HAIR-BALLS IN ANIMALS.

HAIR is one of the most indigestible of all animal substances ; and it has long been well known that the hairs licked by cattle, and probably other large ruminants, from their own bodies frequently become felted together into large balls in their stomachs. How common are hair-balls in such situations or what size they may attain, we have been unable to find out, as we have not come across any literature on the subject. They may, however, be considerably larger than a cricket ball ; but whether when once started they continue to grow throughout the life of the animals in which they occur and eventually cause death, we have no information.

The existence of hair-balls in the stomachs of herbivorous animals caused by licking their own coats might suggest the idea that similar accumulations would occur in the stomachs of the larger carnivora, formed from the coats of their victims ; but we believe we are right in affirming that lions, tigers, leopards, etc., do not swallow the skins of their victims. And, in any case, we have found no record of the occurrence of hair-balls in the stomachs of carnivora in the course of an extensive search through works on big game shooting and natural history.

On the other hand, such hair-balls have been recently shown to occur in the stomachs of South American alligators, or caimans, which, like our own crocodiles, are in the habit of swallowing the entire carcases of their hapless victims, when these are not of too large a size for the capacity of their throats.

The evidence for this, which has been published by Mr. Lydekker in an English contemporary, was supplied by Mr. S. da Costa, of Para, Brazil, who brought to England a huge hair-ball, now in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons—taken from the stomach of a twenty-foot alligator. The natives of Para are quite familiar with these hair-balls, for which they have even a special name, equivalent to "alligators' apples." They are stated to be quite common in alligators, and eventually lead to the death of the individuals in which they occur.

As alligators are practically identical in their habits with crocodiles, it is only natural to assume that hair-balls [illegible] likewise be found in the stomachs of th[illegible]here, again, we have made a long [illegible] endeavour to find any reco[illegible]though quite in vain.

There is, [illegible]ence cited by Mr. Lydekker wa[illegible] confirmation of this theory, although i[illegible]ly falls short of actual proof. A gentleman, [illegible]ppears, recently sent to the Natural History branch of the British Museum a hair-ball which he found the natives of a district of Madagascar using as a diminutive substitute for a football. On careful examination, it was found that the great majority of the hairs of which it is composed are those of the curious little Malagasy insectivorous mammals known as tenrees. The ball, it may be added, was found in the dry season on ground which would then be frequented by tenrees, while in the wet season it would probably be visited by crocodiles.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDEN Kolkata 171127 ALIPORE

Acc No. - 617
Date - 16/12/08

The donor of the specimen suggested that it might have come from the stomach of a foussa, the largest of the Malagasy carnivora. In our opinion, it is, however, of too large a size for such an origin; while, as already mentioned, there is apparently no evidence of the occurrence of hair-balls in carnivora. Moreover, if the foussa preys on tenrecs, there is no evidence that it swallows them skin and all; indeed the probability is, that it rejects the skin.

This being so, the probability is that the Malagasy hair-ball came from the stomach of a crocodile. To convert this probability into a certainty requires testimony to the effect that such objects occur at times in the stomachs of old world crocodiles. Some of our sporting friends occasionally take a turn at crocodile-shooting, and if when any of them do so again, they will kindly examine and report on the contents of the stomachs of their victims, we shall be very greatly obliged for the information.

We should likewise be much indebted to any of our readers who can supply evidence, positive or negative, on the question as to whether hair-balls can occur in the stomachs of beasts of prey.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The dates of the Calcutta Monsoon Meeting have been announced, but at the time of going to press no official advertisement has been published and no programme has been issued. The dates so far fixed are the 22nd and 29th July, the 5th, 12th, 17th and 19th August and Extras on the 26th August, 2nd, 9th and 16th September, if sufficient inducement offers. All these days are Saturdays bar the 17th August which is a Thursday and a holiday. This means that if all goes well we shall have ten days racing or two more than we usually do and that it will be all over a fortnight before usual, i.e., by the middle of September. There is nothing against the earlier start that is projected because by the latter half of July we have usually had a good downpour of rain and the going is as good then and often better than it is at the latter end of September when the rain begins to slow down and the ground gets hard very quickly. Towards the end of the meetings last year it was very hard and as bad as we get it in the cold weather. An earlier beginning is therefore a move in a right direction, though our friends of the Tollygunge Club may not be over-pleased at an encroachment upon one at any rate of their dates. There are, however, two other Saturdays available in July for Tollygunge, the 8th and the 15th, and the Club have all June to themselves. Presumably therefore we shall have racing of some sort or another from about the middle of June onwards till the middle of September, a possibility of fourteen days sport in all and the only thing now to be considered is whether we have, or we shall have, sufficient material to carry us through. The delay in getting out the Monsoon programme must necessarily militate against its success and in a year when Calcutta must be to a very large extent dependent upon outside support it is regrettable that the delay should have been permitted to take place.

It will be a year when it ought not to be very difficult to win races and therefore any owner with a string not quite good enough for the first-class meetings might calculate upon having a good time. The local opposition is weak and although Mr. Galstaun will probably give some of his second line of defence a chance of justifying their existence, there is nothing of much good amongst them and nothing certainly amongst the other local horses at all likely to prove difficult to beat. Butlin and Bloss are the only two local trainers in Calcutta at the moment and they have neither of them a great deal, the former having the more useful string. Of the privately-trained ones the list is not formidable and as to the closed races anyone with a fairly smart horse or pony should be able to do a bit more than pay the hay and corn bill. To Kalon is the best of the hunters, but as she is pretty certain to quickly lose her "hunter" qualification by winning over the Rs. 500 limit she will not be a stumblingblock for very long. Next to her there is nothing very much unless Mr. Butler's Levi turns out a jewel of price, but so far he has done nothing and Alarm Clock, his other one, is also a horse that has yet to justify his being considered a good one. But after these and Mandeville II (Captain Gourlie's) there is nothing worth talking about. In the open jumper class, and these meetings are practically hurdle meetings, we have Tommy Daw and Maisonette, Mimicry, Blix and virtually nothing else, whilst in the pony class Marconi who is up at the top of the weights, Scarboro and Pathfinder II are at present about the strength of the opposition. In the open pony class Spec, Bandy Leg, old Wal and possibly another one or two is about the sum total. On the flat things are not much better and certainly in the pony races there is nothing that is at all likely to give anything of any class any trouble. The situation is, shortly, that this will be a very fine Tom Tiddler's ground for any one with a talent for picking up apples and pears. We therefore strongly advise the invader to gird up his loins, select his most trusty Excalibur, and proceed to organise a raid upon our defenceless citadel. The gates are thrown open to him and he is asked to come down and help himself to the spoils—if he can.

Outside what may come under professional care and anything Mr. Galstaun may order on service of the class of Yum Yum, Princess San, Convent Girl, etc. there is very little and to shortly run over the list of horses privately trained which represent our main line of resistance there are those already referred to of Mr. Butler's, namely, Levi, Alarm Clock and a new brown; Mr. Lamond Walker's Tommy Daw, Jaffa Girl, Velodin, a possible competitor in closed races; Captain Gourlie's Mandeville II at present up in Saharanpore summering Lah, who is out at grass at Ballygunge, Marco , the pony jumper, and Posco, the flat race mare Captain Gourlie recently bought in Bombay, and so has not done well since her arrival in Calcutta; Mr. R. A. C. Pugh's To Kalon, the English mare who won three times last cold weather and also won the Paperchase Cup; Allah Akbar and a new brown mare rather undersized: Mr. Deakin's Bijli, the small country-bred gelding: Brown Mouse, a paperchaser and Scarboro, a pony; Mr. Cowper has Maisonette only so far; Mr. Evers has Pathfinder II and Murmur, the latter for the flat, and Highland Fling may be patched up, but this is doubtful and after these there is a heterogeneous collection of all sorts and conditions of horses mostly for the closed races when the company is not good. Amongst them all Mr. Taylor's Suffragette, a couple Captain Ryves has, Captain Brancker's Enthusiast, Mr. Kinnimouth's The Comet, Mr. Atkinson's Victor, Mr. Dutton's Levant, Mr. Arthur's Meprise, Mr. G. Marshall's Lockmaben and a new chestnut; but after these there is virtually nothing.

Piper is said to be sending up a couple for the Monsoon Meetings, but we fear that they will now be too late to be of much use and Mr. Tanner was said to be sending out some horses from England but they have not arrived so far as we have heard. Mr. J. D. Scott will presumably have a few for the Monsoons as usual, and Captain Liddell they say will come down a gain with Spec, Tod, etc., and Thomas who has some of "Mr. Leek's" horses may likewise arrive, but at present the prospects are poor and there is a very good chance for any one with a few good horses to come down and take tea with Calcutta. A couple of moderately good jump horses, a good pony and a horse or two for the flat able to stay about a mile would be a very compact sort of force with which to advance to the attack, for to win a five or six furlong race, even on our patent sand track, of which some of us have such a high opinion, you require a horse that can stay a bit farther than that.

Mr. A. N. Das has, we hear, recently been buying horses in England and has secured a couple that will be sent to Ramshaw's establishment at Bangalore. Mr. Dass is also certain to have a good few for the Monsoon Meetings though he has nothing of much note. He nevertheless usually continues to put up a good score and has twice headed the list of winning owners.

Sunstar's victory in the Two Thousand has caused him to come to the top of the Derby Betting and almost immediately after that race he went to 4 to 1 for the Epsom contest and later to 5 to 2 so that in spite of his not being bred to stay, for Sundridge the sire, though a very fast horse was not notable for his staying proclivities they seem to think he will get the 1½ mile. He is by Amphion out of Sierra and Sunstar's dam is Doris. Through Amphion who was not pre-eminent as a begetter of stayers Sundridge nevertheless gets some of the best staying blood in the Stud Book the leading strains in the pedigree being Vedette, Newminster, Rataplan and Stockwell. Vedette sired Galopin who sired St. Simon, Newminster gave us amongst others Hermit and Lord Clifden who sired Hampton the sire of Perdita II the dam of Persimmon, Florizel II and Diamond Jubilee and like Vedette tracing back to the great Blacklock. Stockwell has transmitted his stoutness to half the horses that are at present racing in England and a good many other places besides and was himself by The Baron out of Pocahontas. Rataplan sired Blue Light who was the dam of Lady Muncaster the dam of Isoletta who as a result of her union with Galopin produced Galicia the dam of Lemberg whose sire was Cyllene. So that when we go into the pedigree and look at the strains that Sundridge has in his veins it makes us doubt yet once again whether breeding is not after all the most absolute toss-up in the world, and whether there is anything in it. By all rules and regulations Sundridge ought to have stayed and all his progeny should do likewise, but in actual practice it has not been found to work out and they have shown nothing more than great brilliance over short distances. On their breeding, however, they all ought to stay and this colt Sunstar may yet prove that there is something in heredity after all and that he is capable of reproducing all the qualities of his great staying forbears. Certainly from the way in which he won the Two Thousand Guineas it would seem as though he were able to go a good deal farther than a mile, for he is recorded as having had his race won as they came out of the Abingdon Mile Bottom and to have come home easily in front of the much fancied Stedfast and the outsider Lycaon. Pietri, who started favourite in spite of his wind trouble, was prominent in the early part of the race and then apparently found his infirmity stopped him for he was left standing still. We must await further details, but the present position so far as the Derby is concerned is that Sunstar is a hot favourite and so his Newmarket performance must have created a vastly favourable impression upon both his own connections and the public. He is in a betting stable and they would not put their money down unless they had something more than a very smart mile performance to go upon. His and Stedfast's performances will be found at the foot of these notes.

Lycaon, Mr. J. B. Joel's second string, who finished third only half a length behind Stedfast is by Cyllene out of La Vierge and since this race has also been backed for the Derby, his price being returned at 16 to 1. He won twice as a two year old the Ham Stakes at Goodwood, 6 furlongs, beating Sceptre filly and Mistress Nell and the Buckenham Stakes (5 furlongs 134 yards) at Newmarket beating Saplato, who was the only other runner, a neck. His performances corrected up to date will also be found at the foot of these notes.

Since our last week's list Beaurepaire, Prince Palatine and Phryxus have all been mentioned in the Derby betting. Beaurepaire is owned by Mr. Raphael and is by Fariman out of Politesse and he only won once as a two-year-old, namely, the Molecombe stakes, 6 furlongs, at Goodwood in which he defeated Borrow at an advantage of 4lb., the latter having it will be remembered subsequently won the Middle Park Plate. His performances are recorded at foot.

Prince Palatine is owned by Mr. T. Pilkington and is by Persimmon out of Lady Lightfoot. He won three races in his juvenile days the Bedfont Plate, 6 furlongs, at Kempton beating Wise Gift and Brogue; the Donnington Castle Maiden Two-Year-Old Plate, 5 furlongs, at Newbury beating Dilwyn a very large extent dependent upon outside support it is regrettable that the delay should have been permitted to take place.

It will be a year when it ought not to be very difficult to win races and therefore any owner with a string not quite good enough for the first-class meetings might calculate upon having a good time. The local opposition is weak and although Mr. Galstaun will probably give some of his second line of defence a chance of justifying their existence, there is nothing of much good amongst them and nothing certainly amongst the other local horses at all likely to prove difficult to beat. Butlin and Bloss are the only two local trainers in Calcutta at the moment and they have neither of them a great deal, the former having the more useful string. Of the privately-trained ones the list is not formidable and as to the closed races anyone with a fairly smart horse or pony should be able to do a bit more than pay the hay and corn bill. To Kalon is the best of the hunters, but as she is pretty certain to quickly lose her "hunter" qualification by winning over the Rs. 500 limit she will not be a stumblingblock for very long. Next to her there is nothing very much unless Mr. Butler's Levi turns out a jewel of price, but so far he has done nothing and Alarm Clock, his other one, is also a horse that has yet to justify his being considered a good one. But after these and Mandeville II (Captain Gourlie's) there is nothing worth talking about. In the open jumper class, and these meetings are practically hurdle meetings, we have Tommy Daw and Maisonette, Mimicry, Blix and virtually nothing else, whilst in the pony class Marconi who is up at the top of the weights, Scarboro and Pathfinder II are at present about the strength of the opposition. In the open pony class Spec, Bandy Leg, old Wal and possibly another one or two is about the sum total. On the flat things are not much better and certainly in the pony races there is nothing that is at all likely to give anything of any class any trouble. The situation is, shortly, that this will be a very fine Tom Tiddler's ground for any one with a talent for picking up apples and pears. We therefore strongly advise the invader to gird up his loins, select his most trusty Excalibur, and proceed to organise a raid upon our defenceless citadel. The gates are thrown open to him and he is asked to come down and help himself to the spoils—if he can.

Outside what may come under professional care and anything Mr. Galstaun may order on service of the class of Yum Yum, Princess San, Convent Girl, etc. there is very little and to shortly run over the list of horses privately trained which represent our main line of resistance there are those already referred to of Mr. Butler's, namely, Levi, Alarm Clock and a new brown; Mr. Lamond Walker's Tommy Daw, Jaffa Girl, Velodia, a possible competitor in closed races; Captain Gourlie's Mandeville II at present up in Saharanpore summering Lah, who is out at grass at Ballygunge, Marco , the pony jumper, and Posco, the flat race mare aptain Gourlie recently bought in Bombay, and o has not done well since her arrival in Calc a; Mr. R. A. C. Pugh's To Kalon, the English mare who won three times last cold weather and also won the Paperchase Cup; Allah Akbar and a new brown mare rather undersized; Mr. Deakin's Bijli, the small country-bred gelding; Brown Mouse, a paperchaser and Scarboro, a pony; Mr. Cowper has Maisonette only so far; Mr. Evers has Pathfinder II and Murmur, the latter for the flat, and Highland Fling may be patched up, but this is doubtful and after these there is a heterogeneous collection of all sorts and conditions of horses mostly for the closed races when the company is not good. Amongst them all Mr. Taylor's Suffragette, a couple Captain Ryves has, Captain Brancker's Enthusiast, Mr. Kinnimouth's The Comet, Mr. Atkinson's Victor, Mr. Dutton's Levant, Mr. Arthur's Meprise, Mr. G. Marshall's Lockmaben and a new chestnut; but after these there is virtually nothing.

and Blind Justice, and the Imperial Produce Plate, 6 furlongs, at Kempton beating Braxted a neck, Meleager, St. Anton and Sandal next behind the placed ones.

PHRYXUS is owned by "Mr. Fairie" and is by Persimmon out of Phroso and besides his dead heat in the Dewhurst Plate with King William he was only prominent upon one other occasion, namely, when he ran second to Seaforth in the five furlong Michaelmas Plate at Manchester, Sandwich third.

THE Derby Betting corrected up to date is as follows:—

5 to 2 Sunstar.
8 „ 1 Shetland.
8 „ 1 Pietri.
10 „ 1 Lord Burgoyne.
10 „ 1 Stedfast.
10 „ 1 Sobieski.
11 „ 1 Cellini.
12 „ 1 Prince Palatine.
12 „ 1 Phryxus.
16 „ 1 King William.

ATMAH'S success in the One Thousand was probably by no means unexpected by the clever stable in which she is trained and Mr. J. A. de Rothschild, whose exploits with Bronzino last season are still fresh in the recollection of all racing people, must have backed her when she went back to tens and again at sevens, her recovery in the market being attributable only to the one cause. Hair Trigger II. and Knockfeerna were both better favourites than the winner but the danger to Atmah did not come from either of these quarters but from the outsider Radiancy owned by Mr. Jack Joel who made a great bid for victory and only missed placing the second of the big three-year-old classics to her owner's credit by a short head. Atmah, who is by Galeazzo out of Mrs. Kendal, did not score as a two-year-old but she ran well on more than one occasion her performance in the Dewhurst Plate being distinctly meritorious. She ran third in the New Biennial 5 furlongs at Ascot, 6st 13lb., to the three-year-olds Sunder, 8st. 8lb., and Sunshine 7st.; second in the Wigston Maiden Two-Year-Old Plate, 5 furlongs, at Leicester to Courage; fourth Brookside Plate (5 furlongs 88 yards) Brighton to Waterleaf, Blind Justice and Mesalleanza and last of all third in the Dewhurst Plate only a neck behind King William and Phryxus who dead heated.

RADIANCY, Mr. J. B. Joel's smart filly who so nearly did the trick and placed the Newmarket double event to Israel's credit is by like his Two Thousand winner Sundridge and she is out of Queen Elizabeth. Queen Elizabeth is by Autocrat—Bay Rosalind; Autocrat is by Bay Middleton out of Empress and Bay Rosalind is by Orlando out of Elopement. Queen Elizabeth is the dam of Plebeian who sired Curbstone the dam of Rushcutter. She only won once as a two-year-old, namely, when she secured the Coventry Stakes at Ascot after a severe dust up with Joie de Vivre and Cellini, Ilia and Pietri close up and Phryxus and Zorzal amongst the "also-rans."

KNOCKFEERNA, who is owned by Major Eustace Loder, is by Desmond out of Adula: Desmond by St. Simon—L'Abesse de Jouarre. She won twice last year the Great Breeders' Produce Stakes (5 furlongs) at Liverpool beating Joie de Vivre and Criton and the Cheveley Park Stakes (6 furlongs) at Newmarket beating Thotles and Sceptre filly, Joie de Vivre fourth.

OWING to the Coronation Durbar the Lucknow Autumn Meeting cannot be held this year. The Lucknow Spring Meeting 1912 will be held on 30th January, 1st, 3rd, 5th and 7th February, when the Army Cup will be run for.

OUR Ooty correspondent writes:—Fine weather favoured both days (20th and 22nd April) of the Wellington fixture, as also the first day (25th) of the Ooty races. At Wellington the R. A. M. C. were "At Home," and all the racing arrangements were excellent, everything going without a hitch, while the attendance was good especially on the second day when their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley were present, also most of Ooty Society as well as the Wellington and Coonoor folks.

Fields were not large, there being so few horses up here this season, but the racing was interesting and afforded several close finishes. The Maharaja of Mysore scored twice with that useful pony Master Priam and once each with Priceless and Zephyr, while the Yuvaraj had the good fortune to secure the big race on each day with his Miracle, a black Arab gelding, which was well ridden by Mr. Nicholson, Captain Higgins' good pony Glenbee credited him with two wins and he also brought off the Arab polo scurry with Baroda.

At Ootacamund on the first day's racing (25th) fields were deplorably small. Out of the five events one fell through, being a walk over for the Yuvaraj's Miracle, while for none of the other four events was there a larger number of starters than five. Two races however furnished very close finishes, and the fine riding of Mr. Nicholson, who rode all the winners, was undoubtedly the feature of the day's racing.

ON the second day a start was made at 12-30 with the Tally Ho Cup, a match, which fell to Major A. A. Duff's Nellie Stuart who won easily from Pumpernickel.

The Wellington Plate was annexed comfortably by that good stamp of pony Widgeon, Naughty Novice securing second honours.

Then came the lunch interval, after which four ponies went out for the Newmarket Plate. Zephyr was made favourite for this, but she got shut in on the rails, and the Zemida of Sivagiri's Prominent won a good race from Lady maid.

All the interest centred in the Ootacamund Cup, one and a half miles for horses, for which there were six starters. It was thought that the Yuvaraj's black Miracle could hardly concede 4st. to Mignonette and Merry Bird or 2st. to the others, but he did it and won a very fine race after lying last for the greater part of the distance. We congratulate Mr. Nicholson on his judgment of pace and fine riding, especially in this race. Double Ruff who was going as stiff as a tree in the paddock and had his near hind coronet bandaged secured second honours, being a length ahead of Matsumata at the post. Mignonette after leading for a mile shut up, being unable to stay. The fifth and last race was run in a heavy shower and was appropriated by the unfancied Dabchick, Egara being second and Desert Chief third.

His Excellency Sir A. Lawley, the Miss Lawley and all Ooty Society together with a large contingent from Wellington were present. A very well attended and successful day's racing, comparing favourably with the poor day's sport on first day.

MESSRS. H. AND A. BARTLEY 20A., Portman Street, Portman Square, W., have sent us a list of testimonials from well known people who use the Felt Light Exercise Saddle manufactured by them and all speak most highly in praise of the saddle. The saddles are being used for steeplechasing, polo, Lady's astride and children with the greatest success and the following advantages should commend them to horse owners. Their extreme lightness: cannot give horse sore back. If they have a sore back it is the only saddle which can be comfortably worn. They place the weight of the rider slightly more forward than the old style of saddle: a great advantage for race riding

A tall man can ride with his stirrups extremely short without having his knees right off the saddle, as this saddle is cut more forward than the old style. The tree cannot be broken or spread. The price is less than half of an ordinary saddle. It is exceptionally nice to ride jumping in, also for backing horses for first time as stirrups can be dispensed with. Exercise clothing does not slip back to the extent it does with ordinary saddles. They cannot go down on to a horse's withers. These saddles can be made in different sizes to suit customers, and can be made about 2lb. in weight for race riding, for which they are very suitable.

The following motion was put to the vote and carried at a General Meeting of the Burma Polo Association, held at Maymyo, on the 17th ultimo.

Proposed by Mr. F. C. Lowis and seconded by Lieutenant H. M. Hogg.

That the height of Arab and country-bred ponies be raised from 12-3 to 13 hands, the same as for Burma-bred ponies.

The number of outside votes received on voting slips were thirty-six and ten against. At the meeting of those who had not already voted, there were eight for and nil against. Total number: for forty-four; against ten.

The requisite percentage for of 75 per cent. having been reached, the proposal was carried.

The proposal came into effect from the 23rd April 1911.

Polo men all over the country will be glad to hear that the lease of the Rochampton Club is to be renewed for twenty-one years on most satisfactory terms. The acquisition of forty-five acres of grassland on the Wimbledon side of the park and astrip of garden and orchard bordering Rochampton Lane on the east will enable the Directors to make the two chief grounds of regulation size—300 yards by 150 yards. An effort is being made to improve the croquet lawns and the tennis courts, and the club will be looked on as the leading one of its kind in the United Kingdom. The grounds will certainly be the largest in the country, for neither Ranelagh nor Hurlingham approaches the 103 acres now possessed by Rochampton.

The English polo team in America appear to be getting a lot of practice and are showing good form. In New York early last week, with Cheape absent owing to indisposition, they defeated Scrub's team by 6¾ goals to 5½. The scores aggregated respectively 8 and 7 but, owing to rough play on both sides and fouls, were cut down.

On Saturday Messrs. Palmes, Edwards, Cheape and Lloyd, playing an excellent strategic game, defeated a strong American team by 9¾ goals to 6. Messrs. Cheape and Edwards scored fine goals and evoked great applause.

A Polo Tournament on the American system was recently held at Wellington. Three teams took prat—14th Hussars "B" team (Messrs. J. A. T. Miller 1, A. E. H. Fetherstonhaugh 2, and Astley 3); 43rd Light Infantry (W. G. Tolson 1, R. Stephens 2, and Captain C. G. Higgins 3); and Wellington Gymkhana (J. I. Powell 1, F. H. Beaufort 2, and Captain A. H. Milward 3). The 14th Hussars had also entered for the tournament but had to retire owing to the sudden illness of Mr. Nicholson. The result was a win for the 43rd Light Infantry with 10 points, the 14th Hussars "B" second with 8, and the Gymkhana next with 2. The three silver cups given by the 43rd Light Infantry for the event, were presented to the members of the winning team by Mrs. Lamotte at the conclusion of the regimental "At Home," which marked the occasion. The following are the results of the matches:—

The National Lawn Tennis Association, finding it impossible to secure a team to go both to England and New Zealand, has telegraphed to the English Lawn Tennis Association declining to play preliminary matches in England.

The Lakshmibilas Cup Hockey Tournament brought together St. Columbus College from Hazaribagh and Bishops College the holders in the final. The first game ended in a draw but in the replay last Friday the Hazaribagh team beat the holders by 2 goals to 1 after a fast and interesting game.

"Pedlar" Palmer, the well-known pugilist, who was sentenced in 1907 to five years' penal servitude for manslaughter was released last month. He has thoughts of re-entering the ring.

We notice that a boxing entertainment is billed to take place at the Empire Theatre on Saturday next, when Bill Fisher will meet Corporal Sherwood for a purse of Rs. 750. The Dixie Kid is to take the ring with "The Unknown" and five other interesting events will fill out the programme.

The Seventeenth Annual Tournament for the Beighton Hockey Cup was concluded on Saturday last when the Calcutta Rangers A. C. and the Y.M.C.A. Amateurs met in the final on the C. F. C. Ground in the presence of a big crowd. The game was interesting throughout and though the Rangers won they did not have the walk over that was expected. For they only just got through by the odd goal in 3. Details further on.

Paddy Gill, the boxer, who recently met the Dixie Kid in Calcutta, and was quite outclassed and knocked out in four rounds, is now in Madras where he has issued a challenge to anyone at 9 stone. Lance-Corporal C. Shepherd of "F" Company, The Leicester Regiment at Bellary is anxious to fight Gill and a meeting may be brought about shortly.

Two shooters went out ferreting—each with his pet ferret in his pocket. They arrived at a likely fence, and each took a side of the fence and waited for the other to put in the first ferret. After some time, as no rabbit bolted, both sportsmen put their ears to the rabbit-hole to discover if the ferret was busy or not. As they heard no sounds, each sat down and had a quiet pipe. When this was finished, and still no signs appeared of rabbit or ferret, A said to B, "I think I'll put my ferret in now." "What!" said B, "do you mean to tell me you have not put your ferret in? Why, I was waiting till he came out to put mine in!"

The story of the ugly duckling seems an appropriate fable to turn into reality at the Zoo, and though this sort of surprise is familiar enough in these topsy-turvy times, it does not occur very often in the region of hard-and-fast classification which we know as natural history. In Hanover Square, where the Royal Zoologists keep their archives, they will show you all the nations of the earth, zoologically speaking, and almost try to persuade you, as Faust said, that there is nothing more to know. Yet species keep on turning up in remote places, and these learned gentlemen are continually lecturing on novelties. This time the all-surprising "find" has turned up, not in the centre of Africa, but in the heart of Regent's Park. An uncouth amphibian that has been enjoying a life of what Mr. Asquith would call "sloppiness" turns out to be a rarity unguessed. Some savants pointed to his fins and said he was a Ross's seal; others discoursed upon his habits, and pronounced him something else. It now turns out that his nose is lengthening "visibly," and in little or no time he will be full-blown sea elephant. We hope they will break the tidings to him gently, for we dare swear that, like the rest of us, his ambitions run counter to his state of life.

His Excellency Lord Hardinge shot his first tiger last week at Khansamaroo in the jungles near Dehra Doon. Stripes was driven out of a beat in front of the Viceroy's machan and was shot by H. E. The animal measured 10 feet and was in fine condition.

We regret to report that Mr. G. S. Butterworth, Assistant Conservator of Forests, was severely mauled by a tiger in the jungles near Dharwar last week. Mr. Butterworth was out with Mr. P. G. E. Aitchison, Deputy Conservator of Forests, when they came across a tiger and a tigress. They accounted for the latter but the tiger escaped. They followed but lost his track and suddenly the animal appeared and seized Mr. Butterworth. His companion fired twice and killed the brute and the wounded man was brought in to Hubli and thence taken to the Belgaum hospital where he is reported to be progressing favourably.

Among the angling records of the past season, according to a report just issued, the following are the most notable:—A 30lb. pike, Norfolk Broads; a pike of 20lb. 2oz., Thames, near Oxford; a roach of 2lb. 9oz., the Hampshire Avon and the Bedfordshire Ouse; a remarkable dace of 1lb. 6½oz., the Gade, a Hertfordshire stream; a perch, 3lb. 12½oz., private water at East Grinstead, Sussex; a bream, 6lb. 11oz., Caledon, Ireland; a fine chub of 6lb., in the Thames; and 6lb. 4oz., at Christchurch, Hampshire.

At a meeting of the Council of the Billiards Control Club a letter from John Roberts, on behalf of George Gray, in which he intimated that Gray wished to compete for the Championship of England in 1912, was considered. The application was thought to be premature, and the Secretary was requested to reply to the effect that after the match for the championship of the present year, which is to be played at the Caxton Hall, 17th to 29th April, the Council would fix dates between which entries for 1912 might be received, when it was hoped Roberts would again apply on Gray's behalf.

That Gray should enter for the championship was welcomed by the Council, but there is a possibility that some of the conditions which govern the championship of English billiards may be modified, and till that is settled it is thought unadvisable to accept entries.

There are questions pending respecting the division of the gate-money, as the present rule 7 bears rather heavily on the loser; and there is also a question whether the Billiards Control Club, which is at considerable trouble in the matter and put to incidental expense, should not have a small percentage of the gate-money. These matters will be considered by those chiefly concerned, including the professional players.

H. M. THE KING, who has become patron of the International Horse Show to be held at Olympia from 12th to 24th June has offered a gold cup of the value of £500 for jumping round the course by individual miltary officers of any nationality. The prize will be known as the King George Gold Cup. The King Edward £500 Gold Cup is again offered this year for competition by teams of officers of any nationality. Competitors for the King George trophy must ride in uniform, and the course will contain eight jumps. The other regulations for the competition are as follows:—

Officers and Government horses only can be entered.

No officer may make more than one entry or ride more than one horse in this competition. A Government or cavalry school can enter several horses, provided they are ridden by different officers.

This cup to be held for one year by the exhibitor, and to be returned to the International Horse Show, London, by 1st June 1912.

To be won three times, either in succession or at intervals, before becoming the absolute property of any exhibitor.

Faults recorded as in jumping round the course, rule 2. In the case of an equality of faults, the Directors will require competitors to jump again.

Entries will close at the Secretary's office at Olympia at 10 A.M. on the day before that fixed for holding the competition.

THE replay of the final tie for the English Football Cup between Bradford City and Newcastle United was brought off at Manchester on the 26th ultimo in the presence of seventy thousand spectators. The weather was fine, though a strong wind was blowing.

Newcastle forced the game, and were several times near scoring. They forced numerous corners, but without success and Bradford at length broke away and shot a goal. Newcastle made strenuous efforts to equalise but without result, the defence being too good.

On resuming, Newcastle attacked strongly, Bradford then became aggressive, but Newcastle's defence was splendid. Towards the end, Newcastle made most desperate efforts, to equalise, but they met with no success.

THE Marylebone Cricket Club on 6th March adopted the following scheme for the county championship matches:—In the case of a completed match, the winners will score five points. For a match not completed, the winners on the first innings will score three points. In the event of a tie, the points will be divided. The matches in which the first inning is not completed will not be reckoned.

At a meeting of the Advisory County Committee of the Marylebone Cricket Club, last week in reference to the above scheme, it was agreed that the side which was behind in the first innings of an unfinished match should score one point, and the side losing the toss in the first match should have the choice in the return match.

A BIG Fête is being arranged for the 17th June in Simla and promises to be a highly entertaining and novel affair. The Viceroy, Commander-in-Chief and Lieutenant-Governor have accorded their patronage and now Sub-Committees are busily engaged in working out their own programmes, and arranging for their respective side shows and amusements.

The object of the Fête is to give the whole of Simla public a good day's amusements on the occasion of the Coronation. It will, of course, be self-supporting, and if the various branches of the Fête are made sufficiently attractive, there is no doubt that a considerable surplus should be realised. Since the Annandale Gymkhana Club is taking all responsibility for the financial success of the entertainment, a fair proportion of the profits will be devoted to reducing the present debt of the Club. It is hoped, however, that there will be a sufficient profit to enable a substantial amount to be devoted to general charitable public objects.

It is intended to arrange some good wrestling matches and prizes worth at least 500 rupees will be offered for Indian wrestlers.

The Native Hill Chiefs will be invited to bring their archers, dancers and jugglers, and swings, merry-go-rounds, and Aunt Sallies will be provided.

The programme of the Athletic meeting will include events open to (a) British Troops and auxiliary forces (b) Indian Troops (c) Residents of Simla (d) Khud races, and special sports for the neighbouring hill men.

For (a), (b) and (c) there will be a mile, half-mile, quarter mile, and 100 yards races, also tugs-of-war, catch weights and 120 stone competitions (teams of 10), and a quarter mile race open to Volunteers only.

The entrance fees for the races will be two rupees each and for the tugs-of-war ten rupees a team.

All entries should be made before the 20th May. Names of competitors should be sent (with entrance fees) to Captain H. Clarke, R. A., Stoke Lodge, Simla, from whom any further information can be obtained. Prizes will be both in money and in kind.

Ample arrangements will be made for catering for the public, the Club premises being thrown open for the purpose. Al fresco dinners will be provided, the grounds being illuminated and a firework display will take place in the evening. Two bands will, if possible, be engaged for the day. Details regarding the arrangement of the grounds will be settled later.

A Grand Lucky Bag towards which the public are invited to give prizes, of all descriptions, will be organised. Tickets for chances in the bag will be one rupee each.

A POLO Challenge Cup, presented by H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore, is played for every year about the time of His Highness' Birthday, and during the Mysore Race Meeting in June. The Cup remains in the possession of the winning team for one year, but if any team wins it three years in succession, the Cup is won outright and becomes its property. In addition to the Challenge Cup, a small Cup will be given to each player of the winning team. The tournament is open to teams of Officers for any Regiment, Depôt, Battery or Batteries quartered in one station, and to teams composed of bonâ-fide resident members of any single recognised Gymkhana or Club. The Tournament will begin on Friday, the 9th June, and entries close on the 15th May.

THE first half of the World's Racquet Championship, the best of seven games, was played at Queen's Club on the 29th ultimo between Jamsetji, the present Champion, and Charles Williams, the English Professional Champion. The result was a win for Williams by 4 games to love.

The scores were 18-15, 15-2, 15-9, 15-8.

Jamsetji started brilliantly and confidently, but was outclassed throughout. Williams was infinitely quicker, and inferior to his opponent in the matter of serving only. The second half is fixed for 13th May at Prince's Club.

ON Monday last Ernest Barry met Albany in their race for the English Sculling Championship for £200 aside and the Sportsman Challenge Cup, over the Thames Championship course from Putney to Mortlake. The weather was bright though gusty and they sculled against a head wind throughout. Barry was quickest away but Albany soon shot to the front and was two lengths ahead at Craven steps. He had increased his lead to three lengths at Harrod's but Barry then began to overhaul him. At Hammersmith Albany led by a length but Barry spurted and, passing his opponent, eventually won comfortably by seven lengths and thus retained his title to the Championship of England which he had secured by defeating George Towns in 1908. The time on the present occasion was 23mins. 2secs. while that of his previous victory was 21mins. 12⅘secs.

THE difficulty of providing suitable material for hsirts and other garments for Europeans in hot climates is a long standing one. Messrs. Turnbull and Asser of 71 and 72, Jermyn Street, S.W., have made a number of experiments with the object of producing a material that should best answer this purpose and they claim that Soltego-flannel has practically solved the problem. Three things are essential in a material intended to be used for this purpose. (1) It should not be too heavy in weight. (2) It should be of a woollen nature in order to absorb the perspiration. (3) It should, if possible, afford protection from the rays of the sun. These points have been kept in view in the production of "Soltego" and it is particularly its sun-resisting qualities which commend it to those using it in tropical climates. It is a well-known scientific fact that certain colours have the peculiar property of deflecting the rays of the sun. This is the essential idea that is carried out in "Soltego" flannel.

The material was produced two years ago for Indian and tropical wear and the result has exceeded all expectations. There has scarcely been time for Soltego to become generally known but it is being sold freely and the number of enquiries from India convinces manufacturers that it is a material that will prove itself to be of great service to those using it in hot climates.

London Week by Week.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

FRIDAY, 14th April 1911.

A NOVEL suggestion connected with British rule in India has just been made before a London audience by a mild Hindoo named K. Vyasa Rao. The occasion was a meeting of the East India Association and the lecture delivered by the ingenious Vyasa was entitled "A Statutory Royal Viceroy for India." Your mild Hindoo as a rule prefers something tangible to remind him of his rather numerous gods, even an irregular chunk of old black stone bedaubed with vermilion will do at a pinch; so with his Emperor he wants—at least Vyasa Rao says he does—something more approaching the actual Imperial being than a mere Viceroy. The Viceroy is all very well, but he is after all a glorified "nowker," what is desired is a real, live royalty to do the "hathi per howdah, ghora per jin" business which so impressed the mind of the Aryan brother in "Lat Warren Hoshteen's" time.

For some time past, the lecturer said, the idea of vesting the Indian Viceroyalty in a member of the Royal family of England had been occurring to the minds of many people who had thought about Indian affairs. Such a creation would amount to a separation of the offices of Governor-General and Viceroy. The functions of a Royal Viceroy would be threefold. First, he would be the source from which all honours, mercy and pardon, proclamations and charters, recognition of succession to States, treaties and conventions, proceeded and emanated; second, he would be in contact with rulers of native States through the Governor-General in Council on the one hand, and the Imperial Council of Chiefs on the other, and would be the determining authority in India in regard to important questions affecting native States; third, in all matters whatsoever he would possess the extraordinary power of referring any question pertaining to British India or native States to the decision of the Cabinet. To the Indian a country without a King was a body without the soul. He looked upon official administration as a system that had no human element in it.

Would not the coming Royal visit be precisely the occasion when the King could leave behind him as his Viceroy a member of the Royal family, in accordance with statutory provisions that might be enacted by that time? India had far greater need for their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught as the first Viceroy and Vicereine than any other part of the British Dominions, Canada included. The visit of their Majesties would be a fitting opportunity for riveting the bonds between England and India in all possible directions, and for leaving behind a landmark of constitutional import between the two countries.

Though Mr. Vyasa Rao is doubtless a nonentity—I do not remember having heard of him before, at any rate—he has obviously touched the spot when he asserts that Royalty appeals to the imagination of Eastern peoples. But the idea of setting up in India two gentlemen of practically equal status is wholly impracticable. We have only to recall the rumpus which arose not so long ago when a certain Governor-General and even so humble a person as a Commander-in-Chief had differences of opinion to shudder at the thought of the field of doubt and discussion the gentle Vyasa's suggestion conjures up!

SIR ALFRED COMYN LYALL, K.C.B., G.C.I.E., ex-Indian satrap, distinguished writer and well-tried public servant, died at Farringford, Freshwater, Lord Tennyson's place, last Monday, as the result of an attack of angina pectoris. Sir Alfred, a son of the Rev. Alfred Lyall, was born at Coulsdon in 1835, and educated at Eton. He was appointed Home Secretary in India in 1873, Foreign Secretary in 1878, and Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces in 1882, having in 1881 been created a K.C.B. He was formerly Secretary to the Order of the Star of India and the Order of the Indian Empire. On his retirement in 1902 he was made a Privy Councillor.

Sir Alfred gained as much distinction in literature as in the public service, being the author of "Asiatic Studies, Religious and Social," and of a volume of poems. THE death of Sir Thomas De la Rue is a reminder of how seemingly small a matter suffices for fame. Sir Thomas De la Rue made an enormous number of our postage-stamps. It now appears the easiest thing in the world to make a postage-stamp. But that is because we have learnt how. In the early days of penny postage the stamp was quite a problem. Even when printed and perforated, it had to be rendered adhesive. Quickness in gumming was one of the causes of the success gained by the De la Rues. If we find it hard to realise that such small matters could ever have been of moment, we only need to remember that in 1840 "considerable diversion was created in the City by the appearance of the new penny-post devices for envelopes, half-sheet letters, and bits of sticking-plaster for dabbing on to letters." Considerable diversion! How easily our fathers and grandfathers were amused, to be sure! Or would not it be more correct to say, How quickly their children have lost the capacity for being amused and astounded by small things!

THE interesting but all too brief rackets season is now in full swing and is rendered doubly interesting this year by the fact that your good old Jamsetji has come over from India to defend his title in answer to the challenge from C. Williams, the Harrow professional.

A short time ago most of the critics were fully of the opinion that Williams would recover the title for England and in all probability gain a fairly easy victory. On Saturday last, however, the wily Parsee confounded his critics by defeating Mr. E. M. Baerlein, the amateur champion, by four games to love.

The form shown by Jamsetji in this match was simply astonishing. He pulled the first game out of the fire after being led by 12—5. After that, well though Mr. Baerlein played at times, there was only one man in it, and that was not the amateur champion.

Jamsetji's service was extraordinarily good, and the manner in which he finished off the rallies was amazing. He hit tremendously hard and the ball was rarely a foot above the board. The most remarkable feature of his play is the enormous swing that he takes at the ball. Even when he is "tucked up" in a corner and returning a back-handed shot his racket seems to describe a circle, and where most men would be forced to play a kind of forcing half-arm shot Jamsetji brings his racket right through.

It has been put forward that the Parsee has become slow in the court (it is eight years since he won the championship from Gilbert Browne). That may be true, but if he plays against Williams as he did against Mr. Baerlein he will not need to run very much. It is his opponent who has to do all the running about.

It is rumoured that before the game at Queen's last Saturday a well-known sportsman went up to Jamsetji and begged him to play up and make a match of it, else all interest in his match with Williams at the end of the month would disappear. Jamsetji is reported to have smiled sadly and remarked, "I will play up a leetle." He certainly did, and the old habitues of the gallery at Queen's were dumbfounded and owned that they had never seen a more brilliant exhibition.

As usual, this a quiet week so far as the theatres are concerned, though the Easter burst of premieres may be said to begin on Saturday night, when no fewer than three houses—the Playhouse, the Duke of York's, and the Queen's—will be presenting new pieces, long or short. Next week each evening, save Friday, is taken up with the production of a new play; while there is a rumour that, shortly after Easter, a new comedy by either Mr. Bernard Shaw or Mr. Barker will be produced at the Little Theatre. Meanwhile, it may be interesting to mention here that Dr. Archibald Henderson's account of Mr. Shaw's life and work is at last in book form, and made its appearance on the bookstalls on Tuesday. Mr. Bernard Shaw has been much biographied, and, oddly enough brilliant and provocative as he always is, the books about him have sometimes been portentously dull. To-day we have the "authorised biography"—five hundred closely printed pages, many interesting illustrations, and a genealogical chart of the Shaw family! But the book is disappointing. Its scheme is cumbersome, its spirit is certainly not helpfully critical. It is impossible not to feel again and again how much better it might have been done.

"THE LITTLE ONE ARMED TRACKER."

A STORY OF THE BURMESE JUNGLES.

BY A. ST. JOHN WRIGHT.

"WHAT a luxury a dak bungalow seemed after the last three weeks which I had spent partly in a tent, but chiefly in leaky native houses and decayed zyats." It was during the first rains, and I was on the move to some bamboo jungles three or four marches south, where I heard there were some Tsine (Bos-sondaicus). I had come back to more or less civilization again, only for one night however, as on the next day I had to be on the move early, when it would be the best part of five weeks, I hoped before I should see a white man again.

My Madrasi "boy" had cooked me an excellent dinner, which I had thoroughly enjoyed, and I had just seen the "Tagee" (head man). My interview with him, as regards the coolies, was most satisfactory, he promised, that with the aid of a neighbouring village, he would have the men ready for a start at daybreak.

I was able therefore, to settle myself down, and enjoy my pipe, with that self-satisfied feeling that only comes after a wash and a meal, when one has had a long and tiring trek in the jungle from sunrise to sunset. I was not to be left long in peace, however, for after a few minutes my "boy" came up on to the verandah to say that a sahib from the next village was coming to see me. As I was in the middle of trying to get a little information from him, in walked my visitor.

"My name is Wills," he said, "I am in the police, and am at Yebue the village over the way. I heard you were here so I came across to see if there is anything you want. I hear you have been doing rather well, three bison so my 'lugalee' tells me."

"Oh yes," I answered, "I suppose I ought to consider myself very lucky, I had to work very hard for them though, the jungle is beginning to get fairly thick now. The villagers were energetic enough in helping me to get my first beast, but after they had got their meat, their keenness began to wear off a bit. So I am now moving off to the bamboo jungles south of here, which I hope to reach in three days time. I want to have a try for a Tsine, there are plenty there so I hear. Anyhow, I have five weeks more of my leave left, so I can afford to look about the place."

"You had better make Ywataung your headquarters then, I can give you a 'chit' for the 'Tagee.' There are only three villages between here and Ywataung, which place you ought to reach the third evening, if you start early to-morrow."

"Do you know this part well?" I asked.

"I was here six years ago, but I have only just come back again. I have been up in the Ruby Mines District for the last two years. As a matter of fact I do know the particular part where you are going rather well. I did my last shoot there, just before I left the district in 1903 for Mandalay. It was in the jungle, across the 'Choung' (water course) west of the village, that I shot the largest bison I have ever seen. I always think that there was something mysterious about that bison, I don't know why, perhaps it was the peculiar manner in which I got on to his tracks, and the uncanny manner in which my tracker suddenly disappeared. "Do you care to hear the story? It is quite early yet, perhaps you may be able to find the same jungle, and bag an equally fine bull. You should certainly try to get hold of the tracker I had. I don't know his name, but he was by far the best man I have ever come across, or ever likely to. He was not very old, and should still be alive, and going strong. He had only one arm I remember, and had also a large scar across his forehead, so you ought to be able to easily pick him out."

After lighting a cheeroot each, which my visitor supplied, he began his story:—"As I was saying, it is six years since I did any shooting in this district. It was in the dry weather before the first rains, and tracking was very difficult. I made Ywataung my headquarters and although I knew that there were bison and Tsine about, yet at the time my story begins, I had been there two weeks, and my bag was nil. I had two fairly good men as trackers who did their work well, considering the difficulty of the ground, but day after day had been blank. It was the same old story of starting out before it was light, and returning at sunset, after tramping up and down the hills all day, without anything to show for our efforts at the end. One evening, after a particularly long day, when I was more done up than usual, I gave orders that on the morrow I should not go out, I knew a rest would do us all good. My boy therefore, had orders not to call me in the morning, but to wait until I called for him. Imagine my feelings then, on being awakened by the well known voice, 'Sah—sah, half past four Sah.' His explanations soon followed. It appeared that a Burman had turned up, who implored me to come with him, and shoot a certain large bison which he would lead me to. After questioning the man, who assured me that I was certain to get the bison if I went with him, I was ready to start. All my ideas of having a long morning in bed were cast aside as soon as I heard his story, although, from experience, I only believed one quarter of what he said. He was the only man who accompanied me, I gave him my rifle to carry, and for some time we went on in silence. Then we reached the 'choung,' which we crossed, and entered the jungle on the further side. I was rather surprised at this, as, during all the time I had been at Ywataung, we had always kept the village side of it. I had on several occasions asked

Radiol

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

the reason of this, as the jungle looked typical bison country, but I had always met with the same answer, 'Oh, that is very bad jungle Thekin, full of spirits.' But to-day my guide, whom I did not remember having seen before, took me right into this very jungle. I asked him a few questions in order to find out why he was so different to the rest in this respect. 'If the Thekin shoots straight all will be well,' was all I could get out of him."

"Anyhow," I thought to myself, "if I get a shot, this day will have been more eventful than the others have." We had now reached a clearing in the jungle, Maunj Bah, which I discovered was the name of my guide, here called a halt. "I leave you here Thekin," he said, and handed me my rifle. I was rather annoyed at this, as I was just beginning to take an interest in him, and I could not see any other man who was going to take me on from here. Maung Bah squatted down beside me, and we both waited for the other man's arrival. I took the opportunity to load both barrels of the rifle, as I saw that the jungle was beginning to get a little thicker. The Burman kept glancing round him. "I hope, whoever is coming will come soon," I said. Before I had finished speaking, I felt a nudge at my arm, and found Maung Bah pointing straight to his front, I looked in that direction, and saw the man who was going to be guide. Little did I then guess that he was going to prove the best tracker I had ever come across, and that he was about to help me get probably the largest bison I am ever likely to see. He was standing under a bamboo clump, about fifteen yards away. What a curious figure he looked, I can see him now as he stood, he was a short thick set man, and had only one arm, and had also a deep scar right across his forehead. He stood there beckoning to follow him. I got up, and leaving Maung Bah who seemed very excited, followed my new man. He always kept exactly the same distance in front of me, and kept silently plodding on, never speaking a word. "Poor fellow, he must be deaf" I thought, "probably the result of an accident."

There is no need for me to describe that day in detail. We went on for miles following the track, how my tracker kept on the trail I don't know. The ground was as hard as iron, and not the slightest trace could I see of the animal's tracks. But, I knew we were going along on his trail, for occasionally we came on the freshly eaten ends of the bamboos off which he had been feeding as he went along. These were the only signs by which I was able to gather that we were on the tracks. How he picked up the trail between these places I could not imagine. My guide kept on at the same pace all the while. There was no halting to examine the ground, no casting around for the tracks. Once I remember we came to a muddy place which still had a little water left, there I could see the animals tracks, how large they looked in the wet soil. It was then that my man showed me what a first class jungle man he was. The tracks, in the wet mud, went straight on in the same direction as we were now going, but the Burman with his arm signalled that I was to follow him to the left. After about half an hour's walking up a steep slope, and down into the valley beyond, we struck the bison's tracks again, he had stopped to feed, and had butted an ant heap with his massive horns. "The man must know the habits of the bison well, and must know every inch of the jungle," I thought, "to be able to hit off the track like this." We had saved an immense amount of time, and must be closing up on him now. As there were no worrying flies to keep him on the move, and as the sun was beginning to make things a bit warm, I knew that the beast would be soon, if not already, lying down for his midday rest. We had just come out of a fairly open teak jungle, where there were absolutely no traces of the animal as far as I could see. But steadily my guide kept on at the same pace, it was as much as I could do to keep up with him. As we reached the top of a rise, I noticed a bamboo jungle about half a mile straight to our front, this was without doubt where the animal was making for. The Burman was not going to give me any reasons for altering the good impressions I had already formed of his capabilities; for on entering this bamboo there was no doubt that the beast had only a very short time before us gone in. The tracker now went slower, and I was able to close up a little. All was absolutely still, not a sound disturbed the jungle. About ten yards in front of me the silent man was plodding along. What struck me most about him, was his self-confidence in himself, he always went straight on, and never looked about him, he seemed to be attracted to the bison as if the animal was a living magnet, that drew him towards him. Suddenly he stopped, and crouched down, I instinctively did the same, then he slowly pointed with his thin arm to a bamboo clump about forty yards away. There I saw the horns and forehead of an immense bison, which was feeding off the shoots. Never in my life have I seen such a magnificent beast. Luckily the wind was in our favour, and the animal was perfectly unaware of our presence. I got round to the right, and after what seemed hours, I had a clear view of his shoulder; he had not moved a yard. Some kind guardian spirit seemed to be presiding over me that day, everything went so smoothly. I was able to rest my rifle against the side of a tree, and kneeling on one knee I took a steady aim, and fired; then I had the satisfaction of seeing the massive beast stagger forwards a few yards, and fall on his side. I gave him the second barrel to make sure, but the first had done its work. My new rifle, a ·500 Cordite had been christened by killing a truly magnificent specimen of the noblest of the jungle's ponderous game. The actual killing of the animal was rather tame compared with the four other bison which I had at different times been lucky enough to get. I seized a small piece of rock and threw it towards the animal, but he was as dead as a door nail. My excellent little tracker I found had come up, and had been at my side when I fired. "Well done Thekin now I can rest," were the only words he spoke, the first words he had said that day, and as a matter of fact the last I ever heard him utter. For I went up to the bison to examine him, and turned round to give him my rifle to carry, but to my astonishment he was not there. Not two seconds before he had been at my side, but now not a sign of him was to be seen anywhere. The ground was quite level, and although I looked high and low, I was unable to find him, he had absolutely vanished into thin air, so it seemed to me. This was rather a serious thing for me, as I had not the slightest idea how far I was from Ywataung. After spending a quarter of an hour in looking for the man, I gave it up and returned to the bison. Luckily Maung Bah had heard my shots, and was coming up. We had travelled almost in a circle, and I was not more than two miles from the village. He congratulated me on shooting the bison. "How do you know I shot him?" I asked, "He told me," was his answer, "But where is he now," I asked. "He is sleeping Thekin," was all that I could get out of him. As soon as we reached the village, four men started out, and came back that evening with the head. I left for Tongoo the next day. I tried to find out all I could about my one armed tracker, but they all seemed very reticent on the matter. I put this down to petty jealousy, because my usual men had not been out with me that day.

"This is really all there is to tell," ended Wills. From the moment I shot the bison I never set eyes on the man again. If you can get hold of him when you get to Ywataung, you will have one of the best men that ever followed any game in the jungle. "Try and find out all you can for me about him, will you?" "And tell me when you come back why he vanished in such a mysterious way." "It is just on eleven, I must be off and let you get a good sleep." "Well so long and good luck in the Ywataung jungles," were Wills' last words, as he disappeared down the verandah steps into the darkness.

In due course I reached Ywataung, and sent for the "Tagee" the same evening, to make enquiries about the local shikaries.

I was not a little amazed, when I was informed that the little one armed man with the scar had been dead nine years.

"I wonder if I have made a mistake, there cannot be two men so much alike."

I felt sure Wills had told me that he had this man out with him six years ago, yet he had at that time been already dead three years, according to the "Tagee's" account. I asked them where they were going to take me next morning.

"The best jungle for bison and Tsine is the bamboo west of here, across the 'choung' they all agreed." Remembering the difficulty Wills had said that he had in getting them to enter this, I said:—"No spirits about I suppose?"

"Not now 'Thekin,' the spirit sleeps for ever."

"What made him go?" I asked.

Then the old man told me the whole story of the haunted jungle, and the one armed tracker.

Shortly, this was to the effect, that about nine years ago an Officer was out shooting in this part, and was one day charged by an infuriated bison, which he had wounded; the bison got away. This Officer was himself badly damaged, but not so seriously as Kosopey the little one armed tracker, who died the same evening, after being carried back to the village. The "Tagee" was with him when he died, his last words were, "I hope the 'Thekin' gets well; but I will haunt the jungle until I bring about the death of the bison." How he accomplished his vow we have already learnt.

"Who was the man Maung Bah who took the police "Thekin" to the jungle when he killed the bison?" I asked. "He was Kosopey's father, the only man who was not afraid to go into the haunted jungle." "I suppose there is no doubt that the bison that the police 'Thekin" shot, is the same animal that killed Kosopey." "No doubt 'Thekin,' we cut three bullets out of the animal, the third was different to the other two, the flesh had closed all over it; and the police 'Thekin' only fired two shots."

Little did Wills guess that he had had as a shikari that day, the spirit of a man who had been dead three years.

"Why did not you tell the police 'Thekin' the story?" "We thought he would be angry, and we knew he would not believe it."

I wondered myself what Wills would say to me, when I told him all that I had learnt about his little one armed tracker.

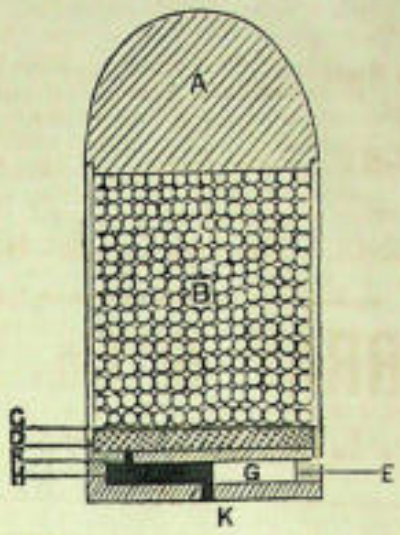
Shooting.

A SHRAPNEL SHELL FOR BALL AND SHOT GUNS.

MANY inventors have attempted to construct some kind or other of shrapnel shell, which shall increase the effective range of shot guns. The main difficulty with a smooth bore is that the projectile has to be spherical, in order to retain sufficient accuracy: and a spherical case holds a very small charge of shot. The John's shrapnel shell, as made to suit the ordinary 12 bore gun, only contained half an ounce of shot, much too light a charge for a gun of such calibre.

The more modern ball and shot gun, which shoots a conical projectile weighing about 1¼ ounces, offers the inventor a much easier basis for the construction of an efficient shrapnel.

A rough sketch (section) is appended, showing a simple form of shrapnel suitable for a ball and shot gun. Certain details would of course have to be carefully worked out. The right situation, for instance, of the small hole communicating from the fuze channel to the bursting charge of powder in the base of the shell.



A = Wooden head of shell.
B = Shot.
C = Card wad separating powder and shot.
D = Powder charge.
E = Plug closing end of fuze channel.
F = Hole from fuze composition into powder charge.
G = Fuze channel.
H = Fuze composition.
K = Igniting hole in centre of base.

The idea is as follows: the shell would consist of an aluminium body, with thin sides but a rather thick base. The thickness of the metal in the base would give room to bore a fuze composition channel from one side nearly through to the other. This channel would be rammed half full of mealed powder, the ramming being done with considerable pressure so as to pack the mealed powder into the form of a hard cylinder, filling the channel tightly up to the centre of the base of the shell. In the centre of the base of the shell a hole would be bored lengthwise to meet the fuze channel at right angles. After the fuze composition is rammed in, the outer end of the channel would be closed by a short screw plug, as shown in the sketch. A small hole would also have to be bored in the inside of the shell, so as to meet the fuze composition. It is clear that the further from the inside centre of the shell's base this last hole is bored, the longer will the fuse burn, before igniting the powder charge under the card wad in the shell.

Mealed powder rammed tight burns an inch in 2½ seconds As the diameter of the shell would be about ·72 inch, and the thickness of metal left at the end of the fuze channel about ·1 inch, the total length of fuze composition to the hole in the base, would be half of ·72 inch less ·1 inch, or as nearly as possible a quarter of an inch.

A quarter of an inch of mealed powder would take about five-eighths of a second to burn. As the average velocity of the shell over ordinary ranges would be in the neighbourhood of 1,100 feet per second, the fuze composition might, with the inside hole bored so as to meet it at the end, be expected to open the shell about 200 yards from the gun. Probably it would be useful to have three kinds of shell, made to burst at 100, 150 and 200 yards. The regulating would, of course, require a great deal of experimenting, and cost a considerable amount, before the shells could be manufactured to such nicety that their bursting at about the right range could be made certain of. There is, however, nothing new in the idea; it is simply a miniature of the shrapnel of field artillery, and merely patient experiment is required to make it act with similar certainty.

It would be necessary to have the twist of rifling of the ball and shot gun a gentle one, in order to avoid unnecessary scattering of the shot, at the moment of burst. With a twist of one turn in five feet, the opening angle would be about one in twenty-six: that is, if the shell burst twenty-six yards short of the object the width of the pattern, due to spin of shell, would be one yard on the target. Of course there would some extra scattering as well due to the explosion of the powder charge in the base of the shell, and it is probable that a shell bursting thirty yards short of a target, would make a pattern five or six feet in diameter.

The action of the shell would be as follows:

The felt wad and card wad in the cartridge case, between the powder and the shrapnel shell would have to have a small hole bored through their centres, to allow the flash of discharge to reach the base of the shell, and ignite the fuze composition. The fuze composition would ignite on firing; and as the outer end of the channel is closed with a plug, the gas from the burning fuze would all escape from the hole in the centre of the base of the shell, and would have no tendency to make it unsteady in flight. On the fuze reaching the little hole into the inside of the shell, it would ignite the small charge of powder under the card wad, and blow the wooden head of the shell off and the shot out. The shot pelets, being thus released, would travel on with the velocity the shell had at the moment of burst.

The object of making the body of the shell of aluminium, and the head of wood, is to save weight. The body and head are useless as projectiles, and the main object, just as with the larger shrapnel of field artillery, is to have the greatest possible percentage of useful weight.

I have shown the body cylindrical in the sketch, but probably it would be necessary to make it with a waist, so as not to offer so much surface to the rifling.

No doubt readers of the INDIAN FIELD may smile at the application of such an elaborate projectile to the purposes of duck shooting. Wildfowl are, however, now becoming so shy in Great Britain, that it becomes harder and harder to reach them with our present duck guns. Choke boring appears to have said its last word, for no practical improvement in the density of gun patterns has been made during the past twenty years. Some device for obtaining killing patterns at long range is certain therefore to be resorted to sooner or later. Why not a shrapnel shell in a rifled ball and shot gun? It appears to be the simplest method of solving the problem.

BLAIR'S GOUT PILLS,

GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, LUMBAGO, NEURALGIA

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.

Newton Abbot, Devon.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"Truly yours, (Signed) SAML. W. BAKER."

LOW PRICE

is one side of the question, and one of the big points that have been instrumental in the success of "Elgin" Tents. In buying "Elgin" Tents you pay nothing more than what you would for any other make—but, you buy with the knowledge that you are getting the kind that has been endorsed by impartial and competent judges as being the best.

TWO SIDES OF A QUESTION

is the other side, and the biggest point in the success of "Elgin" Tents ever since their inception fifty years ago. This High Quality, which has been vigorously maintained ever since the beginning, has never yet been beaten, and assures to you, as to any other purchaser of "Elgin" Tents, the greatest amount of strength and durability that it is possible for a Tent to possess.

Always Reliable

Cartridge reliability when big game's on hand is a matter of supreme concern.

The reliability of 'ELEY' Cartridges is recognised as widely in the old world as in the new. For accuracy no finer cartridges are made.

The following Cartridges are specially recommended :

·405 WINCHESTER
Smoke ext. 300 gr. bullet.

·400 /·360 NITRO EXPRESS
Bullet 300 grs., Cordite 40 grs.

'Moddite'—An improved form of Cordite, practically unaffected by tropical temperatures, is now used in place of Mark I or M.D.S. Cordite for loading ·303, and all Express Cartridges, ·475 bore and under.

'Eley' Cartridges are obtainable throughout the world.

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

THE Newmarket Craven Meeting of 1911 will ever be memorable for the Arctic conditions which prevailed on each of the three days. During the night and early morning snow and frost held sway, but the sun fortunately had sufficient power to clear the tracks of the wintry visitation, and racing was possible. The keen wind, however, had an effect on the attendance, which was small each day, and only a handful of people assisted on the closing afternoon. The course was in capital order, and with fair-sized fields turning out sport was brisk throughout. Results :—

ASSOCIATION RULES.

THANKS to some excellent work during the past five weeks Woolwich Arsenal after an extremely anxious time earlier in the year, are now assured of their place in the First League for another season. On the first Monday in March the Plumstead team, with no more than seven wins and seven draws to set against thirteen defeats, had only 21 points to show for 27 completed engagements and stood absolutely last on the list. Since that date, however, they have struggled on in most plucky and determined fashion beating Everton, Bristol City, Newcastle United, and Tottenham Hotspur and drawing with Aston Villa and Sheffield Wednesday, and in so doing scoring 10 points out of a possible 12—an achievement unequalled during the same period by any other club in the competition. On Saturday in the return encounter with Tottenham Hotspur to that which at White Hart-lane in December had ended in defeat by 3 goal to 1, they were able to place their full strength in the field and, making the most of their chances, placed the issue beyond much doubt before the interval arrived. Chalmers scored directly after the kick-off and Common put on a second point just before half-time. Hotspur, who lacked the assistance of Humphreys, had their fair share of the play, but were weak in front of goal, Minter and Middlemiss missing particularly easy chances.

Woolwich Arsenal now find themselves in company with four other clubs that can show 31 points and owing to Saturday's fine victory occupy an appreciably stronger position than Hotspur, who are one point behind the Plumstead team and have two fewer matches left to play. There exists, however, no occasion to regard the Tottenham team as in danger of losing membership of Division I., in as much as Manchester City, Bury, Nottingham Forest, and Bristol City all stand below them. Indeed, it is difficult to see, considering their disastrous records and the late period of the season, how the Forest and Bristol City can now escape relegation to the Second Division. The fate of the Forest appears absolutely sealed, for their aggregate of points amounts to no more than 25 and they have only two engagements left to fulfil—both away from home and one with Bristol City. The Bristol men, with only 28 points to their credit, are in an almost equally parlous state, but having four games left to play it is possible for them to bring their aggregate up to 31, whereas the Forest cannot possibly get beyond 29. Bury are by no means safe, but Manchester City, beating Everton yesterday, are almost certain to escape the fate which threatened them for several months.

Not only was the question which two clubs will have to go down to the Second League largely determined on Saturday, but the victory of Manchester United over Bury coupled with the surprising defeat of Aston Villa by Preston North End, went a long way towards settling the championship. Until yesterday the Villa, only two points behind the leaders, with a match in hand, looked to possess almost as good a chance as Manchester United of carrying off first honours, but a difference of four points now separates the two clubs. In winning at Bury, Manchester United achieved what only one other team—Bradford City—had accomplished this season, while Preston North End, in defeating the Villa at Aston Park, gained the first victory obtained by any visiting club on that enclosure, the Villa's record for home matches until yesterday reading sixteen games played, thirteen won and three drawn. Outside the matches already referred to the most interesting was that at Bradford, where the Cup finalists, who meet at the Crystal Palace a fortnight hence, tried conclusions. Newcastle United had a good deal the larger share of the play, but Bradford City, as expected, put up a tremendously strong defence, and pulled through by 1 to 0.

Saturday's results in the Second Division went far towards settling the question of promotion. Chelsea beat Fulham, whereas West Bromwich Albion could only draw at Blackpool and Clapton Orient met with no better success at Homerton, where Hull City were the masters. Bolton Wanderers were without a match and the position now is that they lead by a point from Chelsea who have two games in hand; and the London team have one more fixture to fulfil than West Bromwich Albion, who are two points behind them. This state of the struggle, taken in conjunction with current form, suggests that the first two clubs will remain above their fellows and secure membership once more of the First Division. Chelsea have the best record and will probably finish at the top, but this extra honour is a small matter compared to the securing for next season the appearance of all the best clubs in the country at Stamford Bridge.

Swindon, Crystal Palace, and Brighton and Hove Albion all won and retain their relative positions at the head of the Southern League. No doubt the Brighton team—last season's champions—will go up to second place, but it seems impossible for them to overhaul the team who were their runners-up a year ago. Swindon have so long seemed sure of carrying off the chief honours that their success will come as a matter of course. The merit of their performance will be none the less creditable on that account, and it will be attained against sides which are finishing the season very strongly. The fight to avoid the last two places has suddenly become exciting, for, while Bristol Rovers won at home, Portsmouth were the victims of Swindon and Southend United proved successful at Southampton. Everything now points to Portsmouth filling one of the positions, the occupancy of which entails reduction to the Second Division—a very poor prospect for a club which for so many years has been one of the best in the South.

RUGBY RULES.

HARLEQUINS VS. NEWPORT.—This game at Twickenham was the last of the Harlequins' home matches, and, with fine weather prevailing, a good crowd assembled. Neither side was quite at full strength, but the most notable absentee on either side was the English international, R. W. Poulton. Newport had the advantage of a strong wind in the first half, and were slightly the better side. The visitors' kicking was very good, but there was too much of it, and, indeed, both sides played with restraint and seemed afraid to let themselves go. It was twenty minutes from the start before there was any scoring and then, following a dribble by Coldrick, the Harlequins' back scooped the ball very weakly into the hands of E. Thomas, who crossed with a try which Stanley Williams failed to convert. Two attempts by Newport players to drop a goal failed, and at half time Newport led by three points to nothing. Rather early in the second half the Harlequins drew level, a fine effort by Birkett resulting in Thorne sending in Brougham with a try. Lambert just failed to place a goal. Birkett had to leave the field for a time owing to a slight injury, and when he returned he was lame. The play to the end was scrappy and rather uninteresting. Near the finish Newport made desperate efforts to snatch a victory, but without success, and a disappointing game ended in a draw of one try each. Some of the decisions of the referee were freely criticised by the large number of supporters of the Newport club present. Harlequins, 3 points; Newport, 3 points.

ROSSLYN PARK VS. UNITED SERVICES.—There was a great improvement in the weather for this match at Richmond, but still the game was largely spoilt by the high wind which prevailed. United Services turned up two short, and at no time had more than fourteen men in the field, while Rosslyn Park were at full strength and had the advantage of the wind in the first half. The Services, however, defended stubbornly, and at the interval Rosslyn Park only led by one point. Potter and Smith each scored unconverted tries for Rosslyn Park, and after Wilson and Child had taken the game to the other end Raikes scored behind the posts, and Lyon placed a goal for the Services. In the second half the play was fast and keen, both sides pressing in turn. The United Services' backs, however, were much better than those of their opponents, and just before the close Miller made a fine opening for Brown, who ran clear and scored under the posts. Lyon again converted, and the United Services won by two goals to two tries. Services, 10 points; Rosslyn Park, 4 points.

OTLEY VS. HULL AND EAST RIDING.—About 3,000 people attended the Yorkshire Cup final tie at Ilkley, where Otley, showing the better form all round, won by four tries to nothing. In the first half Otley had a strong breeze behind them and they took the lead with tries by Scott and Wilkinson. Hull and East Riding were handicapped by A. H. McIlwaine having to retire for some time owing to an injury. When they had to face the wind Otley continued to play the better game all round, and they never looked like losing their lead. Despite much fine work by the losers they gained two more tries, Hardwick getting over after fine play by Cargill and Tindall putting on a fourth try. Otley, 12 points; Hull and East Riding, 0.

AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS.

DOUBLES CHALLENGE ROUND.

AT Queen's Club, West Kensington, yesterday, B. S. Foster and the Hon. C. N. Bruce defeated their challengers, H. W. Leatham and H. A. Denison, and retained their title of Amateur Doubles Champions.

WINCHESTER

Rifle and Pistol Cartridges

It's the careful and scientific manner in which Winchester cartridges are made and loaded which has earned for them a reputation for accuracy, reliability and uniformity which no other brands can approach. Winchester cartridge shells are carefully inspected before loading for size, length and conformity. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them exact in size, contour and density. Then the loading is done by automatic machinery which not only insures a uniform charge, buts seats the bullet in the shell so that its axis coincides with that of the shell; hence with that of the barrel of the arm. These are a few of the many reasons why Winchester cartridges in all calibers are the most satisfactory on the market.

THEY SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG

Foster and Bruce played much below their form at the outset, and the old Charterhouse boys, playing finely in the court, gained a lead of two games to love. Subsequently, the holders found their game, and in the end secured the rubber by 4 games to 2. When once he got going Foster played a great game, the Old Malvernian displaying great brilliancy in the rallies, and making excellent use of the side walls. Bruce was overshadowed by his brilliant partner, but was generally safe. Their opponents, on the other hand, fell away considerably in their play after the start, hit wildly at times, and were seldom successful in killing the ball. Still, they made a good effort in the last game, and led at 9—6, while "12 all" was eventually called.

Mr. E. M. Baerlein vs. Jamsetjee.—A match between W. Jamsetjee, the champion of the world, and Mr. E. M. Baerlein, the amateur champion, was played at Queen's Club, West Kensington, on Friday. The professional conceded three aces, and after the first game it was plain that his task presented little difficulty. Mr. Baerlein showed good form, his hitting in the rallies being good, and he made excellent use of the angles. The Parsee, however, outplayed him generally in the court and showed by far the better service. The scores in favour of Jamsetjee were 17—16 15—5, 15—6, 15—7.

The best sequences in the first nine innings were three to each player, but later a run of five took the amateur to 12-5. Jamsetjee subsequently drew level at "12 all," and in the end won the game after it had been "set three" at "14 all." In the second game Mr. Baerlein scored two aces before his opponent got going, but he failed to do anything afterwards, and Jamsetjee made game by the aid of two sequences of six. Hands were small and unproductive in the third game, fourteen being taken before the professional getting possession at 8—6, went to "game." The fourth game ran on much the same lines, small innings being the order, but the superiority of Jamsetjee was very marked.

BOXING.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Those who dislike bloodshed and object to seeing people carried away more or less insensible should make it a point to avoid the Public School boxing championships.

This year's competitions, held at the Army Gymnasium, Aldershot, were of a particularly fierce character, and it is doubtful whether ever before so many bouts have been finished so abruptly either through one of the combatants being knocked clean out or the judges stopping the contest when the odds were hopeless.

The public schoolboy, when fighting for the honour of his school, is a particularly fierce person. He is there, if possible, to knock his opponent out, and is not troubled with any false notions about making it easy for the other fellow, more especially as, if he slowed up at all, the other fellow might very well recuperate and knock him out.

Some of the bouts were certainly rather strong meat, and gentle mothers and sisters who had come up to see the r sons and brothers perform, wilted visibly as they gazed on the object of their interest smothered in blood from head to foot or carried insensible from the ring by the callous "Tommies" who were deputed to act as seconds.

But there was not a spark of ill-feeling or temper throughout the many bouts, and as soon as ever a decision was given or a knocked-out hero had sufficiently recovered consciousness, the erstwhile deadly foes would shake each other warmly by the hand and beam. The English public schoolboy may be a bloodthirsty little animal, but he is a sportsman right through.

The keynote of the whole proceedings was struck by one badly battered youth, who, hopelessly outboxed, and mercifully ruled out in the second round, looked wistfully at the judge and gasped "Can't we finish it?"

H. T. Bostock, of Oundle, a young giant scaling fourteen stone, made very short work of all his opponents in the heavy-weights. Not one lasted more than two rounds.

The middle-weights were won by a clever boxer and fighter in E. M. Bear, of Bedford Grammar School. His opponent in the final, P. W. Paskin, of Rugby, was very plucky, but was outclassed in the last two rounds.

T. D. Dewar, of Rugby, defeated R. S. Montagu-Marks in the final of the light-weights, Marks had just previously fought three severe rounds, and had hardly recovered, while Dewar was comparatively fresh.

The cleverest of them all is R. Erskine, of Allan Glen's School, was the winner of the feathers. This boy is a remarkably fine young boxer, and should certainly make a name for himself later on. He toyed in the final with F. L. Roy, a swarthy young Frenchman, though the latter never gave up trying.

R. V. Boutledge, of Felsted, who won the bantams last year repeated his victory. Results:—

Heavy-weights.—Final: H. T. Bostock (Oundle School) beat Harry Jones (Sherborne).

Middle-weights.—F. M. Bear (Bedford) beat R. W. Paskin (Rugby).

Hockey.

THE BEIGHTON CUP TOURNAMENT.

The seventeenth Beighton Hockey Cup Tournament must be recorded as one of surprises and disappointments, but for all that I must congratulate the Rangers on their success in winning the much coveted trophy, and no little praise is also due to the Y. M. C. A. Amateurs for being runners up and also for the magnificent fight they made. Another team who put up a good show, was the Customs—last years winners—and their match with the Rangers on Wednesday produced the best hockey. It was a splendid game and perhaps the Customs had the better of the exchanges; their combination was superior but their forwards missed some excellent chances of scoring. McCready and Boileau netted once each, but both goals were disallowed. The Rangers eventually won by 3 goal to nothing—Skempton scoring, but a draw would have better represented the play. It was a pity that some of the Riversiders and their supporters could not take their beating in a sportsmanlike manner.

The other semi-final was not decided until Thursday, when the Amateurs, at the second time of asking, beat St. Xaviers after extra time by 2—1 and on the play were entitled to their victory.

The Final last Saturday on the Calcutta ground between the Rangers and the Amateurs attracted all hockey enthusiasts and although both teams were somewhat lacking in combination, the game was a typical Cup tie one, brilliant individual efforts being more frequent than combined play. Most people expected the Rangers to win easily but the Amateurs were determined to play the game of their life, and truly they did make their opponents gallop to win by 3-1. Skempton being unable to play owing to an injury in the last match, Campbell was pressed into service, but the latter was a poor substitute. While the Rangers had Dhanbaid, Jamalpur and the Customs to beat before they came into the final, the Amateurs on the other hand played no fewer than seven games before they reached the final stage and out of these seven they had to play extra time on five occasions. This in itself would have taken the grit out of any team; but to see the Amateurs in the final, one would never have thought that they had had a long and rough journey. Add to this, G. Durham, who played centre half for the Customs last year, owing to an injured hand had to stand out, to say nothing of the loss of Jellico and Hudson both having left Calcutta just before the Tournament commenced.

The game was fast, the exchanges very even, and, but for Cooper in goal and the great Sam Lawton at centre half, the Rangers would have been a beaten side. For the Amateurs, Anderson, who joined the Club late this season, stood in solitary prominence above his confreres. His original place was outside left but he was forward half and back—as the occasion demanded and his speed, skill and stamina were really wonderful. He was applauded time and again for his brilliant play and the goal he shot was without exception the result of one of the finest bits of play seen in the whole of the tournament.

Ten minutes from the start Rossetti scored for the Rangers who led at half time by 1—0. So far the game was very even, both sides attacking in turn and a shot by O'Connor which Cooper saved, appeared as if the Rangers' custodian had cleared when the ball had crossed the line, but the referee was in a better position to judge.

Early in the second half, Hodges the left back of the Amateurs received a nasty cut on the forehead, and was compelled to retire. But the Amateurs now played with even greater dash and it was not long before Anderson equalised. Great cheering followed, the game continued on fast and even lines; first

This is why the

MICHELIN

Square Tread is shaped as it is:

Because, after exhaustive experimental work, and a long series of practical tests, the manufacturers have ascertained that only a cover of this particular shape can, when inflated and supporting the weight of the car, give the best results in the wearing of the tread.

Because it augments the strength as well as the resiliency of the rubber, besides giving it a tendency to close up any cut sustained rather than permitting it to gape open and provide ingress for injurious foreign bodies. Thus it is that the Michelin Square Tread has won its pre-eminence among all-rubber covers.

N. S. U. MOTOR-CYCLES AND CARS.

It is because N. S. U. Motor-cycles and cars have acquired a splendid reputation for reliability and endurance in other countries that we are confident of their ability to give the greatest satisfaction to users in India. The design of both motor-cycles and cars is of the most advanced character, and the material and workmanship are of the highest order. Both productions abound in good points. For instance, notice the front and rear springing of the motor-cycle. Here is a system which ensures the utmost possible comfort when riding over rough uneven roads. We feel sure you would be thoroughly satisfied with an N. S. U. Motor-cycle or car. May we send you full particulars?

Motoring.

PALACE THAT IS NEVER STILL.

The Royal Automobile Club, the wonder of the club world, has now been open for a month, and already the great building has gained the reputation of "the town that never sleeps."

Its 6,200 members have found that, with its ladies' restaurant—separate from the one confined to members of the club—its smoking-room—a replica of the famous Council Chamber of the old War Office, whose site the club now occupies—its Turkish baths, and its thousand and one other attractions, it is the best place in London as an after-theatre resort.

So from twelve onwards the Club begins the busiest time of the day. There is a constant stream of members—and the members' list is an abridged edition of "Who's Who" containing names famous all the world over—through the great portion, and before the last member has retired to his club bedroom, or left in his motor-car, the club servants are awake and up—and so, in a few days' time will be those strenuous members who like to begin the day early with a plunge in the 95,000 gallons of filtered water that form the club swimming bath.

Though the design of the club is simple (if you sit down in the central hall for a few moments and think it out), members have not yet quite found their bearings despite the large number of sign-posts which still stand at every corridor corner to put members into the right path.

Indeed, there is so much to learn about the club that the secretary has found it necessary to issue a guide, just like the guide-books published in every town of interest, and very nearly as large. Many of the points which the guide contains have already been mentioned in the Express, but the following are some of the facts newly brought to the notice of members:—

The great gallery, for concerts and theatre performances, has its own "green-room," besides a musicians' gallery.

Some of the bull's-eye windows are so made that they possess the remarkable property of appearing as mirrors when viewed from the inside, though from the outside they are perfectly transparent.

No tipping is allowed in the club, although the staff render all service that the man of leisure can possibly require in the course of a day.

The spit in the kitchen is worked by a small water turbine. The kitchen also boasts a sixty-gallon stock-pot which can be tilted so gently that it will pour out a single plateful of soup without spilling a drop.

Members can have their own photographs developed in the photography department, and can even learn photography there, while there is an observatory near by from which those of astronomical tendencies can consult the stars.

All the water for the swimming bath is specially filtered, passing over plate-glass louvres, so that it shall be aerated. It is also driven through gravel and sand, which act as a filter, impurities being flushed away by compressed air. Then it passes through heated coils to give it the proper temperature.

Two and a half million cubic feet of clean, dry, warm, fresh air is passed into the club building every hour.

There are 350 radiators, besides the usual fireplaces, and, though 349 of them be shut off, the remaining one is still maintained at its ordinary temperature, so that members who like a "fuzzy" atmosphere, at times when the others have said good-bye to artificial heat, can have it.

Three roaring furnaces burn colliery slack day and night under forced draught, making the club stokehold like that of a man-of-war.

There are thirty motors in various parts of the building ranging from the ¼ h.-p. engine for the knife-cleaning machine to the 24 h.-p. engine that drives the fans.

Scattered all over the building are little glass-covered buttons. These are fire alarms. The breaking of the glass of one sets gongs ringing in the offices of every club official, and lights every electric lamp in the club.

All the water in the bath can be utilised at a moment's notice, by means of a special pump, for extinguishing fires.

Outside the club there are four large torches, fed by gas flames, which are to be lighted on special occasions.

There used to be an idea that motoring was antagonistic to most forms of athletic sport. The club is a permanent monument to the untruthfulness of this statement.

It would be hard just now to say which of the sports centres—the fencing room, the swimming bath, the squash racquets courts and so on—is the most popular. But already we have long lists of those who wish to play the various games—similar lists to those which bear the names of freshmen at the universities.

M. Volland, the master-at-arms, has already a dozen pupils rapidly becoming expert with the foils, and the monkery inspector, who was formerly in the "Blues," reports the greatest enthusiasm among the rifle shots of the club. However, it is expected that various displays will be organised when the club has settled down a little more, and then the various sections will show their prowess.

It is not necessary for members to buy their own fencing foils, for these are provided by the club.

The list of members shows the names of many distinguished athletes, who are expected to take a leading part in making the club the great athletic centre of London, as it is already the great centre for all that concerns motoring.

The members' list is one of the most fascinating collections of names one could imagine. One sees there Socialists and the Dukes whom, in business hours, they threaten to sweep away; Eastern potentates and American millionaires, actors, artists, engineers, judges, fun-makers and some of the most serious men of the time.

The Naturalist.

A SURVEY OF THE MAMMALIAN FAUNA OF INDIA, BURMA AND CEYLON.

Up to 1891, Naturalists in India had to rely for information on Mammals to Dr. Jerdon's "Mammals of India," a delightful book with many interesting notes on the habits of the different animals, but sadly wanting in details, of distribution and completeness in descriptions. This was through no fault of the author, but owing to lack of good collections and the paucity of information. At this time practically the only collections of Indian Mammals of any importance were in the Indian Museum at Calcutta and the British Museum in London. For observations over and above his own, the author relied on those of Colonel Sykes, Sir Walter Elliot, Brian Hodgson, Colonel Tickell, Major Hutton, Horsfield, Blyth and Kelaart, all of whom had made collections and published notes and papers in various journals and proceedings.

Some years later, namely, in 1804, R. A. Sterndale published his "Natural History of Indian Mammalia," a purely popular work not adding much to Jerdon's however.

A few years before Sterndale's work was published, namely, in 1881, a memorial prepared by Dr. P. L. Sclater, then Secretary to the Zoological Society, and signed by Darwin, Hooker, Huxley and other well known Scientists, was presented to the Secretary of State for India. In the memorial it was recommended that a series of volumes dealing with the Fauna of India should be prepared and that Dr. Blanford be appointed as editor. The outcome of this memorial was that in June 1888 the first part of the first volume of the series was published. This dealt with the Mammals as far as the Insectivora (Shrews and flats), but it was not till 1891 that the second part completing the Mammals was published. The delay was caused by Dr. Blanford having to edit other volumes in the series on birds, fishes and reptiles. Since 1891 this volume has been the standard work on Indian Mammals.

A glance through Dr. Blanford's book, the Mammals of the Indian Region, will show that there is still plenty of work to be done amongst Indian Mammals, even amongst the commonest species. Much has still to be learnt of the habits and distribution of nearly all the Mammals and from the want of specimens, in more than one case, several species were united under one name. This want has also hindered the study of the extent to which the different species vary.

As an instance of our ignorance of the distribution of some common animals it may be mentioned that the exact range and where they meet of the three kinds of Langur monkey, i.e., the Langur, the Madras Langur, and the Himalayan Langur is still unknown.

Amongst the smaller carnivora, we find that the Wared Cat was supposed to have been originally obtained from Nepal and since then specimens have been obtained in as far distant localities as Kashmir and Rajputana. To this information Dr. Blanford adds:—"This cat must therefore be widely dispersed through Northern India, though it does not appear to be common." The Brown Palm-Civet is only known with certainty from the Palni and Nilgiri Hills, but Dr. Blanford suggests that it also probably inhabits the higher ranges of Cochin and Travancore. This has not been proved yet.

Though many people do not know it, a Marten closely allied to the Indian Marten, Mustela flavigula, is found in Southern India in the Nilgiri and Travancore Hills. In a paper on the Indian Martes published some years ago by Mr. J. L. Bonhote, the distribution of this Southern Indian race was given as the Peninsula of India!

When the Fauna was published it was thought that four Otters were found in India, but since then Mr. O. Thomas has pointed out that there are in reality only three, the Common Otter and the Himalayan Otter being the same. The distribution of these three Otters is still very badly known, and though another is supposed to inhabit Ceylon it is not known to which species it belongs.

In a recent number of the Journal Mr. Wroughton pointed out how little was known also in regard to the species and distribution of the Hedgehogs of India and practically nothing of their habits.

Years ago the Rev. H. Baker reported, in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, that he had found in Malabar some black-velvet-coated animals which he supposed were moles. His description sounds as if the animal was mole-like, but no moles are known to inhabit that part of India.

Of the thirteen white-toothed Shrews recorded in India, Burma, etc., one is found in only one locality and two known only from single specimens. The Assam short-tailed Shrew is likewise only known from a single specimen. In "Notes on Jerdon" Colonel McMaster mentions seeing a black Shrew swimming in a stream near Nagpur. No water shrew is known south of the Himalayas, so it is impossible to say to what species this Shrew belongs.

Coming to the bats we find that according to Blanford there are 95 species, of which 12 are known from single specimens and 7 others from only one locality. Several new species have been described since 1891, and many additions made to our knowledge of their distribution.

Even the range of such common animals as the Common and Black-naped hares is wanting, and from information recently received it seems as if, there was a variety of the last-named was confined to parts of Southern India. Of that interesting animal the Hispid Hare, found along the foot of the Himalayas and in Assam, hardly anything is known regarding its habits. The exact range of the common Mouse Deer or Indian Chevrotain is imperfectly known, and the study of a large series of skins from all parts of India would, in all probability, lead to some interesting results. The same might also be said of the wild Pig about which we have more to learn than many people imagine.

To try and remedy the above defects, the Committee of the Bombay Natural History Society have decided to undertake a survey of the Mammals of India, Burma and Ceylon, and recently issued an appeal to members for funds to enable them to employ two or more trained European Collectors to make a collection of the Mammals of India, Burma and Ceylon, all over the country, and in anticipation of obtaining the necessary money they commenced by engaging the services of Mr. C. A. Crump who collected for several years with Colonel Ward in Kashmir.

The sum, which it has been estimated, will be required for the purposes of this scheme to maintain two Collectors for two years only is Rs. 30,000 (£2,000), which can hardly be considered a large sum when we consider the enormous expanse to be covered and the great value the results of the work will be to Zoology in India.

In recent years a few volunteers have sent in specimens, particularly Colonel Ward, Major Dunn, Major Magrath and Captain Whitehead, but it is recognised that the European in this country, whether in Military or Civil employ, has neither the time nor opportunity to collect Mammals and that the only way in which such work can be satisfactorily done is by the employment of trained men for the purpose. Mr. Oldfield Thomas, in charge of the Mammal Department at the British Museum (Natural History), South Kensington, fully supports our scheme and has agreed to identify all specimens for our Society and to describe any new species or varieties in our Journal.

At present until sufficient funds are forthcoming, the Society dare not employ more than the one Collector, but it will be a regrettable thing if this is not speedily altered, and if only the money was obtainable the Society has at the present moment the chance of obtaining the services of Mr. Shortridge, as he has been recently invalided home from the New Guinea Expedition.

A good many members and others in Burma and elsewhere have kindly offered to help our Collectors when they visit their districts, and this assistance is greatly appreciated, but more money must be obtained if the scheme is not to fall through.

The Society has some 1,500 members on its Register, and if only each member would contribute Rs. 10 a year for two years this would guarantee the whole sum.

The Story Teller.

TOLD IN THE BAZAAR.

"Oh, Gulab. Oh Gulabi Singh." The varied murmur from the small street of the bazaar drifted in through the open door, but there was no other sound, no answering cry to Chunia's fretful call. "The Evil One fly away with the boy," she muttered angrily, as she rolled the last lump of dough, and patted it skilfully from one hand to the other, until it reached the shape and size of the nicely-browned chappaties in a pile at her side. She slipped it into the flat brass dish where it fitted exactly, and blew vigorously at the thin flame beneath, almost invisible in the brilliant sunshine.

"Arree, Letchmee," her voice rang shrill again. A slim figure in a red saree glided through the door. "Ha jee," she said gently.

"Where is thy brother?" snapped the elder woman.

"He is at the well," replied the girl, with sudden carelessness. "Is it water thou wishest? I will get it for thee from the well. She caught up a warm red earthenware chatty as she spoke.

"Aye, thou hast grown strangely dutiful" said Chunia dryly to the girl's retreating figure. She turned the chappatty, now cooked to a golden brown, and sprang to her feet with a jingle of anklets and glass bangles. "What is this draws the children to the well?" she wondered, leaning against the lintel of the door, and peering down the hot, sunbaked street. The sound of a monotonous voice brought a smile to her wrinkled face. "Ah, it is the Story-Teller" she said aloud. With the same haste to be away that Letchmee had shown, she lifted the last chappatty from the fire, added it to the pile, and in a moment was out in the street.

The well was the rendezvous of the village. The graceful girls would linger chatting with the lotas and chatties balanced on their heads, or slim shoulders. The children played there, sheltered from the heat by the over-hanging mangoe trees, and the old dames gossiped peaceably on its steps. The group there to-day was larger than usual, and only one was speaking—the Story-Teller, who squatted comfortably against the stone parapet of the well. His voice ceased as Chunia approached, and a babel of applause, questions and remarks swelled the air.

"Sing to us, now" pleaded Letchmee.

"Nay. Tell us of soldiers and wars," cried a sepoy, home on leave.

"The Story Teller nodded." I will sing ye a song of an old sepoy who lost his bride." His brown fingers drummed on the tom-tom slung to his shoulders, beating a soft accompaniment to his high musical voice.

"Oh straight white road that runs to meet
Between green fields, the blue-green sea,
You knew the little weary feet
Of my child-bride that was to be."

He paused. "Go on, go on" cried several of his listeners. But the Story Teller smiled with an infinite sweetness in his clear brown eyes. "Nay" he said," "I know no more. What shall I tell ye? The tale of the Twelve Haschish Eaters, who when they counted, found they were only eleven, at which they searched the world for their companion, till they came to the court of Shah Jehan, who in his anger threw them into prison, for, in their folly, as they counted, each one had forgotten to count himself." A shout of laughter drowned the end of his speech, for the story of the Twelve Opium Eaters, though an old one, is a great favourite among the natives. "Now wilt thou tell us a fairy tale" suggested an old woman. The Story Teller thrummed thoughtfully at his tom tom before speaking. Then he began suddenly :—

"Far away in Kashmir, a simple fisherman lived on the banks of the Dhal lake. He was not only a fisherman for he had floating gardens where he grew melons, and lived very happily on the money he got for selling these, together with such fish as he could catch, at Srinagar. He had a little boat wherein he spent most of his time, often sleeping in it on the warm summer nights.

"One evening as he lay in the prow of the shikara, idly watching the day-light vanish over the hills, he fell asleep, and dreaming, saw a head rise from the water. He gazed in delight at the lovely face, the colour of moonlight, flushed with the shades of dawn. Her eyes were deep, and clear as lake itself, and her lips like the red sun-set glow dancing on the waters. 'Who art thou? Art thou a spirit?' he cried, and the sound of his own voice woke him. After that, he could not work for for thinking of the beautiful vision, and as he would not leave the lake where he had seen it, to sell his melons in Srinagar, he soon got so poor that he had very little to eat."

The Story Teller stopped musingly" Wah, wah" said his audience with keen appreciation and sympathy, and with a little smile, he continued :—

"One day, Sahano, the fisherman, noticed a lovely lotus flower floating within reach of his hand. It was one of the largest he had ever seen, and its petals were tinged with a delicate shade of pink. In some strange way, it reminded him of his dream, so picking it, he tied it by its own roots to the prow of his shikara as a charm. He slept on the lake that night, and in the morning, when he woke, he saw, to his surprise, a girl sitting at the end of the shikara. She turned her head when he called—and was he dreaming still? Her face was that of the vision. He stood as one bewitched, until she spoke, and her voice was as the ripple of the lake against the shore. "Wilt thou not loose me?" she said, and he saw, with growing wonder, that she was bound to the boat by her flowing hair. "Who art thou?" he cried hoarsely, even as he had in his dream. "Thou mayest call me Phulmerg" said the stranger. "Phulmerg," repeated Sahano, "My Meadow of Flowers."

"What can I tell of the next few months? Sahano married the stranger and was so happy that he was half afraid, but there was one thing which spoiled his pleasure. Phulmerg, each full of the moon, disappeared by night, and returned again the third day. She warned Sahano with tears not to follow her if he valued their happiness, but his curiosity grew rapidly, like the grass in the monsoon. At last one night, when the moon was at her height, he decided to lie awake and watch where his wife went, and later, he was rewarded by hearing a rustle, and Phulmerg, slipping out from under the matting roof, stood on the deck of the little boat in the soft moonlight. Sahano watched her breathlessly as she sat on the edge of the shikara, dangling her pretty feet in the water. Her hair was done in many plaits, caught together by a silver ornament, studded with turquoises, after the fashion of the Kashmiri women, and as she undid it, she sang in a low voice, "Oh Varuna! Oh god of the waters!"

"In his excitement, her husband crept closer. Phulmerg glanced round, and her eyes grew dark with horror. 'Oh, Sahano, Sahano,' she wailed, 'couldest thou not have trusted me? Never wilt thou behold Phulmerg again. Arree, woe has befallen us.' With a sob, she slid into the lake, and Sahano rushed to the side to see her green floating garments turn to the broad flat leaves of the water lily. Her long hair twined like its curling stems, and in place of the despairing face she raised to his, a lovely lotus flower lay on the calm lake. 'I will pluck thee again, beloved' cried Sahano, leaning forward but his hand fell numb to his side."

"As one in a trance he knelt, and the shikara, moving noiselessly, carried him away from all that he loved, in the shape of a lotus flower." The Story Teller's voice died away in the silence, and to the little group around him, the scene he had described stood out vividly.

"Did he never find her again?" asked Letchmee, the tender-hearted, surreptitiously wiping away a tear with the corner of her saree.

The Story Teller shook his head, and rose to his feet with a little sigh. "Never again," he said." "But the day is wearing on, and I must move on with it." He stooped to pick up a lacquer bowl half full of copper coins and Chunia dropped something into it with a little chink.

"Thy stories make me young again" she said with a shame-faced laugh. "Wilt thou not stay? We can give thee a meal, and a charpoy for the night." "Nay, I am but a wanderer," he answered wistfully. "Stay not too long in any place. Grow not too fond of any one, then wilt thou never be in any danger of losing all that makes life sweet—like Sahano." His white teeth flashed in a merry smile, as nodding a careless farewell, he swung down the sunny street. Leaving the outskirts of the village, he struck across the fields through a little beaten track. The mustard lifted smiling yellow faces to him, and a line of distant trees marked the banks of the canal.

He thrummed thoughtfully at his tom-tom.

"Yes, mine is a wise plan of life, but a lonely one" he mused. Then he flung up his head with a joyous laugh, and scanned the glowing landscape. "Yet, after all, it has its compensations."

A YEAR'S PROGRESS AT THE ZOO.

THE Anglo-Indian who, after a four or five years' residence in the gorgeous East, returns to the old country and pays his first visit to the London Zoological Gardens absolutely would not recognise the place, were it not for a few old landmarks, such as the clock tower and the obsolete bear and wolf cages under the terraced walk. The great changes carried out under the rule of Dr. Chalmers Mitchell form the subject of an appreciative article by that well-known sportsman and naturalist, Mr. F. G. Aflalo, who records in the April number of the Fortnightly Review his impressions of the Gardens on paying his first visit after a three years' absence from England. These impressions are altogether satisfactory, and the author especially commends the removal of the Society's offices to the Gardens, as the result of which the whole establishment is under the immediate eye and control of the secretary. It is added that, "as a result of this new control, we have the evidences of success on all sides, not merely in the condition and housing of the animals, but also in the higher birth-rate, lower death-rate, and increase in the number of both Fellows and visitors to the Gardens." Commendation is also accorded to the systematic plan on which the whole laying out of the Gardens is being remodelled so far as existing buildings will permit, and the erection of new buildings and the construction of new enclosures with the view of a striking and picturesque general effect. Such changes must, however, of necessity be slow and gradual, as their cost is great. With its distinctly unfavourable conditions of climate and soil, the "New Zoo," as Mr. Aflalo calls it, cannot hope to rival in all respects similar establishments situated under sunnier skies, but, nevertheless, it "has overcome many obstacles, climatic and otherwise, and the result is something of a triumph."

In our own opinion, this praise is thoroughly well deserved; and it is highly satisfactory to learn from the report of the Council for 1910 that, despite the unfavourable climatic conditions of last year, the receipts at the gates show an increase, while there has also been a notable addition to the numbers of Fellows. All this means, of course, increased spending powers on the part of the Society, so that in the future we may expect still further improvements to be carried out, although, owing to the great expense incurred in the construction of the new offices in the Gardens and in the removal of the library, etc., from Hanover Square, it has been decided that no new works of first-rate importance shall be carried out during the current year.

In June 1910 the Council had the pleasure of announcing to the Fellows that the King had been graciously pleased to become Patron of the Society in succession to his late Majesty King Edward. Thus the long association between the Society and the Royal House remains unbroken. In 1829 King George IV. granted to the Society a Royal Charter; in 1830 King William IV. became Patron and presented to the Society all the animals belonging to the Royal Menagerie in Windsor Park; in 1837 Queen Victoria became Patroness of the Society. The Prince Consort was President from 1852 until 1861; and King Edward became Vice-Patron in 1864 and Patron in 1901.

Another notable event during the year was the presentation of the Society's Silver Medal to Mr. Carl Hagenbeck, of Stellingen, in recognition of the improvements he has made in the methods of keeping wild animals in captivity, and especially for his practical and rational application of the open-air treatment.

An important innovation is the establishment of a half-hourly service of motor 'buses between Oxford Circus and the Gardens, which ought to add very considerably to the number of persons passing the turnstiles.

Neither are the educational possibilities of the collection neglected under the new régime, for the Council, in co-operation with the Education Committee of the London County Council, has instituted a scheme for the instruction of school teachers, so as to make the visits of school children to the Gardens more interesting and useful. One course took place in the autumn of 1910, and was followed by two courses early in 1911. The secretary gave an inaugural lecture at which over 300 teachers were present. The courses were conducted by Mr. J. L. Bonhote, and each course provided for 150 teachers, who attended three lectures with lantern demonstrations in the new Meeting Hall, whilst they were given practical demonstrations in the Gardens in sets of 25. Very great interest was taken by the teachers, and it is expected that the courses will be continued next autumn and winter on a larger scale.

Under the old management the keepers were not always so ready to answer questions and to supply visitors with information concerning the animals under their charge as they ought to be. For the future, however, there ought to be no more complaints on this score, for a certain number of the keepers, distinguished by gold chaprasses have been specially told off to supply such information as visitors may legitimately demand.

In spite of certain disappointing events, the general health of the animals in the menagerie has been distinctly good. This, no doubt, is due in a considerable degree to the establishment of a regular system of inspection by competent veterinary surgeons; and to the erection of a new sanatorium where it is possible to treat sick animals on a proper and scientific system.

The Duke of Bedford, the President, continues to take a most active and important part in the affairs of the Society, not only attending the business meetings with praiseworthy regularity, but from time to time presenting specimens to the menagerie, his latest gift being a young European bison. Neither, it may be added, does his Grace's interest in natural history end with the Society, for a fund has been put by him at the disposal of the authorities of the Natural History Museum for the zoological exploration of North-Eastern Asia, the results of which are published from time to time in the Society's scientific proceedings. Indeed the scientific work of the Society, although little known to the general public, forms one of the chief aims of its existence and its efforts.

A feature of the present year to which the secretary is devoting his best attention will be the exhibition of a series of animals representing the fauna of South Africa. The collection, which is to be called the King's Collection, already includes a large number of species, and is to be presented to his Majesty in commemoration alike of his Coronation and of the establishment of the Union of South Africa. According to the latest information from the Cape, the animals are being drafted to various ports previous to shipment to England. As regards the origin of this excellent scheme, it may be mentioned that when it was made known that H. M. the King, as Prince of Wales, was to visit South Africa to open the Union Parliament last year, arrangements were made in the Cape, Natal, the Orange River Colony, the Transvaal and Rhodesia, to present to his Royal Highness a collection of South African animals. The Prince of Wales announced his willingness to receive such a collection, and his permission for it to be exhibited during the summer in the Zoological Gardens as the Prince of Wales' South African Collection. Mr. A. Trevor-Battye, a member of the Council of the Society, spent some months in South Africa to give the South African Committee any assistance in his power, and to make arrangements for the housing and transport of the animals for which the Society was to be responsible. The death of King Edward, and the consequent change in the Royal plans, cancelled most of the arrangements which had been made. Later on, however, they were revived, and Major Stevenson Hamilton, Game Warden of the Transvaal, has been assisting on behalf of the Society. It is expected that the collection will arrive early in the summer and be exhibited throughout the summer as the King's African Collection. Preparations are being made to display the collection in enclosures along the main walk from the south gate towards the Monkey House.

In the collection will be included a young specimen of the elephant seal, or sea elephant—the largest of all the seal tribe—recently received in the Gardens, and captured on the Crozet Islands. It is the first of its kind ever received alive in Europe; although, curiously enough, half-a-dozen specimens arrived at New York from Guadaloupe Island about the same time.

All this long list of improvements and additions affords full and sufficient testimony of the wisdom of the Council and Fellows in selecting the present secretary to be at the helm.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The three ponies, May Kenley by Kenley out of Jewess, Lady Ratcliffe by St. Paul out of Ling and Edwards by Handsome Jack out of Stepfast, lately the property of Mr. H. Davis and which were won in a raffle by a Madras gentleman, are not to go out of Calcutta after all, as we understand that they have recently been sold by Mr. Davis on behalf of the lucky winner of the raffle to a Calcutta sportsman, whose name we are not at present at liberty to announce, for Rs. 15,000 and will be raced by him at the coming Monsoon Meetings, all going well. May Kenley is distinctly smart as her victory in the cold weather proclaimed and the other two are maidens. May Kenley won the 5-furlong Presidency Plate at the Eighth Calcutta Extra with 7st. 2lb. in 1min. 3secs., beating Ruling Passion 8st. 7lb. and Hughie 10st. 3lb., and she ought to be very useful in the 14-2 class. The other two are 14 handers, or at any rate it is claimed that they will always go that height.

It is announced that the first two Tollygunge Club Gymkhana Meetings will be held on the 24th June and the 1st July respectively. This is later than last year when these meetings commenced on the 11th June and the last of them was on the 23rd July. If it is intended to hold four meetings this year prior to the commencement of the Calcutta Monsoon Meetings the only Saturdays available are the 8th and 15th July, but as it is proposed to bring the Monsoon Meetings to a conclusion about the 16th September there are two Saturdays probably available late in that month for the Club to appropriate, if they so desire. We should think, however, that better support would probably be obtained before than after the Monsoon season when owners will not be particularly anxious to run their horses after the strenuous time they will then have just come through. Mr. Curtis-Hayward, we understand, is acting as Honorary Secretary this season.

The prospectus of the first five days of the Calcutta Monsoon Meeting has now made its tardy appearance, the first four being on successive Saturdays commencing on the 22nd July as already announced and the fifth is on Thursday, the 17th. It is stated that if inducement offers there will be a sixth day on the 19th, a Saturday, and Extras during September. With the exception of the first day when six races are catalogued there are only five races advertised for each day with an announcement that there will be an extra race each day, as to the terms of which the Stewards, through their Secretary, ask for suggestions, from owners and trainers. All the small pony races are cut out provisionally and last year's results certainly were not sufficiently encouraging to justify the retention of this class of event in the regular cards. If, however, fields seem to be possible the Stewards will no doubt readily accede to owners' requests and reinstate at any rate some of these races. There are one or two other alterations which we will shortly pass in review. The distances in all pony hurdle races are now advertised as 1 mile 2½ furlongs instead of 1 mile 1 furlong as was the case last year, but this merely means that the course was not correctly measured and does not indicate any lengthening of the distance in these events. No alteration has been made in the distance of the horse hurdle races as it was said was likely. The course is only 1½ mile and this in our opinion is far more severe than a longer distance would be. On this course in particular a longer distance would be preferable for reasons we have previously indicated, namely, the shortness of the run-in and the run to the first obstacle. It is a course that is on the bend almost all the way and consequently no horse can afford to be very far behind as he has small chance of making up his ground at the pace at which these events are usually run. A longer distance, say of at least two miles, so far from being more severe, would be more humane and would knock horses about a good deal less than the present short and sharp bursts. The cards exhibit more careful drafting than they did last season and a condition in the Amateur Pony Hurdle Plate on the first day in contravention of the C.T.C. Rule 89 has been cut out. This was a condition granting an allowance of weight to ponies for having been beaten in one or more races and was illegal and carelessly interpolated in last year's conditions. In the Trial

Hurdle race for horses on the first day in addition to the old penalty clause for winners of a race of Rs. 500 or over 5lb., 10lb. and 14lb. there is the following penalty clause :—

"Winners of a race value Rs. 1,500 or over 7lb. extra: or of a race value Rs. 2,000 or over 14lb. extra in addition to other penalties."

In the Pony Plate on the first day there is also an additional penalty clause making winners of a race of Rs. 1,000 or over put up an extra 7lb. in addition to the previous penalties of 5lb., 10lb. and 14lb. for winners of races of Rs. 500 or over.

