for the Epsom Plate, a strong call coming for Malmsey, but he went out less hot than Paul Pry. Chivalry once more was quickest away in a good start, but within the first furlong Malmsey came along the rails clear in the lead, Paul Pry later dropping in next. The latter with Pincher outside put in their runs from the turn, but Malmsey had something in reserve and was able to go away as he did when winning nearly two months ago, though it has taken a long time to reproduce that form.

Again in the Matheran Plate, there was a small field, six only starting out of a dozen, and open betting favouring Baloz from Gafal, Prime Minister and Singer. Grey Falcon ran a fair race in front all the way till the final straight, where Singer assumed command. Zinfandel had a bad run, but Baloz found an opening, and a great race ensued. They were at it neck and neck, Baloz again staying out solidly and placing the seal on his consistency.

An interesting race was seen for the Eastern Plate over the Governor's Cup distance, the winner of that race, Zinfandel, being confidently expected by his connections, Valens next from Thaboor and Sir Hugo. The remaining one, Terror, was taken out to make the pace, going half-a-dozen lengths in front from Thaboor with Sir Hugo next. Zainulmulook and Valens together were first to go after the leader and at the three furlongs had passed him in that order. With a handy lead on facing for home, Zainulmulook was able to stay on, and after a desperate race, Valens kept second place from Sir Hugo. Mr. Ali bin Talib thus brought off a good double, an example followed by the H. H. the Kour Saheb.

The smallest field went out in the Selling Plate, there being only three. Betting was very open favouring Meazer till at the close a run came on Lama, sending him out favourite. These two led together, but near the turn Meazer fell away and was eased up—having broken down. Here Grey Falcon came gamely, but his previous outing told its tale, and Lama was able to hold him quite safe.

Seven went for the Newbury Plate, there being a close thing between Haut Park and Bull's Run for favouritism, Lancasterite next in demand. To begin with, Lancasterite was left, Mr. Goculdas' new one, Picnic, making a fairly hot pace for half a mile, when condition told and Bull's Run ran into the lead from Haut Park and Gallileo. The leader now was full of running and the race was his. Gallileo came well, and was returned as having beaten Haut Park, a decision which owing to the closeness was disputed by many onlookers. So gradually has the winner run himself into form, and so easily did he win that he must be pretty useful.

Three was a fairly long programme again on Saturday with seven events and the punters dropped back again into trouble, as with fairly open betting all through, they only scored in the initial event Ferguson was again to the fore with winning twice, as did Hoyt but Brown has been off the mark for some time, being unwell, and did not accept as many mounts as usual. We conclude on Monday, and though the books have been anticipating some "rods in pickle" nothing really hot has come to light yet.

Three great rivals figured in the opening race, which being a mile was thought a good thing for Grand Duke, favourite by this reduced distance as compared to Parliament and Sir Hugo, Baloz was meeting a much better class than before, and naturally could do no good, Terror making the running from Grand Duke for five furlongs, when the latter went away. Parliament and Sir Hugo gave chase, but as anticipated it was too short for them and the leader when ridden was able to stay on.

Secondly a very poor class in the Auction Plate, so poor that there was no bidding after it. Golden Day has run consistently well up of late and was consequently favourite, but a strong run came on Framroz with Six Fifty next in demand, as he was reported left the last time. The early stages suggested that the race rested between Golden Day, Framroz and Takte Jamshed, but at the turn the latter fell away and Framroz leading crossed Golden Day. Papa now came up well, but in the last furlong Six Fifty had them all settled.

The Consolation Plate was very open, Lord Merv soon warming to favouritism and Malmsey expanding with money for Haut Park and Picturesque, Lord Carlyon also not friendless. It was a pretty race, Metal Girl and Lord Merv leading, then Picturesque taking it up as far as the distance. Here Lord Merv came up again all on the outside and just had the chesnut settled when suddenly Haut Park whipped through a lucky opening on the rails and beat them both. The winner was distinctly lucky to get through whereas Lord Merv had the worst of the run, coming the longest way round.

The Arab Consolation was divided, the first having eleven with Minerva at 5 to 2 and next being Little Lolly at 6's, then Peter Pan, the Karachi owner pony, and Pendil. This rested between three, Kaharaman leading out to be passed by Pendil till on entering the straight Peter Pan came through. He appeared to have the race won, but when kept to his work with a couple from the whip he swerved towards the tan and finished on it. The result was that Pendil got up again by a neck, whereas Kaharaman was close after being crossed by Peter Pan when he went out.

In the mile for maidens the top weight, Bushoosh, was made favourite from Submit and Ghalyum, but two less well backed ones beat all these. Avis made the pace till at the five Ghalyum came out and seemed to be going very well, but chucked it up in the final straight, where Bushoosh came into the lead. Mexico also drew up outside, and being a resolute stayer eventually won with something to spare, Sir Edward putting in too late a run, though he pipped the favourite for second place.

Unfortunately out of ten, only three went out in the October Plate, and punters were so divided in their opinions that there was very little in the odds quoted, Gallileo and Solution at 6 to 4 and Pincher 2's. This was a good thing for Pincher, who made all his own running three lengths clear of Solution and stayed out Gallileo's challenge at the end.

Last the second of the divided race, 4's quoted about the field. Maimoon and Dilerjung first fancies. Creditor was first out, but soon gave way to Shihab and he in turn to Makeb. This one could not stay past the distance, where Dilerjung had him settled but at the death Creditor came with a fast run and could have won by more than a mere head. Maimoon was never in it, Fado beating Prince of Wales for place money. Sirkar came down, quite near the post, and his rider fortunately got off unhurt.

We had an evening's boxing on Saturday in an enclosure fixed up on the Volunteer ground, this being got up for an Australian boxer Ray King who was down to meet Makins of the N. Lancs for the Light Weight Championship of Western India.

ESTABLISHED 1742.

Captain Leaky acted as Referee with Mr. Ben Depreece as time-keeper and a fair number attended a programme muchly curtailed by knock outs.

On appearing in the ring, King looked by no means fit and can scarcely be fairly judged on this shewing as his advisers know very little of the game, whereas Makins could not have been harder. They allowed hitting in holds when one arm was free, so in the early part there was a good deal of this. In the second round, however, the soldier got in some telling rights and the end was near. From then Ray King went down repeatedly till in the fourth round he had to take the count.

There were three other fights, the first being the only one to go all the way, this between Pte. Parr, N. Lancs, and Drummer Moane, Dorsets. Parr was much the quicker and scoring at the start won on points. Pte. Warner, Warwick, made a game show against a more experienced fighter in Pte Kinnard, N. Lancs, but in the third the latter landed a right on the jaw and settled it.

Lastly plenty of free hitting between Pte. Wingfield, N. Lancs, and Pte. Rowlands, Dorsets. In the first round Wingfield shewed to be the harder hitter, and after going down several times in the second round Rowlands was counted out in the next.

The Poona racing season came to an end with the Twelfth Extra Meeting on Monday. Next week we will publish the usual resume and statistics.

The Polo Tournament at Cawnpore for the Cooper Allen Cup has been postponed till January on account of an insufficient number of entries.

The Board of Control has appointed Mr. Clement Hill captain and Messrs. Iredale, Hill and McAlister selectors of the Australian eleven.

Calcutta Rugby players will regret to hear that Mr. C. G. Arthur, captain of the C.F.C. Rugby team last year, had the misfortune to break his ankle while recently taking part in a game at Anniesland.

Some time back the Englishman suggested at the Calcutta Cricket Club and the other leading Clubs in the city should arrange a series of matches with teams from all parts of India. It appears the suggestion has met with some support in Bombay, says a Poona paper, as the Parsee graduates of the Elphinstone College, who are by the way, great players of the game, intend visiting Calcutta. The team includes two European Professors of the College and some of the players in the Parsee Presidency team besides other Parsee graduates of the Elphinstone College. The side is an exceptionally strong one. The team leaves Bombay about the beginning of December. A tour in Northern India has been arranged. The Parsee players expect to play matches at Allahabad, Cawnpore, Lucknow and Benares. They will be in Calcutta on or about the 26th December next. There should be no difficulty in arranging fixtures in Calcutta. Probably, the Calcutta Cricket Club will play them and other Clubs will also enter the field. The Parsees should give a good account of themselves. The team includes Mulla, a member of the All India Cricket team now playing in England, Chothia, Antia, Watcha and Kapadia, all good cricketers besides others. If the Calcutta Cricket Club and Ballygunge accept the challenge of the Elphinstone College Cricket Team, others would follow suit. The Rangers might play them also, and the Dalhousie team as well. Mr. N. F. Nalladaroo of Messrs. F. P. Nalladaroo and Co., Canning Street, is arranging fixtures for the Parsees, and will give all the necessary information to the clubs willing to play the visitors.

In case, it is found impossible for all the clubs to play the Parsees separately it may perhaps be necessary to select the pick of the Calcutta cricket teams. The Y.M.C.A., the Dalhousie, the Rangers and one or two other teams might place a strong combination against the visitors in the field.

The contest for the 130 yards running championship of the world occurred between Charles E. Holway of Massachusetts (U.S.A.) and Jack Donaldson of Bendigo (V.), on the grass track at the Sydney Sports Ground on Saturday, 23rd September, and was won by Donaldson in 12secs., which is a world's record. The previous best was W. Johnson's 12½secs., which was accomplished on a cinder track on 9th February 1897. The track was remeasured immediately after the race by the timekeepers and was found to be 4 inches more than the proper distance. The race was run in conjunction with a carnival arranged by the New South Wales Rugby League in the presence of a large attendance. During an interval Holway appeared on the track and trotted half-way around, then sprinted over the full distance, and afterwards walked carefully over the course. Donaldson came out later and looked in perfect condition. He ran through with a splendid stride. His beautiful arm and leg movement was most marked. The track had been specially prepared for the contest, and although rain had fallen during Friday night the sun shone warmly, and the course was in good order. The ground had a slight rise at the start and sloped gradually at the finish. Donaldson was the first out, clad in his famous blue costume. Holway was on the track some minutes later, and both did a short break. The men shook hands and got off to a splendid start. Donaldson was the first to show out, and running with perfect action, increased his lead. Holway struggled gamely, but made no impression on Donaldson, who won by four yards in 12secs.—10 yards inside even time. There was a slight breeze in favour of the runners.

The Polo Tournament at Mysore during Dussera week attracted five entries and opened on the 6th instant when two games were played. In the first "A" Team Local Service Lancers defeated "A" Team Imperial Service by 9 goals to nil and in the other the Mysore Gymkhana beat "B" Team Local Service Lancers by 6 goals to nil. On Saturday the Local Service Lancers "A" Team beat Imperial Service Lancers "B" Team by 6 goals to 3 and the final on Monday, the 9th instant, between the Mysore Gymkhana and the Local Service Lancers "A" Team ended in a win for the latter by 6 goals to 2.

