PONY RACING IN AUSTRALIA.

THE abortive Bill for the Suppression of Gambling, which the New South Wales Government recently introduced and withdrew, has been the means of compelling attention to the extraordinary amount of pony racing in that State. During the present year pony racing, always popular, had received an additional stimulus by the creation of a new body formed to promote the sport in rivalry with the three existing clubs. Rivalry or competition brought about the natural results: stakes were increased, entry fees were cut down, more meetings were arranged, and in a word the owners of racing ponies and galloways found themselves in clover. For some years past, as we read in the Sydney Mail, there have been over 150 pony and galloway meetings per annum in the immediate neighbourhood of the capital: since the new competition has been instituted, the average has been nearly five meetings per week: and this increase, we are told, furnished to a great extent the motive for introducing the aforesaid bill for the suppression of gambling. These pony meetings, unless we are mistaken, are all proprietary: in other words they are run on business principles with the object of earning dividends: naturally every inducement is given to the people to patronise them, and among the inducements are increased facilities for betting with the bookmakers who live on the game.

Now we hold no brief for the anti-gambling brotherhood in Australia or anywhere else: but when we read of an average of nearly five pony race meetings a week, while within the Sydney district (forty mile radius) there are only sixteen days legitimate racing in the year, we are justified in joining hands with those who ask whether the business is not being heavily overdone: and if so much pony racing makes for the best interests of the horse in New South Wales. Let us not be understood to write in disparagement of the pony: we are too well aware of the merits of the stout small horse to think all pony racing mischievous; but when racing means running four or six furlongs under feather weights it means the encouragement of such "vile and paltry" horses as George II's act sought to make an end of 165 years ago. The most indulgent, moreover, cannot refuse to admit that four or five days' racing a week can hardly be wholesome for a working population: and Mr. Wade, the Attorney-General, cannot be considered to voice a policy of harsh repression when he informed a deputation of pony owners that the State Legislature proposed to limit the number of meetings by statute and refused sanction to more than seventy in the year. This excessive indulgence in pony racing is no good thing in itself and it is all the worse for that it has done a great deal to make an end of sport which brought horses of a much better class to the front. Prior to the advent of proprietary racing in the Sydney district, country clubs directed horse racing and were able to offer stakes which brought the patronage of owners of horses of good class. The proprietary, clubs proved too [illegible] the country clubs: frequent [illegible] cheapest lines took away th[illegible] once accorded the horse races [illegible] drawn and given to the pon[illegible] game fell the prey of itinerant [illegible]akers and their stakes speedil[illegible]

Of all the States in the British Empire New South Wales is the one which can least afford to tolerate institutions which are detrimental to horse-breeding. She was the first State to make a name in the breeding industry and she retains her priority: under the circumstances it is not surprising that those who have at heart the best interests of the industry and the best interests of racing, were of one mind in approving the determination of the Government to take pony racing in hand and limit it. Australian State Governments have never adopted a narrow minded attitude towards racing: on the contrary, the value of the horse-breeding industry and the valuable part played therein by the Turf has been freely recognised as witness the policy of giving public land for race courses where such a measure seemed desirable, a tenderness for the interest was shown in that proviso which required the length of a pony course to be six furlongs only: the sharp turns on these courses have been a fruitful source of mishap in the past and a minimum of one mile would go far to ensure safer turns. This by the way: the bill is dead and what the next one in the same spirit may propose remains to be seen.

Vested interests are of course entitled to consideration and as there appear to be some 500 owners possessing 750 ponies in the Sydney district, so considerable a body may expect fair treatment. So far as the horse-breeding interests of the State are concerned, it would be no bad thing if, in the absence of a governing body, the Legislature were to take a leaf out of the book of 18th century Parliaments in England and lay down laws governing distances to be run and weights to be carried. The good pony—and by "good" we mean a pony that can carry weight and stay—is well worthy of encouragement: he is an animal whose production might with advantage be fostered in every country where horses are used. Were the New South Wales lawgivers to turn their attention to gradually mending instead of abruptly curtailing the sport of pony racing, they would have with them all men whose opinion is worth holding. The average pony run at these meetings is a weed with some thoroughbred blood in him who can carry the six or seven stone put on his back over a half mile course or less in wonderfully fast time: but he is good for nothing else. A code of rules which should prevent the racing of two-year ponies, fix the minimum distance at one mile and the minimum weight at say 8st. 7lbs., if gradually introduced by obliging proprietary executives to include an increasing number of such races in their programmes year by year, would benefit the horse-breeding, or least remove an objectionable feature and would incidentally do something to check excessive gaining. It is the number of races no less than the number of meetings which provides wagering facilities; and manifestly when the length of races is materially enhanced their number must be cut down. With half a dozen or more four furlong scurries in an afternoon the same ponies may be pulled out more than once: with as many races of useful distance it must be a good one the owner can send twice to the post on the same day. If the New South West Legislature takes upon itself to limit the number of days racing any club may hold in course of the year, there is no logical reason why it should not go farther and legislate in respect of distances and weights. We have nothing to say about the restrictions on betting: though it may be remarked that the totalisator which the New South Wales authorities regard with such pious horror has been found in countries where its use is legal to be productive of more good than harm to the morals of those whose moral welfare is a matter of concern to their lawgivers.

Early in his career Fred. Swindell used to make a book in Manchester. He had a wretched, battered, dirty, torn, worn ten-pound note, and he dealt with it in this manner. If any one won of him he tendered this note in payment.

"Oh! hang it, Fred. I can't take this for a tenner!" the recipient would protest.

"Why not, lad? I have taken it for a tenner, and thee mun do the same."

The man still held out, and Fred said, "If thee dunna like it, I'll change it for thee for a shilling."

"All right; here's the shilling."

For some time Fred. made a fine living by giving change for this ten-pound note. One day a man accepted the tenner without commend, and Fred. immediately gave him a shilling to get it back again. It is scarcely surprising that Mr. Swindell owned brewery companies, and won Cesarewitches and Cambridgeshires.

A youngster who saw a dachshund for the first time described it as "half a dog high and a dog and a half long."

Sporting Notes.

THE only event of much note to record in the Indian racing world this week is the meeting at Jubbulpore. There has been a sudden and important revival at this Central India station, and no less than four days' programmes were successfully carried out. The class of horses competing was by no means to be despised, as Mr. J. D. Scott swooped down from Dehra and made the competition uncommonly hot for the local stables. Duplex II, little one though he is, proved a trifle too speedy for any of his opponents and quite beyond the long arm of the handicapper. This meeting filled up a big gap in the Racing Calendar, and will no doubt continue on a prosperous career, now that so good a start has been effected. Details of the racing are given in the usual place.

There are many conflicting statements current anent the measurement of Blitzen. Since February last, it has been generally understood that her "pony" days were over; but recently it has been persistently stated that she will be re-measured. Whether the attempt to obtain a measurement is to be made or not, appearances at present point to her running in the open class.

Another persistent rumour is abroad respecting the demise of Barney Allen of "Camira" fame. On the other hand it is stated that the whilom bookmaker is following in the footsteps of Robert Sievier and editing a new sporting publication in Melbourne. Doubtless "the truth will out," but it often takes a considerable time in doing so.

The Tollygunge Club continues to enjoy good fortune in its racing career. Heavy cyclonic rain has put the course into good condition and entries have rolled in for five out of the six events figuring in the prospectus. The pony hurdle race has fallen through, but even should no substitute be arranged the programme is quite strong enough to provide a full afternoon's amusement. Of the six in the steeplechase Lady Gold stands out very prominently, while Lucifer, Eileen and Brown Moor are joining her old antagonists Fairy and Queen of Hearts in this sporting little contest. The Novice Stakes brings twelve into the handicapper's net, and of these Dalgai, Lucifer and Lord Chippendale are about the pick, exclusive of the new appearances, of which there is quite a handful.

The All-Comers' Cup has also been well supported and the handicapper should be able to make a good race out of it. The November Stakes for maiden horses has six only with three double entries, and the Buggy Stakes for ponies the same number, of which Blossom and Irish Boy are the only well-known public performers. With such good promise as this, the Executive may perhaps decide to include a few genuine racing events in the meeting advertised for the 17th November, which we understand is at present intended to consist for the most part of "Gymkhana" competitions.

The late rains may delay the opening of the Calcutta paperchasing season to some slight extent, but the drainage of the Ballygunge country is so mysterious a process that it is impossible to predict the date when any given locality will be dry enough to sustain a galloping horse. Taking the average of a number of years we can reckon on the first chase in the second week of December and there is no reason to suppose that the opening meet will be later than the third Friday in December this year. There will be any number of competitors for the Steeplechases and Cup this season. If Nevermore returns from Bangalore in good fettle he will stand first on the list on recent form, but there are two others that will run him very close. Lord Harry will take a deal of beating this year and Captain Holden is said to own another one equally good if not better than the bay. These horses have been in charge of Mr. J. D. Scott during their owner's absence on leave and have had the advantage of the splendid Dehra climate. Then there is Pretender, who is also said to have summered well to stand some chance of training on again this season. We have not yet seen what Mr. Hamilton's horse is really worth; but that he is, when fit and well, one of the very best horses in this class there can be no two opinions. Fusilier is perhaps the next best, if he qualifies for these races. His exhibition in the Monsoons is no criterion of his powers in a climate that suits him, and he was running very prominently in last year's Paperchase Cup, when he slipped up in a narrow lane about a mile from home, and was out of the race. Mr. Dudley Myers has purchased a nice little horse to replace Commerce, who carried him all through last season. Mr. Pugh will probably have something to move along upon, but its name has not as yet transpired. However it is as yet early to discuss the prospects of the paperchasing season, and another month may disclose a host of new-comers.

Entries for the Rawulpindi December Meeting close on the 6th instant.

Mr. W. H. Walmsley returned to Calcutta last week after his trip home. He is going strong and doubtless some of his stable will ere long be seen on the Calcutta course, where we hope they will render a good account of themselves.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—As regards the cup candidates, it may probably be said without much fear of contradiction that Mr. Apcar's two are doing the best work and are the most advanced in their preparation. Mallard indeed needed no preparation, he was thoroughly fit at Poona, where the weights allotted to him were mostly too big to accept. Fitzgrafton is looking a picture, a thoroughly refined equine aristocrat; indeed a more perfect specimen of a thorough-bred horse would be hard to find the world over. The work is being shoved into him, and there is quite clearly no doubt as to his soundness and capacity to stand it in the opinion of those who most certainly know him best. On Thursday last, he did an uncommonly good mile gallop, and finished as strong as possible in 1min. 56secs. This morning he galloped with Martinique, a wise move, for the horse has invariably galloped away from Dea, his former companion, and it may be doubted whether repeated beatings were good for the mare or whether they might not have the effect of making the horse take things too easily. Certainly he had no excuse for doing so to-day. Martinique, when in form, and she is about as good as she can be just now, will move almost as fast as anything owning four legs. She got off with a couple of lengths the best of the horse this morning, and fairly running him off his legs, got the six furlongs well ahead of him. But the time was 1min. 25secs. (on the sand), and although many and various remarks were made about the gallop, it need not cause Fitzgrafton's admirers any uneasiness. She had nothing on her back (Davis) and Thompson on the other did not work the last ounce of him. Nor is six furlongs the cup course. In short the horse is doing uncommonly well.

Long Tom is doing good long work, but has not really been asked to go yet. It is perhaps an open secret that a certain amount of care has to be taken of him. If he can be brought to the post sound and well he will very nearly win again, but it is excellent policy on Tom Ferguson's part not to overdo things within a couple of months still to go. He went round three times this morning, working alone, and on each occasion came home from the six-furlong post at about ten annas, evincing plenty of remaining powder at the finish. Munderah went round twice, in company with Olyntheus, and came the last half mile at a good bat, finishing half-a-dozen lengths to the good. There were those who said he was rolling a bit at the finish but I could not see it. He has been wearing bandages for the last couple of days; but I have the best authority for saying that this fact carries no significance with it. He knocked himself ever so slightly the other day, but no harm whatever was done and the bandages are merely a precaution. The Master did slow work only, and the same remark applies to Mallard and Contest.

Of the jumpers, Loch Lochie and Aberfoil did a fast school, the former leading all the way and jumping very freely, whereas Aberfail seemed to want a little driving. Decoration and Pennant were also going well, especially the former although he has been got out lately and these four should all do well in the big jump races at Calcutta.

Airlock, the mare who has the reputation amongst the faculty here of being one of the fastest sprinters that ever left Australia, is at present slightly lame behind, but I understand that it is only a slight rick which will be all right in a day or so. Steinhager, the Irish colt, is still backward and can hardly be expected to be anything else. Oscar Dignum has several English horses here and a nutmeg or roan grey (Jolly Abbot I think is his name), seems likely to turn out useful, whilst Vespasia is also a promising mare. Thinking over things generally, to the names of the four jumpers above mentioned must be added those of Strathspey, Seclusion, Adviser and Henrique—all good class, and there seems to be no reason whatever why the jump races in Calcutta this season should not be really good.

Wishart will probably be the first to depart from here to Calcutta, and Ferguson the last. Murphy is unfortunately laid up with a go of fever, but it is much to be hoped that he will be all right before long. We have not too many really good riders here at present: native riding boys are getting a lot of work, and they are very apt to spoil the mouth and temper of a good horse. Of the rank and file of race-horses here it may be said that they are generally doing well. There was a "bite" in the air at 6-30 this morning which was the first taste of the cold weather, and as Pringle put it "the horses felt it even sooner than we did." There was a good deal of resultant playing up, but no real trouble notwithstanding the unwelcome presence of sundry pariah dogs on the course. There are two scions of the house of Ferguson doing riding work here and one of them steers the sedate Long Tom in his daily exercise. We are promised a Gymkhana meeting somewhere between the 7th and 10th proximo, and with this mixed-up pôt pourri of information, this week's notes may perhaps be concluded.

A special General Meeting of the members of the Madras Race Club will be held at the Gymkhana Pavilion at 6 P.M., on Tuesday, the 13th proximo, to consider matters relating to the Race Meetings to be held during the present racing reason and also the finances of the Club.

We are sorry to hear that racing in Madras is not likely to be particularly flourishing during the coming season, the Race Club's little hoard having been swallowed up in the Arbuthnot smash.

This week the Kaiser has been deer-stalking in the Rominten forests, and an amusing account of a day's sport is sent to an enterprising morning paper from its Berlin correspondent. "The first stag, rather an old one, was shot shortly after breakfast. . . . . Meantime, a thoroughly high-grade stag, with irregular sixteen-pointed antlers, was reported to be roaming in another section of the forest. The Kaiser jumped into his swiftest motor-car, accompanied by Admirals von Tirpitz and Mueller, and a little after two o'clock in the afternoon got within range of his prey, and with a splendidly-aimed shot through the vitals brought the stag to earth. He weighed 389lbs." The voice comes from Berlin, but the hand is the hand of Brother Jonathan. Only he would have the originality to refer to "a thoroughly high-grade stag."

The end of the Alpine season has been marked by one of the most disastrous accidents on record, four students at the University of Lausanne having fallen to death on the Plan-Nevé glacier, above Bex, in the Valais. Fresh snow had lately fallen, the climbers refused a guide, and they attempted a route which had never before been tried. It is said that these unfortunate young men, though extremely rash climbers, were by no means devoid of mountaineering experience: but this terrible accident is another illustration of the fact that Alpine disasters are becoming more and more common among the inhabitants of Switzerland and the neighbouring countries. Perhaps from their having the mountains always, so to speak, at their front doors, they are indisposed to regard any difficult ascent as a matter demanding care and caution. When a climber goes all the way from England, he is more readily disposed as a rule, to treat his pastime seriously.

A correspondent writes:—"Ryots in that part of the Wynaad which leads into the Nilgiris are again complaining of the depredations of wild elephants. Of late years the number of wild elephants in the Wynaad, Coimbatore, and South Canara forests have increased, presumably owing to the operation of the protection Act, and one result of the increase is that the elephants do much damage to the fields and gardens bordering on the forest. The peasantry try to scare away the beasts by burning fires near their fields, by beating drums, and by producing unearthly sounds with the aid of horns and conches, but the elephants seem to have got fairly well used to all these devices. In addition to being destructive to cultivation, the huge beasts are a danger to human life, and last year, according to a return published by the Madras Government, one person in South Canara and three persons in South Malabar were killed by wild elephants, while in the previous year seven persons lost their lives."

It is stated that there is to be opened in Regent Street an establishment which for sheer luxury is probably unique. Everything connected with it is of the very best—the wood fittings are of oak, the hangings and cushions of silk, the carpets of an Oriental richness, and the colour scheme a pure glistening white. Were it not for the window fittings it might be taken for the very latest thing in boudoirs. But in the window is a succession of miniature stalls—six in all. Each stall is about 3 feet high and about the same in breadth and depth. The partition between each is of brass, and is terminated by lion heads of the same metal. The stalls are painted white, hung with white silk curtains, and on the floor of each rests a white silk cushion. Across the front of each hangs a fine brass chain, and each has a miniature door at the back. These stalls are not, as might be supposed, for a new breed of miniature ponies some 2 feet high, but will be tenanted by "toy" dogs. The place is simply a "toy" dog shop, and it is safe to say that even priceless toy-terriers have never before had so luxurious a setting—at any rate, in public. In other parts of the shop will be found tiny chairs of oak, each with its silken cushion, for a pampered pet to lie on. At the door will be an attendant in full hunting costume, velvet cap, pink coat, and white breeches, whose business it will be to show the dogs off to customers, and between whiles take them for exercise in Regent Street.

The Poona racing season was brought to a close on Saturday last with the Twelth Extra Meeting. In spite of a general exodus to "fresh fields and pastures new" the card filled well, and the wind up of the season furnished a good afternoon's sport. The three closed races all filled, after a fashion, though the horse race only drew three starters.

It was a good race, however, the big impost of 11-13, added to an extra furlong in the distance just proving too much for the favourite. The other two closed events drew fields of eight and six respectively. In the former, the half mile, three candidates from Bleach's stable finishing first, second, and third.

Some additional excitement was lent to the proceedings by the vagaries of the starting gate, which now and then refused to go up at both ends simultaneously, with the result that several jockeys narrowly escaped hanging, and in the Final Plate, Trahan got what might have been a very nasty fall through his mount Sir Galahad getting caught in the ropes and turned clean over.

The starting machine in its present form is far from being a perfected invention, and there is a great opening for the genius who can devise some form of mechanism which will prove more reliable.

A big field turned out for the Goodbye Plate, which was won after a good race by Scimitar, with Vedas beaten by a head.

The Final Plate was regarded as a walk over for Vocalist, odds of 5-2 being freely laid on him, but he only just got home from Greenstone, who would probably have won, if he had not got away badly at the start.

The 7 furlongs for Arabs was won in very easy fashion by Remembrance, ridden by Kamad, who has had his full share of winning rides lately. Next week we shall publish the usual statistics of these meetings.

His Excellency the Viceroy's shooting party in Kashmir began operations on Saturday, Colonel A. E. Ward being in charge thereof and having under his experienced direction some 2,500 beaters. So far game has not been abundant, but on Monday a very fine bear was bagged, the animal falling to Lady Minto's rifle, a good shot at over 70 yards, bruin with his best pace on.

In cancellation of all previous lists Messrs. Manton and Company have just brought out their new gun-rifle and sporting goods catalogue. It is replete with attractions to the sportsman and causes, we fear, many a breach of the tenth commandment among those whose ideals are somewhat circumscribed by their purses. Still there is variety enough and sufficient range of prices in all conscience and it would be a difficult individual who could not find himself able to make his selection from this excellent catalogue.

A well-known counsel who is an enthusiastic devotee of horse-racing was handed a telegram while conducting a cross-examination. "Hullo!" he exclaimed as he read the contents. "So-and-so has won the Derby!" "Mr. X—," remarked the presiding judge severely, "it is very unseemly that in the course of solemn judicial proceedings, where a man's liberty and reputation are at stake, you should be talking of the winner of a horse race. Er—by the way does the telegram say what were second and third?"

Athletic Notes.

THE South African footballers continue their all conquering career : they have just beaten Newport by 8 points to nil. Their record now is :—9 played, 9 won, 240 points for, 10 points against. Wonderful !

Little Mr. F. M. Blagden, the Harvard cox, has been talking since his return to America. The following account of an interview with the small man, which appeared in the New York Herald will doubtless prove of interest to English oarsmen :—

"In the first place," said Mr. Blagden, "you would find insurmountable opposition in England. The feeling among those that support and participate in the Henley regatta is decidedly against the admission of foreign crews. I talked with many English oarsmen during my visit and I received the distinct impression that they do not care to compete against outsiders.

"Of course, the Belgians will have to be admitted next year, having won at Henley this last season. But I have it on good authority that if an English crew wins the regatta next time foreign crews will be debarred thereafter. Rowing men and the public generally in Great Britain prefer to keep the affair strictly British.

"An occasional meeting between American and British crews on the Thames would meet with approval. But I do not believe that another American entry at Henley would be welcomed, and under no circumstances could any British crew be induced to compete in this country. If America should win the championship I cannot conceive of a crew from Great Britain coming here as challenger."

Mr. Blagden was asked if the visit of Harvard had not accomplished something toward dissipating the prejudice against foreign contestants, at least as far as America is concerned.

"I do not think so," replied Mr. Blagden. "The Vesper incident was not helpful in establishing a desire to admit contestants from this country. It created considerable antagonism for what was afterwards found to be a partly professional crew to race at Henley as American amateurs.

"The action, too, of the Cornell crew in 1895 has not been forgotten, and is even more a subject of remark than the Vesper affair. On that occasion the starting gun was fired before Leander was ready and Cornell rowed over the course alone. The Americans were technically in the right, but the English chose to regard the proceeding as unsportsmanlike. I could never detect much enthusiasm when possible future contests with Americans were spoken of in the presence of English oarsmen."

A German medical man publishes some interesting comparisons made at the Olympic Games respecting the size and stamina of the heart in the English, American, and German competitors respectively. Dr. Smith says that as soon as he examined, before the games, the hearts of the German sportsmen, he could prophesy that they would prove no formidable rivals. The size of the heart (says a Berlin correspondent of the Globe) was so abnormally great that in contests requiring strength, energy, and endurance, it was physically impossible that they should succeed. Results proved the truth of this forecast, and it is notable that the few German athletes who did win places were those in possession of the minimum-sized hearts.

In the American sportsmen the heart conditions were in striking contrast to those of the Germans. Many of the American athletes were found to possess hearts smaller in dimensions than the smallest heart ever measured in a German hospital. An invincible sprinter possessed the smallest heart among American competitors. A German-American athlete, rather significantly, was found to have the largest.

Among the Englishmen examined the heart was found to be slightly larger than that of the American although smaller than that shown by any other nation. A parallel case which occurred at the Games strikingly illustrated the difference in form between the English and the German athletes. In spite of an indisposition, a German athlete took part in a certain contest. Subsequent examination proved that his heart had increased at the end of the struggle to double its previous size. An Englishman, suffering from the same indisposition, returned from the contest as winner, and his heart had become smaller. The writer points out that by wrong system of training and injudicious living German athletes are doing much to cultivate heart and nerve complaints on a serious scale.

The gift of a silver challenge shield to the Jhansi Gymkhana by Sir Thomas Dewar, M.P., has resulted in the putting forth of the programme for a hockey tournament which it is proposed to hold between the 10th and 26th instant. The tournament is to be open to Jhansi, Nowgong, Agra, and Cawnpore, and is confined to Station Gymkhana Clubs, Native Regiments, and British regimental teams when the latter are composed entirely of officers. Entries close to-day.

The annual general meeting of the Calcutta Golf Club was held at the Club Pavilion on the Maidan on Friday evening last, when Mr. H. C. Begg, the retiring captain, presided over a fairly numerous assemblage of members. The accounts for the year 1905-06, which showed the handsome profit of Rs. 4,712-8-8 were duly passed, and the meeting then proceeded to elect the office-bearers for the coming season. Mr. Thomas Drimmie was unanimously elected captain of the club, a choice on which we congratulate both the members and himself. Messrs. A. E. Todd and B. Sinclair, to whom the Chairman gave well deserved eulogy for their past services, were re-elected Honorary Secretary and Honorary Treasurer respectively, and Messrs. T. R S. Mackenzie, Norman McLeod, F. H. Stewart and G. W. Walker were chosen by ballot to fill the rest of the places on the new committee. The meeting then terminated with the customary vote of thanks to the Chairman. The Club's annual tiffin and Opening Day competition will be held on Saturday next unless the recent cyclonic rain causes a postponement owing to the ground being unfit for play.

A very interesting item of golf news from home is the challenge issued by those two brilliant and promising young professionals George Duncan of the Timperley Club, and C. H. Mayo of Chipstead, to play any other two professionals a 72-hole foursome match for £50. It is not surprising that the challenge has found ready takers in Harry Vardon and Braid, and though a good game may be looked for, we fancy that the two members of the redoubted triumvirate will pull through pretty comfortably. Duncan has been coming on with giant strides lately and his victories over Braid and Taylor in the big "News of the World" Tournament stamp him as a golfer equal to the best, but well though Mayo has done since he came south, we can hardly class him as yet on a par with the other three.

Articles have been signed for a great Tennis Match between Punch Fairs and Peter Latham, who are to play the best of thirteen sets in the Prince's Club Court at Brighton, or elsewhere as may be arranged for £250 aside and the Championship of the World. Latham is a marvel, but youth must surely tell, and we feel inclined to back Fairs, though all interested in the jeu des rois et roi des jeux will admit that there can be very little in it, and some fine play and a very keen struggle may be confidently anticipated.

Messrs. Eroom and Company, of Calcutta, herald the return of the cold weather with the issue of a very nicely turned out catalogue of their specialities : it is so far their best effort in this direction and is something they may be proud of. As manufacturers of polo gear Messrs. Eroom stand pre-eminent, but their business as athletic outfitters, is a large one and much interesting detail in connection therewith will be found in this new catalogue.

The Actress : "Dear me ! I have lost the handbag containing all my diamonds. What shall I do ?"
Her manager : "Oh, don't make a fuss about a little thing like that."
The Actress : "But the handbag also contained a sovereign."
Her Manager : "Great Scott ! I'll telephone for a detective at once."

Lady (engaging servant): "We are all total abstainers, but I suppose you don't mind that ?" Servant : "Oh, no mum ; I've bin in a reformed drunkard's family before."

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 12th October 1906.

THE ravishing indiscretions of the Hohenlohe memoirs have furnished us with an inexhaustible topic of conversation this week. To Prince Alexander Hohenlohe, the Chancellor's second son, the world is told it owes these revelations, but the head of the family is made the Kaiser's whipping boy for the occasion. Rarely, if ever, have such disclosures been made concerning the highest State dignitaries of any country during the lifetime of a survivor : by these memoirs, we learn, how often rude and how extremely rude Bismarck was to the Emperor when the latter succeeded to the throne : how Bismarck endeavoured to make himself the sole channel of communication between other ministers and the throne : how he endeavoured to conduct German foreign policy entirely off his own bat with special reference to the Austrian alliance and Russian relations, matters in which the Kaiser's views were diametrically opposed to his own and how the Kaiser when he had dismissed the veteran pilot said he had had "a beastly time" with him. Four and a half columns more of revelations wired from Berlin this morning.

Enquiring minds—there always are enquiring minds which probe deeper than others—want to be informed on one or two points. How, these ask, could such revelations have been made day after day in the Deutsche Revue and Ueber Land und Meer in open defiance of so strong a man as the Emperor, when it is borne in mind that these revelations show in high light the Kaiser's resolute loyalty to the Austrian alliance : and when it is remembered that His Majesty still makes much of that loyalty for high diplomatic reasons, why, oh why, should the Emperor be angry ? These enquiring persons affect to believe that His Majesty waved the memoirs into print with one hand, and now chastens the author's family coram populo with the other. The view of the enquiring minds may be right or wrong ; the accuracy or reverse of their diagnosis does nothing to detract from the delights of this banquet of scandal. Our only complaint is that no British diplomats or dignitaries were mixed up with the business.

The fortuitous congregation of asses which represents nothing under the sun of Heaven but its own vanity is apparently determined to carry out its singularly silly idea of visiting Petersburg to present an address to the president of the late Duma. The remarkable assortment of political nobodies which composes the deputation have yielded so far as to ask that there shall be no public reception : but as the Russian authorities had come to a decision in the same sense a few days ago, the blushing modesty of last night's telegram loses something of its beauty. One rejoices, for the credit of the Indian Civil Service, to see that Mr. Mackenzie Smeaton has withdrawn from this fatuous "deputation" business and Mr. Rees strongly condemns it.

The weather these last few days has been wofully close and muggy. On Monday afternoon we had one of the most extraordinarily sudden and violent storms of rain I have ever seen in this country. I happened to be in Conduit Street at the time, and so sudden was the deluge that three horses bolted at the first onset. You could see the splash literally racing along the street like a Burma monsoon shower : it was over in half a minute, but in those 30 seconds people who could not gain shelter were literally soaked through. Since Monday it has savoured more of August than mid-October : and apple blossoms were sent me from Ireland last Saturday to show the vagaries of the season.

The autumn picture show season opened on Saturday with a particularly interesting exhibition in the Leicester Galleries. A one-man show, but as the one was Mr. Holman Hunt, and the pictures include examples of his style since 1850, there would hardly be room for another man's work. No attempt has been made to select only the best : some of the pictures indeed, such as "May Morning on Magdalen Tower" and the "Holy Innocents"

(1885 : there are two similar pictures of different dates) show him at his worst : not a few of the works, it is evident even to the eye of the amateur critic, are flat failures : it is difficult to believe that the same hand painted these and such triumphs as "The Lady of Shalott" and "the Scapegoat."

If you have not yet seen the Army Medical Report recently issued, there are some figures therein concerning the health of the troops in India which should interest you. Fever has decreased enormously. "The admissions for malaria were 321·1 per 1,000 in 1899 ; fell to 172 per 1,000 in 1904 ; and to 112·4 per. 1,000 in 1905." This reduction is attributed to the application of all the resources of modern sanitation, the destruction of undergrowth, the draining away of stagnant water, the employment of larvicides and liberal use of prophylactic quinine. Enteric has decreased also.

The Dairy Show is "on" at the Agricultural Hall this week. I have not been there myself : wonderful and fearful as are the designs in butter, fair as are the dairymaids and sleek the cows, I find one Dairy Show pretty much like another and feel no yearning for the journey across London to Islington. I am told that the exhibits of milch goats, poultry and fancy pigeons are vastly in excess of those of previous years ; and they to whom Plymouth Brethren (or is it "Plymouth Rocks"?) Archangels, Pouters and Tumblers appeal, are enthusiastic. The really important part of the Dairy Show are the milking trials and the results of these the great B. P. properly prefer to obtain from its morning paper.

The announcement of Madame Adelaide Ristori's death revived ancient memories among ancient playgoers. There be those whose standard of comparison "Ristori" ever was, and no doubt justly. She must have been a very extraordinary woman : she learned French that she might play a part in a piece of Legouvé : and she learned English in order to play Lady Macbeth. Lady Macbeth and Mary Stuart, the old hands say, were her greatest triumphs in London ; that was in the later fifties. She had no such formidable rival in England as Rachel in Paris, and her visits to London seem always to have been events of magnitude exceeding those of Bernhardt in our day. Born in 1820 she made her real beginning at the age of 14 and moved through her long life in a blaze of popularity and admiration.

There is little to say about the theatres this week, and the only new thing in view for next week is Mr. Lewis Waller's production of a new Romantic Drama called "Robin Hood" at the Lyric. The "Belle of Mayfair" has reached her 200 performance at the Vaudeville and with Miss Phyllis Dare in the part of Julia Chaldicott instead of Miss Edna May (resigned as before reported by reason of the superior type given a fellow-actress on the bills) there seems no reason why she should not go on running for a couple of hundred nights more. Miss Dare had a great reception and she played a part that suits her perfectly in a fashion that fully justified the applause she earned. The new song which has been written for her with a chorus of lovers was a great success, but perhaps the most enthusiastically received new number is the song Miss Camille Clifford has : "Why I am called a Gibson Girl."

Miss Edna May will next be seen on the stage in a new musical play, name unannounced, at a theatre not yet specified, "about the end of the year."

The last time I saw Miss Geneviève Ward was, I think, at the Marquise in the revival of "Caste" at the Haymarket about four years ago. Miss Ward does not often appear on the boards nowadays : she would probably call herself a "back number :" but she is more than welcome when she comes out of her shell for she is far and away the finest tragic actress left to us. She is to have a part in "The Virgin Goddess," a new "verse play" by a new author (Mr. R. Bessier) to be put in the Adelphi bill about ten days hence—on Tuesday, 23rd to be exact. "The Winters Pale" and Miss Ellen Terry vacate His Majesty's on the 27th for the restoration of "Colonel Newcome." "He's Much to Blame" has justified the moderate opinions expressed concerning its merits and is to be withdrawn from Terry's very soon.

Mr. Bram Stoker's "Personal Reminiscences of Henry Irving" will be published on Saturday. I suppose there will be a run on the book which by the way appears on the anniversary of the actor's death.

The Alhambra has a very interesting cinematograph show just now : to wit scenes on an Atlantic whaler, wherein we are shown, as from the heaving boat, a whale plunging wildly on receipt of the harpoon and the gathering gulls ; then the whaler herself swims into our ken and a fresh series shows the crew making fast the dead whale alongside : anon the unsavoury business of cutting up with men in in sea boots sinking knee deep in the blubber. The accompanying music is very clever.

I do not know what the "things" were to which the Rev. T. Colley referred in his lectures during last year's Church Congress week, as having been done at a séance held nearly 30 years ago : but he offered Mr. J. N. Maskelyne a sporting challenge which he backed up with £1,000 to do any one of these things "as a conjuror or professor of tricks illusionary and not as a spirit medium" at Mr. Colley's rectory or anywhere else. The challenge was given in April last and on Monday St. George's Hall saw Mr. Maskelyne's reply to it. The illusion was the "extrusion of spirit forms" from Mr. Maskelyne's ribs, apparently, and was sufficiently amazing. The medium (or conjuror) was held under the glare of a chandelier with electric lights ; while he discoursed in suitable vein, there appeared from his left side first a vapour, then a "spirit hand" and lastly grew out horizontally from Mr. Maskelyne's body, Miss Cassie Bruce, familiar enough to patrons of the Home of Mystery, who "materialised" from the now heavy cloud of vapour, moved down to the footlights and asked pathetically, Where she was? I do not know if the Rev. T. Colley was present : but he ought to hand over that £1,000 without demur.

The Austrian exhibition at Earl's Court closed with a royal row on Saturday night : some scores of hooligans of the class that ought to know better, amused themselves by charging into the crowds and incidentally making havoc of the exhibits. The police were brought on the scene in force and there was a free fight before the gangs were broken up : they were composed, it is said, of medical students : of the Bob Sawyer type one concludes.

The costly Dreadnaught has been put through her facings and her steam and manœuvring powers are reported to be all the nation could wish. The absence of vibration at all speeds, due presumably to the smooth working of the turbine engines was the subject of general remark. Her speed is the highest of any battleship afloat ; during the eight hours' "full power" trial at 23,600 horse power she made over 22 knots.

The County Council has been obliged to rescind its acceptance of offer of £55,000 a year for the Strand site which has lain so long vacant ; the promoters of the scheme for "Paris in London" having failed complete the deposit of one year's ground rent on the extended date agreed upon. Once more therefore the "Crescent site" is in the market.

The London Cabdrivers in meeting assembled have declared against the taxameter. Their spokesmen say that the instrument would place them at the mercy of "mean" people of whom there are only too many about. A mean person is one who pays the legal fare and no more. A gentleman one who pays the fare and twopence over ; a "juggins" one who pays more than a gentleman. So saith the cabmen's spokesman.

The falling birth-rate in England and Wales is once more rousing attention. It has been falling for 30 years as witness these figures in 1876 to for 30 years as witness these figures in 1876 to every 10,000 of the population were born 3,630 babies. In 1904 birth registration began to every 10,000 were born only 2,790 babies, the lowest recorded since

The Collis Diamond Syndicate which sent out the S. S. Xema to discover the Treasure Island, held a meeting on Monday. The prohibition of the Cape Government concerning the Guano Islands disturbs the syndicate but little : Sir A. Muir Mackenzie stating that the exact location of the island was still a secret. Why the expedition wanted to get to work on the Guano Islands he did not explain. The steamer is to be brought home as a matter of economy, but the party of search remains in South Africa to await the permission of the Cape Government to get to work on that secret island. Treasure seekers in Tobermory Bay have done better : they have struck oil at last : 14 bronze guns have been located about the wreck of the Admiral of Florencia and two specie chests, one filled with gold and silver have been found in ten fathoms of water ; it only remains to get them up.

SHOOTING ALONG THE CHEN-TANG RIVER.

THE schedule of our flying trip through China only allowed us five days in Hang-Chow, an interesting city of 700,000 inhabitants, so that it was with a feeling of revolt that I set out to present a letter of introduction which had been forced upon me at my departure from San Francisco. As is often the case, a most delightful surprise awaited me, and I have had many reasons to be glad I did not neglect presenting it. Instead of the severe and ancient personage the description of "prominent civil engineer" had led me to expect, I found a genial young Englishman who loved everything that bore the name of sport.

Before the meeting I had never looked upon China in the light of a hunting country, but after I had spent half an hour with my new acquaintance I began to wonder how it had ever escaped me. The tales he told me so kindled the sacred fires of Nimrod within me that I actually found myself formulating plans to stop for a few months in Hang-Chow. He told me anything from a snipe to a leopard could be found within twenty-five miles of town, and that bags of over a hundred head of assorted game were an every-day occurrence. I could not resist the temptation. I inquired whether it would not be possible to steal a glimpse of this promised land.

"Why, most assuredly," he said. "I only regret that engagements which won't bear postponing will prevent my going with you. I have an English speaking servant who is a wizard on game, though, and he can be your guide. There are a dozen guns for you to pick from in my den and as many dogs in the kennel. My junk is also at your disposal, and if you start this evening you can be back before midnight to-morrow. It will only take one day from your sight-seeing and I fancy you'll find it well worth your while."

I was so pleased at the prospect that I hardly realized the favour I was taking from a practical stranger, and I accepted the offer readily and eagerly.

Hang-Chow, capital of the Province of Che-Kiang, is built on the estuary of the Chen-tang River. This estuary is wide and navigable for a few miles above the city, but the river then narrows down to a muddy and shallow canal. Its course, from source to estuary, is marked by a broad marsh extending for several miles on either side of it. Beyond are undulating hills covered with thick brush and almost impenetrable woods. The locality is sparsely studded with tiny and primitive villages, but the inhabitants do not hunt, and except for the occasional invasion of some "foreign devil" the game is never disturbed and multiplies in peace.

My host showed me the course I was to follow on a detailed map, which he said I could take with me, and gave me all particulars. I was to sail up to a spot several miles beyond the little village of Bing-Yao, then go ashore, cross the marsh for water fowl, hunt the brush for pheasants and beat the woods for deer and wild boar, returning over the same route. He added a few valuable hints and I took my leave.

At the Hotel I found my wife awaiting me, and when she heard of the proposed trip she quietly announced that she intended to accompany me. I hazarded a few objections, but when Ah-Fu, my host's servant, arrived and assured me there would be every convenience for the lady I gave in.

The Pilgrim, my friend's junk, we found to be a typical Chinese houseboat, comfortable roomy and ugly; it measured about forty feet over all. In the stern were two cabins and a bathroom; in the centre a good-sized saloon, and in the bow a kitchen, a pantry and the crew's quarters. The boat was provided with a large sail, to be used whenever the wind allowed it, and a set of enormous sweeps for the coolies to row when sailing and towing were impossible.

We noticed signs of activity as we approached and no sooner were we on board than moorings were cast off and sail was hoisted to a fair and slashing breeze. Ah-Fu served us with an excellent dinner, once under way, and directly after it, having the morrow's work in view, we retired to our decidedly luxurious berths.

A gentle knock at the door cut short my dreams and someone announced that if I wanted to take advantage of the morning flight I'd have to be ready to start in half an hour. I was on my feet and dressed in a jiffy, and went to the saloon where my wife was already partaking of a smoking breakfast.

It was dark and quite cold when we mounted on deck. A faint mist overhung the marsh, giving it the appearance of a great sea of clouds; but above, the sky was clear and myriads of stars were twinkling. We jumped into the dingy and were rowed ashore. Here unexpected luxury awaited us. Two comfortable carrying chairs had been provided by our thoughtful guide and already stood on the bank with bearers beside them. Ah-Fu explained, smiling, that we must cross part of the marsh to take the best position, and that it would be dangerous for inexperienced people to attempt it in the dark, so he thought he'd better bring the chairs. I offered no kick, and after a perilous piece of navigation we were set down on a small knoll that occupied the centre of the swamp; the ground was fairly dry and covered with short reeds. As a measure of precaution my guide spread a heavy rug on the reeds, for me to stand upon, and depositing by me two guns and a box of cartridges he took himself and the chairs (with my wife still occupying hers) about a hundred yards away.

It was just beginning to dawn and the strange sounds of the waking marsh filled the air. Here the quack of a duck; there the whirr and splash of a rising bird; in the distance the screech of an eagle, the constant "scrip!" of the swooping snipe and the gabbling "honks" of a flock of geese. I knew them all of old and was only mystified by a short, hacking quack that I afterwards learned was the call of the swan.

As the east lightened I began to distinguish shadows against the sky and soon a whirr overhead caused me to turn sharply and fire, scoring my first kill. It was a beautiful swan, and I felt sorry I had shot it. I couldn't bear the idea of having stilled the life in the magnificent bird that lay fluttering at my feet.

At the noise of the shot my immediate neighbourhood became alive with the sound of many wings and the frightened calls of a hundred birds, and for three-quarters of an hour thereafter I enjoyed such shooting as is given to few. Though I did not fire again at a swan, there were geese, and duck of every description, to keep me busy.

When the flight began to let up my guide came over and suggested that we begin tramping, as we could do better, so we dispatched my wife and the chairs to the junk, instructing the carriers to follow us later and act as beaters.

The country around us was marshy and covered with reeds, except where a depression of the soil formed pools, ponds and lakes of open water. Beyond it ascended gradually and there were less reeds, but one met with great patches of canes, some up to one's waist, some rising to a height of ten and even twelve feet. Further on was undulating land covered with scrub and brush, and then the Ten Moo hills so dense in underbrush and stunted trees as to be almost impracticable.

The three dogs we had with us were well-bred pointers; Jack first, a four-year-old, and his two sons, Jack second and Laddy. I loosened Jack second as soon as the chairs had left us and started to cut the marsh diagonally. A brace of Wilson snipe, faultlessly pointed, were the first to come down on an easy double and Jack retrieved them nicely. Ah-Fu looked on disapprovingly and wondered at the foolishness of a white man wasting good cartridges on so small a prize when geese and swan were all round, but he was only a poor Chinaman and couldn't very well understand.

My next bird was a fat mallard, also pointed and retrieved by Jack, and I imagine few men have ever experienced the sensation of shooting duck over a pointing dog. It was certainly a novelty. After that I flushed duck, swan, geese, snipe, crane and many other varieties in quick succession, reaching dry land with full hands. I also saw several otter, but refrained from shooting them because of the dogs.

Upon reaching the brush Ah-Fu untied Jack First and Laddy and a few minutes later I was in the midst of the best pheasant shooting it was ever my good luck to experience. I had often helped to slaughter pheasants in the big drives held on European preserves and not enjoyed it, but here was thrilling sport, over the smartest of dogs, with a quantity of lively birds that seemed to be quite cunning enough to place a tree between themselves and the gun every time they rose. It was no easy shooting and I realized forcibly how much tail there is to a pheasant. In two or three cases I did not lead the bird enough, on quarter shots, and while a small cloud of feathers told me it was not a miss, my quarry went on, unchecked in its flight.

A couple of hours of the fastest possible work had loaded down the beaters and the dogs were tired, so I called a halt for lunch. This over we pushed inland and soon took the hills, where the ground became very troublesome. The underbrush, thick and tangled, rose to my chest, and there were rocks and holes underfoot, or if you followed the narrow paths roots and stones made you stumble at every step. It was an ugly jungle and Ah-Fu thought we'd better tie the dogs, as there were wild boar and leopards around us. He then signed to the beaters, who spread out fanshape behind me and they set in motion thrashing the bushes and emitting piercing little cries calculated to frighten the sitting game. Nor was it in vain. That stretch of matted undergrowth was the abode of several varieties of pheasant, of other birds very like a partridge, wild cats, civet cats, deer and wild boar, which we disturbed in our march. It was a terrible embarras de choix, but I knew what I wanted and I waited until a fine stag was jumped. He went to swell the bag and so did another handsome specimen that we found a few minutes later.

We were on board the Pilgrim by two o'clock, and a count of the bag showed 2 deer, 32 pheasants, 4 partridge, 1 swan, 4 geese, 41 duck of various kinds and 11 snipe, all by one gun in eight hours. That Christmas day is among my fondest hunting recollections.

Doctor: "What? Troubled with sleeplessness? Eat something before going to bed."

Patient: "Why, doctor, you once told me never to eat anything before going to bed."

Doctor (with dignity), "Pooh, pooh! That was last January. Science has made enormous strides since then."

The first age of man is when he thinks about all the wicked things he is going to do. This is called "Innocence." The second age is when he does all the wicked things he has thought of in his childhood. This is called the "Prime of Life." The third age is when he repents of all the wicked things he has done. This is called "Dotage."

RIVER AND LAKE FISHING IN INDIA.

VII.

IN my last article I emphasised the statement that a gaff or net should only be used for landing fish, as a last resource. My reasons for saying this are:—(1) that it is not easy in this country to train men to use these implements properly, (2) that even when properly used there is more likelihood of a mistake or accident occurring than when fish are landed by hand, and (3) that when such mistake or accident does occur you are more likely to lose your fish than when taking it out by hand. My objections to using a net are, that unless it is of unusual depth it is not suitable for landing large fish; that those hooks of the mount which are not fixed in the fish are liable to get caught in the net, and a desperate struggle on the part of the fish at this juncture is likely to result in the hook being torn out of his mouth, and in his making his escape; and that, do what you will, it is almost impossible to prevent your attendant, in the excitement of the moment, from raising the net with the handle more or less at a right angle to the bag, instead of in a line with it and at a right angle to the water, as he should do. The handle of a landing net is not built to suddenly lift up a weight of 20lbs. or more, depending at right angles from its extremity, and is very likely to break if an attempt is made to use it in this way.

A gaff, though less likely to cause disaster if a mistake be made, requires to be used rapidly and fairly accurately, to be effective. The best way of using it is to strike it into the side of the fish near the belly, between the gills and an imaginary line dropped from the dorsal fin perpendicularly downwards. There should be no pause when the gaff is struck home, or the fish may jump off it on feeling the steel.

The gaff should be sent in sharply, with a drawing movement towards the person using it, and this movement should be continuous until the fish is drawn ashore, which should be within a couple of seconds of the commencement of the stroke. When using a net, on the other hand, there should be no striking at the fish. A weight, say a twelve bore bullett, should always be fastened in the bottom of the bag, to keep it well down under water, and the best way of using it is to sink it under water and hold it motionless until the fisherman draws the exhausted fish slowly across the circular mouth, when the net should be raised quickly but quietly and the fish lifted out, with the handle and the bag of the net held perpendicularly in one straight line. There are, of course, occasions when it is impossible to shelve your fish so that he can be taken out by hand, and a net or gaff must then be used, but whichever method is adopted, one rule should always be observed, and that is, to get the fish well away from the water's edge, and for the person landing the fish to interpose himself between the water and the fish, at once.

Your attendant should be taught to stand where he will not be in the way of your bait as you swing it back for casting. Natives are very liable to stand where they run every chance of being hooked. Perhaps the easiest way of making them realise this is to swing your bait so that it will pass very close to them, and shout a warning at the same time. When they have had a few seemingly narrow escapes from being hooked, their own instincts of self-preservation will keep them out of danger, but unless you are fairly expert in casting, this method is liable to be rather more drastic in its effects than you intended. The safest place for the attendant is directly behind the fisherman, and close to him, and this also has the advantage of having practically only one figure showing on the bank instead of two. He should, of course, leave this position when you are playing a fish, and station himself, according to orders, at a convenient place for landing it. One of the hardest things to teach an untrained man is to keep his hands off the line, and the necessity for this should be explained to him before you commence fishing, and he should be warned again when the time approaches for landing a fish. One of the best men I ever met as an angler's henchman, was one Fakhroo, the son of the cooly contractor at Tangrote. He had been at the business for many years, and was never in the way, though always at hand when he was wanted. This man attended me during my fishing trip up the River Poonch, mentioned in a preceding article, and during the month he was with me I do not think he used either net or gaff half a dozen times, though I took about 150 mahseer of varying sizes during the trip. This was nearly twenty years ago and I have not met him since. I made a detailed record of the trip in the angler's book at the Tangrote dâk bungalow.

Never attempt to get the hooks out of your fish until you have killed or stunned him. If you neglect this precaution you are liable, if the fish makes a sudden movement, to find one of the hooks firmly imbedded in your hand, necessitating a painful use of the knife for its removal. The fish may be killed or stunned either by a blow on the back of the head at its junction with the body, with a stone, or by a smart blow on the side with the fist, a little behind the pectoral fin.

Before starting work again, examine every inch of your trace and mounts most carefully, to see that nothing has frayed, and that no hooks have had their points turned or blunted, and if any damage has been done, remove the damaged article, and substitute something fresh.

For some unaccountable reason, I have generally found myself successful when spinning from a ferry boat, when fishing rivers in the Hills. I noticed this particularly on the Beas River. I have often fished along seven or eight miles of this river, and have hardly taken anything except when I crossed on a ferry boat, and let my spoon out about forty yards down stream. I offer you the tip for what it may be worth. I have also found it useful to try the backwater close to the bank, which will be found just below the rapid at the head of nearly every pool, very good fish often lie here, as the shoals of small fry utilise these backwaters largely in their migrations up stream.

Since writing my last article I have received letters from men who have recognised me by my nom-de-plume, asking for information as to the best method of casting a spoon, both from the bank and when wading. Hitherto I have purposely refrained from touching on this subject lest it might be thought I had gone unnecessarily into minor details, but as I am writing more for beginners than for experienced fishermen, I hope the latter will bear with me patiently while I say a few words on the matter.

If you are using a small flyspoon it can be thrown by the overhead cast in the same way as a fly, if you have room behind you to let it swing well back at some height from the ground. With a larger and heavier spoon, however, this method entails considerable strain on the rod, and its results are wanting in neatness and accuracy. The cast should then be made sideways, either from the right or left; either side is equally easy after a little practice. The advantages of a flexible rod are very obvious when making a long cast with a spoon, no brute force, or jerky motion, is necessary. Everything should be done gently and with a swing. The first cast should be quite a short one, say one and a half times the length of your rod. The rod should be gently swung back sideways until the bait has swung to the length of the line, a slight curve in the swing of the rod and then a gentle forward swing, will bring the bait forward without a jerk at the turning point. You will probably in the first few short casts make the forward swing too quickly or too powerfully, and your bait will then fly out to the full length of the line before touching the water, when the sudden check will jerk it back slightly and make it fall in with a noisy flop which may be heard half a mile away. When the spoon touches the water, which it should do with a taut line if the cast has been properly made, keep the top of the rod stationary for a moment, or if the current is very strong lower it for an instant, to allow the spoon to get a good grip of the water, keep the line fairly taut, and turn slowly so as to face your spoon as it spins down stream, keeping the rod at an angle of about 45 degrees. When the spoon comes to the bank, raise your top to bring it to the surface, pick it quietly off the water, and cast again. Do not lift it out sharply as this may be the moment when a fish takes it. After two or three casts to accustom you to the spring of your rod, more line can be let out by degrees, by pulling it off the reel and letting it hang between the reel and the first ring of the rod, just as you are about to commence the cast, holding it against the rod with the forefinger of the right hand to prevent its sliping and removing the pressure of the finger towards the end of the forward cast to allow it to run out. If you are using a reel with a fixed check, the line should be drawn in towards the end of a large cast and held in loops between the reel and the first ring with the thumb and forefinger of the left hand, the first loop being the largest and the others gradually decreasing in size, until you have a convenient length out at the end of your rod for casting. When the forward swing is well under weigh, the grip should be loosened for the moment, retaining hold of the rod with the other three fingers, when the loops will run out through the rings in regular succession. The first loop should never be large enough to touch the ground if fishing from the bank, or the water if wading.

If you are using a reel with a removable check such as a Malloch or a Silex, the slack can be wound up instead of gathered in loops, if you are using anything heavier than a fly spoon, and the line will then run out straight from the reel for a long cast after a little practice. For a beginner, or even for an old hand if trying a new rod, it is as well to practice casting on dry land with a weight attached to the line, or better still a spoon without mounts. If the mounts are left on they will get damaged, and the hooks will get blunted, by contact with the ground.

SHOOTING QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I shall be much obliged if any one will inform me as to—

(1) The muzzle velocity.
(2) The muzzle energy.
(3) Trajectory of the ·350 (9 millimeter) Mannlicher Schonauer, and Mauser rifles firing a ·310 grain bullet.

OPORTET VIVERE.

BOMBAY, 24th October 1906.

[We do not know of any Mannlicher Schonauer rifle of ·350 bore, shooting a ·310 grain bullet; but if, as we think, our correspondent refers to the ·350 Mauser, the muzzle velocity is 2,150ft. secs., the muzzle energy 3,200ft. lbs., the trajectory about 3 inches at 100 yards and the weight of bullet 310 grains—ED.]

THE PROPOSED INDIAN SWIMMING CHAMPIONSHIPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to the Indian Swimming Championship races advocated in your issue of the 25th ultimo, may I suggest that they should be, if possible, held in conjunction with Lady Minto's fair in February. The Championship distances would, I presume, be 100 yards, 220 yards, 440 yards, and the half mile and mile. For these events the tank near the rink might be utilised; the length is roughly 120 yards and the breadth 75 yards; I don't know the depth. The ends, of course, would have to be boarded off square and the single length made either 110 yards or 55 yards—preferably the former.

I suggest the tank as the Calcutta Bath would scarcely hold a sufficient number of spectators to admit of the meeting being run without loss.

J. S. WATKINS.

CALCUTTA, 30th October 1906.

[We fear our correspondent's suggestion is not likely to commend itself to those who may possibly be induced to take up this matter of Swimming Championships. They are likely to be too busy at that time of the year; during the swimming season they might find the time. The Calcutta Swimming Bath would hold quite as many spectators at Rs. 5 per head as would more than pay all expenses, while if the donors of Cups will only come forward the Championships might be easily started. But not in the cold weather and not at Lady Minto's fête we think.—ED.]

PASTE FISHING FOR MAHSEER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have been much interested in "Yuba Bill's" excellent letters on Indian fishing, and am quite in accord with all he says except as regards paste fishing for mahseer.

I do not consider the rough and ready system of having a bullet in paternoster form at the end of the trace, and attaching the hook dropper-wise above, at all equal to the plan I am about to describe.

The bottom of single gut a couple of yards in length, has an eyed hook at the end. A foot or fifteen inches above the hook is a single shot about B.B. size. There is a small spherical cork float, the size of a marble, or a trifle larger, with a hole through its centre through which the line goes. A peg of wood, or a piece of quill, keeps the float in any desired position with this arrangement, which is merely a modification of the tackle used for grayling fishing in English rivers, I had considerable success in various northern Indian streams.

The fishing is done in the eddies at the heads of pools, the float being set so that the paste and a foot or eighteen inches of gut are on the bottom. The single shot not being heavy and being at a considerable distance from the pellet of atta, the letter curls freely round in the circling eddy, while the little float shows at once when a fish takes.

I found this a most sporting way of catching small mahseer of from two to eight pounds, when the water was slightly clouded. I used the lightest of cane rods and fine gut.

On such gear these dashing little fish gave splendid sport. I never remained long in one place, for I found that the paste was taken very soon, or not at all.

Feeding fish very commonly wait in the eddies looking out for anything which is brought down by the stream. The paste follows practically the same course as loose particles of food, and therefore is very quickly seen by the fish.

Mahseer will also readily take a dead bait which is allowed to circle round the eddies much in the same way as the atta. When using dead bait I had no float or shot on the line, but the long shanked single hook, which was drawn into the vent with the help of a baiting needle till only the point showed outside, had a little lead wire wound round it to make the bait sink readily. This simple tackle was also successful in water which was too thick for spinning. I think both the above plans of fishing coloured water are far superior, and more sporting, than live baiting. Their special strong point is that they permit of one covering much more water, and so showing the bait to many more fish.

Lastly a word as to the atta, it should always be made out of flour containing a good percentage of gluten. Then if thoroughly kneaded and worked up it will be found to stay on the hook perfectly, without any necessity for adding cotton wool. In certain streams the mahseer are said to prefer paste coloured, just as they colour dough for roach fishing in England.

The Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta.

Issue of Rs. 25 lakhs Four Per Cent. Debentures repayable in Thirty Years.

Tenders are invited for a loan of 25 lakhs of Rupees upon Debentures bearing interest at 4 per cent. per annum, to be issued under the provisions of Act III of 1890 (B. C.), to provide funds for the purposes of carrying out certain works connected with the Port of Calcutta, sanctioned by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, which loan, and the interest thereon, will be a charge on the property of the Commissioners, and of the tolls, dues, rates, rents and charges leviable under the Calcutta Port Act.

2. The Debentures will be for sums of Rs. 100 each, or multiples of Rs 100 as may be desired, made payable to order, and carrying interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum payable half-yearly on the 1st day of June and the 1st day of December at the Bank of Bengal, upon presentation of the Debenture. The first payment of interest will be made on the 1st June 1907.

3. Provision will be made for a sinking fund for such an amount, invested half-yearly, as will be sufficient to liquidate the debt in thirty years.

4. Two per cent. of the amount tendered for to be paid at the time either into the Bank of Bengal, Head Office or Branches, to credit of the Commissioners or into the Commissioners' Office, and the balance on the 1st day of December 1906, from which date interest will run. The deposit of two per cent. will be returned if an allotment be not made, and it will be forfeited if an allotment, after being made, be not fully taken up by the 1st day of December 1906. In case a less number of Debentures is allotted than is appplied for, the excess of the deposit will be applied in, or towards payment of, the balance due upon such number as may be allotted.

5. Tenders, made out in forms to be obtained at the Commissioners' Office and from the Bank of Bengal, Head Office or Branches, will be received by the Secretary to the Commissioners up to noon of Monday, the 5th day of November 1906, accompanied by a receipt from the Bank of Bengal or the Secretary to the Commissioners for the deposit abovenamed. A separate tender should be made for each rate offered.

6. The tenders will be opened by the Commissioners in Meeting on Monday, the 5th day of November 1906.

Honorary Secretary:—W. H. TODD, ESQ.

First Day, Tuesday, 23rd October 1906.

ALMOST emphatic affirmative must be given to the question as to whether this meeting opened successfully or not—if, indeed, any doubt ever existed as to how it would turn out after it was known who were engineering it. There were plenty of people, plenty of horses, a plethora of riding talent, large fields, good finishes, a capital course, full lotteries overnight—in short there was on hand everything that goes towards insuring a successfull race meeting. We append details :—

STEWARDS:

A. D. YOUNGHUSBAND, ESQ., I.C.S.
LIEUT.-COL. W. C. BEEVOR, C.M.G., R.A.M.C.
LIEUT.-COL. F. C. KING-HUNTER, 24th Regiment.
LIEUT.-COL. C. H. ALEXANDER, R.G.A.
MAJOR F. POTTS, R.F.A.

Honorary Secretary:—J. ROME, ESQ.

First Day, Tuesday, 23rd October 1906.

THE Executive are to be congratulated on the good condition they had got the course into after the inundation earlier in the month and which caused a postponement of the meeting. The entries were encouraging and there was support from a strong Quetta contingent which included Captain O. Winter and his fairly extensive stable. There was a tolerably good attendance, good music by the Band of the 24th, a disabled bookmaker who cried the odds from an invalid chair, and sport of sufficiently good quality to please most tastes. Details:—

Won by a length; two lengths between second and third. Time—2mins. 8secs.

Second Day, Thursday, 25th October 1906.

The handicapping of Mr. Kennyon was subject matter for commendation on all sides to-day, and as we had good fields out for most events the result was exceptionally good sport. Music and creature comforts by the Band and Officers of the 24th Regiment were prominent features of a very pleasant afternoon. The injured bookie was not en evidence to-day, the illadvised exertions of the previous day having necessitated the taking of a back seat; his penciller laid odds that were not generally appreciated. Details.

GHIZRI PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the winner. Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For C.-B.'s. 6 furlongs.

THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK.

THE racing army from Leicester was divided in its allegiance, the metropolitan brigade returning to join their confrères who had assisted at Folkestone, and bearing down in strong force on Kempton, where the best racing of the week was to be enjoyed. Thanks to the recent rains, the executive had not solely to rely upon their perfect system of irrigation from the well so happily discovered some years ago, and the going was as perfect as possible. The weather prognostications were not favourable, but a half-hearted sort of morning changed to a charming afternoon, and a goodly company graced the proceedings. The members' enclosure was well-filled, the fair sex as usual being strongly in evidence, and during the intervals the pretty paddock, a favourite rendezvous, was filled by an appreciative crowd. Tattersall's was crowded, and the road brigade made a brave show on the far side of the course, where the old-fashioned four-in-hands towered in old English state and dignity above the serried ranks of the motor-car. Details:—

IMPERIAL PRODUCE PLATE—Of 3,000sovs.; the nominator of the winner receives 200sovs., the nominator of the second 100sovs., the nominator of the third 50sovs., the owner of the second 200sovs., and the owner of the third 50sovs. out of the stakes; for two-year-olds; 6 furlongs, on the straight course.

Won by a head; a length and a half divided second and third, Cythera was fourth, Marconigram fifth, Dumbarton Castle sixth Var seventh, Brother Bill eighth, and Albert Hall last.

A glance at the attendance at Kempton Park on Saturday, the 6th instant, showed how many representative folk had taken quarters up in Town again, as faces familiar as celebrated in the Senate and the Bar, the Sister Services, music, literature, art, or the drama met the eye at every turn. Society, too, was well represented, many titled supporters of the national sport coming down to see the Duke of York's Stakes, and as usual the fair sex was in strong evidence, its charming toilettes making the pretty paddock a thing of beauty. The executive are to be congratulated on a good muster, Tattersall's being crowded as usual, and now that the use of Westrumite is becoming so universal more motors than ever were on evidence. It must have been a treat to the jockeys to gallop over such turf, particularly after the parched plains of late, and less fortunate meetings may well envy Kempton's handy hydrant system, which would have saved the situation had not the recent rains arrived in the nick of time. The weather was gloriously genial for the season of year, fields panned out well, and finishes were close and exciting, and including the favourite's victory in the big race—and what a win it was!—the talent came back on pretty good terms with themselves. Details of the important races.

DUKE OF YORK STAKES (Handicap)—Of 2,000sovs. (1,800sovs. in specie and 200sovs. in plate or specie at the option of the winner); the owner of the second receives 200sovs., and of the third 100sovs. out of the stakes; 1 mile, on the Jubilee Course.

Mr. J. B. Joel's ch g Dean Swift, by Childwick—Pasquil, 5yrs., 8st. 9lbs. ...	H. Randall	9
M. Ephrussi's ch m Champ d'Or, by War Dance—Eighteen Carat, 4yrs., 8st. 3lbs.	Ranech	10
Capt. Laing's b c Paddington, by Martagon—Padua, 3yrs., 6st. 10lbs. ...	E. Hardy	11
Mr. E. A. Wigan's b c Sarcelle, by Gallinule—Croceum, 3yrs., 7st. 10lbs. ...	G. M'Call	12

(Winner trained by C. Peck.)

BETTING: 7 to 4 agst. Polymelus, 5 to 1 Roseate Dawn, 9 to 1 each Kuroki and Chestnut, 10 to 1 Catapult, 100 to 8 Caravel, 100 to 7 Champ d'Or, 100 to 6 Sarcelle, and 20 to 1 others (offered).

The task of weighing out was accomplished in good time, and according to the numbers on the card the field, numbering a dozen, paraded. There was not much delay at the post, and to a good start Sarcelle was first to break the line, but was steadied. On setting down, Paddington came on in front of Catapult and Polymelus, with Sarcelle and Roseate Dawn next, well clear of Champ d'Or and Killeagh, while Golden Measure and Dean Swift, who began slowly, were struggling in the rear. In this order they ran till six furlongs from home, where Polymelus deprived Paddington of the lead, and Roseate Dawn went on third, in front of Catapult and Sarcelle; then at an interval came Caravel and Chestnut, with Kuroki next. Entering the straight, where Paddington gave way, Polymelus was a good two lengths in front of Roseate Dawn on the inside, with Catapult,

Caravel, and Chestnut next, and Kuroki improving his position on the outside. Thus early, however, the race was all over, as, though Kuroki made up ground at the finish, he could not catch Roscate Dawn, who, at the same time had no chance of overhauling Polymelus, the favourite cantering at his ease in the smoothest style, and gaining a ridiculously easy victory by five lengths; three lengths divided second and third Catapult was fourth, Chestnut fifth, Golden Measure sixth, Caravel seventh, Killeagh eighth, Dean Swift ninth, Champ d'Or tenth, and Sarcelle last. Time—1min 40⅘secs.

BETTING: 3 to 1 agst. Galleot, 7 to 2 Alt Mark filly, 9 to 1 Morla, 6 to 1 Skevening, 8 to 1 each Billidere, Tozer, and Wafe II. colt, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won by a length and a half; a head divided second and third. Billidere was fourth, Morla fifth, Wafer II. colt, sixth, Skevening seventh, Eagerness eighth, Tozer ninth, and The Cherub last throughout.

NEWMARKET.

Rain, if not quite so opportune as anxious owners and trainers desired, came in time to save the situation at Newmarket, for what a Cesarewitch week it would have been had the Heath remained in the Sahara-like state of the "First October." So thankful for favours from the Clerk of the Weather, sportsmen addressed themselves to the situation. How readily the public responds to any reasonable concession was incontestably proved by the immensely increased number of passengers the reduced weekly first-class tickets issued by the Great Eastern Railway being in great demand. If the company could see their way to making some allowance to their third-class patrons, whose name would be legion under a similar advantage, and a train at a more conveniently later hour, there would be no complaints, as at the last meeting, of the paucity of the attendance. The service is so much improved, and people like to dine and sleep at homed It was an April-like morning in complexion and temperature the country looking fresh and green under a grey sky, but prepared for the worst regarded the chance of a wet day with equanimity. Details of the important races:—

(Winner trained by Hon'ble G. Lambton.)

BETTING: 11 to 10 on Glasconbury, 5 to 2 agst. Quair, and 4 to 1 Nurang.

Won in smart fashion by half a length; a bad third. Time—3mins. 6⅕secs.

On Tuesday night another of those drenching showers that make themselves heard as well as felt put the finishing touches to the heath, which could well do with it, and her temporary exhibiton over, Nature, calm and serene, greeted the early birds yesterday morning with smiles. Hardly a breath of air was stirring; the light clouds, almost motionless in a pale blue sky, giving the sun such scope, that amidst the bricks and mortar it was as hot as July. Royal weather, indeed, on a Royal occasion, as His Majesty, always a welcome visitor to Newmarket, was present to see the Cesarewitch, his patronage attracting an enormous attendance. Stalwart William I'Anson was for the time a popular hero, and that he had a strong army of followers was evident to the experienced eye, as the stroll six abreast, with no idea that anybody else wanted a bit of the pavement, is a north-country failing. Traps of every description drove heavily freighted coursewards, motors glided meteor-like along the excellent Jockey Club road; while, as the specials rolled in, the crowd of pedestrians became denser. It was a brilliant company that greeted the King, the cream of our country's birth, beauty, and intellect, and the foreigner who wanted to know who's who in 1906 could have filled a small volume with celebrities. In Tattersall's there was little elbow room to spare, and the new outer enclosures were crammed, all Newmarket turning out to a man A slight haze brooded over the heath, through which the Ditch and the Plantation loomed in slumbrous fashion, a contrast to the feverish bustle and excitement raging in such close proximity. Details:—

CESAREWITCH STAKES.—A handicap of 25sovs. each, 10ft. with 500 added; the owner of the second horse receives 20sovs. and of the third 100sovs. out of the stakes. Cesarewitch Course. 2½ miles.

[Place betting in proportion.]

With a general tendency to drag, the forty minutes' interval was not too big an allowance for an inspection of the twenty-four runners, and this was shown by the fact that the white flag was not hoisted till eighteen minutes past three, and the start took place twenty minutes after the advertised time. There were only three awkward ones at the post—Bibiani, Spate, and Zelis, the first named being the ringleader. It generally happens, however, that fractiousness pays its way, and Spate got off in front of his field, followed by Mintagon, Noctuiform, and Beppo, with Catscradle, Speculor, Royal Dream, and Sandboy in a cluster, whilst Feather Bed and Bibiani were last away, except Zelis, who, jumping off sideways, lost something like a couple of lengths. This order was preserved across Choke Jade, and making the turn at the Ditch gap on to the Flat. Winwick's fetlock gave way, and he dropped astern, falling a furlong from the Bushes. The field came into sight like a cavalry squadron, and here Spate increased his lead to six lengths from Mintagon. Noctuiform and Catscradle thus early gave way, and Beppo went on third from Royal Dream and Marliacea, with Mintagon, going great guns, next. At the entrance of the cords Mintagon deprived Spate of the lead, with Banana now going on third in front of Manaton and Royal Dream, whilst Bibiani began to come through her horses next, in advance of Beppo and Marliacea. Then at a slight interval lay Achilles, clear of Hammerkop and Sandboy, behind whom lay the retiring Noctuiform and Whinbloom, while Zelis was still last. Here Winwick fell. Nearing the Bushes, Mantagon had increased his lead to four lengths of Spate, whilst Manaton went on third, closely pursued by Bibiani, Royal Dream, and Beppo. Then, after a gap of some three lengths, lay Speculor, Marliacea, the moving up, staying on Alderman, Hammerkop, and Sandboy who handed Achilles, and behind these was the well beaten Noctuiform. Whinbloom, Feather Bed (nevermore prominent than this), Nightfall and Fire Drake. Coming down the hill, Manaton began to falter, as did Spate, and Bibiani took second place to Mintagon, whilst Beppo, plodding on was upsides with Royal Dream, the leading division having Alderman at their heels. A regular Yorkshire cheer thus early went up, as unless he fell down, the race was all over, and Trigg, just keeping Mintagon in his stride, sailed past the post six lengths in front of the other north-country champion, Bibiani, who beat Royal Dream by a length and a half. Close up came Beppo, ridden out fourth, Spate a moderate fifth, Manaton sixth, Alderman seventh; Speculor eighth, Marliacea (who broke down) ninth, Whinbloom tenth, Feather Bed eleventh, Noctuiform twelfth, Achilles thirteenth, Sandboy fourteenth, Nightfall fifteenth, Hammerkop sixteenth, Fire Drake seventeenth, Peter's Pride eighteenth, and Catscradle last except Zelis. Time—3mins. 56⅘secs.

To-day the boisterous wind and leaden skies rendered the conditions for the concluding stage at headquarters less agreeable, but the rain held off. Honolulu had little difficulty in securing the Exning Handicap, for which she started equal favourite with Home Truth and Lovania, the latter occupying the position of runner-up. Jolly Jenny filly scored all the way in the Two-Year-Old Plate, to find subsequently a new owner in Mr. Larnach at 300 guineas. Details:—

ASSOCIATION RULES.

There is a curious similarity in the results on Saturday in the first and second division of the League and the Southern League. Ten matches were played in each, and six home wins were recorded in the respective Leagues, with three wins by visiting teams and one drawn game. The total tally of goals in the thirty games was larger than usual, chiefly due to the prolific scoring in the Southern League, 38 being credited to the twenty clubs in this competition, 30 to the Second Leaguers and 29 to the First Leaguers. The winners claimed 19 goals in the premier division of the League, the losers 8, and there were two in the drawn game; in the second division the winners scored 23, the losers 5, and the drawn game yielded 2, while in the Southern League 27 were credited to winning teams, 7 to losers, and 4 to the teams who provided the draw. A dozen of the sixty clubs failed to score, and this is a smaller percentage than usual.

The results in only three of the Southern League games were similar to the corresponding matches last season, New Brompton again winning at Northampton, Norwich City suffering their second defeat at Bristol, and Brentford once more going down at Upton Park before West Ham United, Watford, Swindon, and Southampton each gain a point, but Reading lose two, and Queen's Park Rangers two. In the League three results are merely a repetition of last season's form, Bury gain two points and Sheffield Wednesday and Derby County each one, but Sunderland and Blackburn Rovers both had 1905-6 victories converted into defeats. In League II. the results correspond with last season in three instances, Glossop and Blackpool each lose two points, Burton United lose one, and West Bromwich Albion and Bradford City both gain one.

The last unbeaten certificate in the Southern League has now been lost. After playing five matches in September without suffering defeat, Norwich City were beaten on Saturday at Bristol, where they also went under last season. There was no element of luck about the win of the Rovers, who, after an indifferent opening, have settled down to really good football. Southampton had an experience just the reverse to that which befell Norwich. Five games played in the opening month had not provided them with a win, two drawn games being the best that they could boast of, and they were nineteenth on the table. They went on the field against Millwall, at the Dell, in a do or die spirit, and their restless energy and determination, the outcome of sheer desperation, enabled them to win in convincing style. The Dockers were quite off their game. Another meritorious performance was that of New Brompton, at Northampton. The Bromptonians have not done so well as was expected, looking at their team on paper, and the 2 points garnered in at the Midland town are, therefore, all the more welcome. Congratulations to Brighton on their win at Reading.

There was only one surprising result in the four Southern League games played in London—the defeat of Queen's Park Rangers, at Park Royal, by Portsmouth. When the season opened I pointed out that, looking at the constitution of the club, Portsmouth should be formidable rivals to the top clubs, and their present record suggests the fulfilment of this prediction. They are only tow points behind Tottenham, with a couple of games in hand. The Rangers were beaten by a team that showed more skill and better conception of the finer points of the game. At Tottenham the Crystal Palace found the task allotted to them of greater magnitude than they could accomplish, but so well did they play that there should not have been a three goals margin at the finish. It was a fine sporting encounter, and the Palace are bound to become very popular if they continue to show the same spirit, and play such good football as at Tottenham on Saturday. The winners were up to their old-time standard, and are now going great guns. Fulham, short of Hamilton, the much-discussed centre, were in a happy mood against the robust, hard-working Leyton team, and West Ham delighted their supporters by the manner in which they ran out winners at Upton Park, especially as Brentford offered such strenuous opposition.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE TABLE.

The chief feature of the Southern League table is the respectable position occupied by some of the clubs which last season were always struggling in the neighbourhood of the bottom. Luton and Reading appear to have gone all to pieces. Result to date :—

The Arsenal have gone to the top and the South is greatly delighted. Two circumstances brought about their elevation to the dazzling position they now fill—the defeat of Liverpool at Woolwich, and the triumph of Sheffield Wednesday over Aston Villa at Owlerton. Seven games have been played by Woolwich and these have yielded 11 points, while their goal record is in their favour by two to one. This is a clear gain of 4 points as compared with last year for a similar number of games, while the goal record is much better. It is earnestly hoped that the honour which the Arsenal have earned by merit will not be of an evanescent character, but it is certain they will not long retain it unless they revert to the form which they showed after the blunder at Bury. On Saturday they won, it is true, but they did not give a sparkling display, though their lack of cohesive methods was partly due to the robust but perfectly legitimate methods of the Liverpool defenders, who had apparently made up their minds to break up the machine-like movements of their opponents. They succeeded to a large extent and but for a strange blunder by Hardy who otherwise gave a most finished display the Arsenal would have only divided the spoils.

Keep a watchful eye on Bolton Wanderers. Their doings have had bestowed upon them scarcely the attention they deserve. They now have ten points from six matches, and are the only club in the three big leagues who have not lost a game. With a goal record of 13 to 5, and two wins and a draw, as the result of their three away matches, with a similar record for home games, they may well be on good terms with themselves Bristol City lost their first match on foreign soil, Everton winning by two clear goals, and Stoke, who had hoped to obtain two points, went under at home to Manchester United. Stoke, Middlesbrough and Blackburn Rovers have not yet won a game. Notts County lost their first game, Birmingham winning on their own ground, and another important result was the defeat of Newcastle United, at Bury, by the odd goal in five. One of the best performances of the day was the success of Sheffield United at Sunderland, and it was altogether unexpected particularly in view of their heavy defeat when they visited Bolton.

Chelsea have not had a long period at the head of the table. They went to Nottingham on Saturday, and the Forest, who have recently shown a great revival of form, defeated the Metropolitans, who made a splendid but ineffectual struggle. The only undefeated side in the League are Hull City, who played for the first time Pearson, of Chelsea, at centre-forward, and he signalised his début by scoring three goals, all from E. G. Wright's centres. Clapton Orient were an easy second to West Bromwich, but the Throstles have not gone to the head of affairs, as Leicester Fosse defeated Wolverhampton Wanderers by two clear goals, and thus regain pride of place. Leeds City did well to beat Burton at the brewery town and Stockport astonished everbody by winning at Blackpool.

THE F. A. CUP.

There was an enormous number of matches in the first round of the qualifying competition of the F. A. Cup on Saturday, and many clubs not engaged in this competition were playing their ties in the first round of the Amateur Cup. It is most unfortunate that the dates clash because in numerous instances a club is entered for both, and this means a serious dislocation of fixtuses. Wisdom, however, is gained by experience, and it is understood that this is one of the points to which the Amatuer Cup Committee will direct their attention when they consider a new scheme of readjustment of details. Taking Saturday's F.A. Cup ties, one of the most remarkable results was the defeat of Cheshunt by Apsley, the Herts Cup holders, by 7 goals to love. This is inexplicable. Clapton had a very easy journey at Chelmsfold, being altogether too good for the Essex County town team, but another old-time amateur club in Marlow went under at Aylesbury. London Caledonians met Civil Service, and the result between these two Isthmian League Clubs was a win for the Scotsmen, who are a really good side this season.

RUGBY RULES.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

FOURTH MATCH vs. DURHAM.—The first engagement of the South Africans in the North attracted a rare crowd to the West Hartlepool ground on Saturday. The many changes which had been made in the constitution of the Durham team since its first selection led most people to believe that the result would be another easy victory for the Colonials. But for the unfortunate injury to Neilson, however, the difference in the scores would probably have been exceedingly small. The hopes of the Durham supporters were raised to high pitch when within a few minutes of the start ball was sent out by Sivewright, and Taylor, Neilson, and Chapman raced away for the line. Neilson had just transferred to the latter when he was thrown heavily, and had to leave the field. It was a brilliant piece of work, and almost ended in a try. Short-handed as they now were, the Dunelmians continued to press for some minutes, and Taylor, securing from Knaggs, dropped a magnificent goal, though closely pressed by several opponents.

This, the first score registered against the Colonials since their arrival on our shores, was greeted with tumultous applause, but very little time elapsed before it was more than equalized by a fine try by Reid, to which Carolin easily added the major points. The play of the South African three-quarters was simply irresistible for the time being, and very soon Raaff in turn made his way across the Durham line, and Carolin effected another splendid conversion. Durham played up gamely after this second reverse, which seemed to indicate that they were in for a severe beating, and, thanks to the resourcefulness of Taylor, Sivewright, and Ellwood, they were able to stave off repeated attacks by the 'Springboks." The home forwards were more successful in getting the leather from the packs, but in wheeling and dribbling they could not hold their own against the big Colonials, and play was confined to the Durham half until Taylor, with a great kick, which reminded one of his best days, gave the visitors another turn on the defensive. Repeated efforts by the Africans to change the game were checked by the plucky play of the Durham halves, but weight told in the end, and Carolin was given possession in a position from which he dropped with unerring aim, and brought the visitors' total up to 14 points Durham again took the aggressive after the restart, and pressing the attack with surprising vigour, considering their inferiority in numbers and weight, were twice within close range of the visitor's citadel. The aspect was again quite changed, however, after a free kick in favour of the Colonials, and but for a grand clearance by Sivewright, it is probable that a further augmentation of the Africans' already substantial score would have resulted. At half-time the scores were :—

SOUTH AFRICANS ... 3 goals (1 dropped) (14 points)
DURHAM ... ... 1 dropped goal (4 points).

Durham made a capital start in the second half, holding the Colonials on the defensive until Loubser transferred with a long drop, and Stegmann and de Melker in turn were both almost over within two or three minutes, the smart tackling of the home backs just averting disaster on each occasion. "Scrum" after "scrum" took place close to the home goal-line and a score was looked for every moment, but at length Knaggs, whose play all through had been beyond all praise, cleared with a judicious drop into touch. Soon after this gallant player was brought down heavily, and for the moment it appeared that he would have to join Neilson in retirement, but he took his place again, amid cheers, and Durham were once more seen on the aggressive. The visitors, however, soon got going again, and once more Durham had a hard task to defend their line. One of the outstanding features of the game, however, was the keen tackling of the home backs, and the fine judgment displayed by their halves in particular, which defeated all the efforts of the Colonials during the earlier part of the second period. At length, however, as the result of a fine run by Marsburg, the Africans got clean away, and after a few exchanges Loubser ran over practically unopposed. The position for the kick was a difficult one and D. Morkel failed to add the goal points. The play became more open after this, and the Durhams, though still mostly engaged on the defensive, occasionally came very close to their opponents' line. When time was almost up, Stegmann added another try for the visitors, and Morkel converted. Result :—

SOUTH AFRICANS ... 4 goals (1 dropped), 1 try (22 points)
DURHAM ... ... 1 dropped goal (4 points).

THE GAME IN SCOTLAND.

The final for the Glasgow Cup monopolised the attention of football enthusiasts on Saturday. The Celts entered on the contest with a record which made them favourites. They had not lost a goal in any competition this season, and when the teams took the field at Ibrox there would be 40,000 spectators. When Sinclair was beaten shortly after the start, by Fairfoul, for the first time this season, the scene which followed reminded one of the enthusiasm of an international. The Third continued to display good form, and an exciting first half ended in their favour by 2 goals to 1. In the second half the Celts' combination told, and they eventually retired winners of a game which reflected great credit on their opponents, by 3 goals to 2. The gate and stands amounted to £1,081.

In the League competition Partick Thistle, failing to display the same good form they showed against the Rangers a week ago had to own defeat at Port Glasgow. The match at Aberdeen was notable for the grand display by the goalkeepers, and a draw reflected great credit on the visitors. Motherwell accounted for their county rivals easily by 3 to 0, while the Airdrieonians deserved to win by more than 1—0 against St. Mirren. Rombach played brilliantly at back for Airdrie. Clyde, as anticipated, proved too much for the disappointing Hibs at Shawfield. Morton did well at Dundee, and were not beaten till close on the finish, when the only goal of the match was scored by Dainty from a penalty.

The East of Scotland Shield final—Hearts vs. Leith Athletic—resulted in a narrow win for the Hearts by 1—0. The game was a very poor one, and was quite unworthy the clubs engaged; Results :—

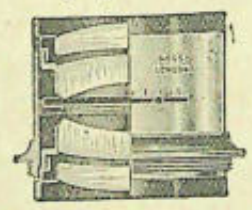
Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

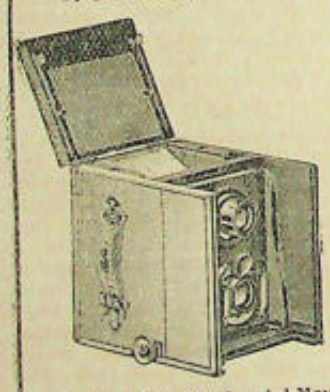
WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.



The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.



Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses that between Bill Stonelake (Clearkenwell) and Bert Slark (Holloway), who were matched to box fifteen rounds for £25 aside and the club purse. The lads belong to the feather-weight class, and are well known, and opinions as to the issue were equally divided. Proceedings commenced with the semi-finals of the middle-weight novices' competitions, the opening series of which were decided on Thursday last. Of the three competitors left in Luke Huntley (Notting Hill) received the bye, while Arthur Bennett (Walworth) by defeating Harry Harry (Battersea) in the second round qualified to meet the Notting Hill man in the final. This was succeeded by a series of six rounds contests in which George Randell (Islington) out pointed Harry Tolfree (Bermondsey), Harry Stirling (Stepney) beat Jim Williams (Marylebone) in half a round, and after a good bout Alf. Clarke (Clerkenwell) beat Bill Palmer (Bermondsey).

After the usual interval, preparations were made for the principal event. Both men looked in capital condition. The contest, although very keenly contested, was scarcely so exciting as was excepted ; in fact, there was very little variety in the proceedings, each in turn leading and rushing to clinches. This mode of progression continued throughout, and although Slark was frequently at fault through forcing his forearm up in his rival's face, the ruling official favoured him at the close.

FIFTEEN ROUNDS CONTEST.

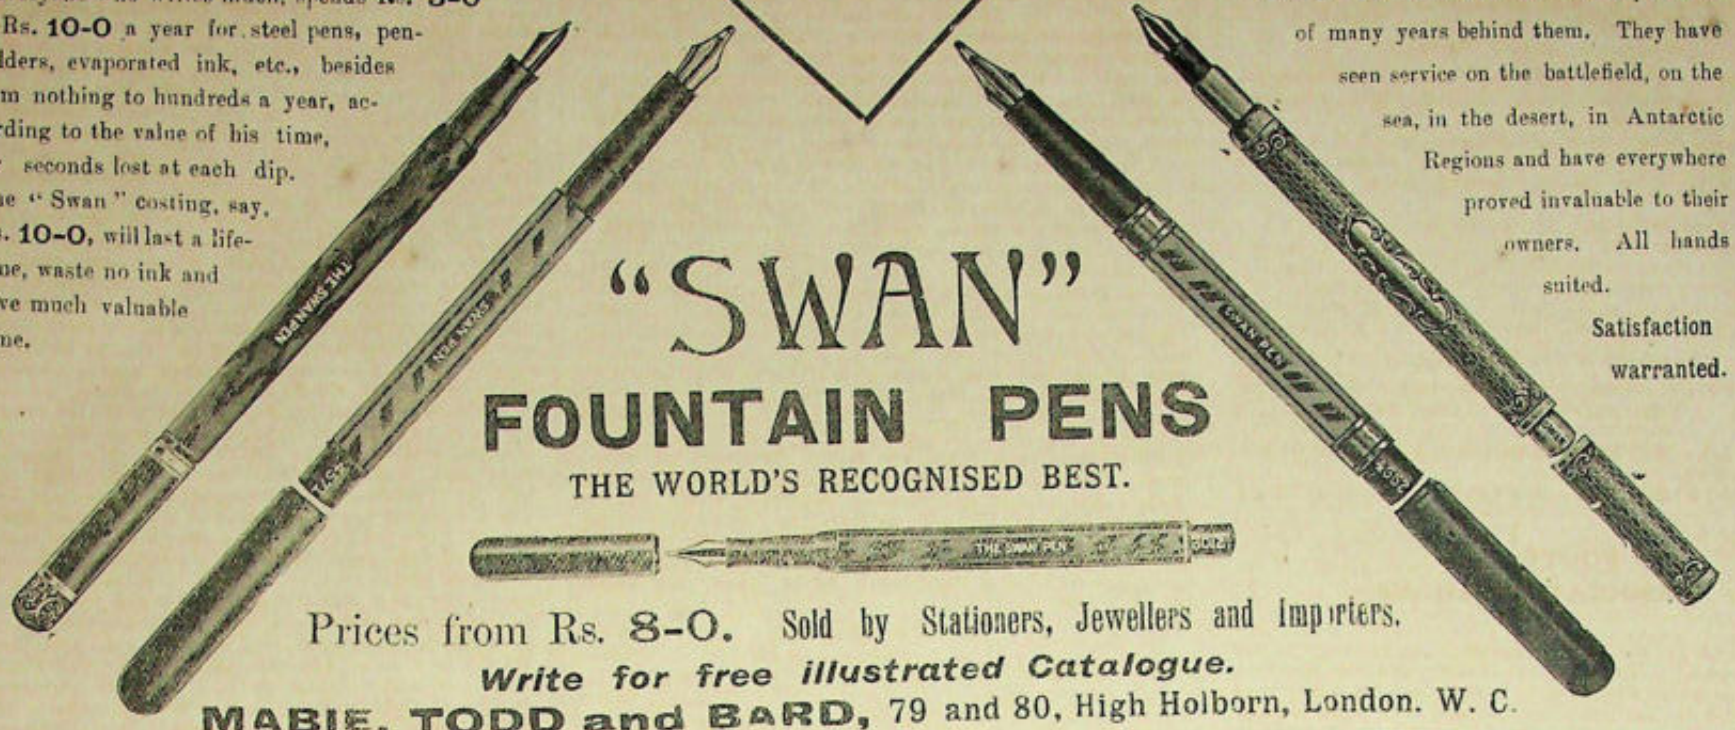
Bert Slark (Holloway) beat Bill Stonelake (Clerkenwell).

These lads were matched to box at 8st. 12lbs., and earlier in the day Slark turned the scales at 8st. 10lbs., his opponent being half a pound heavier. However, although the lighter of the twain, the Holloway youth claimed a slight advantange in reach. In the initial meeting each boxed very cleverly, although there appeared more steam behind Stonelake's deliveries than in those of his opponent. Several times the pair clinched in the second round, in which Slark was the more to blame. In the third meeting very little time was wasted in sparring, Stonelake at once resorting to aggressive tactics, while upon several occasions Slark used his left fore-arm in a rather questionable manner. Each was anxious to resume for the fourth round, but through both being somewhat impetuous, the exchanges were of a rather erractic character. The two succeeding rounds were slightly in favour of Stonelake, who concluded the sixth round by sending his opponent through the ropes. Half-way through the eighth round Slark got home on an old sore on his antagonist's left optic, which at once left marks of its visitation. During the concluding meeting Slark was slightly the quicker, and at the close received the award.

The winner was seconded by Dave, Barry, George Slark, and Arthur Gutteridge ; the loser being attended by Jim Williams and Mick Groves.

BILLIARDS.

The brilliant doings of Stevenson and Lovejoy during the past few days have dwarfed everything else during the week. A rare treat was predicted for the billiard enthusiasts of Oldham when these two "express" scorers visited the beehive of the cotton industry, but I imagine the realisation more than fulfilled the expectation.



Pride of place must be conceded Stevenson's wonderful feat of compiling two breaks of over 500 in one day. Not only is this remarkable from the fact that it has never before been accomplished under the rules at present in force, but it is even more remarkable in that this brilliant player was taking part in his second game of the season only. The rapidity with which both efforts were compiled almost takes one's breath away. Thirty-seven minutes to compile 545 and thirty-two minutes for 539 is "moving" with a vengeance.

This raises the interesting query that if Stevenson can do such brilliant performances before he is thoroughly wound up, what will he accomplish, say, in a month or so from now? That "1,000" break which is Stevenson's great ambition to compile cannot be very far off realisation now, if form is any criterion. With Stevenson going such great guns, Lovejoy's big start of 2750 in 9,000 was not big enough. But all the same he has every reason to remember this particular game with feeling of pleasure. It is given to few players to break record

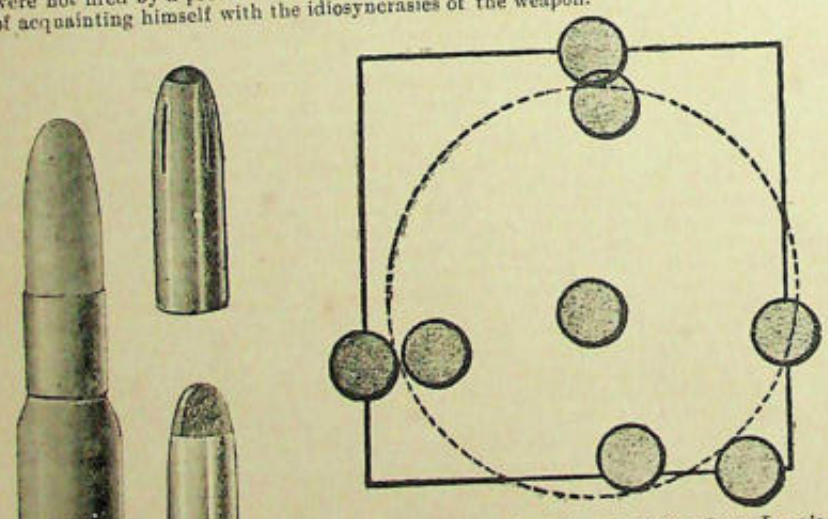
LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY CORDITE RIFLE



An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD," March 25th, 1905:—

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

MADE BY the Editor of the "Field."

ARGYLLSHIRE, N.B.,
September 23rd, 1905.

". . . . about the rifle. I am more than pleased with it, it has already accounted for 5 bucks and 2 stags. An American gentleman brought down a buck at 124 yards and Sir Wm. D. C. killed a stag at a distance of over 120. I think it is as perfect a weapon as science can devise. Sir Wm. D. C. wants to get one like it."

three times in one week; yet this was actually accomplished by Lovejoy in the game, although the fact seems to have escaped the notice of the critics. In a break of 335 on Wednesday, the ex-amateur champion made 140 nursery cannons, thus beating his previous best of 103. This he eclipsed on Friday with a sequence of 146 when compiling his "record" of 453, the full break being made in the wonderfully fast time of twenty-four minutes. For a player in his third season as a professional this is indeed a marvellous performance, and it looks as if Lovejoy will fill the picture to an even greater extent than he did last season. It is earnestly to be hoped that his health will improve to allow of his doing so, for he is already a great favourite with the billard-loving public.

While Stevenson was captivating the Oldham public with his brilliant play his great friend and keen rival, C. Dawson, was presenting the reverse side of the picture at Bristol. The Huddersfielder was so obviously out of form all the week that it would be unfair to criticise at length his terribly poor show against Harverson. Without in any way seeking to detract from Harverson's big win, it is only doing Dawson common justice to state that he entered the game under great physical disadvantages. For four or five weeks prior to the match—his first of the season, by the way—Dawson was taking the waters at Harrogate under medical advice, and the change to London for a day or two, and then to Bristol, has undone all the benefit derived from his visit to the Yorkshire spa. To this fact may be wholly ascribed the Yorkshireman's very poor show, and, if I am not mistaken, Dawson will not be long in proving that he has lost none of his brilliancy and pluck. This much conceded, it was, nevertheless, an excellent performance on Harverson's part to score 1,890 points more than his opponents, and one from which the South African would derive keen enjoyment.

Writing of the match at Bristol reminds me that Harverson and Inman have as yet made no move to cover Dawson's deposits of £25, which have for some time been in the hands of the Editor of the Sporting Life to bind the matches about which there has been so much controversy. Harverson makes no secret of his conviction that Dawson cannot concede him the start. And the result at Bristol adds point to this from Harverson's point of view. What a splendid opportunity the South African has for "picking up" £50, and also a deal of glory, which cannot be measured by mere vulgar "£ s. d." Harverson is a lucky man to have an opportunity vouchsafed to few of his confrères. But is Harverson anxious to measure cues with the tough and determined little Yorkshireman for a stake of £50 or £100? Not a bit of it. He still refuses to cover Dawson's money, and as actions speak louder than words, Harverson's repeatedly-expressed anxiety to make the match places him in a very comical position.

DAYS AND DOINGS WITH A BOBBERY PACK.

I.

WHAT a crowd of memories the above heading brings to the mind! Days of intense enjoyment and doings of delight. Up long before dawn and out of the Cantonment before the short Indian twilight has broadened into day, perhaps having picked up a fellow sportsman on the road, we make our way to the appointed meeting place where the dogs have been sent either overnight or very early in the morning. Sometimes it has been convenient to ride out, sometimes to drive, less seldom to cycle and although there may sometimes be a disinclination to forego the several hours' sleep which could still be obtained, yet the pleasure of being up early, seeing the dawn break and hearing the many interesting sounds of awakening animal and bird life which is the reward of early rising, far outweighs any selfish thoughts of slothfulness. And that early morning meeting of Master and pack. What a pleasure it is! Each dog has its own distinctive manner of expressing delight. "Bob," the Poligar, staunch and stolid, quietly wags his tail; "Pup" shows all her teeth in a delighted grin; Old "Nelly," Bob's inseparable companion, in spite of her grizzled muzzle and twelve years of life, prances about like a puppy; "Paddy"—his name proclaims his origin, who has always to be led by himself or with one of the opposite sex owing to his incurable penchant for a fight—comes in for a special caress from the Master. He is a link with the old country and therefore, perhaps, more favoured than others. And so the memory runs back over many long years to the time when the pack was differently composed. Dogs, alas! are short lived in this country of so many speedy and fatal ailments to man and beast.

It is now sixteen years since the first nucleus of the Bobbery Pack was established. "Stag," a Persian hound; "Prince," an Australian; "Jupiter," country-bred greyhound and a faint hearted tackler who transmitted his failing to "Jingo," "Sloe" and others; "Simon," most courageous of Fox-terriers. These were the forerunners of dogs of varied breeds and colours. "Stag" and "Prince" it was who, on one memorable morning, pressed a doe chinkara hard for some two miles, running in a circle; and "Jupiter," who ran cunning, and making a fine effort at a well judged moment, managed to seize the gazelle at the loins and break its back with a single bite. It is astonishing how very easily deer and antelope are killed by dogs, and yet how tenacious of life they are when wounded by bullets. This feat has never been repeated by any of my dogs with an unwounded chinkara as the victim, but old "Nelly" when at her prime, alone and unaided, killed a healthy and full-grown doe antelope among the rocky ground to the east of Secunderabad. It appeared to get confused and "Nelly" cut it off, after a few minutes' coursing, and seized it by the neck, killing it instantaneously. She was half Persian, half Afghan, and a very handsome brindle. Poligar "Bob", before he came into my possession, earned undying fame by seizing a hyæna by the ear and holding it until the other dogs came up; how the beast was finally despatched history does not relate, probably with a hunting knife. A knife with a stout blade of not less than 6 inches in length should always be carried.

Beginning in the days of "Stag" and "Jupiter," "Prince" had to be destroyed as he took to killing sheep and goats: many a fine run after fox and jack is seen by the entries in the diary to have taken place in the vicinity of the Cantonment at which the writer was stationed long ago when the life of the soldier officer was less strenuous than it is now. Nothing to do after 10 o'clock on five: days of the week, and Sundays and Thursdays always free to think of it makes one long for the good old days. Jackals and foxes were numerous there, and though the country in some parts was much cut up by nullahs yet falls were few, and the hardy and nimble country-bred horses and ponies seldom came to grief. On most mornings a run of some kind was obtained, and the tale of "tails" ran well into the thirties for the period—March to September—when most of the hunting was done. During the cold weather the counter attraction of shooting gave the hunted animals a well-earned rest, a large number of them having been obliged on one day or another to run for their lives. There were some amusing incidents at times. On one occasion a small spaniel took up a line and ran it hard for a hundred yards, whimpering excitedly as he went. Suddenly he found himself face to face with a big dog jackal. But "Sammy" was a "nervy" little fellow, and quite equal to the tactical situation; he pretended that hunting hard on the tails of stray jackals was the last thing in the world he was thinking of; so aimlessly turned aside and lifted his leg against a bush in the most natural way possible. Seeing me on my horse the jack once more set off and valiant "Sam" was again hard on his heels. A blast on the whistle called up the scattered pack, and after an excellent run the jack was duly slain. Then there was the occasion when "Jingo" and "Sloe," the only dogs fit for work that day for some reason or other, were led a good two miles at top pace by a jackal with a quarter mile start. Eventually the dogs got on terms with him and a running fight ensued. Now "Jingo," now "Sloe" would grab at his quarters, retreating when the wicked row of shining teeth snapped viciously at them in return. Sometimes the pull at his rump would turn him over, but these faint-hearted children of "Jupiter," in spite of angry objurgations from their Master galloping at their heels, would fail to take advantage of the opportunity offered. So the running fight—if fight it could be called—went on, until at last both pursuers and pursued were absolutely exhausted and lay down a few yards apart, panting and unable to make any further efforts at attack or retreat. The jack was seen to be a good deal torn and bitten about the hind quarters and had to be killed as, if left, he might go mad and become a danger to human life. On riding up to him with stirrup iron slung ready, he managed to just keep out of reach and finally took refuge in a natural drain somewhat like the short tunnels rabbits are so fond of, but on a lesser scale. Dismounting I seized him by the tail, and hauling him out succeeded in applying the edge of the stirrup iron to the back of his skull before he could fix his teeth into my leg, at which he made a very creditable attempt. In fact I won by a very short head indeed—not more than half an inch between his snout and my thigh. It was unpleasant to have to slay, in this cold-blooded manner, an animal which had run so well and defended himself so gallantly, but it had to be done. "Jingo" and "Sloe" killed foxes very well indeed, but would never face a determined jack, and some of them are indeed most courageous. As is the case among all animals (and birds) they vary very much in personal characteristics. Some show no fight at all, some hide and run cunning, and others will make a stout resistence; and one—a gallant soul—actually faced round and attacked his pursuers, preferring to die bravely rather than be rolled over during ignominious retreat.

It has been my custom to open up animals killed by the dogs and note contents of the stomachs in order to ascertain their diet, and this has resulted in some interesting "finds." Half a mango —,with the stone swallowed whole, rats, lizards young birds, grass, scraps of refuse, potato peelings and the like, berries of the banyan tree, crabs, and frogs. Many animals were found to be quite empty and I dare say jackals often go home hungry after a night's wandering over many miles of country. The food of foxes was found to be much the same, in leaving out the mango refuse and berries and adding such delicacies as grasshoppers, locusts, beetles etc. And, of course, at the commencement of the rains, when the flying white ants appear in myriads, foxes, jackals, and innumerable birds have a tremendous beanfeast. I have myself seen a fox busily engaged in devouring the winged ants as they emerged in their countless thousands from a small hole in the ground. He was loth to leave the feast, and let me get quite close to him, as I had no dogs with me. This has been noticed by others. Jerdon, I think, mentions it and I recolleect to have read about it somewhere quite lately. Possibly in the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society.

Jacks have, as a rule, less chance of escape from dogs than foxes. They are slower than most dogs, and for this reason it is always as well, if the jack is sighted by the rider before it is seen by the dogs (and this is what usually occurs) to let the animal have a good start. Three or four hundred yards is not too much, in fairly open country, to ensure a good run and equalise the chances of hunters and hunted. Foxes can usually take care of themselves pretty well, though, owing to their habit of crouching and trying by this means to escape notice, they are frequently "chopped." Some, however, are quite "professional" runners among their kind, and have on occasion gone clean away from fast hounds. It is really a gallant sight to see the little fox skate away with brush held straight behind him after having extended fast grey hounds to their best efforts for some two miles or so. This is due, without doubt, to foxes having a second wind, and once they have managed to evade capture until they get this second wind they stand a very good chance of escape. In such cases the hounds gradually drop from a canter to a walk and then, as the fox rapidly increases the distance, walk round and round in a state of utter exhaustion with heaving sides and far extended dripping tongues. Such defeats as these do not, however, affect their keenness on future occasions. It is only fair to the greyhounds to explain that the fox achieves such a victory only after having tired the dogs by many twistings and turnings, and narrow escapes. It is no very uncommon sight to see a fox jump over a dog's back, when hard pressed and necessity forces him to such dangerous efforts at freedom.

Wolves are somewhat met with, but I have only once had my pack with me at such a time. My attention was attracted by valiant "Sammy" bolting past me with ears laid back and tail well tucked away; and turning round I saw that a large wolf had sallied out from among the boulders on the on the rocky hill at the foot of which I was riding and had very nearly caught the little "Sam Paddy" was squaring up to the wolf in his indomitable way, and would have fared badly had I not raced my nimble pony up the rough ascent and put the beast to flight. Two more wolves were then discovered, and eventually these were got away into the open country. They cantered easily in front of me, the dogs not daring to tackle—'Paddy" being the only one I had at the time with any pretention to being a seizer—and again circled back to the rocks, where I left them. The wolf left on the hill while we took this litle excursion, barked exactly like a pariah dog. I could scarcely believe my ears, but there was no mistaking the source of the noise. For some time after this I carried a small hogspear, but never came across these wolves again. To spear a wolf is a feat of which one may well be proud, and it is seldom been achieved. In the autumn of 1891 I might have speared two wolves with ease had servants obeyed orders. Quite possibly the instructions were faulty, but the golden opportunity has gone, I fear never to return. This extract from my diary, written at the time, relates what occurred. 10th October 1891: "Servants went to the wrong village; in consequence, on arriving at the place, where I had told them to leave some men with my gun and spear, no one was to be seen. After waiting an hour in hopes they would appear I got on my pony and rode in the direction of the village where my tent had been sent. I saw two animals about half a mile away and on coming near found them to be wolves. I only had the cleaning rod of my gun with me—it had been left behind at my house—but rode at the animals in the hope that they would take the direction of camp. I easily ran into the wolves, which were so gorged with goat or buck that after the first few hundred yards they could scarcely raise a trot. They lay down in the "jowari" crops three or four times, and at last got to a big nullah and lay exhausted in the water, where I left them and galloped off to my camp for a spear. I got back to the place within an hour but failed to track the beasts owing to crops and hard ground. The dog wolf growled at me once or twice and once I just touched him with my cleaning rod as he jinked under my pony's nose." Such opportunities as this are indeed very rare. Hyænas are sometimes seen, but I have only met one in the open on one occasion, and had no dogs with me—only a ·310 Sharpshooter's club rifle. A friend with me was similarly armed, as we were riding out from Secunderabad to shoot black buck. I loaded my rifle as I galloped but failed to get on terms with the ungainly beast. My friend, better mounted, was soon on his tail, but unable to use the rifle as the horse pulling so violently, he was unable to load it. After two miles at top speed we had to give it up. And this morning of all others we had left our dogs behind.

Hares afford good sport and dogs are always keen and excited in their pursuit. They run straight and are very speedy. It is a change from the usual procedure to turn out 40 or 50 men as beaters and slip the dogs at hares only. As many as eight have been killed in a morning early in the rains in this manner and such outings were much enjoyed by the men, besides being good training for them, as they are made to control their excitement and retain proper intervals and keep touch in the scrub jungle. The Indian hare readily goes to ground, and it is very common for them to take refuge down one of the tunnels of a white ant heap. As cobras are also very partial to these ready-made and safe retreats, I have often wondered whether the hare may not have been worse frightened when inside than he was when hunted there by dogs ravenous for his blood. His expression would be something like that of the baby cotton tail "Raggylug" in Ernest Seton Thompson's charming book on animal life.

Escapes from snake bite are common, and it is rare to have a dog bitten, as instinct seems to tell most dogs that it were best not to tackle. I have only once had a dog bitten and that was in long grass and scrub jungle. The dog was a fox-terrier and belonged to a friend. It died in twenty minutes, the symptoms pointing to the snake having been a daboia. To come across snakes of all kinds is quite common; and in case of cobras and daboias it is always as well to dismount and kill; other snakes met with are mostly harmless, or not readily distinguishable as venomous. On one occasion a dog—half bred pointer—had a narrow escape. He was trotting along in front of me on a tank bund and suddenly jumped in the air to get over a snake. The snake, a big cobra, struck at him, and he saved himself by an extraordinary effort while in the air, making a second sort of wriggling jump which just took him clear of the wicked expanded hood. Having failed to get home the snake quickly disappeared in the grass. To return to the hares.

A hare once ran over 1,200 yards in a perfectly straight line and was killed by "Dinah," Arab greyhound, just as she reached cover. The soil was hard and sandy and the run was so remarkably straight, that we paced it and noted that the hare had not deviated more than a few feet from the straight line during the whole distance. "Dinah" was bought for Rs. 15 at the Arab stables in Bombay together with "Jack," a Persian hound for whom Rs. 20 was paid. Both were extremely fast, too fast indeed for general work; and had marvellous eye-sight. "Dinah" was a true Arab of the desert. Her hereditary ability to withstand thirst was extraordinary and even after severe runs in hot weather when all the other dogs would be greedily slaking their thirst, she never drank much, and often did not even lap the water; also her tongue never protruded to the same extent as that of other dogs. "Jack" had to be destroyed as he went completely blind—cataract of some kind—and "Dinah" never was the same after she produced a litter to Poligar "Bob." Only one of the six puppies lived and I have never seen "Pup's" equal. Pace, stamina, keenness, and the very best and good natured of bitches. Referring again to Poligar "Bob" brings to mind that beast Poligar "Jacky." Purchased from a syce of Horse Artillery for five rupees, he turned out to be a great character. His first exploit was on his entry into the pack when only nine or ten months old. A fox was put up and jinked a good deal, and at last ran round a rock right into "Jacky's" open jaw, which closed on him, the canine teeth being fixed into the back of his head. "Jacky" was nearly choked by the fox's nose sticking in his gullet, and Master had to pull open his jaws while "Dinah" removed the fox. After this "Jacky" was very keen and always a great tackler. He later on took to harrying goats—being taught this by two beasts of Australian hounds belonging to a brother officer. Many a drubbing did he receive, and while I had him was just sufficiently obedient in this matter to save his life, as dogs which are incorrigible goat hunters must be shot or given away. They spoil the whole pleasure of hunting and are a terrible nuisance. "Jacky's" final exploit was to slay a village porker. I parted with him, and the rest of my pack, some two and a half years ago when going on furlough; he growled ferociously at my friendly advances when I met him in the road the other day. A curious thing about this dog is that he has the smell which is usually peculiar to hyænas; nothing will conceal it; no amount of washing is of any use; so he is banished from the house and lives in the stables. The lady who now owns him is, however, very fond of him in spite of this drawback, and indeed he is a very clown of a dog and always amusing even to look at. There are no better dogs for a Bobbery Pack than the Poligar. Good tacklers, not too fast, sound feet, splendid staying power and the best of constitutions. They came from the Poligar country in the Madura District of Southern India. Pure bred ones are quite hairless, with stiff rat like tails, and are difficult to procure. There are a good many half-bred ones round about Secunderabad. A cross-bred bull-terrier should be in every Bobbery Pack. I say cross-bred, because pure bred ones cannot stand the heat, and soon knock up on a hot morning. Dog "Tiger" was the best of this kind that I ever possessed. Fifty pounds in weight and with a head like a mastiff, he feared nothing and killed many a jack quite unaided. He died of jaundice, that disease so very common and fatal to dogs. Dogs of the bull-terrier class are always ferocious towards animals, though usually mild and good tempered towards human beings. They require therefore to be trained to habits of implicit obedience from their earliest puppyhood, or they become a nuisance to their owner and a terror to the community. Once they take to seizing cattle and donkeys it is quite impossible to break them of the habit. Some six or seven years ago a bitch of "Tiger's" description, which belonged to a brother officer, met her end from injuries inflicted by a wounded tiger which she had valourously tackled in thick cover, thus locating its position and enabling the sportsmen to crawl in and shoot the beast as it lay. This incident was related in the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society at the time. No one dared approach the bungalow after dark when old "Sal" was about, and on several occasions she killed cattle and donkeys which strayed into the compound; and once she dragged a slain donkey on to the doorstep for her Master to see in the morning that she had faithfully done her duty during the night. It is on record that so long ago as the year 1670, a bull-dog owned by the chief of a factory on the West Coast of India slew a sacred cow, and the Brahman mob murdered every European in the place. The monument to John Best and seventeen Englishmen thus slain records that "They were sacrificed to the fury of a mad priesthood and an infuriated mob." (Things Indian by W. Crooke.) Such an occurrence is not impossible even now, so it is very necessary even for this reason alone, that dogs of the "seizer" type should be well trained and always in hand. Bunjara dogs are invaluable but seldom to be procured, as their owners, that most interesting nomad tribe of gipsy appearance and habits, will not readily part with them. These dogs hunt both by sight and scent and being fast and courageous are suitable for every description of hunting and coursing.

AUTOMOBILE NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 12th October 1906.

THERE being but a few weeks now to the opening of the Motor Show at Olympia, many intending purchasers are already studying the various makes of cars which appear suited to their requirements, leaving the final choice to be made at the Show. Others who are already experienced motorists, wishing to get a new car for next season, are anxious to dispose of the one they are now using. The present is, therefore, a good time for the novice, who wisely chooses to commence his motoring career with a second-hand car, to acquire one that is in good running order. It is very important, however, that expert advice should be obtained when buying a car second-hand, and to have it examined by a qualified man who can judge its condition and point out any parts that need renewal. Apart from the mechanical details, special attention should be directed to the tyres, as it these are much worn the cost of putting them in good order will add considerably to the purchase price.

Bearing the above precautions in mind, there is always the chance of securing a good bargain. The owner in some cases is anxious to dispose of his car through having experienced continuous trouble from minor causes due to unskilful attention, or the cost of upkeep may be too great. Both these are difficulties which, by careful management, can be overcome. In the first place, it is not at all a difficult matter for anyone to master the few important details of a car's mechanism, and learn now to effect the necessary adjustments. With regard to the motor, these will be chiefly confined to the carburettor and ignition system. Considering the fuel consumption first, the manufacturers will give a nearly approximate mileage rate to the gallon of petrol; and starting from this basis, making allowance for any specially severe conditions that may occur, it is an easy matter to check the petrol consumption.

Occasional adjustments will be required to the carburettor and inlet valves, but the chief requirement is to keep them clean and use spirit of good quality. Similarly with the ignition the various parts need regular attention and cleaning to keep them in proper working order. Most firms issue very complete instructions with their cars, explaining each part and the method of adjustment. It is advisable, however, when the necessity arises for taking a part any portion of the driving mechanism, that the owner should secure assistance from a skilled mechanic, or preferably take his car to an engineer's shop for the job to be done. The foregoing remarks are intended to indicate that by taking an active interest in the upkeep of his car a motorist can considerably reduce running expenses and at the same time be free from wayside trouble due to carelessness.

The demand for small two seated cars appears to have diminished of late, and the popular light car is now from eight to ten horse-power, having accommodation for at least three passengers. The smaller single-cylinder cars have no doubt suffered in comparison with the development of tri-cars, which have greater speed and are now made so that the passengers are well protected against the weather. The small Rover car is one of the best of its class, but, as showing how closely the cost of these small vehicles has to be calculated, it is announced that the price will be raised, presumably because one hundred pounds, at which figure it has up till now been sold, does not return a sufficient margin of profit to the makers

The organisers of the race meeting at Blackpool to-day and to-morrow have overcome the opposition which sought an injunction to restrain them from holding the meeting. The course is probably the finest in the world for purely speed events, and it would not be surprising to see new records set up. Miss Dorothy Levitt will again drive a Napier racer, and among other notable competitors are A. Lee Guinness, with his 200 h. p. world's record Darracq; Sidney Girling; A. C. Edge, with a Napier; and Gabriel, on a De Dietrich. Whatever the weather conditions may be, it is certain that a large number of spectators will attend to see these big cars at top speed.

A Gymkhana was held last Saturday by the Southern Motor Club at Cheam. A splendid entry had been secured, and each event was strongly contested. A feature of the day was the success attained by owners of Wolseley and Siddeley cars, these makes between them securing 50 per cent. of the prizes.

DALHOUSIE vs. HORNETS.—The Hornets were "all over" the Dals. last Saturday, giving them a most decisive beating by 109 runs and wickets to spare in a one innings game. Mabert and Rosser were in good bowling form and Rosser batted with effect. Beadle was the only one to make a stand against the onslaught of the Hornets. Score :—

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. THE MILITARY.—This annual two days' match was this year the opening fixture of the new season on the C.C.C. ground in the Eden Gardens, and provided an interesting, though on the first day a very slow game, with an even draw as the result. Neither side was fully representative, and the Civilians especially were quite out of practice, or they might have won. The Club batted first, but thanks to the very accurate bowling of Lieutenant Salier, who should prove a great acquisition to the Northumberland Fusiliers' team, could only total 78 runs, of which Curtis Hayward contributed a useful and hard hit 31 and Pope a stylish 16, while Stewart was in forty minutes for 8 runs. Salier bowled 11 overs, and 7 maidens for 10 runs and four wickets, and five of the runs came from a fine leg hit by Bartholomew. The Military fared even worse, and were put out by Curtis Hayward, five wickets for 25 runs and Stewart four for fourteen runs, for a paltry 59. Calcutta lost Pope's wicket overnight for 10 runs, and Low and Bartholomew did not stay very long next morning, but Guise and Curtis Hayward made a prolonged stand, and were responsible, especially Guise, for some bright and vigorous cricket. Curtis Hayward was out first before lunch for a really good but not faultless 52, but after the interval Guise and Whiteway again got going, and it was not until 200 was on the board that Guise gave mid off an easy catch, and retired for an excellent innings of 82, at which point the innings was declared closed, Whiteway not out 37. The ground was now playing much faster, but though the few C. C. C. bowlers were tired and stiff, the Military had no chance of getting the 220 runs required to win before time was called two hours later. Two wickets fell cheaply, but then Hill and Conner, of whom the latter played a very useful innings for his 78 not out, came to the rescue. Hill made his runs in taking style, and Major Burlton, who had been the only batsman to give trouble in the first innings, again scored freely on the leg side. Eventually stumps were drawn with the Military 50 runs behind and six wickets in hand. Full score and analysis.

CALEDONIANS vs. CUSTOMS.—The Caledonians sustained another defeat on Saturday last on their own ground. Their opponents were the Customs who brought a strong team. The visitors had first knock on a good fast wicket, and with such reliable bats as Jewell, Boo, McCready, Quiterio and Barlow, it was anticipated that they would compile a large score; but luck and some excellent bowling by Elliot and Chandler enabled the Caledonians to secure five of their best wickets for 25 runs. Then, however, Quiterio and Barlow got together and soon settled down, taking the score to 111 before the former was bowled by Christensen for a useful but lucky 47. Barlow in the meantime played beautiful cricket, but after Quiterio's dismissal could get no one to stay with him. The end came with the score 132, Barlow being 50 not out. Elliot and Chandler both bowled well, the former securing 4 wickets for 42 and the latter 3 wickets for 42.

Marsden again proved a thorn in the side of the home team, and with the assistance of Brown dismissed the lot for 50 runs, after as poor and half hearted an exhibition of batting as it is possible to imagine. Christensen's 15 was the only double figure score, included in which was a beautiful hit for six. The Caledonians thus lost the match by 82 runs, and from the exhibition they gave it seems unlikely that they will succeed in scoring a win at all unless the Simla contingent give them a very needful fillip. Marsden came out with the splendid analysis of 7 wickets for 13 and Brown 3 for 30. Score :—

BALLYGUNGE vs. CALEDONIANS.—On their own ground Ballygunge administered a severe defeat upon the Caledonians by 5 wickets. The match did not start till past 12 owing to the visitors' tardy arrival, indeed two of their team failed to put in an appearance at all, and they were forced to play Brown and Quiterio of the Customs. The Caledonians had first use of a wicket that was considerably affected by rain, and gave another poor exhibition of batting, Chandler's 52 and Christensen's 16 being the only double figures. Both batsmen had a good deal of luck, but Chandler in particular made some beautiful strokes. Before the bowling of Whitely and Gould the remainder of the team cut a sorry figure. Whitely secured 7 wickets for 33, and showed considerable judgment in mixing his bowling and placing his field. Gould and Pope had one wicket a piece.

Ballygunge made short work of the 98 runs set them to win, securing this total for the loss of 5 wickets. White and Horncastle opened the batting and both began to play with plenty of confidence. After taking the score to 24 White missed a straight one from Christensen and retired for 12, letting in Pope who cut the first ball he received into Brown's hands at point. It was a beautiful catch, and the Caledonians were fortunate in getting rid of this dangerous batsman so cheaply. Whitely was the next man, but was well caught by Durant at mid off for 2. Brown then bowled Horncastle, who had played sound and attractive cricket for 33. Mytton and Bayley then got together, the former hitting very hard. He was badly missed at mid off by Brown, but otherwise gave no chances. Brown found the way to Bayley's wicket and McCready and Mytton soon bit off the runs. The match was spoilt in a great measure by the rain, a continual drizzle falling throughout the day. Christensen had 3 wickets for 45 and Brown 2 for 18. Score :—

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

12th October 1906.

AMATEURS or Professionals? Which are the more interesting to the ordinary reader of Golf news?—decidedly the former, with the majority, who like to see how their friends are *dis*tinguishing or *ex*tinguishing themselves in their career as votaries of the now universally worshipped Goddess Golf. Therefore although the Pros. have certainly been attracting great attention of late, precedence and place must be given to the larger class of player, the Amateur, and where is he to be found, this unique animal, in larger numbers than at St. Andrews? "For where the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together," and of a truth there have been carcases in abundance lately to attract birds of prey to Mecca, in which place the autumn manœuvres have been in full swing. The old city is wonderfully interesting historically as well as golfily, for was not the ill-fated Mary, Queen of Scots, devoted to it and has she not immortalised it even more than the Royal and Ancient Game has done? The season of 1906 at St. Andrews has been a particularly busy one, especially during August and September, and the recent meeting to wind up proceedings attracted a larger field than usual, play too was of a higher standard, and those who took part included many celebrities, political and otherwise. Chief honours fell to Mr. Mansfield Hunter, who won the King William IV Medal, which is regarded as the pièce de résistance of this meeting, and although competition for this is limited to Members of the Royal and Ancient Club, it is well known and its temporary possession much coveted by all eligible golfers. Mr. Hunter has for many years been a conspicuous figure in the world of Golf; he is a barrister, and at present fills two important honorary posts, that of secretary to the Bar Golfing Society, and of the Oxford and Cambridge Society also. In the St. Andrews' Meeting, to which we must hark back, Mr. Leslie Balfour-Melville as Captain of the Club had the honour of driving the first ball off the tee, this is a time-honoured custom, which it would be as well, as far as possible, for other clubs to observe, the day was perfect and the large gallery fully expected low scoring would be the rule. For some time, however, as the players returned, the cards showed nothing better than 81, then Mr. Crawley-Boevey (why is it when, heaving this name, one is inevitably reminded of "Vanity Fair" and Becky Sharp?) came in with the score of 80, which gave him the Gold Medal, Mr. Robert Maxwell gave in 81, as did also Mr. C. K. Hutchinson, Mr. Edward Blackwell, Mr. J. A. Shaw, Mr. F. E. Dubs, Mr. J. J. Low, Mr. W. C. Henderson, whilst Messrs. J. E. Laidlay, and W. R. Cook returned 82. But the hero of the day, Mr. Mansfield Hunter, played remarkably steady golf, by which he compiled the excellent return of 78, which entitled him to the King William IV Medal. His figures were as appended, nothing brilliant, but only at one hole during the round did he take over a 5 Out: 4, 5, 4, 4, 5, 4, 5, 4, 4=39. In: 5, 3, 4, 4, 6, 4, 4, 5, 4, =39=78. It is no barren honour to win this Medal when such players as Hon'ble Evan Charteris, Hon'ble Denys Scott, Sir Henry Seton Karr, A. G. Barry, Horace Hutchinson failed to return scores within 5 strokes of the winners. Then too at Brunsfield the Evening Times Trophy has been attracting many Golfers, in fact a record entry of 82 CLUBS: last year the field of 72 couples necessitated an extra day's play, and this year, of course, the same time extension was necessary. Forty-six clubs drew byes in the first round and of those in the first round no less than 6 scratched. There are so many clubs in Bonnie Scotland that we need scarcely be surprised that a big tournament such as this should prove most attractive, when each club is represented by two players. Finally after "Coming through the Rye" St. Nicholas (Messrs. Robert Andrew, and Gordon Lockart) and Murrayfield (Messrs. J. L. Lawson and E. D. Simson) met to try conclusions. The Prestwick men had the best of things throughout the match; they stood 3 up at the turn and eventually secured the much-coveted trophy by 3 and 2 to play. The success of the winners was thoroughly well deserved, their play throughout was consistently steady, and in their very first heat they were pitted against the formidable St. Andrews' pair, Messrs. Walker and Aytoun; the whole match was a ding-dong tussle, and all square at the 18th tee, only a brilliant 3 then gave them a well-earned victory. In the next heats they had nothing very tough, with Uphall, and Blackford, and then against two men of the young school representing Glasgow Dundas they were taken to the 21st green. In the Semi-finals New Church, North. gave them no trouble, and the final has already been described, In one short week what a difference one sees at a popular golfing resort before and after a meeting. St. Andrews is now practically deserted: champions, ex-champions and future champions have with the swallows homeward flown, but there are still a few fine players left, and one of these has done a record. True he is only a professional, and his name is Jack Kirkaldy, who, when playing with Captain Percival, accomplished a wonderful 68—think of it. Foozlers and Foozleresses 68, at St. Andrews and this is how it was done.