The second day's card is identical with last year's with the exception of the excision of the small pony event, and the third day's card is the same excepting that in the Selling Race for Horses the upset price is altered from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 750. On the fourth day the Amateur Jumpers Flat race is cut out. As there is a flat race for this class on the first day it will no doubt depend upon how that race fills whether the Stewards reinstate this event or not. Last year it drew a field of eleven runners, but there are not many of this class in Calcutta this season and the Stewards are probably wise to exercise caution before framing as many races for them as they did last year. On the fifth day the Amateur Pony Hurdle Handicap is turned into an open pony hurdle race. Here again the Stewards are justified, as we at present fail to see where we are going to get a field of ponies for a closed jump race, for there are virtually none of the class on the premises. The distance of the August Plate (last year's September Plate) has been altered from five furlongs to seven furlongs and the Plassey Plate, a handicap for 14-2's, on this day has been cut out.

The programmes as revised will no doubt give better results than we had last season and the invitation to owners and trainers to offer any suggestions for races likely to fill well is a move in the right direction and will no doubt be eagerly availed of by those interested.

A daily contemporary asserts that the winner of the last two Cambridgeshires, Mr. E. A. Wigan's Christmas Daisy by Vitez—Daisy, has been purchased for Mr. Mathuradas Goculdass. The announcement at present lacks confirmation, but Mr. Goculdass is very anxious to win the Viceroy's Cup and the special race in honour of H.M. the King's visit and it is known that he is still on the buy in England.

Mr. Galstaun also, so we hear, means having another horse for the Viceroy's Cup, as he is not satisfied that Prince Rupert will ever act as a stayer. Mr. Galstaun's intention is to only go for the big events over there and to have the bulk of his stable in Bombay—at least so he said at the end of last season when much dissatisfied with the handicaps.

Mr. A. N. Das, the popular Bengali gentleman who is a very keen racing owner in these parts and has twice headed the list of winning owners in the Calcutta Monsoons with horses trained by himself, has got four new ones out from Ireland and they were landed in March and are now at Bangalore at Ramshaw's establishment. The four horses are Ballymaclune by Hackler—Ballymacarney, a six-year-old bay mare; Decidedly, a bay gelding, four years, by Sidus out of Ting; The Witch, a three-year-old brown filly by Soliman (dead) out of Kilkenny Lass, and Annahean, a three-year old black filly by Catch the Wind out of Bonny Isabel. Mr. Das has also bought an unnamed three-year-old filly by Spring Cottage out of Sing On and she is shortly to be shipped to India. Spring Cottage is by Isinglass out of Jenny Howlett (a Derby and an Oaks winner respectively) and though not a fashionable sire is very well bred.

Mr. Das' new horses are not by any means first-class, but they have all shown promise both in England and in Ireland, principally in the latter country, and they will most probably turn out to be very useful class out here, at any rate we hope so. Ramshaw will have the management of them. Their last season's performances shortly recapitulated are as follows :—Ballymaclune, 6yrs., by Hackler—Ballymacarney :—third Kildare Handicap, 1½ mile. The Curragh 7st. 5lb. to Lorello 6st. 9lb. and Sir Henry 7st. 10lb.; second Kirwan Stakes, 1¼ mile; The Curragh 7st. 5lb. to Burnet 7st. 10lb.; unplaced, Sutton Plate, 1 mile 1 furlong 65 yards, Baldoyle 9st. 2lb. to The Tailor 7st. 5lbs.; third Belfast Plate, 1 mile; Down Royal 9st. 5lb. to Sweet Lester 8st. 5lb. and Archduke 9st. 11lb.; third Autumn Plate, 2 miles; Limerick 12st. to Hampton Lad 11st. 12lb. Blue Sabre 12st.

Decidedly, 4yrs., by Sidus—Ting; at 2yrs. won the Sudbrooke Stakes (£100), 4 furlongs 50 yards, at Lincoln, 8st. 9lb., beating Needlecase filly, 8st. 9lb., and Mary B, 8st. 4lb.; won Tyro Selling Plate (£141), ½ mile, Liverpool, 8st. 7lb., beating Bridal Wreath, 8st. 7lb., and Bobsleigh, 8st. 10lb., was bought after the race by Mr. W. W. Bailey for 460 guineas; second Mickleham Plate, 5 furlongs, Epsom, 8st. 11lb., to Cupola, 8st. 11lb.:—At 3yrs. won Lawn Plate (£100), 1 mile, The Curragh 6st. 7lb., beating Little Cerasus 8st. 4lb., and Wayang 6st. 7lb.; second Thorn Cup, 6 furlongs. Down Royal 8st. 4lb. to Magnum Charter 9st.; third Ballymanus Stakes, 1 mile, 7st. 11lb., to Tiptoe II. 8st. 10lb., Kallaidan Park, 8st. 6lb.; won Donerailo Plate (£46 10s.), 6 furlongs, Tramore 6st. 11lb., beating Little Cerasus 8st. 6lb., and Innocency 8st. 4lb.; won Shankhill Selling Plate (£93), 6 furlongs, Leopardstown 8st. 10lb., beating Wayang 8st. 5lb., and Denis 6st. 9lb. (Winner sold for £165 to Mr. Leahy); third Leinster Stakes, 6 furlongs, The Curragh 8st. 9lb., to Sister May 5st. 11lb., and Heath Bell 6st. 11lb. Decidedly is probably the best of Mr. Das' new purchases.

The Witch, 3yrs., by Soliman—Kilkenny Lass: at 2yrs.: third Trial Selling Plate, 5 furlongs, Leopardstown 6st. 4lb. to Little Cerasus 9st. 8lb. and Mrs. Jack 8st. 5lb.; third Maryborough Stakes, 5 furlongs, The Curragh 7st. 6lb. to Cherry Hackle 9st., Oregon 8st. 2lb.; won Glanmire Plate (£47), 5 furlongs, Cork Park, beating Little Speed 6st. 13lb. and The Diver 7st. 7lb.; second Trial Selling Handicap, 6 furlongs, Leopardstown 7st. 7lb. to America's Pride 8st. 12lb.; second Juvenile Selling Plate, 6 furlongs, The Curragh 7st. 11lb. to Lochinvar 8st. Annahean 7st 6lb. third; second Paddock Selling Plate, 6 furlongs, Leopardstown 7st. 7lb. to What For 6st. 12lb.

Annahean, a three-year-old black filly by Catch the Wind—Bonny Isabel; at 2yrs. twice unplaced; third Juvenile Plate (vide The Witch) won The Sprinters' Plate (£98), 5 furlongs, 7st. 5lb., beating Merry Maid filly 8st. 7lb. and Soccer 7st. 2lb.

Only three new horses are introduced into the latest returns of the Derby Betting: Mr. William Clark's Feramorz at 28 to 1, Mr. W. M G. Singer's Bird of March colt (by Desmond) 100 to 3, and Mr. Reid Walker's Adamite at 40 to 1, and none of them look on paper as if they were at all likely to have much to say to the result. The feature of the betting reports on Saturday was the return of Pietri at ever. 100 to 8 for the Epsom contest, for in face of the reports of the wind trouble and his very inglorious performance at Newmarket in the Two Thousand he does not look to hold a 100 to 1 chance in the longer distanced race. Sunstar still continues to be a warm favourite and from 5 to 2 he has come on to 2 to 1 and bids fair to start as hot a favourite as last year's winner Lemberg, whose S.P. was 7 to 4. The hottest favourite that has ever started for the Derby was Ladas, whose price was 9 to 2 on: Ormonde's S.P. was 9 to 4 on, Surefoot's and Isinglass' 95 to 40 on, Galtee More's 4 to 1 on, Flying Fox's 5 to 2 on, Cicero's 11 to 4 on, and there have, of course, been many hot favourites, odds on favourites, defeated, The Baron, Surefoot, St. Frusquin, Slieve Gallion to mention a few of comparatively recent memory. Mr. Joel is said to have backed Sunstar immediately before and after the Guineas, though at first it was not credited that the commission came from the stable. They say now, however, that there is no doubt that the owner has a great fancy for the colt's chance and that he knew he would win the Guineas "on his nose"! Recent betting returns certainly look as if the Jo'burg gold were pouring on to the colt, for there is a big gap between him and the next one. Feramorz won a two-year-old plate at Newmarket as a two-year-old and amongst the beaten was Borrow, but as it is now agreed that Borrow's Middle Park Plate success was at the time overrated and that that race was false run this does not mean very much one way or the other. The Bird of March colt did not win as a two-year-old but ran into a place on various occasions. His record does not stamp him as a potential Derby winner. Adamite did not run as a two-year-old. All these three colts' performances are added to the long list we have already to the records of those horses that have been mentioned in the betting and will be found in the usual place. Prince Palatine has been scratched. Wrinkler will also most probably be scratched as he is making a noise.

Miss Trenton (by Trenton—Blow) has, we learn, dropped a foal in England to Perigord (St. Simon—Effie Deans). Miss Trenton used to belong to Mr. A. N. Das and was sold by him to Mr. L. P. Pugh, who sent her home to breed from her. Palindrome, another one that was also sent home by Mr. L. P. Pugh, has been sent to Collar. Palindrome is by Pilgrim's Progress—Lebel and Pilgrim's Progress is by Isonomy out of Pilgrimage. Pilgrimage is the dame of Canterbury Pilgrim, the dame of Swynford, and is by The Palmer—Lady Audley. A pair of very handsome dapple grey Russian Mares, 17 hands high, absolutely quiet in single and double harness, very fast and showy, one of the most handsome pairs ever imported into India.

Palmer is by Beadsman by Weatherbit—Mendicant. Isonomy is by Sterling out of Isola Bella, who is by Stockwell—Isoline, and Sterling is by Oxford out of Whisper. Lebel is a Musket mare and so gets Toxophilite, West Australian and so forth, and if there is anything in selection and heredity this St. Simon on Musket cross ought to produce something more than average good. Breeding, however, as most stud-masters know to their cost, is a tremendous lottery and though a great number of people believe that you can produce a Derby winner if only you carefully select your blood, in practice it has not succeeded a great number of times.

Mr. T. G. Evers, who has been away on a tour on business in Assam, has returned to Calcutta and will no doubt have a few in training for the Monsoon Meetings. Highland Fling was found to be a hopeless case and so he was shot, but Mr. Evers has that little English mare Scotch Girl that he got from Piper and she looks as though she might shape well over hurdles, as she is a nice, compact, well-balanced little mare and very quick and active.

Bayardo begins his stud career in England this season and the first mare he served was The Broom. She is a direct descendant of Queen Mary and the union will result in some very close inbreeding to that mare. The Broom is by Le Var (son of Isonomy) out of Volumnia by Royal Hampton (by Hampton) out of Lady Muncaster by Muncaster (by Doncaster) out of Blue Light by Rataplan out of Borealis by Newminster out of Blink Bonny by Melbourne out of Queen Mary by Gladiateur. Bayardo traces back to this strain through Galicia, his dam. Bayardo is by Bay Ronald by Hampton out of Galicia by Galopin out of Isoletta by Isonomy (by Sterling) out of Lady Muncaster. The inbreeding does not, however, cease here as will have been observed, as the foal will also be very closely inbred to Hampton. The Broom is out of a mare by Royal Hampton by Hampton, who is also the sire of Bay Ronald, who is Bayardo's sire. There is also a strong cross of Sterling, as Bayardo's granddam, Black Corrie, was by Sterling and the granddam on the other side, Isoletta, is also a Sterling, as she is by Isonomy by Sterling, and Sterling is the sire of Le Var, who is the sire of The Broom.

Mr. S. Griffiths, handicapper to the Calcutta Turf Club, and Mr. H. Roulston, stipendiary steward, were both present at the A.J.C. Autumn meeting, results of important races at which we publish in our Turf columns.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—I am indebted to the Secretary, Mr. H. Donne, for a copy of first entries for the Bangalore Races, which closed on 1st instant, and a perusal of it will disclose the fact that while the entrances for the Horse Races are exceptionally good this year, those for Ponies and C.-B. races are very disappointing, when compared with previous years. No help has come from Bombay, nor do the stewards expect any from the Western Capital, as they are provided with quite enough racing at home to think of other places. But it is hoped that the entrances for Mysore, which are due on the 15th instant, will be better in these particular classes.

It is gratifying to note that H.H. the Maharaja of Mysore and his brother, the Yuvaraja, have, between them, entered for all but one of the races, viz., The Ali Asker Plate, to be run for on the fourth day. His Highness' string consists of Eustace, Mary B, Sporran (which have been entered for the two big Cup Races, the first and third also being entered for the Horse Trials), Priceless, Red Patch, Master Priam, Cauvery, Harebell, Kismet and Merry Bird. Mr. A. A. Apcar's stables will be represented by Neith, Five Crown, Lawn Sand (all three being entered for the big Cup Races and the first two for the Horse Trials) and Sophocles, which has been entered for several events. Colonel Desaraj Urs, as usual, gives the meeting his support and other old patrons are Mr. Hannyngton, Colonel A. A. Jones, Captain Heyland, Major Hayes, etc. Of local Indian owners who have in recent years come forward very sportingly and supported our meetings I may mention the names of Messrs. Hajee Oosman Sait, A. Hameed Sait (a son of Mr. Hajee Ismail Sait, once a large owner), O. Yousuff Sait, S. N. Suri, A. Sattar, etc., who are to be represented at the forthcoming meeting. For the rest, I would refer your readers to the entries which we publish today. The entries for the two big races.—The Bangalore Cup:—Eustace, Mary B, Sporran, Miracle, Neith, Five Crown, Lawn Sand, San Remo, Bally Maclure, Decidedly, John Wesley, Obo, Virtuloss, Ardonaglue, Cross Bred, Lady Spring, Wavehill, The Master, Tana, Warrayure, Rapin, Cartbon and Vitange. With the exception of San Remo, all the others have been entered for the Maharaja's Cup, with the addition of Bell Dhu, so that good large fields might be excepted for these events, allowing for scratchings.

Our Lucknow correspondent writes:—In connection with the postponement of the race for the Army Cup till the Lucknow Spring Meeting I understand that dates for the first week in November were asked for, but the Secretary of the Lucknow Races was informed by the Secretary C.T.C., that if Lucknow insisted on having these dates, either the Umballa or Meerut Autumn Meetings would have to be abandoned. Taking into consideration the facts that, of late years, these Meetings have been held before the Lucknow Autumn Meeting and consequently have a certain right to priority this year, also that the stake money given by the Fund at the Lucknow Autumn Meeting amounts to Rs. 23,500 so that any failure (of which there was a risk, by holding a Meeting so early) would have meant serious loss to the Fund, the Stewards decided to adopt the arrangement which has been published. Owners intending to enter in the Army Cup can run their ponies in races value Rs. 500 not Rs. 200 as has been stated. No part of the added money to the Army Cup is subscribed for by any Regiment, nor has it been since 1906, when the subscriptions were so small that the Stewards decided to give the stakes Rs. 4,200 for the race from the fund in the usual way and the net value of the race to the winner is Rs. 2,950. Deducting entrance money paid by owners the Army Cup Race has cost the Lucknow Race Fund in 1908, Rs. 2,505, in 1909, Rs. 2,595, and in 1910, Rs. 2,240. Certainly it is unfortunate that the Royal Dragoons, who have for many years been closely identified with racing here, will have left the country before the meeting to be held in February, but it would be unfair to officers who will be moving to Delhi, to run the Cup Race during their absence on duty.

The Annual Meeting of the Madras Race Club was held at the Gymkhana last week, with Mr. A. P. Symonds in the chair. Others present were Lieutenant-Colonel G. G. Giffard, I.M.S., Mr. P. B. Thomas, Mr. J. R. B. Branson, Mr. H. N. C. Campbell, Mr. D. Aitchison, Major T. H. Symons, I.M.S., Mr. D. Annan, Mr. D. M. C. Downing, Captain P. Heffernan, I.M.S., Mr. R. H. Meredith, Mr. H. Fearon, and Mr. A. H. Steele (Honorary Secretary.)

The report and the accounts were unanimously adopted and the following committee elected for the ensuing season.—Committee:—Mr. A. P. Symonds, Mr. P. B. Thomas, Lieutenant-Colonel G. G. Giffard,

Captain P. Heffernan wished to know if it would not be possible to hold the Winter Meeting some time earlier than December. A good many people to whom he had spoken on the subject thought that December was not the best season for holding the Meeting. The going was generally hard in December and many people were out of Madras.

The Honorary Secretary admitted the disadvantage of holding the Meeting in December, but pointed out that they would have to consider the convenience of the Officers from Bangalore and Secunderabad this year. They had also to bear in mind that there was to be the Delhi Durbar in the first week of December, when there would be a wholesale "trekking" northwards of people in the Presidency. After some discussion, the matter was dropped, to be again taken up for consideration at some future time.

The meeting closed with the usual vote of thanks to the chair.

Our Ooty correspondent writes:—Heavy rain the evening before had made the course very heavy on the third day of the races and a plentiful layer of ashes was found necessary at the corners. A bright day and hot sun, however, improved the track a good deal, and for the last three events at any rate the going was not bad.

A start was made soon after 12-30 with the Stand Plate, for which Mignonette was most fancied, but she got away badly and was never really in it, Joybell winning comfortably from Misfit, The Butterfly nowhere.

For the Hobart Park Plate another quartette started, Widgeon being the favourite, but he could only finish third, Merry Bird being first past the post with Bonny Jean a length behind.

The third event was a match between Captain Higgins' Baroda and Mr. Beaufort's Disguise which the latter annexed fairly comfortably. Then lunch intervened. At 2-15 P.M. the Hunters (only four of them) ran for their Cup. Double Ruff was most fancied, but the heavy going and the top weight of 12st. 2lb. stopped him. Naughty Novice won easily with Larry Boy three lengths behind.

The fifth event, a Polo Scurry, drew seven starters, of which Glenbee was thought the pick, but that nice shaped grey mare Virginia won it, Glenbee second and Wild Knight third, all close up.

Two Consolation races followed: the first for ponies for which a trio ran, was won by Lady's Maid after a close finish with Zephyr; the other Consolation race for horses only brought out two, Bell Dhu, 10st. 12lb., defeating Harebell, 8st. 8lb. by half a length. And so ended our Spring Meeting. The weather was fine throughout thus proving the wisdom of fixing this Meeting for earlier dates than was customary in former years.

Although the opening meet of the Hunt is not to be until early next month, the recent rain has made the Downs rideable, and a large field numbering about 70 turned out to Cub hunt this morning, the venue being the kennels. H. E. the Governor, the Misses Lawley and a contingent from Government House were amongst the number. Soon after drawing a jack was found which gave a fair run, but he hung to the roads and rather puzzled hounds, who failed to bring him to book, but he gave hounds and horses a useful preliminary canter.

On Monday hounds meet again at Lake End.

"I've met some pretty tough customers in the ring," says Jack Root, the man who defeated Kid McCoy, and then fell before the fists of Marvin Hart, "and some of them pretty nearly wore out my hands when it came to thumping them. I got against such a man once upon a time, and the fellows who steered me into the thing still sidestep when they see me coming.

"It was out in San Francisco. One night a jolly crowd called for me, and asked me to visit a club with them. I went, of course, and was shown through a pretty nifty clubhouse, with a specially fine gymnasium. There was a ring in place, and in the ring a couple of amateurs were sparring slowly, clumsily, just to kill the time. My friends took me aside and told me that the larger one of the amateurs—a thick-chested fellow, weighing perhaps 190lb.—really thought himself some scrapper. Wouldn't I condescend to put on the gloves with him, and play tag with him, just for fun? Foolishly I fell, of course, and I—glad to oblige!

"I got into boxing togs and we donned the gloves. The big amateur lumbered at me with wide, clumsy swings. I shot a light left to the nose, and he didn't pull back his head the way a man does when his nose is stung. On the contrary, he still lumbered in.

"Just to stir him up a little I sent a hard right to his chin. He didn't stagger—his knees didn't buckle—he bored in with his slow, wide swings. I cut loose a little, and peppered him six fast wallops, right and left. He didn't even flush in the face—and my hands stung through the eight-ounce mittens.

"The round ended with the amateur still swinging like a gate, and with no sign of injury. I decided to go it hard and plenty in the second round, and I did. I feinted him into an opening big enough to roll a keg through and swung a right-hand haymaker from the hip. It landed flush and full on the end of his chin, and I sprang back to let him fall.

"He didn't fall. He didn't even shake. He just swung another heavy sweep, and I was so astonished that it hit me—some force to it, too. Then I plugged him a furious uppercut. He grinned and came on, and I felt my knuckles stinging.

"'Thanks, everybody,' said I, 'but is this a man or a statue? I'm all through for a little while.' And a general shout of laughter came from the crowd around the ring. The amateur and I climbed out together, and, as we were dressing, he handed me his card—'Professor Achilles,' I think it read.

"'I'm the iron-headed man at the museum,' he chuckled. 'They break rocks on my head and pound anvils on my chest. The boys got me to come over here and meet you.'

"The joke was on me all right, and it came near being a strong joke, at that. One more round with him, and I'd have ruined my hand completely."

Rushing past the winning post at Brooklands on Easter Monday afternoon at a speed of ninety miles an hour, a racing motor-car failed to slow down and swerve to the left, as it should have done, with the result that it tore up the side of the banking, leapt sheer into the air at the top of the track, and crashed out of sight of the horrified spectators among some trees.

Nobody imagined that the driver, Mr. G. Wilkinson—an experienced racing motorist—could possibly be alive. Those who, with Major Lindsay Lloyd, the clerk of the course, were first on the scene, saw an altogether extraordinary sight. The great car, after leaving the edge of the track, had literally sprung straight up into the air. Then its momentum, at the excessive speed at which it was travelling, had caused it to hurl itself sheer away from the track, and upwards, in a mighty leap which actually enabled it to span a deep chasm forty feet wide.

In its fearful rush through the air it had precipitated itself through the branches of a tree, breaking them in all directions at a height of at least 30 feet from the ground. It was this pell-mell fall through the branches of the tree which prevented the driver from being discovered—as the searchers had feared—a mangled, lifeless form amid the ruins of his machine.

What actually happened was that the man, still clinging to the wheel of his car as it shot madly across the chasm, had been caught by one of the branches of the tree—which broke with the force of the impact—and jerked from his driving seat. The car, like some great projectile, tore on; he parted company with it in the air and fell among some undergrowth at the foot of the tree and at least 50 feet away from the point where he had leapt over the edge of the track.

Mr. Wilkinson was found lying half-hidden among the bushes, unconscious and with a bruised and bleeding face. He was taken to the Weybridge Cottage Hospital. Here an hour or so after his admission it was stated that he was in a very critical condition, having sustained a fracture of the skull and other injuries.

The motor-car had continued its mad career through the air for another 20 feet beyond the place where its driver had struck the earth. Then it had evidently hit the ground sideways, ploughing a deep hole in the soil; then it had rolled over and over with the last force of its momentum, smashing its wheels and crushing its metal body into what was practically an unrecognisable mass.

Fred Welsh, the celebrated Pontypridd light weight boxer, met Pal Moore, the crack Philadelphia light weight, in New York on the 12th ultimo, and in spite of suffering from a lame shoulder the Welshman beat his opponent in every round of a ten round battle, and in doing so gave New Yorkers a sample of speed that has never been surpassed in their city. His footwork and ringcraft were absolutely amazing. Moore rushed throughout as he always does and tried to keep boring in but his rushes were met and in the infighting he was beaten every time by Welsh. Moore started his rushing tactics at the very outset. Welsh took things cooly and slowing, trying to get the measure of his opponent while the latter kept rushing and once landed a right on Freddie's head. But Welsh straightened up and a wild fierce two minutes at lightning speed followed, Welsh forcing Moore backward and getting home almost three for one. Fred cut out the pace himself in the second round. A left swing and a right over the heart made Moore break ground. He came back and pumped a few lefts through Welsh's guard to the face but this was all he did in this round. Welsh got to close quarters and pounded Moore's lower ribs with both hands, blocking all returns. In round three Moore finding he could not cope with Welsh in his previous tactics again rushed, this time with better success, landing a few telling blows. Welsh steadied himself, and keeping right on top drove his opponent before him, both his hands landing frequently, Moore replying when he could. There was no slowing in the fourth nor yet in the fifth. In both these sessions Welsh was again the master at every stage. Moore made a fast and gallant fight but Welsh was boxing at the top of his speed and slowly but surely wearing Moore down. The pace never slackened through the sixth round, though both showed signs of the punishment they were receiving. The eighth was even faster with Welsh again going to his corner with the best of it. In the ninth Moore tried desperately to retrieve himself from certain defeat. He tried his art to the utmost but Welsh was again on top at the gong. The last round was a fierce slug. Moore was desperate and ramped into Welsh trying his level best to bring off a knock out. Welsh met him always and generally beat him to the punch. The end came in a fierce rally but Welsh holding his own won out. Welsh received several challengers at the close of the bout, one among others from Owen Moran, who has recently been trying to get "Knock Out" Brown into the ring with him. Moran is to fight Wolgast at Frisco on the 4th July but will run across to England to meet Mat Wells in a twenty round contest at the National Sporting Club on Derby night. The big London Club has offered a purse of 12,500 dollars for a bout of similar duration between Mat Wells and Packey McFarland weight to be 135lb. at 2 o'clock. Wells is ready and it remains for the Chicago Champion to say the word. There are still hopes that a match will be arranged between Welsh and McFarland in New York, the question of weight at present seems to be the stumbling block, Welsh wanting 133lb. at 2 o'clock and Packey standing out for 135lb. It seems likely that they will split the difference and make a match shortly.

In celebration of their victory in the Beighton Cup Hockey tournament the Calcutta Rangers club held a dinner at the Bristol Hotel on Saturday night. The catering was up to the very best Bristol standard. There was a capital selection of music from the orchestra during dinner, and a most enjoyable evening was spent—the post—prandial speeches being enthusiastically received.

Hackenschmidt, the wrestler, has recently returned to England, and states that he has signed articles to wrestle Frank Gotch in Chicago on 7th September. Gotch has agreed to meet him at the Empire Club, in Chicago, on Labour Day on condition that he got 20,000 dollars win or lose. "I have only one great ambition," says Hackenschmdt, "and that is to beat the American. If I do that, nothing else matters. I shall most likely start my training for this match with Gotch early in July, and probably in England."

A. F. Wilding, the New Zealander, who holds the lawn tennis championship of England and who was confidently expected to win it again this year, was defeated in Paris on the 17th April by W. H. Laurentz, a boy of sixteen, in the final of the French championships.

Laurentz showed magnificent all-round form, his driving, volleying, and service being wonderfully good.

All five sets had to be played before a result could be arrived at. The young Frenchman lost the first two sets, 6—4, 6—4, but won the third set easily at 6—1. The fourth set produced a grim struggle, and Laurentz won at 13—11.

Stamina and training are supposed to be Wilding's strong points, but Laurentz wore him down, and won the set and the championship at 8—6.

It was a wonderful performance for a mere boy and all Frenchmen are hoping that he will be induced to enter for the championships at Wimbledon, in which event there is a reasonable prospect of the English championship going for the first time to France.

The final of the Mahableshwar Polo tournament was played on the 2nd between Government House (Mr. Wilson, Major Greig, Captains Coaker and Lucas), and the 26th Cavalry (Messrs. Johnson, Collum, Captain Mowat and Mr. Summers), and produced a very fine game. The Cavalry team led at one period by three goals to one, but in the two last chukkers Government House scored three goals and won a very exciting match by four goals to three.

The following account of the most wonderful golf shot on record appears in Truth:—"The silence of Dean Maitland is as nothing compared with the silence of Horace Hutchinson. This old Champion amateur golfer writes even more delightfully of natural history than of golf. So far as journalism is concerned he has hesitated for a century to write a tale for fear that men should say that as a golfer he had but the same regard for veracity as the fisherman. But at last the truth that is stranger than fiction has found the light of day in the columns of the Westminster Gazette, and Mr. Hutchinson tells the tale. Briefly it is that a stranger came up to him recently at Biarritz and said that he had seen Hutchinson play the most extraordinary shot he ever knew of in golf. It was in 1888, the third year of the Amateur Championship at Prestwick. Hutchinson was then Champion, but in that round he was put out by Mr. "Andy" Stuart, of the Scotch Bar, whom he was playing at the time of the shot. Hutchinson sliced his approach badly at the hole after the short hole over the Himalaya. He and his caddie went after the ball. Mr. Stuart and his caddie and the onlookers went on to the green. Hutchinson lofted his ball over the hill that lay between him and the green. Both he and his caddie were certain the ball fell clear. The ball could be found nowhere. A Mr. Kirk, of the St. Andrew's Town Club, was looking on and helped to search, and suddenly he said he had felt a tug at his pocket. The ball was lying on his pocket handkerchief in his breast.

Both the players knew this man well. They did not doubt his story. But since his death Mr. Hutchinson has feared to tell the tale. Perhaps his leg had been badly pulled before, and now at Biarritz a stranger comes up who saw the shot played and saw the ball fall into Kirk's pocket. He saw that Kirk did not know it. He was coming up to tell where it was when the ball was found. And so after all these years corroborative evidence is forthcoming of the most wonderful shot in the records of the Championship. There would be no such reticence possible nowadays. The London evening papers would be billed with the incident. It would be almost as good as a murder or suicide in the West End to the proprietors, and the makers of the golf ball would advertise it and make a small fortune, notwithstanding the rise in the price of rubber.

As will be seen from an announcement in our advertisement columns it is proposed to introduce the supply of filtered water to Calcutta from the new elevated reservoir at Tallah from the middle of this month. It is essential that the public should co-operate with the Corporation in stopping the waste which now goes on, and which the greater supply from the elevated reservoir will at first, at any rate, tend to increase. Every householder should, therefore, see that taps are not left open when no water is required. One great cause of waste is that servants tie up self-closing taps to save the trouble of opening and shutting them. Another is that bathers sit for long periods under running taps thus using far more water than is necessary for their baths. It is necessary also to see that all defective fittings are promptly repaired so as to prevent leakages. It is hoped that if there is no considerable waste of water, there will be enough pressure to give everyone an ample supply, but this will not be the case if open taps and defective fittings are allowed to result in the wholesale waste which will be possible with the higher pressure.

A Press communique states that King's cups will be given for the football and hockey tournaments for the British and Indian armies, respectively, during the Delhi Durbar, open to the army in India, and that a King's medal will be given to each of the winning teams.

Owing to the limited time at Delhi it will be necessary for the preliminary rounds to be played by divisions, and winners of divisional tournaments only will play at Delhi.

A representative committee is being formed and the conditions will issue shortly. There will probably be a special camp for competitors as at the last Durbar. The arrangements at present are in the hands of Captain C. Watson Smyth, Abefoyle, Simla.

Last Saturday's mail steamer from Bombay had amongst its passengers the Indian cricket team which is to tour in England this summer. This is the first representative Indian team selected from various parts of the country and communities since the visit of the Parsee teams to England in 1886 and 1888. It is confidently hoped that the team now on its way will be able not only to learn much from the English players, but to give a good account of themselves in their fixtures. Manik Chand and Noorali of Kashmir, who were among those chosen, telegraphed their inability to make the trip shortly before the start, but the Selection Committee promptly held a meeting and selected Shivaram to fill the vacancy. Shivaram is brother to Balu, the great Hindu cricketer. The personnel of the team is as follows:—(1) His Highness the Maharajah of Patiala (Captain); (2) Dr. H. D. Kanga, Vice-Captain (Bombay); (3) Major K. M. Mistri (Patiala); (4) Mr. Syed Husen (Aligarh); (5) Mr. B. Jayram (Bangalore); (6) Mr. K. Seshachari (Madras); (7) Mr. R. P. Meherhomji (Bombay); (8) Mr. M. D. Bulsara (Delhi); (9) Shufgat Hoosein (Aligarh); (10) Mr. Salamudin (Aligarh); (11) Mr. Shivaram; (12) Mr. H. D. Mulla (Bombay); (13) Mr. P. Balu (Bombay); (14) Mr. J. S. Warden (Bombay); (15) Mr. Pai (Bombay); and Mr. J. M. Divecha, Manager and Secretary.

The team was feted and feasted before its departure and great enthusiasm prevailed on Ballard Pier on Saturday, all the members of the team being garlanded amid loud cheers.

The Governor of Bombay sent the following telegram to Mr. J. M. Framji Patel:—"My best wishes to His Highness and members of the all India team for a most pleasant and successful tour. I am sure that they will show good cricket and good-fellowship, thus helping to strengthen the ties which unite India with the Empire."

A list of fixtures is appended, opening with a match against Oxford University on the 1st June, so that they will not have much time for practice before their first engagement.

Only three teams entered for the Ooty Polo Tournament this year. In the first round the 14th Hussars beat the Oxford and Bucks Light Infantry from Wellington by 8 goals to 2.

In the finals the 14th Hussars, represented by Mr. Miller 1, Captain Newburn 2, Mr. Nicholson 3, and Captain Astley 4, beat the Ootacamund Gymkhana, represented by Mr. Featherstonhaugh 1, the Yuvaraj of Mysore 2, Mr. Mason 3, and Bunny Singh 4, by 9 goals to 3.

Major Duff and Captain Burne acted as umpires.

At the conclusion of the game, H. E. Lady Lawley presented the cup to the winning team.

The Simla Gymkhana Races fixed for Saturday afternoon last were abandoned for lack of entries.

The English cricket season opened last week, when the following matches were played:—

Notts beat M. C. C. at Lords by 66 runs.

Surrey beat Warwickshire at the Oval by an innings and 146 runs. Surrey beat Cambridge University by an innings and 83 runs.

After prolonged discussion, the M. C. C. have decided not to amend the no-ball rule, but to instruct the umpires that a batsman cannot be stumped on a no-ball.

An athletic meeting between Harvard and Yale and Oxford and Cambridge Universities has been fixed to take place at Queen's Club in July.

The boxing contests at the Empire Theatre, Saturday night, attracted a large gathering of sporting men and others. The arrangements were excellent and the fighting all through was genuine. It is to be regretted that the proceedings were marred by the disqualification of the Dixie Kid. This well-known boxer was to have met Corporal Panton from the Middlesex Regiment, but the soldier was prevented from keeping his engagement—his superior officers drawing the colour line. McCarthy was sent into the ring with Dixie and though he fought pluckily he was quite outclassed and was knocked down four times. Once taking the count till "eight" he rose absolutely dazed and his opponent could have finished him easily, but he forebore and McCarthy lasted till the fourth round, when he was knocked down again and on rising came towards Dixie covering up. The Kid, who was quite clear of his opponent, uppercut him heavily and sent him to the boards for the full count. But to the surprise of all the referee decided against the Dixie Kid on a foul. No explanation was forthcoming, and in the opinion of many at the ringside this decision appeared most mysterious while later McCarthy himself acknowledged he had not been fouled. It was rather bitter for the Dixie Kid who has always held a reputation of being a clean fighter, to thus have his escutcheon tarnished. The big fight of the evening between Bill Fisher and Corporal Sherwood of the Worcestershire Regiment was a hard battle as far as it went. Both men were in the pink of condition and they went all out for eight rounds. Fisher had Sherwood at his mercy in the seventh but failed to connect with a finishing punch and in the next session the tables were turned. Sherwood getting Fisher to the ropes and slogged him hard. Fisher was helpless and retired from the contest after the round was over. Sherwood has since challenged any 9st. 6lb. man in India for a side bet of Rs. 200 to Rs. 500 provided a reasonable purse is offered. All the other bouts staged were well fought and Panton made an especially good showing. It is a pity that he was unable to take the ring with the Dixie Kid but perhaps a meeting might be arranged later on.

We have to thank Messrs. Hardy Bros., of Alnwick, the makers of world renowned Angling specialities for a copy of their Anglers' Guide and Catalogue for 1911, a beautifully got up list of nearly 400 pages. Here we find listed all the fishing requisites which have rendered the name of Hardy famous all over the world. Two new three colour plates have been added to the beautiful illustrations which have appeared in previous issues and we would just call our readers' attention to a few of the innovations which now appear in the catalogue. First as regard to reels we have the "Silex" No. 2 a new bait casting reel, the action of which is so simple that the veriest duffer who ever tried to cast from the reel cannot fail to succeed and to be delighted with efforts. An illustration of this reel appears in Messrs. Hardy's advertisement in to-day's issue. Then there is the "Saint George" Fly reel an entirely new design in trout fly reels which promises to be a great favourite—a feature of this new model is that the drum is of unique design, cast in one solid piece and cut out. This reel is fitted with new improved regulating check work and patent agate guide ring, which latter is another new 1911 variation. In sea fishing reels three new patterns have been introduced, the new Fame Reel No. 1, the improved "Ocean" Reel and the "Coquet" Sea Reel. Among rods the "Casting Club de France" weighing only 2¾oz. is the lightest practical Fishing rod in the world. Numerous improvements in rod fittings are listed and among others we may mention the patent "Screw Grip" reel holder which does away with all possibility of a reel dropping off at a critical moment. The usual locking ring instead of having a plain surface is provided with a substantial internal screw and by turning the locking ring it travels up or down on the reel plate and securely locks it. A further improvement is that the reel plate is received under the cork handle into a metal socket which is quite covered so that the hand in no way comes into contact with the metal fittings and there is thereby no irritation set up in the palm of the hand. Fly casts, Bigg—wither leads, new Rectangular and Single Double spike hooks, and the new Hardy's Wallet for Flies are among the variety of new goods interesting and useful to anglers and we would advise all our fishing readers to possess themselves of a copy of the catalogue as soon as possible.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 21st April 1911.

Easter of this year of Coronation will always be recalled by its achievement of attaining the standard of perfect—simply perfect—weather. And when one has perfect spring conditions laid on, England is about as good a place to pay rates and taxes in as any other. Other days of other Eastertides may equal its standard, but never will the weather of Good Friday and Holy Saturday be excelled. Two days made golden with sunshine from early hours until the cloak of evening settled down; days never to warm for comfort and ne'er a chill touch even till late at night. Springtime and young April as it should be, and all the sins of omission of Spring up to then were wiped out and forgotten by the charm of those supremely fine days. And Easter Sunday and Monday, though a thought less sunny, were days to put by in lavender. In and out and through and round about five of our fairest counties did your Vagrant pedal his joyous way, ever and anon thinking of the friends of long ago who used to share his cycle tours in India's coral strand and wondering—just how they'd feel if they could be translated here to rejoin him these four golden days. It is not often The Vagrant can give you points in weather; but he had his chance here.

But here is a horrid croaker—Major R. A. Marriott, D.S.O., late of the Marines—with a wretched pamphlet in which he warns us that our summers are going to be colder and our winters warmer. That is not so very terrifying by itself, but when he tells us that we shall all have to move nearer the Equator in order to keep warm, in fact, to live, we begin to sit up and think it over. Imagine having to leave our dear homes for which we have paid rates and taxes in full without compensation for the great loss and starting all over again somewhere on the Congo! It is hardly fair. Then, too, in view of the capricious character of the weather in recent years, what guarantee have we that by the time we are all comfortably settled in the torrid zone a blizzard will not come along and freeze us all out of house and home? From the Equator there is no refuge. What would become of the River in July and the rose show in the Temple and the London County Council bands in the parks and the Socialist orators in Hyde Park and the Tottenham football ground and the White City and the tops of motor-omnibuses at night? Must we leave all that behind? Would it not be far more heroic to face frigid June and wait for violets in December? They have summer in the Antipodes while we have our present excuse for winter, and if we but change the names of our seasons we adapt ourselves to the situation. We believe there are thousands upon thousands of Englishmen who would prefer living and freezing by the banks of the Thames, the Avon, the Orwell, the Arun, or the Chelmer to sizzling in sight of the crocodiles of the White Nile.

But I have doubts about the coming deluge. We had that last summer.

Naturally the holidays have not passed without their share of minor accidents, but we have been spared any of the big calamities which sometimes attend the movement of crowds. Three boys were drowned at Whitley Bay, in Northumberland, and the capsize of a canoe on the Avon near Bristol resulted in two deaths. At Brooklands a car made a sensational leap over the banking, clearing a ravine forty feet wide before turning a somersault, and the driver was injured. Such an accident, however, is part of the risk of this racing business. In Wales rock-climbing, always dangerous after a period of frost, has caused two deaths. All these things are sad enough, but they are part of the price paid by a community which demands ever more exciting and dangerous ways of enjoying itself.

All you good old Anglo-Indians who travel home this summer must come prepared for scant accommodation and exorbitant prices if you come to London town and contemplate patronising the caravanserais. At least this is the warning note already struck by the papers which talk of "hotels full for the Coronation—enormous demand for accommodation in June—prices to be doubled."

The Savoy, which has only recently begun to accept bookings for Coronation week, has now only one or two suites left, and these will probably all be gone in the next few days. They must be taken for the whole month of June or not at all. For 1st to 14th June ordinary full-season rates are asked, from the 14th to the 30th double full-season rates have to be paid.

The cheapest of these suites works out at £135 for the month, and consists of two bedrooms and a bathroom, or a bedroom, bathroom and sitting-room.

In most cases there has been an all-round raising of charges. The Piccadilly, for instance, has at least doubled all its full-season rates, and has not a room left, some of the suites being let at £42 a day for the whole fortnight.

The Waldorf has a minimum charge of £7 7s. for the cheapest room in the hotel. This covers a week's board and lodging, but no less is charged if the room is occupied for only one night. The better rooms are let at much higher rates, the most expensive ranging up to £52 10s. for a room for the week. Again, not a room left.

Taking twenty-one of the largest hotels in London, having a combined accommodation of over 7,000 bedrooms, it seems that there are now left for the Coronation something like thirty rooms.

True there are the benches in the park and the embankment. On the other hand, I can imagine the home coming ones giving London a wide berth during the Coronation festivities. What? I myself would run like a hare from all such, indeed I've already fixed my little annual holiday for June so that I may strike for the interior and, leaving the "Coronating" to others, express my loyalty from a respectful distance.

BEFORE some tens of thousands of listeners, Sir Charles Santley, his score trembling violently in his hands, sang at the Crystal Palace for the last time on Good Friday. Despite the gaiety of the scene there was no little melancholy in this farewell of one of the greatest singers England has ever produced.

Sir Charles looked touchingly bent and frail, but his voice rang out across the vast spaces—the Crystal Palace is a Sahara among concert halls—with surprising resonance. He sang Gounod's "There is a green hill far away" and "Honour and Arms" of Handel with such polished style as to prove that it would still be a true pleasure, quite apart from the sentiment of the thing, to hear his relic of a glorious voice—Sir Charles is aged seventy-seven—in a less inordinately huge hall.

The ordinary voice there is as one crying in the wilderness. Mmes. Agnes Nicholls and Clara Butt, who were among the other singers, have not ordinary voices, and thunderous applause fell to them and to the other contributors to the programme, which contained the usual seasonable farrago of indifferent and moderately good music.

ANOTHER stage in the chequered history of the Strand improvement area is reached by the announcement that the Aldwych Theatre is to be offered for sale next month. The vicissitudes of the Whitney theatre in this neighbourhood—the building has been known also as the "Waldorf" and as the "Strand"—and of the Gaiety Restaurant, now defunct, to say nothing of the Strand "site" itself, emphasises the fact that this part of London has so far proved a difficult area for successful enterprise. And the Aldwych Theatre itself has had an uneven existence. Some notable successes have been numbered amongst a few failures there.

Built at a cost of nearly £45,000 by a syndicate, the house opened in December 1905, under Mr Frohman's management, with "Bluebell in Fairyland." That manager's three-year tenancy was not renewed after the run of "The Beauty of Bath," however. Then came some minor seasons, and the theatre reopened on Boxing Day 1909 with the phenomenal financial success of "The Bad Girl of the Family." This was followed by "The Girl Who Took the Wrong Turning." The coming sale is by order of the trustees for the debenture-holders.

"COUSIN KATE" was revived on Saturday night at the Playhouse. When Mr. Cyril Maude announced that he was going to revive this eight-year-old comedy many felt that he was hazarding a risky experiment. Fashion changes quickly in the drama. What pleased a few years back fails to please to-day. Mr. Cyril Maude, however, proved to be correct. In spite of the fact that "Cousin Kate" is old-fashioned, that Cousin Kate has appeared in many different garbs since her memorable appearance at the Haymarket, and that pure, healthy sentiment is fast disappearing from the English stage, she was welcomed again with all the acclaim which greeted her on her first introduction to the public.

One need not go far to seek the reason. The keynote of the success of this purely sentimental comedy is Mr. Cyril Maude and Miss Ellis Jeffreys. If Mr. Maude is a master of comedy so also is Miss Jeffreys a mistress of comedy. In the second act, in the empty country house, where one of the most picturesque and delicate love scenes ever devised is played to the tune of a thunderstorm, the master and mistress of comedy attain the highest level in their art. The result is the most perfect harmony. The scene calls for it; one single jarring note would lay in ruins Mr. Davies' masterful theme.

Of the acting it is only necessary to state that the company is the same as the company in the good old Haymarket days. Mr. Rudge Harding as the parson is perfect. Miss Beatrice Ferrar as she was meant makes one feel glad that her fate is the parson, Miss Carlotta Addison might have slipped out of a picture of a typical old country lady, while Miss Pamela Gaythorne, the servant girl, has a super-giggle which is a gift and could not be acquired by months of rehearsing.

MR. OSCAR ASCHE has contrived a cunningly woven magic carpet, and at the Garrick Theatre last Wednesday night he carried us on it away from the grey modern West, with its whirl and its problems, its struggles and its vanities, to the long ago of the Arabian Nights, to Baghdad and its Caliphs.

Mr. Edward Knoblauch's "Kismet," as Mr. Oscar Asche has produced it, is more than a play. It is a vivid, splendid picture of the East, with its colour and its movement, its resignation and its restfulness, its candour and its cruelty, its religion and its poetry—almost with its sound and its smell.

The story has the Arabian Nights and human quality of simplicity. It is told, as all simple stories should be told, with ornate and prodigal elaboration. Hajj the Beggar is sitting at the door of the mosque in Baghdad at dawn, appealing with whines, with jokes, and with abuse to the pious as they come to offer their morning prayer. A few coins are thrown to him, but it is not until the Sheikh Jawan, old, feeble, and supported by his slaves, totters towards the mosque that he reaps much of a harvest. Jawan had been a beggar, too, years before, and Hajj's rival. With contemptuous disdain he throws his old associate a well-filled purse. Hajj curses him—and pockets the purse. It makes him rich. He will beg no more.

We go with him to the bazaar, with its haggling tailors, its fruit sellers, its veiled ladies, its curious foreign visitors. We see the young idealistic Caliph pass, and bow our heads to the ground. We bow still lower and with trembling when, after the Caliph, comes the wicked Wazir Mansur, with his sycophants, for is he not Wazir of the Police, and a hard and cruel man?

Hajj bargains with the tailors for clothes for himself, and anklets and veils for his lovely daughter, Marsinah; but alas!—such is the habit of an evil life—despite the full purse in his breast, he bolts without paying.

We follow him—as do the tailors and the captain of the watch—to the courtyard of his house. Marsinah, forgetting the veiled modesty of a Moslem maid, has allowed a young man to climb the wall and make love to her. She has promised to marry him, thinking that he is a gardener's son. But we, with the omniscience of onlookers, recognise him as the Caliph himself.

She is delighted and excited when her father arrives with his presents. But her joy is short-lived, for soon there is the ominous knocking at the gate, and Hajj is arrested and hauled off to prison.

He is brought before the wicked Mansur, who, after horrid threats of sword and boiling oil, offers to pardon him if he will murder the Caliph.

We go with him, respectful and awed, to the Caliph's diwan, where, dreaming of the maiden he loves, the young ruler declines the gifts of dancing girls from Egypt, and administers justice with an even if merciful hand. Hajj obtains entrance to the palace as a Moorish juggler, but his stabbing is quite ineffective, for the wise Caliph, with a complete knowledge of the dangers of ancient Baghdad, wears a shirt of mail.

Hajj deservedly is thrown into a damp and dark dungeon. But he is not yet finished with. In a fit of frenzy he breaks his chains, kills Jawan, who is also in the cell, and is released in his stead.

Greatly privileged or daring, we go with him to Mansur's harem, and a splendid scene it is. A large swimming bath stretches across one side, and here some of the women are larking and bathing, while others loll on the cushions lazily listening to soothing music.

Hajj rescues his daughter, and drowns the execrable Mansur in real water, a very masterpiece of realism, and the play finishes with the gorgeous peacock-blue wedding of the Caliph and Marsinah, and the departure of Hajj on a pilgrimage to Mecca.

Mr. Oscar Asche is splendid as Hajj. Miss Lily Brayton is delightful as Marsinah. Mrs. Raleigh is beautiful as Mansur's first wife. Mr. Grimwood is powerful and saturnine as Mansur. In fact, every character is well played. The stage management is masterly, and Mr. Joseph Harker's beautiful scenery and Mr. Christopher Wilson's dainty and characteristic music are essential to the success of the magic carpet.

It was a shock to come out of the theatre and hear the shrill call of the cab whistles. We expected to hear the voice of the Muezzin from the top of the mosque bidding us to our prayers.

LEOPARDS IN BENGAL.

IT was not till some nine months later and when he had some three or four score of victims to his credit, that the Ramchunderpore man-eater paid the penalty of his murderous career, the brute being brought to book in rather an accidental manner. Four men on elephants were out looking for this man-eating leopard and were returning as usual without having seen anything of him when their attention was drawn to a man making signs to them and beckoning them to come. On getting up to him, they were informed by him that he had just seen a leopard climb into a tamarind tree, a favourite perch of the brute, and from where, owing to its position, it could survey and have a good view of the country roundabout. On the present occasion the man-eater had seen half a dozen women going to fetch water from a neighbouring tank or pond and evidently wanted to see by which way they would return, so as to be able to strike down one of the unfortunate creatures as she passed by. The four sportsmen now hurried towards the spot where their informant said he had seen the leopard. As they got within a couple of hundred paces of the tamarind tree they saw a large leopard run along one of the branches and suddenly jump to the ground from a height of some 15 or 20 feet. The sportsmen now made almost sure that they had at last come in sight of the dreaded man-eater, so they took all the necessary precautions not to let the brute have a chance of giving the slip again, as he must have done numbers of times before. The cover the leopard was seen to go into after he jumped down consisted mainly of a canebrake running parallel to a dried up khal or rivulet. Of the four elephants they had, two were sent down in the khal and two made their way through the canebrake. They had not proceed far when not one but two leopards broke. Everybody's attention was drawn towards the large leopard, heavily built and of a very light colour; number two was a comparatively small leopard and very dark. The elephants were now pushed forward, and the next time the big brute showed himself Cotton bowled him; but though he was up again, he, like most other man-eaters, turned an arrant coward and died after trying his best to save his skin; the brute proved to be a powerfully built male of very light colour and with a short stumpy tail. The smaller and much darker coloured leopard managed to escape during the scrummage that followed when finishing off the bigger brute. As two leopards were seen, it was not sure at first if the actual maneater had been killed, so the reward offered was at first withheld, but all doubts disappeared when no more victims were ascribed to the dread monster and the reward was at last paid.

The Shikarpore manesting leopard had perhaps the greatest number of victims to his credit, but he was what I should call a rural leopard, as the brute never entered a village or hamlet to seek his victims, who were usually cultivators, villagers or lonely wayfarers. Like most other man-eaters, he roamed about a good deal and his guilty conscience made him very suspicious and it used to be said that the best way to secure him was to set up a trap. Large rewards were offered for the destruction of this leopard, and though several others were killed, the real offender seemed to bear a charmed life and for nearly two years he led his murderous career; his principal victims were cultivators and he struck these down when they were working in their fields or cutting grass or crops; the brute used also to levy toll from belated travellers or wayfarers and he once attacked a wedding party, actually striking down the bridegroom before the terrified gaze of the horror stricken party. This fiend met his doom at last, being shot by the then manager of Shikarpore, Dalrymple. It was during the cold weather months that when some villagers were cutting grass one of them had occasion to go to another part of the field he saw the grass move and had not long to wait before he found to his dismay a large leopard evidently making his way towards the other men cutting the grass: the man's first impulse was to make a bolt of it, but remembering his companions, he shouted to them that they were being stalked by the man-eater; this warning call was enough and they were not long in making their exit from the grassfield. The news that the maneater had actually been seen in broad daylight spread like wildfire and the scene of occurrence being only some three or four miles from Shikarpore, the fact was soon brought to Dalrymple's notice and he lost no time in getting on his elephant and making his way towards where pardus had last been seen. No sooner had the elephant entered the grass then the man eater with a succession of gutteral coughs and with tail on end came bounding to meet the elephant and in the scrimmage that followed a man called Peters, an Eurasian clark of Shikarpore who had come to see the fun, tumbled off the hathi and fared rather badly. Dalrymple had to give the brute a couple of more shots before finishing him off. The leopard was a male one and was nothing out of the common in appearance or build, the only thing remarkable about him was the amount of fat he carried. It was his cunning and suspicious nature that allowed him to save his skin for some two years. All the incidents related here took place in the early sixties and my informant was old Danby, one of Robert Watson's old pensioners who died at Shikarpore some years ago.

The Galimpore man-eating leopard was a fearless brute, as it was nothing for him to enter huts and seize the occupants; for a considerable time it was doubtful whether it was a tiger or leopard that had turned man-eater. Tigers were fairly common then about Galimpore and are even so now, most of these finding their way from the adjoining district of Dinajpore. As in cases of man-eaters a reward was offered for its destruction. Though the brute mostly killed during the night, he was found early one morning dragging a woman he had apparently struck down during the latter part of the night and it was found out afterwards that the village where the victim had been seized and carried off from lay some four miles distant. The men who had seen the leopard dragging the victim kept a good look out, to see where he went, the brute was finally marked down to a clump of trees that grew amongst the ruins of an old indigo factory. The native shikaries, who had been told off to try and destroy the man-eater, were communicated with, and as soon as they came (three of them) steps were taken to find out the whereabouts of Pardus. They made their way cautiously forward from camp to a cone of dung in a hollow and some 2 feet high, this warned the man that the man-eater could not be far, when all at once an ominous growl came from underneath of what had once been the boiler house of the factory; the men having located the leopard beat a hasty retreat and having got out in the open the three shikaries decided to sit up for the maneater. There were many trees about so the three men who had decided to sit up soon had made their choice and decided to take up their position at once, as the leopard having seen them would perhaps have given them the slip if left to himself till the evening. The three shikaries accordingly mounted into their trees, some of the villagers going to get their food. The three trees into which the men had perched themselves commanded a good view of the leopard's den, so there was a very good chance of their bagging him should he venture out, the moon too was at the full and it being also cloudless everything was distinctly visible. Though the three shikaries had taken their positions early in the day, it was only the following morning that the man-eater ventured to come out, for he had seen the men perched on the trees. One of the shikaries saw the leopard slowly emerge from his den under the boiler and try and make his exit, and as the brute got under the tree a charge of slugs at the distance of a few yards laid him low, one of the slugs fracturing his skull. When they looked into the den, they found it to be a perfect golgotha, there were the remains or rather the bones of more than a score or so of his victims. I got no information as regards this leopard size, etc., but only that he was an old male and had carried his career of murder for close on 18 months before he was shot.

IMMUNITY OF ANIMALS TO SNAKE-BITE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have read with interest the article in the Indian Field of the 30th instant, on the subject of the "Immunity of Animals to Snake-bite." But I was much surprised by the statement that the mongoose is completely immune to the effects of snake venom.

If he be immune, why should the mongoose occasionally show fear of a cobra and always, as I believe to be the case, display great activity in avoiding a bite?

The writer of your article does not give the name of the French investigator by whom this is said to have been proved. Professor Calmette, perhaps the greatest French authority on snake poisons, arrived at a different conclusion. He found that eight times the dose of venom sufficient to kill a rabbit proved fatal to a mongoose in twelve hours; and, as the result of his experiments concludes: "The mongoose is able to bear without discomfort very considerable doses relative to its size, but its immunity is not absolute. If it generally triumphs in its struggles with venomous snakes, it is chiefly due to the extreme agility with which it is endowed." It is not quite clear whether these experiments were made with the poison of the cobra or with that of the West Indian "fer-de-lance" (trigonocephalus); apparently the latter.

Again Fleet-Surgeon P. W. Bassett-Smith writing in the Encyclopaedia Medica in 1902 remarks: "The mongoose is remarkably resistant to cobra poison, requiring from 10 to 25 times as much venom per kilo, as a rabbit, to produce lethal effects."

It is obvious then that a mongoose's chances of life, once he is bitten, while greater than a rabbit's, yet depend on the quantity of venom injected being less than a fatal dose for him. It may be of interest to consider whether the amount of poison injected by a bite from an average cobra under normal conditions would be less or more than enough for a mongoose.

Now the minimum lethal dose of cobra poison for a rabbit is, according to the late Major Lamb, I.M.S., ·85 millegrammes per kilogramme of the animal's weight. Taking the highest estimate of the dose for a mongoose, 25 times the above is 8·75 millegrammes per kilo. If a mongoose weighs 2 kilos, which I doubt, it follows that 20 millegrammes would be more than a fatal dose. Now a medium-sized cobra will (again according to Lamb) yield about 200 millegrammes of venom, while the fatal dose for an average man is calculated at about 50 millegrammes. We have too good reasons to know that the latter dose and more is frequently injected, and it is probable that a healthy cobra can, on occasion, inject the whole contents of its poison gland at a single effort. It is therefore obvious that the danger to a mongoose attacking a cobra of receiving a fatal bite, if fairly struck, is considerable.

It appears then that the undoubted anti-toxic qualities existing in the blood of the mongoose are not of themselves sufficient to secure immunity.

Bassett-Smith writes; "Elliott believes that the success of this animal in fighting cobras depends on (1) its great agility, (2) its habits of setting up its fur, thus deluding the snake as to its vulnerable part. Its immunity is due to the habit it has of seizing the snake by the head, and often by so doing, incising the poison-gland with its sharp teeth, causing the venom to escape and be swallowed by the mongoose; this would also reduce the possible amount to be injected down the fang. Then there is the inoculation of minute quantities of venom from repeated but ineffectual scratch bites. In these ways a partial immunity, which is hereditary, is established, becoming lost in time if the animals be removed to countries where cobras do not exist."

This theory is a plausible one. But there is a stumbling-block. It is not difficult to imagine a mongoose, by reason of his agility and increasing experience, surviving a number of encounters at the cost of a few scratches which the antidote in his blood has prevented proving fatal. These successive inoculations together with the poison swallowed at times would tend to increase his immunity so that an old individual might take a good deal more killing than a comparative youngster.

But can this additional immunity acquired from inoculation be transmitted to the animal's offspring? It is the old question of the heritability of accidentally acquired characters, often affirmed but never proved. Possibly the mongoose may eventually furnish the evidence that has hitherto been sought in vain. (I offer this suggestion gratis to any advocates of the theory who may be on the look-out for new lines of investigation. It should be simple enough. Start a mongoose stud and inoculate each generation up to the limit: in course of time, if your breed be a good one you should be in a position to supply all the laboratories in the country with anti-venine!)

It may be that the fact of the immunising factor being an anti-toxin in the blood places it in a different category from other acquired characters, as it would seem possible for the embryo to be inoculated before birth from the anti-toxin in its mother's blood. If so, it is sure to be a well-known fact and I have, in the valour of my ignorance, been merely tilting at wind-mills. I must take my chance of that!

If this is not the case however, and we decline, in the absence of satisfactory proof, to believe that acquired characters can be inherited, it follows that we are in entire ignorance as to how the mongoose's existing inherited partial immunity originated; though it has doubtless been strengthened in some measure by centuries of natural selection. From this the further conclusion may be drawn that this inherited immunity probably—almost certainly—differs in its nature from such additional immunity as the individual animal may acquire from inoculation during its lifetime.

This conclusion is found to be of value when considered in relation to an important fact which I have not yet mentioned: I mean the fact of the highly specific character of snake venoms which appears to have been established beyond question by the most recent investigations, alike in India, Australia, and America, the result of which is that an anti-toxin obtained from the poison of the cobra, for instance, is absolutely ineffective as a curative against the poison of krait or daboia—Calmette's original belief to the contrary notwithstanding.

Hence it is to be deduced that any immunity which the Indian mongoose may acquire from inoculation with the venoms of Indian snakes will afford it no protection against the bites of distinct species from other parts of the world. But it may be the case that the inherited immunity of whose origin we are ignorant does possess a more general protective power.

I am under the impression, which may be mistaken, that the venom of Trigonocephalus is relatively less deadly than that of the Indian cobra. If so, it is of interest in this connection to note that Professor Calmette's experiments appear to indicate a lessened degree of immunity in respect of the former species.

As to whether, or how far, the Indian mongoose is, in point of fact, protected against venomous snakes other than Indian, I have no knowledge. He may be quite unaffected by a dose of 10 to 15 millegrammes of cobra poison or of 3 or 4 millegrammes of the krait's deadlier prescription; but personally I should hesitate to back his chances against a proportionate injection of the venom of, say, the Australian Tiger-snake or the rattle snake

If however the mongoose's inherited immunity is found to be at all general, as the article in your paper implies, the theory is at once shown to be impossible, that it was originally due to the effect of inoculations through successive generations with the venoms of such snakes as inhabit the same countries. Unless, of course, the father of all serpents inoculated the father of all mongooses with a venom containing all the characteristics of all the various specialised snake-venoms now in existence!

I have written a longer screed than I had intended, but the subject is one of such interest that I hope you may be able to find space for it. Can any of your readers give evidence as to the suggested immunity of the Felidae? or from personal experiences on the subject generally?

I may mention that the quotations I have made from Calmette and Bassett-Smith are taken from the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society, Vol. XI, p. 516 and Vol. XV, p. 115. Major Lamb's figures are from articles in Vol. XIV, p. 221 and Vol. XVII, p. 16.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

CORPORATION IN CALCUTTA.

WATER-WORKS.

FILTERED WATER-SUPPLY.

It is anticipated that the new elevated reservoir will be brought into use about the middle of May 1911. In order to achieve the result aimed at, viz., the constant supply of filtered water throughout the city at an increased pressure, it is absolutely essential that every possible means should be adopted to control waste. To this end all rate-payers are requested to assist the Corporation by seeing that all their water taps and valves are in good order and by reporting to the Chief Engineer all defects that exist.

Attention is drawn to the following suggestions for preventing waste:—

(1) The repair of all defects—
Except in the case of a special agreement to the contrary, if the owner fails to keep the pipes and fittings in order, it is open to the occupier of the premises, after giving 3 days' notice in writing to the owner, to have the necessary repairs executed and to deduct the cost thereof from the rent.
(Section 365 of the Calcutta Municipal Act.)

(2) The closing of all taps after use—
The use of automatic self closing taps is recommended. Excess consumption will be charged for.

(3) If the washer of the tap is worn out a letter should be sent to the Water-Works Department at the Central Municipal Office and a new washer will be fitted free of charge.

(4) Owners and occupiers should remember that, under the law, the water-supply may be cut off, after 24 hours' notice, if defects are not remedied. When re-connection is made under these circumstances a fee of Rs. 3-8 for ferrule and of Re. 1-12 for stopcock may be levied.

(5) Any delay on the part of plumbers engaged to repair defective pipes or fittings should be reported at once to the Assistant Engineer, Water-Works, at the Central Municipal Office. A list of licensed plumbers may be obtained from the Municipal Office.

(6) All complaints regarding incivility on the part of the Corporation water inspecting staff should be made in writing to the Assistant Engineer, Water-Works. No payment should be made to any Municipal employee without a proper receipt for it. All Overseers and Sub-Overseers of the Water-Works Department are provided with a book containing orders as to the delegation of their authority. This book will be shown on request. Other employees of the Department are provided with a numbered badge showing their designation.

Mr. S. W. Ladenlaw's dun b g Phari, 8st. 2lb.	Native 0

BETTING: 6 to 4 each Minoru and Puttabong, longer odds the rest.

Minoru won after a good race by a length.

Second Day, 4th May 1911.

THIBET STAKES.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. A handicap for Bhutias 13-2 and under. 3 laps.

Mr. Kangsee's d bh g Minoru, 10st. 7lb. ...	Capt. Large 1
Mr. Roland's g bh g Donovan, 9st. 7lb. ...	S. Singh 2
Mr. Roland's d bh g Dandy, 6st. 11lb. ...	Ithoo 3
Mr. K. C. Gyalpa's gr bh m Sikkimi, 9st. 7lb.	W. Dunne 0
Sergt.-Major Dyball's g bh h Music, 10st. 11lb. —	Gee 0

BETTING: Evens Minoru, 2 to 1 agst. Music, 3 to 1 Dandy, 4 to 1 each Donovan and Sikkimi.

A good race. Donovan led the field a cracker till nearing the finish, when he shot his bolt and was unable to resist the challenge of Minoru, who came with a great run and won cleverly by half a length; Dandy a good third.

BURDWAN CUP.—For a cup value Rs. 49. A handicap for ponies 14-1 and under that have run on the first day. 2½ laps.

Mr. A. J. Shillingford's ch aus m Gowan, 9st. 10lb.	Mr. McCall 1
Mr. Bird's br w m Eve, 7st.	Native 2
Mr. Clive's b w g Spec, 12st. ...	Capt. Liddell 3

BETTING: 2 to 5 on Gowan, 5 to 2 each Eve and Spec.

A close race all through, Gowan led accompanied by Spec with Eve close up. Down the straight Eve made her effort, passed Spec and challenged Gowan. A great finish resulted in Gowan just being able to hold out and win by a neck. Eve declared 13lb. and carried 7st. 13lb. instead of 7st., otherwise she must have beaten the good thing that Gowan was reckoned to be.

NOVICE HANDICAP.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. A handicap for all ponies that have run in the Novice Stakes on the first day. 2 laps.

Mr. R. Mytton's b w g Darby, 10st. ...	Gee	1
Mr. H. Jones' cream ch m Leah, 6st. ...	Native	2
Mr. Clive's br aus m Maid Marion, 6st. 7lb.	Native	3

BETTING : 5 to 1 on Darby, 6 to 1 agst. Leah and 10 to 1 Maid Marion.

Darby went right away and won in a common canter. Leah declared 14lb. and Maid Marion 2½lb.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR'S CUP.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. For all ponies 14-1 and under. English and Australasians 14-1 to carry 11st., C.-B's 14-1 to carry 9st., Arabs 14-1 to carry 8st. 4lb., W. I. Penalties—Winner of a race value Rs 200, once 4lb., twice 7lb. oftener 10lb. Ponies that have never won a race value Rs. 40 or over previous to this meeting allowed 7lb 4 laps.

Mr. L. C. Daunt's b w m Flair, 9st. 7lb ...	Mr. McCall	1
Major Goss' b w m Merry Eyes, 10st. 7lb.	Gee	2
Mr. Hickley's ch w m Melody, 11st. ...	Capt. Liddell	3

BETTING : 3 to 1 on Merry Eyes, 2½ to 1 each Melody and Flair.

Merry Eyes was rather fractious at the start and when they were sent off she took the lead, fighting like a mad thing for her head and Gee had none too nice a ride. After a couple of laps had been negociated Merry Eyes settled down and Flair went up alongside with Melody close on Flair. They went like this till they got into the straight when all started riding. Merry Eyes, however, was unable to shake off Flair, and the latter, ridden with great judgement, forged to the front nearing the post and won a great race by half a length, Melody a close third.

BHUTIA NOVICE PLATE.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. A handicap for Bhutia ponies 13-2 and under that have started in the Bhutia Novice Derby. 3 laps.

Mr. Kangsee's d bh g Minoru, 10st. 7lb. ...	Capt. Large	1
Mr. K. Shempa's ch bh h Donkya, 8st. ...	Native	2
Mr. F. H. O'Donoghue's gr bh g Puttabong, 9st. 9lb	Gee	3
Mr. H. Jones' b bh g Spark, 8st. 3lb. ...	Native	0
Mr. S. W. Ladenlaw's b bh g Phari, 6st. 2lb.	Native	0

BETTING : Evens Minoru, 2 to 1 agst. each Spark and Puttabong, 4 to 1 Donkya and 6 to 1 Phari.

Puttabong was the first to show out, followed by Donkya, Minoru next. This order was maintained till the straight, where Minoru ranged up. Puttabong dropped back and Donkya and Minoru fought out the finish, the latter winning a nicely ridden race by half a length ; Puttabong close up third.

REGIMENTAL CUP.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by Lieutenant-Colonel R. F. B. Glover, D.S.O., and Officers, 3rd Battalion, D. C. O. Middlesex Regiment. For ponies 14-1 and under (the property of Members of the Military, Civil or Auxiliary Services) English and Australasians 14-1 to carry 12st., C.-B.'s 14-1 to carry 10st., Arabs 14-1 to carry 9st. 4lb. W. I. Penalties—Previous winners of Rs. 40 or over once 4lb., twice 7lb., oftener 10lb. 2 laps.

Major Hayes' b aus g A1, 12st. ...	Capt. Large	1
Mr. H. Jones' b cb g Sherwood, 9st. 5lb. ...	Gee	2
Mr. Clive's br w m Mill Girl, 12st. ...	Capt. Liddell	3

BETTING : 2 to 1 on A1, 2 to 1 Sherwood, 4 to 1 Mill Girl.

Sherwood was very fractious at the gate and played up for some time. When they were eventually got off Sherwood went off and set the pace a cracker. After the first lap, however, he shot his bolt and A1, came along. Entering the straight A1, came right away and finished easy about four lengths to be good.

THE PLANTERS' CUP.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by the Planters of the District. A handicap for ponies 14 hands and under that have run on the first or extra day. 2 laps.

Mr. Clive's b cb m Labby Annie, 8st. ...	Native	1
Capt. W. H. Samuel's b aus m Coquette, 8st.	Itboo	2
Mr. A. J. Shillingford's ch aus g Kestrel, 9st. 7lb.	Mr McCall	3
Mr. R. Mytton's br aus g Darby, 10st. ...	Gee	0

BETTING : 5 to 2 on Labby Annie, 2 to 1 Coquette, 4 to 1 each Darby and Kestrel.

Labby Annie showed out directly they were released and led the whole way chased by Coquette. Down the straight the latter made an effort but could get nowhere near the leader who won easily.

Third Day, 6th May 1911.

THE postponed last day of the meeting came off in the best of weather and there was a very fair attendance. Favourites were well to the fore as usual, and the public and owners must have had a very satisfactory meeting. Minoru's win in the Everest Stakes stamps him as the best Bhutia pony here ; he has won four races right off the reel like a little champion, and Captain Large must be very proud of the nice rides the little fellow has given him. Mrs. Glover very kindly presented the prizes at the end of the day.

GARRISON STAKES.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. Presented by J. C. Galstaun, Esq. A handicap for ponies qualified to run in the Regimental Plate and which have run on any of the previous days of the meeting. 2 laps.

Major Goss's b w m Merry Eyes, 11st. 7lb.	Capt. Liddell	1
Mr. A. J. Shillingford's ch aus m Gowan, 9st. 10lb.	Mr. McCall	2
Mr Bird's br w m Eve, 8st.	Native	3
Major Hayes' b aus g A. I., 9st. 7lb.	Capt. Brancker	0

BETTING : 3 to 1 on Merry Eyes, 5 to 2 agst. Gowan, 3 to 1 Eve, and 5 to 1 A. I.

Merry Eyes went off with the lead as usual, and going very strongly all through won very easily.

BHUTIA NOVICE HANDICAP.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. A handicap for Bhutia ponies 13-2 and under that have run in either of the Novice races on the first or second days of the meet. 2 laps.

Mr. H. Jones' b bh g Spark, 9st. 5lb. ...	Native	1
Rai Bahadur Ugyen Kazi's dun bh h Ruckpa, 10st.	Native	2
Major Hayes' and Mr. Large's g bh g Not Arf, 10st. 4lb....	Capt. Large	3
Mr. F. H. O'Donoghue's gr bh g Puttabong, 11st. 7lb.	Capt. Liddell	0
Mr. S. W. Ladenlaw's dun bh g Phari, 7st. 9lb.	Itboo	0
Mr. K. Shempa's ch bh h Donkya, 9st. 2lb.	Native	0
Mr. Dasina's br bh g Kali, 9st. ...	B. Singh	0
Mr. Pasram's g bh g G. P., 10st. ...	Native	0

BETTING : 6 to 4 agst. Spark, 5 to 2 Not Arf, 3 to 1 Kali, 4 to 1 Donkya, 5 to 1 each Ruckpa and G.P., 6 to 1 Puttabong, 10 to 1 Phari.

Spark ran very prominently to-day and was in the fighting line from the outset, Kali and Ruckpa also prominent. They were all close up at the finish Spark getting there by a bare half length ; Kali half a length third. Kali's Jockey failed to weigh out, and third place was given to Not Arf.

NEW HANDICAP.—For a Cup value Rs. 49 for ponies 14-0 and under. 2 laps.

Mr. Clive's bay ch m Labbie Annie, 9st.	Native	1
Mr. Bird's br w m Eve, 8st.	Native	2
Mr. L. C. Daunt's br aus m Flair, 11st. 5lb.	Capt. Large	3
Mr. R. Mytton's br aus g Darby, 10st. ...	Mr. Smithers	0
Mr. Clive's br aus g Huret-Lad, 10st. 8lb.	Gee	0

BETTING : 2 to 1 on Labby Annie, 2 to 1 agst. Eve, 3 to 1 Huret Lad, 6 to 1 Gowan, 7 to 1 Flair, and 10 to 1 Darby. Labby Annie went to the front at once and leading all through won very comfortably.

EVEREST STAKES.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. A handicap for Bhutia ponies 13-2 and under that have run at the meeting. 3 laps.

Mr. Kangsee's dun bh g Minoru, 11st. 4lb.	Capt. Large	1
Mr. Roland's dun bh g Dandy, 7st. ...	Itboo	2
Sergeant-Major Dyball's g bh h Music, 11st. 7lb.	Gee	3
Mr. K. C. Gylpa's gr bh m Sikkimi, 9st. 10lb.	Mr. McCall	0
Mr. R. W. Hodges' br bh g Bobby, 7st. 4lb.	Native	0

BETTING : 5 to 4 on Minoru, evens Dandy, 4 to 1 agst Music, 5 to 1 Sikkimi, 8 to 1 Bobby.

Sikkimi and Music in company led for the first lap with Dandy close up pulling hard. At the second lap Dandy went to the front and led till nearing the home turn when Minoru commenced to come up. Down the straight they were together, and in a ding-dong finish Minoru just squeezed home by a neck.

DUCASSE CUP.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. Presented by Messrs. Ducasse & Co. A handicap for ponies 14-1 and under which have run on first or second day. 4 laps.

Mr. Hickley's ch w m Melody, 12st. ...	Mr. McCall	1
Mr. Clive's b aus g Spec, 12st. ...	Gee	2
Mr. A. J. Shillingford's b aus m Charlotte, 10st. 7lb.	B. Singh	3
Major Goss' b w m Merry Eyes, 11st. 7lb.	Capt. Liddell	0
Mr. Clive's br aus g Huret Lad, 10st. 4lb....	Capt. Large	0

BETTING : 3 to 1 on Melody, 5 to 2 agst. Spec, 4 to 1 each Merry Eyes, and Huret Lad, 5 to 1 Charlotte.

Merry Eyes as usual went away with a strong lead followed by Spec and then Melody. After three laps Merry Eyes was finished, and Spec and Melody then went on together, from the straight Melody came away and won by a clear length.

ARMY STAKES.—A distance handicap for all Bhutia ponies that have been licensed by Cantonment Officers and regularly hired out in the station to be ridden by N.-C. O.'s or men of the garrison. No whips or spurs. 2 laps.

About 12 started and provided the usual fun for the spectators. There were no spills, but several ponies cut the course at different points.

CORTO CUP.—A Consolation Race.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. Presented by the Committee of the Darjeeling Gymkhana Club, "Ld" A handicap for all ponies 14-1 and under that have run and not won on the first or second day of this meeting. Winners on this third day to carry a penalty of 10lb. 2½ laps.

Mr. Clive's bay aus g Spec, 12st. ...	Capt. Liddell	1
Mr. A. J. Shillingford's ch aus g Kestrel, 9st. 4lb.	Mr. McCall	2

Mr. A. J. Shillingford's b aus m Charlotte, 10st. 7lb. ... ... B. Singh 3
Mr. Clive's br w m Maid Marion, 6st. ... Native 0
Mr. Clive's br w m Mill Girl, 8st. ... Native 0
Mr. H. Jones' cream ch g Leab, 6st. ... Native 0

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Kestrel, evens Spec, 8 to 1 Charlotte, any price the rest.

This was a splendid race between the first two. Kestrel was better fancied as Spec had already had a gruelling 4 lap race. Kestrel led, with Spec close on him all through. Down the straight there was a race tussle. Inch by inch Spec gained ground, a few yards from home they were level, and just on the post Spec pushed his nose in front and won the most exciting race of the meeting by about that margin.

(Winner trained by J. A. Mayo.)

BETTING: 5 to 2 agst. Danaus, 4 to 1 Golden Point, 5 to 1 Cadonia, 6 to 1 Nangar, 7 to 1 Blue Gem, 2 to 1 each Dorando or Aurofodina, 25 to 1 each Malthusian or Moorilla.

Dorando and Moorilla were first to commence, but Aurofodina led past the Leger from Golden Point and Nangar. Nangar then went to the front and showed the way past the stand to Aurofodina and Golden Point, with Blue Gem last. In this order they left the straight and made the mile post, where Nangar was nearly two lengths clear from Aurofodina, with Dorando, Golden Point, Moorilla, Danaus, Blue Gem, and Malthusian following. Racing along the back Cadonia improved his position, and was running fifth five furlongs from home. No material alteration took place rounding the turn, and Nangar was first into the straight from Aurofodina, Dorando, Blue Gem, and Cadonia. At the distance Nangar and Aurofodina were almost on terms, but Cadonia came with a great rattle, and, passing both as if they were anchored, won by nearly three lengths from Nangar, who beat Aurofodina by half a neck. Then came Blue Gem, Danaus, Moorilla and Malthusian, with Golden Point last. Time—3mins. 4⅘secs.

Second Day, 16th April 1911.

Other starters: The Parisian (Cooper); Flavinius (Smith); Bridge (McLachlan); Patronatus (Davies); Danus (Osborne); Wirilla (Abbott); Apple Pie (Hickey); Flavian, 11lb. over (Burne); Diabolo (V.) (Lambert); Sandbath (E. Andrews); Lord Foote (Dillon); Cadonia (Connell); Eyeglass (Lewis); Blue Gem (Finn); The Lad (Thomas); Call Boy (Bolton); Adgio (Brennan); Miss Corelli (Foley); Mindful, 4lb. over (Ryan); Crown Derby (Swanson); Something Irish, 2lb. over (C. Andrews); Black Prince, 2lb. over (Odill); Mill (Townsend); Herova, 3lb. over (Fisher); Chevron (Huxley).

BETTING: 3 to 1 agst. The Parisian, 6 to 1 Byplay, 10 to 1 Bridges, 12 to 1 each Apple Pie and Cadonia, 14 to 1 Sandbath, 16 to 1 Lord Foote, 20 to 1 each Crown Derby, Eyeglass, Call Boy, Apple Pie, Eric and Flavinius, 25 to 1 to 100 to 1 the others.

When they got going Miss Corelli, Flavinius, and Herova were most prominent, but at the mile Adgio led Herova, then came Apple Pie, Flavinius, Eric and Moorilla. At the six furlongs Adgio was still leading from Apple Pie, Flavinius and Miss Corelli, with The Lad last. At the five furlongs Moorilla was in charge from Eric and Adgio, with Blue Gem next. Moorilla came round the bend, followed by Eric and had a two lengths advantage. Entering the straight she was followed by Apple Pie and Mindful. Moorilla was not afterwards troubled, and won by two lengths from Byplay, with Eric six lengths off third. Mill was fourth, five lengths away, and then came Mindful, Blue Gem, Crown Derby, Patronatus and Wirilla, and the last to finish were Call Boy and Miss Corelli. Time—3mins. 36⅘secs.

Third Day, 18th April 1911.

GENERAL CONDITIONS

1. Entries must be accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of such entries and if not signed by the owner must also be accompanied by a written authority from the owner to the enterer unless such authority has already been filed otherwise they will be refused.

2. Entries for the Meeting close as follows:—

First day	:—At 6 P.M., on Monday, 17th July	1911.
Second day	:—At 6 P.M., on Monday, 24th July	1911.
Third day	:—At 6 P.M., on Monday, 31st July	1911.
Fourth day	:—At 6 P.M., on Monday, 7th August	1911.
Fifth day	:—At 6 P.M., on Thursday, 10th August	1911.

3. Starting declarations for each race must be in the declaration box for that race not less than half an hour before the time advertised for such race. The declaration shall be in writing and shall state the name of the race, the name of each horse declared to start, and the name of the Jockey, and shall be accompanied by the amount due for extra money for horses not struck out, and for the Jockey's fee for a losing mount, if not already paid and if the horse is racing in shoes, plates or tips it shall also state the description of such shoes, plates or tips or without any. Printed declaration forms can be obtained from the Secretary.

4. Colours not registered must be declared under Rule 76 by 12 noon the day before the race. If there is more than one horse of any one owner left in, in a race, different colours must be declared for each horse.

5. Unless there are six entries in bond fide separate interests in a race, the race may be declared void.

6. The Stewards may arrange the entrants for any race into two or more divisions, and in Handicaps adjust the weight of any division at their discretion, the terms of each divided race being similar to the original.

7. The Stewards reserve the right to refuse or cancel any entry at any time without assigning a reason.

8. Under Rule 66 the person or persons interested must be severally qualified to enter under the conditions of a race, and in "closed" races the declaration of any interest must be made at time of entry.

9. In high-weight handicaps other than those for Amateur Races the lowest top weight to be allotted shall be 9st. 12lb. If the highest weight "accepting" was originally less than 9st. 12lb., it shall be raised to that weight. The highest weight "accepting" may be raised above 9st. 12lb. if notice of the intended increase is given when the handicap is first published. Provided that it shall not be raised above the original top weight in the handicap. When the highest-weight "accepting" is raised under this condition, the other weights shall be raised equally.

10. In high-weight handicaps for Amateur Races the lowest top weight to be allotted shall be 11st. 7lb. If the highest weight "accepting" was originally less than 11st. 7lb. it shall be raised that weight. The highest weight "accepting" may be raised above 11st. 7lb. if notice of the intended increase is given when the handicap is first published. Provided that it shall not be raised above the original top weight in the handicap. When the highest weight "accepting" is raised under this condition the other weights shall be raised equally.

THE TURF.

KEMPTON.

THE London holiday-makers on Easter Monday by road and rail bore down on Kempton Park in battalions. The sun shone brightly on one of the largest attendances—with "Jubilee" day thrown in—ever recorded here. In members', Tattersall's, and the cheaper rings visitors were packed, and the rails of the five furlongs straight and the finish from the bend on the old course enclosed a mass of packed humanity, while another big crowd lined the T. Y. C. sprint on the far side, the horses, as in the Grand National, running through a crowd. The going was hard, but fields ruled large, and in three events on the straight course a sheet could have covered the lot. Results:—

EPSOM.

The Epsom Spring Meeting somehow conveys an assurance to the Londoner that the days of winter overgarments are past, and he may tempt fortune in a suit of the newest seasonable fashion without incurring the jealousy of the clerk of the weather. Though Kempton made heavy inroads upon the support of racegoers it was astonishing how many Easter holiday-makers were left to run down by road or rail to see the Great Metropolitan. The wind was keen enough to make bright sunshine more appreciable while the dreaded dust was of a thinner volume since the up-to-date treatment of the roads and considering the recent hot, dry spell, the course was nothing like so hard as might have been expected. Results:—

WINCHESTER

LIGHT WEIGHT .22 CALIBER RIFLES.

SINGLE SHOT RIFLE.

The biggest value in a gun ever offered. It is a take-down .22 caliber rifle, fitted with a heavy 21-inch round barrel, a handsome Schuetzen-shaped butt stock, and has the well-known Winchester bolt action, which has been so widely imitated. Ask your dealer about it. When you see it and learn its low price you will insist on having one.

The Model 1902 is a hammerless take-down and can be taken apart easily and quickly. It is made with an 18-inch round barrel, fitted with open front and rear sights. It shoots .22 Short and .22 Long Rim Fire Cartridges and Breech Caps. Its low price puts it within reach of all.

SANDOWN.

Epsom presents two stern duties to be undertaken by all who profess to be and call themselves sportsmen; but interesting as the racing is, and momentous the issues at stake on the Downs to busy bees and butterflies alike, all are glad to shake the dust off their clothes and recall the roar of the ring, but as an echo of the past. The comparative quiet and more sylvan surroundings at Esher appealed to a very large attendance on the 28th instant, as far as the rings and enclosures was concerned, while there was a goodly muster in the paddock and club enclosure, which included many prominent patrons of the Turf. Results:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THERE still remains a fortnight before the close of the football season but the near approach of the end is emphasised by the fact that on Saturday Nottingham Forest played their last match in connection with the First League. That encounter—with Bristol City—decided the fate of the Nottingham team who consequent upon a long series of failures since the opening of the year, will next season figure in the Second Division. The deterioration in the side has been truly remarkable. During the autumn and early winter they acquitted themselves so well that among their successes they could point to victories over Manchester United and Aston Villa—the clubs now contending for the championship—and the beginning of December found them sixth on the list with 17 points standing to their credit out of a possible 30. From that time, however, they began to fall off, and so poor has been their play since that date that for 23 matches, winning only two and losing seventeen, they can show only 8 points out of a possible 46. Five seasons ago a similar fate to that which has now overtaken the Forest befell that club, but as members of the second League in the winter of 1906-07 they played so brilliantly that they carried off the championship of that competition, scoring 60 points out of 76, Chelsea finishing second with 57 points. Perhaps a further experience of the Second Division of the League may have similarly invigorating results upon the team.

Who will be the Forest's companions in misfortune is not yet quite certain, but everything points to Bristol City, their conquerors at Bristol on Saturday, joining them in the second League. The west-country team with two games left to play, have scored no more than 25 points, and practically their one chance of escape depends upon the possibility of Bury finishing with a couple of defeats. The failure of Bury against Oldham Athletic and Sheffield United during the next fortnight, however, will scarcely suffice to save Bristol unless the last-named defeat both Everton and Manchester City—a combination of events improbable in the extreme. Manchester City last on the list up to the end of the old year, made themselves safe by a narrow victory over Middlesbrough on Good Friday.

Even closer than the struggle to retain membership of the First League is the fight for the championship of that competition. A week ago, when Aston Villa went down on their own ground before Preston North End, the triumph of Manchester United appeared almost assured, but since then the Villa have beaten Sheffield United and Notts County, whereas all that Manchester United can claim during the same period is a draw with Sheffield United yesterday. Thus, whereas so recently the Manchester team led by 4 points, to-day only a single point separates the clubs. The Villa's remaining fixtures include cup matches with Blackburn Rovers and Liverpool, while among Manchester United's games are a home contest with Sunderland and an out engagement with Sheffield Wednesday. Presuming the two crack clubs to emerge successful from these encounters, first honours will depend upon the result of the match at Aston Park next Saturday, when—strangely enough in view of the close race the teams are running—the Villa and Manchester United meet on that famous enclosure.

Happily released from the anxieties pressing upon them a few weeks ago, the two London clubs both accomplished creditable performances on Saturday. Woolwich Arsenal were, perhaps, rather lucky to draw at Middlesbrough, seeing that the shot by which they equalised with almost the only one the home goal-keeper was called upon to deal with in the second half, but still, the Plumstead men were often the victims of misfortune earlier in the season. Of their last eight matches, they have won four and drawn four. Tottenham Hotspur had as their antagonists Bradford City, who will be up in town again at the end of the present week on a far more important errand—the Final Tie for the Association Cup. In view of that engagement, the Bradford team did not perhaps, care to run any serious risks to gain a victory yesterday. At any rate, they were well beaten by Tottenham Hotspur. While the Bradford players escaped injury and thus should be able to place their full strength in the field next Saturday, a great misfortune befell Newcastle United in their match with Blackburn Rovers, Shepherd, the centre-forward, being so badly damaged in a collision with Ashcroft that he cannot possibly assist his club at the Palace.

The struggle for promotion between Chelsea, Bolton Wanderers, and West Bromwich Albion, the three leading clubs of the Second Division of the League, has now reached a most interesting stage. All three teams have completed an equal number of games and Chelsea stand first with 47 points; Bolton Wanderers second with 46; and the Albion third with 45. On the face of it Chelsea would seem most happily placed; but such is not the case, for three of their outstanding games are away from home against opponents quite likely to bring about their downfall. Bolton Wanderers also have some hard matches before them and of the three, West Bromwich Albion, although two points below Chelsea, possess the brightest prospects because their remaining games are of a comparatively easy nature. Whatever happens there is sure to be a desperate fight for one of the places and Chelsea may yet have to rely upon their fine goal average to enable them to get through. At the other end of the table Gainsborough Trinity, Barnsley, Stockport County, and Lincoln City are all struggling to avoid having to apply for readmission, their anxieties being just as keen as those who are at the head of affairs.

The defeat of Swindon by Bristol Rovers on Good Friday suggested that Brighton and Hove Albion, who beat Brentford, might after all retain the championship. Last Saturday's results again altered the position of affairs, Exter City winning at Brighton while the Wiltshire club succeeded at Northampton. As a consequence Swindon again lead by four points from the Albion, who are once more below Crystal Palace. With only four more games each to play the two clubs which hold the best records in the competition can scarcely now change places and Swindon may safely be congratulated on gaining honours which have never before fallen to the club. Portsmouth's misfortunes continue, and by losing at home to Bristol Rovers, the club—once so prominent—seem fated to go down to the second division with Southend United.

SCOTTISH CUP.

CELTIC v. HAMILTON ACADEMICALS.—Usually a most attractive match, the replayed final tie in the Scottish Cup between the Celtic and the Hamilton Academicals at Ibrox Park, was attended by only about 12,000 people but this small attendance was accounted for by the miserable weather that prevailed. For the Celtic, Hay and Dodds changed places, and among the forwards, McAtee replaced Hastie. In the first half the Academicals had the big advantage of playing with a heavy wind and rain at their backs, and in the opening play they were almost constantly attacking. Adams in the Celtic goal was kept hard at work despite the vigorous efforts of his backs, and he acquitted himself in fine style. He saved three fine shots, while one terrific drive rebounded off the cross-bar. The Celtic could make little headway, but once Watson had great trouble in saving a shot by Quinn. Up to half-time the Celtic defence prevailed, and the sides crossed over with nothing scored. The conditions were a little better in the second half, rain having ceased, and with the wind behind them, the Celtic players did very much as they liked. The Academicals halves and backs kicked and tackled with fine determination and Watson in goal stopped three splendid shots by Quinn, but after thirty-five minutes, the Celtic took the lead. From about twenty yards range, Quinn beat Watson with a great shot. So persistent were the Celtic attacks that forty minutes passed before their goalkeeper had to handle the ball. Before the end McAtee gained a second goal for the Celtic. Celtic, 2; Hamilton Academicals, 0.

RUGBY RULES.

CARDIFF v. BARBARIANS.—Having won the first match of their tour at Penarth, the Barbarians appeared at Cardiff, where a large crowd assembled to see what proved to be a most interesting game. The visitors had twelve internationals in their fifteen and gave a brilliant display in the first half. Their forwards showed wonderful dash and kept up a pace which enabled the side to cross over a point to the good. They held their own until towards the close, when the Welshmen were able to turn the game and win by 3 goals (1 penalty, 1 dropped) and 1 try to 1 goal and 1 try. Roberts and Bennetts obtained the tries for the Barbarians, Lyon converting one of them. Pugsley and Spiller got in for Cardiff, Gibbs kicking a goal from one of the tries and another from a penalty, while Lewis dropped a goal. Played under perfect conditions the game was a most attractive one to watch. Cardiff, 15 points; Barbarians, 8 points.

TORQUAY v. LONDON WELSH.—A closely-contested game at Torquay ended in the defeat of London Welsh by four tries to one goal and two tries. The play in the first half was dull and uninteresting, and the only score was an unconverted try to Smith for Torquay. Following change of ends, however, the game was of a much brighter character, both sides infusing plenty of energy into their work. Leigh and Davies scored in quick succession for London Welsh, but a little later Huxham placed Torquay on level terms, and Milford gave the home side the lead with a clever try. Shortly afterwards Torquay strengthened their advantage, Huxham getting over, but London Welsh then took the game in hand, and Hazell put on a try which Evans converted. In the few minutes that remained London Welsh tried hard to win the game, but failed. Torquay, 12 points; London Welsh, 11 points.

DEVONPORT ALBION v. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.—Favoured by brilliantly fine weather the visit of the London team to Devonport attracted a crowd of 6,000 people, who saw the home side win by four goals (2 dropped) and 1 try to 1 try (21 point to 3). Fast and open play was also full of interest, the visitors doing a fair share of the attacking, and only being less effective than the Albion in finishing attacks. Holland (2) and Gilbert obtained the tries for the Albion, two of them producing goals, and Yago and Harvey each dropped a goal. Brilliant football by the Taylors ended with O'Callaghan gaining a grand try, which was not converted. Devonport A., 21 points; O. M. T., 3 points.

SWANSEA v. HARLEQUINS.—The visit of the famous London team induced a large crowd to visit the Swansea ground, the weather being gloriously fine. The game proved most enjoyable, and ended in a draw, each side scoring one goal (5 points). Trew and P. Hopkins could not play for the Welshmen, Jenkins and Lewis completing the side. In the first half the Harlequins gained the lead, Thorne obtaining a try from which Lambert kicked a goal. There was little to chose between the sides, Stoop, Lambert, Birkett and Mackintosh playing splendidly for the Harlequins, while for Swansea, Owen Hayward, Ivor Morgan and H. Evans were in great form. There was a splendid struggle, and Hayward got a try from which Bancroft kicked an equalising goal. Swansea, 5 points; Harlequins, 5 points.

THE HORSE.

Its Treatment in Health and Disease with a Complete Guide to Breeding, Training and Management.

Edited by—Professor J. WORTLEY AXE, M.R.C.V.S.,

Ex-President of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, Late Lecturer at the Royal Veterinary College and at the Agricultural Colleges of Downton and Wye, Chief Veterinary Inspector to the Surrey County Council, etc., etc.
Author of "The Mare and Foal," "Abortion in Cattle," "Anthrax in Farm Stock," "Examination of Horses as to Soundness," etc., etc.

There has long been a crying need for an authoritative and comprehensive work, placing the horse-owner and veterinary surgeon in possession of all that the progress of modern science has taught us concerning the proper treatment of the horse in health and disease. It is this need that the present work has been planned to meet.

The name of the editor, Professor J. WORTLEY AXE, is in itself an assurance that in this new undertaking veterinary science will be enriched by a work of the highest authority, emanating from one who stands in the very forefront of his profession and who now gives to the world the full result of his skill and ripe experience.

Few know the horse as he should be known or treat him as he ought to be treated. The present work will enable owners of horses to enlarge their capacity for work, alleviate their troubles and prolong their period of useful service. To the owner or responsible custodian of any horse or pony the Publication is absolutely indispensable.

The Illustrations constitute a highly important feature of the work. In no other book on the horse has the pictorial art contributed so largely to illustrate the author's meaning. There are upwards of thirty plates in full colour and seventy in black-and-white, together with several hundred text illustrations, all reproduced by the latest and most effective processes, together with many pedigree tables of the leading sires. Every subscriber will be presented with three beautiful dissected models showing respectively the internal structure of the Horse, the structure of the teeth and the structure of the hoof.

Complete in Nine handsomely-bound Divisional Volumes. Price, Rs. 75 net.

10 per cent. discount allowed for prompt Cash with order or Rs. 10 with order and balance recovered by V.-P. P. on delivery of the Books.

On Instalment System (to approved clients only) Rs. 10 with order, Rs. 6 on delivery and Rs. 10 per mensem thereafter. Packing, Postage and Railway freight extra in Each Case.

PATENT
FELT LIGHT EXERCISE SADDLE.

ADVANTAGES OF THE PATENT FELT SADDLE.

Extreme lightness, places the weight of the rider slightly more forward than the old style of saddle, a great advantage for race riding. A tall man can ride with stirrups extremely short without having his knees right off the saddle—as this saddle is cut more forward than the old style. Price is less than half of an ordinary saddle, is exceptionally nice to ride jumping in, also for backing horses first time; as stirrups can be dispensed with.

Exercise clothing does not slip back to the extent does with the ordinary saddle. Can be made in different sizes to suit customers, and from 2lbs. in weight for race riding for which they are very suitable.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SELDOM does a football League Season in Calcutta produce any stirring excitement, but for all that, the matches this season will be interesting, especially as some of the clubs are said to be stronger than they were last year. Dalhousie, who headed the League last year, by virtue of a better goal average than the Customs, lost to Calcutta on Saturday by three goals to one, but on the evening's play there was not much to choose between the teams. Dalhousie were weak at half, and it was a mistake in having Dunne in the centre line. Quayle and Dunne should have changed places, and I am sure that Quayle will develop into a reliable half. Montgomery was also not seen to advantage and Brotchie did little to catch the eye, with the result that the forwards got few chances of showing their abilities Although Calcutta have lost the services of O'Shea, who will not return until some time in July, the club has been fortunate in securing an able substitute in the person of Rennison. The new right half on Saturday was most effective. He seemed greedy for work and did not lack in legitimate robustness. In addition to the halves Calcutta this year have a forward line palpitating with vivacity, and admirable in combination. With the exception of Bisseker, who is tall and well built, the others are on the small side, but they have a lot of quickness and dash, and each one of the five on Saturday showed up well. Lay, in goal, also performed very creditably, but he was not troubled in the initial half. Calcutta have a very strong eleven this year, and if they can be representative in their important matches, the club should head the League.

The Customs have a good back in Hyland, but they have lost Fitzpatrick, their goal-keeper. In Lyons they have a really good centre forward, but Galvin, of whom much was expected, proved a failure. On Saturday, the Customs played the Measurers, but the Riversiders only managed to win by a goal. If Anderson's knee will permit him turn out, and McCready moves to right half, to the Customs should again do well in the League. The Rangers will have very much the same eleven, but the Y.M.C.A. are said to be a bit stronger than they were last year, and Reynolds of the R.G.A. should prove a most important acquisition of strength to the attacking line. Behrend will be in goal, and as Hendry and Fitzpatrick are not in Calcutta, the Y.M.C.A. should congratulate themselves on having the best custodian now in the station.

The Middlesex have taken the place of the Shropshires who, it will be recollected, played the season before last. Calcutta, Dalhousie and the Customs, indeed all civilian teams, may have out strong teams for two or three particular games, but as the League programme is a long one military teams are on the whole better represented in most matches and consequently their chances of success are more hopeful than civilian teams. The Rifle Brigade have lost in Cusions undoubtedly their best man, but they have one or two good players from the new contingent which arrived in February. The Middlesex are said to be quite a decent lot and the Garrison Artillery I am informed are stronger than they were last year. Let us hope that players and referees will all render a good account of themselves and that the football will be more satisfactory than the hockey.

MOTOR NOTES.

14th April 1911.

IT is an understood thing that at Elections times the motor is used a very great deal, and during the last General Election we had in this country the motors had a very stiff time of it. Few probably did more work than a 48 H. P. Wolseley Car, which Mr. C. S. Ralli, a Parliamentary candidate had in use. During the course of the election campaign, it ran 1,407 miles in incessant gales and rain, and in addition to this, remarkable to relate, it travelled to London and back from the Isle of Wight—the seat of this candidate's district—six times without a stop, not even for a tyre. The distance is nearly a hundred miles each journey.

MESSRS. HARRIS AND OTHERS, LIMITED, of Old Town, Clapham London, S.W., I learn, received an order from his Serene Highness Prince Munster of Derneberg, for a Victoria two-seater body, fitted to a Vulcan chassis. They have just completed this order. The hood is made to fold down compactly and neatly, and the rear box opens, providing ample seating room for a servant, as well as a receptacle for a large quantity of accessories.

PROBABLY one of the most curious articles classed as "Unclaimed Property" was a motor-car which was left in the yard of the South-Eastern and Chatham Railway some few days ago. The owner, or owners cannot be found, and I hear that the car is to be put up for auction.

READERS who are thinking of buying new motor lamps will do well to write for a new illustrated catalogue to Messrs. Powell and Hammer of Chester Street, Birmingham, who have large varieties of lamps and generators in stock.

To show the enormous strength of the Palmer cord tyre, I will quote the following little incident: Mr. Griffiths, of the New Bioscope Company, Limited, of Cecil Court, London, W. C., writes that recently an inner tube burst, and the force of the explosion was so strong that it broke the steel rim, but did not injure the cover. The cover in question has done about 7,000 miles, and is now, he says, in as good condition as ever. Every motorist will agree that this is a severe test for a tyre, and speaks volumes for the Palmer cord tyres.

A REPORT reaches me to the effect that Mr. Disbrowe has won a 300-mile motor race at Pablo Beach, Florida. He drove a Pope-Hartford car, and his time was 3 hours 52 minutes. According to Reuter, this is claimed to be the world's record.

I LEARN that his Majesty the German Emperor has added, a new Adler limousine-landaulette to his automobile stud. The chassis is built in the ordinary manner, common to this make, and the motor possesses an engine of 70 H. P. The body is painted with the usual Imperial colours—cream, with gold and blue lines.

I UNDERSTAND that there will be a light car race at Barcelona on 25th May, for the Copa Barcelona. This is a trophy which replaces the Copa Catalunya which was won outright by the Lion-Peugeot Company last year. The rules of this race will be the same as those in vogue for the French race, viz., a cylinder area of 3 litres, and a minimum weight of 1,650 lbs. I learn that the distance of the race is fixed for 150 miles. The race is under the control of the Royal Auto Club of Barcelona.

A WELL-KNOWN motoring friend has given me the following graphic description of his ride round the T. T. course in the Isle of Man on a motor cycle. He says that he has been a motorist for five years, and has travelled in most parts of England, and on many different makes of machines, but he had many surprises when he came to tackle the Snaefell Course. He says that he has done 58½ miles per hour on his machine on the Brooklands track, and it was geared a little higher than 4 to 1. He goes on to say that the morning he started for his journey round the course, was very sunny and warm although the roads were a little sticky, and here and there he met large patches of stones, which completely covered the roadway. When he reached that terrible grind, Snaefell, he let the engine out—there was a strong headwind blowing and the many hair-pin corners called for special negotiation. He says that when he thought he had at last reached the summit of the climb his engine began to clank, so he gave it up and rode to the bottom. The second attempt to mount the top of the hill failed, so he tried it a third time with slackened belt. The third attempt was a failure, and it may here be mentioned that not only is the rise very stiff, but there are several terrible bends in the road, at which one has to slow up to nearly stopping point. He then decided to give the attempt up for that day, and returned to the starting place. His bike was a single geared one, and upon his again failing to mount the hill on the second day, he has come to the conclusion that to "go up" with comfort, one requires a geared machine. The foregoing remarks will give some little idea as to the difficulties those that enter for the T. T. race have to encounter.

I HAVE just learned that it is estimated that nearly 100,000 motor cycles are in use in South Africa. Most of the British makers trebled their output to the Colonies last year.

MR. L. A. BADDELEY, a prominent motorist over here, has recently built for himself a three-wheeled mono-car, fitted with single cylinder 4 H.P. J.A.P. engine, two speed gear box, and chain drive. A few day, ago he took this out for its trial run, when lo, and behold, he found himself going down a hill at a tremendous rate, quite unable to keep both the front wheels on the ground at the same time. He arrived safely at the bottom, and managed to pull up, and on examining the steering gear, he found that it was wrongly connected. This accounted for the strange behaviour of the front wheels.

I AM informed that Mr. J. J. Shaunessy has resigned his position with the Dunlop Rubber Company. His reason for so doing is that he may devote more time to the Midland Rubber Company, Limited, of which firm he is Managing Director.

THERE is hardly a week elapses in the great metropolis of London, but that one reads that someone has been run over by a motor vehicle. A White paper issued by the Home Office shows that last year there were as many as 672 fatal accidents in the streets of Great Britain caused by motor cars, etc., of this figure 82 were attributed to motor omnibuses. If these figures be compared with those of the previous year, they show an increase of 167.

MESSRS. LEBAUDY of France, have constructed a new airship named the Marchal, of 7,200 cubic metres capacity. This dirigible made its first flight last week from Moisson to Bonnieres. The airship carried nine persons, and everything passed off satisfactorily. The makers have presented this airship to the French Government to take the place of the ill-fated Republique, which it will probably be remembered was destroyed with its four occupants about two years ago. The air vessel carries two 60 H.P. Panhard engines.

IT will probably be remembered that a week or two ago I mentioned that a new invention had been brought out in the form of solidified petrol. Mr. Armstrong is the inventor, and his invention was put to a test a few days ago, which was witnessed by Sir Frederick Fryer. This latter gentleman in describing the test said, that oil was put into a large cauldron, boiled and separated, and then a certain solution which is Mr. Armstrong's secret—was added. In a short time, the liquid in the cauldron was turned to a solid mass. Mr. Armstrong is of opinion that oil fuel would carry a ship one-third further than coal at a much lower cost. He further maintains that the regulations for storage of solid petrol would not be so stringent as they were for the fuel in the liquid state.

AERO NOTES.

EVIDENTLY Mr. Cody is infused with enthusiasm regarding passenger carrying aeroplanes, as I just learn he intends to build a bi-plane, with 120 H. P. engine to carry 15 persons.

THE Corporation authorities at Southport are considering the question of holding a "Flying Week" at the Coronation. Mr. Grahame-White has offered his services for four clear days' flying. The local Traders' Association has recommended the Corporation to engage Mr. White, or some other well-known aviator.

WHILE flying near Paris on Tuesday evening, a young Italian aviator named Signor Cei fell from a height of 2,000 feet. He sustained terrible injuries, and died at nine o'clock. The cause of his fall was that his motor suddenly stopped.

A PRIZE to the value of £100 will be given by the Irish Aero Club to the aviator who flys the farthest in Ireland, by 1st October next. The minimum distance, however, is 25 miles.

NOT only are European countries taking an interest in Aviation and all its branches, but I learn that three aviation grounds are to be established at Algiers. These are to provide military airmen with facilities to practise before they are admitted to the military aerodrome at Biskia, Algeria.

IN order to commemorate the first flight across the Channel which, it will be remembered, was accomplished by M. Blériot, the Aero Club of France have decided to erect a monument at Calais. The inscriptions on this monument will include references to the successive attempts of M. de Lesseps and the Hon'ble C. S. Rolls, Mr. Moisant, and Mr. Cecil Grace, and the tragic fate of the last three named gentlemen.

LAST Friday, 2nd April, the well-known French yachtsman M. Guedon (who has latterly interested himself in aviation), and M. Legrand left Douai, France on a Breguet biplane with an intention of flying to Brooklands, in this country. However, they lost their way in a fog, and moreover ran out of petrol, and found on descending that they had reached Bethune, 22 miles from their starting point. Three French torpedo boats lay waiting with steam up to escort them across the Channel, but so far I learn that the fog still continues, and they cannot re-start on their journey. They have not, however, given up their project.

THE proprietors of Le Petit Journal intend to organise a flight contest from Paris to Rome at the end of next month, for which a prize of £4,000 will be given.

NEW GUINEA BIRDS.

A WONDERFUL collection of the birds obtained on the expedition to the Snow Mountains of Dutch New Guinea is on view at the Natural History Museum, South Kensington. The explorers, under the lead of Mr. Walter Goodfellow, landed on the south coast of the island in January 1910, and the majority of the members of the expedition have not yet returned. Many of the trophies obtained have not at present reached England, but the collection now shown comprises more specimens of the birds of New Guinea than have ever before come to Europe.

It would be impossible to imagine a more brilliant scheme of colour than is displayed in the plumage. Eleven species of birds of paradise are exhibited, including the xanthomelus ardens. Two specimens of this rare bird are contained in a Dutch collection, and a portion of the skin of one is at Genoa, but it has never previously been seen in England. The best known English work on the birds of paradise represents them as having a black neck, and this flight of fancy of the artist for some time puzzled the explorers, who imagined that the red and yellow birds which they obtained were of an entirely new species. The adult males possess a wonderful crimson ruff round the neck, but no trace of black is to be seen in either male or female. A more common but far more gorgeous species is the bird of paradise of the mainland of New Guinea. Its yellow tail plumes, which are of considerable length, are worn in the head-dresses of the natives for spectacular effect during their dances, which consist largely of wagging the head.