Nineteen and a half couple of foxhounds arrived in Madras on the 9th instant by the Clan Robertson. Twenty couple were selected by Mr. H. N. C. Campbell, the late master and were shipped under charge of the chief officer. One died in the Red Sea, but the rest landed in exceptionally good condition, which reflects great credit on the chief officer. The pack is a very level lot. It is expected they will be ready to commence hunting during the first week of November. The Committee has made extensive alterations at the kennels, and precaution is being taken to guard against tick disease which has wrought havoc in Madras in past seasons. The horn will be carried by Major T. H. Symons, I.M.S., with Captain C. A. J. Annesley and Mr. J. P. Cunliffe whipping in.

The Open Tennis Tournament at Simla came to a conclusion on the 16th instant with the final in the Men's Double when Major Black and G. M. Coates beat Dr. E. R. Gray and Mr. E. P. Jones by 3 sets to nil. Lady Hardinge was present and gave away the various prizes. Men's Singles :—Kunwar Maharaj Singh. Mixed Doubles :—Kunwar Maharaj Singh and Bibi Amrit Kour. Men's Doubles :—Major Black and G. M. Coates.

We have to thank the proprietors of the Times of India Illustrated Weekly for an advance copy of their Christmas Number—the first Christmas Number to come to hand this year. Beautifully got up, the publication is a striking example of what can now be done in India in the way of art printing. In addition to some interesting articles it contains numbers of excellent photographs, plain, tinted and in sepia, and has, besides, two very fine coloured plates in the three colour—process. The issue is even a big improvement on that of 1910 and as that of last year ran out of print immediately on publication, this year an edition of 100,000 copies has been printed—by far the largest issue of any paper in the East. Over 60 tons of art paper have been consumed and we are informed

The news wired out by Reuter that Johnson had declined to box Wells in Paris was doubtless a disappointment to many followers of the noble art. No reasons have been given for the calling off of the match and we await details with interest. The mail papers to hand, in addition to columns of discussion on the prohibition of the contest in Great Britain, published a statement that Johnson intended to retire from the ring and after completing his music hall contracts would not again appear as a fighter. He proposes to relinquish his title of world's heavy weight champion and he would name his successor from the best five best men available who would have to meet each other. The heavy weight title has for a long time been a subject of controversy and we hardly think that this method of disposing of the belt will meet with general approval.

May Wells, the English light weight champion, gave another fine exhibition of his science on the 20th September, when he met Abe Attell in the presence of over 7,000 spectators at Madison Square Gardens, New York. It was generally conceded that Wells being heavier than his opponent stood a good chance of winning with a knock out punch, but it was thought that on points Abe would probably prove his master. As it happened, however, Wells never once tried for a knock out. He was quite content to box Attell in his own style and to show that he had no desire to rely on his extra weight. The Englishman proved himself the master of the wonderful Hebrew in almost every round and at the close it was unanimously agreed that the bout was the most interesting, the fastest and the cleverest seen around New York for over ten years. Attell pulled out all his tricks, tried every little wrinkle he knew, but he was nevertheless outclassed by Wells, whose left jab kept finding Abe's nose whenever he appeared to want to plant it there.

The 21st annual mounted sports of the Bombay Gymkhana were held on the 10th, 12th and 14th instant on the Marine Lines Maidan and were most successful. The entries showed a falling off on those of last year and the attendance of spectators was not as big but the meeting was favoured with tip top weather, the arrangements could not have been improved upon, while the standard of horsemanship was higher than usual. Results of the three days' programmes will be found below. An accident to Mr. J. L. Thomson marred the proceedings on the first day. While taking part in the V. C. race his mount came down and rolled on him, Thomson having to the removed to hospital with a broken leg. At the conclusion of the sports the Hon. Mr. Justice Russell made a short speech and Mrs. Powys Lane distributed the prizes. The Steuart Cup for the highest number of points scored during the big meeting went to Meikle 40 points, Moore coming in a good second with 38 points. The ladies' aggregate prize for the highest number of points scored throughout the season went to Mrs. McCausland and the gentlemen's aggregate prize was carried off by Pearson, Knight Bruce securing the second aggregate prize.

An extraordinary case of death from hydrophobia, caused by the bite of a fox, was investigated in Wiltshire on the 23rd September at a Coroner's inquest upon the body of Mr. Richard Bower of Crockerton, Warminster, the master of the South and West Wilts Foxhounds.

From the evidence of a relative it was clear that some months ago Mr. Bower was bitten on the hand through a thick woollen glove by a hunted fox at the end of a run at the close of last season. Mr. Bower dismounted from his horse to break up the fox, and as he drove back the hounds and held the fox he was bitten by the animal. A hunt servant who was present at the time stated at the inquest that Mr. Bower made no complaint then about the bite. Later, however, Mr. Bower mentioned the matter casually to friends.

Medical evidence was given by Dr. Robert Lewis Willcox, who attended during the last illness. Mr. Bower, he said, became ill on Monday last and died on Thursday night at eleven o'clock. Not until Wednesday evening at six o'clock—twenty-eight hours before death—were any signs of hydrophobia manifest. Then, however, the symptoms showed, and the patient suffered from fever and great weakness.

It was almost impossible for him to swallow, and he had great difficulty in breathing. Paralysis of the muscles of the jaw ensued, with paroxysms. The patient suffered terribly. In conjunction with three other medical practitioners Dr. Wilcox was convinced, after his clinical examination, that the complaint was hydrophobia. During the interval between the time he was bitten and his death Mr. Bower had been in excellent health.

A contemporary tells a curious story of an American millionaire who is the lessee of a big grouse moor in Scotland. After nearly three weeks' experience of the unaccustomed sport, this American visitor found that even with the help of the large house-parties that he had been entertaining, he was unable to slay the vast multitudes of grouse which he understood the moor yielded in an average year. And the present season, he understood, was above the average. His own and his guests' lack of skill was therefore likely to stand out in glaring prominence in the eyes of his Scottish and English acquaintances. But natural resource has come to his rescue—natural resource combined with the commercial resources of the wholesale market. The Daily Mirror, from which we cull the item, has been recently informed that the wealthy visitor had recently placed an order for 1,000 brace of grouse to be delivered to him in consignments at his Scottish retreat. Buying on this large scale they cost him little more than 1s. 3d. apiece, and for this modest price he will be able to dispatch to his friends what is ostensibly the produce of his highly-rented moor and the result of his sporting skill. It is understood that to save freight from Scotland to London and back, the enterprising poulterer who has received the order will arrange a kind of Scottish "grouse clearing house"—a certain proportion of the game consigned to him from various moors being "held up" at Perth and Aberdeen and reshipped from these depôts.

Chrystall-Tait.—At the Church of St. John's, Notting Hill, on the 14th instant, by the Rev. Neville Dundas, Vicar, Andrew Chrystall, Tea Planter, Amluckie, Assam, to Edith Marguerite (Doonie), eldest daughter of James Geddes Tait, M.R.C.V.S., of S. Alban's, Christchurch, Hants (by cable).

London Week by Week.

Friday, 29th September 1911.

Hydrophobia again! Not only the fox-hunting world, but the general public have this week been thrown into something like consternation over the report of the terribly sad death of Mr. Bower, the Master of the South and West Wilts, details of which I am sending for a paragraph in your Sporting and Athletic Notes. The incident arouses some very serious reflections. You good people in India take your rabid village pie dog or jackal at most as a matter of course; but we in England have been for years hugging ourselves in the assurance that rabies had been absolutely stamped out. Now in this unfortunate case I fear the medical evidence leaves no room for doubt that this good sportsman died of genuine hydrophobia contracted through the bite of a fox. Our doctors are, or used to be, familiar with the pseudo-hydrophobia from which nervous people who have been bitten by suspected dogs have frequently died. But there does not seem to be the smallest reason to suppose that Mr. Bower's case was one of this sort or of that kind of blood-poisoning which is not uncommonly communicated by the bite of a wild animal accustomed to feed on flesh. If, as we are compelled to assume, Mr. Bower died of genuine hydrophobia, it would seem that there is still the nidus of that dreadful disease left in England. We had all hoped that by Mr. Walter Long's stringent Muzzling Order, and by the elaborate system of quarantine established at our ports, the disease had been completely eradicated. Evidently, however, this is a mistake, and the immediate re-imposition of the Muzzling Order in the affected country, and the rigorous destruction of all foxes within its boundaries, seems imperatively called for. It is, we know, a serious thing to put a stop for even one season to the foxhunting in such a sporting county as Wilts, and it is only to be justified by the most pressing necessity. But when one thinks of what hydrophobia is, and of the infection which this fox may have spread, it does not seem too much to ask.

So the ignorant effrontery of the clergymen has triumphed and the Wells-Johnson boxing contest will not be held in England. In common with thousands of others, the fact that the fixture is off finds me unmoved, for from the outset I never regarded it as a genuine affair. To me its conditions as a sporting match made practically no appeal, it was without any real interest; but that the papers should have lent their columns to the publication of miles of drivel penned by persons whose complete ignorance of the subject was only equalled by their colossal self-conceit was lamentable to the last degree.

The question as to whether the meeting should take place was practically decided yesterday in the negative in an unexpected manner. As the result of an application of the freeholders of Earl's Court in the High Court, Mr. Justice Lush granted them an interlocutory injunction restraining Earl's Court, Limited, from contravening the provisions of the lease. The High Court, in other words, decided that the owners of the freehold were right in their contention that this fight might endanger their license. The fight, therefore, could not take place at Earl's Court, but the decision did not prevent it being held elsewhere in London.

The grounds on which Mr. Justice Lush gave his judgment are of extreme importance. He held that the proposed fight was not a mere boxing match, in which two men spar for points and the one who obtains the highest score wins. That type of match could take place without the least objection. But the Wells-Johnson fight, he ruled, differed from a boxing match in several respects. The amount of money at stake was out of the common. The fight, thanks to the busy-bodies aforesaid, had attracted general notoriety, and the combatants differed greatly in skill. There was also the question of colour. With the moral issue he naturally did not deal, as the application was a civil one and purely concerned with the rights of property.

This decision, of course, in no way affected the police court proceedings against the two men for a contemplated breach of the peace. This case began on Wednesday, was part heard and adjourned till to-day; but yesterday the men appeared in Court, and having declared that they would not fight in England, the summons was adjourned sine die, and so the wretched business ends. Possibly they will meet in Paris.

Mr. Maurice Bandmann, who has been recently interviewed by the reporter of some ha'penny rag, has been talking a fair amount of nonsense. Unless India has changed vastly during the last four years the theatrical enterprise which holds out the best promise of financial success is good light comedy produced by companies of the calibre of the dear old Brough's or a "leg show" with musical trimmings. Shakespeare, at least so far as the British public is concerned, is surely as dead as mutton? I remember many attempts—aye and by really good companies—to give us Shakespeare during my thirty years' residence in India, and every one failed, and badly at that. Yet here is Mr. Bandmann stating that "Shakespeare magic and musical comedy pay best in India." He adds that "the Indian playgoer goes to the theatre with his copy of Shakespeare in his pocket, and his most severe criticism is that the English make cuts in the plays." By "Indian playgoer" of course Mr. B. means the Aryan Brother. Well there may be a soupçon of truth in this, but the Aryan Brother—in the Calcutta of my day—was not conspicuous at the theatres patronised by Europeans, preferring rather to revel in the provender to be found at the "Emerald" and the "Star" in his own beloved and odoriferous native quarter of the town, where "Sakuntala" by Bose's Company had infinitely more attraction for him than "Macbeth," even by Bandmann, at the Theatre Royal, Chowringhee. But perhaps the enterprising Bandmann now caters for the Aryan Brother and runs shows in the native town: if he does, of course he ought to know and he fully deserves any success that comes his way!