Out: 4, 3, 3, 4, 4, 3, 4, 2, 4=31. In: 4, 3, 4, 6, 4, 5, 4, 4, 3=37=68.

Imagine nine holes in 31 and not one hole over 4 among them, a 6 at the unlucky 13th was a pity, but that and the 15th, requiring 5 were again the only numbers over 4.

From a very remarkable performance we must now regretfully turn to the well-trodden way of all flesh, which, in the person of the dreaded Reaper has deprived Ireland of a familiar figure on the greens of Dublin—Monsignor Molloy was fond of the game; he did not, because he could not devote much time to it, for his position in Ireland as a theologian and scientist claimed most of his days. Dr. Molloy was called "the patron saint of the Duffers," and each year some Foozler went home comforted and happy as temporary possessor of the Duffers' Cup. His death occurred very suddenly and unexpectedly and he is truly and really mourned by a large circle of friends, of which golfers form no small part. The Army Cup Tournament is over, no special flourish of trumpets marked its final onslaught, when the Black Watch met and defeated the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders over the old course at St. Andrews. This competition drags on somewhat wearily during the spring and summer months, but those who are eligible to take part are keen and the enterprise, it must be borne in mind, is still very young.

Had the late and ever lamented "Freddy Tait" been one of the team of his old regiment (the Black Watch) the victory would in all probability have been an even more decisive one, but they would also perhaps have had to reckon with the 3rd Coldstream Guards, who gave the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders a W. O. in the semi-final, consequent on sudden orders for foreign service; this regiment includes in its golfing team Mr. Cecil K. Hutchison (who has not left England) and Major the Earl of Lanesborough, both formidable players, and had they been able to play the issue of events might have been different.

It is perhaps a poor compliment to the great Professionals who gathered together at Hollinwell last week to give them the last few lines of these notes, but all the papers have been so full of the "News of the World" Tournament, that further comments would probably be stigmatised as "flat, stale, and unprofitable;" however, so great is the interest taken in the Annual Event, in which the stakes run into nearly £250 that a few words may be condoned even on a well-threshed out topic. During the year the Professionals belonging to this society hold qualifying competitions in the various divisions, the top players (the number varies in proportion to the size of the division) become eligible to compete in the Final Tournament held in October annually. This year Hollinwell in Notts was selected, the same green as the Ladies' Golf Union chose for their County Finals in June last; the course is long and decidedly good, but a few more bunkers to guard some of the greens would in the opinion of experts be an improvement. The draw was really rather unsatisfactory, for Vardon, A. Herd, Taylor and Braid, all came in the top half, but to the great surprise of the Golfing world Braid succumbed to George Duncan in the 1st round, Herd beat Vardon in the 2nd heat; Duncan knocked Taylor out in the 3rd round and was himself beaten by Herd in the penultimate heat, whilst the runner up, Mayo, had disposed of Oke Cawsey (at 21st hole) Reid and Rowland Jones. Everyone is glad that Herd has won, for he played undoubtedly the most consistent golf in the Tournament; he drove magnificently, putted with confidence, and his approaches were a treat to watch, whilst the runner up is one of the young school with plenty of time, plenty of assurance, and undoubted ability and years of play before him. Some very fine scores were accomplished during the matches, and surely this "News of the World" Tournament in a sight well worth watching, even if one has to travel many miles to see the Pros. perform. Golf looks so simple as they play it, and we know from experience how difficult it is as we play it.

THE CLUB'S "AT HOME."—On the 24th ultimo the club was "At Home" and there was quite a large and fashionable gathering, many of those present competing in the events which formed the afternoon's programme and details of which will be found below. The proceedings were enlivened by the music contributed by the Band of the South Wales Borderers. Details :—

Gentlemen's Driving.—Won by Mr. J. McK. Davidson, with a drive of 237½ feet. The second prize was won by Mr. W. U. Nicholas.

Gentlemen's Approaching.—Won by Colonel Beevor, 2nd prize was won by Mr. J. R. Creagh.

Ladies' Driving.—1st prize Mrs. Grace, with a drive of 144 feet, 2nd prize, Mrs. T. J. Stephen.

Ladies' Approaching.—1st prize Mrs. Dame, 2nd prize Miss Obetham.

Putting.—Affinity.—1st prizes Mrs. Hunter and Mr. Oswald, 2nd prizes Mrs. Grace and Mr. H. B. Sawyer.

Pagal Putting.—1st prizes Mrs. Day and Captain Day, 2nd prizes, Mrs Younghusband and Mr. W. U. Nicholas.

The prizes were presented by Mrs. Travers.

Sports.

LINCOLNSHIRE REGIMENT SPORTS.

THE regiment recently held its annual sports meeting at Kamptee. We append results :—

High Jump.—Sergt. Dr. Stephens, Lance-Corpl. Wilmore and Lance-Corpl. Topliss.

Long Jump.—Sergt. Dr Stephens, Pte. Appleyard and Lance-Corpl. Wilmore.

Putting the Shot.—Pte. Thorpe, Lance-Corpl. O'Neil and Pte. O'Connell

Hurdle Race.—Lance-Corpl. Topliss, Sergt. Dr. Stephens and Pte. Jennings.

1 Mile Race.—Lance-Corpl. Handsley, Pte. Cragg and Pte. Beal.

½ Mile Race.—Lance-Corpl. Handsley, Pte. Beal and Pte. Cragg.

Bn. 100 yards.—Lance-Corpl. Martin, Lance-Corpl. Handsley and Pte. Lomax.

Veterans Race.—Sergt. Dr Stephens, Corpl. Alde and Pte. Larder.

Obstacle Race.—Pte. Lomax, Pte. Smith and Pte. Jennings.

Relay Race.—"F" Company and "D" Company.

Cross Country 3 Miles.—"D" Company and "C" Company.

¼ Mile Race (Young Soldiers).—Pte. Dawson, Pte. Smith and Pte. Patience.

Tug-o'-War.—(Final) "H" beat "E" ("H" Company winning for the ninth year in succession).

THE 47TH FIELD BATTERY CENTENARY.

THIS battery celebrated its centenary by holding a well arranged sports meeting at Kirkee on Thursday, 25th ultimo. Details :—

Ring, Ball and Peg.—Driver Crick 1; Sergt Howe, 2; Gunner McGill, 3.

Hurdle Race.—Gunner Boak, 1; Gunner Gill, 2.

Menagerie Race.—Driver Astley's Monkey, 1; Gunner Sullivan's Pig, 2; Bombardier Barfield's Dog, 3.

Quarter Mile Race.—Driver Shahdin, 1; Lascar Kasiaram, 2; Sheikh Bahadur, 3.

Tilting at the Bucket.—Bombardier McGill and Bombardier Bennett, 1; Driver Crick and Gunner Sulivan, 2; Gunners Burn and Jerms, 3.

Section Tent-Pegging.—Bombardier Camerons, 33rd Battery, 1; Corporal Calcott, 63rd Battery, 2.

Section Tent-Pegging with Sword.—Havaldar Ashmadalli, No. 4 Ammunition Column, 1.

Half Mile Race.—Corporal Wright, 93rd Highlanders, 1; Pte. Holloway, East Lancs, 2; Gunner Thompson, 33rd Battery, 3.

Potato Race (Mounted).—Band Corporal Beelchin, 1; Corporal Boatwright, 2.

Mop Fight.—Gunner Gaish and Gunner Byone, 1; Corporal Band, 2; Bombardier McGill, 3.

Individual Tent-Pegging.—Sergt.-Major Clarke, 33rd Battery, nominated by Mrs. Payne, 1; Sergt Bassett, 12th Battery, 2; Sergt. Shirt, 33rd Battery, 3.

Best Costume.—Driver Park as a Lady, 1; Driver O'Hara as a Bear, 2; Gunner Jones as a Highlander, 3.

Children's Race.—Tullott, 1; Ward, 2; Tullott, 3.

Sharp Pupil after being catechised concerning the power of Nature—"I know one thing Nature couldn't do!" Master (with great interest)—"Ah—and what is that?" Sharp Pupil—"Why she couldn't make your mouth any bigger without setting your ears back!" (Class ends abruptly.)

"Now, Pat," said a magistrate to an old offender, "what brought you here again?"

"Two policemen, sor," was the laconic reply.

"Drunk, I suppose?" queried the magistrate.

"Yes, sor," said Pat; "both av thim."

The Horse.

THE TENNESSEE PACER.

THAT the breeding and developing of trotting and pacing horses has been of inestimable benefit to the country, will not be denied even by the casual observer. It has added its millions of material wealth to the country, and thousands of honest, hard-working men and women are now earning their living at the business. It is estimated that $100,000,000 is invested in the breeding of trotters and pacers in the United States, and this enormous sum is, perhaps, the best argument that can be offered to prove the wonderful growth and development of the breeding industry.

It is now no longer a matter of wonder or surprise among breeders that of two animals from the same parents one should be a trotter and the other a pacer. Those who have had actual experience and who have been close observers, seem now willing to admit that the prestige which the pacer holds to-day and the rapid strides he has made in gaining favour in the horse world, is but little short of marvelous.

Had a man predicted thirty years ago that the blood of the then despised little pacer would stand at the head of the great trotting interest of the world, he would have been laughed at; and yet, it has remained historically true and applying to all nations that where there have been no pacers, no trotters are found.

Isolated, as the pacer had been for centuries, an outcast and disgrace to the horse family, it is almost passing strange that this culprit, condemned to a life of drudgery, should now be brought out and exhibited to the public as an equal to the best. That an array of pacers could be brought out that would in makeup and gameness average up with a like number of trotters appears to have been a revelation to a great multitude of people and from the day when this knowledge was revealed to them the pacer has been given a fair show on his own merits.

Some maintain that the pace is an artificial and cultivated gait. Some relate the ancient story that the pacing instinct sprang from the Narragansett pacer—ship-wrecked in passage from Egypt to this country, brought ashore on the coast of Newfoundland, from whence he was taken to Narragansett Bay.

A writer on this subject finds amidst the ruins of the Parthenon—that magnificent temple erected to the goddess Minerva on the summit of the Acropolis in Athens—sculptured in high relief the heroes and defenders of Athens, mounted on horses all showing distinctly the pacing attitude. This he claims to be the first record of the pacer, and it is now over 2,330 years old. In 1678 when Athens was besieged by the Venetians, the Parthenon was hopelessly wrecked, and became the prey of devastators.

In order to preserve something of its works of art, says the writer, Lord Elgin, about the year 1800, brought to England portions of the frieze of the temple with other works of Phidias in marble. He sold them to the English Government and they are now preserved in the British Museum. Not only as a specimen of Greek art of the period, but as a historic record of the type and action of the Greek horses of that day, is this frieze a most interesting subject of study.

In the first half of the seventeenth century pacers were popular, and it is claimed were handled everywhere in England. In the second half of the eighteenth century not one could be found in all Britain. Who can say that during the period of Pericles in Athens that the pacer did not then attain to a high state of perfection?

In the absence of time records, and in the face of the fact that the pacer in his true, unmistakable pacing attitude, has been preserved and handed down to us in Pentellic marble, may be evidence that the rough little fellow retained his qualities through ages of neglect, until he was again taken up and given a chance about a quarter of a century ago.

It was in 1855 that the chestnut mare Pocahontas made her appearance on the turf. During the month of September of that year she made a pacing record of 2: 17½ to wagon, but, because she was a pacer, little ado was at the time made of it. She was bred to the trotting stallion Ethan Allen, and the produce, a filly foal that was a square trotter, and called Young Pocahontas, was sold as a five-year-old to Robert Bonner for $35,000.

The pacing record of Pocahontas stood until 1869, when Yankee Sam reduced it to 2: 16¼. Sleepy George clipped a second and a half from this record in 1878, and in 1879 Sleepy Tom gave it another setback when stopped hethe watch at 2: 12¼.

It was in the '70's about the time of the advent of the Hal family of Tennessee, with little Brown jug and Mattie Hunter, that the pacer began to be thought seriously of as a factor in horse development, although the speed and great blood lines of Pocahontas, James K. Polk and other noted pacers of an earlier period, it seems, should have foretold the possibilities that lay in the pacing gait.

Out of Tennessee—by what have been pleased to term chance, but in reality the legitimate product of scientific breeding, soil, climate and grass—came the first horse to go a mile in two minutes or better, thereby accomplishing a feat, almost without price and without effort, as it were, that the millionaires of horsedom had strived for in vain. From an obscure family of saddle horses, bred for no other purpose and with never a thought of fame on the race-course—taken literally, as in the instance of Little Brown Jug, from the plough—comes this unpretentious family of horses that so richly deserves to be perpetuated in history.

It is a remarkable statement, to say the least of it, that thirty years ago this family of horses, now known throughout the length and breadth of the land wherever speed and endurance has won the plaudits of the people, lived only as servants of the stubble and the plough, or the trusted guardian of the family turn-out, ambling through the country byways with their rollicking load of happy school children. More remarkable still is the fact that this great distinct family of horses, nearly all of them, are sons, daughters or descendants of one horse—a roan, known in Tennessee as Gibson's Tom Hal.

Captain Thomas Gibson, at that time a resident of Maury county, and now secretary of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Library, first reclaimed him from obscurity and made it possible for his greatness to be recognized by bringing him to his home in Maury county, Tenn.

The greatness of this family of horses will be at once understood and appreciated when we recall some of the world records held by them: First horse to go a mile in harness in two minutes, Star Pointer 1: 59¼. Fastest heat in a race, stallion, Star Pointer 2: 00¼. Fastest green performer (1905), Walter Direct 2: 05¾. Fastest four-year-old mare, The Maid 2: 05¼. Fastest three consecutive heats in a race, Star Pointer 2: 02¼, 2: 03¼, 2: 03¾. Fastest mile in a race to wagon, Angus Pointer 2: 04½. Fastest first heat in a race, The Maid 2: 05¾. Fastest team, Direct Hal and Prince Direct 2: 05½, Fastest three heats in race wagon, to Angus Pointer 2: 06¼, 2: 04¼, 2: 05¼. Fastest green performer, stallion, Direct Hal 2: 04¼. Fastest team in a race, Charley B. and Bobby Hal 2: 13. Fastest pacing team, Amateur trials, Prince Direct and Morning Star 2: 06.

It was, as we have said, in the 70's that the star of the lateral-gaited horse began to shine, when no feature of a race meeting, perhaps, so enthused the crowd as the announcement of races to be participated in by the "Big Four"—Mattie Hunter 2: 12¼, then being queen of the lot, and the first great Hal mare to attract the attention of the world. Blind Tom, Lucy and Rowdy Boy were the other stars that shone in this galary, until later Little Brown Jug 2: 11¼. Brown Hal 2: 12½, Hal Pointer, Robert J. Direct, Joe Patchen, John R. Gentry and many others followed in rapid succession.

In 1881 Little Brown Jug made his record of 2: 11¼. In October, 1884, the bay gelding Johnson set the record at 2: 06¼, where it remained until 1891, when the little black horse Direct carried it on down to 2: 06½. Up to this date all records were made to the high-wheeled sulky. In 1892 the gelding Mascot, hitched to a bikesulky, reduced the record to 2: 01, and from then on toward the close of the century, Robert J. John R. Gentry, Joe Patchen and Star Pointer began to bring the pacing record to the two-minute mark, until in August 1897, Star Pointer clipped a second and a quarter off the record made by John R. Gentry 2:00½, in September 1896, placing the record at 1: 59¼, being the first to reach and cross the charmed two-minute mark.

The achievements and development of the pacer after the advent of the Hals and swift tribe of trotting-bred pacers—beautifully gaited, true striding race horses—was marked in the extreme. The old "side-wheeler" had become a thing of the past, and his more worthy descendants had taken his place.

It matters not now to the honest, sturdy pacer whether his pedigree "takes to the woods on the first cross;" whether he is by "Junebug," dam "Grasshopper;" whether he had all he could do in the ages past to keep out of the way of the "missing link," and thus save himself from drudgery; or "whether he was developed in Trojan wars as carved on the frieze of Grecian temples, the fact remains the same, that to-day he is here by a large majority." The woods of Tennessee and Kentucky are full of them. His coming to the front has been his own work, but quick work when once the people had found out his merit, and the number of sheckels he could rake into their coffers. He has accomplished this, too, with no apparent detriment or injury to his more aristocratic brother, the trotter, only repaying the many snubs he has received from his friends, by persistently refusing to stay behind in the procession. He will keep his nose a few seconds beyond the trotting record, and it now appears that he is destined to do this for many years to come before his grievances against his brother have been wiped out.

In Tennessee and Kentucky the pacer has always been given a warm welcome, and since his accomplishments on the race-course for the past fifteen years, his popularity has steadily increased, until now, even if desired, it would be impossible to eliminate him from the light harness breeding world. His stakes and purses have grown with each year more rich and tempting; the smoothness of his gait has rapidly approached perfection, and his honest endeavours on the race track have won for him friends.

It has been said, and truthfully, that "the student who attempts to trace the development of the pacer in Tennessee and Kentucky is lost in a maze of thoroughbred blood and 'native stock;' that the 'pacing-bred' pacer of to-day is simply a mixture of the old ambling pacer of Europe—whatever he was—and the thoroughbred; and that this thorough blood has been as good, if not better, than that in old Messenger himself."

It was the thoroughbred blood which undoubtedly gave to the Hals the staying power so characteristic of the family. Star Pointer is an inbred Hal, crossed again and again in the thoroughbred blood.

Old Tom Hal and two of his noted sons, which were full brothers—Little Brown Jug 2: 11½, and Brown Hal 2: 12¼—were each of them at one time owned by O N. Fry of Mooresville Tenn. Brown Hal was sold to Major Campbell Brown of Ewell, Farm, Spring Hill, Tenn., for $600. Little Brown Jug, as the story goes, was sold by Mr. Fry to a darkey for $65, who was tending a crop with him, and who, failing to pay Mr. Fry the purchase money, had to give him up. Brown jug was unhitched from the plow by Mr. Fry and carried to his home, where he was afterwards put in training, later making his record of 2: 11¼, which made him famous, and which placed in the ascendency the star of the later-gaited horse. The name and fame of Brown Hal, both as a race horse and as a sire, is known to horsemen everywhere—the first of his get to go into the 2: 20 list being the mare Susie Brown.

Concerning the breeding of pacers, what is regarded among breeders as perhaps the most astonishing thing about this amalgamation is the "very small per cent of pacing blood it requires to leaven the thoroughbred loaf." A pacing sire bred to a running mare and that offspring bred to another running mare, and so on for several generations, will end with the last, as with the first, in getting a "saddler." These "saddlers" are numerous throughout Kentucky and Tennessee, and possess the distinguishing characteristic of the true saddle horse as set forth by Charles Ralley of Lexington, namely, a certain elasticity and springiness about him at whatever gait he is going, which makes it possible for horse and rider to respond to each other's movements and become, as it were, one. By comparison the ordinary horse seems hard and dead under you. Without elasticity there connot be perfect harmony between horse and rider, and a cold-blooded horse does not possess this quality.

Continuing, Mr. Railey says: "In conformation and in action there is not so much difference between the saddle-horse and the harness-horse as many persons suppose there is. Indeed, some of the best saddle-horses I have known were almost equally good in harness. Both the saddle-horse and harness-horse must have quality or firmness of fiber. A graceful top line, with the crup high and the tail well set and well carried, is an essential to one as to the other."

The future can only be judged by the past and the present, and with that in view, to those who have had actual experience and who have watched with interest the progress made by the pacer in the past; the prestige he holds to-day and the rapid strides he is making to gain in the estimation of the horse world, his outlook for the future must be gratifying indeed.

The Naturalist.

STRAY NOTES.

A VIENNESE scientist has spent several years in studying the dying moments of various reptiles, and has published some interesting data on the subject. He notes that reptiles die nearly always between nightfall and midnight, only occasionally between midnight and morning, and but rarely in daylight. Most reptiles seem aware of their approaching death, seeking out particular places and there awaiting the end, while those whose lives are spent underground come to the surface before death. Many reptiles, such as snakes, chameleons, crocodiles, and turtles, show the approach of death in their faces, a peculiar and unmistakeable expression coming into their eyes.

There is a bird in California called the road-runner, which is carefully protected, because, like the secretary bird of India, it destroys venomous snakes. The road-runner is partial to the flesh of the rattlesnake, and has a most ingenious mode of destroying it without danger to itself. Here is the account of an eye-witness: The bird first attacted the snake's attention, causing it to coil and take a defensive attitude, and then it quickly and skilfully surrounded the coil with a sort of hedge of the common spiny cactus. When all was ready, it tempted the rattler to make a strike, which proved immediately fatal to the miserable reptile, for, in striking, the snake hit against the hedge of cactus, and in its writhing became covered from head to tail with the barbed tenacious joints. In this condition it was an easy prey for the wary road-runner. The bird, after picking at the snake's brain, was seen to carefully strip the body of its horrible, spiny winding-sheet, and afterwards deliberately make a meal of it.

The origin of the pearl in the shell of the oyster or other bivalve or mollusc has been the object of a considerable amount of investigation and speculation. Among the more recent studies of the subject may be noted those of M. Seurat, recorded in the "Comptes Rendus." This naturalist finds that in pearl oysters from the Gambia lagoons, in the South Pacific, the pearls are due to a small worm—a sort of tape-worm. In cists on the body and mantle of the oyster he has found true pearls surrounding a nucleus which he has shown to be one of these worms. Like other tape-worms, this one concerned in the production of pearls requires a second host in which to complete its development. And M. Seurat considers that the ray is the second host in this case. For he has found in the spiral intestines of this fish small tape-worms, which he regards as the adult form of the larval worm of the pearl oyster. The view has been held that the pearl is a secretion formed, as it were, in self-defence for the surrounding and isolation of an injurious foreign body. If M. Seurat's views are correct, however, the pearl would rather appear to be a protection to the worm, and to bear to it somewhat the same relation as the oak-gall does to the gall-fly. When the epicurean ray swallows its oysters, the pearls would be dissolved in its digestive juices—as Cleopatra's pearl was dissolved in vinegar—and the worm set free to become a tape-worm in its new host. M. Seurat notes the curious fact that the fish seems to prefer those pearl oysters in which the shell has been riddled by a species of boring sponge.

Is there a language of animals? After putting this question, a contributor to "Cosmos" (Paris)—Mr. C. de Kirwan—answers, "That depends." If you mean by "language" sounds conveying certain sensations, desires, and impressions, animals certainly speak. If you mean articulate words capable of conveying ideas in the proper acceptation of the word, they as certainly do not. He goes on to say.

"Language...is of two kinds. The first is purely of the senses, expressing only impressions, sensations, appetites, and passions, and consists solely of inarticulate sounds, cries of different natures, and gestures of all sorts. This kind of language, which represents no thought, no idea, and still less any reasoning process, exists incontestably among animals, and is common to them and man.

"This confusion in the meaning of the word 'language' has led scientists...to defend the untenable opinion that animals have an intellect of the same kind, though of less degree than that of man...

"The late Father Carbonelle, in his 'Confines of Science and Philosophy,' has given a remarkable description of this language of pure sense—cries of joy or of fright, joyous shouts, sighs of sadness or grief, various movements of the wings in birds, waggings of the tail in dogs, etc., and, in man, the play of feature instinctive movements, and monosyllabic exclamations.

"The essential and fundamental difference between this language of the senses and spoken language is that the former, because it represents no idea, implies no conversation. So animals do not talk with one another, and if all the Garners and naturalists of the world observe all the gorillas, chimpanzees, and orangs of the Dark Continent, they will never surprise them in a single conversation. They will be able to notice certain cries and gestures, more or less varied, corresponding to the impressions, sensations, and passions of all this monkey tribe; just as they might observe the same with any other class of animals.

"As a recent writer well says...'To have a real language there must be judgment and reason, founded, at least implicitly, on an abstract and universal concept,' not an instinctive judgment without freedom...like that of the kid which, seeing the wolf, decides to run away, as St. Thomas says, but a free, conscious, and reasoned judgment.

"The articulate word, which alone constitutes real language, may be replaced with gestures, with signs (by deaf-mutes, for example) just as it is put into certain characters in hand-writing; but these characters, signs, and gestures correspond in this case to ideas, not merely to the phenomena of pure sensation.

"We may recall the failure of the learned English scientist, Sir John Lubbock, who in spite of several months of daily practise, followed out with unalterable patience, could not... 'to his great surprise,' teach his dog to read.

"The same result awaits all attempts to decipher and note the alleged language of monkeys."

Many English names of birds have an unsuspected ancestry, exhibiting interesting changes through past years, romantic as well as historical, says a writer in "Outing."

The word owl (or, as it was formerly ule) is derived from the Latin word ulula—an owl. This was probably from the bird's cry, and hence is remotely related to our word howl. Hawk comes from the root haf, meaning to take or seize: Turtle, as used in turtle-dove, is from the Latin turtur, the repetition being supposed to resemble the cooing of a dove. Curassow—properly Curacao bird—takes its name from the island north of Venezuela. Quail, through many and various spellings, can be traced to quackel and other forms, derived from the note of the bird. Condor is from a Peruvian word, cuntur; and cormorant resolves into the Latin words corvus marinus, literally a sea crow.

Egret has passed through such forms as egran and hiron, and thus merges into heron, which in turn has evolved from higera, cregyr, and other gutturals, given in fancied imitation of the cry of the bird. Shrike too, from the Icelandic shrikja, is so called from the harsh cry.

Many words are lost in antiquity. Thus we know that ibis goes back through the Greek tongue to the old Egyptian; but no one knows where the first Pharaoh got it. As far back as legends reach, swallow, with various spellings, signifies the long-winged bird which we know so well. Sparrow comes from the root of spurn, meaning to kick or quiver; why we know not.

Eagle, egle, aigle, aquia, take us to the Latin aquila, from a word meaning brown, or dark coloured. Pelican is from a Greek word with similar meaning, but also confused with a term meaning woodpecker, which goes direct to a Sanskrit word, paraqu, meaning a battle-axe. Pigeon (to which widgeon is related) is from the Latin pipio, a young chirping bird. Dove is obscure in its various spellings—duve, dufa, due, dubo—but literally means a diver, perhaps from the bobbing of the bird's head.

Thrush and throstle (and even the Russian drodzu) are from the Latin turdus. Etymology throws no light upon lark and tern, and the first meaning of loon from loom is for ever lost to us. Grebe is from krib or cribyn—a comb or crest. Trogon is Greek, meaning to gnaw or chew.

Cockatoo harks back to the Hindoo kakatua, from the bird's cry. The root of swan is a mystery, unless it was connected in some way with the Sanskrit svan and the Latin sonare—sound. Goose, gos, gas, gans (and Latin) anser, has its stem also in gander and gannet. Goshawk is from a wrong diminutive of goose. Fowl from fugl, flugl, meant originally to fly. Duck is literally a ducker, one who ducks or dives. Grouse is from some such word as griesche, from the Latin griseus, meaning grey. With partridge we must stop at the Latin perdix.

The origin of ptarmigan is unknown, but it should rightly be written tarmigan, the p having been added by some officious person, who wrongly supposed the word to be of Greek derivation. Pheasant is pure Greek, meaning the Phasian bird, that being the name of a river in Calchis along whose banks the birds were numerous. Plover is interestingly derived from the Latin pluviarius because these birds appeared in Italy during the rainy season.

Snipe is from snippers or snapper—one who snaps up. Sanderling is a remarkable word, showing the use of two diminutives. Crane is from Latin grus, by way of cranich, trana, garan, gerue. Jay, which in other languages is gayo and gaya, is so called from its bright plumage. Crow is from the same root as croak. Raven through raben, raaf, etc., like owl and crow, is from the guttural cry. Finch, formerly fink and pink, is from the call-note of the male English chaffinch.

GAME AND PREVENTION LAWS IN THE STATES.

OUR American cousins are not given to doing things by halves; and having once convinced themselves that the big and other game animals of their country were in danger of extermination from excessive and indiscriminate shooting, or by the introduction of noxious creatures from abroad, they have not been long in framing and putting into execution protective and preventive laws which appear thoroughly well adapted for their purpose, and are already leading to results of a highly satisfactory nature. It is not our present purpose to review either the legislation as a whole, or the collective results of this legislation, for an account of which our readers may consult three pamphlets, by Mr. T. S. Palmer, issued by the U. S. Agricultural Department, under the respective titles of "Game Preservation in 1905," "Federal Game Protection—a five years' retrospect," and "Game Protection in 1906." On the contrary, we shall merely select some of what appear to us to be the more interesting items in these reports. And here it may be mentioned that under the elastic title of game-protection the author of these pamphlets makes mention of the legislation regulating the importation into the states of mammals and birds of all kinds, other than those imported expressly and exclusively for food.

Such birds and mammals can be introduced into the country only by means of special permits, for obtaining which every facility is granted where the creatures for which they are wanted are in every way unobjectionable. During the five years ending with June 1905, no less than 1,563 of such permits were issued, thereby allowing the introduction into the United States of 2,841 mammals, 185,765 birds, other than canaries, and the enormous total of 819,970 songsters of the latter species. In addition to these, over 7,000 eggs of game-birds were admitted during the same period for breeding purposes. On the other hand, the introduction of species of either mammals or birds held to be injurious is sternly prohibited; so sternly, indeed, that but few attempts are made to evade the law. Nevertheless, it is recorded that endeavours were made to land a few specimens of blue tits, coal-tits, starlings, mungooses, and likewise quite a number of flying-foxes. All these were, however, promptly vetoed. The prohibition of starlings is extremely significant, if taken in connection with the efforts constantly made by fervid bird-protectionists in England to prove that the enormous flocks of these birds now to be met with in the country are beneficial rather than injurious to the horticulturist and the agriculturist.

In view of past experiences in the West Indies, the American authorities are terribly "down" on the mungoose. Out of seven specimens brought to the country, six were promptly killed at their respective ports of arrival; but the seventh was successfully smuggled into California, where, however, it lived but a short time. The only living specimens known to be in the States are those in the Zoological Gardens at Philadelphia and Washington, where they are carefully kept under lock and key. Of the four-and-fifty flying-foxes, two brought to San Francisco in 1903 were there and then destroyed while the remainder, which arrived all together in New York the previous year, were promptly reshipped to Hamburg.

Justification for such strict prohibitive laws is afforded, in the case of the mungoose, by the fear that if it once obtained a foothold in the Southern United States, "it would probably repeat its record in Jamaica, and exterminate quail, grouse, and other ground-nesting birds, destroy poultry, and otherwise do immense damage. In short, it would in all probability become the worst pest that could be introduced into the country.....In the strict enforcement of this law lies the protection of the United States in future from the repetition of such a costly experiment as the introduction of the English sparrow, and from the danger of acclimatization of the mungoose or other pests capable of doing immense damage."

As regards the results effected by the laws for the protection of the wild game—both furred and feathered—of the country, these seem, on the whole, to be highly satisfactory, and to show that there is ground for abundant hope for the future of the fauna. Deer (by which we presume the white-tailed species and the mule-deer are meant) appear to have maintained their normal numbers in most districts, and in some localities, such as the Adirondacks and parts of Pennsylvania, have actually increased, some idea of the numbers in which these ruminants still exist is afforded by the statement that during the past year no less than 6,799 were carried out of Maine by rail, while in Vermont 495 were killed during the six days that shooting is permitted, and 3,310 were entrained in Ontario. In New Jersey the experiment of restocking a portion of the country which had been shot out is proving successful.

Moose, again, are increasing in Wyoming, and apparently not diminishing in Maine whence 253 were shipped during the year under review. The wapiti ("elk") liberated in the Adirondacks are thriving, while those in Wyoming have maintained their normal number, notwithstanding the fact that nearly 800 were killed during the season. On the other hand it is sad to learn that prong-horn antelope are doing badly in Wyoming, one of their main strongholds, where about a couple of hundred are reported to have been slain in the course of the past year. It is added that the herd in the Green River Valley, believed to be one of the largest in the United States, will soon dwindle to insignificant proportions unless prompt and efficient measures are taken for its protection. Much more satisfactory is the news that the herd of wild bison near the head of Pelican Creek, in the Yellowstone, now numbers about thirty individuals.

The herd of so-called tame bison in the Yellowstone which, when started in 1902, comprised eighteen cows and a couple of bulls, now numbers forty-four, inclusive of three wild calves caught in the park. The degree of tameness to which the bison have reached is not recorded, but it is stated that the prongbuck, bighorn sheep, and white-tailed deer in the park have become, as the result of being regularly fed during the last two or three winters, excessively tame, so that many of them come near the buildings, and even on the parade-ground of the Fort.

Prong-horn antelope in the park are stated to number about fifteen hundred, while the herd of bighorn sheep is estimated at a hundred head; beavers are increasing, and, white-tailed deer, wapiti, and black bears abound. The wapiti are by far the most numerous of the big game, so numerous indeed that it is impossible to hazard even a guess at their number. During the summer they find abundant food, but in winter probably about half the number leave the park to seek better feeding-grounds in the adjacent States at lower altitudes. It is added that the experience of the last ten years in the Yellowstone demonstrates how easily the big game of the west may be saved from extermination if Congress will but sanction the conversion of certain parts of the forest-reserves into game-sanctuaries.

Certain areas, in addition to the Yellowstone, have indeed been already devoted to this purpose. The Wichita preserve in Oklahoma includes, for instance, 57,000 acres, and although this area is only a fraction of that of the Yellowstone, the reserve has great possibilities as a sanctuary for bison, wapiti, white-tailed deer, and prong-horn, to say nothing of game-birds of various kinds. Reference may also be made to the herd of the small San Joaquin race of wapiti recently establised in the Sequoia National Park, California. These wapiti, which had for some years been protected on a private ranch in California, formerly abounded in the southern part of the San Joaquin Valley, but had become reduced to less than one hundred and fifty head. In 1904 an unsuccessful attempt was made to capture the herd by driving it into a corral, but in the autumn of 1905 about a score of individuals were caught and safely transferred to their new quarters, where it is hoped that they will increase, and thus maintain the dwarf southern race (for it is not, as Americans suppose, a species) of the wapiti for many years to come.

In addition to the number of big game reserves in the States, there are several sanctuaries where birds of various kinds are secure from the egg-collector and the plume-hunter. The best known of these sanctuaries is Pelican Island, in the Indian River, Florida, at no great distance from the city of Sebastian. Little more than a mud flat, with only a few mangroves, two or three cabbage plams, and patches of tall grass dotted over its area of four acres, it has for many years been the sole breeding-place on the east coast of Florida of the brown pelican, of which the colony was originally immense. Previous, however, to 1901, when vigorous protective measures were taken, the colony was in serious danger of extermination, plume-hunters destroying the adult birds for their quills, then in fashion for ladies' hats, while collectors carried away the eggs by the hundred. One of the latter gentry who visited the island in the spring of 1894 has, indeed, acknowledged that in about an hour he collected some 125 clutches, which must have represented a very considerable proportion of the eggs then in the nests. Even tourists frequently did considerable mischief by shooting at the unfortunate pelicans simply for the reason that they afforded a good mark, or by driving them from their nests, thus exposing the callow offspring to the scorching, and often fatal, rays of the sun. All this has been changed by the new régime.

"For several seasons," runs the report, "the birds have bred free from molestation, and the colony is now in a flourishing condition. The island has been visited by naturalists, who have made careful studies of the birds; data never before available are being collected regarding their food, moulting and nesting habits, and the reservation is fast becoming a point of interest for visitors and students of nature, who are attracted by the exceptional opportunities afforded for observing the birds and studying their habits."

Having once determined (fortunately before it was too late) that protection for birds and animals was imperative, unless the native fauna was to be exterminated, Brother Jonathan has taken up the mater in real earnest and in a manner showing that he intends to see it through.

Sporting Notes.

We publish elsewhere the first entries for the four big events of the Calcutta Races and have to acknowledge our indebtedness to the Secretary of the C. T. C. for having placed them at our disposal.

In all cases the entries are more numerous than those of last year. Twenty-one are down for the Trials as against seventeen; nineteen for the Viceroy's Cup as against sixteen last year; and eighteen for the Grand National which at the first time of asking last year drew fourteen, and the Grand Annual has attracted the very satisfactory entry of eighteen. The list has reached us too late to admit of analysis in this number, we shall deal with it fully in our next; meanwhile our readers will find food for reflection and matter for speculation on perusing what is set before them to-day.

The Calcutta training track was not opened on the 5th November as anticipated owing to the heavy rain of the preceding week, and most of the Bangalore and other up-country stables are delaying their move to head-quarters in consequence. Wishart's is the only important string as yet in evidence, but fresh arrivals will no doubt be forthcoming daily during next week. The most important units in the Hastings stable are Blitzen and The Master, the latter being mentioned as a probable starter in the Cup. Mercedes, Stepaway, Warstripe, and Mornine with Mr. Holme's Santa Maria and Anna Mulloch are also in this stable, as well as last year's paperchase cup winner, Nevermore Mr. Galstaun's Poona string has arrived in charge of Tingey and Robinson has also been in Calcutta during the week. The owner of Long Tom has now built a fine range of stables in Circular Road considerably nearer the course than his present location off Lansdowne Road, and large enough to accommodate his ever-growing string.

The programme of the Bombay Races shows a further advance on that of last year, and by raising the stakes of the Byculla Club Cup Handicap, the executive can now offer two ten-thousand rupee handicaps at this meeting. These prizes should attract all the Viceroy's Cup and open handicap horses competing at the Calcutta meeting.

It is necessary to report the following notice in the last C. T. C. Calendar, being a further, and apparently the final, step in the Chump case.

Notice.

The Stewards having considered certain betting transactions at the Monsoon Meetings 1906 decide that W. Scott (also known as W. Scott Harding) representing the firm of Chas. Harding at the above meetings be warned off.

Windy, the much talked about "entrance fail" for the Measurers' Competition has been purchased by Mr. Galstaun, and the reported price, Rs. 12,000, is a further commentary on the folly of dividing horses into two classes by the 14-2 standard.

The Tollygunge Club brought off a fairly successful Meeting last Saturday, but the final downpour on the preceding Friday made the course decidedly greasy and unpleasant. The Steeplechase had to be abandoned and accidents occurred in two races. In the first race for ponies Dr. Hossack's new paper-chaser slipped and stumbled at the bend for home and most unhappily broke its leg. His owner escaped uninjured, but is entitled to all sympathy for the loss of his fine pony at the very commencement of the season. In the Novice Stakes, the favourite Lucifer, slipped and fell at the same place, bringing down Salad Dressing, but fortunately without any serious effect beyond the inevitable loss to backers. Taking Lucifer's subsequent performance later in the afternoon as a criterion it seems, however, that Mars, the ultimate winner, would have won the race, fall or no fall. The result of this very high weight handicap was not a success, as only one of the top weights accepted and the field was reduced to five starters.

The open race gave much better sport and three or four of them seemed to be well in it at the distance. Eventually, however, the light-weighted Queen of Gems drew out and won in a very decided fashion, so much so that her connections were glad to back her to beat Lollipop at level weights. The challenge resulted in a match over 6 furlongs, which was run off at the close of the programme. Mr. Galstaun on Queen of Gems had no difficulty in defeating Lollipop and the latter's victory at the Monsoon Meetings seem more than ever a marvel.

The Steeplechase having been converted into a seven-furlong flat race, Queen of Hearts gave her owner a comfortable winning ride, Fairy just getting into second place by a head from Lucifer. Mr. Pierson's mare is a real good bit of stuff and should beat more "hunters" than beat her out paperchasing, or even over Tollygunge. It is true that she beat nothing of much merit on Saturday, but on the other hand she was hardly extended at all at any point in the race.

The pony race in which Glenekin fell was won handsomely by Mr. Evers on Lady George, after riding a patient race in the wake of Knock Out the public fancy. The Pony Buggy Stakes resulted in a tussle between Golden Star and Blossom, but the latter was not seen to great advantage, when it came to close quarters. The Fatherland took a heavy fall in the Ring over Mr. Schwertfeiger's mount, but he will no doubt make another effort to get his own back. After all nothing but practice can make perfect, and it is as a practice ground that these gymkhana meetings are approved by that section of their supporters, who do not frequent the betting ring.

Messrs. Milton and Company must have been gratified at Saturday's results. In the first race Knock Out, who ran second, was one of their selling, and they also sold Mars, who won the Novice Stakes and Golden Star, who won the Buggy Stakes. In the All-Comers' Cup the winner, Queen of Gems, was stabled and trained at their place, and the two placed horses, Batanzos and Lollipop, had both passed through their stables.

The following items figure in the prospectus of the final gymkhana fixed for Saturday, the 17th instant. As anticipated the programme is of a variegated nature; the lighter vein being supplied by a Portly Stakes for 12-stone pedestrians and a four furlongs Recruits' Race for first-year men in the Calcutta Light Horse.

The Jumping Competition is open to horses and ponies and will probably take a big slice out of the afternoon, so that the executive will have their work cut out to keep up to time. Then there is an open race for all ponies 14-2 and under, distance, five furlongs. The Farewell Stakes for horses that have never won Rs. 500 is over the same distance; the attraction probably being the spectacular effect obtainable of a start from the mile post. The six-furlong post is very badly placed in this respect and seven furlongs necessitates a start amongst the crowd.

The number of Black and White to hand by the last English mail has a photo of Lieutenant-Colonel J. Desaraj Urs, of Southern India racing fame. In the accompanying letter press he is described as "the most successful racing man in India, whose colours have finished first at all the chief meetings." The enterprising Colonel has certainly won a good many races and has had some measure of success at most of our big meetings; but the names of a dozen more successful racing men than he will readily occur to our readers. His best horse, far and away, was game old Leonidas who captured the Viceroy's Cup in 1897, the Turf Club Cup in 1897 and 1898, the Cooch Behar Cup in 1897, and the Madras Governor's Cup in 1904.

The 39th Central India Horse won the Indore Polo Tournament on Saturday, beating Bhopal in the final as will be seen from our report.

Possibly there may be among our readers those who cultivate a pretty taste in gastronomics; to such the following may be of interest:—"Some of the dishes at a City banquet this week included twenty turkeys, each boned and stuffed, an ox tongue, truffles, and sausage-meat; twenty-four dozen boned larks, stuffed with Pyfleet native oysters; and some fifteen brace of pheasants, the finest the market could produce. The boned larks are a particular delicacy. They are stuffed only with the finest oysters, and each oyster has its beard removed, so that only the choicest part is used."

The illustrated papers received by this week's English mail give us some idea of how the angry French sportsman sets to work when things don't please him. Some further particulars of the extraordinary scenes on the Longchamps course, when the place was wrecked and three hundred persons injured, may be of interest: we extract the following from the London Sportsman. "Longchamps racecourse was wrecked this afternoon by an infuriated mob, whose passions were aroused by a fiasco at the start of the third race on the card. Three hundred persons were injured. Two men are reported to have been killed, and several of the injured are in a precarious condition.

The favourite, Storm, and half of the other horses entered were left at the post when the signal to start was given. Five of the remainder went on with the race, but the others who started with them pulled up and returned to the starting post. The jockeys who got away pushed forward their mounts despite the hoots and booing of the people, and carried the race to a finish. A rank outsider naturally came in an easy winner, but the judge had no choice but to declare the win, and as the notice bell rang to proclaim "All well," the crowd suddenly surged round the judge's box and howled for the race to be called off. The occupants of the grand stand and the reserved enclosure were just as excited as the mob on the heath, and swarmed round the horses as they walked back to the weighing paddock to weigh in. Amid angry shouts hundreds of men raced away across the course to the office of the pari-mutuel. The police on duty, aided by the company of infantry always on duty at the races, together with a half squadron of mounted Republican Guards, endeavoured to stem the movement, but were swept away by the now infuriated mob. Many women in the path of the rush were either ruthlessly pushed aside or thrown down and trampled upon by the rioters. The mob, armed with chairs from the enclosure, and palings hastily ripped off the paddock fences, fought savagely to get at the betting booths and weighing-room. The betting booths upon the field number some hundreds, little wooden huts of the flimsiest description. The clerks inside them fastened their doors. It did not take long for someone in the crowd to suggest firing the booths. This idea was immediately put into operation. The clerks inside cried aloud for help, and when their positions became untenable, owing either to the smoke and flames or to the huts being partially wrecked, they had no option but to attempt the impossible task of saving themselves and the money entrusted to them from the maddened thousands by whom they were surrounded. At the sight of the boxes containing the money the mob made a rush, and in a twinkling cash and notes were strewn all about. People fought like maniacs to get a share of the plunder.

By this time the betting booths were blazing furiously. Some of the cashiers managed to make their way to the chief betting room; most of them not only lost all their takings but were half done to death as well. It is known that at least £20,000 is missing, and if the further accounts can ever be made up it is probable that the losses will be found to be much heavier.

Urgent messages were telephoned to police headquarters for assistance. The troops from Curbevoie barracks were upon the scene within and hour of the first outbreak, but they hesitated to use their weapons, and without them they were practically powerless. The Puteaux Fire Brigade galloped up within a few minutes of receiving the call. The mob cut the traces of the horses and caused them to stampede, several people being knocked down and badly injured. The hose was cut to pieces and the fire engine damaged. Shortly after this, M. Lepine, Prefect of Police, hurried upon the scene, and there being nothing else for it M. Lepine directed the Guards to charge. They did so, but they could make little headway against the rioters, who clubbed the soldiers mercilessly, and even attempted to set fire to their uniforms. Until the further reinforcements telephoned for arrived, the authorities had to content themselves with guarding the enclosure and saving the main stands and the presidential box from destruction. In this they were successful, although three times smoke was seen to rise from the weighing rings and flames burst out from the stables. Owners, trainers, and jockeys had an anxious time in getting away the many valuable horses. Fortunately, the mob was too intent upon pillaging the betting booths to give heed to the horses, and all the animals were safely got out and hurried away by a back road. Two motor fire engines arrived at full speed from Paris, and losing no time in getting to work soon extinguished the few minor outbreaks, smouldering rather than burning, within the enclosure.

T. E. BEVAN & CO.,

PIANOS,

Calcutta.

Out in the open, however, matters were very different. Not a single betting booth escaped destruction. A huge bonfire was made of the judge's box, winning post, course railings, tickets, and everything else that could he got at. One gang seized a four-wheeled cab that could not be got away in time, and after releasing the horse threw the vehicle bodily into the flames. The restaurant also blazed furiously, where men and a few women, heedless of the flames, struggled to get at the casks of wine and spirits.

The first disorder happened soon after three o'clock, and it was not until half-past five that there was a sufficient force of military on the ground to suppress the disorder. At that hour, five hundred infantry arrived at the double, and clubbing their rifles advanced in a line four deep, and ruthlessly swept the rioters off the field. The mob fought stubbornly, but could not stand against the rush of the military. Scores of persons were borne away by the ambulance detachment. The racecourse by now was dotted with heaps of smouldering ruins. Nothing remained standing on the field, while in the enclosure chairs and seats were smashed to match-wood, the planking of the grand stand was ripped away, windows riddled, flower beds ruined, and stables and weighing-in rooms wrecked. Torn bank notes, money, shreds of elaborate costumes, battered hats, torn frock coats, and broken umbrellas and walking-sticks lying about the place were an eloquent testimony to the severity of the struggle.

The damage to the racecourse property alone must amount to thousands of pounds, without counting the huge sums lost through the raid on the pari-mutuel. The wounded include several police and mounted guards, several of whom are suffering from stabs and bullet wounds, and two are reported to have died. There were very few arrests, the mob in almost every case effecting a rescue whenever the police succeeded in making a capture. The occurrence is unprecedented in French racing history. There have been several minor disorders, but never anything like to-day's affair."

The programme of the Chittagong Races is advertised in to-day's paper : the dates are the 11th and 13th December and first entries close on the 1st idem. We hope the efforts of the executive will attract owners from the tea districts and Eastern Bengal.

Details of the recent Handicap Polo Tournament, held at Lucknow, appear among our Polo news to-day.

A correspondent writes in connection with the proposal to hold a big polo tournament in Agra during the Amir's visit :—"Major Lecky, of the Indian Polo Association, is now seeking votes from the different regiments and other teams that are interested, as to whether Agra or Calcutta is to be the cenue of the Championship Polo Tournament this year. Under any circumstances there is every prospect of a big tournament at Agra during the durbar week, distinct from the small one advertised for December, and if the votes are in favour of the championship being played at Agra it will behove the Calcutta Turf Club to organize a separate tournament at Calcutta, where a splendid ground has been arranged. It is hoped that polo teams from various Native States, such as Jodhpore, Alwar, Bikanir, Kishengarh and Bhopal, whose Chiefs will be present, may come forward and compete at Agra. It is also hoped that the famous Golconda team may be induced to attend."

It is Lord Minto's desire to witness a tournament on the same scale and lines as that held during the Delhi Durbar for cups presented by Lord Curzon. Lord Minto proposes to offer similar cups if the tournament can be arranged. The Championship Polo Tournament will be held as arranged in Calcutta, but if the two tournaments are held so close together it is not improbable one of them may suffer. It behoves the Calcutta Committee to make strenuous efforts to indûce all teams proposing to compete at Agra to attend the Calcutta tournay as well."

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—The Cup candidates here are all well and doing good work. Taking them in order Long Tom is never absent from the track and though he has not yet been called upon to do any really important time gallops, he goes round morning after morning, generally twice, and always finishes at a strong pace. This morning (3rd November) he came home at about ten annas from the seven-furlong post and was galloping like a lion at the finish. The big gelding never takes anything out of himself by unnecessary pulling about, indeed he is so confidential that to see him when trotting, he might be described as an old gentleman's mount. Should he be brought to the post fit and well, and if anyone can do this Tom Ferguson can, I shall look to see him repeat his last year's triumph. There is nothing to add to what has already been written about Munderah. The horse is much better than he was last year, and very well. He is bound to run well, but other things being equal I doubt whether he will ever beat Long Tom. And in this opinion I am supported by very competent authority indeed.

Nothing can be added also to last week's remarks about Mallard. He never does a gallop but is always in slow and steady work which is indeed all he needs at present for he is almost fit to go to the post to-day. Fitzgrafton had a dose of physic at the beginning of the week and was not seen on the track for some days, but on Friday and Saturday he cantered round once looking bright and well. It is necessary to qualify to some extent my remarks as to Steinhagger. I said that he could hardly be got fit in time for the big race, but he is coming on very steadily and as he left England fit and well and has still nearly two months in front of him there is no reason why he should not after all be brought to the post at the top of his form. Whether that form is good enough to beat the crack Australians mentioned above, or to win the Viceroy's Cup is doubtful and personally I do not think so. Of the jumpers Lock Lockie is jumping beautifully and going very freely, but Pennant appears to want a lot of driving and was regularly rib-roasted at every fence during a fast school on Thursday morning. Decoration and Aberfoil went half a mile over three fences this morning, both jumping well and travelling at a great rate, but Decoration as usual led the other a long way. He is a "grate leppar intoirely."

Another from Ferguson's stable did a fair half mile gallop this morning, a second under even time being clocked, but I do not think that this sister to Kipling will ever be really first class. Colonel Desaraj Urs, will visit Calcutta with two horses (Red Coral and Trenton) and two ponies (Lucretia and Minimus). The latter is very full of himself and very well, but it may be doubted if he is quite the pony he was. He has had a lot of knocking about and I well remember seeing him present 73lbs (!) to the speedy Beccles in Mysore and win in a tight finish. On that occasion he supported no less than 12st. 10lbs., a cruel weight for a pony. Lucretia is a sweet tempered little mare and will always try, but the pony class on your side will probably be too good for her. Trenton, like Minimus, seems to me not quite the horse he was, but he too is very light-hearted and rumour saith that when, in the absence of a riding boy his, veteran trainer lately steered him round the course, that veteran trainer had his hands quite full. Eheu fugaces. That same trainer was once probably the leading jockey in India.

The usual odds and ends paragraph must close the week's racing letter. Airlock has got over her lameness is quite sound again and in steady work. Ballark is doing slow work. There is a certain English chestnut pony called Miss Hobson which is said to be going to do huge things bye and bye, but at present she is only doing slow work. Certainly she is a good one to look at. Dignum's new English importations are doing heaps of work, but some of them are giving trouble. Jolly Monk and Vespasia are probably the best of them ; the former by the way a grand son of Hermit, will sooner or later win a good race or two. Also by the way, it may be noted that there are two or three "good old have beens" doing tum-tum duty here at present. Watson drives Malta and Stand Off in his gig and Mr. Apcar presented old Severity to Mr. Donne, the Bangalore Race Secretary, who may often be seen tooling the old horse down to the course. Very happy the old horses seem, too, and as they stand in the gigs one can imagine their pitying their younger comrades who go out to be excited and raced and physicked and generally worried. It is quite possible that a race horse may enjoy a race, but I douot if he enjoys his training. I know I did not when I used to have to train for Henley more years ago than I like to think about.

There was some good fun at a little Gymkhana race meeting on the 3rd instant when fields were fair and in some instances good. It was pleasant to see Mr. Strickland, who has just returned from home, again riding, and he won a couple of races. Mr. Hannington's new purchases from Tom Ferguson's stable, King's Mirror and Advance were considerably too good for their company. Advance jumps well and King's Mirror, albeit a baby at present, shows much promise and will be heard of in much more important racing in the future.

The old grey horse Acetine, well remembered in Calcutta as an unlucky performer who had a wonderful faculty for nearly getting there, has recently distinguished himself by winning the Governor's Cup at the Singapore Races. This was his second attempt ; on the first, last year, he was badly beaten by Essington. This time with the light impost of 8st. 7lbs. he managed to quite get there : Rapid Pilgrim and Rutland filled the situations.

The Poona racing season just closed began on the 28th July and ran on without interruption till the 27th ultimo. There were twelve extras, one closed meeting and seven days of the big meeting, in all twenty days of good sport, details of which have been published in these columns from week to week. It only now remains to conclude the record with the usual statistics. The tables of "Form at a Glance" will be found among our Turf news and below we give the other details relating to jockey, owners, and trainers. Facile princeps among the riding talent stands that redoubtable horseman J. Robinson. He wears well ; it seems a very long time since we first saw him ride for the late Maharajah of Durbhunga—a quarter of a century ago it must be—yet he continues to lead. At these meetings he had 92 mounts, rode 21 winners, 20 seconds and 15 thirds. The next on the list is Williams, whose 51 rides produced 15 wins, 7 seconds and 3 thirds. A. Hoyt, whose position on the list is fourth, had nearly as many mounts as Robinson, three less in fact, yet his wins total but 11. At the head of the G. R. contingent stands Mr. Deane, with the Hon'ble. D. Bingham a good second.

The gentleman who races under the nom de course of "Mr. R. R. S."—how fond they are of these bewildering letter combinations on the other side of India—was the most successfull owner both in number of wins and in amount of stakes. He is followed, longo intervallo, by M. Goculdas and A. Nanji, but before this well-known stable come the Kour Saheb of Patiala and Mr. Galstaun by reason of their larger money total. Mr. Galstaun was the only Calcutta owner to make any show, the Hon. Mr. Apcar and Mr. W. H. Walmsley having but a win each.

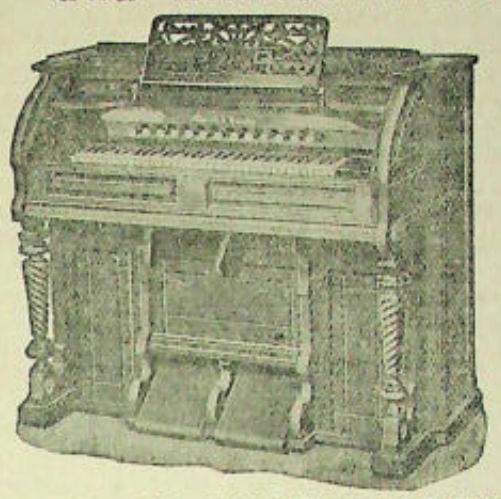
Mr. John Enright, the British champion salmon-fly caster, easily won the New York Anglers' Club open tournament in Central Park on Saturday, the 6th ultimo. With an 18 feet rod he made a magnificent cast of 148 feet 6 inches The American record was 147 feet. Only two American anglers ventured to compete. R. C. Leonard came nearest with 137 feet. In an exhibition cast with a 14 feet rod, he cast 126 feet, beating his own world's record by 6 feet. A large crowd of anglers gave enthusiastic cheers for the world's champion.

A colossal enterprise for the preservation of big game is being undertaken in New Brunswick, where a syndicate of a hundred American plutocrats has obtained a lease of all the lands of the New Brunswick Railway Company. The area to be enclosed is 1,700,000 acres, and over £20,000 will be spent in its development. A splendid club-house is to be erected, a corps of guides organised, a chain of hunting camps will be established, and boats and launches will be provided for fishermen. The district is noted for its big game, moose and caribou deer and black bear being found in abundance.

The big reticulated python at the London Zoological Gardens has just caused great joy to its keepers by consenting to eat a goat after many months of voluntary fasting. Since September, 1905, the python has taken two meals, which, considering its remarkably temperate habits, is considered fairly good. The beautiful creature, which is always the centre of interest at the reptile-house, measures 25 feet in length, and is the largest snake in captivity in the world. In spite of its enormous size, however, it is, in the matter of food, one of the cheapest inhabitants of the gardens. Its average time between meals is six months, but it often fasts for eight months, and once, in spite of continual tempting, it refused food for ten months, and appeared none the worse for it. The meal is always the same—a live goat. Anything smaller is despised, and it is certain that the python would starve to death sooner than eat a rabbit. Having broken its fast, the snake began a protracted bath. It entered its tank and coiled itself comfortably in one end of it, with just the tip of its nose appearing above the surface of the water. Past experience has proved that it will remain in that position, probably without uncoiling a fold, for about four months. The temperature of the water is kept at 90 degrees, and the fact of the snake resorting to its tank is a sign that winter is at hand.

The uses to which the destructive dogfish can be put are manifold. It is only quite recently that the campaign in favour of its use as food was started, when it was shown that this fish, hitherto looked upon as utterly useless, was after all something of a delicacy. Now its usefulness as a crop-fertiliser has been demonstrated, and it seems as though the two uses of the fish will conflict. Dead dogfish can be converted into guano, and two dogfish reduction works in Nova Scotia have been turning out a coarse fertiliser material known as "fish scrap" by the ton. Thus a profitable industry has arisen for the fishermen, who are able to do a good business in supplying these works with dogfish. But the question has since arisen whether it is not wasteful to use so admirable a food as the dogfish has proved itself for the purpose of fertilisation. Altogether, the situation is a pretty one. At all events, one fact is prominent; the dogfish, hitherto despised as a destructive and useless creature, offers at least two means of being utilised by humanity.



Anyone who has noticed how rapidly and easily the domestic cat will revert to wildness if left to find for itself, will understand how genuine a pest are those cats which infest some of the London parks. The cat, unlike the dog, has lost little or none of its original aptitude for savage life, and is at need almost as clever a hunter as it was before association with mankind overlaid the creature with a thin—a very thin—veneer of domesticity. There are in London thousands of homeless cats, but they are for the most part thoroughly capable of supporting themselves; and a lost cat is rarely or never reduced to the pitiful circumstances in which the lost dog speedily finds himself. In the parks of London these vagrant cats have their happy hunting grounds, and they are frequently responsible for serious losses in the way of valuable waterfowl. The keepers are engaged in a relentless war against the depredators, but short of the use of a shot gun it seems unlikely that much can be done against so wary and active a creature as a cat that has learned how to live the simple life.

A London contemporary is thankful to learn that someone at last has been found willing—and apparently able—to cope with that abominable nuisance the blue-bottle, to say nothing of the house-fly and similar pests. This summer particularly has been a busy one for insects, which have abounded in some districts to such an extent that they have really been a serious nuisance. The

First made in 1828.

From the late Major-General Burnaby, M.P.

Baggrave Hall, Leicester, 13th November 1881.

TO DOBSON & SON, LEICESTER.

SIRS,—In reply to your enquiry as to whether I have derived satisfaction from your Alterative Horse Powders, I beg to say I should not have sent for other lots had I not found them beneficial for their intended purpose. I don't approve of physicing horses, but these Powders seem to possess a harmless and special virtue. The object of your enquiry being to use my reply as a testimonial, you are at liberty to do so for what anybody may think my opinion worth.

I am, yours faithfully,

benefactor whose aim it is to free mankind from insect persecution is the Rev. W. S. Lach-Szyrma, vicar of Barkingside. This cleric has founded, in his parish, a regular society for the extermination of blue-bottles, flies, mosquitoes, wasps, and all similar friends of man. Against all such, the vicar and his gallant band wage desperate war. Their insecticidal efforts are sustained not only by the fact that they are ridding humanity of a serious nuisance, but also by the knowledge that the authorities at the Zoo are ready to purchase dead flies, which are given to the insectivorae.

Messrs. Rodda and Company have favoured us with a copy of their catalogue for the season 1906-1907. Sportsmen will find much to interest them in this well turned out publication.

Athletic Notes.

CONGRATULATIONS to Mr. C. Ismay, who was married on Wednesday, the 31st ultimo, to Miss Grace McBean. The Calcutta Cathedral was thronged by well-known people, prominent among them being a very large number of local representative sportsmen, athletes, and G.R's. Mr. Ismay is, perhaps, one of the best examples of a good "all-round man" to be found in Bengal at the moment: at hockey, football, polo and bicycle polo he is a real "don," on the running path he has shown us some brilliant form; he can ride more than a bit, holds a gun straight and would have made a good oar if he had only stuck to it. Here's the best of good luck to him and his better half, may the day be far distant when he takes a back seat in matters sporting.

The match card of the Calcutta Cricket Club includes three very interesting fixtures for Xmas week :—

Dec. 24th, 25th, 26th	Calcutta C.C. vs. The Behar Wanderers.
Dec. 27th, 28th	Bombay Presidency vs. Behar Wanderers.
Dec. 29th, 31st, Jan. 1st	Calcutta C.C. vs. Bombay Gymkhana.

The South Africans beat Glamorgan, who had no less than eleven Welsh Internationals playing for them, by 6 points to 3; a rather narrower margin of victory than usual. They also beat Gloster last week by 23 points to nothing.

At a Special General Meeting of the Calcutta Cricket Club held at the Turf Club on the 31st ultimo, with 17 members present, and the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar, Chairman, the new rules, as passed at the Special General Meetings of the 5th and 9th October, were confirmed.

The principal alterations were the election of a President and Vice-President; also a Captain and Vice-Captain of the Club to be elected at the Annual General Meeting. The latter in former years was elected for each match by the Committee.

That instead of each member as heretofore paying an annual subscription of Rs. 50, members will now come under four different headings, viz., Honorary Members, Rs. 25 per annum; Cricket Members, Rs. 40; Tennis, Rs. 40; Members playing both games, 50. The Meeting was followed by the Annual General Meeting, to pass the accounts and elect officers for the coming season. Under the new rules the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar was elected President of the Club; Mr. Collins, Vice-President; Mr. F. H. Stewart, Captain; Mr. H. V. Low, Vice-Captain; Mr. C. M. Pope, Honorary Secretary; Mr. J. M. LeCocq, Honorary Treasurer; Messrs. T. Curtis-Hayward and H. V. Low, Members of the Committee.

The Chairman then proposed a vote of thanks to Messrs. Tassie and LeCocq for all the work they had done in connection with the framing of the new rules. The Meeting altogether passed off very successfully and closed with a hearty vote of thanks to the Chair.

The St. Xavier's College Annual Sports are fixed for Saturday, the 17th instant, and will be held, as usual, in the College grounds, Park Street. The programme is timed to begin at 3 o'clock, the Volunteer band will be on hand, distinguished patronage is expected, the parents will muster in force and their offspring may be depended on to do the rest. The general public, outside parents, and those connected with the College, are cordially invited to come and see how school sports can be run.

The Calcutta Football Club Meeting on Wednesday last was fairly well attended and was presided over by Mr. Frank Carter. The election of office-bearers gave the following satisfactory result :—President, Mr. F. W. Carter (re-elected); Vice-President, Mr. G. Pickford; Rugby Captain, Mr. Heilgers; Hockey Captain, Mr. McCaw; Ground Secretary Mr. Mackenzie (re-elected); Treasurer, Mr. Barnes; Association Secretary, Mr. Reid. The selection of the Association Captain was held over.

The accounts were passed and certain changes in the rules were adopted.

A proposal to support the Referees' Association found very general acceptance and the meeting decided to enter an Association team for the tournament to be held in connection with Lady Minto's fête. Also it was decided at that time to play off, with the West Ridings, the tie which resulted in their meeting in the final of the Madras Rugby tournament. A hockey tournament in connection with the fête was also proposed and found support.

Owing to the sodden state of the ground after the recent heavy rain no cricket matches of any importance were played in Calcutta last Saturday.

Seven teams entered for the Upper Burma Association Football Championship at Mandalay; the final resolved itself into a struggle between the East Yorks from Maymyo and the King's Own from Shwebo, the East Yorks winning an exciting game by two goals to one.

We learn from the report by the Directors of the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society to the 98th Annual General Meeting, held on Thursday, the 7th day of June, 1906 that the Directors made the following very satisfactory statement of the Society's operations during the year ending 31st December, 1905.

In reporting the result of the year's operations the Directors desire to call attention to a slight alteration in the method of presenting the figures. Leasehold and Capital Redemption Insurance (i.e., the insurance of fixed sums payable at specified dates, and having no reference to the duration of life), introduced by the Society in 1890 for the convenience of some of its clients—and now forming an important part of the yearly business of most of the leading offices—has during 1905 taken so large a development that the Directors have decided for the future to report the results separately.

The Proposals received during the year numbered 5,846 for £3,601,233, of which 574 for £317,334 were declined or not completed, while 5,272 Policies were issued insuring £3,283,899, and carrying New Premiums of £149,544. It will be remembered that the New Business of 1904 was the largest ever transacted by the Society, but the above figures exceed those of 1904 by £249,962 in sums insured, and £16,565 in New Premiums.

In addition to the above, the Society received the sum of £50,926 1s. 2d. as Premiums for Leasehold and Capital Redemption Policies completed during the year.

The income of the year was £1,116,163 0s. 2d., and the expenditure (including a provision for every outstanding claim) £577,106 11s. 6d. The difference £539,056 8s. 8d. (of which £454,247 4s. 6d. arises on the "Assurance Fund," and £84,809 4s. 2d. on the "Annuity Fund") constitutes the increase in the Funds, which at the close of the year amounted to £6,087,868 6s. 10d. The Interest Dividends, etc., received during the year amounted to £242,981 5s. 0d. Including a profit of £4,763 12s. 8d. on Securities realised, the net return on the mean Funds, including all unproductive Assets, was £4 5s. 4d. per cent., after deduction of income tax.

During the year 552 Policies became claims by death, and 87 by survivance, the total amount payable by the Society in respect thereof being £272,715 18s. 3d., exclusive of £52,114 0s. 5d. of Bonus Additions. These amounts have been shown by the usual Mortality Investigation to be less than the amount expected by £84,980.

Few men played more practical jokes on the cricket field than the late Tom Lockyer. During 1867 he took part in a match at Broadwater, near Godalming, between the United South of England Eleven and Eighteen of Ealing.

Among the players for England was the late Julius Cæsar. When he and Lockyer met there was a great deal of chaff exchanged, and the last-named eventually offered to bet his opponent that he would not succeed in scoring more than forty runs. Of course the challenge did not pass unheeded, and the sum agreed upon was soon deposited with the umpire.

When Julius went in to bat there was quite a buzz of excitement, for the news of the wager had spread. In such fine form was the All-England player that in a comparatively short time he had added forty to the score. Then "over" was called, and the successful batsman smiled at Lockyer as he passed.

By no means disconcerted was this worthy gentleman, however, and he calmly took his place behind the wicket. The first ball passed the batsman and sped on to the wicketkeeper. Hastily turning to Jupp, who was at long-stop, Tom called out, "Now, Juppy!" implying, of course, that the ball had gone on to the player mentioned. No sooner, however, had Julius started to run than a shout proclaimed something was wrong, and, hastily turning, the too-confident batsman had the mortification of seeing the bails lying on the ground. In this manner Lockyer won his bet, and had the laugh, which was the thing he most cared for, against Julius.

MR. HALDANE'S method of dealing with the officers whose conduct was the subject of investigation by the War Stores Commission, has been accorded a mixed reception. The soldiers do not like the departure from tradition involved by dispensing with the court-martial which, say they, would give accused a chance. Some critics think the stick has been applied too freely, while others hold opinions just the reverse: but there seems to be much unanimity on one point :—to wit that to name a score of men (all but one warrant officers or non-commissioned) and say "In the following cases no action will be taken," is not playing the game. I cannot say I take this view myself. Of course it leaves a black mark against the men, but if the "not proven" of a Scots court be a fair verdict so also is this of Mr. Haldane's. The conduct of the men was shown to be open to grave suspicion, they failed to clear themselves and though misconduct could not be brought fully home to them it would have been a grave error of leniency to whitewash the whole crowd.

Colonel Morgan's case excites commiseration: after long service, earning his C.B. and D.S.O. to be called upon to retire is indeed a melancholy close of his career. No doubt his good record was taken into consideration; had it been otherwise the induction of his brother into the contract business must have brought upon him worse results. The Times, mindful of good monies wrenched from its pocket in the name of damages for slander by the jury at Mr. Justice Laurances' instance, exhibits a chastened satisfaction at this verdict of the Secretary for War: and really one cannot be surprised. The moral for the Times is that there are cases in which it is as expensive to be right at the wrong time as it is to be wrong at the right time. Concerning Colonel Hammit there is nothing to be said: he admitted that, demoralised as he supposed by the atmosphere of South Africa, he took a bribe: he had nothing else to expect than what he received. Of course the gang of shady civilian contractors escape: there is no reason why they should do otherwise, pace the papers, who cry for a burnt offering in the shape of contractors. The contractor has no duty towards the public purse save to dig what he can out of it. Why blame him if he labour in his vocation?

It was a painful scene that followed the issue of the War Office decision on Tuesday at Aldershot. The warrant officers and non-commissioned affected were paraded before the Adjutant of the A.S.C. and the sentences were read out. Those sentenced to dismissal from the Army were first reduced to the ranks, whereby they forfeit all decorations won for good service or on active service. The civilian mind inclines to the view that medals and the like might be left in the culprits' possession. To assume an extreme case it would seem unfair to deprive a man of the V.C. he had been awarded "for valour" because he had been guilty of corruption, though it is perfectly in accord with the fitness of things to dock him of awards gained by good service on other respects.

Prince Alexander Hohenlohe's resignation of the presidency of Upper Alsace promptly followed his Emperor's reproachful telegram. Eloquent testimony is forthcoming as to the value of that telegram for advertising purposes: a leading Berlin bookseller sold only 22 copies of the memoirs on the strength of the sensational extracts published in Ueber Land und Meer, but within a few hours of publication of the Imperial telegram he booked orders for 125 copies. The first edition of 10,000 copies was speedily sold out. Query; will German officialdom permit the publication of another edition?

The discussion concerning "Publishers and the Public,"—more accurately "Publishers and the Times Book Club" continues to rage with unabating fury. A still small voice crept into the debate asking where the author comes in? And, indeed, strange as it may seem, the fount of the book and the book business in all its branches has been strangely overlooked. Mr. Hall Caine with that rare public spirit—or talent for self advertisement ('tis hard to discriminate between the two)—came forth on Monday, aided by the Daily Mail with a proposal to publish the Bondman play at 2s. 6d.: and issued a statement which showed how cost of production and profit would be divided. His aim is to prove that a 6s. book can be produced for 2s. 6d.; but some brute has pointed out that the book Mr. Caine proposes to bestow upon the world is not half the size of a 6*s.* book, that it is not new and that the binder can't possibly bind it at the price allowed him. Some people are so hard to please, but Mr. Caine has got a good advertisement.

At the last moment the silly trip to Petersburg to express sympathy with the Duma was abandoned at the eleventh hour: the information that it had been given up came from Petersburg which is no more than one might expect. The zenith of ignorance and audacity has been reached by politicians in Moscow who telegraphed to the King on the subject. It is reported that a Russian deputation is coming to London to thank the Committee which organised the abortive trip: really to try and engineer its dispatch. More trouble is anticipated over this performance, but it is doubtful whether any will arise: these active pioneers of Anglo-Russian friendship are too few and too definitely repudiated by their respective nations and Governments to be capable of creating the mildest of diplomatic incidents.

I referred last week to Mr. Sydney Webb's Times' article on "Physical Degeneracy or Race Suicide." This week he contributes another containing evidence more intimate and more startling than the first. There is little room to question his conclusion that the limitation of families is deliberate. The gravest feature of the case is that such limitation is practised by the thrifty and decent classes who will not face family responsibilities beyond the measure of their means: while the unthrifty and irresponsible which our precious political system does so much to pamper and encourage continue to be prolific. The situation is far too complex to justify Mr. Webb of his simple conclusions still less of his proposed remedies; but it is one that "gives furiously to think." In the first place we have to be sure that the empire wants the 20,000 babies per annum who are not born. There was greater need of them when we had Australia and Canada to populate. True, there is ample space for our surplus population in those regions still, and South Africa calls aloud for Britishers to come in. Mr. Webb appears to think that the "urbanization" of the people which has been so marked during that last generation has little to do with the decreased birth-rate; but this the man in the street may venture to doubt.

One item of evidence in proof of the prevalence nowadays of small families, not cited by Mr. Webb, is forthcoming, I think, in the numberless large houses now standing empty in the West End of London and the huge increase of small flats. Big houses, the agents say, will not let at any price, while dwellings, suitable for childless couples or very small families, flats or otherwise, are still in demand. Flats have been increasing faster than the demand, as witness the fall in the rents asked.

The plans for the remodelling of the Mall and Processional Road—the eastern section of the same—at Charing Cross have been completed and published. A triple archway is to be built joining new buildings appropriated to the Admiralty: and an imaginary line drawn from the middle of the central arch passes through the statue of Charles I. and ends practically in the centre of the West Strand. The result should be very imposing, and worthy of the situation. The only difficulty in the way is a dispute between the L. C. C. and the Office of Works as to paying the cost of removing three houses at Charing Cross. It is a pity that this unwonted access of economy on the L. C. C.'s part were not more often and more appropriately displayed.

On the first might of "the Amateur Socialist" at the Criterion on Saturday, one had almost the feeling that it was the Court Theatre. The play has much the flavour of some of the Vedrenne-Barker ventures, a likeness which is accounted for by the fact that it was first seen in London under the auspices of the Stage Society, when it was known as "Windmills." A better title, to my mind, than the present one, but perhaps hardly definite enough for the larger public to which it is now meant to appeal. The Amateur Socialist is a Baronet, Sir Hubert Pennefeather, and he has taken up Socialism as he might anti-vivisection, or theosophy, or vegetarianism or any other ism that happened to strike his fancy with the sort of volatile and voluble enthusiasm which is the essence of amateurism. He is a fool but a well-bred, good natured fool, and, as played by Mr. Eric Lewis, a most amusing one. No one can take him seriously; the Magistrate—a personal friend—before whom he is taken for inciting to disorder in Hyde Park, conspires with the Police Inspector to "judge the case according to the evidence tendered." In consequence Pennefeather leaves the Court without a stain on his character, though the case against him is of the clearest. The amateur socialist rewards this leniency by threatening to expose his treatment during the episode as another proof of the venality of justice, but is easily deterred when Moberly appeals to his friendliness and gratitude. The Magistrate himself is exceedingly well played by Mr. Perceval Stevens, but perhaps second honours must go to Mr. Dagnall for his performance of Inspector Bott which was intensely funny. There is a subsidiary love-interest, but it does nothing to strengthen the interest which resides almost entirely in the three characters mentioned.

The tale of Robin Hood and Maid Marian played by Mr. Lewis Waller and Miss Millard with all the accompaniments that suggest themselves to the seasoned play-goer as appropriate to a romance of that date—forest scenery, castle battlements, archers, longbowman, disguises, surprises, hair-breadth escapes, love scenes, the final triumph of the hero over his kingly oppressor; such was the fare offered at the Lyric on Wednesday in "Robin Hood" which Messrs. Hamilton and Devereux frankly entitle a Romance and highly palatable did it seem to the audience assembled. Truth to tell there was nothing very new, but the whole business went so briskly, the dialogue was so forcible and to the point, the incidents so well linked together, and the actors and actresses worked with such unfailing enthusiasm, that once caught in the stream the audience was bound to be carried along to the end, when they rewarded all concerned with tremendous enthusiasm. Mr. Lewis Waller is amazingly popular; and yet it is not amazing, for he can gauge almost to a hair's breadth the taste of those whom long and assiduous effort he has made his "public." And it is always wholesome fare he offers, if lacking in the refinements of flavour which best please some palates. So all honour to him.

There is some discontent with the authorities at Covent Gardenfor that they have chosen to raise the prices on "Melba" nights this autumn season. Various correspondents complain that they are debarred from hearing her; thousands who would do so if at any rate gallery prices were left at their normal 1*s.* 6*d.* instead of 2*s.* 6*d.* I have little sympathy with such complaints. If Melba is so well worth hearing, and that cannot be denied, let those who would hear her go to one less so-called "musical comedy." I suppose gallery habitués see more plays in the year than do any other theatre-goers, except perhaps the habitual frequenters of stalls. They can well afford it. At any rate hundreds are turned away nightly who evidently are obviously anxious to pay the half crown. And this being so why should not the half-crown charge be retained; Melba's notes are golden in more senses than one, and prices must be arranged accordingly.

A new musical infant phenomenon has been let loose on London. Pepito Arriola, the ten-year-old Spanish pianist, appeared at the Albert Hall on Sunday with the London Symphony Orchestra and played Beethoven's C minor concerto to the amazement of the experts who declare that the only way to judge this prodigy is by the standard applicable to adults: inasmuch as he is not only so remarkable a child but a remarkable musician. The difficulty under which the mere amateur labours is to pitch the correct standard of judgment for infant phenomena: he can tell that the child plays admirably; but it is difficult to say exactly how much better than an ordinary good child player. The gulf between the great pianist and the first-class amateur is far easier to measure.

The explosion in the Wingate Coal Mine, in county Durham, on Sunday night, which cost the lives of 26 men was the first which has occurred during the 65 years the colliery has been worked. The cause of the explosion is not yet known, but is supposed to have been brought about by the blasting operations which were in progress a mile from the bottom of the shaft. After-damp was the immediate cause of the deaths, but as usually happens in such disasters there were heavy falls of roof which, with the gases, hindered the work of rescue.

Winchester Cathedral is in a much more parlous state than was originally supposed. It will require some £46,000 or £47,000 to put the building in a stable condition: of this about £21,500 has been given or promised and towards raising the balance it is proposed to hold a "pageant" in 1908: a pageant is better than a bazaar; that is the most that can be said for it.

The prospects for the winter are not bright. Every workhouse in London is full to overflowing and the proportion of able-bodied male paupers is said to be very large. Heartless people connect the circumstance with the abolition of "labour tests" which means comfortable idleness at the ratepayers' expense. I doubt if the heartless people are far wrong.

At the inquiry of the Commission which is considering the Policeman and His Ways, yesterday an ex-cabman ex-street bookmaker gave evidence to the effect that for some years he had subsidized policemen at £1 a week to overlook and ignore his proceedings. The admission has created quite a sensation.

AN EXCITING INCIDENT.

IT is some years since the incidents I am going to relate occurred. It was during the hot weather months and I remember it was a particularly close and sultry night. Three of us were sitting outside, enjoying our after-dinner smoke and the little fresh air there was, the night being beautifully clear and the moon at its full. Among the various sounds, that broke the stillness of the night, was the distant cry of Pheó, Pheó, repeated at intervals.

While listening it seemed to us that this call of the jackals was getting nearer and nearer, and F., suddenly exclaimed, "why not go out and see if there is really a leopard about, we have often heard of jackals thus serenading leopards, but have never seen it ourselves." After some little persuasion on the part of F. we decided to go.

Having armed ourselves with sundry weapons, we sallied forth, escorted by a couple of peons with spears. It was now evident, that this cry of Pheó repeated at every few minutes was getting nearer and nearer; it would cease perhaps altogether and when next heard was much closer. We were now on a broadish road, that led from one end of the district to the other. On the left hand side of the road, was a high ridge, on which stood a line of small villages, while on the right was some low-lying land in which there was a still little water. On both sides of this road and at intervals of some thirty or forty feet, stood some big leafy trees, their shade rendering part of the road gloomy and dark. When last heard, the Pheó could not have been more then a quarter of a mile or so away. We advanced taking advantage as much as possible of the shade thrown by the trees. The jackals had now entirely stopped calling and we were wondering what the next move would be, when we were suddenly startled by the furious barking of dogs from what appeared to be a cluster of huts, distant some 500 yards. We were now all attention and with finger on trigger took our stand behind some of the biggers trees and anxiously a waited further developments. We had waited for perhaps fifteen minutes, when suddenly a couple of jackals raced past us and going a short distance began howling with redoubled vigour all the while looking towards the hamlet, where the dogs were still barking. We came to the conclusion that the leopard had either seen or winded us and had gone along the ridge instead of following the road.

One of our henchman, who knew the country well, said that, if we made our way forward quickly, we could intercept the leopard, as he would have to go through an open piece of ground which formed a gap between the eastern and western parts of the two villages. Taking advantage as much as possible of the shade thrown by the trees, we were not long in getting to the gap mentioned, and one of our men getting behind a hedge, looked out for our quarry. The barking of the dogs was taken up nearer to our position, while the jackals, ceased began howlign anew. We had not to wait very long, when from directly in front of us a huge leopard walked out of the gloom, the brute, who looked truly monstrous, appeared almost black in the uncertain light. After going a short distance he pulled up and began looking round evidently feeling that every thing was not quite right. He could not have been more than a hundred yards off, much too far to risk a shot especially in the uncertain light of the moon. To our surprise, the brute walked leisurely towards us; he had evidently not detected our presence. When some twenty paces off, we let drive together and the next instant the leopard was among us. He had evidently charged at the smoke and though mortally wounded knocked over one of our men, Bishroop Sing. In the melee it was almost impossible to fire : F. hit the leopard over the head with the butt of his gun ; this had the effect of making him let go his hold of Bishroop Sing, only to seize F. by the calf and knock him over. Fortunately the brute was nearly done for, by this time, so he could not do much damage and the little life he had still left in him, was soon knocked out of him by the lathi of our other attended and so finished a exciting bit of adventure. F.'s mauling was not serious as the leopard was in extremis, when he made his last attack ; but Bishroop Sing, had been very roughly handled and he was three months in hospital before he was able to move about again. When we first fired at the leopard, two of us were loaded with ball cartridge while D., who had slugs in his gun, appears to have done the most damage, two of these slugs had perforated the leopard's lungs while others had scarified the brute's head and neck. There can be no doubt, that at close quarters slugs are very deadly missles and are far more reliable for night shooting than ball. The leopard was a male and measured 7 feet 2 inches.

WHERE THE JEWFISH WANDERS.

SEVERAL months ago, long before the fearful disaster, which so lately scarred fair California had fallen on San Francisco, the writer, seated at his desk in Los Angeles, wrote that his story of the Jewfish, the great black sea bass of the South Coast must come second hand —in short that he had never dallied with the huge, dark-skinned fellows which "the deep, unfathomed caves of ocean bear."

Since that time all this has changed. The author of these sparse lines has done the Cæsar act—i. e., he "came and saw and conquered" the Jewfish and by the same token, his respect for the huge finned fellow is in no whit increased. The Jewfish is as game as a sculpin, as much of a fighter as a stingaree, and but little more use than a horned toad.

But, and here lies the rub, it is something, when you are sojourning at Catalina, to come into the pretty little harbott with the flag flying from the masthead of your launch, and in the bottom a 300-pound mass of flesh and bone which you have conquered with a light rod and line. Behind it all there is ever the chance that you will break a record—that you will set a new mark for enthusiasts in things piscatorial to shoot at, and that your name will go down in history as one of the masters of the gentle art, sadly de-Waltonized on the high seas by many who seek only the fish they may get.

I have described Catalina, the magic Isle dreamland of the West, but no one can ever do justice to her boatmen —some of them, that is, for there are others that are the worst that ever guided boat over green sea. But than these few toproachers there are none better, and on that day when we headed for the black bass grounds I was so fortunate as to secure one of these, in whose veins seems to flow the blood of the Montezumas.

None can handle a rowboat as can he; few there are who can best him in running before the storm or into the teeth of it in a power boat. Indeed he is almost as good as old George of San Pedro. Notice, I said almost, for the brown man never can equal the white man in any game that has been invented since time began.

Now, the Jewfish is a dweller in deep water a lover of the rocks that lie many fathoms down in the clear, green ocean—in short, a wanderer among the dark places of the sea's depth, and for him and his kind we knew we should have to go well out from the sheltering shore of the little island.

A strong fresh inshore breeze was blowing as we left Avalon, and with the launch's nose pointed up the channel we were compelled to beat directly into the teeth of the wind. Straight ahead we ploughed, once clear of Sugar Loaf, the white foam curling away from the little boat's bows, as, with increased speed, we made for the broad streak of deep water wherein we hoped to find our lordly quarry.

One mile, two miles, three miles, mayhap four, went by. Then the engine slowed down, out went the drag, and from the bait pit in the bottom of the boat came a two-pound mackerel. A whitefish would have been better, according to the boatman, but whitefish did we not have and mackerel were plentiful, so lacking what we wanted we took what we had.

My outfit was a light yellowtail rod of fourteen ounces without the reel, and a No. 21 Cuttyhunk line. On the end was a 20-inch wire leader, and on the end of that one large hook, fastened directly to the leader by its strong eye. No swell was ever yet invented fit for use on these big fellows, and the small chains affected by some fishermen as leaders for deep-sea work are at best makeshifts which are continually kinking and occasionally sawing the line in two.

The best leader for this work to my mind, is the one long thread of piano wire—and such a one I had. Midway down it was a swivel, and it was bent into the main line with another swivel, so that I had little to fear from fouling, so long as I kept my line reasonably tight.

The hook was the regular black bass hook, which any reputable tackle dealer will sell to you without the naming of number or other identification. I go thus specifically into detail because there may be those of my readers who, as summer wanes, may care to go after this game themselves, and a word in time may save them trouble and loss of fish as well.

The mackerel bait, being dead, was stuck on the hook carelessly ; indeed, there seems to be little need for skill in baiting a hook for a Jewfish, at least none such as is necessary when fishing for yellowtail or for white sea bass.

A sinker, which ran off some four or five feet from the place where the leader joined the line, and which weighed not less than six ounces, was one of the things I failed to mention when describing the outfit. This arrangement permitted the bait to swing clear of all interference, while the lump of lead held the line true in the water.

No need for the far-reaching cast of the surf fisherman here. Gently I tossed the lure over the stern of the launch, now rising and falling with each gentle swell that rolled in round the northern end of the Magic Isle. Slowly it sank—down, down, down, until the blue of the fish merged with the shadows of the sea's depths and only the few feet of running line remained in sight.

Below us, so the boatman said, was a rocky ledge. To this from the boat's keel was not less than 150 feet. How deep the abyss sheered off from the edge of the submarine cliff he did not know ; he had never attempted to fathom it. On my reel was 1000 feet of line, or possibly half a hundred feet less, as some had been cut from the fresh spool for testing purposes. At every hundred feet it is my habit to wrap the line with a very fine red silk thread, tying the marker securely. This does not interfere with the running of the line, and it is of very great aid at times when a big fish of uncertain strength and running power is hooked.

Accordingly I let the line run beyond the first 200-foot marks, and was surprised that it did not stop there, where the ledge should have caught it, according to my boatman's measurements. On down it went, and I paid out another hundred feet. Still it did not stop, so I threw on the leather brake and held the bait, rather heavy at this depth, as nearly stationary as I could.

Nothing happened. Half an hour passed. Still no message from the other end of the line. Then I reeled in and put my lure over on the other side of the boat, where I felt that the water was less deep. Another half hour was spent here with no results. Then the boatman suggested that we pull up and work out into still deeper water there to try our luck afresh. By this time the breeze had died down and the sea was quite smooth.

Out almost around the end of the island we moved, the screw slowly beating the water into a milky foam, my line trailing behind principally for the very good reason that I was too lazy to reel it in. Fact is I was a bit sore on all the Jewfishes because one of their number had not taken the bait I offered so freely, and I didn't really believe that there was another black sea bass this side of Japan anyway.

And then, along about the time when I began to long for the Budweiser hydrant over at Avalon, my pipe went out, and I was rudely waked up. This is the way it all happened.

Seated carelessly across the stern of the launch, one leg half way around the rudder post, the other trailing over the stern, I was paying as little attention as possible to the line, when, slowly and deliberately, I felt the tip of my pole go down. With it there came a steady tug. "Bunch of seaweed," says I to myself. "There goes my bait."

But it wasn't. I lifted the tip of my rod ever so little, let the line run from the reel a moment, and then laid on the brake with none too gentle a hand. Instantly over that fine thread of Cuttyhunk came the peculiar throb of the hooked fish. In an instant I was on my feet and over into the pit of the launch. "I've got him." I cried to the boatman. With the words the engine stopped, the little craft swung round, and the fight was on.

Peculiar fight it was, too, for neither the boatman nor I knew what I had hooked, I thought it must be a shark, for no one ever heard of a Jewfish seizing a moving lure. What the swarthy man at the wheel thought I cannot say—he kept his thoughts and his advice to himself, one of the attributes which makes of him a good boatman and a good companion on a fishing cruise.

I gave my unknown quarry a gentle lift with the hook, he came up a bit ; I gave him another dig with the barb, and he sounded. Down, down, and yet further down he went. Might as well try to stop an express train. I threw in the brake, gently ; the rod tip bent to the water, and I had to give him his head. Five of the red threads ran off the spool ere he slowed up in his downward course. And he went straight to the bottom of the sea, too, no sidewise trips for him.

There he stayed while I tried all the tricks I knew to dislodge him. Up and down and around I spun that rod, trying to get a grip on him that would start something doing down there in the depths. At last I settled upon steady nagging, Five minutes of this gained me a few feet of line. I was getting him up, that was a certainty, but the progress was very slow.

I got into a sort of habit of doing the jerking act until it grew tiresome, and I laid back on the rod for one good lift, which should start him, if such a feat were possible. I threw all my weight into the blow, trusting the rod and the line and the leader to distribute it, and—keeled over, almost into the bottom of the boat. He had beaten me at my own game and was coming up to meet me.

With a rush a dark body rose almost to the surface, some thirty or forty feet from the launch, then turned away in a straight line and began to run. I gave him the line I had gained until we got in motion ; then we followed him, cut clear around the point of the island into the open sea and the deep water where his kind love to dwell—for the brief glimpse vouchsafed me in that upward rush and dizzying turn was of a Jewfish.

From that time on it was a slow fight, merely a question of endurance and skill. And, as usual, the man in the boat held the winning hand. Gradually he gave up. Shorter became his rushes. He began those time-honored bass tactics of lying still and moving his great head from side to side rapidly, like a man striking sidewise with a sledge. On a man's arms this is the most wearing game that was ever invented. Twice I was tempted to cut the line and let him go ; then I would get new courage from the thought that he must be a monster—300 pounds at least—and I went at him again.

Slowly I brought him alongside, a black mass of fish flesh, with none of the sheen of the yellowtail or the bonita or even the white sea bass about his dingy hide. Indeed, he looked the creature that he was, a dweller in the depths where the light of day seldom penetrated, and where great bulk rather than activity was the essential of long life.

In his mouth the hook was firmly set ; he was well nigh worn out with the long strain of keeping his mouth open beneath the water, and yet it was all I could do to hold him level while the boatman set the gaff into his side. Then we lifted him into the boat. Three-hundred-pounder, nothing ! If he weighed 150 pounds he was overweight. And here, all the time, I thought I was fighting a record fish. When we got to Avalon he weighed just 127 pounds, if I remember correctly—at any rate, I know he was a long way under 150 pounds.

Then and there I said to myself : "How do these fishermen catch their 300-pounders on light line and with a rod ?" I had fought that fish for almost two hours, and I was thoroughly tired out, but there had been no sport in it, nothing but hard work, and I have been sorry many a time since that I did not let the black fellow go when I had once won the victory by bringing him alongside. I am sure I should do it were the opportunity ever to present itself again.

That night we ate some of him, but he was as poor meat as I ever ate anywhere, and he was cooked by a man who knows the preparation of fish from A to Izzard, too. Don't ever be persuaded to buy black sea bass in the market, and don't lug your catch home from the pier ; my word for it, the best Jewfish ever caught is not fit food for anything but a shark or a seagull.

The black sea bass is one of the most regular of fishes in its visits to the South Coast, It may be said to be fairly dependable, for on the same month of this year and last year and the year before, it has made its first appearance, and, in all probability, will do so on the same month of next year. As has been said, it is a frequenter of deep waters, of the banks of the west coast of Santa Catalina and Santa Barbara Islands, particularly. Here it is found in great numbers at the proper season of the year, and, I am told that some few remain there the year round. These deep waters off the open seashore of the island chain are most wonderfully filled with all manner of game fishes, and among the long list no one is more often brought into Avalon than the black sea bass, of varying size. For the most part those that are taken in the channel do not range above 200 pounds—by far the greater number are less—and almost all are taken on hand lines.

Outside, in the open sea, however, there are to be found the big three and four hundred-pounders. Indeed, I have seen one or two of these fish, when the mackerel or the whitefish were running well, which could not have weighed less than six or seven hundred pounds. I have no knowledge, however, of any these big fellows being taken, even on a handline, and, as nets are never drawn on that side of the island, the handline is about the only way the monsters could be brought in.

By no means am I ready to believe that the man lives who can take a fish of 400 pounds' weight on rod and reel and bring it in. Those of 250 and 300 pounds have been so caught, or at least the claim has been made for their lucky captors, that they were taken in this manner, but, for my part, much as I have fished at Avalon, I have never seen one of more than 180 pounds even hooked, let alone fought to the death.

The food of the Jewfish is, as has been said, made up of fish of from one to four or five pounds in weight, or larger. Rarely do these great hogs of the sea disturb the small swimmers. I have seen one of the great bass moving through a school of anchovies and the little fish barely moved out of his way. A yellowtail or a bonita, or a barracuda would have created the direst alarm in their ranks ; there would have been wild flight in every direction, with the usual result of a lane of anchovy heads and tails floating on the sea to show where the predatory fish had passed.

The Jewfish is said, also, to be very fond of young squids, but young squids are mighty uncertain in their appearance, and there are so many other fish that are fond of young squid that it is doubtful if many are offered by coast anglers to tempt the worthless Jewfish from his cave in the depths.

But, all in all, the black sea bass is an interesting fellow, even though he does not offer unusual attractions to the man who fishes for sport alone, especially after the angler has taken one of the big creatures on rod and line. He gets (or at least I did) his fill of work without the modicum of sport which is the crowning reward of every real fisherman, whether he cast his lure for the speckled trout or the king of the sea fishes, the lithe-bodied tuna of the Southern California ocean.—Western Field.

They were volunteers, and a supposed wounded man was taken into the ambulance tent.

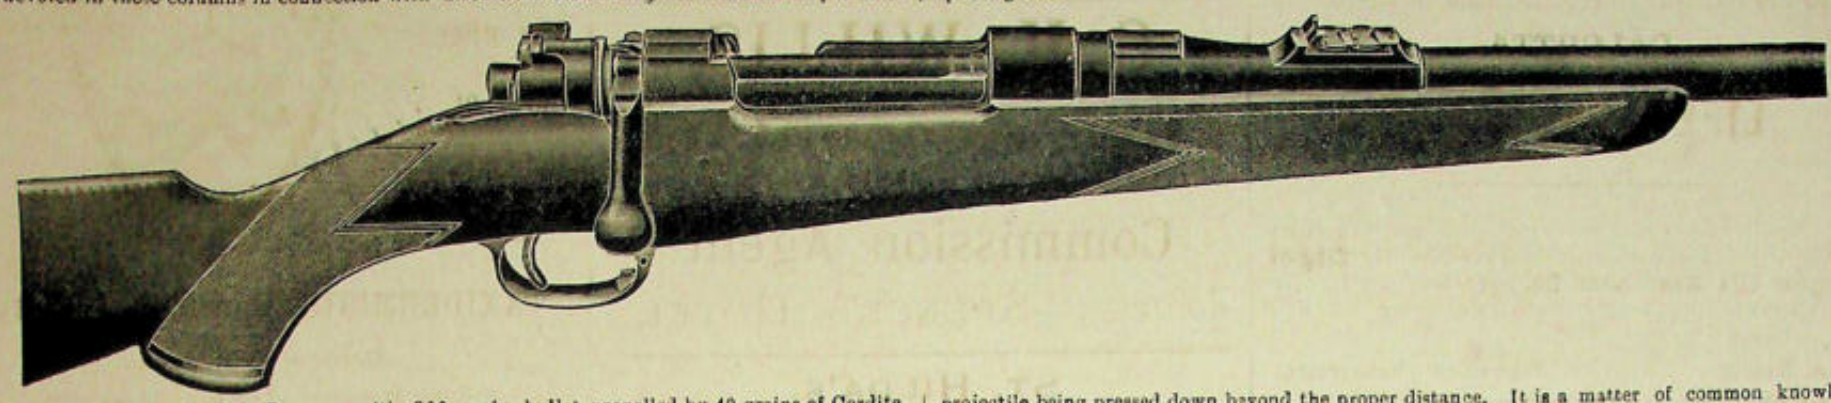
"What is he suffering from ?" demanded the surgeon.

"Severe scalp wound and insensibility," he was told.

"And what have you done ?"

"Given him brandy-and-water."

"How could you expect an insensible man to swallow brandy-and-water ?"



"Please, sir, he asked for it.

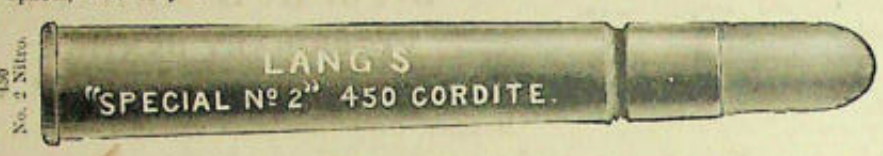
LANG'S LOW PRESSURE H. V. EXPRESSES.



SPECIAL FOR "THE INDIAN FIELD."

MESSRS. JOSEPH LANG AND SON, LD., of 102, New Bond Street, London, W. some little time ago, added to their extensive variety of Express rifles, two new sizes chambered for the No. 2 ·450 and No. 2 ·360 Cordite cartridges. To the former some attention has already been devoted in these columns in connection with discussions concerning the influence on pressures of high temperature. The latter, more recently introduced, possesses features of additional interest. The No. 2 ·360 Express is a weapon designed to combine the extremely high velocity of a military small bore with the low pressures, and great striking energy appropriate to a sporting rifle.

The ordinary Lang ·360 Express, with 300 grain bullet propelled by 40 grains of Cordite, gives a velocity of 1,875 foot seconds, with striking energy of 2,450 ft. lbs. In the No. 2 ·360, the powder charge is increased to 55 grains, and the weight of bullet to 320 grains, the velocity going up to 2,150 ft. seconds, and the striking energy to 3,280 ft. lbs. The pressure developed by the No. 2 cartridge is approximately 14·7 tons, nearly three-quarters of a ton less than is given with the 40-grain charge. Thus in the No. 2 ·360, the 2,060 ft. seconds velocity of the ·303 cartridge is well exceeded, but instead of a pressure of 16 tons, only 14·7 is produced, although the bullet is heavier, and the trajectory flatter, than with the service ammunition.

As the illustrations clearly show, the No. 2, Express cartridges provide materially increased powder spaces, and they are also rimmed beneath the bullet, to obviate any possibility of the projectile being pressed down beyond the proper distance. It is a matter of common knowledge that if by any mischance, a bullet is inserted too far in the case, the pressure on firing will be materially increased. It follows, that by enlarging the powder space, pressure is lowered, while velocity is lowered too. In the No. 2 ·360 a material increase in the capacity of the case serves the purpose of reducing pressure, while a relatively small addition to the Cordite charge restores the loss of velocity. In the more powerful No. 2 ·450, the velocity of the ordinary ·450 high velocity Express is maintained, but with the No. 2 ·360, an improved velocity accompanies the lowered pressure. In both cases decreased gravimetric density of loading—more space for the powder—brings about the result.

The difficulty hitherto attending the importation and use of ·303 rifles and the subsequent prohibition have done something to increase the popularity of the ·360 H. V. Cordite Expresses, and the ·360 giving at once better ballistic results than the service calibre, with the advantage of a larger bullet and very materially increased striking energy is well calculated to fulfil every requirement in the shooting of deer, and the heavier forms of non-dangerous game. These advantages are attained with a pressure so low that the most extreme effects of high temperature leave a more than ample margin of safety, and reduce even the liability to jamming, by distortion or sticking of the case, to a minimum. The "Tropical charge" for the No 2 ·360, is 3 grains less of Cordite, to give the same velocity at 120° F. as is given by the full charge at 60° F., but in practice, the increase of pressure even in long continued heat does not seem to be appreciable in the way of increased recoil or disturbance of aim.

The No. 2 ·360 Lang rifles are made both double and single, and in either case, they shoot with extreme accuracy and handle well. The high velocity insures, of course, great flatness of trajectory, so decreasing errors of elevation due to misjudgment of distance. The double rifles are constructed either with side or body locks, and the single rifles are of a recently improved falling block type, very strong and particularly free from any liability to jam. In addition to the No. 2 ·450 and ·360 Messrs. Lang have for many years past made both double and single Expresses chambered for ordinary high velocity cartridges of any recognised calibre from ·256 to ·600 bore. Prices range from about 65 guineas for the double side lock Expresses to 20 guineas for single falling block, or 27 guineas for double, under lever back-actioned hammer rifles, plain but sound, and excellent arms of their kind.

In conclusion, it is pleasant to find that the firm of Lang, the first to introduce the drop-down breach-loader into England, have, of late, distinguished themselves in the production of weapons, embodying the most modern improvements, while fully maintaining the standards of workmanship associated with London productions of the best type.

PASTE BAITING FOR MAHSEER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Will you allow me through your columns to thank "Fleur-de-Lys" for his kindly mention of my articles on "River and Lake Fishing in India," in his letter published in your issue of the 1st November.

I shall certainly try his tip for paste baiting for mahseer on the first opportunity, and I quite agree with him that his method is more sporting than live baiting, and also than the method mentioned in my Article No. 5, but when I suggested the latter method, I had in view fishing in a strong current, when the bait required to be anchored by a rather heavy weight, to prevent it from being carried into the bank.

As regards his method of using a dead bait, I should have thought that the lead wire wound round the hook would have torn the vent and made an unsightly wound, but as he vouches for it I shall try this method also, and hope to give an account of the results of both systems, in your paper, after giving them a fair trial.

MUSSOORIE, 3rd November 1906. YUBA BILL.

SHOOTING ROUND BHIM TAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Fishermen who visit Bhim Tal can, if it be late enough in the season, occasionally give the mahseer a rest, and roam the wooded hills with a gun, instead of fishing the lakes. Certainly one gets but few shots, for the Kalije are hard to get out of the bramble-choked ravines; still they are there, and one may bag a few with perseverance. There is a good nala for pheasants, about a mile beyond the end of the lake, down the ghat road to Kathgodam: it is to the right as we go down. Also about a thousand feet up the hill behind this glen, there is a grassy plateau where a covey of chukor may often be found.

A stream runs out of Bhim Tal lake, near the Dâk Bungalow; for some distance it flows along a cultivated valley towards Naukuchia, but eventually turns to the right through a rift in the hill side, and tumbles into that deep ravine along the edge of which the ghat road from Kathgodam winds the last part of its way. By crossing this stream about a mile along the Naukuchia road and climbing the slope beyond, one arrives at a series of bluffs overlooking the great gorge above referred to. Here there are numbers of small woods nestling in the depression between successive hillocks. All these hold Kalije. Besides pheasants there are a fair number of kakur, so that it is well to take along a rifle as well as a gun. One can work round this semi-circle of bluffs right up to Naukuchia Tal. There, among the woods surrounding the lake, pheasants are to be found, while a deep boggy glen on the far side of the tal is a favourite haunt of wild pig. Once when walking through some stubble fields above Naukuchia I put up grey quail, and bagged one of them. Occasionally duck and teal visit these hills tarns. In 1904 I used constantly to see a pair of teal when fishing Naukuchia.

Among the high cliffs above the little bungalow there are still some gooral, while I have known of two serow being shot not far from the lake.

At the back of Bhim Tal dâk bungalow there is a lofty hill: on its slopes are a fair number of Kalije and a covey or two of chukor. Near the summit there are grassy glades amid the woods, where one may occasionally get a chance at kakur in the evenings. The top of this hill is, however, 2,000 feet above Bhim Tal, and a stiff climb. Round the back of this high ridge there is an extremely pretty woodland road leading to Dhari; you get at it by going up the Naini Tal path for some distance and then turning to the right. Three miles down the Dhari road a good sized stream is reached, and among the bushes near its banks are a good many pheasants.

Round about Bhim Tal there are a few hares. The best way of discovering their haunts is to look carefully about dusk wherever good grass is found near bushes, when the hares, if there are any, will be seen sitting out.

The head of Sath Tal is a good place for green kokla pigeons. When fishing this lake I used sometimes to take a gun and would often get several shots about 5 o'clock, at which time the pigeons used generally to make their appearance. Among the cliffs high above Sath Tal are some gooral, while pheasants are found in the woods close to the lake. Occasional bears and panthers visit the Bhim Tal district, but are so few and far between that a sportsman must be very lucky, as well as persevering, to get a shot. The scenery of Kumaon is extremely pretty, and it is a pleasure to clamber amid its wooded hills, even though the shots obtained may be few and results meagre. Anyone who cares to visit Bhim Tal solely for the shooting, could not do better than take short leave in the cold weather. The climate then is delightfully bracing, and sport is at its best. In the winter the cattle come down towards the plains, and so the hill tops of Kumaon are left to the gooral and kakur. These animals are therefore more numerous then, and one need not go so far to seek them. Also the leaves are off the trees, and it becomes much easier to beat up the Kalije, than earlier in the year when the cover is thicker.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.

"THE" UNDERCLOTHING FOR INDIA.

An announcement on page iii among our advertisements to-day tells us something about Dr. Lahmann's Cottonwool Underclothing. A mail or two ago we received samples of this material, and as we have always in our thirty years' residence in India preached the gospel of "cotton next the skin"—and practised it too—we were immediately interested in the subject and commend it to the thoughtful consideration of our readers.

Dr. Lahmann's principal objection to animal wool as a material for underwear, is its paramagnetic irritation of the skin, which it gradually blunts by constant over-excitement—so much so, that it finally ceases altogether to respond to the minor excitements of air, water, cold, etc., except by an increasing condition of lameness and consequent decreased capacity of resisting disease.

The robust, he maintains, may find that he can wear animal wool next to him without apparent harm except a suspicious susceptibility to the changes of temperature. To the delicate and to children, however, as well as to those with a tendency to rheumatism, the effect is much more serious, and may even lead to skin paralysis.

I have often occasion, says Dr. Lahmann, in my Sanatorium, to treat old wool-invalids—that is, people of general poor health and physique who cannot get rid of some obstinate complaint, be it skin disease, or chronic catarrh, or nervous debility, notwithstanding their having always been clothed in animal wool—or rather because of it. They cannot bear anything—no air, sun, water or steam baths, not to mention the healing wet packs, and only regain their physical capacity after having discarded their woollen underclothing and become used to my cottonwool underwear.

That material Dr. Lahmann considers at present the most suitable for the purpose. All the experiments which have been made with mixtures of animal wool, linen, silk, and cotton, etc., in all their various combinations, have stopped short at the experimental stage, for the inherent disqualifications of the various materials will, of course, always make themselves felt also in their mixtures. Thus, to unite a lower layer of cotton to an upper layer of animal wool, for instance, is quite unnecessary, as the outer clothing can easily be regulated to meet all further needs. Such a texture, with two layers of different materials, must, of course, also be made very thick and heavy, as otherwise there would be no durability. My reform cottonwool underclothing, says Dr. Lahmann, on the other hand, will be found to answer all the requirememts of porosity and elasticity without exciting the skin. It will maintain and, where it was lost, gradually restore to it, that vigorous and independent action which is the best protection agaist both heat and cold we have.

It gives all the warmth we need, owing greatly to the looseness of its knitting, which permits a comfortable supply of air to surround the body without overheating the skin, and it is on that account equally excellent for every season and in all climates. The reform cottonwool underclothing is easily washed at home, and where it has to be sent to the laundry there is far less risk of contamination than in the case of animal wool. Being of vegetable origin—and that of the very best obtainable, without "dressing" of any kind, but perfectly pure—it cannot shrink or become felted like wool or flannel; it wears better, and is at the same time less expensive. In tropical countries, where animal wool next to the skin is especially unbearable, it has the further advantage of being moth-proof, and certainly more "washerman-proof" than any other known material.

All which manifold claims are fully borne out and testified to by the wearers, both at home and abroad, of this excellent clothing as may be seen from the testimonials in the advertisement above alluded to.

Editor: "What became of the manuscript of the poem, 'Two Turtle-doves,'?" Office-boy: "I dunno. Pra'ps it's flew into a pigeonhole."

UMBALLA AUTUMN MEETING.

STEWARDS :

Lieutenant-Colonel J. C. B. Eastwood, 12th Royal Lancers. — Major W. R. Walker, A. V. D.
Major R. St. C. Lecky, R. H. A. — Maj. E. Crawley, 12th Royal Lancers. Sirdar Jewan Singh, C.S.I.

Honorary Secretary :—Capt. R. Milvain, 12th Royal Lancers.

First Day, Thursday, 1st November 1906.

THE racing and the big polo pony fair attracted a large number of visitors to the station and no fault could be found with the attendance on the opening day. As much cannot be said for the fields which turned out, these were quite disappointing and unworthy of Umballa in respect of numerical strength; but as far as the sport provided was concerned there was little to complain of. Finishes were, as a rule, close and interesting and the Northern Grand Military provided a very pretty race and gave Nell Gwynne a well-deserved win. Breeze, who fell at the fourth fence, is reported to be so badly injured as to jeopardise his future racing career, a piece of very bad luck for Mr. Williams. For the rest the course offered good going, the stand and its environs were eloquent of care and foretbought on the part of the management and the card was run off without a hitch. Details :—

The Reunion Plate.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For maiden Arab and C.-B. Ponies 14-1 and under and other maiden ponies 14 hands and under. Arabs 14-1 to carry 9st. 2lbs. C.-B's 14-1 to carry 10st. 5lbs. others 14 hands to carry 10st. 10lbs. W. I. Penalties—Winner of flat races value Rs. 50 or over, once 4lbs., twice 8lbs., oftener 12lbs. 1,000 yards.

Capt. Forsyth's ch aus g Esslemont, 9st. 11lbs.	Hon. D. Bingham	3

Betting : 4 to 1 on The Butler, 3 to 1 agst. Labby Gown, and 6 to 1 Esslemont.

To the distance they were led by Labby Gown; here The Butler got in front and won by a length and a half; same distance between second and third. Time—1min. 1⅘secs.

Novice Plate.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For Arab ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 50 or over. 14-1 to carry 10st. 7lbs. W. I. 4 furlongs.

Mr. J. D. Scott's gr a h Master Willie, 7st. 7lbs, ...	A. Hoyt	1
Major Popham Young's b a h Surkhab, 9st.	Barrett	2
Mr. Lloyd's b a g Suspender, 8st. 5lbs. ...	Bechan	3

Also ran : Pardon, 9-10

Betting :—Evens Master Willie, 6 to 1 agst. Suspender, 2 to 1 Surkhab, and 4 to 1 Pardon.

A good start : Master Willie was soon at the head of affairs, and, despite a vigorous challenge by Surkhab, won a good race by a neck ; a length between second and third. Time—54secs.

The November Plate.—Rs 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 50 or over. 14-1 to carry 10st. 7lbs. W. I. 4 furlongs.

Major Popham Young's b e h Fabius, 8st. 2lbs., ...	Barrett	1
Sirdar Jewan Singh's bk aus m Black Swan II, 9st. 6lbs.	Firth	2
Mr. Johnston's b aus m Alice, 9st. 3lbs. ...	Melsom	3

Also ran : Cosy Corner, 9-12 ; and Merry, 7-5.

Betting : 6 to 4 on Black Swan, 6 to 1 agst. Fabius, 4 to 1 Alice, 6 to 1 Cosy Corner, and 10 to 1 Merry.

A straggling start, of which Black Swan got the best and led them for a quarter of a mile when Fabius came alongside and shortly had the lead which was kept to the end, the verdict being two lengths and three lengths. Time—52⅘secs.

Northern Grand Military—Rs. 1,000. Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. For horses maidens on the flat, over hurdles and over a chase course at the time of entry, which are bona fide and unconditionally the property of British Officers in His Majesty's Army on full pay. To be ridden by the same or G. R.'s qualified under Rule 68, C. W. A. C raised 2st. 7lbs. Penalties.—Winners of flat races, hurdle races or steeplechases value Rs. 50 or over, once 4lbs., twice 8lbs., oftener 12lbs. Winner, of flat races, hurdle races or steeplechases value Rs 200 or over, after entry 4lbs. in addition. 2 miles over steeplechase course.

Also ran : Breeze, 12-0 (fell) ; Zanzean, 11-10 ; Impolita, 11-10 car. 12-8 (fell) ; and Bosworth, 11-10 (fell).

Betting : Evens on Wales, 2 to 1 agst. Breeze, 3 to 1 Nell Gwynne, and 10 to 1 any others.

They were shown the way by Bosworth to the water jump. Here Impolita came down and Nell Gwynne was shortly afterwards seen to be leading with Wales and Bosworth dropped back to third place. At the fourth fence down came Bosworth and Breeze (the latter badly injured) and Nell Gwynne continuing in front, and going very strong, won by three lengths ; bad third.

The Royal Plate.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For maiden Arab ponies 14-1 and under. 14-1 to carry 10st. 7lbs. W. I. Penalties—Winner of flat races value Rs. 50 over, once 4lbs., twice 8lbs., ftener 12lbs. 5 furlongs.

Capt. Grech's b e g Hailfellow, 10st. 7lbs.	Firth	3

Also ran : Itifaq, 10-11 ; Cinque Ports, 9-11 ; Peninsular II., 9-5 ; and Mooslat, 8-12.

Betting : 2 to 1 agst. Cinque Ports, 4 to 1 each Pasha and Mooslat, and 6 to 1 the others

Hailfellow led them to the 3 furlongs at which point he was displaced first by Pasha next by Cracker, and in this position they finished ; Pasha, just managing to stall off Cracker's rush, won by a head ; a length between second and third. Time—1min. 9⅘secs.

The Club Plate.—Rs. 350. Rs 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For maiden horses, W. A. and C. Penalties—Winner of a flat race value Rs. 50 or over once 4lbs., twice 8lbs., oftener 12lbs. 5 furlongs.

Mr. Bell's ch e m Miss Stone, 9st. 3lbs ...	Firth	1
H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala's ch e g Berzak, 9st.	Southall	2
Messrs. Wood and Badger's b aus g Bell-topper, 9st. 8lbs. (car. 9st. 7lbs.) ...	Bray	3

Betting : 2 to 1 on Miss Stone, and 3 to 1 agst. each others. Led from pillar to post and won by a head ; two and a half lengths between second and third. Time—1min.

Second Day, Saturday, 3rd November 1906.

Good racing, on the whole, was provided to-day, though there was some grumbling at the burdens allotted to the top weighters, many considering that they had been unduly flattered by the handicapper. Spain and Fabius were the only winning favourites ; Pasha's win in the Autumn Plate was a good sterling performance and has found him many new friends for the Army Cup. The two Rs. 1,000 races were well contested, the struggle between Rifleman II and Tom in the Jorrocks Plate being particularly fine. Details :—

Brownstown Plate.—Rs. 1,000. Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high weight handicap for Arab ponies 14-1 and under. 6 furlongs.

Major Williamson's b a h Jeddah, 7st. 12lbs.	Melsom	1
H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala's b a h Mooslat, 7st. 7lbs. (car. 7st. 11½lbs.) ...	Southall	2
Messrs. Wood and Badger's b a h Sheik, 9st 13lbs.	Bray	3

Also ran : Highflag, 7-8.

Betting : Evens Highflag, 5 to 2 agst. Sheik, 3 to 1 Jeddah and 4 to 1 Mooslat.

Jeddah and Sheik were ahead soon after they got off, but the latter was displaced by Mooslat at the distance, and Jeddah continuing won by three lengths ; a length between second and third. Time—1min. 24secs.

Produce Plate.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For C.-B. ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 50 or over. 14-1 to carry 10-7. W. I. 4 furlongs.

Sirdar Jewan Singh's rn cb g Recall Silver, 10st. 4lbs.	Firth	1
Mr. J. D. Scott's b cb m Lady Wheeler, 10st. 2lbs.	Hon. J. D Bingham	2
H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala's b cb m Happy-Go-Lucky, 7st. 13lbs. ...	Southall	3

Also ran Bakhtyar, 10-7 ; Nugget, 9-2.

Betting : 2 to 1 agst. each Bakhtyar and Lady Wheeler, 3 to 1 Happy-Go-Lucky, 4 to 1 Recall Silver, and 10 to 1 Nugget.

The winner was soon showing the way and got the verdict by three lengths with perfect ease ; a length and a half between second and third. Time—55⅕secs.

JORROCKS PLATE.—Rs. 1,000. Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A welter handicap for Arab and C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under and other ponies 14-1 and under that have not won hurdle races or steeplechases value Rs. 50 or over amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 1,500 or over since 31st March, 1904. 1½ miles over 6 flights of hurdles.

Capt. Milvain's b aus g Rifleman II, 8st. 6lbs. (car. 8st. 7lbs.) ... ... Bond 1
Capt. Linton's ch ch h Tom, 8st. 5lbs. ... Hoyt 2
Major Luther and Captain Grech's b aus m Twinkle, 11st. 12lbs. ... ...Capt. Johnson 3
Also ran: Irish, 11-12 (fell); and Dollar, 10-4.

BETTING: 5 to 4 agst. Irish, 2 to 1 Twinkle, 4 to 1 Rifleman, 5 to 1 Tom, and 10 to 1 Dollar.

Dollar gave them a lead over the first jump, but was soon displaced by Rifleman II who with Tom and Twinkle led from the other two, Irish falling later on. This order was preserved to the end. Rifleman II winning by a head, after a capital finish; two lengths between second and third. Time—30⅘secs.

AUTUMN PLATE.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high weight handicap for maiden Arab ponies 14-1 and under. 1,000 yards.

Mr. Williams' b a g Pasha, 9st. 13lbs. (car. 10st.) .. .. Owner 1
Capt. Grech's b a g Hailfellow, 9st. 7lbs. Firth 2
Major Popham Young's br a h Itifaq, 8st. 7lbs. ... ... Barrett 3
Also ran: Secunder, 10-6; Cinque Ports, 8-9; Cracker II, 8-0; Machine Gun, 7-5; and Gold II, 7-4.

BETTING: 2 to 1 agst. Secunder, 3 to 1 each Pacha and Hailfellow, 4 to 1 Cinque Ports, 6 to 1 Machine Gun, and 10 to 1 the others.

Secunder and Hailfellow led till two furlongs from home where Pacha went up to them and a furlong later getting to the front stayed there to the end winning by half a length; a head between second and third. Time—1min. 3⅘secs.

CORINTHIAN PLATE—Rs. 350. A welter handicap for horses which have started in a steeplechase or hurdle race, and which are unconditionally and bonâ fide the property of Officers in His Majesty's Army on full pay. To be ridden by the same, or G. R.'s qualified under Rule 68. 2 miles.

Capt. Milvain's ch e g Spain, 9-1, 7lbs. Hon. J. D. Bingham 1
Messrs. Wood and Badger's b aus g Belltopper, 10st. 7lbs. (car. 10st 8lbs.) ...Mr. Tomkinson 2
Mr. Charrington's ch aus g Senator, 13st. 7lbs. .. .. Owner 3

BETTING: Evens Spain, 5 to 1 agst. Senator, and 4 to 1 Belltopper.

They were shown the way first by Spain, then by Senator; but the former with Belltopper in attendance shot out again and won rather easily by a length; five lengths between second and third. Time—3mins. 45secs.

PUNJAB PLATE.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A welter handicap for maiden Arab and C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under and other maiden ponies 14-1 and under. 1,000 yards.

Major Popham Young's b e h Fabius, 7st. 4lbs. ... ... Hoyt 1
Messrs. Wilson and Jolliffe's b aus m Lady Knight, 9st. 12lbs. ... .. Barrett 2
Sirdar Jewan Singh's ch aus m Blackspot, 7st. 4lbs. .. .. Melsom 3
Also ran: Kathleen, 11-12; and Wild Rose, late Heliades, 7-12.

BETTING: 2 to 1 agst. Fabius, 3 to 1 each Kathleen, Lady Knight, and Blackspot, and 6 to 1 Wild Rose.

The heavily weighted Kathleen ran well for a couple of furlongs and then the effort died away and Lady Knight took up the running. She in turn had to make room for Fabius, who won by a neck; a length between second and third. Time—60secs.

Third Day, Monday, 5th November 1906.

The meeting wound up with good enough sport and enough grumbling to satisfy most people. The handicapper's efforts were not popular in certain quarters and, as a natural consequence, the pen was drawn through names that might have figured on the card, and fields were here and there a bit thin. Messrs. Wood and Badger had a couple of good wins with Belltopper and Rifleman II., the last-named, who jumped like a stag and showed a fine dash of foot, carrying off the Grand Stand Plate with Bond as his pilot. The Butler earned another bracket and Senator and Lady Night did better than on the day before. Details:—

BREEDERS' PLATE.—Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high weight handicap for Arab and C.-B. ponies 14-1 and under. 1 mile.