Two entirely new parrots, known as aprosmictus Wilhelminæ and cyclopsittacus Godmani, have been brought home, and there are also a number of specimens of the nasiterna vividipectus, the smallest parrot on earth—a little creature less than half the size of a sparrow. Other interesting birds are the Goura pigeons—now growing scarce on account of the demand for their plumage in the European market—and some large night-jars, with great frog-mouths, known as the podargus papuensis and the podargus ocellatus—the latter being slightly the smaller kind. Amongst all these things which were strange and new it was remarkable to note a common English cuckoo, taken in New Guinea, and probably on its way to Australia.

A great collection of reptiles, fish, and insects is also being formed, and will eventually come to this country; whilst the collection of plants is at present growing at Singapore. Many objects of great ethnological interest are also promised. The explorers report that many of the native tribes are living in the conditions of the stone age. They have never before seen steel axes or any kind of iron implement. Many drawings have been brought back of their stone weapons and primitive tools, and one represents a strange contrivance of bark which is used as a protection against rain, and has the appearance of a large hood worn close over the head and covering the body to the waist.

The expedition is now under the command of Captain Rawling, Mr. Goodfellow having returned along with Mr. J. C. Shortridge and brought the present collection.

APPARITIONS OF ANIMALS.

A LARGE number of people think that belief in things touching upon occultism is the result of a disordered mind, but many eminent psychologists say that such is not the case. Horatio remarks to Hamlet "that his father's ghost would much amaze him;" doubtless a similar apparition would be disconcerting to many, but, says Captain Humphries, writing in the National Review, this does not seem to have been the case with those who witnessed any of the phenomena mentioned in this article, the bona fides of which are beyond question. Taking first the following authenticated case, which happened in the midland counties of England at a house where the writer was frequently present and from personal observation can confirm every detail, and which can also be vouched for by the mother and father of the boy also the farmer's maid and the latter's nurse:—

The boy was four years old, and spent much of his time in the company of a large white cat who shared his joys and pleasures. The cat died, but its decease was carefully guarded from the child, when some weeks afterwards the boy asked why it was that his old cat only came to see him at night, and that immediately after going to bed, but before falling asleep. Upon being questioned he said: "It looks much the same only thinner; I expect as he goes away all the daytime he is not being properly fed." This went on at intervals for about four months.

STORY OF A DOG.

Another instance comes from Ireland, and though that isle is peopled by a highly-strung Celtic race, whose land is essentially the home of the supernatural in fairies and ghosts, less credulence must not be placed in the following narrative:—A woman living in co. Roscommon constantly saw the footmarks of, as she describes it, a "good-sized dog" in one of the rooms of her house. She never saw the animal itself in either material or spirit form, but her mother did, who said it was brown in colour with two white paws; it walked to a chair near to the open fireplace, looked round, smelling the ground, walked slightly lame with one hind leg, and then passed out of the room by a side window in the large old-fashioned bay.

The occupants of the house had only been there some two years, the apparition was not seen for the first six months, but this may be accounted for by the fact that it was summer time, and the family who lived in the old mansion for generations were never there in the summer. Upon mentioning the apparition to an old female inhabitant of the neighbouring village, she said that the late Sir A—had a dog of that colour and markings as described, which was accidentally shot, and limped ever afterwards.

The animal was devoted to his master, who sat much in a chair near to the hearth referred to. The present owners did not possess a dog. At the same place a black dog was frequently seen in the avenue close to a tree near to the main drive, and the horses in the carriage nearly always shied, particularly, about dusk, and on more than one occasion refused to pass the spot.

REAPPEARANCE OF A MARE.

The reappearance of a mare after death came immediately under the writer's own eyes, for it took place at his home in the centre of England, where he was then living. A chestnut mare died after a protracted illness, leaving behind a colt about five months old. An old retainer of the family who at long intervals used to visit the scenes of his earlier labours, and had not heard of the mare's death, said to the writer one day when round the stables: "The mare," calling her by her name 'is not dead yet!"

Upon being told that she was dead and buried he expressed profound surprise, and would not believe it. "Why," he said, 'I saw her not ten minutes ago go into her old box to her colt and heard the latter neigh." This accounted for much before and afterwards. The colt was often heard to give the sound of welcome when apparently alone, and would be subjected to intense fits of depression. We used to remark how it never seemed to forget its mother. The colt was removed to another box, and the old one was painted, etc., but a favourite hunter of the writer's refused to enter the box for a long time afterwards.

INCIDENT IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The following story was told to the writer by a friend and his wife, whose statements he has no reason to doubt:—When resident in South Africa, their bungalow was situated close to the railway, from which the garden was only fenced off by a dwarf wall. At this time they owned a mastiff dog which, owing to its perfect manners, was allowed to roam about. Unfortunately, one evening, having strayed on to the line, and stepping out of the way of one engine, it was run over and killed by another. Some months afterwards the engine-drivers of two evening trains always gave prolonged whistles with their engines. This was very annoying to the dog's late owner; the wife too was in delicate health and often lying down about that time.

The husband waylaid one of the drivers after duty one evening and asked if the whistling was really necessary as there were not any signals in view. The man at first resented being questioned upon the subject but upon the plea of the wife's illness, the request was further pressed. The man then suggested that the writer's friend had the remedy in his own hands, as the whistling was only done to prevent his dog being run over, for he was often trespassing on the line, and never moved unless so warned, when he usually passed off over the low wall already spoken of. The description given of the offending dog agreed in every detail with the one that was run over. This apparition continued for some months at frequent intervals.

In conclusion, it may be taken as an accepted fact that the days are nearly or quite past when it was assumed that the main difference between man and the animal world was that the former had an immortal soul and the latter had not; also that many of our greatest scientists of the present age are quite willing to admit the subject is of such a nature that it cannot be dismissed offhand, but is one deserving of much thought and careful research, acknowledging that a prima facie case has been made out for further most interesting investigation.

SUNSTAR'S GUINEAS.

SELDON has the "Two Thousand Guineas," the first of the classics of the season on the English Turf, been won more easily than it was by Mr. J. B. Joel's Sunstar, a brown colt by Sundridge—Doris, who made practically all the running and won by two lengths from Lord Derby's Stedfast in the record time of 1min. 37⅗secs., with the winning owner's second string, Lycaon, half a length away.

Sunstar won so easily that he is tolerably certain to start favourite for the Derby. Sundridge's stock have generally been sprinters, but The Story and the Guineas winner seem to be fairly well endowed with stamina. Mr. J. B. Joel sold Sundridge for abroad, because he thought there was more than enough Sundridge blood in England.

It is strange that Sundridge (as with Cyllene) has been represented by a classic winner soon after his departure for abroad. He was on sale for some little time prior to his disposal. Doris, as a brood mare, had always been in Mr. Joel's stud, and was at first allied with Sir Geoffrey, later on with Bill of Portland (foaling Selsey Bill) and lastly with Sundridge, producing Sunstar. She is a daughter of Loved One (by See Saw) and her dam was by Petrarch, from Ambuscade, grand dam of Barmecide. Sunstar is related on the female side to Galtee More and other big winners. He is in the Derby and St. Leger. His owner has now won the Two Thousand Guineas, the Oaks (twice) and the St. Leger once. He is confident of winning the Derby this year.

Prior to the race for the Guineas the consensus of opinion regarding the big race was that it was the most open classic even known for years. Six owners at least not merely hoped, but confidently believed their horses would win, and Butters, the trainer of the American-bred Runnymede, declared that Mr. Keene's colt was as good a thing for this race as Mushroom was for the City and Suburban.

The three-year-olds of the present season had been condemned as a bad lot, but Sunstar's easy victory demonstrates that there is at least one good one amongst them. There have been exceptions when the race took as little winning. Norman III. so prevailed three years ago, but it was subsequently proved that his fitness was chiefly instrumental in the process. The course was fetlock-deep, and the best of the colts that year did not obtain their full running condition even until after the Derby. Norman III. was distinctly not a good one.

Slieve Gallion, too, will be recalled as a ready winner of the "Guineas," but to one of his tear-away style the Derby course proved too far, and he accordingly does not come within the circle, at all events, of the really good ones. His action was too laboured to last long. On the other hand, Sunstar showed a fluent style of galloping which may carry him to the end of the Epsom journey without trouble, although it remains to be proved that he is a bright particular star even in what many people believe to be a moderate year. Although of nice length and height, he is a lighter built horse than were some of the field, and would better appreciate than they did the state of the track, which after but a light rainfall overnight was still dry, and even dusty.

Whether or no he did enjoy an advantage in this respect, he had the opposition settled practically at the Bushes, went down the hill and up the other side in effortless fashion, and finished all over like a horse to whom another half mile would have presented no difficulties. Moreover, between now and Derby time he can be made 5lb. better, and so far as the Newmarket-trained contingent is concerned he has set them the task of trying to catch up to him. The majority are not likely to get within hail of him, while so far as the Frenchmen are concerned, Stern, who had the mount on the winner, will be able to tell M. Blanc and Derman that Sunstar has only to show himself relatively as good at twelve furlongs as he is at eight to put an awkward proposition before Shetland or Lord Borgoyne.

As between Sunstar and Pietri the Guineas running was a complete reversal of their two-year-old form, although Pietri facilitated such upheaval by absolutely refusing to race. He was orderly enough going out of the paddock, but arrived at the post he was the solitary one to provoke the delay. At Sandown earlier on he had been mildly obstinate, but at Newmarket he was unmistakably sour, declined to jump into his bit when the signal was at length given, and never took hold of it in the race. He simply ambled along and finished tenth of fourteen. Some such ignominous display as this has long been threatened on Pietri's part. Mr. Rothschild can now entertain but a shadowy hope of better things following in the Derby. Thanks to the two American colts, Iron Mask II. and Runnymede, the pace was too much for a bad winded horse to last far.

It was coming down "Bushes" hill that Stedfast, who had lost some ground at the start, first came into prominence, and he ran on to the end without ever having a chance of reaching the winner, finishing just in front of the Wantage second string, Lycaon, who had been in the van throughout, and was very nearly the fittest of the party. Stedfast, on the other hand, is still backward, and Lord Derby's other colt King William is likewise much lacking in muscular development, while he seems, moreover, to be growing up on the leg.

Sydmonton was never in the race, and would appear on this to have earned a "bubble" reputation. Seaforth, although finishing in the ruck, did much better, however, and he had virtually no chance from the start, for the swerve he made under the barrier had the effect of speedily dropping him in the rear. Seaforth, to outward appearance, ailed nothing, but the time in which the race was run shows the enormity of the task that was set any horse that hung about in the early stages. He made a fine effort after going a little more than half-way, and this took him to the heels of the leaders but he could make no further impression, and was not persevered with. Cellini is backward yet, but he will never overhaul Sunstar, at all events up to a middle distance, and he was inferior as a two-year-old to the winner.

The majority of the competitors for the classic were very big horses, but the Duke of Portland's Narenta towered over them all. He has had very little racing experience as yet, however, and over a longer journey he may show himself to better account as he was beaten for speed. The result of the race constitutes another, inasmuch as the three placed jockeys were trained abroad. Stern is the premier jockey in France, Wootton is an Australian, and Shaw, although Australian born, was a prominent rider in South Africa.

THE ENGLISH FOOTBALL CUP FINAL.

After a goalless draw at the Crystal Palace, Newcastle United and Bradford City contested the final tie of the English Association Cup competition at Manchester and Bradford won by the only goal scored in the game.

The Palace match was a very poor one indeed. For many years the final tie has been only a disappointing match. Well the tradition was sustained at Sydenham; it was the poorest game for many years. What the 70,000 people thought of it can only be judged by their hurried flight from the scene half-way through the second part of the match. Many people complained of the conditions; the dry ground, for instance, and the strong wind. But, after all, there is surely such a thing as shooting in the game of "Soccer." On form Newcastle United would have won anyhow had they worn their shooting boots. Bradford City had a nice defence, but it was merely kicking, and one wearied of seeing the ball continually in the air. It was the worst type of football seen for years. The turf was fast, and neither set of forwards ever got going; but Newcastle United had all the play, whether with or against the wind.

Bradford City's strength came in its nippiness. The backs and half-backs were strong. In reality the match was, however, merely remarkable for the commonplace play; neither goal-keeper had any defence worth speaking about to execute. From beginning to end it was the dreariest final on record.

Compared with the tame affair at the Crystal Palace, the replay at Manchester was quite a thrilling one. Keenness had inspired lethargy, decisiveness was seen instead of hesitation, and instead of the silence maintained during the second half of the drawn match the crowd was swaying and hoarse with excitement. The cleverer team of the two did not win, but Bradford played more successful Cup-tie football, and for that reason deserved their success—success achieved on the first occasion the club have won a way to the final in the Cup competition.

When in 1893 a Cup final was played in Manchester, the game was won by a single goal, and people who were at the match recollect that it was a surprise goal. Bradford City's goal was a surprise, too, and the supporters of the Newcastle United team, in fact, when the game was over seemed grieved, not so much that their hopes had been wrecked, but that their side had been beaten by "such a goal."

The Bradford men had been defending desperately for a quarter of an hour when the sudden dash was made which brought the team success and won for the club the prized Cup. Thousands of spectators were not at all sure how the point was secured. Thompson was seen to get the ball across the mouth of the Newcastle goal, and Spiers and O'Rourke, of Bradford, and Lawrence, the Newcastle goal-keeper, seemed to converge one upon the other. Lawrence was between the two forwards and shot up a hand, but the ball was past him. O'Rourke had scored, and one wondered why so fine a player as Lawrence had failed to save his goal. The Bradford supporters shouted their delight, and ten thousand hats seemed to be in the air at once.

It was only when every player in the City team with the exception of Thompson had wrung the hand of O'Rourke that anyone discovered that Thompson had been hurt, and lay huddled up and motionless on the grass. The Bradford forward had been knocked accidentally by Veitch, and for some minutes the game was suspended while the injured man received attention. Happily he was able to resume, though for quite twenty minutes he had to run about with a sponge in his hand, and apply this to his head whenever the breathless character of the struggle gave him a chance to do so.

It is all in the best interests of soccer football that the highest honour of the game has fallen to Bradford City. Even well-wishers of the famous Newcastle United Club will not grudge the youthful Yorkshire organization the laurels of a hard earned victory. An English Cup final is nothing new to Newcastle United. For the fifth time in seven seasons they have enjoyed the privilege of figuring in the great event at the Crystal Palace. True, victory has been theirs on only one occasion—last year—but if glorious opportunities of achieving fame have been thrown away the blame must rest with themselves. Not for the first time a final tie has shown that the spoils do not always go to the side best equipped in the science of the game. For cleverness there was no comparison between the teams, but once they obtained the lead—against a strong wind, too—Bradford City's wonderful defence was impervious to all the skilful manœuvring of the opposing attack.

All the more because their success was unexpected will congratulation be showered upon a club of comparatively recent birth which has made history by winning the English Cup on its first appearance in the final stage. But the triumph of Bradford City had a wider significance than the glory it will bring to the holders of the new trophy. It affords striking testimony of the marvellous advance which Association football has made in the West Riding of Yorkshire. Ten years ago in that part of the county of broad acres the Soccer code was practically unknown. The Bradford City club itself was not even formed; yet within that short space of time two clubs from the West Riding have contested with Newcastle United for the most treasured of all football trophies.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

AFTER Sunstar's easy victory in the Newmarket Stakes on the 10th the result of that race arriving to us too late to make comment possible in our last issue he went from 2 to 1 to 5 to 4 for the Derby and in view of the fact that nothing else is, presumably, now being backed for money it looks as though Mr. Joel's lucky "Star" will go to odds on before the day. Lord Burgoyne according to reports from Continental sources is still much fancied by his connections and so is Shetland his stable companion and both were expected to win their engagements at Longchamps on the 30th April, the former being down to run in the Prix des Cars and the latter in the Prix Noailles, a somewhat more important event. None of these Continental performances, however, can necessarily give us much of a line to the English form, collateral or otherwise, so that we must be more or less in the dark as to these two "foreigners" both, by the way being as English as anything that is racing on the British side of the Channel as they are English-bred, Lord Burgoyne being by Persimmon out of Lady Burgoyne and Shetland of Zinfandel out of Shellduck. Their friends in France and Austria, however, greatly fancy M. Edmond Blanc's pair and fully expect one or the other of them to repeat the victory of Gladiateur in 1865 when that good horse, who was by the way a French-bred one—at any rate foaled on the Continent—won the Derby for Count Lagrange and followed this up by winning the Leger also. King William is stated to have jarred himself in his work and to have been stopped, but whether the injury is serious or not we cannot know until further reports come out from home. Happening so close on to the race as this, however, to a colt that is known to be short of work it is most unfortunate and must, we should say, greatly prejudice his chance. After the Two Thousand Guineas had been run there were a good many people who had formed a very favourable impression of Lord Derby's other one, Stedfast, and they said that he was travelling every bit as fast and as well as the winner at the end of the race. Stedfast was very slow out of the gate and took a long time to get on his legs. He is spoken of as a tremendously fine colt with great power in front and behind, but of fine quality and by no means inclined to coarseness. Like King William he is backward, or was then at any rate, and it was considered that he was capable of being made a tremendous lot better before Derby Day. When he ran in the Guineas he was not nearly wound up and was obviously soft and wanting in that hard condition for which Sunstar was so conspicuous. Stedfast holds his place on the 10 to 1 mark for the Derby and is as good a favourite as the "Frenchmen" and the musical Pietri. Of Sunstar's capacity to stay we do not think there can now be any reasonable doubt, for he has won both his recent engagements like a stayer and has been galloping on at the finish. The progeny of Sundridge are popularly voted non-stayers, but both sire and dam (Doris) of the present Derby favourite have all the best staying blood in the world in their veins. Sundridge got a lot of winners in 1910 for which year his list included the following: Theo Bold (2 races), Sunbright (1), Radiancy (1), Sunder (6), Sunstar (3), Sunshine (2), Buttery (2), Fireball (1), Sunflower II. (1), Suncloud (1), Sun Angel (3), Sunripe (2), and The Story (1), a total of 26 races representing a sum in stakes of £11,495. It may be of interest to shortly run through the victories of these horses and note against them the distances over which they were scored. Theo Bold, 3 years, two victories were gained over 6 furlongs and 1 mile 44 yards; Sunbright, 3 years, won at a mile; Radiancy, 2 years at 5 furlongs; Sunder, 3 years, at 5 furlongs, 5 furlongs, 1¼ mile, 5 furlongs, 1 mile and 5 furlongs; Sunstar, 2 years, 6 furlongs, 5 furlongs and 5 furlongs; Suncloud, 3 years, 5 furlongs; Sun Angel, 3 years, 5 furlongs, 6 furlongs, and 5 furlongs; Sunripe, 3 years, 5 furlongs and 5 furlongs; and The Story, 4 years, 1¼ mile. Most of his stock are young and though they say that no Amphion (Sundridge being by that one out of Sierra) ever begets a stayer there is plenty of the best staying blood in the pedigree and Doris the dam of Sunstar was the dam of Selsey Bill as a result of her union with Bill of Portland. Lally was an Amphion and he won the Eclipse Stakes, 1¼ mile with a big weight like 9st. 13lb. and the Royal Hunt Cup (7 furlongs 166 yards) and it is no use trying to get round it that as a general working rule the Amphions, though very brilliant, do not stay. Yet there is no reason why they should not, for Amphion himself was by Speculum or Rosebery and got Vedette, Newminster and Rataplan, all sires of stayers in his pedigree and through Doris (by York dam by Arthur) Sunstar gets Stockwell. Vedette, of course, gives Amphion the St. Simon strain and Newminster Hermit from whom, for one, Canterbury Pilgrim the dam of Swynford is descended. There is no doubt about the excellence of the strains but the solid fact which faces us is that the Amphion family have so far failed to prove their endurance and have been successful only over shorter distances. A stickler for a genuine stayer whose ancestors, both immediate and remote, were stayers of proven worth would probably reject Sunstar as a possible winner of any race beyond 1¼ mile, but it is curious how even reputed non-stayers will on occasion prove their detractors in the wrong. Up to the Liverpool Cup, 1¼ mile last year they would not believe that Swynford could stay, and not even then some people, despite the fact that he won running away by five lengths from Last Call. Yet he won the Leger! It will, of course, be argued that Swynford was bred to stay, whereas Sunstar has this doubtful begetter of stayers, Amphion, amongst his ancestors and that Swynford's case was merely one of mistake, as the blood was there all right as he was inbred to Stockwell and had in addition Galopin on one side of the house and Hermit on the other. But if we treat Amphion as one of those accidents of a horse himself bred by stayers who have failed to mark their quality on their progeny, the Sunstar pedigree is as good as any in the Stud Book so far as staying blood is concerned, and it may be that we are about to see a throw-back to the great families of whose staunchness and endurance there is no doubt. In the meanwhile those who are in a better position to judge than we are situated such a long distance from the scene of action as this are supporting Mr. Joel's colt to the exclusion of all others and he bids fair to start one of the hottest favourites. His price is already 5 to 4 and unless some revulsion of feeling sets in he is bound to go to odds on before another week is out. If King William's injury proves itself to be of a serious nature, or at any rate sufficiently so to discount whatever chance he may have had Sunstar's price will contract all the more quickly. The criticism on him both before and after the race for the Guineas was that he was far too forward and this coupled with the fact that everything else was backward, the year having been somewhat against trainers, was deemed to detract from the value of his victory. He was also said to be the possessor of very round-looking joints of the kind that do not as a rule stand a great deal of knocking about. Mr. Joel has not scrupled to take advantage of his colt's fitness and has won two important races off the reel with him. Let us hope for his sake and for that of the numerous other people who have supported Sunstar, that we shall not find him the colt or sore on the 31st

In the Guineas, Pietri, whose support for the Derby is scarcely understandable, showed temper and ran very sourly and ungenerously and they also say that his wind is bound to stop him over a long journey. Nevertheless someone must be nibbling at him, as he is holding his place in the Derby betting and they evidently give him as good a chance as Stedfast and M. Edmond Blanc's pair. Now that King William has met with this mishap attention will, we presume, be more strongly focussed than ever upon Stedfast. This colt is by Chancer out of Canterbury Pilgrim Swynford's dam and save that he does not get Isonomy which Swynford does through John o'Gaunt his sire, the pedigree is very like the last Leger winner's. Canterbury Pilgrim is by Tristan out of Pilgrimage, Pilgrimage by Lady Audley by Macaroni and Tristam is by Hermit by Newminster. Swynford has St. Simon transmitted to him through his paternal grand dam La Flèche, who was by St. Simon, whereas Stedfast gets him through Chancer his sire.

Beaurepaire, who ran second in the Newmarket Stakes and, therefore, according to precedent ought to be certainly in the first four in the Derby, is owned by Mr. W. Raphael and is by Fariman out of Politesse. He won the Molecomb Stakes, 6 furlongs, as a two-year-old in that race, defeating Borrow, whose subsequent win in the Middle Park Plate was not very highly rated by the critics as he was adjudged to have got there under false pretences, and he ran third in the Fulbourne Stakes at Newmarket to Meleager and Prince San, Phryxus was fourth. The other placed one in the Newmarket Stakes, Persephone, is one of Lord Derby's and is by Persimmon out of Princess Melton, who was herself by Melton by Master Kildare and the filly is engaged in both the Oaks and the Leger, but not in the Derby. She never managed to win as a two-year-old and her record of placed performances is as follows : Second, Woodcote Stakes, 6 furlongs, 8st. 9lb. to Seaforth, 8st. 12lb., Garraveen, Feramorz and Sydmonton next behind them ; second, Rous Memorial Stakes, 6 furlongs to Lindoiva, beaten a short head only ; second, Prince of Wales's Plate, 5 furlongs, 8st. 4lb. to Prince San 9st. 11lb. ; second, Bretby Stakes, 6 furlongs, to Alice, The Test, the only other runner.

Mr. J. B. Joel's luck looked to be so good that when they were backing The Story at short odds for the Jubilee Handicap (1¼ mile), and which was run at Kempton last Saturday, it seemed to be one of the things that every one ought to be on to and no one ought to miss! Nevertheless when the weights were scanned The Story was not meeting horses like Wolfe Land, Buckwheat, Willonyx, etc., at such particularly advantageous terms compared to the weights at which he met them last season, and therefore unless the short price at which Mr. Joel's horse was at in the betting connoted some great improvement, it was not such a very good thing for him, as the odds made it out to be. He incurred a 3-lb. penalty for winning the Prince of Wales's Stakes at Epsom and that according to our calculation brought his weight in the Jubilee to 8st. 3lb. and he was meeting Wolfe Land for one on 2lb. worse terms than when the pair met at the Duke of York Stakes last year. But there is no use dissecting weights and form now, for The Story was "donkey-licked," as the saying is, and was never really dangerous according to the wired details of the race, that gallant customer Sir George Murray's Bachelor's Double winning in convincing fashion. Last season Bachelor's Double was pulled out for races over all sorts of distances and at all sorts of weights and from the City and Suburban, which he won greatly to the detriment of the supporters of Minoru and Mustapha, and the Royal Hunt Cup at Ascot (7 furlongs 166 yards) which he also won, to the long distance Doncaster Cup (2 miles 1 furlong) in which he ran up to the smashing three-year old Bronzino giving him 21lb., the well-plucked five-year-old took it all on as being in the day's march. They gave him very little rest last season and this year he has started his career of toil well by placing to his owner's credit one of the principal and most valuable of the early handicaps. Last year the Jubilee Handicap was abandoned on account of the death of His late Gracious Majesty King Edward VII.

Wolfe Land, the runner up, is owned by Mr. P. Ralli, a relative of the wealthy Kings of Commerce of we might say any given spot upon the map of the known world! Wolfe Land's principal claim to distinction last year quite apart from what he won was that he ran fourth in the memorable Leger which Swynford won from Bronzino, Wolfe Land following close behind the "pocketted" Lemberg. His win and place record is as follows :—

Third, Royal Three-Year-Old Handicap, 1¼ mile, Windsor 8st. 10lb., to My Collar, 8st. 1lb., and Carr Bridge 7st. 3lb.; second, Three-Year-Old Handcap, 1¼ mile, Lewes, 9st., to Carr Bridge, 7st. 4lb.; won London Cup, 1¼ mile, Alexandra Park, 7st. 8lb., beating Hayden, 8st. 10lb., and Rathlea 9st.; won, Winwick Plate, 1 mile, Haydock Park, 8st. 7lb., beating Zephaniah 8st. and Zria 8st. 9lb.; won Rothschild Plate, 1 mile 3 furlongs, Windsor, 9st. 5lb., beating Matiyela, 7st. 11lb., and Royal Garter, 7st. 11lb.; third, Brighton Cup, 1¼ mile, 9st. to Avernus 7st. 8lb., and Glacier 7st. 8lb.; fourth, St. Leger, 1 mile 6 furlongs. 132 yards, Doncaster, to Swynford, Bronzino and Lemberg; third, Prince Edward Handicap (vide Bachelor's Double); won, Duke of York Stakes, 1¼ mile, Kempton 7st. 10lb., beating Buckwheat, 9st. 3lb., Willonyx 7st. 12lb., and The Story 8st. 2lb.; won, Cliff Welter Plate, 1½ miles, Folkestone 9st. 6lb., beating Procope 9st. 5lb., and Flyfisher 9st. 4lb.

The Story's most recent victory was in the Prince of Wales's Stakes at Epsom in which he carried the big weight of 10st 4lb. and won very easily from Eblis 7st. 10lb. and Piquet 7st. 7lb. The Story as a three-year-old was just one below first class and was we compute about a 14lb. to 16lb. worse horse than Phaleron up to about 1¼ mile and no good at all beyond that distance. He was a fair miler as a three-year-old as the fact of his having run up to Minoru in the St. James' and Palace Stakes. He won two moderate races as a three-year-old the Devonshire Plate, 1¼ mile and the Durham County Produce Plate, 1¼ mile in which Phaleron, who finished fourth, gave him 13lb. and it was considered a good thing for The Story. As a four-year-old he only won once, the Dursham Stakes, 1¼ mile in which in receipt of 13lb. he beat Mustapha three parts of a length, Sunbright, another of the non-staying Sundridges, third.

We understand that the programmes of the Tollygunge Club Meetings will be ready very shortly. It is, so we hear, intended to still further penalise the G. R. who has won a number of races under recognised rules and to give the young idea more scope. This is quite right and we think it is decidedly the proper line along which to proceed. There are about three G.R.'s who are certainly anything from 10lb. to 21lb. better than all the rest and there are bigger fish for these gentlemen to catch at the Monsoons.

The fortunes of the English Polo team in America are naturally very closely followed by people in India as we have such a large personal interest in the little army of invasion. The recent accounts of practice at Cedarhurst, Long Island and at Philadelphia, where a team composed of Mr. E. W. E. Palmes (10th Hussars), Mr. Noel Edwards (9th Lancers, Captain Barrett (15th Hussars) and Captain Hardress Lloyd (4th Dragoon Guards) dusted the floor with a team calling itself the "Bryn Mawr Foxhunters." In this latter game our representatives were mounted on strange ponies but even so they ought to have done as they did with the enemy, for it is not claimed that their adversaries were anything approaching first-class form. Reuter's correspondent is extremely enthusiastic and it is very patriotic of him and every one will also hope that he is not being carried off his feet by an undue desire to blow the trumpet of Albion, but there is no real line to be obtained till the first of the "tests" has been played and we see how our braves are going to shape against such a very strong combination to Meadowbrook.

Whatever the result things as they are now shaping show us that the Americans are not likely to have the walk-over that they were at first fairly certain that they would have, for they did not consider this team of soldiers as strong a combination as that which they defeated at Hurlingham in 1909. Mr. Walter Buckmaster and Mr. R. Grenfell were first picked to go when the expedition of last year was projected and the Americans then considered that we might have some sort of a chance, as Mr. Buckmaster is the only one who is handicapped at 10 points amongst the English players ; but when a soldier team collected from cavalry regiments scattered all over the British Dominions was finally sent forth as our best effort, the American experts said "Shucks!" or words to that effect! Since, however, they have seen how these despised soldier men can ride and hit, since they have seen Captain Leslie Cheape hitting goals from the half way line, Captain Rattle Barrett doing the work of about three men rolled into one, Captain Hardress Lloyd as good in defence as he is in attack, Mr. Palmes cool and absolutely steady in the most exciting rough-up, and Mr. Noel Edwards full of dash and rarely if ever missing, they have begun to alter their ideas about its being such a "cinch" for the U. S. A. as they at first imagined that it would be. It may be that our team may not have quite sufficient time to acquire that cohesion and combination which the Meadowbrook team undoubtedly possesses, but before the Stars and Stripes triumphs there will have been some extremely hot fighting and we shall be surprised if the margin which ever way the game goes is a big one.

ADAMITE (Mr. Reid Walker's) ch c by Adam—Musette. At Dyrs.: no record.

A REMARKABLE feat was accomplished by the jockey Chadwick at Sandown Park last month. In a hurdle race he was riding Bloodstone, the favourite, when his weight cloth became detached. Gripping altogether 21lbs. in his hand he managed to negociate the course safely and get his mount into third place.

THE American Consul at Roubaix states that pigeon flying in the Department of the North is carried on with more enthusiasm there than in any other part of France. Races are invariably held on Sundays. Birds entered must be brought to the clubhouse 48 hours before the match, to be marked and placed in a basket holding 50 to 60 birds. On an average 2,000 to 6,000 birds are entered for each match. The day preceding the race the convoyeur leaves with the baskets of pigeons in a special car attached to a passenger train, and for which the railway companies make a special rate. On arriving at the destination the car is sealed by the station agent, who unseals it the next day and superintends the removal of the baskets to the freight yard, where they are opened at a given time, the station agent signing a certificate to that effect. A certain amount from the entry fees is set aside for prizes and expenses.

To prevent any dishonesty and to establish accuracy in timing flights, a special apparatus is used, each bird's owner possessing one. This is a wooden box containing a sealed clock, set to agree exactly with the sealed watch of the convoyeur. On the bird's return from a flight, the owner removes the ring from its leg and drops it in a slot in the apparatus, where a special mechanism registers on a paper roll, to a fraction of a second, the moment when the ring was inserted. As the pigeon has not been fed prior to being liberated on its flight, it immediately enters the loft on its return in search of food, where it is caught, the ring removed from its foot, and registered, after which the bird is carefully fed and placed alone to rest.

The average speed of a well-trained bird is 50 miles an hour, but this is frequently exceeded. As a general rule, all birds taking part in a match will have returned to their several lofts within ten minutes after the arrival of the first bird, showing the excellent training and selection which has been made. The most difficult annual race is that from Biarritz to Roubaix, 625 miles, for which the Government and the Minister of War offer handsome prizes. At least ten per cent. of the birds in this race are lost or fall from exhaustion.

HERE is a good tip which Forest and Stream gives for preserving firearms when camping out:—Carry with you a little tin box containing a lump of mutton tallow. Instead of smearing oil over firearms, rub a little tallow on the palm of one hand, then rub every steel part of rifle or revolver with that palm. The tallow is very tenacious and repels moisture, but unlike oil, does not soil clothing with which it may be brought into contact. Guns shot over salt water may be preserved in this way. Revolvers carried into the woods in leather holsters rust easily if the leather has not been water-proofed inside and out, for the spongy flesh side of the leather absorbs and retains moisture. Tallow rubbed in while hot will help. Your little lump of tallow is a good thing, too, for chapped hands and wind-blistered faces, especially on snowshoe trips or in midsummer. Prepare the tallow by cutting it into small pieces and dropping these into a vessel of boiling water. Let this simmer for a while, then skin the tallow from the surface of the water and put in a convenient small metal box. In this way it remains as white as snow and free from salt.

A CAPTAIN of the Bengal Lancers has unloaded the following tiger yarn on an American paper:—

"The Captain had been on a visit to a civilian friend in Rajputana, and went out for a walk in the country about sunset.

After going four or five miles he found himself in a narrow path on the side of a steep hill. The path was a mere ledge in the rock, with a deep chasm on one side and a wall of solid rock on the other. It was not a pleasant place in which to come face to face with a big tiger; but that was just what happened to the captain.

It was too late to withdraw; so he determined to brave it out. The animal had evidently been asleep; for it continued for a few moments to lick itself into full wakefulness. The Captain stood still, with his eyes fixed on the beast. Presently the tiger took a few steps forward and made a dash at him. Luckily its teeth seized him by the flap of his coat, just over the breast, so that he was not hurt by the blow. Then the captain had a chance to appreciate the feelings of a mouse when it is shaken by a cat. The tiger shook him till his senses left him. Perhaps it was as well they did leave him; for the beast held him over the deep chasm, and a fall would have been as fatal as the animal's onslaught.

When the captain recovered consciousness, a few minutes later, he found himself lying flat on his back, with his feet dangling over the precipice. He opened his eyes, only to see the sky above him. He dared not move; for the tiger might be close at his elbow. So he shut his eyes and remained motionless. Then he thought he heard a strange noise at a little distance, a sound as of somebody sneezing. His first thought was that some one had come to the rescue and beaten the tiger off; but this was proved to be wrong by low, disagreeable, tigerish growls mingled with the sneezing.

He turned slowly. He could hardly believe his eyes. There was the tiger slinking off with his tail between his legs and sneezing violently as he went, his face distorted by most piteous grimaces. The truth then dawned upon the soldier. In shaking him the tiger had caused his snuffbox to fly open out of his waistcoat pocket, and had received the contents full in the face."

One might think our old friend Captain Corker or his rival Major Goak, of Lays of Ind celebrity, had been giving this Yankee journalist a taste of their quality.

BOMBARDIER Wells' meeting with Iron Hague is described in our London Sporting letter to-day. A correspondent, alluding to the lengthy one's victory writes:—

Not since Billy Madden crossed over from America, after his quarrel with John L. Sullivan, with the avowed intention of finding a British-born heavy-weight to put paid to his account with the "Boston Strong Boy," has there been such a stir in heavy-weight circles as that occasioned by the discovery of Bombardier Wells, who met Iron Hague to decide who out of a dozen or so claimants had most valid claim to the title of heavy-weight champion of England. No British heavy-weight since Smith has ever received one half so much "boosting" and advertisement as the lanky Bombardier, but until last night he had never met anyone who could fairly be described as of championship calibre, his reputation depending more upon what his friends had said about him than anything he himself had accomplished.

Hague, of course, had done things. In a ragged, unsatisfactory sort of way, but still he had done them, and it was fully recognised that at his best if only he could be induced to attain to that state of physical perfection, he was a very dangerous man, more especially at close quarters a fact which Langford is prepared to vouch for to all "bona-fide inquirers." But when he met Wells the burly Hague was completely outclassed; the ex-soldier made admirable use of his superiority of reach, and was at no time in serious danger. Wells, I think, has almost "arrived."

Charles Williams, the English professional Rackets champion is now the World's champion. It will be remembered that playing against Jamsetji, the title holder, at Queen's Club on the 29th ultimo, he beat the Parsee by 4 games to love, the scores being 18—15, 15—2, 15—9, 15—8. The second half of the contest was played at Prince's Club on Saturday last when Williams won the remaining game 15—7 in nine minutes. He thus won five games and the Championship.

The following are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the past week. Yorkshire beat M. C. C. at Lords by 45 runs.

M. C. C. beat Kent at Lords by 94 runs.

Surrey beat Leicestershire, at the Oval, by 10 wickets.

Essex defeated Yorkshire, at Leyton, by 131 runs.

Warwickshire defeated Lancashire, at Manchester, by 137 runs.

The match between Hampshire and Somersetshire, at Southampton, was drawn.

M.C.C. beat Hampshire, at Lords, on Tuesday by one wicket.

Yorkshire beat Derbyshire, at Sheffield, by an innings and 47 runs.

Lancashire beat Northamptonshire, at Northampton, by 246 runs.

Why do geese and ducks assume the form of a V in their flight? This is a question which has, we believe, never been satisfactorily answered. The subject has been under discussion in our American contemporary, Forest and Stream, and one of the best theories put forward is that the form mentioned is not assured to afford protection from the wind for the weaklings of the flock, but that it is the result of the individual members of the flock endeavouring to get the best advantage for themselves. The wake of a boat is a most unfavourable situation for another following, and in order that the latter may get on fair terms with the leader she must be close enough and yet be far enough on one side of the course pursued by the leader to escape the current and waves. Thus a skein of geese adopts the well-known formation because each individual tries to keep as close to its leader as possible, and yet avoid the back draught or wake. The advocate of this theory rightly says that it is seldom that birds in large bodies act so as to favour the weaker members of the community. Did they do so the species adopting this idea would soon become extinct, according to Darwin's well-known theory. Of course, sexual and parental influences are not taken into consideration in the argument.

The M. C. C. has decided that the matches played by the Indian team against first class sides shall rank as first class fixtures.

An English victory by 6 games to 4 was the result of the chess match by cable between teams representing Great Britain and the United States, which ended on 22nd April. The British team were at the Hotel Cecil and the United States team at Brooklyn, each move being cabled across the Atlantic. The full score is as follows:—

Britain's victory terminates the contest for the International Trophy, which had been proceeding for the last fifteen years. Great Britain, having scored three successive wins, becomes the possessor of the trophy.

The Mussoorie Polo Tournament seems marked for misfortune. Last year, with five or six entries, adverse fates—the death of the King-Emperor, and bad weather,—put a stop to it entirely. This year only one team, the 60th King's Royal Rifles, came forward to challenge the holders, and, in this, at the last moment, a member fell ill. A "scratch" team played the 2nd (K.E.O.) Gurkhas on the afternoon of the 9th instant witnessed by quite a number of spectators, and gave them a very good game indeed. But—it was not the tournament; and the handsome cup remains, pro tem, with the Gurkhas.

The match for the Amateur Tennis Championship of England was played on the 13th instant when the Hon'ble Neville Lytton beat Mr. Eustace H Miles by three sets to love. Miles first won the championship in 1899 and held it till 1904 when it was won by Mr. V. Pennell. Miles regained the title the next year and won again in 1906. In 1907 and 1908 the American Jay Gould secured the honour, but in 1909 and 1910 Miles was once more champion beating the Hon'ble N. Lytton last year by 3 sets to 1.

The Depot Boxing Tournament at Wellington was brought to a successful conclusion on the 15th instant when the semi-finals and finals were witnessed by a large attendance. Results of the finals:—Bantams.—Pte. Garteen, Oxford and Bucks w. o. Pte Lloyd, Oxford and Bucks, scratched. Feather—Pte. Nutt beat Pte. Norman both Oxford and Bucks. Feathers—Novice—Pte. Fletcher, Sherwood Foresters beat Pte. Haydon Dorsets. Lights—Pte. Cooper, E. Surrey beat Pte. Kyte, King's L. I. Middles—Pte. Hennessey King's L. I. beat Pte. Carroll Leicesters. The tournament was generally voted a big success and those who engineered it are to be congratulated. The prizes were given away by Major Hyde, commandant of the Depot.

Conditions are now published of the Polo Tournament to be held in connection with the Delhi Coronation Durbar—a tournament for which His Majesty the King will present a cup. The tournament will be open to any team from India or abroad. Each match will consist of eight periods of 7½ minutes, the number of ponies being limited to 24 per team, and the tournament will be held under I. P. A. rules. The entrance fee will be Rs. 150 per team, and entries will close on the 20th November next. All communications regarding the tournament should be addressed to Lieutenant-Colonel R. St. C. Lecky, R.H.A., Meerut.

The first Gymkhana of the Simla season was held at Annandale last Saturday, when in spite of the heat there were good entries. There was a very fair attendance of spectators and the Viceroy's Band played during the afternoon. Proceedings opened with the Affinity Trotting Race which was won by Mrs. Rasbotham and Captain Pollock, with Major and Mrs. Fagan second. Musical chairs, ladies taking polo balls off posts, gave Miss Stewart Wilson a winning bracket with Mrs. Loring second. Then came the Polo Ball race won by Captain Cavendish with Captain Nicholas second. The next item was an affinity competition, carrying ghurrahs unbroken to a winning post. This was won by Miss Osborne and Colonel Maxwell. Another affinity event closed the programme, a questions competition won by Mrs. Headlam and Captain Charteris.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 28th April 1911.

On Monday the London season begins. Though Opera has taken precedence of Pictures in the opening, the Royal Academy is really the first big event of society's summer. To-day the galleries are reserved for such members of the Royal Family as may visit the Academy. No announcement is made beforehand by the officials as to whether the King and the Queen will go to Burlington House. The matter is regarded as purely private. However, the show starts this great record Coronation season in earnest. Every day will bring its heavy list of social engagements, and their Majesties will enter upon an exacting programme which will continue till long after the Coronation itself.

Visitors are arriving already in thousands and the Strand and Western shopping area and the omnibus tops are swarming with sightseers of all nationalities.

Colonial visitors are coming thus early in extraordinary numbers. Thirty years ago, the Australians who came here were almost invariably returned Britons, on a holiday. Now we have their children coming to London for the first time. They are keen to "see everything," and we are busy putting them on the road for all the events from race meetings and provincial tours, and explaining how they can best see the Coronation processions. The Western Australians are making the longest journeys. Some of these will have to take journeys of several days' length by stage-coach. From one spot at the back of the country the return coaching fare is £12 16s. Others are sailing by coast steamers, on seven-day passages, to catch the London steamers from Perth. Wealthy miners and squatters are paying as much as £120 each for return tickets and are "doing" the Continent on the way to the Coronation celebrations. Poor devils! Still it is "good for trade" and a few hundred thousand Colonial sovereigns spent in London this summer will be welcome enough to those who get them I dare say.

* * * * * *

And thus early the seats from which to see the processions are being run up. Whitehall and Parliament Square are already given over to the carpenters and contractors. Already big prices are being offered and paid for front windows of shops and stands along the route which the Coronation procession will take in June.

Rooms overlooking St. James'-street, for example, have been let at 300 guineas. Some in Piccadilly have fetched 300 guineas, and others 250 guineas, while in Pall Mall East 750 guineas has been asked for a balcony which will seat fifty people. Further east the rates are not quite so great, but still they are very high for the majority.

Windows in Queen Victoria-street, for instance, are offered for fifty guineas, and the price of some in the Strand ranges from eighty to a hundred guineas.

This year's International Horse Show, which will be held at Olympia in the midst of the Coronation festivities will be, in the words of one of the officials, "absolutely a women's show." The list of competitors shows already that the horsewomen will be almost as many as the men, although the bulk of the entries, which close on 4th May next, usually come in on the last two available days. The prize list has been drawn up this year with the special object of securing a large entry of women riders and drivers. Women will appear in almost every phase of horsemanship. They will be seen driving governess carts, tandems, pairs, and fours; they will ride schooled hacks, and put hunters over the jumps; while in two classes little girls, not exceeding twelve and sixteen years of age respectively, will ride their ponies.

A special cup has been presented by Lady Greenall in the riding competition for girls not more than sixteen years of age, with the condition that the ponies are ridden side saddle. Another trophy presented by an enthusiastic horsewoman is the £30 cup which Miss Dora Schintz has given for the fire brigade horsing and driving competition.

The probability that the wives of several of the German military officers who are competing in the riding and jumping competitions will also appear on horseback in the arena was stated in a London journal yesterday. Some expert horsewomen from America are expected also. Mrs. H. S. Bowen, of New York, is likely to exhibit in the harness classes the four brown ponies which swept everything before them at Olympia last year, and which she purchased after the show for about £1,000 apiece from Mr. William Foster.

What are we unfortunate islanders to eat! Everything seems to have in it the seeds of disease, or upsets the digestion, or acts as a slow poison. Now, there is an outcry against stone-ground flour, on the theory that the stones wear away and the resulting sand becomes mixed with the flour and is eaten by people. It is calculated that in the course of an average life time a man who ate bread made of flour thus ground would consume about three hundredweight of powdered stone. This is a new reading of the saying about asking for bread and getting a stone. Every man, according to the country adage, eats a peck of dirt before he dies; but no one can be reasonably expected to swallow three hundredweight of granite even in impalpable instalments. The curious thing is that with all these aids to indigestion the average of human life is increasing. Perhaps science will one day discover that the particles now described as deleterious and malnutritious are really very beneficial for the human system. In any case, it seems that we are getting a great deal too finical and faddy about our foodstuffs as in most other things.

A weekly paper says that one-fourth of the young women of the English middle-classes are stage-struck. Considering the space given by the papers to the doings of actresses, and the many chorus ladies who make brilliant marriages (at all events for a time), and the feasting and junketing that fall to the lot of the lucky ones (nobody ever hears anything about the unlucky ones), and the troops of philandering "boys" that dangle at their heels, the wonder is that there are not many more of the shop assistant and typist class who want a ticket in the stage lottery. If young women could only understand arithmetic they would see that a couple of hundred marriageable peers, if there are so many, cannot marry a quarter of a million possible stage heroines, and no creation of new peerages for political purposes would appreciably affect the calculation. Even if all the available guardsmen were thrown in there would still be only one aristocratic husband for every fifty thousand candidates. Are the drudgery and disappointment of theatrical life worth that fifty thousand to one chance?

A new theatrical partnership—that of Messrs. Vedrenne and Eadie—was inaugurated at the Royalty Theatre last Wednesday night with the production of "The Master of Mrs. Chilvers," a four-act comedy by Mr. Jerome K. Jerome. The play is devoted entirely to a rather tiresome discussion of the woman suffrage question. Mr. Jerome bases its action on the assumption that the House of Lords has arrived at a legal decision which gives a woman power to put up as a parliamentary candidate at a by-election. Mr. Jerome not only treats this possibility seriously, but introduces reams of rhetorical dissertations on sex antagonism, feminine disabilities, childless marriages, free love, maternity, and so forth—subjects more suitable to the lecture platform than to the stage.

As a result of the ruling of the Upper House, Annys Chilvers (Miss Lena Ashwell) contests East Poplar in opposition to her husband (Mr. Dennis Eadie), who has to seek re-election on obtaining promotion to the Cabinet. The scenes are laid, therefore, in East End committee-rooms, and in the Poplar Town Hall during the counting of the poll. Mrs. Chilvers is returned by a small majority, but the stress of the conflict has brought domestic disruption at home. Husband and wife are at daggers drawn on the question of the State's responsibility towards the care of children who are born out of wedlock. But there is an obvious way out of the difficulty. Annys Chilvers confides the usual secret to a member of her own sex. Very soon there is to be a "master of Mrs. Chilvers"—a little child—and political propaganda may go to the winds when husband and wife are linked together again by "the chains of God."

Mr. Jerome's characterisation is happily far more attractive than his plot. The Chilvers are unsympathetic nonentities, in spite of the admirable acting of Miss Ashwell and Mr. Eadie, but Mr. Edmund Gwenn and Miss Esme Beringer were delightful as an anti-suffragist bill-sticker and his coster "donah," and Miss Sydney Fairbrother created plentiful laughter as a monosyllabic charwoman with a caustic tongue.

THE VAGRANT.

ADVANTAGES OF IMPROVED REELS FOR INDIAN FISHING.

In some former notes on spinning reels, I called attention to the great improvements that have been made, especially as regards ability to cast light baits. The well-known Illingworth reel, which makes the casting of a light bait easy, even to the novice, has hitherto been rather a costly affair. The price at Gamage's, with accessories, is £2 17*s.* 6*d.* at present, but I hear that a cheaper and equally effective reel, on the same principle, is shortly to be brought out, which will retail at 30*s.*

Special lines are made for the Illingworth reel, viz. 2 X, 3 X, and 4 X. These are very fine, but are strong enough to use for medium sized fish. The middle size 3 X is the standard, and is strong enough for mahseer of four to six pounds. 4 X. is very fine indeed, and is not suitable for fish much above two pounds, that is, if the fish are mahseer in a river. The lines are all forty yards long, and are very cheap, costing 10*d*, 1*s*., and 1*s*. 2*d*. respectively, according to thickness. Some of the readers of the Indian Field have no doubt fished in the Kumaon Lakes with atta. Either an Illingworth or Chippendale reel would be perfect for this kind of fishing, which consists in casting out a small piece of atta, on very fine tackle, and letting it sink to the bottom, and then very gently gathering in the slack. I used a fine plaited and dressed silk line for this fishing, combined with a very light sliding lead. I used to pull out as much line as I wanted, arrange it in coils, so that it would run out freely, and then make my cast. One of these modern reels would simplify all that, especially on a windy day, when it is hard to prevent one's loose coils of line from getting blown into snarls. With the very fine line too, one could reduce the weight of the sliding lead considerably, while still being able to make long casts. These small lake mahseer are highly educated fish, and the angler who would be successful, must use the finest tackle, and take great pains over his fishing. It is most important to use a sliding lead, as if the mahseer feel the least drag when they pick up the piece of atta, they drop it at once. When the line can draw freely through a hole in the lead, it is easy to keep a foot or two of slack, and then when the line begins to move off, the angler can raise his rod gently and strike at the right moment. In the same way these new reels make it an easy matter to fish small streams with dead bait. Each eddy and nook can be explored with a certainty and ease, which would be quite out of the question, were a reel of the Nottingham type employed.

Similarly reels with non-revolving drums, were perfect for labeo fishing in tanks with shallow edges. The large lump of atta used in this fishing, has weight sufficient in itself for making long casts. No float need be used, but the bait can be cast out, and allowed to sink, and then the slack gently gathered in, just as in the case of mahseer fishing in the Kumaon Lakes. With labeo, however, no slack line is drawn out, but the rod is held in the hand, or rested over a forked stick, and the line is closely watched. When the line moves the rod is held ready for the strike, which should be made the instant a sort of long dragging pull is felt. When one cannot have the float close to the point of the rod, I think this plan of fishing is the best for labeo. If, however, a float is preferred, it is easy to use a light plummet only just heavy enough to sink the float, and then cast out, and keep altering the float, until only an inch of it shows above water. It must, however, be remembered that one cannot see exactly what happens to a float twenty yards away, and the best one can do is to strike when it goes under. For this reason I prefer using no float in shallow edged tanks, where long casts are necessary.

For heavy work, when big fish are expected, one of the large sized Malloch reels would be much more suitable than either the Illingworth, or Chippendale, both of which are, as I have shown, essential contrivances for making fine fishing easier.

Another kind of Indian fishing for which light casting reels are peculiarly well suited, is live-baiting in tanks for murral.

Tank murral rarely exceed 2¾ or 3lbs. in weight, and can be caught on quite light tackle, provided there is a bit of thin gimp, or some other substance difficult to bite through, next to the hook. There are shy fish, and the ability to cast out one's live-bait quietly to exactly the right spot, is a great assistance towards making a bag. Not having, of course, one of the reels I have described, I used to pull out line in coils upon the ground, exactly in the same way as for atta fishing in Bhim Tal.

If one has a lathe, and a few tools, it is a simple matter to make a rough, but efficient casting reel on the Chippendale principle. I attach a sketch of a home-made reel, which does what is wanted, though it certainly cannot be called handsome.

"FLEUR-DE-LYS."

Shooting.

BY "BALDATCHA."

LETTER I. "28 BORES FOR INDIAN SHOOTING."

It is now 21 years since I wrote to the Field under the above heading, and endeavoured to point out some of the advantages possessed by 28 bores for Indian shooting.

Much water has passed under the bridge since then and perhaps the experience of over twenty years use of these weapons may be of interest to some of your readers.

In my letter of 1890, I referred to the killing powers of the 28 bore gun for small birds such as snipe, quail, and partridges, and deprecated the use of this bore for duck and wildfowl. Yet I mentioned that the 28 had frequently in the course of a day's snipe shooting killed over twenty duck and teal.

As will be seen by these letters, wider knowledge of the capabilities of the 28 when firing properly proportioned loads of powder and shot, has caused me to alter my views on this point, and I am convinced as the result of long and varied experience that the 28 bore, while par excellence the gun for snipe, quail and partridge shooting, is by no means to be despised by the shooter as a capable all round gun for general sport, if it is properly built and suitably charged. It is especially deadly on all driven game, and for Himalayan sport it is unsurpassed.

Let me hasten at once to explain that I do not for a moment contend that the 28 is anything like as powerful a weapon as the 12 bore, nor has it as wide a killing circle at 40 yards. But 8 bores and 10 bores—to say nothing of 4 bores—are not carried by the ordinary shooter, and they one and all have larger killing circles than the 12. Why is this so? Obviously for this simple reason that the guns mentioned are with their greater power and extended killing circles, bigger and more powerful than is necessary, and would not in the long run give as satisfactory results as the smaller, lighter and handier weapon, because they could not be brought as quickly and surely on to the mark and would soon tire and slow down the arm.

That this is actually the case is proved in practice by the fact that for wild fowl shooting, when tramping along the sea shore, by estuaries, lakes, etc., the experienced shooter carries not the larger bore weapons but the handier and lighter twelve, with its narrower killing circle.

It is precisely these identical reasons, and this very element of handiness that make the 28 bore, despite its narrower killing circle as compared to the 12, such a satisfactory weapon, and causes it to account in a workmanlike manner for every variety of game bird, from quail to monal pheasant, from snipe and woodcock to wild duck.

It should not be forgotten that we try our guns at forty yards and shoot our birds for the most part at under thirty. In the case of driven birds the majority are still nearer to the gun. For this particular kind of sport, i.e. driving—the 28 can be relied upon to do greater execution than the larger bores, because (a) it is easier to aim with; (b) it is brought quicker on to the mark. Its narrower muzzle enables a far nicer aim to be taken, and a more accurate forward allowance to be made. (c) Its killing circle, while ample to secure that game is killed in the air does not plaster an overhead bird or one going away with an unnecessary weight of lead. (d) If the gun is not made too light it feels, as soon as the novelty has worn off, as steady as a larger bore, and it adapts itself much more readily to the movements of very fast birds.

It will probably be said, "Who is this party, who dares to go against the law and the prophets, and talks about his pop-guns, when practically the whole world of sportsmen is dead against him, and has almost unanimously decided that the 12 is out and away the best and most suitable all-round gun. A bore too which has been sanctified by years of use by the best and greatest shots in the world?"

In reply I would request you to wait a moment until you have heard what I have got to say, then strike and jeer if you like.

I would ask those who so freely condemn small bores whether they have ever shot with one with which it was possible to make good shooting. How many of them too have taken the trouble to look into the cartridges supplied for the gun, in order to satisfy themselves that proper loads of powder and lead have been used? I have shot with nothing larger than a 28 bore for the last twenty-four years, and this experience should be taken into consideration for what it is worth. I have no hesitation in saying that the 28 is a workman's weapon of which no shooter need be ashamed, if built and loaded upon common-sense principles. For nearly a quarter of a century I have enjoyed exceptionally good sport, the charm of which has been enormously increased by the use of these little guns, and I am anxious that others who are half as fond of shooting as I am should realize the fact—a discovery I myself did not make until many years after I commenced shooting—that it is, with modern guns, possible to use very small bores with excellent effect and that it is vastly more enjoyable and pleasant to cut one's birds over clean as a whistle with a 28 bore than to mow them down with a rough, noisy, and comparatively clumsy 12.

Personally after a long experience of both large and small bores the advantages and conveniences of the latter being so patent I find it difficult to understand why men cling to the heavy guns of our fathers even if they are provided by dame nature with frames that enable them to carry and wield them without fatigue. (It is perhaps as well to confess that the writer is himself a sad example of the proverb that ill weeds grow apace, and a blush rises to his cheeks when he passes a weighing machine, while if he ventures on the platform the tell-tale needle points to a spot near 15 stone, from this it will be seen that he has adopted the small bore from conviction, not from necessity.) How men of light frames can still permit themselves to be overgunned, and forced to carry a blunderbuss-like weapon, "because of its wide killing circle, my dear Sir", is incomprehensible. If they only knew! If they only realized the amount of fun and enjoyment of which they are depriving themselves, it would be a revelation indeed, and wide their eyes would open.

Admitted freely that the 12 bore is the universal bore, ordained of fashion, enjoined by custom (in these respects does it not bear a striking resemblence to our old friend, the indispensable chimney-pot hat)—and that it is moreover the gun prescribed by gunmakers. I still venture to suggest that the arguments in favour of the small bore gun are unanswerable, attested as they are by the weight of the bag, and the clean and satisfactory manner in which birds are killed in the air, to say nothing of the keen pleasure the use of these delightful little guns afford.

The object of the sportsman may be taken to be, while giving his game a fair chance, to kill it with as little pain and in as humane a manner as possible, and with as small and light a weapon and charge as will effect this end.

If this can be attained with a far narrower bore than a 12—and I hope to be able to show that this is possible—what is the use of dragging about a weapon which is more heavy and powerful than is necessary? Universal custom and the gunmakers are, I allow, against small bores. Very celebrated shots and authorities are most emphatic in their condemnation of them, but I submit that this verdict is due to the fact that these eminent judges have (assuredly) never used anything but a feather-weight pattern, and have not thought it worth while to work out for themselves the proper proportions of power and lead for these little weapons, and have therefore, unwittingly, never given them a fair trial.

Take the dictum of that very interesting and instructive writer in the Badminton Library—"Field and Covert" was I think the title of the volume—"28 bores need not be discussed, as any one who has experimented with them knows they are foolish toys when used on anything except a young partridge at short range, and that it is ridiculous to maintain that they will hold their own with a larger bore." (This writer was, I believe, either the phenomenal shot, Lord Walsingham, or that fine sportsman and great authority, Sir R. Payne Gallwey).

Hear the last named again in his excellent "Letters to Young Shooters," that classic on the subjects of which it treats:—"As to the 28 bore, I merely regard it as a contrivance to wound save when used on game at a short range, and a gun that will only kill well at a short, and wounds at a fairly long one, is not the class of weapon a shooter ought to carry." A footnote to the above adds—"I will qualify the above by saying that I have found the 28 bore a useful little spitfire for killing water rats, as well as for bagging small birds to feed my trained hawks with." Thus the famous shots. There is no uncertain note about these pronouncements. The knowing ones will exclaim at the temerity which seeks to challenge the deliberate conclusions arrived at by these men of light and leading in the shooting world, and without doubt many a would-be small-bore man has been choked off altogether by the damning opinions expressed by these great guns. But let us see what it really amounts to. As regards the writer in the Badminton Library the material is ready to hand, if I remember right in the same volume in which this comprehensive curse is recorded. The author mentions in one place the pleasure he takes in handling and looking over the weapons in his battery, ranging from the heavy duck gun to the tiny "28 bore, a toy weighing only four pounds" (I quote from memory). We must concede the point at once. The great writer is of course absolutely correct is saying that such a weapon is only fit to shoot small birds. The murder is out, and no one need in future trot out this particular opinion as an argument against these small bore guns. Had that writer's gun weighed a pound, or a pound and a quarter more than it actually scaled, and had he used suitable charges in such a gun, I am strongly of opinion that we should have heard of the 28 in his hands killing some amazing number of birds in one day's shooting and beating all previous records.

Here is the whole crux of the matter, namely, that small bore guns are usually—I had nearly written, "invariably," made too light for real work. That narrow bores require greater thickness of metal in proportion to their size is admitted in theory, but in practice this is more honoured in the breach than in the observance, possibly owing to an idea that the weight of the 12 bore can be whittled down with safety and comfort to about six pounds—in my judgment an entirely mistaken notion especially for Indian sport—and therefore that the 28 should not be more than four pounds in weight. As a consequence the gun does not get the amount of metal that it requires, and which is its due, the result being that even with small charges there is much recoil and jump, the gun is unsteady in the hand, all of which naturally put people against it. Another common defect is that the loads which the gunmaker recommends, and with which he has shot and regulated the gun, are not always well thought out from the sportsman's point of view, as although they will make pretty enough patterns on the regulation 30 inch circle at 40 yards, penetration has more or less given way to pattern, and the shooter finds that he wounds or wings his birds and goes off declaring that the 28 is a fraud and only a tom-tit gun instead of rightly apportioning the blame to the proper quarters, viz., to the want of sufficient metal in the gun, and to the unsuitability of the loads. The experimenter sees only one course open to him and he takes it; he gives up using the 28, and if he ever afterwards denounces it as no weapon for a shooter, who can wonder at it?

After some small bore disappointments I wrote some twenty-four years ago to Mr. Leeson of Ashford, Kent, and asked him to make me a 28 bore with plenty of metal, especially at the breech end. Since then I and my two sons have killed a vast quantity of all sorts of game with several beautifully balanced, hard hitting guns made by him, weighing about 5¼lbs. each. "Much too heavy for so small a bore" it may be remarked. But is it too heavy! I maintain emphatically that it is not, because any one can carry all day long, in any climate, a well balanced gun-load of 5¼ to 5½lbs. without fatigue and a weapon of this weight can never wobble about like a walking stick in the hand, but will come steady up to the shoulder, but as smartly as you please, at the tail end of a long and hard day. It will fire easily and pleasantly any number of cartridges loaded with the largest charge that can be got into the case, even when the thick felt wad has been cut in half to make room for extra powder and shot.

At first I perforce used badly regulated loads, and in consequence had more than once to leave off shooting because I was tinkering my birds, but after I had arrived at the proper proportion of powder and lead for each size of shot pellet by taking the standard loads of the 12 bore as the basis of calculation a wonderful change always came about. The birds collapsed in the air and it was far more unusual to have runners, than with the 12 bore and moreover, the delight of wielding such a beautiful little weapon most enormously advanced my pleasure in shooting.

For close up only 24 years these guns have been my companions, and I would as soon think of returning to a 12 bore as I would resume the old muzzle-loader. Not that I personally have any grudge against the 12. I carried it for 15 years, and had grand shooting with it, bagging a large amount of game to my great satisfaction, and had I not found out that it was much more powerful and boisterous than is necessary, I should still be using it, and, no doubt, holding that the small bore must needs be a toy.

"Cheap swagger", some say. "to go in for a 28 bore". I think not. Why should it be? If birds can be killed in a thoroughly workmanlike way with a small bore the season through, where does cheap swagger come in? Ancient records show us that the first men to use double barrel guns, and those who adopted the percussion principle in place of the old flint and steel, and later still, the shooters who first took to breechloading weapons, where assailed with gibes of this kind. So the small bore man finds himself in good company. I am only concerned with facts as I have found them, and am anxious that others should not be debarred from the great access of enjoyment that is within their grasp, and which has made me far keener about shooting than I was before, and my friends will possibly admit that that was unnecessary. If however the phrase cheap swagger is intended to include and cover a protest, founded upon long personal experience, against what is practically universal custom, I plead guilty, but let it not be thought that I am desirous to make myself out a good shot, or to pose as an authority, beyond what may be allowed to one who has for so many years practised what he preached, and enjoyed so greatly the advantages he wishes to set out. I doubt too if half a dozen men outside my old regiment will recognise my nom-de-plume. My experience of 28 bores is confined to those of one maker only, Leeson, and the mention of his name must be followed by the usual disclaimer of any interest in his business, and I accordingly proceed to make it, and cannot do so better than by quoting from my 19 years old letter to the Field. "I have no connection with his, or, I regret to add, any other business." This still holds good.

In justice and common fairness to myself and the small bore cause I advocate, I must make it clear that my remarks about 28 bores apply solely to guns made by him. I of course in no way wish to imply that other makers cannot and do not turn out excellent weapons of this bore, all I ask is that my experiences may be referred to guns made by the Ashford maker, who has for over a quarter of a century made a special study of very small bores. I have handled and tried many a 28 at the owner's request which it was purgatory to use, and with which it was very difficult—if not impossible—to make good shooting in the field. I have no doubt that they all made wonderful "targets" "at the 30 inch plate at 40 yards," and it is absolutely necessary that I should make this point manifest at the start. I may here perhaps be permitted to make a slight digression to illustrate my meaning. In 1890 when on leave at home, I was in the shop of a famous London gunmaker, and the conversation turned on snipe shooting. I was asked if I was from the East, and had to allow that I hailed from those sunny climes. "If you are fond" said my friendly entertainer, "of snipe shooting, I will show you a curiosity"—and he proceeded to take out of a rack a 28 bore gun. "There," he said, "what do you think of that! What do you think of that!! An officer came in here and ordered me to make that "pop-gun" (he shot the word out with extraordinary force), and do what I would, I could not dissuade him. It was all on account of some rubbishy letters that has appeared in the Field (poor "Baldatcha.") "Snipe" he vociferated, "Snipe!! One might as well try and shoot snipe with a pea-rifle." It is likely that any gun, not to mention a gun of this unusual calibre, will have the needful care and attention paid to it by a maker who does not believe in it, but builds it under protest and compulsion. In such circumstances is it probable or possible that a gun which certainly requires more trouble and patience in regulating its shooting than larger bores, will receive the time and humouring that is necessary if it is to be a success on game. Let this be my excuse if excuse be needed for guarding myself and the small bore by mentioning the maker to whose guns alone I allude.

THE NEW COLT ·22 REVOLVER.

MINIATURE PISTOLS FOR TARGET PRACTICE.—The Colt Company have recently shown an interest in the development of miniature pistol practice by issuing their well-known model of revolver adapted to fire the ·22 W.R.F. cartridge. Service revolver shooting is a sport which justly attracts a large number of shooters. It makes the highest demands upon personal skill, it can be indulged in without the need to don special clothes, and private practice can be obtained at a minimum of cost for an improvised range. The only obstacle in the way of revolver shooting becoming a popular sport is its very high cost. A secondary objection is the amount of noise which is necessarily associated with the firing of full power cartridges from a pistol length of barrel. The Olympic shooting competitions showed that the ·22 pistol gave practically all the valuable and enjoyable features of revolver shooting without its disadvantages, and we still hope for the time when ·22 pistol shooting will become one of the recognised side issues of miniature rifle clubs, and with its own championships and team competitions.

The accompanying illustration gives an idea of the latest Colt revolver, which has been designed to satisfy the demand for a highly accurate weapon suitable for pistol practice under miniature range conditions. The revolver has been constructed on the well-known lines of quality and finish associated with the products of the Colt factory. The revolver cylinder contains the usual six chambers adapted to fire the W. R. F. cartridge. The forward end of the chamber is coned down to correspond with the external diameter of the bullet, thereby acting as a guide for truly centering it into the barrel beyond. The length of the pistol is nearly ten and a half inches, the depth four and a quarter inches, and the weight one pound six ounces. It is fitted with a six-inch barrel, and the distance between the sights is 6·7 inches.

Experiments conducted by our contemporary the Field show that the weapon propels the bullet with a muzzle velocity of seven hundred and fifty feet per second. Bearing in mind that the bullet weights forty-six grains it will be understood that the pistol has an important auxiliary use as a weapon for self-defence. The striking energy is fifty-six foot-pounds, which represents a by no means insignificant blow. In the form, for instance, of a fifty-six-pound weight falling one foot visions arise of an unpleasant collision wherever the blow strikes. The sights are of a good pattern for target shooting, the rear sight being adjustable latterly, the foresight consisting of a removable blade.—London Arms and Explosives.

IMMUNITY OF ANIMALS TO SNAKE-BITE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In continuation of my previous letter on the Immunity of Animals to Snake-bite, I should be obliged if you would kindly add the following note:—"With regard to the Felidae, it may be worth while adding that since first writing I have found that Mervyn-Smith in 'Sport and Adventures in the Indian Jungle,' page 104, states that native tiger slayers in Chota Nagpur poison their arrows with cobra venom and set them in traps to be sprung. When wounded the tigers go off and soon die, their movements being watched by the hunters."

HAIR BALLS IN ANIMALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Referring to your request for information re the occurrence of hair balls in the stomachs of crocodiles.

A crocodile shot by me on 30th December 1909 at Kursoli, District Mainpuri, was found on examination to have in its stomach a ball of human hair about the size of a cricket ball.

It was not as dense as the hair balls found in the stomachs of ruminants, as the long coarse hair of which it was composed had not felted to the same extent.

The only tiger whose stomach I have examined contained lumps of buffalo meat with skin and hair attached but nothing in the shape of a hair ball.

I have also noticed large quantities of hair in tigers' excrement and have never found pieces of skin rejected when looking at a "kill," so am convinced that tigers usually eat their victims skin and all.

DETAILS OF THESE EXPERIMENTS CAN BE HAD UPON APPLICATION.

LOW PRICE

is one side of the question, and one of the big points that have been instrumental in the success of "Elgin" Tents. In buying "Elgin" Tents you pay nothing more than what you would for any other make—but, you buy with the knowledge that you are getting the kind that has been endorsed by impartial and competent judges as being the best.

HIGH QUALITY

is the other side, and the biggest point in the success of "Elgin" Tents ever since their inception fifty years ago. This High Quality, which has been vigorously maintained ever since the beginning, has never yet been beaten, and assures to you, as to any other purchaser of "Elgin" Tents, the greatest amount of strength and durability that it is possible for a Tent to possess.

Sport in England.

London, Friday, 28th April 1911.

NEWMARKET.

Headquarters is badly in want of rain, and on Tuesday morning it looked as if April were about to atone for shortcomings; but barring a few drops the grey clouds passed innocuous, and the heath was in hard condition. The London specials were fairly well patronised, and the attendance, which included many of the leading patrons of the national sport, was much in excess of the corresponding muster on the first day of the Craven meeting augering a big assemblage for the first of the classic races of the year. Results :—

On Wednesday the much-wished-for rain arrived, heralded by slight showers about five o'clock. A steady tropical-like downpour cleaned the face of nature, cleaned wayside foliage of dust, put the roads in good order, and freshened up the Heath, which, however, could do with a two days' drenching. Singularly enough we owed the change to the wind having gone round from south to north, and the subsequent sunshine was welcome enough, as the air had a keen edge. The change brought many more people to see the Two Thousand Guineas run for than would have been the case without it, the motor brigade being in strong force, while the Great Eastern Railway reaped the benefit of a liberal policy which enables the Metropolitan sportsman to include Newmarket in the list of home meetings. Many prominent patrons of the national sport were present, Tattersall's and the further enclosures being packed.

We had a mixed sort of afternoon, with calls on mackintoshes and umbrellas when dark, low-sailing clouds brooded overhead, but the Heath was marked by sunshine and shadow before the all-important event in which Mr. J. B. Joel had the unprecedented luck of supplying the first and third in a classic race, and afterwards all was cheerfully bright. With the programme judiciously pruned to half a dozen events, a full bill of fare was presented, as fields turned out strong. Results :—

What to do if Your Horse Pulls

THE KEY TO HIS MOUTH IS A RENSUM REIN.

Sir Gilbert East, Bart., wrote:—
"You have found the key to my excitable mare's mouth. I have now the pleasure of riding an animal chock full of life, with complete control."

You have three courses open if you own a puller. You may go on using him, to your great discomfort; you may sell him, to your loss; or you may cure him, if you know how. I am a veteran horseman with a reputation to lose, and I stake it upon the assertion that in my "Rensum" Pamphlet I will show you how, for £1 1s. (the cost of a "Rensum" Rein), you may, without severity, cure the worst puller. The Pamphlet will prove to you that by a new method you may turn a confirmed puller into a snaffle bridle hunter, or polo pony. The "Rensum" Pamphlet will also show you how you may cure a rearer, kicker, or other vicious horse.

H. S. RENSUM, The Cottage, Yardley, Worcestershire, Eng.

WRITE TO ME
That I may advise. Describe your horse's fault and I will send you the
"RENSUM" PAMPHLET free.

If you order a Rensum Rein, with it will be sent, the fully detailed instructions for making or re-making a mouth on the simple Rensum method which cannot fail.

I prefer to use the "Rensum Rein" on the easy half moon "Rensum Bit." The Rein and Bit together I will send for 4 guineas and a half.

WINCHESTER

.405 CALIBER HIGH POWER REPEATING RIFLES

The Winchester .405 caliber Model 1895 rifle is at all ranges the most powerful repeater made, as shown by the following comparison. The remaining energy at 200 yards of a bullet shot from the .405 caliber is greater than the muzzle energy of a bullet shot from the .45-70-405, which for a great many years was considered the most powerful repeater for big game hunting. The .405 caliber repeater, shooting as it does a 300 grain mushrooming bullet driven with great velocity, is particularly effective against the biggest of big game. Winchester rifles and Winchester cartridges are made for each other and are endorsed by the most successful hunters.

Yesterday Mushroom gave further proof of what a good horse he is by cantering away with the March Stakes, his nearest opponent, being Charles O'Malley, third in last year's Derby. Rain again fell heavily after sunrise and it looked odds on a cold, wet day by way of a change ; but a brisk northerly breeze kept clouds at high elevation. By comparison with Wednesday's crowd the attendance suffered as far as the rings were concerned but in the club enclosure there was little difference, as the members generally see the First Spring Meeting out in its entirety. The going is daily improving, and after Mr Hall Walker had defended his possession of The Whip with Royal Realm, who walked over for it last October, sport commenced in earnest at two o'clock. FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

Aston Villa, as a result of their victory over Manchester United at Birmingham last Saturday now possess a splendid chance of carrying off the League championship for the seventh time in the course of eighteen years. To put the case briefly, the Villa and Manchester United have 50 points apiece to their credit, but whereas the Manchester team cannot possibly get beyond 52 points, the Villa have a chance of reaching 54. It is to be noted, however, that while United's one remaining fixture is with Sunderland at Old Trafford, the two fixtures the Villa have to fulfil are both away from home—at Blackburn to-morrrow and Liverpool next Saturday. Yesterday's contest, which drew a crowd of nearly 50,000 to Aston Park, unfortunately excited too much feeling among the players. With the championship to a large extent depending upon the result, this state of things was perhaps only natural, but it is regrettable to reflect that three of the six goals came from kicks awarded for fouls and that before the end arrived one man on each side was ordered off the field by the referee. Still, the Villa deserved the victory, which should go a long way towards enabling that club to retain the honour which they carried off in such handsome fashion twelve months ago.

In addition to the fight for first honours, that to escape from reduction to the Second League is also desparately close. With Nottingham Forest's fate determined a week ago, the struggle now rests between Bury and Bristol City. Both of these clubs performed surprisingly well Saturday, the Bristol men overcoming Manchester City at Manchester and Bury holding their own at Oldham. Bristol were soon a goal to the bad ; but awarded two penalty kicks, they turned each of them to account. The position now is that each club having a home match to play, Bury lead Bristol City by a single point. If Bristol again win and Bury draw, the West countrymen survive, thanks to a slightly superior goal average.

MICHELIN

Square Tread

—much stronger than an ordinary plain cover, because it has no joins.

The common practice is to make casing and tread separately, and then stick them together, more or less securely. But the Michelin Square Tread is all one piece—casing and tread are moulded together.

Then there is another difference: The tread is strongly compressed. Consequently a cut has a tendency to close up, rather than to provide a gaping cavity for the lodgment of water and grits.

Of an open character for the past eight months, the question of promotion between the three leading clubs of the Second Division of the League still remains undecided. On Saturday all three teams won their matches and while West Bromwich Albion, with only Huddersfield Town to meet at the Hawthorns, are two points in front of the other two, who each have two games to fulfil, and possess the best chance, it cannot be said that they are certain to go up. Defeat would very likely place them in the predicament of having their position settled by goal average, in which case they would probably be worse off than Bolton, just as they are unquestionably inferior in that respect to Chelsea. Bolton Wanderers and Chelsea meet at Bolton on Wednesday and on the result of that game depends a lot. If Chelsea can win and then draw at Gainsborough the following Saturday they are certain of promotion, whatever the other clubs may do.

THE FOOTBALL CUP FINAL.

NEWCASTLE vs BRADFORD.—The first meeting of these finalists at the Crystal Palace on the 22nd instant provided a very poor display by both sides and ended in a pointless draw to the disappointment of many thousands of spectators and to the shedding of much vitriolic ink by the press critics. They met again on the 26th at Manchester when Bradford managed to win by a goal to nothing. Newcastle won the toss, and naturally elected to take advantage of the fairly strong breeze that was blowing.

A spasmodic rush by Branford was easily checked, and Rutherford got possession. He centred nicely, and the Yorkshiremen's defence was sorely taxed—to such an extent that the Newcastle men secured the first corner. The kick was well placed, and Higgins drove in smartly but the ball caught Torrance, and Robinson cleared.

Jobey, who was playing centre forward, missed a glorious opportunity through hesitation. He quite missed the ball as it came to him, and McDonald, rushing in saved the situation. The United attacked frequently, but the force of the wind often spoiled the efforts of the forwards, Veitch, at right-half, was the most prominent player and twice at long range just topped the bar. A couple of successive corners followed, Campbell doing good work and spoiling his opponents on each occasion.

Another flag kick by the United was got away nicely, and then Bradford City made their first real attack—not only so, but they scored. The goal came as the result of a lightning drive by Robinson, who was standing near the half-way line. The ball went from this player to Thompson; the latter centred to Devine, who then passed to the inside man, Spiers. Lawrence ought to have cleared, but Spiers dashed in and netted, amidst vociferous cheering on the part of the Bradford supporters. This was a distinctly creditable piece of business so far as the Yorkshiremen were concerned. It had the effect of infusing more life into the game.

The United made worthy attempts to equalise, but though Veitch frequently was instrumental in placing the vanguard in possession the Bradford defence proved well nigh invincible. Campbell kicked powerfully against a strong breeze, while Taylor and McDonald were an able pair in holding Rutherford, who was seldom seen to advantage.

Higgins once like opening Newcastle's account, but Campbell intervened and headed behind at the expense of a corner. Then Jobey sent over, and a further bombardment of the Yorkshire club's citadel was relieved.

By the concession of another corner kick a sudden burst by Bradford saw O'Rourke run between Whitson and McCracken, and Thompson, dashing in, shot hard at Lawrence but Lawrence gathered neatly and effected a welcome clearance.

Five minutes before the interval Newcastle made a great effort to get on terms, but the opposing defence held good. Willis and Wilson each tested Mellors at short range, but without result, Mellors keeping a splendid goal.

BOXING.

BOMBARDIER WELLS vs. IAN HAGUE.

Admirers of boxing were present in strong force at the National Sporting Club, Covent-garden on the 24th instant when Bombardier Wells, late of the Royal Garrison Artillery, and Ian Hague, of Mexborough, Yorkshire, met in a twenty-round contest to decide the heavy-weight championship, a title which carries with it the Earl of Lonsdale's belt. The result was a win for the ex-soldier, who in the sixth round secured a verdict by knocking out his man.

In effect the bout marked the triumph of the skilled boxer over the unscientific slogger. No more dissimilar styles could have been brought together to demonstrate the theory that, apart from flukes, skill must prevail. Both men are generously endowed with the hard muscle that makes for strength, the burly, rather untrained-looking Yorkshireman having the advantage in this respect. But he was lacking in brains, which in the case of his opponent gave him the ability to use his strength to the best advantage both in attack and defence. In his earlier fights Wells has shown a vulnerable point to be his body, and his supporters, while having the greatest confidence in his skill as a boxer, were just a little afraid that some heavy chance blow on the body might weaken him to a critical extent.

Hague, to judge from his tactics last night, tried hard from the moment the gong went to take advantage of the weakness, but he found Wells not only able to maintain a sound defence, served by his longer reach and height, but able also to keep up a worrying and persistent attack. It was in the first round that Hague hurled himself at his opponent, swung the right hard and hooked with his left, but Wells's quickness, for a heavy man, made this sort of hitting look exceedingly misjudged for distance. Half a dozen times did Wells thrust out his straight left into the face, but he was content to reserve his power.

Wells was a good leader in the second round. He got in a useful and telling right on the face, in addition to the nasty jabs with his left, and so soon as this was over Hague's face showed evidence of the incessant battering. The Yorkshireman was distinctly shaken when he went to his corner at the end of the third round. He had received with lightning speed a straight left in the usual place and a heavy right swing on the head. On coming up the next time, he tried again and again to land with one of his terrific punches, but Wells either countered skilfully or dodged out of range. In this way Hague left open his defence and the boxer was quick to jab away with his left, and then once more did he swing hard with his right on to the face. This time Hague went down, and took an eight seconds' count, and soon afterwards he sank again while the timekeeper went to six.

Nothing now but an accident could rob Wells of a victory. He kept his head well in the fifth round, in which there was a smart rally at close quarters. Hague was now swinging wildly and he made his exit in the sixth round. Twice did Wells repeat the jab with the left and the right swing. First his man took a six count, then down he went again for one of seven, and finally a left and right clean on the point finished the unequal contest. The winner deserved his victory, for he is a good, clean and clever boxer, and Lord Lonsdale was one of the first to congratulate him.

GOLF.

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SOCIETY vs. FORMBY.—Continuing their no chers tour, the Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society defeated the Formby Club at Formby by 9 matches to 8. The weather was dull and showery, and there was a strong south-westerly wind. Most of the spectators followed the match between Mr. A. C. M. Croome and Mr. H. H. Hilton. Mr. Croome soon established a lead of 4 holes but he was only 2 up at the turn. He lost the tenth and won the eleventh, but Mr. Hilton secured the next 2 holes and squared. Mr. Croome regained the lead at the fifteenth, but lost it at the seventeenth. On the home green Mr. Croome had a putt of a yard for the match. He missed it, and the round ended all even. Oxford and Cambridge secured the singles by 6 matches to 5, with 3 halved, while in the four-somes each side won 3 matches.

RACKETS.

THE 'VARSITY DOUBLES.—The doubles match at Queen's Club between the representatives of the rival Universities resulted in a very easy victory for the Light Blues, who won the rubber by four games to olve. The winners proved a good combination. Sampson, displaying variety of stroke, showed facility for finishing the ball, some of his angle strokes being executed with great skill. He had a very useful partner in Lang, who hit hard, and made few mistakes. The Oxonians, thanks to some good play by Manners, led at 11—4 in the first game, but were outplayed afterwards until the fourth game, when, Bulkeley-Johnson making a sequence of half-a-dozen, they got to 8—9. It is the first win secured by Cambridge in doubles since 1906, and they now lead Oxford by one match, having won 28 matches to the Dark Blues' 27.

Cambridge (F. A. Sampson, Rugby and Trinity and A. H. Lang. Harrow and Trinity, beat Oxford (Hon'ble, J. N. Manners, Eton and Balliol, and V. T. Bulkeley-Johnson, Eton and Balliol) by 4 games to love and 60 aces to 27. Scores:—15—12, 15—5, 15—2, 15—8.

First Game.—Sampson won the spin and scored an ace. Manners put on four, his partner failed, and Sampson made the score 4 all. Lang had a futile essay, and Manners with a sequence of seven aces (four by service) went to 11—4. Bulkeley-Johnson and Sampson failed, but seven by Lang caused the score to be called "12 all." The Oxonian only scored a single in their next two hands, their opponents winning the game with a couple each.

Second Game.—Lang added two, Manners failed, his partner scored a single, three by Sampson and four by Lang taking Cambridge to 9—1. After a single to Manners and three to his partner, Sampson scored two, and Lang in the next innings reached "game" with four.

Third Game.—Continuing his hand, Lang went to 8—love, his full sequence thus amounting to twelve. Following an ace by each of the Oxonians, Sampson made a couple, his partner going to "game all"—2" with four, Sampson put out both his opponents with fine strokes, and then gained the necessary ace.

Fourth Game.—Sampson continued his innings until he had reached 9—love, six of his full sequence of ten being by service. Manners scored two and his partner followed with half a dozen. This took Oxford to 8—9, but they did not score again, while Sampson put on four and Lang went out with two.

THE 'VARSITY SINGLES.—The singles match was played at the Queen's Club, West Kensington. The Cambridge representative, F. A. Sampson (Rugby and Trinity) lost the first game, but afterwards his superiority was never in doubt and in the end he defeated the Hon'ble J. N. Manners (Eton and Balliol, by 3 games to 1, with scores of 14—17, 18—15, 15—5, 15—8.

The form at the outset was moderate on both hands and each player frequently lost possession through erratic hitting. Aided by two runs of four, Sampson led at 12—6, but Manners with a sequence of four drew level at "14 all" and ran out after the game had been "set three." Continuing his hand the Oxonian added five, and so made his full sequence, twelve. A run of eight gave Sampson the lead and eventually he reached 13—12. Manners equalised and the game was "set five." Sampson scored an ace and after his opponent had failed the Light Blue won the game. The third and fourth games went very much Sampson's way, his hitting in the court once he had found his form, being hard and clear. The sequence ruled low, the best amounting to five by the winner and four by the Oxonian.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS CHAMPIONSHIP.—The final at Queen's Club, West Kensington, provided an excellent match all seven games being keenly contested. Rugby, who were represented by C. F. B. Simpson and W. H. Clarke, beat Winchester, for whom L. de O. Tollemache and D. F. McConnell played, with scores of 14—17, 4—15, 15—4, 18—15, 15—12, 10—15, 15—9.

Each side scored steadily until "11—9" was called in favour of Winchester, and then the Rugby pair were both put out without scoring, these being the first unproductive hands. Later they drew level at "14 all," but lost the game after it had been "set three." The Wykhamists had matters much their own way in the second game. They ran to "7 love," and after small and barren hands Tollemache went from 11—4 to "game ball," and McConnell made the winning ace. "Four all" was called in the third game, and then the Rugby pair went out in their two hands. After small winnings at the beginning of the fourth game Clarke made a sequence of six, which was followed by Tollemache with seven and this McConnell supplemented with five. Simpson equalised, at "13 all," and with an additional four after the game was "set five" made his full sequence nine. The Winchester boys both failed, and two to McConnell and a single to Simpson secured Rugby the game. Tollemache, with a run of eight gave Winchester an advantage early in the fifth game, but the play afterwards went in favour of Rugby, and Clarke eventually reached "game" with five. Rugby led at 3—3 in the sixth game, but the Wykhamist in their succeeding hands added nine. Simpson scored two, but Clarke failed, and with five aces Tollemache made the scores "three games all." Hands were small and unproductive in the concluding game, the best being three each to Clarke and Tollemache.

The last named was put out at 9—10, and after his partner as second hand had failed, the Rugby boys won the game and the rubber.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The fourteenth Calcutta Football League season opened on Saturday when there were four matches played, and of those, three ended in draws, the Garrison Artillery being the only team to annex two points. For the want of rain the different club grounds with the exception of that of the Calcutta F. C. are in very hard condition and consequently the football on Saturday was not all that could be desired. The grounds were so very hard that the ball bounded to a great height every time it touched the ground and with the strong wind it was impossible for the players to have any control over the leather. However, what lacked in science was made up in keenness and the football, generally speaking, was interesting.

The game between Dalhousie and Customs—winners and runners-up respectively of last season's League—claimed most attention, and there was a large attendance of spectators on the Trades Club ground to witness the match. The game, which was a tremendously fast one, ended in a draw of one goal each, and on the play there was nothing to choose between the teams. Owing to the absence of Fitzpatrick, the Customs' custodian, Anderson was tried in goal, but happily for the Sivesiders the shooting of the Dalhousie forwards was erratic, and Anderson had not much to do. Indeed the shooting on both sides was poor, the half dozen shots that were tried at goal going wide. Dalhousie were also not at full strength, Hurlston standing out owing to an injured knee, but Anderson a youngster who was given a trial, was an able substitute. He is fast, tricky, shoots well, and, above all, is a very plucky player and should in a couple of years turn out one of the finest left wingers one could wish to see. But on Saturday Burnett was far and away the best forward on the field, and but for him, Dalhousie would have been a beaten side. Galbraith is very selfish, and on one occasion when Lyons looked certain of scoring, the former robbed his man of the ball, and tried to score himself, but no sooner had he touched the ball than the referee, promptly ruled him "off side." Of the halves Montgomery played best—the trio on both sides worked hard, but Montgomery was the only one who did not balloon his passes; he did his best to keep the ball as low as possible under the conditions which prevailed. Quayle was the best back on the field, but Davey and McCready kicked well. Hyland, McCready's partner, is not a strong kick, but he tackles beautifully. The scoring was done in the second half, Galbraith netting for the Customs, while Burnett equalised.

With the exception of Hugh Sherman, who is taking a rest, Calcutta were at full strength against the Y.M.C.A., but had to content themselves with a draw, and the Y.M.C.A. can be said to have opened the season with good prospects of transferring the "wooden spoon" and I fancy the Measurers will get it. The game was played on the Y.M.C.A. ground. Calcutta did all the attacking in the opening stages, but it was the home team who drew first blood; Reynolds, the 7th B.G.A. man made the most of an opening which presented itself and beat Dods from close quarters. It was a lucky goal, but the point that Calcutta scored in the second half was also a lucky item, as Behrend cleared from Jenkins and the ball striking Mc'aren bounced back into the net, giving the Y.M.C.A. goalkeeper no chance at saving. The game was a very fast one but combination was lacking, while the ball, for the greater portion, was kept in the air. Leadon and Rossetti on either wing were very speedy, but the former had no control over the ball. Calcutta played much below their form and the forwards lost some good opportunities of scoring owing to wild shooting. The Rifle Brigade and Middlesex match on the Calcutta ground produced the best football, but too much passing by the Fort team's forwards spoiled some good openings of scoring. The Middlesex can congratulate themselves on having drawn with the Rifles as this was the first time the Dum-Dum team were playing together. Sergeant Pigott is an exceptionally fine goal-keeper, and in Private Wootten they have a clever centre-half; Wall and Bateman are the pick of the forwards, and I expect the Middlesex to render a good account of themselves in the League.

The R.G.A. beat the Rangers on the latter's ground by two to nil, a third goal being disallowed. The game was all with the gunners, and but for Mole, who, it will be recollected, played for St. Xavier's two seasons back, the Artillery would have won by a larger score. Spiers, who plays outside left for the R.G.A., came out with the last draft; he is in a class by himself, and the best outside left playing in the League. Ward, the centre half, also a new man, played soundly. Gillett and Spiers were responsible for with the scoring.

The Customs and R. G. A., match on Tuesday on the former's ground resulted in an win for the Artillery by three goals to nil. The first and third goals were recorded from penalty kicks, for infringements of the rules within the prohibited area, Holleran and Spiers netting these, but the second goal early in the second half by Easton was the result of a beautiful run and shot. The R. G. A played the better football and had by far the best of the exchanges. Williamson, Anderson and Galbraith would do better if they paid more attention to the ball instead of the man. The game I am sorry to say was not played in a sporting spirit. Both teams were pulled up for fouls, Galbraith received marching orders and Williamson was warned.

Boxing.

ROYAL WARWICKS' TOURNAMENT.

THE two nights' boxing provided by the Royal Warwicks at Colaba last week was interestedly watched by good "houses" and some very whole-hearted fighting was seen. Some of the events were not solely for men of the Regiment and Makins and Kennard of the North Lancs fairly easily won the Welters and Heavies. Shapton of the Dorsets also won a contest against the local representative, Verner, the set to being a capital one and very close Shapton having a longer reach favoured out-fighting and managing to keep Verner off won cleverly, the men staying the ten rounds well.

That the Military are not the only ones who appreciate something in the pugilistic line is evident, and it is a pity we cannot have more of such well-organised affairs.

Every satisfaction was given by the judges, and Captain Leahy, who himself is a well-known exponent of the game, proved a very able Referee, dodging about the ring in the most energetic and keen manner.

Following are the full details. Results:—

NOVICE FEATHERS.—Lce.-Corpl. Warner beat Pte. Baylis; Dr. Conroy beat Holtom; Pte. Porter beat Pte. Taplin, K. O. Pte. Woodcroft beat Lce.-Corpl. Warner; Dr. Conroy beat Pte. Porter. Final—Conroy beat Woodcroft on points.

OPEN WELTERS.—Forbes beat Harding, K. O., both H. M. S. Highflyer; Pte. Poole (Warwicks), K. O., Ellis (Highflyer); Pte. Hudson (North Lancs) beat Pte. Newman (R. W. L. I.); Pte. Witham (North Lancs) beat Pte. Poole (Warwicks); Stoker Duffy lost Forbes on foul (both Highflyer); Pte. Makins (North Lancs) beat Steel (Highflyer); Hudson beat Poole and Makins beat Forbes. Final—Hudson gave in during the first round, Makins won.

NOVICE WELTERS.—Pte. Atkins beat Sergt. Ryan; Pte. Radford beat Pte. Gregory. Final—Atkins K. O. Radford early in the first round.

OPEN HEAVIES.—Pte. Warner beat Batchelor (both Warwicks); Pte. Kennard (North Lancs) beat Gr. Debenham (R. G. A.), K. O., Lce.-Corpl. Smith (Lincolns) withdrew, Warner

N. S. U. MOTOR-CYCLES AND CARS.

It is because N. S. U. Motor-cycles and cars have acquired a splendid reputation for reliability and endurance in other countries that we are confident of their ability to give the greatest satisfaction to users in India. The design of both motor-cycles and cars is of the most advanced character, and the material and workmanship are of the highest order. Both productions abound in good points. For instance, notice the front and rear springing of the motor-cycle. Here is a system which ensures the utmost possible comfort when riding over rough uneven roads. We feel sure you would be thoroughly satisfied with an N. S. U. Motor-cycle or car. May we send you full particulars?

Motoring and Aviation.

28th April 1911.

I UNDERSTAND that the Russian Minister of War is preparing a Bill, which, if passed, compels all owners of private cars in Russia to place their vehicles at the disposal of the military authorities in times of war.

A STATUE is shortly to be erected in Paris in memory of the late Leon Serpollet, whom, it will perhaps be remembered, was one of the pioneers of the steam car.

ON 30th April the Auto Club of Algiers will hold its annual speed trials on the Route des Quatre-Chemins at Boufarik, near Algiers. Categories will be provided for touring and racing cars. I learn that the racing cars will be divided into sections on a cylinder bore basis.

WHAT might have resulted in a serious accident, but which fortunately only resulted in a "shake-up," happened to Dr. Bloomfield, of Pontefract, the other day. He was starting the engine of his car, when he realised too late that he had left it "in gear." The car started, but the Doctor had the presence of mind to drop down flat on his face. The car passed over him, dragging him some distance along the ground, and bruising him in many places. I learn that he is now progressing favourably, although he was unconscious for two hours. Motorists, one and all, should be wary of falling into this error, and should see that their engines are "out of gear."

AS every motorist knows or should know, a leaky petrol tank should never be soldered, until it is completely empty. Through failing to observe this point a repairer in Philadelphia, U. S. A., now lies in a critical condition at the hospital there, owing to the tank exploding with tremendous force.

KING GEORGE is following the example set by his father in maintaining an ample stud of motor-cars, and his latest addition—a 57 h. p. six cylinder Daimler—represents the most modern developments in automobile engineering. The car is not much unlike those sold to the ordinary public, the carriage being by Messrs. Hooper and Sons, and carries full equipment of accessories.

THE beautiful summer weather we have experienced during this Easter was indeed very favourable to all motorists. The roads were mostly very dry and firm, but the usual nuisances of punctures and dust, etc., were very prominent. Every holiday seems to bring with it a crop of motoring accidents, but each year the number is decreasing. On Good Friday an Accrington motor cyclist came an ugly cropper near Sawley; another motor cyclist crashed down Chingford mount, a very steep incline on the Epping road, being killed instantly.

MR. S. F. EDGE recently suggested that a petition should be addressed to His Majesty in his Coronation year to grant an amnesty to all those who have had their licenses endorsed under the terms of the Motor-Car Act. That, apparently, did not find any serious response, but the chauffeur has taken the idea up, and a petition is being prepared for presentation to the King, praying for a remission of all liabilities incurred by paid drivers under the statute since its enactment.

MESSRS. ALMAGRAM, LIMITED, of 374, Euston Road, London, and various provincial depôts, have been brought to the fore once again for their ability in re-treading motor tyres. They have received lately an unsolicited testimonial stating that, after having sent a tyre to them for re-treading purposes, it eventually covered a distance of about 4,000 miles, which works out at 6-1 every thousand miles. All enthusiasts will do well to write to these people for a price list, which will be gladly sent.

THIS is the year of the census. Already the people have been numbered, and now the authorities of the City of London are having a count of the vehicular traffic that passes through their streets every day, with a view to securing a comparison between the various forms that make use of the thoroughfare. Now, the Board of Trade have asked the London County Council to arrange for a census of street traffic during the summer at 110 points within and without the county, and intimate that they are prepared to defray the cost. There are, roughly, fifty ways by which the city can be entered by wheeled traffic, and a test of the officials for the work was held the other day, when it was discovered that 228 motor-cabs and motor-cars passed a certain point on the Thames Embankment within half-an-hour.

WHY, the question has at once appeared to me, has Brooklands found the popularity that leads to prosperity? There were a great crowd at the fine holiday programme arranged for Easter Monday. The fastest speed of the day was done by the 29 h. p. Imperia, which won the fourth 100. m. p. h. handicap at 85 m. p. h. Unhappily to the sensations of the day were added mishaps and accidents that recalled the hazards taken by those who indulge in motor racing. A rider in one of the two motor-cycle races was thrown and his machine smashed; but the outstanding accident was that which nearly proved fatal. The race for cars of speeds exceeding 70 h. p were over; but Mr. C. Wilkinson, on Mr. A. T. Craig's 27·3 h. p. Benz who had finished alongside of the 71·79 h. p., failed to slow down and swerve to the left, but dashed on and leapt into the air at the top of the banking. I, like a good many more spectators, saw no more, but from Major Lindsay Lloyd who was quickly on the scene I gather that the car had crossed a chasm 40ft. wide, precipitated itself into some branches of a tree, and finally ploughing a deep hole in the soil and rolling over an inert mass of metal. Mr. Wilkinson's condition is still serious.

MESSRS. MERRYWEATHER AND SONS, the well-known fire-appliance makers of Long Acre, recently gave a demonstration at Bromley Fire Station of a new petrol turnable fire ladder which they have built for the Bombay Municipal Fire Brigade. The machine comprises an 80 feet to 90 feet telescopic ladder, carried on a 50 h. p. chassis. On the level, the machine can attain a speed of 20 to 30 miles per hour.

SKID trouble has always been a great drawback to the most ardent motorists. A method for preventing this has been brought out by the Gyroscopic Non-Skids, Limited., 112, Grosvenor Road, S. W. A demonstration was given some few days ago which I was lucky enough to witness. We were all upon the roof of a high building which had been treated with a slippery coat of soft soap and soft mud. The car was then run over this area and the brakes applied suddenly, but the vehicle did not deviate from its course at all. I trust this anti-skidding device will be able to prove its value when called upon.

THE Motor-Car Supply Company, Limited, 110, 111, Piccadilly, are always offering for immediate delivery a great number of cars, which are being offered at exceptionally low prices. Just drop them a card before making a definite purchase elsewhere. You won't be disappointed.

SIR CHARLES FRISWELL, who has just returned from India, has brought with him a fine order for the supply of motor-cars for the Coronation Durbar. The number is said to be 100, which from the records of the "Standard" here, will soon prove their worth to the Government of India.

AVIATION NOTES.

A HEIGHT record has been established at Magdeburg, by a German aviator named Grade, who made a flight on one of his monoplanes and attained an altitude of 4,616 feet. This is the record for a German aviator only.

DR DOUGLAS MAWSON has decided to take an aeroplane with him on the Australian Antarctic expedition which he hopes to start on before the end of this year.

IT is with regret that I learn that aviation has added another death to its already heavy list. Captain Tarron, who was one of the ablest of French military aviators was killed on Tuesday last while flying from Orleans to Villecourlay. He was trying a new invention of his own for steadying aeroplanes in high winds and for adjusting the balance of the wings. He hoped that this contrivance would greatly reduce the risk of accidents to aviators. He was about 500 feet from the aerodrome at Villecourlay when the machine was seen to swerve, lose equilibrium, and fall. It was smashed to atoms, and the poor Captain was killed outright. His body was picked up 15 yards from the wrecked machine, and it was found that his skull was fractured, and many of his limbs broken.

THE well-known aviator, Mr. Grahame White has just made a fine flight from Hendon to Bourneville, near Birmingham a distance of about 100 miles. This flight was witnessed by thousands of the employees of Messrs. Cadbury, the cocoa manufacturers.—Mr. E. Manville has presented £500 to the Royal Aero Club for competition among British aviators. The conditions imposed are:—That the machine shall be all —British. The net load—aviator and passage—shall be less than 20 stone. The longest aggregate flight in the competition wins the prize, but nothing under fifteen minutes" duration will count, and flights can only be made on nine specified week days, the first of which was Easter Monday, the last being 4th October. The flights will be awarded marks in agreement with a scale, which gives a progressive advantage to the longer flights. Thus a fifteen minute flight secures thirty-six, and a sixty minutes obtains seventy-five.

A GUSTY wind prevented the accomplishment of many of the flights which several airmen had intended to make in the London district on Monday. The conditions were, perhaps worse at Brooklands, where only one airman, Mr. Pixton, made a serious effort to gain the £30 prize offered for the best aggregate time. Mr. Pixton, on Mr. A. V. Roe's biplane, was in the air for 1 hr. 27 mins. 32 secs. One other attempt, the flight lasting less than a quarter of an hour, did not count. Mr. G. Hamel attacked the height record and attained a height of 6,300 feet when he had to decend owing to choppy wind, and thus failed to beat Mr. Drexel's who is at present the holder.

THE new air battalion appeared for the first time on the Army List issued on the 12th instant. With headquarters at South Farnborough the establishment of officers is:—In command, Brevet Major Sir A. Bannerman, Royal Engineers, Acting Adjutant, Captain Broke Smith, Royal Engineers; attached, Captain Fulton, Royal Field Artillery, Captain Burke, Royal Irish Regiment, Captain Maitland, Essex Regiment, and Captain Garden, Royal Engineers.

THE Coronation festivities will include an aviation display on the Downs by the British and Colonial Aeroplane Company. Towards the £7,000 required for the festivities the Lord Mayor, the Imperial Tobacco Company, and Messrs. J. S. Fry and Sons have given 250 guineas each.

THE Aero Club of France have wisely decided—doubtless in view of recent "aerobus" passenger flights, that for any such record to be recognised in future, each passenger must weigh at least 8st. 7lb. This is a good regulation so far as it goes, but from the practical standpoint of the average weight of a man or woman another stone and a half would be better.

AN important event took place last Saturday, when the U. S. battleship Mississippi won the distinction of being the first vessel to engage in regular shooting practice at a flying target, the object in question being a biplane-shaped box kite held captive at the height of 800 feet. Three volleys from Springfield rifles were fired by a squad of the bluejackets from the quarter decks, and even so the only damage done, was the parting of the cord by the final volley, for the kite, when picked up, was still unperforated by a single bullet, a result which seems to promise a fair margin in actual flight, even at so low an altitude as 800 feet.

ABOUT half past five on the Wednesday before Easter, a monoplane alighted at Issy-les-Moulineaux. That in itself is certainly a most banal occurrence, and it was only when it became known that this aeroplane had been in London but four hours previously that the landing was robbed of its banality.

The man who alighted from the fuselage, vainly endeavouring with his greasy fingers to rub the castor oil out of his eyes, was Pierre Prier, who, as he related in simple language, had left Hendon at 1-37 o'clock to land at the very gates of Paris 3 hours 56 minutes later, having flown the 230 miles without a stop and made the journey between the two capitals in two hours less time than it takes by the fastest train and steamboat.

FEW books of recent years can have excited so much advance interest as Mr Grahame-White's forthcoming book on the Aeroplane which Mr. Werner Laurie is just publishing, the work being in its third thousand before publication.

Mr. Grahame-White has aimed to produce the standard book on the subject and treats fully on all matters connected with aeroplanes and their history. The following is a selection of a few things dealt with in this volume. The work of the pioneers —The application of the petrol motor. First Flights and present day feats. Records in duration, distance, high flying, speed, cross country, and over seas—Analysis and explanations of chief aeroplane fatalities—A list of Aviators of the world with notes of their flight—Building and Construction—the law of the air —commercial and military possibilities, etc. The book will be called "The Aeroplane—Past, Present and Future" and will have 96 plates of illustrations.

Mr. Grahame-White was the winner of the Gordon-Bennett International Aviation Cup last year and he has been assisted in the writing of this book by the well-known aviation expert, Mr. Harry Harper.

Yachting.

MODEL YACHT DESIGNING.

THE International Yacht Racing Association Rules, under which racing yachts of the present day are almost universally built, afford the amateur great scope in designing model yachts of the "Metre" class.

The following dimensions of yachts are effected by these rules:—

(a)	The length of the load water line ...	L. W. L.
(b)	The greatest breadth (Beam)... ...	B.
(c)	Girth measurement. Half the greatest girth measured from water line to water line at a point usually about ·55 of the length of the L. W. L. from its forward end (Chain girth)	¼ G.
(d)	The difference between the above measurement and the measurement at the same place along the "skin" multiplied by three (Skin girth)	3d.
(e)	The difference between twice the height of the freeboard at the forward end of the water line and the girth at the same point (Bow tax)...	O (bow).
(f)	One-fifth of a similar measurement at the after end of the water line (Stern tax)...	⅕ O'(stern)

The above figures are added together and from their total the average Freeboard "F" is then deducted.

The average Freeboard "F" is made up as follows:—

Freeboard at forward end of L. W. L.+freeboard at the stern end+twice the freeboard at "G" station. The whole divided by 4. The result is then deducted in the case of a 12-metre model (on a scale of 1 inch to 1 foot) from the number of inches in two metres; 78·8—and the balance represents the one-third of the square root of the sail area (S. A.) allowed.

If the dimensions of the design have been well considered the yacht should have a sufficient amount of sail—but very apparently trifling differences in dimensions affect the resulting sail area considerably. Every dimension is taxed except freeboard which is encouraged.

The measurement rule is expressed by the following formula:—
$L+B+\frac{1}{4}G+3d+O\text{ (bow)}+\frac{1}{2}O\text{ (stern)}-F+\frac{1}{2}\sqrt{S.A.}$

The dimensions of the accompanying sketch of a 12-metre model yacht are as follows. They help to explain the above formula.