A scribe in an evening paper has "dropped into poetry" over Bandmann's interview as thus:—

Lo, the poor Indian, whose untutored mind
Bids him not leave Immortal Will behind?
His eager eyes glued to the printed page,
Nought but the whole play will his thirst assuage.

"Great Scott," he cries, "what do these actors mean?
Here they leave out a speech, and there a scene.
Would they impose upon the poor Hindoo?
Let's raise our voices in a thunderous 'Boo!'"

Not like his English brother of to-day,
Fobbed off with only portions of a play,
The Indian demands his proper whack;
And, failing that, he gets his money back.

Charming! The word might have been coined with a view to the provision of an absolutely apt description of "Rip Van Winkle," this week's production at the Playhouse. Mr. Austin Strong, the author, and Mr. Cyril Maude, the producer, have laid loving hands on the rare old tale, and have succeeded in modernising it without sacrificing much of its original quaintness. Like "Peter Pan," this rejuvenated "Rip" is almost enough to make one believe again in fairies; and for that reason it should form an ideal Christmas attraction at the popular Playhouse. Mr. Strong and Mr. Maude, with the artful aid of Messrs. Maskelyne and Devant, have embroidered the Washington Irving story with many new inventions in the way of narrative and scenery. A new and appealing love interest is ingeniously introduced, and the scenic effects are extraordinarily realistic.

A remarkable feature of this interpolated love interest is the work allotted to Mrs. Cyril Maude (Miss Winifred Emery) and her daughter, Margery Maude. The heroine, Rip's sweetheart, Minna, is played by Miss Margery Maude in the earlier scenes, while in the later episodes on Rip's reappearance fifty years afterwards, Miss Winifred Emery represents Minna, now a sweet, snowy-haired old lady. And Mr. Cyril Maude makes love in turn to his daughter and his wife—first as the rapscallion Rip, and then as Rip grown old and doddering, but still in love with Minna, and by Minna still beloved. The acting delights of the play are, however, somewhat subordinated to the scenic. It is the pictorial side of "Rip" that will make the town talk.

Messrs. Hemsley and Bruce Smith's realisation of the spectre-haunted Katskill Mountains is wonderful. The lighting effects, too—in which the Maskelyne touch is apparent—convey with magical vividness the sense, the suspense, the stupor of the supernatural.

The genii of the Katskills are delightful—the bearded mannikins in their sugar-loaf hats, bathed in mystic green lights emanating from nowhere; the dancing, diaphanous spirits; the weirdly whispering ghosts of Hendrick Hudson's doomed crew, writhing and shuddering in their eternal torment. There is music also; unceasing strains, rippling and moaning and sighing; the veritable voices of the winds amid the trees, looming darkly on the craggy, haunted Katskills.

Mr. Maude's Rip entirely took the fancy of his audience. True, his Dutch-American dialect is not as perfect as it might be, but he will improve on that. As young Rip—that picturesque, irresistible never-do-well—he is lovable and fascinating; and as old Rip emerging from his half-century's sleep, he presents an astonishing study in decrepit senility. The actor catches the breath of his audience in the supreme moment where Rip rises from his long, long slumber and finds his beard grown to his knees, flowers growing in his clothes, and a bird nesting in his hat. Miss Winifred Emery and Miss Margery Maude as Minna young and old are like everything else in the play—charming; and Mr. Shiel Barry gives a brilliant little sketch of the shrieking old miser of the mountains.

There was the interest of novelty attached to the production of the comic opera "Bonita" at the Queen's Theatre on Saturday night. The author, Mr. Warham Peacock, and the composer, Mr. Harold Fraser-Simson, were new to comic opera; some of the cast had been brought over from comedy without music; and—perhaps most interesting of all—Mr. Granville Barker, that staunch disciple of the "new drama" had come forward to produce what every supposed disciples of the "new drama" to regard as so much tomfoolery.

The outcome was a successful production within certain limits—a conscientious endeavour to provide genuine comic opera, as opposed to the hybrid called musical comedy, which resulted in a piece more operatic than comic; scenic effects and stage grouping that were of striking beauty; music that was prettily melodious, if not particularly original; something of Gilbert, something of Sullivan, without the old Savoy touch; a cast of many excellencies: and a performance at once bright, tuneful, and picturesque, and well deserving of success.

The opera is divided into a prologue, period 1810; and "the play," period the present day: and the scene is laid in Portugal—a country hitherto untapped, we believe, for purposes of comic opera. The story proper would be quite understandable if the prologue were omitted altogether, but it at least serves to introduce a delightful scenic effect—an outpost beyond Bussaco, with the white Portuguese houses and the sea horizon suggesting space and distance—a scene treated with imagination, even with poetry. And the opening was entirely novel. It struck a note of tragedy, with the death of a British officer, shot in an outpost fray just after bidding adieu to his Portuguese bride.

After the prologue the play runs on conventional comic opera lines. The great-grandson of the officer—himself Lieutenant Arthur Mannerton—is heir to the property of the dead man if his cousin Bonita is not alive; and in search of her he comes to Portugal. Of course, the pair fall in love at first sight; of course, Bonita has been promised by her father to the comic villain, Frederico, a shady lawyer; and, of course, all difficulties are eventually smoothed away.

The book, as we have hinted, is not remarkable for wit; and a weakness is that in the second act the principal pair of lovers are left very much out in the cold, while the stage is occupied by a secondary couple, whose affairs have little to do with the plot; but on the whole the piece hangs very well together. And, after all, there really is a plot.

Most of the comic spirit came from Mr. Lionel Mackinder, who gave a very clever, very diverting burlesque performance as Frederico. Mr. Walter Wheatley, as the young Lieutenant, sang finely, but his acting lacked spontaneity; Miss Clara Evelyn was a handsome and sweet-voiced Bonita; Mr. Charles Maude, who has done such good work recently at the Haymarket, entered admirably into the atmosphere of comic opera, and actually came out as a singer, while good service was rendered by Mr. Fred Volpe, Miss Edith Clegg, and Miss Thelma Raye.

MADRAS.

Sir John Hare has chosen for his return to the stage a play in which he bears but a subsidiary part. But it is a part which employs to the full his quiet and refined powers and it is one which reveals him as a gentle, philosophical, yet worldly wise old fellow whose counsels bring peace to the married life of a beloved niece. "The Marionettes" of M. Pierre Wolff, which Miss Gladys Unger, with characteristic sense of the dramatic fitness of things, has made every attempt in her adaptation to preserve in its proper atmosphere, tells an old stage story effectively, and in the telling gives opportunity to two of our younger players which they seize with confidence and success. A quiet yet really shrewd country mouse has been taken to wife by the rakish Marquis de Monclars as a marriage of convenience. Tired of his spendthrift ways, his mother gave him the alternative between marriage and comparative beggary, and Fernande, although she has found something in her husband which is adorable, is seen by him in all the unalluring contrast with the women of his undesirable set. He makes no attempt to conceal his aversion, so far forgets himself as to tell her exactly what he thinks, and goes off to seek consolation in the Alps.

Fernande has not been idle in his absence. She has speedily realised that the only way to gain his affection is to fashion herself on the lines of the women he knows, and when he returns, only five weeks later, he finds her radiant in the latest mode, instead of dowdy in her country attire, the admired of all admirers, and what is more, the possessor of a lover. The spell soon begins to work, and jealousy sets going those springs of affection which had hitherto lain unaffected. The best scene in "The Marionettes" is the third act. The husband comes home late at night to find his wife engaged on the telephone with her ardent admirer, and in his now mad jealousy he goes very near to killing her. But even his violence is balm to the heart of Fernande; she sees in this outburst the first proof of his love, and, although later she is inclined to falter in her task of bringing him to her side, the counsels of the kindly and wise old uncle keep her to her purpose, and all ends as happily as can be.

It is only fair to add that this bare outline gives no idea of the spirit and charm with which the story is told, attributes which are in no sense wanting in the acting of Miss Marie Lohr as the Marquise Fernande de Monclars. The emotions she is called upon to portray sound a deeper note than any character with which this young actress has been associated, and the way in which she expressed the feelings, first of the shy and diffident young wife, and then of the transformed woman roused to do battle for her marital happiness, proved how rapidly she is gaining strength and skill in her art. Not less worthy of praise was the Marquis of Mr. Arthur Wontner in what it need hardly be said was an ungrateful part. He never obscured his breeding even when he had to play the cad. Mr. Godfrey Tearle, as the ardent admirer of the Marquise, acted with all-convincing warmth, and Mr. C. M. Lowne gave an admirable study as a middle-aged and light-hearted general lover. There was, it need hardly be added, a cordial welcome for Sir John Hare, while the play was received with an enthusiasm which is likely to be repeated for many nights to come.

"MODERN POLO"

THAN Captain E. D. Miller, D.S.O., until recently assistant polo manager at Hurlingham, a player of world wide experience, and one of the three famous brothers of that name of whom George and Charles D did much towards Eaton's success in the Champion Cup tournament last July, no man is better qualified to write a book on the game of which he is such a fine exponent.

"Modern Polo" of which he is the author, and which has just been published by Hurst and Blackett, Limited (16) simply teems with information concerning the fashionable pastime, and old players and novices alike will find it a most interesting work, especially the latter, for the new book contains much useful advice on how to become a polo player, how to choose a polo pony and the training and management of same, while in addition the author deals with polo as played all over the world.

"If polo increases in England and Ireland during the next twenty years at the same rate as it has done since 1891" says Captain Miller, "in a retrospect every country district will have its polo club as it has its pack of hounds.

The year 1909 marks a great epoch in English polo, for in that year it received a great blow to its pride in its defeat at the hands of the American team. 'This' he says 'will probably prove a blessing in disguise for these fine players have shown us to improve our game, and have taught us methods that we knew nothing about before.'

"As a result of this" the author continues "we have begun to put our house in order, and have decided to do away with the Recent Form List and to adopt the handicap system which has long been in vogue in America."

In future, as in golf, every polo player will have his handicap, which will be revised twice a year. "This will" he thinks "have the effect of making more level matches, and it will prove an incentive to players to improve their game and so raise their handicaps."

Captain Miller is of the opinion that there are many more fairly good players in India than in England, and says that faster games can generally be obtained there than in the majority of the country grounds in Great Britain. The reason of this he says, is that the game is easier to play in India than in the Mother Country; because the grounds are hard, true, and level, and the ponies are smaller and easier to ride than English ponies.

In England the grounds when hard are often rough and bumpy, owing to their having been cut up in wet weather. After rain they are frequently so heavy that it requires much skill to hit the ball well. Therefore, although English ponies have more speed than Indian ones, the ball travels faster and easier in India, and players are continually trying to overtake the ball at full pace, instead of steadying for it as in England. Consequently, there are fewer pauses and scrimmages, the ball is not so often missed, and the game as a rule is faster and better.