Mr. Butler's b cb h The Butler, 10st. 7lbs. Barrett 1

Also ran: Tom, 9-7; and K. C. 9 5 (car. 9-6).

BETTING: 6 to 4 on The Butler, 4 to 1 agst. Tom, 5 to 1 each K. C. and others.

Adelina was quickest away, but was gradually overhauled by The Butler, who won by three-quarters of a length; dead heat for second place. Time—1min. 54⅘secs.

SIBHIND PLATE.—Rs. 350 Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A welter handicap for horses. 7 furlongs.

Messrs. Wood and Badger's b aus g Belltopper, 9st. 11lbs. ... ... Bray 1

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses.

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

ALL Friday morning the signals of departure were being sounded by the rolling of heavily-laden vehicles, which despatched their baggage at the station, while the more scantily filled specials denoted a smaller attendance to finish with, and though following the King's example society stuck to its guns, the attendance showed a great falling off in the further enclosures. In a sporting sense, perhaps, it was as well that this should have been the case, as if it was bad to read of the downfall of a popular idol, it was sadder far to see the fait accompli, when Slieve Gallion added another to the two year old surprises of the year by losing his laurels in a miserably inadequate field for the Middle Park Plate, and still further complicating the vexed question of which is the best two year old of what may prove a very moderate and open year.

GATWICK.

The introduction of highly valuable stakes, which at first sight would seem to guarantee the opposition of the creme de la creme, has hitherto failed in that respect, possibly because the very antagonism of the top sawyers frightens away the opposition, and the liberality of the Gatwick executive in founding a five thousand pounder has not yet met with the need it deserves. On the other hand, the presence on the card of a race of such importance is a sure draw. The weather on Tuesday was not promising, rain-clouds packing across the weald, and now and again the rain degenerating into a sea fret made shelter desirable, but a good all-round attendance did justice to the occasion.

Gatwick Stakes—Of 5,000sovs., owner of second receives 750sovs., and third 300sovs., nominator of winner 200sovs., nominator of second 100sovs., and nominator of third 50sovs., 1¼ mile.

Won a fine race by half a length; three-quarters of a length divided second and third.

Another threatening morning gave way to a fine afternoon, the sun shining pleasantly, after a copious night's rain. However, in April-like fashion, heavy showers that sent everyone to cover despoiled the sun's sway, doing the course any amount of good. A capital service of trains put on by the L. B. and S. C. Railway was duly appreciated by a strong clientele, and all round the attendance on Wednesday was an excellent one, and though recent drought had thinned the ranks of runners, fields panned out fairly well.

Surrey Stakes—Of 2,500sovs.; second receives 300sovs., and third 200sovs., nominator of winner 150sovs., nominator of second 75sovs., and nominator of third 25sovs. 7 furlongs, straight.

Won by a head; the same distance divided second and third.

SANDOWN PARK.

Despite a dull morning, the specials from Waterloo yesterday were early crowded, and the promise of a grand attendance was borne out, the new half-crown and the revived seven-and-sixpenny enclosures, in which the accommodation is now perfectly up to date, being crowded. Many of the principal patrons of racing were present in the club enclosure, and, braving the chance of a wetting, the fair sex, as usual, showed in strong force. The rain had freshened up the course, which along the far side was almost heavy going, the hoofs cutting deep marks, and to this fact may be attributed the slow time of the big race, perhaps the slowest on record.

Temple Handicap—Of 300sovs.; second receives 25sovs. 5 furlongs.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

The scoring in the big Leagues was on Saturday again on the generous side, and this is particularly true of the Second Division of the League, the ten games yielding forty-one goals. In the Southern League twenty-nine goals was the sum total scored by the twenty clubs engaged and in the First Division of the League the aggregate was one less. In the S. L. only four home teams won outright, two visiting teams captured the full quota of points for which the sides were contending, and in four instances honours were divided. In the League six home clubs were successful, the brace of points were captured in three instances by visitors, and one game was drawn. In the Second Division the ten games were brought to a definite conclusion, and in nine of them the visiting team went under, West Bromwich being the only successful club playing on foreign soil.

There was a wonderful difference in Southern League results as compared with the corresponding games last season. New Brompton, Norwich City, and Watford each gained a couple of points, and West Ham, Reading, Plymouth Argyle, Brentford, and Fulham one each. Sheffield Wednesday was the only club in the First Division of the League to show a gain of two points as compared with last year, but Stoke, Newcastle United, Everton, and Aston Villa are a point to the good. In the Second Division, West Bromwich and Burnley are two points better than last year, losses having been converted into wins, and Hull and Clapton Orient have each credited themselves with a point improvement as compared with 1905-6.

The Southern League.

The most surprising happening in the Southern League was the defeat at home of Brighton by Watford by three clear goals. There is no accounting for football happenings, but looking at the previous performances of the respective clubs this season, the match seemed a certainty for Brighton. Watford, however, rose to the occasion, and won on their merits. Queen's Park Rangers returned defeated from New Brompton, and the West Londoners are now slipping down the table at an alarming rate, while their goal record is most unsatisfactory. The team has not done so well as it should have done, but it will come on yet, its present form not being a fair reflex of the ability of the players. Luton seem bent on going from bad to worse. Last season with practically the same side they went off the mark in fine style, but to date they have won only one of the seven games played, and they have scored a less number of goals than any other side engaged in the tourney, while Plymouth Argyle alone equals them in the number of goals given away. The defeat of the Strawplaiters on their own ground by Norwich City by three goals to one was a great disappointment to the supporters of the Beds team.

With the exception of Queen's Park Rangers all the London clubs participating in S. L. matches escaped defeat. Millwall and West Ham, who were in opposition, shared the points, and it is pleasing to be able to record the fact that the expected bitterness of feeling did not manifest itself in the play. The partisans of the teams were certainly excited and here and there disputes as to the merits of the rivals were conducted with a fierceness and an energy which led to an exchange of blows. All's well that ends well, and as no real damage was done there is nothing to complain about. Crystal Palace just got the better of a keen struggle with the much-improved Swindon team, and Leyton further enhanced the good opinion which has been formed concerning them by defeating Southampton by the odd goal in five. At Brentford the home team showed so much grit and determination that they led at one time by a couple of goals, but Tottenham, as is usual with them, improved as the game went on, and finished up all square, but the equalising goal appeared from the Press box to have a stong flavour of off-side about it. It is pleasing to note that V. J. Woodward is right on top of his form, and there will not be any need to look beyond him when the Internationals come along. Fulham accomplished one of their best performances of the season in playing Portsmouth to a draw at Fratton Park, and still more remarkable was the sharing of points by Northampton with Plymouth, at Plymouth. Reading awoke from their lethargy, and by beating Bristol by the only goal scored, won their second game of the season

It will be observed from the subjoined table that there is not an undefeated team in the League, and that they have all earned winning brackets. Seven of the clubs have goal records whose debit column overshadows the credit side.

League I.

A brilliant struggle for the leadership of the First Division of the League is now in progress, and so far honours rest with Woolwich Arsenal, whose convincing win at Bristol against their whilom Second League rivals has enabled them to retain pride of place. It is a dizzy eminence to reach, and it involves tremendous anxiety, but the spirit that animates the Reds is of the order which is likely to keep them in the neighbourhood of the top, even if they do not retain their present place. Relatively they are in a better position than Aston Villa, who equal them on points, for they have played a game less, but Bolton Wanderers, who are a point behind, have a game in hand. There are various other clubs well in the running, and it looks uncommonly like being one of the most fierce and prolonged struggles the league has ever furnished. This all makes for the good of the game. Referring to the clubs at the other end of the table, it is with satisfaction one notes that Stoke have at length won a match, but Middlesbrough and Blackburn have not yet done so, and Liverpool have only once earned two points in an afternoon.

Comment has already been made on the game in which, for the first time in football history, two Southern teams were engaged in a struggle in the First Division of the League, and next to the great win by Woolwich, the most meritorious performance must be credited to Sheffield Wednesday, who went to Liverpool and beat the champions on their own ground. The other successful side on foreign soil was Everton, who scored the only goal at Nottingham, and this gave them victory over Notts County. Manchester United have not been seen to advantage at Clayton this season, and it was a disappointing effort on their part to obtain only 1 point from the visit of Blackburn Rovers, this being the only drawn game of the afternoon. It has taken Stoke a long time to put up a winning score, and they did not have anything to spare in their bout with Derby. The Villa won comfortably enough against Bury, and Preston got the better of the luckless Middlesbrough team in the most prolific scoring game of the day. Sunderland made a keen fight of it at Bolton, the Wanderers scraping home by a goal to love, but at Newcastle the United were always the masters of Manchester City.

League II.

Saturday's games have caused a complete alteration in the appearance of the second division table. Hull City, who are in a position of splendid isolation as the only team in the tournament who have not yet been defeated, have gone to the head of affairs for the first time, but only because of a superior goal average over West Bromwich Albion, who have been marked out from the beginning of the season by the cognoscenti as a most likely team for promotion. And now Hull City have thrust themselves forward, and must be taken seriously into account as strong rivals to the aspirations of Leicester Fosse, Chelsea, and other clubs with high hopes, even though their performances to date are the reverse of flattering. The deposition of the Fosse from the first place in the table was brought about by Clapton Orient, who defeated the Midland team by a goal to love. The home side did not have the best of matters on the run of the play, but the defence was so stout that the visitors were unable to pierce it, and they were much chagrined at their defeat. Chelsea got home all right at Stamford Bridge against Lincoln City, and Wolverhampton Wanderers simplified matters for the leading quartette by defeating the Forest at the Molineux Grounds. Hull had no difficulty in beating Blackpool, and the other results are very much as anticipated.

The table of results to date in the Second Division of the League is subjoined :—

RUGBY RULES.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

Match v. Yorkshire.—The South Africans at Headingley, Leeds, gained their sixth successive victory, beating what was regarded as a very strong Yorkshire team by the substantial margin of 54 points to nil, the Colonials' record now standing at 188 points to 4. The result was a big disappointment to the 11,000 odd people who, despite the heavy downfall of hail just prior to the game, assembled on the ground, the receipts amounting to £360.

The South Africans, who arrived in Leeds on Friday afternoon, were not quite at full strength. They left out such clever players as Krige and Loubeser and this materially enhanced the merit of their victory. The ground, too, was all against their style of play. The recent heavy rains had made the turf heavy, and after the first few minutes the ball was very greasy. Perhaps this accounted to a large extent for the number of mistakes the visitors made in fielding—mistakes which, with smarter opponents, might have had serious consequences. Then again the wing men were rather uncertain in the taking of passes, while the fault, which we have pointed out before of tackling too high, was again in evidence.

Substantial as the margin of victory was, the display of the South Africans was not convincing, Yorkshiremen freely admit that they are a fine side, but the general opinion is that they are not quite as good as the New Zealanders. They lack the individual brilliancy of the men from "down under," and the front rank has not that knack of gaining possession in the scrum that distinguished the "All Blacks." Saturday's game with Yorkshire may be quoted as an illustration. It was fast and interesting throughout, but though they were heavier and speedier, the Colonial forwards did not have matters all their own way. The Yorkshire pack strove manfully from start to finish. They tackled well and got a fair share of the ball. They were cleverer with their feet in what few rushes there were, and if it had depended on the forwards the match would have been an extremely close one. But behind the pack matters were altogether different. There was no comparison, either individually or collectively. The Colonials did pretty much as they liked, and if their fielding and passing had been cleaner they would have won by a much larger margin. Carolin was the pick of the halves, while Hirsch was in great form at centre. Melker was somewhat erratic, and J. Le Roux, is a long way from being a Loubser. The forwards, fast though they undoubtedly are, did not create the good impression that had been expected, and they will have to improve if they are to hold their own with the picked eights of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales.

As far as the Yorkshiremen were concerned, their display was disappointing. They adopted altogether wrong tactics, being content to rely entirely upon the kick-and-rush game instead of trying to open out the play, as the South Africans did. As far as they were concerned there was only one decent round of passing in the whole game. The blame for defeat must not be laid upon the forwards. Led by Knox and Green, the pack shone throughout, holding their own in the tight mauls, and frequently breaking away finely with the ball at their toes. They also got a full share of possession and tackled well. But the backs were dreadfully weak, with the exception of Partis and Fisher, who did a tremendous lot of work in creditable fashion. The tackling of the rest was also bad, while even with the wind the kicking lacked power and direction.

The story of the game can be briefly told. Playing with a powerful wind at their back, the Yorkshire forwards quickly settled down, and for the first ten minutes they had all the better of the game. When the South Africans found their feet, however, they quickly got to the other end, and Yorkshire being penalised, Carolin kicked an easy goal. The next ten minutes produced three tries. Some good passing left Stegmann in possession, and he easily beat the defence, for Carolin to kick a good goal. Morkell burst over after some forward play; and Stegmann, after missing one fine opening by failing to take a good pass, got over a second time, after a capital run. In each case Carolin missed the kick at goal. Before the interval P. Le Roux and Carolin added further tries, and the latter added a goal. When the teams crossed over the South Africans led by 22 points to nil.

The second half was much more even. The Colonials opened the scoring within three minutes, Carolin kicking another penalty goal. Yorkshire retaliated with some fine forward work, which was nullified by blundering on the part of the backs, and after passing by Carolin and Dobbin, the ball went to Hirsch. The crack Colonial centre put on top speed, and after running nearly half the length of the field, scored a really brilliant try, Carolin failing to add the goal. Martheze was the next to get over, and then Yorkshire had a long spell on the attack. Partis, with a grand kick, placed the ball in touch at the visitors' line, and from the next scrummage Orton, the Harrogate wing three-quarter, had a grand chance of being the first to cross the Colonials' line. He was close to the crease, and had no one near him when he received a fine pass from Steinthal. Had he taken it nothing could have prevented, him from scoring, but to the surprise of everybody he unaccountably dropped the ball, and the chance was gone.

Before the close Carolin scored again for the South Africans, and the end came with the result :—

Match v. Devon.—To Devon as a county and E. W. Roberts as an individual belong the honour of first crossing the South Africans' line during their English tour. Such a scene of enthusiasm has never previously been witnessed, when the 20,000 spectators rose en masse and cheered the Dartmouth Naval Collegian on his success.

The Rectory Field, Devonport, was filled to its utmost an hour before the start and a heavy downpour of rain made the ground slippery and the ball greasy. When the Colonials started Devon had to face a brilliant sun. The opening kick was well returned by Peters, and play settled near the centre line. The Devon forwards showed their mettle in scrums, and the ball came often to Jago and Peters; but they were badly supported by the three-quarters, who, although grand defenders, were not keen attackers. The visitors made ground with smart work in the loose, and gained a footing in Devon quarters, where Peters were penalised, and Douglas Morkel landed three points. The County played vigorously, but were again penalised, and Morkel kicked another goal. Devon were determined, and good work by Roberts took them to the Colonials' "twenty-five" where Williams crossed from a pass of Jago's, but greatly to the disappointment of the spectators, a five yards scrum was ordered. Marsburg with a huge punt, transferred play to the Devon line, and Stegmann crossed with an unconverted try. Devon played, with renewed vigour, and again invaded the Africans' quarters where Dobbin infringed the off-side rule, and Lillicrap opened Devon's scoring with a penalty goal. Within a couple of minutes Dobbin increased the visitors' lead by wriggling over with an unconverted try under the bar. It was nearing the interval before Roberts scored his historical try far out, and the teams crossed over with the score :—

Devon opened the second half in a sensational manner. Working close to the Colonials' line by fine loose forward work, the ball rolled dead when Scott was within a few inches of it. The Westerners quickly returned, and Peters was hauled over by Marsburg within a yard of the line. At this period the Devonians overran the Colonials, who for a considerable time were penned to their own "twenty-five." Only the grand defensive work of Hirsch, Krige, and Marsburg kept Devon from scoring. Scott was hurled to touch close to the corner flag, and

Peters missed dropping a goal by inches. Bad play on the part of Lillicrap and De Smidt let Dobbin through with the easiest of tries and Douglas Morkel added the extra points. This was the first time in the half that the Colonials had invaded Devon's "twenty-five." The County were quickly attacking again, and the downfall of the visitors' line looked imminent, Roberts being all but over again when grassed by Hirsch. Devon's display was glorious, as they beat the South Africans in the tight and overshadowed them at half. The pace was terrific, and Loubser brought welcome relief to the Colonals by a long punt to touch. From this they went away in loose order, and after a scramble Martheze ran over with another try, which Douglas Morkel again majorised. The score does not represent the game by any means, Devon being in no way so inferior as it makes the County appear. Result :—

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. HARLEQUINS.—The London Scots gained a richly deserved victory over the Harlequins, at Richmond Athletic Ground, on Saturday. Their success possessed extra merit from the fact that after twenty minutes they lost A. G. Greig, their full back, who had a bone broken in his left forearm, and thenceforth played only fourteen men. At the time of this misfortune the Scots had the lead. They played so well afterwards that they were never in danger of being beaten. They clung to their early advantage with fine energy: their resolution, their resource when beset with danger was truly admirable. Primarily the victory was due to the superiority of the forwards—forwards worthy to be awarded a first class certificate, they were so good. The rush, the dash, the splendid dribbling powers of class Scottish forwards has always been a theme for admiration.

The play can be shortly dealt with. Winning their way from the start, the Scottish forwards soon forced the game into the "Quins' "25." An attempt by one of the visitors to run across the field was promptly foiled, the player being brought down underneath his own posts. The Scots quickly fastened on to this advantage. The ball was heeled out, and Walter slipped across with a try which Geddes converted. After a temporary burst by the Harlequins' pack, led by R. O. C. Ward, which ended in Walter touching down, Greig was hurt in stopping a further rush and retired. He was afterwards examined and reported to have broken a bone in his left forearm. This accident caused Wade to go full back, the Scottish relying on three three-quarters. For some minutes they were pressed, but a characteristic burst changed the scene, and Young rushed over, Geddes again converting. Subsequently the Harlequins had the better of the play, and ultimately J. Birkett made a long run, in which Stoop joined, and from the latter's transfer Lyon ran in very favourably for Lambert to improve. Thus at the interval the Scots' lead had been reduced to 5 points. For the second half the home team adopted a seven pack, J. R. Simson being drafted into the three-quarter line. Aided by a freshening wind, the Scots set up some hot attacks, Scott, Purves, and E. Simson each getting within an ace of scoring. Finally Bailey was at fault, allowing himself to be collared close to the line. From the ensuing "scrum" E. Simson feinted and passed out for P. Munro to get in. This time Geddes failed to improve. The Scottish resisted all efforts of the Harlequins to break through, and ultimately the visitors suffered their first defeat this season by two goals and a try to a goal (13 points to 5).

BLACKHEATH vs. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.—There was little of an exhilarating character about this match at Blackheath on Saturday, except the weather, which was seasonable and bright. The club had a weak team in the field. Parsons was absent for the first quarter of an hour, Barratt (O.M.T.) was off for a similar period owing to an injury to his head. There were half a dozen other minor accidents and consequent stoppages, and the All Blacks' game, which Blackheath endeavoured to follow in the formation of the players on the field, did not work at all well. Probably one or two were resting in view of the Newport match on Saturday next, but however that may be, although the O.M.T. were not at full strength, they had fully three-fourths of the game, and ought to have won by a goodly margin. Of course there were times when both sides showed some of their well-known dash, but play was chiefly of the scrambling nature and by no means a good advertisement for the Rugby code. The visitors had the best of the opening, and in five minutes Raphael was almost over in the corner, Limpenny saving somewhat smartly. Play continued dangerously near the home line for some time, but at length Robson gained considerable ground for the club, aided by Finlinson and Turner. Raphael checked them, and the O. M. T. forwards got the best of a pack. A nice pass out by Barratt saw Bull lose a chance through faulty picking up, but the visitors continued the pressure, Hanhart once leading the front rank in a lengthy dribble. Then the O. M. T. three-quarters passed right across. Raphael only being pulled down a yard from the line, the ball having just previously been worked to the centre by Turner. A free kick greatly relieved the club, though directly after they were found hotly defending again. A fine run by Robson was neutralised by pretty passing between Cockell and his three-quarter backs, while a little later Robson was away again, Lee checking him and kicking out, though the visitors' line had a narrow escape. The half-back was not long in repeating his performance, and seemed a certain scorer in the corner until he was forced over the line by Cockell. Then some determined work on the part of the Club front division was equally well responded to by the eight on the other side, and after the home three-quarters have given a glimpse of their old time brilliance, passing very neatly, and ended again by Raphael, the O. M. T. once more assumed the upper hand and maintained it almost until the cross-over. The last mentioned player essayed a shot at goal from a mark, though it was a weak effort, and at the interval there was a blank sheet.

Blackheath opened the second period strongly, the forwards, headed by Cave, almost getting over in the second minute, while Turner also showed up prominently. However, the Taylors finally checked them in equally good style, though it must be said that Lee did not shine at back, seldom picking up cleanly. Robson missed a penalty goal by a few inches, and a nice bout of open play followed, in which both sets of forwards did fairly well in turn. Gradually the O.M.T. gained ground, Cockell putting in a lot of hard work, as did Barningham at this point. Limpenny stopped an almost sure try, and then a fine bout of passing was shown by the visiting half and three-quarter backs, all of whom handled in turn before Finlinson managed to intercept. Cockell, however, at length scored a well-earned try for the Taylors, working his way from a pack through the opposition in clever style. Lee failed at the place kick. Cockell was almost over again immediately after, and the play was pretty much one-sided until some ten minutes from time, when the club woke up. Meanwhile a penalty kick at goal for the visitors from a good position just failed. Parsons and Cave were chiefly instrumental in giving Blackheath the advantage at last, and after Robson had missed a penalty kick Finlinson crossed the line five minutes before the end. It was a capital try and very neatly obtained. Robson failed at goal and the result was a draw of 3 points each. All through the contest the visiting half-backs had the better of the "five-eighths" system, though of course with a full team the new style may have worked out better. Harrison could give a long start to the full back on the other side, and but for his continual watchfulness the Taylors would have claimed a victory.

OXFORD FRESHMEN'S MATCH.

Fine weather was associated with the Freshmen's trial yesterday, and there was a large attendance. The sides were captained by W. W. Hoskin and C. J. Gardiner (Trinity), and the only alteration from the published list was that Bowring (Exeter and Rugby) gave way to Blencowe (Queen's and St. Edward's). A capital game resulted. During the first half the play was very even, the score at the interval being 8 points all. The stripes, however, were a man short most of the game, Shirley having to be carried off soon after the start. For some time after the resumption Humphreys, one of their halves, was also disabled.

In the second half the Whites for a time held their own, but the passing of the Stripes' three-quarters was frequently very fine, and the Whites were beaten by 3 goals and 2 tries (21 points) to 1 placed goal, 1 penalty goal, and 2 tries (14 points). Page was by far the best of the wing three-quarters. Williamson and Gotley were the best of the halves, and forward Blencowe, Bieu, and Evers were perhaps the pick. The tries for the winners were scored by Page, Gardiner (2), Birchall, and Hammond, and for the other side by Tarr, Hoskin, and Gurner, Blencowe kicking the penalty goal.

Mr. C. J. Gardiner's Side (Colours).—T. W. Heale (St. Edward's School and Brasenose); S. M. Morgan (Marlborough and Keble), H. H. Vassall (Bedford Grammar School and Keble), J. R. Birchall (Denstone and Queen's), and E. Page (Bromsgrove and Keble); A. L. H. Gotley (Tonbridge and Brasenose) and L. Humphreys (Llandovery and Jesus), E. V. R. Bieu (St. Paul's and Balliol), A. V. Shirley (Rugby and Exeter), H. P. V. Townend (King's School, Canterbury, and St. John's, R. W. Evers (Rugby and Queen's), E. G. Lester (All Hallows, Honiton, and University), F. G. L. Scott (King's School, Canterbury, and Merton), G. H. Hammond (Leeds Grammar School and St. John's), and C. J. Gardiner (Trinity).

Mr. W. W. Hoskin's Side (Whites).—E. Walker (St. Bees and Queen's), R. W. Jesson (Sherborne and Merton), F. M. Tarr (Uppingham and University), G. Cunningham (Fettes and Magdalen), and W. Wood's (St. Paul's and Merton); H. H. Williamson (St. Andrew's, South Africa, and Trinity) and J. L. Mounsey (Edinburgh Academy and University); L. C. Blencowe (St. Edward's and Queen's), A. C. Houlder (Tonbridge and Brasenose), C. Gurner (Merchant Taylors and Oriel), O. V. Parry Jones (Sherborne and Magdalen), A. G. Mullins (St. Andrew's, South Africa, and Keble), H. F. Sawbridge (Haileybury and University), H. R. L. Lawrence (Wellington and Christchurch), and W. W. Hoskin (Trinity).

CAMBRIDGE FRESHMEN'S MATCH.

Quite an array of exceptionally fine players were unearthed yesterday. T. A. Godby (Loretto and Magdalene), although well-known in Yorkshire, surprised everyone by the manner in which he picked up and passed out to his three-quarters. Both the backs were good as were the three-quarters, A. E. Beecroft, C. C. G. Wright, H. Inglis, and H. W. Malcolm. In the open J. G. Sherburn and R. S. Kennedy were conspicuous, as were N. C. Smith, F. T. C. Young, and H. L. Macnaughton for the Colours. The match was rather a runaway victory for the Colours by 6 goals 4 tries to 2 tries. During the opening half Inglis, Ashcroft, Young, and Guy scored tries for the Colours, one of which was converted by Smith. The only try obtained for the Whites was that of Hemmant's. After the interval the Whites held upper hand for a while, and Terleaven secured a very good unconverted try; but the Colours came again, and Inglis (twice), Beecroft, Gimson, Guy, and Macnaughton crossed the line, Harris (three times), Smith, and Godby adding the major points. Colours won by 42 points to 6.

B. C. Harris' Side (Colours).—G. M. Jardine (Marlborough and Clare); A. E. Beecroft (The Leys and Christ's), C. C. G. Wright (Tonbridge and Pembroke), H. Inglis (Dulwich and King's) and H. Guy (Clifton and Queens); T. A. Godby (Loretto and Magdalene) and A. H. Ashcroft (Birkenhead and Caius); B. G. Harris (captain) (Pembroke), N. C. Smith (Loretto and Pembroke), G. V. Carey (Eastbourne College and Caius), C. Gimson (Oundle and Emmanuel), F. T. C. Young (Merchiston and Pembroke), B. P. Muff (Uppingham and Clare), H. L. Macnaughton (Loretto and Pembroke), and V. R. Garrett (Rugby and Pembroke).

J. W. Alexander's Side (Whites).—A. B. Salmon (Denstone and Selwyn); M. Hemmant (Tonbridge and Pembroke), P. Gibb (Rugby and Emmanuel), H. W. Malcolm (Glenalmond and Clare), and N. C. Scholfield (Liverpool College and Trinity); R. B. Firth (Dulwich and King's) and V. Treleaven (Private and St. John's); J. W. Alexander (capt) (Clare), J. C. Sherburn (Uppingham and Trinity Hall), R. S. Kennedy (Tonbridge and Christ's), J. W. Dew (Tonbridge and Clare), F. C. J. Tudaberry (Dulwich and King's,) S. Thomson (Merchiston and Clare), F. D. Purser (Uppingham and Trinity), and A. T. Miller (Bedford Grammar and Caius).

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.—Members and friends who found their way to headquarters last night, were treated to some excellent sport. Mr. Bettinson again introduced plenty of variety into his programme, and with all the boxers on the "level," the business was interesting throughout. The semi-finals of the Middle-weight Novices' Competition commenced last Thursday having been decided Alf Vango of Bethnal Green, and Jack Roberts, of St. Luke's, faced each other for a six-round go. Roberts must not be confounded with the Drury Lane representative of that name who is also known at the Broadstairs Pet. With Vango he took some liberties in the first round, and striking one as the better boxer, was a good favourite at the first call of time. Vango, however, stuck to his work, and in the fourth round a somewhat unexpected right hand won him the bout. Bill Palmer, of St. Luke's, and Seaman Mercer had a really fine set-to. Although only lasting four rounds, the affair was brimful of good, hard hitting, and exceptionally exciting owing to the wounderful way in which Mercer, when in trouble, recovered. Palmer took such a long lead in the first round that Mercer was a 5 to 1 chance when they stood up for the second. From here Mercer had many bad times, but his gameness and persistent attack caused Palmer to go weak in the fourth round. A supreme effort on the part of Palmer was successful before the next call of time, and Mercer had to retire beaten, but anything but disgraced. J. Holt, of Kentish Town, was quite outclassed and beaten in two rounds by Albert Wheeler, of St. Luke's, and following the usual interval the chief event of the evening was put on. This was a fifteen-round contest between Seaman Hayes and Young Sharkey, of Notting Hill. The last-named, who first made his mark by winning a novices' competition a little while back, defeated, in succession, the brothers Jameson, of Wandsworth, while the last appearance of Hayes at headquarters was in a loosing match with Spike Robson, of Newcastle. The Notting Hill youth has filled out considerably of late, but, though as tall, he was not so heavy or so muscular as the sailor. The bout was one of the best ever fought in the club. Sharkey had the speed of his opponent, but Hayes, strong and sturdy, set at naught the punishment given him. For five rounds the business was rather rough, but always highly interesting. Here a severe warning from the referee brought about a great improvement, and Hayes served by his strength and stamina, won a great battle early in the ninth round. The final of the novices' event fell to Pearce, who put out the favourite, Michell, of Rushden, last Thursday.

Mr. John H. Douglas was once more in office as referee; Mr. E. Zerega took the times, and Mr. Bettison, as M. C.

PEDESTRIANISM.

POLYTECHNIC H. WALKING CHAMPIONSHIP.—Twenty-eight competed on Saturday, at Pinner, in the Poly H. ten miles walking championship on the road, and with only a few exceptions all finished. In places the roads were a little heavy, and perhaps this accounted for the fact that the champion's time was 1¼mins. slower than that of last year, when the course was exactly the same. Butler, the London to Brighton record holder, was, of course, generally expected to win, and having been successful on two previous occasions, he had only to score now to make the "Ben Davies" challenge cup his own property. Displaying good form, and being always in front, he triumphed fairly easily. Both Jacobs, who was third last year, and Bland also walked well. The latter showed improved pace, and secured the sealed handicap, decided in conjunction with the level race. At the half distance Butler's time was 38mins. 28secs., and Jacob's 40mins. 10secs. Hunting.

THE "GORDON'S HORSE" HOUNDS.

WE have been suffering from the waning season, and what with high crops and dry winds it has been almost impossible to hunt. But on the 1st of November we completed the season with a really good day. Meeting at the 5th milestone on the Dumber Road, "to finish the season," only a small field met the Master, but these were rewarded for their pluck and early rising. Mr. Gledstanes threw off to the South of the road and hounds spoke to a line almost at once.

They ran pretty hard, parallel with the road and in a westerly direction for about ten minutes and then their heads went up and not a hound could stoop. A longish check ensued, and it was not until we had crossed the road that two or three hounds feathered on a bit of open ground. They were palpably hunting something but would not commit themselves by speaking to it. However the line was carried showly through a couple of casuarina topes and then scent again failed, but casting forward the Master hit off the line and the pack then ran fast for nearly fifteen minutes and broke from scent to view as the jack entered a large ragi field. This ragi temporarily saved him, for hounds could not keep their view, but it was a curious sight to see both jack and hounds bounding in the ragi like a herd of buck. However he was more or less in view for half a mile and then got a fresh start owing to a sharp left-handed turn and scent lying badly. It improved, however, as hounds gradually hunted up to him and they eventually pulled him down after a run of about forty minutes. The distance covered was probably more than five miles. It was significant of a last day that there was no lady out to receive the brush. The pack has hunted 50 days and has killed 9½ brace of jack and one fox. They are now for sale and are well worthy of the notice of M. J. H.'s.

THE best, and also the most pleasant time of the year for hunting, it should perhaps be termed coursing, is during the early part of the rains before the grass gets too long and the cover too thick. The fresh feel of the air and the tinge of green all over the country side is a most extraordinary relief after the stifling heat of the previous three or four months. Butterflies are to be seen in daily increasing numbers; where formerly was parched and arid soil all sorts of wild flowers spring up as if by magic; birds are busy feasting on the many insects swarming in the air; crows and kites are greedily chasing and devouring the lovely spider-like insects with scarlet plush coats which are crawling over the ground in all directions, and if these are as good to eat as they are beautiful in colour and appearance they must indeed be delicious morsels. A skylark rises from the field close by and soars towards the blue with an outburst of carolling song, higher and higher he goes, singing gaily, until he reaches the limit, makes several efforts to rise still higher, but fails; and then with outspread wings he slowly descends to the earth, and we realize how very like our sweet English skylark he is. And so, with keen observation noting the doings of birds and butterflies, the while keeping a roving eye on the country in front, the morning passes in real enjoyment and joy of living. Horses and dogs feel the change as much as their master, and throwing off the lassitude which has held them during the hot weather, show by their frisking and gambollings how pleased they are that the season of soft grass and cool weather has once more returned.

An animal is sighted in the distance, and discovered after careful scrutiny to be a jackal sneaking homewards to the scrub jungle two miles to the north, so quietly trotting along we lessen the distance to about 400 yards and then start galloping hard, at the same time calling up the dogs by a loud blast on the whistle. The jack has been suspicious of our movements for some time, and is at once away as hard as he can go. The dogs come in from all directions, converging to a point ahead of the galloping horse, as they know their master is invariably to be trusted. Soon the fastest among them gets a sight of the jack in front, and this seems to redouble her efforts and she rapidly gains on the stout varmint before her. He knows every inch of the country and heads for some nullahs and broken ground among which he hopes to throw off the panting crew now hard at his heels. Greyhounds, hunting entirely by sight, are soon at fault when their quarry disappears from view and it is at such times that the skill, experience, and hard riding of their master is so invaluable to them. It is only by hard and judicious galloping that a horse or pony can, in rough and broken country, keep close enough to the jackal or fox to enable the dogs to be put on to the line he has taken, and the success of a pack is largely dependent on the ability of the Master. In the case now in mind the dogs are soon put right and another gallant jack is gathered to his fathers, his mask and brush being consigned to the bag strung at the saddle for the purpose.

It is marvellous what reckless riding the fast pursuit of animals induces. I can call to mind one memorable morning, when a friend and myself galloped after a jack, in the endeavour to put the dogs on to him, over the top of a rocky hill across several stone quarries, and down a steep and jungly slope on the opposite side. The jack was extremely fast and we failed to get the hounds to see him and had to abandon the chase. A lady was out with us, a nervous rider, so we quietly made our way towards the place from which we started some two miles back, and were positively astonished at the places we had galloped over, and could not attempt to cross them at a walk. In one place my pony had tried to stop at a perpendicular drop in the sheet rock, but unable to do so had been obliged to drop some 6 feet on to a slippery surface down which he slithered for some yards before regaining his equilibrium, when he was again urged on his mad career. Truly fortune favours the reckless rider.

I have said little about horses and ponies. Every man has his own choice, which must be guided by his weight and inches. For light-weight men—riding 11st. 7lbs. and under—nothing can be better than the Arab or good class of country-bred. Moderately heavy weights can hunt on exceptionally large country-bred horses, but must usually ride Australian animals. Very big horses are not suited to the kind of hunting, or coursing, of which I have endeavoured to give a faithful picture. The Master must be mounted on a handy, quick, and speedy animal or the dogs will lose many animals they would otherwise secure.

It has always been a matter of astonishment to me how very few care to turn out in the early morning for a gallop with the dogs. For many years I have hunted almost alone and have seldom been able to induce brother officers to join me with any regularity. Any excuse has been good enough:—"up late last night" "haven't had a Europe morning for months," and so on. And this abandonment of the healthy outdoor sports of hunting, shooting, and fishing, has become more marked during the last few years. Perhaps it is owing to the large increase of work which the professional soldier-officer has to cope with in these days of undoubtedly increased efficiency; but still there is always Sunday, and occasional off-days during the week, even during the drill season and yet little shooting or hunting is done by the greater number. Where there are packs of fox-hounds more riders appear, but it is only the few who are really keen that are regular in attendance. As was remarked in a report of the opening meet of the Poona Hunt the other day; "The large contingent of photograph hunters disappeared as soon as the annual photograph had been taken, never to be seen again during the remainder of the season." The changed conditions of modern warfare, brought about mainly by the advance in the perfection of long range rifles and artillery, call to a much greater extent than formerly for those very qualities of individual initiative in cases where the mind has to be made up at a moment's notice; personal skill in management of horse and weapons; ability to live a life in the open; care of horses; forethought in making arrangements in order to carry the sport to a successful conclusion; all of which soldierly attainments are engendered and fostered by experience in hunting, riding, and shooting. No training is so good for the ready facing of energencies; the knowledge and study of varied country; the habit of grasping the situation and acting with instant decision. There is no physical exercise to equal that of the sportsman, especially in this climate, where a strong incentive to be up and doing is often necessary. Polo is good, but not equal to the varied exercise and health-giving conditions of sport. Long tramps, skilful stalks, good shooting, to see and not be seen, to be able to ride at speed over any kind of ground; all these tend to good mind, good eye, good muscle; and it is these very qualities the modern soldier has to possess in an increased degree. To be successful in sport demands qualities of manliness, and hardihood, quickness of eyesight, and ability to take advantage of cover and of the formation of the ground whether on horseback or on foot; patience in the attainment of an object; and keenness of observation, all of which must be posessed by him who would be a successful soldier. There can be no question as to the sportsman being, as a rule, a better soldier than the Officer, all too common, who never leaves the Cantonment, except on a Field day, does not know the country, even in the vicinity of the station, and has not developed any of these qualities which have been mentioned, and which are latent in most Britons. This has been a lengthy digression from "Days and Doings", but is clearly connected with my subject, and the matter gives food for serious reflection.

A few remarks on the care and treatment of our doggy friends in sickness and in health are not out of place, and the methods evolved by experience may be justifiably inflicted on the reader. First of all comes the dog-boy and his training. Catch him young, and take pains to teach him his work. Pass over no neglect of care and attention to his duties. Hold a daily inspection of all the dogs to see that they have been well groomed and freed of all ticks. Impress on him that all hurts—even of the most trivial kind—must be brought to notice, the reason for this being the quick and insidious manner in which sores and abrasions get fly-blown. Keep always ready for use a saturated solution of boracic acid lotion for cuts and wounds and phenyle and permanganate of potash as a kennel disinfectant. Provide the dog-boy with an efficient pair of tweezers for removal of thorns and ticks. A mixture of camphor and turpentine—not too much of the latter as it is an irritant—has been found the best for speedy removal of maggots from a fly-blown sore. Use it with a glass syringe. A weak solution of alum and water is good for watery eyes. Keep a surgical pocket knife with two blades, one straight and one curved, also forceps, suture needles, and silk. A pint or two of good castor oil, and we have mentioned all the ordinary remedies and appliances necessary. For canker in the ear, a not uncommon, and extremely painful complaint, fomentation of the back of the ears gentle syringing with warm water, and then internal application of a few drops of subacetate of lead and glycerine, in equal parts, has been found a sure remedy, except in long-neglected cases. The treatment of dogs for general diseases and ailments much resembles that of human beings. When a dog shows signs of sickness a dose of castor oil and immediate regimen of liquid diet is a safe procedure in every case until a correct diagnosis can be made. Quinine and Calomel are medicines which must be cautiously used, as both have a most powerful effect on the dog. As with ourselves, so with our canine companions, a judicious administration of stimulants in the shape of whisky, brandy, or sherry, has been the means of saving many a sick dog's life. Dogs in hard work should be fed abundantly on a nutritious diet. "Atta" chupattees broken up in buffalo milk, the same in sheep's head broth—not beef broth as it is too heating—with green vegetables; Atta chappattees in milk, or rice in milk, and once a week a dinner of boiled sheep's head and liver. These are all excellent diets, and should be given in turn, the diet being changed directly the dogs show any signs of having tired of it. Plenty of bones are of course necessary, and should be distributed after the soft food is finished. When meat is given, and it ought not to be supplied more than once a week, it should be cooked and not raw. Attend to feet and claws (remove all dew claws, even from old dogs), never take a dog out hunting if he shows any disinclination to go, it is a sure sign that he is not well. It must be added that warmth and quiet are necessary to the treatment of a sick dog. Keep the kennel scrupulously clean and free of ticks and flies, and provide the animals with comfortable benches. A great deal more could be said but space does not permit.

To write of my Bobbery Pack has been a pleasure, but the narrative must be brought to an end, for fear that it may become burdensome to readers who possibly are not so enthusiastic as the narrator whose hunting days are, unfortunately, cut short and who will never again enjoy "good hunting" except in the memories of the past; having to be consoled with the philosophical conviction that once the inevitable has been acceded to there are few pleasures to equal those contained in reflections on events and incidents of days of enjoyment, which are gone, never to return.

THE INDORE TOURNAMENT.

CARABINIERS 2ND TEAM vs. BHOPAL.—This game opened the tournament on the 29th ultimo. The Carabiniers were no match for their opponents, whose combination and clean hitting were features of their play. Bhopal opened with a minor point and scored two goals in each of the first two periods, a goal and 2 subs. in the third, and a goal and 4 subs. in the fourth. The fifth chukker produced two goals and a minor point in favour of Bhopal who, continuing to hold the upper hand, eventually ran out victorious by 11 goals and 14 subs. to nil. Teams.—

Umpires:—Captain Ross and Mr. Hoare.

BHOPAL vs. SKINNER'S HORSE.—These teams put up a most exciting game on the 1st instant, Bhopal eventually winning by a single point.

First Chukker.—Bhopal had rather the best of the exchanges; no score.

Second Chukker.—Bhopal scored a goal, but from a penalty, shortly after, the cavalry hit a subsidiary. Score: Bhopal 1 goal, Skinner's Horse 1 sub.

Third Chukker.—Bhopal hit a goal and Cosker replied with a similar score for the cavalry. Bhopal put on a subsidiary. Score: Bhopal 2 goals, 1 sub., Skinner's Horse 1 goal 1 sub.

Fourth Chukker.—A minor point to Bhopal, was followed by fast up and down play. A foul against Bhopal but nothing resulted from the penalty. Skinner's Horse scored a subsidiary before the close. Score: Bhopal 2 goals 2 subs., Skinner's Horse 1 goal 2 subs.

Fifth Chukker.—The Cavalry hit a goal, thereby equalising. Bhopal played hard and scoring a goal took the lead again. Score: Bhopal 3 goals 2 subs., Skinner's Horse 2 goals 2 subs.

Sixth Chukker.—Fast up and down play. A foul against Bhopal let in the cavalry who once more drew level with a goal. Score: Bhopal 3 goals 2 subs., Skinner's Horse 3 goals 2 subs.

Seventh Chukker.—Thirty seconds were left but there was no further score. The game was then continued and Bhopal hitting a subsidiary gained a victory by 3 goals 3 subs to 3 goals 2 subs. Teams:—

39TH CENTRAL INDIA HORSE vs. RUTLAM.—Played on the 1st instant, Rutlam being defeated by 5 goals and 1 sub., to 2 goals and 1 sub.

First Chukker.—No score.

Second Chukker.—The C. I. Horse hit a goal and Rutlam obtained a minor point.

Third Chukker.—The 39th pressed and scored a goal. Score: C. I. Horse 2 goals, Rutlam 1 sub.

Fourth Chukker.—Play had been rather sticky thus far but this period was faster. The 39th hit a goal and a subsidiary. A penalty enabled Rutlam to score, the Raja hitting a goal. But the 39th put through again before the close. Score: C. I. Horse 4 goals 1 sub., Rutlam 1 goal 1 sub.

Fifth Chukker.—Both teams attacked and each scored a goal. Score: C. I. Horse 5 goals 1 sub., Rutlam 2 goals 1 sub.

Sixth Chukker.—No score; the C. I. Horse winning as stated. Teams.—

FINAL.

39TH C. I. HORSE vs. BHOPAL.—The final provided an excellent game which was eventually won by the C. I. Horse. H. H the Maharajah congratulated the winners and Mrs. Daly gave away the prizes at the conclusion of the game.

First Chukker.—The 39th attacked immediately and Eckford hit a goal. Bhopal were repulsed and the cavalry obtained two more goals, their opponents putting through on one occasion. Score: C. I. Horse 3 goals, Bhopal 1 goal.

Second Chukker.—The cavalry pressed but Bhopal managed to get away and scored a subsidiary. Score: C. I Horse 3 goals, Bhopal 1 goal 1 sub.

Third Chukker.—Bhopal attacked but there was no score.

Fourth Chukker.—Bhopal playing hard followed up a subsidiary with a goal. Fast play closed the chukker—a penalty against Bhopal bearing no result. Score: C. I. Horse. 3 goals, Bhopal 2 goals 2 sub.

Fifth Chukker.—Both teams made great efforts to score. A foul against Bhopal enabled the 39th to add a goal to their score, whereat Bhopal played with renewed vigour and put on a goal and a minor point. Score: C. I. Horse 4 goals, Bhopal 3 goals 3 subs.

Sixth Chukker.—Ghulam Husain fouled Hewlett and fell; and the 39th were awarded a penalty hit; there was no further scoring, however. Final score: C. I. Horse 4 goals; Bhopal 3 goals 3 sub. Teams as before.

First Day.

FIRST TIES.

THE first ties in the above Tournament were played off on Monday the 29th October on the Mahomed Bagh ground. Twelve teams have entered. The Tournament is on the same lines as last year, the winners being the team which secures most goals in the three matches during the week. Teams handicapped to concede goals are required to make them before they score. Thus a team having to concede 5 goals must make 5 goals before they score at all, the score being the number of goals made in excess of the handicap :—

ROYAL DRAGOONS "C." vs. 6TH CAVALRY.

Lieut. Turner }	Lieut. Craige
Lieut. Hudson }	Lieut. Craster
Lieut. Miles	Lieut. Slacke
Col. DeLisle	Major Grimston
Lieut. Houston	Minus 9 goals
Minus 14 goals

Umpire:—Capt. Leighton.

The Royals who were conceding five goals, scored three goals to their opponents' nil, neither side having reached their handicap, the game at the close stood :6th Cavalry, plus O.

ROYAL DRAGOONS "A." vs. 24TH PUNJABIS "B."

Lieut. Chapman	Major Climo
Capt. Godman	Lieut Sinkinson
Capt. Hamilton Russell	Lieut. Leslie Smith
Lieut. Pike	Lieut. Trevor }
Minus 18 goals	Lieut. Haig }
	Minus 3 goals

Umpire:—Lieut. Tomkinson.

The Royals had to make 18 goals before they began to score. They succeeded in hitting six goals to one by the Punjabis. Score: Punjabis plus 1.

OXFORD L. I. "A." vs. 24TH PUNJABIS "A."

Lieut. Beaufort	Lieut. Edwards
Lieut. Stephens	Lieut. Cook Young
Capt. Bayley	Lieut. Skipwith
Lieut. Blewitt	Lieut. Menteth
Minus 3 goals	Minus 8 goals

Umpire:—Lieut. Miles.

The Punjabis, who conceded five goals, were on the offensive almost throughout, and made five goals. They thus succeeded in making up their handicap, but had not begun to score.

ROYAL DRAGOONS "B." vs. REMNANTS.

Lieut. Atkinson	Lieut MacCullagh
Capt. Leighton	Lieut Jones Vaughan
Lieut. Lambert	Lieut. Sandbach
Lieut. Tomkinson	Lieut. Graeme }
Minus 13 goals	Lieut. Coote }
	Minus 0

Umpire:—Lieut. Norland.

The Royals had to concede 13 goals. They made their total up to 10, and were thus 3 goals short of their handicap. The Remnants did not score.

DURHAM LIGHT INFANTRY vs. CASUALS.

Capt. Mathews	Lieut. Steel
Major Blake	Lieut. Beaumont
Lieut. Festing	Lieut. Benton
Col. Mansel	Lieut MacCaw
Minus 5 goals	Minus 4 goals

Umpire:—Major Climo.

The Durhams owed one goal. They scored six goals, to one by the Casuals. Score: Durhams, 4 up.

CIVILIANS vs. OXFORD L. I. "B."

Mr. Wahl	Capt. Henley
Mr. Sullivan	Lieut. Higgins
Mr. Scott	Lieut. Annesley
Mr. Naylor	Lieut. Morlands
Mr. Atkinson
Minus 6 goals	Minus. 7 goals

Umpire:—Lieut. Lambert.

The Oxfords conceded one goal. The Civilians made two goals to one goal by the Oxfords. Score: Civilians plus 2.

Second Day.

SECOND TIES.

The handicaps were framed to a nicety on the second day of Polo Tournament on Wednesday the 31st October, and there was a noticeable improvement in the play of the teams. The idea of the tournament is to give the officers of the garrison a week's polo and to encourage goal-getting by having a number of games each day. Forty goals were scored in the six games, of which 26 were contributed by the three teams of the Royal Dragoons.

REMNANTS vs. 24TH PUNJABIS "B."

Lieut. MacCullagh	Major Climo
Lieut. Jones	Lieut. Sinkinson
Lieut. Vaughan	Lieut. Leslie Smith
Lieut. Sandbach	Lieut. Trevor
Lieut. Graeme	Lieut. Haig
Lieut. Coote

Umpire:—Lieutenant Pike. The 24th Punjabis were minus 3 goals.

The Punjabis soon made up their handicap and at the close had scored 7 goals, thus winning by 4.

24TH PUNJABIS "A" vs. 6TH CAVALRY.

Lieut. Edwards	Lieut. Craigie
Lieut. Cook Young	Lieut. Craster
Lieut. Skipwith	Lieut. Slake
Lieut. Menteth	Major Grimston

Umpire:—Lieutenant Miles. The 6th Cavalry were minus one goal.

The Punjabis scored 3 goals to their opponents' one. Score: Punjabis: Plus 3.

OXFORD LIGHT INFANTRY "A" vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS "B."

Lieut. Beaufort	Lieut. Atkinson
Lieut. Stephens	Capt. Leighton
Capt. Bayley	Lieut. Lambert
Lieut. Blewitt	Lieut. Tomkinson

Umpire:—Col. de Lisle. The Royals were minus 10 goals.

The Royals obtained their 10 goals, and were unlucky in not scoring again. Both sides were thus level.

CASUALS vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS "C."

Lieut. Steel	Lieut. Turner
Lieut. Beaumont	Lieut. Hudson
Lieut. Benton	Lieut. Miles
Lieut MacCaw	Col. de Lisle
	Lieut. Houston

Umpire:—Capt. Godman. The Royals were minus 10 goals.

This was also a fast scoring game and had the Royals taken advantage of several openings in the first Chukker they would undoubtedly have passed their handicap. As it was the halt sounded first as they had made their 10th goal. The game thus ended in a draw.

OXFORD LIGHT INFANTRY "B" vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS "A."

Capt. Henley	Lieut. Chapman
Lieut. Higging	Capt. Godman
Lieut. Annesley	Capt. Hamilton Russell
Lieut. Morland	Lieut. Pike

Umpire:—Lieut. Craigie. The Royals were minus 11 goals.

The Royals scored six goals and were thus 5 short of their handicap. The result was a wash-out.

CIVILIANS vs. DURHAM LIGHT INFANTRY.

Mr. Wahl	Capt. Mathews
Mr. Sullivan	Major Blake
Mr. Scott	Lieut. Festing
Mr. Naylor	Col. Mansel
Mr. Atkinson

Umpire:—Capt. Bayley. The Civilians were minus one goal.

The final score was Durhams 1 goal and Civilians two. The teams were thus level.

THE FINALS.

The Tournament came to a successful close on Friday, the 2nd instant, with a victory for the Royal Dragoons "B" team, who were 9 goals up and thus beat the 24th Punjabis "B" team by a single goal. The Royals played a great game, Captain Leighton and Lieutenant Tomkinson being conspicuous for the winners. As a memento of the occasion silver cigarette cases, bearing the inscription "Lucknow Handicap Polo Tournament," will be presented to each member of the winning team. The attendance was not large owing to the counter attraction at Umballa. Among those present were Lady Locke Elliot, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Porter, Colonel and Mrs. de Lisle, and Mr. Cruickshank.

OXFORD LIGHT INFANTRY "B" vs. CASUALS.

Capt. Henley	Lieut. Steel
Lieut. Higgins	Lieut. Beaumont
Lieut. Annesley	Lieut. Benton
Lieut. Morland	Lieut. MacCaw

Umpire:—Lieutenant Tomkinson. The Oxfords were minus 3 goals.

The Oxfords scored 7 goals to 1 by their opponents. They were thus plus 2, which was their score for the tournament.

24TH PUNJABIS "A" vs. CIVILIANS.

Lieut. Edward	Mr. Wahl
Lieut. Cook	Mr. Sullivan
Lieut. Young	Mr. Scott
Lieut. Skipwith	Mr. Naylor
Lieut. Monteth	Mr. Atkinson

Umpire:—Captain Godman. The Punjabis were minus 2 goals.

The Civilians made 4 goals to nil, and were therefore plus 2. Result for the tournament: plus 4.

ROYAL DRAGOONS "C" vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS "A."

Lieut. Turner	Lieut. Chapman
Lieut. Hudson	Capt. Godman
Lieut. Miles	Capt. Hamilton
Col. de Lisle	Capt. Russell
Lieut. Houston	Lieut. Pike

Umpire:—Lieutenant Tomkinson. The Royals "A" were minus 4 goals.

The Royal Dragoons "A" made 3 goals to 1 by "C." The latter were one up, their score for the tournament.

DURHAM LIGHT INFANTRY vs. 24TH PUNJABIS "B."

Capt. Mathews	Major Climo
Major Blake	Lieut. Sinkinson
Lieut. Festing	Lieut. Leslie Smith
Col. Mansel	Lieut. Trevor
	Lieut. Haig

Umpire:—Lieutenant Tomkinson. The Durhams were minus 2 goals.

First up and down play in the first chukker but no score. In the second the Punjabis made 2 goals, and in the third each side made a goal. There was no further change. Score: Punjabis, plus 3. Final result: Punjabis, plus 8.

ROYAL DRAGOONS "B" vs. 6TH BENGAL CAVALRY.

Lieut. Atkinson	Capt. Craigie
Capt. Leighton	Lieut. Slacke
Lieut Lambert	Capt. McNeile
Lieut. Tomkinson	Lieut. Hodgson

Umpire:—Captain Morland. The Royals were minus 4 goals.

Fourteen goals were scored by the Royals, who won the game and the tournament. Final result: Royals "B" plus 9.

Captain McNeill and Lieutenant Hodgson played for the Cavalry in the absence of two of their team.

OXFORD LIGHT INFANTRY "A" vs. REMNANTS.

Lieut. Beaufort	Lieut. MacCullagh
Lieut. Stephens	Lieut. Jones Vaughan
Capt. Bayley	Lieut. Sandbach
Lieut. Blewitt	Lieut. Graeme
	Lieut. Coote

Umpire:—Major Climo. The Oxfords were minus 3 goals.

The Oxfords made 4 goals to 1 by their opponents. The game was a draw.

GOLF IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA GOLF CLUBS' OPENING DAY.—Saturday last was the opening day of this old club's annual season on the maidan, and was probably the most successful in all its long history. There was a record attendance at the preliminary tiffin to which about 130 members, sat down under the presidency of the new captain, Mr. T. Drimmie, whose submission of the customary toasts of the "King-Emperor" and "continued success to the Calcutta Golf Club" was commendably brief. Then followed the usual photograph, and then came the nine holes competition over either course which also must have furnished very nearly a record in the way of high scoring. The ground was in very bad order after the recent heavy rain, and was very badly cut up by hoof marks, while the putting greens were also decidedly untrue. This being so, it was not surprising to find very few returns sent in, with 48 as the best score; this was retained by Messrs. Mitchell-Innes, Mann and Mackenzie, who accordingly tied for the senior prize, while that for the Duffers was secured with the utmost ease by Mr. C. C. Morgan with a score of 47—7=40. The following are the few returns made :—

The Story Teller.

A NATIVE DAN LENO.

SOME years ago my husband and I were visiting a district at the back of beyond where ladies were but few, and consequently the nowker logue had it pretty much their own way. We were stopping with Mr.—— commonly known as "Truthful James" that Christmas, and planters from near and far had been asked to participate in the convivialities of the evening. Now "Truthful," as our host was generally called, was one of those men who had everything of the best—in his own estimation. His ponies, picked up for half what other men gave, were the best in the station, his trap second to none, his cigars irreproachable, and his garden the best paying; but above all his head servant Abdul Kassim was, a paragon of paragons. Though he was a Christian this rascal was, according to his master, sober, truthful, trustworthy to the uttermost, industrious, seeking but to further his master's interests with singleness of heart, with a singularly good taste in pants and ties, passing intelligent, there was hardly a matter on which "Truthful" did not consult his advice. Respectful and humble despite his manifold good qualities, but above all he was ignorant of English. "Truthful" had a deep antipathy to his servants knowing English, ever since an English-knowing syce some years ago had repeated some little playful nothings "Truthful" had been saying during a drive with a married lady.

Well on the night in question the guests were all assembled awaiting the momentous announcement that dinner was served, but the moments flew by and despite several successive orders to hurry up, half an hour had passed still no dinner. So "Truthful" asked his assistant to step round to the bawarchi khana and see what was the cause of the delay. He soon returned and beckoned one or two of the guests to come out, they returned convulsed with laughter and took out some others, evidently there was a huge joke on somewhere, and being the only lady present I asked to be allowed to share it. Being made to promise to keep quiet despite anything we saw, we were conducted behind the servants' quarters from where we could see the little bare courtyard which was between the kitchen and the butler's own quarters, and there we saw a sight. Lighted up partly from the glare of the kitchen window, which was supplemented by one or two hurricane lanterns, sat a circle of servants, most of them puffing away at cigars. It was easy to see that they had all been well primed with liquor, and if any proof were needed it was supplied by a couple of half empty whisky bottles which flanked a "dead marine" that had once held port gave's it. In the centre of the circle strutted Abdul Kassim, "Truthfulls" paragon servant, just then he was singing our host's pet comic song, singing it not only in English, but doing so precisely as "Truthful" himself sang it; every tone, every gesture was a most faithful and ludicrous caricature of his master; he kept his black audience in ecstasy. After the song, having refreshed himself with a pull at one of the whisky bottles, he collared the masalchi boy and sitting him on a mora in the centre and calling him "Miss Clarcesha" "(Truthful" was afterwards induced to confess his fiancés name was Clarissa), gave a fairly faithful representation of how his saheb obtained unto himself a wife. The whole was done in English which the scamp was not supposed to know, but accompanied by a running commentary in Hindustani which was absolutely killing. Dan Leno himself could not have excelled it. "Truthful," however, could contain himself no longer and burst upon the little circle like several hundred pounds of dynamite; they fled cackling like a bevy of jungle fowl, when a wild cat jumps amongst them; and I know now where Tommy Worser Hall got a lot of swear words from, for he spent a year with "Truthful" once. As for the dinner, it was not such a failure after all, the cook having kept sober, but the serving at it might have been better. After dinner Abdul Kassim, who had been run to earth in an old godown (the country was too tigerish for natives to care to roam about after dark) and under threat of being immediately hung, drawn and quartered, was made to go thr[illegible] which included caricatures of more sam[illegible]. When however, the wretch prefaced a re[illegible] now I am night punkah wallah" I discreetly withdrew.

BRIDGE.

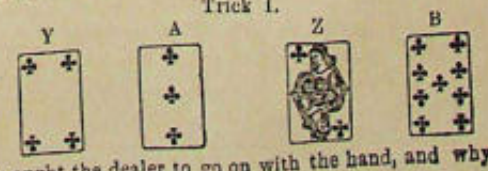
Solution to Problem No. 14.

B SHOULD lead the queen of trumps, followed by the king of diamonds. If A led from weakness in spades, the game can only be saved by two rounds of diamonds. And assuming that he led from queen, knave, 10, or queen, knave, 9, it is still essential to lead the diamond instead of returning spades, for Z may hold ace of diamonds, with king twice guarded in clubs, and in that case the ace must be taken out of his hand before he clears clubs. If Z holds both ace and queen of diamonds, the game is gone, as he will, of course, finesse in diamonds and clubs. The object of leading the king is to ensure a second lead through Z if he does not put on the ace. If, for instance, he holds ace, knave, 10, a small diamond led by B would lose the game.

Bridge Problem No. 15.

A and B are partners against Y and Z. Score :—Love all. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares no trumps, Y's and Z's hands are as follows :—

Y's Hand (Dummy.)



Hearts: Ace Knave, 9.
Diamonds: Ace, 3, 2.
Clubs: Ace, King, 8, 6, 5, 4.
Spades: 3.

Z's Hand (Dealer.)

Hearts: 8, 6,
Diamonds: Queen, Knave, 8, 7.
Spades: Queen, Knave, 10, 4, 2.

THE RESTRICTIONS ON SPORTING RIFLES.

THE Government of India having forbidden the importation of ·303 and ·450 rifles, irrespective of the calibre of their chambers and action: and of all ammunition capable of being used in these weapons: the Home Government has called the attention of English gunmakers to this order and the trade in these weapons will be summarily stopped. The step is dictated by motives of "high policy" and these will, perhaps, be loyally recognised by the sportsmen who will suffer from the prohibition. It is to be observed that reservation is made as regards ammunition in favor of persons already in lawful possession of rifles of the prescribed calibres, but the business of procuring ammunition will probably prove troublesome enough to induce the owners of such weapons to change them for others to which the prohibition does not apply. Cordite does not keep well in this climate and the sportsman cannot venture to keep a supply on hand if he wish his cartridges to be reliable; and thus necessity arises for the frequent purchase of small quantities, each purchase being effected after compliance with formalities, necessary no doubt, but sure to be tedious and troublesome. The importation of the ·303 had already been stopped and no doubt most of those who required a rifle which combines long range and accuracy with flat trajectory have sought refuge in other bores. The prohibition of the ·450 will be regretted, for in its day there was no more popular, and deservedly popular, rifle than the express of that calibre: and in spite of the introduction of improved small bores it holds its own in the favour of very many experienced shots at the present day.

Sport has generally led the way in adopting new rifles as the history of firearms shows us, and very properly. It is a serious matter to change the weapon of a nation's army and the military authorities have always displayed more caution than they generally receive credit for in making a change. The ·303 was very fully proven on dangerous game in both Africa and India before it was made the weapon of the army: even as the flintlock had established itself in the favour of English sportsmen some years before William III's ministers thought well to replace the old firelock with the improved contrivance. Of the four small bores most in use, the ·256, ·303, ·360, and 375, the second has been found by far the most satisfactory so far: it was the happy mean and as such the great gunmakers, Westley Richards conspicuously, have devoted greater attention to perfecting it than perhaps they have devoted to the other calibres. The prohibition now established will necessarily compel their attention to rifles of calibre not affected by the regulation and we should indeed be very blind to the achievements of gunmakers in the past if we thought that their ingenuity would be unequal to the task of devising substitutes.

Meantime no doubt two rifles will be required to do the work heretofore done by one. He who does not care to face dangerous game with so light a tool as the ·256 will fall back upon the ·500 express or heavier weapon, atoning for want of velocity by smashing power. Not every man cares to depend upon the small bore when tiger or leopard is the quarry to be faced : we have known men of great experience who admitted that the weight of the heavier rifle gave them a confidence they felt was lacking when the smaller bore was taken in hand. Another point in the same connection. The comparative lightness of the ·303 has always been urged in its favour ; and any man who is in the habit of carrying his own rifle (as he ought to do from dawn to day's end) can appreciate this quality : but of late years, shooting men whose experience entitles their views to respectful hearing have been asking whether the endeavour to reduce weight has not been overdone : whether the charge of powder, too, has not been suffered to outgrow the practical limit, the two defects combining to supply a far more than necessary or desirable kick. "Felix" in a recent issue of Bailey's Magazine gave it as his opinion in unmistakeable language that rifles are built without sufficient weight of metal. There can be no doubt but that there is much to be said in support of his view. The acceptance gained by modern small bore rifles, may have had something to do with it, but whatever the promoting cause, gunmakers of late years have spared no endeavour to build their rifles as light as skill can do it compatibly with safety and efficiency. If "Felix" be right in his contention and rifles ought to be built with greater weight of metal, one of the arguments, and not the least, in favour of the small bore disappears. There remains its wonderful superiority in flatness of trajectory and high penetration, but these qualities are not peculiar to the ·303 ; they attach in varying degree to small bore rifles of other calibres. As regards the smashing power which makes the weapon so valuable this is a quality attaching less to the rifle itself than to the make of bullet used with it. The copper-capped bullet made by Westley Richards gives extraordinary results with the ·303, combining as it does the requisite degree of penetration with the expanding power essential in a small bore bullet. But though its merits have been proved in the ·303 and it is by use and good report more or less identified with that calibre, we fail to understand why the same make of projectile should not be used with equal success in, let us say, the ·360 or ·375.

The gunmaker and the sportsman may be headed off by a government order in one direction ; but restrictions only serve to quicken ingenuity and divert it into new channels ; and we shall be much surprised if, ere long, we do not hear of the application of established or new principles to rifles which are not open to objection on the score of military policy. The small bores would never have attained to their present celebrity had gunmaking ingenuity rested content with perfection of the weapon itself and that only. In considering the merits of any rifle we must weigh with them the ammunition, more especially the type of bullet we are going to use with it. The ·303 with the nickel-jacketed bullet would give distinctly unsatisfactory results, for example, on thin skinned game of high vitality : it would be quite possible, we apprehend, to put a dozen such projectiles clean through a tiger without inflicting a wound at all likely to be fatal. Without the ingeniously contrived bullets which can be depended upon to expand, where the other would drill its way clean through, the ·303 as a sporting weapon would be of small account. The prohibition of this or any other specified calibre will cause inconvenience and loss : but both inconvenience and loss will, we are persuaded, be but temporary if sufficiently troublesome and annoying. The sportsman's experience and the gunmaker's ingenuity between them may be depended on to repair the inconvenience and that without loss of time. And while we regret the necessity which has compelled an unpalatable order we console ourselves with the reflection that the gunmaker has proved himself equal to difficulties which have arisen before and may be relied upon to do so again.

A cricket match was arranged between two regiments stationed in a country town. One of the umpires was a petty officer whose acquaintance with the game was very slight, but he asked for the post, and for some time everything went well. It was arranged that there should be five balls to the over, and after four balls had been sent up, the fifth was a wide.

"Wide—over !" called out the umpire.

On being remonstrated with, and the affair explained, the officer saw his mistake. With true military promptitude he turned to the players. "As you were !" he loudly called out and the game proceeded once more.

Sporting Notes.

THE Calcutta training track really did open last Friday, and was at once occupied by the eight or ten trainers already in town, Messrs. Apcar and Galstaun, and Wishart's strings being the most important stables at work. Mr. Dartmoor's horses, notably Sacristan II., Amyas and Lady Metal, were also at work, and Bradshaw was exercising some of this string. Next week we hope to give a full list of horses working on the track, and by that time there will be a certain amount of serious work to record.

The Tollygunge Club races, to be held on Saturday next, have filled better than ever, but the class of horses engaged is so diversified that the Handicapper must have had a veritable puzzle to arrive at an allotment of weights that will produce any sort of competition. It is difficult to see how Stepaway, Recoil and Energy can lose their respective races at any weights their owners care to run them under. The minor events have also drawn plenty of starters and the afternoon should be well and pleasantly filled. The course has been well harrowed and the going should be very fair.

The proposal to alter the definition of a "Maiden" in the C. T. C. Rules of Racing is not likely to meet with unqualified approval. Shortly, the suggested change is to cut out of the maiden class all winners of races of more than fifty rupees in value, doing away altogether with the existing two-hundred rupee limit. This is a direct blow at the two-hundred rupee mofussil meeting. It is probably argued that this class of meeting does not at present flourish and need not be considered, but legislation of this kind certainly tends to stamp out the embers of a fire, that might at any moment be rekindled. As an immediate instance we have only to look at the splendid meeting held last month at Jubbulpore. Racing, above all in the Indian mofussil, is not everywhere supported by owners, who can afford to disregard the value of stakes. They must see their way to paying a proportion of travelling and stable expenses before they can be induced to train their horses immense distances to compete at local meetings. The two-hundred rupee stake affords just such an opportunity, which forty-nine rupees obviously does not do.

The success of the little meetings at the Tollygunge Club this season has perhaps encouraged the foster fathers of this scheme to bring it to a head. But entries at these gymkhanas are drawn from what is practically an unlimited source of supply, and by the constant efforts and vigilance of an energetic and influential Honorary Secretary. It does not follow that up-country meetings can or will imitate the success of the Tollygunge Club with forty-nine-rupee races ; indeed the balance of probabilities seems all the other way. It is true that the two-hundred rupee stake has disappeared from the Calcutta course, but again the enormous public support forthcoming in Calcutta itself even at the Monsoon meetings has no prototype in the mofussil and it is not easy for the Stewards of proposed meets in up-country stations to launch out into the ambitious programmes which have proved a success at the big back-end meetings in the metropolis. Two-hundred rupee stakes have been found to be the happy medium which brings Stewards and owners together and some very strong arguments must be advanced in favour of any scheme to hamper the struggles of this class of meeting before it can gain the support of racing men. The Stewards have given long notice of the meeting which is to be held on 9th December to discuss the question, and it is to be hoped that mofussil racing will be strongly represented; if it is not so the opinion of mofussil Stewards should be sought in writing before the amendment is passed by the Calcutta members. The reduction in fees of unfledged native jockeys to Rs. 25 winning and Rs. 12-8 losing mounts will meet with the unqualified approbation of everyone except those most nearly concerned.

The first entries for the Calcutta Races and Tollygunge Steeplechases total an increase on last year's figure, but are not astonishingly large. The hurdle races show a marked decline in favour and the Burdwan Cup has drawn but twelve entries in nine separate interests, and unless the second and final entry lists provide some additions these fields will probably dwindle away to a minimum. Otherwise prospects look rosier than ever and every indication points to a record season's racing.

The eighteen competitors in the Viceroy's Cup are the first to claim notice. Eight of these are newcomers to the Calcutta course and can only be criticized on hearsay and book form, the latter being only an assurance of what a horse was able to do before his owners were content to part with him and before he tackled the distresses of our Indian climate. English and Australian form is very interesting as a topic of conversation, but nothing can delete the obvious advantage held by the live donkey over the dead lion.

Taking the Englishmen first, Steinhager, Mr. Charles' son of Count Schomberg, has run exclusively in Ireland and has not been knocked about. In the last season as a three-year-old he won two £300 races over two miles, on the second occasion carrying 9 stone, and these two victories bring him well into line with most of the horses in this year's list. This horse, like Long Tom, Boabdil and others, has been reported to be amiss, but these rumours may be noted without alarm and registered for consideration about the first week in December. Footprint, the Ceylon representative, ran with great vigour for two seasons in England and ran second in Ceylon to Prince Lyon and again to Dalkeith, only succeeding in annexing the Governor's Cup after the departure of Mr. Farquharson's horses. Paddy's Darling, a three-year-old mare by Enthusiast, has done smart work over five and six furlongs, but has yet to show that she can stay a longer distance. Rosanule, the stable companion of Steinhager, raced during five seasons in England and Ireland, winning two small races over a mile at the Curragh and Leopardstown just before changing hands. This horse is a son of Gallinule, now, thanks to the successes of Pretty Polly and Spearmint at the head of the list of English winning sires. Clear Artist by Velasquez—Simplify, won two good races over 1½ miles in England during 1906, and cannot be by any means a slow coach when in good health and spirits.

The new arrivals from Australia are Fitzgrafton, Spero and The Master. The last named has been kept busy since his infancy, and as a four-year-old has quite a good record behind him, though he was unlucky in being so many times beaten into second place. He will run in very popular colours and if good wishes could help him along, "Mr. Maxwell's" horse would be in front all the way in the big race. Spero, a Grafton gelding, belonging to Mr. Steve Margrett, has also a long record with a couple of wins to brighten it up, but his form points rather to the Trials than to the longer race.

Fitzgrafton has been through four seasons in Australia, but has evidently not been knocked about: he is a nice little horse to look at and his record is such that it will be very difficult for the hardworking tipster to go past him if he reaches the post in galloping trim. Undoubtedly Mr. Apcar's new one and Steinhager are the pick of the new arrivals at this stage of the proceedings.

Of the horses known on Indian courses Lamrock has little claim to consideration in this company, and Cherson is said to have broken down lamentably at Poona. Signorina's record is so brilliant that no one could be surprised to see her run well in the big race, but her programme is a heavy one, and she will probably be better employed in the shorter races when not occupied in running rings round her fellow "ponies." Contest has hitherto been a disappointing performer, even over his own distance, a mile, and must have improved out of knowledge to attract backers in this race.

Amplify, Mr. J. D. Scott's beautiful English mare, was laid up all last season and her best form has always been over a mile or thereabouts and is another whose name looks better among the entries for the Trials. Saloon, of the same stable, is another miler, and this little country-bred may be expected to do great things this season over that distance.

Sacristan II did wonders last season and looks none the worse for all his hard work. He is yet another member of the sprinting section of the entrants and has still to show cup form. This brings to an end the series of sixteen new-comers and the two last, and at the moment the best, are Munderah and Long Tom.

The former ran a good third to Long Tom and Great Scot in last year's Cup and appeared to be an improving horse, but immediately retired to the fastnesses of Mysore, whence he has recently emerged, to create an excellent impression on the critics frequenting the Bangalore race-course. He has already been backed by numbers of enthusiasts and is somewhere near the head of the present list of quotations. Long Tom is reported a "lame 'un," but the big gelding has a way of hobbling round the track in his slow work which is quite remarkable enough to give rise to a bagful of such rumours. Last year he went to the post without having been asked to give that final gallop against the clock which knocks out so many good horses on the Calcutta track. It is greatly in his favour that he is still in Ferguson's careful hands, but it would not be surprising to see his best gallop put in early one morning "when no one is thinking of any such thing," rather than when the colours are up in the big fight.

There are two notable absentees from the list, Boabdil and Kipling. The reports as to the former's indisposition are very persistent and hard to discredit. The fame of Kipling has been noised vigorously for weeks past, and it is highly probable that he will re-appear in the later entries.

In the International Pony Plate Signorina stands out very significantly, but there are some very smart ponies among the remaining eleven entries. Mr. Galstaun's big English gelding Silphoe, who won with such ease in the Monsoons, is amongst the number and also Mr. Myers' Meg, of whom so much was thought at the beginning of last season. Miss Hopson, another break down, does not appear, but is in steady training and may be heard of later on. In England she was a most notable flier.

The Tollygunge entries are good to look upon at present, but many of the eighteen Grand National entries may be reserved for their engagements on the flat, such as Lamrock, Kipling, and Spero. Some of Mr. Hart's quartette may change hands before the jump meetings and so increase the competition. Decoration is the star of the whole party, but Pennant is also a real good performer. Olynthus, perhaps the next best to Decoration according to the book. He will be in good hands, and is to be ridden by Mr. Pugh, who knows the quickest way over the Tollygunge course as well as anybody. Greenstone was expected to do great things last year and Mr. Locke's pair cannot be entirely di-regarded. Hitherto Look Out has been a fixture at Lucknow, owing to his rooted antipathy to railway boxes. The truth is that they are not made big enough to suit this long-necked son of Gozo. The pony chases are not very promising, but now that the military events are done with, there may be room for more of the local hunter class events; appearances point to the probability of obtaining plenty of takers for handicap races in both horse and pony classes.

We thank our old friends Messrs G. F. Kellner and Company for a copy of their latest catalogue and price list. The cover is a novelty and the design artistic and striking, the contents whet the appetite and stimulate what dear old Fred Maccabe in one of his inimitable sketches used to call the "drinkitite." One notes, on turning over the pages, that all the firm's specialities are to the fore, at intervals are to be found novelties, and most satisfactory it is to find that the very special efforts made by the firm for nearly two years have resulted in a large increase in the list of proprietary wines, provisions, particularly the latter. Anything labelled "Kellners" is good enough for most of us for it is a guarantee of high quality and purity. This departure is all the more comforting when one recollects the Chicago horrors that made the majority of people adopt "gang warily" for their motto whenever tinned stores loomed before them. We congratulate Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Company on the evidence their catalogue gives of not only the desire but the ability to keep well abreast of the times in the business which has made their name famous throughout this vast peninsula.

Subject to confirmation by the Calcutta Turf Club, the dates of the Lucknow Spring Meeting have been fixed for the 2nd, 4th and 6th February next. The Stewards this year have adopted the principle of consulting owners and trainers in framing the programme for the meeting. By taking this step they will have the benefit of the views of those most closely concerned and will be able to retain features which are sound and which meet with general approval and to eliminate those which experience has shown to be unpopular.

The events comprising the programme of the Lucknow Autumn Meeting to be held on the 20th, 22nd and 24th instant, have filled well, and there is every prospect of excellent racing during the week. Bookmakers should be fully represented, as a very large number of applications have been received. The Stewards laid down a rule that there were to be eight entries in flat races and six in steeplechases and these conditions have been complied with, except in the case of the Chutter Munzil Plate. There were thirty entries for the Army Cup, of which some five or six have since been scratched. All the horses engaged in the meeting have arrived and are in full training. It is not generally known that Lucknow is very popular with owners on account of its climate and the excellence of the grass and water. Owners bring their animals here to recruit after they have been completely exhausted with hard work and bad food at the bigger training centres, and the majority of owners prefer to train for a small stake in Lucknow than for a large one in Calcutta or Poona.

The race-course is one of the finest in India, and the only drawback from the standpoint of the racing public is the grand stand, which requires to be replaced by a new one built on scientific lines. The stand instead of being at an angle of 35 degrees is parallel to the course, a fact which prevents a great number of people from witnessing the races. It is awkwardly made, and the steep slope which leads up to it is most inconvenient for ladies. This in itself is sufficient reason for a new stand, but when it is added that the accommodation is altogether inadequate during the big meetings, the case for a new grand stand has been made out.

The advent of the new Lieutenant-Governor is expected to give a great impetus to racing. Mr. Hewett is an old Steward of the Calcutta Turf Club, and will no doubt take a practical interest in racing here. The prominent position which Lucknow racing holds at present is mainly due to the efforts of Major-General Sir E. Locke Elliot, the Senior Steward, who has done all he possibly could to further Turf interests.

First and second entries for the Rawalpindi December Meeting appear in our paper to-day: final entries close on the 29th instant.

A full report of the Umballa Horse Show is published by us to-day. It is long since this station held a show; but if the recent effort is to be taken as an earnest of what may follow, we should say the show has every chance of becoming a popular annual fixture. It was distinctly well run and the quality of the exhibits was high.

At a general meeting of the Lahore Hunt held at the Gymkhana, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Reid presiding, the following officers were elected for the ensuing season:—Master, Mr. C. P. Marten; Deputy Master, Mr. F. R. Teesdale; Honorary Secretary, Mr. S. M. Robinson; Committee, Major Sullivan, Captain A. Smith, Mr. C. Bevan Petman and Mr. A. L. Danson. The monthly subscription for a Native Infantry regiment was fixed at Rs. 50.

The following rule was added to the rules of the Hunt:—

"The Committee are empowered to charge residents of Lahore civil station and cantonment, who are not members of the Hunt, and visitors, a cap of Rs. 5 for each meet attended. Provided that visitors coming in for Christmas week may be charged a cap of Rs. 10 for the week."

The Lahore Hunt season opened auspiciously on the 4th instant. To the remnants of last season's pack have been added seven couple of hounds imported from England and these latter on their first public appearance behaved uncommonly well—indeed prospects of good sport this season seem fairly well assured. The programme, as at present arranged, promises us two days a week with an extra day during Xmas. The opening meet was at the Kennels when the Master was met by a field of over thirty, among whom one was glad to see several fair horsewomen. On the other side of the canal, after a look through the bajra crops, a grove was drawn and after a long wait the jack was started and headed for Ferozepore: but he was lost at the railway line after a short run. A bajra field was tried on the way home, a jack was found and eventually killed near the Ferozepore road. All in the hunt were pleased and the working of the hounds was generally admired.

Dr. J. H. B. Martin, of horse-dentistry renown, who has just returned to Calcutta from an extended tour in the N.-W. P., can always be found at Messrs. Milton and Co.'s stables.

Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Scott on the arrival of a son and heir on the 7th instant.

In a recent issue we published some details regarding Messrs. Westley Richards' "New Wind-Gauge Sight Slide." Since then we are in receipt of blocks illustrating the patent and, as the invention is, we take it, of considerable interest to many of our readers, we reproduce the article this time with illustrations, which give a complete idea of the slide and its working.

With the starting of the Calcutta Kennel Club interest in canine matters in this Presidency has been aroused. In conversation with some dog owners the other day it struck us that the average man's knowledge of kennel technicalities is a bit shaky; we therefore give farther on a chapter on technical terms, which we think will be read with interest and perhaps profit by some. It was compiled years ago by "John Brown" one of the founders of the N. I. K. A., but will bear reproduction we think.

We publish in this issue, following our usual custom, the complete performances of half the horses engaged in the Viceroy's Cup: the rest we shall give next week.

Colonel G. H. Bull, I. M. S., the well-known Western India sportsman, was handling a dog the other day and got bitten. The dog having developed hydrophobia the Colonel is now undergoing treatment at the Pasteur Institute, Kasauli.

We much regret that in last issue, owing to a stupid bungle a block illustrating a Mauser-Rigby rifle found a place in the article relating to Messrs. Joseph Lang and Son's "Low Pressure H. V. Expresses." We will not trouble our readers with an explanation as to how this occurred, such things do happen now and then in spite of all ordinary precautions; but we will try and find some slight consolation in the reflection that after all the presence of the woodcut does not in any way affect the sense of the letterpress. Our apologies are also due to Messrs. Lang and Rigby and are tendered herewith.

The old firm of Champion and Company are coming out to Calcutta in the Macedonia and will be found in their accustomed "Caboose." at the First Extra.

His Excellency the Viceroy and party had a fine duck-shoot near Srinagar on the 8th instant. The bag was a record—1,400 for a dozen guns the Hokarsar jhil alone producing 828. Lord Francis Scott, A.-D.-C., got 163 to his own gun and the Viceroy was a good second.

Messrs. P. Orr and Sons, of Madras, Rangoon and Colombo, have kindly sent us a copy of their latest catalogue. Everything that is rich and rare, useful and ornamental in silver, gold and precious stones seems to be depicted and priced therein. The sportsman has by no means been forgotten; he will find his requirements catered for and his tastes carefully considered on many a page of this excellently turned out book.

On account of the high price of diamonds, coloured gems, such as pink and green tourmalines, peridots, amethysts, etc., are now greatly used by jewellers in making up brooches, necklets and ornaments of different kinds. These gems, when judiciously blended with other coloured stones or pearls, make very pretty and effective ornaments, and have lately become very fashionable. Amethysts especially are great favourites, and the effect produced with these gems in combination with others is extremely pretty. We notice several patterns of the now fashionable drop earrings, hair slides, brooches and necklets made up with these pretty stones. Messss. P. Orr and Sons' catalogue contains an immense selection of other kinds of ornaments ranging in price from a few rupees to thousands. There are special sections devoted to watches and clocks, silver fancy goods, such as toilet requisites, mirrors, cigar boxes and cases, and a host of other pretty articles suitable for Xmas, New Year, and Birthday presents. The Electro-plate and Table Silver Section contains a very fine assortment of useful articles and should be a great help to people wishing to select wedding presents.

We would draw the attention of Secretaries of race and gymkhana meetings to the splendid assortment of silver cups and bowls, illustrations of which are printed from very fine half-tone blocks. Copies of this catalogue are sent absolutely free of all charges to all parts of India, but as the designs are entirely European, it is not intended for and would be quite useless to native gentlemen.

Some account of the doings of Rangoon paper-chasers may interest Calcutta readers; they will find it further on.

Delhi sportsmen have, one notes with pleasure, combined to promote their common interests. A gymkhana club has been started and fortnightly gymkhanas are being arranged. It is also on the cards that the old sporting glories of the ancient capital will be revived and that the Delhi Race Meeting will arise Rip Van Winkle like after its many years' sleep.

The publisher's better-half has a horror of telegrams, and when an orange-coloured missive was placed in her hands the other day she looked ready to faint. After examining the envelope carefully, she opened it.

"Sprained ankle; have gone to hospital," she read.

"Thank goodness it's no worse," commented the good lady.

"I was afraid he was goingto bring someone home to dinner."

Athletic Notes.

THE Rangoon Boat Club annual regatta is fixed for the 15th proximo and from all accounts there are to be gay doings on the Lake. There will probably be four crews in for the Challenge Fours—Military, Government, Mounted Volunteers, and Bulloch's. The Volunteers are to be stroked by H. R. Pilcher, erstwhile a jolly young waterman on the Kidderpore Canal what time the Calcutta Rowing Club was considerably more alive than it can be at the moment; number three is a Clare College man and a hefty withal; bow and two are useful, so that we expect to find this crew thereabouts at the finish. Bulloch's crew are very strong, and, as they have been rowing together for something like four years, Wet bob they will assuredly render a just account of themselves with a grand challenge man and an old Etonian "wet bob" in the boat. Singapore is sending up a team of cricketers and may possibly be able to manage a four for the Challenge Cup. Altogether Rangoon has made up its mind to have a good time next month.

An athletic innovation was carried out at Poona on Saturday, the 10th instant, when a five miles cross country race open to teams from British Regiments was successfully engineered. The prizes were Rs. 200, and Rs. 50 and the course was stiff enough to try to its utmost the stamina and speed of the runners. Lance-Corporal J. Wright, of the 93rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, did the fastest time and his team won, the Connaught Rangers' "A" team coming in a good second; their "B" team was third, the Royal Scots fourth and the East Lancashires last. Lance-Corporal Wright is a grand performer and is well known on most Indian running tracks, including Calcutta, where for some years he has figured brilliantly.

A deplorable, and we grieve to say a fatal, accident attended this competition. Lieutenant J. Fraser Grahame, of the East Lancashire Regiment, was following his men on horse back, his horse came down at a water jump, Mr. Grahame was picked up unconscious and died two hours later in hospital.

The M.C.C. cricket team has started from New Zealand, and, as a purely amateur combination, ought to be assured of a very good time and plenty of good sport all round: but the side cannot be regarded as a very strong one, and we should honestly not be greatly surprised if it comes to considerable grief in the three representative matches against Combined New Zealand, though the latter's form in past years has not been anything very remarkable. The English team is composed as follows:—Captain E. G. Wynyard (Hampshire), Messrs. C. E. de Trafford (Leicestershire), P. R. Johnson (Somersetshire), G. H. Simpson Hayward and W. B. Burns (Worcestershire), J. W. H. T. Douglas (Essex), G. T Branston (Oxford University and Notts), W. J. H. Carwen (Oxford University), P R May (Cambridge University and Surrey), C. C. Page (Cambridge University and Middlesex), W. P. Harrison, junior (Middlesex), R. H. Fox (M.C.C.), A. A. Torrens (Harrow) and N. C. Tufnell (Eton). Fox, if we mistake not, kept wicket for Oxford University some years ago, and Tufnell, the young Etonian, who did well at Lord's last year against Harrow, will presumably be his understudy. It will be interesting to see if Simpson Hayward's lobs are anything like as successful "down under" as they were throughout India, when he was touring out here with the Authentics in 1902-03.

Mr. R. H. Spooner, the famous Lancashire and All-England batsman, has been recently in Ceylon, and has been interviewed by the Times of Ceylon on the subject of the past first-class cricket season, without, however, his finding anything specially new to say about it apparently, though it is good to read the praise which he bestows on the Lancashire wicket-keeper, Mr. W. Findlay, who is undoubtedly one of the best. Mr. Spooner is expected to prolong his tour throughout India and Burmah and we hope sincerely that when he comes to Calcutta he will find time for one or two game, of cricket in the Eden Gardens, and that Calcutta cricket lovers may have an example of run-makings as they should be made, by perhaps the most brilliant exponent of that art now playing.

THE "Springboks" tackled Oxford on Wednesday, the 7th instant, and beat them by twenty-four points to three.

We congratulate Messrs. Murray and Co., Ld., of Lucknow, on the 104th edition of their catalogue and thank them for the copy they have sent us. It is one of the most "general" lists issued in this country, for in it one finds almost everything connected with the household—provisions, wines, sporting, stable and athletic gear, furniture and fittings, travellers' requisites—in short, something, and practically everything, one can want to temper the bitterness of life in the East in these degenerate days.

What has long since become a household word in Calcutta, the Columbia Rink, has once again raised its mammoth head in our midst. This year on a fresh site, the location of which will, later on, enable it to form not one of the least attractive features of Lady Minto's fête. Last Friday night, on the occasion of the opening of the Rink for this season, there could not have been fewer than over a thousand—performers and spectators—present, so that there can be no doubt that this, one of our most fascinating cold weather recreations is going to be as popular as it ever has been under the able management of its energetic and genial proprietor, whom the Calcutta public is glad to welcome back once more, so successfully does he cater for its amusement. The floor is all that can be desired, and there are literally thousands of pairs of skates to select from, for purchase, or on hire; while the usual "sessions" have been arranged, so that novices and the "kiddies" may disport themselves with the minimum of danger and inconvenience to past masters in the art. Taken as a recreation, roller skating is certainly one par excellence, answering as it does all the requirements of the word—it is healthful, entertaining and invigorating. To those to whom the burden of the flesh has not yet become a weariness, we say "Try roller skating and you will grow plump;" while to those less fortunate ones, whose physical condition resembles that of Hamlet, "fat and scant of breath," we would say "Skate and you will grow slender!"

London Week by Week.

Friday, 26th October 1906.

THE attitude of the Press towards the Admiralty scheme for the redistribution of the Fleet varies from enthusiasm through phases of guarded approval to frank suspicion. The mere man in the street cannot succeed in reading into the detailed announcement which appeared on Tuesday anything but strategic motives: there does not seem to be any provision in it for what the present Government calls economy; and yet—why was the date of Parliament's reassemblage selected for the publication of this document if it has "no political significance"? On the face of it, the new "Home Fleet" scheme would appear to require more men than are now employed; since various ships now in the reserve are to receive full crews, while others are to be given nucleus crews to keep engines and guns, etc., in order. I suppose we shall know what the new move really means before long.

The Channel Tunnel scheme is being revived. It has been worked out in Paris and awaits the sanction of the British Parliament, which I hope it will not get. According to the plan laid before the City of London International and Commercial Association it would be 34 miles long following several curves to keep in the chalk strata: the average depth below the sea bed would be about 200 feet and the French end would join the Northern railway between Boulogne and Calais. The general plan is that of the tube: two lines each in its own tunnel and electric traction.

The Times Book Club battle with the Publishers rages mightily. On Saturday I received a circular letter asking me not to apply at the Book Club for works published by five firms, Macmillans, Alston Rivers, Geo. Bell, Constable and E. Arnold; nor for "net books" issued by Smith Elder. With the circular was a pamphlet setting out the Times' grievance which, in a word, is that it, through its book club, wishes to sell books secondhand, as soon as and at any price it pleases, and the publishers object on the ground that the sale of books nominally secondhand but really good as new interferes unfairly with their trade. I don't suppose the rights and wrongs of the case would interest you: truth to tell, though interested not a little in books myself I find it hard to place my sympathies. I have been "done" by one publisher and have had hard work to get my money out of others, so bear the faternity no very good will. On the other hand, I cannot help eyeing askance the endeavour of the Times to obtain control of the book trade by American methods. It seems to me the exchange of King Log for King Stork.

The features of the week's fight have been a lucid and well reasoned letter from Mr. Rudyard Kipling which was submitted to the Manager of the Book Club before publication that his reply might appear in the same issue: and a long letter from Mr. Bernard Shaw. Mr. Kipling's defence of publishers' methods is necessarily tinged with personal feeling; it is common knowledge that the Times had a dispute with Macmillans about the price of "Puck of Pook's Hill;" and when the publishers refused to give the Times the terms it wanted, the Times reduced its order for 5,000 copies to 2,000: a proceeding which naturally struck direct at the author's royalties. Meantime I want to read Sir Frank Swettenham's remarkable book on Malaya, which has been issued by one of the recalcitrant publishers. I am afraid I must beg the Times to put its principles in its pocket for the nonce and carry out its promise to get me any book I want.

The women who are endeavouring to obtain the franchise by proving their unfitness to be at large, have been much in evidence this week. Those of them who have not already been excluded from the precincts for their share in the gallery uproar, assembled in the Central Hall on Tuesday and got up a row at short notice. The programme, which had evidently been rehearsed, was for one woman to scream "Votes for Women!" and so forth, from a chair, while another reformer waved a red banner, the rank-and-file closing round them to shriek in chorus and, as long as might be, keep off the police. After such a scene as might be expected the police dragged and carried the women out of doors: they were taken to Westminster Police Court after another attempt to hold a "meeting" in the street. Their idea of a meeting is to climb railings and shriek: this produces the natural result of a crowd and there is the "meeting."

Mr. Horace Smith was unsympathetic. He refused to let any of the ten reformers air her views and would not even make martyrs of them preferring the mean alternative of ordering each to find security in £5 to keep the peace for six months. This method of dealing with the business gave great offence—there is not even a decent advertisement in being bound over and the ten apostles screamed with one voice: the envitable red banner was produced from somewhere and waved from the dock to an accompaniment of shrieks. The police gently but firmly bundled them out and for the moment the Reform movement was over. Once outside the court-room some genius discovered the back door to the coveted martyrdom. If they refused to find security as ordered the magistrate must lock them up. This move was adopted with acclamation (shrieks): and the eager martyrs faced about, anxious for the dock again. The meanness of Mr. Horace Smith was not exhausted: he had the ten brought in one by one, and isolation had a curiously sobering effect on the majority. Each reformer was urged to accept the very mild precautionary penalty laid on her: and each heroically refused. Wherefore was each allotted two months in default to—I presume—her satisfaction. The majority of these misguided females are factory hands and the like: one is sorry to see people like Mrs. Cobden Saunderson in that gallery.

The Lord Mayor elect, Sir W. Treloar, whose name we outside people connect with carpets, was presented to the Lord Chancellor on Tuesday at the House of Lords with the usual ceremonies, the sheriffs, Aldermen and all civic dignitaries in chains and fur being in attendance. Sir William Treloar well deserves the distinction he is to enjoy: it was he who brought about the widening of Ludgate Hill and secured the opening of the Guildhall loan collection of pictures on Sunday: but of recent years he has been identified with what is called the Cripple's Christmas Hamper movement, a very kindly charity which has been well supported. The Lord Chancellor having expressed the King's approval, the assembled magnates had a drink. In ceremonial language "the Loving Cup was passed round" and the business was at an end.

Mr. St. John Hankin's "Dramatic Sequels" in Punch were in my mind when I went to the Court Matinée on Tuesday: and I suppose expectation was pitched too high. At any rate "The Charity that Began at Home" disappointed me: there is too much talk, too little incident, and a curious lack of backbone: the piece "mizzles" out like any musical comedy. charity is to fill her home with guests who for various reasons nobody else will have within their doors. There is General Bonser, the most unutterable of bores: Mr. Firket, a sort of fourth rate commission agent "picked up" by Lady Denison in an underground railway carriage, where he had tried to induce her to order something at 30 per cent. discount—he misspends his life trying to sell things at 30 per cent. discount to people who don't want them: there is Hugh Verreker, who left the army under a cloud: and Miss Triggs, the sensitive, tearful, depressing nuisance of an unsuccessful governess. A more intolerable lot of people—bar Verreker—charity never got together. Lady Denison engages her servants on similar principles and a nice lot they are: we could have spared the unsavoury intrigue of the butler and the lady's maid. The talk of the people makes the play: the rivalry of Basil Hylton, founder of the Church of Humanity, and Verreker for the hand of Margery Denison is all the plot. Hylton is a sententious humbug and I was not surprised that Margery preferred Verreker for all his peculation of men's funds. Verreker is cheerful and amusing, if unprincipled: and when in his native candour he disclosed to his fellow guests Lady Denison's motive for inviting them (!) and they all left in a huff, one felt he had done something worthy of our regard.

The play cannot be called a success. Had it stopped at the end of Act III where Margery accepts Verreker, one would have written it down as bright and amusing if "thin" in plot: but Act IV, which serves no purpose, is a mistake and the piece would gain by its total excision. Mr. Dennis Eadie was capital as the insufferable old bore, and Mr. Edmund Gwenn was the pushing, hide-bound commission agent to the life. Miss Agnes Thomas as the governess was very excellent and of Miss May Martyn's Margery I can only say she was much too good for her (stage) company. The minor parts were particularly well played.

* * * * * *

Mr. Rudolf Besier's "The Virgin Goddess" was given at the Adelphi on Tuesday. It is a three-act play compounded of Greek tragedy and Shakespearian tragedy: but it is vigorous, full of action and interesting; and if the blank verse in which it is written is sometimes a little too blank, why the managerial blue pencils or abhorred shears can surely do all that is needful in this respect. The scene of all three acts is laid in the court-yard of the Temple of Artemis, in Artis. King Cresphontes is a monarch whose character smacks strongly of noncomformist radicalism: his weak rule has provoked rebellion of tributary states and when the enemy is at the gates of Artis and the Artesians (?) demand to be led forth, Cresphontes declines to lead; has a previous engagement of a ceremonial character in the Temple. His Queen Althia forthwith sends massengers for Hœphestion, the King's brother, whom Cresphontes had banished in a spasm of jealousy for which there was sound reason. Queen Althia loves Hœphestion and he, her. Hœphestion comes with such celerity that I was forced to conclude he has not obeyed the sentence of banishment but was hiding somewhere round the corner. Althia bids him slay the King, who has meantime yielded all the money demands, and lead the Arteseans against the foe. He does so. Then a priestess comes to warn Hœphestion that no success can attend a leader who slew for the sake of a guilty love. Althia herself admits her motive in urging the slaughter of the King, and eventually recognising that the only way to save Artis is to submit to death herself she hails Hœphestion into the Temple and there falls by his hand. No sooner has he killed her than the enemy stricken by the gods takes flight without waiting for Hœphestion's attack.

* * * * * *

Mr. Oscar Ashe played Hœphestion and did it admirably, the part being one that suits him to perfection. His was distinctly a powerful performance. Miss Lily Brayton was excellent as the Queen and made her as acceptable as was possible. I did not refer to Cleito in my sketch of the play: she is the King's mother: of course she is the stimulating power in procuring Althea's death, but she has very little to do. What she had to do Miss Geneviève Ward did with dignity and point. Mr. Alfred Brydone was as weak and vacillating a King as could be wished

The suspension of Messrs. P. Macfadyen and Company, bankers and merchants, London, Agents of Messrs. Arbuthnot saying they could not remit and must stop payment on Monday. On receipt of this message it would seem Mr. Macfadyen went to Old Street station on the City and South London Electric Railway, walked into the tunnel and met his death under the approaching train. Nothing is yet known of the assets and liabilities of the firm.

The Royal Commission on the Metropolitan Police continues to plough its way through an increasing mass of evidence brought to show that constables are addicted to ill-usage of prisoners against whom they may bear a grudge. Without attributing to the police the tongue and temper of angels when their human sensibilities are aroused by the misapplication of hob-nailed boots, it must be confessed that many of the witnesses who have come forward to give testimony are the reverse of credible: one man who did so on Wednesday had to acknowledge eight convictions, during the last fourteen years, for thefts and burglary under different aliases. Not on such evidence—though admittedly expert—is public confidence in Bobby likely to be shaken. As regards the constable's attitude towards that dangerous criminal, the street bookmaker, the case seems to be different. More sensational stories of systematic bribery and organised arrangement between police and "bookie" have been made public.

A curious application granted in chambers by Mr. Justice Bargrave Dean last week was before him again on Wednesday. At the instance of Mr. Charles O'Heir's or Hare's mother an injunction was granted restraining him from marriage with a Miss Ethel Darlington on the ground that the young man is insane and that a petition in lunacy was about to be filed in respect of him. Mr. O'Heir or Hare possesses large property and Miss Darlington is penniless; moreover, her counsel said "she had left her family and was anxious to get married." The Judge refused to set aside the injunction pending the hearing of the lunacy petition: a proceeding which appears to me consonant with common sense. One can't help suspecting that there is a something a bit fishy about that young woman's anxiety to get married under the peculiar circumstances.

ANOTHER COOKERY BOOK.*

"SHALOT," whom one may reasonably suppose to be a person as well acquainted with his Shakespeare, as with the gentle culinary art—so aptly and merrily does he intersperse his little addition to household literature with quotations from the all-knowing bard—has earned the gratitude of every memsahib by the publication of a little volume entitled "Things for the Cook" (the very title of which, by the way, may be found in "Romeo and Juliet") in two parts, one in English, the other in Hindustani. The memsahib, therefore, ever fruitful in excuses for her own shortcomings in dealings with the bawarchi, cannot now complain that she "can't make the cook understand," for after purchasing a copy of "Things for the Cook, she just hands Sharabi Bux Part II. in Hindustani, and refers him, for instance, to page 89, where in her own Part I, she finds a concisely worded recipe for Baba au Rhum. This bawarchi reads, marks, and learns, while "The Brute" at tiffin that day inwardly digests, remarking, "Devilish nice pudding that! the cook must be improving."

In "Shalot's" introductory note there is expressed much wisdom, and we quite agree with him when he says "perfectly plain cookery is suitable only for England, where plain food is of the best; but in India, where meat is poverty-stricken and vegetables are tasteless, spices and flavouring are a necessity. If good cookery is required in India, the housekeeper must not grudge the essentials—cream, butter or oil, bacon and ham, lemons, herbs, Dutch cheese, wines and liqueurs. Garlic and onions are of course indispensable." "Do not beat up the yolk of an egg in milk and call it cream; do not substitute tongue and call it ham." In his preface he is equally sagacious when he remarks that "out of the heart truly, as King Solomon said, are the issues of life; but the heart, however noble, is served by the stomach; and how, if the stomach be not well treated by the cook?" While if the housekeeper "prudent" or "perplexed," would only take to heart the advice that she dart not scornful glances upon Nabi Bukhsh's khab, but treat the varlet kindly, using him after her own honour and dignity, remembering that should every man receive his desert, who should 'scape whipping! Remembering also that the health and happiness of herself and of those most dear to her are somewhat in his hands, there might be fewer opportunities of ructions below stairs, less chances of indigestion above!

The volume has no pretensions to the place of a Mrs. Beeton or a Brillat Savarin in the domestic affections, but it is full of nice recipes, all sound and thoroughly practical, and makes the weary housekeeper pine for an intelligent native cook who will set them before us, as they are given, innocent of his own variations.

GUNS, GUNNERS AND GUNNING.*

THERE are many sportsmen, who, though in possession of one or more shot guns, are supremely ignorant of the various processes and tests through which the weapon has passed before it is fit for sale. We regret to say that there is seemingly a large class of gunners who are also equally unconscious of the etiquette and deportment required in the field including the malicious habit of unnecessarily exposing the lives of others to danger. Frequently such lessons are learned too late, to prevent an accident, perhaps fatal, and the sportsman will retain to the end of his days the regret that he had not been given a helping hand by some kind friend, or (for the latter is not always forthcoming) acquired the rigid rules of shooting through the medium of some sound book. The author of "A Dissertation upon guns and shooting" in placing his work before the sporting public has two main objects in view, viz., the supreme importance of a thorough knowledge of the principles of the art of shooting, and best means of acquiring proficiency, and secondly, the correct conduct in general of a gunner when he is among the birds. We consider that both these purposes have been attained in a manner that will pleasantly instruct the reader without boring him, and keep him interested in the volume from cover to cover.

The book is divided into two portions. Part I is a treatise on "guns and ammunition," and Part II is devoted to "shooting." The writer commences by explaining the evolution of the gun from the rough to the finished article, a special chapter being devoted to the art of barrel-making. The various types of guns are discussed, including the single-trigger mechanism, and the serious difficulties encountered by the original inventors in its perfection. The views expressed on the choice and purchase of a shot gun are undeniably rational—a new medium-graded weapon, which should, of course, be fitted, is infinitely preferable, at any price, to a second hand highest-class firearm. The problem of suitable charges, both of powder and shot, and the size of the latter is treated at some length, and the advice offered regarding constant changes in the propellant is well worthy of being strictly borne in mind. The great importance that wadding bears to the shooting of a gun is clearly expressed, and some curious experiments in this connection are mentioned. We are thankful to say that we have not yet had the misfortune to rub shoulders with the crank, who uses cork dust, linseed meal and canary seed, in place of the Field system of wadding. Yet apparently he has been known in the shooting world, and perhaps still exists. The question of caps is one that receives its full amount of attention, and a most interesting plate representing the vagaries of the flashes of various cap explosions is produced. Patterns and Penetration, and the subject of recoil are also expounded. The process of gun fitting is fully exemplified and the chapter allotted to it is the result of special research and experience in this line and is therefore worthy of a careful study. The Master Eye is amply explained, and the plates relating to this matter are particularly clear.

We will now pass on to Part II.

The query that has been put so often before, viz., "How can I learn to shoot straight? is aptly and alliteratively answered in five words: viz., Perseverance, Patience, Practice Perfect, Paraphernalia. To those who have visited one of the first-class Shooting Schools that have sprung up in recent years in the suburbs of London Chapter I will tend to recall many pleasurable moments among the "clays." To the many who are content to purchase a weapon by post, and expect miraculous results, we cannot give more straightforward advice than to read this Chapter through from beginning to end and proceed at the first opportunity to one of these schools, and if the fascination of breaking the rocketter's from the High Tower does not take a firm grip on the gunner, it will shew that his heart is not in his pastime. As regards the contents of the second chapter our advice to one and all is to read, re-read and remember what is expressed therein. It was only a short time ago that we had cause to quote the lines from Punch anent carelessness with firearms:—

Never, never let your gun
Pointed be at any one;
Though it may unloaded be
Matters not the least to me.

It twixt you and neighbouring gun
Bird may fly or beast may run
Let thus maxim 'ere be thine
Follow not across the line.

Stops and beaters oft unseen
Lurk behind some leafy green;
Calm and steady always be:
Never shoot where you don't see.

The sentiments expressed are the same, they cannot be brought to notice too frequently.

Some excellent advice is offered concerning the safe and unsafe methods of carrying a shot gun in the field. We notice, however, that no mention is made of the position familiarly known in Military circles as the "Port." Of course if the muzzle be lowered when the gun is being thus carried, the lives of those on the shooter's left hand are endangered, but otherwise this pose is perfectly safe, and is frequently adopted in the East when in pursuit of snipe. When shooting the "long-bills" it is clearly impossible to carry the gun over the shoulder. If the gunner moves with the muzzle of his gun pointed well forward and at the ground, it will receive all the splashings raised at every step. In case of a stumble or a slip, which is a not an uncommon occurrence, the muzzle will either have to be raised with a jerk or else it will become embedded in the mud. On the other hand if the weapon be at the "Port," i.e., held diagonally across the chest with the muzzle pointing skywards, in the event of a stumble the right hand is ready for immediate action, and the firearm can still be kept pointing skywards. The chapter on dogs will appeal strongly to the lovers of our canine allies. Useful hints are given in relation to four-footed and two-legged enemies. The pages devoted to partridges, pheasants, grouse, ground game, wild-fowl, etc., contain much interesting information. The volume is one of great utility, and is filled with pleasant reading matter presented in an agreeable style; we can recommend it to our readers without reservation. The plates are distinctly good and the four illustrations by J. G. Millais form an attractive feature of the book.

Shikar.

A SOLITARY SNIPE.

MUCH of the glory has departed from Kangra Valley shooting during recent years. Four thousand gun licenses in a limited area have practically cleared the more accessible portion of those varieties of game whose flesh in the pot gives value for powder and shot. Fortunately for the tea planter there are a couple of birds the calculating shikari will not or cannot shoot. These are the woodcock and solitary snipe. The former, without being plentiful, is still to be found by those who know its haunts in sufficient numbers for the table. The latter—in the absence from our district of such fearful wild fowl as a solitary bison or a rogue elephant—is our solitary prize in the shooting line.

In the course of fifteen years fooling about with a gun, chiefly after 3 P.M., I have shot perhaps a couple of dozen solitary snipe, and missed as many more, for they are easier to miss than to hit. Last year I got a couple on one day out of one swamp—the only occasion when I found them in practice contradict their name. This year have bagged one, but the other—well that is the subject of my story.

I always like to have a succession of cock ripening in my larders, and yesterday having ate my way down to my last couple, I strolled out an hour and a half before sunset to replenish my stock. I have seven cock preserves, spread over an area of about twenty miles by two, which I visit in succession. It is the local custom for the woodcock in the abstract to fill up in the concrete the hunt in which you have shot the late occupant. As in a tea garden a new manager takes the place of the departing one, so in these thickets you may depend upon four or five relays of birds in a season, provided you take care to shoot it empty every ten days or a fortnight. But if you greedily rush to save up a bag for a certain distant date, you will be assuredly sold. For you will no more find five or six managers bossing it in one tea garden at the same moment than five or six cock congregated in one preserve. The bird is a non-gregarious one here, and I shrewdly suspect the cock in possession keeps all others out of it; for you seldom find more than a brace, in many spots only one, unless there is a heavy fall of snow on the mountains just behind us, when an extra couple may be driven down by stress of weather for a few days.

One of the advantages of being resident in a locality, and employing permanent labour, is that you can select your beaters and train them. I have a squad of eight boys, whose plantation pay of Rs. 3-8-0 per mensem is augmented by eight annas shooting allowance. They are as sharp and eager for sport as any English schoolboy out after partridge in September, and under much better control. They have learnt to subdue erratic impulses, and never dash forward to grab when a bird falls. And I can honestly say I have not had a single occasion to shoot any of my boys for spoiling sport, at least not intentionally.

My squad knows every cock ground as well as I do myself, and when I canter up to the scene of action I find them drawn up to attention and ready to rout out the home staying old cock that ever laid low and kept dark. Thus yesterday, when I reached my nearest and favourite khud, I found my eight youngsters as hopeful as myself of its being recocked, since my last visit ten days previously, when I hit upon an innocent stranger, who was evidently not in touch with his lodgings, for instead of sticking to the thicket where he had a decent chance of dodging me, he got out at a back door and made for a newly sprouted barley field on the hill side above, when I literally kicked him up with my foot in the open, and got him as easily as I might a hedge side dove.

The ground I had to shoot is situated in a gorge which runs down from the mountains, with a small hill river flowing through its centre. Two miles up this gorge the upper range rises sheer to an elevation of fourteen thousand feet or so, with its summit crowned with snow nine months out of the twelve. Where the river debouches into the valley, its bed broadens out to about a couple of hundred yards, hemmed in with sloping cliffs on either side, and down the sides of these cliffs and along their base, skirting the river, are swampy thickets. This is the haunt of the cock. At midday he suns himself on the cliff, towards evening he comes down to feed in the marshy land below.

There is only one way of shooting this ground, and that is to scramble along the river bed which is filled with huge rocks and slippery round boulders, whilst the body of the beaters line the cliff top and fire volleys of stones into the thickets below them and a couple at the bottom tap the lower jungle, intersected in many places with enormous black rocks, some of them as big as a suburban villa. The cock never flies far; it is fifty yards up or down the nullah at utmost. If you can get a clear shot at him he is as easy as an owl to bowl over. But if he can dodge you behind a rock, or through a clump of trees, you do not realise how easy it is to miss him till you have done so.

I was lucky yesterday, for I had not beaten half way up the ground before a cock rose up before my nose, allowing me just time to grass him comfortably before his companion broke cover and gave me an equally easy shot. Within half an hour of leaving my bungalow I had the necessary couple for my larder, and might have gone home contented. But the sun was still above the cliff, and so I signalled to my boys to continue the beat, not with any idea of getting another cock, for I felt sure there were none left, but on the offchance of bagging a stray kolsa, and to pass the time until by a reasonable exertion I could feel I had earned my ante-dinner peg.

Somehow I have always found it is when you are not very keen that something to make you keen turns up. So it was now, for just as I got to the top of the cock ground there came a cry of chaha! chaha! and looking round I saw, or thought I saw, a glimse of a solitary snipe scudding down the nullah.

Now, as a matter of mere satisfaction in local sport, I would any day sacrifice a couple of cock in the bowarchi khana for a chance at a solitary snipe in the bush. I am vain enough to adorn my shooting cap with the feathers of these two bipeds, and whilst I have 83 of the former, dating from 1st January 1897, I have only three of the latter; so when I saw this grey ghost of a thing scooting off just about the limit of range I blazed away two barrels at him, and then girded up my loins and slithered over the slippery rocks to see where he settled, if he was not off altogether.

He cut into the cliff side just about where I had begun my beat, and as the wind was blowing down the gorge, I sent my beaters round to rouse him up from below, whilst I stationed myself under the shelter of a big boulder to catch him as he came up nullah again. The solitary snipe is more cunning than the woodcock, and has six times the speed. Let him once hear the bang-bang of a gun behind him, and the shot ringing in his direction, and my experience is that he packs up his duds and goes to Australia.

Well so far as this fellow was concerned I circumvented him all right. My squad worked well away down below him before they began their beat again. But meanwhile the sun had sunk behind the late western cliff, although it was yet half an hour to sunset, and down in the river bed the light grew grey and uncertain.

The solitary snipe flies low and fleetly. He charges on his way head down like a bull; his approximation in colour to the ground he skims over is in a great measure his safeguard. He never soars into the welken like his brother, the common or paddy field snipe, and relies more upon speed than dodging for escape. Thus it happened when the shouts of my beaters gave me warning he was coming, that I failed to see him until he saw me, which was when he skimmed the boulder and was standing under and about three feet of the muzzle of my gun. I was so taken aback at his impudence that I banged off both barrels at him at a distance, which would have qualified him for a jumping frog if I had only got the focus. As it was, I did not, and to my intense disgust he whished off up nullah, and then, to my surprise, settled in the place from which he had been first flushed, noting which I determined to bring him to bag if I had to do it by moonlight.

My beaters, while preserving that respectful demeanour due to the presence of their paymaster, were yet, I felt by instinct, passing pitying remarks on my prowess. One day when my bag-boy dropped the cartridges into a river I took occasion to tell him that each shot cost me $1\frac{3}{4}$ annas and that he had spoiled a dozen. As this sum represented a day's pay for each beater, I have often thought they had more respect for the cartridge than the bird it bagged. And now I had so to speak, blazed off four beaters at a beast of a bird, which, if it was gorged to the gullet, could hardly weigh more than a chittack. This to the thrifty Hindu soul was a sad waste of money, and had I canvassed my squad they would have deplored and condemned my extravagance more than my inexpertness.

I looked at matters from a broader and less sordid view. That I should have clean missed this solitary snipe four times was bad enough; but that I should give in and go home leaving him untouched in a known spot was not to be dreamt of. I had marked him down very carefully, and taking three boys with me I proceeded to walk him up. I made carefully for the spot, too carefully this time, for he allowed us to pass and then broke down wind again from behind us. I had just time to honour him with another two gun salute and to see him unaccountably fly fifty yards and flop down on the middle of a reach of stones in the river bed, and yet without any appearance of having been wounded.

With a sullen doggedness I rammed two more cartridges into my gun and prepared to have another go at this wily impertinent brute that had escaped about 1,800 number eight shot, and then coolly squatted in the open. When I reached the stones I looked for him to rise, but he did no such thing. I walked up and down lengthways and traverse ways, making enough noise over the slippery stones to rouse the dead which I began to flatter myself he was at last. So I set my boys to search for his corpse in amongst the crevices of the round stones, whilst I stood on the largest and directed their efforts. The light was getting very bad, and for at least five minutes they searched frutlessly. Then suddenly the bird flushed up from under the very stone on which I was standing, and made straight for the eastern cliff. I threw up my gun, missed him magnificently with my right barrel, and dropped him with my left in the very centre of the thorniest thickest thicket.

Then I lit a cheroot, and assuming a bravado air of having shot him on purpose, I gave orders for the quarry to be brought to me.

One would have thought after so much trouble in slaying him, he might have come to hand without any further bother. But on the contrary the bird that had eluded about a quarter of a lakh of shot in life seemed likely to elude me altogether in death. My eight boys pierced the thicket like mungooses, honeycombing rotten thatch roof after maggots. And every moment it was getting darker and darker. It came to stimulating their endeavours with the offer of a pecuniary reward to him who should hit upon the defunct snipe. Presently there came a deputation to borrow a box of matches! I chucked over my Tandstickors, wondering whether they had ever been used before for the purpose of searching for a dead solitary snipe in the middle of a Himalayan jungle! A jubilee illumination on a small scale followed, and then came a shout of triumph and Gainda, the boss of the squad came running up with a wisp of feathers in his hand, and a peculiar look in his face.

He laid them at my feet—all that remained of the elusive grey-wing thing that had glinted away unscathed from seven shots, and succumbeed to the eighth (more out of weariness, I felt, than intention) and had hopelessly spoilt my average for the next week's shooting.

And what think you it was! My feelings can be better imagined than described when I confess in so many bold words, the brute was not solitary at all, but just a common or garden jack snipe.

At first I would not believe my eyes. I buoyed myself up with a hope that he might, nay he must, be a solitary jack: something extremely rare and worth stuffing and glass casing I made a show of examining him supercritically, and gave it as my opinion that he was a new and hitherto undiscovered species. But unfortunately for this pleasant theory I had half-a-dozen jacks hanging up in the verandah of my bungalow, and when I got home I had them in and examined my victim side by side with them under the light of my reading lamp; and then, as a last chance, I had a go at Jerdon. But it was no good. Devil a bit of difference was there between my solitary jack and the six other jacks I had shot in our nearest jheel, fourteen miles away down valley.

But what the Dickens was this isolated jack snipe doing five thousand feet or more above sea level, and in a woodcock thicket? I knew a jack had lots of cheek; but I confess I did not believe him capable of hoaxing a Christian into the belief that he was Gallinago solitaria, when Gallinago gallinula was all he could legitimately aspire to be.

Fishing.

CAPTURING TURTLE.

ONE of the most favoured spots frequented by turtle is, or used to be, the desolate island of Ascension in the South Atlantic, a barren volcanic patch belonging to Britain, and because used exclusively as a naval depôt, entered upon the books of the Admiralty as one of Her Majesty's ships. An enormous number of turtle were annually "turned" there, and preserved in a small lagoon from shipment to shipment. It was my pleasant privilege to assist at one of these turnings, and I bear a very vivid recollection of the game. Crouched low behind an immense boulder one evening about eight, we could hear a hollow reverberating murmur of the mighty surf outside, suggesting sleepily irresistible force. A dazzling wreath of snowy foam, gleaming like burnished silver, fringed the quiet stretch of glittering sand, which, gently sloping upward and landward, was bounded by gloomy bastions of black lava. Beyond that shining semi-circle of glowing white lay the sombre blue-black bosom of the quiet little bay now heaving gently as that of a sleeping child. Hither and thither threading its inscrutable depths, glided spectrally broad tracks of greenish light, vivid, yet ever brightening and fading as if of living flame. Presently there emerged from the retreating smother of spume a creeping something of no very definite shape, under the glamour of the molten moonlight, but making an odd shuffling progress inland, and becoming more recognisable as it rose. Another, and yet another, and still more arrived as the shining tracks converged shorewards. At last the dark shapes came near enough for a novice to know them for turtle. Soon the first-comers reached their limit, and began the work for which they had come. Each massive reptile, by an indescribable motion of its fore flippers, delved into the yielding grit, throwing the spoil behind it and upward withal until it was enveloped in a misty halo of shining sand. Then the whole beach was alive with the toiling Chelones and their male attendants, who shuffled about, emitting curious noises, but whether of encouragement or affection this deponent sayeth not.

Divers of them came from far—so far that none who have not witnessed the swift cleaving of their true element by these ungaily monsters would believe how the wide sweep of these eager flippers devours the fleeting leagues. In a short time many of the delving turtles had sunk below the level of the surrounding sand, while some had ceased their digging and commenced to deposit their eggs. Suddenly we rushed upon them, and for some minutes the swarming beach was apparently a scene of wild confusion. Really, the plan of attack was well ordered; and when the first scurry was over nearly all the visitors were to be seen wrong side up, waving their flippers deprecatingly. In less than half an hour the loneliness was again regnant, all the victims having been towed off through a gap in the rocks to a spacious spoilarium in the lagoon behind, there to await their transit to the goal of most good things, London town.

Another way practised most successfully by the amphibious Kanaka of Polynesia is to slip noiselessly into the water, and diving beneath the turtle, grasp the hind-flippers with crossed hands. One swift and dexterous twist places the prize on his back, in which helpless, position he is kept with ease upon the surface until the canoe arrives, and he is transferred to it. Among the coral reefs of the Friendly Islands turtle-fishing is a highly favoured form of sport, and when the reptiles are surprised among the tortuous shallow channels between the reefs or in the almost landlocked lagoons, they rarely escape. Here it is usual for the fisherman to spring upon the turtle's back and, clutching the fore edge of the shell with both hands, to hang on it until his prize is exhausted and speedily brought to the surface.

But of all the fashions of securing this much-hunted creature, that followed by the ingenious fisher-folk of the Chinese littoral bears away the palm. Most voyagers in tropical seas are acquainted with a peculiar fish, E. remora, known generally by the trivial name of the "sucker." The distinguishing characteristic of this fish is laziness. Unwilling to exert itself overmuch in the pursuit of food, it has developed an arrangement on the back of its head exactly like the corrugated sole of a tennis shoe, and as artificial in appearance as if made and fitted by the hand of man. When the sucker finds itself in the vicinity of any large floating body, such as a ship, a shark, or a piece of flotsam, whose neighbourhood seems to promise an abundance of food, it attaches itself firmly thereto by means of this curious contrivance, which permits it to eat, breathe, and perform all necessary functions while being carried about without any exertion on its part. It can attach and detach itself instantaneously, and holds so firmly that a direct backward pull cannot dislodge it without injury to the fish. The Chinese, who have successfully trained the cormorant and the otter to fish for them, have taken the remora in hand with the happiest results. Several good sized specimens having been caught, small iron rings are fitted to their tails, to which are attached long, slender, but very strong lines. Thus equipped, the fishermen set out, and when a basking turtle is seen, two or three of the suckers are slipped over board. Should they turn and stick to the bottom of the sampan, they are carefully detached by being pushed forward with the inevitable bamboo, and started on the search again. At last they attach themselves to the supine turtle. Then the fishermen haul in the lines, against which gentle suasion the hapless Chelone struggles in vain. Once on board the lugger, the useful remora is detached, and is at once ready for use again.

KASHMIR TROUT FISHERIES.

ON the 1st November the Viceroy, while moving from his camp at Dachigam to his camp at Sungam, stopped on the way and visited the trout hatcheries at Harwan. The Kashmir Durbar has for some years been experimenting with a view to introducing brown trout and rainbow trout into Kashmir waters. The idea originated owing to a liberal offer of the Duke of Bedford to provide the ova from England. For some time the experiment was carried out by Mr. Frank Mitchell privately, and the success which has eventually been obtained is practically due to his pertinacity and the enthusiasm which he has displayed in the experiment. At first the ova were hatched out in Srinagar itself, but this was found unsatisfactory and it was difficult to obtain a copious and constant supply of pure water. In 1900 the experiment was tried in one of the small canals leading out of the Harwan stream. Misfortune, however, continued to dog the footsteps of the experimentors as large quantities of débris were brought down and the whole of the hatchery enclosure was swept away.