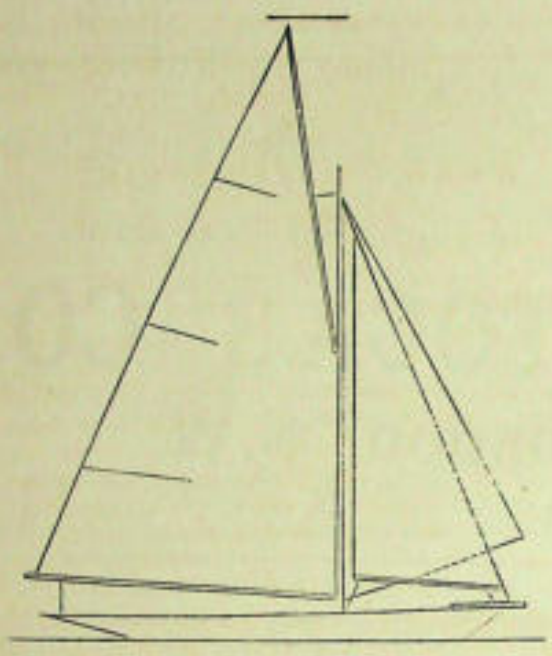
L	...	39"·5	Total	...	66"·48	2 metres...	78·8
B	...	11·5	−F	...	4·06	—— ...	62·42
¼G	...	9·5
3d	...	2·4	Balance	...	62·42	$\frac{1}{2}\sqrt{S.A.}$ = 16·38
O Bow	...	2·5
½O Stern	...	1·08				S.A. = 2414"
Total	...	66·48

The object of the I. Y.R A. rules is to compel the yacht builder to produce a thoroughly good substantial type of sea boat with a fair amount of displacement—it prohibits the building of light racing machines of the freak type. Yet metre class yachts, though all built under the same rule, may vary considerably in form. Some designers prefer greater beam and less draught and vice versa and yachts suitable for all weathers and all kinds of waters may be built under the rule—but it must be remembered in designing that any great departure from the normal in any dimension affects the S. A. and may have to be compensated for by alterations in other dimensions, affecting the speed or stability of the boat. For instance, if a yacht is given excessive length of L. W. L. other dimensions have to be reduced to prevent the sail allowance being cut down too low.

If her beam is reduced too much—and this means also a reduction of girth—she may not be stiff enough or have enough stability or power to carry the sail allowed her under the rules.

The same may happen if the girth which includes draught is unduly reduced.

The "3d" is a measurement which plays an important part in the design of a yacht.



SKETCH OF SAIL PLAN.

The stepping of the mast. A well-balanced boat with sails that are also properly balanced should be able to keep her course with her tiller fixed amid ships when close hauled or even when reaching. The proper position of the mast step is therefore most important.

The mast is generally stepped at a point about one-third of the length of the water line from its forward end, but in most models it requires to be slightly shifted forward or aft to suit various suits of sails or rigs.

A large main sail with small head sail requires the mast to be stepped rather forward—if not the boat is aft to "luff up" into the wind. It is better to have the main driving power in the main sail. The further forward the mast can be stepped without causing the boat to "fall off" to leeward the better for model yacht sailing, in which the great object is to keep the sails "full" and the boat moving. If the mast is stepped too far back an abnormally large foresail will have to be used to prevent the boat luffing up and her speed will suffer. The head sail should be used more as a steering than as a propelling sail.

In models it is usual to have a sliding mast stephatch which can be kept in any required position by means of pins or thumbscrews the hatch is generally made of nickelled brass or mahogany. There is generally a row of holes in a piece of metal or hard wood fixed to the keelson to hold the butt of the mast, which is generally not square (to prevent its turning round).

As to rig—it is better to have the sail plan in as few pieces as possible. A gunter lug main sail and fore sail usually give the best results and are pretty generally adopted for metre class models, though the sloop rig is favoured by some. The latter has the advantage of quick reduction of sail by taking off the topsail if one is carried. But the topsail and mainsail together are not so good as a gunter lugsail of the same area especially in windward work, as the topsail, however well cut and set can never draw the wind as well as the top of the gunter lug sail—it is apt to sag to leeward.

Reverting to the subject of designing the 12-metre (or one metre) is the generally accepted size for metre model racing yachts. It is handy for designing as the scale is $\frac{1}{7}$ (an inch to a foot) and the boat, though heavier than "Raters" of the same length, is not too heavy to handle.

To get speed out of a sailing model it is necessary that she should have certain qualities which are essential to speed—one of these is length on water line. The L. W. L. which is taxed need not be excessive—the great desideratum is actual length when heeled over. A model yacht should be broad enough to carry her sail comfortably. I do not think more than 12-inch beam is needed in a 12-metre model of the ordinary type. It may vary from 11 to 12 inches, though some designs exceed the latter figure. Excessive beam is not only taxed as regards itself, but increases the girth tax, ¼G. As regards draught it should be as great as possible so that the ballast may be in the best position. The draught at the stern may be an inch or so greater than at the G station, but there is a rule that the girth from deck to deck round the keel at any point aft of the G station may not exceed the same measurement at that station by more than 3 per cent. and this of course limits the stern draught.

Steering is an important matter in metre models and various arrangements for working the tiller are in use. The simplest of these is a movable lead weight which can be fixed where required to vary the leverage by means of a thumb-screw on the tail end of the tiller behind the rudder, which causes the helm to go up when the boat heels over and prevents her luffing. A check line, with elastic, regulated by a "bowsey" exercises a tension on the tiller, the movements of which can also be checked by means of pins in a rack.

In some boats the main sheet is fastened to the tail of the tiller which is checked by a tension or pins as described above and in others double main sheets work the tiller from eyes or blocks on the port and starboard sides. There are other more or less complicated arrangements in use, but the simpler they are the better.

The sailing of models, especially metre models, is not a simple matter. It takes a long time to tune up one of these boats and find out her peculiarities. The behaviour of a boat varies with every variation in the strength of the wind—a steady breeze gives little trouble, but shifts and eddies are most exasperating. The "tuning up" of a model gives one something to do before it is satisfactorily completed.

In building a model, whether a "cut out" built "bread and butter" fashion, or carved built, the hull should be as light as possible so that the lead ballast may form the largest possible proportion of her displacement or weights. Sail carrying power depends almost entirely on the ballast. In a model of say 30lbs displacement the lead should weigh about 21 or 22 lbs allowing about 1½lb. for the weight of spars, sails, etc.

B.

By making the "d" very small the tax may be very greatly reduced, but the centre of buoyancy becomes too low and the displacement is unduly increased, which necessitates an increase of ballast and loss of speed in light breezes.

It is better to have a fair amount of "d" which increases stability and keeps the displacement within a reasonable figure.

The bow tax, which is really a tax on the overhang, is a heavy one, but it is better not to evade it on account of its advantages.

A "full" bow with a properly designed overhand gives power, as the water line lengthens when the boat is heeled over and fullness at the bows keeps her head up and prevents her diving especially when running fast.

The stern tax is a light one, but it does not do to take too great an advantage of it. The run aft should be fine or clean and two ends of the boat should be well balanced.

If the stern is too full it is apt to "drag" through the water and make steering difficult. With proper lines the hull should pass through the water at maximum speed with very little disturbance.

The bilge should be fairly full and rounded—a "powerful" bilge gives "stiffness" to the boat.

Of course the water line lengthens at the stern as well as at the bow when a boat is heeled over in sailing if her design is all right—and length on water line is essential to speed.

High freeboard is encouraged, and as it adds to the power of a boat and allows of a great increase in sail area, it is as well to make it as high as possible.

Draught depends on girth—the greater the girth at "G" station the greater the draught; and as it is imperatively necessary to carry the lead ballast as low as possible to obtain the best results, especially in a model which has no shifting ballast in the shape of a crew, it is as well to have the greatest draught possible.

The length and shape of the keel, which is mostly composed of lead, is important. In a real yacht which has a steersman a short keel is of advantage as, it makes a boat handy in steering and going about; but in a model a long keel is necessary to keep her on her proper course. The forefoot should not therefore be cut away too much and the stern post should not have too much of a rake. The length of the keel should not be made under two-thirds of the L. W. L. A very short keel makes it extremely difficult to keep a model on a course with varying strength of wind, and she is likely to "wobble" and luff up or fall off with a short keel.

A Lady writes:—
"For twenty-five years I have used Lemco always, either as an aid to good and economical cooking, or as an invalid food. I am personally grateful to it. Many a dish has been made palatable and nourishing with the aid of an artfully administered bit of Lemco, and in sickness it is invaluable."

There is more "beef" in LEMCO than in any other beef essence sold—a 2-oz. jar contains the goodness of about 5 lbs. of butcher's meat. That is why LEMCO is so splendid in the kitchen, so invaluable in the sick room. LEMCO is simply pure fresh beef highly concentrated.

A NEW CHINESE TAKIN.

We hear much nowadays in regard to the threatened extermination of the big game fauna of the world, but comparatively little about the fact that new species or new races continue to turn up from time to time in regions off the beaten track. As a matter of fact, these new discoveries in out-of-the-way districts are of the highest importance, not only from their intrinsic interest, but from the evidence they afford that big game animals of sorts will remain in some parts of the world, at any rate, for very many years to come. It is not meant by this that efforts for the preservation of the big game fauna of the world should for one moment be relaxed, but merely to indicate that the complete extermination of such animals is a much more remote contingency than some writers would apparently have us believe.

The latest addition to the big game list is a new and splendid kind of takin from the Tsin-lin range of Southern Shen-si in Central China, obtained by a collector, whose expenses are generously defrayed by the Duke of Bedford and whose collections go to swell the vast series of skins and skeletons in the Natural History branch of the British Museum. Hitherto most of the specimens obtained by the aforesaid collector have been mice and rats, shrewmice, and such-like small creatures; and however interesting species of this nature may be to the professional zoologist, they certainly do not appeal to the general public and still less to the big game hunter. It is therefore in every way satisfactory that the Duke's generosity should have been rewarded by the discovery of such a strikingly beautiful animal as the new Tsin-lin takin.

Till a few years ago takin were some of the rarest of all big game animals in collections; even the British Museum possessing only a few skins and skulls of the typical Mishmi species originally described by Brian Hodgson as Budorcas taxicolor. This, it will be remembered, is a chocolate-brown species, with black head, legs and under-parts, and a large tawny-coloured area on the back, longitudinally divided by a black spinal stripe.

A few years ago the collection was increased by specimens of the smaller but similarly coloured race discovered by Mr. Claude White in Bhutan; while about the same time skins were received of the very different Sze-chuen species, some of these being the gift of the late Mr. J. W. Brooke. This species, which was previously known by the specimens in the Paris Museum obtained years ago by the Chinese missionary Pere David and a skin or two in Mr. Rothschild's collection at Tring, is much more strikingly coloured than the typical Mishmi species; the tawny area of the latter having expanded so as to include practically the whole of the upper parts with the exception of the face and ears, while its colour has changed to golden yellow more or less mingled with reddish brown, although in some individuals the yellow is replaced by grey.

The culmination of the colour-change initiated by the Sze-chuen takin is displayed in new species from South Shen-si, in which the whole of the dark areas have disappeared, so that the entire coat is a brilliant golden yellow. As the fur is considerably longer and much more silky than in the Mishmi species, the skin is really magnificent, recalling that of a polar bear more than anything else, although, of course, much more distinctly yellow. A rug of Tsin-lin takin fur would indeed be simply magnificent; and we are by no means sure that we have not seen such in past years among consignments of skins from China.

For the present, however, skins of the new takin —which has been appropriately named in honour of His Grace of Bedford—are far too precious to be used for any such purpose, and should find permanent homes in European and American Museums. Doubtless some enterprising hunter will ere long be on the track of the new animal; and whoever does so first should bear in mind that it is necessary before all things to ascertain the extent of country inhabited by the species, and likewise its comparative rarity or abundance. When this has been done, it will be possible to estimate the extent to which shooting may be legitimately carried on. It will also be interesting to ascertain whether the creature inhabits bamboo and rhododendron jungle similar to that to which its Sze-chuen cousin is partial, or whether it frequents country of a different nature.

In case anyone might suggest that the golden takin is a mere "sport," it may be mentioned that the collector sent to London three complete skins, together with the associated skulls and horns—two of cows and one of a bull. Nor is this all, for some time ago an American collector obtained the skins of two calves from the same locality, whose fur is likewise of the distinctive golden yellow. These were in due course referred to by a well-known trans-Atlantic naturalist, who will doubtless be exceedingly mad when he finds out his failure to detect that they represented a previously unknown type.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

"A Health Unto His Majesty!" We desire to join with all loyal subjects of Our Gracious Sovereign King George V. in the congratulations upon the first Royal victory of the present reign upon the Turf. H. M. the King's Pintadean, a two-year-old, has just won the Fitzwilliam Stakes at Doncaster. It was in 1886 that His late Majesty King Edward VII., then Prince of Wales, won his first race, the winner being a filly named Counterpane who won a small race at Sandown. The same year the Royal colours were again successful and Lady Peggy won a small event at the Newmarket Houghton Meeting. The nett value of these two successes was the modest sum of £296. The fortunes of the Royal stable, dated from the purchase of Perdita II. who was bought for £900 by John Porter for H. R. H. in 1887. When we recall the fact that it was the union of Perdita II., herself a daughter of Hampton, with St. Simon, both tracing back direct to Blacklock, that gave us those giants of the turf Florizel II., Persimmon and Diamond Jubilee, we may well say that the purchase of Perdita II. was the turning point in the late King's turf career of success. Both Persimmon and Diamond Jubilee won the Derby and His late Majesty scored a further success in that race with Minoru whom he leased from Colonel Hall Walker, but never unfortunately owned. Three Derbies besides countless other successes (Florizel II.'s Manchester Cup, Gold Vase, St. James' Palace Stakes, Goodwood Cup and Jockey Club Cup and the victory of Ambush II. in the Liverpool Grand National of 1900) is a record that any owner might envy and we can but hope that this win of H. M. King George's is the small beginning which presages a score of equal brilliance with that of His Majesty's illustrious sire.

The only thing against it is that there is not at the moment a really good horse in the Royal Stables and the fighting line wants reinforcing considerably. There is a mare Nadejda at the Sandringham Stud who is by St. Simon out of Perdita II. and therefore an own sister to the three great horses who have done so much to bring the Royal colours prominently to the front, and who if sent to a St. Simon horse—a sire like Desmond for instance or John o'Gaunt who gets the St. Simon blood through La Flèche his dam and has Isonomy (Stockwell) and Lord Clifden (Newminster) on the other side—might produce horses of equal eminence as the three who were so closely inbred to Blacklock; but there is nothing of any great present value. In next year's Derby His Majesty has a colt by Florizel II. out of Loch Doon (Blair Athol) and another by the same sire out of Guinea Hen (possibly this recent winner Pintadean but unnamed at the time of entry) and His Majesty's other entries are colt by Thrush out of Laodamia, colt by Volodyovski out of Runaway Match, and a colt by Lord Bobs out of Mirabelle.

Our Ankle Boots have a world-wide reputation and we specialize in all requirements for the Horse.

We are now close on to the big event of the whole year in the turf world, and as the result of the Derby will arrive to us too late on Wednesday next to make comment possible we must avail ourselves of our present and only opportunity of summarising any final information that is available concerning the prospects of the great Epsom contest. So far as the size of the field goes, it will probably number about twelve to fifteen runners, not more, though in such an open year, when a reputed non-stayer is favourite and there is nothing particularly outstanding about the remainder, many horses may be tempted to come out and try their fortune that would otherwise and in different circumstances have been kept at home. The field as it at present promises is represented as follows, those "starred" being horses that have been ticketted doubtful runners:—

1½	to	1 Sunstar.
100	to	12 King William.
*10	to	1 Lord Burgoyne.
*10	to	1 Shetland.
10	to	1 Stedfast.
12	to	1 Cellini.
12	to	1 Phryxus.
14	to	1 Adam Bede.
16	to	1 Sobieski.
*16	to	1 Palatin.
16	to	1 Beaurepaire.
16	to	1 Lycaon.
*20	to	1 Wrinkler.
20	to	1 Eton Boy.
20	to	1 Royal Tender.
28	to	1 Feramorz.
33	to	1 Bird of March colt.
40	to	1 Adamite.
40	to	1 Maaz.

The two "French" colts, Lord Burgoyne and Shetland, have both been beaten at Longchamps and even before that M. Edmond Blanc is now reported to have said that he considered that they were being unduly boomed and that stable money had nothing whatever to do with the positions that they had occupied in the betting list, and that he had not personally given them any decided support for the Epsom race. Other people go even further than this and say that the prices quoted are "bookmakers' prices" pure and simple and have been supplied to a too-gullible daily press with only the one object, namely, to rig the market. It certainly looks now as though all these florid accounts of the short prices obtainable on the continent about these two were existent more in the imagination of the chroniclers than in actual fact, and the colour lent to this direct accusation of what some people might call by an ugly name, makes one look somewhat askance at other quotations that have been sent out to the world at large. M. Edmond Blanc's Lord Burgoyne was engaged in the Prix des Cars and Shetland in the Prix Nouilles both at Longchamps (Paris) on the 30th ultimo, and both have failed to realise their owner's hopes, and Shetland at any rate will not now be sent across to England, and it is said that Lord Burgoyne may also be marked doubtful. Both these horses have at one time and another been returned favourites for the Derby, and in view of what has now come to light the less said about such methods the better! The Continental papers and the Continental correspondents of English papers have apparently been amongst those who have been misled by these fictitious prices, for they have been guilty of unduly booming these two horses. Lord Burgoyne has only one two-year-old performance of any merit, his win in the Omnium de Deux Ans at Maisons-Lafitte, and Shetland did nothing at all as a two-year-old. It may well now be asked, "How much money is required to go on a horse to make him favourite for the Epsom Derby?" Apparently some people find the market extremely sensitive, and we might almost say unduly so! However, the public once bitten are not always twice shy, for this sort of thing goes on year in year out wherever racing takes place. Wrinkler was some time ago said to be a non-starter at Epsom, as not only was he "making a noise," but it was found that he could not get much more than five furlongs, and therefore his retention as a "probable" for Epsom is not to be thought of. A good many of these outsiders might also, we have no doubt, be discarded, such as Bird of March colt, Adamite, Feramorz, Eton Boy, Maaz and Royal Tender (the Tender and True colt by Persimmon), as their inclusion in the betting lists may be also due to "sensitiveness," for there is no other warrant for it. Maaz has, more or less recently, run third to Sydmonton and St. Nat, the Bird of March colt won the Tudor Plate (1 mile 60 yards) at Sandown, beating Holy Smoke and Porphyrio in a close finish, and his victory possibly enticed some one to have a tenner on him at 33 to 1 for the Derby! The "sensitiveness," however, is all in the favour of the bookmaker and is a splendid chance for increasing the field money; consequently we get these long lists of quotations, which by the light of recent disclosures do not always represent "money." The Tender and True colt, now called Royal Tender, is owned by Captain F. Forester, and his only achievement is a victory last year in the 5 furlong Champagne Stakes at the Bibury Club, when he beat Corfu and Sunshot, Hippolyte, Chelys and Winterbourne, and when he ran third in the Richmond Stakes (6 furlongs) at Goodwood to Pietri and Romeo—and a bad third at that. We have no record of his having done anything since then, and if he has been backed at the price at which he is returned it must be upon some performance, the report of which will not reach us until after Derby has been run.

So much for the list of "probables" as foreshadowed by the betting returns. The principal features of the betting this week are the steady support of Sunstar, who is practically on the same mark as he was before, his last week's price being 5 to 4 and he is now 6 to 4, and the positions of King William and Pietri, who were last week at 7 to 1 and 10 to 1, respectively, and are now at 100 to 12, or a bit longer odds than 8 to 1. The support of Pietri is the most outstanding feature of the returns as wired to India, and after his very poor display in the Guineas and the almost unanimous condemnation which followed, his advance in the betting is difficult to understand. At Newmarket they said he showed a lot of temper and that he never tried a yard. There is also the undoubted fact of his wind trouble, but these things notwithstanding he has been steadily advancing in the betting, though on his Newmarket running it is impossible to give him a chance. A number of people, however, seem to think that he is the horse for Epsom and that he might prove himself a bookmaker's friend. Then we have King William and Stedfast. The former has not been out in public this year and since his recent slight accident when he is reported to have jarred himself in his work, he has been a bit easier and has gone out from 7 to 1 to 9 to 1 and now has slightly hardened again to 100 to 12. Through Stedfast, who was not anything like as well as he is capable of being made when he ran in the Two Thousand second to Sunstar, Mr. Lambton can obtain a very good line as to how the other one is doing. There is not a great deal of difference between the prices of Lord Derby's pair in the betting, and according to many good judges Stedfast is the one they prefer. King William was said by a Newmarket turf correspondent to be the inferior of Stedfast, but that was written early in May and this is now the 25th and the stable companion is still the better favourite of the pair. Cellini's running in the Two Thousand is not understood at Newmarket and they say that his performance was a stone at least under his true form. He was on the home gallops a long way in front of Knockfeerna, who finished third in the One Thousand and it is said that had the Ladies' Race been run before instead of after the Two Thousand, Cellini would have started a very hot favourite. He was—like Stedfast—very slow in commencing in the Guineas, but the race has, it is said, sharpened him up considerably and they said he was capable of being made a very great deal better. Phryxus is said to be the best of the Manton three-year-olds and that if they back him it will mean that he has made as good progress as King William with whom he dead-heated in the Dewhurst Plate last season. He has not been out this season and consequently at the time of going to press it is not possible to say a great deal about him one way or the other. But it has to be borne in mind that they do not make many mistakes in the establishment he comes from and that if Alec Taylor tells "Mr. Fairie" to back him it will be worth watching. Adam Bede is the American colt; Sobieski has not been heard of since his two-year-old days which were not brilliant; and Palatin, another "Frenchman," is a doubtful starter. This brings us to the next one, Beaurepaire, who is owned by Mr. W. Raphael, the owner of Louviers who ran second in Minoru's Derby. Beaurepaire is not very fashionably bred (Fariman—Politesse) and before the Newmarket Stakes they cast some doubts upon his capacity to stay, but as a two-year-old, and before he split a pastern, he was very favourably noticed and now that he has come back again to the turf they say that he has lost none of his action and is a very fine stamp of colt. A correspondent has written out from home to a contemporary, saying that Beaurepaire might easily prove himself to be the best three-year-old of the year and that he was as good as the best as a two-year-old till he met with the accident. He had then being doing some exceptionally good work at Newmarket and upon the top of that came his second to Sunstar on the Newmarket Stakes. Horses that have won and run well in that race have almost invariably run forward in the classics and there are plenty of examples such, as for instance, Donovan, Memoir, Mimi, Isinglass, Ladas, Galtee More, Diamond Jubilee, all winners of the Newmarket Stakes and Derby and Oaks winners; William the Third, a Newmarket Stakes winner, ran second in the Derby. Cicero and Louviers are two more instances, the one a subsequent Derby winner and the other the horse that ran such a great race against Minoru and, as many people still are convinced, beat him. Last of all there is the present favourite and after all that has been written and said concerning his lack of staying ancestors in the immediate past, there is the fact that further back he possesses relatives each and all of whom have been amongst some of the best stayers the world has ever known. After the manner in which he has won both his last two engagements he would be a bold man who would say that the horse cannot repeat this performance at Epsom on Wednesday next. He is described as a horse light of form, a mass of well-put-together machinery and with hardly any fault to be found with his make or conformation. They say he has doubtful joints, but he has never been lame and they have now done all the work with him that is necessary to get him ready to run in the Derby, and if he has come through so far satisfactorily there is no reason why he should not see it out—rounded joints or no! It has been truly said that there is nothing so deceptive as breeding and in this case it would seem as though Sunstar had thrown back to one or other of his great staying ancestors. The non-stayer as we know will stop all to nothing the moment he gets out beyond his distance, and the Epsom gradients are a trial upon the stamina of even the staunchest, but so far as human capacity to judge goes the Derby of 1911 looks to be a very good thing indeed for this un-staying descendant of Amphion's!

A TELEGRAM to the Statesman on Thursday last announced the arrival in Bangalore of a new horse for Mr. A. A. Apcar—Koonowla by Cyllene out of Handmaid, a chestnut four-year-old and a maiden. Mr. Apcar got him to fill up a gap in the string, as he had nothing qualified to go for races for horses that have never won Rs. 1,000 and so forth. Sophocles has been a disappointment and Sequent by having won Rs. 5,000 has now passed out of the B. Team of the Apcar string—so that something fresh was wanted to put in his place. The "second line" of Mr. Apcar's stable will now be composed of Sophocles, Royal Scotland, The Cockatoo, and this new one Koonowla and ought to be strong enough to hold its ground against all-comers. We have not heard whether Mr. Apcar intends to strengthen his first line, but probably he considers that with Mayfowl and Lawn Sand he has two champions good enough to take on anything so far purchased by other owners to oppose them. Recall will probably prove to be the hardest nut to crack as nothing more has been heard of the rumoured purchase of Christmas Daisy and one of the home correspondents would have got on to it by this if there had been anything in it. This new one Koonowla is beautifully bred as through Cyllene (Bonavista—Arcadia) he gets Bend 'Or by Doncaster by Stockwell, Bonavista's dam Vista being by Macaroni and Arcadia (Cyllene's dam) is by Isonomy—Distant Shore; Isonomy by Sterling—Isola Bella by Stockwell and Distant Shore is by Hermit (Newminster—Seclusion) out of Land's End by Trumpeter out of Faraway. Handmaid, Koonowla's dam, is by Hampton out of Barmaid Barmaid by Galliard out of Loch Garry by Blair Athol. Koonowla never ran as a three-year-old and his record to date is as follows:—Unplaced, Maiden Two-Year-Old Race, 4 furlongs, Newmarket, to Murgis, Posthorn and Entire; third, Packington Plate, 5 furlongs, Birmingham, 8st. 5lb., to Noramac, 8st. 2lb., and Dalnacraig, 9st. 2lb., (badly beaten); unplaced, Savile Plate, 5 furlongs, Nottingham, 8st. 5lb., to Icy Cup, 8st. 13lb., Flail, 9st. 2lb., and Rosey Posey, 8st. 2lb.; unplaced, Reach Selling Plate, 5 furlongs, 140 yards, Newmarket, 8st. 9lb., to Celluloid, 8st. 11lb., Miss Ellen, 8st. 6lb., and Little Blackey, 8st. 6lb.; third, Rottingdean Plate, 5 furlongs, 88 yards, Brighton, 8st. 12lb., to the Nepenthe gelding, 8st. 6lb., and Icy Cup, 8st. 12lb.; unplaced, Newes Nursery Handicap, 5 furlongs, Lewes, 7st., to Salts of Sorrow gelding, 7st. 5lb., Witchfinder, 7st. 5lb., and Tathwell Lassie colt, 8st. 12lb.; unplaced, Tower Nursery Handicap, 6 furlongs, Folkestone, 6st. 3lb., to Corporal Trim, 6st. 8lb., Rock Lane, 6st. 11lb., and Sorbet, 6st. 6lb.

AT the same time as this one arrived Recall also came and also another one for Mr. A. N. Das, a four-year-old bay mare named Jemima by Jeddah out of Victoria May, but she has never won, though she has been once or twice placed in moderate company. Her distance is about five furlongs and she is probably a useful sort of the Monsoon and second-class type.

AMONGST cold weather racing visitors to Calcutta will be Mr. R. S. Sievier of Sceptre and Winning Post fame and he has expressed his intention of bringing out two or three horses to run at the Calcutta Meetings and then sell before he leaves for home again. Mr. Sievier is arriving in Calcutta about the middle of November, but presumably his horses will come out before that.

MR. KENNETH ROBERTSON we hear proposes to come down to Calcutta for the Monsoon Meetings and bring a few horses with him. Mr. Robertson has recently been racing in Karachi and has had a fair amount of success.

THE programmes of the first two Tollygunge Club Meetings have now been issued. The cards are very much the same as in previous years with the exception that there are more races for horses to be ridden by G. R's. who have not won races under any recognised rules.

OF horses and ponies likely to be here for the Monsoon meetings the following list includes almost all those at present known to be offering: Abet, Alarm Clock, Bandy Leg., Best China, Bird of Fredom, Blix, Bijli, Bonita II., Chas, Coin II., The Comet, Devil's Limit, Downland, Dunsinane, Edwards, Foudrette, Foy, Fadgie, First Bell, Farthing Bun, Frank, Isabela, Jaffa Girl, Guide, Glenora, Levant, Light Metal, Loch Lily, Lady Ratcliffe, May Kenley, Maisonette, Marconi, Master John, Meprise, Murmur, Queen of Hearts, Scotch Girl, Tod, Tommy Daw, Ulla, Victor, Wisehawk, Lah, Little Meg, Mimicry, Pilot, Northwood, Proprietor, Levi, Scarboro, Reba, Sacristan, Lah, Mandeville II., Lady Thirza, Miranda, Manujess, Swashbuckler, Vanity, Desmond, Loyalty, To Kalon, Allah Akbar, Moira, Wivenhoe, Minnie, Sweet Genevieve, Suffragette, Craigendorrie, Wal, Up Guards and anything else Mr. Scott may bring down. This list, of course, is capable of amplification later on, but these horses and ponies above enumerated can all be counted upon with more or less certainty. The list is not any bigger than that which we had last season, but we can rely with more or less certainty upon several more coming from outside. Norton is sure to send or bring down some horses and Mr Robertson and probably Thomas from Bangalore with some of "Mr. Leek's" may find it worth his while to come up at any rate for the first six days.

THE purchase of two horses, Dumella and Langton, by Mr. Byramjee for Mr. R. R. S. is announced. Dumella is by Persimmon out of Princess May and

C. in C.'s Team.—General Sir D. Haig, Captain Barge, Captain Herbert, Captain Nicholas.

Headquarters Staff.—Captain Baird, Captain Newnham, Captain Cavendish, Captain Battine.

King's Dragoon Guards.—Major Wickham, Captain Rasbotham, Mr. Wienholt.

Major Fraser's Team.—Major Fraser, Captain Forester, Captain Muir, Captain Becher.

Annandale Gymkhana "Bashi Bazouks".—Major Loring, Captain Pollok, Captain Lucas, Major Fagan.

The death is announced of that fine old cricketer, Mr. Edward Grace. The elder brother of the great "W. G.," Edward Mills Grace was born at Downend, near Bristol, 28th November 1841. He played his first match when ten years old in 1851 and in that year took 22 wickets and scored 256 runs. From 1851 to 1899 he took 10,006 wickets and scored 72,482 runs, his highest batting aggregate was in 1883 when he scored 3,166 in all matches: his best bowling year in 1864 when he took 370 wickets. He was the first amateur to go to Australia, being a member of George Parr's team in 1864 (in this tour he scored 269 runs in thirteen innings). He figured with W. G. and G. F. Grace in the first England vs. Australia match in England, at the Oval, on 6th, 7th and 8th September 1880, scoring 36. After having held office from the foundation of the Gloucester County Club Dr. E. M. Grace resigned the position of secretary in 1909. His retirement marked the end of an epoch. The Graces made Gloucestershire, but no member of the family is now associated with the Club; a testimonial fund on behalf of the famous cricket resulted in a cheque for about £600 being presented to him on the 7th of September 1909.

The following are the results of important cricket matches played in England during the past week:—

Surrey beat Oxford University at Oxford by 141 runs.

Notts beat Leicestershire at Nottingham by ten wickets.

Middlesex defeated M.C.C. at Lord's by eight wickest.

Oxford University beat Kent by 7 wickets.

Yorkshire defeated Somersetshire at Taunton by 272 runs.

Worcestershire defeated Surrey at Bourneville by two wickets.

Lancashire defeated Leicestershire at Leicester by 13 runs.

The match between Sussex and Notts at Brighton was drawn, Sussex having led on first innings; score three points, and Notts one point, in accordance with the recent new rules adopted by the M.C.C.

Northamptonshire beat Gloucestershire at Northampton by ten wickets.

E. Alletson, the Notts cricketer, playing against Sussex last week end, scored 189. He made 34 and 22 in two overs and scored 8 sixes and 21 fours.

The following teams have entered for the Mysore Birthday Polo Tournament to be played during the coming race week:—"A" and "B" teams of the 14th Hussars, Oxfordshire Light Infantry, Cameron Highlanders, 20th Deccan Horse, the Poona Horse and Mysore Silledar Regiment.

There is to be a Sports section at the Festival of Empire Exhibition at the Crystal Palace this summer—a replica of the pavilion which was erected at the International Sports Exhibition now being set up at the Crystal Palace—and this will contain some of the finest trophies in this country, besides a number of relics and weapons of noted old sportsmen.

The routes by which birds pass to and from one country to another in spring and autumn are regularly followed, we are told by those who study these matters. One great thoroughfare, of course, is in the spring from south to north, and conversely in the autumn from north to south; another is south-east to north-west; a third south-west to north-west; a third south-west to north-east, with the return into the same starting points.

The great southern wintering region is south of the north of Africa and extends to far beyond the equator, and from it, under the breeding instinct in spring, birds hurry away to disperse themselves over the wide spreading palæarctic or northern lands, which extend as far, in the case of some species, as a long way within the Arctic Circle. South of the equator during the northern winter the migrants fly towards the South Pole to breed. The seasonal range limit of some of the northern breeding birds is enormous, several extending from Patagonia to Greenland.

All migratory birds have not the same range; some fly longer, some shorter distances. The best known of all the birds of passage, the swallow, has one of the longest ranges—from 7,000 to 10,000 miles. In this extended range are also included such birds as the gray plover, the knot, the pectoral and curlew sandpipers and the Asiatic golden plover.

Much attention is being paid in Australia to the breeding of sheep dogs and cattle dogs. At the recent sheep breeders' show held in Sydney, one of the most interesting exhibits was of sheep dogs, which with remarkable efficiency, performed the work of driving the sheep steadily into the yards without harassing them.

The Department of Agriculture of New South Wales has recently issued a bulletin for farmers on the subject, "Cattle dogs and sheep dogs," in which occur some interesting observations. It states that in New South Wales the order of merit as regards sheep dogs are as follows: Barbs and kelpies first; smooth-haired collies, second; mongrels and crosses, third; rough collies, fourth. Barbs and kelpies are placed together as they are both equally good though two distinct breeds. The barbs originated in Scotland, whence they were imported in about 1875. The kelpie is also supposed to have originated in Scotland from a cross of fox and smooth collie, made by gypsies for poaching purposes. Both of these breeds of dogs have, it is supposed, while in Australia, got a cross of dingo through them.

It is stated that for wild sheep in big paddocks, especially with merinos, a very wide-working silent dog is required, with great speed and stamina, lightly built and if possible, a little on the small order. For quieter sheep in smaller paddocks a dog which works fairly close and barks a little is the best. For yard work, penning up and trucking, a thick-set lively dog, with any amount of voice is essential, one that will run over the sheep's backs and force them about with plenty of barking and snapping. To be a good worker either side and the tail of a mob, or both sides if the drover minds the tail; should be able, if the drover has to go ahead to open gates or slip rails, to bring the mob along after him; to keep a mob rounded up anywhere if the drover wishes to leave them for any purposes; or to draft.

The variety of cattle dogs recommended in the order of their merit are as follows:—The merlin or blue heeler, erroneously known as the Smithfield, first; the Welsh heeler or merle, erroneously known as the German collie, second; the red bobtail, often called by drovers Timmins' breed, third; the black bobtail, apparently the old English cur dog, fourth; mongrels and crosses, generally the bull, fox-terrier, or dingo, crossed with the collie, fifth.

The merlin, or blue heeler, was imported about forty years ago from Wales, but being unsuitable on account of barking too much, was crossed with the dingo of Australia, which never barks, and is now considered the best breed of dogs for this class of work in Australia, as it answers all the requirements of being steady, game, faithful, enduring and intelligent. It is suggested that sheep dogs should not be used in working cattle, as cattle dogs must be prepared to bite, though they must not necessarily be rough in their treatment of cattle.

Our Oatacamund correspondent writes:—The Horse Show was held on Friday and Saturday, 12th and 13th May, on the polo ground in Hobart Park.

After all the recent rain the ground was very soft and in parts quite waterlogged, most unsuited for proper display of horses' paces. However all the classes were well filled with the exception of the pony jumping and this event had to be postponed to the second day when the weather and going were more favourable. There were a number of very classy animals shown and competition was keen. Foremost amongst these were Major Duff's handsome hunter Beau, H. E. the Governor's mare Guinevere and Mr. Mocatta's pony Lady Wrangle, while Jabberwock very easily secured all the jumping honours.

His Excellency's Staff were "At Home," and very welcome was their hospitality.

A parade of prize winners and the distribution of prizes by Lady Lawley brought the proceedings to a close. Awards were published in our last issue.

Our Bangalore Correspondent writes:—I have received a copy of the First Entrances for the Mysore Races, which closed on the 15th instant, and I must at once say, that taken all round, they are most gratifying and far and away the best we have had for years past, especially in the waler class. The Arab and country-bred events have not evidently been made attractive enough for owners as was the case in the Bangalore programme and they have not drawn many entries. For the first day's races, the Macintire Plate (6 furlongs) has attracted fourteen entries against nine last year, there are nineteen entries for the Karangi Plate, (5 furlongs) against only nine in the previous year, while for the Pony Plate, another 5 furlongs sprint, a baker's dozen have been entered. Four ponies have been entered for the Arab Plate race of a mile and a quarter and five for the 5 furlong Arab pony race so that it is possible these races might be cancelled and substituted; but there is every hope of their being added to before the second entries close. The Grant Plate for country-bred horses has not been catered for to any large extent, only seven names figuring on the list.

For the Cup Day we ought to have very good sport indeed. There are no less than twenty-one entries for H. H. the Maharaja's Cup race, which includes a very classy lot and among them several Viceroy's Cup candidates; the other coveted race of the meeting, the Birthday Cup, has attracted eighteen entries, and the Stable Cup, sixteen. The runs provided for Arabs and country-breds on the second day, have none of them, patronised as liberally as they were in 1910; there are five and six entries respectively for the two Arab races and eight for the country-breds.

Another good day's racing should be brought off on the third day, when five out of the six events will be for starters that have not won at the Meeting. The largest entries are for the Palace Cup (twenty-four), the Mysore Plate (twenty-one) and the Royal Purse, (thirteen). The Arabs and country-breds are about the same as previously indicated.

The entries show that the Meeting is well supported by Calcutta and Northern India owners, and it also has all the local support it is possible to get. Mr. A. A. Apcar, who is one of the new Stewards for the Meeting, ought to carry off something with Neith, Five Crown, Lawn Sand and Sophocles. Other outside owners whose colours will be carried at Mysore are Messrs. A. N. Das, Roy Chowdhury, Dada, Steele, A. S. Oomer, Thakur Sripal Singh, Monmohan, "G. K," etc.

Trainers are at work every morning now on the sand track and there must be over a hundred animals out exercising daily. Fast work is done twice a week. Mr. Donne, the Secretary has left for Mysore, where he is making the necessary arrangements on the race course for the usual Camp for owners, trainers and jockeys, who require accommodation, but strange to say no thought is given to Press representatives, who have to shift the best way they can.

"Jimmy" Watson returned from Bombay very recently, where he landed Koonowla (by Cyllene) for Mr. Apcar which was sent out from England by the steamer Mysia. He has brought him on here and will probably run it him Calcutta next December. Oscar Dignam has got out a goodish mare, Jemima, for Mr. Chowdhury, by the same vessel and Last Call was also disembarked from the same boat for Mr. Mathuradass Goculdass. These latter have not arrived here as yet.

A Gymkhana Race Meeting will be held on Saturday next the 27th instant.

From the Melbourne Leader.—Mr. Sam Griffiths, who is at present back at Caulfield enjoying a brief holiday from his engagement as handicapper to the Calcutta Turf Club, stated in an interview recently that racing last season in India was better than ever before. Matters are more disciplined there than they used to be. Now disqualifications are imposed, which are regarded as serious for the owners. If it be an army officer who is concerned on receiving his disqualification he puts in his papers to the army office, and also resigns from all clubs and similar social organisations of club life in India, which means the end of all his social existence. If a man leaves the club he is practically ostracised. Australians would be surprised to see the Calcutta course and grand stand. Before the buildings were erected, plans of Flemington and Randwick were secured, and the plans were modelled on their lines with considerable improvements. The buildings, which are of brick and steel, cost £60,000. Nowhere in the world is the public better catered for than in the Calcutta grand stand. Australian horses do well there generally over long distances, while English horses are better over sprints.

Our London Sporting epitome to-day gives details of the finals in the Billiards and Amateur Single Rackets Championships and an account of the race between Barry and Albany for the English Sculling Championship.

As will be read the latter was a great race to Hammersmith, and thereafter very one-sided, for Barry, with experience and a very level head, allowed Albany, who was the very acme of power and strength, to row himself out. Such luck as existed, although it in no sense governed the result, was against the challenger, for Barry took the Surrey Station, which meant a great deal for the first two miles with the wind blowing dead off the shore. The water was distinctly "popply," which was again in the more experienced waterman's favour, and it was evident that no record would be possible. Moreover, from the moment that he tried to go past Albany just below Chiswick, exactly as he had done in his race with Towns, Barry had won it instantly, and was merely keeping up a good paddle for the rest of the course.

While Barry, of course, received the usual fulsome flattery and congratulation upon his victory which unquestionably delighted him, Albany was quite neglected, which is entirely the way of the world. The poor fellow, in meeting a better man, naturally seemed outclassed, but he rowed a dead game race; in fact, was completely prostrated and literally lifted into the police boat for attention. No greater contrast as between winner and loser was ever presented, for Barry was cheered all the way back to Putney, and there the recipient of a tremendous ovation, while Albany, absolutely unnoticed, was taken ashore at Barnes. The loser can be best described as a wonderfully good and a promising novice, but he could hardly expect to jump immediately into championship honours. He is a capable sculler, a good powerful man, and an unquestioned champion in embryo, so that he should not be discouraged by his defeat, for there is no other man in England, and, it is questioned, even abroad, who could beat Barry when at his best and upon the tidal waters of the Thames, to which he has been accustomed throughout his life.

FISHING.

In perfect weather, Syd. Kemp, son of ex-Champion Peter Kemp, on 22nd April, was defeated by Harry Pearce, the holder of the title, for the Sculling Championship of Australia and Stakes of £200. The race was rowed over the full championship course on the Paramatta, a distance of 3 miles 330 yards. A slight tide was under the scullers, with hardly a ripple on the water.

Kemp looked the picture of health; he tipped the beam at 11-7. Pearce's weight was 12-12, the lightest he has been since he defeated Jack Mitchell.

The challenger won the choice of position, and chose the northern station. After two false starts by the champion the men broke away, Pearce striking at the rate of 40 strokes to the minute. Kemp was a little slower off the mark. Harry was best away, and gained about half a stroke on his opponent. Pearce, dipping hard and fast, gained clear water in the first half-minute's rowing, and at 300 yards led by one and a half lengths. Kemp was rowing powerfully, but with no great dash. However, shortly after this Kemp made the best showing of his long stern chase. He pluckily held on, and almost overlapped the champion at Uhr's Point (quarter mile). Time—1min. 50secs. But in the next quarter of a mile Pearce settled down, and, rowing well within himself, gained another one and a half lengths. After the first half-mile the race was never in jeopardy. His lighter opponent, however, came at him pluckily, but without avail. At the mile Pearce sprinted, and had four lengths' clear water. Time—6mins 11secs. Both men's rate had eased down now to about 32, and in the next mile Pearce rowed as low as 22.

In the journey from Blaxland's to Putney (1½ miles) Kemp momentarily made up some leeway. The champion, however, was not taking any chances, and with a beautiful sprint swept round Putney Point in 9mins. 37secs., with his opponent some 15 seconds astern. At Tennyson (2 miles) Pearce, who had eased a little, now led by twelve lengths. The last mile had nothing at all sensational in it. At Cabarita Pearce's time was 15mins. 23secs., as against Kemp's 15mins. 55secs. At Gladesville (2½ miles) he led by 30secs. At One Man Wharf by 28secs. and at Searl's Monument the champion crossed the line with 25secs. in his favour. The time for the course was 20mins. 45secs. Pearce won easily by twenty lengths.

Kemp was badly distressed at the finish. He rowed a far better man, but stuck gamely to a hard stern chase. Pearce, on the other hand, sculled in his usual form, with great pace and neatness.

Pearce having vanquished Ben Thoroughgood, Mitchell, Day, Hagney, Webb and Syd. Kemp has at length found backing for a match against Dick Arnst for the World's championship and stakes of £500. Ever since Arnst's return to Sydney after beating Ernest Barry on the Zambesi River (South Africa), Australia's champion has been itching for a go at the New Zealander. Although Harry Pearce had decisively beaten the best Australian and New Zealand scullers, backing was not forthcoming to pit him against Champion Arnst, but now Pearce has found the backing and the public will see a grand race about mid-July. It was immediately after the Kemp-Pearce match that Fogwell, who had just beaten Whelch in New Zealand, cabled that he would meet Pearce for £300 aside and the championship of Australia, but the Middle Harbour man was after bigger game.

As soon as the news reached Arnst, who was on his way across from New Zealand, he is reported to have repeated his offer, by wireless, to meet Pearce for the world's championship. Arnst has been in indifferent health, but at the paying over of the stakes in the Pearce-Kemp match, Pearce issued his defi., and a day or so later backed it up by the necessary deposit of £100. Arnst stated that he would get into immediate communication with his New Zealand friends, and would cover the deposit in a few days, when the articles would be signed.

The race will be over the Parramatta River, and although when the Australian mail left articles had not been signed, the men are bound to meet without doubt.

G. E. Larner came out of retirement for the purpose of competing at the Olympic Games, and how he beat all rivals will be remembered by many. E. J. Webb succeeded him as English champion, but now that the ex-soldier has been well beaten by Goulding of Canada, Larner has been tempted out of retirement again. It is a real sporting action on his part, and everyone must admire his spirit. He did a good performance by winning the seven miles championship on Saturday in 52mins. 8secs., time which has only been beaten once in the race, namely, last year, when Webb did 51mins. 37secs. It was cold and windy on Saturday, so that Larner's performance was really better than one would suppose from the time. It must be confessed that Larner did not stride out in quite his old form, which indeed could hardly be expected seeing that he is now in the veteran class, and it is doubtful if he will be a match for Goulding of Canada at the next Olympia.

Perseverance meets with reward sometimes, an instance of this being illustrated by the victory of W. Scott in the 10 miles championship at Stamford Bridge, on Saturday. He was second to A. E. Wood in 1909, and again occupied a like position behind Sergeant O'Neil last year. Besides this he "ran up" to A. Hill in the 4 miles championship last July and also to Hibbins in the National Cross Country Championship last March. Hibbins was a competitor on Saturday, but dropped out after sticking to Scott for 2½ miles. The little Broughton Harrier led all the way, and finished his journey in 52mins. 26⅕secs. Considering the adverse circumstances, this was a big performance and Scott may yet get his name on the record books.

Belgian oarsmen have visited Henley Regatta several times and at last an English crew is about to return the visit. Thanks greatly to P. M. Thornton, M.P., a good sportsman and a fine runner in his day, the Jesus College (Cambridge) crew proposes to meet the pick of Belgium in a race at the Ghent Regatta in a few weeks. The Englishmen may not have much chance (though Jesus is a good crew), but their determination to tackle the famous Belgians on their own course will be appreciated, and they will get a warm welcome in Belgium.

It is being asked in some of the London papers, with apparent horror, whether it is a fact that Angmering Church was restored 50 years ago out of a certain sportsman's winnings on the Turf as if it were a terrible calamity. As a fact, many of our churches and hospitals, charities, etc., are supported, in the main, by patrons of the Turf, for there are no people so generous as racegoers. But because a man happens to support racing his money is in no sense tarnished, as if so then I am afraid very huge sums have been only too gladly accepted for the most important and delicate ecclesiastical functions. There is no better present-day case than that of Sir Ernest Cassel, whose huge grants to hospitals embrace £200,000 for the foundation of a consumptive sanatorium, and no one has objected; in fact, the late King Edward opened it. The late Mr. Geo. Herring, who left three-quarters of a million to charities—almost the whole to the King Edward Hospital Fund—it is common knowledge grounded his fortune in the early stages by successful Turf speculation. I have not heard of any of the different charities which benefited so munificently during his life-time, or since his death, objecting to take the money; in fact, quite the contrary.

Mr. E. H. D. Sewell was always a hard hitter, and in his neat little volume entitled "Cricket Points," he "reaches the ropes" every time.

Cricket is already rich in literature, but most of the works on the game are merely historical, or are given to singing the glories of the sport in prose or in poetry. Now, there is no poetry about Mr. Sewell's work, and he deals solely with modern cricket, and, if only in this respect, "Cricket Points" is quite unique.

By way of introduction, Mr. Sewell says:—

"In the existing somewhat unsound condition of batting and bowling the country through, no apology is necessary for the appearance of another volume, however small, on Cricket.

"The author feels that if careful perusal of the contents of the following pages causes one young bowler to give up trying to swerve until he has learned to bowl a length, or brings back a single batsman from the sinful ways of the two-eyed stance and its emasculating effect on off-side play to the righteousness of batting methods in antefocal-plane times, some good will have been achieved.

"Off-side fours are becoming as rare in big cricket as strawberries in December. Spurious imitations masquerading as bowlers go on, get rid of four or five overs of swerving rubbish, fit only for the scrap heap of cricket, and then retire to mid-off or mid-on until the 200 goes up—their work done! Shades of Alfred Shaw!

"Off the field the busybodies among the spectators and the enormous reading cricket public interfere with the game by writing stupid criticisms on selection committees and players, cloaking their abuse in the guise of a dissertation on spectators' rights."

In six brightly written and extremely interesting chapters Mr. Sewell deals with fielding, bowling, batting, captaincy, ground details, some fallacies, and the future of the game.

Trafalgar, the Australian champion who annexed the A. J. C. Plate in the record time of 5mins. 22⅘secs. recently, is the fourth representative of w. f. a. form to subscribe his name to the list of winners of that event on more than one occasion. Other dual winners were La Carabine and Chester; but Carabine holds the honour of having won it in three successive years, viz., 1889, 1890 and 1891. W. H. Smith, who steered Trafalgar this year, was previously successful in this race on Merloolas in 1899, when the value of the stake to the winner was only £296, as compared to the 1,104sovs. of this year's event.

The seventeenth annual general meeting of the Indian Football Association was held on Monday evening at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Mr. M. Remfry, a vice-president of the I. F. A. occupying the chair. All the leading European and Indian Clubs of the City were represented at the meeting.

The annual report, which was taken as read, was unanimously adopted after some preliminary objections regarding eligibility of clubs etc., had been settled.

The accounts are in a satisfactory condition; showing a credit balance of Rs. 3,433-8-1 available for the season 1911.

The following were then duly elected:—President:—His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. Council:—Messrs. T. C. Crawford, H. L. Riley, K. C. Ghose, H. E. Medlycott, C. C. Bose, C. H. Cody, Rev. Fr. Power, J. Stevens, T. C. J. Davis, M. N. Ganguli, S. N. Bose and K. C. Mitter. The Council will later on elect the Joint Honorary Secretaries and Honorary Treasurer.

The usual vote of thanks to the chair brought the meeting to a close.

The third round of the Foursome tournament in connection with the Calcutta Golf Club was concluded on Sunday last and resulted as follows:—

Drimmie and Dent beat Cobbold and Anderson by 3 and 2.

Cooper and Innes Ker beat Small and Marr by 1 up.

Duff-Fyfe and Stein beat Wright and Mould by 2 and 1.

Black and Webster beat Robertson and Laslett by 1 up.

The following is the tie for the semi-final round, which should be played off before Sunday next:—

Drimmie and Dent vs. Cooper and Innes Ker.

Duff-Fyfe and Stein vs. Black and Webster.

Miss Dorothy Campbell met Miss Violet Hezlet in the final of the Ladies' Golf Championship at Portrush on Friday last, Miss Campbell winning by 3 up and 2 to play. This is the second occasion on which Miss Campbell, late of North Berwick, has won the championship. In 1909 she beat Miss F. Hezlet, Portrush, at Birkdale in the final, while a year previously she figured in the last round against Miss M. Titterton, Musselburgh. Miss Campbell holds the Ladies' Championship of Canada and has been a force in this sport since 1904, when she sprang to the front rank by winning the Scottish championship at North Berwick, a success she repeated next year and again in 1908, while acting as runner-up in 1907 and 1909. Previous records:—

	Winner.	Runner-up.	Where played.
1893	Lady Margaret Scott	Miss I Pearson ...	St. Anne's.
1894	Lady Margaret Scott	Miss I Pearson ...	Littlestone.
1895	Lady Margaret Scott	Miss E. Lythgoe...	Portrush.
1896	Miss Amy Pascoe ...	Miss L Thomson ..	Hoylake.
1897	Miss E. C. Orr ...	Miss Orr ...	Gullane
1898	Miss L. Thomson ...	Miss E. Neville ...	Yarmouth.
1899	Miss M. Hezlet ...	Miss Magill ...	Newcastle, Co.D.
1900	Miss B. K. Adair ...	Miss Neville ...	Westward Ho!
1901	Miss M. A. Graham	Miss B. Adair ...	Aberdovey.
1902	Miss M. Hezlet ...	Miss E. C Neville	Deal
1903	Miss B. K. Adair ..	Miss Walker Light	Portrush.
1904	Miss L. Dod ...	Miss M. Hezlet ...	Troon.
1905	Miss B. Thompson ...	Miss M. E. Stuart	Cromer.
1906	Mrs. Kennion ...	Miss B Thompson	Burnham (Som.)
1907	Miss M. Hezlet ..	Miss F. Hezlett ...	Newcastle, Co.D.
1908	Miss M. Titterton ...	Miss D. I. Campbell	St Andrews.
1909	Miss D. I. Campbell	Miss F. Hezlet ...	Birkdale.
1910	Miss Grant Suttie ...	Miss L. Moore ...	Westward Ho!

The tennis handicap tournament played on the Viceregal courts at Simla was brought to a conclusion on Tuesday afternoon. Simla society assembled in great force and Lady Hardinge was "At Home." The Viceroy, Sir O'Moore and Lady Creagh were among the spectators. The semi-finals and final were decided during the afternoon and some excellent play was witnessed. In the first match Major Black and Mrs. Martin beat Colonel Reid and Mrs. Cumberlege, 6 to 4 and 6 to 3, and in the second Mr. Jukes and Mrs. Black beat the Maharaj Kunwar Singh and Bibi Sahita Amrit Kam by 8 to 6 and 6 to 3. The final match was won by Major Black and Mrs. Martin against Mr. Jukes and Mrs. Black by two sets to love, each being 6 to 4. The prizes were given away to the winners and runners up by Lady Hardinge.

A meeting of the representatives of the different local gymkhanas was held on Monday at the Bombay Gymkhana pavilion to consider the application of the Islam Gymkhana to admit Mahomedan cricketers to the annual cricket tournament, which is held in Bombay thus converting that international triangular contest into a quadrangular one.

Mr. E. L. Sale presided, and there were representative members of the gymkhanas present. After some discussion further consideration of the application was postponed till next year. There would thus be no quadrangular fixture this year.

The following dates are fixed for the matches in the triangular contest: 21st, 22nd and 23rd September, Paris vs. Hindus; 25th, 26th and 27th, Presidency vs. Winners of first match. Following dates have been fixed for the Poona match between the Presidency and Parsis: 14th, 15th and 16th September.

The final of the Professional Foursomes Golf Tournament for £350 was played at Walton Heath on the 18th instant when Herd and Bradbeer beat Taylor and Hambleton by 8 up and 6 to play.

The Calcutta Swimming Club opened its season on Friday evening with a one length (100 feet) Novices Handicap. There were five entries, Mr. G. Young winning with 7secs. start, his net time being 25secs. Mr. E. Koch was second, 4secs. start, time—25½secs. net. We publish further on a list of the club fixtures for the current season.

We would draw the attention of our readers to the advertisement appearing in our issue of to-day of Professor Wortley Axe's book on the Horse. The Gresham Publishing Company, who have produced this excellent work, have kindly sent us a specimen copy for inspection and it appears to us to be the most complete book of its kind we have ever perused. Professor Axe has had the work in hand for over ten years and the results of his labours is a series of volumes which no horse owner should be without. It stands out as the greatest undertaking of its kind ever put in hand and is an epitome of the experience and research of the greatest authorities on the subject. Sir George Brown, C.B., Dr. Fleming, Professor Share, Mr. Harold Leeney, Mr. Hunting, Mr. Vero Shaw, Mr. Lupton, Mr. Malcolm are among the specialists who have added their contributions. Professor Axe's book contains all that is worth knowing about a horse and is the most up-to-date publication on the subject. Here we have an encyclopaedia of the noble animal—his exterior, conformation and varieties: the horse in health and disease: chapters on breeding, shoeing, training, stable management, etc., while the veterinary portions of the book have been pronounced deserving of special notice for in none of the standard technical handbooks are causes, symptoms and treatment more clearly set out. The volumes are embellished with beautiful coloured plates and there are hundreds of text illustrations together with dissected anatomical plates of infinite value. The advertisement gives further information and we feel sure that having seen a copy every horse owner will make an effort to possess himself of this valuable work.

It looks as if football in Bombay was going to get an extra fillip this season. A notable movement is at present afoot to form an Association to control the game in the Western capital on the lines of the I.F.A. in Calcutta. The scheme was originated by Mr. F. Hogan, who has run the Harwood League so successfully for many years past. The control of football matters in Bombay has always been of a precarious character and consequently there have been many problems, never properly solved, that have militated against the best results being attained. The present proposal has, it is understood, progressed so far that in a few days a definite announcement may be expected. The Committee of the Harwood League have already consented to hand over that competition to a properly constituted Association with its trophies and cash balance; while the Committee of the Rovers Club, subject to the approval of a general meeting, have also arrived at a similar decision in respect of its tournament, the three trophies and cash in hand. The money thus available amounts approximately to a sum of Rs. 4,000, so that the new body will open its existence, so to speak, with a silver spoon in its mouth.

In our Correspondence columns to-day appears a letter on Osteo—porosis written by that well-known Veterinary Surgeon Dr. T. Assheton Smith. His views on this disease will be of the greatest interest and value to horse owners in India.

"What are these cups for?" asked a well-dressed man of a jeweller, pointing to some elegant silver cups on the counter. "They are race cups to be given as prizes." If that's so, suppose you and I race for one?" And the stranger, cup in hand, started, with the jeweller after him!

"Ain't you working to-day, Bill?" a loafer inquired curiously of an acquaintance. "No I 'ave a day all to meself." "'Ow's that?" asked the curious one "Well, you see, it's this way. I work in a domino factory, a-putting on the spots, an' to-day they're makin' all double, blanks so I 'ave a day off!"

London Week by Week.

Friday, 5th May 1911.

There are some notable names absent from the catalogue of this year's Academy, such as Messrs. Abbey, Brangwyn, Yeames, Charles Shannon, Norman Shaw, Graham Jackson or Belcher; otherwise the exhibition may be described as fairly representative—perhaps, in interest, even above that of last year. But it needs more patience than usual to sort out from the crowd the best things. The hanging has rarely been so disastrous. Gallery III., wherein the great ones are accustomed to congregate, is a restless, inharmonious confusion; and in almost every room one finds picture clashing with picture, to the detriment of both, when, with small apparent difficulty, the trouble might have been avoided by the exercise of some discrimination. One is driven to ask whether any sort of system would not be better than the present chaos. Suppose, for instance, that portraits were hung together; and sea-pieces, landscapes, and interiors each had their own abiding place. Or there might be a colour-scheme, so that one had a white room, and a red gallery, and a blue chamber. A rather deadly kind of blue is rather fashionable just now; and we are sure artists not making use of it would like to have the works isolated of those who do. Mr. Strang's "The Celestial Globe" (456), which at present rules Gallery VIII. with a rod of iron, might have been used as an index. And the sculptors especially have a most legitimate grievance. They are, on the whole, having a better time than for many years past. Really good work is being done, and yet the Academy can give them bare space for warehousing, and none for adequate display of more than a very few exhibits. There is one exception to the general charge of bad hanging. Apart from the merits of the exhibits, the contents of the tiny room devoted to black-and-white have never before, within this writer's experience, been so well arranged.

One of the chief points of popular interest this year is Sir George Frampton's "Peter Pan" of which the plaster model is to be seen in the Lecture Room. This is to be executed in bronze and set up in Kensington Gardens—a curious and novel departure. Shall we now have Lorna Doone on the Thames Embankment, and Mr. Pickwick in Trafalgar Square? The precedent seems to promise a new and fertile field for the activities of our sculptors. The artist has had no easy task; and he has imposed an immeasurable burden on those who may accompany small children of this generation on their morning walks in the Gardens when the group is duly installed. With some experience of this sort of thing, we can imagine the demands for full, true, and particular information about each and every rabbit, mouse, snail, and fairy that is visible on the tree-trunk that supports Peter. The tune that Peter (who must not be confused with the Pied Piper) is playing will also have to be specified. The said Peter is a charming person, and the whole composition has delightful incidents. It is as little in accord with the orthodox canons of art as Mr. Barrie's work is with those of literature or the stage; and it will doubtless serve its purpose none the worse.

Bishop Welldon and his supporters are stumping the country, exciting the populace against the beastly Mormon missionaries who are propagating the doctrines of Brigham Young and decoying, it is said, scores of our young women of the lower middle class. As Prebendary Carlile put it in his message, Englishmen are determined to save their young, ignorant, and easily influenced daughters from "the polygamous traps of Mormon decoys." Bishop Welldon summarised the whole case against this pestilential teaching when he declared that Mormonism, if it is not polygamous, is nothing; that it is merely contemptible when it is not immoral. We know that polygamy was the note of Mormonism in the days of Brigham Young. We know that the man Smith is a polygamist. We know that polygamy has been practised by Mormon elders since its public repudiation. We know that many privileges are reserved in Utah for the wives of elders, and that every temptation and artifice is employed to persuade the girl emigrant to become one of many wives. We are abundantly justified in regarding the work of the Mormon propagandists as a direct endeavour to lead young women to a life that from the Christian and the Western standpoint is flagrantly immoral, and we are justified in calling on the Government forcibly to stay this propaganda.

Bishop Welldon suggested that Mormon meetings should be prevented, and that the attempt to entice girls to emigrate to Utah should be sharply punished. There is surely little difficulty in this. Incitement to crime is a penal offence, and bigamy is a crime. The attempt to secure girls for immoral purposes is a crime, and a bigamous marriage ceremony does not modify immorality as the law or as common sense regards it. A man who dared to stand up in Hyde Park and persuade young women to embrace a career of vice would be promptly arrested—if, indeed, he were lucky enough to escape from the hands of the casual male listener. Why should the teacher of Mormonism be given protection? The whole thing is utterly idiotic, and to allow its teachers to shelter themselves behind our regard for free speech is to confess that we are a nation of doctrinaires made foolish by our love for the large, fine-sounding phrase. It is proved beyond all question that the Mormon missionary is a pestilential nuisance, the perfect undesirable alien. There is no room for him in Great Britain.

With the best intentions in the world London cannot save the hansom cab from extinction. As well might it try to stop the Thames from flowing. The demand to-day is for rapid travelling. There is no time to waste in arguing about fares. Men and women travel further than they once did, because the motor vehicle can cover longer distances than the horse-drawn vehicle. Seven years ago the man who habitually used the hansom cab knew the legal fares between well-known points as well as he knew his alphabet. To-day he has lost count of distances; he is content to learn the fare from the machine which tells him as he sits in the cab, what he must pay the driver when he gets out.

To-day cabs are not wanted for short distances, even where it is a matter of time. Motor-buses seem to run everywhere in a quarter the time occupied by the old horse 'bus. They have opened up routes where that vehicle has never been.

Although the change in street locomotion has been so sudden—for it is but seven years ago that the first public motor vehicle was put upon the streets—one can only realise the revolution wrought by the motor vehicle when one examines the statistics which refer to it.

Seven years ago there were fewer than three thousand motor-cars running in the streets of London. To-day there are 58,000 motor vehicles carrying goods and passengers in London, excluding motor vehicles in London registered by outside authorities.

The character of this traffic may be realised from the figures below:—

Motor carriages and cabs ...	... 42,000
Motor lorries and wagons ...	... 2,500
Motor-cycles	... 14,000

Its growth is shown in the following number of registrations by the London County Council of motor vehicles for each year ending in March. The figures for 1911 are for eleven months ending on 28th February:—

1904	... 2,702	1908	... 6,254
1905	... 3,102	1909	... 7,196
1906	... 4,024	1910	... 7,078
1907	... 4,961	1911	... 6,441

The business of registering these vehicles as they are ready for use, and the licensing of drivers—for whom 168,000 licenses have been issued—is the only profitable business the Council undertakes. After paying all expenses the Council nets the respectable sum of £13,000 a year, and since 1904 has made a profit of £55,000.

Motor-cars and motor-cycles seem to be as negotiable as shares on the Stock Exchange, for in seven years over 21,000 cars and cycles have changed hands, an average of 3,000 a year. London has now six different identification marks, and is about to have a seventh given to it. How the policemen will remember these seven combinations may be left to conjecture.

It is that old friend of the dramatist, the jealous husband masquerading as a stranger to test his wife's fidelity, who is the foundation of "Playing with Fire," an adaptation from Molnar's "De Liebgardist," which was produced at the Comedy Theatre on Saturday night. Harry Longton is an actor, who begins to doubt that his wife, an actress, loves him as she used to do. Being an actor, his mind runs on disguises, and he makes very elaborate plans to discover whether his wife would entertain thoughts of another man. He pretends to depart for Paris, and comes on the scene in splendid military uniform, calling himself Prince Loris, a Russian with a remarkable and heroic past. He has set his snare very carefully. Bouquets have arrived for the lady before the actual entry of the mythical Prince, and finally there comes a note respectfully imploring the lady to meet him. She gives the signal required—a blind lowered at the hour of six—to show her consent, and when once she has seen the magnificent Loris—and he does not look or behave a bit like her husband—it is not long before she falls into his arms.

That ends the second act. With the third act Longton is himself again, and after his wife has lied to the manner born for some time he confronts her with the Prince's uniform and explains the trick he has played upon her. And she calmly declares that she saw through his disguise from the first, and was not for a moment deceived.

In order to spread the slender story over three acts a great deal of irrelevant matter is introduced, but the situations are skillfully arranged, the dialogue is interesting and amusing, some of the scenes have a certain freshness, and the play is thoroughly enjoyable, without, perhaps, striking any very deep or very impressive note.

A great deal of its attraction is due to the acting of Mr. Robert Loraine and Miss Alexandra in the principal parts. Mr. Loraine, agreeable always, gave a remarkable performance when masquerading as the Prince. He entirely sunk his personality. Miss Carlile gave distinction to a part that in less skilful hands might easily have been conventional; Mr. J. D. Beveridge gave a pleasing picture of the actors' friend, a genial dramatist; and Miss Charles Calvert was also responsible for a neat piece of character acting.

WILD BIRDS.

AN admirable treatise on bird protection and bird preservation is "How to Attract and Protect Wild Birds" by Mr. Martin Heisemann (Witherby and Co., London). The book describes in detail the system which has been adopted by the Baron von Berlepsch at Seebach, in Germany, for the preservation of those birds which are most useful to agriculture and forestry, the essential part of the plan being the provision of suitable nesting places, special attention having been given to birds which nest in holes.

Most of us have been struck by the increased attention that has recently been paid to the protection of birds and most of us must have hailed the movement with delight. In newspapers, journals, books and pamphlets we come across articles and essays dealing with the various attempts to promote this object, while societies and communities, as well as individuals, exert themselves on all sides in the same good cause.

The valuable work that is being done in Norfolk, England, through the adoption by the Education Committee of the County Council of the Bird and Tree Scheme will occur to many as well as the enforcing of the bird protection acts. The protection of birds is, Mr. Hiesemann tells us, first of all of importance from the point of view of the political economist, and birds are not only very useful to agriculture and woods and forests but they add to the charm of nature.

In Prussia, and it is of Prussia that Mr. Hiesemann writes, the Hainich Wood, south of Eisenach, which covers several square miles, was stripped entirely bare in the spring of 1905 by larvæ of a little moth (Tortix viridana). The wood of Baron von Berlepsch, to which birds had been attracted by means of nesting boxes, was untouched. It actually stood out among the remaining woods like a green oasis. At a distance of a little more than a quarter of a mile the first traces of the plague were apparent and at the same distance farther on still it was in full force. It was a plain proof of the distance the tits and their companions had travelled.

Mr. Hiesemann is of opinion that all experts are fully agreed that the most important step for bringing about the successful protection of birds consists in establishing suitable conditions of life, and, above all, opportunities for building nests. Without suitable breeding places the healthy development of bird life is arrested at the very outset, in spite of all laws for the protection of birds and all other efforts.

By the rules of modern forestry nearly every old tree is felled without regard to the fact that the holes it contains serve as shelters and nesting places for the most faithful friend of agriculturist and forester. According to a list of European birds breeding in holes drawn up by Baron von Berlepsch and quoted by Mr. Hiesemann, we distinguish between those birds that do not build their nests in regular holes in trees with a narrow opening, but rather in niches and in narrow half-open cavities with a narrow opening corresponding to the size of their bodies

In the first category are (1) black redstart; (2) spotted fly-catcher; (3) pied and white wagtails and occasionally (4) the robin. Of large birds (5) kestrels; (6) jackdaws; (7) various species of owls. Nos 5, 6 and 7 also frequently nest in regular holes. In the second category we have (1) tits; great tit, coal tit, marsh tit, crested tit, willow tit; (2) nut-hatch; (3) tree-creeper; (4) woodpecker; (5) wryneck; (6) starling; (7) common redstart; (8) pied fly-catcher; (9) hoopoe; (10) swift; (11) roller; (12) stock dove; (13) various species of owls; (14) kestrel; (15) jackdaw. Nos. 13, 14 and 15 are also in the first category; (16) merganser; (17) white collared fly-catcher.

The natural nesting places of the breeders in holes having become more and more rare, it had long been a problem in Prussia how the deficiency could be supplied. As a boy of fifteen Baron von Berlepsch has noted in his diary that the nesting boxes then in use served no purpose, and that the only chances of success lay in the boxes being made to imitate nature so that the birds should settle in them, as they would in natural cavities.

Twenty years later he solved the problem. After years of observation he established the fact that the nesting holes which the birds preferred were deserted or uninhabited woodpecker holes. This led him to conceive the idea of continuing the work of the woodpecker by the hand of man, that is to say, of making close imitations of the woodpecker holes which, unlike existing nesting boxes, should be no mere inventions, but exact copies of nature.

He made use of every opportunity of carefully examining woodpecker holes, and, to his surprise, after examining several hundreds of them, he discovered that they were all formed on a uniform plan. All the holes of the black, green, and grey woodpeckers, in spite of difference in size, were constructed on exactly the same principles. The problem of a satisfactory nesting box was brought very much nearer its solution by this important discovery.

It was now merely a question of producing an imitation of these woodpecker holes, which should be true to nature, and serve the generality of birds, and after many failures the problem was satisfactorily solved. Mr. Hiesemann gives a detailed description of the Baron's nesting boxes, and devotes chapters to the provision of nesting places for birds breeding in the open, to the feeding of birds in winter, and to the suppression of the enemies of birds. We believe that Mr. Evans Lombe at Hethsett and Dr. Beverley at Brundall, have for some time past set up nesting boxes similar to those described by Mr. Hiesemann.

Co-operation, Mr. Hiesemann says, is necessary for a rational protection of birds. Co-operation of the State, of local authorities, societies, individuals, and especially of the schools, for even though official bodies, societies and individuals, are active in the cause of bird protection the chief thing has still to be effected; the sympathy of the great masses must be won. Intelligent people who are seeking for an intermediary who shall introduce these ideas on bird protection to the masses will naturally think, as the Norfolk Education Committee have thought, of the school teachers and ministers as the most competent people to act as ornithological pioneers, and this book can be heartily recommended to those who care for either children, birds, or gardens.

THE AGE OF MAMMALS IN EUROPE, ASIA AND NORTH AMERICA.

THIS book, written by H. F. Osborne, London, and published by Macmillan and Company, is a summary of our knowledge of the distribution and descent of the fossil mammalia. The author, a distinguished American Zoologist, was a pupil during the eighties of Huxley and Francis Balfour (the brother of the present leader of the Opposition), and his book is most fittingly dedicated to the memory of those great men. Balfour was an embryologist, and his early death was a calamity for Zoological science, for his genius created modern methods of morphological research, and would, had he lived, have applied these to the study of evolution in a more successful manner than has since been attained.

Huxley directed palæontological discovery to the same end, recognising that the theory of organic evolution, however highly probably it might be, was an unverifiable hypothesis apart from the evidence of fossil remains. Palæontology was even then dominated by Cuvier's theory of correlation; from the shape of a bone or the impress of a hoof, the great French Zoologist would reconstruct the form and habits of an extinct animal.

Balzac said that he "rebuilt, like Cadmus, cities from a tooth." But not until the discovery of the immense fossil deposits of America, Africa and Egypt produced an embarrassement of riches did the essential error of Cuvier's method become fully apparent. Marsh, Cope, Osborn and others began to show that the teeth, limbs, feet, and other hard structures of mammals might, and indeed did, evolve independently of each other; so that the entire form of a fossil animal was not necessarily deducible from that of any one of its parts.

Further, entire groups of mammals, living in different isolated countries have undergone parallel lines of evolution, so that many very similar forms have developed which nevertheless are unrelated to each other except that they share community of descent from far-distant ancestors. Continents have become united and again isolated, and inter-migrations and disappearances of faunas have occurred.

Changes of environment have taken place and whole groups of mammals have become extinct or have migrated to new areas again to undergo evolution. How complex, then, are the changes that have taken place, and how difficult it will prove to read their records in geological formations and trace the lines of descent of the great mammalian orders.

It is this task that Professor Osborn has set himself in his book, and it possesses very human interest in so far as the evolution of the animal man is included. The work is one of extremely great detail, dealing with the distribution of fossil mammals in the rocks of three continents, and it must remain for many years an indispensable source of information for the student of vertebrate palæontology. The book is well printed and illustrated and contains good indexes and bibliographies.

SNIPE SHOOTING ON DRY LAND.

THERE is a form of snipe shooting which is not commonly practised, yet which affords capital sport without necessitating the wetting of the feet or entailing the fatigue of ploughing through deep mud. It is thus especially suited to those who are liable to attacks of fever after wading or who are otherwise in weak health, and for their benefit I describe it.

After an interval of two years I am again in camp near an open bheel along the edges of which boro dhan cultivation is in progress. While the land is still a few inches under water it is ploughed and the dhan is planted out from the seedling nurseries. The fields are surrounded by small mud embankments to retain the water as the level of the bheel falls and are filled artificially daily, while new lands are brought into cultivation as the fall in the water level permits of their being ploughed and planted. The constant irrigation keeps the higher fields filled and naturally the whole of the lands thus prepared forms a paradise for snipe which feed there at night in dozens. The arrival of the cultivators in the morning sends the birds to quieter quarters for the day, and it is in the wheat fields to which they then retire that I have had quite good sport with them.

When I first came here I was told by Europeans who had visited the bheel that, owing to the absence of cover it never held snipe, but I ventured to disbelieve them on seeing what excellent feeding grounds it provided. Accordingly I rode through the crops on the higher lands all round the cultivated parts of the bheel and found, as I expected, that there were snipe in plenty. I found them singularly partial to certain fields and even to certain parts of fields, and I also found that there are acres and acres of wheat into which it is quite useless to go. In the very places that were good two years ago I got my sport again this cold weather.

The birds like the slopes facing south, as they are there protected from the strong north-west winds prevalent at this time of year and also get plenty of sun. The favourite places are in wheat where the clods are large and the crop consequently sparse, but of two places apparently alike one will be full of birds while the other never by any chance holds one. Once I had discovered the places I was certain of snipe for the table whenever I wanted them. If the birds were not in one of my marked fields they were in another, and I have never drawn an absolute blank. I have never been out for more than about half an hour looking for the snipe as I have had a great deal of work to do and so my biggest bag has been eleven birds, but I have no doubt that I could easily have exceeded this had I had more time to devote to the sport.

Sometimes the birds were in large wisps and then I only got a few shots. On more favourable occasions smaller wisps and sometimes single birds were distributed over the fields and I got a dozen shots or so in almost as many minutes. I used to take only one man with me, and we prowled quietly about in line some twenty yards apart in the fields favoured by the birds. When they were in large wisps they were very wild and rose all together, sometimes out of range, but single birds and pairs generally lay nicely and afforded very pretty targets as they shot up out of the wheat into the high wind which sweeps all day long over the wide expanses of the bheel.

When I first came into camp this time there was one corner which was always good for a few pintail snipe. I shot thirteen of them in all and since then I have seen nothing but the common kind. The pintails were always separate from the others.

Another thing I notice about these dry land snipe strikes me as curious. I sometimes marked birds down in the wheat and failed to flush them again after a careful search. Apparently they ran and hid like quails. I experienced this at all times of the day, even after sunset, when as a rule snipe are very quick to take wing, in fact latterly, after the birds had been worried a good deal for some days, they were generally hard to flush a second time when, as rarely happened, they pitched again within reach. When they rose in wisps they generally went further than I was able to follow them in the time at my disposal, and sometimes they defeated me by flying across the bheel.

After a resting place had been shot over two or three times the birds would desert it for another, but would return if it was not disturbed for some days. Cultivation goes on in several distinct parts of the bheel and I used to work each portion in turn, giving two or three outings to each. The birds were fewer on each occasion and it paid to watch which way the survivors went. Had I worked all the places in one day I might have made quite a good bag but I was busy and besides I had no use for many birds.

One place was so close to camp that one day my shot fell quite close to my bearer as he sat cleaning my boots. I generally had a look at this place before going further afield and it was extraordinary how often it yielded the few birds I wanted. It was there I got the eleven birds. Though it was nearly sunset they lay fairly well and I got them with twelve cartridges. Fortunately they rose one at a time so that I was not hustled. Snipe shooting is largely a matter of nerves and I, in common with many others, find wisps rising all round me apt to upset my nervous equilibrium.

Driven snipe, a pleasant variant in the sport, were obtained from a small, grassy island in the bheel whereon a few snipe elected to spend the day. Suspecting this I sent the coolie to beat it. The first day I did not get a shot but I was able to determine the line the birds took to their shelter in the wheat. Ensconced behind a babool tree I took toll of them on several subsequent occasions until either the island became taboo to them or I had shot all its frequenters.

One hint I may give is that the coolie should wear shoes. The hard, dry clods are very trying to bare feet and an unshod coolie soon cries "Enough."

Doubtless there are other places in Bengal where this form of the sport can be followed. It entails no fatigue, no special clothing, and no bundobust beyond finding the birds' resting place for the day. Looking for the places gives one an object for one's ride and shooting the birds gives one an object for one's walk. It might be hard to make a very large bag owing to the habit the birds have of leaving the feeding grounds together and then pitching in large wisps, but the experiment might be tried of sending a man to the rice fields very early in the morning to move quietly about so as to flush only a few birds at a time, allowing one lot to get to the resting grounds before flushing more, and so on. In this way a good morning's shooting might be prepared. But even as things are a great deal of amusement is to be had from the wheat-field snipe and residents in the neighbourhood of bheels where there are feeding grounds without cover might do worse than look for the day haunts of the birds which are certain to frequent such places at night.

To defend angling against the views of a non-angler is about as satisfactory as recommending marriage to a confirmed bachelor. He sees only the outside. You can't lend sentiment. There are men who see in a stream only something wet, purling and dashing poetically, or else persistently blocking the way when one wishes to pass; others will step into that stream at sunrise, pipe in mouth, inhale a puff as they make the first cast and remember to exhale it only when they step out at sunset.

For the rabid fisherman is a creature intense—which makes him the more difficult of comprehension. If he would put half as much concentration upon ten-thousand-dollar deals as he puts upon an eight-inch trout he'd never care even when he tore his new rubber boots. He'd have his own private boot factory, and could wear a fresh pair of waders every day.

In confuting the discredit cast by the indictment which heads this brief we cannot but admit that the shield of the angler, like other shields, has its reverse side. Yet there certainly must be something in fishing, and particularly in fishing for that elusive aristocrat of our inland piscatorial democracy, the stream trout. And I call to witness that at this writing I may look across a field, and can descry a bride and groom following a trout stream opposite. He is casting, she is fondly present to be shown how well he can do. And now I note that they have begun to take short cuts, through the brush, from pool to pool; the farther they progress the more is she left behind. Bless my heart, but she could tumble in and he never would know (until hotel time), unless she floated up-stream and disturbed his flies. He evidently is a born fisherman, he has on his best clothes and he will get muddy and stained and she will not understand; but I can prognosticate that he will control the vacations, hereafter.

Therefore without fear of displaying any weaknessess may we admit a basis for some of the canards in the non-fisher's arraignment. Of course, flies do catch on trees and bushes. Candidly, I confess that I myself am the blamedest, and double blamedest, bush and tree mutilator that ever threw a fly. I am the champion back-caster. I will guarantee (for personal expenses) to stand in the middle of Sahara Desert, and casting before me, catch a pine on Pike's Peak, Colorado, behind me. I will stand in any meadow, and with one flirt of rod and line raise up out of the open, behind me, a dense forest; there will be trees where never had been trees.

Naturally (this does not invalidate the case of defence at all), it is rather disconcerting to cast for a two-pound trout before and catch a thirty-foot tree behind, especially when the tree is government timber. But in just such surprises lies one of trouting's manifold charms. After having been wading and slipping and sliding and dodging and crawling and leading a strictly amphibious life, part out of water and part in, and waving a rod, industriously wigwagging at unseen fish, it is pleasing to change the rôle, temporarily, to that of ape, and in hob-nailed waders to climb to the top of said tree, be it pine or spruce or willow or alder.

Or you can try to pull the tree over. That is excellent exercise for the back. To pull over a large tree, when your last leader is at stake, requires much address—chiefly verbal. One-man sheer strength of muscle avails little and you must resort to strength of mind. When fortune smiles instead of grins, then you may gradually haul down to you (by hand or by line) the snagged bough—to have it tear through your grasp and flip up into place again just as you being to detach the ingenious clove-knots and half-hitches with which it has been decorated. Quite frequently this little flipup deftly snaps the leader or buries a fly in your thumb; which furnishes excitement.

Consequently, in admitting the possibility of tree and bush catching, it is admitted not as a detriment to trout fishing, but as a diversion. Merely to deliver a fly and to receive a trout, all day long, would be very monotonous. That is the beauty of trout fishing on a stream: the constant variation.

As to the snags, in the stream—yes, flies do catch snags, by which are included rocks. This is another source of entertaining surprise: to forge majestically up the mid-current, line behind ready for a quick cast, and to be brought up, with a jerk, all standing, thus notified that your trailing flies have firmly embedded themselves in a twig projecting a hundredth of an inch from a mile of surface.

For know that the artificial fly is a great study. Whether the trout think it alive or not has been a matter of conjecture to scientists and naturalists. I don't care what the trout think. I have found out. It's alive, and most devilishly alive, too. You can strain a trout stream through a wire mosquito-mesh, and then rake it with a fine-tooth comb; and you can give your flies a moment's license thereamidst with the absolute certainty that they will hook around some stick or twig or rock. Why, I have floated my flies down the current and turned my head an instant, and had them catch a piece of railroad iron three feet under. I have started them down-steam, and had them sneak up-stream, into a tributary a half-mile above and anchor to an old root in the best hole of all.

And these aren't eyed flies, either. They seem to get there by instinct.

Similarly, in casting into a particularly likely swirl or pool the flies always search first, not for the trout but for anything else that may be sequestered. One never may forsee whether he is throwing artificial flies or grappling-hooks. To plash on, gaily, and floundering in that holy of holies like a merry hippopotamus release the grappling-hooks (if such they have proved to be) from their clutch upon hanging branch or couchant snag, much reduces the odds of uncertainty under which the angler operates. He suspected there were trout, big ones, in that appealing spot. Now he knows that there are'nt; and he may pass along without wasting more time or effort.

We now come to the item of catching oneself, by "pants, shirt, hide." This is, as defended in the summary, unimportant, although not without its value as an asset to the day's angling. To be caught in the "pants," especially in that portion facing south on a man going north, encourages agility and is an excellent limberer of rarely used muscles. I always carry a Turkish scimetar for such an occasion; the curved blade is admirable. By holding the hilt against your thigh you may saw with the blade at the fly where it has perched in the hence region which you can see only by double reflection. The same method applies to the shirt region of between the shoulders. Some persons slothfully remove "pants" or shirt, if the fly permits. But the best solution, and the one evidently proposed by the patron deity of fishers, is to wrestle about until you can get your teeth on the fly and bite it out. That is fine for the muscles.

When the fly has caught in the ear it cannot be bitten out by self, and therefore this method is sometimes inconvenient for what is termed "hide" catches. It must be worked out by systematic wriggling of the shank; and from more accessible portions of the anatomy it can be worked out, worn out, or cut out. This inculcates gentleness, which is a prized attribute of angling, from time immemorial; and in as much as for a right-handed person the fly customarily hooks into a left-handed spot, it is a teacher of ambi-dextrousness—or ambi-dexterity, as you choose. To watch a right-handed man, even yourself, with his left hand extract a knife from his right "pants" pocket, and open it with his teeth, and from his right elbow, pendant by fly and leader taut to a willow branch, with a no-point blade, which is fitted for a can-opener only, dig out stretcher or dropper, is pathetic. Ambi-dexterity should be cultivated, at home, by every angler. This, and gentleness, and suppleness of body, are, I submit, promoted by that item "Flies caught on person (pants, shirt, hide)."

Furthermore, the "hide" part emphasises humanity, also. Ever since I first wrested a trout fly from my finger I have always killed a fish before operating on him. Besides, if he slips through your hand during proceedings he is easier regained dead than alive.

Cussing! Well, who, having acquired the rudiments of the English language, does-n't cuss, occasionally, inside or outside? Cussing can be made a great sweetener, like Epsom salts. Of course it is understood that there are two kinds of cussing; the black and the white.

The harmless white cussing of the day's trouting, sweetening to the disposition and enriching the vocabulary, must be reckoned as an inestimable concomitant of the noble pastime. It fits a man for the next day; and this result is the aim of recreation.

"Stumbling," "brush bucking," "insect fighting," what are these but hardening qualities? No trout-fisher desires to be a Simple Simon, angling in his mother's pail. Or was'nt that Simple Simon? Somebody else, maybe. However, the point is here: your true trout fisher likes the stumbling, when the stream bed is all rounded boulders and slanty boulders, and hob-nails are polished, and the current pretty swift, and he has about as much control of his feet as a cow on ice. It requires much physical address (with some mental address, too) to balance, make a cast, and strike without landing the trout high and dry in some of those omni-present trees always lurking rearward.

Any man who can take a nine—or ten-foot rod, wriggling like a snake, through a willow-bush jungle, while perspiration blinds one eye and mosquitoes the other and his hat is constantly plucked off, can raise a family or pilot any other intricate deal; and this settles another item. Stumbling, brush bucking and insect fighting temper body and mind.

"Flies caught in fish, ten minutes." That is the item intended to sting more than any of the others, I presume—except, possibly, the "hide" item, which also has a sting. But, confound all non-fishers, who don't and won't understand, success in angling does not lie in the weight of the basket. That is a point difficult to argue.

Not to be a born fisherman is to miss a goodly share in life's fullness; and not to be a trout fisherman is hard luck. As for me, I never can see a road winding on and on and over the hills, without wondering whither it would lead me; and I never can see a stream, untried, without wondering what prodigies may await among its swirls.

To the market with the man who counts his fish, or weighs them in bulk, or who is expected thus to measure his day upon the trout stream. For the meat hunter, the fish hog, and all that blunted ilk who slay by rote, because they are fishermen made rather than anglers born, the fish, in the flesh, is the thing; and when the camp larder is bare, or you have invited your rich uncle to a meal of trout before said trout are caught, the fish is very much the thing. But the true angler is he who, trudging homeward at eventide with swinging instead of tugging basket, can answer cheerfully the hail: "Hey, mister, any luck?"

This being sub-titled a "brief," sentiment has no place in it; and sentiment is, as before remarked, an element difficult to install where the subject is not receptive. Who can reproduce for the enthusiasm of the pessimistic non-fisher the dear, familiar yet never palling old stream, whose every feature of bend and ripples is anticipated, as we advance, and welcomes us with larder full or empty, we never may foretell which; the old stream, where we are ever shifting the landmarks of yesterday for those of to-day, inserting fresh red crosses, until the watery trail is one blaze of pleasant memories? Such a stream becomes ours, forever. And who can reproduce, to enthuse Mr. Pessimist and Mr. Can't-Understand, the magic glamour of the dancing beckoning new stream, where (for the stranger) there are yet no blanks nor disappointments, and every bend is likely to yield a two-pounder!

How to explain to the non-fishing scoffer and to the pessimist who has fished and failed that the trout stream old or new, is as fascinating as a game of chess; that each hole and bend and swirl and ripel demands its particular approach like a move; that the small, foolish trout are pawns, and the big wise ones, are knights, bishops, et cet.; and that the angler's course up and down the stream is a veritable checker-board, retraced from yesterday, last week, last year, or planned as he goes along?

How to represent the sunshine and the cloud flecks upon the hills, the meadows and the water; the blue, the green, the amber; the thrill which seems to coincide with all this when the trout leaps for the fly, and the instant of exultation when you are quicker than he and he is hooked, or that instant of startled chagrin when you realize that he has been quicker than you and is not hooked!

To impress all this: to demonstrate that the most essential part of successful fishing for trout is not the fish, nor the weight of the basket, looms a thankless task. But with the wading, the brush bucking, the insect fighting, the disengaging of flies from trees, snags and person, the stumbling, the dodging, the shine and shadows and water and hills and meadows and pines and sky and air, the anticipations which ever, Antaeus-like rise afresh, the consummation thereof, the disappointments therefrom, the new tricks learned, the old ones re-tried, the two-pounder who got away, at the close of his day the true angler has little room in his basket for more fish.—E. KYNOCH'S NEW PATENT DESTRUCTOR BULLET.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—We have received an enquiry from Messrs. A. Hollis and Son of Bombay in regard to our new Patent Destructor Bullet. They have requested us to reply to same through your columns.

We enclose you herewith our reply, and shall be glad to hear that you will insert same in your paper in due course. Thanking you in anticipation.

Yours faithfully,
for KYNOCH LIMITED,
FRANK HUXHAM,
Secretary and Manager.

BIRMINGHAM, 1st May 1911.

Messrs. A. Hollis and Son, Bombay.

DEAR SIRS,—Kynoch Destructor Bullet (patent). In reply to your enquiry we beg to inform you that this bullet s designed for shooting soft skinned animals with ordinary shot guns. Description :—

Consists of 16 lead pellets or slugs in an outer lead case.

Weight 490 grains.

Calibre ·730.

Length ·730.

Loaded in "Sallinoid" (Waterproof) cases with 3 drams black powder or Smokeless equivalent. Advantages :—

May be used in both cylinder choke barrels. The accuracy is much superior to that usually obtained with bullets of this type. The bullets break up splendidly on impact and it is almost impossible for any animal to escape if hit.

Yours truly,
FRANK HUXHAM,
Secretary and Manager.

OSTEO-POROSIS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I make no apology for offering you the following ideas and suggestions concerning the disease among horses known as "Osteo-porosis." It has of late years become a veritable scourge to horse owners, and any light which may be thrown on the subject should therefore be welcome. There are certain facts not generally known and which need to be better understood and more systematically applied in dealing with this disease.

It is perhaps superfluous to enter into a minute description of the more general and palpable manifestations of the disorder, which have become so unpleasantly familiar to most horse owners. I may state, however, that the first symptoms which usually attract attention resemble those of rheumatism, the action lacks freedom, there is stiffness and lameness which for a time comes and goes, and often shifts from limb to limb.

The earliest definite symptoms is the thickening of the branches of the lower jaw, which when affecting both branches symmetrically is diagnostic; it begins along the edges of the alveoli (i.e., the margin of the jawbone near the molar teeth), and later spreads and implicates the whole depth of the bone.

Sometimes simultaneously, but more often at later stage, the superior maxillary bones begin to bulge, giving the face a grotesque contour, which needs no expert to detect.

The sequence of symptoms is not always the same; sometimes the lameness appears before the swelling, in others the alteration in the bone structure may go on for some time before the lameness is observed. You may in fact for a time have either manifestation alone, or both together.

Different cases also often vary greatly in the rapidity of their development; I have known cases in which the acute stage was reached in a matter of days, while in others the same process might occupy weeks, or even months.

It must not be inferred that the bones of the face and lower jaw are the only parts of the skeleton affected. The disease is constitutional and the whole bony frame is implicated, but the greater the amount of compact bone tissue, the less the deformity.

The condition may be defined as a disturbance of the equilibrium which normally exists in the relative proportion of the organic and inorganic constituents of bone tissue,—the more intricate pathology of the disease still awaits complete elucidation.

Undoubtedly many animals exhibit a predisposition, and a few considerable powers of resistance, but I cannot yet vouch for absolute individual immunity.

The degree of susceptibility varies immensely in different individuals. The incidence of the disease is not apparently affected by, or dependent on country of origin, breeding, class, sex, or age.

Everything seems to support the now generally accepted theory that the exciting cause is to be found in improper feeding, i.e., a diet deficient in albumen; and some practitioners go so far as to maintain that the disease may thus be always experimentally induced, but here it seems that the important questions of predisposition and immunity are not accorded due weight.

When I first came to Calcutta nearly thirty years ago the disease had not (to the best of my belief) been recognised here, and it was two or three years later that I encountered my first case in this country.

I sent the skull to my friend Captain Steel, A.V.D., at the Veterinary School at Parel, Bombay, who concurred with me in the diagnosis; I merely mention this to prove that it was a well recognised case of the disease.

I have good grounds for believing it probable that this was one of the first cases in this city. In those days it was customary to feed horses chiefly on gram, after maceration in water, and the preparation being delegated to syces, the grain was often soaked too long and so fermented, and being given to horses in this condition was a prolific cause of acute indigestion and tympanitis (flatulent colic), and such cases were then a daily (and nightly) occurrence.

The veterinary practitioners ultimately realised the cause, and gram in any form was promptly and totally condemned, with the result that cases of colic became comparatively rare, and "osteo" began to assert itself.

So it would appear that in exorcising one demon, we invited another even more undesirable to fill its vacant place.

The pendulum is now swinging back again, and gram in moderation is recommended, and given with advantage.

When gram was banned, oats were substituted, and this substitution with oats of European standard would have been a sound course to adopt, but the proportion of nutriment to husk in the common country oat is small at best; the husk is thick and tough, and when given to a horse dry, and whole, they are never properly masticated, and assimilation of the nutriment is difficult, a large proportion passing through the system unaltered,—so to overcome this difficulty crushing was had recourse to.

Now in the process of crushing and subsequent handling, a portion of the scanty nutriment is lost, leaving chiefly husk, which in nutritive value is less than that of plain bran.

As regards bran, modern machinery extracts every particle of flour from the grain, so that a horse fed on "oats and bran" really receives little more than vegetable fibre and silicious and other salts, which, though desirable as adjuncts, do not constitute a "FOOD."

It is instructive to note in this connection, that a better class of ticca-ghari horse (a hard working animal), fed largely on soaked gram, although he appears to suffer habitually from a disordered liver, is never known to develop "Osteo." What then is the remedy?

By way of prevention our aim must be to produce a true food, which, while easy of digestion and assimilation, shall possess the properties necessary to reinforce the vital processes and repair wear and tear.

To this end I would suggest an allowance of crushed gram, either in place of the oat ration or in addition to it, according to circumstances, the quantity to be regulated by the size of the horse, nature of the work and season of the year. A proportion of oats is almost indispensable, and to soften the husk and facilitate mastication the whole grain may be damped.

Gram alone in excess is known to be what is called a "heating diet;" it taxes the digestive powers, especially in the case of pampered horses, and in hot weather causing a congested state of the liver.

Regular and adequate muscular exercise will enable the system to deal with a considerable amount of nitrogenous food and the allowance may be regulated accordingly.

Green grass will largely counteract the bilious effect of the gram diet.

Linseed and barley should never be given unless thoroughly boiled, but when cooked they furnish a nourishing and mildy laxative food, which may be given once a week with a little bran.

Chaff (i.e., chopped straw, rice or paddy straw being chiefly used here) should be cut only from selected straw, clean and bright, and free from mildew. It is a very necessary ingredient of the food for the following reasons :—

1. Its admixture compels mastication.
2. Its mechanical action in contact with the coat of the stomach stimulates the secretion of gastric juice.
3. It furnishes a large proportion of the salts previously mentioned.

Idleness favours the development of the disease. As regards medication, lime salts have been recommended by those having an utterly mistaken conception of the pathological conditions prevailing, but such treatment can only aggravate the trouble.

A consideration of the true state of affairs will suggest cod liver oil as likely to meet the requirements of the case. Horses naturally have a great aversion to any oil or grease in the food, but they easily acquire a taste for it, and after a time will readily take large quantities, especially if a little salt is added. Cod liver oil is, of course, expensive, but there is no really efficient substitute. Linseed oil and horse malt may be tried.

Other medicine may be given with the object of aiding the digestive powers, enriching the blood supply and increasing the general tone.

The administration of a drastic purge (e.g., aloes) has the effect of hastening the development of the characteristic symptoms.

Not long ago it was the common practice to shoot a horse out of hand on the first appearance of the disease, which was regarded as hopelessly incurable.

In the case of animals of small value this may still be the most economical course to adopt, but when valuable animals are in question there is a great deal which may be done with reasonable prospect of success; delay, of course, diminishes the chance of recovery.

The above simple measures do not exhaust our resources, for it has been found that a sojourn of, say, two or three months in the indigo districts, not only checks the course of the disease, but has the effect of gradually dissipating the signs of organic change; and provided reasonable precautions are adopted as to diet and general management, there appears to be little or no tendency to relapse on return to Calcutta. The inference is obvious.

Yours faithfully,
T. ASSHETON SMITH, M.R.C.V.S., (LOND.)

FARMER CRAB'S brook is noted for the number and size of its eels. Fishing therein is "strictly prohibited," which in itself is attraction enough for the small boy. The other evening an urchin was leaving the neighbourhood rather hurriedly when a youthful friend inquired: "Caught anything Bob?" "Yes," replied Bob. "Eel?" "No, tee!" His friend understood, and wisely decided to turn back with Bob.

"ARE you the plumber?" asked an exasperated householder of a grimmy-looking workman, who was tinkering with the pipes in his cellar. "Yes, guv'nor." "Been long at the trade?" "'Bout a year, guv'-nor." "Ever make mistakes?" "Bless yer, no, guv'nor!" "Oh, then I suppose it's all right! I imagined you had connected up the wrong pipes, for the chandelier in the drawing-room is spraying like a fountain and the bathroom taps are on fire!"

Quality

The fact that ELEY Cartridges are the outcome of nearly a hundred years' experience gives some assurance of Quality.

The fact that ELEY Cartridges are invariably selected by the leading sportsmen in every part of the world reinforces that assurance.

NEWMARKET.

A NORTHERLY wind and a cloudy sky last Friday did not proclaim it a perfect racing morning, but towards noon matters brightened, and the weather was as fine as any the week had afforded. The attendance did not show much material increase; in fact, the fillies' race seemed to fall somewhat flat, and as in the Two Thousand, we saw the supposed good thing not in the first three and the second favourite successful, while Mr. J. Joel most narrowly missed following up his Two Thousand Guineas success. As usual, the muster in the club enclosure showed least signs of depletion, but there was plenty of room to spare in Tattersall's and the cheaper rings, while despite the recent showers the course was still on the hard side. The last London special load had not arrived when the match came off, and perhaps saved their money, as Agacalla, whose first appearance under silk it was, swerved to the left at the start carrying out Wolf's Hope, and the last-named, poaching the

HURST PARK.

Hurst Park on Saturday not only provided a good programme, but had the honour of furnishing the first real April day, and while dodging now and again for shelter, sportsmen could not grudge the rain that is putting the going in good order for the summer campaign. The attendance was a capital one all round, worthy of a Victoria Cup day, the London brigade coming down in force by road and rail, while excellent sport was enjoyed from start to finish. Results :—

CHESTER.

Chester is so essentially a holiday meeting that rain, from the visitors' point of view, is almost a calamity ; but sportsmen could not grudge the showers that fell since Monday night, as the course, though well grassed, was unpleasantly hard, and the heaviest and most serviceable of the lot fell just before racing

WINCHESTER CARTRIDGES SHOOT WHERE YOU HOLD

WINCHESTER

.22 Short and .22 Long Caliber Rim Fire Cartridges.

If you want to use .22 Caliber Cartridges that shoot when you want them to and where you point your gun, and strike a good, penetrating blow, buy the time-tried Winchester make, having the trade-mark "H" stamped on the head. They cost but a few pence more a box than the cheap, unreliable kind, and they are shillings better. Winchester .22 Caliber Cartridges are loaded with Black and Smokeless Powder. Those loaded with Smokeless Powder have the celebrated Winchester Greaseless Bullets, which make them cleaner to handle than any other .22 Caliber Cartridges. Special powder, made according to carefully determined and tested formulas, is used in loading all Winchester Cartridges, and every bullet is swaged by special machinery, which makes them uniform in size, weight and density. This modern method of manufacture, coupled with a rigid system of tests, makes Winchester Cartridges better than any other brand on the market. A trial will convince you.

ALL DEALERS SELL WINCHESTER RIFLES AND CARTRIDGES.

It was a slice of very bad luck on Wednesday for the thousands of folk whose only race carnival is Chester that the rain did not come during the night, instead of spoiling a long morning usually devoted to explorations, rambles, and excursions on the river. The depleted battalions of visitors, with that cheerful acceptance of circumstances that characterises the North-country followers of sport, accepted the situation, and instead of rambling round the ramparts to see the mythical salmon captured in the Dee, enjoyed his pickled remains in the numerous hostelries of which Chester can boast, turning up refreshed and replenished to brave the elements and dare the fortunes of the fray. The invaders mustered beneath the ancient walls in the rings, but it took all the old Briton-like fortitude to stand it in the open, and consequently the holiday crowd did not cover such a big space on the Roodee as would have been the case had May lived up to her reputation. with Blackburn Rovers last Monday, led the Manchester club by a point and thus appeared practically certain of retaining the honour which, for the sixth time in their career, they carried off last year. Whereas, however, at Liverpool the Villa went down by 3 to 1, Manchester United rose to the occasion in great style and beat Sunderland by 5 to 1, scoring two more goals than have been registered against the Wearside team in any League contest this season. The championship thus goes to Manchester United with 52 points—exactly the same number which gave them the same distinction three years ago, but one less than the winners have obtained in the last two seasons. It may be some slight consolation to Aston Villa to realise that, with United scoring so heavily, a draw at Liverpool would not have availed the Birmingham club. In that event, the teams would have been level on points, a slightly superior goal average deciding the championship in favour of the Manchester team.

Apart from the contests in which Manchester United and the Villa took part, the only First League games possessing more than passing interest were those at Bury and Bristol. The Bristol team, could they have overcome Everton, would, as Bury only drew with Sheffield United, have escaped relegation to the Second Division, but so far from achieving victory they suffered defeat and consequently go down to League II. in company with Nottingham Forest, whose fate was decided a fortnight ago. It is rather suggestive of the loyalty of one Lancashire club to another that Liverpool's victory over the Villa should have ensured the triumph of Manchester United and that Everton's win at Bristol enabled Bury to remain in the First League. A word is due to Woolwich Arsenal, who, at the bottom of the list less than eight weeks ago, have since engaged in eleven matches, winning six and drawing the other five with a goal record of 14 to 3 in their favour. Scoring 17 points out of a possible 22, they have finished more strongly than any other club in the competition. Blackburn Rovers, winning at Middlesbrough, gained their first victory this season in a League encounter away from home.

With the fulfilment of Saturday's fixture the long struggle for promotion between the leading clubs of the Second Division of the League came to an end and, as a result, West Bromwich Albion and Bolton Wanderers go up. Chelsea had their prospects practically destroyed when at Bolton on Wednesday they lost to the Wanderers, but their case was not hopeless, for a victory over Gainsborough Trinity yesterday would have given them promotion on goal average. They had a fine opportunity because the Gainsborough team were in danger of having to apply for readmission. As it happened, Chelsea suffered defeat—as did Bolton Wanderers at Birmingham—and so the London club failed to overtake their Lancashire rivals. Thus they will have to stay for at least one more season in the Second Division after looking certain for such a long time to finish in one of the first two places. It is interesting to note that West Bromwich Albion regain membership of the First League after seven seasons in League Two; while Bolton Wanderers go up for the fourth time in twelve years. They have only once remained in the Second Division for more than one season. At the other end of the competition Barnsley and Lincoln City finished nineteenth and twentieth, and they will, therefore, have to apply for readmission to the League. A twelvemonth ago Barnsley's name was on everyone's lips, by reason of their being runners-up in the Association Cup. Fortune has indeed changed for them.

For the second time this season Swindon lost to Exeter and so must be content to carry off the Southern League championship with the same number of points gained by Fulham four years ago. Then Portsmouth were second; now they are last, and must go down to the Second Division with Southend United—unless, as has been rumoured, the club intends to disband. Had that been their intention they would scarcely have been granted exemption from next season's qualifying round for the Cup. So, perhaps, Portsmouth will endeavour to regain their old standing amongst the foremost Southern clubs.

ROWING.

THE ENGLISH SCULLING CHAMPIONSHIP.

It was like old times at Putney on Saturday. There was a sculling match for the championship of England, an honour that is not now often fought for. The opponents were Ernest Barry, the holder of the title, and William Albany, of the River Lea. The title did not change hands, for Barry had little difficulty in beating the challenger. The stakes were £200 aside and a cup, presented by the proprietors of the Sportsman newspaper. It is twenty years since two Englishmen rowed for this championship, the last occasion being when "Bill" East and George Perkins came together in 1891. The former won and is now a King's waterman.

The day was more than ideal for a contest of the kind—it was perfect. There was splendid flood tide, and a good wind from the south-west. This made the water a bit choppy in Putney Reach, and it was thought that it would favour Barry, who, although by far the lighter, was known to be the better waterman. The race was timed to start at 3 p.m. and at that hour there was a splendid attendance on the Hard, opposite the Star and Garter. The betting was 7 to 4 on Barry, but there was not a great deal of money about, the match being one of the real old-fashioned sporting sort.

Barry won the toss for position and he took the Surrey side. This protected him from the wind for at least three-parts of the journey. So far as the race itself was concerned it was a mere exercise canter for Barry. They got off to a splendid start at 3.16.

Barry, who wore a red and white striped jersey looked round him as if his job was really something pleasant. Albany struck off at the faster rate, and before they had gone half a mile he was very nearly a length to the good.

It was easy to see, however, that Barry was not at all perturbed. He was sculling well within himself, and he took an occasional look across his shoulders to see how the other man was going.

At the mile post Albany must have been at least a couple of lengths to the good, but still Barry was smoking and chatting to the men in his accompanying cutter.

About Harrods Barry began to take a serious interest in his business, and by the time they had reached Hammersmith Bridge he had got back at least a length of his opponent's advantage.

From this point onwards the race was a walk-over. Barry went further and further away with the greatest possible ease, and he passed the winning post in 23mins. 2secs., seven lengths to the good.

He had not turned a hair, and he was smiling broadly as he paddled over to the ship landing stage.

Albany was considerably distressed, and there can be no doubt that he took every ounce out of himself.

He has his time in front of him, but he is still a long way from being a champion.

The intermediate times were: Mile Post, 5mins. 10secs.; Hammersmith Bridge, 9mins. 5secs.; Chiswick Steps, 14mins. 21secs.; Barnes Bridge, 18mins. 2secs.

BILLIARDS.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.

On Saturday night H. W. Stevenson, the English champion, retained his title, running out a winner in the challenge match at Caxton Hall, Westminster, by a margin of 1,086 points. The victory carries with it besides the retention of the title the Billiards Control Club Cup and side stakes.

The match was held under the auspices of the B. C. C., and the club is to be congratulated upon the unqualified success that has attended the game. Taken all round, the attendance was quite satisfactory, splendid houses being the rule during the last week.

SATURDAY'S PLAY.

Friday Night: Stevenson (in play), 16,502 (at his points); Inman, 15,864 (636 behind his points).