Of course, Captain Miller here refers to second class polo, which, after all, is what one usually meets with in both countries.

In a lengthy chapter on the "no offside" game as played in America the author puts forward arguments for and against in as unbiased a manner as possible, but he does not pose as an authority on the American game, as he says his experience is confined to a month's polo in the United States in the spring of last year, and some twenty matches in England during the season just concluded.

The arguments he uses are partly the result of his own experiences, but chiefly the result of discussions with British and American players who have taken part in games under both codes extensively. Which is the best game for England, India and the Colonies, he is not prepared to say. "I am, however, quite certain," he concludes "that the American game is a very good one if properly played by good players.

"In England in really bad polo it does not seem to make much difference except that No. 1 enjoys himself more and the game is less sticky. As regards a comparison of the Hurlingham and American rules, leaving out altogether the question of offside and the duration of periods of play, I have no hesitation, whatever, in maintaining that the Hurlingham rules are superior."

In addition to all these interesting observations and more there is an appendix occupying about a third of the book which comprises some six hundred pages and is devoted to a chronology on modern polo, list of polo clubs, principal polo competitions, teams with best records since 1890, regimental teams best individual players for twenty odd years Hurlingham's recent form, and handicap lists, list of 52 polo-bred ponies now playing, list of the best ponies the author has known for a quarter of a century, English, Indian and Americans rules. The committees of all the leading clubs all over the world are also given.

Altogether "Modern Polo" is a standard work that should find a place in the library of every sportsman.

MY BIRTHDAY SHOOT.

"To-morrow is my birthday, Bota Ram" I said to my Reader. "You may have noticed that I have not fixed any cases for it. I object on principle to working on my birthday. Wild horses will not drag me to labour to-morrow. So please tell all litigants, petitioners and captives to keep away on pain of death. To-morrow I am going to enjoy myself with my gun."

It was not for nothing that I had arranged my tour so as to arrive at Sheikwala on 5th January. Is not the bungalow a delightfully comfortable one and prettily situated and do not the geese and the duck from the adjoining Indus come in to feed on the fields and in the canal beds near at hand? "To-morrow, Haji Khan" I said impressively to my sporting chaprassi, "we go out after geese the first thing in the morning, to catch them as they come in hungry from the river. If God is good, we shall take our toll of the big birds and then we shall go to look at the old canal for duck, and follow the tamarisk patches for black partridge with an eye on the mustard for the Tilar. Its within nice reach of home, so I shall go back when I please for a late breakfast. And, last of all, in the evening I shall stand at the canal embankment nearest the river and take the duck and teal as they come in from the river. It should be a day worth remembering."

"God send your Honour such luck as the occasion merits" said Haji Khan; "I will make all the necessary arrangements."

A good dinner, chiefly the spoil of my own bow and spear, and a good cigar saw me to early bed in the best possible condition, both mental and physical, for the morrow's outing, and I had no difficulty in getting up briskly when my servant came with my early tea and shooting clothes in the morning. But into the chill winter morning we went to find the ponies standing ready outside. What a boon it is to have a handy confidential nag, when one wants to cover the ground between shooting places instead of having to plod on foot!

Off came the blankets as my good little Arab nuzzled at my hand for his sugar, and much protected from cold by a heavy top-coat and sweater, I clambered into the saddle and jogged steadily out wherever the ground allowed, to the river bank, where the young wheat fields tempt the geese to breakfast. We were a little before our time. But the place was the right one, and after about ten minutes during which we kept the ponies moving, a skein of geese appeared, beating in from the river. We had kept to cover and had the satisfaction of seeing the birds go down not half a mile off, a goodly number, about 30 strong.

We gave them time and then proceeded to reconnoitre. It was first rate ground, a broken wall between the green wheat field and a fallow offering excellent cover within reasonable distance of the birds.

I elected for a drive myself to take cover behind the broken wall and Haji Khan and an assistant to send the birds to me.

I dismounted and following Haji Khan on foot behind his pony, made him drop me under cover of the wall before he started to draw a circle round the geese.

The wall was nearer to my quarry than I had at first supposed and I began to have some doubts as to whether I should be able to gain its cover without disturbing them. There was plenty of time, however, and the chance was worth all the trouble I could bestow. Painfully and slowly therefore, after the manner of the worm, I proceeded, but was at last rewarded, by reaching my cover without having excited the suspicion of the birds, who fed hungrily. Once under the wall, I adopted the supine position, than which none better enables one to wait till the very last and then sit up quickly for a shot. I waited and waited for what seemed an eternity. But I had implicit confidence in Haji Khan, who had played the game before and sure enough there came at last the hoarse "honk," "honk" and the strong beating of wings of the skein in flight. "Wait as long as you can and hold a generous length ahead" were the injunctions I had been repeating to myself all the time I lay and which I now endeavoured to put into practise.

"Now!" I said as the birds appeared not forty yards away, going somewhat obliquely from left to right

"Bang!" I had put in the right barrel before the birds had quite realized I was there and up crumpled No. 1.

There came a whirr of wings as the flock swerved off, giving me the chance of chances, when the bird in wheeling offers the maxium expanse and the least feather resistance; again the 12 bore spoke, and another bird tumbled to earth, one wing crippled and helpless.

"My congratulations, Sir," said Haji Khan as I gave him the bird that had dropped nearest me, "this is not to be a blank day. God be praised."

The geese were not for giving any more chances and the next thing to do was, after a ferrent prayer that my two barrels had not disturbed any possible occupant of it, to go and look at the canal-escape for duck.

It was still early and "hope springs eternal in the the sportsmen's chest" and the escape is a nice bit of water with good cover on its banks. Ah! sure enough there were a few duck and some teal, within what proved to be reasonable distance of the far bank!

"Its just the two barrels" I said "and the whole lot of birds off to the river." But that was quite good enough, so, leaving Brown Bess, a deserving spaniel pup with Haji, I set out on my stalk.

There are those I know who talk of the shame of sitting shots. That is all very well if you have an unlimited supply of birds that offer you your fill of flying shots. But in a place like the canal-escape, where the duck come for an hour or two only and are ready to return at once to the river, he will be a fool who scorns a poaching crawl for his first barrel at any rate. More than that, if, with high banks or broad water he arrives at all after his crawl, he has already accomplished something. My birds were not as near as I had at first supposed, and the mallard, for such they were, jumped up long before they had my permission to do so. As it was, however, I got one bird and a hurried re-load of one barrel before the tea arrived. Two of the smaller variety of birds dropped to it and Brown Bess was invited to retrieve them all, a feat which she accomplished very creditably.

"Now for a few black partridge" I said. "God keep you pleasant" was the reply. "Aren't they calling to you there from the tamarisk brake?"

They were, but I did not expect very much. It is not for Francolinus Vulgaris that one goes to Sheikwala, though one may pick up enough birds in an hour or two to make their pursuit just worth while.

Haji Khan and the local headman accordingly mustered the beaters and we gave chase to that most sporting and beautifully coloured bird. "Once in my life" said Haji, "I have seen a black partridge lighter in colour than his brother, the grey. Jones Sahib it was who shot it. It had the flight of a black but was so light in colour, that we both wondered."

"Pick up that bird" shouted the Sahib as he winged it, being a little overeager to bring it to bag, and the clumsy yokels of beaters mauled it so much that the Sahib was disgusted and did not think it worth while to keep the skin. But there was no mistake about its being a black, for when we put it side by side with a normally coloured bird we could trace the resemblance. But it was a curious, sickly white, with just a flush of pink where the red ordinarily is.

"I should like to have seen it" I said and told Haji what I knew about albinism.

"Five birds" I said, "and I can't expect much more singlehanded where there is so little cover, that is really shootable. You can't do much good in a country that has no proper beginning or end. Half-past eleven is more than breakfast time."

There is the merit of Sheikwala:—2 geese, a mallard, a brace of teal and 2½ brace of partridges, and yet I had never at any time been more than three miles from home.

An excellent meal I had, with the Lahore paper and my private letters to read at it, and then I started out down the grand avenue of shishams and blue-gums, in which vultures and a Brahminy kite were building, to watch my two tent-pitchers catching fish with their hands in a tiny pool which had been left in the bed of the canal near the bungalow.

Piru, the junior tent-pitcher, has the soul of a sportsman and there is little in the department of sport, licit or illicit, with which he is unacquainted. I found him, accordingly, groping with hands and feet, undeterred by their sharp spines, for fish whose very contact with his person made the elder man jump.

"I have a big Singhara (tiger-fish) somewhere here, if I could only find him" explained Piru washing out numerous small fish on the bank and again letting them go. "Was that him you trod on, Brother" asked Piru with a shout of laughter of the elder man, as the latter gave a sudden exclamation of pain and splashed about uneasily.

"God strike him! I think it was" replied his interlocutor, who seemed better at holding for Piru the fish that the latter caught than at catching them himself.

"I'll send the pick of them in for your Honour's dinner" said Piru and I gratefully accepted the gift. Tea—a good solid one, with a wonderful cake made especially for my birthday with my initals on it in white iceing by my cook, followed and was much appreciated both by myself and by Brown Bess with whom early morning tea and afternoon tea are important fixtures of the day.

"Now is the time for the duck again, Haji" I said. "If they go away by the line of the canal to the river in the morning, I bet they come in that way in the evening. There is three-quarters of a moon and I am going to stand just behind the first bank that dams the canal near the month and wait for them to come over.

"May be, Sir," said Haji. "But you will want a man each side to mark birds in the falling light—the dog will be indispensable."

"She thinks so, anyway" I said, as Bessie wagged her tail comprehendingly, and off we set. It was quite six o'clock by the time the first of the birds arrived. But the vigil was full of interest. Borne in from the river came the quack of the mallard. The "honk, honk" of the geese, the gutteral gurgle of the Brahwing and the hoarse cry of the heron.

Whish! The first flight of teal were on me. I let them pass, keeping well back into the cover of a friendly bush or two that grew on the inner side of the bank under which I was standing, watching what they would do. Nicely!

They topped the dam, high in air, and then swooped low past me, going at full speed along the line of the water. Would they all do the same? It would not be easy shooting after all, for the opposing bank made a bad background.

I was not long in doubt. Whizz! Bang! Flight No. 2 arrived and acted precisely like the first, I was a bit hurried and accounted for a single bird only. I looked up in some disappointment at the sky, which had turned cloudy. "Not going to be as much fun as I supposed" I thought, and missed altogether a flight of big duck that went high overhead at express speed. "Ah!" That was better. A teal and a big duck dropped to my next two barrels and I could see them flapping in the water. How much longer would the light last?

I waited and waited. Drat! The daylight was gone and the moon no help to me for clouds.

Another lot of birds passed but I heard the sound only and saw next to nothing.

"I am afraid it's no go" I said and watched another lot go past, all big duck and all going high with the sound of a mighty rushing wind. More dots almost undistinguishable against the sullen sky.

The evening was a failure, but I had no reason to complain of my morning's luck, so calling Bessie and the men to pick up the birds, I made my way back to the bungalow, to enter up, after a excellent dinner, in my shikar diary the record of my Birthday shoot.