In the winter of 1901 the Durbar, after some persuasion, agreed to make one last attempt and a final supply of brown trout was brought over from England. It was found that the rainbow trout ova could not stand the long journey by tank from the sea board.

Mr. Mitchell then, with the permission of the Durbar, constructed hatcheries and tanks just above the Harwan Reservoir. He placed them at a fine spring, as he had found that spring water was more suitable owing to its purity than river water. These trout hatched out very well, and at last the promise of a really favourable result seemed certain. Once more, however, he was doomed to misfortune. For in 1903 came the great abnormal flood and the river burst into the hatcheries and carried all away. However, by this time the trout were big enough and able to look after themselves, and the only result of the flood was to distribute them into the Harwan nullahs and Dhal Lake. Here they have continued to thrive wonderfully, and within four years of the start trout weighing 9 lbs. have been caught with the rod, and the Viceroy had the pleasure of seeing and eating a male trout weighing 12½lbs. and measuring 27 inches from nose to tail and with a girth of 18 inches.

The Trout Prospering.

The Hapwan stream and Dhal lake as well as the stream leading into the latter are now all very well stocked, and the Achabal stream has been stocked this year. What is of the greatest importance is that it is found that after three years the trout are breeding freely, and Mr. Mitchell has, with the assistance of the Durbar, constructed a very good hatchery safe from all possible floods. The hatchery is placed near two springs giving a very good supply of water, and there are tanks above for the young fish and below for the breeding fish. The Viceregal party were much interested to see these latter at their morning meal, beautiful specimens weighing 10lbs. jumping right out of the water for the food thrown to them. They were also much interested to see how they were sorted according to age and size. Mr. Mitchell has lately been home to England, visiting all the hatcheries there, and getting the benefit of all the latest ideas and experiments, and now that he has once more come back he has trained a staff of Kashmiris, who are able to carry out his instructions so that the fertilisation of ova is now carried out by artificial means with entirely satisfactory results.

The undertaking has now passed from the experimental stage, and in a few years the rivers of Kashmir will be stocked by British brown trout, and as in the short space of four years they have attained the size of 12½lbs. we may confidently hope that they will grow to a very large size, and that trout of 20lbs. will be as common as they are in New Zealand. These trout at present take the small fly spoon and phantom bait according to the season, and take best when the river is high and the snow water is coming down, when, of course, the mahseer are out of the question. It is hoped that those interested in pisciculture and also the authorities will not lose the great opportunity that the devotion of Mr. Mitchell and the public enterprise of the Kashmir Durbar has afforded them of stocking the hill streams of Upper India, such as those of Simla and Nainj Tal, with a fish that not only affords the noblest of sports but provides a food supply of the highest quality to that part of India which it is most difficult to provide with fish at present.—Pioneer.

A NEW WIND-GAUGE SIGHT SLIDE.

For the Lee-Enfield and Metford Service Pattern Leaf.

THE new wind-gauge slide submitted to us by Messrs. Westley Richards and Co., of London and Birmingham, is sanctioned by the British National Rifle Association, being designed expressly for use with the ordinary Service Lee-Enfield Tangent. Now that the principle of wind-gauge sights is accepted by the Military authorities, many patterns of moveable slides have been introduced. The one adopted by the War Office for attachment to the present sights, consists of the well-known dove-tailed slide which is pushed upon by thumb and finger in order to move it to the right or left.

Messrs. Westley Richards' Sight has many claims to recognition as a thoroughly effective wind-gauge slide. By turning the milled head the bar slide is moved across and thus fine adjustment can be readily obtained. The scale or divisions are marked on the left hand side of the slide bar, and the slide itself is formed as a pointer to indicate the amount of lateral movement that has been given.

The slide is also fitted with Westley Richards' Patent Micrometer arrangement, the wheel or head is divided into three parts, and into each of these three parts or notches a spring at the back of the slide snicks as the wheel or head is turned. The screw is cut 50 threads to the inch, and each division of the head gives 150th of an inch representing 1 inch for each 100 yards range. At every one-third turn the snick of the spring into the notch on the wheel conveys audibly and to the touch the amount of wind-gauge allowance registered without troubling the shooter to read the scale referred to.

The slide when attached to the leaf fits well and does not wear loose. There are only two main parts of simple construction. The price of each slide is 9/6d., a very reasonable figure for such a perfect wind-guage appliance. To attach this slide to the ordinary service leaf it is first necessary to remove the cap or top.

Messrs. Westley Richards and Co., have also brought to our notice a new Military Back-sight, Lee-Enfield Service Pattern, which can be readily attached by any shooter to the bed of its service pattern rifle. The slide which is made upon the wind-gauge principle before described, is connected to work with a screw fitted at the side of the tangent leaf. This screw B is for the purpose of elevating the slide in correcting elevation, and so forms a Vernier, thus rendering superfluous a separate Vernier usually carried by the shooter in order to attain fine adjustment at sight elevation. It will be seen that the sight leaf is divided on the right hand side with a Vernier scale, each division representing 150th of an inch for each 100 yards.

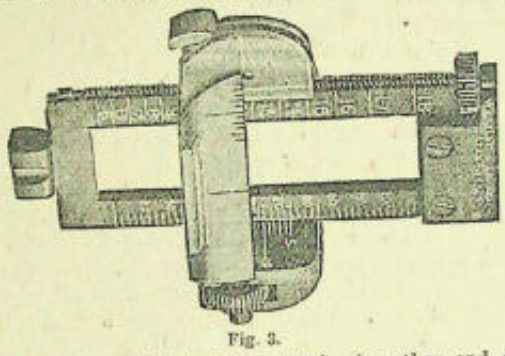

Fig. 3.

The slide is provided with a catch, the other end of this catch is screwed or threaded for engagement with the thread of the elevator screw. By pressing upon the catch this catch is released from the screw and so the slide is permitted to move up and down the tangent by hand in the ordinary way. For obtaining fine adjustment the elevating screw is turned, and by engagement with a slide catch moves the slide up or down in the same way as would be done on the ordinary sight if a separate Vernier were used.

This Vernier Elevating Sight Leaf in combination with the Wind-gauge Micrometer Slide, makes an effective form of sighting apparatus for match shooting.

Figure 3 represents the Vernier Elevating Sight and Wind-gauge Adjustment complete. The price is from 25/- to 30/- each complete ready for attachment to the Service bed

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I am glad to notice that you have so promptly taken up my suggestion regarding an all India Swimming Championship, and hope the Committee of the Calcutta Swimming Club will put the matter through successfully. The summer months would, I think, be found more suitable in every way and the events could be decided in the Calcutta baths.

I hope your sporting offer of a cup will be followed by a few more.

LEAKS IN CANOES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you give me a simple recipe for stopping a leak in a canoe? I have an old Canadian canoe that I want to make watertight if I can.

C. R. M.

[Bicycle cement is first-rate stuff for this job. Melt and rub the cement well in, have a small streak of cement over the crack or joint. For mending a hole take a piece of canvas large enough to cover the hole, with about one inch lap all round. With a hot iron or stone smear over the patch with a good coat of rubber cement, also smear round the edges of the hole; then heat the patch quite hot and press it in place. Then smear over the whole with cement, using the hot iron or stone. The cement will harden in a short time, when it will require no further looking after This is for emergencies. To fix a hole permanently it should be cut out square or oblong, with slightly bevelled edges: then neatly fit a piece of wood to the hole, smear the edges of the piece as well as the edges of the hole with rubber cement; have it quite warm, then press the piece in place.—ED.]

SHOOTING AROUND RAWAL PINDI.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In a huge station like Rawal Pindi shooters are many, and except in the case of quail shooting, one has to work hard to find game in this much-scoured district. Grey quail are collected into selected cover with the help of call birds, as I have described in another letter. Provided one has enough call birds, and it is the right season, one is certain of plenty of shooting. There is a nice jheel at Khanna, 6 miles from Pindi, and at certain times of the year one can combine snipe and quail shooting on the same day. Referring to my notes I find that a friend and self got 15 brace of quail and seven couple of snipe, one day in April at Khanna; while another day in the same month we had 10½ couple of snipe, and 1 quail. On another day I wandered along the river Karang, going up stream from Khanna, and got a curious mixed bag of 3 duck, 7 plover (2 of which were golden), 1 painted snipe 1 moorhen, 2 coots, 1 rail, 1 cabraboya, 1 turtle, and 1 Russel's viper. A truly strange mixture. The turtle's neck I cut with a rook rifle; the big lizzard I shot with No. 8 as he was swimming across the river. The shot which killed the 2 golden plover killed six snippets as well!

The blue rock which is so numerous, and held in such low esteem elsewhere, is rather rare about Pindi. I used to find small clonies in the huge ravines beyond the Ridge, and near Sohan Keep and it was very good fun stalking them with a rook rifle in the evenings, when they sit warming themselves in the rays of the setting sun on ledges in the clay cliffs. They were so wild that I seldom bagged more than two in an evening. At Hassan Abdal, midway between Rawal Pindi and Attock there are a fair number of blue rocks, which live among the cliffs along the River Chiblat. It is a good plan to take a rifle when fishing this stream, as pretty shots are constantly offering themselves. In the winter Hassan Abdal is quite a good place for duck: there are also a few very wild chink still left among the hills.

One of my favourite Pindi shooting grounds was the table land above the Sohan near Murgha One day there I got a quail, two brace of seesee partridges and a hare. Hares and partridges are, however, scarce: there are a few of the latter in the rough ground between the Leh and Karang rivers, near where these tributaries join the Sohan. The Rawal Pindi Park, in which all shooting is forbidden, acts as a sanctuary, and there are several coveys of seesee there.

The persevering sportsman who will take the trouble to explore the Sohan and Karang rivers, will come across duck and teal: and as Seesee come down to drink in the evenings the river bank is a likely find for these birds. The walking will, however, be very hard, and shots few: but who minds that if he is keen? At Khanna we used to combine quail shooting with mahseer fishing. The call birds were put out the night before, and we used to drive out taking 100 cartridges each. Our idea was that 100 cartridges were quite as many as any man could wish to fire away at quail in one morning. Our cartridges having all gone, we used to walk two miles down the Karang, to where there were some good pools, and fish. If the water was thick we used floats and atta. If the river was clear we fished with fly spoon. The Karang was an uncertain stream: but one day we had 59 brace of quail between two of us, and one of our mahseer was 4¼ lbs.

Reduced rates from the Bengal Coal fields served by the Bengal-Nagpur Railway have already been introduced in local booking over the Bengal-Nagpur Railway.

Rate tables for intermediate distances will be supplied on application to the Coal Manager, East Indian Railway, Calcutta, or to the Superintendent of Goods, Bengal-Nagpur Railway, Garden Reach.

The special rates per ton already quoted to Bombay, Dadar and Kurla will remain unaltered.

All charges will be based on tonnage, subject to the present minimum charge for the different types of wagon used. Fractions of a ton will be charged as follows :—

Below 2 cwt	No charge
2 cwt and below 8 cwt	charge as for ¼ ton
8 cwt and below 12 cwt	charge as for ½ ton
12 cwt and below 18 cwt	charge as for ¾ ton
18 cwt and over	charge as for 1 ton

Railway Risk rates for coal and coke will be charged at 20 per cent higher than the owner's risk rates above quoted.

The rebate on export coal and coke at owner's risk will continue.

RANGOON SECOND EXTRA MEETING.

STEWARDS.

W. N. Baines, Esq. | L. Chin Tsong, Esq.
H. P. Todd-Naylor, Esq. C.I.E. | Moung Thin, Esq.
E. Keogh Cullen, Esq.

Secretary:—Major C. F. Harrison.
Judge:—Col. C. J. Grant, V.C.
Clerk of the Course:—C. J. N. Cameron, Esq.
Clerks of the Scales:—F. Summers, Esq. & Capt. Radcliffe.
Starter:—Capt. E. C. Tatchell.
Official Time-keeper:—A. G. DuBern, Esq.

Saturday, 3rd November, 1906.

THE meeting came off this afternoon in very close, sultry weather. There were two, which for want of a better word, I shall call incidents. The first occurred in the second race, in which four ponies of the starters went the whole course and passed the judge's box. It was then discovered that it was a false start and the race was re-run, Hla Mai, who won eventually, had passed the judge's box first, hard held, in the false start race. The second occurred in the fifth race, when Josephine's jockey, who had weighed out correctly, weighed in 3lbs. over weight and the race was given to Wee Lassie as Josephine was to be disqualified. However, the Stewards came to the conclusion that no fraud was intended and gave Josephine the race eventually. Speculators on the totalizator did not do much good. They in most cases just about got their money back. The following were the events:—

First Dwarf Plate.—Rs. 199 to the winner, Rs. 50 to the second, and Rs. 25 to the third. A flat race for maiden ponies 12-2½ and under; 12-2½ to carry 8-7. W.I. About ¼ mile.

MEERUT AUTUMN MEETING 1906

STEWARDS :

COL. P. K. L. BEAVER. | MAJ. H. A. L. TAGART, D. S. O., 15th Hussars
LT.-COL. B. P. PORTAL, D. S. O., 17th (D. C. O.) Lancers. | MAJ. N. T. NICKALLS, 17th (D. C. O.) Lancers.
MAJ. S. D. BROWNE, R. H, A. | MAJ. NORLETT, ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.

Honorary Secretary :—MAJOR N. T. NICKALLS.

First Day, Saturday, 10th November 1906.

IN spite of the rather half-hearted response accorded to the executive's efforts by out station owners and some whose stables usually figure at this meeting, the races to-day were very far from lacking in interest. Fields were, it must be admitted, rather on the small side ; but the actual racing was of good class. Take for instance the finish in the Beginners' Plate, in which Mubarak Bakht, that heavily weighted C. B, beat such good class as Cosy Corner and Alice by four and seven lengths respectively. There was a very good struggle for first place in the Nauchandi Plate when Aureole, whose chances were not considered at all good, was landed a clever winner from Gambetta an odds on favourite. Details :—

PONY HURDLE HANDICAP.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third A handicap for Arab and C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under, and other ponies 14-1 and under, that have never won a steeplechase or hurdle race value Rs. 500 or over. BETTING : Evens Lady Knight, 6 to 4 agst. Singa, 3 to 1 Black Spot.
Lady Knight made the running to the distance where she fell back and let up Singa who followed by Black Spot won by a bare neck ; a length between second and third. Time—1min. 8⅗secs.

BEGINNERS' PLATE.—Value Rs. 350. Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For Arab and C.-B. ponies 14-2 and under, and other ponies 14-1 and under, that have never won a flat race value Rs. 50 or over. C.-B.'s 14-2 to carry 11st 8lbs., Arabs 14-2 to carry 10st. 8lbs., others 14-1 to carry 11st. 12lbs. W. I. ¼ mile.

Sirdar Jewan Singh's b cb g Mubarak Bakht, 11st. 2lbs. ... ... Hoyt 1
Capt. Milvain's b e m Cosy Corner, 11st. 3lbs. ... ... Hon. D. Bingham 2
Mr. Johnstone's b aus m Alice, 10st. 8lbs. Capt. Johnson 3

Also ran : Naughty Girl, 9-0.
BETTING : 6 to 4 each agst. Cosy Corner and Mubarak Bakht, 3 to 1 Alice, and 6 to 1 Naughty Girl.
Mobarak Bakht lay last till they neared the distance where he began to overhaul Naughty Girl who had shot her bolt and getting ahead after stalling off Cosy Corner's challenge sailed in a winner by four lengths ; three lengths between second and third. Time—53⅘secs.

ARAB PLATE.—(New Race).

Col. Brown's gr a h Suglavi, 7st. 13lbs. ... Southall 1

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

WHILE a change in the wind towards the North had a more seasonable tinge in it, it banished the clouds that challenged sunshine on Thursday, and gave us a much more enjoyable day. Though the prog amme was of a more even decription, the attendance showed an improvement on the first days,' many prominent patrons being again present in the club stand, and the crowds in the further rings attested to the popularity of the meeting. The going was again excellent, and with no fears of a breakdown, the various stables came out strong, and good fields were the order of the day.

Won cleverly by a neck ; a length and a half divided second and third.

That variety is charming was proved at Sandown on Saturday by the strong leaven amongst a big holiday attendance of the regular habitués of the Turf, the business side of which was present more with a view to dealings on the Chambridgeshire than attracted by the sport over sticks. What a number of horses must be trained and in training for the jumping game was also shown, as fields were too big for practical purposes, and more than half the competitors, for all the chance they had, would have been better at home getting fit for the busy season that commences the week after Manchester. However, one significant fact remains, that moderate as the quality was not one fall marred the pleasures of the afternoon's sport, which commanded a wonderfully fine attendance, and the executive, who work so hard to please their patrons, must have been satisfied, while a glorious afternoon succeeded a foggy morning, and the going was simply perfection.

NURBITON HANDICAP HURDLE RACE.—Of 200 sovs. second receives 10 sovs ; 2 miles.

Won from a tired field by six lengths ; four lengths separated second and third.

NEWMARKET.

Thanks to the excellent facilities offered by the Great Eastern Railway, Newmarket is now in the category of home meetings, and the well-patronised specials attest to the popularity of weekly tickets. The falling off on Tuesday was principally noticeable in the further enclosures, as the welcome presence of the King assured a brilliant gathering of the upper ten, which well filled the club enclosure and as usual the motor brigade was in great strength, the roads being in grand order thoughout the country, while the Heath has never given more springy going.

CRITERION STAKES—Of 30sovs. each, with 200sovs. added ; second receives 100sovs. Bretby Stakes Course. 6 furlongs.

Mr. W. Hall Walker's ch c Polar star, by Pioneer—Go On, 9st. 4lbs. ...	B. Lynham	1

Mr. W. M. G. Singer's b c Challacombe, 4yrs. 10st.	O. Madden	3

(Winner trained by G. Edwards.)

BETTING: 13 to 8 on Chuckaway, 3 to 1 agst. Crathorne, 4 to 1 Challacombe.

Won by a length and a half; a neck divided second and third.

The fact that Newmarket rejoiced in the welcome presence of the King ensured a goodly muster of society, on Wednesday most of the notabilities of the national sport being present to greet His Majesty, and as usual on these occasions, the fair sex was numerously represented. Tattersall's is always full, and the professional element, as usual, stuck to their guns, but the farther enclosures allowed more elbow room. The going was in fine order, the weather pleasantly seasonable, and racing excellent, apart from the supreme interest of the Cambridgeshire.

MOULTON STAKES.—Of 20sovs. each, with 200sovs. added, for two year olds; second receives 50sovs; Rous Course. 5 furlongs.

Mr. A. P. Cunliffe's br f Silver Heeled by Florizel II—Game Chick, 7st. 11lbs.	G. McCall	1

(Winner trained by Fallom.)

BETTING: 7 to 4 agst. Silver Heeled, 3 to 1 Galleot, 4 to 1 Earlston, 6 to 1 Slim Lad, 8 to 1 Salop filly, and 10 to 1 each the others (offered).

Won somewhat easily by a neck; three-parts of a length divided second and third. Earlston was fourth. Asian fifth, and Salop fily last. Time—1min. 1⅘sec.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE STAKES—A handicap of 25sovs. each, 10ft with 500sovs. added, and 100sovs. for the second; third saves his stake; New Cambridgeshire Course (last mile and a furlong of A.F.)

Mr. J. Barrow's b c Gallinago, by Gallirule—Vertegrez, 4yrs., 6st. 6lbs. ...	F. Templeman	0

BETTING: 11 to 10 agst. Polymelus 10 to 1 Kaffir Chief, 100 to 9 Sweet Katie, 100 to 8 Spate, 100 to 7 Velocity, 20 to 1 each Ganelon II, Manaton and Farasi, 25 to 1 each His Eminence and Bibiani, 33 to 1 Laurier, 50 to 1 the others (offered.)

The easiest winner the race has, perhaps, seen, as he could not help winning by three lengths. Kaffir Chief beat Malua a neck for second place, after a race to the bitter end. About a length and a half away Velocity was fourth, Dean Swift fifth, Spate sixth, Camisard seventh, Laurier (ran well) eighth, Sweet Katie (never dangerous) ninth, Ganelon II tenth, St. Amant eleventh, His Eminence twelfth, Manaton thirteenth, Earla Mor next, and the last pair were Bibiani and Succory, the latter being the absolute whipper-in. Time.—1min.52⅘secs.

Mr. E. Barlow's Rathbury, 6st 13lbs. ...	P. Quinn	0

(Winner trained by Davies.)

BETTING: 11 to 4 each agst. Southannan and Tui, 6 to 1 Allargue, 7 to 1 Freeborn, 10 to 1 each Rosalind and Laverna, and 100 to 8 each the others (offered).

Won by a head; two lengths divided second and third. Time—1min. 1sec.

The mud, wet, and discomfort at the finish of the Cambridgeshire proved too much of a good thing for hundreds of visitors who departed with no intention of returning, but the comparative few who remained were treated to another clear bright day following on a white frost, a startling change between sunset and sunrise. Melted by the sunshine, a heavy dew sparkled on the Heath, which soon lost its surface-bone, and returned to splendid order. Gossip circled round the easy victory of Polymelus and the big coup supposed to have been engineered on four continents. Rumour had it that the sound of the stable-commissioner's voice had gone out to all lands, but a big sum nowadays takes a lot of "placing" anywhere. We missed the crush in Tattersall's and the public enclosures, but another representative muster of the titled and landed classes assembled to meet the King.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

Except in the First Division of the League the goal scoring was not satisfactory on Saturday. The ten games in the premier division of the League yielded 41 goals, a similar number of games in the Second Division produced only 28 goals, while nine Southern League games produced a beggarly crop of 20. To enter into details, in League 1, eight home teams won and two lost, four teams failed to score, the winning teams scored 32 goals and the losers only nine. In the Second Division there were six home wins, three home losses, and one drawn game. Five teams failed to net the ball in a legitimate manner, 22 goals were obtained by the winning teams, only 4 by the nine losing clubs, and there were 2 in the drawn game. In the Southern League visiting clubs did not have a rosy time, as only one home team went under, six won on their own ground, and two games were drawn. Seven of the eighteen teams failed to score, the seven losing sides totalled only 3 goals between them, there were 2 in the drawn games and 15 went to the credit of the winning clubs.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

Bristol Rovers were second in the Southern League table on Saturday morning, their unexpected win over West Ham at Boleyn Castle last Monday having carried them above Fulham, as their goal record was better. They were expected to go to the top of the table when their match with Luton was over, as the Strawplaiters had been doing so wretchedly that, on form, they had not the ghost of a chance at Bristol. It is the unexpected that happens in football, and there has not been anything more surprising in the S. L this season than the defeat of the Rovers on their own ground by the club actually last in the table. Early in the season Luton shared the honours at Fulham, and now they have conferred a great benefit on the Cottagers by their remarkable performance at Bristol. It demonstrates the equality of the clubs as nothing else could do when the twentieth on the list is able to capture both points on foreign soil from the team that is second. As Fulham on the same afternoon beat New Brompton by two goals to one, the Cottagers once more advance to No 1 in the table, a position they occupied so steadily for the greater part of last season. Fulham did not give one of their best displays, but this was due rather less to their lack of skill than to the bustling, go-ahead methods of New Brompton who have a team that should enable them to figure prominently in the tourney this season. Fulham have now played one more game than Tottenham, and have a single point lead several other clubs being well in the running.

Everybody will welcome the improvement in the Southampton team, as exemplified by their victory at the Dell over the powerful Portsmouth side by two clear goals. There is extremely keen rivalry between these clubs, and probably there are no games the Sotonians are more desirous of winning than those against the Pompeys. Last year the latter earned the points both at Fratton park and Southampton, and the home team's win on Saturday was all the sweeter because it had in it the element of a sporting revenge. Norwich City gave further evidence of their strength by beating the useful Crystal Palace team, and Swindon have got in the leading batch by their win over Brentford. West Ham gave no quarter to Leyton, whose goal average is now on the wrong side, but Queen's Park Rangers allowed Plymouth Argyle to draw with them at Park Royal, and thus drop a point as compared with last year's result. Both the Rangers and Brentford are in the last half dozen, and this is not at all satisfactory. Watford followed up their brilliant win at Brighton by a narrow victory at Cassio-road over Reading, and the latter now drop down to the foot of the table, where they will not remain long if they reproduce the form which gave them wins overy Bristol Rovers and Brentford. Northampton are a curious team, for, after playing a drawn game at Plymouth, they are able to only draw at home with Brighton, who the previous week were beaten by three clear goals on the Hove ground. Football form really defies analysis:—

LEAGUE I

At one of period the game on Saturday at Woolwich it did not appear unlikely that the honours would go to Notts County, who this season are a very difficult side to beat. Prior to the match under notice the teams had met four times in the League, and 5 of the 8 points for which they had contended had gone to the Midlanders, who, however, had failed to score in their last three matches, and owed their position in the table more to their sturdy defenders than to the forwards, who had scored only a half-dozen goals in eight matches. On the other hand, the Arsenal had been scoring most consistently, and expert opinion ran in the direction of another triumph for the Gunners, whose doings have aroused extraordinary enthusiasm in the district. While Notts had to regret the absence of Jones, their Welsh centre-forward, the Arsenal were at full strength, Sands being back again to lead the team. The more finished football was certainly shown by the home side, but they ran up against a powerful, robust defence, and goals were not plentiful. The stubbornness with which the halves and backs contested every yard of ground was worth witnessing, and though there has been this season, and will be again, much prettier football at the Manor Field, there will not be more dogged defensive work than was shown by the Notts men on Saturday. It almost prevailed, but not quite, success being denied the Arsenal until the closing moments, when all opposition was borne down, and Coleman put a seal on his previous untiring efforts by obtaining a clever goal. It was a dramatic finish.

Saturday was not a joyous day for some of the top-weights, Aston Villa, who won 4—1 against Manchester City last March, were at Hyde-road in search of points, and if they needed encouragement, they might have found it in the fact that in seven previous successive home engagements neither of the Manchester teams had registered a win. There is an end to everything, we are told, except Wigmore-street, and the City, who have had a heart-breaking experience this season, beat the Villans by 4—2. It was by a similar score that Bolton Wanderers, who went to Birmingham with an escutcheon untarnished by defeat, were beaten by the ex-Heathens, and thus dropped a couple of points as compared with last season. Everton are now going strongly, and history only repeated itself in 2 points accruing to them from the Sheffield United match, for the junior Blades have not won at Goodison Park since 1899. Manchester United cut a poor figure at Sunderland, the Wearsiders being easily masters of the situation, but Liverpool furnished the surprise of the afternoon by going to Bury, and, with a reconstructed front rank, winning by three goals to one, a result they failed to compass last season when they won the championship. Middlesborough go from bad to worse, Newcastle having no difficulty in annexing both points at Ayresome Park and the Ironopolis team have not yet won a match, nor will they do so until the forwards show more finish in the neighbourhood of goal. Blackburn Rovers found themselves on the winning side for the first time this season, Stoke being the victims, and Derby County gave their best display to date against Preston North End, who had a fruitless journey to the railway centre. Sheffield Wednesday, right on top of their form, inflicted a clear three goals defeat on Bristol City, whose recent performances leave something to be desired.

The table of results to date is appended:—

LEAGUE II

The leading clubs in the Second Division had a sorry time on Saturday, with the exception of Leicester Fosse, who were at home to Glossborough Trinity, and won by 3—1. The home team scored all their goals in the first half, and it was well that they were in shooting form at this stage of the game. West Bromwich Albion last season beat Stockport County by a margin of two goals at the Hawthorns, but on Saturday they could not do any better than divide the points. On the run of the play they were much the better side, but only goals count, and as each netted the ball once the Throstles had to be content with a draw. There is no mistaking the earnestness of the intention of the Albion to climb back into the first Division, but they cannot afford to allow moderate clubs like Stockport County to take points away. Hull City, after playing seven matches without defeat, met their Waterloo at Bradford on

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses.

Saturday. The reverse was the narrow one of a goal to love, but that was all that was necessary. It was scored in the second half, and the delight of the supporters of the heavy woollen centre team was unrestrained when the ball was put into the net. Hull expected to do better than they did, and, compared with last season, they dropped 2 points, for they then won by two clear goals. The effect of the present result on Hull's position has been to depose them from the leadership, and they are now third in the table.

When Chelsea visited Burton in 1905-6 in search of points they captured both by the convincing score of 4—2, while at home they were successful 3—0. Prior to Saturday the United had won only one game, and their goal record was the worst in the League. And yet they come along with a win and seriously jeopardise Chelsea's chances of success in the bitter struggle for entrance to the upper division. Chelsea should have won. They led at half time but then got a bit slack, and they had to pay the price by returning empty handed from a visit that was expected to yield them the full quota of points. Their metropolitan colleagues were outplayed at Nottingham, the Forest being at the top of their game, and their dash and accuracy near goal are reflected in the 4—0 score. Unfortunately there were many incidents of a regrettable character and two of the Orient players were ordered off the field, but the visitors are confident that the referee cannot justify his actions which they claim were not warranted by what occurred. After their disastrous start the ex-First Leaguers have recovered splendidly, and with Wolverhampton also in a match-winning vein there is no lack of combatants for the places of honour at the top of the table. The Wolves put up a fine performance in defeating Lincoln City at Lincoln by four goals to love, and Leeds City and Burnley created mild surprises by winning at Burslem and Chesterfield respectively. Grimsby did not have anything to spare in their match against Barnsley and the Fishermen are not playing well enough at present to cause anxiety to the leaders.

THE F. A. CUP.

The qualifying competition of the F. A. Cup was advanced another stage on Saturday, and results down South were very much as anticipated. It was a good performance for Clapham to knock out Redhill by 3—1, at Redhill, and Hitchin were altogether too good at home for Kettering, the latter being defeated by 5 clear goals. Chelmsford won by a similar score against Leigh Ramblers, but the heaviest scoring of the afternoon was at Tunbridge Wells, where the Rangers smothered Hove Park by 10 goals to love. Shepherd's Bush just got home in a hard game with Hounslow, and the London Caledonians were able to claim victory over Page Green Old Boys by only the odd goal in 5. Apsley, who caused a mild sensation by the manner in which they disposed of Cheshunt in the previous round, knocked out Finchley by three clear goals, and Chesham Town got the better of a high scoring match agst. Maidenhead Norfolkians. Those old-time rivals, Clapton and

RUGBY RULES.

SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH vs. SOMERSET.—There was an attendance of about 5,000 at Taunton's new enclosure on Saturday for the Colonials' game against Somerset. The South Africans won, of course; but their display was woefully short of that which they had given earlier in the week against Devon. Their weakness in loose forward rushing and dribbling, which has been noticed before, was accentuated, sometimes to a painful degree. It is true that for the whole of the game, except five minutes, they were a man short, W. S. Morkel having to leave the scrum in order to take the injured Burmeister's place at full back. But the rest of the pack, though they laboured with fierce energy very largely lost their heads by the very stress of their own eagerness.

Somerset started, but by a penalty and some high kicking the visitors pressed. The home forwards, however, quickly showed themselves the better pack in the loose, and very early in the game they settled down to keeping the ball at their toes as much as possible. They came down upon Burmeister in a body and completely swamped the backs, Burmeister and W. S. Morkel being left stretched on the field before the burst was stopped near the Colonial line. The back had to be helped off the field, and did not re-appear, his place being taken by W. S. Morkel. For a time the visitors showed no sign of their loss, and, getting the better of touch-line play, they reached a spot just in front of the home goal. There they were almost immediately awarded a penalty, and Mare put the ball over the bar. The Somerset forwards now began to assert a more definite superiority in the loose, and it took a remarkable effort by Mare to stop them. The Colonials tried to open out the game, but their transfers were very wild, until in the third bout they came out brilliantly, Loubser darting over with a fine try, after the whole line had handled, in lightning style Mare goaled. Somerset tried their hand at imitation, but though the effort had merit, Mead was brought down by Krige with a determined tackle, Loubser just later defying all efforts to grass him until four men had their hands on him. Sorely pressed by the home forwards, Morkel resorted to a flying kick which luckily found touch; but the Somerset front men were keeping the game well in hand, and several times made up for weaknesses behind. They were pressing warmly when a penalty was given them, but Thomas missed in a good position. Thanks to Loubser, the Africans got out, but Kirk headed a dribble which was the prelude to the hottest attack of the half. The defence was not of the best, but speed told its tale, the home men being unable to move far when handling. Just on half-time Le Roux shone with a fine, swerving run, and after his forwards had once or twice shown that they could heel, Burger dropped over with a try. The kick failed. Half-time:—

Passing between Penny and Larcombe, and another dribble by Kirk, put Somerset on the offensive as soon as the second half started. Morkel had his kick charged down close under goal, and a big tussle followed near the line. The Colonials were there penalised, but Thomas spoilt the easiest possible shot. In the loose forward play which lasted most of the half the home men were having all the better of it, and were in foreign ground most of the time, frequently hovering within a few yards of the line for minutes together, and giving a couple of penalties in their eagerness to score. Loubser treated the crowd to a wonderful run through his opponents, but Thomas intercepted his pass, and in a terrific burst the home front brigade went over the African line, only, however, to be called back to scrum. Pinning their opponents tightly in the corner, the Somerset scrummagers let the ball out to Penny, and the latter gave to Mead in an excellent position. But he let Morkel grass him with the ball, although Thoms and Lockyer were close up in support, and the chance was lost. Towards the end there was more handling by both sides. Mare ran into home ground, and after a complicated round of short passing, Burdett dropped over, but was called back for a forward pass. In a few seconds, however, Loubser, after handing-off several men, finely reached the home line and gave to Mare, who sent in P. Le Roux with the last try. Result:—

MATCH vs. MIDDLESEX.—Played on Wednesday at Richmond, a strong county XV. facing the South Africans.

D. Morkel kicked off for the Colonials, there being no wind to speak of. From the early scrummages Harding, Williams, and Jenkins broke loose, and, Marsburg slipping, Harding picked up, but Lambert, who was well up, could not gather his captain's pass. The Harlequin, it may be mentioned, was appearing on the wing vice C. E. Lewis. Strong tackling by both sides kept the game near the centre. Ultimately Middlesex granted a free kick, well taken by Harding. To this Marsburg made a fine return to half-way. From the next "scrum" Carolin darted away and fed Hirsch. The ball came to De Melker, but the movement then ended owing to a bad pass by the last-named. After Louwrens had relieved by an opportune kick Hirsch ran finely, and, sending out to Stegmann, the wing man was only brought down in the nick of time by Palmer. There was further hard scrummaging, varied by free kicks to either side. D. Morkel had one good shot just wide, but a second succeeded, and in twenty minutes the Colonials led by a penalty goal. Soon afterwards Lambert had a chance; he ran straight through until confronted by Marsburg. The full-back effected a strong tackle, and Lambert finding no one handy for a transfer, a good chance was lost. The game continued fairly even, but eventually a strenuous South African rush carried the ball over the line, Brink touching for a try. In this dash Martheze was hurt, and retired outside the line. D. Morkel took the shot at goal, but it did not avail. In the remaining five minutes the county attacked in front, but were driven back, and at half-time the score stood:—

South Africans ... ... 6 points.

In the early part of the second half the Colonials, reinforced by the return of Martheze, opened the play, and Loubser and Hirsch both came near scoring. However, directly their line was in danger the Middlesex backs defended most resolutely. The home pack soon got going again, but their efforts to heel out rarely met with the success that was certainly deserved. Williams was off the field for a few minutes with a damaged shoulder. Soon after his return Carolin sent well out to Loubser via Hirsch, and the wing man got in wide, D. Morkel failing to convert. Towards the close Harding had two shots at goal. One from a mark was cleverly charged down; the other was just carried wide by a freshening breeze. In a bout of three-quarter passing Palmer was almost clear, but when hemmed in he passed forward. At the other end Dixon just collared Stegmann at the corner-flag, touch in goal resulting. Finally the match ended:—

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. LONDON SCOTTISH.—In view of the great strength of the London Scottish XV. this season, it was a "tall order" for the Dark Blues to be called upon to meet them before they had played together on a single occasion The knowledge, however, that they could rely upon eleven Old Blues, including last year's pack almost in its entirety, as well as some very promising Seniors and Freshmen who had done well in the trial games, raised hopes that they would at least give the visitors a hard game, and so it proved. The venue was the University Football Ground, and the weather being favourable, there was a good attendance. Soon after the start E. D. Simson's knee went wrong, and during his temporary absence some extremely good back play, in which Williamson and the two centres were especially prominent, enabled Butterworth to score two tries in easy positions, from the second of which Cozens Hardy registered the major points. For the few minutes that E. D. Simson was away, J. R. Simson came from the pack to the third line of defence, and Wade went and remained at half E. D. Simson subsequently filling J. R. Simson's temporary position. The game was now very stubbornly contested, the Oxford pack being a match for their formidable opponents, while for some time they held their own behind. Munro, who had started somewhat shakily, soon found his form, and subsequently played a great game. Twice Oxford saved by touching down, but a fine run by Morris looked like culminating in a try. Unfortunately his pass to Williamson was erratic, and a fine opportunity was lost. Directly afterwards the ball was kicked across the field with Davies waiting for it. It bounced almost at a tangent, and Purves obtaining possession had a clear run in. Geddes failed with the place kick. At half-time Oxford led by 8 points to 3.

On resuming some effective back play between the Scots, in which Munro was particularly noticeable, ended in E. D. Simson scoring an unconverted try. Before Oxford could relieve the ball went out to Purves, who very cleverly dropped a goal, and the visitors led by two points. From now to the finish it was anybody's game. Excellent passing in the 'Varsity three-quarter line frequently gave the Scots cause for anxiety. On one such occasion Butterworth ran clear of the opposition, but in eluding Grishotti he got out of his stride, and Purves effected a brilliant tackle. Tarr also got well away twice, but instead of attempting to run on or pass, he elected to kick over the heads of the Scottish backs, and nothing accrued. It was the uncertainty of the two 'Varsity wing three-quarters in taking their passes and their lack of finish that probably gave the Scots the victory. The Dark Blues were well served at every other position, and their play generally created an excellent impression. Just before the whistle went the Scottish forwards set up a strong attack, and following some scrambling play near the Oxford line, Purves touched down. As the point was not improved upon, victory rested with the visitors by a dropped goal and three tries (13 points) to a placed goal and a try (8 points).

NEWPORT vs. BLACKHEATH.—Always a popular side at Newport, the Blackheath team attracted a crowd of 12,000 on Saturday. The visitors played the New Zealand style, with J. R. Upson as a wing forward. Newport had to work hard to win by 8 points, as Blackheath, by means of their new formation, played a great smothering game. Upson, like his prototype, Gallaher, continualy broke up the efforts of the home backs, and nearly as often got his side penalised. Tomlison, Cave, Wright, and Robinson were absent from the Blackheath team. For the first ten minutes of the game there was very little in it. Newport had apparently not realised the best method to adopt with their opponents' formation. Thanks mainly to some fine kicking by Robson, the 'Heathens attacked. For offside play the English men were penalised, and Martin relieved for his side. This relief was only temporary, as a moment later Upson was leading his side up the field with a capital rush. It was stopped by Martin, the outside Newport half, who passed to Plummer. The latter punted, and Hodges, following up, secured the ball, which he passed to W. R. Thomas. The Uskside winger went off, and beat the opposition, scoring a grand try. E. Jenkins failed to convert. The Newport side were now getting into their stride, and a few minutes later Watkins and Thomas made another brilliant effort to get over, but their colleagues failed to follow up. Newbould and Partridge led a couple of fruitless Blackheath dashes, which found D. J. Boots safe at full back. Once B. A. Hill who was playing three-quarter, just failed to take the ball, else a score would have resulted. At the interval Newport led by a try to nil.

On resuming rain fell, and the light was very poor. A few exchange kicks between Edwards and Boots—both custodians playing very safe games—ended in favour of the latter, who found touch in the 'Heathens twenty-five. Finely led by Newbould, the visiting seven had the best of the scrums, but their efforts were continually spoiled by George Boots, the old Welsh international, who was playing a sort of half-wing forward game of the Rooke type. Later on Newport, by hard grueling work, gradually made their way up the field, where W. R. Thomas again received from Martin. The wing man was about to fall over the line when Caddell, the Irish international half, brought off a magnificent tackle, which prevented a score. The Uskside were now having the best of matters, but Blackheath tackled in fine style, particularly Edwards. With the approach of "time" it was seen that the Newport forwards were lasting the better. From a line out about ten yards from the Blackheath line, George Boots secured, and passed out to S. Adams. The latter just got across, with Edwards, Hill, and Turner clinging to him, and T. H. Vile converted with a good kick. Just before the final whistle went, W. M. Turner, the Blackheath centre, intercepted a pass from Adams to Thomas, and ran up to D. J. Boots and then punted. A smart sprint for possession just ended in the home back falling on the ball and saving. Result:—Newport, 1 goal 1 try (8 points); Blackheath, nil.

RICHMOND vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—The Light Blues opened their winter programme at Richmond on Saturday. The home team at once assumed the aggressive, their forwards, led by Odgers, more than holding their own. The visitors eventually found relief through a strong kick by McLeod into touch near the centre flag. Subsequent play proved the sides to be well matched until the visiting backs began to arrive at an understanding. Kenneth McLeod and Koop were especially inclined to force the pace, but all the backs passed well, Koop, after having one try disallowed because he had received the ball from a forward pass, was soon over again, thanks to McLeod who made the opening; Hearson converted. The work of the Richmond forwards was nullified by the inferiority of their backs, but they made a determined attack, and after a while Godfray seized a chance smartly and scored, for Chase to majorise. Pitt gave to Hearson, who made another opening for Koop, who scored—with a clever individual effort. Hearson just failed to convert. Richmond again made a good forward rush, which Scoular only saved in the nick of time. Odgers made a mark, but did not gain anything thereby, as McLeod received the ball, with the result that Koop once more ended the movement across the line, Hearson again failing to convert. At half-time Cambridge led by 11 points to 5.

Shortly after the interval the visitors reached the Richmond twenty-five, and the home halves being penalised for offside, McLeod all but landed the three points. Richmond, putting more dash into their play, gained a footing in the 'Varsity territory, and Godfray further improved matters with a finely-judged kick into touch at the corner-flag. The Light Blues came away, however, with a fine bout of passing, but the final transfer went astray at mid-field. From the ensuing scrum the visitors gained further ground, and McLeod on receiving found his path barred, but turned round and dropped a goal very neatly and cleverly from the twenty-five line. Harris was always very prominent in the Light Blue pack. Hearson fielded well and passed to Koop, who scored for the fourth time after dodging over in the corner; Hearson failed badly at converting. Hereabouts Lawson was carried off the field, and taken to the hospital. The reduction had a spurring effect upon the team. The Richmond backs became adepts at snatching Cambridge passes, from which Godfray and Godby scored a try each, and Chase converted both. Result:—Cambridge University 2 goals (1 dropped) 3 tries (18 points); Richmond 3 goals (15 points).

LENNOX vs. HARLEQUINS.—At Cricklewood, on Saturday, Lennox, after holding their own in the first portion were out played by the Harlequins, and defeated by 4 goals 3 tries (29 points) to 2 tries (6 points). Lennox had the best of the opening exchanges, and within five minutes Logan, intercepting a pass, got over, Atterbury failing at the place-kick. Still keeping the Harlequins in their own half, Lennox continued to press. A good run by Stoop brought temporary relief, but Carruthers misjudged a long kick, and slipping, enabled Common to run over. Walker failed to majorise. Following a period of even play, the Harlequins gradually wore down the attack, and after a slight delay through an accident to Logan, a good bout of passing ended in Stoop scoring behind the posts. Although Lambert's kick went over the additional points were disallowed, through the ball touching Mather in its flight. Harlequins continued to keep well up, but at half-time failed to draw level, and Lennox crossed over leading by 6 points to 3.

Within five minutes of the restart G. H. Birkett made a splendid opening for R. O. C. Ward, and again Lambert failed to convert. After G. H. Birkett had had a try disallowed through dislodging the corner flag, R.H.Haxell was brought down heavily from a line out, and fractured his collar-bone. From this point the Harlequins had matters all their own way, and in quick succession J. G. G. Birkett (2), Lambert (2), and King got over. Lambert converted four times, with the result that the Harlequins won by 29 points to 6.

BOXING.

Although the night preceding a special at headquarters does not usually contain any items of more that ordinary importance, the programme arranged for Monday evening was a good one. The directorate invited the South African footballers to witness the proceedings, and all the members of the combination were present. Upon arriving at the club, under the guidance of that popular sportsman, Mr. T. S. Hanscomb, the visitors were shown over the premises, and after seeing every item of interest, they were located under the clock to witness the more serious part of the business. The first pair to make their appearance were Charlie Baxter (Shoreditch), a son of the well-known exponent, Bill Baxter, and Mart Casey (Bermondsey), and Baxter won. Jim Watts (Reading) and Arthur Bennett (Walworth) followed, Watts winning in the second round. This let up to one of the principal events of the evening, the contestants being the ex-amateur Charlie Dew, who several times boxed so prominently in the bantam-weight championship, and Albert Cocksedge (Leicester), who were matched to box ten rounds at 7st. 8lbs. for £25 a side and the club's purse. Each was well within the prescribed weight The bout proved to be one of the cleanest that has been seen in the club for a long time. Cocksedge gradually wore his man down, and at the close won on points.

Just prior to the interval an autograph photo of the South African players taken by Mr. Hanscomb, was put up for auction, the proceeds of which are to go to help to entertain 500 of the poorest children in the borough of Southwark After spirited bidding it realised six guineas.

The concluding item upon the programme was a ten rounds contest between those well-known bantam-weights, Jack Guyons (Clerkenwell) and Jack Ladbury (poplar) who had signed articles to box at a catch-weights. The East Ender, who has since his journey to Australia thickened out considerably by the aid of superior strength asserted his superiority half-way through the fifth round.

Officials:—Referee, Mr. J.H. Douglas; timekeeper, Mr. Zerega; M.C., Mr. A. F. Bettinson; seconds, Bill Baxter and Arthur Gutteridge.

BILLIARDS.

Something approaching a sensation was caused during the week when the news leaked out that Diggle had at last been prevailed on to take part in an important money match. I refer, of course, to the forthcoming match for £50 a side between the famous Mancunian and Melbourne Inman. Diggle has hitherto been looked on as a player devoid of all ambition, and while others have been engaged in wordy warfare through the Press, the tall Lancastrian has pursued the even tenor of his way, and has up till now turned a deaf ear to the more or less persuasive eloquence of his would-be opponents for a money match. A few weeks ago Diggle certainly issued a cartel to Dawson and Stevenson, but there being a few "ifs" included, it did not create the same interest as this latest bit of news.

It is well known that ever since his severe drubbing at the hands of Diggle in last season's tournament, Inman has been thirsting for revenge. He cannot forget that the Mancunian deprived him of first prize, and one is safe in asserting that the irrepressible Richmond professional will make a bold attempt to equalise matters on this occasion. The conditions under which the match will be played are a little out of the usual run. It is stated that in order to preserve the identical conditions which governed their tournament game referred to, it has been decided to call the match one of 18,000 up, Diggle to receive 2,500 start and Inman 5,000. But why the same result could not have been arrived at by calling the game 15,500 up, Inman receive 2,500 start, I am at a loss to understand! As originally fixed, the game was arranged on the last-mentioned lines, but I suppose the conditions have been re-arranged on purely sentimental grounds. This will mark the first occasion where sentiment has been allowed to enter into the arrangement of a money match. All of which is interesting, because sentiment in a scarce commodity among most present-day professionals. However, in their anxiety to make the sentimental view a prominent feature, the parties concerned have lost sight of the fact that the match arranged is double the length of the tournament fixture, and this, in my opinion, destroys the efficacy of the whole thing. Inman should have been allowed a few more points in consideration of the double game, for as it is, Diggle starts with an advantage. I am afraid the space at my disposal will not allow of me offering very extended comment on the important matches brought to a conclusion on Saturday evening. Principally because it was the game I happened to see most of, I will first take the Stevenson-Lovejoy contest. Watching Lovejoy during the last three days of the match, one could hardly realise that this was the same player we had been watching for the previous nine days. For until Stevenson had rubbed off the very liberal concession of 6,000 and gone ahead by nearly 1,000 a visitor might have been forgiven for thinking Lovejoy was making his initial appearance against his brilliant opponent. "Is Lovejoy suffering from stage fright?" was a question frequently heard whispered in the salon. Whatever the cause, on these nine days he was far from being the Lovejoy we know. Stevenson's extreme brilliance in the first week of the match no doubt had a lot to do with his opponent's seeming ineptitude for the Hull player rarely took more than seventy minutes (he did it occasionally in sixty) to score his necessary quota of points (750). One break of this dimension in the time is beyond the capabilities of most professionals, but as Stevenson had to "look on" sometimes, one can form some idea of the remarkable pace he collected his points. In this connection it is worth repeating here a remark which appeared in a report of Friday evening's play in this match: "It is worthy of record that 1,834 points were scored at the sitting, giving an average of over 900 an hour" This was a phenomental performance. Thesession lasted two hours exactly. It is only doing justice to Lovejoy to state that he bore the lion's share of the performance by scoring 1,086 of the points. No matter how large or how small the breaks, points were put on at a great pace throughout the match, and by billiards of the very highest quality at that. Stevenson at times fairly bewitched the balls with his matchless skill, while Lovejoy on runs of "nurseries" was par excellence. Altogether the match was a treat for those privileged to witness it, and Stevenson's greatness was never more strikingly shown than in giving a player of Lovejoy's calibre a third of the game and a trouncing by 727 points. During the early stages of his game with Cook at Bristol, Dawson gave several enthusiasts the impression that he was drifting back to the poor form displayed against Harverson in the same hall. But these "croakers" evidently do not know their Dawson. He is still a very brilliant player, and what is more, he possesses in an unusual degree that indomitable grit and pluck which go to make him the greatest player in the "pit" of modern times. No I am not forgetting his poor show against Harverson. Rather, I am remembering his great "battles" of the past with especial reference to his friend, Stevenson, and also to Diggle, Harverson, and Inman. Take the match just concluded at Bristol. For over half the game Dawson was battling against the "collar"—so brilliantly has Cook been making the pace—but recognising that a special effort was required, the dogged Yorkshiremen on Tuesday afternoon comes out with the break of the season—582. Then he went after his man in great style, and after reaching his schedule points on Friday evening for the first time in the match, he eventually gained the honours of a splendid game. Cook, who was receiving exactly one-third of the game, played better than he has done for a year or two back, and by his most recent fine display has established himself a warm favourite in Bristol. By the time the big tournament comes round Dawson will be bang at the top of his form if his recent "shows," count for anything and then we ought to see billiards worth going a long way to see.

The match between Harverson and Inman, at Thurston's was brimful of excitement among the spectators, who attended each session in very large numbers The many kaleidoscopic changes in the position of the scores accounted for this. But at times both players sadly besmirched their reputations by a series of amateurish efforts to score from likely openings. This, coming on top of some exceptionally fine billiards, and of some very big breaks, is hard to account for. Harverson, who was in the "pit" until near the close, made a gallant attempt to win, but Inman had just that little bit "up his sleeve" to wear his opponent down and gain a remarkable victory in a remarkable match, by the exceptionally narrow margin of 102 points. The match will always be remembered for two exceptionally brilliant individual efforts, both of which went to the credit of Inman. His marvellous "red ball" world's record break and on Tuesday last he took the liberty of creating a new "Inman record" of 429. What could a player wish for more? I have heard it whispered that the Colonial is already on the war path with a cartel in his pocket to play Inman another match on level terms.

SCOTTISH SPORTING ITEMS.

Owing to a difficulty with the landlord the proposal to extend Musselburgh Golf Links to eighteen holes has had to be dropped. Three professionals have been engaged by the Grange Cricket Club, Edinburgh, for next season—Pendrick of Gloucestershire, Keene, of Worcestershire, and White, the wicketkeeper who did such good service last season. The Indian Club Championship match between H. Burton, of Liverpool, and Tom Barrows will probably take place in the Waverley Market, Edinburgh, which has been offered for the purpose by Sir H. E. Moss. The report of the Loch Leven Angling Association states that the revenue for the past year was £2,280, an increase of £530 over last season. Alec Smith, Glasgow Rangers Internationalist, received such injuries in the Glasgow vs. Sheffield match last week that he had to consult a specialist. He, however, should be fit for the match against Celtic next Saturday. The South African cricketers play Scotland at Raeburn-place. Edinburgh, 22nd, 23rd and 24th July, after appearing at Partic against the West of Scotland C.C. the preceding Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Mr. Fred Kirkham, of Preston, was at Dundee last Saturday refereeing the Dundee Celtic League match. The business-like methods of English referees are appreciated in Scotland. The decision of the International Conference at Sheffield has been received with mixed feelings. While it saves the amour propre of the Scottish Football Association it leaves an opon door for the suspend of the one country to skip over the Border and escape his punishment by placing himself under the jurisdiction of the other country—not a very desirable state of affairs. L. M. Macleod will not be in residence at Cambridge this year His younger brother, Kenneth G. Macleod is to be the new secretary of the club. Trout fishing in the Tweed, which has just closed has on the whole been very successful. The largest basket taken was with the worm during a spate by Mr. Robert Boyd, Galashiels, and weighed 18½lbs. N. C. Neilson, one of the well-known brothers who have gained distinction in Scottish Rugby, is lying seriously damaged as the result of an accident when representing Northumberland against the South Africans. Glasgow cricketers are very much annoyed at losing the mach which West of Scotland was hopeful of arranging with the M.C.C. for next season. Grange C.C. stepped in took the dates, and Edinburgh gets the treat. Mr. Robert Boue in winning the Glasgow Corporation golf trophy for the second time consecutively last Saturday week, handing in a score of 70, tied with the amatuer record for Blackhill, which score is two above that made by James Baird a couple of years ago. Messrs. C. Macfarlane and A. Methven tied for second with 72. John Duncan, the Irish champion, has been appointed manager of the Premier Billiard Rooms Glasgow, and will open them on Thursday with a match of 750 up against Tom Aiken, the Scottish champion. David Russell, the once famous Preston North End, Heart of Midlothian, and Celtic International player, while engaged at his occupation as a miner at Fauldhouse, Shotts, met with a serious accident through a fall from the roof. He played for Scotland against England at Liverpool as far back as 1895, and in all holds six International caps.

Hunting.

HUNTING COYOTES IN MANITOBA AND COLORADO.

HUNTING and coursing the coyote is certainly one of the most healthy and invigorating sports that a man can enjoy. He is ever on the alert, and like his dogs and his horse, he always has his eyes and ears open. The coyote is a wary customer and well he knows the difference between anything of the greyhound breed and other of the shepherd and gun dogs. He will play with a collie, but once he catches sight of what is known as a "long dog" on the vast prairies of Manitoba, he knows it is time to make a shift for the nearest cover, where he can dodge into the stunted forest and save his skin. The coyote as a rule fills his belly at night time. In the day, when the corn has been threshed, he will bask and dream on the sunny side of a straw pile, but like the butcher's dog he will take his nap with one eye open. He is a detestable cur at his best, and he knows that every man's hand is against him, and that it is for him to look after his own existence. He is a skulking, stealing thief, and he would even appear to know the difference between a week-day and the Sabbath. When the good farmer and his family are going through their devotions in the little village meeting house on the Sunday, Mr. Coyote sees his opportunity Then will he in the broad daylight take heavy toll from among the farm fowls; he has grown sick and tired of the varying hare of his surroundings and the agriculturist suffers in consequence. The coyote is the pariah of the prairie, and after the harvest is over the sporting farmer thinks he is putting in a few good days of honest work, when he and his friends set out to hunt what is invariably called "wolf" in that part of the world.

The best dog for coyote coursing is a cross made up of English greyhound, Scotch deerhound and Russian wolfhound. The greyhound gives the speed and endurance, the deerhound the coat and stamina and the wolfhound the tackling qualities. These dogs, which as before mentioned are called "long," bear the chief characteristics of the deerhound, and are blue or sandy in color. Naturally the profusion of coat is of great concern, for when a dog has to withstand the rigors of a climate that gets down to sixty degrees below zero, with a driving wind thrown in, it stands to reason that an animal requires a wealth of protection in the way of hair or fur. It is not too much to say that once the freeze-up sets in, that you can see the coats of dogs grow, the while the heat from their bodies escaping becomes frozen on top of the jacket. Time after time have I seen a dog almost white, the terrible weather crystallizing on the tips of the hair of his body the natural warmth of the animal. A greyhound being short-coated would feel the weather a great deal more than a dog that had a more profuse body covering. The Russian wolfhound is a magnificent tackler, and once he gets those long jaws onto a coyote he soon has him as dead as a doornail. On the other hand, the Muscovite is a sprinter rather than a stayer. There is often a run of from one to two miles at a terrific pace. The prairie is as flat as a billiard table and the wolf perceiving the mounted party and dogs from his point of vantage at a great distance, knows that they are his enemies and mean business. Therefore, he immediately leaps out of the straw pile and makes a bee line for the nearest cover. Once there he knows he is safe. Now with all this law it takes a very fast and staying dog to overtake him and pull him down before he reaches his haven of refuge. The Russian being a somewhat heavy hound gets pumped in a long course, but as before remarked, he is a perfect devil with his teeth.

It should be remembered that wolf coursing in Russia is generally carried out under different conditions to what it is on the prairies of the United States and Canada. In the kingdom of the Czar a pack of foxhounds is thrown into a cover, while round the wood or thicket men are placed with three Borzoi and as soon as a wolf breaks away the wolfhounds are slipped and it does not take long before they are into him. As has been mentioned, conditions are quite different on the Western plains where the coyote is jumped at a great distance, and we may rest assured that the little wolf is too old a soldier to take up his couch in a place that is not within pretty decent distance from a bluff wherein he can laugh at his pursuers. Therefore, we can look upon the Canadian or Western "long dog" as a more or less distinctive breed, and another such as the kangaroo dog of Australia, and we cross this self-same kangaroo dog with the Russian wolfhound and get the ideal Dingo dog. A kangaroo must be taken by the hind quarters. When an "old man" is struck up with his back against a tree, if a hound leaped at his throat, the marsupial would disembowel his tormentor with his sharp-clawed hind feet. Those are his deadly weapons, and well the dog knows it. On the other hand the dingo has to be taken by the throat; should a dog nab him by the hind quarters he would turn and cut the dog to ribbons. It is characteristic of the Russian wolfhound to lay hold at the throat, for with a grip there neither coyote nor dingo can do so much harm. Thus do we see the value of the Russian blood for tackling purposes appreciated in the Northern and Southern Hemispheres, and in countries so far apart as America and Australia. From November right on through the winter is the season for coyote hunting, for then the fur is in good shape, and his skin is very handsome. Then again, a reward is given by the local game warden, and all that has to be produced as evidence of the destruction of an animal are his ears. Thus is the pelt undamaged. Where these prairie wolves are plentiful it can be well imagined, that they often make the night hideous with their howlings. They also hunt in packs in the daytime and their music is not half bad when they are in full cry after a "rabbit," which to be correct is a hare and of which there are thousands in some places where there are big bluffs. The writer has seen about a hundred baboons in their wild state at play, barking, grunting and fighting like so many demons of an unspeakable and uncanny world. The noise was discordant and appalled the listener, the while so many imps of mischief and devilry held high and low revelry. On the other hand, when I first heard wolves in full cry it was thought that some great school of children had been dismissed from their studies, and rejoicing at their liberty they made the very welkin ring with their thin voices. Remembering there was no school anyway near, and certainly not as many children as could make all that din, if every youngster for ten miles round had been on the spot, it was recognized the sound came from wolves, as nearer and nearer they came. Shortly after they stopped, for their quarry had fallen a victim.

To demonstrate how extremely fearful the hares are of their chief enemy, it was always found better when after these "rabbits" to enter the big bluffs without a dog. It was better to tie him up outside, and leave him there until your requirements for him on the prairie proper. They would lie for you, but once they saw a dog they were unduly wild and would scuttle off like so many startled deer. Naturally they thought the dog was a coyote, and it was good policy to immediately get out of his way. But for the presence of a man they appeared to care little. They had turned white before the snow came, and as they lay in their forms on every hand their presence was revealed like white stones standing out against a russet background. You could almost pick them up. In the presence of a dog they would not lie a second.

As before written, after the threshing is over, is the time for coursing the coyote. Then the farmer has time to look round. His is hard work, and it should be remembered that he has to put in the ordinary year's work into seven months. He can do nothing in the winter, and verily his is a case of making hay while the sun shines. After the wheat has been put on the cars he can call his soul his own and take the gun off the rack or out of the corner; then does he say to himself that it is just as well that he should enjoy himself and have a little wolf hunting on the side. Then in the evening, when the day's mail is due to arrive, he will betake himself to the store, which is the grand meeting place for everybody. He buys his all there from a newspaper to a racoon coat. The storekeeper, who trades in everything from a lead pencil to a plough, is the means of distributing all the news and gossip of the prairie surrounding him, and is as much at home measuring a yard of finery as he is in writing out a postal order. He is everything, and when harvest Thanksgiving comes round they even borrow the grapes of his store to decorate the sanctuary. Here then is the man to tell all and sundry that our friend proposes a hunt, and that it would be just as well for them all to organize and meet on a certain day with their dogs. Naturally every one falls in with the very good idea and the rest is easy. On the last occasion that the writer was out we had ten dogs, all of the cross-bred, longdog kind. It was a pretty sight and a cavalcade to be proud of The hounds and horses would disgrace no people and every one was on coursing bent. The plan of hunting is to spread out in an extended line and take in a large tract of country. Everything is fish that comes to the net, and when a jack rabbit jumps up from behind a big clump of soil on ploughed ground there is a general rush. A prairie jack rabbit, when he has turned white for the winter, is a dish for the gods, specially if he be stuffed with veal stuffing and served up piping hot with plenty of gravy and red currant jelly. And these long dogs can catch even the swift jack. But the Wolf's the thing we are after to-day, and we will stick to him.

At last! There he goes! Hou! hou! hou! There, on your right, three-quarters of a mile away, you observe a running animal about the size of a collie dog and a greyish-black creature in the distance. You know it is what you are after, and the dogs have already seen him. Your horse has grasped the situation, and with a spring forward he nearly jumps through the girths and out of his skin at the same time. It is a wild, hard ride, as every man tries his best to be up with the dogs which are straining, straining, straining, every muscle to get up to that fleeing beast in front of them. On and on they run with the distance between them and the coyote lessening every yard they go. You calculate the chances of the wolf reaching that bluff as you ride as you never rode before. You would dash through fire, you would ride through hell if that skunk was on the other side, and there was a chance of getting at him. And so on you go. Ah, he is yours! Just within fifty yards of his made-for shelter they are into him, and it will not be for him to howl at the moon again. See how they are into his throat, while others take him by the back and belly. They squeeze the ghost out of him before you are up to them, and his has been a speedy transition from the prairie to the coyote's heaven. And you think this. Even in your strength you are merciful. Then you call off the dogs, while your nearest friend hands you a flask. You take a real good pull at it while you wish him luck and you recognize you are out on the vast prairie and enjoying a wolf hunt.

In Colorado somewhat different methods are employed, those of the hunt club at the Colorado Springs being perhaps indicative of the section. They hunt over the great plains, ideal for the purpose, in any direction from the city they may care to ride. A five or ten-mile ride at most brings one to the game. Once a month the club members send their horse and hounds out fifteen to twenty-five miles by rail the evening before to some ranch, and go out on a special train in the morning for an all-day hunt, making a basket picnic of the affair. On these days they have from four to six runs, and half as many kills. They picnic on the plains wherever noon overtakes them, from a mess wagon that follows the hunt and return to town by the same special train or in a special car attached to some regular train. The hounds are carried in a wagon especially built for the purpose, a pair of white coach horses to draw it, and a smartly dressed driver on the box to manage them.

Arriving on the plains, the master begins riding more slowly, while the hound wagon and huntsman go on some forty to eighty rods in advance. This hound wagon is kept on the low land as much as possible, while the huntsman rides to the elevations, anywhere within half a mile of the hounds. There are holes in the top of the hound wagon through which hounds may put their heads and thus keep a constant eye on the huntsman.

The driver operates the opening of the door in the back end of the wagon, which instantly liberates the hounds, whenever the huntsman lifts his hat as a signal that he wants them, which he does only after he has gotten up as close to the game as possible.

The tactics he uses in getting up to the game is to ride about him in a circular way as if riding past, but all the time he is shortening the circle. The curiosity or stupidity of the coyote enables the huntsman thus to come within forty or eighty yards, when of the first symptoms of his taking to run the huntsman lifts his hat and rides after the coyote. The hounds rush on to the huntsman, who is usually able to lead them to view of the game, and the chase is on. Seeing the huntsman lift his hat is a signal also for the riders to come on, as a coyote usually runs in a circle at first, unless pressed too hard. The riders are generally able by riding to the right or left, as indicated by the direction the huntsman is taking, to come into the run behind the hounds. On this open plain and in the clear transparent air the chase is nearly always in full view from the start.

The coyote is a particularly interesting beast to hunt. He is the scavenger of the plains; he lives on rabbits which he tracks like a dog by scent, and picks the bones of all unfortunate cattle whose life comes to an end while afield. He is about half way between a fox and a wolf, and resembles one quite as much as the other. He hasn't the cunning of the former—the opinion of some of my coyote hunting friends to the contrary notwithstanding. He like the wolf is a coward, but becomes bold and aggressive when in bands. They are generally found separately in hunting their smaller prey, such as rabbits and prairie dogs, but when hunger is upon them they organize as in guerrilla warfare, and will pull down a calf or a yearling, or even a weakly bullock or cow.

When pursued by hounds they usually run to others, who follow along with a view of collecting others, so that when the hand to hand battle comes on, the fight will be more even-handed. If in these chases two or three find themselves pursued by a single hound, they turn on him, and his life is only rescued by bringing on the pack. Many a hound has thus been led into ambush and lost.

Paperchasing.

PAPERCHASING IN RANGOON.

As hunting is impossible in Rangoon owing to the absence of "jacks" or other quarry, paperchases are held instead twice weekly in the rains starting about the end of May and ending usually towards the close of October, making five months in all. There are two districts where the courses are laid, cantonments—a suburb within three miles of the city—, and Kokine a village about four miles distant. The former district is used on Wednesdays as being nearer town; it is more convenient for men in offices to get to the meet, than it would be if the course was further out in the country. The paper track here usually finds its way over the Golf Links, Maidans through residents' compounds, finishing not infrequently round the Race Course. The chief objection to a cantonment run is the amount of road work, though in a well-laid course there is very little entailed, the track lying over springy turf nearly the whole distance.

The Kokine runs take place on Saturdays and are decidedly more interesting as they lie in natural country through grassy glades, woodlands and jungle paths, though the rain takes longer to drain off than in cantonments. Except however for an occasional bit of bad going the Kokine country is fairly high and in spite of the heavy rainfall, a course will generally be in a very fair condition after two consecutive fine days and even after only one fine day the going will not be at all bad. The paddy fields which lie a little farther out are practically impossible at any time of the year for cross country riding, except perhaps in early May after the fist first few showers and again immediately after the reaping in November or December, as they are under water during the Monsoon, and as soon as the water runs off the sun parches them immediately, thus rendering the surface too hard to gallop over in the dry weather. If the paddy fields were ploughed in the winter months the going would be excellent, stretching for many miles over open country without interruption.

The Kokine courses therefore have to be confined to the high but limited woodland ground and are consequently somewhat cramped, necessitating several sharp turns which rather check the pace, though on the other hand excellent variety of jumps is afforded in a three-mile run, some of them being perfectly natural. Perhaps a description giving details of one of the runs, including nineteen jumps may be of interest viz:—The start lies in a field where three jumps are erected—mud bank 3ft. 3in., bamboo hedge 3ft, and brick wall 3ft, after which the paper enters a lane leading into a glade where two more fences are encountered,—a hurdle 3ft. and a leaf hedge 6ft. thick at the base sloping up to 3½ ft high. The course then turns into a jungle path and crossing a deep hollow climbs up to a high wooded plateau on whose level a mud bank 3ft. 6ins. immediately presents itself and later on a ditch 3½ft. wide with guard rail on take off side and mud bank on landing side completing the first mile. The course for the next mile lies on this plateau bending round its four sides over seven jumps given in their consecutive order as follows:—hurdle 3 ft. guard rail and ditch 5ft. wide with bank on far side, mud wall 4ft., post and rails 3ft., Brick Wall 3ft. 6ins., mud wall 4ft., hurdle and then a natural ditch 5ft. wide over which the course jumps into a lane and pursuing the latter for a few yards turns into fields where the third and last mile commences. After passing through a couple of fields the paper crosses a natural hedge into a private compound (permission, of course having first been obtained to do so) whence it turns into a lane converging soon afterwards on to a carriage road. Following this for a short distance the paper turns into the field where the run commenced and after negotiating a post and rails and ditch, finishes over a hurdle on the opposite side to where the start lay.

The fields often number over thirty while, the average turn out of the present season is about two dozen riders, excluding those who merely watch the start and finish from horseback. The animals vary considerably in size, from 12-hand Burmans to Walers over 15-hands, and this makes the catering of jumps difficult as a 12-hand pony carrying perhaps 14 stone can hardly be expected to clear the same height as a 15-hand horse, though the Burman pony is a keen and sure fencer. Formerly only the latter breed were seen in Rangoon, then came the invasion of the Indian country-bred and these two mixing together produced the Indo-Burman. Latterly horses have come up from Australia and these, increasing yearly in numbers, are ousting out the two former breeds so far as riding is concerned, with the result that the majority of the 'chasers are now Walers instead of Burmans or Indo-Burmans as was the case a few years ago. Consequently the bigger jumps are put up for the benefit of the horses and it is on account of the presence of the ponies that there are not more jumps of 4ft than those described in the above run. Though the horses might, by "chancing" the mud walls, knock holes in them so as to admit of, say, 13-hand ponies it is hardly to be expected that a 12-hand mite carrying, as already mentioned, 14 stone should attempt anything much over 3ft. The runs do not take the form of steeplechases as there is no lining up for the starter, but naturally about half-a-dozen usually ride for first place, while the remainder come on at a hand canter or what pace they like. In former years there used to be an average cup, but this has unfortunately gone out of vogue, though the season not infrequently winds up with a point-to-point meeting, including at least three races; one for ponies under 13-hands, another ponies under 14 hands and a third for animals over the latter height.

The meet always takes place on an afternoon and not infrequently "At Homes" are given in the shape of dancing after the paperchase by sporting individuals, regimental messes, etc., and these go far towards making the paperchase not only popular but a social success.

Wrestling.

HACKENSCHMIDT AT HOME.

ALTHOUGH Russian by birth, Georges Hackenschmidt is next door to being a naturalised Englishman. For the last six years the celebrated wrestler has lived, breathed, and fought in different parts of the British Empire. In this he has had his joys and his sorrows, his pleasures and his pains, for the Russian is one of the most sensitive men under the sun. In some quarters he has been none too well treated, but while he may forgive without altogether forgetting, malice plays no part in his composition. Hard hit at times, and that without reason or justification, Hackenschmidt, as I gleaned from what he said yesterday, can open his door to some whom he never dreamed would think of knocking writes "estus" in The Sportsman. Back from the provinces, the wrestler made his return to the metropolitan stage on Monday last when, at Mr. J. W. Edgar's fine hall, the Metropolitan, in Edgware-road, he engaged in the first bout he has contested in London since, on 28th April last, he for the second time in his career, so summarily disposed of the big, strong, good-humoured Turk, Ahmed Madrali. Although I had heard from him, I had not seen the Russian for nearly six months. Our paths had been in opposite directions, and our leisure at different hours, "Hack" earning his £200 a week by his brawn and muscle, and myself considerably—I may say very considerably—less by the pen. And yet we are told that the pen is mightier than the sword, which should be more than equal to muscle. This paves the way for a fine and large conundrum, in which if and how would figure prominently. Hackenschmidt was "at home" yesterday enjoying a rest in the West End of London, which he affects when off duty. In reply to an invitation to look him up, I journeyed Leicester-square way, and quickly found the champion and his business manager, Mr C. B. Cochran. The two were seated in the reception room, surrounded with drawings and pictures of quite a number of the chief artistes of the variety stage. Hackenschmidt, clad in a blue serge suit, looked exceedingly well, and not, as I had been told, stouter than usual. The muscles could be plainly seen through his thin jacket, particularly so as he stooped to pick up his hat. He was apparently in a particularly great hurry to speak, boiling over, as one might say, to let himself go. For the moment I thought he was going to throw out a challenge. This is not "Hack's" style, but it struck me something nasty had appeared and that the Russian wanted to embrace a Turk, a Bulgarian, or a Frenchman. It was not so, however, for although he let fly with some little excitement, Hackenschmidt did not at the start converse on wrestling. He had something on his mind, opinions he wanted to give, and questions he wished answered, and when, after shaking hands and saying "how well you look," he started on boxing I felt quite at home. I had seen some absurd paragraph about Hackenschmidt wanting to box the world or anyone or everyone in it. It was not about himself, however, that the Russian wished to speak, but about Gnr. Moir and Jack Palmer, who, as the sporting world knows, meet at the National Sporting Club on the 29th instant for the Heavy-weight Championship of England. Hackenschmidt is interested in this encounter, for he is finding the stake-money for a man who has assisted him in his business in many parts of the world, and formed one of his troupe for the last three years. Gnr. Moir is at once his pride and his portege. He looks upon the Artilleryman as a good catch-as-catch-can wrestler, and as a boxer—why, absolutely invincible.

I want to say a few words to you about this match, said Hackenschmidt. You know it will be a great contest. Moir, ah! he is a very powerful hitter indeed. You did not see him fight in Australia. I did. I saw him in the ring with the big black man, Peter Felix. How the Australians did fancy their man. And he was inches higher than Moir and heavier considerably. But Moir, he fought like a lion, and the big fellow cried out when he was hit so hard and so heavily on the ribs. I was in Sunderland some days ago, and the sporting men there think Palmer will never keep Moir away. I know Palmer is taller and longer in the reach, but he will never keep the Gunner at bay. After that contest in Australia Felix told me he has never been hit so hard, never during his long career, and Larry Foley, the veteran teacher, was surprised at the easy way in which the black had been defeated. And you know, of course, how easily Moir beat Smith in Australia. Poor Smith, I was sorry for him

What about Squires? I asked.

Squires, replied Hackenschmidt, why, Squires was quite afraid and would not meet Moir. Everything was prepared, as far as arranging the corners. Squires would have had no chance with Moir, who will, I think, certainly beat Palmer.

Questioned about his programme, Hackenschmidt said: Wrestling, oh? my programme is of very great length indeed. I am booked up in England until March, 1908, when I appear at Clapham. I have six weeks in London, and then go into the provinces again, and shall be backward and forward for months and months.

What about Frank Gotch?

Hackenschmidt: Gotch? Well, I do not take Gotch seriously. You know the American game of bluff; well, Gotch is playing it. A man has only to insert a challenge to get his name before the public. I never issue challenges, which you know; and yet I stand prepared to meet any man whose credentials are good enough to make a match a paying game. But, and I hope you will say so, I do not intend to advertise third and fourth rate men by taking notice of what they say in the papers. In the opinion of some it is only necessary to go to the Continent and dig out a man and give him a name then bring him to England and throw out challenges. Reputaltion is apparently a secondary consideration, and the public are to take everything as granted. I pay no attention to this sort of thing, and shall continue to ignore it. I am, however, only 29, and if, as I have said, any man with proper credentials comes forward he can have his match in the catch-as-catch-can style.

Then you are not going for a second tour in the States?

Hackenschmidt: No; that is abandoned. I had exceptionally good terms offered for eight weeks, but it is not worth my while to go to America for so short a time, therefore, I have filled up my dates in England.

Providing you had gone to America, would you have met Gotch?

Hackenschmidt: Yes, if there had been money in it. But, as I said, I don't take Gotch seriously. He is a fine man, over 6 feet, high, but has been beaten by Jenkins, whom I twice defeated, therefore, he does not count, you see. Hackenschmidt I may say, is now domiciled in the heart of the West End, where he has a cosy flat within a quarter of a mile of Piccadilly Circus. To this we adjourned after enjoying the good things provided at the Queen's Hotel, Leicester-square, by that genial sport, Mr Teddy Baily. Hackenschmidt, I may add, has few idle days, if any, and no leisure in the evening. Four shows per night, with the scurry to and from the halls, is a strain that only a strong man of iron constitution can stand. Hackenschmidt, despite the work he has gone through, is still that man, and recognising the necessity of good condition, he goes through strong and vigorous exercise every morning. The life of a star wrestler is not all honey, and, according to the Russian, not all profit. The name of Madrali cropped up in course of conversation, and I was pleased to hear the way in which Hackenschmidt spoke of the Turk. He puts Ahmed down as one of the strongest men he ever met, and a wrestler who would be very formidable indeed had he brains and skill. "Brute strength," said Hackenschmidt, "is a very important factor, but you want something here (tapping his head) as well. The Japs are brainy and clever generally, but the Turks—(and the gesture that followed spoke more than words). "In their own style they take a lot of beating; but Turkish wrestling would not be tolerated by an English audience. There is no skill, it is all a matter of strength—pulling a man down and keeping him down, any way and anyhow. Madrali was a good man, a very good, strong man. I don't know anyone who would beat him, and, providing he could be taught, given more speed, he would, of course, be better still."

Mr. Cochran, who has just recently returned from the States, was up to his chin in business connected with the great fair that opens at Olympia next Christmas. From particulars given me this looks like being really the greatest show on earth. Full particulars will be announced shortly in The Sportsman, but I may say that almost every foot of the huge building to let has already been rented, and the sixpence charged will certainly admit to the most remarkable exhibition ever put forward in London. Mr. Cochran tells me he has secured some surprising talent in America, and he is confident of beating all records—Barnum and Bailey included. Hackenschmidt has been engaged for the opening week.

Calcutta Kennel Club.

Founded 14th September 1906.

RULES.

Object of the Club.—The object of the Club shall be to encourage the keeping, breeding, and importation of all kinds of dogs, by promoting and supporting Shows, and taking all other necessary and practicable steps to protect and advance canine interests.

Entrance Donation.—All persons joining the Club after 31st December 1906 shall pay a donation or entrance fee of Rs. 5 in addition to their annual subscription. Members joining before 31st December pay no entrance fee.

Annual Subscription.—The annual subscription shall be Rs. 10.

The Club Affairs will be controlled by the President and Vice-President and Committee of seven members, the Honorary Secretary and Honorary Treasurer being additional members ex-officio. (These have to be elected.) Three to form a quorum.

The Support of Shows.—The question of giving prizes or subscriptions to Shows shall be decided by the Committee, who shall stipulate that the Shows shall be held under the rules of the Northern India Kennel Association, and shall, if necessary, satisfy themselves as to the other arrangements to be made.

Produce Stakes.—The Club shall, at such time as the Committee shall decide, give special prizes to be competed for by dogs born during the year, exhibited by their breeders, who must be members of the Club.

REGULATIONS FOR SHOWS.

Registration.—At all Shows held under Club Rules, all exhibits must be registered, unless already registered at the English Kennel Club, in which case it must be intimated on the entry form. The registration fee will be Re. 1 per each animal.

Transfer Certificate.—All registered dogs must, before being exhibited at any Show held under Club Rules, be supplied with a certificate of transfer if a change of ownership has taken place.

Scale of Fees.—

Registration	... Re. 1
Transfer Certificate	... „ 1
Change of Name	... Rs. 2
Certified Copy of Pedigree	... „ 2

Affix or Prefix.—Affixes or Prefixes can be registered free of charge, but no Prefix or Affix that has already been registered at the English Kennel Club can be used in India, except in the cases of dogs bred in England and already registered at the Kennel Club with their breeder's Prefix or Affix.

Distinctive Nomenclature.—No two dogs of the same breed can be registered under the same name, nor will the names of any well-known dogs at home be accepted for registration.

Registration of Puppies.—All puppies to be eligible for the Club's special produce prizes must have been registered within six months of their birth.

Dogs, the "bona-fide" property of Exhibitors.—Every dog exhibited must be the bona-fide property of the exhibitor. But should a temporary owner be empowered, during the real owner's absence from India, to exhibit in his own name, such entries will be accepted on the production of a certificate signed by the real owner to the above effect.

Breeder.—When the puppies in any litter are divided by the owners of sire and dam, in accordance with mutual agreement as to service, or as regards joint ownership of a brood bitch, the puppies falling to the share of each shall be held to have been bred by each. A bitch lent on breeding terms must be entered as the joint property of the two owners.

Judges not to Exhibit.—No Judge officiating at a Show held under the Northern India Kennel Association rules is permitted to exhibit for competition in any class or classes at that Show.

Judging Books.—At all Shows held under the Northern India Kennel Association rules judging books must be provided by the Club, and the Local Committee are responsible that no Judge uses a catalogue in the ring.

NOTICE.

The first Dog Show, under the rules and auspices of this Club, will be held in January, probably the 3rd of that month. The venue is not yet decided upon.

E. A. LYON,

Acting Honorary Secretary.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. TELEGRAPH C. C.—This match was played in the Eden Gardens on Saturday last, and resulted in a hollow victory for the home club, who had a strong side out, while their opponents could only put a very poor eleven into the field. Calcutta did not begin particularly well, but a long partnership between Curtis-Hayward and Beachcroft soon averted any danger of collapse, and the total, without any effort on the part of the last few wickets, mounted up to 247, of which Curtis-Hayward, who is in very fine form apparently this year, with both bat and ball, contributed no less than 120 not out, going in first wicket down and carrying out his bat. Beachcroft hit hard and well for his 63, but enjoyed a full share of good fortune, the visitors' fielding, though keen throughout, proving decidedly unreliable. Mehta and Wells showed some promise as bowlers, but the rest of the attack were wretchedly weak. When the Telegraph Club went in, they could only total a paltry 71 runs all told, of which M. Quiterio, who had not taken part in the opening stages of the match and was therefore not eligible to bat, scored 37 in neat style, and MacMillan 15, Curtis-Hayward took five wickets for 29 runs, and Eddis got four very cheaply at the finish. Following on the Telegraph Club did slightly better, and lost four wickets for 59 runs, Quiterio again and Walkem showing up well. They were, however, soundly beaten by 176 runs on the first innings.

BALLYGUNGE C. C. vs. THE SCALLYWAGS.—Quite a good game resulted in the meeting of these teams on the B. C. C. ground, Runs came fast throughout, there were 9 double-figure contributions, including one of 96 by Mr. Mytton, who can bat above a bit and knocked the Scallywags' trundling about right merrily till he was bowled and neatly caught by Miller. White and H. M. Sherman made useful additions to the Ballygunge score which closed for 248. The visitors with 44 from Tod, 40 from Miller, 35 from Milne and other useful tens and twenties knocked up 207 for 9 wickets. There was some fairly good bowling on both sides. Score :—

CALEDONIANS vs. 79th R.G.A.—Wretched fielding and batting very nearly lost this game for the Caledonians. There being no fewer than thirteen catches missed by the home team, the match was played on the Caledonian ground, and about as poor an exhibition of batting as could be well imagined. The soldiers had first innings, and despite some excellent bowling by Chandler, who got six for 27, managed to knock up 108 runs, mainly through contributions of 36 from Gunner White, 27, not out, from Gunner Toyson, and 14 from Sergeant Doyle. Had fifty per cent of the chances given been accepted the military should scarcely have totalled 70 runs. The only feature of the Caledonians' innings was a very well played 29, not out, by Byrne and a steady 14 from Meggitt. The rest collapsed hopelessly before Humphreys and Allison, both of whom bowled with great judgment. Time found seven of the Caledonian wickets down for 72, so that in all probability they would have suffered another well deserved defeat. Appended are the scores :—

ABSTRACT OF CATALOGUE.

HAIR WASHES AND LOTIONS.

EUCHRISMA combines in one clear fluid every valuable component, both of a Hair Grease and Wash.

BRILLANTINE: An elegant preparation for the Hair and Beard.

FLORAL EXTRACT: A delightful preparation for cleansing the hair and imparting a beautiful softness and fragrance.

MELLIFLORA: A combination of Pure Honey with extract of Flowers, is strongly recommended as a choice dressing for the hair.

EGG JULEP: This simple preparation of the Yolk of Egg is far superior to the spirituous tinctures generally sold under the title of Hair Washes CONCENTRATED EGG JULEP, in Toilet Jars. Will keep good any length of time and in any climate.

THE STIMULATING LOTION. This lotion is recommended by Mr. Truefitt in cases where the hair has fallen off after illness, &c.

THE ASTRINGENT AND TONIC LOTION.

HUILEME: A recherché Hair Dressing, having the advantage of rendering the skin singularly soft, and thus preventing the harsh appearance presented by hair grown through a thickened cuticle.

CAROMA: A natural vegetable product uniting the stimulating properties of petroleum.

SEA FOAM OF COLUMBIA'S SHORE possesses all the refreshing elements of the salt sea spray, and infuses new vitality into the hair.

ELEUSINE: A cooling sedative lotion for use after shaving. All irritation caused by the razor is at once allayed, and a firm, healthful tone imparted to the skin.

NEAPOLITAINE: A soothing lotion to be used after shaving.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

26th October, 1906.

WHAT do the poor unfortunates, who live in beautiful climates and have not the legitimate excuse that we Britishers in our sea girt isles have of making the weather responsible for everything untoward in our outdoor lives, bad play, bad luck bad balls, bad shots, bad lies, all, all are apparently caused by that poor unfortunate scapegoat,—the weather. Startling tales come from Ireland, tales of joy and sorrow, of wedding bells to celebrate that that greatest of great lady golfers, Miss Rhona Kathleen Adair's marriage with Captain Cuthell on Thursday 17th instant at Derrylovan Parish Church, near Cookstown, county Tyrone, then the passing bell was heard when that staunchest of Irish Unionists, Colonel Saunderson passed away. R. I. . Of births to the golfing world we have no record; probably many future Vardons and Braids have entered this world of sin and links during the past Sennight. Then tales are told of disastrous defeats of Bogey, of new Records being made, the old ones being broken and falling into everlasting disuse, but nothing of any great importance claims our attention to the Links of the Emerald Isle, rather does suburbia or the Home Counties carry us away to the haunts of golfers in those areas.

* * * * *

We cannot do better than begin with the open Amateur Meeting held recently, to be exact on Saturday, 13th October, at Surbiton, and considering that this was the first event of the kind organised by the home club, it was remarkably successful and enjoyable. Nearly 80 players, representing 30 different clubs, sent in their names and some of those were sufficiently well known to attract a small gallery. The day was fine after a heavy rainfall during the preceding night and early morning, but although this made the course and greens less keen for the first round, the sun soon put this trifling matter right and by midday the greens were as dry as possible. The two players who appeared to attract most interest were Mr. Harold Hilton and the Light Blue captain Mr. Geoffrey Hoffman, the former, however, did not seem quite to catch his best form, and finished up seven strokes more than the really brilliant 72 achieved by Mr. Hoffmann, who, with that, easily won the scratch prize. In the afternoon, however, the two players reversed their form when the Cambridge man made a very poor start and took 43 to go out; coming home he somewhat retrieved his position, but was unfortunate on the green and ended up the 18 holes in 80 strokes. His 72, however, constitutes a new record for the Surbiton course, the previous one of 75 being held by Mr. O. S. Mays, Smith. The best returns under handicap were made by Geoffry Hoffman (+2) 74+82=156, A. F. Knight (7) 77+83=160, C. P. Dixon (7) 82+81=163. H. H. Hilton (+5) 84+80=164; B. Johnstone (6) 76+88=164; F Stuttaford (6) 80+85=165.

* * * * *

Undoubtedly the Midlands have no player of the same calibre as Mr. Edward Blackwell, and it was a fine performance to win the Howell Bowl, open to members of Worcestershire, Warwickshire, and Staffordshire clubs with rounds of 77 and 75 at Alton. By a curious coincidence, about a month ago, the Malvern Club Professional, G. H. Cawsey, won the Midlands Professional Cup with the same total aggregate, his rounds being 74+78. Mr. Blackwell's score was really better than Cawsey's; he played more consistently good golf; his card only showing one 6 in the 36 holes and the meteorological condition when the Pros. played being infinitely more conducive to low scoring. People in the Midlands of either sex are very keen on the Royal and Ancient Game. The University of Birmingham are quite in earnest, as yet they have no course of their own, but, what is next best, they have a golfing society, and an Honorary Secretary, Mr. C. G. S. Gordon. The Olton Club, though very young, seems coming rapidly to the fore; here the Warwickshire Union of golf clubs held its first meeting, when the two principal events were the Challenge Flag, and the Bainbridge Shield for club teams, the former trophy was carried off by the home club, the latter which is played by two foursomes from each club, also came home to roost. Will. Shakespeare's historic birth-place being one stroke worse. Incessant rain certainly damped the meeting, but judging from the enthusiasm of the players this annual event promises to become very popular and largely attended.

* * * * *

The Midlands covers a large area, but is still only a part of our British Isles, so regretfully we leave them and journey eastward to Frinton in Essex, where an open Amateur Meeting was largely patronized and enjoyed. This place, for the benefit of those who are not geographically wise, is not very far from Colchester, and here as at Surbiton a large entry, including some first-class golfers, ensured a successful meeting. The scratch prize went to the International player Mr. Robert Harris, who went round in 79. Then came Mr. David Forster with 80 (it may be forgotten that he was South of Ireland Champion two years ago). The first prize under handicap went to Mr. E. S. Markham 81—3=78. The afternoon was given up ungrudgingly to Colonel Bogey whom Mr. Forster succeeded in defeating by 1 up, in spite of the heavy weight of plus 4 he was condemned to carry. While talking of Bogey's defeats, a very disastrous one has just been inflicted on him on the Great Orme Links Sidney Ball going round in 72, ONLY 9 strokes below Bogey! Just now numbers of clubs are holding their autumn meetings, and if one scrutinises the results very closely it is astonishing to note, how often the same people take part in one after another, from this, as the majority of golfers are not leisure men, one deduces that business is slack, "but then again" the close observer notices that, as a rule, these meetings take place on Saturday which, like the Sabbath, is really as far as work is concerned becoming more or less a "dies non."

* * * * *

At Sunningdale on Friday and Saturday 19th and 20th, very nearly 100 members of that club took out cards for the handicap competition, in this Mr. R. T. Howard proved successful with 81—7=74, next to him came Mr. H. J. Ross 77—1=76, then Mr. S. C. Leech 90—12=78, etc., etc. As regards Friday's play for handicap prizes and such tantalizing things, Mr. F. Dutton made a bold bid with a fine 76; which for a long time was the best in, but, as is not unusual, at the end of the day, when success seemed assured, Mr. Pritchett came in with 74 nett, there appears to have been a wholesale reduction of handicaps prior to this meeting, Mr. Dutton for instance, having been deprived of no less than 4 at a single swoop. The best scratch score of the meeting was made by Mr. H. J. Ross, one of Oxford's players, not in residence this term, with 77. Other Autumn Meetings which have been largely attended were the London Scottish and the Mid-Surrey; at the former Mr. D. Stanley Froy did well with 78, winning the Autumn Medal, and at the Old Deer Park Mr. Jim. Worthington secured the Club Scratch Gold Challenge Medal Memento with the steady score of 79. Handicap events are perhaps less interesting, but when three people tie at 80 net for first place, it shows that the Committee who arrange these little matters, have their wits about them. For the senior handicap medal Messrs. J. Livingston, A Ritchie, and E. C. Davidson were all equal and now it is nigh time to to "cease firing" and for the space of another fortnight to hold my peace.

Hockey.

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

98RD HIGHLANDERS vs. GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The first game in the tournament was played between these teams on the 5th instant and contrary to all expectations the Medicos were beaten by 4 goals to nil. The Highlanders were in fine form. Lance-Corporal Balanryn, Lieutenant Kennedy and Pte. Stewart scored goals in the first half. Play was more even after the interval and the Highlanders were unable to get through till just before time Pte. Faulds put through the fourth goal.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. R. I. M. DOCKYARD.—This game, on the 6th instant, resulted in a run—away victory for the Scots. They were much too strong for the Dockyard team who, however, played pluckily till the end. The Scots scored four goals in each period.

MOUNTED INFANTRY vs. ROYAL ENGINEERS.—Also played on the 6th instant, a hotly contested game ended in a win for the Mounted Infantry. The first half was devoid of score. On changing ends Captain Johnstone scored for the Mounted Infantry. The Engineers got level shortly after and no side was called with a goal to the credit of each team. Extra time was played during which Captain Johnstone put on the winning goal for his side.

LEICESTERS vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—These teams put up a good game on the 7th instant. The first half was very evenly contested and neither side got through. But on changing ends the Leicesters opened their scoring and before time was called added two more goals. In spite of great efforts the Parel team were unable to score and were thus beaten by 3 goals to nil.

CONNAUGHT RANGERS vs. POONA GYMKHANA.—A fast game was witnessed on the 9th instant when these teams appeared in the lists. The Rangers drew first blood shortly after the start and a few minutes later they added a second goal. The game then settled down for a while, but the Rangers resumed the attack and after repeated attempts a third point was registered just before half time. The second period gave the Gymkhana their only goal, Kindersley putting through. Play was for the most part in the Poona territory for the remainder of the game, but there was no further scoring, the Rangers thus winning by 3 goals to one.

Boxing.

AMBALA TOURNAMENT.

THE Boxing Tournament open to all British troops in India took place at the Central Gymnasium and extended over three evenings, the 1st, 3rd and 6th November. Entries were fair, the boxing good and there was a big attendance on each day. Besides the usual boxing events, results of which are appended, there was an exhibition of wrestling by Sergeant-Instructor Smith, Gymnastic Staff vs. Br. Needham, 52nd Battery R. F. A. Major-General Clements, C.B., D.S.O., who made a speech on the final night after commenting on the fistic exhibitions, expressed himself anxious to see wrestling taken up in the army. The tournament was a great success and those connected with the management thereof are to be congratulated.

Major E. H. Montressor, 1st Royal Sussex Regiment, acted as referee. The judges were Major W. R. Walker, A.V.C., and Capt. the Hon'ble T. Bingham, 15th Hussars. Capt. Y. W. Ley, 2nd North Stafford Regiment, Superintendent of Gymnasia, was responsible for the arrangements. Results :—

The Kennel.

TECHNICAL TERMS.

Apple-headed.—Is a term which signifies a skull round, not flat, at the top—a feature which is seen, in its most marked form, in toy-terriers.

Babbler.—A dog which is noisy, and apt to give too much tongue at work. A spaniel is often said to be a "babbler" when it gives tongue while belonging to one of the mute breeds. It is not a compliment.

Belton.—A name applied to the Laverack setter. A "Blue Belton" is a setter flecked with blue; a "Lemon Belton," similarly with yellow.

Blaze.—A white streak up the middle of the face of some breeds, such as the St. Bernard, Collie, or fox-terrier.

Blenheim-mark.—Is a mark on the skull of the Blenheim spaniel in the middle of the blaze, and of the same orange colour as the body colour of this breed of spaniel.

Breeching.—The hair on the backs of the thighs. Thus, a Schipperke may be described as being "well-breeched," or having "good breeching," signifying that it is strongly featherd on the back of the thighs. A Manchester black-and-tan terrier may be said to have no tan "breeching," or that it is black—as it should be—and not tan at this place. Sometimes a Manchester terrier may be said, briefly, to be "breeched," and this means that it has the objectionable tan behind the thighs.

Brisket.—The portion of the body in front of the chest and below the neck.

Brush.—A term signifying the tail: often used in the case of dogs having heavily-coated tails, as the Collie.

Butterfly-nose.—A spotted or patched nose. The term is not used in the case of young puppies, whose noses will frequently be spotted or patchy as the colour gradually changes from white to black; it is applied to adult dogs whose noses have arrived at the colour they will always be. A "butterfly-nose" is most frequently seen in white dogs, such as the white English terrier, which have to be pure white for show, and the absence of colour tends to produce white skin and parti-coloured noses.

Button ear.—Is the term applied to that form of ear which falls forwards hiding the whole of the inside, as the ear of the fox-terrier.

Cankered-mouth.—Signifies that one or more of the canine teeth is in a cankered or diseased condition.

Cat-footed—Means a dog with short, round feet, the knuckles being also high and well-rounded. It is the opposite conformation to what is known as the "hare-foot," which will be defined in its proper place. The "cat-foot" is a much admired and desirable form of foot in the fox-terrier, fox-hound, and, in fact, most breeds. In a few breeds, such as the greyhound, setters and others, it is a matter of opinion

Character.—Is a term applied when a dog exhibits in a marked form the points and characteristics of the breed to which it belongs. Thus, it may be said a dog abounds in terrier "character."

Chest.—The chest of a dog is not merely such portion of the chest as can be viewed in front, but that part of the dog which extends from brisket to belly.

Chippendale.—A bull-dog is sometimes said to be "Chippendale-legged," that is, its forelegs, viewed from the front, resemble those of a Chippendale chair in shape, being far apart at the shoulders and bowed in to be much closer together at the pasterns

Chop.—The upper lip. A good deal about the "chop" may be heard in a description of a bull-dog, in which the "chop" should be thick and deep, hanging over the lower jaw at the sides.

Clean-Shoe.—A dog, such as the bloodhound, may be described as being able to hunt a "clean-shoe," or "clean-boot," when it is able to track a man by scent, without the aid of aniseed or other strong smelling applications to the soles.

Cobby.—A term applied to a short-backed, compact, well-ribbed-up, dog, as the Pug.

Collar.—A band of white round the neck of the St. Bernard, and an admired point.

Couplings.—The space between the tops of the shoulder blades and of the hip joints. Thus, a dog is said to be long, or short, in the couplings, according as this space is one or the other.

Comb fringe.—The fringe of feather on the tail of a dog, such as the setter.

Cow-hocked.—A dog is said to be "cow-hocked" when its hocks turn in inwards—a very undesirable conformation in any breed

Crest—The upper portion of a dog's neck.

Cushion.—A term applied to a feature in the face of the bull-dog. It is a good point to be able to say a bull-dog is well "cushioned-up," or possessing the necessary amount of "cushion" in the skin of the face behind the chop.

Dew-lap.—The pendulous skin under the throat of a dog. It should be absent in many breeds, as in the terrier or greyhound, but very marked in others as in the Bassethound.

Dew-claw.—Is an extra claw found on the forelegs of all breeds, but on the hind legs of only certain breeds, such as the St. Bernard.

Dish-faced.—Is a term applied to a dog whose face turns up somewhat at the nose; that is, when the nose at the nasal bone is higher than at the stop. Pointers are not unfrequently "dish-faced."

Dome-skulled.—Signifies when a dog's skull is dome-shaped at the top, as in the case of the bloodhound.

Dudley.—A "Dudley" is a dog with a flesh coloured nose. A dog with such a nose has often also light-coloured eyes, and a generally pinkish yellowish countenance, when it is called "Dudley-faced." The name originated from Dudley, in the Black Country, in Worcestershire, from which neighbourhood a number of Dudley marked dogs were said to have come.

Double-nosed.—Occasionally a dog, particularly the bull-dog, exhibits a split septum or nostril, giving the appearance of a double-nose, hence the term.

Elbow out.—The elbow, it need hardly be said perhaps, is the joint at the top of the fore-arm. A dog is said to be "elbow out," or "out at elbows," when this joint, instead of being carried just free of the ribs as it should be in a well made dog, sticks outwardly. This may be the result of weakness in a young puppy; but in an adult dog, except in the case of the bull-dog in which it appears to be accepted, is a decided malformation.

Faking.—Is the term used when a dog's natural appearance is dishonestly interfered with for the purpose of making it appear otherwise than it naturally is. For instance, dyeing white on a retriever's, or Irish terrier's, feet or chest, or colouring a Dudley nose, or performing an operation to make a fox-terrier's ears fall correctly, and similar practices, are called "faking." Trimming a dog's coat, such as the coat of a Bedlington, or wire haired fox-terrier, is not, however, considered "faking." A dog is said to be "faked" when some illegitimate operation has been performed. A "fake" is the action taken.

Feather.—The fringe of hair on the legs, ears, or tail, of some breeds, such as setters and spaniels.

Felted.—When the hair of some long-hair breeds becomes matted through neglect it is said to be felted.

Filled-up.—A dog is said to be well "filled-up" below the eyes when there is no falling away or undue narrowing of the face at this point. The term is frequently used in describing terriers. A well "filled-up" face is a good point.

Flag.—A term for the tail; in use when describing setters and wavy or flat-coated retrievers.

Flews.—The chops, or hanging upper lips of a dog; the blood-hound, for instance, has very pronounced flews.

Freckles.—The specks of colour on the face and legs of some dogs, such as the spaniel.

Frill.—The fringe of hair on the chest of a dog; a marked feature of the Collie.

Froggy-faced.—A term used in the case of the bull-dog to denote a level-mouthed, or over shot, dog. A bull-dog should be considerably under-shot, a "froggy-face" is therefore a bad point.

Furrow.—A deep line, extending from the brow upwards to nearly the occiput, in the bull-dog.

Go-bye.—A term used in greyhound coursing. A "go-bye" is when one dog starting a length behind another passes him in the straight and gets a length in front.

Gooseberry-eyed.—Yellow-eyed.

Grin.—A dog is said to "grin," when the skin of upper and lower jaws do not meet in front, and so disclose the teeth.

Hare-footed.—See also cat-footed. A dog is said to be "hare-footed," when its feet are long, narrow, and projecting in front, like the feet of the hare.

Hare-pied.—A colour: hare-colour and white; fairly common in Beagles.

Harlequin.—A Harlequin dog is one coloured with large, or small, spots of black, grey, liver, or red on a white ground. Harlequin Great Danes are not uncommon.

Haw.—The red inner eyelid of the dog; generally hidden, but very prominent in the bloodhound, and to a less extent in the St. Bernard, otterhound, and old Southern Hound.

Huckle-bones.—The tops of the hip-joints.

Kinks.—Are congenital dislocations in the joints of the tail, very commonly seen in the tails of bull-dogs.

Kissing-spots.—The tan spots on the faces of black and tan dogs, such as the Manchester terrier, King Charles' spaniel and others. The moles on the cheeks of the pug are also sometimes called "Kissing-spots."

Landseer-Newfoundland.—The black and white Newfoundland.

Lay-Back.—A term used in bull-dogs to denote the facial angle, or the slope back from the under jaw.

Leather.—The skin; a term especially applied to the skin of the ear. Thus, an ear is said to be thin in leather.

Level-jawed.—Signifies when a dog's teeth meet properly, and the jaws are neither over, nor under, shot.

Lippy.—A term which is generally applied to a dog with hanging lips, of a tight-lipped breed; such as, for instance, a bull-terrier. The term is therefore not a compliment

Mane.—The heavy coating on the neck and shoulders of some dogs, such as the Collie and the Schipperke.

Monkey-faced.—A term used in bull-dogs, when there is not sufficient depth through the muzzle.

Occiprtt.—The prominent bone at the back of the skull; particularly noticeable in the bloodhound.

Over-shot.—A term applied when the upper teeth project beyond the lower. A fault in any dog.

Pear-shaped.—This has already been described under the head "Chippendale." It signifies that a dog's chest, viewed from the front, is very wide; and below the chest the legs curve in towards the pasterns to form what is called a "pear-shaped" front. The "pear-shape" is, more or less, out of fashion in bull-dogs at present, but at one time it was a much admired point.

Pencil-marks.—The black marks on the toes of the Manchester terrier. A point of beauty.

Pily.—A quality of coat consisting of a short, woolly growth next the skin, through which grows the longer, coarser hair which is visible; such as the coat of the Dandie Dinmont terrier.

Pinched-faced.—A term used in bull-dogs, when the face is not sufficiently broad in proportion to the width of the skull.

Pin-wire.—A term descriptive of the hard, wiry coats of some wire-haired terriers.

Pig-jawed.—When the upper teeth project beyond the lower. An overshot jaw in a pronounced form.

Ring-tailed.—Signifies when the tail curls into a ring at the end.

Roach-backed.—Means when the back rises from behind the shoulders in a curve, which reaches its summit at the loins, and then falls away again to the stern. This form of back, called roach or wheel, is the correct shaped back of the bull-dog.

Rose-ear.—The form of ear which folds at the back, turning backwards and downwards, and showing the inside of the ear, as the ear of the bull-dog and greyhound.

Rump-high.—Is when the back curves up from the shoulders, as in the case of a "roach-back," but does not fall away again from loin to stern. "Rump-high," or "stern-high," is considered a bad point in the bull-dog.

Self-coloured.—A "self-coloured" dog is one that has no black shadings or white markings, but is one uniform colour. It is an objectionable point in the St. Bernard.

Septum.—The division between the nostrills.

Snipey.—Denoting a long, narrow muzzle, falling away below the eyes. A "snipey" face is the reverse of a face "well filled up" below the eyes.

Splay-foot.—A foot that spreads out flat, with the toes well separated. An undesirable form of foot in any dog.

Stern.—The tail

Stern high.—See "rump-high."

Stifle joint.—The hip joint.

Sting.—A tail is said to be "sting-like," when it tapers to a fine point like the tail of the pointer.

Stocky.—A bitch is said to be "stocky" when she appears likely to be a good breeder. The term is not always confined to bitches; a strongly built, lusty dog may also be said to be "stocky."

Stop.—The hollow or indentation between the eyes of some breeds of dog, such as the bull-dog, the pug, and the King Charles' spaniel.

Thumb-mark—A dark mark above the fore foot of the Manchester black-and-tan terrier, like the "pencil-marks," a point of beauty.

Throatiness.—A certain looseness of the skin of the throat, not necessarily amounting to pronounced dew-lap.

Tick.—Small flecks of colour in the white coat of a dog; common in spaniels and setters, and not rare in fox-terriers and other breeds.

Tiger-dog—"See Harlequin."

Tight-lipped.—A dog is said to be "tight-lipped," when it is free from lippiness or flews, as the bull-terrier, the white English terrier and the Manchester.

Trip.—A term in greyhound coursing, and signifies when a dog gets hold of the hare but fails to kill.

Tulip-ear.—An erect, up-right, or picked ear, like that of the Scottish terrier.

Turn.—A term in coursing, and means when the hare is turned at an angle, not less than a right angle, from her course.

Twisted-jawed.—A dog is said to be "twisted-jawed" when the lower jaw has the appearance of being distorted. The deformity is peculiar to the bull-dog; it does not exist in the bone of the jaw, but merely in the soft structures, and is due to congenital injury.

Under-shot.—A dog is said to be "under-shot," when the lower jaw projects beyond the upper, as in the bull-dog.

Up-turn.—See "lay-back."

Well broken-up.—A term used to express the loose and wrinkled skin on the face of the bull-dog.

Wheel-back.—See "roach-back."

Wrench.—A term in coursing, signifying when the hare has been turned at less than a right angle from her course.

Wry-faced.—See "twisted-jawed."

Lieut.-Col. T. P. Woodhouse, R.A.M.C.
Captain G. Hodgkinson, 5th Cav: (S. and T. Corps.)

Honorary Secretary:—Major W. R. Walker, A. V. Corps.

AFTER a lapse of many years a very successful horse show was held it Ambala on 6th November. The entries were numerous and the quality of entries for all classes would have done credit to any Horse show in any country. Great satisfaction was expressed at the decisions of the judges. The Committee were very fortunate in obtaining the services of that well-known expert Mr. J. D. Scott to assist in the Judging, the other judges being Colonel Portal, Capt. Learmouth, Capt. Jackson, Capt. Loch, Capt. Carden and Mr. Orton. The jumping classes contained most of the best known jumpers in India and the jumping was exceptionally good in both classes. Some good horsemanship was witnessed, especially the riding of Mr. McLean in the horse jumping class who won on "Ajax" a horse by no means easy to ride. Genl. Clements rode both his entries in the pony jumping in finished style. The riding of Mr. Reynard, Capt. Milvain, Mr. Owen Symons, Sergt. Gilmour and several others attracted attention. The prizes for all classes were handsome and valuable. The Staff officers were "At Home" on the Show Ground, and by kind permission of the Officers the band of the 1st Wiltshire Regt. attended.

CLASS I.—Bona-fide chargers 14-2 and over.

Col. Eastwood's	ch aus g	Bolivar	...	1

Mr. G. B. Ollivant's	.....	Queensland.
Major R. St. C. Lecky's	b aus m	Comedy.
Col. C. B. Eastwood's	a aus g	Lena.

In all the Polo pony classes the judges spared no effort to ride and test the ponies in every known way. The judges were all well-known polo players and they were thoroughly competent to apply the tests they imposed.

CLASS VIII.—Polo ponies, light-weight, English and Colonials.

Major Crawley's	b aus m	Freda II.	...	1
Major Hobson's	ch aus m	Freda	...	2
Major Crawley's	br aus m	Bell Metal	...	3

Capt. Black Hawkin's	g aus m	Lady Dean.
Col. C. B. Eastwood's	br aus g	Lena.
Hon'ble Mrs. Eastwood's	ch aus g	Frivolle.

A really good exhibition of jumping. The majority of the competitors are previous winners.

CLASS XV.—Children's ponies, all breeds.

Miss Doreen Walker's		Chickabiddy	...	1
Miss Eileen King's		Mary	...	2
Miss Margaret Dundas',		Tommy	...	3

The following also competed :—

Miss Mani Eyt's	g cb m	Topsy.
Miss Caddington's	cb	Topey.
Mr. Billy Beyt's	cb	Tommy.

Chickabiddy is a miniature Suffolk Punch in appearance, such make and shape in such a diminutives pony is rarely seen. Mary is quite a handsome little pony.

CLASS XVII.—Best single pony turn-out.

Major Clifton Brown's	b e g	Audrey	...	1
Capt. Amesbury's	b cb m	Jack	...	2
Major Crawely's	b e g	Jack	...	2

CLASS XVIII.—Driving competition.

Major Causfield's R. H. A.	...	...	1
Capt. Forman's R. H. A.	...	...	2
Col. Eastwood's XII R. L.	...	...	3

The following also competed.—

Capt. R. Milvain	.....	12th Royal Lancers.
Mr. J. A. Scarlett	.....	R. H. A.
Mr. G. B. Ollivant	.....	12th Royal Lancers.
Mr. H. F. Whitby	.....	19th Lancers (F.H.)
Mr. Sinclair.	.....	R. H. A.
Mr. C. Weldon McLean	.....	R. H. A.

Great interest was displayed by those who witnessed the driving competition. The driving was altogether above the average.

CLASS XIX.—Ladies' driving competition, single harness.

Mrs. Eastwood	...	...	...	1
Mrs. Walker	...	...	...	2
Mrs. Hodgkinson	...	...	...	3

Also competed :—Mrs. Carter, Mr. Beyts, Mrs. Ley, Miss. Matson.

The third might have been placed first with a little more pace. Very few "chatties" came to grief and the driving of the competitors was distinctly good. Major R. St. C. Lecky, who superintended and judged these competitions had a hard task in running about measuring width of wheels and "chatties"—a capital way of getting "fit" for Polo tournaments!

CLASS XX.—For the best mounted and turned-out Lance-Corporal or man of the 12th Royal Lancers. Entries limited 2 per Squadron.

Private	Shiplee	...	...	1
Lce.-Cpl.	Philpotts	...	...	2

Lance Duffadar	Sham Singh. 19th Lancers	...	1
Lance Duffadar	Lena Singh, 19th Lancers	...	2

8 entries.

A most creditable turn out and greatly admired by the spectators.

CLASS XXII.—For the best horsed and turned-out team of the Royal Horse Artillery, Ambala. Entries to two teams per battery.

No. 3 Sub-Section	T. Batty R. H. A.	...	1
No. 6 Sub Section	N. Batty R. H. A.	...	2

The teams were shown with their guns, and magnificient teams they were. The prize winner treated the spectators to a gallop round the ring at top speed, going between the jumps and the ropes of the ring with only a few inches to spare with marvellous precision.

The Naturalist.

THE BRAINS OF INSECTS.

WRITING in the Washington Post a correspondent gives some details of the Smithsonian Institution, where are to be found models of brains of all sorts of animals. Many of them, says the writer, are greatly magnified, so as to afford opportunity for comparative study. For just at present an immense amount of interest is being manifested in the study of mind and the phenomena exhibited by the mind apparatus. Not only are men of distinction contributing their brains to science, but demands are being made for the brains of creatures low down in the scale of mental development for purposes of investigation. It is only within a comparatively short time that the existence of an organ properly termed a brain in the lowest orders of animals has been recognised. Of course, very far down in the scale of creation one finds hardly more than a system of nerves and ganglia, with nothing specially recognisable as representing a brain. But even a clam may be said to have a sort of brain, though it is extremely small; it can be dissected and properly identified as the thinking centre or principal ganglion of the creature. This principal nerve bunch or ganglion has direct control over the so-called "foot" of the clam. When it comes to the higher molluscs, such as the squid nautilus, argonaut and other cephalopeds, it is found that they posses quite large and well-developed brains. The ant is famous for its cleverness, and, so, likewise, is the bee. There are very few smarter creatuses than the every-day house-fly, which, while establishing itself as a parasite on man, knows enough from the start to regard him as an enemy implacably hostile. Entomologists say that the cockroach is a wonderfull brainy animal and an equal tribute is paid to the bed bug. The nervous system of the fly is a nerve cord with a series of ganglia strung along it, extending the whole length of the body. This cord corresponds to the spinal cord in a human being or other vertebrate animal. The biggest of the ganglia which is considered as the brain proper is situated in the upper part of the head, and by means of nerve filaments controls the eyes, nouth, and autennæ. The legs, wings and other parts of the body are connected directly with the other ganglia. It is pretty much the same way with a mosquito. Perhaps some persons will assert a mosquito does not possess a high degree of cunning; if so, it must certainly be that the persons in question have had small experience with the insect.

FISHERS RATHER STUPID.

Fishes are comparatively stupid animals, but they have brains too. The National Museum's collection includes quite a number of them. It is noticeable that the so-called "optic lobes," which comprise the thought apparatus immediately connected with vision, are enormously developed. This is because a fish depends upon the sense of sight for getting food, while not requiring much intelligence in a general way for the transaction of its business in life. The brains of fish are small and smooth, lacking convolutions. However the notian that complex convolutions necessarily indicate high mental power was exploded some time ago. The brain of a whale is more elaborately convoluted than that of a man, and the same is true of the porpoise and the elephant. Poor Mr. Frog, who is always getting chopped up for scientific purposes, is found to have a very inferior sort of brain. As might be expected, the brains of turtles and snakes are unimpressive. The snakes of to-day, as Professor Cope once said to a writer, are poor and diminutive survivals from ancient epochs when it was worth while to be a reptile. But as is proved by discovered fossils, the gigantic reptiles of long ago had exceedingly small brains in proportion to their size. Probably an Atlantosaur lizard 90 feet long possessed a brain no bigger than that of a modern cat. These facts are ascertained by examining the cavities of the fossil skulls. A 12-feet alligator of to-day has a brain only about the size of one's thumb.

EVOLUTION OF THE BRAIN.

The brains of animals have been steadily growing ever since the first living creature appeared on the earth. It is known that the mammals of the tertiary epoch, not more than a million or so of years ago had brains very much smaller than the mammals of to-day. Some of the gigantic herbivores of that age possessed brains less in proportion to their size than those of the ancient reptiles. Science nowadays is interested in tracing the history of the development of brain in animals by following the scale of creation up from the bottom, dissecting and comparing. Thus it is learned that the earliest form of brain must have been a mere nevre-cord. In a human being that nerve cord, called the spinal cord, has a lump at one end of it termed a brain. The latter is merely an evolution of the former. Professor Theodore Gill said to the writer that among vertebrate animals the lamprey stands almost at the very bottom in respect to the development of the brain. Next comes the shark which is notoriously a very stupid fish. Above the shark in point of mind is the salamander, and on the next step is the alligator. To find the step next above you must go to Australia, where dwells the strange duck-billed ornithorhynchus—a web-footed animal that lays eggs. Superior in brain power to the ornithorhynchus is the opossum. More intelligent than the opossum is the rat, and, more intelligent than the rat is the hedgehog. Next is the lemur, followed by the monkey, whose only superior is man. This gives a rough notion of the ascent of the brain from the bottom to the top of the kingdom of the vertebrates. The biggest brain in existence is that of the elephant, though not in proportion to the size of the animal. But the matter of proportion does not seem to be of absolute importance as an index of mentality. There is a little South American monkey which, though not particularly intelligent, has a brain bigger than a man's relatively to size. Birds have remarkably big brains. Probably no feathered species has a larger brain in proportion to its size than the chickadee. The crow and the sparrow possess brains bigger than those of most birds, as might be expected, inasmuch as they are so notably clever. It has been ascertained, by the way, that large men have more elaborately convoluted brains than are owned by small men, the only apparent reason being that there is a greater mass of body to be moved. Respecting the nature and development of animals surprisingly little is known. The intellects of insects are very interesting to philosophise about, but any discussion of the matter is pure guesswork. Just a little is known about the senses of insects. There is no question that they possess the sense of sight, touch, taste, smell, and hearing. In addition to these they seem to have other senses which do not belong to human beings. The eye of the house fly is enormously more complicated in its structure than that of a human being and it seems probable that the visual impressions received by that compound organ are different from ours. Insects generally are short-sighted and see stationary objects imperfectly, but they are very sensitive to colour. Ants, for example, are very sensitive to the ultra-violet rays of spectrum, which we cannot perceive. Presumably, the aspect of nature to an ant is far different from what it is to a man. That insects have an acute sense of taste is assumed from the way in which they pick out the sort of food they want to eat. As for extra sense, it is observed that many insects have a wonderful sense of direction—particularly bees. Furthermore, they have the power to communicate with one another at a distance, and this power seems to correspond somewhat to what is called telepathy among human beings.

The Story Teller.

LADY'S BETTY'S "LITTLE MAN."

By W. M.

NOTHING puzzles owners and trainers more than the curious knack their well-kept "good things" have of leaking out and becoming public property. Many an unfortunate wight has been accused of "giving the game away," of "opening his mouth too wide," and many other delinquencies of which he has been as innocent as the proverbial babe unborn.

That "evil is wrought by want of thought" is curiously illustrated by the following story, which is true in every particular, except that the names have been altered to avoid harrowing up the feelings of the little man."

The diminutive individual in question was one of our most prominent jockeys, and by reason of having so much to do with horses in general, and the genus racehorse in particular, Tommy Gill, following the prevailing fashion, invested in a 60 h.-p. motor-car.

Naturally delighted with his new purchase, Tommy, scorning the slower methods of the railway, dashed about from meeting to meeting, at a rate of speed which was more reminiscent of a five-furlongs sprint than conformable to the police limit.

His passion for high speed was destined at length to get him into a glorious fix, which, by the way, his less prosperous brethren had not hesitated to predict for him.

Dashing along a country road, which was none too wide, there flashed upon his bewildered gaze, on turning round a bend, a farm waggon occupying the centre of the road. With a warning hoot, Tommy slackened speed as much as possible, and endeavoured to get through on the rails, represented by a high hedge on this occasion. Unfortunately he had not taken into calculation a small ditch which ran at the side of the road, with the result that the moter, Tommy, and his chauffeur were mixed up in what looked like an inextricable tangle.

No bones were broken, however, and after picking themselves up, Tommy and his chauffeur made the lamentable discovery that they were unable to perform the same kind office for the car, which was absolutely "knocked out."

After the expenditure of some little time and no small amount of unpublishable language, Tommy and his man gave it up as a bad job, and began to question the countryman in charge of the waggon as to the direction of the nearest railway station. The man was hazy on the point, but "reckoned" that the nearest village was "nigh on eight mile."

The flow of Anglo-Saxon with which this information was received, came to a sudden termination as a lady drove up in a smart dog-cart, and, in pulling up to pass the waggon, espied the wrecked motor-car. Tommy was equal to the occasion, and, raising his cap, said—

"I'm sorry to trouble you, but I've had a smash up, and am due at Derby at two o'clock. Can you direct me to the nearest railway station?"

A suspicion of a smile crossed the girl's face, as she looked first at the car and then at Tommy's woe-begone face.

"I am afraid you have very little chance of arriving at your destination in time," she replied. "The only way would be for you to get to Leicester. You might catch the mid-day train."

Tommy's spirits rose as he saw a prospect of triumphing over his difficulties after all.

"How far is it to Leicester?" he asksd.

"A little more than twelve miles from here, I should think."

Tommy groaned audibly.

"It might as well be a hundred," he said, mournfully; "it would take me three hours to walk it."

The vision of beauty in the dog-cart thought for a moment.

"I am going in that direction, and could give you a lift if that will be of any use."

Half a loaf is better than no bread, and with a word to his chauffeur to keep guard over the stranded car, Tommy, with profuse thanks, took his seat in the dog-cart, which the fair driver lost no time in setting going at a fairly smart pace.

Tommy had a keen eye for a pretty face, and cast many a sidelong glance at his companion, his mental summing up being decidedly favourable. "Smart filly, well-bred, too; plenty of blood there, and, by George, she handles the ribbons like an old hand. Not a day over twenty, I'd like to bet odds."

The young lady in question did not appear anxious to talk, but Tommy, feeling it incumbent upon himself to say something, remarked with the air of a connoisseur—

"Nice cob that, looks as if he could go all day and never get tired."

"Yes, but he won't go for anybody but me," she said, laconically flicking her whip.

Mile after mile of road was covered, and the village, which was "nigh on eight mile" had just been passed, when the girl suddenly took out a little gold watch and looked at it.

"We shall only just do it," she remarked, as she replaced it and laid the whip on the cob's back. It was only a sort of caress, but the game little fellow laid himself down to his work, and quickened his stride.

"You don't mean to say that you're going to drive me into Leicester?" asked Tommy, secretly elated.

"That is exactly what I am going to do. I thought you said it was most important," she said, with a quick glance at him.

Words failed Tommy, and he was still endeavouring to find a phrase expressive of his eternal gratitude when they drove into the station yard, with five minutes to spare.

"I'm sure I don't know how to thank you for your kindness," said Tommy, "but if it's any use to you Amator will win the Leger."

"Thank you," she said, laughingly, and as he raised his cap she turned the cob round and walked him slowly out of the the station yard.

Lady Betty Travers smiled for two reasons; one, the absurd impulse which had induced her to befriend this funny little man, as she called him in her mind, the other that he should seek to reward her kindness by giving her a tip, never having backed a horse in her life. But if Lady Betty never wagered on horse-racing she was not averse to the fashionable craze for a gamble at bridge, and that evening saw her quarterly allowance for dress go into the pockets of her opponent at the fascinating game.

Along with the remainder of the family she formed one of a house party for Doncaster race week, and the morning before she arrived in Yorkshire, Lady Betty received a somewhat peremptory note from her dressmaker demanding the settlement of her little account. Consoling herself with the idea that probably her luck would turn, Lady Betty thought no more of the matter, until after losing again that evening she joined a group who were chatting over the prospects of the St. Leger candidates.