Before the last day's play commenced it transpired that Inman was very pluckily playing under a great disadvantage. He has had to undergo an operation in connection with a trouble of long standing arising from a diseased nasal bone. Copious bleeding resulted on Saturday prior to play commencing, and Inman decided to have his nostrils stuffed to prevent a recurrence of the annoyance while play was proceeding, and this was done.

There was a splendid attendance to witness the penultimate session, but play for a time was the reverse of exhilarating. Stevenson started 636 ahead, but he appeared quite out of form, and with Inman putting up a sound and steady game, the champion's lead gradually dwindled. Stevenson's suspended break of 153 was continued with the balls in capital position, but at 184 a white loser was missed. The leader's next seven innings were very minor affairs, and it was left to Inman to make brisk progress with carefully cued items of 76, 79, 69, and 45.

At length Stevenson got down to his work, and playing flawless billiards at all points of the board, drew over 1,000 ahead. First came three pretty breaks of 68, 46, and 60 in succession, the latter item terminating when Stevenson was travelling very smoothly, at a misse. Inman it was who was now experiencing a slack time, a run of 42 representing his best contribution for several innings. On the other hand everything was coming off for Stevenson, and in a perfect top-of-the-table break of 197 he had very few obstacles indeed to surmount, his control of the balls and positional finessing being in quite his happiest vein. A plain white loser from hand was missed, but Stevenson came back at once to mark up 76.

Inman intervened with 59, but this was promptly countered by the leader with another break of 197, the easiest of red losers staying progress. At this stage Inman was seen to be suffering from a renewal of the bleeding at the nose referred to above, and there was a short cessation of play while he retired. Before Stevenson ran to his points with a series of small breaks, Inman put together 29, 26, and 34. The averages were 39.31 and 27.57 in favour of Stevenson for tallies of 785 and 524. Interval scores:—

Stevenson (in play)	... 17,250
Inman ...	... 16,368

The final session, despite the fact that the result was a foregone conclusion, attracted a well-filled salon. Any lingering doubts that may have existed as to Stevenson's victory were immediately dissolved, for the champion at once commenced to travel in his most rapid and attractive style. His opening two breaks realised 59 (full from 8 (unfinished) and 131, every conceivable phase of the game being exploited. His

THE HORSE.

Its Treatment in Health and Disease with a Complete Guide to Breeding, Training and Management.

Edited by—Professor J. WORTLEY AXE, M.R.C.V.S.,

Ex-President of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, Late Lecturer at the Royal Veterinary College and at the Agricultural Colleges of Downton and Wye, Chief Veterinary Inspector to the Surrey County Council, etc., etc.

There has long been a crying need for an authoritative and comprehensive work, placing the horse-owner and veterinary surgeon in possession of all that the progress of modern science has taught us concerning the proper treatment of the horse in health and disease. It is this need that the present work has been planned to meet.

The name of the editor, Professor J. WORTLEY AXE, is in itself an assurance that in this new undertaking veterinary science will be enriched by a work of the highest authority, emanating from one who stands in the very forefront of his profession and who now gives to the world the full result of his skill and ripe experience.

Few know the horse as he should be known or treat him as he ought to be treated. The present work will enable owners of horses to enlarge their capacity for work, alleviate their troubles and prolong their period of useful service. To the owner or responsible custodian of any horse or pony the Publication is absolutely indispensable.

The Illustrations constitute a highly important feature of the work. In no other book on the horse has the pictorial art contributed so largely to illustrate the author's meaning. There are upwards of thirty plates in full colour and seventy in black-and-white, together with several hundred text illustrations, all reproduced by the latest and most effective processes, together with many pedigree tables of the leading sires. Every subscriber will be presented with three beautiful dissected models showing respectively the internal structure of the Horse, the structure of the teeth and the structure of the hoof.

THE HOUSEHOLD PHYSICIAN

A FAMILY GUIDE TO THE PRESERVATION OF HEALTH AND THE DOMESTIC TREATMENT OF ILLNESS.

BY

J. M'GREGOR-ROBERTSON, M.A., M.B., C.M. (Honours), F.F.P.S.G., F.R.S. (Ed.)

Formerly Lecturer on Physiology in the University of Glasgow.

One aim of this book is to supply in as plain language as can be used some knowledge of what science has to say as to the body which we inhabit; the second aim is to give reliable assistance in the domestic treatment of simple ailments. The bodily ill to which young and old are liable are considered more fully than is usual in popular works.

The book treats of the human body in health, and the various changes produced by disease. It is devoted to Hygiene, or the conditions of health as regards Food, Drink, Clothing, Exercise, etc., and the rules to be observed for the promotion of health, both of individuals and communities. Details are given of the requirements of a Healthy House, in its construction, ventilation, water-supply, drainage, etc., the nature and mode of Action of Drugs and other remedial agents are explained. But this part includes more than mere drugs. Electricity, an agent as valuable in medicine as it is in commerce, and Massage, or medical rubbing, another new and formidable antagonist to ill-health, are also fully treated. The methods of dealing with Accidents and Emergencies find a place, and the commoner Surgical Instruments are described and their mode of use explained; Sick-nursing receives attention, and recipes for Invalid Cookery and Notes of Medical Prescriptions are given.

The Illustrations are very numerous, consisting of about four hundred figures printed in the text, and a series of sixty full-page plates, many of which are in colours.

Complete in Two Volumes, Roxburghe library binding. Price, Rs. 40 net.

10 per cent. discount allowed for prompt Cash with order or Rs. 5 with order and the balance to be recovered by V.-P. P. on delivery of the Books.

On Instalment System Rs. 5 with order, Rs. 5 on delivery and Rs. 5 per mensem thereafter.

FELT LIGHT EXERCISE SADDLE.

ADVANTAGES OF THE PATENT FELT SADDLE.

Extreme lightness, places the weight of the rider slightly more forward than the old style of saddle, a great advantage for race riding. A tall man can ride with stirrups extremely short without having his knees right off the saddle, as this saddle is cut more forward than the old style. Price is less than half of an ordinary saddle, is exceptionally nice to ride jumping in, also for backing horses first time, as stirrups can be dispensed with. Exercise clothing does not slip back to the extent it does with the ordinary saddle. Can be made in different sizes to suit customers, and from 2lbs. in weight for race riding, for which they are very suitable. These saddles are being used for steeplechasing, polo-racing and ladies' astride with great success.

next visit produced a delightfully varied 132, an easy red loser being muffed in both century items.

Inman's fighting spirit now asserted itself and in its way his eleventh-hour dash, although always a forlorn hope, was as fine as anything the game had produced. Naturally a sound methodical player, he deserted his usual methods and played a rapid and brilliant game, going all out with a refreshing confidence for the most difficult shots. His first essay saw 133 added, and after one minor innings he registered a splendid series of breaks, 79, 54, 84, a faultless 140 (closured by safety), and 31 coming in quick succession.

After this game rally the end was not long delayed Inman's only other break was a 31, and Stevenson drew steadily towards game with 32, 53, and a flawless 207, safety closuring the effort. The champion at his next hand appeared certain to get the requisite points, but after adding 116 a cushion cannon failed. Then with 17 (unfinished) Stevenson ran to game, amid a scene of tremendous enthusiasm. The averages were 5769 and 4383 in favour of Stevenson for aggregates of 750 and 526. Final scores:—

Stevenson	... 16,000
Inman	... 16,914

ATHLETICS.

Long-Distance Championships.—The long distance championships of the Amateur Athletic Association were decided on Saturday at Stamford Bridge. G. E. Larner won the seven miles walk and W. Scott took the ten miles running event.

In the walk E. J. Webb, the holder, was absent, but the reappearance of Larner, the ex-champion, compensated for this.

The first to show in front was H. V. L. Ross, but Larner went ahead in the second mile. At half-way he led W. G. Yates by twenty yards, his time being 25mns. 25 2-5secs.

Larner, walking in splendid style, ultimately won by seventy yards from Yates in 52mins. 8secs., with Ross third, another ninety yards away, and A. H. Pateman a good fourth

Next to finish were H. T. Morris and J. J. Lynch.

Sergeant O'Neil, of the Connought Rangers, the holder of the running championship, did not defend his title, and W. Scott seemed to have only one serious opponent in F. J. Hibbins, the midland cross-country athlete.

Scott at once led from Hibbins and the other seventeen starters. After sticking to the leader for two and a half miles Hibbins got into trouble with his footgear, and retired at three miles, when Scott led E. Massey.

The half-distance was covered in 25 mins. 34 4-5secs.

The old Cantab, A. S. D. Smith, took second place at seven miles, and ran a fine race, though he could make no impression on Scott, who widened the gap, and ultimately won by 600 yards in 52mins. 26 2-5secs. Massey was third before W. H. Brookes, W. J. Tucker, and J. Marsh.

RACKETS.

The Amateur Singles Championship.—At Queen's Club the final round of the amateur singles rackets championship ended, as was generally expected, in a win for H. A. Denison, who defeated the other Old Carthusian, H. W. Leatham, but only after the score had been called "two games" all.

Denison was quite off his game at the out-set and made many mistakes, but got going afterwards. He was the quicker in the court, hit much the harder, and towards the end served effectively.

In the first place Leatham ran out from 10-7, and in the second game he went from 2—7 to 9—7, and subsequently ran out with six. In the third game Denison made a sequence of half a dozen, while in the fifth he scored runs of seven and six. Details:—

Amateur Singles Championship.—Final round: H. A. Denison (Charterhouse beat H. W. Leatham (Charterhouse and Cambridge) by 3 games to 2 and 60 aces to 49. Score: 7—15, 8—15, 15—6, 15—10, 15—3.

Denison met the holder, E. M. Baerlein, in the challenge round on Monday and the result was a decive victory for Baerlein, who defeated his challenger, by three games to love. Baerlein, aided by his experience—he won his first championship eight years ago—showed great superiority in tactics, and placed the ball with admirable skill in the rallies; while he served effectively at times. Denison, who hit hard and occasionally finished the ball in fine style, made a very good fight in the second game, in which twenty-five hands were played. Details:—

The Challenge Round: E. M. Baerlein (Eton and Cambridge) (holder) beat H. A. Denison (Charterhouse) (challenger) by 3 games to love, 45 aces to 11. Scores: 15—2, 15—6, 15—3. After twelve hands had been played in the first game for a score of 5—1 in favour of Baerlein, the Old Etonian put on 4, and at his next attempt he went to 12—1 with 3. In the second game, after "3 all" had been called, Baerlein took the lead with 3, and eventually he attained "game ball" 6 with a sequence of 5, winning the game in his next innings. He added 4 aces in the third game, and subsequently the score was called "11—love" in his favour. Denison, who had been hitting rather wildly, then put on 3, but Baerlein in the following hand ran out with 4.

Baerlein has now won the championship four times in succession and six times in all.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT.

Vagaries of the post and a change in the timings of the hill trains prevented my report of last week's sport being in time for insertion in your last issue, so there is a fortnight's hunting to chronicle.

On Monday, 8th May, the meet was at Rees Corner at 6-30 A.M. A lovely morning, but scent was bad. Three jacks were found and gave some short runs but none were brought to book.

Tuesday, 9th May, a fairly large field met at distant Briar so early in the morning as 6-30. The going on this part of the downs is rougher and harder than nearer Ooty, and as a lusty jack made the running fast through the Nadankod Valley and up steep Hungerford hill horses had a pretty stiff gruelling before the quarry was run to ground, and eventually killed.

Thursday, 11th May, was the official opening meet of the season, and by the kind invitation of H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore the venue was at Fernhill, whither a huge crowd of hunters and non-hunters, the latter mostly in motors and traps, foregathered, and did justice to the excellent chota hazri provided. After the usual photo, a start was made in the direction of Rees Corner and soon a jack was found, which hounds were close up to for a long spin, but he got away in a shola and completely baffled his pursuers. A second jack was found in Jackal Shola and gave a good run, being eventually killed, hounds hunting splendidly.

There was no hunting on Saturday, 13th, owing to the horse show. On Monday, 15th, we met at Lake End and enjoyed two very good runs.

On Thursday at Sandy Nallah Toll Bar a field of about sixty assembled. Jogging out to Beadnell's a jack was soon viewed and hounds being put on the line, we hunted him for over an hour, when he went to earth.

To-morrow, Saturday, the venue is changed from Avalanche Finger Post to the more accessible Windy Gap, when it is to be hoped another good run will conclude a very successful fortnight's hunting.

"I don't know what I am ever going to do with that boy of mine! He is careless, indeed absolutely reckless, of consequences, and doesn't seem to care for anyone." "Good! You can make him a taxicab driver!"

A mother sent the somewhat satirical note to the teacher of her small son:—"Pardon me for calling your attention to the fact that you have pulled Johnnie's right ear until it is getting longer than the other. Please pull his left ear for a while, and oblige his mother."

A clergyman one day walking through his parish saw one of his parishioners leaning against the churchyard wall, coughing vehemently. "You've a very bad cough, George, said the clergyman. "Lor' bless you, sir, there's plenty of 'em over there would be glad to have it."

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Dalhousie, who were head of the League last year, have showed very ordinary form, and out of three matches have only secured one point. Against the Rangers the Trades Club lost by 3 to 1, but the defeat was attributed to the absence of Quayle. On Saturday, against Calcutta there was a lack of trustfulness about the Dalhousie attack and in the end they lost by a goal to nil. But Calcutta too are not as strong as one was led to believe. However, the new men have not quite settled down. I am of opinion that the Artillery will show the way during the first half of the League. As the season advances most military teams generally show a falling off, but barring accidents the present team of the R.G.A., which has been strengthened by five men of the 77th R.G.A. from Jalapahar, should render an excellent account of themselves this season. Admitting that the Rifle Brigade play pretty football, they are the weakest attacking line playing in the League. Against Calcutta, the Middlesex and the Customs on the whole they enjoyed more of the game—they had certainly much more of the play against the first two teams, but the Fort regiment had to content themselves with two draws, while on Saturday the Rifles were well beaten by the Customs by 3—1, and the goal that the military got was from the result of a penalty kick. The feature of this game was the total absence of foul and rough play, and for this Sergeant Hounsell has to be congratulated. At the very commencement of the game he pulled up two men for illegal charging, and giving each a warning the players knew that they would have to control their tempers, and so the game was an enjoyable one. On Monday Calcutta lost to the Middlesex, but on the play the civilians were entitled to a draw. The form of all the teams with the exception of the Garrison Artillery has been uncertain, the latter being the only side which has gained the full complement of points.

The Calcutta and Dalhousie match on Saturday on the former's ground attracted a large number of spectators, but the game was spoiled owing to a very strong wind. Dalhousie played with the wind in the first half, but their forwards lacked the necessary dash, Burnett being the only one to show to advantage. Dalhousie were also beaten at half, and of the Calcutta "trio" Pooler, in the centre, was in a class by himself. The only goal of the match came from the result of a corner, a shot by Grimswale striking the bar and rebounding into play; a melée followed and Pooler put through what turned out to be the only goal of the evening. Brotchie, left half, Quayle and Davey at back and Burnett in the forward line were always prominent for Dalhousie, while on the winning side, in addition to the halves Lay, Jenkins and V. Sherman were seen to advantage.

The Customs playing at home beat the Rifle Brigade on Saturday by 3 goals to 1, and although the exchanges were very even the military had themselves to blame in not drawing level. Galbraith, who was ordered off the field in the match with the Artillery, is under suspension and was an absentee, but he was really not missed. The game as stated was a clean affair and the Customs won on their merits. The forwards took every advantage of the opportunities presented to them to shoot and Hyland, who was tried at centre half, admirably acquitted himself. McCready played soundly at back, but Anderson caused his side considerable anxiety by skying the ball. Fitzpatrick, the Customs goal-keeper, was not kept idle, but most of the shots lacked sting. Playing with the breeze the Customs led at half time by 2—0, Hyland and Lyons being credited with the scoring. For "hands" in the penalty area against Edwards the Rifles were awarded a penalty. Bashford took the kick, but Fitzpatrick only half cleared, and the Rifleman rushing up beat the opposing custodian in his second attempt. The Customs were not to be denied, however, and Lyons, who showed fine form throughout, increased the lead with a grand shot which gave Norton no chance.

The Rangers and Y.M.C.A. on Saturday produced no score and this was partly due to the fine goal-keeping of Behrend and Mole and also to erratic shooting. The game was a marvellously even one and a draw was a fair index to the play. The Measurers had to scratch to the R.G.A. owing to several of their players being on leave.

The Calcutta and Middlesex match was the only one on the card for Monday, and consequently the attendance of spectators was large. The Dum Dum team have an exceptionally fine goal-keeper in Sergeant Pigott, and to him alone do the military owe their 2—1 victory. Bateman, the inside right of the Middlesex, also did yeoman service, and his two shots which proved successful would have beaten any custodian. Hugo Sherman made a welcome re-appearance and scored Calcutta's only point. A strong wind interfered much with the play, but at times the home forwards indulged in good passing. Calcutta are in want of a good centre forward, a player of the Fyffe or H. Cooper class, and let us hope that the club will be fortunate in securing one.

APPENDED is the table up to Monday:—

STRAY NOTES.

A VERY important note on the small fish which attack the larvæ of mosquitoes is attached as an appendix to the speech which Mr. R. P. Ashton delivered on the 27th January as President of the Mining and Geological Institute. It is written by Mr. B. Basu, Superintendent of the Calcutta Zoological Gardens. He states that a consignment of the famous "Millions" which keep Barbadoes free from malaria was imported into India, by Major Salby on the 13th November 1909, at the instance of the Sanitary Commission, U. P. They were placed in a large glass tank in the Reptile House of the Calcutta Zoological Gardens. Since then they have bred thrice and they seem to be pretty hardy, but they do not stand cold. Mr Basu adds:—"Before the arrival of these foreign fish I experimented on the larvicidal virtue of a variety of indigenous fish called Haplochilus "panchax" (Bengali name—Techokia sauki) in the tanks of our Garden and I placed a batch of them in a big glass tank side by side with the "Millions" I had thus an opportunity of comparing their virtues by introducing equal quantities of larvæ and was satisfied that the H. "panchax" are in no way inferior to their foreign brethren in devouring our enemies. The only drawback with the indigenous ones is that they do not stand rough handling, but they do very well in pools and tanks. The pools and tanks of the Garden which were once extensive breeding places of the mosquitoes are now almost free from them since the introduction of these fish."

THE Zoological Society of Sydney has now in its possession the largest specimens of Australian snakes ever shown in captivity. They belong to the species of Amethystinus python, and were procured from North Queensland. The largest of these reptiles is just a few inches short of 20ft. This specimen is quite capable of crushing a man to death with ease.

IN consequence of the rapid extermination of rare birds in the United States, the New York Zoological Society are taking active steps to protect the wild game-birds of the States. It believed that the chief agent in the destruction of wild birds is the shooting for the market. In most of the States the sale of game is absolutely prohibited, but the Atlantic States appear to be without this protection, and the States of New York, for instance, whilst it does not permit game killed within its borders to be sold, allows the sale of game killed in other States. The Zoological Society have now drafted a Bill to absolutely prohibit the sale of game in the State, and the measure is warmly supported. It is estimated that in Carrilock Sound about 200,000 wildfowl are killed annually for the market, and in one cold storage house there were, besides such birds as ducks, quail, and grouse, over 8,000 snow-buntings and 7,000 sandpipers to be sold for the table.

WITH the exception of a few steinbok and duiker, big game in the Transvaal has for years past been practically exterminated in populated districts. In what is known as the low country (i. e., north, north-west, and north-east bush-veldt) there still remains a fair quantity of big game. The great game reserves of the north-eastern portion of the Transvaal, which lie at an altitude above sea-level from 500ft. to 1,500ft., harbour many different species of antelope and other animals, which in this malaria-stricken tract of country are largely on the increase. Here, in addition to a small herd of elephants and black rhinoceroses, are to be found hippopotami, buffalo, giraffe, eland, kudu, sable and roan antelope, waterbok, wildebeest, redbok, bushbok, impala, zebra, wild ostrich, and many other smaller species of antelope.

NOTES ON SOME SMALL INDIAN MAMMALS.

IT is curious that rabbits have never been introduced into India: there is little doubt that they could be established in simple localities, if carefully protected for the first two or three years.

There is a so-called rabbit in Assam, rather smaller than the common wild rabbit of Europe. It has harsh greyish fur and a tiny tail, and is known to naturalists as Caprolagus hispidus.

The red headed pica (Lagomys Wardii) which is found in desert regions in Kashmir, living among the rocks, is a near relation of the hares, though most unlike a hare in appearance.

This pica is the size of a rat, is shortly and sturdily built and has no tail. I rather think I have once or twice seen these animals in Ladak, but am not sufficiently familiar with their characteristic to be certain.

ONE can read few American books without coming across mention of the chipmunk. I wonder if it is generally realized by Anglo-Indians that the American chipmunks are to all ordinary intents and purposes the same animals as the very familiar little palm squirrels of India.

There is in fact an Asiatic chipmunk in Western Siberia (Tamias Asiaticus), which is a very close relation of the American chipmunks, even from the naturalists' point of view. However though science separates the palm squirrels from the chipmunks, they are, nevertheless, to ordinary observers, the same sort of animals.

The Ontario and Californian chipmunks (Tamias quadrivittatus neglectus, and T. Lecrulus peninsulæ) are scarcely distinguishable from palm squirrels except for the ruddy tinge at their sides. This is most marked in the Ontario chipmunk, but paler on the Californian variety. This latter chipmunk has, moreover, white side and back stripes. Chipmunks have less bushy tails than palm squirrels; but for this and the slight differences in coloration, they look just alike.

Besides the two chipmunks mentioned, there are several other varieties, differing as regards colour and the number and arrangement of the stripes.

The smallest squirrels in the world are a pigmy race in Borneo, nannosciurus, of which there are several varieties. These miniature squirrels are no bigger than mice.

There is a striped squirrel (Menetis Berdmorei) in Tenasserim, which is very like the palm squirrel, but somewhat large. I have also seen a palm squirrel in a Nilgiri shola, at an elevation of 700 feet above the sea. It looked just like the common palm squirrel of the plains but may possibly have been a local variety, for the conditions in woods high up on the Nilgiri are absolutely different to conditions at Madras. The specimen I saw certainly seemed to have thicker fur than usual.

The Asiatic marmots, like the palm squirrels, have their American counterparts in the woodchucks. The woodchucks are regularly shot with the rifle in America, and are similar stout, cobbily built animals to the Himalayan marmots, so well known to ibex hunters. The Indian marmot spends the winter months in profound sleep and lays up no store of food in its burrow. The Baltis are very superstitious about these animals, believing that the souls of evil doers, after death enter into them. The prairie dog, well known on account of its associating with owls and rattle snakes, is another of the marmots. It is, however, a good deal smaller than the woodchucks and Himalayan marmot.

There are an interesting little colony of prairie dogs at the Zoological Gardens, Regents' Park. Visitors there in the spring, can see these small marmots busily engaged in collecting grass to line their burrows with.

"FLEUR-DE-LYS."

THE PLUMAGE TRAFFIC.

MR. JAMES BUCKLAND recently delivered an interesting address, at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole, on Some side-lights on the traffic in plumage," with special reference to the birds of India and our Colonies. Dr. G. R. Parkin occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance, among those present being Lady Spence-Churchill, the Hon'ble and Rev. W. E. Churchill, Colonel Jackson, Mrs. George Armstrong, Mrs. Ralph Flower, Major Williams, and Major G. S. Beeching.

Mr. Buckland said, in dealing with the subject of the traffic in plumage, that it was a too frequent mistake to speak of the plume hunter as though he were the chief offender. Although it was true that his was the hand which dealt the blow, he was but the instrument of others. In 99 cases out of 100 the plume hunter was merely the agent of the dealer. In Australia, where so many precious species of birds were being rapidly exterminated in the millinery interest, the few lyre birds left were all that existed anywhere on the globe, and when the British Government had allowed its protégés, the London feather dealers, to barter these away, another heaven and another earth must pass before such a glory could be again. With regard to the egrets of Australia, which were killed in the breeding season in order to obtain their plumes every year the harvest of death was reaped steadily, pitilessly, on the sowing grounds of life out in the silent wilderness where the birds had tried to hide their homes. And the story of the egret was the story of every wild bird killed for its plumage. Feathers that were used in millinery must be obtained, if they were to prove profitable to the dealer, when they were ripe, which was only at the height of the breeding season. It was, therefore, a self-evident fact that every wild bird killed for plumage was a strong factor in the ultimate and early extermination of the species. That the British Government should encourage the destruction of the birds of paradise by opening its markets to the sale of their skins was bad enough, but that it should be a party to the brutalisation of the native races of New Guinea was a detestable and inhuman piece of business in which the foremost Government of civilised nations should not engage.

In the diplomatic and consular report on the trade and commerce of Venezuela for 1908 it was set forth that, exclusive of the plumes of the egret, there were exported from Ciudad Bolivar during that year 10,612 pounds weight of "other feathers and plumage"—five tons, nearly, of feathers were shipped from one port in one year. He asked them to ponder on these figures, to remember that similar slaughter was taking place in every part of the world where there were birds whose plumage was marketable, and to reflect what this annual hecatomb darkly, yet plainly, foreshadowed. Whole colonies of the albatross and other magnificent specimens of birds had been wiped out of existence, killed with clubs, the wing and breast feathers stripped off to be sold for trimmings, the carcases thrown in heaps to rot, and their young left to starve.

The results of this wasteful and depraved practice of killing birds during the breeding season were becoming apparent everywhere, and unless the Plumage Bill was placed forthwith on the Statute-book there was immediately ahead of us a time when we should share the earth only with such survivors of the world's avi-fauna as the feather merchant might choose to tolerate. Even the delay which had taken place since the Bill was first introduced had been fatal to the existence of more than one species of the birds of paradise.

To his mind, said Mr. Buckland, the subject of bird protection was one of the most important now before the public. When he tried to realise the enormous sum that was lost annually to the agricultural interests of the world through insect and rodent pests and reflected that the birds which were the natural enemies of these pests were being decimated for an unworthy purpose, he was lost in wonder at the apathy of the public. Such a revolting state of things must cease. These inhuman vultures must be told that the birds of the world could be no longer given them to plunder as a carcase. The Government could not be permitted any longer to sanction such barbarity and such insane destruction. It rested with the public to secure justice.

The address was warmly applauded, as was also a most interesting series of lantern slides illustrating bird life in different countries. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Buckland.

INTERNATIONAL POLO.

THE hopes that Captain Hardress Lloyd and his team of military players would regain possession of the International Polo Cup from America have not been realized, and the trophy remains in the possession of Mr. H. P. Whitney's famous Meadow Brook team which won it from England two years ago. Seeing that the challengers were at a disadvantage in mounts—the play in both matches proved this—Captain Lloyd and his men are to be congratulated on their fine showing for they played magnificently and covered themselves with glory. They did all that could have been expected of them in the circumstances and theirs was one of those failures which is deserving of honor, not of blame.

In the first match England was leading by as much as 3½ points to 1½ when more than half the match was over, and was finally beaten by a narrow margin, after having had, on the whole, much the best of the game. The scoring in the second and last of the tests was more consistently in favour of the Americans, who eventually won the second match by 4½ points to 3½, but were evidently pressed to the last. That is a remarkable contrast to the events of 1909, when the Englishmen, playing on their own ground, were beaten in two matches by nine goals to eight and eight to two in a contest which never for a moment left the result in doubt.

It is an achievement of which Captain Hardress Lloyd and his companions—a team like Mr. Watson's composed of Cavalry soldiers—have every reason to be proud as a stepping-stone to ultimate victory. But, if only because fresh efforts will certainly be demanded now in winning back the Cup for England hereafter, it is as well to examine frankly the disadvantages under which the visitors laboured and to see that they are as far as possible removed another time. It must be remembered, in the first place, that polo has undergone remarkable developments in recent years, and that it has developed in different directions on either side of the Atlantic. Englishmen are only gradually becoming accustomed to the unusual pace of the American code, with its abandonment of the "off-side" rule. It is fair to remember, too, that the advantage which was predicted for some of the English players from practising on the hard, fast grounds of India proved in fact to be entirely baseless.

Both matches were postponed on account of rain, which at one time reduced the Meadow Brook ground to a swamp, and the heavy galloping probably accentuated the initial superiority of the Americans in the number of ponies. On this point at any rate there seems to be no room whatever for difference of opinion. The English players crossed the Atlantic with thirty-five ponies, while their opponents had nearly four times as many at their call; and though there are, of course, limits to the number which can actually be used in a single game, the advantage is obviously with the side which is so completely insured against accidents and "staleness." Nothing is gained by attributing this preponderance of ponies to mere weight of money, which in such a case spells national enthusiasm and unselfishness. The plain truth is that Captain Lloyd and his companions had every right to look from the beginning for a much larger measure of practical support in England than was actually forthcoming, and that some of the polo players of England have little cause for satisfaction in a situation which left the equipment of their representatives to a comparatively small number of public-spirited individuals. When an English team recovers the International Cup, it will be by the same unanimous determination to win which is the mainspring of American polo.

Probably few who have read of the international contests in America think of the history and origin of polo. It has been played in England for a little over forty years, and its first adoption by English officers in India took place less than twenty years before that time. Sixty years ago the game was confined to three places. Manipur, the wild hill state between Assam and Burma, was one, and thence it was first adopted by English planters and officers and introduced to Calcutta. At the other end of the Himalayas, in the North of Cashmere, where the Indus in its upper course provides a habitable valley in the midst of a waste of desolate mountains, from Leh to Gilgit and Chitral, the game receives the enthusiastic devotion of the Baltis and the Dards. In Japan also a form of polo exists, though there it is played with a racket, something like that used in lacrosse, and instead of goalposts there is a screen with a circular hole, rather over a foot in diameter, through which the ball drops into a bag-net.

The Manipur game is, as might be expected, very similar to that now played in England, and the Balti game is not very different. Drew, in his book on Cashmere, mentions several points in which he thinks the Balti game superior to the English. He expresses a strong preference for the Balti form of stick, which is shaped much like a hockey stick, though with a detachable head. It is from Baltistan that we get the word "polo" which, like the Tibetan "pulu" means ball.

During the middle ages polo was popular over half the Eastern hemisphere. It was known in Japan as early as the eighth century, at least, and in China in the seventh. Probably India learnt the game from the Mohemetan conquerors, though one of the latter was warned by an old vizier not to let his soldiers on the Indian campaigns drink wine or play chaugan (polo). Why polo should be thought so wicked does not appear, and it was certainly popular enough in India till the end of the sixteenth century, after which the records cease. The great Akbar, who died in 1605, was extremely devoted to it, and, like Nuruddin, played it even at night.

It is Persia that one thinks of as the original home of polo. The game appears to have died out there since the seventeenth century, but for twelve hundred years before then it was the favourite outdoor sport, the sport of kings, and in all probability it was a Persian invention. Certainly it is the kind of game that one of the "horsiest" of nations might be expected to find out. It changed a good deal during its long popularity in Persia. In earlier times it was played with a stick shaped like a hockey stick, as indeed was the case on the first introduction of the game into England. Illuminations in manuscript of the sixteenth century, however, show sticks with a curved cross-piece like that now familiar. By that date, too, the field was of the same size, 300 by 170 yards, as the usual English polo ground. The Persians called the polo-stick chaugan, and the ball guy, and chaugan was also the name of the game. References to polo swarm in Persian literature.

THE OPEN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP.

London, Saturday, 1st July 1911.

The Open Golf Championship was concluded at Sandwich on the 30th ultimo. There was a record entry of 225 this year. Bad weather interfered with the first two rounds but some exciting play was witnessed and the result was a tie for first place between Harry Vardon and Arnaud Massey with 303 strokes each. Herd and H. H. Hilton were next with 304, Braid, Ray and Taylor next with 305 and then Duncan with 306. Vardon and Massey played off the tie over a course of 36 holes, Massey retiring at the 35th, Vardon then being 10 strokes ahead. Vardon thus wins his fifth Open Championship.

THE AMATEUR ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION CHAMPIONSHIPS.

London, Saturday, 1st July 1911.

The Championships were held at Stamford Bridge this afternoon and though no records were broken the performances were good throughout. A feature of the meeting was the number of foreign entries and no fewer than seven events were won by competitors from outside the British Isles. Ramsdell of Pennsylvania repeated his victories of last year in the 100 and 220 while the ¼ was won by Halbhaus a member of the Canadian team. H. Braun a German who won the ½ mile in 1909 was again successful this year, while a fellow countryman R. Pasemann distinguished himself in the jump events—winning the pole jump at 12 feet, an inch short of the British Amateur record, and the high jump at 6 feet, while he was second in the long jump to Kirwan the holder. The four miles was the other foreign victory. The Universities took one event each Phillips scoring in the hurdles and Putnam in the hammer throw. M'Nicol who was third in the mile last year finished first to-day and Ross won the two miles walk in which he was runner up to Webb in 1910. R. Noakes winner of the steeplechase in 1908 and 1909, and second to English last year regained the championship to-day. Appended are results:—

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The result of the Princess of Wales's Stakes, run on Thursday last, arrived after this paper had gone to press. That the victory of Swynford over Lemberg, even though he was getting 3lbs. from the Derby winner of 1910, was unexpected is evidenced by the odds at which the pair started, and 6 to 4 on was by no means an unjustified quotation about Lemberg with his recent victory in the Coronation Cup at Epsom staring backers in the face. Swynford was at 3 to 1, or only a point and a half shorter odds than Lord Derby's King William, whose S. P. is returned at 9 to 2. In the Coronation Cup, run on the 1st June, Lemberg won by three-quarters of a length fairly comfortably from Swynford at even weights, but less than a month later Lord Derby's St. Leger winner with only 3lbs. better terms comes out and reverses the position, winning by a length and a half with his stable companion only a length behind Lemberg. There is nothing so uncertain on the turf as a certainty, and though, if we take a broad view of the performance of the two crack four-year-olds, it is difficult to say that there is very much between them, the balance is slightly in favour of Lemberg, who is very rightly entitled to be considered the most brilliant horse over a mile and a half in all England. On the Epsom form it looked to be very good goods, and that this was the popular opinion is very evident from the short price at which he went out. In the Leger last year Lemberg was considered to have been very unlucky and to have been deprived of the race by Maher's bad generalship for not coming on sooner than he did, and when he did make his run, attempting the dangerous experiment of getting through inside of Swynford, a manœuvre that Wootton very quickly blocked. It was even said that Wootton enticed Maher into the trap by coming out from the rails very slightly, and then when he saw his ruse had succeeded closing in again: by that time Bronzino had joined in the battle and Maher had then two horses instead of only one to go round, which, so close home as it then was, meant defeat in any case. But there were very few people who were ready to believe that Lemberg had been fairly and squarely beaten on his merits in the Leger. This belief was naturally strengthened when at the first encounter of the two horses in 1911 Lemberg wins brilliantly and it was considered as certain, as any mundane matter can be certain, that he would endorse this Epsom form in the Princess of Wales's Stakes at Newmarket. Now, however, that Swynford has reversed the positions and proved that he could have done so without the 3lbs. concession, the question as to which is really the better horse of the pair remains unanswered. Personally we read this last race to mean that there is not more than a pound between the pair of them, or that they are virtually one and the same horse. Their scores to date stand as follows, and we place them in parallel columns for easy reference :—

SWYNFORD.	LEMBERG
Unpl. In the Derby to Lemberg	Second Two Thousand to Neil Gow
Third St. James's Palace Stakes, 1 mile, to Lemberg	Won The Derby from Greenback and Charles O'Malley
Won Hardwicke Stakes, 1½ mile, from Marajax	Won St. James's Palace Stakes from Prince Rupert and Swynford
Won Liverpool Cup, 1½ mile, from Last Call	Won Eclipse Stakes, 1½ mile, from Neil Gow and Placidus
Won St. Leger from Bronzino and Lemberg	Third In St. Leger to Swynford and Bronzino
W.O. Liverpool St. Leger, 1½ mile.	Won Jockey Club Stakes, 1½ mile, from Dibs and Ulster King
Second Coronation Cup, 1½ mile, level weights, to Lemberg	Won Champion Stakes, 1½ mile, from Dean Swift
Won Princess of Wales's Stakes, 1½ mile, at 3lbs., from Lemberg	Won Lowther Stakes, 1½ mile, from Nimrod and Royal Realm
	Won Sandown Foal Stakes, 1½ mile, from Louvigny
	Won Coronation Cup from Swynford
	Second Princess of Wales's Stakes to Swynford

Lemberg has, of course, the far more distinguished career of the pair, but out of their four encounters so far each has beaten the other twice. Swynford was notably backward last spring, and it was not until the Hardwicke Stakes that he gave his trainer any encouragement. He followed this up by romping home in the Liverpool Cup, and immediately after that race he began to be seriously mentioned in connection with the Leger. The majority of people, however, held firm to Lemberg, who started at 5 to 4 on at Doncaster, Swynford 9 to 2 against, for it was said that he would not stay the distance and that his Liverpool Cup win over a mile and a quarter was no Leger gallop. The only circumstance which refutes the assertion that Swynford never ought to have won that Leger if Lemberg had not been so injudiciously ridden, is the position of Bronzino, who after a good performance in the Grand Prix where he set the seal upon himself as a genuine stayer, subsequently endorsed his display in the Leger by winning the 2 mile Doncaster Cup from Bachelor's Double and Royal Realm. The aspersion cast upon Swynford's staying qualities may therefore be said to have been undeserved, and he has this year given further proof of his stamina by these two most recent performances.

In addition to the interest which the duel between the two crack four-year-olds evokes the position of Lord Derby's King William must necessarily draw very considerable attention to him in connection with this colt's next really important engagement, the Leger. King William has been an unlucky colt this season. Early in the year he was very backward, and Mr. Lambton forbore to hurry him. He was not seen out in public at all before the Derby, but just prior to that race, for which he was at one time a strong second favourite, he jarred himself in his work and had to be stopped. In the race he ran nowhere, and this recent performance behind Swynford (10st. 1lb.) and Lemberg (10st. 4lb.), King William (8st. 13lb.) is the first time he has shown any sort of public form since the Dewhurst Plate last year, when he dead-heated with Phryxus. With Sunstar under suspicion and nothing else in the field of much note—the most prominent at present being his own stable companion Stedfast—King William is bound to come up in the betting on the Leger. It is said that it is extremely doubtful that Sunstar will stand another preparation, and with him out of the way the big Doncaster classic will look a fairly good thing for Lord Derby. King William has all along been boomed as considerably the superior of Stedfast, and but for his bad luck in his preparation he might have made a big bid for victory against Sunstar at Epsom. If King William is as much in front of his stable companion on the home gallops, as it has been said that he is, then judging by the running of Stedfast in the Derby things might not have been so easy for Mr. Joel's flier had King William been well. This last performance proves that King William is about to strike form, for it must be admitted that it is a very good gallop indeed.

The news that Mr. Galstaun has engaged F. Wootton to ride for him at the coming cold weather meetings in Calcutta is confirmed by letters from Home from private sources this mail. Mr. Galstaun's enterprise deserves success, but at present bar Prince Rupert he has nothing in his stable of much account, though he has a tremendously long string of very good second-raters. Prince Rupert failed to come up to expectations in the cold weather, and whether it was because he was asked to do too much and was unduly hurried forward or what, the fact remains that he plainly showed that he was not going to exhibit any qualities against the poorer class in India better than those he had shown at Home. He quite failed to stay the Cup distance, and Mr. Galstaun is diligently searching for something of good enough class to take on Mr. Apear's best and Last Call. Long-distance horses of any class, however, are very difficult to obtain, and it is said that "money will not buy them!"

Mr. E. L. F. de Soysa, who is well known in Calcutta as the owner of Merloolas, Jack o' Lantern, Comewell, Footprint, etc., has recently landed the English filly Ellenora in Colombo. She is a three-year-old by Santoi out of St. Atholine and has shown promise. She did not run as a two-year-old and was only once placed, namely, when she ran second in the Sherwood Forest Nursery, getting 12lb. from Tootles who finished second in this year's Oaks. This season, however, she has been more successful, and in April won the Decker Hill Maiden Plate at Birmingham, £100, 1 mile 3 furlongs, and ran second in a Mile Handicap at Newmarket in May to Fidelio by Gallinule. Ellenora was entered for the Brighton Handicap, but she did not run as she had prior to that passed into the possession of her new owner. She was bought from Major J. D. Edwards by Mr. E. H. Gregory for Mr. de Soysa and they seem at present rather fond of the Santois in Ceylon, as "Mr. Torrington" had one racing here last season, little Santoinette. Mr. de Soysa has not of recent years owned anything approaching Viceroy's Cup form, and his best horse was Footprint, who has scored for him both in Colombo and in Calcutta. He won our Merchants' Cup of 1908 and he has also won the Governor's Cup in Colombo.

The total cessation of rain in Calcutta has made the ground extremely hard all over and trainers were at their wits' end to know what to do till it was decided to water the sand track. To gallop anywhere else would be very dangerous and jumping is almost impossible. So far few arrivals from up-country are signalled, but the next week ought to see a few of our visitors making their appearance.

Alarm Clock, the hurdler owned by Mr. A. L. Butler, has arrived down from Behar, and we are sorry to hear that the horse is touched in the wind, as also the new brown that Mr. Butler bought earlier in this year and sent up to Behar to summer. This leaves this owner with virtually only one horse, Levi.

Tommy Daw is down from Darjeeling and is looking very well. On the cold weather form we put him about top of the open class in the Monsoons, for anything that can get within a length of Kaffirpan (winner of the Grand Annual hurdle race in Calcutta) at level weights as Tommy Daw did in the Burdwan Cup, won by Mayfowl, Parkhill second, Kaffirpan third, is good enough to take on any "monsooners." Maisonette and Craigendorrie will possibly be the next two best ones. Mrs. Walker's little horse is looking very well and bright and he is bound to pick his fair owner up a race or two as usual. It would not be a bad plan to follow the stable in jump races, for as a rule the luck which attends their horses is prodigious.

To Kalon and Lissadell will be down next week with Gee's horses.

Oakley has some of H.H. of Cooch Behar's, Coin II., Glenora, Forget Me Not and Yum Yum, and one of Prince Victor's, Tod, and one of his own, the chestnut pony Guide. Glenora ought to win races this monsoon, as there is nothing much in the 14-2 class. She is an Australian mare by Soult out of Nora but has not recently struck form. If she were sent over hurdles there would probably be some money for her.

Beedham arrives in Calcutta from Umballa on the 7th July and it is understood that he may bring the following amongst other horses with him :—Lord Rifleite, Baron Athol, Primrose, Shannon Lass, Atropine, Bit o' Fashion, Gilliflower and Charge. Sacricomar and Morino are also spoken of as possibles. He is said to be bringing nine in all and Gadsden and Ruiz come down to ride for him.

Heywood arrived last Saturday from Meerut and has a few horses and ponies with him.

Bond comes down from Lucknow next week so we hear and will have amongst others :—April Fool, Confederation and Mandeville. Confederation is the late curiously named "Admiral" (sic) Crichton. It was time that his name were changed. He is owned by Captain Winter now and is said to be a fairly smart horse over hurdles.

Macnamara, who has charge of Norton's horses at Dehra, is coming down with four new ones so we hear, but what they are exactly is not yet known.

Captains Charrington and Houston and Mr. Miles are possibly coming down for the Calcutta Monsoon Meeting according to recent reports.

Trahan comes down to ride for Bond, and Northmore arrived last Saturday from Mussoorie.

Mr. A. L. Butler has purchased the English pony Rarity from "Mr. Rake" and she is for the smaller classes. She is a very breedy-looking little mare with nice manners.

Levi, Mr. Butler's Hurdler, has joined Mr. Evers' string and Loch Lily (Mr. McCall's) has also joined his string and arrived down from Behar the other day. She is looking extremely well and is bigger and more furnished than when she was here last. She ought to take a power of beating in the pony hurdle race on the 22nd which is, we understand, her first engagement.

H. H. the Maharaja of Cooch Behar is stated to have purchased a horse and a pony in England, and the former is said to be something of very good class. The names are not yet mentioned.

The second meeting at the Tollygunge Club on Saturday last was slightly better than its predecessor in point of interest, though it was again only poorly supported and fields on the whole were small. The weather was atrocious and the going hard—it could not well be otherwise, since no rain had fallen for about ten days prior to the meeting. There were six races on the card and the public found most of the winners without a great deal of difficulty, four bot favourites out of six getting home. Suffragette won the hurdle race in a canter and could hardly be held back to them. Pan Out was made favourite for the Jiu Jitsu Pony Stakes on account of his size we presume. He was easily beaten by the diminutive Minnie who galloped all over him at the finish and had him sprawling a distance from home. With Asteroid scratched there was only one to back for the Visitors' Plate, namely Cairo, who started at 2 to 1 on and won with his ears cocked. In the Jiu Jitsu Handicap Miranda, the favourite, was lucky to get home from Loyalty and won more by good fortune than good management. Charlotte was a 3 to 1 on certainly for the Pony Cup and won all the way. Convent Girl, the good looking country-bred, was the disappointment of this race, as she cracked up very early in the proceedings and apparently cannot gallop a yard. Juba won the Cavalry Cup, but was lucky to do so, as Lady Thirza with all the weight ought to have got there. There are two

The Quetta Junior Polo Tournament ended in a win for the 23rd Cavalry "A" team who beat the Staff College Senior Cavalry in the final by 6 goals to 2.

The last of the annual series of Gymkhanas held at Simla took place at Annandale on Saturday last. Proceedings opened with a polo ball event in which ladies took six polo balls, one by one, from posts and dropped them into buckets. This was won by Mrs. Evans, Miss D. Stewart second.

In the next event gentlemen rode round a post unsaddling and carrying their saddles in their hands. Mr. Pollok won easily.

An affinity race followed, pairs to hit a polo ball round a post. Won by Mrs. Hugh Cavendish and Major Battine.

The next event was for ladies, to ride round a post carrying a polo ball on a badminton bat. Won by Mrs. Macneil.

In the last competition gentlemen were blindfolded and led by their partners who, armed with a butterfly net, had to catch a domestic fowl. The successful couple were Major Fraser and Mrs. Ruthven.

Colonel Baring's prize for the most marks secured by a lady at these three gymkhanas was awarded to Mrs. Cavendish.

At the Empire Swimming Championships held at the Crystal Palace on the 1st instant, Australia won the 100 yards and Canada the mile. Results were:—100 yards.—H. Hardwick (Sydney, Australia), 1; J. H. Derbyshire (Old Trafford S. C., United Kingdom), 2; Johnstone (Canada), 3. Time—60-3 5secs. One mile.—R. Hodgson (Montreal, Canada), 1; T. S. Battersby (Wigan S. C., United Kingdom), 2; M. E. Champion (Auckland, New Zealand), 3; Time—25mins. 27-3 5secs.

A hockey tournament will be played at Delhi during the Durbar week for a cup presented by His Majesty the King. The tournament will be open to the whole Indian Army.

As the time at Delhi will be limited the preliminary rounds will be played off under divisional arrangements, the winners of the divisional tournaments only coming to Delhi.

An American named Weymann has won the Gordon Bennett Cup for Aviators in the Isle of Sheppey on Saturday last. He covered 94 miles in 74 minutes 36-3 5secs. The French aviators Leblanc and Nieuport were second and third respectively.

There were three English competitors.

Entries from foreign clubs having an agreement with the Henley stewards for the great aquatic meeting on 6th, 7th, and 8th July will give the racing quite an international character. The entries are as follow: Grand Challenge Cup—Ottawa Rowing Club, Canada; Societe Royale Sport Nautique, Ghent, Belgium. Stewards' Challenge Cup—Ottawa Rowing Club and Mayence Rowing Club, Germany. Diamond Challenge Sculls—Everard B. Butler (Argonaut Rowing Club, Toronto, Canada), Bernard Von Gaza (Viking Rowing Club, Berlin, Germany), and Rudolf Lucas (Mayence Rowing Club, Germany).

Bordine (Italy) motored a mile in 31 seconds at Saltburn (Yorkshire) on the 1st instant. This constitute a world's record.

In the opening rounds of the lawn tennis championships now in progress at Wimbledon a memorable match took place between the Frenchmen Gobert and Decugis and the Germans Rahe and Kleinschroth. The Frenchmen won by three sets to love, the scores being 12-10, 7-5, 6-3. Critics were amazed at the skill displayed by the winners.

The most notable heat in the singles was that in which Decugis (France) beat A. W. Gore 2-6, 6-4, 8-6.

The open amateur golf competition for the St. George's Challenge Cup at Sandwich was noteworthy for the brilliant second round of 68 by E. Martin-Smith, the English international player. He had taken 80 in the morning, but his afternoon score enabled him to win the trophy with an aggregate of 148, the lowest ever recorded in the Tournament. R. Harris, of Acton, was second with 149, and Captain C. K. Hutchison, of Royal St. George's, last year's victor, third with 151, so that three men beat the previous lowest aggregate accomplished in the competition—namely, 153 by S. H. Fry two years ago.

In the final stages of the £150 professional tournament Edward Ray beat James Braid, the Open Champion, after twice tieing, by a hole at the 18th. In the semi-finals Day beat Rainford by 4 and 3, and Braid beat Harry Vardon also by 4 and 3.

The Open Golf Championship at Sandwich has resulted in the closest finish on record since the competition was started, Harry Vardon and Arnaud Massey tieing for first place with 303 strokes, Mr. Harold Hilton and Alec. Herd for the second place with 304 and James Braid, E. Ray and J. H. Taylor for the third place with 305. Of these seven players, six are ex Champions, Vardon having been Champion four times previously, namely, in 1896, 1898, 1899 and 1902; Massey, the celebrated French professional, won in 1907, Mr. Hilton in 1892 and 1897, Herd in 1902, Braid in 1901, 1905, 1906, 1908 and 1910, and Taylor in 1894, 1895, 1900 and 1909. Taylor also tied with Vardon for first place in 1896 but was beaten in the replay. Ray has never won the Open Championship, but he has for the past few years been regarded as the coming man. Vardon and Braid have each won the Open Championship five times.

The Calcutta Zoological Garden will remain open free to the public on Monday, 10th July, 1911, and on the following days, 14th August, 11th September, 9th October, 13th November and 11th December 1911

The Majeed Shield Football Tournament was brought to a conclusion at Hyderabad on the 26th June when the Hyderabad Club beat the Nizam College Past and Present in the final by 4 goals to nil and thus won the Tournament for the second time.

The annual Hot Weather Regatta in connection with the Madras Boat Club will be held on either the 2nd or the 9th September, entries closing on the 22nd August. The programme includes Inter Clubs Fours, Pair Oars, and Open Sculls all open to crews from recognised Rowing Clubs. Club Challenge Fours, Junior Sculls, Junior Pair Oars, and Double Sculls in tubs.

The first of the annual series of mud sports held by the Bombay Gymkhana is fixed to take place on Wednesday, the 12th instant.

Reuter reports that a representative Indian polo team is practising at Ranelagh for the King's Coronation Polo Cup. Count Madre has placed sixteen match ponies at their disposal. The team consists of Major Beirha Singh, Captain Shah Mirza Beg, Major Dhokul Singh and Colonel Chunda Singh.

Nine teams have entered for the Madras Hockey tournament and two games were played in the opening round on Monday, when the Oxford and Bucks L. I. beat Camerons by 3 goals to 1 and the Madras Volunteer Guards beat the M.C.C. by 3 to 2. On Tuesday Leicesters B. and the Sherwood Foresters played a draw—2 all, and Q. O. Sappers and Miners beat the Leicesters' Wing by a goal to nil. Leicesters A. bye.

The Simla Dog Show has been fixed for the 29th September, which will enable exhibitors from all over India to take advantage of Poojah railway concessions. A strong committee has been formed and the schedule is in the press and will be issued shortly. Colonel Shekleton and Captain Rind have undertaken the duties of Honorary Secretaries and it is understood that the show will be under the patronage of Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Hardinge.

At the Imperial Cricket Conference it was understood that England would visit Australia this autumn, but at the present time there seems to be just a possibility of the proposed tour falling through.

The arrangement to send a team out to Australia during the winter prior to a season in which the triangular contest will be in competition does not seem to be a very wise one. Such an arrangement, of course, means that certain players would be called upon to take part in three seasons' continuous cricket. In ordinary circumstances perhaps this would not matter very greatly, but considering that England will require to be at full strength next season, when Test matches will be played with Australia and South Africa, it might be for the good of all if the proposed tour during the coming winter in Australia does not take place.

In a message from Sydney Reuter's correspondent says:—

Referring to the statement of the Marylebone Cricket Club that the Australian Board of Control had so far failed to deal with various points requiring settlement in connection with the proposed tour of an English cricket team in Australia next winter, thereby endangering the visit, the secretary of the Board says that no communications in regard to points requiring settlement have been received by the Board of Control.

He expects a team from England in accordance with the international programme. The secretary also added that the draft list of fixtures for the tour is practically ready for submission to the M.C.C.

The following official statement was issued recently by the M.C.C.:—"With regard to the notice that appeared in the Press the M.C.C. have not received any communication from Australia as regards the number of matches suggested to be played and the guarantee."

On 23rd May they cabled to the Board of Control as follows:—"Waiting to hear from you re terms and tour if desired," to which no reply has been received. Whilst it was understood at the Imperial Cricket Conference that England would visit Australia this autumn, the terms have still to be settled. The matter has since been arranged for Reuter, wiring on the 3rd instant, reports that the M.C.C. has decided to ask Mr. C. B. Fry to captain the English cricketers who are going to Australia and to invite Mr. P. Warner, Spooner, Mr. F. R. Foster, Strudwick, Barnes, Hobbs and Rhodes to make the trip. The others have not yet been selected.

The Indian cricketers met Staffordshire at Stoke on the 27th and 28th ultimo and suffered another defeat. Going in first the visitors were all out for 74, Barnes taking 5 wickets for 14. Staffordshire did little better and were only 3 runs up on the first innings. The Indians again failed miserably in their second venture and compiled only 57. Barnes took 9 wickets for 15 runs. With 55 to make to win Staffordshire went in again and lost five wickets in putting together the necessary figures. The match against Surrey began at the Oval last Thursday, the Indian team batting first. This time they gave a much better display and put up the respectable total of 264. To this Kanga contributed 73 and Jayaram 57, both men batting well. Surrey had scored 37 for two wickets at the close of the first day's play. On Friday they completed their innings for 280, Hayes being top scorer with 95. The visitors went to pieces in their second innings and were all out for 120. Surrey had made 35 for two when stumps were drawn. With 70 runs to win they went in on Saturday and knocked up the runs for the loss of 4 wickets.

On Monday and Tuesday the Indian team played Kent at Catford. The County went in first and made 318 of which Dillon scored 130. The visitors put up 145 in their first innings and following on scored 176, to which Meherhomjee contributed 84. Kent lost one wicket in scoring the desired 4 runs and thus won by 9 wickets.

We publish in another column an article from the pen of Mr. E. H. D. Sewell which appears in the Times of India anent the tour of the Indian cricket team in England. Things are apparently going none to smoothly and it seems as if the team had got discouraged by its early defeats. The English sporting correspondent of the Madras Mail questions the sportsmanship of the Parsee members of the team. In a recent article he says:—"Madras cricketers will be disgusted and, perhaps, not a little surprised to learn that the Indian Selection Committee had a great debate on Tuesday as to whether they should play Jayaram or not! It is clear that he is one of their best players, and yet here we have them doubting his right to play. The fact is, the strong Parsee element in the eleven is already making something of a dead set against the other people on the side. They will get some very plain language from some of the Home papers if they proceed on these lines, as they are not now in Bombay, where, apparently, nobody is a cricketer unless he is also a Parsee. At the nets, when I have strolled round to the practice ground at Lord's, the Parsee element will not bowl to Jayaram. It is rather petty, and if this is typical of the sect, it is a pity there are any Parsees in the team at all." If things are really in this state it is a pity that the tour was undertaken. "A house divided against itself" gives us little hope for the success of the tour.

Appended are the results of important cricket matches played in England last week:—

Middlesex beat Somerset at Bath by nine wickets.

M.C.C. beat Oxford University at Lord's by three wickets.

Kent beat Notts at Dover by 153 runs.

Hampshire beat Derbyshire at Derby by five wickets.

Cambridge beat Leveson-Gower's XI. by 71 runs.

Lancashire beat Northants by nine wickets at Liverpool.

Lancashire beat Worcestershire at Manchester by an innings and 66 runs.

Yorkshire beat Notts at Nottingham by an innings and 27 runs.

Kent beat Leicestershire at Dover by an innings and 179 runs.

Middlesex beat Gloucester at Gloucester by an innings and 63 runs.

Warwickshire beat Hampshire at Birmingham by an innings and 296 runs.

Surrey beat Indians by six wickets.

Northamptonshire beat Derbyshire at Chesterfield by 107 runs.

Lancashire beat Hampshire at Manchester by an innings and 455 runs.

Yorkshire beat Worcestershire at Bradford by 9 wickets.

Jack Johnson, the champion negro pugilist, arrived in England with his wife, two motor-cars, 27 trunks, 2 trainers, a valet, a chauffeur and 2 ladies maids! He met with a big reception and has declared his willingness to fight any first-class man for £6,000.

Mr. Hugh J. MacIntosh, the well-known fight promoter, is negotiating with Johnson to give an exhibition tour of China, Japan, the Straits Settlements, Australia, Fiji and Honolulu in the autumn. He also hopes to bring about three encounters for the champion, if they can be arranged. Jack Johnson is willing to meet each of the coloured men Sam Langford, Sam McVea and Joe Jeanette.

Following his defeat by Billy Papke in their fight for the middle-weight championship of the world Jim Sullivan has made a sensational charge against the American. He declares that vaseline or other grease had been applied to Papke which caused all the punches he received to glide off his body and chin. Being greased is a practise which has been adopted by many American boxers but it was scarcely expected that Papke would resort to such tactics. It is true that there is no prohibition of the practice in any rules of boxing but it is surely high time that the matter was taken in hand by the authorities and suitable regulations devised to guard against its employment. Papke's use of his head in the fight under notice met with universal condemnation from those present but he protests that he didn't do a single illegal thing in this respect. He says he put his head down where he wanted it and that was where it would be safe. It is up to the "Thunderbolt" to clear himself of the grease accusation and he should set himself right with the sporting public the world over and show that he is a better man than the English champion when plainly free from adventitious aids. Tom Thomas and Harry Mansfield are both eager for matches with the American and there is every probability of a return fight with Jim Sullivan.

Here is something for the tender skinned. Alf Dunn, the Philadelphia boxing promoter, has invented a pneumatic boxing glove that some experts believe will cause the old "pillow" type to be discarded. The inventor, a trainer of pugilists and fight referees, evolved the new glove from his many years' experience in the prize ring. He was spurred to the realisation of his idea of a perfect glove by reason of the fact that in training it was desirable to avoid injuries, and the old padded glove, no matter how carefully it was used, was never a sure protection. With the pneumatic glove, with its cushion of air, it is impossible to cut or bruise an opponent in boxing practice. For this reason the glove would seem to be a good thing for gymnasiums and for all friendly bouts where it is the object of the opponents to score points without hurting each other. It is well known that high class fighters find a great difficulty in getting men to work with them in their training practice as hardly any salary will recompense a man for standing up and taking the punishment a champion may inflict, for in training for a fight it is necessary for a man to defend himself to the limit and it is a hard job to find sparring partners and trainers who will stand the gaff. But with the pneumatic glove it will make the trainer's task comparatively easy as the punches received will not be nearly as hard as with the old style gloves.

In connection with the exhibition of Biblical animals, birds, etc., at the Natural History Museum, reference to which was made in our last issue, attention has been called to the mistakes that were made by translators from the original Hebrew. For instance, most of the miracles were natural, but misunderstood, phenomena, and many of the animals described—as conies, whales, etc.—had no resemblance to the animals we know under such descriptions. The ravens, too, which fed Elijah were not birds, but a tribe known by the name of "Ravens." Locusts on which St. John the Baptist fed were the seed pods of the locust trees, although baked locusts are to-day much eaten in the East. The burning bush is Diclamnus fraxinella, a shrub something like a tomato plant. The leaves have a balsamic fragrance, and the flower is a spike of claret-coloured bells. This plant surrounds itself with an inflammable aura. On a fine windless evening after a warm day a match held near the burning bush will be followed by a soft explosion such as gas gives when lighted through an incandescent mantle, the inflammable aura will take fire, and the flame run lightly along the stems and up the claret-coloured spikes, licking about the flowers and leaves. The curious display will last only a few seconds, then the flame will die away and the plant stand green and unharmed, stripped of nothing but of that unseen spiritual essence which had surrounded it. After a day or two's rest it exhales again its own fiery atmosphere, and the experiment can be repeated.

In a recent lecture at the Royal Institution Mr. W. P. Pycraft brought forward a new theory of the origin of migration writes the Globe. There are, he points out in the first place, a number of species in which migration is not possible. These are those birds which have become adapted to a particular food supply only occurring in a limited area. Such birds obviously cannot overstep the bounds of their food supply. As examples of such species the toucan, horn-bills, and birds of paradise are cited.

On the other hand, birds which feed on worms, molluscs, and insects, may gradually extend their range. Migration with them, in the first instance, is a sort of overflow phenomenon. Thus the younger birds are driven further north year by year as the suitable nesting areas are seized upon and defended by the others. Finally they are forced into those northern regions which the cold renders uninhabitable in winter. Thus, after the breeding season they are driven south in search of food and warmth. At the return of the breeding season the competition for food, combined with the desire to return to their nesting-places of last year, will carry them north again. Again the winter overcrowding of the original area of the species will drive some further south. These also would go north in spring to their old breeding sites, and so acquire the habit of migration.

Thus, according to Mr. Pycraft, it is not the breeding instinct, not the search for food, nor, as some have suggested, the desire of longer daylight, that drives the birds north in spring. It is the press of numbers; they are, so to speak, squeezed out, and the migration becomes a habit. The birds which go farthest north in spring are thus, according to Mr. Pycraft, the youngest generations. And on the return journey these are the first to start. It has been often said that those birds which go farthest north to breed are those which go furthest south to winter. But Mr. Pycraft contends that this is only true of species and not of individuals.

As a complete explanation of migration the above theory seems to fail in not explaining why the squeezing-out process has not produced migration on north and south lines among our resident birds, such as larks, thrushes, starlings, etc. Nor does it seem to explain those great east and west migratory movements of these and other species. No wholly satisfactory explanation of the origin of migration has, in fact, been yet brought forward, and the complete solution may require a combination of existing theories in which Mr. Pycraft's interesting suggestions may take their place.

Referring to the egret, whose plumes are now worth more than their weight in gold, a writer in Forest and Stream mentions that the egrets of North America are now practically wiped out, and Venezuela is about the only place where they can still be found. Even in South America the birds are declining in numbers as the result of their persistent pursuit. The writer says that less than a century ago egrets inhabited a great part of the United States. There were large heronries in the State of New Jersey, and many birds arrived in New England, although they were never common there. Even within the past twenty years they bred in great numbers in the West as far north as Oregon, and the Southern States swarmed with them during the early part of the last century. In the winter of 1877-78 great flocks of these birds were still to be seen everywhere along the lagoons, rivers, and lakes of the southern countries of Florida, and great heronries were located there, some of which produced annually many thousands of birds. Plume-hunters were even then destroying the birds there. The country stores in Southern Florida had large bunches of airgrette plumes hanging above the counters. The hunters were paid twenty-five to fifty cents for each plume by the storekeepers, and to every plume was attached a piece of skin from the back of the bird that produced it. The bird had been killed and "scalped" to get its plumes. Ten years later aigrettes were growing rare, and now both species are nearly extinct in the United States. The parent birds were shot down while attending their nests or bringing food to their young, and the young were left in their nests to starve. To-day aigrettes such as were bought of the Florida hunter at two shillings each now bring over eight sovereigns per ounce in London, or over twice the value of gold.

"Sonny," said the constable, "but I'll have to arrest ye—you been drivin' along at the rate of fifty miles an hour." "You are wrong, my friend," said the driver, "I say I wasn't and her's a ten-dollar bill that says I wasn't." "All right," returned the constable, pocketing the money. 'With eleven to' one against me I ain't goin' to subject the country to the expense of a trial."

Two artists who worked in chalk on the pavement at street corners were boasting of their artistic achievements. "Do you know," said one, "I drew a sixpence on the ground one day, and a beggar nearly broke his fingers trying to pick it up." "That's nothing to what I did," retorted the other, "I drew a leg of mutton on a stone, and it was so real-like that a hungry dog ate half the stone before he found out his mistake!"

London Week by Week.

Friday, 9th June 1911.

There are but two topics this week—the Coronation and the Horse Shows. London is in splints, familiar landmarks have disappeared behind forests of seats, gates and barriers confront one at every turn, masts, columns, arches and other festive manifestations abound and already the gaping crowds of idle Londoners reinforced by the earlier contingents of country cousins, make walking a slow and wearisome business.

Those of us who remember the Jubilee Year of 1887—and one need not have many grey hairs to pay for the recollection—must be struck with the enormous difference between then and now. The public interest in such national pageantry has grown so hugely that one could hardly believe we were the same folk as peopled London close upon a quarter of a century ago.

The Jubilee procession of 1887 was the first great pageant that London had seen since the funeral of the Duke of Wellington, but the long interval that had elapsed had in some measure dulled the public appreciation of the spectacular, and though the Queen's progress through her capital was indeed a marvellous spectacle, and streets were thronged with enthusiastic crowds, there was not the same eagerness displayed in securing places as had marked the last journey of the great Duke, when the line of route of the procession was thronged at four o'clock in the morning.

Next came the Diamond Jubilee of ten years later, showing a great advance in popular enthusiasm. The crowds were denser, the stands erected were more numerous, the precautions taken by the police in the way of barricades and so forth were far more ample, and were fully justified, and from that time to this the interest, not only of Londoners but of all the nation, has grown apace.

The crowning of King Edward and Queen Alexandra saw a further notable advance, and now, when we are within a few days of the Coronation of King George and Queen Mary, the lines of route of the processions present a sight such as London has never seen. The streets seem almost buried under timber, and still the shock of the hammer and rattle of planking resounds far and wide as fresh structures arise, while every street and alley opening upon the routes has its gates for foot and wheeled traffic ready to be closed at any moment when the congestion of the streets within threatens to become a source of danger. Next week London will be a good place to live out of.

And as to horse matters. London now has its summer as well as its spring season of shows, and, though lasting only a little more than a fortnight, it cannot be doubted that the former, made up of the Olympia and Richmond fixtures, attracts quite as much attention as that constituted by the spring gatherings of the four great horse-breeding societies held in the Agricultural Hall, Islington, in the late spring. Each season, however, is distinctive. The man who is judge of a shire horse, hackney, hunter, riding or polo pony, looks forward to the spring shows as the time when he is likely to see the young horses which are to dominate the ring during the coming season and about which he has possibly heard a great deal during the dreary days of winter. Men of this stamp, real lovers of horses and splendid judges flock to the Agricultural Hall from all parts of the country, and for three weeks, horses and only horses are in the minds of a large proportion of temporary visitors to London. Sales are brisk throughout that period and there is not much doubt that many a farmer looks to business done at the show of the Shire Horse Society to provide a huge slice of the money which has to be found for rent. The Richmond and Olympia fixture which come later in the year are quite different. The former is held in the Old Deer Park, surely the finest show arena in the country, and attracts London society in a way proving that the horse has lost little of its popularity since the advent of the motor-car; while at Olympia, the show of the International Society, with Lord Lonsdale at its head, is now firmly established as one of the chief social gatherings of the year.

No more successful show has been held at Richmond than that which finished in the Old Deer Park last Saturday and during the afternoon there did not appear to be a vacant seat in any of the spacious stands, while the club and other lawns were also crowded. From the beginning to the end the programme was full of interest.

The most wonderful garden in England has blossomed round a magic village which has sprung up within a week at Olympia, where, with fitting Coronation splendour, the International Horse Show opened on Monday. A thousand workmen and gardeners have accomplished this miracle. They have built up a palace of stables outside the arena, and have set up a Tudor village round a park in which the finest horses in the world compete.

One of the wonders of the Horse Show is the royal suite of apartments. The reception-room is a reproduction of an ancient panelled hall, with oak beam, arched doorways, and carved chimney-piece. On either side of the reception room are the retiring rooms of the King and Queen. Her Majesty's room is furnished in Queen Anne style, with walls of soft grey foliage and plum-coloured curtains. Through open mullioned windows the King and Queen look out on horses galloping and jumping in fairyland. They see an old-world village green ablaze with flowers and fringed with gabled houses, in which the audience will be framed.

A sum of £50,000 has been spent to create this fairyland for horses. The stables are as luxurious as money and skill can make them. Many of the champions have flower-decked and festooned stalls, and are waited on and tended as though they were Derby favourites.

Such a gathering of the nations has never before been seen even at Olympia. Every class of animal from the "champion jumper of the Pacific coast" to the costermonger's donkey, driven by its much-bepearled owner, is represented in the list of more than 5,000 competitors for the record prize list of £13,500.

The troika galloping—the fastest horse-drawn method of travel—in which three horses are driven abreast, the central trotter being flanked by gallopers, provides some of the most thrilling contests of the show. The Belgian team of officers, the present holders of the King Edward VII. Gold Cup, are again competing, and for the first time the German army is strongly represented.

The jumping competitions attract most attention. Much is written about the British horseman, his skill and daring and all the rest of it, and the foreigners are extolled hardly less; it is perhaps just a little disconcerting to find the latter practically beating us all along the line in these feats. We don't come in a good second either. If some of these scribes could see a Kadir Cup Meet or some of the riding you good people put in in India, or what horsemen in the Australian bush accomplish over terrific country after the wily Wallaby, or what men and horses are asked to get over at Flemington, they might perhaps modify their transports. By the way, a lady showed the best of them the way on the opening day at Olympia. Mrs. Lewes of Wales, in the great competition open to the world, without doubt provided the feature of the show. The jumping this year is peculiarly difficult, requiring much nerve as well as skill, especially a wall jump that is led up to by a steep bank. Many of the most expert horsemen in the world failed to clear the fences. English officers, foreign officers, and hunting men all did badly. Rider after rider came to grief in quick succession, and rarely did one complete the course without knocking down one of the gates. But Mrs. Lewes took the jumps with the greatest of ease on Blue Peter. She cleared the difficult wall in the best style, and when she had finished the round only a top brick and a top bar were displaced.

A London doctor is responsible for the statement that the sun's rays acting through glass have a purifying effect on the pores of the skin and produce a milk-and-roses complexion. This announcement is likely to bring about a new fashion of ladies' hats with immense glass brims, or head coverings in the form of the bell glasses used to force early salad. Every rich woman will carry her own facial conservatory in order to ensure a delicate complexion; and for those whose means are restricted, and whose skins are unhappily sallow, public glass-houses will no doubt be provided by municipalities, where at a small cost they can spend several hours a day in sunny weather in order to capture the milk-and-roses cheeks of a Dutch doll.

A game of living chess was played at Balham this week. Living chess strikes one as rather slow. The majority of the pieces may have to stand on their allotted squares doing nothing during the whole of a torrid afternoon. How annoyed a Black Bishop would be if he could not get away for a drink lest he should be required to check the White King. And think of the Knights clad in heavy chain armour! But the case of the poor Kings would be most piteous of all, for they would have to remain on the board till the very end, unable to move more than one square at a time. Regal perhaps, but deadly monotonous. The happiest pieces would be those taken early—the pawns that fell, prisoners of war, in the opening encounters. Removed from the field of strife they could rush away to claret cup and strawberries and cream, none making them afraid.

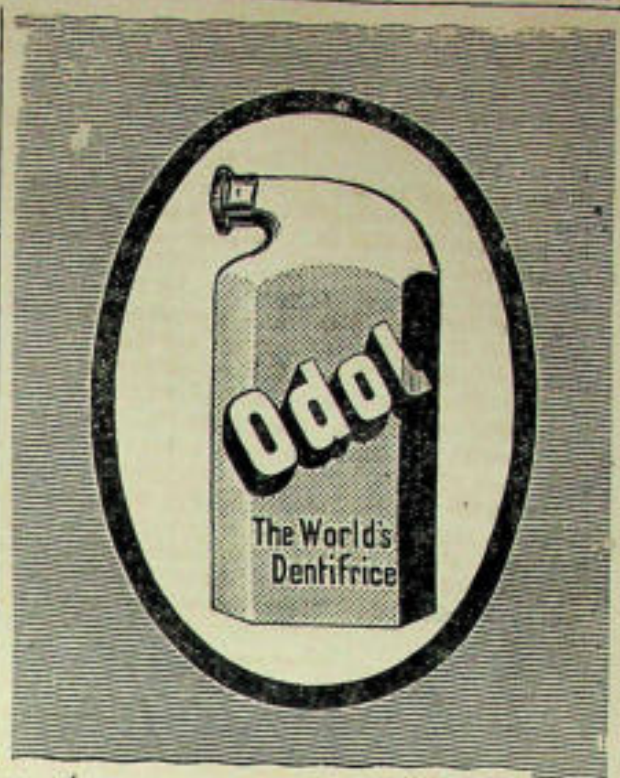
It is a bold hand which sets out to dramatise Dickens. With the exception of "The Only Way" no play—founded upon the great novelist's books—and there have been dozens of plays founded upon them—has achieved lasting success.

The reason is plain. Dickens's stories count for little. His characterisation and "atmosphere" count for almost everything. And no dramatist has yet succeeded in transferring that "atmosphere" to the stage.



Look after your teeth! If you don't they will fall into decay and you will lose them, and probably your health into the bargain. There is no excuse for neglect when for a small outlay you can be sure of keeping them in good condition and perfect beauty.

Odol is unique as a mouth-cleansing preparation, for it exerts its antiseptic and refreshing influence not only whilst using it, but for hours afterwards.

Being liquid it penetrates all cavities and interstices in and between the teeth, and impregnates the gums and the whole lining membrane of the mouth, providing a safeguard and preservative for the teeth such as no other dentifrice can possibly do.

It is this lasting effect that gives to daily users of Odol the absolute assurance that their mouths are permanently protected against the processes of decomposition, which, if not guarded against, inevitably destroy the teeth.

It was only to be expected, then, that Mr. Metcalfe Wood's new version of "Dombey and Son," with which the Charles Dickens Centenary Festival opened at the Savoy Theatre last Wednesday night, would contain the usual faults of its kind. Yet the dramatist has accomplished a difficult task with skill. By starting the action of the play after Dombey's second marriage to Edith he has been able to contrive some strong scenes of drawing-room melodrama; and he has padded out the piece amusingly by introducing the majority of the eccentric characters which figured in the novel. And if these characters are not the people of our dreams—if, indeed, they have ceased to be human creatures at all, and have become scraps of familiar dialogue on two legs—they sufficed to win mirth and a welcome, if only for old acquaintance sake, as it were.

Miss Evelyn Millard was womanly and sympathetic as Edith Dombey, and others prominent in the long cast were Messrs. Clifton Alderson, Louis Calvert, O. B. Clarence, Evelyn Beerbohm, and Miss Sydney Fairbrother. There was a large number of Charles Dickens's descendants present in the house, and the play was exceedingly well received.

Paderewski and an expectant throng of ecstatic admirers were at the Queen's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. It was hardly the Paderewski many of them expected to see. His hair is iron-grey now and quite tidy. His old imperious manner (who has not seen him raising a storm over the height of the piano stool?) had given place to a strictly business-like air. Indeed, his whole aim seemed to be to avoid applause—as if Paderewski, especially when he is playing Chopin, could.

He left no pause between the movements of the sonatas, but kept his hands on the keys, so that none had the temerity to cheer until the whole work was ended. But if it did not look like the work of old, it sounded like him, and as the cadences rippled or leapt forth one could see all around the typical Paderewski audience.

Here was one of the foremost pianists in London, sitting with his left hand supporting his chin, silent and motionless, hardly speaking a word, even in the interval, to the companion beside him. Here was another pianist, a young man fresh from his musical scholarship, sitting alert, his face tight drawn and his eyes fixed on the famous pianist. And here, there, and everywhere were students from all the musical academies, all enthusiastic—some, perhaps, a little gushing—their hands clasped tight together and that rapt look in their eyes that only love or music can produce. The audience unusually quiet till then, broke the spell when the last strains of Chopin's Polonaise had died away. They simply swarmed to one corner, where Paderewski was hidden by a curtain. And then, when he came on bowing amid a tumult of cheers, one felt that this certainly was the true and the only Paderewski.

Mr. Alexander Vansittart Knyvett, C.I.E., lately head of the Criminal Investigation Department in Bengal, died on the 10th instant, in his 63rd year.

A son of Major-General W. J. B. Knyvett, he was born and educated in India. He joined the police service there in 1867, and had a share in the Lushai campaign of 1872. Four years later he had reached the grade of District Superintendent, and in 1888 he served with the Sikhim force, receiving the medal. He was Secretary and a Member of the Provincial Police Committee appointed by Sir Steuart Bayley in the early 'nineties, and in 1892 he became Personal Assistant to the Inspector-General of Police. In 1899 he was appointed Deputy Inspector-General and head of the Criminal Investigation Department in Bengal. Very heavy and anxious cares devolved upon him in this post in connexion with the growth of political unrest and anarchical conspiracy in that part of India. He was created a C.I.E. in 1904 and retired in 1908. He was a capable officer and fine sportsman and rider. He married in 1877 Louisa Janet, daughter of Francis Johnson Jessop, and had a family of two sons and two daughters: one of his sons, in the Bengal Police, is I think the well-known hurdler and high jumper.

DUKE ADOLPHUS FREDERICK IN AFRICA.

It is a good sign of the times that personages of the rank of the Duke of [illegible] and the noble author of the volume before us [illegible] conspicuous part in the exploration of the most [illegible] corners of the world; and, moreover, [illegible] with their journeys after the style of the old [illegible] hunter, but surveying the country they travers[illegible] natural products in a thorough and scientific [illegible] the "Heart of Africa," which has been issued [illegible] the form of a profusely illustrated royal [illegible] an almost absurdly low price, Duke Adolph[illegible]kenburg tells us, for instance, that not only [illegible] succeed in making the survey of a large area [illegible]rica in the neighbourhood of Lake Kivu [illegible] home nearly 3,500 botanical specimens a hu[illegible]ls of various kinds, more especially inverte[illegible]y large series of photographs and specim[illegible]e anthropology and ethography of the regions traversed. The study of the zoological material will, it is stated, occupy specialists for several years to come, and it is confidently expected that a large number of new types, more especially among the lower animals will be brought to light; while it is added that five-and-twenty new species of birds have been already recognised.

The publication of the full results of the examination of this mass of natural history material will, of course, be a matter of time, but it is already announced that a number of groups of plants hitherto regarded as peculiar to the West Coast extend right through the equatorial forest zone to the region of the Upper Itari and the foot of Ruwenzori on the eastern side of the continent. This demonstration of the homogeneous character of the forest track might, indeed, have been expected, since the results of the work of the last dozen years has shown that the same thing obtains in the case of the animals.

Neither was geology neglected; and it is of particular interest to learn that Lake Kivu, which lies due west of the Victoria Nyanza, on the confines of German East Africa and Congo territory, owes its formation, at least in great degree, to earth movements brought about by the mighty Virunga volcanoes.

To give the German public an idea of the extent and importance of the collections obtained during the expedition, an exhibition was held in the Berlin Zoological Gardens in the spring of 1909, which elicited exclamations of surprise and wonder at the wealth of material put at the disposal of the scientific institutions of the country. Yet even this exhibit, large as it was, comprised only the more attractive and generally interesting portion of the collection.

The original idea of the Duke was to reach the sources of the Nile from Lake Chad, but this project presented so many difficulties that it had to be abandoned; and it was finally resolved to start from Mombasa, and after marching to the Victoria Nyanza, explore the district round Lakes Kivu and Albert, and then to push westwards to the basins Ituri-Aruwimi rivers, and, finally reach the west coast. This ambitious project was carried out practically to the letter, the expedition starting from Mombasa in May 1907, and starting homeward from the west coast in the corresponding month of the following year.

If we may judge from the large proportion of the illustrations devoted to the nature of the districts traversed, the author appears to be specially interested in anthropology and ethnology and if so, he had a fine field in which to exercise his energies, as he met with an extraordinary variety of human types in the course of the journey.

Witness, for instance, the contrast between the handsome and almost European-looking Mtussi and the members of the two other western tribes shown in the coloured plate facing page 66; while in marked contrast to all three were the various pigmy tribes encountered in the valleys of Semliki, Ituri, and Aruwimi. In hideous contrast to all is the portrait on page 182 of a cannibal, with filed upper teeth, from the Border Mountains of the Congo State. For athletic activity the Mtussi must take the palm not only in Africa, but throughout the world, one of these splendid natives having cleared a height of about 8 feet (250 metres) in the presence of the party, two members of which stood beneath the bar when this marvellous high jump was accomplished.

Among the picturesque incidents of the journey was the reception accorded the party by the Sultan of Ruanda:—

"A tremendous gathering of the people had assembled behind the chairs on which we were sitting with the Sultan, as well as opposite them, forming a lane, and awaiting the appearance of the gifts with painfully subdued excitement. And they came—came in endless succession. In front was a milch cow, whose calf was carried behind. She was intended to represent the greatest honour that could befall me. She was followed by ten oxen with immense horns, and then a never-ending herd of goats. . . . They were succeeded by an endless chain of heavily-laden wakuta, with hundreds of loads, consisting of meal, milk, honey, butter, beans, and bananas. After them appeared other trains bearing firewood—which was rare in the neighbourhood, and therefore particularly valuable. . . . The procession took nearly an hour to pass by."

The Duke was unsuccessful in his attempts to come across an okapi, and expresses his opinion that the utmost Europeans can expect is the occasional sight of an individual freshly killed by the okapi's. He was, however, able to purchase several skins and one skeleton from the natives; and from the comparative abundance of such trophies believed the animal to be much less rare than is commonly supposed.

In the statement that the skin first sent to England by Sir Harry Johnston was purchased at a high price for the Tring Museum, the author makes a somewhat serious error. Indeed there are many passages in the book which mark the lack of scientific knowledge on the part of either the author or translator. We find, for instance the wart-hog alluded to as the "decotyles" (p. 170), which is the scientific name of the American peccaries; while the term "moor antelope" is one unknown to English naturalists, although from the illustration facing page 170 it appears to indicate the Uganda kop. The word "crustaceous," in place of "Cretaceous" on page 88 is also a stupid blunder; while the expression "piscifauna," in place of "fish-fauna," on the same page, is an instance of the translator's imperfect acquaintance with English, the same being indicated by such spellings as "Uelle" and Lake "Techad."

Despite these blemishes, the book forms a most readable record of an adventurous and interesting journey, carried to a successful issue by the pluck of the party and by the thoroughness and care with which it was planned.

IN THE EAST.

By Longhill.

It is exceedingly doubtful if China is the country one would visit, as a matter of choice, if one wanted the very best of sport at both small and big game. For the latter it would perhaps be difficult to beat Africa and British Columbia, and as to the former—well, old England is not to be despised. Still, good shooting is obtained in the land of the Celestials, and those who reside there on military and other duty or on account of business, and those who pay the country a visit on tour, frequently make good bags.

It is now a much easier task to reach China than it was a few years ago. Then one had to do the whole of the journey from England by boat, reaching Shanghai after five or six weeks of pleasure or otherwise, according to the manner in which the traveller was affected by the mode of travel. Now, thanks to the Trans-Siberian Railway, the time taken in the journey has been very considerably reduced, the boat portion of it reaching a minimum.

To get about China with anything approaching ease it is necessary either to put oneself in the keeping of a fellow-countryman or to engage, besides the coolies, a native who has a knowledge of English; for the language is one of the biggest difficulties of the country. To think of learning even sufficient Chinese to be understood in a single district is beyond the possibility of the average Englishman without years of serious study, and what sportsman would devote that time for only a few weeks or months spent in the country? To add to the difficulty there are different "dialects"—different languages, practically, so far as the Britisher is concerned—as is only natural in an empire of such vast dimensions; and even the man who considers himself clever enough to overcome all obstacles in this direction gives up in despair in a short time.

A great deal of shooting is to be obtained in the neighbourhood of the rivers and canals—in the marshy edges and paddy and cotton fields. For this reason one of the best methods to adopt is to hire a house-boat and pursue the sport from it, landing when and where necessary for shooting among the snipe and waterfowl. Shanghai is a very good centre from which to start, journeys being made hundreds of miles up the Yang-tse-kiang from Woosung to Nanking, Hankow, and other places.

The variety of wildfowl and game to be found spread over the country is by no means small, and the lover of a good mixed bag need not be disappointed so far as variety is concerned. Pheasants and partridges are to be obtained in the largest quantity, speaking in a general way; quail, snipe, and wild pigeon help to swell the bag materially; and woodcock, geese, duck, plover, and teal are also to be had in large numbers. The shooter has two periods during which snipe can be obtained—in the spring to the middle of May, and in the autumn during September.

A day's snipe-shooting during the early autumn usually means a big bag, for at that season of the year the birds appear in their thousands, returning from the breeding grounds in the North to find more congenial quarters during the winter months. The migration lasts from four to six weeks, during which time the snipe are to be had as they pause for rest in their flight. There are two kinds shot during the migrations—the Swinhoes and the pintails, the distinguishing feature (interesting, perhaps, more to the naturalist than to the shooter) lying in the latter bird being slightly smaller and having six more tail feathers than the Swinhoe. The banks of the Yang-tse-kiang afford excellent ground for these birds, and Shanghai, Hankow, Ichang, together with Foochow, Hangchow, and Chingkiang, provide plenty of sport.

The pheasant is "at home" in China, and is to be found in large numbers. Besides the ring-necked pheasant, which was introduced into England in the eighteenth century and has since interbred with the British bird, the silver pheasant breds in South China, and the golden pheasant—a picture of beauty—in the wooded, mountainous districts of the North. Although for its size England contains as many pheasants as any other country, this is only because of the enormous expenditure, as owners of shoots know only too well; but in China the bird is wild and free, and shifts for itself. It does not follow, however, that it is easy to bag, for it is decidedly more difficult to get at and to hit when in range than its preserved brethren.

In this brief sketch it is impossible to do more than has already been done—that is, make bare mention of the other birds. Among the four-legged game and "vermin" are to be numbered bears, lions, tigers, leopards, wolves, foxes, deer, hares, and wild pigs, cats and dogs—the larger animals in the North, and not very numerous there; the others fairly general throughout the empire.

The country in the neighbourhood of Shanghai is very flat, and, viewed from a height, reminds one somewhat of the Fen district. It is a cultivated dead level, with canals and creeks intersecting it, and embankments to prevent, as far as possible, inundation by the terrible Yang-tse-kiang. In summer the land is seldom five feet above water-level, and after heavy rains the result may be imagined. In winter the inland cotton fields and water-courses are alive with wildfowl, game birds, and hares (such as they are), presenting a veritable sportsman's paradise, though in some parts the "yamen" of the villages exact—or did a few years ago—such tolls on the bags as to make it scarcely worth while obtaining them.

Late autumn and winter are decidedly pleasant, as regards climate, compared with summer. From May to September the atmosphere is hot, damp, and stagnant, and mosquitoes abound in thousands. Then follows a cooler period, until frosts arrive about January, followed by raw damp weather until summer again arrives. As for rain—well, it does rain in China, and in no half-hearted manner, both in summer and winter; very often, with scarcely any warning, a deluge commencing and lasting for hours, and ceasing as suddenly as it began.

In the mountainous districts it is, naturally, much cooler, even within a comparatively short distance of the chief port, and the scenery is really fine. In the neighbourhood of some of the well-known summer resorts favoured by those who are fortunate enough to be able to leave the cities during the hottest months one can almost imagine himself in the heart of the Scottish Highlands.

As regards guns and dogs, it is advisable to use those with which one is best acquainted. No one will gainsay this so far as dogs are concerned, whether he favour pointer, setter, spaniel, or retriever; and the same may be said of guns. Some swear by 12-bores, and others by 10-bores, and no doubt each is best in the hands of the individual advocating it. The most important thing is to see that the gun is light in weight, for, with the thermometer 20 or 30 degrees above summer heat, every ounce tells. It is hot work at best, but there is no need to make matters worse. A good all-round shot is No. 6, though here, again, there is difference of opinion, some preferring No. 8. It is, however, certainly not advisable to have smaller shot than the latter, as there is the danger of wounding birds without bringing them to bag.

A rifle is, of course, handy for the big game; but it is quite possible, and more than probable, that the visiting sportsman would not be called upon or have the opportunity to use it. It is to be hoped, however, that no reader will ever be in the position of the sportsman in another Eastern country, who, having one barrel of his gun loaded with shot and the other with a bullet, brought down several snipe with his first barrel, but discovered, when a tiger put in a sudden appearance close at hand, that he had used his bullet on the birds! The writer forgets what happened to the tiger—or the man!

The coarse-fish angler is about as well provided for as is the rough-shooter, and for this department of sport delicacy of material need not be considered; indeed, the fisherman will be wise to consider strength before anything else, whether using ordinary coarse-fishing or sea-angling tackle, for one can never be sure what is going to take the bait.

Many of the fish will be well known to the home sportsman, as, for instance, the carp, perch, bream, shad, and pike; but there are others. The "dong" is a species of perch, the "tai" a thin fish with a silvery belly; the sturgeon is also found in the rivers. At Shashih, between Hankow and Ichang, sturgeon have been captured up to 700lb. in weight.

The Chinese have their own methods of fishing, and do very well with them, too. The cormorant-fishing, which is to be seen on most of the rivers, is too well-known to need description. Nets are also used, but in a rather peculiar fashion. On the banks of the rivers are to be seen rickety-looking structures, built of bamboo, and carried several feet over the water, after the style of a skeleton jetty. At the end of this is a large net hanging from hoops, looking somewhat like an inverted parachute. This is lowered into the water, and as it is withdrawn the net contracts, thus keeping in the catch. The fisherman then scoops out the fish from a safe position on the "jetty" with a hand-net attached to a pole several feet in length.

Another method, which certainly gives little trouble to the fisherman, is to tilt a rowing-boat so that one side of it is on a level with the water. A narrow piece of white wood is fastened to the edge of the boat, and when a certain native fish of silvery hue, which swims in shoals, sees the board, it tries to leap over it, and, in the ordinary course of events, naturally falls into the boat.—LONGBILL in Shooting Times.

SPORT IN BRITISH NORTH BORNEO

BRITISH NORTH BORNEO is a country where sport with the gun and rifle can be enjoyed to an extent not to be surpassed even in the wilds of Africa. The wet season in Borneo lasts from October to February, and the best time for shooting is immediately before it, when the animals are in good condition and their skins in the best order.

It is somewhat strange that the bigger game is far more numerous in the North than in any other part of the country. Whether it is that the climate is more favourable or for some other unexplained reason, I am unable to say, but the fact is there.

Among the animals are the elephant, two horned rhinoceros, wild cattle, whether originally so or the descendants of tame ones, escaped or set free a long time back, is not known. There are also the clouded tiger, black panther, a most ferocious brute, and a variety of others, both feline and canine, of less note. Reptiles are plentiful, and the crocodiles, of which there are two distinct kinds, are savage and much dreaded by the natives.

The monkey tribes are in legion, and the diversities of the species such as would delight the most insatiable of naturalists. The foremost of them is the Ourang Outang of which there are two kinds. The larger the natives call "Mias Pappun," and it attains to great size and strength, some of the full grown males reaching a height of six feet and over. The smaller is named "Mias Hambi," and it is this that is exhibited in Zoos and travelling manageries. Wild fowl is innumerable both in kind and quantity.

It was as one of the staff on Railway construction that I was in British North Borneo. The track for the line had to be cut through the forest and jungle. There were only two Europeans, the Platelayer and myself, the Superintending Engineer visiting occasionally. Our duties kept us at the rail head, and we camped there, the workmen, Chinese and Malays, constructing their huts of tree branches and grass, around us. The Malays were very deft at this work. Our provisions came monthly from Labuan, an island lying nine hours' sail from the western terminus of the Railway at the mouth of the Tipitong river. The Railway is fifty-two miles long and in the North terminates at Sandakhan, the capital. So far as fresh meat and fowl went we had to depend upon a few Dyaks,—aborigines I believe, who were always hanging about the camp—supplemented by what we shot ourselves. The Dyaks would not work, but were expert trackers and hunters.

We were busy at bridge-building over a river some hundred yards broad about a dozen of miles inland, and had not hitherto met with any large animals. My attention, one morning just after work commenced, was called to a family of Orangs—they do not live in troops but each family by itself. They were of the "Mias Pappin" or large kind, and appeared on the bank of the river about one hundred yards up stream. There were seven of them—the two old ones and five youngsters some of them nearly full grown. Each carried a stick using it as a staff. It was the first lot I had seen and as they looked rather warlike I caught up my rifle and made ready to fire. One of the Malays, however, came immediately in front of me holding up his hands. I asked the interpreter, half Malay half Chinaman, what the man meant. He replied that if the Orangs were not interfered with they would not molest us, but if any of them were shot, the rest would attack at once, and that they were terrible enemies. I did not fire, but being somewhat dubious of their intentions and they looked such a formidable band, I kept my rifle handy. They are immensely powerful, and in a hand-to-hand conflict, men would be nowhere. After about an hour's watching they disappeared, and although we had frequent visits from the same or other families, I bothered no more about them. I never saw more than nine in a family.

During 1st September we were in the country, a Mahomedan festival occurred, and the work was stopped for five days—from Tuesday night to Monday morning. The Platelayer and I embraced the opportunity to endeavour to lay in a stock of meat, and I had despatched some of the Dyaks in different directions to locate any herds of cattle that might be in the vicinity and to return by Wednesday night. They came in to time and reported two herds—one to the South about four miles distant, the other to North-West about the same distance. We completed our preparations, and on Thursday morning early started in quest of the former herd. We took half a dozen Dyaks as guides and a lot of the Malays (they will go at any time on a hunt) accompanied us. The Dyaks chose a track worn through the forest by wild animals, and along this we travelled in single file. On each side the forest was impenetrable, and in many places the creepers and brushwood had to be cut away to allow us to proceed. After a two hours march we came to the neighbourhood of where the cattle were said to be. The Dyaks picked up their track and we followed it to an open grassy glade about half a mile broad and three miles long. The cattle were feeding but we were to windward of them and had to shift as the least taint in the air would have caused them to bolt. We were led round the North end of the glade keeping to the timber, and advancing along the opposite side to gain a position towards which the cattle were steadily browsing. Suddenly a young bull, full grown, emerged from the forest some distance ahead and walking into the open about fifty yards, commenced to graze towards the herd. The Platelayer and I were for running along under cover of the forest and firing at the animal, but the Dyaks again made signs to us not to do so. They explained that if we fired we would only get one, as the herd would take the alarm and make off. If on the other hand we waited and ambushed the herd we would have the chance of at least two and perhaps more, before they got out of range.

The advice was good and we accepted it, but meanwhile another actor had come on the scene. This was a tiger which from a bush close to which the bull was feeding, sprang upon the latter and with a sweep of its paw knocked him down. The bull made an attempt to regain his feet but the tiger struck again and apparently the stroke was fatal. The thing was done in a moment, and we two Europeans prepared to shoot, but once more were stopped by the Dyaks. They said "Let the tiger gorge itself then we are sure of it, but if you fire and only wound it it will charge, and possibly escape." We moved within as close range as the trees and undergrowth would permit and watched. The tiger was crouched on top of the carcass, from one of the hindquarters of which it was tearing great mouthfuls, growling all the time. This lasted fully twenty minutes, when it began to show symptoms of having enough, and to stretch itself out. The interpreter who had been talking to the Dyaks, now turned to me and said, shoot. Both rifles spoke together, and both bullets took effect. The tiger made a convulsive leap and landed on the grass beside the body of the bull. One of the Malays ran forward, although I called to him to keep back, as I was by no means sure the brute was beyond mischief, but he drew his kris and proceeded. He jabbed at the tiger and like lightning partially raising itself, it struck out catching the Malay with its claws on the left hip, laying it bare to the bone. I immediately ran up and put a bullet through its brain. It was found that the two first shots had struck, one in the ribs, and the other in the spine, rendering the hindquarters powerless.

We sent the injured man into Camp at once for treatment, and gave orders for a number of the Malays to transport the tiger and the meat of the bull there also.

The herd of cattle had entirely disappeared. These cattle are large, finely formed animals, and the shooting of them is not without its danger. The bulls, whether the herd is lying up in the forest or feeding, are always on watch on the outskirts. If the herd is alarmed by any unusual and unaccountable noise, it stampedes at once and will travel miles before pulling up. If disturbed by any other animal or by man, as soon as the cause is sighted, the whole herd, headed by the bulls, will charge. If the aggressor has not a tree or other suitable place in which to seek refuge he will be gored or trampled to death. A solitary bull is a still more dangerous customer. He will not only charge without provocation, but if you climb a tree he will stand sentry at the foot. If you do not take your rifle and cartridges up with you, your chance is a poor one. Our Platelayer had an experience of this kind which will be told further on.

Taking the Dyaks and the remaining Malays along with us we started to go home round the south end of the glade to find if possible some addition to our bag. Not a single head of cattle could be seen, but in a secluded corner we came upon a mother elephant with her young one—a little chap that could only have been a few days old. It had the appearance of being all stumpy legs, head and trunk. It was a comical looking creature, very playful, running between the legs of the old one, patting her on the head with its trunk, and going through all sorts of antics. We consulted with the Dyaks as to the possibility of capturing the youngster, but they said it could only be done by shooting the old one. We could not see our way to carry matters so far, besides we were in doubt as to whether we could kill the great animal with our Martini Henry carbines. We, therefore, agreed to leave them alone, and I was glad afterwards that we did so, as had we succeeded in getting the little one there was nothing suitable to feed it on in camp.

We had lost so much time over the elephants that I told the guides to strike direct for the camp, and on crossing the glade we managed to knock over a few partridges. On striking the timber again we moved on rapidly and carelessly not expecting any more sport. A signal was, however, in a short time passed backwards to halt. A Dyak then came to the rear and told us that in a small clearing in front two deer were grazing, the Platelayer went to the front and getting within distance shot the buck. This proved an acceptable addition to our day's bag. We arrived in camp without further incident, and found the injured man had been attended to and the bull meat and dead tiger brought in. The tiger measured 9 feet 3 inches, and the Dyaks undertook to cure the skin.

We rested the next day, Friday, but on Saturday morning the Platelayer asked me to accompany him to the bridge, some three-quarters of a mile distant. I could not then go with him but advised him to take some of the men. He, however, went off alone taking his rifle remarking that he might get a shot at a crocodile. He did not turn up for dinner, and about two o'clock I had the trolly put on the rails, and accompanied by a lot of the Malays set off for the river.

On arriving at the bridge we found the Platelayer a prisoner, and a shaggy old bull standing sentry over him. The bridge was finished about half across the river, and about 30 feet further out was an unfinished pier. There was a gang plank laid between the two for the workmen, some twenty inches broad. It appears that the Platelayer on arriving at the bridge, saw the bull feeding some fifty yards up stream and, without thinking what he was doing, let drive at and wounded him. The bull, spying his adversary, charged at once, and the Platelayer ran along the bridge, dropped his rifle, and crossed the gang plank on his hands and knees. The bull could not cross the plank, but mounted sentry, and in that position I found them. Had the Platelayer only had the presence of mind to have carried his rifle with him, he could have shot the bull at his leisure.

The Malays ventured as close to the enraged animal as it was safe to go, waving their head dresses but he declined to be enticed off his watch. I then had a canoe unmoored, and we put off, on the upside of the bridge, until opposite the bull, when I fired bringing him to his knees. With a bellow he regained his feet, turned and in a very groggy condition made for the land. We got the Platelayer into the canoe, and when we got ashore the bull was sitting in a clump of grass, threatening his baiters with his horns. I put another bullet into him and the Malays, Mahomedan fashion, buried their krises in his throat. The carcass was sent to camp on a material trolly.

The Platelayer never went out by himself after that experience.

The skin of the tiger was returned to me in a fortnight beautifully cured, and as soft as chamois leather. I sent it to a friend in Singapore to get it mounted in blue cloth, and it now forms a very handsome and attractive article in the house of a relative in Edinburgh.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,
The Famous Nile Explorer.

Newton Abbot Devon.

Dear Sirs,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"Truly yours, (Signed) SAML. W. BAKER.

ASCOT.

Everything, of course, was spick and span for the opening day of what proved to be the most brilliant social meeting of the year. The morning was perfect; warm sun-shine with a refreshing breeze. Despite the absence of rain the lawns in front of the various stands and the grass in the paddock looked fresh and green. There were flowers everywhere The Royal box was outlined with red and white blooms, while rambling roses decurated the other private boxes, and the gardens behind the grand stand were gay with bright coloured flowers. Their Majesties arrived in state and got a rousing welcome, and, of course, society with all its appenages and trappings was on hand in full force. The racing was good and there was a big surprise served up in the race for the Gold Vase, in which a 20 to 1 chance rolled home comfortably. Results:—

The second day all went well. That is to say, the weather nobly rendered assistance towards making this Coronation Ascot a huge success, regarding it from the Society standpoint. And perhaps that is the point of view from which it must primarily be regarded. At the beginning of the week nothing would have been more welcome than a heavy fall of rain. It was denied us. Nothing short of a deluge would have had any effect on the parched ground, and we do not want deluges at this meeting. On the other hand the adamantine going caused several scratchings and rendered some races rather flat and uninteresting in consequence. Results:—

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

THE anticipations that the customary large crowd would flock to Castle Irwell to witness the race for the Manchester Cup were fully justified, although, thanks to the serious disturbance of traffic occasioned in the city by the procession of schools, visitors were as a rule late in arriving at the course. A good afternoon's sport was provided, and the drop in the temperature was immensely appreciated. Results:—

ASCOT.

Everything, of course, was spick and span for the opening day of what proved to be the most brilliant social meeting of the year. The morning was perfect; warm sun-shine with a refreshing breeze. Despite the absence of rain the lawns in front of the various stands and the grass in the paddock looked fresh and green. There were flowers everywhere The Royal box was outlined with red and white blooms, while rambling roses decorated the other private boxes, and the gardens behind the grand stand were gay with bright coloured flowers. Their Majesties arrived in state and got a rousing welcome, and, of course, society with all its appenages and trappings was on hand in full force. The racing was good and there was a big surprise served up in the race for the Gold Vase, in which a 20 to 1 chance rolled home comfortably. Results:—

The second day all went well. That is to say, the weather nobly rendered assistance towards making this Coronation Ascot a huge success, regarding it from the Society standpoint. And perhaps that is the point of view from which it must primarily be regarded. At the beginning of the week nothing would have been more welcome than a heavy fall of rain. It was denied us. Nothing short of a deluge would have had any effect on the parched ground, and we do not want deluges at this meeting. On the other hand the adamantine going caused several scratchings and rendered some races rather flat and uninteresting in consequence. Results:—

Magnificent is the fitting word to describe the weather, the State Procession, the company and everything appertaining to Ascot yesterday except the racing, which was a little tame by comparison with many previous and corresponding occasions, and again the sport was prejudiced by the hard condition of the ground. This remark particularly applies in connection with the Gold Cup, which dwindled down to quite a second-rate affair, devoid of its usual classic character. Results:—

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE MAY RACES.—Undoubtedly the feature of the Cambridge May Races which concluded on Saturday was the very fine performance of the Varsity cox, C. A. Skinner, who was steering Jesus. After being deprived of the Headship on the first night Jesus looked like being bumped every night, but only fell a couple of places. On the last two nights they were very hotly pursued by the Hall, but Skinner using his head magnificently succeeded in evading them every time they attempted to make their bump, and got his crew home. It was one of the finest diplays of coxing seen at Cambridge for many years, and Jesus certainly owe one, if not two, places to him.

After an interval of ten years First Trinity returned to the premier position. They had three Blues—J. B. Rosher, C. F. Barnard, and F. E. Hellyer assisting, the former having come "up" purposely to row. Pembroke, who have never yet been "Head," got to the second position, but while they made First Trinity go hard all the way they were never equal to bumping them, and were rather expected to get a little closer than they did.

First Trinity very easily hold the record in the number of times they have been "Head of the River," this year being their 26th occasion since 1850. Jesus come next with twelve, but they have made their record in two batches—1875 to 1885, and the last two years Third Trinity have been head on eleven occasions.

The racing was keen, but the total number of bumps was very small, being only thirty, First Trinity were the only boat to win their oars. Six boats made three bumps—First Trinity II., Selwyn, Caius, Queens', Caius II., and Downing, Corpus and Jesus III., a fell a place each night. On Saturday Messrs L. H. K. Bushe Fox, J. B. Peace, G. L. Thomson, and E. Donaldson officiated.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY CHALLENGE PAIRS.—Only four entries were received for the pairs, the preliminary heats of which were rowed on 9th June.

Heat 1: (First Station) L. G. Wormald (Magdalen) (bow), 12st. 5lb. and A. S. Garton (Magdalen) (stroke and steers), 13st. 6lb. beat (Second Station) C. C. Whadcoat (Brasenose) (bow and steers), 11st. 4lb. and W. G. Nott Bower (Brasenose) (stroke), 12st. 5lb. The Magdalen pair at once drew away, and coming through the Gut the Brasenose pair fouled the Bank, leaving Magdalen to win by about a dozen lengths. Time—7mins. 26secs.

Heat 2: (First Station): M. Quiller-Couch (Trinity) (bow and steers), 11-9 and C. Poole (Trinity) (stroke) 12st. 10½lb. beat (Second Station) F. E. Buller (Trinity) (bow and steers), 10st. 6lb. R. W. Fletcher (Belliol) (stroke), 11st. 8lb. The Trinity pair gained a length at Iffley Reach, and their advantage was further increased through the bad steering of the mixed crew, who twice fouled the bank. Trinity ultimately won by 3 lengths. Time—7mins. 45secs.

The final heat between Magdalen and Trinity was rowed on Saturday afternoon, but a very poor struggle was witnessed, the Magdalen crew having the race in hand from start to finish. The time was fast, but this was hardly surprising in the almost entire absence of both wind and stream.

Final Heat.—(First Station) Magdalen—L. G. Wormald (bow), 12st. 5lb. A. S. Garton (stroke and steers), 13st. 6lb.—1; (Second Station) Trinity—M. Quiller-Couch (bow and steers), 11st. 9lb. C. Poole (stroke), 12st. 10½lb.—2. Magdalen quickly settled down with a strong lead, and coming out of the Gut were two lengths to the good, and taking a good course along the Willows, they had increased the advantage at the Red Post. Trinity here made a good effort, but Magdalen held their own without difficulty and eventually won by a good four lengths. Time—7mins. 14secs.

HENLEY.—As the date of the Henley regatta draws nearer, the indications are that this meeting of meetings on the river will, socially and otherwise, prove to be one of the most attractive and successful of recent years.

Although the entries do not close for some days a large number have already been received. The Jesus College crew that recently defeated the Belgian eight have given up so much time already this year to rowing, that their decision to turn out once more at Henley, was hardly anticipated.

Mr. G. E. Fairbairn, for instance, must surely be in need of a rest, but it is expected that he will row for his college in the Grand. The crew will commence practice within a few days either at Richmond or Putney.

The New College eight is also an excellent combination and as the ability of the Magdalen (Oxford) crew cannot be doubted, it would seem that the colonial and foreign competitors will have all their work cut out to gain any successes this year.

Among those who will compete in the Diamonds is W. D. Kinnear, of the Kensington R. C., who won this event last year.

Evan Dewar, another entrant for the Diamond Sculls, is to be trained by "Bossy" Phelps, and Butler, the Argonaut representative, is coming over with the Ottawa eight.

Bernard von Gaza, of the Viking R.C., Berlin, who was taught to scull by Ernest Barry, and Rudolf Lucas of the Mayence Club, have been at Henley in previous years.