WOODCOCK-SHOOTING IN HONGKONG.

To the globe-trotter who first views the Island of Hongkong from the decks of a steamer lying at anchor in its beautiful harbour with a water area of some 10 square miles, and one of the finest in the world, the thought that woodcock are to be found there, affording excellent sport to those who go in search, might perhaps cause a smile to pass over his face. All he sees is the northern shore affronting the mainland, and rising therefrom a solid rock, covered in patches with stunted vegetation, broken in shape and mountainous, the highest point, Victoria Peak, being over 1,800 feet high. On the praya, or sea-front, are the business houses, or hongs, naval dockyard, clubs, hotels, and China-town, whilst above, and rising to the very summit, are to be seen Government House, the Military Hospital, and innumerable residences occupied by Europeans. The island itself is about 11 miles long and from two to five miles wide, whilst the territory on the mainland, known as Kowloon and held by Great Britain on a 99 years' lease from China, is estimated at 200 square miles. Let the globe-trotter, however, take a journey up the Peak, and from the top survey the scenery to the south side, and he will then realise for himself that the possibilities of woodcock being found there are more favourable than at first would appear. The view that meets his eye is one which has often been likened to parts of the West coast of Scotland; deep valleys run in from the sea in all directions, scattered about which are to be seen an occasional paddy-field, intimating that water is in the vicinity. It is round about these patches, which are generally bounded by dense undergrowth, and in other remote and undisturbed localities of the island, where small bogs are situated, that woodcock are encountered. The formation of the country, however, is such that although these haunts, when viewed from the mountain-top, may appear to be in close proximity, to go from one to another often entails much hard work, though having to make a circuitous route in order to avoid the thick and almost impenetrable undergrowth and bushes separating the two spots. These haunts of the woodcock, when discovered, are always jealously guarded by those to whom they are known, and it was only after great difficulty and persuasion I was taken out one day by a friend whose knowledge of the island had been acquired by long residence there, and shown some of the most likely places. The day on which these persuasive powers were brought into play was Christmas Day, and in order that no time should be lost we decided to try our luck on the morrow—Boxing Day. I have no doubt that the festive season at which I made my request, and the good-will and fellowship that exists among English sportsmen abroad, was in no great measure due to its being acceded to. year generally found its way to recollections of days spent in the Old Country at the covert-side and rocketing pheasants, of driven partridges and bolting rabbits, forms of sport the exile abroad can only participate of in his dreams, and so it is that he makes up for loss of such joy with the best grace possible, going in search of what the country offers as being better than nothing. To return, however, to our woodcock. Many preparations had to be made, for whatever else happens the Englishman in China prefers comfort to most other things, and, what is more, generally obtains it.

The plan of campaign was that we should start at six o'clock in the morning, and as we anticipated having to cover a considerable amount of ground we decided to engage the services of two mountain chairs, carried by four coolies each. Orders were next given to the Chinese cook to have ready a substantial tiffin (lunch), and for a couple of coolies to accompany us. The question of dogs next arose; my friend had one, a liver-and-white spaniel, which had been trained to the gun, but a second was considered necessary. A telephone message to a friend in the possession of a Cocker, and who readily consented to our taking the dog out, put the finishing touch to our plans. Next morning I was astir early, and, having made all preparations overnight, was soon outside my friend's house, to find him, the dogs, chairs, and coolies all in readiness to start. The first haunt we tried was some distance away. A ten-minutes' ride in the chairs from our house, along the so-called road—in reality, paths varying from six to twelve feet wide—took us to a spot from which we could see in the valley below a small open space of about thirty yards square, surrounded by trees and brushwood, and which my friend pointed out as being a sure place. Leaving the chairs and coolies on the road, we were soon scrambling down the hill-side to a path used by woodcutters, and which flanked the desired place. Quietly picking our way through the trees, with both dogs well in hand, we were not long in gaining the edge of the swamp which the ground proved to be. Here we separated, my friend going to one end whilst I took my stand about the middle, and at a given signal the dogs were let loose. It did not take us long to see that something was at home, both dogs hunting the thick undergrowth vigorously and evidently on the scent of a 'cock. This proved true, as after waiting for a few minutes they succeeded in flushing one from the bushes directly in front of me, on the opposite side of the swamp, which I brought down with my right barrel. The spot where it fell was particularly dense, and in spite of carefully marking it down it was only after a prolonged search that we were able to bring it to bag. We continued to let the dogs hunt the surrounding bushes for some time in the hopes of finding another, but this was not to be, so we retraced our steps back to the road, where the chairs and coolies awaited us. Our next haunt was one of those we could see from the path about a mile away, but we had to make a lengthy and roundabout route to arrive at it. Keeping to the main road for about half a mile until reaching the opposite side of the valley, we struck off to the right along the mountain side, and, getting out of our chairs, with instructions that they were to follow on by an easier route, set off to walk to the next place. The ground here was for some distance devoid of brushwood, the hill-side being covered with rank grass, where partridge were occasionally to be found. The Chinese partridge, unlike its English or French cousin, is never to be found in coveys, but generally singly, and even to find a brace at the same time is quite rare. We had not gone far before my friend secured one which rose from almost under his feet, and proved an easy victim; but for the remainder of the way, and until we reached the outskirts of a village adjoining the next haunt to be visited, nothing further was encountered. After passing through the village, which, like every other in China, was replete with the finest collection of smells imaginable, we came to a large mango swamp, which was crossed not without some difficulty, in order to reach a wood fringing a paddy field on the further side. Here we parted, my friend keeping on the outside of the wood, whilst I walked through the centre. This time it was his chance for a 'cock, as he had not gone more than a dozen yards before the liver-and-white showed sign of excitement, racing off regardless of cries of "Steady!" To follow was the only thing my friend could do, and, fortunately, he did, as, after keeping to the edge of the wood for some distance, the dog turned off to a clump of bushes about fifteen yards on the inside and there flushed a 'cock which was successfully bagged. The remainder of the wood was productive of naught, and the sun by this time having warmed up, we decided on reaching the outskirts, where we were joined by the chairs and coolies, to rest for a few minutes before proceeding further. To be anticipated in one's desires is always a satisfactory state of affairs, and in this instance we found such to be the case, the coolie in charge of the commissariat department having in readiness a welcome whiskey-and-soda, which, with the aid of a pipe, soon put us on our feet again, or, to be precise, into our chairs, prepared for a further trek.

The next place to be visited was about a mile and a half distant from where we had rested, and the way being by one of the main paths was soon accomplished. Here there was no scrambling down steep inclines, the swamp—a small one of about thirty yards square—being practically on the same level as the path, and screened off from the highway with bushes. Unfortunately, we experienced some difficulty in finding an opening and firm ground on which to make our way across to suitable places where good shots could be obtained in the event of any 'cock being flushed. The dogs, however, were soon in and immediately gave tongue, much to our disgust, as we were unable to see if they had found or not. They continued to hunt for some time after we had succeeded in taking our places, but as nothing was forthcoming we concluded the 'cock had flown immediately the dogs had commenced to work. This was a lesson to us in future to keep them well to heel until stands had been occupied. Chairs were again requisitioned, and after half an hour's going we found ourselves at the end of the road and only a narrow footpath alongside a catch-water or open main running around the mountain-side, and leading to one of the reservoirs, on which to continue our way. At this stage we decided to inspect the contents of the tiffin basket, which we proceeded to demolish with appetites made vigorous by the hill-climbing and early breakfast. Our hunger satisfied and the calumet of peace smoked, we got into our chairs and set forth on the return journey by the footpath already mentioned. This in places became merely a ledge in the side of the mountain, and a drop of anything from 100 to 200 feet into the valley below, that several times we deemed it advisable for safety sake to get out of the chairs and walk. This continued for the best part of a couple of miles and eventually brought us into the neck of a small valley with a stream flowing down the centre, which we followed up and came upon several likely places for woodcock, but each was drawn blank. At the end of the valley we again struck the path—this time a respectable one—and with it our chairs. The way now led through a small plantation of fir-trees on the right side, and on the other a grassy slope, at the bottom of which was a reservoir, and, thinking there might be a chance of finding a partridge in the grass, I determined to try my luck, taking with me the Cocker. I had not gone far before one rose some twenty yards on my left and flew straight for the reservoir, offering me a downward going-away shot, which I clean missed with my right, but managed to get in a successful left, the bird falling into the water a few feet from the bank, to be retrieved by the Cocker. After walking through the grass until stopped by a deep gully, I regained the path, which after many windings brought us down to a road running parallel with the shore, and from where, looking upwards, we could see our respective houses on the Peak. By this time it was nearing 3 P.M., so we decided to make our way up a valley which would bring us to within easy reach of home. As there was no beaten way we instructed the chair coolies to proceed by the path and await us at the top. For the first half-mile or so walking was easy, but as we got further up the valley it became decidedly difficult; big boulders had to be negotiated and thick brushwood scrambled through, that one almost forgot the object of our toils, until reminded by the Cocker showing signs of excitement and dashing into a thicket, out of which rose a 'cock, only to be nicely brought down by my friend, who at the time was leading the way. This produced in us renewed energy in the hopes of bringing our bag to an even number, although our chances of so doing were lessened the further we got up the valley, and consequently nearer to civilisation. Two other likely places were tried, each turning out a blank, but as my friend informed me there was yet another, we still hoped for the best. Another scramble of about three hundred yards brought us to the spot, which, judging from its appearance, raised one's hopes to their highest pitch, as a more seductive haunt for 'cock would be difficult to find. Approaching carefully, and this time with the dogs well to heel, I pushed quietly ahead until the upper end of the bog was reached, whilst my friend took the lower end, thus making escape of any woodcock without our seeing it almost impossible. The dogs were now let loose and quickly commenced their part of the proceedings—at first, however, without any result, as they kept to the bushes on the fringe of the swamp. They next tried a large clump growing in the centre, and about fifteen yards in front of where I was standing, and from the manner in which the larger spaniel nosed the air, I could see there was still hope. The Cocker in the meantime had slipped round to the further side, and without further ado flushed a fine woodcock, which came straight for me. To fire as it flew over my head would probably have meant blowing it to pieces, so, quickly turning round, I took him going away, missing with my right, but fortunately killing him with the left barrel, thus making our bag for the day two couple of woodcock and a brace of partridge, honours being equally divided. After this we made no further effort to find other birds, contenting ourselves with what we had already secured, but proceeded leisurely for the rest of the way until the top of the valley was reached and where our chairs awaited us. A ride of about ten minutes soon brought us home, which neither of us was sorry to reach, the hour then being close upon five o'clock. During the time we were out—nearly eleven hours—we had either walked or ridden in our chairs about twelve miles and secured the bag already recorded, which for Hongkong was counted quite a useful day's work.—D. A Lesson in Reporting.

Private Tommy Atkins, of the ——Regiment, was considered the smartest man on parade that morning, so he was told to report himself at the commanding officer's quarters at 10 A.M. sharp; dress-belt and bayonet and his stick. Prompt to time Tommy turned up and thinking to be smart, knocked with his stick. The commanding officer, who was just having breakfast, startled by the sudden "rap, rap," thundered forth, "Come in!"