Captain Eaton, a great friend of the family, and one of the heaviest betters of the day, was giving it as his opinion that the favourite would win easily, laughing to scorn the suggestoin of a "freak" punter who spoke of Amator. Immediately the name was uttered, Lady Betty remembered her "little man's" tip, and later on contrived to get Captain Eaton by himself. Was there anything in it; if so she might emerge unscathed from her financial troubles.

"Would you do me a very great favour, Captain?" she asked.

"My dear Lady Betty, anything within my power."

"I want to put some money on a horse for the St. Leger. I wouldn't trouble you, only I've never done such a thing before, and——"

"What is the horse?" he asked, readily grasping the reason of her sudden desire to gamble.

"Amator!"

An amused smile came over the astute Captain's face, as he said—

"Why, that thing has no chance; they offer 25 to 1 against it. Whatever made you think of such a brute?"

Lady Betty became rosy reed, and looked down at her dainty shoes.

"Please don't think I'm freakish. Will you bet so that I win five hundred pounds if he comes in?"

"Certainly, if you wish it," replied the Captain, mentally booking the bet to himself. He could tell her afterwards he had forgotten to put it on and save her money.

The day before the St. Leger, Lady Betty and the Captain were walking across the paddock, when she suddenly caught sight of Tommy Gill.

"Oh, there's my little man,'" she exclaimed.

"What little man?"

"The one that told me to back Amator," replied Lady Betty, indicating Tommy.

"Why that's Tommy Gill, the jockey, and he's riding the favourite," said the Captain, and then became suddenly thoughtful.

There had been some pretty strong opposition to the favourite within the last day or to, and the result of the Captain's big "think" was two cause him to transfer his allegiance from the favourite to Amator, for Tommy Gill was noted for keeping a still tongue in his head, and never gave tips as a rule. Under promise of absolute secrecy, Lady Betty told the Captain that evening the story of how she had come to the jockey's rescue, and when the numbers went up for the great race the Captain's big investments had brought Amator to second favouritism.

Amator won in a canter, but to this day the connections of the stable are ignorant of the means by which Captain Eaton landed a fortune for himself and Lady Betty paid her dressmaker's bill.

Solution to Problem No. 15.

THE dealer must clear clubs before losing the lead or his opponents may establish their hearts first, and possibly win the odd trick. A is marked with the three unseen clubs, and must make one of them. Z should accordingly lead the 2 and allow A, who, of course, will put on the 10, to win the trick. By playing thus B will only get one discard, and A will be uncertain at trick 3 which of two suits B wishes led. If he opens spades, and the suit is continued, Z obviously wins the game. If he opens diamonds, Z will be certain of two by cards, and may make three. If he opens hearts, which is probably B's best suit, dummy has a fair chance of winning two tricks in it, or guarding it with a fourchette which will drive the opponents to some other lead. The only alternative lead to the club at trick 2, viz., the queen of diamonds, is not so advantageous, for if the queen wins, Z cannot afford to go on with the suit. He would risk losing two tricks in clubs for the gain of one in diamonds, and scare A off leading the suit, thus enabling B to show his suit with a single discard.

Problem No. 16.

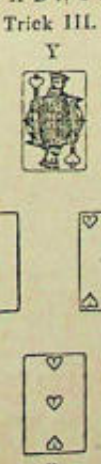
Score: A B, 24; Y Z, 6. Z deals, and leaves it to Y, who declares hearts. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:

Y's Hand (Dummy).—Hearts, king, 8, 7, 6, 4; diamonds, queen, 7, 5; clubs, king, 10, 9, 4, 2; spades, none.

Z's Hand (the Dealer).—Hearts, ace, jack, 10, 3; diamonds, king, 10, 3, 2; clubs, 5; spades, jack, 10, 9, 4.

The play of the first four tricks is as follows:—

Trick I.



Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 0.

Trick II.

Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 1.

Trick III.

Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 2.

Trick IV.

Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 3.

How ought the dealer to go with the hand, and why?

HORSES' WEIGHT AND CARRYING POWER.

IN another column we publish a letter from an Umballa correspondent in which he enquires whether any experiments have ever been made to discover or establish the relations existing between the weight of horses and their carrying capacity. It is obvious to the most casual observer that such relations do exist within limits, but the subject is a very complex one indeed and cannot be dismissed by comparing the avoirdupois of, say, a weight carrying hack with that of its heavy rider and the weight of a light weedy horse with that of the nine or ten stone man who finds it a satisfactory mount. The weight of the horse is a factor taken little into account by any people but the Americans who habitually describe horses by weight: classifying draught horses as heavy, medium, and light by the simple and direct method of weighing them, and applying the same method of calculating power to horses for all purposes.

As regards endeavour to establish any rule of proportion between weight of horse and weight of burden, however, we know of only one such experiment or rather series of experiments: these were made by Veterinary Major Smith in 1898 and were published in the Journal of Comparative Pathology and Therapeutics of December in that year. Dr. Smith's figures and conclusions, if lacking in the absolute finality we seek in scientific matters, are at least interesting. His experiments were undertaken with the view of ascertaining "the effective and not the total weight a horse should carry:" by which we understand the "weight a horse may carry in practical work and not the weight under which he can stand;" in other words Dr. Smith tested the horse as a beast of carriage and not as a table.

Manifestly the experiment presented difficulties at the outset: any experiment which seeks to establish relation between one series of easily ascertainable factors, i.e., weights and another series of factors irreducible to figures, i.e., living weight-carrying power, must present difficulties: and the method adopted was no doubt as satisfactory a one as human ingenuity could devise. We say this with reservations afterwards to be noticed. Dr. Smith began by asking an independent observer of proved judgment to estimate the weight a given horse was capable of carrying; he had 136 horses at his disposal for the series of experiments and he divided these into groups according to their bodily weight after the independent judge had estimated the carrying power of each which he did in units of 7lbs. Thus he had 13 horses weighing each 952lbs., eight of which were estimated as up to 168lbs., and the thirteen, on an average, 170lbs. each. He had eight weighing each 980lbs. (the scale used registering in units of 28lbs.) ten weighing each 1,008lbs., ten weighing 1,036lbs., and fourteen weighing each 1,092lbs. The weight each member of each group would carry was estimated and the mean weight for each group bore uniform proportion to the average bodily weight, thus the 980-lbs. horses had been estimated to carry 175lbs. the 1,008-lb. horses, 177lbs., the 1,036-lb. horses, 178·5lbs., and the 1,092-lb. horses, 192·4lbs. Another series of experiments with rather heavier horses gave parallel results. The judges who estimated the carrying power of the horses had no idea of the bodily weight of the animals: they simply exercised their eyes and experience and put each into the class they thought appropriate, this into the twelve stone, that into the 12st. 7lbs., the next into the 13-7, the 13 or the 14 stone class as make and shape suggested. The principle kept in view was, carrying power at speed (not racing) such as the hunter or cavalry horse is called upon to perform. Without going into Dr. Smith's painstaking calculations in greater detail, we may say that his experiments bore out his preconceived idea, namely, that there does exist a tolerable even ratio between bodily weight and carrying power, and that ratio worked out thus: it requires roughly 5¾lbs. of bodily weight to carry each 1lb. on the back during hard fast work. For horses doing slower work two stone might be added to the burden thus indicated.

Now this is satisfactory so far as it goes, in that it leads to result, not scientifically precise and containing ample margin for error, but of a certain practical value. The horses used were troopers from the stables of heavy and light cavalry, so we can form our own idea of their class and character: for such horses we are willing to accept Dr. Smith's conclusions and his formula as essentially correct, but we cannot accept them without this limitation. The necessity for restricting the application of Dr. Smith's conclusions will have been apparent to everyone acquainted with the Arab and with the sturdy ponies of various Asiatic regions. We have sought in vain for some record which should give us the weights of a few Arabs; it would simplify matters could we have found such for the sake of illustrating our point; the facts happily are too well known to stand in need of proof. Dr. Smith's series of experiments were made of horses whose height no doubt ranged from 15-1 to 15-3: the lightest horses weighed each 952lbs. on the average, and these were classified to carry a mean burden of 168lbs. or 12 stone. Now would 12 stone be considered an excessive weight to put on a 14-1 Arab for a day with hounds or for a long ride that had to be done at speed? We think not: on the contrary we take it that the pony would make light of it. Consider the work done by the Syrian Arabs with which the 19th Hussars replaced their English horses for the Nile Campaign of 1885. These were purchased at an average price of £18 per head; their average height was 14 hands; and each carried on the average 14 stone, the kit of the men being reduced to a minimum: yet of 350 only 12 died from disease during a hard campaign of nine months which included some terribly severe work for days together on the poorest rations and short allowance of water. We must have another scale of bodily weight and carrying capacity for the Arab; even for the low class Syrian for which the Government buyer paid about Rs. 250 per head. We might select some isolated examples to show individual horses carrying heavier burdens: the late Colonel Burnaby's remarks on the ponies he rode on his famous journey to Khiva will perhaps recur to mind, but for practical purposes the evidence afforded by a large number of horses is much to be preferred. Our correspondent will no doubt agree with us that if scales of weight and carrying power are to possess any practical utility, they must be drawn up with due regard for breed: the Turkestan, Burmese, and Chinese ponies, pound for pound of bodily weight, would beat the English horse out of sight as weight carriers: and we venture the opinion that the English pony would do just the same thing if pitted against his larger compatriot.

It was the first night of a musical comedy, as the variety entertainments put on at certain theatres are called, and a gentleman occupying a stage-box laughed so loudly that he attracted some attention.

"Who is he?" an attendant was asked.

"The author," replied the booze-bearer.

"Are you sure? What bad taste!"

"Yes, he's the author right enough; but, you see, he hasn't heard those wheezes before. They've been put in by the comedians."

A little time ago a young M. P. started to grow a moustache and while it was still in the budding stage he took the opportunity of asking a lady whom he took in to dinner whether she thought it an improvement or not. With somewhat cutting emphasis she said:—

"Since you ask me, Mr.——, I must confess I like your moustache as little as I like your politics."

Quick as lightning came the reply:—

Sporting Notes.

GREAT SCOT has been to the gate once more in England and this time suffered defeat by twelve lengths or so, the winner, an arrant rogue, cantering in ahead of our whilom champion. It is a great pity that the old horse does not show a bit better form, as he should certainly be able to cope with a horse like Gourd even at a difference of 21lbs. or thereabouts.

Another batch of the Bangalore horses arrived in Calcutta this week and the rubbing down sheds are filling fast. Ferguson has brought Long Tom, Contest and the jump horses in the same stable, and holds a very strong hand indeed for the hurdle races at Tollygunge. Pringle's lot include Mr. Bell Irving's disappointments of last season as well as Pendred, Rosanule and the great Steinhager. Work on the course is beginning slowly, as usual, and the chief interest lies in distinguishing and mentally labelling the endless string of new horses on their way to and from the rubbing sheds. By the way the exit from the enclosures is labelled "IN" and the entrance thereto "OUT," but fortunately no one pays any attention to the directions and all is well. . . . . No, not at all; it is usual to go "on" and "off" the track, not "in and out" of it.

It is not surprising that Sacristan's connections fancy the little English horse so much. He has filled out a great deal and is looking splendid. The training track does not appeal to him apparently, but Bradshaw seemed to be coaxing him along very successfully on Monday morning. The American seat looks very perilous on a fresh eager bag of springs like this chestnut, but it stood all the shaking he could give it that day. The public riding track is yet far from ready, but the sand is arriving slowly and hope is rising higher daily. There certainly was a deal of grumbling about this sand at the end of last season, but given a fresh supply about the beginning of February and an occasional application of the hose, this preparation should serve its purpose very well. People were well enough pleased last year until the sand became trodden in and scanty, thus making the going hard and the air dusty. The regrettable absence of Mr. Hutchison on account of illness probably accounts for much of the delay.

The closing meet of the year at the Tollygunge Club went off very cheerily last Saturday, and Mr. Maurice Turner should be well pleased at the astonishing success of his efforts as Honorary Secretary this season. These gymkhana meetings have taken a permanent place in the annual programme of Calcutta racing and there should in future be little difficulty in guiding them on a successful career.

The handicappers, whose excellent work is believed to be mainly due to the careful study and painstaking efforts of Mr. Macpherson, were particularly successful in their last effort, and the three-cornered pony race, in which Pineal, Picture and Ping-Pong finished locked together, displayed a really clever handicap. Mr. Evers rode the winner with great judgment and continued throughout the afternoon to improve the shining hour. At the moment he is enjoying great fortune and making the most of it.

The Fusiliers won their race all right on Saturday and everyone was glad to see them have a turn. Fatima beat her field with ease and is a very taking looking mare, one to make her mark at Tollygunge or out paperchasing in the 14-2 class. Mr. Turner's Bulls-Eye, who ran second in this race, is a newly-landed one and very big for his inches. If he leaps as well as they say, he should be a useful paperchaser. No less than twelve "griffins" faced the starter, and the race was fought out up the straight by Salad Dressing and Lucifer, the two horses that fell in the similar race at the previous meeting. Rejoicing in his unaccustomed feather weight and lifted along at the critical moment by a cut or two of the whip, Salad Dressing astounded his friends and rejoiced the hearts of the book-makers.

When the pony race was called on it was clear that a lot of people knew something. As two out of the three starters had been indulged in a gallop together earlier in the week this was not surprising, but it seems that both stables believed that their own pony had had the better of the dust up and were even prepared to back their opinion. Plenty of money went on at odds on and the books lost a golden opportunity of making a big haul. They could have secured five times as much by giving on point better odds and have swept in the whole bagful on the victory of the outsider.

Sylvia is at her best over a mile and in spite of Mr. Pierson's determined effort to run her off her legs the old mare just lasted it out and beat off Queen of Hearts inside the distance by sheer determination, encouraged by her old friend, Mr. Turner, for whom she always runs a bold race. This was another fine race as Tacore was catching the leaders very fast at the finish, and many were surprised to find that he had not passed Queen of Hearts at the judge's box.

While congratulating the executive on the success of the past season's racing it is hardly necessary to remark that there is still room for improvements on this excellent little course. The track can do with a deal of levelling in certain places, where the water hangs during the rainy season notably at the five-furlong post, the turn at the New House and again just beyond the winning post. Again the hurdle course might be remodelled, the flights being placed right across the track at points well clear of the steeplechase fences. The two first flights as at present arranged make narrow awkward looking places which probably accounts for the lack of popularity of these hurdle races.

We print to-day our first edition of Trainers' Lots for the season. The list is as complete as we can make it at present and will be amended from week to week as occasion demands. It does not embrace every horse or pony in the Calcutta training stables, being confined chiefly to those animals who have so far figured in the entries and may be considered to be in preparation for the coming meetings.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—The 30th Lancers (Gordon's Horse) held some point to point races eight miles out of Bangalore on the 17th instant. The regiment are in camp at present and Colonel Steel and his officers were "At Home" to their friends. Notwithstanding a more than indifferent road, a large company assembled, travelling out by motor, saddle, or on wheels. H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore, the Yuvaraja, the Hon'ble Mr. S. M. Fraser, British Resident in Mysore and Mrs. Stuart Fraser, Colonel and Mrs. Wortabet, Colonel O'Brien, 14th Hussars, Colonel Atkinson and many other ladies and gentlemen were present, and much enjoyed the hospitality of the gallant Lancers.

Although not the legitimate game, some good sport was witnessed. The heavy and light weight race for horses, was run over simultaneously a course of about 3½ miles, and though the obstacles were not formidable the time was excellent, about nine minutes. The prize for heavy weights (12st. 7lbs.) was won by H. H. the Mabaraja of Mysore's Ladybird, ridden by Captain Heale, the Maharajah's tutor, who was second by a couple of lengths only to Mr. Burmester, a light weight, who rode Mr. Corne's horse Boris. Other heavy weights were Major Graham and Captain Evans, and other light weights were Mr. Spinks, who should have won easily on the Gander had he not mistaken the winning flag, Mr. Walker (first whip of the Gordon's Horse Hounds who was third), Captain Muspratt, Mr. Maydwell, Mr. Pile and Captain Dennistoun. The pony race was over nearly three miles, and there were only four starters. Mr. Skinner, R.A., on his own pony, Rory, made all the running and won comfortably. Captain Dennistoun on Tiola was a good second, but came a very nasty crumpler just at the finish, his pony stumbling over a rut and coming neck and crop. The rider lay for a few moments and things looked ugly, but it was only a case of being knocked out of time, and everyone was much relieved, for Captain Dennistoun, old Etonian, A.-D.-C. and Whip to the Ooty Hounds, is a general favourite in Southern India. Messrs. Daun and Mattisson were the other starters in the pony race. Colonel Steele, commanding the 30th Lancers, said a few well-choosen words, thanking Bangalore society for the support which had been accorded to the Gordon's Horse Hounds during the past season, and a very sporting and pleasant evening concluded by the presentation of the prizes by Mrs. Wortabet.

At a Special General Meeting of the Madras Race Club, held on the 13th instant it was decided to cancel the following three Race Meetings for which the prospectuses have been issued already, and to hold a big Race Meeting very shortly for which a fresh prospectus will be issued :—

Xmas Meeting to be held in December 1906.
Winter Meeting to be held in February 1907.
March Meeting to be held in March 1907.

Colonel G. J. Younghusband, of the Guides, Mardan, has been, we much regret to say, rather badly injured as the result of a polo accident. His pony came down and rolled over him two or three times.

Mr. Harry Goldspink arrived in Calcutta last week and will soon be busy with his clients we have no doubt. He had some rather curious experiences at the recent Poona meetings and some of his little stories concerning the doings there are distinctly funny.

The Lahore Hunt Meeting on Thursday, the 15th instant, brought out quite a good field and some well-known cross-country performers among them. Mr. Teesdale, the Deputy Master, carried the horn and with eleven couple showed quite good sport. Most of the going was capital; they lost their first jack, scent entirely failing near the Ferozepore maidan, but they bagged their second in a sugarcane khet beyond Jiwana.

Included in our Turf news to-day are the full details of the Caulfield Cup, the result of which we gave our readers in a recent Special Telegram.

We have received, through the courtesy of Messrs. J. J. Miller and Co., publishers of Melbourne, a copy of Volume XXII of their indispensable "Australian Chronicle," which embraces the period from February to July of the current year. Needless to say the present volume contains all the features of its predecessors, which have made this publication of such use and interest to racing men.

We direct the particular attention of our readers to the East Indian Railway notification regarding Christmas and New Year holidays, which appears among our Sporting Advertisements in the middle of the paper. It is of special interest to all who will be travelling on the line about that time, the generous reduction in the price of tickets being peculiarly soothing to trippers or those whose business carries them over the E. I. R.

We are glad to announce that very good progress has been made with the Calcutta Kennel Club and that already the membership is numerically strong enough to assure success in the carrying out of its objects. Mr. E. A. Lyon has returned to Calcutta and will soon be calling a meeting at which the puce Committee will be elected and the rules formulated. Meanwhile arrangements for the Dog Show, which will be held late in January, are in hand and we may shortly expect to see the prospectus.

A very large pike is reported as having been caught with rod and line in the siding adjoining the Erewash Valley Railway near Shipley Gate. The fish took a large live-bait, and displayed great determination before the angler succeeded in getting it safely to bank. It was of enormous dimensions, and weighed 34½lbs. A Nottingham gentleman (Mr. T. Barnett), who formerly rented the pond, states that he has previously hooked the leviathan, only, however, to have his tackle smashed up by its terrific plunges into the weeds.

The largest pike we ever saw weighed just over 31lbs.: it was caught by a boy in the Welsh Harp, "which is Headon way," and we watched the struggle and successful landing. This was in 1870 (if we remember rightly), and Mr. Warner, the proprietor of this famous old "pub," had it stuffed and exhibited. In 1890, when we revisited England, the gallant pike was still in his glass case over the bar.

It is indeed high time we had Protection! The following story has been imported from Belgium, and has created much excitement and indignation in the British Anglers' Fish Tale Trust, which was recently formed for the supply of high-class fish tales, verified by affidavits, to all angling clubs in the United Kingdom. The following is the yarn. Fishing in the River Meuse, a few days ago, an angler first caught a pound perch. Hardly had the fish's nose appeared above the water than up came a four-pound pike, and gobbled it up. The fisherman then proceeded to wind in, but to his astonishment another pike—a huge fish weighing 13lbs.—seized his smaller brother and swallowed him at one gulp. When the "catch" was landed, the fish were found comfortably ensconced, like finny Jonahs inside one another, the total weight being 18lbs.

Those who have done much trout-fishing will admit that these fish are most mysterious in their changes of colour and shape. Dark, even black, fish are found in some pools, whilst other waters contain yellow and silvery trout. It is generally supposed that there are different species of trout, but the experiments of Sir Herbert Maxwell seem to show that there is only one species which changes in colour and other characteristics according to environment. A small lake was stocked by him with trout of different varieties, including the Loch Leven trout (Salmo levenensis), generally understood to be a distinct species. Owing to the absence of running water, the trout did not breed, and fresh fish were turned in nearly every year. The result was, says Sir Herbert, that, whatever difference, specific or otherwise, might be apparent in the fish at the time they were turned in after two seasons, at most, it became absolutely impossible to tell from their external appearance to what variety they originally belonged. They all lost the trout markings, and assumed a very silvery appearance. "I have taken some," says Sir Herbert Maxwell, "which, had the loch possessed any practicable connection with the sea, I should have pronounced at first sight, without hesitation, to be salmon-trout." It is evident that we have much yet to learn concerning the salmon tribe. Are they all one species, and the variations merely caused by different conditions?

A good deal of diversity of opinion seems to exist among sportsmen as to what age geese attain to. We read that in the establishment of Mr. John Macpherson, taxidermist, of Church Street, Inverness, can be seen a beautifully-set-up specimen 32 years of age. It would be interesting to know if this is a record as far as goose life is concerned. The bird came from Benalder Dalwhinnie, Inverness-shire.

The directors of the Sydney "Zoo" were sued the other day by a speculative litigant, who claimed £200 on the ground that charges were made for admission on Sundays, and that, therefore, it was a "disorderly" place under the meaning of Act 21 of the reign of George III. The Judge dismissed the case.

An interesting experiment in the acclimatisation of trout has been recently made in the British Central Africa Protectorate. A previous attempt to hatch out the ova in January last failed, chiefly because of the excessive heat experienced on the journey. The second consignment of ova, therefore, was sent out so as to reach Chinde in the first week in July—the coldest month of the year. Rainbow trout ova, in a rather advanced condition, were taken out to the number of 5,000, packed in a carefully isolated case. Six ice chests went with them to keep them cool. Those that survived the journey were deposited in a specially prepared pond on the Zomba Mountain Plateau, where they rapidly hatched out. At the end of the third week of July there were 200 live trout, which, after being kept under observation for some weeks, will be put into the Mlumgusi river. It will be interesting to know how they take to their new surroundings, and whether there is good prospect of their successful acclimatisation.

A familiar Viennese figure has just disappeared in the person of Karl Bergauer, the horse-dealer, who died on the 29th ultimo at the advanced age of eighty-seven.

He was a relic of the old days of mad wagers and eccentric sporting feats, which modern society scarcely tolerates. The Extrablatt gives a picture of him as he used, till quite lately, to caracole down the Prater Avenue in silk hat and swallow-tail coat, with his long white beard flowing behind him, and recounts many of his former exploits, which are within the memory of those of his circle who have outlived him.

He was of good birth and considerable fortune, but he soon ran through his money and took to horse-dealing. He acquired great celebrity for his success in breaking and taming the wildest and most unmanageable brutes.

As an example of his methods may be cited the incident in the Stadttheatre, where a horse had to be brought on to the stage, and there mount an artificial hillock. A steed was borrowed for the general rehearsal, who climbed up the wooden erection quite obediently. When all was over, though, he refused to come down the steps at any price, and threatened to demolish the whole of the adjacent scenery.

Just as the director had resolved to shoot the creature so as to be able to give the evening performance, somebody suggested sending for Bergauer.

He came at once, and swinging himself into the saddle with a chirrup, took the recalcitrant horse down and out of the wings without the slightest difficulty.

He declined any fee, so the director suggested "At least I must give you a kiss in return." Looking slyly round, Bergauer answered that he might perhaps entrust some of the lady artists with this task, whereupon one and all fell upon him and kissed him heartily.

One of his most daring bets was that he would jump a stiff hurdle in a dog-cart. An old hunter was harnessed, and they went full speed at the obstacle. The horse rose at it just as if he had nothing behind him, but Bergauer, timing himself exactly, rose at the same moment and with a spring seated himself on the animal's back. The trap was smashed to pieces, but neither horse nor man were hurt.

He once went to stay at a mill near Aspern, and the miller's wife sent him to sleep in a loft. There he found three large leathern wallets, and, pricked by curiosity to open them, saw that two were filled with massive silver candlesticks.

Out of the third grinned a human skull with a crown of thorns, and snakes writhing from the eye-sockets. It was, however, not a natural skull but carved out of one solid piece of ivory. The miller's wife then told him that after the battle of Aspern Napoleon had slept at their mill, and had, in his hurry, forgotten the three wallets. Her mother had told her that the Emperor used to pray before the skull, which he regarded as a fetish, but that she was afraid of the thing, and he might take it away if he liked, whilst she kept the candelabra.

Bergauer brought it to Vienna and showed it to the celebrated antiquarian and anatomist Hyrtl, who was of opinion that it had come from some Spanish monastery, although he was astonished at the enormous size of the single piece of ivory.

He took it to Berlin and London, but none of the offers quite satisfied him, and eventually he tried America. On landing at New York he found a telegram announcing the dangerous illness of his wife. Leaving the skull with his friend to sell he came back to Vienna, and was never able afterwards to find traces of either.

THE Annual General Meeting of the Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association will probably be held on Wednesday, the 5th proximo, at 6 P.M.

The substitution of alcohol for petrol as fuel for motors seems likely to be generally adopted in the near future as the chemists have proved equal to the occasion and have found many more substances from which the spirit can be economically distilled than the grains or fruits usually indented upon. In mid Europe such tubers as the inferior varieties of potato have been laid under contribution, the parings of apples, pears and all possessing saccharine matter, though maize and millet give the largest proportion of spirit. A glance through Roxburgh and his commentators, will indicate what an immense number of jungle products we have at command all over the country capable of producing coarse alcohol, all easily cultivatable and as highly productive as any Europe or America can furnish, with practically unlimited ground for raising them : yams, sweet potatoes, eka roots, wild and cultivated plaintains and a host of others. The demand for alcohol is likely to become as great as that for petrol, so that the distillation is well worth the attention of planters and zemindars.

The St. Xavier's College Annual Athletic Sports Meeting, held on the College grounds last Saturday, went off in a way that reflected the highest credit on promoters and competitors. St. Xavier's entered into the spirit of the meeting thoroughly and the critical eye failed to pick a single hole in the arrangements. Not a single item of gear was wanting, the programme was well arranged, the ground made the best of the course well kept, the officials diligent in their duties and good order and punctuality reigned supreme. In short one does on occasion attend a meeting, run by veterans and supported by adult competitors, the executive of which might profitably take a leaf out of the St. Xavier's College book. We give details in another place.

By defeating the South of Scotland by 32 points to 5 on the 13th instant the South Africans scored their fifteenth successive win. They beat Cambridge University by 29 points to nil three days before and up to then had made 354 points as against 21 put up against them. It was reserved for Scotland to make the first dent on their shield, for at Glasgow they were at last beaten by 6 points to nil.

The All-India Hockey Tournament will be held at Allahabad, the commencing date being Monday, the 24th February, entries closing on the 31st January. Further particulars can be gleaned from the advertisement among our sporting notices this week.

The Boxing Tournament in connection with the Minto fête will be held from the 27th January to the 5th February. There are competitions for Heavy, Middle, Light and Feather Weights which are open to the Navy, Army and Volunteers.

The Association Football Tournament for the Meakin Challenge Cup will be held at Mhow, beginning on the 14th December.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—The Southern Hockey Tournament for the Indian Army will be decided here during the ensuing week. Three teams entering from Secunderabad played off locally, the 61st Pioneers coming out winners, and beating the 2nd (Q. O.) Rajput L. I. and the 97th Deccan Infantry. The 83rd Wallajabad L. I. come from Bellary, the 64th Pioneers from Ootacamund, and the 30th Lancers and 2nd (Q. O.) Sappers and Miners have entered in Bangalore, making five teams in all to play off in this station. The cup is a challenge one, but the native corps are showing greatly increased keenness about this competition.

The South Indian Reliability Motor trials, which are being arranged by Mr. G. V. Scovell, the keen motorist who won the "Economy" prize in the Delhi-Bombay Motor trials promise to be interesting. They take place on the 27th, 28th and 29th of December, and will include motor bicycles for which a separate prize will be offered. On the first day the cars will run from Bangalore to the Kolar Gold Fields and back, a distance of about 120 miles, the motor bicycles only running to the Gold Fields and remaining there for the night. The second day will see the cars run from Bangalore to Katpadi (130 miles), the motor bicycles going in at Kolar and also going to Katpadi. And on the third day cars and bicycles travel from Katpadi to Madras, finishing at St. Thomas' Mount. Subsequently the motors will proceed in procession to Madras. Entries close at the end of the current month, and besides the separate prizes for motor bicycles there will be prizes for two distinct classes of cars ("A" and "B"). These classes are, respectively, for professional cars or for cars owned by amateurs and driven by professionals and for cars owned and driven by amateurs. Every arrangement for tiffin on the two opening days and for accommodation during the stay at Katpadi will be made by Mr. G. V. Scovell. Any firm can enter a motor bicycle, but it must be driven by a member of the Union. The whole programme has been most judiciously arranged.

We are glad to hear that new members are joining the Calcutta Cricket Club in large numbers, and that a large military contingent has lately been elected. It is not yet known, however, whether Major W. C. Hedley, R.E., will find time to play or not, and it is clear that some new blood in the bowling line must be found without delay. The display against Ballygunge with T. Curtis Hayward and F. H. Stewart away was feeble in the extreme. By the way we hear that Stewart leaves for home by to-day's mail, and it will presumably be necessary to elect another player to captain the club elevens in his absence.

The Cambridge University Cricket Club have elected the following officials for the current year :—Captain—M. W. Payne ; Honorary Secretary—R A. Young and Assistant Honorary Secretary—J. N. Buchanan. Payne and Young were of course the heroes of the last 'Varsity match, the former for his meteoric hitting, and Young for his mammoth score, while Payne is a wicket-keeper with very few equals in England. Buchanan too is a most promisig all-round cricketer, and altogether the Light Blue prospects are, so to speak, rosy ! Oxfords are somewhat dubious as yet.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 2nd November 1906.

THE sorrows of the suffragists have been with us all the week. The shrill voiced females having refused to give security for their good behaviour won the cheap martyrdom of Holloway : and to such a pitch of folly are some of us come, O Editor ! that the proceeding has brought about as much sympathetic attention upon these martyrs as their souls could crave. The papers have been flooded with letters protesting and indignant from people who ought to know better—among them Messrs. Isaac Zangwill, Bernard Shaw, and George Meredith : literary persons you observe. The most sensible contribution to the correspondence has been that of Miss Violet Markham who begs the friends of the martyrs not to "plead feminine charm as an exemption for consequences following on foolish and undignified behaviour." On Tuesday the Home Secretary induced the Magistrate who committed the women to make them "first class misdemeanants" or the equivalent, which would relieve them of the necessity of wearing prison dress. But no ! at least one noble-minded female refused the privilege preferring to make the most of the advertising opportunity. Mrs. Pethick Lawrence was turned out of prison on Saturday : she did not want to leave but she was ill and the heartless prison doctor insisted.

Mr. Pethick Lawrence's motive in publicly offering to subscribe £10 to "the Cause" for each day his wife was kept in prison has been cruelly misunderstood. So was Mr. Baldock's look of vicarious self-sacrifice at the Hyde Park meeting on Sunday. His air of lofty triumph was so marked when Miss Pankhurst referred to the fact that Mrs. Baldock was one of the prisoners some ribald creature shouted "no wonder he looks so happy ;" which provoked a roar of laughter and entirely spoiled the atmosphere of the proceedings. The speaker informed the meeting that "hundreds of thousands of women are ready to go to prison for the sake of the suffrage :" but curiously enough there were not two score at the meeting she addressed : perhaps because the day was showery. One recalls Catherine of Cleves who you remember "did not mind death but she could not stand pinching."

On Wednesday the King, wearing the uniform of the Colonel-in-Chief of the Scots Guards, received the colours of the recently disbanded 3rd Battalion at Buckingham Palace. The Queen and Princess Victoria were also present. It was a strictly private function ; the battalion was represented by about 60 men with a dozen officers, pipers, buglers, and drummers. It is freely reported on the soldiers' clubs that the King likes none of the proceedings of C. B. & Co. as little as he likes the reduction of the army in the name of economy.

I hoped the practice of holding public meetings in Trafalgar Square would be left to Labour members and their kind. Lord Hugh Cecil, I imagine, is the first, and one would like to think, also the last representative of the upper classes to address the meeting from the pedestal of the Nelson Column. What time Miss Pankhurst was holding forth in the Park, Lord Hugh Cecil in the Square was addressing a huge gathering assembled to protest against the Education Bill. We were growing very tired of Education Bill and are hoping, now it has reached the Lords, we shall soon hear the end of the paltry squabble.

Mr. Haldane made an interesting announcement at Reading on Saturday when he opened the new buildings of the University College. Premising that supply for large forces of men is a science in itself, that the whole organisation of the business of war needed men trained in schools other than those now open to officers, he announced that a certain number of officers are to be trained in the London School of Economics which has sent out successful administrators for great undertakings in civil life. Thus he hopes to lay the the foundation of a new staff of administrative officers who shall be able to cope with all mysteries of transport and supply and the wiles of contractors. The idea at any rate sounds practical.

"The Merveilleuses" produced at Daly's on Saturday night is more like a comic opera than anything we have seen since the Golden, or Gilbert-and-Sullivan, age. The piece is adapted by Captain Basil Hood from Sardou's book ; the Lyrics are by Adrian Ross and the music by Hugo Felix. The music is good if not striking in its originality ; indeed one could trace the influence of familiar composers more than once ; but on the whole it is tuneful, appropriate and, in places, stirring. The piece is a connected whole and you follow the plot from curtain rise to the end of Act III : so to our muttons. Place and epoch, Paris of the Directory when ladies dressed after the fashion believed to have been popular among Greek goddesses. The style must have opened to objections for street wear but for the boards it is admirable. Business really begins when the half dozen Merveilleuses rush upon the stage in flight from the mob who want to duck them in the Palais Royal Gardens, and Lagorille and Dorlis aristocrats, with the aid of various dandies, barricade the ladies and themselves in a tent of the café du Caveau. Lodoiska, the leading Merveilleuse, sings to the mob, but they do not disperse till Lagorille, formerly a barber, knocks over the mob leader. Thus Lagorille becomes the champion of Lodoiska and her friends and they promise him their aid. St. Amour, Secretary of the Director Barras, is endeavouring to involve both Lagorille and Dorlis in a charge of plotting to assassinate him : two comic police agents are employed to watch the movements of the two and the whole story turns on the successful endeavours of the Merveilleuses to outwit St. Amour. It must be admitted that the plot becomes a little intricate and difficult to follow at times, but it unravels itself as we go on and the difficulties do not trouble us much. The piece owes much to the vigour and "go" of Miss Evie Green who plays Lodoiska and sings gloriously. I have never heard her to better advantage. Mr. Geo. Graves was to have played St. Amour, but he was taken ill on Thursday and Mr. W. H. Berry took his place with remarkable success. Messrs. Fred. Kaye and Fred. Enney were the two police agents and were sufficiently delightful as sententious idiots.

Many of the songs are very charming. Miss Evie Green sang "The Merveilleuses" delightfully. Mr. Robert Evett as Dorlis has a song-recitative in the first act describing his woes as a soldier under Napoleon which caught the fancy of the house at once. A chorus "Don't forget the proper tune" which is sung to the winding of turnip watches was also very popular. Miss Denise Orme as Illyrine, St. Amour's wife, made a hit with a cuckoo song and the police agents' duet "We're not so silly as we look" was really very comical. The new "comedy opera" ought to enjoy a long life.

Mr. Tree revived "Colonel Newcome" at His Majesty's on Monday. Nearly all the ladies are new to their parts but are quite equal to them. The success of La Milo or Mr. W. T. Stead's valuable approval of that statuesque statue lady (which is set forth in large print on the Pavilion walls as an attractive advertisement) appears to be giving the living statue business a fillip at the music halls. The palace has started a statue lady in the person of Galatea, otherwise Miss Maude Odell. Galatea, clad in white tights, poses on a pedestal as Sappho, Psyche at the Bath (after Leighton) Artemis and other familiar statues or pictures, and does it remarkably well. So perfectly still is she for the space of a minute or more when the red curtains are drawn aside it is really difficult to believe that the statue is alive.

Saturday saw the Balaclava Matinée at the Alhambra. This is the sixth year it has been held and the function was even better attended than in previous years. The usual collection was made

To Dobson & Son, Leicester.

Sirs,—In reply to your enquiry as to whether I have derived satisfaction from your Alterative Horse Powders, I beg to say I should not have sent for other lots had I not found them beneficial for their intended purpose. I don't approve of physicing horses, but these Powders seem to possess a harmless and special virtue. The object of your enquiry being to use my reply as a testimonial, you are at liberty to do so for what anybody may think my opinion worth.

I am, yours faithfully,
E. S. BURNABY.

The Hippodrome has a new turn in the shape of a very old one: to wit, a crew of native conjurers very good of their kind. The basket trick was the best. In this, one of the men is doubled up swathed in a net and crammed into a basket placed on a table. A chudder is thrown over it and the basket begins dancing clumsily, what time the net is thrown out. Then a sword is, apparently, thrust through the basket in such wise as to spit the occupant in a dozen different directions: then one of the conjurers jumps into the receptacle and stamps about in it. The chudder is once more thrown over it, more sword probing follows and finally the basket is opened to reveal the original conjurer folded up tightly as ever. I have been trying to work up an interest in the proceedings of the Soap Trust, but without much success: I suppose its doings are of public interest because one of the displays of the Hippodrome bioscope is a scene of soap manufacture: the audience applauded this but less cordially than it did the troubles of a policeman which followed.

The five convicts who escaped from Gloucester goal on Thursday night showed more ingenuity in getting out than resource in getting clear away. The escape was planned with simplicity and worked out neatly: one convict rang his bell when he heard the door of his neighbour's cell being unlocked, reckoning on it that the warder would answer his call without troubling to relock Number Two's cell. This was just what the warder did and in a moment found himself at grips with the two convicts who took his keys, locked him in another ward in the cell and released three chosen friends. They five then started to leave. They met the governor but easily settled him, emptying his pockets before they locked him up. The gate warder gave most trouble but had no chance against five and the convicts got away. One was done up before he had gone far and went to a railway signal box where he [illegible]ed the signaller to send for the police: the other four, having stolen changes of clothes, retained their liberty until Saturday morning when they were arrested very hungry and footsore, on top of a hayrick: so glad were they to see the police that they promised to stand drinks some day under happier auspices.

Colonel Yorke's report on the Highgate tramway accident which occurred in June last has been issued. Colonel Yorke attributes the mishap to new brake-blocks which did not properly grip the wheels to greasy rails and to the driver's inexperience, the man's action in jumping off the car is particularly condemmed.

A motor omnibus came within an ace of falling into the Thames on Tuesday. Crossing Waterloo Bridge it skidded badly while steering round another vehicle. The 'bus rushed on to the pavement and crashed against the parapet of the bridge, throwing several of the stone pillars into the river. By good luck the machine was brought up by the blocks of masonry below the parapet, but such was the force of the collision that these were dislodged from their bed and very nearly let the 'bus over into the river. A loaded motor 'bus weighs about 17 tons; a fact which the driver does not always seem to realise.

A novelty in "meets" was held on the Embankment on Saturday morning. The Automobile Cab Company paraded thirty new landaulettes (petrol driven, alas!) which have been built to ply in London. The idea is that these vehicles shall eventually supplant the hansom: but ere they do that hackney motor cab men must become reconciled to the statutory scale of fares: which they are not now. A few weeks ago I wanted a motor cab from 2 till 7-30 P.M.: and the man asked 2 guineas!

The L. C. C. has formulated its scheme for the supply of electricity to London. It seeks authority to take over all existing companies and start others over an area of 451 square miles. Borough Councils have laid out nearly 5½ millions on electric generation and these also the Council proposes to acquire. It is a fine large scheme but rate payers have not that confidence in the L. C. C. as a business assembly which would lead them to welcome its scheme.

Mr. Birrell informed the Commons on Monday that the Board of Education "did not con-ider rifle shooting in schools necessary for the purpose of national defence." This valuable pronouncement arose out of questions concerning leave given certain elementary schools to give the boys rifle practice.

ONLOOKER.

Review.

SATURDAY BRIDGE.*

WHEN the series of articles on Bridge appeared in the "Saturday Review" most players who had studied "Bridge at a Glance" spotted the author as Mr. Dalton. "Saturday Bridge" has been heralded in some quarters as filling that long felt want of a really standard work on Bridge, and as doing for Bridge what Cavendish did for Whist. Mr. Dalton in writing this series of articles clearly had no idea that they would be anything but ephemeral, and would be the last man to suggest that they had any claims to be considered a standard work. "Saturday Bridge" is a collection of articles on Bridge with the rules attached, and not a "work." They are particularly interesting, and, as becomes the "Saturday Review," extremely well written. Even a player who has not yet reached that oligarchy of being considered a first-class player may read "Saturday Bridge" with enjoyment, and—if he choose in addition to try and study the book—with very great advantage to his game. Even for the man who has some claims to consider himself a first class player the book probably contains many things that will set him thinking whether he is quite so good as he is considered.

In one respect the book will be bitterly disappointing to a of number Bridge players, in that Mr. Dalton recants his heresy about an original spade declaration at the score of love all. Those who have been in favour of an original spade declaration (under certain circumstances) have always been met with the very damaging assertion "Dalton says only second rate players favour it, and he's sound enough." Mr. Dalton has been admittedly one of the ablest writers on Bridge, and certainly nothing has been written on Bridge that has had the quality of soundness more strongly developed than in his "Bridge at a Glance." In that book he gives us a maxim. "If you are not strong enough to attack, pass the declaration to your partner. Defence is the province of the dummy, not of the dealer." In "Saturday Bridge" he writes:—"Every Bridge player of any experience will recognise the sensation of heaving a sort of sigh of relief when his partner declares spades after he has passed the call on a very bad hand It would certainly seem a sound argument, that a player should not pass the call on such a hand that it will be a positive relief to him to hear his partner declare spades." Subsequently he sums up on page 71 the whole question:—"When the dealer has an utterly impossible hand so that it will come as a positive relief to him to hear spades declared by his partner, then, and then only, ought he to declare spades himself; but when at the score of love, he has any possible element of strength in his hand, however bad the rest of it may be, he had better pass the declaration, provided that he is playing with a partner he can trust. The defensive declaration is a very dangerous weapon to put into the hands of an inexperienced player." Those players who believe in defensive declarations by the dealer, and who are not cranks, never went further. It would have been better, however, if Mr Dalton had given his ideas as to what constituted an "impossible hand," and what constituted a "possible element of strength." The one hand he gives,—Hearts 7, 6; Diamonds none; Clubs, Queen, Knave, 7, 5, 2; Spades, Queen, Knave 9, 6, 4, 3, as a hand on which some dealers would declare Spades, is an instance of the declaration of a "defensive spade" crank. This test of Dalton's may well be recommended to many players in this country, and if it were followed we should soon find that "Defensive Spade Delarations" were not more unpopular than they are in England. At the "Portland Club," we hear that an original Defensive Spade Declaration by the Dealer at love all is looked upon quite as a matter of course, when Dealer holds an utterly weak hand.

It is rather a careless and serious blunder that Mr. Dalton, who not only gives, but is constantly quoting, "The Robertson Rule," should not have taken the trouble to find out what "The Robertson Rule" really is. For instance, Mr. Dalton says the King once guarded counts 5, and the Knave properly guarded counts one, whereas their true values are 3 and 2 respectively. Mr. Dalton also seems to think that the 10 has no value attached to it by Mr. Robertson's formula. It is a matter of great difficulty to give instructions as to what amounts to a "No Trump" hand unless a formula is suggested, and the chapter on "No Trumps" strikes us as rather meagre. His insistence that hands with great strength in Red suits even if they contain three Aces, are often Red suit declarations, is eminently sound How many players, however, would refrain from declaring "No Trumps" with Hearts 7, 3, Diamonds Ace, King, Knave, 10 4, 2, Clubs Ace 8, 5, Spades Ace 9? Mr. Dalton does not agree that seven spades headed by the four top honours constitutes a "No Trumper." This is of course a matter of opinion in which Mr. Dalton is probably in a decided minority, and anyhow it seems hardly worthy of the sarcasm which he lavishes on it.

His chapter on "Declarations to the Score" is admirable, and so too are the chapters "Third hand in a No Trump game" and "The original lead against a No Trump." He very properly strongly condemns Hellespont's absurd proposition that the third player should always finesse holding Ace, Queen, or Ace, Queen, Knave when, as Dalton points out very clearly, the finesse is absolutely wrong, unless the King is with Dummy, or the Knave is doubly guarded in Dummy

Mr. Dalton's remarks about Declaring when the opponents are 24 up without a game to their credit should be printed in very heavy type.—"Above all things" he writes, "never make a desperate declaration because your opponents are 24 up, unless they have already won a game. Do just the opposite. Make an original spade on your own hand as dealer, or declare anything which is likely to prevent them winning the game in your deal." How many a player, who strongly fancies his game does just the opposite. Once again we should have liked to have seen some specimen hands on this soundest, and most frequently violated of all maxims in reference to declaring.

Of course there are many things in the book with which many card experts would disagree. For instance, the hand Ace, King, 9, 8 of Hearts, Ace, Queen, Knave, 5 of Diamonds' 10, 7 4, of Clubs, and 9, 6 of Spades, is a hand upon which at love all we should, as dealer, prefer to go hearts rather than "no trumps," because of being able to stop trumps twice, and having only two spades. Again, the hand King, Queen 10, 6 of Hearts, King, Queen 10, 6 of Diamonds, 9 of Clubs, and King, Queen 10, 6 of Spades, Mr. Dalton says is a heart hand at love all. This hand amounts to 27 by the Robertson Rule—not 24 as Mr. Dalton writes—and we should have no hesitation in declaring "No Trumps." This hand was submitted to some of the best known authorities, and there were three different declarations given!

Mr. Dalton is of opinion that a trump hand is more difficult to play than a "No Trumper," and although most people would disagree with this view, he is doubtless correct. He is also strongly in favour of the Short suit Convention, in preference to the Heart convention, and publishes a long letter by Mr. R. N Cunnington in favour of his contention, but Mr. Cunnington is rather difficult to follow. It is, however, interesting to note that, by Mr. Cunnington's calculation, the opportunity to double occurs under the Short-suit Convention once in 200 times, and under the Heart convention once in 340 times, and the chances of success are about 7 to 1 on the Double coming off playing the Heart Convention, and about 3 to 1 on if the Short-suit Convention be played. Assuming the figures to be correct there does not seem much one way or the other. The odds may be theoretically correct, but from a long experience of Bridge we can only murmer that practice and theory don't coincide. Mr. Dalton is very severe,—but none too severe—on the player who is pleased to call himself "A defensive Red Suit declarer." The players who declare hearts on five hearts headed by two of he minor honours and nothing else of value "have increased, are increasing, and ought to be diminished." The book can of course be criticised in parts, but much of it is beyond criticism. That Mr. Dalton will one day write a better book, and alter some of the things that appear in 'Saturday Bridge," we have no doubt. He has, however, succeeded in writing a book that throws more illumination on the game than any that has yet appeared, and that in a form which is not only illuminating but also pleasurable to read.

A BOOK FOR BOYS.

FROM the pen of Mr. M. Macmillan has emanated a tale of the Third Maratha War entitled "The Last of the Peshwas"—an attractively bound little volume, quite likely to impress the young idea between the ages of twelve and sixteen. Its illustrations—of which there are some half dozen—are nothing if not spirited, and the story, concisely and systematically worked out in itself, is not half bad. To those of Mr. Macmillan's admirers who have perused with interest "In Wild Maratha Battle," "The Princess of Balkh," and "Tales of Indian Chivalry," his latest work will not fail to appeal, while to paterfamilias and others in search of stimulating pabulum for the boys—it is the very thing. There is a ring of sincerity about some of the details of the story that suggests the earlier efforts of Robert Louis Stevenson, while the love-making—ever a thread of the story second to its adventurous episodes—is natural and pleasant. Quite ideal as regards print and general get-up, we are not surprised to see that it is published by that enterprising and energetic firm, Messrs. Blackie and Son, Limited, who do so much to cater for the public taste in the fields of literature. In our present go-ahead age, the latest idea is to combine business with pleasure, and this Mr. Macmillan has done well, in conveying to his readers in their 'teens a pleasant story combined with real historical knowledge of the period.

RED INDIAN FOX-HUNTERS.

THE Fox, as a rule, is a most wily animal, and numerous are the stories of his cunning toward the Indian hunter with his steel traps.

Starvation makes them catch in deadfalls, but they must be very starved indeed before they pull a piece of frozen bait and have a weight fall on their back. The skins of foxes killed during starvation are never so valuable, as the hair then lacks the rich gloss. When small game is plenty, such as rabbits and partridges, and foxes are few, the skins are of a deep richness not seen under other circumstances.

There are several different and distinct colors of foxes of the north country. They are all of the same family, with the single exception of the white or arctic fox. These, apart from their difference of color, differ very much in their characteristics. They are not cunning; on the contrary, they are positively stupid. They will readily catch in deadfalls, and will walk into an open uncovered steel trap in daylight! Again the flesh of the arctic fox is eaten as readily as that of the hare or white partridge; all other foxes are carrion; even a starving Indian would give them the go-by.

Of the other, or true fox, we have many colors and shades of color, and I give them in their cash value rotation, beginning with the black or pole fo : First, black or pole; second black silver; third, silver gray; fourth, black cross; fifth, dark cross; sixth, ordinary cross; seventh, light cross; eighth, dark blue (i.e., lead color); ninth, light blue; tenth, bright red; eleventh, light red; twelfth, arctic white; thirteenth, pale red

Number thirteen is the poorest quality of the fox family, and is worth less than the arctic white fox.

January is the best month for trapping. First, because the fur is then at its primest; and second, food is harder to get and the fox consequently more likely to enter a trap.

Of course any number of trap will catch a fox, but not every trap will hold him. There is such a thing as the trap being too large and strong, as well as too small and weak! When too large and strong it catches too high up the leg, and being too strong it breaks the bone at the same time; and then in cold weather it's only a question of a few minutes for the frozen skin and muscles of the leg to be twisted off and Master Fox runs away on three legs, ever after to be too cunning to be caught in a trap. On the other hand, if the trap is too small and weak it catches the fox by the toes, and he either pulls his foot clear at once or the toes, becoming frozen and insensible to feeling, are twisted off; and this if anything, is a harder fox to circumvent than the one with half a leg.

The proper trap to use is a Newhouse No. 2. When properly set it catches just above all the fingers, as it were, or where the paw or foot would correspond with the thick part of the hand. There is a good, solid hold of muscles, sinews, etc., there, once the jaws are fixed, they hold the fox to the death.

Fox hunters are very particular to keep everything connected with the trapping away from the house or camp, even wearing an outside pair of moccasins, which are peeled off and hung up with the snowshoes.

The hunter generally places his trap or traps on some bare point jutting out into the lake, or some narrows, or near as clump of willows at the edge of barren grounds, or any other place his judgment tells him a fox is likely to pass. The fewer signs the better; therefore instead of the chain being tied to a picket, a stick four or five feet long is slipped through the ring on the chain up to the middle. Here it is securely fastened, so that it won't slip either way. A trench, the length of the stick, is cut down in the snow with the head of the axe, and the pole laid therein about a foot beneath the surface. Snow is then piled in and the whole packed hard.

The trap is now opened, and the snow packed down with the back of the man's mitt, large enough to lay the trap and spring therein. The trap is now open and about 2 inches lower than the surrounding snow. The hunter now begins carefully to lay five flat balsam bows or clusters of needles from the palate out to the jaws until the whole is covered; then very gently he either dusts light snow over this until it has the same appearance as the rest, or he takes up two large pieces of frozen snow and rubs them together over the trap until all is covered.

Chopped up frozen meat or fish, a supply of which the trapper is provided with, is now sprinkled or thrown about, beginning 15 or 20 feet off, gradually getting more plentiful as the trap is neared.

With a brush broom the hunter dusts his snowshoe tracks full as he recedes from the trap until he is off 30 or 40 feet; after that no further precaution is necessary for an ordinary fox. But for an extraordinary one I could relate a hundred different ways of setting traps and bait to over-reach the wily old fellow; but in most cases it is time wasted, the fox eating the bait and turning the traps over night after night much to the vexation of the hunter.

It is a pretty sight to see a black or silver gray fox jumping in a trap on the pure white snow. I went one time with Wa-sa-Kejic to see his traps in the barren grounds back of the post. I was following in his snowshoe tracks steadily, and we were just topping a small swell in the country, here and there clumps of black willows. All at once he stopped so suddenly in his tracks that I fell up against him.

"There," he said, "look at that!" My eye followed his finger, and there jumping and struggling to get away was a large black fox.

"Let me shoot him," I exclaimed drawing my gun cover as I spoke.

"Oh, no," he replied "we will only do that if he pu'ls himself clear of the trap." And with that he drew his belt axe and walked with a steady step down on the fox. The closer he got the more the fox struggled, but he was well and freshly caught, and the trap held him fast.

Wa-sa-Kejic gave him a tap on the nose with the helve of the axe, which had the effect of stunning him. The Indian then seized him with his left hand by the throat, and with his right hand felt for his heart; this he drew gradually down toward the stomach until the heart strings gave away; there was a quiver, and the fox was thrown down on the snow limp and dead.

What a pleased look the Indian wore as he stood there, evidently oblivious to my presence for the moment, as he gazed down on the most valuable skin it was possible for him to trap. What a number of necessaries and luxuries this would procure for his family. He would get from the factor at the post $80 for that one single skin! What a number of any other skins it would take to amount to that sum!

Fishing.

RIVER AND LAKE FISHING IN INDIA.

VIII.

FOR spinning dead bait the same method should be used as when using a spoon, occasionally varied by a slight "sink and draw" movement such as is used when working a salmon fly at home. I believe many good fishermen object to this movement, so it seems only fair to my readers to explain why I advocate its use. If you watch small fry swimming against a current, you will see that they do not move always at one uniform pace, but make a dart forward, followed by a slight rest, and then another dart, and so on, and by working your dead bait in the way I mention, you are merely imitating the movements of the living fish. The question will doubtless suggest itself to an enquiring mind. "Why should not the same argument apply to the use of the spoon?" To this I would reply, that when a spoon ceases spinning, as it would occasionally do for a moment if used in this way, it looks just like a spoon and nothing more, while a fish always looks like a fish. I would also say that a dead bait sometimes ceases to spin satisfactorily unless an impetus be given to it now and then, by means of the "sink and draw" movement, and lastly that I know this method to be successful, from my own personal experience. However, you will find many men whose opinions are worth having, who will not endorse my views in this matter, so you had better try both ways, and adopt that which you most fancy. A phantom minnow should certainly be used in this way, as if spun continuously it has a habit of coming to the surface and occasionally "skipping," especially when spinning from a short cast.

Having now mentioned the baits which are most commonly used, I think the time has arrived for a few words on fly-fishing for mahseer. To my mind this is the most fascinating method of all, though as I mentioned in article No. V of this series it is a method which is not employed nearly as much as it might be, partly because it is not generally known that the mahseer often takes a fly freely, and partly because the fish taken do not run so large as those taken by other methods.

I may as well warn you that if you are one of those who prefer sitting in a boat and being pulled for hour after hour up and down a deep pool, with a spoon and fifty yards of line trailing behind you, to any other form of fishing, the use of the fly will have no charms for you. The best place for you in that case will be the big pool at Tangrote, below the junction of the Poonch and Jhelum rivers, where you can indulge in this practice to your heart's content and imagine you are fishing. There are many men who are quite content to do this and nothing else, day after day. On arrival, they eagerly scan the anglers' book and find that last week Jones took a fifty pounder in this way, and they will then settle down for a week or so to this form of sport (?) in the one hope of taking a sixty pounder and thus beating Jones' record, but to these men the higher pleasure of taking fish by their own skill, where less skilful anglers might fail, is lost. Lost also are the delights of the ever changing scenery, of the variation from deep pools to sparkling runs, of the halt under a shady tree or rock for a picnic breakfast, made all the more enjoyable by the sharpest appetite born of exercise in fishing along three or four miles of river, and finally of the arrival at a fresh camp on the river bank at sunset, pleasantly tired, and the enjoyment of a dinner well earned, followed by a dreamless healthy sleep, and of the waking next morning, refreshed and eager for another day's sport of the same sort.

In the course of a day's fishing along the river, you will probably come across pools on which a boat or raft must be used to get at the best water, and on these a couple of turns up and down with a long line out, will as likely as not result in your getting the heaviest fish of the day, but to my thinking, and to that of many—(I think I may say of most)—keen fishermen, to make record breaking the one aim and object of your outing, is not a high form of sport. However, "quot homines, tot sententiæ," and if your sole ambition is in this direction, you are more likely to gratify it by confining yourself to trolling in deep pools than in any other way.

But this is a digression from the subject in hand, which is fly-fishing. As to the ignorance often prevailing, regarding the mahseer's fly taking propensity, let me mention one marked instance which has fallen within my own personal experience.

A day or two before the first occasion of my fishing the Beas river, I asked a friend who had fished it for several years, what were the best baits to use. My friend was well known to be at any rate a very keen, if not a very successful, fisherman. He knew every yard of the forty odd miles of water which I intended covering during my trip, and was a kindly, sympathetic soul, who would do much, even to the extent of inconveniencing himself, to help a brother angler to get good sport. He solemnly assured me that a fly was absolutely useless on this river, as the mahseer would not look at it! There could be no doubt that his advice was given entirely in good faith. (Later on I discovered that he was one of the bargepole and cable school of fishermen, now nearly extinct, and that the niceties of fine fishing were utterly unknown to him.) Shortly after starting on my expedition it appeared to me that the river was one on which a fly might be tried with particularly favourable prospects of success, and selecting a very likely looking run, I put up my favourite fly, a Jock Scott. Before my first cast I looked at my watch, and made up my mind that if I did not move a fish in half an hour, I would discard the fly, certainly for that day, and probably for the rest of the trip. At about my sixth cast I got into a fish of between seven and eight pounds, which I landed, and altogether, fishing carefully down the run which was about a hundred yards long, I took five mahseer between four and eight pounds, on the same fly. Encouraged by this success, I used a fly constantly for the rest of the trip, and found the river to be the best for a fly which I had ever fished! I subsequently found that the friend above mentioned had never tried fly fishing. His advice had been given on the strength of a totally untested belief that the mahseer does not take a fly.

The moral of this little story is, of course, that if you are a fly fisherman you should give this form of sport a fair trial. If you are not an experienced hand with the fly, you still need not despair. Fly-fishing for mahseer, as for salmon, is not anything like so difficult to learn as fly-fishing for trout. Take my own case as an example, and I hope it will encourage you. I had done a fair amount of trout fishing at home, I came to India, but had only tried for salmon about half a dozen times, and had only taken one fish, more by good luck than skill, yet I took mahseer on a fly the first time I ever tried it, and have continued to be fairly successful ever since.

As regards the most killing flies, there are, and must always be, many divergent opinions. Probably on every river and lake there are one or two particular flies which are infinitely more taking than any others, and you must therefore find out, either by your own experiments or by utilising the experience of brother fishermen, what flies are most killing on your particular river. Mr. Thomas says in "The Rod in India" that he has found the Blackamoor so much more killing than any other fly, that he has practically discarded all others in favour of it. His fishing was chiefly confined to Southern India. When I first fished the Beas river,—(I mention this river particularly as it is my ideal of a fly river),—I did not happen to possess a Blackamoor fly, and I commenced work with a large Jock Scott, with the results already mentioned in this article. Since then I have tried many flies on many rivers, and my special favourites for river fishing are, Jock Scott, Silver Doctor, Coachman, and White Moth, in the order in which they are mentioned, except that the White Moth is more killing at and just after dusk than the others, though of little use in the daytime. It happens that I have very rarely used the Blackamoor and me therefore unable to speak as to its merits, but from all accounts it is a very useful fly. If you are about to fish a river, with no previous local experience of your own, or of others, to guide you, I would suggest your trying my four favourites, and the Blackamoor. If these fail you entirely, the river is probably one in which the mahseer take a fly badly.

A NEW AUTOMATIC POCKET PISTOL.

IT is the aim of all inventors of Automatic pistols to simplify this type of arm, and at the same time make the mechanism so certain in its action that a jam shall become almost an impossibility. A very great deal depends on the Ammunition. It is obvious that given cartridges so accurately loaded and proportioned that the recoil is a constant quantity the pistol maker's problem is correspondingly lightened. Certain of the American factories have become celebrated for the excellence of their Ammunition, and it is instructive to note that Messrs. Webley and Scott have devised their new Automatic pistol to shoot ·32 calibre smokeless cartridges of U.M.C. make. This is indeed the same Ammunition as is used for the ·32 Automatic Colt pistol.

Messrs. Webley and Scott are to be congratulated on the extreme simplicity of their new pocket arm: by holding the grip with one hand and crooking a finger of the other into the front of the trigger guard, the barrel and bolt can be drawn out of the frame together; no sooner are they out than they fall apart and the barrel is then ready to be cleaned out from the breech and inspected, after which it can, with the bolt, be as readily returned into its place in the frame.

The recoil spring, trigger mechanism and magazine are all contained in the grip; to inspect them it is only necessary to remove a screw holding the rubber side pieces, when the whole are displayed to view.

The hammer is somewhat similar in position and shape to that of the well-known Mauser pistol, and can be cocked or lowered in the same way. There is a small safety lever just behind it, and by pressing this down the pistol is locked and safe. The actual calibre is ·303 somewhat below its nominal size. The metal patched bullet is ·310 inch in diameter and weighs 70 grains. The charge of a little over 2 grains of dense smokeless powder gives the ball a muzzle velocity of rather more than 1,000 feet per second. The magazine holds eight cartridges. Although the pistol is only 6 inches in over all length, with a barrel of but 3½ inches it shoots with great accuracy, and as the bullet will penetrate seven one inch deal boards at 20 yards, it hits hard enough to be a very efficient little protector.

The flat compact shape makes it very handy to carry in the hip pocket as it does not bulge out like a revolver. The weight with magazine, is 20 ounces.

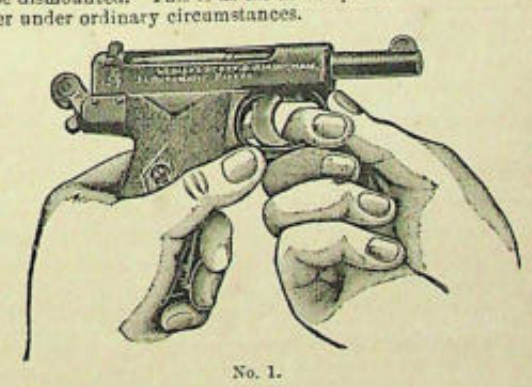
The Webley Automatic combines many advantages over a revolver, amongst others—ease of manipulation, rapidity of fire, accuracy of aim, and increased velocity and penetration.

The pistol consists of five principal parts—body, barrel, breech-slide, magazine, and guard. To take the pistol asunder, for the purposes of cleaning, it is only necessary to remove these limbs. This is performed by the simple operation of removing the guard, which is done without the aid of any tools.

Owing to the recoil being largely absorbed by the moving parts, great accuracy is obtainable, the pistol practically being always in alignment with the object aimed at.

An efficient safety is provided, to operate which it is only necessary to depress the lever on side of hammer; to take the safety out of engagement, raise hammer to full cock.

AMMUNITION.

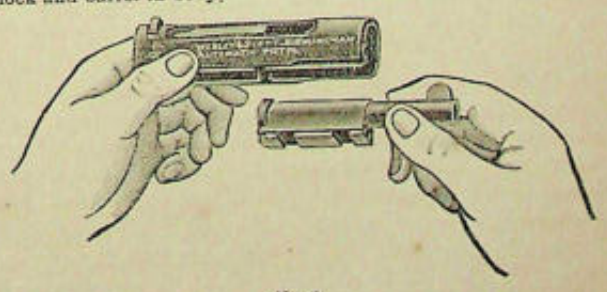


These pistols are made for two distinct kinds of Ammunition—the Colt ·32 or the Browning 7·65 Automatic—and are specially marked for the cartridge for which they are constructed. Owing to slight variations existing between the two kinds of Ammunition, in order to obtain the best results care must be exercised to use only those cartridges for which the pistol is marked.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

To Load.—Place hammer to full cock and put on safety, remove magazine, introduce cartridges therein, and replace in butt, pull back breech-slide to full extent, and release sharply, this will load the first cartridge from the magazine into the barrel, the pistol is then ready for use. On pulling the trigger, the cartridge in barrel is fired, the empty shell ejected, and a fresh cartridge loaded automatically into the barrel from the magazine.

DIRECTIONS FOR TAKING ASUNDER.



Place hammer at full cock, and put on safety, withdraw magazine, pass finger of right hand through trigger guard and withdraw guard, as illustrated, the barrel and breech block can then be dismounted. This is as far as the pistol need be taken asunder under ordinary circumstances.

No. 1.

TO RE-ASSEMBLE.

Place barrel in position in breech block, and insert breech block and barrel in body, as shown in sketch No. 2.

No. 2.

Having assembled barrel and breech-slide, as shewn in sketch No. 2, insert same on body; insert guard by placing the forward end in position first, and press home as shewn below. Unless the guard is properly positioned in the slot in barrel, and the barrel, body, and sleeve perfectly level, the pistol will not work.

HORSES' WEIGHT AND CARRYING POWER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you tell me whether any attempt has ever been made to ascertain whether there is any relation between the weight of a horse and the weight it can carry? I mean under ordinary working conditions, doing a fair day's work hacking or travelling. There must be some correspondence between the two and I should like to know if it has ever been the subject of experiment.

BEAR'S MEAT FOR INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The advent of the cold weather has, as usual, revived the threadbare idea of utilising the skins and carcasses of our jungle denizens. Crocodiles, lizards, sharks and even snakes are all recommended for conservation and farming, and now the recent bear shoot of the Viceregal party, in which no less then 37 "bhals" were laid low, has suggested bringing these shaggy creatures within the pale of semi-domestication. A lively bear affords good enough sport if dogs can be had to tackle him (or her), while in these days of hankering after gastronomical novelties, smoked hams and hands of bear's meat would be appreciated by a public sick to death of murghi curry and the other uninviting food staples of the white man's exile. The charge of bear-gardens might afford occupation to retired chairmen of some of our municipalities, if a certain metaphor holds good!

CARD QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Will you kindly give your opinion on the following question?

A and B arrange to play five games of Ecarté, and preparing the cards by taking out all under "seven" proceed to play.

When four games have been played (during which A has been winning) an onlooker, running over the discarded cards, finds a "seven" among those laid aside by A before commencing and mentions the fact.

Does this discovery nullify all the previous play; or does it not? Kindly decide.

C. F.

MADRAS, 16th November 1906.

[All the previous play holds good. The actual hand in play when the missing card is discovered is void.—ED.]

RETURN TICKETS AT REDUCED FARES.

First and second class passengers.

1. During the period from the 7th to the 26th December 1906, inclusive, return tickets at single fares will be issued to 1st and 2nd class passengers for any distance over 100 miles. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distant 100 miles or less, on payment of fare as for 101 miles. The tickets will be availabe for completion of the return journey up to, and including, the 14th January 1907.

The outward journey must be completed within the same limit of time, after commencement, as allowed for single journey tickets, vide paras, 15 and 21, pages 82 and 84 of the monthly Time Table and Guide. One day is allowed for break of journey for every 100 miles or part of 100 miles, but no break of journey will be allowed at a station short of 101 miles from the point the journey was commenced.

Intermediate class passengers.

2. Return tickets will be issued during the same period and under the same conditions as to distances to intermediate class passengers, at a charge of two third class fares. Tickets under the concession will be available only between the stations named on the tickets, and not for break of journey.

General.

3. Tickets purchased at the Calcutta Offices [Fairlie place and Chowringhee] will be available by trains leaving Howrah on the day of issue or on the following day. Tickets for Monday's mail trains are procurable at these offices on Saturdays. Tickets purchased at the Burra Bazar Office will be available on the day of issue only.

4. The return concession tickets for 1st 2nd and intermediate class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation, provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	... Four
Second	... Five
Intermediate (lateral compartment)	... Eight.

5. The return concession ticket does not entitle the holder to any additional concession, such, for instance, as that under which women servants are, on payment of the next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in first or second class compartments. Concession tickets for children will be issued at half single journey fares.

6. The above arrangements apply to the East Indian Railway system, including the Tarkessur Branch, and the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway.

STEWARDS:

COL. P. K. L. BEAVER. | E. F. JACOB, ESQ., C. I. E.
LT.-COL. W. G. MASSY, R. A. | MAJOR S. H. CLIMO, 24th Punjabees.

Secretary:—MAJOR J. H. ENSOR.

First Day, Tuesday, 20th November.

THE meeting opened to-day under most favourable auspices. There was a large and fashionable attendance on the course and the racing was of high order. The public had, on the whole, the best of the exchanges with the bookmakers, though there were one or two upsets during the afternoon, notably when Baritone, who started at 7 to 1, won the Trial Plate and in the last race where the favourite made no show whatever. Omar's win in the Desert Plate was deservedly popular as was that of Olga in the Pony Hurdles. Hospitality was dispensed by the Royal Dragoons and the Durham Light Infantry who were "At Home" to their friends and the band of the former played. Dilerjung is now quoted at evens for the Army Cup, while 5 to 1 is obtainable about Pasha, 6 to 1 Cinque Ports, 8 to 1 Lomond, 10 to 1 Sulbime, 15 to 1 each Nijidi and Cut Off, 20 to 1 and longer odds the others. Details:—

THE CLUB PLATE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. For C.-B. ponies 14-1 and under and English and Australasian ponies 14-0 and under. English and Australasian ponies 14-0 to carry 9st. 3lbs., C.-B. ponies 14-1 to carry 8st. 7lbs. W. I. Penalties—Winners of flat races value Rs. 200 or over, once 4lbs; twice 7lbs.; oftener 10lbs. Winners of flat races value Rs. 50 or over amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 2,000 or over to carry 5lbs. extra in addition to other penalties. Allowances—Maidens allowed 7lbs. 6 furlongs.

Mr. J. D. Scott's Wal, 9st. 12lbs. ...	A. Hoyt	1
Koer Sahib of Patiala's Parlourmaid, 9st. 6lbs.	Southall	2
Thakur Sripal Singh's S. S., 9st. 12lbs. ...	Robinson	3

BETTING: 3 to 1 each agst. S. S. and Parlourmaid, 6 to 1 Wal.

They raced level until within the rails where Wal drew to the front and won by three-quarters of a length; three lengths separated second and third. Time—1min. 20secs.

THE MILITARY CHASE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap steeplechase for horses bonâ fide property of Officers in His Majesty's Army on full pay. To be ridden by Officers in the Army on full pay. About 2½ miles.

Mr. Mile's Senator, 12st. 4lbs. ...	Mr. Charrington	1
Mr. H. A. Tomkinson's Spark, 10st. 7lbs.	Owner	2
Capt. Bennett's Precarious, 9st. (car. 9st. 7lbs.)	Owner	3

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Spark, 2 to 1 agst. Senator, 5 to 1 Precarious.

Precarious led at the start, but refused twice and was left hopelessly in the rear. Senator meanwhile took up the running from Spark and keeping the lead throughout, won by two lengths; 100 yards divided second and third. Time—5mins. 53secs.

THE NOVICE PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For Arab ponies 14-2 and under that have never won a flat race value Rs. 50 or over. Arabs 14-2 to carry 11st. W. I. ¼ mile.

Mr. North's Colonel, 7st. 5lbs.... ...	A. Hoyt	1
Major Popham Young's Itifaq, 9st. 10lbs.	Barrett	2
Thakur Sripal Singh's Nusrat, 9st. 6lbs. ...	Lansdowne	3
Mr. C. Murray's German Gold, 8st. 12lbs ...	Reyes	0
Lieut.-Col. Stisted's Imperialist, 8st. 9lbs....	Melsom	0
Thakur Sripal Singh's Whiterose, 8st. 10lbs.	Evans	0

BETTING: 3 to 1 agst. Colonel, 4 to 1 Imperialist and Itifaq, 6 to 1 the others.

Nusrat showed the way, but was overtaken by Colonel and Itifaq and the former drawing out near home, won easily by one length; a length and a half between second and third. Time—56secs.

THE PONY HURDLES.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A handicap for ponies 14-2 and under. 1½ mile over 6 flights.

Messrs. Goculdass and Nanjee's Olga, 10st. 2lbs.	A. Hoyt.	1
Mr. H. E. Norton's Daphne, 10st. 2lbs.	Capt. F. W. Barrett	2

Mr. R. K. Hodgson's Gartar, 10st. 4lbs ...	Capt. Beaty	0
Major Luther and Capt. Trech's Twinkle, 9st. 5lbs.	Bond	0

BETTING: Evens Olga, 3 to 1 agst. Curfew Bell, 4 to 1 Daphne, 6 to 1 each Tartar and Twinkle, 8 to 1 Mary Jane 10 to 1 Elsie.

The field tailed off with Daphne at the head attended by Curfew Bell and Elsie. Olga closing up took the lead at the last flight and won by three lengths; a head divided second and third. Time 3mins. 3secs.

THE MEDIUM PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. For maiden C.-B., English and Australasian ponies 14-1 and under, C.-B. ponies 14-1 to carry 8st. 7lbs.; English and Australasian ponies 14-1 to carry 10st. W. I. Penalties—Winners, once 6lbs.; twice 10lbs.; oftener 14lbs. Winners of flat races value Rs. 50 or over, amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 1,200 or over, 7lbs. extra in addition to other penalties ¼ mile.

Mr. R. R. Forbes' Forget-me-not, 11st. ...	Owner	1
Col. P. K. L. Beaver's Little Dolly, 9st. 8st.	Baichan	2
Maharaja of Cooch Behar's Matin Bell, 8st. 12lbs. (dec. 8st. 10lbs.) ...	W. Evans	3
Capt. J. W. Jeffery's Koorlong, 9st. 6lbs. (dec. 9st 7lbs.)	W. Kearson	0

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Matin Bell, 4 to 1 Koorlong, 5 to 1 Silver II., 8 to 1 each Lady Knight, Forget-me-not and Black Prince, 10 to 1 Dainty Lady.

There was some slight delay at the start; but the field were despatched on very equitable terms. When they had covered about half the distance Forget-me-not drew out attended by Little Dolly. After a splendid race home the former won by a short head; three-quarters of a length between second and third. Time—51secs.

THE DESERT PLATE.—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs. 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. For Arab ponies 14-1 and under. Arabs 14-1 to carry 9st. 12lbs. W. I. Penalties—Winners of flat races value Rs. 900 or over, once 4lbs.; twice 7lbs.; oftener 10lbs. Winners of flat races value Rs. 50 or over amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 3,000, 5lbs.; to Rs. 5,000 or over, 10lbs. extra in addition to other penalties. BETTING :—3 to 1 agst., Poseidon, 4 to 1 Solution, 6 to 1 Demas, 9 to 1 Booran, 15 to 1 Czarevitch, 25 to 1 Lord Fitzroy, Little Toy, Charles Stuart, Simoda, Melodeon, Wanden, and Mira. 33 to 1 Graftondelle, 50 to 100 to 1 the others.

From an excellent start Two Step and Mira were the first to show out, and Two Step taking charge in a few strides passed the judge's box, closely followed by Ellis, Wandin, Graftondelle, Bon Grafton, Little Toy, and Delaware in a bunch, with Marvel Loch and Melodeon bringing up the rear. Two Step showed the way out of the straight, with Ellis at his heels, and he was succeeded by Solution, Bon Grafton, Wandin, Poseidon, Booran, and The Infanta, with Melodeon still last. When they had reached the mile-post Solution ran up next to Two Step, and she was followed by Ellis, Wandin, Graftondelle, Charles Stuart, Dyed Garments, Bon Grafton, Booran, and Demas while Melodeon had not improved his position. That order was preserved along the back until nearing the far turn, where Solution headed Two Step, and the New Zealander passed that point two lengths ahead of Two Step, after whom came Wandin, Ellis, Czarevitch, Poseidon, Bon Grafton, Booran, and Orline, the last pair being Mira and Willy Wally. Solution rattled along the railway side just in advance of Wandin, Graftondelle, and Poseidon, but after the half-mile post had been cast behind the favourite ranged up alongside Solution, and the pair came round the bend locked together. They were closely pursued by Simoda, Booran, Demas and Wandin. Poseidon headed Solution as they swung into a line for the judge's box, Simoda, Booran, and Demas following the pair. Simoda challenged Poseidon at the distance, but the Derby winner had plenty in hand, and drawing out in the run home won by three lengths from Simoda, who was a length and a half from Booran. Demas was close up fourth, followed by Solution, Czarevitch, Dyed Garments, Marvel Loch, and Charmant, who were succeeded by Fifeness, Graftondelle, Lord Fitzroy, The Infanta, Charles Stuart, and Little Toy, while Two Step was the last to pass the post. Time.—2mins. 34⅘secs.

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

MANY having departed from headquarters, the bulk of the attendance last Friday was supplied by the regular racing army. The King's example in staying on till the fall of the curtain was widely followed, and it was a matter of general regret that His Majesty, whose luck has been dead out with four wins only this season, could not have the satisfaction of seeing his pretty filly Victoria stem the adverse tide. Another strong white frost, the second in succession, assured us of a sunshiny day, and visitors will retain pleasant memories of the Houghton Meeting, for fine weather, grand going, and capital sport.

Criterion Nursery Handicap—Of 5sovs. each for starters, with 200sovs. added ; second receives 20sovs. out of the stakes ; Dewhurst Plate Course. 7 furlongs.

Mr. F. S. Barnard's bl filly by Silver Fox—Cradle Song, 7st.	H. Blades	1

Won easily by three lengths ; a neck divided Crescent from Home Truth, though the latter was second best. Time—1min. 0⅘secs.

NEWBURY.

It was a very good muster all round that took more kindly to the Jockey Club than National Hunt Rules, and had a plethoric afternoon's sport on a soft course, a bit holding, but by no means in the "heavy" category.

Lambourn Welter Handicap—Of 200sovs. ; second receives 20sovs., and the third 10sovs. 7 furlongs, straight.

Lord Howard de Walden's br h Marozzo, by Marco—Carniola, 5yrs., 9st. 2lbs.	M. Cannon	1

Won in decisive fashion by a length; a length and a half divided second and third. Time—1min 4⅗secs.

More seasonable than Wednesday, with its warm sunshine that made a greatcoat an encumbrance, the weather was more crisp under dull skies, but the gathering mists suggested that 4 o'clock is quite late enough to finish at, as but a perfunctory view could be had of the last two races. Royalty was represented by Prince Christian, who was met by a representative company, the bright costumes of the fair sex lending charm to the club enclosure and paddock, and there was more elbow room in Tattersall's than any other public enclosure, which means a great deal. Good fields were again the rule, and the aggregate ran Wednesday's record very close, though the going was a bit more stodgy.

NEWBURY AUTUMN CUP—(Handicap)—Of 1,250sovs. (a cup value 50sovs. and the remainder in specs); second receives 125sovs., and the third 75sovs. About 2 miles and a furlong.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

Football on Saturday was marked by a tragic occurrence at Leeds which cast a deep gloom over a wide sporting district, and aroused the sympathy of every follower of football. David Wilson, the centre forward of Leeds City, was charged early in the second half, and retired. His chest was found to be injured when medically examined, but he pluckily returned to the field. In a few minutes he again left, and shortly afterwards collapsed. Death supervened in a few minutes, probably from heart failure. Wilson was one of the best centre forwards in the Second Division of the League, and he was a most genial fellow off the field. He was very popular with his colleagues and the public, and his loss under such dramatic circumstances has caused a painful sensation.

The thirty games in the three big Leagues on Saturday were watched by considerably over 300,000 spectators, giving an average of over 10,000 per game, a convincing proof of the continued advance in popularity of the Association game. In the First Division of the League the spectators saw plenty of goals scored, the total tally being 46, and only Bury of the twenty clubs engaged failed to beat the opposing defence. This is an extraordinary state of affairs. Six home teams were successful, two visiting elevens won, and there were two drawn games, in which eight goals were shared. The winning teams scored 26 goals and the losers 12. In the second division only 23 goals were obtained, and seven teams finished without one to their credit. The home sides did not have matters all their own way, five only winning outright, four went under in the presence of their own supporters, and one game was drawn. The winners claimed 17 goals and the losers six. In the Southern League the scoring was also on the moderate side, six teams being unable to obtain a legitimate point. Twenty-seven was the total number of goals, of which 18 went to the seven winning teams, five to the losing sides, and four goals were divided among the six teams who played drawn games. Five home clubs captured the full quota of points, and two visiting teams were successful.

THE SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

Chief interested on Saturday in the Southern League matches was divided between Plymouth and Leyton, where the home teams were respectively opposed by Fulham and Tottenham. Last season, when Fulham paid their visit to Plymouth the result was a goalless draw, and the home team on Saturday must regard themselves as fortunate in the extreme that they were not easily defeated. Fulham were right on top of their form, and in the second half especially they were so much the superior side, that a margin of three goals in their favour at the finish would not have exaggerated their superiority. At Leyton the 'Spurs were early prominent, and appearances betokened they would win comfortably; but the home team rallied splendidly, and made a creditable draw before a record crowd. This will give a considerable filip to the club, who are to be congratulated on the show they made against their formidable opponents. The outcome of the matches is to leave Fulham and Tottenham in the same positions in the table, but the North Londoners have a slight advantage on paper, as they are only a point behind with a match in hand. The 'Spurs have now played six away games and Fulham seven.

The chief surprise of the afternoon was provided by Luton, who demonstrated at the Crystal Palace that there was an end to the run of defeats the palace team were capable of inflicting upon them. The rehabilitation of Luton is most encouraging. After five successive losses, home and away, Luton went to Bristol and beat the Rovers, and followed this up with a win at the Palace on Saturday, their defence holding out in each match. Southampton are fast returning to their true form, and it was in accord with their previous experience to go to New Brompton and capture the points. The result was disappointing in the extreme to the Kent club, whose supporters had confidently reckoned upon a win. This was New Brompton's second home reverse and Southampton's second away win.

Brentford did well to beat the strenuous Norwich City team at Griffin Park, and there is no doubt that the recent action of the directors, although at the time resented, has been abundantly justified. Millwall did not disappoint their supporters, who did not roll up in such large numbers as they should have done, Swindon being defeated by the odd goal in three, and Brighton made amends for their poor show at home a fortnight ago by beating Queen's Park Rangers by two clear goals. Seven goals were scored in the Portsmouth vs. West Ham. match, and as four of these were credited to the home side the Hammers returned pointless. Watford were most unlucky to lose Orr for nearly half of their match with Bristol Rovers, and could only divide the spoils, but Reading gave their most convincing display of the season at Elm Park, and routed Northampton by 5 clear goals.

LEAGUE I.

After a long spell of success, during which they have performed brilliantly at home and away, the Arsenal have tasted the bitters of defeat. It was not surprising when the result came to hand, because a careful study of the recent doings of the Sheffield United Club revealed the fact that they were playing a very strong game, and that to win at Bramall-lane the Arsenal would have to improve on the high standard they had for so long maintained. In the first half matters went well for the Southerners. Their football was sparkling, and not barren of results, and at the interval they led by two goals to one. Sheffield were better together in the second half, but the Woolwich defence held out until a quarter of an hour from the finish, when Lipsham equalised. A most doubtful penalty enabled the United to take the lead, and before the finish a fourth goal was put on, but a draw would have been a fair reflex of the play. The Arsenal are very sore about the penalty, which they urge was a ludicrous decision, and from the Press box there did not appear any justification for it.

The best performance of the afternoon was Everton's win at Bolton. The Wanderers in their previous four home engagements had dropped only one point, but their goal-scoring powers had been feeble in recent games, and with Everton at full strength the loss of a couple of points was not unexpected. The dramatic element was provided by Middlesbrough. Prior to Saturday they had played eight games, not one of which they had succeeded in winning. Their chances of success at Aston were below zero, for five teams had previously been entertained there by the Villa, and only the Arsenal had been allowed to take away a point. The unexpected happened. Middlesbrough went, saw, and conquered, and thus caused a gasp of astonisment in the football world. Another noteworthy feature in the afternoon's proceedings was that Manchester United won their first home match of the season, Birmingham being beaten at Clayton 2—1. Nine goals were scored in the Liverpool vs. Manchester City match, and as the champions claimed the odd one they annexed the points. Derby County were smothered at Blackburn, Preston North End made a keen fight at Newcastle, and Sheffield Wednesday and Sunderland both returned with a point in their possession from Nottingham and Stoke respectively.

Everton	11	7	2	2	27	12	16
Newcastle United	10	7	2	1	25	13	15

THE SECOND LEAGUE.

Leicester Fosse were defeated away from home on Saturday, and Hull City were beaten at home, and as Chelsea succeeded in extracting two points from Grimsby at Standford Bridge, they have advanced to second place in the table on goal average, the Albion retaining pride of place by virtue of their meritorious win at Hull. Chelsea gave a most unequal exhibition on Saturday. They were good and bad by turns, and it would not have been surprising if they had been a couple of goals down ere the game was ten minutes old. They rallied, and then gave of their best until the interval, following which there was a repetition of first-half happenings. Chelsea are not playing so convincingly as one would like, and will have to show better form to secure promotion. Clapton Orient, who are obtaining a large measure of support, could only draw with Lincoln City, but the Citizens did not deserve to share the points as the game went. Nottingham Forest were fortunate to win at Gainsborough but Wolverhampton Wanderers overran Burton United, and Barnsley won a hard game at home against Burslem Port Vale.

LEAGUE II TABLE.

It will be noticed from the appended table that two clubs are equal with Chelsea on points, and three other clubs are only one point to the bad.

Won in decisive fashion by a length; a length and a half divided second and third. Time—1min 4⅖secs.

More seasonable than Wednesday, with its warm sunshine that made a greatcoat an encumbrance, the weather was more crisp under dull skies, but the gathering mists suggested that 4 o'clock is quite late enough to finish at, as but a perfunctory view could be had of the last two races. Royalty was represented by Prince Christian, who was met by a representative company, the bright costumes of the fair sex lending charm to the club enclosure and paddock, and there was more elbow room in Tattersall's than any other public enclosure, which means a great deal. Good fields were again the rule, and the aggregate ran Wednesday's record very close, though the going was a bit more stodgy.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

Football on Saturday was marked by a tragic occurrence at Leeds which cast a deep gloom over a wide sporting district, and aroused the sympathy of every follower of football. David Wilson, the centre forward of Leeds City, was charged early in the second half, and retired. His chest was found to be injured when medically examined, but he pluckily returned to the field. In a few minutes he again left, and shortly afterwards collapsed. Death supervened in a few minutes, probably from heart failure. Wilson was one of the best centre forwards in the Second Division of the League, and he was a most genial fellow off the field. He was very popular with his colleagues and the public, and his loss under such dramatic circumstances has caused a painful sensation.

The thirty games in the three big Leagues on Saturday were watched by considerably over 300,000 spectators, giving an average of over 10,000 per game, a convincing proof of the continued advance in popularity of the Association game. In the First Division of the League the spectators saw plenty of goals scored, the total tally being 46, and only Bury of the twenty clubs engaged failed to beat the opposing defence. This is an extraordinary state of affairs. Six home teams were successful, two visiting elevens won, and there were two drawn games, in which eight goals were shared. The winning teams scored 26 goals and the losers 12. In the second division only 23 goals were obtained, and seven teams finished without one to their credit. The home sides did not have matters all their own way, five only winning outright, four went under in the presence of their own supporters, and one game was drawn. The winners claimed 17 goals and the losers six. In the Southern League the scoring was also on the moderate side, six teams being unable to obtain a legitimate point. Twenty-seven was the total number of goals, of which 18 went to the seven winning teams, five to the losing sides, and four goals were divided among the six teams who played drawn games. Five home clubs captured the full quota of points, and two visiting teams were successful.

THE SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

Chief interested on Saturday in the Southern League matches was divided between Plymouth and Leyton, where the home teams were respectively opposed by Fulham and Tottenham. Last season, when Fulham paid their visit to Plymouth the result was a goalless draw, and the home team on Saturday must regard themselves as fortunate in the extreme that they were not easily defeated. Fulham were right on top of their form, and in the second half especially they were so much the superior side, that a margin of three goals in their favour at the finish would not have exaggerated their superiority. At Leyton the 'Spurs were early prominent, and appearances betokened they would win comfortably; but the home team rallied splendidly, and made a creditable draw before a record crowd. This will give a considerable filip to the club, who are to be congratulated on the show they made against their formidable opponents. The outcome of the matches is to leave Fulham and Tottenham in the same positions in the table, but the North Londoners have a slight advantage on paper, as they are only a point behind with a match in hand. The 'Spurs have now played six away games and Fulham seven.

The chief surprise of the afternoon was provided by Luton, who demonstrated at the Crystal Palace that there was an end to the run of defeats the palace team were capable of inflicting upon them. The rehabilitation of Luton is most encouraging. After five successive losses, home and away, Luton went to Bristol and beat the Rovers, and followed this up with a win at the Palace on Saturday, their defence holding out in each match. Southampton are fast returning to their true form, and it was in accord with their previous experience to go to New Brompton and capture the points. The result was disappointing in the extreme to the Kent club, whose supporters had confidently reckoned upon a win. This was New Brompton's second home reverse and Southampton's second away win.

Brentford did well to beat the strenuous Norwich City team at Griffin Park, and there is no doubt that the recent action of the directors, although at the time resented, has been abundantly justified. Millwall did not disappoint their supporters, who did not roll up in such large numbers as they should have done, Swindon being defeated by the odd goal in three, and Brighton made amends for their poor show at home a fortnight ago by beating Queen's Park Rangers by two clear goals. Seven goals were scored in the Portsmouth vs. West Ham. match, and as four of these were credited to the home side the Hammers returned pointless. Watford were most unlucky to lose Orr for nearly half of their match with Bristol Rovers, and could only divide the spoils, but Reading gave their most convincing display of the season at Elm Park, and routed Northampton by 5 clear goals.

LEAGUE I.

After a long spell of success, during which they have performed brilliantly at home and away, the Arsenal have tasted the bitters of defeat. It was not surprising when the result came to hand, because a careful study of the recent doings of the Sheffield United Club revealed the fact that they were playing a very strong game, and that to win at Bramall-lane the Arsenal would have to improve on the high standard they had for so long maintained. In the first half matters went well for the Southerners. Their football was sparkling, and not barren of results, and at the interval they led by two goals to one. Sheffield were better together in the second half, but the Woolwich defence held out until a quarter of an hour from the finish, when Lipsham equalised. A most doubtful penalty enabled the United to take the lead, and before the finish a fourth goal was put on, but a draw would have been a fair reflex of the play. The Arsenal are very sore about the penalty, which they urge was a ludicrous decision, and from the Press box there did not appear any justification for it.

The best performance of the afternoon was Everton's win at Bolton. The Wanderers in their previous four home engagements had dropped only one point, but their goal-scoring powers had been feeble in recent games, and with Everton at full strength the loss of a couple of points was not unexpected. The dramatic element was provided by Middlesbrough. Prior to Saturday they had played eight games, not one of which they had succeeded in winning. Their chances of success at Aston were below zero, for five teams had previously been entertained there by the Villa, and only the Arsenal had been allowed to take away a point. The unexpected happened. Middlesbrough went, saw, and conquered, and thus caused a gasp of astonisment in the football world. Another noteworthy feature in the afternoon's proceedings was that Manchester United won their first home match of the season, Birmingham being beaten at Clayton 2—1. Nine goals were scored in the Liverpool vs. Manchester City match, and as the champions claimed the odd one they annexed the points. Derby County were smothered at Blackburn, Preston North End made a keen fight at Newcastle, and Sheffield Wednesday and Sunderland both returned with a point in their possession from Nottingham and Stoke respectively.

THE SECOND LEAGUE.

Leicester Fosse were defeated away from home on Saturday, and Hull City were beaten at home, and as Chelsea succeeded in extracting two points from Grimsby at Standford Bridge, they have advanced to second place in the table on goal average, the Albion retaining pride of place by virtue of their meritorious win at Hull. Chelsea gave a most unequal exhibition on Saturday. They were good and bad by turns, and it would not have been surprising if they had been a couple of goals down ere the game was ten minutes old. They rallied, and then gave of their best until the interval, following which there was a repetition of first-half happenings. Chelsea are not playing so convincingly as one would like, and will have to show better form to secure promotion. Clapton Orient, who are obtaining a large measure of support, could only draw with Lincoln City, but the Citizens did not deserve to share the points as the game went. Nottingham Forest were fortunate to win at Gainsborough but Wolverhampton Wanderers overran Burton United, and Barnsley won a hard game at home against Burslem Port Vale.

LEAGUE II TABLE.

It will be noticed from the appended table that two clubs are equal with Chelsea on points, and three other clubs are only one point to the bad.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses.

ENGLISH AMATEURS vs. FRENCH AMATEURS.—The first Amateur International ever played by England against a Continental nation took place at the Velodrome, Parc des Princes, Paris, yesterday.

It was perhaps rather unfortunate that the initial encounter should have been with France, which is far from being one of the strongest of the countries who have joined the International Football Federation, formed at Berne during the summer for the purpose of controlling Association football in European countries. Holland, which is not met till about Easter, would undoubtedly have given the Englishmen a much closer game than that provided by France yesterday, for the Dutchmen are unquestionbly the cleverest Continental exponents of the "Soccer" code.

The visitors took a strong side, including no fewer than five players who had represented their country in International fray. A forward line including such as S. H. Day, V. J. Woodward, and S. S. Harris was bound to be a very formidable factor in the match and this the Frenchmen found to their cost. By half-time 6 goals had been scored by the Saxons.

The Gallic defence had an even worse time after the interval. The Englishmen seemed to score as they pleased and the result was:—

English Amateurs	16
French Amateurs	0

The goals were scored by Vivian Woodward (8), Day (3), Harris (2), Hawkes, Farnfield, and Raine (1 each).—The English goalkeeper only touched the ball twice.

English Amateurs.—E Proud (Bishop Auckland); F. H. Milnes (Sheffield) and H Smith (Reading); C D McIver (Old Foresters), P H Farnfield (New Crusader), and R M Hawkes (Luton); J E Raine (Newcastle United), S H Day (Old Malvernians) V. J. Woodward (Tottenham Hotspur), S S Harris (Old Westminsters), and H P Hardman (Everton).

French Amateurs.—Baton (Olympique Lillois); Moignen (Union Sportive Tourquenoise) and Canelle (Racing Club FranCais); L. Schubart (Olympique Lillois), Allemane (Racing Club FranCais), and Wilkes (Havre Sports); Verbrugge (Association Sportive FranCaise), Cypres (Club Athletique Parisien), Francois (Racing Club de Roubaix), Royet (Union Sportive de Paris), and Sartorius (Racing Club de Roubaix).

RUGBY RULES.

SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH vs. Newport.—Even greater interest was manifested in the visit of the "Springboks" to Newport than over the match between New Zealand and Newport last season. Quite an hour before the match was timed to start the stands were filled and there must have been quite 20,000 present The changes made in the side which defeated Middlesex on Wednesday were said to strengthen the team, especially by the inclusion of Le Moux and Krige. The Newport team was at full strength. Punctually to time the teams fielded. Paul Roos first led his team on, and as soon as the dark green jerseys were spotted a roar of applause went up. Similar greetings were accorded Skipper C. M. Pritchard's team when they appeared a moment later.

Pritchard started for Newport with an unduly bright sun in his eyes. There was an almost complete absence of wind, and the turf was in rare fettle. Krige returned and Gunstone ended the kicking duel at half way by finding touch. The first line out caused a scrummage, and a cheer was given when it was seen that it was carried by the home eight. Another scrummage at the same spot told another tale, for out the ball was sent to Krige, who kicked down the field. A smart pick up by Marsburg, who gained some ground by a fast dash off before he kicked, placed the Africans hotly on the attack. A scrummage breaking up quickly allowed Dobbins to pick up and pass to Krige; the South African cleverly feinted to break through on the left, and drew all the opposition on that side, but he passed to De Villiers on the right, and the latter forwarding the oval on to Stegmann, who had nothing between himself and the line, scored the first try after twelve minutes' play. D. Morkel had no difficulty in goaling. South Africa were almost immediately on the attack again, Krige made a mark and and Morkel took a place kick for goal, which deserved a better fate, for it only just missed the mark from a dangerous position Krige made a splendid opening before transferring to Stegmann, and the latter, outpacing all, got over in the corner. The kick at goal by Morkel was a failure. The 8 points had been scored in exactly fifteen minutes from start. Matters were more even after the drop-out, thanks to heroic work of the Newport forwards, who made up for the manifest shortcomings of their backs in the way of speed. Each side was in turn penalised for breaches of the rules before De Villiers made a great run. He "cork-screwed" through seven would-be captors before Boots just bored him into touch. Twice the Africans were penalised for the off-side play of Dobbin. Now came Newport's only real chance of the half. The ball came out to Adams from Vile near the visitors' twenty-five, but the transfer to Thomas, who had a good chance of crossing had he taken the ball, was a very difficult one, and was fumbled. The Newport forwards continued to worry the Colonials, but their repeated heeling of the ball to the backs was rather a mistake, for both in the half-back and three-quarter lines there was woeful bungling on almost every occasion. A cross kick by Plummer was smartly turned to advantage by Hodges, and the Welsh International was collared only a few yards from the goal line. A strong run by Krige and a save by Thomas were the only incidents afterwards until the interval arrived. Half-time score:—

South Africans (1g 1t)	8

Roos resumed the game, and the return kick was on the Newport half of the field. Short kicks by Hodges and W. J. Martin gained ground for Newport, but the South Africans came away in a bunch. In stopping the rush Hodges was hurt, but soon resumed. Grand individual play by De Villiers and J. Le Roux was stopped by grand tackling. Then Stegmann made a grand burst, being pulled down by Plummer. A fine rush, headed by C. M. Pritchard, was stopped by Marsburg, who picked the ball up at the toes of the Uskside forwards, and kicked grandly to touch. The visitors had to defend for all they were worth, and they proved too much for the home three-quarters to allow of scoring. By hard scrummaging the Springboks gradually recovered the lost ground. A strong kick by Krige took play into the Usksiders' "25." Mare made a fine burst from a line-out, and kicked to D. J. Boots, who made a mark in time. He found touch at half-way. The Uskside backs brought off a pretty bit of passing, but Gunstone gave a forward pass. By short kicking Newport again got near to their opponents' line. W. R. Thomas, getting the ball, took a drop at goal, which just missed, and Marsburg touched down. Following the kick out Stegmann had to be attended to for a nasty cut on the forehead, which bled freely, but he resumed when sticking-plaster had been applied. The home-sters were staying grandly; but their backs were not in a scoring humour whilst the Africans' tackling was very keen. Gunstone brought off a fine run, and then passed to his wing, Thomas, who beat Le Roux, but was brought down in grand fashion by Marsburg ten yards from the line. Towards the end of play De Villiers broke away from the centre, and looked like putting Stegmann over, until Plummer intercepted a slow pass. "Time" came with the Colonials pressing hard. Final score:—

MATCH vs. GLAMORGAN.—Great enthusiasm prevailed at Cardiff on Wednesday over the Colonials' second Welsh game. Before the match, crowds poured into Cardiff Arms Park, and at the start the attendance numbered quite 35,000. The weather was ideal for football, and the ground, although slightly greasy in places, was on the whole in good condition.

The Glamorgan team was a strong one, ten players having represented the Principality, while of the other five, Toft (Swansea) is the only player not in the running for selection by Wales this season. The South Africans, recognising that they had to meet a side of International calibre, put in the field one of the best, if not the best, teams of the tour.

As at Newport, the Colonials were quickly off the mark, and in the first minute Stegmann was over with a try, got in really Welsh fashion. Before the match was ten minutes old, the Welsh defence was again beaten by a brilliant attack, and Stegmann gained his fourth try on Welsh soil.

Up to this point Glamorgan had been badly let down by the Swansea recruit half, Toft. The forwards, recognising this, thereafter played more of the rushing than the heeling game, tactics which succeeded in counterbalancing the brilliant attacking powers of the African backs.

In the second half, the home team greatly improved, and were far oftener attacking than the visitors. But for the magnificent defence of the visiting backs, particularly Marsburg, Glamorgan would have been rewarded with more than one try. Although beaten, Glamorgan have the satisfaction of running the visitors closer than any other side, and of being the second team to cross the South African lines. With the slightest luck, the County would have at least drawn, for Winfield once struck the upright with the penalty kick, and E. T. Morgan was barely held a yard off scoring.

Carolin kicked off with such length that a minor was conceded. Three scrums in mid-field took place before Dobbin could get the ball away to Villiers, who gave a long swift pass to Stegmann.

MADRAS.

The left wing beat Maddocks and Winfield in pace, scoring a corner try in the first minute. Morkel's kick at goal failed.

Passing between Dobbin, Villiers, and Krige looked like a certain try for Loubser, when he was overtaken by Morgan five yards out. Dobbin was soon off again, and breaking through gave up to Stegmann, who scored his second try in the same place. Morkel made an unsuccessful attempt to convert.

The Glamorgan forwards changed their game. Instead of attempting to continually heel, they tried rushing. Owen first got off, and then Maddocks, but their speed was inferior to Carolin and Stegmann, and little ground was gained. Krige earned loud applause by picking up time after time from the feet of the country forwards, whilst Marsburg fielded safely, and kicked with tremendous length every time the ball came to him.

Once Krige held on too long when an early pass would have put Loubser in. With irresistible dash the Colonial forwards swept down the field, and everyone expected a third score, when Morgan, with great pluck rushed up, gathering the ball on his line.

The home forwards worked to the other end, only to be repelled by the fearless play of Marsburg and Loubser, the latter finding touch near the Glamorgan line. The game waged at a terrific pace. E. T. Morgan playing with all the dash for which he is famous, tried to get through on two occasions, but Loubser and Marshburg were always equal to the attack. Maddocks, who was below his usual form in this half, hesitated when he had a chance—difficult, it is true—of scoring, and an opportunity was lost.

South Africans (2t)	6

In the second half the Glamorgan backs at once started passing. Trew transferred to Maddocks, who was heavily tackled and winded. Gabe gave Morgan a bad pass when scoring appeared imminent. For off side by Dobbin the Colonials were penalised in their twenty five. Winfield had the ball placed, and his shot hit one of the uprights and rebounded into the field of play. Marsburg worked it out of danger.

Morgan dodged past several of the visitors and cross-kicked, Stegmann just turned to touch with Trew and Maddocks racing for the ball. For a foul the visitors were penalised, but the ball was charged from an easy kick.

Try as they would, the Africans could not relieve, but their tackling was splendid. With twenty minutes to go a magnificent piece of work was started by Owen, who beat Dobbin and Carolin and gave to Gabe. The last named passed Krige and then transferred to Morgan. Loubser was running for the famous winger when the latter cross-kicked, and Joseph, rushing up, secured the ball and secured a fine try. From a fairly easy angle Winfield again had his kick charged down.

On the drop-out, further passing took place among the Welsh backs in the Colonial half, but Gabe's final pass to Morgan was a poor one. Both Winfield and Brown were then injured, but resumed, limping.

At last the South Africans got into the home territory. Morgan, with a fine run, regained the ground. Following a drop at goal by Trew, Marsburg was tackled on his own line by Maddocks, but Krige came to the rescue, and kicked to touch.

A desperate effort was made by the Welshmen in the closing stages. Gabe gave Morgan a pass, and the Guy's Hospital player looked a certain scorer. Loubser and Marsburg were beaten, but Krige cut across and brought off the tackle of the game. Final score :—

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.—For some reason this match was played in the Parks at Oxford on Saturday, and consequently there was a large crowd without any seating accomodation. Soon after the start the ball was rushed down the field by the visiting forwards, and Davies failing to check, Pound picked up and scored a try which Parker converted. There was a lot of hard scrummaging, and later on Williamson and Butterworth ran up to the Old Boys' line. C. Parker removed the danger, but the Oxford forwards at length got going, and coming out of the scrum in brilliant style, Roberts jumped past the Taylors' back and succeeded in touching down. Howe-Browne's place proved a failure, and at half time the visitors still led by 5 points to 3. Soon after resuming, Parker, the Oxford three quarter, received a severe kick in the back, which took all the steam out of him, although he subsequently returned to the field. Whilst he was absent, however, Raphael secured in the centre, and giving a fine opening to C. L. Parker, the latter ran in within easy distance of the uprights, but he failed to convert. C. Parker intercepted a pass, and although checked by Davies, the forwards carried on the attack, and from a fine rush Lepingwell succeeded in touching down. Failure again attended the place kick. The Old Boys held their own until a minute or so from the finish, when Flemmer handed out to Milton, who came away in fine style, and transferring to Batchelor, the latter ran in close to the touch-line. No goal resulted, and a hard game resulted in favour of the Old Merchant Taylors by 1 goal and 2 tries to 2 tries.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. OLD LEYSIANS.—After winning their two opening fixtures against Richmond and Guy's Hospital, the Light Blues on Saturday went under to the Old Leysians. The University gave a very disappointing display, and but for their full-back and the half-backs, they would have had a high total run up against them, and as it was they were beaten by 2 tries to 1 try. The three-quarters were poor and the forwards did not show half the dash of their opponents in the loose rushes, and their footwork was bad. Cambridge were the first to score, as at the expiration of 10 min., as the result of some good passing between the backs, Koop, put in a good run, and punting. Macleod was to the rescue and obtained a try, which Hearson failed to convert. Cambridge were pressing continuously, but failed to get through, and a quarter of an hour later Hoskin brought off a good run, and Mellor working over, the "O. L.'s" got on level terms. The place-kick failed. That was all that was scored till crossing over, and on resuming, though they only scored once, the Old Leysians fairly outplayed the 'Varsity, and but for the fine defence of Scoular they would have scored frequently. Finding a safe opening early on resuming, Hoskin and Oulton broke away, the Old Blue finishing up with a try, which was, however, not improved upon. Nothing further was scored and the match ended :—Old Leysians, 2 tries (6 points); Cambridge University 1 try (3 points).

LONDON WELSH vs. GUY'S HOSPITAL.—The London Welsh opened their second season at the Essex County Ground, Leyton, on Saturday, with a match against Guy's Hospital. There was a very fair attendance, considering the counter-attraction close by. The Medicos were not at full strength, such players as McSaunders, W. E. Williams, and H. G. Gibson being absent, but they fielded a strong side notwithstanding. The Welsh turned out what was supposed to be their best available fifteen, but the run of the game on the whole hardly justified that supposition. Play ruled fairly even during the major part of the opening half, thanks to fine form by J. P. Jones and Monagan, aided by the failure of the home five-eighths and centre three-quarters to utilise the several chances given them by their forwards and half-back. By dashing forwards' footwork, spiritedly led by Harding, Williams, and Jenkins, the Welsh at last got close to Guy's line, and after some fine kicking by the backs maintained the pressure, Clay scoring a try which Lewis failed to improve upon. Almost immediately afterwards Siringer was nearly through, being well checked by Towyn Jones. Later Harding snapped up half a chance in his own twenty-five, being ably supported by G. E. Lewis, to whom he transferred and that rapidly improving recruit passed to C. Rowlands, who scored under the bar, but Lewis again failed to add the two points. The visitors restarted with a splendid dash, and a blunder by Vivian enabled them to get established close to the Welsh line, and although Morgan and Rowlands brought relief, play was transferred by the Hospital straights across the field. Here a forward scramble resulted in a score by Pinching, but Munden did not convert, and the interval then arrived.

The second half produced a great struggle, and at one time slight feeling appeared to be manifesting itself in the sustained vigour of the two packs. The Welsh seven got poor support, however, else the lead might have been increased. Guy's were particularly fortunate in preventing a score from a good cross punt by Jenkins, and also when Harding got away without anyone supporting him. The Medicos had reason also for lamenting their own failure to score goals from a number of free kicks and penalties awarded them in favourable positions. The result was :—London Welsh, 2 tries (6pts.); Guy's Hospital, 1 try (3 pts.).

ROSSLYN PARK vs. LENNOX.—This important fixture, played on Saturday at the Old Deer Park, Richmond, was evenly contested throughout. From the teams advertised, J. Hirst, Rosslyn Park's back, was an absentee and R. G. D. Glover took the position. J. Scruby coming into the pack. Unfortunately for the visitors, Mather, their, wing three-quarter, received an injury to his eye, and had to retire shortly after the commencement of the game. Lennox were much handicapped at having to continue with fourteen men. Notwithstanding this, they rendered an excellent account of themselves, and were only defeated by the narrow margin of 2 points. On opening out Lennox were the first to attack, and their three-quarters combined with good judgment. Eventually came the Park's opportunity, and King-Stephens, obtaining possession scored an easy try behind the posts, his place-kick being successful. After some pressure by Lennox, who were decidedly prominent, Newberry ran in with an unconverted try. At half-time Rosslyn Park led by 2 points.

On resuming, play was in favour of Park, when King-Stephens again ran in, the kick failing. In a smart breakaway by Webb, he struggled through and gained a further try, which was not converted. Rosslyn Park were having much more of the game, but they failed to take advantage of the openings that fell to them, and many opportunities to score were lost. Play grew slack towards the end, and no further score took place. Result :—Rosslyn Park, 1 goal 1 try (8 points); Lennox, 2 tries (6 points).

CAMBRIDGE UNIV. vs. LONDON HOSPITAL.—The Light Blues, who were at home to London Hospital yesterday, made a number of changes in their team. Scoular and Harris, the Blues, were absent. The University, however, played, a very much better game than they did on Saturday, and were successful by 1 placed goal, 1 dropped goal, and 2 tries, to 1 penalty goal and 1 try. The ball was very greasy.

The University kicked off, but in the first minute Pitt let the visitors through, and Dobson was compelled to touch down, and after five minutes' play Palmer had no difficulty in getting in, although Woods failed with the place kick. At length the home team settled down, and, Macleod having found a fine touch, Dew worked in, and Hearson put the home team ahead. Four minutes later Koop, Macleod, and Hearson brought off some fine passing, with the result that the latter crossed over, but himself failed to convert, hitting the left upright. Penny let the Hospital through, but Godby saved, and a minute later Macleod punted well into the visitors' quarters, the 'Varsity leading at half-time by five points. Throughout the second part of the game the Light Blues had decidedly the better of the exchanges, and after seven minutes' hard pressing Pitt dropped a very fine goal, after Koop had made a miserable effort to score by the same tactics. For off-side Woods failed to obtain a penalty goal, and the home backs combining, rushed down the field. Koop was the last to receive, and when close to the line he punted over the heads of his antagonists, and had some luck in obtaining the ball on the bounce. Macleod failed to convert. The Hospital were well up when Pitt got off-side. Woods took the kick, and obtained three points. London were next given off side, but Macleod's kick fell short, and, nothing more being scored, the 'Varsity won by 15 points to 6.

BOXING.

HEAVY WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP OF ENGLAND.

If evidence were wanted of the popularity of the fistic art in England, one had only to be within the precincts of the National Sporting Club on Monday evening, when Jack Palmer, of Newcastle, and James Moir, London—undoubtedly the two finest heavy-weights England has produced for many a year—were brought in contact with each other, for a stake, the magnitude of which reached £750. Although the heavy-weight championship of England was at issue, the result of their meeting will probably lead to an even more important engagement of the winner with one of America's much-belauded heavy-weights.

To eulogise the performances of either of the combatants seems like going over old ground, as nearly every devotee of the sport is well acquainted with the doings of the respective pugilists. Suffice it to say that Palmer has for the past eighteen months—practically since his return from South Africa—been the recognised heavy-weight champion. His last battle of note was at headquarters, when he assumed the championship title by vanquishing a much-fancied exponent in Geoff Throne—Fitzsimmons' old sparring partner—in very quick time. Prior to that he toured, as already indicated in South Africa, but an attack of enteric fever shook his constitution very badly, and he was never seen at his best in foreign claims. Before leaving for the Cape Palmer had swept the field up North, and it was only in search of further gold that he decided to make the trip, which did not prove a too lucrative one. Moir, who is better known as the "Gunner," by reason of his association with the Royal Marine Artillery, has earned a very wide reputation both at home and abroad. Perhaps as skilful a wrestler as a boxer, Moir found ample scope for his fistic abilities while touring with Hackenschmidt in the Colonies last year. Prior to that time, he had beaten men of good quality in this country, and while he was in Australia many presumptive champions received an early quietus. On his return to this country a customer in Jem Casey, of America, was found for him, but the latter fought very much out of his class, and suffered defeat, after receiving heavy punishment for eight rounds.

The contest was by no means a pretty one. Immediately the order to commence was given Moir sailed into the Newcastle man, and receiving some heavy punishment on the ribs, Palmer was in a queer state before two minutes had elapsed. The battle looked like coming to a summary termination, but hanging on for dear life, Palmer lasted to the interval. He was still in a weak state when hostilities were resumed, and had Moir followed up his advantage, Palmer would certainly have gone under. The Gunner slowed up, and the Newcastle man rallied, making quite a fight of it in the third round. The subsequent meetings to the eighth were slow and ugly, there being far too much hugging. The North-countryman flattered his supporters slightly in this meeting, but the glimmer of hope was only a faint one, for in the ninth round Moir cut loose, and dealing out some crushing punishment on the body, he had his opponent hanging helpless on the ropes. Palmer was fairly beaten, but Moir could not quite land the finishing punch. The Northern boxer, evidently realising that his chance had fled, gripped his opponent with the left hand round the neck and slung several nasty blows into Moir well below the belt. The fouls were very palpable, and the referee at once ducked under the ropes, ordered the men to their corners, and declared Moir the winner.

Palmer was the first to enter the ring having for his attendants Jack Haggerty, Harry Kent, and Tom Ryan. Moir quickly followed being esquired by Sid Grumley, Arthur Gutteridge, and Jim Brock. After the pair had been introduced and the gloves adjusted, the men faced each other for the first round.

Round 1.—Upon taking the centre Palmer attempted to lead which led up to a clinch. Again getting to close quarters, Moir dashed the right home on the mark, and spun the Newcastle men round. Upon steadying himself Palmer attempted to counter, but was out of distance. A considerable amount of holding now ensued, in which the Tynesider was the most to blame. The Gunner, however, would not be denied, and forced his opponent on to the ropes. Palmer quickly got out of danger and some hustling exchanges led up to the interval, which was reached amid great excitement.

Round 2.—Each was anxious to resume hostilities, and after a sharp rally Moir landed four times in succession on the jaw without doing much damage. These liberties appeared to annoy Palmer, and with the result that some fast work accrued. The Newcastle man twice swung his right, but was out of distance and Moir, in attempting to score on the head was met with a hard drive from Palmer's right. Moir was now at fault for holding, but upon Palmer shaking him off he followed him up, and the pair were very busy when the interval was announced.

Round 3.—The Newcastle man renewed hostilities by reaching the face, but there was little force behind his blow, and the Gunner countered hard on the body. At close quarters Palmer kept driving his left on the body. Moir in turn reaching the ribs, and the bout was being contested upon neutral ground when hostilities temporarily ceased.

Round 4.—Immediately upon resuming the pair got into holds, and were loth to break away. However, on separating the Northerner swung the left home on the body, which made the Gunner drop his guard. As quick as lightning Palmer clipped his man on the jaw, but although the blow shook him, Moir avoided further attacks by getting close. A little later the Newcastle man found the head, but although the blow was a hard one, it failed to make much impression on the gunner.

Round 5.—Palmer was the first to lead, and although somewhat out of distance, he followed up the attempt by banging the right hard home on the throat and worked his man into a neutral corner. Moir quickly slipped out of this danger and reversed the proceedings, and delivering a succession of heavy right and left hand jabs on the head and body, he quickly had the Tynesider in a bad way. Game as a pebble, Palmer took his punishment well until time came to his assistance.

Round 6.—Although wearing a somewhat flushed appearance when he left his corner, Palmer was the first to try to lead. The attack was well met, and the Gunner replied by a smashing right-handed punch on the head. Almost immediately afterwards Palmer received another hard thump on the month. Never losing his head, Palmer avoided a lot of deliveries, while the Gunner would not be denied, and kept going until the gong sounded.

Round 7.—After a quiet opening Moir tried his right, but Palmer ducked, and the blow went harmlessly over his head. Both now became more cautious, and the fray was carried on at long range. Palmer thrice got home some well-timed left-handed punches on the jaw, and Moir was content to pay attention to the body.

Round 8.—Both now appeared to show signs of their previous exertions, Palmer boxing very warily and twice reaching the ribs with some left-handed swings. The Gunner several times landed on the head, but his deliveries appeared to lack the steam they had hitherto had behind them. This fact allowed the Northerner to some extent to recuperate.

Round 9, (and last).—Moir had apparently been husbanding his strength, for immediately after resuming he crossed his man with the right and sent Palmer reeling back. Pulling himself together, the Tynesider attempted to cross his opponent, but Moir was on the alert and stepped nimbly aside. Before Palmer could recover himself he was brought to his knees with a heavy blow on the jaw. He was, however, soon up and rushed to his man, and while holding with his left he punched away with the right. Apparently he hit somewhat low, for Moir looked appealingly to the referee, who at once separated the men, and pointing to Palmer, announced that he was disqualified. Palmer for a while could not realise what had happened, until his seconds brought him to his corner, when he appeared considerably cut up over his defeat.

BILLIARDS.

The series of brilliant performances set up by Dawson at Messrs. Thurston's Grand Hall has dwarfed everything else during the past week. The few critics who have been hugging the fond delusion that the brilliant little Yorkshireman had fallen off his hitherto high pedestal have had an answer that brooks of no quibbling. It was his extremely poor show in his opening match at Bristol that gave rise to this delusion, but since that time Dawson has convinced his critics that he is as great a player as ever. Even those who were most prone to fault-finding are now the first to admit that the Huddersfield crack shows no signs of a falling off from the high standard of play we are accustomed to from him.

There is nothing like Bovril to make a man feel fit. It makes him as fit as he feels.

It was perhaps fitting that he should reserve for his first appearance this season in the Metropolis the finest achievement of the season, for a big performance in London carries more weight than it would do if accomplished in the provinces. Why this should be so is difficult to understand, but of the fact itself there can be no question. Ask any of the leading professionals, and they will at once tell you that from choice they would rather do a record performance in London than anywhere else.

Be that as it may, there can be no two opinions about the superfine display by Dawson against Osborne. But there are one or two features of the match which have not hitherto been mentioned, and which are worthy of a line. Reference to another part of this column will show what was accomplished by Dawson in the way of three-figure breaks, but what I wish to accentuate here is the fact that he averaged 52.23 per innings for the whole match. A moment's reflection will bring out in bold relief what this means. On many occasions Dawson went to the table without scoring—the balls do run dead save sometimes!—yet he came out with the magnificent average quoted. Prodigious! Dawson averaged over 100—107.14 and 114.28 to be exact—on two occasions, over 80 on other two, and three times over 50, and shares with his only rival for supremacy, Stevenson, the honour of having twice exceeded a century average in one match this season.

Dawson scored his necessary points at every session, excepting the first, that the innovation of playing a game of Snooker Pool to wind up with was tried, and proved a popular success. Laughter, when a player found himself "snookered," and applause, when one or other negotiated a brilliant shot was frequently heard—a proof that the innovation was immensely enjoyed, and it is worthy of record that every spectator, and there were always excellent houses, kept his seat until the final stroke.

Apart from the match at Thurston's there was no game of outstanding importance played during the week. Stevenson has been touring in Lancashire, and, as is usual with this brilliant and consistent artist, has been delighting everyone with his wonderful play. On Tuesday he was at Oldham (the scene of the two "over 500" breaks in one day feat); on Wednesday, he went over to the neighbouring town of Bury to see what progress his pupil, Master Tom Tothill, was making; then he wound up the week by playing W. Cook at Preston, and presenting him with a start of 1,500 in a game of 4,500, trounced the nursery cannon champion by over 800 points, in addition to making two superb breaks of over 400. It in worth mentioning that, so far this season, Stevenson has won every game he has taken part in.

Messers. Burroughes and Watts must feel highly gratified at the success of their venture in introducing to the public two lady players of exceptional promise. Although Madam Strebor and Miss Eva Collins have evidently something to learn in regard to the finer points of the game, they may be said to have realised expectations during the past week. During most of the six days they were so palpably nervous that it would be doing the ladies an injustice to be over critical regarding their performances. And as they have yet another week's engagement to fulfil, I will defer extended criticism until next Monday. Meantime I may say that both ladies are most interesting to watch, and each succeeding day's play is such an improvement on that immediately preceding that I am fairly confident they will make at least a half-century break during the week. At present Madam Strebor holds the honour of having compiled the biggest break (41), and in addition has made several others between 30 and 40; while Miss Collins' best has been 36. However, if I were asked to tip the ultimate winner of the series of games I should say, "Miss Collins."

Dawson's extra fine play enables him to make a further upward move in the interesting table below. During the week he made eighteen breaks of over 100, six over 200, and four over 300—totalling by these means no fewer than 5,122 points, and now averaging 53·22, as against 51·78 in the previous week. The popular amateur ex-champion, Walter Lovejoy, has also been going great guns in this respect, and by the aid of thirteen breaks of over 100, two over 200, and one over 300, in five days' play, increases his average to the excellent one of 39·44. The other changes in the tables call for no particular comment, the figures speaking for themselves. Appended are the tables:—

Fancy fairs are much favoured in Paris. While at one of these functions, Baron James de Rothschild walked along, chatting pleasantly to the stall-holders.

"Well, my dears," he said to one group, "what can I do for you?"

"Give us your autograph, baron," a pretty girl told him.

"Certainly," responded the gallant nobleman, "if you will preface it with an agreeable sentiment."

Without a moment's hesitation the fair one wrote, "I hereby give to——Charity 10,000 francs," which the millionaire smilingly signed, and the amount was duly credited to the cause mentioned.

THE MADRAS HUNT.

THE OPENING MEET OF THE SEASON.

MADRAS, 12th November.—The opening meet of the season was held yesterday when Mr. W. O. Horne, I. C. S., the new Master, met a large field of 40 riders at Velacheri, among those out being Messrs. Gibson and Torrie (Whips), Mrs. Horne, Major and Mrs. Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Porteous, Miss Clarke, Miss Tomlin, Messrs. Score-Smyth, Dove-Wilson, H. A. Owen, R. Simpson, Fleming, Coles, Deane, Oakes, Captains Duff, and the Hon'ble H. C. Vane and many others. The usual cover on Velacheri plain was drawn blank and a move was then made for the Fox Hill covers, where hounds spoke to a line in the Camarina plantation at the summit and slowly worked it out, two jacks being viewed away shortly after, one breaking out and taking a line towards Pallaveram. Hounds were quickly put on to his line, but the run that followed was disappointing though it ended in a kill. The going was heavy after the previous heavy rain and the jack, though a game straight-necked one, had no chance, hounds running into him and bowling him over after a run of about two miles. Mrs. Thomas, who was the first lady up received the brush. After drawing back over Fox Hill and trying, without success, for the other jack, a move was made for home, nothing else being done. The season has opened auspiciously, hounds being blooded at their first meet. It is to be hoped, however, that the season will prove as successful as some of its successors and that hunting will show the way to other sports in Madras, which at present seem to be sharing the prevailing gloom.