WINCHESTER

HIGH POWER BIG GAME RIFLES

When you want to drive a ten penny nail you do not use a tack hammer. On the same theory, when you hunt big game, you shouldn't use a medium or low power rifle just because you happen to have one, but rely upon a long, strong-shooting rifle—one that hits a smashing, knock-down blow. Such rifles are the Winchester Model 1886 .33 caliber, the Model 1895 .303 British, .35 and .405 calibers and the Winchester Model 1910 .401 caliber Self-Loading rifle, using high power smokeless powder cartridges with metal patched, soft pointed, bullets. The bullets used in these cartridges have a good sized cross section which, with their energy, gives them great killing power at the distances most big game is shot. The accuracy of these rifles and cartridges has been thoroughly established, and if you sight right the game is yours. Winchester rifles and Winchester cartridges—the Red W Brand—are made for all kinds of hunting and sold everywhere.

THEY SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG

London will enter eights for the Grand and Thames, and fours for the Stewards and Wyfolds. The Thames R.C will have eights for the Grand and Thames, fours for the Stewards and Wyfolds, and two pairs.

For the Thames Cup there will also be competitors from Kingston, Twickenham, Vesta, Molesey, Anglian, London County, and Westminister Bank, and it is not improbable that Kensington and Aureol will also have crews out for this event.

QUETTA JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

The 23rd Cavalry "A" team(—1) met the Staff College Senior Cavalry (scratch) in the final of the Tournament on Saturday, the 24th instant. There was a large gathering of spectators but the game was a disappointing one. The Staff College did not get going till it was too late and their opponents were all over them, eventually winning by 5 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The 23rd attacked throughout and scored twice, Allen and Paske being responsible.

Second Chukker.—They continued to press and Kirkwood added to the score

Third Chukker.—The Staff College attacked but Allen relieved and coming away scored with a long shot. Sherer hit another goal on resuming. Then the Staff College got away and Muirhead opened their acount.

Fourth Chukker.—The 23rd took up the offensive once more and scored in a scrimmage. There was no more scoring and the 23rd won as stated.

General Sclater gave a speech and Mrs. Sclater distributed the Cups at the conclusion of the game. Teams:—

INTERNATIONAL POLO.

THE SECOND TEST MATCH.

The second game between the English and American polo teams for the possession of the International Polo Cup was played on the 9th June in beautiful weather. The sun lighted up a brilliant spectacle. The polo ground and the grand stands were decorated with British and American flags flying from alternate staffs. The British colours were also displayed on the temporary stable occupied by the ponies of the Englishmen, while a couple of hundred yards away on the other side of the field American flags denoted where the stables of the Americans lay. The dark blue and white of Hurlingham on the east side of the field and the light blue and white of Meadowbrook on the west side added colour to the picture. Nearly all the ladies appeared with sunshades of varied hues.

There was no alteration in the opposing sides from those which played in the first test match, the teams being as follows:—

America.—No. 1, Mr. L. Waterbury; No. 2, Mr. J. M. Waterbury; No. 3, Mr. H. P. Whitney (captain); back, Mr. D. Milburn.

England.—No. 1, Captain L. St. C. Cheape; No. 2, Mr. Noel Edwards; No. 3, Captain Hardress Lloyd (captain); back, Captain Wilson.

Fighting desperately through every period on their rapidly-tiring ponies the English officers were defeated in the end by 9½ to 3½. For a minute or so in the fifth period the English players had held a slight lead; for the rest of the game America was always ahead and usually in command of the situation. England played stubbornly, and long hitting by Captain Lloyd and Captain Wilson and daring riding by Mr. Edwards again saved them from defeat by a larger score.

The speed of the American ponies and better team work were again the controlling factors of the situation. Try as they would the visiting players were continually overtaken and passed by the American ponies, especially by the big bays and greys of Mr. Milburn, the young Oxford "stonewall" of the American defence. It was only by sheer cleverness that the visitors were able to get the ball past him and score a few goals. Fouls played an important part in the game, but did not predominate. While two were called on Mr. Larry Waterbury in the seventh period the young American forward equalised his penalties by a wonderful goal that went so high between the goal-posts that it was with difficulty the officials allowed it.

The Americans started off, as they did in the first match, by rushing the ball to the English goal, where Mr. J. W. Waterbury made the first score. A little later in the period two safeties, one by Mr. Milburn and the other by Mr. J. M. Waterbury, brought the American score to half a goal at the end of the period. Mr. Milburn was most prominent in the second period. His strokes were terrific, and only brilliant play by Captain Wilson and Mr. Edwards saved the English goal. Towards the close of the period the English line was again pierced. Mr. Milburn, far back in his own field, shot a terrific stroke into English territory, where Mr. J. M. Waterbury carried the ball along and then passed it to his brother, who dribbled it through for the second score.

The third period was full of hard luck for England. Several times Captain Cheape and Mr. Edwards carried the ball within scoring distance of the American goal. One beautiful shot by Mr. Edwards dropped in front of the post. No goal was scored, the American defence being superb. It was in the fourth period, at the full expiration of time, that Mr. Edwards made the most spectacular run of the afternoon. Getting the ball clear off the field only 50 yards in front of his own goal, he carried it straight down in four long deadly shots, and drove the third goal of the afternoon and England's first score. A few moments before Mr. Edwards had been penalised for crossing Mr. Whitney. Half-time was called with the score:—America 1½ to England's ½.

The fifth period was full of spectacular playing. Each side made two goals in the first two minutes. Mr. Edwards, given a fine cross shot, drove an equally clever one and scored a goal, which brought England up on even terms for the only time in the match. These equal conditions lasted but a minute, for Mr. Larry Waterbury, tearing down the field, again gave America the lead. His brother made it two ahead 57 seconds later, before time was called. Mr. Edwards scored another goal, which seemed to encourage the English players. The visitors' ponies, however, now began to give way, and play was mostly in English territory. The visitors played up splendidly. They seemed to have a wall of horse-flesh in front of their goal posts. Over this, however, Mr. Larry Waterbury achieved an aerial goal. In the seventh period America again scored, but this was completely discounted by two fouls called on Mr. Larry Waterbury.

The last period was desparately fought. Mr. Edwards got in another score, but the visiting ponies were outridden, and the Englishmen failed to equalise.

At the conclusion both teams were loudly cheered, and Captain Lloyd made a brief speech congratulating his opponents and thanking his comrades.

The Meadowbrook ground has been chosen for the exhibition game. The English players will sail for home on Wednesday.

SPORT OR BUSINESS!

WHAT is the matter with sport to-day! In almost every branch of it we hear of strifes and dissensions. What is the cause of this unseemly and unnecessary wrangling!

The greatest of all our national games, cricket, has not escaped the attentions of those who would always be altering things. During the past "close" season legislators have been hard at work trying to invent methods, for the most part puerile, for "brightening the game," methods which if persisted in will almost certainly kill all the sporting elements in cricket which are the chief charm of the great game. The fewer the rules, laws and by-laws the better the game. Here is a most excellent axiom. The fascination of most games is their simplicity. I do not mean by this that to attain excellence is a certain game should be as simple as possible and "easily understanded of the people." Legislation should be conspicuous by its absence, and the few laws made to govern a game should be of the simplest nature. Games entirely depend on the people who play them on the spirit in which they are played. The moment that quibbling and sharp practices enter into a game that game is dead so far as true sportsmen are concerned.

Over-legislation leads to quibbling and sharp practice. "Sport-lawyers," to coin a phrase, arise who attempt to twist the phrasing of the laws and to put a doubtful or entirely new reading into the words, just at present there is a mania for "brightening" cricket. More rules and restrictions are being proposed. These innovations, if adopted, can only lead to trouble, for they tend to strangle sport and do away with the sporting spirit, changing a game played for the love of the game into a mere struggle for points and championship honours. What over-legislation will do is shown only too clearly by the bitter feud raging in connection with Association football. In old days amateurs and professionals used to play side by side to their mutual advantage. To-day no club affiliated to the Football Association is allowed to play with one attached to the Amateur Football Association, neither may any player, amateur or professional, who belongs to a Football Association club take part in any match in which Amateur Football Association clubs are taking part.

Matters are equally unsatisfactory in the athletic world. Here the two leading bodies, the Amateur Athletic Association and the National Cyclists' Union have agreed to differ and in spite of many well-meant attempts to bring about a reconciliation the breach is wider than ever, and now no Amateur Athletic Association man may complete at meetings held under National Cyclists' Union auspices, or vice versa. The world of billiards is not free from its dissensions, and during the past year the royal and ancient game of golf has been in the throes of warfare and the hitherto unquestioned supremacy of the Rules of Golf Committee has been defied. Mutterings of a storm were heard in the Rugby football world during the past winter when Wales took exception to the method adopted by England in the selection of her team. Luckily, however, thanks to cool heads and tact, the cloud blew over and for the time being international peace reigns supreme.

But how is that dissension is so rife in the world of sport generally? We never used to hear of all these troubles. People were content to play their games and enjoy them. To-day all this is changed. A man dare hardly play a game in a strange neighbourhood for fear lest in future he should be banned by this or that association or committee for having broken some pettifogging rule or for having taken the field with some player who is or is not attached to this or that association. It does not seem to me that the fault lies with the players, the sportsmen themselves, the people who really matter. No; the real fault lies with those who by some means or other have obtained powers with regard to the control of all our great sports and who seem to legislate and alter the rules and the games themselves until every element of luck and true sport tends to be eliminated.

These "powers that be," many of whom have never taken part in the games over which they exercise almost supreme control, are singularly and perhaps naturally lacking in the spirit of sport. They can only see the business side of things. They know nothing of what sport is, but they remind one of the Pharisees and lawyers of old in the manner in which they delight in tinkering with the rules and searching with a microscope for some infinitesimal mote which they may remove after many meetings and much wordy warfare. If these wiseacres saw a couple of street Arabs enjoying a good set-to in the street they would want to ban them for taking part in a contest without being attached to this or that association or because the "ring" exceeded the measurements laid down by some committee of rules. Sportsmen are now being over-legislated for, and as a consequence are beginning to lose interest in sport, which should be as free from rules as possible, but which is to-day dragged a prisoner heavily fettered and bound to the chariots of councillors and committeemen.

A few years ago when a couple of famous football teams met the captains would agree that there should be no appeals to the referee, and as a result the game would be fast and vigorous but scrupulously clean, and both teams would leave the field the better for the contest and full of mutual respect. To-day the referee's whistle is the most noticeable feature of a match. Vigorous play, however clean it may be, is sternly repressed, and in consequence foul and unmanly tactics are resorted to, "scenes" are frequent, and all feeling of good fellowship and respect for one's opponents is gone.

The quibbles and disputes of councils and committees are gradually making themselves felt on the field of play itself, and sharp practice is becoming all too general. This must lead to the true sportsman becoming disgusted and withdrawing himself from games. He cannot contend against unsporting rules, councils, committees, referees, and umpires. To supply his defection professional players must be brought in, and these would lose their "bread and butter" if they did not implicitly submit to every mandate issued by the various councils. These latter in order to pay the professionals, wages must attract the public and study the "gate" question. And so the true spirit of sport is entirely put on one side that clubs may amass riches. Truly money is the root of all evil, and it is certainly the money element which to-day is proving so harmful to sport. It leads to futile and baneful legislation. Business men and not sportsmen are nowadays required to control our national games, and the order of precedence in the world of sport is this: Spectators first; legislation and committee meetings second; the players third; and, last and least of all sport. In fact, sport fails to "get a place" in the field of four.—LAWRENCE WOODROFFE in the Daily Mail.

INDIAN CRICKET TOUR.

I AM afraid I have not very cheery news for my readers this week. The tour of the Indian team looks at the moment to be certain to go from bad to worse. I most cordially hope it will improve, but from what I have seen—and have heard from undeniably good sources in Cambridge—there is little doubt the side is being hopelessly mismanaged, granting that it is the most difficult proposition ever placed in front of a cricket management of any class. I blame nobody in particular for what is happening, but that the selection committee of the team cannot be absolved of all blame in the matter is, I think, conclusively proved. Take a single instance. For the Cambridge match Jaya Ram was "given a rest," and Pai was left out of the team. Now Jaya Ram had done nothing to warrant the assumption that he required a rest. He did not play against South Wales at Cardiff and had very little to do during the defeat at Lord's, because he is obviously out of match practice, and for reasons best known to the managements, was not put on to bowl until it did not matter whether Seshchari or the Maharaja went on to bowl. Then Pai has found that the difficulty in getting a good curry is not the only "dhik" on this tour, for he, though the best Hindu batsman in Bombay, had only looked on until the team went to Birmingham yesterday. This policy must stand in the way of the team's prosperity. Both Pai and Jaya Ram may get a brace in each match, but they are good enough to deserve trial. Warden may be a good bowler on Bombay wickets. So far on this tour he has not bowled well enough to merit inclusion in the second eleven of a minor county. Yet he is played in every match, and when played is usually sent in too low down in the batting order to be of real service to the side. And so it goes on. It is impossible for me to mention any of the things that have been said about this team for having the temerity to arrange a match with a first-class county at all, let alone with all the strongest. I, who know they have not yet shown their real form mainly for reasons stated above, am glad they have arranged such a tour. It should serve to open their eyes a bit as to exactly how weak cricket in India, first-class so-called only by those who don't know anything about first-class cricket, really is. To judge by letters published in India before the team started this is a first-class team capable of beating most of our first-class counties. Writing in the Sporting and Dramatic a fortnight ago, and not wishing to act the wet blanket, I stated that the side might beat Kent and lose to Durham. I stick to that, hoping against hope, these men may "get going" as the saying is, but frankly admit the parentage of the thought.

TAME FINISH.

Harking back to the last day of the match at Lord's the side was upset by the act of the Secretary of State who summoned the Maharajah to see him and thus took him out of his proper order of batting. Indeed had not "Jerry" Weigall organised a half hour tea-interval, quite ultra vires, His Highness would not have had an innings at all. As it was, he went in last and made double figures, which included the finest drive between bowler and mid-off I have ever seen. It was certainly the hardest hit in that quarter in my experience, the ball reaching long-off first bounce after pitching not twenty yards behind the bowler. But over the rest of the batting it is better to draw a veil. Meherhomji was out to a rasping cover-drive, and after being let off off consecutive balls from Hearne (J. T.) Jaya Ram began to look like playing a good innings but was out through mistiming. It was all very tame, the cricket being a good deal worse than school-boyish and it will take a very long time to remove the impression left.

Up at Cambridge the first pair of undergraduates Collins and Mulholland simply took charge of the bowling, except that of Balu, and knocked up the Cambridge record for the first wicket. After that most people got runs or got out quickly, and the visitors were faced with over 400 runs for the second time in following games. One does not expect them to do so very much better on plumb pitches with the ball but one does expect some run-getting from them. Here again only disappointment was in store, for, except Mistri, nobody did anything, and a follow on was inevitable. Their second effort was three runs worse than their first, Mistri, Meherhomji and Kanga again making most runs. Leaving out a man of Jaya Ram's experience of first-class cricket in India considering the batting weakness of this side is simply the height of folly. Except Mistri there is nobody on the side his equal or so likely to get runs off good bowling. But those in authority with the team have never seen Jaya Ram make runs, so, perhaps, their action is excusable. They might at all events take the advice of those who have and play him in every match unless ill. The general health of the team is excellent and no excuse on that score need be listened to. All were well at Lord's and Jaya Ram had got over his temporary trouble. Balu's bowling at Cambridge was much admired. He did one of the best performances of a hard wicket season in getting 8 for 103 out of a total of 434, an analysis he may well feel proud of as, except against really fast bowling, Cambridge have a fine fast-wicket batting side.

DISPLAY AT EDGBASTON.

Although the making of excuses is never to be commended in connection with the game of cricket there are some to be made for the apparently feeble display of the tourists at Edgbaston yesterday. The wicket there is not now the batsman's paradise it used to be and yesterday's pitch happened to be very fast and fiery. On such a wicket it surprises nobody that Field, who is still a fine fast bowler much faster than anything these men are accustomed to in India, and F. R. Foster, who is about the best medium fast bowler of the day, should secure good analyses. A particularly good ball from the amateur bowled Jaya Ram just as he was settling down. As at Oxford the play of this cricketer impressed the critics more than that of anyone else on the side. Only four men got double figures, and then so well did Balu and Salam-ud-din bowl that they had six of the Warwickshire team out for 96 runs. Here the visitors lost grip of the game through over confidence and two unknown men E. B. Crockford, a hockey international, and A. B. Crawford, an old Oundle boy, got together and the Indians had to face a deficit of 123. Warden got 3 wickets for 48 but the best bowling was that of Salam-ud-din 3 for 47. On going in a second time Kanga once again altered his order without success, though owing to Jaya Ram and Shivram, two of the Hindu brigade, half the arrears had been knocked off for the loss of three wickets. Getting 6 of Warwickshire out for 95 is the best thing the side has done as yet but I am afraid that unless the batting and the fielding vastly improve the tour is sure to be a colossal failure. The fielding has so far been very bad indeed: no dash, no certainty, and the throwing in very poor indeed. This is very unlike what I recollect of Indian cricket, and I think it is the most disappointing feature of the team's performances. We know the side was weak in batting but we did expect first-class fielding to back up good bowling. For the game now in progress the Maharaja and Mistri could not play, and Balsara and Syed Hassan stood down, while on the other side Lilley kept wicket once again for his county and Kinneir and Smith stood down.—E. H. D. SEWELL, in Times of India.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Locke Cup has been annexed by the R.G.A. team and the Gunners who have displayed the most consistent form are entitled to their hard earned victory, but the side is not anything as good as were the Royal Irish Rifles, the 98rd Highlands, the K.O.S.B's, the Gordons or Calcutta when these teams were League Champions The Artillery's success was mainly due to the substantial lead of points they obtained during the first half of the League, and had the C.F.C. selection committee decided on the present team earlier in the season the "Reds" would certainly have been on the top of the table. However better late than never, and the C.F.C. selection committee after all is not the only ones that have erred, for Dalhousie up to the present time have not made a final selection and, as a matter of fact, with the exception of the R.G A. there has been a lot of shuffling and re-shuffling with all our League Club this season. The Artillery and Calcutta match last Saturday produced one of the best games in the competition and the thousands who turned out to witness the game were treated to the finest exhibitions of football seen this season. Calcutta played delightful football and after the match some of the Sergeants of the Artillery were loud in their praises of the winners "We are not in the same street" was one conscientious gunner's expressive remark. Calcutta won by four goals to two, the ball, however, was netted on six occasions by the "Reds," but two of the goals were disallowed on the score of offside. Bisseker (2), Chesterton and H. Sherman scored and on Saturday's play I consider Chesterton the best centre forward now in Calcutta. He represented the club in their opening match against the Y.M.C.A. and after that he was left out of the team. On Calcutta's recent display I have no hesitation in saying that barring accidents they should go very close to annexing the Shield.

Crawford the forward on the extreme left is the only one who feels the effect of a hard and fast game, but this is owing to want of practice, as he has only played in three or four games.

Dalhousie will only have themselves to blame if they are badly beaten in the shield. It was not a wise selection in dopping Godwin out of the team in favour of Martin or either McGill to play in goal. Martin is a novice and McGill has certainly not showed any ability as a goal-keeper in the two or three games he has played. Dallas was another rank failure and of all the men who have played with Burnett on the right Dunn has done best. He has weight, speed and, above all, is a hard and accurate shot. As a matter of fact Dunn, with the exception of the Custom's game, has scored in every match he has played for the Trades Club. Montgomery I was given to understand has left Calcutta, and Davidson, it is feared, will not play any more this season. He has just recovered from a bout of fever and has been forbidden to play by his medical adviser.

The Rifle Brigade have gone dreadfully stale and although the men play good football goal getting is obviously not the Fort team's strong point. Bashford has done very well but has fallen off in the last three games; Madden the left back and Norton the goal-keeper have also gone off a lot and Madden against Calcutta, to make matters worse, was anything but sportsmanlike in his play. The Rifle Brigade in this match were simply outclassed in all points of the game and had the shooting of the Calcutta forwards been a little more accurate Calcutta would have won by a larger margin than four goals to nil.

In the coming tournament the Artillery will render a better account of themselves than all the other local teams excepting Calcutta. The defence will be greatly strengthened when Lock returns. Gavin will revert to his usual position in the forward line and Gooch will play right half in place of Wheatley who injured himself again the Rifle Brigade in the match which decided the League. With Sam Lawton playing the Rangers will want some beating, but this club's weak point like all teams is the want of a really good man to lead the attack. Indeed Smart and Durrant are the only two who have any weight in the forward line. If the Rangers can score it will take more than the average forward line to penetrate their defence. The Customs and the Y.M.C.A. will not go very far in the tourney, but the Christians with Leadon, Hussey and Rossetti should figure well in the sprinting competition. Appended is the final league table:—

THE BOMBAY HARWOOD LEAGUE.

THE Bombay Volunteer Artillery met the Y.M.C.A. on the 25th ultimo, an uninteresting game ending in favour of the Volunteers by 2 goals to 1. Navin opened their account in the first half, but in the second period one of their backs put through his own goal and the Y.M.C.A. thus equalised. But the B.V.A. managed to get through again, and Forbes scored the winning goal. A good deal of interest was taken in the match between the Bombay Gymkhana and the Byculla Railway Institute on the 26th ultimo. The Gymkhana were not at full strength and the Railway were also without some of their prominent players. It was a well contested game nevertheless. The first half closed without score, but on resuming Sim retired hurt, and playing one short the Gymkhana defence was disorganized and Blandeld scored. The game was fast and interesting thereafter, but the Gymkhana were unable to get on terms and retired beaten by a goal to nil. On the 27th the R.G.A. played the Telegraphs and had things all their own way, eventually winning by 6 goals to nil, a score which might have been much bigger had it not been for wasted opportunities and the strenuous efforts of Moore, the Telegraph custodian. On Friday last the Byculla Railway Institute, who were weakly represented, went down before the Royal Warwicks, who won by no fewer than 10 goals to nil. The Bombay gymkhana turned out a weak team against the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday and gave a most disappointing display, the Young Men winning the game by 2-1, their first victory this season.

FORTY-TWO MEDAL.—The first of the Forty-Two Medal Competition in connection with the Royal Bombay Golf Club was held on the 29th ultimo. The medal is won every year by the player returning the best score in four competitions, each over 9 holes, held during the season. Two competitions are against "Bogey" and two under medal play conditions. The "first" was against Bogey under handicap and attracted an entry of 40. Some very good scores were returned and most of the "cracks" make good showing. It was won by a long handicap player in Reed,—5. Adair and Roberts with 89, Jessop 40 and Mann 47 were 1 up with the "Colonel." Score:—

Boxing.

FAVOURITE BLOWS OF FAMOUS BOXERS.

EVERY fighter of prominence in the Prize Ring to-day has his own particular style of fighting and a knack of delivering a finish punch. No two men fight exactly alike. There never was a champion, from Tom Sayers' time, 60 years ago, down to to-day, who didn't have a favorite blow to bring home the money and glory.

The right-cross, the uppercut, the swing and the straight-arm punch were generally used, and not until brute strength gave way to skill and science did the variety of punches include left-handers.

To-day there are any number of good men in the ring who depend more on their lefts than they do on their rights, and among the good men so inclined is none other than James J. Jeffries.

Jack Johnson—Right-arm upper cut and hook.
Bob Fitzsimmons—Half-arm jolts to stomach and jaw delivered at close quarters.
Joe Gans—A snappy right hook.
Kid McCoy—The corkscrew, delivered with a twist of wrist before landing.
Terry McGovern—Overhand right-hand wallop to the jaw.

Jeff has always been known as a two-handed fighter. He can use his right as well as his left, and it is even said that he can throw a ball equally as well with his left as with his right, but Prize Ring history shows us that Jeff has won most of his fights with his left hand. It was his long and powerful left that dropped trip-hammer fashion on Bob Fitzsimmons at Coney Island the night the championship changed hands.

Jeff had taken a walloping from Fitz for 11 rounds, guarding as best he could with his right, while his battering-ram of a left always stuck out almost straight, and followed Fitz from this side of the ring to that and in and out of corners.

Jeff got few opportunities to land it, but he never stopped trying. Finally he came down in a long sweep, caught Fitz on the jaw, and down went the champion flat on his face. It was the same with Corbett.

It took Jeffries 23 rounds to connect with it, and, but for the rebound of the ropes as Corbett, misjudging the distance between them, stepped back from one of Jeff's lunges, only to be thrown forward to receive the swinging left, Corbett might have lasted the 25th round and been awarded the decision.

Johnson uses a very useful and damaging left himself, but it isn't of the round-arm, sweeping variety, like Jeff's. It is a snappy jab. He can reduce an opponent to a weakened state with it, but when it comes to a question of ending a battle his right-arm uppercut or hook is what he brings into play. He used this punch on Tommy Burns, and he nearly tore Stanley Ketchel's head off with it. Jim Corbett, perhaps the cleverest boxer of recent years, had a tantalising left and a right-cross as his favorite punches. Corbett used both hands as a defence. He rarely set himself and this explains his inability as a knocker out.

Joe Gans made himself famous with a right hand hook but at the same time Gans was always a wonderful two hand fighter. Those who met him say he was a sharpshooter. He could pick your eye out and put it back again, and then bang! over would go the right hook, and then, good night. Jack Dempsey, who met his Waterloo when he met Fitzsimmons, used to stop all rushers with a snappy left-hand wallop. His right was good, but nearly all his fights were won with the left.

Fitzsimmons' mainstay was the half-arm wallop, delivered to the jaw or stomach at short quarters or breaking from a shift. Fitz also had a left-hand shift that first came into prominence when he beat Jim Corbett at Carson City. Fitz could sink his left hand deep into an opponent.

Kid McCoy was perhaps the most scientific puncher of them all. His favorite blow was the celebrated corkscrew. When he let it go, he twisted the wrist just before he reached the spot at which he aimed, and the result was bewildering. Choynski, Maher, O'Donnell and other big heavies were victims of the corkscrew.

Battling Nelson credits all his fame to his scissors punch, landed on the liver with a rigid left hand. The punch has a paralysing effect, pain shooting in several directions from the spot struck.

Going down the line, it is found that every fighter of any note had a favorite method of attack and all have been usually effective.

Sports.

THE SCHOOL OF SPORT.

THE few who dare to praise outdoor sports and pastimes from the educational standpoint are generally regarded as false prophets by the many who, themselves too feeble or too lazy to indulge in such strenuous exercise, fine comfort in condemning it as developing the body at the expense of the mind. Of the physical culture resulting from games and field sports there can perhaps be no question. It is rather in their moral aspect that these pastimes are universally misjudged. Yet it must be obvious to any one who studies the conditions under which they are played or followed that they teach principles capable of far wider application in the serious business of life, while even to the general rule of "playing the game" it would be difficult to attach exaggerated importance.

Team games are, above all others, valuable in enforcing the moral obligation to "play the game," but even a comparatively selfish game such as golf equips men for getting out of the stymies and bunkers of life, though not unhappily, with unfailing respect for what Nietzsche call the "cosmetics of speech." It is therein that golf fails, for it cannot be said, like so many other games, to train its followers in philosophic contemplation of the worm in the wine-cup. Team games, like football, cricket and polo are far more exacting in this respect. Football, for example, is a contest that teaches manly endurance, strategy, tactics, and, above all, suppression of self for the good of the side. Violent, particularly in America, it unquestionably is. Yet, played squarely and not too brutally, it is one of the finest winter games for lads conceivable.

Polo is another grand game, particularly for soldiers. Armchair critics of our second line of defence are fond of heaping coals of fire on the heads of British officers for playing so much polo, but they should bear in mind that the game has been the making of more than one Indian regiment, and that our sternly practical friends across the Atlantic make compulsory polo part of the West Point curriculum for Cavalry cadets, ponies being supplied free in order to encourage those whose want of private means might debar them from playing. Like cricket and football, and perhaps even more so, it teaches the golden lesson of subordination of self for the sake of the side, the unimportance of the individual compared with the combination, and it compels players to resist the temptation to perform to the gallery at the risk of results. This is a fine teaching and one of which most of us now and again stand in need, since only those of the strongest moral fibre are always free from the ambition to indulge private prowess where co-operation would serve better purpose. All team games, in fact, as distinguished from "singles," tend to check the common weakness for "showing off," and if for no other reason, they should on this account be held in regard. Bowls, as played between teams, is sternly insistent on the sacrifice of individual scoring for the good of the side; and even those minor games which, with one player against the other, lack this particular virtue, have their own lessons to teach. Lawn tennis calls for quickness of hand and eye, and croquet imparts judgment of opportunity, patient strategy, the knowledge when to put forth, and when to reserve, the supreme effort.

Yachting, and more particularly yacht-racing, with its lessons of prompt decision, lightning action, and combined fearlessness and caution, is one of the most valuable of outdoor sports. Hunting, in addition to its obvious schooling in horsemanship, teaches courteous submission to the will of the Master, who is by common consent permitted adequate latitude of vocatives to correct any little weakness for thrusting.

Shooting is one of the sports, and fishing another, in which there is neither policy nor etiquette to discount individual performance. Each acquits himself as creditably as lies in his power, and for this reason both sports are admirably suited to the vanity of those who delight in exhibiting their skill, though the spectacular sportsman should give the preference to the gun, since shooting usually entails an audience and is not, like fishing, the sport of solitude. Yet, even with this slight blemish on its escutcheon, shooting is a finishing school of some value, since it teaches judgment and coolness, and corrects jealousy and greed. A very exceptionally fine shot, or one with unexceptionable social claims, may, it is true, reckon on invitations even after he has established a reputation for jealous shooting, but the mediocre man who persists in such conduct soon finds himself on the shelf, and may as well lay his guns there also.

Fishing is even more educational than the sister sport, for it teaches dogged perseverance, adaptation to ever-changing conditions of wind and weather, and, above all, the infinite joy of life in its simplest mood. It cures the craving for excitement in less innocent shape, and it schools hand, eye and brain to work together as one harmonious whole. It shows its devotees how little and how transient are the worries which loom so forbidding in the workaday world; yet dwindled at the riverside into silly troubles of ants. It takes even of the most artificial of us right back to Mother Nature and renovates us, purging us of the sophisms of cities and sending us back to our work cleaner and better men. Such is the School of Sport, and though we no longer pretend that Waterloo was won on the playing-fields of Eton, it is impossible to ignore the lessons taught by playing (not by watching) games or taking part in field sports. Those who challenge the worth of games commonly cite the stupidity of the British officer as their baneful work, but a study of the campaigns for which he has been responsible, from the Peninsula to South Africa, cannot be regarded as very helpful to their curiously unpatriotic argument.

A YOUNG cyclist was riding down a crowded thoroughfare when his hat blew off. A passing workman picked it up and took it to him, saving him the trouble of getting off. "I must really get some cord to keep it on," remarked the youth, as he rode off without a word of thanks. The workman's reply was short but expressive. It was simply, "Get a nail."

ONE morning a lad went into the factory at a quarter past seven, and the manager saw him and said—"Well, Johnny, why are you so late. The boy began to cry, and said:—"Well, sir it's a case of this. Our knocker-up has a knocker up to knock him up at four o'clock, and our knocker-up's knocker-up didn't knock our knocker-up up, so our knocker-up didn't come to knock us up."

Second Heat.—H. Jefford 3secs. start, net time 45secs., 1; R. Donaldson, 2secs. start, 2.

Third Heat.—F. Bartley, 8secs. start, net time 50½secs., 1; L. Wurster, 3secs. start, net time 47½secs., 2.

Fourth Heat.—B. McDiarmid, 7secs. start, net time 50½secs., 1; F. J. Ley, scratch, time 44½secs., 2.

Final.—H. Jefford, net time 45½secs., 1; C. Young, net time 48½secs., 2; F. Bartley, net time 52½secs., 3; B. McDiarmid, net time [illegible]secs., 4.

Messrs W. Govan, J. S. Munro and W. S. J. Wilson officiated.

On 4th July there will be an inter-club polo match and on 14th July a Handicap Plunge Competition will be held.

The Horse.

HINTS TO BEGINNERS ON THE SADDLE HORSE AND HIS USE.

By John Gilpin.

CHAPTER IV.

Lameness and Sickness.

Never ride a horse if he shews the least sign of lameness or stiffness until you can discover the extent of the injury. You will probably regret it if you do. A slight sprain may become a very bad one if the horse is worked on it. Of course if it is a case of fetching a doctor to a sick man or some other great emergency it may be necessary to work a lame horse as, under similar circumstances, you would work a lame man, but such cases are exceptions to all rules. Sometimes when you start for a ride on a horse that you know well you will form the impression that he is going short or slightly lame. Your companion may not be able to see anything wrong and may say "Oh! he's all right, come along." Don't listen. If you know your horse well and he gives you an unaccustomed feel put him back and take another, or, if you have no other horse and cannot remove the cause of your horse's lameness, give up your ride. A rest in time may save all sorts of trouble. The cause may only be a stone or bit of brick in the hoof, in which case the lameness will generally go with its removal. Unusual action when first mounted may be due to a sore back. If neither of these causes are apparent heat should be searched for. A horse that is markedly lame in front nods his head as the sound foot comes to the ground. If in a hind leg the lame foot is on the ground for a shorter time than the sound one. In cases of sprain there is swelling and heat. This is also usually the case with a splint though sometimes splints are hard to locate. Stiffness in the hock indicates spavin as does dragging a hind toe. Curb is usually visible when it occurs, below the point of the hock. If the horse rests the lame leg by bending the knee and letting the toe only touch the ground navicular disease is probably the trouble, though it may be side bone. If the leg is advanced and the heel alone carries the weight laminitis is indicated. If the horse is lame in the shoulder he will bring the lame leg forward with an outward sweep and will drag the toe of it. Shoulder lameness is rare. If he is gone in the loins he will shew weakness behind when turned sharply about. He will not pick up his hind feet with the accustomed snap and will drag his toes behind, generally one more than the other. He may carry his tail to one side and will generally give to pressure over the loins. If the disease is at all advanced he will find difficulty in resisting lateral pressure against his quarters, and will be unable to step backwards without shewing a tendency to sit down. Straddling action behind with stiffness and dragging of the toes are signs of derangement of the urinary organs and this diagnosis will be confirmed if the horse spreads himself to stale with little or no result. If the micturation is normal the symptoms may be due to a sprain of the muscles of the back.

If the frogs stink there is no doubt thrush which causes considerable lameness when advanced. If after comprehensive examination you fail to locate the seat of the trouble, it is more likely to be in the foot than elsewhere. Rheumatism is often blamed for obscure lameness, especially cases of slight chronic laminitis, but it is not a common disease amongst horses in India whatever it may be elsewhere. I have known lameness from corns, due to bad shoeing, attributed to rheumatism. These should be looked for.

Syces should be instructed to tell their masters directly they notice any lameness or soreness, heat or swelling, and especially every time the horse is at all off its feed. If it misses two feeds the beginner should satisfy himself that the grain is sweet and good and if that is the case should call in a veterinary surgeon if one is available. If he cannot get advice he should have recourse to Captain Hayes's "Veterinary Notes for Horse Owners." He should seek professional advice if obtainable because his difficulty will be diagnosis, and even with the admirable aid mentioned, the treatment is hardly likely to be beneficial unless the diagnosis is correct. No doubt the symptoms of the various diseases are clearly laid down in the book but it does not follow that the beginner will be able to find them when he wants them, and in any case he will probably waste a lot of time seeking for what a professional could tell him after one glance. It is far better to pay the veterinary surgeon's fee than to lose the horse or to let it lose condition. It is neither easy nor cheap to restore condition to a horse that has lost it, and it usually takes a long time.

If a horse's dung is small and hard, or bad coloured, or if his coat is dull, a safe remedy is three to six ounces (according to the size of the horse) of Epsom Salts mixed with his evening food every day for a fortnight. This will not purge him in ordinary cases (it should be stopped if it does) and the horse need not be laid up during treatment. The results are usually very satisfactory and the use of Epsom Salts with discretion has much to do with the good condition of the horses of experienced owners.

A good condition powder is the old one-two-three mixture. It is composed of one part by weight of antimony, two parts of saltpetre, and three parts of sulphur. These ingredients should be ground separately and then mixed and bottled. One tablespoonful should be given to a horse every night for a week, then none should be given for a week, and then a spoonful every night for a week again. This completes the course. A smaller quantity suffices for a pony. The mixture should be given in the evening feed.

Walers often get liver in the rains. They go off their feed and the lining of the eyelids and the lips turns yellow as do the gums, while the breath smells badly. Soft food, a bottle of freshly extracted linseed oil, and the exhibition of ipecacuanha are indicated. The ipecacuanha should be given daily in one drachm doses for eight days. It will cause salivation and the horse's mouth should be syringed regularly to mitigate the ensuing soreness. After recovery the grain ration should be a small one and should be supplemented with bran mashes and other soft foods, and exercise should be regular and gentle. In the rains a horse's oats should be strictly regulated in quantity by the amount of work he does. Overfeeding an idle horse is almost certain to upset his liver.

Nitre is useful as a diuretic and cooling medium. It is given in the food or dissolved in the drinking water.

Chiretta is a capital tonic. Horses will soon learn to eat it when mixed in their food. It is to be had in the bazar.

Bamboo leaves are good for cough and are a good forage though said to be heating in the hot weather.

Horses that are eating a lot of green grass and bamboo leaves will drop dark-coloured dung. It is not to be supposed on that account that they are not well. As long as the dung is of good size, free from slime, breaks when it falls, and is voided easily there is not much the matter.

Some horses that are not used to much grain scour when given a full ration. The cure is to adapt their food to their requirements. Young walers when first landed often give trouble in this way. They get all right in time and soon acquire the power of digesting a fair amount.

Other horses scour from excitement when out in company but are all right in the stable. I know of no cure for these, but I have known some to lose their excitement by regular work in the riding school and so to become normal in the other respects. Plenty of bran mixed with the food, which should be well crushed, is likely to be of some service.

If a horse stamps continually in the stable, examine his feet well. He may have thrush badly with maggots in the cleft of the frog. Calomel will extract the maggots if blown well up the cleft and a solution of sulphate of copper may be poured in. Burnt alum is also a good dressing. Whatever is used the cleft should be plugged with cotton wool to prevent dirt and flies from entering again. The dressing should be repeated every 12 hours until there is no more discharge or smell. The stamping may only be due to flies worrying him. Sometimes these are attracted by edible oils used by the syces as hoof dressing. An admixture of creosote will make these repugnant to flies.

In the rains when horse flies abound a mixture of one part of kerosine oil to two parts of cocoanut oil may be smeared on the belly and inside the legs of the horses. This keep off flies to a certain extent. Neat kerosine blisters and kerosine and water dries too quickly and becomes ineffective.

For mange apply a mixture made of Turpentine, 2oz., Kerosine Oil, 2oz., Cocoanut Oil, 2oz., Mustard Oil, 3oz., Sulphur, 1oz., Indigo, 2oz. This was given me by a friend who very highly recommended it and it is probably as good as any of the other bazar-made remedies.

CHAPTER V

Grooming.

Half the trouble of grooming is saved by regular clipping. A well-clipped horse is readily dried and does not run nearly so much risk of taking cold as does one whose long coat, saturated with sweat, takes an hour or more to dry. When a horse comes in he should have a sheet or rug thrown over him at once unless the weather is so damp that there is no fear of chill from evaporation. His girths should be loosened, his curb chain undone, and he should be led to the stable. Here his bridle should be removed and a halter put on and he should be given as much water as he will drink. In the cold weather or if the water is from a deep, cold well the bucket of water should be left in the sun while the horse is out so that it may not be too cold. When he has finished his drink his feet should be picked out to see that no stones have lodged in them. Then his nose, eyes, dock, and sheath, in fact all the hairless parts, should be washed carefully and dried. Next his throat and neck should be dried and then the rug may be removed and the rest of him dried save that part which is covered by the saddle. When this is done, and not before, the saddle may be removed and the horse's back dried at once. It is a good plan to smack the back repeatedly where the saddle was to restore the circulation in the skin which the rider's weight will have checked. When the horse's body is dry, a sheet can be thrown over it if the weather is cold and the legs can then be dried and cleaned. If the legs and belly are covered with mud it should be left to dry and should be then brushed off. If it is very hard it can be loosened with the curry comb which should otherwise only be used to clean the body brush on. The practice of washing off mud with water has long been abandoned in well-managed stables as it is the sole cause of "mud fever." Besides the cleaning a horse receives before going out and after work he should be thoroughly groomed every afternoon or at some other time if then at work. This grooming should be a serious business and should last at least an hour. A thorough massage all over is what the horse requires daily if he is to be at his best. He should be rubbed with the whole forearm from the hand to the elbow, and the sores should be made to work until they sweat again. I hate to see a dandyfied syce leisurely going over a horse with his coat on. Proper grooming is hard work. Cleanliness and massage are the objects of grooming and without them the horse will not do well.

Manes and tails should be combed daily, and tails are the better for frequent washing with soap. Unless the fleshy part of the tail, the dock, is kept clean it will itch and then the horse will rub it against any convenient object until he has rubbed the hair off it and made himself look like a mule. Manes should never be cut, but when too long the longest hairs should be pulled out until the mane is even and of the proper length. Switch tails should also be trimmed in this way.

Feet should not be washed as a rule. If white heels become soiled and have to be washed they should be very carefully dried, as should the feet after having become wet in work. To leave the heels damp is to invite such diseases as cracked heels and grease. Wet in the rains does not do so much harm as at other times because the air is so loaded with moisture that evaporation hardly takes place at all. It is the chill due to evaporation that causes the trouble.

When a horse comes in very hot a lot of trouble is avoided if the sweat is scraped off him with a scraper. These are generally sold made of brass but a very efficient one can be made of a broad slip of bamboo. After the sweat has been scraped off a wisp of straw can be used to dry the horse, and after that a wisp of hay such as is used in the Army gives a fine polish to the coat. The method of making a wisp will be found in "Animal Management, 1909," a Government publication sold in Calcutta at Re. 1-5 and worth ten times the money to owners of saddle and pack animals, or can be learned from the nearest British Cavalry Regiment. The hay or straw is twisted into a rope about 10 feet long and is then plaited into a pad in a way that is hard to describe without a diagram or two.

CHAPTER VI.

Riding.

Seat.

It is important that the beginner should be put on his horse properly to begin with and an experienced rider should be asked to shew him proper length for his stirrups and how to sit and hold his reins. The beginner's instincts when he is put on a horse for the first time lead him to do exactly what he should not do. This should be explained to him before he mounts. Directly the horse moves he will want to lean forward so as to be able to grip the pommel of the saddle or the mane with his hands in case of emergency. This is all wrong. No man can maintain his seat on a rough one in this way. The shoulders should be behind the centre of gravity rather than in front of it. The toes should not be turned out as to turn out the toes means to turn the knees out also. When in the saddle this is easily proved. Turn in your toes and your knees will turn in. Turn out your toes and your knees will go away from the saddle. The feet should be parallel with the horse's sides and the legs should hang free, no grip being taken with the calves of the legs. The legs are used in the control of the horse as will be explained later, but they are useless for this purpose if the rider depends on his calves for his seat.

The seat in a saddle is quite different from a seat on anything else. The beginner will find it a little hard to sit on the right part of his body. If he will sit down on the front edge of a chair, the very edge, and throw himself back in it, and will then slowly raise his shoulders, without moving his seat at all, until the upper part of his body is nearly perpendicular he will get a fair idea of what his position in the saddle should be. He will find that the lower part of the spine is curved down to the last bone and that the last bone is practically in contact with what he is sitting on. The buttocks should be well under one and well forward in the saddle and should never be protruded towards the rear. The upper part of the spine should be straight and the shoulders well back. Nothing looks worse, or gives rise to more ridicule, than riding on the fork with the shoulders forward and the nose between the horse's ears. Also few things are more annoying than a crashing blow on the nose from a horse's head.

If the horse kicks when the rider is sitting in the manner described the latter's shoulders will naturally fall back and his balance will be preserved. If he be sitting as if he were sitting upon a tub and the horse kicks he will lose his balance and may go over the horse's head. In the same way when the rider is sitting properly his shoulders fall back as the horse takes off at a jump without effort on his part. If the horse rears or is taking off at a jump from the walk or trot all that is necessary is to accentuate the curve of the lower part of the spine sufficently to keep the upper part of the body perpendicular, in other words to preserve the balance. Of course a good grip of the thighs and knees is necessary and will come with practice as the muscles harden to the work, but with it there must be balance, and balance is obtained by the almost mechanical working of the hinge formed by the curve of the spine between the waist and seat, aided in emergencies by the joints.

A very good rider tells me that the way to sit a buckjumper is to "lean back and look at your feet." Try this position in a chair, sitting on the front edge, and you will find that it resembles that described above.

An excellent practice is to get on a quiet horse, put down the reins, and lean back until the shoulders touch the horse's croup, slowly regaining the original position. On coming up the rider will find himself in the proper position for sitting a horse. The practice should be repeated several times daily as it gives flexibility in the saddle.

I have several times been asked by beginners whether they should ride with the ball of the foot or the stirrup iron or with the foot thrust home, and I have heard them debating very heatedly as to which is right and which wrong. So far as that goes I think there is nothing in it. When hacking about it looks better if the ball of the foot is on the iron and there is no doubt that the play of the ankle when the foot is thus placed saves the body a certain amount of jar while trotting or when a horse is jogging instead of walking quietly. On the other hand when galloping at polo or across country one is likely to lose his stirrup if he rode with it dangling about his toes so the foot is thrust home. It is purely a matter of comfort and convenience and has nothing to do with skill in horsemanship.

Of far greater importance is the length of the stirrup leathers. It is better for a beginner to err on the side of shortness. A long stirrup is more likely to slip from his foot, and it is unquestionably harder for a beginner to hold a horse with too long a stirrup than with too short a one. If when standing up in the saddle the fork just clears the pommel the length will be about right, but no exact rule can be laid down that will suit all shapes of men. I have holes made through my leathers between the holes usually provided. I find that half a hole makes all the difference to my comfort and I can take up and let out my leathers to suit the difference between thin and thick breeches, thick or thin soled boots, loss or gain in condition of my horse, etc., etc.

Short stirrups give more control than long ones, especially to a tall man on a pony, but on the other hand if too short they are hard to sit a rough horse in. It is the jar of the stirrup that sometimes determines the conflict in favour of the horse, especially if the knees be straight as is the case when the stirrups are too long.

The beginner should practice riding without stirrups. There is nothing like trotting without stirrups for giving a man firm and graceful seat. The stirrups should be crossed in front of the rider and he should trot for a mile without them. The distance should gradually be increased until he can ride ten miles without stirrups. To sit comfortably at a trot without stirrups the rider must lean well back and must make no attempt to rise to the trot.

Hands.

Hands depend so much on Seat that they cannot exist without a certain amount of strength in the saddle. A horse's mouth may not be such a delicate instrument as a violin but it is too delicate to be successfully played on by a man who is bumping all over the saddle. The rider should be careful not to use more strength than is necessary and in no way to hurt the horse's mouth. Tact is the essence of good hands, and few horses will pull with a good man up for any length of time.

If a horse pulls with him the beginner must be careful not to be pulled forward in the saddle. His elbows should be close to his sides and should be bent. If he has his arms straight from his shoulders to the horse's mouth the horse can pull his shoulders forward, and that is just what he must not be allowed to do. To hold a puller a man must sit down in his saddle. His stirrups should not be too long and his feet should be a little forward rather than drawn back. His position should be such that when his elbows are close to his sides and bent a pull on his arms rather tends to telescope his spine on to its base and to pull him into the saddle than to pull his shoulders forward and so pull him out of it. If the horse puts his head down the rider should raise his hands, and if the horse's head is held high the rider's hands should be as low as possible, one on each side of the withers and not too far apart. On an excitable horse the rider should be as quiet as a mouse and should keep his heels away from the horse's sides. I have seen a man lean forward, take a short, strong hold of the reins, draw both heels into his horse's sides, and then give out that he had been run away with when the horse took him for a gallop. He had unconsciously given the horse the "aids" for the gallop and so the obedient horse galloped though very much against his will for the road was metalled. Fortunately he was none the worse for it save that his hoofs were a good deal chipped. He went for two and a half miles and then fortunately stopped when he saw a cart blocking the road. This was a very sensible, well broken horse, one that had carried a lady for two years regularly, yet it was maligned as a runaway by the one who was really in fault.

Very few horses will pull if they are properly broken and well ridden. Racehorses, of course, are taught to pull and often take a good deal of Riding School before they are sobered enough to make pleasant hacks or chargers. But even they can be given nice light mouths in time unless they belong to the Most Noble Order of Impossible Hacks. Even these sometimes come to hand and I had one recently that after a year of Riding School was, after the first five minutes, as pleasant a mount as one could wish for. She did not pull even out hunting and she had been a bad one in her racing days. She was broken by the method which will be described later.

It is no good hauling at a horse that has got away and has his head up in the air or between his knees. The rider will only wear himself out. The horse will not keep his head in an abnormal position unless he is pulled at, so, if a good rugging and sawing at the mouth will not stop him, the best plan is to relax the pull. As soon as the absence of strain induces him to put his head in the proper position, and so brings the bit on to the bars of his mouth, the rider can take another pull with a good chance of stopping him. The young rider need not, however, fear being run away with if he will learn to ride in a Riding School until he has some inkling of what is expected of him. Very few horses are bolters and not many hacks pull so hard as to get away even with a beginner once he has learnt to sit back in his saddle with his elbows close to his sides and bent. Until then he should be in school or on some old crock guaranteed not to gallop. If a horse is pulling hard and shakes his head it is a sign that he is about to give in. As soon as he does give in he should be held with the least exertion of strength that will suffice. He will soon learn to connect obedience with absence of pain in his mouth. The object of a horse does not yield to the bit in carrying his head too high or too low is to save his mouth. If he raises his head he transfers the pressure of the bit from the bars to the corners of the mouth which are much less sensitive, and by putting down his head he transfers a good deal of the pull to the top of the headstall, especially if that part of the cheek of the bit which is above the mouthpiece is too long. Most of these tricks are easily cured in the Riding School and by the use of the long reins, and the horse should be taught to save his mouth by yielding to the bit rather than by adopting them.

An annoying trick that some horses have is that of raking, especially when going at fast paces with other horses. A horse is said to rake when he suddenly, and with great force, thrusts his nose down towards the ground in an attempt to wrench the reins out of the rider's hands. If a man be sitting properly on his horse with his arms close to his elbows bent the worst that can happen is that he has to straighten his arms for the moment, bringing them back to their former position as soon as possible. If he be riding with his arms straight the rake will certainly bring him forward in his saddle and he runs a risk of being raked clean off. Sometimes a horse will give up raking if the hands are allowed to go with him instantly as he rakes so that he feels no resistance and has nothing to pull at. This should be tried in the first instance and if it is unsuccessful the rider may try resisting the rake as much as is consistent with the maintenance of the proper position in the saddle. Raking is a fault of imperfectly broken horses and can be cured in the Riding School in time, though if the habit has become confirmed the horse will sometimes revert to it if very excited.

When a horse is galloping kindly the elbows should give automatically to his movements so as to save his mouth a jar. The wrists and hands should aid in this but the reins should not be allowed to slip through the fingers.

Too long a rein is a mistake. If a man is riding with a very long rein it is likely to be a loose one also, and if the horse suddenly requires control the recovery of the slack is apt to end in jab in the mouth for the horse. The ideal handling gives an even feel to the rein which is never allowed to be loose and is never tighter than is necessary to effect the desired object. The beginner should pay great attention to this handling of the reins from the first, especially to attaining his object with the least possible degree of force. On a well broken horse the merest hint should be sufficient.

There is a certain amount of difference of opinion amongst good riders as to whether the bit or the bridoon rein should be on the outside when using both hands on a double bridle. I think the bit rein should be on the outside, the little finger between the reins, and the slack passing through the fall of the hands. The bit rein should be just so much slacker than the bridoon rein that when the latter is feeling the horse's mouth and the knuckles are at right angles to the way the horse is going there is no tension on the bit. When this proportion is observed the horse is easily brought on to the bit rein when necessary by merely turning the little fingers in towards the body and is brought on to the bridoon rein again by returning the hands to their former, that is to say their natural, position. The whole thing is so simple and effective that it is hard to imagine any improvement on it. From the position described to take all the reins into the left hand, pass the left hand over the right, place the forefinger of the left hand between the reins where the little finger of the right hand was, and take the slack into the fall of the left hand crossing the slack of the other reins. To take the right reins into the right hand, again pass the right hand over left, place the little finger between the reins as before, and draw the slack out of the left hand. No other method is so simple or so quick.

When the horse is going freely the hands should be on about a level with the withers and about nine or ten inches apart. They should be a little higher in the case of a horse that carries his head too low, and a little lower if the horse is inclined to get his head up. When merely hacking about at a trot or canter the hands may be held higher as raising the hands tends to raise the horse's head and to make him carry himself more collectedly. The reins should be of such a length that when the horse is pulled up and comes to a balanced halt with his neck arched the hands should lightly touch the waistcoat.

A horse is said to be thoroughly balanced or collected when his neck is arched, his hocks are under him, and he is all alive and ready to turn, twist, or spring off in any direction at the will of his rider. This may be seen in great perfection in a well made charger or a tournament polo pony. Every horse should be thoroughly made and schooled, but it is not suggested that he should always be ridden in this collected manner. He would soon be tired out and would go in the hocks. It is sufficient that he should be capable of being collected when necessary. Even when very fresh a schooled horse can be collected and cantered quietly in circles and fingers of eight until he gets his back down when if allowed to get his head away he might be very hard to sit. A thoroughly schooled horse will have learned that he must do as he is bid and that villainy will not pay, and he will rarely attempt anything very outrageous even if he has been in the stable for some time.

If the horse does not go kindly up to his bit pressure with the legs will bring his hocks under him and send him into his bridle. The legs have a great deal to say to hands as will be explained when the Riding School is treated of. Some horses if not ridden up to their bits by means of pressure from the legs get behind their bits and are not being ridden at all. They are simply carrying their riders and are in a position to rear, jib, or shy if it is their pleasure to do so. On the other hand a horse ridden properly up to his bit is at a disadvantage if he wants to play the fool. He must free his head from control before he can do much, and any idea of villainy that may come into his head is telegraphed up the reins to the rider who is thus able to forestall his efforts

BIG GAME AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

THERE is considerable reason to fear that Coronation year may prove to be the last season of the Crystal Palace, as the building and its beautiful grounds are advertised for sale in the autumn, and it seems quite likely that they may fall into the hands of the speculative builder. If so, this famous institution will assuredly have a glorious ending, for the Festival of Empire, now being held in the palace grounds, is one of the finest shows that it has ever been our good fortune to see in England.

On this occasion, however, it is not our intention to refer to the show as a whole, but merely to one particular portion of it, which will form an unparalleled attraction to every Anglo-Indian sportsman who has the good fortune to visit the old country during the present summer. We allude, of course, to the exhibition of big game and other sporting trophies arranged in what is known as the "Fauna Building," a picturesque wood and plaster structure occupying a splendid site just below the main terrace, and overlooking the lovely scenery of the Sussex Weald.

An exhibition on somewhat the same lines, but embracing racing, rowing, cricket, etc., as well as big-game shooting, was held, it will be remembered, last year in the British section of the Vienna Sports Exhibition. The special object at that exhibition was to display the vast extent and variety of the big-game fauna of the British Empire; and the enormous advantages in respect to variety of bag obtainable within the limits of the King's Dominions by the British sportsman.

The same note dominates the big-game show at the Palace; one of the main ideas of the exhibition being to illustrate this section of the fauna of the Empire, while the second is to display to the general public the finest big-game trophies procurable from British territory. In both these respects Lord Wolverton (who is himself a considerable contributor to the show) and the other promoters of the exhibition may be stated to have achieved a thorough and conspicuous success; the assemblage of heads and other specimens being really magnificent, and, what is more, so arranged on the walls and elsewhere as to secure the best possible effect, alike as regards picturesqueness of appearance, and in respect of facility for inspection.

It might, of course, be supposed that the Palace show is a mere replica of the one at Vienna;—not that it would have mattered if it had been, as only a comparatively small number of Englishmen enjoyed the privilege of seeing the latter. As a matter of fact, however, the two are by no means identical; either as regards the individual specimens exhibited, or in respect of general scope. At Vienna, for instance, heads and skins of giraffes, zebras, and wild asses figured among the exhibits; whereas at the Crystal Palace these are conspicuous by their absence. They were in fact ruled out by the committee, as not affording satisfactory trophies, and therefore not legitimately coming within the definition of animals of sport in the proper sense of that term. Although there is much to be said in favour of the limitation—especially in so far as it may tend to discourage the wanton destruction of giraffes and zebras—the absence of the heads of these beautiful animals to some extent detracts from the general appearance of the show, while it certainly diminishes the amount of information to be gathered with regard to the geographical distribution of animals. And, after all, if giraffes, at any rate, are not big-game animals, what on earth are they?

As regards individual specimens, a very considerable proportion of those shown at Vienna are absent from Sydenham, while, on the other hand, there are a number of splendid trophies at the Crystal Palace which were not exhibited in the Austrian capital. There is accordingly every reason for those who saw the Vienna exhibition to visit the one at Sydenham; while those who did not see the former will, of course, have a still greater inducement to pay at least one visit to the latter.

The trophies are arranged according to countries; and (with the exception of the New Zealand section, where the animals are of foreign origin) thus afford an instructive lesson in the geographical distribution of game animals.

The visitor may notice, for instance, the entire absence of deer from the whole of Africa southward of the Sahara, and their replacement by the host of antelopes which forms such a conspicuous feature in the fauna of that area while he will likewise notice the lack of wild goats and sheep, as well as bear, in this part of the same continent; the only exception, in the case of goats and sheep, being where the mountain ranges of Abyssinia and part of the Sudan have enabled the northern fauna to penetrate some distance into the heart of the continent. Unfortunately, the absence of cervidæ from the whole of Africa except the extreme north is often obscured by the pernicious practice of applying the name "deer" to "antelopes," just as in India the gazelle is so frequently miscalled "ravine deer."

As a contrast to Africa the visitor may note in the Indian section the abundance of deer and the scarcity of antelopes; while in the Himalaya and Central Asia he will observe the great preponderance of goats and sheep, although, from the fact that the distributional area of many of them lies beyond the limits of British territory, only a comparatively small number of the species and races are exhibited. North America, on the other hand, is characterised by the poverty of its ruminant fauna, so far at least as the number of species is concerned.

In the Indian section the special object of interest is a buffalo skull with a magnificent pair of horns shot many years ago by Mr. A. Forbes in the Gulpara district, and exhibited by the same gentleman. Although its dimensions have for many years been on record, the whereabouts of this magificent specimen has been not generally known; and it comes as a revelation to find that it is an example of the circular-horned race, of which it appears to be the finest specimen on record. The length of the horns is, indeed, only about six inches less than that of the big pair of horns of a bull of the straight-horned race formerly owned by Sir Hans Sloane, and now in the British Museum. Another Indian variety is a melanistic black buck exhibited by the Crown Prince of Bhopal.

As at Vienna, H. M. the King exhibits a few fine heads which occupy the position of honour; but a new feature is a selection from the trophies obtained by H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught during his shooting trip in East Africa last year, the finest among them being a magnificently mounted lion.

To particularise other specimens in the exhibition would far exceed the limits of a single article; and we must therefore conclude by recommending every sportsman who has the chance to pay a visit to this splendid show, and likewise with the expression of our hearty congratulations to all who have been engaged in its promotion and arrangement.

MISTRESS (to Mary, about to be married): "And where did you meet your young man, Mary?" Mary: "Oh, at uncle's funeral, mum. He was the life and soul of the party."

WIFE (reading paper): "Here is an account of a man in Yorkshire who sold his wife for five pounds. Isn't it dreadful?" (Husband thoughtfully)—Well, I dunno. Five pounds is a good deal of money."

"I WANT to ask one more question," said little Frank as he was being put to bed. "Well?" acquiesced the tired mamma. "When holes come in stockings, what becomes of the piece of stocking that was there before the hole came?"

HENLEY ROYAL REGATTA.

LONDON, Friday, 8th July 1911.

THE annual regatta at Henley was held in splendid weather and some good racing was witnessed. Magdalen College, Oxford, again won the Grand Challenge and other holders to retain their titles were Eton College in the Ladies' Plate and W. D. Kinnear in the Diamond Sculls. The Thames R.C. were twice successful, winning the Stewards' Cup and the Silver Goblets. Three Cambridge Colleges—First Trinity, Third Trinity, and Pembroke—accounted for the three remaining events. Resulted:—

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE latest Calcutta betting on the Leger is recorded in the sporting paper The Handicap issued by Messrs. J. B. Beattie and Co., Turf Commission Agents, and a long list of horses is given, though two months before the race like this it would perhaps be imprudent to accept our contemporary's list as any final indication of the probable runners. But as no other betting on this race has so far been wired to India we republish these odds for what they are worth. They are as follows:—

3 to 1 Sunstar (Mr. J. B. Joel), Morton.
8 to 1 King William (Lord Derby), Lambton.
10 to 1 Phryxus (Mr. Fairie), Taylor.
12 to 1 Seaforth (Mr. D. M'Calmont), Persse.
12 to 1 Faucheur (Baron de Rothschild), M. Francé.
15 to 1 Tullibardine (Sir J. Robinson), S. Darling.
16 to 1 Lord Bergoyne (M. E. Blanc), M. Francé.
20 to 1 Lycaon (Mr. J. B. Joel), Morton.
20 to 1 Sobieski (Mr. H. Cholmondeley), Gilpin.
20 to 1 Cellini (Mr. L. Neumann), Gilpin.
20 to 1 Prince Palatine (Mr. T. Filkington), Beardsley.
20 to 1 All Gold (Mr. H. P. Whitney), Joyner.
20 to 1 Bachelor's Hope (Mr. A. Lowrey), Persse.
20 to 1 Bridge of Allan (Lord Derby), Lambton.
20 to 1 Tootles (Captain F. Forrester), Lewis.
20 to 1 Bannockburn (Mr. J. Hallick), Hallick.
20 to 1 Sydmonton (Mr. E. Kennedy), R. Dawson.
20 to 1 Longboat (Mr. H. J. King), Leach.
25 to 1 Pietri (Mr. L. de Rothschild), Watson.
25 to 1 Lindoiya (Mr. L. de Rothschild), Watson.

ESTABLISHED 1742.

The fact that Sunstar is head of this list may mean nothing at all, for until some final announcement is made of an authoritative nature as to whether he is likely to stand another preparation or not it is merely a precautionary measure to put him at the shortest price. If all is well with him then he is bound to be top of the betting on past performances and the bookmakers would be foolish to open out against him. The quite disinterested testimony of many good judges after the colt's breakdown in the Derby was however to the effect that it was very doubtful indeed whether he would stand racing again. Mr. Joel, on the other hand, has said that "it is not serious" and that the fact that he has left the colt in the race may be taken as some sort of indication that they hope to patch him up and are by no means despondent of being able to run him. Some little time before the Derby that painstaking "handicapper" on the Pink'Un who writes under the pen-name of "The Head Lad" made a classification of the prominent three-year-olds and it is of interest to pick out a few of those that he then handicapped and add one or two facts that must cause him to revise some of his figures. The most interesting items of "The Head Lad's" handicap at the present moment are the following :—

	st.	lb.		st.	lb.
Sunstar	9	7	All Gold	8	3
Lycaon	9	2	Hair Trigger ...	8	2
Cellini	8	11	Royal Tender ...	8	7
Sydmonton ...	8	10	Tootles	8	0
Pietri	8	10	Tullibardine ...	8	0
King William ...	8	8	Bridge of Allan ...	7	7
Phryxus	8	8	Lindoiya	7	4
Longboat	8	7	Sobieski	7	3

This handicap was made before the Derby and before the Oaks and was therefore merely a classification of the two-year-old form plus the Two Thousand performances. Stedfast, by the way, "Head Lad" put at 9st. 3lb. and Cherimoya, the winner of the Oaks, was not handicapped—as how could she be considering that she had never seen a racecourse before she ran at Epsom? "Head Lad" will no doubt very shortly revise his ideas, but pending his next handicap's appearance we will endeavour to rearrange his figures somewhat, starting at the same point as he has done. Our ideas are as follows :—

	st.	lb.		st.	lb.
Sunstar	9	7	All Gold	7	12
King William ...	9	5	Pietri	7	12
Royal Tender ...	8	12	Sobieski	7	5
Cherimoya ...	8	9	Cellini	7	5
Lycaon	8	7	Lindoiya	7	2
Phryxus	8	5	Tullibardine ...	7	0
Tootles	8	0	Bridge of Allan ...	7	0
Hair Trigger II. ...	7	12	Longboat	7	0
Sydmonton ...	7	12

The reason for a good many of these alterations is not very difficult to follow. "Head Lad" worked Stedfast out to be only 4lb. worse than Sunstar. We have taken a moderate estimate of King William in estimating him to be only a 2lb. better horse than his stable companion, Stedfast, but we submit that by the light of his recent performance behind Swynford and Lemberg in the Princess of Wales' Stakes that we have placed our estimate well within the mark. The Derby form in our opinion did not make Stedfast out as far behind Sunstar as "Head Lad" has put them. In the Princess of Wales' Stakes King William was getting 16lb. only from Swynford and 19lb. from Lemberg and he finished only a length behind the latter. In addition to this he won the Ascot Derby Stakes, 1½ miles, in a canter from Phryxus whom he had at his mercy 300 yards from home. They were then at level weights and we have estimated that it was a 14lb. beating but again we probably are erring on the side, under estimation of King William of because winning hard held as he did at Ascot it would be difficult to estimate how much he had in hand. It probably was a 21lb. beating. Cherimoya, the Oaks winner, we put at the sex allowance with Royal Tender who ran third in the Derby and we have estimated that she gave Tootles a 9lb. beating. Tootles was followed by Hair Trigger II. who was a poor third but in view of the latter's previous performances we have not put too high a value on the defeat. All Gold when he met Stedfast at level weights at Ascot in the Prince of Wales' Stakes, 1 mile 5 furlongs, never saw the way the winner went and we are therefore probably treating him too hardly in estimating that he is only 21lb. behind King William. It is hardly necessary to talk about the rest of them because at present it is difficult to believe that weight could bring them on terms with the top-weights over the Leger distance. Our personal idea is that King William is probably every bit as good a colt as the Derby crack, and with the disturbing doubt as to the latter's soundness we would rather have a bit of King William at "eights" and "twos" for the Leger than Sunstar at "threes" straight out. If King William is so much better than Stedfast as it was said earlier in the year that he was, then even if Sunstar is at his best the Leger is by no means the walk-over for him that some people have asserted that it will be. King William's performances since Epsom have been of a most encouraging description and we may take it that if ill luck had not pursued him earlier in the year and Mr. Lambton had been able to get him right for his big engagement he would have given a very good account of himself. Taking a line through Stedfast there is no other conclusion that can be arrived at and again taking a line through Stedfast at what must we in the circumstances estimate the chance at Doncaster.

ROYAL TENDER ran second at Ascot in the 2 miles Gold Vase at Ascot to Lord Cadogan's filly Martingale II, Elunilia and Mushroom being the other runners, and it may also be mentioned that Stedfast beat Cellini anyhow at w. f. a. in the St. James' Palace Stakes at Ascot, 1 mile, leading from end to end. Time—1min. 33⅘secs.

THE Handicap says :—"We hear on good authority that there are two fliers coming from the Argentine for the Viceroy's Cup and the other big race ; one belongs to Senor Don Benito Villanueva and the other belongs to Senor Don Satirnino Unzue and are going to Dignam's stable." Nothing beyond this, however, is at present known.

THERE have been one or two arrivals in Calcutta since last week and more are expected this week and more again for the second week in August, when there are three days racing all close together, the 12th, 17th and 19th, the fourth, fifth and sixth days of the Calcutta Monsoon Meeting. It is said that probably H. H. Sir John Hewett and Miss Hewett may be in Calcutta about that time and that Captains Charrington and Tomkinson and Mr. Miles are coming down about the same time.

BOND was on the course on Saturday morning and has eight horses and ponies all told, his string including April Fool, Mandeville, Gurteen, Winsome, Ocean, Nijidi, Mallinyook and Pariah. Captain Houston may not come down after all as he is at present away on duty elsewhere.

HEYWOOD has only three, Topsail, who is not to run at the meetings, old Abet and the 14-2 Pingara. They are all looking well.

GEE'S second detachment were to have arrived yesterday (Wednesday) and include Spec, Moltke, Mabel L,. To Kalon, Lissadell, Lionel and Huret Lad. Melody, Charlotte and Merry Eyes have been here some time of course and have been running with a fair amount of success at the Tollygunge Club Meetings, all bar Melody who fell badly last Saturday as elsewhere recorded. It is said that Merry Eyes may run over hurdles in the Monsoons and that she is clever jumper. She has shown us that she has plenty of pace on the flat.

BEEDHAM has not yet arrived and the latest news from him is to the effect that the heat up-country is so great that he is afraid to travel his horses till there is a break. Down here things are not much better, and although we have had a few desultory showers since last Saturday, it cannot be said to have lowered the temperature appreciably and the going though slightly improved is still on the hard side.

As a consequence of the failure of the Monsoon there has been very little work done by the local horses and though now less than a fortnight off the first day of the meeting, few trainers have ventured

Radiol

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister: No Laying up
No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906 :—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

to do much galloping. The ground has been too hard for one thing and the sand track in dry weather is not by any means a desirable place upon which to send horses along, as they strike the hard brick foundation at every stride. On Monday a couple of horses, Levi and Farthing Bun, had a short school over hurdles and at the end of last week Maisonette and a stable companion jumped a few flights. On Tuesday Marconi went over a few and there have been one or two others, but the ground is very slippery and treacherous as the rain, such as we have had, has done no more than wet the surface which consequently slips off at very slight provocation and is proportionately dangerous. On Monday when Northbrook, Bird of Freedom and Scotch Girl were going a gallop on the sand the latter came down at the half mile turn, her boy averring that a soft bit in the track caused the mischief. Singleton was sent along fast on Saturday and Maisonette and a brown mare were also sprinted along on Monday, all on the sand.

Major Eustace Crawley, who is at present in Darjeeling, is probably coming down, so we hear, for some of the Monsoon Meetings and to see his mare Shannon Lass run.

Master John, Mrs. Lamond Walker's honest hunter, we regret to hear, became paralysed and has had to be destroyed.

The jockeys now on the premises in Calcutta who will be available next week are Northmore, Traban, McNeilage, Dick, Cahill, White and Gee. Gadsden and Ruiz are coming later but so far there are not many of the professionals here and unless more put in an appearance it looks as though there would be a dearth on the first day at any rate.

We are asked to draw attention to the fact that the sand gallop is not open to the general public and is meant for racehorses and not for hacks. It is also necessary for owners of racehorses to obtain permission from the Clerk of the Course before using it. It is furthermore only intended for fast work.

The Tollygunge Club Third Gymkhana on Saturday last was in some ways an advance upon its predecessors but was not favoured by any better weather and fields were also in many cases very disappointing, decent entries dwindling down in one case to a contest between two, both in the same stable. The going was slightly better, thanks to some showers that fell during the morning, but the course was fairly fast none the less. There is now only one more of these meetings but we think that we may candidly say that we have not seen a racehorse out at any one of them, which is of course what is intended. J. E. A., who won on Saturday, is probably the best bred thing that has run at them, but is so unreliable that her late owner (Dr. J. E. Adams, M.R.C.V.S.) was very glad to be rid of her at any price that was bid for her at auction and she can never be depended upon to try oftener than once in a blue moon. Merry Eyes is probably a useful sort of pony and they say may be heard of over hurdles during the coming Monsoon Meetings. Suffragette is a nice stamp of hunter but we should say after the way she ran last Saturday that she is of no manner of use over a short distance and jumping is obviously her métier. Asteroid may turn out to be a useful horse in his class but he is obviously unready and a long way off his best, though he has recently come on a bit in his appearance and his coat. Cairo has not much opening at the Monsoons as he is under disability for the closed races. Lah is not to be depended open and ran none too game on Saturday. Jumping ought of course to be his line, but he is not fond of it and must have been a well-known rogue before ever he came into his present owner's possession. But these, we take it, are about the best horses and ponies that have been out.

There were six races on last Saturday's card, a pony hurdle race topping the list. For this only four started, Melody, a big chestnut mare owned by Mr. A. J. Shillingford, being installed favourite. She had had no schooling, so it was said, and from the way she jumped she is evidently very unpractised. She deserved a fall earlier than she got one, but when it came it was a solid one and unfortunately Captain Large who rode her got the worst of it, being somewhat badly concussed. He was unable to ride for the rest of the afternoon. Pan Out, who looks nearer 15 hands than 14-2, had no difficulty in defeating the diminutive Minnie.

Although there were twelve coloured in the Open Pony Plate, only two ran, Merry Eyes who started at 5 to 2 on and Charlotte whose price was 3 to 1 on. Charlotte won by half a length though we should have expected to see Merry Eyes beat her at the weights. In the Russa Stakes Suffragette went out a hot favourite but could not pace it with them and in a close finish Proprietor beat Wait-for-Me a head. Proprietor would have won comfortably if he had not run very wide at the turn.

In the All-Comers Stakes Lah was made first favourite and started at 6 to 4 on but he ran very badly and J. E. A. won without being called upon from Cairo. The Jiu Jitsu Plate furnished yet another upset as they backed Biddy, but the winner turned up in Pacific, a recent purchase, ridden by the owner, Mr. May, and he won without much difficulty by a length. The final problem was the Rifle Brigade Cup for which eight of the sporting corps at present quartered in Calcutta went out headed by their chief Colonel Shute. Mr. J. Crosbie's Ptarmigan, a handsome little Arab purchased out of the 10th Hussars Polo Club, won a fine race by three parts of a length from Major Harman's Sir Rupert, but on returning to scale Mr. Crosbie could not draw the weight and so disqualification ensued and the race went to Sir Rupert.

On Saturday next there is a three cornered match, between Miranda, Biddy and Loyalty. There is also a steeplechase. The entries will be found elsewhere.

The latest thing in automatic pistols has just been shown us by Messrs. Manton and Company. It is called the Reform Pistol and certainly is an unique weapon. It is small and compact and can be carried in either trousers or overcoat pocket without the slightest inconvenience, taking up no more room than an ordinary wallet. It can be relied upon in an emergency. It is powerful, yet simple to manipulate. It shoots the ·25 calibre Colt Automatic Cartridge, which has great shocking power at short range. The pistol may be used either as a single shot or double action. For accurate shooting at greater distances one should cock the weapon before each shot. It has four barrels which, when firing, automatically push themselves upward in a straight line, so that they come, one after the other, before the firing pin. The empty shell is extracted from its chamber by the gas pressure generated by the explosion of the next cartridge.

The loaded pistol may be carried in the pocket without any danger from accidental discharge as the hammer only comes into contact with the firing pin at the instant of explosion. Besides this, an additional safety device is found on the left side of the frame, which may be pushed up, absolutely locking the action. Other advantages of this pistol are its great firing rapidity and the ease with which it may be dismounted. The pistol may be cleaned by simply pulling the barrels out of the frame, which can only be done when the pistol is not cocked. The cartridges to which it is adapted is ·25 calibre Colt Automatic Cartridge, We need only add that the weapon can be had from Messrs. Manton and Company who are the Indian agents.

The team selected by the I.P.A. to represent India in the Coronation Cup at Hurlingham is comprised as follows:—Captain Leslie Cheape (K.D.G.'s) Captain R. G. Ritson (Inniskillings), Captain V. N. Lockett (17th Lancers) and Mr. E. W. E. Palmes (10th Hussars). On the I.P.A. goal handicap system this team works out as follows:—

Captain Leslie Cheape	...	9 points
Captain R. G. Ritson ...	...	8 ,,
Captain V. N. Lockett...	...	8 ,,
Mr. E. W. E. Palmes ...	...	9 ,,

In the Hurlingham List Captain Leslie Cheape is handicapped at 9 points and Mr. E. W. E. Palmes is at 8. Neither Captains Ritson nor Lockett have any Hurlingham handicap. The Coronation Cup final is played on the 15th July.

The famous brood mare Sceptre has been sold at the Newmarket sales for seven thousand guineas. Sceptre, bred by the late Duke of Westminster, was purchased by Mr. Sievier for 10,000 guineas, far the highest price ever paid for a yearling, and undoubtedly proved one of the cheapest mares ever bought. She was first seen in the Woodcote Stakes and cantered home by four lengths; she won the July Stakes with equal ease, but when not herself failed in the Champagne. As a three-year-old she came out for the Lincolnshire Handicap, in which, however, she was beaten a short head by St. Maclou, but she proceeded to carry off the Two Thousand and the One Thousand Guineas, the Oaks, the St. James' Palace Stakes, the Nassau Stakes and the St. Leger. Sceptre started an even money favourite for the Derby, but could get no nearer than fourth, the race being won by Ard Patrick; Rising Glass and Friar Tuck being second and third respectively. As a four-year-old this daughter of Persimmon and Ornament was out seven times and won five, failing again in the Lincolnshire Handicap, but winning the Hardwicke Stakes, the Jockey Club Stakes, the Duke of York Stakes, the Champion and the Limekiln Stakes. She was kept in training when past her best. Sir William Bass purchased her for 25,000 guineas and she was brought under the hammer in conjunction with her owner's resolution of giving up racing entirely and disposing of the whole of his stud.

The following races at the Bangalore Meeting not having filled have been cancelled:—The C. B. Plate (1st Day), the Ali Asker Plate (4th Day) and the following races divided, viz., the Horse Trials (1st Day), the July Plate (4th Day). The above races will be styled the 1st and 2nd Divisions of the Horse Trials and July Plate respectively.

Ranelagh played a team of Indian polo players on Thursday last and were beaten by 8 goals to 4. The native team gave a brilliant exhibition, Captain Shah Mirza Beg, the well-known Golconda player, being particularly conspicuous and scoring six goals.

Five teams have entered for the Polo Tournament at Bangalore which opened on Tuesday with the game between the Cameron Highlanders and the Poona Horse. The former winning a very one-sided match by 9 goals to nil. Grimshaw 4, Hildebrand 3 and Amir Singh 2 were the scorers. The Sappers and Miners have drawn a bye and the 14th Hussars play the Deccan Horse and the final takes place on Friday.

The Inter Varsity Cricket Match was played at Lords last week and ended in a win for Oxford by 74 runs. The Dark Blues have now won on 33 occasions, Cambridge being victors on 36. Two other big matches were played during the week. The Gentlemen vs. Players match at the Oval ended on Saturday in a draw, the Gentlemen leading on the first innings. The same day the annual match between Eton and Harrow was concluded at Lords, Eton winning by three wickets. Other important results during the past week are as follows:—

Worcestershire beat Leicestershire by three wickets at Worcester.

Notts beat Sussex by eight wickets at Nottingham.

The Indian team played Northants at Northampton last week and met with yet another defeat. Going in first they scored 133, of which Kanga made 65. Northants replied with 104. The visitors compiled 149 in their second venture and the county were left with 179 to make to win. They hit up 182 for four wickets and thus won by six wickets.

THE Match vs. Yorkshire was played at Hull on Monday and Tuesday the County winning by an innings and 43 runs. They batted first and scored 385, to which Denton contributed 118 and Haigh 111. The Indian team replied with 233, Jayaram scoring 53, and following on they were all out for 109.

THE finals in the ladies' singles and men's doubles in the Lawn Tennis Championships at Wimbledon were played on Friday last. In the men's doubles A. F. Wilding and A. J. G. Ritchie, the holders, were beaten by the French pair Decugis and Gobert by 3 sets to 2 (9—7 : 5—7 : 6—3 : 2—6 : 6—2). Mrs. Lambert Chambers retained her title in the ladies' singles, defeating Miss D. Boothby by 2 sets to nil (6—0 : 6—0). The men's singles final brought together the holder A. F. Wilding and H. Roper Barrett. Barrett retired with the score at 2 sets all (6—4 : 4—6 : 2—6 : 6—3) and Wilding thus kept the title.

THE Madras Hockey Tournament was brought to a conclusion on Saturday last when the Leicesters met the Madras Volunteer Guards in the final and beat them after a good game by 4 goals to 2. Details further on.

THE French Open Golf Championship was played last week at Labourie and won by the Frenchman Arnaud Massey, who beat the English Champion Vardon and all the other British topnotchers.

A LION and a lioness escaped from their cage in the Saifabad Public Gardens, Secunderabad, last week and caused a good deal of excitement before they were captured. A small army of men took part in the hunt and, though the lioness was soon driven into her cage, her mate gave a lot of trouble before he was coaxed into the trap waiting for his reception.

FINE weather made a gymkhana possible at Annandale last Saturday and another enjoyable afternoon was spent by a large gathering, the Viceroy's Band helping to enliven the proceedings. Ten ladies competed in the opening event—The Juggler Stakes—Mrs. Evans coming in first. In the second event gentlemen rode one pony and led another. Won by Captain Barge with Major Battine second. The Elopement Stakes came next. Couples to run to their ponies at a given signal, gallop to the Registry Office, sign their names, and ride back to the winning post. Won by Major Battine and Miss E. Wickham; Mrs. Leys and Miss Stewart Wilson second. Miss Stewart Wilson scored in the next event in which ladies broke chatties with a polo ball, and the programme was concluded with the Tailoring Stakes. Gentlemen to run to their partners with a parcel containing two pieces of cloth, a needle, some pins, thread and a knife. With these the pair had to manufacture a gentleman's garment which the gentleman donned over his ordinary clothes and raced to the winning post. Miss Osborne and Captain Evans were first, the latter wearing a beautiful pair of black and yellow shorts. Captain Tod and Miss Hewett were second, Captain Tod clothed in a splendid tailcoat, kilt, and bonnet.

MR. ABBOT THAYER, an American artist, has shown that the model of the body of a bird, tinted a uniform grey, is conspicuous against a grey background when it is lighted from above, as the upper surface looks nearly white and the under surface nearly black, whilst a similar model, similarly illuminated but coloured black above and white below, is invisible at a short distance, as the light from above tones down the black back and the shadow from below darkens the surface to a uniform grey.

WE regret to record the death of Mr. T. C. Edwards, Collector of Agra, as the result of an accident while out pigsticking. A charging boar brought down Mr. Edwards' horse and his rider was thrown off on to his head and left shoulder. He was picked up unconscious and conveyed to Agra by motor without delay. A fracture of the base of the skull and other severe injuries rendered his condition hopeless and he died on the 4th instant. A good sportsman and a popular officer with all classes, his death is universally deplored and the greatest sympathy is felt for Mrs. Edwards.

THERE is a very ancient belief that the reptile known as the salamander is proof against fire. Dr. Stejneger, reptilian expert at the Smithsonian Institution, tells a story which may furnish a reason for the continuance of the belief in question. "Once I was camping out," he says, "with a party of friends, hunting and fishing. We had lighted a big fire, using for fuel several old logs. While we were seated around, watching the progress of some cookery in which we were engaged, a young lady at my side gave a little scream and pointed into the flames. I looked and there was a small salamander crawling right out from among the glowing embers. It walked away unhurt and made its escape. Now, that salamander had occupied a hole in one of the logs used for fuel. Several species of its kind live in old tree trunks. Doubtless this one found that it was getting uncomfortably hot and crawled out. Being moist and slimy, its body was protected from injury by fire long enough to enable it to escape through the embers. But the sight of the lizard deliberately making its appearance from the midst of the fire was certainly very surprising. Any ignorant person might easily have been led to imagine that the creature was fireproof. It seemed to me quite probable that the superstition took its origin from just such occurrences."

A SPORTING NIGHTMARE.

Last night I had a horrid dream, I heard a dumbbell ring.
And then a noisy catch-weight fell as loud as anything.
They worked me up to such a pitch, I could but moan and toss,
Until their tennis racket grew so great I got lacrosse.
"Oh, Godfrey Watson!" I did say. "What are you Giffen us?
I'll up and Harry Trott away unless you stop this fuss."
But still they mocked and gibed, and said to me with many a shout
"Is Clarence Weber than George Webb?" I answered them "No doubt."
But still they would persist, and asked—"If Walter Addison—
Pray, do you think he'd William Howell?" I answered, "Nay, have done.
A pretty Trickett is to play. If you will not be still
I will away." And as I spoke I climbed the Clement Hill,
And when I stood upon the crest I heard the Battan Singh;
And all the big Jack Lyons roared, McLeod at anything.
Upon the placid J. T. Lake I saw the H. Meoushine;
'Twas not a thing to Cavill at I thought it very fine.
Then I grew sentimental, and remembered with a sigh
A pretty maiden over in the J. J. Woods near by.
I hastened through the Charlie Towns—a Noble sight, indeed,
I asked them how to cross the Marsh. They answered, "Reedman, Read I"
I got them to Seth Ferry me across the Norman Brookes,
And all the time I raved about that maiden and her looks.
"I don't know how it is," I said, "I can't recall her name:
And though her dress is Doudy, she's a Darling all the same.
"In fact," I said, "she is a Trump, and though it seems absurd She's Trumper should she Kling to me (if I may Hughes the word)."
And when I reached the old Moorehouse, out on the Byron Moore.
A Nigel Barker barked at me, just as I reached the door.
I tried to lift the latch, and found it weighed a Whitington.
I cursed in disappointment—"Durnan bust the thing, I'm done."
And then the strangest thing occurred—I heard a nightmare neigh,
It proved to be a Carbine, so it went off straight away.

C. J. Dennis in the Adelaide Observer.

OWEN MORAN AND ADOLF WOLGAST met for the Light Weight Boxing Championship of the World at San Francisco on the 4th instant. Wolgast knocked his opponent out in the thirteenth round and thus retained the title, which he had won from Battling Nelson about a year ago. That fight went 40 rounds when it was stopped and the verdict given to Wolgast. Moran, the Birmingham boxer, subsequently met and also defeated Nelson, knocking him out in the eleventh round. After an infinity of wrangling a match was arranged between Moran and Wolgast and this was the fight which took place on Independance Day, details of which we await with the greatest interest as it must have been a desperate "go." This is the first time Moran has been knocked out. Since his defeat of the Battler Wolgast has engaged in no very serious contests and seemed to have been hiding his form; so much so, that Moran's stock was high and the contest looked upon as a good thing for the Britisher. Recently, however, Wolgast beat "K. O." Brown, Pal Moore and Frankie Burns and the lacing he administered to the lastnamed changed the opinions of many who had been prepared to back Moran's chances. It is probable that Matt Wells or Fred Welsh will be Wolgast's next opponent.

MATT WELLS continues to show up brilliantly in America. He met the Philadelphian champion, Pal Moore, at the Armoury A. A., Boston, on the 15th ultimo in a twelve round battle. It was a fast, clean and clever bout but Wells was on top throughout and won without being seriously troubled. "K. O." Brown is spoken of as being the next one to face the English champion.

BILLY PAPKE has replied to the charge brought against him by Jim Sullivan to the effect that the American had his body greased in their recent fight for the Middle Weight Championship of the world. Papke appears to be much amused at the suggestion and has conclusively proved that the allegations were incorrect—the only lotion which he did use being a preparation mainly composed of witchhazel and alcohol, neither of which will assimilate air, oil or grease. The American further denies all the charges of foul tactics and asserts that during the contest Sullivan did most of the holding and that he (Papke) was always trying to break from him.

A NUMBER of amateur contests were brought off by the National Sporting Club de France on the 20th June. It was an Anglo-French function and the English amateurs were successful all along the line. They were too clever and steady for the erratic Frenchmen, who showed great improvement compared with former engagements.

Bantam Weights.—W. W. Allen (English champion) beat Nastor (French champion) in four rounds. Feather Weights.—R. Erskine (English champion) beat Pessieto (French champion) in four rounds. Light Weights.—R. Spenceley (English champion) beat Damasso (French champion) in four rounds. Heavies.—S. Grain (English champion) beat Neret (French champion) in four rounds.

Allen, Erskine and Spenceley, it will be remembered, were members of the victorious English amateur team which went over to New York to take part in the first International Amateur Competitions. While the English amateurs did so well against the Frenchmen the two professional contests staged the same evening were a different case. Jack Goldswain of London met Carpentier of Lens for the Welter Weight Championship of Europe, the fight proving an easy victory for the Frenchman who knocked his man out in the fifth round. A 12 round contest between the light weights, Poesy and J. Smith, was an interesting affair and went to the Frenchman on points.

THIS week's issue of the Times of India Illustrated Weekly will contain pictures of the actual scenes of the Coronation together with a full descriptive account. These pictures are practically exclusive and are well ahead of the weekly illustrated papers from Home. As an enormous demand for this issue is anticipated early application for copies should be made to the local office at 32-1, Dalhousie Square, South.

A HANDICAP polo tournament was recently held at Nowshera and proved a great success. Six teams entered. In the first round the 25th Cavalry (+4) met and defeated the Nowshera Gymkhana (+8) by 10 goals to 9 and the 10th Hussars (scr.) beat the 15th Lancers (+1½) by 4 goals to 2½. The 25th Cavalry then met the 3rd Brigade R.F.A. (+4) and won by 8 goals to 5 and the Guides (+1½) beat the 10th Hussars by 3½ goals to 3. The final was between the 25th Cavalry and the Guides, the Guides winning comfortably by 9½ goals to 5.

THE Inter Regimental Polo tournament at Hurlingham was won by the 4th Dragoon Guards who beat the Blues in the final on Monday by 5 goals to 4.

THE Times expects shortly a decision regarding a fresh Anglo-American polo contest in London in the near future. The paper thinks many are willing to make a sacrifice to see the Cup back at Hurlingham. The Times attributes the defeat recently of the English team at Meadowbrook to the fact that the organisation of Captain Lloyd's team was hampered by interference and lack of support which in some instances practically amounted to a boycott.

GEORGE GRAY added yet another to his long string of noteworthy feats on the last two days of his match with Inman and wound up by winning with 16,000 to Inman's 8,769. As a compiler of big breaks Gray stands alone. Inman, although beaten by so big a margin, gave several glimpses of good form, and, ran up a break of 205 in excellent style, but his opportunities of getting to the table for anything like a long innings were comparatively few owing to the long-sustained efforts of the Australian marvel. Inman is now on with a challenge to play Gray next January with ivory balls for any sum from £200 to £500 a side.

London Week by Week.

THURSDAY, 22nd June 1911.

I must send off my weekly budget a day before the closing time for the Indian mail, for these Coronation rejoicings make for dislocation and uncertainty to which the post office is not immune. Therefore I shall not be able to refer to the pageantry of to-morrow; it can wait. Most of you will have heard all about it by cable long before these lines see print. We had a nasty week-end and it has been overcast and showery ever since Monday; if we have rain to-morrow, thousands of seat holders who patronise the red cloth covered benches on the innumerable stands are likely, methinks, to carry away a good impression of the show! But the weather prophets will have none of these gloomy forebodings; they have laid down King's weather for both days. So mote it be.

* * * * * *

ASCOT SUNDAY was completely spoiled by rain. Except during the great June flood of 1903 there has never been such a disastrous Ascot Sunday as this. From early morning till late in the afternoon there was a succession of storms of tropical intensity in the Thames Valley, and boating might have been indulged in on some of the streets and roads of the riverside places. Maidenhead and Boulter's Lock suffered particularly. In less than an hour at midday three-quarters of an inch of rain fell, and parts of High Street, Bridge Road, Ray Street, and West Street were flooded from side to side. Motor-cars had some difficulty in passing through the water. Over an inch of rain was recorded during the day. The effect on boat-letters and hotels was serious. On the previous day all available launches, punts, and skiffs were booked, but on Sunday messages arrived by telephone and telegraph cancelling the orders, and comparatively few craft were out. Those which ventured forth soon returned, their occupants drenched to the skin, and many ladies who had gone out in smart frocks and hats presented a most bedraggled and piteous appearance. There was a terrific storm, accompanied by thunder, soon after four o'clock, when Boulter's Lock was comparatively full of craft, and the water poured down the lock steps into the boats and launches. Up to that time only 250 small craft and 130 launches had passed through the lock. Last Ascot Sunday the number for the whole day was about 1,500, though the total was greatly reduced by mourning for King Edward.

A LONG list of Coronation honours ushers in the week of the crowning, and it may happily be said that the list is worthy of a great occasion. There is nothing absolutely startling in its composition, and it is markedly free from party bias. But these persons whom the King has delighted to honour have deserved, in one way or another, and for the most part in ways approved by the whole community the high distinctions conferred upon them. A Coronation honours list is, by precedent and tradition, more comprehensive and less political than other lists of the same orders, and tradition has been admirably followed on this occasion, which adds ten peers to the threatened ranks of the upper Chamber, makes twenty new baronets, and fifty new knights.

Among so many honoured names it is impossible to do more than refer to a few of the new distinctions which make an instant impression on the public mind. That Lord Kitchener should become a Knight of St. Patrick will be welcome to all his fellow-countrymen, and, though it will be difficult, if not impossible, to grow used to the Earl of Mid Lothian, whom we have known so long as Lord Rosebery, that distinction will be grudged and criticised by none. Lord Crewe, too, receives an honour in a marquisate to which he is unquestionably entitled.

Sir George Trevelyan and Sir Edward Elgar receives the coveted Order of Merit, the Lord Chancellor and Lord Curzon become earls, Mr. Akers-Douglas a viscount, Sir Alexander Acland-Hood a baron, Sir Joseph Ward a baronet, and Mr. George Alexander, the actor, and the Hon'ble Charles Parsons, inventor of the turbine, knights. Two distinguished soldiers, Lord Methuen and Sir William Nicholson, become Field-Marshals. Lord Knollys becomes a viscount, and Sir Arthur Bigge, the King's private secretary, a baron. Princess Patricia of Connaught receives the Decoration of the Imperial Crown of India.

FAR and away the largest and in most respects the most decent and orderly demonstration of suffragettes ever seen in this country was offered for the delectation of London last Saturday. There was no fighting, no bobbie-butting, no screeching, yet there were not lacking elements of humour in the affair and one must unreservedly say it was a triumph of organisation. Everything was carried out with precision and skill and the spectacle was withal picturesque and interesting. There were, according to the official programme, vote sellers, prisoners, police-court protesters, tax resisters, grille protesters, picketers, ballot-box protesters, graduates, teachers, civil servants, nurses, athletes, agriculturists, factory workers, sweated women workers, and business and professional women.

Brilliant weather favoured the event, which was witnessed by scores of thousands of spectators. The demonstration assumed the form of a procession, which was organised on the Thames Embankment. It stretched from the Bank to the Houses of Parliament and overflowed into many of the side streets leading to the wide thoroughfares. At a given signal the women marched via Northumberland Avenue, Pall Mall, Piccadilly, and Knightsbridge to the Albert Hall, where in the evening a great meeting was held, presided over by Mrs. Pankhurst. Others of the processionists assembled at different halls in the West of London and were harangued by leaders of the movement.

The various sections began to assemble on the Embankment soon after two o'clock. The numbers who assisted in the monster demonstration was stated by the promoters to be between thirty and forty thousand. At any rate, close upon two hours were occupied in passing a given point. Nearly all were on foot.

If one judged by the emblems carried, the demonstration was not only of an Imperial, but of an international character, and it was, moreover, announced by the organisers that "every civilised country in the world" had sent delegates. Britain's dominions beyond the seas were also represented.

Foremost in the different sections were women famous in the worlds of science, art, literature, music, the stage, and politics. Women graduates were attired in their academic robes. Literature was represented by Elizabeth Robins, Beatrice Harraden, Sarah Grand, Cicely Hamilton, Alice Meynell, and Israel Zangwill; the drama by Lena Ashwell, Lillah McCarthy, Decima Moore, Yvette Guilbert, Gertrude Kingston, Julia Opp, Olive Terry and many others. Lydia Yavorska (Princess Bariatinsky) was also amongst the processionists, and the operatic and musical circles were represented by Marie Brema, Rosa Leo, and Esther Palliser.

There were pageants of women notable in British history from the far past up to modern times. The Empire pageant—consisting of a great triumphal car, decorated and emblematical of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, and of the Colonies and Dependencies of the British Crown throughout the world—was fashioned with great artistic ingenuity, and presented a pleasing and conspicuous feature of the cavalcade. The international contingent carried the national flags of their different countries.

BUT for the efforts of the Irish National Theatre Society interest in things dramatic in London would for the time be dead indeed. The plays from Dublin, like the players, have a wonderful freshness of outlook, and those who were present at the Court Theatre last Monday night were once more regaled with works which proved with conclusive force how real and vital is the Irish dramatic revival. Both the new works then produced were by writers who have already gained recognition, Mr. Lennox Robinson and Mr. William Boyle, and each in his turn demonstrated with added strength the skill of the Irish dramatists in the art of dialogue. "The Clancy Name," a tragedy in one act, by Mr. Robinson, and "The Mineral Workers," a comedy in three acts, by Mr. Boyle, had this in common: a rare naturalness of conversation.

"The Clancy Name," without a superfluous word, carried the little story to its grim denouement. The widow Clancy has struggled to rid the farm of its debt, and has just succeeded when the proud, unbroken spirit is brought to the dust by the revelation that her son is guilty of the murder which has perplexed the police and roused the country side. All she thinks of is the name of the Clancys; nothing must bring discredit on its untarnished honour, and when her boy has saved a child from the recklessness of a drunken driver and has himself fallen under the horse's hoofs, his lifeless body offers the immunity she has prayed for. Incoherent words escape his dying lips, but the spirit passes before any harm is done, and while the priest bends over the corpse, the widow Clancy quietly stems her grief, and with set lips, welcomes the silence of the dead. There may be no one to carry on an honoured name, but there is compensation in the thought that no one is left to dishonour it. Miss Sara Allgood and Mr. Fred O'Donovan as mother and son acted with touching skill.

Very different was "The Mineral Workers." Here there was a vein of delightful humour running through all the serious comedy. A relative from America, young and enterprising, has returned to work the land for iron. The old folk reluctantly consent to the good grass being trampled "like the sides of a new grave," and to seeing the land on which they have been brought up—"it is like a mother's face," says old Farmer Mulroy—break out into a "rash of furnaces." The young folk are caught in the flame of the new ideas; their faith is high, and even when the water gives out and pig-headed Daniel Fogarty is for refusing the cutting of a way through his land from the loch to the mine, they do not despair. There is real humour and human nature in Daniel, a character presented with delightful art by Mr. Arthur Sinclair. He is the knowing one among the older farmers; he has no sympathy with the new-fangled ideas, although he sees to it that he turns his vegetables to good profit with the miners, and he is for ever predicting and prating of ruin to the experiment. But hard-headed and confident Stephen J. O'Reilly, who knew the land when he was a blacksmith's boy, and returns to it to unearth its mineral wealth, stands for inventive progress and industrial development. How victory is secured in spite of old-fashioned prejudice and the clash of self-interest is very realistically told, and if Mr. Boyle rather overdoes the dialogue in length and interest, he has certainly written a play which for freshness of humour and clear-cut characterisation has not had its equal for a long while.

Nothing could exceed the success of the players in the male characters—Mr. J. A. O'Rourke as an old fellow with the heart of a dreamer and a practical mind; Mr. S. J. Morgan as the farmer who sighs for the days of good crops and green meadows; Mr. U. Wright as his scientifically-inclined son; and Mr. J. M. Kerrigan as Stephen J. The ladies, with the exception of Miss Eileen O'Doherty, were easily outplayed. They failed to claim their rightful place in this humorous picture of Ireland in industrial revolution.

AN ELEPHANT CAPTURE IN SOUTH MALABAR.

HAVING received information from the Range Officer that a young elephant had fallen into one of the Government elephant pits some 12 miles from headquarters, the Collector, who was staying with me at Nilambur, and I made arrangements to go out and superintend the capture.

On the following morning we set out before daylight and arrived at the pit to find the preliminary arrangements for taking out the captured elephant in full swing. Trees had been felled and dragged over the pit, billets and branches for throwing into the pit to raise the level were being cut and heaped beside the pit, water to pour on the elephant was being brought in bamboo tubes, and fodder had been stacked on the edge of the pit. The elephant mahouts and other junglemen, mostly Naickens and Panniars, were busy making ropes out of the Sterculia fibre, which is always kept ready in stock at the headquarters of the Range. Ropes are always made at the pit and are not kept ready made, and after they are used they are untwisted and the fibre is stored for future use. Three separate thongs are prepared, which are then twisted into one rope which is almost as thick as a man's wrist. On this occasion two such ropes were required, one for the neck and one for a hind leg.

Having prepared the ropes the neck noose has to be made. The circumference of an elephant's neck being approximately ⅓ less than its height, which is measured by letting a bamboo down into the pit, the necessary length is measured off on the rope and a dumbbell-shaped piece of wood about 9 inches long is put through the twists of the rope and fastened securely to prevent the noose tightening beyond that point and so strangling the elephant. The noose is then formed by drawing the end of the rope through a loop at the noose end.

Three or four strings are now fastened at intervals round the noose so that several people may be able to hold it in position. Everything now being ready, the far end of the rope is fastened to a tree and a number of coolies hold it and are ready to pull the noose tight when the word is given. The men with the noose stand on the logs which have been tied across the pit, and the noose, which has been opened so that its diameter is about 3 feet, is dangled over the mouth of the pit. Fodder, preferably bits of succulent plantain stem, are then offered to the elephant, and as soon as it puts up its trunk to take the fodder, down drops the noose and the coolies pull it tight. Curiously enough a wild elephant even when in the pit will eat readily and will take fodder held over it from the hand.

Having got the noose over the elephant's neck it has to be fastened securely to prevent it slipping back or being pulled back by the elephant's trunk. This tying of the noose is really the only part of the work which is dangerous, and even this does not involve much risk if the men who do it are used to the work. Two or three men lie or sit on the logs over the pit, and whilst the neck rope is held tight by the coolies, they bind cords tightly round the wooden stop and the end of the noose to prevent the latter from slipping.

Next comes the noosing of a hind leg. No wooden stop is required in this case and the noose is simply let down by strings to the bottom of the pit and held against the elephant's leg till he puts his foot into it, when it is drawn up tight. This noose has also to be tied with cord to prevent it slipping. This is done by using bamboo with a hook at the end and, as can be imagined, it is rather a slow and difficult operation, tying knots with a hooked bamboo 12 feet long instead of with one's fingers. After both ropes are fastened securely, billets and branches are thrown into the pit to raise the level.

In this instance, whilst this was going on "Jupiter" and "Maharajan," the two tuskers who were to march off the captured elephant, were brought to the edge of the pit to have a look at their captive. As soon as sufficient billets had been thrown in, the neck rope was unfastened from the tree and wrapped about four times round "Jupiter's" body and fastened. The leg rope was then fastened round "Maharajan" in a similar manner, more billets were thrown in, and the logs were removed from the top of the pit. After one or two scrambles the elephant got out. As a rule on finding itself out of the pit an elephant makes one or two bids for freedom, but in this case the capture gave no trouble at all and the 4 mile march to the kraal was started at once. Four or five other elephants as well as "Jupiter" and "Maharajan" had been brought to the pit to help to drag logs and also to gain experience in capturing operations. They now closed round the other elephants and all marched off together, the new capture in the middle.

On arrival at the kraal the neck rope was unwound from "Jupiter" and passed through the opening of the kraal and fastened to a pillar on the far side. The capture was then pushed in from behind by the tuskers and the bars of the kraal were driven home.

All along it had been thought that our capture was a female elephant, but now after we had spent much thought on finding a suitable name it was discovered that it was a "muckna" or tuskless male, and the search for a name had to begin again. It was gently hinted that one of our other elephants had been named after a former District Forest Officer, but as I had no reason to think myself a "muckna" I did not accept the hint.

There is a very interesting old custom in connection with elephant capturing in South Malabar which is worth mentioning. Each track of jungle has its hereditary lord of the soil or Jenmikar as he is called. These men, who are wild junglemen, have no legal rights whatever over the forest or the elephants, but on the occasion of each elephant capture the following ceremony has to be gone through :—

As soon as the neck noose is prepared the Jenmikar is presented by the Forest officials with a small sum of money, a cloth, a bottle of arrack, rice, cocoanuts, arecanuts and tobacco. He then does homage and says a short prayer presumably to the deity who presides over the wild elephants of the locality and then solemnly hands over the noose to the Forest officials.

Usually whilst the noosing is in progress the Jenmikar and a few select friends retire behind the nearest bamboo clump, and by the time the elephant is taken out of the pit the arrack bottle is empty and the Jenmikar and his friends are in high spirits and are only too anxious to help Government to capture more elephants.

In addition to the present to the Jenmikar the Forest Guards and other Forest subordinates receive rewards of money varying in amount according to the size of the elephant captured and the difficulty experienced in taking it out of the pit.

I may mention that "Aga Khan" has now been in captivity for seven weeks. For some weeks past he has allowed his mahout to go into the kraal with him and handle him and wash him. He can also carry out the more simple words of command such as salaaming, bending, and raising his foot, and he will also allow his mahout to sit on him.—A. WIMBUSH, in The Indian Forester.

Fishing.

BREAM FISHING IN A CANAL.

WHILE staying lately at Weedon I received permission to fish in a short branch of the canal which runs though the Ordnance enclosure. This short piece of water is a cul-de-sac and ends in the magazine yard. The Government employes are given leave to fish, and as the water is very shallow and clear, the bream and roach have become highly educated. This shallowness (the canal is only 4 feet 3 inches to 4 feet 6 inches deep) makes it very difficult to do any good except after rain when the water is clouded. Moreover, directly a fish is hooked, it makes such a disturbance that the rest of the shoal are thoroughly frightened and do not come on the feed again for some considerable time.

When I made my first attempt I found the water like crystal. I had, however, brought the small bream on the feed by careful ground baiting, and by keeping very quiet and the use of extremely fine roach tackle I managed to get ten. They, however, ran small, the best ones only being three-quarters of a pound. I again ground baited the same place and the day after had a complete blank. Either I had caught most of the little shoal which frequented that particular stretch of the canal or I had created a scare and the fish had gone elsewhere.

My next attempt was made in the centre of a square bay, which is in the centre of the Ordnance enclosure and serves as a sort of harbour, where barges can lie without getting in the way of other barges going up or down. This rectangular enlargement in the canal is about 35 yards square, but is no deeper than the rest of the water, viz., about 4 feet 3 inches. There happened to be a condemned barge available, and this I moored in such a way that it projected endways towards the centre of the bay. Thus by going out to the end of the barge and throwing my tackle some little way out, I would be able to reach the centre of the bay. Having fixed the barge in position as quietly as possible, I ground baited with brandling and red worms.

The following day I went to the bay with my float set at such a depth that the worm just touched the bottom. I had taken the precaution to do my plumbing at the time I placed the barge in position, so that I already had my float set exactly at the right place. I used a very light and delicate roach rod, ten feet in length. This rod has a porcelain end ring, and with the gossamer line no thicker than stout sewing cotton, one can cast out quite a distance without difficulty ; my gut was the very finest possible, stained sorrel colour, while the float was a short and slender porcupine quill, which only required two small shots to cock it. The tackle in fact was as refined as it is possible to make it, while the hook was a tiny fragment of attenuated steel, stained gold colour to make it difficult to see.

I selected a well scoured brandling, ran the hook into it, and cast in. Almost directly came the typical bream bite ; two gentle bobs, and the float slid slantwise under and away. I lifted the rod point and found myself fast in a three-quarter pounder, and this fish, in spite of every care, disturbed the swim before the landing net could be put under it.

I tried for a short while more, but the bream had left, so after throwing in a few worms, I followed their example and went away for three-quarters of an hour to give the inhabitants of the pool a chance of calming their nerves.

After the swim had been rested I returned and baiting again, cast out to where I had hooked the first fish. After a short interval the float gave one or two very gentle movements and then slid slowly away. A slight raising of the rod tip sent the tiny hook home, and then I became at once aware that I had hooked a better fish. The bream made a rush across the bay and then threw himself out of the water like a trout. All over the pool he careered and eventually fouled a weed but luckily when this happened he had lost his first liveliness and with a little patience I got him clear. His last effort took him under the barge and then the landing net terminated the fight.

He proved to be a fish of over 1¾lbs. but under 2lbs. and I was certainly surprized that a bream of such moderate dimensions should have made such a lively struggle. It must be remembered, however, that my tackle was as fine as tackle can be made, and there could be no attempt at stopping the bream's first efforts to escape with such delicate gear.

Fishermen used to the large bottom feeding fish of Indian tanks may smile at the idea of the capture of a bream of under two pounds being regarded as a victory. I have, however, caught plenty of rohu and white carp, and the tackle used for these fish is so very much stronger, that a ten pound fish hooked in an Indian pond gives no whit better sport than a middle seized English bream on clear water roach tackle.