Commanding Officer—"Don't you know how to report yourself to a commanding officer?"

Tommy (nervously)—"N-no, sir."

Commanding Officer—"Then I will show you. Just consider you are the commanding officer for the time, and I am your orderly. Just sit here."

The commanding officer then retired closing the door. Tommy creeping up behind, turned the key, then deposited himself in the chair and commenced eating the unfinished breakfast. Then a knock sounded at the door.

Tommy—"Who's there?"

Commanding Officer—"The commanding officer's orderly for the day, sir."

Tommy—"Oh, just stay there until I have finished my breakfast."

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

An abnormally dry summer had weakened the resources of many stables, horses with the least suspicion of leg trouble having been at a discount on the hard ground. In this respect long-distance horses have suffered the most, as sprinters do not need the work two-mile performers do. Herein lies the explanation of the somewhat poor acceptance for Saturday's Prince Edward Handicap. The change of distance from a mile and a quarter to two miles since last year is a commendable one, as it has been done with the laudable ambition of improving the stamina of our horses. In any other year the field would possibly have been larger than on Saturday, though there was sufficient interest taken in the latest celebration to insure a really excellent attendance. A threatening morning materialised with a drizzling rainfall, which blotted out the colours, and made race reading a matter of great difficulty. Results:—

NEWMARKET.

Like Doncaster, Newmarket has been lucky, as the recent rains came just at the right time to render the going on Monday firm, if not fit for the heath after the recent drought. What to do if Your Horse Pulls

THE KEY TO HIS MOUTH IS A RENSUM REIN.

Sir Gilbert East, Bart., wrote:—

"You have found the key to my excitable mare's mouth. I have now the pleasure of riding an animal chock full of life, with complete control."

. . . . . .

You have three courses open if you own a puller. You may go on using him, to your great discomfort; you may sell him, to your loss; or you may cure him, if you know how. I am a veteran horseman with a reputation to lose, and I stake it upon the assertion that in my "Rensum" Pamphlet I will show you how, for £1 1s. (the cost of a "Rensum" Rein), you may, without severity, cure the worst puller. The Pamphlet will prove to you that by a new method you may turn a confirmed puller into a snaffle bridle hunter, or polo pony. The "Rensum" Pamphlet will also show you how you may cure a rearer, kicker, or other vicious horse.

H. S. RENSUM, The Cottage, Yardley, Worcestershire, Eng.

WRITE TO ME

That I may advise. Describe your horse's fault and I will send you the

"RENSUM" PAMPHLET free.

If you order a Rensum Rein, with it will be sent, the fully detailed instructions for making or re-making a 21 s/s on the simple Rensum method which cannot fail . . .

I prefer to use the "Rensum Rein" on the one-half moon "Rensum Bit." The Rein and Bit together I will send for a guinea and a half . . . . .

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE great hope cherished by the followers of Tottenham Hotspur that the North London club would get through the first two months of the season without a reverse sustained a rude knock on Saturday when at White Hart-lane Blackburn Rovers proved victorious by 2 goals to 0. Everything suggested a win for Hotspur, the home side having beaten both Sheffield Wednesday and West Bromwich Albion at Tottenham during the previous fortnight, and the Blackburn team—notoriously indifferent performers away from Ewood Park—having gone down at both Sunderland and Middlesbrough. So strong was the anticipation that Hotspur would add to their list of successes that a company of between 40,000 and 50,000 assembled to witness the struggle. Except that the Tottenham men did not get off the mark with an early goal as in more than one of their previous engagements, there seemed up to the interval no cause for serious anxiety to the supporters of the home club, Bennett making a creditable fight in his repeated duels with Simpson. Directly after the resumption, however, Simpson's clever work led to a goal by Davies, Lunn, it is true, being at fault in knocking the ball down at the feet of the Blackburn centre-forward, and it was Simpson who, late in the game, forcing a corner off Wilkes, made the opening from which Aitkenhead headed the Rovers' second goal. With Simpson thus largely instrumental in gaining each point, the Blackburn men played capital football and fully deserved their victory. Last season the Rovers, in the course of seventeen League matches away from home, did not gain a single victory, but on the last Saturday in April they just managed to pull through at Middlesbrough, but only by the narrow margin of 3 to 2.

Last Saturday brought disaster not only to Tottenham Hotspur but to Bradford City as well so that in little more than three weeks from the opening of the season there is not a single First League club which can show a record unsullied by defeat. Journeying to Oldham, the Cupholders having lowered the colours of Aston Villa, Newcastle United, Sheffield United in succession, appeared fairly certain to win—especially as the Oldham men, on their own ground, had been beaten by Sheffield United. Bradford City, however, instead of following up their previous successes with a fourth victory, found themselves a goal behind at the interval and in the end lost by 3 to 0. Consequent upon the reverses sustained by Hotspur and Bradford City, the leading places in the First League are now occupied, curiously enough, by West Bromwich Albion and Bolton Wanderers, the two clubs promoted from the Second League since last season. Each of these teams has now four victories to set against a single defeat. It may be noted that the Albion, as well as Bolton Wanderers, gained their victory away from home.

Woolwich Arsenal as well as Tottenham came to grief the experience of the London clubs in the First League being in marked contrast to that of the metropolitan clubs in the Southern League. The Plumstead men appeared to possess a fair chance of victory against Sheffield United at Bramall-lane and their prospects looked very rosy when at half-time they led by 1 to 0. This advantage, however, the Arsenal proceeded to dissipate afterwards McEachrane handling. Sheffield United were awarded a penalty, which Kitchen turned to account and later on another infringement—in this instance a foul throw—led to a free kick, from which the home club secured a second and winning goal.

Journeying down to Leicester, Chelsea, against a team which had lost three times in succession, were naturally expected to win—especially after the brilliant victory over Wolverhampton Wanderers a week earlier. So far from inflicting defeat upon Leicester Fosse, however, Chelsea up to the interval could make no impression upon the home defence, and afterwards their own goal fell twice. On the other hand, Fulham at Craven Cottage played football that was much too good for Blackpool, and won with plenty to spare, while at Wolverhampton Clapton Orient just got home against the Wanderers. The Hamilton men have now won three games out of four and drawn the other. Apart from what Clapton Orient accomplished, a win by Nottingham Forest at Gainsborough and the success of Hull City against Barnsley on the ground of the Yorkshire club, matters went none too well with the more prominent of the Second League clubs, for, in addition to Chelsea losing at Leicester, Bradford at Park Avenue failed to beat Glossop, whose three previous engagements had all ended in disaster, and at Turf Moor Burnley could not beat Grimsby Town, being a goal behind at the interval, and only effecting a draw.

The remarkable success enjoyed by the London clubs playing at home stood out as the feature of Saturday's Southern League results; and, besides the victories of West Ham, Millwall, Queen's Park Rangers, and Brentford by an aggregate of 18 goals to 1, Leyton and Crystal Palace drew on their adversaries' grounds. The heavy scoring in the matches played within the metropolitan area had most to do with the total of 33 goals obtained in the full series of ten games. Millwall chiefly distinguished themselves with 6 goals to 0 against Watford, West Ham United, who put on 5—0 against Reading running them close, and it is noteworthy that in their three previous games these clubs had not known victory. Queen's Park Rangers by scoring 3—0 against New Brompton strengthened their position at the head of the League and they are now the only team who have not given away a goal. Swindon experienced great trouble in overcoming Southampton; their well-deserved triumph adds to the interest in their charity match with Manchester United at Chelsea to-morrow.

RUGBY RULES

LONDON WELSH vs. CATFORD BRIDGE.—At Wandsworth, the Welshmen started their season with a number of new players and consequently were not able to show any of their usual strong combination in attack. They were, however, much the better side on the day and in the end won easily. If the backs were faulty the forwards did some useful work, and it was one of these rushes that led up to the first try. Maddocks, however, was chiefly instrumental, as he cross-kicked at an opportune moment for Michael to gather and score. Their second try was the result of the only good passing bout, at the end of which Maddocks sent Norton over with a try, and on this, as on the first occasion, J. S. Evans was unable to convert. Changing ends with a useful lead of two tries to nil the Welsh attack slackened considerably, though perhaps this was partly due to lack of condition. They, however, scored once again through Maddocks—another unconverted try—and wound up by winning by three tries to nothing. London Welsh, 9 points, Catford Bridge, 0.

BLACKHEATH vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—Rosslyn Park did not, as has been their custom in recent years, give Blackheath a good game in the opening match of the season, which was played at the Rectory Field. They played excellently in the first half, were much quicker than their opponents, and had much the better of the play. They pressed from the kick-off, and at the end of eight minutes Monaghan, intercepting a pass in midfield, ran right through and scored under the posts for H. Smith to convert. Quite up till half-time they continued to press, but they were not clever enough to score again, though they had several good opportunities. Blackheath were scarcely ever dangerous, and at the interval Rosslyn Park led by five points. In the second half the game went all the other way, and Blackheath had all the play. They combined fairly well and easily beat the opposing defence, but they spoilt many chances of scoring by faulty passing. Soon after the restart Griffiths ran over after a clever rush, and Ferguson, after a splendid run, put Blackheath ahead, though Levey failed with both the place kicks. Afterwards Pym, Owen, and Coverdale added further tries, one of which Coverdale, and another Craven, converted, and Blackheath won by two goals and three tries to one goal. The game on the whole was poor, neither side showing good form. Blackheath, 19 points; Rosslyn Park, 5 points.

ATHLETICS AND CYCLING

L. A. C. MEETING.—The members of the L. A. C. held their autumn meeting at Stamford Bridge on Saturday. A splendid entry was obtained, including several well-known athletes. A feature of the afternoon was an attempt on the 60 yards world's amateur record of 5⅘secs. by V. S. Rice, Chicago, by W. A. Stewart, London's sprint champion. After two attempts he completed the distance in half a yard outside record, his time being 5⅘secs. The "Holman" Memorial Challenge Cup for the ensuing year was secured by H. Phillips, who scored the most points during the season. L. J. de B. Reed was close up second, but he did not compete this afternoon. The weather was fair and breezy and some two thousand spectators witnessed a splendid afternoon's racings. Details appended:—

600 Yards Challenge Cup Race (holder, L. J de B. Reed).—C. N. Seedhouse, 1; H. Phillips, 2; E. J. Denny, 0. Phillips cut out the pace and led for rather more than 300 yards, when Seedhouse went by and won by six yards. Time, 1min—13⅘secs. Reed did not start.

ROWING.

DOVER OARSMAN'S FINE PERFORMANCE.—A record for another Channel feat has been set up by the accomplishment of a row from Dover to Calais and back, in a thirteen-foot boat, by Mr. Guy Mannering, a well-known Dover oarsman. His time for the double journey was 12 hours 40 minutes.

Mr. Mannering set out from Dover at half-past seven in the evening in his boat, the Heliastus, accompanied by a motor-boat. The tides were running very strongly, but the weather at the start was calm, with a light southerly breeze. Mr. Mannering, pulling strongly, made rapid headway across the Channel, and kept a remarkably good course. For the first three hours the tide was running to the westward, but the force with which the sculler was propelling his boat was shown by the fact that he never got further west than the Varne Buoy, which is in a line with Shakespeare Cliff, Dover.