The next meet of the Hounds will be on Wednesday at the Saidapet Level Crossing, but unless the weather clears and the storm now threatening passes away, the going will be again heavy.

MADRAS, 15th November.—Hounds met yesterday morning at the Saidapet Level Crossing when a good average field of five and twenty turned out. The morning was cloudy, but scent was indifferent. The Master first drew the usual guava topes near the Adyar and then worked towards the Mount, without much luck, though several jacks were about. Finally a big 'un was put up in some cultivation but hounds were early at fault and he doubled back and lay up in the jungle on the river bank. Hounds were collected and taken to the Butts Plain where the far covert proved blank, but on the far side of the river hounds acknowledged a line which they puzzled out for some time, but the jack was apparently a ringing customer and was finally lost. Nothing could be done on such a morning and hounds were taken home. The next Meet will be at St. Thomas' Mount on Saturday next, the 17th instant. As it is a public holiday there should be a large field out. The officers of the R. A. will be at home at Breakfast to the Field after the Meet.

SEMI-FINALS.

31ST LANCERS vs. GYMKHANA.—Played on the 14th November, a well contested game resulting in a win for the Gymkhana by 3 goals 3 subsidiaries to 2 goals 1 subsidiary.

First Chukker.—Play in midfield, save when the Lancers got away and hit a minor point.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers were forced to defend, but the Gymkhana could not get through.

Third Chukker.—Fast up and down play. No score.

Fourth Chukker.—The Lancers scored two goals.

Fifth Chukker.—The Gymkhana asserted themselves and scoring 3 goals and 3 subsidiaries, won as stated.

Teams as before.

17TH LANCERS "A" vs. ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.—The second game in the semi-finals provided an excellent match. There was nothing to choose between the teams and the Lancers just won by a single subsidiary.

First Chukker.—The Rifles opened by hitting a goal and the Lancers put on a subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—The Rifles again attacked and scored a goal the Lancers replying with a similar score shortly afterwards.

Third Chukker.—An exciting period. The Lancers hit a goal and followed it up with a subsidiary, but before the close of the chukker the Rifles regained the lead by scoring a goal.

Fourth Chukker.—A subsidiary to the Rifles who were also awarded a free hit for a foul. They failed to turn this to account.

Fifth Chukker.—A goal was scored by the Rifles. Then a free hit for offside gave the Lancers an opportunity but they did not profit by it. Shortly after, however, they hit a goal and after a spell of play in midfield they got away and putting the ball through once more won the game by 4 goal 2 subsidiaries to 4 goals 1 subsidiary. Teams as before.

FINAL.

17TH LANCERS vs. MEERUT GYMKHANA.—The tournament concluded on the 16th instant before a large crowd of spectators. The ground was in perfect order and a fast and well contested game ended in a win for the Lancers.

First Chukker.—After a spell of play in the Gymkhana ground the Lancers' territory was invaded and a subsidiary scored. Both goals were next visited in turn.

Second Chukker.—Both teams tried hard to score, but without success—a level period.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers pressed and after Colonel Phayre had saved on more than one occasion they got through and hit a goal, following it up with a minor point shortly after.

Fourth Chukker.—An attack by the Gymkhana was stopped and the Lancers running down hit another goal, a minor point being added on changing ends.

Fifth Chukker.—Even play; both teams attacking in turn—no further points made. Final score: 17th Lancers, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries; Meerut Gymkhana, 1 subsidiary. Mrs. Henry presented the Cup to the winners. Teams as before.

ST. XAVIER'S COLLEGE, CALCUTTA, ANNUAL MEETING.

Referee :—Lieut.-Col. Binning.
Judges :—Messrs. W. W. Bushby, G. O'B. Power and K. Hall.
Time Taker :—Mr. W. C. Burke.
Starter :—Mr. W. S. Burke.
Callers over :—Messrs. A Vaughan, L. Maguire and V. Fitzpatrick.

Saturday, 17th November 1906.

THE second annual athletic meeting held by St. Xavier's College this afternoon was as successful as their inaugural gathering last year. There was a large attendance ; Sir Francis Maclean presided in the absence of H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor, and Mrs. Rampini gave away the prizes. Everything went like clockwork, the events were kept well up to time and there were none of those long waits so prejudicial to the success of sporting fixtures of this class. The executive are to be congratulated on the excellence of the ground arrangements, the greatest keenness was displayed by the competitors, while the performances, considering, the state of the ground, which, however, shows much improvement on last year, were quite fair. S. de Silva put up a good performance ; he scored five firsts and a second and besides taking the Best Man's Cup, won the Hornets' Challenge Cup outright, by winning the quarter mile two years in succession. We were sorry to learn that Father Vandercheuren, to whose untiring efforts the success of the sports are in a great measure due, was unable to be present on the day, as he had rather overdone it at the running off of the heats and was indisposed. His place was, however, very ably filled by Father Harris. We append results :—

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

C.C.C. vs. BALLYGUNGE C.C.—Thelfirst match of the season between these clubs was played in the Eden Gardens last week and resulted in an overwhelming victory for the visitors by no less than 245 runs on the first innings. Ballygunge had a strong side out, but Calcutta, without both Stewart and Curtis-Hayward, were very short of bowling : even so, however, their performance both in the field and with the bat was extremely disappointing, Ballygunge batted first, and B. A. White, the old Malvernian and their new captain, set a fine example to his men by scoring a really good century, while nearly all the succeeding Ballygunge batsmen also made runs freely against some indifferent bowling, of which Connor's and Beachcroft's was the best though we are led to expect better things from Simson on another occasion. When Calcutta went in they shaped very poorly with the bat also, and Warden's run out seemed to set things all askew, while another really good batsman in Turnbull, who was certainly not last but one in order of merit lost his wicket in the same way. The paltry total only amounted to 88 of which Hill, who made his runs well and stylishly, and was also by no means fortunate in the manner of his dismissal, compiled 31. Gould with five wickets for 45 and Manders with 3 for 41 did well with the ball, and the Ballygunge fielding was close and smart, a great improvement on that of their opponents. It is perhaps unfortunate that so good a game as this ought to be should be fixed for so early in the season, but we hope that for the return match the Calcutta club will get together a better side and give a vastly different exhibition of cricket. GOLF AT BARRACKPORE.

CALCUTTA GOLF CLUB vs. TOLLYGUNGE CLUB.—This return match was played at Barrackpore on the 18th instant, and after a fairly close struggle, and a very enjoyable day's play, resulted in a win for Calcutta by eight holes, they thus avenging their narrow defeat in the first match at Tollygunge a month ago. The best matches in the Singles were those between Messrs. Drimmie and Mitchell-Innes, and Messrs. Townend and Mann. Mr. Stewart collapsed unaccountably after taking a two-hole lead at the turn from Mr. Sinclair, and Mr. Lamb lost the first five holes running to Mr. Melrose and could never get on terms again. Mr. Dick again played up well to beat Mr. Youngson. In the foursomes the leading Tollygunge pair were three up at the tenth hole, but owing to a faulty short game had to put up with a single hole defeat. Messrs. Melrose and Mackenzie, with the former playing well, were distinctly too strong for Messrs. Lamb and McLeod, and Messrs. Mann and Dick beat Messrs. Townend and Youngson after a good game. The last match resulted in an easy victory for Tollygunge, but could only reduce the margin of victory. The weather was perfect, and the course, with the exception of the putting greens and one or two of the tees, in excellent order. The Calcutta Golf Club team acted as hosts on this occasion, and at the close an unanimous hope was expressed that these matches would henceforward be annual fixtures in the programmes of both clubs. The full results were as follows:—

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

SIGNALLERS vs. E. LANCS.—Played on the 10th instant the Signallers winning by two goals to nil. They scored both the points in the first half.

BOMBAY CUSTOMS vs. BRITISH OFFICERS I. A.—Also played on the 10th instant a fast and even game being witnessed. The Customs put on a goal in each period and won by two to nil.

93RD HIGHLANDERS vs. POONA VOLUNTEERS.—On the 12th instant a well contested game between these teams ended in a victory for the 93rd. Neither side had scored till five minutes before time when the Highlanders got away and put on two goals in quick succession.

BOMBAY CUSTOMS vs. R.F.A.—The gunners who had had a walk over in the first round met the Customs on the 12th, but were no match for them, the Preventive Service winning by 4 goals to nil.

THIRD ROUND.

LEICESTERS vs. SIGNALLERS.—These teams put up a splendid game on the 13th inst. The Leicesters scored two goals in the first half, Lieutenants Yates and Brendon being credited with the points. The Signallers got through once, Lieutenant Exham netting the ball. The Signallers pressed hard all through the second period but were unable to score and Lieutenant Brendon putting on a third goal for the Leicesters the latter won by three goals to one.

CONNAUGHT RANGERS vs. MOUNTED INFANTRY.—A great game was expected between these teams on the 14th instant, nor were the spectators disappointed, for after fast and exciting play the Rangers were victorious by three goals to two. Each team scored a couple of goals in the first half, the Rangers registering the winning point after the interval.

93RD HIGHLANDERS vs. MANCHESTERS.—The Manchesters, who had walked over in the first round, were kept on the defensive in this match last Friday. But their defence was so good that it was only once pierced in the first half when Lieutenant Kennedy got through and scored. The Highlanders pressed throughout in the second period and Private Fairlie scored two more goals, the 93rd thus winning by three to nil.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. BOMBAY CUSTOMS.—A fast and exciting game between these teams last Friday ended in a win for the Scots by a single point to nil. The first half was devoid of score and it was not till just before time in the second moiety that the only goal of the match was scored.

CANINE EDUCATION.

I.

IN the education of the dog, as in the education of boys and girls and men and women, there are no educational systems which compensate for ignorance and inefficiency on the part of the teacher, or for incapacity on the part of the pupil. There must be ability to convey knowledge on the one hand, and, on the other, an ability to receive it, else there is no proper progress. The mental capacity of the dog and the knowledge necessary to serve him through life are infinitely less than those required to serve man, but none the less his manner of acquiring knowledge is much the same as man's. Still, while the manner of it is similar the dog's sources of information are much narrower, for being of a lower order of intelligence than man, and having no power of speech worth considering in this connection, he can learn only from repeated, direct experience.

Man learns much from his fellow man through the medium of speech, besides having the knowledge of the world to draw upon, as preserved in writings. The dog's lessons, as between teacher and pupil, must always be object lessons. Continued discourse conveys no knowledge to him, as it does between man and man.

This is considering the matter in the narrow scope as it relates to teacher and pupil. It may be possible to show that the dog has faculties of a higher order than the mere recognition and relation of objects; but he must acquire his knowledge before he is able to apply it, and the matter of acquiring it is what is herein considered; hence, without going into any abstruse treatment of the objective and subjective, it is sufficient for the purpose to ignore herein the more intricate phenomena of mind.

Thus, any system held forth as having some inherent virtue whereby a dog will be trained quickly and thoroughly regardless of his capacity to receive a training or the trainer's ability to give it denotes that the claimant of such system is either very simple in the matter of which he treats, or is not very scrupulous as to his manner of treating it.

Every one cannot train a dog, but every one can try to train, and after trying he will know more about it than if he had never tried; in fact, without having tried, one will never know definitely whether he can or cannot train. Nor are there any men who are born trainers. Some men may have a natural aptitude for it, and learn it quickly and accurately, as they learn anything else quickly and accurately for which they have an aptitude. Contrary to common belief, therefore, the training of a dog is not one of the things which come intuitively. In theory, every man knows a sure cure for his friend's cold; what is the correct thing to do to start a gibbing horse, and without a moment's thought he can give an ex cathedra opinion on any great public question of the day—and they are all very good as theories. If they fail consecutively a thousand times in practice, they are equally as good to serve again on occasion.

The more inexperienced the man the more impractical and opinionated he is certain to be. If he be experienced and correctly practical in certain specialties he may be visionary concerning those of others, of which he has little knowledge. It is not strange then that nearly everyone thinks he can train a dog.

Nor is dog-training a matter of set forms, and arbitrary methods of application on the part of a competent trainer, though the beginner generally proceeds on the theory that he has but to learn a method by rote, and the application of it is a matter of course. A method of training, as set forth in books, may be thoroughly efficient so far as a method can be expressed in words, but there is much beside all that, and essentially supplementary to it, which the beginner must acquire by observation and experience, and which he must learn for himself. Having the theory accurately set forth, he must thus qualify himself for its practical application, and in applying it, nothing is more important than a thorough understanding of the dog himself; that is to say, the understanding on the part of the trainer of the dog's capacity to understand and of what the dog understands of his teacher's purposes; and he should be able to judge of the dog's peculiarities of character. If the dog is incapable of learning quickly owing to stupidity, or, though highly intelligent be from obstinacy refuses to learn, the former would need the most patient consideration; the latter, due consideration with unremitting firmness, and perhaps punishment. Yet the novice would be likely to use the same set method in the same way on both and also on all others. There are hundreds of little differences of dog character and capabilities to be considered, and until the trainer reaches a point of discernment where he can perceive, understand and take advantage of them, his attempts as a teacher will be but little more than mechanical. He may, now and then, have success with a dog from the accident that the set, arbitrary method happens to fit the dog's peculiarities, but it is merely a happening. With a little thought over it, it is clear that it is palpably absurd to apply one set method to the nervous, the stupid, the intelligent, the lazy, the timid, the diligent, the fast, the slow, the weak, the strong, etc. Such must result in many failures, and the best success will be moderate.

Methods should be modified to the circumstances of each individual case, compromising with the idiosyncrasies of the pupil, and applying with a view to securing certain results and not with a view to preserve arbitrary methods of teaching. By kindness, and preserving the dog's interest, always keeping progress within his capacity, success will be the result in every case where it is possible. There will be failures betimes, as in cases where the dog is mentally weak, so much so that he is a dullard, or understanding what is taught him for the moment he cannot remember it from day to day; or if he is proficient in learning, he may be too indolent to work afield, so that if trained he is merely a trained loafer; or he may be well trained and diligent, yet incapable of good performance, owing to the functional powers of the nose, as an organ of scent, being deficient or absent. In such cases the trainer is powerless to correct the dog's shortcomings, also he may not be able to recognize the cause of the trouble, and therefore the greater need of close and careful observation of details from the start.

No trainer can supply qualities which Nature has omitted. To be able to determine nicely all these points requires close observation. A knowledge of dog character will come to a trainer after a certain experience, even if he is left entirely to his own resources, but such is from a long experimental experience; but what is learned slowly from many experiments, losses and failures could have been much better learned at the beginning from the observance of advice given in approved methods and the exercise of perception and judgment.

Thus having given some consideration to the dog, he next would act wisely in giving a great deal to himself. He will need to study himself from a new standpoint. As a teacher, he will find a new character in himself, differing essentially from his every-day one. As teacher he will find that he is irritable, impatient, and unreasonable in his requirements of the dog; that he becomes angry over the dog's failure to do in a few moments what the trainer directs, and that his anger increases when the dog shows utter ignorance of the language which the trainer knows so well. Knowing the language himself, he does not consider that the dog is ignorant of it, and has to learn the sound of the order so as to keep it in memory, and next its meaning and its application. At this juncture the amateur generally falls to and gives the dog a sound beating, and calls the tumult dog training. At the next lesson the poor dog associates the whole affair with a sound beating, and is in a state of mind for anything else rather than receiving lessons.

When a dog's fears are aroused, or he is made to feel needlessly uncomfortable, worried and uneasy, his progress as a pupil is slow. If the lessons are made obnoxious to him, the trainer has succeeded in making him more intent on avoiding them or having them ended than in learning their purpose. With a violent teacher the dog's life is truly a sad one. Knowledge is then acquired under the most disheartening difficulties. Under the same violent conditions the teacher would rise in rebellion and implore the world to witness his wrongs. If, when learning his A B C.'s the good pedagogue had told him the names of the letters two or three times, then failing to receive proper answer, had jerked him violently by his neck, kicked him in his ribs and slashed him with a heavy whip, he would have considered a lesson as something devoid of pleasure. The harshness and inefficiency so deterent to the boy's progress and so harmful to his nature are equally so to the dog's. The same patient labour on the part of the teacher in dealing with the education of the boy is the same required in dealing with the education of the dog. Their manner of gaining knowledge differs but little. Punishment teaches nothing in the way of acquiring knowledge, excepting that his teacher is an unpleasant person, and one to be avoided. Punishment serves in its place to prevent a dog from doing certain things, and that is the extent of its mission. It is good in its place as a preventive but it develops nothing useful. But when it is applied for the reason that the teacher is angry, it is entirely outside of the purposes of dog training, though the teacher many imagine the violence is a part of it. Until the trainer can control his temper and fit his efforts to the dog's capacity and progress, he will be inefficient. And these things no one can do for him. His own judgment and self-control are his only reliance, as they are entirely outside the scope of any system.

Sir Evelyn Wood's memoirs, just published, abounds in good stories. One of the best refers to the Sudan. Some Emirs tried to convert a British officer, and advanced, among other arguments, that the Mahdi could make the rain to fall. Taking out his glass eye, he threw it in the air, caught it, and replaced it. "Can your Mahdi do that?" he asked. The Emirs ran like mad.

The late Col. Sanderson is alleged to have been guilty of saying in the heat of debate "The Opposition are firing their barbed arrows at me in the hope that some of the mud will stick."

It was only just before he left the service that Pat had to send a coat through the post to the tailor's shop for repairs. He enclosed a note saying. "To save the weight I have cut off the buttons and put them in one of the pockets."

Corporal's Wife: "And what is your husband's mess uniform?"

Volunteer Captain's Lady: "Similar to Regulars', cut without the stripe on the trousers."

Corporal's Wife (triumphantly): "Ah! we have them on ours!"

The Veterinarian.

SIMULATED MADNESS IN ANIMALS.

IT has been shown that this disease is specific, being due to the introduction into the system of the virus of the malady by means of a bite from a rabid dog or other form of inoculation. There are, however, cases of madness or frenzy which approach in their general character the genuine disease, although they are in on way connected with the rabic virus.

It is well known that cattle, under various forms of excitement, may behave very much as rabid animals do under a paroxysm. A common belief exists that colour may have such an influence on the bovine brain as to drive the animal frantic, and lead to disastrous consequences. The effect of a red rag on a bull is proverbial, although there are many practical men who treat this superstition irreverently, and do not hesitate to assert that bulls care no more for red than they do for other coloured rags. However this may be, the fact remains that people wearing red garments of any kind have often been attacked; and no amount of argument would convince them that the same disaster would have happened if they had worn blue.

A sudden access of fury may seize a bull or a cow under various circumstances. Now and then acute disease of the brain is the cause, at another time acute indigestion (stomach staggers) may induce excitement, sometimes amounting to madness; and no one doubts that over-driving, added to intense thirst, will end in similar manifestations on the part of the suffering animal.

Rabies among domesticated cattle, when that disease is abroad among dogs, can readily be accounted for: since country dogs are allowed a greater measure of freedom than animals kept in towns, and range over a large tract of country well known to themselves, so long as the instinct to return home remains with them.

It had been pointed out many times—and its great importance of its repetition—that, in numerous instances, a rabid dog makes a circular tour for days, during which his manner may not arrest any particular attention, unless an object animate or inanimate, gets in his way and causes him to snap at it. A comparatively small injury to a bullock, inflicted by a dog, is quite likely to be overlooked, or attributed, by the most careful stockman, to any other cause than the bite of a rabid dog. No dog may have been seen, and the owner and attendants on a rabid bullock may probably consider themselves in a position to deny the possibility of a bite having been thus inflicted. Such negative evidence, however, must be set aside as perfectly valueless, in face of the fact that dogs may often run over farms without being noticed by anyone.

The importance of a correct diagnosis in cases of suspected rabies in cattle is almost as great as in the case of an affected dog; as human beings may have been inoculated by the saliva of the ox, with the same result—namely, hydrophobia.

Though the period of incubation in the ox is uncertain, it is said to be usually between two and three weeks; and the theory propounded as regards man, that virus remains in the bottom part until some chemical or physiological changes take place, has the same support in the generally-observed symptoms of irritation at the seat of injury. When the acute symptoms are developed, the conduct of the animal affected varied somewhat according to sex, great excitement being the characteristic of all, but bulls and heifers may display an inordinate disposition to ride other members of the herd.

Alternating with periods of excitement are intervals of dull stupidity, and, again, a display of anger—sometimes charging an imaginary object, but as likely the attendant or passing stranger. The voice undergoes a change, being pitched two or three tones higher when bellowing; but this is a symptom often unobserved in large herds, where the attendants are not familiar with the individual voices, or not sufficiently observant to be able to make a comparison. Champing the jaws and dribbling of frothy saliva hanging in ropes, too, from the angles of the mouth, is a constant symptom. The eyes, in addition to a look of vacancy or wildness by turns, are red in the membranes and occasionally squint. Any or all of the above symptoms may be present without biting the place of inoculation; or the animal may bite the manger, or even the walls, when put in a place with nothing to lay hold on. It is a curious sight for the first time to see a cow seize and attempt to destroy a gate or other similar object; and it is one not likely to be forgotten. Rapid loss of flesh follows, and death is usually preceded by paralysis of the hind extremities. Some observers have chronicled great thirst as a symptom, with the same inability to slake it as marks the disease in dogs, spasm of the throat preventing deglutition. It is said that a bite about the head, if resulting in inoculation at all, is likely to shorten the period of duration; but our own experience goes to prove that the legs are usually the seat of injury, the shoulder and dewlap being next often implicated. Medical treatment is useless and dangerous and should not attempted, but there lurks a danger in precipitate slaughter; and unless the case is beyond all doubt, a veterinary surgeon should hesitate to pass sentence without a second opinion.

Milk madness or parturient mania may simulate rabies in nearly every particular. In a recent case a heifer that had calved some nine or ten days, exhibited very marked symptoms. She was found biting the walls and manger furiously, and her off shoulder by turns, and, according to the cowman, had eaten dirt and sticks while getting her in from the field. She dashed up and down the building in which she was confined and threatened everyone who approached her. She was presently secured, and a very large dose of morphia injected subcutaneously, and an aperient administered by way of the mouth. The door was secured, and the heifer was left for the night. In the morning she was comparatively calm, and her calf was brought to her as likely to satisfy the maternal instinct; but it had quite the reverse effect, and was removed with some difficulty. The symptoms of the previous night returned; but again passed off with another injection of morphia, and the heifer was practically well and sane on the third day. If this animal had been a male, one could scarcely have believed the disease to be anything other than rabies; but, seeing that she was a recently calved heifer, had been exposed to inclement weather and suddenly lost her milk, it was thought desirable to administer opiates and wait the result—even if there had been no fear of inoculation of the professional attendant, who probably never felt a keener interest in a case than on the second of his visits. Symptoms alone, it may be concluded from the above recital, may not in all cases enable the examiner to differentiate between rabies and parturient mania; but a consideration of sex and other circumstances, especially the cessation of the prominent symptoms, may lend some assistance in arriving at a correct diagnosis. It may however, be suggested that in such case the safe plan is to look upon the diseased animal for the time as rabid until the improvement in condition puts that disease out of the question.

"Kate, I must warn you. I saw that policeman put his arm round you and kiss you."

"I couldn't help that, ma'am."

"But you didn't seem to object."

"Not me, an' he had up for resistin' the police."

"You say Jeff has grown whiskers since last you saw him How did you recognise him?"

"By my umbrella."

The Naturalist.

THE PARADISE FLYCATCHER.

THE cock paradise flycatcher (Terpsiphone paradisi) when in his full adult plumage is a bird of startling beauty. I shall never forget the first occasion upon which I saw him. It was in the Himalayas and night was falling, when I caught sight of some white diaphanous-looking creature flitting about among the trees. In the dim twilight it looked ghostly in its beauty. It is the two elongated middle tail feathers which render the bird so striking. They look like white satin streamers and have given the bird its many popular names, such as cotton thief, the ribbon bird, rocket bird. But this flycatcher has more than striking beauty to commend it to the naturalist; it is of surpassing interest from the point of view of biological theory. The cock is one of the few birds that undergo metamorphosis during adult life, and the species furnishes an excellent example of sexual dimorphism.

Since the day, some years back, when I first set eyes upon the bird, I determined to learn something of its habits; but I had to wait long before I was able to carry out my determination. It was not until I came to Lahore that I saw much of the species. Here let me say that the capital of the Punjab, unpromising as its looks at first sight, is, when one gets to know it, a veritable gold mine for the ornithologist.

Paradise flycatchers migrate there in great numbers in order to breed. They arrive at the end of April and at once commence nesting operations. Before describing these let me, in order to enable non-ornithological readers to appreciate what follows, say a few words regarding the plumage of the bird. The young of both sexes are chesnut in colour with the exception of a black head and crest and whitish under parts. This plumage is retained by the hen throughout life. After the autumn moult of the second year the two median tail feathers of the cock grow to a length of sixteen inches, that is to say four times the length of the other tail feathers, and are retained till the following May or June when they are cast. After the third autumn moult they again grow and the plumage now begins to gradually grow white, the wings and tail being the first portions to be affected by the change, thus the cock becomes for a time partly chestnut and partly white, and it is not until he emerges from the moult of his fourth autumn that all his feathers are white with, of course, the exception of those of his head and crest. The bird retains this plumage until death. Cock birds breed in either chestnut or white plumage; this proves that the metamorphosis from chestnut to white takes place after the bird has attained maturity.

In Lahore this species breeds in considerable numbers along the well-wooded banks of the Ravi. Since the birds keep to forest country it is not easy to follow their courting operations for any length of time; the birds engaged in courtship appear for a moment and then are lost to view among the foliage, but the species is certainly monogamous and I think there can be but little doubt that the hen courts the cock quite as much as he courts her. On 28th April I was out with Mr. G. A. Pinto and he saw a couple of hens chasing a cock in white plumage. Presently one of the hens drove away the other, then the cock showed off to the triumphant hen, expanding his wings and uttering a sweet little song like the opening bars of that of the white-browed fantail flycatcher (Ithipidura albifrontat). I myself was not a witness of that incident, the birds not being visible from where I was standing at the time, but on 3rd June I saw a cock bird in chestnut plumage and a hen fighting; before long the birds disengaged themselves and the male flew off; then a cock in white plumage came up to the hen and gave her a bit of his mind. After this they both disappeared among the foliage. Presently I saw two hens chasing a chestnut-coloured cock. I do not understand the full significance of these incidents, but they tend to refute Charles Darwin's contention that there is competition among cocks for hens and to show that the hen takes an active part in courtship. To this I shall return.

It does not seem to be generally known that the cock paradise flycatcher is capable of emitting anything approaching a song. Thus Oates writes in The Fauna of British India of these flycatchers "their notes are very harsh."

This is true of the usual call, which is short, sharp and harsh, something like the twitter of an angry sparrow. But in addition to this the cock has two tuneful calls. One resembles the commencement of the song of the white-browed fantail flycatcher and the other is a sweet little warble of about four notes. I have repeatedly been quite close to the cock when thus singing and have seen his throat swell while he sang, so there can be no question as to the notes being his. He thus furnishes one of the many exceptions to the rule that brilliantly plumaged birds have no song.

The nest is a deepish cup, firmly attached to two or more slender branches; it is in shape like an inverted cone with the point prolonged as a stalk. It is composed chiefly of vegetable fibres and fine grass; these being coated outwardly by a thick layer of cobweb and small white cocoons. Let me take this opportunity of remarking that cobweb affords a most important building material to bird masons; it is their cement, and many species, such as sunbirds and flycatchers, use it most unsparingly.

As a pair of paradise flycatchers have been kind enough to build a nest in a pear tree in my compound I have been able to follow the proceedings.

Want of space prevents me from going into details. It must suffice that both birds take part in building and the cock does the lion's share of the work. Great care is taken to give the nest a thick coating of cobweb and cocoons, the interior of the nest is made circular and smooth by the birds turning round and round in it by means of wings which are spread so as to grip the edge of the nest. The two birds work independently, the cock going in one direction to fetch material and the hen in another. It sometimes happens that one bird is at work on the nest when the other returns with material. In such a case the latter waits on the edge of the nest until the former has finished. The nest is built in about a week. Four eggs are laid, these are white spotted with reddish-brown. Just as the cock bird does the greater part of the building so does he more than his share of incubation. One sees him on the nest about four times to the three of the hen bird; that is to say out of seven visits to the nest when a bird is sitting that bird will be the male on four occasions and the female on three. The sitting cock is a conspicuous object, for his long tail feathers hang over the edge of the nest and one has no difficulty in telling whether he is on the nest or not from a distance of twenty yards or more. This species seems to delight to build in exposed situations, hence a great many of their nests come to grief, especially in the Punjab, where, if there be anything in phrenology, the bumps of destructiveness and cruelty must be enormously developed in every small boy.

Of the habits described above there are three upon which I would lay especial stress, for it seems to be that they are of deep biological significance; they are the active part in courtship played by the hen, the fact that the cock incubates as much or more than the hen, and the late change in the plumage of the cock bird from chestnut to white.

Darwin, as I have already pointed out, devoted much time and energy in trying to prove that there is in most species a competition among males for females, and that these latter are in consequence able to exercise a selection. They choose the most brilliant and beautiful of their numerous suitors. Thus we have what he calls sexual selection, or as I should prefer to call it, feminine selection. On this theory the poor cock exercises no selection; any decrepit old hen is good enough for him! He is all eagerness, while the hen is blasé and indifferent. This theory is, I submit, improbable on a priori grounds. It is certainly opposed to human experience, and is, I believe, not borne out by animal behaviour.

I have paid some attention to the subject lately and am convinced that in most cases the desire of the hen for the cock is as great as the desire of the latter for the hen. It was only this morning that I watched two hen orioles trying to drive each other away, while the cock was in a tree near by. To repeat what I have already said, the hen courts the cock quite as much as he courts her. When a pair of birds mate they are mutually attracted to one another. That there is such a thing as sexual selection I am convinced, but I do not believe that this selection is confined to the hens. The hen selects the best cock she can get to pair with her, while the cock selects the best hen available.

The second point upon which I desire to lay stress is the active part taken by the cock paradise flycatcher in incubation. This, again, is, I believe, nothing very uncommon, even in sexually dimorphic species, for I have myself put a cock minivet (Pericrocotus peregrinus) off the nest. Yet this fact seems to dispose of the commonly accepted theory that the more sombre hues of the hen are due to her greater need of protection, since she alone is supposed to incubate. It was, I believe, Alfred Russell Wallace who originated this theory.

As a matter of fact, a bird sitting on a nest is not, in my opinion, exposed to any special danger, for it seems that birds of prey as a rule only attack flying objects.

Finally there is the extraordinary metamorphosis undergone by the cock in his fourth year. It is difficult to see how this can have been caused by the preference of the hen for white cock birds, since a great many chestnut ones are observed to breed, hence the dimorphism must have originated late in the life history of the species, and although a hen bird might prefer a white to a chestnut husband it is difficult to believe that she should prefer a skewbald one, and this skewbald state must have been an ancestral stage if we believe that the transition is due to feminine selection of white birds. I may be asked "if you decline to believe that the hen has greater need of protection than the cock, how do you account for the phenomena of sexual dimorphism, and if it is not sexual selection which has caused the white plumage of the cock paradise flycatcher to arise, what is it?"

This article has already attained such a length that even had I complete explanations to offer I could not give it in this place. I must content myself by giving what I believe to be the key to the solution of the problem. I think that there is little doubt that what a bird looks for in its mate is, not beauty or brilliance of plumage, but vigour and strength. If beauty is a correlative character of strength then the hen selects the most beautiful of the cocks willing to mate with her, not because of his beauty but of his strength; likewise the cock. Now there is a very intimate connection between the generative cells and the body cells, and the male element tends to dissipate energy and the female element to conserve it. Thus it is that the general tendency of the cock is to become gaily coloured and to grow plumes and other ornaments, while the tendency of the hen is to remain of comparatively sombre hue.

The Story Teller.

THE STRATEGY OF McCLOUD.

WHEN George McCloud took the mountain division as superintendent, not one in a hundred among the railroad men looked to see him make a go of it. Morris Blood had just left the place to go to the river as general superinten tent and had left a record of tonnage behind him that had never been approached on the books at Medicine Bend. In itself it was hard luck to succeed Morris Blood—he was too good a man.

But in this case there was more than the mere succeeding. McCloud was a young fellow. When Bill Dancing met him at Medicine Bend he insisted that it must be George McCloud's father who had been appointed, though George's father had never seen the sun rise west of the Mississippi.

However George's youth would have been no serious drawback in itself, but at Medicine Bend one serious fact leaked out before his coming, namely, that he was a college guy—what Pat Mears would call an aljaybra man; this distinctly was a drawback.

Of course, I say nothing here of the tonnage and what McCloud did to Morris Blood's record because that came some time afterward: all I say is that the real reason why McCloud's subsequent record made that of Morris Blood look like a peanut shop beside a skyscraper, was his extraordinary hold on the division men. Nobody has ever fully explained way this smooth-faced, dull-eyed Yankee boy got more out of the men than anybody in the hills has ever got since; but he did do it, and his hold on them is pretty plain whenever he comes in his car back to the old division to straighten out transportation tangles. It is true he was always called a dude by the Medicine Bend loafers, and it was probably true that McCloud always did have the patent leather tendency. But when a general manager in patent leathers can swing up into an engine cab, put out a hand to the engineman with a squeeze in the fingers like the grip of a Stilson wrench, call him by name every time and ask him to make a good run with the mail to oblige him and get the man to do it—I call that going some, whether the head of the operating department wears patent leather or just the regular wooden shoes. Now McCloud can do this to-day; but when he was superintendent he could do it a dozen times a day. He knew them all from the car-tinks to the boiler washers.

But whatever the criticisms on McCloud no one could ever accuse him of not furnishing abundance of excitement on the star division from the first day he took hold. For a year it was one excitement after another. First the Smoky Creek wreck and the discharge of Murray Sinclair, and every man in the wrecking crew with him, for looting. That alone led to a bookful of stories. Then Du Sang, of the Williams Cache gang, tried within a month to put a bullet through McCloud's head and did put a thirty-forty bullet at two hundred and fifty yards through his hat. But that was kept very quiet by Kennaddy and Whispering Smith until after Crawling Stone Wash. Next came the word that McCloud was to take charge of the building of the Crawling Stone line, the low-grade cut-off through the Black Hills. He had found the pass himself and got Glover and Buck interested in the project. When the building came, McCloud was told to put the operating into the hands of his assistant Anderson and to prepare to put the Crawling Stone cut-off through during the next summer.

It was then July. The first question McCloud asked at headquarters was why wait a year? Glover, vice-president, specially charged with the rebuilding of the system, explained that it would be fall before the grading would be far enough along to do anything with the track. McCloud said he should like to be laying steel by that time. Glover told him to go ahead.

No one had ever heard of winter road building in the Rockies. The Crawling construction under McCloud marked the first, attempt and it was met with ridicule and predictions of failure. His very friends thought he was undertaking too much and his first clash came with his right hand man Pat Mears.

McCloud put in a switch below Piedmont, opened a material yard and began laying track at a date when Pat Mears said it was time to quit work until spring. When McCloud told him he wanted track across the divide and into the lower valley by spring, Mears threw up his hands.

But there was metal in the old man and he was for orders all the time. He kept up a running fire of protests and forebodings about the danger of exposing men during the winter season but he stuck to his part. Glover sent along the men, and, although two out of every three deserted the day after they arrived, Mears kept a force in hand and crowded the track up the new grade as fast as the ties and steel came in, working day in and day out, keeping one eye on the clouds and the other on the tie line as it was spread across the open country, hoping every day for orders to stop.

December slipped away to Christmas with the steel still going down and the disaffected element at Medicine Bend waiting for disaster. The spectacle of McCloud handling a flying column on the Crawling Stone work in the face of the most treacherous weather in the mountain year was one that brought out constant criticism of him among Sinclair's friends at headquarters and while McCloud laughed and pushed ahead the work, they waited for his discomfiture. Christmas Day found McCloud on the front, men still very scarce but with Mears' force laying steel. The work train was in charge of Stevens, the conductor who had tumbled after the Smoky Greek wreck and was slowly climbing back to position. They were working in the usual way, with the flat cars ahead of the engine, the caboose being coupled to the tender and thus on the extreme hind end of the train.

At two o'clock in the afternoon when there was not a cloud in the sky the horizon threatened in the east. Within thirty minutes the mountains from end to end of the skyline were lost in the sweep of a storm and by three o'clock the snow had darkened the valley from peak to peak.

It struck the valley like a pall. Mears know the danger. He ordered the mean off the track and into the caboose. McCloud had been inspecting culverts some distance ahead and started for the train when the snow drove across the valley. It came so fast and so blotted out the landscape from sight that he was very glad after an anxious five minute to regain the ties and find himself safely back. The men were bordering on a panic when McCloud came in. Mears with his two foremen had already left to hunt him up and had passed him unseen in the storm. It was already impossible to see or to hear an ordinary sound ten feet away. McCloud ordered the flat cars cut off the train, and the engine whistle sounded at short intervals, though with the wind it was almost useless, and, taking the conductor, buttoned his reefer and started up the track after the missing men. The two fired their revolvers as they advanced, but the storm, increasing every moment, tossed the shots on the ears of Mears and his companions from every point of compass. McCloud was standing on the last tie and discussing with his companion the best way to keep the grade as the two advanced when the engine signals behind them changed. "Now that sounds like one of Bill Dancing's games," said McCloud to his companion. "What the deuce is it, Stevens?"

Stevens, who knew a little of everything, recognized the signals almost at once and threw up his hands. "It's Morse code, Mr. McCloud and they're in—Mears and the foremen—and us for the train as quick as the Lord will let us. That's what they are whistling."

"So much for an education, Stevens. Bully for you. Come on"

They regained the flat cars and made their way back to the caboose and engine which stood uncoupled McCloud got into the cab with Dancing. Stevens and Mears signalled all in from the caboose ahead and with a whistling scream the engine started to back the caboose rapidly back to Piedmont.

They had hardly more than got under full headway when the difficulties of the situation became apparent to the little group around McCloud. They were riding an unballasted track and using such limited speed as they dare to escape from the situation that had now become perilous. The light caboose, packed like a sardine box with men, was dancing a hornpipe on the joints. McCloud felt the peril and the lurching of the car could be seen reflected in the jerk of the engine tender to which it was coupled. Apprehensive of trouble, McCloud crawled forward on the coal to watch the caboose himself and stayed only long enough to see that the drifting snow was threatening to derail the outfit any minute. He got back to the cab and ordered a stop.

"It won't do," said he to Stevens and the engineman. "We can't back that caboose loaded with men through this storm. We shall be off the track in five minutes."

"Try it slow," suggested Stevens.

"If we had the time," returned McCloud. "But the snow is drifting on us. We've got to make a run for it the engine in front of that way-Car with the pilot headed for the drifts. Let's look at things."

Dancing and Stevens, followed by McCloud, dropped out of the gangway. Mears opened the caboose door and together they went forward to inspect the track and the trucks. In the lee of the caboose a council was held. The roar of the wind was like the surge of many waters and the snow had whitened into storm. They were ten miles from any habitation and, but for the single track they were travelling, might as well have been a hundred so far as reaching a place of safety was concerned. They were without food and with a hundred men on their hands in the caboose and with a scant supply of fuel for either the caboose or the engine.

"Get your men ready with their tools, Pat," said McCloud to Mears.

"What are you going to do?"

"I'm going to turn the train around."

"Going to turn the train around. Yes, that would make it easy. I'd like to see it turned around. Where's your turntable, Mr. McCloud?" asked Mears.

"How are you going to turn your train around on a single track?" asked Stevens.

"I'm going to turn the track around under it. I know about where we are I think. There's a little stretch just beyond this curve where the grade is flush with the ground. Ask your engineman to run back very slowly and watch for the bell-rope. I'll ride on the front platform until we reach a place where we can work. Lose no time, and, Pat, tell your men that it's now or never. If we are caught here now we may stay till they carry us home—and the success of this little game depends on having everything ready and working quick"

Stevens pulled the cord within five minutes and before the caboose had stopped the men were tumbling from the platforms. McCloud led Mears and the foremen forward on the track. They tramped a hundred yards back and forth and with steel tapes for safety lines swung a hundred feet out on each side of the track to make sure of the ground. "This is all right," said McCloud. "You waited here half a day for steel a week ago; I know this ground.

"Break that joint, Pat." He pointed to the rail under his foot. "Pass ahead with the engine and car about a thousand feet and when I give you a signal back up slow and look out for a thirty-degree curve, without any elevation, either. Get out all your men with lining bars. Divide them into bunches of ten with a foreman that can make signs if he can't talk English. Work lively now and throw the track to the south."

Pretty much everybody, Japs, Italians and Greeks, understood the stake they were playing for and did get very busy. McCloud said afterward that he would match his Piedmont hundred in making a movable Y against any two hundred men Glover could pick. They had had the experience, and that when the move meant their last counter in the game of mountain life or death. The Piedmont hundred, to McCloud's mind, were past masters in the art of trackshifting.

Working in a driving cloud of grit and snow, the ignorant, the dull and the slow rose to the occasion. Bill Dancing, Pat Mears and Stevens moved about in the driving snow like giants. The howling storm rang with the shouting of the foremen, the guttural cries of the Japs and the clank of the lining bars as rail-length after rail-length of the heavy track was slewed bodily from the grade alignment and swung in a sharp curve to a right angle far out on the open ground.

McCloud at last gave the awaited signal and with keen-eyed, anxious men watching every revolution of the cautious driving wheels the engine, hissing and pausing as the air-brakes went on and off, pushed the light caboose slowly out on the rough spur to its extreme end and stopped facing the main track at right angles. But before it had reached its halting place spike mauls were ringing at the fish-plates where it had left the line on the curve. The track at that point was cut again and under a long line of crowbars and renewed shouting it was thrown gradually quite across the long gap in the main line. The new joints were made fast just as the engine, running now pilot forward, steamed slowly around the new curve without accident, regained the main line, and greeted by a screeching yell from a hundred throats stood safely headed into the teeth of the storm for Piedmont.

Ten miles across the divide were now less than a matter of thirty minutes, and they drew into the Piedmont yards just as the wires were heating from headquarters with orders annulling trains, ordering plows on outgoing engines and battening the division's hatches for a Christmas blizzard.

No man that came back was so well pleased as Stevens. "That man's all right," said he to Bill Dancing, as they walked up from the caboose. "That's all I want to say. Some of the fellows have been leary about going out with him. They hounded me for months about stepping over his way when Sinclair and his mugs struck. I reckon I played my hand about right, and I reckon the boys will stand for any move the young fellow makes on his division."

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 16.

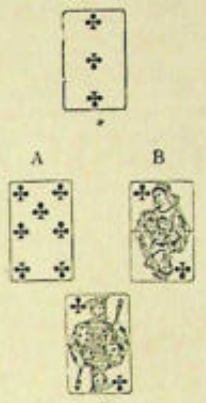
A IS marked with the queen of hearts and the knave, 6, 3 of clubs, B having shown two in his partner's suit. Z could make five trick by a cross ruff, but might then fail to win a tricks in diamonds, all the spades being against him. His best plan, thefore, is to lead a small diamond to Y's queen at trick 5. If A put on the ace and leads the queen of tramps, Z must win the game. On getting in he clears dummy's 9 of clubs by leading the 10, and so makes three more trumps, one club, and two diamonds. Also if B takes Y's queen with the ace, Z wins the game; for B must lead a diamonds or a spade, and Z makes one trick in diamonds and his five trumps. If, however Y's queen takes the trick, the lead is now in the wrong hand for the double ruff, and Z is driven to a finesse in diamonds. If this succeeds he wins the game. By playing as above, therefore, he will win the game unless two named cards, viz., the ace and knave of diamonds, are with A.

Problem No. 17.

Score: A B 24, Y Z 0. Z deals, and leaves it to Y, who declares no-trumps. A's and Y's hands are as follow:—

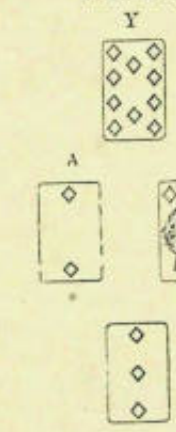
Y's Hand (Dummy): Heart, ace, king, 2; diamond, ace, knave, 10, 5, 4; clubs, 6, 3; spades, 10, 5, 3.

A's Hand (orginal leader): Hearts, knave, 3; diamonds, queen, 6, 2; clubs, queen, 10, 8, 7; spades, ace, king, knave, 4.



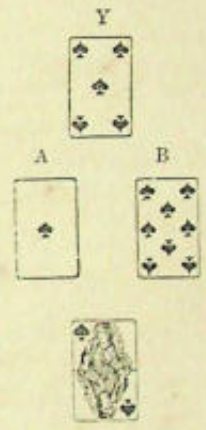
The play of the first four tricks is as follows:—

Trick I.



Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 0.

Trick II.



Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 1.

Trick III.

Tricks: A B 2, Y Z 1.

Trick IV.

Tricks: A B 3, Y Z 1.

What ought A to lead next, and why?

Just at the end of Tom Oliver's brilliant career as a steeple, chase rider, he sued the executors of a deceased patron for a considerable amount, being his bill for training several horses for riding fees, and for other costs and expenses incidental to his employment. There was really no reply to the action, but the defendants, as executors, had declined, except under the sanction of the law, to pay what they considered outrageous charges for an ignoble and immoral practice.

Mr. H. (afterwards a judge) held a brief for the defence. He was at that time a rising junior, well known on the Turf, and it was a matter of regret to Tom and his solicitor that he had been snapped up by the other side before they offered him a retainer. The bill was a long one, but such was the fairness of the charges, and the plausibility of Tom in his explanations and definitions, that Mr. H. made little headway.

"Come, Mr. Oliver," he said, "you have already informed the Court that £5 for a losing steeplechase mount, and £10 for a win of a similar description, was regulation price. How is it you have charged £50 for winning the Liverpool? Did you have any express contract before you rode?"

"No; I had no previous agreement."

"Then how do you pretend to support such an outrageous charge?"

"Well now, before I answer that question, please let me read the back of your brief? I want to see how much they gave you to ride this match against me."

"Certainly not; that is a matter totally wide of the question.

"Oh, no, it isn't. I should like to see what they are giving you for your mount."

"I don't intend to satisfy you. Now tell the Court how you can support this charge."

"Well, it was a big race, and I won it. Now, if I could have got you to ride for me to-day, I think I should have made a certainty of getting all the stakes, and I should not have thought of giving you less than a couple of ponies; while, as for those outsiders there" (waving his hand, with a look of contempt, in a sweeping circle so as to describe all the barristers present), "I would not have had them at a quid apiece"

There was, of course, a roar of laughter in court, and it is needless to add there was no further opposition to the account, Tom winning his case hands down.

"Riches take unto themselves wings and fly away,'" read the Sunday-School teacher.

"Now, what kind of riches could be meant?"

"'Ost-riches!" yelled a youngster from the back; and then the good young man got mad.

ATHLETIC HANDICAPS ON A CASH BASIS.

A SOMEWHAT original proposition in connection with handicapping at athletic sports recently made in a London sporting paper has attracted a good deal of attention. A correspondent, signing himself "W. S. B.," has put forward the suggestion that a runner's handicaps should be regulated less by the form he displays than by the value of the prizes he has won. Perhaps we shall do our best to quote the salient passage from "W. S. B's" letter to the Sportsman :—

"The proposition is that a runner, at the commencement of his career, be placed on limit in each race, and reduced at so much per yard. The limit in some districts is preposterous—that for a mile in the Midlands is over 200 yards. If a man cannot win a mile race off about 160 yards, he ought to quit the path and take up some other congenial sport, and not go filling up the track and stopping 'dead' short of the finish, as is so often the case, thus impeding many an honest trier from whom he is receiving a substantial allowance.

"The following limits and values (in our standard distances) suggest themselves as being fair :—

100 yards	... Limit	10 yards ...	£4	per yard
220 yards	... Limit	18 yards ...	£2	per yard
440 yards	... Limit	36 yards ...	£1	per yard
880 yards	... Limit	70 yards ...	10s.	per yard
1,320 yards (Steeplechase)	... Limit	100 yards ...	7s. 6d.	per yard
1,760 yards	... Limit	163 yards ...	5s.	per yard

"It will be seen that the cost per yard is less than the average under the present mode for 'firsts,' but every runner would be entitled to limit at each distance, and be penalised only in a race of the distance at which he had been successful."

The modern system of handicapping no doubt leaves much to be desired, but we venture to think that alteration of the system based upon a pecuniary basis is wrong in principle, certainly in so far as amateurs are concerned. It is very probable that there are runners with whom the cash value of the prize counts more than the credit of success ; and we would not go so far as to say that it is illegitimate for a man to consider the value of the prizes offered when weighing the propriety of entering. He may perhaps ask himself whether it be worth while giving up an afternoon to travel to a distant meeting in order to run for an insignificant prize; though we very much prefer the man who looks not at the plate chest but at the company he is likely to meet. The sporting spirit takes the prizes not into account at all : D has good reason to believe that he will meet A, B and C on the half mile, let us say : A on some previous occasion has beaten him by a couple of yards when he, D, was not feeling perfectly fit : B he knows to be a half-miler well worthy of his steel, or running shoes, and C he has beaten by margin as narrow as that by which A beat himself. Now we doubt extremely whether the prospect of meeting such competitors would not influence D far more in making his decision than any consideration connected with prize values. The prize is a mere incident to be taken for what it is worth ; the man who has won his mile or half mile in first-rate time attaches far more importance to the "mins. secs." on the cup than he does to the cup itself: it is as the picture to its frame to the amateur athlete who is animated by the right spirit.

We cannot but think that "W. S. B." has been unfortunate in the incidents he has witnessed or that he attributes the acts he mentions to the wrong motive. "I have frequently seen," he says, "runners in long distance races step off the track a few yards from the finish presumably to avoid a paltry second or third prize and an inadequate drop in the handicap." In other words, he has seen men decline to run a race out fairly lest they should suffer in subsequent events at the handicapper's pencil for an inadequate cash return. We are justified in calling it a "cash return" for a few lines lower down we find "a 30s. or £2 second prize" referred to in a contemptuous tone. The athlete on whose behalf this would-be reformer pleads is represented as weighing an 8 guineas first prize and accompanying penalty of about 14 yards against the combined disadvantag s of a small second prize and the accompanying penalt y of 6 or 7 yards in his handicap for a mile race. "W. S. B's" sympathies on one occasion were aroused by the spectacle in a big mile handicap of a man finishing 40 or 50 seconds after the tape had been broken. "He was leaving the track about 40 yards from the finish, but being the only runner left on the course the judges insisted upon his crossing the line for third prize which he seemed to do very reluctantly."

The judges, in our opinion, were perfectly right: and we strongly incline to the view that if such practices are at all common amateur athletics would be greatly strengthened by empowering Stewards of meetings to deal with such doings in the way that the Jockey Club empowers Stewards to deal with malpractices on the Turf. The jockey who, seeing he had no chance of winning, pulled his horse to avoid the unwelcome attentions of the handicapper who would appraise a good second or third in terms of avoirdupois, would be very quickly brought to a sense of his duty: and we fail to see that there is any real difference between stopping a horse for this reason and a runner "stepping off the track" with precisely the same object in view. The action in the case of the latter may not be punishable; but the fact does not make it right nor fair; it is not playing the game and should be dealt with as a deliberate malpractice. If a man enters for a race he undertakes, in our judgment, a moral obligation to do his best; to win if he can, and if he cannot to come in as near the winner as his powers enable him: if he does otherwise from any motive, connected with handicapping or prizes or anything else, he sets his obligation on one side and is out of place on the field of athletics.

We are disinclined to consider "W. S. B.'s" "cash basis" system of handicapping on its merits, or any merits—it may possess—regarding it, as already said, as wholly wrong in principle: but it may be worth while pointing out that adoption of such a system would be playing into the hands of the least desirable class of athlete—of the men to whom the value of the prizes he wins is a matter of the first consideration, the sporting side of the business counting nothing with him. The pothunting runner who ran at a small meeting where the prizes were less valuable than those at a larger one would be penalised according to the value of the prize he won, while a man winning a similar race at the larger meeting where prizes of greater value were awarded would be penalised accordingly. Therefore when the pothunter and the other met in a similar race the former would have an advantage over the latter even though his time over the distance, whatever it might be, were actually the better of the two. The upshot of such a system would be to reduce handicapping to a farce if it were not rendered a practical impossibility.

Mr. Eatinghouse: "No; the music sets the customers' teeth on edge, and they bite the toughest steak with the greatest ease."

Sporting Notes.

A SPLENDID race for the Army Cup resulted in the very popular victory of the favorite Dilerjung, who thus gave his owners, Messrs. Wood and Badger their second successive win in this important event. We heartily congratulate them. In spite of the odds of 5 to 4 laid on the chestnut at the start, he only just managed to squeeze home in front of Pasha, who landed a good deal of place-money for his supporters. A field of fifteen ponies faced the starter this year, the surest sign that this race continues to maintain its traditions and to be the object of every mititary racing man's ambition. The grey jacket and scarlet belt are equally well known on the Calcutta tracks and Messrs. Wood and Badger have now a well filled and well managed stable. With a steady experienced man like Penton in charge and Bray, their English jockey in the saddle, this string should take their share of the coming season's stakes. Sermon, the new arrival, has a great reputation, while Squire Alfred, Mother Goose, Dunsinane, Ferndown, Thomond and Curfew Bell should have little difficulty in paying their corn bills.

The outward mail steamers bring weekly additions to the gathering crowd in the Calcutta paddock. Mr. J. G. Dickson has returned from a long holiday and Messrs. E. H. Gregory, Bell Irving and E. J. Marshall arrived by last mail from England. It is most unfortunate that Mr. Gregory should have lost his fine mare Petunia at the beginning of the season and before she has had an opportunity of running in his colors. Mr. Hutchison's continued absence from the course is everywhere regretted; we trust that he will speedily shake off this troublesome attack of fever.

With the pending arrival of the up-country stables—J. D. Scott, Penton, Heywood, Ramshaw and Tom Scott,—the rubbing down sheds will be fully occupied. Complaints anent the condition of the training track were very loud towards the end of last week, but every effort has been and is being made to improve matters. The dust as ever causes one of the greatest objections to the track as a galloping ground. The cloud arises for the most part from the public course and until this is well treated with the hose little improvement can be expected. Now that a continuous pipe is laid round the course the difficulty should not be insuperable.

Long Tom heads the list of attractions to bettors on the Viceroy's Cup. The big horse seems very well and is in good hands, while there is little temptation to speculate on the chances of the others. Munderah in the same stable does not meet with the approval of the best informed critics, and certainly moves as though he could feel his fore feet. This may be a mere temporary soreness, however, and there is time enough before us to delay a calculation of his chances. Mallard and Fitzgrafton are already hard at work, and undoubtedly give their trainer a strong hand, the latter being a splendid little horse. The Master has also been moving along the track and is one of the most advanced of the Cup party. Accustomed as we have grown in India to wild reversals of Australian form, there would be nothing very surprising in the success of "Mr. Maxwell's" horse, but he will find himself in very high-class company at the post in the Viceroy's Cup. Especial interest is being taken in the Trials this year'; it should be a good betting race. There is no sign of a favourite at present and it is indeed difficult to fix on a selection from a list including such proved fliers as Signorina, Blitzen, Sacristan, Saloon, Amplify and Prince Lyon: even an offer of sixes the field fails to induce fielders to any bold investments.

The steeplechase course at Tollygunge is undergoing the finishing touches and the fences are all in fine order this year. The water jump opposite the stand has been the subject of much discussion during the off season and an attempt has evidently been made to meet the adverse comments on its construction. The hedge has been clipped well down to the regulation two feet and has been sloped away on the far side so as to give a clearer view of the water to a horse coming up to the fence

Farther on the landing side the edge of the ditch is well sloped and the risk of a broken back seems reduced to a minimum. The ditch, however, was not quite finished and when last seen a day or two ago the coolies were just beginning to clean it out and to tidy up the edges. If they do not interfere with the present slope the fence should give small ground for complaint, although doubtless a few individuals will still ask that the hedge be thinned out to afford a still clearer view of the water beyond.

In walking round the course, it is impossible to avoid remarking the sudden change from reasonably soft to adamantine going opposite the bushed wall in the run-in. Apparently for appearance sake the track is not harrowed opposite the stands, where the coarse grass is allowed to wind itself into stony knots after its fashion in this country.

At the end of a punishing steeplechase a horse's tendons are strained and terribly susceptible to shock of any kind. The effect of galloping suddenly from the harrowed ground on to the hard untouched turf is better imagined than described. Horses occasionally shut up like a clasp-knife upon reaching it, and there was a very good instance of this in a race last year, but the old dastur survives.

Another needed improvement has long been obvious to those who themselves ride the course. After the high guard-rail fence, the last hedge on the far side, beyond the road, a short flight of rails should be run along the inside of the track to mark the course and to prevent short cuts being taken across the grass. This manœuvre is repeated year after year by jockeys lying back at this point, who disregard the risk to their horse's tendons on the hard unploughed ground in order to gain the advantage of two or three lengths obtainable by travelling along the base of the segment at this point.

A further change suggested concerns the start of the Pony Chases. It is irregular and perhaps dangerous to let loose a field of steeplechase ponies on to a water jump as their first fence. It is a serious obstacle which it is as dangerous to take too fast as too slow, and according to all the rules should be placed at some distance from the beginning of a steeplechase. Why not put up a stout bushed hurdle (somewhat after the pattern used in the recent jumping competition at the Tollygunge Club) in the straight abreast the water jump, removing it directly the field has gone past? After these criticisms it is only proper to add that the course generally is in excellent order and shows the mark of the attention and care which has been bestowed upon it.

The decision of the Calcutta Turf Club stewards to refuse certain bookmakers permission to operate in the Calcutta enclosure this season has been received with rather mixed feelings. While all must readily admit that the suppression of malpractice, the safeguarding of the public interest, and the purification of the turf are laudable objects, and while no one can really regret the disappearance of any who may have rendered themselves liable to be dealt with under the penal clauses of the C. T. C. rules, there are many who would like to see the stewards go a step or two further. Those in the know declare that it is all very well to make an example of the puppets, but what about those who pull the strings? Certain it is that the energetic measures recently adopted by both turf clubs cannot fail to make for good and act as a deterrent to those whose courses are inclined to be devious; but no really permanent benefit can be looked for until yet more drastic steps are taken. The difficulty of getting at those behind the culprits is admittedly great; but that it can be done most of us are assured. At all events it seems little use lopping off the branches of this tree of evil and leaving the stem and root; that is if the desire is to do the thing thoroughly, which of course it is. We have remarked it many a time and oft before, and we will here say it once again there are too many bookmakers. Their ranks admit of a great deal of thinning and until the "mushroom" and the cat's paw are eradicated and only those of reputation and substance are permitted to prosecute their calling these troubles must be of periodical recurrence.

We received, too late for inclusion in last issue, the conditions of The International Cup, which is to be played for at the Agra Polo Tournament next January. His Excellency the Viceroy will present silver Cups, the tournament begins on the 8th January and is open to any Indian or foreign team of four a side and one spare man. Entries close on the 25th proximo.

The Punjab Polo Tournament will be held at Lahore during the coming Christmas week.

In our Correspondence columns to-day will be found a letter from a valued contributor and experienced shikari in which he asks the question "Do tigers return to kills after being fired at?" This he answers in the affirmative and gives instances. We hope some of our readers will favour us with further contributions to this interesting subject.

Consul-General Richard Guenther writes from Frankort that experiments made in Germany with reference to cheap transportation of live fish have demonstrated that all kinds of fish can live for days outside of their natural element, water, under certain conditions.

This apparently wonderful fact will be easily understood by examining the breathing apparatus of fish. The gills of fish are an organ similar to the human lungs; the blood in them comes up close to the surface. The lungs exchange for the outside air, rich in oxygen, carbonic acid which has been formed in the lungs. On the other hand, the gills of fish are constantly washed by water containing oxygen. The thin membrane of the gills separates the blood in them, viciated with carbonic acid, from the water containing oxygen and the practical result is the same as with the human lungs. Carbonic acid is exchanged for oxygen.

It had been noticed long ago that many kinds of fish could live out of water for some time, provided that the gills remain wet. The experiments made aimed at keeping the gills wet and to see to it that this moisture be well charged with oxygen. In order to keep the gills wet the evaporation of the moisture of the gills had to be prevented; for this purpose the fish were placed in an atmosphere thoroughly saturated with water vapor. An hermetically closed wooden box was filled with water to the depth of about one-third of an inch, or the bottom was covered with wet rags, which through evaporation kept the air in the box always saturated with water vapor. The fish were placed in a box which was then shut hermetically by the lid.

Through a tube, reaching to the bottom, oxygen was introduced and allowed to escape through a tube in the lid. This oxygen before entering the box passed through several water bottles which thoroughly saturated it with water vapor. In this way the fish are always in a pure oxygen atmosphere and a drying up of the gills is not to be feared. The result of the experiments was surprising. Carp, tench, bleak, and other fish remained in the box for from three to four days perfectly well. When they were then placed into water to be fed they swam about in a lively manner and appeared perfectly fresh.

It is expected that this mode of transportation for fish will become popular, as it is much more economical than shipping live fish in water tanks. By the latter method the weight of every shipment was ninety-three to ninety-six per cent water.

Kipling has stated that the elephant got his trunk through its nose being pulled out by the crocodile; but Dr. Ray Lankester quite upset this theory when he lectured on the ancestral history of the elephant at the London Institution a few weeks ago. By a fine series of lantern slides he showed the evolution of the elephant from the mammoth and mastodon. A picture of a long-jawed mastodon skeleton from Central France was shown, and a soft, long upper lip resting on the long lower jaw was pointed out as corresponding to the trunk of the modern elephant. The elephant's trunk, said the lecturer, originated through a shortening of the lower jaw. A picture of a tapir, with its long proboscis hanging over the end of its lower jaw, was shown as an example of what was probably one stage of the elephant's trunk. A lantern slide of the largest elephant tusk on record, weighing 228lbs., and measuring 10ft. long, was also shown by the Professor.

A sensational struggle between the lion-tamer, Albert Schenknut, and a strange lioness took place in Fischer's menagerie, at Halberstadt, Central Germany. Schenknut entered a cage containing three lions and a lioness named Flora, and put them through their usual tricks. All the animals showed signs of irritation, and several exciting incidents interrupted the first part of the performance. The final feature of the performance consisted in an exhibition of fireworks inside the cage. Schenknut was occupied in lighting the fireworks, when the lioness sprang on him and he fell heavily to the ground with the lioness over him. Schenknut repeatedly struck the lioness with his right hand to prevent the animal seizing him by the throat. All the time the three lions remained passive spectators of the contest. Finally, Schenknut succeeded in regaining his riding-whip, and fought desperately for his life. The lioness bit his right arm, tearing off the flesh from shoulder to wrist, and severing the thumb from his hand. At this critical juncture keepers outside the cage drove off the lioness with hot iron bars, and Schenknut, with great presence of mind, succeeded in getting out of the cage. No sooner was he outside than he fainted from exhaustion and loss of blood. His clothes were torn to shreds.

From time to time we get enquiries on the subject of longevity in horses. For the benefit of those interested in the subject we reproduce the following details published in the Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News received by last Sunday's mail. The letterpress is accompanied by two capital photographs which, much to our regret, we are unable to reproduce. The writer, A. H. C., who dates from Ghazipore, says:—"A friend who has just returned from England informed me that some time ago you were inquiring regarding longevity in horses. As I know of two what I should think are records of living horses in the same stable, I have procured and enclose you their photographs, also a short description of each horse. These horses must have had pretty hard and lively work in the late Maharaja's lifetime, as he was a mighty shikari and pigsticker. Since then I do not suppose they have done any work—as is the Hindu custom. These horses belong to the Maharaja of Balrampur, who has very kindly supplied me with the above details. By the way, the many friends of the Maharaja will be pleased to notice in the last Birthday Gazette that he has had the honour of being created a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire, a distinction to which he is eminently entitled, not only from his position of premier talukdar (landholder) of Oudh, but also for the example he has set in his munificent contributions to both the New Medical College, and also to the Canning School in Lucknow. The Balrampur estate is a magnificent one, and the place to see elephants by the hundred and a good deal more. There is the skeleton of an elephant set up in the Zoological Gardens there, which measures 10ft. 6in. at the shoulder, which also should be about a record.

"Nami.—While inspecting his Highness the Nawab of Oudh's horses, the late Maharaja Sir Digvijai Singh took a fancy for one of the 'Najdi' species (Arab). Syed Ahmad Baghdadi, a horse-dealer of Bombay, was asked to procure one, and he supplied the horse called 'Nami.' The animal was six years when it arrived, had three years' training, and was ridden sixteen years till 1882. His age now is forty-nine years. Height—14-2½.

"Moti.—The late Maharaja had an illustrated book on Arab horses, and selected one of the illustrations of the 'Shaghlavi' species (Arab). Syed Ahmad Baghdadi was sent a copy of the illustration, and asked to supply a horse answering it. He said the species was very rare, and got one from Arabia. The horse was four years when it arrived here, was three years with rough riders, and ridden twelve years till the Maharaja Saheb's death in 1882. Thus he is forty-three years now. Height—14-1.

"Both used to get 4 seers of gram, a seer of bran, and 4 tolas of salt each, but now get: Ardawa, 4½ seers; salt, 2 tolas; Ajwain, ½ tola; Lucerne grass, 2 seers; green grass, 20 seers. When found weak they are given linseed, 8 chhataks; Besan (gram flour), 8 chhataks; sugar, 6 chhataks; ghee, 4 chhataks, daily, and for the last three years are also given tonic powder every alternate week in the cold season, and every three weeks in summer. They can digest their food all right, but can't eat ripe grass, which they only chew, swallowing the juice and letting go the refuse. They get inflammation in their legs now and then, otherwise both are keeping pretty good health. They are taken out for an hour's walk morning and evening, and while walking always hold up their tails in the fashion peculiar to Arabs. Even at this age they are sometimes fresh and fidgety when it is nice and cool.

The Times of Ceylon writes:—The recent flood and the continued rains have cost the Ceylon Fishing Club over 5,000 trout of various sizes. At Windy Corner a coolie on the Blackwater slip picked up a large number of dead trout, while at Nanudya coolies were eating trout, having picked them up dead on the banks of the stream in great numbers. The waste from the spill over to the Black Pool bridge of rock and then over the Jacob's Ladder fall was responsible for this destruction. The belief among many that no young trout would be lost in consequence of an excess of water is thus belied.

The first dog show to be held under the auspices of the Calcutta Kennel Club has been fixed for Wednesday, the 6th February, and the promoters have been lucky enough to arrange for its inclusion among the side-shows of Lady Minto's gigantic fête. They are to be congratulated on having secured the services as judge of the Rev. H. W. Bush, who has been so prominently associated with the successes of the N. I. K. A. and continues to act as its Honorary Secretary. This fact alone should carry much weight with both exhibitors and public.

The C. K. C. is progressing most satisfactorily. It has already a members' roll of over seventy and before the show comes off it is probable the number will reach a hundred. Mr. E. A. Lyon's recent severe indisposition has compelled him to make over the temporary Honorary Secretaryship to Mr. F. S. Kerr, of 7/1, Lyon's Range. This gentleman, assisted by his other temporary coadjutors, is now busy drafting the proposed rules of the Association which will shortly be submitted to a general meeting of the members. At this meeting will be elected the President, Vice-Presidents, and officials, and the programme for the forthcoming show will be discussed. The schedule will follow the lines of that of last year, save that the show will be a Championship one and there will be no prize for "best dog in the show." Most people will be glad to hear of the proposal to do away with this useless and eminently unsatisfactory award. The prizes, we are led to expect, will be valuable, and as practically all breeds are to be catered for it looks as if the show might be better than those of former years.

"Paucity of entries"—the old familiar reason—has resulted in the abandonment of the Bangalore November Handicap Meeting. In its stead a Skittle Gymkhana was arranged for Tuesday.

The Calcutta Polo Tournament will be rendered extra attractive by the visit of the Mysore team, the composition of which is as follows:—

Faiz Hyder (1), H. H. the Yuvaraj (2), H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore (3), and Mr. Gopalraj Urs, (back).

The Viceregal party appear from all accounts to be having a high old time of it, in opening the shooting season in Northern India. The general impression of the country round about Bickanir (that "City in the Desert") has been that it offered no inducement to the sportsman, but the recent shoot on the lake and Her Excellency's performance on land, will dispel the illusion. Since Lord Mayo's time we have not had an all-round sporting Viceroy, now we hope and trust to witness a revival of work with spear and gun this cold weather, in which may be termed the home pergunnahs, that will recall memories of Archy Hills, McArthur, the Frenchs and Franklin Prestage. Boars have had a respite in those part for years past, while the bheels have remained almost as undisturbed.

Our Lucknow correspondent writes:—Delightful weather, fine sport and a record attendance characterised the Army Cup meeting this year. On Tuesday, the opening day, the immense concourse of carriages and some motors drawn up outside the course, gave one the impression that nearly the whole of Lucknow had turned out for the races—an impression which was confirmed by the crowded appearance of the stands and enclosures. The weather on Tuesday, at any rate for the early part of the afternoon, was unusually warm for the time of year, but this passed unnoticed by the majority of race-goers—a compliment perhaps to the excellent character of the sport. The inspection of the candidates between each race was quite a feature of the afternoon, the paddock presenting a gay and picturesque aspect. The opening day's sport fully maintained the traditions of Lucknow as a racing centre, and the full card of eight events was got through with commendable celerity. Two remarkable surprises were provided, the first in the Trial Plate, when Baritone, who started at odds of 7 to 1, beat the rest of his field. His victory, it seems, was entirely unexpected, and most of all to his stable, who had nothing whatever on the horse. The other surprise occurred in the Medium Plate, which went to a rank outsider in Mr. R. B. Forbes' Forget-me-not, a pony which had run well at Poona so recently as September. Though the favourite succumbed to Senator in the Military Chase, Mr. Charrington's fine riding on the winner was much admired. The bookmakers did comparatively well on the opening day, but there was really very little to choose between them and the public in that respect.

Cup Day was ushered in by lovely weather, and the course wore a bright and festive appearance. Among those present were Lady Locke Elliot, Lady Violet Crawley, Mrs. Watson, Mrs. Laverton, Mrs. deLisle and Mrs. Leslie Porter. We were favoured with a visit from the Hon'ble Mr. J. P. Hewett, Lieutenant-Governor designate of the United Provinces, who is as keen as ever on racing. The two opening events went to very popular sportsmen in Colonel Stisted and Captain Bennett. In the November Plate we witnessed an exciting finish between Manlock and Meadow Saffron, which was won by the former. The objection against Colonel Beaver's horse was overruled by the Stewards. The chief interest naturally centred in the race for the Army Cup, and the public have every reason to be satisfied with the result. Dilerjung was such a strong favourite that his success seemed a dead certainty; there was consequently a noticeable absence of the usual excitement associated with the race for the Cup. It was at this juncture that the inadequacy of the Grand Stand and its awkward situation, was most apparent. The stand was, of course, crammed, but it was only possible to see a portion of the race from it. A number of our keener sportsmen congregated on the opposite side of the course, near the water jump, and had a much better view of the race. There was a field of fifteen for the event, and after the customary parade, Captain Burch got them off fairly well together, Harmony being the only one left. Cut Off at once took up the running and held a good lead coming into the straight. Here he was collared by Pasha, who at this stage appeared to have the race in his keeping. About a furlong and a quarter from home Dilerjung drew out of the ruck and getting on level terms with Pasha, the two raced together, the favourite just succeeding in snatching the verdict by a head. The victory, of course, was immensely popular, Lomond, who secured third place, held a good position throughout, but Cinque Ports greatly belied his form. It is some years since the capabilities of the principal performers had been so well forecasted. The bookmakers lost heavily over the event and had no means of recouping themselves on the other races as the favourites showed up exceedingly well. The race was run in 1min. 39secs. which is one second better than last year, when Mr. T. R. Badger's William Rufus won while, Modesty's time in 1904 was 1min. 41⅖secs. The field of fifteen compared well with last year when only eleven faced the Starter, but was below that of 1904 when there were twenty. The record time for the Army Cup, curiously enough, was in 1892, the year of the inception of the race, when it was won in 1min. 37⅖secs. by Mr. Alymer's David Subsequent winners are: 1893, Captain Apthorp's Garryowen; 1894, Captain Allen's Shah III.; 1895, Major Smith Dorrien's Shannon; 1896, Major Hon. C. Winn's Toby; 1897, Mr. H. B. Williams' Sahib; 1898, Mr. Hyde's Pleader; 1899, Mr. Jower's Parole; 1900, Captain England's Ruddigore; 1901, Mr. Blondin's Bin Curtas; 1902, Colonel the Hon'ble Baring's Granite II., and 1903, Major Eustace's Active.

A record bag of sandgrouse was made by the Viceregal party at Gujner last Friday when the count produced no less than 1,720.

The Maharaja of Ulwar has fractured his collar-bone playing polo: in consequence his team has scratched from the Calcutta Tournament.

Full details of the Polo Tournament at Lucknow for the Narain Singh Cup are printed in to-day's Indian Field. The cup was carried off by the Royal Dragoons who, in the final, beat the 2nd Lancers by 8 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 2 goals. Full details further on.

The entries for the Calcutta First Extra Meeting are given in the usual place: with the exception of the Criterion Plate they are none too numerous.

The Annual General Meeting of those interested in the Calcutta Paperchases will be held at No. 12, Russell Street to-morrow at 6-15 P.M.

We condole with Dr. W. Forsyth, our hard riding Port Health Officer, on his recent accident. His horse came down in the Salt Lake country the other day and the doctor arose with a broken collar bone.

THE hockey tournament for the handsome shield presented by Sir Thomas Dewar, M.P., was concluded on the 20th instant. The tournament was open to teams of native regiments playing three British officers, Gymkkanas and other teams of similar description hailing from Jhansi, Nowgong, Agra and Cawnpore. Seven teams entered. In the first round the the 10th Jats beat the Sports Club at Cawnpore by 3 to nil : the G. I. P. Railway beat Jhansi Gymkhana by 7 goals to 2 ; the 37th Dogras beat the 6th Jats L. I. "B" team by 6 goals to 2. In the semi-finals the 37th Dogras beat the 10th Jats by 2 goals to 1 and the G. I. P. Railway beat the 6th Jats "A" team by 4 goals to 2. The final between the Dogras and the Railway produced a splendid game, the Railway ultimately winning by 3 goals to 2.

Some very good hockey was seen in the Native Army Tournament just concluded at Bangalore. There were nine teams entered ; the preliminary ties were decided at various stations, the semi-finals and final were played at Bangalore. The end of the competition found the 61st Pioneers from Secunderabad pitted against the 64th Pioneers from Ootacamund and the 61st won, after a real hard and level game, by 1 goal to nil. Details elsewhere.

The annual athletic sports meeting of "F" Co. 1st Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, will be held in the Royal Botanic Gardens on Christmas Day. The card covers a dozen items, with Messrs. Kellner's tiffin under the giant banyan tree at "half time." There are no open events this year, and only three handicaps, and for the latter the entries close on the 18th December.

A Straits team is to visit Rangoon about Christmas, from 17th to 27th December, and it is expected that matches will be played during their visit at Cricket, Tennis, Golf, etc., etc.

A Rangoon correspondent writes :—"Much interest is centred on the forthcoming regatta which promises well. Great keenness prevails among the competitors and, of course, the chances of the crews in for the Challenge Fours are much discussed. The Volunteers and Messrs. Bullock's crews are out about four times a week, both are putting in good steady work and are getting fairly well together ; there is, perhaps, more swing and better length in Messrs. Bulloch's boat, but the Volunteers are improving every time they go out, they get well hold of it and have plenty of drive. The Military crew are putting in an appearance this week and their advent is eagerly looked forward to. The German Club boat is at present out of work, stroke being away and No. 3 laid up injured. The programme may include a Double Sculling Race, a Senior and Junior Sculling Race, Scratch Fours, Mixed Double Sculls, and a Dongola Race—four-men and two ladies in each punt—think of that you Calcutta "ditchers" and try and stifle all envy, hatred and malice."

The Calcutta Golf Club announces the Penang Medal Handicap for the 7th and 8th December.

The Aga Khan Hockey Tournament, held at Poona, brought together in the finals the Royal Scots and 93rd Highlanders. A capital game ensued and in the result the Royal Scots won by 4 goals to 1.

The 2nd Royal Fusiliers, at Secunderabad, are organising a bicycle tournament of seven events for the 20th proximo.

Offences against the motoring regulations at Home carry heavy fines with them ; should our local authorities adopt the home magistrates' decisions as precedents Calcutta scorchers had better beware. Minor offenders against the speed limit get off with £5 or £6, but in the case of one reckless charioteer who exceeded the pace, then raced away from the police, the fine and costs amounted to £93-19-6, about the value of the car.

In an exhaustive catalogue of two hundred and forty-four pages, the well-known firm of Messrs. Hall and Anderson, the almost universal providers of this city, set forth in attractive fashion the merits of attractive goods—all fresh stock and perfectly up to date in every detail, having moreover the additional advantage of being personally selected in Paris and London, at home and abroad, by a member of the firm. To the jaded bachelor in quest of the necessaries or luxuries of this life, the frivolous maiden deep in the mysteries of the trousseau, the opulent boarding house-keeper keenly alive to the requirements of a large establishment, to paterfamilias in search of Christmas gifts, to one and all, we might say of the well-got up catalogue for the season 1906-07 like the Owl and Pickwick pen—it comes "as a boon and a blessing to men." To dwellers in the mofussil, who have not the opportunity of making a visit in person to the large, airy, bright and well appointed establishment in person, these voluminous pages make it quite possible to make a selection by post, and this we advise our readers to do, for be their requirements what they may, from a button or a nib, up to a kitchen stove or a boudoir suite, they may be satisfied.

We are indebted to Messrs. Turner, Morrison and Co. who are sole agents in India for the champagne of Messrs. Lanson Père et Fils, for a letter opener, cigar cutter and pencil sent out by this well-known firm as Souvenirs. Messrs. Lanson Père et Fils have always been noted for the high quality of their advertisement gifts and never have they presented their clients with more useful and acceptable little cadeaux than on the present occasion.

The annual firing for the "Sirocco" Cup competition, for which all Active and Honorary Members in the Assam Valley Light Horse, Surma Valley Light Horse, Northern Bengal Mounted Rifles, Chittagong Volunteer Rifles and Dehra Dun Mounted Rifles are eligible, we are informed, may be put through any time up to February next. The Cup is a handsome silver trophy, valued at Rs. 500, with an annual prize of Rs. 100, presented by S. J. Davidson, Esq., Managing Director and Chairman of Davidson and Company, Limited, Belfast, plus half entrance fees to the winner, the next highest score taking the other half of entrance fees. The cup becomes the property of any tea planting volunteer, winning it three times, not necessarily in succession. Rules of the competition may be had from the Adjutant of any of the Corps, or on application to Messrs. Davidson and Company, Limited of 2, Lall Bazaar, Calcutta.

The Columbia Rink under able management continues to flourish, and the whirl of the wooden wheels may be heard several times a day ; for as Calcutta rapidly fills, the various sessions seem as well patronised as ever, that from 5 to 7 P.M. being deservedly the most popular. For that mauvaise couple of hours before dinner is a time particularly hard to get rid of now that the evenings close in so quickly, especially to those of us who are not regular Club haunters or devotees of Bridge, but who may now improve the occasion and become slaves of the Rink. In addition to the delights of roller skating, a bioscope show has been introduced and each subsequent visit to this popular centre, seems to bear in on us the conviction that all the arrangements of the Rink leave nothing to be desired, while the comfort of the public has been studied in every way.

We learn by wire of the launch of the S.S. City of London at Belfast on Tuesday the 20th instant. This fine steamer is the latest addition to the "City" Line fleet, and she has been designed and built by Messrs. Workman Clark & Co., Belfast. Her gross register is close on 9,000 tons, and she will have accommodation for about 240 first and 50 second class passengers. A special feature will be several cabins de-luxe on the promenade deck fitted with brass bedsteads, and her saloon decorations will be on a most elaborate scale. She is a single screw steamer measuring 490 feet in length, and is intended to be the fastest boat in the Line. She will leave Liverpool on her maiden voyage to Bombay and Karachi on the 21st February 1907.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 9th November 1906.

IT has been a week of rain and east wind with occasional fogs to lend variety. On Sunday night the wind increased to a gale with the usual tale of wreck and fatality on the coast. So high was the sea that the mail boat did not cross the channel. The prospects for Lord Mayor's day were tolerably gloomy until this morning, but the day broke quite sunny after a very wet night and we came down to breakfast to see a rising glass. Those interested in Lord Mayor's shows are referred to yesterday's papers, which contained the official programme, or to-morrow's, which will doubtless provide the usual "full and graphic description."

Monday evening's papers tempted us with flaring announcements of a "Naval Meeting at Portsmouth." Later intelligence told of a row serious enough but nothing deserving to be called a "mutiny." It appears that the stokers in the Royal Naval Barracks were paraded in a heavy rain squall and not receiving the order to dismiss as soon as they expected got angry at being needlessly soaked. Paraded under shelter afterwards, the Gunnery Lieutenant in charge gave the order "on the knee," intending to wig them for the riotous and precipitate fashion in which they had dismissed in the rain. The order, not coming within the knowledge or use of stokers, was misunderstood and resented, as it would not have been by blue jackets, to whom an attitude for the front rank, which allows the rear rank to hear orders better, is familiar enough. One man was put under arrest for defying the repeated order, but the rest obeyed and were dismissed. The real trouble broke out that night when the stokers came out of their quarters and began to make a disturbance. This was aggravated by the crowd of loafers and liberty men (stokers also), which collected outside the barrack gates. Stones were thrown and a good deal of damage was done before Commander Stopford managed to get the stokers under control, while the police dealt with the mob outside. All seems to have been quiet by midnight. A court of enquiry was assembled on Tuesday and the rebellious stokers, who had been locked up in bath-rooms when the cells were filled, will no doubt be dealt with by court-martial.

It has been decided to use the wreck of the Montagu as a target, with the object of testing 12in. and 9·2in. armour-piercing shells on modern armour. The fact that the Montagu lies partly heeled over does nothing to impair her utility as an experimental target, and valuable results are expected from the battering she will receive from the guns of the Africa, the ship chosen to carry out the trials. This is the first opportunity our naval authorities have had to try big guns against armour in position en masse, and it will be instructive to see how its resistance compares with that of the isolated plates in proof cells used on the Admiralty testing ranges. We shall learn also the effect of heavy projectiles striking at an angle.

The result of the Borough Council elections of last week must give Radical extravagance furiously to think. In 1903 London elected, 585 Municipal Reformers, or "Moderates" as they then called themselves, and 619 Progressives and Socialists. Last week London elected 959 Municipal Reformers and contented herself with 306 Extravagants. The long-suffering ratepayer has turned at last and I devoutly hope will remain in his present frame of mind. Meantime the Extravagants on the L. C. C. pursue their way: their attitude in the electric lighting matter is sufficiently amazing, and we are hoping earnestly that the new folly, for which it is seeking parliamentary sanction, will be delayed till March, when the electors will probably apply the brake even as they have applied it to Borough Council recklessness.

The Local Government Board Inspector's Report on the Poplar Workhouse scandal published yesterday provides interesting reading. Twelve years ago Mr. Chas. Booth held Poplar the least pauperised of the 10 London Unions "specially devoted to manufacture and trade." At the beginning of 1906 it was become the worst and had doubled its own pauperism since 1900. The rise in pauperism dates from the year that Mr. W. Crooks joined the Board of Guardians—1893. From that date it rose steadily till in 1905, 47 in every 1,000 were receiving relief: the figure for the whole of London being 11 per 1,000. In 1904 the "distress" was so acute that the labour test was abolished; and in a few weeks the cost of relief bill rose from £88 to £300 per week. Then in February last the official enquiry was announced; and suddenly the bill fell to £150 per week! The Report holds Mr. Crooks and Mr. Lambury largely responsible for the general policy which produced the scandalous condition of affairs revealed; it is suggested by the Report that the guardians under the guidance of these two shining lights deliberately increased the expenditure in order to convince the country that additional contributions from the rest of London were absolutely necessary. The revelations of mismanagement, corruption and malpractice in the Report offer an eloquent commentary on the blessings of local self-government. The Essex "Farm Colony" and its story are a contribution to the history of municipal politics of which America might be proud.

Lord Montagu of Beaulieu, well known as an ardent motorist, has taken up the cudgels on behalf of the motor-'bus in London. He points out, quite correctly, that the conduct of these machines has greatly improved of late; they smell less, they emit less purple vapour, and make less noise. If they skid as badly as ever and break down as often, these are defects of comparatively little concern to the public. It must be allowed that Lord Montagu makes out a very fair case for a more indulgent attitude towards the motor-'bus: compared with the brewer's dray laden with resounding empty barrels, the milkman's van with empty cans, and the empty covered van, the motor-'bus is a thing of infinite discretion in the silence of its going. If the police would adopt Lord Montagu's advice and order off the street all things noisy, we should rise up and call them blessed. Only a fortnight ago the police put on 30 extra men to regard the motor-'bus and its ways; with the result, it is reported, that one-third of the vehicles in the streets were stopped and sent back to the yards. There is talk of bribery and corruption, or rather of the lack of it on the part of motor-drivers, but whether there be any truth or not in the assertion that horse-'bus drivers fee the police to secure indulgence at stopping places or not, who can tell?

The Croydon "police obstruction" case was heard in the Lord Chief Justice's court on Tuesday. As it was of great interest to motorists you may recollect that in March last a Mr. Little was "run in" at Croydon for warning motorists of the presence of a police trap. The Croydon bench dismissed the case and the police appealed. The Lord Chief and the other judges sitting with him unanimously upheld the action of the magistrates and dismissed the appeal. The case was acknowledged to present difficulties: and the lay mind recognises that there are two distinct aspects upon it. Mr. Little was (a) preventing a breach of the law by warning motorists; or (b) was enabling motorists who were breaking the law to escape the consequence. The fact that he had no connection with the motor industry and was not a member of any motorists' association evidently weighed much with the judges in determining his ostensible motive.

Mr. George Herring's death, which occurred on Friday at Luton, is a serious loss to charitable organisations. Born 74 years ago in very humble circumstances he became a bookmaker: it has been stated that he accumulated the necessary capital during his work as carver in an eating-house on Ludgate Hill, but it is denied that he ever followed such a calling. About his bookmaking career, however, there is no question, for he was in his day one of the leading lights of the fraternity and enjoyed a great reputation for integrity. Many years ago he gave up bookmaking and joined Mr. Bischoffsheim in financial operations of a larger kind, accumulating great wealth thereby. The best known outcome of his generosity was his annual gift of £10,000, or one-fourth of the total collected in the London churches, to the Hospital Sunday Fund; he gave £100,000 to the Salvation Army to forward its scheme for settling indigent but able-bodied people on the land. His minor charities were boundless. It is doubtful if he knew himself how much he gave away. His will also directs the sale of valuable house property for the benefit of the King's Hospital Fund.

A curious commentary on the ragings of the Good people against the crime of betting, editorjee, are the will of the late Mr. "Sam" Lewis and the benefactions of Mr. Herring.

There is very little indeed to record in the theatrical world this week. The single new production at the theatres is a slight and rather thin curtain-raiser at the Criterion. Mr. Kingsley Tarpey has dramatised a story written by his wife and "The Collaborators" owes any attraction it has to the acting: which was excellent. Given a lady novelist whose affections are divided between a painter and a playwright, and to each of whom she sees objections which would hardly pass current in real life: add an elderly and sensible aunt to make up the lady's mind for her, and the scheme is told. Miss Lilian Braithwaite was the doubting heroine and Mr. E. Percival Stevens was peculiarly convincing as the absorbed playwright.

The Haymarket is closed to-night, His Majesty having commanded a performance of "The Man from Blankley's" at Sandringham. I took a country cousin to the Haymarket a night or two ago and came away with the conviction that on the whole this is about the best acted piece in London at the present time, despite a tendency on the part of some of the players to over-act. The King has also commanded a performance of "Robin Hood" at Sandringham on this day week.

The Actors' Association has taken up the question of an Irving Memorial: nothing will be decided as to its form for some little time yet.

Hypnotic performances are not much to my taste, but the great B. P. loves the weird and incomprehensible, and no doubt Mr. Alex's Hynoptic phenomena at the Pavilion will draw for a while. There is nothing very new in his proceedings; he puts half a dozen young men (paid hands) under influence and sets them to play the fool in various fashions. The extraordinary rigidity of the human body under hypnotic influence was demonstrated by placing a man head and heels on trestles and making a bridge of him. An attempt was made to ride a cob over this human bridge covered with cushions and a board; and I confess that the cob lost nothing of my esteem when, at the private seance, he flatly refused to have anything to do with the business.

The Alhambra is the richer by a troupe of Norwegian lady singers who appear in the picturesque dress peculiar to the Hardanger district on Sundays and holidays, and fondly believed in this country to be the daily attire of the people all over Norway. The "Poetsingers," five in number, sing in English and display the knowledge of our tongue which seven Norwegians out of ten seem to acquire as a matter of course. Their dancing is excellent also: it is modern dancing I need hardly say. The authorities would step in if these attractive young women—two dressed as men for the occasion—gave us a specimen of the barbaric dances still to be seen by the very privileged stranger in the remoter parts of Saetersdalen and elsewhere.

The site of St. Paul's Church, in Great Portland Street, now far advanced in demolition, is to be used for the erection of a new concert hall to seat about 1,900 people. A small concert hall has been wanted in London since the St. James's was cleared away, and the Great Portland Street building should answer the purpose when opened, as is expected, in June or July next. Exclusive of the site, which of course is a valuable one, the new hall will cost about £100,000.

The Zoo has a new attraction just now in the person of a baby cow hippopotamus from West Africa. The thing is about three feet long from snout to tail and weighs 188lbs. It is in my considered opinion the very ugliest beast I have ever seen; the very young rhinoceros which now graces a stall in the elephant home is beautiful by comparison, and that is saying much. The Zoo has been enormously improved since the new Secretary took office, and the result of the improvements is made agreeably manifest in the large increase in shilling visitors.

By slow degrees the Great Wheel at Earl's Court is being dismantled. About one-third of the cars have been removed from the wheel and the thing grows weekly more naked looking.

The scaffolding has now been so far cleared away from the Victoria and Albert Museum that we are able to form a tolerably good idea of its proportions and appearance. What an age it has taken to complete the building! I saw the late Queen lay the foundation stone some time in the last century.

People in the Regent's Park district are very angry with Mr. Vernon Harcourt for that he has decided not to replace the close wooden fence round the park with another of the same, but with an iron railing. The latter he has explained will cost only £4,200, whereas oak pailings like those now in process of removal would cost £12,000. Mr. Harcourt has economy to support his view; but people are not pleased, the wooden fence lasts about 40 years, whereas the other can reckon its duration by centuries it painted regularly. Mr. Justice Bargrave Dean has refused to withdraw the injunction he made restraining the Fulham Registrar from marrying Mr. O'Heer to Miss Darlington. The learned judge is satisfied that the young man is a lunatic and his attitude therefore is the only one compatible with common-sense. Leave to appeal against the injunction was granted, without encouragement from his lordship.

HOW TO KNOW THE INDIAN WADERS.*

THOSE of us who read Mr. Frank Finn's delighful notes on Indian wading birds which appeared in our columns, will hail with acclamation his How to Know the Indian Waders, in which many of these notes reappear. We have had long to wait for the book. We seem to remember having seen it advertised in 1902 as "nearly ready." However, it has at last appeared and we, like the celebrated baby, are happy now we 've got it! It is quite superfluous to state that the book is a good one. Everything to which Mr. Finn attaches his signature is well worth reading.

The wading birds, that is to say those which possess long shanks, the grallatores of scientific authors, form a large and heterogeneous group, and it is no small feat to marshal them into an orderly array. Yet this is what Mr. Finn has done. In order to make their identification comparatively easy to the "laymen" the author, while very rightly retaining the scientific names of the Fauna of British India, adopts a different classification, and we must say that Mr. Finn's system is simplicity itself. He divides the Indian grallatores into the Perching waders, which are the Herodiones of Le Messurier, and the Non-perching Waders, which comprise the Grallae and the Dimicolae of that author.

Now in order that a bird may perch it must possess a functional hind toe, capable of grasping a perch. This then, the presence or absence of such a functional hind toe, is the feature which separates the perchers from the non-perchers. If we see a wader without a hind toe at all or with a small one that does not reach to the ground and looks like a dog's dew-claw we may be tolerably certain that that bird is a non-perching wader. Hence when a man shoots "a paddy bird of sorts" his first step towards its identification should be to examine its toes. Some birds which belong to the perching class resemble closely some of the non-perchers. Such resemblance is of course only superficial and is a common phenomenon in nature. It is frequently seen when widely separated species adopt similar methods of obtaining a livelihood. Thus superficially there is a great resemblance between a swallow and a swift, yet anatomically they are far more widely separated than the crow is from the canary. Cranes and storks display a superficial likeness. Nine men out of ten would be "floored" if asked to distinguish storks from cranes. As a matter of fact the former are perching waders and the latter non-perchers. They are therfore easily differentiated. The main features whereby this can be done are set forth so clearly by Mr. Finn in a style so characteristic of him that we cannot refrain from quoting what he has to say upon the subject :—

"The cranes form a small family of sixteen species ; they are often confounded with the storks and herons, in the other section, but present certain very obvious characteristics of their own.

"It is true that, like the other big waders mentioned, they are tall birds with long bills, necks and legs, large broad wings and short tails. But in the head and foot, looked at closely, differences are at once apparent. The Crane's bill is never so big and strong as the stork's or heron's ; the gape of the mouth is not so wide, the corner of the mouth coming just below the forehead, whereas in the stork the mouth runs back nearly to the eye, and in the heron even beyond this. Moreover, the nostrils of storks and herons are set at the base of the bill as in most birds ; in cranes they are much more forward, quite in the middle. In the feet of the birds under consideration we find in the stork a well-developed back toe, coming fairly to the ground at its tip ; in the heron the hind toe is even larger, and flush with the front ones all along ; whereas in the crane the hind toe is a miserable little affair, set on too high up to be of any use, and reminding one of a dog's dew-claw.

Thus a stork or heron could be distinguished from a crane even by its footprints without seeing the bird at all.

There is a reason in these distinctions. Storks and herons are carnivorous, catching and gulping down such creatures in the fish and reptile line as come in their way, and often tackling prey of considerable size. Moreover they roost and make their nests on trees, as a rule, and do a good deal of perching at all times. Cranes, on the other hand, live almost on the ground, feeding much as game birds do, on grain, herbage, and insects, and such small fry. Hence they have no need of such a wide gape and a strong grip in the foot as the others possess.

It must be admitted that this correspondence of the feeding habits with width of mouth does not always hold good ; but in this case it is very obvious and helps to distinguish birds often and easily confounded.

A very radical difference between storks and herons on the one hand and cranes on the other is the fact that the young of the former are helpless squabs, which are brought up in a nest where the parents drop the food into their mouths.

The young of the cranes, on the other hand, are active and downy like young chickens, and follow the parents about from the first, though they are not averse to letting their elders find the food and hold it for them to peck."

But Mr. Finn is not content with detailing the more important characteristics of each main group of birds ; he takes each Indian species separately and gives of it a pen-picture, both vivid and accurate.

This he is able to do because of his peculiarly intimate acquaintance with most waders. In many cases this acquaintance extends to the flavour of the bird when served up on the table! The result of this is that Mr. Finn is able to inform us that "more of these birds are good to eat than is popularly supposed, and I have personally, after rather an extended gastronomic experience, tasted few of them that I should not prefer to the ordinary fowl, that prop in Hindustan of an essentially carnivorous nation like ourselves."

For this reason we commend How to Know the Indian Waders to the mem sahib. Why not vary the eternal round of mutton, goat, beef, buffalo, murghi, duck and goose with spoonbill and ibis?

We are not jesting. Spoonbills are frequently eaten by natives. A raja once sent us one shot by him, but we jibbed at it, not being then in possession of Mr. Finn's dictum "Spoonbills are good to eat."

"I have" says our author, "tried the White Ibis, both full grown and young, as food, and found it tolerable, though not exactly a delicacy. There is no noticeable fishy flavour, but the meat of the adult is very solid and close grained, though not stringy or tough. I certainly gave it a fair trial, for with a friend who was living with me, I tried roast Ibis, stewed Ibis and Ibis pie. The young bird I got was one reared in the Calcutta Zoological Gardens in the spring of 1901, which was growing up hopelessly rickety and crippled, and had to be killed. It was tenderer than its seniors, and somewhat between duck and pigeon in taste but not up to a good sample of either, as was to be expected from its poor condition." Ibis au Frank Finn may yet become a popular dish and have to find a place in the subsequent editions of Everyday Menus for Indian Housekeepers.

THE MOTOR CAR IN INDIA.*

ALL Indian motorists will be prepared to extend a cordial welcome to Major Warren's vade mecum just published by the Times of India Press, Bombay, and turned out in faultless style by those enterprising and high-class printers. For some time the rapid growth of motoring out here has rendered the production of a book like this an absolute necessity ; the want has been keenly felt and the void commented on in every quarter. To the rescue comes Major D. Warren of the Queens, and, as he brings to the work the long experience and practical knowledge which have earned for him a high position among the recognised authorities on the subject, he has placed before us a very great deal that will be of absorbing interest to motorists and much that cannot fail to arrest the attention of the gereral reader.

Beginning with a concise and clearly expressed chapter on the financial aspect of motoring—in which initial cost, upkeep and running are considered—we are led to the contemplation of a typical motor car and the author has done well in choosing as illustrative of his description the 10—12 H. P. Humber Light car. This chapter is particularly rich in illustrations, every one artistically reproduced, indeed the very large number of beautiful plates which appear in the book strike one as unusual and testify to the author's thoroughness ; the desire has evidently been to make matters clear and help the motorist to acquire useful information almost at a glance. Passing on to deal with examples of well-known petrol cars Major Warren gives an exhaustive description (profusely illustrated) of such popular types as the Wolseley, the Argyll, the Gladiator, the Winton, and the De Dietrich, cars that have become firmly established in popularity among the motoring fraternity of India. Steam cars have some space devoted to them and then we are told a good deal about tyres and accessories, matters that are of vital interest to all ; here, too, one notes the practical style of the author who imparts knowledge and offers suggestions in a form easily understanded even of the unfortunate people who do not "mote." The chapter on "Driving and the Care of Car" teems with good advice and so simply set out that after reading it one who has never driven feels competent to take his place at the wheel and start off right away. The observations on fuels for motors commend themselves to us as sound : in view of the recent discoveries in alcohol production and the ease with which an almost infinite number of grains and plants in this country can be converted into coarse alcohol admirably suitable as fuel the author's conclusions on this head should be carefully noted. We incline to the opinion that petrol will be superseded ere long. There are many sketch maps at the end of the book ; these show the distances, bungalows, rivers, railway lines, etc., connected with several highways in Bombay, the United Provinces, Central Provinces, Madras and Southern India. We notice that no routes east of Allahabad have been shown (the Grand Trunk Road from Delhi to Calcutta, for example, is not included), but these, we presume, may figure in subsequent editions, there are at least a dozen fine motoring roads of over a hundred miles in length in Eastern, Northern and Lower Bengal, Assam, and Behar.

AN AFRICAN LEOPARD.

I HAD pitched my camp near the village of Uruthsaine. Sitting in the shade, I watched my followers at work building the zareeba. My bath stood ready before my tent and door, I got up to have a welcome wash, when I perceived the whole village pouring down upon me. Men, women, and children followed each other in long procession. The zareeba was finished, and I walked through the opening, my men closing the door, or rather filling up the gap with thorn bushes behind me, as a gentle hint to the crowd to keep outside. The villagers seemed disappointed, and soon shouts arose. "What do they say?" I ask my headman. "They have news, sahib," answered Dwallah. I allowed the headmen of the village to enter the zareeba, and begged them to be seated. Through my interpreter we made out that their village had for months been infested with leopards which had carried off sheep, goats, and even babies, in spite of every precaution and the most impenetrable of zareebas. They hailed the white man with great delight, as he would surely rid them of these pests. I assured them that we would do our best that very night. Then they all stood up and walked away, with the exception of an old man who, pointing to the crowd of women outside, said : "My wife, my daughters, my mother-in-law, have never seen a white man, they not believe him all white, but only face and hands ; they call me liar when I say all white ; show them, I beseech you that I am no liar" (here twitching hold of my clothes), I politely answered that it was not the custom in my country to appear naked in public, and, bidding him good evening, walked into my tent.

For some time after supper I sat in a chair enveloped in a rug, opposite the kid tied up outside. A small hole had been made in the fence, through which I was to keep watch for the leopards. It was now quite dark, except within the zareeba, where the glow of the camp fires presented a curiously weird scene. In the centre lay the camels complacently chewing the cud, their eyes flashing out like brilliant sparks in the firelight. Huddled together in small groups round the fires lay my tired out men, their blankets closely wrapped around them. Presently I dozed off. How long I slept I know not, but something made me start up and open my eyes. I peered through the hole into the darkness. There stood the kid tethered to a stake. All was quiet save an occasional snore or a groan from a fever-stricken man, as he restlessly tossed to and fro. The kid suddenly stood rigid with ears cocked. I stared and stared, but could see nothing. I rubbed my eyes. What was that? I seemed to make out a grey shadowy form with head bent low, gazing intently upon the goat. Cautiously I pushed my rifle through the hole, raised it to my shoulder and peered down the barrels. I saw nothing. I pinched myself to see if I was dreaming. No ; it must have been imagination. The kid lay down. A shudder passed through me and I wrapped my rug more tightly round me as I lay back again in my chair. I had hardly dozed off again when I awoke. I swore I heard a growl.

The kid was up again and staring intently ; beyond stood the same grey phantom. It was getting lighter, it would be now or never. The shadow slowly crawled towards the now terrified goat. Out of the loop-hole went my rifle, and my heart beat hard against my ribs with excitement. Yes, I could see his spots now. He was within fifteen yards. I took a hurried aim and—bang! Every camel was upon its feet, the sleeping men started up and hurried towards me. I stared through the smoke and beheld the goat still standing as though petrified, and just beyond it a grey, heaving mass. "Well done, sare," shouted my headman, "your bullets is good." I told him to make away through the barrier and fetch in the leopard. "No black man go outside zareeba night-time," he replied with a grin. "Well, white man does," I answered as I broke down the zareeba to examine my prize. There, within fifteen yards of me he lay, his dark spots showing up clearly in the now fast, approaching dawn.

A REGAL SPORT NOW PASSING.

DEPLORABLE, yet seemingly inevitable, woodcock shooting will in a few years be a sport of the past, observes an American writer. This superlative bird has decreased distressingly within the last decade and, as there does not appear to be any way of artificially propagating it, it seems to be in danger of speedy extinction. A few years ago there were many localities in which a bag of from five to ten brace could be made in a day, while now if three or four birds are secured the hunter may consider himself lucky. Nothing will save the woodcock but concerted action by all the States in prohibiting the killing of it for a number of years.

It sounds almost like a breach of good manners to call the woodcock a snipe, yet a snipe he undoubtedly is. A half brother, at least, to the English snipe, and a more distant relative of the vulgar sand-piper. But, if he is a snipe, he is the king of his kind, and a worthy congener of other royalty. By common consent of epicures he is placed at the head of the list of table birds, while by sportsmen he is regarded as the peer of any bird in the field.

There is no bird in the field or the woods that the sportsman will take as much punishment to secure. I could never tell the suffering I have endured in the pursuit of woodcock. I have lain in wait for ducks until my heels froze to the meadow bank, but the suffering was nothing like as acute as I have undergone in woodcock hunting. The open season for woodcock in this state is now from 15th September to 1st December, but there was formerly a summer term, and in New Jersey and some other states the month of July is still open.

I well remember a certain first of July, not many years ago, when I set out at dawn to look for woodcock along the edges of the Jersey meadows. It was a warm, still morning. The rising sun showed clouds of mist over the ponds and hollows, but those were less noticeable than more active clouds, clouds of mosquitoes. I started out with a red dog, but he soon turned grey. After awhile he became invisible and the only suggestions of his whereabouts was a miniature whirlwind alternately emerging from the cover and disappearing. But my attention was to some extent diverted from the dog. My chief concern was with a halo, not of light but a good deal more fiery, that I was carrying with anything but pride. It had a constant tendency to rest on the back of my neck and its touch was like that of red hot needles.

For the first time in my life I realized the significance of that old scriptural story of the pillar of cloud that guided the Israelites through the wilderness by day. Such a pillar had been visible to me for some time before I came near enough to discover that it enveloped a farmer, who exclaimed, as he raked off a handful of the pests from the back of his neck, "there's a skeeter or two about this morning."

Mingled with the mosquitoes was a host of black gnats whose sting is a good deal more painful. The combination was too effective for sport even to an enthusiast confirmed by years of habit. I had begun the hunt encouragingly by bagging one woodcock soon after coming to the ground, but there is a limit to human endurance and I reached it before the sun was an hour high. I called in the dog and beat a hasty retreat to the uplands. The dog preserved a stoic reticence as to his sufferings, but I found hours given to copious applications of witch hazel necessary to take the fever out of my neck and face.

The fact of the matter is that summer is not the time to hunt the woodcock. The bird is not then at its best either for the table or for sport. Indeed it is a very different bird from the woodcock of the fall and winter months. It has the languor of the hot weather in its system, rises without vigor, and flies sluggishly. The first time I saw a woodcock rise in July I did not recognize it. The dog found it in rank meadow grass and when flushed it struggled up to the top of the grass, without a sound and flew straight away like a rail, with very little more speed. I brought it down by a single shot and was much surprised to find a full-grown woodcock.

In strong contrast to this sluggish action is the flight of the woodcock during autumn and winter. With a sharp whistle, as if surprised that any one could have the effrontery to disturb its repose, it shoots like a rocket to a height of fifteen or twenty feet and goes off with the speed of a projectile. To shoot as it is rising is to miss in nine cases out of ten. The auspicious moment is when it takes its line of flight. If the bird is going straight away, your aim must be a trifle below, because as its elevation is considerably above yours, to shoot above, or even at it, would throw the charge behind. If it makes off to the right or left it must be led at least a foot. It is failure to observe these principles that makes the woodcock accounted a difficult bird to kill.

The best season for woodcock shooting is in late October or early November, when the leaves have begun to fall. The birds are then to be found in the woods bordering small streams or adjacent to lowlands, where they are seeking worms and grubs under the fallen leaves. Besides the easier tramping afforded by the uplands, the thinning of the foliage gives a better opportunity for shooting. Earlier in the season their favourite resorts are the alder copses of the valleys. A slow, cautious dog is the best for the sport, as, although it usually sits well, the woodcock does not seem to leave as much scent as the quail, and a fast dog is apt to flush it before detecting its proximity.

The woodock has been called the bird of mystery because it is frequently not to be found where signs of its presence are abundant. These signs are the peculiar borings made by it in the soft soil and the characteristic whitish droppings. But there is really not much mystery about it except to the uninitiated. In the first place it is mostly a night feeder and its signs are therefore made in the night time, while in the daytime it is snugly reposing in some upland thicket not infrequently far away from the field of its nocturnal repast. In the second place, like its half brother, the English snipe, it is a nocturnal traveller and may oftentimes at dawn be miles away from the place where it satisfied its appetite for worms.

Yet if you have discovered abundant signs without the birds, it sometimes pays to visit the place again in the late evening or early morning. An old friend of mine, on a hunting trip to Pike County, Pennsylvania, some years ago, came one afternoon to an alder ticket where signs were numerous, but there was not a single bird. He kept his counsel and next morning, while his companions were still asleep, slipped back to the thicket. When his friends came down to breakfast they were surprised and somewhat resentful to find twelve brace of woodcock hanging on the back porch.

Though generally regarded as a shy bird the woodcock is not so shy as he seems. He is in truth a very sly bird, and is often a much nearer visitor to his arch-enemy, man, than the latter suspects. In the close season the quail is often a bold and loquacious visitor to the back yards of farms and villages, but when the open season arrives he shuns the society of man and abjures cities at all times. Not so the woodcock. In and out of season he is a frequent, though nocturnal, visitor to the lawns of the wealthy, where angle worms, his choicest morsel, are to be found galore. But he does not altogether prefer the country. He has a liking, also, for the city, and as autumn advances, he knows that the well-kept private lawns and public parks offer other attractions besides hammocks, fountains and flower beds. So after the curtain of night has been drawn he comes into town and takes a table d'hôte supper in the open, on public or private property while the custodians or owners are enjoying themselves at the play or at Delmonico's. Last fall one was found on the lawn in front of the American Museum of Natural History on Seventy-seventh Street.

The woodcock's propensity for visiting the surroundings of dwellings sometimes brings it to grief without the active intervention of man. One August day, on a walk from my house to the post office, in a South Jersey village, my dog, which was trotting about twenty yards in advance, came to a sudden point. On coming up to him I was astonished to see a woodcock squatting a few feet from his nose. I picked it up, for though able to walk it could not fly, and found that it had been injured by striking a telegraph wire overhead.

The woodcock is one of the handsomest of game birds. The upper sides are exqnisitely variegated with brown black, tawny and grey. Otherwise its most characteristic features are a plump body, long bill, large eyes set far back on the head, and short legs. The female contrary to the general rule of birds, is considerably larger than the male. At full growth it is about 12 inches long, including 3 inches of bill, and its weight is from seven to eight ounces. The length of the male is 10½ inches, with 2¾ inches of bill, and its weight five to six ounces. The European woodcock, though the same in general appearance, is a different, and considerably larger, bird. It is a well-known fact that woodcock nest very early. The nest is usually a hollow on the ground, lined with dead leaves which presents a very pretty sight with its olive stone-colored eggs, blotched with ash and brown shades.

In England the sport of woodcock shooting has many followers, the woods of Sweden and Norway affording the main breeding grounds of the English birds. The great flights reach England around the beginning of October, although they have been known to come as late as mid-winter when the severe northern weather causes them to leave their breeding grounds.

Like all of the snipe family the woodcock is a migratory bird, but it does not breed as far north as other members of the family. The breeding area of the American variety is from New Jersey to Canada. It does not go south until December, or the hard cold sets in, and returns North about the beginning of the month of March.

Fishing.

OBSERVATIONS, ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

FOR casting against the wind, with obstructions closely behind the angler, such as rocks and foliage of large trees, the switch and Spey casts are usually spoken of as nearly identical. But this is not so. In the case of the switch the angler is supposed to be standing on the banks of a river with either rocks or trees, etc., in such close proximity to him that to be able to fish this water he must necessarily adopt the switch method. In making a switch the line is not lifted out of the water in the first instance, as it is when casting in the ordinary fashion, in which case the fly would either be hung up in the trees or smashed on the rocks. What the angler, therefore, has to do is to lift the line to the surface of the water by raising the point of the rod, and then drag it through the water in the direction he is standing, carrying the rod behind him as far as the obstructions will allow. Then by a sudden down cast of the rod, the line as yet having been allowed to remain in front of him, is propelled with the force suggested by the length required. During this process the fly has not been lifted out of the water until the very last inch of the line has proceeded it. Whilst the line is propelled it will thus be made to assume a shape somewhat similar to that of a wheel which diminishes in size as it rolls on its track, beating the surface of the water. The coil, or loop, as it is commonly called, naturally vanishes at the point the fly has reached when the cast is completed. This cast is widely different from the Spey, in that the "Spey" is intended to be used by the man who is wading up to his waist in a rapid stream. It was doubtless in like circumstances that it had its origin, and the stream, and not the bank, is its home, so to speak. The main difference between the switch and the Spey cast is in the first movement. The rod is held upright and revolved over the head in a circle, and when the downward thrash is made the fly falls very much as the overhand cast of the ordinary every-day fly-angler, but the Spey is longer and more precise, when properly cast, than this or even the switch cast, though I have seen some wonderful casting by this method done by the late Harry Pritchard, the old tackle maker and fly-fisher, in the 80's. He once cast on a stream 240 feet with the "switch," in my presence, in a contrary wind.

There are many abstruse questions which arise in the experience of the observant angler, and one of these is a question I have often asked myself in reference to both salmon and trout. Do these fish ever sleep? Can that gentle failure of the perceptions creep over them in their periodical hours of repose, as with us, or can it be that balmy slumber is to them unknown? So far as an overpowering heaviness, an apparent prostration of strength and a loss of power to control the loss of perception are concerned, this certainly is so. It is another strange phenomenon that during their period of apparent unconsciousness salmon and trout have yet power to maintain their motionless positions even in running water. When this condition exists with either of the fish we are considering, nothing in the shape of bait, animate or inanimate, and not even the fly of the angler, will act on their organs of sense. One can watch the fish on a bright day with a binocular and see that its immovable eyes are not to be attracted.

A friend of mine, a noted salmon fisherman, however, managed on more than one occasion to break up this trance. Fishing over a salmon in this condition, he determined to try practical methods. First he presented the fly by paying out the line. His object was to see if the fish would notice a fly at all, and he proceeded in the most quiet way possible. Had the fish he was after been moving he would have thought it had been previously pricked by a hook, or that something else had put it "off" its feed. But it moved neither trail nor fin. He continued to try the fish by letting the fly down to its nose, but no response came from this, till suddenly an acorn dropped from an overhanging branch near the top of a high oak tree right in front of the salmon's nose with a splash. Immediately the fly was seized and the fish hooked, and subsequently landed, weighing 10½lbs. An incident occurred in my own experience, where no oak trees were present. Being alone and in a favorable situation, I fixed the rod on the bank and left it to go and watch the effect of my fly, which was dangling in front of the resting fish. Remembering what happened to the fish with the acorn, I, after trying another fly, put on a Silver Doctor, which, when everything else fails, is sometimes successful, and waited in a convenient spot to see what might happen. On locating myself quietly, with the new fly as an offering, I tossed a pebble into the water some six feet before the fish's nose, without apparent effect. The next pebble I threw nearer to it, and a rattle of the reel told me the immediate result, although the fish made its escape afterward. It is evident that on some occessions it is necessary to wake up a slumbering fish, though whether the slumber is a true sleep or merely a sullen sulking, I leave it to some englightened readers to decide.

Another problem as to the senses of fishes is whether they have the sense of hearing or not. I am strongly of opinion that the auricular faculty in some fish, particularly trout, salmon, and black bass, is well developed in some way, though we are informed by the ichthyologists that fish, though well endowed with ocular sense, are not possessed of actual power of hearing. But that they are keenly alive to vibration I am well assured, and the experience of the trout and salmon fisherman, as well as that of the bass fisherman, are alike certain as to this point, A man once said to me: "If you want to be successful with the black bass, don't let it know you are in the same county by any movement in the boat. Be perfectly still and you will get fish." An English friend of mine who has been a life-long salmon angler, gives the following anecdote, which illustrates the perception of vibration. He writes: "Not long ago, in company with a friend, I was fishing under a bridge spanning the river Earn. Immediately below the centre of the bridge a short cast down in the water we marked down a fish, about 20 pounds in weight, still as a statue. After waving a handkerchief from the bridge, and actually dangling it from our line just over the front of the catch, to no effect, he agreed to my observation that the fish was fast asleep. On this occasion I had no fly but one with a dirty orange body and brown mallard wing, but I conceived that would suit the purpose. This I weighted with a lead sinker on account of our being so much over the fish, and there we waited and watched. All conditions favoured our investigations, as the water was as clear as gin, and not a breath of air was stirring the surface. Determined to see what effect the afternoon train would have, we tied the rod to the parapet and made for the bank on hearing the train approach. The experiment failed in one respect but succeeded in another, for the moment the carriages reached the bridge and startled the fish it seized the fly and made up stream, breaking away before we could help ourselves. According to well-established precedent, therefore, it seems certain that the best way to treat sleeping fish is to place a suitable fly before their noses and awaken them by some subsidiary means, keeping well out of sight.

Some twenty years ago there was a movement in England to re-number or, in other words, to reform the numbering of fish-hooks. The editor of the Fishing Gazette and Mr. Cholmondeley Pennell, the inventor, or at least the improver, of the down-eyed hook, were the backers of the movement, and went to work to get the makers to abolish the old method of numbering and admit and practice a new scheme. At that time there were some firms in Kendal which had a system of their own, but as Redditch manufacturers ruled the roost, it was not to be supposed that the millions of hooks turned out by the Allcocks and Bartletts et hoc genus homo were going to alter their hook moulds and numbers to please a diminutive few amateur experimenters in the art of hook designing and manufacturing. The method of hook numbering by all the chief firms was simple enough. The largest hook commenced with 10/0 and went on getting smaller to 1/0, then smaller to No. 16 which was as small as any angler needed for the tiniest midge flies. To this day any tackle maker can get any number he wants with the certainty that there is an almost exact uniformity of sizes in the hooks of like number which come from all the manufacturers in the trade. The appeal of the reformers was to begin 000, 00, 0, 1, 2, 3, up to the largest sizes. One firm only adopted it, and all others, or seven out of eight, replied it would be impossible for them to change. This is, of course, common sense when one knows that all these firms sell with the uniform number and size on all the labels of the various hooks that are sold. The angler knows what number he wants; it is the first thing he learns as a boy, and as he attains manhood and experience you cannot fool him on his choice of make of hook or size. The chief makes of hooks now with all of the improvements of modern machinery and design are briefly as follows, and are easy to recollect: Pennell-eyed, Sproat-bend, Limerick, Sneck, Perfect (Allcock's patent), the latter is undoubtedly the finest, slightest sneck-bend made. The advice of some was for the makers to meet and adopt a uniform numbering, but this advice, like most gratuitous advice throughout the world, was never followed, and we can still get the old patterns of hooks by the original numbers, as they are required.

Fish culturists have, from time to time, made experiments in the food of trout with the purpose of investigating the cause of the white, yellow and red hues which are found variously in the trout of all waters where these fish abound. The late Mr. Francis Francis, fishing editor of the Field in his instructive book on "Fish Culture," gives the results of some interesting experiments of certain foods on the colour of trout. The fish were confined when young in stews and some fed on worms, others on minnows, others on flies, others crustacea (the fresh-water shrimp) and others on chopped sheep's liver, which latter is a fine food for young artificially-bred trout. No definite results seemed to have been obtained as the fish grew to maturity except that a reddish tint prevailed in those which fed on the pulex gammarus, or fresh-water shrimp. This subject is one of interest and deserves investigation. But a more common sense view of looking at the matter may be that fish, like human beings, especially trout and salmon, may depend on temperament. One man is pale and anæmic, another fat and lymphatic, another sanguine and full-blooded, in all of which conditions the colour varies according to the temperament. Of course the parallel does not run closely to the case of trout, but that they are one of three colors invariably is a sure fact. It is a fact, of course, that certain pigments will affect the color of the human skin. For instance, I know of an instance where a solution of nitrate of silver, given for an epileptic condition, after a time darkened the skin of the patient. "Wilkie Collins'" novel "Poor Miss Finch," was based on the treatment. So also finely powdered cochineal strewed on the mulberry leaves on which silk-worms were fed has been known to cause a pink shade in the shade of the silk of the cocoon. The afteration in the colour of birds by giving capsicum is also known, and the tints of the flesh of the various trout acr certainly due to the environment and breed. Food may have something to do with it, but the subject is yet in a condi tion of uncertainty though quite worthy of receiving the remarks and opinions of our naturalistic angling readers.

(1) Varnish for fly-rods: Best coach makers' varnish, two coats are ample, but the first coat must be dry before the other is laid on.

(2) Take three ounces of best gum shellac, one-half ounce gum benzoin, half an ounce gum sandarac, one quart of pure alcohol (95 per cent proof) pulverize separately in a druggist's mortar, and add the alcohol. Put in a black bottle and set in the sun; shake often; then pour off If too thick add more alcohol. If too thin take out the cork. Apply with a linen rag.

(3) To waterproof fish lines easily: Dissolve paraffine in naphtha or benzine; this makes a beautiful smooth dressing for casting.

(4) Put the line in a saturated solution of acetate of lead, letting it remain a half an hour, stirring it around occasionally. Then take it out and let it drain a few minutes. Next put it in a saturated solution of alum and let it remain; then take it out and let it drain a few minutes. The line is now pretty well filled with an insoluble white compound of sulphate of lead, but smells strongly of acetic acid. To remove this, put it in a bucket of water, stirring it around occasionally. Then hang and dry thoroughly. Now put some paraffine in a tin can, and put this can in boiling water, taking care no water touches the paraffine. When the latter has melted, put in the line prepared as above stated, having previously wound it into a ball. Next draw it through a rag to remove an excess of paraffine. This line will be found to last for years and be smooth and waterproof for the length of its life as a fishing line.

Shooting.

A REVIEW OF ENGLISH CORDITE EXPRESS RIFLES.

IT was about the year 1893 that the modern type of military small bore rifle was first tried on game. The cheapness of the magazine action, the wonderful flatness of trajectory, and the slight recoil all combined to make the sporting edition of the military weapon a great favorite among shooting men. The barrel was reduced several inches is length, so that after restocking and general trimming down of exuberances, a very efficient arm was produced at a fraction of the cost of the express rifle. These weapons were exceedingly accurate over sporting distances, in spite of the shortened barrel. Trouble was, however, experienced by reason of the small diameter and the exceptional hardness of the nickel-jacketed bullet. Its striking energy exceeded that of many express rifles, but a difficulty arose from the fact that the bullet was liable to pass through an animal's body without great loss of velocity.

This defect of the military cartridge stimulated the inventive faculties of gun makers in the direction of producing an expanding bullet. Longitudinal slits were cut in the nose of the bullet in order to promote a mushrooming effect on impact, and a certain measure of success was attained. Rifle makers were hard pressed by the popularity of the new sporting type of magazine rifle. They maintained, with every justice on their side, that two cartridges in a double barrel rifle were more effective for game shooting than half a dozen in a magazine, with a time delay between the shots for the working of the bolt. This, however, did not turn the tide which had set in favour of the military type of rifle.

Mr. Holland brought forward in June, 1898, a falling block single barrel rifle which had been specially manufactured to withstand the high pressure of the ·303 cartridge. This rifle gave excellent shooting results, thereby showing that private manufacture could cope with the high ballistics incidental to the use of the military type of cartridge. To Mr. Rigby seems, however, to be due the credit of introducing a double barrel express calibre of rifle firing a cordite charge and a nickel-covered bullet analogous to the ·303. The Field of 30th July 1898, contained a notice of this rifle, which stated that it was the outcome of experiments with a view to apply to ·45, 50. and ·577 rifles the proportion of charge that had in ·303 and smaller calibres proved so deadly.