My fish so thoroughly disturbed the little pool, that I did not try it again till the evening, and then another small fellow rushed in and the swim was again disturbed.

The above account is amusing in that it shows the extraordinary precautions and the ultra-refined tackle that are necessary in order to bring highly educated fish to the landing nets.

"FLEUR-DE-LYS."

AN OLD ROD.

MR. F. G. AFLALO recalls some sunny memories in the Morning Post.

"Vale atque vale!" It was like cremating an old comrade, or sending an old horse to the knacker, he writes :—Many years it served me well, bending, with the tact that bade it seem to yield even when sure of victory, to the play of gallant fish in the fresh and salt of two hemispheres. Originally built for loch-fishing, and peculiarly for sea trout, it was diverted early in life to other spheres of usefulness, since my opportunities of loch-fishing have been separated by long intervals, during which the old rod, asked to adapt itself to other needs of the moment, did so without a murmur.

First of all, having during a brief holiday on the grim but alluring shores of Etive been put to its legitimate use, it slew bass for three successive seasons in the last reach of a Devon river, killing how many people there are, who, while taking the greatest pains to keep their bodies clean, yet neglect the most important part—their mouth and teeth. This is much to be deplored when it is considered that the teeth have such important functions to perform, the chief of which is the proper mastication of the food, on which the conduct of the digestive organs so largely depends. If, therefore, the teeth are not kept clean and free from decay, the food which should go to nourish and strengthen the body cannot be digested as it should be. How do we set about attaining this desired end? The problem has been solved in an absolutely satisfactory manner, by rinsing the mouth with the antiseptic dentifrice Odol, which is the best dentifrice and mouth-wash that science has yet invented, and the only one recognised by the scientific world that will protect the teeth from decay, and which acts not only during the time of application but for hours after use.

fish of ten and eleven pounds in a water so heavy as to have daunted lesser mettle. The test of a ten-pound bass fighting for its life in that swift tideway, with perhaps a pound of weed clinging to the straining line, was no light one, but my old friend stood it year after year as a good rod should.

Small Game on the Tarpon Grounds.

Then it voyaged with me across the Atlantic and, by way of New York and the Carolinas, to the shell-strewn beaches of the Gulf of Mexico. The chief game of that memorable excursion was the leaping tarpon, the vagaries of which when hooked had to be controlled by a rod resembling a billiard cue, since no more graceful weapon could have checked the gambols of its frisky hundred pounds flung high in air half a dozen times ere it gave the fisherman best. Yet, though it might not be pitted against the "Silver King," as, with no respect for dramatic copyright, Americans call the big cousin of the herring, there was work and to spare for the old rod among the lesser lights of those crowded waters, the leaping lady fish, which reproduces in miniature the frolic of the tarpon, the spotted squeateague, an imitation trout that takes a live minnow with voracity, the fighting sheepshead baited for with fiddler-crabs, and the mustachioed catfish sulking near the bottom, yet taking many a bait meant for better game. Some of these fish weighed four or five pounds, and many of them showed commendable reluctance to come to the landing net, so that there was no danger of my friend getting out of condition or feeling that it had travelled four thousand miles for nothing.

A Brush on the Spanish Main.

Indeed, on the homeward voyage, by way of historic Cartagena and other ports of that storied coast, up and down which Drake of Devon chased the dago, sinking his treasure ships and sacking his nunneries, the rod held its own with fish of great variety, though many of them broke the line, being, indeed, too powerful for capture from the deck of the Tagus on such fine gear as alone could hope to deceive them in the crystal water that mirrors dazzling skies. Yet at Savanilla, I mind me, the four-year-old did rare execution among the sportive cavalli that dwell under the long pier, helping to pass the tedium of a day in quarantine, a service which it rendered once again two years later when I journeyed that way to the Far West.

Margate Mullet.

A more homely episode, which marked the summer following its first visit to the tropics, was enacted in the bracing air of Margate, where it once more proved its versatility with the heavy mullet that browse alongside the jetty, attracted thither, no doubt, by the daily shower of manna from the refreshment room overhead. These cunning fish have to be caught in approved Thames fashion, with slider float, running tackle, paste for bait, and eke a ground bait of bread and bran. The boat is moored across the tide, the depth is plumbed before adjusting the float, and one might to all appearance be pegging for dace at Marlow instead of angling for sea fish at Margate. It may be that a stiffer rod would do its work in less time amid the pitfalls of posts and girders from which the fish must at all costs be kept clear, but the old rod and I worked so well in partnership that I preferred to lose a fish or two rather than borrow a local substitute of more appropriate pattern.

Lake Trout in the Sierras.

After another busy summer with the West Country bass, putting another hundredweight of those fish to its swelling credit, the rod went West with me again, this time to the confines of California where, in the dream-lake men call Tahoe, mirroring the snows of the Nevada sierras, it fulfilled the original purpose of its being and killed lake-trout on the troll. None of the reputed monsters of Tahoe answered to the call during my short stay in the fairyland on its shores. The best that the rod was called upon to hold was a fish of five pounds, and this, with its memories of bass twice as heavy and quite as obstinate, it treated with mild contempt.

Truly that old rod died game. The next season, its last of active service, found it, still my inseparable companion, in the Near East, and it was in the deep and tranquil backwater known as the Gulf of Ismidt, where I found welcome rest from the turmoil of the capital during the "Affair of April," with Old Turkey making its last stand against the New Order, that it crowned all is earlier glories by supreme mastery of the finest bass I had ever seen on the hook. During that month of June it killed, besides scores of lesser fry, seven of these fish that weighed in the aggregate eighty-two pounds. And that was its dying effort.

The End.

Seemingly unimpaired, the old rod was put away for a season, during which I fished my quiet way through the Lower Provinces of Canada with tackle more suited to local conditions. I wish I had taken it now, if only to keep it alive. This year I brought it out of its retirement with a view to further reprisals against the Devon bass, but, alas, the first touch, even without putting it together, revealed the tragedy of enforced retirement. Its heart was dead. The sap had ebbed out of its greenheart and lancewood. It was sprung. It was a mere skeleton of its former self. So much for a too hasty committal of faithful servants to the shelf! Well, I realised that it could in future battle with nothing more than gudgeon. Could I subject the old warrior to such traffic? No; its cracked voice had quavered out a "Nunc Dimittis" to which only a boor would turn a deaf ear. It shall bend no more to the play of fish in river or in sea. It shall pass into no other hands. Worthier they might be than mine, but mine held it from its christening. Yesterday then, not without reluctance, I broke and burnt my old servant. Peace to its varied ashes and to the unconsumed remains of its rings and winch fittings. It is gone, but not so the sunny memories it recalled up to the moment of its dissolution. "Vale atque vale!"

THE TURF.

ASCOT.

FORTUNATE indeed is the meeting that can rejoice in four days of continuous sunshine, even when the year is at its apogee in the leafy month of June. An old English summer is all the more welcome by reason of its rarity, and the Coronation Ascot of 1911 will on this account be pleasantly remembered from a society point of view, though scoured with a black mark on account of its almost impossible going. The wind had changed last Friday, and with a threatening grey sky, in which wisp-like wreaths of clouds floated high, it looked as if the much-desired and long-expected rain would arrive early enough to lay the dust before the final "all right" gave the signal for a general departure.

But we got through without what in journalese is called, I believe, a "pluvial visitation." Results :—

NEWBURY.

A great quantity of rain fell at Newbury on Monday, the downpour, which at one period was of almost tropical character, continuing for best part of the forenoon. At midday the outlook for visitors was most discouraging, while the temperature was quite low for the time of the year. Later, just before three o'clock, rain again fell heavily. The locally trained horses formed much the larger proportion of the arrival list, the Newmarket contingent being an unusually light one. Results :—

WINCHESTER
Rifle and Pistol Cartridges
It's the careful and scientific manner in which Winchester cartridges are made and loaded which has earned for them a reputation for accuracy, reliability and uniformity which no other brands can approach. Winchester cartridge shells are carefully inspected before loading for size, length and conformity. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them exact in size, contour and density. Then the loading is done by automatic machinery which not only insures a uniform charge, buts seats the bullet in the shell so that its axis coincides with that of the shell; hence with that of the barrel of the arm. These are a few of the many reasons why Winchester cartridges in all calibers are the most satisfactory on the market.

What to do if Your Horse Pulls

THE KEY TO HIS MOUTH IS A RENSUM REIN.

Sir Gilbert East, Bart., wrote:—
"You have found the key to my excitable mare's mouth. I have now the pleasure of riding an animal chock full of life, with complete control."

You have three courses open if you own a puller. You may go on using him, to your great discomfort; you may sell him, to your loss; or you may cure him, if you know how. I am a veteran horseman with a reputation to lose, and I stake it upon the assertion that in my "Rensum" Pamphlet I will show you how, for £1 1s. (the cost of a "Rensum" Rein), you may, without severity, cure the worst puller. The Pamphlet will prove to you that by a new method you may turn a confirmed puller into a snaffle bridle hunter, or polo pony. The "Rensum" Pamphlet will also show you how you may cure a rearer, kicker, or other vicious horse.

H. S. RENSUM, The Cottage, Yardley, Worcestershire, Eng.

WRITE TO ME

That I may advise. Describe your horse's fault and I will send you the

"RENSUM" PAMPHLET free.

If you order a Rensum Rein, with it will be sent, the fully detailed instructions for making or re-making a mouth on the simple Rensum method which cannot fail.

I prefer to use the "Rensum Rein" on the easy half moon "Rensum Bit." The Rein and Bit together I will send for a guinea and a half.

BILLIARDS.

THE REMARKABLE VICTORY OF GEORGE GRAY.

On Saturday night, in the theatre of the National Sporting Club, George Gray achieved the greatest triumph of his epochmaking tour, when he won his match with Melbourne Inman of 16,000 up (level) for £100 by a margin of 8,769 points. Before offering any criticism on the match as a whole, it may be mentioned that during the afternoon's session on Saturday Inman did well, making breaks of 205, 49, 54, and 43, while Gray marked up 410 (full, from 404—405 off the red), 100, 41, 66, 284 (240 off the red), 83, and 35 (unfinished). At the interval the scores were:—

Gray (in play)..... 15,334
Inman 7,194

At night Gray reached his game with breaks of 276 (full), of which 270 were off the red, 197 (168 off the red), and 204 (unfinished, 195 off the red). Inman had few chances, and made no break of note. The final scores were:—

Gray 16,000

By his remarkable victory Gray has proved beyond question that as a scoring force he stands alone. His actual play has been a revelation of the perfection to which his special stroke may be brought. His bridge and cue delivery are beyond improvement, and, moreover, has come on to a startling degree as regards the ease and celerity with which he works up position. The brain is behind the cue all the time.

By defeating Inman, Gray has conquered a player who is incomparably the finest exponent of safety play in England. A born strategist and a tactician to the finger-tips is Inman, and yet this wonderful boy Gray has won by more than half the game. The idea of "stopping Gray" has been killed. Nothing throughout the match has been finer than Gray's daring and successful attempts to nullify Inman's safety leaves. During the first week Gray's red ball prowess became an obsession with the Londoner, and it was a cramped and lack-lustre Inman that was seen.

Inman, however, battled pluckily and doggedly against overwhelming odds. At times he showed almost attractive play, especially at the spot end game, and this despite the fact that he never felt at home with the balls, which he described as being very much smaller and lighter to the touch than those he is accustomed to. To use his own words: "I felt as though I daren't hit a ball: it was like playing with three peas, after being used to the ordinary ivory balls." That may be a pardonable exaggeration, but Inman certainly played very gingerly in his manipulation of the balls, and, in cricketing parlance, he was "feeling for the ball" all the time.

The Londoner sat out two complete sessions during the match, and in two other sessions had only one innings. He had two breaks of over 1,000 registered against him and over a dozen exceeding the 500 mark. His own highest contribution stopped short of the third hundred.

ROWING.

THE OXFORD CHALLENGE SCULLS.—Considerable interest was taken in the final of the Sculls, which was rowed last Saturday and brought the year's rowing at Oxford to a conclusion. Some capital racing had resulted in the preliminary heats. The Worcester sculler, J. R. M. Wilkinson, put up a splendid fight in the initial heat with N. M. Bruce, Christ Church, and the latter had a hard struggle for two-thirds of the journey to shake off L. A. Filleul, Lincoln, in the second round, the latter rowing himself to a standstill at the Cherwell. The Etonian A. F. Wiggins also found a hard nut to crack in S. G. Lee, Magdalen, who after appearing almost out of it made up such good leeway that he was only half a length to the bad at the finish. The final, which brought a lot of people down to the riverside, also provided a most interesting struggle. Bruce had done considerably the faster time in the preliminaries, and the watch was vindicated inasmuch as he won easily at the finish, although Wiggins gave his supporters every encouragement over the first half of the distance. He, however, lacked the finish of the Christ Church man, who drove the stroke right through and quite wore his man down. Wiggins had first station and going off at much the faster stroke was leading by about half a length at the ferry where Bruce went a bit wide, both took a capital Gut, but going up the Green Bank Wiggins nearly got into the rushes. Bruce, who was pulling a long powerful stroke, now began to reduce the deficit, and at the Red Post he had if anything a little the best of it. From this point Wiggins fell off in form and Bruce, continuing to scull in excellent style, still further reduced the leader's advantage, and he ultimately passed the post three lengths to the good, the time being 7mins. 9⅗secs.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE League fizzled out tamely last week, and as the opening day of the I.F.A. Shield competition proved an awful fiasco there is little to write about this week for even the annual engagement between teams representing Military and Civil last Saturday produced nothing out of the ordinary. The match was well attended, the largest crowd that witnessed a football match this season; but it was by no means the largest attendance that has ever witnessed a football match in Calcutta. Although this was the fourth match this year in which gate money was charged—two during the hockey season, and the England and Scotland match—the two and one rupee enclosures were well patronised and the charitable institutions should benefit through the proceeds of the game. The match on Saturday ended a win for the Military by a penalty goal to nothing, but the soldiers were really lucky in being awarded that penalty which gave them the match and the medals. That the Military enjoyed the larger share of the game there is not the slightest doubt, but still they did not deserve to win. The attacking lines on both sides left much to be desired, Hurlston and Ponsford, the respective left wingers, being the only two who played up to form. There was nothing very brilliant in the play of the halves, but Old of the Rifles who was in the centre was a shade better than the other five on the field. But the man who stood out most prominent was Victor Sherman, the left back and captain of the Civilian team. Indeed it was his timely and judicious clearances that repeatedly saved his side from disaster. Mole had decidedly more to do than Pigott in goal, but the Rangers man at times got a bit flurried, and had Spiers not been so dreadfully erratic in his shooting there would have been no occasion to play extra time, and the soldiers' victory would have been one which they could have congratulated themselves upon. The penalty goal by which the Military eventually won was netted by Ponsford. McIntosh, the referee, most people thought, erred in awarding the Military a penalty kick.

The refereeing of Hooley in the St. Xavier's and Mohun Bagan Shield match last Monday on the Rangers ground met with considerable adverse comment. To say the least, the players, especially St. Xavier's, wanted to be ruled by a firmer hand, and let us hope, for the sake of sport, that such unsportsmanlike behaviour and such weak refereeing it will never be our misfortune to witness again. Mohun Bagan beat St. Xaviers by 3 goals to nil and were much the better team on the day's play.

Ahiretolla disappointed a large number of people when they failed to put in an appearance on the C.F.C. ground on Monday and eventually scratched at a quarter to six.

The Gordons have also had to cry off, but the Royal Scots, the East Yorks, and the Middlesex from Lebong have all arrived and some excellent matches may be expected. On Saturday, the Simla champions play the East Yorks and the Calcutta public will have an opportunity of judging for themselves the strength of the Durand Cup holders. The East Yorks are said to be stronger than they were last year, so the semi-final between one of these two up-country teams and the one which comes out on top between Calcutta, Dalhousie and the R.G.A. will be the match of the season. While all the strongest combinations have been pitted against each other on one side of the drawings all the weaker teams will fight as to which of them is to figure in the final, and from a spectator's point of view let us hope that the 3rd Middlesex from Lebong will be the strongest eleven on the other side of the fence.

THE ALLEN MEMORIAL LEAGUE, 1911.

THE meeting of the above League was held on Thursday last, at 6-45 P.M., on the Sporting Union Maidan Ground, to give away the splendid shield. Mr. T. Curtis-Hayward was in the chair.

The following report was read by the Honorary Secretary, Mr. D. Sen of the Sporting Union.

"He was a noble and striking personality. He who by his true liberal heart, sweet and genial temper and all embracing sympathy won the hearts of us all who are left behind to lament his irreparable loss to the Indian young men, of the metropolis in particular. He had a ready smile and an open heart for every Indian who sought his help and advice.

Cruel death has taken him away from us, but that fond and dear remembrance of the departed soul which knows no distance, time or death, all the more closely and powerfully binds us together in everlasting unity. Let us jointly pray to-day to the Almighty Father for the eternal Place of his soul in Him!!!

In order to perpetuate the loving memory of the late Sir Charles Allen, Kt., I.C.S., who was for a long time a very sympathetic and active member of the Sporting Union, the Football League was started by them last year with 14 competing clubs as against 19 of this year. It has thus earned for itself a popularity and the tournament has been altogether a great success. Most of the games were played in a good sporting spirit and were very keenly contested.

The Sporting Union recalls with honest pride that this is the first memorial in honor of the departed soul ever perpetuated in Calcutta. They are also proud that their main object of creating mutual good feelings amongst the different clubs of Calcutta has met with great success under this League.

My best thanks are due to the Allen League President Mr. T. Curtis-Hayward and the members of the Executive Committee, but for whose untiring help the running of the League would not have met with such a great success. I am under deep obligation also to those gentlemen who very sportingly volunteered their services to act as referees in the different games. I might incidentally mention here without meaning any offence, that the decision of the referees in some of the games has not been taken in a true sporting spirit by a few clubs. We should all remember that the referees are but human and liable to err, and it is only a liberal sporting spirit that can help in the smooth management of a competition like this. I sincerely hope to see a better result in this all important matter from next year, when I hope the League would be more popular and more keenly contested."

Then the Shield was presented to 70th R. G. A. F. C. in the midst of hearty cheers. With the usual vote of thanks to the chair the big crowd separated.

THE BOMBAY HARWOOD LEAGUE.

ON Monday, the 3rd instant, the Warwickshires played the Bombay F. C. The first half of the game was very well contested, the soldiers leading at the interval by a goal to nil. But on changing ends the Bombay F. C. went to pieces and their opponents scoring three more goals ran out victorious by 4 to nil. The next day the Byculla Railway Institute and the Bombay Volunteer Artillery played a pointless draw—the game being rather an uninteresting affair. Wednesday's game was between the R. G. A. and the Y.M.C.A., and though the gunners won by 2 goals to nil they were given a strenuous battle by the Young Men, who put up a plucky display against their superior opponents. On Friday the Bombay Gymkhana met the Telegraphs and scored a decisive victory by 5 goals to 1, but Saturday's match between the Royal Warwicks and the B.V.A. was a sensational game. The soldiers did practically what they liked all through and eventually won by the huge margin of 13 goals to nil. Five in the first half and 8 after the interval.

Appended is the League table up to and including the 8th instant:—

THE MADRAS TOURNAMENT.

THE tournament opened at Chepauk on the 3rd instant when two games in the first round were played off, both attracting a large crowd of spectators. The M.C.C. met the Madras Volunteer Guards and were beaten by 3 goals to 2. The Volunteers, playing a fast game, attacked almost continually during the first half but only scored once. On changing ends the M.C.C. improved considerably and had as much of the game as their opponents. After repeated attempts by the M.C.C. the Volunteers got away and Paul scored their second point. Then the M.C.C. opened their account through Manders. Several chances came their way, which they failed to take advantage of, and a combined run by the Volunteers resulted in a third goal. The M.C.C. nothing daunted made desperate efforts to score and Meir at length put through. Further efforts were unavailing and the M.C.C. retired beaten as stated. The other game was between the Cameron Highlanders and the Oxford and Bucks L. I. Play was interesting throughout, but the superior speed and combination of the Oxfords proved too much for the Highlanders, who though playing pluckily throughout were slow and erratic. The Oxfords were first to score through Longhurst and not long after Campbell equalised, but the Oxfords scored again just before the interval, and adding another goal in the second half ran out winners by 3 goals to 1. Brookes and Bowden were responsible for the two later goals. Two more matches were played on the 4th instant. The Q.O. Sappers and Miners played the Leicestershire Wing and won a fast and interesting game by a goal to nil. Dolan scored the point shortly before the interval. The other match was between the Sherwood Foresters and the Leicesters "B" team. The Sherwoods led at the interval by a goal to nil but time was called with the score 2 all. Extra time was played and each team registered a goal. The match was replayed on the 5th when the Sherwoods were victorious by 2 goals to nil; both scored in the second half. The same evening the Oxford and Bucks met the Leicesters "A" team, who had drawn a bye in the first round. This was a strenuous game and the Leicesters had their work cut out to eventually win by the only goal scored. The first half was pointless and it was not till the last few moments of the game that Barron beat Casban and gave the Leicesters a win. The semi-finals were played on Thursday last. On the Engineering College ground the Madras Volunteer Guards met the Q.O. Sappers and Miners and had little difficulty in beating the Engineers by 2 goals to nil, both scored in the initial period, D'Cruz and Rogers being responsible. The Sherwood Foresters played the Leicesters "A" on the M.C.C. ground and the Foresters, who had been playing three evenings in succession were defeated by 2 goals to nil. They put up a plucky game nevertheless and gave the Leicesters a hard fight, but the latter were too clever for them. A goal was scored in each period, Dumford putting through in the first half and Herd in the second.

The final match was played on Saturday last before a large gathering of spectators—last year's finalists, the Leicesters and Madras Volunteer Guards, once more taking the field. The first half was very evenly contested but the Volunteers, who displayed admirable combination, led at the interval by two goals to nil. On crossing over, however, the Leicesters gained the upper hand. Sole equalised and they scored two more goals without response, thus winning by 4 goals to 2. Brigadier General Bond addressed the teams at the conclusion of the game and Mrs. Moore gave away the Cup and pewters.

LONDON, 23rd June 1911.

I SINCERELY congratulate Mr. D. Graham Gilmour on the verdict which was returned on Monday last, at Salisbury, on the charge of manslaughter brought against him by the police. The case aroused a great deal of interest in automobile circles, and the facts are well known to the majority of motorists. Briefly, they were, that Mr. Gilmour ran over and killed a boy who had been hanging on the back of a cart. The car was not provided with a horn, but Mr. Gilmour gave warning of his approach, when necessary, by beating with a spanner on an iron bar. There was no suggestion that, at the time when the accident occurred, Mr. Gilmour was driving fast or recklessly, the charge being based upon the ground that he had not given "audible and sufficient warning" of his approach. He was asked why he had not signalled his presence to the driver of the cart, behind which the boy was, immediately before the accident, and stated that his reason for not doing so was that the carter saw him coming and there was nothing to indicate the presence of the boy behind. The driver also stated that Mr. Gilmour's car was very noisy and that he heard it coming long before it reached him. The police evidence showed that Mr. Gilmour had behaved with perfect propriety after the accident and that he had done everything possible for the victim. Some cheers accorded the verdict of "not guilty" and they were quickly quietened.

A FRENCH authority in discussing repair pits in garages states that the soil and sides of the pit finally becomes so saturated with inflammable products that they are much more to be feared as a cause of fire, for the reason that they are seldom considered in that respect. It is therefore necessary to take certain precautions. A judicious but somewhat costly method consists in establishing a series of air vents in the walls along the level of the floor; there will then be no stagnation of inflammable fumes. Such a solution, however, makes it uncomfortable for the feet of the mechanics in winter time. The aforementioned authority thinks that most practical means for avoiding the danger consists in leaving permanently under the vehicle one of those large sheet-iron trays which are used under motor cars exhibited in sale rooms to avoid soiling the floor with oil drippings. A tray of this kind should be filled with sawdust and this should be renewed every day. Sawdust absorbs a very considerable volume of petrol, and thereby prevents its evaporation. It offers, moreover, another advantage as it makes an excellent soap for the mechanic, and one which costs nothing and does not ruin the hands. Mixed with brown soap it removes grease from the hands, without affecting the skin better than any substance.

A FEW months ago the French Government decided to create a national touring office to be attached to the Ministry of Public Works and under the control of the Minister of this department. The office now has been organised, and has made the first official announcement of the work it intends to undertake in the interests of motoring tourists. It is made clear that the new department has no intention of encroaching upon the Touring Club of France, the Automobile Club of France, and othe private associations intended to encourage touring. It is desired that these bodies shall continue to deal directly with the tourist, carrying out the same programme as in the past, while the national office will occupy itself with general schemes for the development of travelling in all its forms. The objection has often been made by the existing motor clubs and touring associations that there is no central governing body to which they can appeal for the carrying out of reforms. At present they have to bring their proposals before the authorities of the different departments. With the new touring office they will have direct access to the Government, with, it is hoped, a possibility of carrying out reforms very much more rapidly than at present.

THE Midland Rubber Company, Limited, of Birmingham, are giving a guarantee of 3,000 miles with every "Midland tyre." There is more in this than meets the eye of the actual observer; but it means a lot to the experienced motorist who knows the severe buffeting his tyres are called upon to endure in actual road service. He appreciates the fact that to bear this guarantee tyres must be made of the highest quality material throughout, and reliable and durable in the highest degree.

SOME roadside repairs and fakements are often really clever in their conception, and their detail would be interesting to the practical motorist as showing how difficulties can be overcome by ingenuity. In India when one voyages out on the road, professional repair shops are seldom even communicable with, so there is ample scope for adaptiveness. And, with the good motorist it is almost a point of honour to "come home" under his own power, and despite misfortune. Some of readers who are elder brethren in the Craft might supply me with incidents not only interesting in the recital, but of use to the tyre at the game. A somewhat novel dodge, not a roadside repair, but on the wet side of motoring, is recounted by a man who runs a motor-boat for hire. With a full load of excursionists he made an outward trip without incident, but on the return journey, and a couple of miles from his landing place, the engine seized. On undoing the inspection-cover in the crank case he found a shortage of oil, the level of what remained lying too low for the big ends to dip into—and the engine depending upon splash lubrication entirely. The pistons were filled with a paraffin can, but the problem was how to proceed without fresh oil, and there was none in the boat. It was a little more than a side issue too, that the passenger were getting restless even rude at the delay. As a desperate resource he supplanted the oil lying in the crank-chamber with river water to bring it up to the level of the cranks, and thus ran the engine through with many qualms. He declares that no ill results have followed this novel lubricating treatment, and that after dismounting and cleaning the parts the engine is as good as ever.

To the intending purchaser I recommend a firm of fifteen years' experience in the motor industry. The Motor Manufacturing Company and Alfred Burgess, Limited (one firm), of Finchley, N., have always on their hands a number of real bargains. If any reader will send them particulars of his requirements, they will go right into the matter at once and give you the best possible advice and quotation obtainable. Only mention the Indian Field.

DURING the forthcoming Durbar the people of the Great Indian Dependency will again have the evidence of the convenience and ubiquity of the motor-car. In fact, it will be a demonstration of mechanical locomotion such as has never been seen in the eastern world. Thanks to Sir Charles Friswell's recent visit, arrangements have been made which will ensure the success of the Royal tour from an automobile point of view. As I was able to detail some of the provisions made for the motor-cars to be employed during the trip in one of my recent missives it will now suffice to recall that there will be a fleet of sixteen British-built cars at the disposal of the Royal suit as well as numerous others which the Indian Government will command for the entertainment of their visitors. Two specially appointed automobiles are now being fitted with sumptuously upholstered bodies at Coventry for the personal use of King George V. and Queen Mary. Motor lorries are also being requisitioned for the transport of the beaters and others engaged in the great tiger hunt that will follow the Durbar—altogether affording proof to the natives of India that the automobile, both as a pleasure as well as a commercial vehicle, is the means of conveyance for the future.

THE Motor race meeting at Brooklands yesterday, the 19th, attracted some ten thousand spectators. Among those present were Lord Mayo, the Sultan of Perak, the Sultan of Kedah, and a large number of colonial visitors. A party of nearly a thousand Indians took a great deal of interest in the sport, and Jack Johnson, the celebrated pugilist, was also present. He is an authority on racing cars, and was much taken up with examining the mechanism of the speed machines in the paddock.

MR. J. W. ORDE, Secretary of the R. A. C., has just returned from a tour in Germany with E. Manville. They have been motoring 1,250 miles, mainly with a view to inspecting the route for the Prince Henry tour. Apparently the organisation for this event is not so easy as the early list of fifty entrants on behalf of Germany would seem to suggest. So far the British team in which the Duke of Connaught has entered a car, numbers thirty-two; but rumour tells us that there have been several withdrawals already from the original entrants of German cars. Possibly the difficulty may ultimately be solved by reducing the number to represent each country.

WRITING as I am now, I feel weary, and if it were not for the thought of my "N. S. U." I am confident I would fall asleep. As it is "it" (my motor bike) makes my hard tasks much lighter and after a jolly good spin I feel fit for another few hours' journalistic work. Messrs. Bachmann and Company, 10, Dalhousie Square, Calcutta, will be pleased to give you full particulars of the N. S. U. Motor Cycle and will be pleased to explain the mechanism to the purchaser.

MANY speedometers depend on a magnet, a hairspring and a gap to pull the indicating hand. Magnets lose their strength. Hairsprings, like mercury, are sensitive to the slightest changes of weather. Gaps break the transmission of speed from roads wheel to indicating hand. The "Jones" Speedometer is not made of such unreliable and vacillating material—that is why it tells the truth. The indicating hand on a "Jones" Speedometer doesn't depend on the varying pull of a magnet, nor the fluctuating thermometer pull of a hairspring, nor on a broken transmission pull. Far be it! It depends on the pull of the wheel on the road. The wheel on the road pull the hand on the dial. This pull is by a metal-to-metal shaft and gear transmission. This direct drive keeps the "Jones" hand on the truth. It can never weaken, never weary. That is why the makers say the "Jones" speedometer is "geared to the truth."

AERO NOTES.

ONE hundred and fifty miles an hour is the unofficial speed record established by Vedrines on a monoplane. After starting in the Paris-Rome race and smashing his machine when landing at Dijon, Vedrines set out on a cross-country flight with a gale of wind astern. When he landed at St. Laurent-les-Macon half an hour later, he had covered over seventy-two miles, and made the fastest flight on record. It is not a performance, however, that even Vedrines intends to repeat, for he declared that he, his machine, and the motor were tested to the utmost, and the downward plunges were at times so excessive that his aeroplane was almost perpendicular.

To the average Englishman, Algiers seems to be the outside gate of civilizaton—it is a place where he supposes barbarity reigns in the market-place, and darkness ignorance, and corruption abide in the Council Chamber. But it is to Algiers that London must now turn for light and leading, writes Mr. C. C. Turner; the Algerian Council General have given the sum of £10,000 for a prize to the aviator who flies 500 kilometres carrying a ton of munitions of war. It is a "large order" but at the present rate of progress the prize should be won before the end of next year. It is offered in commemoration of the late M. Berteaux, and no doubt French manufacturers will strive to win it.

IN spite of the Royal Aero Club, aviators seem to be a law unto themselves. No protest seems to have been made against Mr. Grahame-White's flight from Hendon to Ranelagh a little time ago. When such flights are advertised it might be well to add—when it is obtained—"by permission of the Royal Aero Club." In giving this permission there must, of course, be a distinction made between flying from point to point because business necessitates the journey and flying over populated areas merely for the gratification of some whim or for a wager or for advertisement. I would not venture to place Mr. Grahame-White's proposal to fly to the Coronation Costume Ball at the Royal Botanical Gardens in a category of this kind. But between night and day flying there is a great difference, and what might be a safe venture in broad daylight might at night time prove a perilous undertaking.

IN accordance with the recommendations of a committee of experts the use of aeroplanes by the Belgian Army has been decided upon. The provisional scheme fixes the number in time of peace at six. Of these, four will be attached to the field, and two to the fortresses of Antwerp, Liege, and Namur. In war time, another four machines are to be requisitioned for the General Staff and twelve for the use of the three fortresses. The officers who will act as pilots and as observers, and who must be unmarried, will undergo a three months' training at the newly-established school of aviators at Antwerp.

A CONGRESS of the International Legal Committee of Aviation was held in Paris last week, when a number of regulations, which are to form the elements of the code of aviation, were voted. Many of the regulations resemble those already in force for motor-cars. Aircraft may land on all property that is not closed in, but they must not land without absolute necessity near fortifications or in the interior of towns. Compensation must be given for damage done in landing. No object likely to cause damage or bodily harm may be thrown from aircraft except in eminent danger. A motion, proposed by Sir Thomas Barclay, prohibiting the use of explosives in time of war, was set aside.

ANOTHER raw recruit in the aviation world is George Middleton, who can be seen on the Banks of the Lea practising with his machine. Up to now he has had several mishaps. He was flying over the Excelsior Hall, a suburban swimming bath, when he pulled the wrong lever, his machine went tottering towards the roof, smashing the glass, he fell into the water much to the dismay of a number of swimmers. The curious part of this venture, is, that he and his machine escaped uninjured, although a badge which he wears and was in his coat at the time is now missing.

WHEN it was resolved not to include Germany in the European aviation circuit, the Berliner Zeitung which was to have organized the German portion of the race, decided to devote the sum of £5,000, which it had offered in prizes, to a German national competition, instead. The competition which will extend from the 11th instant to 7th July, is to take the form of a series of cross-country flights over a pre-arranged course, with "flying meetings" interspersed at some of the principal towns on the way, the total prize fund now amounting to £20,000.

THE Prussian Ministry of War is offering two prizes in connection with the competition. The first prize, which is £250 in value, will go to the aviator who shows the best all-round achievements, but the condition is attached that he must carry a passenger for a certain number of miles to be determined later; also that he must attain a height of at least 1,300 feet. The German War Ministry further gives it to be understood that it contemplates ordering an aero-plane of the type used by the prize-winner, should it prove well adapted for purposes of military reconnaisance.

The arrangement for the aviation contest for the Gordon Bennett trophy, which takes place at Eastchurch, Sheppy, on 1st, July, are practically complete. Owing to the regulations which allows the countries to nominate their representatives up to within twenty-four hours of the time appointed for the contest, no definite information is obtainable as yet as to who will represent the five nations which have entered. England, America, Germany, France, and Austria. The third British representative is being selected from Messrs Gilmour, C. H. Cresswell, O. C. Morison, James Valentine, and James Radley. The other two members of the British team will be Mr. A. Ogivills, and Mr. G. Hamel. The Race, the course of which is about ninty-four miles in extent, is timed to start at 11-46½ A.M. exactly eight hours according to Greenich—before sunset.

An Italian aviator named. Marra, who was taking part in the aviation meeting at Rome, met with a fatal accident on Thursday of last week, while flying in the Tiber competition—a 300 kilometres flight around the course of the river outside the city walls. Marra, disregarding the strong wind, rose to a height of 150 feet. He had hardly covered two miles however when a gust of wind struck the æroplane, and caused it to overturn and fall headlong to the ground. The aviator sustained such injuries that he died while being conveyed to the hospital.

When applied to æroplanes, the term "vehicle," though perfectly correct, scarcely seems to fit the case, but in California, where H. Curtiss is training army officers, a bill was recently introduced in the legislature providing for the designation of æroplanes as "motor vehicles" the registration of such vehicles with the Secretary of State, and the taking out of a licence number to be displayed on the machine. The measure further provides that all æroplanes "shall carry at least four lights, one in the centre of the vehicle, in front of the driver, one at the extreme rear, and one at each end of the lifting planes, these last two to be red, and one green, the red light to be placed at the end of the right plane and the green at the end of the left plane."

The Liverpool aviator, Mr. Robert King, met with an accident while flying in the Freshfield, near Liverpool. He had made a start over the sandhills when the strong wind caught his machine and almost completely overturned it. The machine descended on the rough ground, struck a hillock, and was extensively damaged, the running gear being carried away. Mr. King fortunately escaped without injury.

THE TORPID SWALLOW.

Popular errors, once established, live long. Their plausibility recommends them and they die hard. It is not yet universally allowed that swallows migrate. Probably every tenth countryman you meet, says a writer in the Scotsman, explains their disappearance in winter by a reference to torpidity or hibernation, "Whaur are they?" he will say; "oh, whaur ither but juist in their holes sleepin'?" He repeats a venerable tradition. It was the general belief, not among rustics alone, but among all classes literate and illiterate, till Bacon taught the world to think—or, rather, to observe before drawing conclusions. In one of Fletcher's plays two friends, who had not met for some time, run against each other. "What wind brought thee hither," says one:

"In what old hollow tree or rotten wall
Hast thou been, like a swallow, all this winter."

Coming down a full century from Fletcher's time, we have, in "the Seasons" of Thomson, a measure of honour still paid to the popular delusion, in the lines:—

"To their wintry slumbers they retire,
In clusters clung, beneath the mouldering bank,
And where, unpierced by frost, the craven sweats."

It is worthy of remark, that Thomson, though honouring the theory of hibernation by stating it, was sensible enough to prefer the migration theory—as I have already pointed out in this column. Yet quite half a century after Thomson's time we are amused to find the old belief as vigorus as it had been in the Elizabethan ages. "The swallows in their torpid state, sang Cowper invitingly to his friend Newton, "compose their useless wing;" and, in defiance of the common-sense of science, he went on with the freedom of a lyrical poet to say:—

"The keenest frost that binds the stream,
The wildest wind that blows,
Are neither felt nor feared by them,
Secure of their repose.

This may be all very true of bees and bats, frogs and squirrels, but swallows are not in the same category. Nobody can deny that, as White of Selborne put it, "the hirundines, if they please to use the natural powers, are certainly capable of migration." They are not reptiles, nor are they insects on mammals or fishes, that so feel the cold and have no means of evading it by flight, that they must either sleep or die; they are birds, with wings that are proportionately to their weight and size, more powerful than are those of the eagle; to whom activity is no task, and whose speed on a favouring wind is well over two miles per minute. Why, then, should they hibernate?

Besides, they are seen in the act of migrating, both in spring and in autumn, both on land and at sea. That they sometimes come out of their due season, towards the end of April, is conceded; and it is also the case that laggards (for whatever reason) have been seen so late as a mild November; but these are exceptional instances to the great general practice of the swallow-kind of migrating annually from southern shores to ours in spring, and emigrating again to the lands they came from some six months later.

FELINE FISHERS

In the changes which animals undergo in their diet, few cases are more curious than that of the domestic cat. The cat has a strong liking for fish, but, singular to say, this strong liking has remained so far what seems to be an incomplete development, for the cat, although it will chase birds through the branches of trees and hedges, and over the tops of houses, abstains from swimming. Few animals are so chary of water as the domestic cat. It avoids rain and wet under all ordinary circumstances, though it will brave the moisture of the tall rank grasses when there is a prey to its taste in view: for instance, a leveret or a young rabbit imbues it with courage to face damp in this form. I do not know that there is any physical reason why the cat should not swim. I have never actually seen a hare swim, but I have heard those whom I can trust say they have witnessed such a phenomenon. But it has been across a canal where the bridges have been far apart, and the hare has been in quest of some particular food, which I believe they can smell a long distance. It cannot be, I suspect, from any defect in the foot, for the dog and the fox are capital swimmers and divers too. The ox swims well with its cloven hoof, though the sheep is no swimmer. I have heard sheep farmers say that the sheep will drown quicker from the tail end than from the head. I have seen cats swim for life when thrown into a pond of water, so that there is no real defect which one would think could not be overcome by an effort, such as the pursuit of a new kind of food might encourage. The nearest voluntary effort at swimming by the cat which I have noticed has been in pursuit of fish. I have seen a cat, whose taste has been educated to fish preferences, sit by the side of a pond, and on a near approach of an incautious "shower" to the shore, pussy has made a dart, and with its sharp claws hooked the silly fish ashore and secured its non-return. At a mill lodge, where the water is often warm and abounding with fish, and where I had the privilege of angling, and where also my efforts were often rewarded with a take of 80 and 90 head per hour, and sometimes more, the sport has sometimes been divided between myself and some skilful cat fishing as I have described with its own natural angle.

To show that the cat has adaptability to peculiar circumstances of life, instances might be given of their rearing rabbits and other animals. But one of the most curious things of this kind that I have known is the following, recently reported from Ulverston. At Broadwood Cottage, the residence of Mr. Hewitson, engineer, a Cochin-China chicken lost the mother bird, when it was taken in charge by a favourite cat, which took every care of the chicken. Subsequently a hen that had hatched two ducklings was killed along with one of the ducklings, when the cat again came to the rescue, and she is now rearing the duckling, sleeping with it, and also walking out with it in the front of the house among the grass. Surely this is the lion lying down with the lamb. If the taste for fish had been old in cats, I think it very probable they would have turned to swimming ere this.—Cuthbert Oxendale, in the Field Naturalist.

THE STORY OF GELERT.

The story of Gelert is the subject of the following comments by Mr. J. E. Harting in his work on the animals that have become extinct in Britain in the historic period:—

"It is perhaps not generally known that the circumstances narrated in the story of Bedd Gelert, with which everyone is familiar, is said to have occurred in the reign of King John, and, as it is a story of a British wolf, it is scarcely to be passed over here without some brief notice, the more so as it is not at all unlikely that it is founded on fact. The tradition, as related by Bingley in his 'Tour Round North Wales,' is to the effect that Llewellyn, who was Prince of Wales in the reign of King John, resided at the foot of Snowdon, and, amongst a number of other houses which he possessed, had one of rare excellence which had been given to him by the king. On one occasion, during the absence of the family, a wolf entered the house, and Llewellyn, who first returned, was met at the door by his favourite dog, who came out, covered with blood, to greet his master. The prince, alarmed, ran into the house, to find his child's cradle overturned, and the ground flowing with blood. In a moment of terror, imagining that the dog had killed the child, he plunged his sword into its body, and laid him dead on the spot. But, on turning up the cradle, he found his boy alive and sleeping by the side of the dead wolf. This circumstance had such an effect on the mind of the prince that he erected a tomb over the faithful dog's grave, on the spot where afterwards the parish church was built, called from this incident Bedd Gelert, or the grave of Gelert. From this story was derived the common Welsh proverb, 'I repent as much as the man who slew his greyhound.'"

It is clear from this that Mr. Harting regards the death of Gelert as an historical incident. But the story is one of those fragments of ancient folk-lore that have passed from land to land and found in many countries a local habitation and a name. It is given in the "Gesta Romanorum," which is thought to date from the second half of the thirteenth century. According to this version, Folliclas, a knight, was fond of hunting and tournaments. He had an only son, for whom three nurses were provided. Next to this child he loved his falcon and his greyhound. It happened one day that he was called to a tournament, wither his wife and domestics went also, leaving the child in a cradle, the greyhound lying by him, and the falcon on his perch. A serpent that inhabited a hole near the castle, taking advantage of the profound silence that reigned, crept from his habitation and advanced towards the cradle to devour the child. The falcon, perceiving the danger, fluttered with his wings till he awoke the dog, who instantly attacked the invader, and after a fierce conflict in which he was sorely wounded, killed him. He then lay down on the ground to lick and heal his wounds. When the nurses returned, they found the cradle overturned, the child thrown out, and the ground covered with blood, as well as the dog, who they immediately concluded had killed the child. Terrified at the idea of meeting the anger of the parents, they determined to escape, but in their flight fell in with their mistress, to whom they were compelled to relate the supposed murder of the child by the greyhound. The knight soon arrived to hear the sad story, and, maddened with fury, rushed forward to the spot. The poor wounded and faithful animal made an effort to rise and welcome his master with his accustomed fondness; but the enraged knight received him on the point of his sword, and he fell lifeless to the ground. On examination of the cradle the infant was found alive and unhurt, and the dead serpent lying by him. The knight now perceived what had happened, lamented bitterly over his faithful dog, and blamed himself for having depended too hastily on the words of his wife. Abandoning the profession of arms, he broke his lance into three pieces, and vowed a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, where he spent the rest of his days in peace.

The writer of the "Gesta Romanorum" has borrowed the story from the "Seven Wise Masters." The English version was printed by the late Mr. Thomas Wright from the MSS., in the Cambridge University Library, in which the name of the knight is not given. It occurs in Syntipas, which is one of the earliest forms of the "Historia Septem Sapientum Romæ."

There are various other versions. In one the hero is the Czar Piras of Russia. The Mongolian story makes the animal a polecat. The original of the "Seven Sages" is supposed to be the book of "Sendabad," which is thought to have been composed at least two centuries before the birth of Christ. The Oriental origin of the tale is further evidenced by the fact that it is one of the fables of Pilpay, and is given in the "Ayar Danush" of Abulfazel. The earliest known form as that given in the "Hitopadesa" and "Panchatantra." The version in the first-named is as follows:—

"At Oojjayeenee there lived a Brahman whose name was Mahadhava. His wife having been lately brought to bed, left her husband in charge of the infant whilst she went to perform her ablutions. As soon as she was gone, the Brahman, recollecting that the king's offerings to the manes of his ancestors were about to be made, and seeing other Brahmans going to attend them, was prompted by his natural avarice to reflect in this manner: If I don't go directly, said he, someone else, having heard of it, will go and take away my share of the good things. They say, Time drinketh up the absence of every work which should be done, and is not done quickly, whether it be an act of receiving or an act of giving away. But continued he, I have no one to take care of the door; then what am I to do, unless, indeed, I place this, my long-beloved weasel, there, who is as dear to me as the child itself, and then venture to go? In short, he did so, and went his way to the king's feast. It happened that soon after the Brahman left the house, as the weasel was passing near the child, he saw a black serpent gliding towards it, which he killed, and partly devoured; and when he saw his master returning, the affectionate little animal ran to meet him, with his mouth and legs all covered with blood; and he rolled himself upon the ground at the Brahman's feet in a very extraordinary manner; but the good man, seeing him in such a condition, and hastily concluding that he had murdered his child, without further inquiry put the poor weasel to death. In short, when the Brahman went towards his child, and found it alive and well, and at the same time discovered the mangled remains of the black serpent upon the floor near it, the proofs of his weasel's merit and fidelity were so evident that he suffered the most bitter pangs of sorrow and remorse."

Enough has been said to destroy the idea that there is any historic foundation for the legend in its Welsh form. There are versions of it in Russian, Mongolian, English, French, Italian, German, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Persian, Arabic, and Sanskrit. It is, in fact, one of those tales that are especially dear to the minds of the people. First told, it may be, under the burning sun of Hindustan, it has since become acclimatised in many lands.

Returned Explorer: "Yes, the cold was so intense at the Pole we had to be careful not to pet our dogs." Miss Youngthing: "Indeed. Why was that?" R.E.: "You see their tails were frozen stiff and if they wagged them they broke off."

"Your references are good, I'll try you," said a farmer to a lad who applied for a job in the poultry-yard. "Is there any chance to rise, sir?" the boy asked. "Yes," said the farmer, "a grand chance. You'll rise at four o'clock every morning!"

"What's matter with you this morning, Delia?" asked Mrs. Wise. "O! ma'am," replied the servant girl, "'tis the terrible earache I have this mornin." "Ah! You should be careful, Delia. All the keyholes in this house are very draughty."

Aunt Sophia: "And is Tommy a good little boy at school?" Tommy: "Yes, auntie." Aunt Sophia: "And why is Tommy a good little boy?" Tommy: "'Cause it's better fun to see the other boys get a tannin' than' to get one yourself."

LEMCO
25 YEARS.

A Lady writes:—
"For twenty-five years I have used Lemco always, either as an aid to good and economical cooking, or as an invalid food. I am personally grateful to it. Many a dish has been made palatable and nourishing with the aid of an artfully administered bit of Lemco, and in sickness it is invaluable."

There is more "beef" in LEMCO than in any other beef essence sold—a 2-oz. jar contains the goodness of about 5 lbs. of butcher's meat. That is why LEMCO is so splendid in the kitchen, so invaluable in the sick room. LEMCO is simply pure fresh beef highly concentrated.

THE MULE-FOOTED HOG.

In the Southern United States, which are essentially the great bacon-producing districts, several breeders are now cultivating what may be termed a "freak" pig. As we all know, the most characteristic feature of swine, deer, antelopes, sheep, goats, cattle, etc., is the so-called cloven hoof. That is to say two of the toes in each foot—corresponding to the middle and ring fingers of the human hand—are larger than the other two (when the latter are present), and terminate in hoofs which are flattened on three adjacent inner sides, and are thus symmetrical to the vertical line or cleft between them.

Horses, asses, and zebras, on the other hand, have but one toe to each foot, which corresponds to the middle finger of the human hand, and is encased in a perfectly symmetrical rounded hoof. In addition to this single toe many extinct members of the horse tribe were, however, furnished with a pair of smaller lateral ones, so that each foot is three-toed, with the middle toe much larger than either of the others.

The difference in foot structure between a typical pig and a horse is thus fundamental and striking ;—so striking, indeed, that no one would imagine that the two types could by any means come to resemble one another.

Nevertheless, since the time of Aristotle there have existed mule-footed hogs, as they are termed by our Yankee friends, which are essentially freaks in origin, although they have now been developed into a distinct breed. In these pigs the foot approximates in external appearance to that of some of the extinct horses, having one very large middle hoof, conical in form and symmetrical in itself, and two very small lateral ones. Structurally, however, it is quite different, for if the large middle hoof be removed and the tissues dissected, it will be found that the bones supporting the two main hoofs of an ordinary pig have grown completely together so as to form a single element. The structure is thus altogether an abnormality.

According to Darwin, mule-footed pigs were at one time not uncommon in various parts of the Old World ; and it was suggested by the great naturalist that the freak had originated independently on several occasions, although there appears to be no definite evidence that this is really the case. Moreover, so far as we can ascertain, no breed of mule-footed hogs has ever been established in Europe or Asia, although there are rumours as to the existence of such in some part, or parts, of Africa. It is even uncertain whether any of these freaks are to be found nowadays in either Europe or Asia.

On the other hand, in Ohio, California, and some of the other states of North America mule-footed hogs have been known for more than a century ; and a permanent breed has now been established, for which several special advantages are claimed. Where the ancestor of the breed came from, or whether its modern representatives are derived from a single or from several original stocks, is, however, quite unknown.

So highly are these pigs esteemed in the States that a Mule-foot Hog Record Association, with Mr. W. H. Dunlop, of Williamsport, Ohio, as president, has been established for the purpose of promoting the cultivation of the breed.

The special qualifications claimed for the breed are its great vitality, hardiness, adaptability to any and all kinds of food, and the extremely prolific nature of the sows. More important is their alleged claim to immunity from epidemic diseases, and more especially the so-called hog-cholera, or swine-plague, of America, which is probably more akin to, if not identical with the disease known in England as swine-fever.

At first it is very difficult to believe in this alleged immunity to infection, but the testimony adduced in a pamphlet published by Mr. Dunlop is much too strong to be lightly disregarded.

In order to throw light on the origin of the breed, every instance of the occurrence of mule-footed hogs in the Old World should be put on record; and if any of our readers come across such animals in India, we should be much gratified by full information on the subject.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The result of the Eclipse Stakes (1¼ mile) in which Swynford won by the substantial margin of four lengths from his great rival Lemberg, whom he beat at level weights, although it cannot be said to come as a surprise, for on this season's form there was hardly anything between the distinguished pair, was not foreshadowed by the Princess of Wales' Stakes. In this latter event Swynford won by one and a half length at 3lb. the better advantage in the weights and in the Coronation Cup at Epsom, about a month previous to that event, he had been beaten by Lemberg by three-quarters of a length at level weights. There was therefore, as will be admitted, nothing in it either way on public form and it was a toss-up as to which of this fine pair won the next game of the rubber. The betting on the Eclipse Stakes, however, discloses the fact that Swynford's victory was looked upon as a virtual certainty, as he was quoted at 11 to 10 on whilst Lemberg stood at 9 to 4 against, this connoting that Lord Derby's ex-Leger winner was held to have considerably improved by his recent outings, whereas "Mr. Fairie's" horse was held to have receded. The result of this race illustrates the folly of speculators so far removed from the scene of operations as is India betting on any event concerning which they cannot have intimate and recent information. On public form it looked as though a shade of odds against Lemberg would have been a better wager than buying your money about Swynford, but there can be no doubt that on the spot it was common property that Swynford would win and win easily. A recent arrival from home informs us that after the Princess of Wales' Stakes, which Swynford could have won by a much greater margin than he did, it was the general opinion that he was then anything from a stone to 21lb. better than Lemberg and that he had improved hand over fist, whereas Lemberg was not standing up to it so well and was plainly showing that he was beginning to feel the stress of battle. Anything that can win by four lengths in a canter from a horse of Lemberg's calibre has a right to have his name inscribed upon the scroll of the great equine giants of the turf and Swynford may now, even if his previous performances did not warrant it, claim to have earned this proud distinction.

Pietri's position behind these two crack four-year-olds and in front of good average four-year-olds like Placidus, Yellow Slave, Whisk Broom and King of the Wavelets, who not long ago won the Regulation Plate (1 mile 3 furlongs) at Windsor and ran third in the Ogbourne Welter Handicap, 7 furlongs, at Newbury to Battleaxe and Spiked, undoubtedly marks him an improved one, though to finish eight lengths behind the winner and over a course more than half a mile short of the Leger one does not necessarily spell success at Doncaster. Of his wind infirmity there is no doubt, but like many another roarer he has his days and probably he may win oftener than it was expected that he would. Both this colt and St. Anton were condemned early in the year and it was then said that it was doubtful whether either of them could get further than 6 furlongs in decent company. Pietri, however, has disproved this as, in addition to this performance, he ran up in the Esher Cup (1 mile 60 yards) at Sandown beaten a short head only by Marechal Strozzi, to whom he was giving 2st. 4lb. (his weight 9st. 4lb.) and Feramorz, 7st. 10lb., was a close third. So that although it is difficult to believe in his having any chance of seeing out such a strenuous race as the Leger, he has undoubtedly improved and his wind trouble does not apparently stop him as badly as it was expected to do.

According to a wire received by The Handicap the latest prices about the Leger candidates are as follows:—

2 to 1 Sunstar (Mr. J. B. Joel), Morton.
4 to 1 King William (Lord Derby), Lambton.
10 to 1 Phryxus (Mr. Fairie), Taylor.
12 to 1 Seafoeth (Mr. D. M'Calmont), Persse.
12 to 1 Faucheur (Baron de Rothschild), M. France.
16 to 1 Lord Burgoyne (M. E. Blanc) M. France.
20 to 1 Lycaon (Mr. J. B. Joel), Morton.
20 to 1 Cellini (Mr. L. Neumann), Gilpin.
20 to 1 Tullibardine (Sir J. Robinson), S. Darling.
20 to 1 All Gold (Mr. H. P. Whitney), Joyner.
20 to 1 Bridge of Allan (Lord Derby), Lambton.
20 to 1 Tootles (Captain F. Forrester), Lewis.
25 to 1 Sobieski (Mr. H. Cholmondeley), Gilpin.
25 to 1 Prince Palatine (Mr. T. Pilkington), Beardsley.
25 to 1 Lindoiya (Mr L. de Rothschild), Watson.
25 to 1 Bachelor's Hope (Mr. A. Lowrey), Persse.
33 to 1 Bannockburn (Mr. J. Hallick), Hallick.
33 to 1 Sydmonton (Mr. E. Kennedy), R. Dawson.
33 to 1 Longboat (Mr. H. J. King), Leach.

The foregoing list cannot be said to be in any way a forecast of the probable starters and as regards these quotations of the French horses, in view of what happened as regards Lord Burgoyne and Shetland in the Derby betting, it is as well not to regard them too seriously. The only feature to be noted is that King William in consequence of his position behind Swynford and Lemberg in the Princess of Wales' Stakes has shortened in The Handicap list to exactly half the odds at which he stood when last quoted by that paper, and Sunstar is quoted at 2 to 1 against 3 to 1 when last mentioned. Phryxus remains on the 10 to 1 mark but what chance can he be given on the Ascot Derby Stakes (1½ mile) form when King William made an absolute hack of him and Porphyrio, the recent winner of the Perkins Memorial Plate (1 mile) at Newcastle, was a bad third. All Gold again can have no chance on his recent display in the Prince of Wales' Stakes (1 mile 5 furlongs) when he ran second to Stedfast, who won hard held by two lengths, and the Ascot Biennial Stakes form does not make out either Bannockburn (winner) or Prince Palatine (runner up) any use, neither does Tullibardine look to be worth a long shot. Seaforth has not so far shown us that he can get a distance and personally we think the best goods of the outsiders is Tootles at 4 to 1 a "shop." But all these prices must, we think, with all due deference to our contemporary, be at the present moment accepted with reservation. It is not yet by any means certain that Sunstar will be sound enough to run and he may for aught we can know be left in late in the interests of something else—Lycaon perhaps,—for as long as Sunstar remains a "probable" his stable companion's price is not likely to shorten perceptibly. If Sunstar is pronounced sound enough to stand a preparation then 2 to 1 is a good price about him, but personally we consider anyone who has been lucky enough to get on to King William at eights and twos has a good wager and fours and evens would not probably mean a loss even if the horse were beaten. All the indications, however, are in the direction that whatever happens regarding Sunstar, King William must be there or thereabouts. He has shown that he is fast coming to what was expected of him and both at Ascot and Newmarket he has put up very good performances for we take his close third in the Princess of Wales' Stakes to horses that have recently shown us that they are in form, such as Swynford and Lemberg to be a particularly useful gallop indeed.

H. H. the Maharaja of Cooch Behar has recently purchased two horses in England—one of them the five-year-old Fidelio, a bay horse by Gallinule out of Firelight, and the other one is a sprinter the name of which has not yet been announced. Both are on their way out and are expected to arrive in Bombay very shortly where they will be met by Oakley, H. H. of Cooch Behar's trainer, who will bring these horses on to Calcutta and train them for their engagements at the coming cold weather meetings. Fidelio does not appear to be able to get much farther than a mile. He recently won the Welter Handicap 1 mile at Newmarket with 8st. 12lb., beating Ellenora 7st. 5lb., Master Laurier 7st. third. Ellenora is the mare recently landed in Colombo for Mr. E. L. F. de Soysa and she was selected for her new owner by Mr. E. H. Gregory and on her form against Tootles, who ran second in the Oaks, is considered to be fairly smart. Fidelio, however, won in a canter and was, as will be noted, giving her 21lb. Last season Fidelio was placed in two out of his four engagements, running third in the Stockton Stewards' Handicap 1 mile with 7st. 12lb. to Dalnacrag 7st. 4lb., Purleigh 7st. 10lb., Miesko 9st. fourth. Miesko, who is owned by Lord Durham, recently won the Empire Stakes, 6 furlongs, at Newbury beating His Majesty's Marie Legrave and the Duke of Westminster's Haurdina. Dalnacrag is a well-performed one and amongst his last season's performances were a win in the 7-furlong Autumn Handicap Plate, 7 furlongs at Newmarket; another success in the Wharncliffe Three-year-old Handicap

7 furlongs at Doncaster; in which he beat Suncloud and Gay Bachelor, another success in the Doncaster Welter Handicap (1 mile) beating Thaddeus and Catrail; he ran up in the Pevril of the Peak Plate, 1 mile to Duke Michael and he has been placed to several other good horses. So that Fidelio's position behind him is creditable. Dalnacrag has also recently won the 1 mile Kingston Handicap at Kempton. Fidelio also ran second last season in the Lingfield Autumn Handicap, 1 mile, to Dutch Courage, a horse named Angel's Path being third. His performances mark him out as more likely to be of use in the shorter-distanced events of the Calcutta cards than in the Viceroy's Cup or the King's Cup, but we are told that it is with a view to running him in these two races that he has been bought. H. H. the Maharaja of Cooch Behar has won the Viceroy's Cup twice, namely, in 1892 and 1893 when that fine horse Highborn (runner up to Carbine in the Melbourne Cup 1890 and winner of the Australian Cup of 1892) carried his colours. Highborn was landed very late in the year 1892 and his success in the Viceroy's Cup was so little anticipated that Trahan, who was first jockey to the stable, picked Good Hope to ride in preference, and J. Robinson was put up on Highborn. A tremendous race between the Cooch Behar pair resulted in Highborn winning by a short head. H. H. has won most of the principal races in India: the Durbhunga Cup (now called the Macpherson Cup) three times—one occasion being when his horses, Tabletop and Jack in the Green, dead-heated in 1884 and the other two victories were gained, one by Highborn in 1892 and the other by Good Hope in 1893. H. H. of Cooch Behar has won the Metropolitan Stakes in Calcutta twice in 1892 (a great year when the Cooch Behar colours were almost invincible) with Good Hope and in 1894 with Pickwick. Highborn won the Merchants' Cup (as it then was) two years in succession, 1893 and 1894: First Bell won the Eclipse Pony Stakes in 1909 and the same pony won the Civil Service Cup of 1911. So that, with the exception of the Indian Grand National which H. H. has never seriously attacked, and the Trials he has won almost every race of any importance at headquarters to say nothing of minor successes. It is very welcome news to find H. H. coming back on the Indian turf with something of a class worthy to carry his colours, for they have always been popular by reason of the fact that it is always known that they are out to win. The Indian Turf cannot afford to lack support from so princely a sportsman as H. H. the Maharaja of Cooch Behar.

Mr. A. N. Das is to be congratulated upon having brought off a right and left at Bangalore on the third day of that meeting, as his new one, Ballymaclure, won the once-important Bangalore Cup (1¼ mile) beating Miracle and Five Crown and the same owner's John Wesley won the 6-furlong Leonidas Purse, beating Black Douglas and Wavehill. John Wesley was only in receipt of 7lb. from Wavehill and this makes the little chestnut out a considerably improved one.

The Monsoon series of meetings at the Tollygunge Club came to a conclusion on Saturday last, for although there are usually two or three meetings later in the year in November they are more of the "skittle" order than anything else and have even included on occasion a tilting-at-the-ring contest for motor-cars! Last Saturday's programme was enlivened by a race for the gentlemen who no longer can claim to be in the Light Division and it was a most amusing expedition. A very big field went for it, but being a distance handicap it was necessary to start it with the "gun." This was accordingly done and lest anyone should be left behind those in charge of the ordnance opened a perfect fusillade of "rapid." It sounded more like a Maxim coming into action than anything else, but it was effective none the less, for there was no one left at the post. Mr. Lamond Walker won on Velodia, who galloped all over her field and never had anyone near enough to be dangerous. Mr. Walker used at one time to be a shining light over hurdles at the old Calcutta Sky Races and also used to go very hard out paperchasing. In the Paperchasing Records by "X" he is referred to as Mr. "Othello" Walker because Othello was a horse upon which he used to distinguish himself and was, by the same token, as black as the ace of spades. It was also satisfactory to see a steeplechase included in the card, and after it was all over the only question was, "Why have we not had it before"! They have a nice little jump course at the Tollygunge Club—far too small and too short of course but still fair of its kind—and it has been used exactly twice in the course of two years!! No one was hurt and five out of the ten entered started for it. Why all ten did not go is inexplicable, for there is nothing on the course that any pony could not jump. We hope to see more jump racing introduced in future cards, for that is the G.R's proper métier and there are plenty of horses and also plenty of men to ride them if only they are given no option between either jumping or not riding at all. At these meetings cross-country events should preponderate. They are good for Ingenuous Youth's nerves, they amuse the ladies and they do not encourage gambling! Mr. Shillingford's luck still stood to him and his Charlotte won the opening event at a better price than his other one the hurdle pony Melody. The Tally Ho Cup was the steeplechase and though Suffragette started at only 6 to 4 on it was about 10 to 1 on her winning over such easy obstacles and against such a weak opposition. Pacific was an equal certainty for the Jiu Jitsu Vase and we were glad to see Mr. May score a second win. This horse they say can jump a bit and ought therefore to be useful in the coming closed hurdle races at the Monsoon Meeting. The rain came down in torrents after the fourth race and Northwood won his race, the Monsoon Plate, in a deluge.

The match between Loyalty and Miranda brought the proceedings to a close and Loyalty upon whom they betted 5 to 4 won comfortably. The meetings have been well managed and the executive en bloc are due the thanks and congratulations of Calcutta. From now onwards till March we enter upon serious racing, as with a very short break in October and November we have racing almost continuously till the electric fans begin to whizz round at the commencement of next hot weather.

The entries for the first day of the Calcutta Monsoon Meeting will be found published in the usual column. Although one race, the Bengal Plate, has fallen through the entries are far from disappointing and in some instances considerably better than were expected and particularly is this the case in the "amateur" events, which at one time held out small promise of filling well. Fifteen horses have entered for the 6-furlong Amateur Plate and there are ten in the Amateur Pony Hurdle Plate. Ten have entered in the Open Pony Plate, seven in the Open Trial Hurdle Race, and twelve in the 6-furlong Summer Plate. The race that has not filled is the Bengal Plate, an event on terms for horses that have not won Rs. 1,100, the conditions being designed to catch the winners of Rs. 1,000 events. Handicaps for this class filled well enough last year, but the terms race on the first day was not very largely patronised and only four ran, Royal Colours winning. The terms were not then quite the same as the race was for horses that had never won a race of Rs. 1,000 or over and therefore all the things that had been winning these Rs. 1,000 plates (less entries Rs. 980) were eligible. Taken all round, however, the entries are very good and the prospects are now much brighter than they were a little time go. Mr. J. D. Scott has arrived with about eight horses, amongst them Craigendorrie, Miss Clare, Royal Colours. Mr. K. Robertson has come with Simontura, Reinforcement and Lola and Beedham is now said to be on the way and has Atropine entered for Saturday. Captain Charrington and Mr. W. T. Miles are coming down. Mr. Platt of the 17th Lancers, owner of Ocean, Winsome, etc., is here and intends riding his own horses and there are other and more distinguished visitors expected very shortly.

In the Amateur Plate To Kalon stands out out by herself and we do not expect to see her beaten. She came down from Darjeeling a mass of muscle and has been given several short spurts down here to clear her wind. She won over this distance in 1min. 16secs. in the cold weather and a gallop of 1min. 26secs. is good enough to win this race in the Monsoons on the sand track. We should say that To Kalon would have no difficulty in breaking the latter time. Reinforcement who is a hurdler but is nicely bred and is English which is in her favour and Levi, Mr. Butler's horse, seem to be about the best of the remainder. They all run at level weights, 11st. all round and we do not give any of the others any sort of a show.

In the Amateur Pony Hurdle Plate there is only one to back—Loch Lily, who gets in at a concession of 12lb. from Marconi whom she soundly beat last Monsoons giving him 2lb. so that on this, she has more than a stone in hand, as Marconi finished three lengths behind her when she beat him. When Marconi subsequently beat Loch Lily he was in receipt of 12lb., so what sort of a chance does this give him on Saturday. Mr. W.F. Miles has Domino in this race and he presumably would not bring it down to Calcutta simply for a change of air. It probably is the dangerous factor. Chas is also in this race and if he ran an honest race he is a good one but he rarely condescends to get off.

Of the ten in the Pony Plate May Kenley, Sidonia, and Moira look very nice, but we hear this mare of Colonel Young's in Beedham's stable Heresy is smart. She will not have had much time to get ready after her long journey, as we have not heard of her arrival at the time of going to press. Heremon her sire is by Master Kildare No. 3, out of Thuringian Queen No. 14 by Thuringian Prince No. 12, out of Mirth No. 14, by Lord Clifden No. 2, out of Jollity No. 14, by Chanticleer No. 23. So it is well enough bred. Sidonia must run well and so will Albatross, but we are not sure how May Kenley has come through the summer. She has done a good deal of work.

In the Trial Hurdle Race we like Tommy Daw and for our reason ride the last Burdwan Cup, in which he finished fourth to Mayfowl, Parkhill, and Kaffirpan. If it is soft going they say old Maisonette will trouble them and some people again say Craigendorrie will swamp the pair of them, but it will be the horse's first time out over obstacles and we do not think they can usually be backed in such circumstances however well they may have been schooled at home. Old April Fool schooled in good style on Tuesday morning, but we think it will take him all his time to beat this field on Saturday. Idle is an honest plodding old horse and has run well over hurdles both here and at Poona, but we should like to see him before we said that he would beat Tommy Daw, who is our absolute winner.

Of the dozen in the Summer Plate we like our old friend Royal Colours and of the others we like Atropine, Mallinyook, and Posco.

On Tuesday morning there were a good number of horses and ponies schooling and the first to go were Glenlivet (Northmore) and Convent Girl (owner) a mild school once around. They are neither of them likely to trouble the judge for some time to come we should think. Maisonette (owner) and Marconi (Mr. Barrow) hopped over a couple of flights in company, April Fool (McNeilage) and Mabel R (Gee) jumped the course, the latter does not look as if she were much good and jumps very high. She sounds as if she were touched in the wind. Reinforcement (Northmore) and Lola (Mr. Barrow) jumped the pony course, the latter fencing magnificently. Tommy Daw (Mr. Evers) and Velodia (Northmore) jumped a few flights of the horse course, Tommy Daw jumping side ways over the second lot. Loch Lily, Lionel, Cairo and Merry Eyes all jumped in the schooling cage, all performing well.

On Wednesday morning there was again a little schooling and two from Butlin's stable, Blix (McNeilage) and Mimicry (Mr. Barrow) accompanied by Farthing Bun (Mr. Evers) went a nice working gallop over the last four flights of the horse course. Mimicry and Farthing Bun collided in mid air at the first flight and the latter was nearly down but recovered cleverly.

The Stewards of the C.T.C. have refused the entry of Blix for all races at the Monsoon Meetings.

Messrs. S. Griffiths, Harvey, Roulston and L. A Lambe, stipendiary officials of the C. T. C., returned to India by the last incoming Australian mail, all looking very fit and well after their holidays.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—The failure of two races to fill, despite the division of the Trials left us with only a card of five events for the opening day on Tuesday. A slight shower the previous day had not had much effect on the course, and the going was good during a fine evening. As customary in Bangalore, there are no terms races, and with two finishes ending in bad upsets the pencil brigade were just a bit to the good.

For horses not having won race value Rs. 900, the Macintire Plate opened the day with its eleven starters, Wavehill eventually winding up favourite. In Mysore we more than once saw Reeba cut out the running, and on this occasion, she was again in front at the start followed by the favourite. This time, however, she did not stop and though the other and John Wesley came at her at the turn, she stayed on to win fairly comfortably.

There were six in the Arab race and Zari at once established favourite, though he only just managed to keep this distinction from Grey Mist, who is known to be a flier, but no stayer. Priceless was first away, but was soon passed by Grey Mist, who held a substantial lead at the bend. He looked all over a winner, but Zari came up every stride, and in the last dash was able to get up and win by a short head.

Next one of the divisions of the big race of the day, for which there were six in each. On recent form Five Crown was made an odds on chance from Bally Maclure at fours and Crossbred neglected by the stable. Sporran was well away and ran by no means a bad race all the way considering he was short of at least one gallop. Shortly Five Crown passed him, and at the turn had Bally Maclure settled. When the race seemed practically over, Crossbred suddenly loomed up on the outside and more than a furlong from home the aspect was altogether changed as the chestnut passed everything with surprising ease. It must be most annoying for the stable, who have had so many gambles on him when he was not in the mood.

The pony race was quite good, there being eight starters and on his Mysore running Master Priam looked a really good thing, Cyclone being in next demand. The latter ran remarkably gamely, being out in front till they were well into the straight from Molly D and Red Patch, the last named here dropping back. Brown found a nice opening with Master Priam, and before the distance was in the lead. He was well in hand, but Cyclone finishing on, the favourite had to be shaken up to win.

Finally the second division of the Trials, Neith being a strong fancy, owing to lack of money for Lady Spring and Ardnaglue. It was not a good start, Eustace getting to the front, and cutting out a good pace till near home, where Neith did not even need to be shaken up to win with what must have been about a stone in hand, Bell Dhu was a bad third in a straggly finish.

The weather was very threatening for the second day, Thursday, but we were lucky in that the shower in the morning was all we had. Again there were only five races, and the results could not well have been more disastrous for punters, as four long priced ones got home and only one favourite.

We began with the C. B. race, and Valiant on form looked one of the best things one could find on a race course to back, though there was always the chance that he would repeat his Mysore tricks of running off the course or of being left. As it was he was the cause of a very long delay, and his repeated bolts from the post were probably the reason of his failure in the race, as after making up a bit lost at the start he was unable to stay. Crowbar was the pace maker, but at the turn the second favourite, Pearl, came at him and had him beaten just as Harebell was seen on the outside. The last named came full of running, and at the finish was able to hold Pearl comfortably.

Ten ponies went for the Ulsoor Plate, Ruling Passion the pick in a good betting race from Safety Pin. Melsom jumped away first on Morning Star, late Moira, from Lady's Maid and O. K., both of whom dropped out at the quarter mile, where Molly D. and Master Priam were most noticeable with the favourite behind them. The last named had to come a long way round with Mignonette, who gave him a bump which about settled his chance. Master Priam put in a strong finish, but Morning Star was always going too well and brought off another upset.

The important race followed, the Maharajah's Cup, with a number of scratchings leaving only eight runners. Neith was Mr. Apcar's only representative and was made favourite from Bally Maclure, Crossbred and Miracle. It was a very slow run race, which was the reason for the bad upset which resulted, though as it was I doubt if the winner could have been beaten however they ran it. Cowslip and Sporran were quickest out, and the former established a lead up to the seven, where Sporran led from his stable companion Mary B with Neith handy. This order remained to the bend for home, where Neith made his effort, but it was of no avail as the leader had quite a bit in hand and was able to stay them all out. Crossbred was likely at one time but failed, whereas Bally Maclure got his place along the rails. There were not more than about two books who even wrote the winner's name.

Vitange was the one good thing of the day to come off, and he very nearly got beaten by a rank outsider. Kismet and Twistum made all the running and it seemed that neither was to be caught. At the distance Kismet was just holding his own against Twistum when Vitange was seen on the outside. It was very doubtful whether he could make good, but a strong bit of riding by Robinson just did it by a neck. Had he come earlier he would have won more easily, but as it was he only did it in time.

In conclusion the Arab race, in which there was thought to be a match between Jassus and Zari, the former being the shorter. Bandy Dick was in front for a couple of furlongs, but then Jassus went there. Zari was handy at the turn, but Jassus had him when William Rufus put in his run and won anyhow. He has come on wonderfully, as a couple of months ago it was almost decided to end his racing career.

The Thalian Comedy Company of Calcutta amateurs are to be congratulated on their successful reproduction of The Little Damozel at the Empire Theatre last week. Monckton Hoffe's play is one of Mr. Charles Hawtrey's successes and really a difficult piece, but the Thalian Company gave us a very good representation and met with a cordial reception on each of the three nights they held the boards. The performance was well mounted and well staged, and a special word of praise is due to Mr. H. B. Ridley, under whose egis the production was carried out, and who must be indeed gratified with the results of his hard work. Of the principals Mrs. Glucksman in the title rôle looked charming and showed considerable histrionic ability in a difficult part. Mr. C. N. Brownell in an unsympathetic character was exceptionally good: Mr. E. R. Hartley as "Recklaw Poole" acquitted himself with great credit, and Mr. Archibald Batty was one of the successes of the play in the part of "The Hon. Fitzroy Locke." Other parts were well filled by Miss Jenkins, Messrs. H. B. Ridley, J. Reed, Radcliffe, C. King and G. K. Burroughs. The net proceeds of the performances go to the Soldiers' Institute and the Seamen's Mission.

The final of the Polo Champion Cup was played at Hurlingham on Thursday last, Eaton defeating the Horse Guards by 3 goals to nil.

Mr. Walter Winans has decided to give up his place at Surrenden Park, Kent, sell off all his horses, etc., and take up his abode at Brussels. English sport will be the poorer for his retirement and visitors to horse shows will certainly greatly miss his famous trotters and other horses. Besides being a wonderful pistol shot, Mr. Winans uses a rifle with great skill, and possesses some notable trophies of deer and wild boars. We understand that Mr. Winans leaves England almost immediately, and will later proceed to Russia to hunt bears.

Of the four teams entered for the Polo Coronation Cup tournament at Ranelagh, the Horse Guards and Eaton scratched, owing to the staleness of their ponies, leaving the 4th Dragoon Guards and the Indian team to meet in the final. The match was played on Saturday last, the Indian team outplaying their opponents and winning comfortably by 13 goals to 4. The teams were: I. P. A.—Captain Cheape, Shah Mirza Beg, Captain Ritson, Captain Lockett. 4th Dragoon Guards.—Captains Wiart and Hornby, Major Lannowe, and Captain Hunter.

THE Bangalore Polo Tournament brought together the 20th Deccan Horse and 34th Poona Horse in the final on Friday last, the Deccans winning by 5 goals to 3. The Novices' Tournament at Secunderabad was concluded on Saturday, when the 33rd Cavalry beat the Sherwood Foresters by 3 goals to nil, Ferris being responsible for all three points. Details of both Tournaments will be found further on.

THE English amateur long distance swimming championship was decided in the Thames on Saturday last and ended in a win for the New Zealander, M. E. Champion, whose time was 1hour 6mins. 11secs. T. S. Battersby, Wigan S. C., who won last year, was second. Time—1hour 6mins 25secs.

REUTER announces the fact that articles have been signed for a fight for the Heavy Weight Championship of the World between Jack Johnson and Bombardier Wells. The contest is to be one of twenty rounds for a purse of £8,000 and will take place in London in September. We rather fancy the Bombardier's supporters are trying him too high. It would perhaps have been wiser to have tried him out with others such as Langford or McVea before tackling the Johnson proposition. Still Wells has certainly come on a lot and is improving daily, while "Lil Arthur" cannot have gained anything during his absence from the game since he fought Jeffries. The match will doubtless provide intense interest throughout the boxing world and an immense crowd will assemble when the men come together.

THE Lahore Hockey Tournament was brought to a conclusion on the 10th instant, when the final brought together A and B teams of the North-Western Railway, A team winning very easily by 12 goals to 2. They were never extended during any of their matches in the tournament and had easy wins all through.

A GREAT deal of interest is centred in a match at Secunderabad for the strong man championship of India. The competitors are Professor Himmet Baksh of the Punjab and Dr. Ismatulla, late of Poona. Rs. 500 aside have been posted and the winner will take all the gate money. The contest is fixed for the 29th and 30th instant and the tests, to be judged by four British officers, are weight lifting, chain breaking, tug-of-war, stopping motor car, and cart over chest.

A PROPOSAL is on foot to start a pigeon racing club in Calcutta. All those who have or would like to have an interest in homing pigeons are invited to communicate with the Honorary Secretary pro tem, Mr. F. E. Youd, when a meeting will be called to settle the details to establish the club.

THE Bombay Gymkhana held their first mud sports of the season on Wednesday, the 12th instant, fine weather and a large attendance gracing the occasion. Entries were fair. The Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Band played at intervals and a most enjoyable afternoon was spent. Proceedings opened with jumping in half sections, won by Messrs. W. L. Graham and W. Priestley, with Messrs. Lodge and Spence second. Then came the Ladies' Calling Race—competitors to ride round a square dropping a card into each of five pot at home boxes. This was won by Mrs. Mc'auland, with Mrs. Priestley second. Mr. Mackie won the Bending race for men and this was followed by another event for ladies—the Polo Ball Stakes, competitors to carry four polo balls, singly, to a fence and throw them to gentlemen partners, who had to catch them and deposit them in their baskets. This was also won by Mrs. McCausland, Mrs. Priestley finishing second. The tent-pegging brought out a big field, the winner being Captain Adair, who took his pegs in excellent style. The distance scurry which closed the programme also attracted a big entry—the result being Mr. E. C. Pearson's Buccaneer, owner 1; Mr. Kuhn's Twister, Mr. Rummel 2; Mr. Knight Bruce's Hermes, owner 3.

A CORRESPONDENT writes in the Civil and Military Gazette: There is the golf maniac, the bridge maniac, the cricket maniac, the motor maniac, and the shikar maniac, but the greatest of these is the shikar maniac. He gives all the rest two stone and a beating. He's immense—colossal—and you can't compete with him. In India, of course, he is in his element. He can neither talk nor think of anything else but shikar, and he expects everyone to do the same or else listen to him. He's never happy unless he's killing some wretched animal. Directly he gets any leave off he goes, smothered in rifles, bandoliers, cartridges, knives, telescopes, shikari and the rest of the paraphernalia which he requires, to some absolutely unheard of and entirely beastly portion of the country. Sometimes he comes back and sometimes he doesn't. In the latter case some wild animal has done the world a good turn and incidentally gained a square meal for himself at the same time. Personally I can't understand them at all. Marvellous fellows, I think. I mean they don't think anything of climbing inaccessible snow-capped mountains and enduring horrible privations, that even Shackleton himself wouldn't care to tackle. Also they penetrate through dense forests where a horrible death toddles along, so to speak, just besides them the whole time. And then look at the result of their desperate efforts. Some poor old sheep with a pair of nice curly horns or an enlarged specimen of the domestic cat with the colouring of a common or garden wasp. How they ever manage to kill the old sheep always beats me. From what I can gather from natural history books and the yarns of those who amuse themselves chasing him he scents you ten miles off, hears you fire, sees you at any distance under three miles, and can go down or over the steepest mountain at the speed of an express train. But I suppose that after you have chivvied him over an area of several hundred square miles for about a month or so, he gets used to you and grows less suspicious and so you get your chance. It's a case of familiarity breeds contempt. I don't think there's anything to buck about in killing an old tiger. Anyone can do that who has a friend in the Forest Department and ten days to spare. All you do is to tie up an old goat (or a young one, the age, I believe, is immaterial) and then wait till "stripes" comes along for his dinner. Proof of Kipling's saying "the bleating of the kid excites the tiger." You wait securely ensconced in an enormous tree surrounded by all the latest machinery in the way of death-dealing weapons and pot him, like an old crow, at a distance of about ten yards. I call it a mean trick.

APPENDED are the results of important cricket matches played in England during the past week:—

"Gentlemen" beat "Players" at Lord's by 130 runs. Hobbs made 154 unfinished. Kent beat Somerset at Tunbridge Wells by 316 runs.

The match between Leicestershire and Hampshire ended in a draw, Hampshire leading on the first innings.

Middlesex beat Somerset at Lord's by an innings and 214.

Yorkshire beat Hampshire at Huddersfield by ten wickets.

Lancashire beat Derby at Derby by an innings and 141 runs.

Kent drew with Sussex at Tunbridge Wells, but led on the first innings.

Essex drew with Notts at Nottingham, gaining, however, a first innings victory.

Worcestershire beat Surrey by nine runs at the Oval.

Warwickshire beat Northants by 227 runs at Birmingham.

THE Indian cricket team have at length won the first match of their English tour and though Leicestershire are at the bottom of the list of counties in the Championship this season, the Indian team are to be congratulated on a good display. Batting first at Leicester they made 421 for 9 wickets on Thursday and next day completed their innings for 481. Kanga made 163, Meherhomji 86 nd Shivram 85. Kanga's score included 23 fours and was put together without a chance. Leicestershire then went in and compiled 283, of which Knight scored 62. Following on they had lost one wicket for 24 when stumps were drawn on Friday and on Saturday they were all out for 248. This left the Indian team with 52 to make to win. They put up 53 for three wickets and thus scored a seven wicket victory.

THEIR match against Somerset was begun at Taunton on Monday. The county team batted first and were all out for 157. The visitors replied with 170 for 7 wickets, of which total Bajana scored 101 not out. Resuming the following day the Indians took their total to 196 before they were all out, Bajana added 7 to his over-night score, his innings including a five and fourteen fours. Somerset went in again and compiled 303, Braund being responsible for 125. Before stumps were drawn the Indians had scored 63 for two wickets.

Mr. R. G. Woodruff, the president of the National Federation of Anglers.

Mr. Sheringham's scaled 16lb. 5oz. and that of Mr. Woodruff 1oz. more. Curiously enough, the former fish was a trifle the bigger, but was presumably not quite in such good condition. The lighter fish was 30 inches in length and 21 inches in girth. The heavier fish measured 29¼ inches and 20¼ inches respectively.

The water has been known to contain many monster carp, but hitherto this elusive and cunning fish has steered clear of the baits offered it by the many anglers who have devoted much time and study to its capture.

So hopeless did the capture of these carp appear that both anglers were tench fishing with worms, carp baits of honey and other pastes not having been touched all the week.

It was at 8-30 in the evening that Mr. Sheringham caught his fish, and that spurred Mr. Woodruff on to wait in the hope of similar success. Darkness came on and just as Mr. Woodruff was making up his mind to pack up he had a bite.

Instantly he knew he was fast into a big fish, and to give the story in his own words:—

"My fish was caught from a swim which had been baited up for ten days previously. The carp bait had not been touched for two days. For the purpose of catching a tench lighter tackle and lobworms were being used. It was on this tackle at 10 P.M. that I had a run and in the dark, and without any assistance, had a very keen fight with my prize.

"Without any knowledge of where the fish was and with only the rod point against the skyline to guide me in my actions, the fish was slowly but surely prevented from getting into the weeds. It was turned, and made for the open water. When thoroughly under control, I was looking for signs of the fish at thirty yards but to my astonishment what I took to be a patch of weeds was the fish not more than five yards away.

"Three times I got the carp over the net, but each time it got away, the net being too small. At last with rod and net handle in one hand and the ring of the net in the other, I lifted him out.

"I was lucky to land such a fish on such slight running tackle as I have lost many carp on heavier tackle. I was fishing with a Lea roach pole, fitted with running tackle and was using a heavy roach line and a No. 4 hook."

A fourteen pound carp is estimated to be seventy years of age. Mr. Woodruff's fish was probably nearly, if not quite, one hundred years old.

There is a carp at Salisbury which is reputed to be 800 years old and some at Versailles are, it is believed, even more ancient.

Mr. Alfred E. T. Watson's latest book "King Edward VII. as a Sportsman" is a thorough record of the late King's achievements in a branch of human activities which, as is well known, lay very near to his heart. King Edward had his limitations as a sportsman. Fishing, as the author points out, never attracted one of his active habits, and he was wont to quote with approval Dr. Johnson's definition of the angler's rod as "a fool at one end and a worm at the other." At cricket, too, the King never shone, and we believe his record score at that game was never more than two, while not even the most ardent courtier would have ventured to suggest that he was anything of a bowler. But he liked the regular open-air sports of a country gentleman; he often hunted, he was devoted to racing and yachting, and every year he went shooting. The record of the Royal colours on the turf is long and singularly varied; it will appeal to every racing man, and the last win of Minoru in the Derby of 1909 comes as a fitting dramatic climax to the successes which only followed a long series of initial misfortunes.

As a shot the late King was good, although not first-rate, like his son, the present King. Mr. Watson states that he varied a good deal, and that often, when his mind was occupied with important matters of State, King Edward VII. did not pay much attention to the partridges and pheasants. But he took a great interest in the breeding of birds, and was particularly engaged in an attempt to introduce grouse at Sandringham.

We cannot give Mr. Watson's book higher praise than to say it is worthy of its subject, while it is considerably enriched by the many excellent illustrations which are included as plates among its pages.

Mistress—"Did you manage to find the basket of eggs that was on the pantry floor, Bridget?"

Bridget—"Oh, yes mam, aisily, I shtepped on thim."

"I must to realise," said young Mr. Fop, "that I am no longer a mere youth, now that I've got a little hair on my lip."

"Yes," said Miss Vane, "And I suppose in another month or so you'll have another little one, won't you?"

London Week by Week.

Friday, 30th June 1911.

The Coronation and all pertaining thereto is over, all week we have been "tidying up," taking down and putting away the outward and visible signs of our loyal and dutiful sentiments. Nothing less than half an issue of The Indian Field would be required to do justice to a detailed description of these events, so I will not attempt the task. Besides this mail will take you the pictorial papers and after a perusal of these I fear any attempt at descriptive effort by your humble scribe would find him badly left at the post.

Everything on Coronation Day conspired to make for success—fine weather, big and orderly crowds, magnificent police arrangements, the streets in gala attire and the ceremony down to its smallest detail, perfect in conception and marvellous in its carrying out.

And so King George and Queen Mary were crowned at Westminster Abbey last Thursday in the presence of many Royal and other representatives of foreign Powers, members of the British Royal Family, the Prime Ministers of the Dominions, the members of both Houses of Parliament, and many other distinguished patrons, the congregation numbering 7,000. The Archbishop of Canterbury anointed and crowned both of their Majesties, and the sermon was preached by the Archbishop of York. Homage was done by the Prince of Wales and the other Princes, Peers, and Prelates assembled, and immediately after his Majesty's Coronation the great congregation raised loud and repeated shouts of "God Save the King." Subsequently the joyful ringing of bells conveyed to the people outside the news that the Coronation was complete, whereupon the people in Parliament-square began singing the National Anthem, which was taken up by those in Parliament-street and Whitehall.

The Royal Procession from Buckingham Palace to the Abbey and back again was watched by many thousands of spectators, who greeted their Majesties with great enthusiasm, especially on the return journey. It was noticeable also that the German Crown Prince and Crown Princess, who were among the visitors taking part in the procession, were cordially saluted by the spectators.

Some people, determined to get good places along the route, spent the night in the streets, and others began to assemble before sunrise but the Mall and Charing Cross were the only places where there was anything like crushing. Luckily the possibility of rain indicated by the forecasts did not materialise seriously, and although the sky was dull throughout the day there were only slight showers. The whole ceremony passed off as happily as could be desired except that the horse of a Canadian officer came down with its rider, who was rather severely injured. This was the most serious case.

Next day the King and Queen went in procession through London, and were received with delight by the people of all classes, and were welcomed with loyalty and affection. They must have felt that among their people they are at home. The cheers which accompanied them during their progress were the natural, spontaneous utterance of men's feelings, expressions equally of homage and of gladness. No constraint or embarrassment separates the King and Queen from the people; the bounds of respect are observed without being felt as barriers; there is a full current of the mutual intelligence of sympathy, of which both sides are aware. This was self-evident in Friday's proceedings and was a happy omen. There was, of course, a difference in the composition of the two processions. On Thursday the presence of the Royal Princes and Princesses and of the representatives of the reigning Sovereigns made all men aware that a Coronation has more than a personal and more than a national importance; that the King is the head of a house and that he is one among a number of heads of States. Friday's procession was a microcosm of the Empire. The presence of the Prime Ministers of the Great Dominions and of the representatives of the Crown Colonies told its own tale, and perhaps in no other way could the idea of the unity of the Empire have been so well brought home to men's minds. The Indian procession, too, made a great impression on the spectators, who warmly cheered the Princes and the Indian officers. It is an impression that may help England and India to appreciate each other. The Royal Procession was, according to custom, representative of the Navy and of the Army, and great was the satisfaction felt by those observers who recognised the units representative of the various arms and regiments and the many distinguished officers who rode in the procession. Yet all these were but a prelude. The great multitude that filled the houses, the stands, and the side-walks were there to see the King and Queen, whose approach was at every point the signal for a demonstration of affectionate loyalty. This was always intensified at the moment when, in presence of their Majesties, men saw and felt how quick was their sense of the homage paid to them and how gladly they were upborne by the people's affection.

The Coronation Fleet, the largest and most powerful gathering of British warships ever known, was reviewed by the King at Spithead on Saturday. The Fleet was composed of 167 ships with a tonnage of over 1,000,000 and a total value of something approaching £100,000,000.

The grey ships lay in mighty streets many miles long across the great stretch of water which separates the mainland from the Isle of Wight ranging from the tiniest torpedo-boat to the newest and most powerful Dreadnought. All were decked out in festive array, and as the King in the royal yacht made his stately progress down the lines the scene was one of unparalleled magnificence.

* * * * * *

And for about a week London has been resting after the stress and strain of these festivities. Consequently I have practically little else to write about.

* * * * * *

With the Coronation came the new issue of postage stamps. The appearance of these poor and grotesquely inartistic things evoked pained surprise which has now given place to emphatic condemnation on all sides and a clamour for the speedy cancellation of these botched and blotched specimens of cheap and nasty philately. After being denounced by Sir John Purcell, who held the position of Controller of Stamps for nearly twenty years, and by Sir Alfred East, A.R.A., President of the Royal Society of British Artists, as stated in yesterday's Evening News, they are to be the subject of questions in Parliament.

Mr. Evelyn Cecil, M.P. for Aston Manor, has given notice to ask the Postmaster-General whether, in view of the dissatisfaction at the new postage stamps, both owing to the complete want of resemblance of the portrait of His Majesty and the clumsiness of the printing, especially on the penny stamp, he will consider whether a fresh issue should be designed with a new portrait of His Majesty, and whether the proposed issue of higher denominations with the existing design should be cancelled.

As the reason given by the Government for taking the contract from Messrs. De la Rue was that it would save £10,000 a year, Mr. Touche, M.P., will ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether he will state approximately the figure of the yearly saving effected upon the manufacture of adhesive postage stamps as between the tender of Messrs. De la Rue and that of Messrs. Harrison; and whether the stamps issued to the public on Coronation Day meet all the requirements of the new contract.

There has to-day been an enormous demand for the new issue of postage stamps. Some of the stamp-dealing firms have bought up huge parcels to send abroad.

It is possible that the criticisms of the new issue have helped to increase the demand for specimens. Should the whole issue be cancelled, the new stamps, instead of becoming the most valueless commonplace, would at once fetch a fair price, as they would be much sought after by collectors.

But putting collectors aside, we should look at the business from other points of view. It is nothing to us that the Green Octagonal Tibet, which fetches Five Hundred Pounds in the sale-room, should be of surpassing ugliness. It is a great matter that the postage-stamp on every day's letters, which franks the Englishman's messages all over the world, should be a decent piece of work. That in postage-stamps, as in coinage, we should be falling behind even the modest Victorian ideal, is a sad business. Although one pays taxes with a lukewarm patriotism one would rather have seen ten thousand pounds saved in some other direction, preferably in the salaries of permanent officials who have not the wits to give us good English art in the penny or the penny postage-stamp.

The prophets, those dear good people who are nearly always wrong, predict a noiseless London in the near future. This on the strength of the International Rubber and Allied Trades Exhibition, which was opened at the Royal Agricultural Hall, Islington, on Saturday. The rubber world claims that the phrase "There's nothing like leather!" is soon to read "There's nothing like rubber!" At a not so far distant period, the incessant rumbling noises of the motor-omnibus and the tramp of heavy boots on thin-carpeted floors will be silenced for ever. The street vehicles of the future will slip noiselessly along on rubber-paved roads, and every house will have its rubber carpets.

The exhibition tells the story of the preparation of rubber from the seed of the trees to the finished article. Here is a bottle of seeds looking like pickled walnuts. Then some stems. In the Belgian Congo section there are life-size tableaux of natives at work. In another, the rubber-tree marked, showing the best way to tap or cross-tap for the milk or "latex," which drips into small glass cups and after coagulation is the actual rubber. Another section displays the final processes of washing and rolling. Then the finished article in the shape of tyres, toys, boots, and a hundred other articles. The chemicals used for and process of colouring rubber to the required shade are also shown.

The machinery section is devoted to the many types of engines used to give to rubber the degree of stability necessary for the particular purpose for which it may be required, and testing machines to determine the amount of elasticity.

Para or hard rubber, which is at present the mainstay of makers, is strongly to the fore, while Castilloa rubber is in keen competition with Amayona. Among the numerous other classes of exhibits are ceara from Uganda, funtumia of West Africa, Guayule gutta-percha, and jelutong.

But while rubber streets and rubber tyres may minimise some of the noise, what about the pandemonium of the motor hooters, syrens, horns, whistles, pipes, trumpets, grunters, roarers, squeakers et hoc, not forgetting the infernal thing which emits sounds suggestive of one in the throes of mal de mer—these will possibly increase as the warning rattle of wheels dies down. "A noiseless London," I don't think.

To emerge triumphant from the hardships, dangers and privations attendant on the establishment of a world-wide reputation as an explorer; to face death a hundred times in tight corners in wild and unexplored countries, to successfully lead warlike expeditions against savages without a scratch worth talking about and then to be run over by a silly, smelly motor-car is rough luck. This is what has happened to Sir Francis Younghusband in Belgium. Last Sunday he was walking on a country road when some murdering ruffian in a car knocked him down, ran over him, broke one of his legs in two places, severely injured the other and battered him about generally. He is reported to be doing well; but to be laid low in a peaceful road in sleepy Belgium after survivnig a thousand perils in the so-called "uncivilised East," must be particularly galling to the ex-commissioner of Tibet and Resident of Kashmir.

"Wasn't that a dainty dish to set before a King?" is a question that can be answered agreeably in respect of Ben Jonson's masque, "The Vision of Delight," which formed the concluding item and chief novelty of Tuesday night's gala performance at His Majesty's. As to the rest of the generous menu, one can but observe that it was doubtless the correct kind of thing for the occasion, even if it did nothing at all to represent or even suggest the British drama of the present century. This is not said by way of criticism, for it is hardly to be imagined that anybody has a free hand in such an affair. Certainly "The Masque," for which Mr. Trench had written a pretty Prologue, was altogether suitable and pleasing. It would, however, be idle to pretend that we do not possess living authors who could have given us a whole programme of dainty masques, and producers able to have presented them in an original manner that would have surprised the rare Ben Jonson. The programme consisted of a Prologue by the Editor of Punch, followed by the famous drunken scene from "David Garrick," in which Sir Charles Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore once more played their favourite parts. Then came the letter scene from "The Merry Wives of Windsor," with Miss Ellen Terry and Mrs. Kendal as les joyeuses commeres. Sir Herbert Tree gave us Antony's oration in "Julius Caesar," and under the clever direction of Mr. Granville Barker the mob played an important part in the matter. The piece de resistance was "The Critic," and here we had crowds of popular players, and the audience seemed well pleased with the humour not only of Sheridan but also of many nameless interpolators, and was much entertained by the idea of the numerous characters being addressed by the names of the actors and actresses who represented them. Upon such an occasion the critic naturally is dumb, and rather turns his pen into that of the reporter—and uses it very badly. For I have no competence to tell of the many mighty people, from the King and Queen downwards, all in gorgeous raiment, who crowded the house and seemed thoroughly to enjoy the entertainment; whilst to give a list of the players would be to occupy half a column of the paper, and if suitable adjectives were added to the list I should demand almost a whole issue—and not get it. The decorations of the theatre, one of the few London playhouses that is not offensive to the eye, but is, on the contrary, calmly beautiful, were excellently contrived, and the combination of massed roses, of long ropes of leaves, and huge branches of dull golden fruit produced an effect that was magnificent without being fatiguing. Altogether Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree may be congratulated upon the brilliantly successful accomplishment of the arduous task naturally entrusted to him.

At the Haymarket Theatre last Wednesday night Mr. Herbert Trench presented for the first time a three-act play, "Above Suspicion," which was described on the programme as "by Sardou, exclusively authorised translation and adaptation by William Morpeth." "Above Suspicion" is indeed Anglicised Sardou of a generation or so ago—ingenious situation, deft curtains, supreme theatricality.

Roberte de Boismartel, wife of the president of the Assize Court at Aix, has been in love before her marriage with Gerard de Mayran. After her marriage she allows him to come and see her while her husband is away, but the sudden illness of her child saves her from anything worse than folly. She sends de Mayran about his business. So far so good. But alas and alack, while he was leaving the house he was the unwilling witness of a murder, and recognised the murderer. But murder and murderer were none of de Mayran's business, and off he went to Africa to rejoin his regiment. Unhappily a friend of de Mayran's is accused of the crime, and he returns home to be faced with the alternative of letting his friend be guillotined or of giving the lady away. How Sardouesque! Roberte adores her child, and has come to love her husband. She is in an agony of doubt and distress. Gerard is equally perplexed. Finally he accuses himself of the murder, which is manifestly absurd. However, the real man owns up in his turn, and all, as Dr. Pangloss remarked, is leather and prunella.

It would be absurd to deny that much of "Above Suspicion" is effective, but Brieux has arrived since Sardou, and, despite the excellence of the acting at the Haymarket, the intrigue was not convincing. They were not human beings we were watching. The characters had been invented to fit the situations. Miss Alexandra Carlisle was charmingly pathetic as Roberte, and Mr. Aubrey Smith was dignified as her husband. They were both almost real despite the artificiality of the drama. Mr. Charles Maude was earnest and energetic as Gerard, but he did not quite succeed in making the audience believe in the character.

GAME BIRDS IN BENGAL AND THEIR WAYS.

THE LARGE WHISTLING DUCK.

The large whistling duck (Dendrocygena fulva) is a much rarer bird and is only to be met with in certain parts of the Indian Empire.

Though like the small whistling duck, they range over a wide extent of country, and are to be met in the Malayan Archipelago, Burma, Tenasserim, Indo-China, Siam, Madagascar and are even common on the Congo and the Victoria Falls.

The large whistling ducks are not so fond of the weedy and rush-covered marshes; their favourite haunts are the more extensive lagoons and back waters. They are never met in such vast numbers as those of the smaller species. These ducks breed all through the rains, generally from June to September, and when breeding they are often met with in large companies. The observer will notice at this time that though three or four score of them will rise together, they will invariably go off in pairs. The favourite breeding haunts of these ducks are the more extensive marshes on which water nuts, lilies, and other aquatic plants grow thickly. I have never yet found the big whistling duck to breed on trees, though most other ornithologists assert that trees are the favourite breeding haunts of these ducks. The nests I have noticed in marshes consisted merely of reeds, leaves, weeds, and such like brought together raised in the shape of a heap, and the eggs laid on them. I have also invariably noticed that when the birds left the marsh they took care to cover up the eggs, which are then most difficult to find.

The large whistling duck lays from 8 to 16 eggs. In shape they are either elliptical or broad oval, and short. In colour these eggs are pale cream and not so smooth as most other species of wild ducks.

The large whistling duck is neither wary nor shy, though it is perhaps more so than its smaller congener. They are very good at diving and when once wounded in some of the weedier parts of the marsh they may be considered as lost, as they very seldom come up again to the surface, at least they take care not to do so till the gunner is well out of sight. For the table the large whistling duck is superior to the smaller bird, though it has not got much either to recommend it.

The large whistling duck, which is a much gamier looking bird, weighs usually about 2lbs., while the smaller kind weighs very rarely over 1¼lb.

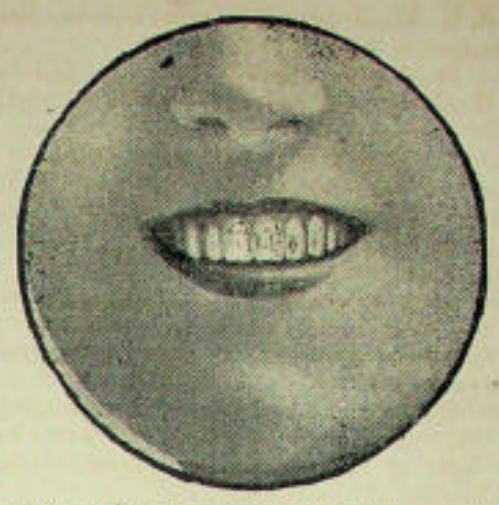
LETTERS ON SHOOTING.

BY BALDATCHA.

LETTER No. V.—WORKING A JHIL.

Five minutes spent making a start in explaining to the coolies that snipe not being water buffaloes must be hunted with different methods, will be time well laid out and will be amply repaid. No loud splashing or trampling to be permitted. Silence in the ranks to be strictly enjoined and anybody speaking above a whisper to lose his chance of backshish at the end of the day. All eyes to be turned on the sahib when he whistles—a hand held up all halt at once—and a wave of the hand to right or left indicates corresponding change of direction. A pre-concerted signal to be used by coolies to announce the approach of duck or geese. It is also as well to give a few illustrations of the facility with which birds can be marked by aligning the spot where they were seen to fall with two stationary objects—a tuft of tall reed in the jhil, a large tree or other conspicuous object in the distance.



White and beautiful teeth are the best possible letters of recommendation. They show the character of the possessor. We are aware that their brightness and their perfect health are direct indications of care bestowed upon them; that is to say, of the self-respect and love of cleanliness of the individual. In effect, you may safely judge a man by his use of Odol, the liquid antiseptic dentifrice and mouth-wash, which every man and woman of distinction and character is now using for cleansing the mouth and teeth.

Some coolies are brilliant at recovering birds, others are the reverse, but the intelligence of all is stimulated by these preliminary exercises.

When shooting alone it is possible to work a jhil all day as it should be worked, namely, down wind or the wind on either the right or left of the shooter and blowing across him, and it is better worth while—even when dealing with a long narrow strip—to keep working short beats across it than to approach your birds, up wind; this may be a tedious plan, but it pays a handsome dividend in pretty shots obtained and birds bagged.

If a bright lookout is kept for chances of driving birds to the guns and if the direction is noted in which most of the birds tend to fly it will often enable you to post the guns so as to get rocketing shots. For instance, when the birds are seen flying over scrub or tree jungle to another patch of jhil, or if there is cover on the jhil behind tall reeds, crops, etc., it is often possible to get very pretty shooting, and many opportunities for driving are not taken advantage of, which is a pity. If the shooter is clothed in "green heather mixture" drill, driven birds will often come right over him, even if he has to stand, or, rather, crouch in the open jhil with no cover, and this manœuvre can often be resorted to with success.

In a high wind, which is so common on up-country jhils and adds so much to the fun of snipe-shooting, it is often possible to get very pretty shooting by posting the guns behind the line and well to one side of it.

An instance of this sort occurred to me when I was out alone and added to the joys of a bright red letter day. There was much wind and birds were very wild. At a place where the jhil took a turn, there was a gigantic red silk cotton tree over which the wild birds were rattling back on the wind at a grand pace. The line went on and I stayed behind the tree for two beats and some of the most exhilerating snipe-shooting that it has been my luck to enjoy was the result. The birds looked quite small as they dashed over the tree, and when killed were carried by the force of the wind to a considerable distance, and the gun was kept busy by the numbers of birds that chose this line of flight.

On another occasion the snipe had, as is so often the case, deserted the jhil and were resting in a thin crop of standing sugarcane. A small present to the cultivator secured his acquiescence,—he himself joining the beating line, which drove the birds at a fine pace over the gun. Two drives yielded over twenty couple of full snipe.

Where crops have been flooded it is always worth while to see if they harbour birds. The consent of the cultivator can usually be obtained by a little judicious conversation and the passing of small coin and the coolies must be prevented from damaging and looting the crop. In some jhils the birds habitually lie out all day and only come on to the wet lands when it is time for their evening meal. Snipe often take refuge in tussocky grass lands, arhar crops, patches of wheat, barley and gram cultivation when their marshy grounds are much disturbed by men or cattle and good sport can often be obtained by remembering this trait.

On some jhils again the snipe betake themselves during the day to parts of the jhil which are from the depth of the mud or from quicksand (jusan) very dangerous and difficult for the white man to walk over. Elephants and men are sometimes engulphed and lose their lives in this jusan. The light footed coollie can go over most of these spots with perfect ease, and he also knows every yard of the ground thoroughly. Driving can often be resorted to under these conditions with great success, and it is always as well to tell off a few men to walk up and down these difficult stretches and keep birds on the move which have resorted to the sanctuary, but whose presence is required on the walkable parts of the jhil. Snipe can in some places be prevented from breaking away in any particular direction by placing men as stops in conspicuous positions. It often answers to send a couple of intelligent men as markers ahead on the flanks where the ground and the flight of the birds is not known to the shooter, and this plan should always be resorted to on ground where any considerable portion of the birds flushed are not again met with.