After the row had been in progress four hours the southerly breeze freshened considerably, and for the next two hours he had a very heavy pull in lumpy seas. He stuck to his work, however, and at a quarter to two in the morning he grounded his boat at Sangatte, west of Calais.

Almost immediately he got the craft afloat again and set off on the return journey. In this the southerly breeze proved helpful in the earlier stages, assisting him to a certain extent in getting through the broken water over the sandbanks near Sangatte. He pulled practically with undiminished vigour throughout the long return to Dover. When a mile or two off the breakwater he encountered a good deal of swell, but kept firmly to his task, and ran his boat ashore on the beach at ten minutes past eight.

He only made one or two brief stops for refreshment during this very creditable performance; his sustenance consisted of some bread-and-cheese and a glass or two of beer.

MADRAS RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

Final

MADRAS GYMKHANA vs. LEICESTER REGIMENT "A" TEAM.—After a pointless draw on 7th instant these teams met again on Monday the 9th instant in the presence of a large gathering of spectators. Play at the start was mainly in midfield and little advantage was gained by either team. Then the Leicesters attacked but the Madras defence was sound and though the soldiers had the best of the play they missed many chances and were unable to get through. Play opened out again shortly before the interval but nothing of note occurred and half time arrived without score. On changing ends the Leicesters pressed vigorously but their opponents cleared and up and down play followed. Though many opportunities were given them the Madras backs had not settled down in the early part of this period and could not get going. A free-kick for offside against the soldiers looked promising but the ball fell short. Soon after, however, a good run by the Madras threes ended in Purves getting across with a try—the place kick failing miserably. The Leicesters played hard but did not make much ground and shortly after Madras were away again, a fine individual effort by Sayers enabling Gray to cross the line. The kick was fruitless but Madras got away again on resuming and Alexander scored a try which was not improved upon, time being called shortly after with the score.—Madras 3 tries (9 pts.) Leicesters nil. The cup was presented to Purves, Captain of the winning team, by Mrs. A. P. Symons. Teams:—

MOTOR NOTES.

London, 29th September 1911.

Comfort on the car is daily becoming greater owing to the additional accessories which the inventive of those who devote their attention to such things evolve. Accessories can be divided into two classes. Firstly, there are the essentials, such as spare wheel or rim carrier, lamps, and others which may be considered almost part and parcel of the car; and, secondly, those which may be looked upon as luxuries. The wealthy motorist may load his car with all sorts of accessories and not feel the cost either of buying them or of the extra petrol used in carrying them. But it is the user of a small car of, say, 10 h. p. or 15 h. p. who feels the extra weight of accessories. He naturally wants to make his car as comfortable as possible, especially if, as in the case with a doctor, he has to be out in all weathers and at all hours. Thus he must have head lamps, a wind screen, a hood, a speedometer, an inspection lamp, spare wheel, spare tin of petrol with his tools in a tool box, and all other essential accessories. "When all these are considered, they represent," remarks the writer of the Motor Notes in the Western Morning News "a considerable weight, and in the course of a year's hard work will add considerably to the petrol bill." "Not long ago," he adds, "I inspected a very useful petrol tin opener. It costs next to nothing and would have been very useful but for the fact that it was too heavy. One accessory like that might do no harm, but one has to remember that there are more important accessories, the weight of which is also considerable, and these together run up the petrol bill—the small motorist's worst enemy. Certain makers of accessories realise this evil and are trying to reduce weight as much as possible. Perhaps the others will follow suit; possibly not. It is not always easy and always possible to reduce weight, and this is unfortunately too true in respect of the necessary accessories. But where it is possible to effect a reduction it should always be done both for the benefit of the purchaser and dealer; for who will buy an equipment the cost of which will not end with its purchase?"

Although there are a large number of good roads in Jamaica, Trinidad, and the British Guiana, and the larger towns in these colonies are up-to-date in other respects, according to the Board of Trade Journal Mr. E. H. S. Flood, the Canadian Trade Commissioner for the British West Indies, reports that the sale of motor vehicles in these colonies has not been as great as one might have expected. The supply of horses has to be kept up by importation, and the food for these animals is also imported. Thus the cost of keeping the horses is so high that it is generally found out that motor vehicles are less expensive after the initial outlay. There are quite a number of wealthy planters and commercial men in the colonies who might be regarded as potential purchasers of self-propelled vehicles.

At the Greenwich Police Court last Friday the Automobile Association prosecuted a boy named Ruben Pigden under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, for causing damage to a member's car. The circumstances were that the car was left for a short period on the side of a road having a slight incline, the engine being switched off and brakes put on. The boy came along and deliberately took the brakes off, the result being that the car went down the hill, mounted the pavement, narrowly missing two pedestrians, and ultimately collided with a tree. Mr. W. Taylor Parkes appeared for the Association and after the offence had been proved it was found that the boy had been placed on probation in respect of an offence committed in May. He was remanded for a week for enquiries to be made of the Probation Officer. The prosecution was undertaken by the Association in view of complaints which have been received from members as to their cars being tampered with in this way, and the possibilities of fatal accidents and damage to property are so obvious that it is hoped the strong action the Association is taking in these cases will have the effect of checking this nuisance.

The hotter the weather the more likely is one to have trouble with tyres, more especially where a fast pace is maintained. This was very evident during the Prince Henry tour, remarks the writer in the Motor News, where the tyres of the cars which were driven uniformly fast met with many bursts, while those which travelled at a reasonable rate had little or no trouble. The great heat generated undoubtedly affects both fabric and rubber, and reduces the cohesion between the particles, which not only causes trouble on the road, but permanently affects the quality of the material. But there is another factor which is often ignored, and that is the excessive heat causes great expansion of the air in the tube, and consequently increases the pressure to such an extent as to cause undue strain. The wise motorist, therefore, will start with a comparatively low degree of pressure in his tyres, and after running for a certain period will make use of the gauge to test the then pressure. If it has risen to a serious extent he should at once release sufficient air to reduce the pressure to a normal condition. Motorists frequently complain of the heavy expense of motoring, but this can be very materially reduced if more attention is paid to such vital points.

"I thought I knew all there was to know about repairing inner tubes" writes a motorist in an American contemporary, "but I got a wrinkle not long ago that I verily believe has saved me considerable annoyance and the trouble of repatching tubes occasionally. I used to be a little bit careless about replacing patched tubes repaired on the road, and as a result I frequently had to do the job all over again a few days later because the patch had worked loose. Finally, I discovered that whenever a patch worked loose it was because I had put the tube back in the cover in the same position it was when it was punctured. In other words, the repaired part of the tube came up against the punctured part of the cover, and as there always is a slight abrasion where a cover is punctured, it chafed on the patch until it worked loose. Now, I am careful to turn my tubes around after they have been patched and I never have any more of that kind of trouble."

No doubt most of my readers remember the famous £10,000 aeroplane flight, well, it is not the flight I am writing about now, but a famous and reliable car which followed the flight throughout. The car was made by Bell Brothers, of Ravensthorpe, Yorks, and during this long trip, encountered the worst of roads, but finished in a condition that was really remarkable. I have just received from Messrs. Bell Brothers, their list, and to read same is a revelation, for the specifications contained therein are wonderful. The car is eminently suitable for India, and those readers who would like to see one of these lists I recommend them to write as soon as possible, for there is an enormous demand for them.

AERO NOTES.

The first aerial mail of the United Kingdom was conveyed from Hendon to Windsor by Mr. Gustav Hamel on Saturday last. The start was delayed for some time, owing to a strong wind, but the aviator eventually got away on his Bleriot monoplane and landed safely at Windsor, completing the journey of nearly twenty miles in the excellent time of ten minutes. The other aviators were prevented from starting owing to the high wind. After a rest Mr. Hamel successfully returned to London. On Monday further attempts were made, Messrs. G. H. Gresswell and E. F. Driver going through successfully. The proceedings, however, were marred by an accident which occurred to Mr. C. Hubert, who, just after starting on his Farman biplane, fell from a height of 50 feet breaking both his legs. Later in the day Mr. Hamel flew to Windsor with two mail bags, but could not return owing to darkness.

An aeroplane trip round the world is planned by the French aviator, M. Mamet, and M. Rene Million, who will go as passenger. M. Mamet estimates that he will accomplish the voyage in eight or ten months. He intends to start from France, crossing the Pyrenees, and then fly along the eastern sea coast of Spain and across the sea to Algeria, continuing to Egypt via Tunis and Tripoli. From Egypt the airman and his passenger will take ship for India, Australia, South America, and West Africa will also be visited. M. Mamet's idea is to give flying exhibitions in the principal places he visits.

Some important trials of aeroplanes in connection with military operations have been carried out in France during the past week. On one occasion Captain Bellanger, Lieutenants Menard and Blard, the last-named carrying as passenger Captain Lebeau, left Verdun for Toul with instructions to discover how far the works in progress at that fortress had advanced. The experiment was a complete success, not a single detail having escaped their observation, while the photographs taken by Captain Lebeau were entirely satisfactory and would in war have been of the greatest value. On the 31st ultimo the fortifications between the forts of the Daumont and Froideterre opened fire with heavy guns and live shells upon invisible targets between the hills of Poivre and Sommogneux, which could not be discovered either from the observatory or from its captive balloon. These targets were located by the military aviators, and the effects of the bombardment were closely noted from a height of about 3,600 feet. The activity of the aeroplane department of the French army is increasing rapidly, and the officers perform exploits daily which a year ago would have astonished the world.

Colonel Cody has placed himself first in the running for the second Michelin cup No. 2, the competition for which closes on 15th October, by covering 125 miles, on Monday last, in 3 hours, 7 minutes. Cody started from Laffan's Plain, and his circuit included Andover, Hendon and Brooklands.

The death of Lieutenant Cammell as the result of a fall with a Valkyrie monoplane on Saturday at the Hendon aerodrome marks the first casualty to an airman-officer in the British Army. As such it has the added importance which attaches to an accident under similar circumstances, if not because of the personal prominence of the sufferer, certainly because of his occupying at least a semi-official position, as on the occasion in question. Though Lieutenant Cammell met death at Hendon he was in no wise concerned with the Aerial Post to Windsor, but had just ascended preparatory to returning to the Military School of Aviation at Farnborough. The cause of the accident may be discovered, but according to Monday's papers the accounts are too meagre to explain it. The machine is stated to have been of a new type, apropos of which it will be recalled that Mr. T. Ridge, of the technical staff at the same school, also met his death while handling—all too incautiously as the evidence at the inquest showed—a new type of monoplane. It is also stated that Lieutenant Cammell appeared dissatisfied with the behaviour of his charge, but whether this strictly refers to any want of dirigibility in the machine, or to defective running of the engine, is not clear. Either circumstance would account for the accident, but it is necessary to know the principal points in the order of the mishap to arrive at a fair conclusion.

An American aviator named Fowler on Monday started on a flight across the United States on a Wright biplane, and reached Auburn, California, 129 miles away, before descending. On Tuesday the pillot met with disaster at a spot west of Alta, near the great American cannon. The machine fell from a considerable height and was smashed. Fowler is stated not to have been injured.