The rifle which formed the subject of this notice carried a cartridge with a 480 grain bullet. The propellant used was cordite, and we may accordingly accept this rifle as the progenitor of the weapons which have subsequently been distinguished as of the high power cordite type. The muzzle velocity was stated at 2059 foot seconds.

While the ·45, ·50, and ·577 cartridges were based upon the black powder express cases, it soon became apparent that the ·45 cartridge with a heavy nickel-jacketed bullet working on the military level of ballistics possessed more power than was necessary for ordinary soft skinned game. The Jeffery special ·40 cordite cartridge having slight differences of dimension as compared with the black powder, ·45-·40 was accordingly introduced in December, 1898.

We then find that in November 1899, Mr. Rigby submitted a double rifle, this time of ·350 calibre, and therefore an entirely new bore for express rifles. While this was not reported upon in The Field, contemporary records go to show that it was brought out as nearly as possible at the same time as Mr. Holland's ·375 rifle, which was also made for a special " cartridge. The Holland rifle was reported on in The Field of 2nd December 1899. At about this time Mr. Purde introduced his ·36 special cordite rifle and cartridge. Messrs. Kynoch's enterprise at this time caused cartridge to follow cartridge so quickly that it is difficult now to lay down their precise order of introduction.

As soon as high power express rifles of a calibre greater than the military became an accomplished fact we ceased to hear so much about the ·256 and ·303 as sporting cartridges. Up to the year 1897. The efficiency of the ·303 cartridge for sporting purposes was ever under discussion. Mr. Selous, for instance, gave it as his opinion in December, 1896, that the ·303 with an expanding bullet was powerful enough to be used with effect on all game, except such ponderous beasts as elephants, rhinoceroses, buffaloes, or bisons. He further stated that he would not object to use the rifle on lion. Had Mr. Selous' sporting experiences covered a later period of rifle development, there can be little doubt that he would have preferred the more powerful cartridges that were subsequently introduced.

The ·303 and ·256 rifles are still much used for deer stalking and other similar shooting at soft-skinned game that does not cagbre, but there is always an element of luck in shots taken with these rifles. Better for this purpose are undoubtedly those rifles which fire bullets from ·35 to ·40 calibre.

For the benefit of those sportsmen who desire very high ballistics combined with a low chamber pressure in the rifle, the firm of Eley Brothers brought out two cartridges which they term No. 2 nitro. They are of ·45 and ·36 bore respectively, being characterized by a very large space for the accommodation of the powder charge, whereby a large amount of propellant can be used, while attaining but a low pressure.

Having thus attained great energy and striking power for the sporting cartridge, the swing of the pendulum brings us back to the use of lighter ammunition for certain kinds of sport. Mr. Purdey is a pioneer in this direction. At the beginning of 1905 he produced his ·40 bore cartridge, which contains a 230 grain lead bullet with a nickel base. This cartridge is in point of fact the absolute ballistic equivalent of the ·40 bore black powder magnum, but materially smaller in general dimensions. It gives approximately the same recoil and the same stopping power as the ·303 cartridge at ordinary sporting distances, and the trajectory is also very nearly the same. But it is a more reliable sporting bullet because of its larger diameter. This cartridge may, therefore, be likened for all practical purposes to a ·303 expanded out to ·40 bore.

Turning to another development there was from the first a great demand for a serviceable magazine rifle firing a bullet of larger diameter than the military. Messrs. Cogswell and Harrison's Certus rifle was probably the first special magazine weapon which was made to take a cartridge larger than the military. This rifle having been constructed for the 45-·40 cartridge. Other firms made use of an ingenious adaptation of the ordinary Mannlicher action. Without changing the bolt and magazine the use of a special barrel enabled the ·375 cartridge to be used. This had the same size base and the same length as the Mannlicher, which accounts for its satisfactory working in the ordinary Mannlicher action.—Arms and Explosives.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Would you kindly favour me with your opinion on the following case and decide a bet?

In a game of Loo eight hands are playing. Jack of Diamonds is turned up. The first three players throw up their cards, the fourth player A takes the miss and the fifth, sixth, and seventh players throw up their hands. The eighth player, B, declares playing. A, the leader, has ace, 7, and 5, of trumps (Diamonds) and B has no trumps whatever A leads with ace of trumps and scores a trick; he then throws the 5 of trumps and scores a second trick; then again he gives the 7 of trumps and tells B his adversary that he is looed. B and the seventh player C say: "No, according to the rule of the game of Loo, viz., two trumps lead the highest you should have led with the higher card, i.e., the 7 of trumps and scored the second trick, and you have no right to throw and score the second trick as above, and therefore you are looed and not B." A disputes the rule, because he has three trumps and says this rule does not apply in this case and challenges C and lays him a bet.

Has A the right to throw the 5 of trumps after scoring the first trick or should he have led with the 7 of trumps?

Who is looed, A or B? and who is entitled to the pool? Who wins the bet, A or C? Will you or any of your readers be so good as to answer and decide the points in detail and oblige?

BOOJUM.

[A must play his trumps from highest downward. When leading A was looed. So was B as he could not score a trick, though the cards were played correctly. The Pool stands, and both put in their loo.—ED.]

THE RECENT PROHIBITION ON THE IMPORTATION OF CERTAIN RIFLES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I would be much obliged if you could inform me (1) whether the new regulations recently issued by Government, about importation and restriction of ·303 and ·450 bore rifles irrespective of size of chamber, apply to such rifles as Westley Richards ·375—·303 Accelerated Express and the H. V. ·450 or ·450 No. 2 Express rifles. (2) If they do, would you consider a H. V. ·500 falling block single express a good investment, such being procurable in Calcutta at Rs. 250 and Rs. 260? (3) Also could I get Axite cartridges for such a rifle?

I had intended getting a ·450 No. 2 H. V. rifle, but am not sure as to the actual meaning of these new regulations.

H. H. B.

AKYAB, 20th November 1906.

[The Government Notification regarding the importation of ·303 and ·450 bore rifles reads as follows:—

For the words "rifles of ·303 bore or rifles of ·450 bore of the Martini-Henry pattern, if such rifles have been imported into British India subsequently to the 20th February 1901 without the special sanction of the Government of India balled ammunition which can be fired from rifles of the bores and pattern aforesaid" substitute the words "rifles of ·303 or ·450 bore and balled ammunition which can be fired from such rifles," etc., etc.

Thus the importation of any rifle with a ·303 or ·450 bore barrel is prohibited and it does not matter what cartridge they are chambered for. If barrels are either of abovementioned bores they are prohibited.

A ·500 single barrel High Velocity rifle if by a good maker appears a bargain at Rs. 250 or Rs. 260, if one does not mind the disadvantage of having only one barrel, any of the Gun-makers in Calcutta would import suitable cartridges loaded "Axite" for such a rifle if they do not stock them.—ED.]

RIFLE NOTES.

A NEW HIGH VELOCITY SMALL BORE RIFLE.

SIR,—The ·375—·303 accelerated express rifle with its enormously high muzzle speed of from 2,500 to 2,700 feet seconds is a splendid sporting weapon; its flat trajectory and enormous striking force have left all other small bore weapons far behind, and Messrs. Westley Richards are to be congratulated on having so enormously improved the ·303 calibre as a sporting weapon; but they have done better than this even with their latest small bore weapon—the ·318 accelerated express, which is a great improvement on the ·375—·303 as regards striking force. It has the same muzzle velocity, but the bullet is of 250 grains weight which gives a muzzle energy of 3,466 feet lbs. in place of 2,980 of the ·375—·303 with a muzzle velocity of 2,500 feet seconds.—whilst with a muzzle velocity of 2,700 feet seconds the muzzsle energy of the ·318 is 4 042 feet lbs. against 3,454 feet lbs. of the ·375—·303. The muzzle energy of the ordinary ·303—the bullet of which is of the same weight as that of the ·375—·303 with a muzzle of 2,000 feet seconds is only about 1,940 feet lbs.—so it will be seen how enormously ahead of it the new Westley Richards rifles are. the new ·318 rifle can be made double or single barrel of course, but it can be had like the ·375—·303 as a nice handy little magazine arm fitted with a Mauser action which is so much stronger and simpler than our complicated Lee action.

If the small bore Westley Richards bullets do really spend all their enormous energy on an animal and do not waste it in useless penetration there ought to be no necessity for carrying heavy weapons of large calibre.

If other sportsmen's experience with Westley Richards patent copper capped small bore bullets are the same as C. B. M.'s, vide your issue of the 18th October, heavy weapons will soon be things of the past, especially as the new light ball and shot guns. Westley Richards Faunets and Explora drive bullets of large diameter with comparatively high velocity and are no doubt excellent weapons for jungle work where great shocking power combined with handiness is required at short range.

AIR RIFLES.

The Birmingham Small Arms Company's and Bonehills Britannia air rifles are I think the two best on the market. They certainly give excellent results. I have had a good deal of experience with the Britannia which I find absolutely perfect at a range of 15 yards with properly fitting slugs, such as Kynoch's "club" slug, which requires no expanding to make it fit properly as it is so carefully made.

The Britannia is now provided with a new backsight and fitted with screws for elevation and wind guage, which give it a great advantage. It is easy to fit a peep hole on to this sight and make it perfect.

DO TIGERS RETURN TO KILLS AFTER BEING FIRED AT?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I was staying with my friend Mr. Moggridge of the Bombay-Burma Trading Company, Limited, at Kalewe when your paper of the 11th ultimo in which his article on Axcite was inserted, arrived. As one of your correspondents began an article by saying that tigers do not return to their kill after being fired at, he (Mr. Moggridge) suggested that I should send you an account of an experience I lately had which goes to prove that the contrary is not infrequently the case. Though I had previously refused to write about it, I told him, I would do so, as it might serve a useful purpose in helping to dispel what I have good reason to believe is a fallacy and a very prevalent one. You may be interested to learn that the incident happened within 200 yards of the spot where he shot his tiger with the Axite rifle and that I was with him only a day or two ago when he bowled over a large bull bison with a shot in the head from the same rifle.

Number of years spent in a mess in India had served to impress two things very strongly upon me with regard to tiger shooting. The first that a tiger never returns to his kill after being fired at and the second that he never comes to a kill over which a lamp is tied. Recent experiences have made me inclined to doubt the latter theory whilst absolutely disproving the former.

Having heard of a kill some sixteen miles off I rode out and was met by the durwan of the local P. W. D. Bungalow who told me he had just returned from an inspection of the kill—a full-grown cow—and that he would take me to it. This was about 8 A.M. Arrived at the spot he was much concerned to find there was no cow to be seen. Following the tracks some fifty yards up a small creek we came upon a cow which if not full grown was at least very nearly so. The local Burmans built a machan and at 4 P.M. I sat up intending to return just before dark. As usually happens one, rightly or wrongly, is convinced that the tiger is near at hand just at this time so, that when he did come and began to tear the skin I found myself still sitting up and unable to see either the tiger or the sight of my gun (a 12-bore Paradox). After a little scratching he began to drag the cow off. I then put lime on the foresight, but with no better result. In this predicament and thinking that if he would look up I might get a glimpse of his eyes and a quick shot, I tapped gently on my topee. This produced a growl to fire at, but nothing more substantial. As the cow was again being dragged away I lit a match and subsequently a candle. More growls.

Realising that he would soon have the cow away altogether and imagining that I got a glimpse of his eyes I fired. A bound, a thud and much sobbing and the noise of a wounded animal dragging itself through thick undergrowth was the gratifying result. I calculated that the tiger went about 55 yards stopping roughly every five. and sobbing loudly; a louder thud and the cessation of the sobbing seemed to indicate that he had fallen to die. Having waited an hour I returned to the bungalow, called up the village headman and told him I had bagged the tiger.

Next morning by way of precaution and although certain in my own mind that I should find him stone dead I took one Burman only with me, telling the others to be ready to come when sent for. To my intense surprise I found that not only was the tiger not where I had expected to find him, but that on going subsequently to the machan there was no cow to be seen. It was then easy to understand what had happened. The tiger had apparently bounded up when the shot was fired, but had then deliberately dragged off the cow from under my machan and the series of thuds and sobbing was due to his dropping it periodically and the exertion of carrying it through the dense undergrowth. Following the tracks I came upon the kill, partially devoured, about 150 yards away. I then called up the remaining Burmans and left them to build another machan. They did this and went off. At 3 P.M a Burman came to say that the tiger had again removed the cow and was eating it some 50 yards away. I went out and got close enough to see the undergrowth waving, but he disappeared before I could catch a sight of him. Determined to persevere I again called up the men and built a third machan of bamboos. The cow I tied with a boat rope round its neck to a strong creeper and on the former put three splashes of lime which I hoped to see after it became too dark to distinguish the kill itself. These somewhat unorthodox preparations complete I got up, it being then about 5 P.M. At the last moment a man had come up with a hurricane lamp which I took up with me and also string to lower it by.

It was very dark and raining when the tiger announced his arrival by pulling hard at the kill. On finding that he could not get it away he roared loudly and I fired in his direction. He then roared louder and at me this time, so I gave him another. In all I fired five shots, including two of buck shot at him and he was still alternately pulling at the kill and circling round my machan roaring continuously. As I had only four cartridges remaining and being anxious to frighten him off before he got the cow loose, in the hopes that he would return in the morning I shouted at him; but it was not until quite a few minutes later that he went off.

At 3 A.M. dark and raining as before he made another effort when one more shot sent him off for good. I had acquired a very considerable respect for him and would not have been surprised to find him come back in the morning, but though I sat up till 9 A.M., he did not do so. I should mention that on the first occasion he stayed for fully ten minutes and this although I lowered a lighted hurricane lamp to the ground in addition to firing at him. Throughout I never saw anything to fire at unless my first shot the night before was actually at his eyes of which, however, I am by no means certain.

Some little time later a friend who had recently come to Burma from India had this story inflicted upon him, but I fear to no purpose, for being on tour he came across a kill also at a P. W. D. bungalow, but some 60 miles from the bungalow near which the above incident occurred and in another district, there being no reason therefore to believe the same tiger was responsible for it. Having fired one shot, when it was getting dark, and missed, he waited five minutes and came down as is the almost invariable custom in India Within an hour, and when too dark to see, the tiger returned and made a good meal. In all, this tiger killed eleven cows and was fired at three times (by natives) over the second kill. Possibly the reason why tigers, in Upper Burma at any rate, do frequently return to their kills after being fired at is that the number shot annually is of course comparatively small, whereas in districts like the Central Provinces a tiger must be very young indeed if he is not educated up to the fact that the report of a rifle is a danger signal On the other hand were shikaris in India to sit up quietly in their machans for (say) a couple of hours I am confident they would find that tigers would return to their kills after being fired at.

What is Whisky? For absolute candour and honesty of purpose the following is to be commended. Mackie & Co., Distillers, Limited, the noted Islay Distillers, whose name has always been associated with quality, in their "Greyhound" blend give the age and composition of the Whisky. They are the first and only firm to do so, and this new departure the public will not be slow to appreciate. The experiment will be worth watching, and will doubtless knock the feet from under many other largely advertised Whiskies.

No one can now say that they cannot get a good Scotch Whisky. This action of Mackie & Co, Distillers. Limited, will remove a deal of the uncertainty which has existed in this respect recently, and will gain the confidence of the public, by their labelling their Whisky with the composition of the Blend.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The Greyhound bottle contains quality. Little is spent in Advertising.

We guarantee this a blend of Old Grain together with—

8	Glenlivets	(All Malt)	The youngest whisky used in this blend is over 4 years old and the oldest over 8 years.

RETURN TICKETS AT REDUCED FARES.

First and second class passengers.

1. During the period from the 7th to the 26th December 1906, inclusive, return tickets at single fares will be issued to 1st and 2nd class passengers for any distance over 100 miles. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distant 100 miles or less, on payment of fare as for 101 miles. The tickets will be availabe for completion of the return journey up to, and including, the 14th January 1907.

The outward journey must be completed within the same limit of time, after commencement, as allowed for single journey tickets, vide paras, 15 and 21, pages 82 and 84 of the monthly Time Table and Guide. One day is allowed for break of journey for every 100 miles or part of 100 miles, but no break of journey will be allowed at a station short of 101 miles from the point the journey was commenced.

Intermediate class passengers.

2. Return tickets will be issued during the same period and under the same conditions as to distances to intermediate class passengers, at a charge of two third class fares. Tickets under the concession will be available only between the stations named on the tickets, and not for break of journey.

General.

3. Tickets purchased at the Calcutta Offices [Fairlie Place and Chowringhee] will be available by trains leaving Howrah on the day of issue or on the following day. Tickets for Monday's mail trains are procurable at these offices on Saturdays. Tickets purchased at the Burra Bazar Office will be available on the day of issue only.

4. The return concession tickets for 1st 2nd and intermediate class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation, provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	Four
Second	Five
Intermediate (lateral compartment) ...	Eight.

5. The return concession ticket does not entitle the holder to any additional concession, such, for instance, as that under which women servants are, on payment of the next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in first or second class compartments. Concession tickets for children will be issued at half single journey fares.

6. The above arrangements apply to the East Indian Railway system, including the Tarkessur Branch, and the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway.

Second Day, Friday, 23rd November 1906.

THERE was an appreciable increase in the attendance this afternoon, and another successful day's racing was witnessed. The main interest was naturally centred in the Army Cup which proved a triumph for Messrs. Wood and Badger's Dilerjung. After the parade the horses cantered off to the start and were sent away together, Harmony being the only one who got off badly. Cut Off made the running for the first half of the journey and was shortly after headed by Pasha, who led until about a furlong and a quarter from home. Here Pasha was joined by Dilerjung and the two raced together, the favourite winning by a head to the satisfaction of his numerous supporters. The winner was trained by Penton and has always been a consistent performer. An objection was lodged in the November Plate against Manlock for bumping but was overruled.

THE STEWARDS' PLATE.—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs. 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. A handicap for English and Australasian ponies 14-1 and under, and Country-bred ponies 14-2 and under. 5 furlongs.

Lieut.-Col. Stisted's First Bell, 7st. 6lbs. ... A. Hoyt 1
Mr. J. D. Scott's Yankee Boy, 10st. 4lbs. .. Robinson 2
H. H. the Koer Sahib of Patiala's Red Shot, 6st. (car. 6st. 8lbs.) ... ... Melsom 3

BETTING: 5 to 4 on Yankee Boy, evens First Bell, 4 to 1 agst. Red Shot.

After some delay the field got off, Red Shot in front. When they had gone half way Red Shot fell behind. A neck and neck race resulted in a win for First Bell by a short head: half length divided second and third. Time—63secs.

THE HANDICAP PONY CHASE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A handicap steeplechase for ponies 14-2 and under. B. C. about 2 miles.

Capt. Bennett's Pinfire, 10st. ... ... Owner 1
Mr. J. D. Scott's Mary Jane, 10st. 7lbs. ... Capt. F. W. Barrett 2

BETTING: 5 to 4 on Mary Jane, evens Pinfire.

Pinfire led the whole way and though challenged by Mary Jane in the straight, won cleverly by a short head. Time—4mins. 6½secs.

THE NOVEMBER PLATE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A handicap for horses. 6 furlongs.

Col. Beaver's Manlock, 8st. 4lbs. ... Southall 1

BETTING: 3 to 2 on Meadow Saffron, 2 to 1 agst. Manlock, 5 to 1 each Thomond and Flotsam, 12 to 1 Nirvana.

They raced together to the rails where Manlock and Meadow Saffron drew to the front and after a close race the former won by a length; two lengths divided second and third. An objection was lodged against the winner for bumping but was overruled. Time—1min. 15secs.

THE ARMY CUP.—Rs. 2,000 presented by the Fund, added to the subscriptions given by His Majesty's British and Native Regiments, the Entrance money and a starting sweep of Rs. 25. The winner to receive 75 per cent., the second pony to receive 15 per cent., and the third pony 10 per cent. out of the entire stakes. For maiden Arab ponies 14-1 and under which are bonâ fide and unconditionally the property of British officers in his Majesty's Army on full pay, and which were the property of a person duly qualified to enter for the race on 1st May 1906. To be ridden by Gentlemen riders or Licensed Jockeys 14-1 to carry 11st. 7lbs. W. I. Licensed Jockeys 7lbs. extra. 7 furlongs.

BETTING: Evens Omar, 3 to 1 each agst. Sheikh and Sabig, 6 to 1 the others.

Girgistan and Hail Fellow led into the straight with the favourite in the rear. As they neared home Omar gained on the leaders, but his effort came too late.

Won by three-quarters of a length: a neck between second and third. Time—60⅘secs.

Third Day, Saturday, the 24th November, 1906.

The racing on the closing day of the Lucknow Autumn Meeting was quite up to the level of its predecessors, and the meeting as a whole, thanks to the labours of the executive, has been a phenomenal success. The gathering, although not so big as that on Cup Day, when the enormous concourse of spectators present literally broke the record for Lucknow, was still very large, and the environments of the day's sport could not have been improved upon.

The proceedings were ushered in by the Lawn Plate, for which seven runners all Army Cup horses, figured on the card. Of these Lomond, who ran third to Pasha in the Cup, was installed favourite, with Cinque Ports next in demand. Lomond had no difficulty in carrying off the event, Cinque Ports again making no show whatever. The race was run in a fraction under Cup time. Of the five appearing on the card for the Lucknow Chase all answered to the roll-call, and an interesting race was promised. Captain Burch got the field away after some delay and Toreador led the others at a great pace over the water jump and for the first few fences. The pace was, however, too good to last, and it was only by dint of using his whip that Lansdown got Toreador to stick to his task. Taking off too far at the mud wall, Toreador landed on top and turned a complete somersault. Lansdown had a miraculous escape, as he got off with a few nasty bruises and a bad shaking. The injured man was brought in after the race and received prompt attention. Although Senator led most of the way, Spark caught up in the straight and pulled through easily by two lengths. One of the upsets of the afternoon occurred in the Farewell Plate, in which most of the money was on Baritone, but the race proved a gift for Thakur Sripal Singh's Flotsam, who started at 3 to 1. W. Evans rode another winner for the same owner in the last race, in which Soheil, who was a strong favourite, snatched the verdict by a short head from Cut Off. The public fancy was also gratified in the Lucknow Plate, in which Recovery landed the stakes after a close race with Footlight. The surprise of the afternoon occurred in the Alum Bagh Plate, which went to Major Williamson's Jeddah, the favourite not having a look in. The finishes during the afternoon, as throughout the meeting, were exceedingly close, and testify to the excellence of Colonel Mayne's handicapping. The onerous duties of judge were in capable hands, and Major Wood, of the Royal Dragoons, is to be congratulated upon the success with which he accomplished his task. Mr. A. C. Steele, A. V. C., was both time-keeper and veterinary surgeon, though his duties in the latter capacity were, as it happened, purely nominal. To the other officials concerned and to Major J. H. Ensor, the invaluable Secretary of the Lucknow Races, the public owe a debt of gratitude for the excellence of the arrangements, and for their determination to uphold the best traditions of Lucknow racing. The Oudh and Rohilkund Railway again showed their enterprise by running race specials for the benefit of visitors from outstations. The police had exceptionally heavy traffic to handle, more particularly on Cup Day, but there was never any difficulty in securing conveyances. Det ils:—

THE LAWN PLATE.—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs. 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. A handicap for maiden Arab ponies 14-1 and under, that were qualified to enter and run in the Army Cup, 1906. 7 furlongs.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 9th November 1906.

THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

THANKS to the bright morning, the attendance on Saturday was a rattling good one in every department, and the pleasures of a capital afternoon's sport were enhanced by the strains of the band of the Scots Guards. Better going could not have been wished for, and though backers had the worst of the deal no fault could be found with an interesting afternoon's sport, in which South Hatch carried off two of the prizes.

LIVERPOOL.

Liverpool, with its liberal programme, did not seem itself on Wednesday. From some cause or other the attendance, headed by the Knowsley party, in charge of Lord Derby and Lord Stanley, was by no means up to the usual standard, all the enclosures showing a falling off, and the holiday crowd being a meagre one. The weather was cold and dull, nay, even dismal; and a brooding sky suggested a storm, but the darkness fortunately passed over without any rain falling.

At Liverpool, yesterday if anything, the weather was worse than on the previous day, rain being in actual evidence during the morning, and a spit or two reminded visitors that the dose might at any time be repeated. With the sky a dull leaden grey, the wind in the cold quarter, and a mist shutting out the country, the attendance, headed by the Knowsley party, showed little improvement on the previous day. The going was heavier, which may account for several disappointments, but a welcome improvement in the sport put a bit more life into the proceedings.

Fortunately for the comfort of visitors to Aintree this afternoon, the weather was all that could be expected at this advanced season of the year. The attendance of the Cup day is always in advance of what may be termed the "off" days of the meeting, and that which patronised the meeting to-day was in every way satisfactory. Lord Derby's house party drove up just prior to the numbers going up for the first race, and the magnificent horses, with postillions, were, as usual, much admired.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

The goal scoring in the three leading Leagues on Saturday was on the small side, the ten games in the Southern League producing only 23, in the First Division of the League 22 were obtained, and in the Second Division there were 32. Visiting clubs did not have an encouraging experience, only one S. L. club winning on foreign soil, two home clubs went under in League I. games, and not a single defeat was inflicted on a home team in League II. matches. The total number of drawn games was eight, half of which were played in the Southern League. The five winning clubs in this League scored 13 goals, and the losing teams only 2, but each of the eight who figured in the drawn games registered a goal. In League I. the seven winning teams totalled 13 goals, while the losers had to be content with a solitary one! Eight of the teams failed to score, and it is a long time since there was such a beggarly result in the First League football. Nine of the games in the Second Division of the League were brought to a definite conclusion, and in each instance the home club was victorious, the only crumb of comfort to visiting sides being the drawn game at Burnley in which Barnsley captured a point. The winning elevens claimed 24 goals and the losers 4, while five teams did not score.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

Fulham occupies a commanding position at the head of the Southern League table, the win on Saturday over Brighton, at Fulham, giving the side a lead of four points over their nearest attendants.

It emphasises the level of clubs in the Southern League that there should have been four drawn games in the competition on Saturday, and the most interesting of these to the football public was that at Tottenham, where the 'Spurs were opposed by Portsmouth. The visitors gained a point as compared with last year, and so did New Brompton and West Ham, the absence of Jarvis and Watson having a serious effect upon the play of the home side. Watford are probably satisfied at having brought a point away from Northampton, where they went under last season, and the Crystal Palace are to be heartily congratulated on having played the Bristol Rovers to a draw in the western city. Southampton, Luton, and Reading, whose early season form was terribly disappointing, are now making up leeway in no uncertain manner, and the three clubs scored winning brackets on Saturday. Reading are entitled to the most credit, for they beat Queen's Park Rangers at Park Royal and thus picked up their first point away from home. Since defeating Millwall at home on 22nd September the Rangers have not won a match, and the players must bestir themselves if they desire to get away from the bottom of the table. Norwich City won in convincing fashion against Millwall, and Swindon preserved their unbeaten certificate at home against Leyton, but the East Londoners went under only by the odd goal in three.

The table appended shows that nine of the teams have a goal record whose debit side is numerically superior to the credit side and only three sides have scored 20 goals.

LEAGUE I.

Woolwich Arsenal were not able to do better against Bolton Wanderers on Saturday than last year, but there was a material difference between the games, for whereas in 1905 the Gunners deserved to lose by a handsome margin, they had no more than their deserts and perhaps slightly less, in sharing the points last week-end. It was one of the keenest games fought at Manor field this season, and it was only marred by a few ebullitions of temper on the part of a couple of the Wanderers, which were both childish and unwarranted. The positions of the four leading teams have not been changed as a result of Saturday's games, but as Everton was the only one of the quartette to win outright they have improved their positon to the extent of a point. Luckless Middlesbrough have a quarrel with the Fates, for they did not deserve to lose against Liverpool, at Ayresome Park. Aitken made his first appearance for the home club, and played a fine game. Aston Villa lost at Preston, and this is the third successive defeat of the Villans away from home. Blackburn Rovers maintained their improved form at Sunderland, the Wearsiders getting home by the only goal scored, but Notts County gave a mediocre show at Bury, the home team winning with comparative ease. Bristol City provided the surprise of the afternoon by winning at Manchester against the City, and this was the second success of the Bristolians away from home, their previous win being at Stoke, on 8th September, where they won by three clear goals. A sporting duel between the Sheffield clubs, at Owlerton fittingly ended in a draw, Needham the priceless, putting the United on equal terms just on time, and Derby County, unable to score at home against Newcastle, are entitled to praise for keeping the nippy Novocastrian forwards at bay.

LEAGUE II.

Chelsea made another serious slip on Saturday, for they were beaten by two clear goals by Burslem Port Vale, and so serious an effect has this had upon them in the table, that they have dropped from second to fourth, which position they fill only because their goal average is better than that of Bradford City and Burnley. The Pensioners are not playing just now such good football as last season, but there is no need to be alarmed, as the team is bound to come again, and the sooner the better if promotion is to reward their efforts. West Bromwich romped home against Glossop, and Hull City were out played by the Fosse at Leicester. Clapton Orient did quite as well as could be expected in losing by the odd goal in three at Burton, but Gainsborough Trinity gave a poor show at Lincoln, the City beating them pointless by four goals. Nottingham Forest just scraped home against Stockport County, and Grimsby beat the Wolverhampton Wanderers, at Grimsby, by two goals to one, after a ding-dog struggle. Brandford City are coming on apace, and by defeating Blackpool so easily they registered their third successive win.

The subjoined table suggests that West Bromwich, Leicester Fosse, Burnley, and Hull City have a very strong defence, but unfortunate Glossop have given away 35 goals in ten matches.

RUGBY RULES.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR MATCH vs. GLOUCESTER.—Tremendous enthusiasm was displayed when the South Africans met Gloucestershire on Saturday on the ground of the Gloucester Club. The weather was perfect, the ground could not have been in better condition, and the crowd, with the existing arrangements in force, could hardly have been larger. Altogether the crowd must have numbered nearly 12,000, and a gate of nearly £700 was taken. This is a record for any gate at Gloucester, except upon the occasion of the England vs. Wales match in 1900, when it reached over £900.

There were several alterations in the visiting side from that which defeated Glamorgan, the men standing down including Paul Roos (captain), A. Stegmann, and D. Morkel, while at the last minute Miller was chosen to play vice Burdett. Gloucestershire had two alterations from the original selection, Butterworth and M. Neale both being unable to play. "Whacker" Smith took the Oxonian's place, and T. Wild, of Lydney, that of Neale. Gent, the International half, was not chosen, as he is on the injured list; his inclusion in the team would have beyond a doubt made a lot of difference to Gloucestershire, as half-back on Saturday was the home side's weakest point.

The South Africans won the toss, and Mathias started for Gloucestershire, both sides being given hearty receptions when they came on the field of play. At the outset the game was fought out near the centre, but the visitors soon attacked, working down the ground in very determined fashion; Wood and Hudson both had kicks charged down, but the International quickly recovered, and with a fine punt found touch at mid-field gaining a big slice of territory for the Gloucester side. Very quickly afterwards the visiting back got in motion, and Loubser went down the ground looking very dangerous. "Whacker" Smith, almost the only player on his side who tackled well, temporarily saved the situation, but within six minutes from the start, following some clever passing, Le Roux ran in with the first try, Mare's kick at goal going astray.

Ensuing play was keenly contested, but Gloucester lacked pace and cleverness, and one or two possible chances in consequence came to nought. Two or three free-kicks to the visitors materially improved their position, and Loubser was again prominent, but was stopped by Hudson. Following this, Gloucester's defence was tested severely, but for some considerable time it held good. Krige made his mark near the half-way and Carolin shot very finely at goal, though unsuccessfully the ball going just outside one of the uprights. Following the drop-out Dobbin got the oval away from the scrum and handed to Carolin; from Carolin it went to Hirsch, and a beautifully combined movement ended in Le Roux once again getting over the line with the second try. Carolin had a shot at goal from a difficult angle—a really grand kick—but it once again just failed to find the premier points. On restarting the Colonials were soon at it again, quickly becoming dangerous, and Loubser was only stopped by "Whacker" Smith in the nick of time. The visitors at this stage were altogether too good for their opponents, their passing being perfect, and they very quickly added to their score, Loubser, who received the leather after a truly magnificent round of passing, in which nearly everyone of the visitors' backs took part, getting over with the third try. Carolin, who throughout kicked finely, was successful on this occasion with the place-kick, so that the Colonials were now 1 goal 2 tries ahead.

During the remaining ten minutes of the initial half the Gloucestershire men worked well, and looked like scoring, but though they got to within a few yards of the opposition goal

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.
WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD," March 25th, 1905:—

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from Lang's double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in. wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cut a circle 2·1 in. diameter. Reproduced full size.

line, they lacked scoring powers, and were eventually sent back to mid-field, where the game was being fought out when the whistle blew for half-time. Half-time score :—

After the interval Carolin restarted for the visitors, who quickly got their back division in motion, without, however, for the moment becoming dangerous. Hudson made his mark, and put in a useful punt. Matthews and Wild were quickly on the ball, but failed to do anything noteworthy. Krige twice looked dangerous, and once, when the second half had been in progress but a few minutes, he was all but over. Gloucestershire had several shaves at this period of the game ; but their defence was sound, and the Colonials for fully twenty minutes could not break it down.

The Gloucestershire forwards on one occasion carried everything before them in fine style until they reached the visitors' twenty-five, where Marsberg, just as they were becoming dangerous, sent them back again with a big kick. Then Wood was laid out, and the game ceased for a minute or two. Resuming, Gloucestershire were penalised, and Carolin punted high to give his front rank a chance, but Bale saved. Still the visitors attacked, and at length their efforts were rewarded, Carolin slipping round the scrum, and dropping a beautiful goal with his left foot. A minute or two later, after another fine round of passing, which quite puzzled the Gloucester backs, Le Roux registered yet another try, his third one, and the fourth of the match. Carolin converted with a good kick.

Ensuing play for a time favoured Gloucestershire, the forwards distinguishing themselves in a fine dribble, which ended in Marsberg having to save. During the remainder of the game, the Colonials kept up a most persistent attack ; they, however, had to face a strong opposition, and though they, time after time, looked certain to score, it was not until a minute or two before the end that Krige, getting possession in his own half, had a good run down the field finishing in easy style with a try behind the posts. The place-kick failed, and at the close the score was :—

MATCH v. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—If the Dark Blues did not exactly cover themselves with glory in their match with the South Africans at Oxford on Wednesday they, at least, gave their opponents a hard game. There were some five or six thousand spectators.

It was unfortunate that Butterworth was unable to play, as he is the only man who has been tried behind the scrum with any pretensions as a sprinter, and had he been on the wing instead of Milton, there would probably have been one or two additional tries recorded for Oxford. There does not appear to be a back in residence possessing any thing more than ordinary speed, and Oxford can never be a great side until this defect is remedied.

The defeat by 24 points to 3 was not such an overwhelming one, as South African victories go, and it must be admitted that even if the side as a whole did meet with disaster, the forwards at least played a very fine game. Their footwork at times was brilliant, quite non-plussing the visiting defence, and it was not their fault that the visitors gained such a substantial majority. In fact, on the day's play most people would agree that forward the University were the better team.

Where all played so well, it is difficult to pick out any deserving of special mention, but directly the scrum broke up Gardiner, Hoskin and Cozens-Hardy were almost always to the front, and White did some effective tackling.

For the first ten minutes the ball was in the visitors' half, and it was left to De Villiers to transfer operations. Oxford were doing very well, but all at once the defence went to pieces, and Raaff got in without much effort. Then Stegmann scored another try, whilst within a couple of minutes he repeated the operation, not one of the place-kicks succeeded.

Nothing disheartened, the 'Varsity forwards made a fine effort, which was supplemented by a long punt into touch by Davies. Twice the ball was taken up to the African line without success, for the backs were too smart in tackling and getting the ball on the move among themselves. It was finally taken over by Hirsch, Mare failing to convert.

Immediately afterwards Carolin scored from a penalty, and at half-time the score was—

	Pts.
South Africans (1 penalty gold 4 tries)...	... 15
Oxford University	... 0

Oxford played splendidly when ends were changed. The halves, Flemmer and Williamson, displayed greatly improved form, and got the ball much more frequently than their opponents. Jackson and Carolin being prevented from combining as they had done in the opening half.

An intercepted pass by Parker gave Oxford a capital opportunity, but nothing came of it. The forwards were playing finely, and there was a fine rush by Batchelor along the line, Davies, it may be mentioned, was doing excellent work at back. For ten minutes the Dark Blues attacked with great determination, and kept the ball in their opponents' twenty-five, but the three-quarters lacked scoring powers, and a wild pass by Flemmer enabled the South Africans to relieve the pressure.

Then followed some smart handling among the visiting three-quarters, and Stegmann, who was playing a fine game, took a drop at goal, and just landed the ball over the bar with a very fine shot. Some good work by Williamson and Steinthal followed, and from a penalty in the visitors' twenty-five Batchelor scored.

A little later fine combination amongst the Colonial backs led up to a try by Villiers, which Carolin converted from close to the touch-line, and an interesting match ended :—

BLACKHEATH vs. LONDON SCOTTISH.—Previous to Saturday's engagement at Blackheath, the "Club" had not this season given of their best, when engaged at the historic Kent ground. With the redoubtable Scots as their visitors, however, they rose to the occasion in such a manner that the game proved to be one that kept the interest in it sustained from start to finish. To be 8 points down half-way through and then to wind up with honours easy, is evidence too, of how the Metropolitan Scots turned what appeared a defeat into a very creditable draw.

When proceedings commenced the Scots appeared likely to cause trouble until Harrison brought relief, and fine work by Friday and Stokes placing the visitors' lines in danger. Several spirited rushes by the visitors were more than balanced by effective long kicks to touch by Blackheath, while Robinson's attempt to drop a goal caused Grischotti to touch down. Eventually, the pressure by Blackheath, had its effect, when Robinson handed out smartly over Friday's head to Stokes. The son of the old international beat the Scots' defence, but Robson's place-kick went astray. Within three minutes the Blackheath "threes" were on the move again, with Friday in the van. Feinting on approaching the Scots' back, he passed to Stokes, who again crossed the line by the flag. From the difficult angle Robson this time converted. London Scottish played up with dash, and through infringements Grischotti twice had shies at goal without success. They were also getting the ball from the scrum more frequently, and Munro might have been in once had he gone on instead of passing. When half-time arrived with Blackheath a goal and a try ahead the Scots were near the home line.

It was after change of ends that the visitors exhibited the form which has carried them to victory so frequently this season, Long dribbles took much to stop, as did some of their nippy passes, but somehow the wing three-quarters would overrun the ball and lose ground. At length a series of passes found Orr in possession, and although he ran in by the flag Grischotti made a poor attempt to convert. Well led by Monteith, the visiting forwards did capitally in the loose, but gradually Blackheath came to the fore again. They were stopped on one occasion right on the line. Finlinson having worked through capitally. It was in a rather bad light that London Scottish met with further success, Walter picking up in the loose and grounding behind the posts. From the easy position Grischotti added the points, and the result was 1 goal and 1 try each.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. LEICESTER.—An interesting game was witnessed at Oxford on Saturday. The game had been in progress barely five minutes, when from a loose scrum Milton picked up, transferred to Batchelor, and then, receiving again, carried the ball over. The place was unsuccessful. Russell, who appeared very difficult to tackle, made a determined effort to equalise. Thompson, however, checked his career, and Batchelor promptly neutralised the advantage. Williamson started a good bout of passing amongst the Oxford backs, and the Blues were attacking again when Wood intercepted a pass, and returned to the centre. Oxford forwards once more assumed the offensive, and it was left to East to save the situation. Then followed a good bit of work by Bourns and Hardyman, which gave Leicester a big advantage, and Oxford had to touch down. Hodges at length got in for Oxford, after receiving from White, Batchelor being unsuccessful with the place kick. Just before ends were changed Batchelor kicked a fine goal from a try by Howe Brown, and Oxford crossed over with a lead of 11 points to 0.

On resuming, the 'Varsity attacked strongly and the visitors had their defence severely tried ; but it came through the ordeal successfully, and the Leicester forwards eventually removed to the other end. Steinthal was responsible for a fine run, and a little later a long dribble by Hoskin compelled East to touch down. Leicester were seen to better advantage after this, and ultimately Russell got in after some good passing initiated by Tarr. Another capital series of exchanges followed, which ended in Hardyman crossing the line, but in neither case was, the try improved upon. Oxford won a hard game by 1 goal and 2 tries (11 points) to 2 tries (6 points).

HARLEQUINS vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—Cambridge put up a determined fight at Wandsworth Common, on Saturday, especially in the second half of the game. It cannot be said, however, that they left the impression of being a brilliant side, and if it had not been for the sodden state of the ground, the Harlequins—who, as it was, played distinctly below their usual form—would probably have won by a larger margin than 11 points.

Shortly after the start, a round of handling by the home backs ended in Lambert making for the line, but he was well tackled by Scoular. The 'Quins kept up the pressure, and dribbling by Lambert and J. G. G. Birkett resulted in the latter scoring in the corner. Lambert's kick fell short. The Harlequin forwards, headed by Roberts, relieved, and from a scrum in the visitors' twenty-five, Stoop threw wide to J. G. G. Birkett, who sent Lambert over in a good position. There was no goal. The next incident of note was a clever punt away by Hearson. Cambridge heeled out, but their halves could do nothing with the ball, and the 'Quins came away. Kelly charged down Penny's kick and Cambridge had to save. From a throw out by Sibree, Stoop gathered the ball in full flight, kicked across, and put his men "on-side," for J. G. G. Birkett to fall over under the posts. Lambert converted. From this point, however, the play of the home side fell off, their forwards failing to follow up as they should. Splendid kicking by Scoular put the 'Varsity on the attack, and first Hearson and then Wright nearly got across, the 'Quins having to save. Half-time came with the home team leading by 1 goal 2 tries to 0.

In the second half the 'Varsity much improved, and did a deal of pressing. However, their attack lacked sting, and they never seemed to be able to press it home. Godby, who had put in some good work since the interval, was twice injured in the jaw, and had to leave the field. Penny went half, and Mellor was pulled out of the scrum, but the 'Varsity seven quite held the opposing pack. A failure to gather by Scoular—his first mistake—nearly let the 'Quins in, but the visiting defence was really fine, and man after man had to come down. Kelly, R. O. C. Ward, and Roberts were conspicuous in rough and tumble work under the 'Varsity uprights, but eventually Cambridge relieved and first Mellor and then Pitt essayed a drop at goal, without success. G. H. Birkett and Lambert took the ball back, Koop saved a try by touching down, and time came with the score unaltered.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.—All the crack Scottish teams are visiting the Light Blues between now and 26th November and on Monday Edinburgh University were the first to meet Cambridge. A large crowd assembled for the match, which was played under congenial conditions. A good game resulted, the home forwards showing up better than previously. T. A. Godby, the freshman, injured on Saturday, could not turn out.

The University kicked off, playing with the sun in their eyes during the opening half. The Scotsmen rushed off at the outset, and were well inside the home 25 in the first minute, but Hearson relieved. Fourteen minutes from the start, following a fine punt by Macleod, Pitt, Wright, Macleod and Koop combined, with the result that the first-mentioned crossed the line. Hearson failed to convert.

A few minutes later the visitors were awarded a free-kick, and although Sivright had the goal at his mercy, he failed badly. Several times Scoular was called upon for some difficult defensive work, but, as usual, he was very sound, and the teams crossed with Cambridge leading by 3 points to 0.

Lethem had in the meantime been injured, and he now retired, Johnson going half-back and Parry three-quarter. A minute after the commencement Evans was badly hurt, but after a few minutes' absence he returned into the field bandaged about the head.

Throughout this half the home pack played a much better game than they had done before this season, with the result that Koop and Wright both obtained tries, Pitt being chiefly responsible for the first. On each occasion Hearson added the extra points, the Light Blues winning by 2 goals 1 try (13 points) to 0.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LIGHT FOURS.

D. C. R. Stuart, the famous Cambridge stroke, was chiefly responsible for the downfall of Third Trinity in the final of the fifty-fifth race for the Coxswainless fours on Saturday. The achievement is all the more remarkable as Stuart only went into the boat a few days ago, when Hall bow "crocked." For the past five years Third Trinity have won every single race they have entered for at Cambridge, and supplied most of the 'Varsity crew, but the Hall on Saturday proved themselves to be the better crew, and they will no doubt make a very determined effort to go "Head of the River" next June. Details :—

Trinity Hall (first station)—D. C. R. Stuart (bow and steers) 11st. 2lbs., H. Bartram, 12st. 4lbs., O. Shimwell, 13st. 4lbs., W. A. Simpson (stroke) 10st. 6lbs. ... 1

Third Trinity (second station)—G. D. Cochrane (bow), 10st. 6lbs., E. W. Powell (steers), 11st. 6lbs., B. C. Johnstone, 12st. 6lbs., M. C. Albright (stoke), 10st. 6lbs. ... 2

There was no wind when the crews took up their positions and they therefore had no difficulty in getting a good start, Trinity Hall were neater and smarter away, pulling 11 strokes in the quarter-minute, and 40 in the full minute, and were seen to be forcing themselves ahead. Third Trinity on the other hand splashed a lot, and only registered 36 strokes in the minute. The leaders reached the Ditch in 1·7—a remarkably fine performance—and were probably about a quarter of a length to the good here. Both crews sprinted hard in the Gut and Plough Reach but the Hall used their big blades to the full advantage and at the Red Grind they were a length to the good. As soon as they entered the Long Reach Hall were challenged and the race became desperate. The Etonians rowed gamely but at the Railway Bridge made their last effort and were eventually beaten by 25 yards. Time—10mins. 19secs.

Of the 55 races Third Trinity have won 19 times, Trinity Hall 11 times, First Trinity 10 times, Jesus 7 times and Lady Margaret 6 times.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY COXSWAINLESS FOURS.

Magdalen, thanks to the prowess of their second boat, succeeded last Friday in maintaining possession of the challenge cup, as they won the final in very easy fashion against New College, who spoilt whatever chance they possessed by wretched steering. It was a great disappointment to the big crowd on the bank, which certainly expected to see something of a race, but coming out of the Gut Magdalen were well upon their opponents and New must have given away another half-length in the next hundred yards. They then went from bad to worse, nearly running into the bank at Longford's Shelter and although they managed to get straight again, there was only one in it from this point, and Magdalen ultimately won by 50 yards in 7mins. The winners were a level neat crew, and were capitally stroked by the Eton freshmen, J. R. Somers Smith, whose father was present to share in his son's victory. The names and weights of the two crews were :—

MAGDALEN II.—1. Hon'ble H. Stanhope (bow), 11st. 3lbs., C. R. Cudmore, 11st. 10lbs., J. A. Gillan, 12st. 12lbs., J. R. S. Smith (stroke), 10st. 6lbs.

Burn (First Trinity) 12st. 7lbs., W. B. Masefield (Jesus), 12st. 5lbs., J. Fraser (Lady Margaret), 11st. 6lbs., F. H. Jerwood (Jesus) (stroke), 11st 4lbs., T. More (Caius) (cox), 8st. 4lbs.

ATHLETICS.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY FRESHMEN'S SPORTS.

Amid cheerless surroundings the first portion of the Freshmen's programme was decided on the Iffley-road ground, on Monday afternoon, and it must be admitted that the results so far as they have gone are not very satisfactory. There is evidently again a dearth of sprinters, and neither the quarter-mile nor the half were productive of anything above mediocrity. In Chinnery, however, the Dark Blues have a hurdler of some promise, and he will certainly be able to do much better time when put to it than that recorded on Monday. Yorke, who won the other heat, also has some style to recommend him. The long jump by Birrell was satisfactory, and when he has conquered his nervousness he should be able to beat his school record of 21ft. 0½in.

The handicaps produced big fields, and in the mile Swift at length succeeded in catching the judge's eye first, albeit he had the liberal allowance of 125 yards.

Officials :—Judges, A. H. Fyffe (University) and Rev. E. E. B. May (Oriel); referee, C. N. Jackson (Hertford); timekeeper, H. M. Turner; starter, D. Burrin. Details :—

100 YARDS.—Heat 1 : E. V. Rieu (St. Paul's and Balliol) 1, E. A. Hunter (Fettes and Christ Church) 2, F. J. L. Scott (King's, Canterbury, and Merton) 3. Rieu secured a slight lead at the enclosure and won by half a foot; half a yard. Time—11⅘secs. Heat 2 : C. L. Parker (Merchant Taylors and St. John's) 1, E. F. Chinnery (Eton and Brasenose) 2, D. R. Brandt (Harrow and Balliol) 3. Won by 1½ yards; two yards. Time—11⅘secs.

PUTTING THE WEIGHT.—C. L. Parker (Merchant Taylors and St. John's), 28ft. 8in., 1; C. W. Garner (Merchant Taylors and Oriel), 28ft. 3in., 2.

QUARTER-MILE.—Heat 1 : C. L. Parker (Merchant Taylors and St. John's) 1, E. Ratcliffe Cousins (Westminster and Christ Church) 2, R. de la Bere (Exeter and Brasenose) 3. CAMBRIDGE FRESHMEN'S SPORTS.

Dull and cheerless weather was associated with the opening instalment of the athletic season at Cambridge yesterday, when the Freshmen's Sports began. The conditions were not favourable to good times, but V. G. Thew (Charterhouse). C. C. G. Wright (Tonbridge), the well-known footballer, and E. E. Jenkins (Warwick) are sprinters of promise. The Carthusian should considerably improve upon his time for the quarter, and when extended, B. M. Jones (Birkenhead) will easily beat his time yesterday for the three-miles. Judges, Messrs. K. Powell and E. H. Ryle; referee, Rev. J. H. Gray; timekeeper, Mr. Newton Digby; starter, W. Watts, junior. Details :—

100 YARDS.—Heat 1 : C. C. G. Wright (Tonbridge and Pembroke), 1; V. G. Thew (Charterhouse and Trinity Hall), 2. Won a good race by a foot. Time—11secs. (inside). Heat 2 : E. E. Jenkins (Warwick and King's), 1; C. H. Williams (S. E. College and Emmanuel), 2. Won by three yards, in 10⅘secs. Heat 3 : D. C. F. Burton (Rugby and Jesus), 1; E. W. Hamilton (Blundells and Sidney), 2. Won by four feet. Time—11⅕secs.

PUTTING THE WEIGHT.—W. H. Smyth (Lynn G. S. and Clare), 31ft. 6in., 1; L. Fowze (Uppingham and Magdalene), 31ft. 5½in., 2.

HALF-MILE.—C. J. Miln (Eton and Pembroke), 1; R. T. H. Mackenzie (Cheltenham and Pembroke), 2. Won by twenty yards. Time—2mins. 7secs.

HIGH JUMP.—Le G. C. Bourchier (Warwick and Trinity), 5ft. 1in., 1; L. A. P. Anderson (Warwick and Emmanuel), 5ft. 2.

BILLIARDS.

"The public are tired of the old favourites—they want to see the rising players perform" was a remark passed by one of our prominent professionals a short time ago.

I do not know if the professional in question looked into Messrs. Thurston's Grand Hall, Leicester Square during the past week, but if he did, he must surely have greatly modified his opinion by this time, for with the exception perhaps of the first day—first-day attendance are never any guide to the popularity or otherwise of a fixture—the salon in question was taxed to its utmost capacity throughout the Dawson-Stevenson match. Twice during the week—Tuesday and Friday afternoons—was the record attendance for the hall broken, and for the whole week the number of people who made the acquaintance of the popular "Sergeant-Major" at the pay-box was quite without precedent in the annals of the establishment. Tired of old favourites, forsooth! Why the public were never more eager to part with their five shillings, three shillings, or two shillings, as the case may be, than they are at the present time, whenever the two stars of the profession happen to cross cues with each other. And in this the public show their usual discrimination in picking out a good thing, for they know they can always depend on seeing a brilliant exposition of the most fascinating of indoor games whenever Dawson and Stevenson meet.

For most of the week Dawson always appeared a comfortable winner, but on the final day there were not a few who would have taken a slight shade of odds that Stevenson would succeed in drawing the match, so brilliantly did he perform at times. One was at a loss which to admire most—Stevenson's remarkable recuperative powers, or Dawson's grim determination to arrive at a definite issue. While it would have been the hardest of luck for Dawson to have missed winning outright, and so setting the seal to a great and consistent display, one can mete out to Stevenson praise for a plucky and up to a certain point, sustained attempt to divide the honours attached to a drawn battle.

Just glance for a moment at the tight corner Stevenson was in. On Wednesday afternoon Dawson was over 1,500 in front, an advantage which he increased to 1,700 the same evening. Early on Thursday afternoon Dawson led by as many as 1,900, but before the close of the same evening's play, Stevenson had cut this down by 1,000. Then early on Friday the Hull exponent reduced the gap to just over 600, only to find Dawson jumping away again and winding up on Friday evening with a lead of over 900. On Saturday afternoon Stevenson once more pulled it back to 600, but instead of this flustering Dawson, it only served to bring out the determination of the Huddersfielder to remain master of the situation, and he set himself going to such an extent that in little over an hour he had back-marked his great and keen rival to the extent of 1,500 odd. This did not finish the "sensations," however, as an hour's play at night enabled Stevenson to peg back the leader to a 600 advantage again, but this was as far as he could get, and at "ten-twenty" Dawson found himself the winner of as great a game as we are likely to see in this generation.

The mere repetition of the figures fail to convey a tithe of the sensational episodes which occurred from day to day, in a game where skill was about equally matched, where superb break was answered by superb break, and where the finesse of the game was never more strikingly displayed. One word more on the last day's play, and I have done. In the two sessions play was in progress for four hours and thirty-five minutes altogether, yet a total of 3,482 was scored in that time, of which Dawson scored 1,881 and Stevenson 1,601. This pans out to an average of over 760 an hour—a remarkable rate of scoring for such a lengthened period. The respective averages for the whole match emphasise the indisputable fact that Dawson and Stevenson are still in a class by themselves. The averages were :—Dawson, 49·85 per innings; Stevenson, 42·60.

Chief interest in the tables published below is centred in the doings of Dawson and Stevenson—the only players seen out during the week—with especial reference to the great deeds accomplished in the big match just concluded. During the week, Dawson exceeded the first century on twenty occasions, the second on eight, and three times the third, which gave him the magnificent aggregate of 5,724. This brilliant work enables him to head his great friend and rival in the table, only, however, by decimal figures. The upward progress of Dawson in this table has been quite phenomenal. Averaging 27·00 in his first match, his second saw him jump to 47·51, and then he continued his advance to 51·73, and next to 53·22, till to-day he reaches the fine average of 55·49. Surely figures such as these should allay any anxiety as to whether Dawson is still the same brilliant artist he has been for years past.

Stevenson, who went through three sittings without crediting himself with a three-figure break—vide the early stages of the match at Thurston's—has done exceptionally fine "breaks" work. Passing the first century on a dozen occasions, he exceeded the second century four times, the third twice, and the same number of "forth-century" breaks—the latter consisting of a brilliant 410 on Tuesday evening, and a still more brilliant 493 on Wednesday, the latter being the highest break in town this season. Considering the total points he scored, his aggregate of 4,200 by the aid of "over-century" breaks, is exceptionally good. He, of course, slips down the "Results Table" but he may still be reckoned the holder of the premier position, as each of the players on the 100·00 mark have only contested one game, as against Stevenson's five. The tables are as follow :—

Polo.

THE NARAIN SINGH TOURNAMENT.

Opening Day.

THE Army Cup week started brilliantly on Monday afternoon, the 19th November, when there was a large and fashionable gathering on the Mahomed Bagh Club ground to witness the opening ties in the Narain Singh Polo Tournament. The United Service and Mahomed Bagh Clubs were "At Home" in a shamiana on the ground, and the band of the 8th Rajputs played.

Three games were set down for decision, but owing to the light failing the third had to be put off, till the following morning. Both teams in the opening game were splendidly mounted, but the Royal Dragoons "A," for whom Colonel de Lisle played, proved too strong for their opponents. The next game promised to be more level, but in the result the Oxfords defeated the Cawnpore team somewhat easily. Ten teams have entered for the tournament, including two teams from Cawnpore and Fyzabad.

ROYAL DRAGOONS "A" vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS "C."

First Chukker.—The Royals' "A" were able to obtain a commanding lead, scoring 2 goals 1 subsidiary, to 1 subsidiary by their opponents.

Second Chukker.—The exchanges were in favour of "A" team; "C" succeeded in putting up one subsidiary. Score : Royals "A," 2 goals 1 subsidiary; Royals "C," 2 subsidiaries.

Third Chukker.—This was a grand galloping bout. "A" team added three more subsidiaries. Score : Royals "A," 2 goals 4 subsidiaries; Royals "C," 2 subsidiaries.

Fourth Chukker.—"A" team continued on the offensive and made several attacks on their opponents' flags, resulting in an additional goal in their favour. Score : Royals "A," 3 goals 4 subsidiaries; Royals "B," 1 goal 2 subsidiaries.

Fifth Chukker.—"C" team scored a subsidiary from a penalty hit early on. "A" replied with a goal. Score : Royals "A," 4 goals 4 subsidiaries; Royals "C," 1 goal 3 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chukker.—Fast up and down play. No score. The Royal Dragoons "A" defeated Royal Dragoons "C" by 4 goals 4 subsidiaries to 1 goal 3 subsidiaries. Teams :—

Second Chukker.—Fast up and down play, which resulted in a subsidiary for the Durhams. Score : Durhams 1 goal 1 subsidiary to 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—Godman and Tomkinson played up finely for the Royals, who hit a goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The Royals had matters all their own way, obtaining 2 goals and 1 subsidiary to 1 subsidiary by the Durhams. Score : Royals 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries.

Fifth Chukker.—The Royals attacked repeatedly and scored 1 goal and 1 subsidiary.

Sixth Chukker.—The Royals continued to press, but the defence was good. They, however, succeeded in adding a goal to their score. The Royal Dragoons "B" defeated the Durham Light Infantry by 5 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries.

The Final.

The Final game in the Narain Singh Polo Tournament took place on Monday afternoon, the 26th instant, in the presence of a fair number of spectators, the two teams engaged being the Royal Dragoons "B." and the 2nd Bengal Lancers. The sides appeared well matched, but any expectations of a good game were early doomed to disappointment. The Royals, for whom Lieutenant Tomkinson and Captain Godman played a magnificent game, almost at once started scoring and at the conclusion of full time won by the wide margin of eight goals and three subsidiaries to two subsidiaries. The match, as the score shows, was the most one-sided of the whole tournament. The Lancers played well together for the first three Chukkers, but subsequently went to pieces; their feeble hitting and want of combination, as the game proceeded showing clearly that they were out-matched. At the close of the game Lady Loche Elliot presented the Challenge Cup to the Royals, who having won the trophy on three occasions, possess it outright. The tournament next year, owing to the death of Sirdar Narain Singh, the donor of the cup, will be reconstructed and will be played on a handicap basis, the teams being drawn from players belonging to the Recent Form List. Already two or three offers have been received to present a cup for competition. The tournament, it is needless to say has been an unqualified success.

Royal Dragoons B vs. 2nd Lancers.

First Chukker.—This was a fast and well-contested chukker, both teams playing up well. The Lancers at once attacked, but were unsuccessful in their numerous attempts to score, Capt. Godman then carried the ball to the other end and the Royals hit a goal. They again pressed and scored a subsidiary. For the rest of the chukker play was confined to the Lancers' end, but no further score resulted. Score: Royals, one goal and one subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—The Royals had the best of this chukker throughout. Tomkinson hit a goal from a long shot early on. The Royals made repeated attacks on the Lancers' flags, from which a subsidiary was signalled.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers opened with a subsidiary. The Royals then secured the ball and hit a goal. They continued to press, making a second goal from a shot by Tomkinson, while a subsidiary was added just before time. Score : Royals, 4 goals and 3 subsidiaries ; Lancers, 1 subsidiary.

Fourth Chukker.—Play continued in favour of the Royals, who made 2 goals in rapid succession. The Lancers' flags were in perpetual danger, but no further score resulted.

Fifth Chukker —The Royals hit a goal from a mêlée in front of the flags. Fast up and down play followed the Royals having the best of the exchanges. Just at the point of time another goal was signalled for the Royals, the ball hitting the goal post and rolling in.

Sixth Chukker.—The Lancers played up and scored a subsidiary. Play for the rest of the period was in the Royals' favour. The Royals won by 8 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 2 subsidiaries.

SUPERSTITIONS OF THE TURF.

ALTHOUGH the days of sorcery and witchcraft have, under the influence of ductional enlightenment, passed away, writes Ernest E. Smith in Baily's, superstition still stalks the land and the belief of what is contrary to reason, or without evidence, is common enough in city and hamlet town and village. The element of luck is carefully studied in all classes of the community and by both sexes, the weaker in particular. In the lower stratum of life woman indeed is often a fatalist, and certainly a greater fatalist than a man. Among the classes to whom theft is a duty and murder a diversion superstition flourishes like a rank weed. The deeper the ignorance and degeneration of the man, the more profound is his faith in the impossible. His destiny is bidden in a pack of greasy cards. With the woman of the same class a fortune teller is her undoubted oracle ; she reads destiny in the creaking of a door, or the tap of a beetle's head (which she calls the death watch). She clips her hair at every full moon, hoping thereby to increase its growth ; she cuts her finger-nails only on certain propitious days, and the howl of a dog at night throws her into a convulsion of fear. The man is a rudely constructed puzzle ; but the woman is an ingeniously elaborate paradox ; what is before her eyes she will not see, what she cannot see she looks for! Her prototype of the other sex will take off one of his shoes, and turn his coat inside out to change his luck at his game of cards or dominoes, and at the commencement of a fresh game he will walk three times round his chair or turn it thrice round, for the same purpose. Yes ; there is no lack of superstition abroad, even in England.

But if you were to ask a parson what he thought about it he would probably ridicule the idea that men who go to races are superstitious. But the parson would be wrong, for owners, trainers, backers, and may be officials also, have their superstitions ; indeed, the only class that need be marked with an asterisk as "doubtful" is the bookmaker.

Beyond a doubt the noble army of backers are the most superstitious of all Turfites. In their ranks are countless "cranks" who throw their money away over all sorts of absurd "systems." Backers who are systematically cautious in the way they bet, and who are sufficiently "in the know," no doubt in the long run find themselves winners, but there was never yet a "system" which was found to pay.

There was a backer who flourished for a considerable period, who swore by the number "13." But he did not necessarily back number 13 on the card, for when not so many horses were telegraphed on the number board he would count down and so up again until the thirteenth was reached, always counting the bottom horses twice, i.e., going down and returning. When a larger field than thirteen was announced, he would count to the thirteenth down and then to the thirteenths upwards, this giving him two horses, both of which he would back, and when it happened as, of course occasionally was the case, that number 13 came to the same horse, working down and up, that was an intimation from the Oracle that he might double his usual stake. And it must be acknowledged that this superstitious punter had a fair share of luck.

How often have we heard the remark, "Oh, So and So was the first jockey (or the first horse) I came across in the paddock, I must have a bit on him for luck!" This is one might say, a regular custom with some backers at Lincoln on the opening day of the season. They will have a sovereign on the mount of the first jockey they meet for the Lincolnshire Handicap, and a sovereign on the first horse they clap eyes on that is engaged in that race. Should the first horse they see prove the mount of the first jockey they have met after reaching old Lindum, surely this means a double-stake dash! Another punter religiously refrained from backing any horse about which he had a tip, and whenever a trainer informed him, upon inquiry, that "he did not fancy his," he would forthwith go and back it. And he frequently won at this latter resource.

The idea of following a certain number on the card is, of course, most absurd, yet scores go "broke" every meeting through this infatuation or asinine proclivity. These are, however, the veriest mugs, of very mugs whose presence on our racecourses could well be dispensed with.

There's luck or ill-luck in numbers, odd or even, according to taste, and mention just now of number 13 recalls to mind an "even" instance. When Joe Cannon was first training for Captain Machell he had a rooted objection to taking an odd number of horses to a meeting. It fell out, for the Goodwood Meeting of 1875, that he had a pretty large string to box. When the contingent was counted up there were thirteen. "I don't like that number," soliloquised Joe, "here, put Trappist in with them to make it up to fourteen, and if all the others get beaten perhaps he will pick up a race for us." Sure enough, Captain Prime's speedy horse came to the rescue of the stable and carried off the Stewards' Cup, which would certainly not have happened had not Joe made his string of "departures for Goodwood" up to "even."

It is a mania with many persons to come in contact with "cross-eyed" folks. These are the individuals who are as keen on touching the hump of a hunch back, as they are in the avoidance of passing beneath a ladder. One sometimes hears amongst racing people such an observation as "I sat in the train beside a humped-backed chap, or opposite to a cock-eye ; so I shall touch lucky to-day!"

Some there are, who, when partaking of poultry or game at dinner, religiously "pull the wish-bone" with their neighbours and then putting the two pieces side by side, exposing only the ends that are equal, the one draws from the other and he who secures the larger portion is supposed to gain his "wish," and in the case of a racing man it is easy to conceive that the wish invariably takes the shape of "may I back plenty of winners to-morrow!"

Equally with the hunchback, to rub against "a man of colour" is held by many to be a sign of good luck. It is on record that at one time a certain black man—of the original "friend and a brother" type—used to make a decent living in the West End by loafing in the vicinity of some of the chief clubs. Gamblers who had been having a bad time would hand him a "tip" to change their luck.

The crow is almost universally accepted as an omen of misfortune, that is, when the crow is unaccompanied by others of his tribe—

"One for sorrow,
Two for mirth,"

as the old saying goes.

And in this connection a recent "crow case" must here be quoted. On the last Two Thousand day, a backer, who had from the very first espoused the cause of Ninus, was interrogated in the Birdcage as to whether he remained as confident at the eleventh hour of Prince Soltykoff's colt winning the race.

"Great Scott, no!" came the reply. "A couple of hundred yards before I reached the paddock, a wretched crow dropped right in front of me, and although I searched all round, and even used my glasses, I could not spot a second crow. No, mark my words, Ninus will go down to-day! and this was said in such a serious manner that left no possible room to doubt the sincerity of the speaker's belief in what, after all, is an accepted token of bad luck by persons innumerable in every village throughout England.

Trainers have their prejudices as to colour, also to certain dates and days. A few believe that if their horses are tried, or even regularly exercised on Sunday, bad luck is bound to follow. It is narrated of one trainer, how he put in a separate pocket, a gold coin for each horse he boxed to go to a meeting. As they were about to pass through the gate into the paddock, he carefully turned these gold coins over. What is more, when on one occassion he brought a string of seven home without having won a single race, he attributed the bad luck to the fact that on the first day, something had occurred to distract his attention just at the moment they were entering the paddock, and as a consequence, he had forgotten to "turn 'em over!"

There are some owners who cannot be induced to go and see their horses tried for fear that it will bring them bad luck. On the other hand, some owners will not on any account permit their horses to be put through the mill unless they themselves are present, and should anything occur to prevent them getting to training quarters, their horse runs untried. Then there was a certain owner who would go miles in search of some one with a cross eye, either male or female, whom he would take with him to witness the trial gallop.

A piebald horse is supposed by very many simple-minded folks to bring luck, that is to say, always supposing that you do not catch sight of his tail. A grey horse, on the other hand, is generally reckoned an omen of the deadliest of ill-luck by the majority of regular backers. If there are few grey horses win races, it is by reason of the fact that there are but few grey horses in training. With an increase, however, in the number of grey horses now at the stud, it is quite on the cards that in a few more years a grey will be seen running every day. Whatever may be said in favour of "bonny bays," a maxim obtains in Suffolk, Norfolk and Cambridgeshire, that "there cannot be a bad brown"

In connection with backers it may be added that not only in France, but on Argentine racecourses, where Roman Catholics most do congregate, and even on the Californian tracks at Bay District and Ingleside, it is common enough for the punter to preface his investment by making the sign of the Cross on his forehead, chin and breast, while muttering a few brief prayers.

On the morning of Persimmon's Derby, Mr. Dorling enquired of the official in charge of the door near the weighing room "whether Mr. Marsh had his trousers turned up?" and receiving a reply in the affirmative remarked, "Oh, then, it is all right, the Prince's horse will win." It is a fact as to the accuracy of which the writer can testify, that on the morning of the last Derby the popular trainer in question had not turned his trousers up ; and—Dieudonne was beaten! But his companion came to the rescue of the stable. I wonder what the Epsom clerk of the course made of this.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. DALHOUSIE.—These teams met on Saturday, the C.C C. gaining a substantial victory by an innings and 108 runs. They took first knock and made 278 before the innings closed. Ballantyne and Manders scored first at the beginning of the game and put up 117 between them ; Jackson was also in fine form and was not out for a brilliantly compiled 67. Useful scores were contributed by Major Burlton and Bartholomew. Dalhousie made 80 in their fast innings, the bulk of which score came from the bat of R. Jackson, who also bowled with success. The Trades Club followed on and were all out for 90. In the first innings Ballantyne got 7 wickets for 37 runs, and Pope and Guise in the second 4 for 22, and 4 for 26 respectively S ore :—

GOLF IN CALCUTTA.

THE BOMBAY SILVER MEDAL.—This 8 holes competition occupied last Friday and Saturday, the trophy being presented by the Bombay Golf Club. There was a big entry which bore little comparison to the small number of cards handed in. The winner turned up in Mr. B. Sinclair, whose score of 80 was the best scratch effort. Mr. T. H. Ambrose was placed second, his liberal handicap of 14 bringing down his net total to 82. Mr. Munn played good golf for his 83 scratch and got third place. Scores :—

RANGOON GOLF CLUB.

THE Annual General Meeting was held at the Club House, Prome Road, on Friday evening, 16th November, and there was a good attendance of members.

The minutes of last Generel Meeting were read and confirmed.

The accounts for the year ended 31st October, 1906, were placed before the meeting showing the club to be in a flourishing state financially, a profit of Rs. 3,500 having been made after writing off Rs. 1,000 for depreciation on building and furniture. They were passed unanimously by the meeting on the proposal of Mr. A. A. Ure, seconded by Mr. J. C. Mackendrick.

The following office-bearers were elected for the season 1906-1907 :—

Captain :—Mr. G. Blackstock.
Honorary Secretary :—J. B. Orr.
Honorary Treasurer :—W. W. Nind.
Committee :—Messrs. J. M. Sime, S. Gordon Brown, J.W. Anderson, and J. Stuart Smith.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

9th November 1906.

GOD save the King! I believe I am correct in stating that for over 200 years no King of England has indulged in the Royal and Ancient Game, of course the Stuarts did in a desultory way, to prevent ennui and to fill up gaps in their monotonous existence!! but there is no record of courses laid out under their supervision or of their playing in foursomes when visiting at some honoured subject's country seat, and so again on the anniversary of the birthday of King Edward VII. our golfing sovereign, we re-iterate "God save His Majesty!" And this date is not only made a red letter day on his Royal account, but the fog and gloom of the 9th November is enlivened by the time-honoured custom of the Lord Mayor's procession through the muddy dirty streets of the metropolis. Each year something new adds interest and colour to the arrangement and surely in time a team of red coated, club-armed, golfers will make a brilliant patch representing an industry (can we call it?) which has become so great a factor in the British Isles and kingdom and so we greet, make obeisance and take leave of His Majesty and of the Lord Mayor.

* * * *

Never has there been such a boom in new courses as in 1906 and still apparently there are sufficient golfers to fill the members' lists and to congest the green : the latest to be opened was at Horsham in Sussex, this is as yet only 9 holes, and contrary to the now prevailing custom the opening ceremony was performed by two leading amateurs instead of by two or more of the well-known professionals. The two gentlemen who had the honour (N.B.—One only had the tee honour) were Mr. Horace Hutchinson (the first amateur champion, 1886 and 1887) and Mr. S. Mure-Fergusson, so well known in golfing circles and the present holder of the Royal St. George's Grand Challenge Cup; and these two old friends and old foes played an 18-hole match in the morning and took the prominent parts in a foursome in the afternoon. Mr. Hutchinson displayed far steadier form than his opponent who was frequently in trouble from his somewhat wild long game, and although the golf on neither side was really first class the score by Mr. Hutchinson may be interesting to many who follow the game on links and on paper.

Out—5, 5, 5, 5, 5, 3, 5, 4, 4=41. In—5, 5, 5, 4, 4, 3, 5, 4, 4=39. The foursome in the afternoon was composed of Mr. Hutchinson and Dr. Juckes, who were defeated by 1 hole by Mr. Fergusson and Mr. C. J. Lucas (President of the Club).

* * * * *

Whilst on the subject of new courses (we cannot call them links for they are all inland), mention should be made of the excellent progress of the new course at Mitcham, where the Tooting Bec Club resorted when compelled to leave their old quarters at Furzedown. The first Ordinary General Meeting has been held to report as to the condition of the ground and prospects were entirely satisfactory and play is to begin over the course almost immediately, after which given ordinary "decent" weather, rapid strides should be made in the right direction which ends in perfection of greens and lies. Then, too, in addition to these is a scheme to lay out a rival to Huntercombe on some excellent golfing land about a mile from Henley-on-Thames; at present popular as Huntercombe undoubtedly is, the motor drive of 8 miles (all collar work too) is considered by many a very great drawback, and adds considerably to the already by no means trivial expense of a day's golf and finally Jack Morris, the Hoylake Professional, has been prospecting some likely land at Llangollen; over 50 acres are available and if the scheme bears fruit a very fine course can be made for the good folk of Denbighshire.

* * * * *

Who knows Maidenhead? rather should one say what amphibious male or female does not know and love this delightful spot on Father Thames. The 18-hole course is not to be despised by any manner of means; it is long, well kept, and the club well managed. On 3rd instant James Braid and J. H Taylor were subpœnaed to play an exhibition match for a purse well lined by members of the club. Not often has a contest between two such evenly matched opponents assumed so one-sided an aspect, for big Jamie was 9 up and 7 to go, on the 36 holes; he played very fine golf from start to finish, whereas the Mid-Surrey man had bad luck in the morning the game was closely contested, at the third hole Taylor having his first slice of bad luck, but the round ended in Braid's favour by 2 up, he having been round in 72 to Taylor's 74 made up as below :—

Braid : First round—Out—5, 4, 4, 4, 4, 3, 4, 4, 4=36. In—4, 4, 4, 3, 3, 4, 4, 6, 4,=36=72.

Braid : Second round—Out—4, 5, 4, 4, 4, 3, 4, 4, 4=36 In—4, 4, 4, 3, 4, 3, 4, 5, 4,=35=71.

Taylor : First round—Out—4, 5, 4, 4, 4, 3, 5, 4, 5=38. In—4, 5, 4, 3, 3, 4, 4, 5, 4. 36=74.

Taylor : Second round—Out—5, 6, 5, 4, 5, 4, 4, 5, 4=42. In—4, 5, 4 3, 2, 4, 4, 5, 3=34=76.

It will be seen that despite his big beating Taylor's round would scarcely be despised by any first-class player, and that his coming in 9 holes in 34 were the best possible form, but 74+76 is not good enough to win from the open champion when he is set, and so the great match at Maidenhead ended 2 up and 7 to play, the bye going on the last green to Taylor by 1 up.

Stock exchange men mustered in sufficiently large numbers to make matters interesting; in holiday attire at Sunningdale on 1st November one of the four recognized holiday of the "House" there under the auspices of their Golfing Society they held a 36 holes scratch competition. Two of the most fancied were amongst the earliest to start, these being R. Harris and S. H. Fry, both former holders of the coveted St. George's Challenge Cup, and both were in excellent form as too might be remarked, in parenthesis, was the course. At the end of the first 18 holes Mr. Harris led the whole field by 2 strokes, his 74 being composed thus : Out—4, 5, 5, 3, 4, 4, 3, 3, 3=34. Home—5, 5, 4, 4, 4, 4, 5, 5, 4=40=74, whilst Mr. Fry 2 strokes worse were 37 out and 39 home=76. In the afternoon, however, Mr. Harris included 3 sixes and a 7 which give him a total of 81, whereas Mr. Fry compiled another score in the seventies and brought his aggregate out one stroke better than Mr. Harris an excellent 154. Other returns were : S. Mure-Fergusson 155, P. G. Bishop 160, Horace G. Castle 161, R. H. Mitchell 161, W. W. Kerr, 161, A. S. Read 162. W. Brander, junior 162, W. Carr 163, M. W. Mossop 163, J E. Read 164, etc., etc.

* * * * *

The death of Mr. D. D. Whigham has just occurred at the good old age of 74; the name has for many years been prominently before the golfing world, not only because he himself was a keen and good player, but also because his children of both sexes have demonstrated their superiority on many occasions; the two sisters, Sibyl and Mollie, are among the finest lady players in the United Kingdom, and although want of nerve was the reason they neither of them ever brought off the big event, still their play always evoked the greatest enthusiasm and admiration from those who really recognize and understand what good golf is. Mr. Whigham joined the Prestwick Club in 1860, he became a member of the Royal and Ancient in 1857, and was the oldest playing member of the "Honourable Company" to which he was elected in the same year (1857). Mr. Whigham was Captain of this same "Company" in 1884 and 1885 and of Prestwick as far back as 1892, he was a great authority on all points of the game and his loss will be keenly felt by golfers of the old school and of the new, both North and South of the Border; for, however densely presses the throng of young players the veterans are still recognized as the true axles on which the world of golf revolves.

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINALS.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. CONNAUGHT RANGERS.—A great game was witnessed between these teams on the 19th instant. Fast play, in which the Scots had rather the best of the exchanges, characterised the match. The Rangers defended well and extra time had to be played before a decision was arrived at. The first period was devoid of score, but on changing ends the Rangers drew first blood. It was some time before the Scots managed to equalise, many shots being sent in before the Irish goalkeeper was beaten. Time arrived with a goal to each team. But in the extra allowance Hogan and Collins scored goals for the Scots who thus won by three goals to one.

A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS vs. LEICESTERS.—The first meeting of these teams ended in a pointless draw, but when the game was replayed on the 20th the Highlanders came out victorious after a stout struggle. Play was fast and up and down throughout and several corners accrued, none of which were turned to account.

The first half produced no score, but soon after resuming the Highlanders pressed hard and Lieutenant Kennedy opened the scoring, Private Faulds netting a second goal shortly after. The Leicesters tried hard to get level but without success, and the Highlanders thus won by two goals to nil.

FINAL.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS.—The final game was played on the 22nd instant, in the presence of a big crowd of spectators, an excellent game being witnessed. The Royals assumed the aggressive at the start and were not long in putting on their first goal, scored from a penalty. Fast play followed and the Highlanders were several times dangerous ut could not score. Just before the interval the Royals netted the ball a second time. On changing ends the 93rd made great efforts to get through but were driven back and the Royals obtained their third point, which they followed up with a fourth shortly after. The Highlanders did not relax their efforts and were at length rewarded with a goal; but they were unable to score again and the Royals thus won the game and the tournament by four goals to one. Major-General Richardson presented the cup to the winners at the close. Results :—

THE SOUTHERN INDIA HOCKEY TOURNAMENT.

BANGALORE, 24th November.

THE Southern India Hockey Tournament which has just been concluded in this station has resulted in a well deserved win for the 61st Pioneers. Two matches were played in Secunderabad, where the winners of the tournament beat the 2nd (Q.O.) Rajput L.I., and the 97th Deccan Infantry. From this point play was transferred to Bangalore, where five teams were assembled to fight out the remainder of the tournament, these being the 61st Pioneers, the 64th Pioneers from Ootacamund, the 83rd Wallajabad L. I. from Bellary and two local teams, the 2nd (Q.O.) Sappers and Miners and the 30th Lancers (Gordon's Horse). The details of the four matches played in Bangalore may be briefly described as follows :—

61ST PIONEERS vs. 2ND (Q.O.) SAPPERS AND MINERS.—A real good game in which the Sappers played up with much energy and a considerable amount of science. However the Pioneers were always the cleverer side. They led by two goals at half time, Mr. Manson, who has skippered the side for several years, and Asadulla Sayeed being responsible for the points. Subsequently the Pioneers continued to have the best of the play and they eventually won by 4 goals to 1, the Sappers' goal being scored by Captain White who was brilliant throughout at centre forward and more than once experienced hard lines. A good and fast game, in which the Sappers, albeit the weaker team had by no means the best of the luck.

30TH LANCERS vs. 64TH PIONEERS.—Played on the 20th instant and won by the 64th by 4 goals to nil. Not so good a game as the preceding one, but still a fast and strenuous one. Gordon's Horse would be very good if they were properly taught; they are fast, and quick on the ball, but at present they show very little combination. The Pioneers were the winning side from start to finish, held a lead of 3 goals at half-time and scored another afterwards without greatly distressing themselves. Marsden, Hemsley and Harvey-Kelly worked hard and well for the winners throughout, the Lancers as already remarked were energetic and fast, but unscientific in their methods.

61ST PIONEERS vs. 83RD WALLAJABAD L. I.—The Wallajabad Light Infantry fairly made the Pioneers gallop up to half-time when they were only a goal to the bad, and that the result of a counter bully in which Manson—naturally—beat the Wallajabad Light Infantry custodian. But after half-time the superior training of the Pioneers told rapidly and they eventually won by 6 goals to 1, Manson scoring four with his own stick. The men from Bellary could not last the pace, or they would have given a very much better account of themselves, for they played a good, combined game. They will probably do better next year, when the final matches in the tournaments will be played at Secunderabad.

THE FINAL.

61ST PIONEERS vs. 64TH PIONEERS.—The two Pioneer regiments knew each other's play well, having met in friendly games in Ootacamund and the 61st were hot favourites. But the 64th put up a real good fight, and were only beaten by a single goal, scored by Manson after a characteristic run. Marsden for the losers was apparently ubiquitous at centre-half and Harvey-Kelly also played a sound defensive game at back. But the wings of the 61st again and again outplayed their opponents and it was only stubborn defence that prevented the winners' score from being larger. A special word must be said for M. Anthony, the losers' goal-keeper, who saved in most brilliant fashion again and again.

After the final match Mrs. Scallon kindly presented the cup to the winners, and General Scallon, in a few well-chosen words laid stress on the fact that they had never drawn a bye, but had fought their way right through the tournament, the final being the fifth match that they had played.

General Scallon also spoke with emphasis concerning the excellent effect which the keenness with regard to hockey was having on native regiments in general and cheers for General and Mrs. Scallon, and the winners and runners-up, brought a successful tournament to a close.

The teams in the final were composed as follows :—

64TH PIONEERS.—M. Anthony, goal; Lieutenant Harvey Kelly, Chinapa, back; Kathia, Lieutenant Marsden, Audi, half backs; Ahmmed Hossain, Bugler Forbes, Lieutenant Hemsley L. Anthony, Narrainswamy, forwards; Mr. J. G. Tait and Lieutenant Cooper, Essex Regiment, Umpires.

CANINE EDUCATION.

II.

TRAINING and breaking, the terms in common use to denote the education of the dog, are both misleading in their implication since, first, they differ from the terms which are used to denote the acquiring of an education; and, second, because the terms, up to within a not very distant period of time, were associated with a more or less violent manner of treating the dog under the name of training him, so that the schooling of the dog was generally considered as something apart from all other schooling. The whip or boot or gun was considered the direct medium for instilling knowledge and obedience.

Many of the old-time trainers were also market shooters, both occupations being followed to secure the desired profit. An old, trained dog was relied upon for steady work to the gun, thus assisting the shooting, while the young dog was permitted to fit in as unimportant opportunity offered; that is to say, such opportunity as would not interfere with the shooting. The green dog, if he did not assist the older dog, at all events must not obstruct him nor spoil a shot for that was a material loss. The quickest way to correct faulty doings, under the old system, was to soundly thrash the puppy. If he flushed, it made him wary of flushing; if he chased, or refused to obey, or did not know how to obey, or went in the wrong place, or went too fast, punishment was in order, and if that did not intimidate him or check his ardor with the desired promptness, a charge of bird shot was considered as being most efficacious.

The market-shooter and old-fashioned trainer bawled his orders out in a loud, harsh voice, gave labored signals, and when not shouting orders he was blowing his whistle, so that all the birds in the vicinity could not fail to know there was a dangerous, fearsome party near at hand. The puppy, if he heeded all that was said and signalled to him, had little time for anything in the way of learning about birds. What he learned was mostly what he could pick up from his own observation, compromising as well as he could with the unfavorable conditions and obstructions set up by his trainer. If his ardent perseverance was so great as to withstand his trainer's ignorance, ill-temper and harsh treatment, he in time might develop into a fairly efficient assistant to the gun, though in most instances there was a lack of finish in the different details, such as mouthing the bird when retrieving it or retrieving it but part way, or backing imperfectly, or breaking shot etc.

The pursuit of prey is the dog's greatest pleasure. He will steal away from home to self-hunt, or hunt with boys, or with vagrant dogs, the duration of his absence being at times limited by the degree of fatigue he suffers; at others, by the degree of hunger; at others again, by the degree of physical endurance and hunger combined. Sometimes he may be absent a few hours; sometimes several days, returning much reduced in flesh, and worn, wearied and famished. He will leave his master to go with a stranger who carries a gun, and if he be the rare exception which will not do so at once, he readily strikes up a friendship and can soon be induced to go with the stranger. The report of a gun in the distance will often cause him to bolt from his master to the gun, that he may join in the sport. In the pursuit itself he will plod cheerfully through mud or snow; swim in cold water; work through brush and briars; gallop bravely in the open, eager to find and capture, never satiated with success; and desisting only because physical exhaustion intervenes. When from hard work he is too footsore and stiff in the morning to take an interest in his breakfast, his spirits rise at sight of the gun and the start for the fields, and he works away till the stiffness and soreness disappear or force him to quit.

There are exceptions to this, for there are dogs which are indolent, or too weak to accomplish what they endeavour to, or dogs in which the hunting instinct is absent. They, however, are so few that they are not worth considering in the matter of education, and when one comes across them they are not worth the trouble of training.

Thus there is in the dog all the hunting propensity that is necessary for the trainer to work upon, sometimes more than is necessary. All the natural qualities are born in the dog. He, on opportunity, develops them himself to a higher degree of practical usefulness through his own experience and effort than he could from the efforts of any trainer. He learns to follow the trail quickly and with precision, to recognize the foot scent and body scent, and the near proximity of the birds and the best method of capturing them. He distinguishes the likely places which serve as their haunts from the places which they avoid. When they are flushed he learns to mark their flight, the probable length of it, and how to find them again.

To learn all these, the dog must have the opportunities to do so. Given the opportunities he learns the different details with more or less quickness, according to his capacity to learn, for dogs vary in their ability to learn quite as much as men do. The teacher can do but little more in the dog's natural development than to provide the opportunities afield. The dog cannot take advantage of his opportunities afield if he is constantly balked, punished, called to or kept in check. He must have his fling for awhile in order to learn methods of pursuit, and to develop his ardour.

Dogs which are permited to self-hunt, acquire great skill in the application of methods, and exhibit intelligence to an astonishing degree. To develop the dog's hunting powers to the utmost should be the purpose of the trainer, and next to so school him that he applies his powers in the interest of the gun. The puppy will make many mistakes, but they are inseparable from his education. When committed, they serve to point out what is right as well as what is wrong.

Too often the amateur begins the subjugation first and makes it paramount to all other considerations. Every effort of the dog is governed rigidly by what the trainer considers the correct form of work to the gun. Instead of permitting the puppy's powers to develop, and then schooling him to devote them to the gun, he is schooled to the gun, and then permitted to develop as he best can, often a disastrous method, as many times the teacher then so dominates his pupil that the latter from habit looks to him for orders on every occasion, and is without self-confidence or independence. Many good dogs are spoiled by such hasty and severe training before they are given any liberty afield. Without the ability and inclination to hunt, the dog is worthless for field purposes. If restained too much the result may be that he loses all inclination to search for birds. If the dog will not hunt, the teacher is powerless in the matter. He is passive so far as the dog's hunting inclinations are concerned; he can be active only in shaping up and schooling such efforts as the dog will put forth.

It is now clear that if the teacher checks the the dog's efforts or intimidates him so that all his effort ceases, the training is accordingly either marred or ended.

But the dog's natural fondness for the pursuit of birds and his enthusiasm in his efforts to capture them are so great that he generally submits to much punishment associated with them and his teacher before he desists from hunting. If he becomes afraid of his trainer, he then is so intimidated that he dare not venture on any independent action of his own. But let him have opportunity to go afield with someone else—the cause of his fears then being absent—he resumes hunting with his native enthusiasm and diligence.

The loud and incessant ordering and blowing of the whistle, with or without cause, are faults also quite common to the amateur and latter-day trainer. Nearly all trainers are self-aught, or at least have no one to point their faults to them so that bad habits of method and manner acquired in the beginning often stay with them throughout life. Under such circumstances they are quite unconscious of their unpleasant manner, one very annoying when shooting with one or more companions, and at all times a great handicap to the dog in his work, since the voice or whistle often flushes birds, and if in proximity to the dog at the time he is blamed for it when he is really blameless. The trainer, however, is so intent on securing obedience and is so habituated to associating his loud orders with the control of the dog that he seldom considers them in any other connection.

It is easy to train a dog to obedience to quiet tones of the voice and gentle signals, and infinitely better to handle him afield in that manner than in one of noise and violence, apart from all considerations of ease and elegance.

The Horse.

ON COLOURS IN HORSES.

IT is curious that while every horse-owner confesses to a prejudice in favour of certain colours in horses, and many carry their fancy so far as to limit their stables to representatives of two, or only one colour, very little attempt has been made to formulate a theory with regard to colour as a definite characteristic. Perhaps the subject has seemed too trivial for serious consideration, but yet it is hardly too strong a phrase to call colour a characteristic, for it is at least the outward expression of one, and seems to be a reliable guide, within certain limits, to temperament and constitution.

Some years of observation have confirmed my own impression, individual and adopted—at least those posterior to a child's extravagant admiration of circus or horse guard's beauty—and I do not remember, after an early date having founded my liking on anything less solid than experience. Even the choice of seaside donkeys, according to my recollection founded on the colour of the asinine coat, was justified by the result. I do not, however, claim to advance any theory of colour, nor desire to convert the dissentient, but only propose to jot down impressions that may or may not appeal to the reader as truths. In more than one I find myself confirmed by the agreement with me of an old steeplechase jockey, the son of a posting-house-keeper (himself a rider on the flat), and veterinary expert. Both father and son were faddists with regard to colour in horses.

Shakespeare—who probably had the knowledge regarding horses that is conspicuous in his few remarks on hounds and hawks, and that he even betrays with respect to the domestic fowl—hardly mentions the noble animal, except in a military connexion. His chargers, so far as I find them, are of only two colours, the weight-carrying roan and chestnut. This is supposing, as I do, that Richard's fated Surrey is of that kingly colour, white roan, for one reading of the phrase in which he orders his use for Bosworth fight gives "white Sorrel" in place of "Surrey." Hotspur's horse, twice named, is a crop-eared roan, and so is Richard the Second's favourite, Barbary, that his groom grudges to Bolingbroke's use in the time of his master's humiliation. The only bit of horsey talk to be found in the plays is that between the Dauphin, the Duke of Orleans, and the Constable, before Agincourt, where the heir of France vaunts the merits of his "nutmeg" coloured horse as "a horse indeed," one never still except when his owner prepares to mount him. This nutmeg horse with the "heat of ginger" is presumably a dark chestnut. "I once writ a sonnet in his praise," says the Dauphin, and his courtier companions echo his sentiments of appreciation. The horse referred to, however, was something lighter than the heavy war-horse of the period; his owner calls him a palfrey.

Romantic fiction has a fashion in colours, and it is curious to notice that the older generations, contemporary with road travelling, are more penetrating in their selection of colour than later ones, with whom a practical knowledge of horse-flesh is limited to the minority. The romanticist of the last and the early part of the present century mounted his hero, whose horse was required to combine super-equine strength and speed with docility and an almost impossible intelligence, on a black steed, and thereby did wisely, that colour, if uncommon, being rarely found apart from courage and sympathy with man. Scott, who was a sportsman, lends that colour to Redgauntlet's horse, who carries double in the escape from the on-rush of the Solway tide, and G. P. R. James and Ainsworth affect black for their highwaymen, necromancers, and thrice-noble heroes, and so partly justify extravagant feats. I recall one headlong gallop down Malvern Hill, followed by a large course over the plain, and terminating in a leap over a park wall, in one of James's books, that I do not, after a length of time, identify; but the princely Katerfelto of the incident rode a black horse and brought him to his stable fit to begin again. The characteristics of a "coal-black" horse are, as I think, mettle without excitability; strength and sweetness of temper that is not allied to indolence. It is one of the true desert colours, like white, which Scott uses for the Sultan's charger of parade in the Talisman, comformably to Eastern tradition.

If the rescue of Darsey Latimer had ended at the Downs, Scott might have employed a roan horse for the duty, but he was mindful of the rapid descent into the border "den" that concludes the race. Roans, one must premise, are of two widely differing shades, but either alike is rarely wanting in power and never in bone. Action, as a rule, is superior in the red or sorrel roan, but one may safely look for constitution and endurance. A roan, if not outpaced, is a stayer without sluggishness and good-tempered in his work and stable. The blue roan seems to run more to substance than his red brother, who, again, may be differentiated with a white roan (sometimes rather incorrectly called a silver-grey), the most charming of servants, who adds vivacity and a superior order of intelligence to the merits of his foundation colour, but I fancy somewhat at the expense of constitution. A white roan may be, what is rare with the darker shades, a fast horse.

Modern fiction—and Whyte Melville may have been the inspirer of many authors, who know nothing of what he knew much—affects that misapprehended colour, the chestnut. Following in his wake, the novelist of to-day makes that hue a sine qua non with any horse who has to win a steeplechase, bolt with an Amazon, or curvert beneath a lady-killing guradsman. There are, however, varieties of the colour, so that the benefit of the doubt as to probability may be given to the ladies and gentlemen who seat their heroic riders on the unfailing chestnut to their destruction or unending reputation. For the horse may be the best of his kind—a liver chestnut, with shape, substance, courage and impatience that stop short of excitement an impetuous goer, but not a blind one. He may, again, be the full golden chestnut, to which shape is rarely denied, but in which the eagerness is allied to excitability, and whose "free lathering" often means energy expended before it is called for. The golden chestnut, delight of park grooms, is an attractive but hardly a reliable companion. In measure as the deepness of his colour fades, so do the chestnut's good qualities. The pale chestnut combines unwillingness, with untrustworthiness, is a slug, a shier, and—a tumbler-down. The mealy chestnut may be left to the butcher or the carrier, he is almost invariably, whatever his stamp, a weed. Why the chestnut qua chestnut (again I except the liver shade), should be a stumbler, is a question that seems only to admit of one, and that an incomplete solution; the fact remains as a rule, though a fine shoulder or long pasterns can be found to show the exception. "Never," a job-master, whose experience ranged over forty years, and some thousands of horses, repeated constantly, "never use chestnuts on the road; the field is their place. Taking them all round, you won't easily beat them as hunters, but keep them off the road and out of harness." This dictum of half a century back touches the posting era, and, brought down to the present day, is borne out by common experience; a chestnut used regularly in harness is rarely unblemished. The one solution I would suggest rests on what appears to be a fact, however difficult of comprehension, namely, that a large proportion of chestnuts have their forelegs "set too far under them"—the ordinary phrase, however, unscientific, best expresses a defect common to the colour.

This very objection applies, but in a less degree, to greys, and the frequent deficiency in horses of that colour in bone below the knee may account for it; but there is a considerable difference in constitution between black and white-skinned greys, and the inferior white-skinned horse, who is often delicate, may be chiefly the delinquent, and weakness, especially seasonably weakness, a concomitant cause. Grey horses are rarely defective in the forehand.

Grooms and livery-stable keepers may naturally object to white horses, amongst which greys are included, but the objection should not go beyond them; such an objection is literally skin deep. A grey horse with a black skin—a fleabitten grey specially—is hard and wiry, without the lightness of bone that sometimes discounts wiriness. Grey horses, as a rule, are fully worth their price, for they are notoriously long lived, and are mostly sound in constitution. White horses are mostly patient in temper, enduring, willing, and therefore handy, and, typically at least, not slow. A pink-skinned, pink-nosed grey seems to be softer, but possesses the patience and reasonableness of his colour in a high degree, and is eminently fitted for purposes of parade, for which tradition has selected him. Piebald, the union of white with black, seems to clothe a tractable and intelligent nature that combines something of the attributes of both, but it is too rare a colour for common observation to go far with regard to it. Piebald horses seem to be superior in bone to skewbalds, a colour that the eye associates, with lightness of frame, as the mind does, on perhaps inadequate grounds, with that localised form of intelligence that is the best material for trick training.

Bays vary with the shade to almost as great an extent as chestnuts. A bright bay with black points can hardly be found to belie the "good blood that cannot lie," of which moreover he is bound to possess some crimson drops. His general characteristics are ready courage and will. He is generous, but temperate with his generosity, a horse to ride, given sense and perception, for your life. The full bay may be taken as the standard of his colour. He is good of his class, whatever it is, all round, but not superlative, every one's horse, with rather more than the average of intelligence and constitution, and bay is happily, upon the whole, the commonest colour.

A dark brown horse may well be avoided unless the combination is sought for of something that alike will never go and go for ever. It is his character. A dark brown horse has too commonly a tan muzzle, and light points, are a token of cowardice or want of heart. A dark brown, ridden with a knotted lash, may be roused to the action his shape suggests but against which his heart commonly revolts, and his rider, working equally hard with his mount, may get his full pace out of him. The rôle of the dark brown roadster is five miles an hour for thirty years. But he is "unkind" in his work, and if his unwillingness to go makes him indirectly safe in inexperienced hands, his stubbornness, often the outward expression of fear, is a dangerous quality in case of accident. Brown, however, must not be confused with dark bay, to which he is, broadly speaking, as inferior as the dark is to the full or the golden bay. Neither is he to be mistaken for the "be or black," who may be classed far below the ideal of his colour, but who has not the sluggishness of brown. A black with light points is rarely found, and is sometimes called a black chestnut. He is, I think, invariably a cur. The four last-named shades are not easy to define, but are sufficiently distinct to careful observation.

Cream-coloured horses seem to share the characteristics of white, and a dun horse or pony is rarely a bad one, but both are too rare to generalise upon. The ginger chestnut of northern race is not to be confused with cream.

It only remains to observe that any considerable addition of white in the form of blazes, stockings, or patches seems to have the effect claimed for art upon the human race, "to soften the manner and to render less ferocious." But the reason is not apparent. Still less easy of justification is the west-country rhyme about white legs, which claims increasing merit for the horse in proportion to their number, until one with the full complement of four is stamped as a family friend, to live and die with his owner; and yet I believe the rhyme is practically correct.

It is perhaps worth while remarking as a suitable conclusion to these fugitive hints on colour that animals themselves notice and are influenced by it. It is a fact commonly to be observed among dogs that is true in a minor degree with horses, whom I have known make mistakes in recognition when trusting to colour which seems a curious lapse of instinct. One guesses the prejudices, whether favourable or hostile, to be hereditary, for association does not in all cases account for it.

THE SOUTH AMERICAN OSTRICH.

THE American Ostrich is the largest bird of the New World and is the sole survivor there of a group of birds which were very abundant in post tertiary times. Some of these still survive, as the ostrich, the emu, the apteryx and others; but others, like the giant moas of Australasia, have become extinct.

The South American ostrich of which there are two species, is found distributed over the vast plains that extend from the southern tributaries of the Amazon southward as far as Patagonia. Of these two forms the smaller is the more southern, while the entire pampa proper of the Argentina, the larger south-eastern half of Brazil, the eastern portion of Paraguay and the whole of the Banda Oriental of Uruguay is the range of the larger and more northern bird. This species is peculiarly a bird of the plains and avoids alike the forest and abrupt hills or high mountains. He prefers the thickets of the high prairie and the little islands of underbrush which are found here and there over these great prairies.

This ostrich is a bird of the warm temperate zone, and diminishes in numbers as the equator is approached. Throughout all his range the species is found in moderate numbers, being the most abundant where food is plenty. During the breeding season the male lives with from three to seven hens, occupying a range of his own and defending it against any intruder. During the remainder of the year old and young keep together in loose herds of fifty or more individuals, which may be broken up and scattered by any accident such as a night surprise, a storm, or even an intervening rise of ground, while they are feeding, and the stragglers join with the first feeding herd that they may encounter. Notwithstanding this fact, they appear to be attached to a particular range, and a crippled specimen, known by his wing, which had healed imperfectly, was found always within a few miles of a certain point by my men, and I often saw it myself.

The most striking characteristic of the ostrich, and one which has passed into a proverb, is his never-failing appetite. They seem to be eating all the time. In spring the food consists largely of fresh green clover and the insects of the prairie, but his mainstay and daily bread consists of grasses and unripe flower buds, together with such berries and insects as it can pick up. They do not appear to feed upon the dry and ripe seed of many grasses, nor do they touch grain at any time. They very rarely drink.

It is in spring, which of course in the southern hemisphere begins in the month of October, that the ostrich is seen at his best. It is then that his plumage is brightest, his deportment statelicst, and it is then that he utters at short intervals the sonorous guttural cry which gives him his popular name, Nandû. This is a call to his mate, but is also a challenge, an invitation, a warning, and an encouragement all in one. "This never missed its effect upon myself when camped out, with nothing to keep me company for perhaps a hundred miles except my horses and dogs. I heard its long-drawn ring vibrate through the starry night. It was the re-assuring manifestation of life and peace at the same time amid the overwhelming solitude and stillness. As long as this sound reverberates you are safe from every surprise. You will hear it even in your sleep and only when it ceases then you wake up with a start. The horses interiupt their cropping and listen, and the dogs take in the wind to ascertain what it can be. Of all watchful pampa creatures the ostrich is the most vigilant."

Like all the other higher animals of the country they inhabit, wild or tame the ostrich enjoys a siesta at noon during the summer; but to make up for this lost time it feeds for three or four hours during the night. In winter the birds rise and go to sleep with the sun.

The first eggs laid by a family of ostriches are dropped here and there on the praire early in December, but after a while the male bird scratches out a shallow hollow on some dry place, often choosing a wallow dug out by the rolling cattle and here the eggs are laid, the number being from seven to twenty-three. Other eggs are laid outside the nest, for what purpose is not known. It has been stated that those were for the newly hatched bird to feed on but this is not the fact, for these young birds, from their second day on feed upon grass blades and insects. Incubation is performed by the male, who turns the eggs over every day. He sits on them all through the night and in the morning until the dew has left the grass when he leaves them for a time to; feed. This absence is sometimes more or less prolonged, and on one occasion I observed a male feeding for four hours before returning to the nest, and all of the eggs hatched. When the work of incubation begins the bird is timid and likely to steal away at the merest suspicion of danger, but later on he sits much more close and often springs up only when nearly approached. For a little while he will make as if he were about to attack his disturber, but thinking better of it, makes off feigning to be injured and trying to induce pursuit. The nests are sometimes attacked by foxes, opossums, lizards and snakes, but the old bird is said to defend the nest against these creatures if they approach when he is near.

The young are usually hatched about the beginning of January after six weeks' incubation. At two weeks old they stand about 1½ft high and are very pretty in their striped livery of yellow and brown. When a few days out of the shell they cannot be overtaken by a man on foot, but earlier they are often caught; yet there is always danger of killing instead of catching them since when nearly overtaken they are likely suddenly to crouch flat on the ground and may easily be stepped on. When in this position they are recognized only with difficulty, so closely do they resemble the ground on which they lie. For the first few weeks these young birds follow their father about alone, but gradually they are joined by the females, which have hitherto apparently taken no interest in the young family. In fall, that it is in April and May, the downy coat of the young has been changed for one of feathers, which, however, are not of the same grey colour as the plumage of the adult female. At this season the families leave the thicket and move out into the open prairie to avoid the attacks of the larger cats, like the jaguar and the puma which prey upon them. On the whole, however, the ostrich has few enemies except man. Sometimes they may be run down by wolves or captured by one of the big cats, or now and then young ones may serve as a meal for eagle, fox or boa. The pampa fires no doubt destroy more ostriches than all other causes put together.

The damage done by the ostrich is confined to the little clover that it eats, or the rare occasions when it interferes with some cultivated crop. On the other hand, the bird destroys great numbers of noxious insects, and vast quantities of injurious plants while they are green. It is a useful rather than a noxious bird.

The Story Teller.

"SAFE 'UNS" WHICH WON.

MY readers generally will perfectly understand what is implied by the term "safe 'uns." For the benefit, however, of the unsophisticated, I may explain that it is applied to horses—and sometimes to men also—who, for some reason, are supposed to have no chance of winning the contests they are engaged in. Therefore the few who are the fortunate possessors of this information think themselves at liberty to lay against them as far as they possibly can. I have known men—a sort of wholesale merchants in the "dead meat market," as it has been called—who have amassed considerable fortunes in this business, upon which they have lived at ease in honourable retirement for many years. Whatever squeamish people may say, there is no doubt about it being a very profitable business, especially when it comes off all right. I have in my mind at the present moment a case where a dear friend of mine made a little fortune in one transaction of this kind. At times I am tempted to tell the particulars of that little transaction, and if I ever feel unable longer to resist the temptation I promise my readers a sensational story.

That "safe 'un" was one of the right sort. It was one which didn't win; in fact, it didn't even run.

But in this paper I am concerned only with quite another sort of "safe 'uns," for it happens, unfortunately, that

"The best laid schemes o' mice o' men, Gang aft agley."

And I have known clever men come to grief through knowing too much, for laying against safe 'uns has not always been attended with the happy results I have referred to.

It is more than thirty years ago since I made my first visit to Chesterfield Race course; and so little was I satisfied with it that I never ventured on a second. I went with my brother and a pal, and our joint resources formed the capital which was to fructify and grow into three colossal fortunes by means of a wonderful system of which my pal was the author. During the first day the system didn't work well, so we lost a considerable amount, and we lost on the four first races on the second day; hence matters began to look gloomy, for we hadn't a Barnato sort of bank behind us. It became, therefore, a question whether we should pursue the system to the end, and risk all, or whether we should be content to lose what was gone, and make a new beginning on the system. There was just one other alternative which we discussed; that was an idea of my brother's, who suggested we should pitch away the system altogether, and commence making a book with what of the capital remained. This suggestion was favourably received, and I fancy would have been acted upon if I had not, at that very moment, caught sight of three notorious men in earnest conference. Oh fate! what a world of difference that simple incident may have made in the shaping of several mortal lives!

One of these gentlemen was a dapper sort of fellow with a round face, and a pair of eyes set in it keen as a hawk's, a closely-cropped head with a silk chimney-pot hat on the top of it. He wore a large stand-up linen collar and a black silk neckerchief, a whole suit of black cloth, the coat being the cut-away, leg-a-mutton fashion. He was a singular-looking being to find in a betting ring, and until he opened his broad Lancashire mouth, you would never have taken him for a betting man, but you might have taken him for a prosperous undertaker, a waiter at a first-class hotel, or even for a Methodist parson, the latter, however, only being possible so long as he kept his capacious mouth closed. This "gentleman in black" was the once rich and celebrated Jimmy Barber, a Turf character about whom much may yet be written. One of his companions was a much bigger man, with a large face, heavy hanging jaws—indeed a heavy, clumsy-looking man altogether, in breeches and gaiters, and a "get-up" something between a stableman and a country squire. This was old Joe Saxon, owner, trainer and bookmaker. The other was a little, sharp-looking fellow, with an even more pronounced horsey appearance than Saxon himself, and you would have sworn at once he had been a jockey in his time and was now a trainer, and you would have made no mistake, for this was Joe Kendal.

It was a nice little trio, and were it possible to narrate some of the jobs they had been in together an entertaining volume would result. I looked at them and then instinctively at the card, and found the entrants for the next race were largely composed of horses owned or controlled by them.

"Look at that gang," said I to my friends, "there's something brewing for the next race; let us watch them." Barber quietly slipped away from his pals, and asking my brother to keep his eye on the other two, I determined to watch the movements of the wily old James. I got pretty close to him, and without exciting his suspicion I managed to keep my eyes upon him. I suddenly became aware of another fellow, who was evidently at the same game, watching Barber; this was a simple looking, but well dressed and respectable sort of farmer chap. Barber passed this young fellow almost without looking at him, and yet I could see that some silent communication had passed between them, which was clear enough, for when Jimmy passed leisurely to a place at the back of the stand, I saw the young farmer at a distance follow him there, and you may be sure I was not far behind the young man when he entered this place. In not more than a minute after, I also entered, but I came very near being too late; they were near together and alone, and the farmer was in the act of thrusting a bundle of bank notes into his pocket, which I concluded Jimmy had handed to him. Not a word was spoken that I heard, and they separated without any sign of recognition, Jimmy going in one direction and the farmer in another. I followed the young one, and before he had gone many yards I saw him take a slip of notepaper out of his pocket, and after carefully perusing it replace it there. At this moment my friends came up.

"You see you farmer looking chap?" said I to my brother, "You follow him instantly, see what he does, and five minutes before the fall of the flag we'll meet here." And turning to my pal I told him to find Saxon with the same purpose. For myself it was not long before I was on the track of old Jimmy. The ring was a very small one, so it was not a difficult task; not nearly so difficult as it was in such a limited market to get any amount of money on a good thing. Consequently, owners of the class I am describing often had to resort to all sorts of ruses to get a little money on their horses, for it must be remembered that in those days there were no starting price people to help them in their difficulties.

Well, the numbers were hoisted, and there were three runners only; they were Barber's own horse, Cutler, ridden by Jem Snowden, Gamecock by Thorpe, and Nothing More, with Clarkson up. I felt certain this was a job, and that it was only a question of finding the pea. I found Barber industriously asking after Gamecock of nearly every bookie in the ring, but only backing him with two men, whom I knew to be his pals, and so adroitly did he manage the business, there was quite a rush on the part of the public to be on that horse, which had the effect of driving Mr. Barber's own horse to four or five to one. The readiness of a certain couple of layers to accommodate all comers with as much as they wanted Gamecock—coupled with the fact that Barber—in addition to backing, or appearing to back Gamecock, quietly appropriated several large bets which were offered against his own horse, let the cat out of the bag. It was evident Cutler was the pea. I rushed off to meet my friends with this information, only to have it abundantly confirmed.

My pal had discovered that Saxon had been all over the ring, backing Cutler wherever he could get a decent offer; occasionally, however, having a tenner on Nothing More. While my brother had found the young farmer, quietly disposing of his roll of notes, supporting Mr. Barber's horse. Gamecock clearly was the "safe 'un;" and we could trouble no more about systems or bookmaking, but must have a dash on Cutler, with a little on Nothing More, for a saver. And in pursuit of this object we laid out the whole of our capital to the last sovereign, although we felt sure that, with fair play, neither of them had the slightest chance with Gamecock; and so, feeling we had done a good day's work, we went on to the grand stand to see the race. Now it chanced that when there I found myself standing shoulder to shoulder with Joe Kendal. I had my field glasses up, and could see the three horses as they came up the straight, all abreast. Then I saw Gamecock forge half a length in front of the other two, who at the close of the betting had been backed at about evens against each other, almost as if it had been a match, with no such horse as Gamecock in the race; while, the truth being apparent, he had retired to any price.

"Why, what does this mean?" I cried. "Gamecock is going to win."

"That be d——d," almost screamed the trainer at my elbow; "he can't win."

However, he did win, and Cutler was second. I took one look at Kendal, whose face was a picture of dismay, and all sorts of colours, and I have no doubt I and my friends very much resembled him. We were "stony," and had to get home as we could. I afterwards heard on very good authority that Gamecock had been allowed to drink a bucket of water just before the start, and it was thought that would suffice to stop him without trusting the man on his back.

It took me some time to get over this blow, and I vowed to myself that no more would I have anything to do with "Safe 'Uns." In the month of July in the following year I found myself making a book at Hungerford Races. I had managed to get together again a decent little bank, and I had for my partner and clerk poor old Ted Horsley, who died a few years ago. We were now betting at a box; or, as they were called, a "Judy," with an opening into the ring, so that I could bet with people in the enclosure as well as the outside public. Just before the numbers went up a gentleman, who since those days has made a considerable figure in the racing world, came to me with the information that old Reindeer would be a hot favourite but wouldn't win.

"Don't ask any questions," said he, "and don't miss a shilling Reindeer. Of course, I was very much obliged to him, because I was absolutely certain his purpose was to do me good, and I know, moreover, that he even then occupied a position to command information beyond my reach. When the numbers went up we found there were four or five runners in addition to Mr. Henry Fisher's old horse, but beyond him and Discretion, at about four to one, there was nothing else backed. Naturally enough, I concluded that Discretion was the right one, and wouldn't lay against him content to confine my efforts to getting all I could out of the favourite, who started at 6 to 4; and succeeded so well that I had when the flag fell, nearly a satchel full of gold and silver, besides notes, and a sense of gratitude to my kind friend possessed me, as I felt the weight of the bag that hung from my shoulders and wondered what it would total up to, thinking the while that I should certainly never want money again. I was awoke from this momentary reverie and these pleasant feelings by the familiar cry "they're off," and so they were, and so was I, off the top of the stool almost in a fit. The old horse had won easily, and I was once more "a broker." All I and poor old Horsely had in the world was not nearly enough to settle with, and the kind friend who gave me the information came forward just in time to save us from an awkward dilemma, and possibly the 'Judy" from serious consequences. Up to the time of his death my dear old friend Horsley would feel ill at the very mention of the word "Reindeer."

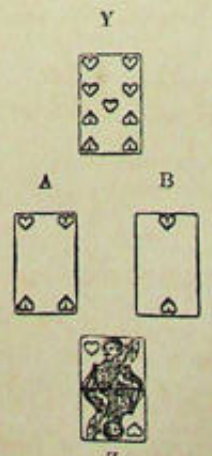
SOLUTION: If B has played truthfully Z's queen of spades was a false card. Probably he holds the 9 and 6, and he is also marked with the ace of clubs. If A goes on with spades, therefore, he loses the game. Y Z win four tricks in diamonds (assuming that Z has another one to lead through A's queen), two in hearts, and one each in clubs and spades, beside the trick already won. A's only chance of saving the game is to credit his partner with the queen of hearts, and clear a club, keeping the ace of spades as a card of entry. If he were to lead a heart at trick 5, Z would put on Y's king, and lead the 10 of spades, making his own 9 good, and so winning the game. A should, accordingly, lead the queen or 10 of clubs. By this means, if B holds the queen of hearts, AB must win the last two tricks and save the game.

Problem No. 18.

Score AB 28, YZ 0. Z deals and leaves it to Y who declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follow:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).



Y's Hand (Dummy): Hearts, ace, queen, 10, 9; diamonds, 4; clubs, king, 10, 8, 7; spades, ace, queen, 9, 8; clubs, king, 10, 8, 7; spades, ace, queen, 9, 8.

Z's Hand (The Dealer.)

Z's Hand (the Dealer): Hearts, knave, 8, 6; diamonds, queen, knave, 8, 3, 2; clubs, 9, 2; spades, king, knave, 10.

The first trick is as foliows:—

Trick 1.

Tricks: A B 0. Y Z 1.

How ought the dealer to go on with the hand, and why?

THE SELFISH DISTRICT OFFICIAL

ON the 11th October last we published under the above heading an article which discussed a subject of considerable interest to Indian sportsmen, and which again introduces us to those "amenities" of shooting which have doubtless existed ever since we came to this country, and will probably continue until we leave it.

If we look into the sporting literature of India in the past it will be seen that the pursuit of shikar has always been attended by a certain amount of friction among its votaries. This friction over what we may call the "shikar question" exists, of course, in all countries, and is really almost as common to present day human nature as it was to that of the first savage that ever flinted a rival for possession of the sporting rights over a stone age jungle. Civilisation has to a certain extent repressed or veneered over this natural tendency to jealousy in hunting matters, for in most parts of the old world game has become the private property of individuals. Yet in many ways we may see that, even in the most civilised communities, it not only exists but is very much alive.

When we come to parts of the world in which game is practically common property we find these very human feelings much more in evidence. Shikar in such surroundings partakes far more of the old natural prehistoric hunting; and the instinct that comes down to us from a savage past is so strongly stirred that the man who happens to have a full dose of it in his blood would find it difficult to disobey.

So it comes that, even in these days of what seems to us a rather namby-pamby decadence, there are a good many devotees of Diana in India, and a yet larger number of men who have some leaning towards shikar—all of whom desire to indulge their inclination for sport in the more or less common hunting grounds of this country.

Since this common field cannot, humanly speaking, fail to become a bone of contention, friction is bound to result, regulate we never so wisely. And as the elemental nature of Indian shooting tends to engender rather elemental feelings in connection with it, these shikar jealousies seldom lack vis.

Now, the peculiarities of India and the form of her administration have brought about this situation that the rivals for enjoyment of the so-called common hunting grounds of this country find themselves divided broadly into two categories—first, the general resident public, official and non-official; second, the officials who administer the civil government (especially, perhaps, in a local capacity), and thus command the entry to shooting grounds. Even in the absence of forest reservation it is clear that the latter class occupies this advantageous position of door-keeper, in that its members usually hold the keys of their districts in the shape of "purwans and takeeds"—without which an outsider is often helpless to move, far less shoot.

Thus we have two classes of sportsmen; one privileged, the other not possessed of such advantages, both of which desire to hunt over common grounds.

Under these circumstances—being mindful of human nature, and disregarding for once the rather transparent veil that here separates the professed from the real—can it be denied that the privileged class is inclined to develop a sense of proprietorship in the shooting grounds over which it exercises sway, or that the temptation to benefit by their advantages is sometimes too much for some of its members?

Such consideration, combined, no doubt, with faults on the part of the unprivileged people, naturally tend to create an undercurrent of suspicion; and this is liable to develop into worse feeling when partisans are found ready to jump at any conclusion that seems to afford some opportunity of damaging the other side.

We may incidentally remark that some of the new shooting rules seem to have considerably aggravated this feeling between the two classes of Indian sportsmen.

We have hitherto given human nature its due, and have tried to allow for the rather elemental feelings that shikar tends to rouse. But a line must be drawn somewhere; and, having the interest of all sportsmen at heart, to whichever category they may belong, we feel that it is our duty to minimize as much as possible the friction to which we have alluded.

In our article of the 11th October the subject was regarded from the point of view apparently taken by some of the second class of claimants to the shooting grounds of India—the district official. We write "apparently" since the individual whose views we then expressed is not himself a member of what we have termed the privileged class—although we presume that he obtained at least some of the material for his remarks from a district or forest official. In the present article we propose to examine the other side of the question, to turn over the interesting coin that lies before us and inspect its obverse; and, in doing so, to point a certain moral that all sportsmen would do well to lay to heart, and which, we feel, would prevent many a misunderstanding on either side.

Although, in the particular instance with which we are at present concerned, good may be said to have resulted in that erroneous impressions have been removed, it is a matter of much regret to us that the personal statements on which most of the article of the 11th October hinged were not verified before publication. Examination shows that they conveyed, to put it mildly, a grossly erroneous impression.

The statements referred to attracted the attention of one of our readers by certain coincidences, and he began a correspondence the result of which has satisfied him that the inference that he was the person referred to was correct. He has now laid a complete refutation before us—including all correspondence which passed regarding the arrangement of his visit to the jungles indicated, and a minute description of all events bearing on the question. This entirely disproves the assertions which we unfortunately accepted at their face value and is so well worth comparing with them that we give extracts in full.

"The statement that I left the country without paying for supplies and coolies is a very old trick and one that is commonly tried on by village headmen—and even by more responsible persons—after an outside visitor has left a district. However, having once been 'had' in this way, in my early days, I have ever since been particularly careful to get receipts and otherwise provide against these little attentions. So I am prepared to meet any definite complaints on this subject. As it happens, by the kindness of the district officials who arranged for my visit, I was attended by various subordinate district and revenue officials during the greater part of my trip, and payments were made through them and receipts taken in full! Most of the coolie payments I saw to myself, although receipts were obtained through these officials. Where receipts could, for obvious reasons not be had, I personally supervised payments, and knew enough of the local language to satisfy myself that payees had no complaints. The only people unpaid by me were 40 coolies on one occasion, 10 on another. Since in each case they deposited my kit in the jungle, and disappeared, never to return, I suppose I am justified in reserving payment! I used to carry about a big sack of parched gram and raw sugar to establish my usual amicable relations with my jungle friends, and my 40 deserters had been given a good tuck in of this just before they made off! Since one of them had also taken two of my spotted deer heads and two skins, without my blessing, I somehow feel that after all they may have been defaulters rather than I?"

"Of course you can't get round dastûri; nor can the omniscient district official himself. This is often levied even after the dibs have been placed in payee's own paw. While on this subject, it is obvious to anyone who understands India that inhabitants suffer far more from the stately progresses of district officials than from outside sportsmen's camps, the latter usually being much smaller, far less exacting, and unattended by the harpies who are attached in various capacities to the former, all wielding local power by virtue of their office, and seldom missing a chance. Nobody can help this, of course. But the fact remains."

"Your correspondent further states that twelve bison were shot in the district. The correct total number is two! These were shot at ———where I stayed with———the Assistant Superintendent of Police."

"Some time previous to this I had shot six bison elsewhere; two at———, three in the———country, and one near ———, all these localities being in quite separate districts and averaging fifty miles apart. For my total bag of eight bison I covered over five hundred miles on my feet, out of a total itinerary of 640 miles in that country."

"All those bison were solitary bulls, except one; and that one carried a bigger head than some of the solitaries."

"It is quite untrue that none of the heads exceeded 34 inches spread. Several were larger. That bison heads seldom run to record 'spread' in that country seems proved by the fact that most of those bagged are thick and much worn, and belonged to very old bulls, some of those being of a curiously 'cobby' appearance."

"As regards the buffaloes, your correspondent seems to have obtained equally misleading information. It is presumed that he or his informant saw the heads before making such definite statements? Yet the bull's head is not difficult to distinguish. It may be seen in——at present."

"I do not defend the shooting of cow buffaloes which is, of course, a catastrophe—although they often carry good heads, and are apparently still shot in some places; but anyone who knows these beasts is aware that occasions arise when they have to be fired at in self-defence."

"If the responsible authorities of any of the districts in which I travelled had the smallest reason to believe that I did not settle up all dues, it was their duty to let me know at once; and I presume that they would have done so. To let complaints pass in silence, and then harbour unjust ideas is not playing the game. If complaints founded on native report were more frequently enquired into, in an impartial spirit, they would, in the majority of cases, be found to consist of nothing but the usual Indian attempt to set one sahib against another."

"As to the eight bison I shot. Put in a garbled and distorted way, this might possibly seem excessive; but, considering the great extent of country in which they were shot, in localities so far apart, the extraordinary numbers of them (I saw 127 bison myself in following my own narrow line through that huge jungle) the sanctuary afforded by the impenetrable nature of the country, deadly climate, and difficulties of travelling, and the unlikelihood of the slightest harm having been done to the enormous head of game, it reads rather differently."