When birds are found to be very wild—and this often happens on the wind-swept jhils in in the North—if only two coolies enter the jhil with the guns, wide intervals being preserved between each man, and the advance is made at a snail's pace, the birds will often think that it is only buffaloes or swine that are invading their jhil and will stay awhile instead of rising and scurrying away far out of shot. Under these conditions two shots can sometimes be obtained by making the guns walk well in advance of the wide interval line. Many birds hope, in this formation of the line, to escape between the scattered individuals comprising it and in consequence are tempted to lie low. In narrow strips of jhil if the guns keep a little ahead of the line many shots can be obtained. In most jhils there are bends, corners, knuckle ends, which from their position and configuration offer facilities for driving, and advantage should be taken of all such opportunities. Sometimes it pays to divide the line into two parts facing each other and to post the guns midway between them and then by signal to cause the two opposing lines to advance with their flanks well forward in horseshoe formation. At other times it is advisable that the guns alone should enter the water, and by walking very slowly birds can be approched within gunshot. A beat back in the evening over the ground covered in the morning often yields a large number of birds. In short, there are endless opportunities of pitting one's wits against those of the game little bird one is pursuing in this most fascinating sport. It is a great mistake to alter your position when birds are awing, if you think they are likely to come over you unless you do so by very very slow degrees. Any quick movement infallibly gives the show away, alarms the birds and loses you what might otherwise have been a good chance.

When approaching geese on the dry or in small pools it answers to pretend to be gathering some crop off the ground and to move along slowly, not directly at the birds but as if you were going to leave them on the side. Circle nearer and then run in as hard as you can when you think they will stand no closer approach, and you will often get a good right and left at the two nearest birds of the flock. Geese, the gourmets tell us, are only worth eating after they have been feeding on the young wheat and barley shoots, they are then said to be excellent. At all times they afford capital stalking and there is never any difficulty in getting them eaten as so many people esteem them a luxury.

The Brahmini Duck (Ruddy Sheldrake) may always be let off, unless the shooter is very very hard up indeed for fresh meat, for, even when buried and then skinned, he is an unpalateable fellow.

The tip is worth noting, however, that even the toughest old birds, just shot, can be rendered tender by two or three hours immersion in humus, just below the surface of the ground. Sandy soil is not good, but any ordinary field or garden earth will answer. (The beneficent microbe again to the fore.) Another useful dodge when sending birds—pheasants, partridges, duck, etc.—to a distance by road or rail, is to have them carefully cleaned, and wiped out with dry grass or straw, and then filled with fresh dry wood-charcoal and sewn up.

A friendly epicure once confided to me that the only way to cook that heavenly bird—so he termed the snipe—is to get a saucepan of water on the boil, remove it from the fire and at once pop the dear bird in for three minutes and a half, but "never—mind that 'never'—for more than four minutes by the watch." I quoted this authoritative ruling to a friend who tried it and said it was a beastly trick and nearly made him sick, but then, opinions differ. A quail roasted in a vine leaf with a green chili in his little inside is always appreciated, though here again many people hold that he should only be cooked on the plan recommended by the gourmet for snipe.

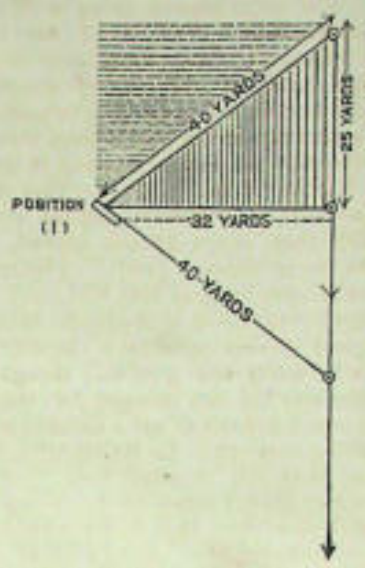
To put duck on the wing and keep them moving, especially on large sheets of water when the number of available guns is inadequate, the native firework, a bomb called up-country andr, is invaluable. If these bombs are exploded by coolies at suitable spots on land and on the water at proper intervals many good bags of wildfowl can be obtained that would otherwise be impossible.

Towards the evening it is as well to make for the shallows of the jhil, if during the day from noticing the fresh looking feathers that lightly float on the water, it is evident that the duck come to feed. Even if no duck have been seen on the jhil all day, it will happen that the wildfowl will come sweeping down just before dusk and afford delightful sport. It is frequently that one can bag quite a respectable number of birds in the short time that the flighting lasts. Small patches of water near roads, railway stations and other unlikely spots should not be neglected if these telltale feathers have been observed. A mental note made of any place where snipe peggings are seen on unlikely ground or on ground that is much disturbed during the day will often lead to pleasant surprises in the shape of birds that are lying up in crops or grass land not very far away and who only come out to feed late in the evening when their exposed grounds are deserted when men and cattle go home for the night.

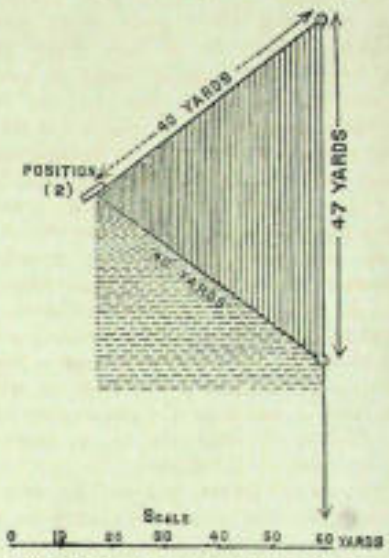
It is a very good plan at lunch and tea time to jot down on the back of an envelope or in your notebook roughly the shots fired and the birds bagged. A cross for a bird bagged and nought for a miss on a very rough outline of the jhil or shoot will recall all the shots on most ordinary days and which can be looked over and corrected after dinner. The habit too acts as a wholesome check upon memory and fixes in the mind before it is too late many a second barrel fired at a difficult bird, a double miss or an unsuccessful long shot that might otherwise soon fade away and escape recollection. A little thought and contemplation over each failure is not amiss. If the question is habitually asked "why did I miss that bird?" it will frequently be found that the reason can be assigned to one of two causes that is a tiring or uncomfortalle grip-hold of the gun, or a bad, that is, a strained or unsuitable, position.

A great improvement can often be effected by pushing the left hand higher up the barrel, especially when the shooting is heavy, or where rocketers are the order of the day. The want of a good position is answerable for a great deal of disappointment and grief, and it will frequently be noticed, especially with birds going fast from left to right for a righthanded man, the reverse way for a man who shoots from the shoulder, that the unsuccessful issue can be attributed to an awkward and therefore uncomfortable position having been assumed by the shooter. Half or even a quarter turn in the required direction would have made all the difference. This simple move widens the zone of danger for the bird as it enables more space to be comfortably covered in the direction in which the bird is moving. I have often caught myself napping in this way and have corrected the mistake to my great content and the discomfort of the game I was pursuing.

In the hills, when the birds come cracking down a ravine from a great height, one's shooting is greatly improved by an exaggerated turn of this description. I remember in one such place where the pheasants flung themselves down a precipitous pine-clad gorge, usually with a swerve to the right towards their next pitch. Facing rather more than half right, I missed clean five birds out of seven, and though the pace was terrific, the angles and the standing room exceptionally difficult, as I was in hard practice this was very disgusting. I was regularly tucked up by each bird I missed and fired behind it. I thought over the matter and came to the conclusion that my position was at fault. The next time I visited this ravine, which was unfortunately a long day's march away, I turned my face three-quarters rightabout and waited for the beat to commence on the heights. I was thus looking at the birds over my left shoulder as they whizzed down and taking them at a comfortable angle out of nine shots seven koklas pheasants were picked up, showing conclusively the difference this simple little manœuvre brought about. A rough diagram to scale is attached which will help to make my meaning clearer.



Birds flight in hitting zone for 25 yards.



Birds flight within hitting zone 47 yards.
Danger zone for birds straight lines.
Dead space dotted lines.

Assuming that the angle of effective fire is 125° (without changing the position of the feet). In figure (1) the position gives an effective zone of fire after the birds arrive within 40 yards range, of 37° and a wasted space or dead space of 88° and the bird is in the danger zone of fire for 25 yards of his flight.

If position (2) is taken up the danger zone for the bird extends to 82° as against 43° waste space and he is in range for 47 yards.

Many an otherwise unaccountable miss can be traced to this cause, the want of a good position at the moment of firing, and it is also a fruitful cause of shooting "late."

If 90 to 135 degrees be taken as the extreme limit of swing from left to right that a shooter can easily compass without changing the position of his feet while keeping his gun into his shoulder, the really comfortable arc may be taken as about 90 degrees.

A reference to the diagram shows that the best position when birds are coming from left to right is of very great moment, especially in a sticky snipe jhil and on steep unsafe hillsides or in any other stand where, when once a position is taken up for the shot, it is not easy, and is often impossible, to alter it. The position noted, which is often assumed unconsciously, is that which covers the bird's flight while in effective range for over the 90 degrees and which enables the shooter to deliver his fire in the most comfortable and natural position. Let any one try to swing beyond the limit of, say, 120 degrees with his feet fast gripped in the mud, or firmly held by a friend at the ankles, and he will speedily realise how handicapped he is.

Another source of much woe with some shooters is that they will fire too quickly and, unless the bird happens to rise at a good distance, a miss or a bird blown to flinders is the result. If such men were to count, "One, Two, Three," or remark "Ha, Ha, Ha" three times in a low voice after the bird has got on the wing, they would not perhaps loose off their two barrels so astonishingly quickly, but allow the bird to get to a proper and shootable distance. (If this should happen to catch the eye of my old friend G. B. W. he will, with a smile, recall our shoots together in the days of long ago. Perhaps his latest and most coveted honour and decoration was won by the self-control called out on these happy if moist playing fields.)

Never get angry with the most crass of stupid coolies. Chaff and a little sarcasm does more and goes much further than any frenzied outburst of wrath. At all events never really lose your wool, only pretend to be angry and sin not against your good shooting. The most wrong-headed and impudent of beaters is not worth getting hot over. A little friendly chaff, however feeble and inane, at the outset puts the actors upon the shooting stage upon a quasi-friendly sociable footing, which will tend to make the play run well, and a cheery contented lot of men add not a little to the pleasures of the day. A very small thing, a reference to their folk lore, or to a thread bare proverb, a nickname happily bestowed, places matters upon an amicable platform. I once knew a coolie, the lines of whose vacant and weird features closely resembled and irresistibly recalled to the beholder the look and expression seen on those round cakes of drying cowdung fuel which are plastered against the walls of every native village. He was accordingly addressed as "The Lord of The Opias." This tickled the fancy of the crowd and of his comrades, who were delighted. The man himself being a Hindu was much flattered and gratified. Whenever I was in the neighbourhood, "Opia-jee" and his friends were early on the ground, and better or more cheery companions in the chase of snipe and duck I never wish to meet.

It is interesting by the bye to learn that this cowdung fuel was burned by the poor in England in the last century, vide Lord Minto's "Life," 1-301. "They have even less fuel than we have (in Scotland) and the poor burn cowdung, which they scrape off the ground, and set up to burn as we do in 'divots' (turf)." (Referring to a ride of 20 miles in open country near Woburn.)

Some eucalyptus carried in the lunch basket for fever, dysentery and cholera patients is another link, and one that makes for amity and goodwill, though the attitude of the native alas! is not changed for the better of late years. It is not difficult to get a name as a medicine man by distributing eucalyptus (a tablespoonful to a whiskey bottle three parts full of water from their own special well—except in cholera times—to be shaken before taken, and a dessert-spoonful or, say, half a mouthful drunk for fever and dysentery, three or four times a day). For cholera the standard dose is 5 drops in a teaspoonful of water. This remedy appears to give nature a chance and has a wonderful effect upon white men and our Aryan brethren alike. It is very much preferred to quinine in fever which indeed seems to have more unpleasant results for the native than for the white man. It is, in weak solution, at a pinch (in the absence of carbolic, permanganate of potash or boracic acid) useful for washing out wounds, ulcers, etc., which are often paraded for the shooter's inspection and orders, usually covered with a good coating of cowdung, which is as much loved as an antiseptic semi-religious dressing by our Gentoo friends of the land as was holy water of old in England. A little chat with the children who come crowding out to see the tamasha (rare show) and perhaps the present of a basket of rice sweetmeat—price sixpence or thereabouts—will cement the alliance as well as give one a great treat in watching the expressions of the small recipients. Native children are by no means the least interesting denizens of Hindustan.

Even if you do not smoke yourself be sure and give your men every now and again the chance to get a few whiffs of the pipe; they work all the better for it. If your shikari man is of the same class it is a good plan occasionally to bring out by him some really elegant tobacco from the cantonment or city—this is often highly appreciated and costs but a trifle.

Remember all the time, please, that they will, one and all, lift your cartridges if they get half a chance, so put temptation out of their way by every means in your power. A present of a few boxes of matches as a reward for specially good retrieving work has a great and stimulating effect if presented on the field of valour.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty o health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

BIRMINGHAM.

The previous week's Coronation celebrations apparently took the wind out of the sails of this meeting. The inhabitants of the hardware town had been given their full share of holidays, and with their exchequers depleted, there was little left for racing. The Birmingham executive count on their main support from the habitues of the minor enclosures, but here the attendance was below the average, due to some extent perhaps to the dull weather conditions of the morning. The club muster is never a strong one and on the first day it was smaller than ever, a mere "handful" of the elite of Warwickshire putting in an appearance. Results:—

NEWMARKET.

The 1st July Meeting was not associated with tropical weather, either in the way of intense heat or the other extreme, violent thunderstorms; as after a brilliant morning the sky clouded over and the fresh westerly breeze made the temperature cool and comfortable. Thanks to recent rain the going, generally good at this time of year, was in superb order, soft and cushiony as the famous sward on Salisbury Downs, and though the Newmarket stables supplied the bulk of the runners, fields panned out well. Results:—

Won by two lengths; six lengths between second and third.

A breezier day sped the clouds aloft, and let in more sunshine than on Tuesday, while saving the heat from becoming oppressive and making the vast expanse of heath a very desirable midsummer haven. Apart from the charm of sport, the July programmes are never of such a sensational character as to catch the public eye, and a big attendance is rarely seen "behind the ditch," the muster about equalling the previous day's. With such capital going the home stables rose to the occasion, and fields were plethoric; but backers failed to improve on their crushing luck of Tuesday. Results:—

WINCHESTER

LIGHT WEIGHT .22 CALIBER RIFLES.

SINGLE SHOT RIFLE.

The biggest value in a gun ever offered. It is a take-down .22 caliber rifle, fitted with a heavy 21-inch round barrel, a handsome Schuetzen-shaped butt stock, and has the well-known Winchester bolt action, which has been so widely imitated. Ask your dealer about it. When you see it and learn its low price you will insist on having one.

The Model 1902 is a hammerless take-down and can be taken apart easily and quickly. It is made with an 18-inch round barrel, fitted with open front and rear sights. It shoots .22 Short and .22 Long Rim Fire Cartridges and Breech Caps. Its low price puts it within reach of all.

STAFFORDSHIRE vs. ALL INDIA.—Played at Stoke, Staffordshire winning by five wickets. The All-Indian team had the unenviable experience of having to bat against Barnes, the English bowler, in his best form and on a wicket that just suited him. How well the visitors fared may be judged from the fact that during the day Barnes took fourteen wickets for

ATHLETICS.

INTER-EMPIRE SPORTS.—Canada, with the low total of eight points (the smallest score winning) secured the inter-Empire championship honours and Lord Lonsdale's trophy at the Crystal Palace track on Saturday, beating the United Kingdom by a single point, while Australasia, with thirteen points, came third.

The best performance was that of the English and Irish champion, J. M. Hill, of the Queen's Park Harriers. Representing the United Kingdom, he ran grandly in the ¼ mile race, beating the Australasian champion, G. A. Wheatley, by nearly 3 yards in probably the fastest time Hill has yet shown for the distance—1min. 58⅖secs.

F. J. Halbhaus, of Canada, won the 100 yards by a foot from the Cambridge University "blue," D. Macmillan, in 10⅖secs, with R. Opie, of New Zealand, third, and followed up that performance by winning the 220 yards race by a full 2 yards from Opie in 23secs. Results:—

100 YARDS.—F. J. Halbhaus (Canada) 1, D. Macmillan (United Kingdom) 2, R. Opie (New Zealand) 3. Won by a foot. Time—10⅖secs.

120 YARDS HURDLES.—K. Powell (United Kingdom) 1, F. L. Lukeman (Canada) 2, F. P. Brown (Australasia) 3. Won by half a yard. Time—16secs.

220 YARDS.—F. J. Halbhaus (Canada) 1, R. Opie (New Zealand) 2, E. W. Haley (United Kingdom) 3. Won by 2½ yards. Time—23secs.

HALF-MILE.—J. M. Hill (United Kingdom) 1, G. A. Wheatley (Australasia) 2, M. Brock (Canada) 3. Won by nearly three yards. Time—1min. 58⅖secs.

ONE MILE.—J. L. Tait (Canada) 1, E. Owen (United Kingdom) 2, G. Hoskins (New Zealand) 3. Won by a yard. Time.—4mins. 46⅖secs.

Final scores and placings: Canada 8 points, 1; United Kingdom, 9 points, 2; Australasia, 13 points, 3.

Events not included in the inter-Empire championship resulted thus:—

300 YARDS LEVEL RACE.—J. A. Wells (Herne Hill Harriers) 1, W. T. Wetenhall (Cambridge University A.C.) 2, S. J. B. Hosking (Herne Hill H.) 3. Won by two yards. Time—33⅖secs.

THREE-QUARTERS OF A MILE LEVEL RACE—B. F. C. Yorke (London Athletic Club) 1, A. M. Knox (Canadian Empire team) 2, A. Hare (Herne Hill H.) 3. Won by eight yards. Time—3mins. 21⅖secs.

TWO MILES INTER-TEAM RACE.—Herne Hill Harriers, 7 points, 1, South London Harriers, 19 points, 2, Essex Beagles, 20 points, 3. E. Barry (Herne Hill H.) was first man home. Time—10mins. 3⅖secs.

SCOTTISH CHAMPIONSHIPS.—Notwithstanding wet weather, some splendid performances were accomplished at the annual Scottish championship meeting at Glasgow on Saturday. Athletes well known in the south of England were successful. B. Quinn (holder) was unexpectedly beaten by D. Trotter, of the Ashcombe A.C., in the three miles walk—time—22mins. 41⅖secs. Other winners were:—

100 Yards.—W. A. Stewart (London Hospital A.C.) Time—10⅖secs.

220 Yards.—R. C. Duncan (West of Scotland H.) Time—23⅖secs.

Quarter-mile.—R. A. Lindsay (Blackheath H.) Time—53⅖secs.

Half-mile.—J. T. Sonter (Aberdeen University) Time—2mins. 0⅖sec.

One mile.—D. F. McNicol (Polytechic H.) Time—4mins. 26⅖secs.

Four miles—G. L. C. Walbach (Bolton United Harriers.) Time—20mins. 41⅖secs.

High Jump—D. Campbell (Edinburgh University). 5ft. 6ins.

Long Jump.—G. Stephen (St. Andrew's University). 19ft. 9in.

Putting the weight—T. R. Nicholson (West of Scotland H.) 41ft. 3ins.

Throwing the Hammer.—T. R. Nicholson (West of Scotland H.) 168ft. 1in.

GOLF.

PROFESSIONALS' v. AMATEURS.—Professional golf achieved an overwhelming victory in the foursomes match arranged by the Royal St. George's Golf Club to commemorate the Coronation in the annals of the royal and ancient game. The result, indeed, was a conquest, almost absolute and complete, for the professionals won by eight matches to one.

Messrs. Munn and Beveridge were the only amateur couple to win. They were one down to Moran and Jones at the end of the morning round, but playing resolute golf in the afternoon squared the match at the home hole. Two extra holes were played and Mr. Beveridge holed a seven yards putt at the thirty-eight to win the match. The final results were:—

THE OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP.—In the concluding stages at Sandwich yesterday Harry Vardon and the French professional, Arnaud Massy, tied with scores of 303 strokes each.

At the end of the third round, played in the morning, Harry Vardon, one of the great "Triumvirate," who is attached to the South Herts Club, held a lead of three strokes from J. H. Taylor and Alexander Herd, with James Braid, last year's champion, another stroke away, fourth, level three other players, viz., George Duncan, Edward Ray, and Arnaud Massy.

It was thought this advantage would be sufficient to enable Vardon to bring his number of wins level with James Braid's record of five successes. But it was not to be, for what should have been the last round resulted in Vardon and Arnaud Massy bringing their scores to precisely the same totals, viz., 303 for the four rounds.

It is now fifteen years since a similar circumstance prevailed in the open championship, and on that occasion, at Muirfield in 1896, Vardon was also at the top of affairs, bracketed with J. H. Taylor. On playing off Vardon, who was then the professional to the Ganton Club, gained his first championship. Vardon has yet a chance to equal Braid's performance, however, as the replay will take place to-day.

Taylor's chances of success were far from remote when he started on his afternoon round, but the bunkers, found frequently on the homeward journey, had the disastrous effect of putting him out of the running for premier honours.

Duncan, as at St. Andrews last year, collapsed at the finish after leading the field overnight, erratic play early in the morning causing him to take 83 for the first round.

A strong westerly wind, which increased as the day grew, made the conditions more difficult than they had been in any of the preceding stages, and it not only effected Duncan's long game, but also Taylor's.

Of the first eight players, it is worthy of note that no fewer than seven have already attained the highest honour which a golfer can secure.

The details of Vardon's and Massy's cards in yesterday's play were:—

THE BANGALORE TOURNAMENT.

34TH POONA HORSE v. CAMERON HIGHLANDERS.—These teams met in the first round on the 11th instant, the Cavalry having an easy victory by 9 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—The 34th rushed down at the start and Hamir Singh scored. They continued to press and Hildebrand hit a second goal soon after. A run by the Highlanders was stopped and the 34th coming away Grimshaw added to the score.

Second Chukker.—The 34th kept up the attack and scored twice, Grimshaw and Hamir Singh being responsible.

Third Chukker.—The Highlanders pulled themselves together and showed great improvement in this period. Their efforts were, however, unavailing and towards the close the 34th ran down and Grimshaw hit their sixth goal.

Fourth Chukker.—This was evenly contested but there was no score. A penalty against the Poona Horse for offside was not turned to account.

Fifth Chukker—The 34th pressed vigorously. Grimshaw hit a goal, Hildebrand scored another and before the close of the chukker Grimshaw had put through again.

Sixth Chukker.—The Poona team continued on the aggressive throughout but there was no more scoring. 34th, 2 goals; Highlanders, nil. Teams :—

Second Round.

34TH POONA HORSE vs. SAPPERS AND MINERS.—Played on the 12th instant the Sappers being beaten by 10 goals to two.

First Chukker.—The 34th attacked and after one unsuccessful shot Grimshaw hit a goal. The Sappers tried hard to equalise but could not break their opponent's defence.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play; the Sappers were nearly through Lucas clearing brilliantly. The 34th attacked but were penalised for offside and the ball taken to the other end where Bassett put the teams on terms.

Third Chukker.—Fast play, both sides being seen to advantage. Hildebrand at length got away and scored. Up and down play with lots of hard galloping followed. Grimshaw put in a fine individual run and was stopped, but Lucas, who was backing him up, sent the ball through.

Fourth Chukker.—The 34th had all the play in this period. They pressed throughout and Grimshaw scored three goals, several other attempts being unsuccessful.

Fifth Chukker.—The 34th got away and Grimshaw scored, Hildebrand following this up with a second point. The Sappers nothing daunted fought hard and Agnew scored their second goal in a scrimmage.

Sixth Chukker.—The Sappers pressed but the 34th cleared and coming away Grimshaw put the ball through. Soon after he added another goal and the 34th ran out winners by 10 goals to 2 Teams :—

Umpires :—Captain Henderson and Mr. Black.

11TH HUSSARS vs. 20TH DECCAN HORSE.—This match was also played on the 12th instant and resulted after a great game in a win for the Deccan Horse by 5 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The Deccan Horse took the ball down and Mir Mahomed opened their account from a scrimmage. They continued the attack and Konsul Singh scored a goal after one unsuccessful effort.

Second Chukker.—Fast play in which the Deccan Horse were most prominent but the score remained unchanged.

Third Chukker.—A free hit to the Hussars for a foul against Konsul Singh, Nicholson taking the ball down for Astley to score. The Hussars kept up the attack and Nicholson equalised shortly after.

Fourth Chukker.—Ross scored with a tremendous long shot and continuing the pressure the Deccans obtained another goal through Worgan. The Hussars were kept on the defensive till the end of the period but there was no further scoring.

Fifth Chukker.—The Deccans attacked vigorously but Astley frustrated all their efforts and towards the end of the chukker the Hussars took up the attack but failed to improve on several chances of scoring.

Sixth Chukker.—Up and down play. The Deccans attacked in a melee and Ross put the ball through. In the closing stages of the game the ball moved all over the ground but neither team added to its score and the game ended in a win for the 20th Deccan Horse as stated. Teams :—

20th Deccan Horse.		14th Hussars.
Jemdr. Konsul Singh	1	Mr. J. A. T. Miller	1
Sowar Sidi Nur Mahomed	2	Capt. S. W. R. Mewburn	2
Capt. R. B. Worgan	3	Mr. E. Nicholson	3

Umpires :—Colonel Johnson and Captain Grimshaw.

Final.

20TH DECCAN HORSE vs. 34TH POONA HORSE.—The final was played on the 14th instant in the presence of a large gathering. A high wind rather interfered with play, but both teams put up a good display victory eventually resting with the 20th Deccan Horse by 5 goals to 3. H. H. the Maharajah gave away the Cup to the winners after the game.

First Chukker.—The Deccans got away at the start and Konsul Singh hit a goal. Up and down play followed, the game being twice stopped owing to falls. Then Poona got going and Grimshaw equalised.

Second Chukker.—Fast up and down play till the Poona Horse were penalised for crossing, Ross scoring from the free hit. A run by Sidi Nur enabled Ross to add another goal soon after and through the Poona Horse made desperate efforts they could not get through.

Third Chukker.—Fast up and down play. The Poona team were penalised for a dangerous foul. Ross hit wide and the Deccans had to hit out from their own goal. They brought the ball back to Poona territory and Sidi Nur hit the fourth goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The Deccans ran down but were stopped and Grimshaw transferring play hit a goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The 34th attacked and after Hamir Singh and Grimshaw had both missed Hildebrand scored. The 20th then took up the attack and Worgan hit a goal.

Sixth Chukker.—Fast play all over the ground but neither team gained any further advantage, the final score being :—20th Deccan Horse, 5 goals; 34th Poona Horse, 3 goals. Teams :—

20th Deccan Horse.		34th Poona Horse.
Jmdr. Konsul Singh	1	Rdr. R. Hamir Singh	1

SECUNDERABAD NOVICES' TOURNAMENT.

THE tournament opened at Secunderabad on the 11th instant, when three games were down for decision but "B." team of the 7th Dragoon Guards scratched to the Sherwood Foresters and left only two matches for decision. In the first of these, the 2nd King's Shropshire Light Infantry met the 33rd Cavalry and were beaten by 8 goals to nil. The 33rd had the upper hand throughout: they scored two goals in the first period, one in the second, three in the third and two in the last. The teams were :—

33rd Cavalry.		2nd K. S. L. I.
Lieut. J. F. Meiklejohn	1	Lieut. H. S. Collins	1
Lieut. W. Kenworthy	2	Lieut. H. Linton	2
Capt. W. A. T. Ferris	3	Capt. E. P. Dorrien Smith	3
Lieut. C. A. Grantham (back)		Capt. P. L. Hanbury (back)

Umpires :—Lieutenant Kader Beg and Captain White.

THE other match was between the 29th Lancers and the Royal Artillery. The Gunners were no match for the 29th who scored three goals in the first period, two in the third and two in the last and ran out victorious by 7 goals to nil. Teams :—

29th Lancers.		Royal Artillery.
Lieut. R. D. Wright	1	Lieut. A. F. Chance	1
Capt. H. Meynell	2	Capt. E. F. Shewell	2
Capt. V. K. Birch	3	Capt. E. R. Burne	3
Capt. C. V. Martin (back)		Lt. Losh Wilson (back)

Umpires :—Captain Goldie and Lieutenant Wood.

THE semi-finals were played on the 13th instant. The first brought together the 33rd Cavalry and the 29th Lancers. The play during the first half was very level; the 29th drew first blood but the 33rd equalised before the interval. Play was fast and exciting during the third chukker, but neither team could score. In the last period, however, the 33rd were awarded a free hit from which they hit a goal and the 29th being unable to score again were beaten 2—1. Teams as before.

Umpires :—Captain Lane and Lieutenant Kader Beg.

THE Sherwood Foresters then played the 7th Dragoon Guards "A" team. It was a poor game and of little interest. Play was sticky and erratic, the result being a win for the Sherwoods by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

Sherwood Foresters.		7th Dragoon Guards.
Lieut. A. J. Goodwin	1	Major. N. D. H. Campbell	1
Lieut. W. H. S. Becke	2	Lieut. R. G. P. Wood	2
Lieut. W. H. S. Brownrigg	3	Lieut. Finlay	3
Lieut. R. H. Stranger (back)		Capt. W. F. Chappell (back)

THE final was played on 15th instant when the 33rd Cavalry beat the Sherwood Foresters by 3 goals to nil. The Cavalry had the best of game all through but the Foresters defended pluckily and prevented defeat by a larger margin, Ferris, Grantham and Becke were most prominent for their respective sides. Teams as before.

Football.

I. F. A. CHALLENGE SHIELD TOURNAMENT.

THE match of the week, nay of the season—the re-play between the Royal Scots, the Durand winners, and the East Yorks on Monday was marred owing to an error by Sergeant Hounsell, the referee, who on the first occasion gave every satisfaction. The refereeing in Calcutta both at Hockey and Football has been of a most unsatisfactory character this season, and it is high time that the referee question received serious attention. I must admit that Hounsell is quite a good referee, but the best of us are apt to err, and I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that Hounsell did so on Monday, when he gave a penalty kick against the Royal Scots for what appeared to be purely an accident.

The two games between the Simla champions and the East Yorks, who are a much improved team to what they were last year, produced the finest exhibition of football that has been witnessed in Calcutta since the Minto tournament, the play of the Scots forwards, in particular, being better than anything yet exhibited in Calcutta. But the East Yorks are the speedier lot, and when their centre forward gets an opening he seldom fails to make the best of the opportunity. In both the games the Scots not only displayed the prettier football, but also had the larger share of attacking. Saturday's game, which resulted in a goalless draw, was played in heavy rain and a treacherous ground, but on Monday, except that the evening was a sultry one the conditions were excellent. The Yorks opened the scoring midways through the initial half, Haywood netting with a shot that gave Fletcher no chance, but it was not long after that the Scots equalised—Hastie beating Bressey with a shot as good as the one scored by the opposite side. This was the extent of the scoring up to the interval and so far the Englishmen had slightly the better of the exchanges.

On resuming the Scots soon had all the game, and during this period the huge number of spectators were treated to brilliant football by the Scotch forwards. Every man kept his place, and it was only astonishing that a big score did not result. The Scots forced no fewer than eight corners, but only one more goal was recorded, Hastie again being successful. With eight minutes to go, the game looked any odds on the Simla champions winning, but at this stage the game underwent one of those dramatic changes which sometimes happen at "soccer." Jackson, the Yorks' centre half, set his forwards going, and Hayward sprinting away in the centre was challenged by Smith, the latter fell on the ground and the ball struck his hand, the leather eventually going over the goal line. The referee at this stage seemed to have lost his head for he first ordered a "corner" after consulting McIntosh, but on enquiring of Sergeant Ingram Hounsell was of two minds, and after a few seconds had elapsed to the astonishment of all changed his decision and instead of a corner awarded the Yorks a penalty kick. Jackson scored and the Yorks were indeed lucky in drawing level. But further luck smiled on the Englishmen for almost immediately after Haywood netted the third goal and the Scots lost by 3—2.

The other games compared unfavourably with the one reported, and there is little to be said. Dalhousie put up a poor show against Calcutta, but the latter's play was not very convincing. Bisseker was missed in the attack, but Calcutta were all two goals the better team. The scoring was done during the initial half, and as there was no occasion to extend themselves Calcutta took matters somewhat easily during the second half. The conditions were not favourable for good football, but there were more mis-kicks than one cared to see. Mohun Bagan deserve credit for beating the Rangers—a result that was a bit unexpected, but like Dalhousie the Rangers too have to thank their selection committee. The Rifle Brigade beat the Customs and the Bristol United, but if the Rifles cannot show better form it would not be anything surprising if Mohun Bagan beat the Fort regiment on a dry ground. The R.G.A. after a hard game beat Sova Bazar, but in the second round the Gunners had a cake-walk when they beat Chinsurah by 4—0.

The third round in the Shield competition proved fatal to the hope that the Lebong team would be represented in the final. From the drawings it was seen that while all the strongest combinations were on one side—I mean the two military up-country teams, Calcutta and the S.G.A.—the weaker lot were on the other side, and of these most people fancied the 3rd Middlesex. But after their display against the Measurers, which was very moderate, those able to judge thought the Dum-Dum Middlesex the superior combination. Daw, who recently came down from Dinapore, is a great improvement to the attacking line and it was a wise selection in dropping Bateman from the team and playing Stains instead. The two Middlesex met on the Dalhousie ground last Tuesday when the Dum-Dum men won but they were by no means three goals the better team. Hounsell refereed and he gave a penalty kick against the winners, another doubtful decision. Bevan scored the first two goals and the third was the penalty kick referred to from which Daw scored. The Lebong team lost some fine openings owing to wild shooting.

At an I.F.A. Council Meeting the game between the Scots and the Yorks was ordered to be replayed, as a result of the protest from the Royal Scots. A draw certainly the match was, and we all hope to see another brilliant treggle for supremacy.

THE BOMBAY HARWOOD LEAGUE.

The match between the Bombay F.C. and the Telegraphs was played in wretched weather on the 10th instant. The teams were very evenly matched, victory eventually resting with the Bombay F.C. by the only goal of the game, scored by Strelley in the second half. On Tuesday the Y.M.C.A. met the Royal Warwicks. The inclusion of several new players had led people to expect great things of the Young Men but they never troubled the Warwicks, who were on top all through and won by 7 goals to nil. The Bombay F. C. appeared again on Wednesday, their opponents being the B. V. Artillery. It was not a particularly interesting game, but to the general surprise the Volunteers kept their goal intact and the match ended in a pointless draw. On Saturday the Bombay Gymkhana met the Bombay F. C. and a draw, 2 all, was the result.

The Kennel.

THE PEKINESE SPANIEL AS A PET.

There is no doubt that among all miniature dogs the Pekinese stands easily first. In spite of their small size, 6 to 8lbs., they are quite hardy little creatures, while their intelligence is of a very high order, making them charming companions.

If we compare the Pekinese with other toy Spaniels, such as the Japanese, King Charles and Blenheim breeds, the Chinese dog is very greatly superior in dignity and intelligence of face. The nose is not so abnormally flattened as in these other Spaniels while the large eyes are particularly luminous and intelligent. Pekinese have great powers of scent and excellent sight. The large size of their eyes, however, makes these organs somewhat sensitive to injury, and young puppies in their quarelsome frolics occasionally damage each other's eyes. In other respects the little dogs are not in the least delicate; they will go out in the coldest weather and delight to roll in the snow. They are active too, and as a rule readily take to the water.

There are classes now for dogs of over 10lbs. in weight, but these large Pekinese are certainly not true to the original breed and the weight should not exceed 7 or 8lbs. Several of the most successful specimens have been a good deal smaller than this. Though so small they are big boned and solid for their size. The true shape is that of a cobbily built lion in miniature: in fact, they are known as "Lion dogs" in China, from their resemblance in shape of body and carriage of the head and neck to the King of Beasts.

We have lately been presented with a charming puppy, "Neng.—A," who has at once established herself as the pet of the household. Like all Pekinese, she loves the fire, and we have had to provide our fireplaces with high wire guards to prevent her setting herself on fire. She gets right into the fender and curls herself up there, close to the bars! A friend who breeds Pekinese and who presented us with "Neng.—A." was lately horrified by seeing one of his puppies get up unconcernedly out of the fender and walk across the room with its coat in a blaze. Luckily the pup was not in the least hurt, and even its coat was so little the worse, that it took a second prize at a show shortly afterwards.

Pekinese may be almost any colour, but perhaps light red merging into fawn, with dark "dragon" markings on the back, is the most pleasing variation. This is in fact very much the coloration of the skin of the sable, the fur of which is such a favourite with the fair sex for stoles and muffs.

There are some good specimens of well-known Pekinese set up in the Natural History Museum, South Kensington. Here we see a Chingilla Pekinese, "Sutherland Kia-Mi," the coat of which is a BLUMY fawn streaked with black.

"Palace Yo-Tei" is light red and fawn.

"Litzu" is an entirely black Pekinese save for her white shirt-front.

"Ah-Cam," the champion in 1904, is red-brown and fawn.

All the above dogs, be it noted, are small: the big Pekinese of 10lbs. and over are a later development and a very undesirable one.

Like all highly bred races, the Pekinese may be very likely, all rather too closely related, and the introduction of fresh blood from China would no doubt be advantageous. A noticeable virtue is their fearlessness. The other day "Neng.—A" was startled by a heavy gate banging to, close by, with a noise like a gun. She jumped into the air and ran a few yards towards the house; then she came back, and went to see what it was that had made this startling noise. This seemed to me evidence of very high courage.

"FLEUR-DE-LYS."

The Story Teller.

THE SUBSTITUTE.

JAMES STACK was in decidedly low water. His dismal London lodgings were a poor exchange for the free open life out West. As he sucked savagely at his pipe, and looked round the sordid room, he made up his mind to leave London at once, event if he had to ship as stoker on a tramp steamer.

A knock at the door interrupted Mr. Stack's unpleasing reflections, and the slatternly little maid of all work ushered in a visitor, with the unceremonious remark, "Gent to see yer, Mister."

Stack jumped up full of surprise: he had not had the slightest expectation that any of his friends would find him out in his present surrounding. His face, which had momentarily brightened, fell again when he saw that his visitor was quite unknown to him.

"You don't know me Mr. Stack, and will no doubt be astonished at the proposition I am going to put before you. As however it is the offer of remunerative employment, though of a peculiar kind, you will perhaps be ready to at all events listen to me."

"Oh, if it's employment, I rather guess I am ready to listen; for I'm pretty well on my beam ends just now," answered Stack frankly.

"Well," went on the other, "I'll take off my coat and sit down, as my story is not a short one." Stack ran a second dilapidated armchair towards the meagre fire, and brought out a bottle of whisky and a couple of glasses. "Glad still to have some left to offer you," he said laconically. The stranger settled into his chair and began.

"I am Wyatt, confidential secretary to Sir Thomas Merritt. As you will no doubt have noticed in the papers, Sir Thomas is the unfortunate subject of a vendetta. As Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, he has incurred the hatred of certain Hindus. There is no doubt that there exists a small society who are determined to take his life. Three separate attempts have been already made to murder Sir Thomas, and have only been defeated by the vigilance of myself and two private detectives, who help me to watch over his safety. Now yesterday I happened to notice you particularly, as you were looking into the window of a gunshop in the Strand. The thing which struck me at once was your remarkable likeness to my chief. Save for the difference in age, you might be twin brothers. Now Sir Thomas came home from India in by no means good health. The climate has in fact temporarily broken his nerve. He was in need of several months' absolute rest. But how can a man with shattered nerves possibly rest, when he is liable to have bombs thrown at him, or to be shot at, any moment? Your striking likeness to Sir Thomas has given me the idea, that if we make it worth your while, you might for a time consent to represent him, and so give him a chance of going away quietly to recruit, so that he may go back to India fit to take up his great work again. I do not know whether the undoubted danger of acting as Sir Thomas' counterpart will deter you from accepting the offer. You would have all expenses paid, and receive £50 a month, for as long a time as you carry out the duty. I need hardly say we shall take just as great precautions to protect your life, as though you were really Sir Thomas himself."

Jim Stack bent over towards Wyatt with a grin on his face. "I'll shake hands on the offer with the greatest pleasure in life. As for shooting, I'm used to that sort of thing. Saw a lot of it out West: it don't disturb me a red cent, provided I'm allowed to shoot back."

"Oh of course," answered Wyatt. "If you can manage to shoot one or two of the society, it might put the rest off, and we should be greatly obliged to you.

A carefully worded non-committal agreement was made out, and arrangements gone into for clothing Jim Stack to suit the part, and also for whitening his hair, and adding ageing lines to his face.

A few days later the exchange of personality was duly effected, and Stack found himself the apparent owner of a pretty little country house in the West Country, right on the very edge of Dartmoor. Sir Thomas Merrit was a bachelor, so there were no members of the family to take into confidence. Wyatt had learnt how to put on those scarcely perceptible lines, which turned Stack from a robust young man of thirty-three into the likeness of an India-worn official, well on the wrong side of fifty. Jim's hard life in the wild West had done much to help the deception, and his lean worn face, even without the aid of art, made him look considerably older than his years. One of the Substitute's greatest pleasures had been the free hand given him to purchase whatever pistols he most fancied, for the purpose of protecting himself. He had eventually, after much trial, decided on Colt Automatics, and had bought three, two of .45 calibre and one of .38. When Wyatt asked him why he chose such large bores, he said, "He calculated pop-guns were no use to fix up black fanatics, and he just wanted a large mouthed gun, which would knock 'em silly wherever you hit 'em."

A good deal of Jim's time was devoted to pistol practice, and a month later, when nothing whatever had happened, he confided to the secretary that he really wished "Some of these blamed niggers would come along quick, for although he always had been pretty smart even with the old kind of revolver, he was just now the daisiest shot he had ever known with this new gun."

By impressing on everyone that Sir Thomas Merritt had been ordered complete rest and quiet, Wyatt was able to keep his substitute secluded, so that there was never at any time the faintest fear of detection.

The numerous letters to which Sir Thomas had to affix his signature were all sent out by his secretary from the Dartmoor house, and no one dreamed that the real Sir Thomas was far away in Scotland, and had grown a beard, which made him almost unrecognisable.

Two months having passed away without incident, Sir Thomas, who was feeling very much stronger for his stay in Scotland, decided to return to Devonshire. As the two servants in the house were old and confidential people who had been a long time in the family, Wyatt had told them all about the arrangement for safeguarding their master, by having Stack as a substitute.

There was therefore no reason why Sir Thomas and his doppelganger should not both stay in the Devonshire house together. The servants could be relied upon to say nothing, and it was a simple matter for the real man to be given out as a cousin, who had come to stay. Sir Thomas himself scouted the necessity for any further precautions, but Wyatt at length persuaded him to keep up the deception for a month or two longer, in order that the rest cure might be thoroughly completed.

Within ten days of Sir Thomas' return, the long calm was at last broken. Jim Stack was walking along a moorland road, when he saw approaching him a slim girl dressed in brown. On getting nearer his attention was attracted by the neatness of her attire and the grace of her figure. When about thirty yards away, the girl suddenly drew her hand out of her muff, with something in it, and quickened her pace almost to a run. On getting within fifteen yards, she raised her hand, when Stack with that instant decision, which was so characteristic of the man, sprang to one side, and behind a large rock, which chanced to stand there beside the unfenced road. The missile left the woman's hand at the same moment, there was a violent detonation as it struck the ground, and a shower of stones and earth flew in all directions from the spot where it had fallen.

Stack rushed out and seized the girl, who seemed to be in a semi-dazed condition from the shock of the explosion, and had a great tear in her sleeve from which blood was dripping, where a stone had struck her.

It was a strange little face, with clear olive complexion, and large black eyes. The girl did not struggle, but leant against Stack as though about to faint. The man looked down on his captive with an amused and somewhat contemptuous expression on his bold face. "So these skunks sent a kid like you to throw their bombs for them. How does a pretty girl like you come to be mixed up with a lot of bloody anarchists?"

"You are a cruel English oppressor," she sobbed, "and it is the duty of patriotic Indians to kill white tyrants."

"Oh stow all that bosh, little girl. This is what you're meant for: not yanking bombs about," and he picked the little maiden up in his arms and kissed her heartily several times.

"Now let's attend to the arm." and with tender skill he drew back the torn sleeve, and bound up the gash in the pretty brown arm, with strips torn from his handkerchief.

"Now clear out, kiddie, and tell those blighted friends of yours to send a grown man next time they want a bomb thrown." And Jim Stack strode away homewards, whistling.

He kept his own council about the little bomb thrower, and never breathed a hint of what had happened to either Wyatt or Sir Thomas.

However the matter was not to end here, and about a week later, while taking his usual moorland walk, Jim noticed a dark-faced man peeping at him from among some rocks. He affected not to notice, while keeping on the alert and ready for instant action; but the man did not follow him, so he came to the conclusion that the enemy were awaiting a better opportunity.

Stack had got thoroughly tired of his long inaction, and heartily longed for something to happen. So he left the beaten track, and wandered daily for miles across the open moor, hoping to induce the watchers to attempt something definite.

At the same time he omitted no precaution, and took to carrying two Colt pistols, one in each of the outside pockets of his rough tweed coat.

Four days after he had seen the dark-faced man, he was striding across the moor as usual, when five men suddenly appeared from behind a pile of rocks, and advanced rapidly towards him in a body.

Then Stack at once did a smart thing. He took to his heels and bolted straight away across the moor towards some scattered rocks.

The five men all gave chase, and, as Jim expected, began to tail out. He reached the rocks some distance ahead of his pursuers, and slipping behind one, waited for his attackers, with pistols ready.

As soon as the sound of padding feet told him they were close to, he suddenly popped out of cover, and shot two men who were leading together as quickly as he could pull the trigger.

The three others were coming on, one behind the other, and the foremost opened fire at Jim, though the range was long. But what chance had he against the deadly aim and iron nerve of a man like Stack?

After three more shots, fired with lightning rapidity from the big automatic, this third man was laid out, and Jim turned his attention on the two survivors, who were coming up with obviously lagging steps.

These two fired some half-hearted shots at Stack, one of which wounded him in the left shoulder. Then they turned and fled.

But this cowardly attack, and the smart of a painful flesh wound, had roused Stack to cold fury, and he started to run his two last assailants down, savagely determined that they should not escape.

He had the other .45 Colt with full magazine, and his third shot from it tumbled No. 4 into the heather. The last man gave a howl of terror, and turning, dropped on his knees with clasped hands. Stack, pitiless and ferocious, sent a bullet through his heart.

With the fall of the last of his assailants, Jim's savage fury gave way to his usual good-humoured cynicism.

"By God," he murmured to himself "its' been a great night, and I guess I've about wiped the whole society out."

He walked back and looked at the men, turning them over in order to see their faces. The heavy bullets from the .45 had done deadly work: three of the men were already dead. A fourth was coughing out frothy blood from a shot through the lungs; while the fifth was writhing in agony with a bullet through the stomach.

All five were obviously Hindus, though dressed like Englishmen.

Stack walked back to the house and informed Sir Thomas and Wyatt of what had happened. Both were greatly disturbed. It was clear that Sir Thomas would have to instantly shave off his beard, and return to his proper part. This he promptly set to work to do, while Wyatt waited for the police, and sent a note to the doctor, who lived three miles off. It was decided that Stack better stay on, to represent the cousin. It would be easy to explain that he had shaved of his beard if any questions were asked.

Everything went off smoothly. The doctor arrived in time to make the last hours of the two dying men somewhat easier, and the one shot in the stomach had lived long enough to make a full confession. Sir Thomas had been well coached in his part by Stack, but he had some bad moments nevertheless. One was when the coroner, who was a low Churchman, and favoured missions to the heathen, turned upon him, and said in his severest manner, "You do not seem to have erred on the side of mercy, Sir Thomas. You hunted down these poor creatures like a beast of prey." But Sir Thomas turned on the coroner fiercely. "What right have you to judge me? You whose greatest danger has probably been, an inability to get quickly enough out of the way of a motor." The coroner was fat, so this retort turned the tables. But Sir Thomas was to endure a far worse ordeal. The police had managed to find the little Hindu girl, who had made the first attempt. When confronted with Sir Thomas, she naively told the whole story. "I met the English Lord on the moor, and I threw a bomb at him." "What did Sir Thomas do" she was then asked. "He picked me up in his arms and kissed me many times."

There was an unextinguishable roar of laughter through the court.

She went on to explain with grateful minuteness how Sir Thomas had bound up her arm for her, and told her to go home.

All that etiquity into the deaths of the five conspirators were an interminable nightmare to poor Sir Thomas. At last a verdict of justifiable homicide, in conjunction with flattering comments on his bravery, was given out, and the unfortunate gentleman was allowed to escape.

And now Sir Thomas has gone back to India with a reputation he would give much to be without. Among the natives he is a very Rustam for reckless bravery and skill in the use of weapons. His Rajah friends try their best to give him dangerous encounters with wild beasts.

Poor Sir Thomas loathes shooting, and has no desire to gaze into the yellow eyes of tigers and panthers at the closest quarters.

He is fond, as a relaxation from his work, to chat with handsome and smartly dressed ladies on innocent subjects. But his reputation for innocence is gone for ever, after the publication of that little Hindu girl's confession. He is a very Don Juan and a Swashbuckler for the rest of his life.

As no definite charge was made against the Hindu girl, and she was a mere child in years, they discharged her.

Jim, who through Sir Thomas' influence, was given a billet in New Zealand, took charge of the little bomb thrower and carried her away as his wife.

"JADU."

"I THOUGHT your wife's name was Elizabeth!"
"So it is."
"Then why do you call her Peggy?"
"Short for Pegasa."
"What has that to do with it?"
"Why, Pegasa is feminine for Pegasus!"
"Well."
"Well, Pegasus is an immortal steed."
"What of that?"
"Sh! Not so loud she's in the next room. You see an immortal steed is an eternal nag!"

THE OPEN GOLD CHAMPIONSHIPS.

After dead-heating with Arnaud Massey (France) for the Open Gold Championship Cup at Sandwich that extremely popular exponent of the Royal and Ancient Game Harry Vardon came out of the replay with success, and in doing so scored his fifth win in that important tournament, thus equalizing the performance of James Braid, the famous Walton Heath professional.

Vardon's success may be regarded as the most popular that could have come about with one exception. It was obvious that very many people like to see an amateur successful when the fight is strong and keen between the amateur and the professional sections in any sport, and the dour fight made by Mr. Harold Hilton at Sandwich commanded a large measure of sympathy. He was only beaten one stroke from the dead-heaters, and has probably been wondering since where he could have saved the strokes which proved priceless. However, regrets are particularly vain in a golf championship, most of all in one governed by medal rules.

One says it with no general disrespect to the general body of amateur golfers, but Mr. Hilton's four cards manifested extraordinary consistency. He never had a really great round, 74 being his lowest, but he only reached 78 once, and such figures show that he was fighting a great battle all the way. Of course, no one has yet won the Open and the Amateur in the same year, and thus Mr. Hilton was making a magnificent effort to break fresh ground, but he just failed, though there was substantial glory in his failure. Finishing on the same mark as the Royal Liverpool golfer stood Sandy Herd, who once more made a splendid bid. Mr. Hilton has won the honour twice, but Herd's only success came at Hoylake in 1902, and the old Huddersfield professional since that date has been busy striving very hard for a renewal of the title. In 1903 he was fifth at Prestwick, in 1904 at Sandwich he finished ninth, in the next three years he was well down the list but found his form again in 1908 at Prestwick, where he finished fourth, was ninth at Deal in the following year, and last year at St. Andrews stood second to Braid, beat four strokes from the winner, and on Thursday found himself only one stroke outside of a division. Very steady golf is represented by such performances as these.

Running through the results, Ray's two last rounds of 79 and 78 wrecked what had seemed a fine chance. Braid began and finished with 78, and even he could not make up that leeway. Taylor, like Ray, had 78 and 79 for a finish after being 148 to the halfway mark. Sherlock had two cards which he will care not to think about, for 80 and 84 do not represent his true form, and Mr. Blackwell, after startling everybody by a first round of 71, could do nothing better than 80 afterwards.

For some time past Harry Vardon's golf has been so good as to cause widespread hopes that he might again lead his field at the finish, and the fact that he won, and so tied with Braid as having secured this honour five times has unquestionably created a great gratification. Braid's strength of purpose, his doggedness and concentration, have made him a figure to himself at golf; Taylor has a personality which it is impossible to overlook, and the imperturbility of Herd is one of those things in golf which has to be seen to be believed. But Vardon, possessed of a star which has no equal, taking a game right through, easy in swing, perfect in pose, and beautifully supple in execution of his strokes, commands the universal eye when he is on the links.

The success of such a man was bound to be popular. It is quite true that his putting always gave those who were watching moments of acute anxiety, and the fact that he finished with nothing better than an eighty placed him in great jeopardy, for several strong rivals had still to come in, but Vardon was saved by his earlier steadiness and "championship" was written all over his first rounds of 74, 74 and 75. Quite contrary to most of his rivals, Massy finished more strongly than he had begun, for he took 153 for the first half, and did 74 and 76 afterwards, but the Frenchman was well beaten in the play off, and recognised that he had no possible chance when he picked up. When all is said and done and fitting congratulations have been offered to the winner and those who finished close up, one is driven back on a wonder whether this will be regarded as one of the great championships.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Calcutta Monsoon Racing season 1911 opened on Saturday last under extremely adverse weather conditions, the long break in the rains having made Calcutta almost unbearably hot, and rendered the going under foot very hard and consequently damaging to horses' feet and legs, to say nothing of damage to the men who ride and who are unlucky enough to meet Mother Earth unexpectedly! Conditions such as those which prevailed on Saturday are altogether abnormal and in the course of a very long experience of autumn racing in Calcutta we cannot call to mind a single year in which clouds of dust have been visible as the horses galloped over hurdles and on the flat. The long break in the rains and the breathless muggy atmosphere made racing the reverse of pleasant and also very seriously handicapped the unfortunate horses. Two or three things that were "expected" succumbed badly and we do not hesitate to attribute their non-success to the atmospheric disadvantages. It was one of those close, sulphurous afternoons that are peculiar to September and October in Calcutta, but which are rarely met with in July and with a thunderstorm in the making there was an unwholesome depression upon everything. Everything possible was done to minimise the disadvantages and the sand track had been copiously watered, but against so fierce a sun the efforts of mere man were of very little avail and half an hour after the water had been down the sand was as dry and dusty as ever and therefore a very shifting and uncertain surface upon which to gallop. It is only in wet weather that a sand gallop is of any use and we would suggest that if at any future date during this monsoon season we are confronted with conditions similar to those of the first day the Stewards should open the big course which with the fine "pad" of doob grass that there is upon it would be infinitely better than the sand and would reduce the jar and damage to horses' feet and legs. It would not hurt the course in the least and the concession would be gratefully appreciated by owners, trainers, and jockeys. On the hurdle courses there is no remedy as there is no water laid on and all that can be done is to attend to the landing sides of the fences and thereby counteract the jar as much as possible. This is done with a judicious mixture of tan, sand, and ashes, but at every other part of the course the ground was cruelly hard, those owners who kept their horses at home choosing undoubtedly the wiser part.

All the stewards with the exception of Mr. A. A. Apcar, who is still away in Bangalore, and Mr. Deakin were present, Mr. Apcar's place being taken by Mr. A. G. H. Macpherson. The Stipendiary Steward, Mr. Harvey Roulston, was present as also the Stipendiary Judge, Mr. Lamb, the Starter, Mr. Bates, the Clerk of the Scales, Mr. J. H. Allen, the Handicapper, Mr. S. Griffiths, the Time-keeper, Mr. G. B. Paris, the Clerk of the Course, Mr. Lance, the Surgeon, Dr. Elmes, and last, but not least, Mr. James Hutchison. Everything was in excellent order and it was only adverse circumstance that made racing as little enjoyable as it was. There were a good many people in the stands, including a contingent from up-country, amongst whom were Major Eustace and Lady Violet Crawley, Captains Charrington, Robertson, Liddell, Mr. Platt (17th Lancers) and a contingent from Darjeeling, amongst whom was Mr. Shillingford, who has a string of horses and ponies in training and engaged in the meetings. His Honour Sir John Hewett and Miss Hewett are expected down for the August week when we have four days all in a bunch, the 5th, 12th, 17th and 19th, and it is said we may also have some other distinguished visitors about the same time.

The ring were in force and amongst well known operators present either in person or by deputy were Messrs. Charles Hardinge, Harris, James Pymm, Russell, Coutts, Ducasse, F. M. Dass, etc., etc., and in the little silver ring there was the usual legion of them and trade seemed to be brisk. Messrs. Hardinge and Harris have both recently arrived from Home and are looking extremely well on it. Mr. Hardinge does not usually come out so early, but as the Calcutta dates this season dovetailed conveniently with Poona he has come here first and goes on for Poona big meeting later.

With only a short card of five races and a hot afternoon into the bargain the first event was timed for 4 P.M. and was the Pony Plate for which four out of the nine over-night acceptors were scratched owing to the heat. May Kenley on whom Mr. Evers had the ride was at once made a warm favourite and went to 6 to 4 on before the start, Miss Clare at 5 to 2 against being the only other one backed. The field ran in company for two-thirds of the way and then Miss Clare came out of the crowd and had them all settled in very short order, May Kenley only just managing to get her place, as Sidonia nearly pipped her on the post. A good deal of money went down over the favourite who did not seem to be able to act under the very trying conditions and too much heed must not therefore be paid to her defeat.

There were only six left in the Trial Hurdle Race overnight and two of these were withdrawn on the day, Idle and Maisonette, the latter's starting declaration being cancelled at the last moment owing to the state of the weather. This only left four and favouritism was equally divided between Tommy Daw and the untried hurdler Craigendorrie, who was out for his first effort in public. It was 2 to 1 each of two at the start and not much money for either of the others. It was no race as Tommy Daw had them all at his mercy all the way and could hardly be held back to them. Craigendorrie made an effort to get on terms going to the last hurdle but blundering badly gave Captain Charrington a heavy fall, April Fool getting second place. Captain Charrington was a good deal bruised and shaken and was not able to ride for the rest of the afternoon. Tommy Daw's victory was a foregone conclusion and unless Maisonette is able to beat him on a heavy day there is nothing else here so far as we can see at all likely to take this horse's number down. They said he was sore and various other things, but he did not go as if he were in the race. He has somewhat cramped action when going slow. Craigendorrie is not best suited by a course with so many sharp turns on it as this monsoon one, as he is inclined to be a bit on the leg and the turns are all against a longstriding horse of his stamp. Mimicry damaged himself in the race and came in lame behind from a bad cut. He is not likely to be out again for some time.

Eight went for the Amateur Pony Hurdle Plate and it was 6 to 4 on Loch Lily, almost all the time, Marconi and Domino at fours and fives and even sixes at one time—nothing else much backed. Loch Lily romped away with this race putting it behind her in nearly 6 seconds better time than she did last year when she had 9lb. less on her back and the time was 2mins. 43⅗secs. against 2mins. 38secs. this year. She is tremendously improved and on this last Saturday's showing she is good enough to win in the open class, which this year is not very strong. Marconi ran very badly and was a great disappointment. The starter dropped the flag when he was on the inside of the starting post and he was badly left. But in our opinion he was a beaten pony before ever he left the paddock, as he was in a profuse lather and has been amiss ever since the race—the heat and the thumping big weight knocking him out. On past form the winner ought to have been giving him about 12lb. instead of its being the other way on. In this race Glenlivet, who was ridden by his owner, Mr. Scaramanga, fell at the fourth flight, turning head over heels on top of his rider and it was at first feared that Mr. Scaramanga was seriously injured, as he was removed to hospital in the horse ambulance in an unconscious state. He luckily escaped concussion and broken bones and the most troublesome of his injuries is to his tongue which he nearly bit through. He is, of course, badly bruised and shaken, but is making good progress and will, we hope, soon be out and about again. Glenlivet has not had very much schooling and is a novice at the game of hurdle racing.

The best race of the day was the Summer Plate for which there was a close finish between Royal Colours and Elpis with Winsome and Wise Hawk not far away. Royal Colours was very well backed and as a matter of fact won with a bit to spare. She was getting 5lb. from Elpis, but in our idea could have beaten Mr. Das' mare at level weights. The time for the race was good, as 1min. 6⅘secs. is by no means slow on such a peculiar surface. Last year Royal Colours won the Bengal Plate over the same distance at this same meeting in 1min. 8⅘secs. with 9st. 8lb. and on Saturday last she had 8st. 7lb. The course on Saturday being all sand and dry was no doubt a bit faster than last year when the last three furlongs only were sand and the grass was somewhat heavy going at the first of the monsoon meetings. Royal Colours is looking in excellent trim and her condition reflects much credit on Mr. Jack Scott, who has had her up in Dehra all the summer.

The biggest field of the day turned out for the Amateur Plate for which eleven went, Levi being the only one of the acceptors who was scratched. When betting opened on this race To Kalon was in great demand, but then a reaction set in in favour of Mahoney Boy, a colonial imported last season we hear by Mr. Shields. He is a nice stamp of horse by Froude out of Meeanee's daughter, and though his Australian successes do not mark him out any flier those who know him say that he is probably as good a one as Warrayure which makes him out a bit more than useful. His Australian friends crowded round him on Saturday and he soon displaced Mr. Pugh's English mare in favouritism. In the race Mahoney Boy made hacks of the lot of them and To Kalon was beaten a good long way from home and finished two and a half lengths in front of Lady Thirza with Ocean, a small English gelding, a moderate fourth. Mahoney Boy is a good sort and they say that he is a lot better than this class that he was meeting on Saturday, yet last season in Calcutta he was, so we hear, on offer at a very moderate figure till Captain Brough came along and bought him. We shall probably hear from him again ere long. He looks to be just the sort for this country, a light-topped good-boned horse, and he went on to the course looking very well on Saturday. Details of the racing appear in our usual columns.

On Sunday, Monday and Wednesday rain fell but not in sufficient quantities to do any real good and the shortage of moisture from which we are suffering is likely to very seriously prejudice racing prospects in Calcutta this autumn, for owners are unable to do the work with their horses that they desire and running them on such going as we are, we fear, likely to have for some time to come is in itself a great risk. On Monday morning one or two owners seized the opportunity of a little temporary coolness to give their horses a bit of fast work and there were also a few schooling over hurdles. Maisonette (owner) jumped a couple at speed in good style and a more extended school was indulged in by Farthing Bun (Northmore), Jaffa Girl (Mr. Evers), and Velodia (Captain Robertson), the three of them going the last mile of the course. Considering that Velodia must have been giving each of her companions 2st. at the least she performed very creditably, as she was going far better than Farthing Bun at the finish and Jaffa Girl lost so much time over the fences that she was never really in the gallop at all. Velodia ought upon this to be worth watching when she gets into a hunters' handicap at the back end of the season at a nice weight. Jaffa Girl is too careful at the moment and loses a lot of time at the fences.

On Tuesday morning there was likewise some jumping over hurdles and also one or two in the schooling cage, amongst the latter being Mount Dane, who has been resurrected from Behar and sent to Heywood to train for the Monsoons. He was put in the jumping cage with Asteroid and Lionel and he jumped none too well at first, though he improved later, though even then did not put up a very great performance. Asteroid looks as if he might make into a jumper some day. Old Lionel led them all and jumped well. Out on the course To Kalon (Northmore) and Moltke (R. Morrison) went, the latter colliding with the wing of the second hurdle and scraping his jockey off. To Kalon went on alone and fenced beautifully. Spec (R. Morrison) jumped four flights in good style and will no doubt be seen out on Saturday week in the open pony hurdle race. Yesterday (Wednesday) morning Goldstream (owner) jumped six flights of the pony course very well. Simontura (Captain Charrington) Foy (Mr. Evers) The Comet (Mr. Tanner) and Reinforcement (Captain Robertson) went in pairs. Simontura jumped badly and narrowly saved a fall at the second last flight. The others all jumped well and we understand Mr. Evers rides Foy on Saturday. If this is so it means he is better than Tommy Daw we presume, but it is a long time since this horse has won a race.

The entries for the second day of the Calcutta Monsoon Meeting are very good taken all round, though the figures in some races look rather better than they really are owing to the large number of horses that are under several separate liabilities. There are eight in the July Hurdle Plate, of which two, Mount Dane and Craigendorrie, are also engaged on the flat. There are fourteen in the Amateur Hurdle Plate and of these Levi, Mahoney Boy, Farthing Bun, Goldstream and Dooneen hold other engagements, and in some of the flat races it is even worse, the Fort Plate for instance in which there are twelve having only five that are not also engaged in other races, Scotch Girl, Mahoney Boy, Yum Yum, Bird of Freedom, Little Meg, Distillery, Isabela, all being in other races as well. The Sand Track Handicap in which 19 entered similarly whittles away when you come to scan it closely, as eleven of them are also down to run in other races. The six furlong Pony Handicap is the only race that is not cut into by other events on the card and there is every hope that the handicapper may be able to entice all of them to the post. The weights in the handicaps will not, we fear, be out in time to make comment possible but our ideas about things, taking it for granted that there are no unreasonable penalties imposed for last Saturday's performances that Tommy Daw will take a lot of stopping in the hurdle race, though when Craigendorrie learns to jump he will be undoubtedly one of those that will have to be watched. If it is a wet day and soft going Maisonette will run well, as she must now get a good bit of weight from Tommy Daw. The Amateur Hurdle Plate is on terms 11st. all round. If Mahoney Boy goes—and we hear that he is a good jumper—he must be dangerous to the best of them, which is To Kalon. We pick Velodia to be the best of the remainder.

The Monsoon Plate is over six furlongs and this will suit Wise Hawk better—but we do not see any better horses than the first four that finished in the Summer Plate last Saturday. We cannot say much about the Fort Plate or the Sand Track Handicap, as they stand to be backed to pieces when the acceptances come out. In the Pony Plate we take Mandeville, Miss Clare, Sidonia, May Kenley and Moira to be the pick, and if Sidonia gets a weight that suits her she must be near the front at the finish.

The victory of Sir Ernest Paget's Dalnacrag in the Liverpool Cup (1¼ miles) on Thursday last must have been somewhat of a surprise to the general body of backers, though probably the stable had a shrewd suspicion that he might hit the target. He was not mentioned in any of the ante-post betting lists and he started at 100 to 8. Lord Derby's Decision was the one they were backing and from 5 to 1 the previous Saturday he hardened 3 to 1 on the day. Dalnacrag (Wolfscrag—Dalnessie) recently won the 1 mile Kingston Handicap, Kempton, and the fact of Fidelio, H. H. of Cooch Behar's new one, having finished third to him last seaon giving him 8lb. in the Stockton Stewards' Handicap (1 mile), Purleigh being second, renders Dalnacrag's recent success in this important handicap of more than passing interest to us in India. As a three-year-old last season Dalnacrag won three other races besides the one in which he beat Fidelio, his successes being scored in the 7-furlong Autumn Handicap Plate at Newmarket, the 7-furlong Wharncliffe Three-Year-Old Handicap at Doncaster, and the 1 mile Doncaster Welter Handicap. He was also third in the 1½ miles Victoria Welter Handicap at Sandown to Origo and Facet, third in the Three-Year-Old Handicap at Newmarket to Clarenceux and Facet and second in the Esher Cup (1 mile 60 yards) at Sandown to Celluloid. He started favourite at 6 to 1 for this year's Lincolnshire Handicap (won by Mercutio) but ran very disappointingly and finished down the course.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—On Saturday the third day seems to have been one of mixed blessings as several short priced ones got home though there was no real good thing on which to gamble. It was by no means pleasant to start with, as rain fell fairly heavily and even when this ceased it was very dull and cheerless. There was no outstanding feature, but there were one or two really hot finishes to make the day an interesting one.

In the opening race punters found it difficult to choose between Jassus and William Rufus, but in the race the former, when running second at the half mile, stumbled badly and nearly coming down took no further part in the proceedings. Priceless ran a wonderfully improved animal, making all the running and hanging on to William Rufus all the way down the straight to lose by only a short head.

A good field of ponies produced good betting with Ruling Passion the shortest by a point from O. K. and Premoa. O. K. ran a poor race and failed to stay, whereas Morning Star again cut out the pace so hot that the favourite could make little impression at the finish and only dead-heated for third place with Mr. Priam. From the turn Premoa began to come past the leader and from there it was no race.

The Cup was a very open race, fours being on offer about the field, Five Crown, Lady Spring and Bally Maclure being at that price. Ardnaglue was the troublesome one of the bunch at the start and got away badly. Five Crown and Lady Spring jumping out first to give way to the Maharajah's trio, Sporran in front. Miracle and Five Crown were with them as they passed the half mile, and at the last turn Bally Maclure and Lady Spring came up. It was a good race home, all under the whip and Bally Maclure staying on by about a length from Miracle, who just beat Five Crown, who in turn was not much to the good of Lady Spring.

Another open race was the Leonidas Purse, which was a bit of an upset, Wavehill and Black Douglas being equal favourites. Eva B. made the running for a time from Sophocles and Reeba, the second running on, but being later passed by Wavehill. Black Douglas and John Wesley were then seen on the outside, and a great finish ensued in which John Wesley just got up and, after some deliberation, was returned a winner by what must have been a very short head.

Last on the card was the C.-B. race which on any form we know was a pretty good thing for Cowslip, but after getting a good price of twos about him we were surprised to see him remain at that price, his stable companion "F" contracting to equal odds. "F" cut out the early running, but was beaten before the home turn, where Merry Bird and Pearl came out in front. Cowslip had been held far too much out of it, with the result that when he came he was too late for a win, which he should have secured. As it was Merry Bird held Harebell safe.

Punters got a bit more of the luck on Tuesday, when in all but one instance the winner was well backed, though the betting was too open to have hot favourites. Again there was rain immediately before the races, but nothing much to complain about during the proceedings. An extra day has been fixed and except for the Arab race entries are quite satisfactory.

First on the card was the first division of the July Plate of a mile with six runners whose form as a whole over the distance was hard to get at. On his last run, and with the probability that it would bring him on, Black Douglas was made a better favourite than Lady Spring, and this proved to be justified. It promised to be a good race from the bend, where these two passed Reeba, but the mare was done. John Wesley came through very fast in the middle but he also could not keep it up and near the finish Black Douglas outstayed them all with more ease than at one time seemed probable.

Several were well backed in the 14-2 race. Ruling Passion always in demand, but O. K., Master Priam and Premoa never neglected by any means. Thereafter and then Mignonette were the pace-makers, but neither was there when it came to racing Morning Star passing them first. From the distance it was practically over as O. K. came on the extreme outside and settled them all. Premoa and Ruling Passion could do nothing, and once more Master Priam brought home the place money.

There were just the eight runners in the All Horse Handicap, and after Warrayure had been made favourite there came a big commission on San Remo, Sophocles being also much in demand. This ended in something of an upset, as after Pressy had made the running with Sophocles and let Warrayure through along the rails, Eustace slipped through and never left the race in doubt. His stable companion Kismet ran into third place, and thus blew out the better fancied ones, San Remo not having time to get properly going.

Betting in the second division of the July Plate was very open, though at the end Sholto warmed up a fairly short price from Wavehill, Vitange and Five Crown in order. An outsider in Mary B. looked to have a great chance as she came round the bend in the lead, taking over from Scotch Mist. Five Crown, however, was practically on terms at the distance with Sholto coming on the outside. Mary B. stuck to the former, but could never claim to be going better whereas Sholto missed his place there being only seven runners.

Lastly the mile and a quarter for C.-Bs., Cowslip winding up favourite from Merry Bird. The latter made all the running and a splendid finish was the result, the judge being unable to separate them. Merry Bird had come away from the rails and was said to have bumped Cowslip, but the Stewards held a different view and over-ruled the objection. They ran off, and on coming up at the distance Cowslip had the other well beaten.

Numerous scratchings reduced the extra day to something of a Gymkhana Meeting, but there were still some enthusiastic punters left and four books to cater for their wants. At the start we were promised fine weather, but a few slight showers were later followed by a really heavy downpour. Valiant supplied us with the incident of the day, as after running off the course altogether with Reyes his girths snapped and he completed the journey on his own. If he continues this way, I presume his connections will deem it advisable to put him to some other use than racing.

The first event on the card gave us one of the best things one could find on a race course in Twistum, who was entered to be sold so cheap that she got in at an absurd weight. She only had Anhabean and old Yuba to beat and did it with consummate ease.

A similar sort of race for ponies, however, was more open on the betting, Joybell going out just under twos from Paulin, with Glad Tidings preferred to Fireaway. The first and last-named cut out the pace, but Fireaway began to tire in the straight and Joy Bell won pulling up from Paulin.

Much as Black Douglas has improved, Warrayure was thought to be too good to get weight from him in the seven, but this was not the case in the race. Lady Mungal made the running, Warrayure being first to pass her, but at the crucial moment Black Douglas came up full of running and had a bit to spare. Every time out he has done better, and he may be absolutely first class before the year is out.

The half mile for ponies was a good race, five starting with Safety Pin considered good enough class to give them all weight, though all but Token came in for fair support. Lady's Maid was declared to start, but her number was subsequently taken down owing to some argument about an agreement. There was some delay, then Nyria took a good lead from the favourite, but this was cut down almost as soon as they entered the straight. Cyclone made a game effort, but Safety Pin palpably held her safe.

Wishart was expected to bring off a double with Hackler's Bloom, but she appeared to be in want of a gallop or two, as she cut out all the running to the distance, where she had had enough. Barm was next in demand, but he also still needs work and could not show up much, his stable companion Sholto being the one. Rapin looked likely as he came into the lead at the turn, but after that had no chance with Sholto.

Finally the C.-B. race in which the Valiant incident occurred, and as he was not brought back to the post this left a field of three. Cowslip was a warm favourite from Cauvery, and so the race itself read after the latter had cut it out hot.

This is absolutely the end of the season, a very successful one in the matter of entries and attendance, there having been quite a large contingent of racing people to liven matters up. Despite the rain the weather had been delightful, and it is hard to think of a better place in which to enjoy a month's holiday.

The Bangalore Horse Show will be held in the Residency grounds on the 2nd and 3rd proximo, entries closing at 8 P.M. on the 28th instant. H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore and the Hon'ble Colonel Hugh Daly are patrons and the committee of fourteen includes Mr. A. A. Apcar and Colonuels W. G. Beevor, A. Jones, C. A. Johnston, and Chitty. Captain A. F. Henderson, 27th Light Cavalry, is honorary secretary.

A correspondent in a London contemporary describes an unwonted, if not altogether unprecedented occurrence as having taken place on the Thames near Oxford. A roach fisher having hooked a large fish, was playing it, when an otter is alleged to have seized it and brought it to the feet of the angler, dropped it there as docilely as a retriever dog, and returned to the water, to swim "round and round the post blowing at intervals for several minutes."

Possibly he was waiting for the angler to hook another roach in order that he might repeat the performance, and prove himself to be what Izaak Walton calls a "true brother of the angle"; or he may have thought that surprise would cause the fisherman to fall into the stream, in which case it may be expected that, like "the kind-hearted pike" of yet another fishing story, he would have "gently replaced him on the bank."

The name of the veracious fisher does not transpire, nor are the scene or date of his adventure specified. Otters are usually shy and silent beasts; but one which had voluntarily constituted himself a substitute for the orthodox landing net with so much success may well be forgiven for "blowing" about it as he swam round and round that pool.

The Times on the 4th instant had a glowing pen picture of the famous Jack Johnson, the heavy-weight champion of the world, who was appearing at the Oxford Music-hall. We have had a good many newspaper descriptions of Johnson of late, but The Times man's description is the best of all. The note is one of admiration for the skill and artistry of the pugilist, tempered here and there by a word of good counsel.

But the humour of the thing is delightful. "Johnson," we learn, "has an uneasy look when he plays his big fiddle; one would think that he suspected it of a desire to present him, having got well inside his guard, with a stiff jolt to the portly stomach which is known to be his vulnerable point." Then Johnson is warned to take better care of himself or he will become too "streaky" (to use Jem Mace's phrase) ever to get back again into hard condition, and will degenerate into a vast human punching-bag.

A grinning copper-coloured Colossus with a cast-iron head posed on flowing shoulder-muscles like a peppercorn in the Atlantic.

By defeating Cambridge by 74 runs, Oxford were able to score their 33rd victory, but they have still a little leeway to make up for the light blues have won 36, the remaining eight games being drawn. It is certainly strange that Le Couteur the Australian Rhodes Scholar two years in succession should take eleven wickets in these Inter-University contests.

Looking back over the match the general impression left was that Oxford were the better side. The Cambridge fielding all through was poor. They missed catches that counted and their ground work was slack. Then the best use was not made of their bowling, and they unquestionably adopted wrong tactics towards Le Couteur. That bowler did not find a length until he went on for the second time. Then he did find a length and once this was obvious he was bound to be successful unless men set themselves resolutely to go out and hit him. Instead he was met in hesitating fashion with fatal results until Mann and Holloway treated him in the right way.

It was certainly an interesting match, even if the quality of the play as a whole fell a good deal short of the University standard. Few matches have had so many fluctuations in fortune, and it will be for this feature, if for no other, that the University match of 1911 will be remembered.

Towards the close of the interval of the match between Kent and All-India reported in our London Sporting Letter to-day the spectators who were seated round the ring were startled by loud cheers followed by the singing of "He's a jolly good fellow," emanating from the luncheon tent. Both teams were toasting Lord Harris, the Kent veteran, who yesterday made a re-appearance on the cricket field and scored 36, in a manner reminiscent of his style thirty to forty years ago.

Appropriately enough, it was another famous veteran of the cricket field who proposed Lord Harris's health—Dr. W. G. Grace. At luncheon the two had been exchanging memories of the Victorian days in the field, and "Do you remember" formed the beginning of most of their remarks. Dr. Grace had gone down to see the form of the Indians, and arm-in-arm with Mr. H. D. Kanga, their captain, he had walked to the pavilion with the springy step of a man of forty.

Lord Harris, who is sixty, first played for his county forty-one years ago, and none of the other players in the match were born at that time. He told a reporter that this was probably his last appearance in first-class cricket. "Five years ago," he said, "I appeared against the West Indians because I was born in the West Indies, and I am glad to have played in this game, because I have, of course, a special interest in both teams.

"When I was Governor of Bombay I tried to stimulate an interest among the natives in cricket, and I am gratified that the game has caught on so well there."

The All-India cricket team eventually won their match against Somerset. On opening their second innings the visitors were left with 264 to make to win. They lost six wickets for 102 when Shivram and Balu got together and made a splendid stand. Shivram scored 113 not out and Balu 55, the Indians ultimately winning by one wicket.

The Indian cricket team met Lincolnshire at Sleaford last week and won very easily. Going in first All India made 463 for six wickets and declared their innings closed—Shivram scoring 175, Kanga 81 and Warden 61. Lincolnshire then went in and made 145, Salamuddin taking six wickets for 40. They followed on and made 268, Balu taking five wickets for 61. All India thus won by an innings and 50 runs. Their match against Durham was begun on Tuesday, the county having first lease of the wickets and scoring 244. When the Indian team went in the light began to fail and after they had lost five wickets for 75 stumps had to be drawn owing to the bad light.

The following are results of important cricket matches played in England during the past week:—

Kent beat Worcestershire, at Maidstone, by 154 runs.

Warwickshire beat Sussex, at Chichester, by 80 runs.

Middlesex beat Hampshire, at Southampton, by 127 runs.

Surrey drew with Gloucestershire, at Bristol, but led on first innings.

Essex drew with Yorkshire, at Sheffield, but gained first innings victory.

Notts beat Lancashire, at Manchester, by eight wickets.

Hampshire beat Worcestershire by an innings and eight runs.

Essex beat Surrey, at Leyton, by 182 runs.

Northants beat Yorkshire by 44 runs at Northampton.

Kent beat Middlesex, at Maidstone, by seven wickets.

Lancashire beat Sussex, at Manchester, by ten wickets.

Warwickshire beat Gloucestershire by seven wickets at Birmingham.

Notts beat Leicestershire at Leicester by an innings and four runs.

proceedings. The fence and tent peg event set the ball rolling and provided a win for Mr. Knight Bruce, who scored in excellent style, Mr. T. Moore being placed second. Then came tilting at the Ring for Ladies, won by Mrs. Reynolds, with Mrs. McCausland second and Mrs. Priestley third. The Ball and Bucket, Fence and Polo Ball event, in which competitors had to drop a ball into a bucket, and then shoot a goal after taking a jump, took up a good deal of time, Mr. Meikle eventually being placed first, Mr. W. Graham second. Five ladies took part in the Musical Chairs, Mrs. McCausland winning from Mrs. Priestley and Mrs. Birkett. The un-saddling race for men proved an easy thing for Captain Hayne. Messrs. Baird and Moulton filled the places. In the Marketing Stakes (ladies nomination) the men had to shout their orders to their fair partners who were given lots to do in supplying the orders. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds were first in with the correct bazar. The Horse Scurry which brought the programme to a close saw nine face the starter, the result being as follows:—

The following quaint rhyme is quoted in an old circular of the famous "White Horse" Whisky Distillers:—

"To secure yourself against the enchantment of witches, especially if you are a person of fashion and have never been taught the Lord's Prayer, the only method I know of is to nail a horseshoe upon the threshold." Poems have been written on the horseshoes, in one of which an account is given of a farmer who picked up one and nailed it prongs downward on his barn door. Everything went wrong with him, and we are told that even "his hens refused to lay." An aged wayfarer to whom he told his woes, laughed, and said:

"No wonder skies upon you frown,
You've nailed the horseshoe upside down,
Just turn it round, and soon you'll see
How you and fortune will agree."

The farmer reversed his luck token, and fortune beamed on him, and his wife presented him with twins.

The Boxing Club of the Rifle Brigade have organised a series of contests which are billed to take place at the Grand Opera House on Saturday next. A good programme has been arranged and the sport promises to be interesting. There are to be four middle weight contests of six-rounds, and a six-round bout in the feather weights, all the competitors having good records in the ring. Two of the middle weight events—Gunner Turner, 70th R. G. A. vs. Private Wootton, Middlesex Regiment, and Corporal Bingham, Rifle Brigade vs. Private Anderson, Middlesex Regiment—were arranged to take place on a former occasion but did not come off. In addition to the above there is to be a ten-round light weight contest between Gunner Goodman and Private Sly of the Middlesex. The couple met in an exhibition bout in Darjeeling last month when Sly won on points. The fact that the show is being run by the Rifle Brigade points to a real good evening's entertainment and one can be certain that all the men are out to win. We may add that the tournament is to be held at the Grand Opera House and seats may be reserved at Messrs. Bevan and Co. on and after 26th July and at the Theatre on Saturday.

Fred Storbeck and P. O. Curran, the two heavyweight boxers who are numbered among the noble army of "White Hopes," came together at Plymouth recently, the contest ending in a fiasco. Five punishing rounds had been negotiated, all of them marred by the men fighting in holds, until the sixth was reached when the referee's patience was exhausted and he disqualified both men, declaring it "no Contest." There has been a good deal of talk of a match between Curran and Jack Johnson but nothing definite has been settled yet. Storbeck is anxious to fix a meeting with Bombardier Wells but as the latter is now busy with his training for the world's championship battle in September, the South African will have to wait.

There is little chance of a return battle between Papke and Sullivan in England this season unless some enterprising promoter comes along with an offer which will guarantee Papke £1,000 for his end of the purse, win, lose or draw. The American is stipulating for this amount as he has been offered three battles in America, following which he is booked up for forty weeks vaudeville engagement at 1,000 dollars a week.

We have to thank Messrs. Curtis and Harvey, the makers of the celebrated "Smokeless Diamond" powder for copies of their "Shooter's Year Book," a little brochure which is replete with items of interest to the shooter.

As will be seen from a notice appearing further on it has been decided to hold the next January race meet at Dibrugarh from 1st to 6th January, instead of from 23rd to 28th as heretofore.

We have to thank the Secretary of the Calcutta Turf Club for a copy of Volume XXIII of the Racing Calendar, which has just made its welcome, though somewhat belated, appearance. This volume embraces the season from 1st April 1910 to 31st March 1911. It is a complete and carefully arranged record of racing in India during that period and is an invaluable possession for all racing men and students of Form.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 7th July 1911.

The crossing of the Channel last Monday by eleven airmen in the Standard-Journal race marks another advance towards the conquest of the air. When Bleriot first flew from Calais to Dover two years ago his feat was greeted with wondering enthusiasm. On Monday a perfect fleet of aeroplanes negotiated the crossing. It is quite evident that within another year or two it will have become a commonplace. The mishaps that occurred to certain of the competitors prove that aviation still remains a perilous pursuit, but with the perfection of the machine and the increased knowledge of the vagaries of the air, the risk must inevitably become less, and it is by no means a bold prophecy to say that what was only possible to the danger-scorning pioneer of the beginning of the twentieth century will be the everyday experience of the timorous citizen of the next generation. The history of aviation is the history of every advance in human history—first curiosity, then hazardous exploration and experiment, then gradual acquisition, and finally possession. Before Columbus men discussed the possibility of the existence of a continent across the Atlantic. Columbus went to see. For a hundred years men have wondered if it were possible to fly. Santos-Dumont first discovered the lines on which it could be done. By curiosity, ingenuity, patience, and courage man inherits the earth and the waters below the earth and the air above the earth.

It is impossible in face of the continuous victories of man over the forces and the problems of Nature not to wonder what good will come of it at last. Have the railway train and the electric telegraph, the telephone and the motor-car, the aeroplane and the submarine, added one iota to the sum total of the happiness of humanity? We are apt to say, and may be to believe, that sixpenny telegrams and universal telephones are essential to modern life. But the rush and hurry and bustle in which we live are, as a matter of fact, largely the result of the advance of mechanical science. We are the slaves of the wonders we have created. From our very success the danger of becoming absolutely materialist is far greater than it was to our medieval ancestors or to the sheltered monks of Tibet. It is a little disconcerting to remember that the age which is seeing the beginning of aerial travel does not possess a single poet of the first order. We are so busy thinking that we have no time to sing. But while thought is essential, songs are just as necessary. We are growing one-sided. The dreamer is apt to be regarded as insane. We have no doubt that this is but a phase in the progress of our race. But it is certainly evident that never was there a time that needed more the constant iteration of the truth that man cannot live on the material alone, but that beauty and imagination are every bit as vital as votes and insurance and aeroplanes.

An aggrieved writer, dissatisfied with the age we live in, has been making complaints about the dulness of our London streets. And, surveying them thoughtfully, it does strike one that much of the old charm and glamour of life in our English towns has departed. Time was when the wayfarer was frequently gratified by the sight of eager crowds surrounding a couple of men engaged in a fight. But this entertainment seems to have become almost entirely a thing of the past.

It was once a common experience to meet citizens lurching along the public walk exalted with beer. Then there were constant bouts of fisticuffs among boys. And the streets being populous with stray curs there was always a dogfight going on somewhere. But these cheerful episodes of daily life grow fewer and fewer, and dulness supervenes. Stringent regulations have eliminated the stray dogs, beer has lost much of its grip, boys and men seem tamer in spirit, and it is seldom even in the humbler localities that ladies are seen with arms akimbo railing at one another from their doorsteps as they used to in the dear old days.

These facts give melancholy support to the theory that our national character is changing, and that we have ceased to be a warlike people.

One finds from the criminal statistics that there has been an immense falling-off in offences against the person. Altercations are few, and the word is seldom followed by the blow as it was aforetime. A police inspector tells me that the wife's black eye, once a familiar object of the police court, is now rarely exhibited there. Assault cases of every kind show a marked shrinkage. And the profits pocketed by the Law in fines for other people's bruises and black eyes have dwindled to an alarming smallness. Happily, however, this loss is more than made good by the rich harvest reaped from penalties inflicted on motorists. Thus we find the beneficent law of compensations eternally at work. The tide that goes down on one shore comes up on another.

The man Keir Hardie's scheme for a Socialist daily newspaper is dead. The paper was to have been published early this year, with headquarters at Manchester and a capital of £10,000. Several sovereigns were promised.

At the Birmingham conference of the Independent Labour Party, a few months ago, the National Administrative Council were asked, by resolution, to adopt Keir Hardie's scheme. The council have come to the unanimous conclusion that the scheme is unworkable. It is understood that this person wished the paper to be controlled by the advanced Socialist wing, so that it might be used to make the trade unionists toe the mark.

The National Administrative Council of the Independent Labour Party have now approved a scheme for a London morning paper to be promoted by them jointly with the Socialist party in Parliament. The capital is put at £100,000 and £20,000 has been subscribed.

Mr. Herbert Trench's management of the Haymarket has been so distinguished that his reversion to such a play as "Above Suspicion" must frankly be regretted. It is so elaborately artificial so completely lacking in appeal to the intellect and the emotion. Twenty years ago, it might have made a hit—indeed, we saw it often enough about that time; for it uses a familiar and threadbare situation, and has actually been done before.

The programme quaintly tells us that Mr. William Morpeth's is "the exclusively authorised translation and adaptation" of "Ferreol," that being the unnamed original. Gerard de Mayran, on the eve of his departure for Africa to join his regiment, unchivalrously presented himself at the house of Roberte de Boismartel, wife of the President of the Assize Court at Aix. Years before he had been the courtier of madame, on whom he again passionately urged his suit. Madame very nearly fell, but at this fortunate juncture thought of her sweet baby girl, and sent De Mayran about his business. As he left the house he was the witness of a murder committed by Martial, the president's gamekeeper. But he kept on his way to Africa.

When he returned, he found that his dearest friend had been accused of the murder, and was on trial before President de Boismartel. Gerard's position therefore was that in order to save his friend, he must suggest a stain upon the honour of Madame de Boismartel. The situation is ridiculous—that a man's life should probably be sacrificed, rather than reveal an actually innocent visit to a woman, undoubtedly attached to her husband and faithful to him! Madame de Boismartel and De Mayran fooled around the question till the poor devil was actually sentenced to imprisonment for twenty years! Then Roberte authorised Gerard to speak, at the imagined risk of forfeiting her husband's esteem. But the gamekeeper saved them the trouble, by tardy confession. "Above Suspicion" has the Sardou ingenuity of construction; and it is creditably done into English. It is finely played by Miss Alexandra Carlisle as Gerard, Mr. Aubrey Smith as the President, Mr. Charles Maude as Gerard, and Mr. Charles V. France as the gamekeeper. But the combined efforts of these clever people never, for one moment, succeed in shaking off the fatal sense of unreality.

Prodigies have been mercifully few of late, and it may be hoped that the youthful pianist, Master Solomon, aged eight, who made his appearance at the Queen's Hall this week may not be the means of bringing a fresh batch before the public, though it has been so frequently observed that one bad example in this matter leads to imitation, that one cannot repress misgivings. There may, of course, be room for discussion concerning the pros and cons of the prodigy problem, and fuller and more exact information than is commonly possessed as to the ultimate development of the various prodigies that have appeared in the past would be necessary in order to arrive at any very positive conclusions on the subject. It may be that these premature appearances are not in reality so harmful as is commonly supposed, and there is certainly no doubt at all that a large number of the most eminent practitioners of the art, alike executive and creative, have begun their careers in this fashion. At the same time the instinctive feeling of most that such appearances are not to be encouraged is probably a sound one. When, however, obvious natural genius is present, and it is a question of raising funds for the necessary upkeep and training, it is natural that such a ready means of raising them should be resorted to, and if the practice is not pushed too far probably no great harm is done. As regards Master Solomon there can be no question as to his astonishing gifts. He played the solo part in a Mozart concerto with amazing skill and assurance, and his performances altogether were a wonderful exhibition of precocious virtuosity. But to say this is only to emphasise all the more the responsibility resting on those charged with his care and training, and it is sincerely to be hoped that in the lad's own interest it may be wisely exercised.

"The Green Elephant" by Maurice Baring, at the Comedy Theatre, is an extraordinary jumble which has not appealed to the public, indeed it is doubtful if it will even run for the short time for which it is booked. The Green Elephant is a jade ornament attached to a necklace. It is ancient, unique, and of great value. It has long been in the Warburton family, and Sir Henry Warburton has presented it to his wife. She keeps all her jewellery in a safe in her dressing-room. She is, however, a woman of extravagant habits, and not daring to disclose to her husband the full amount of her debts has pawned the elephant. Some visitors desire to see it, and she resorts to all sorts of shifts, falsehood, and evasions to get out of producing it. At last she is forced to go to the safe and has to declare that it has been stolen. The house-party includes a foolish old American, Professor Nutt, who makes a hobby of criminal investigation, in which he believes himself without a rival, and has as secretary a curious young man, Betis, who appears to be a notorious criminal known as Peter Little, and may have accepted the situation with a view to putting or keeping his would-be captors on the wrong tack. This Betis is shrewd and tricky and early discovers the truth, and later, having purloined the pawn-ticket, redeems the jewels. These, for reasons best known to himself, he substitutes for others which a fellow guest, Pollitt, is taking up to town for Letty Hart, a girl given to crystal gazing and to walking in her sleep. When they are found in Pollitt's bag, he, being a gambler and short of money, is suspected of the theft, till Mrs. Motterway an attractive young widow with whom he is apparently on very easy terms, takes the crime upon herself. In this way Betis again gets possession of them, and this time places them in the Professor's despatch-box and sets on Letty Hart, an old friend of his, to see them there with the aid of her crystal. The Professor is thereby made to look foolish. In the end most of the characters believe Letty Hart to have stolen them when sleep-walking. Other jewels, to say nothing of keys, pawn-tickets, and papers, also go amiss, the play being similar in character to several ingenious pieces by Sardou and others of the Hunt-the-Slipper order. But Mr. Baring has not the vigour of a Sardou, and is too leisurely in his methods and too unemphatic in his dialogue strongly to arrest the attention.

Miss Gertrude Kingston was quite at home as the exasperating but charming Lady Warburton, and Mr. Hubert Harben duly stiff as her rather dull and ceremonious husband. Miss Marjorie Patterson was pleasing as Letty, and Miss Darragh effective as the jealous Mrs. Motterway, who in the end becomes engaged to Pollitt. Mr. Charles Quartermaine is a handsome and dashing Pollitt, who seems to have stolen some of the other jewels or the paste articles substituted for them. One writes with diffidence because the action is in many points somewhat obscure and the motives hard to conjecture. Mr. H. de Lange gives a droll little sketch of the ridiculous Professor. The only character greatly to interest one was Betis, played with a quaint and sly humour by Mr. Augustin Duncan, and some of the interest he evoked was due to the vagueness with which the part was written.

The inaugural dinner of a new club—the Aldwych Club—for members of the advertising world, was held last night at the Connaught Rooms, Great Queen Street, London. Lord Northcliffe was in the chair, and, in proposing success to the club, spoke of the revolution in advertising methods which has taken place in the past twenty years and the accompanying change in the status of the advertiser.

Sir Thomas Dewar said that the motto of the chairman's speech might well be:

"If man upon his trade relies,
He must either bust or advertise."

"Where advertising begins," he said, "and where it ends no man knows. On a recent visit to Egypt I saw the face of Rameses the Great in the museum at Cairo and I thought, 'You were the greatest advertiser that ever lived.' His name is on every tomb and temple and monument in Egypt."

Mr. Wareham Smith, the president of the club committee, spoke of the objects and advantages of the club for the meeting of advertisers of all branches. The premises, which were opened a week ago, are in Aldwych, between the Morning Post buildings and the Waldorf Hotel. The clubhouse has been furnished with the idea of making it supremely comfortable, and it is hoped that the club will add to the prestige of the advertising profession in the eyes of the commercial community generally. The subscription is four guineas, and anyone connected with the advertising business is eligible for membership. It would appear that in the near future the place will be a stalking ground in which the advertising contractor and big "ad" shikari will be the hunters and the whisky distillers, patent medicine men, and all the other manufacturers the quarry.

THE HAUNTS OF THE SAMBHUR.

Although in the opinion of some big game hunters the sambhur of the Indian jungles is not reckoned among the first of the numerous deer tribes which wander over the less inhabited parts of the globe, the species is by no means to be despised, and in some parts where the stags attain to greater size and also have greater length and thickness of horn, a well set up head forms a fitting trophy to adorn the walls, be they those of the baronial hall or of the more humble abode of the less well-to-do hunter. In India their chief haunts are in the jungles of the Central Provinces, on the wooded hillsides of the Siwalik hills of the United Provinces, and among the rock and scrub on the Aravali hills of the Sirohi State in Rajputana.

By the kind permission and with the courteous assistance of His Royal Highness Sir Keshri Sing, the ruling chief of the Sirohi State, I was some months ago enabled, in company with a friend, to pay a short visit to a part of the Aravalis in the neighbourhood of Mount Abu, where there were reports of sambhur in great numbers. Our bag was not large owing to the thickness and height of the grass and bush, consequent upon a very heavy rainfall, but we had ample opportunity of studying the habitat and idiosyncracies of the animal we were in search of, and spent withal as pleasant a time as anyone could wish for amid magnificent surroundings and in beautiful weather.

An additional reason for the poor results obtained, was the fact that shikaris were not to be had in the locality we were visiting, and we were forced in consequence to import Bhils from Mount Abu itself, who were handicapped by their want of knowledge of the ground.

The local shikari of Mount Abu and its precincts has but one method in the pursuit of sambhur. He first selects a piece of ground, which he thinks they are frequenting, and then proceeds to make friends, if he is not already intimate, with the cowherds who, at certain seasons of the year, camp out with their charges away from the villages.

Having enlisted as many as these as possible into his service and given out hopes that the rewards will be shared if a good stag is located, most shikaris will, as often as not, proceed to their homes and do nothing, paying periodical visits to the deluded European who is employing them, to give wondrous accounts of their hard work in the jungle and to ask for money to defray expenses which have never been incurred. It is not until they get news of a stag from the cowherds that they really proceed to exert themselves, and they then set to work to "harbour" him by a system of watching, which is locally known as putting out "tonkis."

This is merely "ringing" round the resting places of the animal with an army of watchers at daybreak and then, having exactly located the quarry, a message is sent in to the sportsman who hurries out, to find, as often as not, that the stag has broken away before his arrival.

The good shikari will, of course, work the ground himself and not trust to others for his information, but even so, the difficulties in the way of locating and bringing a stag within range of the rifle are very great owing to the thickness of the jungle and the keen sense of hearing and smell of the sambhur.

Such difficulties ourselves (for we meant to work) and our three men had to encounter, and more also, for we were taking them, as I have already stated, to a part of the hill in which they had never been and where the growth of grass and trees was unusually thick.

But to the true sportsman such matters should act as an incentive, and if after the exercise of all his ingenuity the game on foot manages to do better and outwit him, who is there of the proper spirit who would not in his heart of hearts applaud the doing, while wishing for another opportunity to again measure forces—although the contest is, I am afraid, always unequal in these days of the accurate and hard-hitting modern firearm!

In a like spirit, we will hope, my companion and myself trudged across the hills one fine, cold weather morning, with our little string of shikaris, coolies and servants, and as late that same evening we rounded a bend and looked down and across on to a huge expanse of hillside covered with grass, scrub and dense jungle, in the middle of which we could see the little collection of cowherds' huts, near which we were to encamp, it was, I trust, with that same spirit, that we both involuntarily exclaimed, "What a grand jungle, but it does look thick cover," or words to that effect.

That night, after reaching our camping ground, my companion "sat up" over a goat to try his luck with a panther, which the cowherds said had been prowling about after their cattle, but he did not put in an appearance, and we retired to our beds in the little tente d'Abri which we had brought with us, having given orders to the shikaris to go out at dawn to try and mark down a stag.

We were ourselves too tired to attempt much the first day, and so next morning, after a good night's rest and an early breakfast in case news of a find was brought in, we wandered about the camping ground, and then sauntered over to the little knot of huts and entered into conversation with some of the greybeards among the cowherds.

It is astonishing how apathetic the native villager can often be with regard to sport of any sort, except when their own cattle are at stake from the attentions of a tiger or panther.

"Sambhur! Yes, they believed there were some on the hill, but they never saw them or scarcely ever. Why should they?" And after all, why should they, if one came to think of it—they had not the weapons to shoot them with, and the sambhur did them no harm.

One old man shewed more signs of alertness to administer to our hunger for news of the jungle. He was lean and long of body, had an attenuated, narrow face and a pointed beard, seemed to carry his years but lightly, and spoke, while taking copious pinches of snuff, with a humourous twinkle in his eye.

Him we christened "Uncle Sam," but although more talkative, he gave us but little information, and we returned to our camp, to find there was no sign of our men.

It was almost 9 o'clock and their non-appearance seemed to indicate good fortune, for if there had been no news of a stag, they would have been back at the camp.

Sambhur start feeding with the dawn—very often before it—moving about as they feed, and then as the sun rises and warms the air, they wander off to the thick cover and lie up until the cool of the evening once more brings them out to satisfy their hunger. It is between the dawn and the lying up time that the shikari has his best chances of getting a view, and he then watches and follows up until the stag is finally marked down in his resting place for the day.

At night time in the hot weather they will often frequent some shallow pool of water, rolling in the mud and getting rid of any parasites that may be irritating them.

My friend and myself waited patiently, but 10 o'clock came and still no signs. At 10-30 we had almost decided to go out and try to find them, but just then our headman appeared and proceeded to unfold a dismal tale of how the fates had been against both himself and his men.

Two stags had been seen, one had been marked down, but had been disturbed and sent flying across the hills by a woodcutter from the cowherds, who had all unwittingly gone into his retreat; and the other had defied all attempts to locate him by moving too quickly and had been lost to view in the thick.

It was bad luck, but as our man said, there were signs of sambhur all over the hillsides, we thought it just possible that the beating of a likely nullah might give some result, and so after allowing the shikaris to rest and eat, we called a council, to which Uncle Sam was invited.

The result of this was, that a certain nullah, known to be a favourite haunt, was to be beaten out, and having given our men a little further breathing space and collected some cowherds to do the beating, my companion and myself, with Uncle Sam and two rifle bearers, started off to go round a hillside and down to the bottom of the nullah which was to be beaten.

We had an hour's scrambling and sliding over some very nasty ground, but arrived safely and took up our positions with hope in our hearts, for everywhere there were signs of stags—tree trunks rubbed bare shewed where horns had been rid of their velvet, the height of the bare patches indicating roughly the size of the stag—tracks in all directions and droppings.

Uncle Sam had accompanied me to the large rock I had chosen, and on reaching it, had at once sat down and then proceeded to unwind a long and dirty waistcloth (about his only garment). From this he extracted two sulphur matches, an earthen pipe (native), a quid of tobacco and some opium. He was about to fill and light his pipe, but my remonstrances stopped him, so he turned to the opium, and cutting off some small pieces from the cakes, offered them to me, and then with a grunt at my refusal, proceeded to chew a portion, and stretching himself on the rock, went to sleep.

So much for the interest Uncle Sam took in sambhur driving.

But I have a very great idea that the old gentleman knew a good deal more about what was to come out of that nullah than I then gave him credit for and I fancy that the beat had been suggested by our men, with him as an abbettor, to turn our minds from what would otherwise have been an idle day, while there was always the remote chance of a stag being there and breaking out, which would have made us greatly contented.

Well! Nothing came out of the nullah. Our men did a great deal of shouting and yelling, and by the time they had worked it to the bottom, it was past 3 o'clock and Uncle Sam had wakened up and had taken to scratching himself for want of better employment.

Wearily we climbed the hill, and disappointed returned to our camp with one day gone and no result.

However, "hope springs eternal" and we were up and out next morning at dawn with our men, perching ourselves in likely slopes of the hill, our glasses serving to make up for our less keen vision.

But the jungle was terribly thick, and all I saw was a doe for a few brief moments as she moved across the patch of open, and my companion and the men fared no better.

Again we returned to camp disappointed, but we still had the evening before us.

We chose a farther off and more wooded slope to watch where, according to Uncle Sam, there were two if not three good stags.

Again we were filled with hope by the unmistakeable signs all around us as we made our way along the sides of a deep ravine which we were to watch at the time when the sambhur should get up to feed.

My companion with Uncle Sam and two of the men were to remain on the side from which we had entered, while the headman and myself were to move round and watch the other side.

A good forty minutes from the time I left the others found me seated high up on the left hand slopes while my man went on above and ahead of me.

The climb had been rather severe, and I was thankful be at rest, but before I could get time to regain my breath, I heard a low whistle, and looking up, saw my man gesticulating violently and beckoning me towards him. Scrambling to my feet, I seized my rifle, and cautiously made my way up.

The shikari hurriedly whispered that a good stag had got up and was feeding about a hundred yards off, then, grabbing my arm, guided me towards a certain cliff, and pointing with his hand, indicated that the stag was the other side of a jutting out rock.

Cautiously I advanced, and pushing forward my rifle, bent my head round the rock.

I saw nothing! My disappointment was intense, but an ominous cracking of the undergrowth in some thick cover just ahead told of what had happened—the stag had moved on and was still moving, feeding as he went.

I had now to follow him.

Carefully I judged the distance he must be ahead, and carefully I crept from rock to rock and bush to bush, after that feeding stag.

For a full quarter of an hour I did this, without getting a view, and was descending lower and lower into the ravine, when my stalk was put to an end in a manner I had quite forgotten to take into consideration.

All of a sudden a sharp report rang out, my stag went crashing through the jungle, far out of shot, and looking up I saw my companion about four hundred yards off.

He had just fired at and dropped another stag, which he, in his turn, had been stalking on the opposite side.

I hurried up to the spot, and by the time I arrived, found him and his men examining a good specimen of a sambhur stag with a thick horn, which, on measurement, proved to be just over thirty-nine inches.

The shikaris were jubilant—this meant a reward—and also meat to eat.

Uncle Sam so far forget himself as to expectorate violently.

It had been a strange coincidence—the two stags must have risen to feed about the same time on opposite sides of the ravine and had been moving towards each other, followed by our two selves, when the good fortune of my companion enabled him to get a view and bring his animal down with a very good long shot.

It was not until late that night that we reached our camp, for we had sat for some time while our men took off the skin and severed the head.

We left them apportioning off the meat on which they would, without fail, gorge themselves.

This they did so effectually that any good work from them next day was out of the question, and we determined to strike camp and try another bit of jungle to our south and on the way back to Mount Abu.

A long march, over hills and dales, brought us early in the afternoon to another collection of cowherds huts at the foot of a large nullah, about five miles long and two broad, up which our return route to Mount Abu lay.

So we told the shikaris to try and mark down a stag next morning in the direction we should be travelling.

Having only one night to spend out, we did not trouble to pitch tents, but rigged our beds in a sheltered spot under some trees while our servants found a similar spot in which to prepare our food.

We retired early to rest and woke with the dawn, hurrying into our clothes after a scrappy toilet as we had a long march and possibly a stalk on the way before we reached home.

Fortunately our men got on to a herd in which there was a good head, shortly after daybreak, and as we started to climb the hill, we were met by an excited cowherd youth who had been sent down to guide us to the place which he stated was close by.

But the distance proved to be nearly three miles, and the stag an animal of the greatest cunning. From the first cover he slipped out before we had taken our places, but was marked down again about a mile further down.

Here he broke away in the wrong direction and could not for some time be located.

We had almost given up the pursuit and were turning our faces homewards, when a man we had sent on beckoned to us from a hill top. He told us on arrival that the stag was below us in a ravine about a mile off and had been seen by some cowherds.

Once more we scrambled down the hillsides and once more we took up our positions. My companion guarded a small nullah which ran out of the main one, while I took my place opposite the thick cover in which he was said to be lying.

This time all went well.

The stag broke away almost as soon as the men started to rouse him, and coming across my front at a distance of about 150 yards, gave me a very sporting shot.

With my first barrel I was too far back, but with my second I hit him well in front.

At first I thought he would drop at once, but he staggered on about fifty yards, and then fell with a crash into a thicket.

Hurrying to the spot I found him quite dead: my second bullet had taken him just under the shoulder.

He proved to have a very ordinary head of about thirty-six inches, although he was an enormous beast, nearly fourteen hands in height.

We did not delay long over him, but leaving some men to skin him and sever his head, hurried back up the hill and reached Mount Abu that night about 7 o'clock after an enjoyable four days in the jungle.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty o health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

.405 CALIBER HIGH POWER REPEATING RIFLES

The Winchester .405 caliber Model 1895 rifle is at all ranges the most powerful repeater made, as shown by the following comparison. The remaining energy at 200 yards of a bullet shot from the .405 caliber is greater than the muzzle energy of a bullet shot from the .45-70-405, which for a great many years was considered the most powerful repeater for big game hunting. The .405 caliber repeater, shooting as it does a 300 grain mushrooming bullet driven with great velocity, is particularly effective against the biggest of big game. Winchester rifles and Winchester cartridges are made for each other and are endorsed by the most successful hunters.