The more or less sustained range of misfortune attending the cult of the dirigible airship in Germany and France seems to have started in earnest for Great Britain with the attempted launch of the Barrow-built airship for the British Government. The cost of this vessel will probably be nearer £100,000 than the sum about £70,000—voted in the year's Estimates. Unlike the Continental airships which have been wrecked by external causes, most of them quite without the ability of the designers and pilots to curtail or control, the Barrow airship has collapsed from internal weakness, accelerated in effect by the collapse of one of the gas envelopes. The cause of, or factors contributing to, the disaster will no doubt be shortly discussed by the experts, but whatever their verdict it is poor circumstance that so much cost and delay should have produced an effect little short of being ludicrous if regarded apart from the serious issue involved.

The failure of this airship even to furnish some date of experimental account adds interest to the recently published second report by the Government Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. It is there made clear that, like the Germans and formerly the French, too, the British Commission had appeared more interested in the airship than the aeroplane. There was, however, promise that the swing of the pendulum was about to occur, and that the lessons from the French and German experiments and tests with airships were influencing the British authorities to similarly turn their attention more to the development of the aeroplane. This movement will no doubt receive a considerable impetus by the Barrow disaster, backed by the sentiment which the Treasury has indirectly, but none the less acutely, voiced by its parsimonious attitude towards the aeroplane side of aeronautics.

A triumph of simplicity.

Unparalleled experience, expert knowledge and unique manufacturing facilities have enabled us to produce the simplest dynamo lighting plant extant.

Extreme simplicity is not the only remarkable feature; lightness and compactness are equally marked. Thus, in addition to attaining an abnormally high degree of efficiency and reliability the system is as perfect as it is possible for ingenuity and skill to make it.

Yet in spite of all these advantages, we can supply the dynamo complete from £7-10.

A MIDDLE-AGED FOOZLER'S REMARKS ON GOLF.

VI.

PROBABLY there is no more difficult undertaking than the teaching of golf to middle aged people. I do not suppose that there is one professional in twenty who is capable of being the slightest use to any but the very young. With people whose habits and style have become fixed, the only way is to endeavour to develop their play on the lines that they have already adopted. It is not the least use completely upsetting their game, by attempting to teach them to make their shots in an entirely novel fashion. I have lately been watching with considerable interest the progress of a certain young professional with his various pupils. I do not hesitate to affirm that he has done some of them actual harm. He has a light easy way of driving himself, and changes his weight as he swings through, from the right foot to the left, with the delightful lissomness of youth. It is a real pleasure to watch him drive, but alas he cannot understand why everyone else should not play the ball in the same manner. Many golfers are able to get long straight drives, with quite a different stance, and in quite different style from that according to Cocker. If a man is doing pretty well, it is far better to go on playing his shots in exactly the same way, but to endeavour to improve their effectiveness by close attention to detail; and above all, by hitting the ball always accurately with the centre of the club face. Pains taken along these lines are far more likely to bring their reward in improved play, than any attempt to completely alter one's style. The value of a long swing is also somewhat exaggerated, and I am sure there are many uncertain erratic drivers, who would gain much in straightness and lose little in length, if they would be content to swing shorter. A short swing gives great control to the club, and is valuable for that reason: it is also very useful when playing into the wind. With iron clubs it is still more important not to overdo the length of swing, and also a long swing seems to be still less valuable as a factor for length, than with wooden clubs. With the mid iron, most useful of all clubs to the ordinary player, the best way to get length combined with good control, is to stand well in front of the ball. That is to play the shot with the ball almost opposite the right foot. The club then comes down on to the ball, and going through it, takes a bit of turf just under where the ball was resting, not behind it. The ball is, so to speak, trapped between the club face and the ground. The result of this mode of play is to send off the shot lower than usual, while the flight is usually true, without pull or slice. This way of playing the iron is well worth considerable practice, for it pays extremely. The cleek can be played thus too, though I am bound to admit that it requires very great accuracy, and if the ball is not taken perfectly, the shot will not come off at all. I would therefore recommend that, with the cleek, the stance should not be so much in front of the ball. If a full mashie shot is played with the ball opposite the right foot, the curve of flight will be lower than usual, and greater distance will be got. A much more useful attribute than occasional brilliance, is steadiness. It is within the power of everyone to play a reliable sound game. The secret is merely to only attempt what you know you can do, to take the club with which you are certain you can send the ball well on its way towards the green. Never to take a brassie for an iron lie, and similarly always to use a mashie in places where there is any doubt about another club being able to get the ball cleanly away. There is no difficulty in getting well over a hundred yards with a mashie, so that one should never hesitate to choose this club, when the lie is anyway bad. In similar fashion, when one has to carry a certain distance, and the lie is good, it is always best to use a tool which will give the necessary range without pressing. For instance, suppose it is a short hole of 120 yards from tee to green. Most people will find it easier to play it with an iron, using a moderate height of tee, rather than with a mashie. A mashie will do the distance right enough, but for the average man it is a very full mashie shot, and there is a considerable liability to pull away to the left of the green. With an iron, it is an easy half shot, and all one's attention can be devoted to playing it with accuracy of direction.

Another example of unwise play, is when the ball lies at such a distance from the green, that two shots must be taken to get there. How often under these circumstances, does one not see a player go at the ball with a brassie, for all he is worth, no matter what the lie is like. Much sounder policy is to play a steady iron, taking great pains to keep straight. Then for the next shot, one is certain of a good lie right opposite the green, so that landing the ball thereon will offer no difficulty. If the wild brassie shot comes off, it only means that the approach shot is shortened by a few yards, a matter of small importance to risk all for.

Accuracy is worth infinitely more than force, yet the fascination of smiting the ball for all you are worth is so great that it is difficult for golfers to check the almost overpowering incitement to press. There is, however, the great comfort of knowing that, when confidence of always being able to hit the ball with moderate accuracy has come to one, the ability to press, without any fear of missing the shot, will surely follow.

In order to play iron clubs properly, there must be a certain amount of softness in the ground. The long and unusually hot summer we have had in England this year, has the effect of drying up many of the courses until the surface was like brick. It was then quite impossible to play iron shots as they should be played, for it was like hitting a ball off asphalt, and the club head could not take away a bit of turf as it should do. Similarly approaching became a terrible problem, for the greens were so fiery that it was most difficult to get balls to stop on them at all. The longed-for rain has, however, come at last, and the golf links throughout the country have returned to their normal condition.

ARCHERY OF OLD.

For many years now archery has only been indulged in by a few enthusiasts, but no one can ever forget that England owes to the long-bow innumerable victories over her enemies from the time of the Conquest down to the seventeenth century. Agincourt, Crecy, and Poictiers were archers' victories, and at the battle of Homildon Hill the noblest blood of Scotland fell before the deadly clothyard shafts while the men-at-arms were merely spectators. In one battle with the French eighty bowmen routed two hundred French knights, and on yet another occasion a score of archers defeated six times their own number. Small wonder, then, that the Kings of England saw well to it that every boy from the age of seven shou'd be provided with a bow and shafts, and that every hamlet should have its butt for practising the art.

In 1349 Edward III. found it necessary to send forth an edict commanding the sheriff to issue a proclamation that all the men of London, "strong in body, at leisure times on holidays, use in their recreations bows and arrows, or pellets or bolts, and learn and exercise the art of shooting, forbidding all and singular on our behalf, that they do not after any manner apply themselves to the throwing of stones, wood, or iron, hand ball, foot-ball, handy-ball, cambuck, or cock-fighting, nor such like vain plays which have no profit in them." His successor, Edward IV., declared that every man, with the exception of the judges and the clergy, should possess a bow his own height, and keep it always in a fit condition for immediate use. On all Sundays and Feast-days all men were to shoot "up and down," the penalty for not so doing being one halfpenny—then, of course, equal to a considerably larger sum than at the present day. Latimer censures the degeneration of archery severely in one of his sermons. He says how in his youth his father delighted above all things in teaching him to draw the long bow, and "not to draw, as other nations do, with the strength of the arm, but with the strength of the body." His bows were bought for him in proportion to his height, age, and strength, "for men never shoot so well unless they be brought up to it." He ends by saying, "It is a goodly art, a wholesome kind of exercise, and much commended as physic."

From the time of Latimer the long-bow began to decline in popularity, and Henry VII. found it necessary to forbid the use of the cross-bow, which was ousting it altogether. The eighth Henry was fond of archery, and his brother Arthur was quite famous for his prowess with the bow. Holinshed speaks of his going forth on May-day very early, "his Grace being young and willing not to be idle . . . . to fetch May or green boughs . . . . all his knights, squires, and gentlemen in white satin . . . . and so went every man with his bow and arrows, shooting to the wood." On his return many awaited him, for they wished to see him shoot, "for at that time his Grace shot as strong and as great a length as any of his guard." But there came to him a man who prayed to be allowed to shoot before him, to which request he acceded. "The man did then put one foot in his bosom, and so did shoot, and shot a very good shot, and well towards his mark, whereof not only his grace, but all others greatly marvelled." The man was rewarded, and was known afterwards by the name of "Foot in Bosom."

In 1553 there was a great parade of three thousand London archers, attended by footmen, ball-men, and pages. They were led by the Duke of Shoreditch (a title which Henry had jocularly conferred on Barlow, the best marksman of his guard), and by the Marquesses of Hoxton, St. John's Wood, Islington, Shacklewell, and Clerkenwell. The City dignitaries were met en route, and the procession having marched through London arrived at Hoxton Fields, where a great shooting match took place, the victors being borne home by torch-light to feast at the Palace of the Bishop of London. Charles I., himself a skilful archer, appointed two commissions to enforce the practice of archery, but the art died out with the advent of the Civil War, in which the long-bow took no part except to a small degree in the Highlands.

A keeper of bows was appointed by Charles II., but his office was an empty one. A few efforts were made to revive archery in the old form, but they were of no avail, for the popularity of the sport had waned, and its sun had set. Never again will the long-bow take pride of place among warlike weapons, but we should certainly never forget what we owe to it in the past.

In the old days every archer carried twenty-four shafts—eight light and sixteen heavy. The former were used to gall the foe, the latter to do the more deadly work. The range of the heavy arrows was 260 yards, for Drayton records the feat of an English bowman at Agincourt who, "shooting at a Frenchman twelve-score away, quite through the body stuck him to a tree;" and we read in Shakespeare: "A good archer would clap in the clout at twelve score, and carry a fore hand shaft a fourteen, and a fourteen and-a-half." The arrows used at Agincourt were three feet long without the head, but those in general use were from three to six inches shorter. The best woods for arrows were birch, hornbeam, ash, oak, and service-tree, and for bows of war, yew. A bow of best foreign yew cost six shillings and eight pence, and of English yew but two shillings.

Aschm attributes the falling-off in the skill of Englishmen with the long-bow to their taking to the habit of shooting at set distances, in place of aiming at casual marks or changing their distance at every shot. It would seem as if this point has escaped consideration with regard to rifle-shooting at the present time, for although it may not have the importance which it had with regard to shooting with the long-bow, surely it is a point which shou'd not be entirely overlooked.