"I worked hard, risked much, broke no rules, and injured neither game nor anybod'y prospects for what I got—one bison per week. This I think will bear comparison with a bag of OVER TWENTY BISON OF BOTH SEXES AND ALL SIZES, which, so I am informed on credible authority, was made ON ONE HILL BY A DISTRICT OFFICIAL in one of the very districts I visited. I only mention this on the principle that sauce for the goose is likewise sauce for the gander, and that, apparently, it is not only 'outsiders' who are accused of making out these butchers' bills."

Recrimination of this kind is, after all, only natural, even in so commendably moderate a letter; but both tort and retort might have been avoided had enquiry been made before indulging in such reckless partisanship as our original contributor displayed. And this is the object lesson which we desire to convey to those of our readers who may be interested. District official or outsider, each should assume the other as good a fellow as himself, and avoid forming hasty and off-hand opinions. Even when there seems to be clear ground for complaint, the parties concerned would do well to address each other first with a view to ascertaining the facts direct. We are, however, well aware of the sentiments that stand in the way of this counsel of perfection. Outsiders—as we have called them—are sometimes inconsiderate, and district officials do not in all cases appear to realize the extremely equivocal position they occupy with reference to the shikar question. We have already referred to the bad feeling produced by some of the new Indian shooting rules. While ready to make reasonable allowance for the "proprietorial" feelings of district officials, whom nobody grudges the reservation of a little bit for themselves, there is a distinct impression abroad that some of them turn the regulations too largely to their own advantage. There have also been many complaints of late that shooting areas are being closed to outsiders for no apparent good reason; and this, added to the fact that privileged individuals have been known to make too free use of their official position to command shooting facilities, does not help to allay suspicion.

Only the most scrupulous care and sincerity on the part of district officials can relieve them of the responsibility for a difficult and undesirable situation. To argue from the particular to the general, and to jump at the misdeeds of one individual—which, as we have shown, may be entirely imaginary—as an excuse to close jungles to "outsiders" would hardly serve to improve their case.

It is only fair to district officials as a body that the whole situation should be cleared up, and more light thrown on the regulation of shikar.

Officials have no greater right to sporting facilities than the public of which they are the servants; and, while we blame them no more than we do outsiders for these shooting amenities, it is plain that their position demands the publication—in detail—of their control of shooting grounds as much as that of a Banker does his Balance Sheet or a Government its Budget.

Sporting Notes.

THE racing at the Calcutta First Extra Meeting does not call for much comment. Of the favourite Santa Maria alone pulled back her proverbially lucky owner's money and gave him a real good start on the new season's ventures. Otherwise the Hastings stable was out of luck, however, as Bonita and Mercedes both failed to score, the latter being beaten by the outsider Lady Metal, about which almost any price was offering in the ring before the race.

Poor Old Psalm, who was given up a year ago, came out in the pony race and won with astonishing ease, giving weight to such speedy opponents as Silphoe, Pat C. and Picture.

Mr. Galstaun opened his account with Rustler's victory in the first race, and Olynthus in receipt of 10lbs. could only finish second.

We were pleased to see that the "eliminating" process adopted by the Turf Club has already had its effect in more ways than one. It was noticed that "Johnny Armstrong" was conspicuous by his absence. A dozen stands were occupied by the knights of the pencil; the public and the bookies seemed to have gained confidence, and a fair amount of money changed hands. In the first race, perhaps, only two horses were backed for money, but we noticed in the other four nearly every horse was backed at some price, and we have never seen the bookies so liberal. The price at one time was 6 to 1 Rustler in the First Race, in the second 7 to 1 was laid about Plover. As much as 20 to 1 was laid about Lady Metal, which we have been told was an even money chance. Psalm and Santa Maria could have been had at 6 to 1, although the latter started at 2 to 1.

Incidentally we may observe that some good prices have been laid in the Cup, such as 4 to 1 Long Tom, 11 to 2 Fitzgrafton and 10 to 1 Mallard, while others were priced at 20 to 1.

In the Trials 7 to 1 has been laid on the field. We must say such liberal odds were never before quoted in India. We only hope that the penciller's liberality will continue throughout the season.

The new stands and enclosures have raised a roar of disapproval from the public and a small storm in the daily press. The principal complaints are launched against the special enclosure for the members of the Turf Club and the lack of accommodation for the public in the big stand.

A private paddock is to be seen on every English race-course and is a luxury to which Turf Club members are undoubtedly entitled now that the "gate" has swollen to such large proportions. The position of the present enclosure, however, is perhaps at first sight such as to give annoyance to the public using the big stand, and they think the Club might well have waited until the increase of paddock accommodation to be obtained next season enabled them to provide themselves with this luxury without giving the great offence to the public, which is caused by the present arrangement.

But the complainants evidently do not realize that this year's stands are quite temporarily arranged. A third large stand is to be built in place of the relic of the old stand now existing. The Turf Club stand is neither intended nor supposed to fully accommodate the public, who are this year requested to put up with half the C. T. C. stand and the remaining portion of the old stand.

We must remember that Rome was not built in a day, and that it takes time to put up Grand Stands: it is extremely creditable after all, if one reflects, that the C.T.C. has achieved what it has in a few months. Patience, my masters, a little patience.

The reduction in paddock accommodation is actually very small, and it is really the detour enforced by the Turf Club enclosure which has raised the ire of the grumblers.

With the complaints of ladies not entitled to use the club enclosures it is difficult to deal. A Racing Club cannot provide separate pens for each and every grade of female society, for one very obvious reason that the difficulty of sorting would be superhuman. The growls of trainers and owners are more legitimate and will no doubt receive immediate attention. Many useful suggestions have been made, and the Executive may be trusted to give due consideration to them all. Further criticism at this juncture is scarcely necessary. There are, however, two matters we think the Stewards ought to attend to at once. A pen might be found for the betel spitting, eructating, low-class Aryan—not the native gentleman he is always welcome ; the demi monde should be rigorously excluded.

The Viceroy's Cup market has been little agitated during the week and the only noticeable feature in the betting list is the rapid decline of Munderah, whose lameness or soreness on the track is persistently reported. The favourite has put in two long gallops and his appearance pleases his admirers well enough. Cherson has surprised the critics by his excellent condition, but they cannot make up their minds about Steinhager and Rosanule. The former's record entirely eclipses that of his stable companion, but on their present appearance and gallops Rosanule has more friends. Fitzgrafton and Mallard are another strong pair and barring accidents the first named is bound to run up towards the head of the list very soon. Sacristan II attracts a little money at long prices for the big race ; but none of the others, except perhaps Clear Artist, are attracting much attention on the course. A number of the cracks are entered for the December Plate next Saturday, but scratchings for this event are found to be numerous.

Entries for the Second Extra Meeting look very healthy. In the December Plate just mentioned twenty-three are billed, including Long Tom, Footprint, Sacristan II, Paddy's Darling, Munderah, Contest, The Master, Rosanule, Signorina, Amplify, and Saloon. This is the kind of race in which to back condition as very few of these fliers can be anything like ready to give their best form.

The Master is perhaps the most advanced of the party and his connections will probably be glad enough to pick up this race instead of training on for a bigger prize at the Christmas Meetings. The Hurdle Race has drawn a splendid field of no less than fourteen horses, including Decoration, Olynthus and all the new cracks in addition to Hoop Iron and the Monsoon contingent. On the top of the ground Hoop Iron must make the best of them gallop. Lord D. has been put to lepping and appears in this somewhat high class company. There are twenty-one maiden horses, so we have every prospect of big fields on Saturday and some bad crushes at the home bend. An improvement at that point of the course is very urgently called for now that fields have swollen to such big figures.

The Annual Meeting of the Paperchase Club was held in Russell Street last Friday evening when some twenty of the most prominent riding members appeared to record their votes. No new rules were proposed this year and no changes suggested from last year's code. The only question of interest was that of course making and the carrying on of the secretaryship, which Mr. Allen after several years' hard work, has resigned. Messrs. M. Turner and Stokes, who made the courses last season, have agreed to put through the secretaryship work in addition to the field operations and Mr. Deakin promised to help in the latter. Few realise the responsibility and labour involved in this work and any relief from the daily ride out to the Salt Lake country must be extremely welcome to those who have taken it upon themselves to see that the Friday morning throng is not disappointed. The following members of Committee were duly elected : Messrs. Dudley Myers, Dring, Turner, Deakin, Gresson, and Stokes. The Cup donors, Messrs. Gresson, Macpherson, Rodocanachi and McLeod were accorded a grateful vote of thanks and the meeting closed in peaceful harmony.

Colonel P. K. Beaver was welcomed back to the Calcutta course last Saturday ; his little string is expected to reach Heywood in the course of the week and his many friends trust that the cerise jacket will run forward during many years yet to be unfolded.

Another welcome guest is Mr. R. Boteler, whose final departure from these shores was confidently reported. No longer can he mystify backers with inscrutable handicaps and delight the stands with three and four-horse finishes, but nevertheless he has been speedily impressed into the public service. Mr. Boteler will preside at the scales and very pleased will both riders and backers be to hear it. Jockeys will not now be allowed to leave the scales to fetch a forgotten martingale and then be promptly disqualified for leaving the weighing room without orders, to the utter dismay of their backers. The public, who pay the money at the gate, like to know that the reins are held by experienced men, and Mr. Boteler's return is welcomed by them accordingly. It is a treat to stand in the weighing room and see him pass a big board of riders through.

Some misapprehension seems to have arisen at the races last Saturday in respect of the refreshment arrangements, many, who grumbled at the disposition of seating and other accommodation by the C. T. C., finding a little spare criticism to bestow upon the caterers. Many thought the bar and tea pavilion, tiffin room, etc., were also taboo. Not so ; this is quite a mistake. Messrs. Kellner's bar and tea pavilion in the paddock is for the use of non-members of the C. T. C. ; in the Grand Stand Enclosure the tiffin supplied is also for the general public as is the tea and liquid refreshments in the Monsoon Stand or Eastern Enclosure. And it may be useful to note that tiffins are served from 1 to 3 P.M.

The following domestic occurrence will be read with pleasure by very many of our readers :—

Stokes—King.—On the 30th November 1906, at St. Paul's Cathedral, by the Rev. Canon Jackson, assisted by the Rev. Canon Luckman, Harry Stokes, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, son of the late A. Allen Stokes, of Pauntley, Newent, Glostershire, and Naomi Kathleen, third daughter of Lorraine King, of Knebworth, Hertfordshire.

We join their hosts of friends in tendering Mr. and Mrs. Harry Stokes our very hearty felicitations.

Some good race horses leave shortly for India. Mr. Joe Kendall, the well known trainer has only made a short stay in England and is returning to India with some few of the best blood stock which he has fortunately succeeded in securing from gentlemen breeders. Those who entrusted Mr. Kendall to purchase the horses will be sure to be pleased with them we are told, and will hope they may prove as good as Up Guards, Countess, Schomberg, Apthorp, etc. One selection among his ponies may turn out a gem as she is an exceptionally well bred one by Dog Rose, winner of the Stewards' Cup and many races. She has never run, but has, we learn, pleased the trainer in many ways. A fine upstanding gelding by Grand Duke is another of his purchases which has won golden opinions from judges. Rosewater, a Merman colt, stands forth as an exceptionally promising one, and if he only proves as good as his sire Mr. Kendall will have reason to be proud.

On the 15th ultimo in the course of an article on the recent restrictions on the importation of rifles to this country we took occasion to express our confidence in the ability of the British gunmaker to come to the rescue of the Indian sportsman and meet the difficulty, and that without loss of time. It is therefore with much pleasure we publish to-day in our Shooting Columns a special article on the successful efforts of Messrs. Westley Richards to improve the Accelerated Express system. They have just introduced a new bore on this line, the ·318 bore, shooting a bullet of 250 grains with a muzzle velocity of 2,500 ft. secs. and a striking energy of 3,466 ft. lbs., i.e. 15 per cent. greater than the ·375/303, and is, we can well believe, the most perfect development of the small bore sporting rifle yet attained. We direct the particular attention of all shikaris to the article for it must be of interest to them, not only on account of the step in advance made on the small bore sporting rifle, but coming so opportunely as a satisfactory substitute for the now prohibited ·450 bore.

A Bhamo correspondent writes to the Rangoon Gazette : "Three cheetahs which took up their abode in a well-grassed nullah between the polo ground and the dhobie-ghat adjacent to Fort effected a considerable diminution in the number of pie-dogs in the station. One of the cheetahs, a well-grown male, had the temerity to do his hunting by daylight and was promptly bagged by Lieutenant Barnett, 91st Punjabis, who, with Corporal Massey, the King's Own, lay in wait for him. The other two, a female and her cub, have not been seen since."

On the subject of "puppy walking"—fascinating hobby of our youth, ere "India's coral strand" claimed us as a victim—a writer in The County Gentleman discourses thusly :—

"The hunting season proper has begun in earnest, and on every side we hear of the crowds which have turned out to honour the opening meets. Foxhunting was never so popular ; never before did so many people ride to hounds. Therefore, surely, this is the truly psychological moment when the hunting world should remind itself of what a vast amount of their amusement they owe to an oft-forgotten class of beings—the puppy walkers. Of course, every summer there are hound-puppy shows, and then conviviality and champagne make the speakers say nice things of everyone, and the puppy walkers in particular. But it is not then, in the height of summer, when hunting is for the time a vanished happiness—it is not then that the debt the sport owes to the puppy walkers is realised except in a very transitory manner. It is when we come face to face with things and weigh up in our minds the causes which contribute most solidly to the sport—then it is that the enormous importance of the puppy walker makes itself felt.

"It will come almost in the nature of a surprise to many of those who come out hunting to be told that the most interesting and the most important things in the hunt are the hounds. So many who come out never see hounds, and never care to see hounds, that it, as I say, rather surprises them to be reminded, that it is on the hounds that everything depends. But when those hounds gather round the huntsman, as they sedately accompany him to the meet, just ask this question, 'Where do they come from'? Only in a secondary sense do they come from the kennels. Not one of those hounds has been reared at the kennels nor could be. They have been handled at the kennels and their corporate life as a pack has been disciplined at the kennels; in short, a kind of top-dressing has been given them at the kennels, but that is all. But each of those hounds, on whose stamina, condition, and constitution all the hunting depends, is the product of the puppy walker. Each hound is a testimony to the infinite patience, worry, sacrifice, and devotion which has been expended with him in some quiet home far away from the kennels, where he has been supplied with the conditions necessary to make him of any ultimate use in the field. Of course, there are old hounds in their fourth or fifth season, but they, too, years ago, were the nurslings of the puppy walker, and the fact that a hound can last four or five seasons in these days when they are bred so much for pace only proves that their early days must have been very carefully provided for.

"Suppose, at one of these opening meets, that a Master were to ask how many sportsmen present would like to walk a hound puppy, how many hands would go up? I very much doubt if one in twenty would. The reply would much more likely be, 'I wouldn't have one of those mischievous, thieving sheep-worrying brutes hanging about my place for anything in the world.' Masters of hounds are always complaining, not that they cannot get walks for their puppies, but that they cannot get good walks. And a hound puppy is not an easy thing to walk. It is not the least use to think you can take a puppy and leave him to take care of himself. Nothing in the world so much needs a personal interest taken in him, as a hound. His first instinct is to hunt, and hunt something he will. But next to that he is capable of great affection, and if you can get him to love you and trust you, then, and only then, will you be able to discipline and control his native puppy instincts without breaking his spirit. All this means that somebody somewhere has taken infinite pains to put into the field on the opening day of the hunting season a hound on whose sagacity, physique, and constitution you can rely for giving you a good sporting run. Of course, the puppies will not display their real form in the first season. No Master of hounds, I think, would ever draft a hound because he did not hunt well his first season. It takes at least two, perhaps more, seasons to bring some hounds to their best. But the huntsman will soon get their hunting powers out of them if they only possess the constitution and hardiness necessary to stand the fatigues of work. What a huntsman cannot do is to hunt without hounds, and neither can he show sport unless the foundations of his handiwork have been laid strongly in the days when the puppy was entrusted for his moulding and making of the puppy walker. Of the crowds which attend the opening meets, the proudest man in the field is the man who has a hound in the pack. You won't notice him, but you may perhaps catch sight of him as he steals quietly up behind hounds and peers into their faces, and a smile comes over his face as he recognises the features of his puppy who has survived the evil days of mischief and distemper and the drafting process, and now at last figures in the pack of working hounds. This is the coronation moment for the puppy walker. He can laugh to scorn the decision of the judges on the show day, when they wouldn't look at his puppy, but now when the mighty on the flags are out of sight with kennel lameness, and the huntsman's knowing eye singles his puppy out as a worker, he is a happy man for the whole of the season, and that day will always have a particular thrill for him when his 'beauty' is out. Puppy walking, in spite of its worries and disappointments, is a fascinating study, and this I think is the moment when those who hunt should remember that, without the interest and self-sacrifice of the walkers of hounds, they could have no hunting at all. Every consideration is needed to make the work of the walker of hound puppies more easy, and when it is remembered what foxhunting means to the country, what money it distributes, what geniality it inspires, and what amusement it affords, then it will be realised how much is dependent on the quiet and unobtrusive and absolutely indispensable services of the puppy walkers. Take them away, and hunting totters to its fall."

The Lahore Dog Show looks like having record entries this year; we are glad to learn that many new owners are coming forward as exhibitors.

Information is to hand of yet another brutal outrage by villagers on a couple of young British officers while out shooting. A telegram to the Englishman says:—

"Authentic details of a brutal assault on two British officers doing duty at Purandhar at the military sanitarium, 26 miles from Poona, have been brought in. The officers were Lieutenant Ramsay, East Lancashire Regiment, and Lieutenant White, Connaught Rangers. They were out buck shooting on the 27th ultimo near the Pipli village, and as they were stalking a herd a few women happened to get in front of them. They had their rifles loaded and were only waiting for the women to get away to allow them to fire. The women persisted in remaining where they were, and to make matters worse they set up a howl, which brought one of the villagers out. This man, without the remotest idea what had occurred, rushed up to the officers and assumed a most threatening attitude towards them. He in his turn shouted for the other villagers to turn out and in a few minutes thirty men arrived with lathies and stones, set upon the two officers, who maintained marvellous composure during the furious attack. The gang first pelted stones at the officers and subsequently rushed upon them, using their lathies freely. Lieutenant Ramsay was knocked down and assaulted almost to the point of death. His injuries are serious enough to cause alarm. Lieutenant White was not so badly treated, but he was subjected to the grossest indignities by these thirty or more ruffians, who hastily made away when they were told by the shikari doing duty with the officers that the persons whom they had attacked were officers and not soldiers, as they imagined. The injured officers were conveyed to Purandhar and admitted into hospital there. It is impossible to overlook the fact that the officers, armed with loaded guns, never at any moment attempted to take advantage of their possession of weapons. The District Superintendent of Police has left for the scene of the outrage."

There were two bad accidents at the Rangoon Races on Saturday last. One was caused by the stupidity of a mounted policeman who sallied forth on to the course to keep the crowd back, failed to regain a place of safety in time, got his horse at right angles to the rails as the field swept round the home bend in the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup and brought down Satina, who was being ridden by F. Clark. Horses and riders were little the worse for the fall, but some people will regret the bobby was not damaged. The other accident occurred in the Autumn Plate, in which the mare La France crossed her legs, broke both fetlocks and had to be shot.

The W. I. T. C. Stewards, we notice, have lately been enforcing the penalties for presenting ponies for measurement when in an unfit condition; they are also determined to be strict in the matter of granting licenses to jockeys, judging by recent announcements in their Calendar.

Two events in connection with the Quetta Hunt Point to Point races were brought off on the 26th ultimo. A field of seventeen turned out for the Light Weight Cup (Rs. 49) presented by Colonel T. O'Donnell, D.S.O., for all ponies 13-2 and under. Catch weights above 10st. 7lbs. This was won by Mr. C. Newall on Banzai, Mr. Roberts second riding Mr. H. Allen's Songstress, Mr. T. Lean third on Sportsman, Captain G. Moore's Bayswater fourth. Miss Jackson on The General ran prominently throughout and looked like finishing second when her mount came down, luckily without injuring his sporting rider. Captain Swettenham's Sheikh Hants fell early in the race, breaking his neck, his rider escaping without injury. The Hunt Cup (Rs. 49) presented by the officers of the Royal Warwickshire Regiment: for all ponies 14-2 and under; catch weights above 12st. 7lbs. Seven competed. Mr. E. Carter on Benmore finishing first, Mr. J. Waring second on The Badger, Captain Gray third riding Mr. H. Eliot's Tommy.

Fourth entries for the Civil Service Cup closed on the 1st instant; they are four in number: Flo (late Maud) the property of Mr. W. B. Green, and Haden, S. S., and Plover (a winner at the Calcutta First Extra Meeting) owned by two native racing men.

Alas! another polo fatality to record. In the opening game of the Agra Tournament on Monday Lieutenant E. C. C. Lloyd, of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, came down as the result of his pony stumbling and succumbed to his injuries a few hours after. The tournament has been postponed for a week.

Entries for the Calcutta Second Extra Meeting, next Saturday, are given in the usual place to-day. They show an improvement, in numbers at least, on those of the First Extra.

We have to thank Messrs. Francis, Harrison and Hathaway for a copy of their price list for the current season, setting forth the attractions of millinery, dress-making, furnishing, etc., replete with the latest productions and exclusive novelties of London and Paris. Every department has been heavily and thoroughly restocked, and the artistic Christmas gifts, varying in character and price to suit all tastes and purses, are in themselves quite a feature of this old and well established house, known to us for so many years in its convenient corner of Government Place, that its name has become a household word in this city. At a time when our purse strings must of necessity be frequently loosened it is comforting to reflect that they need not be stretched beyond their capacity do we only select with wisdom and discretion gifts for young and old, from the inviting pages of the catalogue before us.

Quite a good buck-jumping exhibition was given at Mr. Love's stables, Garden Reach, the other day and there is a general desire that a show of this kind might be got up on the Calcutta maidan. It would be certain to draw a big gallery: we haven't had any extensive buck-jumping display, if we are not mistaken, since that given many years ago on the race-course in which the late Captain H. M. Hayes took a prominent part as promoter and M. C.

We have not in the time at our disposal been able to verify the rumour, but it was put about on the Calcutta course early in the week that H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar's Coin II. had broken down. Extremely bad luck if this is so: the Maharajah will have everybody's sympathy.

The boxing exhibition at the Opera House on the 28th ultimo ended in favour of Pickering. The affair lasted the advertised twenty rounds and opinions as to the verdict were, as usual, divided. The display at no stage was very exciting. Powell had apparently taken too much out of himself in training down to the weight and his work lacked vigour. Pickering, who was giving away 10lbs., was in good condition, but was without the experience of his better known opponent. Mr. W. O. Rees acted as referee, Mr. Smallman as timekeeper, while Mr. Vernon was master of ceremonies. At the close of the show there was the usual crop of challenges, Bill Fisher and Sam Newman both desiring to meet the winner. Three minor bouts preceded the "big event" and these made up in humour what they lacked in fistic merit. The gentleman who appeared to be giving an impersonation of a praying mantis and the wag who appeared in the ring with Rozario were intensely amusing.

On Tuesday morning, during the schooling on the Calcutta course, that real good horse Scotch Thistle broke his neck at the flight near the Zoo Bridge. He struck the hurdle heavily, turned turtle and, landing on his head, was killed on the spot. This is very hard luck on his fair owner. Drew, who was riding him, was knocked out of time and rather cut about. Among others who were schooling we noticed Bucentaur, Rustler, Lord D., Kingpin, Hoop Iron, and Footlight: there was nothing particularly interesting to see or report.

H. H. the Maharajah of Vizianagram's 24 h.-p. Napier.
Mr. G. V. Scovell's 15 h.-p. De Dion.

MOTOR-CYCLES.

The entries for the motor cycle class are :—

Mr. G. F. Brierley's 3½ h.-p. Minerva.
Mr. Henderson's 3½ h.-p. Brown.
Mr. Henderson's 3½ h.-p. Brown.
Mr. J. Fairley's 3 h.-p. Chase.
Mr. B. Rigold's 3½ h.-p. F. N.
Mr. G. W. Talbot's 5 h.-p. Roc.

The Committee have decided to extend the date of closure of entries till to-morrow and hope to receive many more entries by that date.

The home papers report a fatal wrestling match in Sunderland in which a wrestler, well known in the North, was thrown heavily twice; the second time failing to rise to time he was found to be dead.

Among the motors exhibited at Olympia, Londoners flatter themselves that in the "Mascot" they have at length been furnished with an ideal substitute for the time-honoured "growler" as well as the hansom. In the crowded streets, the huge omnibi are out of place, many municipalities prohibiting their entrance into the towns now that they have seemingly come to stop.

Except upon racing tracks or long stretches of highways where the motorist can see all round, the speed limit at home has been reduced from 20 to 12 miles an hour.

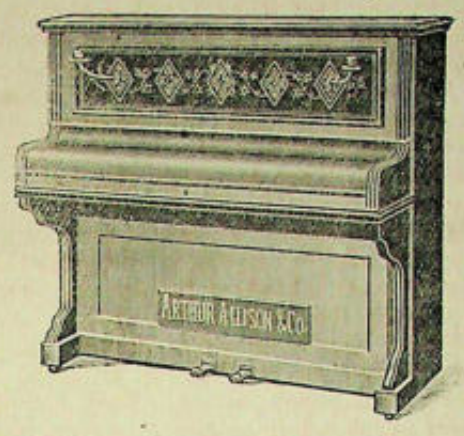
A gentleman asserting that he witnessed a car being driven at 25 miles an hour in Park Lane, London, by some one so wrapped in furs that identity of sex was impossible, a wag suggests that it was probably a dancing bear in training for the "Kaiser's Cup" next year.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—It is very difficult to condense remarks upon a three-days' assault-at-arms into reasonable space. There were 56 competitions to be decided, besides many displays and in a column of print, it is clear that all these cannot be discussed. However, the most striking points can be tackled. Rough-Riding Squadron Sergeant-Major C. Carnegie, of the 14th Hussars, was the best mounted man-at-arms amongst the British troops, and Lance-Corporal Walker, Essex Regiment, occupied a similar position as regarded dismounted corps. Good Old Natha Singh, of Gordon's Horse, whose name must be growing familiar to readers of the Indian Field, simply squandered his opponents for the best native mounted man-at-arms. As a matter of fact he won the sword vs. bayonet, the sword vs. sword and the lance vs. sword. He was second in the lance vs. bayonet and 3rd in the jumping for native troops. Finally he won the tent-pegging (individuals) for native troops. And he has for years been the Gordon's Horse back in the polo team. Something like a Duffadar this; and his comrades' repeated cries of "Shabash," were indeed well deserved. Rangaswamy Naicker, of the 77th Moplah Rifles, won the prize for the best native dismounted man-at-arms almost as easily, and this man is also an old winner, having enjoyed his present distinction in this particular assault-at-arms for six years. Major Barnard, 30th Lancers, was the best British officer, and everyone was pleased. Major Barnard is as keen as mustard, an excellent G. R. and a good all-round man; he only missed being best British officer last year by a single point, and his personality is a most popular one here, for he is courteous and pleasant to everyone and the very beau ideal of a sportsman who only wants fair play.

Points for discussion crowd into my memory, but only those which are most important can be touched upon. "Riding and Jumping" was this year allowed to count towards the best man-at-arms, and there was much division of opinion on the point. Personally I do not think that it should count, it is not a feat-at-arms at all. Competitors ride any horse they like, and this to my mind is sufficient to condemn it as a factor towards deciding the "best man-at-arms." There are horses upon which the veriest tyro, if he only let his mount alone, would go round an easy jumping course well. Again, if a real good cross-country jockey were up, he would probably steer nine out of ten ordinary horses round the course in good style. But a man who is only a fair horsemen might easily be a very much better soldier on service. The result of this rule, so far as I can make out this year, is that Sergeant Studdert, of the Carabiniers, has been beaten by a narrow majority by Rough-Riding Sergeant-Major Carnegie, of the 14th Hussars. The winner has already been referred to as an excellent man, and his lime cutting was quite marvellous, but had "riding and jumping" not been allowed to count, Studdert would have beaten him. And as an old soldier, I do not think it should count. [We agree. —ED.]

As regards the British officers' competitions there is not much to be said. Captain the Hon'ble H. E. Joicey, 14th (King's) Hussars, did well in several events, and his tent-pegging was a treat to watch. Style and pace alike "top hole," and accuracy leaving nothing to be desired. Major Barnard's excellent performances have already been referred to, and the only other officer who did really well was Mr. H. T. Walker, of the 30th Lancers. He actually beat Major Barnard, after a hard fight, in the sabre vs. sabre, mounted and had bad luck in being just out of prizes in one or two other events. The displays by the various corps were uncommonly good, and it is difficult to say whether the trick riding of the Imperial Service Lancers or the 30th Lancers was the cleverer. The Royal Horse Artillery's jumping and driving show combined, was absolutely magnificent, and as General Scallon put it in his speech, "men and horses were equally splendid." Before the General made his speech, there was a wonderfully realistic representation of an attack upon a hill stockade, and it was quite clear that the men had been carefully drilled in their parts Moreover many of them—especially the 2nd (Q. O.) Sappers and Miners, had probably seen the real thing. The 14th Hussars are not as yet—they will forgive a faithful chronicler—quite so clever at vaulting on horseback as were our late cavalry regiment, the Carabiniers, but an officer who should know was watching the display with me, and he said "not quite so good at present, but by and bye they'll take on anybody." The King's Hussars were especially strong at lime-cutting; and Squadron Sergeant-Major C. Carnegie's rides were the best things I have seen in this line in India. His style was splendid and his pace terrific; he never missed a lime, and three out of the four were divided with nothing less than mathematical precision. The involuntary reflection struck one that there would be very little chance for a retreating enemy had they a few sabres like this Sergeant-Major's after them.

Socially the assault-at-arms was most successful. General Scallon and the officers of the Indian Army were "At Home" on the first day, Colonel Connolly and the officers Royal Artillery on the second day, and Colonel O'Brien and the officers of the 14th (King's) Hussars on the third day. The bands of the various corps, that is to say the 14th Hussars, the Essex Regiment, the 77th Moplah Rifles, the 125th Napier Rifles and the B. R. V. played excellent selections of music and the hospitality of the various messes when "At Home" was unbounded. Altogether it was a very successful show, and whilst many thanks are due to the general executive committees especial credit must be given to to Mr. St. George, R. A., the Honorary Secretary, whose efforts were unceasing and whose courtesy to all sorts and condition of men was invariable.



The first race night at the Columbia Rink attracted a great many competitors as well as spectators, and the couple of events on the programme were keenly contested, the mile scratch race being won easily by Mylne. Intervals between the events, and the pauses from the delights of roller skating

TO DOBSON & SON, LEICESTER.

SIRS,—In reply to your enquiry as to whether I have derived satisfaction from your Alterative Horse Powders, I beg to say I should not have sent for other lots had I not found them beneficial for their intended purpose. I don't approve of physicing horses, but these Powders seem to possess a harmless and special virtue. The object of your enquiry being to use my reply as a testimonial, you are at liberty to do so for what anybody may think my opinion worth.

I am, yours faithfully,

which the devotees of the art occasionally permitted themselves were pleasantly filled in by the Bioscope, quite one of the features of the evening's entertainment. The Club session continues to fill well, and the skaters are then twice a week enlivened by strains from the Viennese Orchestra. Judging from the excellence of the floor, which is now in perfect condition, and the completeness of the arrangements of every minor detail, under the personal supervision of the Managing Proprietor the Rink will hold its own, as it has ever done, amongst our cold weather attractions.

To the enterprise of Messrs. Whiteaway, Laidlaw and Company of Calcutta, and many other Indian cities, is due the capital idea of a price list in no less than seven parts, each being well printed and got up. That devoted to requirements in the shape of furniture, which we note may be had on hire, or on the "easy payment hire-purchase system," will commend itself to householders. The ladies will not find themselves forgotten in a price list which also aims at the higher function of a fashion guide; and our small folk—like the poor—ever with us, at this festive season, will possibly revel in elaborate descriptions and representations of toys, dolls, and games, which seem to burn a bigger hole than ever in the willing pockets of parents and guardians. The advantages of a separate catalogue for each department will readily be admitted by those anxious to find something in a hurry, not always so easy in the somewhat bulky price lists issued by this firm in previous years. The new arrangement should make the choice of presents even more enjoyable than so many of us usually find it at this time of year.

Sam Newman, the American boxer, has arrived in Calcutta from the Straits, where he has been distinguishing himself: he may be able, at catch weights, to fix up a meeting with Pickering, who last week gave a fairly good exhibition with Powell.

The International Rugby match between Wales and the South Africans was played at Swansea on the 1st instant and attracted the greatest interest. An enormous crowd witnessed the game and the Principality was expected to win. But the result proved a victory for the Springboks by 11 points to nil.

An unusual musical treat has been offered to Calcutta and, of course, unmusical Calcutta has been slow to take advantage of it. We refer to the two concerts given at the Calcutta Concert Hall on the 29th ultimo and 3rd instant by the young Polish violinist, Herr Premslav, who scored two pronounced artistic successes before a few musicians backed by a depressing array of empty chairs. Since the visit of the renowned Remenyi, many years ago, Calcutta has had the privilege of hearing no performer of this calibre. Herr Premslav is at once a brilliant and refined violinist with a repertoire of such range as to include examples of every Master. He exhibits a splendid musical memory, in that all he does is without a note of music before him; he interprets the most difficult and the most soul-stirring efforts of the greatest composers with an ease and in a style which leaves no doubt as to his high musical perception, and in his correct and clean bowing, his faultless technique, accurate intonation and really marvellous and pure intonation he seldom failed to arouse his listeners to enthusiasm. We have no space to deal with these two programmes, and indeed musical criticism is beyond our boundary: all we can say is Herr Premslav acquitted himself fully up to the reputation he brought with him and gave his audiences a delightful hour or two which will often be recalled with pleasure. Mrs. W. Bushby, who played every accompaniment, took a big share in these successes. Calcutta well knows and appreciates her musical talent and on these occasions she was at her very best. At the first recital Miss Bushby sang a couple of charming little songs and at the second Mr. Calderwood supplied two well-rendered vocal items.

The Calcutta season has practically begun, not quite perhaps, but it will have fully started in many people's opinion next Tuesday when Harmston's Circus opens its doors once more on the maidan with a mammoth tent, a programme to match and a full head of talent. They have secured their old pitch we are glad to see, and though they will be the last tent on the maidan they will certainly not be the least. Our old friend Colonel Bob Love, tells us that he has a good many novelties wherewith to amuse, interest or startle us according to their kind, and when he says this long experience teaches us that he will keep his word. One of the chief attractions will be the Frantz Troupe, seven in number, whose marvellous acrobatic turns have astonished and delighted audiences all over the world. In addition there are the Collins Princess Quartette of song and dance artistes from London; the Wheelers, trick cyclists and first flighters at that; the Electric Trio; Elderita described as the only lady jockey before the public just now: Diavolo, who loops the loop and the comic tramp who hoops the hoop; the ever popular Harmston-Love family, some of the members of which are held in affectionate regard by our youngsters; and any amount of other stars of varying magnitude, human, equine, ursine, canine and feline. For the rest we refer our readers to the opening programme printed in another part of this paper.

The annual General Meeting of the Bengal Presidency Athletic Association was held last evening. The date of the meeting was fixed for Saturday the 2nd March, entries closing on the 20th February. The officials remain practically the same as last year, a few vacancies on the General Committee were filled up with Messrs. W. S. and W. C. Burke again as Honorary Secretaries. The programme was altered in two respects—the Half Mile for Amateurs is to be a scratch race instead of a handicap and for the Tug of War Rs. 200 will be awarded to the winning team instead of pewters as hitherto.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 16th November 1906.

THE heavy fog that made Tuesday miserable cleared away sufficiently on Wednesday to make the city visit of the King and Queen of Norway fairly successful. There was a thin mist still hanging about, but a huge crowd turned out along the route and the decorations in Oxford Street were more elaborate than those usually provided for a Royal function. A lady of my acquaintance who saw Queen Maude in Norway last July went to see the show for the particular purposes of discovering how Her Majesty looked: after seven weeks of post-coronation ceremony in Norway, travelling continually, the poor Queen looked, she says, so utterly worn out that she could not even raise that gracious (if as I venture to suspect rather mechanical) smile a sovereign is expected to bestow upon her subjects. My informant supposes that Her Majesty was not suffering from such fatigues on Wednesday or was rejoiced to find herself at home again, for she looked radiant and seemed to enjoy the function thoroughly.

The correspondence between Sir Bampfylde Fuller and the Simla authorities has been published. It does not tell us much more than we knew already, beyond letting a little new light on the fear of the Supreme Government lest firmness and commonsense should be "misunderstood" in this country. The only criticism on Sir Bampfylde Fuller's conduct of the affair that deserves notice is the suggestion that when he found the necessary and judicious measures he proposed were disliked—or should one not say "funked"—by the Viceregal adviser the Lieutenant-Governor would have done well to lay the case more pointedly—in person if necessary—before the Viceroy. It is difficult to believe that any man worthy to fill the Viceregal throne would have accepted the resignation had he been really aware of the real situation his Lieutenant Governor had to deal with.

The Committee of Public Accounts has issued a Report on the methods of Military Account keeping: and this document makes some revelations which should make the tax-payer open his eyes. There is the case of Mr. Noreen who claimed £4,000 odd for cattle captured in South Africa. He claimed £810 and was paid £800 in South Africa as a "bonus," his main claim for £1,721 for captured cattle being refused. Then he came home and claimed his £4,009 again and this, being passed by Colonel Hickman, was paid without referring to the authorities in South Africa. Then there is the strange case of the Tempe Farm at Blomfontein bought by Government for a remount depôt at a cost of £23,000. The Tempe Farm was reported on as possessing good water in abundance, a good dam and good grazing. Next year the Government authorities took Bishop's Glen Farm on short lease spending £2,000 on building thereon, in consequence of "the scarcity of water, poor grazing and prevalence of disease" on its £23,000 farm at Tempe, at best there seems to be some want of understanding of the Orange River Colony climate in this transaction. The Committee also falls foul of the officers' wound pension system where under-officers draw wound pensions, though certified to be fit for service on full pay and while so serving, their main objection to this lies in the fact that it creates "a class distinction" private soldiers not benefiting by it. Recent contracts made in respect of Bulford Camp are severely criticised, and altogether the War Office has to answer a charge of inability to administer properly its financial affairs.

A comical situation arose in the High Court of Justice on Saturday, Counsel for the L. and N.-W. Railway Co. wished Mr. Justice Darling to hear an action brought by the Company to restrain a person from trespass. Mr. Justice Darling declined to hear it because he is a shareholder: counsel then applied to Mr. Justice Jelf, and he could not hear it for the same reason: Mr. Justice Bucknill was then applied to do and was found to be suffering from the same disability, but in the capacity of trustee; he also declined. It appears that were a judge who has interest in any undertaking to issue such an injunction as is sought in the present case it would be rescinded on the appeal of the person affected. The L. and N.-W. Co.'s action was not opposed, but appeal would be a certainty were a "tainted" judge to issue the injunction.

The de Maupas divorce case was decided yesterday in one day's hearing before Mr. Justice Bargrave Deane. It has attracted some attention by reason of the fact that the people engaged are rich; more by reason of the praiseworthy methods employed by the injured husband. Having warned the co-respondent, a man named Dickson, to keep away from his wife, he found the two together at Tregarvan Bay, near Anglesey. In Mr. de Maupas' own words, he "did not waste any words on him, gave him a good thrashing and ordered him to walk into the sea up to his neck. I then told him to dip his head into the sea three times and he did so. When he came out I was going to give him some more, but Mrs. de Maupas begged me not to kill the father of her child." Result decree nisi and £10,000 damages. I like Mr. de Maupas' methods much. [So do we.—Ed.].

There was a strike of motor 'bus drivers on a small scale last week: its most obvious result was the restoration during Saturday and Sunday of comparative peace to the streets along which the Barnes-Liverpool streets service runs. The trouble seems to have arisen out of the London General Company's decision to pioneer the way in changing the system of paying the men: heretofore they have been paid a weekly wage: the new scheme proposes payment by completed journey, and having regard to the frequency of breaksdown and the rigour of police supervision, the men's objection does not seem unreasonable. The trouble has been practically settled this week by mutual concessions.

The Times Book Club cs. Publishers' quarrel drags its slow length along. A fillip has been given to the sordid business this week by the awful iniquity of Sir Frank Swettenham. Sir Frank entrusted Mr. John Lane with publication of his remarkable book on Malaya. Mr. Lane refused to give the Times Book Club copies on trade terms: whereupon the Book Club got Sir Frank to procure as many as it wanted under the usual clause in his agreement which allows the author to buy as many copies as he pleases of his own book on trade terms. Mr. Lane is very sore about what he calls Sir Frank's disloyalty to him: as though the author were bound to be the sufferer when his publisher pleases to play the pig head. I know that if ever I should find myself in the same case I should do exactly what Sir Frank Swettenham has done.

It must be a very good farce that will last three acts, and I am afraid "The Electric Man" produced at the Royalty on Saturday evening has too much of the knock-about clown atmosphere to answer the description. It is our ancient friend Frankenstein reduced to farce: Mr. Everest's father, dying, enjoined his son to complete the manufacture of his wonderful electric automaton; and when the Electric Man appeared on the stage the exact duplicate of Mr. Walter Everest we knew what to expect. The Electric man runs amok in the streets, smashes the crockery at home and makes himself generally a boisterous nuisance keeping the entire cast on the run. At first the thing amused, then it grew dull, then it became a burden and a bore. There are people who can enjoy this sort of business and to them "the Electric Man" will closely appeal. Mr. Harry Nicolls played the parts of Walter Everest and his electric duplicate and was particularly good as the automaton. Mr. De Lange was amusing as the timorous detective Jobbins, who is entrusted with the task of arresting the automaton. Miss June van Buskirk as Walter's intended suffered from the credulity required of Stella Dudgeon, who accepts the electric nuisance as Walter.

The Electric Man was preceded by a commonplace play of the Vicar of Wakefield type called "The Setting of the Sun:" too slight and of theme much too hackneyed to be worth notice, though not badly played.

The long-promised new ballet at the Empire was produced last night. "The Debutante" is a definite story in three scenes: I say "definite" as one can really follow it without the aid of the printed synopsis, and that is more than one can do in a musical comedy. It is of course another triumph for Mdlle. Genée who figures as a dancing slave girl to some Eastern potentate, and in that capacity gives us a more liberal display of her wonderful talents than she has done in any ballet we have seen her in yet. The third scene, the gardens of the Sultan's Palace, is very beautiful and as Madame Kath. Lanner has surpassed herself in the arrangement of the dances the new ballet ought to hold the Empire stage for a long time to come.

"Peter Pan" is to be revived again this winter at the Duke of York's. The "Cricket on the Hearth" is likely to be put on at the Playhouse, which name Mr. Maude proposes to bestow on the theatre rebuilt on the site of the Avenue wrecked in the Charing Cross Station roof collapse. A Winter's Tale will be told for the last time at a special matinée next Wednesday. Have I mentioned that Madame Patti's last appearance is billed in three-foot letters at the Albert Hall for the afternoon of Saturday, 1st December?

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee of the L. C. C. continue hearing the usual applications for licences. The moribund Coliseum received the desired licence as a music hall, as it was stated that negociations for sale of the theatre were a foot and likely to be brought to a successful issue. The Canterbury, one of the oldest halls in London, has been refused a licence. An undertaking was given last year to limit the audience in balcony and gallery to 500 persons in each: that undertaking had not been carried out, hence the refusal. Objections were urged to the granting of the music licence required for the as yet unbuilt new concert hall in Great Portland Street: quite an array of counsel appeared in support of the objections, but the licence was granted nevertheless.

The St. George's Hall programme includes a clever and humorous "turn" by Mr. H. M. Hemsley, whose name is new to me. He is provided with an easel and crayons, and thus equipped proceeds to interpret a sentimental poem about a girl's attractions: her eyes are stars: he makes them so; her cheeks peaches: he makes them nice ripe ones her ears are shells: it is done with a few deft strokes: her neck is snow white and swan like; he faithfully draws it so. It sounds almost silly but the thing is done so skilfully and the result is so comical that the house roared with delight. Mr. Hensley also gives some very clever imitations of girls, but these are less amusing than his "literal drawings."

By the way Mr. Maskelyne is bringing an action against the adventurous cleric Archdeacon Colley, whose challenge to him to produce a certain illusion and Mr. Maskelyne's successful accomplishment of it I mentioned some weeks back. The case ought to be an amusing one for the jury.

The J. L. Toole "relics" were sold by auction this week. The number of stage relics was not large. The old-fashioned spectacles worn by Toole as Caleb Plummer went for £4-10 and this was really the only real stage property associated with the late owner to fetch a fair price. On the other hand lots which had any connection with his life-long friend Irving elicited brisk bidding: a gold locket with a lock of Irving's hair, given to Toole by Bram Stoker last March brought 33guineas. Miss Ellen Terry paid £20 for a ring Irving had given Toole. A locket containing a lock of Edwin Booth's hair given to Irving by Toole in 1894 and restored to the donor by the former's sons in February last brought 64 guineas: Irving was wearing it when he died.

The Alien's difficulty is well illustrated just now. A few nights ago Mr. Pickersgill drew Mr. Herbert Gladstone's attention to the illegal action of the Warwickshire Police in preventing a herd of Hungarian gypsies from entering that county. At the same time we have the spectacle of 40 constables engaged in Leicestershire and adjoining counties in herding from place to place a gang of 90 German gypsies. These people are beggars and would-be thieves but for the police who have been watching them for the last two months. They are so dirty and unwholesome that the local authorities are afraid to prosecute them for begging lest confinement should produce an epidemic. And nothing can be done to relieve the country of these vagabonds!

The motor-car show at Olympia opened on Wednesday. It is the first to be held under the patronage of the King; it is also the first from which business vehicles are excluded. The restriction to pleasure cars is due to the growth of the industry and the impossibility of finding adequate space for cars of all kinds.

WHY WOUNDED DUCKS DISAPPEAR.

A WRITER, Frank T. Noble, in the Journal of the Maine Ornithological Society, in writing under the above caption, of the disappearance of wounded sea fowl, tells of his experience in relation to the escape of a duck he had shot, which dove in the water, and, as he afterward discovered, clung with its bill to a marine plant at the bottom, where it remained until it was disturbed, brought to the surface, and captured, and inquires if other duck shooters have had similar experiences which would account for the well known habit of the wounded sea ducks often being absolutely lost to the gunner.

I confess I was a little surprised at the inquiry, for I had supposed that everyone on the Atlantic coast who was in the habit of shooting our various sea fowl was well acquainted with what had been regarded as a mysterious propensity, which was in former days accounted for by the belief that the wounded ducks on diving had been seized and devoured by sharks, dogfish, or other predatory species.

On reflection, however, I believe that the habit as described by Mr. Noble is not generally known for the ordinary duck gunner in the hurry and excitement of watching the incoming flocks of sea fowl firing at them, and gathering up those which have been killed, does not devote much time to watching for the wounded birds which have disappeared. He knows that some have gone beneath the surface, but does not ordinarily keep account of those which rise again, and kills only those cripples which appear to view. So that, if a dozen wounded fowl have sunk in the water, and eight of them come to the surface again, he does not keep any account of the four which have been lost; in fact, may not have noticed their absence.

As an example of this fact, I will state that in a recent conversation with a Nova Scotia duck gunner, who shoots many hundred birds every season, he said that a good many of the fowl that he shot down dove and were lost to him, but in what manner he could never conjecture; and I now recall many similar statements from gunners, which show that the duck's habit of clinging by the bill to the bottom is far from being well known to them.

The literature on the subject is very meagre; in fact, I find but little mention of it made in the standard ornithological works in my library. This is only another example of the importance of the work that I have often wished might be carried on, of collating annually and publishing in book form a record of all the statements and descriptions regarding various phenomena which have been printed in the various sportman's publications; it would make a yearly handbook of incalculable value, and the wonder to me is that some enterprising publisher has not long since undertaken the work.

I became acquainted with this peculiar habit of the wounded sea fowl of diving and clinging to the bottom many years ago, and have described it in several of the books I have written.

In my work on the Birds of New England and Adjacent States and Provinces, published in 1867, I make mention several times of the fact, and give one or two detailed descriptions of this habit. This book, I am sorry to say, is not now on the market, the electrotype plates having accidentally been injured at the auction bankruptcy sale of the Worthington Publishing Company, who published the work.

But fortunately, there are thousands of copies scattered throughout the United States in public and private libraries, and there is a copy in every free public library, and every important educational institution in Massachusetts, and, I believe, in several other of the New England states; so that, if reference to it is desired, it may be easily obtained.

In this book is described the habits of the longtailed duck, Harelda glacialis, called in different localities south southerly, old squaw, and old wife, I said: "It is a difficult bird to kill; and when wounded it always dives and clings to the bottom, where it dies. I once brought down seven birds out of a flock at one discharge, when they dove, and I did not secure a single bird."

And in treating of the scaup duck, Fulix affinis, which is known under other names, such as the blue bill coot, and the little black head, I stated that: "It is an expert diver and can remain a considerable time under water. When wounded, it often dives, and, clinging to the weeds or rocks at the bottom of the water, remains there until dead; and often the bird does not rise to the surface until the whole warmth of it has left its body, when the muscles losing their contractibility, permit the body to float off. Very often it does not come to the surface at all, when thus wounded and dying, but remains like a stone on the bottom until its parts become separated by the waves or devoured by crabs or other crustaceans."

In the late sixties, I, with two of my friends, Dr. Orrin Rice, of Boston and William E. Hall, an official connected with the Boston Water Board, owned a yacht, which we humorously named the Lick-a-ter-split, because we could not, even when the wind was blowing a half gale, drive her ahead faster than eight miles an hour.

With this yacht we had an immense amount of sport among the sea ducks in Massachusetts bay all the way from Cape Ann to Barnstable harbour. The boat was admirably adapted to the work we wanted her for, probably much better than a swifter craft would have been, and the bags we sometimes made were very satisfactory.

In following the coots, or rather sea ducks, we sailed down upon them from the windward, and as those birds in springing from the water almost always rise against the wind, we shaped the course of the boat in such a manner that we secured good quartering shots on their approach, abreast shots as they passed us, and astern quartering shots if they succeeded in getting by.

Instead of rising, the sea fowl sometimes adopted different tactics, and although we perhaps followed a flock for an hour or more, we were unable to get within gunshot of them; for the ducks, without taking wing, as soon as we approached them to within a distance of a couple of gunshots, sank beneath the surface like so many stones, after the manner of the common loon, and swimming under water for almost a quarter of a mile, appeared in a locality where we least expected to see them, sometimes immediately astern of our boat, at others in a direction at right angles to the course which we supposed they had taken.

Of course we dropped numbers which were simply wing-tipped, or wounded in other ways, most of which were secured with spare guns; but some of them dove to the bottom from which they failed to rise again, and although we hovered about the spot where they had gone down, in the vain hope that they would again come to the surface, we were finally obliged to abandon them, believing as many others have before done, that they had been captured by ground sharks, which were not uncommon in those waters.

On one occasion, however, as we were slowly drifting over a spot where a number of white-winged coot had been fired into, some of which had been wounded and disappeared beneath the surface, as I was leaning over the rail and intently gazing into the water I discovered at a depth of about two fathoms one of the large ducks holding to a marine plant, commonly known as the devil's apron-string, the bird's black and white plumage showing distinctly against the dark background.

The speed of the yacht though slow was sufficient to carry us by the bird before anchor could be dropped and effort made to secure our quarry, but we swung back again and fortunately found the spot where the coot still remained clinging to the plant, and with the aid of the boat-hook we lifted the duck and the plant to which it was clinging with its mandibles, together with the small stone to which the plant was attached, into the boat.

The bird had died, probably more from drowning than the effects of the shot, for the time in which any duck can live beneath the water is limited to not much more than a minute. But the firmness of its grasp on the plant was astonishing; and my friend, the doctor, explained the phenomenon by stating that the condition resulting from rigor mortis had not subsided.

Now, right here, let me throw a little light upon what the doctor meant.

According to the books, rigor mortis is the term usually given to the peculiar temporary rigidity of the muscles that occurs shortly after death; and in animals which have been overdriven, hunted to death, etc., it comes on very quickly, lasts for a short time, and is rapidly succeeded by the beginning of putrefaction. This explanation by my friend, Dr. Rice, appears to me to completely solve the problem.

The habit of clinging by their mandibles does not occur among the Anatinae, or so-called river ducks, such as the mallards, teals, summer ducks, etc., but is common to all the Fuligulinae, or sea ducks. The former are not expert divers and very rarely when wounded endeavour to escape beneath the surface of the water; but the sea ducks are divers, par excellence, and it is more natural for them, when wounded, to go down into the water to the bottom as they are accustomed to do in their search for mussels and other mollusks, crustaceans, etc.

In securing the mussels which are attached quite firmly to rocks at the bottom of the water, the birds, which seize the mullusks with their mandibles, are obliged to exert considerable force, and the strength thus acquired by the muscles of the head and neck, together with the habit of diving, seems to indicate to the wounded bird the natural course of diving deep into the water, and seizing and holding rigidly to some object until life is extinct.

The condition of rigor mortis does not remain long with a wounded duck, but the rigidity of the muscles of the mandibles is sufficient to hold birds attached to the plant, which they have seized with a death grip, long after life is extinct; and in fact even when decomposition sets in and gasses are formed, they do not furnish sufficient buoyancy to lift to the surface the fowl whose plumage has now become thoroughly water soaked.

Since the days when we used to follow the sea fowl in our poky old yacht, I have shot many hundreds of sea ducks, and have found that all of them without exception adopt the habit when wounded of diving to the bottom and clinging until life is extinct, and have discovered most of the species still changing by the mandibles to the plants they had seized.—E. A. S. in Shootin, and Fishing.

Fishing.

"FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD."

SEASON, early August ; place, tributary of the Jhelum in Kashmir. I had been advised to try this place by a friend who had told me that I should find the fish plentiful, and should have the place to myself as it was not generally known and very few Sahibs ever went there. I found that he had not over-stated the case at all for I had ten days as good fly-fishing as I could hope to get in this country, and the stream was practically my own, for there was not another soul there.

My boats were tied up beneath the willows over-hanging a bluff bank, on the top of which there was a nice stretch of turf shaded by a chenar and a couple of old gnarled mulberry trees. Beneath these I could idle away the day for I had found by experience that it was useless to fish until the late afternoon.

The stream where my boats were was smooth and sluggish, and although I had seen fish rising near all day long, I had never been able to take any. I had tried them with fly and fly-spoon, in the middle of the stream and under the willows at the bank where I lost much temper and no few casts, but rose nothing.

But about half a mile above the character of the stream changed entirely. Here it gave a sharp bend, flowing swiftly under some mud cliffs, (which it was gradually undermining) into a long gravelly pool at the tail of which it settled down into a regular south county stream. Above these cliffs it partook more of the character of a Scotch stream, flowing in many channels over a pebbly bed with deep pools alternating with gravelly runs. It was impossible to take a boat on it here and one had to wade ; the illusion of fishing on a home stream being thereby increased.

Knowing that it was not any use attempting to fish much before four in the afternoon, I used to start out in the shikara shortly after three, going up as far as the pool beneath the cliffs. Pulling the shikara up on the bank on the opposite side, and pushing my way through the bushes on the bank a walk of about a mile and a half brought me to the pool in which I always started operations.

It was in a bend and about a hundred yards long with deep water underneath the bluffs on the left bank, while the right had a shelving gravelly bottom. At the head of the pool was a backwater under each bank with the swift deep water running between.

Fording the tail of the pool I start at the top of the top of the backwater under the right bank. This I have found is the only spot where the fish will take at all while the sun is high, the most I have taken out of it in an afternoon being eight fish varying from half a pound to a pound and a half. Also I found that while there was a bright light on the water the fish would look at nothing but a black fly. My cast to start with, then, is made up of a "Blackamoor," a "Zulu," and as tail fly a black fly with a silver twist to it. I had a theory that the reason was that the fish took these black flies for mulberries, of which trees numbers grew on the banks. All Kashmir fish feed greedily on these fruit when they are in season, and I found that it was best to let the fly sink a little when it would more closely resemble a belated mulberry floating down the stream.

The fish lay out close to the edges of the swift water which one had to reach by wading. But as the bottom of the back water was here covered with a soft silt into which one at times sank suddenly up to one's knees, it made wading extremely difficult and often necessitated a long cast. But in other places in the pool the bottom was firm and good ; as the entire length of the pool would stand fishing over twice, it was always a safe place to start with.

After fishing that, one had to walk up the bank some little way to cross over at a ford from which all down the left bank to the head of the original pool there was a long swift run. This could be fished either from the bank or by wading a little way out, and sometimes yielded a fish and at other times did not. One very bright and sunny afternoon I had fished this run three times with a fly but with no result, so I determined to see what luck a fly s oon would bring me. Standing knee deep in the water a few yards out from the bank, I had worked the spoon two or three times across the stream in front of me and was just thinking of moving a few yards lower down when there was a gleam of an orange belly ; a tug : and out went my line with the reel whirring merrily. I could feel I was into a good fish, and in that heavy water and with the light tackle I was using I knew to check him would be disastrous, so I let him run until he brought up in the slack water of the pool below me. But, with deep water and bluff banks below me I could not work down towards him, but had to stay where I was and coax him up against the heavy water towards me. It took me about ten minutes to land him, a nice "Chirroo" of three and a half pounds. Hoping to have a repetition of this performance I tried a fly spoon there on other afternoons, but never touched a thing, although when I returned to the fly the fish "took" again.

Below this was the long pool, only half of which I had been able to fish from the right bank. By careful wading down the centre of the deep swift water it was possible to reach the outer edge of the right hand back water and also the deep water under the bluffs on the left bank. But as one had to wade up to one's waist in swift water and a careless step would have landed one in up to one's neck it was not worth much unless the fish were well on the feed. As the rest of the pool was unfishable owing to the bluff banks and the deep water I used to leave it and move down to the run below the pool. It was about fifty yards long with low grassy banks from which with a long cast the whole of the stream could be covered, and it eventually ran into another pool formed by the junction of a small tributary stream.

The sun is now beginning to get low so I change my "Blackamoor" for "Teal and Green." This Grey Teal fly is put on as a "feeler," for I found that the fish would only look at a black fly when the sun was high, and when it was sinking a grey or a white fly were the only successful ones. But the difficulty was to find the opportune moment to change. Therefore when I found that the fish were taking the grey fly alone I knew the hour of the black had passed, and that it was time to change to white.

Then the "Zulu" would be changed for a "White Moth" and the tail fly for a home-made fly composed purely and simply of a piece of the white thread tag off a bath towel. It looks just like a miniature tassel, but I found it more killing than the best dealers' flies. It has the further advantage of being heavy when wet and sodden, and so assisting one in getting out a long line or in throwing against the wind.

Standing on the bank and casting right across the stream I either rise a fish as the fly is carried down stream or as I draw it up under the bank. The bigger fish are lying out in the heavy water in mid-stream while the smaller ones are sheltering behind the stones near the bank. Unfortunately many of the rises are short, but the compensation comes when a heavy fish, meaning business, takes it in mid-stream. There is no hesitation in it then : he takes the fly with a rush and goes away with it. This particular reach stood fishing several times and on a good evening it was only the sinking sun which warned me that it was time to be off if I wanted to have a chance before dark at the good water further down.

The pool immediately below is never any use, so I walk down the stream trying all the broken water and pools as I come to them. None of these, individually, is worth lingering over, but there was always a chance of getting a few fish out of them. If a cast or two in each was not successful I would move on to the next, working my way down to the reach above the cliff pool. The method here was the same as up above, casting across the steam and letting the flies swing round with the current. But is was never much of a success, as there did not seem to be any big fish lying out in the heavy water and it was useless to fish it more than twice.

The sun has now disappeared leaving the sky all crimson and gold and the time has come to try the big pool below the cliffs. On some evenings the fish were lying under the cliffs on the further bank, and on others on the gravelly shores of the left bank. But before starting to fish this it is as well to find out under which bank the fish are, for whichever they choose they do it with wonderful unanimity and it is useless trying the side they have abandoned. A few moments watching will soon convince one where the fish are, for there will come a commotion among the "chilwa" under the bank and in the middle of it will be the flop-flop of a heavy fish chasing them. If this happened on the left bank it was fairly plain sailing. Directly I saw a big one on the feed among the small fry I cast just outside them, and then letting the stream swing the fly in towards the bank I would draw it up stream among the shoal. One evening I got into an excellent fish in this way, and from the way he fought I could almost believe I was into an English trout once more and not a chirroo, His first rush took him straight across, and not down stream, and then down into the pool just below, where he jumped clear of the water. In the half light I saw him and I put him down as eight pounds. Unfortunately I never had the opportunity of testing the accuracy of my judgment for the next minute he came past me going up stream through the heavy water at a pace which made it hard to reel up quick enough. After fighting me and the stream for a few minutes he came in towards the bank and went down stream again, which made me think he was done. My boatman had waded in a little way below me and was standing ready with the net. The fish was just out of his reach and being over confident I put on a bit more strain to bring him in closer. But the fish still had a kick left in him and the result was that I lost a large portion of my cast, three flies, and the fish. But the next evening I hooked another good one in the same place, and this one I treated with greater respect. He scaled six pounds when I landed him and as he had not fought so well as the lost one I am inclined to think that my surmise as to the latter's weight was about correct. But there is no fish so big as the lost fish, for one's disappointment at losing him makes one magnify his size which increases as time passes. It is always the same : "If I had only landed that 10-pounder it would been perfect" one says to one's self as one thinks over the events of the day.

If the fish were rising under the cliffs on the other side it was harder, as it meant crossing in the shikara at the tail of the pool, walking along the top of the cliffs, and then climbing down to the water's edge. With a precarious foothold and the cliffs rising straight behind one it was extremely difficult, and often next to impossible, to get one's fly out to the place one wanted. But they were all good fish here so I have sometimes fished on until it was too dark to see the fly upon the water & the whole thing had to be done by sense of touch. The mosquitoes which came out in swarm would then drive me home.

I fished that water for a week, the average number of fish caught in an evening being fifteen, with which I was quite content, as I only used to fish from half past four to eight every evening. The average size of the fish was a little over the pound. Although this is not very big, and the chirroo is not a very sporting fish yet I got a lot of fun out of it and on many occasions would have no small difficulty in landing my fish successfully. Those who have only caught chirroo in the big river on a heavy rod, with a wire trace and have formed their opinions of them from that would be surprised to find what a game little fish he can be when in these higher waters on a light rod and with light tackle. He starts in then with a handicap in his favour, and a two-pound chirroo on a light rod and a fine trout cast is by no means to be despised. A deal of enjoyment can be had with them by suiting one's tackle to one's fish, for I dare say that even the lordly Mahseer would not be such a tough customer if caught on Tarpon tackle. Personally I fully intend having more than a week with the chirroo in this particular spot next year.

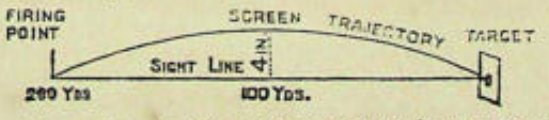
THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE SPORTING SMALL BORE RIFLE.

RIFLES of the well-known military small bores have long been used by sportsmen and with varying results. Some pronounce the high velocity ·256 Mannlicher effective at small deer and soft skinned dangerous animals, others condemn this bore as failing to stop or immediately kill animals like the Chamois or the Ibex. Similar experience has resulted from the use of the Mauser ·276, the British Service ·303, and the Magazine rifles of ·311 bore.

An ideal sporting rifle may then be described as one in which the maximum advantage in flat trajectory co-exists with an increased standard of smashing power or expansion. In short a combination of the best qualities of the military small bore and of the high velocity larger bore Nitro express rifles.

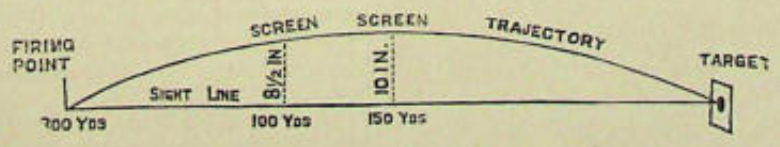
The first attempt at such a desirable combination was made by Westley Richards and Co. when they introduced their accelerated Express rifle ·375/303, which was editorially noticed some time ago by us This weapon, it may be recalled, possesses the following advantages over the highest type of military small bore, viz., the Mannlicher ·256.



Higher velocity
Flatter trajectory.
Heavier weight of bullet.
Larger bore.
Greater muzzle energy.
Superior sporting bullet.

MANNLICHER ·256.
Weight of bullet 162 grains.
Muzzle velocity 2,400 ft. seconds.
Muzzle energy 2,000 foot lbs.

·375/303 ACCELERATED EXPRESS.
Weight of bullet, 214 grains.
Muzzle velocity 2,500 ft. second.
Muzzle energy 3,000 foot lbs.



As regards the trajectory, the following comparative tables compiled from the results of firing through screens placed in front of the target at various distances show the advantage secured by the increased velocity of the ·375/303 bore.

A ·375/·303 WESTLEY RICHARDS UNDER-LEVER ACTION RIFLE.

Distance of target from shooter 200 yards. At 100 yards away from shooter was placed a paper screen. The diagram illustrates the point at which the bullet passed through the screen, and shows a rise of 4 inches above the line of sight at this range.

Distance of target from shooter, 300 yards. At 100 yards and 150 yards respectively from shooter were placed paper screens.

This diagram illustrates the points at which the bullets passed through the screens, and shows over this range a rise of 8½ inches above the line of sight at 100 yards, and of 10 inches above the line of sight at 150 yards.

The following particulars show the exact amount above or below the point aimed at, the bullet would strike under certain errors of taking sight at various distances indicated—

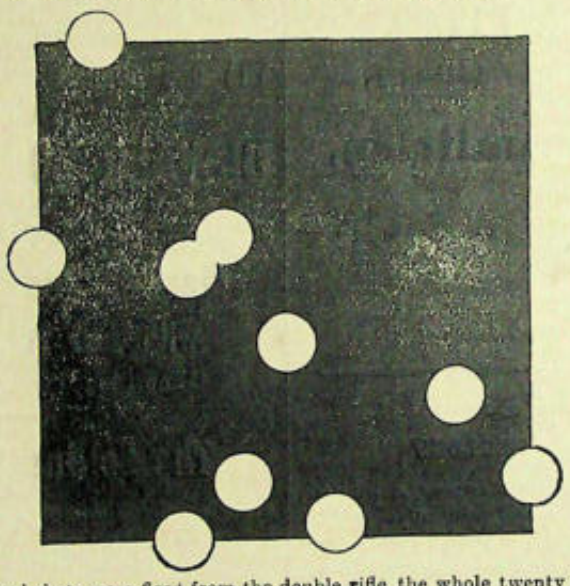
This rifle is made to shoot the ordinary type of cartridge with rim which is adapted to both magazine, and single and double, drop down rifles, but is not capable of use in conjunction with a cartridge clip so advantageous in magazine weapons.

Messrs Westley Richards have now succeeded in advancing the Accelerated Express system an important step further. The improvements comprise (a), superior ballistics and (b) the substitution of the grooved or rimless cartridge for the rimmed kind which permits the use of a strip or clip of the Mauser type for the magazine rifles and further ensures consistent and reliable action of the cartridge within the magazine; and (c) the employment of these rimless cartridges in drop down, sliding block and other sporting arms.



The new accelerated express rifle is ·318 bore.
Weight of bullet 250 grains.
Muzzle velocity 2,500 feet seconds.
Muzzle energy 3,466 foot lbs.
Powder Axite.

Bullet—Westley Richards copper capped expanding.
Weight of magazine rifle.
Weight of single loader rifle.
Weight of double rifle.

The following diagrams with the single and double rifles were made in a public trial before the Shooting Editor of the County Gentleman and Land and Water and myself on 10th and 11th October last. Single rifle, six consecutive shots on a penny piece at 100 yards.

Double rifle, ten consecutive shots five each, right and left, in a space of 2½" × 2½".

Without a break ten additional shots were fired from the double rifle, the whole twenty consecutive shots grouping in a space of 3" × 2½" convincingly establishing both the accurate shooting of the new cartridge and the solid reliable construction and careful adjustment of the two barrels and their sights. Hitherto, the rimless cartridge used with a clip or strip has been confined to the magazine principle; but now Messrs. Westley Richards have designed a special form of extractor suited to the grooved or rimless cartridge for use in single loader and double drop down rifles. The new ·318 accelerated express cartridge was tested, as stated, in these weapons and the loading, extraction and ejection under all conditions were perfect.

FIG. 2.

FIG. 1. Five cartridges and clips ready for magazine.
FIG. 2. New ·318 copper capped bullet after firing.

The following table shows the respective velocities and energies over 100, 200, and 300 yards.

	Velocity.	Energy.
100 yards.	2,257 F. S.	2,900 feet lbs.
200 ,,	2, 88 ,,	2,418 ,,
300 ,,	1,916 ,,	2,036 ,,

Comparing these with the ·375/303 it will be seen that there is an increase of both velocity and striking force at these sporting ranges of over 15 per cent.

On consulting the trajectory tables of the ·375/303 bore we also see the advantage of the ·318 over other small bore rifles and this advantage is further augmented by its heavier bullet and larger striking area.

Now that the new regulations concerning the importation of arms into India prohibit the ·450 bore, the ·318 bore accelerated express rifle will prove a good substitute.

It is only second to the ·400 bore in point of smashing power and when used in conjunction with the copper- capped bullet will be found an all-round powerful weapon especially adapted to Indian sport.

The ·318 accelerated express rifle stands at the head of the small bores. It is first and last a sporting rifle possessing all the qualities I have described as vital and essential to sport, and Messrs. Westley Richards are to be congratulated upon this step in advance.

An interesting feature of this ·318 bore rifle is that the magazine model is now made with the well-known patent detachable barrel associated with the name of that firm.

THE ·35 REMINGTON AUTOMATIC RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Since writing about the Winchester Automatic rifle of this description I have seen an account of the new Remington rifle—which is an exceedingly powerful little weapon of its kind—its bullet being 200 grains in weight with a muzzle velocity of 2,000 feet per second which gives it the fairly high muzzle energy of 1,774 foot pounds and, of course, a flat trajectory at sporting ranges, while the bullet is not heavy enough to have a very dangerously long range. It is like the Winchester Automatic, on the Browning principle. It has a solid breech and locking system and loads with a 5-round clip. It is a handy little weapon with a shot barrel and ought to do very well for antelope, etc. It shoots a bottle-shaped rimless cartridge with a soft-nosed bullet. The price is very moderate.

HORSE'S WEIGHT AND CARRYING POWER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to your leader on "Horse's weight and carrying power" which appeared in your issue of the 22nd ultimo surely the weight of a horse is a very unimportant factor indeed with regard to its carrying power, as compared with the strength of its legs, general conformation and breeding.

A horse's carrying capacity and the actual weight of the animal must vary in inverse ratio, if the strength of its understandings remains constant.

As a proof that there can be little, if any, relation between a horse's weight and carrying power, it may be instanced that an average-sized Arab 14-1 will, in the majority of cases, carry a weight as well as an Arab of 14-3.

RESSALLA.

NOTES ON RIFLES.

THE NEW AUTOMATIC REPEATER OF ·35 CALIBRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—This is a very handy and fairly powerful little weapon of moderate price and eminently suitable for black buck, etc., and will shortly be introduced by the Winchester Repeating Arms Company. It is a self-loader of a type similar to their ·22 calibre miniature automatic rifle of 2 or 3 years ago, but is fitted with a box magazine holding five rounds. It is a great improvement on a similar weapon put on the market by the firm a short time ago, as its bullet, though of the same weight, 180 grains, has a muzzle velocity of 1,860 feet seconds instead of 1,400—which gives it about 1,380 foot pounds of energy at the muzzle against about 780 of the latter and, of course, a very flat trajectory at sporting ranges. One advantage of a comparatively light bullet of 180 grains over those of the usual weight of from 250 to 320 grains for this calibre is that it does not travel so far and is consequently like the old light express bullets safer to use in populous districts. The automatic rifles of the Winchester firm as well as most American repeating rifles and shot guns are the inventions of Mr. Browning, whose automatic pistols, made by the Colt's Company and in Belgium, are now so well known.

The ·32 calibre automatic rifle with its 1,400 feet per second velocity and bullet of 160 grains would be a nice little weapon for antelope also. Years ago a friend of mine using a 32-40 black powder weapon of similar power bagged ten buck with an expenditure of only 12 cartridges.

The Winchester firm have in the last few years put on the market some very moderately priced high velocity nitro rifles which are good enough for most purposes. Of these the ·35 and ·405 calibre repeaters of model 95 are suitable for those who want rifles of greater power than the usual small bore military cartridge weapons with the same flatness of tragectory at sporting ranges. The ·33 calibre of 86 model with its 200 grain bullet is of course less powerful but is a lighter and handier weapon, suitable for antelope. The two former have muzzle velocities of over 2,100 feet per second and the letter about 2,000.

Those who possess the old black powder 45/70, ·45/90 and ·50 Express Winchesters can by the use of special cartridges loaded with smokeless powders very considerably increase their power, as velocities from 1,850 to over 2,000 feet per second are said to be obtainable with them in place of 1,300 or 1,400 Similar cartridges are made also for the 32/40 with about 2,000 feet velocity the ·38/55 with 1650 and the ·44/40 and ·32/20 with about 1,600, enormously increases the power of these weapons.

The ·303 bore also when chambered for the new ·375—·303 axite cartridge has its power increased enormously its velocity being raised from 2,000 feet seconds to 2,500 and even 2700—and according to an announcement in your issue of the 18th October its performance on game of all kinds leaves nothing to be desired. The U. S. Government have been trying experiments with light bullets of the German Spitzer pattern in their service rifle, with a 150 grain bullet driven by an increased charge giving a muzzle velocity of 2 750 foot seconds. The elevation for 600 yards on the service sight carried be bullets to 1,000 yards and gave good target results at that distance. It would be interesting to experiment with light bullets at extremity high velocities in the new cordite sporting rifles. The gain in velocity and flatness of trajectory would more than compensate for loss of weight and would be no loss of power according to the German Spitzer bullet experiments. This bullet, though of only 154 grains as compared with the service 227 grain bullet, gave superior ballistic results to over 2,000 yards. A ·450 bullet of 360 grains' weight driven at 2,500 feet a second would give an energy of very nearly 5,000 foot pounds against about 4,250 foot pounds of a ·480 grain bullet driven at 2,000 feet a second. The light bullet would not only develop higher energy, but have a flatter trajectory at sporting ranges. It would remain to be seen how the higher velocity would affect the rifle as regards pressure, fouling, recoil, etc.

Sighting of a rifle is quite as important as its accuracy; as without accurate sights a weapon is useless. The peep or orthoptic sight in its various forms is undoubtedly superior to any open sight and this is beginning to be recognised, but not anything like as much as it should be. It does away with difficulty of focussing and if properly made with a sufficiently large peep hole it is just as good, for snap shooting as the open sight—and far superior to it for stationery shots. The American New York Militia team who beat the Queen's Westminsters recently in a rifle match had peep holes on their sight bars—which undoubtedly gave them an advantage. I think it is a pity the peep sights are not used in our service arms.

B.

SPORTSMEN'S CAMERAS AND BINOCULARS.

Most of our readers, at any rate those who include photography among their hobbies, are more or less familiar with the Goerz-Anschutz camera; they will be interested to hear that Messrs. James Murray and Co., of Calcutta, are the Agents of the manufacturers. We are reminded of the fact by the receipt of beautifully illustrated pamphlets showing what can be done with the Goerz lens, and among all the pictures we find none to surpass in clearness and artistic merit those dealing with sports and pastimes, they are perfect and have an additional interest apart from that naturally felt by those who have been engaged in the particular sports illustrated, when it is remembered that the whole of the originals, with but one or two exceptions, are the work of amateur photographers with the Goerz-Anschutz Folding Camera. This apparatus, which has long been in the hands of professional photographers, is daily becoming more and more popular among amateurs, and especially with those desiring a graphic chronicle of their sports and pastimes. Such photographs have a value and interest seldom possessed by ordinary snapshots, and are easily obtained with this Camera. Everything necessary to perfect work is embodied in this instrument—an efficient shutter enabling the fastest exposures to be given or snapshots made on dull days, and good results obtained—a perfect lens, and all the adjustments required for a Hand Camera, while the apparatus is distinguished by its compactness and its light and elegant form. The Camera is free from complications and adjustments without practical value but bewildering to the worker, and has been specially designed for fast instantaneous exposures such as are necessary for sporting pictures.

Messrs. James Murray and Co. have also the Goerz-Trieder Binoculars, the ideal glasses for racing men and sportsmen

The ordinary field glass has always been disappointing in its definition, which, if good in the centre, falls rapidly away to the margins, and the field of view has been extremely limited in area; the glasses, too, are heavy and bulky. Goerz-Trieder Binoculars have none of the faults of the ordinary field glass, and have merits possessed by no other prismatic binocular.

They are compact, being about one-third the length of old style glasses.

The definition is exquisite, and being obtained by patented object-glasses—reserved exclusively to the manufacturer—is superior to that given by other glasses of similar form. The field of view is as brilliantly illuminated and well-defined at the edges as at the centre. The angle of view is considerably larger than that given by the old form of field glass, and in excess of that obtained with other prismatic binoculars. The prisms have no silvered surfaces to deteriorate and impair the definition of the glass. The two eye-pieces can be adjusted to suit any interocular distance and are focussed simultaneously by means of a rack and wheel, as in the ordinary opera glass. Differences in vision can be allowed for.

The greatest skill of the Optician has been exercised in the manufacture of the Goerz-Trieder Binoculars. The mechanical difficulties in the construction of the prisms and lenses have been completely overcome, and the result is an instrument which cannot be equalled for compactness, power, size of field, and brilliancy of definition. The Goerz-Trieder Binoculars are in use in every quarter of the world. They were largely used in the South African War, accompanied the "Discovery" Antarctic Expedition, and are officially adopted by many of the Powers for the use of their armies.

Saturday, 1st December 1906.

THE racing season opened this afternoon with moderate success, the sport was not of a very high order and favourites went down in four of the five events. A great deal of interest was shown in the new stands and other improvements made by the C. T. C. during the year. There was loud grumbling on all sides, the chief causes for complaint being the insufficiency of accommodation for the general public, the large amount of waste space in the stand set apart for the exclusive use of the Turf Club members, the penning in of the lawn and the disgusting intrusion of the demi monde. Further remarks will be found in our Sporting Notes. Appended are details :—

THE BALLYGUNGE PLATE—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs. 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. For horses which have not won a flat race value Rs. 500 or upwards since 31st March 1904. W. A. and C. raised 14lbs. 1 mile.

THE TURF.

LIVERPOOL.

WITH flat, hurdle, and steeplechasing, the programme on Saturday afforded that variety which is charming, and with two favourites and three second favourites in the six events to which the card by a walk over was reduced, for the second time during the week, the talent did not do so badly. Rules must be adhered to, and though perhaps the non-compliance was occasioned by want of thought in the hurry and excitement of the moment, the four jockeys—Trigg on Glucose, Plant on Catapult, Watts on Barat, and Escott on Isabelita—are not likely to forget the command to canter past the stands on the way to the post again, as in the Grosvenor Cup their omission to do so cost them a "fiver" apiece.

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses.

Our Testing Room is in charge of

Two sportsmen in India

Having for years past made a special study of the suitable mounting of Shikar trophies such as Tiger & Panther claws, bear Tusks, bear hoofs etc. we have as a matter of course been able to add from time to time to our collection of designs, some very chaste and original ideas. We will be glad to hear from Gentlemen desirous of preserving in some way these interesting relics of Sport in India, & will be happy to place before them some rough suggestions together with sketches & estimates.

DERBY.

The paddock at Derby on Wednesday was thronged by the wealth and beauty of the county, and the club stand was crowded by fair women and brave men, while Tattersall's, as usual, showed the appreciation the business portion of the community have for Derby, and, owing to a rumour that the Prince of Wales was expected, the country folk mustered in strong force. It was a pity that better weather had not favoured the occasion, as with a half-hearted frost over-night, and a total absence of wind, the fog that brooded over the lowlands did not shift, and thereby spoilt half the view of a capital afternoon's sport, as the fields flashed out of the fog a quarter of a mile from home, and the rest, the first part of the struggle, was silence. Better going could not have been desired.

BETTING: 7 to 2 agst. Hillsprite, 9 to 2 Corriemore, 8 to 1 each Great Dame, f Meadow Rue and Rockbourne, 100 to 8 each Ardvourlie c and Offer, and 100 to 6 the others (offered).

Won comfortably by a length and a half; a similar margin separated second and third.

Despite the unpromising morning yesterday another goodly company followed the example set by the Chatsworth party, again headed by the Duke of Devonshire, and the attendance all round was an excellent one, the holiday makers braving the elements in sportsman like style. Not sufficiently heavy to take any hold on the ground, the rain simply refreshed the course, and the good going was the redeeming feature of the day, while with the arrival list materially increased, fields kept interest keenly sustained throughout.

ALLESTREE PLATE (A Welter Handicap)—of 250sovs.; second receives 20sovs.; 1 mile and 3 furlongs.

Mr. N. H. Scott's Lingy Moor, 3yrs., 6st. 11lbs. -	J. Howard	0

(Winner trained by A. B. Sadler.)

BETTING: 4 to 1 agst. My May, 5 to 1 Deal, 7 to 1 each Nero and Desma, 100 to 14 King Sapphire, 8 to 1 each Home Truth and Early Bird, 100 to 12 Sophron, and 100 to 7 each the others (offered).

Won very cleverly by a neck. King Sapphire, baulked by the winner, was half a length away third. Time—1min. 3⅘secs.

A more miserable day than that which attended the final proceedings at Derby could not very well be imagined. Rain fell in torrents from an early hour in the morning, and the course was terribly holding. Very naturally, the attendance suffered, and there was a great falling off in the county club enclosure.

THE BELPER SELLING PLATE (A high-weight handicap)—Of 106sovs.; winner to be sold for 50sovs. The Straight Mile.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

The distinguishing feature of Saturday's football in the principal Leagues is the phenomenally low scoring. It is remarkable that 60 clubs should each be striving for an hour and a half, and that the aggregate result of their efforts should be only 67 goals. The total would have been much less had there not been a high-scoring game in each League. The Liverpool-Preston North End game produced seven goals, the Wolverhampton Wanderers-Burslem Port Vale match eight, and the Millwall-Luton contest six. Subtracting these 21, there is a grand total for the other 54 clubs of only 46 goals! This is not to be accounted for by the super-excellence of the defence, but the impotence of the forwards. From every field of play the story of missed chances comes, and altogether they form a chapter which is not encouraging reading. Eight Southern League teams failed to score, a dozen of the sides that took part in First League football drew a blank, and six in the Second Division did not obtain a legitimate goal.

Southern League.

The home clubs had matters very much their own way. In the ten Southern League games two visiting teams were successful, three games were drawn, and five home elevens obtained the full quota of points. In League I. home teams were successful in six instances, one win was credited to a visiting side, and three games resulted in a division of the spoils In the Second Division of the League the successes of home clubs were more emphatic. Eight sent their opponents away empty-handed, one game was drawn, and one visiting club returned with the two points. It is probably a record that the losing teams in the League First Division should be able to muster between them only a solitary goal. The total registered in the ten games was 19, and 18 of these were claimed by the six winning teams, not a goal being scored in the three drawn games. In the Second Division there was a total tally of 28 goals, 20 of which were obtained by winning teams, 4 by the nine losing clubs, and there were 4 in the drawn game. The losing clubs in the Southern League were as lacking in goal scoring power as the teams in the upper division of the League. One goal is the total of their efforts, and the aggregate of the ten games is 20. Of these 13 were credited to the winning clubs, and there were a half-dozen in the drawn games. It is likely to be a long time ere the losing teams in the three leagues will again be content with a combined total of 6 goals.

There was only one instance on Saturday of a Metropolitan Club in the Southern League being worsted by a provincial organisation. The Queen's Park Rangers, who had placed a win to their credit when they last went to Watford in search of Southern League points, did not repeat their success, nor did they deserve to do so on the run of the game. The Rangers have gone from bad to worse, and they now figure at the bottom of the table, thanks to the ineptitude of the forwards, who have obtained only eight goals in twelve matches. 22nd September was the last date on which the Royalists won a match, but the management are buoyantly confident that success will soon wait upon their efforts. Both Tottenham and Fulham were on foreign soil, the former at New Brompton, and the latter at Reading. The 'Spurs found themselves confronted with a heavy task, for the Bromptonians played a most dashing game, and at times they completely broke up the scientific methods of the North Londoners, but the latter scored the only goal, and consequently booked the points. This is the second successive home loss of New Brompton, and the third of the season. There was a ding dong struggle at Elm Park, and it was fortunate for the champions that Fryer was in goal, for he certainly saved them from defeat. Fryer is a great keeper, and his coolness and resources on Saturday were features of a keenly fought game. As the West London forwards on one occasion defeated Whittaker, they added two points to their total and thus retain their useful lead in the table. At Millwall there was a plethora of goals, the Dockers completely routing Luton, who failed to reproduce recent form. The two points were very welcome to Millwall, for they are now in the first half of the table.

There was only one instance of London clubs meeting in the S.L., Crystal Palace paying their initial Southern League visit to Brentford. They provided opposition of a keen and skilful character, but the forwards did not complete their work. They had chances, but they did not accept them. At the same time full credit must be given to Brentford, for they played a hard, resolute game and they were no more successful than they deserved to be Football in Leyton has caught on, and there will be even larger attendances than those which have recently been seen on the ground if the East Enders continue to serve up displays such as those to which they have treated their supporters of late. Not since 1st September have Leyton been humiliated at home, and they fully deserved both points on Saturday, but Norwich are opportunists, and Ross equalising the scores early in the second half they returned with 1 point in their possession. Northampton did well to draw with Bristol Rover at the Midland town, and Brighton deserve congratulations on their two clear goals win over Southampton. Swindon played a hard game at Portsmouth, and West Ham United, by drawing at Plymouth, accomplished one of the best performances of the afternoon.

The S. L. table to date shows that Watford are one of the most improved teams, while Queen's Park Rangers, Reading, Luton, and Southampton show a marked decline as compared with last season.

League I.

The Arsenal were not seen to advantage on the heavy, slippery surface at Clayton on Saturday. The Manchester United players, however, seemed to revel in the condition which obtained, and they were fully entitled to the two points which the Gunners had to yield up. While making this unequivocal statement, it must not be overlooked that the Arsenal forwards threw away easy chances, and Garbutt is the only one who has not anything to reproach himself with in this respect. The attacking quintette of the United team were just as erratic in their shooting, but they managed to send in several hot shots, all of which were dealt with by Ashcroft, and the only occasion he was beaten was from a shot by Dosnie, who fastened on the ball in a scrimmage, and Ashcroft had the mortification of seeing it rebound off one of his own men into the net. This defeat was very disappointing, but the Arsenal have no complaint to make. They lost because the standard of play which they have reached in many previous matches this season was not approached. Ashcroft was splendid, Bigden was the best of the halves, and Garbutt was the star artist among the forwards.

It is a striking fact that not one of the first four teams in the League managed to annex a couple of points. Stoke, who had won only one game previously, met Everton, the leaders, on the Victoria Grounds, and won by 2 clear goals, thanks to their resolute work. It was an unexpected blow for Everton, who were hustled out of their usual game, the halves alone playing up to their reputation. Sheffield Wednesday, whose form has several times been suggestive of a top of the table position at the end of the season, did exceedingly well to halve the points at Bolton, but Newcastle United did not do quite so much as was expected of them in playing Aston Villa to a draw at Birmingham. The great surprise of the afternoon was provided by Derby County. They had not won a match away prior to Saturday, and the critics with one accord gave them to lose at Sunderland. They confounded the prophets by winning, the home team offering no reply to the 2 goals scored by the Midland team Liverpool overwhelmed Preston North End, Sheffield United won in comfortable style against Bury, Blackburn just scraped through against Birmingham. Bristol City were too good for Middlesbrough, and Notts County played their seventh drawn game of the season, Manchester City being their opponents at Nottingham.

League II.

Chelsea had an opportunity to improve their position on Saturday, and they took it. Nobody suggests that Chelsea are doing so well as their supporters desire, but they are still well in the running, and the happenings of Saturday have vastly improved the outlook. In the first place Chelsea defeated Burnley, who were running a neck-and-neck race with the Pensioners, and the result was in accordance with the game. Secondly, West Bromwich Albion were pegged back by lowly Blackpool, and Leicester Fosse could not do more than share the honours with Glossop. The two teams at the bottom of the table had to meet the two at the top, and the latter did not come very creditably out of the fray. Nottingham Forest, who have been steadily climbing the table of late, gave Hull City another push down the ladder. Hull escaped defeat until 20th October, when Bradford won by a goal to love, but they have lost every match since. Clapton Orient had one of their stiffest home tasks of the season in meeting Grimsby, and they beat the Fishermen after a very hard game, in which plenty of vigour was shown on both sides. The other results do not require special mention, except that Wolverhampton Wanderers ran up a score of a half-dozen goals against Burslem Port Vale.

It will be observed from the subjoined table that only a couple of points separate West Bromwich Albion, the leaders, from Bradford City, who are fifth.

RUGBY RULES.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

Match v. Cambridge University.—The 9,000 odd spectators assembled on the 'Varsity ground on Saturday, for the South Africans' game with the Light Blues, witnessed probably the finest exhibition of Rugby football the oldest supporter of the game at Cambridge can remember.

Perfect weather prevailed when the South Africans led the way to the field. The 'Varsity kicked off from the top end, and the returns left the ball in mid-field, but before a couple of minutes had expired the visitors were attacking. Their halves were very smart, and De Villiers, getting an opening, rushed through, scoring the first try in four minutes. W. Morkel converted. The Cambridge forwards were playing a good game, Dellschaft being very conspicuous. Wright making a mistake let in Stegmann, who ran in unopposed, W. Morkel securing the second goal in nine minutes. The Springboks continued to force the game, and then Scoular checked dangerous rushes. Koop had a chance to relieve the pressure, but was tackled before he had gone many yards, and from a scrum the ball travelled to the Colonials' left, when Dobbin scrambled over near the corner flag. This time W. Morkel was unsuccessful with the place kick. The footwork of the Africans was very fine, and the halves continued to back up the efforts of the forwards, and Stegmann was soon within five yards of the University line, when Scoular pulled him down. A free kick for off-side was given against Young, D. Morkel having a penalty shot at goal, the kick being taken and missed—only by inches. The visitors did not relax their efforts. The "S. A." forwards followed up smartly a long punt, so that Scoular failed to get in his kick. A good scrum was formed on the line, and at the expiration of nineteen minutes Loubser got over, and D Morkel was entrusted with the place kick, but failed. Cambridge played up, and at last worked into South African territory, which was owing to the Light Blue skipper having intercepted a pass. Still the visitors returned to the attack, but Macleod put in a useful punt. Brookes, W. Morkel, and Millar led an attack, when Macleod made his mark. Hearson just now was playing a fine game and Koop roused the enthusiasm of the home supporters by grassing Loubser when another try seemed certain, and Wright and Macleod put in some splendid defensive work. The interval arrived with the score :—

The opening of the second half betokened better things for the Light Blues. The forwards packed grandly and in the scrums held their own. It was when play opened that the visitors asserted their superiority. Try all they could, the visitors could not break away, and Cambridge just now certainly had the best of the play and with a little luck would have scored. Having more than held their own for twenty minutes, the home team failed to sustain the effort, and resuming the attack, Krige de Villiers, and Dobbin very nearly got through. Hearson made a great effort to get through, dribbling well within the Colonials' "25." In the ensuing scrum work Mellor was foremost. Koop, receiving from Young, sprinted along the line, but the effort was fruitless. Down the field the visiting pack swept, and overcame all opposition. Scoular, usually sound, was beaten, and Burdett was on the point of scoring when Macleod averted disaster. For a few minutes the home forwards were conspicuous for their rushes, and they were finely led by Alexander. Marsburg throwing himself upon the ball just in the nick of time, and thus Cambridge's last opportunity of crossing the line was gone. Cambridge were now forced to act on the defensive. D. Morkel had another shot at penalty goal, and again failed. During the last ten minutes the light Blue defence broke down, and Krige and Stegmann securing tries, both of which were converted by W. Morkel, the game ended :—

Match v. South of Scotland.—The South African played the first of their Scottish matches on the 13th, when they met the South of Scotland at Hawick in fine weather.

The South of Scotland started, and the first maul took place in Colonial territory. The home forwards played well, and it was a struggle between them and the South African backs, whose passing was capital. It was a long time, however, before they pierced the South's defence, half an hour elapsing before Loubser, with a fine swerving run, got over near the corner. The kick at goal failed.

Immediately afterwards Loubser again ran over near the corner, no goal resulting. Scott got clear away for the South of Scotland, but no one backed him up, and the opening was wasted, as he was far too slow for the fliers opposed to him. Before half-time Dobbin struggled over for the Colonials, and the first period ended with the score :—

The pace had been a hot one, and it seemed doubtful if the Scottish pack could stand the strain, but they surprised their critics, and had they had better men behind them, the result would certainly not have been so one-sided.

The South African passing was excellent in the second halft and it looked as if the score was to be a very large one, but after Hirsch had scored twice, and Brookes and Loubser had also crossed the Scottish lines, a tremendous cheer proclaimed that the Scotsmen had scored in a typical Scottish forward rush. Johnstone, the Hawick captain, was the scorer of the try, which was obtained in a fairly good position, and Jardine added the extra points.

The South Africans were not, however, done with, as before the finish hand-to-hand passing resulted in Martheze scoring a brilliant try, which Jackson converted, and the match resulted:—

The Scottish backs were completely outclassed, but the forwards played a sterling game. There would be a gate of 3,000.

Blackheath vs. London Welsh.—That no more than about 2,000 spectators were attracted to the Rectory Field on Saturday, when the strongest possible representative sides of Blackheath and the London Welsh met, was due no doubt to the uneven record of the visitors hitherto this season. Blackheath were anxious naturally to avenge their defeat, on the only occasion that the two had ever met, while the Cymric men were determined to reproduce their championship form.

Kicking off against a dazzling sun, the home forwards with commendable zest established play in the visitors' territory, being considerably helped by the display of Timmins as custodian, which compared unfavourably with that of Harrison. Only eight minutes had elapsed, however, when a combined movement of the Welsh resulted in the ball reaching Maddocks, who showed rare resource and enabled Harding to dash over under the bar, and convert his own try. Subsequent play ruled, for the most part, on the visitors' side of the centre, Hill, Cave, and Co excelling to the extent that they enabled their half and five-eighths effectively to smother all efforts of the Welsh pair to set their machinery going; the passing and the general notion of attacking by the home backs were, however, altogether too crude to pierce the defence. The tackling on both sides was superb. Whenever the Welsh forwards did succeed in heeling out, Rowlands received Morgan's expresses smartly, and generally managed to give to Lewis or Maddocks, whose respective wings were, however, admirably watched by Stokes and Marsden. Priday's kicks into touch also were useful.

After a strenuous spell of attack in the home territory, where Teddy Morgan was thrice pushed into touch near the twenty-five line, and Harrison had prevented David from scoring by kicking "dead," a forward rush brought the Heathens into Welsh territory again, where Timmins twice saved with good length kicks. Eventually their reward came in an unexpected manner; Robertson, standing almost on the touch-line near the centre, held the ball from a long kick, and took a shot for goal—a magnificent drop, which reduced the Welshmen's lead appreciably. The speed of Stokes, who just reached and kicked the ball "dead," averted immediate retaliation by the visitors.

It was after the interval, however, that the Welshmen asserted undoubted superiority. The visiting forwards heeled out better and Morgan and Rowlands developed some excellent combination with Lewis and Maddocks. The latter, picking up Maddocks from a loose dribble, "doubled" through a bunch of opponents, and scored under the bar, Harding converting.

It was Maddocks, too, who kicked across in front of goal to Teddy Morgan who gathered cleverly and scored in his characteristic way. Harding kicked his third goal. Morgan also got over from a cross-kick by David but Mr. Mabey disallowed it. The Blackheath line had a series of marvellous escapes, while fortune further smiled upon the Heathens when Stokes got off, and punted across; Morgan waited to hold, but the ball slipped through his hands and Robinson fell upon it, scoring a try, which Robson converted. Result:—London Welsh, 3 goals (15 points.); Blackheath, 1 converted goal 1 dropped goal, (9 points.)

HARLEQUINS vs. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—Owing to the Harlequins' ground being so much affected by the recent rains, this match was played on the upper ground of the Richmond Athletic Association before a large crowd. On play settling down a good rush of the Harlequin forwards was well stopped and returned by M. A. Mathew. After some heavy scrummaging on the Harlequin lines Williamson passed out to Mathew, who scored, Batchelor kicking the goal. On resuming a good passing movement by Stoop, G. H. Birkett, and Nesbitt, the latter passed in but there was no one up and Parker picking up was held on his own line. Oxford worked back, but G. H. Birkett with a good dribble averted danger. Then a good run by J. G. G. Birkett, who kicked over the line, resulted in Stoop beating the Oxford back and gaining a try, the shot at goal being missed. Oxford were awarded a penalty for offside against H. E. Ward, but no goal resulted and with a good dribble by G. H. Birkett which was capitally stopped by Oliphant, the Oxford back, half-time, was called. The Oxford forwards started the second half with a fine rush which was effectively stopped by Nesbitt. Then Stoop getting the ball made an opening and passing to Birkett that player gave to Lambert who, beating all the opposition for pace, gained a fine try, which was not, however, converted. A good kick by Lambert drove the 'Varsity back, and then Milton, breaking away and passing to Parker, who repassed to him, Milton all but scored. From the ensuing scrum Gardner by a good dash scored, but Batchelor's shot at goal missed the mark. A very fine kick by J. G. Birkett placed the Harlequins on the attack, and Lambert by a great run was only just stopped in time. Very shortly after Stoop made a fine opening, passing to J. G. G. Birkett, who in turn handed to his elder brother, G. H., who, with a fine and determined dash, scored in the corner, this being the finest try of the match, but it was not converted. Play being resumed, a good dribble by R. O. C. Ward put the Varsity on the defence when the whistle sounded no side, and Harlequins won by 9 points (or 3 tries) to Oxford's 8 points (or a goal and a try).

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. EDINBURGH ACADEMICALS.—The Light Blues, although still feeling the effects of their great game on Saturday last, defeated the Edinburgh Academicals yesterday by 13 points to 3, in a match that was scrambly and uninteresting.

The University played the same team as that defeated by the South Africans, except that the captain, H. F. P. Hearson, who put his shoulder out on Saturday, was standing down. His place was taken by T. G. Pitt, the half-back Blue.

The game was especially scrambling, during the opening half. At the outset Macleod found a fine touch three yards from the visitors' line, but nothing came of it. After ten minutes' play, when the 'Varsity were still pressing, the same player made a good effort to drop a goal, his shot just going wide. It was not until just on half-time that the ball was passed out to Pitt, who obtained the first try. Young's shot at goal was a failure.

After ten minutes' play in the second period matters improved, from the spectators' point of view. Wright slipped under the posts for Cambridge, and Macleod converted. Two minutes later Cotterill got in for the Scotsmen, Murray failing with the place kick. Then Koop ran across the field, and, dodging the full back, scored at the corner flag. Again Macleod was successful with the place kick, and the 'Varsity won by 2 goals and 1 try (13 points) to 1 try (3 points).

ATHLETICS.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY FRESHMEN'S SPORTS.

Although no rain actually fell, the weather on Friday afternoon was again of a most unfavourable character, and if no good performances were accomplished it was not surprising. The sprinters had to face a strong northerly wind, which also told against the times in the other events. The best performance on the track was the mile of Chandler, who shaped in very promising form, considering the day. The high jump was fair, but the best item was the hammer throw of Cameron, an American Rhodes scholar, who just beat 108ft. Details:—

100 YARDS.—Final: C. L. Parker (Merchant Taylors and St. John's), 1; E. A. Hunter (Fettes and Christ Church) 2; E. V. Rieu (St. Paul's and Balliol), 3; E. F. Chinnery (Brasenose), 0. Won by a yard; four feet. Time—11⅕secs.

QUARTER-MILE HANDICAP.—N. G. Chavasse (Trinity), 3 yards, 1; C. M. Chavasse (Trinity) scratch, 2; T. B. Deakin (Hertford), 19, 3, H. H. Fyffe (University), 3, 0; M. G. Holmes (Balliol), 7, 0; A. W. Bowman (New College), 12, 0; G. A. Fuller Maitland (Oriel), 15, 0; S. H. Carnelly (Exeter), 16, 0; F. E. Benison (Keble), 20, 0. Won by two yards; eight yards. Time—52⅖secs.

120 YARDS HURDLES.—E. F. Chinnery (Eton and Brasenose), 1; J. S Huxley (Eton and Balliol), 2; A. L. Yorke (Haileybury and Lincoln), 3. Chinnery went to the front at the third flight and retained the lead to the finish, winning easily by one and a half yard; two yards. Time—19⅕secs.

QUARTER-MILE.—E. V. Rieu (St. Paul's and Balliol), 1; E. Ratcliffe Cousins (Westminster and Christ Church), 2; C. L. Parker (Merchant Taylors and St. John's), 3. Parker was unfortunately spiked after going 100 yards, and Rieu, making all the running, won easily by twenty-five yards. Time—55⅖secs.

HIGH JUMP.—S. S. Huxley (Eton and Balliol), 5ft. 0¼in., 1; E. F. Chinnery (Eton and Brasenose), 5ft. 0¼in.,†; E. G. Joseph (St. Paul's and Lincoln), 5ft. ¼in.,†.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY FRESHMEN'S SPORTS.

The concluding instalment of the Freshmen's sports, postponed from 8th November until yesterday, on account of the bad state of the path, did not attract many spectators, which was not surprising considering that they clashed with the important 'Varsity-Edinburgh Academicals match. The conditions were in striking contrast to those prevailing last week, and were favourable for good performances. Two of the best sprinters were unable to compete. C. C. G. Wright was playing against the Edinburgh Academicals, and V. G Thew was assisting his 'Varsity against Tottenham Hotspurs. In their absence E. E. Jenkins easily accounted for the 100 Yards. Most of the other events were well contested. A splendid finish was witnessed in the one mile for Freshers. C. J. Miln, the Etonian, winning on the post. Details:—

100 YARDS.—Final: E. E. Jenkins (Warwick and King's), 1; D. C. F. Burton (Rugby and Jesus), 2; C. H. Williams (S. E. College and Emmanuel), 3. Won by a yard. Time—11secs.

HURDLES.—Final: E. Chapple (Prince Alfred College, Australia and Jesus), 1; S J. Edwards (St. Paul's and Sidney), 2; Won by half a yard in 18⅕secs.

THROWING THE HAMMER.—G. E. Weston (Marlborough and Magdalen), 71ft. 7in., 1; J. C. Sherburn (Uppingham and Trinity Hall), 73ft. 6in., 2.

ONE MILE.—C. J. Miln (Eton and Pembroke), 1; R. M. Jones (Birkenhead and Emmanuel), 2; A. V. Coke (Aldenham and King's), 3. Jones made the running, but Miln spurted finely, and beat him on the post by inches in 4mins 48⅖secs.

LONG JUMP.—C. H. Williams (S.E. College and Emmanuel), 19ft. 2½in., 1; F. Ricardo (Eton and Trinity), 17ft. 10in., 2.

QUARTER-MILE.—Final: A. R. Thompson (Horsham G.S. and St. John's), 1; G. A. Matthey (Clifton and Pembroke), 2; Won by two yards. Time—55⅖secs.

200 YARDS Strangers' Handicap.—Final: A. V. Hill (Trinity), 9½yds., 1; E. F. Wise (Sidney), 9, 2†; S. Maugham, Emmanuel, 9½, 2†. Won by two yards; dead-heat. Time, 21⅖secs.

ONE MILE HANDICAP.—F. M. Edwards (Queen's), 40yds. 1; G. N. Bower (Corpus), 55, 2; A. H. Pearson (Queen's), 55, 3. Edwards went ahead a quarter of a mile from home, and won by two yards in 4min. 27⅖secs.

Judges, K. Powell (King's) and A. R. Welsh (Trinity); starter, W. Watts; timekeeper, J. Newton Digby.

ROWING.

UNIVERSITY TRIAL EIGHTS.

OXFORD.

The trials went below locks for the first time yesterday afternoon, although the weather was about as unfavourable as it could well be. They worked by easy stages to Sandford, and then did some hard rowing along the Common to Nuneham Boathouse, subsequently bringing the boat home with several breaks on the way. The president and secretary coached, and Captain Willis also accompanied them. No new men were tried, but there were one or two alterations, Heard going to No. 3 in No. 1 boat, while Cadmore went to No. 4, and Dewar to No. 3 in No. 2 boat. Names and weights:—

COLQUHOUN SCULLS AT CAMBRIDGE.

From a racing point of view the conditions were excellent on Tuesday for the first round of the Colquhoun Sculls, in which seven competitors took part. Owing to the heavy rainfall there has been a flood stream for the past few days, but it was quite normal yesterday, and what little wind there was assisted the competitors over the course. Details:—

Heat A: (Second Station)—N. E. Hawdon (Jesus), 12st. 4lbs., 1; First Station—H. S. Hooper (Emmanuel), 12st., 2.

Hawdon was always the winner. He reached the Little Ditch in 1min 46secs., and was three lengths to the good. Still gaining gradually, he was 35 yards ahead at the Grind, where his time was 5min. 12secs. He eventually won by 55 yards, his time being 8mins. 29sec. Hooper then ran into the 'Varsity Trial Eight, and capsized. The winner was steered by Alf. Parsons, while Bill Taylor assisted the Emmanuel man.

Heat B: (First Station)—E. W. Powell (Third Trinity), 11st. 6lbs., 1; (Second Station)—H. K. Douglas (Pembroke), 10st. 10lbs., 2.

Powell got away splendidly, and pulled four strokes to his opponent's three. He pulled 38 strokes in the full minute, and on reaching the Ditch in 1min. 16sec. had fully 30 yards in hand. From here he never extended himself, being 45 yards ahead at the Grind in 4min 41secs., and eventually winning by 60 yards in 8mins. 20secs. Jack Anthony steered the winner, while the Pembroke man was advised by Fred Foyster.

Heat C: (Second Station)—T. M. Sibley (Lady Margaret), 11st. 4lbs., 1; (First Station)—R. M. Arnold (Jesus), 10st. 10lbs., 2.

This was a fine race. Up the Post Reach there was a great struggle for the lead, but there was very little in it at the Ditch where Sibley's time was 1min. 42secs. The John's man continued to gain in the Gut and Plough Reach, and was three lengths up at the Grind, which he reached in 4min. 16secs. He gained a little round Ditton Corner, but once in the Long Reach, Arnold held him, and at the Willows began to go away. There was an extremely fine struggle for the last 200 yards, but Sibley had gained a lot, and despite Arnold's fine effort, the Lady Margaret man gained the victory by two yards. The time was 8mins. 29secs. Mr. L. H. K. Bushe-Fox, steered the victor, and the Jesus representative was assisted by Mr. W. H. Thompson.

D. C. R Stuart (Trinity Hall), 11st. 4lbs., accompanied by Arthur Pamplin, sculled a bye between the second and third races.

Again on Wednesday for the semi-finals of the Colquhoun Sculls, the conditions were favourable for fast times, but inasmuch as both competitors had second stations, and that they were reserving their energy for to-day's struggle, neither of them really extended himself after reaching Grassy. Details:—

Heat E. (Second Station)—E. W. Powell (Third Trinity), 11st. 6lbs., 1; (First Station)—N. E. Hawdon (Jesus), 12st 4lbs., 2.

Although both of the oarsmen pulled ten strokes in the first quarter of a minute, Powell drove his craft along splendidly, and was gaining hand over hand. At the Ditch he was forty-five yards up, and sixty at Grassy corner. After reaching the Grind in 5mins. dead, he contented himself with maintaining his lead, and eventually won by 80 yards in 8mins. 14secs. Powell was steered by his coach, Jack Anthony, and Hawdon by Mr. R. M. Arnold.

Heat F: (Second Station)—D. C. R. Stuart (Trinity Hall), 11st. 4lbs., 1; (First Station)—T. M. Sibley (Lady Margaret), 11st. 4lbs., 2

Stuart, sculling well up to form, gained on his opponent at an alarming pace, and at the Ditch (1min. 38secs.) he had a good 50 yards in hand. He eased down after shooting Grassy, and took exactly the same time to make the Grind as did the Etonian in the previous heat Fifty yards from the winning post he showed what he is capable of by sprinting for a few strokes, winning by 95 yards in 8mins. 22⅕secs. He was steered by Arthur Pamplin, while Mr. L. H. K. Bushe-Fox assisted Sibley.

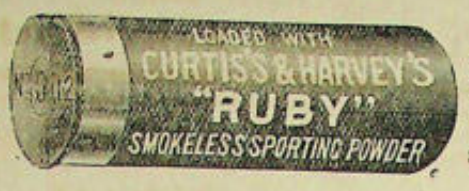
In spite of the bad weather there was a large crowd of spectators on the towing path yesterday afternoon to witness the final of the Colquhoun Sculls. All over the course a gale of wind was blowing against the competitors and it was particularly in the rough water that Stuart was able to show his magnificent watermanship. Although E. Powell was well beaten, he was not by any means disgraced, as he lost to one of the finest amateur scullers of the day. In the Colquhoun Sculls last year Stuart was only beaten by a second in the final by R. V. Powell, the Etonian who lowered the record by 11secs. Since then Stuart has rapidly gained fame and everyone will recollect how he stroked Cambridge to victory against Oxford and against Harvard, while he also stroked the Trinity Hall crew in the final of the Grand Challenge Cup at Henley. Details:—

Second Station—D. C. R. Stuart (Cheltenham and Trinity Hall), 11st. 4lbs. 1

First Station—E. W. Powell (Eton and Third Trinity), 11st. 6lbs. 2

Although Stuart had matters all his own way Powell retained his form throughout, and sculled hard right up to the last stroke. Mr. L. H. K. Bushe Fox despatched the competitors to a capital start, but Stuart, sculling a faster stroke, gained rapidly on the Etonian, who arrived at the Ditch in 1min. 25secs., a good two lengths behind. The leader was a good 40 yards ahead at the Grind, when his time was 5min. 2⅖secs. Stuart never relaxed his efforts, and eventually won by about eighty yards. After the race he had to be lifted from his boat. Stuart was steered by Albert Pamplin, and Powell by Jack Anthony.

BILLIARDS.



There is no disguising the fact that the form shown by Dawson and Reece in the first heat of Messrs. Burroughes and Watts' big tournament was most disappointing. Excuses of one kind or another are ever the refuge of a player when he is not doing what the public or he himself expected, and so it was in the cases of Dawson and Reece. In this instance the excuse that the cloth was much too "slow" was, for once in a way, a reasonable one. But that was no fault of Messrs Burroughes and Watts, who put on the very best quality of cloth that it was possible to obtain. Explanation is simple. Damp atmosphere always affects the cloth on a table and causes the balls to run dead slow. In their efforts to drive the balls into the required positions, the players lose their touch, and, of course, their effectiveness. A whole column of explanation could not get nearer the root of the "evil" than these two sentences.

If any proof were needed that the excuse offered by the players was a reasonable one, we have only to glance at the big performances accomplished on Saturday. That day was fine and dry. Mark the result. Dawson compiles the first "fifth-century" break seen in town this season, and, incidentally, he increases his banking account to the extent of five guineas. Reece gets within 15 points of his record break, and thus just missed the 25 guineas offered him by Messrs. Burroughes and Watts should he create a fresh individual record in this or any other heat in the tournament. However, in the course of his great break of 567 Reece made his highest sequence (110) of close cannons, so that, if pecuniary advantage did not accrue, he at least had the satisfaction of placing a new record to his name. Then, again, Dawson scored no fewer than 1,137 points at the final session.

Under normal conditions we would probably have had a great game, but as it was the heat fizzled out in a remarkable and very easy victory for Reece.

The causes operating against a bright game at Soho Square were also in evidence at Messrs. Thurston's Grand Hall, where Diggle and Inman were seen to singularly poor advantage for most of the week. Inman certainly marked up two superb breaks of 343 and 388, but for the most part he found the collecting of points anything but an easy matter. Up till Friday evening Diggle fared even worse than his determined rival, but with better conditions prevailing on Saturday he proved that he retains all his masterly skill and resource. A stake of £100 depends on the result of this match, and one is safe in asserting that a great struggle for supremacy will be witnessed ere either player qualifies for the prize. The original articles of agreement stipulated for ivory balls to be used, but prior to the commencement both players agreed that the game should be played with "Bonzolines."

The one bright spot in a series of mediocre performances was supplied by that much-improved and popular professional, Walter Lovejoy. At Cox and Yeman's he has been performing brilliantly against Cook, and gained quite a runaway victory on Saturday evening. On Thursday evening he averaged 167 points per innings—the record average of the season. In addition to this he averaged 111 on Friday evening. No wonder they say he is a coming champion! A few more such performances and he will have "arrived."

Now that the season is in full swing the figures in the tables below are beginning to represent the full merits of the various professionals whose names appear therein. In compiling sixteen breaks of over 100, seven over 200, and one over 300 (aggregating 4,278 points by these means), Lovejoy has by far done the best work. In view of the failures of the "cracks," the ex-amateur's work in this direction has been quite remarkable, and he deservedly ascends the table from 39·44 to 42·64. Diggle, it will be noted, has had to yield up premier place to Stevenson—who, by the way, has been resting during the week—and is not now even second, that position falling to Dawson despite the latter's poor return of three-figure breaks for the week. From present appearances we shall again have a rare struggle for supremacy for the leading berth between those great rivals and best of friends, C. Dawson and H. W. Stevenson, with Diggle pushing them hard all the way. Appended are the tables :—

Hunting.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

ON Sunday, the 25th November, the meet of the Madras Hounds was at Lattice Bridge, which is usually a favourite meet. The weather was fairly cool and fresh, but there was only a small field out, about twenty men and three ladies meeting the Master. The smallness of the field is most likely accounted for by the fact that there had been a dance at the Adyar Club the previous evening and even in the coolest of cool weather here most of us find it too great a tax upon our energies to rise in time for an early meet after a night's festivity. The Master made a move from the Bridge to the cocoanut tope close by, and just outside it hounds picked up the line of a jack. He had evidently been gone some time, however, and scent at first proved difficult, being catchy and uncertain. Hounds carried the line slowly towards Vellacheri, but after a time they began to improve their pace and soon were going at best pace on what was evidently a red hot scent and for a time we were riding as hard as the most exacting could desire. Swinging left-handed hounds ran to the edge of Fox Hill, where the jack turned right-handed again and ran the scrub round the north side, pointing evidently for the casuarina covert. Before he reached it, however, hounds viewed him and there was an exciting race, the jack reaching the covert just in front of the pack. He was given no time to escape, hounds forcing him through the covert without a pause and in the open beyond they ran into and killed him. The run, though it lasted little over ten minutes, was a merry one and the pace very hot. The going was good on the whole, but treacherous in parts. There were two spills, two gentlemen taking falls in very wet places, but no serious damage was done.

After the jack had been broken up the Master took hounds to the long casuarina woods and here there was a lengthy interval, a patient draw, which lasted for some considerable time, being without result. Luck was with us after all, however, for as hounds were being taken home, about a quarter past eight, no fewer than three jacks broke cover just in front of them. The pack divided at first, but fortunately got together again on one line and had it been earlier in the day we might have had an excellent run. But it was late and the morning was by this time anything but cool and the Master decided to take the opportunity offered by a check to draw hounds off and save them for another day.

On Wednesday morning, the 28th November, the meet took place at Saidapet on a dark, damp, monsoon morning and at first sport seemed likely to be as depressing as the weather. The Saidapet coverts and the tall crops with which they are interspersed were drawn without success and when at last hounds picked up a line while crossing the Butts Plain they feathered on it for some time on a hill by the side of the river bank. Shortly afterwards, however, after entering the Korakapillais on the other side they settled down to work in earnest and the pace improved. The jack was unluckily, not a straight necked one and would not make for the open. He ran several rings round the covert where he was found and then went up along the river bank, crossing the road near Nantambakam Bridge. He then ran the whole length of Scavenger Covert and looked like making for Sheep's Head, but his heart failed him and he doubled back along Scavenger towards the Bridge again. This sharp turn brought hounds to their noses and while they were at fault the appearance of another jack complicated matters. Apparently, hounds changed, but, anyway, they held the line slowly back to near the Bridge, where they again got on better terms with their quarry and bustled him merrily across the road and into the Korakapillais. Here, after running a ring or two, he found matters too hot for him and took to the river, which he swam with the leading hounds only the width of the water behind him. This manœuvre gained him a fresh start, but the pack were soon on terms with him again and were not to be denied. After running a wide ring on the left bank, the jack took to the river again and recrossed the road to Scavenger Covert. Here hounds were at fault for a few minutes, but a hulloa from over the road put them on the line again and after a few more turns they bowled him over. They had hunted well and deserved blood. From a hound point of view a better hunt could not have been desired, but it was a thick and bad country for horses. The run lasted about 45 minutes and there was only one serious check.

Rowing.

POONA REGATTA.

A VERY sporting little regatta was brought off at the Royal Connaught Boat Club on Thursday, 29th instant. The card consisted of four events to wit a half mile for scratch fours, a half mile for scratch eights, a quarter mile mixed double sculls and a quarter mile tub fours.

In view of the shortness of the notice the crews were not perhaps strung up to concert pitch in the way of fitness, but this only reflects greater credit on the fact that all the events filled well with the exception of the eights for which two crews were got together, both representing Kirkee, Poona having failed at the last moment to fill up a crew.

The club grounds were looking their best, and there was no cause for complaint as regards the attendance. All the world and his wife were there and the "creations" worn by the fair sex were quite bewildering.

Two out of the four events provided close finishes, the most exciting perhaps being the mixed double sculls in which Colonel Hale and Miss Fooks scored a very popular victory by a very narrow margin, the little lady rowing in a style which many a mere male might envy. The proceedings opened at 5-15 which was a trifle late and resulted in the last two races being rowed by moonlight, but fortunately the moon was obliging enough to provide sufficient illumination for all practical purposes.

The intervals were enlivened by the band of the 107th Pioneers and the excitement was kept up by an al fresco dinner which was attended by about 70 members, and was a somewhat chilly amusement, and was followed by a dance. Major Morris, R.A., officiated as starter and Mr. Giles as judge. Details as follows :—

CALEDONIANS vs. CITY A. C.—An even draw was the result of this match, after a somewhat poor display of batting on both sides. The Caledonians went in first and lost Chandler in the second over. Christensen and Rogers, however, improved matters, and took the score to 51 before the former was bowled for 20. Rogers knocked up 24 before he fell a victim to Dass, who kept a good length throughout the Caledonian innings. H. W. Beer played well for 19 not out, the Caledonians declaring at 102 for 9 wickets. On going in the City secured 85 for 7 wickets, so that had time allowed a close finish might have been witnessed, Banerjee 20 and Sircar 16 were the chief run getters. Rogers secured 4 wickets for 33 and Elliot 2 for 21. Appended are the scores :—

ST. XAVIER'S vs. CALEDONIANS.—St. Xavier's administered a severe defeat to the Caledonians on their own ground at the beginning of the week, and the dangerous state of the wicket was no excuse for the wretched display of the visitors. Going in first the Caledonians could only get 57 runs. Rogers was unfortunate in playing on before he had scored, and the loss of this batsmen had a disastrous effect on the rest of the team. Durant was top scorer with 13 and Brown's 12 was the only other double figure contribution. St. Xavier's started none too well, losing 3 wickets for 2 runs, but Newton and Purcell took the score to 43 before the former was bowled by Rogers. When Greenway and Vaughan got together the score was rapidly taken to 119 when the home team declared with 6 wickets down. Elliot and Rogers bowled well, the former having hard lines in continually beating the batsmen and just missing the wicket. On going in again the Caledonians were got rid of by Marsden and Vaughan for 61, thus suffering defeat by an innings and one run. Vaughan for St. Xavier's bowled very well throughout both innings, but the ground helped him considerably. Appended are the scores :—

SPORTING UNION vs. DALHOUSIE C. C.—The Calcutta C. C., who were to have played the Sporting Union C. C. on the latter's ground on Sunday, cancelled their game as they could not get up an XI, and the Dalhousie C. C. very sportingly came down to the Marcus Square as the guests of the Sporting Union. Both the teams lacked the services of two or three of their best players. A very enjoyable day's cricket resulted in a win for the home team by 39 runs on the first innings. The Sporting Union batted first and totalled 85 runs for 3 wickets, but then a rot set in and the whole side was out for 100. N. Roy-Chowdhury (37), G. Gupta (29), and S. Roy (12) reached double figures, the battings of the two former being delightful to watch D. Stewart got 5 wickets for 36 runs and he took 4 wickets with 4 consecutive balls. Bath also bowled well and got 4 for 15. The Dalhousie C. C. could only total 61 against S. Dutta-Gupta and P. Bose (Junior,) who captured 5 for 24 and 4 for 11, respectively. H. Beadle played well for his 18. In the second innings which was not completed owing to want of time, the Sporting Union made 90 for 9 wickets (the last three batsmen losing their wickets in attempting to force the game) and declared their innings closed, G. Gupta (16), C. Guha (23), S. Roy (13), and A. Gupta (13) reaching double figures. Bath again bowled well, taking 7 wickets for 61 runs. The Dalhousie Club had three-quarters of an hour's batting during which they lost 6 wickets for 59 runs, Wickens (24), Walton (not out 11) and Holman (not out 14) reaching double figures. P. Bose (Senior,) got 3 wickets for 16 runs. The game was played twelve a side. Appended are the scores :—

RANGOON GOLF CLUB.

THE annual "Opening Day" and "At Home" took place on Saturday, 24th November, and proceedings commenced with Tiffin at 1-30 P.M., but owing to the early start only about 30 members were able to be present. By 2-30 P.M., when the competitions commenced, their numbers had been largely augmented, however.

The following are the results of the various events :—

Long Hole.—Competitors to drive from the 7th Tee and play to the 9th Hole, a maximum of 5 strokes allowed :—

J. M. Sime	1
G. Ballance.	2

Mr. Sime laid his fifth shot within two yards of the hole.

Long Drive.—Best of three drives :—

H. Woodham, 246 yards	1
J. Stuart Smith, 245 yards	2

The measuring tape had to be produced to decide who was first.

Approach and Putt for Gentlemen.—Competitors had to play three balls from a Tee 50 yards from the green, over a hurdle placed halfway ; and hole out each ball.

J. M. Sime	1
J. B. Orr	2

Messrs. Higinbotham, Sime, and Orr tied with 8 strokes each, and on the replay Messrs. Sime and Orr again tied with 9 strokes, Mr. Higinbotham getting into difficulties. As it was getting dark the second tie was decided by putting one ball six yards from the green, and Mr. Sime holed his ball in two to his opponent's three. In this competition Mr. Ballance holed one ball from the Tee.
